Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 6433, requires belting, shafting, etc., to be guarded when so situated as to be dangerous, if it can be guarded, and if it cannot be guarded requires notice of danger to be posted. Failure to guard machinery, if dangerous, and guarding is possible, constitutes negligence; also failure to post notice of danger when guards are not possible. Huss v. Heydt Bakery Co., 210 Mo. 44, 108 SW 63. Statute requires belting, shafts, etc., to be guarded only when so situated as to be dangerous to employes engaged in their ordinary duties. Lang v. Kansas City Bolt & Nut Co., 131 Mo. App. 146, 110 SW 614. Where plaintiff left his own place of work and went to another and was there injured by unguarded machinery, he had no cause of action under statute, not being in performance of his ordinary duties; negligence of foreman in sending him there would be common-law negligence. Id. Statute held not applicable where off-bearer was injured by sandpaper smoothing machine. Ozernicke v. Ehrlich, 212 Mo. 386, 111 SW 14. Held inapplicable to knives of planing machine set in rotating cylinder or axle. Cole v. North American Lead Co., 130 Mo. App. 253, 112 SW 753. There was no common-law duty of master to fence machinery. Lohmeyer v. St. Louis Cordage Co. [Mo.] 113 SW 1108.

New Jersey: P. L. 1904, p. 156, § 13, requires all vats, etc., to be guarded, regardless of whether risk is open and obvious, if it is practical to guard them. Dix v. Union Ice Co. [N. J. Law] 68 A 1101.

New York [See, also, Temporary Appliances, supra]: Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415, requiring entire tier of iron or steel beams of buildings in course of construction to be planked over, applies to buildings of "wall-bearing" construction where steel beams are laid in brick walls. Schramme v. Lewinson, 110 NYS 599. Apparatus used to haul beams to third story held not hoisting apparatus within Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415, § 20, requiring opening to be enclosed, no floor having yet been laid. McNeill v. Battsford-Dickinson Co., 128 App. Div. 544, 112 NYS 867.

Shaft properly guarded within Laws 1906, p. 927, c. 366, § 1, though employe crawled under table and through guarding boards after material and was thus injured. Kirwan v. American Lithographic Co., 124 App. Div. 180, 108 NYS 805. Laws 1897, p. 481, c. 415, § 82, requiring outside fire escapes on factories, is mandatory and does not permit factory owners to wait until ordered by an inspector to install fire escapes; inspector's duty is to prescribe as to kind and sufficiency of escapes required. Arnold v. National Starch Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 815. Master liable for injury caused by failure to guard knives of jointer (Laws 1904, p. 640, c. 291, § 81), unless servant assumed risk or was guilty of contributory negligence. Graves v. Gustave Stickley Co., 125 App. Div. 132, 109 NYS 256. Press feeder fell off platform and got foot caught in flywheel 11 or 12 inches above floor. Platform was supposed to be used by only one person but two were on it at time. Master

(§ 3) C. Methods of work, rules and regulations.[See 10 C. L. 728]—It is the duty of the master to use ordinary care to see that the work is done in a reasonably safe manner,[65] and if he or his representative orders work to be done in a dangerous way,[66] or if he has actual or constructive knowledge that a dangerous method was not liable by reason of failure to guard flywheel under statute. King v. Reid, 124 App. Div. 121, 108 NYS 615.

Brick wall in course of construction held not part of "ways, works, or means" within statute. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 NYS 361.

Ohio: Duty to protect against projecting set screws, etc., under 97 Ohio Laws, p. 547, is nondelegable. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 158 F 294. Where there was no evidence of plaintiff's knowledge of projecting set screw in shaft, proper to refuse charge limiting recovery to $3,000, under 97 Ohio Laws, p. 547, as that statute limits recovery only in case of knowledge. Id. Ohio statute requiring railroad frogs at crossings and in yards and stations to be blocked held applicable in favor of switchman who was knocked down and dragged by engine and got foot caught in unblocked frog. Cooper v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 82. State law, requiring that all locomotives and cars used in moving intrastate traffic shall be equipped with automatic couplers, is not in conflict with federal act making same requirement as to locomotives and cars engaged in moving interstate traffic, but rather state law is supplementary to federal law and in harmony with it. Detroit, T. & I. R. Co. v. State, 11 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 482.

Oregon: Where action is based on Laws 1907, p. 302, c. 158, failure to guard saw, fact that labor commissioner had failed to specify in notice manner in which saw was to be guarded was no defense; it is master's duty, under statute, to guard dangerous saws whether notified to do so or not. Hill v. Saugestad [Or.] 98 P 524. In action based on violation of Laws 1907, p. 302, c. 158, failure to guard saw, allegation that labor commissioner had served notice requiring saw to be guarded was sufficient allegation of practicability of guarding it after answer. Id.

Rhode Island: Gen. Laws 1896, c. 108, § 16, and amendments, relating to liabilities of owners and lessees of buildings for failure to protect elevators and shafts, is for benefit of all persons using elevators or premises as employes or licensees. Weeks v. Fletcher [R. I.] 69 A 294.

Virginia: Code 1904, § 1294-d, c. 36, requiring railroad companies to maintain warning signals where bridges are maintained so low that employes standing on cars cannot pass under them, does not relieve company for negligence in maintaining bridge too low for safety of employes thereon. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 108 Va. 632, 62 SE 363. To maintain such bridge, to danger of employes using due care, is negligence. Id.

Washington: Laws 1905, p. 166, c. 84, requiring machines to be guarded, held not to require certain self-feeding device for ripsaw which would necessitate entire change in method of operating saw; statute does not contemplate such guard. McIntosh v. Sawmill Phoenix [Wash.] 94 P 930. Whether set screws on shaft could have been practically guarded, and whether failure to guard them other than by their position was negligence, for jury. Ramm v. Hewitt-Lea Lumber Co. [Wash.] 94 P 1081. Failure of employe to give employer notice provided for in Laws 1905, p. 166, c. 84, § 6, is not a bar to an action for injuries resulting from violation of statute; purpose of that notice is simply to allow employes to procure an inspection by labor commissioner. McIntosh v. Sawmill Phoenix [Wash.] 94 P 930.

West Virginia: Owner or operator of coal mine sufficiently performs his duties, under Code 1906, §§ 409, 410, if he provides ample means of ventilation and employs competent mine boss and fire boss, and he is not liable for negligence of such employes resulting in injury to fellow laborer. Squilache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 62 SE 446. Fire boss, required to be employed by statute, not shown incompetent by fact that he did not understand use of anemometer, this instrument not being required to be used by him under statute. Id.

Wisconsin: Shaft situated some distance above floor had defective set screw collar which caught plaintiff as he stepped over it to go to belt which he wished to throw off. Shaft was within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring guarding of shafting. Miller v. Kimberly & Clark Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 536. Shafting is within statute which is so located as to be dangerous to employes "in discharge of their duties;" they need not be in discharge of "ordinary" duties. Id. Violation of statute which is proximate cause of injury makes master liable in absence of contributory negligence. Id. Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, making railroad companies liable for injuries due to defects in equipment or to negligence of other employes, is held valid, and not improper class legislation because applying only to railroads, or because act does not apply to office and shop employes. Kiley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 309.

65. It is master's duty to use reasonable care to see that work is not done in negligent manner to danger of servant; and for negligence of superintendent in this regard master is responsible. Collier v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 487.

Negligent system or mode of using proper machinery may render master liable. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hartell [C. C. A.] 157 F 667. Not only must reasonably safe appliances be furnished, but ordinary care must be used so to use them as not to cause injury. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 480. Duty of company to keep lookout on front of cars being pushed by engine in place where presence of employes is to be anticipated. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader [Ky.] 113 SW 874. It is the duty of master engaged in running electric railway to use reasonable care to so regulate the time of running the cars, that its servants operating them would be informed as to meeting points in order that collisions may be avoided. Mattoon City R. Co. v. Graham, 138 Ill. App. 70.

66. The master is liable for a reckless order unless danger is obvious. Evidence examined and held to sustain finding that master was negligent in ordering servant to being used,[67] he will be liable for injuries resulting thereform, but he will not be liable where employes themselves depart from the customary manner of doing work.[68] Whether a method adopted or provided is reasonably safe depends upon the nature of the work and the danger to be apprehended,[69] and the question is usually one for the erect block and tackle without using appliances at hand ordinarlly employed for that purpose. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 140 Ill. App. 141. Master would be liable if superintendent directing moving of beam caused an unsafe method to be used, resulting in injury. Connolly v. Booth, 198 Mass. 577, 84 NE 799. Defendant's foreman was negligent in allowing 15-year old operator of machine to run it in dangerous way and in inciting him to run it at high and dangerous speed. Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 SW 794. General foreman who countermanded order of another foreman for other appliances with which to load reel of wire enble, and directed men to proceed with appliances on hand, represented master in so doing, though men usually selected their own methods. Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 407. Finding of negligence warranted where foreman assured operator of wood-shaping machine there was no danger from revolving knives with which he came in contact. Schmitt v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 135 Wis. 117, 115 NW 353. To instruct inexperienced man to operate metal stumping press in dangerous way, there being a safe way, would be negligence per se unless danger ought to have been known to operator. Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 574, 117 NW 187.

67. Defendant responsible for manner of construction of staging in its factory when it was built in customary way and had remained for such time that defendant had notice of it. Valsbord v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 74 N. H. 470, 69 A 520. Where practice of "staking" cars across a crossing without warning or watchmen had continued for long time, so that company had acquiesced or was charged with notice of it and thus sanctioned the practice, it could not defend against action for injuries thus caused by setting up acts of fellow-servants. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Donovan [C. C. A.] 160 F 826. Evidence held to warrant finding that defendant's superintendent was present, observed improper method used in hoisting coal, and failed to change it or warn men of danger. Bartley v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 198 Mass. 163, 83 NE 1093. When a servant has been allowed to do work in a certain way, the master, with knowledge of the fact, cannot say that he had no occasion to anticipate that such method would be used. Boy of 16 injured while removing obstructions from saw, while using method which he had seen used and had used in presence of superiors; whether they had seen him use it and had so sanctioned it was for jury. Godsoe v. Dodge Clothespin Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1073. In order that negligence in failing to provide safe methods of work be actionable, it must appear that the master knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that to do the work as ordered was dangerous. Breaking of bolt suspending iron plate while enlarging rivet holes by using "drift-pin." Medley v. American Car & Foundry Co., 140 Ill. App. 284.

68. No violation of master's duty where collision of cars was caused by fellow-servant's act in violation of custom adopted by and known to employes. Parmaleau v. International Paper Co. [N. H.] 71 A 31.

69. Evidence warranted finding of negligence: Failing to provide for escape of gases from molten metal which exploded. Shaukair v. Sargent Co., 235 Ill. 509, 85 NE 621. Method or number of men used to hoist heavy casting, which swung against and injured plaintiff. Bowie v. Coffin Valve Co., 200 Mass. 571, 86 NE 914. Negligence of superintendent in fastening rope and hook to locomotive by reason of which it flew back and struck plaintiff. Brosnan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 221, 85 NE 1050. Foreman in charge of blasting held negligent as to blast which killed employe. Knight v. Donnelly, 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687. Finding that method used to lower machine was not reasonably safe warranted by evidence that certain precautions could have been and were commonly taken to make it more safe, though plaintiff did not prove general custom to use such safer method. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 136 Wis. 39, 116 NW 854. Defendant liable where 10 cars loaded with logs were sent down grade in customary way with no locomotive and only four brakemen, derailment resulting. Barrow v. Lewis Lumber Co., 14 Idaho, 698, 95 P 682. Where flying switch was being made contrary to rules and cars struck car repairer crossing tracks, no warning or signals being given and no watchman being placed on front of cars. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187. If injury to employe resulted from negligence in switching and from use of unusual and unnecessary force in moving cars, company would be liable whether or not employes knew or ought to have known of plaintiff's presence on track. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Balliet [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 906. Where execution of verbal orders as given is a matter of life and death to employes, care must be taken against the orders being forgotten or misunderstood. Fitzgerald v. Worcester & St. R. Co., 200 Mass. 105, 85 NE 911. Thus, where it was customary to give orders relative to running of special and regular cars to both conductor and motorman of regular car, and to post such orders on the motormen's and conductors' bulletin board at the car barns, jury was warranted in finding dispatcher negligent when he only gave orders to conductor of such regular car. Id.

Evidence held not to show negligence: Where engineer ran temporary elevator up too high on first trip, and plaintiff had directed him how to run it and failed to provide for signal. Del Signore v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 198 Mass. 337, 84 NE 466. Judgment for death of trackman reversed where jury were allowed to find negligence in manner of running trains on certain tracks, this being proper. Clancy v. New York, etc., R. Co., 112 NYS 541. Not negligence to start "blower" used to heat factory while employe was in basement, when blower was in almost constant use, and employe was often jury.[70] The master may be guilty of negligence in adopting a mode of work not reasonably safe, although it is in accordance with custom.[71] The mere fact that a less dangerous method might have been used does not alone show negligence.[72] Failure to provide a sufficient number of men to do the required work with reasonable saftey is negligence.[73]

It is the duty of the master to provide and enforce suitable rules and regulations governing the conduct of employes and the carrying on of the work where the nature of the business is such as to require such precautions.[74] A reasonably safe method in basement and must have known about shaft. McKenna v. Gould Wire Cord Co., 197 Mass. 406, 83 NE 1113. Master not liable for injuries to plaintiff while unloading rails where no negligence of master was shown but it appeared that an error of judgment of the foreman or his men caused the accident, which could not reasonably have been foreseen. Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 108 Va. 822, 62 SE 972. Duty to provide for warning to factory employes of movement of crane performed, though no specific rules were promulgated, where it was generally understood, and especially by operator of crane, that sharp lookout was to be kept and warning given. Ferry v. American Suction Gas Producer Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 458, 116 NW 1073. Evidence held to show car of logs was properly loaded by defendant and that it was not liable for death of employe caused by log rolling off car. Stephens v. Louisiana Long Leaf Lumber Co. [La.] 47 S 887. Foreman of section crew not negligent in ordering bolt to be broken in course of taking up old track, this being customary. St. Louis,etc., R. Co. v. Jamison [Ark.] 113 SW 41.

70. Whether foreman was negligent in method employed by him to load heavy reel of cable on wagon. Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 407. Whether ignorant employe was allowed to thaw out dynamite in dangerous way, by reason of defendant's negligence. Trotto v. Bellew & Merritt Co., 111 NYS 533. Whether due care in method of loading rails on car required man on car to see that they did not fall back after being placed on car. Vincenzo v. Deleware & Hudson Co., 110 NYS 589. Cars of construction train became uncoupled, owing to speed, and plaintiff was thrown off car by sudden shock. Gibler v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 93, 107 SW 1021. Whether belt, in adjusting which plaintiff was injured, was too short, and whether it was negligence to attempt to adjust it while machines were in motion. Maxon v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 281. Whether rolling barrels of caustic soda up incline was proper method of raising them so as to prevent spilling of contents, plaintiff being struck by same and injured. Escher v. Southwark Mills Co., 221 Pa. 180, 70 A 714. Whether defendant was negligent in failing to provide for warning to plaintiff, directed to couple cars, that another car was being pushed against car which he was coupling, employes all being engaged in unloading cars. Pecard v. Menominee River Sugar Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 346, 116 NW 532.

71. Instruction that jury should find for defendant if means employed to raise beam were usual, ordinary and customary means employed by structural iron contractors under similar circumstances held erroneous, since such means may have been negligent means. Volkman v. McMullen, 138 Ill. App. 616.

72. Method employed by wrecking boss to replace car on track held proper and reasonable, though a safer method might possibly have been used. Wyman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 957. Master will not be held negligent in using particular mode of work merely because some believed another method less dangerous. Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 108 Va. 822, 62 SE 972. That business could have been carried on in less dangerous way immaterial where servant has been properly instructed. Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 158.

73. Master may be liable for failure to supply sufficient number of men to do work with safety. Di Bari v. J. W. Bishop Co., 199 Mass. 254, 85 NE 89. Master must provide competent servants in sufficient number to do the work. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hartell [C. C. A.] 157 F 667. Duty of master to furnish sufficient number of men to perform work with reasonable safety. Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1013. One of nondelegable duties of master is to furnish an adequate number of competent servants to do the work. Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 720. Plaintiff, ordered by foreman to carry heavy jack which caused him to fall and injured him, could recover, where superintendent had given orders that jacks should not be carried by one man, but plaintiff did not know this and relied on foreman's orders. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mahan [Ky.] 113 SW 886. Master liable for injuries caused by inadequate force of men to do work with reasonable safety, if he knew or ought to have known force was insufficient, and plaintiff did not know it and was in exercise of due care. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Minor, 33 Ky. L. R. 972, 112 SW 572.

74. Master's duty to protect servant from unusual dangers by suitable rules and regulations for work. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. If nature of master's work is complex and involves the presence and co-operation of number of laborers so situated that independent, individual action on their respective parts would render the doing of the work unsafe, the law imposes on master duty of organizing and maintaining a system by which work can be done with reasonable safety. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1008. Failure to make rules is not negligence unless it appears from the nature of the business in which the servant is engaged that master, in exercise of reasonable care, ought to have foreseen necessity for such precautions. Palmier v. Pearson, 112 adopted and customarily followed by the employes is equivalent to the establishment of reasonable rules by the employer.[75] Where a servant is employed to perform a known duty, or one of which he is informed, the master need not by rule or otherwise inform him that he is expected to do it,[76] nor is it necessary to promulgate rules that employes are not to injure others unnecessarily.[77] Negligence in failing to provide rules in a given instance is not shown unless some reasonable and practical rule is pointed out,[78] which if in force, would have prevented injury.[79] The construction of rules is sometimes for the court [80] and sometimes for the jury.[81] When a rule is relied on by an employer to exempt him from liability, it is to be strictly construed.[82] Abrogation of a rule may be shown by proof of its habitual violation with knowledge of the employer,[83] and knowledge will be presumed if the violation is shown to have continued for such length of time that he might reasonably have known of it.[84] Rules of the master defining the duties of employes and providing for the NYS 684. It is master's duty, especially for protection of minors employed about dangerous and complicated machinery, to make, publish and enforce rules sufficiently clear and specific to be capable of being intelligently understood and obeyed. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475.

Finding that rules were required warranted: Where several hundred men were employed in railroad yards in switching, the jury was warranted in finding that rules for doing work were required. Nelson v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 92.

Miner preparing entry to cross drift in mine, injured by fall of ore caused by blasting by others without warning, no rules or regulations having been provided for such warning. Jacobson v. Hobart Iron Co., 103 Minn. 319, 114 NW 951. Where electric lineman was killed by current turned on without notice while he was at work on wire, jury were warranted in finding that defendant should have made and enforced a rule that power should not be turned on until after notice that repair man had completed work. Van Alstine v. Standard L., H. & P. Co., 112 NYS 416. Work of trucking and loading bridge iron by several gangs held sufficiently complex to warrant finding that rules of work ought to be provided. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1008.

Rules sufficient: Necessity for further rules or to giving notice to employes of movement of crane not shown where plaintiff's foot was run over by crane, defendant having signalman to give signals of its movement. Palmieri v. Pearson, 112 NYS 684.

75. Parmaleau v. International Paper Co. [N. H.] 71 A 31. No duty to provide specific rules for doing work not inherently dangerous when employes themselves adopt and use a reasonably safe method. Id. Custom used to move cars down sidetrack held reasonably safe; no duty of employer to promulgate other specific rules for work. Id.

76. Where employe was poisoned by fumes, absence of servant whose duty it was to regulate discharge of fumes, and want of rules requiring him to be at his post, did not make master liable. Gorman v. Odell Mfg. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 215.

77. Rules amounting in substance only to direction to employes not to injure others unnecessarily need not be made. Van Alstine v. Standard L., H. & P. Co., 112 NYS 416.

78. Where track walker was killed by engine running backwards in yards, error to submit case to jury on theory that some rule might or should have been provided for notice or warning, no such rule being pointed or shown to be practicable or effective. Bell v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 113 NYS 185. Count alleging negligence in falling to promulgate rules for government of employes of street railway in crossing a "latch" should have been withdrawn from jury where evidence showed that employes were told to "look out," but no better, nor any other, rule was proved which jury could have considered. Norfolk & P. Trac. Co. v. Ellington's Adm'r, 108 Va. 245, 61 SE 779.

79. Failure to make rules for running of trains in smelter could not be basis of recovery where no practicable or approximate rules were shown, and it did not appear that absence of rules contributed to injury. Mitchell v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 Mont. 575, 97 P 1033.

80. Construction of written rule is for court. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader [Ky.] 113 SW 874. Rule requiring lookout on leading car when cars are being pushed by engine applies to cars being pushed, whether engine is going backward or forward. Id. Railroad rule requiring cars on siding to be left with brakes set, and if on grade to be blocked, held not to apply where car was being taken over sidetrack to train on main track. Davis Adm'x v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 724.

81. Existence and import of rules, when material, are usually for jury. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475.

82. Inspection rule held not to require inspection of car by conductor. Southern R. Co. v. Hopkins [C. C. A.] 161 F 266.

83. Hampton v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 236 Ill. 249, 86 NE 243.

84. Hampton v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 236 Ill. 249, 86 NE 243. Proof of violation of rule as to speed of trains was not inadmissible because the places shown were not under observation of officers of company, since defendant's duty extended to all its lines. Id. Evidence insufficient to show habitual violation of rule of company as to locking switches, or that any violation was known to company. Dixon v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 963, 118 NW 946.

proper and orderly conduct of the business do not fix his duties to other employes or to strangers.[85]

(§ 3) D. Warning and instructing servant. See 10 C. L. 781—It is the duty of the master to properly warn and instruct young and inexperienced employes [86] in regard to dangers of their employment of which they have no knowledge or appreciation,[87]

85. Rules requiring agents and conductors to see that switches are blocked imposes no duty on company as to switchmen. Dixon v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 963, 118 NW 946.

86. Failure to properly instruct inexperienced, immature child as to dangers incident to her work and in going to and from it, proximately resulting in injuries to her, would give cause of action to her and her parent, regardless of whether latter consented to her employment. Reaves v. Anniston Knitting Mills [Ala.] 45 S 702. Petition alleging injuries caused by employment of inexperienced youth on dangerous machine without instruction stated cause of action. Falls City Woolen Mills v. Pike, 33 Ky. L. R. 67, 109 SW 335. Evidence sufficient to show negligence where plaintiff, inexperienced youth, employed to work on log carriage, was ordered by superior to adjust belt without instructions, as result of which he was injured. Chesson v. Walker, 146 N. C. 511, 60 SE 422. Boy of 16 without experience set to work on boiler tubes with burred prosser pins, without warning or instructions, and chip from pin flew into his eye. Pelow v. Oil Well Supply Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 812. Petition not demurrable which alleged that boy of 16 was put to work at dangerous machine without warning or instruction, and that he was injured immediately on beginning to operate it, before he could have become aware of danger. Hobbs v. Small [Ga. App.] 62 SE 91. Where evidence showed that boy of 17, without experience, was put to work, without warning or instruction, operating dangerous band saw in mill, finding of negligence was warranted, and verdict justified (no claim of contributory negligence being made) though evidence did not show just how plaintiff came in contact with saw. Von Postel v. Lake Sammamish Shingle Co. [Wash.] 98 P 665. Girl 14 or 15 years old entitled to instructions as to danger of working too close to revolving shaft. Civetti v. American Hatters' & Furriers' Corp., 124 App. Div. 345, 108 NYS 663. Danger from shifting belt, which was part of duty of boy of 15, was not an incidental risk, but it was defendant's duty to properly warn and instruct him as to how it should be done, if he was inexperienced and defendant knew or ought to have known it. Lehto v. Atlantic Min. Co., 152 Mich. 412, 15 Det. Leg. N. 242, 116 NW 405. Recovery allowed for injury to boy of 12, put to work without warning or instruction, and injured while attempting to clean moving roller. Driscoll v. Rolfe [N. H.] 71 A 379. Inexperienced boy injured in knives of planer when attempting to oil it as directed, no warning or instructions having been given, could recover without showing gross negligence of his superior. Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co. v. Daugherty, 33 Ky. L. R. 328, 110 SW 319. Failure to warn and instruct boy of 14, directed to work opposite operator of trip hammer, negligence, boy being injured by fall of hammer. Avery v. Cottrill's Guardian, 32 Ky. L. R. 914, 107 SW 332. Negligence to fail to instruct young inexperienced brakeman how to get off moving train. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. v. Workman [Ark.] 112 SW 1082. Boy of 17 employed as brakeman and switchman on private road struck by engine while turning switch. Judgment for plaintiff, on ground of failure to properly warn and instruct, sustained by divided court. Gadsden v. Catawba Power Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 960. Duty to warn and instruct extends to inexperienced adults as well as to youthful employes. Elliffy v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76. Duty to instruct inexperienced servant put to work on dangerous machine. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Master employing inexperienced man to work on dangerous machine owes duty of instructing him. Greco v. Pratt Chuck Co., 111 NYS 1000. To place inexperienced man at work on complicated and dangerous machine without warning or instruction is negligence. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Harteil [C. C. A.] 157 F 667. Inexperienced employe entitled to such instruction as will enable him to operate machinery safely in exercise of ordinary care. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. O'Leary [Md.] 69 A 1068. Where section hand was inexperienced and did not know danger involved in unloading gravel from car in way in which foreman told him to do it, it was foreman's duty to warn him of the danger. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 478. Accident caused by failure to instruct apprentice regarding dangerous machine used in scope of his employment. Eckberg v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 68 A 478.

87. Duty to warn exists when danger is such in character as not to be properly appreciated by servants by reason of their lack of experience, their youth, or general incompetency or ignorance. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8. If employe is young and inexperienced, duty to instruct and warn may extend to dangers patent but unknown to him. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. v. Workman [Ark.] 112 SW 1082. Duty to warn is most imperative where the danger is of latent or obscure character and servant is known to be inexperienced or young. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306. Duty to warn 15 year old operator of machine exists though danger would be obvious to an adult of ordinary prudence, and though boy knows that fingers will be injured if caught. Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 SW 794. Duty of master to warn boy of 15 employed as offbearer for sandpaper smoothing machine, if danger of doing work was not apparent to one of his age and experience. Czernicke v. Ehrlich, 212 Mo. 386, 111 SW 14. Instruction should be given unskilled employe, set to work on dangerous machine, and degree of instruction depends upon the age, capacity, and experience of the operator, and the nature of the machine. Marklewitz v. Olds Motor Works, 152 Mich. 113, 15 Det. Leg. N.

the master having actual or implied knowledge of the employe's youth or inexperience and lack of knowledge.[88] It is also the duty of the master to warn and instruct the servant as to hidden or latent dangers known, or which ought to be known, to the master and unknown to the servant,[89] and as to sudden,[90] special, or unusual risks arising during the course of the work,[91] or caused by changes brought about by 125, 115 NW 999. Where workmen in factory pounded on iron and steel wheels, and splinters or spawls of steel frequently flew from hammers or steel with sufficient force to injure person struck by them, it was master's duty to warn and instruct immature and inexperienced employe in factory of danger. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306. When hazard attending usual exercise of any work required of an inexperienced employe is not apparent, it is incumbent on master to inform him of dangers incident thereto, and if failure so to do results in injury to employe, master is liable. Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76. If servant was expected to use wood shaping machine, he was entitled to instructions, if required by nature of machine and his inexperience, though he was not specifically directed to use it. Marklewitz v. Olds Motor Works, 152 Mich. 113, 15 Det. Leg. N. 125, 115 NW 999.

88. No duty to warn unless master knows servant is inexperienced, either actually or by inference. Stolarz v. Algonquin Co. [N. J. Law] 71 A 57. Duty to warn exists only where master is chargeable with knowledge of servant's ignorance of danger. Harney v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 886. Master must have known or have been charged with knowledge of lack of knowledge or inexperience of employe and dangerous character of work. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 350. Duty to warn and instruct extends only to work servant is employed to do, and only to such dangers as master knows or has reason to believe servant ignorant of. Stodden v. Anderson & Winter Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 116.

89. The duty of the master to warn and instruct employes arises when the existence of danger is or should be in the exercise of reasonable care known to him. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8. Duty of master to warn servant of extraneous, latent or unusual danger unknown to servant. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Master bound to warn of hidden dangers known to him but not observable by servant. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. O'Leary [Md.] 69 A 1068. Duty of foreman to warn employe of defective condition of chisel not known to employe but which foreman ought to have known. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 41 Ind. App. 588, 84 NE 730. Master's duty to notify servant of risks or defects of which he does not know. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Evidence warranted finding of negligence in failing to warn operator of jointer of defective condition and liability to "kick." Bigum v. St. Paul Sash, Door & Lumber Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 481. Where servant was set to work removing copper bars from table on which they were dropped by conveyor, that they dropped at irregular intervals constituted latent danger, as to which he should have been warned. Evidence as to negligence in this respect for jury. Olsen v. Tacoma Smelting Co. [Wash.] 96 P 1036. Employe installing electrical equipment testified that he was working close to wire which he did not know was charged; that master knew it was charged and failed to warn him. Held, case of negligence made for jury. Latimer v. General Elec. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 438. Where master sends servant to repair machinery knowing it to be not only defective but to have latent danger, it is his duty to warn the servant when such latent danger attendant upon the work is unknown to servant and he has not equal knowledge with master as to such danger. Green v. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co., 130 Ga. 469, 60 SE 1062. Petition held to set out cause of action on this theory as against general demurrer, when servant sent to repair engine was killed by explosion, knowledge by master and want of it by servant being alleged. Id.

90. Where operator of twine making machine had her hand in machine mending thread, machine being at rest while repairs were made by foreman, and machine started without warning, injuring her, finding of negligence was warranted. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475. Engineer, who knew fireman was at work on running board of engine, could be found negligent in suddenly and without warning starting engine, though jar in coupling, which threw fireman off, was not unusual or negligent. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 374.

91. Master liable where foreman failed to notify car repairer of danger as he promised. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Walker [Kan.] 99 P 269. Where defendant had for a long time permitted dangerous custom of throwing baled hay through opening in ceiling of barn, he was negligent in not warning plaintiff who was injured by being struck with bale. Standard Oil Co. v. Brown, 31 App. D. C. 371. Where repair train was sent out, during storm, to repair damage already done, it was railroad company's duty to give warning to conductor and crew of dangerous places to be repaired by messages properly sent. Graham v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 151 Mich. 629, 15 Det. Leg. N. 115, 115 NW 993. Evidence held not to support finding that message was not sent to conductor and brakemen informing them of washouts. Id. Duty to warn mill foreman of unusual danger arising from removal of planks which usually covered pit on premises. Knox v. American Rolling Mill Corp., 236 Ill. 437, 86 NE 90. Duty of foreman in charge of moving car to warn employes that particular car was of unusual size and there was danger of being caught between car and projecting door, unless employes knew of it. Charrier v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1078. If necessary to maintain post too near track for safety, it was company's duty to warn employes affected. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Master liable where the master,[92] or incidental to work which the employe is ordered or sent to perform,[93] especially where the services required are outside the scope of the usual duties of the employe [94] where knowledge of the danger is chargeable to the master but not to the employe.[95] Instructions are required if work can be done with reasonable safety in a certain way but servant uninstructed is likely to do it in an unsafe way.[96] superintendent directed plaintiff to saw through certain timbers in bridge, as part of work of moving portion of it, superintendent knowing of defect and manifest danger and failure to warn plaintiff. Connolly v. Hall & Grant Const. Co., 192 N. Y. 182, 84 NE 807. Negligence could be found where telltales were allowed to become out of repair so that brakemen on cars would not be warned by them of nearness of low bridge. Harrison v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 111 NYS 812. Where masses of salt were occasionally dislodged in course of defendant's business, and pieces were thrown over the floor so as to endanger safety of employes there engaged, master owed them duty to warn when such dislodgement was to take place. Brice-Nash v. Barton Salt Co. [Kan.] 98 P 768.

92. Master who makes place of work more dangerous without notice to employe is negligent. Plaintiff, engaged in repairing pipe, was injured by reason of hot water being turned on without notice. Ferringer v. Crowley Oil & Mineral Co. [La.] 47 S 763. Whenever a material change in the intrinsic condition or relative arrangement of instrumentalities is made by the master, of such a nature that a servant, ignorant of the change and relying on a continuation of the existing condition, is likely to be exposed to danger, it is duty of master to inform servant of such change, unless the latter ought to discover it in the exercise of ordinary care. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Witt [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1012. Recovery for death of section hand warranted where brakes of hand car had been changed, so that, when he applied brakes, car suddenly stopped and threw him off, previous condition of car brakes being such that it would have stopped gradually. Id.

93. Error to direct verdict on opening statement where that and declaration tended to show servant was ordered into place of danger without warning, and was killed by reason thereof. Barto v. Detroit Iron & Steel Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 912, 118 NW 738. Finding of negligence warranted where workman was ordered into unsafe trench without warning of danger. McCoy v. Northern Heating & Elec. Co., 104 Minn. 234, 116 NW 488. Where defendant had notice that wiring was uninsulated and that employes had been receiving electric shocks, it was his duty to warn engineer as to danger before putting him to work in engine room where danger existed. Aga v. Harbach [Iowa] 117 NW 669. Employe smothered in coal bin where he was put to work without warning or instructions. Balder v. Zenith Furnace Co., 103 Minn. 345, 114 NW 948. Train car driver in mine sent to aid in preparing opening set of timbers to start side drift; work dangerous, and no instructions given; roof and timbers fell. Kostrzeba v. Hobart Iron Co., 103 Minn. 337, 114 NW 949. No duty to warn and instruct employes digging in clay bank against obvious danger of chunks of clay rolling down from above, nor was master bound to employ watchman to look out for such danger and warn. Ritzema v. Valley City Brick Co., 152 Mich. 75, 15 Det. Leg. N. 97, 115 NW 705. Duty of mine superintendent to warn miners sent into new shaft of presence of powder gas, and where he assured them "air" was all right without having tested it or provided for ventilation, this was negligence. Seals v. Whitney, 130 Mo. App. 412, 110 SW 35. Duty of mine boss charged with inspection to warn employes of dangers known to him before sending them to work at dangerous place. Norton Coal Co. v. Hanks' Adm'r, 108 Va. 521, 62 SE 335. Evidence sufficient to show that plaintiff was subject to and bound to obey engineer who sent him to work in dangerous place without warning him of danger. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray [Ind.] 84 NE 341. Evidence held to warrant finding that superintendent ordered plaintiff, known to be inexperienced and slow witted, to oil machinery in attempting which without instruction plaintiff was injured. Wankowski v. Crivitz Pulp & Paper Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 643. Servant sent into room to work where there was a pit of hot water, without being warned of same, was scalded. Master liable. Grubic v. Western Tube Co., 139 Ill. App. 470.

94. Duty to warn exists where servant without experience is sent to do new work, dangers of which he does not know, though they are incident to such work. Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 968. Changing employe's work from "wheeler" or "car chaser" in smelter to motorman not negligence per se; failure to give necessary instructions would have to be shown. Mitchell v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 Mont. 575, 97 P 1033. Defendant, taking common laborer away from ordinary work to assist in mixing or dissolving zinc chloride, owed him duty to warn of nature of substance and danger of getting it in his eye, he having no knowledge of its properties. Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76.

95. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8. Duty to warn exists where servant is put to work in dangerous place or with dangerous tools, and master knows or ought to know that servant does not know of danger. Elms v. Southern Power Co., 79 S. C. 502, 60 SE 1110. It is master's duty not to send servant into place of danger known to him, but if work is obviously dangerous there is no duty to warn except as to dangers known to master and unknown to servant, and not obvious. Ballard & Ballard Co. v. Lee's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 732. Plaintiff, while passing from one point to another within rolling mill of which he was night foreman, was injured by stepping into opening caused by removal during preceding day of planks over belt-pit, and of which he had no knowledge. Held master negligent in failing to warn him of new danger. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Knox, 140 Ill. App. 359.

No instruction is required as to incidental risks assumed by the contract of employment,[97] nor as to obvious dangers,[98] fully known to the employe,[99] or as well known to him as to his employer,[1] or which ought to have been known to him by reason of his experience and capacity,[2] or by the exercise of ordinary care,[3] that is,

96. Disalets v. International Paper Co., 74 N. H. 440, 69 A 263.

97. No duty to warn as to patent dangers, these being assumed risks. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405.

98. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8; Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ App.] 113 SW 158. No instruction or warning required as to danger from revolving cylinders with teeth perfectly obvious, even if inexperienced employe. Stolarz v. Algonquin Co. [N. J. Law] 71 A 57. No warning required that hands or clothing of employe might get caught in moving machinery of saw mill. Ramsey v. Tremont Lumber Co., 121 La. 506, 46 S 608. Plaintiff was sent aloft on pile driving apparatus to put iron ring on pile, and after he had signaled that ring was on and foreman had signaled for dropping of hammer, plaintiff tried to grab ring, which was off and his hand was caught, no duty to warn of such obvious danger. Mugford v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 7 Cal. App. 672, 95 P 674. No duty to warn mature man, who had worked on crane 3 months, of danger of getting hand caught in gearing which was in plain sight. Korsman v. Rice, Barton & Fales Mach. & Iron Co., 198 Mass. 126, 84 NE 311. Failure to instruct boy of 13 as to danger of allowing hand to come into contact with knives of machine not negligence. Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 97 P 843. Where danger of cleaning gin without stopping it was obvious to boy of 16 of plaintiff's intelligence, and he knew the danger from the saws and moving parts, and had twice stopped gin to unchoke it, no warning or instruction was required. Brammer v. Pettyjohn [Ala.] 45 S 646. No duty to warn employe of danger of working with icy, slippery timbers and tools on trestle, their condition and danger being obvious. Mellette v. Indianapolis Northern Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 432. Where work of repairing water crane consisting of raising up stand-pipe so that plaintiff could insert his hands and replace ball bearings, danger of fellow-servant's crow bar slipping and allowing pipe to fall on plaintiff's hand was obvious; no specific instruction as to work was necessary. Bolsem Iowa Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1098. Common laborer, working with dump car, had worked on similar car and on one in question 3 hours before he was injured by getting foot caught between descending cross arm and planking; that there was some danger to one in his position was obvious; held, not negligence to fail to warn and instruct him. Hanson v. Superior Mfg. Co., 136 Wis. 617, 118 NW 180. Immaterial that car was new, its operation being similar to one he had worked on, and danger being similar though greater. Id. Not negligence to fail to warn employe of danger of attempting to work between car and freight platform which curved to conform to track. Haring v. Great Northern R. Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 325.

99. Servant injured in falling from crane with which he was familiar; no duty to warn. Mohr v. Martewicz, 139 Ill. App. 173. Where servant working a curd-cutting machine, instead of using strips to press curd into machine according to custom, used hand and was injured, he was held to have known and assumed the risk. Dahlin v. Sherwin, 132 Ill. App. 566. Failure to instruct employe set to running electric motor not negligence where he knew all about it and its operation. Mitchell v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 Mont. 575, 97 P 1033. No duty to warn and instruct boy of 18 with year's experience as to danger of turning on too much steam into barrels filled with water to swell them. Stitzel v. Wilhelm Co., 220 Pa. 564, 69 A 996.

1. No duty to warn experienced man of danger as obvious to him as to master, and which arose during progress of work. Morgan Const. Co. v. Frank [C. C. A.] 158 F 964. No duty to warn where servant has as much knowledge of danger and of means to avoid it as master has. Brownwood Oil Mill v. Stubblefield [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 626. No duty to warn employe of danger of getting caught in cogwheels of machine he was oiling. Id. Woman fell over truck in walking through place of work in dark. She knew trucks were used. Held, failure to warn not negligence, her knowledge of conditions being equal to employers. Ahern v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 213. No duty to warn lineman of danger from non-insulated wire which was readily observable, he being an experienced man. Pembroke v. Cambridge Elec. L. Co., 197 Mass. 477, 84 NE 331.

2. No duty to warn as to known dangers of those obvious to persons of ordinary intelligence. Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 968. No duty to warn girl of 21, of year's experience, of danger of putting her hand into an unknown part of machine after she knew some change in machine had been made. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. O'Leary [Md.] 69 A 1068. Employe put to work at back of drop hammer to clean off anvil and obey orders of operator accidently stepped on treadle and hammer came down on his hand. Held, no duty to warn, danger being obvious to ordinary adult person. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 350. No warning or instruction required for experienced, technically trained operator of machine who got thumb crushed after watching machine 5 months. Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Rogers, 136 Ill. App. 36.

3. No duty to warn power house superintendent of certain wires, presence of which he ought to have known in performance of his own duty. Woelflen v. Lewiston-Clarkston Co. [Wash.[95 P 493. Not breach of duty to servant killed by train to fail to have watchman to warn him, it being his such as are discoverable by the exercise of that reasonable care which persons of ordinary intelligence may be expected to take for their own safety.[4] Usually the master may assume that an adult employe is competent and capable of appreciating the dangers ordinarily incident to his work,[5] but if he knows or has reason to believe that such an employe is ignorant, the duty to warn and instruct[6] exists. It is not negligence to fail to give warning of a danger not reasonably to be apprehended.[7] Where servant is injured while working outside the scope of his employment, voluntarily and without orders, master is not chargeable with negligence in failing to warn him of danger.[8] Whether warnings or instructions were or should have been given in a particular instance,[9] and whether warnings or instructions given were sufficient,[10] are own duty to look out for them. Brady v. New York Cent. etc., R. Co., 111 NYS 507.

4. No duty to instruct employe 22 years old, with year's experience, of danger of putting powder into hole within few minutes of exploding several sticks of dynamite covered with paper and ignited by cotton fuse, liability of explosion of powder by sparks in the hole being obvious. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8. Warning necessary only as to dangers unknown to servant or such that he would not be reasonably expected to know. Stolarz v. Algonquin Co. [N. J. Law] 71 A 57.

5. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8. Master may assume adult employe to be ordinarily competent and that he appreciates obvious dangers. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 350. No duty to warn as to dangers so apparent that one of servant's ability and experience may reasonably be held to have known and realized. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. Anyone who hires a laborer rightfully presumes that he understands the laws of nature which operate with uniformity, and there is no duty to warn of dangers which are patent to ordinary intelligence. Man killed by "cave-in" in gravel pit. City not liable. Slagle v. Averyville, 139 Ill. App. 423.

6. Hardy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 8.

7. The duty of instruction extends to such dangers as the master himself knows, or ought to know in the exercise of reasonable care. No recovery where machine in normal condition suddenly started, injuring employe. Rhobovsky v. New Jersey Worsted Spinning Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 170. Not negligent to fail to warn employe using straight emery wheel of danger of its exploding, such danger being very remote. Brands v. St. Louis Car Co., 213 Mo. 698, 112 SW 511. Instruction erroneous which allowed jury to find that failure to warn boy of 18 of danger of trying to save barrel of oil from rolling under moving train would be negligence, since no warning could be required as to such particular act and it did not appear that he could be warned after he started to do the act. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 486. Elevator operator was injured by reason of being pushed by employe riding in it and attempting to jump out over rod at top, as was customary among employes. Held, master could not he held liable for such injury by reason of failure to warn or provide safeguards, in absence of knowledge, actual or implied, of such custom. Johnston v. Enterprise Mfg. Co., 130 Ga. 143, 60 SE 449. Where repair train was sent out during storm to repair washouts, company performed its duty by sending proper messages giving warning as to character and location of washouts, and was not liable for failure of station agent to deliver messages, which failure it could not reasonably have foreseen. Graham v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 151 Mich. 629, 15 Det. Leg. N. 115, 115 NW 993.

8. Ship carpenter had no orders or authority to use "buzz saw." Marshall v. Burt & Mitchell Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 69 A 183.

9. No negligence of master shown where boy, who was injured by belt, had been instructed as to danger. Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 158.

Question of negligence for jury: Whether inexperienced boy of 13 should have been warned of condition of floor and platform in dark place, where he was required to work. Haggblom v. Winslow Bros. & Smith Co., 198 Mass. 114, 84 NE 301. Putting inexperienced man at work on cotton picker without instruction. Shaw v. Arkwright Mills [S. C.] 61 SE 1018. Whether boy had been instructed as to proper way to shift belt. Lehto v. Atlantic Min. Co., 152 Mich. 412, 15 Det. Leg. N. 242, 116 NW 405. Whether warning was given of movement of cars to car repairer. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Puckett [Ark.] 114 SW 224. Common laborer without experience in cleaning out boilers sent under boiler to let out water, without instruction, injured by hot water. Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 968. Engine wiper at work in pit under engine killed by another locomotive running into one he was under. Condie v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. [Utah] 97 P 120. Whether danger to factory workmen from injury by flying spawls or splinters of steel from hammers and steel being pounded was "recognized" danger so that master ought to have known it and warned employes. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306. Whether young workman in factory knew and appreciated danger of being struck by flying splinters or spawls of steel so as to relieve master of duty of instruction, where he had worked in factory two years but said he did not know of danger. Id. Whether warning and instruction as to oiling machinery should have been given inexperienced man. Wankowski v. Crivitz Pulp & Paper Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 643. A showing that plaintiff, who was injured usually questions of fact to be solved by reference to the character of the risk or danger in issue, and the age, capacity, and experience of the employe concerned.[11] The master may assume that instructions given will be followed.[12] The duty to properly warn and instruct cannot be delegated.[13]

(§ 3) E. Fellow-servants and vice-principals. Competency. See 10 C. L. 786—The master is charged with the duty of ordinary care [14] to employ and retain in his service only such servants as are reasonably competent to perform the duties for which they are employed.[15] He is accordingly liable for injuries to a servant resulting by attempting to remove goods from mangle while in operation, had been hired without question as to experience; that she had not been warned as to danger; that she was 13 years old and had worked about 3 months, is sufficient evidence in which to submit question of defendant's negligence to jury. French v. National Laundry Co., 31 App. D. C. 105. Instructions held to properly submit to jury question whether it was train inspector's duty to give notice of his position or switchmen's duty to warn inspector of their operations. Goess v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 104 Minn. 495, 116 NW 1115. Failure to notify servant of danger in method used by foreman to lower machine could be found proximate cause of his death by the overturning of the machine. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 136 Wis. 39, 116 NW 854. Servant injured on way to work by falling into ditch open for repairs; question as to whether warning was given was for jury. Clegg v. Seaboard Steel Casting Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 63. Whether employe had right to assume he was expected to use dangerous machine which injured him, by reason of nature of work and circumstances, held question for jury. Marklewitz v. Olds Motor Works, 152 Mich. 113, 15 Det. Leg. N. 125, 115 NW 999. Evidence warranted finding that boy of 14 was not warned of dangers of his employment in mill. Lane v. Manchester Mills [N. H.] 71 A 629. If boy was injured because of failure to properly warn and instruct him, it would be immaterial what the immediate cause of injury was. Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 97 P 843. Ordinarily it is for jury to say whether minor so appreciated danger that master was absolved from duty to instruct him; it is matter of law for the court only when proper inference from evidence is free from doubt. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306.

10. For jury: Whether operator of metal stamping press had been properly instructed. Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 574, 117 NW 187. Member of crew of track workers struck by train; whether proper warning was given. La Placa v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 111 NYS 797. Whether proper warnings and instructions were given boy of 17, killed by machinery about which he worked. Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1063. Whether minor servant, killed by machinery about which he worked, was properly instructed, it appearing that only general instructions were given. Id. Whether boss repairer sufficiently warned plaintiff, at work on car, of removal of signal flag, allowing switch engine to come on track. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Evidence held to show that plaintiff was not properly instructed as to danger of turntable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Galloway, 137 Ill. App. 296.

11. What is reasonable care in the matter of warning and instruction will depend in each instance on the age, capacity and experience of the employe, and upon the further fact whether the danger complained of is obvious or otherwise and the character of the work and the circumstances under which it is to be performed. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306. In determining necessity and sufficiency of instructions to boy, jury should consider his age and experience, surrounding conditions, the work to be done and manner of doing it, knowledge of boy and whether master knew or ought to know whether instructions were required. Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 97 P 843. Whether master ought to have apprehended danger of injury to boy from knives of clay mixing machine, whether he should have been instructed more fully than he was, held for jury; instructions laying down duty to instruct held erroneous. Id.

12. Employer had right to assume that girl of 14 or 15 would follow instructions. Civetti v. American Hatters' & Furriers' Corp., 124 App. Div. 345, 108 NYS 663.

13. See, also, § 3E.

14. It is master's duty to use reasonable care to employ competent servants, the degree of care being commensurate with the dangers to be apprehended. Seewald v. Harding Lumber Co. [Wash.] 96 P 221. It is master's duty to use ordinary prudence in selection of servants to ascertain their competency for the duties to be performed. Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864.

Ordinary care in selection of employes means that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment, consequences of employing an incompetent person, and in view of nature and dangers of business and hazards to other servants arising from incompetency of one. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. Where the service is one where lives and persons of coemployes will be endangered if the employe is incompetent, the employer is bound to make a reasonable investigation into his character, skill, qualifications and habits of life. Id. Personal examination of the employe may not always be essential; there should be such an investigation as will warrant assumption that employe has required qualifications. Id.

15. Servant cannot recover for negligence of fellow-servant unless for negligence in selecting him, or in retaining him after notice of incompetency. Harris v. De Farproximately from the incompetency of a fellow-servant,[16] if he had actual or implied knowledge of such competency[17] and it was unknown to the servant injured.[18] Notice to a vice-principal is, of course, notice to the master.[19] The time of a servant's employment means the time when he is assigned to the particular employment in question.[20] The employer is bound to institute affirmative inquiries as to the qualifications of a servant whom he transfers to a more responsible position for which special qualifications are required, unless the employe has given proof of his capacity in a similar position.[21] What constitutes incompetency in an employe varies with and depends upon the nature of the duties he is called upon to perform and the relations he must sustain to the other employes.[22] Proof of mere negligence is not usually enede Dampskibselskab [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 155. Under direct provisions of Code, § 1970, an employer is liable for injuries resulting from mere negligence of fellow-servant when he failed to use ordinary care in the selection of such servant. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co. [Cal.] 98 P 1063. It is master's duty to use ordinary care to select competent servants, that is servants of sufficient care, skill, prudence and good habits as to make it probable that they will not cause injury to each other. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Fact that competent servants are employed to perform other duties will not excuse negligent employment of one employe who is incompetent to work with them. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 875. It is master's duty to dismiss servants whose incompetency, arising from carelessness or bad habits, is likely to cause injury to others, and a want of ordinary care in discovering such incompetency is negligence. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988.

16. Master who knowingly employs incompetent servants is liable for injuries resulting from their incompetency. Di Bari v. Bishop Co., 199 Mass. 254, 85 NE 89. Employing or retaining incompetent employe renders master liable for injuries caused by such incompetent employe's negligence. Indiana Union Trac. Co. v. Pring, 41 Ind. App. 247, 83 NE 733. If the master employs an incompetent servant, having reason to know or opportunity to discover his want of capacity, he is liable to any other servant, himself in the exercise of due care, who is injured as the proximate result of some act or omission of the incompetent servant growing out of his incapacity. Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864. Master liable where molder, known to be intemperate and careless, fell when intoxicated and spilled hot metal on plaintiff. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 235 Ill. 146, 85 NE 274. That an accident resulted from negligence of an employe will make the employer liable only if it appears that it was due to incompetency of the employe, and that the employer was negligent in selecting or retaining him. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 369, 86 NE 150. Where act of employe, which caused injury, was due to his incompetency, which was known to master, latter was liable, notwithstanding such employe disregarded orders, since competent man would not have needed such orders. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Keefe [C. C. A.] 165 F 189. Master liable if common laborers were put to work running engine and hoisting apparatus to unload coal from barges, being incompetent for such work, and their incompetency being known to defendant's superintendent and being cause of accident. Bartley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 198 Mass. 163, 83 NE 1093.

To constitute cause of action, it must appear that servant whose negligence caused injury was incompetent; that injury resulted from his incompetency; that master knew or ought to have known of his incompetency; that he negligently retained the servant with actual or implied knowledge of his incompetency. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 132 Mo. App. 418, 112 SW 6. If collision of trains was caused by incompetency of conductor of one of them, and company knew of such incompetency or ought to have known and negligently employed him, it would be liable for resulting injuries. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. No recovery can be had by miner on account of fall of slate on him on ground of incompetency of mining boss, unless such incompetency is shown to be the proximate cause of the injury. Fuller v. Margaret Min. Co. [W. Va.] 63 SE 206.

17. No recovery for negligence of trolley tender where, if he was incompetent, it was not shown that employer had or was charged with knowledge of his incompetency. McKenna v. Curran [R. I.] 71 A 513. Master must learn of employe's lack of ability to understand English in employing him; cannot claim he did not know of it. Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864. Evidence sufficient to charge master with knowledge of stationary engineer's incompetency. McCalls Ferry Power Co. v. Price [Md.] 69 A 832.

18. Evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff had no notice of incompetency of employes by which he was injured. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. Corcoran [Ga. App.] 62 SE 130. Incompetency of fellow workman not assumed risk when unknown to plaintiff. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 235 Ill. 146, 85 NE 274.

19. Knowledge of superintendent, in full charge of work, of engineer's incompetency, chargeable to master. McCalls Ferry Power Co. v. Price [Md.] 69 A 832. Notice to master mechanic of incompetency of boss repairer was notice to company. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988.

20, 21. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672.

22. Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864.

proof of incompetency,[23] though the conduct of an employe on one occasion may show that he was incompetent.[24] Habitual negligence, however, is held to constitute incompetency.[25] The retention of an incompetent servant does not render the master liable for an act which is not negligent.[26] The master is not liable for the act of an incompetent careless fellow-servant if the act is not within the scope of his employment or performed in the course of his duties.[27] Whether a particular servant was in fact incompetent,[28] whether the master was chargeable with knowledge of his incompetency,[29] whether due care was used in selecting or retaining him,[30] and whether the injury was proximately caused by such servant's incompetency,[31] are usually

23. Proof of negligence of the servant is not proof of his incompetency. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 132 Mo. App. 418, 112 SW 6. Jury warranted in finding negligence in employing incompetent servant where he sent man who could not understand or speak English to assist in operating machine, where two men would have to co-operate and communicate with each other. Id. Brakeman who failed to start back to signal following train soon enough to stop it held merely negligent, not incompetent. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer [Ky.] 113 SW 433.

24. Conduct of an employe on one occasion may sufficiently show his incompetency, but employer would be responsible only for consequences following thereafter. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 369, 86 NE 150.

25. Habitual negligence constitutes incompetency. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 132 Mo. App. 418, 112 SW 6.

26. Keeping and retaining an incompetent engineer to run mine cage held not to warrant recovery for injury due to sudden stopping of cage, where jury found that his act in so doing was not negligent. Zeller, McClelland & Co. v. Wright, 41 Ind. App. 403, 83 NE 1030.

27. Master not liable where minor employe turned air hose on fellow-servant as a prank, causing his death, though master knew that he had been playing such pranks. Ballard's Adm'x v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 301, 423, 110 SW 296.

28. Evidence insufficient to show incompetency of boy of 15 employed to look after "chock blocks" at "knuckle" used to let cars down into mine. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 875. Evidence insufficient to show that operator of crane, who ran it over plaintiff, forgetting he was in the way, was incompetent. Ferry v. American Suction Gas Producer Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 458, 116 NW 1073.

Evidence held to sustain finding of incompetency of helper furnished plaintiff, operator of power drill, and that such incompetency was known to master. Kansas City Consol. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 889. Where conductor of freight train disregarded special order for movement of trains, and observed general rules, and collision resulted, held, evidence sufficient to show his incompetency in that he did not have adequate knowledge of meaning of rules and orders. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. Whether telegraph operator was incompetent, and whether engineer was ignorant of his incompetency, held for jury. Mahoney's Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 652.

29. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding that freight conductor was incompetent and that company knew or ought to have known of it. Lowe v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 678. Evidence sufficient to show conductor of work train incompetent to knowledge of defendant's superintendent. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 369, 86 NE 150. Intoxicated iron moulder tripped, spilling molten iron which he was carrying, causing it to explode and injure plaintiff, another moulder; evidence held to show that defendant could have known of servant's incompetency by using reasonable diligence. Railroad Supply Co. v. Klofski, 138 Ill. App. 468.

30. Whether master has made such investigation as is reasonable under all the circumstances is peculiarly a question for the jury. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. No liability for incompetency and negligence of foreman where no negligence in his selection was shown. Carroda v. Foundation & Cont. Co., 112 NYS 1082. Evidence held to warrant finding that boss repairer was incompetent, and that vice-principal ought to have known of his incompetency and was negligent either in employing or retaining him. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Whether due care was exercised in employing engineer to run donkey engine in logging, by whose incompetency plaintiff was injured, held for jury. Seewald v. Harding Lumber Co. [Wash.] 96 P 221. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding of negligence in employing freight conductor who was incompetent by reason of his ignorance of the meaning of rules and orders. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672.

31. Evidence held to sustain finding that conductor's incompetency was cause of collision and brakeman's death. Lowe v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 678. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding that elevator fell because of operator's failure to leave lever by which it was controlled in proper place when he stepped out of it. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co. [Cal.] 98 P 1063. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding that negligence of engineer caused bucket to fall on plaintiff. McCalls Ferry Power Co. v. Price [Md.] 69 A 832. Where one operator, plaintiff, got fingers caught in machine, and told assistant to turn power off, but he, owing to inability to understand English, which was unknown to plaintiff, turned power on, and plaintiff's fingers were cut off, assistant's incompetency could be found questions of fact. Statutes in some states fix the duty of the employer with respect to the employment of servants for the performance of certain acts.[32]

Negligence of fellow-servants. See 10 C. L. 737—A master who has used due care in the selection and retention of employes is not, at common law,[33] liable to servants for injuries resulting from the mere negligence of fellow-servants,[34] such negligence being on assumed risk.[35] But if negligence of the master, or of a vice-principal, concurs with negligence of a fellow-servant in producing the injury and if the injury would not have resulted had the master or vice-principal exercised due care, the proximate cause of injury. Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864. Evidence held not to sustain claim that collision was caused by engineer having epileptic fit, negligence charged being that engineer was employed with knowledge that he had such fits. Schoonmaker v. Erie R. Co., 113 NYS 1048.

32. See, also, § 3B, Statutes, and cases in Illinois under Mines and Miners Act. Pub. Acts 1905, p. 143, No. 100, § 3, provides that only competent and trustworthy engineers shall be permitted to run cages and hoisting devices in coal mines, and § 36 makes willful violation of statute, after notice by state inspector, misdemeanor. Held statute imposes duty of employing competent and trustworthy engineer, regardless of action of mine inspector. Layzell v. Sommers Coal Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 404, 117 NW 179. Statute applicable where plaintiff was engaged on Sunday in removing coal at bottom of shaft so that cage could be properly operated, and was injured by the cage while so doing. Capeling v. Saginaw Coal Co. [Mich.] 16 Det. Leg. N. 407, 117 NW 182. In action for such injuries, plaintiff was entitled to instruction that statute required employment of engineer, and that one not an engineer was not authorized to operate the cage. Id. Evidence sufficient to take case to jury where it appeared operator had been told of plaintiff's position but forgot and ran cage upon him. Id. Defendant liable if superintendent knew or ought to have known of engineer's incompetency. Id. Court should have instructed that plaintiff could not recover unless free from contributory negligence. Id. Also that defendant would be liable only if engineer's act was negligent, and in case he was operating car by permission of defendant. Id.

No recovery for injuries caused by fall of derrick due solely to negligence of fellow-servant. Ryan v. Farley & Loetscher Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 86. If piece of bolt was caused to fly off and strike plaintiff while being broken by fellow member of section crew, defendant not liable. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Jamison [Ark.] 113 SW 41. No recovery for death of brakeman caused by explosion of dynamite, loaded car of which had been placed next caboose instead of in middle of train, as required by rules. Kelly v. Delaware, etc., R. C., 192 N. Y. 203, 84 NE 801. Plaintiff fell into vat because of slippery condition of floor, or because of jolt by fellow-servant or both causes combined. Master not liable, both being due to acts of fellow-servants. McTiernan v. American Woolen Co., 197 Mass. 238, 83 NE 673. In action by street car conductor for injuries caused by obstruction in street striking him, held (in action based on theory that he was a traveler) that motorman, being a fellow-servant, owed conductor less degree of care than he owed other travelers. No discussion whether conductor was servant or passenger, under statute. Hinckley v. Danbury [Conn.] 70 A 590. Injury to plaintiff by being struck by plank removed from concrete form held due to negligence of fellow-servants and not to negligence of master in construction of forms. Wilson v. Brown [Pa.] 71 A 540. Servant who fell into coal hole, uncovered by fellow-servants, could not recover. Harris v. Det Farenede Dampskibselskab [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 155. Stevedores not liable for injury to employe engaged in loading vessel when they had furnished candles to be used by the men and place was lighted by fellow-servant. The Clan Graham, 163 F 961. Switchman could not recover for negligence of engineer without proving he was incompetent and was negligently employed or retained, the two being fellow-servants. Day v. Louisiana W. R. Co., 121 La. 180, 46 S 203. Craneman lifted ladle in such manner that it fell on deceased. Illinois Steel Co. v. Lulenski, 136 Ill. App. 332.

[S. C.] 61 SE 960. Negligence of fellow-servants in piling coffee sacks assumed risk. Bradley v. Forbes Tea & Coffee Co., 213 Mo. 320, 111 SW 919. Plaintiff injured by timber falling on him from car through negligence of workman held to have assumed risk of fellow-servant's negligence. Duffy v. Chicago, 137 Ill. App. 195. Where probable injury from negligence of another employe ought reasonably to be apprehended, such danger is an assumed risk. Lukie v. Southern R. Co., 160 F 135. Where a boiler inspector was injured while engaged in course of his employment by the falling of a boiler plate occasioned by act of operator of traveling crane, instruction that servant assumed only those dangers of his employment which were apparent or known to him, or which he could have ascertained, held erroneous. McAleenan Boiler Co. v. Lines, 132 Ill. App. 593.

master is liable.[36] The rule exempting the master from liability for injuries caused by the act of a fellow-servant does not apply when the injured servant was not at the time of injury engaged in the performance or discharge of his duty under his employment.[37]

Negligence of vice-principals (common-law and statutory).—For the negligence or wrongful act of a vice-principal or representative [38] or other employe for whose act or negligence the master is made responsible by statute [39] resulting in injuries to another employe, the master is liable, regardless of whether there was negligence in the employment of such representative,[40] provided he was at the time engaged in the Master is liable if his negligence concurs with an accident or negligence of fellow-servant without which injury would not have occurred. Yarber v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 235 Ill. 589, 85 NE 928. Plaintiff was injured by negligent act of fellow-servant in throwing baled straw through opening in ceiling of barn. Held master liable, since he knew of and permitted this method of throwing down bales. Standard Oil Co. v. Brown, 31 App. D. C. 371. Plaintiff was clearing away boards in factory yard, knowing others would be thrown down from window above and servant above, threw one out knowing that plaintiff was somewhere below. Held negligence of plaintiff and fellow-servant concurred in causing injury; master not liable. Schmelzer v. Central Furniture Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1043. Railway company not relieved from liability for negligence of engineer in suddenly starting train by fact that plaintiff's fellow-servant pushed him just as he was about to enter train. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Monell [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 504. Where servant was injured while engaged in raising a block and tackle by reason of the negligence of foreman in ordering work done in a certain manner together with the alleged negligence of his fellow-servants engaged in assisting him, the master was liable, regardless of whether the fellow-servants were negligent or not. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 140 Ill. App. 141. Shock to lineman was received by reason of tape with which he was making measurements containing copper wires. Held furnishing of such tape was proximate cause of injury rendering company liable, though act of fellow-servant, in shaking tape near live-wire, contributed. Murphy v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 112 NYS 149. Violation of custom of inspecting blasts resulting in injury made master liable though negligence of fellow-servant contributed. Bjorklund v. Gray [Minn.] 118 NW 59. If defect in brake on car was direct contributing cause of rear-end collision, negligence of fellow-servant in violating rule would not defeat recovery. Welch v. Jackson & B. C. Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 767, 117 NW 898. Where conditions allowed by master, keeping dynamite in open box in camp near tents, could be found cause of injuries by its explosion, fact that negligence of fellow-servant in setting fire to box contributed to cause accident would not relieve master. Froberg v. Smith [Minn.] 118 NW 57. Where sliding door was negligently hung and fell on plaintiff, concurring negligence of fellow-servant in closing it was no defense. Lochbaum v. Southwestern Box & Lumber Mfg. Co., 121 La. 176, 46 S 201. Where plaintiff and fellow-servant were acting under direct orders of vice-principal when plaintiff was injured, defendant was liable, though fellow-servant's act concurred in producing injury. Wade v. McLean Cont. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 919. Recovery justified where servant was injured through negligent starting of a car down grade by fellow-servant, it appearing that master had failed to provide proper brake. Pioneer Fire Proofing Co. v. Clifford, 135 Ill. App. 417. Master being negligent in construction of overhead platform, plank from which fell upon plaintiff, was not relieved from liability by negligence of employes in handling it. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125. Where foreman ordered men to proceed with loading on cable on wagon in method proposed by him, and injury to plaintiff resulted, master would not be relieved by concurring negligence of other servants, if they could be held negligent in avoiding injury to themselves. Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 407.

37. Brakeman missed train on which he worked, and in going back through the yards was struck by engine. He worked by the day and, his train having gone, was not on duty at the time. performance of duties for which he was employed.[41] The master is not relieved by the fact that the servant at fault violated his instructions if he was at the time performing a service for the master in furtherance of his business.[42] It is usually held that a failure to use ordinary care for the safety of other employes is negligence, rendering the master liable.[43] Whether this degree of care has been used in a par-

41. The master is not liable for the act of a fellow-servant, under a fellow-servant statute, unless the act complained of was performed while he was engaged in duties within the scope of his employment. So held under Rev. St. 1899, § 2873. Briscoe v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 130 Mo. App. 513, 109 SW 93. Plaintiff engaged in loading car was assisted by truckman, and was injured by fall of material being loaded, which was suddenly released by the assistant. Held, injury was caused by negligence of truckman who was engaged in his duties at time. Id. If one who is a vice-principal in fact is negligent, and one under him, in same department, is injured, master is liable, regardless of nature of negligent act. But if negligent servant is not in fact foreman or vice-principal of injured servant, master is not liable if negligent act is that of mere fellow-servant. Suderman v. Kriger [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 373.

42. Where engineer in charge of donkey engine left another incompetent man in charge, violating instructions, and such employe also violated his orders, and miner below was injured in consequence, defendant was liable. Lewis v. Mammoth Min. Co., 33 Utah, 273, 93 P 732.

43. Duty of train crew, knowing it was brakeman's duty to board train while moving, to run it at speed which would enable him to board it with reasonable safety. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 615. Duty of train operatives to use ordinary care to discover and avoid injury to persons on track. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 745. Duty of train operatives to keep lookout for persons on track and to use all means to avoid injury after discovering them. Houston & T. C. R. Co v. Burnet [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 404. Where section hand was ordered to ride in caboose in freight train, company owed him duty of ordinary care for his safety, and could not escape liability for injuries caused by car being violently kicked against caboose by lack of knowledge of train crew of his position. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Harmon, 85 Ark. 503, 109 SW 295.

Evidence warranted finding of negligence: Of foreman in giving rough order to men to throw tie on pile, in consequence of which pile fell on plaintiff. Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567. Foreman directed plaintiff to block up turntable to allow car to pass and said he would hold car until plaintiff was ready. He was negligent in releasing car. Causing it to leave track and injure plaintiff. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Foreman, vice-principal under statute, negligent in directing employe to open pipe containing caustic soda without knowing whether or not pressure was on, result being injury to employe. Haley v. Solvay Process Co., 112 NYS 25. Where plaintiff and others were unloading rails under direction and supervision of foreman, and one rail rolled on plaintiff's foot, fellow-servant rule did not apply, no act of fellow-servant being shown as cause. Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 108 Va. 822, 62 SE 972. Superintendent could be found negligent where he ordered plaintiff, in putting in window frames, to stand on beam on which crane ran, crane having passed over plaintiff's foot. Young v. Bradley, 114 NYS 164. Master liable where superintendent directed men to place coping stones on unfinished roof which gave way under weight, injuring plaintiff. Holt v. Milliken Bros., 114 NYS 250. Where vice-principal ordered servant to go into a part of mine known by him to be extremely dangerous to erect props, held that vice-principal's action was so reckless as to properly charge master with injury to servant. Tygett v. Sunnyside Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 77. Train crew. Flagman injured by violent coupling made with knowledge of his position. Meachem v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 879. Switch crew required to use reasonable care for safety of train crew, and master liable to member of train crew, injured between cars, due to reckless action of switching crew, injured man believing switching had been completed. Allen v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 423. Switch engine crew negligent in backing cars without orders, crushing foreman between car and post. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455. Running train at dangerous speed is negligence as to brakeman injured thereby, though speed was not unlawful. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Lasater [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 103. Negligence to place torpedo on track without warning section men or having flagman out with it as was customary. Galveston H. & N. R. Co. v. Murphy [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 443. Engineer, knowing presence of switching crew near cars, negligent in suddenly backing cars together, signal being to move forward; should have anticipated some injury. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Pennewell [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 758. Recovery for brakeman's death warranted where engineer negligently backed cars when brakeman was between them coupling air hose without waiting for signal from him. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bell's Adm'r [Ky.] 114 SW 328. Of engineer of switch engine in failing to heed switchman's signals, and in running engine up to and against car at excessive and dangerous rate of speed, and that such negligence was cause of injury to switchman on front of engine. Murphy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 390. Negligence of engineer in charge of engine in that he started it up suddenly, causing hook by which another was attached to pull out and strike plaintiff. Brosnan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 221, 85 NE 1050.

ticular instance is usually a question of fact for the jury.[44] If the master has employed a competent man, he will not be held liable for injuries resulting from a mere error of judgment.[45] In Kentucky, in an action by an injured servant to recover on

Failure of engineer to use means at hand to prevent engine from moving after he had sent fireman under it would be negligence. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 480. Where employe was injured in railroad yards by cars suddenly and violently sent down track upon him as he was crossing track. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Balliet [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 906. Where fireman was killed by derailment while engine was running backward at dangerous speed around curve. Milton's Adm'x v. Norfolk W. R. Co., 108 Va. 752, 62 SE 960. Employes engaged in moving heavy object ought to have foreseen liability of injury to plaintiff working near, as they knew, by such object falling and knocking over pile of doors on plaintiff. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Barwick [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 953.

Evidence insufficient to show negligence of dispatcher in sending out car with defective brake. Welch v. Jackson & B. C. Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 767, 117 NW 898. Action for injuries to conductor caused by alleged negligence of crew of another train. Held, evidence did not show violation by other crew of rules of company. Cheek v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 402. Engineer not shown negligent in moving train, causing brakeman to fall, where he testified that he did not see deceased's signal to back, but saw and followed signal of another brakeman to go forward. Matthew's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 459. Engineer, on receiving signal to detach engine, was not negligent in backing it, since this was usual and necessary, and he was not bound to anticipate that conductor would go between cars and place himself in danger unnecessarily in coupling air hose. Dermid v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 61 SE 657. Evidence insufficient to show any negligence of defendant where servant was killed by train, cars being prematurely moved, crushing him. Halbert v. Texas Tie & Lumber Preserving Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 592.

44. Brakeman thrown from car and killed on account of sudden jar due to alleged negligence of engineer. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844. Fireman thrown from running board of engine by jar in coupling. Whether engineer was negligent in starting engine and making coupling without warning. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 374. Brakeman was told to ride on engine pilot by conductor and while so doing was jarred off by sudden jerk due to defect in track or negligence of engineer. Atlantic K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281. Whether engineer was running train at negligent and reckless speed when bridge watchman was struck. Kitchens v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 1016. Engineer backed cars into others being unloaded and conductor was thrown out and killed. Negligence of engineer, and contributory negligence of conductor in giving orders to engineer, for jury. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Egan [C. C. A.] 159 F 40. Whether engineer was negligent in backing cars up to be coupled, brakeman being killed. Mahoning Ore & Steel Co. v. Blomfelt [C. C. A.] 163 F 827. Whether section foreman was negligent in ordering men to alight from moving train, and whether plaintiff was negligent in following order. Chicago I. & L. R. Co. v. Sanders [Ind. App.] 86 NE 430. Whether employes in charge of train and of plaintiff were negligent in starting construction train, causing him to fall as he tried to get on. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Tandy, 32 Ky. L. R. 962, 107 SW 715. Brakeman injured by sudden stopping of train. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Harper [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 1168. Whether train which injured brakeman was running at dangerous speed. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Lasater [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 103. Conductor of work train killed by switch being thrown while train was going on siding. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. King's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 196. Whether train which brakeman had to board while in motion was being run at dangerous speed. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 615. Whether hostler getting up steam on engine ought reasonably to have foreseen danger of running into inspector at work on another engine in yard when he backed it up without notice. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Cochran [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 261. Whether brakeman was negligent in throwing sack of ice off caboose which struck plaintiff, fellow brakeman, as he was about to board it. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Henefy [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 57. In moving dead engine on turntable, rope attached to live engine and passing round snatch block struck handle of turntable and broke it, injuring plaintiff. Whether foreman in charge was negligent in signaling engine to move. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Janert [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 963. Servant killed while erecting gas holder, side plate falling on him. Whether cause was foreman's act of superintendence, and whether such act was negligent, held for jury. Devine v. Hayward, 113 NYS 898. Whether foreman of tunnel work was negligent in ordering men forward to work after several blasts, roof being in dangerous condition and part of it falling. Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821. Whether foreman's action in directing raising of elevator just as plaintiff was about to enter was negligent. Boyle v. McNulty Bros., 113 NYS 240.

45. Master having employed competent and experienced man to take charge of dynamiting was not liable for mistake of judgment resulting in injury to fellow-servant. McHugh v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., 219 Pa. 644, 69 A 90. Master held not liable for mere error of judgment of foreman. Martin v. Degnon Cont. Co., 111 NYS 359. That foreman of telephone construction crew made an error of judgment in directing cable to be spliced midway between poles, instead of near one pole, did account of negligence of a superior servant engaged in work with him, gross negligence must be shown,[46] but in an action for the death of a servant, the statute authorizes recovery for negligence though it be not gross.[47]

*Determining of relation. Common-law rules.*See 10 C. L. 738—What facts are essential to the existence of the fellow-servant relation between two or more employes is a question of law. The existence of such facts in a particular case is a question for the jury.[48] The law of the place where the injury occurred controls.[49]

It is essential to the existence of the fellow-servant relation that the employes have a common master,[50] or at least be under one control.[51] Where an employe is furnished by his general employer to work as the servant of another, subject to the orders and directions of the latter,[52] he consents to, and does, become the fellow-servant of the latter's employes.[53]

It is commonly held that employes of a common master, working together in a common enterprise,[54] or performing duties tending to the accomplishment of the not make master liable, splice having parted and allowed plaintiff to fall. Tweed v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 114 NYS 607.

46. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844. Gross negligence for train crews to disregard running orders or for dispatcher to allow two trains to run on same track in opposite directions. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 33 Ky. L. R. 906, 111 SW 707. Gross negligence for employe to throw stove out of window into passway below where he knew other employes might be passing. Swann-Day Lumber Co. v. Thomas [Ky.] 112 SW 907.

47. In action for death of brakeman, error to require proof of gross negligence on part of engineer. Ky. St. 1903, § 6. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844.

48. Question whether employes are fellow-servants is one of fact and never becomes one of law unless the facts proven show such relation so clearly to exist that all reasonable minds will readily agree that such is their relation. Gathman v. Chicago, 236 Ill. 9, 86 NE 152. Where the undisputed facts show that the relation of fellow-servants exists, the question is one of law, but if there is evidence fairly tending to prove that the persons involved are not fellow-servants, the issue should be submitted to the jury. Whether a boiler inspector is fellow-servant of one operating traveling crane used for purpose not connected with the inspection of boilers was properly submitted to jury. McAleenan Boiler Co. v. Lines, 132 Ill. App. 593. Evidence being conflicting, whether certain man who ordered defective rope used was foreman was for jury. Shirk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 235 Ill. 315, 85 NE 262. Whether foreman had authority to act as such and order plaintiff to do work in which he was injured. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mahan [Ky.] 113 SW 886. Whether servant injured was fellow-servant of one who failed to give warning of movement of cars by which injury was caused. Webster v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 1080. Whether night boss was vice-principal, and whether he ordered plaintiff to assist him, and whether he was responsible for injury. Jasper v. Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining & Concentrating Co. [Wash.] 97 P 743. Court not justified in ruling that foreman in charge of men was fellow-servant of member of gang engaged in piling ties. Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567. Where engine repairer moved engine and caused steam to escape from cylinder cocks, thereby confusing plaintiff who was wheeling ashes up a nearby incline, causing him to fall, held that the question as to whether the relation of fellow-servants existed was properly submitted to jury. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cukravony, 132 Ill. App. 367.

49. Where common-law fellow-servant rule obtained in Tennessee, where injury occurred, that rule governed case in Kentucky court, though in Kentucky statute changes fellow-servant rule. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer [Ky.] 113 SW 433.

50. Employe of independent contractor could not be held fellow-servant of bridge gang of defendant, especially when at time of injury he was not engaged in his duties. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hollan [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 642. Engineer running elevator rented by his employer to a contractor was not fellow-servant of contractor's employes at work on building. Henry v. Stanley Hod Elevator Co., 114 NYS 38. Crew of street car owned and operated by one company are not fellow-servants to conductor of another car owned and operated by another company but using same tracks. South Chicago St. R. Co. v. Atton, 137 Ill. App. 364.

51. Winchman furnished by vessel from its own crew to operate winch while vessel was being discharged by stevedore employed by charterer, and who was subject to orders of stevedore during the work, was fellow-servant of stevedore's employes. The Brookby, 165 F 93.

52. Evidence held to show that plaintiff was so furnished to defendant. Munsie v. Springfield Breweries Co., 200 Mass. 79, 85 NE 840.

53. Machinist furnished by another held fellow-servant of defendant's employe, with whom, and under whose direction, he was engaged in repairing engine. Munsie v. Springfield Breweries Co., 200 Mass. 79, 85 NE 840.

54. Servants employed by same master, engaged in same occupation, such that they could foresee that negligence of fellow-servant would probably expose them to dansame general end or purpose,[55] are fellow-servants, though not at the time in question engaged in the same operation or on the same piece of work.[56]

The rule most frequently applied is that it is not the rank of an employe, nor the authority he exercises over other employes,[57] but the nature of the duty or service he is performing at the time which determines whether he was, at such time, a vice-principal or fellow-servant.[58] The duty of the master to use ordinary care for ger, are fellow-servants. Harris v. Det Farenede Dampskibselskab [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 155. Servants engaged in same general employment are fellow-servants. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954. Employes of same master, engaged in common enterprise, having common purpose, are fellow-servants. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 745. Servant throwing old lumber out of factory window, and plaintiff engaged in clearing it away below in yard, were fellow-servants. Schmelzer v. Central Furniture Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1043. Plaintiff engaged in washing floor of reservoir fellow-servant of carpenter on roof, whose chisel fell from roof on plaintiff. Taylor v. Washington Mill Co. [Wash.] 97 P 243. Defendant employed experienced man to build bridge, who hired such assistance as he needed, decedent being one. Man employed by defendant had supervision of work but was engaged with others. Held, he was fellow-servant of deceased, killed by fall of derrick which they were moving. Corey v. Joliet Bridge & Iron Co., 151 Mich. 558, 15 Det. Leg. N. 8, 115 NW 737. Plaintiff held fellow-servant of millwright with whom he was engaged in moking repairs on elevator. Christy v. Schwartzchild & Sulzberger Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 657. Candy mixer and man operating candy cutting machine, working side by side, fellow-servants. National Candy Co. v. Miller [C. C. A.] 160 F 51. Operator and assistant operator of metal press, fellow-servants. Ladiew v. Sherwood Metal Working Co., 125 App. Div. 65, 109 NYS 477. Superintendent and painter under him held fellow-servants at common law. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 125 App. Div. 846, 110 NYS 887. Mine boss and fire boss, required to be employed in mines by Code 1906, §§ 409, 410, are fellow-servants of miners, and owner or operator is not liable for their negligence in failing to keep mine safe, ample means of ventilation having been provided. Squilache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 62 SE 446. Boss of gang of 4 or 5 section men or track repairers is, when not charged with duties of master, their fellow-servant, even though given power to direct the work and give orders relative thereto not involving master's duties. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954. Both at common law and under fellow-servant statute, station telegraph operator and locomotive engineer, both working under orders of train dispatcher, neither having any control over the other, are fellow-servants. Strottman v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 211 Mo. 227, 109 SW 769. Motorman of street car and men operating car which collided with his, fellow-servants. Durkee v. Hudson Valley R. Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 537. Employes loading work train fellow-servants of engineer. Lane v. New York Cont. Co., 125 App. Div. 808, 110 NYS 91. Fireman of one freight train held fellow-servant of conductor of another. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. Act of another member of switching crew in signaling for movement of cars while plaintiff was between them was act of fellow-servant. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Brady [C. C. A.] 161 F 719. Members of 2 train crews engaged in switching, fellow-servants. Nelson v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 92. Wood cutter or sawmill employe being carried to place of work on defendent's logging train held fellow-servant of employes operating train, who caused collision by running into fallen tree. Roland v. Tift [Ga.] 63 SE 133. Locomotive engineer and switchman, members of same switching crew, engineer working under signals from switchman, fellow-servants. Day v. Louisiana W. R. Co. [La.] 46 S 203. Engineer on engine and engaged in inspecting it was killed by hostler's negligence in moving it, hostler having charge at time. Held, fellow-servants. Broadwater v. Wabash R. Co., 212 Mo. 437, 110 SW 1084. Brakeman fellow-servant of other members of train crew who loaded chain on platform of caboose, where he fell over it. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044.

