INTRODUCTION

In this case, the Democratic National Committee (“DNC”) seeks to litigate and explain away its candidate’s defeat in the 2016 presidential election. The DNC thus alleges—unburdened by any actual facts—that President Trump’s campaign (Donald J. Trump for President, Inc.; “the Campaign”) conspired with Russia and a hodgepodge of others to publish materials stolen from the DNC’s computer systems. But the DNC does not claim the Campaign had any role in hacking its systems and stealing the materials—it attributes that only to Russia. Nor does the DNC claim the Campaign played any part in publishing the stolen materials—it attributes that only to Russia and WikiLeaks. Instead, the DNC predicates its claims against the Campaign exclusively on allegations that: (1) the Campaign received advance notice of some disclosures; and (2) after disclosures occurred, the Campaign made political use of the revealed information and publicly encouraged additional disclosures.

There are many problems with the DNC’s politically motivated lawsuit. It threatens to unleash discovery that would interfere with the President’s “vast and important” responsibilities, which require “his undivided time and attention.” Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 697 (1997). And it would inevitably collide with the investigations by Special Counsel Robert Mueller and several congressional committees into alleged collusion between Russia and Americans during the 2016 campaign. The Special Counsel has issued a number of indictments, raising the possibility that this case would need to be stayed so as to not interfere with those criminal defendants’ rights.

Fortunately, the DNC’s partisan effort to drag the Court into a political thicket already occupied by Congress and the Special Counsel is legally meritless, and so must be dismissed. For starters, even if the Campaign had a role in publishing materials stolen by others (which the DNC does not claim), the First Amendment protects disclosures of public issues. This protection undoubtedly covers the disclosed materials, which revealed, for instance, the DNC’s questionable conduct during its presidential primaries, its correspondence with wealthy donors, and its cozy relationship with the media.

The DNC's claims also fail on their own terms. First, the centerpiece of the Amended Complaint consists of claims that the Campaign participated in an enterprise that violated the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) and also conspired to violate RICO. But RICO claims are notoriously meritless, and the DNC's are no different:

- The DNC needs to allege an enterprise whose members pursued an unlawful common purpose by working closely together for an extended period. But its enterprise theory simply lumps together an assortment of individuals and entities who were pursuing differing objectives, who maintained no relationships beyond isolated interactions, and who are not even claimed to have come together until well after the alleged wrongdoing started.
- The DNC needs to allege that the Campaign played a role in directing the enterprise's affairs. But the most it claims is that the Campaign cheered on others who were directing those affairs.
- The DNC needs to allege that the Campaign itself committed criminal acts amounting to a pattern of racketeering. But it concedes that the Campaign did no such thing, and instead invokes a theory of aiding-and-abetting that is not available under the civil RICO statute.
- The DNC needs to allege that the supposed RICO violations proximately caused injury to its business or property. But it instead alleges mostly noneconomic (and political) injuries, and fails to establish a single cognizable injury directly traceable to the alleged enterprise.
- Finally, the DNC needs to plausibly allege that the Campaign agreed with the other Defendants to violate RICO. But it does not even attempt to make this showing.

Second, the DNC's claim under the Wiretap Act fails, because it does not allege that the Campaign had any role in intercepting in-progress communications or using intercepted communications.

Finally, the DNC's state-law claims fare no better. Given the defects in the federal claims and the complex state-law issues raised by the state claims, the Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over these claims. But even if the Court were to keep the claims, they would all require dismissal (even if they were not foreclosed by the First Amendment): The DNC invokes D.C.'s Uniform Trade Secrets Act, but fails to plead that this case involves any trade secrets; it brings a claim under Virginia law for conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels, but alleges only that the Campaign agreed to disclose emails that Russia had already obtained on its own; and it asserts a claim under the Virginia Computer Crimes Act, but ignores that that statute does not authorize aiding-and-abetting liability (and that the Campaign is not alleged to have had any involvement in hacking, anyway).

The Court should dismiss all claims against the Campaign.

BACKGROUND

The DNC alleges that, during the 2016 presidential campaign, “Russia’s intelligence services illegally hacked into the DNC’s computer systems and email server.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 83.) Russian intelligence agents allegedly launched the first phase of the cyberattack in July 2015 (id. ¶ 115), and the second phase in April 2016 (id. ¶ 101). As a result of these attacks, Russian intelligence agents allegedly copied “thousands of DNC documents and emails.” (Id. ¶ 12.)

The DNC further alleges that, after Russian agents had stolen the DNC’s emails and other documents, Russian agents entered into a conspiracy with the Campaign, WikiLeaks, and others to “disseminate [the] stolen DNC material.” (Id. ¶ 82.) The DNC claims that, in accordance with this supposed conspiracy, Russia and WikiLeaks released batches of stolen DNC materials over the course of the next several months. (See id. ¶¶ 140–68.)

These disclosures revealed important information about the DNC to the public. For example:

- The disclosures revealed DNC officials’ hostility toward Senator Sanders during the primaries. Officials discussed portraying Senator Sanders as an atheist, speculating that “my Southern Baptist peeps would draw a big difference between a Jew and an atheist.” (Ex. 1, 3.) They suggested pushing a “narrative” that he “never ever had his act together, that his campaign was a mess.” (Ex. 2, 3.) They opposed his push for additional debates. (Ex. 3.) They complained that he “has no understanding” of the Democratic Party. (Ex. 4.) The DNC’s chairperson even leaked debate questions to Secretary Clinton. (Ex. 5.)
- According to The New York Times, “thousands of emails” between donors and fundraisers revealed “in rarely seen detail the elaborate, ingratiating and often bluntly transactional exchanges necessary to harvest hundreds of millions of dollars from the party’s wealthy donor class.” These emails “capture[d] a world where seating charts are arranged with dollar totals in mind, where a White House celebration ... is a thinly disguised occasion for rewarding wealthy donors and where physical proximity to the president is the most precious of currencies.” (Ex. 6.)
- The disclosures revealed Secretary Clinton’s positions on important questions of foreign policy. For example, in one email, Secretary Clinton stated: “My dream is a hemispheric common market, with open trade and open borders.” (Ex. 7.)
- The disclosures revealed racism at the DNC and the Clinton Campaign. One memo discussed ways to “acquire the Hispanic consumer,” claiming that “Hispanics are the most brand loyal consumers in the World” and that “Hispanics are the most responsive to ‘story telling.’” (Ex. 8.) Another email pitched “a new video we’d like to use to mop up some more taco bowl engagement.” (Ex. 9.) Still another email described “Latinos” as “needy.” (Ex. 10.)

- The disclosures revealed alleged cover-ups of sexual harassment at the Clinton Campaign. A campaign official wrote in one email: “I was recently contacted by a source who claims to have worked on the 2008 Hillary Clinton campaign and is alleging that Marlon Marshall [a senior campaign staffer] made unwelcome sexual advances and propositions towards women on the campaign repeatedly.” The email continues: “The source also claims that [campaign manager] Robby Mook was made aware of the issue, but declined to act on it or intervene because he is personal friends with Marshall.” (Ex. 11.)
- The disclosures revealed the DNC’s cozy relationship with the media. For example, emails showed that reporters would ask DNC to approve articles before publication. (Ex. 12.) They also showed DNC staffers discussing giving a CNN reporter “questions to ask us.” (Ex. 13.)

In April 2018, the DNC brought this lawsuit. The DNC raises six claims against the Campaign:

(1) violation of RICO (count II), (2) conspiracy to violate RICO (count III), (3) violation of the Wiretap Act (count IV), (4) violation of the Washington, D.C. Uniform Trade Secrets Act (count VIII), (5) conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels in violation of Virginia law (count XI), and (6) violation of the Virginia Computer Crimes Act (count XII).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Rule 12(b)(6) provides for the dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim. Dismissal is necessary where a complaint fails to “state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). “[B]ald assertions and conclusions of law will not suffice. The pleadings must create the possibility of a right to relief that is more than speculative.” Spool v. World Child Int’l Adoption Agency, 520 F.3d 178, 183 (2d Cir. 2008) (citation omitted).

A court must decide a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) on the basis of the factual allegations in the complaint, documents “integral to the complaint,” and judicially noticeable matters. Roth v. Jennings, 489 F.3d 499, 509 (2d Cir. 2007). Here, the Court may consider the contents of the materials published by Russia and WikiLeaks: Those materials are integral to the Amended Complaint because it necessarily relies on them, and they are also subject to judicial notice because their contents are publicly available on the internet. Apotex Inc. v. Acorda Therapeutics, Inc., 823 F.3d 51, 60 (2d Cir. 2016).

ARGUMENT

Many of the legal issues in this case turn on the distinction between (1) stealing documents and (2) disclosing documents that someone else previously stole. It is thus essential to establish at the outset: The Amended Complaint alleges only that the Campaign conspired to disclose documents that someone else—namely, Russia—previously stole. The Amended Complaint does not allege that the Campaign itself stole any documents, or even that it conspired to steal any documents.

The DNC’s description of the Campaign’s conduct makes clear that the DNC alleges participation in the disclosure of the emails, not participation in the hacking or the theft (all emphases added):

- “The Conspiracy To Disseminate Stolen DNC Data To Aid Trump.” (Am. Compl. at 21.)
- “Defendants conspired to disseminate documents stolen from the DNC.” (Id. ¶ 25.)
- “Defendants launched a scheme to disseminate information that was damaging to the Democratic party and the DNC.” (Id. ¶ 131.)
- “Following The Trump Tower Meeting, Russia Continues Its Hacking And Launches A Massive Public Dissemination Of Stolen DNC Documents.” (Id. at 33.)
- “After The Trump Campaign Blocks Anti-Russia Language From The GOP Platform, WikiLeaks Begins Disseminating Stolen DNC Documents.” (Id. at 37.)
- “Trump Associates Secretly Communicate With Russian Agents And WikiLeaks As They Strategically Release Stolen DNC Documents.” (Id.)
- “The illegal conspiracy inflicted profound damage upon the DNC. The timing and selective release of the stolen materials prevented the DNC from communicating with the American electorate on its own terms.” (Id. ¶ 199.)
- “The timing and selective release of stolen materials was designed to and had the effect of driving a wedge between the DNC and Democratic voters.” (Id. ¶ 200.)

The DNC’s factual theory likewise makes it clear that the alleged conspiracy between Russia and the Campaign came into being after the hack and after the theft of the emails. The DNC alleges that Russia began “its cyberattack on the DNC” in July 2015, “launched a pervasive cyberattack on DNC servers” on “April 18, 2016,” and “staged several gigabytes of DNC data located on the DNC’s servers for unauthorized and surreptitious exfiltration” on “April 22, 2016.” (Id. ¶ 84, 101, 104.) The DNC separately alleges that, “[f]our days” after the April 22 theft, a “Kremlin-tied agent” informed George Papadopoulos, an advisor to the Campaign, “that the Russians ‘have dirt’ on [Hillary Clinton] in the form of ‘thousands of emails.’” (Id. ¶ 11.) The DNC continues that on “June 3, 2016”—two months after the first theft of information in April, and a month after the last theft of information in May—Russians offered the information to the Campaign. (Id. ¶ 12.) The DNC insinuates that the Campaign accepted this supposed offer in a meeting on “June 9, 2016.” (Id. ¶ 136.) In short, the DNC’s own factual theory is that (1) Russia stole the DNC’s emails on April 22, 2016, but (2) Russia made contact with the Campaign only on April 26, and offered to assist the Campaign only in June.

To be sure, the Amended Complaint alleges that Russia continued to “maintai[n] an [un]authorized presence within the DNC network” after April 22, 2016. (Id. ¶ 120.) Even so, the Amended Complaint fails to tie this continued unauthorized presence to the Campaign. First, the Amended Complaint nowhere alleges that the Campaign agreed that Russia should continue to maintain an unauthorized presence in the DNC’s servers. Second, the Amended Complaint nowhere alleges any facts from which one could infer that the Campaign made such an agreement. Third, the DNC identifies “May 2016” as the last date on which Russia stole data from the DNC (id. ¶ 57), but “June 9, 2016,” as the first date on which Russia offered to assist the Campaign (id. ¶ 13). As a result, even taking into account the allegation of Russia’s continued presence in the DNC servers, the Amended Complaint still fails to allege that the Campaign had any involvement in the hacking of the DNC’s servers or in the theft of its materials.

Against this backdrop, the Court should dismiss the DNC’s claims.

I. The Court Should Dismiss All Claims Against the Campaign Because the Imposition of Liability Would Violate the First Amendment.

In each of their claims, the DNC seeks to hold the Campaign legally responsible for the publication of the DNC’s emails and other data on the internet. Of course, the DNC does not actually claim that the Campaign played any role in publishing those materials—only that it took advantage of the materials after WikiLeaks published them. But even if the DNC did make such a claim, the First Amendment protects a speaker’s right to disclose stolen information so long as (1) the speaker did not participate in the theft and (2) the information deals with matters of public concern. The DNC does not allege that the Campaign participated in the theft of the leaked materials, and the materials plainly deal with matters of public concern. Each claim must thus be dismissed.

A. In Bartnicki v. Vopper, 532 U.S. 514 (2001), the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment protects a speaker's right to disclose stolen information if (1) the speaker was not "involved" in the acquisition and (2) the disclosure deals with "a matter of public concern." Id. at 529, 535. There, leaders of a teachers' union spoke on the phone about using violence against school-board members to influence salary negotiations. Id. at 518–19. An unknown person secretly intercepted the call and shared the illegal recording with a local radio host, who played the recording on his show. Id. at 519. The Court ruled that the First Amendment prohibited the imposition of liability on the radio host, because the host "played no part in the illegal interception" and "the subject matter of the conversation was a matter of public concern." Id. at 525. It reasoned that "state action to punish the publication of truthful information" "seldom" complies with the Constitution. Id. at 527. The state has an interest in deterring theft of information, but it must pursue that goal by imposing "an appropriate punishment" on "the intercepto[r]"—not by punishing a speaker who was "not involved in the initial illegality." Id. at 529. The state also has an interest in protecting "privacy of communication," but "privacy concerns give way when balanced against the interest in publishing matters of public importance." Id. at 534. In short, Bartnicki establishes that "a stranger's illegal conduct does not suffice to remove the First Amendment shield from speech about a matter of public concern." Id. at 535.

"[A]n opposite rule"—under which a speaker may be punished for truthful disclosures on account of a "defect in the chain of title"—"would be fraught with danger." Boehner v. McDermott, 484 F.3d 573, 586 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (opinion of Sentelle, J., joined by a majority of the en banc court). "U.S. newspapers publish information stolen via digital means all the time." Jack L. Goldsmith, Uncomfortable Questions in the Wake of Russia Indictment 2.0, Lawfare (July 16, 2018), <https://goo.gl/ovq117>. Indeed, they “openly solicit such information.” Id.; see N.Y. Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713 (1971) (publication of the stolen Pentagon Papers). Punishing “conspiring to publish stolen information” “would certainly narrow protections for ‘mainstream’ journalists.” Goldsmith, supra.

B. The Campaign satisfies the first part of Bartnicki’s test: It “played no part in the illegal interception.” Bartnicki, 532 U.S. at 525. As explained above, the DNC alleges a “Conspiracy To Disseminate Stolen DNC Data To Aid Trump.” (Am. Compl. at 21 (emphasis added); supra pp. 5–7.) The DNC does not assert—and cannot plausibly assert—a conspiracy to steal the emails in the first place.

C. The Campaign also satisfies the second part of Bartnicki’s test: the disclosure deals with “a matter of public concern.” 532 U.S. at 525. “Speech deals with matters of public concern when it can be fairly considered as relating to any matter of political, social, or other concern to the community, or when it is a subject of legitimate news interest.” Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 453 (2011) (citations and quotation marks omitted). In applying this test, a court must examine the “content, form, and context” of the speech. Id.

A court must judge the public character of a disclosure in the aggregate, not line by line. For example, in Bartnicki, leaders of a teachers’ union spoke on the phone about “blow[ing] off the[] front porches” of school-board members to influence salary negotiations. 532 U.S. at 518–19. Even though that specific threat was not itself speech about public issues, the First Amendment protected the disclosure because the host made it while “engaged in debate about” teacher pay—“a matter of public concern.” Id. at 535. The “public concern” test thus turns on the broader context of the disclosure, not the nature of the specific fact disclosed.

The Supreme Court followed the same holistic approach in Florida Star v. B.J.F., 491 U.S. 524 (1989). In that case, a newspaper published an article that revealed the name of a rape victim, violating a state statute that forbade the disclosure of this private fact. Even though the victim’s name itself was a private fact not of public concern, the Court ruled that the First Amendment barred civil liability, because “the news article concerned a matter of public significance.” Id. at 536 (emphasis added). The Court emphasized that “the article generally, as opposed to the specific identity contained within it, involved a matter of paramount public import.” Id. at 536–37 (emphasis added).

The Supreme Court and Fourth Circuit again took this approach in Snyder v. Phelps. There, protesters held up hateful signs at a soldier’s funeral—some addressing public issues (“God Hates the USA”), some specifically condemning the fallen soldier (“You’re Going to Hell”). 562 U.S. at 454. Yet the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment protected the entire funeral protest—including the private taunts “related to [the fallen soldier and his family] specifically”—because “the overall thrust and dominant theme of [the] demonstration spoke to broader public issues.” Id. The Fourth Circuit, too, ruled that the whole protest was protected, “even when [the soldier’s parents] are mentioned,” because the “general message” “primarily concerned” matters of public concern. Snyder v. Phelps, 580 F.3d 206, 225–26 (4th Cir. 2009).

