“[I]f to resolve the dispute the court must create a new rule or modify an old one, that is law creation. Judges defending themselves from accusations of judicial activism sometimes say they do not make law, they only apply it. It is true that in our system judges are not supposed to and generally do not make new law with the same freedom that legislatures can and do; they are, in Oliver Wendell Holmes's phrase, ‘confined from molar to molecular motions.’ The qualification is important, but the fact remains that judges make, and do not just find and apply, law.” Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 3 (1985).

jurimetrics (joo-<<schwa>>-me-triks), n. The use of scientific or empirical methods, including measurement, in the study or analysis of legal matters. — jurimetrician (joo-<<schwa>>-me-trish-*<<schwa>>n), jurimetricist (joo-<<schwa>>-me-tr-<<schwa>>*-sist), n.

“A variety of contextual frames of reference have been employed by commentators to explain and clarify the basis for judicial decision-making, the most fundamental aspect of the judge's job. These range from exploration of the judge's personality to the employment of small group theory, game theory and Guttman scaling to measure and apprehend the nature of judicial decision-making. Indeed, the disciplined effort to identify with mathematical precision the decision process has been dubiously termed ‘jurimetrics.’ ” Alexander B. Smith & Abraham S. Blumberg, “The Problem of Objectivity,” in 2 Crime and Justice 485–86 (1971).

JURIS

jurisdiction,n.1. A government's general power to exercise authority over all persons and things within its territory; esp., a state's power to create interests that will be recognized under common-law principles as valid in other states <New Jersey's jurisdiction>. [Cases: States 1. C.J.S. States §§ 2, 16.] 2. A court's power to decide a case or issue a decree < the constitutional grant of federal-question jurisdiction>. — Also termed (in sense 2) competent jurisdiction; (in both senses) coram iudice. [Cases: Courts 3; Federal Courts 3.1, 161. C.J.S. Courts §§ 9, 18.]

“Rules of jurisdiction in a sense speak from a position outside the court system and prescribe the authority of the courts within the system. They are to a large extent constitutional rules. The provisions of the U.S. Constitution specify the outer limits of the subject-matter jurisdiction of the federal courts and authorize Congress, within those limits, to establish by statute the organization and jurisdiction of the federal courts. Thus, Article III of the Constitution defines the judicial power of the United States to include cases arising under federal law and cases between parties of diverse state citizenship as well as other categories. The U.S. Constitution, particularly the Due Process Clause, also establishes limits on the jurisdiction of the state courts. These due process limitations traditionally operate in two areas: jurisdiction of the subject matter and jurisdiction over persons. Within each state, the court system is established by state constitutional provisions or by a combination of such provisions and implementing legislation, which together define the authority of the various courts within the system.” Fleming James Jr., Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. & John Leubsdorf, Civil Procedure § 2.1, at 55 (5th ed. 2001).

3. A geographic area within which political or judicial authority may be exercised <the accused fled to another jurisdiction>.4. A political or judicial subdivision within such an area agency jurisdiction.The regulatory or adjudicative power of a government administrative agency over a subject matter or matters.

ancillary jurisdiction.A court's jurisdiction to adjudicate claims and proceedings related to a claim that is properly before the court. • For example, if a plaintiff brings a lawsuit in federal court based on a federal question (such as a claim under Title VII), the defendant may assert a counterclaim over which the court would not otherwise have jurisdiction (such as a state-law claim of stealing company property). The concept of ancillary jurisdiction has now been codified, along with the concept of pendent jurisdiction, in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute. 28 USCA § 1367. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. pendent jurisdiction. [Cases: Admiralty 1(3); Courts 27; Equity 35; Federal Courts 20. C.J.S. Courts § 66; Equity §§ 9, 80, 87.]

anomalous jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction that is not granted to a court by statute, but that is inherent in the court's authority to govern lawyers and other officers of the court, such as the power to issue a preindictment order suppressing illegally seized property. [Cases: Criminal Law 394.5(1); Federal Courts 7; Searches and Seizures 84. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 794, 797; Equity § 20; Searches and Seizures §§ 217–226.] 2. An appellate court's provisional jurisdiction to review the denial of a motion to intervene in a lower-court case, so that if the court finds that the denial was correct, then its jurisdiction disappears — and it must dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction — because an order denying a motion to intervene is not a final, appealable order. See ANOMALOUS-JURISDICTION RULE. [Cases: Federal Courts 555.]

appellate jurisdiction.The power of a court to review and revise a lower court's decision. • For example, U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 vests appellate jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, while 28 USCA §§ 1291–1295 grant appellate jurisdiction to lower federal courts of appeals. Cf. original jurisdiction. [Cases: Appeal and Error 17; Courts 203–209; Federal Courts 751. C.J.S. Appeal and Error §§ 31–32, 40.]

arising-in jurisdiction.A bankruptcy court's jurisdiction over issues relating to the administration of the bankruptcy estate, and matters that occur only in a bankruptcy case. 28 USCA §§ 157, 1334. [Cases: Bankruptcy 2043–2063. C.J.S. Bankruptcy §§ 5, 9–12, 14–15, 17–18, 22.]

assistant jurisdiction.The incidental aid provided by an equity court to a court of law when justice requires both legal and equitable processes and remedies. — Also termed auxiliary jurisdiction.

common-law jurisdiction. 1. A place where the legal system derives fundamentally from the English common-law system <England, the United States, Australia, and other common-law jurisdictions>. 2. A court's jurisdiction to try such cases as were cognizable under the English common law <in the absence of a controlling statute, the court exercised common-law jurisdiction over those claims>.

complete jurisdiction.A court's power to decide matters presented to it and to enforce its decisions.

concurrent jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction that might be exercised simultaneously by more than one court over the same subject matter and within the same territory, a litigant having the right to choose the court in which to file the action. [Cases: Admiralty 1(1); Courts 472, 489, 510; Federal Courts 1131. C.J.S. Courts §§ 186, 203, 222, 225.] 2. Jurisdiction shared by two or more states, esp. over the physical boundaries (such as rivers or other bodies of water) between them. — Also termed coordinate jurisdiction; overlapping jurisdiction. Cf. exclusive jurisdiction.

“In several cases, two States divided by a river exercise concurrent jurisdiction over the river, no matter where the inter-state boundary may be; in some cases by the Ordinance of 1787 for organizing Territories northwest of the Ohio River, in some cases by Acts of Congress organizing Territories or admitting States, and in some cases by agreements between the States concerned.” 1 Joseph H. Beale, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws § 44.3, at 279 (1935).

consent jurisdiction. Jurisdiction that parties have agreed to, either by accord, by contract, or by general appearance. • Parties may not, by agreement, confer subject-matter jurisdiction on a federal court that would not otherwise have it. [Cases: Courts 22. C.J.S. Courts § 61.]

contentious jurisdiction. 1. A court's jurisdiction exercised over disputed matters. 2. Eccles. law. The branch of ecclesiastical-court jurisdiction that deals with contested proceedings.

continuing jurisdiction. A court's power to retain jurisdiction over a matter after entering a judgment, allowing the court to modify its previous rulings or orders. See CONTINUING-JURISDICTION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Courts 30; Federal Courts 26.1. C.J.S. Courts §§ 71–73.]

coordinate jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction.

criminal jurisdiction. A court's power to hear criminal cases. [Cases: Criminal Law 83. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 149–150.]

default jurisdiction. Family law. In a child-custody matter, jurisdiction conferred when it is in the best interests of the child and either (1) there is no other basis for jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act or the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, or (2) another state has declined jurisdiction in favor of default jurisdiction. • Jurisdiction is rarely based on default because either home-state jurisdiction or significant-connection jurisdiction almost always applies, or else emergency jurisdiction is invoked. Default jurisdiction arises only if none of those three applies, or a state with jurisdiction on any of those bases declines to exercise it and default jurisdiction serves the best interests of the child.

delinquency jurisdiction. The power of the court to hear matters regarding juvenile acts that, if committed by an adult, would be criminal. Cf. status-offense jurisdiction.

diversity jurisdiction. A federal court's exercise of authority over a case involving parties who are citizens of different states and an amount in controversy greater than a statutory minimum. 28 USCA § 1332. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP; AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY. [Cases: Federal Courts 281–360.]

emergency jurisdiction. Family law. A court's ability to take jurisdiction of a child who is physically present in the state when that child has been abandoned or when necessary to protect the child from abuse. • Section 3(a)(3) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act allows for emergency jurisdiction. It is usu. temporary, lasting only as long as is necessary to protect the child.

equity jurisdiction. In a common-law judicial system, the power to hear certain civil actions according to the procedure of the court of chancery, and to resolve them according to equitable rules. [Cases: Equity 1; Federal Courts 7. C.J.S. Equity §§ 2–5, 7–8, 10, 20.]

“[T]he term equity jurisdiction does not refer to jurisdiction in the sense of the power conferred by the sovereign on the court over specified subject-matters or to jurisdiction over the res or the persons of the parties in a particular proceeding but refers rather to the merits. The want of equity jurisdiction does not mean that the court has no power to act but that it should not act, as on the ground, for example, that there is an adequate remedy at law.” William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 38 (2d ed. 1956).

exclusive jurisdiction. A court's power to adjudicate an action or class of actions to the exclusion of all other courts <federal district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over actions brought under the Securities Exchange Act>. Cf. concurrent jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 472, 489, 510; Equity 44; Federal Courts 1131. C.J.S. Courts §§ 186, 203, 222, 225; Equity §§ 19, 51–53.]

extraterritorial jurisdiction. A court's ability to exercise power beyond its territorial limits. See LONG-ARM STATUTE. [Cases: Courts 12(2); Federal Courts 76. C.J.S. Courts §§ 39, 44.]

federal jurisdiction. 1. The exercise of federal-court authority. [Cases: Federal Courts 3.1.] 2. The area of study dealing with the jurisdiction of federal courts.

federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction. A federal court's power to hear a case in which a person under the age of 18 violates federal law. • In such a case, the federal court derives its jurisdictional power from 18 USCA §§ 5031 et seq. The Act severely limits the scope of federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction because Congress recognizes that juvenile delinquency is essentially a state issue. The acts that typically invoke federal jurisdiction are (1) acts committed on federal lands (military bases, national parks, Indian reservations), and (2) acts that violate federal drug laws or other federal criminal statutes.

federal-question jurisdiction. The exercise of federal-court power over claims arising under the U.S. Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty. 28 USCA § 1331. [Cases: Federal Courts 161–247.]

foreign jurisdiction. 1. The powers of a court of a sister state or foreign country. 2. Extraterritorial process, such as long-arm service of process.

general jurisdiction. 1. A court's authority to hear a wide range of cases, civil or criminal, that arise within its geographic area. [Cases: Courts 118–158.1; Federal Courts 3.1, 76.5. C.J.S. Courts §§ 3, 23–31, 33–35.] 2. A court's authority to hear all claims against a defendant, at the place of the defendant's domicile or the place of service, without any showing that a connection exists between the claims and the forum state. Cf. limited jurisdiction; specific jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 12(2.5); Federal Courts 76.10. C.J.S. Courts § 45.]

home-state jurisdiction.Family law. In interstate child-custody disputes governed by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act, jurisdiction based on the child's having been a resident of the state for at least six consecutive months immediately before the commencement of the suit. See HOME STATE.

in personam jurisdiction.See personal jurisdiction.

in rem jurisdiction (in rem). A court's power to adjudicate the rights to a given piece of property, including the power to seize and hold it. — Also termed jurisdiction in rem. See IN REM. Cf. personal jurisdiction; subject-matter jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 18–19; Federal Courts 93. C.J.S. Courts §§ 50–53.]

international jurisdiction.A court's power to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries.

judicial jurisdiction.The legal power and authority of a court to make a decision that binds the parties to any matter properly brought before it.

jurisdiction in personam.See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction in rem.See in rem jurisdiction.

jurisdiction over the person.See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction quasi in rem.See quasi-in-rem jurisdiction.

legislative jurisdiction.A legislature's general sphere of authority to enact laws and conduct all business related to that authority, such as holding hearings. [Cases: States 1. C.J.S. States §§ 2, 16.]

limited jurisdiction.Jurisdiction that is confined to a particular type of case or that may be exercised only under statutory limits and prescriptions. — Also termed special jurisdiction. Cf. general jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 26, 59; Federal Courts 5. C.J.S. Courts §§ 3, 8, 64–65, 67.]

“It is a principle of first importance that the federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction.... The federal courts ... cannot be courts of general jurisdiction. They are empowered to hear only such cases as are within the judicial power of the United States, as defined in the Constitution, and have been entrusted to them by a jurisdictional grant by Congress.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 7, at 27 (5th ed. 1994).

long-arm jurisdiction.Jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant who has had some contact with the jurisdiction in which the petition is filed.

original jurisdiction.A court's power to hear and decide a matter before any other court can review the matter. Cf. appellate jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 118–158.1, 206; Federal Courts

3.1. C.J.S. Courts §§ 3, 23–31, 33–35.]

pendent jurisdiction (pen-d<<schwa>>nt). A court's jurisdiction to hear and determine a claim over which it would not otherwise have jurisdiction, because the claim arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. • For example, if a plaintiff brings suit in federal court claiming that the defendant, in one transaction, violated both a federal and a state law, the federal court has jurisdiction over the federal claim (under federal-question jurisdiction) and also has jurisdiction over the state claim that is pendent to the federal claim. Pendent jurisdiction has now been codified as supplemental jurisdiction. 28 USCA § 1367. — Also termed pendent-claim jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. ancillary jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 27; Equity 35; Federal Courts 14. C.J.S. Courts § 66; Equity §§ 9, 80, 87.]

pendent-party jurisdiction. A court's jurisdiction to adjudicate a claim against a party who is not otherwise subject to the court's jurisdiction, because the claim by or against that party arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. • Pendent-party jurisdiction has been a hotly debated subject, and was severely limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Finley v. United States, 490 U.S. 545, 109 S.Ct. 2003 (1989). The concept is now codified in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute, and it applies to federal-question cases but not to diversity-jurisdiction cases. 28 USCA § 1367. Neither pendent-party jurisdiction nor supplemental jurisdiction may be used to circumvent the complete-diversity requirement in cases founded on diversity jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction. [Cases: Federal Courts 23.]

personal jurisdiction. A court's power to bring a person into its adjudicative process; jurisdiction over a defendant's personal rights, rather than merely over property interests. — Also termed in personam jurisdiction; jurisdiction in personam; jurisdiction of the person; jurisdiction over the person. See IN PERSONAM. Cf. in rem jurisdiction. [Cases: Admiralty 5; Constitutional Law 305(5, 6); Courts 10; Federal Courts 71–97. C.J.S. Admiralty §§ 23–25, 29, 67; Constitutional Law §§ 1151–1152; Courts §§ 39–40.]

plenary jurisdiction (plee-n<<schwa>>-ree or plen-<<schwa>>-ree). A court's full and absolute power over the subject matter and the parties in a case.

primary jurisdiction. The power of an agency to decide an issue in the first instance when a court, having concurrent jurisdiction with the agency, determines that it would be more pragmatic for the agency to handle the case initially. See PRIMARY-JURISDICTION DOCTRINE.

“The doctrine of primary jurisdiction typically is raised, not in a proceeding before an administrative agency, but in litigation before a court. Agency and court jurisdiction to resolve disputes and issues frequently overlap. Primary jurisdiction is a concept used by courts to allocate initial decision-making responsibility between agencies and courts where such overlaps exist.... A holding that an agency has primary jurisdiction to resolve an issue raised in a judicial proceeding has two important consequences. First, it transfers some of the power to resolve that issue to the agency.... Second, if the issues referred to the agency as within its primary jurisdiction are critical to judicial resolution of the underlying dispute, the court cannot proceed with the trial of the case until the agency has resolved those issues and the agency's decision has been either affirmed or reversed by a reviewing court." Richard J. Pierce Jr. et al., Administrative Law Process 206, 207–08 (3d ed. 1999).

probate jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over matters relating to wills, settlement of decedents' estates, and (in some states) guardianship and the adoption of minors. [Cases: Courts 198; Federal Courts 9.]

prorogated jurisdiction. Civil law. Jurisdiction conferred by the express consent of all the parties on a judge who would otherwise be disqualified. Cf. tacit prorogation under PROROGATION.

quasi-in-rem jurisdiction (kway-sI in remorkway-zI). Jurisdiction over a person but based on that person's interest in property located within the court's territory. — Also termed jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi in rem under IN REM. [Cases: Courts 18; Federal Courts 93. C.J.S. Courts § 53.]

significant-connection jurisdiction. Family law. In a child-custody matter, jurisdiction based on (1) the best interests of the child, (2) at least one parent's (or litigant's) significant connection to the state, and (3) the presence in the state of substantial evidence about the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships. • This type of jurisdiction is conferred by both the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act and the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. Generally, the home state will also be the state with significant connections and substantial evidence. Jurisdiction based on a significant connection or substantial evidence alone is conferred only when the child has no home state. — Also termed significant-connection/substantial-evidence jurisdiction; significant connection-substantial evidence jurisdiction; substantial-evidence jurisdiction. See HOME STATE.

special jurisdiction. See limited jurisdiction.

specific jurisdiction. Jurisdiction that stems from the defendant's having certain minimum contacts with the forum state so that the court may hear a case whose issues arise from those minimum contacts. Cf. general jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 12(2.10); Federal Courts 76.10. C.J.S. Courts §§ 40, 45, 47.]

state jurisdiction. 1. The exercise of state-court authority. 2. A court's power to hear all matters, both civil and criminal, arising within its territorial boundaries.

status-offense jurisdiction. The power of the court to hear matters regarding noncriminal conduct committed by a juvenile. See status offense under OFFENSE (1). Cf. delinquency jurisdiction.

subject-matter jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over the nature of the case and the type of relief sought; the extent to which a court can rule on the conduct of persons or the status of things. — Also termed jurisdiction of the subject matter; jurisdiction of the cause; jurisdiction over the action. Cf. personal jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 4; Federal Courts 3.1. C.J.S. Courts §§ 9–10, 18.]

summary jurisdiction. 1. A court's jurisdiction in a summary proceeding. 2. The court's authority to issue a judgment or order (such as a finding of contempt) without the necessity of a trial or other process. 3. English law. A court's power to make an order immediately, without obtaining authority or referral, as in a magistrate's power to dispose of a criminal case without referring it to the Crown Court for a formal trial or without drawing a jury.

supplemental jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over a claim that is part of the same case or controversy as another claim over which the court has original jurisdiction. • Since 1990, federal district courts have had supplemental jurisdiction, which includes jurisdiction over both ancillary and pendent claims. 28 USCA § 1367. See ancillary jurisdiction; pendent jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 27; Equity 35; Federal Courts 14. C.J.S. Courts § 66; Equity §§ 9, 80, 87.]

territorial jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction over cases arising in or involving persons residing within a defined territory. [Cases: Courts 171; Federal Courts 71.] 2. Territory over which a government, one of its courts, or one of its subdivisions has jurisdiction.

transient jurisdiction (tran-sh<<schwa>>nt). Personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is served with process while in the forum state only temporarily (such as during travel). [Cases: Courts 13. C.J.S. Courts § 41.]

voluntary jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction exercised over unopposed matters. 2. Eccles. law. Jurisdiction that does not require a judicial proceeding, as with granting a license or installing a nominee to a benefice.

Cf. CONSTITUTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 795. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure § 241.]

JURISPRUDE

jurisprudence (joor-is-prood-*<<schwa>>nts), n.1. Originally (in the 18th century), the study of the first principles of the law of nature, the civil law, and the law of nations. — Also termed jurisprudentia naturalis (joor-is-proo-den-shee-<<schwa>>* nach-<<schwa>>-ray-lis). 2. More modernly, the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system, as opposed to its practical and concrete details. 3. The study of legal systems in general. 4. Judicial precedents considered collectively. 5. In German literature, the whole of legal knowledge. 6. A system, body, or division of law. 7. CASELAW.

“Jurisprudence addresses the questions about law that an intelligent layperson of speculative bent — not a lawyer — might think particularly interesting. What is law? ... Where does law come from? ... Is law an autonomous discipline? ... What is the purpose of law? ... Is law a science, a humanity, or neither? ... A practicing lawyer or a judge is apt to think questions of this sort at best

analytical jurisprudence. A method of legal study that concentrates on the logical structure of law, the meanings and uses of its concepts, and the formal terms and the modes of its operation.

ensorial jurisprudence. See LAW REFORM.

comparative jurisprudence. See COMPARATIVE LAW.

equity jurisprudence. 1. The legal science treating the rules, principles, and maxims that govern the decisions of a court of equity. 2. The cases and controversies that are considered proper subjects of equity. 3. The nature and form of the remedies that equity grants.

ethical jurisprudence. The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the law from the viewpoint of its ethical significance and adequacy. • This area of study brings together moral and legal philosophy. — Also termed (in German) Rechtsphilosophie; (in French) philosophie du droit.

expository jurisprudence. The scholarly exposition of the contents of an actual legal system as it now exists or once existed. — Also termed systematic jurisprudence.

feminist jurisprudence. A branch of jurisprudence that examines the relationship between women and law, including the history of legal and social biases against women, the elimination of those biases in modern law, and the enhancement of women's legal rights and recognition in society.

“The first published use of the phrase ‘feminist jurisprudence’ occurred in 1978 when Professor Ann Scales published an article called Toward a Feminist Jurisprudence. Feminist legal theory is diverse, and anything but monolithic. Many feminists believe that it is difficult to generalize about feminist jurisprudence. It is, however, possible to understand feminist legal theory as a reaction to the jurisprudence of modern legal scholars (primarily male scholars) who tend to see law as a process for interpreting and perpetuating a universal, gender-neutral public morality. Feminist legal scholars, despite their differences, appear united in claiming that ‘masculine’ jurisprudence of ‘all stripes’ fails to acknowledge, let alone respond to, the interests, values, fears, and harms experienced by women.” Gary Minda, Postmodern Legal Movements 129–30 (1995).

general jurisprudence. 1. The scholarly study of the fundamental elements of a given legal system. — Also termed jurisprudentia generalis.

“The term ‘general jurisprudence’ involves the misleading suggestion that this branch of legal science is that which relates not to any single system of law, but to those conceptions and principles that are to be found in all developed legal systems, and which are therefore in this sense general. It is true that a great part of the matter with which it is concerned is common to all mature systems of law. All of these have the same essential nature and purposes, and therefore agree to a large extent in their first principles. But it is not because of universal reception that any principles pertain to the theory or philosophy of law. For this purpose such reception is neither sufficient nor necessary. Even if no system in the world save that of England recognised the legislative efficacy of judicial precedents, the theory of case-law would none the less be a fit and proper subject of general jurisprudence. Jurisprudentia generalis is not the study of legal systems in general, but the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 3 n.(b) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. The scholarly study of the law, legal theory, and legal systems generally. — Also termed jurisprudentia universalis; philosophy of law; legal philosophy.

"According to Austin (1790–1859), general jurisprudence is the study of the 'principles, notions and distinctions' common to the maturer systems of law." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 2 (4th ed. 1991).

historical jurisprudence. The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the history of the first principles and conceptions of a legal system, dealing with (1) the general principles governing the origin and development of law, and (2) the origin and development of the legal system's first principles.

"Historical jurisprudence was a passive restraining mode of thought on legal subjects by way of reaction from the active creative thought of the era of philosophy. It was a reaction, too, from the confident disregard of traditional legal institutions and conditions of time and place which characterized the French Revolution. We were not ready for it in the fore part of the last century. But we accepted it eagerly toward the end of that century when it was already moribund in Europe." Roscoe Pound, The Formative Era of American Law 113 (1938).

jurisprudence constante (k<<schwa>>n-stan-tee). Civil law. The doctrine that a court should give great weight to a rule of law that is accepted and applied in a long line of cases, and should not overrule or modify its own decisions unless clear error is shown and injustice will arise from continuation of a particular rule of law. • Civil-law courts are not bound by the common-law doctrine of stare decisis. But they do recognize the doctrine of jurisprudence constante, which is similar to stare decisis, one exception being that jurisprudence constante does not command strict adherence to a legal principle applied on one occasion in the past. Cf. STARE DECISIS. [Cases: Courts 89. C.J.S. Courts §§ 139–140, 144–146, 161–164, 166–167.]

jurisprudence of conceptions. The extension of a maxim or definition, usu. to a logical extreme, with relentless disregard for the consequences. • The phrase appears to have been invented by Roscoe Pound. See Mechanical Jurisprudence, 8 Colum. L. Rev. 605, 608 (1908).

 1.INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2.Roman law. The body of law, taken to be common to all civilized peoples, and applied in dealing with the relations between Roman citizens and foreigners. — Also termed jus inter gentes.

“The early Roman law (the jus civile) applied only to Roman citizens. It was formalistic and hard and reflected the status of a small, unsophisticated society rooted in the soil. It was totally unable to provide a relevant background for an expanding, developing nation. This need was served by the creation and progressive augmentation of the jus gentium. This provided simplified rules to govern the relations between foreigners, and between foreigners and citizens.... The progressive rules of the jus gentium gradually overrode the narrow jus civile until the latter system ceased to exist. Thus, the jus gentium became the common law of the Roman Empire and was deemed to be of universal application.” Malcolm N. Shaw, International Law 15 (4th ed. 1997).

See patria potestas under POTESTAS. Cf. CONCUBINATUS.

“Justae nuptiae is such a marriage as satisfies all the rules of civil law. Any marriage between two persons who had the capacity of civil marriage with each other (conubium) was necessarily iustae nuptiae, for if the union was defective in any other respect it was no marriage at all. On the other hand, if there was no conubium between the parties it might still be actually a marriage (nuptiae, nuptiae non iustae), the wife being uxor non iusta, the children liberi non iusti. Such a marriage, in which one party at least would not be a civis, did not produce patria potestas over children ....” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 63–64 (2d ed. 1953).

“[N]o defendant in an action of trespass can plead the jus tertii — the right of possession outstanding in some third person — as against the fact of possession in the plaintiff.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 46 (17th ed. 1977).

2. The doctrine that, particularly in constitutional law, courts do not decide what they do not need to decide. “Jus tertii ... says nothing about the nature of legal argument on the merits of a case once formed, but as a symbol for the separability of cases is a useful term of art. Translated, however, it reads ‘right of a third person.’ It may once have been associated with a presumption of common-law jurisprudence that one cannot be harmed by an action that achieves its effect through effects upon others, cannot be ‘indirectly’ harmed.” Joseph Vining, Legal Identity 120 (1978).

JUSTICE

justice. 1. The fair and proper administration of laws.

LIDFORD LAW; LYNCH LAW.

justice in personam. See personal justice.

justice in rem. See social justice.

natural justice. Justice as defined in a moral, as opposed to a legal, sense. — Also termed justitia naturalis. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

“Although the judges have frequently asserted that a foreign judgment which contravenes the principles of natural justice cannot be enforced in England, it is extremely difficult to fix with precision the exact cases in which the contravention is sufficiently serious to justify a refusal of enforcement. Shadwell V.-C. once said that ‘whenever it is manifest that justice has been disregarded, the court is bound to treat the decision as a matter of no value and no substance.’ [Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim 279, 302 (1837).] But this goes too far.... The expression ‘contrary to natural justice’ has, however, figured so prominently in judicial statements that it is essential to fix, if possible, its exact scope. The only statement that can be made with any approach to accuracy is that in the present context, the expression is confined to something glaringly defective in the procedural rules of the foreign law.... In other words, what the courts are vigilant to watch is that the defendant has not been deprived of an opportunity to present his side of the case.” G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 675 (6th ed. 1961).

personal justice. Justice between parties to a dispute, regardless of any larger principles that might be involved. — Also termed justice in personam.

popular justice. Demotic justice, which is usu. considered less than fully fair and proper even though it satisfies prevailing public opinion in a particular case. Cf. social justice.

“Nothing is more treacherous than popular justice in many of its manifestations, subject as it is to passion, to fallacy, and to the inability to grasp general notions or to distinguish the essential from the inessential.” Carleton K. Allen, Law in the Making 387 (7th ed. 1964).

positive justice. Justice as it is conceived, recognized, and incompletely expressed by the civil law or some other form of human law. Cf. POSITIVE LAW.

preventive justice. Justice intended to protect against probable future misbehavior. • Specific types of preventive justice include appointing a receiver or administrator, issuing a restraining order or injunction, and binding over to keep the peace.

social justice. Justice that conforms to a moral principle, such as that all people are equal. — Also termed justice in rem. Cf. personal justice.

substantial justice. Justice fairly administered according to rules of substantive law, regardless of any procedural errors not affecting the litigant's substantive rights; a fair trial on the merits.

2. A judge, esp. of an appellate court or a court of last resort. — Abbr. J. (and, in plural, JJ.). [Cases: Judges 1. C.J.S. Judges §§ 2–7.]

JUSTIFICATION

justification,n.1. A lawful or sufficient reason for one's acts or omissions; any fact that prevents an act from being wrongful. 2. A showing, in court, of a sufficient reason why a defendant did what the prosecution charges the defendant to answer for. • Under the Model Penal Code, the defendant must believe that the action was necessary to avoid a harm or evil and that the harm or evil to be avoided was greater than the harm that would have resulted if the crime had been committed. Model Penal Code § 3.02. — Also termed justification defense; necessity defense. See lesser-evils defense under DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law 38. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 49–53.] 3. A surety's proof of having enough money or credit to provide security for the party for whom it is required. — justify,vb. — justificatory (j<< schwa>>s-ti-fi-k<<schwa>>-tor-ee), adj.

“A little bit of history: the term ‘justification’ was formerly used for cases where the aim of the law was not frustrated, while ‘excuse’ was used for cases where it was not thought proper to punish. Killing a dangerous criminal who had tried to avoid arrest was justified, since the law (if one may personify) wished this to happen, whereas killing in self-defence was merely excused. The distinction was important because justification was a defence to the criminal charge while an excuse was not, being merely the occasion for a royal pardon. By the end of the middle ages (it is difficult to assign a fixed date) even excuses were recognised by the courts, since when there has been no reason to distinguish between justification and excuse.” Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 39 (1978).

Cf. EXCUSE(2). [Cases: Criminal Law 38; Torts 16. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 49–53; Right of Privacy and Publicity §§ 20, 28, 31–33, 44; Torts §§ 7, 12, 14–15, 51, 64, 92–93.]

JUSTINIAN CODE

Justinian Code (j<<schwa>>s-tin-ee-<<schwa>>n). Roman law. A collection of imperial constitutions drawn up by a commission of ten persons appointed by Justinian, and published in A.D. 529. • Ten jurists, headed by Tribonian, carried out the project beginning in February A.D. 528 and ending in April 529. It replaced all prior imperial law, but was in force only until A.D. 534, when it was supplanted by a revision, the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis. The precise contents of the first work are unknown. But the second work, containing the 12 books of the revised code, includes the imperial constitutions of the Gregorian, Hermogenian, and Theodosian Codes, together with later legislation, revised and harmonized into one systematic whole. It deals with ecclesiastical law, criminal law, administrative law, and private law. In modern writings, the A.D. 534 version is the work referred to as the Justinian Code. — Also termed Justinianean Code (j<<schwa>>s-tin-ee-an-ee-<<schwa>>n); Code of Justinian; Codex Justinianus (koh-deks j<<schwa>>s-tin-ee-ay-n<<schwa>>s); Codex Vetus (“Old Code”); Codex Iustinianus Repetitae Praelectionis.

“By the time when the Digest and Institutes had been completed it was obvious that the Codex, published little more than four years earlier, was incomplete, since in the interval Justinian ... had promulgated other new constitutions. Tribonian, therefore, was appointed to revise the Code, so as to bring it fully up to date, and at the end of the year A.D. 534 this new Code, known as the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, was promulgated, and is the only Code which survives to the present day. Justinian seems to have laboured under the erroneous impression that the system he had framed would be adequate for all time. But as there is nothing static about law, further legislative enactments, termed Novellae Constitutiones, were issued during his reign.... In modern times Justinian's various compilations came to be called collectively the Corpus Juris Civilis: the Corpus being regarded as a single work, made up of the Institutes, the Digest, the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, and the Novels.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 44 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

We speak of the property of the Crown, when we mean the property which the King holds in right of his Crown. So we speak of the debts due by the Crown, of legal proceedings by and against the Crown, and so on. The usage is one of great convenience, because it avoids a difficulty which is inherent in all speech and thought concerning corporations sole, the difficulty, namely, of distinguishing adequately between the body politic and the human being by whom it is represented and whose name it bears.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 341–42 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

King's peace. Hist. A royal subject's right to be protected from crime (to “have peace”) in certain areas subject to the king's immediate control, such as the king's palace or highway. • A breach of the peace in one of these areas subjected the offender to punishment in the king's court. Over time, the area subject to the king's peace grew, which in turn increased the jurisdiction of the royal courts. — Also written King's Peace. Cf. AGAINST THE PEACE AND DIGNITY OF THE STATE .

“A breach of the King's Peace was at one time the most comprehensive of all offences against the Crown; it indeed included, and still includes, all the more serious crimes. At one time, in fact, every indictment charged the accused with an offence ‘against the peace of our Sovereign Lord the King’; and, though this form is no longer employed, that is mainly because the imperative duty of not disturbing the King's Peace has by now evolved into an elaborate system of Criminal Law.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 134 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

“By far the greater part of England is held of the king by knight's service (per servitium militare): it is comparatively rare for the king's tenants in chief to hold by any of the other tenures. In order to understand this tenure we must form the conception of a unit of military service. That unit seems to be the service of one knight or fully armed horseman (servitium unius militis) to be done to the king in his army for forty days in the year, if it be called for.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. knowledge. 1. An awareness or understanding of a fact or circumstance; a state of mind in which a person has no substantial doubt about the existence of a fact. Cf. INTENT(1); NOTICE(1), (2); SCIENTER.

“It is necessary ... to distinguish between producing a result intentionally and producing it knowingly. Intention and knowledge commonly go together, for he who intends a result usually knows that it will follow, and he who knows the consequences of his act usually intends them. But there may be intention without knowledge, the consequence being desired but not foreknown as certain or even probable. Conversely, there may be knowledge without intention, the consequence being foreknown as the inevitable concomitant of that which is desired, but being itself an object of repugnance rather than desire, and therefore not intended. When King David ordered Uriah the Hittite to be set in the forefront of the hottest battle, he intended the death of Uriah only, yet he knew for a certainty that many others of his men would fall at the same time and place.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 380–81 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“ ‘Knowingly’ or ‘knowledge’ has a broad sweep when used in connection with the element of a crime, and an untrue representation has been ‘knowingly’ made if by one who knows it is untrue, believes it is untrue or is quite aware that he has not the slightest notion whether it is true or not.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 379 (3d ed. 1982).

“[B]ecause there are several areas of the criminal law in which there may be good reason for distinguishing between one's objectives and [one's] knowledge, the modern approach is to define separately the mental states of knowledge and intent .... This is the approach taken in the Model Penal Code [§ 2.02(2)(a) & (b)].” Wayne R. LaFave & Austin W. Scott Jr., Criminal Law 218 (2d ed. 1986).

“The third issue in section 523(a)(3) is the meaning of ‘notice or actual knowledge.’ Under the Uniform Commercial Code knowledge means actually knowing something; notice means having received information from which one could infer the existence of the relevant fact. What the adjective ‘actual’ adds to the idea of ‘knowledge’ is unclear.” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-27, at 516 (1993).

reckless knowledge. A person's awareness that a prohibited circumstance may exist, regardless of which the person accepts the risk and goes on to act.

Knowledge that is grounded on scientific methods that have been supported by adequate validation. • Four primary factors are used to determine whether evidence amounts to scientific knowledge: (1) whether it has been tested; (2) whether it has been subject to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error; and (4) the degree of acceptance within the scientific community. See DAUBERT TEST; SCIENTIFIC METHOD. [Cases: Criminal Law 486; Evidence 555. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 1080; Evidence §§ 597–598, 601, 649, 652, 713.]

“Early in its history, Chancery developed the doctrine that where the plaintiff in equity delayed beyond the period of the statute applicable at law, relief would be refused on the ground of laches even though no specific prejudice to the defendant was shown. Today, in most states, there are statutes of limitations applying to suits in equity. Despite these, however, the doctrine still holds that even if the delay is for a shorter period of time than that of the statute, it may still bar equitable relief if it is unreasonable and prejudicial to the defendant.” John F. O’Connell, Remedies in a Nutshell 16 (2d ed. 1985).

LIMITATION(3). [Cases: Equity 67. C.J.S. Equity §§ 128–132.] “The doctrine of laches ... is an instance of the exercise of the reserved power of equity to withhold relief otherwise regularly given where in the particular case the granting of such relief would be unfair or unjust.”

LAESIO ENORMIS

laesio enormis (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis). [Law Latin “excessive loss” or “abnormal loss of more than half”] Roman & civil law. 1. The sale of a thing for which the buyer paid less than half its real value. • The seller could rescind the sale, but the buyer could keep the item purchased by paying the full value. Generally, this doctrine was limited to land sales. 2. The injury sustained by one party to an onerous contract when the overreaching party receives twice the value of that party's money or property, such as a purchaser who pays less than half the value of the property sold, or a seller who receives more than double the property's value. • If coowner coheirs partition or sell property, laesio enormis may exist when the purchaser pays less than one-fourth of the value rather than one-half. See La. Civ. Code arts. 824, 1406. — Also spelled lesio enormis. — Also termed lesion; enorm lesion; (in full) laesio enormis vel ultra dimidium (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis vel <<schwa>>l-tr<<schwa>> di-mid-ee-<<schwa>>m); (in Louisiana) lesion beyond moiety.

“Lesion (laesio enormis) was the rule, established very late, that a seller could rescind a contract if he had received less than half its real value .... [I]n spite of its imperfections, lesion not only was adopted in all modern civilian systems (French Code Civil 1674–1683), but became the means of testing the validity of contracts generally by their fairness, a principle embodied in the German Civil Code (section 138) and the Swiss Code of Obligations (section 21). Such a test is no more difficult to apply in law than in equity, where it has long been established in our system. As the Romans applied it, it was a clumsy and inadequate way of reaching this result. In modern courts, in civil-law countries, it invests judges with a discretion not very likely to be abused, but sufficient to act as a deterrent to the grosser forms of economic exploitation.” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 233–34 (1927).

LAND

land, n. 1. An immovable and indestructible three-dimensional area consisting of a portion of the earth's surface, the space above and below the surface, and everything growing on or permanently affixed to it. 2. An estate or interest in real property. [Cases: Estates in Property 1. C.J.S. Estates §§ 2–5, 8, 15–21, 116–128, 137, 243.]

