Records of Early English Drama

The aim of Records of Early English Drama (REED) is to find, transcribe, and publish external evidence of dramatic, ceremonial, and minstrel activity in Great Britain before 1642. The executive editor would be grateful for comments on and corrections to the present volume and for having any relevant additional material drawn to her attention.

Acknowledgments

No sooner had I successfully defended my PhD dissertation at the University of Bristol than my tutor, Glynne Wickham, told me of an impending project to locate, transcribe, and publish all extant records of early English drama before 1642. It is a great personal honour and privilege, so many years later, to serve as research editor of the REED Bristol volume and to see it in print. I would be remiss not to acknowledge the city of Bristol itself, which has played such an important role in my adult life, and also Glynne and Hesel Wickham, who have been involved with my life directly and positively since I first arrived in Bristol in the autumn of 1972.

Although one person's name appears in this volume as the research editor, any project of this magnitude results from the collective work of many committed scholars, colleagues, and friends. The REED staff, past and present, really make these volumes happen; it would be difficult to describe to an outsider just how much collaborative work goes into the creation of a volume of such meticulous and detailed complexity. Over the past final months of the push to publication, I have been in touch by e-mail, fax, telephone, and postal service repeatedly and daily with Sally-Beth MacLean (executive editor), Arleane Ralph (current English palaeographer and compiler of the Patrons List and Index), Bill Rowcliffe (typesetter of this volume), Miriam Skey (bibliographer and copy-editor and the one who brought the Sarah Barker will to my attention), and Abigail Ann Young (palaeographer, Latinist, and legal specialist). Sally-Beth and Miriam have especially helped to keep me focused, on track, and have, in the darkest moments, lifted my spirits and helped me to move forward. Sally-Beth MacLean deserves a special word of praise for her un-relenting commitment to the task at hand and her succinct and superb advice for improving the volume.

Other REED staff who over the years have provided invaluable support and help include William Cooke (who compiled the English Glossary), Ted DeWelles (bibliographic research support), and Heather Phillips and Anne Quick (former palaeographical associates).

And I must include a very special word of acknowledgment to Alexandra Johnston who, as founder and director of REED, is the mother of the entire project.

Those who also helped in the creation of this volume include: Anne Bradley from the Bristol Record Office (regarding the Great White Book); Claire Breay at Lambeth Palace Library (document description help); William Edwards (Anglo-Norman palaeographical checking and translation); Catherine Emerson (Latin Translations and Glossary checking); Jodi Anne George (London manuscripts checking); Olga Horner (PRO legal records); Michael Heaney of the Bodleian Library (for transcriptions of the Leland manuscript); Sasha Lubetkin at the Bristol Architecture Centre (Bristol place-names); Tom Mayberry, archivist at the Somerset Record Office (document description checking); Timothy Mowl, architectural historian of Bristol (Bristol place-names); Monica Ory (London manuscripts checking); Margaret Richards at the Gloucester Library (help with the Hockaday Abstracts); and Subash Shanbhag (the cartographer who drew the maps).

Other scholars, some of whom sadly are deceased, who directly influenced and helped me to complete this project include Bob Alexander, Kathleen Barker, Jonathan Barry, Ralph Blasting, Harold F. Brooks, John Coldewey, Peter Couchman, Roma Gill, Peter Greenfield, Stan Kahrl, Cameron Louis, Alan Nelson, Barbara Palmer, Kate Pollard, Roger Price, Carole Rawcliffe, and John Wasson.

Robert Tittler, historian at Concordia University and member of the REED Executive Board, has proved invaluable in helping significantly to improve the scope and value of the Introductory essays in this volume, and to him I owe a great debt.

A special acknowledgement goes to Alan Somerset, who spent several days in the Bristol Record Office with me many years ago, camera in hand, to help me photograph the relevant sections of the Mayors' Audits, at a time when I did not have access to the library microfilm photographic equipment.

I also happily acknowledge the significant contribution of Margaret McGregor who is largely responsible for figuring out the detailed but complex dating method used in the Mayors' Audits and who provided valuable on-site advice and aid after my portion of the research phase had ended, in addition to her significant and important work on the Apprenticeship Indentures, an area of her special expertise.

Special attention should also be given to Patrick Carter, a Reformation historian and SSHRCC research fellow in the Department of History, McMaster University. Given Bristol's special status as second (or third) city in the realm, Patrick's specialized knowledge and his contribution of the historical chapter in the Introduction have proved vital to the publication of this volume.

The fact that we have used e-mail so consistently requires an acknowledgment to Eudora, the e-mail application which has permitted such rapid transportation of information and ideas between two universities in two countries, Canada and the United States, thus enabling us to communicate rapidly, effectively, and constantly.

The repositories and the persons in charge of them deserve recognition, too, for without their co-operation and enthusiasm a volume of this nature could never see the light of day. Early in the research period, Mary Williams, City Archivist and head of the Bristol Record Office, and her marvelously helpful and supportive staff including Judith Close, Anne Crawford, and Sheila Lang eased my job considerably. Through Mary Williams, I met Elizabeth Ralph, herself a former City Archivist before her 'retirement,' and it was Elizabeth Ralph who got me access to the vaults of St Mary Redcliffe parish church (where their records were then still held) and who obtained permission from the parish priest to remove the records to the BRO in the Council House where I could more easily transcribe and microfilm them. John Williams has since taken over the duties of the late Mary Williams and he has continued her supportive tradition.

I am very pleased to acknowledge formal permission from the following libraries and repositories to publish extracts from documents in their possession: the Trustees of the Berkeley Castle muniments, the Bristol Record Office, the Bristol Reference Library, the British Library, the Cardiff County Library, the Controller of Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the Governors of Dulwich College, the Gloucester Library, the Gloucester Record Office, the Hereford and Worcester Record Office, Lambeth Palace Library, the Somerset Record Office, and the Worcester Diocesan Registry. Thanks also to the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library in Toronto which provided the reproduction of the Braun and Hogenberg map of Bristol.

Institutions which have provided direct financial help to assist with the research and/or publication of this volume include the University of Notre Dame (Institute for Scholarship in the Liberal Arts), the University of Michigan (Horace H. Rackham School of Graduate Studies), the National Endowment for the Humanities (administered in the United States through the Ohio State University, the University of California at Berkeley, and Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg), the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, and the University of Toronto. I want to add a special note of thanks to the Reverend Edward Jackman, O.P., Historian of the Archdiocese of Toronto, and to the Jackman Foundation.

There are other special persons in Bristol, some of whom are sadly now deceased, who helped to make this volume possible through their love and support during the time my family and I spent there. They include Steve and Myn Burnaby-Davies, John and Alix Farrell, Arnold and Sybil Hare, Jenny Jillich, John and Lucie Keene, H.D.F. and Ann Kirto, Sue Sadler, Dick and Sally Sizeland, Olive Sollis, and David and Mary Solomons.

I also wish to acknowledge the affection, support, and endurance of my two sons, George and Luther, who spent summers in England when they were young while their father worked in repositories and who have grown up with this volume in process. I also happily acknowledge the unconditional love of their mother and my wife of twenty-two years, Lucy, in whose memory this volume is dedicated.

Historical Background

PATRICK CARTER

When the Tudor traveller and antiquary John Leland visited Bristol around 1545, he encountered physical evidence of the city's prosperity and power: 'The Castle and moste parte of the towne by northe stondithe apon a grownd metely eminent betwyxt the ryvers of Avon and Fraw, alias Frome. There rysethe an hill of an notable highte in respecte of the plote of the towne selfe from the Fromebridge on so goythe vp alonge onto seint Austins, alias the Trinitie the Cathedrall church and there endithe ... There be in sum partes of the towne doble waulles a token that the towne hathe bene augmentyd.¹ Some gates from the old inner walls of the town still existed. The centre of the city lay bounded on the south and east by the Avon and on the west by the Frome, with the cathedral and its green to the west and the castle lying to the east of the inner city. North from Bristol roads ran to Gloucester and south Wales, while the route to London went past the castle to the east. South of the Avon across a 'greate bridge of 4 stone arches'² lay the ancient parishes of St Thomas and Temple and farther south the suburb of Redcliffe, with its splendid parish church. Temple parish originally constituted a peculiar under the jurisdiction of the order of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem. From the southern suburb roads branched out to Wells and Bath.³

In the early sixteenth century the town's population stood at around 10,000, rising to 12,000 by the end of the century and reaching approximately 15,000 by 1640. Bristol's wealth and economic importance made it the chief provincial town of England after London during the later Middle Ages. By the 1520s it had ceded that title to Norwich, yet remained the third town of the realm in terms of both population and assessed wealth.⁴ In 1611 the historian John Speed paid Bristol the highest compliment when he declared that, in mercantile matters at least, the town was 'a second London.'⁵ This competition with London was one of the enduring themes of Bristol's history, whether over control of the wine trade or in dominance in Atlantic exploration. The assertion of Bristol's primacy among provincial towns and her parity with London is most clearly visible in the development of a mythological history of the town's origins. The remarkable Robert Ricart, late fifteenth-century town official and chronicler, related Bristol's ancient foundation by the Trojan Brennius who 'set it vpon a litell hill,' in like manner as his countryman Brutus had established her rival London. In borrowing from Geoffrey of Monmouth, Ricart inaugurated a tradition of urban historical writing which exercised a major influence over Bristol and its ruling corporation.⁶

Historians of late medieval and early modern English towns have relied upon evidence of

depopulation, contemporary complaints of the decline of trade, and the reluctance of men to accept civic office to develop a thesis of urban decline in the later fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The sorry tale of Coventry, brought low by changes in the cloth market, has provided the model for the English urban experience.⁷ Yet the fortunes of English towns varied enormously and the surviving jeremiads relating economic woes and begging tax relief from the Crown need to be analysed with care. Bristol offers ample evidence of such decline. In 1486 the citizens of Bristol presented the visiting Henry VII with pageants highlighting the town's recent decay and begging him to help restore their prosperity. Around 1530 Bristol's leaders asked to be relieved from paying prisage (the import duty on wine), and for permission to accept gifts of land the income from which could be used to pay the annual fee farm to the Crown (a burden from which many towns sought to escape). A decade later Bristol was among the three dozen towns named as depopulated and decayed in a parliamentary statute designed to give corporations powers to promote redevelopment and the removal of derelict buildings.⁸ Such evidence must be treated with caution, however, particularly in Bristol's case. While (as we shall see) trade levels did fluctuate, many of these petitions were actually part of a broader attempt on the part of corporations (including Bristol's) to increase their powers and escape royal fiscal burdens. Depopulation was often more indicative of reduced demographic pressures than of economic decline, while the celebrated rebuilding statutes may not always have reflected accurately the chronology of decay.⁹ In any case, the breadth of Bristol's commercial economy ensured that it did not share the miserable fate of its colleague Coventry.

The earliest extant charters granting privileges to the town of Bristol date from the late twelfth century and in 1373 Edward III recognized Bristol's growing economic and political importance by elevating the town to the status of a county, with a mayor, council, and sheriff independent of Gloucestershire.¹⁰ The next major legal change came in December 1499, when Henry VII confirmed the town's privileges. The royal charter of 1499 also introduced several innovations, adding a second sheriff to share the duties of the first and creating the office of chamberlain to oversee the corporation's finances. In addition, the 1499 charter called for the selection of six aldermen from the ranks of the council (one being the recorder) to assist the mayor in governing the town.¹¹ Henry VII's charter was confirmed by his Tudor successors in 1510 and 1547 and again in 1581 when the bench of aldermen doubled in strength to twelve.¹² Throughout the early modern era Bristol returned two members to parliament: the recorder (the corporation's counsel) was generally joined at Westminster by a prominent local merchant.¹³ The chief occasion in the civic calendar was the election of the mayor from among the aldermen on 15 September, followed by his installation a fortnight later at Michaelmas amid lavish pomp and ceremony.¹⁴ The centre of Bristol's government was the fourteenth-century Guildhall, partially replaced in 1551 by the Council House, or Tolsey, a monument to the growing power of the corporation and the prosperity of the mercantile elite which dominated the town's government.¹⁵

Even armed with its royal charters, the corporation needed to be ever vigilant in asserting its privileges in the face of challenges from other authorities. The strongest local threat emanated from St Augustine's Abbey; during the 1490s the corporation claimed that the abbot's rights to hold a manorial court and conduct a view of frankpledge violated Bristol's liberties. There was also concern with the abuse of sanctuary and resistance to town officers who attempted to apprehend fugitives. The dispute dragged on for five years (1491–6); in the end the intervention of Cardinal Morton and the lord chief justice secured only a partial resolution. Similar conflicts arose involving the Temple liberty and they also passed to arbitration.¹⁶ The corporation also vigorously resisted any attempt by external government authorities, particularly the Council in the Marches of Wales and the Court of Admiralty, to exercise jurisdiction over Bristol and its citizens. For example, in 1562 Bristol corporation procured a royal clarification that, since it formed a separate county (outside of Gloucestershire), the city's representatives were not required to heed summonses from the lord president to appear before the Council in the Marches at Ludlow. Likewise the corporation reacted swiftly in 1567 when Bristol citizens were summoned by the Court of Admiralty.¹⁷ There was a certain irony, however, since these efforts to preserve autonomy and protect civic liberties coincided with efforts from the 1560s onwards to restrict control over civic government in Bristol, as elsewhere, by allowing the mayor and aldermen to take more decisions without reference to the common council (particularly setting the agendas for full meetings).¹⁸

The corporation of Bristol administered a large number of properties within the town as well as across the surrounding countryside, acquired both by bequest and (particularly after 1540) by purchase. Other estates were held in trust by the corporation, with their revenue employed for the upkeep of highways and public buildings, for loans to young tradesmen, or for poor relief.¹⁹ Owing to the importance of trade and shipping to Bristol's economy, the corporation devoted considerable resources to the maintenance of quays and also worked to keep the Avon clear of wrecks which posed a danger to safe navigation. When Bristol's pride and prestige were at stake, as during the 1574 visit by Elizabeth I, the corporation spent lavishly both on the festivities themselves and on preparing the town for the queen's arrival, regilding the High Cross and four city gates and cleaning and levelling the streets (see p 86). Other obligations borne by the corporation were more onerous. As theirs was one of the chief ports for embarkation of soldiers and supplies both to Ireland and the Continent during the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, Bristol's mayor and aldermen struggled with unfavourable winds, escaping soldiers, and the incessant demands of the privy council for speedy action – all at a crippling cost to the city's coffers.²⁰

Another of the chief responsibilities of the corporation was the relief of the poor, who posed a potential threat to order and social stability. The city invested the funds which it received from bequests to aid the poor and provide charity. The relief furnished fell into two broad categories: direct provision of food and fuel, and the establishment of almshouses. For example, in 1532 Robert Thorne left £300 to purchase corn and wood to be sold to the poor at cost by the authorities during periods of high prices. The corporation regularly sold butter to the poor below cost, while in 1621 the excess revenue accruing from old endowments was employed to provide coal for the city's poor. Anxious on the grounds of both morality and security to avoid encouraging idleness through indiscriminate charity, the city set the poor to work at various projects: in 1557 the corporation purchased a supply of spades to be used by the poor in civic improvements; in 1606 a pinmaker received a loan to train poor children; and at last in 1623 a workhouse was established (next to the prison) where the unemployed poor worked making pins and nets.²¹ By the late sixteenth century poor relief was funded chiefly through rates assessed and collected by overseers in each parish. Private bequests remained important, however, as in 1613 when Nicholas Woolfe, the owner of the Wine Street playhouse, left money to both poor prisoners and the poor of his parish. Woolfe also left money to several almshouses, which were the main institutions caring for the poor of late medieval and early modern Bristol (see p 196). By 1600 they numbered nine, including one operated by the Society of Merchant Venturers for poor and aged seamen.²²

Economic History

Situated several miles inland from the Severn estuary at the confluence of the Avon and Frome rivers, Bristol was already an important settlement by the early eleventh century, its political and economic status reflected by the presence of a mint during the reigns of Aethelred Unraed (c 1014–16) and Cnut (1016–35). Trade with Ireland flourished, most famously the traffic in slaves only halted in the mid-eleventh century by the intervention of Bishop Wulfstan of Worcester.²³ The Norman Conquest brought temporary upheaval to Bristol; in 1067 her citizens successfully resisted an Anglo-Saxon force intent upon looting the town but Domesday Book (1086) testified to the town's prosperity as one of the wealthiest royal manors.²⁴ During the succeeding two centuries Bristol grew in economic importance. A prosperous cloth industry developed (albeit mainly for local consumption rather than export), while the town dominated the Irish trade. Bristol also became a distribution centre for foodstuffs and other commodities throughout the Severn valley, the Midlands, and the Welsh Marches.

The expansion of Bristol's port facilities during the 1240s reflected a steady growth in trade during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.²⁵ In addition to steady commerce with Ireland, Bristol's medieval prosperity derived mainly from its valuable wine trade with Gascony (a possession of the English Crown). Each autumn a fleet of Bristol vessels carried cloth (and occasionally coal, corn, and fish) to Bordeaux, returning laden with wine. A number of Gascon merchants resided in Bristol where they enjoyed special privileges, while Bordeaux was likewise home to a community of Bristol merchants and their agents.²⁶ Grain from Somerset and cloth from Ludlow and Coventry were purchased by English and Gascon merchants for shipment through the port of Bristol to Bordeaux, while merchants from Tewkesbury, Worcester, and elsewhere also made use of Bristol's facilities.²⁷ By the mid-fifteenth century some Bristol merchants began to seek opportunities further afield; in 1443, for example, a number were licensed to import saltfish from Iceland, while in 1457 Robert Sturmy of Bristol sought to open a direct English spice trade with the Levant but was ambushed and killed by the Genoese on his return voyage.²⁸ Owing to the importance of the Gascon wine trade, the English loss of Bordeaux in 1453 dealt Bristol's economy a serious blow. This reversal proved temporary, however, for by the 1480s a new wine trade with Spain had replaced that with Gascony and with the decline of the Italian trading interests at Southampton, Bristol was now firmly established as the chief provincial port of the realm. Even disasters like the loss of three large ships to Breton privateers in 1484, during the naval war which preceded Henry Tudor's victory over Richard III, inflicted little lasting damage to the town's mercantile economy. When Henry VII visited in 1486 and heard the complaints of Bristol's merchants, he encouraged them 'to setton And make newe shippes And to exercise ther marchaundise as they wer wonte for to doon' (see p 14).²⁹ They responded enthusiastically, for by the opening of the sixteenth century Bristol dominated overseas trade with Ireland and Spain, as well as coastal trade along the Severn estuary and south Wales. More significantly for the future, in May 1497 the Genoese captain John Cabot sailed in The Matthew from Bristol on his first voyage of discovery to the New World, inaugurating Bristol's close connection to colonial trade and exploration which would ensure the town's economic importance for centuries to come.³⁰

The prosperity of early modern Bristol depended in large measure upon overseas trade, particularly with Ireland, Spain, and France.³¹ Sweet wines, fruit, and oil came from the Iberian peninsula, especially the north coast of Spain and Andalusia. Wine and woad (for dyeing) came from Bordeaux, where Bristol's mercantile community continued to enjoy close contacts even after the military disaster of 1453. In exchange for wine and other commodities, Bristol ships brought grain, cloth, and leather to the Biscay ports. During the course of the sixteenth century Bristol steadily lost much of its cloth export trade to London but new imports ensured Bristol's continued prosperity.³² A major import trade in salt began from La Rochelle, for example, while an illegal but lucrative trade in foodstuffs and munitions was carried on with the western ports of France during the French Wars of Religion.³³ Bristol merchants continued to venture further afield as well, both by participating in the Baltic grain trade and by seeking a share of the Levant trade dominated by London interests. Thus in 1586 a Bristol ship laden with grain was seized en route from Danzig and taken to Flushing (Zeeland), while twice in 1597–8 the city corporation petitioned Lord Burghley requesting access to the luxury trade with the Levant in order to preserve the port's prosperity.³⁴ Meanwhile the steady trade with Ireland continued, particularly in malt and other grain, and formed the foundation of Bristol's trade. In 1601–2 the three chief destinations for Bristol cargoes were Cork, La Rochelle, and Bordeaux, reflecting both the importance of the Irish and Biscay trades, as well as the damaging effects of war upon Anglo-Spanish commerce.³⁵

The central events of economic life in early modern Bristol were its annual fairs, at which merchants from far and near gathered to arrange sales and settle accounts. As early as the thirteenth century the town boasted one of the six great English fairs; by the opening of the sixteenth century the fair ran for nine days from the feast of St James.³⁶ The mayor and aldermen often visited on St James' Day itself and a large number of merchants leased stalls. In 1529 a royal charter was granted for a second, winter fair to be held in the suburb of Redcliffe, south of the Avon. However, this Candlemas Fair, which began on 2 February, soon attracted the opposition of the Bristol corporation; the merchants and ship owners protested that it reduced the town's toll revenue since merchants did not cross the Avon into Bristol. By bypassing the centre of Bristol the new fair disrupted traditional trade and allegedly upset the rhythm of economic life by encouraging merchants to transact all their business in a few days (arguably the prime advantage of any fair).³⁷ After thirteen years the corporation scored a victory in defence of Bristol's economic interests by securing the end of the Redcliffe Candlemas Fair, which was replaced by a January fair held in Bristol itself for eight days from 25 January. Other fairs in Bristol included the Michaelmas Fair, started in 1221, and the St Lawrence Fair, 10–23 August.³⁸

The Bristol fairs were important events, attracting merchants and visitors from the neighbouring counties, as well as from London and even further afield. In July 1604, for example, a royal proclamation prohibited Londoners from attending the St James Fair in plague-ravaged Bristol, lest they carry the infection back with them to the capital.³⁹

The commercial life of early modern Bristol was dominated by the Society of Merchant Venturers of Bristol, incorporated by royal letters patent in December 1552.⁴⁰ During the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries control of overseas trade had rested with the town authorities, despite intermittent efforts (as in 1467 and 1500) to establish an independent body to administer trade and adjudicate commercial disputes. This the Society was designed to do, yet even a royal charter did not ensure the powers needed to fully enforce trade regulations, so in 1566 the merchant venturers sought to secure their privileges by obtaining confirmation of their 1552 charter from Elizabeth I. That same year the efforts of Bristol's members of parliament, both merchant venturers, procured an act of parliament to protect their monopoly of Bristol's foreign trade by excluding those involved in retail business (including mercers and grocers). The protection afforded by the 1566 statute proved fleeting, however, for the retail merchants waged a vigorous campaign and succeeded in repealing the statute in the succeeding parliament of 1571, amid much political controversy.⁴¹ The loss of the 1566 act left the Merchant Venturers crippled, unable to enforce many of their privileges and lacking effective sanctions against interlopers in overseas trade. Over the succeeding three decades the Society's influence remained at a low ebb; many of its members transferred their allegiance to the Spanish Company of London, established in 1577.⁴² This growing subordination to London mercantile interests eventually encouraged the revival of the dormant Merchant Venturers, culminating in an extraordinary meeting of the Society in May 1605. The Society's rebirth received the support of the common council and the Merchant Venturers soon took over the maintenance of Bristol's port facilities from the city authorities, in return for the revenue from keyage and other charges levied upon vessels in port.⁴³ The overlap between the members of the Society and the bench of aldermen and the common council increased steadily; by the 1630s the economic and political dominance of the Merchant Venturers was greater than ever. In particular the support of the city ensured the renewal of the Society's charter by Charles I in 1639 in the face of hostile royal commissioners and London merchants, in a further effort to preserve Bristol's vital trading interests against outside encroachment.⁴⁴

The principal objective of the Society of Merchant Venturers was to safeguard Bristol's overseas commerce (particularly against the powerful London companies) while preserving the monopoly enjoyed by the city's 'mere merchants' (ie, those not engaged in retail trade). At the same time the Society fulfilled a range of economic and charitable functions in Bristol. It maintained the quays and rented the cellars of its hall in King Street near the Broad Quay (the former chapel of St Clement – patron of navigation) to merchants for storage.⁴⁵ Although more cautious towards such schemes than some of its individual members, the Society played a minor role in encouraging exploration and colonization, notably in 1630 when it sponsored the voyage of Thomas James to find a northwest passage to the Orient, amid concerns that such a route might otherwise become a London monopoly.⁴⁶ The Merchant Venturers also supported both education and poor relief. As early as 1595 they were maintaining a free school for mariners' children and the Society also operated an almshouse for aged sailors and their families, supported by a levy upon mariners' wages and merchants' goods. Finally, the Society regularly dispensed charity to individuals in need, like the wife of an Algiers captive who received £1 in 1622–3 to help care for her sick children. The Society of Merchant Venturers, like many of the larger medieval merchant guilds, combined economic regulation and protection of vested commercial interests with a range of charitable activities, particularly in education and poor relief.⁴⁷

Bristol's major role in overseas trade (exemplified by the power of the Merchant Venturers) should not, however, obscure its importance as a regional economic centre. As it had during the later Middle Ages, the city continued to serve as an entrepôt for the west of England and for south Wales.⁴⁸ For example, grain from markets in Gloucestershire and Somerset passed through Bristol en route to Wales. During the 1540s the merchant Smyth shipped cloths from the north through Bristol to Spain and Gascony and imported iron and other commodities from Spain for distribution from Bristol throughout the surrounding area. This function as a centre for regional trade was reinforced by the strength of commercial farming around Bristol, with bacon and many other foodstuffs shipped through the city from neighbouring counties.⁴⁹ At the same time, nascent industries relied upon raw materials brought through Bristol's port, like the tin from Devon and Cornwall supplying local pewter manufacture. Industrial development was slow, although in the early seventeenth century a few merchants set up premises to refine sugar.⁵⁰ Bristol's importance as the hub of regional trade routes is reflected by the continued strength of import trades in a wide variety of goods (destined for distribution) at the same time as cloth exports began to decline. Even as Bristol's merchant community looked increasingly towards the Atlantic for its fortunes, the town retained close commercial ties to its hinterland and functioned as a trade centre for the west of England.

As well as their commercial contacts in other towns and overseas, Bristol's merchants enjoyed close ties to the surrounding counties and neighbouring gentry. As apprentices many had themselves originally come from Wiltshire, Gloucestershire, Somerset, or even further afield. In addition to supplying luxury goods and purchasing surplus agricultural produce, they provided needed capital to local landowners, reflecting Bristol's importance as a regional financial centre.⁵¹ Relations between gentry and merchants were strengthened when the latter in turn invested some of their accumulated wealth in land and secured for themselves grants of arms. Some, like the merchant and alderman Philip Mede, even forged marriage alliances with powerful local gentry families (like the Berkeleys). However, most continued to reside in Bristol, remaining urban gentry at least in the first generation.⁵²

Notwithstanding the ability of Bristol's governing elite to avoid outside interference in the selection of members of parliament, the presence of figures from the court at Westminster and from the London merchant community always remained a factor in Bristol, although such ties are better recorded for the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries than from earlier times. The constableness of Bristol Castle provided one distinctive entry point for such influence, especially as held by Sir Edward Seymour, eventually the duke of Somerset, from the 1520s to his death in 1552, and then by William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, from 1552 to 1568.⁵³ The recordership of the city, held by Thomas Cromwell in the 1530s and by a long line of prominent gentry thereafter, proved another such point of contact.⁵⁴ And when the wealthy London merchant taylor, Sir Thomas White (1492–1567), founder of St John's College, Oxford, and lord mayor of London in the first year of Mary Tudor's reign, came to design his famous rotating bequest to endow apprentices setting up businesses in twenty-four towns throughout the realm, he contracted with the mayor and corporation of Bristol to manage the scheme after his death.⁵⁵

But as the question of the constableness of the castle symbolizes, Bristol's political relations with the Crown and parliament remained somewhat contentious on a number of issues throughout this period. Both the exactions by customs farmers on Bristol wine imports and the monopolies on trade and manufactures granted especially by James I bore down with particular force on the city's merchants, provoking frequent protests from Bristol's members of parliament. And while Bristol may well have used its contact with successive constables to its advantage, it also resented that form of external influence. After a long campaign to wrest control over that office from the Crown, Bristol's ruling elite finally succeeded in James' reign.⁵⁶ And Bristol also gained valuable concessions in supporting the Merchant Venturers in a number of ways. Not surprisingly, many Bristolians were reluctant to abandon the king's cause during the Civil War.

Religious History

Religious observance in late medieval Bristol centred upon the town's eighteen parish churches and their many chantries. There were also at least eight chapels, including one on Bristol Bridge with a chaplain maintained by the corporation. All four orders of friars were represented within the town proper and Bristol boasted two other local foundations: St James' Priory (a cell of the Benedictines of Tewkesbury) and St Augustine's Abbey to the west of the town. The latter was founded in 1142, making it contemporary with the Temple Church (c 1145) and St Mary Redcliffe (recorded in 1158). St Peter's was even older, endowed in 1106.⁵⁷ Bristol was divided by the Avon between the diocese of Worcester to the north (fifteen parishes) and the diocese of Bath and Wells to the south (three parishes), a state of affairs which inevitably weakened the powers of outside ecclesiastical authorities in the town.

In line with London and other English towns, the parishes of early modern Bristol were largely funded by past endowments, a practice encouraged by the preaching of purgatory by local friars and made possible by the custom of burgage tenure, which enabled urban residents to alienate property by will, facilitating bequests to parishes. These 'dead' parishes (so-called as they were not dependent upon the offerings of the living) derived the bulk of their income from endowments of property: 75 per cent of total revenue at All Saints', and 95 per cent at St Ewen's in the early sixteenth century.⁵⁸ Yet this in no way implied that Bristol parishes themselves were moribund. While St Ewen's lost its south aisle to make way for expansion of the corporation's Tolsey, as recently as the 1470s St Stephen's had been entirely rebuilt, with the merchant and former mayor John Shipward alone paying for the new west tower and the great east window. As in building, so in worship Bristol parishes did not stagnate; witness the popularity of new devotions like the cult of the Holy Name, represented for example by the installation of a Jesus altar at All Saints'.⁵⁹ Parish officers including churchwardens were drawn from a wide section of the parish community, at least until the mid-sixteenth century. This broad participation in parish institutions began to be restricted from about 1560 onwards, however. With the growth of closed or select vestries which chose new members and churchwardens from among their number by cooption, the need to maintain social order and ensure efficient parish administration began to displace the more popular parish community of the late Middle Ages.⁶⁰

The wealth and piety of Bristol's merchants was reflected in the foundation of numerous chantries in town churches from the 1330s onwards.⁶¹ These chantries provided regular masses for the souls of the benefactor and his family and other nominees, to reduce the pains of purgatory. From the mid-fifteenth century the most popular arrangement was the 'service,' in which the founder vested income in trustees who paid a priest to sing masses. In addition, most chantry priests also participated in the ordinary round of parish worship, assisting the incumbent and enhancing the liturgy.⁶² Churchwardens and municipal officials were often charged by founders with ensuring that chantry priests fulfilled their duties and the mayor was ex officio patron of many chantries. In the twin chantries established by William Canynges at St Mary Redcliffe in 1446, the mayor (accompanied by the town clerk) joined the vicar and churchwardens in the annual audit of the foundation's accounts.⁶³ Like chantries, the numerous Bristol guilds (including the Kalendar Guild based at All Saints' and the Weavers' Guild of St Katherine) employed clergy who sang masses for the souls of departed members, whose names were inscribed on the guild's bead-roll.⁶⁴

The corporation of Bristol also played an important part in religious and liturgical life; the mayor and aldermen occupied places of honour in festival and guild processions, which were themselves both representative of the social order and symbolic of civic authority. Bristol's leaders regularly attended sermons delivered by the town's friars, like the Whitsun sermon at St Mary Redcliffe. As well, the corporation gradually obtained the advowsons of Bristol parishes and oversaw many chantry foundations. Religious ritual was closely interwoven with civic government in Bristol as in other early modern towns.⁶⁵

While Bristol's citizens participated enthusiastically in the riches of late medieval lay piety, the town also had a tradition of unorthodox belief and heresy. Fifteenth-century Bristol was infected with Lollardy, particularly among the town's weavers.⁶⁶ Commercial links with Coventry and the Forest of Dean (both hotbeds of Lollardy) facilitated the transmission of heresy, while the town's division between two dioceses made escape from ecclesiastical authorities easier. The influence of Bristol Lollards extended beyond the town itself. A number of Bristol natives were arrested elsewhere for heresy and the community supplied the largest contingent of armed men to Oldcastle's revolt (1414). Lollardy also enjoyed the support of some local clergy, who permitted preachers to denounce pilgrimages and images from the pulpits of Bristol churches; in 1448, for example, the authorities alleged that a Bristol chaplain had led many citizens into error. Efforts to root out heresy in Bristol enjoyed only partial success, for a Lollard community with close ties to Coventry survived into the early sixteenth century, offering fertile soil for the radical preachers of the 1530s.⁶⁷

The first seeds of the Reformation at Bristol were planted in March 1533 with the arrival of the reformer Hugh Latimer. Initially accorded a warm welcome by the authorities, Latimer was even invited by the mayor to return to preach at Easter. The reformer's first visit raised the ire of many Bristol clergy, however, who sought to prevent his return to the town. When their efforts failed, the conservatives adopted another strategy, importing notable preachers of their own to counteract Latimer's influence. These included the energetic William Hubbardine and the prestigious Edward Powell of Salisbury (a noted supporter of the cause of Katherine of Arragon). Thus throughout the spring of 1533 Bristol witnessed a battle of the pulpits between conservatives and reformers, familiar to the inhabitants of many Continental towns but unknown in England. Further controversy arose when the local Dominican prior John Hilsey, originally an opponent of Latimer, was converted to the cause of reform and sought himself to preach against Hubbardine. Having stirred up a religious controversy, the corporation sought to silence Hubbardine by means of a local commission of investigation. Despite efforts to stack the witnesses in Latimer's favour, however, the commissioners were critical of his behaviour; only the intervention of Thomas Cromwell ensured Hubbardine's imprisonment in the Tower and Latimer's exoneration. Cromwell was duly rewarded by the grateful mayor and aldermen with the recordership of Bristol. The Latimer-Hubbardine episode left Bristol polarized for some time; it is probably no accident that, as bishop of Worcester from 1535, Latimer refrained from visiting the town, fearful perhaps of upsetting a fragile religious peace.⁶⁸

Following their experiences in 1533, the town corporation grew less tolerant of religious radicals, fearful in particular of the potential threat to social order which they posed. Such concerns were justified in 1539 when the Scottish preacher George Wishart attracted popular support particularly among Bristol apprentices and journeymen. Several anonymous letters circulated attacking conservative civic officers and clergy but, wary of prompting public disorder, at first the corporation was reluctant to act. However, feeling their hand strengthened by the increasingly conservative religious attitude of church and Crown signalled by the Act of Six Articles, the civic authorities soon struck to silence Wishart. The Scottish reformer was summoned before Archbishop Cranmer in the summer of 1539; in July he performed public penance for heresy in two Bristol churches, before leaving the town for good.⁶⁹

Besides the stir created by preachers like Latimer and Wishart, the most significant impact of the Reformation upon Bristol itself was the creation of the diocese of Bristol and the town's consequent elevation to the status of city. As part of a royal scheme to erect a number of new bishoprics and reorganize the English church, the diocese of Gloucester (including the deanery of Bristol) was carved out of the ancient see of Worcester in September 1541. To their discomfort the citizens of Bristol now found themselves subject in ecclesiastical matters to their urban rival, which of course now enjoyed a status which they lacked. Determined to avoid inclusion in the new diocese of Gloucester and keen also to end the division of their town between two episcopal jurisdictions, the corporation of Bristol lobbied for a diocese of its own. These efforts soon bore fruit, for in June 1542 the see of Bristol was established, composed of the old deanery of Bristol, the three city parishes south of the Avon (formerly in Bath and Wells), and (rather illogically) the county of Dorset (now detached from Salisbury). The former abbey of St Augustine was appointed as the cathedral. The new diocese was poorly endowed, making it necessary to allow the first bishop, Paul Bush, to continue to hold his prebend at Salisbury in commendam with his bishopric. The city authorities rapidly came to dominate the cathedral and also the diocese itself; many of the prebendaries enjoyed close links with the urban elite. The creation of the diocese of Bristol in 1542 thus enhanced the power of the corporation while consolidating the city's ecclesiastical authorities and ending the city's division between several jurisdictions.⁷⁰

The dissolution of the religious houses and chantries in the 1530s and 1540s had a considerable impact on Bristol, in terms both financial and religious. Local chantry properties of considerable value were initially lost to the Crown. But by judicious planning and persistent attention to possibilities for other purchases, the corporation eventually succeeded in acquiring a number of important properties and managing them effectively thereafter. These included, in 1541, the Carmelite and Franciscan friaries and Gaunt's Hospital, including the manor of Hamp and other country estates;⁷¹ in 1544, the former property of the Hospitallers of St John known as Temple Fee;⁷² and in 1548, the Chapel on the Bridge along with the quit rents with which the Chapel had been endowed.⁷³ Taken together with the sale of some church plate and some loans, the city paid these purchases off in full by 1548. Along with the adoption of some very sound practices of management – especially steep and regular increases in entry fines on city property – and a continual expansion of trade, these resources helped place the city on a firm fiscal footing for some time to come.