55. Engineer in charge of engine which controlled bucket used to convey sand from scows to cars, and man engaged in adjusting bucket and chains, fellow-servants. McCalls Ferry Power Co. v. Price [Md.] 69 A. 832.

56. Architectural draughtsman employed by defendant, and who had office in defendant's building, fellow-servant of elevator operator employed by defendant, who carried employes of defendant to and from offices in building. Fouquet v. New York, etc., R. Co., 123 App. Div. 804, 108 NYS 525.

57. Error to refuse charge that superior servant rule does not obtain in New Jersey, and that jury must find that promise to repair hand car, made by foreman of gang, was authorized by master in order to relieve servant of risk. Cicalese v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 69 A 166. Foreman of gang employed in laying and repairing track is fellow-servant of members of gang. Id. Difference in compensation or authority of one employe over another held immaterial in determining their relation. Allen v. Standard Box & Lumber Co. [Or.] 96 P 1109. Power to employ and discharge men is not sole test of vice-principalship. It is act, not rank of servant which is decisive. Schmelzer v. Central Furniture Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1043. That foreman or boss had authority to and did give orders to a fellow employe does not make him vice-principal. Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel & Mach. Co., 105 Minn. 132, 117 NW 479.

58. In Minnesota the test by which to determine whether a person is acting as a

the safety of his employes being personal and nondelegable,[59] any person charged with and engaged in the performance of any part of that duty is a vice-principal, for whose negligence in the performance of such duty the master is responsible.[60] Thus persons charged with and engaged in the performance of the duty of the master to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place of work,[61] or reasonably safe appliances,[62] or to direct the mode of work,[63] or to employ competent workmen,[64] or to vice-principal or as a fellow-servant in a particular instance is whether at the time of injury he was entrusted with the performance of some absolute and personal duty of the master. Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel & Mach. Co., 105 Minn. 132, 117 NW 479. Neither the doctrine of separate departments, nor superior servant, nor the rank or authority of the employe, is controlling, the decisive question being the nature of his duty. Id. In determining who are fellow-servants, usual test is not whether one has power to direct services of other, but whether offending servant was in performance of some duty which master had entrusted to him and which master owed to injured servant. James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 391. The giving of orders relating to the doing of the work is duty of the master and nondelegable. The giving of mere "work signals" is detail of operation which fellow-servant may perform. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1008.

59. See, also, ante, § 3B, 3D, etc.

60. Any person to whom is entrusted any duty of master to servants is vice-principal. Salmons v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 162 F 722. Any neglect of duty owed by master to employes makes him liable regardless of questions of coservice. Brice-Nash v. Barton Salt Co. [Kan.] 98 P 768. Servant represents master in doing nondelegable act, though he also engages in work with other servants. Wiley v. St. Joseph Gas Co., 132 Mo. App. 380, 111 SW 1185. Any servant, regardless of rank or title, who performs, with master's consent, one of his nondelegable duties, is vice-principal. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1008. If master chooses to leave to an employe the regulation of matters which he ought to have provided for by specific rules, such employe will be regarded as his representative, and not as "fellow-servant" of laborers who do the work. Id. Test is not power to hire or discharge, but whether employe is entrusted with duties of master. Chesson v. Walker, 146 N. C. 511, 60 SE 422. An ordinary timberman, who on his own motion, tells one not accustomed to timber work in mines, and who had been taken away from his ordinary occupation of track laying, how to do the work, held, for time being, to represent master as vice-principal, although no authority had been conferred on him. Tygett v. Sunnyside Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 77.

61. Duty to provide safe place nondelegable. Devine v. Alphons Custodis Chimney Const. Co., 110 NYS 119; Bryant Lumber Co. v. Stastney [Ark.] 112 SW 740. It being duty of powderman to shift boss to keep place of work safe and give warning of danger, they were vice-principals as to common laborer at work below. Ongaro v. Twohy [Wash.] 94 P 916. Foreman in charge of digging trench was representative of master in matter of seeing that it was kept in safe condition to work in. McCoy v. Northern Heating & Elec. Co., 104 Minn. 234, 116 NW 488. Defendant liable where its general supsrintendent left vat of hot liquid uncovered, into which servant fell. Gilbert v. Elk Tanning Co., 221 Pa. 176, 70 A 719. Persons employed to take down slate in mine entry and make it safe represented master. Notice to them of defects was notice to master. Campbell Coal Min. Co. v. Smith's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 256. Relation does not exist between fireman on locomotive and superintendent of construction and foreman of bridge gang, both of whom were engaged in supervision of construction and repair of bridge, giving way of which caused fireman's injury. McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson, 209 U. S. 275, 52 Law. Ed. 788. Employe who excavated hole in floor of engine room for purpose of repairing sewer, and who failed to properly guard it, was not fellow-servant of plaintiff, who came to repair pump and fell into excavation, former employe being engaged in performance of duty of master with reference to place of work. Sparling v. U. S. Sugar Co., 136 Wis. 509, 117 NW 1055. Evidence warranted finding that engineer in charge of steam shovel who ordered plaintiff to work in certain place, and then without warning made it dangerous, was vice-principal. Raitila v. Consumers' Ore Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 490. Where switchman, ordered to move finished car, negligently failed to uncouple or unfasten car on which plaintiff was at work, and moved it also without notice to plaintiff, the duty of the master to maintain safe place was violated, and master was liable to plaintiff, painter, for switchman's act. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 107 SW 481. Cox v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 128 App. Div. 363, 112 NYS 443.

71. While engaged with other servants in common employment, foreman or boss is fellow-servant. Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel & Mach. Co., 105 Minn. 132, 117 NW 479. If the negligent act of a vice-principal was not done in the exercise of his representative authority, but was that of colaborer, it is the act of fellow-servant. Robinson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 730. Master not liable for negligence of superintendent of factory in performing delegable duty in detail of work. Ferry v. American Suction Gas Producer Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 458, 116 NW 1073. Where foreman assigned plaintiff to work of using the spacer in winding wire on lathe, but himself assisted and co-operated, the rule of fellow-servants applied. Allen v. Western Elec. Co., 131 Ill. App. 118. Where foreman ordered telegraph wire to be cut and strung over a live wire belonging to a third party, but himself assisted in doing it, injury to servant not chargeable to master, and instruction to that effect should have been given. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Nolan, 132 Ill. App. 427. Plaintiff injured while moving car wheel by reason of foreman's act in kicking it, causing part of conveyance to strike plaintiff. Foreman was in charge of

But the authority conferred upon and exercised by employes is often applied as a test by which to determine whether they are vice-principals.[72] Thus employes who are placed in absolute control or management of an entire business or of a distinct department of a business,[73] or who have charge of a particular piece of work with authority to control or direct the men engaged thereon,[74] are held to represent the master. One who is thus made a representative of the master does not lose his representative character by engaging occasionally in work as an ordinary employe.[75] foundry, with power to hire and discharge men, but was himself subject to yard foreman, and to superintendent who exercised active general control. Held, they were fellow-servants. Portae v. Griffin Wheel Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 648.

72. Superintendent who employed, paid and discharged men and directed work was vice-principal. Brown v. Lennane [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 852, 118 NW 581. Foreman held not fellow-servant of injured employe when giving order directing work of moving boiler. Jacobsen v. Heywood & Morrill Rattan Co., 236 Ill. 570, 86 NE 110. Master of barge with authority to employ help and direct all work was representative of master. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hartell [C. C. A.] 157 F 667. Master of vessel is not fellow-servant of members of crew. Fallon v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 162 F 329. Wire chief of telephone company under whose orders plaintiff worked was vice-principal. Texarkana Tel. Co. v. Pemberton [Ark.] 111 SW 257. One who had authority over men and work and entire supervision and direction was vice-principal of men under him. Hagan v. Gibson Min. Co., 131 Mo. App. 386, 111 SW 608. Boy was directed to assist operator of trip hammer and keep dies clean, and was told by operator soon after beginning work to assist in removing dies, and in so doing was hurt by hammer, which fell owing to operator's negligence. Held, that boy had right to assume that he was to obey orders of operator, and that latter was not fellow-servant. Avery v. Cottrill's Guardian [Ky.] 107 SW 332.

73. "Inside foreman" in charge of factory and men, with power to direct them, was representative of master in directing servant to assist in certain work. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 158 F 294. One placed in entire charge of foundry, with power to hire and discharge men and direct work, was vice-principal, for whose negligence in directing unsafe mold to be used master was liable. Hickey v. Caldwell, 221 Pa. 545, 70 A 855. One in charge of floor of factory, directing workmen, held not fellow-servant of plaintiff engaged in moving lumber in yard below. Schmelzer v. Central Furniture Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1043.

74. Employers liable for acts and conduct of persons placed in charge of work. Ballard & Ballard Co. v. Lee's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 732. Temporary absence of foreman who left plaintiff, common laborer, in charge, did not make latter vice-principal. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Beale [Ind. App.] 86 NE 431. Employe who took foreman's place during latter's absence held representative of master. Johnson v. Motor Shingle Co. [Wash.] 96 P 962. Person left in charge of work by regular foreman becomes vice-principal, for whose negligence in giving orders in execution of work master is responsible. Gould Const. Co. v. Childers' Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 1069, 112 SW 622. Foreman of construction gang with entire control of repair car, men and material. East St. Louis & S. R. Co. v. Hill, 133 Ill. App. 14. One having charge of a particular piece of work by virtue of authority conferred upon him by the master is a vice-principal. Foreman of switching crew. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Reddick, 131 Ill. App. 515. Where plaintiff, engaged as one of crew to replace boiler, under foreman's direction as to how work was to be done, was injured by explosion of gasket, it could not be held as a matter of law that injury was caused by negligence of fellow-servant. Ragsdale v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 71. Superintendent present, directing men and manner of work, represented master, and directing work to be done in dangerous way without warning made master liable. Connolly v. Hall & Grant Const. Co., 192 N. Y. 182, 84 NE 807. Powderman and shift boss, in charge of blasting and drilling operations, not fellow-servant of common laborer engaged in shoveling earth into cars. Ongaro v. Twohy [Wash.] 94 P 916. If employe entrusted with dynamite work and duty of removing unexploded blasts was vested with discretion as to time of removing such blasts, he acted, in so doing, as representative of master. Polo v. Palisade Const. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 161. Where bridge inspector was instructing new foreman as to location of bridges, but was himself actually superintending work of loading pilings, held foreman was merely nominal, but inspector real vice-principal, for whose actions master was responsible. Shirk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 22.

75. Superintendent acting as motorman in making test of car was not fellow employe of another motorman, but vice-principal. Latsha v. Shamakin & E. Elec. R. Co. [Pa.] 70 A 1002. Foreman in charge of repair car acted as motorman and ran car at such speed that employe was thrown off. Held not a fellow-servant. East St. Louis & S. R. Co. v. Hill, 133 Ill. App. 14. Section foreman, in charge of crew on hand car, directed men to run it at high speed to reach certain point before freight train reached it, and on suddenly seeing freight ahead applied brake, without warning, so that plaintiff, member of section crew, was thrown off and run over by car. Held, foreman was vice-principal though he himself was assisting men. Tills v. Great Northern R. Co. [Wash.] 97 P 737.

duties.[76] Thus it is held that employes engaged in different departments of a business are not fellow-servants.[77]

A child whose employment violates a statute will not be held a fellow-servant of other employes.[78]

76. Illinois: The test is whether the servants in question were co-operating with each other at the time, or whether their line of employment or usual duties necessarily brought them into habitual association, so that they might exercise upon each other a mutual influence promotive of caution. City's servant sent to make measurements on drawbridge not fellow-servant of those whose duty it was to operate the machinery of the bridge, by whose negligence he was injured. Gathman v. Chicago, 236 Ill. 9, 86 NE 152. Common laborer employed in clearing away debris while mechanics were making repairs and raising floor under direction of vice-principal was not fellow-servant of such mechanics, having nothing to do with them. Williams v. Morris, 237 Ill. 254, 86 NE 729. Doctrine of fellow-servants does not apply as between chief engineer in charge of unloading boiler and workman injured while working under his supervision. Heywood & Morrill Rattan Co. v. Jacobson, 140 Ill. App. 319. Death of servant caused by act of another servant working under a different foreman. Not fellow-servants. Illinois Steel Co. v. Jenco, 136 Ill. App. 555. Waitress riding on elevator and elevator operator are not fellow-servants. Cullen v. Higgins, 138 Ill. App. 168. Relation of fellow-servants did not exist between plaintiff who was injured by explosion of molten iron in mould, caused by defective vent, and other employes whose duty it was to make moulds and cores and to provide proper vents. The Sargent Co. v. Shukair, 138 Ill. App. 380. Street car conductors on different lines who may not meet at a crossing but at long intervals held not to be fellow-servants. Bennett v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 560. Craneman negligently picking up ladle without instruction from deceased, under whose direction he usually did it, held to be fellow-servant. Illinois Steel Co. v. Lulenski, 136 Ill. App. 332. Rule of fellow-servants applied to foreman who himself helped to unload timbers from car, one of which fell on plaintiff who straightened out timbers as foreman threw them down. Duffy v. Chicago, 137 Ill. App. 195. An engine cleaner standing upon tender of coaling engine, injured by starting of engine through signal of another engine cleaner engaged in same work of coaling, held as a matter of law to be fellow-servant to the other, and also to hostler in charge of engine. Heimberger v. St. Louis Iron Mountain & S. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 241. Helper to elevator man is fellow-servant, and cannot recover for negligent act of elevator man while in act of greasing elevator shaft. Latter not representative of company. Peterson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 141 Ill. App. 592.

Missouri: Only those employes are fellow-servants who are so associated and related in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct and can report delinquencies to a common corrective power or head. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 107 SW 481. Painter employed in painting cars, working under painters' foreman, held not fellow-servant of switchman whose duty it was to assist in moving cars which were finished as ordered, where switchman negligently moved car on which painter was at work, causing him to fall from scaffold. Id.

West Virginia: Persons engaged in the business of a common master, and so related that each in the exercise of ordinary sagacity ought to foresee, when accepting his employment, that he would be exposed to injury in the event of negligence of others, and they to injury from his, are fellow-servants. Kniceley v. West Virginia M. R. Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 811. Plaintiff engaged in loading lumber from one car to another held fellow-servant of switching crew who negligently moved car he was on, injuring him. Id.

77. The rule that servants in wholly separate departments are not fellow-servants applies to any large business where men are divided and employed in separate departments under different foremen, and not only to railroads. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 107 SW 481. Servants belong to separate departments when their services are so widely separated, so wanting in contact, that some unusual event must occur to direct results of negligence of one to the other. Lukic v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 F 135. Crew of one vessel not fellow-servants of crew of another, owned by same master. Fallon v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 162 F 329. Plaintiff employed on lower floor of mill to look after and oil machinery was not fellow-servant of employe engaged on second floor, having different duties, who threw out stave which struck plaintiff. Swann-Day Lumber Co. v. Thomas [Ky.] 112 SW 907. Mine employe whose duty it was to open door of entry on approach of motor, to open switch and place bucket of sand near door, held not fellow-servant of motorman, the two not being associated in work and latter having no control over former and having no knowledge of his qualifications. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co. v. Parker [Ky.] 115 SW 215. Plaintiff, member of construction crew, engaged in loading and unloading cars, was not fellow-servant of engineer and men engaged in running train, they being engaged in separate departments. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Tandy, 32 Ky. L. R. 962, 107 SW 715. Men employed to load cars, each working separately at different places, and paid according to amount of work done by him, were not fellow-servants. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Romas [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 157. Where two gangs of workmen under separate foremen were engaged in constructing telephone line, one in setting poles and other in stringing wires, members of two gangs were not fellow-servants. Ault v. Nebraska Tel. Co. [Neb.] 118 NW 73.

78. Where child under 14 was employed in factory contrary to statute, another employe with whom he was engaged in cleaning machine could not be regarded as his fellow-

Railroad employes.[See 10 C. L. 745]—Holdings as to the relation existing between railroad employes are collected in the note.[79]

Statutory modification of common-law fellow-servant doctrine.[See 10 C. L. 746]—The operation of the common-law rule that there can be no recovery for negligence of a fellow-servant has been limited by statute in many states. In other states, statutes supply the tests by which it may be determined whether an employe charged with negligence was a fellow-servant or vice-principal of the injured employe. In the notes are grouped, by states, holdings as to the validity and application of such statutes.[80] Fellow-servant statutes are not invalid because applicable only to rail-servant. Syneszewski v. Schmidt [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 509, 116 NW 1107.

79. Note: This collection of cases is merely for the convenience of those desiring to examine railroad cases. They are also considered in the preceding paragraphs in connection with principles under which they were decided. [Ed.]

Train crew, fellow-servants of employe, being carried to place of work. Roland v. Tift [Ga.] 63 SE 133. Members of two train crews engaged in switching. Nelson v. Southern R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 92. Train crew not fellow-servants of member of construction gang engaged in loading and unloading cars. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Tandy, 32 Ky. L. R. 962, 107 SW 715. Brakeman fellow-servant of other members of train crew, who loaded chain on caboose, where he fell over it. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044. Locomotive engineer and switchman, members of switching crew, are fellow-servants, where engineer moves according to signals given by switchman. Day v. Louisiana Western R. Co., 121 La. 180, 46 S 203. Two brakeman engaged in switching, fellow-servants. Matthews' Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 459. Members of switching crew, fellow-servants. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Brady [C. C. A.] 161 F 719. By common law of Indiana, conductor of freight train, and engineer and fireman of an engine operated on same track but separate from train, are fellow-servants. Wabash R. Co. v. Hassett, 170 Ind. 370, 83 NE 705. Engineer and hostler fellow-servants where both were on engine, former to inspect and latter in charge, and engineer was killed by hostler's negligence in moving engine. Broadwater v. Wabash R. Co., 212 Mo. 437, 110 SW 1084. Fireman on one freight train held fellow-servant of conductor of another. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. In the absence of proof to the contrary, an engineer will be regarded as superior to his fireman, and a finding by the jury that the injury to the fireman was caused by the negligence of fellow-servants is inconsistent with a finding that the engineer assured the fireman it was safe to go under the engine, although no precautions had been taken to protect him while there. Cincinnati, Hamilton & D. R. Co. v. Tangeman, 11 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 379. Conductor in charge of railroad train is vice-principal as to brakemen and flagmen employed on such train, and it is duty of latter to obey all reasonable rules and orders given by conductor in relation to work. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. Conductor and engineer of train not fellow-servants of master mechanic, injured while riding on engine. Tabor v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 210 Mo. 385, 109 SW 764. Crossing tender and switchman, fellow-servants. Dixon v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 936, 118 NW 946. Employes loading work train fellow-servants of engineer. Lane v. New York Cont. Co., 125 App. Div. 808, 110 NYS 91. Brakeman and car inspector not fellow-servants under statutes in force at time brakeman was injured. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes [Ark.] 114 SW 221. Checkman in charge of express and freight, and trainmaster who negligently operated cars, fellow-servants. Indiana Union Trac. Co. v. Pring, 41 Ind. App. 247, 83 NE 733. Section foreman, in charge of crew on hand car, held vice-principal as to plaintiff, member of crew, who was thrown from car by foreman's negligent act in suddenly stopping it. Tilis v. Great Northern R. Co. [Wash.] 97 P 737. Section foreman and roundhouse employe not fellow-servants of brakeman (under common law of Indian Territory). Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Wise [Tex.] 109 SW 112. Failure of section foreman to tell section man about train which struck him was negligence of fellow-servant. House v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 113 NYS 155. Boss of gang of 4 or 5 section men or track repairers is their fellow-servant, if not entrusted with master's duties. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954. Telegraph operator, as to failure to tell section foreman of delayed train, was fellow-servant of section man struck by such train. House v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 113 NYS 155. Station telegraph operator and locomotive engineer, both under orders of train dispatcher, and neither having any control over other, held fellow-servants. Strottman v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 211 Mo. 227, 109 SW 769. Train dispatcher vice-principal as to member of train crew killed by former's violation of rule as to running of trains. Salmons v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 162 F 722. Street car dispatcher, entrusted with management of cars, is "superintendent" under Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 2. Fitzgerald v. Worcester, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 105, 85 NE 911. Motorman of street car fellow-servant of men operating car which collided with his. Durkee v. Hudson Valley R. Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 537. Signal man of electric railway stationed at crossing to signal cars when to cross held fellow-servant of conductors and motormen. Cox v. Delaware & Hudson Co. 128 App. Div. 363, 112 NYS 443.

80. Act of Congress of June 11, 1906, commonly known as the Employer's Liability Act, changing the fellow-servant doctrine is not unconstitutional in so far as it affects the District of Columbia and the Territories, since its provisions are severable. Hyde v.

Southern R. Co., 31 App. D. C. 466. But see 10 C. L. 749, n. 86, 87; p. 704, n. 9, 10.

Alabama: Under Civ. Code 1907, § 3910, subsec. 2, making master liable for injuries caused by negligence of one exercising superintendence, relation existing between superintendent and injured employe is immaterial. Collier v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 487. Complaint alleging that plaintiff was injured by reason of negligence of superintendent in allowing work to be done in negligent and dangerous manner, as result of which rock rolled down upon plaintiff, held good. Id. Boss in charge of men in quarry could not be held negligent in ordering employe to shovel "sprawl" or loose rock in place where rock was liable to fall on him, unless he, boss, was superintendent charged with duty of seeing that place was safe or knew that it was unsafe. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Hammond [Ala.] 47 S 248. Employe at work in elevator shaft was struck by descending hoist, and sought to recover from defendant on ground that foreman negligently ordered hoist to descend without seeing if shaft was clear. Held evidence showed no duty of foreman to examine shaft before giving such order; hence no liability under Acts 1907, p. 595, c. 80, § 3910. General Supply & Const. Co. v. Shelton [Ala.] 47 S 593. Whether member of construction gang, thrown off car which collided with engine owing to failure of switchman to throw switch in time, was engaged at time about business of railroad, and in scope of his duties held for jury. Pear v. Cedar Creek Mill Co. [Ala.] 47 S 110.

Arkansas: Section foreman not fellow-servant of members under him, under Kirby's Dig. § 6658. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Harmon, 85 Ark. 503, 109 SW 295. Section hand not fellow-servant of train operatives, they being engaged in different departments, under Kirby's Dig. § 6659. Id. Brakeman and car inspector not fellow-servants under statutes in force when brakeman was injured. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes [Ark.] 114 SW 221.

Colorado: In action under Laws 1901, p. 161, c. 67, for death of "mucker" in mine caused by negligence of coemployes, where defendant claims that alleged negligent servants were acting outside the scope of their employment, the burden is upon it to establish such defense. Big Five Tunnel Ore Reduction & Transp. Co. v. Johnson [Colo.] 99 P 63. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding that men who did drilling and blasting customarily assisted "muckers" when latter were behind with their work; that defendant was chargeable was notice of the custom; and that men were within scope of employment at time of injury. Id. Notice of such custom by foreman would be imputed to defendant. Id. Evidence admissible to show existence of custom. Id. Where injury was caused by collision of loaded with empty tram car, evidence sufficient to sustain finding of negligence of servants in charge of loaded car. Id. Action under Laws 1893, c. 77, for death of brakeman alleged to have been caused by engineer. Proof that engineer was in charge of engine on defendant's regular train, without objection, sufficient, without contradictory evidence, to show that he was "in charge of locomotive" and so within statute. Brady v. Florence & C. C. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 321. Evidence was held sufficient to take question to jury. Id. Also question whether he negligently backed train against cars, between which brakman was, without signals. Id. There is no statute in Colorado abrogating fellow-servant rule, as Act March 28, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 161), never became law because not properly passed. Portland Gold Min. Co. v. Duke [C. C. A.] 164 F 180.

Florida: Gen. St. 1906, § 3150, limits rule that employe cannot recover for injuries caused by negligence of fellow-servants to cases where injured servant was guilty of contributory negligence. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761.

Georgia: Civ. Code 1895, § 2321, which raises presumption of negligence against railroad companies when damage is done "by the running of the locomotive or cars or other machinery," does not apply where engineer in charge of stationary engine in power plant of electric railway is person charged with negligence. Hubbard v. Macon R. & L. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1018. Brakeman does not assume risk of negligence of engineer or conductor under Civ. Code 1895, § 2323. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281. Railway employes do not assume risks growing out of negligence of fellow-servants. Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1011. Employes of a common master, engaged in labor for the furtherance of the general purpose of the business in which they contract to serve, are fellow-servants, within meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 2610, providing that, except in case of railroad companies, master is not liable for injuries arising from negligence or misconduct of other servants about the same business. Georgia Coal & Iron Co. v. Bradford [Ga.] 62 SE 193. Teamster employed by coal and iron company to assist in hauling boiler from furnace plant of company to coal mines, to be there used in getting out coal for use in company's furnace and locomotives, is fellow-servant with engineer and fireman in locomotive operated in yards of and in connection with said furnace plant, and he cannot recover for injuries due to their negligence. Id.

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, is valid, though applicable only to railroads. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954. Act not applicable where employe was injured by foreman's negligence while unloading rails from flat car, danger not being peculiar to use and operation of trains on railroads. Id. Character of employment and not character of employer is test by which to determine applicability of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, liability act, making corporations liable for acts of one in their service having charge of locomotive or train on a railway, resulting in injury. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Inzer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 444. Act held applicable where employe was killed by train on track of car manufacturing company, owing to negligence of superintendent who directed movement of train, causing employe on track to be run over, his position being known to superintendent. Id. Foreman of gang employed in bridge construction held vice-principal under statute. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Beale [Ind. App.] 86 NE 431. Complaint based on Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, sub. 2, demurrable, that section having been held unconstitutional by supreme court. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Applegate [Ind. App.] 85 NE 724.

Kansas: Gen. St. Kansas 1889, § 1251, making railroad companies liable for injuries caused by negligence of agents, etc., applies where trackman is killed while being carried home from work on defendant's work train. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larussi [C. C. A.] 161 F 66. Under Gen. St. Kansas 1889, § 1251, which exempts railway employes from assumptions of risk of negligence of fellow employes, the death of an employe, while being carried home from work, on a work train, in a collision between two trains, raises presumption of negligence of defendant, just as though he were a passenger. Id.

Massachusetts: Under Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, superintendent, present, directing method of work, remained representative of master, though he took hold of truck and assisted employes in work being done. Connolly v. Booth, 198 Mass. 577, 84 NE 799. Under the statute making master liable for acts of "superintendent," the common-law rule that a master is not liable if he furnishes suitable appliances, of which the servants select those which are unsafe, does not obtain. Doherty v. Booth, 200 Mass. 522, 86 NE 945. One in full charge of work of hoisting heavy casting could be found to be superintendent. Bowie v. Coffin Valve Co., 200 Mass. 571, 86 NE 914. Foreman who was in charge of pile driving and of moving apparatus, who directed the work, employed men, etc., was superintendent within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, though he also worked with the men. Robertson v. Hersey, 198 Mass. 528, 84 NE 843. Act of engineer in starting hoist engine not an act of superintendence, though regular superintendent was absent. Moore v. Curran, 198 Mass. 60, 84 NE 113. If superintendent selected or directed use of unsafe material for staging, master would be liable for resulting injury. Donohue v. Buck & Co., 197 Mass. 550, 83 NE 1090. Selecting compound pry (one timber on another) for use in moving pile driver could be found to be an act of superintendence. Robertson v. Hersey, 198 Mass. 528, 84 NE 843. Evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff's coemploye was superintendent in charge of department of defendant's business, and that his negligence caused collision between dummy engine and bucket car in which plaintiff was injured. Mattson v. American Steel & Wire Co., 200 Mass. 360, 86 NE 896. That employe, by reason of his experience, gave directions regarding the work did not make him superintendent. Stevens v. Strout, 200 Mass. 432, 86 NE 907. Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 3, making employer liable for negligence of one in charge of engine or train on railroad, makes manufacturer liable for negligence of engineer in charge of switch engine in factory yards. Hines v. Stanley-G. I. Elec. Mfg. Co., 199 Mass. 522, 85 NE 851. Street car dispatcher to whom is entrusted management of cars on tracks is a superintendent within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 2. Fitzgerald v. Worcester, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 105, 85 NE 911. Rev. Laws 1902, c. 106, § 71, cl. 3, making vice-principal one in charge of train on railroad, did not apply to electric roads prior to St. 1908, p. 370, c. 420 (which expressly makes it applicable to trains on elevated roads), and hence accident on electric road prior to 1908 law is not within statute. McGilvery v. Boston El. R. Co., 200 Mass. 551, 86 NE 893.

Minnesota: Under Minnesota Gen. St. 1894, § 2701, engineer's negligence renders mining company, operating ore railroad, liable for dsath of brakeman. Mahoning Ore & Steel Co. v. Blomfelt [C. C. A.] 163 F 827. In building track extension, pile driver was built on flat car and car was moved back and forth over track on trestle while it was being built. Plaintiff, carpenter, at work on trestle, was injured by movement of car. Held this was railroad hazard within meaning of statute. Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co., 104 Minn. 444, 116 NW 936.

Mississippi: Ann. Code 1892, § 3559, giving railroad employes right of action for injuries caused by act or omission of superior agent or officer, or person in another department, or fellow-servant on another train of cars or engaged about a different piece of work, is valid, railroad businsss being inherently dangerous. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. Where section foreman was walking beside track and was killed by car from passing train being derailed and falling over upon him, owing to negligence of engineer in running train at excessive speed over new track, decedent was within statute. Id. Test is whether injured employe is engaged in his duties and injured by other employes engaged in their duties. Id. In action for death of railroad employe, under Const. § 193, in order to take case out of fellow-servant rule, it is only necessary to show that engineer who was negligent was superior whose orders deceased was bound to obey; not necessary to show deceased was executing orders of engineer at time. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Washington [Miss.] 45 S 614.

Missouri: Rev. St. 1899, § 2874, makes all persons engaged in service of railroad corporation who are entrusted with authority, superintendence and control of other persons in the service or with authority to direct any servants, vice-principals as to such other servants. Section 2875 provides that all persons engaged in the common service of a railroad company, who, while so engaged, are working together at the same time or place, neither being entrusted with superintendence over other servants, are fellow-servants with each other. Foreman in charge of switching was not fellow-servant of brakeman whom he ordered to go between cars to adjust coupler, and then negligently allowed cars to "drift" against cars he was working between. McGuire v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. App. 677, 107 SW 411. Petition showing that vice-principal was assisting in loading trucks and negligently removed blocks from wheels, causing them to roll on plaintiff, shows that he was fellow-servant at time, within Ann. St. 1906, § 2875. Robinson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 730. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2874, 2884, conductor and engineer of train were not fellow-servants of master mechanic, who was injured through their negligence while riding on engine. Tabor v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 210 Mo. 385, 109 SW 764. Plaintiff, engaged in transferring baggage between defendant's trains, using elevator for purpose, was engaged in "operation of railroad" within Ann. St. 1906, § 2873. Turner v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 132 Mo. App. 38, 111 SW 841. Held, also, that fellow-servant's negligence in loading baggage on truck was cause of plaintiff's injury. Id. Negligence of fellow-servant not assumed risk under Rev. St. 1899, § 2873. Briscoe v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 130 Mo. App. 513, 109 SW 93. Work of reconstructing railway bridge with pile driver held "operation of railroad" within Rev. St. 1899, § 2873, making railroad corporations liable for servant's negligence. Huston v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 576, 107 SW 1045. Manufacturing corporation, operating several miles of tracks, with cars, terminals, etc., and employing men to operate them, held "railroad" corporation within meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 2873. Penney v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 212 Mo. 309, 111 SW 79. Missouri fellow-servant law does not extend to employes in candy factory engaged in mixing and cutting candy. National Candy Co. v. Miller [C. C. A.] 160 F 51. Negligent servant must have been engaged within scope of duties under Rev. St. 1899, § 2873. Briscoe v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 130 Mo. App. 513, 109 SW 93. Defendant liable for injury to car loader caused by negligence of truckman working with him. Id. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2873-2875, held not to give cause of action to widow for death of husband caused by negligence of fellow-servant, hostler; statute gives right of action only to injured person, not to his representatives in case of his death. Broadwater v. Wabash R. Co., 212 Mo. 437, 110 SW 1084. Laws 1897, p. 96, § 1, gives right of action to railroad employe for injuries caused by negligence of fellow-servant. Strottman v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 211 Mo. 227, 109 SW 769. But it does not give right of action to representatives of deceased employe for wrongful death, if death results from fellow-servant's negligence. Id.

New York: Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, making railroad employes having certain duties vice-principals, does not violate federal constitution. Schradin v. New York Cent, etc., R. Co., 124 App. Div. 705, 109 NYS 428. Proof that train intended to run on main track ran onto side track, collided with engine, and killed engineer, was sufficient to show negligence for which company would be liable, in absence of explanation by it. Van Suwegen v. Erie R. Co., 110 NYS 959. Statute need not be specially pleaded; if facts show cause of action thereunder, recovery may be had on proof thereof. Schradin v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 124 App. Div. 705, 109 NYS 428. Watchman employed to notify track employes of approach of trains is vice-principal under Laws 1906, c. 657, being in charge of "signals," and for his negligence recovery may be had for death of employe struck by train. Id. Defendant liable under Laws 1906, c. 657, where brakeman was injured between cars, because of conductor's negligence in signaling engineer to move cars without receiving signal for brakeman first, in accordance with rules. Brown v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 110 NYS 514. Under 1906 act, foreman of crew of railroad track employes was, as to duty to warn of trains, vice-principal. La Placa v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 111 NYS 797. Under Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, it must appear not only that negligence relied on was that of one exercising superintendence, but that he was engaged in an act of superintendence at the time. Droge v. John M. Robins Co., 123 App. Div. 537, 108 NYS 457. Where employes were to make certain incidental repairs in vessel, and were told to provide themselves with lights, foreman in charge was not chargeable with negligence in failing to close hatchway in lower part of hold, or in not seeing that plaintiff had light or was warned that hatch was open. Id. Servant of ship owners, in charge of plaintiff and two others, sent by defendant to make repairs under directions of such ship owner's servant, was not "superintendent" for whose negligence defendant would be liable. Id. Foreman had power only to signal for movement of crane and materials to be carried by it; its operation was entrusted to plaintiff, subject to orders of superintendent of another department. Held foreman's act in turning on power, being unauthorized, was not an act of superintendence, under Laws 1902, c. 600. Quinlan v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 191 N. Y. 329, 84 NE 73. Failure of superintendent to have red flag placed as warning that workmen were obstructing track held negligent omission of act of superintendence. Campbell v. Long Island R. Co., 111 NYS 120. Whether an employe is engaged in an act of superintendence or in mere detail may depend on manner of work as well as on the rank and position of employe in charge. Vincenzo v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 110 NYS 589. Railroad foreman or track supervisor, who directed loading of rails, was engaged in act of superintendence. Id. Act of foreman who had personal charge of hoisting sand by elevator, in directing engineer to raise it, in response to ambiguous signal, was act of superintendence. Boyle v. McNulty, 113 NYS 240. One whose sole and actual duty was that of superintendence was not fellow-servant. Deon v. McClintic-Marshall Const. Co., 114 NYS 28.

Oregon: Laws 1903, p. 20, making railroad corporations liable to employes for injuries caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default of any officer or agent of such corporation superior to employe injured, rests on theory of special hazards of railroad business; object is to induce greater care in selection of superior servants. Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76.

Pennsylvania: Under Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), pullman car conductor is fellow-servant of trainmen employed by railroad company and not a passenger. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 220 Pa. 317, 69 A 821.

South Carolina: Const. art. 9, § 15, gives employes of railroad corporations right of action for damages for injuries caused by negligence of corporation or superior agent or officer, or person having right to control or direct services of injured employe. One who is superintendent, controlling and directing employes in their work, does not cease to be such by reason of his performance of some act of manual labor. Whether alleged negligent employe was superintendent held for jury. Rippy v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 1010. Bridge watchman held not to have assumed risk of negligence of engineer in running train at reckless speed, they not being fellow-servants. Kitchens v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 1016.

Texas: Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, §§ 4560g and 4560h, fixing relationship of railroad employes, are valid, and applicable to all persons of a particular class, and affecting alike all employes of railroads. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, provides that every person, receiver or corporation operating a railroad or street railroad shall be liable for damages sustained while engaged in operating cars, locomotives or trains by reason of the negligence of any other servant or employe, notwithstanding fact that they are fellow-servants. Standard gauge railroad tracks operated by private corporation in connection with its factory, cars being run thereon with rented locomotives, held a "railroad" within the statute. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 460, 107 SW 539; Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455. Night hostler in railroad yard, engaged under superior's orders, in inspecting switch engine to see whether it was properly oiled, wiped, etc., was not engaged in "operation of locomotive." Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Cochran [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 261. Loading and transporting rails on push car and unloading them where required for repair work held "operation of car" within statute though mere unloading of standing car, or using it as convenience in section work, would not be. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 173. Decedent was employed by independent contractor in trestle construction for railroad company, and was unloading timbers from cars when killed. Held he was not engaged in "operating" cars or railroad (Rev. St. 1995, art. 4560f), and defendant not liable though negligence of fellow-servants as defined in arts. 4560g, 4560h, caused injury. Walker v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 430. Plaintiff was injured by car negligently released by foreman while he was propping up turntable to allow car to pass over it. Held they were engaged in "operating car" within Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, art. 4560f. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Brakeman did not assume risk of injury by sudden act of negligence of fellow brakeman in throwing sack of ice from caboose. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Henefy [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 57. Negligence of brakeman in throwing sack of ice against another brakeman who was about to board caboose in course of his duties was chargeable to company under Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, § 4560f. Id. Corporation running tram cars loaded with ties in course of its work of creosoting same held not within Rev. St. 1879, art. 2899, making common carriers liable for injuries to servants caused by act or omission of another servant or agent. Halbert v. Texas Tie & Lumber Preserving Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 592. To constitute servants fellow-servants under Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, § 4560f, they must be in same grade of employment; they must be doing the same character of work or service; must be working together at same time and place and at same piece of work; and must be working to common purpose. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4560g, makes fellow-servants all persons (employes of railroad or street railway company) engaged in common service in same grade of employment, who are doing same character of work, and are working together at same time and place, at the same piece of work, and for common purpose. Night hostler in railway yard, engaged, under orders of superior, in inspecting switch engine to see that it was properly oiled, wiped, etc., was not fellow-servant of another hostler putting steam into another switch engine. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Cochran [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 261. Under Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, § 4560g, test of vice-principalship is whether servant had authority to direct other employes, superintendency over them. Mill carpenter held vice-principal as to helpers whom he directed in their work. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Foreman who directed plaintiff's work held vice-principal for whose negligence master was liable. Id. Power to employ and discharge other servants is not test of vice-principalship under statute. Id. Car repairer, at work on car, held not fellow-servant of two other employes engaged in carpenter shed but doing other work at a different place. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Barwick [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 953. Pleading authorized submission, and evidence warranted finding, of negligence of fellow employes in dropping rail on plaintiff while they were unloading it. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 173.

Utah: Laborer engaged in construction of railroad bed fellow-servant of negligent brakeman on construction train hauling gravel, under Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 1343, defining fellow-servants. Lukic v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 F 135. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 1343, makes fellow-servants all persons engaged in service of same employer, who are employed in same grade of service and working together at same time and place to a common purpose, neither having power of control or superintendency, servants in different departments not being within the rule. Id. "Working together" means physical nearness at time of injury, coupled with common purpose of labors, nearness required being only such as to arouse in one reasonable apprehension of probable danger from negligence of other. Id. Operator of donkey engine in mine not fellow-servant of miner at work at bottom of shaft under Rev. St. 1898, § 1343. Lewis v. Mammoth Min. Co., 33 Utah, 273, 93 P 732.

Virginia: Const. 1902, § 162, abolishing fellow-servant defense as to employes of railway companies engaged in physical construction, repair or maintenance of roadbed or structure connected with railroad, applies where work consists in removing rotten timber from pier preliminary to restoring it. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hoffman [Va.] 63 SE 432. The statute does not deny equal protection of law. Id. Const. art. 12, § 162, which abolishes fellow-servant doctrine so far as employes of railroad companies are concerned, does not apply to employes of street electric railways. Norfolk & Portsmouth Trac. Co. v. Ellington's Adm'r, 108 Va. 245, 61 SE 779.

Wisconsin: Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, making railroad companies liable for injuries to employes caused by negligence of fellow employes in whole or in greater part, is not invalid because applying only to railroads, since hazards are peculiar. Kiley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 309. Nor does fact that act does not apply to office or shop employes invalidate it. Id. Complaint alleging injury caused by negligence of fellow employes while they and plaintiff were engaged in taking down wire fence along right of way of railroad held to state cause of action under Laws 1907, p. 495, c.

roads.[81] The classification refers to the character of the employment and not to the employer, and is proper in view of the peculiar hazards incident to the operation of railroads.[82] Acts which include only railroad employes apply only when the injury is a result of some danger or hazard peculiar to the use or operation of railroads.[83] The Missouri act does not confer a right of action on the representative or heirs of a deceased employe.[84]

(§ 3) F. Risks assumed by servant. Nature of defense.[See 10 C. L. 749]—There can be no recovery for injuries resulting from a defect or danger, the risk of injury from which was assumed by the servant.[85] The assumption of a particular risk will not, however, defeat recovery for injuries resulting from a defect or danger which was not an assumed risk.[86] Assumption of risk is said to be a matter of contract express or implied;[87] contributory negligence is a matter of conduct.[88] They are distinct.

254, employes being railroad employes and not office or shop employes. Id.

81. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, is valid. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954. Ann. Code 1892, § 3559, abolishing to some extent fellow-servant defense as to railroad employes, is constitutional. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. Const. 1902, § 162, abolishing fellow-servant defense as to employes of railroad companies, is valid. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hoffman [Va.] 63 SE 432. Sayles' Ann. St. 1897, §§ 4560g, 4560h, fixing relationship of railroad employee, and modifying common-law fellow-servant doctrine as to railroad employes, is valid. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601. Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, making certain classes of railroad employes vice-principals, does not violate federal constitution. Schradin v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 124 App. Div. 705, 109 NYS 428. Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, is valid though applicable only to railroad employes engaged in operation; not applicable to office or shop employes. Kiley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 309.

82. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954.

83. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kinney [Ind.] 85 NE 954, citing Iowa and Minnesota cases under similar statutes. The Indiana act is for exclusive benefit of those who are, in the course of their employment, exposed to the particular dangers incident to the use and operation of railroad engines and trains, and whose injuries are caused thereby. The injured employe need not, however, be connected with the movement of trains; it is sufficient if he is, in performing his duties, brought into a situation where he is, without fault, exposed to dangers and perils flowing from such operation and movement and is by reason thereof injured by negligence of fellow-servant. Id. Employe not entitled to benefit of act who was injured by reason of former's negligence in placing skids on flat car by which rails were being unloaded, skid falling, causing rail to strike plaintiff. Id.

84. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2873-2875, gives right of action for injuries to servant but not right of action for his death, caused by negligence of one who is vice-principal under statute. Strottman v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 211 Mo. 227, 109 SW 769; Broadwater v. Wabash R. Co., 212 Mo. 437, 110 SW 1084.

85. Plaintiff may be nonsuited on ground of having assumed risk, notwithstanding Laws 1902, c. 600, § 3, where action is at common law. Bushtis v. Catskill Cement Co., 113 NYS 294. One casually employed on barge to load coal on vessel does not become a seaman; he assumes risks as ordinary employe does. Oregon Round Lumber Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 162 F 912.

86. Though section hand knew of defective condition of track, which contributed to cause his death, yet recovery could be had for negligence in failing to warn him of change in brake shoes of car, which resulted in its sudden stop, throwing him off. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Witt [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1012. That brakeman assumed risks arising from defects in coupling apparatus and in manner of loading flat car would not defeat recovery for negligence of employes in backing cars without notice or signal. Texas & N. R. Co. v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 697.

87. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518; Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. of South Carolina [S. C.] 62 SE 848. Assumption of risk rests on agreement, express or implied, that master shall not be liable for injuries incident to service resulting from known or obvious danger. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740; Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910; Graves v. Gustave Stickley Co., 125 App. Div. 132, 109 NYS 256; Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway [Okl.] 99 P 153; Buena Vista Extract Co. v. Hickman, 108 Va. 665, 62 SE 804. Assumption of risk rests in law of contract, and involves an implied agreement by an employe to assume risks ordinarily incident to employment, or a waiver after full knowledge of an extraordinary risk, of his right to hold master liable. James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 391. Assumption of risk rests upon contract. Plaintiff, employed as cook on work train, was not regular employe of company, and did not assume risk of violent and unusual stop of car in which she was performing her work. Tinkle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 212 Mo. 445, 110 SW 1086.

NOTE. Assumption of risk not strictly a contractual rule: The legal basis of the doctrine of assumption of risk is a matter upon which courts and text writers seem unable to agree. Since, in its most usual form, the disability arises with a contract of hiring and exists only during the life of the contract, it has been said to arise from contract, more especially to distinguish and separate defenses, though they may arise out of the same facts,[89] the distinction being pointed out in a number of cases.[90] There is a direct conflict of authority as to whether a servant assumes a risk arising from the master's violation of a positive statutory requirement designed to promote safety of employment.[91] In New York, it from contributory negligence, which is wholly a question of conduct. Some courts hold squarely that the doctrine is contractual, and, reasoning upon that basis, apply to a greater or less extent the rules applicable to implied contracts. This appears to be the view of the courts which hold that a master's violation of a statutory duty bars the defense of assumption of risk with reference to such disregard of duty (see note, infra). It is pointed out, however, that the relation of assumed risk lacks all of the elements of an implied contract and that the actions arising thereon are ex delicto. Dresser, Employer's Liability, §§ 82-88, 116; Jaggard, Torts, p. 23. The contractual theory is rejected in the best considered modern opinions in which the tendency is to base the doctrine upon the maxim "volenti non fit injuria." The conflict of authorities is discussed at length by Jaggard, J., in Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. [Minn.] 120 NW 360.

88. Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 720; Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518.

89. Knox v. American Rolling Mill Corp., 236 Ill. 437, 86 NE 90; Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518. Contributory negligence and assumption of risk are separate and distinct defenses resting upon different grounds. Bowen v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 219 Pa. 405, 68 A 963. In Wisconsin, assumption of risk has been to certain extent identified with contributory negligence, but it is said that some degree of discrimination has been made. See cases collected in Campshure v. Standard Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 633.

90. For discussion of contract theory of assumption of risk, and distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, and their relation to facts as proved, see Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 720. Assumption of risk and contributory negligence distinguished. Holland v. Durham Coal & Coke Co. [Ga.] 63 SE 290. Distinctions between two defenses discussed. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722. Contributory negligence and asumption of risk are separate defenses and rest upon different basis, though both may arise from same facts; and, where danger is obvious, the two defenses are tested by same standard, and differences are theoretical rather than practical. Id. But distinction is vital where question of contributory negligence would be one of fact, and assumption of risk one of law, as where statutory duty is violated. Id.

See, also, 6 C. L. 565, and note.

91. NOTE. Assumption of risk as modified by master's disregard of a statutory duty: Whether a statute imposing duties upon a master abrogates by implication the defense of assumption of risk with regard to injuries consequent upon disregard of such statutory duty is a point upon which the courts are in direct conflict. That there is no such implication and that consequently the risk may be assumed by the servant is held in the following states:

Alabama: Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Banks, 104 Ala. 508, 16 S 547; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stutts, 105 Ala. 368, 17 S 29, 53 Am. St. Rep. 127; Birmingham R. & Elec. Co. v. Allen, 99 Ala. 359, 13 S 8, 20 L. R. A. 457, (overruling Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Holborn, 84 Ala. 133, 4 S 146 and Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Walters, 91 Ala. 435, 8 S 357).

Iowa: Martin v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 148, 91 NW 1034, 59 L. R. A. 698, 96 Am. St. Rep. 371; Sutton v. Des Moines Bakery Co., 135 Iowa, 390, 112 NW 836.

Massachusetts: Marshall v. Norcross, 191 Mass. 568, 77 NE 1151; O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co., 158 Mass. 135, 32 NE 1119, 47 L. R. A. 161; Keenan v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 159 Mass. 379, 34 NE 366; Goodridge v. Washington Mills Co., 160 Mass. 234, 35 NE 484.

Minnesota: Fleming v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 27 Minn. 111, 6 NW 448; Anderson v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co., 67 Minn. 79, 69 NW 630; Swenson v. Osgood & Blodgett Mfg. On the other hand, many states hold that violation of a statutory duty bars the defense of assumption of risk, as follows:

Arkansas: Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722 (overruling Patterson Coal Co. v. Poe, 81 Ark. 343, 99 SW 538); Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 92 SW 244, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 837; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168; Mammoth Vein Coal Co. v. Bublis, 83 Ark. 567, 104 SW 210.

Illinois: Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 210 Ill. 342, 71 NE 3711, but otherwise in the case of city ordinances. Browne v. Siegel, Cooper & Co., 191 Ill. 226, 60 NE 815; Chicago Packing & P. Co. v. Rohan, 47 Ill. App. 640; Munn v. L. Wolff Mfg. Co., 94 Ill. App. 122. See, also, Swift v. Fue, 66 Ill. App. 651; Swift & Co. v. Miller, 139 Ill. App. 192.

Indiana: Green v. American Car & Foundry Co., 163 Ind. 135, 71 NE 268; La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender [Ind. App.] 71 NE 922; Buehner Chair Co. v. Feulner, 28 Ind. App. 479, 63 NE 239; Brower v. Locke, 31 Ind. App. 353, 67 NE 1015; Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon [Ind. App.] 85 NE 832; Robbins v. Fort Wayne Iron & Steel Co., 41 Ind. App. 557, 84 NE 514; Muncie Pulp Co. v. Hacker, 37 Ind. App. 194, 76 NE 770; Blanchard-Hamilton Furniture Co. v. Colvin, 32 Ind. App. 398, 69 NE 1032; Chamberlain v. Waymire, 32 Ind. App. 442, 68 NE 306, 70 NE 81; Espenlaub v. Ellis, 34 Ind. App. 163, 72 NE 527; Nickey v. Dougan, 34 Ind. App. 601, 73 NE 288; Monteith v. Kokomo Wood Enameling Co., 159 Ind. 149, 64 NE 610, 58 L. R. A. 944; Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 NE 1103, 65 NE 1026; Buehner Chair Co. v. Feulner, 164 Ind. 368, 73 NE 816; Brower v. Locke, 31 Ind. App. 353, 67 NE 1015; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 169 Ind. 3, 80 NE 845; United States Cement Co. v. Cooper [Ind. App.] 82 NE 981; Antioch Coal Co. v. Rockey, 169 Ind. 247, 82 NE 76; Indianapolis U. R. Co. v. Waddington, 169 Ind. 448, 82 NE 1030; Indianapolis, St. R. Co. v. Kane, 169 Ind. 25, 80 NE 841; Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson, 166 Ind. 290, 76 NE 1060; Davis Coal Co. v. Polland, 158 Ind. 607, 62 NE 492, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319; Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 164 Ind. 413, 73 NE 899; Indiana & C. Coal Co. v. Neal [Ind. App.] 76 NE 627; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Clark, 32 Ind. App. 644, 70 NE 828; Bodell v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 25 Ind. App. 654, 58 NE 865, and the same with regard to city ordinances, Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 152 Ind. 345, 53 NE 290, 44 L. R. A. 638; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Peterson, 156 Ind. 364, 59 NE 1044; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lawrence, 169 Ind. 319, 79 NE 363.

Kansas: Western Furniture & Mfg. Co. v Bloom, 76 Kan. 127, 90 P 821, 123 Am. St. Rep. 123; Fowler Packing Co. v. Enzenperger, 77 Kan. 406, 94 P 995; Kansas Buff Brick & Mfg. Co. v. Stark, 77 Kan. 648, 95 P 1047; Henschell v. Union P. R. Co. [Kan.] 96 P 857.

Louisiana: Hailey v. Texas & P. R. Co., 113 La. 633, 37 S 131.

Michigan: Murphy v. Grand Rapids Veneer Works, 142 Mich. 677, 106 NW 211; Sipes v. Michigan Starch Co., 137 Mich. 258, 100 NW 447; Layzell v. J. H. Somers Coal Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 404, 117 NW 179; Capeling v. Saginaw Coal Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 407, 117 NW 182; Syneszewski v. Schmidt [Mich.] 16 Det. Leg. N. 509, 116 NW 1107; Little v. Bausfield & Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Missouri: McGinnis v. R. M. Rigby Print. Co., 122 Mo. App. 227, 99 SW 4; Durant v. Lexington Coal Min. Co., 97 Mo. 62, 10 SW 484; Bair v. Heibel, 103 Mo. App. 621, 77 SW 1017; Hamman v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 156 Mo. 232, 56 SW 1091; Stafford v. Adams, 113 Mo. App. 717, 88 SW 1130, but otherwise as to contributory negligence. Spiva v. Osage C. & M. Co., 88 Mo. 68.

Oregon: Hill v. Saugestad [Or.] 98 P 524.

Washington: Green v. Western American Co., 30 Wash. 87, 70 P 310; Hall v. West & Slade Mill. Co., 39 Wash. 447, 81 P 915; Hoveland v. Hall Bros. Marine R. & Ship-necessary risks are assumed as a matter of law; whether other risks are assumed is a question for the jury.[92] Negligence of an employe for whose conduct the master is made responsible by statute is not an assumed risk.[93] building Co., 41 Wash. 164, 82 P 1090; Daffron v. Majestic Laundry Co., 41 Wash. 65, 82 P 1089; Gustafson v. West Lumber Co. [Wash.] 97 P 1094; Whelan v. Washington Lumber Co., 41 Wash. 153, 83 P 98; Erickson v. McNeeley & Co., 41 Wash. 509, 84 P 3, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1006; Thomson v. Issaquah Shingle Co., 43 Wash. 253, 86 P 588; Rector v. Union Mill Co., 45 Wash. 199, 88 P 130; Nottage v. Sawmill Phoenix, 133 F 979.

Certain Statutes are held to more or less expressly bar the defense of assumption of risk as to certain employments. Bryce v. Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co., 119 Iowa, 274, 93 NW 275; Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Filippo, 138 Ala. 487, 35 S 457; Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Blomberg, 141 Ala. 258, 37 S 395; Taylor v. Boston & M. R. Co., 188 Mass. 390, 74 NE 591; Winkler v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 4 Penn. [Del.] 80, 53 A 90; Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 601; Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Trijerina [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 239; El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Foth [Tex. Civ. App.] 18 Tex. Ct. Rep. 610, 100 SW 171; Perrotta v. Richmond Brick Co., 123 App. Div. 626, 108 NYS 10; Anderson v. Milliken Bros., 123 App. Div. 614, 108 NYS 61; Bolen-Darnall Coal Co. v. Williams, 7 Ind. T. 648, 104 SW 867; Klotz v. Power & Min. Mach. Co., 136 Wis. 107, 116 NW 770; Chicago, G. W. R. v. Crotty [C. C. A.] 141 F 913; Inland Steel Co. v. Kachwinski [C. C. A.] 151 F 219. Of such effect is the federal statute requiring the use of automatic couplers upon cars used in interstate commerce (Act March 2, 1893; Johnson v. Southern P. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 49 Law. Ed. 363, rvg. 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 F 462; Chlemmer v. Buffalo R. & P. R. Co., 205 U. S. 1, 51 Law. Ed. 681, rvg. 207 Pa. 198, 56 A 417; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Arrighi, 63 C. C. A. 649, 129 F 347; Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 165 F 869; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Curtis, 134 Ill. App. 565; York v St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 110 SW 803; Turrittin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 95 Minn. 408, 104 NW 225; Austin v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 3 Ga. App. 775, 61 SE 998; Southern P. R. Co. v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 202, 106 SW 441), and in certain states the defense is generally abolished by statute or constitutional provision (North Carolina. Coley v. North Carolina R. Co., 128 N. C. 534, 39 SE 43, 129 N. C. 407, 40 SE 195, 52 L. R. A. 817; Cogdell v. Southern R. Co., 129 N. C. 398, 40 SE 202; Thomas v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 129 N. C. 392, 40 SE 201; Mott v. Southern R. Co., 131 N. C. 234, 42 SE 601; Greenlee v. Southern R. Co., 122 N. C. 977, 30 SE 115, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 41 L. R. A. 399; Boney v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 145 N. C. 248, 58 SE 1082; Walker v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 135 N. C. 738, 47 SE 675. South Carolina. Youngblood v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 60 S. C. 9, 38 SE 232, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824; Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 61 S. C. 468, 39 SE 715; Carson v. Southern R. Co., 68 S. C. 55, 46 SE 525; Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 848. Mississippi. Buckner v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 72 Miss. 873, 18 S 449. Virginia. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Cheatwood's, 103 Va. 356, 49 SE 489; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 108 Va. 632, 62 SE 363).

Upon the general point of law the federal courts are not in harmony, the cases of Glenmont Lumber Co. v. Roy, 61 C. C. A. 506, 126 F 525, and E. S. Higgins Carpet Co. v. O'Keefe, 25 C. C. A. 220, 51 U. S. App. 74, 79 F 900, holding that the violation of a statutory duty does not preclude the defense of assumption of risk, are decided in harmony with the law of the state wherein the action arose. On the other hand the case of St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 F 495, 63 L. R. A. 551, and Federal Lead Co. v. Swyers [C. C. A.] 161 F 687, sustaining the same contention, are in direct conflict with the doctrine of the Missouri courts, while Denver & Rio Grande R. Co. v. Norgate, 72 C. C. A. 365, 141 F 247, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, to the same effect, is decided upon general principals of law. The federal cases of Chicago-Coulterville Coal Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co., 130 F 957, and Narramore v. Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 F 298, 48 L. R. A. 68, which are in direct conflict with the above cases and support the contention that the statute impliedly bars the defense, are decided in harmony with the adjudications in the states wherein the action arose. The opinion of Taft, J., in the last cited case is recognized as a leading authority upon the doctrine therein announced and has been followed in a great majority of the more recent cases.

The point herein discussed is treated in Dresser's Employer's Liability, §§ 116, 117, and in notes in 47 L. R. A. 190 and 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 981, from which sources many of the foregoing citations are adopted. The authorities are also collected and reviewed in 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 587, and 4 Mich. L. R. 241.—Ed.

92. An employe may assume the risk of injury from machinery left unguarded in violation of the statute, but the question is one of fact to be submitted to the jury, such risk not being necessary one. Graves v. Gustave Stickley Co., 125 App. Div. 132, 109 NYS 256. Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3, distinguishes between necessary risks and obvious ones; former are assumed as matter of law; whether risk is obvious must be submitted to the jury. Logerto v. Central Bldg. Co., 123 App. Div. 840, 108 NYS 604. Risk from unguarded knives of jointer is not "necessary" one, since statutory duty to guard is violated; being obvious, whether it was assumed in particular case was for jury under Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, § 3. Graves v. Gustave Stickley Co., 125 App. Div. 132, 109 NYS 256. Whether bottle wrapper assumed risk of injury by bursting of bottle, working without mask, for jury, under statute. Lobasco v. Moxie Nerve Food Co., 111 NYS 1007. Assumption of risk for jury under

Dangers incidental to business. See 10 C. L. 751—The servant assumes the risks ordinarily incident to the employment in which he engages,[94] and this is the rule though the employment is necessarily dangerous.[95] Ordinary risks are such as arise from the permanent, open, visible conditions of the master's business [96] as it is being statute where plaintiff, wheeling hand truck, slipped on defective floor and fell. Knezevich v. Bush Terminal Co., 111 NYS 255.

93. Assumption of risk not available in action by brakeman for injuries caused by negligence of engineer under Code, § 2071. Rhodes v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 503. Assumption of risk not available as defense in action by brakeman for injuries caused by negligence of engineer, under Code, § 2071. Id.

Wilhelm Co., 220 Pa. 564, 69 A 996; Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burton [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 364. Ordinary and necessary risks. Logerto v. Central Bldg Co., 123 App. Div. 840, 108 NYS 604. Inherent risks. Mansell v. Conrad, 125 App. Div. 634, 109 NYS 1079. Incidental risks are assumed, whether known or not. Davis Adm'x v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 724. Servant assumes all ordinary risks and those which are open and obvious. Truckers' Mfg. & Supply Co. v. White, 108 Va. 147, 60 SE 630. Servant engaged in his regular work assumes ordinary risks and is under same duty of observation with a view of informing himself of dangers to which he may be subjected. Johnson v. Desmond Chemical Co., 152 Mich. 84, 15 Det. Leg. N. 138, 115 NW 1043.

95. Ordinary risks attendant upon dangerous work of tearing down building assumed. Ballard & Ballard Co. v. Lee's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 732. The risks assumed by an employe comprise those hazards or dangers which observation brings to his knowledge; and, if the employment is more than usually hazardous, the care exercised by the employe must be in proportion to the danger involved. Wallace v. Spellacy, 8 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 41.

96. Risks held incidental and assumed: Servant whose duties required him to select sacks of coffee from piles laid in rows assumed risk of pile falling when he knew tendency of sacks to settle and bulge. Bradley v. Forbes Tea & Coffee Co., 213 Mo. 320, 111 SW 919. Risk of overhead bank of earth falling, where it was successively undermined and top pried off, assumed by common laborer. Logerto v. Central Bldg. Co., 123 App. Div. 840, 108 NYS 604. Common laborer injured while inserting paper into rollers on foreman's order held to have assumed risk, rollers being open and danger obvious. Barrett Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 137 Ill. App. 110. Laborer employed to carry materials in building in course of construction assumed risk of stepping on loose and unsupported plank temporarily laid on terra cotta floor for use of workmen. Eisner v. Horton, 200 Mass. 507, 86 NE 892. Where lineman continued in defendant's employment with knowledge of fact that it made no inspection of trolley poles other than that made by repair crews, he assumed risk of injury from want of such inspection. Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 444, 116 NW 983. Experienced carpenter, employed to assist in dismantling old building, assumed risk of decayed rafter breaking. Boisvert v. Ward, 199 Mass. 594, 85 NE 849. Mule-driver in mine was offered employment driving mule known to him to be dangerous, and was injured by being thrown against roof through mule's lunging. Held that risk was assumed. International Coal & Min. Co. v. Reeble, 137 Ill. App. 5. A shot-firer injured by shot breaking through wall between two rooms in mine will be held to have been injured in incurring a risk incident to his employment and assumed by him, where he must be assumed to have had knowledge of the danger. Green v. Jones Bros. Coal & Min. Co., 140 Ill. App. 264. Risk from storage of powder in mine assumed by miners. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Garner [Ark.] 112 SW 392. Railroad employe assumes ordinary risk and such as he knows or must necessarily have known in ordinary discharge of his duties, but not such as are "discoverable by ordinary care." Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 628. Car sealer struck by switch engine while sealing car assumed risk, where he knew engines and cars were run on adjoining tracks without warning and that he was expected to look out for himself. Lynch v. Boston & M. R. Co., 200 Mass. 403, 86 NE 781. Conductor injured by sudden stopping of his train to avoid collision with another train. It appeared he was in such position that any ordinary jar would have caused him to fall. Held he assumed risk of such position. Cheek v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 402. Brakeman, killed by being thrown from car, assumed ordinary risks of employment, including negligence of fellow brakemen; he did not assume risk of sudden and unusually violent stops and jars. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844. Section hand assumed risk of being struck by piece of bolt broken in course of taking up old track. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Jamison [Ark.] 113 SW 41. Adjusting or taking up slack is incident and necessary to stopping of all trains, and brakeman assumes risk of undertaking to uncouple cars before train stops. Taylor v. Rock Island, A. & L. R. Co., 121 La. 543, 46 S 621. To recover from railroad company for death of brakeman who fell from train, the jar or jerk which caused him to fall must be shown to have been unusual and violent. Matthews' Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 459. Plaintiff got fingers into mangle which she was feeding. Bratfish v. Gibbons, 141 Ill. App. 256. Workman injured by "cave in" of ditch assumed risk. Washington Const. Co. v. Regan, 136 Ill. App. 627. Plaintiff subject to epileptic fits, during one of which he fell from roof upon which he was at work, held to have assumed the risk in absence of showing of want of conducted at the time the servant enters the employment,[97] which are presumed to be known to and undertaken by the servant when he enters the employment.[98] The occasional negligence of fellow-servants is an assumed risk within the meaning of this rule,[99] but not the risk arising from a servant's incompetency.[1] Negligence of the master,[2] or of one who is, by virtue of statute or common law, a vice-principal,[3] is not an assumed risk. Unusual or extraordinary risks, unknown to the servant,[4] mental capacity known to master. Lauth v. Harrison-Switzer Mill. Co., 140 Ill. App. 199. Servant held to assume risk of injury occasioned by breaking of "breaker" in rolling mill, where such breaking was well known to him to be a normal consequence of its functions and ordinarily attended with no danger. Thomas v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 140 Ill. App. 258. The servant assumes the risk of unusual accidents which cannot be guarded against in the erection of new buildings. Where wheel barrow used by another workman slipped in snow-covered gangway and precipitated lump of coal on plaintiff, he was held to have assumed risk. William Grace Co. v. Gallagher, 137 Ill. App. 217.

97. Servant assumes risks involved in master's methods when he enters employment which are known to him. Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 444, 116 NW 983. Liability of dynamite to explode at wrong time and place ie risk assumed by one entering employment where it is used. McHugh v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., 219 Pa. 644, 69 A 90. Where servant had worked for defendant 30 years and was familiar with method of coupling cars in elevator and with signals, he assumed risk of going between cars when signal was set that cars were ready for switch engine. Maloney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 131 Ill. App. 568. The negligence of the employes of a lessee railroad company is one of the risks assumed by an employe of the lessor company. Defendant owning and maintaining a number of tracks which were leased to different railroads is not liable for death of its servant through act of lessee railroad. Chicago & Western Indiana R. Co. v. Mills, 131 Ill. App. 625.

98. Servant assumes incidental dangers existing when he enters employment. Wilson v. Escanaba Woodenware Co., 152 Mich. 540, 15 Det. Leg. N. 216, 116 NW 198. Employe by entering employment assumes all obvious and apparent dangers incidental to business. Young v. Randall [Me.] 71 A 647; Bowen v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 219 Pa. 405, 68 A 963. An implied term of contract of employment is that work will be done with permanent conditions then existing; master is not bound to change such conditione, though they could be improved. McKenna v. Gould Wire Cord Co., 197 Mass. 406, 83 NE 1113. Servant entering or continuing in employment assumes existing known risks and cannot recover because there are safer methods than that used in master's business. Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Tract. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 444, 116 NW 983. Experienced switchman assumed obvious risk of going to work in yards which were not lighted. Travis v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 121 La. 885, 46 S 909.

99. See ante, § 3E, Negligence of Fellow-Servants.

1. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 235 Ill. 146, 85 NE 274. Incompetency of another servant, known to master but not to another employe, is not assumed risk. Christy v. Schwartzchild & Sulzberger Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 657.

2. See post, Reliance on Care of Master.

3. Danger of plank falling on plaintiff while at work, due to gross negligence of foreman in mode of work, not assumed. Cook v. Chehalis River Lumber Co., 48 Wash. 619, 94 P 189. Plaintiff, engaged in performing duties, did not assume risk of being struck by stave thrown by employe on second floor, not his fellow-servant. Swann-Day Lumber Co. v. Thomas [Ky.] 112 SW 907. Operator of buzz planer did not assume risk of injury from knives when foreman had removed shield. Bennett v. Carolina Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 620, 61 SE 463. Negligence of conductor on another car line not assumed. Bennett v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 560. Section hand assumes ordinary risks, including those of riding on freight train to and from place of work but does not assume risk of negligence of master or servants who are not fellow-servants in handling trains. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Harmon, 85 Ark. 503, 109 SW 295. Servant does not assume extraordinary risks which may arise in course of employment from negligence of vice-principal of which he has no notice and from which he has no reasonable grounds to fear danger. Williams v. Morris, 237 Ill. 254, 86 NE 729. Common laborer, engaged in removing debris, while mechanics, under vice-principal, were making repairs and raising floor in ice house did not assume risk of floor falling on him, owing to negligence of mechanic in supporting it. Id.

4. Risk not assumed; Extraordinary risks, or those arising from master's negligence, or latent, or known only at time of injury. Buena Vista Extract Co. v. Hickman, 108 Va. 665, 62 SE 804. Collision of locomotive with car upon which plaintiff was at work. Offner v. Erie R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 562. Risk of being struck by water spout of tank not assumed by brakeman. McDuffee's Adm'x v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 124. Danger of coming in contact with wires of another company, while at work on pole, not assumed by telephone linemnn, unless he knew and appreciated the danger, or unless it was obvious. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599. Where plaintiff, engaged as one of a crew in replacing boiler under foreman's superintendence, was injured by explosion of gasket, it will not be held as against verdict of jury that he was injured by one of ordinary hazards of the business which he must assume. Ragsdale v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 71. Where employer sent plumber to repair pipes in place where calcium carbide was stored without warning him to keep water or which are encountered, under direction of the master, outside the service which the servant was hired to perform,[5] or which ordinary care in the performance of his duties would not disclose,[6] are not assumed.

Known or obvious dangers.[See 10 C. L. 753]—Risks which are actually known to the servant,[7] or which are so obvious [8] that a person of the same age, capacity and ex-away from carbide, and without draining pipes, employe in another department did not assume risk of explosion when plumber allowed water to run out on carbide. Charron v. Union Carbide Co., 151 Mich. 687, 15 Det. Leg. N. 154, 115 NW 718. Common laborer engaged in shoveling earth into cars did not assume risk arising from use of steel rod to tamp dynamite by men employed in drilling and blasting, with knowledge of shift boss, this being extraordinary danger. Ongaro v. Twohy [Wash.] 94 P 916. Removal of planks over belt-pit not previously moved during course of plaintiff's employment, of which he had no knowledge and not obvious or apparent, created a new danger which he did not assume as incident to his employment. American Rolling Mill Corp. v. Knox, 140 Ill. App. 359. Where allegations of petition show that plaintiff was placed in dangerous emergency by sudden act of negligence of master, it will not be adjudged on demurrer that he assumed risk of continuing work in face of increased danger when injury followed so quickly as to leave no opportunity for choice. Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 720. As where iron moulder was carrying ladle of molten iron with two helpers, and foreman called one away, and one of remaining men was overbalanced and molten iron splashed on plaintiff. Id.

5. Risk not assumed: Where employe is directed to do work outside the scope of his regular duties, the most that can be said is that he may be negligent in undertaking it, if danger is obvious to one of his age and experience; he does not assume unknown risks. Johnson v. Desmond Chemical Co., 152 Mich. 84, 15 Det. Leg. N. 138, 115 NW 1043. Where one ordinarily engaged as track layer in coal mine was ordered to assist timbermen, and while so doing was injured by falling roof. Tygett v. Sunnyside Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 77. Common laborer who on a peremptory order undertook to open mould of hot steel and was injured because mould was opened before sufficiently cool, held not chargeable with knowledge that mould would explode if opened too soon. Illinois Steel Co. v. Swiercz, 135 Ill. App. 141.

6. Extraordinary risk of being struck by water spout of tank while on car not assumed by brakeman unless he knew or ought to have known of it. McDuffee's Adm'x v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 124. Servant does not assume risks incidental to work to which he is assigned outside scope of his usual duties unless obvious to persons of ordinary intelligence.. Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 968. Servant at work under platform had right to assume its reasonable safety; was not bound to investigate its construction and did not assume risk of plank falling on him, discoverable only by such inspection. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125. Employe engaged in loading broken rock into steam shovel did not as matter of law assume risk of explosion of charge of dynamite which had not exploded with other charges; whether he assumed risk properly submitted to jury. Stephen v. Duffy, 237 Ill. 549, 86 NE 1082. Defect in elevator, by reason of which it fell, was not discoverable except by an inspection. Operator did not assume risk arising therefrom when it did not appear that he had actual knowledge of it, and it was not his duty to inspect or keep it in repair. Byene v. Marshall Field & Co., 237 Ill. 384, 86 NE 748.

7. Risk assumed: Plaintiff could not recover for injuries caused by swinging circular saw where he saw and appreciated danger. Young v. Randall [Me.] 71 A 647. Experienced mine foreman who knew dangerous condition of roof of tunnel assumed risk of rock falling on him. Tanner's Adm'r v. Wickliffe Coal Co., 32 Ky. L. R. 1304, 108 SW 351. No recovery for injuries caused by breaking of ladder which plaintiff knew was old, weak and unsafe. Christy v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 131 Mo. App. 266, 110 SW 694. Lineman killed by shock received while on pole negligent where fact that wire was uninsulated and in contact with iron brace was obvious and he knew that wire carried heavy current and was dangerous. Memphis Consol. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Simpson [Tenn.] 109 SW 1155. Brakeman assumed risk of using defective standard as handhold. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Murray, 85 Ark. 600, 109 SW 549. Danger of boards being blown from piles in yard by wind. Schillo Lumber Co. v. Bemben, 139 Ill. App. 628. 14. Age, intelligence, experience and knowledge of particular situation are to be considered by jury in determining whether servant appreciated danger of using certain tool for certain purpose. Disalets v. International Paper Co., 74 N. H. 440, 69 A 263. Whether plaintiff was mentally deficient, or was merely counterfeiting stupidity when and the facts and circumstances of the case. But mere knowledge of a defective condition will not alone charge the servant with the assumption of a risk. It must also appear that he knew and appreciated the danger arising from the defect.[15] Where the danger is obvious, knowledge and appreciation of it will be presumed.[16] on stand, held for jury. Doolan v. Pocasset Mfg. Co., 200 Mass. 200, 85 NE 1055. Whether plaintiff assumed risk of buckets of ditching machine falling upon him held to depend on whether he was employed as expert to keep machine in repair or merely as assistant in operation of it whose duty it was to make repairs when needed. Engler v. La Crosse Dredging Co., 105 Minn. 74, 117 NW 242. Children over 14 presumed to have capacity to comprehend obvious dangers. As to children between 14 and 7 there is disputable presumption of incapacity, and burden is on him asserting capacity to prove it. Goodwin v. Columbia Mills Co. of Columbia [S. C.] 61 SE 390.

15. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall [C. C. A.] 159 F 893; Flowers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 718; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 41 Ind. App. 588, 84 NE 730; Herlihy v. Little, 200 Mass. 284, 86 NE 294; Elms v. Southern Power Co., 79 S. C. 502, 60 SE 1110; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 274, 114 SW 453. Servant assumed risk of working in trench while loaded blast was being taken out only if he knew and appreciated the danger or ought to have done so. Polo v. Palisade Const. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 161. Only such dangers are assumed as are appreciated or ought reasonably to be appreciated by employe under circumstances. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125. Mere knowledge that elevator did not work properly did not charge operator with assumption of risk of its falling. Bryne v. Marshall Field & Co., 237 Ill. 384, 86 NE 748. Servant does not assume risk where he knows premises are defective but does not know of danger and danger is not apparent. Marshall v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 883. Employe does not assume risk of working with defective appliances unless he appreciates danger or it is obvious. Bush v. Wood [Cal. App.] 97 P 709. Mere knowledge of condition will not charge servant with assumption of risk unless he appreciates danger or by reason of his capacity and experience ought to appreciate it. Kerker v. Bettendorf Metal Wheel Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 306. Common laborer excavating tunnel for sewer did not assume risk of cave-in unless he appreciated the danger, even though physical conditions were apparent. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co. [Or.] 95 P 196. Mere knowledge that heading machine was in some way defective in that boards sometimes hit spreader and caused his (operator's) hand to jump did not as matter of law charge him with risk of having his hand drawn upon the saw. Lynch v. Lynn Box Co., 200 Mass. 340, 86 NE 659. Operator of cross-cut saw, unguarded, did not assume risk of being struck by block thrown by saw unless he appreciated danger. O'Connell v. Smith [Iowa] 118 NW 266. Equal knowledge with master of defective condition will not charge servant with assumption of risk unless he appreciated danger. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142. Plaintiff's knowledge of incompetency or bad habits of "boss repairer" would not defeat recovery for injury caused by him unless he knew or ought to have known that danger was to be apprehended therefrom. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Plaintiff, at work 40 feet from emery wheel, did not assume risk of operators running it without guard required by statute, wheel having broken and a piece of it having struck plaintiff. Davidson v. Flour City Ornamental Iron Works [Minn.] 119 NW 483. Carpenter unaccustomed to operating saws did not assume risk of injury by boards getting caught in rip saw on work bench unless he knew and appreciated the danger, or unless it was obvious so that he ought to have appreciated it in the exercise of ordinary care. Harney v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 886. Absence of statutory warning device on elevator trap door not assumed risk by employe, apparently mentally deficient, who had worked only two days, defect not being at once observable. Doolan v. Pocasset Mfg. Co., 200 Mass. 200, 85 NE 1055.

Whether inexperienced operator of metal stamping machine ought to have appreciated danger of operating it as directed, for jury. Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 574, 117 NW 187. Mere fact that inexperienced operator of metal stamping press knew that hand would be crushed if he put it under die when he put his foot on treadle did not show that he assumed risk of operating it as directed. Id. Inexperienced man who did not understand English did not assume, as matter of law, risk of pole which was being erected falling on him. Di Bari v. J. W. Bishop Co., 199 Mass. 254, 85 NE 89. Danger of getting caught in belt of thresher engine not obvious to plaintiff who had not had previous experience. Maxson v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 281.

Children do not assume risks incidental to operating machines unless they understand them or have been warned or instructed. Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 SW 794. Though minor knew of defect in floor, he did not assume risk of "buggy" being overturned on account of it, unless he appreciated that this danger might result. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Urbanski [C. C. A.] 162 F 91. Boy of 16, not very bright, did not as matter of law assume risk of arm being caught in gear of machine, though he could see that it was not covered. Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 A 525. Youth and inexperience of servant, so far as shown by evidence, to be considered in determining whether he assumed risk. Galloway v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 234 Ill. 474, 84 NE 1067. Finding that girl of 16 did not assume risk of operating machine without safety roller at which she had been put to work half hour before injury, without instruction, warranted. Travis v. Haan, 112 NYS 463. Boy of 16 without previous experience or knowledge of danger was set to work expanding boiler tubes with defect-

Reliance on care of master. See 10 C. L. 759—In the absence of knowledge to the contrary, the servant has a right to rely upon the assumption that the master has properly performed the various duties imposed upon him by law,[17] and need not make an independent inspection or examination of his appliances or place of work.[18] In other words, negligence of the master or of his representatives is not one of the ive sledge and burred prosser pins. He did not assume risk of chip from pin flying into his eye. Pelow v. Oil Well Supply Co. [N. Y.] 68 NE 812. Girl 14½ years of age did not as matter of law assume risk of working in factory without fire escapes as required by statute, especially where she denied any knowledge of lack of such escapes. Arnold v. National Starch Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 815. Girl of 16 did not as matter of law assume risk of operating mangle with defective guard. Mansell v. Conrad, 125 App. Div. 634, 109 NYS 1079.