“In its legal significance, ‘land’ is not restricted to the earth's surface, but extends below and above the surface. Nor is it confined to solids, but may encompass within its bounds such things as gases and liquids. A definition of ‘land’ along the lines of ‘a mass of physical matter occupying space’ also is not sufficient, for an owner of land may remove part or all of that physical matter, as by digging up and carrying away the soil, but would nevertheless retain as part of his ‘land’ the space that remains. Ultimately, as a juristic concept, ‘land’ is simply an area of three-dimensional space, its position being identified by natural or imaginary points located by reference to the earth's surface. ‘Land’ is not the fixed contents of that space, although, as we shall see, the owner of that space may well own those fixed contents. Land is immoveable, as distinct from chattels, which are moveable; it is also, in its legal significance, indestructible. The contents of the space may be physically severed, destroyed or consumed, but the space itself, and so the ‘land’, remains immutable.” Peter Butt, Land Law 9 (2d ed. 1988).

“ ‘Acquired lands’ are lands the United States acquired from private or state owners by gift, purchase, exchange, or condemnation. In most but not all cases, such lands actually have been ‘reacquired,’ because the United States previously had purchased or won them from foreign and Indian sovereigns. Distinguishing between lands because of ownership origins that go back over a century is a policy with little to recommend it, but some statutes and judicial opinions maintain the distinction.” George Cameron Coggins, Public Natural Resources Law § 1.02[1] (1990).

“Public regulation of the use and development of land comes in a variety of forms which generally focus on four aspects of land use: (1) the type of use, such as whether it will be used for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or residential purposes; (2) the density of use, manifested in concerns over the height, width, bulk, or environmental impact of the physical structures on the land; (3) the aesthetic impact of the use, which may include the design and placement of structures on the land; and (4) the effect of the particular use of the land on the cultural and social values of the community, illustrated by community conflicts over adult entertainment, housing for service-dependent groups such as low-income families and developmentally disabled persons, and whether the term family should be defined in land use regulations to include persons who are not related by blood or marriage.” Peter W. Salsich Jr., Land Use Regulation 1 (1991).

LARCENY

larceny (lahr-s<<schwa>>-nee), n. The unlawful taking and carrying away of someone else's personal property with the intent to deprive the possessor of it permanently. • Common-law larceny has been broadened by some statutes to include embezzlement and false pretenses, all three of which are often subsumed under the statutory crime of “theft.” [Cases: Larceny 1.C.J.S. Larceny §§ 1(1, 2), 9.]

“The criminal offence of larceny or theft in the Common Law was intimately connected with the civil wrong of trespass. ‘Where there has been no trespass,’ said Lord Coleridge, ‘there can at law common be no larceny.’ Larceny, in other words, is merely a particular kind of trespass to goods which, by virtue of the trespasser's intent, is converted into a crime. Trespass is a wrong, not to ownership but to possession, and theft, therefore, is not the violation of a person's right to ownership, but the infringement of his possession, accompanied with a particular criminal intent.” 4 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 72–73 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

“[T]he distinctions between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of ‘larceny.’ This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389 (3d ed. 1982).

grand larceny. Larceny of property worth more than a statutory cutoff amount, usu. $100. Cf. petit larceny. [Cases: Larceny 23. C.J.S. Larceny §§ 60(1, 2, 3), 61–65.]

“The English law, as the result of an early statute [the Statute of Westminster I, ch. 15 (1275)], classified this offense [larceny] as either (1) grand larceny or (2) petit larceny (now frequently written petty larceny), the former being a capital offense and the latter punishable by forfeiture of goods and whipping, but not death. Both, as mentioned earlier, were felonies. The offense was grand larceny if the value of the property stolen exceeded twelve pence and petit larceny if it did not. Modern statutes very generally retain this same classification (sometimes without using these labels) but with different penalties and different values set as the dividing line.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 335 (3d ed. 1982).

Larrison rule (lar-<<schwa>>-s<<schwa>>n).Criminal law. The doctrine that a defendant may be entitled to a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence of false testimony by a government witness if the jury might have reached a different conclusion without the evidence and it unfairly surprised the defendant at trial. Larrison v. United States, 24 F.2d 82 (7th Cir. 1928). [Cases: Criminal Law 942. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 1451.]

“The most usual rule in cases in which it is claimed that there was false testimony at the trial or that the witness has since recanted is the ‘Larrison rule,’ taking its name from the Seventh Circuit case in which it was announced. This is that three requirements must be met before a new trial will be granted on this ground: ‘(a) [That the] court is reasonably well satisfied that the testimony given by a material witness [was] false. (b) That without it the jury might have reached a different conclusion. (c) That the party seeking the new trial was taken by surprise when the false testimony was given and was unable to meet it for it did not know of its falsity until after the trial.’ ” 3 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 557.1, at 343 (2d ed. 1982) (quoting Larrison, 24 F.2d at 87–88).

The rule that a plaintiff who was contributorily negligent may nonetheless recover from the defendant if the defendant had the last opportunity to prevent the harm but failed to use reasonable care to do so (in other words, if the defendant's negligence is later in time than the plaintiff's). • This doctrine allows the plaintiff to rebut the contributory-negligence defense in the few jurisdictions where contributory negligence completely bars recovery. — Also termed discovered-peril doctrine; humanitarian doctrine; last-opportunity doctrine; subsequent-negligence doctrine; supervening-negligence doctrine. [Cases: Automobiles 227; Negligence 530, 1297. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles §§ 963–970; Negligence §§ 281–290, 313, 318.]

This person dies, and the new spouse makes a claim for the decedent's pension benefits. The last-in-time-marriage presumption operates so that the former spouse bears the burden of proving that there was no valid divorce.

LAST-LINK DOCTRINE

last-link doctrine. The rule that an attorney need not divulge nonprivileged information if doing so would reveal information protected by the attorney–client privilege, particularly if the information would provide essential evidence to support indicting or convicting the client of a crime. • This doctrine is often relied on as an exception to the rule that a client's identity is not privileged. For example, if divulging the client's name would supply the last link of evidence to indict or convict the client of a crime, the name need not be disclosed. [Cases: Witnesses 201(1). C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 329–330, 332–335, 337–340.]

Informally manumitted slaves who acquired some rights and privileges as free people, but not Roman citizenship. • They were a special class of freedmen (libertini) who could one day become citizens. If a Latinus Junianus did not become a citizen, then upon death that person's status reverted to slavery, and his or her patron acquired all the decedent's property. — Also termed libertine Junian Latins. See LEX JUNIA NORBANA. Cf. INGENUUS; SERVUS(1).

“Upon all these persons ... a new and definite status was conferred; they were henceforth to be known as Latini Juniani, their position being based upon Latinitas, a status which had been enjoyed by certain Latin colonists. A Latinus Junianus had no public rights .... But he had part of the commercium, i.e. he could acquire proprietary and other rights inter vivos, but not mortis causâ. A Latinus Junianus, therefore, could neither take under a will ... nor could he make one .... But, subject to these disabilities, a Latinus Junianus was a free man, and his children, though not, like the children of citizens, under his potestas, were free-born citizens.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 68–69 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

latitat (lat-⟨schwa⟩-tat), n.[Law Latin “he lurks”] Hist. A writ issued in a personal action after the sheriff returned a bill of Middlesex with the notation that the defendant could not be found. • The writ was called latitat because of its fictitious recital that the defendant lurks about in the county. It was abolished by the Process in Courts of Law at Westminster Act of 1832 (St. 2, Will. 4, ch. 39). See BILL OF MIDDLESEX; TESTATUM.

“Latitat is a writ by which all men in personal actions are originally called in the king's bench to answer. And it is called latitat, because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant cannot be found in the county of Middlesex, as it appears by the return of the sheriff of that county, but that he lurks in another county: and therefore to the sheriff of that county is this writ directed to apprehend him.” Termes de la Ley 277 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

“Some twenty years ago I pointed out two ideas running through definitions of law: one an imperative idea, an idea of a rule laid down by the lawmaking organ of a politically organized society, deriving its force from the authority of the sovereign; and the other a rational or ethical idea, an idea of a rule of right and justice deriving its authority from its intrinsic reasonableness or conformity to ideals of right and merely recognized, not made, by the sovereign.” Roscoe Pound, “More About the Nature of Law,” in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray at 513, 515 (1935).

“All law is the law of a group of individuals or of groups made up of individuals. No one can make a law purely for himself. He may form a resolution, frame an ambition, or adopt a rule, but these are private prescriptions, not laws.” Tony Honoré, Making Law Bind: Essays Legal and

“It will help to distinguish three senses of the word ‘law.’ The first is law as a distinctive social institution; that is the sense invoked when we ask whether primitive law is really law. The second is law as a collection of sets of propositions — the sets we refer to as antitrust law, the law of torts, the Statute of Frauds, and so on. The third is law as a source of rights, duties, and powers, as in the sentence ‘The law forbids the murdering heir to inherit.’ ” Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 220–21 (1990).

Cf. special law. [Cases: Statutes 68. C.J.S. Statutes §§ 154–161.] 2. A statute that relates to a subject of a broad nature.

imperative law. A rule in the form of a command; a rule of action imposed on people by some authority that enforces obedience.

“Strictly speaking, it is not possible to say that imperative law is a command in the ordinary sense of the word. A ‘command’ in the ordinary meaning of the word is an expression of a wish by a person or body as to the conduct of another person, communicated to that other person. But (1) in the case of the law there is no determinate person who as a matter of psychological fact commands all the law. We are all born into a community in which law already exists, and at no time in our lives do any of us command the whole law. The most that we do is to play our part in enforcing or altering particular portions of it. (2) Ignorance of the law is no excuse; thus a rule of law is binding even though not communicated to the subject of the law.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 21 n.(c) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

captive law firm. A law firm staffed by employees of an insurance company. • These lawyers typically defend insureds in lawsuits covered under the insurer's liability policies. #### LAW FRENCH

Law French. The corrupted form of the Norman French language that arose in England in the centuries after William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066 and that was used for several centuries as the primary language of the English legal system; the Anglo-French used in medieval England in judicial proceedings, pleadings, and lawbooks. — Abbr. L.F. — Also written law French. See NORMAN FRENCH.

“That Law French was barbarous in its decrepitude does not in the least diminish the value of it to our law when it was full of vitality. It helped to make English law one of the four indigenous systems of the civilized world, for it exactly expressed legal ideas in a technical language which had no precise equivalent.” Percy H. Winfield, The Chief Sources of English Legal History 14 (1925).

“To the linguist, law French is a corrupt dialect by definition. Anglo-French was in steady decline after 1300. Lawyers such as Fortescue, on the other hand, were probably serious in maintaining that it was the vernacular of France which was deteriorating by comparison with the pristine Norman of the English courts. That Fortescue could make such a claim, while living in France, is in itself a clear demonstration that by the middle of the fifteenth century there was a marked difference between the French of English lawyers and the French of France.” J.H. Baker, A Manual of Law French 11 (1979).

“Law French refers to the Anglo-Norman patois used in legal documents and all judicial proceedings from the 1260s to the reign of Edward III (1327–1377), and used with frequency in legal literature up to the early 18th century. When first introduced into England, this brand of French was the standard language used in Normandy; by the 1300s, through linguistic isolation, it became a corrupted language — by French standards, at any rate.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 504–05 (2d ed. 1995).

“LAW LATIN. A technical kind of Latin, in which the pleadings and proceedings of the English courts were enrolled and recorded from a very early period to the reign of George II .... The principal peculiarities of this language consist first, in its construction, which is adapted so closely to the English idiom as to answer to it sometimes word for word; and, secondly, in the use of numerous words ‘not allowed by grammarians nor having any countenance of Latin,’ but framed from the English by merely adding a Latin termination, as murdrum from murder ....” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 135 (2d ed. 1867).

“Law Latin, sometimes formerly called ‘dog Latin,’ is the bastardized or debased Latin formerly used in law and legal documents. For the most part, we have escaped its clutches. In 1730, Parliament abolished Law Latin in legal proceedings, but two years later found it necessary to allow Latin phrases that had previously been in common use, such as fieri facias, habeas corpus, ne exeat, and nisi prius. As Blackstone would later say, some Latinisms were ‘not ... capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness.’ 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries 323 (1768).” Bryan A. concurrent lease.A lease that begins before a previous lease ends, entitling the new lessee to be paid all rents that accrue on the previous lease after the new lease begins, and to remedies against the holding tenant.

“A landlord who has granted a lease may nevertheless grant another lease of the same land for all or some of the period of the first lease. The second lease does not deprive the lessee under the first lease of the right to possession of the property, but is, in reality, a lease of the reversion. Because the two leases operate concurrently during at least some part of their respective durations, they are known as 'concurrent leases.' ” Peter Butt, Land Law 233 (2d ed. 1988).

consumer lease. 1. A lease of goods by a person who is in the business of selling or leasing a product primarily for the lessee's personal or household use. UCC § 2A-103(1)(e). [Cases: Bailment 2. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 5, 14, 16–18.] 2. A residential — rather than commercial — lease.

edge lease. Oil & gas. A lease located on the edge of a field.

finance lease. A fixed-term lease used by a business to finance capital equipment. • The lessor's service is usu. limited to financing the asset, and the lessee pays maintenance costs and taxes and has the option of purchasing the asset at lease-end for a nominal price. Finance leases strongly resemble security agreements and are written almost exclusively by financial institutions as a way to help a commercial customer obtain an expensive capital item that the customer might not otherwise be able to afford. UCC § 2A-103(1)(g). — Also termed full payout lease; tripartite lease. [Cases: Bailment 2. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 5, 14, 16–18.]

“By carving out the ‘finance lease’ for special treatment, the drafters of Article 2A have recognized a distinct species of lease that is written almost exclusively by financial institutions and — although treated as a true lease — does not normally carry with it certain of the responsibilities that the typical lessor bears under Article 2A.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 13-3, at 4 (4th ed. 1995).

“A finance lease is the product of a three-party transaction. The supplier manufactures or supplies the goods pursuant to the lessee's specification, perhaps even pursuant to a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement between the supplier and the lessee. After the prospective finance lease is negotiated, a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement is entered into by the lessor (as buyer or prime lessee) or an existing order, agreement, or lease is assigned by the lessee to the lessor, and the lessor and the lessee then enter into a lease or sublease of the goods. Due to the limited function usually performed by the lessor, the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants, and warranties. If a manufacturer's warranty carries through, the lessee may also look to that. Yet, this definition does not restrict the lessor's function solely to the supply of funds; if the lessor undertakes or performs other functions, express warranties, covenants, and the common law will protect the lessee.” UCC § 2A-102 cmt. at 14–15 (Proposed Final Draft, 30 Apr. 1999).

full-service lease. A lease in which the lessor agrees to pay all maintenance expenses, insurance premiums, and property taxes. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 148(1), 156. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 374–376, 378–386.]

ground lease.A long-term (usu. 99-year) lease of land only. • Such a lease typically involves commercial property, and any improvements built by the lessee usu. revert to the lessor. — Also termed ground-rent lease; land lease. [Cases: Estates in Property 13. C.J.S. Estates §§ 159–192.]

headlease. See HEADLEASE.

index lease.A lease that provides for increases in rent according to the increases in the consumer price index. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 200.7.]

land lease.See ground lease.

leveraged lease.A lease that is collateral for the loan through which the lessor acquired the leased asset, and that provides the lender's only recourse for nonpayment of the debt; a lease in which a creditor provides nonrecourse financing to the lessor (who has substantial leverage in the property) and in which the lessor's net investment in the lease, apart from nonrecourse financing, declines during the early years and increases in later years. — Also termed third-party equity lease; tax lease.

master lease.A lease that controls later leases or subleases, particularly of parts of the leased property.

mineral lease.A lease in which the lessee has the right to explore for and extract oil, gas, or other minerals. • The rent is usu. based on the amount or value of the minerals extracted. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 56–81. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 194–325, 442.]

mining lease.A lease of a mine or mining claim, in which the lessee has the right to work the mine or claim, usu. with conditions on the amount and type of work to be done. • The lessor is compensated in the form of either fixed rent or royalties based on the amount of ore mined. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 62–71. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 200–232.]

month-to-month lease.A tenancy with no written contract. • Rent is paid monthly, and usu. one month's notice by the landlord or tenant is required to terminate the tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 113. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 130(1, 2), 131, 145, 151–155.]

net lease.A lease in which the lessee pays rent plus property expenses (such as taxes and insurance).

net-net-net lease.A lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses, including mortgage interest and amortization, leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims. — Also termed triple-net lease.

oil-and-gas lease.A lease granting the right to extract oil and gas from a specified piece of land. • Although called a “lease,” this interest is typically considered a determinable fee in the minerals rather than a grant of possession for a term of years. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 73–81. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 210, 233, 238–283, 285–325, 442.]

“or” lease. Oil & gas. A mineral lease with a drilling-delay rental clause structured so that the lessee promises to start drilling operations or to pay delay rentals from time to time during the primary term. • If the lessee fails to do one or the other, the lease does not automatically terminate, but the lessee is liable for the delay-rental amount.

perpetual lease. 1. An ongoing lease not limited in duration. 2. A grant of lands in fee with a reservation of a rent in fee; a fee farm. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 87. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant § 61.]

perpetually renewable lease. Hist. A lease that a tenant may renew for another period as often as it expires, usu. by making a payment upon exercising the right. • In 1922, this type of lease was effectively abolished in England by the Law of Property Act, which provided for the conversion of existing and future perpetually renewable leases to term-of-years leases, and set the maximum term at 2,000 years.

reversionary lease. A lease that will take effect when a prior lease terminates.

sandwich lease. A lease in which the lessee subleases the property to a third party, esp. for more rent than under the original lease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 74. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 30, 53.]

short lease. A lease of brief duration, often less than six months.

sublease. See SUBLEASE.

synthetic lease. A method for financing the purchase of real estate, whereby the lender creates a special-purpose entity that buys the property and then leases it to the ultimate user (usu. a corporation). • A synthetic lease is treated as a loan for tax purposes and as an operating lease for accounting purposes, so that the “lessee” can deduct the property's depreciation and the loan's interest yet keep both the asset and the debt off its balance sheet.

tax lease. 1. The instrument or estate given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale when the law does not permit the sale of an estate in fee for nonpayment of taxes but instead directs the sale of timber lease. A real-property lease that contemplates that the lessee will cut timber on the leased premises. [Cases: Logs and Logging 3. C.J.S. Logs and Logging §§ 9, 20.]

third-party equity lease. See leveraged lease.

triple-net lease. See net-net-net lease.

lease, vb. 1. To grant the possession and use of (land, buildings, rooms, movable property, etc.) to another in return for rent or other consideration <the city leased the stadium to the football team>. [Cases: Bailment 1; Landlord and Tenant 20. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 2–13, 15, 19, 22–24, 31; Landlord and Tenant §§ 27, 202(1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10), 203.] 2. To take a lease of; to hold by a lease <Carol leased the townhouse from her uncle>.

LEASE AGREEMENT

lease agreement. See LEASE(3).

LEASE AND RELEASE

lease and release. Hist. A method of transferring seisin without livery, whereby the owner and the transferee would enter into a lease for a term of years, to take effect only when the transferee entered the property, whereupon the owner would release all interest in the property to the transferee by written instrument. • Once the transferee owned both the term and the freehold interest, the two interests would merge to form one estate in fee simple. This lease-and-release procedure was fully acceptable to the courts, on the theory that livery of seisin to one already occupying the land was unnecessary.

LEASEBACK

leaseback, n. The sale of property on the understanding, or with the express option, that the seller may lease the property from the buyer immediately upon the sale. — Also termed sale and leaseback. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 20. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 27, 202(1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10), 203.]

LEASE CONTRACT

lease contract. See LEASE(3).

LEASE FOR LIFE

lease for life. Hist. A lease of land for the duration of a specified number of lives instead of for a specified term of years. • Unlike a tenant for a term of years, a lessee for life could recover the land if dispossessed.

“The rent payable was usually fairly small, but a fine was paid when the lease was granted; a further fine was payable when, on the termination of the lives, the tenant exercised the right the lease gave him to replace them and so extend the lease. If the lessor was a corporation such as a monastery or college, the fines were treated as income by the then members of the corporation, to the disadvantage of their successors. Leases for life finally lost their popularity when legislation in the first half of the nineteenth century compelled corporations to add such fines to their capital.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 306 (6th ed. 1993).

“I ... employ the expression ‘Legal Fiction’ to signify any assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged, its operation being modified.... It is not difficult to understand why fictions in all their forms are particularly congenial to the infancy of society. They satisfy the desire for improvement, which is not quite wanting, at the same time that they do not offend the superstitious disrelish for change which is always present.” Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 21–22 (17th ed. 1901).

"If ... the law and the lawyer are to make a socially valuable contribution to the operation of the social security system, there must be abandoned old-established habits of thought as to the nature of law and the whole gamut of practices summed up in the layman's word of deadly insult, 'legalism' — his word for rigid attachment to legal precedent, the substitution of legal rule for policy, the fettering of discretion, the adversary style, the taking of technical points, formality." “Because of the importance to feudal landholders of seisin and of real property in general, the writ of right has been called ‘the most solemn of all actions.’ Nevertheless, it was believed that the time within which such a complainant would be allowed to prove an ancestor to have been seised of the estate in question must be limited. At first this was done by selecting an arbitrary date in the past, before which ‘legal memory’ would not run. The date initially was Dec. 1, 1135 (the death of Henry I); in 1236 it was changed by statute to Dec. 19, 1154 (the coronation of Henry II); and in 1275 it became Sept. 3, 1189 (the coronation of Richard I). Finally, in 1540, an arbitrary period of sixty years was set as the period of ‘legal memory.’ The latter change was probably made because it was felt that a 350-year statute of limitations was somewhat awkward.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 45 n.65 (2d ed. 1984).

Hart. See POSITIVE LAW. Cf. LOGICAL POSITIVISM. — legal positivist, n.

“[I]t will be helpful to offer some comparisons between legal positivism and its counterpart in science. Scientific positivism condemns any inquiry projecting itself beyond observable phenomena; it abjures metaphysics, it renounces in advance any explanation in terms of ultimate causes. Its program of research is to chart the regularities discernible in the phenomena of nature at the point where they become open to human observation, without asking — as it were — how they got there. In the setting of limits to inquiry there is an obvious parallel between scientific and legal positivism. The legal positivist concentrates his attention on law at the point where it emerges from the institutional processes that brought it into being. It is the finally made law itself that furnishes the subject of his inquiries. How it was made and what directions of human effort went into its creation are for him irrelevancies.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 177–78 (1968).

“Legatum generis .... Normally the testator set in his testament who had to make the choice from among the things of the same kind (slaves, horses) belonging to the estate: the heir, the legatee or a third person. The jurists did not agree about the solution [when] ... the testator did not entitle any person to make the selection. LEGES EDWARDI CONFESSORIS

“[W]e have a book [leges Edwardi Confessoris] written in Latin which expressly purports to give us the law of Edward as it was stated to the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign by juries representing the various parts of England .... It is a private work of a bad and untrustworthy kind. It has about it something of the political pamphlet and is adorned with pious legends. The author, perhaps a secular clerk of French parentage, writes in the interest of the churches, and, it is to be feared, tells lies for them.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. “Closely connected with the Quadripartitus is a far more important book, the so-called Leges Henrici. It seems to have been compiled shortly before the year 1118. After a brief preface, it gives us Henry's coronation charter (this accounts for the name which has unfortunately been given in modern days to the whole book), and then the author makes a gallant, if forlorn, attempt to state the law of England. At first sight the outcome seems to be a mere jumble of fragments .... But the more closely we examine the book, the more thoroughly convinced we shall be that its author has undertaken a serious task in a serious spirit; he means to state the existing law of the land ....” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 99 (2d ed. 1898).

“The intention of the legislature is a common but very slippery phrase, which, popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a court of law or equity, what the legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication.” Saloman v. Saloman & Co., [1897]

“In this age of equality, the question might fairly be asked whether a discussion of child support should even be concerned about ‘legitimacy’ and ‘illegitimacy.’ The answer is ‘yes,’ for several reasons. Most rules regarding child support were fashioned at a time when legitimacy was the precondition to full support entitlement and illegitimate paternity had only limited legal consequences. True, by U.S. Supreme Court doctrine, distinctions between ‘legitimate’ and ‘illegitimate’ children should no longer be maintainable, but many state statutes have not yet been adapted to this view. Distinctions on the basis of legitimacy, however unconstitutional, continue to be made.” Harry D. Krause, Child Support in America 103 (1981).

“The concept of lésion, unknown as such to the common law, may be defined as a detriment to one of the parties to a contract which results from an imbalance or disparity between the performance promised on the two sides. Down through the ages, civilians have differed over whether it gave the injured party a right of avoidance or rescission. Classical Roman law, designed for a society whose members were strong enough to protect their own interests, denied the right, but by the time of the French Revolution the right had come to be recognized, particularly by the canonists and Pothier. But the Revolution, both because of its emphasis on individual will and because of economic reasons, was hostile to the concept of lésion and the Civil Code provided that it did not affect the validity of a contract except in certain prescribed instances, most notably the case of the vendor of real property. The number of exceptions was enlarged both by subsequent legislation and, at least indirectly, by judicial decision, and this raised a question of the reversal of the general principle that rejected the concept.” Allan Farnsworth, “The Development of the Civil Law of Obligations in New States: Senegal, Madagascar, and Ethiopia,” in Essays on the Civil Law of Obligations 64 (Joseph Dainow ed., 1969).

“There is some confusion over the exact nature of credits. They resemble a number of commercial devices that are not credits. Often, there is confusion between letters of credit and guaranties, and occasionally between letters of credit and lines of credit. In the credit transaction itself, it is important to distinguish the credit from other contracts and from the acceptance.

Generally, the broad credit transaction consists of three separate relationships. These include those that are (1) between the issuer and the beneficiary; (2) between the beneficiary and the account party; and (3) between the account party and the issuer. The first is the letter-of-credit engagement. The second is usually called the underlying contract, and the third is called the application agreement.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 2.01, at 2-2 (1984).

“A credit is an original undertaking by one party (the issuer) to substitute his financial strength for that of another (the account party), with that undertaking to be triggered by the presentation of a draft or demand for payment and, often, other documents. The credit arises in a number of situations, but generally the account party seeks the strength of the issuer's financial integrity or reputation so that a third party (the beneficiary of the credit) will give value to the account party.” Id. ¶ 2.02, at 2-3.

“A seller hesitates to give up possession of its goods before it is paid. But a buyer wishes to have control of the goods before parting with its money. To relieve this simple tension, merchants developed the device known as the ‘letter of credit’ or simply the ‘credit’ or the ‘letter.’ Today, letters of credit come in two broad varieties. The ‘commercial’ letter dates back at least 700 years. It is a mode of payment in the purchase of goods, mostly in international sales. The ‘standby’ letter of credit is a much more recent mutant. It ‘backs up’ obligations in a myriad of settings. In the most common standby a bank promises to pay a creditor upon documentary certification of the applicant's default.” 3 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 26-1, at 105 (4th ed. 1995).

commercial letter of credit. A letter of credit used as a method of payment in a sale of goods (esp. in an international transaction), with the buyer being the issuer's customer and the seller being the beneficiary, so that the seller can obtain payment directly from the issuer instead of from the buyer.

confirmed letter of credit. A letter of credit that directly obligates a financing agency (such as a bank) doing business in the seller's financial market to a contract of sale. UCC § 2-325(3).

documentary letter of credit. A letter of credit that is payable when presented with another document, such as a certificate of title or invoice. — Abbr. DL/C. Cf. clean letter of credit.

negotiation letter of credit. A letter of credit in which the issuer's engagement runs to drawers and indorsers under a standard negotiation clause.

“Letter-of-credit law has long distinguished the straight credit from the negotiation credit. The engagement of the former runs to the beneficiary; the engagement of the latter runs to ‘drawers, endorsers, and bona fide holders.’ This quoted phrase is the traditional negotiation clause. The significance of it is that it obviously extends the credit engagement to parties other than the person with whom the account party is doing business.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 8.02[6], at 8-11 (1984).

“Such informal or extra-legal agreements save court costs and the marshal's fees, avoid the annoyance of having the vessel even temporarily arrested and may well be cheaper than the usual surety bond .... In Continental Grain Co. v. Federal Barge Lines, Inc., [268 F.2d 240 (5th Cir. 1959), aff'd, 364 U.S. 19, 80 S.Ct. 1470 (1960)], Judge Brown commented that a letter of undertaking given by a shipowner would be treated ‘as though, upon the libel being filed, the vessel had actually been seized, a claim filed, a stipulation to abide decrees with sureties executed and filed by claimant, and the vessel formally released. Any other course would imperil the desirable avoidance of needless cost, time and inconvenience to litigants, counsel, ships, clerks, marshals, keepers and court personnel through the ready acceptance of such letters of undertakings.’ [268 F.2d at 243.] If, as Judge Brown suggests, the informal agreement is treated as having the same effect as a formal release under bond or stipulation, few questions relating to their use will ever have to be litigated.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. 3. An agreement in which such a failure-to-timely-pay clause appears. — Also written commissoria lex. 4. LEX COMMERCII. “But the position of the seller was a good deal more awkward, especially if he had sold a unique object, such as a piece of land, for, apart from express agreement, he would have to retain the land or other object in case the buyer later came along with the price and demanded delivery. The difficulty could be avoided by the insertion of a term known as lex commissoria, which gave the seller an option of declaring the contract at an end if the buyer did not pay within the agreed time. This term probably became common form in Roman law, but was never implied. It always had to be expressly inserted in the contract .... Not until the time of Lord Mansfield was a similar development complete in English law, though in the end we carried it much further than the Romans.” W.W. Buckland & Arnold D. McNair, Roman Law & Common Law: A Comparison in Outline 231 (F.H. Lawson ed., 2d ed. 1952).

lex talionis (leks tal-ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] The law of retaliation, under which punishment should be in kind — an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and so on — but no more. — Also termed eye for an eye; jus talionis; principle of retribution.

“Kant, for example, expresses the opinion that punishment cannot rightly be inflicted for the sake of any benefit to be derived from it either by the criminal himself or by society, and that the sole and sufficient reason and justification of it lies in the fact that evil has been done by him who suffers it. Consistently with this view, he derives the measure of punishment, not from any elaborate considerations as to the amount needed for the repression of crime, but from the simple principle of lex talionis: ‘Thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot’ [Deuteronomy, xix 21]. No such principle, indeed, is capable of literal interpretation; but subject to metaphorical and symbolical applications it is in Kant's view the guiding rule of the ideal scheme of criminal justice.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 118 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“But if the old form of the lex talionis, an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth, sounds too barbaric today, may we not reformulate the retributive theory and put it thus: Everyone is to be punished alike in proportion to the gravity of his offense or to the extent to which he has made others suffer?” Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 53 (1961).

liability, n. 1. The quality or state of being legally obligated or accountable; legal responsibility to another or to society, enforceable by civil remedy or criminal punishment <liability for injuries caused by negligence>. — Also termed legal liability; responsibility; subjection. 2. (often pl.) A financial or pecuniary obligation; DEBT <tax liability> <assets and liabilities>.

“The term ‘liability’ is one of at least double signification. In one sense it is the synonym of duty, the correlative of right; in this sense it is the opposite of privilege or liberty. If a duty rests upon a party, society is now commanding performance by him and threatening penalties. In a second sense, the term ‘liability’ is the correlative of power and the opposite of immunity. In this case society is not yet commanding performance, but it will so command if the possessor of the power does some operative act. If one has a power, the other has a liability. It would be wise to adopt the second sense exclusively. Accurate legal thinking is difficult when the fundamental terms have shifting senses.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 9 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“Liability or responsibility is the bond of necessity that exists between the wrongdoer and the remedy of the wrong. This vinculum juris is not one of mere duty or obligation; it pertains not to the sphere of ought but to that of must.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 364 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

absolute liability. See strict liability.

accomplice liability. Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during, or (in some jurisdictions) after a crime. See 18 USCA § 2. [Cases: Criminal Law 59. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 127, 998.]

accrued liability.A debt or obligation that is properly chargeable in a given accounting period but that is not yet paid.

alternative liability.Liability arising from the tortious acts of two or more parties — when the plaintiff proves that one of the defendants has caused harm but cannot prove which one caused it — resulting in a shifting of the burden of proof to each defendant. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 433B(3) (1965). [Cases: Products Liability 23; Torts 21. C.J.S. Products Liability §§ 40, 42; Torts §§ 36–38.]

civil liability. 1. Liability imposed under the civil, as opposed to the criminal, law. 2. The state of being legally obligated for civil damages.

contingent liability.A liability that will occur only if a specific event happens; a liability that depends on the occurrence of a future and uncertain event. • In financial statements, contingent liabilities are usu. stated in footnotes.

current liability.A business liability that will be paid or otherwise discharged with current assets or by creating other current liabilities within the next year (or operating cycle). — Also termed short-term debt.

derivative liability.Liability for a wrong that a person other than the one wronged has a right to redress. • Examples include liability to a widow in a wrongful-death action and liability to a corporation in a shareholder's derivative suit.

Criminal liability imposed on a business (such as a corporation or partnership) for certain offenses, such as public-welfare offenses or offenses for which the legislature specifically intended to impose criminal sanctions. See Model Penal Code § 2.07. See public-welfare offense under OFFENSE(1).

fault liability.Liability based on some degree of blameworthiness. — Also termed fault-based liability. Cf. strict liability.

industry-wide liability.See enterprise liability.

joint and several liability.Liability that may be apportioned either among two or more parties or to only one or a few select members of the group, at the adversary's discretion. • Thus, each liable party is individually responsible for the entire obligation, but a paying party may have a right of contribution and indemnity from nonpaying parties. See solidary liability. [Cases: Contracts 181; Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 366, 371; Negligence §§ 154–156; Torts §§ 39–44.]

joint liability.Liability shared by two or more parties. [Cases: Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 154–156; Torts §§ 39–44.]

market-share liability. Liability that is imposed, usu. severally, on each member of an industry, based on each member's share of the market or respective percentage of the product that is placed on the market. • This theory of liability usu. applies only in the situation in which a plaintiff cannot trace the harmful exposure to a particular product, as when several products contain a fungible substance. For example, it is sometimes applied to a claim that the plaintiff was harmed by exposure to asbestos. See enterprise liability. [Cases: Products Liability 23.1, 24. C.J.S. Products Liability § 41.]

penal liability. Liability arising from a proceeding intended at least partly to penalize a wrongdoer. Cf. remedial liability.

premises liability. See PREMISES LIABILITY.

primary liability. Liability for which one is directly responsible, as opposed to secondary liability.

products liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

remedial liability. Liability arising from a proceeding whose object contains no penal element. • The two types of proceedings giving rise to this liability are specific enforcement and restitution. Cf. penal liability.

secondary liability. Liability that does not arise unless the primarily liable party fails to honor its obligation.

solidary liability (sol-<<schwa>>-dair-ee). Civil law. The liability of any one debtor among two or more joint debtors to pay the entire debt if the creditor so chooses. La. Civ. Code art. 1794. • This is equivalent to joint and several liability in the common law. — Also termed liability in solido. See joint and several liability. [Cases: Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 154–156; Torts §§ 39–44.]

statutory liability. Liability that is created by a statute (or regulation) as opposed to common law.

stockholder's liability. See shareholder's liability.

strict liability. Liability that does not depend on actual negligence or intent to harm, but that is based on the breach of an absolute duty to make something safe. • Strict liability most often applies either to ultrahazardous activities or in products-liability cases. — Also termed absolute liability; liability without fault. Cf. fault liability; OUTCOME RESPONSIBILITY. [Cases: Negligence 301–307; Products Liability 5. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 170–179; Products Liability §§ 7–8.]

tortious liability. Liability that arises from the breach of a duty that (1) is fixed primarily by the law, (2) is owed to persons generally, and (3) when breached, is redressable by an action for unliquidated damages.

vicarious liability (vI-kair-ee-<<schwa>>s). Liability that a supervisory party (such as an employer) bears for the actionable conduct of a subordinate or associate (such as an employee) based on the relationship between the two parties. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. [Cases: Master and Servant 300, 315; Negligence 483. C.J.S. Employer-Employee Relationship §§ 181–184, 188–193, 203, 231–235, 242, 244–246, 248, 251–252, 254–255; Negligence §§ 152–153.]

“The vicarious liability of an employer for torts committed by employees should not be confused with the liability an employer has for his own torts. An employer whose employee commits a tort may be liable in his own right for negligence in hiring or supervising the employee. If in my business I hire a truck driver who has a record of drunk driving and on whom one day I detect the smell of bourbon, I (along with my employee) may be held liable for negligence if his driving causes injury. But that is not ‘vicarious’ liability — I am held liable for my own negligence in hiring that employee or letting him drive after I know he has been drinking.” Kenneth S. Abraham, The Forms and Functions of Tort Law 166 (2002).

libel (II-b<<schwa>>l), n. 1. The act of making such a statement; publication of defamatory matter by written or printed words, by its embodiment in physical form, or by any other form of communication that has the potentially harmful qualities characteristic of written or printed words. See DEFAMATION. Cf. SLANDER. [Cases: Libel and Slander 1, 25. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 2, 5–6, 10, 47–52.]

“Libel is written or visual defamation; slander is oral or aural defamation.” Robert D. Sack & Sandra S. Baron, Libel, Slander, and Related Problems § 2.3, at 67 (2d ed. 1994).

“The distinction itself between libel and slander is not free from difficulty and uncertainty. As it took form in the seventeenth century, it was one between written and oral words. But later on libel was extended to include pictures, signs, statues, motion pictures, and even conduct carrying a defamatory imputation, such as hanging the plaintiff in effigy, erecting a gallows before his door, dishonoring his valid check drawn upon the defendant's bank, or even ... following him over a considerable period in a conspicuous manner. From this it has been concluded that libel is that which is communicated by the sense of sight, or perhaps also by touch or smell, while slander is that which is conveyed by the sense of hearing.” W. Page Keeton ed., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 112, at 786 (5th ed. 1984).

libel per quod (p<<schwa>>r kwod).1. Libel that is actionable only on allegation and proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not recognize libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel in which the defamatory meaning is not apparent from the statement on its face but rather must be proved from extrinsic circumstances. See INNUENDO (2). [Cases: Libel and Slander 11, 33. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood § 198.]

libel per se (p<<schwa>>r say).1. Libel that is actionable in itself, requiring no proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not distinguish between libel per se and libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel that is defamatory on its face, such as the statement “Frank is a thief.” [Cases: Libel and Slander 33. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood § 198.]

sedition libel.Libel made with the intent of inciting sedition. • Like other forms of criminal libel, seditious libel is no longer prosecuted. See SEDITION. [Cases: Libel and Slander 141, 145. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 7–8.]

trade libel.Trade defamation that is written or recorded. See trade defamation under DEFAMATION. Cf. trade slander under SLANDER. [Cases: Libel and Slander 130. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 204–206, 209.]

liberty. 1. Freedom from arbitrary or undue external restraint, esp. by a government <give me liberty or give me death>.2. A right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; the absence of a legal duty imposed on a person <the liberties protected by the Constitution>. [Cases: Constitutional Law 83, 254.1. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 472, 511, 977–978, 980, 1418; Right to Die§ 2.]