In regard to the religious implications of this epoch, the most significant change came with the dissolution of the chantries in 1548, which followed by a few months the introduction of an English liturgy. As already noted, the chantries were an integral part of parish life and their loss seriously affected most parishes. These religious changes did not pass entirely unchallenged, however. The most popular and influential clerical opponent of Protestantism in Bristol was Roger Edgeworth, from 1525 prior of the elite lay and clerical Kalendar Guild, who attacked religious innovation while forcefully defending traditional doctrines like purgatory and the value of images to popular devotion in the face of the assaults of Latimer and his supporters.⁷⁴ Preaching in the late 1530s Edgeworth attempted to attribute Bristol's alleged economic decline to the spread of vernacular Scriptures: 'I haue knowen manye in this towne, that studienge diuinitie, hath kylled a marchaunt, and some of other occupations by theyr busy labours in the scriptures, hath shut vp the shoppe windowes. . . .'⁷⁵ Even as the traditional religion of Bristol was swept away during the 1540s, as a prebendary of the new cathedral from 1542 Edgeworth remained a vocal critic of the 'New Learning.' Nor did he hesitate to comment on political and economic matters in Bristol, as when he criticized the establishment of the Society of Merchant Venturers: 'I pray God it may do well, but I perceiue a certaine mundanitie in it, a worldlye couetous caste to bring the gaines that was indifferent & comon to al the marchants of this citie into the handes of a fewe persones.'⁷⁶

Ever since the Latimer-Hubbardine controversy of 1533, the civic authorities of Bristol sought to exercise some control over preaching within the city and prohibit unlicensed sermons. To this end, by the mid-1580s the corporation had established a stipendiary lectureship (soon increased to three), supported by levies upon the city parishes and initially held by canons of the cathedral. These efforts to promote preaching came at the expense of the parish clergy, however, since the corporation preferred to devote resources to its own nominees rather than the augmentation of impoverished urban livings.⁷⁷ On 16 March 1592/3 the corporation was castigated by the privy council for not doing enough to improve incumbents' stipends, although it paid £30 to each of three lecturers (raised to £40 by 1601). Of course it was necessary to pay handsomely in order to attract suitably learned divines; in 1605 the corporation wrote to St John's College, Oxford, offering £50 per annum to a suitable candidate. This search secured the services of Edward Chetwynd, later dean of Bristol from 1617 until his death in 1639.⁷⁸ By acting outside Bristol's parochial structures the corporation (like its counterparts in other English towns) sought to promote the preaching of sound doctrine while enhancing the control exercised by lay authorities over Bristol's religious life. Chetwynd, Bristol's first 'imported' lecturer, was soon joined by another Oxford divine, the Wiltshire clergyman Thomas Thompson, who remained at Bristol for almost five years before leaving for a similar post at Montgomery in Wales. As well as preaching twice a week in Bristol churches Thompson and his colleagues were also kept busy 'by sermons de tempore vpon solemne feasts, or by exercises extraordinarie vpon publike occasions. . . .'⁷⁹ The lecturers also provided private spiritual counsel to individuals. When he left Bristol Thompson spoke warmly of the support which he received from various prominent citizens and magistrates of Bristol; the Merchant Venturers also assisted with his removal costs to Wales.⁸⁰ The lecturers also enjoyed a measure of episcopal support. Bishop Wright (1623–32) successfully defended the corporation lectures as a 'godly show,' following the royal orders of 1629 intended to curb preaching.⁸¹

Even after the ecclesiastical settlement of 1559 many held the English church to be but 'half-reformed' and pressed for further changes to move England closer to the model of the Continental Protestant churches. Most of those (puritans) who subscribed to this view remained within the established church, which they hoped to see further reformed (particularly in matters of ceremony and later ecclesiastical order and discipline). The influence of this moderate puritanism was felt in Bristol as in other towns. Bristol merchants, for example, were among the crowds at Stourbridge Fair near Cambridge in the early seventeenth century who flocked to hear the puritan divine William Perkins preach against popular contempt for religion.⁸² The same message was delivered in Bristol by the corporation lecturer, Thomas Thompson, who preached regularly against drunkenness and other immorality. Thompson urged the city magistrates to punish drunkards and suppress their 'schooles, I meane the secret Tauerns, and blind Alehouses set vppe without License.' Attacking the popular festivities associated with disorder and drinking, Thompson also decried 'these wicked Lords of misrule reigning throughout all our Cities and townes.'⁸³ A central plank of this puritan reformation of manners concerned proper observance of the sabbath, one of the subjects of a treatise published in 1577 by John Northbrooke, curate of St Mary Redcliffe from 1568 and a leading Bristol clergyman of the 1570s.⁸⁴ The leading puritan cleric of early Stuart Bristol was William Yeamans, vicar of St Philip's from 1604 until his death in 1632. From his pulpit Yeamans regularly denounced popular practices of 'blind devotion,' including bowing at the name of Jesus, and 'ignorant or rather customary walking and profaning [of] ye Sabbath.' Following his death Yeamans' mantle of leadership fell upon Matthew Hazzard, made lecturer at St Mary Redcliffe and appointed vicar of St Ewen's by the corporation in 1639.⁸⁵

The puritan clergy of Bristol were supported and encouraged by a group of influential laymen and members of the city's ruling elite (as shown by Hazzard's appointment to St Ewen's). Godly merchants and their wives met regularly for prayer, fasting, and to hear sermons from 'ye best men, Repeating their notes to one another, whetting it on their hearts, and praying it over.⁸⁶ Without doubt the most remarkable member of the godly community in Bristol was the widow of the grocer Anthony Kelly, who as a public example stubbornly refused to close her husband's shop at Christmas in condemnation of holy days; when she remarried Mrs Kelly chose the young Mr Hazzard. Eventually in 1640 Mrs Hazzard and four of her godly friends resolved to 'separate,' refusing to attend public worship (although her husband continued to conform and employed the Book of Common Prayer at St Ewen's). The reformation of manners advocated by puritan preachers and their lay supporters did not meet with universal approval, of course, and incited some popular hostility ('puritan' itself originated as a term of abuse). In 1564 a Bristol schoolmaster had been suspended by the ecclesiastical authorities for defaming preachers; more seriously, an unruly crowd of sailors searching for puritans attacked one of Mrs Kelly's gatherings, claiming that it was 'a very strange and unheard of thing for People to meet in a Church with a Chimny in it.'⁸⁷ The dangers perceived by the authorities in conventicles and separatism were clearly demonstrated when the magistrates responded to the puritans' complaint by imprisoning some of the complainants themselves.

Relations between the bishops of Bristol and the city corporation were regularly marked by conflict and hostility, with each side viewing the powers and privileges of the other as a threat to its own. In 1568 a number of leading citizens and aldermen complained to the privy council about the doctrines preached by Bishop Richard Cheyney (1562–79), alleging that he upheld man's free will and impugned the reputations of Calvin and other reformers.⁸⁸ More often Bristol was simply neglected. Bishop Fletcher (1589–93) rarely visited his diocese and a ten-year vacancy in the see followed his translation to Worcester. After a period of freedom from direct episcopal oversight, the arrival of John Thornborough (1603–17) almost inevitably sparked renewed conflict. In October 1606 the common council decided to erect a gallery in the cathedral for the use of civic officials and their wives when hearing sermons; the dean and chapter acquiesced to their desire (even moving the pulpit to accommodate the corporation's wishes). Bishop Thornborough, however, declared angrily that the cathedral now resembled a playhouse and ordered the gallery's immediate removal. The corporation's (well-intentioned?) invitation to the bishop to sit in the gallery 'at [their] will and pleasure' merely added insult to injury, offending the bishop's ecclesiastical dignity.⁸⁹ In response to this episcopal rebuff, the mayor and aldermen boycotted cathedral services for some time, prompting Archbishop Abbot to enquire in his 1612 visitation why the town's leaders absented themselves from sermons. The primate sought to discover: 'Howe it commeth to passe that when as the maior and aldermen of this city weare wont (to the credit of this place) to resorte [to] your cathedrall church, and there to heare divine service, now they forbear the same, and whoe gave the cause of there forbearinge thereof, and whether there have byn any meanes made for the reconciliation of either corporation to the other againe.'⁹⁰ The corporation was again angered in 1620 when Bishop Searchfield (1619–22) appealed directly to the citizens of Bristol to remedy the poverty of city parishes and proposed a petition to parliament. The common council opposed the plan and resented episcopal interference in Bristol's business.⁹¹ Even as the corporation's concern to preserve its autonomy and privileges came into conflict with Stuart bishops increasingly conscious of their episcopal status, harmonious relations were not entirely extinguished. Bishop Coke (1632–6) was warmly welcomed to his new see and wrote enthusiastically of his initial reception: 'The clergy I find both able and painful, and the city loving and friendly.' Feted by the mayor and sheriffs (who made pointed comments about the behaviour of his predecessors, perhaps as a warning to their new bishop), Coke also preached in his cathedral, notably in the presence of the entire corporation.⁹²

The harmony which greeted Coke proved deceptive for the heightened political and religious tensions of the 1630s existed within the walls of Bristol as elsewhere. For example, the mayoral election of 1633 had pitted a member of the Merchant Venturers and a distant relation of Archbishop Laud against an opponent of the Society whose wife was a friend of the radical puritan Mrs Hazzard. Economic and religious divisions unquestionably were linked in some cases; the Bristol chronicler and draper William Adams complained equally forcefully about the excessive power of the Merchant Venturers in city affairs and about an alleged clerical monopoly in Bristol.⁹³

In a 1639 dream a Bristol widow foresaw a civil war and urged the king to grant liberty to puritans and take immediate action against papists.⁹⁴ Recognizing the economic benefits of peace and political stability (and the threat of religious division to both), the Bristol corporation pursued an even-handed policy on religion, appointing two noted antipuritan lecturers during the 1630s (Richard Standfast and Richard Towgood) while presenting the noted local puritan Matthew Hazzard to the corporation living of St Ewen's in the city. Hazzard did not hesitate to make his own views of events clear, as in September 1640 when, publicly praying for the king's victory over the Scots, he deliberately omitted the petition calling for punishment of the king's rebellious subjects. Hazzard's actions, although reported to the authorities, drew no punishment.⁹⁵ As political tensions reached the breaking-point in the winter of 1641–2 the civic leaders of Bristol doggedly pursued their efforts to avoid a complete breach between king and parliament. The common council drafted petitions to both sides, anxious like their colleagues in other towns to promote conciliation and avoid disaster. The corporation's optimism in seeking an accommodation continued even after the battle of Edgehill in October 1642, while perhaps more realistically hurried efforts were made at the same time to repair the city's defences.⁹⁶ The mayor and aldermen were mindful of the boast made to Charles' mother when she had visited Bristol in 1613: 'Bristoll a Citie of renowne hath neuer traitor beene/ To soueraigne Rule, or Regall Raigne ...' (see p 180).⁹⁷ It was a pledge which Bristol would struggle to uphold over the succeeding years of conflict and upheaval.

Drama, Music, and Ceremony

Local Drama and Public Ceremony before the Reformation

For centuries one of the kingdom's pre-eminent cities and undisputed cultural, intellectual, and economic capital of the West of England, Bristol has a long and distinguished history of local drama and public ceremony. Pre-Reformation special ceremonial events in Bristol's civic year included the Michaelmas swearing-in of the mayor (29 September), the feasts of All Saints (1 November), All Souls (2 November), St Clement (23 November), St Katherine (24 November), and St Nicholas (6 December), four Advent Sunday sermons at the Dominican and Franciscan friaries leading up to Christmas, then Lady Day (25 March), St George's Day (23 April), Holy Week leading up to Easter Sunday, Monday, and the following Wednesday, Rogation Sunday, Whitsunday, Corpus Christi, the Nativity of St John Baptist (Midsummer on 24 June), and the feasts of Sts Peter and Paul (29 June), St James (25 July), and St Lawrence (10 August).

Public processional ceremony associated with celebratory days confirmed visibly the organization of the society. The Michaelmas swearing-in of the mayor brought together the old and the new and demonstrated the annual (and orderly) transition of government. As Skeeters points out, All Saints' 'signalled a very busy period of ceremonial activity' which included refreshments at the mayor's house and evensong at the parish churches. On All Souls', the following day, the mayor officially visited St Mary Redcliffe to audit the two chantries of William Canynges.⁹⁸ The popular celebration of St Clement, the patron saint of the Mariners, took place in St Clement's Chapel in St Bartholomew's Hospital and that of St Katherine, the patron saint of the Weavers, at Temple Church,⁹⁹ but they were often interrelated (since they were only two days apart) and, as Sacks points out, 'in symbolic form they integrated the weavers and mariners into the body politic of the city.'¹⁰⁰ These two festivals also visibly demonstrated the power and position of the Mariners and Weavers to the city proper.

The St Katherine's festival seems to have been especially complex; Ricart provides a detailed description of that day's ceremonial customs in 1478–9, when he describes how on St Katherine's Eve, the mayor, sheriff, and their brethren processed to St Katherine's Chapel within Temple Church where they attended evensong and then processed to St Katherine's Hall where they were worshipfully received by the wardens and brethren of the Hall who provided them with spiced cake and wine. The mayor and his brethren then returned to their own homes where they were later visited at their doors by the St Katherine's players for a performance of some sort accompanied by drink and rewards to the players. On St Katherine's Day proper, the corporation officials gathered at Temple Church, processed about the town, and then returned to Temple Church to hear mass before returning to their own homes (see p 9).¹⁰¹

Ricart records that the mayor, sheriff, and brethren processed on St Nicholas' Eve, appropriately, to St Nicholas' Church to hear evensong. On St Nicholas' Day they heard mass with the boy bishop's 'sermon' and received his 'blessing.' After dinner the corporation officials assembled and played a game of dice while waiting for the bishop's blessing, an event Sacks believes unique to Bristol.¹⁰² This was followed by bread and wine and later, the 'bishop's' evensong at St Nicholas' Church (see p 9).

On the four Sundays in Advent the mayor and his brethren visited the Dominican and Franciscan friaries to hear sermons. The period from St Nicholas' Day through Christmas itself seems to have been a quieter, solemn time. Indeed, Ricart asserts that it was the mayor's obligation to 'make open proclamacion for gode Rule & govirnaunce to be hadde and kepte within the saide Town duryng the holy dayes' (see p 10). Furthermore, the mayor and sheriff had the obligation during the Christmas period to prevent individuals from going about the town disguised, 'A mommyng with cloce visaged. Nor go aftir Curfewe rong at Seynt Nicholas withoute light in their handes' (see p 10).

Lady Day, while it could involve the mayor and his brethren in procession going to church for mass, also marked the beginning of the new year. The moveable feast of Easter, which could be as early as 22 March and as late as 25 April, obviously interrelated differently each year with the dated feasts. St George's Day always fell right between Lady Day and Midsummer and probably had processional and ceremonial value to the city since St George's Chapel, adjacent to the Guildhall, served as the official chapel of the corporation at this time. We know from both the Little Red Book (see pp 6–7) and Ricart's Calendar (see pp 9–10) that the city contributed to the celebration of the feast of St George in the mid-fifteenth century by paying for at least two torches.

The moveable feast of Corpus Christi could fall as early as 21 May or as late as Midsummer and was always closely related to St Peter's Day. The 'Wiredrawers' and Pinmakers' accounts, the most complete guild records in this volume, record by 1506–7 extensive payments for the celebration of Corpus Christi, Midsummer, and St Mary Magdalene's Day, including bearing the pageant, hiring minstrels, a lute player, and a harper, and paying for torches, food, and drink. We also know that the parishes were involved in Corpus Christi processions but there is no direct evidence to link parish with craft guild activities on that day.

Midsummer, for obvious historical and climatic reasons, was a huge festival as it also coincided with the feast of the Nativity of St John Baptist and was just five days before St Peter's Day. A single antiquarian source related to St Nicholas' parish on May Day suggests that at least one Bristol parish also celebrated Robin Hood and the summer lord custom in May or June (see p 34 and endnote).

From the late fifteenth century until the accession of Elizabeth I the records confirm that some of the guilds owned pageants and bore them through the streets on important religious feast days, such as Corpus Christi, Midsummer, and St Peter's Day. However, there is no evidence to support the performance of guild-produced drama in Bristol on the feast of Corpus Christi or any other holiday. The records show that the guilds probably had processions on both civic and liturgical feast days but they seem not to have been directly involved in plays of any sort in spite of the assumption, made by Alfred Harvey in 1906 and repeated by many scholars since, that miracle plays were performed in Bristol by the guilds on Corpus Christi Day.¹⁰³

The Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' accounts refer early to pageants and pageant-bearing and largely relate to the processional and gustatory celebrations connected to the feast of Corpus Christi, Midsummer, St Peter's Day, and St Mary Magdalene's Day. The earliest entry shows that in 1496-7 the guild paid for minstrels and for torches and 'for beryng of the pageant' to celebrate Midsummer. The first reference to the celebration of Corpus Christi survives from their accounts for 1506-7, when the costs appear with those of Midsummer (Corpus Christi Day was on 3 June in 1507). The following year, 1508, when Corpus Christi Day was two days before Midsummer, Midsummer is not mentioned at all but in 1509 the guild separated the costs related to Corpus Christi from those of Midsummer two weeks and three days later; the pageant, with its large routinely replenished wax candle, had a bearer accompanied by seven boys carrying torches, all of whom were paid for their services in money and refreshment. The Midsummer costs that year include minstrels but interestingly do not include the pageant (see p 21). By 1510-11 the Wire drawers and Pinmakers added payments for St Peter's Day to Midsummer but the bearing of the pageant seems connected not with those days but with the birth of the prince and Corpus Christi (see p 22). The pageant was also a feature at special occasions, such as the birth of Mary Tudor (later Mary I) on 18 February 1515/16. The guild continued to join in the celebration of the feast of Corpus Christi with its pageant through 1542-3 and references to bearing or carrying the pageant (but without specific mention of Corpus Christi) recur through 1546-7. Payments to set up the pageant, the use of an image, two bearers, and a large (heavy) stump suggest that the Wire drawers and Pinmakers had a three-dimensional pageant, at least after 1530, which was carried.

It should be noted that wheeled vehicles were not permitted in medieval Bristol for fear of crashing through to the extensive network of underground storage warehouses and sewers beneath the streets. As Jacobus Millerd says on his 1673 map of Bristol, 'There are no sincks yzt come from any houses into ye streets but all is conveyed vnder ground rendering ye Cittie exceeding sweet & delightsom They use no Carts there as in London but carry all uppon Sleds.'¹⁰⁴ Dallaway, based on William Worcestre's accounts, puts the number of vaults and cellars at 169 and points out that they were so extensive as to form a 'subterranean Bristol.'¹⁰⁵ Whatever pageants were in late medieval Bristol, they were certainly not wheeled vehicles.

The earliest surviving (and cryptic) Bakers' Minutes from 1498-9 include charges for torch-making related to St Clement's Day, for dinner at Midsummer, and for minstrels, whose services may or may not have been related to either of the two previously mentioned festivals. The next set of Bakers' Minutes, for 1526-7, show payments related to both Corpus Christi and Midsummer. In 1528-9 the Bakers paid for minstrels at Midsummer and in 1531-2 they paid five minstrels but do not mention the occasion of payment. Not until 1537-8 do the records indicate that the Bakers clearly paid for bearing a pageant on Corpus Christi Day, a tradition which continued through 1543-4, after which time references to the guild's pageant appear only in its inventory for the next decade. In 1553–4, with a Catholic queen on the throne, the Bakers began to pay for the bearing of their pageant again while the Wire drawers and Pinmakers resumed doing so in 1555–6, with the pageant-bearing directly related to Corpus Christi clearly indicated once again in 1557–8. In 1558–9, the year of the accession of Elizabeth I, the Bakers' pageant appears only in the inventory where it remains for the next eighty-three years until the end of the period covered by this volume. From the references to the pageant in the extant guild records, the following picture emerges regarding the Bakers' device: the pageant was on occasion dressed with flowers (and possibly rushes and boughs). The pageant probably had both a case and an image (see pp 39–40). We know the Bakers' pageant had four vanes by 1543–4 (later described as silk in 1565–6), because they are included in an inventory which lists six old torches, a coffer, and a form; eventually an old table cloth is added in 1551–2 (although its relationship to the pageant is unknown). The coffer might have held the torches and the pageant staff, first mentioned in 1553–4, was probably used to fly the vanes. In 1625–6 the Bakers' Minutes still list 'one padgent & iiij flagges' but from 1626–7 on, the number of flags drops to three. Clearly one of the Bakers' silk flags simply wore out and was not replaced, so long had it been since the pageant had been used.

A singular entry in the 1609–10 Soapmakers' Minutes confirms that that guild also held a pageant in inventory. It had six large and small forms with it, two silk streamers, two 'stafes,' and a box. No earlier records survive from the Soapmakers to suggest when the guild acquired the pageant or when it might have been used. The preservation of pageants in both the Soapmakers' and Bakers' inventories into the seventeenth century suggests either that the pageants were used with no record of their use surviving or (and this is more likely) that the pageants were maintained in the event that it might become possible to bear them publicly in procession. After the accession of Elizabeth I the sole guild record related to pageant-bearing to survive is from 1582–3 when the Wire drawers and Pinmakers paid for a new staff for their pageant, painted the staff and mended the vanes, and then bore the pageant for a muster on Midsummer Day and for the watch on St Peter's Eve.

Evidence also exists for parish participation in the Corpus Christi liturgical procession. Perhaps the best extant example is the parish church of St Mary Redcliffe whose records before the Reformation document an extensive celebration of Corpus Christi. In 1509, for example, the costs on Corpus Christi Day involved a breakfast for all including five priests, five clerks, four subdeacons, and seven children of the chapel who received additional payments. Bearing costs included the cross, the cross staff, eight torches, two censers, two candlesticks, and the bell. Payments also were made to sixteen ringers, the bearer of the 'Ship,' two friars, and two helpers for bearing the shrine, and a bearer for St George's standard. In addition, there were payments for making the shrine and for the sexton's dinner during what must have been a long but festive occasion.¹⁰⁶

From the waning years of the reign of Henry VIII through the death of Edward VI and then again with the accession of Elizabeth I, we see a cessation of the feast of Corpus Christi. The short reign of Mary I provided a brief respite for this festival clearly associated with Catholicism. Martha Skeeters asserts that 'Even as the Corpus Christi implied union of all the city's inhabitants, clergy and laity alike, the procession made clear the clergy's closer relationship to the host and the laity's dependence upon the clergy.' She adds that the laity's relationship to the feast of Corpus Christi 'was mediated by the clergy.'¹⁰⁷ According to Haigh, when Elizabeth I 'restored Edwardian government' she also restored Edwardian religion and, in so doing, the fate of this 'Catholic' festival was sealed, never again to achieve the prominence and importance it held in English culture before the break with Rome.¹⁰⁸

Other medieval parish-based activities included dancing, noted for a brief period in the St Ewen churchwardens' accounts. Receipts for 'dancing money' appear in St Ewen's parish in 1455–6, 1464–5, and 1467–8. Masters and Ralph define the parish's unique 'dancing money' as 'a special collection in money made on an occasion when dancing took place.'¹⁰⁹ These mid-fifteenth century Bristol records suggest that the money was at least initially in the hands of the persons who did the dancing since in 1464–5 the parish received 10s 1d from John Nancothan 'of old daunsyng mony. left yn his doghters handes' and in 1467–8 two men and two women turned over a total of 4s 11d in 'daunsyng mony.'¹¹⁰ The records make no direct connection between dancing money and any particular festival or holiday although Audrey Douglas, in discussing processional dancing at other locations (especially Salisbury) says, 'The dancing day emerges as both a celebration sanctioned by the church – in some instances securely tied to the annual or liturgical round of the parish – and an event driven by the need to raise casual revenues to eke out parish income' and adds that 'the primary object of the dance was the systematic gathering of money.'¹¹¹

References to bull-and bearbaiting in the Marsh find their way into the records over the 128-year period from 1452–5 through 1579–80. The earliest document related to animal baiting (and the singular one relating to bulls) survives from the Great Red Book from 1452–5 and specifies how butchers must deal with baited bulls. All other surviving records of animal baiting relate to bearwards and their bears performing before the mayor and aldermen.

Local Drama and Public Ceremony after the Reformation

The Elizabethan Reformation would change forever the relationships between civic and ecclesiastical officials. Some of those ceremonies and holidays so closely allied with the medieval liturgical calendar (and thus the Church of Rome) would fall by the wayside forever or be replaced by other more purely secular civic functions. After 1558 other festive events of the year also dropped from the list of so-called 'Scarlett days' (the days on which the mayor and common council wore their scarlet robes). In addition to Corpus Christi these included the celebrations of St George, St Peter, St Lawrence, St Clement, St Katherine, and St Nicholas (and the boy bishop celebrations).¹¹² The Michaelmas swearing-in of the mayor and civic Christmas festivities continued to be important days of celebration in Bristol. A significant new celebration was added to the civic calendar with the accession of Elizabeth I in 1558, that is, the Queen's Holiday or Accession Day on 17 November. Certainly by the 1570s the Queen's Holiday had become an important civic celebration with bonfires, trumpeters, and waits involved.

As a major trading centre Bristol continued to support trade fairs, the most notable of which were the St James Fair in July, and the St Paul (or Temple) Fair in January (see pp xvii–xviii, above) Little emphasizes the importance of the Bristol fairs, even to London, saying that 'London wholesalers claimed in 1637 that they must go to Bristol, infection or no infection' to meet and to do business as it could be done nowhere else in the kingdom.¹¹³ More than half a century apart, Harvey and Barker have assumed that entertainment was a part of these great trade fairs. According to Harvey 'Secular plays, such as they were, had long been acted in booths at St. James's fair,' and Barker adds that 'Jugglers, minstrels, puppeteers, strolling players and entertainers of all kinds flocked to the Fairs to reap their own harvest from the incomers.'¹¹⁴ Before 1642, however, no evidence survives to connect local entertainment to the fairs directly. The virtually complete churchwardens' accounts of the parishes where the fairs were held, notably the St James Fair and the St Paul or Temple Fair, contain no references to performance or entertainment although both parish accounts contain much specific detail regarding the fairs, from income received through the rental of space or 'standings' (Harvey's 'booths') to payments to watchmen on the fair days. However, it is possible that the Bristol trade fairs encouraged entertainers; for example, the queen's players visited the city on twelve different occasions during St James tide and were paid in July and August.¹¹⁵

SCHOOL DRAMA

There may have been a school in Bristol as early as the twelfth century (probably associated initially with the abbey of St Augustine) but the first likely link between schools and drama occurs in the early fifteenth century in connection with Robert Londe. His name first appears as a chaplain in the parish of St Peter¹¹⁶ but he may also be linked to a c 1420 play fragment discovered by Cynthia Bland within a longer unrelated manuscript.¹¹⁷ The connection of the play fragment to Robert Londe suggests a Bristol provenance. What at first appears to be a 'codicological conundrum,' Bland believes instead to be 'part of a hitherto unknown Middle English play based on the Bidding Prayer.'¹¹⁸ Bland's discovery includes thirteen fragments, the first of which she identifies as a play fragment, which begins conventionally by calling on the people to pray for the church hierarchy. But the satiric content of the fragment makes it quickly obvious that the words were not uttered in the church; for instance, the speaker calls forth Christ's curse upon summoners, deans, rascals, and whores. The fragment ends with an 'Amen' and a 'stage direction' pointing to another (lost) part. Bland believes that the fragment is a Bidding Prayer play and points out that 'plays based on the Paternoster and on the Creed were performed in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, although the texts themselves have been lost.'¹¹⁹ She connects the fragment to Robert Londe and his school in Bristol via Thomas Schort, who probably used Londe's materials to make the binding of his own 'teaching manual.' Bland asserts, 'The contents of MS 130 could only have come from a school, very likely from Robert Londe's school over the New Gate at Bristol.'¹²⁰

But it is from the second half of the sixteenth century that unequivocal records survive to connect schools to plays and performance. Extant accounts in the Mayors' Audits and other sources indicate that successive schoolmasters and the students of the free school of St Bartholomew provided plays for the civic celebration of Christmas as well as orations for the annual festivities associated with both the Michaelmas swearing-in of the mayor and Accession Day.¹²¹ They also contributed to celebrations for the infrequent but important royal entries of this period.

References to Christmas pageants and plays at the free school of St Bartholomew occur from 1569–70 through 1595–6. In 1569–70 the city paid Schoolmaster Turner 40s 'toward the payngting of his pageantes & charges of his playes at Christmas folowing at the commaundment of master mayor' (see pp 77–8). Similar additional payments to the schoolmasters related to plays at Christmas continue to connect the free school to civic-sponsored Christmas plays (see p 147 for the last such payment). There is no indication of how many plays were performed or what their subjects were. The records are also silent regarding the performers of these plays but it is probable that the students of the free school performed for the Christmas celebrations under the tutelage of schoolmasters Turner, Dunne, White, and Woodsonn. The payments to the schoolmasters for their plays, a fee which remains constant between 1569 and 1596, is very competitive with the 20s–40s payments received by professional itinerant troupes visiting Bristol during the same period.

Whatever the Christmas plays may have been, it is reasonable to assume that the students of the free school would have performed classical drama as part of their studies. Nicholas Orme points out that by the sixteenth century, 'The New Learning, with its revival of interest in the literature of Greece and Rome, caused a revolution in the school curriculum. The study of grammar began to be dominated again by the great classical authors: Horace, Livy, Terence and Virgil.'¹²² The performance of Latin drama, rather than the reading of it, thus became part of the curriculum.

In addition, an August 1574 performance of unknown type, which is clearly related to Elizabeth's royal entry in the same month of that year, took place at the school door. The mayor and aldermen paid Schoolmaster Dunne £1 7s 6d 'toward his charges of his stage at the schole dore' (see p 88). The free school provided some form of entertainment for the queen's visit but it is also apparent that Schoolmaster Dunne greeted with envy the city's decision to hire Thomas Churchyard, a Londoner and 'stranger' to Bristol, to script and to direct the queen's elaborate royal entry. Evidently Dunne, who had provided civic entertainment in the past, felt that the commission for the most important civic entertainment in Bristol in a century should have been his. Churchyard refers to this situation in the last paragraph of Churchyardes Chippes when he indicates that the entertainment he wrote was not performed in toto: 'Som of these Speeches could not be spoken by means of a Scholemaister, who enuied that any stranger should set forth these shoes' (see p 109).¹²³

Bristol also had a professional children's company (1615–24), licensed under the name 'The Youths of Her Majesty's Royal Chamber of Bristol' and commonly known as the Children of Bristol. The Children of Bristol did not perform in Bristol under either their official or their common name but the references to Sir George Buc's players (1617–18) and the king's children (1620–1) could possibly refer to this company.¹²⁴

Touring Entertainers

While there is less evidence surviving for locally produced drama in Bristol than in York or Coventry, for example, the records of touring professional entertainers performing in sixteenth-century Bristol are both extensive and detailed. Since Bristol was at the hub of good roads and its economic and regional importance was established early, it would presumably have been a mecca for such entertainers. There is, however, an absolute lack of evidence for medieval touring entertainers to the city, presumably because the Mayors' Audits do not survive before 1531. From the first record we do have, in 1531–2, of Lord Lisle's players, to the last reference in 1635–6 to an entertainer with a licence from the master of the revels, there are 138 notices of players representing fifty-six different companies named by their patrons and two named by location (see Patrons and Travelling Companies). Official payments range from a low of 5s to a high of £2 4s.

In the sixteenth century 127 named companies of players (by patron or location) can be broken down as follows: fourteen in the 1530s; eight in the 1540s; nine in the 1550s; twenty-seven in the 1560s; twenty-eight in the 1570s; seventeen in the 1580s; and twenty-six in the 1590s. It is clear that the love of theatre in the Elizabethan period extended into the provinces and into Bristol especially, where there was a rapid increase in visits by companies with patrons coinciding with the beginning of Elizabeth's reign and the parallel increased activity in the environs of the city of London. Indeed, it is the queen's men who came to Bristol more often than any other named company: five times in the 1580s and six times in the 1590s. Some of the best known London-based troupes of the time visited, including that of Edward Alleyn, who came to Bristol in August 1593. In a letter to his wife he makes it clear that his company, the admiral's men, had amalgamated at that time with Lord Strange's company. Shakespeare and Richard Burbage may also have visited Bristol in 1597 with their company, the lord chamberlain's men.

It is an unusual feature of the Bristol Mayors' Audits that six entries mention the title of a play or describe in some way the main character or theme. The titled plays are 'The Red Knight' (1575–6), 'Myngo' (1577–8), and 'The Court of Comfort' (1577–8). Descriptive notes on three other plays – which may in fact be titles – include 'what mischeif workith in the mynd of man,' 'the Queen of Ethiopia' (both in 1577–8), and 'quid pro quo' (1578–9). Unfortunately all six plays are lost.¹²⁵

Entertainers who came to Bristol in the sixteenth century did not always perform. The first record of players being paid not to play, Lord Russell's players on St James' Eve, occurred in 1540–1 because 'the tyme was busy' (see p 51). Later, in 1579–80, the mayor, who 'had no leysure to se the game,' nevertheless commanded that Lord Derby's bearward be paid (see p 120). Again in 1585–6 the queen's players were paid not to play (see p 128).

Censorship, of course, did play a role in a Bristol that produced and nurtured John Northbrooke, who flourished in the 1570s, living and preaching in and around Bristol. Northbrooke condemned all drama except school drama (which taught good speech and morals), opposed all public commercial theatre, and saw the profession of acting as an idle one which led inevitably to sloth and mischief.¹²⁶ In his ironically quasi-dramatic dialogue between Age and Youth, when asked about plays, players, and playhouses by Youth, Age responds, 'I am persuaded that Satan hath not a more speedie way and fitter schoole to work and teach his desire, to bring men and women into his snare of concupiscence and filthie lustes of wicked whoredome, than those places and playes, and theatres are: And therefore necessarie that those places and Players shoulde be forbidden and dissolued and put down by authoritie, as the Brothell houses and Stewes are.'¹²⁷ In November 1585 the common council attempted to forbid players and unlawful games (a marginal note in a different hand indicates that the ordinance was later repealed; see p 287, endnote to BRO: 04272 f 57). In the spring of 1586, however, the earl of Essex' players were paid for playing but by June of that same year the common council had again passed an ordinance which forbade plays in the Guildhall and 'vnlawfull games within the libertyes of this Cytie' (see p 128). Thus when the queen's players arrived in July they were paid 20s not to play. Players arrived and were once again paid to play, however, in 1587. Additional ordinances were passed in December 1595 and in February 1595/6 but were ignored by players and city alike at least until 1598 when performances in the Guildhall cease to be mentioned in the records.

In the seventeenth century only ten named companies of players (by patron) are known to have performed, visits which can be broken down as follows: two in the 1600s; three in the 1610s; three in the 1620s; two in the 1630s; and none in the 1640s.¹²⁸ The king's company came four times, the most often of any troupe: one visit of children players under James I, one visit under Charles Stuart as prince, and two visits under Charles I. Payments ranged from £1 to £2 4s.

Records for certain years have not survived, however, and some visits may have gone unrecorded. From 10 September 1600 until Christmas 1608 the chamberlain recorded no payments to players; this is unusual since there were five such payments in 1600 before 10 September (Mayors' Audits do not survive for 1601–3). Payments to players resumed in 1608–9 on a somewhat irregular, infrequent basis only to drop out of sight completely from Christmas 1621 until Midsummer 1629. The risk of contagion from strangers generated so much fear in Bristol that in 1613 the common council outlawed players at St James tide because 'of the infection of the plague at Aburgavenney and other places in Wales, and the daunger thereof nowe greatlye feared in Bristoll' (see p 176). Between 1629–30 and 1634–5 the expression 'not to play' seems to be replaced by 'to send them out of the city.' In 1629–30 unnamed players are thus dismissed and in 1630–1 the king's players are sent out of the city. In 1632–3 the mayor gave a company of players 20s to be rid of them and in 1633–4 £1 10s 'to ridd them out of Towne' (see p 237). In 1634–5 the mayor paid 'certeyne plaiers' two pounds because they should not play in the city (see p 239) and in the same year 'one Perry a plaiier' received two pounds not to use his skill in the city. In the 1630s, of the six recorded instances of players being paid not to play, four occur during the summer months (1630, 1631, 1635 twice) and two occur between March and June (1633, 1634). But players were not always sent away. They were still paid to perform seven times in the 1630s.

Therefore, bearing in mind that the Mayors' Audits are not available for early in the century, we have evidence that only twenty-eight performances were officially paid for after 1600, a noticeable falling-off from their heyday in the sixteenth century.

In addition to paying professional players, the city also rewarded touring bearwards and tumblers. Bearwards were paid yearly as early as 1518–19, with the last recorded payment in 1579–80 to Lord Derby's bearward. As noted above (p xxxiv) the mayor had no free time to see the event but nevertheless ordered that the bearward be paid. It is not clear if the performance took place in the mayor's absence or if the bearward was essentially paid not to play. Records have survived of thirty payments to bearwards with patrons (with fourteen patrons named) and four payments to unnamed companies of bearwards performing in Bristol, with the queen's bearwards performing most often (six times in the 1570s).

Bristol paid for tumblers five times between 1575–6 and 1635–6. In 1589–90 the queen's players and an unnamed Turk tumbled before the mayor and aldermen. In 1620–1 a tumbler was paid £1 not to play while in 1635–6 a tumbler with a licence from the master of the revels evidently did, in fact, perform.

Performance Spaces

Performances could occur almost anywhere in Bristol, in keeping with the traditional medieval sense of 'the place' being wherever one defines it. According to Ricart, town clerk from 1479–1508, the St Katherine's players performed outside the mayor's door (ie, the actual residence of the mayor) in the late fifteenth century to celebrate St Katherine's Day and there are other references to the mayor's door being a place for civic (if not dramatic) activity.¹²⁹ Ricart seems to distinguish the new mayor's house from the old mayor's house, which indicates that the mayor's door was indeed the door of the residence in which the mayor lived as a private citizen rather than a city-owned residence provided for him. The August 1574 performance related to Elizabeth's royal entry took place at the door of the free school of St Bartholomew on a purpose-built stage (as noted above, p xxxiii).

Direct references to performance spaces for entertainments related to the free school of St Bartholomew, in addition to the school door, are 'in' the school (1576–7, 1577–8) and 'at' the school (1589–90). The Christmas performances in both 1576 and 1577 occurred in the free school. The other Christmas entries do not mention location but they too probably occurred in the school proper. It is also clear from the surviving evidence that the free school of St Bartholomew could be used as a performance space for entertainment not produced or related directly to the schoolmaster and students. In 1589–90, for instance, the queen's men performed and an unnamed Turk tumbled before the mayor and aldermen there. It is very likely that the school's ample courtyard made a suitable place for such displays of gymnastic skill.¹³⁰ It is not known if 'in the school' also includes the courtyard but because the 1589–90 tumbling performances, which almost certainly occurred in the courtyard, are placed 'at' rather than 'in' the school, 'in the school' probably means indoors within rooms of the school.

Surrounded on three sides by water but well drained and used for grazing and containing a bowling green, the Marsh provided an ideal location for activities such as wrestling, fishings, drinkings, bull- and bearbaiting, and the vast mock sea and land battles provided for the entertainment of Elizabeth I in 1574 and Queen Anne in 1613.¹³¹ College Green, situated between the cathedral and Gaunt's Chapel, provided yet another large open space for entertainments, such as a procession for Henry VII in 1485–6 (see pp 10–14). The streets and city gates themselves were commandeered for performances of pageants and orations by schoolboys when distinguished visitors arrived in the city, such as the visit of Elizabeth I in 1574.

THE GUILDHALL

The Guildhall in Broad Street was the premier performance space in Bristol for professional players in the sixteenth century. Bristol's Guildhall dated from the fourteenth century. Part of its functions were subsumed by the construction of the original (and nearby) Council House, or Tolsey (the Mayor's Court) in 1551, on the corner of Corn and Broad Streets. Millerd's 1673 map includes an inset of both the Guildhall with its perpendicular west front and the (apparently smaller) Tolsey, which had been created through the purchase and occupation of the south aisle of St Ewen's Church. The present-day Bristol Guildhall is Victorian Gothic by R. S. Pope and dates from the 1840s.¹³²

The first reference to the Guildhall as a performance space occurs in 1535–6 when the city paid 6s 8d 'to serreyne boyes þat playyde In the yeld hall be ffore Master meyar & his brothers' (see p 46). Between 1535–6 and 1597–8 a total of thirty-eight different companies of players are known to have played in the Guildhall at the command of the mayor and the aldermen. The Guildhall continued to be used for performances of plays until 1597–8 when the queen's players performed there. Audience disorder was clearly a factor in the city's desire to move performances out of the Guildhall. In 1575–6 ironwork on the Guildhall doors was mended, having been 'stretchid with the presse of people at the play of my lord Chamberleyne's Servantes' (see p 112). In 1577–8, after the earl of Leicester's players performed, the doors of the Guildhall again had to be repaired. In 1580–1 the audience broke two forms borrowed from the adjacent St George's Chapel to be used, presumably, as properties and/or set pieces by Lord Strange's players at the Guildhall or as additional seating for the audience.

It is unclear why the city chamberlain includes the location 'in the Guildhall' on some occasions but not on others. It is possible that for economy of time or space the location is omitted unintentionally, with virtually all performances recorded in the Mayors' Audits taking place in the Guildhall.

1597 is the last year when the Guildhall was unquestionably used by players although civic payments to players are recorded until the 1630s (with no location mentioned). A playhouse in Wine Street, owned by cutler Nicholas Woolfe, may have superseded the Guildhall as a performance space for entertainers in Bristol until its closure in or around 1625. It is unclear at this time what role the playhouse in Redcliffe Hill, purpose-built by Richard Barker, played in the history of dramatic activity in Bristol. What is clear is that Jacobean/Caroline Bristol is unusual in the provinces for its privately owned playhouses emulating the playhouses of London of the same era.

PRIVATE PLAYHOUSES

The city's interest in getting players out of the Guildhall may have been a factor in Nicholas Woolfe's decision to open a playhouse in Wine Street by 1604 and may also have prompted Richard Barker to build his playhouse in Redcliffe Hill somewhat later. With the opening of the playhouses in Wine Street and in Redcliffe Hill, the city had new performing facilities where both itinerant and resident troupes could perform and the Guildhall could once again regain its dignity and become solely 'the place of Iustice,' as it had been described in 1595–6 in the ordinances of the common council (see p 148). The surviving evidence suggests that the playhouse in Wine Street could have opened as early as 1604 and most probably closed in 1625. The playhouse in Redcliffe Hill is known only through its inclusion in the will of Sarah Barker in 1637–8 but must have been in operation before that date.

