“The proper general issue in debt on judgments is ‘nul tiel record,’ which denies the existence of the record alleged. Nul tiel record sets up: (1) the defense either that there is no record at all in existence; or (2) one different from that which the defendant has declared of; or (3) that the judgment is void on the face of the record.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 186, at 330 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

[I]n real actions, nul tort, no wrong done; nul disseisin, no disseisin; and in a writ of right, that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These pleas are called the general issue, because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue; by which we mean a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 305 (1768).

OATH

oath. 1. A solemn declaration, accompanied by a swearing to God or a revered person or thing, that one's statement is true or that one will be bound to a promise. • The person making the oath implicitly invites punishment if the statement is untrue or the promise is broken. The legal effect of an oath is to subject the person to penalties for perjury if the testimony is false. [Cases: Oath 1; Witnesses 227. C.J.S. Oaths and Affirmations §§ 1–2, 8–11; Witnesses§ 394.] 2. A statement or promise made by such a declaration. 3. A form of words used for such a declaration. 4. A formal declaration made solemn without a swearing to God or a revered person or thing; AFFIRMATION.

“The word ‘oath’ (apart from its use to indicate a profane expression) has two very different meanings: (1) a solemn appeal to God in attestation of the truth of a statement or the binding character of such a promise; (2) a statement or promise made under the sanction of such an appeal.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 515 (3d ed. 1982).

assertory oath (<<schwa>>-s<<schwa>>r-<<schwa>>-ree). An oath by which one attests to some factual matter, rather than making a promise about one's future conduct. • A courtroom witness typically takes such an oath.

“Oath (Juramentum) Is a calling Almighty God to witness that the Testimony is true; therefore it is aptly termed Sacramentum, a Holy Band, a Sacred Tye, or Godly Vow. And it is called a Corporal Oath, because the party when he swears, toucheth with his right hand the Holy Evangelists or Book of the New Testament.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

OBLIGATION

obligation, n. 1. A legal or moral duty to do or not do something. • The word has many wide and varied meanings. It may refer to anything that a person is bound to do or forbear from doing, whether the duty is imposed by law, contract, promise, social relations, courtesy, kindness, or morality. 2. A formal, binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain amount or to do a certain thing for a particular person or set of persons; esp., a duty arising by contract. — Also termed (in sense 2) civil obligation. See DUTY(1); LIABILITY(1). [Cases: Contracts 1. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 2–3, 9, 12.] 3. Civil law. A legal relationship in which one person, the obligor, is bound to render a performance in favor of another, the obligee. La. Civ. Code art. 1756.

“[I]n English-speaking countries an unfortunate habit has arisen of using ‘obligation’ in a lax manner as co-extensive with duties of every kind.” Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 82 (1896).

“Obligation in its popular sense is merely a synonym for duty. Its legal sense, derived from Roman law, differs from this in several respects. In the first place, obligations are merely one class of duties, namely, those which are the correlatives of rights in personam. An obligation is the vinculum juris, or bond of legal necessity, which binds together two or more determinate individuals.... Secondly, the term obligatio is in law the name, not merely of the duty, but also of the correlative right. It denotes the legal relation or vinculum juris in its entirety, including the right of the one party, no less than the liability of the other. Looked at from the point of view of the person entitled, an obligation is a right; looked at from the point of view of the person bound, it is a duty.... An obligation, therefore, may be defined as a proprietary right in personam or a duty which corresponds to such a right.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 460 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“[I]n its more general acceptance, the word ‘obligation’ means something that the law or morals command a person to do, a command that is made effective by the imposition of a sanction if the person fails to obey or comply. When given that reference, the word ‘obligation’ is made synonymous with the word ‘duty.’ In that sense it is said, for example, that all citizens of a certain age are under an obligation to fulfill their military duties ....

“In another sense, the word ‘obligation’ means an instrument in writing, however informal, whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of a sum of money. In commercial law, for example, the word ‘obligation’ may mean a negotiable instrument ....“In the technical terminology of the civil codes, however, the word ‘obligation’ means a legal bond that binds two persons in such a way that one of them, the creditor or obligee, is entitled to demand from the other, the debtor or obligor, a certain performance.” Saul Litvinoff, 5 Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: The Law of Obligations 1–2 (2d ed. 2001).absolute obligation.An obligation requiring strict fulfillment according to the terms of the engagement, without any alternatives to the obligor.

conjunctive obligation. An obligation composed of multiple performances that can be separately rendered or enforced; esp., an obligation in which several objects are connected by and (not or) or are in some other way clearly meant to be separately included in the contract. • For example, a loan agreement's conjunctive obligation may require payment of four loan installments and delivery of a deed of trust. Each loan installment and the deed's delivery is a separate, enforceable performance.

conventional obligation. An obligation that results from agreement of the parties; a contractual obligation. Cf. obediential obligation. — Also termed express obligation; civil obligation.

natural obligation. 1. Civil law. A moral duty that is not enforceable by judicial action. • Natural obligations are recognized in civil-law jurisdictions. While they are not enforceable by judicial action, something that has been performed under a natural obligation may not be reclaimed. For example, if an indigent patient in a hospital has no legal obligation to pay for the treatment but does so anyway, that person cannot later reclaim the payments voluntarily made. — Also termed obligatio naturalis. 2. See moral obligation.

“A solidary obligation means the separate liability of several persons in respect of one and the same object. The normal case of a solidary obligation is a joint delict, as when two or more persons, acting jointly, do damage to property or commit a theft. So far as the obligation creates a duty to pay damages, it is solidary. Each of the co-delinquents is liable to make good the whole of the same damage.” Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 361–62 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

Something (such as an expression or act) that has this characteristic. See CONTEMPORARY COMMUNITY STANDARD. Cf. INDECENCY.

“Obscenity is not deemed to be protected by the First Amendment, and the operative legal tests for obscenity are spongy and leave much to the vagaries of juries asked to evaluate expert testimony on literary merit, offensiveness, and other unmeasurables.” Richard A. ## OFFENSE offense (<<schwa>>-fents).1. A violation of the law; a crime, often a minor one. See CRIME. — Also termed criminal offense. [Cases: Criminal Law 1. C.J.S. Affray §§ 2–12; Criminal Law §§ 2–8, 13.]

“The terms ‘crime,’ ‘offense,’ and ‘criminal offense’ are all said to be synonymous, and ordinarily used interchangeably. ‘Offense’ may comprehend every crime and misdemeanor, or may be used in a specific sense as synonymous with ‘felony’ or with ‘misdemeanor,’ as the case may be, or as signifying a crime of lesser grade, or an act not indictable, but punishable summarily or by the forfeiture of a penalty.” 22 C.J.S. Criminal Law § 3, at 4 (1989).

acquisitive offense.An offense characterized by the unlawful appropriation of another's property. • This is a generic term that refers to a variety of crimes (such as larceny) rather than a particular one.

allied offense.A crime with elements so similar to those of another that the commission of the one is automatically the commission of the other.

anticipatory offense.See inchoate offense.

arrestable offense.English law. An offense for which the punishment is fixed by law or for which a statute authorizes imprisonment for five years, or an attempt to commit such an offense. • This statutory category, created in 1967, abolished the traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) arrestable offence.

bailable offense. A criminal charge for which a defendant may be released from custody after providing proper security <misdemeanor theft is a bailable offense>. [Cases: Bail 43. C.J.S. Bail; Release and Detention Pending Proceedings §§ 18–23.]

capital offense. A crime for which the death penalty may be imposed. — Also termed capital crime. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment 1666.]

civil offense. See public tort under TORT.

cognate offense. A lesser offense that is related to the greater offense because it shares several of the elements of the greater offense and is of the same class or category. • For example, shoplifting is a cognate offense of larceny because both crimes require the element of taking property with the intent to deprive the rightful owner of that property. Cf. lesser included offense. [Cases: Indictment and Information 191(.5).]

compound offense. An offense composed of one or more separate offenses. • For example, robbery is a compound offense composed of larceny and assault.

continuing offense. A crime (such as a conspiracy) that is committed over a period of time, so that the last act of the crime controls when the statute of limitations begins to run. [Cases: Criminal Law 150. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 200–201.]

cumulative offense. An offense committed by repeating the same act at different times.

divisible offense. A crime that includes one or more crimes of lesser grade. • For example, murder is a divisible offense comprising assault, battery, and assault with intent to kill.

impeachable offense. See IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE.

inchoate offense. A step toward the commission of another crime, the step in itself being serious enough to merit punishment. • The three inchoate offenses are attempt, conspiracy, and solicitation. The term is sometimes criticized (see quot. below). — Also termed anticipatory offense; inchoate crime; preliminary crime. [Cases: Conspiracy 23.1; Criminal Law 44. C.J.S. Conspiracy §§ 98, 100–103, 110; Criminal Law §§ 114–123.]

“These preliminary crimes have sometimes been erroneously described as ‘inchoate’ offences. This is misleading because the word ‘inchoate’ connotes something which is not yet completed, and it is therefore not accurately used to denote something which is itself complete, even though it be a link in a chain of events leading to some object which is not yet attained. The offence of incitement is fully performed even though the person incited immediately repudiates the suggested deed, a conspiracy is committed although the conspirators have not yet moved to execute their purposed crime, and the performance of a criminal attempt must always have been reached before the end is gained. In all these instances it is the ultimate crime which is inchoate and not the preliminary crime, the position indeed being just the same as in the example imagined above of a man who stole a revolver and committed other crimes in order to effect his purpose of murder. There the murder was inchoate, but the larceny and other crimes (including the attempt) were completed." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 77 (16th ed. 1952).

included offense. See lesser included offense.

index offense. One of eight classes of crimes reported annually by the FBI in the Uniform Crime Report. • The eight classes are murder (and nonnegligent homicide), rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny-theft, arson, and auto theft. — Also termed index crime.

indictable offense. A crime that can be prosecuted only by indictment. • In federal court, such an offense is one punishable by death or by imprisonment for more than one year or at hard labor. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(a). See INDICTMENT. [Cases: Indictment and Information 3. C.J.S. Indictments and Informations § 6.]

joint offense. An offense (such as conspiracy) committed by the participation of two or more persons.

lesser included offense. A crime that is composed of some, but not all, of the elements of a more serious crime and that is necessarily committed in carrying out the greater crime <battery is a lesser included offense of murder>. • For double-jeopardy purposes, a lesser included offense is considered the "same offense" as the greater offense, so that acquittal or conviction of either offense precludes a separate trial for the other. — Also termed lesser offense; included offense; necessarily included offense. Cf. cognate offense predicate act; predicate offense. [Cases: Indictment and Information 189, 191. C.J.S. Indictments and Informations §§ 218, 220, 230–231, 242.]

liquor offense. Any crime involving the inappropriate use or sale of intoxicating liquor. See DRAM-SHOP LIABILITY; DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors 131–176. C.J.S. Intoxicating Liquors §§ 2–20, 222, 237–288.]

major offense. An offense the commission of which involves one or more lesser included offenses, as murder may include assault and battery.

military offense. See MILITARY OFFENSE.

multiple offense. An offense that violates more than one law but that may require different proof so that an acquittal or conviction under one statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution under another. [Cases: Double Jeopardy 134. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 253.]

necessarily included offense. See lesser included offense.

negligent offense. A violation of law arising from a defective discharge of duty or from

object offense. The crime that is the object of the defendant's attempt, solicitation, conspiracy, or complicity. • For example, murder is the object offense in a charge of attempted murder. — Also termed target offense.

offense against property. A crime against another's personal property. • The common-law offenses against property were larceny, embezzlement, cheating, cheating by false pretenses, robbery, receiving stolen goods, malicious mischief, forgery, and uttering forged instruments. Although the term crimes against property, a common term in modern usage, includes crimes against real property, the term offense against property is traditionally restricted to personal property. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PROPERTY.

offense against public justice and authority. A crime that impairs the administration of justice. • The common-law offenses of this type were obstruction of justice, barratry, maintenance, champerty, embracery, escape, prison breach, rescue, misprision of felony, compounding a crime, subornation of perjury, bribery, and misconduct in office.

offense against the habitation. A crime against another's house — traditionally either arson or burglary.

offense against the person. A crime against the body of another human being. • The common-law offenses against the person were murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, assault, battery, robbery, false imprisonment, abortion, seduction, kidnapping, and abduction. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

A crime traditionally viewed as endangering the whole of society. • The common-law offenses of this type were nuisance, bigamy, adultery, fornication, lewdness, illicit cohabitation, incest, miscegenation, sodomy, bestiality, buggery, abortion, and seduction.

[Cases: Breach of the Peace 1–14. C.J.S. Breach of the Peace §§ 2–13; Domestic Abuse and Violence §§ 3, 6.]

petty offense. A minor or insignificant crime. 18 USCA § 19. See MISDEMEANOR. Cf. serious offense.

“[W]e find ... an apparent implication that a ‘petty offense’ is not a ‘crime.’ Much could be said for such a position but it is not the law at the present time. In the federal penal code, for example, it is provided that any misdemeanor ‘the penalty for which does not exceed imprisonment for a period of six months or a fine of not more than $500, or both, is a petty offense.’ ” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 22 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting 18 USCA § 1(3)).

separate offense. 1. An offense arising out of the same event as another offense but containing some differences in elements of proof. • A person may be tried, convicted, and sentenced for each separate offense. 2. An offense arising out of a different event entirely from another offense under consideration.

serious offense. An offense not classified as a petty offense and usu. carrying at least a six-month sentence. — Also termed serious crime. Cf. petty offense.

sexual offense. An offense involving unlawful sexual conduct, such as prostitution, indecent exposure, incest, pederasty, and bestiality.

status offense. 1. See status crime under CRIME. 2. A minor's violation of the juvenile code by doing some act that would not be considered illegal if an adult did it, but that indicates that the minor is beyond parental control. • Examples include running away from home, truancy, and incorrigibility. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

strict-liability offense. An offense for which the action alone is enough to warrant a conviction, with no need to prove a mental state. • For example, illegal parking is a strict-liability offense.

substantive offense (s<<schwa>>b-st<<schwa>>n-tiv). A crime that is complete in itself and is not dependent on another crime for one of its elements. — Also termed substantive crime; substantive felony.

summary offense. An offense (such as a petty misdemeanor) that can be prosecuted without an indictment. Cf. indictable offense.

unnatural offense. See SODOMY.

OFFER

offer, n.1. The act or an instance of presenting something for acceptance <the prosecutor's offer of immunity>.2. A promise to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future, conditioned on an act, forbearance, or return promise being given in exchange for the promise or its performance; a display of willingness to enter into a contract on specified terms, made in a way that would lead a reasonable person to understand that an acceptance, having been sought, will result in a binding contract <she accepted the $750 offer on the Victorian armoire>. Cf. ACCEPTANCE. [Cases: Contracts 16; Sales 22(.5), 23(.5); Vendor and Purchaser 16(1), 17. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 37–41, 44, 46, 55–56, 58; Sales §§ 29–31, 33; Vendor and Purchaser §§ 9–18.]

“[A]n offer is, in effect, a promise by the offeror to do or abstain from doing something, provided that the offeree will accept the offer and pay or promise to pay the ‘price’ of the offer. The price, of course, need not be a monetary one. In fact, in bilateral contracts, as we explained earlier, the mere promise of payment of the price suffices to conclude the contract, while in a unilateral contract it is the actual payment of the price which is required.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 44 (3d ed. 1981).

irrevocable offer (i-rev-<<schwa>>-k<<schwa>>-b<<schwa>>l). An offer that includes a promise to keep it open for a specified period, during which the offer cannot be withdrawn without the offeror's becoming subject to liability for breach of contract. • Traditionally, this type of promise must be supported by consideration to be enforceable, but under UCC § 2-205, a merchant's signed, written offer giving assurances that it will be held open — but lacking consideration — is nonetheless irrevocable for the stated period (or, if not stated, for a reasonable time not exceeding three months). — Also termed (in the UCC) firm offer; (specif.) merchant's firm offer. [Cases: Contracts 16; Sales 22; Vendor and Purchaser 18(.5). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 37–41, 44, 46, 55–56, 58; Sales §§ 29–31, 33; Vendor and Purchaser §§ 98–100, 103–106, 115–116.]

“It has sometimes been asserted that an irrevocable offer is ‘a legal impossibility.’ See Langdell, Summary of the Law of Contracts, § 178, also § 4; Wormser, ‘The True Conception of Unilateral Contracts,’ 26 Yale Law Journal, 137, note; Lee, Title Contracts, in Jenks' Dig. of Eng. Civ. Law, § 195; Ashley, Contracts, § 13. A close analysis shows that there is nothing impossible either in the conception itself or in its application. If we define ‘offer’ as an act on the part of the offeror ..., then no offer can ever be revoked, for it is of yesterday — it is indeed factum. But if we mean by ‘offer’ the legal relation that results from the offeror's act, the power then given to the offeree of creating contractual relations by doing certain voluntary acts on his part, then the offer may be either revocable or irrevocable according to the circumstances. The idea of an irrevocable power is not at all an unfamiliar one.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 53–54 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

Pure monopoly is akin to a single player game, such as solitaire, but the oligopoly model may be more like a multihand poker game.... Unlike poker, where for any hand one player will win all of the money bet, the players in an oligopolistic market can actually increase the returns that all of them receive through disciplined pricing.” Lawrence A. Ordinary executors ad omissa et male appretiata ought to call the principal executor to their confirmation, or it will be null; but this rule does not hold in the case of executors–creditors.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 753 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

“Onera realia ... are burdens or encumbrances affecting land, and exigible from it. They are distinguished from personal burdens, which only affect and are exigible from the person upon whom they lie. A single example may illustrate the nature of both. It is a common enough practice, when lands are sold, for the seller not to insist on payment of the full price at the time of the sale, but to allow a part of the price to remain on the lands as a burden. If the balance so left be declared ... to be a real lien ... it is a burden for which the lands may be attached and sold, into whose possession soever they may come. But if the burden of payment of the remainder of the price be laid upon the purchaser alone, and not upon the lands, then the burden is personal, and a subsequent purchaser from him incurs no liability therefor, the lands not being affected. The result is usually a reversal of the judgment below .... The parties are given no opportunity to file briefs on the merits or to argue orally before the Court. Indeed, they are given no formal notice whatever of the Court's intention to dispose of the certiorari papers in this manner ....” Robert L. applies to a particular case. — Also termed opinion letter. “The essence of a lawyer's job is to obtain the facts and the law with due diligence and then to give advice. But, strangely, no controlling definition has evolved for what is an ‘opinion.’ The lack of a definition is not crucial for some purposes. On the other hand, a definition is vital in other areas; for example, to determine within a law firm when peer review is necessary ....” 8 Arnold S. Jacobs, Opinion Letters in Securities Matters § 3, at Intro-12 (1998).

Private attorneys frequently render legal opinions on the ownership of real estate or minerals, insurance coverage, and corporate transactions. A party may be entitled to rely on a legal opinion, depending on factors such as the identity of the parties to whom the opinion was addressed, the nature of the opinion, and the law governing these opinions. See coverage opinion.

patentability opinion. Patents. #### OPINION EVIDENCE

OPINION RULE

opinion rule. Evidence. The principle that a witness should testify to facts, not opinions, and that a nonexpert witness's opinions are often excludable from evidence. • Traditionally, this principle is regarded as one of the important exclusionary rules in evidence law. It is based on the idea that a witness who has observed data should provide the most factual evidence possible, leaving the jury to draw inferences and conclusions from the evidence. Under this system, the witness's opinion is unnecessary. Today, opinions are admissible if rationally based on a witness's perceptions and helpful to the fact-finder. [Cases: Criminal Law 448; Evidence 471, 505. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 1050; Evidence §§ 509–512, 518–519, 528–529, 533, 535–537, 542, 556, 558–562, 582, 588–590, 592–593, 596–597, 609; Executions § 435.]

“This rule [the opinion rule] is an historical blunder, for the early cases excluding ‘opinion’ meant a belief by a person who had personally seen and known nothing, and was therefore not qualified to speak; whereas the modern rule applies it to witnesses who have had personal observation as a basis for their inference. Moreover, it is a senseless rule, for not once in a thousand times can the observed data be exactly and fully reproduced in words. Still further, no harm could be done by letting the witness offer his inference, except perhaps the waste of a moment's time, whereas the application of the rule wastes vastly more time. And finally the rule is so pedantically applied by most courts that it excludes the most valuable testimony, such as would be used in all affairs of life outside a court room.” John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 156 (1935).

“The [opinion] rule in its stark simplicity might be interpreted as excluding all value judgments, that is to say all statements not being factual propositions susceptible of some sort of empirical proof or disproof. The rule, if it is to be given any purely logical meaning at all, must be interpreted as excluding at least all inferences drawn from perceived data. Even if value judgments are saved by construing the rule as having application only to factual propositions, the rule would seem to purport to exclude all such propositions in the formulation of which inference by the witness has played some part.” Zelman Cowen, Essays on the Law of Evidence 162 (1956).

ORBATION

ordeal. Hist. A primitive form of trial in which an accused person was subjected to a usu. dangerous or painful physical test, the result being considered a divine revelation of the person's guilt or innocence. • The participants believed that God would reveal a person's culpability by protecting an innocent person from some or all consequences of the ordeal. The ordeal was commonly used in Europe until the 13th century, but only sporadically after 1215, when the Fourth Lateran Council forbade the clergy from participating in ordeals. — Also termed trial by ordeal; judicium Dei (“judgment of God”); vulgaris purgatio. Cf. CANFARA.

“Ordeals involved an appeal to God to reveal the truth in human disputes, and they required priestly participation to achieve this rapport with the Deity. Several forms of ordeal were recognised by the early Christian Church, but in England they usually took the form of fire or water. In the former, a piece of iron was put into a fire and then in the party's hand; the hand was bound, and inspected a few days later: if the burn had festered, God was taken to have decided against the party. The ordeal of cold water required the party to be trussed and lowered into a pond;

if he sank, the water was deemed to have 'received him' with God's blessing, and so he was quickly fished out.... In 1215, the Lateran Council ... took the decisive step of forbidding clergy to participate any more in ordeals. This led in England to the introduction of the criminal trial jury." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 5–6 (3d ed. 1990).

bread-and-cheese ordeal. See ordeal of the morsel.

ordeal by fire. An ordeal in which the accused person was forced to hold a piece of hot metal or to walk barefoot across a hot surface, the judgment of guilt or innocence depending on how quickly and cleanly the person's hands or feet healed. • Typically the person's hand was bandaged and, upon the bandage's removal three days later, was examined for festers (indicating guilt). — Also termed fire ordeal; ordeal by hot iron; ordeal of fire.

"Such evidence as we have seems to show that the ordeal of hot iron was so arranged as to give the accused a considerable chance of escape." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 599 (2d ed. 1899).

ordeal by water. 1. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence depended on whether the accused person floated or sank after being submerged in cold water. • A priest would first consecrate the pool of water, adjuring it to receive the innocent but reject the guilty. An accused who sank was declared innocent; one who floated was adjudged guilty because floating revealed the water's (and therefore God's) rejection of the person. This type of ordeal was used esp. in witchcraft trials. — Also termed ordeal by cold water; cold-water ordeal; ordeal of cold water; (in ecclesiastical law) aquae frigidae iudicium. 2. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence was determined by how quickly the accused person's arm healed after being placed in boiling water. • Often the person was forced to retrieve a stone from the bottom of a pot of boiling water. The person's hand and arm were then bandaged and, upon the bandage's removal three days later, were examined for festers (indicating guilt). — Also termed (in sense 2) ordeal by hot water; hot-water ordeal; ordeal of hot water; (in both senses) water ordeal; ordeal of water; (in ecclesiastical law) aquae ferventis iudicium; aenum.

"The ordeal of water was a very singular institution. Sinking was the sign of innocence, floating the sign of guilt. As any one would sink unless he understood how to float, and intentionally did so, it is difficult to see how any one could ever be convicted by this means. Is it possible that this ordeal may have been an honourable form of suicide, like the Japanese happy despatch? In nearly every case the accused would sink. This would prove his innocence, indeed, but there would be no need to take him out. He would thus die honourably. If by any accident he floated, he would be put to death disgracefully." 1 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 73 (1883).

ordeal of the morsel. An ordeal in which the person who was to make the proof was given a one-ounce piece of bread or cheese that a priest had solemnly charged to stick in the throat of the guilty. • A person who choked was declared guilty; a person who did not was declared innocent. — Also termed corsnaed; corsned; trial by corsnaed; judicial morsel; morsel of execration.

single ordeal. An ordeal prescribed for someone accused of a less serious crime and involving less risk or torture than a triple ordeal. • For example, a single ordeal by fire required the accused to pick up a red-hot piece of iron weighing one pound, while a triple ordeal involved a piece of iron weighing three pounds.

triple ordeal. An ordeal prescribed for someone accused of a more serious crime and involving more risk or torture than a single ordeal. • For example, a triple ordeal by water required the accused to submerge an arm into boiling water up to the elbow, while a single ordeal required the arm to be submerged only to the wrist. — Also termed threefold ordeal.

ORDELS

ordels (or-deelz). Hist. English law. The right to conduct trials by ordeal within a given jurisdiction.

ORDER

order, n. 1. A command, direction, or instruction. See MANDATE(1). 2. A written direction or command delivered by a court or judge. • The word generally embraces final decrees as well as interlocutory directions or commands. — Also termed court order; judicial order. See MANDAMUS. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 928; Motions 46. C.J.S. Motions and Orders §§ 1–3, 13, 50, 59.]

“An order is the mandate or determination of the court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings.” 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at 5 (2d ed. 1902).

“While an order may under some circumstances amount to a judgment, they must be distinguished, owing to the different consequences flowing from them, not only in the matter of enforcement and appeal but in other respects, as, for instance, the time within which proceedings to annul them must be taken. Rulings on motions are ordinarily orders rather than judgments. The class of judgments and of decrees formerly called interlocutory is included in the definition given in [modern codes] of the word ‘order.’ ” 1 A.C. Freeman, A Treatise of the Law of Judgments § 19, at 28 (Edward W. Tuttle ed., 5th ed. 1925).

administrative order. 1. An order issued by a government agency after an adjudicatory hearing. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 489. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 147–148.] 2. An agency regulation that interprets or applies a statutory provision. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 381. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 87, 91.]

alternative order. An order commanding the person to whom it is directed either to do a specific thing or to show cause why the court should not order it to be done.

common order. See conditional judgment under JUDGMENT.

decretal order (di-kree-t<<schwa>>l). A court of chancery's interlocutory order that is issued on motion of a party and has the effect of a final decree. See decree nisi under DECREE. [Cases: Equity 428–430.]

docket order. A court order memorialized only as an entry on the docket sheet.

ex parte order (eks pahr-tee). An order made by the court upon the application of one party to an action without notice to the other.

filiation order. Family law. A court's determination of paternity, usu. including a direction to pay child support. • Governments usu. seek filiation orders so that some or all of the public funds spent on the child's welfare can be recovered from a nonmarital child's father. Until the early 20th century, municipalities, not the state, had the legal duty to support the poor, including unwed mothers and their children. In some states, two judges had to determine who an unacknowledged child's father was before the municipality could recover its expenditures. — Also termed affiliation order; order of filiation.

final order. An order that is dispositive of the entire case. See final judgment under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 928; Motions 51. C.J.S. Motions and Orders §§ 2, 52–53, 55.]

interlocutory order (in-t<<schwa>>r-lok-y<<schwa>>-tor-ee). An order that relates to some intermediate matter in the case; any order other than a final order. • Most interlocutory orders are not appealable until the case is fully resolved. But by rule or statute, most jurisdictions allow some types of interlocutory orders (such as preliminary injunctions and class-certification orders) to be immediately appealed. — Also termed interlocutory decision; interim order; intermediate order. See appealable decision under DECISION; COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE. [Cases: Appeal and Error 67; Federal Courts 572, 576; Motions 51. C.J.S. Appeal and Error § 84; Motions and Orders §§ 2, 52–53, 55.]

minute order. 1. An order recorded in the minutes of the court rather than directly on a case docket. • Although practice varies, traditionally when a trial judge is sitting officially, with or without a court reporter, a clerk or deputy clerk keeps minutes. When the judge makes an oral order, the only record of that order may be in the minutes. It is therefore referred to as a minute order. — Also termed minute entry. [Cases: Appeal and Error 123; Courts 107. C.J.S. Appeal and Error § 150; Courts §§ 165, 175; Criminal Law § 1665.] 2. A court order not directly relating to a case, such as an order adopting a local rule of court. • In this sense, the court is not a single judge acting in an adjudicatory capacity, but a chief judge, or a group of two or more judges, acting for a court in an administrative or some other nonadjudicatory capacity. [Cases: Motions 56(1). C.J.S. Motions and Orders §§ 59–60, 62.]

standing order. A forward-looking order that applies to all cases pending before a court. • Some individual judges issue a standing order on a subject when there is no local rule bearing on it, often because a rule would not be acceptable to other judges on the court. Standing orders are frequently criticized because they undermine uniformity of procedural rules, esp. at the local level. Cf. standing rule under RULE(3).

supervision order. Family law. A court's order placing a child or young person under the supervision of a child-welfare agency or a probation officer in a case of neglect, abuse, or delinquency.

“A settled order of business is, however, necessary for the government of the presiding person, and to restrain individual members from calling up favorite measures, or matters under their special patronage, out of their just turn. It is useful also for directing the discretion of the house, when they are moved to take up a particular matter, to the prejudice of others having priority of right to their attention in the general order of business.” Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice 30 (1801).

Or it may be a governmental exercise of the power to control the conduct of the public — establishing rules which must be complied with, or prohibiting certain actions or conduct. In any event it is the determination of the sovereign power of the state as delegated to the municipality. It is a legislative enactment, within its sphere, as much as an act of the state legislature.” 1 Judith O’Gallagher, Municipal Ordinances § 1A.01, at 3 (2d ed. 1998).

Yet outcome responsibility for harm to another does not by itself create a duty to compensate. The form that our responsibility for an outcome should take remains an open question. An apology or telephone call will often be enough. But outcome responsibility is a basis on which the law can erect a duty to compensate if there is reason to do so. #### OWNERSHIP-IN-PLACE THEORY ownership-in-place theory. Oil & gas. A characterization of oil-and-gas rights used in a majority of jurisdictions, holding that the owner has the right to present possession of the oil and gas in place as well as the right to use the land surface to search, develop, and produce from the property, but that the interest in the minerals terminates if the oil and gas flows out from under the owner's land. • This theory is used in Texas, New Mexico, Kansas, Mississippi, and other major producing states. The rights of a severed-mineral-interest owner to oil and gas in these states are often described as an estate in fee simple absolute, but ownership of specific oil-and-gas molecules is subject to the rule of capture. See NONOWNERSHIP THEORY.

OWNER'S POLICY

owner's policy. Real estate. A title-insurance policy covering the owner's title as well as the mortgagee's interest. Cf. MORTGAGEE POLICY. [Cases: Insurance 2610; Mortgages 201. C.J.S. Insurance §§ 57, 1061, 1232–1235, 1237; Mortgages §§ 311–314.]

The reading in open court of a document (esp. a deed) that is demanded by one party and read by the other. 3. Common-law pleading. A prayer to the court by a party opposing a profert, asking to have the instrument on which the opponent relies read aloud. • Oyer can be demanded only when a profert has been properly made, but it is disallowed for a private writing under seal. [Cases: Bills and Notes 488; Pleading 306. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 267, 293; Pleading §§ 520–522.]

“A party having a right to demand oyer is yet not obliged, in all cases, to exercise that right; nor is he obliged, in all cases, after demanding it, to notice it in the pleading he afterwards files or delivers. Sometimes, however, he is obliged to do both, namely, where he has occasion to found his answer upon any matter contained in the deed of which profert is made, and not set forth by his adversary. In these cases the only admissible method of making such matter appear to the court is to demand oyer, and, from the copy given, set forth the whole deed verbatim in his pleading.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 289, at 483 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

Palace Court.Hist. A court having jurisdiction over all personal actions arising within 12 miles of Whitehall. • This court was created by James I in response to complaints about the inconvenience of using the itinerant Court of the Marshalsea; its jurisdiction was similar, but the court remained in Whitehall. It was abolished along with the Court of the Marshalsea in 1849. — Formerly also termed curia palatii. See COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA.

“The court of the marshalsea, and the palace court at Westminster, though two distinct courts, are frequently confounded together. The former was originally holden before the steward and marshal of the king's house, and was instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and thereby the king lose their service.... But this court being ambulatory, and obliged to follow the king in all his progresses, so that by the removal of the household, actions were frequently discontinued, and doubts having arisen as to the extent of its jurisdiction ... [the king] erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or palace-court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court, or his deputy; with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever, which shall arise between any parties within twelve miles of his majesty's palace at Whitehall.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 76 (1768).

PALSGRAF<TT> RULE

Palsgraf rule (pawlz-graf). Torts. Long Island R.R.*, 162 N.E. 99 (N.Y. 1928), two railroad attendants negligently dislodged a package of fireworks from a man they were helping board a train. The package exploded on impact and knocked over some scales that fell on Mrs. Palsgraf. The New York Court of Appeals, in a 4–3 majority opinion written by Chief Justice Benjamin Cardozo, held that the attendants could not have foreseen the possibility of injury to Palsgraf and therefore did not breach any duty to her. In the dissenting opinion, Justice William S. Andrews asserted that the duty to exercise care is owed to all, and thus a negligent act will subject the actor to liability to all persons proximately harmed by it, whether or not the harm is foreseeable. Both opinions have been widely cited to support the two views expressed in them. [Cases: Negligence 213. C.J.S. Negligence § 34.]

commercial paper. 1. An instrument, other than cash, for the payment of money. • Commercial paper — typically existing in the form of a draft (such as a check) or a note (such as a certificate of deposit) — is governed by Article 3 of the UCC. But even though the UCC uses the term commercial paper when referring to negotiable instruments of a particular kind (drafts, checks, certificates of deposit, and notes as defined by Article 3), the term long predates the UCC as a business and legal term in common use. Before the UCC, it was generally viewed as synonymous with negotiable paper or bills and notes. It was sometimes applied even to nonnegotiable instruments. — Also termed mercantile paper; company's paper. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. [Cases: Bills and Notes 1. C.J.S. Randolph, A Treatise on the Law of Commercial Paper § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1899).

“Defined most broadly, commercial paper refers to any writing embodying rights that are customarily conveyed by transferring the writing. A large subset of commercial paper consists of such writings that are negotiable, which means that the law enables a transferee to acquire the embodied rights free of claims and defenses against the transferor.” Richard E. #### PARDON

pardon,n. The act or an instance of officially nullifying punishment or other legal consequences of a crime. • A pardon is usu. granted by the chief executive of a government. The President has the sole power to issue pardons for federal offenses, and state governors have the power to issue pardons for state crimes. — Also termed executive pardon. See CLEMENCY. Cf. COMMUTATION (2); REPRIEVE. [Cases: Pardon and Parole 23. C.J.S. Pardon and Parole §§ 11–12, 14–16, 22–26, 29–30.] — pardon,vb.

“The term pardon is first found in early French law and derives from the Late Latin perdonare (‘to grant freely’), suggesting a gift bestowed by the sovereign. It has thus come to be associated with a somewhat personal concession by a head of state to the perpetrator of an offense, in mitigation or remission of the full punishment that he has merited.” Leslie Sebba, “Amnesty and Pardon,” in 1 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 59, 59 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

A doctrine by which a government has standing to prosecute a lawsuit on behalf of a citizen, esp. on behalf of someone who is under a legal disability to prosecute the suit <parens patriae allowed the state to institute proceedings>. • The state ordinarily has no standing to sue on behalf of its citizens, unless a separate, sovereign interest will be served by the suit. — Also termed doctrine of parens patriae. [Cases: Infants 2; States 190. C.J.S. Infants §§ 12, 108, 198; States §§ 297, 314.]

PARENT

parent. 1. The lawful father or mother of someone. • In ordinary usage, the term denotes more than responsibility for conception and birth. The term commonly includes (1) either the natural father or the natural mother of a child, (2) the adoptive father or adoptive mother of a child, (3) a child's putative blood parent who has expressly acknowledged paternity, and (4) an individual or agency whose status as guardian has been established by judicial decree. In law, parental status based on any criterion may be terminated by judicial decree. In other words, a person ceases to be a legal parent if that person's status as a parent has been terminated in a legal proceeding. — Also termed legal parent. [Cases: Parent and Child 1. C.J.S. Parent and Child §§ 1–12, 201.]

birth parent. Either the biological father or the mother who gives birth to a child. — Sometimes written birthparent.

constructive parent. See equitable parent.

custodial parent. The parent awarded physical custody of a child in a divorce. See PHYSICAL CUSTODY(2). Cf. noncustodial parent.

de facto parent. An adult who (1) is not the child's legal parent, (2) has, with consent of the child's legal parent, resided with the child for a significant period, and (3) has routinely performed a share of the caretaking functions at least as great as that of the parent who has been the child's primary caregiver without any expectation of compensation for this care. • Because the status of de facto parent is subordinate to that of legal parent, a person who expects to be afforded the status of parent should, if possible, adopt the child. The primary function of this conceptual status is to provide courts with a means for maintaining a relationship between a child and an adult who has functioned as a parent when that adult is prohibited from legally adopting the child. The status is usu. limited to a person who has assumed the role of parent with the knowledge and consent, either express or implied, of the legal parent. But it may also arise when there is a total failure or inability of the legal parent to perform parental duties. Cf. equitable parent; psychological parent.

Disneyland parent. A noncustodial parent who indulges his or her child with gifts and good times during visitation and leaves most or all disciplinary responsibilities to the other parent; esp., a noncustodial parent who provides luxuries that the custodial parent cannot afford but performs no disciplinary duties, in an effort to gain or retain the child's affection. See LOLLIPOP SYNDROME.

domiciliary parent. A parent with whom a child lives.

dual-residential parent. A parent who shares primary residential responsibility for a child with the other parent when each provides a residence that is substantially a primary residence. • In many jurisdictions, dual residence is referred to as joint physical custody. See RESIDENTIAL RESPONSIBILITY; CUSTODY(2). Cf. residential parent.

equitable parent. 1. A husband who, though not the biological father, is treated by the court as the father in an action for custody or visitation, usu. when the husband (1) has treated the child as his own while married to the child's mother, (2) is the only father the child has ever known, and (3) seeks the rights of fatherhood. 2. A mother or father, not by blood or adoption, but by virtue of the close parent-like relationship that exists between that person and a child. • The status of equitable parent is a legal fiction that is used as an equitable remedy. Most commonly, the status of equitable parent arises when a person, living with the child and one of his or her legal or natural parents, forms a close bond with the child and assumes the duties and responsibilities of a parent. — Also termed constructive parent. See adoption by estoppel under ADOPTION. Cf. psychological parent; de facto parent.

foster parent. An adult who, though without blood ties or legal ties, cares for and rears a child, esp. an orphaned or neglected child who might otherwise be deprived of nurture, usu. under the auspices and direction of an agency and for some compensation or benefit. • Foster parents sometimes give care and support temporarily until a child is legally adopted by others. See FOSTER CARE. Cf. foster child under CHILD. [Cases: Infants 226. C.J.S. Adoption of Persons §§ 10–12.]

genetic parent. See biological parent.

intended parent. See intentional parent.

intentional parent. The person whose idea it is to have and raise a child and who (1) enters into a surrogacy contract with a surrogate mother, and (2) is the legal parent of the child regardless of any genetic link to the child. — Also termed intended parent. See intended child under CHILD.

noncustodial parent. In the child-custody laws of some states, a parent without the primary custody rights of a child; esp., the parent not awarded physical custody of a child in a divorce. • The noncustodial parent is typically awarded visitation with the child. — Also termed nonresidential parent; possessory conservator; absent parent. See PHYSICAL CUSTODY(2). Cf. custodial parent. [Cases: Child Custody 175–231.]

parent by estoppel. A man who, though not a child's legal father, is estopped from denying liability for child support. • This estoppel usu. arises when the man (1) has lived with the child for at least two years, (2) has believed in good faith that he was the child's father, (3) has accepted parental responsibilities, and (4) has entered into a coparenting agreement with the child's mother — and when the court finds that recognition of the status of parent is in the child's best interests. See ESTOPPEL.

primary domiciliary parent. In a joint-custody arrangement, the parent who exercises primary physical custody. See joint custody under CUSTODY(2).

psychological parent. A person who, on a continuing and regular basis, provides for a child's emotional and physical needs. • The psychological parent may be the biological parent, a foster parent, a guardian, a common-law parent, or some other person unrelated to the child.

residential parent. A parent who has primary residential responsibility for a child and who is not a dual-residential parent. See RESIDENTIAL RESPONSIBILITY. Cf. dual-residential parent.

stepparent. The spouse of one's mother or father by a later marriage. [Cases: Parent and Child 15. C.J.S. Parent and Child §§ 345–350, 357–358.]

surrogate parent. 1. A person who carries out the role of a parent by court appointment or the voluntary assumption of parental responsibilities. [Cases: Parent and Child 15. C.J.S. Parent and Child §§ 345–350, 357–358.] 2. See surrogate mother (2) under MOTHER.