“[Liberty] denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.” Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S.Ct. 625, 626 (1923).

“The sphere of my legal liberty is that sphere of activity within which the law is content to leave me alone.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 239 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“The word liberty has become a symbol around which have clung some of the most generous human emotions. We have been brought up to thrill with admiration at the men who say, Give me liberty or give me death. But the philosopher asks whether all those who are devoted to liberty mean the same thing. Does liberty or freedom, for instance, involve free trade? Does it involve freedom to preach race hatred or the overthrow of all that we regard as sacred? Many who believe in liberty characterize the freedom which they are not willing to grant, as license, and they do it so often that one may be inclined to think that what we really need is less liberty and more license. Moreover, there is a confusion between the absence of legal restraint and the presence of real freedom as positive power to do what we want. The legal freedom to earn a million dollars is not worth a cent to one who has no real opportunity. It is fashionable to assert that men want freedom above all other things, but a strong case may be made out for the direct contrary. Absolute freedom is just what people do not want ....” Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101–02 (1961).

individual liberty. See personal liberty.

natural liberty. The power to act as one wishes, without any restraint or control, unless by nature.

“This natural liberty ... [is] a right inherent in us by birth .... But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 121 (1765).

LICENSE

license, n. 1. A permission, usu. revocable, to commit some act that would otherwise be unlawful; esp., an agreement (not amounting to a lease or profit à prendre) that it is lawful for the licensee to enter the licensor's land to do some act that would otherwise be illegal, such as hunting game. See SERVITUDE(1). [Cases: Licenses 43. C.J.S. Easements § 9; Licenses § 88.]

“[A] license is an authority to do a particular act, or series of acts, upon another's land, without possessing any estate therein. It is founded in personal confidence, and is not assignable, nor within the statute of frauds.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *452–53 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

2. The certificate or document evidencing such permission. — license,vb.

[Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 48.1. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 86–91.] 2.Patents. A statutorily created license that allows certain people to pay a royalty and use an invention without the patentee's permission. • While some nations currently recognize compulsory licenses, the United States never has.

cross-license.Patents. An agreement between two or more patentees to exchange licenses for their mutual benefit and mutual use of the licensed products. [Cases: Patents 206. C.J.S. Patents § 342.]

distribution license.A marketing license, usu. limited by geography.

exclusive license.A license that gives the licensee the sole right to perform the licensed act, often in a defined territory, and that prohibits the licensor from performing the licensed act and from granting the right to anyone else; esp., such a license of a copyright, patent, or trademark right. [Cases: Patents 211(1). C.J.S. Patents § 348.]

general-public license.See open-source license.

implied license.A royalty-free license arising from a property owner's conduct regarding another person's use of the property even though the owner has not expressly consented to the property's use. • In a patent context, the circumstances surrounding the conduct give rise to an affirmative grant of consent or permission to infringe a patent's claims. For example, the conduct of a patentee who encourages the manufacture of infringing products may constitute an implied license to use the patent. An implied license may also arise when a patentee authorizes the sale or express grant of a license to a buyer, who then resells the license to a third party; the third party is the patentee's implied licensee. [Cases: Patents 210. C.J.S. Patents § 346.]

implied license by conduct.An implied license based on the patentee's course of conduct, including language, from which another person could properly infer that the patentee consented to the other's use of the patent. See implied license by equitable estoppel; implied license by legal estoppel.

implied license by equitable estoppel.An implied license usu. based on the patentee's failure to take timely action to enforce patent rights against an infringer after objecting to the infringer's actions, thereby misleading the infringer into believing that the patentee will not act. See A.C. Aukerman Co. v. R.L. Chaides Constr. Co., 960 F.2d 1020, 1042–43 (Fed. Cir. 1992).

implied license by legal estoppel.An implied license usu. based on the patentee's broadcast grant of a right or interest that cannot be derogated by the patentee's later acts.

license coupled with an interest.An irrevocable license in real estate that confers the right (not the mere permission) to perform an act or acts upon the property; esp., a license incidental to the ownership of an interest in a chattel located on the land with respect to which the license exists. • This type of license is considered an interest in the land itself. An injunction may be obtained to prevent the wrongful revocation of such a license. — Also termed license coupled with the grant of an interest. [Cases: Licenses 43, 57. C.J.S. Easements § 9; Licenses §§ 88, 95, 101–102.]

“A licence may be coupled with some interest in the land or chattels thereon. Thus the right to enter another man's land to hunt and take away the deer killed, or to cut down a tree and remove it, involves the grant of an interest in the deer or tree and also a licence annexed to it to come on the land. The interest must be a recognised interest in the property, and it must have been validly created. Thus at law a right to take game or minerals, being a profit à prendre, must have been created by deed or prescription, whereas no formalities are required for the grant of a right to take away chattels, such as felled timber or cut hay. Equity will give effect to a specifically enforceable agreement to grant an interest, so that a licence coupled with a profit à prendre granted merely in writing but for value may be protected by injunction.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 428 (6th ed. 1993).

mechanical license.A grant of the right to produce and release a copyrighted work in exchange for a royalty based on the number of units manufactured and sold.

mere license.See bare license.

Mozilla public license.An open-source license that allows software users to modify and publicly distribute the software, but requires users to release the changed software under the same copyright as the original source code, and to release all claims to patent rights. • The Mozilla public license was developed for the Netscape and Netscape Communicator browsers but is not limited to use with them. — Abbr. MPL.

naked license. 1. A license allowing a licensee to use a trademark on any goods and services the licensee chooses. [Cases: Trade Regulation 108. C.J.S. Trade-Marks, Trade-Names, and Unfair Competition §§ 209–212.] 2. See bare license.

nonexclusive license. A license of intellectual-property rights that gives the licensee a right to use, make, or sell the licensed item on a shared basis with the licensor and possibly other licensees.

nonmetered license. Patents. An agreement to allow a patent's use in exchange for a flat percentage of sales, regardless of how much the patent is actually used. • The Supreme Court rejected a nonmetered license as patent misuse, saying the buyer has a right to insist on paying only for actual use. Zenith Radio Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 89 S.Ct. 1562 (1969). See PATENT-MISUSE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents 218(5). C.J.S. Patents § 371.]

open-source license. A license that allows open-source software users to copy, distribute, or modify the source code, and publicly distribute derived works based on the source code. • Open-source licenses usu. do not require royalty or other fees on distribution. The license typically requires a user who redistributes original or modified software that was received under an open-source license to provide the original license terms, including all disclaimers, to all future users, and to distribute the source code with any machine-executable software. It is unclear who has the right or power to enforce the terms of an open-source license. — Sometimes termed general-public license.

proprietary license. A license that restricts a software user's ability to copy, distribute, or modify the software.

shrink-wrap license. A license printed on the outside of a software package to advise the buyer that by opening the package, the buyer becomes legally bound to abide by the terms of the license. • Shrink-wrap licenses usu. seek to (1) prohibit users from making unauthorized copies of the software, (2) prohibit modifications to the software, (3) limit use of the software to one computer, (4) limit the manufacturer's liability, and (5) disclaim warranties. — Also written shrinkwrap license. — Also termed box-top license; tear-me-open license. See POINT-AND-CLICK AGREEMENT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 107.]

site license. Copyright. A software license that allows a company to install a set number of copies on individual computers within the company.

synchronization license. A license to reproduce and synchronize a copyrighted musical composition with visual images that are not covered by the musical work's copyright. • Synchronization rights are commonly associated with audiovisual productions, such as music videos or movies.

tear-me-open license.See shrink-wrap license.

use-based license.An open-source software license to which the user assents by acting according to the license's terms, namely, by using, modifying, or distributing the licensed software.

liege poustie (leej pow-stee). [Law French “liege power” fr. Latin legitima potestas “lawful power”] Scots law. The lawful power of one in good health, as a result of which the person might dispose of heritable property. • The phrase often appeared attributively, as in liege poustie conveyance. Cf. LEGITIMA POTESTAS.

“LIEGE POUSTIE; is that state of health which gives a person full power to dispose mortis causa, or otherwise, of his heritable property. The term, according to our institutional writers, is derived from the words legitima potestas, signifying the lawful power of disposing of property at pleasure. It is used in contradistinction to deathbed — a liege poustie conveyance being a conveyance not challengeable on the head of deathbed .... The tests of liege poustie, opposed to the presumption of deathbed, are survivance during sixty days, and going to kirk or market unsupported.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

“[A] liege poustie conveyance being one not challengeable by the heir on the ground of death-bed. This condition of health the granter of a deed was held to have enjoyed, if at the time of granting it he was not affected by the disease of which he died, or if, after executing it, he attended kirk or market, unsupported, or survived for sixty days.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 329 (4th ed. 1894).

If, on the other hand, subject to the direction and approval of the praetor, the parties agreed upon the issues to be referred ... [a] document framed in identical terms was issued to the judex by the praetor as his authority to act. The ceremony by which a grantor conveyed land to a grantee. • Livery of seisin involved either (1) going on the land and having the grantor symbolically deliver possession of the land to the grantee by handing over a twig, a clod of dirt, or a piece of turf (called livery in deed) or (2) going within sight of the land and having the grantor tell the grantee that possession was being given, followed by the grantee's entering the land (called livery in law). See SEISIN. [Cases: Deeds 21.C.J.S. Deeds §§ 12–13.]

“[W]e may now pause to wonder how transfer of these potentially infinite interests was accomplished. Without a modern system of land records, it would be desirable that the transfer be effected with sufficient ceremony not only to mark itself indelibly in the memories of the participants, but also to give notice to interested persons such as the mesne lord above the transferor. The central idea was to make ritual livery (meaning ‘delivery,’ from the Old French livrer) of seisin (meaning, roughly, ‘possession,’ from the Old French saisir or seisir). The transferor and transferee would go to the land to be transferred, and the transferor would then hand to the transferee a lump of soil or a twig from a tree — all the while intoning the appropriate words of grant, together with the magical words ‘and his heirs’ if the interest transferred was to be a potentially infinite one.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 10–11 (2d ed. 1984).

“[I]t is not the corporation of Lloyd's which undertakes insurance risks and enters into policies of insurance; that is done by the individual members of Lloyd's, acting usually in groups or 'syndicates,' which are not partnerships or companies but merely fortuitous aggregations of, say, five, ten, or more members represented in common by one underwriting agent having power to bind them each individually and separately to contracts of insurance. These members are frequently referred to as 'names'; and their agent is said to 'write' for them. If, as is commonly the case, he also is a member of Lloyd's, then he will 'write' for himself, too.” 2 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 237 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

“The interest of shipowners led them, in early times, to load vessels to a point beyond safety; the greater the weight of the vessel's load, of course, the lower she rides in the water, and the more vulnerable she is to heavy seas. Many seamen consequently lost their lives. Britain led the way in establishing standards of depth in the water believed to be safe; Samuel Plimsoll, M.P., was the moving spirit, and gave his name to the Plimsoll mark, now seen on the side of all large vessels, which marks the limits of safety for different seas and seasons. #### LOCALITY RULE locality rule. 1. The doctrine that, in a professional-malpractice suit, the standard of care to be applied to the professional's conduct is the reasonable care exercised by similar professionals in the same vicinity and professional community. [Cases: Health 620.]

“With respect to medical doctors (and sometimes dentists and others), the standard of care has been further limited by the so-called ‘locality rule.’ A physician historically was required only to possess and apply the knowledge and use the skill and care that is ordinarily used by reasonably well-qualified physicians in the locality in which he practices, or, usually, in ‘similar localities.’ This frequently made it difficult or impossible for a plaintiff to prove the applicable standard since other doctors in the same locality are notoriously reluctant to testify against their professional colleagues. However, with the advent of improved communication and continuing medical education, the reason for the rule has abated, and today the trend is toward its abolition.” Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 270–71 (2d ed. 1992).

LOCALITY TEST

locality test. Maritime law. #### LOCAL-LAW THEORY

local-law theory. Conflict of laws. The view that, although a court of the forum recognizes and enforces a local right (that is, one created under its own law), in a foreign-element case it does not necessarily apply the rule that would govern an analogous case of a purely domestic character, but instead takes into account the law of the foreign country by fashioning a local right as nearly as possible upon the law of the country in which the decisive facts have occurred. • This theory is credited to Walter Wheeler Cook, who expounded it in the first chapter of his Logical and Legal Bases of the Conflict of Laws (1949).

“Since the court of the forum adopts the view that the chosen law would have taken not of the actual case, but of an equivalent domestic case, it does not necessarily recognize the right that would have been vested in the plaintiff according to that law.... It is scarcely deniable, however, that this local law theory is little more than what a learned writer has stigmatized as a sterile truism — sterile because it affords no basis for the systematic development of private international law. To remind an English judge, about to try a case containing a foreign element, that whatever decision he gives he must enforce only the lex fori, is a technical quibble that explains nothing and solves nothing. It provides no guidance whatever upon the limits within which he must have regard to the foreign law.” G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 35 (6th ed. 1961).

locatio rei (l<<schwa>>-kay-shee-oh ree-I). [Latin “letting of a thing”] Roman law. The hiring of a thing for use, by which the hirer gains the temporary use of the thing for a fee.

“Locatio rei was the letting of a res for hire. Roman law differed in several aspects from the relevant rules of English law. Firstly, there was not in Roman law a fundamental distinction between the hiring of personal property and the lease of real property: locatio rei applied both to land and movables. Secondly, in Roman law the hirer did not obtain possession. Thirdly, the locatio was a mere contract and even the tenant of land did not have a right to be restored if he were [wrongfully] ejected, his sole remedy being an action for breach of contract. Fourthly, the Roman contract gave more consideration to the tenant or hirer than does English law.” G.W. Paton, Bailment in the Common Law 53 (1952).

“The requirement of an overt act before conspirators can be prosecuted and punished exists ... to provide a locus poenitentiae an opportunity for the conspirators to reconsider, terminate the agreement, and thereby avoid punishment.” People v. Zamora, 557 P.2d 75, 82 (Cal. 1976).

2. The opportunity to withdraw from a negotiation before finally concluding the contract. [Cases: Contracts 138(3). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 280–281, 283, 290.]

LOCUS SIGILLI

locus sigilli (loh-k<<schwa>>s si-jil-I), n.[Latin] The place of the seal. • Today this phrase is almost always abbreviated “L.S.” These are the traditional letters appearing on many notarial certificates to indicate where the notary public's embossed seal should be placed. If a rubber-stamp seal is used, it should be placed near but not over this abbreviation. See NOTARY SEAL . [Cases: Seals 3. C.J.S. Seals § 4.]

“For some period in history seals were required to consist of wax affixed to the parchment or paper on which the terms of the instrument were written. The wax was required to have an identifiable impression made upon it. Usually this was made by a signet ring. In time when ordinary people, who did not have signet rings, learned to read and write, it was to be expected that substitutes for the traditional seal would be accepted by the law. Thus, today it would be generally accurate to say that a seal may consist of wax, a gummed wafer, an impression on the paper, the word ‘seal,’ the letters ‘L.S.’ (locus sigilli) or even a pen scratch.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 7-3, at 296 (3d ed. 1987).

Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 776; Set-off and Counterclaim 60.C.J.S. Set-off and Counterclaim §§ 102–103.]

“[U]nder the fourth test — frequently referred to as the ‘logical relationship’ standard — the principal consideration in determining whether a counterclaim is compulsory rests on the efficiency or economy of trying the counterclaim in the same litigation as the main claim. As a result, the convenience of the court, rather than solely the counterclaim's relationship to the facts or issues of the opposing claim, is controlling. The hallmark of this approach is flexibility. Although the fourth test has been criticized for being overly broad in scope and uncertain in application, it has by far the widest acceptance among the courts.” Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 6.7, at 352 (2d ed. 1993).

Cf. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

“The common law not only denied a tort recovery for injury once the tort victim had died, it also refused to recognize any new and independent cause of action in the victim's dependents or heirs for their own loss at his death.... The result was that it was cheaper for the defendant to kill the plaintiff than to injure him, and that the most grievous of all injuries left the bereaved family of the victim, who frequently were destitute, without a remedy. Since this was intolerable, it was changed in England by the passage of the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, otherwise known as Lord

“ ‘Lucri causa’ literally means for the sake of gain. On rare occasions the suggestion has been made that no taking is with intent to steal unless the thief is motivated by some purpose of gain or advantage. Even those advancing this suggestion have not insisted upon an intent to gain a pecuniary advantage. An intent to take away property and destroy it for the purpose of destroying evidence has been held to be sufficient even by those who have been inclined to insist upon lucri causa as essential to an intent to steal. The generally accepted view does not include this element at all. It regards intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently, or an intent to deal with another's property unlawfully in such a manner as to create an obviously unreasonable risk of permanent deprivation, as all that is required to constitute the animus furandi — or intent to steal.” Rollin M. #### LACHES laches (lach-iz). [Law French “remissness; slackness”] 1. Unreasonable delay in pursuing a right or claim — almost always an equitable one — in a way that prejudices the party against whom relief is sought. — Also termed sleeping on rights.

“Early in its history, Chancery developed the doctrine that where the plaintiff in equity delayed beyond the period of the statute applicable at law, relief would be refused on the ground of laches even though no specific prejudice to the defendant was shown. Today, in most states, there are statutes of limitations applying to suits in equity. Despite these, however, the doctrine still holds that even if the delay is for a shorter period of time than that of the statute, it may still bar equitable relief if it is unreasonable and prejudicial to the defendant.” John F. O’Connell, Remedies in a Nutshell 16 (2d ed. 1985).

prosecution laches. Patents. In a claim for patent infringement, the equitable defense that the patentee did not timely enforce the patent rights.

2. The equitable doctrine by which a court denies relief to a claimant who has unreasonably delayed in asserting the claim, when that delay has prejudiced the party against whom relief is sought. Cf. LIMITATION(3). [Cases: Equity 67. C.J.S. Equity §§ 128–132.] “The doctrine of laches ... is an instance of the exercise of the reserved power of equity to withhold relief otherwise regularly given where in the particular case the granting of such relief would be unfair or unjust.” William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 472 (1930).

LAESIO ENORMIS

laesio enormis (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis). [Law Latin “excessive loss” or “abnormal loss of more than half”] Roman & civil law. 1. The sale of a thing for which the buyer paid less than half its real value. • The seller could rescind the sale, but the buyer could keep the item purchased by paying the full value. Generally, this doctrine was limited to land sales. 2. The injury sustained by one party to an onerous contract when the overreaching party receives twice the value of that party's money or property, such as a purchaser who pays less than half the value of the property sold, or a seller who receives more than double the property's value. • If coowner coheirs partition or sell property, laesio enormis may exist when the purchaser pays less than one-fourth of the value rather than one-half. See La. Civ. Code arts. 824, 1406. — Also spelled lesio enormis. — Also termed lesion; enorm lesion; (in full) laesio enormis vel ultra dimidium (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis vel <<schwa>>l-tr<<schwa>> di-mid-ee-<<schwa>>m); (in Louisiana) lesion beyond moiety.

“Lesion (laesio enormis) was the rule, established very late, that a seller could rescind a contract if he had received less than half its real value .... [I]n spite of its imperfections, lesion not only was adopted in all modern civilian systems (French Code Civil 1674–1683), but became the means of testing the validity of contracts generally by their fairness, a principle embodied in the German Civil Code (section 138) and the Swiss Code of Obligations (section 21). Such a test is no more difficult to apply in law than in equity, where it has long been established in our system. As the Romans applied it, it was a clumsy and inadequate way of reaching this result. In modern courts, in civil-law countries, it invests judges with a discretion not very likely to be abused, but sufficient to act as a deterrent to the grosser forms of economic exploitation.” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 233–34 (1927).

LAND

land, n. 1. An immovable and indestructible three-dimensional area consisting of a portion of the earth's surface, the space above and below the surface, and everything growing on or permanently affixed to it. 2. An estate or interest in real property. [Cases: Estates in Property 1. C.J.S. Estates §§ 2–5, 8, 15–21, 116–128, 137, 243.]

“In its legal significance, ‘land’ is not restricted to the earth's surface, but extends below and above the surface. Nor is it confined to solids, but may encompass within its bounds such things as gases and liquids. A definition of ‘land’ along the lines of ‘a mass of physical matter occupying space’ also is not sufficient, for an owner of land may remove part or all of that physical matter, as by digging up and carrying away the soil, but would nevertheless retain as part of his ‘land’ the space that remains. Ultimately, as a juristic concept, ‘land’ is simply an area of three-dimensional space, its position being identified by natural or imaginary points located by reference to the earth's surface. ‘Land’ is not the fixed contents of that space, although, as we shall see, the owner of that space may well own those fixed contents. Land is immovable, as distinct from chattels, which are moveable; it is also, in its legal significance, indestructible. The contents of the space may be physically severed, destroyed or consumed, but the space itself, and so the ‘land’, remains immutable.” Peter Butt, Land Law 9 (2d ed. 1988).

“ ‘Acquired lands’ are lands the United States acquired from private or state owners by gift, purchase, exchange, or condemnation. In most but not all cases, such lands actually have been ‘reacquired,’ because the United States previously had purchased or won them from foreign and Indian sovereigns. Distinguishing between lands because of ownership origins that go back over a century is a policy with little to recommend it, but some statutes and judicial opinions maintain the distinction.” George Cameron Coggins, Public Natural Resources Law § 1.02[1] (1990).

“Public regulation of the use and development of land comes in a variety of forms which generally focus on four aspects of land use: (1) the type of use, such as whether it will be used for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or residential purposes; (2) the density of use, manifested in concerns over the height, width, bulk, or environmental impact of the physical structures on the land; (3) the aesthetic impact of the use, which may include the design and placement of structures on the land; and (4) the effect of the particular use of the land on the cultural and social values of the community, illustrated by community conflicts over adult entertainment, housing for service-dependent groups such as low-income families and developmentally disabled persons, and whether the term family should be defined in land use regulations to include persons who are not related by blood or marriage.” Peter W. ## LARCENY

larceny (lahr-s<<schwa>>-nee), n. The unlawful taking and carrying away of someone else's personal property with the intent to deprive the possessor of it permanently. • Common-law larceny has been broadened by some statutes to include embezzlement and false pretenses, all three of which are often subsumed under the statutory crime of "theft." [Cases: Larceny 1.C.J.S. Larceny §§ 1(1, 2), 9.]

"The criminal offence of larceny or theft in the Common Law was intimately connected with the civil wrong of trespass. 'Where there has been no trespass,' said Lord Coleridge, 'there can at law common be no larceny.' Larceny, in other words, is merely a particular kind of trespass to goods which, by virtue of the trespasser's intent, is converted into a crime. Trespass is a wrong, not to ownership but to possession, and theft, therefore, is not the violation of a person's right to ownership, but the infringement of his possession, accompanied with a particular criminal intent." 4 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 72–73 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

"[T]he distinctions between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of 'larceny.' This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated larceny.Larceny accompanied by some aggravating factor (as when the theft is from a person). — Also termed compound larceny. [Cases: Larceny 23. C.J.S. Larceny §§ 60(1, 2, 3), 61–65.]

grand larceny.Larceny of property worth more than a statutory cutoff amount, usu. $100. Cf. petit larceny. [Cases: Larceny 23. C.J.S. Larceny §§ 60(1, 2, 3), 61–65.]

"The English law, as the result of an early statute [the Statute of Westminster I, ch. 15 (1275)], classified this offense [larceny] as either (1) grand larceny or (2) petit larceny (now frequently written petty larceny), the former being a capital offense and the latter punishable by forfeiture of goods and whipping, but not death. Both, as mentioned earlier, were felonies. The offense was grand larceny if the value of the property stolen exceeded twelve pence and petit larceny if it did not. Modern statutes very generally retain this same classification (sometimes without using these labels) but with different penalties and different values set as the dividing line." Rollin M. Perkins larceny by a constructive trespass. Larceny that occurs when a property owner mistakenly gives another person more property than is due, and the recipient knows about the error but does not disclose it before taking the excess property with the intent of converting it to his or her own use.

larceny by bailee. Larceny committed by a bailee who converts the property to personal use or to the use of a third party. [Cases: Embezzlement 16; Larceny 15. C.J.S. Embezzlement § 20; Larceny §§ 30–32, 45–48.]

But some states and the federal courts do not require contiguity when there is strong evidence of unity of use. [Cases:

Larrison rule (lar-<<schwa>>-s<<schwa>>n).Criminal law. The doctrine that a defendant may be entitled to a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence of false testimony by a government witness if the jury might have reached a different conclusion without the evidence and it unfairly surprised the defendant at trial. Larrison v. United States, 24 F.2d 82 (7th Cir. 1928). [Cases: Criminal Law 942. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 1451.]

last-clear-chance doctrine. Torts. The rule that a plaintiff who was contributorily negligent may nonetheless recover from the defendant if the defendant had the last opportunity to prevent the harm but failed to use reasonable care to do so (in other words, if the defendant's negligence is later in time than the plaintiff's). • This doctrine allows the plaintiff to rebut the contributory-negligence defense in the few jurisdictions where contributory negligence completely bars recovery. — Also termed discovered-peril doctrine; humanitarian doctrine; last-opportunity doctrine; subsequent-negligence doctrine; supervening-negligence doctrine. [Cases: Automobiles 227; Negligence 530, 1297. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles §§ 963–970; Negligence §§ 281–290, 313, 318.]

last-in-time-marriage presumption. Family law. A presumption that the most recently contracted marriage is valid. • This presumption generally arises in a situation similar to this: A person, believing himself or herself to be divorced, remarries. This person dies, and the new spouse makes a claim for the decedent's pension benefits. Then a former spouse, claiming that there was never a valid divorce, also claims the right to receive the benefits. The last-in-time-marriage presumption operates so that the former spouse bears the burden of proving that there was no valid divorce.

last-link doctrine. The rule that an attorney need not divulge nonprivileged information if doing so would reveal information protected by the attorney–client privilege, particularly if the information would provide essential evidence to support indicting or convicting the client of a crime. • This doctrine is often relied on as an exception to the rule that a client's identity is not privileged. For example, if divulging the client's name would supply the last link of evidence to indict or convict the client of a crime, the name need not be disclosed. [Cases: Witnesses 201(1). C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 329–330, 332–335, 337–340.]

Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 131 (2d ed. 1867).

“The Latin maxims have largely disappeared from arguments and opinions. In their original phraseology they convey no idea that cannot be well expressed in modern English.” William C. Anderson, Law Dictionaries, 28 Am. L. Rev. 531, 532 (1894).

Latini Juniani (l<<schwa>>-tI-nI joo-nee-ay-nI), n. pl.[Latin “Junian Latins”] Roman law. Informally manumitted slaves who acquired some rights and privileges as free people, but not Roman citizenship. • They were a special class of freedmen (libertini) who could one day become citizens. If a Latinus Junianus did not become a citizen, then upon death that person's status reverted to slavery, and his or her patron acquired all the decedent's property. — Also termed libertine Junian Latins. See LEX JUNIA NORBANA. Cf. INGENUUS; SERVUS(1).

“Upon all these persons ... a new and definite status was conferred; they were henceforth to be known as Latini Juniani, their position being based upon Latinitas, a status which had been enjoyed by certain Latin colonists. A Latinus Junianus had no public rights .... But he had part of the commercium, i.e. he could acquire proprietary and other rights inter vivos, but not mortis causâ. A Latinus Junianus, therefore, could neither take under a will ... nor could he make one .... But, subject to these disabilities, a Latinus Junianus was a free man, and his children, though not, like the children of citizens, under his potestas, were free-born citizens.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 68–69 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

latitat (lat-<<schwa>>-tat), n.[Law Latin “he lurks”] Hist. A writ issued in a personal action after the sheriff returned a bill of Middlesex with the notation that the defendant could not be found. • The writ was called latitat because of its fictitious recital that the defendant lurks about in the county. It was abolished by the Process in Courts of Law at Westminster Act of 1832 (St. 2, Will. 4, ch. 39). See BILL OF MIDDLESEX; TESTATUM.

“Latitat is a writ by which all men in personal actions are originally called in the king's bench to answer. And it is called latitat, because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant cannot be found in the county of Middlesex, as it appears by the return of the sheriff of that county, but that he lurks in another county: and therefore to the sheriff of that county is this writ directed to apprehend him.” Termes de la Ley 277 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

combined with the concession of Roman citizenship to a larger group of individuals than Latium minus, in which only the municipal magistrates and members of the municipal council ... were rewarded with Roman citizenship.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 537–38 (1953).

“Some twenty years ago I pointed out two ideas running through definitions of law: one an imperative idea, an idea of a rule laid down by the lawmaking organ of a politically organized society, deriving its force from the authority of the sovereign; and the other a rational or ethical idea, an idea of a rule of right and justice deriving its authority from its intrinsic reasonableness or conformity to ideals of right and merely recognized, not made, by the sovereign.” Roscoe Pound, “More About the Nature of Law,” in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray at 513, 515 (1935).

“All law is the law of a group of individuals or of groups made up of individuals. No one can make a law purely for himself. He may form a resolution, frame an ambition, or adopt a rule, but these are private prescriptions, not laws.” Tony Honoré, Making Law Bind: Essays Legal and Philosophical 33 (1987).

“It will help to distinguish three senses of the word ‘law.’ The first is law as a distinctive social institution; that is the sense invoked when we ask whether primitive law is really law. The second is law as a collection of sets of propositions — the sets we refer to as antitrust law, the law of torts, the Statute of Frauds, and so on. The third is law as a source of rights, duties, and powers, as in the sentence ‘The law forbids the murdering heir to inherit.’ ” Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 220–21 (1990).

Cf. special law. [Cases: Statutes 68. C.J.S. Statutes §§ 154–161.] 2. A statute that relates to a subject of a broad nature.

imperative law. A rule in the form of a command; a rule of action imposed on people by some authority that enforces obedience.

“Strictly speaking, it is not possible to say that imperative law is a command in the ordinary sense of the word. A ‘command’ in the ordinary meaning of the word is an expression of a wish by a person or body as to the conduct of another person, communicated to that other person. But (1) in the case of the law there is no determinate person who as a matter of psychological fact commands all the law. We are all born into a community in which law already exists, and at no time in our lives do any of us command the whole law. The most that we do is to play our part in enforcing or altering particular portions of it. (2) Ignorance of the law is no excuse; thus a rule of law is binding even though not communicated to the subject of the law.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 21 n.(c) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

captive law firm. A law firm staffed by employees of an insurance company. • These lawyers typically defend insureds in lawsuits covered under the insurer's liability policies. LAW FRENCH

Law French. The corrupted form of the Norman French language that arose in England in the centuries after William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066 and that was used for several centuries as the primary language of the English legal system; the Anglo-French used in medieval England in judicial proceedings, pleadings, and lawbooks. — Abbr. L.F. — Also written law French. See NORMAN FRENCH.

“That Law French was barbarous in its decrepitude does not in the least diminish the value of it to our law when it was full of vitality. It helped to make English law one of the four indigenous systems of the civilized world, for it exactly expressed legal ideas in a technical language which had no precise equivalent.” Percy H. Winfield, The Chief Sources of English Legal History 14 (1925).

“To the linguist, law French is a corrupt dialect by definition. Anglo-French was in steady decline after 1300. Lawyers such as Fortescue, on the other hand, were probably serious in maintaining that it was the vernacular of France which was deteriorating by comparison with the pristine Norman of the English courts. That Fortescue could make such a claim, while living in France, is in itself a clear demonstration that by the middle of the fifteenth century there was a marked difference between the French of English lawyers and the French of France.” J.H. Baker, A Manual of Law French 11 (1979).

“Law French refers to the Anglo-Norman patois used in legal documents and all judicial proceedings from the 1260s to the reign of Edward III (1327–1377), and used with frequency in legal literature up to the early 18th century. When first introduced into England, this brand of French was the standard language used in Normandy; by the 1300s, through linguistic isolation, it became a corrupted language — by French standards, at any rate.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 504–05 (2d ed. 1995).

“LAW LATIN. A technical kind of Latin, in which the pleadings and proceedings of the English courts were enrolled and recorded from a very early period to the reign of George II .... The principal peculiarities of this language consist first, in its construction, which is adapted so closely to the English idiom as to answer to it sometimes word for word; and, secondly, in the use of numerous words ‘not allowed by grammarians nor having any countenance of Latin,’ but framed from the English by merely adding a Latin termination, as murdrum from murder ....” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 135 (2d ed. 1867).

“Law Latin, sometimes formerly called ‘dog Latin,’ is the bastardized or debased Latin formerly used in law and legal documents. For the most part, we have escaped its clutches. In 1730, Parliament abolished Law Latin in legal proceedings, but two years later found it necessary to allow Latin phrases that had previously been in common use, such as fieri facias, habeas corpus, ne exeat, and nisi prius. As Blackstone would later say, some Latinisms were ‘not ... capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness.’ 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries 323 (1768).” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 505 (2d ed. 1995).

community lease. A lease in which a number of lessors owning interests in separate tracts execute a lease in favor of a single lessee.

concurrent lease. A lease that begins before a previous lease ends, entitling the new lessee to be paid all rents that accrue on the previous lease after the new lease begins, and to remedies against the holding tenant.

“A landlord who has granted a lease may nevertheless grant another lease of the same land for all or some of the period of the first lease. The second lease does not deprive the lessee under the first lease of the right to possession of the property, but is, in reality, a lease of the reversion. Because the two leases operate concurrently during at least some part of their respective durations, they are known as ‘concurrent leases.’” Peter Butt, Land Law 233 (2d ed. 1988).

consumer lease. 1. A lease of goods by a person who is in the business of selling or leasing a product primarily for the lessee's personal or household use. UCC § 2A-103(1)(e). [Cases: Bailment 2. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 5, 14, 16–18.] 2. A residential — rather than commercial — lease.

edge lease. Oil & gas. A lease located on the edge of a field.

finance lease. A fixed-term lease used by a business to finance capital equipment. • The lessor's service is usu. limited to financing the asset, and the lessee pays maintenance costs and taxes and has the option of purchasing the asset at lease-end for a nominal price. Finance leases strongly resemble security agreements and are written almost exclusively by financial institutions as a way to help a commercial customer obtain an expensive capital item that the customer might not otherwise be able to afford. UCC § 2A-103(1)(g). — Also termed full payout lease; tripartite lease. [Cases: Bailment 2. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 5, 14, 16–18.]

“By carving out the ‘finance lease’ for special treatment, the drafters of Article 2A have recognized a distinct species of lease that is written almost exclusively by financial institutions and — although treated as a true lease — does not normally carry with it certain of the responsibilities that the typical lessor bears under Article 2A.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 13-3, at 4 (4th ed. 1995).

“A finance lease is the product of a three-party transaction. The supplier manufactures or supplies the goods pursuant to the lessee's specification, perhaps even pursuant to a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement between the supplier and the lessee. After the prospective finance lease is negotiated, a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement is entered into by the lessor (as buyer or prime lessee) or an existing order, agreement, or lease is assigned by the lessee to the lessor, and the lessor and the lessee then enter into a lease or sublease of the goods. Due to the limited function usually performed by the lessor, the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants, and warranties. If a manufacturer's warranty carries through, the lessee may also look to that. Yet, this definition does not restrict the lessor's function solely to the supply of funds; if the lessor undertakes or performs other functions, express warranties, covenants, and the common law will protect the lessee.” UCC § 2A-102 cmt. at 14–15 (Proposed Final Draft, 30 Apr. 1999).

full-service lease. A lease in which the lessor agrees to pay all maintenance expenses, insurance premiums, and property taxes. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 148(1), 156. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 374–376, 378–386.]

ground lease. A long-term (usu. 99-year) lease of land only. • Such a lease typically involves commercial property, and any improvements built by the lessee usu. revert to the lessor. — Also termed ground-rent lease; land lease. [Cases: Estates in Property 13. C.J.S. Estates §§ 159–192.]

land lease. See ground lease.

leveraged lease. A lease that is collateral for the loan through which the lessor acquired the leased asset, and that provides the lender's only recourse for nonpayment of the debt; a lease in which a creditor provides nonrecourse financing to the lessor (who has substantial leverage in the property) and in which the lessor's net investment in the lease, apart from nonrecourse financing, declines during the early years and increases in later years. — Also termed third-party equity lease; tax lease.

master lease. A lease that controls later leases or subleases, particularly of parts of the leased property.

mineral lease. A lease in which the lessee has the right to explore for and extract oil, gas, or other minerals. • The rent is usu. based on the amount or value of the minerals extracted. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 56–81. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 194–325, 442.]

mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim, in which the lessee has the right to work the mine or claim, usu. with conditions on the amount and type of work to be done. • The lessor is compensated in the form of either fixed rent or royalties based on the amount of ore mined. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 62–71. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 200–232.]

month-to-month lease. A tenancy with no written contract. • Rent is paid monthly, and usu. one month's notice by the landlord or tenant is required to terminate the tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 113. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 130(1, 2), 131, 145, 151–155.]

net lease. A lease in which the lessee pays rent plus property expenses (such as taxes and insurance).

oil-and-gas lease. A lease granting the right to extract oil and gas from a specified piece of land. • Although called a “lease,” this interest is typically considered a determinable fee in the minerals rather than a grant of possession for a term of years. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 73–81. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 210, 233, 238–283, 285–325, 442.]

“or” lease. Oil & gas. A mineral lease with a drilling-delay rental clause structured so that the lessee promises to start drilling operations or to pay delay rentals from time to time during the primary term. • If the lessee fails to do one or the other, the lease does not automatically terminate, but the lessee is liable for the delay-rental amount.

perpetually renewable lease. Hist. A lease that a tenant may renew for another period as often as it expires, usu. by making a payment upon exercising the right. • In 1922, this type of lease was effectively abolished in England by the Law of Property Act, which provided for the conversion of existing and future perpetually renewable leases to term-of-years leases, and set the maximum term at 2,000 years.

reversionary lease. A lease that will take effect when a prior lease terminates.

sandwich lease. A lease in which the lessee subleases the property to a third party, esp. for more rent than under the original lease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 74. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 30, 53.]

short lease. A lease of brief duration, often less than six months.

sublease. See SUBLEASE.

synthetic lease. A method for financing the purchase of real estate, whereby the lender creates a special-purpose entity that buys the property and then leases it to the ultimate user (usu. a corporation). • A synthetic lease is treated as a loan for tax purposes and as an operating lease for accounting purposes, so that the “lessee” can deduct the property's depreciation and the loan's interest yet keep both the asset and the debt off its balance sheet.

tax lease. 1. The instrument or estate given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale when the law does not permit the sale of an estate in fee for nonpayment of taxes but instead directs the sale of an estate for years. 2. See leveraged lease.

third-party equity lease. See leveraged lease.

tripartite lease.See finance lease.

triple-net lease.See net-net-net lease.