A cutler with no apparent theatre connections, Nicholas Woolfe owned the playhouse, an indication that it was a business opportunity as much as an artistic endeavour. The 1606 replication of Richard Cooke against Nicholas Woolfe suggests that the playhouse occupied space within a larger residential house, wherein itinerant and perhaps resident companies of players, 'certaine Comedyantes' (see p 164), lived and performed under the same roof. In the original bill of complaint, which dates to May of 1606, Cooke claimed that Woolfe rented the disputed rooms eighteen months earlier, which would indicate that 'Comedyantes' could have occupied Cooke's rooms as early as December 1604.

Woolfe also owned the White Hart and Lamb Inns and yet chose to house his playhouse within rooms of a third property rather than in one of his own innyards (assuming they had yards). Clearly the notion of the innyard as a performance space did not capture Woolfe's imagination. Indeed, the Cooke lawsuit, which states that performances took place within the playhouse, would be in keeping with the tradition in Bristol from at least the 1530s for most entertainers to play indoors at the Guildhall.

In addition to the playhouse, Woolfe owned or leased at least two other properties in Wine Street, one a small shop abutting Christ Church and a second larger residence in which he lived for a time. After Woolfe's death in 1614 the playhouse continued to operate and, in keeping with the intent of his will, annual profits totalling £3 6s 8d helped to support seven Bristol beneficiaries 'soe longe only as the same house shall continewe a playe house at that such players as doe resorte to the said Cittie or inhabite within the same doe vsually playe there and maye be permitted & suffered quietly to playe there' (see pp 196–7). The beneficiaries were the poor of Christ Church and St Peter's; the almshouses of St John's and St Michael's; the prisoners of the gaol of Newgate; the poor children of Queen Elizabeth's Hospital; and the Cutlers and Smiths.

Queen Elizabeth's Hospital received by far the largest annual bequest of 30s, as compared to others ranging from 5s (the almshouses) to 6s 8d (for each of the others). Queen Elizabeth's Hospital was founded in 1586 through a bequest by a prominent Bristolian, John Carr, at the location of Gaunt's Hospital on College Green; it was rebuilt in the eighteenth century and remains in operation to this day at another location on the west side of Brandon Hill.¹³³ From the antiquarian collection of Richard Smith, transcripts of records from Queen Elizabeth's Hospital confirm that the playhouse was in operation at least for the five-year period from 1614–19 since the Hospital received revenues from the operation of the playhouse in Wine Street during that time, in accordance with the Woolfe will. In addition, the playhouse income is included in an abstract of receipts and payments to Queen Elizabeth's Hospital from the estate of John Carr, as reported by Robert Fletcher.¹³⁴ This income of £7 10s amounts to 30s a year for five years. The playhouse is not related to Nicholas Woolfe in Fletcher's report but Joshua Jones refers directly to Nicholas Woolfe when he mentions payments to Queen Elizabeth's Hospital out of rent from the playhouse in Wine Street in his report the next year.¹³⁵ Sadly, no Hospital accounts contemporary with the Woolfe bequest survive.

Other documents offering new insights into the playhouse are the answer of Margaret Woolfe to Miles Woolfe's suit and the answer of Henry Yate (Nicholas Woolfe's friend and witness to his will) to Miles Woolfe's suit (both in 1618–19). In 1618–19 friends of Miles Woolfe, Nicholas' son and heir, sued his stepmother, Margaret Woolfe, on his behalf. (Nicholas had died while Miles was a minor.) Margaret made it clear in her response to the accusations that the playhouse was Nicholas Woolfe's before he married her, that the White Hart was not the playhouse, and that Nicholas Woolfe's dwelling house was not in the playhouse. Margaret said that Nicholas, at the time of their marriage in 1605, owned 'onlie of one messuage or tenement in Bristoll wherein the said Nicholas dwelled at the tyme of his deathe, and of one house with chappurtenaunces in wynestreete within the saide cittie comonlie called the play house' (see p 212). The heavily damaged and incomplete answer of Henry Yate to Miles Woolfe's suit in the same year simply confirms the continued use of the stage in the playhouse at this time (see pp 213-14).

The Mayors' Audits refer directly to the playhouse in Wine Street very late but offer new possibilities regarding its years of operation. The first reference occurs in 1625-6 when the city of Bristol received the quit rent of 5s 'out of a tenement sometimes a play house.' The 'sometimes a play house' reference continues for six years until 1630-1, after which no further references to the playhouse, Woolfe, or his heirs appear. At face value the Mayors' Audits support a closing date for the playhouse between Michaelmas 1625 and Michaelmas 1626. 'Sometimes' consistently means 'formerly' during this period¹³⁶ and although it is not certain that Nicholas Meredith, chamberlain, meticulously recorded the change in function of the building the first year that the change occurred, the 1625-6 reference certainly indicates that the playhouse did not operate beyond that year. No other direct reference to the playhouse occurs in the Mayors' Audits but by working backwards from the 1625-6 entry, one can see that the first time the city received from Nicholas Woolfe a quit rent on this tenement in Wine Street was the year ending on Michaelmas 1604.¹³⁷ If this was indeed the case, then the Mayors' Audits confirm the evidence supported by the Cooke lawsuit that the tenement existed in Wine Street by 1604 and that the playhouse may have been operating by then. Nicholas Woolfe, who died in 1614, made the payments to the city according to the records until Michaelmas 1617 at which time the chamberlain belatedly acknowledged that the heirs (and not Woolfe himself) paid the rent. The city received the rent from the heirs until 1630-1.

From the Mayors' Audits it is tempting, but purely speculative, to push the opening date of the playhouse even earlier than the Cooke suit can confirm. If Nicholas Woolfe were solely behind the playhouse from its inception, then certainly the playhouse could have been in operation as early as September 1603, although one cannot assume that the playhouse opened the first year the city chamberlain received the quit rent from Woolfe for the property in Wine Street, since we know the playhouse in Wine Street was not purpose-built. It is also possible that the playhouse existed either before Woolfe was involved in it or before he paid the rent on it, thus allowing for an opening date even earlier than September 1603. The city's recorded payments to players contained in the Mayors' Audits are of little use in helping to date the opening of the playhouse because they never directly refer to it.

The St John Baptist Churchwardens' Accounts are the only extant source to confirm the implementation of the Woolfe bequest. While they offer no information on the establishment of the playhouse in Wine Street, they clearly raise interesting possibilities as to its closure. Nicholas Woolfe's gift is first referred to in 1614-15. The churchwardens recorded 5s received 'out of the play house in wynestreete' probably on Christmas 1615. In the same account they note payment of the 5s annuity to 'the poore peaple of the almshouse of the guifte of Nicholas Woolfe' (see p 202). This pattern continues until 1619–20, during which time Woolfe's building clearly operated as a playhouse in accordance with the provisions of the will (see pp 202–15). After 1619–20 playhouse receipts and payments to the almshouse cease to appear and in 1623–4 a new pattern emerges. This receipt appears not at the bottom of the folio, like the earlier ones, but near the top and is listed, for the first time, under the Wine Street heading. Also, the churchwardens changed the label on the Woolfe bequest from an annuity to a quit rent. Interestingly, the payments side of the account for 1623–4 makes it clear that the 5s quit rent was in fact never received by the parish and was 'vtterlie lost' (see p 221).

The St John Baptist Churchwardens' Accounts clearly confirm a change in function of the playhouse in 1623–4 when the yearly rent or annuity the churchwardens assumed would come to the parish did not. It is not at all clear why they began that same year to record the payment in a different place and to label it differently, especially after a four-year cessation of recorded payments. It is perfectly logical, however, to move the entry to Wine Street and Woolfe's will describes the bequests both as annuities and as yearly rents. It is also not clear how the parish could accept rent from the playhouse 'the guift of Nicholas Wolfe' without at the same time recording the payment of that gift to the almshouse unless, of course, beginning in 1623–4 the payment of the Woolfe bequest to the almshouse was recorded in some other lost account. The churchwardens continued to receive the 5s rent from the playhouse 'there giuen by Nicholas Woulfe' (see p 229) through 1627–8, even though the Mayor's Audit indicated two years earlier that the building was no longer functioning as such.

Sarah Barker's will describes a second, purpose-built playhouse in Redcliffe Hill, south of the Avon, which was probably contemporary with Woolfe's playhouse in the centre of the city. Sarah Barker's husband, Richard, perhaps seeing the success of the playhouse in Wine Street, apparently built a playhouse from the ground up, which shows the diverse and competitive theatrical vitality in Bristol in the Jacobean/Caroline period.

In 1627–8, a decade before her death, 'the widowe Barker' paid rents to the city of £2 3s for six tenements in Redcliffe Hill south of the Avon.¹³⁸ In her will she gave five houses on the west side of Redcliffe Hill (which she had lately purchased from her son James) to her son Philip and she gave the purpose-built playhouse built by her husband (which included a residential chamber for unmarried daughter Eleanor Barker) to her son William. The Barker will thus takes into account all six Redcliffe Hill properties and strongly suggests that the Barker playhouse was in Redcliffe Hill. That playhouse should not be confused with Bristol's other playhouse in Wine Street. The evidence indicates that Bristol had two playhouses in operation, possibly simultaneously, in the early seventeenth century, a situation unique in the provinces.

Minstrels, Waits, and Musicians

One of the earliest surviving records in this volume, the 1278–9 entry from the Register of Bishop Godfrey Giffard, refers to a 'a well-known song' or 'carmen famosum,' the first indication of the role that music and its performance played in the history of Bristol, although there is little reason, if any, to believe minstrels or waits were in any way involved in the composition of the infamous song.¹³⁹

The first record of town minstrels occurs in the 1391–2 Little Red Book entry which refers to 'lez iiij Minstrels del ville' or 'the four minstrels of the town.' Ricart mentions a 1478–9 payment to the mayor's minstrels (see p 10) and by 1496–7 the Wire drawers and Pinmakers begin routine payments to minstrels for costs related to Midsummer. The first entry we have from the Bakers' Minutes, in 1498–9, includes a reference to the charges for minstrels, again probably related to Midsummer, the same year the Wire drawers and Pinmakers clearly state they hired three minstrels and paid for their wine. When the Wire drawers and Pinmakers hire minstrels in 1506–7, they also pay for a 'lewter' and Thomas White, harper. In the next year Thomas White is paid again, as well as 'a nother mynstrell,' which leads one to believe Thomas White was also considered a minstrel and thus becomes the earliest 'named' minstrel in Bristol history. In 1511–12 the Wire drawers and Pinmakers clearly pay for two minstrels and the next year these become 'oure mynstrelles' (see pp 22–3). It is uncertain if the guilds maintained their own minstrels or hired the city minstrels (or itinerant minstrels) when they were needed to celebrate important days. The only apprenticeship indenture to mention a minstrel occurs in 1543–4 when Robert Norres became an apprentice to John Levette, minstrel and citizen of Bristol.

The first clear record to the Bristol 'waits' appears in a 1508–9 entry in the Household Book of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, at Thornbury and indicates there were four ('iiij le Waites de Bristo').¹⁴⁰ In 1518–19 the Great White Book gives the waits' wages as 29s 8d, which would be 7s 5d each if there were four of them at that time although here they are paid for three specific performances only. The city paid the rental of the waits' house in Tucker Street as early as the first extant Mayor's Audit of 1531–2 and continued to do so until 1582–3, although the location is not specified after 1557–8. Four waits are named in 1582–3: Thomas Brown, Henry Dittie, William Lawrence, and James Sargent. William Pitts' will (30 October 1592), contained in the Great Orphan Book (BRO: 04421(1)A), mentions one of the Bristol waits of the 1590s by name. Pitts bequeathed to his eldest son William 'my howse wherein I nowe dwell with all furnytur therevnto belonging,' including 'the best couerlet which I bought of Lynzye the wayte player.' Although it is not known when Pitts purchased the coverlet from the wait, it is obviously before October 1592 and therefore some time before 1592 there was a Bristol wait named Lindsay (assuming Pitts bought the coverlet from a Bristol wait).¹⁴¹

The Bristol waits received new instruments in 1607–8 and a new sackbut was bought for them in 1610–11. The Mayors' Audits continue to show that Bristol supported four waits through 1618–19, when they were paid each quarter £1 6s 8d (or 6s 8d each). That year 'Iohnson ye waiteplaier' is mentioned by name because his son is paid 'for plaieng a parte on the shackbutt.' The following year, possibly because it was obvious that if they needed Johnson's son to play they really needed a fifth wait full-time, the city added another wait. The common council proceedings in 1618–19 state, 'It ys this daye agreed that there shalbe xxvj s. viij d. yerely geven to a fiveth man to playe with the Other fower musitions in the Cytie, on the Saggbutt to make vppe a fiveth parte' and the same year William Johnson gets a new apprentice, John Hunter, who might possibly be an apprentice to replace the person (Johnson's son?) who became the fifth Bristol wait.

The Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' account of 1626–7 records payment for 'wyne and musicke' and also, under a separate line, 'paid the waighetes for musicke,' presumably the city waits. Payments in the Mayors' Audits to the five city waits continue with great regularity though 1642; indeed, that is the last payment in this volume.

The Bristol waits seem to have had a virtual monopoly on music within the city – references to visiting or 'strange' musicians are very rare in the records, unlike some other towns and cities. The waits also travelled far and wide as is evidenced by their appearance as far north as Carlisle in 1613–14 and 1614–15 (although in the first instance they were paid 5s not to play).¹⁴²

The first apprenticeship indenture which identifies a Bristol 'musician' occurs in 1566–7 when William Alove was apprenticed to John Medecalf, musician. Nine other musicians are on record in this period as taking apprentices. However, all apprentices to musicians might not have been apprenticing to be musicians. Sometimes the indenture clearly states that an instrument is part of the payment for a successful apprenticeship period: in the 1601–2 Richard Hutt apprenticeship to Francis Highwood, Hutt was promised 'one Interment that he Can play best' at the end of his seven years. But Robert Wilson, who apprenticed to William Johnson in 1595–6 and was admitted to the liberties of the city in 1604–5 as a musician, received no such promise of an instrument in his original apprenticeship indenture. Of the musicians cited, William Johnson was clearly the most prominent.

Local trumpeters provided music for the swearing-in of the mayor by 1577–8 and trumpeters played consistently then up to 1599–1600. They also performed at the 1586–7 visit of the earls of Leicester and Warwick, the 1621–2 visit of the earl of Essex, and the proclaiming of King Charles in 1624–5. The city paid trumpeters (often numbered as four) to help celebrate the Queen's Holiday by 1590–1 (and consistently through 1600–1). The earliest apprenticeship indenture for a trumpeter appears in 1582–3 when Robert Aishely becomes the apprentice of Nicholas Holden, trumpeter. Holden also takes apprentices in 1582–3, 1588–9 (when he is revealed also to be a surgeon), and 1595–6. The only other trumpeter taking an apprentice is Francis Harburt in 1628–9. One trumpeter, Triggess by name, performed an important and poignant ceremony at the High Cross in 1603 related to the death of Elizabeth I and the subsequent accession of James I: 'ffirst Triggess the trumpeter sownded 4 times solemnely & mourefully, turning himselfe 4 seuerall wayes vppon the Crosse, for the death of her maiestie, and so for a while rested. Then began againe, sownding 4 times and 4 waies turning his face as before, but now ioyfully for the entrance of King Iames. After which the said sherife read the proclamation alowd and so concluded praying for his maiesties long and prosperous raigne, all our Councell stood with the maior before the Towlsey in scarlet gownes.' In 1604–5 Triggess would be named again, along with the waits, at the proclamation of King James, at which unnamed waits also received payment.

Trumpeters from other places also played in Bristol. Five 'strange' trumpeters who arrived 'in the Shippes that came from Cataya' sounded their instruments before the mayor, aldermen, and common council in 1577–8 and the king's trumpeters were paid to perform in 1614–15, 1617–18, and 1619–20.

A drummer was also paid for his part in the Michaelmas swearing-in of the mayor in 1577–8, 1578–9, and 1579–80, in which year the drummer and a boy were paid for three days' work for proclaiming the impending St Peter's Day Watch in the Marsh. In 1580–1 the records separate the drummer and fife player from the trumpeters, although they all remained involved in the swearing-in ceremonies for the mayor. The first Bristol drummer known by name is 'Awdley the drumme player,' who is paid in both 1568–9 and 1569–70. As part of the civic welcome of the queen in 1574, the earl of Pembroke in 1585–6, and the earls of Leicester and Warwick in 1586–7, the city held ceremonial musters and hired three drummers. Another, named 'Lewes the drumer,' appears in the records when the corporation gave 12d towards his funeral expenses in the Lady Day quarter of 1597.

The Records demonstrate that musicians (minstrels, waits, drummers, trumpeters, fife-players) were an important part of the fabric of Bristol society before 1642 and further, especially through personal wills and inventories, we know that musical instruments were valued domestic possessions in homes in Bristol in the seventeenth century.

Royal Visits

Before 1642 Bristol hosted numerous visits by royalty or members of the nobility from the 'Empress' (the never-crowned Queen Matilda) in 1139 to the earl of Essex in 1621.¹⁴³ The visits of reigning monarchs included John in 1210, Henry III in 1217 and 1256,¹⁴⁴ Edward I in 1282, Richard II in 1399, Henry VI in 1446,¹⁴⁵ Edward IV in 1461 and 1475, Henry VII in 1486, Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn in 1534,¹⁴⁶ Elizabeth I in 1574, and James I's queen, Anne of Denmark, in 1613. Evidence of dramatic or quasi-dramatic events exists for only four of these visits: Edward IV in 1461, Henry VII in 1486, Elizabeth I in 1574, and Queen Anne in 1613.

The earliest Bristol royal entry in the records occurs with the September 1461 visit of Edward IV when performances took place at Temple Gate and Temple Cross and involved William the Conqueror and St George on horseback fighting a dragon while a king and queen watched from a castle and a princess waited with a lamb; at the ultimate slaying of the dragon (a medieval symbol of evil) by St George, a choir of angels sang.

The first direct reference to the word 'pageant' in relation to a royal entry occurs a quarter of a century later in the 23–6 May 1486 First Provincial Progress of Henry VII. This entry suggests that a guild possibly produced at least one of the pageants, with the reference to the 'pageant made called the Shipwrightes pageaunt' clearly being a dumb show (ie, silent or mute), although it is not known if the Shipwrights themselves were in any way involved in the pageant. Of the other pageants, whose sponsorship is even less specific, one included 'great melodie and singing' and another 'maydyn Childern Richely besene'; on a fifth and final pageant 'An Olifaunte with A castell on his bakke Curiously wrought The Resurreccion of our lorde in the highest Tower of the same.' The scripted pageants related to the Henry VII entry are religiously oriented and remind the reader very much of the medieval drama of the period. They call on 'Crist therfor that on crosse diede/ Thoroughe the mediacion of holy seintes all' to save the king and to confound his enemies. These were still Catholic times, to be sure.

When Elizabeth I visited Bristol in 1574, the guilds were no longer involved in the presentation of performance pageants, dumb or otherwise; the performed text refers to Christians twice (but to Christ and the saints not at all) and never resorts to the kind of medieval boilerplate of the text used at the visit of Elizabeth's grandfather eighty-eight years – and a Reformation – earlier. The city spent almost £1,000 on the festivities related to this royal entry, which involved three days of mock battles in the Marsh including a payment of £6 13s 4d to Thomas Churchyard 'for his travayle bothe in the ffortes and concernyng oracions' (see p 88) and of £1 7s 6d to Mr Dunne, the schoolmaster. The accounts make clear that Churchyard was the primary author of the scripted event; Bergeron points out that 'for the first time in this historical period we can be certain about the identity of the deviser of entertainment.'¹⁴⁷ Because of Churchyard's comment that some of his speeches 'could not be spoken' because of Schoolmaster Dunne's envy, we also know not only the author of the text, but the co-producer/director of the production.

For Queen Anne's stay in Bristol in 1613, a similar (but shorter) event occurred with the high point undoubtedly being the vast naumachia (mock sea battle) on the river on the afternoon of Monday, 7 June 1613, which Ricart describes as follows: 'there was a show made for pleasure on the River, by a shipp, sett on, & assaulted by two Turkishe Gallies, a scaffold ... for hir Maiestie to behould the same, and the takinge of the said shipp in fight by the said Gallies which her Maiestie beheld with great delight.' But the Gunpowder Plot of 5 November 1605, occurring as it did in James I's third year on the throne, clearly remained painfully etched in Stuart memory and the common council took extraordinary action in May of 1613 to ensure the queen's security. They provided three captains with three companies of men to protect her and to enhance her sense of security the council ordered all ordnance 'to be shotte of after her maiestye ys gonne into her house' and that no one was 'to shoote in any wise vntill her highnes be in her Lodginge and all the horses placed in Stables' (see pp 175–6). No such obvious security precautions were taken for the 1574 visit of Elizabeth I even though it occurred at a time when Mary, queen of Scots, still lived, the Spanish Armada had yet to be defeated and, in the eyes of the Church of Rome, Elizabeth held the throne illegitimately.

Conclusion

From nearly four centuries until the closing of the public theatres at the beginning of the Civil War in 1642, Bristol has surviving records which relate directly to performance involving drama, music, and public ceremony. Well before Bristol was granted status as an independent county in 1373, the town had already established complex infrastructures to support entertainment and related civic ritual. After Bristol officially became a city in 1542 an increase in the visits of travelling players seems to have ensued and continued for the rest of the century. By the time of James I's accession Bristol would have one and eventually two privately-owned playhouses. Always one of England's premier provincial cities in terms of trade, commerce, and quality of life, Bristol demonstrates by its records the extent of its interest and involvement in performance-related activity in the late medieval and early modern period.

The Documents

Elizabeth Ralph, Guide to the Bristol Archives Office (Bristol, 1971), ix, points out that 'Bristol has a long tradition of record keeping,' dating from 1381 when the first ordinances provided for record keeping and storage. But even before 1381 documents were preserved with the oldest one being a late twelfth-century charter. Before the Reformation, Bristol kept its records primarily in the Guildhall. St George's Chapel, which adjoined the Guildhall, became the principal storage place after the 1540s, but it is clear from the records that documents were also kept in other locations.

With the opening of the Record Office in 1924, a modern system of arranging the records was established and the notion of one place where all documents, ancient and modern, would be kept was entertained. During World War II, the records were moved to an obsolete railway tunnel which was converted into a strong-room. Unfortunately, the parish churches had not yet seen fit to transfer their ancient records to the Record Office. Bristol was heavily blitzed and, of the eighteen ancient parish churches, six were destroyed utterly and along with them many of their records. Thus when recreating the past through surviving accounts, it is well to keep in mind that those records which have survived did so serendipitously and that there are, in fact, huge gaps in our knowledge of pre-1642 Bristol due to the actions of German bombers in this century. In 1956 the Record Office moved into the new Council House in College Green, where it remained until 1992 when it moved into its present location in Smeaton Road.

The Bristol Reference Library, which originated in 1613, also houses records important to this volume, while in London, the British Library, Public Record Office, Lambeth Palace Library, and Dulwich College hold relevant documents. Other repositories holding documents important to this collection include Berkeley Castle, the Cardiff County Library, Gloucester Library, the Hereford and Worcester Record Office, and the Somerset Record Office.

The text of this collection follows a standard order within each year, which this section of description and discussion reflects, beginning with civic records and continuing with guild, ecclesiastical, legal, probate, royal entry, and miscellaneous records. Antiquarian documents are identified in the left margin of the text with A or AC.

Civic Records

MAYORS' AUDITS

The Mayors' Audits or Great Audit Books are extant from 1531 through 1785 and form the bulk of the surviving records for Bristol. Probably established after 1499 with the creation of the office of chamberlain, the Mayors' Audits record all receipts and payments of the corporation. The accounting year for the Mayors' Audits runs from the day after Michaelmas (30 September) to Michaelmas (29 September). Thus 04026(1), for example, encompasses the period 30 September 1531 through 29 September 1533. The annual accounts were rendered within one month of the feast of St Luke the Evangelist (18 October) for the previous Michaelmas to Michaelmas accounting year.

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04026(1-21); 1531-1644; English; paper; number and size of leaves variable; contemporary pagination; flourished initials and elaborate headings appear regularly; bound in vellum, volume 8 was at one time covered with parchment fragments of sheet music from a late 15th-century missal.

This is, in fact, part of a volume entitled: 'Lord Lisle's etc. Lands Audit.' It is not clear how it came to be separated from the other Mayors' Audits.

ORDINANCES OF THE COMMON COUNCIL

The two volumes of Ordinances are continuations of ordinances which appear in the Little Red Book beginning in 1344 and continuing therein until the mid-fifteenth century. The ordinances then appear in the Great Red Book until 1485. A gap exists between this last entry in 1485 and the beginning of the volumes below in 1505. Both these sets of ordinances contain virtually identical prohibitions against performing in the Guildhall, with the version printed in the Records being the more final and complete version. There is a third Ordinance volume in this series, 04273(2), but it contains no information relevant for the Records text.

The first of these volumes, 04272, has been published by Maureen Stanford (ed), The Ordinances of Bristol, 1506–1598, Bristol Record Society, vol 41 (Gloucester, 1990).

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04273(1); 1505–1674; Latin and English; paper; ii + 120 + vi; 320mm x 200mm; some contemporary foliation, modern pencil foliation after f 66; some flourished initials; excellent condition; white leather bound, title on spine: 'Ordinances.'

GREAT RED BOOK

The Great Red Book supplements the Little Red Book and contains copies of deeds, wills, ordinances, safe conducts, and licences to trade from the fourteenth to the sixteenth centuries. Although the book as a whole is not in strictly chronological order, the section of early ordinances is so organized as to allow a two-year date range to be assigned to the excerpt printed on p 7. The Great Red Book has been edited and printed by E. W. W. Veale (ed), The Great Red Book of Bristol, Bristol Record Society, vols 2, 4, 8, 16, 18 (Bristol, 1931–53).

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04719; 14th–16th century; English, Anglo-Norman, and Latin; paper with some parchment; 344 leaves; 385mm x 290mm (290mm x 190mm); older ink pagination; some decorated initials; very good condition; rebound with possibly original tooled, blind-stamped leather cover incorporated, title on spine: 'BRISTOL CORPORATION GREAT RED BOOK.'

LITTLE RED BOOK

Ralph, Guide to the Bristol Archives Office (p 2), says the Little Red Book was 'compiled at the instigation of William de Colford, Recorder of Bristol, who "caused the ordinances, customs and liberties ... to be recorded and entered in this book together with certain laws, other memoranda and divers necessary things to be inviolably kept in perpetual remembrance", 1344–

1574. It contains a contemporary copy of the "Lex Mercatoria" and the Laws of Oleron. The Little Red Book became the official memoranda book of the mayor and commonalty.' The Little Red Book has been published by Francis B. Bickley (ed), The Little Red Book of Bristol, 2 vols (Bristol, 1900).

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04718; 1344–1574; English, Latin, and French; paper with vellum fly-leaves; 230 leaves (4 blanks and index at end); 290mm x 220mm; contemporary foliation in roman numerals (first 11 leaves only numbered in arabic); original red leather binding over board, probably dates from the late 15th century.

GREAT WHITE BOOK

Ralph, Guide to the Bristol Archives Office (p 3), says the Great White Book was 'begun for the entry of the dispute between the Abbot of St. Augustine's and the Corporation but contains enrolments of charters, deeds, etc., and forms yet another supplement to the Little Red Book, 1496–1587.'

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04721; 1491–1608; Latin and English; paper, with a late 15th-century watermark; 533 leaves (357 blanks); 350mm x 240mm; foliation contemporary with 1580s entries; board binding covered with vellum, repaired extensively in 1903 at the British Museum when it may have been rebound.

APPRENTICESHIP INDENTURES

The earliest Bristol Apprentice Book has been edited and published in D. RICART'S CALENDAR

Robert Ricart was elected town clerk in 1479 and served probably until 1508. Successive town clerks continued the Calendar until 1698. The Calendar is a collection of information regarding the history of Bristol combined with national historical facts as well as laws and customs of the community.

ADAMS' CHRONICLE OF BRISTOL

This chronicle survives in two manuscript recensions, described below. Most of the substantive variations in the 1625 recension either provide further details for, or clarify material in, the 1623 version; in some instances the 1625 version is more succinct. The 1625 recension appears in the Records, while notes on the 1623 version appear in the Endnotes, because these revisions suggest that the 1625 version is a more finished text. Both versions contain references to events in the 1630s and 1640s, which suggests that both continued to be used, presumably by the author. One of the additions in the 1625 version is a preface explaining the author's motives in writing his Chronicle, in which Adams states, 'Many are the causes that ⁱⁿcyted me to write [to write] this booke, before I resolved to take the paines: ffirst at a time of two yeares leisure I had read much and kept some privat notes thereof; then considering that much reading littell availeth in a commonwealth, without participating of some records thereof vnto posteritie.' It is thus possible that the 1623 version represents those notes or an early draft based upon them and that Adams continued to use it to record initial impressions in draft form, which were then worked over for transferral to the fair version begun in 1625.

Both versions were in antiquarian hands before passing into the possession of the Record Office and the Reference Library, respectively, but an early-eighteenth-century note suggests that BRO: 13748(4) may have remained in the Adams family for a time. The 1623 version has been edited by Francis F. Fox, Adams's Chronicle of Bristol, transcribed by E. Salisbury (Bristol, 1910), but Fox was apparently unaware of the existence of the 1625 recension. The 1623 version is also the version which was known to William Tyson, editor of The Bristol Memorialist in 1823.

The work is unequally divided into two sections: the first section is a short general chronicle of the history of Britain drawn from printed sources such as Thomas Lanquet's Epitome of Chronicles (STC:15217–15221; he is named in the 1625 recension) and David Powell (named in the 1623 version; the work referred to may be STC: 20109, Powell's edition of an abridgement of Geoffrey of Monmouth). But the larger section is an annal of Bristol's history, arranged by mayoralty and beginning in 1216. Ricart's Calendar is probably a source for the early years but beginning at some point in the later sixteenth century Adams is likely recounting events which he himself witnessed.

ANTIQUARIAN COLLECTIONS

Queen Elizabeth's Hospital Treasurers' Book (AC)

Extracts from this now lost source come from an antiquarian collection described as follows by Latimer in his own hand in 1895 in an introduction to the collection:

The five volumes forming this collection were ... compiled by Mr Richard Smith, a celebrated Bristol surgeon during the first forty years of the nineteenth century, and a devoted admirer of the British stage from youth to old age.

It appears to have been Mr Smith's intention to publish a series of articles on 'The Stage in Bristol' in the Bristol Mirror, of which he was long one of the proprietors, and some notes made for this purpose will be found at the beginning of this volume. Owing probably to growing infirmities this project was abandoned; and the entire compilation was presented to the Bristol Library Society either by Mr Smith himself, or, soon after his death, by his widow.

The first volume relates to entertainment before 1642 and contains Smith's transcription of now lost accounts of money being paid to Queen Elizabeth's Hospital during the period 1614–19 out of income from the playhouse in Wine Street, in compliance with Nicholas Woolfe's will. That transcription is on an unnumbered sheet inserted after p 4, here designated pp [4a–4b].

Richard Smith was born 28 June 1772. He was elected surgeon at the Bristol Royal Infirmary in 1796 and became senior surgeon in 1812, a post he held until his sudden death on 14 January 1843.

Bristol, Bristol Reference Library, B7976, SR 26; paper; v + 210 + xiii; leaves of varying size (largest 325mm x 200mm); irregular foliation and pagination, with the numbering out of sequence and beginning over; late 19th- or early 20th-century claret binding, title on spine: 'Bristol Theatre to 1764.'

Guild Records

Of the more than fifty guilds known to have prospered in Bristol before 1642, from Apothecaries to Wire drawers, only three – the Bakers, Soapmakers, and Wire drawers and Pinmakers – contain information relevant to this volume. Five other Bristol guilds have also left records, none of which has proved relevant: the Feltmakers and Haberdashers; Merchants; Merchant Tailors; Tailors; and Whittawers. The fascinating and rather complete Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' Accounts provide the reader with a glimpse of the nature and range of guild activity in Bristol.

other words in the entries; original leather binding, bound in 1753 by Mr Giles Malpas, pinmaker, Bristol (accounts for 1587 bound upside down at the end). The volume contains the 1628, 1640, and 1651–1720 apprentice rolls.

Ecclesiastical Records

Skeeters points out in Community and Clergy that before 1534, Bristol had 'divided and distant ecclesiastical authorities' (p 35) because, while most of the city was in the diocese of Worcester, the parishes south of the Avon (St Thomas, Temple, and St Mary Redcliffe) were in the diocese of Bath and Wells. When suffragan bishops were created in 1534, Bristol received one and indeed Bristol was considered as a site for a new see in 1539 (p 123). When the new diocese of Gloucester was established in September 1541 Bristol was a part of it but on the following 4th of June 1542, the king established the separate diocese of Bristol.

REGISTER OF BISHOP GODFREY GIFFARD

This entry from the diocese of Hereford and Worcester is included because it relates to events leading to the composition of a notorious song about William de Lay, executed at Bristol Castle and later buried in the parish of St Philip and St James in Bristol.

BISHOP'S COURT DEPOSITION BOOK

PARISH RECORDS

Although six of the parish churches were destroyed during World War II, some of their records survived. Such is the case for the Temple churchwardens' accounts, and antiquarian collections such as Hockaday's (for St Mary le Port) and Archley's (St Nicholas), which provide valuable information for this volume. Those parishes whose extant records have yielded nothing relevant for this collection are All Saints, St Augustine-the-Less, St Leonard, St Michael-on-the-Mount-Without, St Peter, St Philip and St James, St Stephen, and St Werburgh.

ANTIQUARIAN RECORDS

St Mary le Port Churchwardens' Accounts (AC)

The original churchwardens' accounts for St Mary le Port from which antiquarian Frank Step Hockaday made his transcript were destroyed along with the church itself in the 1940 air raid which destroyed much of Bristol's historic centre. Hockaday worked for sixteen years before his death in 1924 on diocesan records then held in the Gloucester Public Library. The Hockaday Abstracts (vols 425–53), as they have become known, include transcripts of records, some of them since lost, relating to Bristol parishes and religious houses, including All Saints (vol 432), Christ Church (vol 434), St Augustine-the-Less and St Ewen (vol 437), St James (vol 438), St John Baptist (vol 439), St Lawrence and St Leonard (vol 440), St Mark's (Gaunt's) Hospital (vol 441), St Mary le Port (vol 442), St Mary Redcliffe (vol 443), St Michael (vol 444), St Nicholas (vols 445–6), St Peter (vol 447), St Philip and St James (later Jacob) (vol 448), St Stephen (vols 449–50), St Thomas (vol 451), St Werburgh (vol 452), and Temple (vol 453).

St Nicholas Churchwardens' Accounts (A)

The parish records of St Nicholas were lost during the bombing of Bristol in World War II. Fortunately, some transcripts from the lost parish records of St Nicholas were published by two local historians in the nineteenth century.

Cuthbert Atchley examined both the Vestry Book and the Churchwardens' Accounts for St Nicholas. He described the Vestry book, covering a period from 1385 to 1880, as 'made up of leaves of vellum, 30 cms. by 20 cms., and covered by what appears to be the original leather binding. It contains inventories, wills, memoranda of benefactions, rents, and vestry agreements or resolutions.'¹⁴⁸ The Churchwardens' Accounts, running from 1520 to 1604, included accounts for the crypt (1523, 1531, and 1548), the chantry of Robert Spicer (1489–92), and the chapel of St John the Evangelist on the Avon, within the parish boundaries.¹⁴⁹

SHERIFF OF BRISTOL VS MAYOR OF BRISTOL ET AL

These documents are part of a very early Star Chamber case in which William Dale, one of Bristol's sheriffs, sued the mayor and corporation over personal financial demands of his civic office. Because some of the disputed expenses are entertainment related, the case is important in forming a picture of civic ceremony in Bristol at the beginning of the sixteenth century. WILL OF JOHN BOUNT

According to New College Hall Books, Bount was admitted to New College, Oxford, in 1387, became a fellow in 1389, and left in 1395. He had the BA by 1391.¹⁵⁰ A student of Winchester College before attending New College, Bount was also probably a barrister of the Middle Temple: he describes a junior barrister there as 'my beloved colleague' ('socio meo dilecto') and makes a bequest to an officer of the Middle Temple for his great goodness to the testator.¹⁵¹

John Fowens was a sheriff of Bristol in 1601–2, and was a successful merchant and member of the Spanish Company in 1605. As late as October of 1608, less than a year before his death the following August, he was one of those who protested the new imposition on sweet wine. A John Fowens, probably his son, became a merchant venturer, too, in 1622 and was part owner of the ships, The Charles and The Saint George, in 1629.

Bristol, Bristol Record Office, 04421(3)a; 1595–1633; English; paper; 318 leaves; 420mm x 270mm (360mm x 215mm); original ink foliation upper right corner (rewritten to the left probably in 17th century due to wearing away of numbers); good condition; initial letter of each will emboldened and slightly decorated; original vellum binding, title on spine: 'Register | Book | of | Wills | [rule] | No. 3.' This volume, known as the Great Orphan Book, contains enrolled wills, including that of John Fowens (28 March 1609) on f 79.

WILL OF NICHOLAS WOOLFE

Nicholas Woolfe was a wealthy Bristol cutler who owned shops and houses in Wine Street and elsewhere in the city, including the playhouse in Wine Street and the White Hart Inn in Broad Street. He was married three times, to Alice, Joyce (mother of Miles), and Margaret, who survived him upon his death in 1614. Woolfe had one sister, Alice Woolfe Payne, and brothers Roger, William, and Leonard. Roger's son, Isaak, and William's son, John, appear in the early seventeenth-century Christ Church Easter Book list, indicating that they lived with Nicholas Woolfe and his wife at that time, perhaps because their fathers had died and/or they were serving apprenticeships under their uncle.

RICHARD FERRIS' VOYAGE TO BRISTOL BY ROWBOAT FROM LONDON

Richard Ferris (fl. 1590) was an adventurer and royal messenger attached to the household of Elizabeth I. Not a trained sailor, he nevertheless vowed to row in an open boat (with two friends, Andrew Hill and William Thomas) from London to Bristol. The voyage began on Midsummer Day at Tower Wharf and reached Bristol the following 3 August. The successful exploit greatly appealed to all the citizenry and Ferris became somewhat of a national hero as a result. He printed a prose account of the voyage and included with it a sonnet by James Sargent which described Ferris' arrival in Bristol.

EDWARD ALLEYN'S LETTER TO HIS WIFE

Edward Alleyn, one of the premier actors of the era (rivalled only perhaps by Richard Burbage), created the great lead roles in Marlowe's best-known plays. A member of the lord admiral's men by 1589, he was also associated with Lord Strange's men and Philip Henslowe (whose step-daughter, Joan Woodward, became Alleyn's wife) and the Rose Theatre in Southwark. Alleyn built the Fortune in 1600 where he led the lord admiral's men. He founded Dulwich College in 1619 with part of the endowment for it coming from the freehold of the Fortune Theatre.

This holograph letter is bound as ff 13–13v in a volume with other letters, receipts, and patents for 1559–1662.

London, Dulwich College Library, ms 1; 1593; English; paper; single sheet; 300mm x 420mm which folds to 300mm x 210mm; no decoration; address side reads: 'This be delyvered | to mistress hinslo on of the [seal gone] | grounes of hir maister | chamber dwelling | on the banksid | right over against | the clink.'

MERRIE CONCEITED JESTS OF GEORGE PEELE

George Peele (c 1558–c 1597) was the noted dramatist and poet, Oxford scholar, and 'University

Wit' whose body of literary works consists of plays, pageants, and miscellaneous 'gratulatory' verse. He is described by the DNB (p 674) as 'one of the most prominent figures among Shakespeare's "predecessors" and earlier contemporaries.' The work was entered into the Stationers' Register in 1605, with the earliest known edition appearing in 1607.

LETTER FROM JOHN CHAMBERLAIN TO DUDLEY CARLETON

John Chamberlain (1553–1627) was an independently wealthy scholar and letter writer, described by the DNB as 'the Horace Walpole of his day.' He was close friends with the eminent men of his day, including Sir Dudley Carleton. By the time of this letter, Chamberlain, who rarely travelled, had visited Carleton in Venice in 1611 when Carleton was ambassador there. His letters are of great value today because they include 'many details concerning public occurrences not mentioned by graver historians' (DNB).