Bartnicki, Florida Star, and Snyder thus show that courts must apply the public-concern test to a disclosure as a whole, not to individual snippets of the disclosure taken in isolation. This approach accords with the broader “First Amendment rule” that courts must always judge speech “as a whole.” Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234, 248 (2002); cf. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24 (1973) (speech is obscene only if “the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest” and “taken as a whole, lacks serious ... value” (citation omitted, emphasis added)).

Here, the content, form, and context of the disclosures establish that the disclosures, in the aggregate, dealt with public issues. To begin with the content: Every disclosed item was (1) work material (2) created, sent, or received by a political operative (3) during a presidential campaign. Every disclosed item thus inherently addressed politics, elections, and campaigns—all paradigmatic public issues. Indeed, the disclosed materials dealt pervasively with important public issues. They revealed the DNC’s conduct during its presidential primaries—which are “public affair[s],” “structur[ed] and monitor[ed]” by the state. Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567, 572 (2000). They revealed the nature of the DNC’s interactions with rich donors—educating citizens about the influence of “moneyed interests.” Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 370 (2010). And they revealed the closeness of the party’s ties to the media—“the great interpreters between the government and the people.” Grosjean v. Am. Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 250 (1936). The importance of these issues to the public is only further confirmed by the overwhelming media coverage that the disclosures received.

The form of the disclosure reinforces its public character. WikiLeaks published the emails on “the vast democratic forums of the Internet.” Packingham v. North Carolina, 137 S. Ct. 1730, 1735 (2017). It communicated the disclosed information to the public at large—not, for example, just to family members of DNC staffers that it sought to embarrass.

Finally, the context of the disclosure confirms that the disclosure deals with matters of public concern. WikiLeaks published the emails on July 22, 2016, “just three days before the Democratic National Convention.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 153.) That timing shows that the “overall thrust” of the disclosure was to reveal important facts to the electorate—not to release social security numbers and office gossip buried in a few out of thousands of emails.

In sum, the Campaign did not participate in the theft of the emails, and the emails taken as a whole concerned public issues. The First Amendment bars civil liability.

II. The DNC Fails to State RICO Claims Against the Campaign.

The DNC asserts that the Campaign committed a substantive violation of RICO under § 1962(c), which makes it “unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise’s affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.” A plaintiff thus must plausibly allege “(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.” Kerik v. Tacopina, 64 F. Supp. 3d 542, 553 (S.D.N.Y.

2014) (citation omitted). The plaintiff also must establish that the RICO violation proximately caused it to suffer an injury to its “business or property.” § 1964(c).

The DNC also alleges that the Campaign violated § 1962(d), which makes it “unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the” substantive RICO provisions, including § 1962(c).

RICO’s standards are hard to satisfy: “although civil RICO may be a ‘potent weapon,’ plaintiffs wielding RICO almost always miss the mark.” Moss v. BMO Harris Bank, N.A., 258 F. Supp. 3d 289, 297 (E.D.N.Y. 2017) (citing Gross v. Waywell, 628 F. Supp. 2d 475, 479–83 (S.D.N.Y. 2009)). For example, from 2004 through 2007, all 36 civil RICO cases brought in the Southern District of New York that were “resolved on the merits resulted in judgments against the plaintiffs, mostly at the motion to dismiss stage.” Id. Courts therefore must “look with particular scrutiny at [RICO] claims.” Grimes v. Fremont Gen. Corp., 785 F. Supp. 2d 269, 299 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (citation omitted).

The DNC’s RICO claims do not withstand scrutiny. In fact, the DNC fails to satisfy any of the requirements for a claim under either § 1962(c) or (d).

A. The DNC has not alleged a valid enterprise.

“The existence of an enterprise at all times remains a separate element which must be proved” to prevail in a RICO action. United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583 (1981). A RICO enterprise “includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity.” 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4).

The DNC makes two attempts at alleging the existence of a RICO enterprise. It first alleges that the Campaign was itself an enterprise. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 222–26). It immediately concedes, however, that this theory applies (if at all) only to the other defendants, not the Campaign. (Id. ¶ 224 (“[E]ach Defendant—except the Trump Campaign itself—participated in the operation or management of the Trump Campaign.”).) This concession was a necessary one: § 1962(c) “imposes liability on a ‘person’ who is employed by or associated with an ‘enterprise,’” and so a “plaintiff could not allege a claim against a corporation as a defendant ‘person’ while also claiming that the corporation was the ‘enterprise.’” 4 K & D Corp. v. Concierge Auctions, LLC, 2 F. Supp. 3d 525, 536 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (Koeltl, J.) (emphasis added). (In any event, the DNC’s “Campaign as enterprise” theory fails, because the DNC cannot establish that other Defendants “conduct[ed] or participate[d] ... in the conduct of the [Campaign’s] affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity (§ 1962(c)), and also for many of the same reasons that its association-in-fact theory fails (infra § II.A).)

The DNC’s claim against the Campaign thus rests entirely on its second theory of a RICO enterprise: the allegation that the Campaign “was part of an Association-In-Fact comprising” all Defendants (“the AIF Enterprise”), which formed no earlier than March 2016 and which supposedly worked “to further [Defendants’] mutual goals of improving Trump’s electoral prospects and damaging the DNC.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 227.) This theory, too, fails. An “association-in-fact enterprise must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise’s purpose.” Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 946 (2009). In addition, the enterprise requirement is separate from the requirement of a pattern of racketeering activity, and so a plaintiff must plausibly allege “an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages.” Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583. The AIF Enterprise does not satisfy any of these requirements. Each failure alone is fatal to the DNC’s § 1962(c) claim.

1. The DNC fails to allege a common purpose.

The members of an association-in-fact enterprise must be “associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct.” Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946 (citation omitted). A RICO plaintiff therefore must “provide ... solid information” from which a court “could fairly conclude that [alleged enterprise] members functioned as a unit ... for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct.” First Capital Asset Mgmt., Inc. v. Satinwood, Inc., 385 F.3d 159, 174–75 (2d Cir. 2004)

(citations and internal quotation marks omitted)). “Individuals or [entities] that do not share such a common purpose cannot be considered part of a RICO enterprise as a matter of law.” Reed Constr. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., 745 F. Supp. 2d 343, 351 (S.D.N.Y. 2010).

To satisfy this requirement at the motion-to-dismiss stage, a RICO complaint must “set forth facts to support the conclusion that all [] defendants were actually working with one another ... to accomplish a common purpose.” Nat’l Grp. for Commc’ns & Computers Ltd. v. Lucent Techs. Inc., 420 F. Supp. 2d 253, 271 (S.D.N.Y. 2006); see also, e.g., D. Penguin Bros. v. City Nat. Bank, 587 F. App’x 663, 668 (2d Cir. 2014) (rejecting alleged common purpose of “purchas[ing] the favor and influence of political leaders and government officials” because “this allegation is little more than a ‘naked assertion’ devoid of further factual enhancement” (citations omitted)); Shaw v. Nissan N. Am., Inc., 220 F. Supp. 3d 1046, 1056 (C.D. Cal. 2016) (rejecting unsupported allegations that defendants “shared a common fraudulent purpose” that were unaccompanied by allegations of “plausible facts that satisfy the common purpose requirement”). Where a plaintiff “allege[s] only a series of disconnected incidents, each involving a subset of the overall group of defendants, with no clear indication of a unified agenda,” dismissal is required. Comm. to Protect our Agric. Water v. Occidental Oil & Gas Corp., 235 F. Supp. 3d 1132, 1175 (E.D. Cal. 2017).

The DNC asserts that the members of the AIF Enterprise had the common purpose “of improving Trump’s electoral prospects and damaging the DNC.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 227; see also id. ¶ 71.) To survive dismissal, therefore, the DNC must allege specific facts making it plausible that all Defendants in fact shared this common purpose. The DNC has not done so. To the contrary, the DNC is forced to acknowledge (and to rely on materials explaining) that the hodgepodge, disparate members of the supposed AIF Enterprise—a foreign nation and its intelligence agency, an “Azeri-born oligarch” and his pop-singer son, a London-based Maltese academic, “an international organization of unknown structure” and its founder, the Campaign and several employees, multiple members of President Trump’s family, and the President’s supposed “long-time confidant”—actually held widely divergent objectives in connection with the election. (Id. ¶¶ 39–52, 71–80.)

Russia. The Amended Complaint and the materials cited therein make clear that Russia’s goals were complex and evolving, but centered on that nation’s overarching geopolitical objectives. For example, a report that the DNC repeatedly cites (reflecting the joint views of the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the National Security Agency) characterizes “Russian efforts to influence the 2016 US presidential election” as “the most recent expression of Moscow’s longstanding desire to undermine the US-led democratic order,” “the promotion of which [Russian President Vladimir] Putin and other senior Russian leaders view as a threat to Russia and Putin’s regime.” Office of the Director of National Intelligence, Assessing Russian Activities and Intentions in Recent US Elections at ii, 1 (Jan. 6, 2017), <https://goo.gl/GLuFuz> (cited at Am. Compl. ¶¶ 81, 115, 118) (“IC Report”). Or, as another article cited by the DNC puts it: “the e-mail hacks were part of a larger, and deeply troubling picture: Putin’s desire to damage American confidence and to undermine the Western alliances—diplomatic, financial, and military—that have shaped the postwar world.” Evan Osnos et al., Trump, Putin, and the New Cold War, New Yorker (Mar. 6, 2017), <https://goo.gl/kzdhPo> (cited at Am. Compl. ¶ 73).

The tactics that Russia deployed in pursuit of this objective “evolved over the course of the campaign based on Russia’s understanding of the electoral prospects of the two main candidates.” IC Report at ii. As the DNC admits, Russia’s hacking efforts began in July 2015—long before President Trump even became the front-runner for the Republican nomination, let alone clinched that nomination in May 2016. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 81, 84, 131.) “When it appeared to Moscow that Secretary Clinton was likely to win the election,” Russia “began to focus more on undermining her future presidency.” IC Report at ii. The common thread in all of this was Russia’s objective of improving its own global standing and undermining U.S. democracy, regardless of which candidate prevailed.

The DNC also alleges that Russia was pursuing other objectives having nothing to do with “improving Trump’s electoral prospects” or “damaging the DNC.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 227.) Specifically, the DNC asserts that Russia’s efforts were driven in part by Putin’s personal dislike for Secretary Clinton, stemming from his view that she was to blame for “massive protests [that] broke out in Russia” in December 2011. (Id. ¶¶ 72–73.) Thus, Russia would have sought to defeat Mrs. Clinton regardless of her Republican opponent, and was seeking to “damage” her, not “the DNC.” Moreover, the DNC unsurprisingly does not claim that any other Defendant shared Putin’s objective of “maintaining power and exerting control” as President of Russia. (Id. ¶ 73.)

Assange and WikiLeaks. The DNC does not allege that Assange or WikiLeaks shared Russia’s objective of “undermin[ing] the US-led liberal democratic order.” IC Report at ii. More to the point, it does not allege that either of these Defendants had any particular interest in helping President Trump’s electoral prospects or damaging the DNC. Instead, the DNC acknowledges that Assange and Wikileaks’ objective was to undermine Secretary Clinton, based on Assange’s “history [of] conflicts” and personal “policy disagreements” with her. (Id. ¶ 79.) Those disagreements stemmed from not only Assange’s criticisms of Clinton’s actions as Secretary of State (such as her decision to “push[] to intervene in Libya in 2011,” which, in Assange’s view, caused “Libya’s collapse into anarchy, enabling the Islamic State to flourish”) but also Assange’s view of Clinton “as a personal foe.” Charlie Savage, Assange, Avowed Foe of Clinton, Timed Email Release for Democratic Convention, N.Y. Times (July 26, 2016), <https://goo.gl/JRbCMk> (cited at Am. Compl. ¶ 79). That latter sentiment derived from Assange’s “personal perspective,” as he accused “Mrs. Clinton of having been among those pushing to indict him after WikiLeaks disseminated a quarter of a million diplomatic cables during her tenure as secretary of state,” and declared that he saw her “as a bit of a problem for freedom of the press more generally.” Id. No other Defendant is alleged to have shared this particular vendetta against Secretary Clinton.

The Campaign. The DNC does not ascribe any of the aforementioned purposes—longstanding desires to “undermine the US-led democratic order,” aspirations “to damage American confidence and to undermine [] Western alliances,” or efforts to prosecute personal vendettas against Secretary Clinton—to the Campaign. Instead, the DNC offers only a single sentence as to the Campaign’s purpose, asserting that the Campaign’s “stated goal was to get Trump elected.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 80.) In other words, the Campaign is alleged to have held the same purpose held by every other political campaign ever formed, and by the approximately 63 million Americans who voted for President Trump.

Other Defendants. The DNC makes only passing references to the purposes supposedly held by the other Defendants. Its sole allegation as to the GRU and Mifsud is that “they wanted to advance Russia’s interests.” (Id. ¶ 78.) This conclusory assertion obviously does not establish that either Defendant held any purpose whatsoever with respect to either President Trump or the DNC. Separately, the DNC alleges, without elaboration, that “the Agalarovs and the Trump Associates shared the conspirators’ common purpose because they stood to benefit financially and professionally from a Trump Presidency.” (Id. ¶ 80.) As to the Defendants who worked for or are related to President Trump, it is hardly surprising that they would desire his election. Regardless, this supposed desire for pecuniary and professional gain—which the DNC does not allege to have been shared by any of the other Defendants—falls far short of establishing that any of these individuals had a specific objective of harming the DNC.

In short, the DNC’s own allegations and cited materials confirm that the AIF Enterprise cobbles together an assortment of disparate individuals and entities, each pursuing unique purposes not held by other Defendants. Because the DNC has not plausibly alleged that the supposed enterprise members shared a common purpose, this enterprise theory—and with it, the DNC’s § 1962(c) claim against the Campaign—fails.

2. The DNC fails to allege an unlawful common purpose.

Even if the DNC had plausibly alleged that the AIF Enterprise members all shared a common purpose, this enterprise theory would still fall short. A RICO plaintiff must allege not just a common purpose, but an unlawful common purpose. Where a complaint does not plausibly allege that the members of an association-in-fact enterprise “shared a common unlawful purpose to violate RICO,” it “fails to sufficiently allege the ‘enterprise’ element” of a § 1962(c) claim. Rosner v. Bank of China, 528 F. Supp. 2d 419, 429 (S.D.N.Y. 2007); see also Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 299 (“[F]ailing to allege that members of an association-in-fact enterprise shared a wrongful intent to violate RICO is fatal to an 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) claim.”); First Capital Asset Mgmt., 385 F.3d at 174 (“[F]or an association of individuals to constitute an enterprise, the individuals must share a common purpose to engage in a particular fraudulent course of conduct and work together to achieve such purposes.” (emphasis added)).

There is nothing illicit about the AIF Enterprise’s alleged purpose of advancing President Trump’s electoral prospects and diminishing the DNC’s. Quite the contrary, the rights to “support [a] candidate and his views,” and to “affiliate ... with a candidate” “in furtherance of common political goals” are at the heart of the First Amendment. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 22 (1976) (per curiam); see also McCutcheon v. FEC, 572 U.S. 185, 226 (2014) (plurality) (noting “the basic nature of the party system, in which party members join together to further common political beliefs, and citizens can choose to support a party because they share some, most, or all of those beliefs”). Indeed, “it can hardly be doubted that the constitutional guarantee has its fullest and most urgent application precisely to the conduct of campaigns for political office.” Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy, 401 U.S. 265, 272 (1971).

To be sure, the DNC takes issue with the tactics that it accuses the AIF Enterprise of deploying in pursuit of its valid objective. But as explained below, an association-in-fact enterprise must exist independently of the acts in which it engages, and that existence (or nonexistence) turns on whether the supposed enterprise members shared an unlawful purpose. Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946; infra II.A.4. It is thus not enough for the DNC to allege that the AIF Enterprise pursued its (legitimate) objective through improper means. Because Defendants’ alleged objective was entirely legitimate, Defendants cannot be said to have formed a RICO enterprise.

Indeed, accepting the DNC’s theory would have dire and far-reaching consequences. Every campaign that this country has ever seen—and every voter—has held the objective of promoting a political candidate, which necessarily comes at the expense of opposing candidates and their supporters. If this were enough to satisfy the common-purpose requirement, any campaign or group of voters could be deemed a RICO enterprise and subjected to the threat of civil liability (not to mention treble damages) for promoting their preferred candidate. All a plaintiff would need to do, as the DNC has done here, is allege that those defendants used improper tactics in pursuit of their entirely proper goal. Injecting this rule into the already overheated world of modern campaigning would invite abusive litigation designed to turn political contests into legal ones.

The Court need not go down this dangerous path. Because the DNC offers no basis for concluding that the alleged AIF Enterprise members “shared a common unlawful purpose to violate RICO” (Rosner, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 429), this enterprise theory fails.

3. The DNC fails to allege relationships amongst the purported association-in-fact enterprise members.

For an association-in-fact enterprise to exist, its members also must have “interpersonal relationships” with one another. Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946. Such relationships are crucial to providing the needed “evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and [] evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit.” Id. at 945 (quoting Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583). “[A]n association-in-fact enterprise must have [this] structure.” Id.

A plaintiff cannot satisfy the relationships requirement merely by alleging that “participants in [an enterprise] preserve close business relationships and maintain established and defined roles within the enterprise” (Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 301), or by alleging that “several individuals, independently and without coordination, engaged in a pattern of crimes listed as RICO predicates” (Boyle, 556 U.S. at 947 n.4). Nor does it suffice for a plaintiff to simply “string[] together [] various defendants and label[] them an enterprise.” Town of Mamakating v. Lamm, 2015 WL 5311265, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 11, 2015), aff’d on other grounds, 651 F. App’x 51 (2d Cir. 2016). Rather, a plaintiff must set forth factual allegations demonstrating that the enterprise members “had an interpersonal relationship in which they worked together for a common illicit interest,” from which it could plausibly be inferred that the members were “acting in any way [other than] in their own independent interests.” Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 301 (citation omitted).