“unless” lease.Oil & gas. An oil-and-gas lease with a drilling-delay rental clause structured as a special limitation to the primary term. • Unless delay rentals are paid or drilling operations are started from time to time as specified, an “unless” lease automatically terminates, and the lessee has no liability for its failure to perform. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 78.1(3, 9).C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 260–263, 269–270.]

lease,vb.1. To grant the possession and use of (land, buildings, rooms, movable property, etc.) to another in return for rent or other consideration <the city leased the stadium to the football team>. [Cases: Bailment 1; Landlord and Tenant 20. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 2–13, 15, 19, 22–24, 31; Landlord and Tenant §§ 27, 202(1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10), 203.] 2. #### LEASE AGREEMENT

lease agreement.See LEASE(3).

LEASE AND RELEASE

lease and release.Hist. A method of transferring seisin without livery, whereby the owner and the transferee would enter into a lease for a term of years, to take effect only when the transferee entered the property, whereupon the owner would release all interest in the property to the transferee by written instrument. • Once the transferee owned both the term and the freehold interest, the two interests would merge to form one estate in fee simple. This lease-and-release procedure was fully acceptable to the courts, on the theory that livery of seisin to one already occupying the land was unnecessary.

LEASEBACK

leaseback,n. The sale of property on the understanding, or with the express option, that the seller may lease the property from the buyer immediately upon the sale. — Also termed sale and leaseback. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 20. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 27, 202(1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10), 203.]

LEASE CONTRACT

lease contract.See LEASE(3).

LEASE FOR LIFE

lease for life.Hist. A lease of land for the duration of a specified number of lives instead of for a specified term of years. • Unlike a tenant for a term of years, a lessee for life could recover the land if dispossessed.

“The rent payable was usually fairly small, but a fine was paid when the lease was granted; a further fine was payable when, on the termination of the lives, the tenant exercised the right the lease gave him to replace them and so extend the lease. If the lessor was a corporation such as a monastery or college, the fines were treated as income by the then members of the corporation, to the disadvantage of their successors. Leases for life finally lost their popularity when legislation in the first half of the nineteenth century compelled corporations to add such fines to their capital.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 306 (6th ed. 1993).

“I ... employ the expression ‘Legal Fiction’ to signify any assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged, its operation being modified.... It is not difficult to understand why fictions in all their forms are particularly congenial to the infancy of society. They satisfy the desire for improvement, which is not quite wanting, at the same time that they do not offend the superstitious disrelish for change which is always present.” Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 21–22 (17th ed. 1901).

“Legal fiction is the mask that progress must wear to pass the faithful but blear-eyed watchers of our ancient legal treasures. following, and moral relationships to consist of duties and rights determined by rules.” Judith N. Shklar, Legalism: Law, Morals, and Political Trials 1 (1964).

“If ... the law and the lawyer are to make a socially valuable contribution to the operation of the social security system, there must be abandoned old-established habits of thought as to the nature of law and the whole gamut of practices summed up in the layman's word of deadly insult, ‘legalism’ — his word for rigid attachment to legal precedent, the substitution of legal rule for policy, the fettering of discretion, the adversary style, the taking of technical points, formality.” Leslie Scarman, English Law — The New Dimension 43 (1974).

legal memory. The period during which a legal right or custom can be determined or established. • Traditionally, common-law legal memory began in the year 1189, but in 1540 it became a steadily moving period of 60 years. Cf. TIME IMMEMORIAL(1).

“Because of the importance to feudal landholders of seisin and of real property in general, the writ of right has been called ‘the most solemn of all actions.’ Nevertheless, it was believed that the time within which such a complainant would be allowed to prove an ancestor to have been seised of the estate in question must be limited. At first this was done by selecting an arbitrary date in the past, before which ‘legal memory’ would not run. The date initially was Dec. 1, 1135 (the death of Henry I); in 1236 it was changed by statute to Dec. 19, 1154 (the coronation of Henry II); and in 1275 it became Sept. 3, 1189 (the coronation of Richard I). Finally, in 1540, an arbitrary period of sixty years was set as the period of ‘legal memory.’ The latter change was probably made because it was felt that a 350-year statute of limitations was somewhat awkward.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 45 n.65 (2d ed. 1984).

Hart. See POSITIVE LAW. Cf. LOGICAL POSITIVISM. — legal positivist, n.

“[I]t will be helpful to offer some comparisons between legal positivism and its counterpart in science. Scientific positivism condemns any inquiry projecting itself beyond observable phenomena; it abjures metaphysics, it renounces in advance any explanation in terms of ultimate causes. Its program of research is to chart the regularities discernible in the phenomena of nature at the point where they become open to human observation, without asking — as it were — how they got there. In the setting of limits to inquiry there is an obvious parallel between scientific and legal positivism. The legal positivist concentrates his attention on law at the point where it emerges from the institutional processes that brought it into being. It is the finally made law itself that furnishes the subject of his inquiries. How it was made and what directions of human effort went into its creation are for him irrelevancies.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 177–78 (1968).

A legacy of dowry. • A husband might bequeath a dowry back to his wife, the result being that the husband's heirs were not entitled to retain the usual deductions for children, and the widow could receive her dowry immediately.

“Legatum generis .... Normally the testator set in his testament who had to make the choice from among the things of the same kind (slaves, horses) belonging to the estate: the heir, the legatee or a third person. The jurists did not agree about the solution [when] ... the testator did not entitle any person to make the selection. legatum optionis (l<<schwa>>-gay-t<<schwa>>m op-shee-oh-nis). [Latin “legacy of an option”] Roman law. A legacy of one of several items that the designated beneficiary chooses from the testator's estate. • Originally, if the legatee died after the testator but before making the selection, the legacy failed. Justinian later changed the law to make selection by the legatee's representative under these circumstances valid.

legatum peculii (l<<schwa>>-gay-t<<schwa>>m pi-kyoo-lee-I). [Latin] Roman law. A legacy of a peculium to a free person or to a manumitted slave; a legacy of a slave's peculium with or without the slave. See PECULIUM.

Edward the Confessor”] Hist. A legal treatise written between 1130 and 1135, of dubious authority, compiling English law as it stood at the end of the reign of Henry I.

“[W]e have a book [leges Edwardi Confessoris] written in Latin which expressly purports to give us the law of Edward as it was stated to the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign by juries representing the various parts of England .... It is a private work of a bad and untrustworthy kind. It has about it something of the political pamphlet and is adorned with pious legends. The author, perhaps a secular clerk of French parentage, writes in the interest of the churches, and, it is to be feared, tells lies for them.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. “Closely connected with the Quadripartitus is a far more important book, the so-called Leges Henrici. It seems to have been compiled shortly before the year 1118. After a brief preface, it gives us Henry's coronation charter (this accounts for the name which has unfortunately been given in modern days to the whole book), and then the author makes a gallant, if forlorn, attempt to state the law of England. At first sight the outcome seems to be a mere jumble of fragments .... But the more closely we examine the book, the more thoroughly convinced we shall be that its author has undertaken a serious task in a serious spirit; he means to state the existing law of the land ....” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. “The intention of the legislature is a common but very slippery phrase, which, popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a court of law or equity, what the legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication.” Saloman v. Saloman & Co., [1897] A.C. 22, at 38 (as quoted in Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 36–37 (1976)).

“In this age of equality, the question might fairly be asked whether a discussion of child support should even be concerned about ‘legitimacy’ and ‘illegitimacy.’ The answer is ‘yes,’ for several reasons. Most rules regarding child support were fashioned at a time when legitimacy was the precondition to full support entitlement and illegitimate paternity had only limited legal consequences. True, by U.S. Supreme Court doctrine, distinctions between ‘legitimate’ and

'illegitimate' children should no longer be maintainable, but many state statutes have not yet been adapted to this view. Distinctions on the basis of legitimacy, however unconstitutional, continue to be made." Harry D. Krause, Child Support in America 103 (1981).

it did not affect the validity of a contract except in certain prescribed instances, most notably the case of the vendor of real property. The number of exceptions was enlarged both by subsequent legislation and, at least indirectly, by judicial decision, and this raised a question of the reversal of the general principle that rejected the concept." LC; L/C. — Often shortened to credit. — Also termed circular letter of credit; circular note; bill of credit. [Cases: Banks and Banking 191. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 341–366, 368–370, 372–376.]

“There is some confusion over the exact nature of credits. They resemble a number of commercial devices that are not credits. Often, there is confusion between letters of credit and guaranties, and occasionally between letters of credit and lines of credit. In the credit transaction itself, it is important to distinguish the credit from other contracts and from the acceptance. Generally, the broad credit transaction consists of three separate relationships. These include those that are (1) between the issuer and the beneficiary; (2) between the beneficiary and the account party; and (3) between the account party and the issuer. The first is the letter-of-credit engagement. The second is usually called the underlying contract, and the third is called the application agreement.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 2.01, at 2-2 (1984).

“A credit is an original undertaking by one party (the issuer) to substitute his financial strength for that of another (the account party), with that undertaking to be triggered by the presentation of a draft or demand for payment and, often, other documents. The credit arises in a number of situations, but generally the account party seeks the strength of the issuer's financial integrity or reputation so that a third party (the beneficiary of the credit) will give value to the account party.” Id. ¶ 2.02, at 2-3.

“A seller hesitates to give up possession of its goods before it is paid. But a buyer wishes to have control of the goods before parting with its money. To relieve this simple tension, merchants developed the device known as the ‘letter of credit’ or simply the ‘credit’ or the ‘letter.’ Today, letters of credit come in two broad varieties. The ‘commercial’ letter dates back at least 700 years. It is a mode of payment in the purchase of goods, mostly in international sales. The ‘standby’ letter of credit is a much more recent mutant. It ‘backs up’ obligations in a myriad of settings. In the most common standby a bank promises to pay a creditor upon documentary certification of the applicant's default.” 3 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 26-1,

A letter of credit that cannot be modified or revoked without the customer's consent. 3. A letter of credit that cannot be modified or canceled without the consent of all parties.

negotiation letter of credit. A letter of credit in which the issuer's engagement runs to drawers and indorsers under a standard negotiation clause.

“Letter-of-credit law has long distinguished the straight credit from the negotiation credit. The engagement of the former runs to the beneficiary; the engagement of the latter runs to ‘drawers, endorsers, and bona fide holders.’ This quoted phrase is the traditional negotiation clause. The significance of it is that it obviously extends the credit engagement to parties other than the person with whom the account party is doing business.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 8.02[6], at 8-11 (1984).

open letter of credit. A letter of credit that can be paid on a simple draft without the need for documentary title.

“Such informal or extra-legal agreements save court costs and the marshal's fees, avoid the annoyance of having the vessel even temporarily arrested and may well be cheaper than the usual surety bond .... In Continental Grain Co. v. Federal Barge Lines, Inc., [268 F.2d 240 (5th Cir. 1959), aff'd, 364 U.S. 19, 80 S.Ct. 1470 (1960)], Judge Brown commented that a letter of undertaking given by a shipowner would be treated ‘as though, upon the libel being filed, the vessel had actually been seized, a claim filed, a stipulation to abide decrees with sureties executed and filed by claimant, and the vessel formally released. Any other course would imperil the desirable avoidance of needless cost, time and inconvenience to litigants, counsel, ships, clerks, marshals, keepers and court personnel through the ready acceptance of such letters of undertakings.’ [268 F.2d at 243.] If, as Judge Brown suggests, the informal agreement is treated as having the same effect as a formal release under bond or stipulation, few questions relating to their use will ever have to be litigated.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. A clause by which, in a pledge agreement, a debtor and creditor could agree that if the debtor fails to timely pay the debt, the creditor obtains absolute title of the pledged property.

“By the lex commissoria at Rome, the debtor and creditor might agree that if the debtor did not pay at the day, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. But a law of Constantine abolished this power, as unjust and oppressive, and having a growing asperity in practice.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *583 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

3. An agreement in which such a failure-to-timely-pay clause appears. — Also written commissoria lex. 4. LEX COMMERCII. “But the position of the seller was a good deal more awkward, especially if he had sold a unique object, such as a piece of land, for, apart from express agreement, he would have to retain the land or other object in case the buyer later came along with the price and demanded delivery. The difficulty could be avoided by the insertion of a term known as lex commissoria, which gave the seller an option of declaring the contract at an end if the buyer did not pay within the agreed time. This term probably became common form in Roman law, but was never implied. It always had to be expressly inserted in the contract .... Not until the time of Lord Mansfield was a similar development complete in English law, though in the end we carried it much further than the Romans.” W.W. Buckland & Arnold D. McNair, Roman Law & Common Law: A Comparison in Outline 231 (F.H. Lawson ed., 2d ed. 1952).

lex talionis (leks tal-ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] The law of retaliation, under which punishment should be in kind — an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and so on — but no more. — Also termed eye for an eye; jus talionis; principle of retribution.

“Kant, for example, expresses the opinion that punishment cannot rightly be inflicted for the sake of any benefit to be derived from it either by the criminal himself or by society, and that the sole and sufficient reason and justification of it lies in the fact that evil has been done by him who suffers it. Consistently with this view, he derives the measure of punishment, not from any elaborate considerations as to the amount needed for the repression of crime, but from the simple principle of lex talionis: ‘Thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot' [Deuteronomy, xix 21]. No such principle, indeed, is capable of literal interpretation; but subject to metaphorical and symbolical applications it is in Kant's view the guiding rule of the ideal scheme of criminal justice." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 118 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"But if the old form of the lex talionis, an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth, sounds too barbaric today, may we not reformulate the retributive theory and put it thus: Everyone is to be punished alike in proportion to the gravity of his offense or to the extent to which he has made others suffer?" Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 53 (1961).

liability, n. 1. The quality or state of being legally obligated or accountable; legal responsibility to another or to society, enforceable by civil remedy or criminal punishment <liability for injuries caused by negligence>. — Also termed legal liability; responsibility; subjection. 2. (often pl.) A financial or pecuniary obligation; DEBT <tax liability> <assets and liabilities>.

“The term ‘liability’ is one of at least double signification. In one sense it is the synonym of duty, the correlative of right; in this sense it is the opposite of privilege or liberty. If a duty rests upon a party, society is now commanding performance by him and threatening penalties. In a second sense, the term ‘liability’ is the correlative of power and the opposite of immunity. In this case society is not yet commanding performance, but it will so command if the possessor of the power does some operative act. If one has a power, the other has a liability. It would be wise to adopt the second sense exclusively. Accurate legal thinking is difficult when the fundamental terms have shifting senses.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 9 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“Liability or responsibility is the bond of necessity that exists between the wrongdoer and the remedy of the wrong. This vinculum juris is not one of mere duty or obligation; it pertains not to the sphere of ought but to that of must.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 364 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

absolute liability. See strict liability.

accomplice liability. Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during, or (in some jurisdictions) after a crime. See 18 USCA § 2. [Cases: Criminal Law 59. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 127, 998.]

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 433B(3) (1965). [Cases: Products Liability 23; Torts 21. C.J.S. Products Liability §§ 40, 42; Torts §§ 36–38.]

industry-wide liability.See enterprise liability.

joint and several liability.Liability that may be apportioned either among two or more parties or to only one or a few select members of the group, at the adversary's discretion. • Thus, each liable party is individually responsible for the entire obligation, but a paying party may have a right of contribution and indemnity from nonpaying parties. See solidary liability. [Cases: Contracts 181; Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 366, 371; Negligence §§ 154–156; Torts §§ 39–44.]

joint liability.Liability shared by two or more parties. [Cases: Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 154–156; Torts §§ 39–44.]

market-share liability.Liability that is imposed, usu. severally, on each member of an industry, based on each member's share of the market or respective percentage of the product that is placed on the market. • This theory of liability usu. applies only in the situation in which a plaintiff cannot trace the harmful exposure to a particular product, as when several products contain a fungible substance. For example, it is sometimes applied to a claim that the plaintiff was harmed by exposure to asbestos. See enterprise liability. [Cases: Products Liability 23.1, 24. C.J.S. Products Liability § 41.]

official liability.Liability of an officer or receiver for a breach of contract or a tort committed during the officer's or receiver's tenure, but not involving any personal liability.

secondary liability. Liability that does not arise unless the primarily liable party fails to honor its obligation.

solidary liability (sol-<<schwa>>-dair-ee). Civil law. The liability of any one debtor among two or more joint debtors to pay the entire debt if the creditor so chooses. La. Civ. Code art. 1794. • This is equivalent to joint and several liability in the common law. — Also termed liability in solido. See joint and several liability. [Cases: Negligence 484; Torts 22. C.J.S. Cf. fault liability; OUTCOME RESPONSIBILITY. [Cases: Negligence 301–307; Products Liability 5. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 170–179; Products Liability

vicarious liability (vI-kair-ee-<<schwa>>s). Liability that a supervisory party (such as an employer) bears for the actionable conduct of a subordinate or associate (such as an employee) based on the relationship between the two parties. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. [Cases: Master and Servant 300, 315; Negligence 483. C.J.S. Employer-Employee Relationship §§ 181–184, 188–193, 203, 231–235, 242, 244–246, 248, 251–252, 254–255; Negligence §§ 152–153.]

“The vicarious liability of an employer for torts committed by employees should not be confused with the liability an employer has for his own torts. An employer whose employee commits a tort may be liable in his own right for negligence in hiring or supervising the employee. If in my business I hire a truck driver who has a record of drunk driving and on whom one day I detect the smell of bourbon, I (along with my employee) may be held liable for negligence if his driving causes injury. But that is not ‘vicarious’ liability — I am held liable for my own negligence in hiring that employee or letting him drive after I know he has been drinking.” Kenneth S. Abraham, The Forms and Functions of Tort Law 166 (2002).

libel (II-l-b*l*), n. 1. A defamatory statement expressed in a fixed medium, esp. writing but also a picture, sign, or electronic broadcast. • Libel is classified as both a crime and a tort but is no longer prosecuted as a crime. — Also termed defamatory libel. 2. The act of making such a statement; publication of defamatory matter by written or printed words, by its embodiment in physical form, or by any other form of communication that has the potentially harmful qualities characteristic of written or printed words. See DEFAMATION. Cf. SLANDER. [Cases: Libel and Slander 1, 25. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 2, 5–6, 10, 47–52.]

“Libel is written or visual defamation; slander is oral or aural defamation.” Robert D. Sack & Sandra S. Baron, Libel, Slander, and Related Problems § 2.3, at 67 (2d ed. 1994).

“The distinction itself between libel and slander is not free from difficulty and uncertainty. As it took form in the seventeenth century, it was one between written and oral words. But later on libel was extended to include pictures, signs, statues, motion pictures, and even conduct carrying a defamatory imputation, such as hanging the plaintiff in effigy, erecting a gallows before his door, dishonoring his valid check drawn upon the defendant's bank, or even ... following him over a considerable period in a conspicuous manner. From this it has been concluded that libel is that which is communicated by the sense of sight, or perhaps also by touch or smell, while slander is that which is conveyed by the sense of hearing.” W. Page Keeton ed., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 112, at 786 (5th ed. 1984).

libel per quod (p*l*-b*l* kwod). 1. Libel that is actionable only on allegation and proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not recognize libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel in which the defamatory meaning is not apparent from the statement on its face but rather must be proved from extrinsic circumstances.

See INNUENDO (2). [Cases: Libel and Slander 11, 33. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood § 198.]

libel per se (p<<schwa>>r say).1. Libel that is actionable in itself, requiring no proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not distinguish between libel per se and libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel that is defamatory on its face, such as the statement “Frank is a thief.” [Cases: Libel and Slander 33. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood § 198.]

A writing, book, picture, or print that is so obscene that it shocks the public sense of decency.

sedition libel.Libel made with the intent of inciting sedition. • Like other forms of criminal libel, seditious libel is no longer prosecuted. See SEDITION. [Cases: Libel and Slander 141, 145. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 7–8.]

trade libel.Trade defamation that is written or recorded. See trade defamation under DEFAMATION. Cf. trade slander under SLANDER. [Cases: Libel and Slander 130. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 204–206, 209.]

3. The complaint or initial pleading in an admiralty or ecclesiastical case. [Cases: Admiralty 60. C.J.S. Admiralty §§ 171–173.] — Also termed (in sense 3) libel of information.

libel,vb.1. To defame (someone) in a permanent medium, esp. in writing. [Cases: Libel and Slander 1, 25. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 2, 5–6, 10, 47–52.] 2.Hist. Maritime law. ## LIBERTY

liberty. 1. Freedom from arbitrary or undue external restraint, esp. by a government <give me liberty or give me death>.2. A right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; the absence of a legal duty imposed on a person <the liberties protected by the Constitution>. [Cases: Constitutional Law 83, 254.1. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 472, 511, 977–978, 980, 1418; Right to Die§ 2.]

“[Liberty] denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.” Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S.Ct. 625, 626 (1923).

“The sphere of my legal liberty is that sphere of activity within which the law is content to leave me alone.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 239 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“The word liberty has become a symbol around which have clung some of the most generous human emotions. We have been brought up to thrill with admiration at the men who say, Give me liberty or give me death. But the philosopher asks whether all those who are devoted to liberty mean the same thing. Does liberty or freedom, for instance, involve free trade? Does it involve freedom to preach race hatred or the overthrow of all that we regard as sacred? Many who believe in liberty characterize the freedom which they are not willing to grant, as license, and they do it so often that one may be inclined to think that what we really need is less liberty and more license. Moreover, there is a confusion between the absence of legal restraint and the presence of real freedom as positive power to do what we want. The legal freedom to earn a million dollars is not worth a cent to one who has no real opportunity. It is fashionable to assert that men want freedom above all other things, but a strong case may be made out for the direct contrary. Absolute freedom is just what people do not want ....” Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101–02 (1961).

individual liberty. See personal liberty.

natural liberty. The power to act as one wishes, without any restraint or control, unless by nature.

“This natural liberty ... [is] a right inherent in us by birth .... But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 121 (1765).

personal liberty. One's freedom to do as one pleases, limited only by the government's right to regulate the public health, safety, and welfare. — Also termed individual liberty. [Cases: Constitutional Law 83. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 472, 511.]

[Cases: Constitutional Law 84. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 513–517.]

license,n.1. A permission, usu. revocable, to commit some act that would otherwise be unlawful; esp., an agreement (not amounting to a lease or profit à prendre) that it is lawful for the licensee to enter the licensor's land to do some act that would otherwise be illegal, such as hunting game. See SERVITUDE(1). [Cases: Licenses 43. C.J.S. Easements § 9; Licenses § 88.]

“[A] license is an authority to do a particular act, or series of acts, upon another's land, without possessing any estate therein. It is founded in personal confidence, and is not assignable, nor within the statute of frauds.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *452–53 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

implied license. A royalty-free license arising from a property owner's conduct regarding another person's use of the property even though the owner has not expressly consented to the property's use. • In a patent context, the circumstances surrounding the conduct give rise to an affirmative grant of consent or permission to infringe a patent's claims. For example, the conduct of a patentee who encourages the manufacture of infringing products may constitute an implied license to use the patent. An implied license may also arise when a patentee authorizes the sale or express grant of a license to a buyer, who then resells the license to a third party; the third party is the patentee's implied licensee. [Cases: Patents 210. C.J.S. Patents § 346.]

implied license by acquiescence. An implied license that arises from the patentee's tacit or passive acceptance of or implied consent to an otherwise infringing act.

implied license by conduct. An implied license based on the patentee's course of conduct, including language, from which another person could properly infer that the patentee consented to the other's use of the patent. See implied license by equitable estoppel; implied license by legal estoppel.

implied license by equitable estoppel. An implied license usu. based on the patentee's failure to take timely action to enforce patent rights against an infringer after objecting to the infringer's actions, thereby misleading the infringer into believing that the patentee will not act. See A.C. Aukerman Co. v. R.L. Chaides Constr. Co., 960 F.2d 1020, 1042–43 (Fed. Cir. 1992).

implied license by legal estoppel. An implied license usu. based on the patentee's broadcast grant of a right or interest that cannot be derogated by the patentee's later acts.

license coupled with an interest. An irrevocable license in real estate that confers the right (not the mere permission) to perform an act or acts upon the property; esp., a license incidental to the ownership of an interest in a chattel located on the land with respect to which the license exists. • This type of license is considered an interest in the land itself. An injunction may be obtained to prevent the wrongful revocation of such a license. — Also termed license coupled with the grant of an interest. [Cases: Licenses 43, 57. C.J.S. Easements § 9; Licenses §§ 88, 95, 101–102.]

“A licence may be coupled with some interest in the land or chattels thereon. Thus the right to enter another man's land to hunt and take away the deer killed, or to cut down a tree and remove it, involves the grant of an interest in the deer or tree and also a licence annexed to it to come on the land. The interest must be a recognised interest in the property, and it must have been validly created. Thus at law a right to take game or minerals, being a profit à prendre, must have been created by deed or prescription, whereas no formalities are required for the grant of a right to take away chattels, such as felled timber or cut hay. Equity will give effect to a specifically enforceable agreement to grant an interest, so that a licence coupled with a profit à prendre granted merely in writing but for value may be protected by injunction.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 428 (6th ed. 1993).

MPL.

naked license. 1. A license allowing a licensee to use a trademark on any goods and services the licensee chooses. [Cases: Trade Regulation 108. C.J.S. Trade-Marks, Trade-Names, and Unfair Competition §§ 209–212.] 2. See bare license.

nonmetered license.Patents. An agreement to allow a patent's use in exchange for a flat percentage of sales, regardless of how much the patent is actually used. • The Supreme Court rejected a nonmetered license as patent misuse, saying the buyer has a right to insist on paying only for actual use. Zenith Radio Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 89 S.Ct. 1562 (1969). See PATENT-MISUSE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents 218(5). C.J.S. Patents § 371.]

open-source license.A license that allows open-source software users to copy, distribute, or modify the source code, and publicly distribute derived works based on the source code. • Open-source licenses usu. do not require royalty or other fees on distribution. The license typically requires a user who redistributes original or modified software that was received under an open-source license to provide the original license terms, including all disclaimers, to all future users, and to distribute the source code with any machine-executable software. It is unclear who has the right or power to enforce the terms of an open-source license. — Sometimes termed general-public license.

shrink-wrap license.A license printed on the outside of a software package to advise the buyer that by opening the package, the buyer becomes legally bound to abide by the terms of the license. • Shrink-wrap licenses usu. seek to (1) prohibit users from making unauthorized copies of the software, (2) prohibit modifications to the software, (3) limit use of the software to one computer, (4) limit the manufacturer's liability, and (5) disclaim warranties. — Also written shrinkwrap license. — Also termed box-top license; tear-me-open license. liege poustie (leej pow-see). [Law French “liege power” fr. Latin legitima potestas “lawful power”] Scots law. The lawful power of one in good health, as a result of which the person might dispose of heritable property. • The phrase often appeared attributively, as in liege poustie conveyance. Cf. LEGITIMA POTESTAS.

“LIEGE POUSTIE; is that state of health which gives a person full power to dispose mortis causa, or otherwise, of his heritable property. The term, according to our institutional writers, is derived from the words legitima potestas, signifying the lawful power of disposing of property at pleasure. It is used in contradistinction to deathbed — a liege poustie conveyance being a conveyance not challengeable on the head of deathbed .... The tests of liege poustie, opposed to the presumption of deathbed, are survivance during sixty days, and going to kirk or market unsupported.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

“[A] liege poustie conveyance being one not challengeable by the heir on the ground of death-bed. This condition of health the granter of a deed was held to have enjoyed, if at the time of granting it he was not affected by the disease of which he died, or if, after executing it, he attended kirk or market, unsupported, or survived for sixty days.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 329 (4th ed. 1894).

If, on the other hand, subject to the direction and approval of the praetor, the parties agreed upon the issues to be referred ... [a] document framed in identical terms was issued to the judex by the praetor as his authority to act. #### LIVERY OF SEISIN livery of seisin.Hist. The ceremony by which a grantor conveyed land to a grantee. • Livery of seisin involved either (1) going on the land and having the grantor symbolically deliver possession of the land to the grantee by handing over a twig, a clod of dirt, or a piece of turf (called livery in deed) or (2) going within sight of the land and having the grantor tell the grantee that possession was being given, followed by the grantee's entering the land (called livery in law). See SEISIN. [Cases: Deeds 21.C.J.S. Deeds §§ 12–13.]

“[W]e may now pause to wonder how transfer of these potentially infinite interests was accomplished. Without a modern system of land records, it would be desirable that the transfer be effected with sufficient ceremony not only to mark itself indelibly in the memories of the participants, but also to give notice to interested persons such as the mesne lord above the transferor. The central idea was to make ritual livery (meaning ‘delivery,’ from the Old French livrer) of seisin (meaning, roughly, ‘possession,’ from the Old French saisir or seisir). The transferor and transferee would go to the land to be transferred, and the transferor would then hand to the transferee a lump of soil or a twig from a tree — all the while intoning the appropriate words of grant, together with the magical words ‘and his heirs’ if the interest transferred was to be a potentially infinite one.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 10–11 (2d ed. 1984).

[Cases: Insurance 1220. C.J.S. Insurance § 1709.]

“[I]t is not the corporation of Lloyd's which undertakes insurance risks and enters into policies of insurance; that is done by the individual members of Lloyd's, acting usually in groups or 'syndicates,' which are not partnerships or companies but merely fortuitous aggregations of, say, five, ten, or more members represented in common by one underwriting agent having power to bind them each individually and separately to contracts of insurance. These members are frequently referred to as 'names'; and their agent is said to 'write' for them. If, as is commonly the case, he also is a member of Lloyd's, then he will 'write' for himself, too.” 2 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 237 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

“The interest of shipowners led them, in early times, to load vessels to a point beyond safety; the greater the weight of the vessel's load, of course, the lower she rides in the water, and the more vulnerable she is to heavy seas. Many seamen consequently lost their lives. Britain led the way in establishing standards of depth in the water believed to be safe; Samuel Plimsoll, M.P., was the moving spirit, and gave his name to the Plimsoll mark, now seen on the side of all large vessels, which marks the limits of safety for different seas and seasons. Since 1929, the United States has made mandatory the placing of and compliance with loadline marks ....” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 11-12, at 987 (2d ed. 1975).

LOCALITY RULE

locality rule. 1. The doctrine that, in a professional-malpractice suit, the standard of care to be applied to the professional's conduct is the reasonable care exercised by similar professionals in the same vicinity and professional community. [Cases: Health 620.]

“With respect to medical doctors (and sometimes dentists and others), the standard of care has been further limited by the so-called ‘locality rule.’ A physician historically was required only to possess and apply the knowledge and use the skill and care that is ordinarily used by reasonably well-qualified physicians in the locality in which he practices, or, usually, in ‘similar localities.’ This frequently made it difficult or impossible for a plaintiff to prove the applicable standard since other doctors in the same locality are notoriously reluctant to testify against their professional colleagues. However, with the advent of improved communication and continuing medical education, the reason for the rule has abated, and today the trend is toward its abolition.” Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 270–71 (2d ed. 1992).

LOCALITY TEST

LOCAL-LAW THEORY

local-law theory. Conflict of laws. The view that, although a court of the forum recognizes and enforces a local right (that is, one created under its own law), in a foreign-element case it does not necessarily apply the rule that would govern an analogous case of a purely domestic character, but instead takes into account the law of the foreign country by fashioning a local right as nearly as possible upon the law of the country in which the decisive facts have occurred. • This theory is credited to Walter Wheeler Cook, who expounded it in the first chapter of his Logical and Legal Bases of the Conflict of Laws (1949).

“Since the court of the forum adopts the view that the chosen law would have taken not of the actual case, but of an equivalent domestic case, it does not necessarily recognize the right that would have been vested in the plaintiff according to that law.... It is scarcely deniable, however, that this local law theory is little more than what a learned writer has stigmatized as a sterile truism — sterile because it affords no basis for the systematic development of private international law. To remind an English judge, about to try a case containing a foreign element, that whatever decision he gives he must enforce only the lex fori, is a technical quibble that explains nothing and solves nothing. It provides no guidance whatever upon the limits within which he must have regard to the foreign law.” G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 35 (6th ed. 1961).

LOCAL OPTION

local option. An option that allows a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without the specific approval of state officials. — Also termed local veto. “Locatio rei was the letting of a res for hire. Roman law differed in several aspects from the relevant rules of English law. Firstly, there was not in Roman law a fundamental distinction between the hiring of personal property and the lease of real property: locatio rei applied both to land and movables. Secondly, in Roman law the hirer did not obtain possession. Thirdly, the locatio was a mere contract and even the tenant of land did not have a right to be restored if he were [wrongfully] ejected, his sole remedy being an action for breach of contract. Fourthly, the Roman contract gave more consideration to the tenant or hirer than does English law.” G.W. Paton, Bailment in the Common Law 53 (1952).

locus sigilli (loh-k<<schwa>>s si-jil-I), n.[Latin] The place of the seal. • Today this phrase is almost always abbreviated “L.S.” These are the traditional letters appearing on many notarial certificates to indicate where the notary public's embossed seal should be placed. If a rubber-stamp seal is used, it should be placed near but not over this abbreviation. See NOTARY SEAL . [Cases: Seals 3. C.J.S. Seals § 4.]

“For some period in history seals were required to consist of wax affixed to the parchment or paper on which the terms of the instrument were written. The wax was required to have an identifiable impression made upon it. Usually this was made by a signet ring. In time when ordinary people, who did not have signet rings, learned to read and write, it was to be expected that substitutes for the traditional seal would be accepted by the law. Thus, today it would be generally accurate to say that a seal may consist of wax, a gummed wafer, an impression on the paper, the word ‘seal,’ the letters ‘L.S.’ (locus sigilli) or even a pen scratch.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 7-3, at 296 (3d ed. 1987).

Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 776; Set-off and Counterclaim 60.C.J.S. Set-off and Counterclaim §§ 102–103.]

“[U]nder the fourth test — frequently referred to as the ‘logical relationship’ standard — the principal consideration in determining whether a counterclaim is compulsory rests on the efficiency or economy of trying the counterclaim in the same litigation as the main claim. As a result, the convenience of the court, rather than solely the counterclaim's relationship to the facts or issues of the opposing claim, is controlling. The hallmark of this approach is flexibility. Although the fourth test has been criticized for being overly broad in scope and uncertain in application, it has by far the widest acceptance among the courts.” Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 6.7, at 352 (2d ed. 1993).

The loose leaf method was, therefore, first used as a means of reporting new tax and business laws which were to be subject to administrative interpretation .... Cf. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

“The common law not only denied a tort recovery for injury once the tort victim had died, it also refused to recognize any new and independent cause of action in the victim's dependents or heirs for their own loss at his death.... The result was that it was cheaper for the defendant to kill the plaintiff than to injure him, and that the most grievous of all injuries left the bereaved family of the victim, who frequently were destitute, without a remedy. Since this was intolerable, it was changed in England by the passage of the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, otherwise known as Lord Campbell's Act, which has become a generic name for similar statutes.” W. “ ‘Lucri causa’ literally means for the sake of gain. On rare occasions the suggestion has been made that no taking is with intent to steal unless the thief is motivated by some purpose of gain or advantage. Even those advancing this suggestion have not insisted upon an intent to gain a pecuniary advantage. An intent to take away property and destroy it for the purpose of destroying evidence has been held to be sufficient even by those who have been inclined to insist upon lucri causa as essential to an intent to steal. The generally accepted view does not include this element at all. It regards intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently, or an intent to deal with another's property unlawfully in such a manner as to create an obviously unreasonable risk of permanent deprivation, as all that is required to constitute the animus furandi — or intent to steal.” Rollin M. federal magistrate.See UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

investigating magistrate.A quasi-judicial officer responsible for examining and sometimes ruling on certain aspects of a criminal proceeding before it comes before a judge.

“The institution of the investigating magistrate is another measure for preserving the integrity of the law at the level of enforcement. In this case the measure is directed not toward curing the evils of a lax or sporadic enforcement, but toward the evils of an opposite nature, those resulting from an excess of zeal on the part of the prosecutor. Under the system in question, before a criminal charge may be brought before the regular courts it must be investigated by a special official and, in effect, certified as deserving trial in court. The investigating magistrate is thus a kind of quasi-judge standing halfway between the prosecutor and the regular court. The danger of the institution lies precisely in this twilight zone of function which it occupies. The certification of a case for trial inevitably tends to confirm the criminal charge against the suspect, thus creating what may amount in practice to a strong presumption of guilt. The element of prejudgment involved constitutes a threat to the integrity of the trial in open court; the accused has, in effect, had a kind of half-trial in advance of the real trial, and this half-trial is conducted, not before but by a kind of half-judge who acts essentially as an inquisitorial court. In those countries where it is a part of the legal system, the role of the investigating magistrate continues to be a subject of some debate, and even where it is generally accepted, there is always some lingering concern lest it become the subject of inconspicuous abuse.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 38–39 (1968).

magistratus (maj-<<schwa>>-stray-t<<schwa>>s), n. [fr. Latin magister “a master”] Roman law. 1. A magistrate. 2. A magistrate's office.

“Magistratus. Denotes both the public office and the official himself. Magistracy was a Republican institution; under the Principate some magistratus continued to exist but with gradually diminishing importance; in the post-Diocletian Empire some former magistracies still exist but reduced nearly completely to an honorific title .... The most characteristic features of the Republican magistracy were the limited duration (one year) and collegiality since each magistracy was covered by at least two persons ... with equal power .... Magistrates were elected by the people .... During his year of service a magistratus could not be removed. Misdemeanor in office could be prosecuted only after the term, hence the tenure of an office for two consecutive years was prohibited .... The tenure of a public office was considered an honor; for that reason the magistrates did not receive any compensation. Their political influence was, however, of greatest importance ....” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 571–72 (1953).

MAGNA CARTA

Magna Carta (mag-n<<schwa>> kahr-t<<schwa>>). [Latin “great charter”] The English charter that King John granted to the barons in 1215 and that Henry III and Edward I later confirmed. • It is generally regarded as one of the great common-law documents and as the foundation of constitutional liberties. The other three great charters of English liberty are the Petition of Right (3 Car. (1628)), the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2 (1679)), and the Bill of Rights (1 Will. & M. (1689)). — Also spelled Magna Charta.