Dudley Carleton (1573–1632), became a highly successful diplomat during the reigns of James I and Charles I. Carleton, a member of parliament, eventually served as ambassador to Venice, having received his knighthood in September 1610 before arriving in Venice the following November. Returning to England in 1615, he was instrumental in bringing peace to Europe through his work with the treaty of Asti. He was eventually rewarded for his years of service by being made a member of the privy council; in May 1626 he became Lord Carleton of Imbercourt. He was a voluminous writer of letters; the DNB says 'few writers of English have surpassed him in the power of making his meaning obvious without effort and without unnecessary verbiage.'

London, Public Record Office, SP 14/74; 10 June 1613; English; paper; bifolium; 315mm x 420mm; bound as item 1 (ff 2–3) with other documents in modern red binding, title on spine: 'SP | 14 | State | Papers | Domestic | James I | 74.'

LETTER FROM SIR GEORGE BUC TO LORD CHAMBERLAIN

Sir George Buc or Buck (d. 1623) was an historian, poet, and master of the revels. He was an official of the revels office by 1601, deputy master by 1603, and succeeded Tilney in 1610. He was involved, from that time until his retirement due to illness in 1622, in the licensing of plays for publication as well as approval for players and other performers to ply their trades.

Editorial Procedures

Principles of Selection

Theatre historians – indeed, all historians – make choices and this section is about the choices made in the creation of this volume, which attempts to include all known documentary evidence of drama, music, and mimetic ceremony in Bristol before 1642. The REED research editor must first research the printed references and sources related to pre-1642 documents for a given geographical area before proceeding to locate the extant documents themselves. The word ‘extant’ is crucial, of course, because the records which survive for any locality do so for many reasons, such as historical chance; in some cases, to be sure, records may never have existed of events which would have been relevant to this volume. What the editor examines initially then – in the record offices, the church vaults, the reference libraries, and other repositories – is the written record of past events, records which are very often characterized by ‘gaps’ or ‘missing pieces’ caused by such diverse important historical events as the dissolution of the religious houses between 1536–9 and the action of German bombers over Bristol in 1940. It is extremely frustrating, for instance, that the Mayors’ Audits, which form a considerable portion of this volume and on which the dating process for the volume is based, have not survived from before 1531 or for several key years in the first decade of the seventeenth century.

Given that the overall body of records is incomplete, then it is of equal concern that the records which have survived are full of ambiguity and imprecision. A written record of an historical event oftentimes telescopes that event, just as our pocket calendars today telescope what we actually do on any given day. Events of a high importance (a royal entry), of a peculiar or unusual nature (damage to the Guildhall due to a rowdy audience), or of financial concern (an approved civic payment to a ‘vendor’) generally are likely to appear. Many events, however, which undoubtedly occurred but were of less significance, were not unusual, or involved no money changing hands, probably went unrecorded. All the plays performed in Bristol probably had titles, for instance, but definite titles survive for only three and possible titles survive for three more (and we are extremely grateful for that small favour). We therefore know less than 5 per cent of the titles of all the plays performed and it is not at all clear why the scribe chose to include these few. While the REED editor might wish that a scribe had been more specific or verbose, that is not the nature of the accounting; indeed, the extent of contraction used throughout the civic and parish records attests to the desire to document only what was deemed absolutely necessary. Surviving records are thus largely a form of shorthand, a minimalist account representing larger, more complex goings-on.

Having located and read virtually all the relevant records known to him or her, the REED editor must then decide what to transcribe and what to pass over at each turn of the folio. The records which have survived are as chaotic as reality itself and the REED editor must attempt to bring order out of this chaos. Further distillation occurs during the complex and extended editorial process to create ultimately a volume that is as complete 'an interim report' (as Harold F. Brooks taught me all scholarly effort was) as it can possibly be.

This volume attempts to conform to the general REED guidelines in selecting passages for inclusion. There is no difficulty including events which are by their very nature clearly dramatic (a literary text, such as one 'spoken' at a royal entry) or theatrical (performance itself, such as a visit of an itinerant company of players). More murky and less understood activities, such as inter-parish Corpus Christi processions, guild sponsored pageant-bearing, and inner parish sepulchre watching demand some thought and decision making. Context is important, too, and so, as appropriate, an entire entry has been printed to place the relevant performance portion of that entry into its larger context.

Bristol enjoyed a rich history of both parish supported Corpus Christi processions and guild sponsored processional 'pageant-bearing' on the same day. While I have not found clear evidence to connect the two, it is enticing to presume a relationship between them. However, no evidence exists to support drama of any kind related to Corpus Christi. It is for this reason that the extensive surviving references to Corpus Christi liturgical celebrations in such records as the St Mary Redcliffe Churchwardens' Accounts and the All Saints Churchwardens' Accounts have been omitted from this volume. Guild pageant-bearing in Bristol could certainly be visually elaborate but was clearly more closely related to a parade with floats than to a play in performance. I have nevertheless included all references in the records which include the word 'pageant,' even when there is no reason to suppose that the pageant is dramatic in nature, in the hope that the Bristol volume will help us to learn more about the word 'pageant,' that is, what the 'pageant' was not as well as what it was. Indeed, the Bristol records indicate it is misleading to assume that the word 'pageant' is synonymous with the word 'play.'

The annual medieval Easter liturgical observation known as sepulchre watching is clearly outside the bounds of the REED project and therefore references to Easter sepulchres and sepulchre watching in parish churches have been excluded. An elaborate 1470 sepulchre constructed in the church of St Mary Redcliffe, the gift of the wealthy benefactor and frequent mayor of the city, William Canynges, possibly had dynamic qualities but despite the vivid nature of its description, the St Mary Redcliffe sepulchre was probably static.¹⁵³ Certainly no evidence of a relation between this sepulchre (or any sepulchre in Bristol) and liturgical drama has survived.

This volume excludes perambulations to mark parish boundaries and routine parish 'ringings' except when supplemental music is mentioned. Annual general account dinners, Advent civic 'drinkings,' and 'fishings' have been omitted, festive though they may have been. 'Wrestlings' have been included when they are part of an entry which includes minstrels, waits, and/or bearwards. Civic musters have been excluded due to their essentially martial nature, even though they inevitably involved the 'music' of fifes and drums.

Surnames can be problematic in fourteenth-century (or earlier) records when a name like 'le harper' may also refer to a profession. However, the surname Player, of a family associated with the parish of St Philip and St James from the sixteenth century onwards, is clearly only a surname; there is nothing to link them to drama in Bristol. Occupation titles also can be misleading. For example, the numerous references to 'showmen' relate not to half the population of Bristol being involved in 'show' business but rather to the many persons who made shoes and have thus been excluded.

References to 'singing men' have been excluded since they almost certainly provided choral music for the church (the equivalent of modern male church choirs) and, as such, occupy a place in the liturgical, not dramatic, history of Bristol. For the same reason I have excluded the cornet player hired by St John Baptist's parish from 1635 onwards because the records suggest liturgical accompaniment. I have included, however, the records of parishes hiring civic waits and musicians for what was probably an unusual or special event, perhaps outside the liturgy, such as an account dinner or at Christmas for carols. Generally, I have excluded references to musicians which are not related to their profession as performers, such as 'Lynzye the wayte player' selling a coverlet (see above, p xli).

The citizens of Bristol routinely celebrated the sovereign's birthday and other important events with elaborate bonfires. In the absence of clear references to related dramatic or musical activity, such bonfires have been excluded.

General REED policy excludes the enormous task of systematically searching all wills but when a printed source indicates something of interest, wills are included. Also when a person is named in the records, the will of that person has been searched, where possible (usually to no avail). This was done for the wills of the persons known to have been involved with Nicholas Woolfe late in his life when he owned the playhouse in Wine Street. Comprehensive systematic searches of royal accounts for records relating to royal visits in Bristol also have not been done.

Dating

It is fortunate that most of the surviving records in Bristol refer to very particular dates. For the extensive Mayors' Audits it is generally possible to date events to a specific week within a specific quarter of a specific year, something relatively rare in civic accounting practice. In Bristol the Mayors' Audits form the bulk of the extant documents relating to civic entertainment and they contain a rather detailed and complex dating system. They are organized on a Michaelmas to Michaelmas fiscal year (30 September–29 September) which was divided into four quarters: the day after Michaelmas (30 September) to Christmas (25 December); the day after Christmas (26 December) to Lady Day (25 March); the day after Lady Day (26 March) to Midsummer (24 June); and the day after Midsummer (25 June) to Michaelmas (29 September). The records in this volume are therefore arranged according to this civic fiscal year; thus Edward Alleyn's 1 August 1593 letter to his wife appears under the year heading 1592–3. Bristol is unusual in its practice of referring to the quarters of the year by the ending feast rather than the beginning feast (in most communities, for example, the fourth quarter is called Midsummer from its commencement instead of Michaelmas for its conclusion).

Within each quarter, entries relate to specific Sunday to Saturday weeks, generally a very workable system which produces only the occasional long or short week problem at the beginning or end of the quarter, which is so noted in the Endnotes. Under this system of dating the margin of error should always be small, as in 1535–6, for example, when the weekly account was made up later than it should have been and an item that belonged to the following week was entered by mistake, or in 1543–4 when a payment made on 17 January was lumped in with the accounts for 20–6 January.

The chamberlains started to combine weeks late in the sixteenth century and in the seventeenth they gave up weekly entries completely in favour of ones which go quarter by quarter. In these cases the editorial dating subhead indicates the inclusive dates for the chamberlain's recording of the payment, the event having occurred at some time previous to the account entry itself.

Most of the original documents are based on a calendar year that began on 25 March and some documents are dated by regnal year. In all cases I have converted the entries according to modern practice and indicated dates falling between 1 January and 25 March by a split year. Thus a date given as 20 January 1524/5 indicates 1525 by our present reckoning of a new year on 1 January but 1524 by the English ecclesiastical calendar, according to which the year changed on Lady Day, 25 March. Although the dating within the volume is based on the Michaelmas–Michaelmas accounting year of the Mayors' Audits, other groups had different accounting years and they are so noted in editorial subheadings. At both St Ewen's and Christ Church parishes, for instance, the churchwardens usually ran a March to March accounting year while at St Mary Redcliffe the accounting year was December to December (usually around St Nicholas' Day).

Editorial Conventions

Each entry is preceded by a heading with the year, ms or book identification, and folio, page, or membrane number; antiquarian sources are noted in the left margin as Antiquarian Compilations (A) or Antiquarian Collections (AC). Where documents from different sources appear under the same year they follow the sequence established in the Documents section of the Introduction.

I have attempted to preserve the general layout of the manuscript originals, although the lineation of the original has not been retained in continuous prose passages. Right-hand marginalia have been set in the left margin of the text and accompanied by the symbol ®. Raised dots have been moved down to the line and therefore appear as modern full stops (a period). Emendations and scribal errors are noted at the foot of the page. Larger issues and problems are discussed more extensively in the Endnotes or Documents section of the Introduction. Italics and other typefaces from early printed books have not been reproduced. Also the ligatures common in early printed books, especially in black letter type, have not been preserved.

The punctuation of the manuscripts has been retained. Virgules have been indicated as / and //. Braces have not been reproduced unless they are a significant feature of the layout. Diacritics used to distinguish 'y' from 'p' and 'u' from 'n' and line-fillers have been omitted.

The spelling and capitalization of the original manuscripts have been preserved. The 'þ' and 'ȝ' have been retained throughout as have the 'ff' for 'F' and the 'I' for modern 'J'. Ornamental or very large capitals in all manuscripts have been transcribed as regular capitals but noted. When it has been especially difficult to distinguish a capital from a lower-case letter, I have opted for lower case.

Abbreviated words have been expanded with italics to indicate letters supplied by the editor. The practice of individual scribes has been followed where it could be determined. When no consistent scribal practice could be observed, Latin abbreviations have been expanded according to standard classical orthography and English to modern British forms. Abbreviations in common use today (eg, 's,' 'd,' 'li,' 'etc,' '&,' '&c,' and 'viz') and ones cumbersome to expand such as those typical of weights and measures ('ob' and 'lb') have been retained. 'XP' and 'xp' have been expanded as 'Christ' and christ. The sign ʒ has been expanded as the plural 'es,' 'is,' or 'ys' according to scribal practice, except where it follows an 'e,' when it becomes an 's.' In the Wiredrawers' and Pinmakers' Accounts a wide variety of hands and of practice within hands made it impossible to establish clear scribal practice and so the expansion 'es' was used throughout these records. Oriose flourishes have been ignored.

English words in Latin passages have not been declined. Place names, personal names, and surnames have only been expanded to normal spelling where ascertainable. All superscript letters have been lowered except when they are used with numerals.

- 110 Just as dancing money is unique to St Ewen’s (but is certainly related to performance

- and entertainment), references to the Dance of Pauls appear only in the All Saints' records. This seems likely to have been a copy of the famous painting of the Dance of Death associated with St Paul's Cathedral in London. The churchwardens' first recorded payments relate to the 'dance of pauls' in 1448 with William Wytney's bequest of £18 to make it (BRO: P/AS/ChW/3 p 164). Further references to the 'dance of Pauls' indicate it was hung up, taken down, and folded up and was used on St James' Day and All Saints' Day. References to the All Saints' 'dance of Pauls' survive through 1520. See Atchley, 'On the Parish Records of the Church of All Saints, Bristol,' pp 221–74. Atchley inexplicably says Wytney paid £43 (p 235).

- 115 Evidence from the Restoration period confirms theatrical activity at the Bristol fairs in the 1660s. On 23 July 1663 the master of the revels, Sir Henry Herbert, issued instructions to his messenger, Edward Thomas, to suppress at the fairs of Bristol all unlicensed 'musick, Cockfightings, maskings, prizes, Stage players, tumblers, vaulters, Dancers on the ropes, such as act, sett forth, shew, or present any play, shew, motion, feats of actiuity, or sights whatsoever' (BL: Add. MS 19, 256 f 75). These instructions may be Restoration 'boiler-plate' and may not accurately reflect the situation in Bristol even in 1663 but, taken at face value, they suggest that by the 1660s entertainment had become an important part of the Bristol fairs and the Crown therefore stepped in to control such activity. In addition a 1677 letter from Richard Blinman in Bristol to Increase Mather in New England also confirms theatrical activity at the St James Fair. Blinman writes, 'Cursed plays, by which ye nation is debauched, abound, which our city Experienced now at James's fayer' (Boston Public Library: MS AM. 1502, vol 1, no 74, also published in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society, ser 4, vol 8 (Boston, 1868), 329–30). From these Restoration records it is easy to infer (but impossible to prove) that theatrical activity had been a part of the great fairs before 1642.

Bland knows, by the colophon to MS 129, that Thomas Schort copied it over the New Gate in Bristol 8 May 1427 (pp 17–18), and Orme believes MS 129 to be representative of Richard Londe's teaching methods (Education in the West of England, 39).

Elizabeth 1's Visit to Bristol STC: 5232
ff 100v-10v*

THE VVHOLE ORder howe oure Soueraigne Ladye Queene Elizabeth, was receyued into the Citie of Bristow, and the speaches spoken before her presens, at her entry, with the residue of versis and matter that might not be spoken (for distance of the place) but sent in a boek ouer the Waetter.

At the hie Crosse in a disgised manner stoed Faem, very orderly set forth, and spoke as fol-loweth, by an excelent boy.

Ne fleet of foet, nor swift of wyng, nor skarce the thought in brest:

Nor yet the Arrowe out of Boe, nor Wynde that seld doth rest.
 Compaers with me quickworlds report, that som calls Flying Faem:
 A bruert of prayes, a blast of pomp, 5
 a blazer of good naem.
 The only lawd that Kyngs do seek,
 a Ioy to eatch estaet:
 A welcom freend that all men loues, and noen a liue doth haet. 10 Saluets the Queen of raer renowne, whose goodly gifts deuien:
 Throw Earth and Ayre with glory great,
 shall passe this tromp of mien.
 And knowing of thy commyng heer, 15
 my duetty bad me goe: I Before vnto this present place,
 the nues therof to shoe.
 No soenner was pronownst the name,
 but Baebis in street gan leap: 20
 The youth, the age, the ritch, the poer, cam runnyng all on heap.
 And clappyng hands, cried maynly out,
 O blessed be the owre:
 Our queen is comming to the town, 25 with princely trayne and powre.
 Than collors cast they oer the wawls,
 and deckt old howsis gaye:
 Out flue the bags a bout afayrs that long a hording laye. 30
 A sid they set thear townishe trashe, and works of gtedy gayen:
 And tornd thear toils to sports and mirth,
 and warlike pastimes playn.
 As shalbe seen to morn in feeld, 35
 if that your highnes pleas:
 Whear duetie haeth deuiesd by art,
 a shoe on land and seas
 To vtter matter yet vnknown, that shall explained be: 40

By sutch dom sights and shoes of war, as thear your grace shall se.

Thus subiects means to honor prince,
whoes sight they haue enioyd

Moest glad hit is thear hap to haue, thear saruice so employd.

¶ Than FAEM flang vp a great Garland, to the reioysyng of the beholders. |
At the next Gaet, and neer her highnes lodgyng stoed. iij. other boyes, called Salutation, Gratulacion, and Obedient goodwil, and. ij. of these boyes spake as follows, and all they three drue theyr swords whan it was named, the hoel staet is reddie to defend (agaynst all dissencions) a pesable Prynce.

Salutacion the first boy.

All hayll, O plant of grace, and speshall sprout of faem:

Most welcom to this Western coest,

20

O Perll and princely daem.

As loe, a custom is,

whear humble subiects dwels:

When Prince aprocheth neer their vew,

for ioy to ryng their bels.

25

So all that beareth lief,

in Bristow now this day:

Salutes the Queen from depth of breast, with welcom euery way.

And wee poer silly boyes,

that cam from skoell of laet:

Reioyce and clap our hands withall,

as members of thy staet.

Our dueties heer to shoe,

and further moer in deed:

35

Thear is a cause whearfore we say,

thy helpyng hand we need,

Heer is, O mightie Queen, in way of myrth and sport:

A matter moud tween Peace and warre,

40

and therfore buylt a Fort. |

Dissenshon breeds the brawll, and that is Pomp, and Pried:

 The Fort on law and order stands, and still in peace would bied.
 The Warrs is wicked world,
 as by his fruet is seen: 5
 The Fortres representith peace, and takes thy part O Queen.
 It seems the Gods have sent,
 in this great quarell now:
 A noble Iudge that shall with speed, 10
 decied the matter throw.

Gratulation the second boy.

Yea suer this is a sien, 15
 that all the gods aboue:
 Taks part with vs and freely heer, doth men and childern loue.
 In sutch a sharp conflyct, to send so suer a staye: 20
 That shall surseace Bellonas brags, and end our fearfull fray.
 A sottell Snack of laet, with sopples sugred words Haeth sleely crept in brestes of men, 25 and drawn out naked swords
 And with his wrangling taells, haeth stoerd vp strife ynoughe:
 And drawn the marchant from his traed, and plowman from the ploughe 30
 Disenshon is his naem,
 that all this mischeef breeds |
 Who still with drosse and roemish dregs, blinde peoples humour feeds:
 And maks them mortall sick, 35
 and sway somtims a sied:
 With wicked warrs, and wilfull brawls, that should with peace abied.
 But yet O peerles Prince,
 a true and loyall flock: 40 Agaynst the prowde presomtuious minds, are bent to stand the shock.

And swears by sacred Gods,
 not oen within this soyll:
 But reddy aer with loss of lief,
 to giue thy foes a foyll.
 For proof the feble youth, 5 and baebs of tender aeg:
 Daer draw their swords, in this attempt,
 to corb disorders raeg.
 Sens Englands hoep is com, to payse these things in brest: 10
 We daer not stay her longer heer,
 Whose trauell craueth rest.

¶ Obedient good will, the thyrd boy, who could not speak time was so far spent. 15

YEt if the Prince wold stay, or if men might make choice
 Of oen no bigger than my self, to speak in Citties voice
 I would declaer in deed, what deep desier they haue,
 To spend their goods, their lands, & lius, her staet in peace to saue 20
 But sens the time is short, & Prince to lodging goes
 I say god bles our Queen yat gius, the whit & fayr red Roes. I

¶ After these speeches wear ended. iij. hondreth Soldiours well appoynted, wayted on her highnes to her lodgyng, and 25 thear she beyng setled, they shot of thear peece in passyng good order, at which warnyng the great Artillery went of, a hundred and .xxx. cast peecis, and so the watche charged, and a hundreth shot apoynted for her Gard, her highnes rested that night, whear she lay all the season in Sir Iohn 30 Yongs house.

¶ A Fort was made beyond the water in a ground fit for that purpose, and to the saem as a frind (called Feble Pollecie) ioyned a littell Bastillion, builded on a hil, which was not 35 strong by reason of the weak mayntenance belonging ther vnto, to the which piel the Soldiours of the main fort did repayre, now must be understoed that dissension passyng between wars and peace (warrs beyng placed in sight) had sertayn speeches as follows, which speeches could not be sayd 40 in the heeryng of the prince, wherfore they wear put into a boek, and presented as heer after you shall kno.

Dissencion to the Citie to moue them to arms, hath his speeches as these things wear don in action.

The Sonday next the Queen went to the Colledge, to heer a Sarmond, whear thear was a speetch to be sayd and an Imme to be songe, the speeche 5 was left out by an occasion vnlooked for, but the Imme was songe by a very fien boye.

¶ The Speech at the Colledge. I

YOu subiects that desierd to se, 10
this gladsom preshos leam: Behold lo heer the only Ioye, and iuwell of the Ream.
A Prince in deed of princely minde, 15 that Princis loues and fears:
Whose passyng hed, yea all the staets,
of christen princis bears.
And throughly sees and loeks into,
as though a man might say: 20
Heer is the touchstoen for the Gold, the Piller, Prop, and stay.
Of eury region far or neer,
that to vs neyghbors aer:
How mutch is this poer Colledg bound, 25
in naked buildyngs baer.
For to receyue so bright a Star,
as clouds can skarce contayn:
Who for to se so small a Sell, hath taken so great payn. 30
The Pieps and Organs of our harts, shall yeld thee thank therfore:
By sound of Psalm, and sollemp Immes, yea could poer Preests do moer.
The Musicke that thy Chapel maks, 35 should be so sweet and shrill.
Might lull a sleep the Musis all,
and shaek Pernasoes hill.

The Songe.

O Happy ower of blis,

O Colledg thou dost se:
 The shado gon, the substance com,
 nay Sun doth shien on thee. |
 Away you bosum Snaeks, that sowes dissenshon heer: 5 Go make you neasts, whear Serpents breed, this soyll and coest is clear.
 Enchant no man with charms,
 ye shall receyue check maet:
 If that you play with paltring pawns, 10 before so great a staet.
 She hateth Hidras heds,
 and lous the harmles mind
 A foe to vice, a frend to grace, and bent therto by kind 15
 Which grace and grashos god, now gied her whear she goes:
 With treble grace throw troblous time, to tread on all her foes. 20

¶ A skafold the next day was set vp ful ouer agaynst the Fort, and the Prince beynge placed, the speeches shold haue bin spoken for the better vnderstanding of the deuised triumphe, so you must heer the speeches or els shal you be ingnorant of the hoel matter. 25

Dissension to peace (which was the mayn Fort) speaketh in a furie these words that follow.

O People vayn, that spends in peace your dayes 30
 To prowle about, for pens and piuish pealf
 And maks no count, of Faem and poblik prayes
 So eatch man liues, like Prince within him self. |
 And so posses, the pleasuers on this mold,
 The Iuwels braue, the gay and glittryng gold, 35
 You caer not what, great glory elders won Nor who at first, the worthy warres begon.

You sleep and snort, in sweet perfumed sheets,
 And hug your heds, in harber warm and gay, 40
 Whearby in deed, ye haue sutch heauy spreets,
 You can not se, the goodly sunny day,

No though the clouds, the Son, the Moen and al
 Wear reddy now, apon your heds to fall,
 You wold not, moue, nor seek your selus to saue
 On drosse and dong, sutch deep desiers you haue.

You heer not how, the enmies at your noes, Aer vp in aarms, and cawls your cowards still
 You caer not mutch, abroed how matters goes Whan that at hoem, ye want no wealth nor will Clap corrage on, and cast long gowns asied
 Pluk vp your harts, and fling down pomp and pried
 Make Idell hands, and heds in hoels that lurk
 For worthy lawd, com forth and learn to work.

A corslet fien, is worth ten skarlet goowns
 A blast of faem, sormounts all things you wear
 Call lusty ladds, to spend your spared crowns
 The warrs aproetch, tis time the boyes wear thear
 If you a bied, at hoem till Cannons roer
 The plaester coms, to laet to salue the soer Break downe the banks, that holds the water in
 First strik thy foe, and so the brawll begin |

Put fyer to strawe, and make the fornayes hot:
 And bid them crie, that borns thear fingers first Yea cast on wod, to boyll the browes pot
 And let them starue, that wants to coell thear thirst:
 When world is wield, and all is set a gog
 A mans a man, and than a doggs a dogg:
 Aduise you now, my dwelling is not heer
 I must pack hens, another stern to steer.

¶ Now dissension went to the warrs which was set out in open view (with all orders of marshall manner) and spake as follows.

Glue ear good maets, and mark full well,
 the tidings that I bring:
 For I wilbe a larum bell, that in your earres shall ring.

A pestlens peall of rumor strang, that flies throw many a land:
 The plain report whearof remains in me dissenshons hand
 If I keep cloes that I do knoe, 5 and stoer no clapper now
 The hargaboz, the bill and boe, will seartch your corraeg throw Trust this for troeth that peace is bent, to trus vp soldiors all: 10 Wealth wil no warrs, peace is so prowld, the people fears no fall.
 They bragg and boest thear treasuer can,
 torn eatch thing how they list:
 For eury staet is wone with wealth, 15
 as hawk stowps don to fist. |
 A mas of gold will porchace peace, and mak wield wantons taem:
 If warrs wear wod and waxed mad, and hot as fiery flaem: 20
 Peace ruells the earth, and wrings thear thombs that raging reuell maks:
 Yea play what gaem ye list they saye, that peace doth swep the staeks:
 Peace is the prince that gouerns all, 25
 and saith a fig for war: Yea peace will put you all in pownd,
 and mak you stand at bar.
 Peace calls you roges, and swashing dicks, that stand apon you braues: 30
 A swarm of wasps, a flok of wolus, a neast of theeus and knaues
 That lius by spoyll and morthers viell, and triumphs still in bloed.
 And haue sutch hot and greedy minds, 35
 you thirst for neibors goed.
 The Trompets lowd that slaughter sownds, and drums with rombling noyes:
 Was neuer maed for men of peace,
 but rather fit for boyes. 40

They say whoes childhoed likes fond bruets, and lous sutch trifling toyes:
 Will you that kingdoms conquerd haue, be now subdued by peace Shall seuill swains to loethsom gaiell, lead men lik doggs in leace.
 Shall piuysh peace and peple weak, oer com the soldiour stout:
 Shall loytrars lewd lik rebells rail,
 and manhoed wax a lowt l
 Ah fie for shame set hand on sword, in your behalf I bloeshe.
 Bid trompet sownd aduance the pick,
 and giue prowde peace a poesh.

¶ On thoes Words was warres in sutch a stoer that you might se the feeld all ouer spred with soldiours, and so they martched down a hill and maed a goodly shoe full against the littell fort (cald Feble pollecie) and repolsing in al the Soldiours of the same, wan it with great fury, and so rased it and ouerthrueth hit down to the earth.

¶ The mayn Fort in the meean whiel did send sutch suckor as they might, but preuaylyug not, they wear in like sort driuen back, and their Fort beseged, and mutch adoe about the saem, which droue out that day, and than by Tortchlight the Prince from her Skaffold, went to her lodgyng, and in the mean season som fier works wear seen, and so the watch was charged.

25

¶ The second day was thear maed a nue aproetch to the mayn
 Fort, for a better order of Warre & to the ayde of the Fort, cam diuers gentilmen of good callynge from the Court, which maed the shoe very gallant, and set out the matter mutch.

30

¶ Now sarued the tied and vp the water from Kyngroed cam three braue Galleys, chasing a Ship that cam with Vittayls to the Fort, the Fort seyng that their exstremite within was great, sent a Gentil- l man to the Prince for aid, who brought her a boek couerd with green Veluet, which vtred the hoell substance of this deuice, the gentilman had a spech of his own makyng, as follows, after he had swam ouer the water in som danger Cloes and all, he spaek his part to the Prince.

M. Iohn Robarts of the Temple.

ESkaept from waltryng waues,
 from sword and fier, and enmies sleight:
 From storms and sturdy flaws, 5 from roeryng shot and fearfull fight.
 I com to quiet land,
 whear noble Prince doth pastims vew:
 And bryng a boek in hand,
 Of all the shoes, and matter trew. 10
 That must by practies pas, before your highnes as it fauls:
 And suerly sent I was,
 by those that keeps your warlike wauls.
 To craue your curteys ayd, 15
 in their defence that peace desiers:
 Whoes staet is maed afrayd,
 by fals dissenshons kindled fiers.
 As your poer people haue, throw peace possest great gayn and good: 20
 So still sutch peace they craue.
 as may avoyd the losse of blood.
 As heer I cam a mayn,
 so haue I promesd if I may:
 For to retorn agayn, 25
 throw salt sea foem the same self way. |

¶ So he departed, and all this while the businesse was greate aboute the fort, (whiche hazarded the gentilmans lief) and in a wonders brauery the hroyll continued, with a shoe of fight on Land and Sea, till the very night approtched, 30 at which time the Prince partted and stoed maruelously well contented with that she had seen.

¶ Now must you conceyue that Warres (with blodsheds, mizeries, and other horly borlees) waxt a weery & that neither the Fort, nor the wickednes of the 35 world (which Warres represented) was desirous of further trobuls, but rather glad to haue the matter taken vp in any resonable condicions, for the which purpose was deuised that Perswasion should go and tell his taell, and vnfold what follies and conflicts rises on Ciuill broyls, and what quietnesse coms by a mutual loue and agrement. This perswasion had a speech, as hereafter follows. 40

Perswasion to the Citie,
called the Main fort.

NO greef so great, nor soer so mutch, but finds at length som rest: 5
 As Warrs begins by wrath of God, so Peace is counted blest.
 Yet Warres is suer, a needfull thyng,
 for mans offence, A scorge:
 A Salue to heale the sinfull soule, 10 and for the staet A porge.
 That skowrs the body of the Realm,
 and kyngdoms all throw out:
 And leaues vnseartcht no member suer,
 that walks this world about. | 15
 Wear not the woe that wars doth bring, sweet peace should seem ful sower
 The netels sharp and wiked weeds, sets forthe a pleasant flower.
 By siknes pangs we iudg what health, 20 and quiet rest is worth And out of payn is pleasuer found, as Gold from dros coms forth.
 The harms, the haps, and cruell claps, that warrs and Cannon bryngs: 25
 Maks Princis seek the fear of god, and subiects kno thear kings Thogh peace in deed dispiseth warrs, as plainnesse falshed haets:
 Yet warlik people aer enbraest, 30 and liekt of all estaets.
 The knief that cuts the finger soer,
 in sheath about is born:
 The sword that takes away the life, makes peace whear it is worn. 35
 The axe that heaweth down the tree, is needfull for mans lief:
 Thus proue I as mans help or harms, remains in sword and knif:
 So warrs whear they aer vsed well, 40 keeps world in fear and awe:
 And shoes moer terror by his raeg,

Note

than al your ruells of lawe.
 Sens Cayn slue abell warrs haeth bin, twen bretheren as we reed
 And soldiors hath bin wagid well, as world of warrs stoed need:
 Than snarr not for the faem they snatch,
 nor brall to her thear bruet. |
 When broyls haue sowne ill seedes of caer, peace reapes from warres good fruet.
 And learns a lesson worthy gold, which Peace holds deer of price:
 And maks therof a mirroure bright,
 to vew and sift out vice.
 The Battayll ends whear conquest coms, and when great charge is spent:
 For peace the post with Pakket goes,
 Embastars els aer sent?
 To knit the knot and make a Leag, thus all the brawls that bee:
 Do bend to peace, and Wisdoms boe, how ear foels bolts do flee.
 Whearfore agree with Warres in haest,
 you se what quarels aer:
 And how that Warres bryngs wo and waest,
 and leaues a kyngdom baer.
 The people spoyld, the howsis bornt,
 the freends and neighbour slayn:
 The giltles plaegd and eatch man wrongd, whear rage and war doth rayn.

The Cities answer to Perswasion.

DIssention first that cald to mind,
 our old foerfathers faem:
 (And ript out seams of patched prayes, skarce worth the noet or naem.)
 Brought Peace and War in this vproer, our ruels sutch brawls denies:
 Our traed doth stand on Siuill lief,
 and thear our glory lies. |
 And not on strief the ruen of staets, a storm that all destroys

35

A heauy bondage to eatch hart, that fredoms fruet enioyes.
 Our orders maks the roister meek, and plucks the prowde on knees
 The stif and stobborne kno the yock, 5 and roets vp rotten trees.
 That may infect a fruetfull feeld,
 what can be sweet or sownd:
 But in that soyl whear for offence, is due correction fownd. 10
 Wee make the siuill lawes to shien, and by example mield.
 Reform the rued, rebuek the bold,
 and tame the contrey wyeld
 We venter goods and lius ye knoe, 15 and traueill seas and land.
 To bring by trafick heaps of wealth, and treasuer to your hand
 We aer astay and stoer howse boeth, to kingdoms farr and neer. 20
 A cawse of plentie throw foersyght, whan things war scarce and deer:
 And thoghe our ioy, be moest in peace,
 and peace we do maintain.
 Whear on to prince and realm throw out, 25
 doth ries great welth and gain:
 Yet haue we soldyars as you see,
 that stoers but whan we pleas
 And sarus our torns in howshold things, and sits in shop at eas. 30
 And yet daer blaed hit with the best, when cawse of contrey coms l
 And cals out courage to the fight, by sound of warlike Droms.
 We Marchants keep a mean vnmixt, 35 with any iarryng part:
 And bryng boeth Treble and the Baess,
 in order still by art.
 A Souldiour shalbe liked well,
 if his dezarts be sutch. 40
 A noble mind for noble acts, shall suer be honord mutch.

But if men glory all in warres,
 and peace disdayns in deed:
 We skorn with any Siroep sweet,
 their humour sowre to feed:
 And blest be God we haue a Prince, 5
 by whom our peace is kept:
 And vnder whom this Citie long,
 and land hath safly slept.
 From whom liekwyes a thousand gifts,
 of grace enioy we do: 10
 And feell from God in this her raygne, ten thousand blessingys to.
 Behold but how all secrets fien,
 of falshed coms to light:
 In these her dayes, and God taks part, 15 with her in troeth and right.
 And mark how mad Dissenshon thriues, that would set warres abroetch:
 Who sets to saell poer peoples liues, and gets but viell reproetch. 20
 And endles shaem for all their sleights:
 O England ioy with vs:
 And kis the steps whear she doth tread, that keeps her countrey thus. | In peace and rest, and perfait stay, 25
 whearfore the god of peace:
 In peace by peace our peace presarue, and her long lief encrease.

¶ This was to be don and put in exersies befoer the Queen 30 cam to the knittyng vp of the matter but perswasion beyng dismiss, the battry was planted befoer the FORT, and they within so straitly enclosed, that they must needs abied the mercy of the Sword and Cannon.

¶ At which instant, in the after noen that present day the Prince was in her 35 Skaffold to beholde the suckesse of these offers of warre, and so went the Battry of and the assaut was geuen in as mutch order as might be, the enemye was three times repolsed, and beholdyng nue suckors commyng from the Courte to the Forts great comfort, the enemye agreed on a parley whearin was 40 re hersyd that the cortain was beaten down, and the fort maed sawtable, and yet the enemye to saue the liues of good Citizens and Soldiors thearof, would giue them leaue to depart with bag and багаег, as order of wars required. To the which the Fort maed answer, that the Corttayns nor Bulwarks was not their defence, but the corrage of good peple, & the force of a mighty prince (who saet and beheld all these doyngs) was the thyng they trusted to, on which answer the enemie retired, and so condicions of peace wear drawn and agreed 5 of, at which peace boeth the sides shot of their Artillery, in sien of a triumphe, and so crynge God saue the Queen, these triumphes and warlik pastimes finished, the Prince likyng the handlyng of these causes verie well, sent.ij. hundreth crownes to make the Souldiors l a banket. Now heer is to be considered that the Prince went into the Gallees and so down to Kyngroed, 10 aer these things wear brought to an end.

¶ At her highnes departuer a gentilman in the confiens of the Towns liberties spaek this speech that follows.

The dolfull a Due.

OUr Ioy is ioyned with greuous groens,
 Our triumphe tornd to tears:
 The brantch whoes blossoms gladnes broght, 20
 a bitter berry bears.
 In howse and street whear mirth was hard,
 is moen and moorning noies:
 The sommer day is dimd with clowds, eclypsed aer our ioyes. 25
 The loedstar leaus our wished cowrs, and clims the heauens hie:
 Our sofrant will no longer lord,
 in walls of Bristow lye.
 No maruell sins our barrain soyl, 30 and ground of groes deuyce:
 Haeth yelded no thing that might pleas,
 a prince of so great price.
 Our duties aer not half discharged, no thoghe we kist the grownd: 35
 And prostraet fall full flat on face, whear her foet steps aer fownd.
 The Persians daer not cast vp eies, nor loek apon thear king l Shall Christians then presuem to preace, 40 on sutch a Sacred thyng.
 And sho no part of duties bownds

O god forbid I say:
 But that the lords anointed should,
 be honord eury way.
 Long loekt this Citie for a prince, long sens and many a yeer: 5
 A King or Queen beheld this town, short time she taryes heer.
 Good fortuen folow thee O Queen, god gied thy doings all:
 A world of threfold blessed happ, 10
 apon thy kingdom fall.
 As loeth to ræck our heauy leaue,
 as leaue our lius in deed:
 A due deer lady of this land,
 the liuing Lord thee speed. 15

¶ Som of these Speeches could not be spoken by means of a Scholemaister, who enuied that any stranger should set forth these shoes.

A woorthy dittie, song before the Queenes Maiestie at Bristowe.

MIstrust not troth, that truely meanes, for euery ielous freke,
 In steade of wrong, condemne not right, no hidden wrath to wreke: 30
 Looke on the light of faultlesse life, how bright her vertues shine,
 And measure out her steppes eche one, by leuel and by line.

Deeme eche desert by vpright gesse, whereby your prayse shal liue,
 If malice would be match with might, let hate no iudgement geue: 35
 Enforce no feare with wrestling wittes, in quiet conscience brest, Lend not your eares to busie tongues, which breedeth much unrest.

In doubtfull driftes wade not to farre, it weeries but the mind,
 Seeke not to search the secret harts, whose thoughtes are hard to find: 40
 Auoide from you those hatefull heads, that helps to heape mishapp,
 Be slowe to heare the flatterers voyce, which creepeth in your lapp.

Embrace their loue that wills you good, and sport not at their praise,
 Trust not too much vnto your selfe, for feeble are your staies:
 Howe can your seate be setled fast, or stand on stedfast ground,
 So propped vp with hollowe hartes, whose suertie is vnsound.

Geue faith to those that feare for loue, and not that loue for feare, Regard not them that force compels, to please you euery where:
 All this well waide and borne away, shall stablishe long your state, Continually with perfect peace, in spite of puffing hate.

The most dangerous and memorable aduenture of Richard Ferris STC: 10834 sigs B1v-2* (1-8 August)

35

... And from thence wee came to Ilforde Comne, which was on Satterday at night the first of August last past, whereupon for that wee were so neare to Bristow, I desired my company that wee might put to sea that night, which they were loth to doe, yet at my importunate sute they graunted thereto. But being at sea, the winde arose very sore from of the land, which put vs all in great feare, whereby I my selfe was constrained to row foure houres alone on the Larboorde side, and my fellowe Rower was compelled to lade forth water so fast as it came into the Boate, which did beate vpon me and ouer me, very sore, the winde then being East and by South. Thus I was constrained to labour for life, and yet had almost killed my selfe through the heate I tooke 5 in that time, rowing, as is aforesaide, vntill we came to Mynette.