16. Knox v. American Rolling Mill Corp., 236 Ill. 437, 86 NE 90. Employe assumes risk of incidental obvious dangers and will not be heard to say he did not appreciate the danger which must have been apparent to one of his intelligence. Schmitt v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 135 Wis. 117, 115 NW 353. Servant cannot be heard to say that he did not appreciate or realize a danger when defect is obvious or readily observable and danger apparent. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. Boy of 16 held to have capacity and experience sufficient to appreciate danger of slipping or stumbling on pieces of rock or slag and falling off platform. Cook v. U. S. Smelting Co. [Utah] 97 P 28. Workman tripped on uneven floor and fell through unguarded opening through which hoist was operated. If he knew the condition of the floor and opening he assumed the risk; hence an instruction requiring jury to find also that he must have appreciated the danger was error. Rooney v. Brogan Const. Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 814.

17. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Patrick [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 1097. Servant may assume exercise of due care by master. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910; Kotera v. American Smelting & Refining Co. [Neb.] 114 NW 945. Employe may assume that master has supplied reasonably safe appliances. Rush v. Oregon Power Co. [Or.] 95 P 193. Servant may rely on assumption that master has performed his duty in furnishing safe place and appliances. Southern Pac. Co. v. Godfrey [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 1135. Employes may rely on assumption that master will employ reasonably competent employes. Beers v. Prouty & Co., 200 Mass. 19, 85 NE 864. Brakeman has right to assume place of work, on cars, reasonably safe. McDuffee's Adm'x v. Boston, etc., R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 124. Inexperienced employe told to hold chain, by which logs were hauled into mill, while plate beneath was readjusted had right to assume that chain would be moved without notice to him. Johnson v. Motor Shingle Co. [Wash.] 96 P 962. Miner had right to assume that overseer had performed statutory duty of protecting overhead rock from falling. Barrett v. Dessy [Kan.] 97 P 786. Where servant was sent to work in excavation, he could rely on implied assurance that it was reasonably safe, and did not assume the risk unless danger of earth falling was obvious. Hilgar v. Walla Walla [Wash.] 97 P 498. Servant sent to load machinery on mine skip had right to assume that sufficient help had been provided and that proper rules had been made for conduct of men in control of skip. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Servant assumes risks ordinarily incident to employment, which are obvious and known to him or would necessarily be known in the exercise of ordinary care in the discharge of his duties, and he may assume exercise of ordinary care by master until he knows or ought to know the contrary. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455. Fireman did not assume risk of running into open switch, unlighted, though he knew his engine had only oil burner headlight, since he could assume that company used sufficient headlight and would so light switches that they could be seen and danger of entering open switches avoided. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. McDuffey [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 1104. Employe required to use freight elevator but not to inspect could assume its reasonable safety. Kentucky Wagon Mfg. Co. v. Guganics [Ky.] 113 SW 128.

18. Primarily, servant may assume that master has exercised reasonable care to provide reasonably safe appliances, and does not assume risk of injury from breach of that duty. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Wilhoit [C. C. A.] 160 F 440. Servant may assume master has provided reasonably safe place and need not exercise care to discover defects but assumes known or patent dangers only. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Beckett [C. C. A.] 163 F 479. Instructions erroneous because charging servant with assumption not only of ordinary risks but also of such as arose from master's negligence, discoverable only by inspection. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125. Mine employe may assume place of work reasonably safe; need not exercise care to discover dangers which are not patent. Bolen-Darnall Coal Co. v. Williams [C. C. A.] 164 F 665. Switchman could assume car step reasonably safe; not bound to inspect it before using it. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. O'Keefe [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 1002. Plaintiff, engaged in chipping casting, had right to assume that defendant had furnished suitable sledge to helper with which to pound chisel held by plaintiff, and was not bound to inspect it. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Quinlan, 77 Kan. 126, 93 P 632. He did not assume risk of chip from sledge striking his eye. Id. Domestic servant under no duty to take up trap door and examine under side to see how it was kept in place, and where defect, which caused it to tip up when stepped on, was not obvious, she did not assume risk. Burnside v. Peterson, 43 Colo. 382, 96 P 256.

ordinary risks which a servant assumes;[19] ordinary or incidental risks being only those which due care on the part of the master would not obviate.[20] But this rule is usually limited in its application to breaches of the master's duty unknown to the servant.[21] If a neglect of duty by the master and the danger arising therefrom is

19. Pettus v. Kerr [Ark.] 112 SW 886; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter [Ky.] 112 SW 904. Negligence of master or of vice-principal not assumed. Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567. Risk arising from violation of master's duties with reference to appliances is not assumed. San Francisco & P. S. S. Co. v. Carlson [C. C. A.] 161 F 851. Extra hazards arising from negligent failure of master to provide proper rules and regulations are not assumed. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Servant assumes ordinary risks in tearing down buildings, but not extra hazards caused by negligence of his superior. American Window Glass Co. v. Noe [C. C. A.] 158 F 777. Servant does not assume risks arising from master's negligence; thus, dangers in blasting due to want of precautions to make the work reasonably safe, in view of its nature, were not assumed. Knight v. Donnelly Bros., 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687. Quarryman did not assume risk of foreman's failure to remove unexploded charges of dynamite. Kansas Buff Brick & Mfg. Co. v. Bentley, 77 Kan. 780, 95 P 1134. Negligence of mine owner in failing to provide for warnings to be given of blasting not assumed by miner engaged in timbering. Jacobson v. Hobart Iron Co., 103 Minn. 319, 114 NW 951. Negligence of company in respect to track held not ordinary risk assumed by freight brakeman. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281. Switchman assumed ordinary risks but not those arising from negligence of company or engineer. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jowers [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 946. Evidence held to show that lineman injured by live wire, current of which was turned on while he was at work, did not assume the risk. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rooney, 138 Ill. App. 275. Danger to brakeman of being struck by post too near track, not incidental to work, not assumed. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Employe did not as matter of law assume risk of injury by pulling out of hook and rope from locomotive, it having been fastened by his superintendent. Brosnan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 221, 85 NE 1050. Operator of machine did not assume risk of danger from defective belt, having been assured there was no danger. Schow v. McCloskey [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 886. If railroad company knew of and acquiesced in negligent manner of switching, it was guilty of negligence and brakeman would not assume risk arising therefrom, though he continued in service with knowledge thereof. McGuire v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. App. 677, 107 SW 411. Miner did not assume risk of rock falling on him in mine entry where he was sent to work. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. v. Looper [Ark.] 112 SW 890. If foreman was negligent in method employed to load cable on wagon, servant did not assume risk. Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 407. Plaintiff while loading car in regular course of his employment was injured in consequence of the master backing a train violently against car. Held not an assumed risk. Crane Co. v. Hogan, 131 Ill. App. 314. Motorman injured in head-on collision did not assume risk arising from inability of other motorman to stop car owing to defective condition of its brakes. Garner v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 128 Mo. App. 401, 107 SW 427. Motorman, killed in collision with another car because of inability to stop, did not assume risk of slippery condition of track caused by weeds allowed to grow there which were crushed on rails, the place not being the usual meeting place of cars. Mann v. Illinois Cent. Trac. Co., 236 Ill. 30, 86 NE 161. Motorman held not to have assumed risk of injury in collision caused by failure of company to notify operatives of preceding regular car that plaintiff's car would follow and was to meet it at certain switch Graham v. Mattoon City R. Co., 234 Ill. 483, 84 NE 1070.

20. Servant only assumes such risks as remain after master has performed his duties with respect to appliances and place. Yongue v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 985. Incidental risks are assumed but not those growing out of master's negligence. Huston v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 576, 107 SW 1045; Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 A 525; Howland v. Standard Mill. & Logging Co. [Wash.] 96 P 686. Employe is charged with assumption only of those risks which ordinary care on part of master will not obviate, and may assume that master's duties have been performed in absence of knowledge to contrary. Norton Coal Co. v. Murphy, 108 Va. 528, 62 SE 268. It is only such injuries as arise after the master has used reasonable care to make the place reasonably safe in which he desires the servant to work, of which the servant impliedly agrees to assume the risk and for which the master is not liable. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. McCarthy, 136 Ill. App. 473. Under Laws 1902, p. 1750, c. 600, § 3, employe assumes only necessary risks remaining after master has exercised due care for his safety. Evans v. Pearson, 125 App. Div. 666, 110 NYS 69. Servant does not assume as ordinary risks those which master could by exercise of ordinary care discover and remove. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 235 Ill. 146, 85 NE 274. Risk of danger from negligent handling of planks on overhead platform was not assumed by plaintiff, when such risk was greatly increased by negligent construction of platform by master. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125. Brakeman injured between engine and car of logs assumed obvious risk of pushing logs back with engine, but not risk arising from defects in engine. Rudquist v. Empire Lumber Co., 104 Minn. 505, 116 NW 1019.

21. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Donovan [C. C. A.] 160 F 826; Flowers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 718. Dangers arising from master's negligence not assumed unless obvious or known. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 122. Servant does not assume risk of defects arising actually known [22] or obvious,[23] and he continues in the employment without complaint, he assumes the risk of so doing, notwithstanding the want of due care by the master,[24] unless he was justified in believing that he could continue with safety by the exercise of due care by himself,[25] the danger not being so obvious and imminent that an ordinarily prudent person would not have encountered it.[26]

Reliance on observance of rules and customs. See 10 C. L. 762—The servant may also assume that work will be done in the customary manner,[27] that rules will be ob-after he enters service if he has no knowledge of them. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168. Risks arising from master's negligence are not ordinary risks and are not assumed unless known and dangers appreciated. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Urbanski [C. C. A.] 162 F 91. Freight conductor did not assume risk of injury from standpipe placed too close to track, when he was not familiar with locality but knew in a general way the location of the standpipe. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Beckett [C. C. A.] 163 F 479. Where workman was called by foreman to stand on plank and hold block and fall which was being fastened, he did not assume risk of injury, being unfamiliar with appliance which proved to be defective. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 234 Ill. 606, 85 NE 287. Risk of injury arising from negligent practice of "staking" cars over crossing without warnings not assumed by brakeman who did not know of it and was not chargeable with knowledge, not having been in yard before. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Donovan [C. C. A.] 160 F 826. Plaintiff struck in eye by steel sliver from hammer or chisel while holding rail which was being cut. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Trijerina [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 239.

22. Where brakeman knew coupling device was out of order, he assumed risk of going between cars to manipulate it. Shaw v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 110 NYS 362.

23. The true test, in respect of risks arising out of master's negligence, is not whether servant exercised care to discover dangers but whether they were known to him, or so patent as to be readily observable. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657; Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. Servant assumes risks arising from master's negligence if he knows them or ought to have known in exercise of ordinary care. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 196. Rule that known or obvious risks are assumed applies, at common law, even to risks arising from negligence of master. Pearsall v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 128 App. Div. 397, 112 NYS 872. Risk of using unsafe machinery not assumed unless danger so obvious that reasonably prudent person would not use it. Brands v. St. Louis Car Co., 213 Mo. 698, 112 SW 511. Risks of dangers resulting from master's negligence, existence of which servant knows or would have known by the exercise of that degree of circumspection or attention which a prudent man would have used in the particular employment, are assumed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burton [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 364. Employe not entitled to rely on assumption that place of work, in coal mine, had been made reasonably safe, if he had notice of facts or circumstances which would indicate to any reasonably intelligent man that the presumption was unjustifiable. Norton Coal Co. v. Hanks' Adm'r, 108 Va. 521, 62 SE 335. Where an appliance provided is defective, and its condition is known to the servant or so patent as to be readily observable, he cannot continue to use it without objection without assuming the risk of injury incident thereto. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Wilhoit [C. C. A.] 160 F 440. Instruction permitting absolute reliance on master's care, without exception, erroneous. Id. Instruction that servant assumed risk if he "could have discovered" defect, erroneous; defect must have been so patent as to be readily observable. Id. Evidence as to whether conductor on motor car assumed risk of being struck by inclining trolley pole, and whether he was acting with due care for his own safety, examined and held sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff. East St. Louis & S. R. Co. v. Kath, 133 Ill. App. 107. Whether hole in freight elevator was discoverable by use of ordinary care by servant using it who stepped into hole. Kentucky Wagon Mfg. Co. v. Duganics [Ky.] 113 SW 128.

24. Knox v. American Rolling Mill Corp., 236 Ill. 437, 86 NE 90. Though risks arise from omissions of master, they are assumed if known and appreciated. Cook v. U. S. Smelting Co. [Utah] 97 P 28. Negligence of master whether committed directly or through fellow-servant may be assumed. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hawkins [Ark.] 115 SW 175. Dangers known to the servant are assumed by voluntarily entering or continuing in employment, though, they arise from master's negligence. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 235 Ill. 146, 85 NE 274.

25. Risk arising from master's negligence not assumed, though defect known, if servant is warranted in continuing use of defective appliance by using due care. Meshishnek v. Seattle Sand & Gravel Co. [Wash.] 99 P 9.

26. Railroad employe who goes into place of unusual peril when ordered by conductor assumes risk if danger was so obvious and imminent that no person reasonably cautious or prudent would have done so. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. To relieve master from liability on account of servant's disregard of his own safety by working in the place, the dangers from the defective surroundings must be imminent and the defects shown to be the proximate cause of the injuries. Openings in "dust catcher" held to be indirect or remote cause only. Illinois Steel Co. v. Jenco, 136 Ill. App. 555.

27. Switch foreman did not assume risk arising from failure of crew to observe usual rules and custom of not moving cars without signals. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455.

served,[28] and that customary or promised signals or warnings will be given and observed.[29]

Reliance on orders or assurances of safety. See 10 C. L. 762—A servant may rely to a reasonable extent upon the superior knowledge of the master or a superior, and may assume that he will not be exposed to unusual or unnecessary danger.[30] Hence, he does not assume the risk of executing an order of a superior,[31] or of continuing his work after an assurance of safety by a superior,[32] unless the danger is known and

28. Car repairer did not assume risk of being struck by cars, flying switch being made contrary to rules. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187. Where shoveler in cinder pit complained of hostler's violation of rules by running engines into pit without signals and compiaint was duly reported, he did not as matter of law assume risk of injury by violation of rule next day. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hawkins [Ark.] 115 SW 175.

29. City employe sent to make measurements on bridge told employes in charge of moving it that they were not to raise it until he signaled them which they agreed not to do. He did not assume risk of injury from their raising it prematurely and without notice. Gathman v. Chicago, 236 Ill. 9, 86 NE 152. Engineer taking measurement of bridge had gotten promise from tender not to raise bridge until signaled by him. City of Chicago v. Gathman, 139 Ill. App. 253.

30. A servant ordered by the foreman of a master to perform a particular work has the right to assume that he will not be exposed to unnecessary perils and to rest upon the implied assurance that there is no danger. Marshall v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 883. Inexperienced workman did not assume risk of rock ledge in gravel pit falling on him where he did not know of danger and had been directed to work there by foreman, who was chargeable with notice of danger. Id. If employe relies upon assurances of safety, and danger is discoverable only by inspection, and superior giving assurance has superior knowledge of situation, employe does not assume risk as matter of law. Halloway v. Johns-Manville Co., 135 Wis. 629, 116 NW 635. Servant directed to do certain work in certain way may rely on assumption that it can be done safely in that way and that instrumentalities are reasonably safe. Hobbs v. Small [Ga. App.] 62 SE 91. Assurance by master that belts of sewing machines were not dangerous by reason of being fastened together with hooks did not render him liable or relieve operator of assumption of risk where she got her hair caught on shaft while stooping down to adjust belt, since she did not rely on such assurance. Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. Pitts [Ky.] 114 SW 331.

31. Unskilled workman did not assume risk of injury while adjusting belts in customary way under foreman's orders. Mathews v. Kerlin [La.] 48 S 123. Servant under protest, on master's command, removed cap from molds and was burned. Illinois Steel Co. v. Brenshall, 141 Ill. App. 36. In considering whether brakeman assumed risk of going between engine and car of logs in attempt to push log back with engine, using long draw bar, fact that he was ordered to do so by conductor was to be considered, though general rules prohibited act. Rudquist v. Empire Lumber Co., 104 Minn. 505, 116 NW 1019. Where foreman sent servant into a bin to shake down caked corn and latter injured by cavity formed beneath, jury could properly find that servant was not chargeable with knowledge of formation of cavity. Glucose Sugar Refining Co. v. McConnell, 132 Ill. App. 386. Where servant was ordered to work at a joiner and fell by reason of slippery floor covered with sawdust and was injured, he did not as a matter of law assume risk of this employment. Acme Harvester Co. v. Chittick, 132 Ill. App. 611. Workman injured while raising boiler with crow bar in accordance with direct order of superior held not to have assumed risk. Heywood & Morrill Rattan Co. v. Jacobson, 140 Ill. App. 319. Where servant was ordered to use rope to help load pilings on flat car on direct order of foreman, and was injured by breaking of main cable, he could recover. Shirk v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 22. Where servant was ordered to clean flues with steam hose and nozzle in spite of protests that nozzle was loose, evidence that he exercised ordinary care held sufficient to authorize finding in his favor. Corn Product Refining Co. v. Cherry, 140 Ill. App. 1. Injury to servant who in obedience to foreman's order in conjunction with other workmen attempted to rig block and tackle without using smaller block and tackle ordinarily employed, chargeable to master. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 140 Ill. App. 141. Plaintiff did not assume risk of handling beam which was being moved in manner directed by superintendent; had right to rely to reasonable extent on assumption that injury would not follow obedience to orders. Connolly v. Booth, 198 Mass. 577, 84 NE 799.

32. Car repairer did not assume risk of going to work on train when his superior promised to watch and give warning if necessary. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Walker [Kan.] 99 P 269. Risk of frozen crest of sand pile falling on plaintiff not assumed as matter of law where superintendent assured plaintiff it was safe and ordered him to work. Brown v. Lennane [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 852, 118 NW 581. Motorman entitled to rely on superintendent's assurance that car could be safely operated over "greasy" rails, where he had had no previous trouble. Mayer v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 152 Mich. 276, 15 Det. Leg. N. 231, 116 NW 429. Where foreman assured servant that he could safely work near an overhanging sandbank, the servant being inexperienced in the work, he could recover for injuries sustained by caving in of bank. Village of Montgomery v. Robertson, 132 Ill. App. 862. Jury warranted in finding that plaintiff, carpenter, employed to shore up walls of cellar as excavation proceeded, did not assume risk of old wall of another building falling upon appreciated by the servant,[33] or is obvious and imminent and such that an ordinarily prudent person would not have encountered it under the circumstances.[34]

Reliance on promise to repair, after complaint. See 10 C. L. 762—Where the servant has complained of a defective condition, and the master or his representative has promised to make repairs, the servant may continue in the employment without assuming the risk [35] for such length of time as is reasonably necessary for the making him, when he asked foreman about it and latter said it was all right. Berube v. Horton, 199 Mass. 421, 85 NE 474. Employes may rely to reasonable extent upon exercise of due care by master and upon directions and assurances of safety and do not assume risk unless danger is known or obvious; fact of having such assurances from superior may be considered by jury. Anderson v. Pitt Iron Min. Co., 103 Minn. 252, 114 NW 953. Employe did not as matter of law assume risk of bringing hand in contact with knives of wood shaping machine when foreman misled him by saying there was no danger, that knives were below surface of board on which he worked. Jury's verdict for plaintiff not disturbed. Schmitt v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 135 Wis. 117, 115 NW 353. Employe was ordered by superior to go to work cleaning out boiler, and was assured it was safe, i. e., cold. Its condition was discoverable only by testing it. Employe turned on water and was scalded by steam formed by heated part of boiler. Held he did not assume risk. Holloway v. Johns-Manville Co., 135 Wis. 629, 116 NW 635.

33. Where employe voluntarily enters upon performance of duties obviously dangerous, he assumes the risk, regardless of assurances of safety. Holloway v. Johns-Manville Co., 135 Wis. 629, 116 NW 635. Operator of machine, who knew it was out or order, assumed risk of continuing to use it, though foreman assured him it was safe. Evans v. Eastman Kodak Co., 113 NYS 986. An experienced employe who undertakes work with full knowledge of defect and danger, with time for deliberation, assumes risk, notwithstanding master's orders or assurances of safety or his own protests. Gilmartin v. Kilgore [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 398. Experienced scaffold builder objected to scaffold as not strong enough for intended use, but, nevertheless, on master's saying it was sufficient, remained, saying "if it falls, it falls," and it fell. Held, he assumed risk. Gilmartin v. Kilgore [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 398.

34. Servant does not assume risk of obedience to order which exposes him to unusual or unnecessary danger unless the danger is so imminent that a man of ordinary prudence would not have incurred it. Yarber v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 235 Ill. 589, 85 NE 928. One at work under orders of superior does not assume risk unless danger is so imminent that person of ordinary prudence would not undertake it. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Edmonds, 33 Ky. L. R. 933, 111 SW 331. The rule that a servant does not assume risk of obedience to specific order or direction unless danger is glaring and imminent does not apply where the servant receives only general orders to proceed with certain work, the manner of doing it, and the order of taking up parts of it, not being specified. Mellette v. Indianapolis Northern Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 432. Miner sent up to throw down timbers from top of set twisted by explosion did not assume risk of their falling unless danger was glaring and imminent. Swearingen v. Consolidated Troup Min. Co., 212 Mo. 524, 111 SW 545. Employe was ordered by foreman to go between two cars, one of which was merely supported by jacks, to place support. Held under evidence that jury was justified in finding that danger was not such that ordinarily prudent man would not have incurred it. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Yarber, 137 Ill. App. 486. Where lineman engaged in erecting telephone line was ordered by foreman to stand on limb of a tree and did so under protest, the jury might properly consider whether danger was so imminent that no ordinarily prudent man with his opportunity for observation would incur it. Conklin Const. Co. v. Walsh, 131 Ill. App. 609.

Question for jury: Miner injured in attempting to repair timbering in dangerous place, being assured by boss that place was all right. Tomazin v. Shenango Furnace Co., 103 Minn. 334, 114 NW 1128. Mine captain had prevented timber men from putting in sets until an unusually large room had been made, and then, after "sounding," told men to go ahead, that it was all right. Whether plaintiff, injured by fall of ore while putting in set, assumed risk, for jury. Anderson v. Pitt Iron Min. Co., 103 Minn. 252, 114 NW 953. Plaintiff was picking on gravel ledge under orders of foreman, who told him he would warn of danger, and gravel fell upon him. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Edmonds, 33 Ky. L. R. 933, 111 SW 331. Workman complained of wrench and foreman told him it was all right and to go ahead. It had slipped several times but plaintiff had saved himself from injury. Whether danger was obvious for jury. Rogers v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 1067, 112 SW 630.

35. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mealman [Kan.] 97 P 381. Where master promises to remedy a defect in an appliance, he assumes risk of accident from it for reasonable time thereafter. Brown v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co., 104 Minn. 156, 116 NW 218. Servant did not assume risk where he complained of defect, was assured it would be removed, and continued to work in reliance on assurance. Hollis v. Widener, 221 Pa. 72, 70 A 287. Where plaintiff had obtained promise to repair defect, and did not know whether promise had been fulfilled at time of injury, having just returned to work after absence, he did not assume the risk. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall [C. C. A.] 159 F 893. Where foreman promised to have hooks used in moving logs repaired, subsequent use of them by employes would be no defense where injury resulted. Allen v. Standard Box & Lumber Co. [Or.] 96 P 1109. Recovery sustained where employe was injured while attempting to adjust deof the required repairs,[36] unless the appreciated danger is so imminent that a man of ordinary prudence would refuse to encounter it.[37] To bring a case within the operation of this rule, it must appear that the complaint was based on apprehension of injury,[38] that a definite promise to repair was made[39] by one who had authority to fective belt which master, through foreman, had promised to repair, where servant was acting under superior's orders at time. Tuckers' Mfg. & Supply Co. v. White, 108 Va. 147, 60 SE 630. Bottle wrapper, injured by bursting of bottle, did not as matter of law assume risk of working without mask where he had complained of danger, and foreman told him to go to work, that it would be fixed, and accident occurred few minutes later. Labasco v. Moxie Nerve Food Co., 111 NYS 1007. Defendant promised to repair track of logging road when foreman returned, and engineer continued to work and was injured by derailment before foreman returned and before repairs were made. Held, engineer could recover, master having assumed risk during period fixed by him. Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1120. Servant may rely on master's promise to shorten reach extending from wagon which servant was loading from adjacent sand hank, and which prevented his escape when bank caved in. Village of Montgomery v. Robertson, 132 Ill. App. 362. Where evidence clearly shows that machine at which plaintiff was employed was not working properly, and that an effort was made to fix it, and plaintiff was then told it was all right, judgment in his favor for injuries thereafter received and due to defect in machine will not be set aside if supported by sufficient evidence. Dayton Folding Box Co. v. Daniel Ruehlman, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 493.

36. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168; Cook v. Pittock & L. Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1130. Promise to repair may relieve servant who continues to work in reliance upon it for a reasonable time from assumption of risk. Freeman v. Savannah Elec. Co., 130 Ga. 449, 60 SE 1042. After promise to repair, servant does not assume risk until after expiration of time in which person of ordinary care and prudence would expect promise to be kept. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518. Servant induced by promise of master to repair to begin or continue work with defective appliances may use them for such time as he may reasonably expect the promise to be kept without assuming risk, unless danger is obvious, imminent, and immediate. Sapp v. Christie Bros., 79 Neb. 701, 115 NW 319. Where a servant makes complaint, and the master makes an unconditional promise to repair defect, risk is cast upon the master until such time as would preclude all reasonable expectation that promise might be kept. Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1120.

37. Harris v. Bottum [Vt.] 70 A 560; Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1120. Promise to repair does not relieve servant if danger is imminent and such that person of ordinary prudence would not encounter it. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518. Whether servant has right to rely on promise in particular case depends upon whether danger is so imminent that one of ordinary prudence would not encounter it; that is, upon whether servant was guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to use defective appliance. Brown v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co., 104 Minn. 156, 116 NW 218. Switchman did not as matter of law assume risk of defective roadbed where, after complaint by him, his foreman promised to repair it as soon as possible, danger not being glaring and imminent. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168. Danger of remaining in charge of engine with defective governor not so great as to throw risk of remaining on man in charge, his superior having told him it was safe. Crosby v. Cuba R. Co., 158 F 144.

Whether risk assumed held for jury: Plaintiff injured in operating defective "joiner and rip saw" of which he had complained. Ong Chair Co. v. Cook, 85 Ark. 390, 108 SW 203. Servant injured by defective steam log skidder within reasonable time after promise to repair and request that he continue. Marcum v. Three States Lumber Co. [Ark.] 113 SW 357. Whether danger from running logging train was so imminent that engineer assumed risk of derailment, after promise to repair. Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1120. Where plaintiff, having complained of defect in floor of place of work, and received a promise of repairs, assumed risk of injury three or four days later. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518. Engineer complained of water gauge after several had exploded, and superintendent promised to substitute a different kind; gauge exploded, injuring plaintiff, engineer. Nicholas v. Albert Lea Light & Power Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 503. Where miner entered coal mine with knowledge that appliance used to supply fresh air was defective, and objected and was promised that defect would be remedied, his continuance in employment in well grounded belief that repairs would be made in reasonable time did not charge him with negligence as matter of law. Sons Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway [Okl.] 99 P 153. Whether man engaged in unloading logs, by knocking out hooks with short handled ax, was negligent in continuing to use such ax after having asked for long handled one which defendant had promised to supply him with. Brown v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co., 104 Minn. 156, 116 NW 218.

38. Section hand complained of brakes, not because he thought them dangerous, but because they were inconvenient, and he continued to work after they said they would repair it, but would use it as it was for present. Held section hand did not continue in reliance on this promise but assumed the risk. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mealman [Kan.] 97 P 381.

39. Where promise was to change refuse chute in mill as soon as it could be done in course of affairs while mill was in operation, promise was sufficiently definite. Cook v. Pittock & Leadbetter Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1130. Master assumes risk, whether make it,[40] that the servant relied upon the promise and was induced by it to remain,[41] and that he was injured within a reasonable time thereafter.[42] While he himself was exercising due care for his own safety.[43] A promise to supply a new instrumentality, after complaint has the same effect as a promise to repair.[44] A promise to repair is held not to relieve the servant from the assumption of risk where it relates to simple tools.[45]

Risks created by servant. See 10 C. L. 764—A servant who unnecessarily adopts a dangerous method of doing work,[46] or who voluntarily undertakes work outside the time fixed for making of repairs is definite or indefinite; as where promise is to repair when foreman returns. Morgan v. Rainier Beach Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1120.

40. Servant must show that promise to repair was made by master or one duly authorized to make it. Cicalese v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 69 A 166. Foreman of gang engaged in laying and repairing tracks, working with them, is fellow-servant; no power to promise to repair hand car. Id. Immaterial that promise is conveyed to servant through third person. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168.

41. Where declaration did not allege that servant was induced to continue in operation of machine with unguarded rollers by promise to guard, it did not show shifting of assumption of risk from her to master. Harris v. Bottum [Vt.] 70 A 560. Evidence sufficient to support finding that operator of shingle machine complained of defective construction, that defendant promised to remedy it by "filling in," that plaintiff continued to work in reliance on such promise, and was injured by such defect soon after. Duskey v. Green Lake Shingle Co. [Wash.] 98 P 99.

42. Operator of buffing machine complained of loose driving belt at 10 o'clock and superintendent promised to repair it at noon but did not; operator complained again at 2 o'clock and was ordered back to work with promise that it would be fixed in a little while; he was injured by it at 3 o'clock. He did not assume risk as matter of law. Krohn v. Smith & Co., 151 Mich. 247, 14 Det. Leg. N. 893, 114 NW 1017. Servant, operating planing machine defective in that it might start up automatically, obtained promise to repair by Sunday, and was injured on Tuesday. Held not to have assumed the risk by relying on promise an unreasonable time. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 134 Ill. App. 161. Where it would only take 2 days to repair a defective machine, and plaintiff operated it for two months after promise to repair, he assumed the risk. Balkwill v. Becker, 131 Ill. App. 221. Elevator operator continued to work for 3 weeks after promise following complaint to superintendent that his work was rendered dangerous by others using elevator. Held precluded from recovery. Samuel Cupples Woodenware Co. v. Walins, 140 Ill. App. 624. Where on servant's complaint that passage in mine was too low the master immediately set to work to remedy it but had not reached the particular place where injury occurred, question of whether servant assumed risk was for jury. Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Allison, 132 Ill. App. 221. Whether an unreasonable length of time had elapsed since promise was made to change chute in mill which carried off refuse, at time plaintiff was injured, held for jury. Cook v. Pittock & Leadbetter Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1130.

43. Promise to remedy or remove defects or dangers does not relieve servant from duty of ordinary care for his own safety until change is made. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Headrick [C. C. A.] 159 F 680. Notwithstanding promise to repair, servant is required to exercise due care, and, if danger is obvious and imminent, he cannot recover for injury resulting therefrom. Freeman v. Savannah Elec. Co., 130 Ga. 449, 60 SE 1042. Motorman complained of defective brake, received promise of new car, and continued to use defective one 3½ hours, being required to use all his strength and throw all his weight on brake to stop car. As result he became afflicted with hernia. Held he had no cause of action on such facts. Id.

44. McGill v. Cleveland & S. W. Trac. Co., 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 489.

45. In case of simple tools and portable appliances (such as stepladder), where obvious defects are as perfectly understood by servant as master, risk from their further use is assumed, and promise to repair or replace such defective tool or appliance, as distinguished from intricate machinery, use of which requires great skill and care, does not shift assumption of risk from servant to master. McGill v. Cleveland & S. W. Trac. Co., 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 489; McGill v. Cleveland & S. W. Trac. Co. [Ohio] 86 NE 989. Promise to repair or remedy defect does not suspend servant's assumption of risk if appliance in question is simple and its nature fully known. Kistner v. American Steel Foundries, 233 Ill. 35, 84 NE 44. Promise to fix board which employe stood on to fix machine did not place risk on master, employe testifying that he knew the condition of the board and danger of using it. Id. Under Illinois law, risk of particles of steel flying from head of hammer when struck is assumed by employe using it, though he complained of it, and was promised that it would be replaced, danger being obvious. Rahm v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 679, 108 SW 570.

46. Employe assumes risk when he voluntarily selects obviously dangerous way of doing work. Big Five Tunnel Ore Reduction & Transp. Co. v. Johnson [Colo.] 99 P 63. Raising safe by tackle and block when he knew the method was dangerous. Royal Trust Co. v. National Provision Co., 139 Ill. App. 136. Plaintiff unnecessarily moved stone suspended over car on which it was being loaded, and it slipped from supporting tongs and fell upon him. Solt v. Canney [C. C. A.] 162 F 660. Where servant undertakes scope of his own duties,[47] or who disregards rules [48] or orders,[49] assumes the risk involved.

(§ 3) G. Contributory negligence. Nature of defense. See 10 C. L. 785—The distinctions between this defense and that of assumption of risk have already been referred to.[50] Contributory negligence is a want of ordinary care on the part of the servant injured which, concurring and combining with negligence of the master, produced the injury as a proximate cause without which the injury would not have occurred.[51] When found to exist it bars recovery in most jurisdictions,[52] even though to perform duties in manner more hazardous than that required or expected, he assumes the risk. Brakeman assumed risk of trying to uncouple moving cars. Day v. Louisiana Western R. Co., 121 La. 180, 46 S 203. Brakeman who undertakes to uncouple cars in dangerous way assumes risk, safer way being available. Taylor v. Rock Island, etc., R. Co., 121 La. 543, 46 S 621. Where brakeman could have stopped train, when he found coupler would not work, but chose instead to go in between cars, he assumed risk of getting foot caught by guard rail while trying to adjust coupler. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Hynson [Tex.] 109 SW 929, rvg. [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 755, 107 SW 625. Engineer assumed risk of crossing railroad yards to reach train by dangerous route, wherein he fell into ash pit, when there was a safe way which he could have taken. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathis [Tex.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 481, 107 SW 530. Employe assumed risk of putting his hand under guard to remove obstruction from revolving cylinder with teeth when machine was to be stopped by his orders and he could have waited. Hutchison v. Cohankus Mfg. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 899. Plaintiff, engaged in placing "riffles" in chute during loading of vessel, assumed risk, where instead of standing on another chute to place "riffles" used a ladder, so that a sack of wheat coming down chute struck the ladder and caused it to fall. Stewart v. Balfour [Wash.] 98 P 103.

47. One injured outside the scope of duties for which he was employed, being there without authority, cannot recover. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 158 F 294. Where a servant undertakes labor outside the scope of his employment, he assumes the incidental risks when they are equally apparent to himself and the master. Where painter undertook to remove scaffolding erected for carpenters, he assumed the risk. Weinand v. Marshall Field & Co., 131 Ill. App. 166. Employe engaged in operating ripsaw assumed risk of voluntarily attempting to operate joiner, in doing which board he was working on kicked up, causing his hand to come in contact with knives. Stodden v. Anderson & W. Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 116. Apprentice lineman should work under orders and directions of superiors and experienced men. If he attempts to do work without orders, and selects his own way or materials or tools, he assumes risk. Maitrejean v. New Orleans R. & L. Co., 120 La. 1056, 46 S 21. Servant directed by "inside superintendent" to whose orders he was subject to assist in adjusting belt was not volunteer and did not assume risk of injury from set screw on shaft. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 158 F 294.

48. Engineer assumed risk of collision when he violated rule requiring him to run train into station 10 minutes behind preceding train, and under full control. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Brice [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1094.

49. Where master orders servant away from place where he is at work, and gives as reason therefor that he is afraid wall will fall on him, and servant disregards order and continues his work without changing his position, and wall falls and he is killed, an action for damages against the master because of his death should be taken from jury on ground that risk was assumed. Iliff v. Cavey, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 334.

50. See ante, § 3F.

51. Webster v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 1080; James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 391; Hoseth v. Preston Mill Co. [Wash.] 96 P 423; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Fortner [Ky.] 113 SW 847. Contributory negligence must be at least concurring proximate cause of injury. Reaves v. Anniston Knitting Mills [Ala.] 45 S 702. Taking risks voluntarily bars recovery only when contributing to cause injury. Kiley v. Rutland R. Co., 80 Vt. 536, 68 A 713. Negligence of employe will bar recovery only if it contributed to cause injury. Buchman v. Jeffery, 135 Wis. 448, 115 NW 372. Negligence of conductor in trying to couple car on down grade without putting on brakes, and then getting on car and trying to stop it after it had started, was not proximate cause of his death where car was derailed by defective track, causing him to jump. Dortch v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 616. Conductor stood at middle of car on footboard, instead of on rear platform as required by rules, when struck by other car. Bennett v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 560. Disobedience of orders not contributory negligence, when it did not contribute to cause of injury. Cavanaugh v. Windsor Cut Stone Corp., 80 Conn. 585, 69 A 345. Manner used by plaintiff to latch turntable held not to have contributed to his injury by fall of lumber upon him from car. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. Brakeman injured while adjusting coupler between two cars could not be held guilty of contributory negligence by reason of working on side where engineer could not see him, where injury was not caused by engineer but by two cars allowed by foreman to "drift" down against those he was between. McGuire v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. App. 677, 107 SW 411. Train was being moved back and forth to thaw out pipes, and brakeman was sent back to place torpedoes on rails to warn approaching trains, and on returning was struck by rear of train. No recovery, since failure to have watchman on rear of train would not have prevented accident unless brakeman himself has used due care. Wood

the action is based on a violation of a statutory duty;[53] but the defense is not available under some statutes.[54] Under some statutes only a reckless exposure to danger will bar recovery.[55]

Degree of care required of servant. See 10 C. L. 766—Only ordinary care is required,[56] that is, such care as ordinarily prudent persons would exercise under like circumstances.[57] Whether that degree of care was exercised in a particular instance

v. Central New England R. Co., 111 NYS 91. Plaintiff's negligence in operating corn grinder held cause of his hand getting caught in rollers. Jackson v. Gulf Elevator Co., 209 Mo. 506, 108 SW 44.

52. Whippen v. Stone, 197 Mass. 519, 83 NE 989; Bowen v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 219 Pa. 405, 68 A 963; Hillsboro Cotton Mills v. King [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 484; Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 848; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hoffman [Va. App.] 63 SE 432. Where minor servant has been instructed as to dangers, defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk are available as they would be against adults. Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 158. No recovery for death of employe by caving in of curbing of sewer when he himself had charge of work for city. Winkleman v. Adrian, 151 Mich. 519, 15 Det. Leg. N. 9, 115 NW 461.

53. Contributory negligence is almost uniformly held to be defense against action based on violation of statutory duty. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722. It is defense where Kirby's Dig. § 5352, requiring delivery of props to miners, is violated. Id. Contributory negligence is defense though action is based on violation of statutory duty to guard machinery. Huss v. Heydt Bakery Co., 210 Mo. 44, 108 SW 63. Contributory negligence is defense in action based on violation of factory act, but must be affirmatively established by defendant. Kansas Buff Brick & Mfg. Co. v. Stark, 77 Kan. 648, 95 P 1047. Section 8 of the Federal Statute, providing that any employe of a common carrier who may be injured by any locomotive, car or train in use contrary to the provisions of the act, shall not be deemed thereby to have assumed the risk occasioned thereby, does not abrogate the well settled rule that an act or omission on the part of the servant amounting to a want of ordinary care which, concurring with the negligent act of the master, is the proximate cause of the injury to the servant, will bar a recovery by the servant. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Curtis, 134 Ill. App. 565. Sanborn's St. Sup. 1906, § 1636jj, giving right of action for injuries caused by failure to guard machinery, abolishes defense of assumption of risk but not of contributory negligence. Klotz v. Power & Min. Machinery Co., 136 Wis. 107, 116 NW 770. Contributory negligence is defense to action based on Burns' Ann. St. 1901i (guarding machinery). Robbins v. Fort Wayne Iron & Steel Co., 41 Ind. App. 557, 84 NE 514. Liability act of 1902 gives right of action only where employe was in exercise of due care. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 125 App. Div. 846, 110 NYS 887. Question of contributory negligence for jury under statute where plaintiff, wheeling hand truck, slipped on defective floor and fell. Knezevich v. Bush Terminal Co., 111 NYS 255.

54. Contributory negligence is no defense to an action for injury to a minor employed in violation of the Child Labor Act. Frorer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588. Contributory negligence on part of miner will not defeat right of recovery for injury caused by willful violation of mines and mining act either by an act of omission or commission on the part of the owner, operator or manager of the mine. Mertens v. Southern Coal & Min. Co., 235 Ill. 540, 85 NE 743. Contributory negligence of miner in going into room with actual knowledge of dangerous condition of roof will not defeat recovery for willful violation of mines act by employer. Id. Mere fact that injured employe used negligent method of firing shots in mine would not exempt mine operator from liability for consequences of explosion of dust, due to failure to perform statutory duty to keep mine free from dust, though employe's negligence contributed to cause explosion. Davis v. Illinois Collieries Co., 232 Ill. 284, 83 NE 836. Where the act required roadways in mine to be sprayed, the negligence of servant in firing shots in direction of air currents, thus aggravating by accumulated dust the explosion which injured him, is no defense where the master had neglected to keep dust down by spraying mine. Maplewood Coal Co. v. Graham, 134 Ill. App. 277.

55. Code 1906, § 4056, providing that knowledge by railroad employe of defects in ways or appliances shall not bar recovery for injuries caused thereby does not exclude the defense of contributory negligence, but requires, to constitute such defense, reckless exposure to danger with knowledge. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Scott [Miss.] 48 S 239. Switchman held not guilty of such reckless conduct as to bar recovery where he went between loaded car and engine to couple them, under orders of superior, and took customary position, and was injured by lumber from car falling upon him. Id. Under Code 1906, § 4046, making railroad companies liable for injuries caused by "kicking switches," regardless of mere contributory negligence, nothing short of reckless, deliberate, voluntary exposure to danger by brakeman will defeat recovery for injury so caused. Driver v. Southern R. Co. [Miss.] 46 S 824.

56. It is the duty of an employe to use ordinary and reasonable care for his own safety. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Fortner [Ky.] 113 SW 847; Flowers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 718; Tuckers' Mfg. & Supply Co. v. White, 108 Va. 147, 60 SE 630; Larsen v. Leonardt [Cal. App.] 96 P 395. Master has right to assume that servants will use ordinary care for their own safety. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Walker [C. C. A.] 160 F 896.

57. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Duty of engineer of a train to exercise ordinary care for his own safety when running trains after rain storms—is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury,[58] to be determined with reference to all instructions. Jennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 162 F 392. Servant can be declared negligent as matter of law only when he incurs danger which no prudent person would encounter. Hill v. Saugestad [Or.] 98 P 524. Continuing to work in place obviously dangerous and such that person of ordinary prudence would not continue there is contributory negligence. Huss v. Heydt Bakery Co., 210 Mo. 44, 108 SW 63. It is the duty of the servant to exercise care proportionate to the danger of his situation as he understands it, and if he fails to do so, the fault is his and not his master's. John Maher & Sons v. Martewicz, 139 Ill. App. 173. Brakeman was not negligent in mode adopted by him to adjust coupler unless he ought to have realized danger of remaining between cars as long as he did. McGuire v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. App. 677, 107 SW 411. An employe, acting in line of duty, may be justified in doing what would be negligent if done by a stranger. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. Where plaintiff was injured by reason of another employe disobeying or not having heard an order given him, instruction that plaintiff was negligent if he went ahead without knowing whether his order had been heard was erroneous, since plaintiff was only bound to use ordinary care under the circumstances. Balderson v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 986. Charge on contributory negligence construed and held to require, correctly, the degree of care which might be reasonably expected of an ordinarily prudent person under the circumstances. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kangas [C. C. A.] 162 F 143. Instruction requiring of plaintiff only care of "ordinarily prudent man" erroneous; this suggests too low degree of care. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599. Instruction erroneous because omitting reference to duty of employe to take care proportionate to circumstances. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364.

58. Evidence held to warrant or require submission of question of contributory negligence to jury: Employe injured by fall of freight elevator on ship. San Francisco & P. S. S. Co. v. Carlson [C. C. A.] 161 F 851. Member of grading crew struck by elevator on grading machine under which he was standing when chain broke allowing it to fall; some evidence of warning. Jones v. Herrick [Iowa] 118 NW 444. Air hoist went up instead of down, causing load to fall, plaintiff having pulled wrong rope, owing to change of which he had no notice. Waligora v. St. Paul Foundry Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 395. Elevator operator fell into unguarded shaft. Roth v. Buettel Bros. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 166. Servant killed by fall of derrick boom, while standing under it. Miroslawski v. Ferguson & Lange Foundry Co., 232 Ill. 630, 83 NE 1086. Operator of press injured by automatic fall of hammer. Staskowski v. Standard Oil Co., 111 NYS 58. Where employe got arm caught between joist and car, while trying to get car under hopper to be filled with dirt. Booth v. McLean Contracting Co. [Md.] 70 A 104. Employe engaged in shifting belt got caught in loose, unused, rope pulley. Trombley v. McAfee, 152 Mich. 494, 15 Det. Leg. N. 269, 116 NW 191. Mill employe caught on shaft while trying to adjust belt. Seely v. Tenant, 104 Minn. 354, 116 NW 648. Employe adjusting belt on pulley caught by revolving set screw. Little v. Bousfield & Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 763, 117 NW 903. Employe got sleeve caught in exposed gearing and was drawn in. Klotz v. Power & Min. Mach. Co., 136 Wis. 107, 116 NW 770. Workman in sawmill injured by exposed gearing. Hoffman v. Rib Lake Lumber Co., 136 Wis. 388, 117 NW 789. Whether plaintiff was negligent for jury where in course of his duties he reached over unguarded saw to pour water on boxing to prevent its heating and got arm caught on saw. Hill v. Saugestad [Or.] 98 P 524. Servant fell and came in contact with unguarded gang saw. Evansville Hoop & Stave Co. v. Bailey [Ind. App.] 84 NE 549. Operator of unguarded cross-cut saw struck by block thrown by saw. O'Connell v. F. Smith & Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 266. Saw held in place by defective rope, fell on plaintiff, who was operating it. Ogilvie v. Conway Lumber Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 200. Whether uninstructed, inexperienced employe was negligent in attempting to oil machinery. Wankowski v. Crivitz Pulp & Paper Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 643. Material furnished for scaffold by master broke, and plaintiff fell, plaintiff and another having put it up. Warren v. Post, 128 App. Div. 572, 112 NYS 960. Whether plaintiff negligent in using patent ladder scaffold, new to him, which fell. Schmitt v. Rohn, 110 NYS 1086. Car painter fell from scaffold because car on which he was working was negligently moved by switch crew. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 107 SW 481. Warehouse employe injured by fall of pile of sacks of flour. Weinert v. Merchants' & Shippers' Warehouse Co., 112 NYS 123. Whether teamster, unloading ice from car with hole in floor in which he slipped, was negligent. Borchardt v. People's Ice Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 359. Employe sent to repair pump in engine room of mill fell into excavation in floor. Sparling v. U. S. Sugar Co., 136 Wis. 509, 117 NW 1055. Whether plaintiff domestic was negligent in stepping through hole in porch floor, covered with thin boards. Fearon v. Mullins [Mont.] 98 P 650. Plaintiff fell through uncovered hay chute in barn. Moellman v. Gieze-Henselmeier Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1023. Whether deck hand was negligent who fell through hole in platform barge at night having been ordered there for first time, and having no previous knowledge of its condition. Boy of 15 operating sole molding machine got fingers caught. Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 SW 794. Whether boy of 16 appreciated danger of operating wood working machine and was negligent. Marklewitz v. Olds Motor Works, 152 Mich. 113, 15 Det. Leg. N. 125, 115 NW 999. Boy of 13 fell over defective platform, in dark place, and got hand caught in machine. Haggblom v. Winslow Bros. & Smith Co., 198 Mass. 114, 84 NE 301. Boy of 17 killed by fly wheel or other machinery in place where narrow passage, not properly guarded, separated engine pit and other machines. Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1063.

61. Failure of trackman to look out for extra street cars. Wallace's Adm'r v. Fox [Vt.] 69 A 665. Failure of mail carrier for defendant to watch for trains held to bar recovery for his death caused by train striking him as he crossed tracks. Skinner v. Boston & M. R. Co., 200 Mass. 422, 86 NE 772. Where plaintiff's intestate knew the custom of running trains through the yards, but failed to watch in direction from which switch engine might come, held guilty of negligence directly contributing to his death. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Mills, 131 Ill. App. 625. Member of track crew struck by train as he was walking alongside track, train coming from behind him. He could have seen it or could have walked farther from track. Dangelo v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 111 NYS 800. Inexperience or ignorance cannot be relied on where employe puts his hand on revolving cylinder with sharp teeth. Hutchison v. Cohankus Mfg. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 899. Plaintiff knew that elevator shaft was often kept open, and was so the last time he had seen it, yet did not use care to see if shaft was open at time of injury. Singer v. Boyce Paper Mills Co., 141 Ill. App. 316. Cook in defendant's family, employed 2 days, fell into elevator shaft by opening door in dark which she supposed was storeroom door. No recovery. She should have investigated more carefully. Kehoe v. Stern, 114 NYS 14.

62. No recovery by foundry employe for injury by fall of casting, where he knew conditions and could have prevented accident. Van Pelt v. Straight Line Engine Co., 112 NYS 116. Apprentice lineman voluntarily undertook to carry a guy wire up a pole in his bare hand and received shock from which he died. No recovery for his death, since company provided safety appliances which he did not use and he was not under orders at time. Maitrejean v. New Orleans R. & Light Co., 120 La. 1056, 46 S 21. Section man negligent who failed to get out of way of train which he saw coming. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 113 SW 1104. Motorman, injured in collision with car ahead, negligent when he failed to use reverse, knew his brakes were not working properly, and failed to apply for another car, and ran too close to car ahead. Foley v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 198 Mass. 532, 84 NE 846. Car repairer, injured by engine moving car he was working on, negligent where he failed to use warning flag or to have lookout on watch. Jacoby v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 635. Where injury was caused by overexertion, plaintiff could not recover if he overestimated his strength. Jones v. Pioneer Cooperage Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 94. Where employe could have prevented injury by having hand drawn into block by steel wire rope had he been attentive to his duties, he could not recover. Johnson v. A. F. Coates Logging Co. [Wash.] 97 P 801.

63. Where it was coal miner's duty to order props and prop up the roof when it became dangerous after removal of coal, and roof fell because not propped, his own neglect was cause. Smith's Adm'r v. North Jellico Coal Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 785. If it was employe's duty to keep floor clean and he failed to do so, and its condition caused him to slip and fall upon unguarded machinery, he would be guilty of contributory negligence, and instruction to that effect was proper. Huss v. Heydt Bakery Co., 210 Mo. 44, 108 SW 63. Employe, part of whose work was to see that everything about sawmill was kept in order, could not complain that lantern used by him was smoky and gave dim light, this being result of his own negligence. Ramsey v. Tremont Lumber Co., 121 La. 506, 46 S 608. It is duty of lineman to use reasonable care to inspect cross-arm on electric wire pole before going out on it to work, and court should so charge and not leave it to jury to say whether he was under such duty. Johnston v. Syracuse Lighting Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 539. Lineman, warned of danger from wires of another company, and charged with duty of inspection of poles and wires, was guilty of negligence in failing to inspect and in coming in contact with charged iron brace. Memphis Consol. Gas. & Elec. Co. v. Simpson [Tenn.] 109 SW 1155. No recovery for death of lineman by fall of old pole which was rotten where work was moving wires from old to new poles and men were instructed to inspect poles and not to climb those which were rotten and condition of pole which fell would have been disclosed by inspection. Eigenbrod v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co., 121 La. 228, 46 S 219. Where it was servant's duty to open and close windows each day, it was his duty to use reasonable care to see that they were in good and safe condition. Stewart & Co. v. Harmon [Md.] 70 A 333. Evidence held not to show that plaintiff was a known danger may in some cases be excusable,[64] but is usually held to constitute negligence.[65] An act is not excusable because customary, though the fact that it is customary is to be considered.[66]

Choice of methods. See 10 C. L. 771—Needless exposure to a known danger is negligence;[67] hence, a voluntary choice[68] of a known or obviously dangerous way of doing work,[69] when a reasonably safe way is available,[70] is negligence.

required to repair hole in floor by which he was injured, it appearing that carpenter was employed to make repairs. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518.

64. Brett v. S. H. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 P 1051. Mere knowledge by brakeman of unsafe condition of low bridge over cars would not alone charge him with contributory negligence, though the fact of his knowledge could be considered by jury with other facts. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 108 Va. 632, 62 SE 363. Code 1904, § 1294K, provides that knowledge alone shall not bar recovery. Id. Under all facts, jury warranted in finding there was no contributory negligence. Id.

65. Temporary forgetfulness may excuse an employe in cases of abnormal danger or emergencies, but ordinarily is inconsistent with exercise of due care. Brett v. S. H. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 P 1051. Employe guilty of negligence who walked backwards into hole in floor, existence of which he was familiar with but which he forgot. Id. Where servant knew of existence of hole in floor but forgot and stepped into it, he was held negligent and could not recover. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518. Where lineman knew danger of touching iron brace in contact with heavily charged uninsulated wire, the fact that he momentarily forgot would not excuse him for charge of negligence or make master responsible. Memphis Consol. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Simpson [Tenn.] 109 SW 1155.

66. Proof that plaintiff's, conductor, act in getting off moving train at station was customary among defendant's conductors, admissible. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 339. Brakeman not necessarily negligent where, finding coupler defective, he adopted customary method of making uncoupling. Rush v. Oregon Power Co. [Or.] 95 P 193. No contributory negligence on part of unskilled employe injured while trying to adjust belts in customary way. Mathews v. Kerlin [La.] 48 S 123. That rule prohibiting employes from riding on pilot of engine was habitually violated by others would not excuse plaintiff's act, if negligent, though custom could be considered on issue of negligence. El Dorado & B. R. Co. v. Whatley [Ark.] 114 SW 234. Where member of construction crew rode on tool car instead of in diner of work train, general custom sanctioned by company or foreman of allowing men to ride in that way would not be decisive of question of plaintiff's negligence where he was thrown from car by shock. Gibler v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 93, 107 SW 1021. Where plaintiff directed helper to hold curved wheel guard under power drill in customary way it not being practicable to hold such pieces with clamps, he was not guilty of negligence as matter of law in method of work employed. Kansas City Consol. Smelt. & Refining Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 889.

67. Servant is usually held negligent if he continues in service where danger is imminent. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mangan [Ark.] 112 SW 168.

68. Servant not negligent unless choice voluntary. Ramm v. Hewitt-Lea Lumber Co. [Wash.] 94 P 1081; Harris v. Washington Portland Cement Co. [Wash.] 95 P 84. The rule that the servant must choose the safer of two courses open to him does not apply where it would entail leaving place where his ordinary duty places him. Fireman injured by locomotive dropping through bridge was not guilty of contributory negligence because he stayed on engine and did not avail himself of engineer's permission to go back upon train. McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson, 209 U. S. 275, 52 Law. Ed. 788.

69. Where two courses are equally safe, under normal conditions, choice of one rather than other is not negligence. Swann-Day Lumber Co. v. Thomas [Ky.] 112 SW 907. Where servant voluntarily chooses most hazardous of two available methods, he does so at his own risk. Lima Elec. R. & Light Co. v. Hicks, 77 Ohio St. 606, 84 NE 1129. Servant not required to select "safest" way, where there may be others reasonably safe. Condie v. Rio Grande W. R. Co. [Utah] 97 P 120. Servant not negligent in adopting one mode of feeding machine rather than another unless he knew the one he used was the more dangerous. Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon [Ind. App.] 85 NE 832. Choice of more dangerous method not negligence per se, if no rules or orders are violated, and ordinarily prudent person might adopt either under circumstances. Brady v. Florence, etc., R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 321. Where "trouble man" for telegraph man climbed pole to test wires, he was not negligent as matter of law in carrying up bare ground wire to make the test rather than to test wires in cable box, unless he knew that electric light wires, also strung on pole, were live at that time of day, he having received shock from such wires. Ambre v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 871. Employe who went to throw off belt took usual course, which he was told to take, and stepped over shaft, defective collar on which caught him and caused his injury. Miller v. Kimberly & Clark Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 536. Doctrine that one who adopts unsafe course or method, when safe way is available, cannot recover, held not applicable; contributory negligence for jury. Id. No recovery where employe passed under belt where he was struck by bolts attached, when he could have chosen safe route. Perkins v. Oxford Paper Co. [Me.] 71 A 476. Plaintiff, in adjusting belt, put his hand on rail above to steady himself, and crane which ran on rail ran over his hand. He testified that he had not noticed crane, though it was in motion great deal of time. Court should have instructed that he could not recover if he knew about the crane. Browne v. Pratt & Letchworth Co., 111 NYS 863. Where experienced engineer knew of defect in engine, he could not recover for injuries resulting from derailment while going round curve at high speed, derailment being caused by such defect. Adams v. New York, etc., R. Co., 199 Mass. 476, 85 NE 585. Fireman, whose duty it was to clean out locomotive engine, could do it in his own way and when he saw fit. He got under engine just after switching was done at station and train had been made up. Same member of crew connected air and piston rod came down on fireman's leg which was unnecessarily exposed to danger. No recovery. Wilkinson v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 105 Minn. 300, 117 NW 611. Street car conductor injured by striking telephone pole with his head while on passing car, pole being where he must have observed it and known danger. Moore v. Chattanooga Elec. Co. [Tenn.] 109 SW 497. No recovery by employer injured by putting hand in rollers of grist mill. Whitmore v. H. K. Webster Co., 200 Mass. 281, 86 NE 305. Quarryman negligent where he voluntarily went to work in dangerous place after warning and rock fell on him. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Hammond [Ala.] 47 S 248. Plaintiff unnecessarily moved stone suspended over car on which it was being loaded, causing it to slip from tongs and fall upon him; he had assisted in fastening tongs, and had seen it slip before. Salt v. Canney [C. C. A.] 162 F 660. When an employe willfully encounters danger known to him, or patent and open to be seen and known, he cannot recover for injuries received therefrom. Servant pushing car stepped into hole in platform of which he had been notified. Priddy v. Black Betsey Coal & Min. Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 163. Greater degree of care required in operation of unguarded machine when operator knew the danger. Harris v. Bottum [Vt.] 70 A 560. No recovery by employe who removed guard from cylinder and put his hand in to remove obstruction when he could have waited until machine stopped. Hutchison v. Cohankus Mfg. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 899. Ordinarily jumping off or on moving car is held contributory negligence. Dortch v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 616. Where brakeman attempted to board slowly moving train by placing right hand on end sill of box car and left hand on end sill of coal car in its rear, and swinging his feet to the bumpers of the coal car, disregarding ladders and stirrups, held, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence which was proximate cause of his injury. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Curtes, 134 Ill. App. 565. Servant hired to operate ripsaw was negligent in voluntarily attempting to operate joiner, this not being his duty, without instructions, or without properly adjusting it, if he knew how to run it. Stodden v. Anderson & Winter Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 116. No recovery for death of railroad employe who in crossing tracks needlessly exposed himself to danger from passing trains. Boyle v. New York, etc., R. Co., 58 Misc. 50, 110 NYS 19. Railroad employe guilty of contributory negligence where he was crushed between car and freight platform, danger of so doing being obvious, and where he could as well have done his work on other side of track. Haring v. Great Northern R. Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 325. Act of brakeman in going between cars to uncouple air hose from inside of curve of track rather than outside was not negligence per se, where manner of his death was not shown. Whether he was negligent was for jury. Brady v. Florence, etc., R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 321. Employe negligent in attempting to cross track between two chained cars, when he could have walked around by going 70 to 90 feet. Beck v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 883. Freight conductor, after giving engineer signal to detach engine, went between cars, knowing engine would be backed to give slack for uncoupling, and adopted dangerous way to couple air hose, which was not his duty. He knew usual safe way. No recovery for his death, crushed by cars. Dermid v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 61 SE 657. No recovery where brakeman takes dangerous way to uncouple cars, instead of safe way. Taylor v. Rock Island, A. & L. R. Co., 121 La. 543, 46 S 621. No recovery by switchman who, contrary to rule not to attempt to uncouple moving cars, signaled engineer to move while he was between car, and got his foot caught between guard and other rail, space not being blocked, and was injured. Day v. Louisiana W. R. Co., 121 La. 180, 46 S 203. Switchman, discovering coupler defective, should have crossed to other side of cars to use lever, instead of going between cars to do work by hand. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Brady [C. C. A.] 161 F 719. No recovery for death of switchman who unnecessarily went between cars to uncouple them by hand, and got foot caught in frog. Powell v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 864. No recovery for death of brakeman who, instead of using automatic coupler apparatus, went between cars and rode on brake beam while making flying switch. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Rudolph [Kan.] 99 P 224. Employe warned by his foreman of danger of standing beneath heavy timber being raised by derrick and told to take different position while timber was being raised, or who knew of his own knowledge that it was dangerous to stand in different position, and injured by timber falling upon him, guilty of contributory negligence. Wallace v. Spellacy, 8 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 41. Shoveler in ash pit was supposed to work in pit beside track. He took dangerous position behind engine, and put hand on rail waiting for engine to move. Driver of engine could not see him, and moved engine backward over his hand. No recovery. Dorgan v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Wash.] 97 P 229. Raising safe by a means which he knew was perilous. Royal Trust Co. v. National Provision Co., 139 Ill. App. 136. Man at work on pile driver left place of duty beside the leads, which was safe, and went out in front of appliance, where pile fell on him; he had been warned of danger. Kirkpatrick v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 855. Boy who used elevator walked into shaft backward without looking to see if elevator was there. Taylor v. Hennessey, 200 Mass. 263, 86 NE 318. No recovery where employe took dangerous route and stepped into hole and was injured by saw, there being safe way. H. D. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Headrick [C. C. A.] 159 F 680. Servant left his Reliance on master's care.[See 10 C. L. 773]—A servant is not negligent in relying to a reasonable extent on the assumption that the master has or will perform his duties with respect to the safety of his employes,[71] unless he has actual or implied knowledge to the contrary.[72] He may also reasonably rely on an assurance of safety by a superior,[73] and may assume that the execution of an order given by a superior will place of work, while machines were at rest, and in returning took dangerous route and was caught in cogs. Schmonske v. Asphalt Ready Roofing Co., 114 NYS 87. No recovery for death of skilled steel construction worker who chose dangerous way to get to desired place. Gunderson v. Roebling Const. Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 807. Where plaintiff, while engaged in operating a planing machine, choose to insert his fingers between the feed-rollers to remove a knot, instead of availing himself of one of several safe ways, his injury was held to be brought about by his own negligence. McNeilly v. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co., 140 Ill. App. 34. Where servant undertook to oil planer without stopping knives, which he could easily have done, he was held guilty of contributory negligence. Boehne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 66. Brakeman selected his own appliance with which to push car on side track with engine on main track, and stood on engine pilot to do work. Appliance proved too short, and he was crushed as engine moved against car. He could have stood on ground. No recovery. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fuller [Ark.] 109 SW 1160. No recovery for death of employe drawing off water from locomotive boiler, caused by defect in blow-off pipe, defect being obvious, and proper and safe pipes being available, which it was his duty to use. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, 77 Kan. 642, 95 P 1049. No recovery where operator of power press attempted to remove card board without stopping machine, as he might have done. Whippen v. Stone, 197 Mass. 519, 83 NE 989.

70. Employe cannot be held negligent in selecting a method of work unless he knew of a safer way. Ramm v. Hewitt-Lea Lumber Co. [Wash.] 94 P 1081; Harris v. Washington Portland Cement Co. [Wash.] 95 P 84. Brakeman, finding he could not remove angle cock by reaching under draw bar, not negligent for reaching over it. McGuire v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 801.

71. Employe held not negligent: Brakeman attempting to use drop brake on flat car without examining it, though he had never used such a brake before. Reed v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 162 F 750. Brakeman killed by stepping into trench beside track while in performance of duties. Southern R. Co. v. Newton's Adm'r, 108 Va. 114, 60 SE 625. Conductor injured because of misplaced rail of which he was not chargeable with notice. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pittman, 135 Ill. App. 481. Employe killed by fall of roof in mine, when he was doing his work in way he had been instructed. Lanne v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 110 NYS 496. Not negligence for driver in mine to rely on inspection of roof by examiner and to look only for notices of danger, roof having fallen on him. McCarthy v. Spring Valley Coal Co., 232 Ill. 473, 83 NE 957. Miner not precluded from recovering for injury caused by rock falling in room he had excavated unless he knew of defect, or was negligent. Barrett v. Dessey [Kan.] 97 P 786. Plaintiff struck in eye by flying steel sliver from hammer or chisel while holding rail which was being cut. Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Trijerina [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 239. Plaintiff, struck by chip from defective sledge wielded by helper was not negligent as matter of law in failing to discover its defective condition, since he had right to assume that it was reasonably safe. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Quinlan, 77 Kan. 126, 93 P 632. Boy of 16, without previous experience, set to work on boiler tubes and given defective sledge and burred prosser pins, not negligent as matter of law in using such tools, chip from pin striking his eye. Pelow v. Oil Well Supply Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 812. Fireman engaged in blowing out boiler was not bound to anticipate negligence of engineer, who knew where he was in moving engine. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 374. Common laborer entitled to rely on soundness of guy ropes in absence of obvious defects. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Beale [Ind. App.] 86 NE 431. Servant sent to work in excavation could rely on assumption that place was reasonably safe or that he would be warned if it was not. Hilgar v. Walla Walla [Wash.] 97 P 498. Plaintiff not negligent in failing to anticipate unusual danger of plank falling on him, caused by foreman's negligence. Cook v. Chehalis River Lumber Co., 48 Wash. 619, 94 P 189. Workman assisting in loading logs on truck held not negligent in trying to swing log into place, having no reason to anticipate order to lower log, and that it would rebound and strike him when lowered. Gould Const. Co. v. Childers' Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 1069, 112 SW 622. Car repairer not conclusively negligent in reaching arm over rail to feel for hot box on car which he was directed to find, having no reason to believe car would be moved. Jelinek v. St. Paul City R. Co., 104 Minn. 249, 116 NW 480. Servant who had nothing to do with building scaffold, but was sent to work on it, could assume its reasonable safety and was not negligent for not making more than casual inspection. Barkley v. South Atlantic Waste Co., 147 N. C. 585, 61 SE 565.

72. Foreman in mill could not recover where injured while using pinch bar to move heavy saw logs down incline where by reason of his knowledge and experience he must have known the great danger, though master knew that "bull-wheel," by which work was usually done, was out of order. Bush v. Wood [Cal. App.] 97 P 709.

73. Miner not negligent in obeying orders to go up on twisted timbers in mine, relying on assurance of safety by foreman, timbers having fallen with him. Swearingen v. Consolidated Troup. Min. Co., 212 Mo. 524, 111 SW 545. Whether miners were guilty of contributory negligence in using certain timbers depended to some extent on superintendent's directions and assurances on which they could reasonably rely. Haidukovich v. Shenango Furnace Co. [Minn.] 118 NW not expose him to any unusual danger,[74] unless he has knowledge of the danger involved,[75] and such known danger is one which an ordinarily prudent person would not have encountered under the circumstances.[76] Similarly, the servant may rely to a reasonable extent on the assumption that work will be done in the customary man-

1017. Miner went into new shaft, after assurance that "air" was all right, and commenced to remove material and water, whereby powder gas imprisoned there was liberated and overcame him. Held not negligent. Sales v. Whitney, 130 Mo. App. 412, 110 SW 55.

74. Employe who receives specific order may rely upon assumption that he will not be ordered into danger. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sanders [Ind. App.] 86 NE 430. Evidence warranted finding for plaintiff where he obeyed orders of his immediate superior in oiling machine, and was inexperienced and was injured while doing work with only available appliance and in customary way. Avery v. West Lumber Co., 146 N. C. 592, 60 SE 646. Whether servant is negligent in obeying supervisor's orders, even though in so doing he undertakes an extra hazard, is in every case a question for the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1011. Whether train dispatcher was justified in believing that order of assistant train master was authorized or whether he was negligent in following it and allowing train to proceed before preceding one was clear of block, for jury. Salmons v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 162 F 722. That work is done pursuant to direct command of master may be considered on issue of servant's conduct. Hobbs v. Small [Ga. App.] 62 SE 91. Employe not negligent where he relied on superior knowledge of superintendent, under whose directions he worked. Brosnan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 221, 85 NE 1050. It is servant's duty to obey orders of his superior unless in doing so he exposes himself to manifest hazard or places himself in obviously dangerous position. Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1011. Jury could consider that foreman had directed car repairer to find hot journal of car in determining whether he was negligent in putting arm over rail to feel of one, where car ran over it. Jelinek v. St. Paul City R. Co., 104 Minn. 249, 116 NW 480. That conductor ordered brakeman to go between car and engine to do certain work was to be considered on question of his contributory negligence, though order was inconsistent with general rules. Rudquist v. Empire Lumber Co., 104 Minn. 505, 116 NW 1019. Deck hand ordered for first time to go upon platform on barge, at night, could rely on assumption that it was reasonably safe and, having no actual prior knowledge of its condition, was chargeable only with notice of obvious conditions. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Coleman, 32 Ky. L. R. 1347, 108 SW 850. Plaintiff not negligent where injured while digging in manhole according to instructions, part of unbraced concrete wall of manhole having fallen on him. Ward v. Edison Electric Illumination Co., 124 App. Div. 22, 108 NYS 608. Where foreman devised method used to load cable on wagon, and ordered plaintiff to assist, latter was not negligent in working in face of obvious danger. Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 407. Collision of electric car on which plaintiff was motorman, running under special orders, with another car whose crew had not been notified of plaintiff's approach; recovery sustained. Mattoon City R. Co. v. Graham, 138 Ill. App. 70. Member of defendant's fire department was told to go over certain fire route, and superintendent indicated certain door through which he was to pass. Plaintiff passed through door and stepped into vat of boiling water. Held, he was not negligent. Jennings v. Swift & Co., 130 Mo. App. 391, 110 SW 21. Permission by conductor to engineer in charge of dead engine which was being taken to repair shop "to look over the engine" did not include permission to crawl under engine and make repairs, and for engineer to do so without notifying conductor or engineer of train was negligence barring recovery for injuries caused by train starting. Crow v. Houck's Missouri & A. R. Co., 212 Mo. 589, 111 SW 583. Brakeman knocked off pilot of engine by sudden jerk caused by defect in track or negligence of engineer, while acting under orders of conductor. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281.

75. Failure of minor to use his own senses and use ordinary care for his own safety will bar recovery though he had right to rely to some extent on superior's judgment. Indian Head Coal Co. v. Miller, 33 Ky. L. R. 650, 110 SW 313. Where section foreman ordered men to get off moving train finding that foreman was negligent in giving order is inconsistent with finding that injured employe was not negligent, both knowing facts and seeing danger. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sanders [Ind. App.] 86 NE 430.

76. Servant acting under orders of superior may properly obey his orders unless danger is so imminent that person of ordinary prudence would not encounter it. Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co. v. Daugherty, 33 Ky. L. R. 328, 110 SW 319. Whether workman was negligent in doing certain work under orders of foreman, for jury. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 234 Ill. 606, 85 NE 287. The servant may recover if injured while working under the direction of his employer, unless the work is inevitably or imminently perilous. Gerding v. Standard Presesd Steel Co., 220 Pa. 229, 69 A 672. Assurance by master that sewing machine and shaft were not dangerous held not to relieve operator of duty of ordinary care for her own safety. Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. Pitts [Ky.] 114 SW 331. Locomotive fireman who did not discover defect in apron between engine and tender until trip had commenced was not bound to abandon his post unless danger was so apparent as to make it negligence to remain. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 274, 114 SW 453. Miner injured by fall of earth while attempting to repair timbering in dangerous place, being assured by mine boss that place was all right. Tomazin v. Shenango Furnace Co., 103 Minn. 334, 114 NW 1128.

ner[77] that customary signals will be given and observed,[78] that usual or promised warnings will be given,[79] and the rules observed.[80]

Disobedience of orders and violations of rules.[See 10 C. L. 775]—Violation of a reasonable rule of the master, known to the servant,[81] or which ought to have been known to him,[82] and applicable to the situation in question,[83] while not negligence

77. Plaintiff, injured while transferring truck of baggage with elevator was not negligent in not seeing that truck was properly loaded, it being customary to rely on other baggage man for loading. Turner v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 132 Mo. App. 38, 111 SW 841.

78. Switchman not negligent where cars were moved without signal by engineer. Penney v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 212 Mo. 309, 111 SW 79. Brakeman in performance of duties may rely on assumption that signal to stop will be obeyed. Roenfranz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 714. Brakeman engaged in switching operations, got foot caught between ties, and engineer backed car over it. He was not negligent as matter of law since he had right to assume that engineer would obey his signal to stop, and would be on lookout for it. Id.

79. Servant, especially minor, engrossed in work, has right to rely upon giving of customary signals or warning before being placed in place of danger. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475. When plaintiff's intestate was struck by switch engine which came upon him without usual warnings by bell, he was not negligent as matter of law in relying solely on customary warning, and not taking further precautions for his own safety. Hines v. Stanley-G. I. Elec. Mfg. Co., 199 Mass. 522, 85 NE 851. Track employe, engaged in duties, not negligent as matter of law in failing to discover approach of train in time, where watchman was employed to give warning, and failed to do so promptly. Schradin v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 124 App. Div. 705, 109 NYS 428. Plaintiff not negligent in going between cars to effect coupling, as directed, being unfamiliar with work, and injured by reason of another car being pushed against those he was coupling, without warning. Pecard v. Menominee River Sugar Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 846, 116 NW 532. Whether plasterer working in elevator shaft, after foreman had promised to tell him when elevator would start running, was negligent in not observing, on going to work, that elevator had ascended, being injured by it, when it came down, he not having been warned, for jury. Larson v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 257, 114 NW 958. Employe, in part of building where warning, if given, of starting of machinery, could not have been heard, had no right to rely upon such warning. McKenna v. Gould Wire Cord Co., 197 Mass. 406, 83 NE 1113.

80. Brakeman, going between cars to uncouple air hose, had right to rely on assumption that engineer would observe rules and await customary signals before backing into train. Brady v. Florence, etc., R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 321. Not negligence for switch foreman to pass between car and post where he had right to assume, under rules, that cars would not be moved without signals. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455. Car repairer, struck by cars, not negligent in failing to look and listen, where he saw engine coming, and was getting out of the way of it, and had no reason to expect cars, since rules of company prohibited flying switch such as was being made. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187. Section hand justified when he saw freight train ahead, in relying on observance of rule requiring flagman to be out with torpedo, and not seeing flagman, was not obliged to look for torpedo on track. Galveston H. & N. R. Co. v. Murphy [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 443.

81. Employe is not bound by a rule not brought to his attention. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Puckett [Ark.] 114 SW 224. Brakeman not negligent as matter of law in failing to comply with rule requiring brakemen to see that cars were inspected when there was no evidence that he knew of rule. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes [Ark.] 114 SW 221. Whether there was rule prohibiting switchman from going between cars and whether plaintiff had notice of it, for jury. Hynson v. St. Louis, S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 755, 107 SW 625 Rule forbidding employes from going between moving cars had been commonly disregarded and deceased brakeman had never been required to read it. Whether he knew of it held for jury. Matthews v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. [Miss.] 47 S 657.

82. Employe who continues in employment with knowledge of rules impliedly agrees to obey and enforce them. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Brice [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1094. Failure to read rules of street car company, negligence on part of motorman, where he had had two weeks in which to read them and only excuse was lack of time; they could be read in half an hour. Foley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 198 Mass. 532, 84 NE 846.

83. Railroad rules construed as prohibiting employes from riding on side of cars next to obstructions such as sheds, etc., which plaintiff violated. Collins v. Mineral Point & N. R. Co., 136 Wis. 421, 117 NW 1014. Evidence held not to show rule prohibiting riding on cars on side of track where there were buildings or obstructions impracticable. Id. Rules of railway company held not to have been violated by brakeman, injured by being struck by freight platform while riding on car. Clay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 104 Minn. 1, 115 NW 949. Rule requiring flagman to go certain distance to rear of trains stopped at unusual places etc., applies only to trains on main tracks; held not applicable where engine left train on siding to go to distant water station. Meacham v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 879. Rule prohibiting employes from going between cars to which engine was attached, except for purpose of coupling air hose, included permission to go between them to per se,[84] is prima facie evidence of negligence,[85] unless the rule has been abrogated by its customary violation,[86] with the knowledge and acquiescence of the master.[87]

uncouple air hose. Southern R. Co. v. Shumate, 32 Ky. L. R. 1027, 107 SW 737. Railroad rule, construed as whole, held not to prohibit brakeman from going between stationary cars to couple them when engine was not attached to train. Driver v. Southern R. Co. [Miss.] 46 S. 824. Whether rule violated by switchman who went between cars to uncouple them had been abrogated by habitual violation by employes, and whether it was applicable to deceased, for jury. Austin v. Central of Georgia, R. Co., 3 Ga. App. 775, 61 SE 998. Switch engineer not negligent in going forward onto main track on signal from switchman who had gone ahead, though switchman had not yet turned switch, collision resulting, though rule provided trains should not proceed to terminals, junctions, crossings, etc., unless tracks were seen to be clear and lights right. Dwyer v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 1020. That general officers of defendant company forbade plaintiff's running motor would not defeat recovery if he was acting pursuant to his foreman's orders. Mitchell v. Boston & M., etc., Min. Co., 37 Mont. 575, 97 P 1033. Employe not bound to observe general rules of superintendent in preference to orders of foreman who is present. Wiley v. St. Joseph Gas Co., 132 Mo. App. 380, 111 SW 1185. If rules or instructions are ambiguous or equivocal, and capable of more than one reasonable and practical interpretation, they should be construed most strongly against the master and in favor of the employe. Railroad rules for flagging trains and conductor's orders. Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Sasser [Ga. App.] 61 SE 505.

84. Violation of train rules is element of contributory negligence, and question may be for jury in view of all the facts and master's duties. Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 985. Violation of rule prohibiting employes going between cars is not negligence in all cases. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 628. Whether brakeman, crushed between cars, was negligent in going between them, though he violated rule (if it had not been abrogated) in so doing, for jury. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Shipp [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 286. Engineer killed while running engine backward at excessive speed in violation of rule. Whether rule had been abrogated by habitual violation of it, whether deceased knew this, whether track was defective and whether running engine at such speed or condition of track caused accident, held for jury. Hampton v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 236 Ill. 249, 86 NE 243.