The Amended Complaint does not plausibly allege the relationships that RICO requires. To be sure, the DNC baldly asserts that the AIF Enterprise “had an ongoing organizational framework” and that this supposed enterprise “could not have carried out its intricate task of sharing confidential information at the moments when it would be most beneficial to the Trump Campaign unless it had some structure for making and communicating group decisions.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 228.) But at no point does the DNC actually identify any such “framework” or “structure.” In fact, the DNC does not even allege any connection whatsoever between most Defendants.

Instead, the DNC alleges a series of isolated connections between various individuals. First, it asserts that some Defendants had “long-standing personal, professional, and financial ties to Russia” or to “individuals closely linked to the Russian government.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 64; see id. ¶¶ 65–70.) But none of these supposed “ties” (President Trump’s pre-presidency business dealings in Russia, Paul Manafort’s previous work for “Russian-allied” Ukrainians, Manafort’s and Robert Gates’ “communication[s]” with a “former linguist in the Russian army,” and Assange’s attempts to flee to Russia to escape extradition on sexual-assault charges) are alleged to have anything to do with the supposed enterprise. And it is not enough to allege simply that various individuals “preserve close business relationships” or other relationships. Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 301.

Beyond this, the DNC merely alleges isolated interactions between certain Defendants: for instance, Papadopoulos’s meetings with Joseph Mifsud, a Maltese academic “based in London” with undefined connections to Russia (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 93–98); a meeting at Trump Tower that Donald Trump, Jr., Jared Kushner, and Manafort attended with a Russian publicist and an allegedly “Kremlin-connected Russian lawyer,” among others (id. ¶¶ 136–37); and electronic correspondence amongst “GRU operatives,” WikiLeaks, and Roger Stone (id. ¶¶ 146–48, 157–61). These allegations are insufficient for two reasons.

First, many of these allegations rely on unsupported assertions that particular individuals were working as “agents” for other Defendants. (See, e.g., id. ¶ 43 (alleging that Mifsud “acted as a de facto agent of the Russian government”); id. ¶ 64 n.* (alleging that certain Defendants “acted as agents of, and their acts are attributable to, the Trump Campaign”); id. ¶ 137 (alleging that the Russian lawyer who attended the Trump Tower meeting “had a history of acting as an agent of the Russian government”).) But “conclusory allegations regarding [an] agency relationship,” without “facts that support [this] assertion[,] ... are not sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.” RSM Prod. Corp. v. Friedman, 643 F. Supp. 2d 382, 408 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), aff’d, 387 F. App’x 72 (2d Cir. 2010); see also Cannon v. Douglas Elliman, LLC, 2007 WL 4358456, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 10, 2007) (dismissing complaint that contained only “conclusory allegations of an agency relationship” and “offer[ed] no facts from which inferences of actual or apparent authority in this context can be drawn”). The DNC offers no such factual support, and so cannot rely on these bare allegations to bootstrap relationships between various Defendants. The DNC thus has no basis for, among other things, establishing relationships between the Campaign and Russia, the GRU, WikiLeaks, or Assange.

Second, these isolated interactions between various Defendants do not establish that the disparate and geographically dispersed enterprise members were “work[ing] together for a common illicit interest,” through “interpersonal relationships,” rather than for “their own independent interests.” Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 301 (citation omitted). As explained above (supra § II.A.1), the Amended Complaint establishes that the Defendants held distinct purposes from one another, and were pursuing those distinct purposes rather than some shared objective. And all of the alleged interactions are entirely consistent with Defendants each pursuing their unique, separate objectives. The fact that various Defendants occasionally communicated with one another simply does not provide any “evidence of an ongoing organization” that “function[ed] as a continuing unit.” Boyle, 556 U.S. at 945 (citation omitted).

4. The DNC fails to allege an enterprise with the required longevity.

The DNC similarly cannot establish the third structural requirement of an association-in-fact enterprise: “longevity sufficient to permit the[] associates to pursue the enterprise’s purpose.” Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946. Even in the DNC’s telling, the AIF Enterprise did not form until, at the earliest, March 2016—eight months after Russia allegedly “undert[ook] its cyberattack on the DNC” by infiltrating the DNC’s network. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 84, 115, 227.) And the DNC does not allege that any other enterprise members assisted Russia and the GRU in infiltrating the DNC’s systems and extracting data. (See id. ¶¶ 4, 82–83.) The AIF Enterprise therefore did not exist long enough to play any role in the conduct that facilitated every theft and every disclosure at issue here. The enterprise lacks the required longevity.

5. The DNC fails to allege an enterprise that is separate from the purported pattern of racketeering activity.

Under Section 1962, “[t]he ‘enterprise’ is not the ‘pattern of racketeering activity’”; it is an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages.” Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583. The enterprise, in other words, “must have some sort of existence independent of the commission of the predicate acts.” Wood v. Incorporated Vill. of Patchogue, 311 F. Supp. 2d 344, 357 (E.D.N.Y. 2004). A plaintiff asserting a RICO claim therefore cannot merely lump defendants “together for the sole reason that they all allegedly had [a hand]’ in the alleged acts.” Aerowest GmbH v. Freitag, 2016 WL 3636619, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. June 28, 2016) (citation omitted). A “RICO enterprise that is coterminous with the pattern of racketeering activity in which it engages ... is not actionable.” Stein v. World-Wide Plumbing Supply Inc., 71 F. Supp. 3d 320, 327 (E.D.N.Y. 2014).

The DNC quite plainly fails this test. At no point does it even attempt to allege that the AIF Enterprise had any “existence independent of the commission of the predicate acts.” Wood, 311 F. Supp. 2d at 357. To the contrary, even crediting all of the interactions between various Defendants that the DNC cobbles together, those interactions were purely for the purpose of engaging in a pattern of racketeering activity. Confirming as much, the DNC portrays the AIF Enterprise as simply ceasing to exist on Election Day 2016—the very day that the supposed pattern of racketeering activity came to an end. (Am. Compl. ¶ 227.) This makes perfect sense, because the DNC has not alleged “an organized entity,” but rather has “plead[ed] only that a group existed to commit” predicate acts. Aerowest GmbH, 2016 WL 3636619, at *3. Such allegations “do not substantiate an ‘enterprise’ as required for a RICO claim.” Id. at *4.

B. The DNC has not alleged that the Campaign conducted or participated in the conduct of the alleged association-in-fact enterprise.

Under § 1962(c), “one is not liable ... unless one has participated in the operation or management of the enterprise itself.” Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 183 (1993). It is not enough for a defendant merely to associate with an enterprise; “some part in directing the enterprise’s affairs is required.” Id. at 179 (second emphasis added). This standard is not met where a defendant merely attends to its own business; “liability depends on showing that the defendants conducted or participated in the conduct of the enterprise’s affairs, not just their own affairs.” Id. at 185.

This being the case, “a person may not be held liable merely for taking directions and performing tasks that are necessary and helpful to the enterprise, or for providing goods and services that ultimately benefit the enterprise.” Moss, 258 F. Supp. 3d at 306; see also Green v. New Vision Int’l, Inc., 156 F.3d 721, 728 (7th Cir. 1998) (“[S]imply performing services for an enterprise, even with knowledge of the enterprise’s illicit nature, is not enough to subject an individual to RICO liability”). Nor do “[a]llegations that a defendant had a business relationship with a putative RICO enterprise ... suffice.” Crichton v. Golden Rule Ins. Co., 576 F.3d 392, 399 (7th Cir. 2009). In short, “[s]imply alleging that certain entities provide services which are helpful to an enterprise[,] without any allegations that those entities exert any control over the enterprise[,] does not sufficiently allege a claim under RICO against those entities.” City of New York v. Smokes-Spirits.com, Inc., 541 F.3d 425, 449 (2d Cir. 2008), rev’d on other grounds sub nom., Hemi Grp., LLC v. City of New York, 559 U.S. 1 (2010).

Here, the DNC does not even allege that the Campaign provided helpful services to the supposed AIF Enterprise—allegations that still would not pass the operation-and-management test. It does not claim the Campaign had any role in hacking into the DNC’s systems, any role in exfiltrating data, or any role in publishing that data. In other words, the DNC does not allege that the Campaign played a part in—let alone directed—any of the conduct upon which its RICO claim is predicated.

Instead, the most the DNC alleges is that the Campaign cheered on others to direct the enterprise’s affairs, by supposedly “counsel[ing] and encourag[ing] Russia, the GRU, WikiLeaks, and Assange to commit economic espionage and theft of trade secrets,” and by “prais[ing] the illegal disseminations” (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 5, 240; see also, e.g., id. ¶¶ 23, 97, 154, 187–94.) This does not suffice.

As an initial matter, “counsel[ing] and encourag[ing],” by definition, do not amount to “directing the enterprise’s affairs.” Reves, 507 U.S. at 179. This is particularly true given that none of the supposed counseling or encouraging is alleged to have had any impact on the AIF Enterprise’s conduct. The DNC alleges only that those involved in carrying out the actual theft and dissemination of information told others who worked for or communicated with the Campaign of their plans, without soliciting or receiving any assistance—much less any direction—from those individuals. (E.g., Am. Compl. ¶¶ 94(d), 132, 157, 166.) This is the polar opposite of “exert[ing] ... control over the enterprise.” Smokes-Spirits.com, 541 F.3d at 449.

Just as clearly, praising the results of others’ efforts in directing the AIF Enterprise’s affairs is not tantamount to directing those affairs. If it were, every journalist that credited the disclosures with providing useful information could similarly be said to have directed the AIF Enterprise. But that is obviously nonsense (and contrary to the First Amendment). The Campaign did not direct the AIF Enterprise’s affairs by praising the disclosure of (true and newsworthy) information any more than a stadium of baseball fans can be said to have directed their team’s affairs on the field.

C. The DNC has not alleged that the Campaign committed any predicate acts, let alone a pattern of racketeering activity.

“[T]he heart of any RICO complaint is the allegation of a pattern of racketeering.” Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., 483 U.S. 143, 154 (1987). A “‘pattern of racketeering activity’ requires at least two acts of racketeering activity”—known as “predicate acts”—occurring “within ten years” of one another. § 1961(5). A plaintiff must establish that the predicate acts “are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity.” H.J. Inc. v. Nm. Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239 (1989). The DNC is unable to establish that the Campaign engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity, both because the law forecloses the aiding-and-abetting theory on which the DNC exclusively relies, and because the DNC in any event fails to allege the continuous criminal activity that RICO requires.

First, the DNC’s § 1962(c) claim against the Campaign fails because it does not allege that the Campaign committed any predicate acts. Instead, it alleges that only Russia, the GRU, WikiLeaks, and Assange committed predicate acts (namely, economic espionage and theft of trade secrets). (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 231–38.) The DNC’s sole theory as to the Campaign is that it “aided and abetted Russia, the GRU, WikiLeaks, and Assange as they committed economic espionage and theft of ‘Trade Secrets,’ by “counsel[ing] and encourag[ing]” them to commit those acts. (Id. ¶ 240 (emphasis added).)

The law forecloses this theory. “Courts in this district have routinely held that ‘aiding and abetting’ a RICO enterprise is not a valid cause of action.” Spinale v. United States, 2004 WL 50873, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 9, 2004); see also, e.g., Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp. 2d 392, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (same); DeFalco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 330 (2d Cir. 2001) (affirming decision in which district court dismissed RICO claim on the grounds that “RICO does not provide for aider-and-abettor liability”).

The reason for this rule is straightforward. The Supreme Court has emphasized that, when Congress enacts a civil statute “under which a person may sue and recover damages from a private defendant for the defendant’s violation of some statutory norm, there is no general presumption that the plaintiff may also sue aiders and abettors.” Cent. Bank of Denver, N.A. v. First Interstate Bank of Denver, N.A., 511 U.S. 164, 182 (1994) (holding that there is no aiding-and-abetting liability under Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act). “Congress knew how to impose aiding and abetting liability when it chose to do so”; if it “intended to impose aiding and abetting liability” under civil RICO, the presumption mandated in Central Bank of Denver is that “it would have used the words ‘aid’ and ‘abet’ in the statutory text.” Id. at 176–77. Those words, however, do not appear in § 1962. See, e.g., Rolo v. City Investing Co. Liquidating Tr., 155 F.3d 644, 657 (3d Cir. 1998) (“Like § 10(b), the text of § 1962 itself contains no indication that Congress intended to impose private civil aiding and abetting liability under RICO.”). Because the DNC cannot rely on an aiding-and-abetting theory, it has not alleged a single predicate act by the Campaign—let alone a pattern of racketeering activity.

In all events, the DNC’s allegations fail to plausibly allege aiding and abetting. To establish a claim for aiding and abetting, a complaint must allege, among other things, “‘substantial assistance’ by the aider and abettor in the achievement of the primary violation.” Tribune Co. v. Purcigliotti, 869 F. Supp. 1076, 1100 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (citation omitted), aff’d sub nom. Tribune Co. v. Abiola, 66 F.3d 12 (2d Cir. 1995). But the DNC does not plead that the Campaign provided any—let alone substantial—assistance to the Defendants that allegedly committed predicate acts. Instead, it alleges only that the Campaign “counseled and encouraged” those Defendants. (Am. Compl. ¶ 240.) This is not enough. And to the extent that this supposed “counsel[] and encourage[ment]” is premised on the Campaign’s encouraging disclosures of materials that it had no role in stealing or its publicly referencing already-disclosed materials (id. ¶¶ 154, 187–94), that conduct is shielded by the First Amendment and so cannot provide a basis for liability. Supra § I.

Additionally, aiding-and-abetting liability applies only where a person “give[s] a degree of aid” to others who “engage in [] proscribed activities.” Cent. Bank of Denver, 511 U.S. at 176. But Russia contends that sovereign immunity shields it from liability for any predicate acts. ECF No. 186 at 4–7. And the Communications Decency Act (47 U.S.C. § 230) forecloses liability for a website that provides a forum where “third parties can post information”—which WikiLeaks is accused of doing here (by allegedly providing a forum for Russia to publish content it had obtained). Klayman v. Zuckerberg, 753 F.3d 1354, 1358 (D.C. Cir. 2014). To the extent that the law does not reach either Russia’s or WikiLeaks’ alleged conduct, the Campaign cannot have aided and abetted any “proscribed activities”—further confirming the futility of the DNC’s theory.

Second, even if the law allowed aiding-and-abetting RICO liability, the DNC still would be unable to establish the “continued criminal activity” that RICO requires. H.J., 492 U.S. at 239. A plaintiff can satisfy this requirement “either by showing a ‘closed-ended’ pattern—a series of related predicate acts extending over a substantial period of time—or by demonstrating an ‘open-ended’ pattern of racketeering activity that poses a threat of continuing criminal conduct beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed.” Spool, 520 F.3d at 183 (citing H.J., 492 U.S. at 241).

The DNC attempts to establish only closed-ended continuity, as it alleges that the AIF Enterprise ceased on November 8, 2016 (Election Day). (Am. Compl. ¶ 227.) See also Michalowski v.

Rutherford, 82 F. Supp. 3d 775, 790 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (holding that plaintiff alleging RICO enterprise carried out through a political campaign “has alleged a closed period,” because the “campaigns ended with the elections” and so “common sense suggests that there is no credible threat of future harm”). Closed-ended continuity requires “a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time” (H.J., 492 U.S. at 242), and the Second Circuit has “never held a period of less than two years to constitute a ‘substantial period of time’” (Spool, 520 F.3d at 184). See also Eagle One Roofing Contractors, Inc. v. Acquafredda, 2018 WL 1701939, at *14 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2018) (same). But the DNC alleges that the AIF Enterprise existed for no more than nine months, having formed no earlier than March 2016. This is nowhere near the “long-term criminal conduct” that RICO requires. H.J., 492 U.S. at 242.

D. The DNC has not alleged any cognizable injury that was proximately caused by the alleged RICO violations.

A plaintiff has a cause of action to sue under RICO only if it was “injured in [its] business or property.” 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). The injury must be “actual [and] quantifiable”; “courts have required that the plaintiff show concrete financial loss in order to show injury under RICO.” Westchester Cty. Indep. Party v. Astorino, 137 F. Supp. 3d 586, 613 (S.D.N.Y. 2015).

The injury to business or property, moreover, must be “by reason of a violation of section 1962” (§ 1964(c)) meaning that the RICO violation must be “both the proximate cause and the but-for cause of the plaintiffs’ injuries.” Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 612 (citing UFCW Local 1776 v. Eli Lilly & Co., 620 F.3d 121, 132 (2d Cir. 2010)). “When a court evaluates a RICO claim for proximate causation, the central question it must ask is whether the alleged violation led directly to the plaintiff’s injuries.” Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 460–61 (2006) (emphasis added). A plaintiff must plausibly allege that its damages are “attributable to the violation, as distinct from other, independent factors.” DeFalco, 244 F.3d at 329–30 (quoting Holmes v. Sec. Inv’r Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 269 (1992)).

The DNC makes four attempts at asserting cognizable injuries proximately caused by the supposed RICO violations. All four fail.