Nebraska*, 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625 (1923). — Also termed family-autonomy doctrine. Cf. PARENTAL-PRIVILEGE DOCTRINE.

PARENTAL-CONSENT STATUTE

parental-consent statute. A statute that requires a minor to obtain his or her parent's consent before receiving elective medical treatment. • Without parental consent, a physician or other medical professional commits a battery upon a child when giving nonemergency medical treatment. To pass constitutional muster, a parental-consent statute must include a judicial-bypass provision. Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (1992). — Also termed parental-consent treatment statute. See JUDICIAL-BYPASS PROVISION. Cf. PARENTAL-NOTIFICATION STATUTE; MATURE-MINOR DOCTRINE.

PARENTAL-LIABILITY STATUTE

parental-liability statute. A law obliging parents to pay damages for torts (esp. intentional ones) committed by their minor children. • All states have these laws, but most limit the parents' monetary liability to about $3,000 per tort. Parents can also be held criminally liable for the acts of their children. One group of laws is aimed at contributing to the delinquency and endangering the welfare of a minor. More recently, the laws have been directed at improper supervision and failure to supervise. The first law aimed at punishing parents for the acts of their children was enacted in Colorado in 1903. By 1961 all but two states had enacted similar laws. At least five states make it a felony for a parent to intentionally, knowingly, and recklessly provide a firearm to a child, or permit the child to handle a firearm, when the parent is aware of a substantial risk that the child will use the weapon to commit a crime. — Also termed parental-responsibility statute; failure-to-supervise statute. PARIS CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY

Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. A treaty designed to unify and streamline patent prosecutions and trademark applications among the signatories. • The Convention eased the harsh effects of the first-to-file priority rule by allowing an applicant in any member country one year in which to apply in other member countries while maintaining the application's original priority date. It also banned patent-protection discrimination against residents of other member nations. Now administered by the World Intellectual Property Organization, an agency of the United Nations, the Convention was first signed in 1883 and revised most recently in 1970. — Often shortened to Paris Convention. — Also termed Paris Industrial Property Convention.

“The 1883 Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property is the cornerstone of the international patent granting system. It represents the first efforts of several countries to adopt a common approach to industrial property. The fundamental principles of ‘right of priority’ and ‘national treatment’ set out by the Convention have been of capital importance to the internationalization of intellectual property rights over the last century.” Marta Pertegás Sender, Cross-Border Enforcement of Patent Rights 4 (2002).

PARKER DOCTRINE

PARKING

parking. 1. The sale of securities subject to an agreement that the seller will buy them back at a later time for a similar price. • Parking is illegal if done to circumvent securities regulations or tax laws. It is often a method of evading the net-capital requirements of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), which requires a brokerage firm to discount the value of any stock it holds in its own account when it files its monthly report about its net-capital condition. To reach technical compliance with the NASD's net-capital requirements, a brokerage firm “sells” stock from its own account to a customer at market price, thereby avoiding the discount for reporting purposes. Having filed its report, it can then “buy” the shares back from the customer, usu. at the same price at which it “sold” the stock, plus interest. [Cases: Securities Regulation 40.14. C.J.S. Securities Regulation § 160.] 2. The placement of assets in a safe, short-term investment while other investment opportunities are being considered. — Also termed (in sense 1) stock-parking.

“The parliamentarian is a consultant, commonly a professional, who advises the president and other officers, committees, and members on matters of parliamentary procedure. The parliamentarian's role during a meeting is purely an advisory and consultative one — since parliamentary law gives to the chair alone the power to rule on questions of order or to answer parliamentary inquiries.... After the parliamentarian has expressed an opinion on a point, the chair has the duty to make the final ruling and, in doing so, has the right to follow the advice of the parliamentarian or to disregard it.” Henry M. PARLIAMENTARY LAW

parliamentary law.The body of rules and precedents governing the proceedings of legislative bodies and other deliberative assemblies. — Also termed parliamentary procedure. [Cases: Parliamentary Law 1. C.J.S. Parliamentary Law § 1.]

“Thomas Jefferson speaks of ‘the Parliamentary branch of the law.’ From this country's beginning, it has been an underlying assumption of our culture that what has been authoritatively established as parliamentary law is law — in the sense of being binding within all assemblies except as they may adopt special rules varying from the general parliamentary law.” Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised xxvi (10th ed. 2000).

“Parliamentary law differs somewhat from the other branches of common law in that it is based in an important measure upon precedents of legislative and administrative bodies. Particularly in America, however, where the courts have the power to make final decisions on all constitutional questions, the law has been evolving upon the basis of court decisions, and a considerable volume of judicial precedents has accumulated. The application of parliamentary rules to new situations is subject to the same rules of reasoning as the application of established common law rules to new legal situations.” National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 44, at 40–41 (2000).

common parliamentary law. 1. See general parliamentary law. 2. The common law as applied to parliamentary law; parliamentary law as it is found in judicial decisions.

general parliamentary law. The basic principles and practices of parliamentary law, as commonly understood among a meeting's members based on their experience in other deliberative assemblies, that apply in the absence of adopted rules of order. • A parliamentary manual is evidence of the general parliamentary law. — Also termed common parliamentary law.

“A deliberative assembly that has not adopted any rules is commonly understood to hold itself bound by the rules and customs of the general parliamentary law — or common parliamentary law... — to the extent that there is agreement in the meeting body as to what these rules and practices are.” Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 1, at 3 (10th ed. 2000).

PARLIAMENTARY MANUAL

parody. Intellectual property. A transformative use of a well-known work for purposes of satirizing, ridiculing, critiquing, or commenting on the original work, as opposed to merely alluding to the original to draw attention to the later work. • In constitutional law, a parody is protected as free speech. In copyright law, a work must meet the definition of a parody and be a fair use of the copyrighted material, or else it may constitute infringement. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 53.2. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 45–46, 48–50.]

“Trademark parodies, even when offensive, do convey a message. The message may be simply that business and product images need not always be taken too seriously; a trademark parody reminds us that we are free to laugh at the images and associations linked with the mark.” L.L. Bean, Inc. v. Drake Publishers, Inc., 811 F.2d 26, 34 (1st Cir. 1987)(per Bownes, J.).

“We do not, of course, suggest that a parody may not harm the market at all, but when a parody, like a scathing theater review, kills demand for the original, it does not produce a harm cognizable under the Copyright Act. Because ‘parody may quite legitimately aim at garroting the original, destroying it commercially as well as artistically,’ the role of the courts is to distinguish between ‘biting criticism [that merely] suppresses demand [and] copyright infringement[, which] usurps it.’ ” Campbell v. Acuff–Rose Music, Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 591, 114 S.Ct. 1164, 1178 (1994) (Souter, J.) (citations omitted).

“The essence of parole is release from prison, before completion of the sentence, on condition that the prisoner abide by certain rules during the balance of the sentence. Parole is not freedom.” 59 Am. Jur. 2d Pardon and Parole § 6 (1987).

parol evidence. See EVIDENCE.

PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE

parol-evidence rule. Contracts. The common-law principle that a writing intended by the parties to be a final embodiment of their agreement cannot be modified by evidence of earlier or contemporaneous agreements that might add to, vary, or contradict the writing. • This rule usu. operates to prevent a party from introducing extrinsic evidence of negotiations that occurred before or while the agreement was being reduced to its final written form. See INTEGRATION(2); MERGER(2). Cf. FOUR-CORNERS RULE. [Cases: Evidence 397. C.J.S. Evidence §§ 1159, 1165, 1189.]

“The basic principle is often called the ‘parol evidence rule’, and according to this rule evidence is not admissible to contradict or qualify a complete written contract. The rule is usually stated in the form of a rule of evidence, but it is probably best regarded as a rule of substantive law. The question is not really whether evidence can be admitted which might vary the written document, but whether, if the evidence is admitted, it will have the legal effect of varying the document.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 161–62 (3d ed. 1981).

“The parol evidence rule assumes that the formal writing reflects the parties' minds at a point of maximum resolution and, hence, that duties and restrictions that do not appear in the written document, even though apparently accepted at an earlier stage, were not intended by the parties to survive. In addition, and quite apart from the survival of matters discarded in the course of negotiations, there is the obvious danger of outright fraud.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 82–83 (1990).

Taylor*, 451 U.S. 527, 101 S.Ct. 1908 (1981); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194 (1984). [Cases: Constitutional Law 278(1). C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 982–984, 987–990, 1211–1215, 1269, 1420–1421, 1424; Zoning and Land Planning § 23.]

“The courts of justice will allow the objection that the consideration of the contract was immoral or illegal to be made even by the guilty party to the contract, for the allowance is not for the sake of the party who raises the objection, but is grounded on general principles of policy. A particeps criminis has been held to be entitled, in equity, on his own application to relief against his own contract, when the contract was illegal, or against the policy of the law, and relief became necessary to prevent injury to others.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *467 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

“Even in felonies but little practical importance now attaches to the distinctions between the first three of these four classes of ‘accomplices’ — a term which the law applies to all the participes criminis, whatever their degree of ‘complicity’ in the offence, though popular use generally limits it to those who take only a minor part. For the maximum punishment prescribed for any given crime is the same in the case of all three classes.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 90 (16th ed. 1952).

2. The doctrine that one participant in an unlawful activity cannot recover in a civil action against another participant in the activity. • This is a civil doctrine only, having nothing to do with criminal responsibility. A partner who ordinarily takes part in the daily operations of the business, shares in the profits and losses, and is personally responsible for the partnership's debts and liabilities. — Also termed full partner. See limited partnership under PARTNERSHIP. [Cases: Partnership 353, 366, 371. C.J.S. Partnership §§ 405, 407, 422–423, 425, 429–432, 438.]

silent partner. A partner who shares in the profits but who has no active voice in management of the firm and whose existence is often not publicly disclosed. — Also termed dormant partner. [Cases: Partnership 90. C.J.S. Partnership § 39.]

“It is worth emphasizing that control does not necessarily mean active involvement. One of the most interesting figures in partnership law, in fact, is the ‘silent’ partner — typically a person who has invested in a business in return for a profit share, and who reserves the right to, and to some extent may in fact, participate in routine management decisions, may participate in no decisions at all, and may even be unaware of what is happening in the business for long periods of time. The fact of the person's financial interest in the partnership may be a secret from everyone except the other partners (indeed, such secrecy may be vital). Such a person is nonetheless a partner like any other for purposes, among other things, of personal liability for the debts of the partnership. The law simply does not distinguish between active and passive partners.” William A. Klein & John C. Coffee Jr., Business Organization and Finance 64 (2002).

sleeping partner. See secret partner.

special partner. See limited partner.

surviving partner. The partner who, upon the partnership's dissolution because of another partner's death, serves as a trustee to administer the firm's remaining affairs. [Cases: Partnership 280. C.J.S. Partnership § 347.]

collapsible partnership. Tax. A partnership formed by partners who intend to dissolve it before they realize any income. • Any partner's gain resulting from unrealized receivables or inventory that has increased substantially in value will be treated by the IRS as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. commercial partnership. See trading partnership.

family partnership. A business partnership in which the partners are related. IRC (26 USCA) § 704(e). See FAMILY-PARTNERSHIP RULES.

general partnership. A partnership in which all partners participate fully in running the business and share equally in profits and losses (though the partners' monetary contributions may vary). [Cases: Partnership 79, 86, 87. C.J.S. Partnership §§ 90, 94–95.]

implied partnership. See partnership by estoppel.

limited-liability partnership. A partnership in which a partner is not liable for a negligent act committed by another partner or by an employee not under the partner's supervision. • All states have enacted statutes that allow a business (typically a law firm or accounting firm) to register as this type of partnership. — Abbr. L.L.P. [Cases: Partnership 371. C.J.S. Partnership §§ 429, 431, 438.]

limited partnership. A partnership composed of one or more persons who control the business and are personally liable for the partnership's debts (called general partners), and one or more persons who contribute capital and share profits but who cannot manage the business and are liable only for the amount of their contribution (called limited partners). • The chief purpose of a limited partnership is to enable persons to invest their money in a business without taking an active part in managing the business, and without risking more than the sum originally contributed, while securing the cooperation of others who have ability and integrity but insufficient money. — Abbr. L.P. — Also termed special partnership; (in civil law) partnership in commendam. [Cases: Partnership 349–376. C.J.S. Partnership §§ 402–441.]

“Unknown at common law, the limited partnership was derived from the commenda or societe en commandite of continental Europe to permit a person to invest and share in the profits of a partnership business and yet limit one's liability to one's investment. It was first recognized in the United States by a New York statute of 1822. It is now recognized by statute in all American jurisdictions.” Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 28, at 86 (3d ed. 1983).

“[T]he two primary characteristics of a limited partnership [are] liability of limited partners only for their agreed contributions, and a hierarchical structure with management in one or more general partners and very little power or authority in the limited partners. Thus, limited partners are typically — although not necessarily — passive contributors of capital.... In this respect they resemble shareholders in a corporation, but, depending on the details of the organizational documents, they may have greater or lesser rights.” 3 Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnerships § 12.01, at 12:5–12:6 (1999).

master limited partnership. A limited partnership whose interests or shares are publicly traded. See publicly traded partnership.

partnership by estoppel. A partnership implied by law when one or more persons represent themselves as partners to a third party who relies on that representation. • A person who is deemed a partner by estoppel becomes liable for any credit extended to the partnership by the third party. — Also termed implied partnership. [Cases: Partnership 24. C.J.S. Partnership § 24.]

partnership for a term. A partnership that exists for a specified duration or until a specified event occurs. • Such a partnership can be prematurely dissolved by any partner, but that partner may be held liable for breach of the partnership agreement. Cf. partnership at will.

partnership in commendam. See limited partnership.

PART PERFORMANCE

part performance. 1. PERFORMANCE. 2. PART-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

PART-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE

part-performance doctrine. The equitable principle by which a failure to comply with the statute of frauds is overcome by a party's execution, in reliance on an opposing party's oral promise, of an oral contract's requirements. — Sometimes shortened to part performance. See part performance under PERFORMANCE. [Cases: Frauds, Statute of 129.]

“Part performance is not an accurate designation of such acts as taking possession and making improvements when the contract does not provide for such acts, but such acts regularly bring the doctrine into play. The doctrine is contrary to the words of the Statute of Frauds, but it was established by English courts of equity soon after the enactment of the Statute. Payment of purchase-money, without more, was once thought sufficient to justify specific enforcement, but a contrary view now prevails, since in such cases restitution is an adequate remedy. English decisions treated a transfer of possession of the land as sufficient, if unequivocally referable to the oral agreement, apparently on the ground that the promise to transfer had been executed by a common-law conveyance. Such decisions are not generally followed in the United States. Enforcement has instead been justified on the ground that repudiation after ‘part performance’ amounts to a ‘virtual fraud.’ A more accurate statement is that courts with equitable powers are vested by tradition with what in substance is a dispensing power based on the promisee's reliance, a discretion to be exercised with caution in the light of all the circumstances.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 129 cmt. a (1979).

PART-SOVEREIGN STATE

PARTY

party. 1. One who takes part in a transaction . [Cases: Contracts 177. C.J.S. Contracts § 363.]

“Note, that if an Indenture be made between two as Parties thereto in the Beginning, and in the Deed one of them grants or lets a Thing to another who is not named in the Beginning, he is not Party to the Deed, nor shall take any Thing thereby.” John Rastell, Les Termes de la Ley 471 (26th ed. 1721).

“A person who takes part in a legal transaction or proceeding is said to be a party to it. Thus, if an agreement, conveyance, lease, or the like, is entered into between A. and B., they are said to be parties to it; and the same expression is often, though not very correctly, applied to the persons named as the grantors or releasors in a deed-poll.” 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 930 (1883).

nominal party. A party to an action who has no control over it and no financial interest in its outcome; esp., a party who has some immaterial interest in the subject matter of a lawsuit and who will not be affected by any judgment, but who is nonetheless joined in the lawsuit to avoid procedural defects. • An example is the disinterested stakeholder in a garnishment action. — Also termed formal party. Cf. real party in interest. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 102; Parties 4. C.J.S. Parties §§ 7, 17–20.]

real party in interest. A person entitled under the substantive law to enforce the right sued upon and who generally, but not necessarily, benefits from the action's final outcome. — Also termed party in interest; (archaically) interessee. Cf. nominal party. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 131; Parties 6(2). C.J.S. Parties §§ 23–24.]

“[T]he ‘real party in interest’ is the party who, by the substantive law, possesses the right sought to be enforced, and not necessarily the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery.... The concept of real party in interest should not be confused with the concept of standing. The standing question arises in the realm of public law, when governmental action is attacked on the ground that it violates private rights or some constitutional principle... Unfortunately, ... confusion between standing on the one hand and real party in interest or capacity on the other has been increasing.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 70, at 490 & n.2 (5th ed. 1994).

par value. The value of an instrument or security as shown on its face; esp., the arbitrary dollar amount assigned to a stock share by the corporate charter, or the principal of a bond. — Often shortened to par. — Also termed face amount; face value; nominal value; stated value. [Cases: Corporations 99(3). C.J.S. Corporations § 170.]

“At one time par value had considerable importance because it was widely viewed as the amount for which the shares would be issued: shares with a par value of one hundred dollars could be subscribed for at one hundred dollars per share with confidence that all other identical shares would also be issued for $100. This practice, however, long ago fell into disuse. Today, par value serves only a minor function and is in no way an indication of the price at which the shares are issued, with this one exception: The one basic rule about setting the price for shares of common stock with a par value is that the price must be equal to or greater than par value.” Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 109 (3d ed. 1991).

PASULA–ROBINETTE TEST

Pasula–Robinette test. Pasula v. Consolidation Coal Co., 2 FMSHRC 2786 (1980); Secretary ex rel. Robinette v. United Coal Co., 3 FMSHRC 802 (1981).

patent (pay-t<<schwa>>-nt), adj. Obvious; apparent . Cf. LATENT. [Cases: Evidence 451. C.J.S. Evidence §§ 1222, 1224–1225.]

lapse patent. A land patent substituting for an earlier patent to the same land that lapsed because the previous patentee did not claim it.

3. The right to exclude others from making, using, marketing, selling, offering for sale, or importing an invention for a specified period (20 years from the date of filing), granted by the federal government to the inventor if the device or process is novel, useful, and nonobvious. 35 USCA §§ 101–103. • The holding of a patent does not by itself grant any right to make, use, or sell anything if that activity would infringe another's blocking patent. — Also termed patent right; patent grant. [Cases: Patents 1. C.J.S. Patents §§ 1–5, 10–12, 15.] “The franchise which the patent grants consists altogether in the right to exclude everyone from making, using or vending the patented article, without the permission of the patentee. This is all he obtains by the patent.” Bloomer v. McQuewan, 55 U.S. 539, 549 (1852).

blocking patent. One of two patents, neither of which can be effectively practiced without infringing the other. • For example, if A patents an improvement of B's patented invention, A cannot practice the improvement without infringing B's patent. Nor can B use the improvement without infringing A's patent. Owners of blocking patents often cross-license each other. See fencing patent; DOMINATION.

broadened reissue patent. Patents. A patent that is issued again, having broader claims than the original, surrendered patent. • Under 35 USCA § 251, a patent may be reissued, under certain circumstances, with broader claims than the original patent if the reissue application is filed within two years of the grant of the original patent. See INTERVENING RIGHTS.

business-method patent. A U.S. patent that describes and claims a series of process steps that, as a whole, constitutes a method of doing business. • Until 1998, methods for doing business were not expressly recognized as being patentable. In that year, the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals held in State Street Bank & Trust Co. v. Signature Fin. Group, Inc., 149 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 1998), that business methods are subject to the same legal requirements for patentability as any other process or method. — Also termed cyberpatent.

combination patent. A patent granted for an invention that unites existing components in a novel way. [Cases: Patents 26. C.J.S. Patents §§ 83–84.]

Community patent. An international patent issued by the European Patent Convention. • Community patents are good for 20 years from the application date. They may be registered in any nation in the European Union and other EPC signatories.

copending patent. A patent whose application is being prosecuted at or near the same time as another, similar patent. • Continuing applications must be copending with an existing patent application. A copending patent may affect another patent's validity if it discloses the same invention, or discloses some part of the invention that, combined with other prior art, results in anticipation (esp. if the copending patent is issued before the affected patent). A copending patent may be shown to be an unpatentable improvement on another copending patent's invention. 35 USCA § 102(e). See COPENDING.

cyberpatent. 1. See business-method patent. 2. See Internet patent.

design patent. A patent granted for a new, original, and ornamental design for an article of manufacture; a patent that protects a product's appearance or nonfunctional aspects. • Design patents — which, unlike utility patents, have a term of only 14 years from the date on which the patent is granted — are similar to copyrights. 36 USCA § 171. [Cases: Patents 15. C.J.S. Patents §§ 100, 103.]

fencing patent. A patent procured for some aspect of an invention that the inventor does not intend to produce but that the inventor wants to prevent competitors from using in making improvements. • By making a claim whose only purpose is to protect other claims, the inventor seeks to “fence in” any such competing improvements. Courts disfavor fencing claims. — Also termed dominating patent. [Cases: Patents 121. C.J.S. Patents § 213.]

improvement patent. A patent having claims directed to an improvement on a preexisting invention. • If the preexisting invention is patented by another, the owner of the improvement patent may need a license to practice the invention covered by the claims of the improvement patent. Similarly, the owner of the preexisting invention's patent may need a license to practice the invention in the improvement patent. Cf. pioneer patent. [Cases: Patents 9. C.J.S. Patents § 23.]

in-force patent. A patent that has not expired or been ruled invalid.

Internet patent. A type of utility patent granted on an invention that combines business methods and software programs for Internet applications. — Also termed cyberpatent.

method patent. A patent having method or process claims that define a series of actions leading to a tangible physical result. — Also termed process patent. See process patent.

paper patent. A patent granted for a discovery or invention that has never been used commercially. • A paper patent may receive less protection under the law than a patent granted for a device that is actually used in industry. As a prior-art reference, a paper patent may carry less weight with examiners than one for an invention that has been commercially exploited because it may suggest that the invention did not work as claimed. [Cases: Patents 172. C.J.S. Patents §§ 283, 306.]

pioneer patent.A patent covering a function or a major technological advance never before performed, a wholly novel device, or subject matter of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what had gone before. • Under U.S. law, the claims of a pioneer patent are entitled to broader interpretation and to be given a broader range of equivalents. A pioneer patent is usu. the first one documented by a patent-tracking service, although it may not be the first patent published by a national registry, such as the PTO. — Cf. improvement patent. [Cases: Patents 173. C.J.S. Patents § 307.]

“To what liberality of construction these claims are entitled depends to a certain extent upon the character of the invention, and whether it is what is termed in ordinary parlance a ‘pioneer.’ This word, although used somewhat loosely, is commonly understood to denote a patent covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what had gone before.” Boyden Power-Brake Co. v. Westinghouse, 170 U.S. 537, 561–62, 18 S.Ct. 707, 718 (1898).

plant patent.A patent granted for the invention or discovery of a new and distinct variety of asexually reproducing plant. 36 USCA § 161. [Cases: Patents 14. C.J.S. Patents § 22.]

process patent.A patent for a method of treating specified materials to produce a certain result; a patent outlining a means of producing a physical result independently of the producing mechanism. • The result might be brought about by chemical action, by applying some element or power of nature, by mixing certain substances together, or by heating a substance to a certain temperature. See method patent. [Cases: Patents 7. C.J.S. Patents §§ 17–19.]

reissue patent.A patent that is issued to correct unintentional or unavoidable errors in an original patent, such as to revise the specification or to fix an invalid claim. • A reissue may correct patent defects that might call the validity of the patent into question. It is also used, although rarely, to make the claims broader or narrower. The patentee risks the possibility that previously allowed claims may be rejected. It does not change the term of the patent. 35USCA § 251. — Sometimes shortened to reissue. [Cases: Patents 135. C.J.S. Patents § 239.]

submarine patent.Slang. A patent that is delayed in prosecution by the applicant in order to let an infringing user continue to develop its business, with the intention of taking in later-invented technology once the patent finally “surfaces” from the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • Typically, the patent applicant is aware of the developments and consciously delays the PTO's issuance of a patent, so that the invention's unwitting users will be forced to pay license fees. As of November 29, 2000, most patent applications must be published within 18 months of filing, so submarine patents are relatively rare now. See CONTINUATION-APPLICATION LACHES DOCTRINE.

utility patent.A patent granted for one of the following types of inventions: a process, a machine, a manufacture, or a composition of matter (such as a new chemical). • Utility patents are the most commonly issued patents. 35 USCA § 101. [Cases: Patents 1. C.J.S. Patents §§ 1–5, 10–12, 15.]

Patents may not be issued for laws of nature, naturally occurring materials, physical phenomena, or abstract ideas and formulas. But if a naturally occurring material is processed in a way that gives it a new use, that process may be patentable. — Often shortened to subject matter. — Also termed statutory subject matter. #### PATENT ACT

Patent Act. The current federal statute governing patent registrations and rights, enacted in 1952. 35 USCA §§ 1 et seq. • The Act reversed several Supreme Court doctrines of patentability by eliminating the synergism and “flash of genius” requirements for combination patents (§ 103), making “means-plus-function” claims valid once again (§ 112), and narrowing the patent-misuse doctrine of contributory infringement (§ 271). — Also termed Patent Act of 1952.

PATENT ACT OF 1790

Patent Act of 1790. Hist. The first U.S. patent statute, establishing a board to examine patent applications, specifications, and drawings to determine whether the inventions are “sufficiently useful and important” to justify the granting of patents. • The examining board, comprising the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney General, was abolished three years later in favor of a simple registration system.

PATENT ACT OF 1793

Patent Act of 1793.Hist. An early U.S. patent law that (1) abandoned the examination process in favor of simple registration; (2) established the infringement defenses of invalidity for lack of novelty or public use; and (3) articulated the four categories of patentable subject matter as machine, manufacture, composition of matter, and art (now called process). • The State Department handled the registration of patents, and the question of their validity was left up to the courts.

PATENT ACT OF 1836

Patent Act of 1836.Hist. The U.S. statute that charged the Patent Office with examining patent applications for novelty and utility, and that first required claims in patent applications.

PATENT ACT OF 1870

Patent Act of 1870.A U.S. statute that shifted the burden of disclosing the exact nature of an invention to the patent applicant by requiring a rigorous listing of distinct claims. • Before the Act was passed, patent claims were less important than the description and drawings, and the scope of the patent grant was often ambiguous.

PATENT APPLICATION

patent application. An inventor's request for a patent, filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office and accompanied by a specification (ending with at least one claim), drawings, the filing fee, and (except for a provisional patent application) an oath or a declaration. [Cases: Patents 98. C.J.S. Patents §§ 137–139.]

allowed application. A patent application for which the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office examiner has determined that all pending claims meet the conditions for patentability. • When an application is allowed, the PTO notifies the applicant through a Notice of Allowability and a Notice of Allowance. Once a patent application is allowed, a patent normally issues after the applicant has paid the required issue fee.

application for a reissue patent. An application by a patentee to change the scope of a patent that has already been issued, or to correct clerical or technological errors in the issued patent. • The scope of the claims can be broadened only if the application is made within two years of the date on which the patent was issued. See reissue patent under PATENT(3). Cf. CERTIFICATE OF CORRECTION.

child application. A later-filed application in a chain of continuing applications filed during the pendency of an earlier application and sharing common subject matter. • The first-filed application is called the parent application. Cf. parent application. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

continued-prosecution application. A request to abandon a patent application after final rejection and reopen a new case with the same file wrapper as the parent application. • CPAs are available only for applications filed before May 29, 2000. They are authorized in 37 CFR § 1.53(d). — Abbr. CPA. — Also termed Rule 1.53 application. Cf. REQUEST FOR CONTINUED EXAMINATION. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

continuing application. A patent application that is filed while the parent application is pending and that carries on prosecution of some or all of the original application. • Continuation, continuation-in-part, divisional, and reissue applications are all forms of continuing applications. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

Convention application. A patent application filed in accordance with the terms of an international patent treaty such as the Paris Convention or the Patent Cooperation Treaty.

divisional application. A patent application based on the same disclosure as the original application but claiming a different invention. • If an examiner finds that a disclosure reveals two or more distinct inventions, the applicant must restrict the original application to claiming one of the inventions. A divisional application can then be filed on any nonelected invention, and it will keep the same filing date as the parent application. — Often shortened to divisional. — Also termed restriction application. [Cases: Patents 109. C.J.S. Patents §§ 152–155.]

grandparent application. The first-filed application in a chain of at least three continuation or continuation-in-part patent applications. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

informal application. A patent application that is not in the correct form as required by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • According to the Manual of Patent Examining Procedure, an application is informal if it is printed on both sides of the paper, or is not permanent, legible, or reproducible. An informal application may be corrected and still retain the original filing date.

international application. An application under the Patent Cooperation Treaty for patent protection in specified member nations. • A PCT filing may be added as long as 30 months after the initial filing in a national patent office. It allows for simultaneous patent searches and examinations in multiple countries. — Also termed PCT application; PCT filing. See PATENT COOPERATION TREATY.

international application designating the United States. An international-patent application that is filed in accordance with the Patent Cooperation Treaty and specifically seeks patent protection in the United States. • The application may be filed in any nation, including the U.S., that is a party to the treaty.

international application originating in the United States. An international-patent application that is filed in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office in accordance with the Patent Cooperation Treaty. • Under the treaty, the PTO acts as a receiving office for international applications. The applicant may or may not be seeking patent protection in the U.S. [Cases: Patents 97. C.J.S. Patents §§ 135–138, 145, 178.]

parent application. The first-filed application in a chain of later-filed continuation or continuation-in-part applications. • An application becomes the parent application when another type of application (such as continuation, divisional, or substitute) is filed. The term “parent” is generally not used to refer to a provisional application. Cf. child application. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

provisional application. An application that can be filed up to a year before the patent application itself, in order to establish a date for prior art and constructive reduction to practice. • The PPA must include a full description of the invention, but claims, drawings, and prior-art disclosures are not required. — Abbr. PPA. — Also termed provisional patent application. [Cases: Patents 98. C.J.S. Patents §§ 137–139.]

restriction application. See divisional application.

substitute application. A duplicate application filed after the response period for a first office action has expired and the first application has been deemed abandoned. • A substitute application carries some danger for the applicant: the original filing date is lost, and any developments since that date become prior art that the examiner must consider before granting the patent. [Cases: Patents 110. C.J.S. Patents § 156.]

PATENT-APPLICATION AMENDMENT

patent-application amendment.A modification to a patent application, usu. narrowing or eliminating some claims in response to an examiner's rejection. [Cases: Patents 109. C.J.S. Patents §§ 152–155.]

amendment after allowance.An amendment submitted to the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office after the PTO has mailed notice of a patent application's approval. • Once a notice of allowance has been mailed, prosecution of the application is closed on the merits, and the entry of any amendment is within the discretion of the patent examiner. Amendments after allowance commonly address such matters as an amendment to the specification or claims, a change in the drawings or the list of inventors, and the submission of prior art. Amendments that merely correct formal matters in the specification or drawings, change the claims without changing their scope, or cancel a claim are typically approved by the Office. Amendments of greater significance require approval of the supervisory examiner under policies established by the group director. — Also termed 312 amendment; Rule 312 amendment. See amendment after payment of issue fee.

amendment after appeal.An amendment made after an appeal is taken from a patent application's final rejection. • Such an amendment is not made as a matter of right but is frequently allowed if it puts the case in better form for consideration on appeal or helps implement an examiner's recommendation.

amendment after final action.An amendment made after final rejection of the patent application. • The amendment may drop claims but not add them. To be entered, it may make changes in form, but may not raise new issues for the examiner. — Also termed Rule 116 amendment.

amendment after payment of issue fee.An amendment made by the applicant after the application has been allowed and the issue fee paid. • Such an amendment is not made as a matter of right but is governed by 37 CFR § 1.312. It must be accompanied by a petition to the Commissioner showing good and sufficient reasons why the amendment was not presented earlier. See amendment after allowance.

amendment before first action.See preliminary amendment.

amendment in excess of filing fee.An amendment to a patent application that increases the number of claims in the original application and requires payment of an additional fee.

preliminary amendment.An amendment filed before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office issues an office action on a patent application. • An amendment that is not filed with the original application is not considered part of the original disclosure. — Also termed amendment before first action.

Rule 116 amendment.See amendment after final action.

Rule 312 amendment.See amendment after allowance.

312 amendment.See amendment after allowance.

PATENT ATTORNEY

patent attorney. A lawyer who drafts and prosecutes patent applications, and who represents inventors in infringement suits and interference hearings. • In addition to a law license, a patent attorney must have a scientific or technical background, pass the patent bar examination, and be licensed by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office.

PATENT CLAIM

patent claim. A formal statement describing the novel features of an invention and defining the scope of the patent's protection <claim #3 of the patent describes an electrical means for driving a metal pin>. Cf. SPECIFICATION (3). [Cases: Patents 101. C.J.S. Patents §§ 140–142.]

“[The patent] application concludes with one or more ‘claims,’ which are summaries of the points of novelty of the invention disclosed by the specification, said claims also following certain fixed forms. If they are broad and in general terms, the patentee will be well protected, and will be the possessor of a worth while patent; but if, on the other hand, the claims are limited in scope, if they recite a multiplicity of exactly stated and unimportant elements, or if they are bad in any one of a number of other ways, the chances of success are small, the patent will be full of loop-holes of which infringers will be prompt to take advantage, the inventor will not have received all he is entitled to, nor all he has paid for, and, if the claims are very limited, it is more than likely that he will have obtained a patent not worth the paper upon which it is printed.” Richard B. Owen, Patents, Trademarks, Copyrights, Departmental Practice 14 (1925).

apparatus claim. A patent claim on a mechanical device, explaining how the components are connected and function together. • The preamble of an apparatus claim typically states the function of the machine; the body explains its elements and how they work together.

appendant claim. See dependent claim.

closed-ended claim. A patent claim that expressly limits its scope to a list of elements, typically introduced by the phrase “consisting of.” Cf. nearly closed-ended claim; open-ended claim.

coined-name claim. A chemical-patent claim consisting only of the name of the new material. • A coined-name claim is allowed by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office only on the rare occasion when the name is established in the field before the patent is applied for. The chemical composition, its physical properties, and the process for making it must still be disclosed in the specification.

dependent claim. A patent claim that refers to and further limits another claim or set of claims in the same patent application. — Also termed appendant claim. [Cases: Patents 165(5). C.J.S. Patents §§ 283, 287, 290, 293.]

design claim. The single claim allowed in an application for a design patent, incorporating by reference the drawing and other specifications. • The brief claim typically starts with “an ornamental design for” and ends with “as shown” or “as shown and described.” Cf. omnibus claim. [Cases: Patents 101(4).]

fingerprint claim. A chemical-patent claim that differentiates the material from prior art in terms of some physical feature, such as melting point or spectrum, rather than its chemical composition. • Fingerprint claims are allowed only when the chemical composition cannot be determined or cannot be distinguished from prior art.

generic claim.A claim that encompasses a class of elements, any of which could function as equivalents. • For a generic claim to be valid, the specific elements it encompasses must have a definable feature in common that makes them fit for the purpose. — Also termed genus claim. Cf. species claim.

independent claim.A patent claim that does not refer to any other claim.

Jepson claim.An improvement-patent claim characterized by a preamble setting forth the current state of the art, followed by the phrase “the improvement comprising” and a description of the claimed patentable improvement. • The name comes from Ex parte Jepson, 1917 C.D. 62, 243 O.G. 526 (Ass't Comm'r Pat. 1917) in which this type of claim was first approved and sanctioned by the Commissioner of Patents. — Also termed improvement claim.

Markush claim.A patent claim that includes elements listing alternative chemicals, materials, or steps in a process. • A Markush claim typically has language such as “selected from the group consisting of.” The alternatives must all give the same result, rather than patentably distinct products. The name derives from Ex parte Markush, 1925 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 126. See MARKUSH DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents 101(7).]

means-combination claim.A type of claim in a patent application that includes multiple limitations, at least one of which is in means-plus-function or step-plus-function form. • Means-combination claims are acceptable to examiners. [Cases: Patents 101(10).]

means-plus-function claim.See MEANS-PLUS-FUNCTION CLAUSE.

method claim.A patent claim that describes what is done to a workpiece in order to achieve the useful result claimed. • A method claim is the same thing as a process claim, but “method” is used more often in applications for mechanical and electrical devices. [Cases: Patents 101(11).]

multiple-dependent claim.A dependent claim that refers to more than one other preceding claim.

nearly closed-ended claim.A patent claim that limits its scope to a list of elements but does not expressly exclude close analogues. The claim is typically introduced by a phrase such as “consisting essentially of.” Cf. closed-ended claim; open-ended claim.

new-use claim.A method claim for a new way of using an existing invention. [Cases: Patents 27(1).]

nonelected claim.A claim that has been withdrawn from consideration based on the examiner's finding that the application claims more than one invention. • The applicant must elect to prosecute one invention. Other claims may either be abandoned or else be prosecuted separately under a divisional application. See RESTRICTION(4).

nonstatutory claim. See omnibus claim.

omnibus claim. A claim in a patent application that does not distinctly narrate a means to carry out a function but rather refers to the drawings or description with phrases such as “as described and shown.” • Omnibus claims are rejected in the United States but are accepted elsewhere. — Also termed nonstatutory claim. Cf. design claim.

open-ended claim. A patent claim that contains a nonexclusive list of elements, typically introduced by the phrase “consisting of.” • A later patent applicant cannot avoid infringement by merely adding an analogue to the list. Cf. closed-ended claim; nearly closed-ended claim.

plant-patent claim. The single claim in a plant-patent application, describing the principal distinguishing characteristics of the plant.

process claim. A patent claim that describes by steps what is done to the subject matter, usu. a substance, in order to achieve a useful result. • A process claim is the same thing as a method claim, but “process” is used more often in applications for chemical patents. [Cases: Patents 101(11).]

product-by-process claim. A patent claim defining a product through the process by which it is made. • The product-by-process claim is most often used to define new chemical compounds, such as drugs. [Cases: Patents 101(11).]

product claim. A patent claim that covers the structure, apparatus, or composition of a product.

single-means claim. A type of claim in a patent application that indicates a process, result, or function but does not describe the method of reaching that end . • When no other method is obvious, such an assertion claims rights to all possible ways of achieving the result — ways not specified in the application and even ways that have not yet been invented. Single-means claims are rejected as too broad. — Also termed single-element means claim. Cf. MEANS-PLUS-FUNCTION CLAUSE. [Cases: Patents 101(8).]

species claim. A claim that is limited to a single apparatus, process, composition of matter, or article of manufacture, rather than to a range of similar and related items. Cf. generic claim.

Squires claim. A utility-patent claim that incorporates a drawing or table by reference. • This claim is allowed by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office only if there is no practical way to define the invention in words, but the invention is simple to illustrate with the drawing or table. See SQUIRES DOCTRINE.

subcombination claim. A patent claim, usu. on a device, describing a subsystem of a larger combination. • A subcombination may be patented separately if it has its own utility.

PATENT COOPERATION TREATY

Patent Cooperation Treaty. A 1970 treaty that streamlined the process of securing patents in multiple countries by establishing a single filing date and providing for a single preliminary patent search. • An inventor who wants to qualify for patents from several member countries files a standard application in one country, thus preserving the priority date, then submits a PCT filing that designates which other countries' patents are being applied for. WIPO, the United Nations' World Intellectual Property Organization, administers the treaty. — Abbr. PCT. See international application under PATENT APPLICATION.

PATENT DISCLAIMER

patent disclaimer. See statutory disclaimer under DISCLAIMER.