“Magna Carta came to be reckoned as the beginning of English statute law; it was printed as the first of the statutes of the realm. But to explain this we have first to remark that of Magna Carta there are several editions. We have four versions of the charter, that of 1215, that of 1216, that of 1217 and that of 1225, and between them there are important differences. Several clauses which were contained in the charter of 1215 were omitted in that of 1216 and were never again inserted. It seems to have been thought inadvisable to bind the young king to some of the more stringent conditions to which John had been subjected. The charter of 1217 again differs from that of 1216. Substantially it is in 1217 that the charter takes its final form; still it is the charter of 1225 which is the Magna Carta of all future times. That there were four versions is a fact to be carefully remembered; it is never enough to refer to Magna Carta without saying which edition you mean.” F.W. Maitland, The Constitutional History of England 15 (1908; repr. 1955).

“The history of Magna Carta is the history not only of a document but also of an argument. The history of the document is a history of repeated re-interpretation. But the history of the argument is a history of a continuous element of political thinking. In this light there is no inherent reason why an assertion of law originally conceived in aristocratic interests should not be applied on a wider scale.” J.C. Holt, Magna Carta 16 (1965).

The principle that when a pleading or other document is filed or served by mail, filing or service is deemed to have occurred on the date of mailing. • The mailbox rule varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. #### MAIM maim,n. Archaic. The type of injury required for the commission of mayhem; esp., serious injury to part of a person's body that is necessary for fighting. — Also termed maihem; maihemium. See MAYHEM. [Cases: Mayhem 1. C.J.S. Mayhem §§ 2–6.] — maim,vb.

“Maihem or maim is where by the wrongful act of another any member is hurt or taken away, whereby the party is made unperfect to fight: as if a bone be taken out of the hand .... But the cutting of an ear or nose, or breaking of the hinder teeth, or such like, is no maihem, because it is rather a deformity of body than diminishing of strength; and that is commonly tried by the justices beholding the party. And if the justices stand in doubt whether the hurt be a maihem or not, they use and will of their own discretion take the help and opinion of some skilful chirurgeon, to consider thereof, before they determine upon the cause.” Termes de la Ley 283–84 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

“ ‘Maim’ is the modern equivalent of the old word ‘mayhem,’ and some have long been inclined to abandon the earlier word entirely. There is a tendency, on the other hand, to retain ‘mayhem’ for the offense and to use ‘maim’ for the type of injury originally required for such a crime. This usage has a distinct advantage because statutory enlargements have included another type of injury within the scope of this offense, and today mayhem (the offense) may involve something other than maim (the injury).” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239 (3d ed. 1982).

malice, n. 1. The intent, without justification or excuse, to commit a wrongful act. 2. Reckless disregard of the law or of a person's legal rights. 3. Ill will; wickedness of heart. • This sense is most typical in nonlegal contexts.

“Malice means in law wrongful intention. It includes any intent which the law deems wrongful, and which therefore serves as a ground of liability. Any act done with such an intent is, in the language of the law, malicious, and this legal usage has etymology in its favour. The Latin malitia means badness, physical or moral — wickedness in disposition or in conduct — not specifically or exclusively ill-will or malevolence; hence the malice of English law, including all forms of evil purpose, design, intent, or motive. [But] intent is of two kinds, being either immediate or ulterior, the ulterior intent being commonly distinguished as the motive. The term malice is applied in law to both these forms of intent, and the result is a somewhat puzzling ambiguity which requires careful notice. When we say that an act is done maliciously, we mean one of two distinct things. We mean either that it is done intentionally, or that it is done with some wrongful motive.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 384 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“[M]alice in the legal sense imports (1) the absence of all elements of justification, excuse or recognized mitigation, and (2) the presence of either (a) an actual intent to cause the particular harm which is produced or harm of the same general nature, or (b) the wanton and wilful doing of an act with awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result.... The Model Penal Code does not use ‘malice’ because those who formulated the Code had a blind prejudice against the word. This is very regrettable because it represents a useful concept despite some unfortunate language employed at times in the effort to express it.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 860 (3d ed. 1982).

actual malice. 1. The deliberate intent to commit an injury, as evidenced by external circumstances. — Also termed express malice; malice in fact. Cf. implied malice. 2. Defamation. Knowledge (by the person who utters or publishes a defamatory statement) that a statement is false, or reckless disregard about whether the statement is true. • To prevail, a plaintiff who is a public official or public figure must overcome the defendant's qualified privilege by proving the defendant's actual malice. And for certain other types of claims, a plaintiff must prove actual malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. — Also termed New York Times malice; constitutional malice; common-law malice. See reckless disregard (2) under DISREGARD. [Cases: Libel and Slander 51. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 66, 105.]

transferred malice. Malice directed to one person or object but instead harming another in the way intended for the first. [Cases: Assault and Battery 49; Homicide 555. C.J.S. Assault and Battery §§ 67, 71.]

“[I]f A shoots at B intending to kill him, but the shot actually kills C, this is held to be murder of C. So also if A throws a stone at one window and breaks another, it is held to be malicious damage to the window actually broken. This doctrine, which is known as the doctrine of transferred malice, applies only where the harm intended and the harm done are of the same kind. If A throws a stone at a human being and unintentionally breaks a window, he cannot be convicted of malicious damage to the window.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 382 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

universal malice. The state of mind of a person who determines to take a life on slight provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

malice aforethought. The requisite mental state for common-law murder, encompassing any one of the following: (1) the intent to kill, (2) the intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, (3) extremely reckless indifference to the value of human life (the so-called abandoned and malignant heart), or (4) the intent to commit a dangerous felony (which leads to culpability under the felony-murder rule). — Also termed premeditated malice; preconceived malice; malice prepense; malitia praecogitata. [Cases: Homicide 529, 541, 546.]

“Malice aforethought is the term which came into use during medieval times to indicate the mental element necessary in the felony of murder. It has been the subject of voluminous jurisprudential enquiry ....” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 27 (16th ed. 1952).

malicious mischief. The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally destroying or damaging another's property. • Although modern statutes predominantly make this offense a misdemeanor, a few make it a felony (depending on the nature of the property or its value). See Model Penal Code § 220.3. — Also termed malicious mischief and trespass; malicious injury; malicious trespass; malicious damage; maliciously damaging the property of another; (in the Model Penal Code) criminal mischief. [Cases: Malicious Mischief 1. C.J.S. Malicious or Criminal Mischief or Damage to Property §§ 2–5.]

“Such phrases as ‘malicious mischief and trespass,’ ‘malicious injury,’ and ‘maliciously damaging the property of another,’ are merely additional labels used at times to indicate the same offense. It was a misdemeanor according to the common law of England, although some confusion has resulted from Blackstone's statement that it was ‘only a trespass at common law.’ Before the word ‘misdemeanor’ became well established the old writers tended to use the word ‘trespass’ to indicate an offense below the grade of felony. And it was used at times by Blackstone for this purpose, as in the phrase ‘treason, felony, or trespass.’ ” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 405 (3d ed. 1982).

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION

malicious prosecution. 1. The institution of a criminal or civil proceeding for an improper purpose and without probable cause. • The tort requires an adversary to prove four elements: (1) the initiation or continuation of a lawsuit; (2) lack of probable cause; (3) malice; and (4) favorable termination of the lawsuit. Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 674–681B (1977). 2. The tort claim resulting from the institution of such a proceeding. • Once a wrongful prosecution has ended in the defendant's favor, he or she may sue for tort damages. — Also termed (in the context of civil proceedings) malicious use of process; (archaically) malicious institution of civil proceedings. Cf. ABUSE OF PROCESS; VEXATIOUS SUIT. [Cases: Malicious Prosecution 16. C.J.S. Malicious Prosecution or Wrongful Litigation §§ 5, 23–24.]

“The distinction between an action for malicious prosecution and an action for abuse of process is that a malicious prosecution consists in maliciously causing process to be issued, whereas an abuse of process is the employment of legal process for some purpose other than that which it was intended by the law to effect — the improper use of a regularly issued process. For instance, the initiation of vexatious civil proceedings known to be groundless is not abuse of process, but is governed by substantially the same rules as the malicious prosecution of criminal proceedings.” 52 Am. Jur. 2d Malicious Prosecution § 2, at 187 (1970).

malitia capitalis (m⟨schwa⟩-lish-ee-⟨schwa⟩ kap-i-tay-lis). [Latin] Hist. Deadly

malitia excogitata (eks-koj-<<schwa>>-tay-t<<schwa>>). See malitia praecogitata.

malitia praecogitata (pree-koj-<<schwa>>-tay-t<<schwa>>). See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. — Also termed malitia excogitata.

“[T]he word felony is often coupled with what will in the future be another troublesome term of art, to wit, malice aforethought or malice prepense (malitia excogitata, praecogitata)... When it first came into use, it hardly signified a state of mind; some qualifying adjective such as praemeditata or excogitata was needed if much note was to be taken of intention or of any other psychological fact. When we first meet with malice prepense it seems to mean little more than intentional wrong-doing; but the somewhat weighty adjectives which are coupled with malitia in its commonest context — adjectives such as excogitata — are, if we mistake not, traces of the time when forsteal, guetapens, waylaying, the setting of ambush, was (what few crimes were) a specially reserved plea of the crown to be emended, if indeed it was emendable, by a heavy wite.”
2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 468–69 (2d ed. 1899).

MALUM IN SE

malum in se (mal-⟨schwa⟩m in sayorse), n. [Latin “evil in itself”] A crime or an act that is inherently immoral, such as murder, arson, or rape. — Also termed malum per se. Pl. mala in se. Cf. MALUM PROHIBITUM. — malum in se, adj.

“The basis for the distinction between mala in se and mala prohibita, between what one might call a crime and an offence — or between what one might call a felony and a misdemeanour, if one could modernize those terms so that the latter was given its natural meaning — is that crime means to the ordinary man something that is sinful or immoral, and an offence at worst a piece of misbehaviour.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 33 (1968).

“The distinction between offenses mala in se and offenses mala prohibita was recognized at least as early as the fifteenth century. It has been criticized repeatedly. About a century and a half ago the distinction was said to be one ‘not founded upon any sound principle’ and which had ‘long since been exploded.’ [Quoting Bensley v. Bignold, 5 B. & A. 335, 341, 106 Eng. Rep. 1214, 1216 (1822); other citations omitted.] The Supreme Court, however, has shown that it is just as firmly entrenched today as it was in 1495.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 880 (3d ed. 1982).

MALUM PROHIBITUM

malum prohibitum (mal-<<schwa>>m proh-hib-i-t<<schwa>>m), n. [Latin “prohibited evil”] An act that is a crime merely because it is prohibited by statute, although the act itself is not necessarily immoral. • Misdemeanors such as jaywalking and running a stoplight are mala prohibita, as are many regulatory violations. Pl. mala prohibita. Cf. MALUM IN SE. — malum prohibitum, adj.

“Much of the criminal law that is regulatory in character — the part of it that deals with malum prohibitum rather than malum in se — is based upon the ... principle ... that the choice of the individual must give way to the convenience of the many.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 16 (1968).

“As customarily used these phrases are mutually exclusive. An offense malum prohibitum is not a wrong which is prohibited, but something which is wrong only in the sense that it is against the law. This is emphasized at times by such phrases as ‘malum prohibitum only’ or ‘but malum prohibitum,’ although it is understood without any such qualification. A failure to understand this usage of the terms has led some to assume that all statutory additions to the common law of crimes are mala prohibita. One writer emphasized his confusion by speaking of embezzlement as malum prohibitum. This assumption is utterly without foundation. An act may be malum in se although no punishment is provided by law. If this defect is corrected by appropriate legislation, what previously was malum in se does not cease to be so by reason of having been defined and made punishable by law.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 884–85 (3d ed. 1982).

A legal formality for transferring property by either an actual or a simulated purchase; a formal conveyance in the guise of a sale. • The formality required the presence of the thing being conveyed (res Mancipi), and of five adult male citizens acting as witnesses. Another person (the libripens) held the bronze scales with which the purchase price had been weighed out. The buyer made an assertion of ownership, struck the scales with a piece of bronze or copper, then gave the metal piece to the seller as a symbolic price. In Roman classical law, either this procedure or cessio in jure was necessary to pass legal title. This form of sale was abolished by Justinian. 2. A similar form used for making a will, adoption, emancipation of children, etc. — Also termed mancipatio. See RES MANCIPI. Cf. “But if the patria potestas could be created, it could also be terminated, by an artificial process .... The father could not by a simple act of his own will release the son from his control. For this purpose he must sell him out of his own hands into that state of mancipium or qualified slavery of which we have spoken. Even then the father's power was not destroyed: it was suspended during the existence of the mancipium; but if the mancipium ceased, if the son was set free by the person who held him in that condition, the father's right revived .... It was not until he had sold him three times over, that he used up his right of control beyond the possibility of a revival. This, then, was the form by which the son was liberated from the patria potestas.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 126–27 (1881).

But these had as a rule been used as representatives of the English hide, and just for this reason they were incapable of expressing the notion that the Normans desired to express by the word manerium. In its origin that word is but one more name for a house. Throughout the Exeter Domesday the word mansio is used instead of the manerium of the Exchequer record, and even in the Exchequer record we may find these two terms used interchangeably ...." manor. 1. A feudal estate, usu. granted by the king to a lord or other high person and cultivated as a unit. • In more ancient times, the lord's manor included a village community, usu. composed of serfs.

“[T]o ask for a definition of a manor is to ask for what can not be given. We may however draw a picture of a typical manor, and, this done, we may discuss the deviations from this type .... [W]e may regard the typical manor (1) as being, qua vill, a unit of public law, of police and fiscal law, (2) as being a unit in the system of agriculture, (3) as being a unit in the management of property, (4) as being a jurisdictional unit. But we ... see that hardly one of these traits can be considered as absolutely essential. The most important is the connection between the manor and the vill ....” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 596–97 (2d ed. 1898).

“The term [manor] applied, after the Norman conquest, to estates organized under knights, ecclesiastical corporations, or otherwise, and managed and cultivated as units. By the end of the 11th century, the main element was the feudal lord, and soon he came to be regarded as the owner of the manor, and to have authority over the tenants, and the right to hold a court for them .... In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, a manor also implied a right of jurisdiction exercised through a court baron, attended by both freeholders and villein tenants .... In the eighteenth century the manorial court decayed rapidly, cases being generally brought in the King's courts, the only surviving business being copyhold conveyancing.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 803 (1980).

Rep. 944 (K.B. 1785), in an opinion by William Murray, first Earl of Mansfield, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench. [Cases: Criminal Law 957; Federal Civil Procedure 2371; Trial 344. Cf. ACCIDENTAL KILLING. [Cases: Homicide 659.]

“Involuntary manslaughter is a ‘catch-all’ concept. It includes all manslaughter not characterized as voluntary.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 104 (3d ed.

“The only differences between the legal use and the everyday use of ‘voluntary,’ ‘not voluntary,’ and ‘involuntary’ seem to be (a) a more frequent use of ‘involuntary’ as a synonym of ‘not voluntary’ and (b) a technical use of ‘involuntary’ in the crime of ‘involuntary manslaughter,’ where it seems to have the meaning of ‘unintentional.’ Thus, as contrasted with ‘voluntary manslaughter,’ there is no suggestion that death, as contrasted with harm, was intended or foreseen. Though it is often confined to cases of assault and battery where death results, for example either from the withholding of food or from excessive chastisement of a child, some jurists say that it can be due to any unlawful and dangerous action causing death.” Alan R. White, Grounds of Liability 61–62 (1985).

manumission (man-y<<schwa>>-mish-<<schwa>>n), n. [Latin manumissio “I send out of hand”] Roman law. The granting of freedom to a slave. • In the Republic and early Empire, there were three usual methods, all of which made the freed slave a citizen. These were (1) manumission vindicta (by the rod), a fictitious lawsuit in which a liberator touched the slave with a wand or rod in the presence of the praetor and alleged that he was free; (2) manumission censu, by which the slave's name was enrolled in the census as a citizen; and (3) manumission testamento, by will. Under Justinian, a grant of freedom in any form (except in fraud of creditors) made the slave free and a citizen. — Also termed manumissio. [Cases: Slaves 22.]

“Manumission is a kind of new birth. The master (patronus) therefore stands to his freedman in a relation analogous to the relation between father and son. The patron, as such, is entitled, as against his libertus, to a father's rights of succession and guardianship. He has the right of moderate chastisement (levis coercitio). He has the same claim to be treated with respect as he has against his son. He can claim to be supported by the libertus, if he falls into poverty. He is, lastly, entitled to certain services on the part of the freedman, which he can, if necessary, enforce by action, provided only the freedman had promised them after his manumission and in a manner not derogatory to his liberty.” Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 170 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

manumission censu. The freeing of a slave by having the censor enter the slave's name on the census roll, the slave professing to be a freeman in the presence of the master. • Once the censor entered the slave's name on the census roll, the slave became a freeman and a citizen — by a simple stroke of the pen. — Also termed manumissio censu.

manumission sacrorum causa. The freeing of a slave by the master's solemnly declaring that the slave was to be free while holding a limb of the slave and promising to pay a sum of money if the freedman later departs from the sacra (family rites). • The master then turned around and released the slave, who became free but was bound to perform the family rites. — Also termed manumissio sacrorum causa.

manumission testamento. The freeing of a slave by will in either of two ways: (1) the master's granting the slave freedom outright in the will, or (2) the master's imposing on an heir the obligation of freeing the slave, in which case the slave became the freedman of the heir. — Also termed manumissio testamento.

manumission vindicta. The ceremonial freeing of a slave whereby a third party, in the presence of the praetor, placed a rod (vindicta) on the slave while claiming that the slave was a freedman, whereupon the master admitted the slave's freedom and the praetor then declared the slave to be free. • This ceremony was actually a fictitious action at law. — Also termed manumissio vindicta.

“Thus the Lords Marchers were practically independent potentates of a kind very unusual in England. From this two consequences flowed. In the first place there grew up in their jurisdictions a mixture of Welsh custom and English law known as the custom of the Marches. In the second place, although they held of the king, their allegiance sat so lightly upon them that it was necessary to declare in 1354 that ‘all the Lords of the Marches of Wales shall be perpetually attending and annexed to the crown of England, and not to the principality of Wales, in whose hands so ever the same principality be.' ” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 121 (7th ed. 1956).

MARCHET

See DROIT DU SEIGNEUR.

“Any service which stamps the tenant as an unfree man, stamps his tenure as unfree; and in common opinion such services there are, notably the merchetum. Now among the thousands of entries in English documents relating to this payment, it would we believe be utterly impossible to find one which gave any sanction to the tales of a ius primae noctis. The context in which this duty is usually mentioned explains at least one of the reasons which underlie it. The tenant may not give his daughter (in some cases his son or daughter) in marriage — at least not outside the manor .... No doubt a subjection to this restraint was regarded as very base, and sometimes it is described in vigorous words which express a free man's loathing for servility: — ‘he must buy, he must make ransom for, his flesh and blood.’ ” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 372 (2d ed. 1898).

MARCUS MODEL

Marcus model.Labor law. A method for determining whether a union member's state-law claim against the employer is preempted by federal law, by focusing on whether the state-law claim can be maintained independently of an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. • In Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S.Ct. 1877 (1988), the Supreme Court held that a union member's state-law retaliatory-discharge claim was not preempted by the Labor–Management Relations Act because the claim could be resolved without interpreting the collective-bargaining agreement. There are at least two models for applying the Lingle test: the White model, which focuses on whether the claim is negotiable or nonnegotiable (that is, whether state law allows the claim to be waived by a private contract), and the Marcus model, which focuses on the independence of the claim in relation to the collective-bargaining agreement. Under the Marcus model, if the claim can be maintained separately from an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement, it is not preempted regardless of whether the claim is generally waivable in contract. The Marcus model is named for the author of the law-review note in which it was proposed. Stephanie R. Marcus, Note, The Need for a New Approach to Federal Preemption of Union Members' State Law Claims, 99 Yale L.J. 209 (1989). See LINGLE TEST.Cf. WHITE MODEL.

MARITIME FLAVOR

maritime flavor. The relation of a given case to shipping concerns. • This is a factor used in determining federal admiralty jurisdiction over a particular matter by analyzing whether the matter sufficiently relates to marine and shipping concerns and whether there is need for a federal response. [Cases: Admiralty 10(2), 17. C.J.S. Admiralty §§ 62–63.]

“There is perhaps no more elusive concept in the law of admiralty than ‘maritime flavor.’ ... While ‘maritime flavor’ is incapable of precise definition, certain observations may be helpful. Generally, courts find ‘maritime flavor’ in those events and transactions which are major concerns of the shipping industry. This is tempered by the realization that exercise of federal control will not necessarily promote maritime shipping with the same vigor as control by a coastal or predominantly maritime state. Since federal law will not necessarily be more favorable, courts may find 'maritime flavor' only when there is a perceived need for a uniform national rule, which can only be provided by the federal sovereign." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 23 (2d ed. 1988).

geographic market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that identifies the regions in which a firm might compete. • If a firm can raise prices or cut production without causing a quick influx of supply to the area from outside sources, that firm is operating in a distinct geographic market. [Cases: Monopolies 20(7). C.J.S. Monopolies § 120.]

“For purposes of [the Sherman Act], the relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for distribution of the relevant product. Stated differently, the relevant geographic market consists of the area from which the sellers of a particular product derive their customers, and the area within which the

gray market.A market in which the seller uses legal but sometimes unethical methods to avoid a manufacturer's distribution chain and thereby sell goods (esp. imported goods) at prices lower than those envisioned by the manufacturer. See PARALLEL IMPORTS.

“One of the most controversial areas of customs law concerns ‘gray market goods,’ goods produced abroad with authorization and payment but which are imported into unauthorized markets. Trade in gray market goods has increased dramatically in recent years, in part because fluctuating currency exchange rates create opportunities to import and sell such goods at a discount rate from local price levels.” Ralph H. product market.Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that applies to a firm's particular product by identifying all reasonable substitutes for the product and by determining whether these substitutes limit the firm's ability to affect prices. [Cases: Monopolies 20(8). C.J.S. Monopolies § 119.]

“For purposes of an antitrust claim under ... the Sherman Act, the relevant product market includes those services or commodities which are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. In order to establish the relevant product market, therefore, a plaintiff must sufficiently identify what types of products are reasonably interchangeable substitutes for the defendant's product within the appropriate area of competition.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 58, at 121 (1996).

public market.A market open to both buyers and sellers.

recognized market.A market where the items bought and sold are numerous and similar, where competitive bidding and bartering are not prevalent, and where prices paid in sales of comparable items are publicly quoted. • Examples of recognized markets include stock and commodities exchanges. Under the UCC, a secured creditor may, upon the debtor's default, sell the collateral in a recognized market without notifying the debtor. Such a sale is presumed to be commercially reasonable.

relevant market.Antitrust. A market that is capable of being monopolized — that is, a market in which a firm can raise prices above the competitive level without losing so many sales that the price increase would be unprofitable. • The relevant market includes both the product market and the geographic market. [Cases: Monopolies 12(1.3). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 28–37, 52, 64–66.]

marketability test.Mining law. The principle that, for someone to obtain a patent on a mining claim on federal land, there must be a showing that a reasonably prudent person could extract and market the claimed mineral at a profit, and that at the time of discovery, a large enough market for the mineral existed to attract the efforts of a reasonably prudent person. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 39. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 114, 129–130.]

I, § 8, cl. 3 of the U.S. Constitution — disallows most state regulation of, or discrimination against, interstate commerce. But if the state is participating in the market instead of regulating it, the Dormant Commerce Clause analysis does not apply, and the state activity will generally stand. See Dormant Commerce Clause under COMMERCE CLAUSE. [Cases: Commerce 56. C.J.S. Commerce §§ 4, 38, 63, 73, 90, 93.]

MARKETPLACE OF IDEAS

See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET SHARE .

“In economic terms, market power is the ability to raise prices without a total loss of sales; without market power, consumers shop around to find a rival offering a better deal.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 49, at 110 n.87 (1996).

The percentage of the market for a product that a firm supplies, usu. calculated by dividing the firm's output by the total market output. • In antitrust law, market share is used to measure a firm's market power, and if the share is high enough — generally 70% or more — then the firm may be guilty of monopolization. See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET POWER. [Cases: Monopolies 12(1.3). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 28–37, 52, 64–66.]

MARKET-SHARE LIABILITY

Cir. 1995) (en banc), aff'd, 517 U.S. 370, 116 S.Ct. 1384 (1996). • In the namesake decision, the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals held that the construction of patent claims — and therefore the scope of the patentee's rights — is a question of law. MARKUSH CLAIM

Markush claim.See PATENT CLAIM.

MARKUSH DOCTRINE

Markush doctrine (mahr-k<<schwa>>sh).Patents. An exception to the policy against the use of alternative language in claims, by which in certain claims (esp. those involving chemical components) a claimant can use an alternative, subgeneric phrase when there is no applicable, commonly accepted generic expression. • Characterized by a phrase such as “selected from the group consisting of,” the claim includes a group of substances any one of which could serve the same function in the process. The term Markush comes from Dr. Eugene A. Markush, who was granted a dye-preparation patent in 1923. Ex parte Markush, 1925 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 126. See MARKUSH GROUP. [Cases: Patents 101(7).]

“The Patent Office early adopted a policy against use of alternative language in claims. Thus, a claimant could not use the specific alternative phrase ‘glass or plastic’ but could use a generic phrase (such as ‘impervious transparent material’) that would cover effectively the desired alternatives. The Markush doctrine developed as an exception .... With chemical compounds there may be no suitable phrase to cover the alternatives. Under limited circumstances a claimant could use an artificial or coined subgeneric group in the form of ‘material selected from the group consisting of X, Y, and Z.’ ” 2 Donald S. Chisum, Patents§ 8.06[2], at 8-119 to 8-120 (1992).

MARKUSH GROUP

Markush group.Patents. A limited form of generic claim that recites an element, states that the element is a member of a group, and names the other group members, any of which could substitute for the first recited element. • All Markush group members must have at least one common property that is mainly responsible for their function in the claimed relationship. Although each material in the group is different, each must be able to serve the same function. See MARKUSH DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents 101(7).]

MARQUISATE

marquisate (mahr-kwi-sit or -zit), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The seigniorship of a marquis.

marriage, n. 1. The legal union of a couple as husband and wife. • The essentials of a valid marriage are (1) parties legally capable of contracting to marry, (2) mutual consent or agreement, and (3) an actual contracting in the form prescribed by law. Marriage has important consequences in many areas of the law, such as torts, criminal law, evidence, debtor–creditor relations, property, and contracts. — Also termed matrimony; conjugal union. [Cases: Marriage 12.1. C.J.S. Marriage § 9.]

“It has frequently been said by courts, and even by Legislatures, that marriage is a ‘civil contract.’ But to conclude from these statements that marriage ... has all, or even many, of the incidents of an ordinary private contract, would be a grave error. In fact, these statements to the effect that marriage is a ‘civil contract’ will be found, upon examination, to have been used only for the purpose of expressing the idea that marriage, in the American states, is a civil, and not a religious institution, or that ... in some states mutual consent alone without formal celebration is sufficient to constitute a valid marriage known as a common law marriage, or that, as is true in all states, the mutual consent of the parties is essential, even in the case of a ceremonial marriage.” Joseph W. Madden, Handbook of the Law of Persons and Domestic Relations § 1-3, at 2–3 (1931).

attempted marriage. See void marriage.

clandestine marriage (klan-des-tin). 1. A marriage that rests merely on the agreement of the parties. 2. A marriage entered into in a secret way, as one solemnized by an unauthorized person or without all required formalities. See Fleet marriage. [Cases: Marriage 20(1). C.J.S. Marriage §§ 21–22, 84.]

common-law marriage. A marriage that takes legal effect, without license or ceremony, when two people capable of marrying live together as husband and wife, intend to be married, and hold themselves out to others as a married couple. • The common-law marriage traces its roots to the English ecclesiastical courts, which until 1753 recognized a kind of informal marriage known as sponsalia per verba de praesenti, which was entered into without ceremony. Today a common-law marriage, which is the full equivalent of a ceremonial marriage, is authorized in 11 states and in the District of Columbia. If a common-law marriage is established in a state that recognizes such marriages, other states, even those that do not authorize common-law marriage, must give full faith and credit to the marriage. A common-law marriage can be dissolved only by annulment, divorce, or death. — Also termed consensual marriage; informal marriage. See common-law husband under HUSBAND; common-law wife under WIFE. See SPONSALIA PER VERBA DE PRAESENTI. [Cases: Marriage 13, 22. C.J.S. Marriage §§ 10, 19–20, 24–25.]

confidential marriage. In some jurisdictions (such as California), a marriage between a man and a woman in which only the two parties and the officiant are present at the ceremony. • Confidential marriages are neither witnessed nor recorded in public records. They are recorded in nonpublic records. Although rarely performed, they are generally legal. To obtain a confidential marriage, the parties must each be at least 18, must be of the opposite sex, and usu. must have lived together for an extended period. In ecclesiastical law, such a marriage is termed an occult marriage or, if performed in the strictest secrecy, a marriage of conscience.

“A few states provide for confidential marriages. This allows parties to go through all the formalities but have the records of the marriage, including the license, remain confidential.... A key practical effect of confidential marriage is to allow parties who have been living as husband and wife in a jurisdiction that does not recognize informal marriages to achieve marital status without publicity. However, it does not relate back to the time when the parties started holding themselves out as a married couple and thus it can have consequences in determining the extent of marital or community property or various other rights.” Walter Wadlington & Raymond C. O'Brien, Family Law in Perspective 26 (2001).

consensual marriage. Marriage by consent alone, without any formal process. See common-law marriage. [Cases: Marriage 18. C.J.S. Marriage §§ 19–20, 36.]

consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic official of the United States. • Consular marriages are recognized in some jurisdictions. [Cases: Marriage 27. C.J.S. Marriage § 31.]

covenant marriage. A special type of marriage in which the parties agree to more stringent requirements for marriage and divorce than are otherwise imposed by state law for ordinary marriages. • In the late 1990s, several states (beginning with Louisiana: see Acts 1997, No. 1380, § 5) passed laws providing for covenant marriages. The requirements vary, but most of these laws require couples who opt for covenant marriage to undergo premarital counseling. A divorce will be granted only after the couple has undergone marital counseling and has been separated for a specified period (usu. at least 18 months). The divorce prerequisites typically can be waived with proof that a spouse has committed adultery, been convicted of a felony, abandoned the family for at least one year, or physically or sexually abused the other spouse or a child. — Also termed (in slang) high-test marriage.

cross-marriage. A marriage by a brother and sister to two people who are also brother and sister.

dead marriage. A marriage whose substance has disintegrated; a marriage that has irretrievably broken down.

de facto marriage (di fak-toh). A marriage that, despite the parties' living as husband and wife, is defective for some reason. [Cases: Marriage 12. C.J.S. Marriage § 9.]

defunct marriage. A marriage in which both parties, by their conduct, indicate their intent to no longer be married. [Cases: Husband and Wife 272(1).]

Fleet marriage. Hist. 1. A clandestine ceremonial marriage performed in the 17th or 18th century in the Fleet prison in London by a chaplain who had been imprisoned for debt. 2. A clandestine ceremonial marriage performed by unscrupulous itinerant clergymen in the area in London near the Fleet Prison. • Parliament attempted to stop the practice, but it was not until the statute of 26 Geo. 2, ch. 33, declaring marriages performed outside public chapels or churches to be void and punishable as a felony, that the practice ceased.

fraudulent marriage. A marriage based on a misrepresentation regarding some issue of fundamental importance to the innocent party, who relies on the misrepresentation in the decision to marry. • The misrepresentation must concern something of fundamental importance to a marriage, such as religious beliefs, the ability to have sexual relations, or the ability or desire to have children. Cf. sham marriage.

A sham marriage in which a U.S. citizen marries a foreign citizen for the sole purpose of allowing the foreign citizen to become a permanent U.S. resident. • The Marriage Fraud Amendments were enacted to regulate marriages entered into for the purpose of circumventing U.S. immigration laws. 8 USCA §§ 1154 (h), 1255(e). See sham marriage.

Gretna Green marriage. A marriage entered into in a jurisdiction other than where the parties reside to avoid some legal impediment that exists where they live; a runaway marriage. • Gretna Green, a Scottish village close to the English border, served as a convenient place for eloping English couples to wed since in Scots law parties over 16 did not need parental consent.

“A ‘Gretna-Green marriage’ was a marriage solemnized in Scotland by parties who went there to avoid the delay and formalities required in England.... In the United States, the term describes marriages celebrated between residents of a State who go to a place beyond and yet near to the boundary line of an adjoining State, on account of some advantage afforded by the law of that State.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 496 (1889).

handfast marriage. 1. Hist. A marriage, often lacking only solemnization by clergy, characterized by the couple's joining of hands to conclude a marriage contract. 2. Hist. A betrothal with all the binding effects of a marriage, including conjugal rights and cohabitation, followed by a later formal marriage. 3. A trial or probationary marriage wherein the couple agrees to cohabit and behave as spouses for a definite period, usu. one year, at the end of which they will mutually decide to separate or go through a permanently binding ceremony. • The legal status of such a trial marriage is unsettled, as many are initiated with a ritual ceremony including an exchange of vows before a presiding officer legally empowered to perform marriages, yet the couple intends to remain free to end the relationship without legal proceedings. Cf. marriage in jest; common-law marriage. 4. A binding form of marriage practiced by some modern pagan religions. • Unlike in sense 3, such marriages are entered into with the expectation of permanent duration. — Also termed (in senses 3 & 4) handfasting.

Courts have usu. found these marriages to be binding for all purposes. Cf. sham marriage; green-card marriage.

morganatic marriage (mor-g<<schwa>>-nat-ik). Hist. A marriage between a man of superior status to a woman of inferior status, with the stipulation that the wife and her children have no claims to the husband's title or possessions. • By extension, the term later referred to the marriage of a woman of superior status to a man of inferior status. The concept is now limited to royal marriages. — Also termed left-handed marriage; marriage of the left hand; salic marriage.

occult marriage. Eccles. law. See confidential marriage.

plural marriage. A marriage in which one spouse is already married to someone else; a bigamous or polygamous union; POLYGAMY. [Cases: Marriage 11. C.J.S. Marriage § 18.]

putative marriage (pyoo-t<<schwa>>-tiv). A marriage in which either the husband or the wife believes in good faith that the two are married, but for some technical reason they are not formally married (as when the ceremonial official was not authorized to perform a marriage). • A putative marriage is typically treated as valid to protect the innocent spouse. The concept of a putative marriage was adopted from the Napoleonic Code in those states having a civil-law tradition, such as California, Louisiana, and Texas. This type of marriage is also recognized in the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. The legal rule by which putative marriages exist is sometimes referred to as the putative-spouse doctrine. — Also termed putative matrimony. [Cases: Marriage 12. C.J.S. Marriage § 9.]

same-sex marriage. The ceremonial union of two people of the same sex; a marriage or marriage-like relationship between two women or two men. • The United States government and most American states do not recognize same-sex marriages, even if legally contracted in another U.S. state or in a foreign country such as Canada, so couples usu. do not acquire the legal status of spouses. But same-sex couples have successfully challenged the laws against same-sex marriage. See Goodridge v. Dept. of Pub. Health, 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003). Cf. Baehr v. Lewin, 852 P.2d 44 (Haw. 1993); Baehr v. Miike, 994 P.2d 566 (Haw. 1999); Baker v. State, 744 A.2d 864 (Vt. 1999). — Also termed gay marriage; homosexual marriage. Cf. CIVIL COMMITMENT(2); CIVIL UNION; DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIP.

Scotch marriage. Scots law. A marriage by consensual contract, without the necessity of a formal ceremony. • Until 1940, Scots law retained the medieval canon-law forms of marriage per verba de praesenti and per verba de futuro subsequente copula. These promises constituted irregular but valid marriages. Scots law still retains the irregular marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute. No ceremony needs to be proved but, after the death of one spouse, the surviving spouse or any child can obtain a court's confirmation that a marriage existed, based on the general belief of neighbors, friends, and family. [Cases: Marriage 20(1). C.J.S. Marriage §§ 21–22, 84.]

sham marriage. A purported marriage in which all the formal requirements are met or seemingly met, but in which the parties go through the ceremony with no intent of living together as husband and wife. Cf. green-card marriage; fraudulent marriage; limited-purpose marriage. [Cases: Aliens 53.4. C.J.S. Aliens §§ 78, 81, 114, 142–143, 145–148, 217.]

voidable marriage. A marriage that is initially invalid but that remains in effect unless terminated by court order. • For example, a marriage is voidable if either party is underage or otherwise legally incompetent, or if one party used fraud, duress, or force to induce the other party to enter the marriage. The legal imperfection in such a marriage can be inquired into only during the lives of both spouses, in a proceeding to obtain a judgment declaring it void. A voidable marriage can be ratified once the impediment to a legal marriage has been removed. [Cases: Marriage 53–54. C.J.S. Marriage §§ 43–45.]

void marriage. A marriage that is invalid from its inception, that cannot be made valid, and that can be terminated by either party without obtaining a divorce or annulment. • For example, a marriage is void if the parties are too closely related or if either party is already married. A void marriage does not exist, has never existed, and needs no formal act to be dissolved — although a judicial declaration may be obtained. — Also termed attempted marriage. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE(1). [Cases: Marriage 53–54. C.J.S. Marriage §§ 43–45.]

2.Roman law. A consensual agreement between a man and a woman to be married. • The consent of both parties and of any paterfamilias was necessary. Other requirements were the attainment of puberty and legal capacity (conubium). If either or both withdrew consent to be married, the marriage ended in divorce; no specific grounds were necessary. In the Christian empire, divorce without adequate grounds was penalized. 3.MARRIAGE CEREMONY. — marital,adj.

See COVERTURE; MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS .

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS

married women's property acts.(sometimes cap.) Statutes enacted to remove a married woman's disabilities; esp. statutes that abolished the common-law prohibitions against a married woman's contracting, suing and being sued, or acquiring, holding, and conveying property in her own right, free from any restrictions by her husband. • For example, these acts abolished the spousal-unity doctrine. See MERGER DOCTRINE OF HUSBAND AND WIFE ; LEGAL-UNITIES DOCTRINE.

“The women's rights movement existed throughout the nineteenth century. It succeeded in partially reducing the legal disabilities of married women during the second half of that century by bringing about the enactment in all states of Married Women's Property Acts. The purpose of these Acts was to place married women on an equal footing with their husbands with respect to contracts, earnings, the ownership of property and the right to sue or be sued, but as they were construed by the courts they frequently failed to accomplish the intended reforms.” Homer H. Clark Jr. & Ann Laquer Estin, Domestic Relations: Cases and Problems 8 (6th ed. 2000).