85. Violation of reasonable rules bars recovery. Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 985. If employe violates rules or instructions which are clear and unambiguous, and his action in so doing contributes to his injury, he cannot recover. Georgia F. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser [Ga. App.] 61 SE 505. Violation of rules or orders which are being enforced by master constitutes contributory negligence. Smith v. Atlantic & C. Air Line R. Co., 147 N. C. 603, 61 SE 575. No recovery warranted for injuries to signal man caused by his failure to observe rule as to placing of torpedoes and flag and station taken by himself. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Rieden [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 930, 107 SW 661. Where plaintiff went into pit in mine under cage without notifying engineer, thereby violating rule of company, he could not recover for injury received by cage descending on him, though he thought and had been informed that engineer was absent. Dallas Coal Co. v. Rotenberry, 85 Ark. 237, 107 SW 997. Assistant operator of metal press negligent if he replaced hands between dies after withdrawing them, in violation of rules, and with knowledge of danger. Ladiew v. Sherwood Metal Working Co., 125 App. Div. 65, 109 NYS 477. Conductor of freight train, injured in rear end collision, could not recover, where, knowing his train was late, he failed to observe company's rules providing for steps to protect train under such circumstances. Boucher v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Wash.] 97 P 661. Motorman negligent in allowing car to collide with car ahead, where he knew brakes were defective and failed to follow instructions and rules of company, though inspector had tried brakes and told him they were all right if carefully used. Foley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 198 Mass. 532, 84 NE 846. No recovery for injuries to motorman by reason of dernilment of car, where he ran at usual speed over defective rail joint, in violation of rule to run slowly, and knowing the danger of running as he did. Lanen v. Haverhill, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 337, 86 NE 776. No recovery where servant violated rules and admonition of foreman and attempted to make repairs on machine while it was in motion. Action based on statute —guarding machinery. Robbins v. Fort Wayne Iron & Steel Co., 41 Ind. App. 557, 84 NE 514. Engineer who violated rule to run train into station 10 minutes behind preceding train, and under full control, was prima facie negligent, collision resulting. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Brice [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1094. No recovery for death of car repairer, killed by car on which he was working, when he knew cars were being shunted down track, but failed to get permission to set out warning flag indicating repair work, as required by rules. Elliott v. Canadian Pac. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 161 F 250.

86. If rules or orders having effect of rules are customarily violated with knowledge or implied knowledge of master, failure of employe to observe them is not necessarily negligence. Smith v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 147 N. C. 603, 61 SE 575. Employe, injured by caustic soda, not negligent in not wearing goggles, rules requiring them to be worn being habitually violated, no goggles being obtainable at time, and foreman who directed him to open pipe, knowing he had none on. Haley v. Solvay Process Co., 112 NYS 25. Where evidence showed customary violation of rule prohibiting brakeman from going between cars, act of plaintiff in going between two cars to see what was matter with coupler which would not work was not negligence as matter of law. Sprague v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 104 Minn. 58, 116 NW 104.

Violation of orders or disregard of instructions or warnings is usually held to constitute negligence.[88]

Emergencies.[See 10 C. L. 777]—A servant suddenly confronted with an emergency or with an unexpected danger is not required to act with the same deliberation and foresight that might be expected of him under ordinary circumstances.[89]

87. Rule habitually violated by employes with knowledge and tacit consent of master or representatives is abrogated or waived. Austin v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 3 Ga. App. 775, 61 SE 998. Notice of violation of rule may be constructive or presumed. Id. Notice to yardmaster of habitual violation by yard employes of rule prohibiting employes from going between cars and requiring coupling and uncoupling to be done with stick would be notice to company. Id. Evidence held not to show waiver of railroad rule. Collins v. Mineral Point & N. R. Co., 136 Wis. 421, 117 NW 1014. Violation of a company's rules by employes of another company will not work an implied abrogation of the rules. Id. Whether rule forbidding employes from going between moving cars had been abandoned by habitual violation asquiesced in, for jury. Matthews v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. [Miss.] 47 S 657.

88. No recovery by operator of machine who was, at time of injury, disregarding repeated warnings and instructions as to mode of operating it. Morelli v. Noera Mfg. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 353. No recovery for death of fireman caused by his disobedience of order read to engineer in his presence and hearing by conductor. Sinclair's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 910. Boy killed while assisting in adjusting belt, guilty of contributory negligence, where he had been specifically ordered away from such work. Lindquist v. King's Crown Plaster Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 46. No recovery for death of miner caused by fall of mine roof where he had been warned of danger and told not to work there. Mascot Coal Co. v. Garrett [Ala.] 47 S 149. It is not as matter of law want of due care to refuse to heed the suggestion of one who knows nothing about the subject as to which he undertakes to give advice. Herlihy v. Little, 200 Mass. 284, 86 NE 294. If plaintiff disobeyed orders and violated rules in failing to timber room to within 9 feet of coal, and this was proximate cause of his injury by fall of slate upon him, he could not recover. Indian Head Coal Co. v. Miller, 33 Ky. L. R. 650, 110 SW 813. Men who attempted to measure height of pole, carrying electric wires of power company, heavily charged by throwing tape over wires, without investigating tape, which contained wires, and who had been ordered not to proceed as they were until power was turned off, and were warned of danger, were negligent, no recovery for death caused by shock. Donahue v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co., 103 Minn. 432, 115 NW 279. Master not liable for death of bricklayer by falling of wall in course of construction due to violation by men, of instructions given by foreman as to mode of construction. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 NYS 361. Employe guilty of negligence where he jumped on elevator while in motion, contrary to instructions, and without giving customary signal to stop. Bowers v. Norwich Pharmacal Co., 124 App. Div. 31, 108 NYS 958. Disobedience of orders to stand in certain place not negligence, where place actually occupied was not unsafe, had appliance been safe; order was not based on condition of safety, but on convenience of work. Cavanaugh v. Windsor Cut Stone Corp., 80 Conn. 585, 69 A 345. Whether switchman who jumped on front of switch engine, and fell because of absence of grab iron, had right to assume that previous directions not to get on engine in that way were not intended to be observed, held for jury, and verdict for plaintiff sustained. Smith v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 147 N. C. 603, 61 SE 575.

89. All that the law requires of a servant acting in an emergency is that he act with ordinary and reasonable care in the light of circumstances as they appear to him at the time. That he did not take the safest or best course will not defeat recovery. Murphy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 390. That servant, suddenly confronted with great danger, took way out which resulted in his death did not make him guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, though another man escaped safely by another way. Paige v. Illinois Steel Co., 233 Ill. 313, 84 NE 239. One is not negligent as matter of law for failing to find best method of escape from sudden and imminent peril. Di Bari v. J. W. Bishop Co., 199 Mass. 254, 85 NE 89. Freight conductor who in emergency created by company went between cars to couple them owing to want of lever, could not be charged with contributory negligence as matter of law. Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 848. Act of conductor in jumping from train no defense to company if he had been placed in danger by negligence of company in allowing track to become defective. Yongue v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 985. Flagman not negligent in attempting to jump from caboose of train when collision was about to occur. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 33 Ky. L. R. 906, 111 SW 707. Plaintiff, iron moulder, was carrying ladle of molten iron with two helpers, when one was called away by foreman, the other became overbalanced, and iron suddenly splashed on plaintiff. Held that an emergency existed and question of contributory negligence was for jury. Brown v. Rome Mach. & Foundry Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 720; Illinois Steel Co. v. Paige, 136 Ill. App. 410. Engine wiper not negligent as matter of law in trying to get out from under engine he was working on between wheels when another locomotive ran into one he was under. Condie v. Rio Grande W. R. Co. [Utah] 97 P 120. Exposure to danger in effort to save life is not negligence provided person is in imminent danger and rescuer is not reckless. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Brakeman went down ladder on end of car, facing

Discovery of servant's peril; intervening negligence.[See 10 C. L. 777]—There may be a recovery notwithstanding contributory negligence if subsequent thereto defendant negligently failed to prevent injury after discovery of the servant's danger,[90] provided the servant was himself free from negligence after becoming conscious of danger.[91] There can be no recovery if the employe was guilty of negligence concurrent with the subsequent negligence of defendant.[92]

(§ 3) H. Actions. 1. In general.[See 10 C. L. 788]—Only questions peculiar to actions to recover for personal injuries to servants are here treated.[93]

Conditions precedent; notice.[See 10 C. L. 778]—Under some statutes the giving of a notice stating the time, place and cause of injury is a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action based on the statute.[94] Decisions as to the sufficiency of backwards, to scare children who were hanging on side of car, and was struck by post. Children not being in imminent danger, and brakeman not aiming to rescue them but to frighten them away, his conduct was not excusable. Id. Act done in an emergency to save employer's property is not negligent as matter of law. Kansas City Consol. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 889. Not contributory negligence for man in charge of engine to try to stop it when it was "running away," governor being defective. Crosby v. Cuba R. Co., 158 F 144. Plaintiff not negligent as matter of law where he was scalded by steam from valve which he thought it necessary to close to protect master's property, believing that promised repairs on valve had been made so that he could safely use his hands, place being dark with steam at time. Keaveny v. Narragansett Brew. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 506. Where conductor got on heavily loaded moving car to try to stop and save it, and brakes failed to hold, and car was derailed by defect in track, he was not guilty of negligence in jumping from the car to escape danger with which he was suddenly confronted, though he would have escaped injury had he remained on car. Dortch v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 616. The employe owes his employer the duty of ordinary care to preserve the latter's property, and in putting forth efforts to that and he is not a mere volunteer. United States Cement Co. v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 490. But he is bound by the same rules as govern him in the performance of his ordinary duties. Thus he assumes incidental risks. Id.

90. Contributory negligence does not affect right of recovery for negligent injury after discovery of plaintiff's peril. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Aleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 73. Evidence warranted charge on discovered peril where section foreman was struck by train while removing hand car from track. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Burnet [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 404. Fact that flagman was boarding car instead of at his station when he was injured by negligent coupling would not defeat recovery when it was admitted that coupling was made with knowledge of his position. Meacham v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 879. Negligence of employe resulting in his falling from car held not to bar recovery for his death caused by superintendent's negligence, who caused car to run over employe, knowing his dangerous position. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Inzer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 444. Whether engineer was negligent in failing to stop train in time after discovery of flagman, or after he should have discovered him, held for jury. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. McWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Submission of issue of negligence of hostler in charge of engine in causing it to move after he knew plaintiff had crawled under it, error, there being no evidence to support such finding. Douda v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 272.

91. If unconscious of danger, employe will not be held negligent. Alabama, G. S. R. Co. v. McWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Whether flagman was negligent or conscious of danger after engineer discovered him on track held for jury. Id. If section foreman failed to use ordinary care for his own safety in removing car from track, company would not be liable, though train operators were negligent in allowing train to strike him. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Burnet [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 404. "Discovered peril" doctrine inapplicable where section man saw and heard train coming and failed to get out of way, since trainmen had right to assume that section hands would get off track and were not bound to give warning when approach of train was known. Sisel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 113 SW 1104. Flagman at crossing, struck by a passing train, held negligent. No recovery though train crew exceeded speed limit. McDoel v. Heuermann, 141 Ill. App. 113. Instruction held not to impose on deceased more than ordinary care to avoid injury after discovery of danger, in view of his age and experience, and hence not prejudicial to plaintiff. Jones' Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 32 Ky. L. R. 1371, 108 SW 865.

92. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. McWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Falling from crane with which he was familiar while helping pips fitter. Mohr v. Martewicz, 139 Ill. App. 173.

93. For procedure in general, see such subjects as Evidence, 11 C. L. 1346; Pleading, 10 C. L. 1783; Instructions, 12 C. L. 218; Limitation of Actions, 12 C. L. 609.

94. The giving of a sufficient statutory notice is a condition precedent to recovery under the employer's liability act. Herlihy v. Little, 200 Mass. 284, 86 NE 294. New Mexico statute requiring notice to person responsible for injuries within 90 days as condition precedent to maintenance of action is valid. Act since repealed. El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Gutierrez [Tex. Civ. App.]

such notice, under the statutes of Massachusetts [95] and New York,[96] are given in the notes. A provision of the contract of employment requiring notice of an injury may be waived.[97] Such a waiver need not rest upon a consideration, nor does it depend upon technical estoppel.[98]

(§ 3H) 2. Parties.[99]—Plaintiff need not join as defendants all the members of the partnership which employed him,[1] but judgment in a separate suit will bar a subsequent action.[2]

(§ 3H) 3. Pleading and issues. The complaint or petition See 10 C. L. 799 must show the existence of the relation of master and servant,[3] that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment when injured,[4] and the existence and breach of 111 SW 159. The amendment to the Kansas railroad employe's liability act (Laws 1903, c. 393), requiring notice of injuries within 90 days, does not require notice to be given by the administrator of an employer of an injury causing death. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larussi [C. C. A.] 161 F 66.

95. Where there is evidence that injured servant died without having been for 10 days at any time after injury of sufficient capacity to give notice required by Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 75, it is sufficient if it appears that such notice was given at any time before action was brought. Finneran v. Graham, 198 Mass. 385, 84 NE 473. It may be given on same day that writ is sued out, but plaintiff must then show that it was in fact given before the writ was sued out. No recovery where this showing was not made. Id. The purpose of the notice is to give the employer information as to the time, place and cause of the injury, and not to advise him specifically of its details or defects. Unnecessary amplification which turns out to be incorrect will not invalidate a notice containing required facts. Herlihy v. Little, 200 Mass. 284, 86 NE 294. Description of injury is not required. Notice not to be construed wth technical refinement. Id. Notice under Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, charging defendant with negligence, is broad enough to cover and admit proof of negligence of a superintendent. Berube v. Herton, 199 Mass. 421, 85 NE 474.

96. Whether notice was served within 10 days after plaintiff recovered from disability held question for jury. Trotto v. Bellew & Merritt Co., 111 NYS 533. If notice under statute is insufficient, common-law rules prevail. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 125 App. Div. 846, 110 NYS 887. The statutory notice of injury need not state facts with the same degree of accuracy and definiteness required in a pleading. O'Donnell v. John H. Parker Co., 125 App. Div. 475, 109 NYS 875. Notice of injury sufficient. Eddington v. Union R. Co., 109 NYS 819. Notice giving time, place and cause of injury, sufficient. Lobasco v. Moxie Nerve Food Co,, 111 NYS 1007. Notice of injury by reason of failure to furnish safe scaffold held sufficient. O'Donnell v. John H. Parker Co., 125 App. Div. 475, 109 NYS 875. Statement of time, place and cause, sufficient (two justices concurring in result, but holding notice insufficient). Matrusciello v. Milliken Bros., 114 NYS 223. Notice insufficient which did not specify act or omission of master or tell nature of servant's injuries. Palmieri v. Pearson, 112 NYS 684. Under liability act, notice that cause of injury "was your negligence and that of your superintendents and agents and the negligent and defective erection and maintenance of the ways, works and machinery used," etc., was held insufficient. Glynn v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 125 App. Div. 186, 109 NYS 103. Notice stating as cause that injury was "due to your negligence in not providing him with a safe and proper place to work in, and your negligence in omitting to furnish safe and proper appliances and implements," is too general. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 125 App. Div. 846, 110 NYS 887. Under statute, mere inaccuracy in the notice may be cured by proof that there was no intention to mislead. Notice curable by proof where it contained general statements but also one more or less specific charge of negligence. Young v. Bradley, 114 NYS 264. But a mere general statement is not an inaccuracy within this provision. Id. Informality in notice as to designation of place held immaterial in view of defendant's actual notice. Dson v. McClintock-Marshall Const. Co., 114 NYS 28. The employer has the right to rely on absolute compliance with the statutory requirement as to notice, and a defective notice cannot be cured or aided by showing knowledge of the employer gained from other sources. Palmieri v. Pearson, 112 NYS 684.

97. Contract provision for notice of injury within 30 days waived by railroad company which within 30 days began negotiations with employe for settlement of claim and stated that company would do what was right. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 745.

98. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Walker [Kan.] 99 P 269.

99. See 10 C. L. 779. See, also, in general, article on Parties, 10 C. L. 1081.

1. May sue one if he elects. Gawne v. Bicknell, 162 F 587.

2. Gawne v. Bicknell, 162 F 587.

3. Plaintiff must allege existence of relation of master and servant, but need not allege contract between them. Duties arise by operation of law, not from contract. Gawne v. Bicknell, 162 F 587. Where plaintiff alleged facts showing that he was an employe at time of injury, and that it was caused by defects in car furnished by defendant, the petition was not made demurrable by an allegation that he was a passenger. Southern R. Co. v. West [Ga. App.] 62 SE 141.

4. Petition alleging injuries received by falling down hay chute in barn held to show sufficiently that plaintiff was in performance of duties at time. Moellman v. Gieze-Henselmeier Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1023. Complaint held not to allege sufficiently that brakeman struck by coal shed near track was in performance of his duties at the time. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Mere allegation that plaintiff was required to be where he was when injured not enough; facts or rules showing his duty to be there should be alleged. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044.

some duty owed by the master to the servant at the time of the injury.[5] A mere allegation of duty is insufficient; facts showing a duty to exist must be alleged.[6]

5. Complaint must by direct averment state facts showing duty by master to protect servant against injury complained of, breach of that duty, and injury as proximate result of breach. United States Cement Co. v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 490. Petition held to state cause of action for injuries caused by scaffold falling on plaintiff as he was passing under it. General Supply & Const. Co. v. Lawton [Ga.] 62 SE 293. Complaint for injury to miner held to state cause of action for negligence of corporation defendant as well as against its superintendent. Stratton Cripple Creek Min. & Development Co. v. Ellison, 42 Colo. 498, 94 P 303. Declaration for death of employe by fall of skip in mine, where he was loading machinery, held to allege sufficiently breach of duty to furnish reasonably safe place. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Breach of duty by master shown where count alleged that employe was ordered to load machinery on mine skip, that master failed to provide sufficient number of men to do work at engine house, and to provide rules for work, as consequence of which engineer left his post and skip fell. Id. Declaration alleging that employe was ordered to work in dangerous place outside his regular employment, and that no warning or instruction was given him, held to show negligence of master, and not objectionable as not setting out dangers, though it did not state ways in which work could properly be done. Johnson v. Desmond Chemical Co., 152 Mich. 84, 15 Det. Leg. N. 138, 115 NW 1043. In action for injuries caused by fall of mine skip, declaration held to state sufficient facts to show master's duty to make proper rules for running of skip. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Complaint alleging that servant was ordered to do certain work by defendant's chief engineer, in charge of all its engines and machinery, whose orders servant was bound to obey, held sufficiently specific as to relation between servant and engineer, facts being within knowledge of defendant. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray [Ind.] 84 NE 341. Such allegations did not bring cause of action within statute, but made common-law cause of action. Id. Complaint alleging that plaintiff was ordered by chief engineer to do certain work in engine room, floor of which sloped and was slippery, and engine in which was dangerous because of its reverse movement, and that these defects and dangers were unknown to plaintiff, and known to, or ought to have been known to, defendant, held sufficient. Id. Pleading held to show that negligent act of section man in kicking bar from car was done while in course of his employment, operating car. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 543. Declaration held to show relation between plaintiff and defendant, duty owed plaintiff by defendant, and his failure to discharge it, and resulting injury to plaintiff. Held, that cause of action was sufficiently stated. Seal v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 108 Va. 806, 62 SE 795. Complaint for death of flagman held to warrant recovery on proof of negligence, subsequent to his contributory negligence in sitting or lying on track. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. McWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Petition alleging that it was master's, not servant's, duty to prop up slate in mine, and that master failed to do so, and servant was injured, held to state cause of action, though generally mine owner is required only to furnish timbers for miner's use. Jackson's Adm'x v. Richardson Coal Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 289, 109 SW 902. Petition held to charge negligence of foreman in ordering tie to be thrown on pile causing it to fall on plaintiff. Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567. That defendant negligently, knowingly, etc., employed and permitted a careless, unskilled and incompetent servant to manage, propel and operate the said motor car, held sufficient. Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 136 Ill. App. 281. Complaint for injuries sustained by reason of team running away held not to show that defendant owed plaintiff any duty with reference to such team, or that defendant had violated any duty owed to plaintiff. Phillips v. International Harvester Co. [S. D.] 117 NW 146.

Complaint held not sufficient to raise issue of negligence in failing to warn and instruct boy, necessity for instructions not appearing. Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 97 P 843. Complaint alleging that structure was maintained so close to track as to come within a few inches of passing box cars held insufficient, it not being alleged that it was so negligently maintained, nor that it was dangerous to plaintiff in performance of his duties. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Complaint setting out defective condition of caboose by reason of presence of chain on platform insufficient which did not show how the chain came where it was; no breach of master's duty shown. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044.

6. Mere allegation that it was duty of particular servant to do certain acts is insufficient; facts showing existence of such duty should be set out. Indiana Union Trac. Co. v. Pring, 41 Ind. App. 247, 83 NE 733. It is not enough to state that plaintiff was injured and that injury resulted from careless and negligent conduct of defendant; facts relied on to establish negligence must be stated with reasonable certainty. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler's Adm'r, 108 Va. 448, 62 SE 269. Allegation of failure to warn, but no allegation of fact raising duty to give such warning, insufficient. Duffy v. Jacobson, 135 Ill. App. 472. Statement that plaintiff was conductor on a motor car,

Allegations of negligence must be sufficiently certain and specific to inform defendant of the nature of plaintiff's claim,[7] but a general allegation of negligence is usually held sufficient as against a demurrer [8] if the facts alleged show a legal duty and a violation thereof. Evidentiary facts need not be pleaded,[9] nor is it necessary to plead nonissuable facts constituting mere conditions.[10] Knowledge by the master, actual or constructive, of the alleged defective or dangerous condition must be made to appear,[11] but where it appears from the complaint that the defect is one of construction, motive power of which was electricity, held sufficient, as in law it raised duty upon master to so control electricity that it would not injure plaintiff while in due care, although the particular respect in which defendant had failed in this duty is not set out. Miller v. Chicago & Oak Park El. R. Co., 132 Ill. App. 41. Duties of defendant to plaintiff, alleged to have been violated, must be distinctly alleged, but if the duties sufficiently appear from the allegations of the breach thereof the declaration will be held good on demurrer, allegations of duty being in such case superfluous. Squilache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 62 SE 446.

7. Petition held sufficient to state negligence in loading of car with lumber which slipped and pushed plaintiff, brakeman, off. Southern Pac. Co. v. Godfrey [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 1135. Count held to allege unsafety of machine provided to unload steel billets with sufficient certainty. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile [Ala.] 45 S 699. Petition alleging that platform through which plaintiff fell was unsafe and negligently constructed, that it did not completely cover excavation, held to point out defect sufficiently. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter [Ky.] 112 SW 904. Count based on employment of incompetent employe held sufficient to show his inefficiency. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile [Ala.] 45 S 699. Complaint alleging that "said belt broke and a piece thereof flew off and struck plaintiff in the right eye" held to describe accident sufficiently. Dittman v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 125 App. Div. 691, 110 NYS 87. Allegation of defects and negligence sufficiently specific where action was for death of servant due to fall of skip in mine. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Negligence relied on must be charged in terms, or facts must be alleged which will compel the inference of such negligence as will constitute the proximate cause of the injuries sustained. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Complaint in action for death of brakeman struck by low bridge, held to point out sufficiently negligence relied on. Maintenance of bridge too close to tops of cars. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 108 Va. 632, 62 SE 363. Allegation that "defendant knew of defective condition of condenser, on account of the fact that for several days previous to the explosion the engine had not been properly working, and had by its actions given full warning that it was in a dangerous and defective condition," held subject to special demurrer because not setting out in what respect it was not working properly and what its actions were. Green v. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co., 130 Ga. 469, 60 SE 1062. Defendant entitled to bill of particulars where complaint simply alleged, in substance, that defendants, their servants, agents or employes so negligently conducted themselves in respect to wagon driven by plaintiff that it collapsed. Kinsella v. Riesenberg, 124 App. Div. 322, 108 NYS 876. General allegation of negligence sufficient after verdict. Averment that defendant negligently provided a dangerous and unsafe place, without averring specific negligence relied on, is sufficient. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rooney, 138 Ill. App. 275.

8. Declaration for injuries to employe assisting in adjusting guide which controlled width of sawed material held sufficient as against general demurrer. Delano v. Holly-Matthews Mfg. Co. [Miss.] 47 S 475. Allegation of negligence in leaving switch open held sufficient as against demurrer. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. Complaint held sufficient as against general demurrer, though allegations of defendant's duty and fact of employment of plaintiff were only generally stated, reasonable and fair intendments from facts stated being indulged. Vukelis v. Virginia Lumber Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 509. Declaration need not set out facts constituting negligence; allegation of acts causing injury, with allegation that they were negligently done, is sufficient. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761.

9. Evidentiary facts need not be pleaded. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910.

10. Where facts constituting negligence relied on are set out. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910.

11. Complaint held sufficient to show notice of dangerous condition of ground near top of shaft into which employe fell. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142. Complaint alleging that defendant knew of unsafe and defective condition of mine embraced constructive as well as actual knowledge. Zeller, McClellan & Co. v. Vinardi [Ind. App.] 85 NE 378. Complaint held to show knowledge by defendant of danger of plaintiff's work, and of plaintiff's inexperience; without express averment. Simeoli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546. Allegation in action by quarry employe that rock which fell on him was loose and liable to fall, to employer's knowledge, and that employer permitted employe to work so near it that if it fell it would injure him, held to charge negligence. Mitchell Lime Co. v. Nickless [Ind. App.] 85 NE 728. Action for injuries by fall of elevator in which plaintiff was being taken from one floor to another; petition not open to general demurrer which alleged that fall of elevator was due to defects in mechanism rendering it unsafe to operate same, and that said defects were known to defendant, or had existed for so long a time as to charge it with notice. Eagle & Phoenix Mills v. Johnson [Ga.] 61 SE 990. But such petition was sub-an allegation of the employer's knowledge of it is not essential.[12] It must also appear that the negligence or wrongful act alleged was the proximate cause of the injury.[13] The servant's want of knowledge should be made to appear,[14] and a mere allegation is insufficient without the averment of facts showing lack of knowledge,[15] ject to special demurrer directed to failure to allege that defects were not latent or that they might have been discovered by exercise of ordinary care in matter of inspection. Id. Where injury was alleged to have been caused by brakeman stumbling on lantern bracket on run way of car, failure of declaration to allege that defendant had placed it there, or that it had been there long enough to charge company with notice, rendered it demurrable. Grover v. New York S. & W. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 1082. In action against railroad company and engineer, petition alleged that engineer suddenly, unnecessarily and in unusual manner, slackened speed of train on coming into station, thereby causing plaintiff to be thrown, without his fault, from top of caboose to ground, he being on caboose in performance of duties. Held demurrable as against engineer for failure to allege knowledge by him, actual or implied from facts and circumstances, of position of plaintiff. Southern R. Co. v. Cash [Ga.] 62 SE 823.

12. Complaint held to show defect in new construction over old mining shaft. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142.

13. Facts alleged held to show master's negligence as proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, though fact of causal connection was not expressly stated. Seal v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 108 Va. 806, 62 SE 795. Count held to show that alleged negligence of master was cause of fall of mine skip. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Since plaintiff must prove the cause of injury alleged, he nced not negative all other possible causes. Id. Complaint in action by domestic servant for injuries received in stepping through hole in porch floor, boarded over with thin boards, held to show sufficiently that place was dangerous, and that defendant's negligence in reference thereto was proximate cause of injury. Fearon v. Mullins [Mont.] 98 P 650. Complaint setting out injury by falling and coming into contact with unguarded saw, which could have been guarded, etc., held to show that failure to properly guard saw was proximate cause of injury, though allegation that "injury was caused solely by negligence of defendant," was not good formal averment thereof. Evansville Hoop & Stave Co. v. Bailey [Ind. App.] 84 NE 549. Complaint alleging injuries to workman by falling into elevator shaft held not demurrable for failure to show violations of statute as proximate cause of injuries. Weeks v. Fletcher [R. I.] 69 A 294. In action for death of brakeman engaged in switching, count of complaint held sufficient to allege negligence in use of engine with pilot and without footboard in switching engine, as cause of death. Bryant v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 484. Declaration held sufficient as against general demurrer to show negligence of defendant in furnishing unsafe saw and failing to warn plaintiff, and that such negligence was proximate cause of injury by being struck by saw log. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Complaint insufficient because not showing wrongful discharge from hospital as cause of alleged damages. Wabash R. Co. v. Reynolds, 41 Ind. App. 678, 84 NE 992. Complaint by parent to recover for loss of services of child under 10, employed in factory in violation of statute, held demmurrable because not showing wrong to be proximate cause of injury. Reaves v. Anniston Knitting Mills [Ala.] 45 S 702. Petition held to show that petitioner's own negligence in manner of placing iron under car wheel was cause of injuries, not negligence of company in method of scotching cars. Ayers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 530.

14. Allegation that plaintiff, quarryman, did not know that rock was loose and liable to fall held sufficient negation of assumption of risk. Mitchell Lime Co. v. Nickless [Ind. App.] 85 NE 728. Allegation of engineer's ignorance of telegraph operator's incompetency held sufficient. Mahoney's Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 652. Petition alleged that defect in platform was unknown to plaintiff, and pointing out defect, held to negative knowledge and contributory negligence though it did not allege that plaintiff did not have equal knowledge with master and could not have known by exercise of reasonable care. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter [Ky.] 112 SW 904. Declaration not demurrable for failure to allege want of knowledge of defect, if it does allege that plaintiff was without fault. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Lack of knowledge by brakeman of dangerous proximity of coal shed to track not properly alleged. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Declaration demurrable for failure to allege want of knowledge of obvious defect which was alleged as cause of injury—bracket on runway of car on which brakeman stumbled. Grover v. New York S. & W. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 1082. Declaration demurrable which claimed damages for injuries by "butting saw" but which did not allege want of knowledge of danger by injured servant, and facts alleged showed that it must have been obvious, even though he was given an assurance of safety. Burg v. Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co., 130 Ga. 523, 61 SE 120.

15. Pleading that servant had no knowledge of conditions causing the injury does not negative the assumption of the risk. Gould v. Aurora, E. & C. R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 344. In an action for injuries caused by dangerous condition of place of work, a mere allegation that plaintiff did not know of it, could not have known of it by the exercise of ordinary care, and did not have equal means of knowing with the master, is insufficient as against special demurrer, where no facts were alleged relieving plaintiff from implication of knowledge. Taylor v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 470.

and is unavailing where facts alleged show that danger was obvious.[16] A complaint is demurrable if it shows on its face, conclusively and as a matter of law, that the servant assumed the risk,[17] or was guilty of contributory negligence.[18, 19] There is a conflict of authority as to whether the complaint must show affirmatively that the injury was not due to the act or negligence of a fellow-servant,[20] and that the servant was in the exercise of due care,[21] and did not assume the risk.[22] Where negligence of a superior servant is relied upon, facts should be alleged showing that he was a vice-principal.[23] All facts material and necessary to the cause of action must be directly alleged, and not merely by way of recital [24] or conclusions of the pleader.[25]

16. Allegation that servant did not know place was unsafe mere conclusion and unavailing as against demurrer when facts show that danger was obvious. Berry v. Kansas City, 128 Mo. App. 374, 107 SW 415. Knowledge of danger by employe should not be inferred, so as to impeach an allegation of freedom from fault, unless such inference is necessary from facts alleged. Green v. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co., 130 Ga. 469, 60 SE 1062.

17. Petition for death of employe properly dismissed where its allegations show that employe knew or ought to have known the danger incident to the use of the defective appliances, as well as the defects. Bolden v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 130 Ga. 456, 60 SE 1047. Where complaint alleging injuries from fall of skip in mine set up failure of master to provide suitable rules, so that engineer would be required to remain at his post, and did not show knowledge by plaintiff of want of such rules, it was not demurrable for failure to negative assumption of risk. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Complaint held not to show that plaintiff knew of trap door in warehouse through which he fell. Taylor v. Palmer & Co., 121 La. 710, 46 S 703.

18, 19. If complaint shows contributory negligence on its face it is bad on demurrer, though contributory negligence is matter of defense. Pein v. Miznerr, 170 Ind. 659, 84 NE 981. Where complaint for injuries caused in mangle with unguarded rollers alleged that plaintiff's hand was "inadvertently" caught in rollers, it was demurrable because disclosing contributory negligence on its face. Id. Declaration alleging that flagman or brakeman went on top of car or cab to give signals to engineer, being ordered so to do by conductor, and that he was injured by defendant's negligence while so engaged, does not show contributory negligence as matter of law. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. Declaration alleging injury by being struck by saw log owing to providing unsafe saw and failing to warn held not to show contributory negligence. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Complaint for death of miner caused by failure to prop roof held not defective for failure to allege whether he was killed in his room or in an entry, on theory that it was his own duty to prop roof of room. Mascot Coal Co. v. Garrett [Ala.] 47 S 149. Declaration alleging that employe was sent to do work outside scope of regular duties, without warning or instructions as to danger, and that he was in the exercise of due care when injured, and ignorant of danger, held not demurrable as showing assumption of risk or contributory negligence. Johnson v. Desmond Chemical Co., 152 Mich. 84, 15 Det. Leg. N. 138, 115 NW 1043.

20. The complaint must show affirmatively that the injury was not due to the negligence of a fellow-servant. Allegation that plaintiff was servant of defendants, and that he was injured by negligence of other servants, defective. Duffy v. Jacobson, 135 Ill. App. 472. A complaint must state that the negligent servant and the plaintiff were not fellow-servants or facts from which that conclusion must follow, or averments which raise that question when a plea of not guilty is entered. A street car conductor alleged he was injured by negligence of crew of another of defendant's cars. Bennett v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 560. Failure to negative that the negligent servant is a fellow-servant or to state facts from which such fact will be concluded is not cured by verdict. Id. Complaint bad which did not show that condition complained of was not due to negligence of plaintiff or a fellow-servant. United States Cement Co. v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 490.

21. Contributory negligence is matter of defense and should be pleaded as such; it need not be negatived by plaintiff. Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1013; German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Where complaint alleged directly that injury was caused by defendant's negligence, a separate averment that plaintiff was in exercise of due care, and that his negligence did not contribute to his injury was unnecessary. Simeoli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546.

22. Plaintiff need not negative assumption of risk. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall [C. C. A.] 159 F 893. Petition alleging negligence in allowing tree in dangerous condition to remain too close to logging road, tree having fallen over track where train collided with it, held demurrable, because not alleging or showing that plaintiff did not have notice of position of tree and risk arising therefrom. Roland v. Tift [Ga.] 63 SE 133.

23. Where petition alleged that plaintiff was at time of injury performing duties "by direction of said agent or foreman" previously referred to, but failed to state his name or the duties which he was called on to perform, so that it did not appear whether he was plaintiff's superior or fellow-servant, petition was subject to special demurrer. General Supply & Const. Co. v. Lawton [Ga.] 62 SE 293. Petition alleging that foreman was "also a vice-principal" held insufficient, as against special exception, without alleging facts showing relation of negligent servant to plaintiff. Suderman v. Kriger

Pleading statutory causes of action. See 10 C. L. 783—Where violation of a statutory duty is relied upon, facts must be alleged which bring the case within the terms of the statute.[26] If the facts pleaded show breach of a statutory duty, specific reference to the statute is unnecessary,[27] since the court will take judicial notice of the statute.[28] Decisions as to pleadings in actions based on various statutes are given in the note.[29]

[Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 373. Counts based on negligence of fireman in failing to keep proper lookout for brakeman, engaged in switching on same engine, held demurrable on ground that they showed fireman to be brakeman's fellow-servant, and on other grounds. Bryant v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 484.

24. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Where the common-law fellow-servant doctrine of another state is relied upon as showing that deceased servant and negligent employes were not fellow-servants, this law must be directly alleged as fact; mere recital or conclusion of pleader held demurrable. Wabash R. Co. v. Hassett, 170 Ind. 370, 83 NE 705.

25. Mere allegation that it was duty of plaintiff to do such work as was required did not show that duty required certain act when hand was caught in knives of planer. Vigo Cooperage Co. v. Kennedy [Ind. App.] 85 NE 986.

26. Where the cause of action is penal in nature, plaintiff, relying thereon, must allege specifically every fact necessary to bring it within the terms of the act. Lagler v. Bye [Ind. App.] 85 NE 36. Count alleged negligence in furnishing of unsafe machine for work, combined with negligence in employment of incompetent servant to assist in its operation. Held to state common-law cause of action and not one based on Code 1896, § 1749. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile [Ala.] 45 S 699.

27. If facts pleaded show cause of action under Laws 1903, c. 356 (guarding of elevators), specific reference to statute is unnecessary. Fowler Packing Co. v. Enzenperger, 77 Kan. 406, 94 P 995. Recovery may be had under Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, making certain railroad employes vice-principals, though statute is not specifically pleaded, if facts alleged show cause of action thereunder. Schradin v. New York, etc., R. Co., 124 App. Div. 705, 109 NYS 428. Demand for bill of particulars is remedy if greater certainty desired. Id.

28. Squilache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 62 SE 446.

29. Alabama: Complaint based on Code 1896, § 1749, alleging that injuries were caused by one in defendant's employment who had superintendence entrusted to him, whilst in the exercise of such superintendence, held sufficient. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. Count alleging furnishing of unsafe machine to do work, based on Code 1896, § 1749, subd. 1, making master liable for injuries caused by defects in ways, works, machinery and plant, held not defective because not stating name of servant charged with furnishing machine. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile [Ala.] 45 S 699.

Connecticut: Direction by superintendent sufficiently alleged though his exact words, as proved, were not alleged. Simeoli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546.

Indiana: Complaint based on statute regulating operation of mines held defective because not alleging that more than 10 men were employed, and that alleged omissions, bracing of roof, could have been supplied without interfering with practical working of mine. Zedler McClellan & Co. v. Vinardi [Ind. App.] 85 NE 378. Where complaint showed that friction wheels were dangerous when in motion, and that they could as well be operated with guards as without, it sufficiently showed that appliance could be properly guarded without rendering it useless. Whitley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon [Ind. App.] 85 NE 832. Complaint merely alleging that plaintiff, brakeman, was ordered and directed to act as such on train consisting of locomotive engine, tender and caboose on a trip which would require 16 hours, when plaintiff had not had a full period of rest, etc., held not to state cause of action under Acts 1903, c. 66, because not sufficiently alleging that such continuous service was not "in case of accident, wreck or unavoidable cause," allegation being that there was no necessity for such continuous duty on account of any accident, wreck or unavoidable cause. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044.

Massachusetts: The provision in the Massachusetts act, requiring action to be brought within one year after the accident causing the injury, is not a mere limitation but a condition precedent (McRae v. New York, etc., R. Co., 199 Mass. 418, 85 NE 425), compliance with which must be alleged (Id.). Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71. Id. Failure to bring the action within one year after the accident causing the injury, as required by Massachusetts statute, is available as a defense under a general denial. Bringing action within that time is condition precedent under Rev. Laws, c. 600, § 71. Id.

Mississippi: Injured railroad employe may not join in one count common-law cause based on unsafe ways and appliances, and statutory cause based on negligence of fellow-servants under Const. § 193, the two being inconsistent. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Wallace, 90 Miss. 609, 43 S 469.

Missouri: Petition held to state cause of action within Rev. St. 1899, § 6434, prohibiting employment of minors, though it did not state the kind of establishment where plaintiff was employed nor designate kind of power used to operate machinery. Peters v. Gille [Mo. App.] 113 SW 706.

Wisconsin: Complaint held sufficient to state cause of action under Sanborn's Supp. 1906, § 1816, where it alleged defective brakes and couplings, and incompetency of engineer, and also that engineer moved cars upon decedent brakeman without warning or notice while in discharge of his duties. Longhenry v. Mineral Point & N. R. Co., 135 Wis. 139, 115 NW 335.

Defenses; the answer.[See 10 C. L. 784]—It is usually held that the defenses of contributory negligence,[30] assumption of risk,[31] and negligence of fellow-servant,[32] are affirmative in character and not available to defendant unless specially pleaded, or unless they are affirmatively shown by plaintiff's pleadings or evidence.[33] To raise either of these defenses, facts must be alleged; mere conclusions are insufficient.[34]

Issues, proof, and variance.[See 10 C. L. 784]—Negligence must be proved substantially as alleged,[35] and there can be no recovery on grounds not alleged,[36] though proof

30. Recovery can be defeated only by contributory negligence which is pleaded. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. WcWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Defense that plaintiff violated rules and thus caused his injury must be pleaded. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 697.

31. Assumption of risk must be specially pleaded. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley [Fla.] 45 S 761. The defense of assumption of risk is affirmative in character and must be specially pleaded. Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 131. Assumption of special risks not among ordinary incidental risks cannot be relied upon unless specially pleaded. Maxson v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 281. Plea setting up contributory negligence held not to require charge on assumption of risk, which defense was not pleaded. Ogilvie v. Conway Lumber Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 200.

32. Defense that injury resulted from negligence of fellow-servant must be specially pleaded. Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 131. Defense that injury was result of negligence of fellow-servant is affirmative; not available unless pleaded. Millen v. Pacific Bridge Co. [Or.] 95 P 196.

33. If contributory negligence, negligence of fellow-servant, or assumption of risk, appear in plaintiff's pleading or evidence, the defense is available to defendant though not specially pleaded. Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 131. If plaintiff's own evidence conclusively shows that employe was guilty of contributory negligence, court should grant nonsuit even though contributory negligence be not pleaded in answer. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 113 SW 1104.

34. Plea of contributory negligence bad for failure to show breach of duty resting on miner killed by fall of roof. Mascot Coal Co. v. Garrett [Ala.] 47 S 149. Plea bad because not alleging miner's knowledge of danger of roof falling. Id. Plea alleging that plaintiff left place of safety and went near pulley and negligently allowed himself or his clothing to come in contact therewith held bad because not setting out facts constituting contributory negligence. Alabama Chemical Co. v. Niles [Ala.] 47 S 239. Where count alleged negligence in failing to prevent injury after discovery of brakeman's dangerous position, a plea of contributory negligence was insufficient which failed to show negligence of employe injured subsequent to alleged negligence of those causing injury. Bryant v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 484. Plea stating that servant voluntarily and knowingly placed himself on the track in front of a train and remained there until struck by it, when by the exercise of ordinary care he could have stepped aside and escaped injury, etc., held not mere conclusion but sufficient plea of contributory negligence. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 113 SW 1104. Plea to count alleging negligence in use of switch engine with pilot and without footboard, resulting in brakeman's death, held sufficient to raise assumption of risk by continuing in service with knowledge of danger and of negligence. Bryant v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 484.

35. Plaintiff must prove substantially facts alleged in complaint, but slight variance will not defeat recovery. Poczerwinski v. Smith Lumber Co., 105 Minn. 305, 117 NW 486. Variance as to particular occurrence which caused brakeman to fall immaterial, negligence charged being proved. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 196. Where declaration alleged that plaintiff was injured while removing pig-iron from a pile, and proof showed that injury occurred while removing iron from a heap nearby, the variance was not fatal. Union Wire Mattrese Co. v. Wiegref, 133 Ill. App. 506. In action for injuries caused by dust explosion in mine, due to failure to spray, sprinkle or clean entries and roadways, as required by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 93, § 20, cl. "g," an allegation that explosion was caused by dust in the air was sufficiently sustained by proof that firing of one shot generated gas, which exploded, thus causing dust explosion, the variance not being objected to below. Davis v. Illinois Collieries Co., 232 Ill. 284, 83 NE 836. Where essence of negligence charged was running work train at high rate of speed whereby it became uncoupled, proof that two cars became uncoupled was not materially variant from allegation that engines became uncoupled. Gibler v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 93, 107 SW 1021. Where petition alleged that turntable was defective in that it would stop suddenly, and that ends where tracks joined were too long, this was supported by testimony that table was in this condition when a heavy engine was placed on it. Currie v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 108 SW 1167. Negligence alleged being that belt was defective and broke and struck plaintiff when he used idler to shift it, a promise to repair belt, made on complaint that it would start machine without use of idler, was immaterial. Waight v. Lake Washington Mill Co., 48 Wash. 402, 93 P 1069.

Variance fatal: Where declaration stated that in compliance with vice-principal's order, on which negligence was based, plaintiff had removed spring on lathe, and proof showed that plaintiff had disobeyed this order and used spring. Balkwill v. Becker, 131 Ill. App. 221. Variance fatal where negligence alleged was that defendant's superintendent directed plaintiff to go to work on pile of lumber, and evidence showed only negligence of defendant in failing to floor skids on which lumber was moved. Bryant of any one of several grounds alleged is sufficient.[37] If a cause of action alleged is proved, it is immaterial that other causes, not alleged, are also proved.[38] Where negligence is specifically alleged, proof of subsequent negligence, after discovery of plaintiff's peril, is not admissible unless alleged,[39] though general allegations of negligence, without specifying particular acts, would include subsequent negligence.[40]

(§ 3H) 4. Evidence, burden of proof, presumptions.[See 10 C. L. 785]—The burden is upon the plaintiff to prove negligence of the master as alleged [41] and that such Lumber Co. v. Clifton, 85 Ark. 322, 108 SW 216. Where complaint alleged that flagman was engaged in duty of flagging train when struck and killed by it, there could be no recovery on proof that he had set his flag on the track and was sitting or lying down on track when struck. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. MoWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84.

36. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 48 S 99; Calhoun v. Holland Laundry, 220 Pa. 281, 69 A 756. Subsequent negligence of defendant not ground for recovery when not pleaded. Donahue v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co., 103 Minn. 432, 115 NW 279. No recovery where it was alleged that decedent was pulled off wharf and drowned by being entangled in hawser, and proof showed he simply lost his balance and fell while handling it. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. State [Md.] 70 A 413. Where negligence alleged was in requiring decedent to handle hawser alone, and that he was entangled in it and pulled off wharf, there could be no recovery for negligence after decedent had fallen in failing to rescue him. Id. Plaintiff, alleging careless operation of hoisting apparatus, cannot recover on proof of defects in bucket used. Schultz v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 111 NYS 281. No recovery where only negligence proved was that of foreman and this was not alleged. Bertolami v. United Engineering & Const Co., 125 App. Div. 584, 109 NYS 1006. Where plaintiff was injured while engaged in loading rails on cars, complaint held to charge negligence of superintendent of gang and of servants engaged in operating and moving engine only, and not of members of crew; hence error to submit question of negligence of crew. Hostetter v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 104 Minn. 25, 115 NW 748. Where complaint alleged failure to guard rollers of machine as negligence which caused injury, there could be no recovery for failure to warn of currents of electricity or air which might cause materials to be drawn into rollers, though complaint negatived knowledge of dangers of work. Scott v. International Paper Co., 125 App. Div. 318, 109 NYS 423. Where death of locomotive fireman was caused by his jumping from runaway logging train, and negligence alleged was use of defective equipment, there could be no recovery on proof that cars were too heavily loaded considering wet condition of track. Cavaness v. Morgan Lumber Co. [Wash.] 96 P 1084. Under the rule that a master can be held liable only for acts negligently done or omitted and so alleged, it is necessary to aver that the appliance used was negligently selected, or that there was a failure to warn the servant of the danger connected with its use. The Herancourt Brew. Co. v. Frank, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 505. Instruction erroneous which did not confine plaintiff and jury to acts of negligence alleged in petition. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler's Adm'r, 108 Va. 448, 62 SE 269. Proximate cause of injury being plaintiff's stumbling when in act of placing bolt on stack, he could not recover on ground that scaffold should have been provided. Jones v. Pioneer Cooperage Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 94. Where plaintiff claimed he was struck by timber projecting from passing car, defendant was entitled to charge that he could not recover if he attempted to catch on the car and lost his hold, this claim of defendant being supported by evidence and being wholly different from plaintiff's theory. De Hoyos v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 75. Where proof did not support allegations that machinery was out of plumb and belt too short, nonsuit was proper, though evidence showed breaking of belt as cause of injury, no negligence in this respect being alleged. Waight v. Lake Washington Mill Co., 48 Wash. 402, 93 P 1069.

37. Recovery is warranted if any ground of negligence alleged is proved. Bull v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 126. Where negligence alleged in action for injuries by fall of freight elevator was absence of safety device, negligent inspection, resulting in running elevator with only one defective cable, and providing defective cables, and eny one cause would have been sufficient to cause the injury, the finding of either by jury would warrant recovery. Wilson v. Escanaba Woodenware Co., 152 Mich. 540, 15 Det. Leg. N. 216, 116 NW 198.

38. Simeoli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546. Proof that proximity of post to track caused injury would not bar recovery, though not pleaded, unless it was sole proximate cause; if negligence of fellow-employes, under statute, which was pleaded contributed, plaintiff could recover. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455.

39. Error to submit subsequent negligence when not alleged. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 46 S 99.

40. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 48 S 99.

41. Burke v. International Paper Co., 112 NYS 893. No presumption of negligence. Plaintiff has burden of proving it. Kiley v. Rutland R. Co., 90 Vt. 536, 68 A 713. There must be affirmative and preponderating, proof of defendant's negligence. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler's Adm'r, 108 Va. 448, 62 SE 269. To prove post too near track. Brakeman killed by it. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Burden is upon plaintiff to show particular act or omission claimed to constitute negligence. Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821. Instruction erroneous because permitting finding of negligence on evidence evenly balanced. Burden should be placed on plaintiff. Blankavag v. Badger Box & Lumber negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.[42] A preponderance of the evidence only is required [43] and circumstantial evidence may suffice.[44] The burden of proof on the issue of negligence does not shift.[45] It is presumed that the employer has employed competent workmen,[46] and the burden is upon plaintiff to prove alleged incompetency of a servant [47] unless the employe in question is a minor under fourteen years of age.[48] As a general rule the fact of knowledge of a servant's incompetency, or that it would have been discovered by reasonable inquiry, must be shown by evidence independent of that showing the servant's incompetency.[49] But the incompetency of a servant at the time of his employment may be such that proof of it will be

Co., 136 Wis. 380, 117 NW 852. Instruction erroneous because placing on defendant burden of showing method used to move derrick reasonably safe. Ryan v. Farley & Loetscher Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 86. Burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence in furnishing defective tools, and knowledge by master of defects. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Bldg. Co. [Or.] 96 P 545. Plaintiff, suing defendant for injuries, had burden of proving that man who employed and controlled him was vice-principal of defendant, and not independent contractor. Kipp v. Oyster [Mo. App.] 114 SW 538. Evidence held insufficient to authorize submission of case to jury. Plaintiff injured during epileptic fit. Lauth v. Harrison-Switzer Milling Co., 140 Ill. App. 199. Servant seeking to recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by an unsafe place must prove that master knew, or ought, in exercise of ordinary care, to have known, that place was unsafe, and that he did not know it and had not equal means of knowing, in exercise by him of ordinary care. Holland v. Durham Coal & Coke Co. [Ga.] 63 SE 290. Mere proof that defendant assured wife of plaintiff that he, plaintiff, was not at fault, and that defendant gave her assistance and made some payments after the accident, insufficient to warrant finding of liability, no specific negligence being shown. Common laborer injured by fall in building under construction. Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 NW 271. To recover for injuries caused by defective turntable, plaintiff has burden to prove defective construction of turntable, and that it was proximate cause of injury, that employer knew or ought to have known of defect and danger, and that plaintiff did not know of it and did not have equal opportunity to learn of it. Galloway v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 234 Ill. 474, 84 NE 1067.

42. Pleas of contributory negligence on part of deceased servant did not relieve plaintiff from burden of showing negligence of defendant as proximate cause of death. Steele's Adm'r v. Hillman Land & Iron Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 311. To recover for injuries caused by appliances, plaintiff must show (1) that appliance was defective; (2) that master ought to have known it; (3) that defect was proximate cause of injury. Cotton v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 1093. Evidence sufficient to show death of girl caused by weight falling down shaft of dummy elevator and striking her on head. Winkle v. George B. Peck Dry Goods Co., 132 Mo. App. 656, 112 SW 1026. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence of master responsible for injury resulting from slippery gang plank. William Grace Co. v. Gallagher, 137 Ill. App. 217.

43. Servant seeking to recover for injuries due to violation of statute need prove case only by preponderance of evidence, though "clear" preponderance would be necessary to enforce penalty under same statute. Davis v. Illinois Collieries Co., 232 Ill. 284, 83 NE 836.

44. Negligence of defendant may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Wilson v. New York Cont. Co., 113 NYS 349. Negligence and the fact that it was proximate cause of injury may be established by circumstantial evidence. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Bldg. Co. [Or.] 96 P 545. Eyewitnesses not necessary to prove that miner going up ladder was killed by rock falling on him from above. Circumstantial evidence sufficient. Hotchkiss Mt. Min. & Reduction Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 P 331.

45. Burden of proving negligence rests on plaintiff throughout and does not shift, but where his evidence shows defects or negligence, defendant must meet this evidence. Firment v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co., 162 F 758. Burden of proof rests throughout on plaintiff to show negligence of defendant as cause of injury. Lipsky v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 136 Wis. 307, 117 NW 803. Proof of inspection may rebut inference of negligence, but is not conclusive. Id. In action for injuries to employe by derailment of train, instruction that proof of derailment raised presumption of negligence of defendant, and shifts burden on defendant to show that it did not occur on account of its negligence, and that plaintiff cannot recover if defendant's evidence preponderates over presumption so raised, held erroneous as placing too great burden on defendant. Winslow v. Norfolk Hardwood Co., 147 N. C. 275, 60 SE 1130.

46. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672.

47. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672. Juries cannot presume boys over 14 incompetent by reason of minority alone. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 875. Jury is not authorized to decide a minor unfit for his employment on account of what they see or think they see in his face or manner while testifying. Id.

48. If boys are over 14 burden is on plaintiff to prove incompetency; if under 14, burden is on defendant to show competency. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 875.

49. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672.

legally sufficient to rebut the presumption of the exercise of due care by the master and make the question one for the jury.[50]

It is generally held that mere proof of the occurrence of an accident does not alone raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the master[51] and that the doctrine res ipsa loquitur does not apply as between master and servant.[52] But neg-

50. On theory that incompetency was of such nature that reasonable investigation would have disclosed it. Still v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. [Cal.] 98 P 672.

51. Bryant Lumber Co. v. Stastney [Ark.] 112 SW 740; Jefferys v. Nebraska Bridge Supply & Lumber Co., 157 F 932. Plaintiff must show not only happening of accident, but negligence of master as cause thereof. Stewart & Co. v. Harman [Md.] 70 A 333. While circumstantial evidence may be sufficient, there must be facts from which defendant's conduct can be ascertained and judged. Mere proof of accident is not enough. Finn v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. [Or.] 93 P 690. Servant must show that injury was due to risk not assumed by his contract of employment. Byers v. Carnegie Steel Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 347. If the proof shows that the accident might have happened from some cause other than negligence of defendant, no presumption arises. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 805. Hammer controlled by treadle came down, injuring plaintiff. Res ipsa loquitur doctrine inapplicable. American Bicycle Co. v. Oulnd, 139 Ill. App. 101. Mere fact that skid used in loading ice on wagon slipped and injured plaintiff did not show negligence of master. Lone Star Brew Co. v. Willie [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 186. Evidence held insufficient to show actionable negligence in erecting scaffolds through alleged defective condition of which plaintiff was injured. Schneider v. American Bridge Co., 31 App. D. C. 420. Alleged negligence in placing in train without inspection cars with defective brakes is not sustained by mere proof of happening of accident in which brakeman was injured while uncoupling cars. Rush v. Oregon Power Co. [Or.] 95 P 193. Mere fact that rope used in hoisting lumber from hold of vessel broke does not show negligence. Feingold v. Ocean S. S. Co., 113 NYS 1018. Fact that boards slipped or were jerked from load being carried by derrick to hold of ship did not alone show negligence, no such previous occurrence being shown. Without proof of negligence, plaintiff could not recover. Fredenthal v. Brown [Or.] 95 P 1114. Collapse of "bridge" used in presentation of opera, proper in design, furnished some evidence of defect in construction, but did not give rise to presumption of negligence chargeable to master. Hahn v. Conried Metropolitan Opera Co., 111 NYS 161. Where plaintiff was injured by sudden starting of elevator, no cause being shown, and it appearing that there were men about, not servants of defendant, who might have started it, the res ipsa loquitur doctrine was inapplicable. Keenan v. McAdams & C. Elevator Co., 113 NYS 343. Proof that while plaintiff was pulling rope over drum of winch the winch reversed, pulling rope opposite way and throwing plaintiff over winch, did not establish negligence of master. Hanson v. Hogan, 112 NYS 1103. Doctrine res ipsa loquitur inapplicable where men at work on platform, supported on one side only by brace between two piers, pushed upward in course of their work and platform fell. Accident may have been caused by acts of men. Negligence of master not presumed. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 805. Mere happening of accident by "buckling" of train and explosion of explosives in one car held not to raise presumption of negligence. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 220 Pa. 317, 69 A 821. Proof of accident, brakeman caught between cars trying to couple them by hand, not proof of negligence, of which there must be affirmative and preponderating evidence. Southern R. Co. v. Moore, 108 Va. 388. 61 SE 747. Mere fact that grab iron gave way would not prove negligence unless evidence was such as to show that reasonable inspection would have disclosed defect. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes [Ark.] 114 SW 221. Proof of explosion of locomotive boiler, injuring fireman, held not to raise presumption of negligence. No recovery where no other proof. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Garven [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 426. Proof of explosion of powder stored in mine, near electric wires, not shown defective, was not proof of negligence, especially where it also appeared that men were in habit of gathering around powder can smoking. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Garner [Ark.] 112 SW 392. Mere fact that stop cock blew out of whitewashing machine, not shown to be defective, raised no presumption of negligence. Clark v. Garrison Foundry Co., 219 Pa. 426, 68 A 974. Nonsuit proper where operator's hand was caught in machine, it being alleged and shown only that machine started suddenly, no defect or negligence by master being alleged or shown. Hemscher v. Dobson, 220 Pa. 222, 69 A 669. Where window glass fell out when servant closed window, and he was injured, but no defect in window appeared, negligence of master could not be presumed. Stewart & Co. v. Harman [Md.] 70 A 333. Proof that chain broke, insufficient, there being no proof of any defect and no evidence as to how it was being used. Finn v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. [Or.] 93 P 690. No recovery where boiler exploded, no defect being shown and proper inspection being proved. Cavanaugh v. Avoca Coal Co. [Pa.] 70 A 997. Mere fact that clevis broke when engine was being moved by cable attached to clevis raised no presumption of negligence in furnishing it. McDonald v. California Timber Co., 7 Cal. App. 375, 94 P 376.

52. Eagle Brew. Co. v. Luckowitz, 138 Ill. App. 131. Doctrine res ipsa loquitur rarely applicable. Evidence must make prima facie case of negligence of master or verdict cannot be sustained. Lane v. New York Cont. Co., 125 App. Div. 808, 110 NYS 91. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine is inapplicable except when circumstances are such that accident would not have occurred but for negligence of the master. Feingold v. Ocean S. S. Co.,

ligence may, as in other case, be inferred from the fact of injury or accident, taken in connection with all the facts and circumstances.[53] Thus a prima facie case of negligence may be made without proof of the particular defect or act which caused the injury,[54] where the facts proved warrant the inference that the injury would not have resulted had the master exercised due care.[55] Where such facts appear, the bur-

118 NYS 1018. Proof of circumstances of accident alone insufficient unless they show negligence of defendant. Moriarity v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co., 132 Mo. App. 650, 112 SW 1034. Doctrine res ipsa loquitur is not applicable unless instrumentality is under exclusive control of master and is of such character that an accident would not have occurred unless it was defective. If accident might have been caused by some causes other than negligence of master, doctrine has no application. Lehman v. Dwyer Plumbing & Heating Co., 104 Minn. 190, 116 NW 352. There are really no exceptions to rule that mere happening of accident is not proof of negligence in an action by a servant against a master, though in some cases circumstances in proof show that accident would not have happened had due care been used. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Garven [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 426; Lone Star Brew. Co. v. Willie [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 186.

53. Though the res ipsa loquitur doctrine does not apply, a servant may prove negligence by circumstantial evidence. Reed v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 162 F 750. Res ipsa loquitur means that plaintiff has on the proof, without direct evidence of negligence, made out a prima facie case. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. The application of the "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine does not ordinarily depend upon the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on defendant. Under certain circumstances it may apply in an action brought by a servant against the master. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co., 105 Minn. 504, 117 NW 928. The doctrine res ipsa loquitur is applicable in proper cases as between master and servant, as where it is shown that an instrumentality being properly used by the servant gives way and causes injury and freedom from contributory negligence and want of negligence of fellow-servants appears. La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. [Wash.] 97 P 1104. In such cases it is not unjust to require master to show that instrumentality was not defective, or that he did not know of the defect and could not have discovered it by ordinary care. Id. Cause of falling of heavy steel plate could be shown by circumstances. Direct evidence not essential. Riley v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Neb.] 117 NW 765. Where servant engaged in usual employment as mule driver in mine was injured by explosion of compressed air tank by alleged reason of accumulation of oil and water, it was held that doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied. Elvis v. Lumaghi Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 112.

Effect of statutes: Collision of trains resulting in death of employe being carried home from work held to raise presumption of negligence where action was based on Gen. St. Kan. 1889, § 1251, which exempts railroad employes from assumption of risk of negligence of fellow-servants. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larussi [C. C. A.] 161 F 66. Proof that car repairer was crushed between cars when looking for washers on track under orders of foreman made prima facie case under Kirby's Dig. § 6773, making railroads liable for injuries caused by running of trains. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Puckett [Ark.] 114 SW 224. Code 1906, § 1985, provides that in actions against railroad companies proof of injury inflicted by running of locomotive or cars shall be prima facie evidence of negligence of employes, and that this shall apply to passengers and employes. Held, section man walking beside track and killed by derailed car from passing train was entitled to presumption. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 45 S 360.

54. If plaintiff proves that machine started from some latent defect and injured him, the nature of the defect need not be proved by him. St. Jean v. Lippitt Woolen Co. [R. I.] 69 A 604. The mere starting of machine, without the intervention of any human agency, when it should have remained at rest, is of itself evidence of some defective condition. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 810. Where pile of lumber loaded on car fell on plaintiff, and evidence showed that superintendent was in charge, and showed circumstances and manner of loading, plaintiff made a prima facie case for the jury on issue of superintendent's negligence. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. Where character and accompanying circumstances of accident point strongly to abnormal and dangerous condition, and such long continuance of it as to charge master with knowledge of it, and it appears that employe had no knowledge of it, and was not negligent, and such condition was proximate cause of injury, negligence of master may be inferred from such circumstances though no specific defect or act is shown by positive testimony. Byers v. Carnegie Steel Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 347. Rule applied where hydraulic elevator suddenly rose and circumstances tended to show defective valve as cause. Id.

55. Proof of collision of trains on same track near city limits is proof of negligence. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 33 Ky. L. R. 906, 111 SW 707. Where locomotive engineer was running train under orders when he suddenly collided with cars standing on track, prima facie case of negligence was shown. Murray's Adm'x v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 83 Ky. L. R. 545, 110 SW 334. Plaintiff refused to work near defective machine unless it was stopped and repaired. It was stopped, and plaintiff started to repair it, when it suddenly started, injuring him. Held, prima facie case of negligence shown. Keenan v. McAdams & Cartwright Elevator Co., 58 Misc. 371, 108 NYS 952. Elevator was under exclusive control of defendant. Showing that chain which was part of it fell upon plaintiff, who was free from negli-den is upon defendant to show that the injury resulted from a cause for which he is not responsible.[56] Where an injury may have resulted from any one of several causes, the burden is upon plaintiff to show that it resulted from a cause for which the master would be responsible.[57] If the cause of the injury is left a matter of conjecgence, sufficient to make prima facie case of negligence against defendant. Konigsberg v. Davis, 57 Misc. 630, 108 NYS 595. Fact that engine in charge of hostler moved without apparent cause some evidence of negligence on part of hostler. Douda v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 272. Whether negligence of defendant, in failure to give proper instructions or to provide safe place, caused death of boy of 17, for jury, where no one saw his death, but circumstances showed he was killed by getting caught in machinery at place where improperly guarded narrow passage separated engine pit and other machines. Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1063. In action for injuries to employe engaged in repairing carding machine, caused by its suddenly starting, evidence sufficient to go to jury to show cause was some defect in belts and pulleys alleged in petition. Cochrell v. Langley Mfg. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 244. Engineer in charge of engine and hoisting machinery was killed by falling into shaft, gate to which was open. Held, though there was no direct evidence as to how he fell, the inference was warranted that he walked through gate which in violation of statute could not be closed. Moseley's Adm'r v. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 110, 109 SW 306. Where engineer was injured by steam, hot oil and water being blown into his face by valve when he removed cap to oil it, there was evidence to show valve defective in that it must have been leaky. Hubbard v. Macon R. & L. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1018. Where train, freight and passenger, was being run over new unballasted road at excessive speed, and some cars were derailed and one fell upon and killed section boss, held, occurrence sufficient to show incompetency of engineer as cause of accident. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. Unexploded dynamite, left in mass of stone to be moved by deceased, exploded. Negligence presumed. Stephen v. Duffy, 136 Ill. App. 572. Where heavy brace of timbers of coal dock fell upon plaintiff, its fall alone, under the circumstances, was sufficient to raise inference of negligence. Lipsky v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 136 Wis. 307, 117 NW 803. Where loom started of itself and there was proof of its having been out of repair and fixed and that shaft had been repaired in certain way, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding of negligence. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 310. Where loom started automatically, it was not necessary to show that master had previous notice of a particular defect. It is enough if such circumstances appear as to render it likely that the harmful event would not have happened except for some act or omission amounting to want of ordinary care. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 810. Where an accident happens which without negligence on the part of some one could not happen, the burden is upon the party bound to exercise due care to disprove negligence on his part. Explosion of soft steel mould not sufficiently cooled. Illinois Steel Co. v. Swiercz, 135 Ill. App. 141. Piece of belt flew off and struck plaintiff in eye while engaged in duties of oiling and cleaning machinery. Circumstances warranted finding of negligence, though mere fact of accident would not. Dittman v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 125 App. Div. 691, 110 NYS 87. Where complaint stated cause of action, but plaintiff's counsel stated he had no eye witnesses but would have to rely on circumstantial evidence, defendant was not entitled to dismissal on opening statement, but plaintiff was entitled to elicit what evidence she could regardless of opening statement. Darton v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 125 App. Div. 836, 110 NYS 171.

56. Where train intended to run on main track ran onto side track, collided with engine and killed engineer, proof of these facts made prima facie case of negligence of defendant, and burden was on it to show accident due to some cause for which it was not responsible. Van Suwegen v. Erie R. Co., 110 NYS 959. If the ree, or entire occurrence as proved, could not have happened without negligence of some kind, negligence is presumed without showing the kind, and the burden of explanation is placed on defendant. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 805. Presumption of negligence arising from proof of accident and attendant circumstances is one of fact which must be overcome by evidence. Lipsky v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 136 Wis. 307, 117 NW 803. The presumption at best is but a rebuttable presumption of fact which does not necessarily continue through the case so as to make a case for the jury. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co., 105 Minn. 504, 117 NW 928. Motorman received shock through controller, became temporarily paralyzed, and could not control car, which was derailed and turned over at sharp loop, and motorman injured. Held, presumption of negligence of company rebutted by proof, inter alia, of safe condition of car before and after accident, so that no case for jury was made. Id.

57. Preponderance of evidence must show injury due to some fault or defect for which master is responsible, though this need not be shown beyond all doubt. Rowell v. Gifford, 200 Mass. 546, 86 NE 901. Injury caused by sputtering of molten metal poured into mold, plaintiff's theory being that piece of mold was taken out, cooled and replaced. Evidence held insufficient to sustain his theory. Evansville Metal Bed Co. v. Loge [Ind. App.] 85 NE 979. No case for jury where manner in which servant met death was not shown. Mere proof that it might have been caused in some manner by his coming in contact with saw which was suspended in frame low enough to have touched him not enough to charge master. Whitehouse v. Bryant Lumber & Shingle Mill Co. [Wash.] 97 P 751. In action for death of switchman, verdict was properly directed for defendant where evidence made claims of plaintiff and defendant as to manner of his death equally ture, there can be no recovery [58] unless the master would be responsible for all the possible causes shown.[59]

Contributory negligence [60] and assumption of risk [61] are usually held to be reasonable and probable, and was equally consistent with existence and nonexistence of negligence of master. Watson's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 292.

58. Jury cannot be left to conjecture or draw inferences not sustained by evidence. Evidence must be such as to render inference of negligence of master more reasonable than any other conclusion which would be consistent with absence of negligence by defendant. Lehman v. Dwyer Plumbing & Heating Co., 104 Minn. 190, 116 NW 352. Case should not be submitted to jury if cause of injury is left to conjecture. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Building Co. [Or.] 96 P 545. Plaintiff must show injury due to cause for which master is responsible, and if this matter is left in doubt or is conjectural there is no case for jury. Winkle v. George B. Peck Dry Goods Co., 132 Mo. App. 656, 112 SW 1026. Mere happening of accident is not proof of negligence. If other circumstances leave cause open to conjecture, plaintiff cannot recover. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 310. Jury is not left to speculate as to cause of injury where there is evidence to support two theories. Florala Sawmill Co. v. Smith [Fla.] 46 S 332. No recovery where cause of brakeman's death was not shown to have occurred as claimed. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Johnica's Adm'r [Ky.] 113 SW 844. Fireman found under trestle unconscious and burned about face with steam. Evidence did not show whether he had been made unconscious by burning steam in engine or had gone out and fallen. No recovery warranted. Black's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 1345, 108 SW 856. Train of work cars after standing two hours suddenly broke away and collided with another train, killing engineer. No recovery, cause of accident not being shown. Lane v. New York Contracting Co., 125 App. Div. 808, 110 NYS 91. Evidence insufficient to warrant recovery where it appeared that plaintiff was ordered to go out in skiff, in connection with rafting work, at dangerous place owing to current, but manner of his death was not shown. Steele's Adm'r v. Hillman Land & Iron Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 311. Where there was no eyewitness of servant's death, and evidence left cause conjectural, there could be no recovery on account of alleged defect in appliance. Olmstead v. Hastings Shingle Mfg. Co., 48 Wash. 657, 94 P 474. Evidence insufficient to show operator of ripsaw was killed, there being no eyewitness. Petersen v. Union Iron Works, 48 Wash. 505, 93 P 1077. Where plumber's furnace was taken from room where only those in good condition were supposed to be kept and given employes in morning, and air cock leaked slightly in afternoon when used and explosion resulted, but cause of leakage was not shown, there could be no recovery. Lehman v. Dwyer Plumbing & Heating Co., 104 Minn. 190, 116 NW 352. Plaintiff fell from tramcar and his arm was run over. Cause not shown, no defect in brake being proved. No recovery. Micari v. Monroe Stone Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 771, 117 NW 939. No recovery where cause of machines sudden starting was not shown, but was left to conjecture. Rhobovsky v. New Jersey Worsted Spinning Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 170. No recovery where cause of "bucking" of train and explosion of materials in car did not appear, but was left conjectural. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 220 Pa. 317, 69 A 821. Where brakeman was killed between cars which he was trying to couple, and evidence did not show cause of accident, but left it open to conjecture whether it was due to loose gravel or depression or some other cause, verdict was properly directed for defendant. Tibbitts v. Mason City, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 1021.

59. Where the injury may have been the result of any one of several causes, for all of which the master would be liable, it is immaterial that it does not appear clearly which cause produced the injury. Explosion of molten iron in mould due to defective vent, which defect might have been caused in various ways, but for which defendant was responsible. The Sargent Co. v. Shukair, 138 Ill. App. 380.

60. Burden of showing contributory negligence rests on defendant. Big Five Tunnel Ore Reduction & Transp. Co. v. Johnson [Colo.] 99 P 63; Britt v. Carolina Northern R. Co. [N. C.] 61 SE 601; Hoff v. Japanese American F. & F. Co., 48 Wash. 581, 94 P 109; Gauthier v. Wood [Wash.] 94 P 654; Blankavag v. Badger Box & Lumber Co., 136 Wis. 380, 117 NW 852. Contributory negligence is affirmative defense. Knight v. Donnelly Bros., 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687. Burden is on defendant to show contributory negligence where plaintiff's testimony does not show it. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 108 Va. 632, 62 SE 368. While plaintiff must not by his own evidence show that he failed to use due care, yet if defendant relies on contributory negligence or any affirmative defense the burden is on him to prove it. Bernheimer Bros. v. Bager [Md.] 70 A 91. Where evidence was such that existence of contributory negligence was not necessary inference, error to nonsuit plaintiff, some of his witnesses testifying to facts showing him negligent, but he denying such facts. Carlin v. William Butler Co., 220 Pa. 194, 69 A 552. Burden on defendant to show contributory negligence of car repairer who was struck by cars which were being switched by flying switch contrary to rules of company, injured man being in act of crossing tracks in usual manner. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187. Burden is ordinarily on defendant to show contributory negligence. It is only when plaintiff's allegations or evidence show prima facie negligence on his part that it devolves on him to show facts from which the jury may on the whole case find him free from negligence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187.

61. Assumption of risk must be affirmatively pleaded and proved by defendant. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Assumption of risk affirmative defense which must be established by preponderance of evidence. Hoff v. Japanese American F. & F. Co., 48 Wash. 581, 94 P 109; Gauthier v. Wood [Wash.] 94 P 654; Blanka-affirmative defenses which must be sustained by defendant by a preponderance [62] of all the evidence.[63] In some jurisdictions, however, plaintiff must show freedom from contributory negligence as a part of his case.[64] The presumption of due care for one's own safety, arising from the instinct of self-preservation, prevails where the conduct of the servant at the time of his injury or death is not susceptible of direct proof.[65] If plaintiff's own evidence discloses, prima facie, contributory negligence, the burden is upon him to show that he used due care.[66] Ordinary risks are presumed to have been assumed,[67] and, as to such, want of knowledge by the servant must be proved by plaintiff.[68]

Admissibility in general. See 10 C. L. 791—Only holdings peculiar to the subject un-vag v. Badger Box & Lumber Co., 136 Wis. 380, 117 NW 852. Burden is on master to show assumption by servant of unusual risk arising from former's negligence. Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 784, 117 NW 910. Burden is on defendant to show assumption of risk by employe where it arises from machinery left unguarded as required by statute. Graves v. Gustave Stickley Co., 125 App. Div. 132, 109 NYS 256. Knowledge and assumption of extraordinary risks arising from negligence of master must be pleaded and proved by defendant. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Building Co. [Or.] 96 P 545. The assumption of a risk by continuing to work in an unsafe place with knowledge and appreciation of the dangers incident thereto arising out of the master's negligence is matter of defense. Master must show that servant ought to have appreciated danger. Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 125.

62. Error to instruct that defendant must show contributory negligence to "satisfaction" of jury by preponderance of evidence. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Linn, 77 Ohio St. 615, 84 NE 1125.

63. Instruction held to state principle correctly that contributory negligence must be proved by preponderance of all the evidence, and not to exclude consideration of plaintiff's evidence. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit [C. C. A.] 160 F 440.

64. Plaintiff has burden of proving freedom from contributory negligence. Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1063. No recovery where plaintiff failed to prove freedom from contributory negligence. Lyon v. Coleman, 123 App. Div. 703, 108 NYS 378. Plaintiff failed to show freedom from contributory negligence where he knew how work was being done under foreman claimed to be incompetent. Carroda v. Foundation & Cont. Co., 112 NYS 1082. Evidence insufficient to show that painter, injured by fall from ladder, was exercising due care. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 125 App. Div. 846, 110 NYS 887. Mere proof that employe was killed during her work by being caught in moving cogwheels held not to warrant recovery without any showing as to freedom from contributory negligence. Lester v. Crabtree, 125 App. Div. 617, 110 NYS 55.

65. Presumption arising from instinct of self-preservation and known disposition of men to avoid injury to themselves constitute prima facie inference that servant exercised ordinary care, and places on defendant burden of proving contributory negligence. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740. Where fact is not susceptible of direct proof, the presumption of law must be that a person does not voluntarily incur danger or the risk of death, but is in the exercise of due care. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Reddick, 131 Ill. App. 515. Plaintiff, in action for death of minor servant, entitled to presumption that he did not recklessly and needlessly expose himself to danger. Lunde v. Cudahy Packing Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 1063. Where there are no eyewitnesses to servant's death, natural instinct of self-preservation is held sufficient ground for presumption that deceased did not negligently expose himself to danger in the absence of proof of facts negativing such inference. Id. But the indulgence of this presumption does not relieve plaintiff from operation of rule requiring proof of freedom from contributory negligence. Id. In action for death of employe, administrator need not prove that employe did not know, and could not have discovered by use of ordinary care, that premises were dangerous. Moseley's Adm'r v. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 110, 109 SW 306. Presumption being that car repairer killed under car by cars switched against it was in exercise of due care included inference that he would not have gone under car within 5 minutes after having been warned that switching was to be done. Porter v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 213 Mo. 372, 111 SW 1136.

66. If plaintiff's own evidence shows him negligent, burden shifts to him to show he used due care. Wallace v. Spellacy, 8 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 41. If plaintiff's evidence establishes a prima facie case of contributory negligence, the burden is upon him to show facts from which jury may upon the whole case find him free from such negligence. International, etc., R. Co. v. Brice [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1094.

67. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Bldg. Co. [Or.] 96 P 545.

68. To take a case out of the operation of the doctrine of assumed risk incident to his employment, plaintiff must show that he was ignorant of the peril and of the means of avoiding it. Harrington Mfg. Co. v. Arendell, 135 Ill. App. 406. Burden on plaintiff to show that her intestate, brakeman, did not know of danger of being struck by water spout of tank, while on car. McDuffee's Adm'x v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 124. Where a servant was working with a defective machine or tool, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that he did not know of the defect. Deceased switch foreman killed because the engine had an ordinary lantern instead of regular headlight. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 136 Ill. App. 518.

der discussion are here given.[69] Evidence must be relevant to the issues raised by the pleadings.[70] Holdings as to the relevancy of evidence on the issues of negligence of the master,[71] contributory negligence of employe,[72] and assumption of risk,[73] are given

69. See article Evidence, for general principles, such as expert and opinion evidence, res gestae rule, etc.

70. Held admissible: Where petition alleged that employe was incompetent and grossly negligent, proof of incompetency was not limited to proof of drunkenness, though that was also alleged. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Proof of plaintiff's mental deficiency is admissible though such deficiency is not specially alleged. Doolan v. Pocasset Mfg. Co., 200 Mass. 200, 85 NE 1055. Where declaration showed nature of work in which plaintiff was engaged when injured, details of method employed could be proved though not pleaded. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hoffman [Va. App.] 63 SE 432. Proof of ordinance prohibiting employment of unlicensed elevator operators and of its violation admissible, though ordinance and fact that negligent servant did not have license were not pleaded, negligence relied on being negligent selection of incompetent elevator operator. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co. [Cal.] 98 P 1063. Where defendant introduced proof of assumption of risk, plaintiff could prove promise to repair, though he had not pleaded it. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall [C. C. A.] 159 F 893. Conditions under which two companies operated, power and control of defendant's agents, over plaintiff, etc., admissible to show whether plaintiff was at time servant of defendant. Crow v. Houck's M. & A. R. Co., 212 Mo. 589, 111 SW 583. Where brakeman was caught between engine and car, he was properly allowed to show condition of buffer of car though he had not pleaded it specially, since he could show conditions at time of injury. McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 801. Where bill of particulars is asked and given and no objection made to generality of complaint, evidence of facts within bill of particulars is admissible. Devine v. Alphons Custodis Chimney Const. Co., 110 NYS 119. Where loose condition of dirt around top of shaft was alleged as cause of cave in which resulted in death of employe crossing over shaft on boards placed there, proof that steam from exhaust pipe passed into shaft was admissible, as defect might have been so caused. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142. Plaintiff was ordered up on timbers which had been twisted by explosion in mine and they fell with him. Held that evidence that foreman had stopped work on timbers before they had been properly wedged was within issues made by complaint. Swearingen v. Consolidated Troup Min. Co., 212 Mo. 524, 111 SW 545. Pleading setting up contributory negligence of engineer in running train at excessive speed held to warrant receiving evidence tending to show running of train round curve at dangerous speed knowingly. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958.