PATENTEE

patentee (pat-<<schwa>>n-tee). One who either has been granted a patent or has succeeded in title to a patent. • Although it might seem helpful to distinguish a patentee as a person to whom a patent is issued and a patent-holder as the owner of a patent, including the original grantee's assigns, the Patent Act explicitly includes all title-holders under the term “patentee.” 35 USCA § 100(d). — Also termed patent-holder; patent-owner. [Cases: Patents 90, 117. C.J.S. Patents §§ 120–125, 209.]

patent-exhaustion doctrine. Patents. The rule that the unconditioned sale of a patented article ends the patentee's monopoly right to control its use. • That control may still be exercised by limitations in a contract or license, as long as it does not amount to anticompetitive patent misuse. Adams v. Burke, 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) 453 (1874). See FIRST-SALE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents 191. C.J.S. Patents §§ 217, 314, 339.]

patent infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

patent insurance. See INSURANCE.

patent marking. The incorporation or affixation of a patent number to a patented article's surface or surrounding packaging. • Affixing the patent number to a product gives constructive notice of patent rights to infringers. Without the number in place, a patentee cannot recover losses that occur before the infringer has actual notice of the patent. See PATENT NUMBER. [Cases: Patents 222. C.J.S. Patents §§ 394–395.]

patent medicine. A packaged drug that is protected by trademark and is available without prescription. [Cases: Health 302–305.]

PATENT-MISUSE DOCTRINE

patent-misuse doctrine. An equitable rule that a patentee should not be allowed to use a patent to effectively broaden the scope of the patentee's monopoly in restraint of trade or otherwise against the public interest. • Two common examples of anticompetitive broadening are (1) using a patent to restrain competition from an unpatented product or process, and (2) employing the patent beyond its life span to exclude others from gaining commercial advantages by using the product or process. The practical effect of finding patent misuse is the loss of patent protection. The doctrine operates independently of antitrust law but overlaps it in many ways and arose in the same era, at the turn of the 20th century. It has been described as an application of the equitable rule of “unclean hands.” See nonmetered license under LICENSE. [Cases: Monopolies 17.5(14); Patents 283(1). C.J.S. Monopolies § 135; Patents §§ 436–439.]

patent number. Patents. The number assigned by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to a patent. See PATENT MARKING.

PATENT OFFICE

Patent Office. See UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE.

PATENT OFFICE REPORTS

patent-owner. See PATENTEE.

PATENT PENDING

patent pending. The designation given to an invention while the Patent and Trademark Office is processing the patent application. • No protection against infringement exists, however, unless an actual patent is granted. — Abbr. pat. pend. [Cases: Patents 104. C.J.S. Patents §§ 145–147, 149–151, 173–175.]

PATENT POOLING

patent pooling. The cross-licensing of patents among patentees. • Patent pooling does not violate antitrust laws unless it is done to suppress competition or control an industry. [Cases: Monopolies 12(15). C.J.S. Monopolies §§ 129–135.]

PATENT-PROSECUTION PROCESS

patent-prosecution process. See PROSECUTION(4).

The Rolls were originally used to grant offices, lands, licenses, peerages, and pensions. In later centuries, the Patent Rolls included grants of patents for inventions.

PATENT SEARCH

PATENT SOLICITOR

patent solicitor. See patent agent under AGENT(2).

PATENT SUPPRESSION

patent suppression. The deliberate nonuse of a patent, esp. in order to deny the public or competitors the benefit of the invention. • Patent suppression is a rich source of urban legend, such as the rumor of oil companies sitting on inventions that would greatly improve gas mileage, or pantyhose companies suppressing a patent on no-run nylon. But the stories are not always fictional: in 1942 Standard Oil admitted trying to delay the advancement of synthetic-rubber technology in order to protect its market in natural rubber.

patent term. The period during which a patent is in force. [Cases: Patents 131. C.J.S. Patents § 236.]

PATENT-TERM ADJUSTMENT

patent-term adjustment. A compulsory extension of the time a utility or plant patent remains in force, following administrative delays in prosecuting the application. • A provision of the American Inventors' Protection Act of 1999, the extension is available for new applications, continuation applications, and divisional applications filed since May 29, 2000. — Abbr. PTA. Cf. PATENT-TERM EXTENSION. [Cases: Patents 133. C.J.S. Patents §§ 234–235.]

patent-term extension. A lengthening of the time a patent remains in force, given to compensate inventors for time lost because of administrative delays such as interferences, secrecy orders, or appeals. • The extension applies to utility and plant patents issued after June 7, 1995 and before May 29, 2000. Its maximum length is five years. Cf. PATENT-TERM ADJUSTMENT. [Cases: Patents 133. C.J.S. Patents §§ 234–235.]

patent-term guarantee. An inventor's statutory right to extend the term of a patent if the application was delayed by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • The term can be extended up to five years if the application was delayed because of an interference proceeding or appellate review, or if the PTO missed a statutory deadline for certain steps in the prosecution, or failed to grant the patent within three years of the filing date. The guarantee took effect May 29, 2000. [Cases: Patents 133. C.J.S. Patents §§ 234–235.]

penalty. 1. Punishment imposed on a wrongdoer, usu. in the form of imprisonment or fine; esp., a sum of money exacted as punishment for either a wrong to the state or a civil wrong (as distinguished from compensation for the injured party's loss). • Though usu. for crimes, penalties are also sometimes imposed for civil wrongs. [Cases: Penalties 1. C.J.S. Penalties §§ 2–4.]

civil penalty. A fine assessed for a violation of a statute or regulation < the EPA levied a civil penalty of $10,000 on the manufacturer for exceeding its pollution limits >.

statutory penalty. A penalty imposed for a statutory violation; esp., a penalty imposing automatic liability on a wrongdoer for violation of a statute's terms without reference to any actual damages suffered. [Cases: Penalties 1. C.J.S. Penalties §§ 2–4.]

2. An extra charge against a party who violates a contractual provision.

prepayment penalty. A charge assessed against a borrower who elects to pay off a loan before it is due. [Cases: Bills and Notes 429; Usury 61. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit §§ 100, 234–236, 238; Interest and Usury; Consumer Credit § 172.]

3. Excessive stipulated damages that a contract purports to impose on a party that breaches. • If the damages are excessive enough to be considered a penalty, a court will usu. not enforce that particular provision of the contract. Some contracts specify that a given sum of damages is intended “as liquidated damages and not as a penalty” — but even that language is not foolproof. [Cases: Damages 80. C.J.S. Damages §§ 185, 190–192.] “A penalty is a sum which a party ... agrees to pay or forfeit in the event of a breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach, or as security, where the sum is deposited or the covenant to pay is joined in by one or more sureties, to insure that the person injured shall collect his actual damages. Penalties ... are not recoverable or retainable as such by the person in whose favor they are framed ....” Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 146, at 600 (1935).

4. PENALTY CLAUSE.

PENALTY CLAUSE

penalty clause. A contractual provision that assesses against a defaulting party an excessive monetary charge unrelated to actual harm. • Penalty clauses are generally unenforceable. — Often shortened to penalty. — Also termed penal clause. Cf. LIQUIDATED-DAMAGES CLAUSE; LIMITATION-OF-REMEDIES CLAUSE . [Cases: Damages 76, 80. C.J.S. Damages §§ 176, 185–187, 190–192, 194.]

“It not infrequently happens that contracts provide for what is to happen in the event of a breach by the parties, or by one of them. Such provisions may be perfectly simple attempts to avoid future disputes, and to quantify the probable amount of any loss. That is unobjectionable. But sometimes clauses of this kind are not designed to quantify the amount of the probable loss, but are designed to terrorize, or frighten, the party into performance. For example, a contract may provide that the promisor is to pay £5 on a certain event, but if he fails to do so, he must then pay £500. Now a clause of that kind is called a penalty clause by lawyers, and for several hundred years it has been the law that such promises cannot be enforced. The standard justification for the law here is that it is unfair and unconscionable to enforce clauses which are designed to act in terrorem." P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 57–58 (1981).

Suppose the testator ... with three living children and three grandchildren who are the issue of a deceased son, had desired and had so stated in his will that his own children and the children of his deceased son should share equally in the estate. In that event the estate would be divided into six parts and each of the three children and each of the three grandchildren would receive an equal portion of the total estate — namely, one-sixth.” Gilbert Thomas Stephenson, Wills 30 (1934).

Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Sales 177. C.J.S. Sales §§ 162, 189, 194, 197–198.]

“At common law, a buyer of goods possessed a legal right to insist upon ‘perfect tender’ by the seller. If the goods failed to conform exactly to the description in the contract — whether as to quality, quantity or manner of delivery — the buyer could reject the goods and rescind the contract, which meant that the parties would be returned to the positions they occupied before the contract was entered into.” Marvin A. #### PER FORMAM DONI vicarious performance. Performance carried by an employee, agent, or other nominee.

“It is necessary ... to distinguish between assignment of a contractual liability and vicarious performance of a contract. Normally a person who contracts to do something must do it himself. But in the case of a duty of performance which involves no personal element, so that it does not matter to the other party who does the promised act, so long as it is done in accordance with the contract, the party liable may do it by a servant or agent or other nominee. This is not an assignment of the contractual liability, for the original contractor remains liable and if the deputy has done the work badly it is not the deputy but the contractor himself who is answerable to the other party.” 2 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 76–77 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

“[A] creditor seeking a warrant for the apprehension of his debtor as in meditatione fugae, obtains it periculo petentis, and he, not the judge, will be liable in damages if the debtor can show that the obtaining of the warrant and the using of it were illegal.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 454 (4th ed. 1894).

PERIL OF THE SEA

peril of the sea.An action of the elements at sea of such force as to overcome the strength of a well-founded ship and the normal precautions of good marine practice. • A peril of the sea may relieve a carrier from liability for the resulting losses. — Also termed danger of navigation; danger of river; marine peril; marine risk; (in regard to the Great Lakes) perils of the lakes; danger of the sea. [Cases: Insurance 2220; Shipping 120. C.J.S. Insurance § 998; Shipping §§ 276–277.]

“Of the marine perils, by far the most important are those ‘of the seas’. What is covered is not any loss that may happen on the sea, but fortuitous losses occurring through extraordinary action of the elements at sea, or any accident or mishap in navigation. By far the greatest number of claims for marine loss, and of the insurance problems connected with other topics treated in this book arise under this clause. Extraordinary action of the wind and waves is a sea peril. Collision, foundering, stranding, striking on rocks and icebergs, are all covered under these words. Even a swell from a passing ship may be a ‘peril of the sea’. On the other hand, ordinary wear and tear are not included under the coverage of this or any other phrase in the clause, nor are losses which are anticipatable as regular incidents of sea carriage in general or of navigation in a particular part of the world.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 2-9, at 72–73 (2d ed. 1975).

PER INCURIAM

per incuriam (p<<schwa>>r in-kyoor-ee-<<schwa>>m), adj. (Of a judicial decision) wrongly decided, usu. because the judge or judges were ill-informed about the applicable law.

“There is at least one exception to the rule of stare decisis. I refer to judgments rendered per incuriam. A judgment per incuriam is one which has been rendered inadvertently. Two examples come to mind: first, where the judge has forgotten to take account of a previous decision to which the doctrine of stare decisis applies. For all the care with which attorneys and judges may comb the case law, errare humanum est, and sometimes a judgment which clarifies a point to be settled is somehow not indexed, and is forgotten. It is in cases such as these that a judgment rendered in contradiction to a previous judgment that should have been considered binding, and in ignorance of that judgment, with no mention of it, must be deemed rendered per incuriam; thus, it has no authority... The same applies to judgments rendered in ignorance of legislation of which they should have taken account. For a judgment to be deemed per incuriam, that judgment must show that the legislation was not invoked.” Louis-Philippe Pigeon, Drafting and Interpreting Legislation 60 (1988).

“As a general rule the only cases in which decisions should be held to have been given per incuriam are those of decisions given in ignorance or forgetfulness of some inconsistent statutory provision or of some authority binding on the court concerned, so that in such cases some features of the decision or some step in the reasoning on which it is based is found on that account to be demonstrably wrong. This definition is not necessarily exhaustive, but cases not strictly within it which can properly be held to have been decided per incuriam, must in our judgment, consistently with the stare decisis rule which is an essential part of our law, be of the rarest occurrence.” Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 149 (4th ed. 1991).

PERINDE EST AC SI SCRIPTUM NON ESSET

PER INFORTUNIUM

per infortunium (p<<schwa>>r in-for-t[y]oo-nee-<<schwa>>m), adj. or adv.[Latin] By misadventure. • At common law, when one person killed another per infortunium, a conviction and royal pardon were necessary even when there was no fault. See homicide per infortunium under HOMICIDE.

“It may seem strange to modern minds that for centuries it was a rule of our law that a man who killed another either by misadventure (per infortunium) or in reasonable self-defence (against an attack not itself felonious), although he did not commit a felony, must yet be held guilty of unlawful homicide and require the King's pardon if he were to escape punishment, and even if granted pardon would still be liable to suffer forfeiture of his property; and that he was exposed to claims for compensation from the family of the deceased." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 113 (16th ed. 1952).

United States*, 247 U.S. 7, 13, 38 S.Ct. 417, 420 (1918). The Court reasoned that the third party's ability to protect his or her rights would be thwarted if the party could not appeal immediately.

An interest that does not take effect or vest within the period prescribed by law. • In reference to the rule against perpetuities, only sense 4 is now current. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES. [Cases: Perpetuities 4. C.J.S. Perpetuities §§ 2, 12.]

“A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive of the Commonwealth; it would put a stop to commerce and prevent the circulation of the riches of the Kingdom, and therefore is not to be countenanced in equity. If in equity you could come nearer to a perpetuity than the rules of Common Law would admit, all men being desirous to continue their estates in their families, would settle their estates by way of trust; which might indeed make well for the jurisdiction of the court, but would be destructive of the commonwealth.” (1683) 1 Vern. 163 (per Lord North) (as quoted in George W. Keeton, English Law: The Judicial Contribution 118 (1974)).

Any being that is so capable is a person, whether a human being or not, and no being that is not so capable is a person, even though he be a man. Persons are the substances of which rights and duties are the attributes. It is only in this respect that persons possess juridical significance, and this is the exclusive point of view from which personality receives legal recognition." persona dignior (p<<schwa>>r-soh-n<<schwa>> dig-nee-or). [Latin] Hist. The more worthy or respectable person; the more fitting person.

persona ficta (p<<schwa>>r-soh-n<<schwa>> fik-t<<schwa>>). [Latin "false mask"] Hist. A fictional person, such as a corporation.

"But units other than individual men can be thought of as capable of acts, or of rights and liabilities: such are Corporations and even Hereditates Iacentes. Accordingly the way is clear to apply the name of person to these also. The mediaeval lawyers did so, but as they regarded Corporations as endowed with personality by a sort of creative act of the State, and received from the Roman lawyers the conception of the hereditas iacens as representing the persona of the deceased rather than as itself being a person, they called these things Personae Fictae, an expression not used by the Romans." W.W. Buckland, Elementary Principles of the Roman Private Law 16 (1912).

“This phrase signifies one person who, among others appointed with him as colleagues in some office, enjoys the confidence and esteem of the person appointing, more than those appointed with him. Thus a testator not unfrequently appoints among his trustees one who shall be a sine qua non — that is, one whose concurrence and consent shall be indispensable to every act of administration under the trust. Such a trustee falls within the description of a persona praedilecta.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 456 (4th ed. 1894).

“Legal personality ... refers to the particular device by which the law creates or recognizes units to which it ascribes certain powers and capacities.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 393 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

2. Parliamentary law. (usu. pl.) An improper reference to a member by name or in his or her personal capacity. “No person in speaking, is to mention a member then present by his name; but to describe him by his seat in the house, or who spoke last, or on the other side of the question, nor to digress from the matter to fall upon the person, by speaking, reviling, nipping, or unmannerly words against a particular member. The consequences of a measure may be reprobated in strong terms; but to arraign the motives of those who propose or advocate it, is a personality, and against order.” Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice 36–37 (1801) (citations omitted).

In civil-law systems, it refers to the law of the individual's nationality (and so is sometimes called lex patriae). Cf. TERRITORIAL LAW.

“The idea of the personal law is based on the conception of man as a social being, so that those transactions of his daily life which affect him most closely in a personal sense, such as marriage, divorce, legitimacy, many kinds of capacity, and succession, may be governed universally by that system of law deemed most suitable and adequate for the purpose .... [A]lthough the law of the domicile is the chief criterion adopted by English courts for the personal law, it lies within the power of any man of full age and capacity to establish his domicile in any country he chooses, and thereby automatically to make the law of that country his personal law.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 188 (7th ed. 1974).

A 1996 federal law that overhauled the welfare system, as well as requiring states to provide a means for collecting child support by (1) imposing liens on a child-support obligor's assets, and (2) facilitating income-withholding. • The Act did away with Aid to Families with Dependent Children in favor of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families. It also limited the length of time that persons could receive welfare and tied states' receipt of federal child-support funds to their implementing enhanced paternity-establishment services. — Abbr. “What persona standi is, may be more easily learned by considering the loss of it by civil death or outlawry .... But there are others besides outlaws who have no persona standi. A pupil cannot pursue or defend; that must be done by his tutor in his name. And companies, as such, have not a persona standi.... Persona standi applies to the status of the person, as qualified to pursue or defend in actions generally; title to pursue applies to particular actions, and requires, in addition to a persona standi, that the party have a proper legal interest in the particular action pursued or defended." United States Attorneys' Manual § 9-2.031 (Sept. 1997); Petite v. United States, 361 U.S. 529, 80 S.Ct. 450 (1960). [Cases: Criminal Law 29.C.J.S. Criminal Law § 14; Larceny §§ 53-54.]

“(‘Petite Policy’) .... The purpose of this policy is to vindicate substantial federal interests through appropriate federal prosecutions, to protect persons charged with criminal conduct from the burdens associated with multiple prosecutions and punishments for substantially the same act(s) or transaction(s), to promote efficient utilization of Department resources, and to promote coordination and cooperation between federal and state prosecutors.” United States Attorneys' Manual § 9-2.031 (Sept. 1997).

“In response to the Court's continuing sensitivity to the fairness implications of the multiple prosecution power, the Justice Department adopted the policy of refusing to bring a federal prosecution following a state prosecution except when necessary to advance compelling interests of federal law enforcement. The Petite policy was designed to limit the exercise of the power to bring successive prosecutions for the same offense to situations comporting with the rationale for the existence of that power. Although not constitutionally mandated, this Executive policy serves to protect interests which, but for the ‘dual sovereignty’ principle inherent in our federal system, would be embraced by the Double Jeopardy Clause. In light of the parallel purposes of the Government's Petite policy and the fundamental constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy, the federal courts should be receptive, not circumspect, when the Government seeks leave to implement that policy.” Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22, 28-29, 98 S.Ct. 81, 85 (1977)(citation omitted).

See CORPORATE VEIL. [Cases: Corporations 1.4(1). C.J.S. Corporations §§ 9, 13.]

“[C]ourts sometimes apply common law principles to ‘pierce the corporate veil’ and hold shareholders personally liable for corporate debts or obligations. Unfortunately, despite the enormous volume of litigation in this area, the case law fails to articulate any sensible rationale or policy that explains when corporate existence should be disregarded. Indeed, courts are remarkably prone to rely on labels or characterizations of relationships (such as ‘alter ego,’ ‘instrumentality,’ or ‘sham’) and the decisions offer little in the way of predictability or rational explanation of why enumerated factors should be decisive.” Barry R. Furrow et al., Health Law § 5-4, at 182 (2d ed. 2000).

The term derives from Pierringer v. Hoger, 124 N.W.2d 106 (Wis. 1963), in which the court ruled that a trial court could give immediate effect to a release as long as the plaintiff would satisfy any portion of a judgment against a nonsettling party in excess of that party's proportionate share of damages. #### PILOT pilot. 1. A person in control of an airplane. 2. Maritime law. A person in control of a vessel.

compulsory pilot. A ship pilot entitled by law to guide a ship for a particular purpose, such as piloting the ship into harbor. • The compulsory nature of the appointment relieves the vessel's owner of personal liability if the pilot causes a collision. Cf. voluntary pilot. [Cases: Pilots 7. C.J.S. Pilots of Vessels § 8.]

“The compulsory pilot presents a special problem. Statutes that impose a fine or imprisonment for the failure to take a pilot obviously create compulsory pilotage. Some statutes, however, allow the ship to refuse the pilot provided she pays his fee or half of it (‘half-pilotage’). The Supreme Court has indicated that it does not regard the tendering of this alternative as amounting to compulsion. It makes a difference, because it is pretty well settled that if the pilotage is ‘compulsory’ the respondeat superior nexus is broken, and the shipowner cannot be held personally liable for the fault of the pilot resulting in collision. The ship's liability in rem, however, is unaffected by the fact that the pilotage is compulsory. This is one of the more striking consequences of the endowment of the ship with a juristic personality independent of that of her owner.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 7-16, at 520–21 (2d ed. 1975).

voluntary pilot. A ship pilot who controls a ship with the permission of the vessel's owner. • The vessel's owner is personally liable for damage resulting from a collision caused by a voluntary pilot. Cf. compulsory pilot. [Cases: Pilots 7. C.J.S. Pilots of Vessels § 8.]

whether the fault of the pilot is imputed to the vessel owner or operator. American law draws an unwarranted distinction between the 'voluntary pilot,' who is taken on voluntarily, and the 'compulsory pilot,' who is mandated by a statute or local regulation. The voluntary pilot is considered to be the same as any crew member, and his fault is fully attributable to the vessel owner. A compulsory pilot's fault, however, cannot be imputed to the shipowner personally; the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply. At most, the vessel is liable in rem since the compulsory pilot's negligence is attributable to the ship. The distinction makes little sense in that it throws the loss upon potentially innocent parties and ignores the fact that the vessel owner commonly carries insurance against this liability. In any collision case, therefore, care should be taken to assert a maritime lien and to sue the vessel in rem if a compulsory pilot may be involved." Thomas J. Schoenbaum, Admiralty and Maritime Law § 1-31, at 450-51 (1987).

PILOTAGE

Drone, A Treatise on the Law of Property in Intellectual Productions 97 (1879).

“[I]n some countries the problem is what might be called the ‘cycle of piracy’ — legitimate copyright owners refuse to sell in the country because of the piracy problem, which means that the only way the public can obtain the goods it wants is to turn to piracy. ## PLAGIARISM

plagiarism. The deliberate and knowing presentation of another person's original ideas or creative expressions as one's own. • Generally, plagiarism is immoral but not illegal. If the expression's creator gives unrestricted permission for its use and the user claims the expression as original, the user commits plagiarism but does not violate copyright laws. If the original expression is copied without permission, the plagiarist may violate copyright laws, even if credit goes to the creator. And if the plagiarism results in material gain, it may be deemed a passing-off activity that violates the Lanham Act. Cf. INFRINGEMENT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 53(1).] — plagiarize (play-j<<schwa>>-rIz), vb. — plagiarist (play-j<<schwa>>-rist), n.

“Plagiarism, which many people commonly think has to do with copyright, is not in fact a legal doctrine. True plagiarism is an ethical, not a legal, offense and is enforceable by academic authorities, not courts. Plagiarism occurs when someone — a hurried student, a neglectful professor, an unscrupulous writer — falsely claims someone else's words, whether copyrighted or not, as his own. Of course, if the plagiarized work is protected by copyright, the unauthorized reproduction is also a copyright infringement.” Paul Goldstein, Copyright's Highway 12 (1994).

“That the supporting evidence for the accusation of plagiarism may on occasion be elusive, insufficient, or uncertain, is not the same as thinking that the definition of plagiarism is uncertain. The gray areas may remain resistant to adjudication without being resistant to definition. It may be perfectly clear what constitutes plagiarism (‘using the work of another with an intent to deceive’) without its being clear that what faces us is truly a case of this.” Christopher Ricks, “Plagiarism,” in 97 Proceedings of the British Academy 149, 151 (1998).

PLAIN MEANING

PLAIN-MEANING RULE

plain-meaning rule. 1. The rule that if a writing, or a provision in a writing, appears to be unambiguous on its face, its meaning must be determined from the writing itself without resort to any extrinsic evidence. • Though often applied, this rule is often condemned as simplistic because the meaning of words varies with the verbal context and the surrounding circumstances, not to mention the linguistic ability of the users and readers (including judges). See PAROL EVIDENCE RULE. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; MISCHIEF RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE STATUTE RULE E. [Cases: Contracts 143, 152; Statutes 188.C.J.S. Contracts §§ 302, 307, 318–322, 327, 331; Statutes §§ 321, 324–326, 330, 334.]

“On its positive side, the plain meaning rule states a tautology: Words should be read as saying what they say. The rule tells us to respect meaning but it does so without disclosing what the specific meaning is. At best, it reaffirms the preeminence of the statute over materials extrinsic to it. In its negative aspect, on the other hand, the rule has sometimes been used to read ineptly expressed language out of its proper context, in violation of established principles of meaning and communication. To this extent it is an impediment to interpretation.” Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 229 (1975).

“A PUD is primarily an alternative to traditional zoning since it provides a mixing of uses. The location and identification of the permitted uses are provided on the PUD map or plat, which closely resembles a subdivision plat. Development approval is generally granted for the PUD at one time rather than on a lot by lot basis and in that way closely tracks the subdivision approval process.” Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer & Thomas E. rolled-up plea. Defamation. A defendant's plea claiming that the statements complained of are factual and that, to the extent that they consist of comment, they are fair comment on a matter of public interest. See FAIR COMMENT. “An amendment is the correction of an error or the supplying of an omission in the process or pleadings. An amended pleading differs from a supplemental pleading in that the true function of the latter is to spread upon the record matter material to the issue which has arisen subsequent to the filing of a pleading, while matter of amendment purely is matter that might well have been pleaded at the time the pleading sought to be amended was filed, but which through error or inadvertence was omitted or misstated. It has been declared that the allowance of amendments is incidental to the exercise of all judicial power and is indispensable to the ends of justice.” Eugene A. notice pleading.A procedural system requiring that the pleader give only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and not a complete detailing of all the facts. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 673; Pleading 16, 48. C.J.S. Pleading §§ 9, 116–124, 132–133, 162, 164.]

PLEAD (ONE'S) BELLY

plead (one's) belly. Hist. Slang. (Of a female defendant) to claim pregnancy as a defense, usu. to postpone or avoid a court's sentence of capital punishment or transportation. • A female defendant who pleaded that she was pregnant was treated with suspicion. The judge would appoint a jury of matrons (often consisting of 12 married mothers) to examine the claimant (under the writ de ventre inspiciendo). If the woman was declared to be “quick with child” (in an advanced state of pregnancy rather than “barely with child” or only newly or just possibly pregnant), she enjoyed a reprieve from execution or transportation until after the child's birth (or miscarriage). Because juries of matrons often declared barren defendants to be pregnant, a court would keep track of a reprieved woman to see if the delay was justified or if she should be made to suffer the sentence (“called down”) at the next session. Although the plea and the special jury are no longer in use, the prohibition against executing a pregnant woman persists in modern law. 18 USCA § 3596(b).

Hist. A person who acts as a surety for the prosecution of a lawsuit. • In early practice, pledges were listed at the end of the declaration. Over time the listing of pledges became a formality, and fictitious names (such as “John Doe” or “Richard Roe”) were allowed. — pledge, vb. — pledgeable, adj.

“A pledge is something more than a mere lien and something less than a mortgage.” Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Collateral Securities and Pledges § 2, at 4 (Edward M. White rev., 3d ed. 1912).

“A pledge is a bailment of personal property to secure an obligation of the bailor. If the purpose of the transaction is to transfer property for security only, then the courts will hold the transaction a pledge, even though in form it may be a sale or other out-and-out transfer.” Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 128, at 622 (2d ed. 1936).

“The pledge is as old as recorded history and is still in use, as the presence of pawnbrokers attests. In this transaction the debtor borrows money by physically transferring to a secured party the possession of the property to be used as security, and the property will be returned if the debt is repaid. Since the debtor does not retain the use of pledged goods, this security device has obvious disadvantages from the debtor's point of view.” Ray D. Henson, Secured Transactions § 3-1, at 17 (3d ed. 1983).

A claim for more than is due; esp., the mistake of claiming more in one's pleadings than is due. • This was fatal to the action under classical law. Under cognitio extraordinaria, however, a claimant could continue the action, but could be liable for treble damages to any person injured by the overstated claim. — Also spelled (erroneously) pluspetitio. — Also termed pluris petitio.

After the abolition of the formula-regime the pluspetitio lost its actuality. Imperial legislation modified the severe provisions against overclaims.... The most important of these rules was that which declared that all the property which the parens binubus had acquired gratuitously from his or her deceased spouse, whether by way of gift, dos, donatio propter nuptias, or testamentary disposition — the so-called lucra nuptialia — should become ipso jure the property of the children of the first marriage at the moment of the conclusion of the second marriage, and that only a usufruct should be reserved for the parens binubus." Cf. possessio civilis.

POSSESSION

possession. 1. The fact of having or holding property in one's power; the exercise of dominion over property. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.] 2. The right under which one may exercise control over something to the exclusion of all others; the continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material object. 3. Civil law. The detention or use of a physical thing with the intent to hold it as one's own. La. Civ. Code art. 3421(1). 4. (usu. pl.) Something that a person owns or controls; PROPERTY(2). Cf. OWNERSHIP; TITLE(1). 5. A territorial dominion of a state or nation.

“[A]s the name of Possession is ... one of the most important in our books, so it is one of the most ambiguous. Its legal senses (for they are several) overlap the popular sense, and even the popular sense includes the assumption of matters of fact which are not always easy to verify. In common speech a man is said to possess or to be in possession of anything of which he has the apparent control, or from the use of which he has the apparent power of excluding others.... [A]ny of the usual outward marks of ownership may suffice, in the absence of manifest power in some one else, to denote as having possession the person to whom they attach. Law takes this popular conception as a provisional groundwork, and builds up on it the notion of possession in a technical sense, as a definite legal relation to something capable of having an owner, which relation is distinct and separable both from real and from apparent ownership, though often concurrent with one or both of them.” Frederick Pollock & Robert Samuel Wright, An Essay on Possession in the Common Law 1–2 (1888).

“In the whole range of legal theory there is no conception more difficult than that of possession. The Roman lawyers brought their usual acumen to the analysis of it, and since their day the problem has formed the subject of a voluminous literature, while it still continues to tax the ingenuity of jurists. Nor is the question one of mere curiosity or scientific interest, for its practical importance is not less than its difficulty. The legal consequences which flow from the acquisition and loss of possession are many and serious. Possession, for example, is evidence of ownership; the possessor of a thing is presumed to be the owner of it, and may put all other claimants to proof of their title.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 285 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

actual possession. Physical occupancy or control over property. Cf. constructive possession. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

bona fide possession. Possession of property by a person who in good faith does not know that the property's ownership is disputed. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser 220. C.J.S. Vendor and Purchaser §§ 482–485, 517.]

civil possession. 1. Civil law. Possession existing by virtue of a person's intent to own property even though the person no longer occupies or has physical control of it. 2. Louisiana law. The continuation of possession through the possessor's presumed intent to continue holding the thing as his or her own, after the possessor ceases to possess the thing corporeally. La. Civ. Code arts. 3431–3432. • Civil possession may be evidenced by such things as paying taxes on the property and granting rights of interest in it. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

constructive possession. 1. Control or dominion over a property without actual possession or custody of it. — Also termed effective possession. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.] 2. Civil law. Possession by operation of law of an entirety by virtue of corporeal possession of a part. • When a possessor holds title to a property and physically possesses part of it, the law will deem the possessor to hold constructive possession of the rest of the property described in the title. La. Civ. Code art. 3426. — Also termed possessio fictitia. Cf. actual possession.

corporeal possession. Possession of a material object, such as a farm or a coin. — Also termed natural possession; possessio corporis; (Ger.) Sachenbesitz. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

criminal possession. The unlawful possession of certain prohibited articles, such as illegal drugs or drug paraphernalia, firearms, or stolen property.

derivative possession. Lawful possession by one (such as a tenant) who does not hold title.

direct possession. See immediate possession.

double possession. The doctrine that, in a bailment, both the bailor and the bailee have possession of the item that has been bailed. • This doctrine does not apply in most Anglo-American jurisdictions.

“It has been suggested that the essence of bailment is that the bailee secures possession and therefore that the bailor loses possession. This elementary proposition is sometimes obscured by the fact that some dicta treat the possession of the bailee as the possession of the bailor. The theoretical justification for this is the doctrine of ‘double possession’ — a principal may have possession through the possession of an agent. This view is in accord with some foreign systems, but it does not suit the basic principles of English law which treats possession as exclusive.” G.W. Paton, Bailment in the Common Law 6 (1952).

effective possession. See constructive possession.

exclusive possession. The exercise of exclusive dominion over property, including the use and benefit of the property.

hostile possession. Possession asserted against the claims of all others, esp. the record owner. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Adverse Possession 58–85. C.J.S. Adverse Possession §§ 59–143, 145–148, 206–209, 263–264, 266–267, 269–274, 276–280, 282–288, 290, 292–293, 295–296, 298, 329–330, 333–338.]

immediate possession. Possession that is acquired or retained directly or personally. — Also termed direct possession.

immemorial possession. Possession that began so long ago that no one still living witnessed its beginning.

incorporeal possession. Possession of something other than a material object, such as an easement over a neighbor's land, or the access of light to the windows of a house. — Also termed possessio juris; quasi-possession.

“It is a question much debated whether incorporeal possession is in reality true possession at all. Some are of opinion that all genuine possession is corporeal, and that the other is related to it by way of analogy merely. They maintain that there is no single generic conception which includes possessio corporis and possessio juris as its two specific forms. The Roman lawyers speak with hesitation and even inconsistency on the point. They sometimes include both forms under the title of possessio, while at other times they are careful to qualify incorporeal possession as quasi possessio — something which is not true possession, but is analogous to it. The question is one of no little difficulty, but the opinion here accepted is that the two forms do in truth belong to a single genus. The true idea of possession is wider than that of corporeal possession, just as the true idea of ownership is wider than that of corporeal ownership.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 288–89 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

indirect possession. See mediate possession.

insular possession. An island territory of the United States, such as Puerto Rico. [Cases: Territories 7. C.J.S. Territories §§ 2, 5, 7, 9–10.]

joint possession. Possession shared by two or more persons.

mediate possession (mee-dee-it). Possession of a thing through someone else, such as an agent. • In every instance of mediate possession, there is a direct possessor (such as an agent) as well as a mediate possessor (the principal). — Also termed indirect possession.

“If I go myself to purchase a book, I acquire direct possession of it; but if I send my servant to buy it for me, I acquire mediate possession of it through him, until he has brought it to me, when my possession becomes immediate.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 300 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

naked possession. The mere possession of something, esp. real estate, without any apparent right or colorable title to it. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

natural possession. Civil law. The exercise of physical detention or control over a thing, as by occupying a building or cultivating farmland. • Natural possession may be had without title, and may give rise to a claim of unlawful possession or a claim of ownership by acquisitive prescription. The term “natural possession” has been replaced by the term “corporeal possession” in the Louisiana Civil Code, by virtue of a 1982 revision. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3425. See corporeal possession; PRESCRIPTION(2). Cf. possessio naturalis under POSSESSIO. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

notorious possession. Possession or control that is evident to others; possession of property that, because it is generally known by people in the area where the property is located, gives rise to a presumption that the actual owner has notice of it. • Notorious possession is one element of adverse possession. — Also termed open possession; open and notorious possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Adverse Possession 28–33. C.J.S. Adverse Possession §§ 48–53, 263–264, 266–269, 274, 276, 278–281, 293–294.]

open possession. See notorious possession.

pedal possession. Actual possession, as by living on the land or by improving it. • This term usu. appears in adverse-possession contexts.

possession animo domini. Civil law. Possession with the intent to own a thing, movable or immovable; possession as an owner. See La. Civ. Code art. 3427.

possession by relation of law. A person's legally recognized possession of land despite the person's not having actual possession after being improperly or unlawfully dispossessed by another.

possession in fact. Actual possession that may or may not be recognized by law. • For example, an employee's possession of an employer's property is for some purposes not legally considered possession, the term detention or custody being used instead. — Also termed possessio naturalis.

possession in law. 1. Possession that is recognized by the law either because it is a specific type of possession in fact or because the law for some special reason attributes the advantages and results of possession to someone who does not in fact possess. 2. See constructive possession. — Also termed possessio civilis.

“There is no conception which will include all that amounts to possession in law, and will include nothing else, and it is impossible to frame any definition from which the concrete law of possession can be logically deduced.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 287 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

possession of a right. The continuing exercise and enjoyment of a right. • This type of possession is often unrelated to an ownership interest in property. For example, a criminal defendant possesses the right to demand a trial by jury. — Also termed possessio juris; (Ger.) Rechtsbesitz.

precarious possession. Civil law. Detention of property by someone other than the owner or possessor on behalf of or with permission of the owner or possessor. • A lessee has precarious possession of the leased property.

“[Article 3437 of the Louisiana Civil Code defines precarious possession as] ‘exercise of possession over a thing with the permission of or on behalf of the owner or possessor.’ The definition indicates the difference between possession in the proper sense of the word and precarious possession, that is, detention. A possessor is one who possesses as owner, whereas a precarious possessor or detainer is one who exercises factual authority over a thing with the permission of or on behalf of another person.” A.N. Yiannopoulos, Civil Law Property § 319, at scrambling possession. 1. A wrongful possession that the rightful possessor has not appeared to tolerate. Cf. peaceable possession. 2. “We shall use the term ‘possessory interest’ to include both present and future interests, and to exclude such interests as easements and profits. The reader should note that the Restatement of Property uses the term ‘possessory’ to refer only to interests that entitle the owner to present possession. See Restatement, Property § 7, 9, 153 (1936).” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 19–20 n.1 (2d ed. 1984).

POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER

possibility of reverter. A reversionary interest that is subject to a condition precedent; specif., a future interest retained by a grantor after conveying a fee simple determinable, so that the grantee's estate terminates automatically and reverts to the grantor if the terminating event ever occurs. • In this type of interest, the grantor transfers an estate whose maximum potential duration equals that of the grantor's own estate and attaches a special limitation that operates in the grantor's favor. — Often shortened to reverter. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. REMAINDER(1); REVERSION.

“Most treatise-writers define the possibility of reverter as the interest a transferor keeps when he transfers a fee simple determinable or a fee simple conditional. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 4.12; Simes & Smith § 281. Although this definition is all right as far as it goes, it fails to provide for interests less than the fee simple that are granted on special limitation.... Although we call the possibility of reverter an ‘estate,’ the courts of an earlier era would probably have called it a ‘possibility of becoming an estate.’ ” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 58 n.5 (2d ed. 1984).

POSSIBILITY ON A POSSIBILITY

possidere (pos-<<schwa>>-dee-ree). [Latin fr. potis “having power” + sedere “to sit”] Hist. To possess (a thing), esp. as a person with an interest protected by law (e.g., an owner or mortgagee) rather than a mere custodian.

“A distinction was made in the civil law, and adopted by Bracton, between possidere, (to possess,) and esse in possessione, (to be in possession.) .... Thus, a guardian, holding in demesne though not in fee, was said to be in possession, though he did not possess. The same language was applied to a bailiff, ... a domestic, ... a fermor or lessee, ... and a tenant at will from day to day, and from year to year.” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 314 (2d ed. 1867).

POSSLQ

POSSLQ (pahs-<<schwa>>-l-kyoo). abbr. A person of opposite sex sharing living quarters. • Although this term (which is used by the Census Bureau) is intended to include only a person's roommate of the opposite sex to whom the person is not married, the phrase literally includes those who are married. This overbreadth has occasionally been criticized. See CUPOS.

“In the 1980 census, the United States Census Bureau — recognizing a societal change with numerous persons living together without being ‘officially’ married — counted not only persons who were ‘Single’ and ‘Married,’ but also ‘Persons of the Opposite Sex Sharing Living Quarters.’ The acronym is POSSLQ — and, of course, is pronounced possle-kew. It has been suggested that, although the source was stunningly unlikely, it was the Very Word that society has been looking for to describe these relationships: POSSLQ. Precise, businesslike, nonjudgmental. And, in its own way, sort of poetic, too.” Fischer v. Dallas Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 106 F.R.D. 465, 469 n.5 (N.D. Tex. 1985).