A body of firm, strictly enforced rules that are imposed because of a perception by the country's rulers that civil government has failed, or might fail, to function. • Martial law is usu. imposed when the rulers foresee an invasion, insurrection, economic collapse, or other breakdown of the rulers' desired social order. [Cases: War and National Emergency 31. C.J.S. War and National Defense §§ 47–48.]

“Martial law is the public law of necessity. Necessity calls it forth, necessity justifies its exercise, and necessity measures the extent and degree to which it may be employed. That necessity is no formal, artificial, legalistic concept but an actual and factual one: it is the necessity of taking action to safeguard the state against insurrection, riot, disorder, or public calamity. What constitutes necessity is a question of fact in each case.” Frederick B. Wiener, A Practical Manual of Martial Law 16 (1940).

“[M]artial law is nothing more and nothing less than an application of the common law doctrine that force, to whatever degree necessary, may be used to repress illegal force. Martial law is the public right of self-defense against a danger threatening the order or the existence of the state. Where the ordinary civil authorities — the police — are unable to resist or subdue a disturbance, additional force, military in nature, may be applied. The extent of military force used depends in each instance upon the extent of the disturbance.” Id. at 16–17.

MCDONNELL DOUGLAS TEST

McDonnell Douglas test. Employment law. The principle for applying a shifting burden of proof in employment-discrimination cases, essentially requiring the plaintiff to come forward with evidence of discrimination and the defendant to come forward with evidence showing that the employment action complained of was taken for nondiscriminatory reasons. • Under this test, the plaintiff is first required to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, as by showing that the plaintiff is a member of a protected group and suffered an adverse employment action. If the plaintiff satisfies that burden, then the defendant must articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employment action complained of. If the defendant satisfies that burden, then the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's stated reason is just a pretext for discrimination and that discrimination was the real reason for the employment action. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S.Ct. 1817 (1973). [Cases: Civil Rights 1118, 1536. C.J.S. Civil Rights §§ 25, 168–169.]

The doctrine that a person is not criminally responsible for an act when a mental disability prevented the person from knowing either the nature and quality of the act or whether the act was right or wrong. • The federal courts and most states have adopted this test in some form. McNaghten's Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (H.L. 1843). — Also spelled McNaughten rules; M'Naghten rules; M'Naughten rules. — Also termed right-and-wrong test; right–wrong test. See INSANITY DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law 48.]

“Four points stand out and should be understood whenever reference to M'Naghten is made other than in regard to procedure. (1) It applies only in case of ‘a defect of reason, from disease of the mind’ and without this the following do not apply except that ‘disease’ as so used will be interpreted to include congenital defect or traumatic injury. (2) If, because of this ‘defect of reason,’ the defendant did not know what he was doing he is not guilty of crime. (3) Even if the defendant knew what he was doing he is not guilty of crime if, because of this 'defect of reason,' he did not know he was doing wrong. (4) If the defendant acted under an insane delusion, and was not otherwise insane, his accountability to the criminal law is the same as if the facts were as they seemed to him to be." Rollin M. “The Proculians held that specification, by changing the form of the raw material, changed its nature, and replaced it by something quite new, and that, therefore, the maker of the new article was the owner of it, and not the person to whom belonged the material of which it was made. The Sabinians, on the other hand, were of opinion that the material retained its original nature, and continued to subsist, notwithstanding its change of form, and that, accordingly, the new article belonged to the proprietor of the material. Neither of these extreme views were adopted by Justinian, who followed a middle opinion, based on this distinction: ‘If the thing made can be reduced to its former rude materials, then the owner of the materials is also considered the owner of the thing made; but if the thing cannot be so reduced, then he who made it is the owner of it.’ (Just. mediation (mee-dee-ay-sh<<schwa>>n), n.1. A method of nonbinding dispute resolution involving a neutral third party who tries to help the disputing parties reach a mutually agreeable solution; CONCILIATION. — Also termed case evaluation; facilitated negotiation. [Cases: Arbitration 1–47. C.J.S. Arbitration §§ 2–90, 92–93, 107, 109–110, 179–188; Architects § 25.] 2. Int'l law. A process whereby a neutral country helps other countries peacefully resolve disputes between them. Cf. ARBITRATION. — mediate (mee-dee-ayt), vb. — mediatory (mee-dee-<<schwa>>-tor-ee), adj.

“The distinction between mediation and conciliation is widely debated among those interested in ADR, arbitration, and international diplomacy. Some suggest that conciliation is ‘a nonbinding arbitration,’ whereas mediation is merely ‘assisted negotiation.’ Others put it this way: conciliation involves a third party's trying to bring together disputing parties to help them reconcile their differences, whereas mediation goes further by allowing the third party to suggest terms on which the dispute might be resolved. Still others reject these attempts at differentiation and contend that there is no consensus about what the two words mean — that they are generally interchangeable. Though a distinction would be convenient, those who argue that usage indicates a broad synonymy are most accurate.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 554 (2d ed. 1995).

MEGAN'S LAW

Megan's law (meg-*<<schwa>>n or may-g<<schwa>>*n). All states have these laws, but only some require community notification (as by publishing offenders' pictures in local newspapers); in others, people must call a state hotline or submit names of persons they suspect. #### MELSON FORMULA

Melson formula.Family law. A method of calculating a noncustodial parent's child-support obligation to ensure that (1) neither parent falls below the poverty level in meeting child-support obligations, and (2) a child of a wealthier noncustodial parent shares in that parent's higher standard of living. • Named for Judge Elwood F. Melson of Delaware Family Court, the formula has been adopted in several states, such as Delaware, Hawaii, Montana, and West Virginia. The formula works as follows. A self-support reserve is first deducted from the parent-obligor's net income. Next, a primary support amount per child is calculated at an established subsistence level, added to actual work-related child-care expenses, and allocated between the parents. After deducting the support obligor's self-support reserve and pro rata share of the child's adjusted primary support amount, a percentage of the obligor's remaining income is allocated to additional child support as a cost-of-living adjustment. Total child support is determined by adding together the noncustodial parent's share of primary support and the standard-of-living allowance.

“This clause was first introduced into the English [marine-insurance] policies about the year 1749. Before that time the insurer was liable for every injury, however small, that happened to the thing insured.... The memorandum clause ... usually declares that the enumerated articles, and any other articles that are perishable in their own nature, shall be free from average under a given rate, unless general, or the ship be stranded. In consequence of this exception, all small partial losses, however inconsiderable, are to be borne by a general average, provided they were incurred in a case proper for such an average ....” 3 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *294–95 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

[Law Latin “guilty mind”] The state of mind that the prosecution, to secure a conviction, must prove that a defendant had when committing a crime; criminal intent or recklessness <the mens rea for theft is the intent to deprive the rightful owner of the property>. • Mens rea is the second of two essential elements of every crime at common law, the other being the actus reus. — Also termed mental element; criminal intent; guilty mind. Pl. mentes reae (men-teez ree-ee). Cf. ACTUS REUS. [Cases: Criminal Law 20. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 31–33, 35–39; Negligence § 913.]

“There are only two states of mind which constitute mens rea, and they are intention, and recklessness.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 29–30 (16th ed. 1952).

“Most English lawyers would however now agree with Sir James Fitzjames Stephen that the expression mens rea is unfortunate, though too firmly established to be expelled, just because it misleadingly suggests that, in general, moral culpability is essential to a crime, and they would assent to the criticism expressed by a later judge that the true translation of mens rea is 'an intention to do the act which is made penal by statute or by the common law.' [Allard v. Selfridge, (1925) 1 K.B. at 137 (per Shearman, J.).]” H.L.A. Hart, “Legal Responsibility and Excuses,” in Punishment and Responsibility 28, 36 (1968).

“Some years ago the mens-rea doctrine was criticized on the ground that the Latin phrase is ‘misleading.’ If the words ‘mens rea’ were to be regarded as self-explanatory they would be open to this objection, but they are to be considered merely as a convenient label which may be attached to any psychical fact sufficient for criminal guilt (in connection with socially harmful conduct). This includes a field too complex for any brief self-explanatory phrase, and since it is important to have some sort of dialectic shorthand to express the idea, this time-honored label will do as well as any.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 826–27 (3d ed. 1982).

“Thus, under king Richard I, in his parliament holden at Westminster, A.D. 1197, it was ordained that there shall be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and measures shall be committed to certain persons in every city and borough .... In king John's time this ordinance of king Richard was frequently dispensed with for money which occasioned a provision to be made for enforcing it .... These original standards were called pondus regis, and mensura domini regis; and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the exchequer, and all weights and measures to be made conformable thereto.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 265–66 (1765).

It was observed in many midland counties and those bordering on Wales. — Also spelled merchenlage (m<<schwa>>r-sh<<schwa>>n-law). — Also termed lex merciorum (leks m<<schwa>>r-shee-or-<<schwa>>m); Mercian law (m<<schwa>>r-shee-<<schwa>>n-orm<<schwa>>r-sh<<schwa>>n). See DANELAW; WEST-SAXON LAW.

“[A]bout the beginning of the eleventh century there were three principal systems of laws prevailing in different districts .... The Mercen-Lage, or Mercian laws, which were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales; the retreat of the ancient Britons; and therefore very probably intermixed with the British or Druidical customs.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 65 (1765).

MERCES

merces (m<<schwa>>r-seez), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. An agreed payment for a thing or services specifically contracted for; rent, hire.

“There must be consent, a thing let, and an agreed payment (merces) .... The merces must be certain and Justinian's texts say that, as in sale, it must be money. But there is not the same difficulty here, and Gaius does not state such a rule. It is possible that it did not exist in classical law and, even under Justinian, some cases cannot be reconciled with the rule. The rent of land might be in produce and even a fraction of the crop. This last conflicts with the rule of Gaius that it must be certain: it is held by some writers that the text is interpolated, by others that the relation was not really locatio conductio, but societas (partnership). The merces was not usually a lump sum: more often it was a series of periodical payments.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 289–90 (2d ed. 1939).

2. A reward, esp. for a gratuitous service. Cf. HONORARIUM. “A recompense paid for any kind of services, without a preceding agreement (e.g., for saving one's life) is also called merces.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 581 (1953).

merchandise (m<<schwa>>r-ch<<schwa>>n-dIz also -dIs). 1. In general, a movable object involved in trade or traffic; that which is passed from hand to hand by purchase and sale. 2. In particular, that which is dealt in by merchants; an article of trading or the class of objects in which trade is carried on by physical transfer; collectively, mercantile goods, wares or commodities, or any subjects of regular trade, animate as well as inanimate. • This definition generally excludes real estate, ships, intangibles such as software, and the like, and does not apply to money, stocks, bonds, notes, or other mere representatives or measures of actual commodities or values. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) article of merchandise. 3. Purchase and sale; trade; traffic, dealing, or advantage from dealing.

MERCHANDISE BROKER

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACTS

Merchandise Marks Acts. Hist. An 1887 statute (50 & 51 Vict., ch. 28) making it a misdemeanor to fraudulently mark merchandise for sale or to sell merchandise so marked. • This statute was repealed in 1968.

MERCHANT

merchant. One whose business is buying and selling goods for profit; esp. a person or entity that holds itself out as having expertise peculiar to the goods in which it deals and is therefore held by the law to a higher standard of expertise than that of a nonmerchant. • Because the term relates solely to goods, a supplier of services is not considered a merchant. [Cases: Sales 15.1. C.J.S. Sales § 10.]

“The definition of ‘merchant’ in [UCC] Section 2-104(1) identifies two separate but often interrelated criteria: Does the seller ‘deal in goods’ of that kind, or does the seller ‘otherwise by his occupation’ hold himself out as having special knowledge with respect to the goods? It should be emphasized that the drafters have placed these two criteria in the alternative by use of the word ‘or.’ Thus, the definition clearly catches all those who regularly sell inventory even though they may have no expertise regarding the particular product. This would include distributors, wholesalers, and retail dealers. Dealers who sell prepackaged goods containing a defect over which they have no control might be surprised to learn that they have given an implied warranty of merchantability with respect to the goods, but such is the law.” Barkley Clark & Christopher Smith, The Law of Product Warranties § 5.02[1], at 5-25 (1984).

MERCHANTABLE

merchantable (m<<schwa>>r-ch<<schwa>>nt-<<schwa>>-b<<schwa>>l), adj. Fit for sale in the usual course of trade at the usual selling prices; MARKETABLE. — Also termed salable. An appraiser is appointed only when an importer requests one.

MERCHANT EXCEPTION

merchant exception. Contracts. In a sale of goods, an exemption from the statute of frauds whereby a contract between merchants is enforceable if, within a reasonable time after they reach an oral agreement, a written confirmation of the terms is sent, to which the recipient does not object within ten days of receiving it. • The only effect of failing to object to the written confirmation is that the recipient will be precluded from relying on the statute of frauds — or the lack of a formal, written agreement — as a defense to a breach-of-contract claim. The party seeking to enforce an agreement must still prove that an agreement was reached. UCC § 2-201(2). [Cases: Frauds, Statute of 127.]

MERCHANT LESSEE

Hayden*, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642 (1967); Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b). [Cases: Searches and Seizures 102. C.J.S. Searches and Seizures §§ 132–134.]

mere right.An abstract right in property, without possession or even the right of possession. — Also termed jus merum; merum jus; meer dreit.

“The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently spoken of in our books under the name of the mere right, jus merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally divested, and put to a right. A person in this situation may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself: but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumptive evidence of that right is strongly in favour of his antagonist; who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession .... The heir therefore in this case has only a mere right, and must be strictly held to the proof of it, in order to recover the lands.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 197–98 (1766).

MERGEE

mergee (m<<schwa>>r-jee). A participant in a corporate merger.

MERGER

merger. 1. The act or an instance of combining or uniting. 2.Contracts. The substitution of a superior form of contract for an inferior form, as when a written contract supersedes all oral agreements and prior understandings. [Cases: Contracts 245. C.J.S. Contracts § 416.]

“Where two parties have made a simple contract for any purpose, and afterwards have entered into an identical engagement by deed, the simple contract is merged in the deed and becomes extinct. This extinction of a lesser in a higher security, like the extinction of a lesser in a greater interest in lands, is called merger.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 85 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3.Contracts. The replacement of a contractual duty or of a duty to compensate with a new duty between the same parties, based on different operative facts, for the same performance or for a performance differing only in liquidating a duty that was previously unliquidated. 4.Property. The absorption of a lesser estate into a greater estate when both become the same person's property. Cf. SURRENDER(3). [Cases: Estates in Property 10.C.J.S. Estates §§ 129, 152.]“[I]t would be absurd to allow a person to have two distinct estates, immediately expectant on each other, while one of them includes the time of both .... There would be an absolute incompatibility in a person filling, at the same time, the characters of tenant and reversioner in one and the same estate; and hence the reasonableness, and even necessity, of the doctrine of merger.” 3 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *99 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

5.Criminal law. The absorption of a lesser included offense into a more serious offense when a person is charged with both crimes, so that the person is not subject to double jeopardy. • For example, a defendant cannot be convicted of both attempt (or solicitation) and the completed crime — though merger does not apply to conspiracy and the completed crime. — Also termed merger of offenses. [Cases: Criminal Law 30. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 14, 16–18.] 6.Civil procedure. The effect of a judgment for the plaintiff, which absorbs any claim that was the subject of the lawsuit into the judgment, so that the plaintiff's rights are confined to enforcing the judgment. Cf. BAR(5). [Cases: Judgment 582. C.J.S. Judgments § 704.] 7. The joining of the procedural aspects of law and equity. 8.The absorption of one organization (esp. a corporation) that ceases to exist into another that retains its own name and identity and acquires the assets and liabilities of the former. • Corporate mergers must conform to statutory formalities and usu. must be approved by a majority of the outstanding shares. Cf. CONSOLIDATION(4); BUYOUT. [Cases: Corporations 581. C.J.S. Corporations §§ 792–797.]

conglomerate merger. A merger between unrelated businesses that are neither competitors nor customers or suppliers of each other. [Cases: Monopolies 20(9). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 110, 114.]

“A merger which is neither vertical nor horizontal is a conglomerate merger. A pure conglomerate merger is one in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Mixed conglomerate mergers involve horizontal or vertical relationships, such as the acquisition of a firm producing the same product as the acquirer but selling it in a different geographical market, which is not a horizontal merger because the merging companies are not competitors ....” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 169, at 226 (1996).

de facto merger (di fak-toh). A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but that is cast in the form of an acquisition or sale of assets or voting stock. • Although such a transaction does not meet the statutory requirements for a merger, a court will generally treat it as a statutory merger for purposes of the appraisal remedy. [Cases: Corporations 445.1. C.J.S. Corporations § 657.]

short-form merger. A statutory merger that is less expensive and time-consuming than an ordinary statutory merger, usu. permitted when a subsidiary merges into a parent that already owns most of the subsidiary's shares. • Such a merger is generally accomplished when the parent adopts a merger resolution, mails a copy of the plan to the subsidiary's record shareholders, and files the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state, who issues a certificate of merger.

statutory merger. A merger provided by and conducted according to statutory requirements.

stock merger. A merger involving one company's purchase of another company's capital stock.

triangular merger. A merger in which the target corporation is absorbed into the acquiring corporation's subsidiary, with the target's shareholders receiving stock in the parent corporation. — Also termed subsidiary merger; forward triangular merger.

upstream merger.A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent.

vertical merger.A merger between businesses occupying different levels of operation for the same product, such as between a manufacturer and a retailer; a merger of buyer and seller.

9. The merger of rights and duties in the same person, resulting in the extinction of obligations; esp. the blending of the rights of a creditor and debtor, resulting in the extinguishment of the creditor's right to collect the debt. • As originally developed in Roman law, a merger resulted from the marriage of a debtor and creditor, or when a debtor became the creditor's heir. — Also termed confusion; confusion of debts; confusion of rights. Cf. CONFUSION OF TITLES.
10.The absorption of a contract into a court order, so that an agreement between the parties (often a marital agreement incident to a divorce or separation) loses its separate identity as an enforceable contract when it is incorporated into a court order.

MERGER CLAUSE

MERGER DOCTRINE

merger doctrine. 1.Copyright. The principle that since an idea cannot be copyrighted, neither can an expression that must inevitably be used in order to express the idea. • When the idea and expression are very difficult to separate, they are said to merge. For example, courts have refused copyright protection for business-ledger forms (Baker v. Selden, 101 U.S. 99 (1879)), and for contest rules that were copied almost verbatim (Morrissey v. Procter & Gamble, 379 F.2d 675 (1st Cir. 1967)). — Also termed Baker v. Selden doctrine. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 4.5. C.J.S. #### METUS metus (mee-t<<schwa>>s), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Fear of imminent danger; apprehension of serious danger, esp. in the form of duress to force a person to do something; the use of threats to bring about some end. • Metus was more comprehensive than duress is in Anglo-American law. It included fear of any evil that was serious enough to affect a reasonable person.

“Fear (metus) had the same effect as fraud as regards the avoidance of the contract. It might be set up by way of defence (exceptio metus) or be the ground of restitutio in integrum, or give rise to an action (actio metus) .... It was not any kind of fear which grounded this action. The evil threatened must be of a serious character ....” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 352 (4th ed. 1956).

2. A threat that diminishes the value of another's property. • In both senses, a victim was allowed to seek fourfold damages against the perpetrator. Cf. DOLUS.

It was feared that their own, or their relatives', interest in the result of the cause might lead them to give false evidence, in order to bring about a favourable decision. This, however, is no longer law. The desire to obtain all the light possible on the facts in dispute, has overcome the metus perjurii.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 353–54 (4th ed. 1894).

Cf. summary jury trial under TRIAL.

“The idea behind the minitrial is that the parties can resolve a dispute on their own more efficiently if litigant representatives with settling authority are educated about the strengths and weaknesses of each side, giving summary presentations of their best cases under the eye of a jointly selected neutral advisor. After each case is presented, the parties meet privately to negotiate an agreement. The minitrial is confidential and nonbinding. Usually, no transcript is made of the proceeding. Minitrials have had some success in saving both time and money.” Alfred C. Aman Jr. & William T. Mayton, Administrative Law 291 (2d ed. 2001).

It may also be applied to a group that has been traditionally discriminated against or socially suppressed, even if its members are in the numerical majority in an area. [Cases: Civil Rights 1007. minority discount. A reduction in the value of a closely held business's shares that are owned by someone who has only a minority interest in the business. • The concept underlying a minority discount is recognition that controlling shares — those owned by someone who can control the business — are worth more in the market than noncontrolling shares. But when dissenting shareholders object to a corporate act, such as a merger, and become entitled to have their shares appraised and bought by the corporation, many courts hold that incorporating a minority discount into the valuation of the dissenters' shares is inequitable and is not permitted. See APPRAISAL REMEDY . [Cases: Corporations 182.4(5), 584. C.J.S. Corporations §§ 348, 799–801.]

“The minutes of an organization include a record of all official actions taken, the presiding officer, the presence of a quorum, and information showing that the meeting was duly called and thus legal. The other contents of the minutes will depend upon the degree of detail desired.... The minutes should be an official record of actions taken by the organization, not a transcript of what individuals say in meetings.” Ray E. Keeseey, Modern Parliamentary Procedure 84 (1994).

“The record of the proceedings of a deliberative assembly is usually called the minutes, or sometimes — particularly in legislative bodies — the journal. In an ordinary society, unless the minutes are to be published, they should contain mainly a record of what was done at the meeting, not what was said by the members. The minutes should never reflect the secretary's opinion, favorable or otherwise, on anything said or done.” Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 48, at 451 (10th ed. 2000).

3. Scots law. Written forms for preserving evidence. “When it is necessary to preserve evidence of any incidental judicial act or statement, this is done in the Court of Session, and also in the inferior courts, by a minute. Thus, where the pursuer restricts his libel, or makes a reference to the defender's oath ... this is done by a minute. Strictly speaking, those minutes ought to be prepared by the clerk of court, as their form imports. They commence with the name of the counsel ... and purport to be a statement made by him ...." If the suspect is not advised of these rights or does not validly waive them, any evidence obtained during the interrogation cannot be used against the suspect at trial (except for impeachment purposes). Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602 (1966). [Cases: Criminal Law 412.2(3), 517.2(3), 518. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 918–922.]

MIRROR-IMAGE RULE

mirror-image rule. Contracts. The doctrine that the acceptance of a contractual offer must be positive, unconditional, unequivocal, and unambiguous, and must not change, add to, or qualify the terms of the offer; the common-law principle that for a contract to be formed, the terms of an acceptance must correspond exactly with those of the offer. • In modern commercial contexts, the mirror-image rule has been replaced by a UCC provision that allows parties to enforce their agreement despite minor discrepancies between the offer and the acceptance. The rule still applies to international sales contracts governed by the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sales of Goods (article 19). — Also termed ribbon-matching rule. See BATTLE OF THE FORMS . [Cases: Contracts 24. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 52–53.]

“If an offeree purports to accept an offer but in doing so adds various conditions and qualifications of his own, is the acceptance binding on the offeror, at least in part? Generally speaking, the answer is no: the common law rule, reflected in Restatement Section 59, is that a statement of acceptance is effective only if it is a mirror image of the offer and expresses unconditional assent to all of the terms and conditions imposed by the offeror.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 54 (1990).

Associated Press*, 248 U.S. 215, 39 S.Ct. 68 (1918). • The elements of misappropriation are: (1) the plaintiff must have invested time, money, or effort to extract the information; (2) the defendant must have taken the information with no similar investment; and (3) the plaintiff must have suffered a competitive injury because of the taking. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 108. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property § 107.] 3. The doctrine giving rise to such a tort claim. — misappropriate,vb.

“The doctrine of ‘misappropriation,’ which is a distinct branch of unfair competition, ... has been applied to a variety of situations in which the courts have sensed that one party was dealing ‘unfairly’ with another, but which were not covered by the three established statutory systems protecting intellectual property: copyright, patent, and trademark/deception as to origin.” U.S. Golf Ass'n v. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817 (1967). But for years, such laws technically remained on the books in some states. “ ‘Misdemeanor’ was the label ultimately adopted to apply to all offenses other than treason or felony. The term included a wide variety of wrongs and misprisions. Many of the substantive legal principles and procedures applicable to felonies were not applied in the case of misdemeanors. The difference in treatment between felonies and misdemeanors has carried over from common law to current practice, and today misdemeanors are often treated differently than felonies [in] the procedures employed in trying such cases as well as [in] the consequences of a conviction. The traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors has been abolished in England.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 15 (3d ed. 1982).

“But every defeated plaintiff could be amerced ‘for a false claim.’ Incidentally too any falsehood ... that is, any fraudulent misuse of the machinery of the law, would be punished by imprisonment. Then again every default in appearance brought an amercement on the defaulter and his pledges. Every mistake in pleading, every miskening... brought an amercement on the pleader if the mistake was to be retrieved. A litigant who hoped to get to the end of his suit without an amercement must have been a sanguine man; for he was playing a game of forfeits.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. misnomer (mis-noh-m<<schwa>>r). A mistake in naming a person, place, or thing, esp. in a legal instrument. • In federal pleading — as well as in most states — misnomer of a party can be corrected by an amendment, which will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(3). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 382; Parties 94. C.J.S. Parties § 227.]

MISPRISION

misprision of felony. Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else's felony. See 18 USCA § 4. [Cases: Compounding Offenses 1.1. C.J.S. Compounding Offenses §§ 1–3, 9, 13.]

“In fact, whatever the law may be, it is not the general custom to prosecute for misprision of felony, even where a person who knows of a felony is questioned by the police and refuses to make a statement. Indeed, Stephen, writing in the nineteenth century, regarded the offence as ‘practically obsolete’; and American courts have refused to recognise it as subsisting. But there have been four successful prosecutions in England during the last quarter-century ....” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 424 (2d ed. 1961).

negative misprision. The wrongful concealment of something that should be revealed

2. Seditious conduct against the government. 3. An official's failure to perform the duties of public office. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees 121. C.J.S. Officers and Public Employees §§ 329–334.] 4. Misunderstanding; mistake. “The word ‘misprision’ has been employed with different meanings. While Blackstone thought of it as referring to a grave misdemeanor, it seems to have been used earlier to indicate the entire field of crime below the grade of treason or felony before the word ‘misdemeanor’ became the generally accepted label for this purpose. More recently it has been said: ‘Misprision is nothing more than a word used to describe a misdemeanor which does not possess a specific name.’ [United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 789, 798 (3d Cir. 1942).] It has been associated with two specific offenses, and only these, from the earliest times. They are misprision of treason and misprision of felony, which consist of the criminal default of one in regard to the crime of another.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 572 (3d ed. 1982).

MISPRISOR

misprisor (mis-prī-z<<schwa>>r). One who commits misprision of felony.

MISREADING

MISRECITAL

misrecital. An incorrect statement of a factual matter in a contract, deed, pleading, or other instrument.

MISREPRESENTATION

misrepresentation, n. 1. The act of making a false or misleading assertion about something, usu. with the intent to deceive. • The word denotes not just written or spoken words but also any other conduct that amounts to a false assertion. [Cases: Fraud 9.] 2. The assertion so made; an assertion that does not accord with the facts. — Also termed false representation; (redundantly) false misrepresentation. Cf. REPRESENTATION(1). — misrepresent, vb.

“A misrepresentation, being a false assertion of fact, commonly takes the form of spoken or written words. Whether a statement is false depends on the meaning of the words in all the circumstances, including what may fairly be inferred from them. An assertion may also be inferred from conduct other than words. Concealment or even non-disclosure may have the effect of a misrepresentation .... [A]n assertion need not be fraudulent to be a misrepresentation. Thus a statement intended to be truthful may be a misrepresentation because of ignorance or carelessness, as when the word ‘not’ is inadvertently omitted or when inaccurate language is used. But a fraudulent misrepresentation. A false statement that is known to be false or is made recklessly — without knowing or caring whether it is true or false — and that is intended to induce a party to detrimentally rely on it. — Also termed fraudulent representation; deceit. [Cases: Fraud 8.]

“A misrepresentation is fraudulent if the maker intends his assertion to induce a party to manifest his assent and the maker (a) knows or believes that the assertion is not in accord with the facts, or (b) does not have the confidence that he states or implies in the truth of the assertion, or (c) knows that he does not have the basis that he states or implies for the assertion.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162(1) (1979).

innocent misrepresentation. A false statement that the speaker or writer does not know is false; a misrepresentation that, though false, was not made fraudulently. [Cases: Fraud 13(2).]

material misrepresentation. 1. Contracts. A false statement that is likely to induce a reasonable person to assent or that the maker knows is likely to induce the recipient to assent. [Cases: Contracts 94. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 136, 139–140, 156, 158–160, 170–171, 173–174.] 2. Torts. A false statement to which a reasonable person would attach importance in deciding how to act in the transaction in question or to which the maker knows or has reason to know that the recipient attaches some importance. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 538 (1979). [Cases: Fraud 18.]

“The materiality of a misrepresentation is determined from the viewpoint of the maker, while the justification of reliance is determined from the viewpoint of the recipient.... The requirement of materiality may be met in either of two ways. First, a misrepresentation is material if it would be likely to induce a reasonable person to manifest his assent. Second, it is material if the maker knows that for some special reason it is likely to induce the particular recipient to manifest his assent. There may be personal considerations that the recipient regards as important even though they would not be expected to affect others in his situation, and if the maker is aware of this the misrepresentation may be material even though it would not be expected to induce a reasonable person to make the proposed contract. One who preys upon another's known idiosyncrasies cannot complain if the contract is held voidable when he succeeds in what he is endeavoring to accomplish.... Although a nonfraudulent misrepresentation that is not material does not make the contract voidable under the rules stated in this Chapter, the recipient may have a claim to relief under other rules, such as those relating to breach of warranty.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162 cmt. c (1979).

MISSING-EVIDENCE RULE

missing-evidence rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails at trial to present evidence that the party controls and that would have been proper to present, the jury is entitled to infer that the evidence would have been unfavorable to that party. #### MISSING PERSON

DISAPPEARED PERSON. [Cases: Death 2. C.J.S. Death §§ 8–14.]

MISSING SHIP

MISSING-WITNESS RULE

missing-witness rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails at trial to present a witness who is available only to that party and whose testimony would have been admissible, the jury is entitled to infer that the witness's testimony would have been unfavorable to that party. [Cases: Criminal Law 317; Evidence 77; Trial 211. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 705–706; Evidence §§ 169–173; Trial §§ 501–504, 568.]

mistake, n. 1. An error, misconception, or misunderstanding; an erroneous belief. See ERROR. 2. Contracts. The situation in which either (1) the parties to a contract did not mean the same thing, or (2) at least one party had a belief that did not correspond to the facts or law. • As a result, the contract may be voidable. [Cases: Contracts 93. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 136, 147–148.]

“In this Restatement the word ‘mistake’ is used to refer to an erroneous belief. A party's erroneous belief is therefore said to be a ‘mistake’ of that party. The belief need not be an articulated one, and a party may have a belief as to a fact when he merely makes an assumption with respect to it, without being aware of alternatives. The word ‘mistake’ is not used here, as it is sometimes used in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, including the making of a contract, that is the result of such an erroneous belief. This usage is avoided here for the sake of clarity and consistency. Furthermore, the erroneous belief must relate to the facts as they exist at the time of the making of the contract. A party's prediction or judgment as to events to occur in the future, even if erroneous, is not a ‘mistake’ as that word is defined here. An erroneous belief as to the contents or effect of a writing that expresses the agreement is, however, a mistake. Mistake alone, in the sense in which the word is used here, has no legal consequences. The legal consequences of mistake in connection with the creation of contractual liability are determined by [substantive rules].” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 cmt. a (1979).

“The word mistake is generally used in the law of contracts to refer to an erroneous belief — ‘a belief that is not in accord with the facts.’ To avoid confusion, it should not be used, as it sometimes is in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, such as the making of a contract, that results from such an erroneous belief. Nor should it be used, as it sometimes is by courts and writers, to refer to what is more properly called a misunderstanding, a situation in which two parties attach different meanings to their language.” E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.2, at 619 (3d ed. 1999) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 (1979)).

The defense asserting that a defendant did not understand the criminal consequences of certain conduct. • This defense is generally not as effective as a mistake of fact.

mutual mistake. 1. A mistake in which each party misunderstands the other's intent. — Also termed bilateral mistake. [Cases: Contracts 93(5). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 149, 155.] 2. A mistake that is shared and relied on by both parties to a contract. • A court will often revise or nullify a contract based on a mutual mistake about a material term. — Also termed (in sense 2) common mistake. [Cases: Contracts 93(5); Reformation of Instruments 19. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 149, 155; Reformation of Instruments §§ 29–30.]

“The term ‘common mistake’ is more usually, but less grammatically, referred to as ‘mutual mistake’. Cheshire and Fifoot on Contract have made a heroic effort to introduce and establish the more correct term, and it does seem to be gaining ground. However, the beginner is warned that the term ‘mutual mistake’ is nearly always used by the Courts to mean what we here call ‘common mistake’.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 190 n.7 (3d ed. 1981).

unessential mistake. Contracts. A mistake that does not relate to the nature of the contents of an agreement, but only to some external circumstance, so that the mistake has no effect on the validity of the agreement. — Also termed inessential mistake; nonessential mistake; collateral mistake. [Cases: Contracts 93. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 136, 147–148.]

unilateral mistake. A mistake by only one party to a contract. • A unilateral mistake is generally not as likely to be a ground for voiding the contract as is a mutual mistake. [Cases: Contracts 93. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 136, 147–148.]

“Many issues in a lawsuit involve elements of both law and fact. Whether these be referred to as mixed questions of law and fact, or legal inferences from the facts, or the application of law to the facts, there is substantial authority that they are not protected by the ‘clearly erroneous’ rule and are freely reviewable. This principle has been applied to antitrust violations, bankruptcy, contracts, copyright, taxation, and to other areas of the law.” 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2589, at 608–11 (2d ed. 1995).

Mobile Gas Serv. Corp.*, 350 U.S. 332, 76 S.Ct. 373 (1956); Federal Power Comm'n v. Sierra Pac. Power Co., 350 U.S. 348, 76 S.Ct. 368 (1956). — Also termed Sierra–Mobile doctrine. Movable things follow the person — i.e., the law of the person. • This is the general principle that rights of ownership and transfer of movable property are determined by the law of the owner's domicile. [Cases: Property 6; Taxation 98.C.J.S. Conflict of Laws §§ 66–70, 74, 77, 80; Taxation §§ 153–157, 160, 283.]

“The maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is the exception rather than the rule, and is probably to be confined to certain special classes of general assignments such as marriage settlements and devolutions on death and bankruptcy.” Handel v. Slatford, 1953 Q.B. 248, 257 (Eng. C.A.).

“Under the influence of Savigny many Continental systems in the mid-nineteenth century led the way for Anglo-American law in limiting the operation of the doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam to universal assignments of movables, adopting for particular assignments the single principle of the lex situs of the movable.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 457 (7th ed. 1974).

MOCK TRIAL

mock trial. 1. A fictitious trial organized to allow law students, or sometimes lawyers, to practice the techniques of trial advocacy. 2. A fictitious trial, arranged by a litigant's attorney, to assess trial strategy, to estimate the case's value or risk, and to evaluate the case's strengths and weaknesses. • In this procedure, people from the relevant jury pool are hired to sit as mock jurors who, after a condensed presentation of both sides, deliberate and reach a verdict (often while being observed by the participants behind a one-way glass). The jurors may later be asked specific questions about various arguments, techniques, and other issues. Because the mock jurors usu. do not know which side has hired them, their candid views are thought to be helpful in formulating trial strategies. Cf. MOOT COURT.

“[Modus vivendi] is an instrument of toleration looking towards a settlement, by preparing for or laying down the basis of a method of living together with a problem or by bridging over some difficulty pending a permanent settlement. Normally it is used for provisional and interim arrangements which ultimately are to be replaced by a formal agreement of a more permanent and detailed character. There is no clear distinction of a modus vivendi from other treaties. The most distinguishing feature is its provisional character; nevertheless a modus vivendi may be exercised for an indefinite period of time if it is prolonged sine die or if a definitive solution to the problem cannot be reached by treaty. Grinnell Corp.*, 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698 (1966). [Cases: Monopolies 12(1.3). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 28–37, 52, 64–66.] — monopolize,vb. — monopolistic,adj. — monopolist,n.

MONOPOLY

monopoly,n. 1. Control or advantage obtained by one supplier or producer over the commercial market within a given region. Cf. OLIGOPOLY. 2. The market condition existing when only one economic entity produces a particular product or provides a particular service. • The term is now commonly applied also to situations that approach but do not strictly meet this definition. [Cases: Monopolies 12(1.3). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 28–37, 52, 64–66.]

“[Ninety per cent] is enough to constitute a monopoly; it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent is enough; and certainly thirty-three per cent is not.” United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945)(Hand, J.).

“In the modern sense, a monopoly exists when all, or so nearly all, of an article of trade or commerce within a community or district, is brought within the hands of one person or set of persons, as practically to bring the handling or production of the commodity or thing within such single control to the exclusion of competition or free traffic therein. A monopoly is created when, as the result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power, for all practical purposes, to control the prices of a commodity and thus to suppress competition. In brief, a monopoly is the practical suppression of effective business competition which thereby creates a power to control prices to the public harm.” 54A Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 781, at 107 (1996).

I. c. 3, allows a royal patent of privilege to be granted for fourteen years to any inventor of a new manufacture, for the sole working or making of the same; by virtue whereof a temporary property becomes vested in the patentee.” William Blackstone, 2 Commentaries on the Laws of England 407 (1766).

MONOPSONY

monopsony (m<<schwa>>-nop-s<<schwa>>-nee), n. A market situation in which one buyer controls the market. — monopsonistic,adj.

“Monopsony is often thought of as the flip side of monopoly. A monopolist is a seller with no rivals; a monopsonist is a buyer with no rivals. A monopolist has power over price exercised by limiting output. A monopsonist also has power over price, but this power is exercised by limiting aggregate purchases. Monopsony injures efficient allocation by reducing the quantity of the input product or service below the efficient level.” Lawrence A. Sullivan & Warren S. Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook 137–38 (2000).

MONROE DOCTRINE

Monroe Doctrine.The principle that the United States will allow no intervention or domination by any non-American nation in the Western Hemisphere. • This principle, which has some recognition in international law (though not as a formal doctrine), was first announced by President James Monroe in 1823.

“The Monroe doctrine is a policy which the United States has followed in her own interest more or less consistently for more than a century, and in itself is not contrary to international law, though possible applications of it might easily be so. But it certainly is not a rule of international law. It is comparable to policies such as the ‘balance of power’ in Europe, or the British policies of maintaining the independence of Belgium or the security of our sea-routes to the East, or the former Japanese claim to something like a paramount influence over developments in the Far East. Apart from other objections, it is impossible to regard as a rule of law a doctrine which the United States claims the sole right to interpret, which she interprets in different senses at different times, and which she applies only as and when she chooses. Nor is the doctrine, as Article 21 of the Covenant described it, a ‘regional understanding’, for the other states of the region concerned, that is to say, the Continent of America, have never been parties to it and indeed have often resented it.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 314 (5th ed. 1955).