This done, we went from Mynytte, and so betweene the two homes came to Bristow in one tyde, and arriued at the backe of Bristow, about sixe of the clocke at night.

But it was wonderfull to see and heare what reioycing there was on all sides 10 at our coming: The Maior of Bristow, with his bretheren the Aldermen, came to the water side, and welcomed vs most louingly, and the people came in great multitudes to see vs, in so much as by the consent of the Magistrates, they tooke our Boate from vs, not suffering vs once to meddle with it, in respect that we were all extreame wearie, and carried our saide Boate to the 15 high Crosse, in the Citie, from thence it was conuaid to the towne house, there locked safe all night. And on the next morning the people of the Citie gathered them selues together, & had prepared Trumpets, Drummes, Fyfes, & Ensignes to go before the Boate, which was carried vpon mens shoulders round about the Citie, with the Waites of the saide Citie, playing orderly in 20 honour of our rare and daungerous attempt atchiued. Afterwardes we were had | to maister Maiors, to the Aldermen and Sherifes houses, where we were feasted most royally and spared for no cost all the time that we remained there. Thus hauing a while refreshed our selues after our so tedious labours, we came to London on Saterday being the eight of August. 1590. 25

sigs B2v–3v*

A new Sonnet made vppon
the arriual and braue entertainement of Richard Ferris with his boat who arriued at the City of Bristowe, on the third day of August. 1590.

COme olde and young behold and vewe,
A thing most rare is to be seene,
A seely Wherry it is most true:

6/ Mynette: Minehead, Somerset

7/ the two homes: Flat Holme and Steep Holme, islets in the Bristol Channel off Weston super Mare

Is come to Towne with sayle of greene.
 With Oares cullour of the same,
 To happy Ferris worthy fame.

From London Citie this wager sure,
 Was for to bring his Wherry small,
 On surging seas if life endure:
 From Port to Port happe what happe shall.
 To Bristowe Citie of worthie name,
 Where Ferris now hath spread his fame.

His Boate not bulgd, but at high crosse,
 Was seene the third of August sure,
 Whereby the man hath had no losse:
 But did ech willing heart procure,
 For to be readie there in haste,
 To see the Boate that there was plaste.

Oh mightie Ioue thou guide of guides,
 Which brought this Boate from surging seas,
 Cleane from the rage of furious tides,
 No doubt Ferris God thou didst please,
 Both thou and thine which were with thee,
 You serued God he set you free. |

Good Andrew Hill thy paines was great,
 And William Thomas in this Wherry,
 And honour Ferris sure doth get,
 He doubtlesse meanes to make you merry.
 Your fame is such through trauailes toyle,
 You winne the spurre within our soyle.

Shall I preferre this to your skill,
 No no twas God that did you guide,
 For this be sure without his will,
 You could not passe each bitter tide.
 But pray you did no doubt each houre,
 Whereby God blest you by his power.

Oh gallant mindes and venturors bold,
 That tooke in hand a thing most rare,
 Twill make the Spaniardes harts waxe cold,

If that this newes to them prepare,
 That three men hath this voyage done,
 And thereby wagers great hath wonne.

But now we may behold and vewe,
 That English heartes are not afrayde,
 Their Soueraignes foes for to subdue,
 No tempest can make vs dismayde.
 Let monstrous Papists spit their fill,
 Their force is full against Gods will.

Hath seely Wherry done the deede,
 That Gallies great dare not to trye,
 And hath she had such happy speede,
 That now in rest on shoare she lye, Doubtlesse the Lord her Pylot was,
 It could not else beene brought to passe. |

Well Ferris now the game is thine,
 No losse thou hast thanke him aboue,
 From thy two Mates do not decline,
 But still in heart doe thou them loue.
 So shall thy store increase no doubt,
 Through him that brought thy boat about.

I end with prayers to the Lord,
 To saue and keepe our royall Queene,
 Let all true hearts with one accord,
 Say Lord preserue her grace from teene,
 Blesse Lord her friendes, confound her foes,
 For aye Lord saue our Royall Rose.

FINIS.

mb 2* (7 July)

Septimo die Iulij anno domini 1606

33/ Bar.: for Barnes (?); a Mr Iohn Barnes, mentioned on some previous pages of the account, was mayor of Bristol in 1588

The Replication of Richard Cooke esquier Complainant to the Ioint and severall aunsweares of Nicholas Woulf and Margaret his wief defendants

The Complainant averreth his said bill of Complainte & everye part thereof 5 and all and every the matters and thinges therein Contayned to be verie Iust & true in such manner and forme as in & by his said bill of Complaint is most truly sett foorth and declared & saieth that the aunsweares of the saide defendants are for the most part vntrue vncertaine & insufficient in the lawe to be Replied vnto of which this Complainant hath Iust cause to except 10 against the Rechlessenes of the said woulfes oath in case he were sworne to his aunsweare to the Complainantes bill in this Court Yet neverthesse all Advantages of excepcion to the vncertaineties absurdities and insufficiencies thereof now and att all tymes hereafter vnto this Complainant saved for Replication this Complainant saieth that on or about the tyme in the bill 15 mencioned he this Complainant did take of the said defendant the whole house & Implementes in the bill mencioned except one little Studie or Countinge house & one garret or worke house wherein certaine working tooles laye from Michaelmas then next Comminge for and duringe one haulf yeere then next followeing & did agree & for the same consideration 20 about the tyme aforesaid did paie the said somme of ffive powndes, & afterwarde and before the said feast daie of Saint Michaell thearkangell this Complainant haveing dealt for the Castell in or neere Bristoll aforesaid & then mynded to Remove from the defendants house & settle himself & his famelye in the said castell did make the said woulfe acquainted therewith 25 and withall sent him worde by his servant Peter Hawkesworth that he this Complainant would lett or assigne his said Interest & terme vnto some other for that he the said Complainant then thought and had imported soe much before vnto the defendant woulf it would be preiudiciall vnto him the said Complainant to lett the same stand void & to paie a dead Rent for noe 30 benefitt, which he shoulde have donne in case the said house had not beene otherwise disposed of & therevppon the said woulf the defendant Required this Complainantes said servant to desire this Complainant that woulf himself might have the said house and terme soe lett by him vnto this Complainant againe to his owne vse to lett & bestowe of & for the finishinge and concluding 35 of the same he woulde the next daie come to this Complainantes house and take order for the Repayment of the money which the said Complainant had disbursed for the same and vppon this aunsweare of the defendant the said Complainant Relyinge tooke his Iourney to the Bathe where haveing speech with a gentlewoman of good accompt and worshipp a widowe called Mistris 40

Knevet of such a house, she earnestlie entreated this Complainant that she might have the same and she would presentlie satisfie this Complainant the said ffive powndes which he had paied for the same wherevppon the said Complainant sent againe vnto the said woulf to enforme him thereof & to knowe his mynde who aunswared then that he wouldbe loath to have any 5 tenant to his house and goodes but of his owne choise and therefore desired that he might have it againe himself & att the Complainantes Retourne from the Bathe he would satisfie the Complainant the money he had disbursed Afterwardes this Complainantes wief being ¹Resident in the said castell did Commaund that a woman servant of this Complainantes called Iohan Crannye, 10 which said Iohan had not long before served the wief of the defendant as her apprentice by the space of twelue yeeres or thereabouts which Iohan vppon the especiall Commendacion and att the earnest entreatye of the said defendant woulf and his wief was entertayned into service by this Complainant) should make cleane and dressevp the saide house soe lett by the said woulf vnto this 15 Complainant who accordingly did as this Complainantes wief had Commaunded, (as this Complainant hath heard her saie) and she being then and there in the saide house for the purpose aforesaide He the said woulf did eyther take out of the outer doore of the Roomes lett vnto the Complainant or otherwise from the said woman servant the keys of the said Roomes or house so lett 20
vnto this Complainant as aforesaid, but howsoever the said woulfe did gett the said keys the same was donne without this Complainantes good likeinge privitie or consent for that this Complainant had left straigh charge with his wief and servantes eyther to Receave the said moneye or securitie for the same before the deliuvry of the keys thereof doubting the said woulfe might 25 in quality equall his name and soe as he now endevoureth seake in effect to defraud & devowre the said some of five powndes soe by him promised vnto this Complainant as aforesaid, and therevppon this Complainant haveing vnderstandinge of the courses aforesaid did send often vnto the said woulfe and sometymes he this Complainant talked with him att which tymes he 30 made many kinde protestacions and promised to paie the money att severall tymes by him appointed as in the bill is formerlie sett forth & now long sithence past And therevppon after many vnecessarye and vnfit delaias this Complainant doubtinge his woulfish intentes did as he hopeth is lawfull for him to doe Commence suit in this Court for his Relief touching the premisses 35
And this Complainant saith that if any of the said woulfes stuff or Implementes left and lett with the said house be thence Removed the same is of verie small valewe and donne by the said woman servant aforesaid trusted in vsage of the said stuffe & Implementes & especiallye by the said woulf & for that purpose especialle placed with the Complainant in service as aforesaid All which if any such be this Complainant saith & will prove to be donne without his privyete or consent & contrarye to his speciall Commaundement and Charge given vnto all his seruantes And whereas it is auerred by the defendant in his aunswere indefinitelye that this Complainant and his famelye vsed & 5 Inhabited the said house as though this Complainant had enioyed the same part of the terme demised & yet greedily & that incroching vppon the defendantes promise did desire and seeke the whole money paid for the whole in case it were materiall to the matter in question that he this Complainant 10 with all his household and famelye departed and left the said house six or seaven daies before the terme he was to have entred thereon by vertue of the his horses and dyett with and from the said woulf being an Innehoulder att 15 as deere Rates as this Complainant hath vsed or should have paid elsewhere & was to have had his lodginge in his dwelling house being a Common Inne but that the said woulf to the end to begett a lykeinge in this Complainant to the said house did bring this defendant thither & there lodged him vppon Which his kindnes this Complainant was the more and Rather indeed to 20 deale as aforesaid without that that the said Complainant did take or carrye or any by his goodwill consent or privyete did take or carrye from the said defendantes house onto the said Castell a great number of parcells of household stuffe & Implementes to a great valewe without the Consent or knowledge of the said defendantes, or that he Refuseth ^{to} Redeliver¹ the same in case any 25 such betaken awaie as in the said defendantes aunswere is most falslye and slaunderously surmised And without that that the Complainant being att the Castell of Bristoll aforesaid did Request the said defendant to consider that it wouldbe a hard bargaine vnto him the said Complainante to paie the saide whole some of ffive powndes haueing noe accacion to occupy the same 30 or that the defendant vsed these wordes that he the said Complainant might dispose of the same for the Residue of the saide terme att his owne pleasure

 Complainant did att any tyme Require the defendant to procure any tenant or tenantes in the said Roomes for the ease of this Complainant as in the 35 said Aunswere is vntrulie surmised And with that that the said defendant besought this Complainant that he would not lett the said Roomes or his terme or Interest therein to others but that he the said defendant might have againe the said house and bargaine of the said Complainant and that he would Repaie vnto this Complainant the said some of ffive powndes by him soe 40 formerly Receaved of the said Complainant as in the said bill is most trulie alleaged And with that that the said Complainante for the cause in the bill menconed did as aforesaid suffer or leave and yeeld vpp the said house and goodes vnto the defendantes owne proper vsse and behoof & that the defendant did take the possession and the keys thereof out of the locke of the outer Dore of the Roomes of the said house lett vnto the Complainant & Retayned the possession of the said house [^]as in the said bill¹ is truly alleaged And with that that the said defendantes did vse the said house and meddle therewith in other manner then to shewe or lett the same to others for the benefitt and good of this Complainant as in their said Aunswere is vntruly Surmised but lodged sundrie persons of all sortes many tymes during the Complainantes terme besides certaine Comedyantes whome he suffered to act and playe within the said Roomes for which the said defendantes tooke moneye And with that that the said defendant did come vnto the said Complainant att his lodging in the Castell for the same Intent and purpose as in the said bill is formerly Declared and that the said defendant both att that tyme when he was att the said Castell and also att divers other tymes did vowe and protest that he would Satisfie vnto the Complainant the said some of ffive powndes att such tyme as in the bill is alleaged and that he desired that the Complainant would not be offended with him for that he had disappointed him of the payment thereof as in his said bill is likewise trulie alleaged And without that that any other matter or thinge in the said defendantes aunswears contayned materiall or effectuall for this Complainant to Replie vnto, and in or hereby not sufficiently Replied vnto, to this Complainantes Remembrance is true All which matters this Complainant is Readie to averr and prove as this honorable Court shall

Merrie Conceited Jests of George Peele STC: 19541
pp 16-17*

The Iest of George Peele at Bristow.

George was at Bristow, and there staying somewhat longer then his coyne would last him, his palfrey that should be his carier to London, his head was growne 25 so big that he could not get him out of the stable, it so fortun'd at that instant, certaine players came to the towne, and lay at that Inne where George Peele was: to whome George was well knowne, beeing in that time an excellent Poet, and had acquaintance of most of the best Players in England, from the triuiall sort he was but so so: of which these were only knew George by name 30 no otherwise, there was not past three of the company come with the Cariage, the rest were behinde, by the reason of a long Iorney they had, so that night they could not inact, which George hearing had presently a stratagam in his head, to get his Horse free out of the stable: and money in his purse to beare his Charges vp to Londone, and thus it was, hee goes directly to the Maior 35 tels him he was a scholler and a gentleman and that he had a tertan historie of the knight of Rodes & withall how Bristow was first founded and by whome, & a briefe of all those that before him had succeeded in office in that worshipfull City desiring the Maior that he with his presence & the rest of his Brethren would grace his labours. The Maior agreed to it, gaue him leaue and withall 40 apointed him a place, but for himselfe he could not be there beeing in the euening, but bid him make his best benefit he could of the City: and l very liberally gaue him an Angell, which George thankfully receiues and about his businesse hee goes, got his stadge made, his history cryed and hyred the players Apparell, to flourish out his show promising to pay them liberally and withall desired them they fauour him so much as to gather him his mony at the doore, for he thought it his best course to imploy them, least they should spy out his knauery, for they haue parlous heads, they willingly yeeld to doe him any kindnesse that lies in them, in briefe caries their apparell to the Hall.

 placeth themselues at the doore, where George in the meane time with the ten shillings hee had of the Maior, deliuered his horse out of purgatory and caries him to the Townes end, and there placeth him, to be ready at his comming.
 By this time the Audience were come and some forty shillings gathered, which mony George put in his purse, and putting on one of the Players silke Robes, after the trumpet had sounded thrise: out he comes, makes lowe obaysance goes forward with his prologue, which was thus.

A tryfling toy, a Iest of no account, pardie.
 The Knight perhaps, you thinke for to be I.
 Thinke on so still, for why you know that thought is free Sit still a while, Ile send the Actors to ye.

Which beeing said after some fire workes that hee had made of purpose, threw out among them & down staires goes he gets to his horse and so with his forty shillings to London leaues the Players to answee it. who when the Iest was knowne, their Inocence excused them, beeing as well gulled as the Maior, and the Audience.

Alsoe this yeere the high and excellente Princes Queen Anne, daughter of the noble Prince Frederick, Kinge of Denmark, and Norway, and syster to Christierne the nowe Kinge of those countries, and wyfe to our most deere, and dread soueraigne Lord Iames, kinge of great Brittain, ffrance, & Ireland; 10 havings bin at the Cittie of Bathe, for her health and recreacion was disposed to comme from thence to visite this Cittie of Bristoll, beinge called, and accompted, her Maiesties Chamber, Of whose comminge thither the Maior havinge some intelligence, did with the advyse of his brethren the Aldermen [of] & Counsell of this Cittie make such provision for the receiving, and 15 entertaining of her Maiestie, as could be accomplished vppon soe suddaine and shorte warninge whervponn he caused all the streetes | where hir Maiestie should passe through the Cittie, to be sanded, and all the Companies of Artes & Misteries, with three Bandes of Trayned Souldiers to the number of 500 souldiers, well appareled & furnished, vnder the chardge of three Captaines 20 to be in readines for the attendinge & guardinge of hir highnes through the streates, And soe the Maior Aldermen, Sherives, and Common Counsell, all in Skarlett Gownes, tooke their horses, and roade on ffootclothes from the Tolzey to Laffordes gate on ffridaie the fourth of Iune, where they mett, and receaued hir Maiestie. Mr Laurence Hide Esquior then Recordor of the Cittie, 25 makinge a brief Oration vnto hir Maiestie, which beinge ended, the Maior, vsinge somme gratulatory speeches in few wordes, presented vnto hir highnes a faire Purse, of satten, imbrodered with two lettres for hir name (viz) .A.R. in which purse were 100 vnites, of gould, amountinge to the summe of 110 li. 30 as a guyfte from the Maior and Commynalty of this Cittie which hir Maiestie most graciously accepted, and soe the Maior & Recordor tooke their horses, and the Maior beinge placed betwene two gentlemen vshers roade next before the lord Carie, whoe roade next vnto hir Maiesties Charriott, and soe the Maior with his brethren & Companie brought hir Maiestie to the house of the Ladie Marques, sometime the house of Sir Iohn Younge, knight; noe sword beinge 35 hen borne before the Maior, (hir Maiestie beinge guarded by the souldiers as she passed through the streetes to the house aforesaid,) noe sound of drumme or Gunne beinge heard as she passed, But when hir highnes was placed and settled in hir lodging, the bandes of souldiers beinge all sett in good order vponn the Kay, they gave a great valley of shott, and imediatlie thervponn there were .60. peeces of great Ordnances dischardged neere the Kay, and then the souldiers retorned & dischardged their peeces againe before hir highnes Courte, hir Maiestie behoulding hem forthe of hir Chamber window, and much commendinge them; And the same night certaine spetiall souldiers were sett & appointed to watch & to garde hir Maiesties person at the said house. And the next daie beinge somethinge rainye weather hir Maiestie made hir aboade in hir house; Master Maior entertaininge many of hir highnes servauntes at

 Sherives and Common Counsell with their Officers repaired to hir highnes

 St Augustines, where [^]she[]] heard the Sermon preached by Master doctor Robson deane there, and soe retorned to the Courte, being guarded by the souldieres, as hir highnes passed thither And the next daie beinge Mundaie Master Maior invited the Lordes and Ladies, and other Knightes, whoe dyned at his house, and in the afternoone there was a show made for pleasure on the River, by a shipp, sett on, & assaulted by two Turkishe Gallies, a scaffold beinge made in Canninges Marsh for hir Maiestie to behould the same, and the takinge of the said shipp in fight by the said Gallies which her Maiestie beheld with great delight; And the same night the Ladie Drumman with other Ladies, and gentlemen being hir Maiesties | Servauntes did suppe at Master
 Maiors house, And then the Ladie Drumman did deliuer vnto Master Maior a ffaire Ringe of Gould sett with Diamondes very richly, as a ffavor from the Queene Maiestie. And the next daie hir Maiestie departed from this Citty to Syston in Gloucesteshire to the house of Sir Henry Billingsly, the Maior with his brethren and the rest of the Companies bringinge and attending hir highnes to Laffordes gate, and there Master Maior and his brethren tooke their leaves of hir Maiestie, whoe gave Master Maior and his brethren greate thanks for hir entertainment, which she most gratusly accepted and promysed to shew the Citty anie ffavor in any thinge wherin she might be occasioned to vse the

A Relation of the Entertainment, giuen to the High, and Mighty Princesse, Queene Anne STC: 18347
 sigs B1-D2* (4-8 June)

THE QVEENES Maiesties Entertainment at BRISTOLL.

IF auncient Records of renowne vnto our yeeres declare What deedes by our fore-fathers times, of old atchieued were;
 If they for vs such care haue had, that their successors be,
 By writing of their famous acts, that we the same might see:
 Shall wee to our suruiuers then our selues ingratefull proue, 5
 By not recording things which may succeding ages moue
 In imitation of the like, to get a glorious name;
 And to enroll themselues in Bookes of neuer-dying fame?
 The monuments so much renown'd that mighty Monarches reare
 Piramids & Colosso's great doe moulder downe and weare 10
 In tract of time; so that no forme nor fashion they retaine, Whereby the Passengers may say, Here once they did remaine:
 But vertuous deedes, which by the Muse preserued are for aye,
 Shall still abide when date of these is passed cleane away:
 For vertues fame immortall is, and neuer shall it dye, 15
 Though vnder ground, consum'd to dust, a thousand yeares we lye.
 Great Peleus Sonne, by Hectors death, had neuer famous beene,
 Had Homer grac'd him not with his immortalizing penne.
 Shall I let sleepe in silence then what these mine eyes haue seene, Bristols renowned prayse, set forth in welcomming our Queene? 20
 The graue & auncient Counsell first, in gownes of Scarlet dye, Attended on (each by a Page) did ride triumphantly,
 With foot-cloaths were their Horses deckt: no cost they thought too (much;
 For to expresse their willing hearts, their loue to her was such, I
 To Bristols vtmost auncient bounds, marcht on this gallant Traine, 25
 To meete her Grace, for whose approach, with ioy they did remaine:
 Next after them the Companies, each after their degree,
 With ioyfull hearts, marcht on to meete her Gracious Maiestie.
 Like as the drie and thirstie ground, by Phoebus burning dart,
 With extreame heate, for long time vext, & pierced to the hart, 30
 With yawning throate wide gaping seemes, ye moisty cloud to call,
 That with their watry drops they would into her bosome fall, Thereby to coole her thirsty throate, and arme her breast so well,
 That Phoebus stinging darts she may with moisture colde expell:
 Euen so all sorts, both olde & yong, with hearts and voyce did craue 35
 The wished presence of her Grace in compleate ioy to haue.
 And last of all, though last, not least, chiefe subiect of my Verse,
 Three bands there were, whose worthy praise my Muse cannot rehearse;
 The first in white and violet clad, the second blacke and white,
 The third with white and scarlet was, in martiall order dight: 40

Simile.

But least that curious carping fooles, obiection thus may say,
 Renowned valour seldome lurkes, where is apparrell gay.
 (I answere them) Nay, this hath beene by flying fame enroll'd,
 That Bristoll Bands in all attempts, haue beene of corage bolde:
 For as to please her princely sight, they spared not their goods; 5
 Like so, for to protect her Grace, they will not spare their bloods.
 The hardy Pilot neuer is, but in a storme, descride:
 The perfect gold not known from brasse, but when by touch-stone tride Euen so, when storms shall threaten wrack, and blustering billowes beate,
 Then shall appeare, & not till then, where is true valours seate. 10
 But haste, my Muse for too-too long the time thou hast delaid;
 To bad men, more will not suffice; to good enough is said.
 No sooner did her Graces Traine approach our Cities bound,
 And that her Harold gan draw neere, with blast of Trumpets sound, Submissiue prostrate on his knees, the Mayor then fell downe, 15
 And the Recorder by his side, a man of great renowne,
 With graue aspect & perfect voyce, his silence then he brake.
 These words vnto her Princely Grace, or not vnlike, he spake. |

The Oration to her Maiestie.

THE rarest Iemmes, that mortall men, to Princes can impart, (Renowned Lady) true Loue is, proceeding from the hart:
 This is the gift that God requires, this is the perfect band,
 The seale that revnites the force and sinewes of our Land; 25
 This Bristols Iemme, set clearely forth, in euey subiect true,
 On whom your Grace shall bend your face, or daigne to take a view, Prostrates it selfe in lowly wise vnto your Graces sight,
 To serue our Soueraigne King and Queene, with all our force and [(might.)] Bristoll a Citie of renowne hath neuer traitor beene 30
 To Soueraigne Rule, or Regall Raigne; or false to King or Queene, VVith thankfulnessse recordeth still, full many a fauour great Inioy'd by famous Kings and Queenes that ruled Englands seate:
 But to your Gracious Maiestie, as to our Soueraigne sweet,
 For preseruacion of our weale, we render praises meet; 35
 Our liberties by you preseru'd, and many other things;
 You are the fruitful root from whence our hopeful branches springs
 Ingratefull should we then be thought, and iustly be condemned,
 For pretermittting dutie bownd, vnto your Grace descended
 From auncient Christian Kings, adorn'd with outward graces, blest 40

With inward Princely vertues rare, which farre surpasse the rest:
 VVith Royall Imps blest from aboue, to raigne and rule this Land,
 As long (we hope) as Sunne and Moone, in Firmament shall stand.
 Yet this respect of princely guifts could not our citie moue,
 For to inuite your Maiestie; was yet for want of loue? 5
 Farre be it from their loyall heartes! nay, rather did they feare
 Too meane for such a Princely Guest, your entertainment here Expected, should approue it selfe, vnto their grieve of minde,
 VVhen as your Princely Grace the same should insuficient finde. |
 But now with double bands of loue indebted to your Grace, 10
 Wee finde our selues most strictly bound, since that vnto this place
 (Of your accord and Princely loue) you haue approched neare,
 To make our Citie by this meanes more famous to appeare:
 Most humble thanks I yeeld therefore, vnto your Maiestie,
 In name of all these Citizens, whose seruice till they dye 15
 Deuoted is vnto your Grace, as to their Soueraigne good,
 Not fearing (if occasion were) to seale it with their blood:
 Requiring pardon of your Grace for what amisse you finde, Imputing it not to neglect, but to the want of time:
 Accepting this our token small, a pledge of louing hartes, 20
 Who will continue subiects true vntill their liues depart;
 Treading the step of Princes great, as by records we finde,
 Who neuer did respect so much the gift as giuers minde.
 This done, Bristoll, which to our ioy and great content hath beene
 For euermore accounted still the Chamber of the Queene 25
 Of England, is and euer will, as yet hath bene to fore, Vnto Queene ANNE our gracious Queene, much bound for euer-^r (more.¹
 And I this Cities worthlesse mouth, which tasted hath full oft
 Your Princely fauours bountifull, on me bestow'd for nought
 Of worthinesse in mee you found, for which I will intreate, 30
 For you and all your Royall Traine, vnto the Mercy-seate
 Of God, that he may bless you still, and send you long to raigne Vnto his glory and our good, the truth for to maintaine.

The end of the Oration.

THE graue Recorder hauing then concluded this his speech,
 The Mayor he his Present gaue, and did her Grace beseech For to accept it in good part, as pledge of their good will,
 Which to her Soueraigne Maiestie they would continue still;

p 180, l.22–p 181, l.33/ THE rarest Iemmes ... for to maintaine: printed in italics
 36/ THE: T printed as large display capital

A rich imbrodered Purse it was, most sumptuous to behold
 In outward shew, the in-side was cramm'd full of massie gold. |
 In gracious wise the Queene receiud the present he her gaue,
 And render'd thanks, more thanks then they of her could wish or [(craue)]
 And lastly all the Magistrates in order passing by, 5
 With reuerence did (as dutie bound) salute her Maiestie.
 When she had passed thus along vnto the Citie gate Attended on by great and small, and many a noble state,
 There first her eyes beheld what earst her heart could not conceiue,
 Through sodaine admiration rapt, scarce could she credit giue 10
 Vnto her sight; for since she first set foot on English ground,
 Such braue couragious hardy men, at once, she neuer found,
 Admiring at this sodaine sight, she viewes these martiall Bands,
 How each in his assigned place, in order firmly stands
 On eyther side of Bristoll streetes firme ioyned like a wall 15
 To guard her Grace vnto the Court, lest ought might her befall Through rashnesse of the multitude, which might her grace annoy,
 By pressing on for to behold, their loue, their life, their ioy.
 First stood a rancke of hardy Pikes, much like a thorny Wood:
 Next after them the nimble Shot in order ready stood. 20
 Here waues the Ancients in the winde, there stands the Fife and drum, Attending when her Maiestie would through their squadrons come:
 All to their Captaines Colours were with scarfes & feathers bright Adorn'd, not wanting ought was fit to please her Princely sight.
 Each man for Martiall discipline doth a Comaunder seeme, 25
 As though in warres from tender yeeres, they exercis'd had beene.
 Like some great Princesse who intends to purchase Iewels rare,
 Which by some forraigne Ieweller to her presented are:
 First, through his Casket doth she looke, with curious searching eye,
 Where she may to her hearts content some pretious Iemme descry: 30
 The first she sets her hands vpon seems glorious in her sight,
 A second doth more better please her curious appetite:
 The third anone shee doth behold, which doth the rest excell,
 So that each latter choyse doth seeme the former to refell.
 That quite confounded in her mind, she knows not which to chuse, 35
 But still shee thinkes she takes ye worst, and doth the best refuse:
 Euen so our gracious soueraigne Queene, as through the street she past
 Each seuerall object pleas'd her well whereon her eyes she cast. |
 But as amidst these armed Troopes, she passing forward went,
 Each Martialist vnto her view did seeme most excellent: 40
 So that, protesting, thus she did vnto her Nobles say, Braue Bristoll-men from all the Land, hath borne the price away.

For this their famous enterprise their credit I will raise, Renowned Fame shall spread their name, and glory sound their praise.
 No thundring shot nor ratling drums throughout the streets were heard Whiles that her grace to Court-ward went, most strictly was observed
 The Proclamation former made, wherein did plaine appeare, 5
 The reuerend Counsels Prouidence, the Souldiers Loue and feare.
 But when she was conducted safe, with all her Noble traine, Vnto her Royall Court, whereas with ioy shee did remaine,
 And in her Presence-chamber plac'd, there for to take a view
 Of all the Royall pastimes made by this braue Martiall Crew, 10
 Who marcht along on Bristols Key, with Ensignes braue displaid:
 And opposite against the Court each Band in order staid, Expecting when by sound of Drumme they should commanded be
 For to discharge their ratling shot before her Maiestie.
 Thus ready ranged stood these Bands, expecting nought but time, 15
 That temporizing space (I meane) wherewith wee must refine
 Our outward acts, and all our deeds, whereby we shall be tride
 As perfect gold which in the fire is seauen-times purified.
 Had Hanibal of Carthage knowne what triumph great he lost
 By times neglect, when he had slaine the mightie Romaine host, 20
 If he forth-with had marcht to Rome with his victorious bands, Romes lofty pride no doubt had stoop'd to his vnconquered hands:
 But when (preuented by report) hee came too late to speede,
 An answer fit he then receiu'd for this his sloathfull deede;
 O Hanibal, full well thou knowest a victory to get, 25
 But how to vse it, once obtain'd, thou has not learned yet.
 Musicke with time, as natiue twinnes, afford sweet harmonie, Arions harpe (time not obseru'd) resounds harsh melodie.
 Each hearb and plant, each fruitfull tree their times appointed know:
 A time there is for Husbandmen to reape, a time to sow; 30
 Therefore I say attend on time while time attends on thee:
 For time once lost, for gold nor gaine cannot attained be. |
 This precious Iewell Time (I say) did these our Troopes attend,
 That their fore-sight no slanderous tongues in ought might discommend
 But vwhen at length (by tokens made) was time conuenient found, 35
 Two thundering Peales of shot were heard, which seem'd to shake the [(ground:)]
 And next, for halfe an houres space, the roaring Cannons cry,
 With fiery smoake did seem to choake, and quench bright Phoebus eye.
 The ayrie regions were inflam'd, as if that Phaëton
 (As Poets faine) had rul'd againe the Chariot of the Sunne. 40

But when the Cannons were discharg'd, and that the skies waxt cleare,
 And Phoebus with his glistering beames gan brightly to appeare,
 A ioyfull shout by thousand made, which thither did repayre,
 In token of contented ioy, resounded in the ayre.
 The Bels most ioyfully did ring, with Musickes simphony, 5
 And still these words (God saue our Queene) re-ecchoed in the skie.
 In auncient Writers doe I finde when (Romes rare pearle of price)
 Pompey was chosen chiefe of Seas, by Senators advice, Thence to expell the roysterous rout of brauing Pirates might,
 Such was his fame through triumphes wonne in all the Romaines sight, 10
 That all applauding his renowne, with clamorous shoutes and cryes,
 So did they pierce the thin vast ayre extant beneath the skies,
 With horrid noyse, that flying Fowles, amazed, fell to ground
 Through great astonishment and feare of this their thundering sound.
 Much more should we doe for our Queene, inflam'd with ardent loue 15
 Of her attractiue vertues rare, proceeding from aboue,
 And for King Iames our Soueraignes sake, whom God preserue & keep
 From all detested treacheries, both waking and asleepe:
 For he our Albion Thesius true, hath curb'd our enemie, Romes Minotaure, a restlesse foe to Britaines Progenie. 20
 Nay, mighty Ioue, in mercy great, hath clos'd this monsters Iawes
 From hurting of his Daniel deare; or tearing with his Pawes
 The holy Saints and Martyres all, whose blood did oft imbrew
 This Monsters blacke blood-thirsty throate (which innocents he slew)
 But now (thankes be to God therefore) we are escaped free, 25
 By our most gracious Soueraigne King, from this our misery,
 Who rules vs with most gentle loue, from all oppressions free,
 Defending vs by peace, from strife, and former tyranny. |
 Licurgus-like with Argus eyes he doth prescribe his lawes,
 To free poore Codrus innocence from Cræsus greedy iawes: 30
 To all his friends, he succour sends which are opprest by might:
 Protecting Irus from his foes, and doth maintaine his right,
 When glorious Titan diues in west, and hides him from our eyes,
 For to enlight the darksome night, pale Cinthia doth arise,
 Like so bright Soll declin'd with vs, when by Impartiall death, 35
 The vitall thred was cut in twaine of Queene Elizabeth:
 Yet did no dusky night succeed, for in Elizaes roome,
 As from the Phœnix ashes doth another Phœnix come:
 For why, no sooner Brittain had her former bright eye lost,
 But straight another did begin to shine from Northeren cost, 40
 With hands vpheld, may we therefore giue thankes vnto our God,
 Who like a father did forbear, to strike vs with his rod.

Sending to vs in mercy great, such an Athenian King,
 Whose learned fame and Pietie, throughout the world doth ring:
 Another Cicero for wit and learned Eloquence,
 A valiant Cæser bountifull, for rare Magnificence:
 For to conclude, he doth maintaine Gods true and perfect word, 5
 Which cutteth sinne from off our soules, as a two-edged sword:
 But soft my Muse, attempt thou not so high an enterprise,
 His vertues rare for to behold doth daze thy tender eyes,
 So great a taske shall rest for men of most approued praise,
 As none but Eagles fixe their eyes on Solls resplendant rayes: 10
 The Souldiers having thus with ioy, this first dayes triumph done, which did delight her graces sight, and all that look'd there on:
 Returning backe before the Court, each band in good aray,
 With thundering shot their leaues they tooke, and homewards marcht †
 { Thus did her graces Court excell, with great renowne and fame, 15 { Where thowsands for to see her face, to Bristoll flocking came:
 { Whereas her Gracious Maiestie, their kindnesse to requite,
 { In open view her selfe did shew to all the peoples sight.
 It weare too long for to rehearse, the braue pastime and sport,
 Which by the Citizens were made, for to delight her Court, 20
 Their loue by proffered seruice shewen to guard her Maiestie,
 But mine intent is to conclude each thing with breuity: |
 And for to imitate aright, in this the curious Sunne,
 Who doth intend for her delight a Nosegay sweet to frame:
 Shee crops not rudely of those hearbes, on which she seaseth first, 25
 But doth select the rarest sort, reiecting those are worst,
 Like so few words will beautifie what doth from truth proceed,
 For too much matter Pell-mell mixt, doth a confusion breed.
 Wise Caliepie, Queene of Eloquence, assist my stammering tongue
 To finish this triumphant shew, which now I haue begun: 30
 Lest that my Muse, for want of aide vnder her burden fall,
 As Vines vnpropped oftentimes vpon the ground doe crall.
 No sooner had swift Phœbus steeds, beganne theire course to runne, Shining with most resplendant rayes vppon our Horrison,
 But that each souldier did prepare, to guard her Maiestie 35
 Vnto the temple of the Lord, with great solemnity:
 Not clad in armes as erst they weare, with thundering shot that ror'd,
 But with good harts to sanctifie, the sabboth of the Lord,
 Who hath sixe dayes allotted vs to purchase worldly wealth,
 The seauenth alone he hath reseru'd, for good of our soules health: 40
 That we this day might praise his name and rest our selues from sinne,
 As God did rest when he had made the world and all therein:

Quite from the Court vnto the Church this worthy guard was seene,
 In ranckes close standing one by one, to safe conduct the Queene,
 But when the Mayor graue & wise, in most triumphant sort,
 With all the reuerend Councell came on foot vnto the Court:
 In seemly wise attired all with gownes of Scarlet dye, 5
 For to attend vnto the Church her gracious Maiestie,
 Who mounted like faire Cinthia bright, into her sumptuous Coach, Drawen by foure milke-white coursers braue, and next her did ap-^{proach}
 The Ladies on their trampling steeds, like faire Diana's traine, Hunting in the Arcadian woods, (as doe the Poets faine.) 10
 Formost of all in their degrees, vnto the Church did goe,
 The reverend Senate, two and two, all marching on a row:
 Lastly on foote (before her grace with all her noble traine,
 Of Lords & Knights into the Church the worthy Mayor came,
 The Queene then set in chaire of state with all ye residue 15
 (In their degrees) the Mayor & Shriefes, and the Nobilitie, |
 Where learned Docter ROBSON did, a godly Sermon frame,
 In setting forth Gods mighty workes, and lauding of his name,
 Which Sermon being finished, she backe return'd to Court, Guarded along from Church againe, in most triumphant sort. 20
 The reuerend Mayor and the Shriefes, their loue for to expresse, Did feast with most delitious cheare, & dainties numberlesse
 Her Noble traine; who did admire, as though Earth, Ayre, and Sea, Withall their dainties had conspir'd, Bristoll to dignifie,
 Whose true affection to her Prince, and peerlesse Progenie, 25
 Doth rest vnparagond, as yet, vnto posterity,
 With their true loue set forth in part, before the worlds bright eye,
 Their hearts, their hands, their life, their lands, to please her Maiestie:
 And to content her Princely grace, shall euermore be prest,
 For whose most heauenly gifts diuine, we from aboue are blest 30
 By mighty loue, who through his loue, hath sent vs such a King,
 That turnes our blustering winters blasts into a gladsome spring.
 Deere mother England, with salt teares bend thou thine aged knee,
 And render thanks vnto thy God, who hath deliuered thee,
 When most vndoubted was thy feare, then did he comfort bring, 35
 Shrouding thee safe from Tigers pawes with his all-couering wing:
 For what a terrour had it beene, vnto thine heart to see Through sodaine strife, thy streetes exempt from popularity,
 When children fatherlesse each where, should in the streetes be found,
 Thy fathers childlesse sighing sore, and in deepe dolours drown'd, 40
 Thy trusty friends bereau'd of life, sisters rapt from the brother,
 No kinsman left for to lament or to inter each other,