“With the verdict of the jury [in the 15th–18th centuries] ... the proceedings at nisi prius closed, and the case was sent back to the court at Westminster from which it issued for judgment, after a statement of the holding of the trial and of the verdict had been added to the record. This statement, from the fact that it began with the Latin word ‘postea,’ or ‘afterwards,’ was known as the ‘postea’ and was in fact drafted by the party in whose favour the verdict had gone, whence the phrase ‘postea to the plaintiff’ or ‘the defendant,’ which is found in the old reports.” Geoffrey Radcliffe & Geoffrey Cross, The English Legal System 185 (G.J. “[A] person who is taken captive and comes back within the limits of the Empire is correctly described as returning by postliminium. By ‘limen’ (threshold) we mean the frontier of a house, and the old lawyers applied the word to the frontier of the Roman State; so that the word postliminium conveys the idea of recrossing the frontier. If a prisoner is recovered from a beaten foe he is deemed to have come back by postliminium.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 85–86 (4th ed. 1956).

potestas (p<<schwa>>-tes-t<<schwa>>s or -tas), n. [Latin "power"] Roman law. Authority or power, such as the power of a magistrate to enforce the law, or the authority of an owner over a slave.

patria potestas (pay-tree-<<schwa>> orpa-tree-<<schwa>>). [Latin "paternal power"] The authority held by the male head of a family (the senior ascendant male) over his legitimate and adopted children, as well as further descendants in the male line, unless emancipated. • Initially, the father had extensive powers over the family, including the power of life and death; until Justinian's time, the father alone in his familia had proprietary capacity but he could give a son or slave a peculium. Over time, the broad nature of the patria potestas gradually became more in the nature of a responsibility to support and maintain family members. But except in early Roman history, a wife did not fall into her husband's power but remained in her father's until she became sui juris by his death. — Also termed fatherly power.

“The power of the father continued ordinarily to the close of his life, and included not only his own children, but also the children of his sons, and those of his sons' sons, if any such were born during his lifetime.... Originally and for a long time the patria potestas had a terribly despotic character. Not only was the father entitled to all the service and all the acquisitions of his child, as much as to those of a slave, but he had the same absolute control over his person. He could inflict upon him any punishment however severe.... Consider now that the patria potestas had this character and extent down to the Christian era: that, in general, every citizen of the republic who had a living father was in this condition, unable to hold property, unable to acquire any thing for himself, wholly dependent on his father in property and person ... without help or vindication from the law.... The reason which caused the Romans to accept and uphold the patria potestas, to maintain it with singular tenacity against the influence of other systems with which they came in contact, must have been the profound impression of family unity, the conviction that every family was, and of right ought to be, one body, with one will and one executive.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 119–21 (1881).

“Nature and Extent of Patria Potestas. — From the most remote ages the power of a Roman father over his children, including those by adoption as well as by blood, was unlimited. A father might, without violating any law, scourge or imprison his son, or sell him for a slave, or put him to death, even after that son had risen to the highest honours in the state. This jurisdiction was not merely nominal, but, in early times, was not infrequently exercised to its full extent, and was confirmed by the laws of the XII Tables.... By degrees the right of putting a child to death (ius vitae et necis) fell into desuetude; and long before the close of the republic, the execution of a son by order of his father, although not forbidden by any positive statute, was regarded as something strange, and, unless under extraordinary circumstances, monstrous. But the right continued to exist in theory ... after the establishment of the empire. [In the Christian empire, these extreme punishments were forbidden and disciplinary powers were reduced to those of reasonable chastisement. — Ed.]” William Ramsay, A Manual of Roman Antiquities 291–92 (Rodolfo Lanciani ed., 15th ed. 1894).

power coupled with an interest.A power to do some act, conveyed along with an interest in the subject matter of the power. • A power coupled with an interest is not held for the benefit of the principal, and it is irrevocable due to the agent's interest in the subject property. For this reason, some authorities assert that it is not a true agency power. — Also termed power given as security; proprietary power. See irrevocable power of attorney under POWER OF ATTORNEY. Cf. naked power. [Cases: Powers 27. C.J.S. Powers § 6.]

“[S]uppose that the principal borrows money from the agent and by way of security authorizes the agent to sell Blackacre if the loan is not repaid and pay himself out of the proceeds.

In such case there is no more reason why the principal should be permitted to revoke than if he had formally conveyed or mortgaged Blackacre to the agent. Hence it would be highly unfair to the agent to allow his principal to revoke. The reason why such a case is not properly governed by the considerations usually making an agency revocable is that this is in reality not a case of agency at all. In a normal agency case the power is conferred upon the agent to enable him to do something for the principal while here it is given to him to enable him to do something for himself. Coupled with an interest means that the agent must have a present interest in the property upon which the power is to operate.” Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 47, at 99 (1990).

PRACTICE OF LAW

practice of law. The professional work of a duly licensed lawyer, encompassing a broad range of services such as conducting cases in court, preparing papers necessary to bring about various transactions from conveying land to effecting corporate mergers, preparing legal opinions on various points of law, drafting wills and other estate-planning documents, and advising clients on legal questions. • The term also includes activities that comparatively few lawyers engage in but that require legal expertise, such as drafting legislation and court rules. — Also termed legal practice. Cf. LAW PRACTICE . [Cases: Attorney and Client 11. C.J.S. Attorney and Client § 30.]

unauthorized practice of law. The practice of law by a person, typically a nonlawyer, who has not been licensed or admitted to practice law in a given jurisdiction. — Abbr. UPL. [Cases: Attorney and Client 11. C.J.S. Attorney and Client § 30.]

“The definitions and tests employed by courts to delineate unauthorized practice by non-lawyers have been vague or conclusory, while jurisdictions have differed significantly in describing what constitutes unauthorized practice in particular areas.

“Certain activities, such as the representation of another person in litigation, are generally

proscribed. Even in that area, many jurisdictions recognize exceptions for such matters as small-claims and landlord-tenant tribunals and certain proceedings in administrative agencies. Moreover, many jurisdictions have authorized law students and others not locally admitted to represent indigent persons or others as part of clinical legal education programs. "Controversy has surrounded many out-of-court activities such as advising on estate planning by bank trust officers, advising on estate planning by insurance agents, stock brokers, or benefit-plan and similar consultants, filling out or providing guidance on forms for property transactions by real estate agents, title companies, and closing-service companies, and selling books or individual forms containing instructions on self-help legal services accompanied by personal, non-lawyer assistance on filling them out in connection with legal procedures such as obtaining a marriage dissolution. The position of bar associations has traditionally been that non-lawyer provisions of such services denies the person served the benefit of such legal measures as the attorney-client privilege, the benefits of such extraordinary duties as that of confidentiality of client information and the protection against conflicts of interest, and the protection of such measures as those regulating lawyer trust accounts and requiring lawyers to supervise non-lawyer personnel. Several jurisdictions recognize that many such services can be provided by non-lawyers without significant risk of incompetent service, that actual experience in several states with extensive non-lawyer provision of traditional legal services indicates no significant risk of harm to consumers of such services, that persons in need of legal services may be significantly aided in obtaining assistance at a much lower price than would be entailed by segregating out a portion of a transaction to be handled by a lawyer for a fee, and that many persons can ill afford, and most persons are at least inconvenienced by, the typically higher cost of lawyer services." RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 4 cmt. c (1998).

His duties included generally the maintenance of order in the city, and he had under his command the urban cohorts, in effect a police force numbering between 4,000 and 6,000 men. #### PRECEDENT precedent (pres-<<schwa>>-d<<schwa>>nt), n.1. The making of law by a court in recognizing and applying new rules while administering justice. [Cases: Courts 87. C.J.S. Courts §§ 135–136.] 2. A decided case that furnishes a basis for determining later cases involving similar facts or issues. See STARE DECISIS. [Cases: Courts 89. C.J.S. Courts §§ 139–140, 144–146, 161–164, 166–167.] — precedential,adj.

precedent (pr<<schwa>>-seed-<<schwa>>nt alsopres-<<schwa>>-d<<schwa>>nt), adj. Preceding in time or order <condition precedent>.

“In law a precedent is an adjudged case or decision of a court of justice, considered as furnishing a rule or authority for the determination of an identical or similar case afterwards arising, or of a similar question of law. The only theory on which it is possible for one decision to be an authority for another is that the facts are alike, or, if the facts are different, that the principle which governed the first case is applicable to the variant facts.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 288 (3d ed. 1914).

“A precedent ... is a judicial decision which contains in itself a principle. The underlying principle which thus forms its authoritative element is often termed the ratio decidendi. The concrete decision is binding between the parties to it, but it is the abstract ratio decidendi which alone has the force of law as regards the world at large.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 191 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“One may say, roughly, that a case becomes a precedent only for such a general rule as is necessary to the actual decision reached, when shorn of unessential circumstances.” 1 James Parker Hall, Introduction, American Law and Procedure xlviii (1952).

“One may often accord respect to a precedent not by embracing it with a frozen logic but by drawing from its thought the elements of a new pattern of decision.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 151 (1968).

binding precedent.A precedent that a court must follow. • For example, a lower court is bound by an applicable holding of a higher court in the same jurisdiction. — Also termed authoritative precedent; binding authority. Cf. imperative authority under AUTHORITY(4). [Cases: Courts 88, 107. C.J.S. Courts §§ 139, 165, 175; Criminal Law § 1665; Trade-Marks, Trade-Names, and Unfair Competition § 187.]

declaratory precedent.A precedent that is merely the application of an already existing legal

original precedent. A precedent that creates and applies a new legal rule.

persuasive precedent. A precedent that is not binding on a court, but that is entitled to respect and careful consideration. • For example, if the case was decided in a neighboring jurisdiction, the court might evaluate the earlier court's reasoning without being bound to decide the same way. [Cases: Courts 89, 96(5), 97(1, 5). C.J.S. Courts §§ 139–140, 144–146, 152–153, 158–159, 161–164, 166–167.]

precedent sub silentio (s<<schwa>>b s<<schwa>>-len-shee-oh). A legal question that was neither argued nor explicitly discussed in a judicial decision but that seems to have been silently ruled on and might therefore be treated as a precedent.

3. DOCTRINE OF PRECEDENT. 4. A form of pleading or property-conveyancing instrument. • Precedents are often compiled in book form and used by lawyers as guides for preparing similar documents. “Collections of Precedents have existed from very early times. In this connection precedents must not be confused with judicial precedents or case law. We refer here simply to common-form instruments compiled for use in practice, whereby the lawyer can be more or less certain that he is using the correct phraseology for the particular case before him. They were used both in conveyancing and litigation.... It is interesting to note that these precedents were apparently among the first legal works to be published after printing was introduced. Collections of conveyancing precedents continued to be brought up to date or new volumes issued ....” A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 42–43 (5th ed. 1958).

“In its most orthodox form, ‘predatory pricing’ refers to a practice of driving rivals out of business by selling at a price below cost. The predator's intent — and the only intent that can make predatory pricing rational, profit-maximizing behavior — is to charge monopoly prices after rivals have been dispatched or disciplined. Predatory pricing is analyzed under the antitrust laws as illegal monopolization or attempt to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act, or sometimes as a violation of the Clayton Act § 2, generally called the Robinson–Patman Act.” Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy 335 (2d ed. 1999).

There may be some discussion of the amount of oral argument the parties desire and how that argument will be divided ....” Michael E. The part of a deed that describes the land being conveyed, as well as naming the parties and identifying relevant facts or explaining the reasons for the deed. 3. A house or building, along with its grounds <smoking is not allowed on these premises>.

“Premises (= a house or building) has a curious history in legal usage. Originally, in the sense of things mentioned previously, it denoted the part of a deed that sets forth the names of the grantor and grantee, as well as the things granted and the consideration. Then, through hypallage in the early 18th century, it was extended to refer to the subject of a conveyance or bequest as specified in the premises of the deed. Finally, it was extended to refer to a house or building along with its grounds. In short, someone who says, ‘No alcohol is allowed on these premises,’ is engaging unconsciously in a popularized legal technicality.” Bryan A. The money that must be collected from a policyholder at one time to guarantee enough money to pay claims made on an insurance policy. • This amount assumes that interest accrues at an expected rate and is based on a prediction of the likelihood of certain claims. preponderance of the evidence. The greater weight of the evidence, not necessarily established by the greater number of witnesses testifying to a fact but by evidence that has the most convincing force; superior evidentiary weight that, though not sufficient to free the mind wholly from all reasonable doubt, is still sufficient to incline a fair and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. • This is the burden of proof in most civil trials, in which the jury is instructed to find for the party that, on the whole, has the stronger evidence, however slight the edge may be. — Also termed preponderance of proof; balance of probability. See REASONABLE DOUBT. Cf. clear and convincing evidence under EVIDENCE. [Cases: Evidence 598. C.J.S. Evidence §§ 1310–1312, 1315.]

“Criminal convictions are so serious in their consequences that it is felt that an accused person should be freed, if there is any fair or reasonable doubt about his guilt, even though there seems to be considerable likelihood that he did commit the crime.... In civil cases, however, the consequence of losing a case, although serious enough in many cases, is not considered to be such as to require so stringent a rule. Accordingly the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict if he proves the case ‘by the preponderance of the evidence.’ In other words, he is entitled to a verdict even though there may be a reasonable doubt as to the liability of the accused, if the jury is satisfied nevertheless that the plaintiff has proved his case.” Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 562 (2d ed. 1952).

“Some decisions indicate that the term ‘in the presence of the court’ is to be given a liberal interpretation, that ‘the court’ consists not of the judge, the courtroom, the jury, or the jury room individually, but of all of these combined, and that the court is present wherever any of its constituent parts is engaged in the prosecution of the business of the court according to law.” 17 Am. [Cases: Grand Jury 42.]

“A grand jury has only two functions, either to indict or to return a ‘no bill.’ The Constitution speaks also of a ‘presentment,’ but this is a term with a distinct historical meaning now not well understood. Historically presentment was the process by which a grand jury initiated an independent investigation and asked that a charge be drawn to cover the facts should they constitute a crime. With United States attorneys now always available to advise grand juries, proceeding by presentment is an outmoded practice.” 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 110, at 459 (3d ed. 1999).

PRESS

press, n.1. The news media; print and broadcast news organizations collectively. [Cases: Constitutional Law 90(2). C.J.S. Constitutional Law § 539.]

“The Constitution specifically selected the press, which includes not only newspapers, books, and magazines, but also humble leaflets and circulars, to play an important role in the discussion of public affairs.” Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 219, 86 S.Ct. 1434, 1437 (1966).

“ ‘Press’ could refer to one or more subsets of media, defined either by function or form. To the extent that existing law defines ‘the press’ at all, it does so mostly in terms of specific media forms. The Supreme Court has addressed the matter only obliquely .... [I]t has never had to decide whether a particular litigant was ‘press.’ In most cases the question does not arise because the claimed right would be protected as fully by the Speech Clause as by the Press Clause. The cases in which the Court seems to rely on the Press Clause have involved newspapers or magazines whose status as press was unquestioned. The Court on other occasions has mentioned ‘publishers and broadcasters,’ ‘the media,’ ‘editorial judgment,’ ‘editorial control,’ ‘journalistic discretion,’ and 'newsgathering' as possible objects of protection. The most famous discussion of the meaning of the Press Clause, a 1974 speech by Justice Stewart, identified its beneficiaries as 'the daily newspapers and other established media,' or 'newspapers, television, and magazines.' " David A. Anderson, Freedom of the Press, 80 Texas L. Rev. 429, 436 (2002).

PRESUMPTION

presumption. A legal inference or assumption that a fact exists, based on the known or proven existence of some other fact or group of facts. • Most presumptions are rules of evidence calling for a certain result in a given case unless the adversely affected party overcomes it with other evidence. A presumption shifts the burden of production or persuasion to the opposing party, who can then attempt to overcome the presumption. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION . [Cases: Criminal Law 305; Evidence 53–89. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 695; Evidence §§ 2, 130–196, 1341.]

“A presumption may be defined to be an inference as to the existence of one fact from the existence of some other fact founded upon a previous experience of their connection.” William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 53, at 25 (3d ed. 1928).

absolute presumption. See conclusive presumption.

adverse presumption. See adverse inference under INFERENCE.

artificial presumption. See presumption of law.

conclusive presumption. A presumption that cannot be overcome by any additional evidence or argument <it is a conclusive presumption that a child under the age of seven is incapable of committing a felony>. — Also termed absolute presumption; irrebuttable presumption; mandatory presumption; presumption juris et de jure. Cf. rebuttable presumption. [Cases: Constitutional Law 253(5); Evidence 53–89. C.J.S. Constitutional Law § 972; Evidence §§ 2, 130–196, 1341.]

“ ‘Conclusive presumptions’ or ‘irrebuttable presumptions’ are usually mere fictions, to disguise a rule of substantive law (e.g., the conclusive presumption of malice from an unexcused defamation); and when they are not fictions, they are usually repudiated by modern courts.” John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 454 (1935).

“Conclusive presumptions, sometimes called irrebuttable presumptions of law, are really rules of law. Thus it is said that a child under the age of fourteen years is conclusively presumed to be incapable of committing rape. This is only another way of saying that such a child cannot be found guilty of rape.” Richard Eggleston, Evidence, Proof and Probability 92 (1978).

conditional presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

conflicting presumption. One of two or more presumptions that would lead to opposite results. — Also termed inconsistent presumption. [Cases: Evidence 88. C.J.S. Evidence § 136.]

“ ‘Conflicting presumptions’ are simply two ordinary presumptions that would give opposite results; usually they are really successive presumptions. E.g., where A proves himself to be the son of N, wife of M, but M and N were already separated, and later M married P, and had a son B, the later marriage of M might presume a prior divorce from N before separation to make it valid, and yet the birth of A from a married mother might be presumed legitimate, and thus the question whether A or B was the legitimate son would be attended by opposing presumptions. But in this aspect the doctrine of presumptions is clouded with difficulties and leads to much vain speculation

disputable presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

dry presumption. A presumption that has no probative value unless the party with the burden of proof presents evidence to support the presumption.

factual presumption. See presumption of fact.

heeding presumption. A rebuttable presumption that an injured product user would have followed a warning label had the product manufacturer provided one. [Cases: Products Liability 75. C.J.S. Products Liability § 72.]

permissive presumption. A presumption that a trier of fact is free to accept or reject from a given set of facts. — Also termed permissive inference. [Cases: Evidence 53, 87. C.J.S. Evidence §§ 2, 130–135, 152–154, 156, 173, 1341.]

presumption juris et de jure. See conclusive presumption.

“One function of the word ‘presumption’ in the context of statutory interpretation is to state the result of this legislative reliance (real or assumed) on firmly established legal principles. There is a ‘presumption’ that mens rea is required in the case of statutory crimes, and a ‘presumption’ that statutory powers must be exercised reasonably. These presumptions apply although there is no question of linguistic ambiguity in the statutory wording under construction, and they may be described as 'presumptions of general application.' At the level of interpretation, their function is the promotion of brevity on the part of the draftsman. Statutes make dreary enough reading as it is, and it would be ridiculous to insist in each instance upon an enumeration of the general principles taken for granted." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 142–43 (1976).

The majority rule, and that found in the Uniform Probate Code, is that only afterborn children — that is, children born after the execution of a will — receive protection as pretermitted heirs. It may be either direct, as when a seller charges different prices to different buyers, or indirect, as when a seller offers special concessions (such as favorable credit terms) to some but not all buyers. “Price-fixing agreements may or may not be aimed at complete elimination of price competition. The group making those agreements may or may not have the power to control the market. But the fact that the group cannot control the market prices does not necessarily mean that the agreement as to prices has no utility to the members of the combination. The effectiveness of price-fixing agreements is dependent on many factors, such as competitive tactics, position in the industry, the formula underlying price policies. Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy.” *United States v. #### PRIMARY-CAREGIVER DOCTRINE primary-caregiver doctrine.Family law. The presumption that, in a custody dispute, the parent who is a child's main caregiver will be the child's custodian, assuming that he or she is a fit parent.

- This doctrine includes the quality and the quantity of care that a parent gives a child — but excludes supervisory care by others while the child is in the parent's custody. Under this doctrine, courts sometimes divide children into three age groups: those under the age of 6, those 6 to 14, and those 14 and older. For children under the age of 6, an absolute presumption exists in favor of the primary caretaker as custodian. For those 6 to 14, the trial court may hear the child's preference on the record but without the parents being present. For those 14 and older, the child may be allowed to choose which parent will be the custodian, assuming that both parents are fit. — Also termed primary-caretaker doctrine; primary-caregiver presumption; primary-caretaker presumption; primary-caregiver preference. ## PRIMOGENITURE primogeniture (prI-m*<<schwa>>-jen-<<schwa>>-ch<<schwa>>*r). 1. The state of being the firstborn child among siblings. 2. The common-law right of the firstborn son to inherit his ancestor's estate, usu. to the exclusion of younger siblings. — Also termed (in sense 2) primogenitureship. See BOROUGH ENGLISH . [Cases: Descent and Distribution 7.]

“If by primogeniture we only mean ‘that the male issue shall be admitted before the female, and that, when there are two or more males in equal degrees, the eldest only shall inherit, but the females “all together” [Blackstone's definition], then ancient records may indeed contain but scant references. But primogeniture embraces all the cases of single inheritance, and may indeed be defined as the prerogative enjoyed by an eldest son or occasionally an eldest daughter, through law or custom, to succeed to their ancestor's inheritance in preference to younger children. Nay, we might even make it more comprehensive, extending it to all cases of single succession depending upon priority in birth." Radhabinod Pal, The History of the Law of Primogeniture 11 (1929).

"We might note here, parenthetically, that the English preference for single-file male descent — that is, the system of descent known as primogeniture — was never cordially received in this country. Our statutes of descent and distribution uniformly provide for sons' and daughters' sharing the inheritance equally. Although this seems a fairer method than primogeniture, which was finally abolished in Britain with the 1925 reforms, the descent of property to an ever-expanding group of heirs can seriously complicate the clearing of old titles." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 9 (2d ed. 1984).

PRINCEPS

PRINCIPAL

principal,adj. Chief; primary; most important.

principal,n.1. One who authorizes another to act on his or her behalf as an agent. Cf. AGENT. [Cases: Principal and Agent 1, 130. C.J.S. Agency §§ 2, 4–6, 23, 25–27, 33, 38–40, 58, 391; Architects§ 21.]

apparent principal.A person who, by outward manifestations, has made it reasonably appear to a third person that another is authorized to act as the person's agent.

disclosed principal.A principal whose identity is revealed by the agent to a third party. • A disclosed principal is always liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal's authority, but the agent is usu. not liable. [Cases: Principal and Agent 92–137. C.J.S. Agency §§ 44, 47, 73, 143–165; Architects § 21–22, 24.]

partially disclosed principal. A principal whose existence — but not actual identity — is revealed by the agent to a third party. [Cases: Principal and Agent 138–146. C.J.S. Agency §§ 166, 369–371, 385, 387–388, 393, 412–419, 448–451.]

undisclosed principal. A principal whose identity is kept secret by the agent; a principal for whom the other party has no notice that the agent is acting. • An undisclosed principal and the agent are both liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal's authority. [Cases: Principal and Agent 138–146. C.J.S. Agency §§ 166, 369–371, 385, 387–388, 393, 412–419, 448–451.]

2. One who commits or participates in a crime. Cf. ACCESSORY(2); ACCOMPLICE (2). [Cases: Criminal Law 59–67. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 127–136, 143, 998–999, 1002.] “The student should notice that in criminal law the word ‘principal’ suggests the very converse of the idea which it represents in mercantile law. In the former, as we have seen, an accessory proposes an act, and the ‘principal’ carries it out. But in the law of contract, and in that of tort, the ‘principal’ only authorizes an act, and the ‘agent’ carries it out. Where the same transaction is both a tort and a crime, this double use of the word may cause confusion. For example, if, by an innkeeper's directions, his chamber-maid steals jewels out of a guest's portmanteau, the maid is the ‘principal’ in a crime, wherein her master is an accessory before the fact; whilst she is also the agent in a tort, wherein her master is the ‘principal’.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 89 (16th ed. 1952).

principal in the first degree. The perpetrator of a crime. — Also termed first-degree principal. [Cases: Criminal Law 61, 78. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 130, 143–144, 148.]

“By a principal in the first degree, we mean the actual offender — the man in whose guilty mind lay the latest blamable mental cause of the criminal act. Almost always, of course, he will be the man by whom this act itself was done. But occasionally this will not be so; for the felony may have been committed by the hand of an innocent agent who, having no blamable intentions in what he did, incurred no criminal liability by doing it. In such a case the man who instigates this agent is the real offender; his was the last mens rea that preceded the crime, though it did not cause it immediately but mediately.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 85–86 (16th ed. 1952).

principal in the second degree. One who helped the perpetrator at the time of the crime. — Also termed accessory at the fact; second-degree principal. See ABETTOR. [Cases: Criminal Law 63, 78. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 132, 143–144, 148.]

“The distinction between principals in the first and second degrees is a distinction without a difference except in those rare instances in which some unusual statute has provided a different penalty for one of these than for the other. A principal in the first degree is the immediate perpetrator of the crime while a principal in the second degree is one who did not commit the crime with his own hands but was present and abetting the principal. It may be added, in the words of Mr. Justice Miller, that one may perpetrate a crime, not only with his own hands, but ‘through the agency of mechanical or chemical means, as by instruments, poison or powder, or by an animal, child, or other innocent agent’ acting under his direction.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 736 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting Beausoliel v. United States, 107 F.2d 292, 297 (D.C. Cir. 1939)).

3. One who has primary responsibility on an obligation, as opposed to a surety or indorser.
4. The corpus of an estate or trust. [Cases: Trusts 1. C.J.S. Trover and Conversion §§ 1–9, 14–18.]
5. The amount of a debt, investment, or other fund, not including interest, earnings, or profits.

An established right to such precedence; esp., a creditor's right to have a claim paid before other creditors of the same debtor receive payment. [Cases: Secured Transactions 138–145. C.J.S. Secured Transactions §§ 88, 90–102, 106–107, 118.] 3. The doctrine that, as between two courts, jurisdiction should be accorded the court in which proceedings are first begun. #### PRIOR RESTRAINT prior restraint. A governmental restriction on speech or publication before its actual expression. • Prior restraints violate the First Amendment unless the speech is obscene, is defamatory, or creates a clear and present danger to society. [Cases: Constitutional Law 90(3). C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 502, 542, 546–550.]

“The legal doctrine of prior restraint (or formal censorship before publication) is probably the oldest form of press control. Certainly it is one of the most efficient, since one censor, working in the watershed, can create a drought of information and ideas long before they reach the fertile plain of people's minds. In the United States, the doctrine of prior restraint has been firmly opposed by the First Amendment to the Constitution, and by the Supreme Court, perhaps most notably in the case of Near v. Minnesota, decided in 1931. But the philosophy behind that doctrine lives zestfully on, and shows no signs of infirmities of age.” David G. Clark & Earl R. Hutchinson, Mass Media and the Law 11 (1970).

PRIOR SALE

PRISON BREACH

prison breach.A prisoner's forcible breaking and departure from a place of lawful confinement; the offense of escaping from confinement in a prison or jail. • Prison breach has traditionally been distinguished from escape by the presence of force, but some jurisdictions have abandoned this distinction. — Also termed prison breaking; breach of prison. Cf. ESCAPE(2). [Cases: Escape 4. C.J.S. Escape §§ 8, 16–18.]

“Breach of prison by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the common law: or even conspiring to break it. But this severity is mitigated by the statute de frangentibus prisonam, I Edw. II, which enacts that no person shall have judgment of life or member, for breaking prison, unless committed for some capital offence. So that to break prison, when lawfully committed for any treason or felony, remains still a felony as at the common law; and to break prison, when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge, is still punishable as a high misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 130–31 (1769).

prisoner. 1. A person who is serving time in prison. 2. A person who has been apprehended by a law-enforcement officer and is in custody, regardless of whether the person has yet been put in prison. Cf. CAPTIVE(1).

“While breach of prison, or prison breach, means breaking out of or away from prison, it is important to have clearly in mind the meaning of the word ‘prison.’ If an officer arrests an offender and takes him to jail the layman does not think of the offender as being ‘in prison’ until he is safely behind locked doors, but no one hesitates to speak of him as a ‘prisoner’ from the moment of apprehension. He is a prisoner because he is ‘in prison ... whether he were actually in the walls of a prison, or only in the stocks, or in the custody of any person who had lawfully arrested him ...’ ” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 566 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting 2 Hawk. P.C. ch. 18, § 1 (6th ed. 1788)).

“In contrast [to arbitration], private judging is a less contractual, less privatized process. Party agreement, usually formed post-dispute, does send a case to private judging. And the parties have the freedom of contract to determine the time and place of trial, as well as the identity of the judge. Unlike arbitration, however, privately judged trials may ... be: (1) required to use the same rules of procedure and evidence used in ordinary litigation, (2) exposed to public view by court order, (3) adjudicated only by a former judge, and (4) subject to appeal in the same manner as other trial verdicts. In sum, private judging is essentially an ordinary bench trial except that the parties select, and pay for, the judge.” Stephen J. Ware, Alternative Dispute Resolution § 2.54, at 113 (2001).

An evidentiary rule that gives a witness the option to not disclose the fact asked for, even though it might be relevant; the right to prevent disclosure of certain information in court, esp. when the information was originally communicated in a professional or confidential relationship. • Assertion of a privilege can be overcome by proof that an otherwise privileged communication was made in the presence of a third party to whom the privilege would not apply. [Cases: Witnesses 184–223. C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 297–389.]

accountant–client privilege. The protection afforded to a client from an accountant's unauthorized disclosure of materials submitted to or prepared by the accountant. • The privilege is not widely recognized. [Cases: Witnesses 196.2. C.J.S. Witnesses § 356.]

antimarital-facts privilege. See marital privilege (2).

attorney–client privilege. The client's right to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications between the client and the attorney. — Also termed lawyer–client privilege; client's privilege. [Cases: Witnesses 197. C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 316–340.]

“There are a number of ways to organize the essential elements of the attorney–client privilege to provide for an orderly analysis. One of the most popular is Wigmore's schema: ‘(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought (2) from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such, (3) the communications relating to that purpose (4) made in confidence (5) by the client (6) are at his instance permanently protected (7) from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser, (8) except the privilege be waived.’ Though this organization has its virtues, there is some question as to whether it completely states the modern privilege.” 24 Charles Alan Wright & Kenneth W. Graham Jr., Federal Practice and Procedure § 5473, at 103–04 (1986) (quoting 8 John Henry Wigmore, Evidence § 2292, at 554 (John T. McNaughton rev., 1961)).

“At the present time it seems most realistic to portray the attorney–client privilege as supported in part by its traditional utilitarian justification, and in part by the integral role it is perceived to play in the adversary system itself. Our system of litigation casts the lawyer in the role of fighter for the party whom he represents. A strong tradition of loyalty attaches to the relationship of attorney and client, and this tradition would be outraged by routine examination of the lawyer as to the client's confidential disclosures regarding professional business. To the extent that the evidentiary privilege, then, is integrally related to an entire code of professional conduct, it is futile to envision drastic curtailment of the privilege without substantial modification of the underlying ethical system to which the privilege is merely ancillary.” John W. Strong, McCormick on Evidence § 87, at 121–22 (4th ed. 1992).

clergyman–penitent privilege. See priest–penitent privilege.

Cf. executive immunity under IMMUNITY(1). [Cases: Witnesses 216. C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 361–364.]

husband–wife privilege. See marital privilege.

informant's privilege. The qualified privilege that a government can invoke to prevent disclosure of the identity and communications of its informants. • In exercising its power to formulate evidentiary rules for federal criminal cases, the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently declined to hold that the government must disclose the identity of informants in a preliminary hearing or in a criminal trial. McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 312, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1063 (1967). A party can, however, usu. overcome the privilege by demonstrating that the need for the information outweighs the public interest in maintaining the privilege. — Also termed informer's privilege. [Cases: Criminal Law 627.6; Witnesses 216(4). C.J.S. Criminal Law § 495; Witnesses § 365.]

joint-defense privilege.The rule that a defendant can assert the attorney–client privilege to protect a confidential communication made to a codefendant's lawyer if the communication was related to the defense of both defendants. — Also termed common-interest doctrine. [Cases: Witnesses 51. C.J.S. Witnesses §§ 147, 159, 163–164, 171, 173.] 3. privacy privilege. A defendant's right not to disclose private information unless the plaintiff can show that (1) the information is directly relevant to the case, and (2) the plaintiff's need for the information outweighs the defendant's need for nondisclosure. • This privilege is recognized in California but in few other jurisdictions.

privilege against self-incrimination. Criminal law. 1. RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION. 2. A criminal defendant's right not to be asked any questions by the judge or prosecution unless the defendant chooses to testify. — Also termed right not to be questioned.

“According to the rule, neither the judge nor the prosecution is entitled at any stage to question the accused unless he chooses to give evidence.... This rule may be called the accused's right not to be questioned; in America it is termed the privilege against self-incrimination. The latter expression is more apt as the name for another rule, the privilege of any witness to refuse to answer an incriminating question; this is different from the rule under discussion, which, applying only to persons accused of crime, prevents the question from being asked. The person charged with crime has not merely the liberty to refuse to answer a question incriminating himself; he is freed even from the embarrassment of being asked the question.” Glanville Williams, The Proof of Guilt 37–38 (3d ed. 1963).

psychotherapist–patient privilege. A privilege that a person can invoke to prevent the disclosure of a confidential communication made in the course of diagnosis or treatment of a mental or emotional condition by or at the direction of a psychotherapist. • The privilege can be overcome under certain conditions, as when the examination is ordered by a court. — Also termed psychotherapist–client privilege. self-critical-analysis privilege. A privilege protecting individuals and entities from divulging the results of candid assessments of their compliance with laws and regulations, to the extent that the assessments are internal, the results were intended from the outset to be confidential, and the information is of a type that would be curtailed if it were forced to be disclosed. • This privilege is founded on the public policy that it is beneficial to permit individuals and entities to confidentially evaluate their compliance with the law, so that they will monitor and improve their compliance with it. — Also termed self-policing privilege; self-evaluation privilege. [Cases: Witnesses 184(1). C.J.S. Witnesses § 297.]

spousal privilege. See marital privilege.

state-secrets privilege. A privilege that the government may invoke against the discovery of a material that, if divulged, could compromise national security. — Also termed national-security

privilege of the floor. Parliamentary law. (usu. pl.) The right of entering, passing through, and sitting on the floor during a meeting. See FLOOR(1).

“The expression ‘privileges of the floor,’ sometimes used in legislative bodies or conventions, has nothing to do with having the floor, but means merely that a person is permitted to enter the hall. It carries no right to speak or any other right of membership, except as may be determined by rules or action of the body.” Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 3, at 28 n. (10th ed. 2000).

PRIVITY

privity (priv-<<schwa>>-tee).1. The connection or relationship between two parties, each having a legally recognized interest in the same subject matter (such as a transaction, proceeding, or piece of property); mutuality of interest <privity of contract>. [Cases: Judgment 678(2). C.J.S. Judgments §§ 830, 861, 866.]

horizontal privity.Commercial law. The legal relationship between a party and a nonparty who is related to the party (such as a buyer and a member of the buyer's family). [Cases: Sales 255. C.J.S. Sales §§ 240–241, 284, 288–289.]

privity of contract.The relationship between the parties to a contract, allowing them to sue each other but preventing a third party from doing so. • The requirement of privity has been relaxed under modern laws and doctrines of implied warranty and strict liability, which allow a third-party beneficiary or other foreseeable user to sue the seller of a defective product. [Cases: Contracts 186; Sales 255. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 610–611; Sales § 240–241, 284, 288–289.]

“To many students and practitioners of the common law privity of contract became a fetish. As such, it operated to deprive many a claimant of a remedy in cases where according to the mores of the time the claim was just. It has made many learned men believe that a chose in action could not be assigned. Even now, it is gravely asserted that a man cannot be made the debtor of another against his will. But the common law was gradually influenced by equity and by the law merchant, so that by assignment a debtor could become bound to pay a perfect stranger to himself, although until the legislature stepped in, the common-law courts characteristically made use of a fiction and pretended that they were not doing that which they really were doing.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 335 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“It is an elementary principle of English law — known as the doctrine of ‘Privity of Contract’ — that contractual rights and duties only affect the parties to a contract, and this principle is the distinguishing feature between the law of contract and the law of property. True proprietary rights are ‘binding on the world’ in the lawyer's traditional phrase. Contractual rights, on the other hand, are only binding on, and enforceable by, the immediate parties to the contract. But this distinction, fundamental though it be, wears a little thin at times. On the one hand, there has been a constant tendency for contractual rights to be extended in their scope so as to affect more and more persons who cannot be regarded as parties to the transaction. On the other hand, few proprietary rights are literally ‘binding on the world’.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 265 (3d ed. 1981).

“The doctrine of privity means that a person cannot acquire rights or be subject to liabilities arising under a contract to which he is not a party. It does not mean that a contract between A and B cannot affect the legal rights of C indirectly.” G.H. Treitel, The Law of Contract 538 (8th ed. 1991).

privity of estate. A mutual or successive relationship to the same right in property, as between grantor and grantee or landlord and tenant. — Also termed privity of title; privity in estate. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 20. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 27, 202(1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10), 203.]

privity of possession. Privity between parties in successive possession of real property. • The existence of this type of privity is often at issue in adverse-possession claims. [Cases: Adverse Possession 43. C.J.S. Adverse Possession § 154.]

privity of title. See privity of estate.

vertical privity. 1. Commercial law. The legal relationship between parties in a product's chain of distribution (such as a manufacturer and a seller). [Cases: Sales 255. C.J.S. Sales §§ 240–241, 284, 288–289.] 2. Privity between one who signs a contract containing a restrictive covenant and one who acquires the property burdened by it.

2. Joint knowledge or awareness of something private or secret, esp. as implying concurrence or consent <privity to a crime>.

PRIVY

privy (priv-ee), n. pl. A person having a legal interest of privity in any action, matter, or property; a person who is in privity with another. • Traditionally, there were six types of privies: (1) privies in blood, such as an heir and an ancestor; (2) privies in representation, such as an executor and a testator or an administrator and an intestate person; (3) privies in estate, such as grantor and grantee or lessor and lessee; (4) privies in respect to a contract — the parties to a contract; (5) privies in respect of estate and contract, such as a lessor and lessee where the lessee assigns an interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues because the lessor does not accept the assignee; and (6) privies in law, such as husband and wife. The term also appears in the context of litigation. In this sense, it includes someone who controls a lawsuit though not a party to it; someone whose interests are represented by a party to the lawsuit; and a successor in interest to anyone having a derivative claim. PROBABLE CAUSE probable cause. 1.Criminal law. A reasonable ground to suspect that a person has committed or is committing a crime or that a place contains specific items connected with a crime. • Under the Fourth Amendment, probable cause — which amounts to more than a bare suspicion but less than evidence that would justify a conviction — must be shown before an arrest warrant or search warrant may be issued. — Also termed reasonable cause; sufficient cause; reasonable grounds; reasonable excuse. Cf. REASONABLE SUSPICION. [Cases: Arrest 63.4(2). C.J.S. Arrest § 22.]

“Probable cause may not be established simply by showing that the officer who made the challenged arrest or search subjectively believed he had grounds for his action. As emphasized in Beck v. Ohio [379 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 223 (1964)]: ‘If subjective good faith alone were the test, the protection of the Fourth Amendment would evaporate, and the people would be “secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects” only in the discretion of the police.’ The probable cause test, then, is an objective one; for there to be probable cause, the facts must be such as would warrant a belief by a reasonable man.” Wayne R. LaFare & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.3, at 140 (2d ed. 1992).

2.Torts. A reasonable belief in the existence of facts on which a claim is based and in the legal validity of the claim itself. • In this sense, probable cause is usu. assessed as of the time when the claimant brings the claim (as by filing suit).

“The term ‘process’ is not limited to ‘summons.’ In its broadest sense it is equivalent to, or synonymous with, ‘procedure,’ or ‘proceeding.’ Sometimes the term is also broadly defined as the means whereby a court compels a compliance with its demands. “ ‘Process’ and ‘writ’ or ‘writs’ are synonymous, in the sense that every writ is a process, and in a narrow sense of the term ‘process’ is limited to judicial writs in an action, or at least to writs or writings issued from or out of a court, under the seal thereof and returnable thereto; but it is not always necessary to construe the term so strictly as to limit it to a writ issued by a court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction.” 72 CJS Process § 2, at 589 (1987).alias process.A process issued after an earlier process has failed for some reason. • Among the types of alias process are alias execution, alias subpoena, alias summons, and alias writ.