First, the DNC alleges that the WikiLeaks publications disrupted its political efforts, including by “driving a wedge between the DNC and Democratic voters,” “impair[ing] the DNC’s ability to support Democratic candidates,” “undermining the party’s ability to achieve unity and rally members around their shared values,” and inflicting “a chilling effect on donations to the DNC.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 200–03.) But interference with the DNC’s political efforts does not constitute an “injury to business or property.” “[I]njury to the [p]arty’s ‘business of choosing and securing candidates of their choice’—or supporting those candidates—‘does not become a business injury simply by virtue of calling it that.’” Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 615. This is instead, “at most, a non-economic” political injury. Id. Proving the point, the DNC does not even claim to have any way of quantifying the “impair[ment]” of its “ability to support Democratic candidates” or the “interfer[ence] with [its] opportunity to communicate its vision to the electorate.” (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 200–01.) Similarly, allegations that the DNC “has been unable to earn the money donations it normally secures ... lack[] the requisite precision necessary to constitute a RICO injury.” Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 615.

Further, the DNC cannot show that these purported injuries directly followed from the alleged RICO violation, “as distinct from other, independent factors.” DeFalco, 244 F.3d at 329–30. As an initial matter, the DNC cannot establish that any political injury it suffered was caused by the alleged predicate acts (the theft and disclosure of the emails) as opposed to the public’s reaction to the information those emails revealed about the DNC’s conduct. And in any event, there are a number of well-known factors—having nothing to do with the WikiLeaks releases—that caused the DNC to struggle politically in the lead-up to its candidate’s defeat in the general election: the protracted primary fight between Secretary Clinton and Senator Sanders, the then-FBI Director’s public statement declaring that Secretary Clinton had been “extremely careless” in using a private email server as Secretary of State (and later announcing, days before the election, that the investigation into Secretary Clinton’s email practices was being reopened), low enthusiasm for Secretary Clinton among important demographic groups, and so on. See, e.g., A. Chozick et al., Bernie Sanders Endorses Hillary Clinton, Hoping to Unify Democrats, N.Y. Times (July 12, 2016), <https://goo.gl/5y6hQh> (“After 14 months of policy clashes and moments of disdain, Senator Bernie Sanders endorsed Hillary Clinton ...”); D. Balz & S. Clement, Clinton Holds Narrow Lead over Trump on Eve of Conventions, Wash. Post (July 17, 2016), <https://goo.gl/CneHZk> (reporting that polls “shift[ed] in Trump’s direction” after “Clinton received a stern rebuke from [the] FBI Director” for her and her aides’ “handling of sensitive classified material in their email exchanges”); A. Chozick, Hillary Clinton Blames F.B.I. Director for Election Loss, N.Y. Times (Nov. 12, 2016), <https://goo.gl/CVhaAo> (“Hillary Clinton on Saturday cast blame for her surprise election loss on the announcement by the F.B.I. director ... days before the election that he had revived the inquiry into her use of a private email server.”); J. Peters et al., Black Turnout Soft in Early Voting, Boding Ill for Hillary Clinton, N.Y. Times (Nov. 1, 2016), <https://goo.gl/cjk9cm> (reporting that “disappointing black turnout” was “creating a vexing problem for Hillary Clinton as she clings to a deteriorating lead over Donald J. Trump with Election Day just a week away”); J. Peters and Y. Alcindor, Hillary Clinton Struggles to Win Back Young Voters From Third Parties, N.Y. Times (Sept. 28, 2016), <https://goo.gl/GTGsjm> (“[Young voters] are not moving toward the [Democratic] party and its nominee as quickly and predictably as they have in past elections.”). These factors and others all played major roles in “undermining the party’s ability to achieve unity.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 201.) The DNC thus cannot show that “the alleged violation led directly to” its supposed injuries. Anzsa, 547 U.S. at 461 (emphasis added).

Second, the DNC alleges that “the public releases ... exposed employees of the DNC to intense, frightening, and sometimes life-threatening harassment.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 204; see also id. ¶¶ 205–08.)

But those individuals are not plaintiffs, and the DNC has no standing to sue on their behalf. A RICO “plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation.” Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496 (1985) (emphases added). And in any event, “RICO violations must cause injury to ‘business or property’”; “personal or emotional damages do not qualify.” Gross, 628 F. Supp. 2d at 488; see also Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 612 (collecting cases).

Third, the DNC alleges that its computer systems were damaged by the alleged hacking, purportedly creating the need to repair and replace certain technology, and to retain staff and consultants to investigate the hacking and remediate the damage. (Am. Compl. ¶ 209.) But the DNC alleges that the hacking commenced in July 2015—months before the AIF Enterprise allegedly came into existence (somewhere between March and June 2016). (Id. ¶¶ 115, 227.) And the DNC does not suggest that it can identify particular damage that resulted from subsequent conduct after the AIF Enterprise came into being, rather than the initial hack. It therefore has no basis for claiming that the AIF Enterprise proximately caused this injury.

Finally, the DNC alleges that the GRU “stole proprietary computer code” and “proprietary information concerning the ways in which the DNC analyzed its data, developed its strategies and approached decisions in its efforts to win the 2016 election.” (Id. ¶¶ 210–11.) Although the DNC says that it “derives value” from this code and information “by virtue of their secrecy” (id. ¶¶ 176, 178, 181) and that “[t]he GRU could have derived significant economic value” from this data by “selling the data to the highest bidder” (id. ¶ 185), it does not allege that the information actually was sold, or that the information was disseminated at any point. These supposed injuries thus have no connection to the releases of trade secrets that underlie the DNC’s § 1962(c) claim. And even if they did, the DNC does not claim that it can quantify any “concrete financial loss” stemming from this alleged theft, as would be required. Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 612.

* * * * *

The DNC does not allege a valid association-in-fact enterprise, does not allege that the Campaign participated in the operation or management of any such enterprise, does not allege that the Campaign committed any predicate acts (let alone a continuous pattern of such acts), and does not allege that it sustained any cognizable injury to its property or business that was proximately caused by RICO violations. Its § 1962(c) claim against the Committee must be dismissed.

E. The DNC's tagalong RICO-conspiracy claim also fails.

The DNC's RICO-conspiracy claim under § 1962(d) fares no better. "To establish the existence of a RICO conspiracy, a plaintiff must prove 'the existence of an agreement to violate RICO's substantive provisions.'" Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co., 187 F.3d 229, 244 (2d Cir. 1999) (citation omitted). After all, "[a] conspirator must intend to further an endeavor which, if completed, would satisfy all of the elements of a substantive criminal offense." Salinas v. United States, 522 U.S. 52, 65 (1997). So where, as here, a plaintiff is unable to plead a violation of any of RICO's substantive provisions, that plaintiff by definition cannot establish a conspiracy to violate any of those provisions. That is why "[c]ase law in this Circuit confirms that a 1962(d) conspiracy claim must be dismissed where the substantive RICO claim is deficient." Nat'l Grp., 420 F. Supp. 2d at 272; see also, e.g., Westchester Cty. Indep. Party, 137 F. Supp. 3d at 618 (collecting cases so holding).

In any event, the DNC's conspiracy claim fails on its own terms because the DNC has not alleged a conspiratorial agreement with anywhere near the required specificity. "The core of a RICO civil conspiracy is an agreement to commit predicate acts," and so the DNC must plausibly allege a "conscious agreement among all defendants to commit at least two predicate acts." Casio Computer Co. v. Sayo, 2000 WL 1877516, at *22 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 13, 2000). "Conclusory allegations of a conspiracy," by contrast, "are insufficient to plead a Section 1962(d) claim." Nat'l Grp., 420 F. Supp. 2d at 272 (citation omitted); see also Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (“Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice”).

But conclusory allegations are all that the DNC offers. Its § 1962(d) claim spans all of four paragraphs, one of which just incorporates the rest of the Amended Complaint and the other three of which merely recite the elements of a § 1962(d) cause of action. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 243–46.) At no point does the DNC allege specific facts plausibly suggesting that the Campaign reached an agreement with the other Defendants to commit predicate acts of economic espionage and theft of trade secrets. For this reason, too, the DNC’s § 1962(d) claim fails. See 4 K & D Corp., 2 F. Supp. 3d at 545 (dismissing § 1962(d) claim because “plaintiffs have alleged no facts to show specifically that the defendants had any ‘meeting of the minds’ in the alleged violations”).

* * * * *

The DNC’s RICO claims under § 1962(c) and § 1962(d) should be dismissed with prejudice.

III. The DNC Fails to State a Wiretap Act Claim Against the Campaign.

A person violates the “use” clause of the Wiretap Act—the only clause that the Amended Complaint accuses the Campaign of violating (Am. Compl. ¶ 250)—if he “intentionally uses ... the contents of any wire, oral, or electronic communication, knowing or having reason to know that the information was obtained through the interception of a wire, oral, or electronic communication in violation of [the statute].” 18 U.S.C. § 2511(1)(d). The DNC fails to state a claim against the Campaign under the Wiretap Act because (1) it fails to allege that there was an interception or that the Campaign knew or had reason to know that there was an “interception,” and (2) it fails to allege a prohibited “us[e]” of an intercepted communication.

A. The DNC fails to allege that there was an interception or that the Campaign knew or had to reason to know of an interception.

The Wiretap Act addresses the “interception” of communications. “Every circuit court to have considered the matter has held that an ‘intercept’ under the Act must occur contemporaneously with transmission.” Luis v. Zang, 833 F.3d 619, 627 (6th Cir. 2016); see Fraser v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 352 F.3d 107, 113 (3d Cir. 2003); United States v. Steiger, 318 F.3d 1039, 1047 (11th Cir. 2003); Konop v. Hawaiian Airlines, Inc., 302 F.3d 868, 876 (9th Cir. 2002); Steve Jackson Games, Inc. v. U.S. Secret Serv., 36 F.3d 457, 461 (5th Cir. 1994). This Court, too, has ruled that the Act “has a requirement of contemporaneous interception.” Pure Power Boot Camp v. Warrior Fitness Boot Camp, 587 F. Supp. 2d 548, 557 (S.D.N.Y. 2008); see Tarantos v. Fox News Network, LLC, 2018 WL 2731268, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. May 18, 2018); Snyder v. Fantasy Interactive, Inc., 2012 WL 569185, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 9, 2012).

This requirement of contemporaneousness follows from the ordinary meaning of “intercept”: “stop, seize, or interrupt in progress or course or before arrival.” Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary, intercept (emphasis added). Just as a football player cannot “intercept” a pass that has already been caught, a defendant cannot “intercept” a communication that has already concluded.

This requirement of contemporaneousness also makes sense in context. The Wiretap Act distinguishes between “electronic communication” (a “transfer” of electronic signals) and “electronic storage” (a “storage” of an electronic communication). § 2510(12), (17). “The term ‘intercept’ ... applies only to electronic communications, not to electronic storage.... [This] means that the term intercept applies solely to the transfer of electronic signals. The term does not apply to the acquisition of electronic signals that are no longer being transferred.” Luis, 833 F.3d at 627.

This interpretation likewise makes sense in light of the distinction between the Wiretap Act and the Stored Communications Act. The Wiretap Act—which, again, addresses “interception”—punishes both the interception itself and the subsequent disclosure of the intercepted information. 18 U.S.C. § 2511(1). In contrast, the Stored Communications Act—which addresses “access to a wire or electronic communication while it is in electronic storage”—punishes only the “access[ing]” of the stored communication; it does not punish the subsequent disclosure of that communication.

§ 2701(a). Interpreting “interception” to cover accessing stored communications would subvert the distinctions that Congress drew between these statutes.

The DNC fails to allege an “interception.” The Amended Complaint states that Russian agents stole “several gigabytes of DNC data located”—i.e., stored—“on the DNC’s servers.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 104.) The Amended Complaint notably does not state that Russian agents acquired the DNC emails while DNC employees were in the process of sending or receiving them. The Amended Complaint thus alleges only that Russian agents gained access to stored communications—not that they intercepted communications contemporaneously with the communications’ transmission.

The only allegation in the Amended Complaint that relates to interception—“On information and belief, the hackers intercepted or endeavored to intercept emails and voice-based communications while in the DNC servers” (Id. ¶ 129)—does not suffice. First, a complaint must “give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.” Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. The DNC’s allegation fails to provide fair notice because it fails to specify which particular “emails and voice-based communications” were intercepted. As a result, the Campaign and the Court have no way to determine whether the DNC has plausibly alleged that those communications were intercepted at all, whether the Campaign knew or had reason to know of such an interception, or whether the Campaign even used those particular communications.

Second, a complaint must plead “factual content,” not “conclusory statements” that parrot “the elements of a cause of action.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. The Amended Complaint asserts the legal conclusion that the hackers “intercepted” emails, but fails to back up that legal conclusion with factual allegations that the hackers obtained any emails contemporaneously with their transmission.

Third, the allegation in all events does not establish that the Campaign “kn[ew] or ha[d] reason to know that the information was obtained through ... interception.” § 2511(1)(d). The Amended Complaint nowhere alleges that the Campaign knew or should have known that Russian agents acquired the emails contemporaneously with the emails' transmission. It is particularly telling that, even though the DNC hired "a cybersecurity technology firm" to "investigate the attack" and conduct a "forensic analysis on the DNC's computer network," the DNC pleads interception only "on information and belief." If the DNC itself cannot tell whether there was an "interception," the Campaign cannot have known or had reason to know that there was an interception.

B. The DNC fails to allege that the Campaign "used" intercepted communications.

The provision of the Wiretap Act at issue here prohibits the intentional "use" of intercepted communications. § 2511(1)(d). But a defendant does not "use" an interception if someone else discloses the contents of an intercepted communication to the public, and the defendant then discusses those publicly available materials.

Common sense and the First Amendment both compel this reading of the statute. Newspapers and other media resources routinely publish unlawfully intercepted communications. See, e.g., Bartnicki, 532 U.S. 514 (radio show's publication of wiretapped telephone call); Boehner, 484 F.3d 573 (newspaper's publication of wiretapped telephone call). Members of the public, in turn, routinely listen to or read these disclosed communications. As discussed above (supra § I), it would defy common sense and violate the First Amendment to punish, as an illegal user of intercepted communications, "every reader of the information in the newspapers [who] learned that it had been obtained by unlawful intercept." Boehner, 484 F.3d at 586 (opinion of Sentelle, J.). "Under [such a] rule ... no one in the United States could communicate [about publicly available information] because of the defect in the chain of title." Id. Neither common sense nor the First Amendment "permits this interdiction of public information." Id.

Under these principles, the DNC fails to allege that the Campaign engaged in a prohibited "use" of any intercepted communications. The Amended Complaint alleges that "WikiLeaks and Assange"—not the Campaign—"disclosed the contents of [the DNC's] wire, oral, or electronic communications.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 249.) The Amended Complaint adds that, after WikiLeaks “disclosed” these communications to the public, Mr. Trump “lauded the disclosure,” “encouraged the media and voters to pay more attention to the leaks,” and “enthusiastically direct[ed] attention to those stolen documents” “[a]t his rallies.” (id. ¶¶ 187, 193.) This alleged conduct, however, does not amount to a prohibited “use,” because WikiLeaks had already made the emails public by that time. The Wiretap Act does not prohibit—and, under the First Amendment, cannot prohibit—a speaker from discussing publicly available information, even if there is a “defect in the chain of title.” Boehner, 484 F.3d at 586 (opinion of Sentelle, J.). That is all the more true when the speaker is a political candidate, for “the First Amendment has its fullest and most urgent application to speech uttered during a campaign for political office.” Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 339.

In effect, the DNC’s Wiretap Act claim goes a step beyond what the Supreme Court prohibited in Bartnicki. As explained above, the Supreme Court ruled in Bartnicki that the Government may prohibit the theft of private communications, but may not punish their subsequent disclosure. Supra § I. Here, the DNC does not claim that the Campaign stole or even disclosed its communications; rather, it claims only that the Campaign “used” those communications after their theft and after their disclosure. This theory of liability has no logical stopping point. Thousands of newspaper, radio, television, and internet journalists covered the disclosed DNC emails, and millions of citizens read and discussed them. On the DNC’s theory, all of these people would be “users” of intercepted information, simply because they (like the Campaign) “discussed the disclosure.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 193.) Certainly all media that covered the story would fall squarely within the DNC’s expansive interpretation of “use.” That result is absurd and unconstitutional.

The DNC cannot get around these problems by asserting that the Campaign conspired with Russian agents and WikiLeaks to disclose the DNC emails. For one thing, the Wiretap Act includes separate clauses addressing the “use” and the “disclos[ure]” of intercepted communications.

§ 2511(1)(c)–(d). The Amended Complaint asserts a claim against the Campaign only under the use clause, not the disclosure clause. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 249–50.) For another thing, federal statutes, as noted, presumptively impose civil liability only on “primary violator[s]”—the people who actually commit the act prohibited by the statute. Cent. Bank of Denver, 511 U.S. at 191; see also supra § II.C. Courts may impose “secondary liability”—for instance, liability for conspiracy, aiding and abetting, or concerted action—only where Congress expressly authorizes it. Cent. Bank of Denver, 511 U.S. at 184. In contrast with other clauses of the Wiretap Act, the use and disclosure clauses do not provide for any form of secondary liability. Compare § 2511(1)(a) (“intentionally intercepts, endeavors to intercept, or procures any other person to intercept or endeavor to intercept”) (emphasis added), with § 2511(1)(c)–(d) (“intentionally discloses, or endeavors to disclose ... [or] intentionally uses, or endeavors to use”). As a result, allegations that the Campaign conspired with others to disclose the DNC’s emails are beside the point. As far as the Wiretap Act is concerned, all that matters is what the Campaign itself allegedly did. What the Campaign itself allegedly did—talk about the DNC emails after WikiLeaks published them—is protected speech, not a violation of a federal statute.

IV. The DNC Fails to State State-Law Claims Against the Campaign.

The DNC fails to state a claim against the Campaign for misappropriation of trade secrets in violation of Washington, D.C. law, for conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels in violation of Virginia law, and for violation of Virginia’s Computer Crimes Act.