Thy Virgins bath'd in teares thy youth amaz'd themselues to see,
 Through grieve of heart bereft of strength and of validity:
 Thy lofty towers tumbled downe, as in the Romains ire,
 Jerusalem was brought to ground, by famine, sword, and fire?
 But since that God hath now vouchsaft, not for our merits sake, 5
 But of his mercy and great loue, these iudgments iust to take
 From vs, who haue by sinne deserued to taste the bitter cup, Fild with the dregges of Gods iust wrath, and for to drinke it vp:
 Let vs giue thanks to God therefore, that nought but thanks doth ^l(craue,)
 Who hath vs rais'd from death to life, as Lazarus from the graue, ^l 10
 Continuing still vnto our ioy, the perfect Lampe of light,
 His sacred word, our spirituall food, and heavenly soules delight.
 Now bloody Mars is tied in chaines with fierce Bellena bound,
 His armes and Adamantine coate, lies rusting on the ground:
 Grizely Thanattos who did still his gastly steps attend, 15
 Hath lost his stinging force and might, (by bondage of his friend:)
 Harsh discord thirsting after bloud, with sweet concord is drown'd, Whiles peace with plenty in our streetes doth euery where abound:
 Now may the Lambes securely feed, from Wolfe, and Tigers clawes,
 Since Pan our watchfull Shepheard hath shut vp these monsters iawes, 20
 For all these benefits therefore receiued by our King,
 We will expresse our thankfulness and loue, (we owe to him
 And to his royall Progeny) vnto our Soueraigne Queene, Whose like throughout the worlds vast bounds cannot again be seene.
 But soft my Muse, let Ancors fall, strike sailes, thy swift course stay, 25
 Welcome to shore, remember that this is a Sabboth day:
 What twixt Euterpes mirth and sad Melpemens tragicke stile, (Thy sences luld) thou hadst almost spleeted thy barke ere-while Vpon the rocke Obluion cal'd: moreouer harke giue eare, Mundayes triumph implores thine ayde to make his fame appeare: 30
 Varietie and change doth best content mans appetite,
 Each obiect faire seemes fowle if still presented to our sight, Sweete Orpheus musicke cloyes our eares, if that it common be,
 Our nature is so apt and prone to mutability:
 By good aduice therefore it was provided that her Grace, 35
 With all her traine might not dislike their tarying in this place,
 For euery day shee soiourn'd here in most triumphant sort
 A seuerall pastime was ordain'd, for to delight her Court,
 And as at her first entrance here she did with ioy behold,
 A martiall troupe of warlike men, of courage stout and bould: 40

Like so, for Mundaies pastime was prepared for her sight, Betwixt two gallies and a ship a bloody water fight,
 But yet awhile I must looke backe, ere farther I proceede, Least that my Muse should taxed be for too too hasty speede,
 This water fight (by fame diuulg'd) full many thousand drew, 5
 Both farre and neere for to behold, and take a perfect view,
 Of Turkes and turkish gallies both, describ'd in liuely wise,
 By worthie Brutes who oft haue seene, their habit, forme, and guise:
 Nay, many a Christian Marchant man, hath too too often knowen, (Though by constraint) to Christ his flock their loue and kindnesse [(shewen,] 10
 When with the losse of all their goods, (O barberous cruelty!)
 These cursed Turkes (more deere then life) from them their liberty
 With endles bondage haue restrain'd, for gally-slaues condemn'd,
 There bound in chaines for to remaine till death their liues doth end:
 We Christians much more pittie shew, to dumbe and sencles things 15
 Then they to Christians will afford (such deadly rancour stings,
 There cankered hearts with pride puft vp, inflam'd with rage and Ire,
 That nothing can aswage their wrath, nor quench this burning fire,
 But Christian blood by their curst hands powred vpon the ground,
 By Christ redeem'd, then when naught else sufficient could be found,) 20
 We for our Cattell houses frame, against cold winters showers, Naked they row, when th'angry skies their stormy blasts down powers:
 We giue our cattell prouender, of sundry sorts of graine,
 They scarcely bread and water giue, their liues for to maintaine,
 We doe not presse our beasts with worke, beyond their strength and ^r(force, 25
 With restles rowing they oppresse their slaues without remorce,
 And when they haue their vtmost done, their tiranizing Lords Barbarian-like, torment their flesh with scourging whips of cords:
 For why, no words can ought auaille, neither can sighes suffice
 To mollifie their stony hearts, once bent to Tirannize. 30
 Woe worth the sinnes of Christendom, which haue incenst Gods ire,
 In iudgments iust for to lay wast, by famine, sword, and fire, Europe his chosen Heritage, (which doth Christs name adore)
 By letting in proud Ottoman, that Erimanthean Bore, Whose cursed race, hath rais'd their names by Christian Princes fall, 35
 While mongst themselues they disagree'd through ciuill strife & braule Witnesse the Grætian Empire lost, by Christian Kings neglect,
 To these accursed Infidels whiles each seemes to respect
 Their seuerall discords and debates, not knowing that the flame
 Once kindled in our neighbours house, will make vs feare the same. 40
 Of all things which God did create, of Birds, Beasts, Fish, and Fowle,
 The Lord into mans face alone did breath a liuing soule, |

That he which beares the forme of God imprinted in his face Should frame himselfe in heart thereto, as God hath giuen him grace:
 But man corrupted at the first, by sinne, through Adams fall, Hath euer since a rebell beene, and proued worst of all.
 For why? each beast obseruing kinde, his nature doth expresse: 5
 But man the Lawes of God aboue, and Nature doth transgresse.
 No Tiger seekes a Tigers bloud his greedy maw to fill,
 In Natures Schoole this learn'd, they keepe inuiolable still:
 But man to mankinde often proues most cruell, fierce, and fell;
 Yea, Christians vnto Christians are (I tremble for to tell) 10
 As bad, nay, some more worse then Turks; who through their ciuill [(broyles,] Present the Turkes occasion fit to glory in their spoyles.
 When Christian Princes disagree, and each gainst other rise,
 Then doe the Turks with might and maine their ruine straight deuise;
 For how can wee expect good fruit where euill is the tree? 15
 Or credit Turks, who mortall foes vnto all Christians be?
 Ye Christian Kings and Potentates, ioyne both your hearts and hands
 To chase this off-scumme Scithian-brood from you and all your lands.
 Vnite your Forces Christian like from Europe to expell
 Proud Ottoman, too dangerous a neighbour neare to dwell: 20
 Whose Moony Standards still attend, expecting but a prey,
 To satisfie their greedy lusts, impatient of delay.
 Christ is the head of Christendome, and we the members be,
 Ioyned in one through faith in him, with perfect vnitie:
 Euen as the members of a man, the head, the hands, the feete, 25
 Each in his office doth his part, the body for to keepe
 In perfect health: like so should we yeeld helping hands to others, Whom God hath made through faith in Christ, more near & dear then [(brothers.]
 When Amphitrites flowing waues began to fill their banks, 30
 Full forty thousand eyes at least, expected when our ranckes
 From Court-ward would conduct the Queene vnto the Riuers side,
 For to behold by worthy Brutes this water-combat tride:
 Who came accompanied at length with all her noble Court;
 The Mayor with the Councell roade, to shew her Grace this sport. 35
 One of the Bands in warlike wise marching triumphantly,
 Guarded vnto the water side her gracious Maiestie. |
 The other two on eyther side were of the Riuer plac'd, Whose thundering Shot resounding shrill, this famous triumph grac'd
 Where placed in her Royall Tent, bedeckt with Flora's pride, 40
 She did attend to see the end of this braue combat tride.
 O that I could in these my verse, to Virgils veyne aspire,

That all ensuing ages might this glorious act admire,
 Thereby to kindle in their breast a like desire of fame,
 By loyall tokens of their loue to equalize the same!
 But since that wishes are but vaine, whereby to purchase skill,
 My want of wealth in learning shall, and not my want of will, 5
 Condemned be: therefore, my Muse, feare not for to indite
 This worthy triumph as it was perform'd in order right.
 Foremost of all an English Ship came stemming with the tyde,
 And right before her graces Tent at Anchor did she ride,
 Her Colours were the bloody Crosse (to Britaines foes well knowne) 10
 A worthy Captaine was her guide whose skilfull Art was showne:
 Her Soldiers braue resolu'd hearts no danger could impaire.
 Her Flags & lofty Pendants seem'd to beutifie the ayre:
 But whiles at Anchor there they lay, they gan discry from farre
 Two Turkish Gallies well prepar'd, most mighty men of warre: 15
 They saw how close they ply'd their Oares, to boord her if thy can,
 Then euery mate begins to stirre, minding to play the man:
 Each one betakes him to his Armes, to entertaine this guest.
 In emulation which of them should guard his Quarter best.
 Some runneth here, some runneth there, all wants for to supply, 20
 As hony Bees in Summer time, when Phœbus gins to fry:
 Their fights hung forth, their Musket-shot, and Murderers each one
 Were ready prim'd expecting nought but when the Turks would come Whose Moony Standerds at the last, they plainly gan descry, 25
 Full well provided both for armes and for artillery.
 Their Admirall had all her men aparelled in blew,
 The other red; so neare they did resemble Turkes in hew,
 With Targs and Cemitaur's, so that had sharpe ey'd Lienus seene,
 He would haue iudged that these men Turkes naturall had beene,
 But when by swiftnesse of their Oares they did approach them nigh, 30
 Amaine, amaine, your top-sailes strike, these fained Turkes did cry: |
 Oh! hoy! so! hoy! From whence your ship? Of England. Whither bound?
 For Bristoll port. What will yee yeeld, or else sinke and be drown'd?
 Wee'll fight it to the vtmost man, the Christians did reply:
 We had much rather lose our liues then lose our liberty. 35
 Then did the Fife and Drummes begin deaths fierce alarum sound,
 The thundring shot with horrid noyse, did all things else confound:
 But when with Musket-shot they had on each part done their best,
 Their sharpe-edg'd Cemitaur's they drew, for to performe the rest.
 At once both Gallies fell aboard (a Turkish stratagem) 40

Seeking by numbers to suppress our neuer-daunted Men,
 Who with like courage did sustaine the fierce Barbarians force, Confronting them with their bright swords: who without all remorse, Prest on with might & maine. So that to the beholders eye,
 Each 'gainst their opposite did shew their vtmost crueltie. 5
 Like as the waters whose swift course is stopped by a bay,
 Which though not long, it for a while, their fury doth delay,
 Till re-vniting of their force, they cast it to the ground,
 So that no mention of the same remaineth to be found:
 Euen so thes Turkes were for a while repulsed with disgrace 10
 By Christians, till their numbers fail'd for to supply each place:
 Whereas the Turkes on all parts did their victory beginne,
 Though not by valour yet by force their chiefest hope to winne.
 On eyther part no slacknesse found, but each man firmly stood.
 That Amphitrites siluer waues were stain'd with crimson blood. 15
 This fight so brauely was maintain'd, that winged Victory
 Now on the Christians, then on Turkes, did looke impartially.
 The Bands which by the Riuer stood, on each side did their best,
 With thundring shot to aide their friends, by numbers thus opprest.
 Meane whiles the Turks with high applause their victory pursu'd, 20
 Longing to see their Turkish blades with Christian blood imbru'd.
 But trust who list (vntill deceiu'd) Fortunes inconstant chance,
 Which mighty Monarches casteth downe, and meaner doth aduance:
 When greatest hope of good successe, when health and wealth is highest
 Then wofull wracke, disease, and want, with grieve approacheth nighest. 25
 For whiles vpon thes Turkes attempts she sweetly seem'd to smile, (Bending her browes, she turnes her face, intending greatest guile. |
 The Christians well perceiuing that their forces nought auail'd
 To daunt these proud insulting Turkes which fiercely them assail'd,
 With fained feare retyring backe, they chast them cleane away, 30
 By fiery force) depriu'd of this their misconceiued prey.
 Like as the greedy rauening Wolfe, with pinching hunger prest, Leauing the Woods, through hils and dales, disdainig quiet rest,
 He fearelesse rangeth vp and downe, not ceasing till he finde
 The harmelesse flocke of tender Lambes, the obiect of his minde: 35
 Where ready prest to seize vpon his long desired pray,
 And satisfie his greedy lust, impatient of delay,
 The Mastiue dog pursues his theft, whom hastily he flies, Amaz'd with feare, being dispossess of this his wished prise:
 Euen so these Turkes prouokt by thirst of honour and renowne, 40
 Striuing for to adorne their heads with a victorious crowne:
 Whose Laurell Branches (Fames desert) are not by cowards gain'd,

But by true valiant noble hearts with sweaty browes obtain'd.
 When that they thought all danger past, which might themselues op-_l(pose)
 To their designes, then were they made a spoile vnto their foes:
 For oft-times when we glory most in Sun-shine of delights,
 Then Winter stormes our ioyfull course with sharpe affliction bites, 5
 Some of these Turkes incenst with rage, not fearing this mischaunce,
 Were mounted vp into the shrowdes, their prowesse to aduance,
 Where thirsting for to win renowne, with all theire force and might,
 Against the fury of their foes maintain'd an eager fight:
 But when their fortune once declin'd, the Christians they forsooke, 10
 Leaping into the Brinish waues, and so their Gallies tooke:
 But yet these drops that cool'd their heate, quench'd not the burning _l(fire)
 Of fierce reuenge for their disgrace, but more inflam'd their Ire,
 And wrathfull rage: remembring that how much more hard the paine,
 So much more excellent shall be the triumph they obtaine. 15
 Thus arm'd with hope, (for hope is swift, and flyes with Swallows wings, Of mighty Monarches it makes Gods, and meaner creatures Kings,)
 The second time they did attempt, although vnto their cost,
 To re-obtaine from Christians hands, their former honour lost.
 Then might you see the fiery bals like Comets blazing bright, 20
 The dusky smoke of powdred shot, which dim'd and daz'd their sight. |
 The moony Targs aduaunc'd on high from harme to guard their heads
 The Christians valour in defence, which nought their fury dreads:
 The fierce aspect on eyther part sufficient to affright
 And terrifie great Mars himselfe, the dauntlesse God of fight. 25
 For to conclude, they came aboard, where entertain'd they were
 By these braue Brutes, with Martiall strokes, vntill the former snare
 Once more had dispossess their hope the victory to winne;
 Constrayning them (to get aboard their Gallyes) backe to swimme.
 Amidst their fight one of these Turkes, thirsting to get renowne, 30
 Ere that the Christians him descri'd, had tooke their Colours downe.
 Wherewith vnto the Bowspret got, he leapt into the maine,
 And tooke his Gally with triumph of this his glorious gaine.
 The valiant heart which once hath felt the vtmost force and might
 Of enuious Fortune, courage takes, and thriues in her despight, 35
 That by his resolution bold he doth abate her ire,
 Who sought to worke his ouer-throw, by famine, sword, or fire:
 Euen so these Christians hauing once repulst this furious foe,
 Whose first assault might seeme to threat their wrack, & dreadfull woe,
 Their valiant hearts were more inflam'd by Turkes disgracefull foyle, 40
 Hoping their Trophies for to raise by those Barbarians spoyle,
 Who foure times twise did boord their ship, with lofty shouts and cries,

And foure times twice they were repulst from this their wished prise.
 So that through feare discouraged, they tooke themselues to flight,
 And left some of their braue consorts by Christians tooke in fight,
 Which captiues brought before her Grace, on bended knees did craue
 For mercy, which her Maiestie with pardon freely gaue. 5
 Loe here behold by this triumph, as in a mirror plaine,
 How mighty Ioue against all foes our quarrell doth mantaine, Confounding all their priuie plots, and close Conspiracies,
 Who for to vndermine our state, against vs doe arise.
 Their vaine attempts and boundles thoughts, he turnes to their decay 10
 Entrapped in ye selfe-same snare, they did for others lay,
 For God which bounds the raging Seas, hath bounded their desire:
 And turns to smoke their proud attempts wherto their thoughts aspire,
 This braue exploite thus finished, the Queene with all her traine Attending on, her Princely Grace, to Court return'd againe. I 15
 By which time Phoebus gan to hide his Chariot in the West,
 And each thing liuing tooke themselues vnto their wonted rest.
 But when that Philomell began her sugred notes to sing
 At faire Auroraes first approach, which present comfort brings.
 By chasing hence the darkesome night with her deluding dreames, 20
 And bringing in the ioyfull light by Sols all-searching beames.
 When euery man with ioyfull heart, his sleepy bed forsakes,
 And to his daily labours eke, himselfe againe betakes:
 The vtmost date expired was vpon this present day,
 Of our most gracious Queenes abode in Bristoll for to stay. 25
 Wherefore the reuerend Counsell came vnto her Princely Court,
 For to attend her Maiestie, prepar'd in seemely sort:
 Where as our Queene most graciously vouchsaf'd to thanke them all,
 Both Mayor, Sheriffes and Aldermen, who on their knees did fall,
 And humbly kist her Royall hand, such fauour did she shew, 30
 And loue, for loue, which to her Grace, in dutie, they did owe.
 And furthermore, for to expresse her loue to loyall hearts,
 And bounty by rewarding all according to deserts,
 A Ring with Diamonds beset, most graciously she sent Vnto the Mayor as a pledge of her most kinde intent, 35
 In ought she might for Bristols good, in rightfull cause obtaine,
 By suite prefer'd vnto King IAMES our gracious Soueraigne.
 Such tender loue hath now possess her Graces Princely breast,
 That she for Bristols weale will be for euer ready prest:
 For as the fixed Stars moue not within the Firmament, 40
 So loue by vertuous deedes obtain'd is alwayes permanent.
 In solemne wise her farewell tooke, through Bristoll streetes she past,

Where (as at her first entrance here) a worthy guard was plac'd:
The Mayor, with the Councell graue, before her Grace did ride,
Her Courtly traine of worthy Peeres, attended by her side.
The streetes on eyther side were prest with numbers infinite,
Who in her gracious countenance had fixed their delight: 5
Whose ioyfull hearts expressed were, when they beheld her face,
And with loud voyces did cry out, The Lord preserue your Grace!
Thus roade they with her Grace as farre as Bristols bounds extend,
Where this their ioyfull Iourney was compell'd to take an end. |
In humble wise the Mayor then his lofty steede forsooke, 10
And of her Grace on bended knees, prostrate, his farewell tooke,
And all the rest her Subiects true did seeme to change their cheare,
And mourne her absence as the childe that loseth parents deare.
The Martiall Bands in number three, by three braue peales of Shot
Exprest their loue, that cursed hate might not their honour blot. 15
Thus haue you here impartially presented to your view,
A patterne of most loyall hearts vnto their Soueraigne true,
Who not alone in hearts but hands, haue manifested plaine
Their loue vnto our gracious Queene, which Enuy cannot staine, Although that vertue seldome scapes, through Enuy free from blame, 20
For why detraction will not spare to blot Diana's name:
Yet vertue by how much the more hid from the worlds bright eye,
By cursed hate, so much the more it mounteth vpon high,
Whose Rose-bound head for her deserts, shall gaine a glorious crowne;
Incompast with a three-fold Wreath, Loue, Honour and Renowne, 25
Therefore let Enuy fret and fume, and spit her poysoned bane,
For vertuous deedes shall still inioy a neuer-dying fame.

(for he was borne on the 19th day of November 1602). A prince of lovely countenance and behaviour, tall of stature, and actiue of body, and endewed with asmuch godly wisdom & vertuous quallities as may be wished in a King.

On friday the first of Aprill 1625, he was proclaimed King of great Brittain, 5 france, and Ireland at the high crosse in Bristoll by sheriffe Clements, who, with the Maior and whole Councell were tired all in Scarlot, and stood before the Towlsey bare hedded with great reverence while the proclamation was reading, with 4 trumpettes [sowd] sownding both before and after, as it was done at the death of Queene Elizabeth, and proclayming of King Iames. 10

Jeffrey Allaga^rg^ha, a Grætian borne, but a Turke by education, and chiefe Basha of Constantinople, having redeemed 50 English Captiues, brought certaine presentes of strange beastes and fowle to King Charles, landed at Plimouth, and being bownd for London, tooke Bristoll in his way, and came to this Cittie on thursday the last of March 1625. Hee was present at the 15 proclayming of our king, and from the Towlsey went and dined with the Maior, being accompanied with all the Councell, & many marchantes of good account, where he was royally entertained. After dinner he walked to view the Cittie, and that night the Marchantes of Bristoll invited the said Basha to supper at his lodging at the Crowne in the high streat, with admirable 20 cost & prouision vppon so short a warning. Hee came to treat of conditions of peace, and release of Captiues; wherfore his entertainment was very bountifull, in requitting goodnes for much euill formerly done by the Barbarians. They would not suffer him, or any of his followers to spend one penny in this Cittie, | but extended liberallitie for the honnour and good of all Christendom, 25 and vnderstanding that he wanted a horse for his Iorney, & intended to hire one of a Carrier, the marchantes freely bestowed a good gelding vppon him, fitted with rich furniture beseeming his [great] greatnes and theire credit, who departing from the Cittie on the second day of Aprill, our marchantes conducted him part of the way, and so lovingly tooke leave of each other. 30

Saints' Days and Festivals

The following table lists the dates of all the holy days and festivals referred to in the Records. All days are entered under their official names but unofficial names occurring in the Records are also given in parentheses and repeated in their alphabetic places as required. Only feast days themselves are listed; if the night or eve of a feast or its tide or season (likely the feast day itself together with its octave) is referred to, its date may be inferred from that of the feast. The exact dates of moveable feasts, such as Easter, in any given year may be found following the tables in C.R. Cheney, Handbook of Dates for Students of English History, corrected ed (London, 1996), 84–161.

Translations

ABIGAIL ANN YOUNG

The Latin documents have been translated as literally as possible. The order of records in the Translations parallels that of records in the original. Place-names and given names have been modernized. The spelling of surnames in the Translations reflects the same principles as used in the Index. Capitalization and punctuation are in accordance with modern practice. As in the Records text, diamond brackets indicate obliterations and square brackets cancellations. However, cancellations are not normally translated; they may be translated when a whole entry is cancelled, especially if it appears that a cancellation may be administrative rather than the correction of an error, or if they seem of special interest or relevance.

Round brackets enclose words not in the Latin text but needed for grammatical sense in English. Not all the Latin in the text has been translated here. Latin tags, formulae, headings, or other short sections in largely English documents are either translated in footnotes or not at all. In translated documents containing a mixture of Latin and English, the English sections are normally indicated with '(English).' Very short entries, especially those that are part of repetitive annual series, or simple Latin formulae in court books are not normally translated, unless they present special problems. All Latin vocabulary not found in the standard Latin dictionary, the Oxford Latin Dictionary, is found in the glossary.

The Anglo-Norman document sorted under 1391-2 was translated by William Edwards (p 255).

Register of Bishop Godfrey Giffard HWRO: x716.093 BA 2648/1(i) ff 93v–4* (21 August)

A proceeding for the crime of decapitation at Bristol

Held before us, Godfrey, by the grace of God bishop of Worcester, in our cathedral church on 21 August in the year of grace 1279 on business arising from our office against Peter de la Mare, constable of Bristol Castle, and others, his accomplices, on the charge that recently they did improperly carry out certain irregular actions in the town of Bristol against clerical immunity, that is, that Richard de Waleden, cleric, having taken an oath to tell the truth, acknowledges that he (Richard) ordered that William de Lay, a fugitive at the church of the apostles Philip and James in Bristol, be dragged outside while he was in the churchyard of the same church. And (he acknowledges that) he himself laid hands on him (William) to drag him out; after that was done, he caused him to be taken back to the castle and kept there.

Henry de Essexe, layman, likewise having taken an oath, acknowledges that he grabbed the aforesaid William in the aforementioned churchyard by the beard and carried him into the castle.

Nicholas fitz Neel, layman, after being sworn, says that he held the said William in the said churchyard and took a sword from his hand and led him forcibly into the castle.

Gilbert la Gayte, layman, after being sworn, says that he grabbed the aforesaid William by the arm and drew him outside the churchyard and carried him into the castle.

Robert le Waleys, layman, after being sworn, says that he grabbed him (William) as he was fleeing into the churchyard and held (him) by the feet while the rest of his body was in the churchyard and let go because of the noise of the people.

headsman

Adam le Steor, layman, after being sworn, says that he only cut off his (William's) head and did not do anything more because he was at the prison the whole time, before and after (the incident at the churchyard), because he was the gaoler. And he knew well that (William) had been removed from the churchyard.

Richard le Forester, layman, after being sworn, says that he came at the order of his superiors and that he was present when (William) was beheaded. And that he knew that he (William) had been removed from the churchyard nor was he pleased at the beheading.

Andrew le Forester, after being sworn, says the same as the previous witness and adds that he stood there to guard both the one being beheaded and the headsman.

Thomas le Forester, after being sworn, says the same as the other two and adds that he advised the headsman to behead (William).

John le Foreste, after being sworn, says the same as the aforesaid Richard.

Henry de Essex, layman, after being sworn, says that he tied his (William's) hands in the prison and led him to the place of beheading and advised the headsman to behead (William) and when (William) had been beheaded he carried the headless body outside the castle.

John la Gayte, layman, after being sworn, says that when (William) had been removed from the churchyard, he met him outside the castle gate and led him, together with others. He says the same thing about the beheading as the aforesaid Richard le Forester. ¹

Gilbert la Gayte, layman, after being sworn, says the same as the abovesaid Richard le Forester. And he adds that he carried the headless body outside the castle.

Robert le Paumer, after being sworn, says that he led him (William) from the prison to the place of beheading and was present there. Also, when he had been removed from the churchyard, he led him into the castle.

Peter de la Mare, constable of Bristol Castle, after being sworn, says that he was not present during the removal but that he approved it and ordered him (William) to be kept (at the castle). And (he says that) he did that on account of the safety of himself and his followers and finally that he ordered him (William) to be beheaded and that all those things should happen just as they happened.

Robert, rector of St Mary's Church, Bristol, after being sworn, says for himself and his brother Richard that he does not know who have composed the well-known song, who have written it, and who have made it public. However, he says that he has heard that miracles were performed by the said William de Lay and that his brother has recounted them.

Godfrey, etc, to his beloved sons in Christ, .., archdeacon of Gloucester and .., dean of the church of Westbury: greeting, grace, and blessing. We entrust to you both, jointly and severally, our authority, together with a lawful power of punishment, to enquire in the town of Bristol whether any (persons) are detestably and rashly venerating the body of William de Lay, (buried) by the church of the apostles Philip and James, as if it were holy, falsely asserting that he had suffered martyrdom; or whether any (persons) have presumed to compose any song about him or recite or make public (such a) composition; and especially (to enquire) about the composition of a well-known song, written (on or attached to a board/placard; and to punish such offenders. Moreover we also entrust authority to you) to punish the rectors of the churches of St Mary in the Market and of the apostles Philip and James and any others who are encouraging scandals and errors in the aforementioned town of Bristol in whatever way on account of the late William de Lay. Further (we entrust authority to you) to receive Peter de la Mare and his accomplices, who lately committed openly certain outrages against the church, as duly penitent – just as we enjoined you verbally, archdeacon – and to call together the clergy and people, if it seems good to you, and enjoin our commands upon them. Given at Wick 23 August.

This mandate concerning a drowning is interesting because it is the earliest Bristol record that has come to light to use the word 'ludus,' although here it is most probably more related to swimming games than to dramatic activity.

3-5 HWRO: x716.093 BA 2648/1(i) ff 93v-4, 95

The forcible removal of William de Lay from the sanctuary of the church and his subsequent beheading is included in this volume because of its relation to the composition and dissemination of a 'carmen famosum' (p 5, l.1), an infamous or notorious song, which falsely venerated de Lay and proclaimed him a martyr. Bishop Giffard initially imposed stiff and extensive penances on the miscreants, including public penance in procession, reburying the body with its severed head, and taking up the cross (that is, joining the Crusades). Peter de la Mare, the master and ringleader of the execution of de Lay, was ordered to establish in perpetuity a priest to pray for the repose of de Lay's soul and the souls of others, to pay for a stone cross costing at least 100s, and to feed each year 100 poor persons (or to give each pauper 1d for food) on a day to be set by the bishop. However, because they agreed to send one of their number, or another fighting man, to the Crusade at their collective expense, the offenders were all absolved from both excommunication and any further penance only two days after the initial orders.

The first excerpt from the register (p 3, l.16-p 5, l.3) is the bishop's examination of the royal officers and the rector of St Philip and St James. It is an extremely early example of a church court at work, at a time when legal business was still frequently dealt with before the bishop himself. The second excerpt (p 5, ll.6-24) is Giffard's mandate to two diocesan officers to continue with the action against both de Lay's veneration and the infamous song and to indicate that those responsible for de Lay's death were penitent.

The double dots (p 5, l.8) which occur here were used in medieval documents in a way analogous to the use of 'A.B.' in modern legal formulae or form books, normally indicating either that the name of the addressee was unknown to the sender (unlikely in this case) or that the letter was addressed to that person not in his proper persona, but in an official capacity, to be opened and acted upon by whoever was currently exercising the office.

The parish church of St Philip and St James is located east of the castle walls; the castle was located on the eastern edge of Bristol in the thirteenth century. The city of Bristol did not gain administrative control of the castle from the Crown until 1630, by which time Bristol had completely surrounded this 'island' of Gloucestershire.

5 Berkeley Castle: Select Charter 521 single sheet

Isaac Herbert Jeayes, Descriptive Catalogue of the Charters and Muniments in the Possession of the Rt. Hon. Lord Fitzhardinge at Berkeley Castle (Bristol, 1892), 163–4, describes the charter as follows: '521. Grant by Thomas, Lord Berkeley, of certain premises in Bristol for the foundation of a chantry in St. Augustine's Abbey, and the endowment of a Chaplain, who shall ... live chastely and honestly and not ... go to markets or taverns more than shall be necessary, or frequent plays or unlawful games, etc.' It was dated at Berkeley 20 April 1348 and confirmed by Bishop Wulstan in Hartlebury on 25 April and by Prior John in Worcester on 27 April. Since the charter is written continuously and in the same hand, this copy was probably made and sealed on or after 27 April 1348.

6–7 BRO: 04718 ff iii col 1, [cxxxviiA]

The extract on f iii appears near the beginning of the volume, which contains entries from 1344 to 1574. It is in Latin, rather than the English of later civic documents. The hand, however, is of the late fourteenth to mid-fifteenth century (late anglicana) and therefore the excerpt has been dated c 1450. On occasion, clerks or recorders would return at a later date to earlier pages of a book to use blank spaces or pages there, which seems to have happened in this case. The c 1450 dating is supported not only by palaeographical evidence but also by the sums, which show an increase of overall expenditures in the Little Red Book record as compared to those of Ricart's Calendar.

Folio [cxxxviiA] is one of two that were inserted between ff cxxxvii and cxxxviii of the Little Red Book. The second insert is internally dated to 32 Henry VI, or 1453. Since the insert transcribed here is in a mid-fifteenth-century hand, it has been dated c 1450.

7 BRO: P/StE/ChW/1 f 27

The churchwardens' accounting year usually ran from late March to late March. This entry is grouped with Easter-related activities. (Easter Day in 1455 occurred on 6 April.)

St Ewen (Owen or Ouen; Audoenus in Latin) was bishop of Rouen in the seventh century. Only four other parishes in England were dedicated to him.

Richard Bransby (l.27) was an influential member of the parish who served as proctor in 1453–4 (f 23v), 1460–1 (f 36v), 1463–4 (f 46v), and 1464–5 (f 49). David Englund (l.28), a tailor, was another influential member of the parish who served as proctor in 1453–4 (f 23v) and 1462–3 (f 41). See Masters and Ralph (eds), The Church Book of St. Ewen's, pp 25, 40, 50, 64, 67.

Edward IV visited Bristol within six months of his accession on 4 March 1460/1 as both an assertion of power and to make certain the city supported him.

8 BRO: 04720(1)a f 123v

This undated document clearly refers to Edward IV's visit to Bristol on 9 September 1461; 'ful honourably receyvid' (l.15) undoubtedly relates to the pageant described in the previous entry.

8 BRO: P/StE/ChW/1 f 49v

John Nancothan (l. 22), tailor and draper, was a wealthy and influential member both of the parish of St Ewen and of the fraternity of St John Baptist, the Tailors' guild. In the 1455 church inventory (The Church Book of St. Ewen's, p 5), he is credited with having paid for both the St Margaret altar apparel and one of the banner cloths dedicated to St Katherine. According to Ricart (f 125v), a 'Iohannes Nancoton' was one of the two Bristol bailiffs in 1469–70. John Nancothan died 14 October 1469 and was buried in the chapel of St John Baptist in the church of St Ewen. Both guild and chapel were founded in 1399. The chapel of St John Baptist was, in fact, the church's southern aisle and belonged to the Tailors' guild. Nancothan provided legacies to St Ewen's and All Saints' in Bristol, the mother church in Worcester, and churches in Yatton, Congresbury, and Cornwall. He also left a gown to the chaplain of his fraternity and provided for his son, John, his daughters, Margaret, Edith, and Isabel, 'each of the children,' and the venerable Philip Meed, merchant. Nancothan's wife, Margaret, was to be executrix and the will was proved 6 August 1470 (see Wadley, Notes of Wills, p 143). For a discussion of 'dancing money,' see Audrey Douglas, "'Owre Thanssynge Day': Parish Dance and Procession in Salisbury," Folk Music Journal, 6.5 (1994), 600–16.

Cheney's Handbook of Dates places the patronal feast of St Ewen as both 24 August (according to the Black Book of the Exchequer) and 25 August (according to the Canterbury calendars); the date of the dedication of this church is, however, unclear in the accounts.

8 BRO: P/StE/ChW/1 f 58

It is not clear if Margaret (l.32) is John's wife or one of his daughters.

William Tayllour (l.33) was a prominent member of the parish and served as proctor in 1460–1 (f 36v). He gave a coat of purple velvet for a statue of Mary according to the 1455 inventory (f 4) and in 1473–4 (f 74v) he and Margaret Nancothan each gave 20s towards new vestments of blue velvet. In the same entry, John Woolfe gave 13s 4d towards the new vestments. (Margaret Nancothan gave an additional 3s 6d towards the vestments in the same year from the selling of ale.) Margaret Woolfe (l.34) is also mentioned with John Tayllour in reference to ale sales to raise money for the purchase of a new silver censer for the church in 1465–6 (f 55). Lawrence Woolfe (l.35) was also a tailor and parishioner of St Ewen Church.

9 BRO: 04720 (1)a ff 160v–1

Ricart became clerk in September 1478, when he started to compile his calendar. The BRO describes it as being compiled in 1479, but it makes more sense to date this entry consistent with the first Michaelmas–Michaelmas year of Ricart's tenure.

The weavers of Bristol lived primarily in Temple parish. They supported St Katherine's chapel in Temple Church, although their hall, also dedicated to St Katherine, was located in nearby St Thomas Street (see Sacks, 'The Demise of the Martyrs,' pp 147–8). Temple Church had a leaning tower, significantly out of plumb, which stands to this day. The church proper was destroyed by enemy action in November 1940 but the ruins remain and can still be used, as in the case of the staging of the Cornish cycle there in the summer of 1981.

Smith concludes in the margin of her edition of Ricart (p 80) that the second item (ll.21–31) is the festival of the boy bishop. Sacks, in 'Celebrating Authority in Bristol, 1475–1640,' agrees and points out that the ceremony 'corresponds quite closely to the usage at Salisbury.... [The] blessing of the civic body during its game of dice, however, appears to be unique' and thus brilliantly emphasizes the explicit misrule associated with the boy bishop festivities (p 199).

9–10 BRO: 04720(1)a f 161v

This is an English version, with details added, of the undated Latin list in the Little Red Book, f iii col 1 (p 6, l.40–p 7, l.4 above). The latter, although logically prior, cannot have been made too long before this list, since the sums have not changed, one reason for the mid-century date assigned to it.

10 BRO: 04720(1)a f 164

10–14 BL: Cotton Julius B. XII ff 18v–21

Ricart, a contemporary, does not mention the king's 1486 progress to Bristol, although he does accurately record for that year the king's marriage to Elizabeth of York. Ricart (ff 131v, 132v) suggests that Henry VII came to Bristol in 1491 and 1496.

Sacks argues that Bristol was still in decline at this time due to the fall of Bordeaux to the French in July 1453 (see The Widening Gate, p 21 and Table 1, p 22). However, it was also common for the city fathers to paint for their king the bleakest picture possible to avoid any increase in their tax burden. According to Ricart (f 131v), when Henry VII returned in 1491, the city fathers presented the king with a benevolence of £180, clearly no indication of poverty.

Henry VII's progress began from London on 14 March 1486 with stops at Lincoln, Nottingham, Doncaster, Pontefract, York, back through Doncaster and Nottingham to Coventry, Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Bristol, and Shene, before returning to London on 5 June (see McGee, 'The First Provincial Progress of Henry VII,' pp 245–7).

The abbey of Kingswood (p 10, ll.37–8), founded in 1139, was located three miles east of Bristol in the county of Gloucestershire. (There is another Kingswood in Gloucestershire, twelve miles northeast of Bristol and a half mile southwest of Wotton-under-Edge, but the clear reference in the text to the distance the city fathers travelled to greet the king makes it clear that this is the closer Kingswood.)

McGee (p 197) indicates that the stanzas 'ffor in quiet wise ... And vnytie,' (p 12, ll. 24–30) and 'I am Iusticia ... from oppressions,' (p 13, ll. 9–15) are borrowed 'from the Secreta Secretorum'; it repeats almost word for word the translation of Benedict Burgh in Lydgate and Burgh's Secrees of Old Philisoffres, ed. Robert Steele, EETS, es 66 (1894), 33.

St Anne's (p 14, l.3) was an Augustinian chapel two miles up river from Bristol.

15 BRO: 08155(1) p 1

The Bakers' accounting year is unknown; the ordinance of 1499 says that the annual account was to be rendered within sixteen days of Michaelmas, which suggests a Michaelmas–Michaelmas year. The date of rendering the account, where known, is generally October–December, which again suggests a Michaelmas–Michaelmas account year.

Alderman Fox believes that St Clement (23 November), the patron saint of mariners, was also the patron saint of the Bakers. See Fox, 'The History of the Guilds of Bristol,' for a discussion of the guilds of Bristol which centres on the Bakers. Clearly, St Clement was important to the port of Bristol.

16–17 BRL: 5029 pp 15–16

'bothe nythtys' (p 17, ll.13, 14) undoubtedly refers to Midsummer Eve (23 June) and St Peter's Eve (28 June), both of which were sometimes celebrated with bonfires and processions, eg, in Coventry and Exeter (see R.W. Ingram (ed), Coventry, REED (Toronto, 1981), xxii–xxiii, liii, and Wasson (ed), Devon, xvii). See p 17, BRL: 5029 p 19 for the specific reference to these two eves.

17 BRL: 5029 p 19

18 BRL: 5029 p 27

This page also bears a heading for costs for the dinner and the initial word of the first payment but half the page is torn away after that word 'Inprim(...)' and with it the first part of the dinner expenses; the remainder are on p 28.

19 BRL: 5029 pp 30–1

Bristol had four friaries at this time, any one of which could be the Friars Hall used by the Wire drawers and Pinmakers: the Dominicans or Black Friars, the Franciscans or Grey Friars, the Carmelites, and the Augustinians.

19–20 BRL: 5029 p 33

During this year the Wire drawers and Pinmakers seem to change the time of rendering their accounts to a later date. Hitherto the dates of regnal years and mayoral terms given have roughly coincided, since Henry VII's regnal year ran from 22 August to 21 August and the Bristol mayors and sheriffs held office for a term running from Michaelmas to Michaelmas Eve (29 September–28 September). In such cases, it is clear that the accounts were rendered on or before 21 August, or the regnal year would not have agreed with the mayoral year. In 1506–7, however, the regnal year specified is 23 Henry VII (22 August 1507–21 August 1508), whereas the mayor named is the one who held office in 1506–7. This discrepancy suggests that the accounts were rendered, this year, some time between 22 August and 28 September 1507, the last day before the new mayor took office.

20–1 BRL: 5029 pp 36–7

The reference to the king's daughter (p 20, l.22) probably refers to Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII; her daughter was born 15 July 1508 but died almost immediately. Margaret had nearly died following the birth of her first child, a son, on 21 February 1507 (who died the following 27 February 1508), during which time her husband, James IV of Scotland, made a successful pilgrimage on her behalf to the shrine of St Ninian. Her recovery may have been the reason for the Bristol procession.

The account is too early to be in reference to the marriage of Margaret's sister, Mary Tudor, by proxy on 17 December 1508 to Prince Charles of Castile.

21 BRL: 5029 p 40

The celebratory bonfires 'made for the Kyngis doughter' (ll.24–5) may refer either to Mary Tudor's marriage (by proxy and later repudiated) on 17 December 1508 to Prince Charles of Castile or to the July birth of Margaret Tudor's daughter (see above). The subsequent birth of Margaret's son, Arthur, on 20 October 1509 (and who died 15 July 1510) occurred too late to be identified with this account.