Patents §§ 17–19.]“A process is a way of doing something. If it is a patentable process, it must be a new, useful, and nonobvious way of doing something. If the process is patentable, the result of that process — the something getting done — need not of itself be new, useful, or nonobvious. In other words, the result of an inventive process need not be an invention itself.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 24 (2d ed. 1990).

PRODUCTS LIABILITY

products liability, n.1. A manufacturer's or seller's tort liability for any damages or injuries suffered by a buyer, user, or bystander as a result of a defective product. • Products liability can be based on a theory of negligence, strict liability, or breach of warranty. [Cases: Products Liability 1. C.J.S. Products Liability §§ 2–3.] 2. The legal theory by which liability is imposed on the manufacturer or seller of a defective product. 3. The field of law dealing with this theory. — Also termed product liability; (specif.) manufacturer's liability. See LIABILITY. — products-liability,adj.

“The law of products liability is that body of common and statutory law permitting money reparation for substandard conduct of others resulting in product-related injury to the injured party's person or property. Resistance to the description of products liability as a doctrine having receded, there is today a guiding tenet in the law of product-related injury that is the distillate of seventy years of decisional law. The birth of the doctrine can be dated at 1916, the publication of the immensely influential decision in MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., [217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050 (1916)], in which the New York Court of Appeals held that the manufacturer of any product capable of serious harm if incautiously made owed a duty of care in the design, inspection, and fabrication of the product, a duty owed not only to the immediate purchaser but to all persons who might foreseeably come into contact with the product. Following MacPherson, the doctrine as formed by decisions of the ensuing decades is that a buyer, user, consumer or bystander in proximity to an unreasonably dangerous product, and who is injured in person or in property by its dangerous propensities, may recover in damages from the manufacturer or intermediate seller.” 1 M. Stuart Madden, Products Liability § 1.1, at 1–2 (2d ed. 1988).

strict products liability.Products liability arising when the buyer proves that the goods were unreasonably dangerous and that (1) the seller was in the business of selling goods, (2) the goods were defective when they were in the seller's hands, (3) the defect caused the plaintiff's injury, and (4) the product was expected to and did reach the consumer without substantial change in condition. [Cases: Products Liability 5. C.J.S. Products Liability §§ 7–8.]

products-liability action.A lawsuit brought against a manufacturer, seller, or lessor of a product — regardless of the substantive legal theory or theories upon which the lawsuit is brought — for personal injury, death, or property damage caused by the manufacture, construction, design, formulation, installation, preparation, or assembly of a product. — Also termed product-liability action. [Cases: Limitation of Actions 30; Products Liability 1; Sales 425. C.J.S. Limitations of Actions §§ 68–70, 72; Products Liability §§ 2–3; Sales §§ 237, 278–280, 284–286, 288.]

profit à prendre (a prawn-dr<<schwa>> or ah prahn-d<<schwa>>r). [Law French “profit to take”] (usu. pl.) A right or privilege to go on another's land and take away something of value from its soil or from the products of its soil (as by mining, logging, or hunting). — Also termed right of common. Pl. profits à prendre. Cf. EASEMENT. [Cases: Licenses 43. C.J.S. Easements § 9; Licenses § 88.]

“A profit à prendre has been described as ‘a right to take something off another person's land.’ This is too wide; the thing taken must be something taken out of the soil, i.e., it must be either the soil, the natural produce thereof, or the wild animals existing on it; and the thing taken must at the time of taking be susceptible of ownership. A right to ‘hawk, hunt, fish, and fowl’ may thus exist as a profit, for this gives the right to take creatures living on the soil which, when killed, are capable of being owned. But a right to take water from a spring or a pump, or the right to water cattle at a pond, may be an easement but cannot be a profit; for the water, when taken, was not owned by anyone nor was it part of the soil.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 375–76 (6th ed. 1993).

PROFIT-SHARING PLAN

profit-sharing plan. An employee benefit plan that allows an employee to share in the company's profits. • ERISA governs the administration of many profit-sharing plans, which provide for discretionary employer contributions and provide a definite predetermination formula for allocating the contributions to the plan among the participants. ## PROMISE promise,n.1. The manifestation of an intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified manner, conveyed in such a way that another is justified in understanding that a commitment has been made; a person's assurance that the person will or will not do something. • A binding promise — one that the law will enforce — is the essence of a contract. [Cases: Contracts 1.C.J.S. Contracts §§ 2–3, 9, 12.]

“By common usage, a promise is an expression leading another person justifiably to expect certain conduct on the part of the promisor. Such an expression is a promise, whether enforceable at law or not. It is indeed an essential element in every contract. Society does not guarantee the fulfillment of all expectations so induced.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 6 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“[Promise] means not only the physical manifestations of assurance by words or conduct, but also the moral duty to make good the assurance by performance. If by reason of other operative facts the promise is recognized as creating a legal duty, the promise is a contract.” Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 4 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

“It is well to make clear two points at the outset .... The first is that I do not believe that all promises are morally binding; accordingly, I use the term ‘promise’ without prejudging the question whether the promise creates an obligation. The second is that, where a promise does create an obligation, the reason for that may depend upon whether the promise was explicit or implied. There is thus, in my view, a fundamental distinction between explicit and implied promises, and when I use the word ‘promise’ without qualification, I normally mean an explicit promise.” P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 8 (1981).

2. The words in a promissory note expressing the maker's intention to pay a debt. • A mere written acknowledgment that a debt is due is insufficient to constitute a promise. [Cases: Bills and Notes 30. C.J.S. Bills and Notes; Letters of Credit § 11.] — promise,vb.

aleatory promise (ay-lee-<<schwa>>-tor-ee). A promise conditional on the happening of a fortuitous event, or on an event that the parties believe is fortuitous. [Cases: Contracts 218. C.J.S.

alternative promise. A contractual promise to do one of two or more things, any one of which qualifies as consideration.

“A promise in the alternative may be made because each of the alternative performances is the object of desire to the promisee. Or the promisee may desire one performance only, but the promisor may reserve an alternative which he may deem advantageous. In either type of case the promise is consideration if it cannot be kept without some action or forbearance which would be consideration if it alone were bargained for. But if the promisor has an unfettered choice of alternatives, and one alternative would not have been consideration if separately bargained for, the promise in the alternative is not consideration.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 77 cmt. b (1979).

bare promise. See gratuitous promise.

collateral promise. A promise to guarantee the debt of another, made primarily without benefit to the party making the promise. • Unlike an original promise, a collateral promise must be in writing to be enforceable. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE. [Cases: Guaranty 1.]

conditional promise. A promise that is conditioned on the occurrence of an event other than the lapse of time <she made a conditional promise to sell the gold on April 2 unless the price fell below $300 an ounce before that time>. • A conditional promise is not illusory as long as the condition is not entirely within the promisor's control. [Cases: Contracts 58, 218. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 107, 355, 358.]

corresponding promise. A mutual promise calling for the performance of an act substantially similar to the act called for by the other mutual promise, both acts being in pursuit of a common purpose.

counterpromise. See COUNTERPROMISE.

dependent promise. A promise to be performed by a party only when another obligation has first been performed by another party. [Cases: Contracts 173, 278(1). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 361, 475, 503–505, 510–512.]

divisible promises. Promises that are capable of being divided into independent parts.

false promise. A promise made with no intention of carrying it out. Cf. promissory fraud under FRAUD.

fictitious promise. See implied promise.

gratuitous promise. A promise made in exchange for nothing; a promise not supported by consideration. • A gratuitous promise is not ordinarily legally enforceable. — Also termed bare promise; naked promise. [Cases: Contracts 47. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 83–84.]

illusory promise. A promise that appears on its face to be so insubstantial as to impose no obligation on the promisor; an expression cloaked in promissory terms but actually containing no commitment by the promisor. • An illusory promise typically, by its terms, makes performance optional with the promisor. For example, if a guarantor promises to make good on the principal debtor's obligation "as long as I think it's in my commercial interest," the promisor is not really bound. [Cases: Contracts 10(1). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 105–106, 108–113.]

"An apparent promise which, according to its terms, makes performance optional with the promisor no matter what may happen, or no matter what course of conduct in other respects he may pursue, is in fact no promise. Such an expression is often called an illusory promise." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 5 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

implied promise. A promise created by law to render a person liable on a contract so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. — Also termed fictitious promise. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts 1. C.J.S. Implied and Constructive Contracts §§ 2–3.]

"Under some circumstances the promise inferred is called an implied promise and in others it is referred to as a constructive promise. But whichever conclusion is reached, the result is the same. In other words an implied promise and a constructive promise are not treated differently. The theoretical difference between the two is that a promise implied from the conduct of the parties arises by construction of law, only when justice requires it under the circumstances." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4–12, at 234–35 (3d ed. 1987).

independent promise. See unconditional promise.

original promise. A promise to guarantee the debt of another, made primarily for the benefit of the party making the promise. • An original promise need not be in writing to be enforceable. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE. [Cases: Frauds, Statute of 23.]

promise implied in fact. A promise existing by inference from the circumstances or actions of the parties. See implied promise. [Cases: Contracts 27. C.J.S. Contracts § 6.]

promise in consideration of marriage. A promise for which the actual performance of the marriage is the consideration, as when a man agrees to transfer property to a woman if she will marry him. • A promise to marry, however, is not considered a promise in consideration of marriage. [Cases: Breach of Marriage Promise 5. C.J.S. Breach of Marriage Promise § 6.]

promise in restraint of trade. A promise whose performance would limit competition in any

remedial promise.A seller's promise to repair or replace goods, or the like, or to refund the price if the goods (1) do not conform to the contract or to a representation at the time of the delivery of the goods, (2) conform at the time of delivery but later fail to perform as agreed, or (3) contain a defect.

unconditional promise.A promise that either is unqualified or requires nothing but the lapse of time to make the promise presently enforceable. • A party who makes an unconditional promise must perform that promise even though the other party has not performed according to the bargain. — Also termed independent promise. [Cases: Contracts 218. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 355, 358.]

voidable promise.A promise that one party may, under the law, declare void by reason of that party's incapacity or mistake, or by reason of the fraud, breach, or other fault of the other party. [Cases: Contracts 98. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 137, 139–140, 145, 153–155, 157, 171, 173–174, 185, 188.]

“The complete judicial acceptance of the term ‘promoter’ is a matter of comparatively recent date. In some of the early cases, persons engaged in the formation of a corporation are spoken of as ‘projectors.’ Other cases of about the same period, though recognizing the obligations flowing therefrom, do not give any name to the relation in which such persons stand to the contemplated company. The word promoter, while undoubtedly employed in common parlance before that time, does not seem to have been used in any reported decision until after it had been used, and for the purposes of the act defined, in the Joint Stock Companies Act of 1844.... [A] person may be said to be a promoter of a corporation if before its organization, he directly or indirectly solicits subscriptions to its stock, or assumes to act in its behalf in the purchase of property, or in the securing of its charter, or otherwise assists in its organization.” Manfred W. Ehrlich, The Law of

“A promoter is a person who takes the initiative in developing and organizing a new business venture. A promoter may act either alone or with co-promoters. The term ‘promoter’ is not one of opprobrium; indeed, the promoter is often an aggressive, imaginative entrepreneur who fulfills the essential economic function of taking an idea and creating a profitable business to capitalize on the idea.” Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 64 (3d ed. 1991).

Any method of discovering trade secrets that does not violate property-protection statutes or standards of commercial ethics. • Proper means include independent invention, reverse engineering, observing the product in public, and studying published literature. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 757 cmt. f (1977).

“Trade secrets are protected ... in a manner akin to private property, but only when they are disclosed or used through improper means. Trade secrets do not enjoy the absolute monopoly afforded patented processes, for example, and trade secrets will lose their character as private property when the owner divulges them or when they are discovered through proper means.... Thus, it is the employment of improper means to produce the trade secret, rather than mere copy or use, which is the basis of liability.” Chicago Lock Co. v. Fanberg, 676 F.2d 400, 404 (9th Cir. 1982).

PRO PERSONA

property. 1. The right to possess, use, and enjoy a determinate thing (either a tract of land or a chattel); the right of ownership <the institution of private property is protected from undue governmental interference>. — Also termed bundle of rights. [Cases: Constitutional Law 277; Property 1. C.J.S. Constitutional Law § 982; Property § 2–10, 13.] 2. Any external thing over which the rights of possession, use, and enjoyment are exercised <the airport is city property>. [Cases: Property 1. C.J.S. Property §§ 2–10, 13.]

“In its widest sense, property includes all a person's legal rights, of whatever description. A man's property is all that is his in law. This usage, however, is obsolete at the present day, though it is common enough in the older books.... In a second and narrower sense, property includes not all a person's rights, but only his proprietary as opposed to his personal rights. The former constitute his estate or property, while the latter constitute his status or personal condition. In this sense a man's land, chattels, shares, and the debts due to him are his property; but not his life or liberty or reputation.... In a third application, which is that adopted [here], the term includes not even all proprietary rights, but only those which are both proprietary and in rem. The law of property is the law of proprietary rights in rem, the law of proprietary rights in personam being distinguished from it as the law of obligations. According to this usage a freehold or leasehold estate in land, or a patent or copyright, is property; but a debt or the benefit of a contract is not.... Finally, in the narrowest use of the term, it includes nothing more than corporeal property — that is to say, the right of ownership in a material object, or that object itself.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 423–24 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

complete property. The entirety of the rights, privileges, powers, and immunities that it is legally possible for a person to have with regard to land or any other thing, apart from those that all other members of society have in the land or thing.

corporeal property. 1. The right of ownership in material things. 2. Property that can be perceived, as opposed to incorporeal property; tangible property. [Cases: Property 1, 2. C.J.S. Property §§ 2–13, 15–20.]

All of a wife's effects that have not been settled on her as dowry; any property that a wife owns apart from her dowry. • In Louisiana, after January 1, 1980, all property acquired by the wife that is not community is neither dotal nor extradotal; it is simply her separate property, as has always been true of the husband. La. Civ. Code art. 2341. — Also termed paraphernal property. Cf. dotal property.

general property. Property belonging to a general owner. See general owner under OWNER.

income property. Property that produces income, such as rental property.

incorporeal property. 1. An in rem proprietary right that is not classified as corporeal property. • Incorporeal property is traditionally broken down into two classes: (1) jura in re aliena (encumbrances), whether over material or immaterial things, examples being leases, mortgages, and servitudes; and (2) jura in re propria (full ownership over an immaterial thing), examples being patents, copyrights, and trademarks. 2. A legal right in property having no physical existence. • Patent rights, for example, are incorporeal property. — Also termed incorporeal chattel; incorporeal thing.

The phrase marital property is used in equitable-distribution states and is roughly equivalent to community property. — Also termed marital estate. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY; EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION. [Cases: Divorce 248; Husband and Wife 6–15(6). C.J.S. Divorce §§ 508–511, 580–582; Estates § 19.]

maternal property. Property that comes from the mother of a party and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

mislaid property.Property that has been voluntarily relinquished by the owner with an intent to recover it later — but that cannot now be found. Cf. abandoned property; lost property. [Cases: Abandoned and Lost Property 1, 10. C.J.S. Abandonment §§ 4, 7–8.]

“A distinction is drawn between lost property and mislaid property. An article is ‘mislaid’ if it is intentionally put in a certain place for a temporary purpose and then inadvertently left there when the owner goes away. A typical case is the package left on the patron's table in a bank lobby by a depositor who put the package there for a moment while he wrote a check and then departed without remembering to take it with him. There is always a ‘clue’ to the ownership of property which is obviously mislaid rather than lost, because of the strong probability that the owner will know where to return for his chattel when he realizes he has gone away without it.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 310–11 (3d ed. 1982).

mixed property.Property with characteristics of both real property and personal property — such as heirlooms and fixtures. [Cases: Property 4. C.J.S. Property §§ 14–21, 23.]

Cf. real property. [Cases: Property 4. C.J.S. Property §§ 14–21, 23.] 2.Tax. Property not used in a taxpayer's trade or business or held for income production or collection. [Cases: Taxation 67. C.J.S. Taxation §§ 114, 120, 122, 125, 129–130.]

“ ‘[P]ersonal property’ includes ... everything except real property. It includes credits, savings-bank deposits, notes, bonds, the proceeds arising from the sale of realty, and the right to a certificate in foreclosure, the time of redemption having passed.” 3 William Herbert Page, A Treatise on the Law of Wills § 964, at 44–45 (1941).

private property.Property — protected from public appropriation — over which the owner has exclusive and absolute rights.

public property.State- or community-owned property not restricted to any one individual's use or possession. [Cases: States 88. C.J.S. States § 147.]

qualified property.A temporary or special interest in a thing (such as a right to possess it), subject to being totally extinguished by the occurrence of a specified contingency over which the qualified owner has no control.

qualified-terminable-interest property. Property that passes by a QTIP trust from a deceased spouse to the surviving spouse and that (if the executor so elects) qualifies for the marital deduction provided that the spouse is entitled to receive all income in payments made at least annually for life and that no one has the power to appoint the property to anyone other than the surviving spouse. • The purpose of the marital deduction is to permit deferral of estate taxes until the death of the surviving spouse. But this property is included in the surviving spouse's estate at death, where it is subject to the federal estate tax. — Abbr. QTIP. See QTIP trust under TRUST. [Cases: Internal Revenue 4169(4). C.J.S. Internal Revenue §§ 536–537.]

real property. Land and anything growing on, attached to, or erected on it, excluding anything that may be severed without injury to the land. • Real property can be either corporeal (soil and buildings) or incorporeal (easements). — Also termed realty; real estate; fast estate. Cf. personal property (1). [Cases: Property 4. C.J.S. Property §§ 14–21, 23.]

“Historically, the line between real and personal property stems from the types of assets administered on death respectively, in the king's and in the church's courts. The king's courts, concerned with the preservation of the feudal structure, dealt with fees simple, fees tail and life estates. Estates for years, gradually evolving out of contracts made by feudally unimportant persons, clearly became interests in land but never fully attained the historical dignity of being ‘real property.’ The early economic unimportance of money, goods and things other than land permitted the church courts to take over the handling of all such assets on the death of the owner. When the development of trade and of capitalism caused assets of these types to assume great, and sometimes paramount, importance we found ourselves with the two important categories of property, namely ‘real’ and ‘personal’ property, each with its set of rules evolved from a different matrix. The pressure of modern society has been strongly for assimilation and the resultant elimination of this line, but this movement is far from complete attainment of its goal.” 1 Richard R. Powell, Powell on Real Property § 5.04, at 5–7 to 5–8 (Patrick J. Rohan ed., rev. ed. 1998).

special-purpose property. Property that has a unique design or layout, incorporates special construction materials, or has other features that limit the property's utility for purposes other than the one for which it was built. • Because of the property's specialized nature, the market for the property may be quite limited. — Also termed limited-market property; special-design property.

tangible personal property. Corporeal personal property of any kind; personal property that can be seen, weighed, measured, felt, or touched, or is in any other way perceptible to the senses, such as furniture, cooking utensils, and books.

“Property Ratione privilegii is the right which, by a peculiar franchise anciently granted by the Crown in virtue of its prerogative, one man had of killing and taking animals Ferae naturae on the land of another; and in like manner the game, when killed or taken by virtue of the privilege, became the absolute property of the owner of the franchise, just as in the other case it becomes the absolute property of the owner of the soil.” *Blades v. So far as possible, it contents itself with executing the rules which its subjects have made for themselves. And in so doing it acts wisely. For, in the first place, the administration of justice is enabled in this manner to escape in a degree not otherwise attainable the disadvantages inherent in the recognition of rigid principles of law. Such principles we must have; but if they are established pro re nata by the parties themselves, they will possess a measure of adaptability to individual cases which is unattainable by the more general legislation of the state itself.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 352 (Glanville L. sham prosecution.A prosecution that seeks to circumvent a defendant's double-jeopardy protection by appearing to be prosecuted by another sovereignty, when it is in fact controlled by the sovereignty that already prosecuted the defendant for the same crime. • A sham prosecution is, in essence, a misuse of the dual-sovereignty doctrine. Under that doctrine, a defendant's protection against double jeopardy does not provide protection against a prosecution by a different sovereignty. For example, if the defendant was first tried in federal court and acquitted, that fact would not forbid the state authorities from prosecuting the defendant in state court. But a sham prosecution — for example, a later state-court prosecution that is completely dominated or manipulated by the federal authorities that already prosecuted the defendant, so that the state-court proceeding is merely a tool of the federal authorities — will not withstand a double-jeopardy challenge. See DUAL-SOVEREIGNTY DOCTRINE. [Cases: Double Jeopardy 53. C.J.S. Criminal Law § 217.]

Protectors often possess broad powers to act for the benefit of the trust, as by removing trustees and clarifying or modifying trust terms to promote the settlor's objectives. For these reasons, a protector is generally not a trustee or beneficiary of the trust. Cf. TRUSTEE. 2. A person who, having been named in an instrument creating a fee tail, has the responsibility of exercising discretion over whether the tenant in tail may bar the entail. — Also termed protector of the settlement.

“The only additional restriction imposed upon the alienation of an estate tail is that the consent of the person who is called the Protector of the settlement is necessary to its being effectually barred. Alienation by tenant in tail without this consent binds his own issue, but not remaindermen or reversioners, and creates what is called a ‘base fee.’ The Protector of the settlement is usually the tenant for life in possession; but the settlor of the lands may appoint in his place any number of persons not exceeding three to be together Protector during the continuance of the estates preceding the estate tail.” Kenelm E. Digby, An Introduction to the History of the Law of Real Property 255 (5th ed. 1897).

A declaration by which a party makes an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, claiming that it does or does not exist or is or is not legally sufficient, while not directly affirming or denying the fact. [Cases: Pleading 128.]

“The practice of protestation of facts not denied arose where the pleader, wishing to avail himself of the right to contest in a future action some traversable fact in the pending action, passes it by without traverse, but at the same time makes a declaration collateral or incidental to his main pleading, importing that the fact so passed over is untrue. The necessity for this arose from the rule that pleadings must not be double, and that every pleading is taken to admit such matters as it does not traverse. Such being its only purpose, it is wholly without effect in the action in which it occurs ....” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 207, at 358 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

2.Scots law. A defendant's act in a civil case to compel a pursuer (plaintiff) who has failed to take the necessary procedural steps either to proceed or to allow the action to fall.

PUBLIC APPOINTMENT

PUBLICATION

publication, n. 1. Generally, the act of declaring or announcing to the public. 2. Copyright. The offering or distribution of copies of a work to the public. • At common law, publication marked the dividing line between state and federal protection, but the Copyright Act of 1976 superseded most of common-law copyright and thereby diminished the significance of publication. Under the Act, an original work is considered published only when it is first made publicly available without restriction. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 31. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 32, 37.]

“The concept of publication was of immense importance under the 1909 Act. It became a legal word of art, denoting a process much more esoteric than is suggested by the lay definition of the term. That it thus evolved was due largely to the American dichotomy between common law and statutory copyright, wherein the act of publication constituted the dividing line between the two systems of protection [state and federal].” 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 4.01, at 4-3 (Supp. 1997).

divestitive publication. Archaic. The public distribution of an author's work on a scale large enough to divest the author of any claim to state common-law copyright protection. • The Copyright Act of 1976 preempted most common-law copyright. — Sometimes (erroneously) written divestive publication.

general publication. Distribution of an author's work to the public, as opposed to a selected group, whether or not restrictions are placed on the use of the work. • Before the Copyright Act of 1976, a general publication was generally held to divest common-law rights in a work. Rather, the author was deemed to have dedicated the work to the public. Cf. limited publication. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 31. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 32, 37.]

investitive publication. Archaic. The public distribution of an author's work on a scale large enough to qualify for federal statutory copyright protection. • Since 1976 copyright has protected works from their creation, rather than their publication.

limited publication. Distribution of copies of an author's work to a selected group for a limited purpose and with no permission to copy the work, at a time when copies are not available to the general public. • Before the Copyright Act of 1976 made publication irrelevant, courts distinguished between limited publication and general publication to decide whether federal copyright laws applied. Under that Act, a work published before January 1, 1978 without proper copyright notice entered the public domain unless the publication was limited. — Also termed private publication. Cf. general publication. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 31. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 32, 37.]

private publication. See limited publication.

3. Defamation. The communication of defamatory words to someone other than the person defamed. • The communication may be in any form, verbal or nonverbal. [Cases: Libel and Slander 23. C.J.S. Libel and Slander; Injurious Falsehood §§ 48–52.] “Publication means the act of making the defamatory statement known to any person or persons other than the plaintiff himself. It is not necessary that there should be any publication in the popular sense of making the statement public. A private and confidential communication to a single individual is sufficient. Nor need it be published in the sense of being written or printed; for we have seen that actions as well as words may be defamatory. A communication to the person defamed himself, however, is not a sufficient publication on which to found civil proceedings; though it is otherwise in the case of a criminal prosecution, because such a communication may provoke a breach of the peace. Nor does a communication between husband and wife amount to publication; domestic intercourse of this kind is exempt from the restrictions of the law of libel and slander. But a statement by the defendant to the wife or husband of the plaintiff is a ground of action.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 154 (17th ed. 1977).

“The publication of a libel might be in the form of a book, pamphlet or newspaper, but nothing of that nature is required. A letter sent to a single individual is sufficient.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

PUBLIC FORUM

public forum. Constitutional law. A public place where people traditionally gather to express ideas and exchange views. • To be constitutional, the government's regulation of a public forum must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest and must usu. be limited to time-place-or-manner restrictions. — Also termed open forum. Cf. NONPUBLIC FORUM. [Cases: Constitutional Law 90.1(4). C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 556–557, 559–561, 568, 570–572, 580, 608.]

“[T]raditional public fora are open for expressive activity regardless of the government's intent. The objective characteristics of these properties require the government to accommodate private speakers. The government is free to open additional properties for expressive use by the general public or by a particular class of speakers, thereby creating designated public fora. Where the property is not a traditional public forum and the government has not chosen to create a designated public forum, the property is either a nonpublic forum or not a forum at all.” Arkansas Educ. Television Comm'n v. Forbes, 523 U.S. 666, 678, 118 S.Ct. 1633, 1641 (1998).

designated public forum. Public property that has not traditionally been open for public assembly and debate but that the government has opened for use by the public as a place for expressive activity, such as a public-university facility or a publicly owned theater. • Unlike a traditional public forum, the government does not have to retain the open character of a designated public forum. Also, the subject matter of the expression permitted in a designated public forum may be limited to accord with the character of the forum; reasonable, content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions are generally permissible. But any prohibition based on the content of the expression must be narrowly drawn to effectuate a compelling state interest, as with a traditional public forum. — Also termed limited public forum; nontraditional public forum. [Cases: Constitutional Law 90.1(1.4, 4). C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 556–557, 559–561, 568, 570–572, 580, 596, 599–600, 608.]

traditional public forum. Public property that has by long tradition — as opposed to governmental designation — been used by the public for assembly and expression, such as a public street, public sidewalk, or public park. • To be constitutional, the government's content-neutral restrictions of the time, place, or manner of expression must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, and leave open ample alternative channels of communication. Any government regulation of expression that is based on the content of the expression must meet the much higher test of being necessary to serve a compelling state interest. — Also termed quintessential public forum. public policy. 1. [Cases: Contracts 108. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 215–218.]

“The policy of the law, or public policy, is a phrase of common use in estimating the validity of contracts. Its history is obscure; it is most likely that agreements which tended to restrain trade or to promote litigation were the first to elicit the principle that the courts would look to the interests of the public in giving efficacy to contracts. Wagers, while they continued to be legal, were a frequent provocative of judicial ingenuity on this point, as is sufficiently shown by the case of Gilbert v. Sykes [16 East 150 (1812)] ... : but it does not seem probable that the doctrine of public policy began in the endeavor to elude their binding force. Whatever may have been its origin, it was applied very frequently, and not always with the happiest results, during the latter part of the eighteenth and the commencement of the nineteenth century. Modern decisions, however, while maintaining the duty of the courts to consider the public advantage, have tended more and more to limit the sphere within which this duty may be exercised.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 286 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

punishment, n. 1. A sanction — such as a fine, penalty, confinement, or loss of property, right, or privilege — assessed against a person who has violated the law. See SENTENCE.

“Punishment in all its forms is a loss of rights or advantages consequent on a breach of law. When it loses this quality it degenerates into an arbitrary act of violence that can produce nothing but bad social effects.” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 575 (2d ed. 1961).

“In the treatment of offenders there is a clear and unmistakable line of division between the function of the judge and that of the penologist. I should modify that: the law is clear only if it is first made clear in what sense the word ‘treatment’ is being used. For in this context the word can be used in two senses, one wide and the other narrow. Let me take the wide meaning first. The object of a sentence is to impose punishment. For ‘punishment’, a word which to many connotes nothing but retribution, the softer word ‘treatment’ is now frequently substituted; this is the wider meaning. The substitution is made, I suppose, partly as a concession to the school which holds that crime is caused by mental sickness, but more justifiably as a reminder that there are other methods of dealing with criminal tendencies besides making the consequences of crime unpleasant.” Patrick Devlin, The Judge 32–33 (1979).

capital punishment. See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

corporal punishment. Physical punishment; punishment that is inflicted upon the body (including imprisonment). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment 1524–1525. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 1593–1595, 1597–1599, 1602.]

“Past forms of corporal punishment included branding, blinding, mutilation, amputation, and the use of the pillory and the stocks. It was also an element in such violent modes of execution as drowning, stoning, burning, hanging, and drawing and quartering .... In most parts of Europe and in the United States, such savage penalties were replaced by imprisonment during the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, although capital punishment itself remained. Physical chastisement became less frequent until, in the twentieth century, corporal punishment was either eliminated as a legal penalty or restricted to beating with a birch rod, cane, whip, or other scourge. In ordinary usage the term now refers to such penal flagellation.” Gordon Hawkins, “Corporal Punishment,” in 1 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 251, 251 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

cruel and unusual punishment. Punishment that is torturous, degrading, inhuman, grossly disproportionate to the crime in question, or otherwise shocking to the moral sense of the community. • Cruel and unusual punishment is prohibited by the Eighth Amendment. Laws are not defined in terms of history, ethics, sociology, or other external factors. Rather, a legal system is an interconnected system of norms, in which coercive techniques are used to secure compliance. The validity of each law, or legal norm, is traced to another legal norm. Ultimately, all laws must find their validity in the society's basic norm (grundnorm), which may be as simple as the concept that the constitution was validly enacted. See basic norm under NORM.

The doctrine was rejected by § 202 of the Copyright Act of 1976, but it remains in effect for transfers completed before the provision's effective date of January 1, 1978.

“[A]n outright sale of a material object, such as a book, canvas, or master tape of a musical work, does not transfer copyright. One possible exception to this rule is the Pushman doctrine under which an author or artist who has sold an unpublished work of art or a manuscript is presumed to have transferred his common law copyright, unless the copyright has been specifically reserved.” Marshall A. A period of 40 days, esp. for the isolation and detention of ships containing persons or animals suspected of having or carrying a dangerous communicable disease, in order to prevent the spread of the disease.“Quarantine .... In 1423 Venice established a lazaretto or quarantine station on an island to check the growth of disease brought in by ships. In the sixteenth century quarantine became widespread and there developed the system of bills of health, certificates that the last port was free from disease; a clean bill entitled a ship to use the port without subjection to quarantine.” David M. 4.Hist. A widow's privilege to remain in her husband's house for 40 days after his death while her dower is being assigned. • This right was enforced by a writ de quarantina habenda. — Also spelled quarentine; quarentene. The provision that the widow should pay nothing for the dower, was made with the generous intention of taking away the uncourtly and oppressive claim of the feudal lord, for a fine, upon allowing the widow to be endowed. This declaration of Magna Charta is, probably, the law in all the United States.” 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *61 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

“Quasi-judicial is a term that is ... not easily definable. In the United States, the phrase often covers judicial decisions taken by an administrative agency — the test is the nature of the tribunal rather than what it is doing. In England quasi-judicial belongs to the administrative category and is used to cover situations where the administrator is bound by the law to observe certain forms and possibly hold a public hearing but where he is a free agent in reaching the final decision. If the rules are broken, the determination may be set aside, but it is not sufficient to show that the administration is biased in favour of a certain policy, or that the evidence points to a different conclusion.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 336 (G.W. QUOMINUS quominus (kwoh-m<<schwa>>-n<<schwa>>s or kwoh-mI-n<<schwa>>s). [Latin quo minus “by which the less”] Hist. A 14th-century Exchequer writ alleging that the plaintiff had lent the defendant a sum of money and that the plaintiff was unable to repay a debt of similar amount to the Crown because of the debt to the defendant. • In effect, the plaintiff pleaded the fiction that he was a debtor of the king who could not repay that debt because of the defendant's failure to repay him. — Also termed writ of quominus.

“[W]hat in the beginning had been permitted as a means of collecting the royal revenue came in the end to be nothing more or less than permitting any citizen to sue in the court of the king in order to collect a private debt. The old pretense that the matter concerned the royal revenue had to be kept up, and accordingly A had to allege that he was ‘less able’ to pay the king when his debtors would not pay him. But everyone, even the court itself, recognized this as a mere fiction, and that since the suit was in fact between A and B, B was not permitted to bring in other matters, such for example as a defense on the ground that A did not actually owe any taxes to the crown. This fiction came to be known as the ‘quo minus’ fiction, because these were the Latin words used in the litigation, which meant that A was ‘less able’ to pay the king.” Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 265–66 (2d ed. 1952).

Quo Warranto §§ 14, 16–20.] 2. An action by which the state seeks to revoke a corporation's charter. • The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are applicable to proceedings for quo warranto “to the extent that the practice in such proceedings is not set forth in statutes of the United States and has therefore conformed to the practice in civil actions.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(a)(2). [Cases: Quo Warranto 15. C.J.S. Quo Warranto §§ 30–33.]

“There are two modes of proceeding judicially to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture of a charter for default or abuse of power. The one is by scire facias; and that process is proper where there is a legal existing body, capable of acting, but who have abused their power. The other mode is by information in the nature of a quo warranto; which is in form a criminal, and in its nature a civil remedy; and that proceeding applies where there is a body corporate de facto only, but who take upon themselves to act, though, from some defect in their constitution, they cannot legally exercise their powers. Both these modes of proceeding are at the instance of and on behalf of the government. The state must be a party to the prosecution, for the judgment is that the parties be ousted, and the franchises seized into the hands of the government.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *313 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

“Quo warranto means ‘by what warrant?’ — or authority? — and was a proceeding to inquire whether authority existed to justify or authorize certain acts of a public character or interest. Originally the proceeding of quo warranto was a criminal one instituted by the crown, the purpose of which was to find out, in the course of a formal inquiry, whether or not persons or corporations were exercising a privilege or franchise illegally, or if persons who had no right to do so were occupying some public office. If it were found that the person or corporation was in fact illegally interfering with the prerogative power of the crown, or was in fact doing some other illegal act, it was ousted from the illegal practice or office. Accordingly, it can be seen at once that the

Since then, many states have adopted laws (sometimes called “little RICO” acts) based on the federal statute. The federal and most state RICO acts provide for enforcement not only by criminal prosecution but also by civil lawsuit, in which the plaintiff can sue for treble damages. — Abbr. RICO. [Cases: Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 2. C.J.S. RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations) § 7.]

“Before criminal or civil liability can attach under RICO, it must be shown that the two or more acts of racketeering alleged in the criminal indictment or civil complaint constitute a pattern of racketeering activity on the part of the culpable person. The statutory definition of pattern 'requires at least two' predicate acts occurring within ten years of each other, with one of them occurring after October 15, 1970. More broadly put, the pattern of racketeering activity is a scheme of unlawful conduct with a nexus to both the culpable person and the enterprise." David R. McCormack, Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organizations § 1.04, at 1-20 (1998).

RAPE

rape, n. 1. At common law, unlawful sexual intercourse committed by a man with a woman not his wife through force and against her will. • The common-law crime of rape required at least a slight penetration of the penis into the vagina. Also at common law, a husband could not be convicted of raping his wife. — Formerly also termed rapture; ravishment. [Cases: Rape 1. C.J.S. Rape §§ 1–3, 15.] 2. Unlawful sexual activity (esp. intercourse) with a person (usu. a female) without consent and usu. by force or threat of injury. • Most modern state statutes have broadened the definition along these lines. Rape includes unlawful sexual intercourse without consent after the perpetrator has substantially impaired his victim by administering, without the victim's knowledge or consent, drugs or intoxicants for the purpose of preventing resistance. It also includes unlawful sexual intercourse with a person who is unconscious. Marital status is now usu. irrelevant, and sometimes so is the victim's gender. — Also termed (in some statutes) unlawful sexual intercourse; sexual assault; sexual battery; sexual abuse; (in Latin) crimen raptus. Cf. sexual assault under ASSAULT; sexual battery under BATTERY.

“[Another] offence, against the female part also of his majesty's subjects, but attended with greater aggravations than that of forcible marriage, is the crime of rape, raptus mulierum, or the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 210 (1769).

“If force is to be declared an element of the crime [of rape] it becomes necessary to resort to the fiction of ‘constructive force’ to take care of those cases in which no force is needed beyond what is involved in the very act of intercourse itself. A better analysis is to recognize that the requirement of force is simply a means of demonstrating that the unlawful violation of the woman was without her consent and against her will. Therefore, evidence of serious force need not be shown in many cases. Hence the better view is that ‘force’ is not truly speaking an element of the crime itself, but if great force was not needed to accomplish the act the necessary lack of consent has been disproved in other than exceptional situations. The courts today frequently state the position that a woman's resistance need not be ‘more than her age, strength, the surrounding facts, and all attending circumstances’ make reasonable.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 211–12 (3d ed. 1982).

acquaintance rape. Rape committed by someone known to the victim, esp. by the victim's social companion. Cf. date rape; relationship rape.

marital rape. A husband's sexual intercourse with his wife by force or without her consent. • Marital rape was not a crime at common law, but under modern statutes the marital exemption no longer applies, and in most jurisdictions a husband can be prosecuted for raping his wife. — Also termed spousal rape. [Cases: Rape 4. C.J.S. Rape § 14.]

Thus it does not extend to those with whom the victim has had only brief encounters or a nodding acquaintance. — Also termed prior-relationship rape. Cf. date rape; acquaintance rape.

spousal rape. See marital rape.

statutory rape. Unlawful sexual intercourse with a person under the age of consent (as defined by statute), regardless of whether it is against that person's will. • Generally, only an adult may be convicted of this crime. A person under the age of consent cannot be convicted. — Also termed rape under age. See age of consent under AGE. [Cases: Rape 13. C.J.S. Rape §§ 18, 21.]

“Carnal knowledge of a child is frequently declared to be rape by statute and where this is ratification, n. 1. Adoption or enactment, esp. where the act is the last in a series of necessary steps or consents <The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same>. • In this sense, ratification runs the gamut of a formal approval of a constitutional amendment to rank-and-file approval of a labor union's collective-bargaining agreement with management. See ADOPTION(5). Cf. SANCTION(1). 2. Confirmation and acceptance of a previous act, thereby making the act valid from the moment it was done <the board of directors' ratification of the president's resolution>. • This sense includes action taken by the legislature to make binding a treaty negotiated by the executive. [Cases: Estoppel 90(1). C.J.S. Estoppel §§ 68–69, 134–135.] 3. Contracts. A person's binding adoption of an act already completed but either not done in a way that originally produced a legal obligation or done by a third party having at the time no authority to act as the person's agent <an adult's ratification of a contract signed during childhood is necessary to make the contract enforceable>. [Cases: Contracts 97(2); Infants 57; Principal and Agent 163–176. C.J.S. Agency §§ 63–104, 264, 447, 500, 527, 542, 549; Contracts §§ 138, 146, 156, 172, 186, 188; Infants §§ 167, 179.]

“Ratification may take place by express words indicating an intention to confirm the contract. These words may consist of a new express promise, or such words as ‘I do ratify and confirm.’ A mere acknowledgment that the contract was in fact made and that it has not been performed is not sufficient as a ratification. It is sometimes said that a ratification is ineffective unless made with knowledge of the possession of a legal power to disaffirm, but the cases holding the contrary seem to have the better reason.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 179–80 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

4. Int'l law. The final establishment of consent by the parties to a treaty to be bound by it, usu. including the exchange or deposit of instruments of ratification <the ratification of the nuclear-weapons treaty>. Pl. rationes decidendi (ray-shee-oh-nee-z des-<<schwa>>-den-dI). Cf. OBITER DICTUM; HOLDING(1).