“The little writ serves the turn of a man who claims land according to the custom of the manor; but the tenants of whom we are speaking are protected, and protected collectively, against any increase of their services. This is very plain when the manor is in the hands of a mesne lord. If he attempts to increase the customary services, some of the tenants, acting on behalf of all, will go to the royal chancery and obtain a writ against him. Such a writ begins with the word Monstraverunt. The king addresses the lord: — ‘A, B and C, men of your manor of X, which is of the ancient demesne of the crown of England, have shown us that you exact from them other customs and services than those which they owe, and which their ancestors did in the time when that manor was in the hands of our predecessors, kings of England; therefore we command you to cease from such exactions, otherwise we shall order our sheriff to interfere.' ” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 388 (2d ed. 1898).

mora (mor-⟨⟨schwa⟩⟩), n. [Latin] Roman law. Willful delay or default in fulfilling a legal obligation. • A creditor or debtor in mora could be required to pay interest on any money owed.

“The word mora means delay or default. In its technical sense it means a culpable delay in making or accepting performance.... The definition includes both mora debitoris and mora creditoris. In French law and other civil law systems mora debitoris seems (sometimes, if not always) to occur as a mean term between failure to perform a duty timeously and liability for breach....Mora usually attaches to a debtor, but it may also attach to a creditor who fails to accept performance duly tendered ....” R.W. Lee, An Introduction to Roman–Dutch Law 445 (4th ed. 1946).

“Mora. This was wrongful failure to discharge a legal obligation on demand made at a fitting time and place. It must be wilful: failure to appear, by mistake, or in a bona fide belief that there was no obligatio, or doubt about it, or by mishap, did not suffice to put a debtor in mora.” W.W. A governmental official arraigned on a ‘morals charge’ will be accused of something quite different from one accused of an ‘ethics violation.’” William P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 55 (1975).

private morality. A person's ideals, character, and private conduct, which are not valid governmental concerns if the individual is to be considered sovereign over body and mind and if the need to protect the individual's physical or moral well-being is insufficient to justify governmental intrusion. • In his essay On Liberty (1859), John Stuart Mill distinguished between conduct or ideals that affect only the individual from conduct that may do harm to others. Mill argued that governmental intrusion is justified only to prevent harm to others, not to influence a person's private morality.

The right of an author or artist, based on natural-law principles, to guarantee the integrity of a creation despite any copyright or property-law right of its owner. • Moral rights include rights of (1) attribution (also termed “paternity”): the right to be given credit and to claim credit for a work, and to deny credit if the work is changed; (2) integrity: the right to ensure that the work is not changed without the artist's consent; (3) publication: the right not to reveal a work before its creator is satisfied with it; and (4) retraction: the right to renounce a work and withdraw it from sale or display. Moral rights are recognized by law in much of Europe, but very little in the United States. Cf. INTEGRITY RIGHT; ATTRIBUTION RIGHT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 101.C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 102–104.]

“The recognition of moral rights is founded in the notion that works of art belong to their creators in a way that transcends the sale or transfer of the work to a new owner, because the artist has imbued the work with her personality.” Eric M. Brooks, “Titled” Justice: Site-Specific Art and Moral Rights After U.S. Adherence to the Berne Convention, 77 Cal. L. Rev. 1431, 1434 (1989).

“Moral rights protect an author's non-pecuniary or non-economic interests. The 1988 [Copyright] Act provides authors and directors with the right to be named when a work is copied or communicated (the right of attribution), the right not to be named as the author of a work which one did not create (the right to object against false attribution), and the right to control the form of the work (the right of integrity).” Lionel Bently & Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 233 (2001).

“Moral turpitude means, in general, shameful wickedness — so extreme a departure from ordinary standards of honest, good morals, justice, or ethics as to be shocking to the moral sense of the community. It has also been defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which one person owes to another, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between people.” 50 Am. Jur. 2d Libel and Slander § 165, at 454 (1995).

The mortgagee's rights conferred by such a transaction. 6. Loosely, any real-property security transaction, including a deed of trust. — Abbr. M. — mortgage, vb.

“The chief distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is that by a mortgage the general title is transferred to the mortgagee, subject to be revested by performance of the condition; while by a pledge the pledgor retains the general title in himself, and parts with the possession for a special purpose. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession.” Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Mortgages § 4, at 5–6 (5th ed. 1908).

equitable mortgage.A transaction that has the intent but not the form of a mortgage, and that a court of equity will treat as a mortgage. Cf. technical mortgage.

“Courts of equity are not governed by the same principles as courts of law in determining whether a mortgage has been created, and generally, whenever a transaction resolves itself into a security, or an offer or attempt to pledge land as security for a debtor liability, equity will treat it as a mortgage, without regard to the form it may assume, or the name the parties may choose to give it. The threshold issue in an action seeking imposition of an equitable mortgage is whether the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. “A landowner who already holds land subject to a mortgage may wish to hypothecate his equity. He does this by taking out a ‘second mortgage.’ Should the mortgagor default in his obligation on the first mortgage, the first mortgagee may foreclose. If there is a deficiency upon sale, the second mortgagee loses his security in the equity because there is no equity. If the mortgagee does not default on the first mortgage, but does on the second, the second mortgagee can foreclose on the mortgagor's equity. Such a foreclosure would not affect the first mortgagee's rights.” Edward H. Rabin, Fundamentals of Modern Real Property Law 1087 (1974).

MOST-SIGNIFICANT-RELATIONSHIP TEST

most-significant-relationship test. Conflict of laws. The doctrine that, to determine the state law to apply to a dispute, the court should determine which state has the most substantial connection to the occurrence and the parties. • For example, in a tort case, the court should consider where the injury occurred, where the conduct that caused the injury occurred, the residence, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties, and the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 145 (1971). In a case involving a contract, the court should consider where the contract was made, where the contract was negotiated, where the contract was to be performed, and the domicile, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties. Id. § 188. — Also termed most-significant-contacts test. [Cases: Action 17. C.J.S. Actions §§ 18–20; Conflict of Laws §§ 2–3, 12, 15, 20, 23, 27–32, 34–40, 42–48, 50–65, 96–97, 100, 102, 105–107.]

A proposal made in a meeting, in a form suitable for its consideration and action, that the meeting (or the organization for which the meeting is acting) take a certain action or view. • A motion may be a main motion or a secondary motion. A motion technically becomes a “question” when the chair states it for the meeting's consideration. But for most purposes, the parliamentary terms “motion” and “question” are interchangeable. Cf. REQUEST.

An unsuccessful party's posttrial motion asking that the pleadings begin anew because the issue was joined on an immaterial point. • The court never awards a repleader to the party who tendered the immaterial issue. [Cases: Pleading 286. C.J.S. Pleading § 477.]

MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT

motion for directed verdict. A party's request that the court enter judgment in its favor before submitting the case to the jury because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary foundation on which a reasonable jury could find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the equivalent court paper is known as a motion for judgment as a matter of law. — Abbr. MDV. — Also termed motion for a directed verdict. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW ; directed verdict under VERDICT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2121; Trial 167. C.J.S. Trial §§ 432–433, 437–438.]

MOTION FOR J.N.O.V

motion for j.n.o.v. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW

motion for judgment as a matter of law. A party's request that the court enter a judgment in its favor before the case is submitted to the jury, or after a contrary jury verdict, because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a jury could find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may move for judgment as a matter of law anytime before the case has been submitted to the jury. This kind of motion was formerly known as a motion for directed verdict (and still is in many jurisdictions). If the motion is denied and the case is submitted to the jury, resulting in an unfavorable verdict, the motion may be renewed within ten days after entry of the judgment. This aspect of the motion replaces the court paper formerly known as a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2121, 2605; Judgment 199; Trial 167. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 62–68, 70; Trial §§ 432–433, 437–438.]

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT

motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. A party's request that the court enter a judgment in its favor despite the jury's contrary verdict because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a jury to find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this procedure has been replaced by the provision for a motion for judgment as a matter of law, which must be presented before the case has been submitted to the jury but can be reasserted if it is denied and the jury returns an unfavorable verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. — Also termed motion for j.n.o.v. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2605; Judgment 199. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 62–68, 70.]

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT OF ACQUITTAL

motion for judgment of acquittal. A criminal defendant's request, at the close of the government's case or the close of all evidence, to be acquitted because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could return a guilty verdict. • If the motion is granted, the government has no right of appeal. Fed. R. Crim. P. 29(a). — Abbr. MJOA. [Cases: Criminal Law 753.2. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 1276.]

Civ. P. 12(c). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1052; Pleading 342. C.J.S. Pleading § 594.]

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

motion for leave to appeal. A request that an appellate court review an interlocutory order that meets the standards of the collateral-order doctrine. — Abbr. MLA. See COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE. [Cases: Appeal and Error 358; Federal Courts 660.30. C.J.S. Appeal and Error §§ 63, 81, 298–299, 312.]

MOTION FOR MODIFICATION

motion for modification. See motion to modify under MOTION(1).

MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT

motion for more definite statement. A party's request that the court require an opponent to amend a vague or ambiguous pleading to which the party cannot reasonably be required to respond. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). — Also termed motion for a more definite statement. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 957; Pleading 367. C.J.S. Pleading § 685.]

“Another disfavored motion is the motion for a more definite statement. By a 1948 amendment to the rules, the old bill of particulars was abolished. The motion for more definite statement, which serves much the same function, is to be granted only where a pleading to which a responsive pleading is permitted is so vague or ambiguous that the party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading. If the pleading is sufficiently definite that the opponent can reply to it, the motion for more definite statement should be denied and any particulars that the opponent needs to prepare for trial obtained by depositions, interrogatories, and similar discovery procedures. The motion is never proper where no responsive pleading is permitted, nor should it be used to force the plaintiff to include additional particulars that may make the complaint vulnerable to a motion to dismiss.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 66, at 461–62 (5th ed. 1994).

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

motion for new trial. A party's postjudgment request that the court vacate the judgment and order a new trial for such reasons as factually insufficient evidence, newly discovered evidence, and jury misconduct. • In many jurisdictions, this motion is required before a party can raise such a matter on appeal. — Also termed motion for a new trial. [Cases: Criminal Law 948; Federal Civil Procedure 2368; New Trial 124(1). C.J.S. New Trial §§ 147, 170, 174–175, 177, 185–186.]

MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER

motion for protective order. A party's request that the court protect it from potentially abusive action by the other party, usu. relating to discovery, as when one party seeks discovery of the other party's trade secrets. • A court will sometimes craft a protective order to protect one party's trade secrets by ordering that any secret information exchanged in discovery be used only for purposes of the pending suit and not be publicized. — Also termed motion for a protective order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1271; Pretrial Procedure 41. C.J.S. Discovery §§ 12, 47.]

MOTION FOR REDUCTION

MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM STAY

motion for relief from stay. See MOTION TO LIFT THE STAY.

MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM THE JUDGMENT

motion for relief from the judgment. A party's request that the court correct a clerical mistake in the judgment — that is, a mistake that results in the judgment's incorrectly reflecting the court's intentions — or relieve the party from the judgment because of such matters as (1) inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, (2) newly discovered evidence that could not have been discovered through diligence in time for a motion for new trial, (3) the judgment's being the result of fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by the other party, or (4) the judgment's being void or having been satisfied or released. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60. Cf. MOTION TO ALTER OR AMEND THE JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2659; Judgment 336–402. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 275–278, 305–331, 333–359, 375.]

MOTION FOR RESETTLEMENT

MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

motion for summary judgment. A request that the court enter judgment without a trial because there is no genuine issue of material fact to be decided by a fact-finder — that is, because the evidence is legally insufficient to support a verdict in the nonmovant's favor. • In federal court and in most state courts, the movant-defendant must point out in its motion the absence of evidence on an essential element of the plaintiff's claim, after which the burden shifts to the nonmovant-plaintiff to produce evidence raising a genuine fact issue. But if a party moves for summary judgment on its own claim or defense, then it must establish each element of the claim or defense as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. 56. — Abbr. MSJ. — Also termed summary-judgment motion; motion for summary disposition. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2533; Judgment 181(2), 183. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 252, 254–257, 259, 267–268, 274.]

MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT

motion in arrest of judgment. 1. A defendant's motion claiming that a substantial error appearing on the face of the record vitiates the whole proceeding and the judgment. 2. A postjudgment motion in a criminal case claiming that the indictment is insufficient to sustain a judgment or that the verdict is somehow insufficient. [Cases: Criminal Law 966–976.C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 1453–1457.]

MOTION IN LIMINE

motion in limine (in lim-schwa-nee). A pretrial request that certain inadmissible evidence not be referred to or offered at trial. • Typically, a party makes this motion when it believes that mere mention of the evidence during trial would be highly prejudicial and could not be remedied by an instruction to disregard. If, after the motion is granted, the opposing party mentions or attempts to offer the evidence in the jury's presence, a mistrial may be ordered. A ruling on a motion in limine does not always preserve evidentiary error for appellate purposes. To raise such an error on appeal, a party may be required to formally object when the evidence is actually admitted or excluded during trial. [Cases: Criminal Law 632(4); Federal Civil Procedure 2011; Pretrial Procedure 3. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 448, 456, 458.]

MOTION OF COURSE

MOTION PAPERS

motion papers. See MOVING PAPERS.

MOTION TO ALTER OR AMEND THE JUDGMENT

motion to alter or amend the judgment. A party's request that the court correct a substantive error in the judgment, such as a manifest error of law or fact. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to alter or amend the judgment must be filed within ten days after the judgment is entered. It should not ordinarily be used to correct clerical errors in a judgment. Those types of errors — that is, errors that result in the judgment not reflecting the court's intention — may be brought in a motion for relief from the judgment, which does not have the ten-day deadline. A motion to alter or amend the judgment is usu. directed to substantive issues regarding the judgment, such as an intervening change in the law or newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). Cf. MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM THE JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2659; Judgment 294–333. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 275–304, 362, 370, 374.]

MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY

motion to compel discovery. A party's request that the court force the party's opponent to respond to the party's discovery request (as to answer interrogatories or produce documents). Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a). — Often shortened to motion to compel. — Also termed motion to enforce discovery. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1278; Pretrial Procedure 44, 310, 434. C.J.S. Discovery §§ 31, 79.]

MOTION TO CORRECT INVENTORSHIP

motion to correct inventorship. Patents. A request in an interference proceeding to add one or more unnamed coinventors to the patent application. • The motion will be granted unless the

MOTION TO DISMISS

motion to dismiss. A request that the court dismiss the case because of settlement, voluntary withdrawal, or a procedural defect. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the case (under Rule 41(a)) or the defendant may ask the court to dismiss the case, usu. based on one of the defenses listed in Rule 12(b). These defenses include lack of personal or subject-matter jurisdiction, improper venue, insufficiency of process, the plaintiff's failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and the failure to join an indispensable party. A defendant will frequently file a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, which is governed by Rule 12(b)(6), claiming that even if all the plaintiff's allegations are true, they would not be legally sufficient to state a claim on which relief might be granted. — Abbr. MTD. See DEMURRER. [Cases: Criminal Law 303.5–303.35; Federal Civil Procedure 1707, 1825; Pretrial Procedure 501–563. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 419–424; Dismissal and Nonsuit §§ 2–47, 49–66.]

MOTION TO DISSOLVE INTERFERENCE

motion to dissolve interference. Patents. A request by the senior party to dismiss challenges to its priority as the first inventor. [Cases: Patents 106(5). C.J.S. Patents § 166.]

MOTION TO LIFT THE STAY

motion to lift the stay. Bankruptcy. A party's request that the bankruptcy court alter the automatic bankruptcy stay to allow the movant to act against the debtor or the debtor's property, as when a creditor seeks permission to foreclose on a lien because its security interest is not adequately protected. — Also termed motion for relief from stay; motion to modify the stay. [Cases: Bankruptcy 2435. C.J.S. Bankruptcy § 89.]

request that the federal court return the case to state court, usu. because the federal court lacks jurisdiction or because the procedures for removal were not properly followed. 28 USCA § 1447(c). [Cases: Removal of Cases 107. C.J.S. Removal of Causes §§ 183–184, 193.]

MOTION TO STRIKE

Civ. P. 12(f). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1144; Pleading 351, 361. C.J.S. Pleading §§ 624–625.] 2.Evidence. A request that inadmissible evidence be deleted from the record and that the jury be instructed to disregard it. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2018; Trial 88. C.J.S. Trial §§ 232, 234, 237–239.]

MOTION TO SUPPRESS

MOTION TO TRANSFER VENUE

motion to transfer venue.A request that the court transfer the case to another district or county, usu. because the original venue is improper under the applicable venue rules or because of local prejudice. See VENUE; CHANGE OF VENUE . [Cases: Criminal Law 115–144; Federal Courts 141; Venue 58. C.J.S. Corporations § 252; Criminal Law §§ 187–195; Venue §§ 224, 227, 231.]

MOTIVE

motive. Something, esp. willful desire, that leads one to act. — Also termed ulterior intent. Cf. INTENT.

“The term ‘motive’ is unfortunately ambiguous. That feeling which internally urges or pushes a person to do or refrain from doing an act is an emotion, and is of course evidential towards his doing or not doing the act. But when that evidential fact comes in turn to be evidenced, we must rely on two sorts of data, (a) the person's own expressions of that emotion, e.g., ‘I hate M,’ or ‘I wish I owned that necklace’; and (b) external circumstances likely in human experience to arouse the emotion, e.g., a slander on D may be evidence that D became angry; a purse of money left in sight of D may be evidence that D's desire to have it was aroused. Now this second sort of evidential circumstance (b) is loosely referred to as ‘motive,’ — though in reality it is only evidential of the emotion, which itself is evidential of the act.” John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 76 (1935).

MOTOR CARRIER ACT

Motor Carrier Act. A federal statute, originally enacted in 1935 (49 USCA §§ 502–507), subjecting commercial motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now the U.S. Department of Transportation. • The Act was repealed in the 1980s. [Cases: Automobiles 60. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles §§ 107–108, 110.]

MOVABLE

movable, n. (usu. pl.) 1. Property that can be moved or displaced, such as personal goods; a tangible or intangible thing in which an interest constitutes personal property; specif., anything that is not so attached to land as to be regarded as a part of it as determined by local law. — Also termed movable property; movable thing. [Cases: Property 4. C.J.S. Property §§ 14–21, 23.]

“Movables and immovables. The main distinction drawn in later Roman law and modern systems based thereon between kinds of things subject to ownership and possession. While basically the distinction corresponds to everyday conceptions, assigning animals and vehicles to the former and land and buildings to the latter category, particular things may be assigned to one category rather than the other for reasons of convenience. Thus, in French law, farm implements and animals are immovables. The distinction is also important in international private law, more so than that between real and personal .... Thus, land held on lease is personal property by English law for historical reason, but in international private law it is a right in immovable property.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 858 (1980).

intangible movable. A physical thing that can be moved but that cannot be touched in the usual sense. • Examples are light and electricity.

“ ‘Intangible movables' is a term of art in the common law which has been applied more widely than its meaning literally justifies, which is merely to those things that have physical existence and can be moved, though cannot be touched in the normal sense, such as light, electricity and radioactive waves. In English law the term has been generally applied to interests created by law which have only a legal, not a physical existence, and are accordingly capable only of legal, not physical, movement. It is convenient, however, to retain a term which is generally accepted and understood in this special legal meaning.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 470 (7th ed. 1974).

2. Scots law. A nonheritable right. — Also spelled (in BrE) moveable. Cf. IMMOVABLE. — movable, adj. “Moveables are, in the phraseology of the law of Scotland, opposed to heritage; so that every species of property, and every right a person can hold, is by that law either heritable or moveable. Hence, moveables are not merely corporeal subjects capable of being moved, but every species of property, corporeal or incorporeal, which does not descend to the heir in heritage.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 1882).

Originally, mundium was not limited to family law. Gradually it lost its wider meaning, and in its restricted sense it received different applications, as family relations became classified into separate groups, and the conception of mundium appeared under different forms, with special rules and special names — e.g., marital power, parental power, guardianship, and curatorship.” Alexander Wood Renton & George Grenville Phillimore, The Comparative Law of Marriage and Divorce 10 (1910).

But if the office has been once accepted and acted upon, the tutor or curator cannot resign it. He must perform the duties of his office until it expires through the death, attainment of minority or majority, as the case may be, or it may be through the marriage of the ward, and he will be liable for the consequences of his neglect, as well as the consequences of his actings and intromissions.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 364 (4th ed. 1894).

murder, n. Model Penal Code § 210.2. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER. [Cases: Homicide 520.] — murder, vb. — murderous, adj.

“The word ‘murder’ has ... had a devious history. Its original sense is the particularly heinous crime of secret slaying. After the conquest it was observed that Normans were frequently found dead under mysterious circumstances, and so William I enacted that if anyone were found slain and the slayer were not caught, then the hundred should pay a fine; this fine is a murdrum. The practice soon grew up to taking inquests and if it were presented that the dead man was English, then the fine was not due. In 1267 it was enacted that accidental deaths should not give rise to murdrum, and finally in 1340 presentment of Englishry and murdrum were abolished. Henceforth the word slowly tends to get linked up with 'malice aforethought' and so we get the classical formulae describing the crime of murder." Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 445 (5th ed. 1956).

The other states classify all murders in two degrees. Manslaughter is not a degree of the crime of murder, but instead is a distinct offense. — Also termed murder of the third degree; murder three. [Cases: Homicide 548.]

MURDER CLAUSE

MURDRUM

murdrum (m<<schwa>>r-dr<<schwa>>m). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The secret killing of someone. 2. A fine against the tithing where the secret and unsolved homicide took place.

“The readiness with which the Norman administrators seized on this Anglo-Saxon system was probably due to its effectiveness in collecting the murdrum, the murder fine. In ordinary cases of homicide, the whole district — except the kin of the suspect — would be zealous to bring the malefactor to justice. But we can readily see that, if the person killed was a Norman, every effort would be made to shield the murderer. The Norman rulers had recourse to the device ... of imposing a group responsibility. The tithing within which the murdered Norman was found was compelled to pay a fine or to discover and surrender the homicide. The word murdrum is a word of uncertain etymology, and has given us our term for willful homicide.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 175–76 (1936).

MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION

mutuality of obligation. The agreement of both parties to a contract to be bound in some way. — Also termed mutuality of contract. See mutual assent under ASSENT. [Cases: Contracts 10. C.J.S. Contracts § 108.]

“[The] so-called doctrine of ‘mutuality of obligation’ in bilateral contracts ... unfortunately has been the cause of no little confusion. This confusion is evident from the fact that, while it is commonly admitted there is such a doctrine, there is a lack of unanimity, both in the statement of it and in regard to its application. The most common mode of statement is: ‘In a bilateral agreement both promises must be binding or neither is binding.’ This statement is obviously ambiguous, since it does not indicate in what sense the promises must be binding. The fact is that it has been variously interpreted and applied by the courts with results that have sometimes been inconsistent with other well settled principles of the law of consideration. Usually it has been held to mean that a promise that is not legally obligatory cannot be consideration in spite of the fact that it may satisfy all the usual requirements of consideration. However, at times it has in effect been held to involve the requirement that the undertaking of the promise relied upon as a consideration must be reasonably commensurate with, or equivalent to, the undertaking of the promise which it supports, before it can constitute consideration — a kind of doctrine of mutuality of undertaking.” John Edward Murray Jr., Murray on Contracts § 90, at 190–91 (2d ed. 1974).

“The doctrine of mutuality of obligation is commonly expressed in the phrase that in a bilateral contract ‘both parties must be bound or neither is bound.’ But this phrase is over-generalization because the doctrine is not one of mutuality of obligation but rather one of mutuality of consideration. Phrasing the rule in terms of mutuality of obligation rather than in terms of consideration has led to so-called exceptions and judicial circumventions .... It has been suggested that the term ‘mutuality of obligation’ should be abandoned and we must agree in the light of the confusion that this term has engendered.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4–12, at 226 (3d ed. 1987).

mutuum (myoo-choo-<<schwa>>m), n. 1. A transaction (sometimes referred to as a bailment) in which goods are delivered but, instead of being returned, are replaced by other goods of the same kind. • At common law such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, not as a bailment, because the particular goods are not returned. [Cases: Bailment 2. C.J.S. Bailments §§ 5, 14, 16–18.] 2. Roman law. A real contract in which money or fungible goods were delivered from the lender to the borrower, who was strictly liable to return an equivalent amount. • Because the contract was gratuitous, any interest had to be demanded by stipulation. This was one of the real contracts, along with the loan for use (commodatum (kom-<<schwa>>-day-t<<schwa>>m)) and deposit and pledge (pignoratium (pig-n<<schwa>>-ray-shee-oh)). See MUTUI DATIO.

mysterious disappearance. A loss of property under unknown or baffling circumstances that are difficult to understand or explain. • The term is used in insurance policies covering theft. [Cases: Insurance 2152.]

“Under a policy insuring against loss of property by ‘mysterious disappearance’ recovery is generally allowed where the article disappears from the place the insured left it, while recovery is ordinarily disallowed where the insured has no recollection of when he last had possession of the article and cannot say when or from what place it disappeared. Thus the addition of the words ‘mysterious disappearance’ to a theft policy does not transform it to an ‘all loss’ policy covering lost or mislaid articles, but it remains a theft policy.” 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 501, at 575–76 (1982).

“[T]he making of the count, in Latin the narratio, was the very centre of the legal process. We do not know how it came about that the litigant was allowed to speak through the mouth of another, though it has been suggested that it was not to prevent mistakes being made but to prevent them being fatal. Certainly the litigant could disavow what was said on his behalf; and perhaps it was only ‘said’ by him when he formally adopted it. If this is right, our modern barrister began as one who could harmlessly blunder.” S.F.C. Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 28 (1969).

“ ‘Nationality’ is a term which has long been used to define the legal relationship between a state and a ship which is authorized by the state to fly its flag.... Discussions in the International Law Commission in 1951 reflected concern that the use of the term ‘nationality’ in reference to ships was misleading as it implied similarity to the term's use in defining the legal relationship between a state and its citizen. Nonetheless, the term has continued to be the one most often employed in describing the relationship between a ship and its flag state. It is important to realize, however, that in spite of their common names, the legal relationship ascribed to the nationality of ships does differ from that arising from the nationality of natural or juridical persons.” Louis B. Cf. FUNDAMENTAL LAW; POSITIVE LAW.

“Natural law, as it is revived today, seeks to organize the ideal element in law, to furnish a critique of old received ideals and give a basis for formulating new ones, and to yield a reasoned canon of values and a technique of applying it. I should prefer to call it philosophical jurisprudence. But one can well sympathize with those who would salvage the good will of the old name as an asset of the science of law.” Roscoe Pound, The Formative Era of American Law 29 (1938).

“It is true that when medieval writers spoke of natural law as being discoverable by reason, they meant that the best human reasoning could discover it, and not, of course, that the results to which any and every individual's reasoning led him was natural law. The foolish criticism of Jeremy Bentham: ‘a great multitude of people are continually talking of the law of nature; and then they go on giving you their sentiments about what is right and what is wrong; and these sentiments, you are to understand, are so many chapters and sections of the law of nature,’ merely showed a contempt for a great conception which Bentham had not taken the trouble to understand.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 20–21 (5th ed. 1955).

“[N]atural law is often an idealization of the opposite to that which prevails. Where inequality or privilege exists, natural law demands its abolition.” Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 96 (1961).

"The edict is in these terms: 'NAUTAE, CAUPONES, STABULARII, QUOD CUJUSQUE

Persons of this description are liable for their servants, or even for the acts of guests and passengers; and the extent of the damage may be proved by the oath of the claimant.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 737 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

The money loaned is pecunia trajecticia (money conveyed overseas). — Also spelled nauticum foenus. — Also termed fenus nauticum; nautica pecunia; foenus nauticum.

NAVIGABLE WATER

navigable water. 1. At early common law, any body of water affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. • This test was first adopted in England because most of England's in-fact navigable waters are influenced by the tide, unlike the large inland rivers that are capable of supporting commerce in the United States. — Also termed boatable water. [Cases: Navigable Waters 1.C.J.S. Navigable Waters § 1.]

“In addition to its bearing on admiralty jurisdictional inquiries, the navigable waters issue comes up in cases involving the scope of Congress's regulatory authority under the commerce clause; the validity and interpretation of a variety of statutes and regulations administered by the Coast Guard; the powers of the Corps of Engineers over waterways, dams, marinas, etc., under the Rivers & Harbors Act and other statutes; the Federal Power Commission's authority to inspect and license electricity-generating dams; the existence and exercise of a servitude of navigation, which affects both public access to waterways on private land and governmental regulatory authority over such waters; and disputes over the ownership of stream beds. The foregoing is not an exhaustive listing. Well over a thousand federal statutes use the term 'navigable waters.' ” David W. Robertson, Steven F. Friedell & Michael F. Sturley, Admiralty and Maritime Law in the United States 53 n.1 (2001).

2. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is used, or typically can be used, as a highway for commerce with ordinary modes of trade and travel on water. • Under the Commerce Clause, Congress has broad jurisdiction over all navigable waters of the United States. #### NECESSARIES necessaries. 1. Things that are indispensable to living <an infant's necessities include food, shelter, and clothing>. • Necessaries include whatever food, medicine, clothing, shelter, and personal services are usu. considered reasonably essential for the preservation and enjoyment of life, to the extent that a person having a duty of protection must furnish them. — Also termed necessities; necessities of life. [Cases: Husband and Wife 19.] 2. Things that are essential to maintaining the lifestyle to which one is accustomed . • The term includes whatever is reasonably needed for subsistence, health, comfort, and education, considering the person's age, station in life, and medical condition, but it excludes (1) anything purely ornamental, (2) anything solely for pleasure, (3) what the person is already supplied with, (4) anything that concerns someone's estate or business as opposed to personal needs, and (5) borrowed money. Under the common law, a husband was required to pay debts incurred by his wife or children for necessities. Beginning in the late 1960s, most states began to change their statutes regarding the obligation to provide necessities to include both husband and wife. See DOCTRINE OF NECESSARIES; FAMILY-EXPENSE STATUTE .

“Things may be of a useful character, but the quality or quantity supplied may take them out of the character of necessities. Elementary textbooks might be a necessary to a student of law, but not a rare edition of ‘Littleton's Tenures,’ or eight or ten copies of ‘Stephen's Commentaries.’ Necessaries also vary according to the station in life of the infant or his peculiar circumstances at the time. The quality of clothing suitable to an Eton boy would be unnecessary for a telegraph clerk; the medical attendance and diet required by an invalid would be unnecessary to one in ordinary health. It does not follow therefore that because a thing is of a useful class, a judge is bound to allow a jury to say whether or no it is a necessary.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 172 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Maritime law. Supplies and services needed for the maintenance and operation of a vessel, including repairs, tow fees, and the costs of loading and unloading. • Authorized provision of necessaries automatically confers a maritime lien to the provider under the Federal Maritime Lien Act, 46 USCA §§ 31341–31343. “The case law is clear that ‘necessaries’ does not mean absolutely indispensable; rather, the term refers to what is reasonably needed in the ship’s business.” Thomas J. Schoenbaum, Admiralty and Maritime Law 256 (1987).

necessitas culpabilis (n<<schwa>>-ses-i-tas k<<schwa>>l-pay-b<<schwa>>-lis). [Latin “culpable necessity”] Hist. An unfortunate necessity that, while essentially excusing the act done under its compulsion, does not necessarily relieve the actor from blame.

“And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo lord Bacon entitles it necessitas culpabilis .... For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong ... and since in quarrels both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault; and it scarce can be tried who was originally in the wrong; the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear, in the other case, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original default can never be upon my side.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 186–87 (1769).

necessity. 1. Criminal law. A justification defense for a person who acts in an emergency that he or she did not create and who commits a harm that is less severe than the harm that would have occurred but for the person's actions. • For example, a mountain climber lost in a blizzard can assert necessity as a defense to theft of food and blankets from another's cabin. — Also termed choice of evils; duress of circumstances; lesser-evils defense. See lesser-evils defense under DEFENSE(1). [Cases: Criminal Law 38. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 49–53.] 2. Torts. A privilege that may relieve a person from liability for trespass or conversion if that person, having no alternative, harms another's property in an effort to protect life or health.

“In some cases even damage intentionally done may not involve the defendant in liability when he is acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil. The precise limits of the defence are not clear, for it has affinities with certain other defences, such as act of God, self-help, duress, or inevitable accident. It is distinguishable from self-defence on the ground that this presupposes that the plaintiff is prima facie a wrongdoer: the defence of necessity contemplates the infliction of harm on an innocent plaintiff. The defence, if it exists, enables a defendant to escape liability for the intentional interference with the security of another's person or property on the ground that the acts complained of were necessary to prevent greater damage to the commonwealth or to another or to the defendant himself, or to their or his property. The use of the term necessity serves to conceal the fact that the defendant always has a choice between two evils. This is what distinguishes the defence of necessity from that of impossibility.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 493 (17th ed. 1977).

manifest necessity. A sudden and overwhelming emergency, beyond the court's and parties' control, that makes conducting a trial or reaching a fair result impossible and that therefore authorizes the granting of a mistrial. • The standard of manifest necessity must be met to preclude a defendant from successfully raising a plea of former jeopardy after a mistrial. [Cases: Double Jeopardy 99. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 230.]

physical necessity. A necessity involving an actual, tangible force that compels a person to act in a particular way.

private necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves only the defendant's personal interest and thus provides only a limited privilege. • For example, if the defendant harms the plaintiff's dock by keeping a boat moored to the dock during a hurricane, the defendant can assert private necessity but must compensate the plaintiff for the dock's damage. [Cases: Negligence 510(3). C.J.S. Negligence §§ 240, 317.]

public necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves the public interest and thus completely excuses the defendant's liability. • For example, if the defendant destroys the plaintiff's house to stop the spread of a fire that threatens the town, the defendant can assert public necessity.

NECESSITY DEFENSE

necessity defense. See JUSTIFICATION(2).

NECK VERSE

neck verse. Hist. A verse, usu. consisting of the opening verse of Psalm 51 (Miserere mei, Deus "Have mercy on me, O God"), which was used as a literacy test for an accused who claimed benefit of clergy. • An accused who read the passage satisfactorily would not receive the maximum sentence (the person's neck would be saved). Although judges could assign any passage, they usu. chose Psalm 51, so that for many years criminals memorized this verse and pretended to read it. Still, the records show that many accused persons failed the test. The reading of the neck verse was abolished in 1707. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

"During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the judges' attitudes to benefit of clergy changed completely, and they came to see it as a regular means of escape from the mandatory death penalty. Physical appearance was disregarded, and reading became the sole test of clerical status. When a man was convicted of a felony, he would fall on his knees and 'pray the book'; he would then be tendered a passage from the psalter, known as the neck-verse, and if he could read or recite it satisfactorily his clergy was taken to be proved .... Strictly speaking, the decision whether the convict read 'as a clerk' was for the ordinary; but he was subject to the control of the judges, and could be fined for refusing to accept someone. By the end of the sixteenth century as many as half of all men convicted of felony were recorded as having successfully claimed benefit of clergy." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 587 (3d ed. 1990).

“Such a writ [ne exeat] might be issued upon the commencement of the suit for equitable relief, during the pendency of the suit, or upon issuance of the final decree to secure its enforcement. But such writ related primarily to the person of the defendant and issued only upon satisfactory proof that he planned or intended to remove himself beyond the court's jurisdiction so that he might escape obedience to such command as might be or had been laid upon him. The writ has been frequently termed an equitable bail. It involves taking and keeping the defendant in custody until he gives bail or bond in a designated amount, conditioned upon his keeping himself amenable to the effective processes of the court.” William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 21 (2d ed. 1956).

NEGLECT

neglect, n. 1. The omission of proper attention to a person or thing, whether inadvertent, negligent, or willful; the act or condition of disregarding. 2. The failure to give proper attention, supervision, or necessities, esp. to a child, to such an extent that harm results or is likely to result. Cf. ABUSE. — neglect, vb. — neglectful, adj.

“ ‘Neglect’ is not the same thing as ‘negligence.’ In the present connection the word ‘neglect’ indicates, as a purely objective fact, that a person has not done that which it was his duty to do; it does not indicate the reason for this failure. ‘Negligence,’ on the other hand, is a subjective state of mind, and it indicates a particular reason why the man has failed to do his duty, namely because he has not kept the performance of the duty in his mind as he ought to have done. A man can ‘neglect’ his duty either intentionally or negligently.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 108 n.1 (16th ed. 1952).

child neglect. The failure of a person responsible for a minor to care for the minor's emotional or physical needs. • Child neglect is a form of child abuse. Local child-welfare departments investigate reports of child neglect. In a severe case, criminal charges may be filed against a person suspected of child neglect. [Cases: Infants 156.]

developmental neglect. Failure to provide necessary emotional nurturing and physical or cognitive stimulation, as a result of which a child could suffer from serious developmental delays.

educational neglect. Failure to ensure that a child attends school in accordance with state law.

excusable neglect. A failure — which the law will excuse — to take some proper step at the proper time (esp. in neglecting to answer a lawsuit) not because of the party's own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the court's process, but because of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident or because of reliance on the care and vigilance of the party's counsel or on a promise made by the adverse party. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2656; inexcusable neglect.Unjustifiable neglect; neglect that implies more than unintentional inadvertence. • A finding of inexcusable neglect in, for example, failing to file an answer to a complaint will prevent the setting aside of a default judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2656; Judgment 362. C.J.S. Judgments § 320.]

Judgment 362. C.J.S. Judgments § 320.]

medical neglect.Failure to provide medical, dental, or psychiatric care that is necessary to prevent or to treat serious physical or emotional injury or illness. • In determining whether a parent's refusal to consent to medical treatment is neglectful, courts use any of three approaches: (1) an ad hoc test, (2) a best-interests-of-the-child test, or (3) a balancing test that weighs the interests of the parents, the child, and the state. Cf. FAITH-HEALING EXEMPTION.

physical neglect.Failure to provide necessities, the lack of which has caused or could cause serious injury or illness.

NEGLECTED CHILD

NEGLEGENTIA

neglegentia (neg-li-jen-shee-<<schwa>>), n.[Latin] Roman law. Carelessness; inattentive omission. • Neglegentia can be of varying degrees, which may or may not result in actionable liability. — Also spelled negligencia. See CULPA. Cf. DILIGENTIA.