22 BRL: 5029 p 45

The payment for 'beryng of oure pagent At the birthe of the prynce' (ll.30–1) refers to Prince Henry, duke of Cornwall, first child of Henry VIII and Katherine of Arragon, born 1 January 1510/11 (and died 22 February). It seems odd to find a payment for an event that occurred in January subsumed in a Corpus Christi payment (Corpus Christi was on 19 June in 1511), but the accounting practice of the guild seems to have been to lump together all the payments for pageant-bearing at the end of the accounting year (see BRL: 5029 pp 36–7, p 20, ll.21–2).

23–4 BRL: 5029 pp 50–1

The accounts on p 50 are separated into sections by an extended flourish inserted between lines 2 and 3 and between lines 6 and 7.

‘for dressyng of the mete with wodde’ (p 23, l.39) means that the cost of the wood used as fuel is included in the payment for dressing (preparing) the meat.

25–6 BRO: 04721 ff 48, 49

The list from which these expenses come is part of a larger dispute between the city’s principal officials and William Dale, a young merchant who served as one of the sheriffs in 1518–19 (see Introduction, p lv).

This lawsuit is discussed at length by I. S. Leadam in Select Cases in the Star Chamber, pp cii–cxviii. The internal chronology of the relevant documents is not always easy to determine, although two fixed points of reference stand at the beginning and end of the case: Dale’s bill of complaint initiating the suit (see below pp 27–9) and the Great White Book account of Dale’s final appearance before Star Chamber and the chancellor’s adjudication of the dispute in October 1519 (see below, pp 31–3). Many of the documents that survive take the form of lists of estimated revenues and expenses for the sheriffs of Bristol, put forward by one side or the other in the dispute in an effort to discredit the projections of the opposing side.

This list, which precedes the Great White Book record of the formal pleadings in Dale’s lawsuit, may represent the situation as it was at the commencement of the case, presented from the mayor’s point of view. If so, it is important to compare it with the attachment or ‘Cedule’ (p 27, l.26) filed by Dale at the same time as his bill (see p 29, ll.4–19), which is his presentation of the status quo ante. Earlier lists of these civic expenses appear in English in Ricart’s Calendar, f 161v (1478–9) and in Latin in the Little Red Book, f iii col 1 (c 1450) above (pp 9–10 and 6–7, respectively).

27–9 PRO: STAC 2/6 sheets [5–6]

Sheets [5–6] of STAC 2/6 contain one of three surviving copies of the bill of complaint. The original parchment bill survives as sheet [1] but it is too worn and damaged to permit an accurate transcription. This paper draft contained in the same bundle was chosen instead as the copy closest in time and authority to the parchment bill. The third copy forms part of the Dale section of the Great White Book, ff 50–1v.

29 PRO: STAC 2/6 sheet [3]

These charges are part of the ‘Cedule’ (p 27, l.26), a schedule of revenues and expenditures for the sheriffs of Bristol attached by Dale as supporting documentation for his complaint. Both the accuracy of the presentation and the propriety of the charges are called into question by other similar lists and comments. This schedule was also copied into the Great White Book, ff 51v–2v.

29–30 PRO: STAC 2/6 sheets [7d, 8, 8d]

These estimates appear to have been put together by Dale or his counsel, possibly in response either to the city’s answer to his bill or to opposing lists of charges such as the ones found on ff 48 and 49 of the Great White Book. However, in the surviving copy the estimates have been annotated in another hand and ink with comments and reductions. At this time it was not yet the normal practice in Star Chamber for the two sides in a suit to exchange proofs (supporting evidence for their positions) in a procedure equivalent to the discovery stage in a modern common law case (see John Alexander Guy,

The Cardinal's Court: The Impact of Thomas Wolsey in Star Chamber (Hassocks, 1977), 93). However, the existence of a document like the schedule of expense estimates from which these charges come is evidence that the practice had already begun.

Another schedule of charges survives in PRO: SP 1/19 pp 30–4, prefaced by a rejoinder from the mayor against Dale. The mayor's defence was based in part upon distinguishing between those charges which Dale was required to pay (and for which he was provided with £60 in revenue from the town) and other charges claimed in the bill and schedule. Dale claimed that he had been required to pay this latter set of charges as well but according to the mayor 'the said shireffes ben not bounden nor nede not to pay but at their pleasures' (p 30). The charges given in this schedule of charges reflect the comments and corrections made by the second hand in STAC 2/6 sheets [7–8d].

30–1 PRO: E 101/560/14 sheets [3, 5–6]

This document was not identified by Leadam in Select Cases in the Star Chamber as part of the case but the similarities between the expenses listed and those under dispute in this lawsuit are very strong. It is undated and has been assigned only a date 'Temp. Henry VIII' by the PRO; if it is connected with Dale's suit against the mayor of Bristol, however, it must have been produced in 1519. Like sheet [4] of STAC 2/6, this schedule may have been part of Dale's responses to the mayor and city's position outlined in SP 1/19 pp 30–4 and the corrections and annotations to STAC 2/6 sheets [7–8d]. The amounts indicated usually correspond with the original amounts in sheets [7–8d].

A copy of this document survives in BL: Add. 24,785, made (probably in the second quarter of the nineteenth century) by Charles Devon of Gray's Inn for the antiquarian John Bayley. The excerpted entries are on ff 13 and 19.

31–2 BRO: 04721 ff 55–5v, 56v

The 'Cardenall abouenamed' (p 31, l.35) is Cardinal Wolsey, at this time lord chancellor and hence the presiding judge of the Star Chamber. The details of William Dale's submission and the chancellor's decision are only recorded here in the Great White Book. In Wolsey's settlement, the sheriffs are guaranteed an income of £216 20d yearly from various sources out of which they must pay £254 3s 6d for a deficit of £38 3s 6d. It is not clear whence this money should come.

There are occasional marginal notations on these folios in a later hand, probably that of an antiquarian.

33 BRL: 5029 p 65

'^xll. iiij' (l.28) is probably to be rendered 'fivescore and four [ie, 104] pounds'; thus, each torch would have weighed 13 lbs and been rented at a cost of 7d.

34 BRO: 04721 f 58

In the Great White Book the undated expense list, from which this entry comes, immediately follows the 4 October 1519 settlement imposed by Cardinal Wolsey, chancellor at that time. Wolsey did not itemize livery charges in his settlement, allowing a total of £25 for all livery; this is less than the total amount of the charges given here. However, the prices per yard in this list are very similar to those given by the annotator in reduction of Dale's estimates in PRO: STAC 2/6 sheets [7–8d]. It seems likely, therefore, that this list was drawn up not long after the end of Dale's suit, as part of the practical working out of details of Wolsey's decision.

34 Atchley: 'Mediæval Parish Records' p 67

Atchley, working with the original churchwardens' accounts, now lost, does not provide the amounts paid for the minstrels and refreshments on May Day. He notes also that in 'several years, "hosyn for Robyn hooode & lyttyll John" were provided.'

36 BRL: 5029 p 80

The account on p 80 is a fair copy of the account on p 78, with which it is collated.

37 BRO: 08155(1) p 56

This account is a special case; it includes expenses for Midsummer but the date of rendering is 10 April 1528, that is, well before Midsummer of 1528. The assumption is that the rendering of this account was somehow delayed – it should have been mid-October 1527.

38 BRO: 08155(1) p 57

This account is not in the usual form; it is couched as a memorandum dated 10 August 1528 but it seems clear, from its position in the manuscript and the names of the officers given, that it covers the accounting year Michaelmas 1527–Michaelmas 1528. However, since the memorandum is dated 10 August, this is given as the account's closing date. The previous account, for 1526–7, was not rendered until April 1528 (see p 37, BRO: 08155(1) p 56, above), which leads to speculation that there was some internal disorganization within the guild during this two-year period.

39 Atchley: 'Mediæval Parish Records' p 43

These entries are added as part of footnote 5 to Atchley's transcription of the 5 March 1432/3 inventory of church goods (St Nicholas Vestry Book, f 12, now lost). The stall was being prepared for the boy bishop ceremony of St Nicholas. In his note, Atchley identifies the 'j myter & j crowche' in the inventory as the mitre and crosier for the boy bishop, but the entry is not specific on this point. It is also possible that these items were for an image of St Nicholas.

39 BRL: 5029 p 94

The three accounts for 1529–30, 1530–1, and 1531–2 (pp 39–40, 41–2) are dated somewhat differently from the accounts that precede and follow them. Each gives a rendering date of 2 November as well as a regnal and a Michaelmas–Michaelmas mayoral year but in these three cases the mayoral year given is that in which the Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' accounting year ended, not that which included the 2 November rendering date. This suggests that the accounts were rendered sometime between late July, when the Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' accounting year ended, and Michaelmas, when a new mayoral year began, rather than on 2 November as specified. This discrepancy disappears in 1532–3 and subsequent accounts.

The Canynges family were wealthy and influential for generations in Bristol and it is not certain to which Canynges this refers. It is probably William Canynges who was mayor of Bristol five times between 1441 and 1466. In 1467, upon the death of his wife and at the end of his last mayoralty, he became a priest and within two years was dean of the collegiate church and college of Westbury. He died 17 November 1474 and is buried in the parish church of St Mary Redcliffe, where his effigy can still be viewed.

According to Ricart, Thomas Pacy (l.29) was mayor of Bristol in 1532 (f 142) and again in 1544 (f 144v). A Thomas Pacy was sheriff in Bristol in 1516–17.

Given the source, the St John Baptist Churchwardens' Rent Rolls, it is possible that Daubeney's singers were paid for a musical event in the church of a liturgical nature. It is also possible, however, that Daubeney's singers were paid for something other than a liturgical event, such as for entertaining at an unspecified parish event.

44–5 BRO: 04026(2) p 3

The marginal 'nihil' (p 45, l.1m) means that the money, although due, was not received. In subsequent years nonpayment is common.

45 BRO: 04026(2) p 143

The annual rentals are usually the first items in the accounts. This page of rentals, however, has been misplaced in the manuscript; it ought to have been bound between pp 76 and 77 instead of in its present place.

46 BRO: 04026(2) p 137

This account, which covers the eleventh week of the Michaelmas quarter, contains a payment for Saturday, 16 September, which should have been entered in the accounts for the twelfth week. Such discrepancies occasionally occur in the Mayor's Audits; in this case, perhaps, the weekly account was made up later than it should have been and an item that belonged to the following week was entered by mistake.

47–8 BRL: 5029 p 130

This account, although dated in 1537, is probably that rendered on November 30 Henry VIII (1538). This makes it the account for 1537–8, which fits its order in the books.

48–9 BRL: 5029 p 131

This account bears no rendering date, apparently because a page has been cut out between the present p 130 and p 131. This account is thus probably part of the account rendered 31 Henry VIII (1539), that is, part of the account for 1538–9, an account which would otherwise be missing.

50–1 BRO: 04026(2) pp 225, 343

This account's form is unusual. According to the account heading, it runs from Christmas to Michaelmas, rather than Michaelmas to Michaelmas, as is usual. (Hence the annual rental on p 247 is dated 25 December–29 September, rather than the more usual 30 September–29 September.) However, the previous account (for 1539–40) includes a partial account for the missing Michaelmas-to-Christmas quarter, even though that quarter clearly belongs to the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year of this account. Relevant extracts from that quarter's account are given here in their proper place, according to date, which is why date and page order do not agree in the series of Mayor's Audit extracts printed under this year.

Since the items following the second-quarter account in this annual account are not broken down by week or quarter they have been assigned simply to the period which covers the last two quarters of the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1540–1 (ie, 26 March–29 September).

This is the first time the Mayor's Audits record that players were paid not to play (p 51, ll.1–2), and the reason is given, which is unusual.

51 BRO: 08155(1) p 83

This account is dated 1540 as to the year of grace but it seems clear, both from the regnal date (33 Henry VIII) and from its position in the surrounding accounts, that it covers the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1540–1. Since these accounts usually give the year of grace in which the account was completed, the 1540 date is probably an error for 1541.

52 BRO: 04026(3) p 103

To accommodate the internal date, 23 September, and the account date, twelfth week of the fourth quarter, the first 'week' of the quarter must be reckoned as covering the two-week period 25 June–8 July and the thirteenth or last week as covering the part-week 24–9 September. This is not unusual in these accounts, which tend to start slowly and end with a final week or part-week heavy with payments that ought perhaps to have been recorded earlier. The alternative explanation (taking 25 June–1 July and 2–8 July as the first and second weeks of the quarter and 10–16 September and 17–29 September as the twelfth and thirteenth 'weeks') would be that the money used to pay the earl of Sussex's players was drawn out a week in advance, which, in turn, presupposes that the civic administration of Bristol knew ahead of time when the players would be arriving, an unlikely assumption.

52 BRO: 08155(1) p 85

No rendering date is given, but since the preceding and succeeding accounts of the Bakers were rendered in November, it seems likely that this account, too, was rendered in November.

53 BRO: 08155(1) p 87

This account is dated 1543 as to the year of grace and Michaelmas 1542–Michaelmas 1543 as to mayoral/shrieval year, and it follows the 1541–2 account. It seems clear that it is an account for Michaelmas 1542–Michaelmas 1543, despite the regnal date given, which places it between 22 April 1542 and 21 April 1543 (34 Henry VIII). In all but this account and that of 1543–4, the regnal year given is the one in which the account ends, so the assumption is that these two regnal dates are a year off.

53 BRL: 5029 p 148

No rendering date is given for this account or for any subsequent one until 1558–9. Since the accounts for years both before and after this period give a November rendering date, it is likely that these accounts, too, were rendered in November.

54–5 BRO: 04026(3) pp 134, 184, 198, 203

The heading makes it clear that the account covers the period Michaelmas 1543–Michaelmas 1544, while giving mayor's and sheriffs' names for the following year, Michaelmas 1544–Michaelmas 1545.

However, since the account extends to Michaelmas, which is when the new mayoral and shrieval years begin, the date on which the account was rendered almost certainly falls in the following mayoral year.

It is not clear why a payment made on 17 January (p 54, l.28) should be lumped in with the accounts for 20–6 January. Perhaps, since visits from travelling companies were unscheduled and money for payments thus could not be drawn out ahead of time, players were paid out of the mayor's own pocket and the payment recorded when the mayor was reimbursed the following week.

There are two different ways of dating the fourteen 'weeks' into which the last quarter of the accounting year is divided and to which the entries on pp 198 and 203 belong. Neither completely accommodates the internal dates. The subhead dates given are based on the assumption that 24 June–5 July is the first 'week' and 28–9 September the fourteenth or last, as this seems to accommodate the internal dates slightly better than the alternative method, according to which the first 'week' would be 24–8 June and the fourteenth 21–9 September. It is still difficult to explain why a payment for 27 July is accounted for in the week 20–6 July, especially a payment to players. This payment, however, could have been anticipated if the players had arrived the day before their performance, or perhaps 27 is an error for 17 and the payment was, in fact, accounted for a week late, as suggested in the previous endnote for a similar payment.

See p 278, endnote above to BRO: 08155(1) p 87.

'they' (l.39) are identified in the manuscript as David Williams and Robert Southall. John Smyth, a prominent import/export merchant of the period (see p 280, endnote to BRO: 04026(6) p 39), kept a 'boke of accowmptes' which was edited by Jean Vanes, The Ledger of John Smythe, 1538–1550 (London, 1974). It records that Smyth sold David Williams, a Bristol baker, both iron (p 43) and sack (pp 118, 203), and that Williams provided biscuits for Smyth's ship, The Trinity (p 203).

57 BRO: 04026(4) p 37

It is not clear why payments made in October were not recorded until January. Perhaps the mayor paid the visiting entertainers out of his own pocket and was not reimbursed until later.

59 BRO: 04352(1) p 444

There are three Draycots in Wiltshire: Draycot Cerne, Draycot Fitz Payne, and Draycot Foliat.

60 BRO: 04027 p 47

Although it seems highly unlikely that the ninth week of the Midsummer quarter (ie, that ending 24 June 1553) could be computed as anything except 21–7 May, there is a payment in this account for 'the last of Maye.' However, as this payment is for Spicer's alms, a regular, easily anticipated payment, it seems possible that the money was withdrawn the previous week in anticipation of the almsgiving and noted as having been paid the following week when the accounts were made up.

61 BRO: 04026(6) p 37

There is a dating problem here. This account ought to be that for 23–9 May for the other dates to work out. The Midsummer quarter (ie, that ending 24 June 1557) has twelve full accounting weeks and two part-weeks, so there are two ways of counting the weeks: first week as 26 March–3 April and thirteenth as 20–4 June, or first as 26–7 March and thirteenth as 13–24 June. The latter has been rejected because it generates a twelfth week of 6–12 June, which in turn implies that money was withdrawn to pay for an anticipated performance which, although possible, seems very unlikely.

62 BRO: 04026(6) p 39

According to Vanes (ed), Ledger of John Smythe, p 12, Giles White (l.16) was apprenticed to the Bristol merchant, John Smyth, sometime before 1532; he is mentioned throughout the Ledger as Smyth's servant and factor. In September 1549 John Cutt (l.16) purchased a house in Corn Street from Smyth; he is also mentioned regularly in the Ledger. Both White and Cutt were named in the list of merchants, compiled in or around 1550, which was included at the end of Smyth's Ledger, and in the list of merchant venturers who held the company premises as feofees in 1561 (McGrath, The Merchant Venturers of Bristol, p 18 n23). Both White and Cutt were sheriffs in 1554–5 when John Smyth was mayor. Smyth (d. 1 September 1556), a prominent importer/exporter and wealthy property owner in Bristol, was sheriff in 1532–3, and mayor in 1547–8 and 1554–5. In this account White and Cutt are apparently only now being paid for the gown they gave to Rutt two years earlier during their shrievalty.

This is the last entry on the page before the sum and the only one to begin with 'Item.' The character of the writing differs slightly from that of the other entries but is, however, so similar that the line was probably added by the same hand, with a quill cut slightly smaller, after the rest was written up.

64 BRO: 04026(5a) pp 258, 303

There is no formal account heading for the 1558–9 annual account, of which this quarterly account is a part, but it is clear from the mayoral and quarter dates given that the payments listed on pp 258–70 belong to the first quarter of the 1558–9 accounting year, that is, 30 September 1558–25 December 1558.

Page 303 is now bound out of order and was originally the last leaf of the surviving text. It is damaged at the head and following leaves have clearly been lost.

This payment for a year's rent of the waits' house is entered in the account for the thirteenth week, which is why it is placed under 22–9 September. Sometimes the rents due for a whole year are listed before the quarterly and weekly accounts, and when that happens the date can only be given as 30 September–29 September. Since there is no internal date here, however, and the payment is dated in a specific week, it seems sensible to use the week date.

67 BRO: 04026(7) p 153

See endnote above to BRO: 04026(7) p 53.

67 BRO: 08155(1) p 109

This account is dated 1561 as to the year of grace, Michaelmas 1560–Michaelmas 1561 as to the mayoral/shrieval year, and 4 Elizabeth (17 November 1561–16 November 1562) as to the regnal year. The date of rendering is 4 November, and it seems clear from the account's position in the manuscript as well as from the mayoral/shrieval year and year of grace that this is the account for 1560–1 and that it was rendered on 4 November 1561. Possibly the regnal year is given as 4 Elizabeth simply because the scribe anticipated the imminent change of regnal year, or, more likely, the account heading was not written until 17 November or later, by which time the regnal year had in fact changed.

68 BRO: 04026(7) p 235

See endnote above to BRO: 04026(7) p 53.

68 BRO: 08155(1) p 111

This account appears, from the other dates given, to be that for 1561–2 but the new regnal year is again anticipated. See p 280 above, endnote to BRO: 08155(1) p 109.

68 BRO: 04026(7) p 292

In the heading to the general payments section of this account, the date is given as Michaelmas 1563–Michaelmas 1564. However, the date given in the general account heading is Michaelmas 1562–Michaelmas 1563 and internal dates confirm that this is the 1562–3 account.

69 BRO: 08155(1) p 113

As in the two previous Bakers' accounts (see p 280 above, endnote to BRO: 08155(1) p 109), the regnal year given here is off by one, perhaps because this date of rendering, like the other two, is in November and thus very near the end of Elizabeth's regnal year. The error is corrected in the next Bakers' account (for 1563–4) so that for both accounts the regnal year given is 6 Elizabeth.

70 BRO: 04026(7) pp 368, 385

According to the heading of the general payments section of this account, this is the account for Michaelmas 1564–Michaelmas 1565. However, based on the general heading, other section headings, and internal dates, this is clearly the account for 1563–4.

This is the first time the Mayor's Audits record the number of waits (1.37).

71 BRO: 04026(8) p 30

For the third year in a row, the date given in the heading to the general payments section of a Mayor's Audit account is one year advanced of the correct date of the account. The main account heading, other section headings, and internal dates confirm that this is the account for Michaelmas 1564–Michaelmas 1565.

73 BRO: 08155(1) p 119

The guild officers did not change between 1565–6 and 1566–7. The guild wardens rendered their account at some date after Michaelmas 1567 and it covered the preceding two-year period. Two full inventories are given and both are printed, with pp 119 and 120 assumed to represent two separate accounts.

74 BRO: 08155(1) p 120

See endnote above to BRO: 08155(1) p 119.

74 BRO: 04026(8) p 220

The twelve 'weeks' of this quarter consist of eleven full weeks and two part-weeks. The dates supplied here are based on a first 'week' of 30 September–4 October and a twelfth 'week' of 14–25 December, a choice which satisfactorily accommodates the internal dates.

77–8 BRO: 04026(9) pp 24, 27, 29

The payment on p 24 also appears in the sixteen-volume Jefferies Collection as an antiquarian copy (BRL: 7948 Jefferies Collection, vol 4, p 330; originally a 'Collection for a History of Bristol by Wm. Tyson. Vol. 2'). William Tyson (1785–1851), a bookseller and antiquarian, joined the Bristol Mirror in 1826, writing archaeological articles under the byline 'T,' and serving as an editor until his death. As early as 1816, he also published a quarterly magazine, the Bristol Memorialist, which focused on the antiquities and history of Bristol. Between 1852–4, Tyson's collection was auctioned, with much of it being purchased by C. T. Jefferies, a new and second-hand bookseller, stationer, bookbinder, and printer, at which point volume 2 of Tyson's collection became volume 4 of Jefferies' collection.

The payments on these pages belong to the second quarter of the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1569–70. The second quarter runs from 26 December to 25 March and is usually divided into twelve or thirteen accounting 'weeks.' This particular quarterly account contains only twelve 'weeks,' although the calendar quarter contains twelve full weeks and one six-day part-week along with the first full week (ie, the 'week' runs 26 December–7 January), or the twelfth and last 'week' includes two full weeks (ie, the 'week' runs 12–25 March). The long first 'week' is the more likely, and the 'weeks' to which the extracts printed here belong have been dated accordingly.

78 BRO: 04026(9) pp 32, 34

These payments belong to the third quarter of the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1569–70. In this year the third quarter, which runs 26 March–24 June, consisted of thirteen full seven-day weeks and no part-weeks, but the quarterly account is divided into only twelve 'weeks.' Following the usual practice of assimilating extra part-weeks into the first and last 'weeks,' it is assumed that either the first or the last 'week' includes two seven-day weeks. In this case, because the account for the eighth 'week' contains the internal date of 20 May (which makes that 'week' 14–20 May), the first 'week' thus becomes 26 March–1 April and the last 11–24 June.

The bottom quarter of the page is torn away but the entries end at mid-page.

84–5 BRO: 04026(9) p 290

This list of sums collected towards the cost of the queen's visit in August 1574 is not dated specifically for the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year but it seems likely that the money was collected well in advance.

The ell (p 84, l.27) is a unit of measure. The English ell was usually 45 inches, the Scots ell was 37.2 inches, and the Flemish ell was 27 inches. Based on a 45-inch English ell, as is likely to be the case here, 159 ells would be almost 200 yards.

William Saltern (p 84, l.29) is possibly William Saltern, sheriff in 1574–5. Sir Thomas White (1492–1567), one time master of the guild of Merchant Taylors in London, had established a trust estate in Bristol in 1545 with a gift of £2,000 to the corporation. In his will he made arrangements for the disposition of future rents from this estate, presumably from which this money (p 84, ll.34–8) is being borrowed.

John Barstaple (p 84, l.39), a prominent citizen who died in 1411, served as bailiff (1379–80), sheriff (1389–90), and mayor three times (1395–6, 1401–2, and 1405–6), built a new almshouse near Lawford's Gate, and appears to have left a bequest to the corporation. The 'chest' seems to have been a real one containing money, some of which is being borrowed in anticipation of the queen's visit.

85–9 BRO: 04026(9) pp 300, 313

Thomas Dunne (p 85, l.26; p 88, l.18) was schoolmaster of the free school of St Bartholomew between 1570 and 1578 (see Introduction, p xxxiii). In 1579 Dunne was 'admytted to the liberties because he married with margeret late the daughter of Iohn Hancock merchaunt and burgesse' (BRO: 04026(10) p 277).

Nichols (Progresses of Elizabeth, vol 1, pp 392–407) and Ricart (ff 166v, 167) agree that the queen arrived on Saturday, 14 August; Nichols gives no departure date but Ricart and Adams (p 163) say she left the following Saturday (21 August).

Many of the individuals named in this list were prominent Bristol citizens and merchants who held public office in the late sixteenth century. The 'mr Dowting' (p 87, l.16) is probably the Edward Dowting who was elected undersheriff of Bristol on 16 January 1570/1 (see Maureen Stanford (ed), Ordinances of Bristol 1506–1598, p 46). John Hopkins (p 87, l.22) is frequently named in manuscript records relating to the Merchant Venturers of Bristol and was a Bristol sheriff in 1586–7. In May 1605, a John Hopkins was one of ninety-seven Bristol merchants named in a new grant by James I incorporating a company of English merchants trading in Spain and Portugal and was appointed one of the assistants to the secretary of the Spanish Company. On 31 December 1605, John Hopkins, alderman, was present at a meeting for the reorganization of the Bristol Merchant Venturers as exempt from the incorporated Spanish Company. See Latimer, The History of the Society of Merchant Venturers of the City of Bristol, pp 63–4, and McGrath (ed), Records Relating to the Society of Merchant Venturers of the City of Bristol, p xii, for discussion of the relationship between the Spanish Company and the Merchant Venturers.

Thomas Symons (p 87, l.24) is possibly the Thomas Symonds, merchant venturer, who was co-feoffee with Thomas Aldworth of the company's property until 20 November 1561, at which date it was conveyed by feoffment to a greater number of company members. A 'T. Symoundes' is named in the c 1550 list of merchants in the back of Smyth's Ledger and a Thomas Symonds, possibly a son, is one of the 1605 Spanish Company. Michael Pepwell (p 87, l.26) was sheriff in 1575–6 and mayor in 1593–4. John Brown (p 87, l.28) had been sheriff in 1558–9 and mayor in 1572–3 and is probably the same John Browne, Bristol merchant, who wrote The Marchants Avizo (1589), a handbook for apprentices and factors abroad (see Patrick McGrath (ed), The Marchants Avizo (Boston, 1957).

Dominick Chester (p 87, l.34) was a Bristol sheriff in 1567–8 and member of parliament for Minehead, Somerset, in 1572. He played a significant role in the early growth of the Company of Merchant Venturers, serving as a warden in 1566 when Elizabeth I confirmed the original letters patent granted by Edward VI and as master in 1569 when the company obtained its grant of arms. He is one of several members to whom the company property was conveyed in 1561. Richard Cole (p 87, l.37) was sheriff of Bristol in 1569–70 and William Gittons (p 87, l.39) in 1572–3. Thomas Kelke (p 87, l.41; p 88, l.1; p 89, l.5) was sheriff in 1559–60 and mayor in 1573–4 during the queen's once-in-a-lifetime visit. He was a co-feoffee of the company property after 1561 and master of the Merchant Venturers in 1566.

Philip Langley (p 88, l.5) was a Bristol grocer who was a city alderman from c 1566–92, sheriff in 1566–7, and mayor in 1581–2. He and John Popham, Bristol recorder (see pp 284–5, endnote to BRO: 13748(4) nf below), were elected members of parliament for Bristol in 1571 and 1572, having taken the seats from two merchant venturers who had promoted a 1566 bill – repealed in 1571 – which attempted to limit Bristol overseas trading to company members only. Despite his apparent opposition to the trade restriction, Langley was himself a member of the society of merchants trading in Spain and Portugal that was incorporated by Elizabeth I in 1577.

Mr Churchyard (p 88, l.11) is, of course, Thomas Churchyard, who devised the entertainment for the queen and whose account of her reception is printed on pp 93–109. This reference indicates that Churchyard served as designer of the forts as well as author of the script. For William Saltern (p 88, l.13) see p 282, endnote to BRO: 04026(9) p 290.

Ralph Hassald, possibly the same man as Randall Hassall (p 88, l.27), was a sheriff in 1571–2. A John Harte, possibly the same man as John Hort (p 88, ll.27–8), was a sheriff in 1585–6 and mayor in 1599–1600. 'mr Aldworth' (p 88, l.29) may be Thomas Aldworth, who was sheriff in 1566–7 and mayor in 1582–3 and 1592–3. The Aldworth family appears to have been well represented in the Merchant Venturers. A Thomas Aldworth was co-feoffee with Thomas Symonds of the company's property until 1561; a Thomas Aldworth, the younger, served as one of forty new feoffees of the company premises in 1600 as well as treasurer of the company in 1605 and was also named as a member of the Spanish Company in that year. A Robert Aldworth was sheriff in 1596–7, a member of the Spanish Company in 1605, warden in 1607, and master of the Merchant Venturers in 1609 and 1612. A John Aldworth was sheriff in 1602–3 and warden of the Merchant Venturers in 1609 and 1612. The names John and Robert Aldworth both appear in the records relating to the feoffment of Merchant Venturers' property in 1600 and its reorganization in 1605.

'mr Snygge' (p 88, l.31) is perhaps the George Snygge who was mayor in 1574–5. A father and son, both George Snygge, were listed among the twenty-eight Merchant Venturer members who held the company property by feoffment in 1561. 'mr stone' (p 88, l.39) may be the John Stone, yet another merchant venturer, who was mayor in 1568–9 and 1571–2.

John Young (p 90, ll.34, 36), arguably Bristol's wealthiest and most influential Elizabethan citizen (and who was knighted during the queen's visit), owned an impressive new private residence where St Austin's (Augustine's) Back meets Host, or Horse, Street, on the site of the former Carmelite Friary (see p 285, endnote to BRO: P/XCh/ChW/1a f 207v). 'mr Tracie' (p 90, l.37) was Sir John Tracy (d. 1591) of Todding-ton, Gloucestershire, who was sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1578–9 and member of parliament in 1584. Sir Thomas Porter (1537–98) was also of Gloucestershire for which he was member of parliament in 1572 and sheriff in 1581–2. Sir William Morgan (c 1542–83) of Pencoed, Monmouthshire, Wales, was a soldier and adventurer who saw service in France, Holland, and Ireland. Early in 1573, he volunteered in a colonization expedition with the first earl of Essex to Ireland and was there appointed marshall on the departure of Sir Peter Carew. It was probably in consequence of a commendation to the queen by Essex that Morgan was knighted on his return to Bristol. For Richard Berkeley (p 90, l.36), see Patrons and Travelling Companies, p 302. His players were in Bristol in 1574–5 (see p 110, BRO: 04026(10) p 21) and in Devon in 1576–7 (see Wasson (ed), Devon, pp 245, 281, and 465).

91–2 BRO: 13748(4) nf

The substantive variants between this account and that in the 1623 recension (BRL: 25486 pp 162–3; Adams's Chronicle of Bristol, pp 113–14) seem intended to add further details and to make the description clearer. At the foot of the recto on which the account concludes, a note has apparently been pasted in and then cut away, headed, 'More notes concerning her Grace, at her being in Bristoll as aforesaid.' Only a few words are visible below that heading: 'Many (...) made against the great fort but still it.'

The new knights referred to on p 91, ll.37–8 are identified in the endnote to BRO: 04720(1)a ff 166v–7 above.

John Popham (p 91, l.28) of Somerset was member of parliament for Bristol in 1571, acting in opposition to the 1566 act to limit Bristol's trade to Merchant Venturers (see p 283, endnote to 1573–4 BRO: 04026(9) pp 303, 313, above), and again in 1572–83 when he spoke on several specific legal points including bringing minstrels within the meaning of an act against vagabonds. He was recorder for Bristol from 1571 to c 1577. He was appointed serjeant-at-law (1579), solicitor-general (1579–81), speaker of the house (1581), attorney-general (1581–9), and lord chief justice (1592–1607). He was knighted in 1592.

These accounts cover the period 26 March–25 March; the rendering date, when given, is April or May, and the dated payments run in sequence from June to March, with the ‘minister,’ for example, being paid his year’s wages on 25 March. This particular account is printed under the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1573–4 because the entries relate to the queen’s visit in August 1574.

‘Rolodg’ (l.17) may refer either to ‘horologe’ (ie, the town clock) or to Rowland’s Lodge which was purchased in 1568 by Sir John Young (see p 284, endnote to BRO: 04720(1)a ff 166v–7, above). Young began to build the Red Lodge in the late 1580s on the site of the demolished Rowland’s Lodge. Elizabeth stayed at Young’s ‘Great House’ in St Augustine’s Back but clearly an important event occurred at ‘Rolodg’ when the queen visited.

The present-day Red Lodge and its historical background are the subject of a City of Bristol Museum and Art Gallery information pamphlet.

Brewer (l.33) pays this rent through 1587–8, although he is never again described as a musician.

93 GL: Hockaday Abstracts, vol 442 p 16

Comparison of these accounts with the others in the same series shows that they actually run from 1574–5. They are printed here in 1573–4 because they relate to the queen’s 1574 visit to Bristol.

93–109 STC: 5232 ff 100v–10v

Where ‘ée’ appears as a printer’s error for ‘ee’ (as, for example, in ‘freend,’ p 94, l.9), it has been reproduced as ‘ee.’

The ‘Colledge’ (p 98, ll.4, 9) is presumably Bristol Cathedral, formerly the church of St Augustine’s Abbey, a community of canons regular.

John Robertes (p 103, l.1) was mayor of Bristol in 1578–9. Clearly prominent by the time of the queen’s visit in 1574 (to have a named part in this royal entry), Robertes must also have been talented.

‘Scholemaister’ (p 109, l.18) is a reference to Mr Thomas Dunne, a master at the free school of St Bartholomew (see Introduction, p xxxiii).

109–10 STC: 7516 p 23

This poem is not by Richard Edwards, but by one D. Sand[e], to whom four poems from the Paradyse of Daynty Deuises (nos 22, 25, 29, and 47) are assigned. See Rollins (ed), The Paradise of Dainty Devices, p lxi.

112 BRO: 04026(10) pp 89, 97

Since there are only twelve accounting ‘weeks’ in this quarter, which consists of twelve full weeks, a six-day part-week, and a one-day part-week, it is difficult to determine what days the first and last weeks should cover. However, to set the internal date 14 April, which occurs in the account for the third ‘week’ (within the week which runs 8–14 April) and to accommodate another internal date in the fourth ‘week,’ it is necessary to define the first ‘week’ as 26–31 March and the last as 10–24 June.

115–16 BRO: 04026(10) pp 214, 215, 210

There are two ways of dating the weeks of this quarter, which has twelve accounting 'weeks' but in fact consists of eleven full weeks and two part-weeks. For the internal date of 17 November to be properly placed, the first 'week' must be long, that is, from 30 September–12 October and the last 'week' must be short, that is, from 22–5 December.

The 'Crayne' (p 115, l.22) is most likely the mechanical crane located on the Avon just in St Nicholas Back between Marsh Gate and the Bridge which was used for loading and unloading ships and boats.

The entry from the week of 17–23 November (p 115, ll.30–6) is most interesting because during this period it is none other than John Northbrooke who is preaching the sermons at the cathedral, the author of Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in terra. A Treatise wherein Dicing, Dauncing, Vaine playes, or Enterluds, with other idle pastimes, &c, commonly used on the Sabboth day, are reprovved by the Authoritie of the word of God and auntient writers (1577; STC: 18670). Undoubtedly the famous despiser of games, dicing, and playing must have delivered many sermons in Bristol on the evil of the theatre (see Introduction, p xxxiv).

The musician James Sargent (p 116, l.25) is probably the same person who wrote 'A New Sonnet upon the Arrival of Richard Ferris at Bristol' (see p 288, endnote to STC: 10834 sigs. B1v–2, B2v–3v, below) and who is identified below as a Bristol wait (see p 287, endnote to BRL: 5030 p 2).

The event in honour of which the brass 'bashes' (p 117, l.25) were shot off and the drum played was the swearing-in ceremony of the mayor and the aldermen, which occurred on 29 September each year.

120 BRO: 04026(11) p 43

David Harris (l.26) was probably one of the Bristol waits; it appears the waits lived together in one house.

120 BRO: 08155(1) p 135

The rendering date of this account is given as 17 October 1588, an obvious scribal error. Internal evidence makes it clear that this is the account for 1579–80. The account for 1587–8 is excerpted below, p 134.

121 BRO: P/XCh/ChW/1a f 247

The account covers the period 26 March 1580–25 March 1581, but because the 'last Cownpt dyner' (ll.4–5) was presumably held in April or May of the Michaelmas–Michaelmas year 1579–80 (ie, when the account for the previous year was rendered), this extract has been entered under that year.

121 BRO: P/XCh/ChW/1a f 248

While tempting to believe 'one of the quenes men' (l.10) is an actor, such a conclusion is by no means certain, since the term 'man' could refer to a member of the household or domestic staff. Although there had been a troupe of queen's interluders active in the provinces in the 1560s and early 1570s, notices of payments to them disappear from the records later in this decade. Murray's isolated reference to the queen's players in Ipswich in 1581–2 is misdated by a year and probably refers to the better known queen's men company reformed in 1582/3 (see English Dramatic Companies, vol 1, p 19).

122 BRO: 04026(11) pp 92, 116

The 'harry dyttie' (l.3) mentioned here is probably the musician 'Henricus dittie,' also identified in the Apprenticeship Indentures (see p 123, BRO: 04352(2) f 158).

The payment to Oxford's players (ll.38–40) sounds more like Oxford's boys than Oxford's men. If correct, this would predate by several years Harbage's assertion (Annals of English Drama, p 299) that Oxford's boys were active 1583–4. Chambers, Elizabethan Stage, vol 2, pp 100–1, suggests that these 'were probably boys of the Earl's domestic chapel, travelling either with the Duttons [Oxford's Men] or as a separate company.' The breakdown of the 20s payment is also interesting in that the man receives the same amount as the boys and they may have been paid separately.

123 BRO: 04352(2) f 158

The first two entries on f 158 are dated 2 August, the next three 20 'April,' followed by 15, 13, 22, 21, and 20 August. The 'April' in these entries is probably a scribal error for August, although it is possible that the three missed entries, once discovered, were placed in the records four months late.

123–4 BRO: 04026(11) pp 165, 167, 173, 181

This account is dated in the usual way with named quarters and numbered weeks, but it also gives a single day and month date for each accounting 'week.' These single-day dates appear in the subheads in the place of the more usual week dates. It is clear that, as in earlier accounts, the length of the accounting 'week' is variable; these 'weeks' are sometimes as short as four days and sometimes as long as ten and they may begin on any day of the week except Sunday, although Friday is used only once and Tuesday is the most common starting day.

125 BRO: 04352(2) f 184

Patrick Wise (l.8), the master in this apprenticeship indenture, made a will in September 1588, when he intended to make a trip to Ireland (BRO: 04421(1)a f 377). It was not proved until January 1590, which suggests that he completed his trip safely. However, he died before the conclusion of the nine-year term of indenture agreed to here. Unfortunately it is not known with whom John Yorke completed his indenture. The will is very brief, leaving all his goods to his two daughters without itemizing any possessions such as musical instruments. The goods were valued at £161 7d.

125–6 BRL: 5030 p 2

James Sargent, who wrote 'A New Sonnet upon the Arrival of Richard Ferris at Bristol' (see p 288, endnote to STC: 10834 sigs. B1v–2, B2v–3v, below), is likely the same James Sargent who is identified here as a Bristol wait (p 126, l.7) and above as a musician (see p 286, endnote to BRO: 04026(10) pp 214, 215, 210, above).