Held inadmissible: Plaintiff not entitled to make proof that a reasonably safe method of working had been changed to a dangerous one without warning, in absence of allegation to that effect. Allen v. Western Elec. Co., 131 Ill. App. 118. No negligence as to instructions on use of machine being alleged, proof that machine was such that instruction was necessary was properly excluded. Clark v. Garrison Foundry Co., 219 Pa. 426, 68 A 974. In absence of averment that defendant was guilty of negligence in not switching by means of rope, evidence that rule was in force forbidding flying switches where rope could be used held not admissible. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Walker, 137 Ill. App. 428. Where evidence did not show how operator of ripsaw was killed, or whether he was operating saw at time, proof of defect in saw table was inadmissible as too remote. Peterson v. Union Iron Works, 48 Wash. 505, 93 P 1077. In action for death of miner by fall of rock from roof, complaint containing no charge of negligence in manner of work, admission of testimony of ex-superintendent that mode of blasting was more dangerous than that used by him was reversible error. Ianne v. U. S. Gypsum Co. [N. Y.] 86 NE 809.

71. Held admissible: Proper working order of alleged defective appliance. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Mine inspector's reports showing dangerous condition of mine prior to injury by explosion. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co. v. Price [Ky.] 108 SW 345. Evidence that superintendent did not examine rope sling which broke before using it. Doherty v. Booth, 200 Mass. 522, 86 NE 945. Where brakeman was struck by ore bin near track, evidence that it could have been placed farther away. Collins v. Mineral Point & N. R. Co., 136 Wis. 421, 117 NW 1014. Question to manager of mine as to what he had found as a result of his investigation of servant's complaint regarding incompetency of driver held proper. Lamb v. Kerrens-Donnewald Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 195. Number of burners used could be shown on issue of care in supplying and changing them when needed. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Evidence that deceased was suffering from stricture which would render physical strain dangerous admissible under general issue and plea of contributory negligence, as it might show cause of injury other than defendant's negligence. Wade v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 84. Plaintiff, injured while oiling machine, may show platform on which he had to stand was not such as was ordinarily used and had no guards, and that master knew it was unsafe. Hollis v. Widener, 221 Pa. 72, 70 A 287. Where rock fell on miner proof that foreman had ordered another miner to have rock removed was admissible to show foreman's knowledge. Stratton Cripple Creek Min. & Development Co. v. Ellison, 42 Colo. 498, 94 P 303. Where plaintiff claimed machine by which he was injured was defective, defendant's manager was entitled to testify that machine was known as "Defiance," was considered safe, and was of highest grade. Wells v. Royal Wheel Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 737. Evidence that if shield, which had been removed from knives of machine, had been in place, plaintiff would not have been hurt by knives, and that he would have used shield had he had one, admissible in the notes. On the issue of negligence, proof of ordinary usage or general custom is admissible,[74] except as to matters controlled by statute[75] or rules,[76] but proof of to show absence of shield as cause of injury. Bennett v. Carolina Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 620, 61 SE 463. Proper to prove that it was duty of mine boss to warn employes of dangerous places in mine of which he had actual or implied knowledge. Norton Coal Co. v. Hanks' Adm'r, 108 Va. 521, 62 SE 335 Conversation between section foreman and roadmaster as to condition of hand car admissible to show notice of defects by company. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 543. Rules of railway company as to duties of brakemen admissible, in action for death of brakeman while trying to frighten children off and away from oars. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Other rules, inapplicable to facts shown, inadmissible. Id. Rule of railroad company declaring effect of sudden application or release of air brakes admissible to prove allegation that train was suddenly stopped by application of brakes, though rule was not pleaded. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Harper [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 1168.

Held inadmissible: Proof of talk by men about condition of appliance. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Responsibility for accident question of law; immaterial who was present who "might have reason to feel any responsibility." Id. Proof that covers had been prepared for vats, into one of which plaintiff fell, immaterial, where it did not appear that vat would have been covered at time anyway. McTiernan v. American Woolen Co., 197 Mass. 238, 83 NE 673. That two men were "generally reputed" to be chief engineer and superintendent respectively of defendant's plant, incompetent; such facts were susceptible of direct proof. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray [Ind.] 84 NE 341. Proof that car inspector employed by defendant was negligent and in the habit of using intoxicants in excess inadmissible in absence of proof that he had inspected cars in question or that they had been in yards where he worked. Rio Grande So. R. Co. v. Campbell [Colo.] 96 P 986. Whether other appliances were used immaterial, conditions not being shown similar. Wyman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 957. Where switchman was killed when between cars to uncouple them by hand, contrary to rules, proof that an employe of little experience had seen others do the same was inadmissible without proof that company knew of and acquiesced in such acts. Powell v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 864. Servant killed by electricity while trimming lamp with alleged defective hood. Proof that other hoods were defective inadmissible. Gardner v. Schenectady R. Co., 112 NYS 369.

72. Held admissible: Plaintiff may show abandonment of rules by habitual violation. Clay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 104 Minn. 1, 115 NW 949. Where conductor was injured while setting brake, proof that other brakes were out of order was admissible to show necessity for using the one he did use. Southern R. Co. v. Hardin [C. C. A.] 157 F 645. Plaintiff injured by fall of timber being carried by him and others could testify that he did not cause it to fall. Rushing v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 890. Proof of careful habits admissible, where manner of death could not be shown by eyewitnesses. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 136 Ill. App. 518. Rule of company requiring employes to unite in efforts to save endangered property admissible, where brakeman was injured while trying to catch and stop runaway cars. St. Louis S.W. R. Co. v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 122. In action for injuries to motorman caused by sliding of car on track, alleged negligence being failure to supply sand, plaintiff was properly allowed to testify whether he had ever been instructed as to necessity for having sand in pail or box on the car. Mayer v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 152 Mich. 276, 15 Det. Leg. N. 231, 116 NW 429. The local yard custom among brakeman, upon discovering that a car coupler would not couple, as to giving the usual signal and stepping between the cars to adjust the coupler, is admissible to meet a charge of contributory negligence against a brakeman injured by stepping between a car and locomotive tender to adjust the coupling device. Schwartz v. The Lake Shore & M. So. R. Co., 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 65.

Held admissible: Evidence of instructions to do work a certain way, given to employes other than plaintiff. Buchman v. Jeffery, 135 Wis. 448, 115 NW 372. In an action for wrongful death it is error to permit evidence to go to the jury which embodies an admission by the decedent of his own negligence. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Collins 10 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 486.

73. Proper to ask plaintiff as to his previous knowledge of condition of appliance alleged to be defective. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Proof that other machines had been unloaded with cranes admissible to show that servant, killed by overturning of one he was assisting in unloading without crane, did not appreciate danger. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 136 Wis. 39, 116 NW 854.

74. Evidence of ordinary usage or custom by ordinarily prudent and intelligent persons under same circumstances is admissible where act is not per se clearly negligent or free from negligence. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Egan [C. C. A.] 159 F 40. Proof of usual custom of doing certain work held admissible, not to show that there was a safer way, but on issue whether danger was ordinary and assumed risk. Kennedy v. Swift & Co., 234 Ill. 606, 85 NE 287. Proof of ordinary practice and uniform custom, if any, of persons of ordinary intelligence and prudence under the same circumstances, is competent on the issue of negligence. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. Proof that machine is of kind ordinarily used by persons engaged in same business is admissible; but proof that boys of plaintiff's age, experience and capacity are commonly employed to operate them inadmissible. Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 SW 794. Character of appliances furnished and character of those in general use in similar work may be shown. Louisville Veneer Mills Co. v. Clemonts, 33 Ky. L. R. 106, 109 SW 308.

practice by others, not shown to be general, is inadmissible.[77] All the circumstances of the injury may usually be shown,[78] and conditions existing before or after the time of accident may be shown if they throw light on the conditions at the time in question.[79] Proof of repairs or precautions taken, after an injury, to prevent other

Practice of another railroad company with respect to testing and inspection of boilers admissible on issue of reasonable care in what was done by defendant. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. Though custom of other companies in constructing tracks would not excuse negligence of defendant, proof of customary construction was admissible on issue of negligence in the particular case. Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 116 NW 113. Evidence of customary usage of well managed railroad companies relative to maintenance of right of way admissible (brakeman on side of car struck by post), but not conclusive on question of due care. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Testimony by car inspector of 25 years as to proper and customary way of making such inspection admissible. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Blachley [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 995. Evidence admissible to show general custom to make no inspection of trolley poles other than that made by linemen and repair crew. Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 444, 116 NW 983. Evidence of number of men customarily employed to unload timber from cars, such as was being unloaded when plaintiff was injured, admissible. Alabama Great So. R. Co. v. Vail [Ala.] 46 S 587. Evidence that it was customary to turn on electric current only after all construction work was completed is admissible. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rooney, 138 Ill. App. 275. Proof of custom to guard stairway openings in buildings in course of construction admissible. Leine v. Kellerman Cont. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1147. Proof that it was customary to use short handled axes in unloading logs was admissible but not conclusive on issue whether it was negligence to require such ax to be used on occasion in question. Brown v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co., 104 Minn. 156, 116 NW 218. Method commonly used in community to sustain dirt and rock around mouth of abandoned shaft admissible. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142. Evidence of other methods used to load trucks on cars, and that they were safer than that used by defendant, admissible. Robinson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 112 SW 730. Proof of proper way to timber upraise in mine to make it reasonably safe admissible, where evidence showed that master had knowledge of unsafe condition, rock having previously fallen and places having been retimbered. Hotchkiss Mt. Min. & Reduction Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 P 331.

75. Where injury caused by girl's hair being caught on shaft occurred in Connecticut, evidence as to custom of guarding such shafts in New York City, where matter was controlled by statute, was inadmissible. Civetti v. American Hatters' & Furriers' Corp., 124 App. Div. 345, 108 NYS 663.

76. Where rules of company denied to freight conductors power to employ help, proof of custom of other roads to contrary was inadmissible in action by one hired by conductor to assist in unloading freight. Taylor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 108 Va. 817, 62 SE 798.

77. Proof of how some other company operated traction or sprocket motors inadmissible on issue of negligent operation by defendant; proof should be of general custom. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler's Adm'r, 108 Va. 448, 62 SE 269. Proof of general custom of handling rails would be admissible; how a certain company handled them inadmissible. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Waldie [Tex. Civ. App.] 18 Tex. Ct. Rep. 60, 101 SW 517.

78. Plaintiff injured while cleaning out chute in sawmill could show surrounding conditions. Cook v. Pittock & Leadbetter Lumber Co. [Wash.] 98 P 1130. All circumstances surrounding brakeman when injured while trying to catch and stop runaway cars could be shown. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 122. Fireman killed by train running into open switch. Proof that headlight was oil burner, that there was no proper switch light, and of relative brightness of electric and oil headlights, etc., admissible. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. McDuffey [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 1104. That several miners were killed by explosion that killed plaintiff's intestate admissible. Sterns Coal Co. v. Evans' Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 755, 111 SW 308. Proof that another miner was found dead near intestate, for whose death by suffocation in mine action was brought, was admissible. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Heald [Ala.] 45 S 686. Where servant was killed by rock thrown by blast, proof that missiles were thrown against buildings and into streets was admissible on issue of negligence of master and conduct of employe. Knight v. Donnelly Bros., 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687.

79. Evidence as to condition of alleged defective machine should be confined to time of injury. Wells v. Royer Wheel Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 737. Condition of appliance before accident may be shown on issue of negligence in not repairing it. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Evidence of condition of track in November admissible where accident occurred in June, evidene showing no change had been made. Sprague v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 104 Minn. 58, 116 NW 104. Evidence as to condition of machine which injured plaintiff, two months after accident, admissible, it appearing that repairs made had not changed its operation. Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 574, 117 NW 187. Reversible error in action by employe who entered door and fell down elevator shaft to exclude evidence of conditions as to light near place at later time, conditions being substantially same as at time of injury, on issue of contributory negligence. Larrabee v. McGuinness [C. C. A.] 165 F 169. Conditions existing about machine at time of injury may be shown. Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon [Ind. App.] 85 NE 832. Where foreman in mine testified to accidents, is incompetent to show negligence,[80] but evidence of this kind is sometimes admitted on other issues.[81] Proof of the occurrence of previous similar accidents is admissible to charge the master with notice,[82] conditions being substantially the same.[83] Proof of subsequent accidents is usually inadmissible.[84] There is a conflict as to the admissibility of evidence that no similar accident had previously occurred.[85] Evidence to show that an appliance could have been guarded is admissible.[86]

having inspected stake, other miners were properly allowed to state that they had seen about the same time, a crack behind the rock which fell on plaintiff. Stratton Cripple Creek Min. & Development Co. v. Ellison, 42 Colo. 498, 94 P 303. Proof of actual condition of boiler tubes or flues after explosion admissible though it incidentally showed the removal of the tubes, the court having limited the evidence by its charge to the condition of the flues. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. Proof that alleged defective appliances were used two or three days after accident in same condition and under same circumstances, and that they worked perfectly, admissible. Hoseth v. Preston Mill Co. [Wash.] 96 P 423. Where defendant denied that place where plaintiff was hurt was passageway, proof that after accident it was made wider and better was admissible, not to show negligence but to prove that it was a passageway. Gustafson v. A. J. West Lumber Co. [Wash.] 97 P 1094. Where mine driver was injured by fall of rock from roof, proof of condition of roof for 3 or 4 days before was proper, though rock had fallen on day previous; such proof tendered to show dangerous condition at time. McCarthy v. Spring Valley Coal Co., 232 Ill. 473, 83 NE 957. Proper to show condition of spikes on railway track where plaintiff was hurt morning after accident by tripping on spike. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 48 S 99. Photographs of appliance after change was made inadmissible. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 70 A 196. Proof of conditions and method of work in mine under prior superintendent inadmissible without showing that conditions were same at time of accident. Ianne v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 110 NYS 496.

80. Proof that, after accident, master repaired machinery, changed method, or used more men, inadmissible, because to receive such evidence would deter master from improving machinery or methods. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. Making of repairs or alterations immediately after accident inadmissible. Lay v. Elk Ridge Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 156. Where window was broken, and plaintiff injured, proof that thereafter new beading of different kind was put on to hold glass was inadmissible to show negligence. Stewart & Co. v. Harman [Md.] 70 A 333. Proof of repairs on hand car before and after accident inadmissible. Landers v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 543. Admission of proof of repairs just after accident reversible error. Schultz v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 111 NYS 281. Admission of evidence that tipple on hoisting apparatus was put in plumb 3 weeks after injury was not cured by instruction that there could be no recovery unless tipple was out of plumb at time of injury. Stonington Coal Co. v. Young, 137 Ill. App. 462. Proof that water pipes were placed in mine after death of miner inadmissible. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Heald [Ala.] 45 S 686.

81. That shaft was smoothed off after injury caused by cloth getting caught on its burred end held admissible to show condition at time of injury (by divided court). Plunkett v. Clearwater Bleachery & Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 61 SE 431. After photographe, taken after shaft had been changed, had been introduced, evidence to show shaft in different condition from what it was at time of injury was admissible. Id. Directions given by superintendent as to mode of work, after an accident, admissible in so far as descriptive of method in use at time. Bartley v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 198 Mass. 163, 83 NE 1093.

82. Evidence that dummy elevator and weights had fallen down shaft on prior occasions admissible. Winkle v. George B. Peck Dry Goods Co., 132 Mo. App. 656, 112 SW 1026. Proof of previous bursting of boiler tubes or flues admissible to show notice to master of length of time they could be used with reasonable safety, and to show necessity of inspection and repairs. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. Proof that electric fan outside mine used to ventilate was frequently out of order prior to time of explosion of coal dust in mine admissible to show knowledge by company of defect and dangerous condition of mine. Sterns Coal Co. v. Evans' Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 755, 111 SW 308. Proof of similar accident shortly before one in question admissible to show knowledge of conditions in mine by defendant. Hotchkiss Mt. Min. & Reduction Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 P 331.

83. Proof of previous accidents is admissible to show the actual condition of the instrumentality when conditions are substantially similar to those in issue. Exact similarity not essential. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657.

84. In action for injuries caused by mine explosion, proof of explosions subsequent to time of injury was inadmissible. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co. v. Price, 33 Ky. L. R. 334, 108 SW 345. Where derailment of train was alleged to have been caused by spike negligently left on rail by service crew, evidence of attempt to wreck a train at another point three weeks later inadmissible because throwing no light on cause of former wreck. Millen & S. W. R. Co. v. Allen, 130 Ga. 656, 61 SE 541.

85. Fact that no previous similar accident had ever occurred held entitled to great weight, where danger of accident which did occur was not obvious. King v. Reid, 124 App. Div. 121, 108 NYS 615. Evidence that experienced brick makers had never known of a similar previous accident occurring held inadmissible. Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 97 P 843. Where defective hand-car was alleged as

To show incompetency of a servant, and knowledge of it by the master, the servant's physical condition,[87] prior incompetency,[88] his general reputation as careless and incompetent,[89] and prior specific acts tending to show incompetency,[90] may be shown. Proof of the reputation of a servant as careful and prudent is inadmissible where the action is based on a particular negligent act.[91] The fact that defendant carries casualty insurance is of course immaterial, and attempts to get the fact before the jury are usually held reversible error.[92]

Questions of law and fact.[93]—Negligence, contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and proximate cause, are usually questions of fact to be submitted to the jury [94]

cause of injury by being thrown off when it jumped the track, the fact that it had not jumped the track, and that no accident had occurred in several months' previous use, was to be considered by jury, but was not complete defense to action. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit [C. C. A.] 160 F 440.

86. Where injuries were alleged to have been caused by unguarded saw, proof that another similar saw in mill was guarded was admissible. Poozerwinski v. C. A. Smith Lumber Co., 105 Minn. 305, 117 NW 486. Proper to allow witness, familiar with work, to testify how flap door could be placed over steam vat, though he had worked only 3 days. Dix v. Union Ice Co. [N. J. Law] 68 A 1101. Evidence to show practicability of guarding steam vats into which plaintiff fell admissible, factory being within statute. Id. Proof that other emery wheels in defendant's plant were guarded competent to show that wheel in question could have been guarded. Kerr v. National Fulton Brass Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 985, 118 NW 925.

87. Proof that servant suffered from epileptic fits was admissible on issue of his incompetency, since such disease would tend to weaken him mentally. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 132 Mo. App. 418, 112 SW 6.

88. Proof of incompetency of servant year before admissible on issue of negligence in retaining him in service. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988.

89. Proof of general reputation of employe among his fellow workman as careless and incompetent man held admissible. Kansas City Consol. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 889. A servant's general reputation of incompetency is admissible for the purpose of charging the master with knowledge of his incompetency in employing or retaining him. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988.

90. Prior specific acte of negligence by alleged incompetent servant may be proved. Tucker v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 132 Mo. App. 418, 112 SW 6. Former negligent acts of engineer provable to show notice to superintendent of incompetency of engineer. McCalls Ferry Power Co. v. Price [Md.] 69 A 832. Evidence of incompetency of servant as to particluar business requiring skill may be deduced from circumstance disconnected with cause of action. Where service to be performed is of same nature or requires like skill as that from absence of which it is claimed plaintiff was injured. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. Corcoran [Ga. App.] 62 SE 130.

91. Where action was based on negligent act of engineer in making violent coupling proof of reputation of engineer as careful and prudent inadmissible. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Finley [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 531.

92. Attempts to show directly or indirectly that defendant is insured in a casualty company will result in reversal. Lenahan v. Pittston Coal Min. Co., 221 Pa. 626, 70 A 884. Reversible error for counsel to inquire as to casualty insurance after objection had been once sustained. Kerr v. National Fulton Brass Mfg. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 985, 118 NW 925. Reversible error for counsel in argument to refer to fact that defendant carried insurance. Hollis v. U. S. Glass Co., 220 Pa. 49, 69 A 55. Reference to casualty insurance company as defending case calculated to be prejudicial to defendant. St. Jean v. Lippitt Woolen Co. [R. I.] 69 A 604. Improper to refer to attorney for defendant as attorney for certain insurance company in question to witness. McCarthy v. Spring Valley Coal Co., 232 Ill. 473, 83 NE 957.

93. See 10 C. L. 796. See, also, ante, §§ 3A to 3G.

94. Hoff v. Japanese American Fish & Fertilizer Co., 48 Wash. 581, 94 P 109. When different conditions may reasonably be drawn from evidence, question of negligence is for jury. Wilson v. New York Cont. Co., 113 NYS 349; Mahoning Ore & Steel Co. v. Blomfelt [C. C. A.] 163 F 827; O'Connor v. Armour Packing Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 241. Negligence is not for court but for jury where facts, though undisputed, admit of more than one reasonable conclusion. Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway [Okl.] 99 P 153; Worth Bros. Co. v. Kallas [C. C. A.] 162 F 306; Carlson v. Cucamonga Water Co., 7 Cal. App. 382, 94 P 399. Only question for court is whether there is evidence tending to show negligence as proximate cause of injury; sufficiency of evidence is for jury. Manning v. Portland Steel Ship Bldg. Co. [Or.] 96 P 545. Assumption of risk for jury unless facts undisputed and admit of but one reasonable conclusion. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hawkins [Ark.] 115 SW 175. Contributory negligence is question for jury and cannot arise where court has decided as matter of law that plaintiff assumed the risk. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathis [Tex.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 481, 107 SW 530. The question of proximate cause is for jury if facts are disputed and of such character that more than one reasonable conclusion could be drawn therefrom; it is for court if facts are not in dispute and are such as to admit of but one conclusion. Teis v. Smuggler Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 260.

Case for jury where evidence did not conclusively show contributory negligence or assumption of risk. Rippy v. Southern R.

sues not so raised.[2] Instructions should be consistent,[3] clear,[4] and concrete.[5] They should be applicable to the evidence,[6] should not invade the province of the jury,[7] or tory negligence or assumption of risk properly refused. Wade v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 84. Instruction warranting recovery without proof that plaintiff was defendant's employe, as alleged erroneous. Crow v. Houck's Missouri & A. R. Co., 212 Mo. 589, 111 SW 583; Gould v. Aurora, Elgin & Chicago R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 344. Instructions ignoring assumption of risk erroneous. Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 136 Ill. App. 281. In absence of averment that plaintiff had not assumed risk, it was error to give instruction authorizing recovery on ground of defendant's negligence, where there was evidence of assumption of risk. Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. Co. v. Walker, 137 Ill. App. 428. "If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff has made out his case by a preponderance of the evidence as alleged in his declaration that the jury should find the defendant guilty," held erroneous because ignoring assumption of risk. Pullman Co. v. Praybla, 136 Ill. App. 303. Instruction that if defendant negligently failed to furnish reasonably safe appliances or reasonably safe place to work, and if such negligence was primary cause of injury finding should be for plaintiff, held erroneous in omitting to state that plaintiff must not know of defect, or had no equal means of knowledge with defendant. Stonington Coal Co. v. Young, 137 Ill. App. 462. Instruction peremptorily charging jury to find for plaintiff if they should find defendant guilty of negligence as charged in the declaration is not erroneous as ignoring doctrine of assumed risk where declaration by implication negatives it. Corn Product Refining Co. v. Cherry, 140 Ill. App. 1. Where an action on behalf of a minor, brought on account of injuries received in a machine which he was feeding, is tried on the theory that the defendant failed to instruct the plaintiff as to the extra hazard arising from a change in the material which he was feeding into the machine, the charge of court is not erroneous because of the omission in the paragraph defining ordinary care to refer to the age of the plaintiff, if it appear from the charge taken as a whole that the jury were not misled thereby. Box & Label Co. v. Caine, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 81. The elimination in the charge to the jury of the acts of the operatives of the moving engine as the proximate cause of the accident was error, as was also failure to instruct on the rule with reference to the contemplation of consequences in determining the question of proximate cause. Harmon v. McGuire, 6 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 597.

2. Charge submitting issues not made by evidence held erroneous. Davis' Adm'x v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 724. Error to submit ground of negligence not sustained by evidence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Garven [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 436. Instruction held not objectionable as authorizing recovery on grounds not pleaded. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Davidson [Tex. Civ. App.] 30 Tex. Ct. Rep. 643, 107 SW 949. Unless there is evidence tending to support it, an instruction should be refused. Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 51 Law. Ed. 703. Instruction held not to submit competency of engineer but question whether he was exercising due care at time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jowers [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 945. Evidence held not to raise question of insufficient number of men to do work but of negligence of foreman in giving untimely order. Wade v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 484. In an action for damages for personal injuries, where the defendant has disclaimed any defense of contributory negligence, a charge of court as to the burden of proving on the part of a plaintiff is misleading, and, taken in connection with a misstatement of the plaintiff's age as thirteen or fourteen, when he would have been sixteen on his next birthday, constitutes reversible error. Queen City Box Co. v. Duffy, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 69.

3. Judgment reversed for conflict in instructions as to rules, one being erroneous, and requested charge, which was correct, being refused. Van Alstine v. Standard L., H. & P. Co., 112 NYS 416.

4. In action for injuries to motorman, reference to passengers held not to make instructions misleading as to care owed motorman. Mayor v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 152 Mich. 276, 15 Det. Leg. N. 231, 116 NW 429.

5. Charge erroneous which gave only abstract law and failed to submit fact or facts on which finding of negligence could be based. Clancy v. New York, etc., R. Co., 112 NYS 541.

6. Instruction held inapplicable to evidence. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Wilkinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 470. Instructions properly refused as inapplicable to evidence. Riley v. Rutland R. Co., 80 Vt. 536, 68 A 713. Instruction on negligence of fellow-servant properly refused as inapplicable to evidence. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 988. Instruction erroneous because not accurately submitting negligence relied on. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Tandy, 32 Ky. L. R. 962, 107 SW 715. Instruction erroneous which submitted to jury question whether plaintiff had been expressly forbidden to use machine, and requiring them to find specific direction to use it, to warrant finding of negligence in failing to warn him, the evidence not warranting such instructions. Marklewitz v. Olds Motor Works, 152 Mich. 113, 15 Det. Leg. N. 125, 115 NW 999. Instruction that "if jury believe from the evidence" that trainmen disregarded rules of company confines them to rules shown in evidence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader [Ky.] 113 SW 874.

7. Instructions not applicable to facts, and infringing on province of jury properly refused. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. McWhorter [Ala.] 47 S 84. Error to assume in charge that running train at certain speed was negligence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 30 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958. An instruction that assumes that certain facts therein recited did not constitute contributory negligence is erroneous. Conklin Const. Co. v. Walsh, 131 Ill. App. 609. Jury should consider all the circumstances in determining how accident occurred; error to instruct them to disregard certain evidence though it would not alone sustain charge of negligence. Mitchell v. Boston assume as true facts which are controverted,[8] or omit reference to certain essential facts,[9] or unduly emphasize certain phases of the evidence.[10] Decisions as to particular instructions as to the duties of the master,[11] and as to the defenses of assumption of risk,[12] contributory negligence,[13] and the fellow-servant defense,[14] and the burden of proof,[15] are given in the note.

& M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 Mont. 575, 97 P 1038.

8. Instruction assuming certain facts as to plaintiff's orders erroneous, evidence being conflicting. Southern R. Co. v. Limback [Ind.] 85 NE 354.

9. A charge which authorizes the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, in the event they find that certain facts are true, is erroneous when the essential fact constituting the negligence is omitted. The Herancourt Brewing Co. v. Frank, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 505.

10. Instructions, each singling out one branch of the case and stating that "if defendant was otherwise without fault," are objectionable as calculated to mislead. Village of Montgomery v. Robertson, 132 Ill. App. 362.

11. Instructions as to master's duty with reference to place and appliances and number of men approved. Trumbo's Adm'x v. Gaines & Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 415, 109 SW 1188. Instruction on duty to inspect cars not erroneous. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes [Ark.] 114 SW 221. Jury correctly charged with reference to duty of defendant to furnish lug hooks to carry lumber with. Rushing v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 890. Instructions on master's duty with respect to place of work, platform, not erroneous. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter [Ky.] 113 SW 904. Instruction held not objectionable as making it defendant's absolute duty to furnish fireman reasonably safe engine. Taylor v. White [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 554. Instruction on care required of superintendent in selecting materials for scaffold erroneous because disregarding evidence that decedent supervised construction. Murch Bros. Const. Co. v. Hays [Ark.] 114 SW 697. Error to charge on law as to place of work and "ways, works and means," under statute, where accident was due to falling of brick wall in course of construction by injured employe. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 NYS 861. Instruction that it was duty of master to "exercise ordinary care to furnish plaintiff with safe appliances," etc., held not erroneous for omission of "reasonably" before word "safe," effect being same. Rudquist v. Empire Lumber Co., 104 Minn. 505, 116 NW 1019. Instruction that it is "duty of master" to furnish reasonably safe place of work not erroneous; need not state that master must use ordinary care to furnish reasonably safe place; substance, not form, is important. Poczerwinski v. Smith Lumber Co., 105 Minn. 305, 117 NW 486. Negligence in mode of mining, and failure to timber stope, being relied on, instructions permitting defendant to establish a custom of mining which made timbering impossible were erroneous. Stratton Cripple Creek Min. & Development Co. v. Ellison, 42 Colo. 498, 94 P 303. Instruction on failure to warn child, operating dangerous machine, erroneous because not requiring such negligence to be found proximate cause of injury. Hillsboro Cotton Mills v. King [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 484. Where pile of lumber fell with plaintiff, who followed foreman upon it, instruction that if foreman "exercise care of reasonably prudent man in ascertaining that lumber was improperly piled and acted as promptly as was demanded of reasonably prudent man in notifying plaintiff of danger," he was not negligent, should have been given. Bryant Lumber Co. v. Stastney [Ark.] 112 SW 740.

12. Charge approved. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Romans [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 157; Aga v. Harbach [Iowa] 117 NW 669. Instruction on assumption of risks by switchman, injured by defective car stirrup, approved. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. O'Keefe [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 1002. Instructions on assumption of risk approved; those requested properly refused. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Barwick [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 953. Instructions on assumption of risk of gas explosion by miner sufficient. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Buchanan [Ark.] 114 SW 694. Instruction on assumption of risk by lineman of pole falling with him sufficient; request properly refused as placing on him too great burden of care in inspection. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Tucker [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 481. Instruction held correct as substantially stating doctrine that negligence of master is not assumed unless risk is or ought to have been known. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 480. Assumption of risk arising from darkness of room where plaintiff was operating machine held properly submitted. Schow v. McCloskey [Tex.] 113 SW 739. Instruction held to sufficiently negative plaintiff's knowledge of defect by reference to special plea setting it up. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile [Ala.] 45 S 699. Instruction on assumption of risk of danger from known condition held not erroneous. Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 848. Instruction on assumption of risk not erroneous. Mayer v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 152 Mich. 276, 15 Det. Leg. N. 231, 116 NW 429. Instruction on assumption of risk criticised but held not reversible error when charge was considered as whole. Maxson v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 281. Instruction on assumption of risk, that master and servant are not on equal footing, etc., criticised but held not reversible error. Hoseth v. Preston Mill Co. [Wash.] 96 P 423. Instruction on assumption of risk by switchman erroneous. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jowers [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 946. Instruction on assumption of risk, ignoring fact that plaintiff was doing work in customary manner, properly refused. Kansas City Consol. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 889.

13. Charge approved. Trumbo's Adm'x v. Gaines & Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 415, 109 SW 1188. Instruction on contributory negligence of section hand struck by train approved. International, etc., R. Co. v. Aleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 73. Instruction on contributory negligence grouping facts set up and proved by defendant proper. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. King's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 196.

(§ 3H) 6. Verdicts and findings. See 10 C. L. 803—A verdict against the master may be sustained though the jury finds in favor of a servant also charged with negligence.[16] A general verdict cannot be sustained unless special questions are also answered.[17] Special findings must be consistent.[18] In Wisconsin, where assumption of risk is held a species of contributory negligence, these questions need be separately submitted only when such submission is requested,[19] unless the jury could find different answers which would be consistent.[20] Otherwise they may be grouped by the charge under a question in the special verdict relative to contributory negligence.[21]

§ 4. Liability for injuries to third persons. A. In general. See 10 C. L. 803—The master is liable for acts of his servant within the scope of his employment, while engaged in the business of the master,[22] though the servant exceeds his actual authority [23]

Instruction on contributory negligence approved in case where inexperienced section hand was injured in unloading gravel from car in dangerous way under direction of foreman. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 478. Instruction on contributory negligence approved in case where switchman was crushed between car and post. Cunningham v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 455. Instructions on contributory negligence approved in action by switchman for injuries. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Davidson [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 643, 107 SW 949. Instruction on "ordinary care" required of employe held not erroneous. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281. Instruction on contributory negligence as applied to facts approved. Avery v. West Lumber Co., 146 N. C. 592, 60 SE 646. An instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence that the plaintiff exercised ordinary care, as correctly defined in the instruction, they should so find, is not obnoxious. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Rooney, 138 Ill. App. 275. Instruction on contributory negligence not erroneous as omitting reference to necessity of its contributing to injury, in view of entire charge and question as submitted to jury. Buchman v. Jeffery, 135 Wis. 448, 115 NW 372. Instructions on contributory negligence criticised in case where brakeman was thrown from engine pilot where he was riding. El Dorado & B. R. Co. v. Whatter [Ark.] 114 SW 234. Error to refuse charge on contributory negligence grouping facts relating to plaintiff's conduct. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958. Instruction on contributory negligence erroneous because unduly emphasizing certain facts and ignoring others. Gibler v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 93, 107 SW 1021. Instruction on contributory negligence erroneous because requiring defendant to prove such negligence as proximate cause of injury, since recovery would be defeated if plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to injury. Hillsboro Cotton Mills v. King [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 484. Instruction on "last clear chance" doctrine erroneous, being inapplicable to facts. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bentley [Kan.] 96 P 800. Instruction on contributory negligence not erroneous in case where conductor was injured in stepping from moving train. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Kennedy [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 339.

14. Charge erroneous which authorized recovery for negligence of one conceded on trial to be plaintiff's fellow-servant. Boyle v. McNulty Bros., 113 NYS 240. Instruction on concurrent negligence of fellow-servant warranted where defendant brought out on cross-examination fact that fellow-servant came in contact with plaintiff at time of his injury. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Monell [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 504. Instruction on assumption of risk of negligence of fellow-servants held not misleading. Cheek v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 62 SE 402.

15. Instruction on burden of proof not erroneous. Holland v. Durham Coal & Coke Co. [Ga.] 63 SE 290. Instruction on burden of proof on contributory negligence should make it clear that all the evidence, including plaintiff's, may be considered. Suderman & Dolson v. Kriger [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 373. Instruction that "under law it is the duty of master to furnish and provide reasonably safe machinery, tools and appliances in and about the work to be performed by servant," held incorrect. Ragsdale v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 140 Ill. App. 71. Plaintiff injured by reason of fall of derrick being moved. Instruction to find for defendant "if you find that three guy lines were sufficient to make the moving of the derrick reasonably safe, and you find that five men were sufficient," etc., erroneous as placing on defendant burden of showing method used reasonably safe. Ryan v. Farley & Loetscher Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 86.

16. Where defendant, railroad conductor, was charged with negligence in failing to warn brakeman of proximity of freight platform, and company was charged with negligence in maintaining such platform, failure of jury to find against conductor did not entitle company to directed verdict. Clay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 104 Minn. 1, 115 NW 949.

17. General verdict could not be sustained where jury failed to answer special questions, favorable answers to which were necessary to recovery by plaintiff. Larsen v. Leonardt [Cal. App.] 96 P 395.

18. Special answers by jury, one finding that plaintiff appreciated danger, and another that he was not wanting in due care, held not inconsistent, where evidence made contributory negligence and assumption of risk separate issues. Comphure v. Standard Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 633.

19. Compshure v. Standard Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 633.

20. In such case they should be separately submitted. Compshure v. Standard Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 633.

21. Compshure v. Standard Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 118 NW 633.

22. The master is liable for the torts of his servant, done in the course of his employment with a view to the furtherance of his master's business and not for a purpose personal to himself. Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668; Barrett v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 117 NW 1047. Servant's act must be in performance of master's orders or work, and in pursuance of his duties as servant. Doran v. Thomsen [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 296. The test of a master's liability for acts of servants is not whether a given act was done during the existence of the servant's employment, but whether it was done in the prosecution of the master's business. Assault. Klugman v. Sanitary Laundry Co., 141 Ill. App. 422. Petition held to state cause of action for assault on plaintiff by defendant's servant, authorized by defendant. Boutwell v. Medlin Mill. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 1025. Lessees of theatre liable where usher employed by them, who took plaintiff's ticket to seat him, assaulted him, had him arrested, charged with breach of the peace, and appeared in court against him, such assault and arrest being without justification. Epstein v. Gordon, 114 NYS 438. Carrier liable for assault by brakeman on passenger who was in freight car instead of in passenger car where he should have been. Keen v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. App. 301, 108 SW 1125. Brakeman held to have implied authority to keep trespassers off train, notwithstanding one rule requiring conductor's consent and presence and whether company was liable where brakeman ordered trespasser off moving train, trespasser being injured, was held question for jury. Barrett v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 117 NW 1047. Watchman guarding property and entrusted with pistol was acting in course of employment when he shot trespasser who at time had left premises. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 429. Railway watchman owed to trespassers, whom he was conducting out of yards, duty to avoid injury to them by reckless or negligent use of revolver. Fact that he mistook person he shot for trespasser would not alter liability of company. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons [Tex.] 113 SW 914. Policeman appointed by governor to protect railway property, being designated by company, arrested plaintiff for stealing property of defendant, and defendant's superintendent told policeman to turn him over to city police. Defendant liable for false imprisonment, policeman representing it in making the arrest. Baltimore C. & A. R. Co. v. Ennalls [Md.] 69 A 638. Where deputy sheriffs were appointed at railroad company's request to guard its property and were paid by it, and one of them was engaged in driving tramps off its premises having said he would not arrest them, and while so doing shot one of them, jury was warranted in finding that he was performing his duties as its employe at time. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 240. Personal intentions of deputy employed by defendant to protect its property would be immaterial if deputy, when he shot trespasser, was engaged in his duties and was putting trespassers off company's property. Id. Whether deputy sheriff, appointed by sheriff but paid and controlled by railroad company whose property he guarded, was acting as servant or in his official capacity when he shot trespasser, must be determined from all the facts and circumstances. Id.

Master is responsible for negligence of his servant when engaged about the master's business and within the scope of his employment. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 NYS 1057. Master liable for negligence as well as deliberate acts of servant while acting within scope of authority. Biggins v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 561. Servant of fire escape company dropped drill on plaintiff rightfully working below; company liable. Enos Fire Escape Co. v. Langan, 136 Ill. App. 631. Evidence held to sustain verdict for plaintiff for injuries caused by negligent operation of elevator by defendant's servants, while plaintiff was working on building in elevator shaft. Anderson v. Standard Plunger Elevator Co., 113 NYS 593. Charge that city was negligent sustained by proof of negligence of its employes. Gathman v. Chicago, 236 Ill. 9, 86 NE 152. Master liable where driver suddenly drove round corner in front of lady, who, in trying to get out of danger, fell and was injured. Sandy v. Swift & Co., 159 F 271. Coal dealer liable for negligence of teamster in failing to properly guard coal hole used by him in delivery at instance of purchaser of coal. Wakefield v. Boston Coal Co., 197 Mass. 527, 83 NE 1116. Railway company liable for negligence of employes resulting in death of employe of another company in collision at crossing. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Murtle [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 998. Evidence warranted verdict against defendant where it appeared its driver in delivering ice had dropped a piece, breaking glass in ice box and rendering meat unsalable by reason of fine pieces of glass falling over it. Atlanta Ice & Coal Co. v. Walton [Ga. App.] 63 SE 513. Petition held to state cause of action which alleged that child was allowed to be brought into defendant's mill and allowed to wander about amid dangerous machinery by which she was injured, employe in charge having knowledge of these facts; immaterial that employe was child's father who was charged with parental duty of caring for her safety. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289. Evidence sustained verdict for plaintiff where saleswoman, servant of defendant, handled bundle carrier negligently so that rope attached flew up striking and injuring plaintiff, a customer in the store. McQuade v. The Golden Rule, 105 Minn. 326, 117 NW 484. Railroad company which obtains right to use another's track is liable for injuries to servants of the latter, caused by negligence of its employes in running trains; its servants being still under its control and in its employment. Hamble v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 164 F 410. Known carelessness of chauffeur not legal cause of runaway caused by chauffeur while using machine on an errand of his own, and not in employer's business. Danforth v. Fisher [N. H.] 71 A 535. Adjustment and testing of automobile by chauffeur held within his duties as representative of seller who agreed to teach buyer to run the machine, and hence seller was liable to buyer for accident caused by negligence of chauffeur while testing the operation of the machine. Burnham v. Central Automobile Exch. [R. I.] 67 A 429.

23. Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668; Barrett v. Minneapolis R. Co. [Minn.] 117 NW 1047. Test is whether servant was engaged at time in course of his employment and within scope of authority, not whether act was expressly authorized or in accord with instructions. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 429.

or violates express orders or instructions,[24] or is guilty of a willful tort.[25] The master is not liable for unauthorized acts outside the scope of the servant's employment.[26] Thus, for acts or negligence of the servant while engaged in the prosecution of some private purpose of his own, unconnected with the business of the master,[27] the latter is not responsible,[28] though the servant may have been using an

24. Barrett v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 117 NW 1047; Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668. That servant violates instructions or commits needless injury is immaterial if he was acting within scope of employment. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 429. Whether servant was acting within scope of employment at time is test; if he was, it is immaterial that he was not doing work in manner expected of him. Danforth v. Fisher [N. H.] 71 A 535.

25. Master liable whether act be negligent or willful, if within scope of agency. Barrett v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. [Minn.] 117 NW 1047; Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668. A master is responsible for the acts of his servant within the general scope of his employment while engaged in his master's business and done with a view of the furtherance of that business and in the master's interest, even if such acts are done wantonly and willfully. Waaler v. Great Northern R. Co. [S. D.] 117 NW 140. Defendant liable where member of section crew employed by it, sent to build fence, assaulted plaintiff, servant of owner of land, who was endeavoring to prevent erection of the fence, even though assault was wanton and unnecessary. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that section man who assaulted plaintiff was employe of defendant. Id. If servant's act is within scope of his authority it is immaterial whether he acts negligently or wantonly. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Martin, 33 Ky. L. R. 666, 110 SW 815. Employer liable where watchman drove boy of 7, trespasser, of premises, beating him with stick and causing dog to bite him, this action being unnecessary. Bernadsky v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 189. Bar tender placed in charge of saloon in absence of defendants, his employers, poured alcohol on shoe of patron who was asleep, and set fire to it. Held, defendants liable for injury, since they were bound to conduct an orderly place, and bartender was their representative for that purpose. Bellke v. Carroll [Wash.] 98 P 1119. The master is liable to third parties injured by the willful acts of his servants while engaged upon his employment. Where stranger in helping to unload freight car at train crews' invitation was injured by brakeman letting box drop on him, evidence held not to warrant finding that brakeman's act was willfull. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 138 Ill. App. 83.

26. Before a master can be charged with the consequences of a negligent or wanton act by a servant, it must appear that the act was within the scope of the servant's authority. Harmon v. McGuire, 6 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 597. The evidence in the case at bar does not show that either the fireman or the head brakeman was authorized to open the cylinder cocks of the engine which was at rest, permitting an escape of steam which blinded and frightened plaintiff and caused her to step in front of another engine which was moving, and by which she was run down. Id. Not within scope of assistant book-keeper's duties to direct employes to assist third person in unloading truck. Bassi v. Orth, 58 Misc. 372, 109 NYS 88. An act done by a servant while engaged in his master's work, but not done as a means or for the purpose of performing that work, is not to be deemed the act of the master. Railroad company not liable where section men, including foreman, invited boy to ride on hand car from which he fell. Daugherty v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 Iowa, 257, 114 NW 902. Defendant not liable where one of his drivers willfully and maliciously kicked horse of plaintiff, as he was about to leave defendant's premises after delivering goods, causing horse to run and injuring plaintiff. Miller v. Wanamaker, 111 NYS 786. If sleeping car porter stole passenger's jewelry, this not being baggage, he was not acting in scope of employment, and company would not be liable. Bacon v. Pullman Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 1. Proprietor of restaurant not liable for injuries received by plaintiff while going to closet in rear of premises on invitation or authorization of servant, who had no authority to extend such invitation. Macartney v. Colwell [R. I.] 68 A 719. Employer not liable for assault by detective. Kehoe v. Marshall, Field & Co., 141 Ill. App. 140. Street railway company would not be liable for assault on passenger by car or track greaser, who had nothing to do with operation of cars, unless he acted at express or implied order of conductor and to assist him in his duties. Mills v. Seattle R. & S. R. Co. [Wash.] 96 P 520. Railway mail clerk, injured while trying to alight from mail car, held to have no cause of action against another company for failure of its employe to warn him that train from which he was about to alight was about to start, employe having nothing to do with that train. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Keeling [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 808.

27. Whether driver, who drove defendant's team into plaintiff, was at time acting as defendant's servant, or engaged in work for himself, held for jury. Connell v. Havey, 125 App. Div. 189, 109 NYS 260.

28. Chauffeur using car for own pleasure; master not liable for collision. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 NYS 1057. Owner of automobile not liable where chauffeur caused runaway while using machine on an errand of his own, and not going where owner had instructed him to go. Danforth v. Fisher [N. H.] 71 A 535. Owner of automobile not liable for runaway caused by chauffeur while using machine on an errand of his own, on theory of having placed dangerous instrumentality in his care. Id. Where girl of 19 was using her father's automobile for her own pleasure, driving about with friends without her father's permission, he was not liable for injuries caused by collision. Doran v. Thomsen [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 296. Instruction erroneous which permitted recovery for injuries inflicted by automobile driven by defendant's daughter on mere instrumentality furnished by the master.[29] The master may become liable by ratification of a previously unauthorized act.[30] Doubt as to whether a servant was acting within the scope of his employment will be resolved against the master.[31] Where an employer has notice of a dangerous practice of his employes and fails to use reasonable care to suppress it, he is liable to a third person for injuries resulting therefrom,[32] though the act in question is malicious and beyond the scope of the employment.[33] Where the servant acts in obedience to an express order given by the master, the master is liable for the consequences of the servant's acts.[34]

The doctrine of respondeat superior is, of course, inapplicable unless the relation of master and servant existed at the time between defendant and the person charged with the wrongful act or omission,[35] and the test usually employed to determine ground that he had bought it for use by her and family; she must have been using it in his service. Doran v. Thomsen [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 296. Killing of child by chauffeur using master's automobile in opposition to master's instructions, to take pleasure trip of his own, not chargeable to master. Sarver v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 69. Where laundry driver was responsible for work delivered with receiving payment, and called later to recover goods or get "his own money," company was not liable for acts done while on such errand. Steinman v. Baltimore Antiseptic Steam Laundry Co. [Md.] 71 A 517. Man employed to deliver coal had horse delivered to him at employer's premises, and to get it to his home, tied it behind sleigh with long rope and led it while making regular delivery of coal for defendant. Horse being led became excited and kicked girl on sidewalk. Held, injury arose out of act done for servant's personal benefit and not in master's work. Defendant not liable. Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668. Defendant, livery stable keeper, not liable where his foreman and driver, negligently caused to be discharged a gun owned by himself (foreman) injuring plaintiff, the act not being done in course of his duties as defendant's servant. Smith v. Peach, 200 Mass. 504, 86 NE 908.

29. Sarver v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 69. Master not liable where chauffeur borrowed car for his own purpose, and ran into plaintiff. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 NYS 1057. Mere fact that injury was inflicted with instrumentality furnished by defendant does not make him liable, if servant was engaged in his own private business or pleasure. Doran v. Thomsen [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 296.

30. Action for mutilation of body of husband of plaintiff by trains after he had been killed, it appearing that several trains ran over body and scattered and dismembered it. Held, retention of employes concerned by company was ratification of their acts, and company could not be heard to say they were unauthorized. Kyles v. Southern R. Co., 147 N. C. 394, 61 SE 278. Laundry company did not ratify acts of driver while trying to collect money for work delivered by sending notice to plaintiff's husband to call for work and pay amount due. Steinman v. Baltimore Antiseptic Steam Laundry Co. [Md.] 71 A 517.

31. Since he sets in motion the servant who commits the wrong. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 429.

32. Factory employes were in habit of throwing iron scraps and missiles into adjoining yard, complaint of which had been made. Employer liable for injuries to woman struck by missile. Hogble v. H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co., 128 App. Div. 403, 112 NYS 881.

33. Hogle v. H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co., 128 App. Div. 403, 112 NYS 881.

34. Cannot contend that servant is acting outside scope of duties. Rimmer v. Wilson, 42 Colo. 180, 93 P 1110.

35. Defendant held not liable: Evidence held to show that corporation employed man by whose negligence plaintiff was injured, and that defendant was not his employer. Callahan v. Oltarsh, 109 NYS 753. Defendant not liable for injuries caused by his automobile, driven by his brother's chauffeur, car having been loaned to defendant's brother. Parsons v. Wisner, 113 NYS 922. Injuries received in collision with wagon, bearing defendant's name. Defendants proved driver not in their employ. No recovery. Collins v. West Jersey Exp. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 70 A 344. Railway company operating trains on leased road not liable for negligence of crossing watchman in employ of lessor company. Wills v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 113 SW 713. Person "doing general detective work" in Marshall Field & Co.'s store, but subject to directions of a detective agency, not servant to former. Kehoe v. Marshall Field & Co., 141 Ill. App. 140. Railway company not liable for arrest of plaintiff by policeman on duty at station, one-half of whose salary was paid by company, but who was subject to orders of chief of police; employes directing him to take charge of plaintiff who was endeavoring to pass station gate. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Nelson [Ark.] 113 SW 44. Town marshal and deputy not agents of railway company though company had issued passes to them as inducement to give special attention to protection of railroad property, and company not liable for their act in ejecting plaintiff from train and shooting him. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Morrow [Ark.] 115 SW 173. Where plaintiff was injured by alleged starting of elevator, evidence held insufficient to show that starting of elevator was due to any one under defendant's control. S. Cupples Woodenware Co. v. Walins, 140 Ill. App. 624.

Defendant held liable: Evidence held to show that deputy was acting as defendant's servant when he shot trespasser. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons [Tex.] 113 SW 914. Railroad company requested sheriff for deputies to protect its property, and sheriff deputized two men who were thereafter paid by the company and spent all their time whether this relation existed is whether such person was subject to the control and direction of defendant.[36] A master is not liable for negligence of his general servant if at the time he is the servant of another, and is engaged in that other's business and under his direction and control.[37] If a servant who is employed to do certain work employs another person to assist him, the master is liable for negligence of the assistant only when the servant has authority, express or implied, to employ him,[38] or when the employment is ratified by the master.[39] The retention of a servant with knowledge that he has done a negligent act for which the master was not liable will not render the latter liable.[40] Charitable corporations are liable for negligence of servants,[41] though not for torts of persons acting for such corporations in other capacities.[42]

guarding the company's property, the sheriff having no further control over them. Held, jury could find them to be company's servants. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 240. Mere fact that they were deputies, and that they sometimes served papers gratuitously for sheriff, would not change their relation to company. Id. Defendant rented hod elevator to contractor and furnished engineer to run it, engineer being subject to its control. Held, engineer was defendant's servant, though he operated elevator in accordance with directions for contractor and his employes, and one of latter could recover for negligence of engineer from defendant. Henry v. Stanley Hod Elevator Co., 114 NYS 38. City park foreman selected driver of rubbish wagon, had power to remove him and directed his work, but driver, wagon, and team were all furnished and paid by third person, who was in turn paid by city. Held, driver was servant of city while engaged in work, and city was liable for injuries caused by his negligence. Silverman v. New York, 114 NYS 59. Defendant's son was running automobile with his instructor in the car with him, and struck plaintiff. Son had instructions from father to learn to run car. Evidence warranted finding that son was father's servant and was acting within scope of his authority, and that he was employe of vendor, the instructor. Hiroux v. Baum [Wis.] 118 NW 533.

Question for jury: Whether driver of automobile, alleged to have caused injury by reckless driving was defendants' chauffeur, held for jury, evidence being conflicting. Ottomeier v. Hornburg [Wash.] 97 P 235. Whether driver of thresher engine which started fire was an employe of seller of engine or of other defendants held for jury. Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485, 15 Det. Leg. N. 62, 115 NW 469. Fact that person wore cap and uniform of train employe not conclusive that he was an employe, but evidence on the issue for the jury. De Vane v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co. [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1079. If stevedore's injury was caused by negligence of defendant's employes, defendant would be liable; if negligence was that of stevedores in failing to instruct servants, defendants not liable. Stewart v. Balfour [Wash.] 98 P 103.

36. Rule respondeat superior applies only where employer retains power of control over employe in doing of work. Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 112 NYS 566. The responsibility of a master for tortious acts of his servants arises, grows out of, is measured by, and begins and ends with, his control over them. Defendant held to have no control over detective, hired by agency. Kehoe v. Marshall Field & Co., 141 Ill. App. 140. Defendant liable for injuries caused by automobile driven by person to whose care he had entrusted it, and who was running it for defendant, though such person was in employ and pay of another. Irwin v. Judge [Conn.] 71 A 572. Defendant sold automobile to one who agreed to run it for hire and pay for it out of his earnings. He was not defendant's employe, nor under defendant's control or direction. Held, defendant not liable for his negligence while driving machine. Braverman v. Hart, 105 NYS 107. Defendant's servants, assisting in loading vessel, who put sacks on chute, held not as matter of law "loaned to" and under control of stevedores, so as to become fellow-servants, for time being, of plaintiff, employed by stevedore on vessel. Stewart v. Balfour [Wash.] 98 P 103. One person is another's servant if he is subject to the latter's control and orders, and is liable to be discharged by him for disobedience of orders or misconduct. Man hired by city bridge tender held to be servant of city. City of Chicago v. Galtman, 139 Ill. App. 253.

37. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 NYS 1057. Defendant's employes, assisting truck driver to unload truck at his request and subject to his orders, become for time being his servants, and defendant was not liable for their negligence while so engaged. Bassi v. Orth, 58 Misc. 372, 109 NYS 88.

38. Cooper v. Lowery [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1015. Where defendant's servant asked bystander to help fix cart, and bystander's act, while rendering such assistance, caused injury to plaintiff, defendant was liable. Hollidge v. Duncan, 199 Mass. 121, 85 NE 186. Where city employed bridge tender, who with city's consent employed others to do his work, city was liable for negligence of latter, in line of their duty. Gathman v. Chicago, 236 Ill. 9, 86 NE 152. Where master's teamster induced a friend to take charge of master's wagon while he engaged in business of his own not connected with that of master, the master will not be liable for injury to a stranger occasioned by friend while using master's wagon. Hills v. Strong, 132 Ill. App. 174.

39. Cooper v. Lowery [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1015.

40. Kwiechen v. Holmes & Hallowell Co. [Minn.] 118 NW 668.

41. Charitable hospital corporation liable for negligence of ambulance driver resulting

An employer is not liable for the acts or negligence of an independent contractor,[43] that is, one who represents the employer only as to the result and not as to the means or manner of doing the work,[44] unless he reserves control over the doing of the work.[45]

Damages.[See 10 C. L. 807]—The master is liable for compensatory damages where the act of the servant is within the scope of his employment,[46] but is not liable for punitive damages unless the act is malicious [47] or wanton and reckless,[48] and unless the master shared or participated therein,[49] or unless the wrongful act is a part or in pursuance of a recognized business system adopted and authorized by the principal,[50] or is the act of an agent or manager who has charge of the general management of particular business in the course of which the act was committed.[51] Measure of damages is treated in another topic.[52]

Liability of servant.[See 10 C. L. 807]—Where a servant violates a duty owed to a in injury to third person run into on street. Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 112 NYS 566. Plaintiff being injured solely by negligence of servants of defendant, it was liable, though it was in the nature of a charitable corporation. Gartland v. New York Zoological Society, 113 NYS 1087.

42. See discussion and classification of authorities in Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 112 NYS 566.

43. Owner of building not liable where sign, put up by independent contractor two weeks before, fell on plaintiff during storm. McNulty v. Ludwig & Co., 125 App. Div. 291, 109 NYS 703. Owner of land not liable for injury caused by negligence of independent contractor engaged in erecting building on land. Stubley v. Allison Realty Co., 124 App. Div. 162, 108 NYS 759.

44. When a question arises as to whether a person performing work or doing business for another is a contractor for whose negligence the employer is liable, or a servant for whose acts the master is responsible, the character of the contract, nature of employment, and all circumstances, are to be considered. Knicely v. West Virginia M. R. Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 811. Independent contractor is one who represents will of employer only as to result of work and not as to means. McGrath v. St. Louis [Mo.] 114 SW 611. Independent contractor is one who is responsible to employer only as to result. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 240. Person employed to clear lands held independent contractor. Young v. Fosburg Lumber Co., 147 N. C. 26, 60 SE 654. Company having contract to remove signs using its own tools, men, etc., held independent contractor. Employer not liable for injury to third person by employe of company. Press v. Penny [Mo. App.] 114 SW 74. That coal company hired man and wagon to deliver coal did not make him independent contractor, rather than agent or servant, for whose acts company would be liable. City of Newark v. East Side Coal Co., 74 N. J. Law, 68, 70 A 734. Licensed expressman, paid by week to deliver paint for defendant, using own horse and wagon, doing work in his own way, and personally or by his employes, held independent contractor, for whose negligence defendant was not liable. Burns v. Michigan Paint Co,. 152 Mich. 613, 15 Det. Leg. N. 201, 116 NW 182. One contracting to cut, haul, and deliver logs at certain price per 1,000 delivered, held independent contractor, employe having no control of means or manner of doing work. Gay v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 436.

45. If contractor is responsible only for result of work, master is not liable for means or manner employed in doing it; but if contract provides for means and manner, contractor being directed by employer in doing work, latter is liable for contractor's acts. Drennon v. Patton-Worsham Drug Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 218. Sales agent was furnished advertising matter in shapes of large horse blankets with lettering, and employer directed these to be placed on horses. Held, agent represented and was following directions of defendant in so using blankets, and latter would be liable for consequences, such as frightening other horses. Id. Where contractors furnished trucks and drivers to defendant, and defendant had sole control, and direction of trucks and drivers when in use, defendant was liable for negligence of truck driver. Cohen v. Western Elec. Co., 108 NYS 1007.

46. A master is liable in compensatory damages for the tortious acts of a servant in the course of his employment, though such act is wanton or malicious. Rose v. Imperial Engine Co., 112 NYS 8.

47. Error to instruct that smart money could be awarded, in case of false arrest, without requiring malice to be found. Magagnos v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 112 NYS 637.

48. Malice may be found from proof of wantonness or reckleesness. Magagnos v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 112 NYS 637.

49. Magagnos v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 112 NYS 637. A master or principal is not liable for punitive damages for the tortious act of a servant unless he participated therein or ratified it. Rose v. Imperial Engine Co., 112 NYS 8. Instruction authorizing recovery of exemplary damages for "unlawful and false imprisonment" of plaintiff by defendant's servants, without requiring finding of malice or wantonness, or participation or ratification by defendant, reversible error. Lewine v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 113 NYS 15.

50. Rose v. Imperial Engine Co., 112 NYS 8.

51. Whether libelous letter, written by employe as from corporation defendant, was authorized as part of his work, held for jury. Rose v. Imperial Engine Co., 112 NYS 8.

52. See Damages, 11 C. L. 958.

third person, he is personally liable therefor,[53] whether his wrong doing be regarded as nonfeasance or misfeasance, as between him and his master.[54] The liability of such servant is controlled by ordinary rules of negligence.[55]

(§ 4) B. Procedure.[See 10 C. L. 808]—The complaint must show that the person charged with wrongdoing was defendant's servant [56] and that he was acting at the time within the scope of his employment,[57] and the burden is upon plaintiff to prove these facts [58] and that the wrongful act alleged was the cause of the alleged injury.[59] Recovery must be upon the ground alleged, if at all.[60] Where the action is based solely on negligence of a servant on a particular occasion, proof that this or other servants have been negligent on former occasions is inadmissible.[61] Defendant may, under a general denial, prove that alleged damage was done by others for whose acts he was not responsible.[62]

§ 5. Civil liability for interference with relation by third person.[63]—An employer has a right to a free labor market, that is, the right to engage all persons willing to work for him at such prices as may be mutually agreed upon.[64] Picketing, argument or peaceful persuasion to induce men not to enter the employment of certain employers is legal [65] and will not be enjoined by a court of equity; [66] but ac-

53. Mine superintendent liable where he sent workman down into shaft known to be unsafe and injury resulting from cage sticking and then suddenly dropping. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643. Where the servant is guilty of misfeasance, he, as well as the master, is liable for injuries resulting therefrom to third persons or to other servants. Inspectors charged with more than mere nonfeasance; hence they were personally liable. Ward v. Pullman Car Corp. [Ky.] 114 SW 754.

54. Distinctions discussed. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasng Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643. There is a conflict of authority as to the personal liability of a servant guilty only of nonfeasance, and also as to what is nonfeasance. See Ward v. Pullman Car Corp. [Ky.] 114 SW 754, and cases there cited.

55. Thus concurring negligence of another would not relieve mine superintendent whose wrongful act caused injury to plaintiff. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643.

56. Complaint alleging injuries resulting from carelessness and recklessness of chauffeur furnished plaintiff by defendant to repair and run automobile held to state cause of action, though it did not allege agreement to pay for chauffeur's services. Gresh v. Wanamaker, 221 Pa. 28, 69 A 1123.

57. Allegation that defendant did certain wrongful acts "by his servant" held sufficient to show servant was acting within the scope of his employment. Ploof v. Putnam [Vt.] 71 A 188. Complaint held to properly allege that servant was engaged in business of master when he negligently drove team into plaintiff. American Bolt Co. v. Fennell [Ala.] 48 S 97. In pleading, the plaintiff must allege that defendant committed the act, or allege facts from which the conclusion arises that the wrongful act of the servant of the defendant was an act within the scope of his employment and done in the prosecution of the business of the defendant. Klugman v. Sanitary Laundry Co., 141 Ill. App. 422. Petition alleging negligent driving of dray by defendant's servant, resulting in collision and injury to petitioner, held to state cause of action as against objection that it showed willful injury for which defendant would not be liable, under Civ. Code, § 3031. Toole Furniture Co. v. Ellis [Ga. App.] 63 SE 55.

58. Burden is upon plaintiff to show relation of master and servant between defendant and person alleged to have been guilty of negligence or wrongdoing. Burns v. Michigan Paint Co., 152 Mich. 613, 15 Det. Leg. N. 201, 116 NW 182. The burden is upon the plaintiff to show that act charged was within the scope of the employment. A judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto should be given where the only evidence of defendant's liability for killing of child by his chauffeur was that he owned the automobile. Sarver v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 69. Whether servant's act is within scope of his authority and in furtherance of master's business is not for jury unless evidence gives rise to some inference or permits such conclusion. Miller v. Wanamaker, 111 NYS 786. Where destruction of property by fire wrongfully set out by defendant is alleged, and evidence showed fire to have been set by an employe of defendant, it was error to exclude evidence that he was at time engaged in furtherance of defendant's business. Gibson v. Wood Lumber Co., 91 Miss. 702, 45 S 834.

59. Evidence sufficient to show negligence of defendant's servant in loading wagon cause of runaway which resulted in plaintiff's injuries. Johnson v. Stevens, 123 App. Div. 208, 108 NYS 407.

60. Where complaint alleged deliberate and intentional shooting of plaintiff by defendant's watchman, there could be no recovery on ground of negligent discharge of pistol. Biggins v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 561.

61. Robinson v. Denver City Tramway Co. [C. C. A.] 164 F 174.

tion amounting to intimidation is unlawful,[67] and such conduct will be enjoined [68] though it constitutes a crime.[69] The imposition by a labor union of a coercive fine upon members for entering or remaining in the employment of a certain employer, or the threat to impose such fine, is held a violation of the employer's rights,[70] and the fact that the fine is imposed or threatened in accordance with rules of the union is no defense.[71] Third persons are answerable for keeping a man out of employment when the means employed are unlawful,[72] such as threats of violence,[73] threats of strikes of such character as to influence a person of reasonable firmness and prudence, and the exaction of fines from the employer.[74] The damages are generally what the employe would have earned had he been allowed to work,[75] and for willful and malicious acts damages may be recovered for mental suffering.[76] One who procures the discharge of an employe is liable in damages,[77] and exemplary damages are recoverable if the act is malicious.[78] There is a right of action for purposely and maliciously preventing performance of a contract,[79] but a complaint based on such cause must allege defendant's knowledge of the contract in question.[80] An allegation that the interference was malicious is not equivalent to an allegation of knowledge.[81] In some states, statutes provide for the recovery of penalties and damages for interference with employes of another.[82]

66. Equity will not enjoin employes who have quit the service of their employer from attempting to persuade, by proper argument, others from taking their places so long as they do not resort to intimidation or obstruct the public thoroughfares. Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Works [Ga.] 62 SE 236.

67. Threats, violence, massing of large number of pickets where nonunion men must pass, held intimidation. Goldfield Consol. Mines Co. Goldfield Miners' Union No. 220, 159 F 500. It is unlawful for any person or association to interfere with the business of another by means of force, menaces, or intimidation so as to prevent others from entering or remaining in the employment of another. Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Works [Ga.] 62 SE 236. An interference with employer's rights by intimidation or coercion produced by injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, is unlawful. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Bricklayers' Benevolent & Protective Union No. 3 [Mass.] 85 NE 897.

68. Maintenance of pickets enjoined when they resorted to threats and intimidation. Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Works [Ga.] 62 SE 236. Complaint alleging conspiracy by members of labor union and interference with plaintiff's business held too vague and general to warrant issuance of temporary injunction against picketing, threatening workmen, etc. Badger Brass Mfg. Co. v. Daly [Wis.] 119 NW 328.

69. Pen. Code, § 123 et seq., make it a crime to attempt by threats, etc., to prevent any person from entering service or employing laborers. Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Works [Ga.] 62 SE 236.

70. Strike was called for lawful purpose, higher wages and shorter day, and persons entering or remaining in plaintiff's employment were threatened with $100 fine. Injunction was granted restraining and enjoining defendants, their agents or servants from intimidating, by the imposition of a fine or by threat of such fine, any person or persons from entering into the employ of plaintiff or remaining therein, or from in any way being a party or privy to the imposition of any fine, or threat of such imposition upon any person desiring to enter into or remain in the employ of plaintiff. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Bricklayers' Benevolent & Protective Union No. 3 [Mass.] 85 NE 897.

§ 6. Crimes and penalties.[See 10 C. L. 810]—It is unlawful for a third person to interfere with employes and induce them to leave their employer's service and not to return, or to induce them not to re-enter service which they have voluntarily left, for the sole purpose of exacting or extorting a sum of money from the employer,[83] and where several persons confederate for the accomplishment of such purpose they are guilty of conspiracy at common law.[84] It is not a common-law offense to threaten a person with intent, by intimidating him, to prevent him from working for another.[85] A charge of such conduct under a statute making it an offense must bring it within the statutory terms.[86] Under the Connecticut statute, actual intimidation need not be shown.[87] Decisions under the Alabama,[88] Florida [89] and Georgia [90] statinduces a laborer or tenant to leave his employment or premises before expiration of his contract without consent of employer or landlord. Held, where plaintiff contracted with one who was defendant's tenant in 1905 to work plaintiff's land in 1906, but such person refused to carry out contract or go on plaintiff's land, defendant was not liable for allowing such person to have a different piece of his land from what he had in 1905. Alford v. Pegues [Miss.] 46 S 76.

83. State v. Dalton [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1132.

84. Indictment held to charge an offense, overt acts being alleged, as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 2153. State v. Dalton [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1132.

85, 86. State v. McGee, 80 Conn. 614, 69 A 1059.

87. Under Gen. St. 1902, § 1296, it is sufficient if intimidation was intended and person threatened so understood. State v. McGee, 80 Conn. 614, 69 A 1059.

88. In prosecution under Cr. Code 1896, § 4730, as amended by Acts 1903, p. 345, for obtaining property under written contract for services, and refusal to perform services thereunder, contract was admissible as an entirety, though prosecution was for only portion of amount stated therein. Campbell v. State [Ala.] 46 S 520. Under this statute there can be no conviction without proof of fraudulent intent at time of making contract, regardless of such intent which might be thereafter formed. Id. To come within statute, sole consideration moving from employe to employer must be performance of personal services by him and none other, and when employe undertakes other things in addition to his own services to secure advances, such as having his wife move on employer's place and cultivate crop on shares, statute does not apply. Harris v. State [Ala.] 47 S 340.

89. Under Laws 1907, p. 182, c. 5678, § 1, making it crime to procure money or other thing of value by contracting to perform services with intent not to perform them, there must be an intent not to perform at time contract is made to sustain conviction. Thompson v. State [Fla.] 47 S 816.

90. Under Pen. Code 1895, § 122, one may be charged and convicted of an attempt to entice away the servant, cropper or farm laborer of another, though the attempt is not successful and the servant, cropper or laborer does not actually leave the service of his employer. Bright v. State [Ga. App.] 61 SE 289. One accused of enticing, persuading or decoying may also, where evidence warrants, be convicted of the attempt, under Pen. Code 1895, § 1035. Id. Evidence sufficient to sustain conviction. Id. Acts 1901, p. 63, as amended by Acts 1903, p. 91, prescribing penalties against one who shall employ the tenant, cropper or farm laborer of another, is drastic, in derogation of common law, and to be strictly construed. Orr v. Hardin [Ga. App.] 61 SE 518. Plaintiff in suit to recover penalty under this statute must, to authorize recovery, allege and prove a written contract or parol contract partly performed, made in the presence of one or more witnesses. Id. Verdict for defendant demanded where cropper contract proved did not specify year of performance, nor time of beginning or end of contract, nor the land to which it related. Id. Laws 1903, p. 90, which makes criminal the procurement of money upon a fraudulent contract to perform service, and the fraudulent abandonment of a contract after having so procured money, is not a violation of federal statutes prohibiting peonage. U. S. Rev. St. §§ 1990, 5526. Young v. State [Ga. App.] 62 SE 558. The purpose of the Georgia act is not to create a remedy for collection of debt, but to provide punishment for fraudulent and successful intent to cheat and defraud. Id. Accusation under Laws 1903, p. 90, may embrace in single count various sums of money fraudulently procured at different times, the various sums making up the aggregate sum charged to have been procured. Such count includes but one offense. Id. In prosecution under Acts 1903, p. 90, proof that one company furnished certain goods to defendant will not support an allegation that defendant procured from a certain other company valuable merchandise and supplies. Jackson v. State [Ga. App.] 61 SE 862. Where accusation alleges that defendant was laborer, he cannot be convicted by proof of contract showing a rental agreement. Id. Contraot construed as in nature of rental, and not contract of hire. Id. In prosecutions under Acts 1903, p. 90, which makes penal certain fraudulent practices in connection with contracts for labor, state must allege and prove that defendant, without good and sufficient cause, failed to perform his contract or repay advances obtained. Mobley v. State [Ga. App.] 60 SE 803. Evidence insufficient to sustain conviction which affirmatively showed that accused had no fraudulent intent. Thompson v. State [Ga. App.] 62 SE 568. Evidence sufficient to sustain conviction for fraudulently obtaining advances on contract for services as farm laborer and failing to perform work or return advances. Variance between contract as pleaded and proved, immaterial. Brawner v. State [Ga. App.] 63 SE 514. Contract providing that employe is to "work a month," but without any agreement as to when his employment is to begin or end, is too vague and indefinite to form basis of prosecution, since term of employment may not have commenced and employe may still have right to repay advances. Starling v. State [Ga. App.] 62 SE 993. Allegation that defendant contracted to work as farm laborer for 10 days at 50 cents per day wages and his food is too vague and indefinite, no time of beginning or ending of service being shown. James v. State [Ga. App.] 63 SE 143. Contract made on Sunday is void and will not support prosecution unless there has been novation on secular day. Bendross v. State [Ga. App.] 62 SE 728.

utes making it an offense to procure advances under a contract for services with intent to defraud, under the Arkansas act prohibiting interference with employes of another,[91] under the Indiana mine's act,[92] under the New York child labor law,[93] under the New Jersey factory inspection law,[94] under the Wyoming act prohibiting certain conduct of miners,[95] and in actions to recover penalties for violations of the federal safety appliance act,[96] are given in the note.

91. Kirby's Dig. § 5030, as amended (Acts 1905, p. 726), making criminal act of enticing away servant employed by another, does not make punishable mere employment of one who has left prior service, and is valid. Tucker v. State [Ark.] 111 SW 275. Statute applies to interference with contract of minor under 15, though contract is not approved by guardian or parent as required by § 5023, since contract is voidable only by minor and stands so long as he remains in service. Id.

92. Acts 1907, p. 193, c. 121, § 1, requiring "owner, operator, lessee, superintendent or other person in charge" of coal mine or colliery, or place where conditions are similar, to provide wash houses when requested in writing by certain number of employes, imposes this duty upon the person in charge of the mine, whatever his title or office or relation to or interest in the mine. Hewitt v. State [Ind.] 86 NE 63. Affidavit charging violation of act held insufficient because not directly alleging that defendant was superintendent or person in charge. Essential facts must be directly alleged. Id.

93. In prosecution under Laws 1903, p. 437, c. 184, § 70, against factory superintendent for allowing child between 14 and 16 to be employed without employment certificate, fact that child was employed without defendant's knowledge or consent is no defense, statute imposing absolute duty. People v. Taylor, 124 App. Div. 434, 108 NYS 796.

94. Action for penalty for hindering and obstructing inspectors of labor department under Act 1904, § 26, P. L. 160. Evidence showed inspectors found office door locked, were told to go to gateman, went to him, showed authority, and were refused admittance. Held, gateman's act was prima facie that of his employer. Error to direct verdict for defendant. Bryant v. Graves Co. [N. J. Law] 71 A 60.

95. Under statute making it unlawful for coal miner to enter any place in mine against caution, or to disobey orders, or to do any act by which lives or health of persons or security of mine is endangered, intent to injure person or property is not essential to constitute the crime. Koppala v. State [Wyo.] 93 P 662. "Caution" as used in statute means to warn or give notice of danger. Id. Indictment charging miner with going to place in mine against caution, etc., sufficient, being in language of statute. Id.

96. Safety appliance acts are constitutional. United States v. Southern R. Co., 164 F 347. Acts apply to all railroads engaged in interstate business. Id. Acts of congress on subject, exclusive. Id. Under the federal automatic coupler act, a railroad company is liable to the penalty for using cars in interstate business which are not equipped with automatic couplers in good condition at both ends of each car. Good coupler at one end not enough. United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 160 F 696. Each car must be equipped with automatic couplers. Unites States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 162 F 775. Diligence in inspection is immaterial. Company is liable if couplers are defective and defects are not discovered before cars are used. United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 160 F 696. New trial in above case denied. Instructions proper. United States v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 162 F 408. The safety appliance act in the situations in which it is applicable imposes upon a railway company an absolute duty to maintain the prescribed coupling appliances in operative condition, and is not satisfied by the exercise of reasonable care to that end. United States v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 163 F 517. Same holding. New trial denied. United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 162 F 410. It is duty of railroad companies to know whether their cars or trains are properly equipped. If they are not, they are liable to penalties for each offense. United States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 162 F 775. Defects must be at once repaired when discovered or as soon as reasonably possible if means of repair are not at hand, and cars may be taken to nearest point for repairs. Id. Immaterial that cars hauled belong to another company if they are not equipped as required by the act. Id. In an action to enforce the penalty, the government need not prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt, but must make it out by evidence which is clear and satisfactory. United States v. Philadelphia & R. Co., 160 F 696. Government must prove its case clearly and satisfactorily by the greater weight of credible evidence. United States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 162 F 775. Complaint to recover penalty under safety appliance act for hauling cars with defective couplers, held not demurrable for failure to negative matter of exception created by proviso to § 6, amended by 32 Stat. 943; nor because it showed only one coupler to be defective and that it was so only because coupling chain was "kinked;" nor because it did not exercise reasonable care by company to keep couplers in operative condition; nor because it failed to show length of haul, or any actual use of coupler, though it alleged that car was hauled. United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 163 F 519.

MASTERS AND COMMISSIONERS.

The scope of this topic is noted below.[97]

§ 1. Office, eligibility, appointment, and compensation.[98]—See 10 C. L. 812—The office of clerk and master of a chancery court is of a judicial character,[98a] and acts performed by the clerk in the capacity of master are those of a judicial officer;[99] hence, where the chancellor is disqualified in a case, the clerk as master, and his deputy acting in the chancellor's stead, are likewise disqualified.[1] Where the power to appoint a commissioner is vested in a court by the constitution, it is immaterial that the legislature has apparently attempted to take that power away.[2]

An order of reference should be definite,[3] and the appointment of a special master commissioner for the sale of specific property, together with the special reason or reasons why the sale should not be made by the sheriff of the county, should be embodied in and made part of the judgment, order or decree ordering the sale.[4]

A master is entitled to a fair and just remuneration for the time necessarily and properly spent,[5] but the fees are not necessarily to be determined in accordance with judicial salaries paid in the state, but should be reasonable in view of the services rendered,[6] and a wide discretion is vested in the court by statute in fixing them,[7] and its judgment in the premises should not be disturbed except where there has been a clear abuse of discretion.[8] The fees must be assessed against such parties as are designated by statute,[9] and a claim must show the time necessarily employed in the

3. Order in which person named was called "court commissioner and later referred to as said court commissioner" held not void for indefiniteness as not showing whether reference was to person named as referee or as court commissioner. Howard v. Hanson, 49 Wash. 314, 95 P 265.

4. Augustus v. Lynd, 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 473.

5. Manowsky v. Stephan, 233 Ill. 409, 84 NE 365. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 53, § 20, $50 held ample for hearing argument, preparing report, and passing on objections, where some 4 days were spent, but in reporting and overruling objections, more was done than law required in writing. Id. Fifteen cents per folio for taking 825 folios of testimony not exorbitant. Id.

6. Fees to be fixed in accordance with services, amount involved, and ability and standing of commissioner. Weltner v. Thurmond [Wyo.] 98 P 601. Rev. St. 1899, § 4541, allowing commissioner $5 a day for time taxed as cost, under § 4537, not applicable to compensation of master commissioner appointed in equity case to take evidence and report conclusions of fact and law, and whose compensation is taxable as costs under § 3335. Id. Five hundred dollars in case involving $36,000 held not excessive for taking testimony for two days and later writing an exhaustive opinion covering essential points of case. Id.

8. Fee of $500 to commissioner appointed to take testimony and make findings of fact in case involving $36,000, who occupied 2 days in taking testimony and later wrote exhaustive opinion, held not excessive. Rev. St. 1899, § 3335. Id.

9. Under Mechanics' Lien Act of 1895, § 11, examination of questions of law and fact, and in preparing report of findings and conclusions.[10] An order of dismissal "without costs" does not affect the master's right to his fees, even though the order be consented to by the defendants,[11] and no agreement of the parties to which the master did not assent, can affect the latter's right to enforce his claim for fees against such parties as are legally liable therefor.[12]

§ 2. Powers and duties in general and subjects of reference.[13] See 10 C. L. 812 Under statute in Maine, a disclosure commissioner for a particular county has jurisdiction when holding his court in any other than the shire town of his county over persons of such debtors only as reside in said town, or of debtors whose creditors or attorney's reside therein,[13a] and where such commissioner acts without his jurisdiction, he renders himself liable for all acts done without those limits and wholly outside of his powers and duties.[14]

Voluminous and complicated accounts may properly be referred to a master for statement,[15] and should be so referred,[16] unless for particular reasons a reference becomes unnecessary,[17] but where the matter of stating an account is not complicated, it is within the discretion of the chancellor to refuse the same.[18] Usually the legislature has power to confer upon court commissioners powers in addition to those specifically enumerated in the constitution,[18a] and a court by a proper order may authorize a master commissioner to institute proceedings to enforce a liability for refusal of a purchaser, of land sold to enforce a vendor's lien, to execute a bond for the amount bid,[19] but in the absence of such authority the commissioner has no such power.[20] Whether a particular issue is one for the master depends largely upon the facts in the case at hand.[21] Where there is conflict in the evidence as to the location costs controlled by statute and not within discretion of court, hence order assessing half of master's fees on party whose interest was owner of right of dower and who had no beneficial interest in premises held erroneous. Strook v. Jamieson, 139 Ill. App. 339.