“In the sources negligentia is tantamount to culpa, and similarly graduated (magna, lata negligentia). Precision in terminology is no more to be found here than in the field of culpa. One text declares ... ‘gross negligence (magna negligentia) is culpa, magna culpa is dolus’; another says: ‘gross negligence (dissoluta negligentia) is near to dolus (prope dolum).’ In the saying ‘lata culpa is exorbitant (extreme) negligence, i.e., not to understand (intelligere) what all understand’ ...negligentia is identified with ignorance.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 593 (1953).

magna neglegentia (mag-n<<schwa>> neg-li-jen-shee-<<schwa>>). See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

NEGLIGENCE

negligence,n.1. The failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation; any conduct that falls below the legal standard established to protect others against unreasonable risk of harm, except for conduct that is intentionally, wantonly, or willfully disregarding of others' rights. • The term denotes culpable carelessness. The Roman-law equivalents are culpa and neglegentia, as contrasted with dolus (wrongful intention). — Also termed actionable negligence; ordinary negligence; simple negligence. [Cases: Negligence 201, 233, 250. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 14, 34, 59, 118–121, 125–127, 130–131, 133.] 2. A tort grounded in this failure, usu. expressed in terms of the following elements: duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages. [Cases: Negligence 202. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 21–31, 64, 649.]

“Negligence in law ranges from inadvertence that is hardly more than accidental to sinful disregard of the safety of others.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 36 (1968).

“During the first half of the nineteenth century, negligence began to gain recognition as a separate and independent basis of tort liability. Its rise coincided in a marked degree with the Industrial Revolution; and it very probably was stimulated by the rapid increase in the number of accidents caused by industrial machinery, and in particular by the invention of railways. It was greatly encouraged by the disintegration of the old forms of action, and the disappearance of the distinction between direct and indirect injuries, found in trespass and case .... Intentional injuries, whether direct or indirect, began to be grouped as a distinct field of liability, and negligence remained as the main basis for unintended torts. Negligence thus developed into the dominant cause of action for accidental injury in this nation today.” W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 28, at 161 (5th ed. 1984).

“Negligence is a matter of risk — that is to say, of recognizable danger of injury .... In most instances, it is caused by heedlessness or inadvertence, by which the negligent party is unaware of the results which may follow from his act. But it may also arise where the negligent party has considered the possible consequences carefully, and has exercised his own best judgment. The almost universal use of the phrase ‘due care’ to describe conduct which is not negligent should not obscure the fact that the essence of negligence is not necessarily the absence of solicitude for those who may be adversely affected by one's actions but is instead behavior which should be recognized as involving unreasonable danger to others.” Id. § 31, at 169.

advertent negligence. Negligence in which the actor is aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating; RECKLESSNESS. — Also termed willful negligence; supine negligence.

casual negligence. A plaintiff's failure to (1) pay reasonable attention to his or her surroundings, so as to discover the danger created by the defendant's negligence, (2) exercise reasonable competence, care, diligence, and skill to avoid the danger once it is perceived, or (3) prepare as a reasonable person would to avoid future dangers.

collateral negligence. An independent contractor's negligence, for which the employer is generally not liable. See COLLATERAL-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE.

recoverable from a defendant. — Also termed comparative fault. See COMPARATIVE-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence 549. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 262–264.]

concurrent negligence. The negligence of two or more parties acting independently but causing the same damage. Cf. joint negligence.

contributory negligence. 1. A plaintiff's own negligence that played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury and that is significant enough (in a few jurisdictions) to bar the plaintiff from recovering damages. • In most jurisdictions, this defense has been superseded by comparative negligence. See CONTRIBUTORY-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence 547. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 293, 297.] 2. Rare. The negligence of a third party — neither the plaintiff nor the defendant — whose act or omission played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury. [Cases: Negligence 540. C.J.S. Negligence § 267.]

criminal negligence. Gross negligence so extreme that it is punishable as a crime. • For example, involuntary manslaughter or other negligent homicide can be based on criminal negligence, as when an extremely careless automobile driver kills someone. — Also termed culpable negligence; gross negligence. [Cases: Criminal Law 23; Negligence 1800–1802. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 38; Negligence §§ 913–914, 916.]

“Though the legislatures and the courts have often made it clear that criminal liability generally requires more fault than the ordinary negligence which will do for tort liability, they have not so often made it plain just what is required in addition to tort negligence — greater risk, subjective awareness of the risk, or both. Statutes are sometimes worded in terms of ‘gross negligence’ or ‘culpable negligence’ or ‘criminal negligence,’ without any further definition of these terms.... The courts thus have had to do their best with little guidance from the legislature, with varying results.” Wayne R. LaFare & Austin W. Scott Jr., Criminal Law § 3.7, at 235–37 (2d ed. 1986).

“‘Culpable negligence,’ while variously defined, has been held incapable of exact definition; it means something more than negligence .... In connection with negligence, the word ‘culpable’ is sometimes used in the sense of ‘blamable,’ and it has been regarded as expressing the thought of a breach of a duty or the commission of a fault; but culpable negligence has been held to amount to more than ‘blameworthy’ conduct .... It does not involve the element of intent .... On the other hand, it has been said to be intentional conduct which the actor may not intend to be harmful but which an ordinary and reasonably prudent man would recognize as involving a strong probability of injury to others.” 65 C.J.S. Negligence § 1(13) (1966).

gross negligence. 1. A lack of slight diligence or care. [Cases: Negligence 273. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 91–97.] 2. A conscious, voluntary act or omission in reckless disregard of a legal duty and of the consequences to another party, who may typically recover exemplary damages. — Also termed reckless negligence; wanton negligence; willful negligence; willful and wanton negligence; hazardous negligence; magna neglegentia. [Cases: Damages 91; Negligence 273. C.J.S. Damages §§ 202–207; Negligence §§ 91–97.] 3. See criminal negligence.

“Negligence is gross if the precautions to be taken against harm are very simple, such as persons who are but poorly endowed with physical and mental capacities can easily take.” H.L.A. Hart, “Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility,” in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 149 (1968).

“Gross Negligence. As it originally appeared, this was very great negligence, or the want of even slight or scant care. It has been described as a failure to exercise even that care which a careless person would use. Several courts, however, dissatisfied with a term so nebulous ... have construed gross negligence as requiring willful, wanton, or reckless misconduct, or such utter lack of all care as will be evidence thereof .... But it is still true that most courts consider that ‘gross negligence’ falls short of a reckless disregard of the consequences, and differs from ordinary negligence only in degree, and not in kind.” W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 34, at 211–12 (5th ed. 1984).

hazardous negligence. 1. Careless or reckless conduct that exposes someone to extreme danger of injury or to imminent peril. 2. See gross negligence.

imputed negligence. Negligence of one person charged to another; negligence resulting from a party's special relationship with another party who is originally negligent — so that, for example, a parent might be held responsible for some acts of a child. [Cases: Negligence 483, 575; Parent and Child 13.5(2). C.J.S. Negligence §§ 152–153, 268–280; Parent and Child § 191.]

inadvertent negligence. Negligence in which the actor is not aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating, but should have foreseen and avoided it. — Also termed simple negligence.

joint negligence. The negligence of two or more persons acting together to cause an accident. Cf. concurrent negligence.

legal negligence. See negligence per se.

negligence in law. Failure to observe a duty imposed by law. See negligence per se.

negligence per se. Negligence established as a matter of law, so that breach of the duty is not a jury question. • Negligence per se usu. arises from a statutory violation. — Also termed legal negligence. [Cases: Negligence 259. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 134–147.]

ordinary negligence. Lack of ordinary diligence; the failure to use ordinary care. • The term is most commonly used to differentiate between negligence and gross negligence. [Cases: Negligence 232.]

professional negligence. See MALPRACTICE.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence.

simple negligence. See inadvertent negligence.

slight negligence. The failure to exercise the great care of an extraordinarily prudent person, resulting in liability in special circumstances (esp. those involving bailments or carriers) in which lack of ordinary care would not result in liability; lack of great diligence.

subsequent negligence. The negligence of the defendant when, after the defendant's initial negligence and the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant discovers — or should have discovered — that the plaintiff was in a position of danger and fails to exercise due care in preventing the plaintiff's injuries. — Also termed supervening negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence 530. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 281–290, 313, 318.]

tax negligence. Negligence arising out of the disregard of tax-payment laws, for which the Internal Revenue Service may impose a penalty — 5% of the amount underpaid. IRC (26 USCA) § 6651(a). [Cases: Internal Revenue 5219. C.J.S. Internal Revenue § 824.]

willful negligence. See advertent negligence.

NEGLIGENCE RULE

negligence rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a party's negligence contributes to an unauthorized signing or a material alteration in a negotiable instrument, that party is estopped from raising this issue against later parties who transfer or pay the instrument in good faith. • Examples of negligence include leaving blanks or spaces on the amount line of the instrument, erroneously mailing the instrument to a person with the same name as the payee, and failing to follow internal procedures designed to prevent forgeries. [Cases: Banks and Banking 148(3); Bills and Notes 279, 365(2). C.J.S. Banks and Banking §§ 434–435; Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 29–30, 33, 150–151.]

NEGLIGENT

negligent, adj. Characterized by a person's failure to exercise the degree of care that someone of ordinary prudence would have exercised in the same circumstance <the negligent driver went through the stop sign> <negligent construction caused the bridge to collapse>. [Cases: Automobiles 146; Negligence 200, 232. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles §§ 18, 41, 500–503, 506–510, 545–546, 550–552, 554–555, 1299; Negligence §§ 5–13, 15–20, 33, 64.] — negligently, adv.

“[A] careful consideration is needed of the differences between the meaning of expressions like ‘inadvertently’ and ‘while his mind was a blank’ on the one hand, and ‘negligently’ on the other. In ordinary English, and also in lawyers' English, when harm has resulted from someone's negligence, if we say of that person that he has acted negligently we are not thereby merely describing the frame of mind in which he acted. 'He negligently broke a saucer' is not the same kind of expression as 'he inadvertently broke a saucer'. The point of the adverb 'inadvertently' is merely to inform us of the agent's psychological state, whereas if we say 'He broke it negligently' we are not merely adding to this an element of blame or reproach, but something quite specific, viz. we are referring to the fact that the agent failed to comply with a standard of conduct with which any ordinary reasonable man could and would have complied: a standard requiring him to take precautions against harm. The word 'negligently', both in legal and in non-legal contexts, makes an essential reference to an omission to do what is thus required: it is not a flatly descriptive psychological expression like 'his mind was a blank'." H.L.A. Hart, "Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 147–48 (1968).

NEGLIGENT ACT

NEGLIGENT ENTRUSTMENT

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE

negotiability. The capability of commercial paper to have its title transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so that the transferee has a rightful claim on it. • Negotiability (which pertains to commercial paper) differs from assignability (which pertains to contracts in general) because an assignee traditionally takes title subject to all equities, and an assignment is not complete without notice to the debtor, whereas an indorsee takes free of all equities and without any notice to the debtor. [Cases: Bills and Notes 144–175. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 3–4, 127–138, 143, 148, 155, 159.]

negotiable, adj. 1. (Of a written instrument) capable of being transferred by delivery or indorsement when the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. [Cases: Bills and Notes 144. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 127, 129–130, 143.] 2. (Of a deal, agreement, etc.) capable of being accomplished. 3. (Of a price or deal) subject to further bargaining and possible change. Cf. NONNEGOTIABLE; ASSIGNABLE.

“The term ‘negotiable,’ in its enlarged signification, is used to describe any written security which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery merely, so as to vest in the indorsee the legal title, and thus enable him to bring a suit thereon in his own name. But in a strictly commercial classification, and as the term is technically used, it applies only to those instruments which, like bills of exchange, not only carry the legal title with them by indorsement, or delivery, but carry as well, when transferred before maturity, the right of the transferee to demand the full amounts which their faces call for. ‘Assignable’ is the more appropriate term to describe bonds, and ordinary notes, or notes of hand as they are most commonly called; as ‘negotiable’ is the more fitting term to describe the peculiar instruments of commerce.” 1 John W. Daniel, A Treatise on the Law of Negotiable Instruments § 2, at 3 (Thomas H. Calvert ed., 7th ed. 1933).

negotiable instrument. A written instrument that (1) is signed by the maker or drawer, (2) includes an unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money, (3) is payable on demand or at a definite time, and (4) is payable to order or to bearer. UCC § 3-104(a). — Also termed negotiable paper; negotiable note. • Among the various types of negotiable instruments are bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks, certificates of deposit, and other negotiable securities. [Cases: Bills and Notes 5, 144–175. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 3–4, 9, 127–138, 143, 148, 155, 159.]

“What are called ‘negotiable instruments,’ or ‘paper to bearer,’ such as bills of exchange, or promissory notes, do really pass from hand to hand, either by delivery or indorsement, giving to each successive recipient a right against the debtor, to which no notice to the debtor is essential, and which, if the paper is held bona fide and for value, is unaffected by flaws in the title of intermediate assignors.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 315–16 (13th ed. 1924).

“One must first understand that a negotiable instrument is a peculiar animal and that many animals calling for the payment of money and others loosely called ‘commercial paper’ are not negotiable instruments and not subject to the rules of Article 3.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 16-1, at 70 (4th ed. 1995).

NEGOTIATION

negotiation, n. 1. A consensual bargaining process in which the parties attempt to reach agreement on a disputed or potentially disputed matter. • Negotiation usu. involves complete autonomy for the parties involved, without the intervention of third parties. [Cases: Contracts 25. C.J.S. Contracts § 60.]

“Negotiation, we may say, ought strictly to be viewed simply as a means to an end; it is the road the parties must travel to arrive at their goal of mutually satisfactory settlement. But like other means, negotiation is easily converted into an end in itself; it readily becomes a game played for its own sake and a game played with so little reserve by those taken up with it that they will sacrifice their own ultimate interests in order to win it.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 128

2. (usu. pl.) Dealings conducted between two or more parties for the purpose of reaching an understanding. 3. The transfer of an instrument by delivery or indorsement whereby the transferee takes it for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. See HOLDER IN DUE COURSE. [Cases: Bills and Notes 176, 208. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 139, 143, 146, 148.] — negotiate,vb. — negotiable,adj. — negotiability,n.

NEGOTIORUM GESTIO

negotiorum gestio (ni-goh-shee-or-<<schwa>>m jes-chee-oh), n.[Latin “management of another's affairs”] Roman & civil law. A quasi-contractual situation in which an actor (negotiorum gestor) manages or interferes in the business transaction of another person (dominus negotii) in that person's absence, without authority but out of concern or friendship. La. Civ. Code art. 2292. • By such conduct, the actor is bound to conduct the matter to a conclusion and to deliver the transaction's proceeds to the person, who likewise must reimburse the actor for any expenses incurred. La. Civ. Code art. 2297. A negotiorum gestio does not exist if the gestor acted self-interestedly or if the owner expressly forbade the gestor from acting on the owner's behalf. See actio negotiorum gestorum under ACTIO. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts 2.1; Principal and Agent 149(2).C.J.S. Agency §§ 362, 372–374.]

“The negotiorum gestio, according to the civilians, is a species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. The negotiorum gestor acquires no right of property by means of the interference, and he is strictly bound not only to good faith, but to ordinary care and diligence; and in some cases he is held responsible for the slightest neglect.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *616 n.(c) (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR

Code art. 2292. • The actor has a claim to be compensated by the owner for the trouble taken, and the owner has a claim for any loss that results from the negotiorum gestor's fault. — Sometimes shortened to gestor. #### NEXUM nexum (nek-s<<schwa>>m), n. [Latin] Roman law. A transaction or practice of early Roman law under which a debtor, upon a failure to repay the debt, could be seized and held in bondage until the debt was repaid. • This practice was allowed in very early Roman law.

“Nexum. This highly controversial matter will be briefly dealt with as nexum had long been obsolete in classical law. Little is really known of it: it has been doubted whether there ever was such an institution. No text tells us that there was a contract called nexum .... But we have texts which speak of nexum as creative of obligation ... and many literary texts dealing with debtors who were nexi, so that it may be taken as certain that there was such a transaction ... which in some way reduced debtors to a sort of slavery, that great hardships resulted and that a l. Poetelia... practically ended this state of things, presumably by requiring an actual judgment before seizure. The effect was not to abolish nexum, but, by depriving it of its chief value, the power of seizure ... to leave it with no advantages to counterbalance its clumsiness, so that it went out of use.” W.W. Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian 429–30 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

NEXUS

nexus, n. 1. A connection or link, often a causal one <cigarette packages must inform consumers of the nexus between smoking and lung cancer>. Pl. nexuses; nexus. 2. Roman law. (ital.) In very early times, a debtor given in bondage to creditors until the debts have been paid. Pl. nexi. See NEXUM.

NEXUS TEST

nexus test. The standard by which a private person's act is considered state action — and may give rise to liability for violating someone's constitutional rights — if the conduct is so closely related to the government's conduct that the choice to undertake it may fairly be said to be that of the state. • While similar to the symbiotic-relationship test, the nexus test focuses on the particular act complained of, instead of on the overall relationship of the parties. Still, some courts use the terms and analyses interchangeably. — Also termed close-nexus test. Cf. SYMBIOTIC-RELATIONSHIP TEST T. See JOINT PARTICIPATION; STATE-COMPULSION TEST. [Cases: Civil Rights 1326(4, 7). C.J.S. Civil Rights §§ 92–94.]

“The complaining party must ... show that there is a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the regulated entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself. The purpose of this requirement is to assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the State is responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains.... [O]ur precedents indicate that a State normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice must in law be deemed to be that of the State.” Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 2786 (1982).

night. 1. The time from sunset to sunrise. 2. Darkness; the time when a person's face is not discernible. • This definition was used in the common-law definition of certain offenses, such as burglary. [Cases: Burglary 8. C.J.S. Burglary §§ 26, 36.]

“The definition of a burglar, as given by Sir Edward Coke, is, ‘he that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house, with intent to commit a felony.’ ... The time must be by night, and not by day; for in the daytime there is no burglary .... As to what is reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sunrising, and to end immediately upon sunset; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be daylight ... enough, begun or left, to discern a man's face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight; for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished: and besides, the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest; when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 224 (1769).

In regard to such a matter, an answer of nihil novit would, in the general case, be regarded as simply an evasion, and be treated as an admission of the debt.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 387 (4th ed. 1894).

NOBILITY

nobility, n. pl. 1. Persons of social or political preeminence, usu. derived by inheritance or from the sovereign. • In English law, there are various degrees of nobility, or peerage, such as dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, and their female counterparts. Nobility is generally created either by a writ of summons to sit in Parliament or by a royal grant through letters patent, and was once usu. accompanied by a large land grant. Nobility by writ descended to a person's bodily heirs. The modern practice is to grant nobility by letters patent, which provide limitations as to future heirs. The U.S. Constitution prohibits granting a title of nobility. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8.

"In England nobility is apt to be confounded with the peculiar institution of the British peerage. Yet nobility, in some shape or another, has existed in most places and times or the world's history, while the British peerage is an institution purely local, and one which has actually hindered the existence of a nobility in the sense which the word bears in most other countries.... Nobility, then, in the strict sense of the word, is the hereditary handing on from generation to generation of some acknowledged pre-eminence, a pre-eminence founded on hereditary succession, and on nothing else.... The pre-eminence so handed on may be of any kind, from substantial political power to mere social respect and precedence." 17 Encyclopaedia Britannica 538 (9th ed. 1907).

NOERR–PENNINGTON DOCTRINE

Noerr–Pennington doctrine. The principle that the First Amendment shields from liability (esp. under antitrust laws) companies that join together to lobby the government. • The doctrine derives from a line of Supreme Court cases beginning with *Eastern R.R. #### NO EVIDENCE no evidence. 1. The lack of a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable fact-finder to rule in favor of the party who bears the burden of proof <there is no evidence in the record about his whereabouts at midnight>. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party can move for judgment as a matter of law to claim that the other party — who bears the burden of proof — has been fully heard and has not offered sufficient evidence to prove one or more essential elements of the suit or defense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. Though such a contention is usually referred to as a no-evidence motion, the issue is not whether there was actually no evidence, but rather whether the evidence was sufficient for the fact-finder to be able to reasonably rule in favor of the other party. [Cases: Evidence 597; Federal Civil Procedure 2142.1. C.J.S. Evidence §§ 1301, 1304, 1306, 1339.]

“Since judgment as a matter of law deprives the party opposing the motion of a determination of the facts by a jury, it should be granted cautiously and sparingly. Nevertheless, the federal courts do not follow the rule that a scintilla of evidence is enough to create an issue for the jury. The question is not whether there is literally no evidence upon which the jury properly could find a verdict for that party.” 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2524, at 252–54 (2d ed. 1995).

2. Evidence that has no value in an attempt to prove a matter in issue <that testimony is no evidence of an alibi>.

NO-EYEWITNESS RULE

no-eyewitness rule. Torts. The largely defunct principle that if no direct evidence shows what a dead person did to avoid an accident, the jury may infer that the person acted with ordinary care for his or her own safety. • In a jurisdiction where the rule persists, a plaintiff in a survival or wrongful-death action can assert the rule to counter a defense of contributory negligence. [Cases: Death 58(1). C.J.S. Death §§ 141–145, 213–214.]

NO-FAULT

Criminal Law §§ 419–424.]

“In America the term [nolle prosequi] bears the same meaning as in England, with one exception. The attorney-general has not the same discretion with which English law invests him. Although in some States the prosecuting officer may enter a nolle prosequi at his discretion, in others the leave of the court must be obtained.” 17 Encyclopaedia Britannica 546 (9th ed. 1907).

“Nolle prosequi is a formal entry on the record by the prosecuting officer by which he declares that he will not prosecute the case further, either as to some of the counts of the indictment, or as to part of a divisible count, or as to some of the persons accused, or altogether. #### NOMEN TRANSCRIPTICIUM

A creditor's entry of a money debt into a new account (expensilatio) after closing another account, thereby creating, with the debtor's permission, a literal contract from an existing obligation, which may or may not have been enforceable. Pl. nomina transcripticia.

"The subject will, perhaps, become clearer by examples: ... A has in the past had dealings by way of sale, exchange, etc., with B, of which an account appears in his codex showing a balance against B for 500 aurei. A, with B's consent, closes this account by a statement on the opposite page (contrary to fact) that B has paid the aurei... and opens a new account with the statement (contrary to strict fact) that he has advanced to B the sum of 500 aurei. Hence the expensilatio represents a nomen transcripticium; a nomen (debt) has been transferred from one account to another .... In effect the old contracts between A and B have been novated, i.e. extinguished, one single obligation having been substituted in their place; obviously a course which offered many advantages to both parties, as it simplified the accounts, and saved disputes about the previous transactions." “It did not follow [in the 15th–18th centuries], of course, that the issue in a trial at nisi prius would ever get to the jury at all, for it might be that the plaintiff would be ‘non-suited’ on the ground that he had failed to prove something which was essential to his case or that the case which he had proved was different from that which he had pleaded.” Geoffrey Radcliffe & Geoffrey Cross, The English Legal System 184 (G.J. Hand & D.J. Bentley eds., 6th ed. 1977).

“Nonsuit ... is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence in that, even if all facts that plaintiff presents are true, the evidence is not, as a matter of law, sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a judgment. “A says to B, ‘If you will agree to pay me $100 for this horse you may have him and you may indicate your agreement by taking him.’ This is a physical fact, called an offer, consisting of certain muscular acts of A having certain physical results in B. The legal relations immediately following are (in part) as follows: B now has the privilege of taking the horse and A has no-right that he shall not ....” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 321 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“ ‘No-right’ is sometimes derided as being a purely negative concept. If a no-right is something that is not a right, the class of no-rights must, it is said, include elephants. The answer is that negative terms are often useful as alternative ways of stating propositions involving negatives. For instance, the terms ‘alien,’ ‘cold,’ and ‘dark’ are all negative or privative, because their meaning includes the idea of the absence of something else. The proposition that A is an alien means that A is not a British subject; in the one mode of statement the negative is incorporated in the noun, whereas in the other it is expressed as a separate word. Similarly the word ‘liberty’ is negative, and critics who attack the concept of no-right should logically attack the concept of liberty also.... [L]iberty means ‘no-duty not.’ ... [F]or the sake of clear thinking it is necessary to give each of the four meanings [of right] a separate name. Words like ‘no-right’ and ‘no-duty’ may seem uncouth at first sight, but it is surely a clear and useful statement to say that ‘right’ sometimes means ‘no-duty not.’ ” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 240–41 n.(u) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

Ultimately, the validity of all laws is tested against the “basic norm,” which may be as simple as the concept that all pronouncements of the monarch are to be obeyed. ## NOTARY PUBLIC notary public (noh-t<<schwa>>-ree), n. A person authorized by a state to administer oaths, certify documents, attest to the authenticity of signatures, and perform official acts in commercial matters, such as protesting negotiable instruments. — Often shortened to notary. [Cases: Notaries 1. C.J.S. Notaries § 2.] — Abbr. n.p. Pl. notaries public. — notarize, vb. — notarial, adj.

“A notary public is an officer long known to the civil law, and designated as registrarius, actuarius, or scrivarius.” John Proffatt, A Treatise on the Law Relating to the Office and Duties of Notaries Public § 1, at 1 (John F. Tyler & John J. Stephens eds., 2d ed. 1892).

“The notary public, or notary, is an official known in nearly all civilized countries. The office is of ancient origin. In Rome, during the republic, it existed, the title being tabelliones forenses, or personae publicae; and there are records of the appointment of notaries by the Frankish kings and the Popes as early as the ninth century. They were chiefly employed in drawing up legal documents; as scribes or scriveners they took minutes and made short drafts of writings, either of a public or a private nature. In modern times their more characteristic duty is to attest the genuineness of any deeds or writings, in order to render the same available as evidence of the facts therein contained.” Benjamin F. Rex, The Notaries' Manual § 1, at 1–2 (J.H. McMillan ed., 6th ed. 1913).

“In jurisdictions where the civilian law prevails, such as in the countries of continental Europe, a notary public is a public official who serves as a public witness of facts transacted by private parties ... and also serves as impartial legal advisor for the parties involved.... In colonial Louisiana, the notary public had the same rank and dignity as his continental civilian ancestor.... Although notaries still constitute a protected profession in present-day Louisiana, holding office for life provided they renew their bonds periodically in compliance with the governing statute, the importance of their function has diminished over the years to the point that it has been said that a Louisiana notary is no longer a truly civilian notary. Indeed, the trained lawyer is nowadays the Louisiana, and American, counterpart of the continental civilian notary.” Saul Litvinoff, 5 Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: The Law of Obligations 296–97 (2d ed. 2001).

It also denies the plaintiff's possession, title, or right of possession of the land or goods.” Benjamin J. This is one of the instances in which lawyers rather mystically, though soundly, say that a decision is ‘not law.’ ” William M. #### NOVATION novation (noh-vay-sh<<schwa>>n), n.1. The act of substituting for an old obligation a new one that either replaces an existing obligation with a new obligation or replaces an original party with a new party. • A novation may substitute (1) a new obligation between the same parties, (2) a new debtor, or (3) a new creditor. 2. A contract that (1) immediately discharges either a previous contractual duty or a duty to make compensation, (2) creates a new contractual duty, and (3) includes as a party one who neither owed the previous duty nor was entitled to its performance. — Also termed substituted agreement; (Scots law) innovation.; (Roman law) novatio (noh-vay-shee-oh). See STIPULATIO AQUILIANA; substituted contract under CONTRACT; ACCORD(2). [Cases: Novation 1. C.J.S. Novation §§ 2–4, 9–10, 14–16.] — novate (noh-vay-tornoh-vayt), vb. — novatory (noh-v<<schwa>>-tor-ee), adj.

“Novation is the emerging and transfer of a prior debt into another obligation either civil or natural, that is, the constitution of a new obligation in such a way as to destroy a prior one.” Ulpian, D. 46.2.1 pr.

“The only way in which it is possible to transfer contractual duties to a third party is by the process of novation, which requires the consent of the other party to the contract. In fact novation really amounts to the extinction of the old obligation, and the creation of a new one, rather than to the transfer of the obligation from one person to another. Thus if B owes A £100, and C owes B the same amount, B cannot transfer to C the legal duty of paying his debt to A without A's consent. But if A agrees to accept C as a debtor in place of B, and if C agrees to accept A as his creditor in place of B, the three parties may make a tripartite agreement to this effect, known as novation. The effect of this is to extinguish B's liability to A and create a new liability on the part of C.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 283 (3d ed. 1981).

“The word ‘novation’ is used in a variety of senses. Courts frequently use it as synonymous with ‘substituted contract.’ Most academic writers and both contracts restatements, however, restrict its use to describe a substituted contract involving at least one obligor or obligee who was not a party to the original contract.... The development of a separate category under the rubric ‘novation’ is doubtless traceable to problems of consideration formerly thought to be present in such contracts because of the former common law rule that consideration must be supplied by the promisee. This rule has long been laid to rest almost everywhere.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11–8, at 444–45 (3d ed. 1987).

Newness of an invention both in form and in function or performance; the strict statutory requirement that this originality be demonstrated before an invention is patentable. • Proving novelty is one purpose of the rigorous and expensive examination process. If the invention has been previously patented, described in a publication, known or used by others, or sold, it is not novel. 35 USCA § 102. Cf. NONOBVIOUSNESS. [Cases: Patents 37.C.J.S. Patents §§ 29–30.]

“Although the statute uses the words ‘not known,’ these are not to be taken literally. Novelty consists primarily in the invention not having been used by others in the United States or patented

absolute novelty. Patents. The rule in most countries, but not in the United States, that an inventor must always file a patent application before the invention is publicly used, placed on sale, or disclosed. • Under U.S. law, an inventor is given a one-year grace period — beginning on the date of any public use, sale, offer of sale, or publication by the inventor or the inventor's agent — in which to file a patent application. After that, the patent is barred. Canada and Mexico also give the first inventor or the inventor's assignees a one-year grace period for filing, but they bar a patent for the first inventor if the invention is independently developed and disclosed by someone else during that time. — Also termed absolute-novelty requirement. novodamus (noh-v<<schwa>>-day-m<<schwa>>s), n. [Latin novo damus “we grant anew”] Scots law. 1. A clause in a charter that progressively grants certain rights anew. • The phrase

2. A charter containing such a clause.

“This clause is subjoined to the dispositive clause; and by it the superior, whether the Crown or a subject, grants de novo the subjects, rights, or privileges therein described. Such a clause is usually inserted where the vassal is sensible of some defect or flaw in the former right .... This was also the correct form of proceeding ... when the vassal wished to get free of burdens chargeable upon the subject for casualties due to the superior; for a charter of novodamus is accounted in law an original right, which imports a discharge of all prior burdens.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 747 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

“A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard.” Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 388, 47 S.Ct. 114, 118 (1926).

“A ‘nuisance’ is a state of affairs. To conduct a nuisance is a tort. In torts, the word ‘nuisance’ has had an extremely elastic meaning; sometimes it is little more than a pejorative term, a weasel word used as a substitute for reasoning .... The general distinction between a nuisance and a trespass is that the trespass flows from a physical invasion and the nuisance does not.” Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 7.2, at 417 (2d ed. 1993).

2. Loosely, an act or failure to act resulting in an interference with the use or enjoyment of property. • In this sense, the term denotes the action causing the interference, rather than the resulting condition <the Slocums' playing electric guitars in their yard constituted a nuisance to their neighbors>. [Cases: Nuisance 3, 61. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 4, 10–14, 18, 20–21, 25–26, 28, 31–57, 59–62.]“There is perhaps no more impenetrable jungle in the entire law than that which surrounds the word ‘nuisance.’ It has meant all things to all people, and has been applied indiscriminately to everything from an alarming advertisement to a cockroach baked in a pie.” Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 86, at 616 (W. Page Keeton et al., 5th ed. 1984).

3. The class of torts arising from such conditions, acts, or failures to act when they occur unreasonably. — Also termed actionable nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 3, 61. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 4, 10–14, 18, 20–21, 25–26, 28, 31–57, 59–62.]“Nuisance is really a field of tortious liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct: the feature which gives it unity is the interest invaded — that of the use and enjoyment of land. The tort emphasises the harm to the plaintiff rather than the conduct of the defendant.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 50–51 (17th ed. 1977).

abatable nuisance. 1. A nuisance so easily removable that the aggrieved party may lawfully cure the problem without notice to the liable party, such as overhanging tree branches. [Cases:

Nuisance 19. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 92–97, 99.] 2. A nuisance that reasonable persons would regard as being removable by reasonable means.

absolute nuisance. 1. Interference with a property right that a court considers fixed or invariable, such as a riparian owner's right to use a stream in its natural condition. [Cases: Nuisance 1–7. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 2–8, 10–15, 17–45, 47–57, 59–62.] 2. See nuisance per se. 3. Interference in a place where it does not reasonably belong, even if the interfering party is careful. 4. Interference for which a defendant is held strictly liable for resulting harm, esp. in the nature of pollution. Cf. qualified nuisance.

Sense (4) has been disapproved: “[T]he use of the term ‘nuisance’ to describe the tort liability that sometimes results from accidental invasions produces too much confusion.” W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 89, at 637 (5th ed. 1984).

anticipatory nuisance. A condition that, although not yet at the level of a nuisance, is very likely to become one, so that a party may obtain an injunction prohibiting the condition. — Also termed prospective nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 1. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 2–8, 10–14, 18–21.]

attractive nuisance. A dangerous condition that may attract children onto land, thereby causing a risk to their safety. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence 1172, 1175. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 399, 476–477, 494–526.]

“[T]he doctrine acquired the unfortunate misnomer ‘attractive nuisance,’ a label which persists to this day. It cannot be taken literally, since the courts have now largely rejected the notion that the child must be attracted by that which injures him, and whether or not the condition is in fact a ‘nuisance’ has nothing at all to do with defendant's liability to the child.” Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 89 (2d ed. 1992).

cognate nuisance. Rare. Interference with an easement.

“The term nuisance is applied to torts of two distinct groups, first, acts of wrongful user by an owner or possessor of land resulting in an unreasonable interference with the rights of enjoyment of the owner or possessor of neighboring land, and, second, wrongful interferences with easements or other incorporeal rights.” William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 170 (1930).

“When an easement was interfered with, an action on the case lay as a matter of course.... Such an interference is sometimes called ‘cognate nuisance’ to distinguish it from interferences with the personal enjoyment of the incidents of occupying the land.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 486 (3d ed. 1990).

continuing nuisance. A nuisance that is either uninterrupted or frequently recurring. • It need not be constant or unceasing, but it must occur often enough that it is almost continuous. [Cases: Nuisance 4, 19. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 25–27, 92–97, 99.]

legalized nuisance. A nuisance sanctioned by legislative, executive, or other official action and therefore immune from liability, such as a city park.

mixed nuisance.A condition that is both a private nuisance and a public nuisance, so that it is dangerous to the community at large but also causes particular harm to private individuals. [Cases: Nuisance 72. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 65–66.]

nuisance dependent on negligence.See qualified nuisance.

nuisance in fact.A nuisance existing because of the circumstances of the use or the particular location. • For example, a machine emitting high-frequency sound may be a nuisance only if a person's dog lives near enough to the noise to be disturbed by it. — Also termed nuisance per accidens.

nuisance per se (p<<schwa>>r say). Interference so severe that it would constitute a nuisance under any circumstances; a nuisance regardless of location or circumstances of use, such as a leaky nuclear-waste storage facility. — Also termed nuisance at law; absolute nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 4. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 25–27.]

permanent nuisance.A nuisance that cannot readily be abated at reasonable expense. Cf. temporary nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 1, 4. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 2–8, 10–14, 18–21, 25–27.]

private nuisance.A condition that interferes with a person's enjoyment of property; esp., a structure or other condition erected or put on nearby land, creating or continuing an invasion of the actor's land and amounting to a trespass to it. • The condition constitutes a tort for which the adversely affected person may recover damages or obtain an injunction. [Cases: Nuisance 1. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 2–8, 10–14, 18–21.]

“Trespass and private nuisance are alike in that each is a field of tort liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct. In each, liability may arise from an intentional or an unintentional invasion. For an intentional trespass, there is liability without harm; for a private nuisance, there is no liability without significant harm.... In private nuisance an intentional interference with the plaintiff's use or enjoyment is not of itself a tort, and unreasonableness of the interference is necessary for liability.” Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821D cmt. d (1979).

“The different ways and combinations of ways in which the interest in the use or enjoyment of land may be invaded are infinitely variable. A private nuisance may consist of an interference with the physical condition of the land itself, as by vibration or blasting which damages a house, the destruction of crops, flooding, raising the water table, or the pollution of a stream or of an underground water supply.” W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 87, at 619 (5th ed. 1984).

public nuisance.An unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public, such as a condition dangerous to health, offensive to community moral standards, or unlawfully obstructing the public in the free use of public property. • Such a nuisance may lead to a civil injunction or criminal prosecution. — Also termed common nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 59–96. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant § 344; Nuisances §§ 4, 9–10, 14–16, 18, 20–21, 24, 34–39, 41–66,

“Public and private nuisances are not in reality two species of the same genus at all. There is no generic conception which includes the crime of keeping a common gaming-house and the tort of allowing one's trees to overhang the land of a neighbour. A public nuisance falls within the law of torts only in so far as it may in the particular case constitute some form of tort also. Thus the obstruction of a highway is a public nuisance; but if it causes any special and peculiar damage to an individual, it is also a tort actionable at his suit.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 49–50 (17th ed. 1977).

“[P]ublic nuisance ... is an amorphous and unsatisfactory area of the law covering an ill-assorted collection of wrongs, some of which have little or no association with tort and only appear to fill a gap in criminal law. Others cover what could be generally described as ‘noisome trade,’ which could be dealt with under some form of statutory nuisance. Yet a third group deals with what we would generally describe as ‘abuses of the highway’ ....” R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 254 (1984).

qualified nuisance. A condition that, though lawful in itself, is so negligently permitted to exist that it creates an unreasonable risk of harm and, in due course, actually results in injury to another. • It involves neither an intentional act nor a hazardous activity. — Also termed nuisance dependent on negligence. Cf. absolute nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 1, 6, 59. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 2–8, 10–15, 18–21, 24.]

recurrent nuisance. A nuisance that occurs from time to time with distinct intervals between occurrences, rather than being continuous or only briefly interrupted.

temporary nuisance. A nuisance that can be corrected by a reasonable expenditure of money or labor. Cf. permanent nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 4, 19. C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 25–27, 92–97, 99.]

If the marriage is relatively null, civil effects flow until the declaration of nullity. On the other hand, the marriage that is absolutely null generally produces civil effects only if one or both of the spouses were in good faith and only so long as good faith lasts.” 16 Katherine S.