A. The Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims.

The DNC urges the Court to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over its state-law claims. (Am. Compl. ¶ 33.) But supplemental jurisdiction “is a doctrine of discretion, not of plaintiff’s right.” United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726 (1966). The Court should exercise its discretion to decline supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims in this case.

1. The supplemental-jurisdiction statute identifies four grounds for declining supplemental jurisdiction, two of which are relevant here. A federal court may decline supplemental jurisdiction over a claim if “the claim raises a novel or complex issue of State law.” 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1). The trade-secrets claim raises the novel issue whether a political party’s donor information qualifies as a trade secret, and the complex issues associated with sorting through the thousands of documents on the DNC’s servers in order to determine which (if any) qualify as trade secrets and which do not. The claim for conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels raises novel issues regarding the scope of the tort of trespass to chattels in Virginia. See America Online, Inc. v. IMS, 24 F. Supp. 2d 548, 550 (E.D. Va. 1998) (“[A]uthority under Virginia law respecting an action for trespass to chattels is sparse”). And the claim that the Campaign aided and abetted a violation of the Computer Crimes Act raises the novel issue whether the Act imposes liability upon aiders and abettors. See Alliance Tech. Grp., LLC v. Achieve 1 LLC, 2013 WL 143500, at *4 (E.D. Va. Jan. 11, 2013) (“[T]he Supreme Court of Virginia has refrained from either recognizing or rejecting a separate ‘aiding and abetting’ tort.”).

A federal court may also decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction if it “has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction.” § 1367(c)(3). For the reasons explained above and in the other Defendants’ motions to dismiss, the Court should dismiss the federal claims in this case—the only claims over which it has original jurisdiction.

2. When a case falls within one of the factors set forth in § 1367(c) and “trigger[s]” the district court’s discretion, the court “balances the traditional values of judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity” to determine whether to exercise that discretion to decline jurisdiction. Kolari v. N.Y.-Presbyterian Hosp., 455 F.3d 118, 122 (2d Cir. 2006). These factors strongly support declining jurisdiction here. First, the Special Counsel and multiple congressional committees are already investigating allegations of collusion between Russia and Americans during the 2016 presidential campaign. Exercising supplemental jurisdiction would complicate those investigations by forcing the Special Counsel and congressional committees to coordinate their efforts with a private plaintiff's discovery demands. Second, the Special Counsel has already filed an indictment against twelve Russians for allegedly conspiring to hack into the DNC's servers. See Indictment, United States v. Netysheko, No. 1:18-cr-215 (D.D.C. July 13, 2018), ECF No. 1. If the Court were to exercise supplemental jurisdiction, it may have to stay proceedings in this case anyway, to ensure that civil discovery does not interfere with the criminal defendants' rights in the pending criminal case. See Louis Vuitton Malletier, S.A. v. LY USA, Inc., 676 F.3d 83, 101 (2d Cir. 2012) ("There is considerable authority for the principle that a stay is most justified where a movant ... is already under indictment for a serious criminal offense and is required at the same time to defend a civil action involving the same subject matter"). Finally, the Second Circuit has "repeatedly held that a district court particularly abuses its discretion when it retains jurisdiction over state-law claims raising unsettled questions of law following dismissal of all original-jurisdiction claims." Kolari, 455 F.3d at 124.

B. The DNC fails to state a trade-secrets claim against the Campaign.

The District of Columbia Uniform Trade Secrets Act prohibits the misappropriation of "trade secrets"—"information ... that (A) [d]erives actual or potential independent economic value, from not being generally known ...; and (B) [i]s the subject of reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy." D.C. Code § 36-401(4). The DNC fails to state a claim for misappropriation because they fail to plead that this case involves any "trade secrets."

1. A complaint must "give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. To give a defendant fair notice of a trade-secrets claim, a plaintiff must, "at a minimum," "generally identify the trade secrets at issue." Alexander Interactive, Inc. v. Leisure Pro Ltd., 2014 WL 4651942, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sep. 16, 2014). A plaintiff may not simply identify "broad" "categories" that "potentially encompass both confidential information and [public] information.” Boccardi Capital Sys. v. D.E. Shaw Laminar Portfolios, LLC, 2009 WL 362118, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 9, 2009).

The DNC’s Complaint fails this test. The Amended Complaint asserts that the pertinent “trade secrets” “included Democratic donor information, ... opposition research, and strategic information regarding planned political activities.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 267.) But these “broad” “categories” encompass at least some plainly public information. Boccardi, 2009 WL 362118, at *4. For example, “Democratic donor information” encompasses the names and addresses of donors—information that federal law requires political committees to disclose, and which the Federal Election Commission already posts on its website. See 52 U.S.C. § 30101; FEC, Transaction Query by Individual Contributor, <https://goo.gl/1V6DaC>. “Opposition research” encompasses damaging information about political adversaries that is already publicly known. And “strategic information” is so vague that it could encompass nearly anything. The Campaign cannot properly defend itself against the DNC’s trade-secrets claim when the DNC refuses to say what the trade secrets in question are.

2. To qualify as a trade secret, information must also “[d]eriv[e] ... independent economic value[] from not being generally known to, and not being readily ascertainable by, ... another who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use.” D.C. Code § 36-401(4)(A). It is not enough for the information simply to have “independent economic value”; the information must derive that value “from not being generally known” and “not being readily ascertainable.”

The DNC’s purported “trade secrets” fail this test. First, the DNC has failed to show that “donor information” derives value from secrecy. A list of potential donors may have value to political parties, but that value does not depend on whether the list is public or private. Either way, a political party can continue to use the information to reach potential contributors. See CAIR Action Network, Inc. v. Gaubatz, 82 F. Supp. 3d 344, 361 (D.D.C. 2015) (“The Court doubts that Plaintiffs have shown, as necessary, that the donor lists in this case qualify as trade secrets: Plaintiffs have not ... shown how their particular value derives from their secrecy”). Second, the DNC has failed to show that “opposition research” derives value from secrecy. Quite the opposite, opposition research derives value from publicity; it can have an effect only when the damaging information is revealed to the public. Finally, the DNC has failed to show that “strategic information”—whatever that may be—has any “independent economic value” at all, much less that it derives such value from secrecy.

3. Next, a trade secret must be secret—“not ... generally known.” § 36-401(4)(A). “A trade secret that becomes public knowledge is no longer a trade secret.” BondPro Cop. v. Siemens Power Generation, 463 F.3d 702, 706 (7th Cir. 2006) (Posner, J.); see Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1002 (1984).

This principle defeats the DNC’s trade-secret claims against the Campaign, because the DNC’s information was no longer secret by the time the Campaign allegedly used it. The Amended Complaint alleges that Russian agents first stole the DNC’s information, that WikiLeaks then disclosed that information to the public, and that the Campaign then “used” the information by discussing that public disclosure. Supra pp. 5–7. The Amended Complaint nowhere alleges that the Campaign itself stole the information, that the Campaign itself disclosed the information, or even that the Campaign itself used the information at any time between the theft and the public disclosure. Put simply, WikiLeaks’ public disclosure of the DNC’s information had already extinguished any trade-secret protection by the time the Campaign did anything with that information. The trade-secret claim against the Campaign must therefore be dismissed.

4. Finally, to qualify as a trade secret, information must be “the subject of reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy.” D.C. Code § 36-401(4)(B). The DNC’s Complaint fails to allege this element. The Amended Complaint nowhere describes measures the DNC took to keep its information secret before the theft. Rather, the Amended Complaint discusses only the measures that the DNC took after “discovering the intrusion.” (Am. Compl. ¶ 110.) Because “the Complaint contains no factual allegations that would support an inference ... that [the plaintiff] used ‘reasonable efforts to safeguard its secrecy,” the trade-secret claim should be “dismissed ... for failure to state a claim.” Econ. Research Servs. v. Resolution Econ., LLC, 208 F. Supp. 3d 219, 233 (D.D.C. 2016) (citation omitted).

C. The DNC fails to state a claim against the Campaign for conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels.

Under Virginia law, two or more persons engage in civil conspiracy if they “combin[e] to accomplish, by some concerted action, some criminal or unlawful purpose or some lawful purpose by a criminal or unlawful means.” Gelber v. Glock, 800 S.E.2d 800, 820 (Va. 2017). And a person commits trespass to chattels if he “intentionally uses or intermeddles with personal property in rightful possession of another without authorization,” and as a result “the chattel is impaired as to its condition, quality, or value.” State Analysis, Inc. v. Am. Fin. Servs. Ass’n, 621 F. Supp. 2d 309, 320 (E.D. Va. 2009).

Critically, hacking a computer network may qualify as trespass to chattels, but publishing emails retrieved from such a hack does not. The term “chattel” covers “visible, tangible, personal property only.” First Nat’l Bank v. Holland, 39 S.E. 126, 129 (Va. 1901). And a person “intermeddles” with a chattel if he “intentionally bring[s] about a physical contact with the chattel.” Restatement (Second) of Torts § 217, comment (e). A “computer network” may qualify as a chattel, because “computers ... are tangible personal property.” America Online, Inc. v. LCGM, Inc., 46 F. Supp. 2d 444, 452 (E.D. Va. 1998). And the unauthorized “transmission of electrical signals through a computer network [may be] sufficiently ‘physical’” to qualify as intermeddling. Id. In contrast, however, merely publishing an email that someone else has hacked does not involve unauthorized physical contact with tangible personal property—and, thus, does not amount to trespass to chattels.

In light of this principle, the Court should dismiss the DNC’s claim for conspiracy to commit trespass to chattels for two separate reasons. One, a plaintiff alleging a civil conspiracy under Virginia law must first show that the defendants have “combined to accomplish” the asserted “criminal or unlawful” act. Gelber, 800 S.E.2d at 820. The DNC, however, has not alleged that the Campaign has combined with anyone else to hack into the DNC’s servers (which would be a trespass to chattels).

Rather, the DNC has alleged, at most, that the Campaign has combined with Russia to disclose emails that Russia has already obtained (which would not be a trespass to chattels). Supra pp. 5–7. The Campaign thus did not conspire to commit a trespass to chattels.

Two, a plaintiff alleging a civil conspiracy under Virginia law must also show that the conspirators sought to use “concerted action” to commit the unlawful act. Gelber, 800 S.E.2d at 820; see Hechler Chevrolet, Inc. v. Gen. Motors Corp., 337 S.E. 2d 744, 748 (Va. 1985) (contrasting a “criminal conspiracy,” which requires only “an agreement,” with a “civil conspiracy,” which also requires “some concerted action ... to accomplish [the] criminal or unlawful purpose”). The DNC, however, alleges that Russia hacked the DNC’s servers and extracted information all by itself. Supra pp. 5–7. The DNC does not allege that the Campaign acted in concert with Russia during the hacking or the theft of information. Because the DNC fails to allege concerted action to trespass on its computer network (as opposed to mere concerted action to publish the emails after the trespass had occurred), the DNC fails to state a claim against the Campaign for conspiracy to commit a trespass to chattels.

D. The DNC fails to state a Virginia Computer Crimes Act claim against the Campaign.

The Virginia Computer Crimes Act prohibits computer fraud, computer trespass, and invasion of computer privacy. Va. Code § 18.2-152.2–4. The DNC claims that the Campaign is liable under the Act because it “knowingly aided, abetted, encouraged, induced, instigated, contributed to and assisted” Russia’s violation of these prohibitions. (Am. Compl. ¶ 308.) The Court should dismiss this claim, because (1) the Computer Crimes Act does not authorize aiding-and-abetting liability, and (2) the DNC in all events does not plausibly plead that the Campaign aided and abetted a violation.

1. The Computer Crimes Act does not establish liability for aiders and abettors. “One of the basic principles of statutory construction” in Virginia “is that where a statute creates a right and provides a remedy for the vindication of that right,” “that remedy is exclusive.” Cherrie v. Va. Health Servs., Inc., 787 S.E.2d 855, 858 (Va. 2016). A court has “no authority” to create or expand a remedy where the statute “is silent” about that remedy. Id. This principle means that—in Virginia, as in the federal system—a statute creates a remedy against aiders and abettors only if the legislature “expressly” “used the words ‘aid’ and ‘abet’ in the statutory text.” Cent. Bank of Denver, 511 U.S. at 177. Here, the Computer Crimes Act creates a civil remedy for a “violation of any provision” of the statute—not for the aiding and abetting of a violation of the statute. Va. Code § 18.2-152.12(A). Indeed, the civil-remedy section of the statute nowhere uses the words “aid” and “abet.” Under Virginia’s “basic principles of statutory construction,” a court has “no authority” to create aiding-and-abetting liability that the state legislature refused to create. Cherrie, 787 S.E. 2d at 858.

This point is all the more true because, as a general matter, Virginia courts do not even recognize aiding-and-abetting liability in the context of common-law torts. The Supreme Court of Virginia has not definitively resolved the issue, but the Supreme Court of the United States has observed that the “aiding and abetting tort ... [has] not [been] expressly recognized by the state courts of the Commonwealth of Virginia.” Cent. Bank of Denver, 511 U.S. at 182; see Herold v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 2018 WL 1950641, at *4 (E.D. Va. April 25, 2018) (“Virginia law has not clearly recognized an aiding and abetting cause of action for tortious claims”); L-3 Commc’ns Corp. v. Serco, Inc., 2018 WL 1352093, at *9 (E.D. Va. Mar. 15, 2018) (“Virginia does not recognize an aiding and abetting theory of tort liability”); Bastable v. Muslu, 2008 WL 7339887, at *3 (Va. Cir. Ct. July 8, 2009) (“With respect to ... [the] cause of action of ‘Aiding and Abetting,’ the Court does not believe this is a valid cause of action in the Commonwealth ... [T]here is no modern authority which supports a claim for aiding and abetting a tortious action”). In other words, Virginia courts refuse to impose aiding-and-abetting liability even when exercising their own common-law powers to define the scope of tort actions. It follows, a fortiori, that they would also refuse to impose such liability when interpreting a statute that says nothing about aiding and abetting.

2. In all events, the DNC fails to plausibly plead that the Campaign aided and abetted a violation of the Computer Crimes Act. The provisions on which the DNC relies prohibit acts involved in hacking into another person's computer network: "us[ing]" the network to convert property, "disabl[ing]" computer programs, "[c]aus[ing] [the] computer to malfunction," "alter[ing]" computer data, "[u]s[ing] [the] computer ... to make ... an unauthorized copy," "collect[ing] information" by installing certain kinds of malicious software, and "us[ing] [the] computer" to examine private financial information. Va. Code § 18.2-152.3–4; see Am. Compl. ¶ 304–09. None of the provisions prohibits publishing information that someone else has previously retrieved from a computer.

The DNC's Complaint fails to allege that the Campaign did anything to aid and abet the Russian hack of the DNC's servers. Quite the contrary, the Amended Complaint's factual theory is that Russia began colluding with the Campaign after the hack had occurred and the information in the DNC's servers had been stolen. The DNC thus fails to state a claim against the Campaign under the Computer Crimes Act.

CONCLUSION

The Court should dismiss all claims against the Campaign with prejudice for failure to state a claim.

Subject: Bernie narrative

Wondering if there's a good Bernie narrative for a story, which is that Bernie never ever had his act together, that his campaign was a mess.

Specifically, DWS had to call Bernie directly in order to get the campaign to do things because they'd either ignored or forgotten to something critical.

She had to call Bernie after the data breach to make his staff to

to our concerns. Even then they didn't get back to us, which is why we had to shut off their access in order to get them to finally let us know exactly how they snooped around HFA's data.

Same was true with the standing committee appointments. They never got back to us with their names (HFA and even O'Malley got there's in six weeks earlier) for the committees. So, again, the chair had to call Bernie
personally for his staff to finally get us critical information.
So, they gave us an awful list just a few days before we had to make the announcements.

It's not a DNC conspiracy, it's because they never had their act together.

The Fix

Here are the latest, most damaging things in the DNC's leaked emails

By Aaron Blake July 25, 2016

This post has been updated.

Thousands of leaked emails have sealed the fate of Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz's uneven five-plus-year tenure as DNC chair.

Wasserman Schultz's resignation announcement Sunday afternoon comes as a bad situation just keeps getting worse -- and appears as though it might continue to do so. That's because WikiLeaks has so far released nearly 20,000 emails, new details are still being discovered, and there is still the prospect of additional, damaging emails coming to light.

Many of the most damaging emails suggest the committee was actively trying to undermine Bernie Sanders's presidential campaign. Basically all of these examples came late in the primary -- after Hillary Clinton was clearly headed for victory -- but they belie the national party committee's stated neutrality in the race even at that late stage.

Below is a running list of the most troublesome findings for Wasserman Schultz and her party. As new revelations come out, we'll update it.

1) Targeting Sanders's religion?

On May 5, DNC officials appeared to conspire to raise Sanders's faith as an issue and press on whether he was an atheist -- apparently in hopes of steering religious voters in Kentucky and West Virginia to Clinton. Sanders is Jewish but has previously indicated that he's not religious.

One email from DNC chief financial officer Brad Marshall read: "It might make no difference, but for KY and WVA can we get someone to ask his belief. Does he believe in a God. He had skated on saying he has a Jewish heritage. I think I read he is an atheist. This could make several points difference with my peeps. My Southern Baptist peeps would draw a big difference between a Jew and an atheist."

Marshall added in a later email: "It's these Jesus thing."

In response, CEO Amy Dacey said: "Amen."

2) Wasserman Schultz calls top Sanders aide a "damn liar"...

On May 17, after controversy erupted over the Nevada state Democratic convention and how fair the process was there, Wasserman Schultz herself took exception to Sanders campaign manager Jeff Weaver's defense of his candidate's supporters.

"Damn liar," she wrote. "Particularly scummy that he barely acknowledges the violent and threatening behavior that occurred."