10. Claim for "hearing arguments and examining questions in issue and reporting conclusions thereon" held improperly allowed, not showing time necessarily employed. Wirbicky v. Danicki, 235 Ill. 106, 85 NE 396. Assurances in briefs that chancellor regarded charge as very reasonable held without significance. Id.

13a. Statutes considered and commissioners held to be without jurisdiction over debtor's person, neither debtor, creditor, nor his attorney residing in Fairfield where court was held. Stuart v. Chapman [Me.] 70 A 1069.

14. Stuart v. Chapman [Me.] 70 A 1069. Commissioner, refusing debtor benefit of oath provided by Rev. St. 1903, c. 114, § 55, indorsing upon execution certificate required by § 38, and who annexes to execution capias required by § 38, whereupon debtor is arrested and committed to jail, held liable for false imprisonment. 17. In proceeding for settlement of partnership accounts where case was submitted on exceptions to certain depositions and for hearing and trial in chief, court without any argument between counsel could take up and pass upon controversy relating to certain items without referring them to a commission. Boreing v. Wilson, 33 Ky. L. R. 14, 108 SW 914.

18. Account not being complicated, not error to refuse to refer cause to master. Laughlin v. Brauer, 138 Ill. App. 524.

18a. Subject to restrictions that powers must be connected with administration of justice, legislature held authorized to add powers. Howard v. Hanson, 49 Wash. 314, 95 P 265. Court commissioners under Const. art. 4, § 23, and Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4729 (Pierce's Code, § 4390), held empowered to hear proceeding to determine whether judgment debtor had any property subject to execution, and to compel attendance of witnesses in hearing of matters. 21. In suit to restrain action for renting of sawmill and compel specific performance of agreement to sell, whether defendant extended contract of renting by acquiescence so as to entitle plaintiff to purchase mill according to stipulation in contract held, under evidence, question for master. Felton v. Chillis [Vt.] 69 A 149. Auditor appointed to settle account of trustee of an estate and report distribution cannot pass on claim by an executor of one of distributees under a mortgage, against an assignee of a distribuand identity of monuments called for in a patent, the location of a disputed boundary line as a question of fact may properly be referred,[22] but issues should not be referred where the allegation of the complaint show that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law,[23] nor can a suit in chancery properly be referred to a master for the purpose of taking testimony therein before all the issues are properly made up.[24] It is the master's duty to find the facts and not to determine whether any and what relief shall be given.[25] A master commissioner in the exercise of his sound discretion may resell land without reporting to the court the bid of an insolvent purchaser at a prior sale, who failed to execute a bond to secure his bid.[26] The issuance of a master's deed, pursuant to a certificate issued as a result of proceedings to foreclose a mortgage where appellants did not appear and answer, will not be restrained in the absence of a showing of a meritorious defense to the action in which the decree was rendered.[27]

§ 3. Proceedings on reference and hearing by master.[28]—See 10 C. L. 813—A master should arrive at his conclusions from his own investigation,[28a] but parties having invited another method which is adopted are not in a position to complain.[29] The time for the reception of evidence is largely within the discretion of the master,[30] as is also the question whether a case shall be reopened and additional evidence be introduced the next day after both parties have announced their conclusion of testimony.[31] He is at liberty to disbelieve testimony given before him,[32] but he cannot willfully or from mere caprice disregard the testimony of an unimpeached witness.[33] Where a master in an accounting complies with the decree, it is immaterial that he does not annex to his report and finding any account with items,[34] or that he makes a mistake in the net worth where such error is not prejudicial.[35] In proceeding on accounting between partners, the partnership ledgers kept by bookkeepers are competent original evidence.[36] A master upon petitioning that defendants be decreed to pay him his fees in the case where a suit is dismissed upon complainant's motion ceases to be merely an agency of the court and becomes an independent and interested party in the matter.[37] Since a writ of prohibition only lies to a court, and probably

37. Strook v. Jamieson, 139 Ill. App. 339. Where master obtains order for certain fees earned in a proceeding which was dismissed, appeal will lie therefrom and is properly en-in some exceptional cases to a judge at chambers, it will not run against a receiver, commissioners and master appointed by the court.[38]

§ 4. Report of master, exceptions and objections.[39]—See 10 C. L. 813—The law does not contemplate the preparation by the master of an opinion in the case,[39a] and reasons for findings are not properly a part of the report.[40] It is not material that the report does not appear to have been formally confirmed though that is the regular procedure.[41] An error in a master's report may be cured by acts before the decree approving the report is passed,[42] and if erroneous in the amount of costs paid, the party aggrieved should ask the court below for a retaxation.[43] Defect, if any, in the report, in that it does not contain all the documentary proofs, is cured by the introduction of such evidence in open court.[44] A master while a matter is still pending before him and before his report is signed may properly include in his report a statement to the effect that since the taking of the testimony and the drafting of his report a certain admission has been made by one of the parties to the litigation,[45] and the admission need not be reported in the exact words.[46] In passing upon objections after hearing argument and reaching a decision, a master need only make a brief, written statement that the objections are overruled.[47] Findings must not be inconsistent with recommendations,[48] but must correctly apply the law [49] and must be supported by the evidence.[50] Findings of conclusions of law may be harmless.[51] Under Schlicher v. Whyte [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 337. Evidence held to sustain findings that "fertilizer was up to guaranteed analysis," etc. Braxton v. Liddon [Fla.] 46 S 324.

51. Master's finding in suit to enforce mechanic's lien that, except claims for latent statute in some states, exceptions may be allowed to a master's report where the master improperly admitted or excluded testimony, or for any other cause which may be adjudged by the court or where it is apparent from the report that injustice has been done,[52] and an exception to a master's ruling that the plaintiff was entitled to no relief is well taken being a conclusion of law,[53] but where all the facts are reported by the master, the exception to such ruling is immaterial.[54] Exceptions based upon the alleged state of the evidence are properly overruled where the evidence is not reported and the facts upon which they are respectively based are not set out in the report,[55] or where the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting and the party excepting had the burden of proof.[56] An exception to the report because of the reception of oral testimony to show the appointment of an administrator is without force where the report does not show that any objection was made to the testimony,[57] and where the master finds solely from the report of commissioners for the allowance of claims against an estate that there is due from the estate a certain amount on a note, an exception to the report because of the reception in evidence of the note itself and the indorsements thereon is without force,[58] and the fact that the findings do not show who made the endorsement is also without force since the allowance of the note by the commissioners was equivalent to a judgment and merged the original claim.[59] Where a special order was made in a case on notice in regard to the signing of testimony on reference to a master, and that order has not been appealed from exceptions to the testimony on the ground that it had not been read over or signed by the witnesses, will not be considered well founded on exceptions to the report.[60] Where the evidence excepted to refers only to immaterial issues, the failure to require the master to report the evidence is not error,[61] and where the exceptant was not aggrieved by the failure of the master to report on a matter as directed, his exceptions on that account will be overruled.[62] One having informed the master that he did not desire a finding upon a particular question is not in a position to complain because the master left the question undecided.[63] By failure to take exceptions, a party is deemed to have accepted a master's report,[64] and the master's finding is conclusive upon the parties as to all questions wherein the finding is not excepted to,[65] and although a party duly excepts to a report where the evidence is not reported, he is concluded by the master's findings of fact.[66]

statutory provisions to the same effect,[67a] a master's findings of fact are only prima facie correct [68] and only advisory to the lower or appellate court where the evidence accompanies the report.[69] Although it has been held to the contrary,[70] they are not of the same dignity or binding force as are verdicts; [71] but although entitled to great weight,[72] the court, if dissatisfied, may set them aside on exception and adopt his conclusion as to what the evidence proves,[73] but they should be sustained unless the court is satisfied from the evidence that they are clearly erroneous,[74] since the legal presumption is in their favor [75] when made by the "consent" [76] of the parties and concurred in by the court,[77] and that the master in making them and reporting the testimony discharged his duty.[78] The court may make additional findings of fact from the master's reports of findings without hearing further evidence,[79] and where exceptions to the report raise inferences of fact to be drawn from the facts found by the master, the court which has to deal with those exceptions may draw inferences of fact from the facts found.[80] The rejection of a master's affirmative finding in a particular case may not affect the maker's report.[81] Findings of fact by a master will be affirmed as against general exceptions which do not point out any evidence to impeach the same,[82] and they will not be impeached in the absence from the record of his certificate or other competent proof either that the evidence presented is the entire evidence taken by him, or that it contains all the evidence which was before him relative to the specific findings challenged.[83]

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Liens in general,[87] and matters relating to the interpretation and performance of building contracts,[88] are elsewhere treated.

§ 1. Nature of lien and right to it in general.[89] See 10 C. L. 814—A mechanics' lien is usually designated as a statutory privilege,[89a] though in some states the right is guaranteed by the constitution.[90] Lien laws are said to be in derogation of the common law requiring strict compliance with the statute in acquiring the lien,[91] though

App.] 83 NE 1033; Id., 85 NE 523. An action to enforce a lien given for material is not a proceeding quasi in rem, debt being personal liability founded on contract. Rutherford v. Ray, 147 N. C. 253, 61 SE 57. Personal judgments may be rendered. See post § 10D, Judgments.

94. Act June 4, 1901, § 46 (P. L. 452), providing that in enforcement of mechanic's liens where property is essential to business of public service corporation, claimant shall have execution thereon as in cases of judgment against other corporations, provides for a remedy in personam (under special writ of fieri facias provided by Act Apr. 7, 1870, P. L. 58), and is special legislation and inoperative. Vulcanite Pav. Co. v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 220 Pa. 603, 69 A 1117. Ordinary process of enforcement of mechanic's lien by levari facias, in rem. Id. Method of enforcing being inoperative, lien must fail. Id. A statute giving right to pursue person indebted in attachment is invalid. Vulcanite Portland Cement Co. v. Allison Co., 220 Pa. 382, 69 A 855; Trexler v. Kuntz, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 352. Provisions of Mechanic's Lien Law (Act June 4, 1901) § 28 (P. L. 445), giving subcontractor right to issue attachment execution against owner or other party indebted to contractor is special legislation, violative of Const. art. 3, § 7, forbidding General Assembly from passing law changing methods of collection of debts or enforcing of judgments. 95a. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1048; Id. [Ind.] 86 NE 837. Claim for rental of scrapers neither "labor performed" or "materials furnished" within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5902 (Pierce's Code, § 6104), giving lien for grading of street at owner's request. Hall v. Cowen [Wash.] 98 P 670. No lien per lumber used in construction of benches not part of building. Beck Coal & Lumber Co. v. Peterson Mfg. Co., 237 Ill. 250, 86 NE 715. No lien for plate rail never delivered on premises or used in construction of building. Ashford v. Iowa & Minnesota Lumber Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 272. Finding that certain materials not used in building sustained by evidence, though conflicting. Meyer v. Schmidt, 131 Mo. App. 53, 109 SW 833. Under Mechanic's Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418, § 2), lien for repairs is authorized. Aetna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 57 Misc. 632, 108 NYS 718. Under Act Mch. 2, 1899 (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 282) accepting provisions of "Carey Act" (Act Cong. June 11, 1896, c. 420, 29 Stat. 434, 6 Fed. St. Ann. p. 398 [U. S. Comp. St. 1891, p. 1556], supplementary to act Aug. 4, 1894, c. 208, 28 Stat. 226, 6 Fed. St. Ann. pp. 396-398 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1552] Act Aug. 18, 1894, c. 301, 28 Stat. 422 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1554]), lien is granted for construction of canals and reclamation works for irrigation of arid lands. Nelson Bennett Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 14 Idaho, 5, 93 P 789.

Labor performed: Lien for services in superintendence held proper. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aytec Gold Min. & Mill Co. [N. M.] 93 P 706. Where men made improvements on mining claim at certain sum per day and board, cook was entitled to mechanic's lien for wages. Casaden v. Wimbish [C. C. A.] 161 F 241. Work done in cleaning up and washing gold is "labor done upon claim" within Alaska Civ. Code, § 262, giving laborer's lien. Id. Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8295, giving mechanic's lien for labor performed on structure, authorizes lien for value of labor performed in operating trench machine, including work done by machine. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind.] 86 NE 837, afg. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 725, 85 NE 1048. Mere leasing of machine not performance of labor within statute. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind.] 86 NE 837.

Fixtures: Machinery for which mechanic's lien given under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8295, must be so attached to realty as to become fixture, must be fairly contemplated by contract and title pass to owner. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind.] 86 NE 837, afg. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 725, 85 NE 1048. Use of trench machine or other tools, or of private railroad switch not basis for lien. Potter or for money loaned [97] is excluded. The furnishing of materials necessarily involves the question of delivery [98] which some statutes require to be to the owner or his agent.[99]

§ 3. Properties and estates therein which may be subjected to the lien.[1]—See 10 C. L. 815—Property the subject of improvement should be charged with payment therefor,[1a] and a lien may not be had upon one structure for labor and materials entering into another structure,[2] although a joint lien may be had upon a number of structures.[3] Statutory provisions designate the area to which the lien attaches as a "lot,"[4] and generally the lien attaches to the extent of the statutory limit,[5] though

Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind.] 86 NE 837. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8295, mechanic's lien on waterworks system for brick buckets, blacksmithing work and charges for railroad switching privileges are not authorized. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 725. Railroad switch not "machine" for construction of waterworks within statute giving liens to persons furnishing machinery. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1048. Under Mechanic's Lien Law, § 1, as amended in 1903 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 82, § 15), giving lien to person who shall "furnish materials, fixtures, apparatus or machinery," etc., and § 7 (§ 21) providing that no lien be defeated for lack of proof that material was used in improvement, "fixtures, apparatus and machinery" must be shown to be used in such manner to be attached to or form part of real estate. R. Haas Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co., 236 Ill. 452, 86 NE 248. Item for street car tickets and meals for superintendent improperly included in amount of lien. Id. Item of carboys to be returned improperly included in amount of lien. Id. Under Mechanic's Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3), giving lien for improvements to real estate, § 2 (p. 515), defining improvement, and § 22 (p. 525), authorizing liberal construction, machinery used for fitting up empty building as manufacturing establishment, though largely secondhand, entitled contractor to lien, the machinery having been bought for that purpose and by labor empty building was changed to manufactory. Griffin v. Ernst, 124 App. Div. 289, 108 NYS 816. Under Lien Law (Laws 1897, pp. 518, 520, 522, §§ 9, 12, 17), a lien upon real estate for materials not yet furnished is authorized. Goss v. Williams Engineering Co., 57 Misc. 78, 108 NYS 862. Cases, shelves, lockers, etc., without which building could not be used for library purposes, improvement of realty protected by lien. Rieser v. Commeau, 114 NYS 154. Insertion of electric wires in building so as to indicate intention to make them fixtures makes them subject of lien. B. & C. Comp. § 5640. Rowen v. Alladio [Or.] 93 P 929.

96. Lien can only embrace labor and materials furnished. Deeds v. Imperial Brick Co., 219 Pa. 579, 69 A 78. Where plaintiffs were to receive 10 per cent. for superintendence based on cost of plant being erected and were dismissed before completion, instruction that if plaintiffs were dismissed without justification they were entitled to verdict for full amount was erroneous. Id.

97. Uvalde Asphalt Pav. Co. v. New York, 191 N. Y. 244, 84 NE 83. Item for money advanced contractor by virtue of friendship not protected by lien. Lunsford v. Wren [W. Va.] 63 SE 308. Where plaintiff purchased lumber from employer for wages and cash and furnished to defendants for building house, he was entitled to lien, evidence being insufficient to show transaction a loan. Poplella v. Zolawenski [Wash.] 97 P 972.

98. Lien not invalid because materials delivered f. o. b. in another state, since furnishing of materials for building entitles contractor to lien. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [N. M.] 93 P 706. Finding of delivery to contractor before abandonment of work sustained by evidence. Pine Bluff Lodge of Elks No. 149 v. Sanders [Ark.] 111 SW 255. Evidence sufficient to show delivery and use of material. Barnes v. Colorado Springs, etc., R. Co., 42 Colo. 461, 94 P 570.

99. Under Mechanic's Lien Law 1903, p. 233, § 7, unloading lumber at or near premises is not sufficient delivery since the delivery must be "to the owner or his agent." Francis Beidler & Co. v. Hutchinson, 233 Ill. 192, 84 NE 228. Where lumber rejected as not properly dressed and subsequently left at premises but not inspected or accepted by contractor, delivery was insufficient. Id.; rvg. 1a. Under theory of Lien System (Civ. Code 1896, c. 71, art. 1), subject of improvement shall be charged with payment therefor to extent in interest and area defined by § 2723. Crawford v. Sterling [Ala.] 46 S 849. In improvement of real estate there are as many separate liens as there are separate lots in area described in statute, except where building as unit rests on two lots. Id. Lien acquired on whole lot, though subsequently divided, where labor and materials expended on building under contract. Davidson v. Stewart, 200 Mass. 393, 86 NE 779.

2. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe [Ind. App.] 85 NE 722.

3. When built or repaired under single contract. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe [Ind. App.] 85 NE 722.

4. Under Comp. Laws, § 10,710, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 21, No. 17, limiting area to which mechanic's lien attaches to "lot" etc., term "lot or lots" refers to surveyed lots conforming to plat. Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 795, 117 NW 932.

whether the lien shall attach to all or part of the land within the maximum quantity is a question of fact.[6] Elsewhere, the area of land subject to lien may depend upon the character of the improvement.[7] The entire title or interest of an employer in the construction of reclamation works of arid lands may be subject to the lien,[8] as well as the property of a married woman [9] or a railroad,[10] but a mechanics' lien cannot be asserted against a church building,[11] or the property of an infant.[12] In some states the fund due a public contractor is subject to a lien for labor and materials furnished him,[13] but generally a lien for materials for a municipality,[14] state,[15] school district,[16] or a fund for the construction of school buildings,[17] is not author-

6. Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 795, 117 NW 932. Where owner seeks to have smaller quantity of land held subject to lien, he must present facts and reasons supporting it (Id.), and if seeking an apparent enlargement of statutory quantity of land, he should by averments and proof advance reasons and facts in support of his demand (Id.). Under Comp. Laws § 10, 710, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 21, No. 17, giving lien on tract or lot where structure erected, liens for material and labor used in constructing factory on city lots do not extend to lots not covered or partly covered by building, though covered by mineral deposit suitable for manufacturing purposes, it not appearing that lots as distinguished from deposit were ever treated as part of plant. Id. Evidence that agent told materialmen that corporation owned 91 or 92 lots does not show attempt to fix quantity of land to which lien for material should extend. Id.

7. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 2219, trial court may determine amount of improvement. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [N. M.] 93 P 706. Lien properly held to extend to mine and mill site when title in same parties, use dependent upon each other and both bound together for common purpose. Id.

8. Under act March 2, 1899 (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 282) accepting provisions of federal "Carey Act" and acts supplemental thereto, lien given in construction of reclamation works of arid lands extends to all lands which may be irrigated, to full extent of price per acre for which employer agrees to sell water rights and lienors under such employer are entitled to benefit of lien laws to secure payment to full extent of title or interest of employer having contract from state. Nelson Bennett Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 14 Idaho, 5, 93 P 789. Property rights in reclamation are real estate. Id. Claim must be commensurate with but cannot exceed rights of employer. Id.

9. Must conform to statute. Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club [Ky.] 113 SW 814. Petition held insufficient to charge real estate with lien when lessor married woman and no allegation that debt contracted on "account of necessaries" or "evidenced by writing signed by her." Gen. St. 1888, c. 52, art. 11, § 2. Id. Under Local & Private Acts 1871, p. 4, c. 1073, applicable to Fayette County alone, mechanics' lien is given where material furnished pursuant to contract with married woman, but such law inapplicable where furnished pursuant to contract with lessee of married woman. 12. Logan Planing Mill Co. v. Aldridge, 63 W. Va. 660, 60 SE 783. Use of lumber in construction of house on infant's land gives no lien enforcible in equity. Id. Where court authorized guardian to build house on land of infant from proceeds of sale of infant's other land in suit brought by guardian under Code 1889, c. 83, § 7 (Code 1906, § 3234), such order would not authorize mechanic's lien on land where house built for lumber furnished. 16. No right to mechanic's lien upon property of school district. R. Connor Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 136 Wis. 13, 115 NW 811. Lien under Mechanic's Lien Law, c. 71, art. 1 (Civ. Code 1896, §§ 2723-2752), against a building erected by a city for a school, is unenforcible. Scruggs v. Decatur [Ala.] 46 S 989. Exempt from execution. Civ. Code 1896, § 2040. Id.

17. Mechanic's lien against school erected by city unenforcible against fund set apart by city for construction of school building. Civ. Code 1896, § 2040, exempting property of municipality from levy and sale. Scruggs v. Decatur [Ala.] 46 S 989.

ized. A lien upon homestead property in excess of the exemption is permitted.[18] Lien for labor may attach and be enforced against a leasehold estate,[19] but the availability of a lessor's or vendor's interest usually involves the question of consent.[20]

§ 4. The contract supporting the lien and the privity of the landowner therein. A. In general.[21]—See 10 C. L. 817—A mechanics' lien is a creation of law, rather than contract,[21a] and while a contract is usually essential,[22] it does not generally need to be written.[23] In California, contracts in excess of a specified amount must be written and recorded and disregard of the provisions renders the contract void, all labor done and materials furnished being considered as done at the personal instance of the owner, thus giving the materialmen a lien.[24] In Illinois the time of the performance [25] and payment [26] must be specified. The property is generally subjected to a lien by the owner,[27] but the rule does not require the contract to be with the owner of the legal title.[28] In some states the owner must post a notice to avoid a mechanics' lien.[29] Under the statutes, a partnership has been construed as an original contrac-

Written contract unnecessary and use of materials may be shown by parol. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [N. M.] 93 P 706. Under Mechanic's Lien Act of 1903, no distinction is made between oral and written contracts giving right to lien. Stepina v. Conklin Lumber Co., 134 Ill. App. 173.

24. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that failure to file building contract in county recorder's office shall render it "wholly void," is penal in nature. Los Angeles pressed Brick Co. v. Higgins [Cal. App.] 97 P 414. Penal clause of Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, to be construed in connection with rest of section as well as Const. art. 20, § 15, granting mechanic's liens. Id. Penal clause an arbitrary provision not to be extended, and penalty only enforced where substantial failure to comply with statute. Id. Unrecorded contract when over certain amaunt (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183) determinee substantial rights and remains measure of contractor's right of recovery. Id. Failure of lien relegates parties to legal rights. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, failure to record does not affect contract rights or amount of recovery, but only finds from which payments may be paid after lien established. Id. Upon failure to record, obligation of owner is not limited by contract price and penalty is exercise of lien coextensive with value of property. Id. Where failure to conform to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, materialmen are deemed to have furnished labor and materials at request of owners and entitled to lien. Burnett v. Glas [Cal.] 97 P 423; Los Angeles Pressed Brick Co. v. Higgins [Cal. Proc. § 1183, requiring written contract for improvements costing over $1000, inapplicable where carpenter undertook employment at $3.50 per day for indefinite period although total sum exceeded $1000. Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 96 P 788. Finding that specifications were attached to contract when filed sustained on appeal, evidence being conflicting. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152.

25. Contract susceptible of interpretation as to time that "contract be completed on or before one year from date," though not entirely unambiguous. Snitzler v. Filer, 135 Ill. App. 61.

26. Under Mechanic's Lien Act 1895, omission from contract of stipulation as to time for completion, or time for payment, is conclusive against right to lien. Snitzler v. Filer, 135 Ill. App. 61. Evidence insufficient to show that written contract did not contain all of agreement and findings of chancellor affirmed. Vandevoir v. Davidson, 137 Ill. App. 543.

27. Builder construed as part owner of property rendering same subject to lien. Liggett v. Stoops, 132 Mo. App. 218, 111 SW 881.

28. Rev. St. § 4203 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2277), giving lien, does not require contract to be with owner of legal title, but either legal or equitable owner. Westport Lumber Co. v. Harris, 131 Mo. App. 94, 110 SW 609.

29. Mortgagee of mortgage or trustee and cestui que trust of trust deed in nature of tor and hence entitled to a lien,[30] and the right to a lien has been held not to depend upon the material being ordered by the contractor.[31]

Payments and offsets.[32]—In California statutory provisions govern the payment and reservation of a portion of the contract price,[33] and in Arkansas no payments to a contractor are permitted until the labor and material is paid.[34] A partnership is not deprived of a mechanics' lien from the fact that a member of the firm is surety on the building contractor's bond.[35]

(§ 4) B. Contracts by vendors, purchasers, lessors, and lessees.[36]—See 10 C. L. 818 Many jurisdictions provide for a mechanics' lien where property is improved with the consent of the lessor[36a] or his agent,[37] but in some states such consent must be

32. See 10 C. L. 817. The matter of payments largely involves the amount of the lien (see post, § 6), and offsets refer to waiver or loss of the lien (see post, § 8).

33. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, where substantial departure from provisions of payment and reservation of at least 25 per cent of contract price for 35 days, materialmen are entitled to liens as if labor furnished at personal request of owner and no contract. Burnett v. Glas [Cal.] 97 P 423. Upon notice given as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, it is duty of owner to withhold sufficient money due or that may become due to such contractor * * * to answer such claim, etc. Los Angeles Pressed Brick Co. v. Los Angeles Pacific Boulevard & Development Co., 7 Cal. App. 460, 94 P 775.

34. Under Kirby's Dig. 4975, providing that no payment be made to contractor until labor and material paid, owner in action to enforce lien may show payments to contractor wers used to pay for labor and materials. Where a lease does not authorize the lessee to construct improvements, estate of lessor is not liable to mechanics' liens unless lessor consents or agrees to improvements. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Under Mechanics' Lien Law, § 1, as amended in 1903 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 82, § 15), where owner in subletting gave written consent for improvements without limitation, interest of owner was subject to lien for improvement by sublessee. Haas Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co., 236 Ill. 452, 86 NE 248. Under Rev. St. c. 93, material must be furnished pursuant to contract or with consent of owner, and lien may be prevented by written notice that owner will not be responsible. York v. Mathis, 103 Me. 67, 68 A 746. Where owner has knowledge that repairs are necessary and makes no provision for them but is present when they are made by tenant and gives notice that he will not be responsible, consent may be inferred. Id. Consent required by statute to constitute foundation of lien must be something more than mere acquiescence in act of tenant making temporary erections and additions. Id. Under Code Alaska, §§ 262, 263, 265, labor lien extends to and binds interest of owner of mining claim for improvements made thereon under direction of lessee with owner's knowledge, in absence of disclaimer of responsibility. Cascaden v. Wimbish [C. C. A.] 161 F 241. Facts insufficient to show consent of landlord to repairs within Mechanic's Lien Law, § 3 (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418). Aetna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 57 Misc. 632, 108 NYS 718. A mere general consent or requirement on the part of the owner that the lessee make repairs on the premises does not constitute consent within the lien law. Aetna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 125 App. Div. 842, 110 NYS 124. Requirement that plans and specifications be submitted to landlord before consent to improvements in lease is substantial, and complaint failing to allege approval insufficient. Mitchell v. Dunmore Realty Co., 111 NYS 322. No consent of landlord within Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, to render premises subject to lien, where tenant agreed to make repairs in consideration of reduced rent and landlord introduced laborer, and no proof of benefit to premises. Hedlund v. Payne, 60 Misc. 603, 113 NYS 841. Judgment foreclosing lien and directing sale erroneous when no finding that person sought to be charged had any interest in land or authority to locate gas well thereon, or that owner had knowledge of well so located. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe, 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996. Evidence held to show that owner of building and immediate agent authorized tenant to select lighting fixtures, underwritten,[38] or it may be expressed in the lease.[39] Substantial performance of the contract is necessary where the owner is to be held by virtue of consent.[40] Generally a vendee cannot subject the land to a lien as against his vendor [41] in the absence of authority [42] or the existence of agency,[43] though the latter is imformed of the improvement.[44] In some states the lien which has attached to property will follow the land upon the rescission of the executory contract.[45] Where an owner of land is neither vendor nor lessor and not a party to the building contract, the title is not subject to a lien,[46] but in such case the interest of the builder may be subjected to a lien.[47]

(§ 4) C. Subcontractors and materialmen.[48]—See 10 C. L. 613—Mechanics' liens are generally extended by statute to subcontractors [48a] with the limitation that the standing that if they exceeded amount contractor was liable for owner would be responsible for balance. Electric Supply Co. v. Purslow [Iowa] 117 NW 28.

37. Evidence held to show agency and, therefore, lien attaches to property for materials furnished. Beach v. Huntsman [Ind. App.] 83 NE 1033, rvg. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 523. Provision of lease giving tenant right to make improvements and providing for deduction of repairs from rent does not convert lease into building contract and constitute tenant agent of lessor, though property improved. Construing Act. Cong. July 2, 1884, §§ 1, 4 (23 Stat. at L. 64 ch. 143). Langley v. D'Audigne, 31 App. D. C. 409. Board of directors may by mutual understanding establish that one of their number be active agent whose implied consent will establish liability of corporation owner to lien by inference. York v. Mathis, 103 Me. 67, 68 A 746.

38. Under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 1, giving lien where material furnished under contract or with "written" consent of owner, materialman has no lien for work done under contract with lessee with knowledge or verbal consent of owner. Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club [Ky.] 113 SW 814.

39. Statute requires that particular repairs be specifically provided for on lease, or that owner expressly consent to or request repairs, or that, with knowledge of employment and purpose, he acquiesces therein. Aetna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 57 Misc. 632, 108 NYS 718. General covenant by tenant to repair does not constitute consent on part of landlord required by lien law. Id.

40. Mitchell v. Dunmore Realty Co., 111 NYS 322. Rule of substantial performance inapplicable where failure to perform willful. Id. Upon willful refusal to proceed with work, difference between substantial and literal performance is bounded by de minimis. Id. De minimis inapplicable where work undone exceeds $1,200. Id.

41. Where material delivered to vendee for improvement of land, vendor's interest would not become chargeable with lien from fact that plaintiff changed account to include both parties. Belnap v. Condon [Utah] 97 P 111. Where vendor stipulates with vendee for improvement at latter's cost, and contract leases improvement optional, vendor is not bound. Westport Lumber Co. v. Harris, 131 Mo. App. 94, 110 SW 609.

42. Interest of vendor of land in possession of vendee not subject to mechanics' lien unless vendee had express or implied authority to bind vendor or improvement was ratified. Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 1372, giving liens. Belnap v. Condon [Utah] 97 P 111.

43. Where contract requires vendee to improve, he becomes agent of vendor, capable of subjecting whole title to mechanics' liens. Westport Lumber Co. v. Harris, 131 Mo. App. 94, 110 SW 609. Relation of principal and agent may be established by parol evidence. Belnap v. Condon [Utah] 97 P 111.

44. Mere expectation, permission or knowledge and acquiescence in an improvement is insufficient to charge a vendor's interest in land for material furnished the vendee. Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 1372. Belnap v. Condon [Utah] 97 P 111.

45. Under Gen. St. 1880, c. 70, art. 1, § 2, providing for lien which has attached to property to follow land on rescission of executory contract, where petition alleged ownership of land by lessee under contract of purchase, but elsewhere alleged ownership by lessor and her children living at death, and it did not appear that children were parties to sale, no lien was acquired. Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club [Ky.] 113 SW 814.

46. Where owner of land gave children permission to erect building at their own expense and then sell entire property, repaying her for lot, children were neither vendees nor lessees, and since owner was not party to building contract, or did not authorize children's contract on her credit, her title to lot was not subject to lien. Westport Lumber Co. v. Harris, 131 Mo. App. 94, 110 SW 609.

47. Where defendant erected building on mother's land, agreeing to sell same on completion and pay mother portion of proceeds, though he was neither vendee, lessee, nor strictly an equitable vendee, he nevertheless had such equitable interest in the property as to be subject to lien. Westport Lumber Co. v. Harris, 131 Mo. App. 94, 110 SW 609.

48a. Statute giving lien "to all persons performing labor or furnishing * * * machinery" includes one who contracts with contractor. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1048. Under Mechanic's Lien Act 1895, § 24, subcontractor need not have contract with contractor to have lien, but sufficient if subcontractor furnished material for public improvement involved. County of Coles v. Haynes, 134 Ill. App. 320. To entitle materialman to lien on building erected by contractor for owner, claimant must furnish material pursuant to contract between latter and owner for use in building amount of such liens in the aggregate do not exceed the contract price,[49] though under other statutes the subcontractor's lien is not dependent upon whether a sum is due the principal contractor.[50] The owner has been held to bear a quasi contractual relation to the subcontractor.[51] A stipulation against liens by the principal contractor is not binding on a subcontractor having no actual notice thereof,[52] and the rights of a subcontractor are not affected by the reception of dividends from the bankrupt original contractor's estate.[53]

§ 5. Acts and proceedings necessary to acquire lien. A. Notice and demand, statement to acquire lien.[54]—See 10 C. L. 819—In the acquirement of a mechanic's lien, substantial compliance with the statutory provisions is required.[54a] Generally a preliminary notice of the intention of the subcontractor to file a lien is required [55] for the protection of the owner.[56] In some states a mechanic's lien is considered as arising out of the circumstances under which the work is done and the materials are furnished,[57] and, the office of the statement being merely to preserve the lien,[58] it is sufficient if the owner is not misled by the facts stated.[59] It follows that the state-

Immaterial to whose fault insufficiency is attributable, unless affected by party sought to be charged. Windfall Natural Gas. & Min. Co., 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996. Innocent mistake in notice does not invalidate. Felgenhauer v. Haas, 123 App. Div. 75, 108 NYS 476. Question of validity of notice turns upon substantial compliance with provisions of statute. Waters v. Goldberg, 124 App. Div. 511, 108 NYS 992.

55. Act June 4, 1901, § 6, P. L. 434. Tenth Nat. Bank v. Smith Const. Co., 218 Pa. 681, 67 A 872. So that owner may require payment of contractor, or in default thereof withhold contract price. Day v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 586. Act June 4, 1901, § 8, P. L. 431, requiring subcontractor to give owner 30 days' notice of intention to file lien, is imperative. Keely v. Jones, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 642. Failure to comply with Act June 4, 1901, P. L. 431, § 8, renders lien invalid. Id. Language of Act June 4, 1901, P. L. 431, § 8, as to requirement of notice of subcontractor's intention to file lien, so plain and imperative as to avoid interpretation. Id.

56. Chandler Lumber Co. v. Fehlau [Wis.] 117 NW 1057. Compliance by subcontractor with St. 1898, § 3315, requiring materialman to give written notice to owner of materials furnished and amount due from contractor, is condition precedent to subcontractor's right to lien. Id.

58. Lien continues 29 days after work completed without filing of any statement. Rev. Laws, c. 197, § 6. Devine v. Clark, 198 Mass. 56, 84 NE 309.

59. Under Pub. St. 1882, c. 191, § 6, as amended by St. 1892, p. 168, c. 191, statement of claim applies to lien actually existing when it was filed, and where petitioner seeks afterward to enforce such lien, if it contains enough to preserve lien, it is sufficient. Devine v. Clark, 198 Mass. 56, 84 NE 309. Where lienor in good faith claimed lien for both labor and material, when in fact he had only one for labor and did not state therein number of days' labor and its value, statement was nevertheless sufficient, where no intention to mislead and no one entitled to notice was misled (Pub. St. 1882, c. 191, § 6, as amended by St. 1892, p. 168, c. 191, construed in light of previous enactment). Id. 60. Claim for labor and materials when in fact only labor performed. Devine v. Clark, 198 Mass. 56, 84 NE 309.

61. Under Act of June 4, 1901, P. L. 431, an amendment is permissible, though after verdict, setting forth specifications which were thought material. Day v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 586. Lien cannot be rendered valid by amendment as to when date of last material furnished, such requirement being specified as necessary. Delchley's Estate, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 442.

62. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7257, notice is sufficient if it states amount to whom, by whom, and for what, due, and describes premises so that owner may know property intended to be charged. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe, 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996; Id. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 722. Notice insufficient when shown by averments of complaint to have been erroneous in every particular except as to amount. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe, 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996. Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 518, c. 418, § 9, subds. 4, 5, complied with where notice states whole amount of contract, agreed price, proportion performed and to be performed, sum paid, and amount due and unpaid when notice filed and amount which will be due when contract wholly fulfilled. Harley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Notice of claim for lien for materials and labor to be used and which were used in alteration and repair of electric wiring and making connections in and about building construed to aver alteration, repair and connections in and about building and, therefore, prima facie case of lien. B. & C. Comp. St. § 5644. Rowen v. Alladio [Or.] 93 P 929.

Public improvement: Where the steps necessary to establish a lien are prescribed in a section of the statute, the requirements of other sections relating to other liens are not applicable. County of Coles v. Haynes, 134 Ill. App. 320. Under Mechanics' Lien Act of 1895, § 24, where public improvement is involved, service of notice upon clerk and treasurer of county in question is sufficient, being substantial compliance with statute and it appearing that notice was brought to attention of supervisors. Id. Notice served under § 24, Mechanic's Lien Act of 1895, where public improvements involved, not too late though county orders issued where such orders are invalid and do not constitute payment. Id. Notice by subcontractor upon city before lawful delivery of bonds or warrants to contractor in payment is in time. First Nat. Bank v. Elgin, 136 Ill. App. 453. Only city can raise question that notice is not served within statutory time pursuant to Lien Law of 1903, § 23, since provision for city's benefit. Id. Method provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, where improvement on public work by giving notice of claim of lien to holder of fund earned by claimant's labor, and § 1183, by recording against property, not applicable. Goldtree v. San Diego [Cal. App.] 97 P 216. Lien against public building or improvement by recording against such building not enforcible for reasons of public policy. Id.

63. Amount due cannot be supplied by inference but must be expressly stated. Chandler Lumber Co. v. Fehlau [Wis.] 117 NW 1057. Recital in materialman's notice of materials furnished contractor that materialman had furnished such materials pursuant to employment to amount and value of $1,100, etc., not sufficient as to amount. Id. Subcontractor's notice under Act of 1903 sufficient when reciting amount due on specified day for material furnished. Hutchinson v. Francis Beidler & Co., 135 Ill. App. 328. Notice fatally defective when not correctly stating for what lien claimed or from whom amount due. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe [Ind. App.] 85 NE 722. Claimant not entitled to have notice reformed and foreclosed when notice did not correctly state for what lien claimed or from whom due, though mistake claimed to be due to lawyer who prepared same. Id. Notice held not indefinite as stating how much material furnished and to be furnished. Felgenhauer v. Haas, 123 App. Div. 75, 108 NYS 476. Notice reciting that agreed price or value of labor performed and materials furnished was $1,175 is insufficient because in disjunctive. Alexander v. Costello, 59 Misc. 491, 110 NYS 1033. Under lien law (Laws 1897, c. 418, p. 518, § 9), notice must state whole value of labor and materials and amount remaining unpaid. Mitchell v. Dunmore Realty Co., 111 NYS 322. Requirement imperative and notice insufficient when referring to work done as $42,878.31, while complaint showed $111,771.65. Id. Notice of amount claimed, furnished and to be furnished in alternative fatally defective. Weiss v. Kenney, 59 Misc. 279, 112 NYS 287. Lien invalid where value or agreed price of labor performed or to be performed is not inferable from reading notice. Spring v. Collins Bldg. & Const. Co., 113 NYS 29. Notice for lien "for principal and interest of value and agreed price of labor performed" is invalid. Id. Presumption that items were furnished pursuant to separate contract where over 60 days intervene between two items. Ashford v. Iowa & Minnesota Lumber Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 272.

Errors: Overstatement through mistake or clerical error, being unintentional, does not invalidate lien pursuant to Gen. St. 1902, §§ 4135-4137. Soule v. Borelli, 80 Conn. 392, 68 A 979. Notice stating larger amount than actually due does not invalidate lien if in good faith. Strandell v. Moran, 49 Wash. 533, 95 P 1106. Statement of $2,893.90 instead of $2,284.79, not fatal. Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 525, c. 418, § 22. Hall v. Thomas, 111 NYS 979. Lien not invalid because of obvious clerical error in amount not calculated to and which did not in fact mislead. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Mathematical calculation to ascertain amount of lien in case of error allowable. Id.

64. Claim for lien not invalid because made partly for articles not subject to lien when not willful. Barnes v. Colorado Springs, etc., R. Co., 42 Colo. 461, 94 P 570.

Itemizing: General statements of materials furnished sufficient. Chandler Lumber Co. v. Fehlau [Wis.] 117 NW 1057. Materialman's notice, "Materials furnished—Lumber and mill work to value of $1100," sufficient.

Id. Notice need not separately state value of materials furnished and labor performed. Felgenhauer v. Haas, 123 App. Div. 75, 108 NYS 476. Where article was patented device composed of iron, wood, etc., subcontractor need not set out in notice an itemized statement of different materials of device as whole. Day v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 586. Under Code 1904, § 2476, account filed which omitted to show prices for items was entire failure to comply with statute. Brown v. Cornwell, 108 Va. 129, 60 SE 623. Account stating "am't of est. $450," insufficient, as word "estimate" indicates value of goods in seller's mind rather than contract price. Id. No evidence that materials contracted for at gross sum. Id. Where building contract provides for monthly payments to contractor on vouchers approved by architect, gross sums paid for labor at stated periods under general designation of "pay roll" will not be treated as "lumping sums" not protected by statute. Lunsford v. Wren [W. Va.] 63 SE 308. Statement must be itemized in reasonable manner and to reasonable extent to enable those interested to know if claim is enforcible. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Work done by person for several days preceding may be charged on day of payment. Id. Omission of ditto marks where several items in claim follow item having date in margin is in accordance with custom of many bookkeepers and will not invalidate claim. Id. Indication of dates in claim for mechanic's lien by figures in date column at left of page, thus, 2-4, 2-6, under heading "Chicago, Feb. 15, 1893," is sufficient, meaning of figures used being well understood. Id. Where statement showed work as done between two dates and affidavit verified statement, it was sufficient, since entire contract was single item. (Act 1874, § 4, as amended by Laws 1887, p. 219, Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, c. 82, § 4), Id. Where contract entire, statement may properly include all work and material as one item. Id.

65. Notice that first time item furnished on or about May 9, 1895, sufficient compliance with Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 518, c. 418, § 9, subd. 6, since only certainty required as would individuate transaction. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 82, § 38, notice need not state when payment is due. Beck Coal & Lumber Co. v. Peterson Mfg. Co., 237 Ill. 250, 86 NE 715. Requirement that lien set forth when first and last materials were furnished must be complied with. Under Act June 4, 1901, P. L. 431, where lien does not set forth when last material furnished, claim is invalid. Deichley's Estate, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 442. Defect cannot be supplied by extrinsic evidence. Id. Where material was furnished Aug. 7, and statement read Sept. 7, the fact that an item was furnished Sept. 27 was requisite to sustain the lien as being filed in time. Id.

66. Where written notice of intention to file lien has attached copy of contract between contractor and subcontractor, the fact that specifications were not appended is immaterial where an amendment was permitted and it appeared that such specifications were in possession of the owner. Day v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 586. Where notice (Civ. Code 1896, § 2731) and statement filed in probate office (Civ. Code 1896, § 2727) attempted to embrace lien on two separate contracts, it is unenforcible. Crawford v. Sterling [Ala.] 46 S 849.

67. Description identifying property by reference to facts sufficient. Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. Gibson [Cal. App.] 98 P 37. Description so that party familiar with premises could identify is sufficient. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Notice not invalidated because of obvious clerical error in superfluous clause of description. Id. Distinction between descriptions incurably defective and those which may be made certain by references. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe, 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996. Error of dimension of lot in notice does not invalidate lien. Lien Law, § 9, subd. 7, § 22 (Laws 1897, p. 518, c. 418). Hall v. Thomas, 111 NYS 979. Where property sought to be charged with lien is described merely as certain tract of ground without limitation, claim is applicable to whole fee. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Description as stable located on lots in New York City, borough of Manhattan, known as Nos. 166-172 Perry St., sufficient. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Premises and real estate upon which lien claimed sufficiently described as follows: One two-room stone building on railroad avenue in the city of Broxton now occupied by the Broxton Meat Market. Broxton Artificial Stone Works v. Jowers [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1012. Evidence of exact dimensions admissible to enable proper decree to be drawn. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Description in notice of lien cannot be supplied by oral evidence, but ambiguity may be explained and premises identified. Windfall Natural Gas, Min. & Oil Co. v. Roe, 41 Ind. App. 687, 84 NE 996.

68. Under Act 1874, § 4, as amended by Laws 1887, p. 219 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, c. 82, § 4), and § 53, statement need not set forth name of owner in fee. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. "The owner," as used in Act 1874 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, c. 82), means owner of any interest in land. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Statute does not require contractor to investigate title. Id. Where person has contracted with owner of land, i. e., any one having interest therein, to furnish labor and materials, if claim for lien sets forth name of owner contracted with and description of property sought to be charged, it is sufficient to reach interests of all owners. Id. Lien Law, Laws 1897, pp. 515, 518, 519, c. 418, § 2, § 9, subd. 2 and § 10, requiring notice to state name of owner, complied with where claimants claimed no benefit under trust deed for benefit of creditors, declined to accept same and named grantor as true owner. Hall v. Thomas, 111 NYS 979. Notice to general manager of corporation owning or claiming interest in lands to be improved sufficient to subject to lien in absence of posting of notice required by Comp. Laws 1897, § 2226. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [N. M.] 93 P 706. Notice of intention to claim lien to former owner who had acquired different interest under mortgage not necessary. Brown v. Haddock, 199 Mass. 480, 85 NE 573.

the statute under which the lien is claimed is unnecessary.[72] A suit for a subcontractor's lien begun within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the contractor does not give a lien in favor of the plaintiff.[73]

(§ 5) B. Filing and recording claim, and statement thereof.[74] See 10 C. L. 821 Invariably the time limit within which the notice or statement must be filed is prescribed by the statute.[74a] Claim prematurely filed cannot be enforced,[75] and the time usually commences when the materials are furnished[76] or the building com-

69. Notice constitutes an equitable garnishment of funds in hands of owner and need not be served on contractor. Los Angeles Pressed Brick Co. v. Los Angeles Pacific Boulevard & Development Co., 7 Cal. App. 460, 94 P 775. Notice only to be given to reputed owner, though materials furnished to contractor or other person acting by authority of reputed owner. Code Civ. Proc. § 1184. Id. Omission of name of person to whom materials furnished, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, in claim of lien, is fatal. Hogan v. Bigler [Cal. App.] 96 P 97.

70. Where disagreement arose between contractor and lessee as to work done and two arbitrators were appointed, and such arbitrators received notice in writing from contractor to furnish labor and material, their claim was properly filed jointly, neither lessee nor contractors being concerned with distribution of sum due. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Notice not bad for failure to allege partnership where filed by all members who stated they had lien, thus giving notice of joint claim. Waters v. Goldberg, 124 App. Div. 511, 108 NYS 992. Notice describing lienor as Wright-Easton Townsend Co., a corporation with its principal office in New York at given street number, sufficient compliance with Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 518, c. 418, § 9, subd. 1, requiring corporation lienor to state address and principal place of business. Hurley v. Tucker, 128 App. Div. 580, 112 NYS 980. Terms "principal office" and "principal place of business" synonymous in respect to New York corporations. Id. Defect in signature not having misled bondsmen or city to their injury, sufficient compliance with statute. Plaintiff doing business as "A. S. Agent" signed as "A. S." without "agent." Strandell v. Moran, 49 Wash. 533, 95 P 1106. Where claim of lien by Broxton Artificial Stone Works, words "C. A. Taylor, agent," and signature "C. A. Taylor," were surplusage. Broxton Artificial Stone Works v. Jowers [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1012.

71. Purpose of verification is assurance of validity of lien and good faith of lienor under penalty of perjury. Waters v. Goldberg, 124 App. Div. 511, 109 NYS 992. Verification of claim by one lienor sufficient where made as one of two lienors who gave notice of joint claim. Id.

72. Reference to statute of 1899 (Laws 1889, p. 313, c. 200) as basis of claim of lien arising under Rev. Laws 1905, § 5538, which was incorporated and carried forward in revision and formally repealed thereby, is not fatal but mere surplusage. Barndt v. Parks, 103 Minn. 360, 115 NW 197.

73. Though owner summoned as garnishee. Fairlamb v. Smedley Const. Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 17. Suit under Act June 4, 1901, § 28, P. L. 431, by subcontractor against contractor with owner as garnishee, is legal proceeding within meaning of National Bankruptcy Act of 1898. Id.

74a. Hurd's Rev. St. 1887, c. 82, §§ 4, 28, provides that claim for lien be filed within 4 months after last payment due. Kelley v. Springer, 235 Ill. 493, 85 NE 593. Lien not enforcible against purchaser of leasehold, within meaning of Hurd's Rev. St. 1887, c. 82, § 28, unless filed as provided by § 4. Id. Lien for improvements on real estate under Mechanic's Lien Law 1895, p. 229, not enforcible, unless claim for lien filed or suit begun within 4 months after last payment due as required by § 7. Id. Where work completed Feb. 16, and notes given maturing in 120 days, claim for lien filed July 29, 1893, was filed in time, being less than 4 months after 120 days from Feb. 16. Sorg v. Crandall, 233 Ill. 79, 84 NE 181. Statement required four months from time when work completed or payment due. Mechanic's Lien Act 1895, § 7. Snitzler v. Filer, 135 Ill. App. 61. Subcontractors must give written notice of furnishment of materials and intention to claim lien, "after commencing and not later than 60 days after ceasing," to furnish supplies. Gen. St. 1902, § 4137. A. W. Burritt Co. v. Negry [Conn.] 71 A 570. Delay of notice until 20 days after ceasing to furnish materials clearly within rights. Id. Party furnishing materials for building, an original contractor within Rev. St. 1899, § 4207 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2290), requiring filing of lien account within 6 months after indebtedness has accrued. E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. James T. Smith Bldg. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 77. Substantial evidence in support of finding that lien filed within four months from date of last item. Meyer v. Schmidt, 131 Mo. App. 53, 109 SW 833. Filing within 50 days after completion of work, sufficient compliance with Comp. Laws, §§ 3881, 3889, giving lien and act 1903, p. 51, c. 32, as to time of filing. Tonopah Lumber Co. v. Nevada Amusement Co. [Nev.] 97 P 636.

75. Filing before completion of structure premature. Baker v. Lake Land Canal & Irr. Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 P 773.

76. Where contract of supply company for furnishing material for construction of railroad provided for delivery f. o. b. at certain place, such delivery was to construction company and period of time for filing lien commenced at such day. United States & Mexican Trust Co. v. Western Supply & Mfg. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 377. Finding as to when last item delivered though based on conflicting evidence, sustained. Rasmussen v. Liming [Wash.] 96 P 1044.

pleted.[77] The time cannot be extended, either by furnishing additional material,[78] delay,[79] subsequent agreement,[80] or other method.[81] The matter of completion involves the question of whether the items were furnished as part of one continuing transaction.[82] A lien claimant's rights are unaffected by a mistake of the clerk in docketing the statement.[83]

§ 6. Amount of lien and priority thereof.[84]—See 10 C. L. 822—It may be stated generally that the amount of a lien is limited by the value of the materials rendered,[84a] and in many states by the contract price which the owner has agreed to pay.[85] Thus,

77. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4207 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2290), indebtedness for material accrues when completed by furnishing of last material for building. Darlington Lumber Co. v. James T. Smith Bldg. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 77. Contract must be completed or deemed completed before right to file claim of lien accrues. Baker v. Lake Land Canal & Irr. Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 P 773. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that occupation and use of building, etc., and cessation from labor for 30 days on any contract to be deemed equivalent to completion, both occupation and cessation for 30 days must exist before structure or contract is complete for purposes of lien. Baker v. Lake Land Canal & Irr. Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 P 773; Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 96 P 788. Where owner fails to file notice of completion of improvements, filing 90 days from actual completion may be made. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187. Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 96 P 788. Occupation of building while work in active progress and half finished does not start running of time for filing of liens under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187. Id. Liberal construction but not disregard of statute. Baker v. Lake Land Canal & Irr. Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 P 773.

78. Lien cannot be revised or kept alive by furnishing small quantity of material for that purpose. Coffey v. Smith [Or.] 97 P 1079. Donating or substituting material for defective lumber furnished. Ashford v. Iowa & Minnesota Lumber Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 272. Sending new material to replace defective, which new material was rejected as unsuitable. Snitzler v. Filer, 135 Ill. App. 61. Materialman who furnishes material for erection of building under two contracts with knowledge of such contracts cannot tack one contract to other one to render filing of lien in time. Valley Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Driessel, 13 Idaho, 662, 93 P 765. Some evidence of notice by materialman of two contracts but not preponderance and lien held filed in time. Id. Small amount of labor or material furnished after acceptance of structure under circumstances indicating bad faith on part of materialman will not support mechanic's lien. Ashford v. Iowa & Minnesota Lumber Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 272. Where partnership engaged in constucting building dissolved, and materialman refused further delivery except small quantity for immediate use, notice of lien filed within 90 days after delivery of small quantity was in time. 84a. Mechanics' lien can only be had for value actually received. Fact that no labor was performed during part of time for which payment for use of machine in constructing waterworks is sought to be recovered must be considered in determining amount. Potter Mfg. Co. v. Meyer & Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1048.

85. Materialmen entitled to lien on equal footing to amount not exceeding contract price. Sternberg v. Ft. Smith Refrigerator Works [Ark.] 112 SW 174. Amount recoverable measured by amount due under contract. Stelty v. Armory Co. [Idaho] 99 P 98.

when a contractor abandons a structure, the owner is entitled to credit for the sum expended in completing it,[88] and in some states the owner's liability, upon abandonment, is expressly limited to the work done.[87] Generally the lien cannot extend to a greater amount than the balance due at the time of notice, provided the payments previously made are in good faith,[88] but the owner is liable when disregarding a notice to stop payments,[89] though a claimant cannot attack a payment after the expiration of the time for filing his notice.[90] In many states an owner is liable to the materialman to the full extent of his claim, regardless of payments made to the contractor,[91] or when he disregards statutory provisions for his protection such as secur-

The general constitutional principle underlying lien statutes is that the liability of an owner who has complied with his contract be limited to the agreed price. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. Provision that architect might supply materials or workmen on failure of contractor to supply enough expense thereof to be deducted from contract did not authorize architect to bind owner or create lien beyond original contract price. Sternberg v. Ft. Smith Refrigerator Works [Ark.] 112 SW 174.

86. Where contract abandoned and owner in completing incurs expenses in excess of contract price, he should be allowed credit in settlement with lien holders claiming under contract for sums paid independently of contractor's debts, and after deduction of aggregate of these sums from contract price, residue should be prorated to lienors. Pine Bluff Lodge of Elks No. 149 v. Sanders [Ark.] 111 SW 255; Sternberg v. Ft. Smith Refrigerator Works [Ark.] 112 SW 174.

87. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. Claimants not entitled to lien where under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, payments at time of abandonment exceed value of work and materials furnished. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152; Scheerer & Co. v. Deming [Cal.] 97 P 155; McCue v. Jackman, 7 Cal. App. 703, 95 P 673. Where contractor abandons contract, portion of contract price applicable to liens is fixed by deducting from value of work and materials furnished the payments due and paid under the contract, and the remainder shall be applicable to liens. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. Where $46 excess materialman entitled to lien for that sum only, not 25 per cent. of value of materials. Duffy Lumber Co. v. Stanton [Cal. App.] 98 P. 38. Method of computation under § 1200, properly arrived at by considering value of work at abandonment and amount left undone comparing with contract price. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. In determining value, evidence of reasonable cost of completion proper. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152; Scheerer & Co. v. Deming [Cal.] 97 P 155. Findings as to value of work at time of abandonment sustained by evidence. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. Rights fixed by statute at time of abandonment and amount subsequently expended does not impair rights. Scheerer & Co. v. Deming [Cal.] 97 P 155. Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, requiring at least 25 per cent of contract price to be paid 35 days after completion of contract, sets apart a sum for lien claimants, but such section is not applicable where the contractor abandons the work; § 1200 being applicable. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires [Cal.] 97 P 152. Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, not violative of state constitution recognizing right to mechanic's liens. Scheerer & Co. v. Deming [Cal.] 97 P 155. Materialman who abandoned work must allege and prove that value of work done and materials furnished at abandonment exceeded amount due and paid contractor, since if no excess no sum applicable to claim. McCue v. Jackman, 7 Cal. App. 703, 95 P 673.

88. Under Gen. St. 1902, § 4138, lien of subcontractor could in no case attach for greater amount than owner had agreed to pay original contractor, and where amount had been reduced by payments in good faith before notice of lien, lien could not attach for greater amount than balance due. A. W. Burritt Co. v. Negry [Conn.] 71 A 570. Under § 4138, payments in advance of time specified in contract without notice of intention being given to subcontractors furnishing material with knowledge of owner, though made before notice of lien filed, could not be allowed owner since otherwise last provision of § 4138, would be abrogated. Id. Where owner paid subcontractor partly in cash and partly by note, before notice of defendant's lien, and owner only received memorandum showing credit for cash paid and amount of note, account not being closed until defendant filed written notice of lien and brought suit to foreclose, note was not payment of first subcontractor's claim so that owner could charge it against contractor and destroy second subcontractor's lien. Id. On notice to owner as provided by Rev. 1905, § 2021, causing retention of sum then due contractor, only pro rata share was available to plaintiff where several claimants. Hildebrand v. Vanderbilt, 147 N. C. 639, 61 SE 620. Under Rev. 1905, § 2021, requiring owner to "retain from the money then due" contractor, etc., where on notice $780 was due and after completion of building $1500 was due, only former sum was available to materialman in personal suit. Id.

89. Where materialman furnishing materials to contractor entitled to $200 on portion of work done, and $600 on completion, served stop notice [as provided by Mechanics' Lien Law § 3 (P. L. 1898, p. 538)] before owner paid any part of contract price, and subsequently consented to payment of $200, and owner made further payments amounting to $300, judgment for materialman for $300 was proper. Crane Carriage Hardware Co. v. Belfatto [N. J. Law] 69 A 1085.

90. Although owner does not show payment altogether made after 90 days had expired and before lien filed. First Nat. Bank v. Hilliboe [N. D.] 114 NW 1085. Payments before 90 days does not prejudice subcontractor where last payment more than sufficient to protect lien if filed in time. Id.

ing a statement of the materialmen.[92] A statute limiting a laborer's lien to work performed at the request or consent of the owner logically limits the lien to a sum not greater than that earned and unpaid at the time of filing the notice of lien.[93]

A mechanic's lien is usually superior to any other lien attaching subsequently to the commencement of work on the improvement,[94] but is inferior to a prior mortgage,[95] though in some states a distinction as to precedence is made when a building is repaired,[96] and in others the question of notice is involved.[97] Thus purchasers for valuable consideration without notice secure priority.[98] A mortgage securing a building loan is ordinarily superior to a mechanic's lien,[99] but the doctrine of equi-

92. Under Comp. Laws, § 10713, requiring statement where payments made to original contractor, where contractor failed to complete buildings, subcontractor was entitled to proportion of claim as contract price bore to entire cost of building and in computing cost court might consider payments made contrary to § 10713, they being evidence of cost. Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Cole, 151 Mich. 280, 14 Det. Leg. N. 883, 114 NW 1018. Owner of property cannot waive compliance with Comp. Laws, § 10713, requiring contractor when payments are due, etc., to furnish statement of materialmen so as to affect of rights of mortgagee under mortgage after improvement and before contractor files notice of lien. Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 795, 117 NW 932. Payments by owner to contractor not prejudicial to subcontractor's lien where no statement containing names of materialmen was furnished owner. Lien Act of 1903, §§ 5, 22, 32. Hutchinson v. Francis Beidler & Co., 135 Ill. App. 328.

93. Under lien law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3), giving laborer lien, the claim is limited to sum not greater than amount unpaid at time of filing notice, and sum subsequently earned thereon (§ 4). Polstein v. Lax, 111 NYS 721. Filing of lien by employes of contractor before contractor abandoned work, and before contract price exhausted, did not give workmen lien for sum in excess of balance due on contract after payment by owner of cost of completing contract, since in absence of agreement work not to be paid for before finished, and hence nothing earned by contractor at time of filing notice. Id. Nothing earned subsequently on excess of difference between contract price and cost of completion added to sum paid contractor. Id.

94. Lien takes precedence of incumbrance originating after contractor begins to furnish materials. Gen. St. 1902, § 4135. Soule v. Borelli, 80 Conn. 392, 68 A 979. Mechanic's lien not postponed to lien of mortgage from fact that material and labor were furnished after mortgage was given, value of which exceeded amount due on completion of work; or that payments to contractor exceeded amount on books at or subsequent to date of mortgage; or that proceeds of mortgage may have been paid to contractor which when credited on books exceeded in amount aggregate charged therein; or that contractor knew money paid to him was proceeds of mortgage. Id. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, where no valid contract priority of liens determined by time work completed. Lienor prior to subsequent mortgage. Burnett v. Glas [Cal.] 97 P 423. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, lien of deed of trust given year after commencement of work and furnishing of materials is inferior to mechanic's lien. Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 96 P 788. Where plaintiffs agreed with contractors to furnish labor and materials for city improvement as joint enterprise under direction of third party who had interest in contract, and certain materialmen furnished materials to plaintiffs with knowledge and approval of third party, materialmen's liens were superior to plaintiff's lien. 96. Elliott & Barry Engineering Co. v. Baker [Mo. App.] 114 SW 71. Where materials furnished in completion of building, mechanic's lien entitled to priority, since security of mortgagee unimpaired. Id. Where materials furnished in repair of building, mortgagee entitled to priority, since otherwise he might be deprived of security without consent. Id. "Repairs" signifies articles used to replace worn out or unsatisfactory articles as well as repairs in sense of patchwork, on decayed or worn part of building. Id. Lien for installation of hot water plant, not prior to liens of previous deeds of trust under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4204, 4205 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2287, 2288). Id. Hot water heating plant integral part of building, and not separate structure, though removable. Id. Lien for installation of heating plant attaches to property not apparatus itself. Id.

97. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5903 (Pierce's Code, § 6105), as to priority of mechanic's lien, lien for labor performed upon traction engine not preferred to prior mortgage filed and indexed so as to give constructive notice. A. H. Averhill Machinery Co. v. Allbritton [Wash.] 97 P 1082.

98. Building erected by tenant not subject to mechanic's lien as against subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of lien or tenant's claim to building. Denison Lumber Co. v. Milburn [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 1161. Purchaser of real estate taking as absolute owner of fee, without notice of an unfiled mechanic's lien, is not subject thereto, as such purchaser not within Code 1896, § 2724, giving priority to mechanic's lien. Martin v. Clark [Ala.] 46 S 232.

99. Where written contract for building loan filed pursuant to Mechanics' Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 525, c. 418), § 21, as am'd by Laws 1900, p. 145, c. 78, § 1, provided that the mortgage securing building loan be for mortgage and there was no obligation to advance any sum until existing mortgage was satisfied, oral agreement that existing mortgage be paid out of building loan was not table estoppel may be applied to secure the sum due a materialman, when his lien, because of advances made under a deed of trust, is worthless.[1] Upon the release of land from a prior mortgage, the lien attaches,[2] unless the seisin is instantaneous.[3] A mortgage is entitled to priority, though judgment has been rendered where the mechanic's claim is invalid.[4] Colaborers and materialmen in equal degree have priority according to the time of filing their liens.[5] Subcontractor's liens are superior to those of equitable assignees of a portion of the contract price due the contractor.[6] The priority of a materialman's lien is lost where he becomes an independent contractor.[7] A materialman having no lien has no equitable interest entitling him to priority within a statute as to priorities where a railroad is insolvent.[8] An instrument, at most a trust deed, in the nature of a mortgage for the benefit of creditors is inferior to a subsequent mechanic's lien.[9]

§ 7. Assignment and transfer of lien.[10]—See 10 C. L. 823—Laborers' liens are assignable,[10a] and a perfected mechanic's lien passes as an incident with the assignment of the demand for which it stands as security.[11]

§ 8. Waiver, loss, or forfeiture of lien, or right to acquire it.[12]—See 10 C. L. 823—A covenant against liens procured by fraud will not be enforced.[12a] The question of waiver is to be inferred from the intention of the parties.[13] The misappropriation of special security may abrogate a waiver,[14] or the waiver may be canceled,[15] but the

14. Provision of building contract expressly waiving right to mechanic's lien as against holders of bonds issued by owner alteration of a contract is ineffective to accomplish this result.[16] A materialman supplying articles for several improvements may waive his lien by applying a credit of money as on a general account.[17] A subcontractor is bound by the provisions of an original agreement where the contractor waives all liens.[18] The right of a lien has been held unaffected because the contractor had associates;[19] and the right is not presumed to be abandoned from the acceptance of notes in payment.[20] A materialman's lien is unaffected by the fact that the contractor failed to protect himself from misappropriation of funds by his agent, the subcontractor.[21] A lien may be lost by willful, gross exaggeration in the notice;[22] by the unjustifiable abandonment of the work;[23] by the failure to complete the structure within the contract time;[24] by defective construction;[25] or where the amount claimed is less than the amount to be charged for defects;[26] and by counterclaim for an existing indebtedness[27] or proof of payment;[28] but it is ordinarily no defense that the owner has paid the contract price before notice of the lien;[29] that different material was used than called for by the specifications,[30] or that the building is defective when it has been accepted.[31] An owner cannot assert damages against a subcontractor to prevent a lien unless the same have been established in an action.[32] A materialman who is treasurer of the owner's building committee is not estopped from asserting a lien,[33] but the doctrine of estoppel may be applicable to prevent the defeat of a lien by a wife, who was the true owner of the land.[34] A city cannot set off against the claim of subcontractors, the amount of a loss suffered by reason of the abandonment of the work by the contractor, where it has compromised the liability upon the bond given by the contractor,[35] and a city cannot charge against the subcontractors an amount expended in completing an improvement where it failed to comply with the law as to reletting the work.[36] The provisions of a building contract requiring proof that the building was free from liens would not affect the contractor's right to his lien,[37] and a lien is not terminated by the owner's death.[38] A surety upon a contractor's bond is ordinarily estopped from claiming a lien,[39] but where there is no privity of contract between the owner and materialmen, the fact that they are sureties on the contractor's bond to a guaranty company does not estop them to assert a lien for the materials furnished.[40]

ment of the judgment obtained on the debt.[44] The remedy under the statutes is merely cumulative[45] and does not deprive the claimant of his personal remedy against the debtor,[46] which is maintainable where the lien has lapsed.[47] The owner's quasi contractual obligation to the subcontractor is enforcible in assumpsit.[48] Additional special remedies, such as the giving of a bond, are merely cumulative.[49] The general procedure of foreclosure is usually applicable.[50] Such procedure is not violative of a constitutional right to a jury trial[51] and does not render the action one to recover on contract,[52] though it is also held that the gist of the action is breach of contract.[53]

Jurisdiction and venue.[See 10 C. L. 824]—A mechanic's lien is of equitable cognizance,[54] but to enable a court of equity to enforce a mechanic's lien, the lien must have legal validity.[55] The proceeding to enforce being considered essentially in rem, the subject-matter is local.[56] Municipal courts are given limited jurisdiction to foreclose,[57] and the provisions of a municipal court act as to service of process are applicable rather than the code rules.[58]

The time of bringing action[See 10 C. L. 824] is a matter of statutory regulation.[59]

(§ 10) B. Parties.[60]—See 10 C. L. 825—After the dissolution of a partnership the individuals may sue to enforce the lien.[60a] The necessary parties are largely determined by the nature of the action, as where a joinder is allowed,[61] but usually the necessary parties include the contractor,[62] and a trustee in prior deed of trust as well as trust creditor.[63] Other claimants are necessary;[64] although some states hold that where a third person does not become a claimant and intervene, his rights are unenforcible.[65] In a suit against the owner of property to establish a lien for work done at the instance of the lessees, such lessees are not necessary parties;[66] and in a suit against the trustees of a church, the corporate church was held unnecessary.[67] Where the original contractors are partners, only one of them is a necessary party defendant.[68] Where the owner is dead, the heirs are the proper parties,[69] and where the land is needed to pay debts, the administrator is properly cited to defend,[70] but the rights of the owner's widow are unaffected.[71] The substitution of representatives when a party dies pending action is provided for by statute.[72]

(§ 10) C. Pleading, practice and evidence. Pleading.[73]—See 10 C. L. 825—Generally the bill should allege all the facts necessary to show the existence of a valid lien[73a] showing substantial compliance with the statute.[74] It follows that essential matters, such as filing,[75] the furnishment of labor and materials,[76] nonpayment,[77] the performance of the contract,[78] or that the owner consented to the improvements,[79] or that an abandonment was justifiable,[80] should be alleged; but allegations which are properly matters of defense, such as the time of bringing the action,[81] or certain terms of the building contract as to payments,[82] are unnecessary. Conclusions should not be pleaded.[83] Errors in stating the terms of a contract may be treated as surplusage where a copy of the contract is exhibited with the bill.[84] Where an entire contract is set forth, the plaintiff's right of recovery depends upon full performance.[85] The granting of bills of particulars is discretionary,[86] and a complaint that a mechanic's lien is bad because a bill of particulars is not attached should be made by motion to strike.[87] In case of contract with an owner, no bill of particulars need be attached to the mechanic's lien.[88] The action being in equity, amendments

(§ 10) D. Judgment, costs, and attorneys' fees.[18]—See 10 C. L. 827—A judgment against a fund in the possession of a municipality may be rendered,[18a] and an award of a lien to a subcontractor and a denial to the contractor is not inconsistent.[19] The decree may properly direct a sale of the property in fee and the application of the proceeds according to priority of the various liens,[20] and while it is irregular to direct the owner to pay the sum into court,[21] such sum, if received, is properly applied first to the payment of valid liens and costs and second to the payment of a personal judgment.[22] A judgment foreclosing a lien on a tract of land is erroneous when differing from the tract described in the lien notice and that in the petition.[23] After the application of the proceeds upon foreclosure to discharge the lien, a judgment may be rendered for the deficiency due.[24] In many states the rendition of personal judgments is permitted,[25] and while privity with the owner giving a personal liability is usually essential,[26] a personal judgment may also be rendered under the general equitable power to carry a suit to complete adjudication,[27] or where an action of contract is joined.[28] The right to a personal judgment may be lost by disclaimer during the trial,[29] and a personal judgment is improperly rendered for

39. Whether intention that materialmen be paid by contractors and whether inten-

ties were induced to enter into the agreement through mistake of law.[40] A provision of a contract with a state authorizing the retention of money to indemnify against liens has been held not to authorize the state to pay such sum to materialmen unless responsible by contract.[41] An indemnity bond to a private person may also be for the benefit of a materialman,[42] but no benefit accrues to a laborer where the bond is purely to indemnify against breach of contract.[43] A surety is not released by the failure of the owner to withhold payments due.[44] In an action on the bond the allegations should be specific and certain [45] alleging the breach of the bond;[46] evidence of the amount of claims for materials is proper;[47] and attorneys' fees and costs which were the result of the breach of covenant in failing to release the building free from liens are recoverable.[48] Want of consideration for the indemnity bond must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense.[49] The question of assignment of contract without the surety's knowledge so as to release the latter is for the jury when the evidence is conflicting.[50]

§ 1. Public regulation of the business of treating disease.[51] See 10 C. L. 828—The state may, in the exercise of its police power, require a license for the practice of medicine [51a] or dentistry,[52] subject, of course, to such rules as the requirement of singleness of titles of statutes.[53] Municipalities may impose police regulations not inconsistent with the statutes.[54] Specific qualification by graduation or previous practice is usually required as a condition to the right to be examined for admission to practice.[55] Statutes initiating a license system usually exempt those practicing at the time of their passage but such exception is held to apply only to residents [56] who have practiced continuously [57] and legally [58] for the required time next preceding the passage of the act.[59] Physicians registering before a certain date are often permitted to practice without examination.[60]

Natural persons alone are permitted to practice medicine, except in the case of hospitals, dispensaries and infirmaries, created under special statute, which are permitted to practice through their licensed physicians.[61] Statutory provisions for registration are mandatory,[62] but regulatory statutes are not and should not be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intentions of the legislature.[63] Though graduation from certain institutions may by statute give a right to license without examination,[64] a graduate from such an institution cannot practice without license though a license is unwarrantably denied him by the licensing board.[65] Though under the Texas statute evidence of authority to practice must be filed with a public official at the place of the physician's residence,[66] such filing gives authority to practice in every county in the state.[67] The state may prescribe what constitutes the practice of medicine.[68] To be a physician [69] and practice medicine, it is not ordinar-

"A person practices medicine within the meaning of this act, except as hereinafter stated, who holds himself out as being able to diagnose, treat, operate, or prescribe for any human disease, pain, injury, deformity, or physical condition." New York Laws 1907, p. 636, c. 344, § 1, subd. 7. Bandel v. Department of Health [N. Y.] 85 NE 1067, afg. 111 NYS 431. Practice of medicine consists either in opening an office for practice; or in announcing to the public a general desire, willingness or readiness to treat the sick or afflicted, or investigate or diag-ily necessary to prescribe and administer medicinal substances,[70] and osteopaths [71] are within the statutes [72] though under the Georgia statute the contrary is held.[73] Actual treatment or prescription for the sick, without previous opening of an office or announcement of practice, provided it be for pay, is practicing medicine,[74] but receipt of a fee or gift is not the criterion by which to decide whether or not a certain treatment constitutes the practice of medicine.[75] The use of designations indicative of the medical profession by unlicensed persons is prohibited by most statutes [76] and using qualifying or limiting words is no defense.[77] Dentistry is included in the term "practice of medicine and surgery," [78] but now usually governed by separate statutes [79] requiring license distinct from the practice of medicine.[80] Veterinarians are also governed by special statutes.[81]

Revocation of license or professional status. See 10 C. L. 830—Unprofessional conduct [82] or "gross immorality" justifies the medical board in revoking the license.[83] Procuring or aiding or abetting in criminal abortion is such unprofessional and grossly immoral conduct,[84] and destruction of gestation is sufficient to constitute the offense.[85] An assistant in such cases is equally guilty with the principal.[86] Authority to practice medicine is a property right which cannot be taken away without due process of law.[87] Hearing before board of medical examiners, after sufficient notice [88] and service of a complaint informing of the nature and instance of the offense [89] is due process of law.[90] Conviction by a competent court on the charge preferred by the board is not a requirement for revocation of a license,[91] nor is a trial and acquittal by such court a bar to proceedings for revoking the license.[92] Technical procedure[93] and rules of evidence obtaining in courts need not be followed in proceedings before the board[94] nor is a trial by jury required.[95] The proceedings of the board are subject to review by the courts,[96] but the judgment of the board should be affirmed in the court, if not beyond its jurisdiction,[97] and unless clearly unsupported by evidence.[98] Alleged interest in the prosecution or misconduct of the secretaries of the board is no ground for reversal, the complainant having power to establish his right by application to the board.[99] Judgments reviewing the proceedings of medical boards are subject to the general rules.[1]

§ 2. Malpractice.[13]—See 10 C. L. 831—A physician in accepting a patient does not contract to cure[13a] but by implication represents that he possesses and will exercise reasonable skill and diligence.[14] Treatment is not malpractice merely because it resulted injuriously to the patient;[15] it must be shown to be improper.[16] The test of proper treatment is that of ordinary skill, such as physicians and surgeons in the same general neighborhood, in the same general line of practice, ordinarily have and exercise in like cases.[17] Medical treatment includes reasonable care after operation,[18] and proper manner of discharge from hospital.[19] It is negligence on the part of the principal to fail to select skilled and competent agents and assistants,[20] and he is responsible for their negligence.[21] Physician cannot substitute any other person to take his place in treating patient without his consent.[22] In action for malpractice, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show the want of ordinary skill and diligence, and that the injury alleged resulted from a failure to exercise these requisites.[23] Whenever there can be reasonable doubt as to whether or not there was malpractice, it is a question for the jury.[24] The principal is liable for the negligence of his authorized agents,[25] and the partnership for the malpractice of any one of the partners.[26] The negligence of a third party contributing to the injury is no defense to the negligence of the defendant.[27] which might follow such services.[49a] Compensation for both value of the services and the loss to his business cannot be recovered unless the contract will allow of no other construction.[50] Claim for such compensation must be based on direct or express promise to pay,[51] or on circumstances under which the law would imply such promise to pay what the services are reasonably worth.[52] The right to recover for medical services rendered to a third person must rest on express contract, or on facts from which an intention to pay may be inferred.[53] The employer is not required to provide medical attendance for his employes unless he has agreed so to do,[54] although in some cases he is held liable for the emergency call.[55] The liability of the defendant to patient for injuries in no way affects his liability to the physician.[56] A complaint alleging that medical services were rendered to patient at the special instance and request of the defendants is not demurrable as not based on express contract.[57] Where the question of a license or qualification of a physician arises collaterally in a civil action, the license of due qualifications under the statute will be presumed.[58] In actions on contract for medical services, the fees to be the usual ones, it is competent for either side to give evidence of value.[59] In case of continuous attendance, plaintiff's former income may be given in evidence to be considered in estimating compensation for the time when absent from his office, but the falling off, which may be due to other causes, cannot be admitted.[60] Experts in testifying as to the value of the services rendered should base their opinions on the assumption that the treatment was proper,[61] and such experts may be cross-examined as to bias against the defendant.[62] It is proper to show that part of time charged for may not have been spent in a professional capacity.[63] Evidence of proper treatment should go to the jury awarding compensation for such medical services.[64] The introduction of evidence that the defendant did not know where his daughter was being cared for, intending to show lack of affection and carelessness, is not re-

§ 5. Regulation of the keeping and sale of drugs and medicines.[68]—See 10 C. L. 833

The legislature has power to regulate the sale of drugs and require a license therefor.[68a] Regulatory statutes must conform to the rule of singleness of title.[69] A nonregistered pharmacist unlawfully selling drugs cannot object to the constitutionality of a law, giving all power of prosecution to the board of pharmacy, for his rights are not affected thereby.[70] Where the law explicitly specifies who are entitled to a license, mandamus will lie to compel the board to issue license to one within such requirements.[71] Commission of a statutory misdemeanor does not warrant revocation of license.[72] Strict observance of regulatory act is imperative and, where a penalty is exacted for a violation, the statute must be strictly construed.[73] Proprietors of drug stores are liable for the authorized unlawful sales by their clerks.[74] The indictment or information must usually state the exact offense and show that the act does not come within one of the exceptions to the statute.[75] Particulars which do not constitute the gist of the offense need not be alleged in such information,[76] and exceptions must be negatived only where it is so closely interwoven with the section defining the criminal act as to be a material part thereof.[77] Complaints of sales of drugs not of standard strength and purity according to the United States pharmacopoeia must also allege that it was not compounded according to the formula therein given.[78] Actual sale of drugs is not essential to the offense of operating a pharmacy without a license.[79] Evidence of previous sales is admissible to show clerk's authority,[80] and to increase the penalty,[81] but inadmissible where not shown to be unlawful, or to show intent.[82] Where the contents of

(§ 1) B. Militia.[97]—See 10 C. L. 836—To fasten liability upon a city for expenditures in the maintenance of an armory building, the provisions of the Military Code which imposes it must be strictly complied with.[97a] Where the legislature has delegated to the state military board, acting as an armory board, the power and duty to regulate and control the use of armory buildings, courts will not assume to exercise such duties unless the necessity therefor is clearly apparent,[98] for the courts will not assume that the uses to which they are put are inconsistent with the general purposes for which they were intended,[99] and although the purposes for which armories are primarily intended are military purposes, yet the term "military purposes" comprehends all such uses as may be said to be incidental to the general purpose to conserve the military needs of the regimental organization.[1] Such buildings cannot properly be devoted to a purely commercial use in disregard of military needs.[2] The use of an armory building for amusement purposes is lawful when it can reasonably be said that the amusements are essential to the esprit de corps of the regiment and not injurious to the property itself,[3] and where the uses come within the contemplated uses for which the building was erected,[4] equity will not interfere.[5] from the lawmaking power as expressed in the military code.[9a] In the absence of statute, the proceedings of courts martial are controlled by the usages and customs of the military service and not by the common-law rules applicable to civil proceedings,[10] and by such practice and army regulations sentences to imprisonment imposed upon a "soldier" [11] are cumulative and to be executed consecutively, one upon the expiration of the other in the order of their imposition.[12]

§ 4. Civil status, rights and liabilities of the military and navy, and of military and naval reservation.[13]—See 10 C. L. 838.—A militiaman may without the intervention of a grand jury be held to answer for a felony by the tribunal having jurisdiction to try him for the grade of crime he has committed,[13a] but a citizen who becomes a citizen soldier is not thereby relieved from liability to the people for violation of their laws even though in his military capacity he assumes additional liability for the same violation.[14] While inferior officers and soldiers bound to obey orders are protected in so doing both against civil and criminal prosecutions, except where such orders show on their face their own illegality or want of authority,[15] superior officers are answerable for all acts within their fair scope of the orders given by him.[16] A commanding officer of a camp may not act arbitrarily and suppress a lawful and harmless business carried on by a citizen on his own land outside of the encampment where the same kind of business is authorized within the limits of the camp grounds.[17] The line referred to by act of congrses as the east line of the Presido military reservation "as established by the United States authorities" is the line of the old fence,[18] and, as the legal line of the reservation was some distance east of the line of the fence, the commandant of the reservation could fix the line of his occupation at any point within the limits of the reservation,[19] and, although his superior officers might countermand his orders and compel him to change his line, no private individual occupying lands within the legal lines of the reservation could dispute his authority in establishing the line where the fence was located.[20] Militia districts may be abolished, or their limits changed in the manner prescribed by statute,[21] and in reaching conclusions as to the necessity and expediency of a pro-

31a. Moyer v. Peabody, 29 S. Ct. 235.