“The phrase ‘the ratio decidendi of a case’ is slightly ambiguous. It may mean either (1) the rule that the judge who decided the case intended to lay down and apply to the facts, or (2) the rule that a later court concedes him to have had the power to lay down.” Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 75 (11th ed. 1982).

“There are ... two steps involved in the ascertainment of the ratio decidendi.... First, it is necessary to determine all the facts of the case as seen by the judge; secondly, it is necessary to discover which of those facts were treated as material by the judge.” Rupert Cross & J.W. “ ‘READY, WILLING, AND ABLE’ — A phrase referring to a prospective buyer of property who is legally capable and financially able to consummate the deal. Traditionally, the broker earns a commission upon procuring a ‘ready, willing, and able’ buyer on the listing terms, regardless of whether the seller actually goes through with the sale. The ‘ready and willing’ means, generally, that the broker must in fact produce a buyer who indicates that he or she is prepared to accept the terms of the seller and is willing to enter into a contract for sale. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when he or she enters into an option with the seller, but the buyer is ‘ready and willing’ when the option is exercised. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when the offer is subject to any new conditions, such as making the closing date an unreasonably long period, for example, one year from the offer.... The ‘able’ requires that the buyer be financially able to comply with the terms of the sale in both initial cash payment and any necessary financing. The broker is not required to show that the purchaser has actual cash or assets to pay off the mortgage. But the broker is required to reveal the identity of the buyer if requested by the seller.” John W. Reilly, The Language of Real Estate 326 (4th ed. 1993).

REASONABLE

reasonable,adj.1. Fair, proper, or moderate under the circumstances < reasonable pay>.2. According to reason <your argument is reasonable but not convincing>.

“It is extremely difficult to state what lawyers mean when they speak of ‘reasonableness.’ In part the expression refers to ordinary ideas of natural law or natural justice, in part to logical thought, working upon the basis of the rules of law.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 183 n.(u) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“In one sense the word [reasonable] describes the proper use of the reasoning power, and in another it is no more than a word of assessment. Reasoning does not help much in fixing a reasonable or fair price or a reasonable or moderate length of time, or in estimating the size of a doubt. Lawyers say a reasonable doubt, meaning a substantial one; the Court of Appeal has frowned upon the description of a reasonable doubt as one for which reasons could be given.” Patrick Devlin, The Judge 134 (1979).

REASONABLE-APPREHENSION TEST

reasonable-apprehension test.Patents. A judicial analysis to decide whether there is a justiciable controversy between a patentee and an alleged infringer. • The test has two elements: (1) the patentee must make an explicit threat or take other action that makes another person reasonably believe that an infringement suit is likely, and (2) the other person must be engaged in an activity that could constitute infringement or must be intentionally preparing to engage in possibly infringing activity. If either element is prospective or uncertain, the court will not consider the complaint. [Cases: Declaratory Judgment 233. C.J.S. Declaratory Judgments § 99.]

REASONABLE DILIGENCE

REASONABLE DOUBT

reasonable doubt. The doubt that prevents one from being firmly convinced of a defendant's guilt, or the belief that there is a real possibility that a defendant is not guilty. • “Beyond a reasonable doubt” is the standard used by a jury to determine whether a criminal defendant is guilty. See Model Penal Code § 1.12. In deciding whether guilt has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury must begin with the presumption that the defendant is innocent. — Also termed rational doubt. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION. Cf. clear and convincing evidence under EVIDENCE; PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE. [Cases: Constitutional Law 266(7); Criminal Law 561. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 1028–1029, 1037; Criminal Law § 1108.]

“Reasonable doubt ... is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It is not a mere possible doubt; because every thing relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge.” Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 320 (1850) (per Lemuel Shaw, J.).

“The gravamen of Lord Goddard's objection to the formula of ‘reasonable doubt’ seems to have been the muddle occasionally created by an impromptu effort to explain to a jury the meaning of this phrase. A simple solution would be to refrain from explaining it, relying on the common sense of the jury. As Barton J. said in an Australian case, ‘one embarks on a dangerous sea if he attempts to define with precision a term which is in ordinary use with reference to this subject-matter, and which is usually stated to a jury without embellishment as a well understood expression.’ However, some modes of embellishment seem to be unobjectionable. There is probably no harm in telling the jury, as some judges do, that a reasonable doubt is one for which a sensible reason can be supplied.” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 873 (2d ed. 1961).

REASONABLE EXCUSE

reasonable person. 1. A hypothetical person used as a legal standard, esp. to determine whether someone acted with negligence; specif., a person who exercises the degree of attention, knowledge, intelligence, and judgment that society requires of its members for the protection of their own and of others' interests. • The reasonable person acts sensibly, does things without serious delay, and takes proper but not excessive precautions. — Also termed reasonable man; prudent person; ordinarily prudent person; reasonably prudent person; highly prudent person. See reasonable care under CARE. [Cases: Insurance 1818; Negligence 233. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 34, 118–121, 125–127, 130–131, 133.]

“The reasonable man connotes a person whose notions and standards of behaviour and responsibility correspond with those generally obtained among ordinary people in our society at the present time, who seldom allows his emotions to overbear his reason and whose habits are moderate and whose disposition is equable. He is not necessarily the same as the average man — a term which implies an amalgamation of counter-balancing extremes.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 56 (17th ed. 1977).

2. Archaic. A human being. “In the antique phraseology which has been repeated since the time of Lord Coke the actus reus of murder (and therefore of any criminal homicide) was declared to be unlawfully killing a reasonable person who is in being and under the King's peace, the death following within a year and a day. In this sentence the word 'reasonable' does not mean 'sane', but 'human'. In criminal law, a lunatic is a persona for all purposes of protection, even when not so treated for the assessment of liability." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 102 (16th ed. 1952).

“Rebuttal is the hardest argument to make in any court. In the Supreme Court and in most courts of appeals, petitioner has to work hard to save any time at all for rebuttal. In the Supreme Court, rebuttal time comes directly out of the 30 minutes allotted to petitioner's side and, if the justices keep asking questions that use up petitioner's time, the case is submitted without rebuttal. Many courts of appeals permit counsel to reserve time for rebuttal, either through the clerk in advance of the argument or at the beginning of the argument itself. It is the rare court of appeals panel that does not permit counsel at least one minute of rebuttal, even when counsel's time has expired.” David C. Frederick, Supreme Court and Appellate Advocacy § 7.3, at 178 (2003) (dealing only with oral rebuttals on appeal).

recall of mandate.The extraordinary action by an appellate court of withdrawing the order it issued to the trial court upon deciding an appeal, usu. after the deadline has passed for the losing party to seek a rehearing. • Because this action can interfere with trial-court proceedings on remand, and also because it clouds the waters that repose (the finality of a judgment) is meant to clear, courts are reluctant to use the power. But they will use it to correct clerical errors or to remedy a fraud on the court during the appeal. It has also been used when the original mandate would result in a grave injustice. See MANDATE(1).

“In many parts of Europe monarchs encouraged a ‘reception’ of Roman law at the expense of medieval customary systems. On the continent — in France, Holland, and Germany — the results of the reception of Roman law have tended to be permanent; the continental jurist in the twentieth century studies Roman law to grasp the jurisprudence underlying modern codes. And in the British Isles, the law of Scotland now contains so much borrowing from Roman law that there, too the road to legal practice leads through study of the corpus of Roman civil law compiled at Justinian's direction. A preliminary statement in a contract or deed explaining the reasons for entering into it or the background of the transaction, or showing the existence of particular facts <the recitals in the settlement agreement should describe the underlying dispute>. • Traditionally, each recital begins with the word whereas. — Also termed (in sense 2) whereas clause. — recite, vb.

“The parties may wish to begin the agreement with a statement of their intentions. Often they do this through recitals, which were traditionally introduced by ‘whereas,’ but can simply state the background without this formality.” Scott J. Burnham, Contract Drafting Guidebook § 8.4, at 158 (2d ed. 1992).

RECKLESS

reckless,adj. Characterized by the creation of a substantial and unjustifiable risk of harm to others and by a conscious (and sometimes deliberate) disregard for or indifference to that risk; heedless; rash. • Reckless conduct is much more than mere negligence: it is a gross deviation from what a reasonable person would do. See RECKLESSNESS. Cf. CARELESS; WANTON. [Cases: Automobiles 330; Negligence 274. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles §§ 1354–1362; Negligence §§ 104–105, 109.] — recklessly,adv.

“Intention cannot exist without foresight, but foresight can exist without intention. For a man may foresee the possible or even probable consequences of his conduct and yet not desire them to occur; none the less if he persists on his course he knowingly runs the risk of bringing about the unwished result. To describe this state of mind the word ‘reckless’ is the most appropriate. The words ‘rash’ and ‘rashness’ have also been used to indicate this same attitude.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 28 (16th ed. 1952).

RECKLESS DISREGARD

RECKLESS DRIVING

RECKLESS KNOWLEDGE

RECKLESSNESS

recklessness,n.1. Conduct whereby the actor does not desire harmful consequence but nonetheless foresees the possibility and consciously takes the risk. • Recklessness involves a greater degree of fault than negligence but a lesser degree of fault than intentional wrongdoing. [Cases: Negligence 274. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 104–105, 109.] 2. The state of mind in which a person does not care about the consequences of his or her actions. — Also termed heedlessness. Cf. WANTONNESS. [Cases: Negligence 274. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 104–105, 109.]

“The ordinary meaning of the word [recklessness] is a high degree of carelessness. It is the doing of something which in fact involves a grave risk to others, whether the doer realises it or not. The test is therefore objective and not subjective.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts

“An abiding difficulty in discussing the legal meaning of recklessness is that the term has been given several different shades of meaning by the courts over the years. In the law of manslaughter, ‘reckless’ was long regarded as the most appropriate adjective to express the degree of negligence needed for a conviction: in this sense, it meant a high degree of carelessness. In the late 1950s the courts adopted a different meaning of recklessness in the context of mens rea, referring to D’s actual awareness of the risk of the prohibited consequence occurring: we shall call this ‘common-law recklessness.’ Controversy was introduced into this area in the early 1980s, when the House of Lords purported to broaden the meaning of recklessness so as to include those who failed to give thought to an obvious risk that the consequence would occur ....” Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 154 (1991).

4. Tax. The act or an instance of accounting for a taxpayer’s realized gain or loss for the purpose of income-tax reporting. Cf. NONRECOGNITION PROVISION; REALIZATION(2). See RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE. [Cases: Bail 54, 63; Recognizances 1. C.J.S. Bail; Release and Detention Pending Proceedings §§ 93, 106–107, 109; Recognizances §§ 2–4, 8.]

“Recognizances are aptly described as ‘contracts made with the Crown in its judicial capacity.’ A recognizance is a writing acknowledged by the party to it before a judge or officer having authority for the purpose, and enrolled in a court of record. It usually takes the form of a promise, with penalties for the breach of it, to keep the peace, to be of good behavior, or to appear at the assizes.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 80–81 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“A recognizance is an acknowledgment of an obligation in court by the recognizer binding him to make a certain payment subject to the condition that on the performance of a specified act the obligation shall be discharged.” 1 Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 6, at 18 (Walter H.E. personal recognizance. ### RECONSIDER reconsider,vb. To discuss or take up (a matter) again <legislators voted to reconsider the bill>.

• Under parliamentary law, a motion to reconsider sets aside a certain vote already taken and restores the motion on which the vote is being reconsidered to its status immediately before the vote occurred. Making a motion to reconsider suspends a vote already taken until the assembly decides whether to reconsider it. — reconsideration,n.

“The motion to reconsider is a distinctively American motion (it was first made the subject of a rule in the U. S. House of Representatives in 1802).

“This motion was unknown to the early British Parliament. When Parliament (the British Congress) passed an act, that act then stood as the judgment of the body until another law or supplementary act was afterward passed explaining or amending the previous act — a slow-moving and time-consuming process in the estimation of American lawmakers.“Consequently, the American love for celerity invented the motion to reconsider, and cleverly made it a mere procedural or restoratory motion. As a result, the motion to reconsider now makes possible immediate reconsideration of a question, even on the same day.” George Demeter, Demeter's Manual of Parliamentary Law and Procedure 154 (1969).reconsider and enter on the minutes.Parliamentary law. To make a motion to reconsider for the purpose of suspending a vote already taken and bringing it back up at the next meeting. — Also termed reconsider and enter; reconsider and have it entered on the minutes.

But after the Conquest the hundred assembly, now called a court as all the others were, lost its importance very quickly. Pleas of land were taken from it, and its criminal jurisdiction limited to one of holding suspects in temporary detention. The reeve of the hundred became the deputy of the sheriff, and the chief purpose of holding the hundred court was to enable the sheriff to hold his tourn and to permit a ‘view of frankpledge,’ i.e., an inspection of the person who ought to belong to the frankpledge system.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 174–75 (1936).

Cf. PYRAMID SCHEME. [Cases: Consumer Protection 12. C.J.S. Credit Reporting Agencies; Consumer Protection §§ 56–58.]

“The problem inherent in a referral sales contract is the problem inherent in a chain letter — the success of the arrangement depends on an inexhaustible supply of customers. For example, if each buyer submits 25 names and each of these ‘referrals’ becomes a buyer under a similar agreement, the completion of the seventh round of referrals requires 6.1 trillion persons.... Both courts and legislatures have acted against referral sales.... The Uniform Consumer Credit Code prohibits the use of referral sales schemes in which the rebate is conditioned on ‘the occurrence of an event after the time the consumer agrees to buy or lease.’ In other words, a referral scheme keyed to the consumer merely furnishing names is not affected; a referral scheme keyed to the consumer furnishing names of people who actually become customers is prohibited.” David G. An equitable remedy by which a court will modify a written agreement to reflect the actual intent of the parties, usu. to correct fraud or mutual mistake in the writing, such as an incomplete property description in a deed. • In cases of mutual mistake, the actual intended agreement must usu. be established by clear and convincing evidence. In cases of fraud, there must be clear evidence of what the agreement would have been but for the fraud. See RECTIFICATION. [Cases: Reformation of Instruments 1. C.J.S. Reformation of Instruments §§ 2–5, 12, 16.] — reform, vb.

“The standard explanation of reformation is that the parties had an actual agreement, and that the writing does not reflect that agreement.... If the parties made a mistake about the premises of their agreement, about some fact in the world outside their word-processing machines, reformation is not a solution. The court cannot reform the contract because it cannot know what the parties would have agreed to but for the mistake.” Douglas Laycock, Modern American Remedies 39 (3d ed. 2002).

For example, insiders, promoters or underwriters might receive securities directly from the issuer with an intent to resell at a later date.... [I]t may be desirable to get a debt offering all ready to go but wait for a propitious moment to release it. These and other delayed offerings have led to what is known as shelf registration. REINSURANCE

reinsurance. Insurance of all or part of one insurer's risk by a second insurer, who accepts the risk in exchange for a percentage of the original premium. — Also termed reinsurance. [Cases: Insurance 3593.]

“The term ‘reinsurance’ has been used by courts, attorneys, and textwriters with so little discrimination that much confusion has arisen as to what that term actually connotes. Thus, it has so often been used in connection with transferred risks, assumed risks, consolidations and mergers, excess insurance, and in other connections that it now lacks a clean-cut field of operation. Reinsurance, to an insurance lawyer, means one thing only — the ceding by one insurance company to another of all or a portion of its risks for a stipulated portion of the premium, in which the liability of the reinsurer is solely to the reinsured, which is the ceding company, and in which contract the ceding company retains all contact with the original insured, and handles all matters prior to and subsequent to loss.” 13A John Alan Appleman & Jean Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 7681, at 479–80 (1976).

“The laying off of risk by means of reinsurance traditionally serves three basic purposes. First, reinsurance can increase the capacity of the insurer to accept risk. The insurer may be enabled to take on larger individual risks, or a large number of smaller risks, or a combination of both.... Secondly, reinsurance can promote financial stability by ameliorating the adverse consequences of an unexpected accumulation of losses or of single catastrophic losses, because these will, at least in part, be absorbed by reinsurers. Thirdly, reinsurance can strengthen the solvency of an insurer from the point of view of any regulations under which the insurer must operate which provide for a minimum ‘solvency margin,’ generally expressed as a ratio of net premium income over capital and free reserves.” P.T. O'Neill & J.W. Woloniecki, The Law of Reinsurance in England and Bermuda 4 (1998).

A contract of reinsurance (usu. long-term) covering different classes or lines of business of the reinsured (such as professional liability, property, etc.) and obligating the reinsurer in advance to accept the cession of covered risks. • Rather than receive individual notice of each specific claim covered, the treaty reinsurer will generally receive periodic reports providing basic information on the losses paid. — Also termed treaty of reinsurance. alternativeness rejection.Rejection of a patent claim on the ground that it seeks a broad monopoly on the invention as disclosed and on other unspecified variations. • For example, a claim using a phrase such as “and similar materials” would probably be too broad to be allowed. [Cases: Patents 124. C.J.S. Patents § 210.]

final rejection. A patent examiner's finding, in a second or subsequent office action, that a claim in an application is unpatentable on the merits. • A final rejection is made in the final office action. Despite the misleading name, a final rejection need not end the prosecution. The rejection can be appealed, or the application can be reexamined or continued in another application. A rejection may also be appealed to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. A decision of that Board may be reviewed by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia or appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. 35 USCA §§ 141–145. Rejection of a patent claim on the ground that the invention is inoperative, frivolous, fraudulent, or against the public interest. • The classic examples are perpetual-motion machines (inoperative), cures for the common cold (frivolous because believed impossible, and also probably fraudulent), and gambling devices (formerly seen as against the same-invention double-patenting rejection.See statutory double-patenting rejection.

statutory double-patenting rejection.Rejection of a patent application on the ground that the invention is the same subject matter as an already-patented invention by the same inventor. • This rejection is based on 35 USCA § 101. — Also termed same-invention double-patenting rejection. [Cases: Patents 120.]

undue-breadth rejection.Rejection of a patent claim on the ground that it seeks a patent monopoly on more than the invention. • For instance, a functional claim is too broad if it purports to include every other possible way of accomplishing a function. A claim on a chemical is more

undue-multiplicity-of-claims rejection.Rejection of a patent application on the ground that it makes an unreasonable number of claims. See AGGREGATION OF CLAIMS.

vague-and-indefinite rejection.Rejection of a patent claim on the ground that a person of ordinary skill in the art could not clearly understand it. • For example, terms used in more than one sense could make the meaning unclear. — Also termed Section 112 rejection. [Cases: Patents 101(6).]

REMAINDER

remainder.Property. 1. A future interest arising in a third person — that is, someone other than the estate's creator, its initial holder, or the heirs of either — who is intended to take after the natural termination of the preceding estate. • For example, if a grant is “to A for life, and then to B,” B's future interest is a remainder. If there is only one preceding estate and the remainder vests on that estate's expiration, the remainder is also termed an executed estate. — Also termed remainder estate; estate in remainder. Cf. EXECUTORY INTEREST; REVERSION; POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER. [Cases: Remainders 1. C.J.S. Estates §§ 70–71, 77, 79, 81–82.]

“Whether a remainder is vested or contingent depends upon the language employed. If the conditional element is incorporated into the description of, or the gift to the remainder-man, then the remainder is contingent; but if, after words giving a vested interest, a clause is added divesting it, the remainder is vested. Thus, on a devise to A. for life, remainder to his children, but if any child dies in the lifetime of A. his share to go to those who survive, the share of each child is vested, subject to be divested by his death. But on a devise to A. for life, remainder to such of his children as survive him, the remainder is contingent.” John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 66 (1886).

“Under the names of ‘remainders' and ‘executory limitations,’ various classes of interests in land could be created in expectancy, either at the Common Law or under the Statute of Uses. The differences between the two classes were highly technical; and the learning involved in acquiring a knowledge of the rules of determining them [is] quite out of proportion to the value obtained.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 263 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

accelerated remainder.A remainder that has passed to the remainderman, as when the gift to the preceding beneficiary fails. [Cases: Remainders 5. C.J.S. Estates §§ 77, 80.]

charitable remainder.A remainder, usu. from a life estate, that is given to a charity; for example, “to Jane for life, and then to the American Red Cross.” [Cases: Internal Revenue 4172(3); Taxation 876. C.J.S. Internal Revenue § 532; Taxation §§ 1876–1878.]

contingent remainder.A remainder that is either given to an unascertained person or made subject to a condition precedent. • An example is “to A for life, and then, if B has married before A dies, to B.” — Also termed executory remainder; remainder subject to a condition precedent. [Cases: Remainders 1, 4. C.J.S. Estates §§ 70–77, 79, 81–82, 88.]

“Unlike a vested remainder, a contingent remainder is either subject to a condition precedent (in addition to the natural expiration of a prior estate), or owned by unascertainable persons, or both. But the contingent remainder, like the vested remainder, ‘waits patiently’ for possession. It is so created that it can become a present estate (if ever it does) immediately upon, and no sooner than, the natural expiration of particular estates that stand in front of it and were created simultaneously with it.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 73 (2d ed. 1984).

cross-remainder. A future interest that results when particular estates are given to two or more persons in different parcels of land, or in the same land in undivided shares, and the remainders of all the estates are made to vest in the survivor or survivors. • Two examples of devises giving rise to cross-remainders are (1) “to A and B for life, with the remainder to the survivor and her heirs,” and (2) “Blackacre to A and Whiteacre to B, with the remainder of A's estate to B on A's failure of issue, and the remainder of B's estate to A on B's failure of issue.” • If no tenants or issue survive, the remainder vests in a third party (sometimes known as the ulterior remainderman). Each tenant in common has a reciprocal, or cross, remainder in the share of the others. This type of remainder could not be created by deed unless expressly stated. It could, however, be implied in a will. [Cases: Remainders 1. C.J.S. Estates §§ 70–71, 77, 79, 81–82.]

“By a will also an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course.... So also, where a devise of black-acre to A and of white-acre to B in tail, and if they both die without issue, then to C in fee: here A and B have cross remainders by implication, and on the failure of either's issue, the other or his issue shall take the whole; and C's remainder over shall be postponed till the issue of both shall fail.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 381 (1766).

defeasible remainder.A vested remainder that will be destroyed if a condition subsequent occurs. • An example is “to A for life, and then to B, but if B ever sells liquor on the land, then to C.” — Also termed remainder subject to divestment. [Cases: Remainders 10. C.J.S. Estates §§ 88–89, 91–92.]

executory remainder.See contingent remainder.

indefeasible remainder. A vested remainder that is not subject to a condition subsequent; specif., a remainder in which the remainderman is certain to acquire a present interest sometime in the future and will be entitled to retain the interest permanently. — Also termed indefeasibly vested remainder; remainder indefeasibly vested.

remainder subject to open. A vested remainder that is given to a class of persons whose numbers may change over time and that is to be shared equally by each member of the class. • An example is “to A for life, and then equally to all of B's children.” The class must have at least one member, but more can be added over time. — Also termed remainder subject to partial divestment; remainder vested subject to open.

vested remainder. A remainder that is given to an ascertained person and that is not subject to a condition precedent. • An example is “to A for life, and then to B.” — Also termed executed remainder. [Cases: Remainders 1. C.J.S. Estates §§ 70–71, 77, 79, 81–82.]

2. The property in a decedent's estate that is not otherwise specifically devised or bequeathed in a will. See residuary estate under ESTATE(3). [Cases: Wills 586. C.J.S. Wills §§ 1176–1179, 1184.]

remedy,n.1. The means of enforcing a right or preventing or redressing a wrong; legal or equitable relief. — Also termed civil remedy. 2.REMEDIAL ACTION . Cf. RELIEF. — Also termed (in both senses) law of remedy. — remedy,vb.

“A remedy is anything a court can do for a litigant who has been wronged or is about to be wronged. The two most common remedies are judgments that plaintiffs are entitled to collect sums of money from defendants and orders to defendants to refrain from their wrongful conduct or to undo its consequences. The court decides whether the litigant has been wronged under the substantive law; it conducts its inquiry in accordance with the procedural law. The law of remedies falls somewhere between substance and procedure, distinct from both but overlapping with both.” Douglas Laycock, Modern American Remedies 1 (3d ed. 2002).

adequate remedy at law.A legal remedy (such as an award of damages) that provides sufficient relief to the petitioning party, thus preventing the party from obtaining equitable relief. See IRREPARABLE INJURY RULE. [Cases: Specific Performance 5. C.J.S. Specific Performance § 8.]

administrative remedy.A nonjudicial remedy provided by an administrative agency. • Ordinarily, if an administrative remedy is available, it must be exhausted before a court will hear the case. See EXHAUSTION OF REMEDIES. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 229. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 38–42.]

concurrent remedy.One of two or more legal or equitable actions available to redress a wrong.

cumulative remedy.A remedy available to a party in addition to another remedy that still remains in force.

equitable remedy.A remedy, usu. a nonmonetary one such as an injunction or specific performance, obtained when available legal remedies, usu. monetary damages, cannot adequately redress the injury. • Historically, an equitable remedy was available only from a court of equity. — Also termed equitable relief. See IRREPARABLE-INJURY RULE. [Cases: Injunction 17; Specific Performance 1. C.J.S. Injunctions § 31; Specific Performance §§ 2, 5–6.]

extrajudicial remedy.A remedy not obtained from a court, such as repossession. — Also termed self-help remedy.

extraordinary remedy.A remedy — such as a writ of mandamus or habeas corpus — not available to a party unless necessary to preserve a right that cannot be protected by a standard legal or equitable remedy. • Because there is no agreed list of extraordinary remedies, some standard remedies — such as preliminary and permanent injunctions — are sometimes described as extraordinary. [Cases: Mandamus 3(1)–3(2.1).C.J.S. Mandamus §§ 18–19, 21–23, 31.]

legal remedy. A remedy historically available in a court of law, as distinguished from a remedy historically available only in equity. • After the merger of law and equity, this distinction remained relevant in some ways, such as in determining the right to jury trial and the choice between alternate remedies. [Cases: Action 21. C.J.S. Actions § 124.]

provisional remedy. A temporary remedy awarded before judgment and pending the action's disposition, such as a temporary restraining order, a preliminary injunction, a prejudgment receivership, or an attachment. • Such a remedy is intended to maintain the status quo by protecting a person's safety or preserving property. [Cases: Attachment 1; Indemnity 20. C.J.S. Attachment §§ 2–4, 7; Subrogation §§ 2–15, 19, 91.]

remedy over. A remedy that arises from a right of indemnification or subrogation. • For example, if a city is liable for injuries caused by a defect in a street, the city has a “remedy over” against the person whose act or negligence caused the defect. [Cases: Injunction 1. C.J.S. Injunctions §§ 2–4, 12, 14, 22, 24, 166.]

specific remedy. A remedy whereby the injured party is awarded the very performance that was contractually promised or whereby the injury threatened or caused by a tort is prevented or repaired. • A court awards a specific remedy by ordering a defaulting seller of goods to deliver the specified goods to the buyer (as opposed to paying damages). [Cases: Specific Performance 126. C.J.S. Specific Performance §§ 189–193.]

speedy remedy. A remedy that, under the circumstances, can be pursued expeditiously before the aggrieved party has incurred substantial detriment. • “Speedy remedy” is an informal expression with no fixed meaning — that is, what is considered speedy in one context may not be considered speedy in other contexts. For example, the Federal Tax Injunction Act requires a “plain, speedy, and efficient remedy” in state courts. But the Act does not require preliminary or injunctive relief — or even interest for delay. [Cases: Injunction 1. C.J.S. Injunctions §§ 2–4, 12, 14, 22, 24, 166.]

substitutional remedy. A remedy intended to give the promisee something as a replacement for the promised performance or to give the plaintiff something in lieu of preventing or repairing an injury. • A court awards a substitutional remedy by ordering a defaulting seller of goods to pay the buyer damages (as opposed to delivering the promised goods). — Also termed substitutionary remedy. [Cases: Contracts 324(1). C.J.S. Architects §§ 39, 47, 51; Contracts § 600.]

“With substitutionary remedies, plaintiff suffers harm and receives a sum of money. Specific remedies seek to avoid this exchange. They seek to prevent harm, or undo it, rather than let it happen and compensate for it... [Money damages] are substitutionary both in the sense that the sum of money is substituted for plaintiff's original entitlement, and in the less obvious sense that the fact finder's valuation of the loss is substituted for plaintiff's valuation. Specific relief seeks to avoid both these substitutions, giving plaintiff the very thing he lost if that is what he wants." Douglas Laycock, The Death of the Irreparable Injury Rule 13 (1991).

“Rent-charge is a rent with liberty to distrain. As when a man seised of land granteth by a deed poll, or by indenture, a yearly rent going out of the same land to another in fee or fee-tail, or for a term of life, etc. with clause of distress, or maketh a feoffment in fee by indenture, reserving to himself a certain yearly rent, with clause of distress.” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 155 (1759).

“A rentcharge is an annual or periodic payment charged upon, and payable by the owner of, land. Unlike a rent service, in the case of a rentcharge there is no tenure or privity of estate between the parties. The owner of a rentcharge has no tenurial relationship with the land upon which it is charged. A rentcharge is a species of incorporeal property, but, unlike an easement, is incorporeal property in gross, being enjoyed by the owner personally and not in the capacity of proprietor of land.” Peter Butt, Land Law 330 (2d ed. 1988).

“But rents-seck have long ceased to exist, because the inability of their owners to distrain was abolished by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 George II), which enacted that the owners of rents-seck, rents of assize and chief rents should have the same remedy by distress as existed in the case of rent reserved upon lease.” G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 199 (3d ed. 1933).

“At common law, the relationship of lord and tenant carried with it an automatic right of distress for any rent. If no such relationship existed, there was no common law right of distress, and consequently an express clause of distress was frequently inserted when reserving the rent. A rent supported by no right of distress was known as a rent seck (from the Latin siccus, dry, barren) .... Rent seck ceased to exist many years ago, for by the Landlord and Tenant Act 1730, the owners of rents seck were given the same rights of distress as a landlord has against his tenant

“[R]ent-service exists only where the relation of landlord and tenant is found, and in such a case rent derives its name from the fact that it was given as a substitute for the services to which the land was originally liable.” G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 198 (3d ed. 1933).

3. Civil law. A contract by which one party conveys to another party a tract of land or other immovable property, to be held by the other party as owner and in perpetuity, in exchange for payment of an annual sum of money or quantity of fruits. • Under Louisiana law, the rent is essentially redeemable even though stipulated to be perpetual. The seller may set the terms of the redemption, which must take place after a stipulated time (not to exceed 30 years). La. Civ. Code art. 2788. See FRUIT(2). — Also termed rent of lands. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 181. C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant §§ 462–465.] 4. To support the action it is necessary: (a) That the property shall be personal. (b) That the plaintiff, at the time of suit, shall be entitled to the immediate possession. (c) That (at common law) the defendant shall have wrongfully taken the property (replevin in the cepit). But, by statute in most states, the action will now also lie where the property is wrongfully detained, though it was lawfully obtained in the first instance (replevin in the detinet). (d) That the property shall be wrongfully detained by the defendant at the time of suit.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 49, at 120 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

American statutes or court rules tracked the common law generally, referring to the recovery variously as replevin, detinue, claim-and-delivery, or sequestration. The statutes usually allowed the plaintiff to recover the disputed chattel before trial, though this is now subject to constitutional limits which have led to procedural revisions in many of the statutes.” 1 Dan B. A published volume of judicial decisions by a particular court or group of courts <U.S. Reports>. • Generally, these decisions are first printed in temporary paperback volumes, and then printed in hardbound reporter volumes. Law reports may be either official (published by a government entity) or unofficial (published by a private publisher). Court citations frequently include the names of both the official and unofficial reports. — Also termed reporter; law report; law reporter. Cf. ADVANCE SHEETS. [Cases: Courts 103; Reports 3. C.J.S. Courts §§ 170, 173–174, 176; Reports §§ 10–13.]

official report.(usu. pl.) The governmentally approved set of reported cases within a given jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 103; Reports 1. C.J.S. Courts §§ 170, 173–174, 176; Reports §§ 2–3.]

“[I]t may justly be said that all reports are in a sense ‘official,’ or that to use the term ‘official reports’ as referring to any particular series of reports is a misnomer, for it is certainly misleading. The mere fact that each state authorizes or requires publication of reports of its Supreme Court decisions, and, to insure such publication, agrees to purchase a stated number of each volume of the reports, cannot be said to give such a series pre-eminence as an ‘official’ publication.” William

M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 33 (3d ed. 1914).

4. (usu. pl.) A collection of administrative decisions by one or more administrative agencies. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 507.C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 151, 157.] 5.MINUTES (2). — Abbr. rep. — report,vb.

REPORTER

reporter. 1. [Cases: Reports 3. C.J.S. Reports §§ 10–13.] 2.REPORTER OF DECISIONS. 3.REPORT (3) <Supreme Court Reporter>. — Abbr. rep.; rpt.

“It may not come amiss to remark that the National Report System is usually spoken of as the ‘Reporters,’ and one of the component parts of that system is in like manner spoken of as a ‘Reporter.’ Wherever, in this or the succeeding chapters of this work, the word is used with a capital, it refers to one or more of the parts of the National Reporter System. When the word ‘reporter’ is used without capitalization, it refers to the person who reports or edits the cases in any series of reports to which reference is being made.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 37 (3d ed. 1914).

REPORTER OF DECISIONS

reporter of decisions.The person responsible for publishing a court's opinions. • The position began historically — in the years before systematic reporting of decisions was introduced — when lawyers attended the sessions of particular courts, were accredited to them by the judges, and reported the decisions of that court. Today, the reporter of decisions holds an administrative post as a court employee. The reporter often has duties that include verifying citations, correcting spelling and punctuation, and suggesting minor editorial improvements before judicial opinions are released or published. — Often shortened to reporter. — Also termed court reporter. See COURT REPORTER. [Cases: Courts 103; Reports 3. C.J.S. Courts §§ 170, 173–174, 176; Reports §§ 10–13.]

representation, n. 1. A presentation of fact — either by words or by conduct — made to induce someone to act, esp. to enter into a contract; esp., the manifestation to another that a fact, including a state of mind, exists <the buyer relied on the seller's representation that the roof did not leak>. Cf. MISREPRESENTATION. [Cases: Fraud 9.]

“Representation ... may introduce terms into a contract and affect performance: or it may induce a contract and so affect the intention of one of the parties, and the formation of the contract.... At common law, ... if a representation did not afterwards become a substantive part of the contract, its untruth (save in certain excepted cases and apart always from fraud) was immaterial. But if it did, it might be one of two things: (1) it might be regarded by the parties as a vital term going to the root of the contract (when it is usually called a 'condition'); and in this case its untruth entitles the injured party to repudiate the whole contract; or (2) it might be a term in the nature only of an independent subsidiary promise (when it is usually called a 'warranty'), which is indeed a part of the contract, but does not go to the root of it; in this case its untruth only gives rise to an action ex contractu for damages, and does not entitle the injured party to repudiate the whole contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 218, 222 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

affirmative representation.A representation asserting the existence of certain facts pertaining to a given subject matter. [Cases: Contracts 205.5; Fraud 9. C.J.S. Contracts § 341.]

2. The act or an instance of standing for or acting on behalf of another, esp. by a lawyer on behalf of a client <Clarence Darrow's representation of John Scopes>. [Cases: Attorney and Client 77–101. C.J.S. Attorney and Client §§ 191–217.]

concurrent representation.The simultaneous representation of more than one person in the same matter. See CONFLICT OF INTEREST(2).

3. The fact of a litigant's having such a close alignment of interests with another person that the other is considered as having been present in the litigation <the named plaintiff provided adequate representation for the absent class members>.

adequate representation.A close alignment of interests between actual parties and potential parties in a lawsuit, so that the interests of potential parties are sufficiently protected by the actual parties. • The concept of adequate representation is often used in procedural contexts. For example, if a case is to be certified as a class action, there must be adequate representation by the named plaintiffs of all the potential class members. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). And if a nonparty is to intervene in a lawsuit, there must not already be adequate representation of the nonparty by an existing party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2).

interest, as a class representative does in a class action. See VIRTUAL-REPRESENTATION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Judgment 677; Parties 35.3. C.J.S. Judgments §§ 847, 851–854; Parties § 28.]

Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 165 (3d ed. 1981).

REPRESSED-MEMORY SYNDROME

repressed-memory syndrome. A memory disorder characterized by an intermittent and extensive inability to recall important personal information, usu. following or concerning a traumatic or highly stressful occurrence, when the memory lapses cannot be dismissed as normal forgetfulness. • The theoretical basis for this syndrome was proposed by Sigmund Freud in 1895. The American Psychiatric Association has recognized the syndrome officially by the medical term dissociative amnesia. Although the APA has affirmed that some people suffering partial or total dissociative amnesia may later recover some or all of the memory of the traumatic or stressful event, the existence of the syndrome is controversial. Some studies indicate that “repressed” memories, at least in some patients, may be a product of suggestions made by mental-health therapists rather than of any actual experience. — Abbr. RMS. — Also termed recovered-memory syndrome; dissociative amnesia. Cf. FALSE-MEMORY SYNDROME .

REPRESSIVE TAX

REPRIEVE

REPRISAL

reprisal (ri-prI-z<<schwa>>). 1. (often pl.) Int'l law. The use of force, short of war, against another country to redress an injury caused by that country. [Cases: War and National Emergency 12. C.J.S. War and National Defense §§ 8, 13, 16–22, 84–85.]

“ ‘Reprisals’ is a word with a long history, and modern writers are not agreed on the meaning which should be given to it today. Literally and historically it denotes the seizing of property or persons by way of retaliation .... Reprisals when they are taken today are taken by a state, but some writers would still limit the word to acts of taking or withholding the property of a foreign state or its nationals, for example by an embargo, whilst others would abandon the historical associations and use it to denote any kind of coercive action not amounting to war whereby a state attempts to secure satisfaction from another for some wrong which the latter has committed her procreative activities; specif., the cluster of civil liberties relating to pregnancy, abortion, and sterilization, esp. the personal bodily rights of a woman in her decision whether to become pregnant or bear a child. • The phrase includes the idea of being able to make reproductive decisions free from discrimination, coercion, or violence. Human-rights scholars increasingly consider many reproductive rights to be protected by international human-rights law. [Cases: Civil Rights 1029. C.J.S. Civil Rights §§ 4–5, 8, 13.]

REPUBLIC

republic, n. A system of government in which the people hold sovereign power and elect representatives who exercise that power. • It contrasts on the one hand with a pure democracy, in which the people or community as an organized whole wield the sovereign power of government, and on the other with the rule of one person (such as a king or dictator) or of an elite group (such as an oligarchy, aristocracy, or junta). — Abbr. rep. Cf. DEMOCRACY. — republican, adj.

“A republic is a government which (a) derives all of its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people and (b) is administered by persons holding their office during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.” Robert A. Dahl, A Preface to Democratic Theory 10 (1956).

RESCISSION; REVOCATION(1). [Cases: Contracts 313(2). C.J.S. Contracts §§ 534–540.] — repudiatory (ri-pyoo-dee-<<schwa>>-tor-ee), repudiable (ri-pyoo-dee-<<schwa>>-b<<schwa>>l), adj.

“A repudiation is (a) a statement by the obligor to the obligee indicating that the obligor will commit a breach that would of itself give the obligee a claim for damages for total breach ... , or (b) a voluntary affirmative act which renders the obligor unable or apparently unable to perform without such a breach.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 250 (1979).

“In order to constitute a repudiation, a party's language must be sufficiently positive to be reasonably interpreted to mean that the party will not or cannot perform. Mere expression of doubt as to his willingness or ability to perform is not enough to constitute a repudiation, although such an expression may give an obligee reasonable grounds to believe that the obligor will commit a serious breach and may ultimately result in a repudiation .... However, language that under a fair reading ‘amounts to a statement of intention not to perform except on conditions which go beyond the contract’ constitutes a repudiation.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 250, cmt. b (1979).

anticipatory repudiation.Repudiation of a contractual duty before the time for performance, giving the injured party an immediate right to damages for total breach, as well as discharging the injured party's remaining duties of performance. • This type of repudiation occurs when the promisor unequivocally disavows any intention to perform when the time for performance comes. Once the repudiation occurs, the nonrepudiating party has three options: (1) treat the repudiation as an immediate breach and sue for damages; (2) ignore the repudiation, urge the repudiator to perform, wait for the specified time of performance, and sue if the repudiating party does not perform; and (3) cancel the contract. — Also termed renunciation. See anticipatory breach under BREACH OF CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts 313. C.J.S. Contracts § 534.]