3) ... and says Sanders has "no understanding" of the party

That wasn't the only time Wasserman Schultz offered an unvarnished opinion about the Sanders operation. And in one late-April email, she even questioned Sanders's connection to the party.

"Spoken like someone who has never been a member of the Democratic Party and has no understanding of what we do," she said in response to a Politico story about Sanders saying the party hadn't been fair to him.

Sanders, for what it's worth, wasn't a Democrat before entering the Democratic primary. He caucused with the party but has long been an independent.

In that way, Wasserman Schultz's comments could be read simply as her defending her party; Sanders was attacking the party, after all. But her comment also suggests a particularly dim view of Sanders that she didn't feel the need to obscure in conversations with other DNC staff.

4) A Clinton lawyer gives DNC strategy advice on Sanders

When the Sanders campaign alleged that the Clinton campaign was improperly using its joint fundraising committee with the DNC to benefit itself, Clinton campaign lawyer Marc Elias offered the DNC guidance on how to respond.

"My suggestion is that the DNC put out a statement saying that the accusations the Sanders campaign are not true," Elias said May 3 in response to an email about the issue sent by communications director Luis Miranda to other DNC staff that copied Elias and another lawyer at his firm, Perkins Coie.

Elias continued: "The fact that CNN notes that you aren't getting between the two campaigns is the problem. Here, Sanders is attacking the DNC and its current practice, its past practice with the POTUS and with Sec Kerry. Just as the RNC pushes back directly on Trump over 'rigged system', the DNC should push back DIRECTLY at Sanders and say that what he is saying is false and harmful the the Democratic party."

Elias's guidance isn't perhaps all that shocking; he's Clinton's lawyer, after all. But the fact that he was talking to the DNC about how to respond would appear to suggest coordination between the DNC and Clinton campaign against Sanders in this particular case.

5) Plotting a narrative about how Sanders's campaign failed

On May 21, DNC national press secretary Mark Pautenbach suggested pushing a narrative that Sanders "never ever had his act together, that his campaign was a mess."

After detailing several arguments that could be made to push that narrative, Paustenbach concludes: "It's not a DNC conspiracy, it's because they never had their act together."

Paustenbach's suggestion, in that way, could be read as a defense of the committee rather than pushing negative information about Sanders. But this is still the committee pushing negative information about one of its candidates.

6) Mocking Sanders for his California debate push

One of the chief complaints from Sanders and his supporters was a lack of debates. They said the fact that there were so few was intended to help Clinton by reducing her opponents' exposure and their chances to knock her down.

After the Sanders campaign presumptuously declared that an agreement for an additional debate in California had been reached, Miranda responded to the Sanders campaign's release on May 18 simply:

"lol"

As noted, the release from the Sanders campaign was presumptuous in declaring that an agreement had been reached. Miranda could simply have been responding to the somewhat-silly tactic. But the debate never actually happened, as the Clinton campaign later opted not to participate.

7) Wishing Sanders would just end it

Many of these emails came as it was clear Clinton was going to win -- which makes the apparent favoritism perhaps less offensive (though Sanders supporters would certainly disagree).

But it's also clear that there was plenty of cheerleading for the race to simply be over -- for Sanders to throw in the towel so that Clinton could be named the presumptive nominee. The party, of course, was still supposed to be neutral even though the odds and delegate deficit for Sanders looked insurmountable.

On May 1, in response to Sanders again saying he would push for a contested convention, Wasserman Schultz said, "So much for a traditional presumptive nominee."

8) Calling an alleged Sanders sympathizer a "Bernie bro"

The term "Bernie bro" -- or "Berniebro," depending on your style -- over the course of the campaign became a kind of shorthand for the worst kind of Sanders supporter. These were the supporters who couldn't be reasoned with and verbally assaulted opponents, sometimes in very nasty ways.

Some in the DNC apparently used the pejorative to refer to one particular radio host seen as overly sympathetic to Sanders, Sirius XM's Mark Thompson.

"Wait, this is a s--- topic," Miranda wrote on May 4 after Thompson's program director, David Guggenheim, requested an interview on a Clinton fundraising controversy. "Where is Guggenheim? Is he a Bernie Bro?"

"Must be a Bernie Bro," DNC broadcast booker Pablo Manriquez responds. "Per Mark's sage, I turned him down flat (and politely) and inquired into opportunities next week to talk about something else."

9) Criticizing Obama for lack of fundraising help -- "That's f---ing stupid"

While the Sanders emails have gained the most attention, some of the more interesting emails involve a peek behind to curtain of how party officials talk about fundraising and major donors -- and even President Obama.

In one email on May 9, DNC mid-Atlantic and PAC finance director Alexandra Shapiro noted that Obama wouldn't travel 20 minutes to help the party secure $350,000 in donations.

"He really won't go up 20 minutes for $350k?" Shapiro wrote. "THAT'S f---ing stupid."

DNC national finance director Jordan Kaplan responded: "or he is the president of the united states with a pretty big day job."

10) Flippant chatter about donors

In a May 16 exchange about where to seat a top Florida donor, Kaplan declared that "he doesn't sit next to POTUS!" -- referring to Obama.

"Bittel will be sitting in the sh---iest corner I can find," responded Shapiro. She also referred to other donors as "clowns."

Here are some other things Kaplan and Shapiro said about donors, via Karen Tumulty and Tom Hamburger:

Kaplan directed Shapiro to put New York philanthropist Philip Munger in the prime spot, switching out Maryland ophthalmologist Sreedhar Potarazu. He noted that Munger was one of the largest donors to Organizing for America, a nonprofit that advocates for Obama's policies. "It would be nice to take care of him from the DNC side," Kaplan wrote.

Shapiro pushed back, noting that Munger had given only $100,600 to the party, while the Potarazu family had contributed $332,250.

In one email attachment from Erik Stowe, the finance director for Northern California, to Tammy Paster, a fundraising consultant, he lists the benefits given to different tiers of donors to the Democratic National Convention, which starts next week in Philadelphia. The tiers range from a direct donation of $66,800 to one of $467,600 to the DNC. The documents also show party officials discussing how to reward people who bundle between $250,000 to $1.25 million.

Correction: This post initially referred to Guggenheim as the host of a Sirius XM show. He is program director for Sirius XM host Mark Thompson.

CNN Parts Ways With Donna Brazile, a Hillary Clinton Supporter

By Michael M. Grynbaum

Oct. 31, 2016

CNN has severed ties with the Democratic strategist Donna Brazile, after hacked emails from WikiLeaks showed that she shared questions for CNN-sponsored candidate events in advance with friends on Hillary Clinton's campaign.

Ms. Brazile, a veteran political analyst for the network, was already on leave from CNN since becoming interim chairwoman of the Democratic National Committee. On Monday, CNN said it had accepted her formal resignation on Oct. 14.

"We are completely uncomfortable with what we have learned about her interactions with the Clinton campaign while she was a CNN contributor," Lauren Pratapas, a network spokeswoman, said in a statement.

"CNN never gave Brazile access to any questions, prep material, attendee list, background information or meetings in advance of a town hall or debate," Ms. Pratapas wrote.

The announcement followed the release of new emails on Monday that included a message from Ms. Brazile on the day before a CNN-sponsored Democratic primary debate in Flint, Mich., in March. Her subject line: "One of the questions directed to HRC tomorrow is from a woman with a rash."

"Her family has lead poison and she will ask what, if anything, will Hillary do as president to help the ppl of Flint," Ms. Brazile wrote to John D. Podesta, the Clinton campaign chairman, and Jennifer Palmieri, the candidate's communications director.

At the debate the next night, two women asked similar questions of Mrs. Clinton and her opponent, Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont.

The episode has cast a harsh spotlight on the cable news practice of paying partisan political operatives to appear as on-air commentators. Like Ms. Brazile, these guests can offer a plugged-in viewpoint on the day's events, but they often also parrot campaign talking points and, as in this case, create potential ethical conflicts.

CNN has already faced criticism over its hiring of Corey Lewandowski, Donald J. Trump's former campaign manager, as a paid contributor, even as he remains an informal adviser to the candidate.

Ms. Brazile's infraction, however, may be more damaging. Her sharing of questions with a candidate would seem to undercut the impartiality of the event and, as a CNN contributor, potentially reflect poorly on the network, which received big ratings, and thus profits, from primary debates and town halls.

In an interview on Monday, Ms. Brazile said she offered her resignation to CNN when emails surfaced earlier in October that showed her telling Ms. Palmieri: "From time to time I get the questions in advance."

"I didn't want CNN to get involved in this WikiLeaks controversy," Ms. Brazile said by telephone. "I didn't want to put CNN in the middle of what has been a real invasive cyberintrusion."

Ms. Brazile, who said she has changed her mobile phone number twice because of harassment related to the leaked emails, said CNN "never, never" shared advance questions with her ahead of debates or town hall-style events.

Asked to explain her emails with the Clinton campaign, she said she "seeks as much information as I can possibly get" ahead of a televised program, in part to prepare for her own on-air responses.

"I often talk to everybody before an event," she said. "I try to learn as much as I can, share as much as I can."

But Ms. Brazile declined to elaborate on the exchanges in question, saying: "I am not going to verify, deny, confirm or even try to make sense out of stolen emails that were hacked."

Her departure from CNN quickly became fodder on the campaign trail. Mr. Trump, at a rally in Grand Rapids, Mich., on Monday, seized on Ms. Brazile's messages to attack Mrs. Clinton and press his case that the news media is biased against him.

"Speaking of draining the swamp, Donna Brazile did it again," he said. "WikiLeaks today, she gave the questions to a debate to Hillary Clinton. And that was from a couple of weeks ago. Happened again, but this time far worse. She gave the questions to a debate to Hillary Clinton."

If Mrs. Clinton received questions in advance from Ms. Brazile, Mr. Trump asked, "why didn't she report it?"

The Clinton campaign has declined to verify the authenticity of the emails.

Ms. Brazile's discussions with the Clinton campaign first raised concerns earlier in October when emails released by WikiLeaks showed she had contacted Ms. Palmieri to share a question about the death penalty. Ms. Brazile said the question would be asked at a coming CNN town hall.

In the Monday interview, Ms. Brazile said her experience over the last few weeks had been "very invasive."

“It’s like you get hit three times,” Ms. Brazile said. “You get hit with the hack, with the fact that your information has been stolen, and then you get hit with trying to make sense of the nonsense.”

In Hacked D.N.C. Emails, a Glimpse of How Big Money Works

By NICHOLAS CONFESSORE and STEVE EDER JULY 25, 2016

Last October, a leading Democratic donor named Shefali Razdan Duggal emailed a sweetly worded but insistent list of demands to a staff member at the Democratic National Committee.

Ms. Duggal wanted a reminder of how much she had raised for President Obama and the Democrats (the answer: $679,650) and whether it qualified her for the premium package of hotel rooms and V.I.P. invitations at the party's convention in Philadelphia. She asked whether she could have an extra ticket to Vice President Joseph R. Biden's holiday party, so she could bring her children. But most on her mind, it seemed, was getting access to an exclusive November gathering at the White House.

"Not assuming I am invited...just mentioning/asking, if in case, I am invited :)," wrote Ms. Duggal, who was appointed by Mr. Obama to oversee the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and is married to a San Francisco financial executive. "Might you have an intel?"

Ms. Duggal's note was among 19,000 internal Democratic Party emails released on Friday by WikiLeaks, setting off a frenzy on the eve of the party's quadrennial nominating convention and forcing the resignation of the party chairwoman, Debbie Wasserman Schultz. Some of the emails revealed internal discussion by committee officials — obligated under party rules to remain neutral in the presidential primary — about how to discredit Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, enraging some of his supporters.

But the leaked cache also included thousands of emails exchanged by Democratic officials and party fund-raisers, revealing in rarely seen detail the elaborate, ingratiating and often bluntly transactional exchanges necessary to harvest hundreds of millions of dollars from the party's wealthy donor class.

The emails capture a world where seating charts are arranged with dollar totals in mind, where a White House celebration of gay pride is a thinly disguised occasion for rewarding wealthy donors and where physical proximity to the president is the most precious of currencies.

In a statement, Amy Dacey, the chief executive of the Democratic committee, said the party had “engaged a record number of people in the political process” and “adhered to the highest of standards.”

The emails reflect the struggles of midlevel staff members in a demanding environment, seeking to bring in money at a steady clip while balancing demands from donors and party officials.

Some messages suggest efforts by donors to gain access to prominent Democratic officials on behalf of clients. In May, Lester Coney, an executive at a Chicago-based financial services firm, emailed a party finance staff member seeking a contact with “clout within the administration.” Mr. Coney appeared to be referring to Gov. Mark Dayton, the governor of Minnesota.

“I have a very importance client/friend needed access with someone within the administration,” Mr. Coney wrote. “So I promise him I would investigate.”

The staff member appeared worried about the request, writing “No idea what to tell him here,” to the party's national finance director, Jordan Kaplan, an Obama campaign veteran with deep ties to Midwestern donors.

“I told him to call rt,” Mr. Kaplan replied, referring to R.T. Rybak, a Democratic committee vice-chairman and former mayor of Minneapolis.

Mr. Rybak, in response to questions from The New York Times on Sunday, said he never heard from Mr. Coney.

“I have no idea what this person wanted but the request was never made to me,” Mr. Rybak wrote in an email. “If it had been, I would not have made such a call.” Mr. Coney told The Times that he did not end up speaking to anyone in Minnesota about the query, which he said had been routine. He said he had sought the contact for a friend’s client, whom he declined to name.

The leaked emails span the period from January 2015 to late May of this year, during which Mr. Obama was the party’s chief fund-raising draw but the Democratic National Committee was beginning to raise money jointly with the party’s presumed future nominee, Mrs. Clinton. Many revolve around donors’ efforts to qualify for top packages at the convention that begins Monday in Philadelphia. Donors who raise $1.25 million for the party — or who give $467,000 — are entitled to priority booking in a top hotel, nightly access to V.I.P. lounges and an “exclusive roundtable and campaign briefing with high-level Democratic officials,” according to a promotional brochure obtained by The Times.

For some donors, Mr. Obama’s personal presence was most important. In an exchange in May, committee finance staff members debated how to preserve a $350,000 fund-raiser to be hosted by Carol Goldberg, an artist, and her husband, Hank Goldberg, a real estate executive. The Goldbergs had been eager to host Mr. Obama at their home, in Chevy Chase, Md. But after White House officials concluded that the extra drive was not a good use of Mr. Obama’s time, aides discussed proposing to the family that they could instead host with other donors an event at the Jefferson Hotel, a luxury establishment near the White House.

Another staff member, given the task of letting the Goldbergs down, knew they would be disappointed. “I think the excitement of hosting at home was a big factor,” he wrote. The Goldbergs pulled out of the fund-raiser.

In some cases, the party offered donors the chance to join “roundtables” — meetings for major givers disguised as high-minded discussions of national economic and social policy, where wealthy givers are treated as savants and sages.

“Wonderful event yesterday,” Robert Pietrzak, a New York lawyer and top Obama fund-raiser, wrote to a committee fund-raiser after he participated in an event with Mr. Obama in May. “A lot of foreign policy, starting with my question on China. The President was in great form.”

As is common in national politics, Democratic staff members kept detailed track of every dollar contributed by targeted donors, aiming to get each of the wealthiest givers to “max out,” or contribute the maximum legal amount to each party account. The biggest national donors were the subject of entire dossiers, as fund-raisers tried to gauge their interests, annoyances and passions.

“Jon has an off and on again relationship with the DNC. He does not like DWS and feels we don’t invite him to enough things,” read one memo, about Jon Stryker, a prominent gay donor and heir to a medical supply fortune, referring to the committee’s chairwoman, Ms. Wasserman Schultz.

Few details of fund-raising events were too small to escape notice. Reviewing one seating chart, staff members debated whether to seat Philip Munger, the son of the Berkshire Hathaway billionaire Charles Munger Sr., next to Mr. Obama at a May round table. Mr. Munger was the largest donor to Mr. Obama’s political group, Organizing for Action, and a huge potential source of money for the committee.

The alternative was Sreedhar Potarazu, a Maryland ophthalmologist whose family members were already major Democratic donors, and who appears to have alienated some within the committee for his persistence. In his push to meet with Mr. Obama, Mr. Potarazu had apparently shared with party officials the story of his battle with cancer, a tactic that some of them viewed as crass.

“The Potarazu family has written $332,250 to us since ’13. Munger has written $100,600 (and that’s only if you reach back to 2008),” wrote a committee official in charge of mid-Atlantic fund-raising. “I don’t understand why we’d be rewarding someone for giving to OFA over us. I also don’t understand why everyone seems to hate Sreedhar so much.”

Mr. Kaplan was firm. “Phil Munger is one of the largest democratic donors in the country,” he said. “He is looking to give his money in new places and I would like that to be to us.”

Though some of the leaked emails are highly critical of Mr. Sanders, others show the party’s fund-raisers seeking to avoid any appearance that Mr. Obama was favoring Mrs. Clinton. When the party invited John A. Braun, a Virginia-based defense contractor, to what was billed as a discussion with Mr. Obama on economic issues in May, Mr. Braun informed the Democratic committee that he had already written a large check to the party through a fund-raiser held jointly with Mrs. Clinton.

“Could I try to strike a deal with him and push for $20k or $15k so he feels like he’s getting a discount for his past support?” a staff member wrote to Mr. Kaplan. “I’ll pitch him on doing a second max out to get the main line package. I just don’t know him and am worried about striking out if he won’t do the full.”

Party officials ultimately concluded that Mr. Braun would first have to give or raise additional money for the party, to avoid the appearance that Mr. Obama’s events were helping raise money for Mrs. Clinton. As they looked to maximize opportunities to bring in money, the party’s fund-raisers also grappled with delicate personal considerations among the Obama family, who were unenthusiastic about the demands of wooing donors.