NOTE. Power of military authorities to arrest and detain insurgents without reference to civil authorities: While it seems to be laid down in Ela v. Smith, 5 Gray [Mass.] 121, 66 Am. Dec. 356, and State v. Coit, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 62, that the military power, being called in simply and purely to aid the civil authorities, is not clothed with authority to direct what shall be done to the end for which its aid was solicited. There seems to be a tendency to adopt the view that until order is restored the military supersedes the civil authorities. In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 P 190, 117 Am. St. Rep. 189, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979; Re Boyle, 6 Idaho, 609, 57 P 706, 96 Am. St. Rep. 286, 45 L. R. A. 832; Moyer v. Peabody, 148 F 870. Thus it is held in the early cases of Ex parte Moore, 64 N. C. 802, and Ex parte Kerr, 64 N. C. 816, that while the governor's proclamation of martial law does not suspend the writ of habeas corpus, where the governor chooses to disregard the writ, the power of the court is exhausted. And in Druecker v. Solomon, 21 Wis. 621, 94 Am. Dec. 571, and Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 12 Law. Ed. 581, arrests and detentions unauthorized by civil law are held proper exercise of the military power of the governor to suppress insurrection, and in Commonwealth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 A 952, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759, 65 L. R. A. 193, it is held that the acts of a soldier in quelling an insurrection under the authority of a governor are to be judged by the standards of actual war.—Adapted from 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979.

47. Where an owner of mineral rights took no steps to quiet title thereto for 21 years after another acquired title by commissioner's deed to the entire property, but he had no notice until within one year that such owner claimed title to the minerals, and delay had not changed the status of the parties, held not barred by laches. Steinman v. Jessee, 108 Va. 567, 62 SE 275. Where one purchased entire title to land by commissioner's deed with knowledge that another had a right to the minerals, held he could not set up laches against the owner of the mineral rights. Id.

may become subject to relocation if the prior location is abandoned.[52] If a lode or vein within the limits of a placer claim is excepted from the placer patent, such lode or vein and twenty-five feet on either side thereof is open to location and exploitation.[53]

(§ 2) B. Who may locate.[54]—See 10 C. L. 88—The prohibition against more than one entry of coal lands by any person invalidates an entry by a qualified person in his own name but in fact as agent of one who has made a previous entry.[54a] An association location made under an agreement whereby a person other than the locators should have an interest therein is fraudulent as to the United States.[55]

§ 3. Mode of locating and acquiring patent. A. Making and perfecting location.[56]—See 10 C. L. 839—A discovery of minerals within the limits of a claim is essential to a valid location whether it be lode or placer claim,[56a] but such discovery need not, in the absence of intervening rights, precede other acts of location.[57] When more than twenty acres is located as an association claim, one discovery is sufficient for the entire claim,[58] and this rule applies where a portion of the claim is sold under an agreement that a discovery by the grantee shall inure to the benefit of the associates,[59] but not in the absence of such agreement.[60] A discovery is sufficient though the shaft bisects the boundary line of the claim.[61] A valid location

52. Complaint in an action to quiet title alleging that defendant never discovered any mineral on the land, and never made a valid location thereof, and that land covered by a pretended claim was vacant and unappropriated mineral land subject to location, held to show that land was unoccupied mineral land. Phillips v. Smith [Ariz.] 95 P 91. Complaint to quiet title alleging that plaintiff entered on ground within limits of claim of defendant "in a peaceable manner and explored and found gold" is sufficient as against objection that it shows forcible and clandestine entry on its face since, if defendant was not in actual possession, plaintiff had a right to explore. Id. Actual abandonment before the expiration of the time for performing annual labor throws the land open to location, Farrell v. Lockhart, 210 U. S. 142, 52 Law. Ed. 994. 56a. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849. Where one sunk a discovery shaft on his own claim six months before he attempted to extend the boundaries to include another's claim, such discovery had relation to the original boundaries of his own claim and not to the extended boundaries so as to confer any rights in the overlap on which the latter subsequently made the first discovery. Biglow v. Conradt [C. C. A.] 159 F 868. Or an issue as to whether there had been a sufficient discovery of mineral to meet statutory requirement and support a location where gold had actually been found, the locator may supplement such proof by evidence of the character, value and mineralogical condition of adjacent claims, and by opinions of miners that the discovery was sufficient to justify a prudent man in expending labor and money in developing the property. 60. Where an association conveys a part of the association claim before discovery is essential to vest a right of possession,[62] but possession without location is good as against a mere intruder [63] but not against a location peaceably made.[64] Location need not be made in person but may be made by an agent,[65] and this rule applies even though there is no knowledge of the principal, if there is a local rule authorizing it or a subsequent ratification.[66] The fact that an agent who located and made discovery on a claim for his principal had previously located and sold the same land does not bring them into privity with him so as to estop them [67] nor does the fact that the agent was a stockholder in the company of the principal estop it.[68] It is generally required that location be made with reference to natural objects [69] either on or off the ground located,[70] and that the location be good when made.[71] A location must be perfected in the manner prescribed by statute relative to markings of boundaries on the ground,[72] posting of notice of location,[73] and filing the certificate

62. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849. Where one acquired a claim by purchase but did no actual work except to dig a hole for purpose of erecting a drilling machine, which was not taken onto the premises for more than a year, he was not in such actual possession as to entitle him to claim against one who entered and made a valid location and discovery. Id.

63. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849. One who enters and does all acts necessary to location except discovery will be protected against fraudulent or clandestine entry while exploring the land with reasonable diligence and delay in taking possession would not affect his rights if no other rights had intervened. Not deprived of his rights because another sunk a discovery shaft on the boundry line. Phillips v. Brill [Wyo.] 95 P 856. Where, prior to time plaintiffs had set out stakes of their mining claim, they had no possession of any part of defendant's claim, of which defendant was in possession, a working entry by plaintiff for the purpose of setting out extension stakes was a mere interruption. Biglow v. Conradt [C. C. A.] 159 F 868.

64. Prospector who enters and seeks in good faith to make a location. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849. If one's location of a placer mining claim gave him no right, after an absence to procure supplies, during which absence another had made due location and taken possession, the remedy of the latter was to protect his possession but not having done so and both parties being in possession by common consent, it became a race of diligence to discover gold and he who first discovered it had the prior right. His discovery did not relate back to date of location but location was made valid by discovery and took effect from that date. Johanson v. White [C. C. A.] 160 F 901.

65. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849.

66. Where one had located a placer claim and before discovery sold a part of it and abandoned the other part, and thereafter entered the same land as agent for another, the fact of prior location and sale did not affect his principal's rights. Whiting v. Straup [Wyo.] 95 P 849.

71. As a general rule a location must be good when made. Cannot be initiated by trespass. Phillips v. Brill [Wyo.] 95 P 856.

72. In suit to quiet title to association placer claim, evidence of location, marking of boundaries, recording of notice, sinking two shafts to bed rock and discovery of gold at 72 feet, and no evidence of other excavations except a hole a foot deep, held sufficient to show that land was unappropriated, its mineral character being admitted though there were other stakes and notices within the limits of the claim, a discovery being essential to any prior location. Cook v. Klonos [C. C. A.] 164 F 529. Disconnected markings of a claim unaccompanied by work and without actual possession do not constitute location. Ware v. White, 81 Ark. 220, 108 SW 831. Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, requiring location to be distinctly marked on ground and notice to contain a discription of the property by which it can be identified, is mandatory. Id. Rev. St. U. S., § 2324, requires a location to be distinctly marked on the ground so that its boundaries can be readily traced, and a complaint to quiet title to a claim alleging that they were not so marked held sufficient as against demurrer. Phillips v. Smith [Ariz] 95 P 91.

73. Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 3102, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, requiring notices of location to contain such description of locality by reference to natural land marks as to render the situation reasonably certain, held complied with by description of the Jesse James and Little Grant mining claims. or statement thereof,[74] and doing the proper assessment work.[75] The location notice or certificate when recorded is prima facie evidence of all the facts which the statutes require it to contain and which are set forth therein,[76] and the affidavit of the locator attached to the notice is prima facie evidence of the facts required by the statute to be stated and which are stated therein.[77] The object and purpose of location notices is to give notice to subsequent locators,[78] and they should be liberally construed to the end of upholding location made in good faith.[79] A mistake in such notice may be corrected by oral evidence.[80] Amended locations relate back to the date of the original location in the absence of intervening rights,[81] but they create no new rights.[82] The fact that a placer mining claim exceeds the legal limit in area renders it void only as to the excess,[83] and an owner in possession may elect what portion he will relinquish within a reasonable time after he discovers that his claim overruns.[84] But he cannot be forced to surrender any particular portion to another, before he knows of the excess.[85]

(§ 3) B. Maintaining location; forfeiture, loss or abandonment.[86]—See 10 C. L. 840—In order to hold a mining claim, the locator must do the required amount of assessment work thereon,[86a] and such work must be of a character which improves the claim.[87] "Improvement" means such an artificial change in the physical condition

74. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 210, providing for recording of certificates of location, is directory only and where doing of acts required to make a valid location is otherwise proved, location is not void for failure to comply with such statute. Wailes v. Davies, 158 F 667.

75. See, also, post, §3B, as to nature of work required. Affidavits of labor, showing annual assessment work, held sufficient to make prima facie showing on that question. Bismark Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., 14 Idaho, 516, 95 P 14.

79. Bismark Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., 14 Idaho, 516, 95 P 14. It is policy of the law in allowing amended locations not to avoid a location for defect in notice, but to give the locator opportunity to correct his notice. Id. One who has actual possession of a claim and has done assessment work may amend his location if there are no intervening rights. Ware v. White, 81 Ark. 220, 108 SW 831. Where requisite assessment work has been done under a defective notice, such notice may be amended where there are no intervening rights. Id. Where it appears that a location is made in good faith, the court will not hold the locator to a strict compliance with the law relative to the notice. If by reasonable construction in view of surrounding circumstances the notice will impart notice to subsequent locators, it is sufficient. Bismark Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., 14 Idaho, 516, 95 P 14.

87. Rev. St. § 2324, requiring $100 worth of work to be done each year, does not specify the kind of labor, and labor expended in extracting ore is within the requirement. It is only when labor is performed without the boundaries of the claim that its character becomes material, and in such case it must tend to development of the claim. Wailes v. Davies, 158 F 661. Cutlery, dishes, tinware, groceries, tobacco, etc., are not counted but candles used at tunnel may be. Fredricks v. Klauser [Or.] 96 P 679. Price of tools used in development work is not to be counted but reasonable compensation for their use is. Id. Worth of rails laid on ties in tunnel is counted but payment for rails will be disregarded. Id. Value of meals furnished men who received board in addition to wages is, but not cost of trans-of the earth in, on, or so reasonably near the claim as to evidence a design to discover mineral thereon, or to facilitate its extraction, and the alteration must be reasonably permanent.[88] In the development of a claim, the rule that equity regards that as done what was intended does not apply.[89] Work may be done outside the limits of a claim if beneficial thereto.[90] A stockholder in a mining corporation has such a beneficial interest in the claim that work done by him must be counted as representation work.[91] Where several adjacent claims are held by one,[92] or are held in common, representation work may be done on one for the benefit of all,[93] if done under a general plan or scheme of development,[94] but not otherwise.[95] Work done by one partner on a claim held individually cannot be counted as work done on a partnership claim.[96] Mere failure to do representation work does not determine the rights of the locator in the absence of an intervening location,[97] and a temporary suspension in work is not such a break in possession as entitles another to enter and locate,[98] and one who enters on a claim during the year within which representation work may be done cannot object that the locator has not done his work.[99] The fee for recording affidavits of proof of work is prescribed by statute.[1]

A forfeiture.[See 10 C. L. 841]—One who seeks to establish forfeiture has the burden to show by clear and convincing proof that the owner has failed to comply with the law.[2] A co-owner's interest may be forfeited to other co-owners if he refuses to do his share of assessment work.[3]

97. Under Rev. St. U. S., § 2324, providing that on failure to do location work land shall be open to relocation, etc., mere failure to do the work does not terminate the right of the locator, but it only throws the land open to relocation and in the absence of another location the original locator may hold his claim and resume work. Madison v. Octave Oil Co. [Cal.] 99 P 176.

98. Where a placer claim had been duly located and its boundaries marked and locators had commenced to sink a shaft which was subsequently completed to bed rock and mineral discovered, a temporary suspension in work for the purpose of obtaining supplies did not constitute a break in actual possession entitling another to enter though at the time of such entry discovery had not been made. (§ 3) C. Relocation.[5] See 10 C. Suits to determine adverse claims. See 10 C. L. 842—In an adverse suit to determine rights to a mining claim, the parties must stand on their own rights and recover on the strength of their own claims.[8] The plaintiff must establish in addition to other requirements of the law that the ground was not covered by a prior location, or, if it was, that it had been forfeited or abandoned.[9] While the hearing of defendant's case is ex parte, after plaintiff has failed to establish a prima facie case it is presumed that proceedings were regular and judgment for defendant correct.[10] A suit under the federal statute praying ejectment is a law action where no equitable issue is presented.[11]

§ 4. Ownership or estate obtained by claim, location and patent; apex and extralateral rights.[12] See 10 C. L. 844—It is provided by federal statutes that a placer claim shall not include a known vein or lode within its limits and not included in the location papers.[12a] Whether a vein or lode is a known or an unknown one may be a question for the jury,[13] and on such question expert testimony[14] and evidence as to

12a. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2320, declaring that claims on "veins or lode" shall be governed by laws in force at date of location and § 2333 providing that placer claim shall not include known vein or lode not included in application but does include unknown lode or vein, held terms "vein" and "lode" are synonymous. Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 94 P 842. "Vein or lode" means a body of mineral or mineral bearing rock within defined boundaries in a general mass of the mountain and "known vein or lode" is one clearly ascertained and of such extent as to render the land more valuable and justify its exploitation. Id.

13. Evidence as to whether vein or lode within limits of a placer claim was excepted from the patent, and whether it was a known vein, and subject to location by another, held for the jury. Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 94 P 842.

14. On issue as to whether lode or vein within limits of a placer claim was of sufficient value to justify its exploitation, so as to except it from placer patent, expert testimony based on observation of local conditions that prospects of the vein were good held admissible. Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 94 P 842.

the extent or value of the vein or lode is admissible.[15] Evidence of development work done is admissible on the question of good faith.[16]

§ 5. Right to mine on private land thrown open to the public.[17] See 10 C. L. 997

§ 6. Private conveyances or grants of mineral rights in land.[18] See 10 C. L. 844

Mineral rights may be sold separately and apart from the land itself.[18a] There is a clear distinction between a grant of a right for a term to take minerals from land and an outright grant of the minerals in place.[19] A right, of unlimited duration, to occupy land for the purpose of prospecting is a freehold interest but being vested for a specific purpose becomes extinct when the purpose is accomplished or work abandoned.[19a] A grant of oil and gas on certain land is a grant of so much as the grantee may find there, but vests him with no estate therein until it is found.[20] A description in a deed of mineral rights may be rendered sufficiently accurate by reference to other records.[21] Technical terms used will be given their usual interpretation.[22] The word "minerals" is not confined to metalic substances and where used in a conveyance without qualification it includes gas and oil.[23] Terms used to identify the grant will not be construed as a limitation thereon.[24] A reservation is to be construed according to the plain meaning of the terms employed.[25] An apparent reservation may be construed as a limitation, after a long lapse of time where no rights have been asserted by the grantor.[26] Contracts for the sale of mineral rights

15. Where one claimed a lode location within limits of a placer location on ground that it was excepted from the placer patent, evidence of the extent and value of the vein at any time before or after patent proceedings for the placer was competent to show whether it was a "known vein." Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 94 P 842.

16. Where one claimed right to a lode location within limits of a placer claim, as excepted from the placer patent, affidavits of representation work done on the lode claim were admissible to show good faith and belief that same warranted expenditures to develop it. Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 94 P 842.

18a. The owner of a fee may lease or sell the mineral right in the property absolutely while retaining the fee in himself. A court may also exercise this power in settling an estate. Baker v. Royal Lead & Spar Co., 32 Ky. L. R. 982, 107 SW 704.

19. The latter conveys an interest in the land. Board of Sup'rs of Hancock County v. Imperial Naval Stores Co. [Miss.] 47 S 177.

19a. Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 84 NE 53, citing 1 C. L. 900.

20. On account of its wandering nature, it may escape and be withdrawn on other land and is not subject to absolute ownership. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46. Oil and gas while in the earth is not subject to ownership distinct from the soil and a grant thereof is not a grant of oil in the ground but only of so much as the grantee may find and passes nothing which can be made the subject of a real action. Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 84 NE 53.

21. A description in a deed conveying to one seams of coal which is by itself inaccurate but by reference to recorded deeds is made certain and his grantor was in possession under a deed purporting to convey the fee, held such deed first mentioned was prima facie evidence of title in him of the coal. McGuire v. Boyd Coal & Coke Co., 236 Ill. 69, 86 NE 174.

22. Description in a deed of all that certain "coal bed" means "coal vein" and passed the entire bed or vein of coal and not a parcel thereof. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Gleason [C. C. A.] 159 F 383.

23. A reservation in a deed of "the right to all minerals in and under" the land, where unlimited and unqualified, reserves not only solid minerals but oil and gas. Suit v. Hochstetter Oil Co., 63 W. Va. 317, 61 SE 307.

24. In a description in deed of all that certain coal bed on Lackawanna creek on lot No. 1 now occupied by W., the phrase "all that certain coal bed" indicates an entirety, the other parts of the description being used merely to identify the thing and not to define or divide it. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Gleason [C. C. A.] 159 F 383.

25. Where owners of land executed an oil and gas lease for 20 years and thereafter agreed to extend it for 10 years and subsequently deeded the land to another reserving to themselves the oil and gas until expiration of the leases and also the right to execute a new lease for 10 years after their expiration, held the reservation was for the purpose of reserving rights of the grantors in the existing lease and to extend the same for 10 years. Collins v. South Penn Oil Co. [Pa.] 71 A 319.

26. Deed reciting that title and right to surface, except mining privileges thereof, were warranted by grantors held no claim to mining privileges having been made by successors of grantor for 50 years, and gran-and amendments thereto are to be construed as one instrument.[27] They are to be construed to convey the estates or rights intended by the parties,[28] and are to be given effect according to their terms,[29] and conditions will not be held to have been met unless substantially fulfilled.[30] The practical construction placed thereon by the parties will be given effect.[31] A purchaser is not absolved from his contract duty to promptly make certain improvements, because of a defect in the vendor's title, unknown to him,[32] nor because of failure of the vendee to meet a requirement, when in no manner affected the making of the improvement,[33] nor by other facts not within the vendor's control.[34]

Conditions of a contract for the sale of mining rights will not be specifically enforced where there is an adequate remedy at law,[35] nor where the right to such remedy does not clearly appear,[36] and, where the contract provides the remedy for its breach, such remedy must be resorted to.[37] One who claims under a patent is not tor and grantee being dead, such provision would be construed as a limitation and not a reservation of mining rights. Towns v. Brown [Ky.] 114 SW 773.

27. Agreement of sale of mining claims and amendments thereto must be construed as one instrument, and a provision in an amendment requiring buyer to give seller employment held not without consideration. Mallory v. Globe-Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

28. Contract by which owner agreed to sell mineral rights, and permit purchaser pending delivery of deed to remove minerals and in event of the owner's failure to procure a release of a mortgage to lease the land, held to confer on the purchaser an interest in the land and not a mere license. National Light & Thorium Co. v. Alexander [S. C.] 61 SE 214. Contract binding owners to sell an interest in mines in consideration of $500 cash and $14,500 within one year, purchaser to pay all taxes during "life of this option," held a contract of purchase and not a mere option. Chenoweth v. Butterfield [Ariz.] 94 P 1131.

29. Under a contract giving one the right to explore mineral land, the contractor agreeing, in case of success to pay the owner a certain price for the land, he was not bound to drill for commercial substances but was only bound to buy the land in case of success in finding them. Anse La Butte (Le Danois) Oil & Mineral Co. v. Babb [La.] 47 S 754. Contract for sale of mining claims construed and held not to entitle sellers to exchange stock received by them in purchasing company for stock in a company formed which acquired the claims. Mallory v. Globe-Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

30. Where a contract permitted plaintiff's assignor to explore oil land and provided for sale to him for specified price if paid within 90 days after success on the land, the finding of oil in less than paying quantities was not a success in finding commercial substances within the contract. Anse La Butte (Le Danois) Oil & Mineral Co. v. Babb [La.] 47 S 754.

31. Contract for sale of coal lands construed, together with circumstances and construction placed thereon by the parties and held to show that the parties had construed it to mean that a survey was to be made after execution of deed and any deficiency accounted for. Pittsburg Coal Co. v. Cook, 219 Pa. 539, 69 A 85. Under contract for sale of mining property providing for payment in instalments, the purchaser agreeing to do developement work, proceeds of ore to be equally divided, except that in case of consummation of purchase the portion paid was to be credited on purchase price and in case of default in payment of any instalment it should be treated as forfeited and sums paid treated as rent, on default all vendor's acts were held consistent with an election to forfeit and the purchaser was held not entitled to reimbursement of sums paid on theory of mutual rescission. Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 P 1007.

32. Under contract to sell mine where a large part of the price was to be paid in profits, and requiring vendee to promptly install a reduction plant, he was not excused from doing so by the fact that the vendor's title to a small fraction of the mine was defective which fact was unknown to the vendee. Brown v. Gordon-Tiger Min. & Reduction Co. [Colo.] 97 P 1042.

33. Where contract for sale of mine required vendee to promptly install a reduction plant, and purchase price to apply on liens against the property, failure of vendor to furnish a schedule of liens, at most only extended time to pay them and did not excuse delay in constructing reduction plant. Brown v. Gordon-Tiger Min. & Reduction Co. [Colo.] 97 P 1042.

34. Where garnishment against vendors, temporarily attached a part of the purchase price which was to be applied in paying off liens, was ultimately discharged, the fact of its existence nor the opinion of vendee's engineer did not justify willful refusal to promptly construct a reduction plant as required. Brown v. Gordon-Tiger Min. & Reduction Co. [Colo.] 97 P 1042.

35. Condition that purchaser should give seller employment at the mines. Mallory v. Globe-Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

36. Conditions in sale of mining claims relative to running cross cuts, shafts and drifts will not be specifically enforced, where no time within which to do the work is specified, and there is no allegation of damage because of failure to do it, and specific performance is not directly asked. Mallory v. Globe-Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

37. Contract for sale of mining claims pro-estopped to sue for specific performance of a contract for a conveyance of the claim because he did not adverse an application for the patent.[38] In Louisiana a contract right to explore land is assignable.[39]

Rights as between surface and subterranean owners. See 10 C. L. 845—A grantor who reserves the minerals has a right to sink a shaft through the surface.[40] As a general rule, where the ownership of the surface and underlying minerals has been severed the owner of the surface has an absolute right to subjacent support,[41] and such right is waived only by express words or clear implication,[42] but such right may not be enforced in equity where there is an adequate remedy at law.[43] Where minerals have been severed from the surface by conveyance, the owner of the surface cannot hold adversely to the owner of the minerals unless he disseises him.[44]

§ 7. Leases.[45] Estate or interest created. See 10 C. L. 846—Oil leases stand on an entirely different basis from other leases.[45a] As a general rule an oil and gas lease vests no estate in the lessee but confers a mere right of exploration [46] until the minerals are found,[47] and until then vests the lessee with no title to minerals in place,[48] but it gives him a right of action for damages against one who invades his rights.[49] In some states, however, it is considered to pass an estate for some purposes,[50] and in others it is such a conveyance as must be executed in the manner prescribed by statutes.[51] A lease granting certain rights to the lessee but not binding him to perform viding for forfeiture of machinery and appliances as liquidated damages for breach by purchaser excludes remedy by rescission of sale or specific performance. Mallory v. Globe-Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

38. His claim not being adverse to the patent but under it. Noweil v. McBride [C. C. A.] 162 F 432.

40. Baker v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 219 Pa. 398, 68 A 1014.

41. Where an owner sells the surface and reserves the minerals in general terms, there is an implied covenant to so mine as not to injure the surface. Collins v. Gleason Coal Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 497. If the owner of minerals removes them and injury results to the surface by subsidence, he is liable no matter how skillfully he conducted his operations. Collins v. Gleason Coal Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 497.

42. Collins v. Gleason Coal Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 497.

43. Where an owner of coal land conveyed the minerals without reserving right to surface support or waiving any right he might have to such support, held the grantee of the minerals would not be enjoined from removing the coal so as to threaten sinking of surface where injury was not irreparable and no buildings or improvements were endangered and sinking of surface was improbable. Berkey v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co., 220 Pa. 65, 69 A 329.

45a. Work to be done thereunder is ordinarily experimental and speculative, and if no mineral is found no estate vests. Conkling v. Krandusky, 112 NYS 13.

46. Oil and gas lease, giving the right to prospect in consideration of a portion of oil found, if produced in paying quantities, and an annual rental on gas wells vests no estate in lessee prior to discovery, but confers a mere right of exploration. Richlands Oil Co. v. Morriss, 108 Va. 288, 61 SE 762. Ordinary oil and gas lease does not convey an interest in land nor a present interest to minerals in the premises. Beardsley v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. [Kan.] 96 P 859.

47. Oil lease construed and held to vest in the lessee no present title to a stratum of land in place but left title to the oil in the landowner until it was brought to the surface and gave the lessee an estate for years to prospect and extract oil which constitutes a servitude and not a chattel real. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County [Cal.] 99 P 483.

48. An oil lease in ordinary form, giving the exclusive right to explore for produce and sell oil on payment of a royalty, does not vest the lessee with title to the oil in place. Backer v. Penn Lubricating Co. [C. C. A.] 162 F 627.

49. One who goes upon the land, drills wells and removes and sells oil. Backer v. Penn Lubricating Co. [C. C. A.] 162 F 627.

50. Rights of an oil lessee is a claim to possession of land and taxable as such. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County [Cal.] 99 P 483. Is an estate in land. Id.

51. Lease of unlimited duration to enter land occupied as a homestead and prospect for oil and gas, erect necessary structures, etc., is such a conveyance as is void unless executed and acknowledged as required by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 52, § 4. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219. An oil and gas lease of unlimited duration granting the right to enter and prospect, drill and operate, lay pipes for transportaany obligation creates a mere option which the lessor may terminate at any time before the lessee becomes bound.[52] Where a leased mine is flooded by nelgigence of a third person, the lessee can only recover from him for loss of personal property and severed coal.[53]

Interpretation and effect in general. See 10 C. L. 846—As in construing other witten contracts,[54] a mining lease is to be construed so as to effectuate the intention of the parties.[55] The construction placed on a lease by the parties will be adopted unless at variance with the correct legal interpretation,[56] and where it is ambiguous, parol evidence may be resorted to to explain it.[57] As a general rule such leases are held to contain an implied covenant to prosecute work of development with reasonable diligence,[58] and to protect the property by sinking as many offset wells as are reasonably necessary.[59] A provision for extension though optional in form will not be construed to authorize the lessee to avoid his obligations.[60] Where a lessee participates in partition of the land and recognizes the several ownership, the character of its holding is changed from that of lessee from joint owners to lessee from each owner.[61]

Essentials and validity. See 10 C. L. 845—A lease by one cotenant is void as to other cotenants,[62] but is valid as between the parties so long as the land remains unparti-tion, etc., is a conveyance of an interest in a homestead and requires a release of homestead rights as prescribed by the homestead statute. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46.

52. An oil and gas lease granting the right to mine for oil and gas, so long as the same are produced and royalties paid, but not binding the lessee to perform any obligation, is a mere option which the lessor may withdraw at any time before the lessee does any thing to bind himself. Cortelyou v. Barnsdall, 236 Ill. 138, 86 NE 200. Revocation of such option by the lessor is withdrawal of an offer which the lessee had not accepted. Id.

53. Ulrey v. Poe, 134 Ill. App. 298.

54. See Contracts, 11 C. L. 729; Deed of Conveyance, 11 C. L. 1051, and like topics.

55. Lease and option construed and held the lessee had an option to purchase during the third year but was not bound to purchase. Pollard v. Sayre [Colo.] 98 P 816. Provision in oil and gas lease requiring completion of test well within specified time and well drilled to completion within 12 months or a certain rental paid held complied with where well was drilled on adjoining land and gas struck but there was no market for the product, and, on failure to complete a well on the premises within the period prescribed, the lessee paid the rental stipulated. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46. Lease by which lessee agreed to develop oil land for a certain royalty and subsequent modification thereof providing for limited operation of the only well on the premises because of low market and poor storage facilities construed and held the modification applied to entire property though referring to but one well, and lessor waived her right to have a larger amount of oil produced. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 609.

56. Oil and gas lease as construed by the parties held to show that it has been construed so as to entitle the lessor to $15 per year rental. Scott v. Lafayette Gas Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 495.

57. Mining lease giving the right to mine on land for a specified royalty and providing that lessees could take 20 tons of ore free from royalty as compensation for making roads, bridges, etc., also costs of surveys, held ambiguous and parol evidence was admissible to show who should pay expense of certain surveys. Codman v. Adamson, 114 NYS 408.

58. Oil and gas lease for 10 years and so long as oil and gas were found in paying quantities construed and held to contain implied covenant to prosecute work of development with reasonable diligence, but the lessee was not to continue it without intermission, and that there was no lack of good faith or diligence. Phillips v. Hamilton [Wyo.] 95 P 846. Where sole compensation is a share of the product, there is an implied covenant to operate diligently. National Light & Thorium Co. v. Alexander [S. C.] 61 SE 214.

59. Though an oil lease does not specify the number of wells to be sunk, and does not require sinking of offset wells to protect the land from damage, an implied obligation rests on the lessee to sink as many wells as are reasonably necessary to protect the property. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 609.

60. Where oil and gas lease required one well to be drilled within two years and also to drill a second well unless the first should become useless, and if wells were not drilled on payment of a stipulated rental the agreement should continue as though wells had been drilled, the latter clause, though optional in form, did not authorize the lessee to refuse to drill wells or pay rent and thus avoid the contract, but on failure to drill wells he was liable for rent. Scott v. Lafayette Gas Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 495.

61. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Jeff Chaison Townsite Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 609.

62. Oil and gas lease made by one cotentioned.[68] The false representations which will invalidate a lease must be as to a material matter [64] and must be relied upon.[65] Nonpayment of the nominal consideration recited does not unvalidate a lease.[66] The fact that a lease absolves the lessee from liability does not render it void for want of mutuality.[67]

Rights, duties and liabilities of the parties See 10 C. L. 847 are generally to be found in the terms of the lease [68] as construed.[69] Where a lease gives the lessee a right to surrender at any time and avoid all subsequent liability, it cannot be specifically enforced.[70] The damages for breach of a lease being necessarily uncertain, it is competent for the parties to fix a liquidated sum.[71] Where a lease impliedly authorizes removal of buildings and improvements, but gives the lessor a lien thereon for royalty, such lien is the only interest the lessor has.[72] A lessor who holds proceeds of ore as trustee for the lessee cannot retain them as offset for breach of the lease.[73]

ant. Zeigler v. Brenneman, 237 Ill. 15, 86 NE 597.

63. Zeigler v. Brenneman, 237 Ill. 15, 86 NE 597.

64. Where owner executed an oil and gas lease with object of having his land prospected, false statement by lessee that he was a producer of oil was not a material representation. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

65. Where there is no proof that a lessor relied on false representations of the lessee, equity would not cancel the lease for fraud. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

66. Where real consideration of a lease was the exploitation of the mineral resources of the land and not the recited consideration of $1, nonpayment of the $1 did not invalidate the lease. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

67. Surrender clause in oil and gas lease, giving lessee option to surrender before expiration on payment of one dollar, but not giving lessor right to compel surrender, did not create tenancy at will and was not void for want of mutuality. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46.

68. Provision in oil lease that the lessee should "stand all expense of any lawsuit that may occur in defending his lease" requires him to defend against a prior lease or show that such prior lease was valid, in order to recover consideration for the lease. Conkling v. Krandusky, 112 NYS 13. Where oil and gas lease provided that lessee might cancel it on giving notice, paying rent due and five dollars, and canceling lease of record, a complaint for rent alleging that lessee had tendered $5 sued for but had failed to give notice, or to pay accrued rent, held insufficient. It not being alleged that lessee had canceled the lease and the fact that he was in arrears in rent did not obligate him to cancel it and become liable for the collection fee. Scott v. Lafayette Gas Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 495. Where one of the lessees of oil lands sold his interest and purchased a quarter interest in other land, and the original lessor contracted with him and that when he, the owner, acquired the three-fourths interest in the land heretofore mentioned, he would extend the original lease to the owner of the quarter interest on surrender of a certain interest in oil produced. Held such agreement referred only to the fourth interest in the land purchased and not to land covered by the original lease in which the lessee had no further interest. Collins v. South Penn. Oil Co. [Pa.] 71 A 319.

69. Lease for 3 years and as much longer as gas or oil was found in paying quantities, "provided wells were completed during term," construed and held that unless other wells than test well was completed during term lessee was not entitled to an extention. Hazel Green Oil & Gas Co. v. Collier, 33 Ky. L. R. 495, 110 SW 343.

70. Oil and gas lease for five years and as much longer as minerals should be found in paying quantities but giving lessee right to surrender on payment of $1, and avoid all subsequent liabilities, cannot be specifically enforced by the lessor. Ulrey v. Keith, 237 Ill. 284, 86 NE 696. Such provision also deprives lessee of the right to enjoin violation of the lease by the lessor. Id. Where one cotenant gave an oil and gas lease on the premises with an option to the lessee to surrender at any time and thereafter the cotenants granted oil and gas rights to another, held that the option of the lessee deprived him of the right to specific performance until he had placed himself in a position where he could be compelled to perform and he could not compel partition of the oil and gas apart from the land or of the land itself. Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 233 Ill. 9, 84 NE 53. An oil and gas lease which gives the lessee an option to surrender is not void for want of mutuality but deprives the lessee of specific performance since if such relief were granted the lessee could nullify the decree by exercising his option. Id.

71. Breach of a provision in an oil and gas lease binding the lessee to drill a well to a certain depth within a specified time. Blodget v. Columbia Live Stock Co. [C. C. A.] 164 F 305.

72. Under mining lease requiring lessees to pay taxes on improvements which were not to be removed until royalty was paid and that lessors should have lien therefor, held machinery, buildings, etc., were not fixtures. Cherokee Const. Co. v. Bishop [Ark.] 112 SW 189.

73. Lessor in mining lease who has possession of trust funds belonging to lessee as proceeds of ore mined cannot retain such funds in order to offset damages due him for violation of the lease. Florence-Goldfield Min. Co. v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. of Nev. [Nev.] 97 P 49.

The fact that an assignee of an oil lease knew that it could not be assigned without the owner's consent does not render him a purchaser at his peril where the assignment contains a covenant of authority to sell.[74] An assignee who takes the lease subject to all its conditions may be proceeded against directly by the lessor.[75] The terms of payment for the sale of an interest in a lease are to be found in the contract of sale.[76] An assignee of a prior lease cannot eject a subsequent lessee,[77] and a lessee of one cotenant cannot maintain partition against a lessee of all the cotenants.[78] Lessors are not necessary parties to a suit to partition rights of lessees.[79]

Rents and royalties. See 10 C. L. 847—Oil and gas leases generally condition the payment of rental or royalties on the production of minerals in paying quantities.[80] The basis of production on which royalties are compared depends on the terms of the contract.[81] A provision requiring development of the property or payment of rent does not require payment in advance.[82] Where a lease provides for the payment of royalties on coal which passes through a certain mesh, the lessee is liable for the royalty though the coal is given a different name.[83] The gas pressure basis upon which one semi-annual instalment of rent is paid is presumed to continue until the next instalment falls due.[84] A disclaimer by one co-owner of an interest in royalty advanced is not a disclaimer as to future royalties.[85] The sufficiency of a complaint to recover rentals is governed by the general rules of pleadings.[86]

74. Shannon v. Mastin [Mo. App.] 108 SW 1116.

75. Under stipulation in assignment of lease that assignee took subject to all conditions therein, assignee took place of lessee and lessor could proceed against him directly for breach. McGoodwin v. Lusterine Min. & Polishing Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 521, 110 SW 409.

76. Contract by which lessee sold a two-thirds interest in lease to be paid for out of "first net profits" means first excess of current receipts for ore above current expenses. Crocker v. Barteau, 212 Mo. 359, 110 SW 1062.

77. Assignee of an oil and gas lease with the right to enter the premises and mine for oil and gas cannot eject the lessee on a subsequent lease. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

78. Where one cotenant executed an oil and gas lease and thereafter all cotenants gave a like lease to a different person, neither lessee could maintain partition to secure his interest. Zeigler v. Brenneman, 237 Ill. 15, 86 NE 597. Nor could either operate without consent of the other. Id.

79. Beardsley v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. [Kan.] 96 P 859.

80. In an oil and gas lease providing for a certain rental per well, if gas were found in sufficient quantities to market and be piped to market, gas is found in such quantities whenever it exists in wells to such extent that considering opportunity to sell and cost and expense of selling it could be reasonably sold at a profit to the lessee and a charge to such effect is not bad as leaving out of consideration the required rental if the gas were marketed. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Wilhelm [Ind. App.] 86 NE 86. In action for rentals under a gas lease providing for rent if gas were produced in sufficient quantities to make it marketable, where wells were in operation and producing oil in marketable quantities, the original cost of drilling was not to be considered in determining whether gas produced could be marketed profitably, the only expense to be considered would be operating and selling expense and rental. Id.

81. Mining lease held to require payment of royalties on screenings. Cantrall Co-Op. Coal Co. v. Level, 139 Ill. App. 104. Evidence as to quantity of coal mined held to sustain verdict in action for royalties. Missouri & I. Coal Co. v. Reichert, 133 Ill. App. 123.

82. Where oil and gas lease required drilling of test well within one year or payment of annual rental counting from expiration of said year, held rent was not required to be paid in advance on failure to drill the test well and the lessee had all of the second year within which to pay. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

83. Under lease defining "pea" coal as coal which passes with dirt through a three quarter inch mesh, a lessee cannot avoid payment of royalties on coal which passes through such mesh though it is known as "Barley" "rice" or "buckwheat" coal. Glick v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 221 Pa. 428, 70 A 810.

84. Under oil and gas lease providing for payment of a certain sum per pound for each pound registered on casing at the well, where first semi-annual instalment of rent is paid after pressure is ascertained, is presumed in suit for second instalment that pressure remained the same. Moore v. Ohio Valley Gas Co., 63 W. Va. 455, 60 SE 401.

85. Where several owners joined in execution of a mining lease reserving a royalty and one of them disclaimed interest in royalty advanced. Hatfield v. Followay [Ky.] 113 SW 853.

86. See Pleading, 10 C. L. 1173. Complaint to recover rent under oil and gas lease, alleging that defendant paid rents to a certain date, that for certain periods rent in specified sums became due and that plaintiff was owner of the premises, sufficiently alleged that rent was due and unpaid when complaint was filed. Scott v. Lafayette Gas Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 495.

Forfeitures, rescission, cancellation and abandonment. See 10 C. L. 848—A lease may be terminated by express surrender or by a surrender in law affected by abandonment by the lessee and resumption of possession by the lessor.[87] Abandonment is the surrender or relinquishment of rights or property by one person to another, and includes both intention to abandon and the act of abandonment.[88] While it it said that mining leases stand upon an entirely different basis from other contracts, and that the rule that forfeiture or abandonment is not looked upon with favor does not apply,[89] yet equity will not cancel a lease for mere delay in paying rent or commutation money,[90] nor for failure to commence operations within the time stipulated, if it appears that the lessee is ready and willing to perform those covenants,[91] or when it appears that there is no market for the product;[92] and equity will relieve a lessee from a mere technical forfeiture, on his performance of all the covenants of the lease, where rights of third persons have not intervened.[93] But where there is clear failure to perform the conditions, the rights of the lessee may be forfeited,[94] or the lease may be considered as abandoned by him on his failure for a long period of time to prosecute work of development,[95] and it may be canceled where minerals can

87. Oil and gas lease. Sult v. Hochstetter Oil Co., 63 W. Va. 317, 61 SE 307. Surrender in law held shown where well was abandoned as exhausted and more than three years later the lessor executed a new lease. Id.

88. Held no abandonment of an oil and gas lease where lessee within one year drilled a well and within seven months returned with his outfit to drill another. Phillips v. Hamilton [Wyo.] 95 P 846.

89. Conkling v. Krandusky, 112 NYS 13.

90. Pheasant v. Hanna, 63 W. Va. 613, 60 SE 618. Where lessor in oil and gas lease repudiated the lease by releasing before the expiration of the year in which the first lessee had the right to pay rent, and before the expiration of the year the first lessee sued to set aside the second lease and tendered performance of all conditions of his lease, held a sufficient tender of the rent called for. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219. Where lessor in oil and gas lease when notified that rent had been left at a bank for him but refused to accept it on the ground that the lease was void, he waived any duty of the lessee to make a legal tender of the rent. Id.

91. Pheasant v. Hanna, 63 W. Va. 613, 60 SE 618. Where lessee in oil and gas lease executed June 15th for five years served notice on September 15th of following year that he intended to comply with requirement to dig a test well within one year, and tendered the $100 rental required if no well was completed within one year. On September 15th no work had been done under a subsequent lease, but on October 14th when the lessee went onto the land to drill he found a well in operation dug by a subsequent lessee. Held his rights were not forfeited. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

92. Oil and gas lease will not be forfeited for breach of implied covenant to drill wells where there were no means by which the product of wells could be marketed. The remedy of the lessor is an action for damages. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46.

93. Pheasant v. Hanna, 63 W. Va. 613, 60 SE 618.

94. Under coal lease requiring operation of mine with due diligence and that it should not be idle for more than 30 consecutive days, held, where it remained idle for 10 months in one year and three or four months in another, it was forfeitable at option of owner. Cherokee Const. Co. v. Bishop [Ark.] 112 SW 189. Where one agreed to transfer a mining lease and property to a company to be organized by another who promised to contribute a certain sum as capital after organization, the agreement being made for the purpose of raising working capital, the promise of the latter to contribute to the stock was a condition subsequent and failure to perform justified the former in rescinding the transfer. Schneider v. Miller, 113 NYS 399. Where in order to obtain money to continue business one agreed to convey a lease of asphalt land and his interest in the business to a company which was to be organized by another who agreed to contribute a certain sum to its capital but failed to do so, held that since the principal purpose of the contract was to secure money to carry on the business failure of the latter to contribute was an abandonment and entitled the former to rescind the transfer to the company. Id. The obligation of the lessee in respect to development is strict and failure to perform warrants rescission. Oil and gas lease. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 140 Ill. App. 147.

95. Oil and gas lease for 20 years construed and held to contemplate an early exploration and operation and failure of the lessee to do anything for seven years was equivalent to a surrender, and gave the lessor the right to treat it as abandoned. Mills v. Hartz, 77 Kan. 218, 94 P 142. Where an owner gave an oil and gas lease in 1893 for 15 years or so long as oil and gas should be found in paying quantities and the lessee in 1894 drilled a well but found no oil and removed his drilling appliances leaving only the casing in the well and did nothing further until 1905, after the owner had given another lease, held to show an abandonment of the lease. Conkling v. Krandusky, 112 NYS 13. Where an oil lease is executed for 15 years or as long as oil is found in paying quantibe no longer produced in paying quantities.[96] A lease will not be forfeited for reasons not stipulated as grounds for forfeiture,[97] and grounds for forfeiture not stipulated will not be implied.[98] In forfeiting a lease, forfeiture of other property of great value will not be required.[99] Right of the lessor to forfeit may be waived.[1]

§ 8. Working contracts.[2]—See 10 C. L. 851—The rights of parties to contracts for the development of lands rest in the terms of such contracts,[2a] and whether such contracts have been violated may be a question of fact.[3] Under a contract allowing one to relinquish mining rights on 30 days' written notice the owner may waive such notice.[4] Such a contract is not a grant or a lease, and all rights thereunder are extinguished by abandonment.[5] Under a contract granting the right to take sufficient rock from a quarry to complete a certain dam, sufficient rock to complete the dam may be taken though it exceeds the estimated quantity.[6]

§ 9. Mining partnerships and corporations.[7]—See 10 C. L. 851—A mining partnership is not founded on the delectus personae of the members and the powers of the members are limited to such acts as are necessary to the transaction of its business.[7a] ties, and the lessee after drilling a well and finding no oil removes his machinery and appliances and does nothing for 11 years, the granting of another lease by the owner is a declaration that he regards the first lease as terminated. Id. Under lease requiring lessee to commence operations within specified time or pay $10 per month rental, with option to at any time surrender, where he failed to commence operations and paid first month's rent, and then ceased to pay for two months, held time was the controlling factor and by failure to commence work or pay the rental he abandoned the lease. Id.

96. Oil lease properly canceled where it appeared that oil could be no longer produced in paying quantities. Dixie Development Co. v. Smith, 77 Kan. 832, 93 P 1132.

97. Oil and gas lease construed and held not to provide for forfeiture for nonpayment of royalties. Davis v. Chautauqua Oil & Gas Co. [Kan.] 96 P 47.

98. Where oil and gas lease provided for forfeiture in case a test well was not completed by a certain date and also for a stipulated rental in such case, grounds of forfeiture not stipulated would not be implied as the ground stated would imply exclusion of all others and agreement for rental excluded a forfeiture not stipulated for. Poe v. Ulrey, 233 Ill. 56, 84 NE 46.

99. In forfeiting oil and gas lease for breach of conditions. Work v. Fidelity Oil & Gas Co. [Kan.] 98 P 801.

1. Where an assignment of a permit to drill an oil well is made at time when the owner has a right to but has not forfeited the permit, it cannot be said that the assignment is without consideration since the owner may waive the forfeiture. Shannon v. Maston [Mo. App.] 108 SW 1116.

2a. Under contract for drilling coal land for certain price per foot to a given depth if coal was not reached before, and for same price if it was necessary to go lower, contractor's right to recover was not dependent on striking coal, payment having been made for work done as though striking coal was not a condition precedent. Western Fuel Co. v. Fuller [Ark.] 113 SW 1021. Complaint for breach of contract by which one was to remove coal from a mine alleging that plaintiff was to have a certain price per ton for removing the coal and after hardest portion had been removed the owner refused to permit removal of remainder held to state cause of action. Sagamore Coal Co. v. Clark, 33 Ky. L. R. 134, 109 SW 349.

3. Evidence held for the jury in an action for breach of a contract for removal of coal from a mine. Sagamore Coal Co. v. Clark, 33 Ky. L. R. 134, 109 SW 349. Evidence examined and held not to show that one who had a contract to take rock from a quarry operated the quarry improperly and in such a manner as to violate their agreement to develop it. Rudiger v. Coleman, 114 NYS 689.

4. Contract allowing one to mine certain minerals. Payne v. Neuval [Cal.] 99 P 476.

5. Contract in consideration of one dollar and royalty granting one the right to mine certain minerals and giving the grantee right to relinquish on 30 day's notice. Payne v. Neuval [Cal.] 99 P 476.

6. Where owner of granite quarry agreed to convey it to another who had a contract for construction of a dam, the latter to pay a cash consideration and form a corporation, the owners to have 40 and the contractors 6 per cent of the stock, and the contractors to take only so much rock as was needed to complete the dam, held they were entitled to take sufficient rock to complete the dam though in excess of the approximate amount and alterations in plans necessitating an additional amount. Rudiger v. Coleman, 114 NYS 689.

7a. One may not borrow money, employ counsel, execute notes, etc., on behalf of the partnership. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736. One partner may bind the firm by a contract employing men to develop the property. Id. Evidence held to show that a member of a firm directed working of mines for the benefit of the firm and not for his individual benefit. Id.

A mining partnership may exist, though all the partners may not have an interest in the property if they have an interest in the working of it,[8] and it is not essential that there be an express agreement to become partners,[9] or an express agreement to share in the profits and losses.[10] The distinctions between a mining and a trading partnership are that a member of the former may assign his interest without the consent of his copartner,[11] and neither the assignment of one partner's interest nor the death of a partner works a dissolution of the firm,[12] and one member of the firm has not power to bind his associates to the same extent as in a trading partnership.[13] Mining partners have a lien on the social property for advances or balances due them for payment of debts,[14] but having divided the product by division orders, giving each his share, no such lien exists on the divided product but remains on the social property used in operating the mines.[15] Claims discovered after dissolution of a partnership belong to the individuals making the discovery.[16] The powers of directors of mining corporations are fixed by statute.[17]

§ 10. Public mining regulations.[18]—See 10 C. L. 852—In the exercise of the police power, laws may be enacted requiring precautions in hydraulic mining to prevent injury to others by the discharge of debris into navigable streams, and to ascertain the best means to be adapted to that end.[18a] But the law cannot declare that observance of such precautions shall exonerate the mine owner from liability for injuries to the property of third persons.[19] In New York statutes have been enacted looking to the preservation of liquid minerals.[20] Under a statute making it a crime for a miner

8. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736. Written agreement between owner and another by the latter was to furnish labor and develop mines, profits to be divided and the latter to have a right to purchase an interest, held to create a partnership. Id.

9. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736. A mining partnership exists where several owners of a mine co-operate in working it. Walker v. Bruce [Colo.] 97 P 250. Where two parties obtained a lease of a mine and a bond for a conveyance and each paid one-half the consideration and agreed to work the property jointly and each bear one-half the expense, held equal partners. Id. Where stockholders of a mining corporation, after the treasury was depleted and stock sold, without formal action by the company put up operating expenses, held not to constitute a partnership, but voluntary loans to the corporation. Dodge v. Chambers, 43 Colo. 366, 96 P 178.

10. Such being an incident to the prosecution of the business. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736.

11. The assignee becomes a partner without the consent of the other partners. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736. Contract between lessee of a mine and others by which the latter agreed to contribute certain sums of money to operate the mine held as between themselves to be an equitable assignment of part of the lessee's interest, and it was immaterial that his agreement with the owner prohibited assignment without notice. Id.

12. Bentley v. Brossard, 33 Utah, 396, 94 P 736. Whether retiring partner is liable for subsequent indebtedness depends on the facts. As to employes who do not know of the change he is liable for wages, but not if they have notice. Kelley v. McNamee [C. C. A.] 164 F 369.

18a. Sutter County v. Nichols, 152 Cal. 688, 93 P 872.

19. Sutter County v. Nichols, 152 Cal. 688, 93 P 872. Act Cong. March 1, 1893, c. 183, 27 Stat. 507, providing for appointment of California debris commission, and regulating method of disposing of debris from hydraulic mines, held the purpose of such act was to prevent injury by debris but it was not intended to exonerate the mine owner from liability nor limit the power of the state courts to protect private property. Id. Provisions of the act requiring notice and hearing of all persons interested was not intended to conclude owners of lower lands with respect to injuries that might be inflicted, but to enable the commission to obtain all aid it could from suggestions of interested persons. Id.

20. Act N. Y. May 20, 1908, for protection of natural mineral springs of state and proto enter a mine against caution or disobey orders or do any other act endangering lives or health of persons in a mine, intent to endanger life or property is not an element.[21] "Caution" as used in such statute means to give notice of or warn of or against danger.[22]

§ 11. Statutory liens and charges.[23]—See 10 C. L. 852—As a general rule any labor expended in developing a mine is entitled to a lien thereon,[23a] and in Alaska such lien extends to the owner's interest where the work is done with his knowledge,[24] and the court may allow an attorney's fee on foreclosure.[25] In New Mexico the court determines upon what the lien attaches.[26]

§ 12. Mining torts.[27]—See 10 C. L. 852—A mine owner is liable in damages for injuries caused by removal of subjacent support,[27a] or for injuries to lower owners caused by discharge of tailings or debris into a stream.[28] The measure of damages for removal of subjacent support is the depreciated value of the property,[29] and for knowingly mining coal of another, the value of the coal at the mouth of the pit, less hibiting pumping of mineral waters from wells drilled into the rock, etc., is not so clearly beyond the police power as to justify a federal court in enjoining its enforcement. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 162 F 954. Laws 1908, p. 1221, c. 429, § 1, is a valid exercise of the police power. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 112 NYS 374. 23a. Work done in cleaning up and washing gold is "labor done on a mine" for which a lien may be had under Civ. Code Alaska, § 262. Cascaden v. Wimbish [C. C. A.] 161 F 241. Where men are hired to work at making improvements on a mine, one who devotes his time to cooking is entitled to a lien. Id.

24. Under Civ. Code Alaska, §§ 262, 263, 265, the lien given extends to the owner's interest where work is done at the instance of a lessee with the owner's knowledge and he has made no disclaimer of liability. Cascaden v. Wimbish [C. C. A.] 161 F 241. In suit against owner to establish a lien for work done at instance of lessees, such lessees are not necessary parties, and it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse an amendment joining them when case was ready for trial and they had left the jurisdiction. 27a. Evidence that cracks and fissures, occuring in land when water in well disappeared, were caused by underlying coal mines being insufficiently timbered, shows that injury to the well was caused by the mine owner's negligence in timbering. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. House [Ala.] 47 S 572. In an action for injury to a well caused by negligent operation of coal mines, as to who owned the land surrounding plaintiffs was material, and deed offered to show defendant's ownership was admissible. Id. Where absolute right to subjacent support is alleged in a complaint for injuries based on negligence in mining, charge authorizing recovery regardless of negligence is within the issues and not inconsistent with charge authorizing recovery on ground of negligence. Collins v. Gleason Coal Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 497. In an action for damages for injury to surface of one holding title by deed reserving the minerals, evidence held insufficient to show that defendant caused the injury. Knipe v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 37 Mont. 161, 95 P 129.

28. Discharge of tailings and debris into rivers, filling up beds thereof, and causing overflow of adjacent lands and washing away of bridges, is a nuisance. Sutter County v. Nicols, 152 Cal. 688, 93 P 872. In an action for damages to land fronting on a creek, caused by an adjoining owners' mining operations, by which land was flooded or washed away, instructions held not outside the issues. Salstrom v. Orleans Bar Gold Min. Co., 153 Cal. 551, 96 P 292. Held not argumentative or confusing. Id.

29. Charge that measure of damages for removal of subjacent support of land by mining is the depreciated value of the land, etc., held not misleading. Collins v. Gleason Coal Co. [Iowa] 115 NW 497.

the cost of conveying there.[80] An owner who has control of a mine and upon whom is imposed the duty of inspection and keeping it safe is liable to one who comes into the mine by invitation.[81] The extent of the mine owner's duty relative to inspecting the mine for the benefit of licensees depends on the character of the work required.[82]

§ 13. Remedies and procedure peculiar to mining rights.[83] See 10 C. L. 653. Pleadings in actions relative to mining rights must conform to the general rules,[83a] and are governed by the general rules of construction,[84] and the general rules apply as to parties litigant.[85] In a suit to quiet title to mineral rights, the complaint should show excuse for long delay in seeking relief.[86] An owner of a gas well may maintain action against the owner of other wells in the same district for illegitimate waste, but not for exhaustion resulting from legitimate use of the gas.[87] Equity may enjoin waste and irreparable injury at the suit of an assignee of an oil and gas lease against a subsequent adverse lessee,[88] and may also enjoin the taking of coal from the land of another.[89] Under the statutes of Alaska, a claim for damages for the unlawful detention of mining property does not affect the right to an injunction to preserve the property from further depletion pendente lite,[90] and an application for such injunction need not show the defendants to be insolvent if the injury is irreparable.[91] The scope of the restraining order rests in its terms.[92] As a general rule mining property is not susceptible of partition in specie,[93] but it may be so partitioned if

33a. Allegation of breach of contract of sale of mining claims binding the purchaser to prosecute development work diligently and to an extent consistent with good mining and within its resources, that he had not prosecuted such work within his means is, at best, a mere conclusion. Mallory v. Globe Boston Copper Min. Co. [Ariz.] 94 P 1116.

34. Complaint to quiet title alleging that plaintiff in fixing and marking his boundaries selected same monuments that had been fixed as corners by defendant and that boundaries of two claims were identical, was not an admission that defendant had marked and monumented his claim and did not nullify a prior allegation that defendant's claim was never marked or monumented. Phillips v. Smith [Ariz.] 96 P 91.

35. Where one agreed to transfer a mining lease and property to a company to be organized by another who was to contribute capital to the company, the former could not sue the latter on his failure to contribute since his promise was to pay the company. Sobneider v. Miller, 113 NYS 399.

36. Complaint to quiet title to mineral rights alleging that 21 years had passed since cause acorued but that he had no notice that the owner of the surface was claiming title to minerals until within one year, etc., held to sufficiently plead excuse for delay. Steinman v. Jessee, 108 Va. 667, 62 SE 276.

37. Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell, 33 Ky. L. R. 98, 109 SW 328.

38. Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 238 Ill. 188, 86 NE 219.

39. Where one wrongfully drove entries through coal of another, in enjoining him from taking coal the court properly enjoined him from going into or using such entries. McGuire v. Boyd Coal & Coke Co., 236 Ill. 69, 86 NE 174.

40. Waskey v. McNaught [C. C. A.] 163 F 929. Under Civ. Code Alaska § 386, providing for injunction against threatened injury and § 1 abolishing distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, held in ejectment to recover mining property plaintiff could enjoin mining operations on the land in controversy on a showing that it was chiefly valuable for placer mining and that irreparable injury was threatened. Id.

41. Waskey v. McNaught [C. C. A.] 163 F 929.

42. An injunction restraining the rocking and sluicing or in any manner the working of the premises did not prevent working of dirt taken from the ground and removing it to other property. Waskey v. McNaught [C. C. A.] 163 F 929. But dirt dug from the ground and hoisted to the surface was still a part of the realty and was covered by the injunction. Id.

MISTAKE AND ACCIDENT.

The scope of this topic is noted below.[47]

§ 1. Definition; elements.[48] See 10 C. L. 853—Mistake has been defined as some intentional act, omission or error arising from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulnesss, imposition or misplaced confidence.[48a] Accident is an unforeseen occurrence affecting a person injuriously and not due to his own negligence.[49] Whether a case falls under the head of accident or mistake is of no practical importance since equity relieves from both.[50]

§ 2. Effect of mistake and relief against.[51] See 10 C. L. 854—Where on account of mistake there is no meeting of the minds as to all the essential elements of a contract, there is no binding obligation.[51a] In case of mutual mistake, equitable relief is granted by rescission [52] or reformation [53] and relief is usually allowed in case

44. Under Alaska Code p. 4, § 404, it must be so partitioned if poasible without great prejudice to the owners. Manley v. Boone [C. C. A.] 159 F 633. Evidence sufficient to justify partition of unpatented mining claims held in common. Leggat v. Blomberg [Idaho] 98 P 723.

45. Under Alaska Codes pt. 4, §§ 405, 409, prescribing how partition shall be affected, the court may not make a division of the property except in the indirect mode of confirming the report of referees appointed to carry out the order of partition. Manley v. Boone [C. C. A.] 159 F 633. Personalty connected with mining property cannot be subject of partition in action to partition such property unless it constitutes part of the realty and it is improper to appoint a receiver to take charge of it. 46. Integrity Min. & Mill. Co. v. Moore, 130 Mo. App. 627, 109 SW 1057.

47. It includes the constitnents of mistake, its general effect on contracts, and the manner and sufficiency of proof. The remedies by way of cancellation (see Cancellation of Instruments, 11 C. L. 493), or reformation (see Reformation of Instruments, 10 C. L. 1496), the implied obligation to repay money paid under mistake (see Implied Contracts, 11 C. L. 1876) are more fully treated elsewhere. It also excludes accident and surprise as ground for new trial (see New Trial and Arrest of Judgment, 10 C. L. 999). The related topic of Fraud and Undue Influence, 11 C. L. 1583, should also be consulted.

48a. Taylor v. Godfrey, 62 W. Va. 677, 59 SE 631. Mistake of fact is an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of the existence or nonexistence of a fact past or present material to the contract. Kansas City Packing Box Co. v. Spies [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 432. Mistake takes place when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist; one not caused by neglect of legal duty on part of the person making the mistake, an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact past or present material to the contract, etc. Lowe v. Wells Fargo & Co. Exp. [Kan.] 96 P 74.

51a. Where seller by mistake names grossly disproportionate price for goods and purchaser seizes advantage, contract is unenforcible. Cunningham Mfg. Co. v. Rotograph Co., 30 App. D. C. 524.

52. Mistake mutual where both parties have same knowledge and believe themselves acting within their rights. Lewis v. Mote [Iowa] 119 NW 152. Release no defense to personal injury action when induced by mutual mistake of fact predicated on physician's medical opinion as to employe's condition. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hambright [Ark.] 113 SW 803. Equity will grant relief against sheriff's deed on ground of mistake, preventing redemption from execution within statutory time. Thorp v. Kerr [Iowa] 119 NW 267.

Rescission allowed: Where plaintiff paid certain amounts as alimony pending suit and in final settlement erroneously included interest upon amounts previously paid, such interest recoverable. Hill v. Hill, 121 La. 578, 46 S 657. Mistake must be mutual one of fact. Weissenfels v. Cable, 208 Mo. 515, 106 SW 1028. Extrinsic evidence of mistake in signing guaranty held sufficient to support judgment for defendant. First Nat. Bank of Redlands v. Bowers, 153 Cal. 95, 94 P 422. Where broker by mistake sold certain stock of name similar to that ordered to be sold, and gave check for the higher priced stock, he was entitled to have such check canceled. Thompson v. National Bank of Commerce, 132 Mo. App. 225, 110 SW 681. Where mortgagor's grantee paid off mortgage under mistaken belief that it was due and also paid mortgagee's attorneys fees, he could recover same, such claims being payable only in case the mortgage was properly collected by suit. Kelsey v. Collins [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 793. Evidence held to show mutual mistake as to quality and value of land in Nebraska to be given by plaintiff in exchange for lands in Iowa, entitling defendant to rescind. McDonald v. Benge, 138 Iowa, 591, 116 NW 602. Cancellation granted where grantor believed conveyance to be 50 acres when in fact 200 acres, and element of fraud immaterial. Allen v. Tuckett [Miss.] 48 S 186. Where defendant agreed to purchase certain land if plaintiff secured right of way for railroad to same and plaintiff secured right of way for tram road immediately after which plaintiff signed deed and secured one-half of purchase money, believing proper right of way had been obtained, on defendant then refusing to pay balance of purchase price, or to condemn for railroad, or to allow its name to be used for such condemnation, equity would grant the necessary relief. Norton Iron Works v. Moreland [Ky.] 113 SW 481. Evidence conflicting but held to show mutual mistake in sale of timber where cruiser erroneously estimated amount at 300,000 feet but by mistake of boundary larger amount included. Northcraft v. Blumauer, 49 Wash. 588, 96 P 1118. Where vendor represented mine as containing 50,000 tons of mineral and representation based on report of expert inducing purchaser after which mathematical error in expert's calculation discovered, so that mine only contained 5,000 tons, mistake was mutual, entitled to be relieved from. Johnson v. Withers [Cal. App.] 98 P 42.

Rescission denied: Evidence insufficient to show omission of parol stipulations in contract by mistake, and terms held conclusive. Kansas City Packing Box Co. v. Spies [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 432. Decree rescinding deed at instance of grantee, though predicated on a finding of fact, will be reversed if the contract as expressed in the deed gives the grantee all the grantor could consistently convey, and the oral evidence as to his intention to convey more does not preponderate either way. Isner v. Nydegger, 63 W. Va. 671, 60 SE 793. Where certain defendants contracted to purchase timber from third person (party defendant), expecting to sell to plaintiff for exorbitant price by misrepresenting tract, and plaintiff gave check to conspirators to be delivered to third person on execution of bill of sale, which was accomplished, third person retaining his price and giving conspirators balance, such third person was not liable to plaintiffs for money received as paid by mistake. Deering v. Terry's Ex'rs [Ky.] 114 SW 759. Where defendant gave plaintiff option on land forgetting previous conveyance of portion of same tract to wife, defendant was not excused from performance because of mutual mistake, such mistake on his own part and no mistake as to identity or existence of subject-matter of contract. Boyden v. Hill, 198 Mass. 477, 85 NE 413. Where defendant gave option on land forgetting previous conveyance of portion of same land, good faith of defendant's forgetfulness is no defense. Evidence of impaired memory properly excluded, there being no issue as to unsoundness of mind. Id. Where husband did not show that a mistaken belief by him that he would inherit certain property caused him to make a certain settlement with his wife, he was not entitled to cancellation of a deed by him on the ground of such mistake. Powe v. Culver [Conn.] 69 A 1050. Answer insufficient to show mutual mistake, only kind which would justify rescission of insurance policy. Fidelity & Causualty Co. v. Dierks Lumber & Coal Co., 133 Mo. App. 637, 114 SW 55.

53. Reformation granted: Where an instrument by mistake of draftsman, either as to fact or law, does not fulfill the intention of the parties, equity will correct the mistake so as to produce a conformity with the instrument intended. Gailey v. New Castle Elastic Pulp Plaster Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 533; Taylor v. Godfrey, 62 W. Va. 677, 59 SE 631. Mere neglect or omission to read or know the contents of a written instrument before execution is not necessarily a bar to cancellation thereof. Relief in such case is proper if the instrument, through mistake, fails to accomplish the purpose intended. Taylor v. Godfrey, 62 W. Va. 677, 59 SE 631. Equity will reform where mutual mistake. Western Loan & Savings Co. v. Thibodeau [C. C. A.] 159 F 370; Chelsea Nat. Bank v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 533; Coppes v. Keystone Paint & Filler Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 38. Reformation more delicate than rescission. Coppes v. Keystone Paint & Filler Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 38. Power of reformation extends to practically every kind of written instrument. Insurance policy. Sykes v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 148 N. C. 13, 61 SE 610. Terms and conditions of sale not merged in deed so as to bar grantor from alleging true consideration and fact that various covenants were omitted by mistake. Townsend v. Lacock [Pa.] 71 A 187. Relief granted where material mutual error in deed. Allen v. Luckett [Miss.] 48 S 186. Description by metes and bounds does not preclude reformation to express true intent of parties. Home & Farm Co. v. Freitas, 153 Cal. 680, 96 P 308. Evidence held to show mutual mistake in description of deed and more land than contemplated conveyed. Id. Reformation of deed conveying 11 feet of lot when only 9 feet were intended. Clark v. Basso, 152 Mich. 674, 15 Det. Leg. N. 387, 116 NW 531. Reformation of deed proper where containing different tract of land, if transaction treated as mistake. Morgan v. Combs, 32 Ky. L. R. 1205, 108 SW 272. Modified for benefit of bona fide purchaser. Id. 33 Ky. L. R. 817, 111 SW 294. Where plaintiff entered into contract with reciever of railroad for delivery of coal and railroad was later sold to defendant, evidence held to show mutual mistake of fact, parties believing themselves to be acting under contract with receiver and deliveries consequently made at inadequate price to defendant. Sloss Iron & Steel Co. v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 162 F 542. Results of mutual mistake of fact corrected, prices reformed, settlements opened for that purpose and allowances made to party injured. Id.

of unilateral mistake [54] induced by fraud.[55] A prerequisite is freedom from negli-

Reformation denied: No mistake. Moran Bolt & Nut Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis Car Co., 210 Mo. 715, 109 SW 47. Mistake as to reservation of land in deed not mutual and relief denied. Hope v. Bourland [Okl.] 98 P 580. Where in answer to offer, grantor submitted different deed and offer was accepted. Coppes v. Keystone Paint & Filler Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 38. Evidence insufficient to warrant finding that deed incorrectly described lines intended at execution and reformation denied. Hapeman v. McNeal, 48 Wash. 527, 93 P 1076. Reformation of deed unnecessary when construed to effectuate intention of parties and where words of limitation in habendum clause rather than premises were afterwards wrongfully clipped from deed, aiding establishment of intent. Condon v. Secrest [N. C.] 62 SE 921. Evidence insufficient to show mutual mistake of terms of agreement as to persons liable thereon. Smith v. Interior Warehouse Co. [Or.] 95 P 499. No evidence of mistake in giving note for sheriff's deed so as to entitle plaintiff to cancellation of judgment on note and reconveyance. Miller v. Pratt, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 547. Where there was a mistake as to the meaning of the contents of a deed at the time of its signature but full knowledge was had before acknowledgment, the acknowledgment related back to the signing and rendered it as effectual as if full knowledge were had at that time. Where married woman thought on signing deed of timber land that it conveyed only the timber. Johnson Lumber Co. v. Leonard, 145 N. C. 339, 59 SE 134. Evidence held insufficient to show an intent to include after acquired property that it was omitted by mutual mistake from mortgage. White Co. v. Carroll, 147 N. C. 330, 61 SE 196. Where plaintiff and defendant had been partners and latter purchased former's interest, specifically including rights to indemnity against defalcations of certain bookkeeper and there was no examination of account books, though it was also agreed that cash on hand and in bank should be equally divided, and subsequently defendant discovered defalcations and recovered $4500 as indemnity, plaintiff was not entitled to one-half of such indemnity, there being no mutual mistake. Cohen v. Haberman, 126 App. Div. 710, 111 NYS 67. Reformation of insurance policy denied where effect would be to allow insured to receive additional insurance and repudiate obligation at his convenience. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Dierks Lumber & Coal Co., 133 Mo. App. 637, 114 SW 55.

54. In case of unilateral mistake, remedy is by rescission. Chelsea Nat. Bank v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 533.

55. Rescission: Equity will not relieve vendor by quitclaim deed because estate larger than vendor supposed. Faxon v. Baldwin, 136 Iowa, 519, 114 NW 40. Where defendant with knowledge that certain person was entitled to one-half of land but believed herself entitled to one-third, secured conveyance from such person based on her mistaken belief, he was guilty of fraud and conveyance set aside. Id. Where vendor points out several tracts as making up farm, vendee may rely on misrepresentation unless put on inquiry. Selby v. Watson, 137 Iowa, 97, 114 NW 609. Where oral agreement for purchase of certain land and other land substituted in written contract, vendee may rescind. Id. Relief on ground of mistake without proof of knowledge on part of vendor in misrepresentation. Id. Where different land substituted in written agreement and vendee elected to rescind value immaterial. Id. Representation of fact for purpose of declaring fraud, also fact when considered in connection with mistake to justify rescission. Johnson v. Withers [Cal. App.] 98 P 42.

Reformation: Contract will be reformed in case of unilateral mistake accompanied by fraud. Western Loan & Savings Co. v. Thibodeau [C. C. A.] 159 F 370; Chelsea Nat. Bank v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 533; Sykes v. Life Ins. Co., 148 N. C. 13, 61 SE 610. Evidence held to show signing of lease by mistake and that defendant by silence secured terms less than those agreed upon. Chelsea Nat. Bank v. Smith [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 533. Where person by mistake induced by defendant's agent contracted for insurance policy believing that they provided for life insurance for term of years and subsequent repayment of premiums with interest, where in fact no substantial benefits except in case of death, and contract carried out to extent of furnishing insurance for stipulated term, policy would be reformed and specifically enforced. Sykes v. Life Ins. Co., 148 N. C. 13, 61 SE 610. Where illiterate person's ability to read affected by pain and influence of opiates to relieve pain, and in such condition induced to sign accord and satisfaction by fraud, instrument would be reformed. Dannelly v. Cuthbert Oil Co. [Ga.] 63 SE 257. Evidence held to show execution of note and mortgage in good faith under honest mistake without negligence coupled with fraud on part of lender in securing excessive interest. Western Loan & Savings Co. v. Thibodeau [C. C. A.] 159 F 370.

Relief denied: No evidence of fraud if unilateral mistake in failing to reserve portion of land in deed, Hope v. Bourland [Okl.] 98 P 580. Evidence insufficient to show mistake and fraud in execution of deed as to omission of clause withholding right to mortgage, or clause as to reversion. Elliott v. Elliott [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 215; Id. [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 1142.

gence [56] and rescission is generally withheld where the parties cannot be placed in statu quo.[57] Where a deed misnames a grantee, the error is not corrected by a subsequent deed to the supposed grantee [58] and a suit against the grantor's administrator which is not a proceeding in rem is also ineffectual.[59] A mutual mistake in a deed may prevent a subsequent bona fide purchaser to oust the grantee.[60] Where one obtains title to land by mistake, he may be treated in equity as a trustee of the legal title for the equitable owner, irrespective of whether the latter ever had the legal title.[61] To bind a corporation by ratification of a preliminary agreement omitted by mutual mistake, the corporation must have full knowledge of the facts and that it would be bound by ratification.[62] An administrator's suit for damages because of a sale of land by decedent at an inadequate price is defeated by showing a mistake in the deed preventing the passing of title,[63] and a grantee in a deed has no standing in equity to have a deed corrected for mistake, though the consideration is paid where the grantor was of unsound mind.[64] Relief may be barred by estoppel.[65] For a mistake of law there is generally no relief,[66] but there are exceptions as where

56. Ordinary diligence required. Galley v. New Castle Elastic Pulp Plaster Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 533. No equitable elements of mistake when due to plaintiff's "neglect and oversight." Id. Evidence insufficient to warrant reformation of deed where answer denies omission, mistake ignored for several years and admitted by plaintiff to be due to carelessness. Id. Party refusing to read instrument, or who, being unable to read, neglects to have instrument read or explained, guilty of negligence and unprotected. Coppes v. Keystone Paint & Filler Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 38. Reformation of deed by striking building restriction denied where grantee accepted instrument without reading. Coppes v. Keystone Paint & Filler Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 38; Kansas City Packing Box Co. v. Sples [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 432. Person signing written instrument with full knowledge or opportunity of ascertaining its contents cannot avoid for mistake, in the absence of fraud. No relief for mistake due to plaintiff's negligence, information being available and no fraud practiced. National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. John Spry Lumber Co., 235 Ill. 98, 85 NE 256. Must appear that mistake not due to negligence of plaintiff. Benting v. Bell, 137 Ill. App. 600. No reformation because of mistake where defendants signed contract without reading or having it read and were not misled as to contents. Weltner v. Thurmond [Wyo.] 98 P 590. Specific performance cannot be defeated where omission of terms due to negligence. Krah v. Wassmer [N. J. Eq.] 71 A 404. Negligence will not bar relief on the ground of mistake if the other party has not been prejudiced. Taylor v. Godfrey, 62 W. Va. 677, 59 SE 631.

57. Gailey v. New Castle Elastic Pulp Plaster Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 533. Relief where parties cannot be placed in statu quo, only granted where clearest and strongest equity imperatively demands it. Id. No offer to place in statu quo. Hope v. Bourland [Okl.] 98 P 580. Under Rev. Civ. Code § 2354, providing that rescission cannot be adjudged for mistake unless defendant can be restored to substantially same condition as when contract was made, court may order return of cash value of horse which has been disposed of. Wolfinger v. Thomas [S. D.] 115 NW 100. Party claiming equitable relief against sheriff's deed on execution because of mistake preventing redemption must give prompt notice to holder of deed and tender redemption money, and relief will be denied where no averments of such notice and tender. Tharp v. Kerr [Iowa] 119 NW 267.

58. Where deed misnamed grantee, mistake could not be corrected by subsequent deed by grantor to person alleged to have been grantee, intended in original deed and reciting that such subsequent deed was to correct error. Walters v. Mitchell, 6 Cal. App. 410, 92 P 315.

59. Where deed alleged to misname grantee, suit by subsequent grantee together with person alleged to be grantee intended against grantor's administrator to correct mistake, was not proceeding in rem, and decree of reformation was ineffective to correct mistake. Walters v. Mitchell, 6 Cal. App. 610, 92 P 315.

60. Where mutual mistake in description of deed followed by possession of grantees, subsequent purchaser from owner bound to take notice of grantee's rights and could not become bona fide purchaser entitled to hold against such grantees. Garard v. Weaver [Ind. App.] 84 NE 1092.

61. Lamb v. Schiefner, 114 NYS 34. Where agent received instructions to prepare deeds for certain land to plaintiff and included same land in deed to himself, both deeds being executed and delivered, the land included in the agent's deed was held to be so included by mistake, and the grantee (defendant) held same as trustee for the grantor and plaintiff, having received his conveyance became the equitable owner entitled to sue to enforce the trust. Id.

62. Gailey v. New Castle Elastic Pulp Plaster Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 533.

63, 64. Kreiger v. De Mass, 41 Ind. App. 252, 83 NE 734.

65. Insurance company having kept policies several months without objection cannot seek reformation because of mistake, the property having been destroyed. National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. John Spry Lumber Co., 235 Ill. 98, 85 NE 256.

66. Carpenter v. Southworth [C. C. A.] 165 F 428. Money paid under mistake of law without knowledge of facts, deceit or undue influence not recoverable. Scott v. Ford [Or.] 97 P 99. Voluntary payment with full knowledge of facts cannot be recovered if transaction is unaffected by fraud, trust, confidence or like merely because payor is ignorant of legal rights. Thorsen v. Harper, 50 Or. 497, 93 P 361. Bond to indemnify against mechanic's liens. Not rendered ineffectual because entered into by parties under mistake of law. R. Connor Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 136 Wis. 13, 115 NW 811. Money paid under mistake of law for sick benefit insurance, where plaintiff expected return of premiums minus benefits at expiration of ten years, which contract was ultra vires, not recoverable. Southern Mut. Aid Ass'n v. Watson [Ala.] 45 S 649. No ground for relief where defendant acted under counsel's erroneous view of law that certain certificate of stock could be delivered 30 days after remittitur of court of appeals had been filed in supreme court when in fact to be delivered within 30 days after affirmance by court of appeals. Treadwell v. Clark, 124 App. Div. 260, 108 NYS 733. Where testator domiciled in sister state added codicil to will bequeathing share of daughter to five children, daughter having died subsequent to execution of will, and daughter had six children one of whom died before execution of will leaving infant survivor and executors paid share to such infant under belief that she was entitled to same, held that in absence of proof of laws of sister state common law presumed in force and infant not entitled to share rendering payment under mistake of law and not recoverable. Scott v. Ford [Or.] 97 P 99. On new trial petition amended and statute of sister state pleaded showing payment under mistake of fact and hence recoverable. Id.