The Restatement lists three actions that constitute anticipatory repudiation: “(a) a positive statement to the promisee or other person having a right under the contract, indicating that the promisor will not or cannot substantially perform his contractual duties; (b) transferring or contracting to transfer to a third person an interest in specific land, goods, or in any other thing essential for the substantial performance of his contractual duties; (c) any voluntary affirmative act which renders substantial performance of his contractual duties impossible, or apparently impossible.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 318 (1979).

RESCISSION

rescission (ri-sizh-<<schwa>>n), n.1. A party's unilateral unmaking of a contract for a legally sufficient reason, such as the other party's material breach, or a judgment rescinding the contract; VOIDANCE. • Rescission is generally available as a remedy or defense for a nondefaulting party and is accompanied by restitution of any partial performance, thus restoring the parties to their precontractual positions. — Also termed avoidance. [Cases: Contracts 249. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 422, 424, 427–428, 456, 465–466, 484.] 2. An agreement by contracting parties to discharge all remaining duties of performance and terminate the contract. — Also spelled rescision; recission. — Also termed (in sense 2) agreement of rescission; mutual rescission; abandonment. Cf. REJECTION(2); REPUDIATION (2); REVOCATION(1). [Cases: Contracts 252. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 428, 462.] — rescissory (ri-sis-<<schwa>>-ree or ri-siz-), adj.

“The [UCC] takes cognizance of the fact that the term ‘rescission’ is often used by lawyers, courts and businessmen in many different senses; for example, termination of a contract by virtue of an option to terminate in the agreement, cancellation for breach and avoidance on the grounds of infancy or fraud. In the interests of clarity of thought — as the consequences of each of these forms of discharge may vary — the Commercial Code carefully distinguishes three circumstances. ‘Rescission’ is utilized as a term of art to refer to a mutual agreement to discharge contractual duties. 'Termination' refers to the discharge of duties by the exercise of a power granted by the agreement. 'Cancellation' refers to the putting an end to the contract by reason of a breach by the other party. Section 2-720, however, takes into account that the parties do not necessarily use these terms in this way." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21-2, at 864-65 (3d ed. 1987).

equitable rescission. Rescission that is decreed by a court of equity. [Cases: Cancellation of Instruments 1. C.J.S. Cancellation of Instruments; Rescission §§ 2-7.]

legal rescission. 1. Rescission that is effected by the agreement of the parties. [Cases: Contracts 251.] 2. Rescission that is decreed by a court of law, as opposed to a court of equity.

"The modern tendency is to treat rescission as equitable, but rescission was often available at law. If plaintiff had paid money, or had delivered goods, he could rescind by tendering whatever he had received from defendant and suing at law to recover his money or replevy his goods. But if he had delivered a promissory note or securities, or conveyed real estate, rescission required the court to cancel the instruments or compel defendant to reconvey. This relief was available only in equity. Many modern courts ignore the distinction .... But versions of the distinction are codified in some states." Douglas Laycock, Modern American Remedies 627-28 (3d ed. 2002).

RESCUE DOCTRINE

rescue doctrine.Torts. The principle that a tortfeasor who negligently endangered a person is liable for injuries to someone who reasonably attempted to rescue the person in danger. • The rationale for this doctrine is that an attempted rescue of someone in danger is always foreseeable. Thus, if the tortfeasor is negligent toward the rescuee, the tortfeasor is also negligent toward the rescuer. — Also termed danger-invites-rescue doctrine. Cf. EMERGENCY DOCTRINE; GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence 510(3). C.J.S. Negligence §§ 240, 317.]

“Danger invites rescue. The cry of distress is the summons to relief. The law does not ignore these reactions of the mind in tracing conduct to its consequences. It recognizes them as normal. It places their effects within the range of the natural and probable. The wrong that imperils life is a wrong to the imperiled victim; it is a wrong also to his rescuer .... The railroad company whose train approaches without signal is a wrongdoer toward the traveler surprised between the rails, but a wrongdoer also to the bystander who drags him from the path .... The emergency begets the man.

The wrongdoer may not have foreseen the coming of a deliverer. He is accountable as if he had.”

One parent may overtly or subtly act increasingly dependent on the child, leading the child to believe that he or she is responsible for the parent's comfort, happiness, and protection. The child may also believe that one parent is actively harming the other and attempt to protect the “weaker” parent by choosing to stay with that parent, even if the child would actually prefer to live with the “stronger” parent. [Cases: Criminal Law 363–368; Evidence 118–128. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 454, 831, 867–876; Evidence §§ 342–363.]

“The Latin expression ‘res gestae’ or ‘res gesta,’ literally ‘things done’ or ‘thing transacted,’ has long served as a catchword .... [T]he phrase has frequently served both to let in utterances which in strictness were not admissible and to exclude utterances which might well have been admitted. And frequently also its indefiniteness has served as a basis for rulings where it was easier for the judge to invoke this imposing catchword than to think through the real question involved. The phrase is antiquated. By modern judges it is being gradually discarded. It is superfluous, and serves only to obscure the logic of the rules. It should be left to oblivion.” John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 279 (1935).

“The res gestae embraces not only the actual facts of the transaction and the circumstances surrounding it, but the matters immediately antecedent to and having a direct causal connection with it, as well as acts immediately following it and so closely connected with it as to form in reality a part of the occurrence.” State v. Fouquette, 221 P.2d 404, 416–17 (Nev. 1950).

RES IPSA LOQUITUR

res ipsa loquitur (rays ip-s<<schwa>> loh-kw<<schwa>>-t<<schwa>>r). [Latin “the thing speaks for itself”] Torts. The doctrine providing that, in some circumstances, the mere fact of an accident's occurrence raises an inference of negligence so as to establish a prima facie case. — Often shortened to res ipsa. [Cases: Negligence 1610. C.J.S. Negligence §§ 744–748, 754–756.]

“The phrase ‘res ipsa loquitur’ is a symbol for the rule that the fact of the occurrence of an injury, taken with the surrounding circumstances, may permit an inference or raise a presumption of negligence, or make out a plaintiff's prima facie case, and present a question of fact for defendant to meet with an explanation. It is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant on the accident are of such a nature as to justify a jury, in light of common sense and past experience, in inferring that the accident was probably the result of the defendant's negligence, in the absence of explanation or other evidence which the jury believes." Stuart M. Speiser, The Negligence Case: Res Ipsa Loquitur § 1:2, at 5–6 (1972).

"It is said that res ipsa loquitur does not apply if the cause of the harm is known. This is a dark saying. The application of the principle nearly always presupposes that some part of the causal process is known, but what is lacking is evidence of its connection with the defendant's act or omission. When the fact of control is used to justify the inference that defendant's negligence was responsible it must of course be shown that the thing in his control in fact caused the harm. In a sense, therefore, the cause of the harm must be known before the maxim can apply." H.L.A. Hart & Tony Honoré, Causation in the Law 419–20 (2d ed. 1985).

"Res ipsa loquitur is an appropriate form of circumstantial evidence enabling the plaintiff in particular cases to establish the defendant's likely negligence. Hence the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, properly applied, does not entail any covert form of strict liability.... The doctrine implies that the court does not know, and cannot find out, what actually happened in the individual case. Instead, the finding of likely negligence is derived from knowledge of the causes of the type or category of accidents involved." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 17 cmt. a (Tentative Draft No. 1, 2001).

RES IPSA LOQUITUR TEST

res ipsa loquitur test (rays ip-s<<schwa>> loh-kw<<schwa>>-t<<schwa>>r). But some jurisdictions allow an arrestee to use nondeadly force to prevent the arrest. See Model Penal Code § 3. [Cases: Obstructing Justice 3. C.J.S. Obstructing Justice or Governmental Administration §§ 18–29.]

An affirmative defense barring the same parties from litigating a second lawsuit on the same claim, or any other claim arising from the same transaction or series of transactions and that could have been — but was not — raised in the first suit. • The three essential elements are (1) an earlier decision on the issue, (2) a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the involvement of the same parties, or parties in privity with the original parties. Restatement (Second) of Judgments §§ 17, 24 (1982). — Also termed res adjudicata; claim preclusion; doctrine of res judicata. Cf. COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. [Cases: Judgment 540, 584, 948(1). C.J.S. Judgments §§ 697–700, 702–703, 752, 930–931, 933.]

“ ‘Res judicata’ has been used in this section as a general term referring to all of the ways in which one judgment will have a binding effect on another. That usage is and doubtless will continue to be common, but it lumps under a single name two quite different effects of judgments. The first is the effect of foreclosing any litigation of matters that never have been litigated, because of the determination that they should have been advanced in an earlier suit. The second is the effect of foreclosing relitigation of matters that have once been litigated and decided. The first of these, preclusion of matters that were never litigated, has gone under the name, ‘true res judicata,’ or the names, ‘merger’ and ‘bar.’ The second doctrine, preclusion of matters that have once been decided, has usually been called ‘collateral estoppel.’ Professor Allan Vestal has long argued for the use of the names ‘claim preclusion’ and ‘issue preclusion’ for these two doctrines [Vestal, Rationale of Preclusion, 9 St. Louis U. L.J. 29 (1964)], and this usage is increasingly employed by the courts as it is by Restatement Second of Judgments.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 100A, at 722–23 (5th ed. 1994).

“Most courts have made little or no effort to explain the result, and have taken refuge in rather empty phrases, such as ‘he who does a thing through another does it himself,’ or the endlessly repeated formula of ‘respondeat superior,’ which in itself means nothing more than ‘look to the man higher up.’ ” W. responsa prudentium (ri-spon-s*<<schwa>>* proo-den-shee-*<<schwa>>*m). [Latin “the answers of the learned”] Roman law. The opinions and judgments of eminent lawyers or jurists on questions of law addressed to them. • The responsa prudentium originally constituted part of the early Roman civil law. Roman citizens seeking legal advice, as well as magistrates and judges, often referred legal questions to leading jurists so as to obtain their opinions (responsa). The responsa of some leading jurists were collected, much in the manner of caselaw digests, and many of them passed into Justinian's Digest. The phrase responsa prudentium gradually migrated to the common law, but today it is of primarily historical use. — Also spelled responsa prudentum.

“[T]he judex, or as we would now call him, the referee, might have no technical knowledge of law whatever. Under such conditions the unlearned judicial magistrates naturally looked for light and leading to the jurisconsults who instructed them through their responsa prudentium, the technical name given to their opinions as experts, which were promptly recorded on tablets by their students or disciples.” Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 90–91 (1908).

549–554.] 3.Criminal law. Guilt. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) criminal responsibility. — responsible,adj.

“[As for] the ambiguities of the word ‘responsibility,’ ... it is, I think, still important to distinguish two of the very different things this difficult word may mean. To say that someone is legally responsible for something often means only that under legal rules he is liable to be made either to suffer or to pay compensation in certain eventualities. The expression ‘he’ll pay for it’ covers both these things. In this the primary sense of the word, though a man is normally only responsible for his own actions or the harm he has done, he may be also responsible for the actions of other persons if legal rules so provide. Indeed in this sense a baby in arms or a totally insane person might be legally responsible — again, if the rules so provide; for the word simply means liable to be made to account or pay and we might call this sense of the word ‘legal accountability’. But the new idea — the programme of eliminating responsibility — is not, as some have feared, meant to eliminate legal accountability: persons who break the law are not just to be left free. What is to be eliminated are enquiries as to whether a person who has done what the law forbids was responsible at the time he did it and responsible in this sense does not refer to the legal status of accountability. It means the capacity, so far as this is a matter of a man's mind or will, which normal people have to control their actions and conform to law. In this sense of responsibility a man's responsibility can be said to be ‘impaired’.” H.L.A. Hart, “Changing Conceptions of Responsibility,” in Punishment and Responsibility 186, 196–97 (1968).

“Responsibility means answerability or accountability. It is used in the criminal law in the sense of ‘criminal responsibility’ and hence means answerability to the criminal law.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law and Procedure: Cases and Materials 399 (5th ed. 1977).

RESTATEMENT

One of several influential treatises published by the American Law Institute describing the law in a given area and guiding its development. • The Restatements use a distinctive format of black-letter rules, official comments, illustrations, and reporter's notes. Although the Restatements are frequently cited in cases and commentary, a Restatement provision is not binding on a court unless it has been officially adopted as the law by that jurisdiction's highest court. Restatements have been published in the following areas of law: Agency, Conflict of Laws, Contracts, Foreign Relations Law of the United States, Judgments, Law Governing Lawyers, Property, Restitution, Security, Suretyship and Guaranty, Torts, Trusts, and Unfair Competition. — Also termed Restatement of the Law.

“We speak of the work which the organization should undertake as a restatement; its object should not only be to help make certain much that is now uncertain and to simplify unnecessary complexities, but also to promote those changes which will tend better to adapt the laws to the needs of life. The character of the restatement which we have in mind can be best described by saying that it should be at once analytical, critical and constructive.” Committee on the Establishment of a Permanent Organization for the Improvement of the Law (Elihu Root, chairman), Report Proposing the Establishment of an American Law Institute, 1 ALI Proc. 14 (1923).

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM

restitutio in integrum (res-t<<schwa>>-t[y]oo-shee-oh in in-t<<schwa>>-gr<< schwa>>m). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Restoration to the previous condition or the status quo. • In Roman law, a praetor could accomplish this by annulling a contract or transaction that was strictly legally valid but inequitable and by restoring the parties to their previous legal relationship. The phrase is still sometimes used in American law (esp. in Louisiana) when a court annuls a contract and orders restitution on equitable grounds.

RESTITUTION

restitution, n.1. A body of substantive law in which liability is based not on tort or contract but on the defendant's unjust enrichment. See UNJUST ENRICHMENT . 2. The set of remedies associated with that body of law, in which the measure of recovery is usu. based not on the plaintiff's loss, but on the defendant's gain. Cf. COMPENSATION; DAMAGES. 3. Return or restoration of some specific thing to its rightful owner or status. 4. Compensation for loss; esp., full or partial compensation paid by a criminal to a victim, not awarded in a civil trial for tort, but ordered as part of a criminal sentence or as a condition of probation. [Cases: Damages 1; Implied and Constructive Contracts 4; Infants 224; Sentencing and Punishment 1973, 2100–2217. C.J.S. Criminal Law §§ 19, 1459, 1462, 1465–1466, 1556, 1759–1786; Damages §§ 1–2, 4–6; Implied and Constructive Contracts§ 6.] — restitutionary, adj.

“The term ‘restitution’ appears in early decisions, but general recognition probably began with the publication of the Restatement of Restitution [in 1937]. The term is not wholly apt since it suggests restoration to the successful party of some benefit obtained from him. Usually this will be the case where relief is given, but by no means always. There are cases in which the successful party obtains restitution of something he did not have before, for example a benefit received by the defendant from a third person which justly should go to the plaintiff.” 1 George E. Palmer, The Law of Restitution § 1.1, at 4 (1978).

“ ‘Restitution’ is an ambiguous term, sometimes referring to the disgorging of something which has been taken and at times referring to compensation for injury done. Often, the result under either meaning of the term would be the same. If the plaintiff has been defrauded into paying $1,000 to the defendant, his loss and the defendant's gain coincide. Where they do not coincide, as where the plaintiff is out of pocket more than the defendant has gained and the defendant's conduct is tortious, the plaintiff will recover his loss in a quasi-contractual or equitable action for restitution. Unjust impoverishment as well as unjust enrichment is a ground for restitution. If the defendant is guilty of a non-tortious misrepresentation, the measure of recovery is not rigid but, as in other cases of restitution, such factors as relative fault, the agreed upon risks, and the fairness of alternative risk allocations not agreed upon and not attributable to the fault of either party need to be weighed.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-23, at 376 (3d ed. 1987).

A court order prohibiting family violence; esp., an order restricting a person from harassing, threatening, and sometimes merely contacting or approaching another specified person. • This type of order is issued most commonly in cases of domestic violence. A dismissal without prejudice does not operate as a retraxit. See judgment of retraxit under JUDGMENT.

RETREAT RULE

retreat rule.Criminal law. The doctrine holding that the victim of a murderous assault must choose a safe retreat instead of resorting to deadly force in self-defense, unless (1) the victim is at home or in his or her place of business (the so-called castle doctrine), or (2) the assailant is a person whom the victim is trying to arrest. • A minority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. NO-RETREAT RULE. [Cases: Homicide 798.]

“The rationale for the retreat rule is not difficult to ascertain, at least in part. It rests upon the view that human life, even the life of an aggressor, is sufficiently important that it should be preserved when to do so requires only the sacrifice of the much less important interest in standing one's ground.” George E. Dix, “Justification: Self-defense,” in 3 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 946, 948–49 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

retributivism (ri-trib-y<<schwa>>-t<<schwa>>-viz-<<schwa>>m). The legal theory by which criminal punishment is justified, as long as the offender is morally accountable, regardless of whether deterrence or other good consequences would result. • According to retributivism, a criminal is thought to have a debt to pay to society, which is paid by punishment. The punishment is also sometimes said to be society's act of paying back the criminal for the wrong done. Opponents of retributivism sometimes refer to it as “vindictive theory.” Cf. hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM; UTILITARIAN-DETERRENCE THEORY Y. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment 44.]

maximalist retributivism. The classical form of retributivism, espoused by scholars such as Immanuel Kant, under which it is argued that society has a duty, not just a right, to punish a criminal who is guilty and culpable, that is, someone who has no justification or excuse for the illegal act.

minimalist retributivism. The more contemporary form of retributivism, which maintains that no one should be punished in the absence of guilt and culpability (that is, unless punishment is deserved), and that a judge may absolve the offender from punishment, wholly or partially, when doing so would further societal goals such as rehabilitation or deterrence.

RETROACTIVE

retroactive, adj. (Of a statute, ruling, etc.) extending in scope or effect to matters that have occurred in the past. — Also termed retrospective. Cf. PROSPECTIVE(1). [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 419; Courts 100(1); Statutes 261–278. C.J.S. Courts §§ 147–148; Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 89, 98; Statutes §§ 407–431.] — retroactivity, n.

“ ‘Retroactivity’ is a term often used by lawyers but rarely defined. On analysis it soon becomes apparent, moreover, that it is used to cover at least two distinct concepts. The first, which may be called ‘true retroactivity,’ consists in the application of a new rule of law to an act or transaction which was completed before the rule was promulgated. The second concept, which will be referred to as ‘quasi-retroactivity,’ occurs when a new rule of law is applied to an act or transaction in the process of completion.... [T]he foundation of these concepts is the distinction between completed and pending transactions ....” T.C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law 129 (1981).

A legislative act that looks backward or contemplates the past, affecting acts or facts that existed before the act came into effect. • A retroactive law is not unconstitutional unless it (1) is in the nature of an ex post facto law or a bill of attainder, (2) impairs the obligation of contracts, (3) divests vested rights, or (4) is constitutionally forbidden. — Also termed retrospective law; retroactive statute; retrospective statute. [Cases: Constitutional Law 186–196; Statutes 261–278. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 390–404, 406–408, 421; Statutes §§ 407–431.]

The state is required, in most instances, to provide the parent or parents with services that will enable them to provide adequately for their child upon his or her return. ## RHODIAN LAW

Rhodian law (roh-dee-*<<schwa>>*n). As legend would have it, the earliest known system or code of maritime law, supposedly dating from 900 B.C. and adopted intact by the Romans. • Rhodian law was purportedly developed by the people of the island Rhodes, located in the Aegean Sea and now belonging to Greece. The ancient inhabitants of Rhodes are said to have controlled the seas because of their commercial prosperity and naval superiority. Despite the uncertainties about its history, Rhodian law has often been cited as a source of admiralty and maritime law.

“A strong tradition says that a maritime code was promulgated by the Island of Rhodes, in the Eastern Mediterranean, at the height of its power; the ridiculously early date of 900 B.C. has even been assigned to this suppositious code — a date accepted uncritically by some legal scholars. But even the existence of such a code has been pretty well cast in doubt, and we know next to nothing of its contents, if it existed. It is interesting to note, however, that the root-principle of the highly distinctive maritime-law system of general average ... is clearly stated in Justinian's Digest, and that the Rhodian Law is invoked as authority.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 1-2, at 3–4 (2d ed. 1975).

A power, privilege, or immunity secured to a person by law <the right to dispose of one's estate>.4. A legally enforceable claim that another will do or will not do a given act; a recognized and protected interest the violation of which is a wrong .5. (often pl.) The interest, claim, or ownership that one has in tangible or intangible property  <publishing rights>.6. The privilege of corporate shareholders to purchase newly issued securities in amounts proportionate to their holdings. 7. The negotiable certificate granting such a privilege to a corporate shareholder.

“Right is a correlative to duty; where there is no duty there can be no right. But the converse is not necessarily true. There may be duties without rights. In order for a duty to create a right, it must be a duty to act or forbear. Thus, among those duties which have rights corresponding to them do not come the duties, if such there be, which call for an inward state of mind, as distinguished from external acts or forbearances. It is only to acts and forbearances that others have a right. It may be our duty to love our neighbor, but he has no right to our love.” John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of the Law 8–9 (2d ed. 1921).

“[T]he word ‘right’ is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified.” American Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, 256 U.S. 350, 358, 41 S.Ct. 499, 500 (1921)(Holmes, J.).

“[In Hohfeldian terminology,] A is said to have a right that B shall do an act when, if B does not do the act, A can initiate legal proceedings that will result in coercing B. In such a situation B is said to have a duty to do the act. Right and duty are therefore correlatives, since in this sense there can never be a duty without a right.” E. Allen Farnsworth, Contracts § 3.4, at 114 n.3 (3d ed. 1999).

absolute right. 1. A right that belongs to every human being, such as the right of personal liberty; a natural right. 2. An unqualified right; specif., a right that cannot be denied or curtailed except under specific conditions <freedom of thought is an absolute right>. • For example, a plaintiff has an absolute right to voluntarily nonsuit a case before it is finally submitted; after final submission, the court has discretion to grant or deny a voluntary nonsuit. Cf. relative right.

accessory right.A supplementary right that has been added to the main right that is vested in the same owner. • For example, the right in a security is accessory to the right that is secured; a servitude is accessory to the ownership of the land for whose benefit the servitude exists. equitable right. A right cognizable within a court of equity. • If a legal right and an equitable right conflict, the legal right ordinarily prevails over and destroys the equitable right even if the legal right arose after the equitable right. With the merger of law and equity in federal and most state courts, the procedural differences between legal and equitable rights have been largely abolished. Cf. legal right. [Cases: Equity 3. C.J.S. Equity §§ 7, 11–16, 36–37.]

imperfect right. A right that is recognized by the law but is not enforceable. • Examples include time-barred claims and claims exceeding the local limits of a court's jurisdiction.

“[T]here are certain rights, sometimes called imperfect rights, which the law recognizes but will not enforce directly. Thus a statute-barred debt cannot be recovered in a court of law, but for certain purposes the existence of the debt has legal significance. If the debtor pays the money, he cannot later sue to recover it as money paid without consideration; and the imperfect right has the faculty of becoming perfect if the debtor makes an acknowledgment of the debt from which there can be inferred a promise to pay.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 286 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

real right. 1. Civil law. A right that is connected with a thing rather than a person. • Real rights include ownership, use, habitation, usufruct, predial servitude, pledge, and real mortgage.

“The term ‘real rights’ (jura in re) is an abstraction unknown to classical Roman law. The classical jurists were preoccupied with the availability of remedies rather than the existence of substantive rights, and did not have a generic term to include all ‘rights’ which civilian scholars of following generations classified as ‘real.’ The expression (‘real rights’) was first coined by medieval writers elaborating on the Digest in an effort to explain ancient procedural forms of action in terms of substantive rights.” A.N. Yiannopoulos, Real Rights in Louisiana and secondary right.A right prescribed by procedural law to enforce a substantive right, such as the right to damages for a breach of contract. • The enforcement of a secondary right is variously termed secondary enforcement, remedial enforcement, or sanctional enforcement. — Also termed remedial right; sanctioning right.

proceeding. — Also termed privilege against self-incrimination; right to remain silent. See SELF-INCRIMINATION N. [Cases: Criminal Law 393; Witnesses 297.C.J.S. Criminal Law § 645; Witnesses § 522.]

“The right against self-incrimination, protected by the Fifth Amendment, is central to the accusatorial system of criminal justice: together with the presumption of innocence, the right against self-incrimination ensures that the state must bear the burden of prosecution.... The right against self-incrimination is personal. It may be claimed only by the person who himself might be at risk for testifying. It may not be claimed on behalf of another ....” Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 481–82 (1992).

The right restricts state action under the Fourteenth Amendment. Interference is not permitted in the absence of a compelling state interest and is reviewed under a strict-scrutiny standard. Cf. unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY; CIVIL COMMOTION; ROUT; AFFRAY. [Cases: Riot 1. C.J.S. Riot; Insurrection §§ 2–10.] — riotous, adj. — riot, vb.

“A riot is defined as an unlawful assembly (i.e. an assembly come together in pursuance of an unlawful purpose), consisting of at least three persons, which has begun to create a breach of the peace. At Common Law it is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by a fine and imprisonment. But the statutory form of it, introduced by the Riot Act of 1714, is better known. By that statute, passed to deal with Jacobite disturbances, it was provided that the members of a riotous assembly of twelve or more persons which does not disperse within an hour after the reading by a magistrate of the proclamation contained in the Act, become guilty of felony, which, at the time of the passing of the Act, was a capital offence, and is, even now, punishable with imprisonment for life.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

“A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting together (a) in the commission of a crime by open force, or (b) in the execution of some enterprise, lawful or unlawful, in such a violent, turbulent and unauthorized manner as to create likelihood of public terror and alarm.... When they come together for this purpose they are guilty of unlawful assembly. When they start on their way to carry out their common design they are guilty of rout. In the actual execution of their design they are guilty of riot." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

ROMAN–DUTCH LAW

Roman–Dutch law.A system of law in Holland from the mid-15th century to the early 19th century, based on a mixture of Germanic customary law and Roman law as interpreted in medieval and Renaissance lawbooks. • This law forms the basis of modern South African law, the law of several other countries in southern Africa, and the law of Sri Lanka.

“The phrase ‘Roman–Dutch Law’ was invented by Simon van Leeuwen, who employed it as the sub-title of his work entitled Paratitla Juris Novissimi, published at Leyden in 1652. Subsequently his larger and better known treatise on the ‘Roman–Dutch Law’ was issued under that name in the year 1664.

“The system of law thus described is that which obtained in the province of Holland from the middle of the fifteenth to the early years of the nineteenth century. Its main principles were carried by the Dutch into their settlements in the East and West Indies; and when some of these, namely, the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, and part of Guiana, at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, passed under the dominion of the Crown of Great Britain, the old law was retained as the common law of the territories which now became British colonies. With the expansion of the British Empire in South Africa, the sphere of the Roman–Dutch Law has extended its boundaries, until the whole of the area comprised within the Union of South Africa ... has adopted this system as its common law. This is the more remarkable since in Holland itself and in the Dutch colonies of the present day the old law has been replaced by codes ....” R.W. Lee, An Introduction to Roman–Dutch Law 2 (4th ed. 1946).

ROMANESQUE LAW

ROMANIST

Romanist,n. One who is versed in or practices Roman law; a Roman-law specialist.

ROMAN LAW

Roman law.The legal system of the ancient Romans, forming the basis of the modern civil law; CIVIL LAW(1).

“The Roman law is the body of rules that governed the social relations of many peoples in Europe, Asia, and Africa for some period between the earliest prehistoric times and 1453 A.D. This date should perhaps be extended to 1900 A.D., or even to the present time, and we might include America in the territory concerned.... Yet the essential fact is that no present-day community ... consciously applies as binding upon its citizens the rules of Roman law in their unmodified form. That law is an historical fact. It would have only a tepid historical interest ... if it were not for the circumstance that, before it became a purely historical fact, it was worked into the foundation and framework of what is called the civil law ....” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 1 (1927).

“Roman law is not only the best-known, the most highly developed, and the most influential of all legal systems of the past; apart from English law, it is also the only one whose entire and unbroken history can be traced from early and primitive beginnings to a stage of elaborate perfection in the hands of skilled specialists.” Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 5 (1951).

ROME ACT

Rome Act. Copyright. A 1928 revision of the Berne Convention adding the moral rights of attribution and integrity to the minimum standards of protection that member nations must recognize, creating a compulsory license of recorded performances for radio broadcasting, and specifying that the term of protection for joint works must be measured from the death of the last surviving coauthor. — Also termed Rome Act of 1928; 1928 Rome Act.

ROME CONVENTION ON RELATED RIGHTS

See NEIGHBORING RIGHT .

ROOKER–FELDMAN DOCTRINE

Rooker–Feldman doctrine. The rule that a federal court cannot consider claims actually decided by a state court or claims inextricably intertwined with an earlier state-court judgment. Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 415–16, 44 S.Ct. 149, 150 (1923); District of Columbia Ct. of App. v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 476, 103 S.Ct. 1303, 1311 (1983). • This doctrine precludes “a party losing in state court ... from seeking what in substance would be appellate review of [a] state judgment in a United States district court, based on the losing party's claim that the state judgment itself violates the loser's federal rights.” Johnson v. De Grandy, 512 U.S. 997, 1005–06, 114 S.Ct. 2647, 2654 (1994).

rou (rowt), n. The offense that occurs when an unlawful assembly makes some move toward the accomplishment of its participants' common purpose. Cf. RIOT. [Cases: Riot 1. C.J.S. Riot; Insurrection §§ 2–10.]

“The word ‘rou’ comes from the same source as the word ‘route.’ It signifies that three or more who have gathered together in unlawful assembly are ‘on their way.’ It is not necessary for guilt of this offense that the design be actually carried out, nor that the journey be made in a tumultuous manner.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

ROUTINE-ACTIVITIES THEORY

routine-activities theory.The theory that criminal acts occur when (1) a person is motivated to commit the offense, (2) a vulnerable victim is available, and (3) there is insufficient protection to prevent the crime. Cf. CONTROL THEORY; RATIONAL-CHOICE THEORY; STRAIN THEORY.

ROYAL MARRIAGES ACT

Royal Marriages Act.A 1772 statute (12 Geo. 3, ch. 1) forbidding members of the royal family from marrying without the sovereign's permission, except on certain conditions.

“Royal Marriages Act .... An Act occasioned by George III's fear of the effect on the dignity and honour of the royal family of members thereof contracting unsuitable marriages, two of his brothers having done so .... It provided that marriages of descendants of George II, other than the issue of princesses who marry into foreign families, should not be valid unless they had the consent of the King in Council, or, if the parties were aged over 25, they had given 12 months' notice to the Privy Council, unless during that time both Houses of Parliament expressly declare disapproval of the proposed marriage.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1091 (1980).

royalty. 1. A payment made to an author or inventor for each copy of a work or article sold under a copyright or patent. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 48; Patents 217.1. C.J.S. Copyrights and Intellectual Property §§ 27, 29, 33–34, 93; Patents § 364.]

established royalty. A royalty set at an agreed-on price. • In the absence of an established royalty, a court will determine a remedy for infringement based on what a reasonable royalty would have been.

reasonable royalty. A royalty that a licensee would be willing to pay the holder of the thing's intellectual-property rights while still making a reasonable profit from its use. • The reasonable-royalty standard often serves as the measure of damages in a claim of patent, copyright, or trademark infringement, or for misappropriation of trade secrets. In deciding what royalty is reasonable in a trade-secrets suit, courts consider the unique circumstances of the case, as well as (1) how the use affected the parties' ability to compete; (2) the cost of past licenses; (3) the cost to develop the secret and its present value; (4) how the defendant intends to use the information; and (5) the availability of alternatives. [Cases: Patents 319(1). C.J.S. Patents §§ 565, 567–568.]

2. Oil & gas. A share of the product or profit from real property, reserved by the grantor of a mineral lease, in exchange for the lessee's right to mine or drill on the land. — Also termed (in sense 2) override. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 70, 79. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 218, 223–224, 289–290, 296, 298–299, 303.]

haulage royalty. A royalty paid to a landowner for moving coal via a subterranean passageway under the landowner's land from a mine located on an adjacent property. • The payment is calculated at a certain amount per ton of coal.

landowner's royalty. A share of production or revenues provided for the lessor in the royalty clause of the oil-and-gas lease and paid at the well free of any costs of production. • Traditionally, except in California, the landowner's royalty has been 1/8 of gross production for oil and 1/8 of the proceeds received from the sale of gas. But today the size is often negotiated. — Also termed leaseholder royalty.

mineral royalty. A right to a share of income from mineral production. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 70, 79. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 218, 223–224, 289–290, 296, 298–299, 303.]

nonparticipating royalty. A share of production — or of the revenue from production free its costs — carved out of the mineral interest. • A nonparticipating-royalty holder is entitled to the stated share of production or cash without regard to the terms of any lease. Nonparticipating royalties are often retained by mineral-interest owners who sell their rights.

overriding royalty. A share of either production or revenue from production (free of the costs of production) carved out of a lessee's interest under an oil-and-gas lease. • Overriding-royalty interests are often used to compensate those who have helped structure a drilling venture. An overriding-royalty interest ends when the underlying lease terminates. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 74. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals § 308.]

shut-in royalty. A payment made by an oil-and-gas lessee to the lessor to keep the lease in force when a well capable of producing is not utilized because there is no market for the oil or gas.

- Generally, without such a payment, the lease will terminate at the end of the primary term unless actual production has begun. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 78.1(3). C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 269–270.]

ROYALTY INTEREST

royalty interest.Oil & gas. A share of production — or the value or proceeds of production, free of the costs of production — when and if there is production. • A royalty interest is usu. expressed as a fraction (such as 1/6). A royalty-interest owner has no right to operate the property and therefore no right to lease the property or to share in bonuses or delay rentals. In some states a royalty owner has the right of ingress and egress to take the royalty production. Authorities are split over what costs are costs of production. Several different but related kinds of royalty interests are commonly encountered. See ROYALTY(2).

RULE AGAINST ACCUMULATIONS

rule against inalienability. The principle that property must not be made nontransferable. — Also termed rule against trusts of perpetual duration. Cf. RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES

rule against perpetuities. (sometimes cap.) Property. The common-law rule prohibiting a grant of an estate unless the interest must vest, if at all, no later than 21 years (plus a period of gestation to cover a posthumous birth) after the death of some person alive when the interest was created. • The purpose of the rule was to limit the time that title to property could be suspended out of commerce because there was no owner who had title to the property and who could sell it or exercise other aspects of ownership. If the terms of the contract or gift exceeded the time limits of the rule, the gift or transaction was void. See MEASURING LIFE. Cf. ACCUMULATIONS, RULE AGAINST. [Cases: Perpetuities 4. C.J.S. Perpetuities §§ 2, 12.]

“The true form of the Rule against Perpetuities is believed to be this: — NO INTEREST SUBJECT TO A CONDITION PRECEDENT IS GOOD, UNLESS THE CONDITION MUST BE FULFILLED, IF AT ALL, WITHIN TWENTY-ONE YEARS AFTER SOME LIFE IN BEING AT THE CREATION OF THE INTEREST.” John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 144 (1886).

“Another scholar who spent a substantial part of an academic lifetime attempting to bring order and add sense to the rule [against perpetuities], W. Barton Leach, described the rule as a ‘technicality-ridden legal nightmare’ and a ‘dangerous instrumentality in the hands of most members of the bar.’” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 178 (2d ed. 1984) (quoting Leach, Perpetuities Legislation, Massachusetts Style, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1349 (1954)).

“The Rule Against Perpetuities is a rule against remoteness of vesting. A contingent future interest is invalid under the orthodox rule if, at the time of the creation of the interest, the circumstances are such that the contingency may go unresolved for too long a time. The Rule is not concerned with the duration of interests, that is, the length of time that they endure. It is not a rule against suspension of the power of alienation, nor a rule against restraints on alienation. It is not a rule that directly limits the duration of trusts .... The orthodox rule is satisfied if all contingent future interests are so created that they must vest, if they vest at all, within the perpetuities period.” Robert J. Lynn, The Modern Rule Against Perpetuities 9 (1966).

“The common law Rule Against Perpetuities (modified by statute in some states) provides that no interest is valid unless it must vest within 21 years after lives in being when the interest was created. The rule is something of a misnomer. It does not limit the duration of a condition in a bequest, but rather limits the testator's power to earmark gifts for remote descendants.” Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 18.7, at 394 (2d ed. 1977).

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE

Rule in Shelley's Case. Property. The rule that if — in a single grant — a freehold estate is given to a person and a remainder is given to the person's heirs, the remainder belongs to the named person and not the heirs, so that the person is held to have a fee simple absolute. • The rule, which dates from the 14th century but draws its name from the famous 16th-century case, has been abolished in most states. Wolfe v. Shelley, 76 Eng. Rep. 206 (K.B. 1581). [Cases: Estates in Property 8. C.J.S. Estates § 7.]

“[T]he rule in Shelley's Case, the Don Quixote of the law, which, like the last knight errant of chivalry, has long survived every cause that gave it birth and now wanders aimlessly through the reports, still vigorous, but equally useless and dangerous.” Stamper v. Stamper, 28 S.E. 20, 22 (N.C. 1897).

RULE IN WILD'S CASE

Rule in Wild's Case. Property. The rule construing a grant to “A and A's children” as a fee tail if A's children do not exist at the effective date of the instrument, and as a joint tenancy if A's children do exist at the effective date. • The rule has been abolished along with the fee tail in most states.

RULEMAKING

ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATION; INFORMAL AGENCY ACTION. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 381–427. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 87–114.] — rulemaking, adj.

formal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking that, when required by statute or the agency's discretion, must be on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing, and must comply with certain procedures, such as allowing the submission of evidence and the cross-examination of witnesses. Cf. informal rulemaking. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 381–427. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 87–114.]

informal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking in which the agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comments on the regulation, after which the regulation can take effect without the necessity of a formal hearing on the record. • Informal rulemaking is the most common procedure followed by an agency in issuing its substantive rules. — Also termed notice-and-comment rulemaking. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD. Cf. formal rulemaking. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 381–427. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure §§ 87–114.]

RULE NISI

RULE OF CAPTURE

rule of capture. 1. The doctrine that if the donee of a general power of appointment manifests an intent to assume control of the property for all purposes and not just for the purpose of appointing it to someone, the donee captures the property and the property goes to the donee's estate. • One common way for the donee to show an intent to assume control for all purposes is to include provisions in his or her will blending the appointing property with the donee's own property. 2. Property. The principle that wild animals belong to the person who captures them, regardless of whether they were originally on another person's land. [Cases: Animals 2. C.J.S. Animals §§ 4–9.] 3. Water law. The principle that a surface landowner can extract and appropriate all the groundwater beneath the land by drilling or pumping, even if doing so drains away groundwaters to the point of drying up springs and wells from which other landowners benefit. • This doctrine has been widely abolished or limited by legislation. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses 101. C.J.S. Waters §§ 193, 195–197, 201–204.] 4. Oil & gas. A fundamental principle of oil-and-gas law holding that there is no liability for drainage of oil and gas from under the lands of another so long as there has been no trespass and all relevant statutes and regulations have been observed. — Also termed doctrine of capture; law of capture. Cf. AD COELUM DOCTRINE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 47. C.J.S. Mines and Minerals §§ 140, 142.]

rule of doubt. 1. Copyright. The doctrine that unreadable or incomprehensible identifying material deposited with the U.S. Copyright Office may not be protected under copyright law because it cannot be easily examined to determine whether it qualifies. • This rule usu. applies to computer object code. Unlike a certificate of registration, a filing under the rule of doubt is not prima facie evidence of a valid copyright. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 4. C.J.S. An equitable doctrine that requires a senior creditor, having two or more funds to satisfy its debt, to first dispose of the fund not available to a junior creditor. • It prevents the inequity that would result if the senior creditor could choose to satisfy its debt out of the only fund available to the junior creditor and thereby exclude the junior creditor from any satisfaction. — Also termed marshaling doctrine; rule of marshaling securities; rule of marshaling remedies. In many jurisdictions, the rule applies to conversations, to an opponent's admissions, to confessions, and to all other types of writings — even account books. But the Federal Rules of Evidence limit the rule to writings and recorded statements. Fed. R. Evid. 106. In most jurisdictions, including federal, the remainder is admissible unless its admission would be unfair or misleading. — Also termed rule of completeness; doctrine of completeness; doctrine of optional completeness; completeness doctrine; optional-completeness rule; optional-completeness doctrine. #### RULE OF ORDER rule of rank. A doctrine of statutory construction holding that a statute dealing with things or persons of an inferior rank cannot by any general words be extended to things or persons of a superior rank. • Blackstone gives the example of a statute dealing with deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion. According to Blackstone, this statute is held not to extend to bishops, even though they have spiritual promotion, because deans are the highest persons named, and bishops are of a higher order. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS .

RULE OF RANK

RULE OF REASON

rule of reason. Antitrust. The judicial doctrine holding that a trade practice violates the Sherman Act only if the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, based on economic factors. #### RULE OF RECOGNITION rule of recognition. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, a legal system's fundamental rule, by which all other rules are identified and understood. • In The Concept of Law (1961), Hart contends that a society's legal system is centered on rules. There are primary rules of obligation, which prescribe how a person should act in society, and secondary rules, by which the primary rules are created, identified, changed, and understood. A “rule of recognition” is a secondary rule, and serves to instruct citizens on when a pronouncement or societal principle constitutes a rule of obligation. Cf. RULES OF CHANGE; basic norm under NORM. — Sometimes shortened to recognition.

“This rule [the rule of recognition] may amount to no more than specifying a list of primary rules carved on a public monument. Or it may actually be a complete set of rules ....” Martin P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 44 (1975).

RULE OF 78

rule of 78.A method for computing the amount of interest that a borrower saves by paying off a loan early, when the interest payments are higher at the beginning of the loan period. • For example, to determine how much interest is saved by prepaying a 12-month loan after 6 months, divide the sum of the digits for the remaining six payments (21) by the sum of the digits for all twelve payments (78) and multiply that percentage by the total interest. — Also termed rule of the sum of the digits.

RULE OF THE FLOATING SUBTRAHEND

rule of the floating subtrahend.The common-law doctrine that a plaintiff whose damage was not caused entirely by the defendant must prove the amount of damage that is not attributable to the defendant (the subtrahend) or else recover nothing. • The reasoning behind the rule is that damage is an essential element of a tort claim, and the plaintiff has the burden of proof. If proved, the subtrahend is subtracted from the total damage to determine the plaintiff's recovery.

RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT

rule of the last antecedent.An interpretative principle by which a court determines that qualifying words or phrases modify the words or phrases immediately preceding them and not words or phrases more remote, unless the extension is necessary from the context or the spirit of the entire writing. • For example, an application of this rule might mean that, in the phrase Texas courts, New Mexico courts, and New York courts in the federal system, the words in the federal system might be held to modify only New York courts and not Texas courts or New Mexico courts. — Also termed doctrine of the last antecedent; doctrine of the last preceding antecedent. [Cases: Statutes 196. C.J.S. Statutes §§ 331, 333.]

“A distinction is sometimes made between rules and rulings. Whether or not a formal distinction is declared, in common usage ‘legal ruling’ (or simply ‘ruling’) is a term ordinarily used to signify the outcome of applying a legal test when that outcome is one of relatively narrow impact. The immediate effect is to decide an issue in a single case. This meaning contrasts, for example, with the usual meaning of 'legal rule' (or simply 'rule'). The term 'rule' ordinarily refers to a legal proposition of general application. A 'ruling' may have force as precedent, but ordinarily it has that force because the conclusion it expresses (for example, 'objection sustained') explicitly depends upon and implicitly reiterates a 'rule' — a legal proposition of more general application ...." Robert E. Keeton, Judging 67–68 (1990).

Thus sacrilegium and sacrilegus became rather general terms applied to the neglect or violation of imperial orders or enactments." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

Salic law (sal-ik orsay-lik). An influential early medieval Frankish code of law that originated with the Salian Franks and that deals with a variety of civil property and family issues but is primarily a penal code listing the punishments for various crimes. • Salic law is the principal compilation of the early Germanic laws known collectively as leges barbarorum (“laws of the barbarians”). Salic law also designated a rule barring females from the line of succession to the throne, as a result of which references to Salic law have sometimes referred only to the code provision excluding women from inheriting certain lands (which probably existed only because military duties were connected with the inheritance). In the late 19th century, Oliver Wendell Holmes revived scholarly interest in Salic law by referring to it throughout The Common Law (1881). — Also termed Salique law; law Salique (s<<schwa>>-leekorsal-ik); lex Salica (leks sal-<<schwa>>-k<<schwa>>).

(in sense 3) salvage award; reward. [Cases: Salvage 1. C.J.S. Salvage §§ 2, 4, 24.] — salvage, vb.

“Salvage is a reward payable either by the shipowner or by the owners of goods carried in the ship to persons who save the ship or cargo from shipwreck, capture or other loss. The right to salvage is an ancient rule of maritime law and is not based on contractual rights. The actual amount payable is, as a rule, assessed by the Court. Sometimes an express agreement, fixing an amount, is made before the assistance is rendered, but this is not a question of salvage in the strict sense, which always implies service by persons who are under no obligation to render it.” 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 98 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

“With reference to aid rendered to distressed property on navigable waters the word ‘salvage’ is often used indifferently to describe the salvage operation and the salvage operation and the salvage award — the latter being the compensation granted for the services rendered.” Martin J. Norris, The Law of Salvage § 2, at 2 (1958).

“A salvage award, or reward, is the compensation allowed to the volunteer whose services on navigable waters have aided distressed property in whole or in part. The award is not regarded merely as pay on the principle of quantum meruit or as remuneration pro opera et labore, but as a reward to persons participating and the owners of salving property, voluntarily rendering their services and to encourage others to similarly undertake the saving of life and property. That part of the award constituting more than quantum meruit has, on occasions, been referred to as a ‘bounty,’ ‘gratuity,’ and ‘bonus.’” Martin J. Norris, The Law of Salvage § 3, at 3–4 (1958).

The purpose of the sanction clause was to settle the relation between the new statute and former and future legislation. Thus the sanctio could also state that a previous statute remained fully or partially in force without being changed by the new one.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

criminal sanction.A sanction attached to a criminal conviction, such as a fine or restitution. — Also termed penal sanction.

“A criminal sanction ... is a legally authorized post-conviction deprivation suffered by a human being through governmental action. By using the words ‘post-conviction’ in that definition, criminal sanctions are thus limited to those imposed upon defendants in criminal proceedings who, by reason or in consequence of a judgment entered upon a verdict of guilty found by a jury, or judge sitting without a jury (the latter having been legally waived), or upon a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, stand convicted.” A Treatise on the Law of Crimes § 2.00, at 66 (Marian Quinn Barnes ed., 7th ed. 1967).

death-penalty sanction.Civil procedure. A court's order dismissing the suit or entering a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff because of extreme discovery abuses by a party or because of a party's action or inaction that shows an unwillingness to participate in the case. • Such a sanction is rarely ordered, and is usu. preceded by orders of lesser sanctions that have not been complied with or that have not remedied the problem. — Often shortened to death penalty. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1278; Pretrial Procedure 46. C.J.S. Discovery § 31.]

shame sanction.A criminal sanction designed to stigmatize or disgrace a convicted offender, and often to alert the public about the offender's conviction. • A shame sanction usu. publicly associates the offender with the crime that he or she committed. #### SANCTITY OF CONTRACT sanctity of contract.The principle that the parties to a contract, having duly entered into it, must honor their obligations under it. [Cases: Contracts 1. C.J.S. Contracts §§ 2–3, 9, 12.]

“[Sanctity of contract] is merely another facet of freedom of contract, but the two concepts cover, to some extent, different grounds. The sanctity of contractual obligations is merely an expression of the principle that once a contract is freely and voluntarily entered into, it should be held sacred, and should be enforced by the Courts if it is broken. No doubt this very sanctity was an outcome of freedom of contract, for the reason why contracts were held sacred was the fact that the parties entered into them of their own choice and volition, and settled the terms by mutual agreement.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 12 (3d ed. 1981).

SANCTUARY

sanctuary. 1. A safe place, esp. where legal process cannot be executed; asylum.

“Every consecrated church was a sanctuary. If a malefactor took refuge therein, he could not be extracted; but it was the duty of the four neighbouring vills to beset the holy place, prevent his escape and send for a coroner.... [A]fter he had enjoyed the right of asylum for forty days, he was to be starved into submission; but the clergy resented this interference with the peace of Holy Church.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the

“In medieval England, as elsewhere in Europe, there were a number of ecclesiastical places where the king's writ did not run. The underlying theory was that consecrated places should not be profaned by the use of force, but the result in practice was that thieves and murderers could take refuge and thereby gain immunity even against the operation of criminal justice. This was the privilege called ‘sanctuary.’ In the case of parochial churches, the sanctuary lasted for forty days only. Before the expiration of this period, the fugitive had to choose whether to stand trial or ‘abjure’ the realm .... This was only permitted if he made a written confession to the coroner, which resulted in the forfeiture of his property as on conviction; his life only was spared ....” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 585 (3d ed. 1990).

2. A holy area of a religious building; esp., the area in a church where the main altar is located.

[Cases: Appeal and Error 181; Criminal Law 1030(1); Federal Courts 611. C.J.S. Appeal and Error §§ 202, 207; Criminal Law §§ 1682, 1684.] 2. Corporations. #### SATISFACTION satisfaction,n.1. The giving of something with the intention, express or implied, that it is to extinguish some existing legal or moral obligation. • Satisfaction differs from performance because it is always something given as a substitute for or equivalent of something else, while performance is the identical thing promised to be done. — Also termed satisfaction of debt. [Cases: Accord and Satisfaction 1. C.J.S. Accord and Satisfaction §§ 2–17, 25–33.] 2. The fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the payment in full of a debt.

“Satisfaction closely resembles performance. Both depend upon presumed intention to carry out an obligation, but in satisfaction the thing done is something different from the thing agreed to be done, whereas in performance the identical act which the party contracted to do is considered to have been done. The cases on satisfaction are usually grouped under four heads, namely, (i) satisfaction of debts by legacies; (ii) satisfaction of legacies by legacies; (iii) satisfaction (or ademption) of legacies by portions; and (iv) satisfaction of portion-debts by legacies, or by portions. Strictly, however, only the first and last of these heads are really cases of satisfaction; for satisfaction presupposes an obligation, which, of course, does not exist in the case of a legacy in the will of a living person.” R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 226–27 (23d ed. 1947).

“Generally, a satisfaction of a judgment is the final act and end of a proceeding. Satisfaction implies or manifests an expression of finality as to all questions of liability and damages involved in the litigation. Once satisfaction occurs, further alteration or amendment of a final judgment generally is barred. Satisfaction of a judgment, when entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent, and operates as an extinguishment of the judgment debt.” 47 Am. “The thrift institutions, mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions, originally were created to meet needs for saving, credit and loans of people whose resources and income were modest. Commercial banks, merchants, money lenders, and pawn shops often did not serve this demand for loans or savings as well, or with interest rates as favorable to poor individuals, and families. During the last two centuries, thrift institutions were gradually developed, therefore, by social reformers, philanthropic benefactors, religious and fraternal organizations, trade unions, employers, and thrift entrepreneurs (in most countries of the world) as a collateral type of banking or financial intermediation.” William A. ### SCANDAL scandal. 1. Disgraceful, shameful, or degrading acts or conduct. 2. Defamatory reports or rumors; esp., slander. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

“Scandal consists in the allegation of anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or is contrary to decency or good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause, to which may be added that any unnecessary allegation, bearing cruelly upon the moral character of an individual, is also scandalous. The matter alleged, however, must be not only offensive, but also irrelevant to the cause, for however offensive it be, if it be pertinent and material to the cause the party has a right to plead it. It may often be necessary to charge false representations, fraud and immorality, and the pleading will not be open to the objection of scandal, if the facts justify the charge.” Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 50–51 (1916).

SCANDALOUS MATTER

“Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, which are called scandalum magnatum, are held to be still more heinous; and, though they be such as would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet when spoken in disgrace of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury: which is redressed by an action on the case founded on many ancient statutes; as well on behalf of the crown, to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the slanderer, as on behalf of the party, to recover damages for the injury sustained.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 123–24 (1768).

“It has been held that the civil courts are not concerned with mere schisms stemming from disputations over matters of religious doctrine, not only because such questions are essentially ecclesiastical rather than judicial, but also because of the separation between the church and the state .... However, it has also been held that the situation is different in the case of self-governing congressional churches, for here the courts do not hesitate to assume jurisdiction when a schism affects property rights, for in this form ... each local congregation is independent and autonomous and there is no recourse within the denomination.” 66 Am. Jur. 2d Religious Societies § 51, at 804 (1973).

A fee paid by a tenant-in-chief by knight-service in lieu of serving in a war. 3. A tax on a knight's estate to help furnish the army. — Also termed escuage.

“Scutage .... Shield-money, in mediaeval feudal law, a payment in lieu of military service, paid by a tenant-in-chief in respect of the service of knights which he owed to the Crown. His personal obligation to serve could not be discharged by scutage but only by fine. Payment of scutage, though known in France and Germany, was most highly developed in England where it became a general tax on knights' estates at rates which by the thirteenth century were standardized. King John demanded frequent and heavy scutages and Magna Carta forbade the levying of scutage without the consent of a general council. Scutage was divided between the King and the tenants-in-chief who gave personal service in the campaign. It became obsolete by the fourteenth century.” David M. #### SEAL seal,n.1. A fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained; esp., a device or substance that joins two things, usu. making the seam impervious. — Also termed common-law seal. 2. A piece of wax, a wafer, or some other substance affixed to the paper or other material on which a promise, release, or conveyance is written, together with a recital or expression of intention by which the promisor, releasor, or grantor manifests that a piece of wax, wafer, or other substance is a seal. • The purpose of a seal is to secure or prove authenticity. 3. A design embossed or stamped on paper to authenticate, confirm, or attest; an impression or sign that has legal consequence when applied to an instrument. [Cases: Seals 1.C.J.S. Seals §§ 2–3.]

“The use of the seal in England seems to have begun after the Norman Conquest, spreading from royalty and a few of the nobility to those of lesser rank. Originally a seal often consisted of wax bearing the imprint of an individualized signet ring, and in the seventeenth century Lord Coke said that wax without impression was not a seal. But in the United States the courts have not required either wax or impression. Impressions directly on the paper were recognized early and are still common for notarial and corporate seals, and gummed wafers have been widely used. In the absence of statute decisions have divided on the effectiveness of the written or printed word 'seal,' the printed initials 'L.S.' (locus sigilli, meaning place of the seal), a scrawl made with a pen (often called a 'scroll') and a recital of sealing. Most states in which the seal is still recognized now have statutes giving effect to one or more such devices." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 96 cmt. a (1979).

"The time-honoured form of seal was a blob of wax at the foot of the document, bearing an imprint of some kind, often a crest or motto. The use of wax was not, however, necessary for a seal, and any mark or impression on the paper was sufficient as long as it was made with the intention of affixing a seal. Recent English cases have been willing to find the necessary intention in circumstances where courts in the past would almost certainly have declined; so much so that it may now be the common law that a document purporting to be executed as a deed but lacking actual sealing will be regarded as sealed as long as it contains a printed or written indication of where the mark or impression constituting the seal should be placed if it were to be affixed." Peter Butt, Land Law 481–82 (2d ed. 1988).

SEALED CONTRACT

sealed contract.See contract under seal under CONTRACT.

sealed instrument.At common law and under some statutes, an instrument to which the bound party has affixed a personal seal, usu. recognized as providing indisputable evidence of the validity of the underlying obligations. • The common-law distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished by many states, and the UCC provides that the laws applicable to sealed instruments do not apply to contracts for the sale of goods or negotiable instruments. UCC § 2-203. See contract under seal under CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts 36; Seals 1. C.J.S. Contracts § 76; Seals §§ 2–3.]

“At common law, the seal served to render documents indisputable as to the terms of the underlying obligation, thereby dispensing with the necessity of witnesses; the sealed instrument was considered such reliable evidence that it actually became the contract itself — called a ‘specialty’ — the loss of which meant loss of all rights of the obligee against the obligor. The seal also had many other consequences at common law, some of which have been retained in jurisdictions which still recognize the seal .... In states where the seal is still recognized, its primary legal significance is often the application of a longer statute of limitations to actions on sealed instruments.” 69 Am. Jur. 2d Seals § 2, at 617–18 (1993).

“In medieval England a wax seal may have performed [the functions of a formality] tolerably well. But in the United States few people owned or used a seal and the ritual deteriorated to the point that wax was dispensed with and printing houses decorated the signature lines of their standard forms with the printed letters 'L.S.' for locus sigilli (place of the seal). Perfunctory invocation of the rules for sealed documents called into question the seal's utility in making promises enforceable." E. Allan Farnsworth, Changing Your Mind: The Law of Regretted Decisions 46 (1998).

SEAMAN

seaman. Maritime law. Under the Jones Act and the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, a person who is attached to a navigating vessel as an employee below the rank of officer and contributes to the function of the vessel or the accomplishment of its mission. • Seamen's injuries are covered under the Jones Act and the general maritime law. — Also termed crew member; mariner; member of a crew. See JONES ACT. Cf. STEVEDORE. [Cases: Seamen 2. C.J.S. Seamen §§ 2–3, 155.]

“The Jones Act plaintiff must be a ‘seaman’ who is injured (or killed) ‘in the course of his employment.’ The ‘course of ... employment’ requirement at least excluded passengers, guests, trespassers, pirates (unless of course the pirate was suing his own employer) and so on. Who else might be excluded (or included) was, as a matter of initial construction, impossible to say. After a half-century of litigation the answer to the riddle is not apparent. The Supreme Court has alternated between giving the term ‘seaman’ an exceedingly broad construction and giving it a much narrower one. Consequently defendants have been encouraged to argue, in all but the most obvious cases, that plaintiff is not a Jones Act seaman and that the action must be dismissed. Thus there has always been, there continues to be, and presumably there will go on being a substantial volume of depressing litigation of this type.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 6-21, at 328 (2d ed. 1975).

“The traditional seaman is a member of the crew of a merchant vessel .... However, vessels are not limited in their functions to the transportation of goods over water. The performance by a vessel of some other mission, such as operating as a cruise ship, necessitates the presence aboard ship of employees who do not ‘man, reef and steer’ the vessel .... Exploration for oil and gas on navigable waters has led to further expansion of the concept of a ‘seaman.’ In 1959, in the celebrated case of Offshore Oil Co. v. Robison, 266 F.2d 769 (5th Cir. 1959), the Fifth Circuit held that floating drilling structures are ‘vessels’ and that the amphibious oil workers aboard them are entitled to the seaman's remedies against their employers and the operators of the ‘vessels’ on which they are employed.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 178–80 (2d ed. 1988).

SEARCH

search, n. 1. Criminal procedure. An examination of a person's body, property, or other area that the person would reasonably be expected to consider as private, conducted by a law-enforcement officer for the purpose of finding evidence of a crime. • Because the Fourth Amendment prohibits unreasonable searches (as well as seizures), a search cannot ordinarily be conducted without probable cause. [Cases: Searches and Seizures 13. C.J.S. Searches and Seizures §§ 8, 13, 20, 23, 70, 72.]

“It must be recognized that whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has ‘seized’ that person. And it is nothing less than sheer torture of the English language to suggest that a careful exploration of the outer surfaces of a person's clothing all over his or her body in an attempt to find weapons is not a ‘search.’ ” Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 16, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 1877 (1968) (Warren, J.).

administrative search. A search of public or commercial premises carried out by a regulatory authority for the purpose of enforcing compliance with health, safety, or security regulations. • The probable cause required for an administrative search is less stringent than that required for a search incident to a criminal investigation. — Also termed regulatory search; inspection search. [Cases: Searches and Seizures 79. C.J.S. Searches and Seizures §§ 99–101, 189.]

border search. 1. A search conducted at the border of a country, esp. at a checkpoint, for the purpose of excluding illegal aliens and contraband. [Cases: Aliens 53.8; Customs Duties 126(1). C.J.S. Aliens §§ 70, 169–170; Customs Duties §§ 225, 228–229, 231.]

“[W]arrantless searches and seizures conducted at national boundaries are permitted under the general authority of the United States to ensure the integrity of its borders. As the Supreme Court stated in Carroll v. United States, such activity ensures ‘national self-protection reasonably requiring one entering the country to identify himself as entitled to come in, and his belongings as effects which may be lawfully brought in.’ [267 U.S. 132, 154, 45 S.Ct. 280, 285 (1925).] Thus, the right to remain silent and protect one's personal belongings from government intrusion, normally afforded constitutional protection, are surrendered at the border.” Charles H. Whitebread, Criminal Procedure § 12.02, at 227 (1980).

2. Loosely, a search conducted near the border of a country. • Generally, searches near the border are treated no differently from those conducted elsewhere in the country.

checkpoint search. 1. A search anywhere on a military installation. 2. A search in which police officers set up roadblocks and stop motorists to ascertain whether the drivers are intoxicated.

Chimel search. See protective search.

consent search. A search conducted after a person with the authority to do so voluntarily waives Fourth Amendment rights. • The government has the burden to show that the consent was given freely — not under duress. Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 548–49, 88 S.Ct. 1788, 1792 (1968). — Also termed consensual search. [Cases: Searches and Seizures 171–186. C.J.S. Searches and Seizures §§ 111–127.]

“The voluntariness of a consent to search is ‘to be determined from the totality of all the circumstances.’ [Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S.Ct. 2041 (1973).] Among the factors to be considered in determining the effectiveness of an alleged consent to search are whether the defendant (1) has minimal schooling or was of low intelligence; (2) was mentally ill or intoxicated; (3) was under arrest at the time the consent was given; (4) was overpowered by officers, handcuffed, or similarly subject to physical restriction; (5) has seized from him by the police the keys to the premises thereafter searched; (6) employed evasive conduct or attempted to mislead the police; (7) denied guilt or the presence of any incriminatory objects in his premises; (8) earlier gave a valid confession or otherwise cooperated, as by instigating the search, or at least the investigation leading to the search; (9) was hesitant in agreeing to the search; or (10) was refused his request to consult with counsel. The presence of some of these factors is not controlling, however, as each case must stand or fall on its own special facts.” Jerold H. Israel & Wayne R. LaFave, Criminal Procedure in a Nutshell 141–42 (5th ed. 1993).

constructive search. A subpoena of a corporation's records.

“[I]t is settled that the so-called ‘constructive search’ involved in an administrative subpoena of corporate books or records constitutes a ‘search’ or ‘seizure’ within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.” 68 Am. Jur. 2d Searches and Seizures § 44, at 674 (1993).

[Cases: Automobiles 349.5(12); Controlled Substances 117; Searches and Seizures 58. C.J.S. Motor Vehicles § 1334; Searches and Seizures § 77.]

no-knock search. A search of property by the police without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry. • A no-knock search warrant may be issued under limited circumstances, as when a prior announcement would probably lead to the destruction of the objects searched for, or would endanger the safety of the police or another person. [Cases: Controlled Substances 153.]

private search.A search conducted by a private person rather than by a law-enforcement officer. • Items found during a private search are generally admissible in evidence if the person conducting the search was not acting at the direction of a law-enforcement officer. [Cases: Searches and Seizures 33. C.J.S. Searches and Seizures §§ 23, 43.]

protective search.A search of a detained suspect and the area within the suspect's immediate control, conducted to protect the arresting officer's safety (as from a concealed weapon) and often to preserve evidence. • A protective search can be conducted without a warrant. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034 (1969). — Also termed search incident to arrest; Chimel search (sh<<schwa>>-mel). [Cases: Arrest 63, 63.5(8); Searches and Seizures 70. C.J.S. Arrest § 40; Searches and Seizures §§ 88–89.]

SECTION 8(F) AGREEMENT

section 8(f) agreement.Labor law. A labor contract that is negotiated between an employer in the construction business and a union that cannot demonstrate that it represents a majority of the employees at the time the contract is executed. 29 USCA § 158(f). • This is an exception to the general rule that an employer need only negotiate with a union that can demonstrate majority status. It was enacted in part because of the nature of the construction industry, in which the employers may have several different jobs in different parts of the country, the jobs are typically completed in a relatively short time, and the workforce is often transient. Since the workforce often does not have sufficient ties to a particular employer to petition for a certification election, section 8(f) agreements are directed toward providing a certain level of protection in recognition of that fact. But section 8(f) agreements are not equivalent to collective-bargaining agreements. For example, the employer can legally repudiate the agreement at any time, and the employees may not legally picket to enforce the agreement. The main protection such an agreement provides is a monetary obligation, which can be enforced, if necessary, in federal court. And if the union achieves majority status, the section 8(f) agreement will essentially become a fully enforceable collective-bargaining agreement.

security, n. 1. The state of being secure, esp. from danger or attack. 4. An instrument that evidences the holder's ownership rights in a firm (e.g., a stock), the holder's creditor relationship with a firm or government (e.g., a bond), or the holder's other rights (e.g., an option). • A security indicates an interest based on an investment in a common enterprise rather than direct participation in the enterprise. Under an important statutory definition, a security is any interest or instrument relating to finances, including a note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of these things. “Securities differ from most other commodities in which people deal. They have no intrinsic value in themselves — they represent rights in something else. The value of a bond, note or other promise to pay depends on the financial condition of the promisor. The value of a share of stock depends on the profitability or future prospects of the corporation or other entity which issued it; its market price depends on how much other people are willing to pay for it, based on their evaluation of those prospects.” David L. Ratner, Securities Regulation in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed.

“What do the following have in common: scotch whisky, self-improvement courses, cosmetics, earthworms, beavers, muskrats, rabbits, chinchillas, fishing boats, vacuum cleaners, cemetery lots, cattle embryos, master recording contracts, animal feeding programs, pooled litigation funds, and fruit trees? The answer is that they have all been held to be securities within the meaning of federal or state securities statutes. The vast range of such unconventional investments that have fallen within the ambit of the securities laws' coverage is due to the broad statutory definition of a ‘security’ ....” 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, Treatise on the Law of Securities Regulation § 1.5, at 28–29 (3d ed. 1995).

sedition,n.1. An agreement, communication, or other preliminary activity aimed at inciting treason or some lesser commotion against public authority. 2. Advocacy aimed at inciting or producing — and likely to incite or produce — imminent lawless action. • At common law, sedition included defaming a member of the royal family or the government. The difference between sedition and treason is that the former is committed by preliminary steps, while the latter entails some overt act for carrying out the plan. But of course, if the plan is merely for some small commotion, even accomplishing the plan does not amount to treason. Cf. TREASON. [Cases: Insurrection and Sedition 1. C.J.S. Riot; Insurrection § 29.] — seditious,adj.

“Sedition — This, perhaps the very vaguest of all offences known to the Criminal Law, is defined as the speaking or writing of words calculated to excite disaffection against the Constitution as by law established, to procure the alteration of it by other than lawful means, or to incite any person to commit a crime to the disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection, or to promote ill-feeling between different classes of the community. A charge of sedition is, historically, one of the chief means by which Government, especially at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, strove to put down hostile critics. It is evident that the vagueness of the charge is a danger to the liberty of the subject, especially if the Courts of Justice can be induced to take a view favourable to the Government.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

seduction. The offense that occurs when a man entices a woman of previously chaste character to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, or bribes, or other means not involving force. • Many states have abolished this offense for persons over the age of legal consent. Traditionally, the parent of a young woman had an action to recover damages for the loss of her services. But in measuring damages, the jury could consider not just the loss of services but also the distress and anxiety that the parent had suffered in being deprived of her comfort and companionship. Though seduction was not a crime at common law, many American states made it a statutory crime until the late 20th century. [Cases: Seduction 29–54.]

seisin (see-zin), n. 1. Hist. Completion of the ceremony of feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into freehold. 2. Possession of a freehold estate in land; ownership. 3. Louisiana law. The right that the law accords universal successors to own and possess a person's estate directly and immediately upon that person's death. La. Civ. Code arts. 935 et seq. — Also spelled seizin. — Also termed vesture; seisina; (in Scots law) sasine. [Cases: Property 10. C.J.S. Property §§ 27–31, 33.]

“Originally, seisin meant simply possession and the word was applicable to both land and chattels. Prior to the fourteenth century it was proper to speak of a man as being seised of land or seised of a horse. Gradually, seisin and possession became distinct concepts. A man could be said to be in possession of chattels, or of lands wherein he had an estate for years, but he could not be said to be seised of them. Seisin came finally to mean, in relation to land, possession under claim of a freehold estate therein. The tenant for years had possession but not seisin; seisin was in the reversioner who had the fee. And although the word ‘seisin’ appears in modern statutes with a fair degree of frequency, it is usually treated as synonymous with ownership.” Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 98–99 (2d ed. 1988).

“It is difficult to define seisin satisfactorily. It has nothing to do with ‘seizing,’ with its implication of violence. To medieval lawyers it suggested the very opposite: peace and quiet. A man who was put in seisin of land was ‘set’ there and continued to ‘sit’ there. Seisin thus denotes quiet possession of land, but quiet possession of a particular kind.... Although it seems impossible to frame a satisfactory definition ..., to call it ‘that feudal possession of land which only the owner of a freehold estate in freehold land could have’ is to express the most important elements.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 27–28 (6th ed. 1993).

SELECTIVE ENFORCEMENT

Cf. vindictive prosecution under PROSECUTION. [Cases: Constitutional Law 223, 250.1(3); Criminal Law 37.10. C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 723, 743–744; Criminal Law § 64.]

“The chief of police of a New England town once declared to the press that he believed in a strict curfew law, ‘selectively enforced.’ ‘Selective enforcement’ in this case means that the policeman decides for himself who ought to be sent home from the street; legislative candour would suggest that if this is the intention it ought to be expressed in the law itself, instead of being concealed behind words that are 'strict' and categorical." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 42 (1968).

“In actions of filiation, a pursuer was formerly entitled, on adducing a semiplena probatio, to her oath in supplement to prove that the defender was the father of her child. A semiplena probatio was such a proof as induced, not merely a suspicion, but a reasonable belief that the pursuer's case was well-founded, and consisted generally of a proof of opportunity for connection, acts of familiarity on the part of the defender towards the pursuer, &c ....” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 569 (4th ed. 1894).

“The risk of a deadlock is minimized by [the President's] consulting informally with the Senators from the State in which the office lies, if they are members of his own political party. Actually this amounts in most instances to his taking the advice of these two Senators as to a selection. A nomination approved by them is practically certain of final confirmation by the Senate as a whole. The arrangement is a ‘log-rolling’ one, which has been dignified by the name of ‘Senatorial courtesy.’ ‘If you will help me to get the appointments I want in my State, I will help you get the appointments you want in your State.’ ” Herbert W. Horwill, The Usages of the American Constitution 129 (1925).

“Senatus consulta. — In the regal and republican periods the Senate enjoyed no legislative power. It was an advisory body, nominated by the King, and at first purely patrician. Later it ...

included patricians and plebeians ... its chief duty still being to tender advice to the magistrates .... The theory still was, till the time of Hadrian, that senatus consulta were directions to the magistrates, who were now in fact, if not in name, bound to give effect to them, till by a process of gradual usurpation senatus consulta came to be direct legislation." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 12–13 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

" Digest of Justinian 14.6.1 (Ulpian, Ad Sabinum 49).

"In the principate of Vespasian, 69–79 A.D., a senatus consultum was passed which forbade loans to a filius-familias. It was called the senatus consultum — Macedonianum, after one Macedo, a usurer who had made such a loan and thereby instigated a hard-pressed debtor to kill his father in order to enter into his inheritance. To prevent tragic possibilities like these, the senatus consultum declared that no action would lie to recover money lent to a filius-familias." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 188–89 (1927).

The proceeding's administrator also takes other factors into account. For instance, in a patent-interference proceeding the invention's conception date and the inventor's diligence in reducing the invention to practice are relevant factors. Priority in the filing date is prima facie evidence that the senior party is the first inventor, so the challenger has the burden of proof. Cf. JUNIOR PARTY. [Cases: Patents 106(1). C.J.S. SEPARATION OF POWERS separation of powers. The division of governmental authority into three branches of government — legislative, executive, and judicial — each with specified duties on which neither of the other branches can encroach; the constitutional doctrine of checks and balances by which the people are protected against tyranny. Cf. DIVISION OF POWERS. [Cases: Constitutional Law 50–80(4). C.J.S. Constitutional Law §§ 54, 58–59, 111–227, 441.]

“[T]he doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the convention of 1787 not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was not to avoid friction, but, by means of the inevitable friction incident to the distribution of the governmental powers among three departments, to save the people from autocracy.” Justice Louis Brandeis (as quoted in Roscoe Pound, The Development of Constitutional Guarantees of Liberty 94 (1957)).

“Although in political theory much has been made of the vital importance of the separation of powers, it is extraordinarily difficult to define precisely each particular power. In an ideal state we might imagine a legislature which had supreme and exclusive power to lay down general rules for the future without reference to particular cases; courts whose sole function was to make binding orders to settle disputes between individuals which were brought before them by applying these rules to the facts which were found to exist; an administrative body which carried on the business of government by issuing particular orders or making decisions of policy within the narrow confines of rules of law that it could not change. The legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes the law.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 330 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

“Separation of powers means something quite different in the European context from what it has come to mean in the United States.... Separation of powers to an American evokes the familiar system of checks and balances among the three coordinate branches of government — legislative, executive, and judiciary — each with its independent constitutional basis. To a European, it is a more rigid doctrine and inseparable from the notion of legislative supremacy.” Mary Ann Glendon et al., Comparative Legal Traditions 67 (1994).

The right exercised by a dominant tenement over a servient tenement, either adjoining or neighboring. • This right was perpetual except for personal servitudes; the land, rather than its owner, enjoyed the right. Although a servitude could not be possessed because it was incorporeal, it could be protected by interdict. Generally, a servitude had to be exercised civiliter, with as little inconvenience as possible. “The navigation servitude, because of its link to navigable waters and the protection of navigation, is often confused with the public trust doctrine. Christie, Coastal and Ocean Management Law in a Nutshell 34 (1994).

2. An easement, based on the state police power or public-trust doctrine, that allows a state to regulate commerce on navigable water and provide limited compensation for interference with private ownership rights. • The state servitude is inferior to the federal servitude. Most rural servitudes were easements, but some were profits. — Also termed rustic servitude; praedium rusticum; jus rusticorum praediorum.

servitude appurtenant. Civil law. A servitude that is not merely an encumbrance of one piece of land but also accessory to another piece; the right of using one piece of land for the benefit of another, such as the right of support for a building. — Also termed real servitude; predial (or praedial) servitude; landed servitude. A servitude that primarily affects buildings or urban land. • With the exception of oneris ferendi, urban servitudes were passive. They could be affected by planning legislation. — Also termed (in sense 2) praedium urbanum; jus urbanorum praediorum.

SESS

SESSIO

sessio (sesh-ee-oh), n.[Latin “a sitting”] Hist. A session; a sitting, as in sessio parliamenti (“the sitting of Parliament”).

SESSION

session. 1.Parliamentary law. A meeting or series of related meetings throughout which a court, legislature, or other deliberative assembly conducts business in a continuing sequence <the court's spring session>. — Also termed (for a court) sitting. See TERM(5).

“Parliament have three modes of separation, to wit, by adjournment, by prorogation, or dissolution by the king, or by the efflux of the term for which they were elected. Prorogation or dissolution constitutes there what is called a session, provided some act has passed. In this case all matters depending before them are discontinued, and at their next meeting are to be taken up de novo, if taken up at all. Adjournment, which is by themselves, is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, or for a fortnight, a month, &c. ad libitum. All matters depending remain in statu quo, and when they meet again, be the term ever so distant, are resumed without any fresh commencement, at the point at which they were left. Their whole session is considered in law but as one day, and has relation to the first day thereof.” Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice 127–28 (1801) (citations omitted).

executive session.A meeting, usu. held in secret, that only the members and invited nonmembers may attend. • The term originated in the United States Senate, which until 1929 sat behind closed doors when it advised the President about executive business such as appointments and treaties. — Also termed closed session; secret session. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 124. C.J.S. Public Administrative Law and Procedure § 19.]

“Virtually all open meeting statutes expressly authorize the use of executive sessions, typically specifying the particular circumstances in which executive sessions are permitted. When the specific circumstances are specified, generally no other exceptions are permitted .... Use of the executive session to discuss matters not properly hidden from the public is a clear violation of the open meeting law. Many states expressly or implicitly forbid use of the executive session as a subterfuge to defeat the purposes of the open meeting law.” Ann Taylor Schwing, Open Meeting interchangeable meanings. An organization's annual convention may consist of several consecutive meetings that it calls "sessions," such as a morning session and an afternoon session, or a Friday session and a Saturday session, which are technically meetings rather than sessions. ## SETOFF setoff, n. 1. A defendant's counterdemand against the plaintiff, arising out of a transaction independent of the plaintiff's claim. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 772; Set-off and Counterclaim 8. C.J.S. Set-off and Counterclaim §§ 3, 6.] 2. A debtor's right to reduce the amount of a debt by any sum the creditor owes the debtor; the counterbalancing sum owed by the creditor. — Also written set-off. — Also termed (in civil law) compensation; stoppage. See COUNTERCLAIM; OFFSET. Cf. RECOUPMENT(3). [Cases: Banks and Banking 134; Set-off and Counterclaim 8. C.J.S. Banks and Banking §§ 301–305, 312–313, 316; Set-off and Counterclaim §§ 3, 6.] 3. The balancing of mutual liabilities with respect to a pledge relationship. — set off, vb.

“Set-off signifies the subtraction or taking away of one demand from another opposite or cross demand, so as to distinguish the smaller demand and reduce the greater by the amount of the less; or, if the opposite demands are equal, to extinguish both. It was also, formerly, sometimes called stoppage, because the amount to be set-off was stopped or deducted from the cross demand.” Thomas W. Waterman, A Treatise on the Law of Set-Off, Recoupment, and Counter Claim § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1872).

“Before considering the counter-claim, a brief reference to ‘the set-off’ as known in former practice is necessary. By the common law, the setting off of one demand against another in the same action was unknown. If A had a cause of action in debt against B, and B had another cause of action in debt in equal amount against A, each must bring his action. One could not be set off against the other. This was changed by statute in England in 1729, by a provision which, somewhat enlarged and modified, has been generally adopted in this country.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 250–51 (2d ed. 1899).

“Set-off is defined to be a counter-demand, generally of a liquidated debt growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff.” Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 65 n.42 (1916).

nuisance settlement. A settlement in which the defendant pays the plaintiff purely for economic reasons — as opposed to any notion of responsibility — because without the settlement the defendant would spend more money in legal fees and expenses caused by protracted litigation than in paying the settlement amount. • The money paid in such a settlement is often termed nuisance money.

Such a structured settlement may have advantages over a lump-sum cash payment. Deferred payments or arranged settlements may serve particular purposes that a cash settlement could not reach, and there will be instances when a structured settlement will be in lieu of an all-cash settlement that would not be acceptable to one party or the other.” Alba Conte, Attorney Fee Awards § 2.31, at 101 (1993).

Defense counsel, in unrestrained zeal for an acquittal, took advantage of this to the point that it often seemed as if it was the victim of the rape, rather than the perpetrator, who was on trial.... A typical ‘rape shield statute’ does not prevent the introduction of any relevant and otherwise admissible evidence, but requires that the relevancy of any evidence of the previous sexual conduct of the complaining witness must be determined in a pretrial hearing before the judge in camera.” Rollin M. shingle theory. Securities. The notion that a broker-dealer must be held to a high standard of conduct because by engaging in the securities business (“hanging out a shingle”), the broker-dealer implicitly represents to the world that the conduct of all its employees will be fair and meet professional norms. [Cases: Securities Regulation 27.21, 60.32(1). C.J.S. Securities Regulation §§ 76, 164, 195, 217.]

“[I]n judging the appropriate standard of care that attaches to a broker-dealer in recommending securities to his or her customers and in dealing with the customers' accounts, the Commission has relied upon the ‘shingle theory.’ The shingle theory is but an extension of the common law doctrine of ‘holding out.’ When brokers hold themselves out as experts either in investments in general or in the securities of a particular issuer, they will be held to a higher standard of care in making recommendations.” Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 10.6, at 423 (2d ed. 1994).

As a practical matter, however, the difficulty of proving the wrongful taking and the felonious intent requisites for a conviction under the general larceny statutes, together with the risk of retributory civil action against the shopkeeper consequent to acquittal of an accused shoplifter, have caused shoplifting to be established as a specific statutory crime in many jurisdictions.” 50 Am.