There was, however, one potential way to interest Mr. Obama in donor maintenance. In May, Mr. Kaplan emailed each of his regional fund-raising directors with a request: Send the names of donors who would be good golf partners for the president. Mr. Obama, it seemed, was looking to hit the links on his upcoming trips.

“Laugh as you may at this because I did — but if you had to pick people from your regions to play golf with POTUS, who would they be?” Mr. Kaplan wrote.

Team, Attached are the flags from HRC's paid speeches we have from HWA. I put some highlights below. There is a lot of policy positions that we should give an extra scrub with Policy. In terms of what was opened to the press and what was not, the Washington Examiner got a hold of one of the private speech contracts (her speeches to universities were typically open press), so this is worth a read

CLINTON ADMITS SHE IS OUT OF TOUCH *Hillary Clinton:

"I'm Kind Of Far
Removed" From The Struggles Of The Middle Class "Because The Life I've Lived And
The Economic, You Know, Fortunes That My Husband And I Now Enjoy." * "And I am not taking a position on any policy, but I do think there is a growing sense of anxiety and even anger in the country over the feeling that the game is rigged.
And I never had that feeling when I was growing up. Never.
I mean, were there really rich people, of course there were. My father loved to complain about big business and big government, but we had a solid middle class upbringing. We had good public schools. We had accessible health care. We had our little, you know, one-family house that, you know, he saved up his money, didn't believe in mortgages. So I lived that. And now, obviously, I'm kind of far removed because the life I've lived and the economic, you know, fortunes that my husband and I now enjoy, but I haven't forgotten it." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Goldman-Black Rock, 2/4/14] CLINTON SAYS YOU NEED TO HAVE A PRIVATE AND PUBLIC POSITION ON POLICY *Clinton: "But If Everybody's Watching, You Know, All Of The Back Room Discussions And The Deals, You Know, Then People

Get A Little Nervous,
To Say The Least. So, You Need Both A Public And A Private Position."* CLINTON:
You just have to sort of figure out how to -- getting back to that word,
"balance" -- how to balance the public and the private efforts that are necessary to be successful, politically, and that's not just a comment about today. That, I think, has probably been true for all of our history, and if you saw the Spielberg movie, Lincoln, and how he was maneuvering and working to get the 13th Amendment passed, and he called one of my favorite predecessors, Secretary Seward, who had been the governor and senator from New York, ran against Lincoln for president, and he told Seward, I need your help to get this done. And Seward called some of his lobbyist friends who knew how to make a deal, and they just kept going at it. I mean, politics is like sausage being made. It is unsavory, and it always has been that way, but we usually end up where we need to be. But if everybody's watching, you know, all of the back room discussions and the deals, you know, then people get a little nervous, to say the least. So, you need both a public and a private position. And finally, I think -- I believe in evidence-based decision making. I want to know what the facts are. I mean, it's like when you guys go into some kind of a deal, you know, are you going to do that development or not, are you going to do that renovation or not, you know, you look at the numbers. You try to figure out what's going to work and what's not going to work.

[Clinton Speech For National Multi-Housing Council, 4/24/13] CLINTON TALKS ABOUT HOLDING WALL STREET ACCOUNTABLE ONLY FOR POLITICAL REASONS Clinton Said That The Blame Placed On The United States Banking System For The Crisis "Could Have Been Avoided In Terms Of Both Misunderstanding And Really Politicizing What Happened." "That was one of the reasons that I started traveling in February of '09, so people could, you know, literally yell at me for the United States and our banking system causing this everywhere. Now, that's an oversimplification we know, but it was the conventional wisdom. And I think that there's a lot that could have been avoided in terms of both misunderstanding and really politicizing what happened with greater transparency, with greater openness on all sides, you know, what happened, how did it happen, how do we prevent it from happening? You guys help us figure it out and let's make sure that we do it right this time. And I think that everybody was desperately trying to fend off the worst effects institutionally, governmentally, and there just wasn't that opportunity to try to sort this out, and that came later." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13] *Clinton: "Even If It May Not Be 100 Percent True, If The Perception Is That Somehow The Game Is Rigged, That Should Be A Problem For All Of Us." *"Now, it's important to recognize the vital role that the financial markets play in our economy and that so many of you are contributing to. To function effectively those markets and the men and women who shape them have to command trust and confidence, because we all rely on the market's transparency and integrity. So even if it may not be 100 percent true, if the perception is that somehow the game is rigged, that should be a problem for all of us, and we have to be willing to make that absolutely clear. And if there are issues, if there's wrongdoing, people have to be held accountable and we have to try to deter future bad behavior, because the public trust is at the core of both a free market economy and a democracy." [Clinton Remarks to Deutsche Bank, 10/7/14] CLINTON SUGGESTS WALL STREET INSIDERS ARE WHAT IS NEEDED TO FIX WALL STREET *Clinton Said Financial Reform "Really Has To Come From The Industry Itself." *"Remember what Teddy Roosevelt did. Yes, he took on what he saw as the excesses in the economy, but he also stood against the excesses in politics. He didn't want to unleash a lot of nationalist, populist reaction. He wanted to try to figure out how to get back into that balance that has served America so well over our entire nationhood. Today, there's more that can and should be done that really has to come from the industry itself, and how we can strengthen our economy, create more jobs at a time where that's increasingly challenging, to get back to Teddy Roosevelt's square deal. And I really believe that our country and all of you are up to that job." [Clinton Remarks to Deutsche Bank, 10/7/14] *Speaking About The Importance Of Proper Regulation, Clinton Said "The People

That Know The Industry
Better Than Anybody Are The People Who Work In The Industry."* "I mean, it's still happening, as you know. People are looking back and trying to, you know, get compensation for bad mortgages and all the rest of it in some of the agreements that are being reached. There's nothing magic about regulations, too much is bad, too little is bad. How do you get to the golden key, how do we figure out what works? And the people that know the industry better than anybody are the people who work in the industry. And I think there has to be a recognition that, you know, there's so much at stake now, I mean, the business has changed so much and decisions are made so quickly, in nano seconds basically. We spend trillions of dollars to travel around the world, but it's in everybody's interest that we have a better framework, and not just for the United States but for the entire world, in which to operate and trade."

[Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13] CLINTON ADMITS NEEDING WALL STREET FUNDING *Clinton Said That Because Candidates Needed Money
From Wall Street To Run For Office, People In New York

Needed To Ask Tough

Questions About The Economy Before Handing Over Campaign Contributions.

*"Secondly, running for office in our country takes a lot of money, and candidates have to go out and raise it. New York is probably the leading site for contributions for fundraising for candidates on both sides of the aisle, and it's also our economic center. And there are a lot of people here who should ask some tough questions before handing over campaign contributions to people who were really playing chicken with our whole economy." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13] *Clinton: "It Would Be Very Difficult To Run For President Without Raising A Huge Amount Of Money And

Without Having Other People Supporting You Because Your Opponent Will Have Their

Supporters."* "So our system is, in many ways, more difficult, certainly far more expensive and much longer than a parliamentary system, and I really admire the people who subject themselves to it. Even when I, you know, think they should not be elected president, I still think, well, you know, good for you I guess, you're out there promoting democracy and those crazy ideas of yours. So I think that it's something -- I would like -- you know, obviously as somebody who has been through it, I would like it not to last as long because I think it's very distracting from what we should be doing every day in our public business. I would like it not to be so expensive. I have no idea how you do that. I mean, in my campaign -- I lose track, but I think I raised $250 million or some such enormous amount, and in the last campaign President Obama raised 1.1 billion, and that was before the Super PACs and all of this other money just rushing in, and it's so ridiculous that we have this kind of free for all with all of this financial interest at stake, but, you know, the Supreme Court said that's basically what we're in for. So we're kind of in the wild west, and, you know, it would be very difficult to run for president without raising a huge amount of money and without having other people supporting you because your opponent will have their supporters. So I think as hard as it was when I ran, I think it's even harder now." [Clinton Speech For General Electric's Global Leadership Meeting - Boca Raton, FL, 1/6/14] *CLINTON

TOUTS HER RELATIONSHIP TO WALL STREET AS A SENATOR* *Clinton: As Senator, "I Represented And Worked With"
So Many On Wall Street And "Did All I Could To Make Sure They Continued To Prosper" But Still Called For Closing Carried Interest Loophole. *In remarks at Robbins, Gellar, Rudman & Dowd in San Diego, Hillary Clinton said, "When I was a Senator from New York, I represented and worked with so many talented principled people who made their living in finance. But even thought I represented them and did all I could to make sure they continued to prosper, I called for closing the carried interest loophole and addressing skyrocketing CEO pay. I also was calling in '06, '07 for doing something about the mortgage crisis, because I saw every day from Wall Street literally to main streets across New York how a well-functioning financial system is essential. So when I raised early warnings about early warnings about subprime mortgages and called for regulating derivatives and over complex financial products, I didn't get some big arguments, because people sort of said, no, that makes sense. But boy, have we had fights about it ever since." [Hillary

Clinton's Remarks at Robbins

Geller Rudman & Dowd in San Diego, 9/04/14] *Clinton On

Wall Street: "I Had

Great Relations And Worked So Close Together After 9/11 To Rebuild Downtown, And

A Lot Of Respect For The Work You Do And The People Who Do It." *"Now, without going over how we got to where we are right now, what would be your advice to the Wall Street community and the big banks as to the way forward with those two important decisions? SECRETARY CLINTON: Well, I represented all of you for eight years. I had great relations and worked so close together after 9/11 to rebuild downtown, and a lot of respect for the work you do and the people who do it, but I do -- I think that when we talk about the regulators and the politicians, the economic consequences of bad decisions back in '08, you know, were devastating, and they had repercussions throughout the world." [Goldman

Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13]

CLINTON TALKS ABOUT THE CHALLENGES RUNNING FOR OFFICE *Hillary Clinton Said There Was "A Bias Against

People Who Have Led Successful And/Or Complicated Lives," Citing The Need To

Divest Of Assets, Positions, And Stocks.* "SECRETARY

CLINTON: Yeah. Well, you know what Bob Rubin said about that. He said, you know, when he came to Washington, he had a fortune. And when he left Washington, he had a small --
MR. BLANKFEIN: That's how you have a small fortune, is you go to Washington. SECRETARY CLINTON: You go to Washington.
Right. But,
you know, part of the problem with the political situation, too, is that there is such a bias against people who have led successful and/or complicated lives.
You know, the divestment of assets, the stripping of all kinds of positions, the sale of stocks. It just becomes very onerous and unnecessary." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13] CLINTON SUGGESTS SHE IS A MODERATE
*Clinton Said That Both The Democratic And Republican Parties Should Be
"Moderate." *URSULA BURNS: Interesting. Democrats?
SECRETARY CLINTON: Oh,
long, definitely. URSULA BURNS: Republicans? SECRETARY CLINTON: Unfortunately, at the time, short. URSULA BURNS: Okay. We'll go back to questions. SECRETARY CLINTON: We need two parties. URSULA BURNS: Yeah, we do need two parties.
SECRETARY CLINTON: Two sensible, moderate, pragmatic parties." [Hillary Clinton Remarks, Remarks at Xerox, 3/18/14] Clinton: "Simpson-Bowles... Put Forth The Right Framework. Namely, We Have To Restrain Spending, We Have To Have Adequate Revenues, And We Have To Incentivize Growth. It's A Three-Part Formula... And They Reached An Agreement. But What Is Very Hard To Do Is To Then Take That Agreement If You Don't Believe That You're Going To Be Able To Move The Other Side."

SECRETARY CLINTON: Well, this may be borne more out of hope than experience in the last few years. But Simpson-Bowles -- and I know you heard from Erskine earlier today -- put forth the right framework. Namely, we have to restrain spending, we have to have adequate revenues, and we have to incentivize growth. It's a three-part formula. The specifics can be negotiated depending upon whether we're acting in good faith or not. And what Senator Simpson and Erskine did was to bring Republicans and Democrats alike to the table, and you had the full range of ideological views from I think Tom Coburn to Dick Durbin. And they reached an agreement. But what is very hard to do is to then take that agreement if you don't believe that you're going to be able to move the other side. And where we are now is in this gridlocked dysfunction. So you've got Democrats saying that, you know, you have to have more revenues; that's the sine qua non of any kind of agreement. You have Republicans saying no, no, no on revenues; you have to cut much more deeply into spending. Well, looks what's happened. We are slowly returning to growth. It's not as much or as fast as many of us would like to see, but, you know, we're certainly better off than our European friends, and we're beginning to, I believe, kind of come out of the long aftermath of the '08 crisis. [Clinton Speech For Morgan Stanley, 4/18/13]

Clinton: "The Simpson-Bowles Framework And The Big Elements Of It Were Right... You Have To Restrain Spending, You Have To Have Adequate Revenues, And You Have To Have Growth." CLINTON: So, you know, the Simpson-Bowles framework and the big elements of it were right. The specifics can be negotiated and argued over. But you got to do all three. You have to restrain spending, you have to have adequate revenues, and you have to have growth. And I think we are smart enough to figure out how to do that. [Clinton Speech For Morgan

Stanley, 4/18/13]

*CLINTON IS AWARE OF SECURITY CONCERNS AROUND

BLACKBERRIES* *Clinton: "At The

State Department We Were Attacked Every Hour, More Than

Once An Hour By Incoming

Efforts To Penetrate Everything We Had. And That Was True

Across The U.S.

Government."* CLINTON: But, at the State Department we were attacked every hour,

more than once an hour by incoming efforts to penetrate everything we had. And that was true across the U.S. government. And we knew it was going on when I would go to China, or I would go to Russia, we would leave all of our electronic equipment on the plane, with the batteries out, because this is a new frontier.

And they're trying to find out not just about what we do in our government.

They're trying to find out about what a lot of companies do and they were going after the personal emails of people who worked in the State Department. So it's not like the only government in the world that is doing anything is the United States. But, the United States compared to a number of our competitors is the only government in the world with any kind of safeguards, any kind of checks and balances. They may in many respects need to be strengthened and people need to be reassured, and they need to have their protections embodied in law. But, I think turning over a lot of that material intentionally or unintentionally, because of the way it can be drained, gave all kinds of information not only to big countries, but to networks and terrorist groups, and the like. So I have a hard time thinking that somebody who is a champion of privacy and liberty has taken refuge in Russia under Putin's authority. And then he calls into a Putin talk show and says, President Putin, do you spy on people? And President Putin says, well, from one intelligence professional to another, of course not. Oh, thank you so much. I mean, really, I don't know. I have a hard time following it. [Clinton Speech At UConn, 4/23/14] *Hillary Clinton: "When I Got To The State Department, It Was Still Against The Rules To Let Most -- Or Let All Foreign Service Officers Have Access To A Blackberry." *"I mean, let's face it, our government is woefully, woefully behind in all of its policies that affect the use of technology. When I got to the State Department, it was still against the rules to let most -- or let all Foreign Service Officers have access to a Blackberry. You couldn't have desktop computers when Colin Powell was there.

Everything that you are taking advantage of, inventing and using, is still a generation or two behind when it comes to our government." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Nexenta, 8/28/14] *Hillary Clinton: "We Couldn't Take Our Computers, We Couldn't Take Our Personal Devices" Off The Plane In China And Russia. *"

"I mean, probably the most frustrating part of this whole debate are countries acting like we're the only people in the world trying to figure out what's going on. I mean, every time I went to countries like China or Russia, I mean, we couldn't take our computers, we couldn't take our personal devices, we couldn't take anything off the plane because they're so good, they would penetrate them in a minute, less, a nanosecond. So we would take the batteries out, we'd leave them on the plane." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Nexenta, 8/28/14]

Clinton Said When She Got To State, Employees "Were Not Mostly Permitted To Have Handheld Devices." "You know, when Colin Powell showed up as Secretary of State in 2001, most State Department employees still didn't even have computers on their desks. When I got there they were not mostly permitted to have handheld devices. I mean, so you're thinking how do we operate in this new environment dominated by technology, globalizing forces? We have to change, and I can't expect people to change if I don't try to model it and lead it."