126 BRO: 04026(11) pp 257, 258

There are fourteen accounting 'weeks' in this quarter, but thirteen full weeks and two part-weeks in the calendar quarter, which means that there are two possible dating schemes. The dates given for the entries on these two pages are based on first and last weeks of the quarter as 25 June–4 July and 27–9 September.

128–9 BRO: 04272 f 57

This ordinance was apparently first enacted on 18 November 1585, since it appears under that date in BRO: 04273(1) f 18v. In the margin of that text, however, another hand has written 'repealed by the law.'

129–31 BRO: 04026(12) p 29

This account for the third week of the third quarter is interrupted by a separate account for the reception of the earl of Leicester and the earl of Warwick on Easter Eve and Easter Day. The last day of the third week was 15 April, which was Easter Eve in 1587; thus Leicester's players may have been in town on the day that their patron arrived; indeed, they may have travelled with him and performed for him on Easter Eve in Bristol.

'mr Kitchin' (p 130, ll.30, 33–4) was obviously a member of the prominent Bristol family of that name and was probably Robert Kitchin who, according to McGrath (ed), Merchants and Merchandise, p 104, was a distinguished Bristol merchant venturer and alderman. He was mayor of Bristol in 1589. An Abel Kitchin, considered one of the wealthiest members of the Merchant Venturers, was warden of the company in 1607 and master in 1610. He was mayor in 1613 at the time of the visit of Queen Anne.

Humphrey Clovell (p 130, l.37) was a goldsmith who lived (or whose shop was) in Wine Street. He was also involved in a lawsuit in 1598 with Nicholas Woolfe, owner of the Wine Street playhouse (see Introduction, pp xxxviii–xl).

132–3 BRO: 04026(12) pp 83, 77, 97

For Woodsonn (p 132, l.17), see Introduction, p xxxiii.

Geoffrey Hellier (p 132, l.30) began to take apprentices soon after becoming free of the city (see pp 133–4, BRO: 04352(2) f 236) and in 1591–2, he took on his stepson, James Parris, as an apprentice (see p 142, BRO: 04352(2) f 307).

The accounting week for the entry on p 97 ought to cover the period 4–10 August, yet the entry contains the internal date 16 August. This can be accounted for by the variability in 'week' length first made explicit in the accounts for 1582–3 and discussed on p 287, endnote to BRO: 04026(11) pp 165, 167, 173, 181.

The general heading for this yearly account is missing. The account is dated 1590 (in a later hand) on f 122, and the separate account for rural properties ends Michaelmas 1590, so it seems clear that this is the account for 1589–90. There are apparently no surviving accounts for 1588–9.

The account for the sixth accounting 'week,' to which 2–8 August has been assigned (p 135, l.39–p 136, l.3), contains a payment dated 29 August, while the account for the seventh 'week' (9–15 August) contains a payment dated 15 September, facts which suggest that the calendar weeks and the accounting 'weeks' were noticeably asynchronous in this quarter.

136–9 STC: 10834 sigs B1v–2, B2v–3v

A James Sargent (p 139, l.33) is identified in 1582–3 (see p 287, endnote to BRL: 5030 p 2) as a wait and is probably the same James Sargent who wrote 'A New Sonnet upon the Arrival of Richard Ferris at Bristol,' which accompanied Ferris' own account of his adventure.

The DNB refers to two other contemporary ballads which describe the event of Richard Ferris' voyage to Bristol by rowboat. They are listed in the Transcripts of the Registers of the Company of Stationers of London, 1554–1640 (Gloucester, 1967), vol 2, nos 557 and 558. They do not appear to have survived.

139–41 BRO: 04026(12) pp 205, 224, 226

The entry on p 205 comes from the account for the fifth and sixth weeks of the first quarter of 1590–1, which should be 1–14 November. However, since the payments for celebrations on 17 November ('the Queenes hollidaie'; p 139, l.39) are included in this account, the actual accounting period extended to 17 November at least and appears to include 29 September as well ('spentte on Mighells daie,' p 140, l.3), which is probably just a case of two similar payments being entered together, as happens elsewhere in these accounts.

The city chamberlain who wrote these accounts died sometime after 24 June and before 27 July 1591. The payments from p 224 (27 July–29 September) are made on his behalf by his servant for the remainder of the last quarter. The chamberlain's servant did not make all the payments for that quarter, however, and the remaining payments are contained in another account for the fourth quarter found on p 226 (25 June–29 September).

142 BRO: 04352(2) f 307

James Parris (l.29) is here apparently apprenticed to his stepfather. In 1587–8, Hellier had obtained the freedom of the city by marrying Ellen Parris, the widow of a burgess, Jonah Parris, here named as James' deceased father (see p 132).

143–4 Dulwich College Library: ms 1 single sheet

This letter is not explicitly dated internally. The references to plague in London and the company's touring with 'Harry of Cornwall' strongly suggest a date in 1593. The final clause of the letter proper refers to the Wednesday after St James' Day (25 July), which fixes the date as 1 August 1593. See also R. A. Foakes and R. T. Rickert (eds), Henslowe's Diary (Cambridge, 1968), 276–7.

'couley' (p 144, l.8) is surely Richard Cowley (d. 1619), actor (but probably not a shareholder), who played the role of Verges, probably to Kempe's Dogberry. Cowley's name appears in the Quarto of 1600 and in the Folio of 1623.

Pope (p 144, l.9) is surely Thomas Pope (d. 1604), actor and one of the original shareholders in the Globe and also a shareholder in the Curtain. Nungezer (Dictionary of Actors, pp 285–7) does not refer to Allyn's mention of Pope in this letter to his wife, possibly because the reference is to Thomas Pope's kinsman, who might be either of his two brothers, John or William.

The reference to 'my Lord stranges players' (p 144, l.12) confirms the conjecture in Harbage, Annals of English Drama (p 302), that Strange's players 'amalgamated with Admiral's intermittently c 1588–1594.'

'mr grigs' (p 144, l.15) is probably John Grigs, a London carpenter (see Somerset (ed), Shropshire, pp 278, 679).

144–5 BRO: 04026(13) pp 20, 32, 34, 35

The accounting 'weeks' appear to diverge considerably from the calendar weeks here; for example, a payment for 'the Queenes hollidaie' (17 November; p 144, ll.35–6) is accounted for in a period which, by the calendar, would be 14 October–3 November. The 'weekly' account (p 32), dated 4–10 August if its week is a calendar week, contains an entry dated St James Tide (25 July). Either the bill was presented late or the accounting 'weeks' are variable here.

The entry on p 34 is not an anticipatory payment for the following 'Quenes holliedaie' (17 November); it is a payment covering the cost of torches borne on the Queen's Holiday over the three preceding years.

On p 35 the payment to the trumpeters for Michaelmas (p 145, ll.36–7) belongs to the current week, but that for the 'Queenes hollidaie' (17 November, p 145, ll.38–41) belongs to a different accounting 'week' and, technically, in fact, to the next Michaelmas–Michaelmas year. Probably the trumpeters presented a single bill after 17 November, covering both days, and the city chamberlain entered both payments under the date of the first when the accounts were compiled.

146 BRO: 04352 (3) f 16

This Geoffrey Hilliard seems clearly to be the same man as the musician Geoffrey Hellier, who was made free of the city in 1587–8 because of his marriage to the widow of another musician, Jonah Parris. Her name is given both as 'Ellen' (p 132, l.31; p 142, l.30) and (in Latin) as 'Helen' (p 134, l.11; p 142, l.37), and she is possibly the same woman as the 'Eleanore' named as Geoffrey's wife in this indenture. Evidence suggests that the etymological relationships not only between 'Ellen' and 'Helen' but between 'Helen' and 'Eleanor' continued to be recognized as late as 1604 in at least some parts of England; the Oxford Dictionary of Christian Names quotes a Yorkshire Recusancy Roll of that year in which the same woman is referred to indiscriminately as 'Helen' and 'Eleanor.' It seems possible that this document, which used such unusual spellings of Geoffrey's name as 'Iepheri' and 'Ihepheri,' is here referring to Ellen or Helen Parris as 'Eleanor.' If so, Thomas Watkins (l.21) was at least her third husband.

A 1597 memorandum (ll.20–7) is written above and around the first two lines of the original entry into the left margin and it continues in the space at the foot of the folio. It records the transfer of this apprentice's indenture to Watkins (presumably also a musician) so that he could finish out his term following Geoffrey's death. Another of Geoffrey's known apprentices, his stepson James Parris, would also not have finished the term of his indenture by 1597 but it is not known what arrangements were made for his case.

No formal account heading for this set of accounts survives but the final item in the series is an account of various lands for the year ending Michaelmas 1596. Presumably, therefore, these are the accounts for 1595–6.

The payments to the trumpeters and to 'mr Woodsonnes Schollors' (ll.9–13) appear in an account for the first three 'weeks' of the quarter. That period can be dated 30 September–18 October or 30 September–25 October, depending on how the two part-weeks fit into this twelve-week quarter. Neither choice, however, will accommodate the Queen's Holiday (17 November). Possibly the payments were anticipated; more likely, the accounting 'weeks' and calendar weeks have once again diverged.

This ordinance was apparently first enacted on 11 December 1595, since it appears under that date in BRO: 04273(1) ff 20v–1. In the margin of that text, however, the scribe has written 'memorandum omitted.' This was presumably a reminder not to copy that version into BRO: 04272 but to copy the later re-affirmation instead, as the definitive and valid one.

149 BRO: 04026(13) p 140

No formal account heading for this set of accounts survives but the final item in the series is for country lands for the year ending Michaelmas 1597. Presumably, therefore, these are the accounts for 1596–7.

This first quarter is divided into only ten accounting 'weeks,' while the calendar quarter contains twelve full weeks and one part-week, making it impossible to establish dated 'weeks' which correspond to calendar weeks. Instead, the quarter has been divided into 'weeks' consisting of eight to ten days; the subhead dates given are for such 'weeks' and groupings of 'weeks.'

151 BRO: 04026(13) p 212

Once again the payment for 'the Queenes hollidaye' (l.29) is anticipated or the accounting 'weeks' and the calendar year are asynchronous.

152 BRO: 04352(3) f 79v

The second of two girls' indentures made the same day, this may not, in fact, be the record of a musician's apprentice but instead that of a girl bound to a musician and his wife to learn housewifely rather than musical skills. The lack of money received may be due to Elizabeth Phillips being on a kind of 'workfare' in which her keep and clothes are provided in lieu of cash.

153 BRO: 04026(14) p 20

Again the payment to the trumpeters for 'the Queenes hollidaye' (l.19) appears to be anticipated, or else accounting 'weeks' and calendar weeks have diverged.

154–5 BRO: 04026(14) pp 78, 80, 84

For reasons which could be explained only by the city chamberlain, the system of accounting by weeks breaks down in this year's second quarter, which contains only seven accounting 'weeks' versus twelve full calendar weeks and two part-weeks. Internal dates suggest that the account is complete but that the section covering 'weeks' 1–2 appears to contain the accounts for roughly half the quarter, while the section covering 'weeks' 3–7 contains the remainder. Subhead dates have been set accordingly.

The account for the third quarter, like that for the second, is divided into two sections, each covering a specified number of weeks. Despite the unequal division (the first section covers 'weeks' 1–3, the second, 'weeks' 4–9), internal dates suggest that each section covers roughly half the quarter. The sub-head date has therefore been set accordingly (p 155, l.6).

The payment to the trumpeters for Michaelmas (p 155, l. 28) appears to be anticipated, as the payments for the queen's accession day so often are.

Here, and in most of the following Mayor's Audits, each quarterly account is divided into two parts only: one covering weeks 1–6 and the other weeks 7–12 of what is nearly always a twelve-week quarter. It is usually not difficult to assign calendar dates to these half-quarters but it seems clear that the weeks are listed by convention only, and the real division is between two half-quarters roughly equivalent in length. The exception is usually the last (Michaelmas) quarter, which is still often divided into three separate subaccounts containing a total of thirteen weeks. Here too the division into weeks seems no longer significant; the difference is that the quarters' accounts have been divided into thirds rather than halves. In later years even the fourth quarter's account shrinks to twelve weeks but is still divided into three or sometimes four subaccounts – no doubt reflecting that recorded payments seem to bunch up at the end of the last quarter.

For pp 144 and 145 it seems clear that the city chamberlain was a little hazy about the midpoint of the quarter; one of the payments for the Queen's Holiday occurs in the first section and one in the second. 17 November is near but past the actual midpoint of the quarter and is past the end of any rationally determined sixth week.

No rendering date is specified for this account nor is there any explanation why it covers two years instead of the usual one.

'the swering day' (I.20) was usually the day the new officers were sworn in, the day their guild or corporation year changed. The Wire drawers' and Pinmakers' guild accounting year ran from July to July; their swearing-in day was, presumably, the specific day in July on which the new masters took office, probably the feast of St Mary Magdalene (22 July). Their account day (II.17, 21), the day on which the accounts of the previous July–July year were rendered, was usually considerably later, generally in November.

This replication, or detailed restatement, of Richard Cooke's charges against Nicholas Woolfe and his wife is one of four surviving documents in the suit. The others are Cooke's original bill of complaint to the Court of Requests (an equity court designed to provide affordable relief to those unable to afford the regular courts), a writ allowing local Bristol officials to take Woolfe's response, and Woolfe's response (mbs 1, 3, and 4 respectively). These other documents contain no references to the 'Comedyantes' (p 164, I.10). The substance of the suit was a disputed £5 allegedly owing to Cooke and not repaid, but it was complicated by claims and counter-claims over tenancy, subtenancy (such as the use allegedly granted to the players), and furnishings of the Wine Street property used as a playhouse. For discussion of the Wine Street playhouse, see Introduction, pp xxxvii–xl.

This is one of seven depositions taken at various stages of a defamation case brought by Eleanor Cox (who apparently kept an alehouse in Wells in Somerset) against her fellow townsman, Miles Brokenburrough. Three of the other depositions also mention the bearwards in Bristol, those of Ralph Harvie (p 385), William Taverner (p 476), and Richard Atwell (pp 477–8); all four are printed in Stokes and Alexander (eds), Somerset, including Bath, pp 258–61. The articles about which these seven witnesses were deposed do not survive, so the details of the case remain obscure, but it seems that Cox had accused Brokenburrough (among other things) of defaming her by saying she had been incapacitated by drink while travelling to Bristol to collect a debt owed by some bearwards. Presumably those entertainers had bilked her of the costs of their lodging by moving on to the next city on their itinerary without paying. The quarrel reported here took place in the summer of 1605 but how long before that time the bearwards came to town is not clear. There are no payments in either the Bristol or Wells civic records for 1604–5 or 1605–6 which would identify them.

The actual date of Queen Anne's visit to Bristol was June 1613. Between April and August, she visited Reading, Bristol, Bath, and Wells. See Bergeron, English Civic Pageantry 1558–1642, pp 98–9, and Stokes and Alexander (eds), Somerset, including Bath, pp 21, 371–9, and 503–5.

For 'mr Iohn Aldworthe' (p 177, l.1), see pp 283–4, endnote to BRO: 04026(9) pp 300, 313; the Aldworths were a prominent Bristol family. Francis Knight (p 177, l.1), alderman and member of the Merchant Venturers, was sheriff in 1579–80 and mayor in 1594–5. According to Latimer, History of the Society of Merchant Venturers, p 140, Knight was one of the wealthiest members of the Society. Matthew Warren (p 177, ll.4–5m) was a clothier and mayor of Bristol in 1633; a John Langton (p 177, l.6m) was mayor in 1628, warden of the Merchant Venturers in 1630, 1631, and 1641, and treasurer in 1639.

'lord Carie' (p 177, l.33) was Sir George Carew, first Baron Carew of Clopton, Warwickshire, who was appointed vice chamberlain to Queen Anne in October 1603. 'Ladie Drumman' (p 178, ll.21, 23) is probably Isabel, widow of James, Lord Drummond and first earl of Perth. Sir Henry Billingsley (p 178, l.26), the eldest son of Sir Henry Billingsley, was knighted by James I on 28 June 1603; he entertained Queen Anne in 1613 at his house at Siston, Gloucestershire, on her departure from Bristol.

Naile's versified account of Bristol's entertainment for Anne of Denmark caught the attention of William Adams, Bristol's contemporary chronicler. He copied substantial excerpts from it into both the 1623 and 1625 recensions of the Chronicle of Bristol (1623, BRL: 25486 pp 278–89 (printed in Adams's Chronicle, pp 187–200); 1625, BRO: 13748(4)). So impressed was Adams by Naile's work that he even included a poem of his own in praise of Naile and his accomplishment at the conclusion of the excerpts (BRO: 13748(4) nf; for the somewhat different wording of the 1623 recension, see Adams's Chronicle, p 200):

William Adams Concerning Robert Naile.

It is good to keepe aliue what would be dead, therefore hee hites the naile, not on the head:
But yet hee hath done the office of a Naile, to fixe that fast, which otherwise would faile.
As now proues true, his name matching his fate,
in nailing fame on Eternities great gate.

Adams' copying of Naile's verse is more complete in the later recension, lacking only three passages from the original: p 184, l.19–p 185, l.10; p 185, ll.23–32; and p 186, l.33–p 187, l.34. However, there are two items in Adams not found in the printed text of Naile. In both recensions, a quatrain is added to the conclusion of the description of the mock sea-battle between Turkish and English mariners which took place on the Monday of her visit:

*Where like Neptunians, captiue-like, these Turkes shee saw returne, with linstockes, match, targes, Oares in hand, in solemne march to mourne.
Which being acted to the life, so much her Grace contentes, as new varieties haue force, mixt with strange complementes.

The asterisk against the first word links it to the accompanying marginale: 'So the mariners came by her Court all being ended. And after [f.] wee gaue two vollies of shot at departure.' (This is the text as it appears in the 1625 recension; there the quatrain has been bracketed in the right margin with a lightly-drawn brace. In the earlier recension (where Adams has used no brace), only the marginale contains any substantive variants; it reads 'here at Court wee gaue 2 vollies of shot at our parting.')

If these lines were part of Naile's original poem, they were excised from the printed text; however, it is possible that they were added by Adams to provide a more personal touch to his work. The second addition is clearly Adams' annotation. At the foot of the verso facing the recto on which the excerpt concludes in the unfoliated 1625 recension, an additional note has apparently been pasted in and then cut away, of which only part of the heading is now visible: 'Here follow three other speeches made to Queene Anne by our.'

Robert Aldworth and John Whitson were, according to Latimer, History of the Society of Merchant Venturers, p 140, two of the wealthiest members of the company at this time. John Whitson (l.30), alderman, wine cooper, and ship owner, was one of the Bristol merchants in the Spanish Company of 1605 for which he was named an assistant to the secretary of the fellowship. He was warden of the Merchant Venturers in 1605 and master of the company in 1606 and 1611. He was mayor in 1604 and 1615 and member of parliament for Bristol in 1605, 1620, 1625, and 1625–6. Whitson took an active interest in voyages to New England departing from Bristol, especially that of Martin Pring, who commanded The Speedwell and The Discoverer to the American continent in 1603. According to Latimer, History of the Society of Merchant Venturers, p 147, during Pring's time at the Bay of Massachusetts he named the harbour 'Whitson,' although the landing place became known later as Plymouth. An excerpt from the probate inventory of Whitson's goods appears on pp 231–2 of the Records.

Samuel Daniel (p 202, l.37), brother of John Daniel, was a poet and playwright who became connected with the stage through his appointment as official censor for the children of the queen's revels. They received a patent in 1604. According to Nungezer, Dictionary of Actors (pp 110–11), Daniel was not only responsible for licensing their plays but he was also a joint-payee in 1605 for two performances at court. His connection with the troupe ended in 1605 when Queen Anne's patronage was withdrawn.

For George Buc (p 203, l.8), see Documents, pp lxiv–lxv. A group of players carrying a licence from his office was in Bristol in 1617–18 (see p 208, BRO: 04026(17) p 263).

This document is discussed in Latimer, The Annals of Bristol in the Seventeenth Century, p 56. Also, see the letter from the mayor of Exeter, quoted in Wasson (ed), Devon, pp 188–9, in which the mayor explains that he refused to permit a visiting company to play because their patent was for a company of children and youths, whereas their company of fifteen had only 'five youthes among them, and all the rest ar men som about 30 and 40 and 50 yeares.'

For John Daniel see Documents, p lvii. Martin Slater (or Slaughter) (p 209, l.31) was named in Henslowe's first list of the lord admiral's men in 1594 and was a payee with Edward Alleyn for performances at court by the admiral's men in 1596/7. Slater left the lord admiral's men in 1597 and, after some time in Scotland, joined the earl of Hertford's men by 1603. Associated with a provincial company under Queen Anne's patronage by 1606, he was manager and shareholder of the children of the king's revels at Whitefriars in 1608. Between then and the formation of this company, Slater was involved in a lawsuit and labelled a vagabond as an unlicensed player. He was buried in Southwark on 4 August 1625. John Edmonds (p 209, l.31) could be either John Edmonds or John Edmans, both of whom were players and contemporaries of each other. John Edmonds married Margaret Goodyere in 1600. John Edmans (or Edmonds) was a joint beneficiary of player Thomas Pope. This John Edmans (or Edmonds) married Mary Clarke, also a beneficiary of Pope, who received Pope's shares in the Curtain and the Globe. A John Edmonds was buried in Southwark on 20 September 1634. Nathaniel Clay (p 209, l.32) is mentioned here and again in 1629 in relation to a group of players under the leadership of Robert Kimpton, presumably the children of the king's revels.

The space where the date would normally have been supplied has been left blank (p 210, l.5); in fact, much of the rest of the page (about 125 mm) is blank: 'To all Maiors ... appertaine' (p 210, ll.7–10) is written close to the bottom.

This reply, and the two which follow, are the only documents surviving from this lawsuit to mention the Wine Street property formerly owned by Miles' late father, Nicholas Woolfe. Of the seven surviving documents, three (mbs 4, 5, and 7) are writs containing no substantive information and one (mbs 1–2, with a copy on mb 8) is the bill of complaint, which focuses on the situation created by Nicholas' will and his estate in general. Miles, although still a minor, was named official executor of the estate in his father's will, while Joseph Rattle and Henry Yate were made overseers until he came of age. According to the bill, Miles (who was about seventeen years old at the time of the lawsuit) had become concerned about the overseers' conduct. Rattle did not live in Bristol and Yate, who did, had taken over the management of the estate, along with Miles' stepmother Margaret. Miles accused Yate and his stepmother of diverting rents and other profits to their own use and making false accounts to conceal the fact. Since he was underage, Thomas and John Latch, who are described in the bill as his 'brethren & gardians,' brought this suit on his behalf to compel Rattle and Yate to make a full and accurate disclosure of their management of the property which would become Miles' when he came of age, including, of course, the Wine Street property.

Nicholas Woolfe's will (see pp 195–9) demonstrates that Miles had no brothers. Presumably the Latches were relatives in some degree, possibly on the side of Miles' late mother, Joyce Woolfe, who was buried 12 July 1602 (Christ Church register, BRO: P/XCh/R/1a unnumbered).

There is only one substantive variant of interest between this text and the version which appears in the 1623 recension. In the latter, Adams added at the end: 'since which time [were] wee heare of no English shippe that hath bene taken at sea by any Turkes being at the instant writing hereof a whole yeare since' (BRL: 25486, p 308). As Ali Agha's visit was made in March 1625, this is an example of Adams' continued use of his 1623 draft to record initial accounts of events as late as 1626, a year after the more finished 1625 draft had been begun.

The sheriff Thomas 'Clements' (p 223, l.6) may be the same as the Thomas Clement mentioned in the 1618–19 controversy over Miles Woolfe's inheritance (p 213, l.10). His name appears as 'Clement' in the PRO List of Sheriffs for England and Wales (1898; rpt New York, 1963), 168.

PRO: SP 16/238/32 documents the trial of the members of Richard Bradshaw's 'outlaw' troupe in 1633; one of the related documents, the examination of Richard Whiting of Cothelston, contains a direct reference to Bristol. Whiting indicated that he joined the troupe half a year before 2 May 1633, met his father, Edward, in Cornwall, and then came to Bristol. There is no direct indication that Bradshaw's troupe performed in Bristol – the Whitings could have simply passed through on their way to perform with Bradshaw in Warwickshire and Leicestershire (see further Calendar of State Papers, Domestic Series of the Reign of Charles I. 1633–1634. Each sheet of the will has been signed by the two overseers and a witness, as well as by Prince himself. The overseer Isaac 'Brian' (l.10) signs himself on both sheets as 'Brine'; he was a virginal maker who was made free of the city in 1608–9 (see p 170, ll.1–10). The last legatee excerpted here, Edward Redwood (ll.14–15), may be related to another legatee, Margaret Redwood, widow, who was left furniture and linens. The executor of the will is Prince's son-in-law, William Child, who had also been his apprentice (see p 215, ll.5–10); at this time he was already a musician at St George's Windsor and so could not have overseen the details of Prince's bequests (see J.G. Hooper, 'Survey of Music in Bristol with Special Reference to the Eighteenth Century,' typescript on deposit in the Bristol Reference Library (Bristol, 1963), 158). Another bequest is of money to his four godsons, two of whom (John Williams and Thomas Lavashe) may be connected with local Bristol instrument makers: a John Williams was apprenticed to the instrument maker John Collier in 1628–9 (see pp 230, l.39–p 231, l.6) and Lavashe's name appears to be a variant of Lavasher or Levasher, suggesting a possible connection with the instrument maker, William Lavasher, who took four apprentices in the 1610s and 1620s.

242 BRO: will Sarah BARKER 1637 f 1

Each sheet of the will has been signed by Barker herself; only the second sheet also bears the witnesses' signatures.

This important document strongly suggests a second purpose-built playhouse in Bristol in Redcliffe Hill, which was probably contemporary with Nicholas Woolfe's playhouse in Wine Street (see Introduction, p xl).

Patrons and Travelling Companies

ARLEANE RALPH

The following list has two sections. The first section lists companies alphabetically by patron, according to the principal title under which their playing companies and entertainers appear. Cross-references to titles other than the principal, if they are also so named in the Records, are also given. The second section lists companies which have been identified by place of origin.

The biographical information supplied here has come entirely from printed sources, the chief of which are the following: Acts of the Privy Council; S.T. Bindoff (ed), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1509–1558, 3 vols (London, 1982); Calendar of Close Rolls; Calendar of Patent Rolls (edited through 1582); Calendar of State Papers; C. R. Cheney (ed), Handbook of Dates for Students of English History; G.E.C., The Complete Peerage...; The Dictionary of National Biography; James E. Doyle, The Official Baronage of England Showing the Succession, Dignities, and Offices of Every Peer from 1066 to 1885, 3 vols (London, 1886); P. W. Hasler (ed), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1558–1603, 3 vols (London, 1981); Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, Henry VIII, 21 vols and Addenda (London, 1864–1932); E. B. Fryde, D. E. Greenway, S. Porter, and I. Roy (eds), Handbook of British Chronology, 3rd ed (Cambridge, 1986; rpt 1996); J.S. Roskell, Linda Clark, and Carole Rawcliffe (eds), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1386–1421, 4 vols (Stroud, 1992); Josiah C. Wedgwood and Anne D. Holt, History of Parliament: Biographies of the Members of the Commons House 1439–1509 (London, 1936); and Josiah C. Wedgwood, History of Parliament: Register of the Ministers and of the Members of Both Houses 1439–1509 (London, 1938).

All dates are given in accordance with the style of the sources used. The authorities sometimes disagree over the dates of birth, death, creation, succession, and office tenure. Where this evidence conflicts, the Calendar of State Papers, Calendar of Patent Rolls, and similar collections, such as the following, are preferred: J.H. Gleason, The Justices of the Peace in England: 1558 to 1640 (Oxford, 1969); List of Sheriffs for England and Wales from the Earliest Times to A.D. 1831, Public Record Office, Lists and Indexes, no 9 (London, 1898; rpt New York, 1963); and J.C. Sainty, 'Lieutenants of Counties, 1585–1642,' Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, Special Supplement, no 8 (May, 1970).

Normally each patron entry is divided into four sections. The first lists relevant personal data and titles of nobility with dates. Succession numbers are given for the most important titles held by a person, as well as for those titles by which he or she is named in the Records. These numbers follow the absolute sequence given in The Complete Peerage rather than the rela-

The second section lists, in chronological order, appointments showing local connections and includes those known to have been used within titles of playing companies. Purely expeditionary military titles have been largely omitted, along with most minor Scottish and Irish landed titles. For patrons holding peerage titles, minor civil commissions have been largely omitted, except for those concerning Bristol and Gloucestershire, the geographically proximate counties of Berkshire, Herefordshire, Oxfordshire, Somerset, Warwickshire, Wiltshire, and Worcestershire, and Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire in Wales.

Where possible, the date of an appointment is taken from the date of a document assigning that position. If the appointment is stated in the document to be 'for life,' then these words follow the job title. If the original document has not been edited and a secondary source is used that states 'until death,' then this form appears. Otherwise dates of appointment and termination are given, if available. If the length of time an office is held is not known, then only the date of appointment is given. Alternatively, if the only evidence comes from a source dated some time during the period of tenure, then the word 'by' and a date appears. A '?' following a date indicates uncertainty in the attribution of the post to a patron, in the case of several patrons by the same name, or in the date of an appointment as shown in the sources. For all minor commissions, such as commissions of gaol delivery, commissions of array and muster, and commissions of the peace (JP), years only are given. If the dates of these commissions cover several years in sequence, then the earliest and latest years of the sequence are separated by a dash.

The third section, for which information is often incomplete or unavailable, contains the names and locations of the patron's principal seats, and of counties where he or she held lands. Extensive property lists have been condensed by limiting them to Gloucestershire, the surrounding counties, and the southern counties of Wales.

The fourth section is an annotated index by date of the appearances of each patron's company or companies in the Bristol Records. Following the date are the page numbers in parentheses where the citations occur. If a patron's company appears under a title other than the usual or principal one, this other title is in parentheses next to the designation of the company. Companies named according to a patron's civil appointment are indexed under the name of that post as it appears in the Records: for example, 'Lord Chamberlain.' If the patron sponsored more than one type of performer, all entries for a given type (whether singular or plural in number) are grouped together in chronological order. The performer type is only repeated within that grouping to indicate a change in the patron title by which the company is named (see, for example, Henry Stanley under 'Derby'). Each group of entries is then listed according to the earliest year in which that company appears in the Records. If two or more companies first appear in the same year, alphabetical order is followed. In this section, the annotations 'Possibly' and 'Probably' indicate that the attribution of the performance itinerary item to the particular patron is not definite, and, where applicable, a cross-reference is given to other possible or probable patrons.

The reader may also wish to refer to the index for additional references to some of the patrons and to various unnamed companies and their players.

Glossaries: Introduction

The purpose of the glossaries is to assist the reader in working through the text. The criteria for the selection of glossary entries are discussed below under the headings Latin Glossary and English Glossary. The glossaries include words found in records printed or quoted in the Records, Introduction, Appendixes, and Endnotes. Definitions are given only for those senses of a particular word which are used in the records printed in this collection. Within references, page and line numbers are separated by an oblique stroke. Words occurring within marginalia are indicated by a lower-case 'm' following the page and line reference. If the glossed word occurs twice in a single line, superscript numerals are used after the line number to distinguish the occurrences. Manuscript capitalization has not been preserved; however, if proper names are glossed, they are capitalized in accordance with modern usage.

Latin Glossary

Words are included in the Latin Glossary if they are not to be found in the Oxford Latin Dictionary (OLD), now the standard reference work for classical Latin. Words listed in the OLD whose meaning has changed or become restricted in medieval or Renaissance usage are also glossed. If a word is found in the OLD but appears in the text in an obscure spelling or anomalous inflectional form for which the OLD provides no cross-reference, that word has been included and its standard lexical entry form indicated, without giving a definition. If the spelling variants or anomalous inflectional forms have been treated as scribal errors and more correct forms given in textual notes, the forms thus noted are not repeated in the glossary. Adverbs formed regularly from adjectives listed in the OLD whose meaning is unchanged from the CL senses of those adjectives are not included in the Latin Glossary, for instance, 'detestabiliter' from OLD 'detestabilis.'

Most of the Latin words used in the Records are common classical words whose spelling has changed, if at all, according to common medieval variations. The results of these common variations are not treated here as new words, nor are forms of glossed words resulting from such variations cross-referenced. These variations are:

- ML c for CL t before i
- ML cc for CL ct before i
- ML d for CL t in a final position
- ML e for CL ae or oe
- ML ff for CL f, common in an initial position
- ML addition of h

ML omission of CL h

ML variation between i and e before another vowel

ML n for CL m before another nasal

Intrusion of ML p in CL consonant clusters mm, mn, ms, or mt

ML doubling of CL single consonants

ML singling of CL double consonants

No attempt has been made to correct these spellings to classical norms; rather, scribal practice has been followed in such cases. Where the same word occurs in spellings which differ according to the list above, the most common spelling (or the earliest, when numbers of occurrences are roughly equal) is treated as standard and used for the headword. However, the practice of the OLD has been used as regards 'i/j' and 'u/v' variation: in this glossary only the letter forms 'i' and 'u' are used. The genitive singular of first declension nouns appears only as the ML '-e.' All listed variant spellings will be found under the headword, at the end of the definition, set apart in boldface type. Where the variant spelling would not closely follow the headword alphabetically, it is also listed separately and cross-referenced to the main entry.

It is difficult to know in some cases whether certain words are being used in a CL sense or in one of the modified senses acquired in Anglo-Latin usage during the Middle Ages. In these circumstances, the range of possibilities has been fully indicated under the appropriate lexical entry. Unclear, technical, or archaic terms, especially those pertaining to canon or common law, performance, and music, are usually given a stock translation equivalent but receive a fuller treatment in the glossary.

As a rule, only one occurrence of each word, or each sense or form of each word, will be listed; 'etc' following a reference means that there is at least one more occurrence of that word, sense, or form in this collection. The one occurrence listed is either the sole occurrence or the first chronologically. Multiple occurrences of each sense may be listed for words defined in more than one sense.

All headwords are given in a standard dictionary form: nouns are listed by nominative, genitive, and gender; adjectives by the terminations of the nominative singular or, in the case of adjectives of one termination, by the nominative and genitive; verbs by their principal parts.

English Glossary

The English Glossary is not meant to be exhaustive but only to explain words, senses, or spellings apt to puzzle users not familiar with markedly provincial Late Middle and Early Modern English. Accordingly words and senses given in The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary (NSOED) have nearly always been passed over as have their obvious derivatives. Abbreviations have also been omitted if they are still current or widely known as have forms whose only difficulty is a false word division, errors corrected in the footnotes, and matter corrected and replaced by the original scribe. No attempt has been made to gloss words left incomplete by damage to the source texts. Readers are also expected to recognize such spelling variations as 'au/a,' 'c/s,' 'ea/e,' 'ie/e(e),' 'i/j,' 'i/y,' 'o/oo,' 'o/ou,' 'o/u,' 's/z,' 'sch/sh,' 'u/v,' and the presence or absence of final 'e' in the contexts where they commonly occur in older literature. They are presumed to have read enough old-spelling texts to know the values of 'þ,' 'ȝ' and 'y' used for 'p' and to recognize commonly occurring forms that are nearer to their Old English or Old French originals than the modern standard spelling, such as 'gretter,' 'hider,' 'raunson,' and 'vawtyng.' Thomas Churchyard used his own peculiar system of phonetic spelling but his most common habit – placing an 'e' right after another vowel where normal spelling would have either employed a double vowel or put the 'e' at the end of the word – has been assumed to offer no difficulty after the first few encounters and is here ignored. Nor are his spellings glossed when they suggest fairly well either the modern pronunciation of the word in question (eg, 'sottell' 96/23) or one that was in wide and common use at the time (eg, 'harold,' 180/14).

A fuller treatment has, however, been given to certain words and phrases likely to hold special interest for users of a REED volume. These are chiefly names of musical instruments (eg, 'rebicke') and the specialized vocabularies of civic government (eg, 'chambre'), popular custom and pastime (eg, 'dedycacion day'), and the performing arts (eg, 'pagent'). Additional information on social history has been provided in a very few places where it seemed helpful (eg, 'Barbarians') but wherever possible this has been placed in the Endnotes instead.

Normal headword forms are the uninflected singular for nouns, the positive for adjectives, and the infinitive for verbs but nouns occurring only in the plural or possessive, adjectives occurring only in comparative or superlative forms, and verbs occurring only in one participial or finite form are entered under the form that actually occurs. A verbal noun is subsumed under the infinitive when other parts of the same verb are also entered (eg, 'baryn' under 'ber').

The capitalization of headwords conforms to modern usage. A word appearing in several noteworthy spellings is normally entered under the one most often found in the text or else – when two noticed spellings are equally or nearly equally common – under the one nearer modern usage. Occasionally, however, the spelling of the earliest occurrence is preferred if it is close to the most common spelling, to limit the number of variants given. Other noticed spellings are mostly entered in alphabetical order and cross-referenced to the main entry but to save space, some restraint has been applied; the user is expected, for instance, to seek inflectional forms such as 'playnge' under 'play' and to take 'pleye see play' as a notice that 'pley(e)ng' will also be found there. As a rule only the earliest occurrence is cited for each inflectional form entered and further occurrences are represented by 'etc,' unless the reader needs to be alerted that the sense in question applies in particular later passages. Two citations given without 'etc' mean that the form or sense in question occurs only twice.

Where the definition repeats the headword in a different spelling, the latter is normally the entry spelling in The Oxford English Dictionary and The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary and further information can be found there. When that form is itself an archaism or ambiguous, a further brief definition usually follows. Any further citation of an authority or other succinct account of the glossarian's reasoning appears within square brackets at the end of the entry.

Anglo-Norman Glossary

There is no glossary for the Anglo-Norman document found under 1391–2. Although sufficiently involved to qualify for translation by REED guidelines, the vocabulary is found in standard reference works for Anglo-Norman.

Index

The Index combines subjects with names, places, and book or play titles in a single listing. When identical headwords occur in more than one category, the order is as follows: names of persons, titles of nobility, names of places, subjects, and titles of books or plays. Thus 'Wells, Mary' and 'Wells, Somers' precede 'wells' and entries relating to St Ewen, bishop of Rouen, precede those relating to the church of St Ewen.

Place names and given names appear in modern form where that can be ascertained, and titles and family names of nobility and other public figures in forms commonly used by modern historians. Other surnames are usually cited in the most common form occurring in the text, except that capitalization and the use of 'i/j' and 'u/v' have been assimilated to modern usage. Surnames and place names are regularly followed by any variant spellings (in parentheses), but these are given for titles only where clarity requires them. Nobles are entered under their family names with cross-references from any titles which occur in the text or apparatus, and royalty under their regnal or given names. Saints' names are indexed under 'St,' alphabetized as if spelt out. Occupations are given only when considered relevant (eg, 'Johnson, William, musician and town wait').

The chief sources used for identifying persons were The Dictionary of National Biography; E.B. Fryde, D.E. Greenway, S. Porter, and I. Roy (eds), Handbook of British Chronology, 3rd ed (Cambridge, 1986; rpt 1996). Sources for the identification of royalty and nobility are specified in the headnote to 'Patrons and Travelling Companies,' to which the index refers throughout.

The format for names and titles has been adapted from R.F. Hunnisett, Indexing for Editors, British Records Association, Archives and the User No 2 (1977). Members of noble families have usually been distinguished by their family relationships when those are known, but when required for clarity, succession numbers have been used following The Complete Peerage. In certain places (eg, 'Bannton,' 'Chrispe') it has been necessary to assign numbers to different persons of the same name and those numbers follow the names in parentheses. Ellipsis dots are used in cases where an individual's given name is not known (eg, 'Awdley,' 'Hale').

Certain items are grouped under broad topics such as 'animals,' 'musical instruments,' and 'guilds and occupations' to aid research. The pertinent members of these classes are then either given as subentries or referred to by cross-references.