[Clinton Speech For General Electric's Global Leadership Meeting - Boca Raton, FL, 1/6/14] *Hillary Clinton Said You Know You Can't Bring Your Phone And Computer When Traveling To China And Russia And She Had To Take Her Batteries Out And Put them In A Special Box. *"And anybody who has ever traveled in other countries, some of which shall remain nameless, except for Russia and China, you know that you can't bring your phones and your computers. And if you do, good luck. I mean, we would not only take the batteries out, we would leave the batteries and the devices on the plane in special boxes. Now, we didn't do that because we thought it would be fun to tell somebody about. We did it because we knew that we were all targets and that we would be totally vulnerable. So it's not only what others do to us and what we do to them and

how many people are involved in it. It's what's the purpose of it, what is being collected, and how can it be used. And there are clearly people in this room who know a lot about this, and some of you could be very useful contributors to that conversation because you're sophisticated enough to know that it's not just, do it, don't do it. We have to have a way of doing it, and then we have to have a way of analyzing it, and then we have to have a way of sharing it." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13] *Hillary Clinton Lamented How Far Behind The State Department Was In Technology, Saying "People Were Not Even Allowed To Use Mobile Devices Because Of Security Issues." *"Personally, having, you know, lived and worked in the White House, having been a senator, having been Secretary of State, there has traditionally been a great pool of very talented, hard-working people. And just as I was saying about the credit market, our personnel policies haven't kept up with the changes necessary in government. We have a lot of difficulties in getting-when I got to the State Department, we were so far behind in technology, it was embarrassing. And, you know, people were not even allowed to use mobile devices because of security issues and cost issues, and we really had to try to push into the last part of the 20th Century in order to get people functioning in 2009 and '10." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13] CLINTON REMARKS ARE PRO KEYSTONE AND PRO TRADE *Clinton: "So I Think That Keystone Is A Contentious Issue, And Of Course It Is Important On Both Sides Of The Border For Different And Sometimes Opposing Reasons..." *"So I think that Keystone is a contentious issue, and of course it is important on both sides of the border for different and sometimes opposing reasons, but that is not our relationship. And I think our relationship will get deeper and stronger and put us in a position to really be global leaders in energy and climate change if we worked more closely together. And that's what I would like to see us do." [Remarks at tinePublic, 6/18/14] *Hillary Clinton Said Her Dream Is A Hemispheric Common Market, With Open Trade And Open Markets. *"My dream is a hemispheric common market, with open trade and open borders, some time in the future with energy that is as green and sustainable as we can get it, powering growth and opportunity for every person in the hemisphere." [05162013 Remarks to Banco Itau.doc, p. 28]

*Hillary Clinton Said We Have To Have A Concerted Plan To Increase Trade; We Have To Resist Protectionism And Other Kinds Of Barriers To Trade. *"Secondly, I think we have to have a concerted plan to increase trade already under the current circumstances, you know, that Inter-American Development Bank figure is pretty surprising. There is so much more we can do, there is a lot of low hanging fruit but businesses on both sides have to make it a priority and it's not for governments to do but governments can either make it easy or make it hard and we have to resist, protectionism, other kinds of barriers to market access and to trade and I would like to see this get much more attention and be not just a policy for a year under president X or president Y but a consistent one." [05162013 Remarks to Banco Itau.doc, p. 32] CLINTON IS MORE FAVORABLE TO CANADIAN HEALTH CARE AND SINGLE PAYER *Clinton Said Single-Payer Health Care Systems "Can Get Costs Down," And "Is As Good Or Better On

Primary Care," But

"They Do Impose Things Like Waiting Times." *"If you look at countries that are comparable, like Switzerland or Germany, for example, they have mixed systems. They don't have just a single-payer system, but they have very clear controls over budgeting and accountability. If you look at the single-payer systems, like Scandinavia, Canada, and elsewhere, they can get costs down because, you know, although their care, according to statistics, overall is as good or better on primary care, in particular, they do impose things like waiting times, you know. It takes longer to get like a hip replacement than it might take here."

[Hillary Clinton remarks to ECGR Grand Rapids, 6/17/13]

Clinton Cited President Johnson's Success In Establishing Medicare And Medicaid And Said She Wanted To See The U.S. Have Universal Health Care Like In Canada.

"You know, on healthcare we are the prisoner of our past. The way we got to develop any kind of medical insurance program was during World War II when companies facing shortages of workers began to offer healthcare benefits as an inducement for employment. So from the early 1940s healthcare was seen as a privilege connected to employment. And after the war when soldiers came back and went back into the market there was a lot of competition, because the economy was so heated up. So that model continued. And then of course our large labor unions bargained for healthcare with the employers that their members worked for. So from the early 1940s until the early 1960s we did not have any Medicare, or our program for the poor called Medicaid until President Johnson was able to get both passed in 1965. So the employer model continued as the primary means by which working people got health insurance. People over 65 were eligible for Medicare. Medicaid, which was a partnership, a funding partnership between the federal government and state governments, provided some, but by no means all poor people with access to healthcare. So what we've been struggling with certainly Harry Truman, then Johnson was successful on Medicare and Medicaid, but didn't touch the employer based system, then actually Richard Nixon made a proposal that didn't go anywhere, but was quite far reaching. Then with my husband's administration we worked very hard to come up with a system, but we were very much constricted by the political realities that if you had your insurance from your employer you were reluctant to try anything else. And so we were trying to build a universal system around the employer-based system. And indeed now with President Obama's legislative success in getting the Affordable Care Act passed that is what we've done. We still have primarily an employer-based system, but we now have people able to get subsidized insurance. So we have health insurance companies playing a major role in the provision of healthcare, both to the employed whose employers provide health insurance, and to those who are working but on their own are not able to afford it and their employers either don't provide it, or don't provide it at an affordable price. We are still struggling. We've made a lot of progress. Ten million Americans now have insurance who didn't have it before the Affordable Care Act, and that is a great step forward. (Applause.) And what we're going to have to continue to do is monitor what the costs are and watch closely to see whether employers drop more people from insurance so that they go into what we call the health exchange system. So we're really just at the beginning. But we do have Medicare for people over 65. And you couldn't, I don't think, take it away if you tried, because people are very satisfied with it, but we also have a lot of political and financial resistance to expanding that system to more people. So we're in a learning period as we move forward with the implementation of the Affordable Care Act. And I'm hoping that whatever the shortfalls or the glitches have been, which in a big piece of legislation you're going to have, those will be remedied and we can really take a hard look at what's succeeding, fix what isn't, and keep moving forward to get to affordable universal healthcare coverage like you have here in Canada. Hey Luis and Marilyn,

I wanted to flag this your way. Steve Lucero is building an mApp that will have a storytelling component. You can see the attached document that has more details of his proposal. Clearly it's something they want to do with the DNC and Campaigns/Nominee, but are beginning to do it on their own. They too are reaching out to Soros, Buffet, Steyer, and other funders.

• Steven Lucero, 505-697-0055<tel:505-697-0055>, steve.lucero@gmail.com<mailto:steve.lucero@gmail.com>

Let me know if you want more information and around this. It's their solution to reaching millennials.

Thanks,

Bridgette

Getting out the Latino Vote in 2016 and Beyond

Introduction

The US Hispanic population and its influence have reached the tipping point. Specifically Hispanic Millennials are now larger than the current Baby Boomer demographic and growing. There is one shot to capture this demographic or lose the window of opportunity for generations:

1. Hispanics are the most brand loyal consumers in the World: Known fact.
2. Hispanic brand loyalty is generational: Entire families.
3. Once a brand loses this loyalty, Hispanics never re-engage: Unforgiving.
4. If a brand earns this loyalty, Hispanics will always be loyal and influence family and extended family to be loyal: Long term relationship.
5. Hispanics are the most responsive to “story telling”: Brands need to “speak with us”.

Without a comprehensive brand strategy and plan, The DNC will lose the opportunity to acquire the Hispanic consumer.

Objectives

- To empower and inspire US Hispanics 18+ yrs of age to register & vote in the 2016 Presidential and Congressional elections
- To develop a relationship with Hispanics based on trust and inclusion.
- To increase the turnout of Hispanic voters from 48 % to 75% or more
- To extend the success in 2016, own the Hispanic loyalty, and convert states like Florida, Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada and Texas to become reliably blue

Assumption

The DNC possesses reliable demographic data and voting statistics of US Hispanics. This document does not seek either to address or expand on DNC data.

Issues

US Hispanics have been underrepresented and marginalized in education, finance and civic representation, while being the fastest growing demographic in the US, in the last 40 years

1. The Latino share of eligible voters is growing Latinos will make up 13 percent of all eligible voters in 2016, a 2 percent increase from 2012 higher in some states. In Florida, for example, the share of eligible voters who are Latino will increase from 17.1 percent in 2012 to 20.2 percent in 2016. And in Nevada, the increase is from 15.9% to 18.8%.

2. Hispanic voter turnout is low—compared to other groups. Hispanic voter turnout in 2012 was 48% compared with 64.1% for non-Hispanic whites and 66.2% for blacks.
3. A total of 800,000 Latinos turn 18 each year—one every 30 seconds (or more than 66,000 individuals per month). Ninety-three percent of Latino children are U.S.-born citizens and will be eligible to vote when they reach age 18. As of 2014, one in four children in the United States—17.6 million total—were Latino.
4. As of 2013, 3.9 million lawful permanent residents were eligible to become citizens but had not naturalized. They come from Latin American countries, with more than 2.7 million from Mexico. Horrified by the anti-Hispanic messages coming from Trump, Cruz and others, they are applying for citizenship in record numbers.
5. Hispanic voters are voting for Democrats in ever-increasing margins (% voting for D minus % voting for R). The margins were 18% in 2004, 36% in 2008 and 44% in 2012
6. These five facts suggest that increasing Hispanic turnout could—and likely would—lead to the election of many more Democrats.
7. Traditional methods to reach Hispanics are ineffective. They include
 - i. Hispano/Leadership to reach/engage
 - ii. TV/Print
8. US Hispanic Millennials feel betrayed by politics, elected officials and parties
9. US Hispanic Millennials distrust politicians and parties
10. The US Hispanic Demographic is made up of multiple “Hispanic” or “Latino” cultures
11. There is no homogeneous Omni-channel platform that can scale across each Hispanic/Latino community in the country to
 - Discover/learn issues and how they impact local communities
 - Share and express point-of-view re: issues
 - Feel included in process
 - Be motivated to take action (Register and vote)

Solution

In order for a dramatic and impactful GOTV and branding effort targeting the US Hispanic eligible voters, the solution must be focused on the US Hispanic Millennial. This effort will be successful if the brand marketing is based on issues and conversations versus direct politicking, polling, advertising and robo-calling. P2P now replaces Door-to-door, which obligates the 2016 effort to have a strong digital and interactive/experiential execution.

To register Hispanic/Latino Millennial voters and motivate them to vote via an Omni-channel platform to include:

1. Web

2. Mobile Messaging Platforms
3. Mobile Video Vehicles (automobile or other)
4. In person experiential events + voter registration

The features of an Omni-channel platform, with Viral Loop, scalable to dozens of Hispanic Communities Nationally:

1. GOTV
 - a. Responsive Web applications with deep link interaction connecting partner sites
 - b. P2P / P2G mobile application based on Messaging
 - c. Issue Discovery + Call To Action
 - i. Broadcast issues (content) to mobile application and website
 - ii. Subscriber expresses opinion or sentiment
 - iii. Straw voting
2. Allow communities to engage with each other and create sustainable behavior
 - a. Social Media +Networking
 - i. Link all social media & networks to mobile applications and website
 - ii. Allow direct targeting of local communities
3. Reach out to communities
 - a. Experiential events in conjunction with video story telling and local events
 - b. Organize local events via mobile city-to-city
 - c. Provide video based storytelling of Hispanics/Latinos to express themselves
 - d. Setup GOTV activities at each local event

Needy Latinos and 1 easy call.

Subject: Needy Latinos and 1 easy call.

A few calls you might consider making: 1) Fedrico Pena. Ken Salazar who has been an absolute trooper really wants to get Fedrico Pena on board. I talked to Pena early, before March and he hemmed and hawed. Ken had lunch with him early this week and reports the following, he's close to committing but carrying some baggage. Fed never said this to me but he confided to Ken that his Cabinet stints ripped up his family, he gave everything to the cause and no time to his family, he went through a messy divorce in the late 90's and was left really down and felt like no one reached out to him then so he felt pretty cut off from Clinton World. In 07, the only candidate that asked for his support was Obama, so he endorsed. (by the way, not sure any of this is factually accurate, but this is how he is feeling). His life now revolves around his new wife, Cindy, who is a supporter of yours and came to the fundraiser at the Chambers house. He kind of wants to be with you, but this stuff is still grinding on him. Ken suggests a call to him and was very explicit about making the following four points: 1) you really enjoyed seeing Cindy at the Chambers event and appreciate her support. 2) ask him how he's been doing 3) ask about his views on the race and what she should be doing in Colorado 4) ask that he consider publicly supporting you. On balance, I recommend making this call as much because it's important to Ken who has been great. Pena's cell: 303-294-1824 2) Bill Richardson. I had heard that you were upset that I encouraged a call between WJC and Richardson to bury the hatchet. I did that at the request of Jose Villarreal who pushed me and made the point that Richardson is still on TV a lot, especially on Univision and Telemundo and not withstanding the fact that he can be a dick, it was worth getting him in a good place. He had a good conversation with the President and has been good in his interviews since. I have pressed Bill, but I think it will take a call from you to get a formal endorsement. He's on Meet the Press on Sunday. Probably worth a quick call to ask him to stay stout and publicly endorse, but if it's too galling, don't bother. Richardson's cell: 505-699-4862 3) Governor Jim Hodges. I just spent a couple days in South Carolina and did an event with him and Steve Benjamin where he endorsed. He was really good and I think it sent a strong signal in South Carolina, following Dick Reilly's endorsement, that the support there is strong broad and determined. He and his wife Rachel also co hosted a successful fundraiser with Don and Carol Fowler and Ben and Sydney Rex that I attended. Worth a quick call to Jim to thank him and Rachel for their support. Hodges cell: 803-315-0955

<Maralee@gmail.com> Hi

Mara, Thanks for getting back to me on Facebook and providing your e-mail; I do appreciate it. This is a bit of a sensitive topic, so forgive me if my questions are general in nature as I'm only responding to a tip, but feel obligated to follow through. I was recently contacted by a source who claims to have worked on the 2008 Hillary Clinton campaign and is alleging that Marlon Marshall made unwelcome sexual advances and propositions towards women on the campaign repeatedly. The allegation is that he would "corner women, make them uncomfortable and make suggestions about having sex." The source encouraged me to contact women who worked under him in the Nevada office. I was wondering if you were able to describe your experience with Marshall and if any of this rings true, with you or anyone else you know who worked there. The source also claims that Robby Mook was made aware of the issue, but declined to act on it or intervene because he is personal friends with Marshall. Do you know if there is any truth to this? Again, my apologies for the personal nature of the questions, but it is information that was recently provided to me. If there's any light you can shed on this, whether there's truth to it, or if it's completely off base, I would appreciate that. I understand the sensitive nature of the allegations so am happy to protect your identity at this point, unless you feel otherwise compelled to speak out. Thank you for your time.

Politico Admits 'Mistake' In Sending DNC An Article In Advance

No substantive changes were made to the piece, though the arrangement has prompted criticism from the RNC and prominent conservatives.

By Michael Calderone

MSNBC

Politico says it was a mistake for reporter Ken Vogel to have sent the DNC an article in advance.

NEW YORK — Politico acknowledged Sunday that it was a “mistake” for one of its top reporters to send the Democratic National Committee an advance copy of an article while emphasizing there were no substantive changes made to the piece prior to publication.

A May 2 article by Politico's Ken Vogel and Isaac Arnsdorf — "Clinton fundraising leaves little for state parties" — has come under scrutiny since WikiLeaks published over 19,000 internal DNC emails on Friday.

In an April 29 email thread, DNC national press secretary Mark Paustenbach shared Vogel's detailed questions with others working to coordinate a response to what would be an unflattering story about fundraising efforts. Paustenbach also spoke to the Clinton campaign that day in preparing the DNC's pushback, according to the emails.

On April 30, Paustenbach told DNC Communications Director Luis Miranda that he'd received the story in advance. "Vogel gave me his story ahead of time/before it goes to his editors as long as I didn't share it," he wrote. "Let me know if you see anything that's missing and I'll push back."

Vogel gave me his story ahead of time/before it goes to his editors as long as I didn't share it. Let me know if you see anything that's missing and I'll push back.

WIKILEAKS

Sharing articles with sources in advance is generally frowned upon in newsrooms.

Journalists are expected to ask questions of those they write about prior to publication, but sharing entire stories in advance is generally discouraged in newsrooms.

On Sunday, Politico spokesman Brad Dayspring told The Huffington Post in an email that sharing stories with sources isn't standard practice.

"Politico's policy is to not share editorial content pre-publication except as approved by editors," Dayspring wrote. "In this case the reporter was attempting to check some very technical language and figures involving the DNC's joint fundraising agreement with the Clinton campaign. Checking the relevant passages for accuracy was responsible and consistent with our standards; Sharing the full piece was a mistake and not consistent with our policies. There were no substantive changes to the piece and in fact the final story was blasted out by the both RNC and the Sanders campaign, and prompted Politifact to revise its rating on the issue in question."

Vogel, Politico's chief investigative reporter and author of the 2014 book Big Money, is regarded as one of the top journalists on the politics and money beat. He's reported critically on fundraising across party lines and the article in question wasn't one the DNC or the Hillary Clinton campaign would have liked to see in print. Vogel and Arnsdorf reported that only 1 percent of $61 million raised by the Hillary Victory Fund — a group comprised of Clinton's campaign, the DNC and 32 state party committees — had gone to state parties.

Two days later, Politifact revised its rating on a claim from actor and Clinton supporter George Clooney that "the overwhelming amount" of money raised at a Clinton fundraiser would go to down-ballot Democrats. In light of Politico's reporting, the fact-checking organization changed its assessment from "Mostly True" to "Half True."

As Vogel and Arnsdorf wrote at the time, allies of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) were concerned with the joint fundraising arrangement. "They see it as a circumvention of campaign contribution limits by a national party apparatus intent on doing whatever it takes to help Clinton defeat Sanders during the party's primary, and then win the White House," they wrote.

The WikiLeaks trove, more broadly, has reinforced long-running perceptions among Sanders supporters that the DNC was assisting the Clinton campaign during the Democratic primary. DNC Chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz announced her resignation Sunday in response to the fallout from the leak.

Though the Politico story wasn't positive toward the DNC, the courtesy Vogel extended to the party has been seized upon as evidence of liberal media bias by some conservatives media figures, such as radio hosts Laura Ingraham and Mark Levin and Republican pollster Frank Luntz.

The Republican National Committee, too, has turned a spotlight on leaked emails involving Politico.

On Saturday, The Republican National Committee blasted a Business Insider story on Vogel's emails to its press mailing list and communications director Sean Spicer charged that the reporter allowed the Democrats "to edit" his stories in advance.

Disclosure: The reporter worked with Vogel at Politico from November 2007 to March 2010.