NOTE. Equitable jurisdiction of unilateral error of law: It has been stated that the jurisdiction of chancery to relieve from error of law is "a recognized and highly beneficial branch of remedial justice." Story, Eq. Jur., 12th ed., Redfield's note, § 138a, et seq.; id. 13th ed., Bigelow's note, 112 et seq. That logically and as a matter of policy such relief should be granted, 7 Columbia L. R. 279, is neither reason nor excuse for a misstatement of the present status of the law. Eight criteria of relief from unilateral error (to which this discussion is confined) have been advanced. The theory of Lord Westbury that ignorantia juris non excusat has reference only to general law as distinguished from private right and interest, Cooper v. Phibbs (1867) L. R. 2 Eng. & Ir. App. 149, apart from an obvious difficulty of application, is supported only by dicta. In a quite different sense, the suggestion has a proper use, special as distinguished from general legislative acts being without the operation of the maxim. King v. Doolittle 1 Head [Tenn.] 77. Lord King's attempt to relegate the rule to criminal jurisprudence solely. Lansdown v. Lansdown (1730) Mos. 364; Wyche v. Greene, 16 Ga. 49, 57, is likewise irreconcilable with authority. Rankin v. Mortimer, 7 Watts [Pa.] 372; Goltra v. Sanasack, 53 Ill. 456. A mistake concerning an unquestioned, unequivocal legal rule has been held relievable; otherwise where the mistake concerns a doubtful or unsettled rule. Snell, Equity, 371. Whether true or not where compromises are concerned, Naylor v. Winch (1874) 1 Sim. & Stu. 555; cf. Faust's Adm'x v. Birner, 30 Mo. 414, so far is this test from being universal that some jurisdictions hold exactly the reverse, giving relief "where the law is confessedly doubtful and * * * ignorance may well exist." McKay v. Smith, 27 Wash. 442, 67 P 982; Bispham, Eq., 5th ed., 275. Neither distinction seems theoretically intelligible or of practical expediency. Good v. Herr, 7 Watts & S. [Pa.] 253. Where relief seems given for error of settled law, Lansdown v. Lansdown, supra, the error is not per se the foundation of jurisdiction but rather a medium to establish some other proper ground of relief. Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. [U. S.] 1, 15, 16, 7 Law Ed. 33. Adopting a dictum that "ignorance is not mistake" (Fletcher v. Tollet (1799) 5 Ves. 14), a few Southern jurisdictions maintain that confusion has arisen from failure to differentiate the former which is passive and incapable of proof, hence never relievable from the latter (Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bailey [S. C.] 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 64, 50 Am. Dec. 375; State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303). The overwhelming weight of authority, indicating that "this savors of hair-splitting" (Griffith v. Sebastian County, 49 Ark. 24), and that the result of the two is identical (Bouvier, Law Dict., tit. Ignorance), rejects the distinction (Schlesinger v. U. S., 1 Ct. of Cl. 16; Gwynn v. Hamilton's Adm'r, 29 Ala. 233). In accordance with an equitable tendency, error of law, admittedly not a ground for affirmative relief, has been held a good defense. Sullivan v. Jennings, 44 N. J. Eq. 11, 14 A 104. Obviously, the mistake when combined with other elements which practically invariably appear, infra, where relief is granted, is more effective from the negative than from the affirmative aspect. But to assert a general rule as stated would be not only to ignore authority but to overlook the true, if not always the confessed ratio decidendi. See Peters v. Florence, 38 Pa. 194. Arguing that a person may err as to his own antecedent legal rights which are to be affected, although he fully understands the effect of the transaction itself, or may be correct as to his existing rights and in error with respect to legal effect, it has been ingeniously suggested that error of law of the first, "analgous to, if not identical with, a mistake of fact," is relievable, while error of the second type is not. Pomeroy, Eq. Jur., § 849. In deciding "hard" cases, some jurisdictions have willingly fallen into this mistake. Toland v. Corey, 6 Utah, 392, 24 P 190; Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 73 Miss. 110, 19 S 105, 55 Am. St. Rep. 488; Gross v. Leber, 47 Pa. 520. However, the principal of ignorantio juris non excusat was unquestionably derived from the civil law (1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 632), in which the typical case of unrelievable error of law undeniably falls within the first class. Dig., XXII tit. VI, 1, 9. Logically, also, the maxim not merely charges the individual with knowledge of effect, but also with knowledge of his legal rights. Evans v. Hughes County, 3 S. D. 244, 52 NW 1062; Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 78, 81 Am. Dec. 556. Strong authority supports this position. Weed v. Weed, 94 N. Y. 243; Haviland v. Willets, 141 N. Y. 35, 35 NE 958; Gwynn v. Hamilton's Adm'r, supra; Bintley v. Whittemore, 18 N. J. Eq. 366; Peters v. Florence, supra;

Norris v. Crowe, 206 Pa. 438, 55 A 1125, 98 Am. St. Rep. 783; Stafford v. Stafford, 1 De Gex. & J. 193, 202; Zollman v. Moore, 21 Grat. [Va.] 313. If, on the other hand, the error is admitted, for argument's sake, as one of fact, the emptiness of the proposed criterion of unilateral error of law becomes manifest.

The reason for the failure of the tests thus for considered to explain the exercise of the relief oftentimes granted in cases of either type indicated, appears to lie in the assumption that for pure error of law of some sort or another, equity will interfere. The decided weight of authority, however, demonstrates that astute as Chancery is to furnish a remedy where there is error of law (Hemphill v. Moody, 64 Ala. 467), a mere naked error is not relievable (Midland, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 4 Jur. N. S. 643); but where relief is granted some other and special equity is also present as a controlling factor (Bank v. Daniel, 12 Pet. [U. S.] 32, 9 Law. Ed. 989; Hollingsworth v. Stone, 90 Ind. 244). Thus, any trace of constructive fraud, or of inequitable conduct, as where one party knew and took advantage of an error of law by the other which he did not correct (Haviland v. Willets, supra), will turn the scale. A fortiori, relief is justified by evidence of misrepresentation (The Chestnut-Hill etc., Co. v. Chase, 14 Conn. 123; Hardigree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 151), even though innocent (Wilson v. Maryland, etc., Co., 60 Md. 150), undue influence (Sands v. Sands, 112 Ill. 225), surprise (Evans v. Llewellyn, 1 Cox Eq. Cas. 332), imbecility (Nelson v. Betts, 21 Mo. App. 219), misplaced confidence (Hall v. Otterson, 52 N. J. Eq. 522, 28 A 907), deception (Toland v. Corey, supra), ignorance of the facts (Lumber Exch. Bank v. Miller, 18 Misc. [N. Y.] 127, 40 NYS 1073), a fiduciary relation (Ludington v. Patton, 111 Wis. 208, 86 NW 571), or gross disparity in position (Alabama, etc., Co. v. Jones, supra). A few jurisdictions add the further qualification that if a decree would result in an unconscionable advantage, the hardship plus the error suffices. Wilson v. Ott, 173 Pa. 253, 34 A 23, 51 Am. St. Rep. 767; Griswold v. Hazard (1890) 141 U. S. 260, 35 Law Ed. 678. Contra, Champin v. Layton, 18 Wend. [N. Y.] 407; Weed v. Weed, supra; Lancaster v. Flowers, 208 Pa. 199. The conclusion necessarily follows that the vast majority of decisions relied on to sustain the doctrine of remedy for unilateral error of law falls short of that position. Willard, Eq. Jur. (2d Ed.) 61. A recent Iowa decision is in full harmony with this theory. The plaintiff, though aware of the facts, was ignorant of the quantum of her interest, that is of her antecedent rights, the case falling accordingly within the first group above discussed, where relief for naked error of law is said to be allowed. It appeared, however, that although the defendant knew of the plaintiff's mistake, he made no endeavor to rectify it. Rescission of a conveyance was, therefore, properly granted. Faxon v. Baldwin, 136 Iowa, 519, 114 NW 40. The error of law, combined with the constructive fraud of the defendant, made out a perfect case for equitable relief under the authorities.

Equitable jurisdiction of mutual error of law: Courts are in substantial accord upon two aspects of this subject. First, mutual mistake of foreign law is relievable. Such error while almost universally regarded as pure error of fact (Kerr, Fraud and Mistake, (2nd Ed.) 466; Imperial etc. of Trieste v. Funder 21 Week. R. 116), is as genuine mistake of law as mistake of the lex fori. The true basis—that the ignorance concerns that which the individual is excusable for failure to know— has apparently been over looked. Second, in compromises the existence of mistake, properly so-called is manifestly impossible. Both parties have done just as intended, namely, to assume the contingency of gaining or losing by the arrangement according as the law should prove. Hall v. Wheeler, 37 Minn. 522, 35 NW 377. Family settlements, in so far as they involve this element, proceed upon the same principle. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 F 485. It has been suggested, without attempt at definition of the language employed, that when both parties to the compromise mistake a "plain and settled principal of law" relief should be granted. Sir John Leach in Naylor v. Winch, (1824) 1 Sim. & Stu. 555, 564. This distinction, it is submitted, is not only unsupported by authority, cf. Faust's Adm'x v. Birner, 30 Mo. 414, but logically unsound, for the error is less excusable and pari passu more reprehensible than where a dubious and disputed rule is in question. Cf. Good v. Herr, 7 Watts & S. [Pa.] 253, 42 Am. Dec. 230. The substantial recognition of these principles, unsettled as they still are in some respects, is in striking contrast with the numerous conflicting views of the proper jurisdictional test for error of law in general.

Where the written instrument, from error as to the legal effect of the language used, fails to express the intention of the parties, for example, where a scrivener misuses technical terminology (Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat [U. S.] 174, 5 Law Ed. 589; 1 Pet. [U. S.] 1, 7 Law. Ed. 27), or errs in the legal force of a description (Pitcher v. Hennessey, 48 N. Y. 415), and the parties accept the document under the belief that it sets forth their bargain, the weight of judicial authority and the majority of text writers (Pomeroy, Eq. Jur., §§ 843, 845; Story, Eq. Jur., § 114), insists that "equity will grant relief * * * and it matters not whether such mistake be called one of law or fact" (Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur., 540; cf. Canedy v. Marcy, 13 Gray, 373). In a recent Massachusetts case of this character the mistake was regarded as "pure error of fact." Enstis Mfg. Co. v. Saco Brick Co., 198 Mass. 212, 84 NE 449. If the mistake be one of fact, reformation may, of course, as in all bilateral error of fact, be granted. But, whether the legal force of the words employed be mistaken by the parties themselves or by their agent, the mistake seems clearly error of law as to the nature of the agreement adopted. Fowler v. Black, 136 Ill. 363, 26 NE 596, 11 L. R. A. 670. The distinction between such cases and cases in which the parties mistake the legal effect of an instrument —which practically all authorities (Eldridge v. Dexter, etc., R. Co., 88 Me. 191, 33 A 974; Dupre v. Thompson, 4 Barb. [N. Y.] 279; Proctor v. Thrall, 22 Vt. 262), including the authors above cited (Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 843; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 112, 113), join in declaring unrelievable—is trifling, if indeed, discoverable at all, from any logical standpoint.

there is a total failure of consideration[67] in the case of payments to trustees in bankruptcy or other court officers;[68] and the doctrine has been held not to apply to mistakes of persons as to their own private legal rights,[69] such as a mistake as to ownership,[70] or a mistake in drawing a deed.[71] Mistake of law is never a good foun-

The parties agree upon the writing as stating their contract in the one instance as fully as in the other. 5 Columbia L. R. 376. The significance of the desire to find the nonexistent element of error of fact and thereby explain the relief granted in this class of cases is very manifest.

A recent Virginia case (Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 SE 736), in effect overruling an earlier decision (Zollman v. Moore [Va.] 21 Gratt. 313), illustrates the tendency to regard error of antecedent and existing private rights—whether mutual or unilateral—as relievable, in contradistinction to error of law with respect to the legal effect of an instrument. Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 849. On the ground that both parties were laboring under the erroneous impression that the grantor was entitled under a deed to a lesser estate than the deed actually conveyed. Chancery set aside a conveyance of the "entire interest." The court regarded the error "as analogous to, if not identical with, a mistake of fact." That the mistake logically, under the authorities, and from the standpoint of the Civil Law, whence the maxim Ingorantia juris non excusat was derived, is mistake of law and logically indistinguishable from error as to the legal effect of an instrument, concededly unrelievable, supra, was indicated in 8 Columbia L. R. 211, in a discussion of unilateral error. However erroneous and unsound it may be to regard the mistake as one of fact, that position is nevertheless at least intelligible, when compared with the view which regards the mistake as partaking of both and yet in toto of neither (Goff v. Gott [Tenn.] 5 Sneed, 562; Gerdine v. Menage, 41 Minn. 417, 43 NW 91), and which not only unnecessarily creates a veritable terram incognitam, but fails to note that in every statement or misstatement of law, a fact—the condition of the law—is necessarily stated. See Purvines v. Harrison, 151 Ill. 219, 37 NE 705.

In a note to Story, Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) 115 et. seq., Prof. Bigelow suggests that where the parties have deliberated on the law and then have chosen a course of action equity should never relieve; vice versa, if there was unconscious ignorance of the existence of any question of law. Mr. Woodward, in 5 Columbia L. R., 377 et. seq., modifies this by submitting "the test of choice, with or without deliberation." Apart from any question of the premium seemingly placed upon ignorance as distinguished from intelligent activity, not only does the enforcement of either proposed rule present serious practical difficulty, but the authorities fail even to intimate its existence, or to extend judicial favor to it, even where the subject is res nova. While its sponsors express "no doubt that a large number of cases may be brought into line with it," this contention is gravely open to doubt. In New York, for example, the test fails completely. Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 283; Marsh v. McNair, 48 Hun [N. Y.] 117; Dupre v. Thompson, supra. See also Ottenheimer v. Cook, Heisk [Tenn.] 309; Stedwell v. Anderson, 21 Conn. 139; Easter v. Severin, 78 Ind. 540; Eldridge v. R. R. Co., supra.

While in numerous cases other and possibly controlling equities are present (Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109, 76 NW 395, 128), it must be conceded that in numerous cases, chancery has granted relief on one theory or another. The weight of authority to-day, however, is still in accordance with ths rule Ignorantia juris non excusat, which, a high authority notwithstanding, Scott, Cases on Quasi-Contracts, 406, Note 1. has been recognized from the earliest periods of equity jurisdiction. Doctor and Student, Dial. 1, ch. 26; Dial. 2, ch, 46; Irnham v. Child, 1 Bro. Ch. 92. The unsound basis of ths maxim in principle as applied to civil cases, its contrariety to Continental thought, 7 Columbia L. R. 476, and the lack of reason, from the standpoint of natural justice, for allowing relief for mutual ignorance of fact, yet denying it for mutual ignorance of law, explain the illogical and increasing exceptions, of which the two principal cases are characteristic. It is submitted that the true remedy for the unfortunate situation can be found only in legislative action, and the newer and more progressive jurisdictions, alive at once to the strength of stare decisis in modern equity, 5 Columbia L. R. 25, and to the necessity for relief, have not been slow to adopt this solution. N. Dak. Civ. Code § 3854; Cal. Civ. Code § 1578; S. Dak. Civ. Code § 1207; Oklahoma Revised Statutes, Ch. 15, § 20.—Adapted from 8 Columbia L. R. 211; Id., 484.

68. Carpenter v. Southworth [C. C. A.] 165 F 428.

69. Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 SE 736. Where a person is ignorant or mistaken as to his private legal rights and enters into a transaction, misunderstanding its legal scope and operation, for the purpose of affecting such assumed rights, equity will grant relief, treating the mistake as analogous if not identical with mistake of fact. Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 SE 736.

70. Equity will set asids a conveyance which conveys the entire interest where both parties believed the grantor owned only one-third interest when as a matter of fact she owned the fee simple. Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 SE 736. Where person believed himself heir to certain land by adoption and conveyed his interest in premises, when in fact not adopted and having no interest, equity will correct mistake as to ownership. Lewis v. Mote [Iowa] 119 NW 152. Where a purchaser is wronged by a mistake of the grantor as to his interest, the deed will be treated as an executory contract to convey and a rescission may be decreed. Lewis v. Mote [Iowa] 119 NW 152. Where in rescission of deed grantor had no title, deed should be cancelled. Lewis v. Mote [Iowa] 119 NW 152.

71. Where parties in drawing deed to convey life estate placed words of limitation in habendum instead of premises under impression that place was immaterial, error was mistake of law which could be corrected to effectuate intention of parties. Condor v. Secrest [N. C.] 62 SE 921. Placing of words of limitation in deed in habendum clause rather than premises held mistake of law of scrivener and parties, rather than mistake of fact of scrivener. Id.

72. Doctrine of 10 year prescription inapplicable to acquire certain property which purchaser knew seller had no right to sell except in manner provided by law, and belief of purchaser as to validity of title mistake of law. Leury v. Mayer [La.] 47 S 839.

73. Scott v. Ford [Or.] 97 P 99; Thorsen v. Hooper, 50 Or. 497, 93 P 361. Though negligently made. Trust Company of America v. Hamilton Bank, 127 App. Div. 515, 112 NYS 84; Moran v. Brown, 113 NYS 1038. In action to recover excessive commissions paid for selling realty under mistake as to customary commissions, evidence held to sustain finding that usual rate was as claimed by plaintiff. Id. Where express messenger was thought to have lost package of money and father believing same lost paid amount, and subsequently it was discovered that package had been delivered to office, boy neglecting to receive receipt, and it appeared that same had been stolen by another employe, all employes being under bond, the sum paid by the father was recoverable as paid by mistake of fact. Lowe v. Wells Fargo & Co. Exp. [Kan.] 96 P 74. Where lost money repaid and company gave receipt agreeing to refund same, the receipt, if construed by acceptance as a contract, could be avoided by mistake of fact under which it was made. Lowe v. Wells Fargo & Co. Exp. [Kan.] 96 P 74. Where sheriff notified administrator that he had order from court ordering payment of judgment out of funds of estate, when in fact no such order had been made, and administrator paid claim on advice of his attorney who was, without his knowledge, acting for defendant. Thorsen v. Hooper, 50 Or. 497, 93 P 361. Payment was made on mistake of fact and was recoverable. Where plaintiff believed deed of parents to be inforceable and paid $800 for relief from nonperformance, such sum was recoverable, deed being actually unenforceable and sum recovered by vendees either by mistake or fraud. Tucker v. Denton, 32 Ky. L. R. 521, 106 SW 280. Where plaintiff paid sum under mistake to release parents from conveyance, latter's moral obligation to convey not sufficient consideration. Id.

Payment of note, held for collection, by mistake extinguished debt, and note being surrendered to plaintiff subsequent endorsement by agent for collection was ineffectual to render payor purchaser so as to sue maker. Charnock v. Jones [S. D.] 115 NW 1072.

78. Boyce v. Walker, 114 NYS 166. Relief denied where account settled with knowledge of mistake as to weighing articles and no showing that plaintiff misled. Johnson v. Gallatin Valley Mill. Co. [Mont.] 98 P 883. Evidence held not to show grain delivered as incorrectly weighed or that plaintiff was not credited with full amount delivered so as to entitle plaintiff to correction of account stated. Id. In action to foreclose mortgage given in settlement of balance claimed by plaintiff as shown by an account stated, it was error to exclude evidence showing no consideration for mortgage, that account was erroneous in that more lumber had been furnished plaintiff than credited, that no defective lumber was delivered, and that the mistake in the account was not discovered until after the settlement. Boyce v. Walker, 114 NYS 16.

79. Hilt v. Heimberger, 235 Ill. 235, 85 NE 304. Evidence held to show that defendant did not understand that summons was being read to him and that he was not legally served with summons authorizing setting aside of judgment. Id. Procedure lies to restrain judgment for mistake and such procedure direct attack. Engler v. Knoblaugh, 131 Mo. App. 481, 110 SW 16. Equity will grant relief against misprisions and mistakes in court proceedings not of a judicial character and even against judicial mistakes, where the court has been misled as to a fact and has pronounced a judgment which would otherwise not have been given. Engler v. Knoblaugh, 131 Mo. App. 481, 110 SW 16. Freedom from negligence essential condition of relief for erroneous entry of judgment. Id. § 3. Procedure to obtain relief or make defense.[80]—See 10 C. L. 854—Equitable relief for mistake should be sought within a reasonable time after discovering the error.[80a] A tender of the erroneous instrument as a prerequisite to the action,[81] or a demand for reformation,[82] is not always necessary. Mistake is not cognizable by the courts unless pleaded,[83] but an amendment of a pleading of fraud to conform to the proof of mistake is proper.[84] The pleading should contain the material allegations[85] in a direct and specific manner,[86] avoiding conclusions.[87] The petitioner has the burden of proving mistake[88] by clear and satisfactory evidence,[89] and a mere enforcement of judgment granted where attorney erroneously prepared form of entry omitting provision and clerk entered same thus depriving plaintiff for damages as to erection of fence and only giving plaintiff award of $50 for opening of road. Id. Where clerk is entering judgment on report of commissioners appointed to assess damages in proceeding to establish road, erroneously inserted recital that commissioners had considered and included item of expense of $50 for erection of fence, such irregularity would not be corrected in separate suit. Very clear proof required in seeking to impeach justice's acknowledgment to land contract in due form and supported by evidence. Johnson Lumber Co. v. Leonard, 145 N. C. 339, 59 SE 134. Relief denied where evidence of subsequent conduct inconsistent with theory of mistake. Weltner v. Thurmond [Wyo.] 98 P 590. Evidence not clear and convincing to authorize reformation of contract for failing to limit time of continuance of provision entitling plaintiff to proceeds in excess of sale of land. Id. Evidence insufficient to show contract with corporation conditional on organization. Kennedy v. Fulton Mercantile Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 60, 108 SW 948. Evidence insufficient where witness refused to state positively that mistake in contract occurred, and merely stated what he believed effect to be. Moran Bolt & Mut. Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis Car Co., 210 Mo. 715, 109 SW 47.

92. Contradictory evidence showing no mistake in signing deed and that plaintiff knew same to be for land rather than timber as contended, erroneously excluded. Johnson Lumber Co. v. Leonard, 145 N. C. 339, 59 SE 134. Evidence to excuse laches proper. Isaacks v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 970. Evidence as to laches refused where action not barred. Id.

93. Oral evidence incompetent to contradict or vary mortgage but competent in equity to correct and reform instrument. White Co. v. Carroll, 147 N. C. 330, 61 SE 196. Parol proof admissible. Sykes v. Life Ins. Co., 148 N. C. 13, 61 SE 610. Parol evidence admissible to correct judgment. Engler v. Knoblaugh, 131 Mo. App. 481, 110 SW 16.

94. Whether married woman thought signature to deed was merely for timber and not for land, a question for jury and instructions erroneously refused. Johnson Lumber Co v. Leonard, 145 N. C. 339, 59 SE 134.

95. This article is devoted to the mortgage as an instrument and the substantive rights growing from it. The procedure by which mortgages are foreclosed (see Foreclosure of Mortgages on Land, 11 C. L. 1487), has been fully treated in an earlier topic. The doctrine of notice and the operation of the recording acts (see Notice and Record of Title, 10 C. L. 1015), the application of the statute of frauds (see Frauds, Statute of, 11 C. L. 1609), the effect of a mortgage as an incumbrance (see Covenants for Title, 11 C. L. 931; Vendors and Purchasers, 10 C. L. 1942), and the purchase of land subject to mortgage (see Vendors and Purchasers, 10 C. L. 1942) are elsewhere treated. Mortgage within this topic means only those of land or interests therein (see Chattel Mortgages, 11 C. L. 611; railroad mortgages, see Railroads, 10 C. L. 1365).

96a. Definitions: A conveyance or transfer of property as security to pay a debt or in discharge of some other obligation. Williams v. Davis [Ala.] 45 S 908. Mortgage creates a lien to secure payment of debt, and subsists until the debt is paid. Hughes v. Mt. Vernon Bank [Ga. App.] 60 SE 809. Conveyance by debtor to his creditor, or some one in trust for him as security for debt. Wilson v. Fisher, 148 N. C. 535, 62 SE 622. Conveyance by way of pledge for security of debt and to become void on payment of it. Johnson v. Hataway [Ala.] 46 S 760.

97. Evidence showed only relation of ten-ment.[99] The mortgage is an incident to the debt [1] and is personal property.[2] The reservation of a lien on the face of the deed or notes has the effect of a mortgage and makes the transaction executory.[3] It is a maxim of law that an instrument once a mortgage is always a mortgage.[4]

§ 2. General requisites and validity.[5]—See 10 C. L. 856—The general requisites of deeds [5a] and the operation of the statute of frauds [6] are elsewhere treated. An oral agreement to make a mortgage is at most in equity a verbal mortgage and void by statute.[7] A mortgage stating the amount secured is valid though it does not describe the notes or state their several amounts.[8]

*Property subject of mortgage.*See 10 C. L. 856—As a general rule any property subject to sale or conveyance may also be mortgaged or conveyed in trust to secure a debt.[9] Interests in expectancy may be mortgaged,[10] in the absence of statute.[11] Husband and wife may mortgage a homestead owned by them,[12] and a married woman conforming to statute requirements has the right to make a mortgage of her real estate which is not held to her separate use though the debt secured is her husband's.[13] Where a feme sole has made a deed of marriage settlement of her property to a trustee for her sole and separate use, her power of disposition is limited and if she and her husband seek to join in a mortgage of her property it is void if without the consent of the trustee and contrary to the trust deed.[14]

*Description.*See 10 C. L. 857—If there be that in the description of property conveyed which is false, without which the description would be sufficient to identify the subject-matter of the deed, the false part will be rejected and effect given to what remains.[15]

*Consideration.*See 10 C. L. 857—A mortgage must be supported by a consideration,[16] although the consideration need not move from the payeee of the mortgage ant and landlord not mortgagor and mortgagee. Lewis v. Cooley [S. C.] 62 SE 868.

16. The surrender of one equitable mort-debt to the mortgagor.[17] A mortgage given to secure a pre-existing debt of another is invalid unless supported by a new consideration,[18] but if the mortgagee increases his risk in some manner, this will render the mortgagee a purchaser for value.[19] Upon failure of consideration for a mortgage, the mortgagor is entitled to cancellation.[20] Failure or want of consideration as between the parties to a mortgage, cannot be set up as a defense by a purchaser of the lands subject to the mortgage, which is in fact part of the consideration, whether he has expressly assumed the mortgage as part of the purchase money or not.[21] If there was an actual consideration, it need not be stated.[22] In New York the seal is only presumptive evidence of consideration, which may be rebutted.[23] The burden of proof is on the person seeking to recover payment made on mortgages on the ground of no consideration to show not only lack of consideration but also that payment was not made to a holder of the mortgages who was entitled to rely on them as an admission of indebtedness.[24] A mortgage given to secure a note procured by fraud is only valid to the amount of the note above the amount of damages sustained because of fraud.[25]

Execution. See 10 C. L. 857—The informality of a mortgage according to the requirements of statute will not invalidate it between parties in equity,[26] and mortgagor having accepted a mortgage deed not complying with statutory requirements is estopped to deny his obligation under the mortgage.[27] A mortgage by a married woman in which her husband did not join as grantor is void although signed and acknowledged by him.[28] Under the Code requirements for signatures of deeds by one unable to writ, it is not necessary to add the words "his mark" to a mark where a mortgage was executed under the mortgagor's direction and at his request.[29] Delivery once made is sufficient although the instrument is subsequently allowed to remain in the possession of the mortgagor.[30]

gage is an adequate consideration for an equitable mortgage on another tract. Richardson v. Wren [Ariz.] 95 P 124. Agreement to pay interest in advance quarterly and the implied consideration that the mortgagors would by the mortgage secure the debt constituted a new and sufficient consideration for the giving of the mortgage to secure the debt. First Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Ind.] 86 NE 417. A mortgage deed given in consideration of an indebtedness and an agreement to extend time of payment for one year providing for a quarterly payment of interest in advance and that the amount shall become due upon any default is based on a new and sufficient consideration. First Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank of Wabash [Ind.] 84 NE 1077. Evidence held not to show lack of consideration. Sternberg v. L. Sternberg & Co. [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 492. N. 1023, 118 NW 991. Where an instrument purporting to be a sale with a right to retransfer in case of payment of a certain sum and a deed of the same premises were the only evidence of the transaction, it was insufficient to show that the deed was intended as a mortgage. Middleton v. Johnston [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 789. Where grantor already had two mortgages on grantee's property, the evidence was held not sufficient to prove a deed absolute on its face to be a mortgage. Barnes v. Johnson, 33 Ky. L. R. 803, 111 SW 372. The execution of a lease, from the holder of title to the claimant of the equity, does not necessarily disprove the fact of equitable ownership. Jones v. Gillett [Iowa] 118 NW 314. Where the son of a former master of an ex slave took title to property formerly belonging to the negro, evidence held sufficient to show that he held as mortgagee to secure the amount advanced to redeem from foreclosure of a former mortgage. Frazier v. Frazier, 32 Ky. L. R. 1339, 108 SW 889. Deed to plaintiff for $800. Both parties agreed in writing that if plaintiff disposed of land the real consideration should be what was paid and defendant receive credit therefor on his debt to the plaintiff. Held a mortgage. Horn v. Bates [Ky.] 114 SW 763. Where property worth $1,000 is conveyed by a deed, the consideration for which is $200, the vendor remaining in possession, the contract is one of security. Eames v. Woodson, 120 La. 1031, 46 S 13. Where the owner of two lots worth from $100 to $300 borrowed $31.50 from A who refused to take a mortgage but took an absolute deed stating that upon repayment of the loan any time before the borrower's death he might have the land deeded back, otherwise the deed to become absolute, and no note was given and the borrower lived on the land until shortly before his death, the transaction created an indebtedness due upon the borrower's death and the deed was in the nature of a mortgage as security. Halbert v. Turner, 233 Ill. 531, 84 NE 704. A in case of doubt, whether an instrument is a deed or mortgage, it will be treated as a mortgage.[37] A continuing antecedent or contemporaneous liability is essential to the creation of a mortgage and is a test to determine whether a conveyance is a sale or mortgage.[38]

Mortgage or conditional sale.[See 10 C. L. 859]—A mortgage is distinguished from a conditional sale by the fact that a mortgage is a security while a conditional sale is a deed accompanied by an agreement to resell upon terms.[39] Intention furnishes the only true test to determine if a deed is a mortgage or conditional sale.[40] Where the instrument is intended as security for a debt and the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the parties, the legal inference is that a mortgage and not a conditional sale was intended,[41] some courts going so far as to hold that the instrument is conclusively presumed to be a mortgage and no stipulation of the parties can make it otherwise.[42] To avoid the harshness of a forfeiture for failure to comply strictly with the terms of a contract of conditional sale, the courts incline to treat such transaction as a mortgage, if justified by the evidence,[43] and in doubtful cases the court will construe as a mortgage.[44]

Rights of the parties.[See 10 C. L. 860]—If a mortgage is executed between the parties or their acts construed to constitute a mortgage, no agreement or stipulation between the parties can cut off the mortgagor's right of redemption, the rule being once a mortgage, always a mortgage.[45] son owning real estate conveyed a half interest to his father to secure a debt. Later both joined in a deed to A who agreed to transfer back to the son upon payment of a specified sum within a specified time, the son to remain in possession of the premises. The purpose of the transfer was to allow a creditor of the son to obtain possession without the expense of a foreclosure. Held prior to the time for payment the title was in the son. People v. Andrs [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 503, 117 NW 55. Where defendant did at plaintiff's request acquire title to land, paying therefor with the agreement that the amount paid should be considered as a loan to the plaintiff, the legal title being held by defendant as security, the plaintiff is entitled to redeem. Jones v. Gillett [Iowa] 118 NW 314. Where a deed of land is made and the transaction is called a loan of money and the grantor remains in possession and further ths grantee at one time offered a deed back upon payment of money, the transaction is a mortgage. Froidevaux v. Jordan [W. Va.] 62 SE 686. Where one loans money to another for the purchase of land taking title in his own name, he holds a double relation to the real purchaser, and he is trustee of the legal title and mortgagee for the purchase money loaned. Hall v. O'Connell [Or.] 95 P 717. Evidences held to show a loan of purchase price secured by taking title. Id.

38. Where a note and mortgage deed were turned over to the grantor and no evidence of a continuing liability was given, transaction held not to be a mortgage. Rogers v. Burt [Ala.] 47 S 226. The existence and continuance of a debt is the final test. Rushton v. McIllvene [Ark.] 114 SW 709; Wiswell v. Simmons, 77 Kan. 622, 95 P 407. Evidence connecting loan with the transfer of land too vague. Bascombe v. Marshall, 113 NYS 991.

39. Beidleman v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 977. If the transaction is a sale with a right of repurchase at the grantor's option, it is a conditional sale. Froidevaux v. Jordan [W. Va.] 62 SE 686.

40. Beidleman v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 977. Where two instruments executed contemporaneously constitute on their face a conditional sale to convert such into a mortgage, the intent of the parties to create a mortgage must appear. The intent of one party is not sufficient. Thomas v. Livingston [Ala.] 46 S 851.

41. Tucker v. Witherbee [Ky.] 113 SW 123.

42. Where the grantee agrees to reconvey on payment by the grantor of a valid debt, the transaction is conclusively presumed to be a mortgage and no stipulation of parties can make it otherwise. Beidleman v. Koch [Ind. App.] 85 NE 977. A deed conveying premises on account of loan stipulating that if a certain amount was paid within a fixed time the deed would be void and cutting off the right of redemption by payment or a fixed sum, was a mortgage. Wilson v. Fisher, 148 N. C. 535, 62 SE 622.

43. Jones v. Gillett [Iowa] 118 NW 314.

44. Deed of land made to secure payment of price of a horse providing for a retransfer to grantor in case of payment of a certain sum on a certain date. Tucker v. Witherbee [Ky.] 113 SW 123. In case of doubt a mortgage and not a conditional sale. Conover v. Palmer, 123 App. Div. 817, 108 NYS 480; Thomas v. Livingston [Ala.] 46 S 851.

45. An agreement in a deed absolute on its face but given as a mortgage, that if an indebtedness was not paid at a certain tims the deed should be absolute, is inoperative, as the transaction being in reality a mortgage is subject to relating to redemption of mortgages. If debt not paid before borrower's death, deed to become absolute. Halbert v. Turner, 233 Ill. 531, 84 NE 704.

titioner must be willing to do equity.[45] By statute in Pennsylvania unless the grantor requires a defeasance or reservation in his favor, no trust can be enforced.[47]

§ 4. Equitable mortgages.[48] See 10 C. L. 882—It is a well settled principle of equity that where it is the clear intention of parties to give security for a debt, but there is a failure to carry out such intention in the contract, a court of equity will declare an equitable mortgage to exist and by its decree enforce the same as against such property in satisfaction of such debt.[48a] Thus an equitable mortgage arises where further credit is extended upon the promise to give a mortgage as security.[49] Where security has been advanced but the intended mortgage fails of legal effect because of some defect, equity will impress upon the property intended to be mortgaged a lien in favor of the creditor advancing sceurity.[50]

§ 5. Nature and incidents of trust deeds as mortgages.[51] See 10 C. L. 882—A trust deed without any power in the trustees to sell in case of a default is under the South Dakota Code, a mortgage constituting only a line.[52] The trustee of a trust deed made to secure notes may release the lien created thereby so as to revest title in the grantor even without the consent of the holder of the indebtedness which the trust deed was given to secure.[53] In equity, however, an unauthorized release will have no effect upon the trust deed as between the original parties or as to subsequent parties with notice.[54]

§ 6. Construction and effect of mortgages in general.[55] See 10 C. L. 862—The law of the state, where the mortgaged land is located, the parties reside, and the contract is to be performed, governs.[56] Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the plain terms of a mortgage,[57] but is admissible to explain ambiguities,[58] or to show

48a. Edwards v. Scruggs [Ala.] 46 S 850. Where one sold, assigned and transferred to another his right, title and interest in land, providing also that the grantor should have six months from a certain date to reimburse the grantee and in case of failure the title to become vested in the grantee, an equitable mortgage was created. Patrono v. Patrono, 127 App. Div. 29, 111 NYS 268. In an action to enforce a lien against land purchased from defendant with money advanced by plaintiff under defendant's agreement to give plaintiff a mortgage, which he refused to do, plaintiff was entitled to judgment enforcing an equitable lien. Poole v. Tannis [Wis.] 118 NW 864. Evidence tended to show that in consideration of money advanced to a husband by a wife there was a verbal agreement to the effect that the land should stand as security for the sums advanced, thereby creating an equitable mortgage. § 7. Title and rights of the parties.[64]—[See 10 C. L. 863]—The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is a trust relation.[65] At common law the mortgagee was regarded as being the legal owner.[66] In equity, however, the rights of the mortgagee passed to his personal representatives, the mortgagor being regarded as the real owner.[67] The equitable view granting the equity of redemption grew in favor and was vigorously invoked until finally courts of law came to recognize it,[68] and it is now settled in most jurisdictions that the mortgagee has but a lien to secure his debt.[69] In a few states, however, the common-law rule obtains.[70] Where one takes

Newton v. Hunt, 59 Misc. 633, 112 NYS 573. Where a railroad executed a trust deed of its right of way, depots, etc., and all property to be thereafter acquired for the purpose of the railroad, it did not include property to which railroad subsequently acquired a half interest for such property could not be utilized by the railroad for any purpose. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Tice, 232 Ill. 232, 83 NE 818. Where there was no covenant of seisin or for title in the mortgage deed and no intention that an outstanding fourth interest should ultimately fall within the mortgage, the mortgage lien given by owners of the three-fourths interest in property did not cover the fourth interest when it ultimately was deed to the owners of the other third interest. Provisions of a code defining the term "conveyance" in a recording act as any instrument by which an interest in real property is mortgaged applies to the recording act only and does not make a mortgage a conveyance in any other sense of any title. Booker v. Castillo [Cal.] 98 P 1067. Under New York statutes, contrary to common law, a mortgage creates no estate in the land, but is merely a lien on the mortgaged premises. Cannot recover by ejectment on default. Becker v. McCrea, 193 N. Y. 423, 86 NE 463. A mortgage back of land conveyed to secure the purchase price vests no title or interest in the land in the mortgagees. Castro v. Adams, 153 Cal. 382, 95 P 1027. A mortgage upon property does not violate a clause requiring a fee simple in the insured. Standard Leather Co. v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 131 Mo. App. 701, 111 SW 631.

70. Defendant went into possession under a mortgage upon premises without knowledge or notice of any infirmities in the decree granting the mortgagor title, the mortgage is a valid lien capable of being enforced.[71] A mortgage on real estate continues as a lien thereon for only ten years from the maturity of the debt.[72]

Taxes.[See 10 C. L. 864]—A mortgagor cannot by neglecting to discharge taxes which he has covenanted to pay acquire title at a tax sale and set it up thereafter to defeat his mortgage.[73] The mortgagee may pay taxes and have an additional lien therefor, although no provision as to taxes appears in the mortgage.[74] Prior to sale the mortgagee may pay the taxes and thereby acquire by a species of subrogation a lien for the amount so paid which in respect of priority occupies the same position as the tax lien.[75] A grantee of real estate who pays a tax assessed against the interest of the mortgagee cannot recover of the mortgagee the sum so paid.[76]

Insurance.[See 10 C. L. 864]—Mortgages usually provide that the mortgagor shall insure the premises in a company satisfactory to the mortgagee,[77] and the mortgagee is entitled to be allowed for necessary insurance taken out by him.[78] The mortgagor is usually entitled to settle the insurance loss.[79]

Possession, rents and profits.[See 10 C. L. 865]—The mortgagor is entitled to possession until default,[80] and in most states until after foreclosure.[81] The surrender of possession to the mortgagee by the mortgagor confers no title on the mortgagee,[82] and his subsequent possession is in no sense in hostility to the title of mortgagor.[83] A mortgage carries with it in equity a right to accruing rents when there has been a default and the security is inadequate and the debtor insolvent.[84] When a mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession after default, he is entitled to the rents and profits,[85] but after demand by the mortgagee for possession or rents and profits then the mortgagee is entitled to the same,[86] and to an allowance for the enhanced value of the land owing to improvements.[87] In ejectment against a mortgagee by the mortgagor, rents collected by the mortgagee cannot be applied to the payment of the mortgage since such receipts are in the nature of equitable set-off to the amount due and must be settled on an accounting in equity.[88] In California a mortgage cannot maintain ejectment against a mortgagee in possession until the debt is paid.[89]

The mortgagee in possession is under no obligation to make long term leases as his occupancy is contingent.[90] A mortgagee in possession under a deed of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor is not liable as mortgagee in possession to account to junior lien-holders for rents and profits received after the time he took possession under the deed.[91] A mortgagee in possession is generally entitled to be reimbursed by the holder of the equity for his reasonable expenses in preserving the property,[92] and to such reasonable outlays in making improvements as such holder approves and consents to,[93] and where possession is under agreement and the improvements are necessary to the judicious and proper management of the property,[94] but is not entitled to compensation for supervision of the property.[95] Under an absolute deed intended as a mortgage, the grantee is at law entitled to recover rents to the exclusion of the grantor.[96] Ordinarily in equity a mortgagee in possession under a formal mortgage is bound to account for what he has, or without fraud or willful default might have received from the time of taking possession;[97] but where an absolute deed in fact a mortgage is given, the grantee is made the agent of the grantor, or mortgagor, for the collection of rents and is only chargeable for rents on the grounds as an agent would be.[98]

§ 8. Lien and priorities.[99] See 10 C. L. 866—The priority of liens is ordinarily governed by the dates of acquisition [1] in the absence of agreement [2] or estoppel [3] except as affected by the recording acts.[4] A mortgage being a legal contract, lien prevails, however, over an equitable lien prior in time.[5] As between a mortgage and a statutory lien, priority in time usually controls.[6] If the holder of a mortgage

Under the terms of California code, the lien of a deed of trust given a year after commencement of building operations and furnishing materials is inferior to a mechanics' lien for work and materials. Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 96 P 788. A materialman's lien is superior to a prior purchase-money mortgage of which the material man had no actual notice. Baisden & Co. v. Holmes-Hartsfield Co. [Ga. App.] 60 SE 1031. Under the statute in Connecticut upon the letting of a contract for construction work upon premises, a lien arises for such work and material made necessary by virtue of the contract which takes precedence over a mort-take a new mortgage as a substitute without any knowledge of an intervening lien, equity will restore the lien of the first mortgage and give it its priority.[7] A purchase-money mortgage whether given back to the grantor or to a third party if all part of the one transaciton excludes any claim or lien arising through the mortgagor.[8] In the absence of lis pendens,[9] a mortgage taken pendente lite is superior to the judgment,[10] and a fortiori as to a mortgage taken by one who knows that litigation is probable.[11] A mortgagee is a privy in estate with the mortgagor as to actions begun before the mortgage is executed, but he is not bound by the judgment against the mortgagor, in a suit begun after the mortgage is given.[12] Whether a reserved right of a grantor to forfeit is superior to a mortgage by the grantee before forfeiture depends on the circumstances.[13] A lien for taxes paid by the mortgagee occupies in respect to priority the same position as the tax lein.[14] A mortgagee does not lose his lien by suing and recovering judgment or attaching property of the mortgagor in an action on the mortgage debt.[15] The effect of a levy by a junior lienor is to seize the equity of redemption only.[16]

§ 9. Assignments of mortgage.[17]—See 10 C. L. 868—The assignment of the mortgage debt carries with it the mortgage securing the same.[18] Mortgages not being assignable in law but only in equity,[19] the assignee takes subject to the same rights[20] and subject to the same defenses as between the original parties,[21] unless the mortgage placed upon the premises while the work is going on. Facts did not postpone the lien for material and labor to the lien of the mortgage. Soule v. Borelli, 80 Conn. 392, 68 A 979. Where the owner of land deeded it to another taking a second mortgage back, but before the mortgage took effect the mortgagor had contracted with the first mortgagee exchanging rights in the property, the deed and second mortgage were not part of a single transaction rendering the mortgagor's seisin only instantaneous and preventing a mechanic's lien from attaching to the mortgage. gagor is estopped to assert such defense.[22] A mortgagee by quit-claiming his interest in land thereby assigns a mortgage thereon to the grantee.[23] The assignee of a mortgage for collateral security is a joint owner with the mortgagee in equity.[24] There is an implied warranty by the assignor to his assignee of the validity of the mortgage,[25] despite the fact that the mortgage and note are assigned "without recourse."[26] An assignment must describe the mortgage with certainty.[27]

§ 10. Transfer of title of mortgagor and assumption of the debt.[28]—See 10 C. L. 868—In some states it is held that when a purchaser with notice of the mortgage acquires an interest in mortgaged property he succeeds to the estate and occupies the position of his grantor,[28a] and in others that there must be a distinct assumption[29] for a consideration,[30] and that the mere taking of title by a deed stating that the land is subject to a mortgage does not import a promise to pay on the part of the purchaser.[31] One who assumes a mortgage in his deed and goes into possession is under some decisions primarily liable, the grantor becoming his surety,[32] and the land being the primary fund out of which payment is to be made,[33] and the mortgagor being subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee upon payment of the debt,[34] while according to others the purchase money reserved by the grantee is the primary fund.[35] A valid agreement between the mortgagee and the purchaser of the equity to extend the time of payment opreates to release the mortgagor only so far as the security falls short of the indebtedness by reason of such extension.[36] If the grantor of mortgaged land is personally liable to pay the debt, the mortgagee or his grantee may maintain an action against the assuming grantee,[37] but when the immediate grantor is not liable, and owes no duty or obligation to the owner of the mortgage in respect to the subject-matter, no cause of action arises in favor of the owner of the mortgage.[38] One who has assumed and agreed to pay a mortgage incumbrance is estopped to deny the validity of the same,[39] but where the grantee takes subject to incumbrances, he is not bound to pay a mortgage thereon which did not constitute part of the consideration of his purchase and which was not made in good faith for a real indebtedness.[40] A parol agreement by a grantee at the time of transfer to assume an outstanding mortgage as part of the consideration may be enforced in equity.[41] Though the assumption of a mortgage debt by a subsequent purchaser is absolute and unqualified in the deed of conveyance to him, it will be controlled by a collateral contract between him and the grantor not embodied in the original deed and the mortgagee cannot enforce the contract of assumption appearing in the deed unless the grantor could.[42] Mortgage is an incident to the debt and a grantee taking subject to the mortgage is bound by and may take advantage of prior arrangements as to the debt, but, if the agreement is subsequent, the grantee is bound only by the contract existing at time of purchase.[43] A provision in a deed whereby a grantee assumes and agrees to pay an existing mortgage does not create a covenant which runs with the land, although inserted in connection with the covenants of seisin and against incumbrances.[44] Where a third party never knew of a mortgage on land transferred to him and the mortgagee subsequently discharged the mortgage and declared the third party's title good, he is not liable to the mortgagee.[45] Where a mortgage note is secured by personalty and realty both and a grantee takes the realty agreeing as part consideration to pay the mortgage note but the same is later satisfied out of the personal property, the mortgage on the realty is discharged and it is immaterial that he has procured the land without payment of the purchase price.[46] A mere purchaser of the equity of redemption of mortgaged lands is given all the protection designed by the Nebraska statute if he is permitted to deal safely with one who appears by the record to be the owner of the mortgage securing a non-negotiable debt.[47] The acquiring of a tax title by one contemplating the purchase of mortgaged land does not, upon purchase of the land subject to incumbrances, wipe out the mortgage.[48]

§ 11. Transfer of premises to mortgagee and merger.[49] See 10 C. L. 868—A mortgagor may sell his equity of redemption to the mortgagee,[50] but the transaction is viewed with distrust and must be free from fraud or inadequacy of consideration.[51] But such a transfer the equity ordinarily merges with legal title and the lien is extinguished.[52] Merger is essentially a matter of intention,[53] and where it is the intent of the parties and justice requires that the interest be kept separate, equity will prevent a merger.[54] The purchase of the land by a junior mortgagee merges his lien in the superior title,[55] but whenever an advantage could accrue to the mortgagee by preserving his lien for the purpose of using it as a screen to protect him from an intermediate title, such as a junior mortgage or other subsequent lien, the purchaser is entitled to keep his lien alive for such purpose.[56]

§ 12. Renewal, payment, release, or satisfaction.[57] See 10 C. L. 869—The question as to what constitutes such a default of payment as will warrant foreclosure is elsewhere treated.[58] After a mortgage has become extinct, it may be revived,[59] but after actual extinguishment of the debt, the mortgage cannot be revived by an oral agreement to keep it in force to secure a new and independent debt.[60] The revival

Gassert v. Strong [Mont.] 98 P 497. Payment of so much of the debt as was secured by the mortgage is a good consideration for the surrender of complainant's equity of redemption. Sears v. 52. When the holder of a mortgage subsequently acquires the property upon which it rests, the lien is thereby extinguished. Kline v. Miller's Adm'r, 107 Va. 453, 59 SE 386. Under ordinary circumstances, the mortgage interest is merged in the fee where the mortgagee acquires the estate of the mortgagor. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field [Cal.] 98 P 267. One of the conditions under which merger will operate upon estates is that the two estates, the greater and the lesser, are in the same person at the same time (Shreve v. Harvey [N. J. Eq.] 70 A 671), without an intervening right operating to prevent a merger (Curry v. La Fon, 133 Mo. App. 163, 113 SW 246). A and B held the equity, the land was incumbered by a mortgage deed of trust by which the legal title was invested in S, hence his title intervened to prevent a merger of estates in A by virtue of his holding the notes given by him. Id.

53. Facts did not show merger. Sherve v. Harvey [N. J. Eq.] 70 A 671. The question of merger is governed by the intention of the parties where the owner of fee pays off mortgage. Capitol Nat. Bank v. Holmes, 43 Colo. 154, 95 P 314.

Where the mortgagor's interest is transferred to the mortgagee and there is an agreement that the two interests shall not merge, the effect is to make the land a primary fund for the debt as between the parties. The legal title and first mortgage lien will be considered as separate interests whenever necessary for the protection of the rights of the purchaser (Id.), if the court finds it to the interest of the mortgagor that a merger should not occur, it will keep both alive (Kline v. Miller's Adm'r, 107 Va. 453, 59 SE 386).

of the debt by the stopping of the statute of limitations revives a mortgage given to secure its payment.[61] Payment may be made by a substituted note and mortgage.[62] Payment may be shown by proof of facts and circumstances relating to the dealing with the property by the parties.[63] The mere fact of possession of the mortgage deed by the mortgagor does not show a presumption of payment,[64] but production by the mortgagor of the mortgage note does [65] although it is not conclusive,[66] nor is the possession of the note by the mortgagor conclusive of payment.[67] Evidence of an oral agreement cancelling a mortgage must be clear and convincing.[68] Where the party whose duty it is to pay a mortgage and cancel it makes such payment, any writing given is a release even though it purport to be an assignment.[69] No mere change in the form of indebtedness without actual payment is deemed sufficient to entitle mortgagor to a release.[70] The laws favor settlements and courts will not disturb them except for cogent reason.[71] Where a mortgagor without notice of an assignment by the mortgagee of his interest makes payments to the mortgagee, he is entitled to credit therefor,[72] but not where an assignment to a third party has been duly recorded and the original mortgagee fails to pay over such money to the record holder.[73] Where a mortgage in the form of an absolute deed with a separate bond of defeasance is sought to be made an absolute deed, this can be done by a cancellation of the bond.[74] Tender to discharge a mortgage must be of the exact amount due.[75] If the mortgagee having notice of successive alienation of parts of the premises releases a part primarily liable for the debt, the remaining parts cannot be charged with it without first deducting the value of the part released;[76] if the value of the part released equals the entire debt, then all subsequent parcels are entirely released.[77] When money is paid to release the mortgage lien from a part of the premises, which part is conveyed in fee to a purchaser, the law applies the § 13. Redemption.[81]—See 10 C. L. 871—This section treats only of redemption from the mortgage as distinct from redemption from foreclosure.[82] The maxim being "once a mortgage always a mortgage" the right of redemption is not cut off by a contemporaneous limitation therein,[83] nor by continued default in payments,[84] nor by mere expiration of the time for redemption.[85] To entitle a judgment creditor to redeem mortgaged land, it must appear that he has a lien upon the land described in the bill.[86] In redemption proceedings the maxim, he who seeks equity must do equity, applies.[87] In an action to redeem where the mortgagee has been in possession, there may be an accounting.[88] As a general rule in an action against a mortgagee in possession to redeem and for an accounting the defendant should recover costs despite the fact that the plaintiff prevails,[89] but if the defendant is at fault, rendering expensive litigation necessary to establish plaintiff's right to redeem, the

If a mortgagor for a new consideration makes an oral agreement that the mortgage shall be continued as security for the new loan and advances are made on the faith thereof, equity will refuse to relieve the mortgagor from such agreement in a bill to redeem on the principle of he who seeks equity must do equity. Hayhurst v. Morin [Me.] 71 A 707. Such an oral agreement could not be set up against a subsequent mortgagee or attaching creditor, nor could it be invoked against the mortgagor himself or his assignee in an action at law by the mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage. plaintiff may in the court's discretion be allowed costs.[90] On redemption by a judgment creditor the title still remains in the mortgagors as owners.[91] A mortgagee seeking to set aside a redemption must tender back the sum paid to redeem.[92]

Second mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagor upon payment to him of the amount due.[95] It is essential that the payor be under some obligation to pay the debt or have some interest to protect by the payment,[96] and an oral promise of the mortgagee that one loaning money to the mortgagor may be substituted for the mortgagee and have a lien is not sufficient to create a lien.[97]

94. Plaintiff paid $400 to a mortgagor to pay off a bank mortgage and took a deed of land believing mortgagor had title. Later it developed that she did not have and plaintiff was obliged to purchase an outstanding two-thirds interest and was entitled to subrogation to the mortgagee's rights as against owners of the two-thirds interest. Paton v. Robinson [Conn.] 71 A 730. Purchaser paying off a mortgage is entitled to subrogation. Overturf v. Martin, 170 Ind. 308, 84 NE 531; Moring v. Privott, 146 N. C. 558, 60 SE 509.

95. Boocock v. Wood, 113 NYS 46.

96. Davis v. Davis [Vt.] 69 A 876. When the owner of the fee title pays off a prior incumbrance without actual notice of a junior judgment lien, it will be presumed that he paid the same for his own benefit and the protection of his own interests, and equity will treat him as the assignee of the original incumbrance and will revive and enforce it for his benefit. Purchaser paid off mortgage in ignorance of a judgment lien, although it was on record was subrogated to rights of mortgagee. Capitol Nat. Bank v. Holmes, 43 Colo. 154, 95 P 314. Even where the deed recites that the purchaser shall pay off the mortgage as part of the purchase price, he is entitled to subrogation. Id. One loaning money to pay off a vendor's lien is not substituted thereby to the rights of the vendor, and acquires no lien. Sureties to vendee's note upon payment do not acquire a lien to rights of obligee. Lane v. Lloyd, 33 Ky. L. R. 570, 110 SW 401.

97. Lane v. Lloyd, 33 Ky. L. R. 570, 110 SW 401.

1. Form, "In the above entitled cause, appellants move that the same be assigned for jury trial," is sufficient under sec. 799, Court and Practice Act 1905, securing a jury trial of controverted matters of fact to any party who makes known his desire in writing at proper time and place. Arnold v. Regan. [R. I.] 69 A 292.

2. Order for inspection of documents erroneously granted where it did not appear in

Where the statute requires a motion to be made in writing, it must be so made.[4] Although the court rules provide for a daily motion list and prescribe the manner of placing motions thereon, and the notices to be given, the court is not precluded from hearing motions not on the list.[5] Motions must be made seasonably, and in conformity with the rules of pleading,[6] although the trial court may at its discretion, entertain them when the limitation of time for filing is but a provision of its rules.[7] A statute limiting the time in which a judgment must be entered does not extend to decisions on motions.[8] A motion in the cause, as distinguished from one for an ancillary remedy, must be made in the county where the action is pending.[9]

Notice.[See 10 C. L. 873]—The manner of service of notice of motion is immaterial when in fact it procures the presence of the opposing counsel and he argues the merits thereon,[10] but when the statute provides for a notice of motion it must be complied with.[11] The party insisting that notice of motion is not served in time has the burden of proving that fact.[12] Service by mail on non-resident counsel is usually authorized.[13]

Hearing, rehearing and relief.[See 10 C. L. 873]—A motion will be denied when the moving papers fail to show any real or meritorious ground therefore,[14] and, if based upon matters dehors the record, must be supported by evidence aliunde.[15] On the motion for a new trial on the minutes, the court may take into consideration the entire case, including evidence not transcribed.[16] Strict practice requires the judge a manner allowing judicial determination, that they existed and were under defendant's control. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Burks [Kan.] 96 P 950.

3. On motion for an order avowing inspection of documents, not sufficient to say that documents contained material evidence, showing should be such that the court can pass upon materiality. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Burks [Kan.] 96 P 950.

4. Acts 1903, p. 339, c. 193, § 2, requiring motions to insert new matter in pleadings to be made in writing and to set out words of matter sought so to be inserted is mandatory. Nichols v. Central Trust Co. [Ind. App.] 86 NE 878.

5. Plaintiff gave one day's notice of motion for entry of judgment on default, but failed to place motion on list, or give notice in compliance with rule 74 of the superior court. Held court had jurisdiction to hear motion. Worster v. Yeaton, 198 Mass. 335, 84 NE 461.

6. Plaintiff was entitled as a matter of right to have motion to dismiss writ in ejectment overruled, when not filed in time allowed for dilatory pleas, since failure to raise objection at earliest opportunity was a waiver of the defect. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r [Vt.] 69 A 826.

7. Motion to dismiss writ in ejectment on ground of no service not filed within time allowed for dilatory pleas. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r [Vt.] 69 A 826.

8. Where new trial had been granted upon payment of taxable costs, a motion for judgment absolute not yet decided, but held in reserve to determine whether costs had been paid, furnished no ground for a writ of mandamus compelling justice to decide motion by entering judgment, § 230 of the Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1557, c. 580), referring only to the time in which judgments must be entered, and having no reference to motions. Rogers v. Walsh, 114 NYS 185.

9. Motion for order and sale of property in hands of receiver made in another county before court had convened. Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Peregoy-Jenkins Co., 147 N. C. 293, 61 SE 68.

10. Motion to vacate an order of dismissal. Silver Springs & W. R. Co. v. Koonce [Fla.] 47 S 390.

11. Where statute required 4 days' notice and plaintiff obtained order of resettlement on 1 day's notice, court should have dismissed motion. Feist v. Weingarten Bros., 111 NYS 848.

12. Notice of motion for new trial. Objecting party must show that he served notice of entry of judgment in order that limitation of time under § 6796, Rev. Codes, may begin to run. State v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. [Mont.] 99 P 139.

13. Service held good. Bonney v. McClelland, 138 Ill. App. 449.

14. On a default judgment allowing recovery for professional services as expert alienist, default will not be opened where defendant falls to aver that plaintiff's employment was not authorized. Affidavit of merits not sufficient. Dana v. Thaw, 109 NYS 826. In a criminal case where court allowed a motion to substitute a copy for the original transcript on appeal, a motion to strike this copy out will be denied where the only ground upon which made was that there were irregularities in the proof of correctness and of distruction of the original. People v. Garnett [Cal. App.] 98 P 247.

15. That no copy of assignment of errors was served on defendants, held, on motion to strike bill of exceptions, not self-supporting. Thomas v. Price [Fla.] 48 S 17.

16. Notice of intention to move for a new trial on the minutes of the court under to find the facts on a motion to set aside a judgment for excusable mistake.[17] Where the facts are complicated and it is manifest that the truth cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty without an examination of the witnesses, the court may, in its discretion, order a reference.[18] A hearing on motion for order allowing inspection of documents is not conclusive as to the materiality of the documents.[19] As the only mode of judicially determining a motion is by the entry of an order of determination,[20] a party is entitled to a formal order on the decision of his motion from which he may appeal.[21]

Renewals. See 10 C. L. 873—The granting of a motion after the same has once been denied is a matter of discretion, and it will be presumed to have been properly exercised.[22]

§ 2. The order.[23] See 10 C. L. 874—Objections to the motion should be incorporated in the order allowing it.[24] The court may refer to judgment rolls in its custody and insert them in the order where it appears that they were referred to on the argument as having a material bearing on the question to be decided.[25] An order for the sale of property in the hands of a receiver must be made in the county where the cause is pending, and at the term of court.[26] Orders denying motions to postpone will be made only when the case is actually reached for trial.[27]

Operation, effect and conclusiveness. See 10 C. L. 874—An order of a court of record in due form imports verity,[28] but a mere recital that an order is a court order does not make it so, when signed by the judge as judge.[29] A statement in the caption § 6795, Rev. Codes, allows trial court to take into consideration entire case in order to determine motion, and it is not necessary that stenographer's notes be transcribed, if court can remember the evidence sufficiently to decide the motion, since statute contemplates that such a motion shall be made immediately after trial. State v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. [Mont.] 99 P 139.

17. Facts held sufficient to show judgment, properly set aside for absence caused by excusable mistake, although court did not formally find facts, but decided the motion by exercise of its discretion. Smith v. Holmes Bros., 148 N. C. 210, 61 SE 631.

18. Reference not necessary on motion to remove trustees interested in reorganization of company whose stock they hold, where beneficaries under trust ask for their retention. Warren v. Burnham, 125 App. Div. 169, 109 NYS 202.

19. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Burks [Kan.] 96 P 950.

20. An order staying proceedings until determination of motion incorporated in an order to show cause why a bill of particulars should not be furnished was not violated by the entry of judgment after the order to show cause was determined, as this was a final order of determination. Tuska v. Jarvis, 113 NYS 767.

21. On application for mandamus to compel justice to enter order denying motion to adjourn, held that such a motion need not be finally decided until case actually reached for trial. Rubenstein v. Schmuck, 113 NYS 554.

22. Where an order was made denying allowance of attorney's fees in a suit for probate of will and before a new trial, it was made during the pendency of the suit, and liberty to renew the application having been granted, the order did not preclude a later application. In re Riviere's Estate [Cal. App.] 98 P 46.

24. Where an order allowing an inspection of documents did not recite defendant's preliminary objections, a motion for resettlement on that ground will be granted in order that on appeal it may appear that defendant's objections were timely. Societe Anonyme Des Glaces Nationales Belges v. Kahn, 126 App. Div. 834, 110 NYS 980.

25. On question as to whom money in hands of receiver should be paid, judgment rolls in original action where defendant was a party referred to. Conlon v. Kelley, 126 App. Div. 624, 110 NYS 1070.

26. Order permitting receiver to sell property was made at chambers in another county, without notice to the parties and at a time when court was in session. Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Peregoy-Jenkins Co., 147 N. C. 293, 61 SE 68.

27. No error in refusal to sign order denying postponment for absence of plaintiffs on preliminary call of the calendar, since plaintiffs might arrive before case was reached. Rubenstein v. Schmuck, 113 NYS 554.

28. Order continuing a motion to vacate an order of dismissal made on last day of term is binding on parties and cannot be overcome by affidavits or pleadings in the cause. Townsend v. Gregory, 132 Ill. App. 192.

29. Where the statute provided that "probate judge" should order an election under local option act, petition was addressed to "judge of the probate court;" order recited that it was "ordered, adjudged and decreed that it was made at chambers cannot be disproved in a collateral proceeding.[30] The validity of a chambers order in a matter properly considered as a court matter will be tested by the power of the judge to act on such matter at chambers, and not by the general powers of the court.[31] A party in default, but of whom the court has acquired jurisdiction, is chargeable with notice of all orders made in the cause until the end of the term at which final judgment was rendered against him.[32]

Nunc pro tunc orders.[See 10 C. L. 874]—An order may be amended nunc pro tunc to make the record conform to the truth,[33] but an order is not a nunc pro tunc order merely because it adds the minutes of the judge to the record.[34]

Amendment and vacation.[See 10 C. L. 874]—Orders made and entered during the progress of proceedings are subject to revocation by the court for good cause during term time,[35] but not later.[36] A void order may be set aside at any time,[37] and on the court's own motion when the order is void ab initio.[38] A resettled order abrogates the former order,[39] but an order vacating an order of vacatur operates as a revival of the original order.[40] A judge cannot review orders of another judge of coordinate powers.[41] by this court, etc.," and was signed by "judge of probate," held to be made by the "judge." Richter v. State [Ala.] 47 S 163.

30. Parol evidence offered to show that order was given in open court, although caption recited that it was made at chambers. Morehead v. Allen [Ga.] 63 SE 507. Where an order contained a statement in the heading that it was made at chambers, fact that proceedings were entered by clerk on record and that words "at chambers" were left out, did not show a court order. Id.

31. Order made during session and stated in the heading to have been made at chambers, authorizing sale of real estate of minor, invalid since such matters are to be considered in open court. Morehead v. Allen [Ga.] 63 SE 507.

32. An order of amendment. Boynton v. Alwart, 137 Ill. App. 227.

33. Where default order against defendant on action on judgment was entered without reference to the clerk for assessment of damages, court properly amended it nunc pro tunc so as to provide for an assessment of damages by the court where 7 months had elapsed and no steps had been taken by defendant. Goebel Brew. Co. v. Medbury, 153 Mich. 49, 15 Det. Leg N. 335, 116 NW 543.

34. On motion for nunc pro tunc order to correct record so as to extend time for filing bill of exceptions, court amended record so as to make it show that minutes of the judge gave extension of time "for 30 days," while record of the clerk added words "from this date." Held not a nunc pro tunc order. Weeks Hardware Co. v. Weeks [Mo. App.] 115 SW 490.

35. Decision overruling a demurrer is not a judgment but an order, and allowance of an amended demurrer revoked that order. Dent v. Los Angeles County Super. Ct., 7 Cal. App. 683, 95 P 672. Order in creditor's suit fixing amount of creditor's claim held interlocutory and subject to be opened during the term. Standard Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Aldrich [C. C. A.] 163 F 216.

36. Vacation after term of order allowing amendment of pleading held erroneous but harmless. Albamy Phosphate Co. v. Hugger Bros., 4 Ga. App. 771, 62 SE 533.

37. An order appointing curator, void because no service on parent, may be set aside after expiration of term of court during which it was made. Wortham v. John [Okl.] 98 P 347. Trial court had made an order extending time for preparing a statement, and thereafter by a further order again extending the time, but this order was not made until time limited in first order had expired and when statement was presented for settlement it was stricken on motion of adverse party on ground of untimeliness and that court had lost jurisdiction, held correct. Bank of Commerce v. Baldwin, 14 Idaho, 75, 93 P 504.

38. Order after final judgment requiring one not a party to deliver property in his possession to the sheriff for plaintiff's benefit. Persing v. Reno Stock Brokerage Co. [Nev.] 96 P 1054.

39. A final order was made in favor of a landlord in summary proceedings for nonpayment of rent; subsequently an order opening defendant's default was made, but later resettled. Defendant appealed from final order and order opening default, but not from resettled order. Held appeal should have been from the latter. Pepe v. Curti 114 NYS 415.

40. Order dismissed an appeal from justice court; order of dismissal vacated and cause reinstated and motion to set aside said order continued. The court entered an order that order vacating dismissal order be vacated, thereby reviving dismissal order. Bromberg v. People, 136 Ill. App. 602.

41. Where a motion was denied by a special term held by one justice, an application made to another special term held by another justice amounts to an appeal from one

MUNICIPAL BONDS.

The scope of this topic is noted below.[43]

§ 1. Power to issue.[44]—See 10 C. L. 875—There must be express legislative authority for the issue of bonds, and the power cannot be implied from the power to borrow money.[45] In granting the power, constitutional requirements as to the title of the act,[46] and the inhibition of special legislation,[47] should be observed. An authorization will not be viewed hypercritically,[48] unless circumstances of unfairness or excessiveness so dictate.[49] A legislative grant of power to issue may supersede charter limitations.[50] It is a universal restriction that the bonds be for a public purpose.[51] Bonds may be authorized for purposes for which the revenues of a city are ordinarily expended, such as highways and boulevards,[52] or a county may be au-special term to another. Sloan v. Beard, 125 App. Div. 625, 110 NYS 1.

42. See Appeal and Review, 11 C. L. 113.

43. "Municipal bonds" includes bonds issued by every public corporation or department of government and not alone those of cities and villages. There are many collateral questions pertaining to the topics dealing with the particular class of public corporations which issues the bonds. These topics may be consulted (see Municipal Corporations, 10 C. L. 881; Counties, 11 C. L. 908; Sewers and Drains, 10 C. L. 1631; Schools and Education, 10 C. L. 1597; Towns; Townships, 10 C. 46. Where Loc. Acts 1907, p. 133, No. 411, was entitled as an act for issuance of bonds for paving certain street, and such act contained a provision (§ 4) creating an entirely new board for directing local improvements, contrary to Acts 1903, p. 366, No. 231, the provision not being indicated in the title rendered the act unconstitutional (Const. Art. 4, § 20). McDonald v. Springwells, 152 Mich. 28, 15 Det. Leg. N. 86, 115 NW 1066. Entire act invalid. Id.

47. Laws 1907, p. 94, c. 72, providing for bonds to erect and remove bridges across Republican river in Cloud county, repugnant to Const. art. 2, § 17, as special legislation and void. Anderson v. Cloud County Com'rs, 77 Kan. 721, 95 P 583.

48. State v. Wilder, 211 Mo. 305, 109 SW 574. Statute authorizing bonds for public improvements should be construed so as not to defeat manifest object of enactment. City of Cheyenne v. State [Wyo.] 96 P 244.

49. Bond issue of $40,000 in small city indebted over $18,000. State v. Wilder, 211 Mo. 305, 109 SW 574.

50. Limitations of charter of Town of East Lake inoperative since Acts 1903, p. 59, as to issuance of bonds is new power conferred according to Const. of 1901 which by § 225 fixes limitation on such power. Howard v. East Lake [Ala.] 46 S 754. East Lake Town charter § 29, prohibiting expenditures, only refers to ordinary municipal transactions, not issuance of bonds, or it would be in conflict with § 15 as to bonds. Id.

51. Issuance of county bonds to aid in establishment of training school for teachers in accordance with Acts 1907, p. 1165, c. 820. Acts 1907, p. 733, c. 493, is for "public purpose" not violative of constitution. Cox v. Pitt County Com'rs, 146 N. C. 584, 60 SE 516. Issue of bonds to purchase grounds and erect school buildings a "corporate purpose" within Const. 1868, art. 9, § 8. Jordan v. Greenville, 79 S. C. 436, 60 SE 973. Laws 1905, p. 1621, c. 646, authorizing bonds for sanitary trunk sewer by Westchester county does not violate Const. art. 8, § 10, prohibiting indebtedness, since considering inadequate sewage outlet, proposed trunk sewer is for benefit of majority of county's inhabitants. Horton v. Andrus, 191 N. Y. 231, 83 NE 1120.

52. St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, does not authorize issuance of bonds except for the purposes for which ordinary revenues of a city might be expended. City of San Diego v. Potter, 153 Cal. 288, 95 P 146. Highways and boulevards proper object. Id. Building and construction of streets, highways and boulevards, object for which city may expend revenues (Vrooman Act. § 26, St. 1885, p. 161, c. 153, as am'd by St. 1891, p. 206, c. 147), and bonds may be issued under act of 1901, notwithstanding Park and Boulevard Act Mch. 19, 1889, St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248. Id. St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizes submission of proposition for acquiring public park. Id. Propositions to acquire lands for roads, boulevards, etc., authorized by charter of San Diego, St. 1889, p. 70, c. 76; § 22, p. 76; and St. 1903, p. 386, c. 268, § 36, properly submitted under St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing indebtedness, etc., notwithstanding St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248 (Park and Boulevard Act). Id. Not necessary that ordinance designate that bonds were to be issued under St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, rather than Park and thorized to issue bonds for like purposes.[53] Where county commissioners are authorized and determine that county courthouse be erected, the determination of whether a tax be levied or bonds issued is matter solely for such commissioners.[54]

Refunding bonds See 10 C. L. 876 may be authorized,[55] but an authorization to exchange for bonds does not permit an exchange for promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness.[56]

Railroad aid bonds. See 10 C. L. 878—Townships can by observing constitutional requirements issue bonds to aid the construction of railroads.[57] The statutory authority to county commissioners to subscribe for railroad stock will not permit a township to be subjected to railroad aid bonds.[58]

Limitation of indebtedness See 10 C. L. 878 may be based on population,[59] or the amount of tax levy.[60] Constitutional provisions may also permit an excessive debt where the purchase of public utilities is involved.[61] A statutory limitation is inapplicable where an issue of bonds is expressly authorized,[62] and a charter limitation has been held not to render an issue illegal where the constitutional limitation was not exceeded.[63] Bond proposed to be issued in excess of a tax levy may be en-

Boulevard Act 1889, St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248, since provisions of former act were literally complied with. Id.

53. Under Pol. Code § 4088, issuance of bonds of Sacramento county for constructing roads, bridges and highways is authorized. Johnson v. Williams, 153 Cal. 368, 95 P 655. Issuance of bonds for repairing bridges authorized by portion of Pol. Code, § 4088, which authorizes issuance for any purpose for which board might expend funds. Construing § 2712. Johnson v. Williams, 153 Cal. 368, 95 P 655. Rev. St. 1887, § 3604, amended by Acts Feb. 7, 1899, and Mch. 14, 1899 (L. 1899, pp. 136, 443), authorizes board of county commissioners to bond county for construction and repair of bridge when indebtedness thereby created exceeds revenue for year, provided that such bonds be authorized by vote of two-thirds of qualified electors. No petition necessary to confer jurisdiction to construct bridge since repeal of Rev. St. 1887, § 1762. Gilbert v. Canyon County, 14 Idaho, 429, 94 P 1027.

54. Llewellen v. McKenney, 130 Ga. 356, 60 SE 1000.

55. Under Rev. St. 1906, § 2834a, county commissioners are authorized to issue and exchange new bonds for outstanding one. Muskingum County Com'rs v. State, 78 Ohio St. 287, 85 NE 562.

56. Under Rev. St. 1906, § 2834a, county commissioners not authorized to exchange for promissory notes. Muskingum County Com'rs v. State, 78 Ohio St. 287, 85 NE 562.

57. Wittkowsky v. Jackson County Com'rs [N. C.] 63 SE 275. Term "county" in Const. art. 2, § 14, prescribing method of passing laws authorizing counties, etc., to issue bonds, includes all political or legislative subdivisions such as townships. Id.

58. Wittkowsky v. Jackson County Com'rs [N. C.[63 SE 275.

59. Limitation of indebtedness based on population (Const. 1901, art. 12, § 225), does not require that preceding decennial federal census show population of 6,000 before bonds issued, but sufficient if city have 6,000 population at time of indebtedness. Ryan v. Tuscaloosa [Ala.] 46 S 638. Census insufficient to sustain bond issue under constitutional limitation as to cities of 2,000 or more, though city in issuing dramshop licenses acted on theory of 2,000 inhabitants, where only valid census (federal) showed less than required number. State v. Wilder, 211 Mo. 305, 109 SW 574.

60. No levy in excess of constitutional limitation even though bonds for necessary purpose (Const. art. 7, § 7), without special permission of General Assembly, or for other than necessary purposes except by vote of people. Commissioners of Pitt County v. MacDonald, McKay & Co., 148 N. C. 125, 61 SE 643.

61. Const. art. 10, § 27, a self-executing grant to qualified property taxpayers to become indebted in excess of amount specified in Const, art. 10. § 26, when purchase of public utilities is involved. State v. Millar [Okl.] 96 P 747. "Public utility" synonymous with "public use" meaning public usefulness, utility, advantage or what is productive of general benefit. Id. Sewer a public utility. Id. Convention hall to be owned, controlled and used exclusively by city to accommodate public gatherings and for other public uses is "public utility" within meaning of term used in Const. art. 10, § 27 (Burns' Ed. § 293). State v. Barnes [Okl.] 97 P 997. Tax levy 30 cents on $100 to create sinking fund and pay interest on issued bonds in addition to levy of 50 cents for general city purposes not in contravention of Rev. St. 1899, § 5968 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3015), as to power and extent of incurring indebtedness. State v. Payne, 211 Mo. 64, 109 SW 728.

63. Issue of $30,000 bonds by town of Lancaster authorized by 8 per cent limitation of Const. art. 8, § 7, and art. 10, § 5, without regard to 15 per cent charter limitation. Town of Lancaster v. First Nat. Bank, 80 S. C. 547, 61 SE 1025.

joined,[64] but where an issue conforms to the requirements of law, and there is no proof, it will not be assumed that the tax levy is unconstitutional.[65]

Curative acts. See 10 C. L. 877—An issue of bonds in excess of the statutory limitation as to indebtedness may be rendered valid by a curative act.[66] Special legislation must be avoided.[67]

§ 2. Conditions precedent; submission to vote; provision for payment.[68]—See 10 C. L. 877—An authorization by voters for bonds may be dependent upon conditions precedent.[69] Such conditions precedent are presumed to have been performed when the bonds are issued by the proper officer.[70]

Assent of voters or taxpayers See 10 C. L. 877 is usually prerequisite,[71] though it is often dispensed with in case of refunding bonds,[72] and, in some jurisdictions, in case of bonds for necessary municipal expenses,[73] though this latter exception is not universal.[74] Counties may be classified for legislation as to increase of indebtedness without vote.[75] The legislative authorization upon consent of voters may require a new registration,[76] or submit the proposition only to legal electors who are

85. Term, "for the construction of waterworks in said city, to be owned and operated by said city," sufficiently comprehensive to include work such as re-equipping and making extensions to existing waterworks system. State v. Millar [Okl.] 96 P 747.

86. St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, held to authorize submission of several propositions at elections. City of San Diego v. Potter, 153 Cal. 288, 95 P 146. Submission of question of issuing bonds to cover costs of superintending construction of bridge, as well as contract price for bridge, authorized. Gilbert v. Canyon County, 14 Idaho, 429, 94 P 1027. Submission of whether bonds be issued to purchase or construct, or both, a waterworks system, valid since Const. 1901, art. 12, § 222, and related act, Acts 1903, p. 60, § 1, require "issue" of bonds to be submitted and course to be pursued in application of proceeds designated by such acts is in control and discretion of council. Ryan v. Tuscaloosa [Ala.] 46 S 638.

87. Cannot be combined and submitted as single question. Rea v. La Fayette, 130 Ga. 771, 61 SE 707. Submission of several issues of bonds for different purposes, at same time and place proper, separate ballots being provided for each set of bonds. Coleman v. Eutair [Ala.] 47 S 703. Submission of bond issue to purchase waterworks and electric light plant not objectionable as submission of double purpose. Id. In submission of amendment of § 108, of charter of Eugene (Sp. Laws Or. 1905, p. 274), as to whether municipal indebtedness be augmented by striking authorization as to lighting bonds and increasing water bonds; and including in proposal an alteration of § 112, which was construed not to apply to sewer bonds, and remaining propositions being germane to § 108, so that affirmative vote for § 108 necessitated ballot for § 112, such submission was proper, though two or more separate propositions cannot be united when referred to electors. City of Eugene v. Willamette Valley Co. [Or.] 97 P 817.

88. Bond issue for macadamizing road by county under Acts 1906, p. 105, c. 107, held invalid where town of Culpeper exempt from road tax and poll for voters of town directed and it also appeared that votes were cast on supposition that property was liable to taxation for payment of such bonds. 90. Proceedings for issuance of bonds not invalid because of Sess. Laws Okla. 1905, p. 115, c. 8, art. 9, in that no contract for purchase of waterworks was submitted before submission of issue of bonds. State v. Millar [Okl.] 96 P 747.

change the result,[91] or because of an error in the appointment of officers.[92] An issue of bonds based on an invalid election may be enjoined,[93] and the continual submission of a proposition by a school board may be enjoined as an abuse of discretion.[94] In an election contest, courts will presume that all electors failing to vote assented to the affirmative vote shown by the returns.[95]

Notice of election See 10 C. L. 878 required by statute [96] should be in substantial compliance therewith,[97] and publication [98] of notice of time and place [99] of the election is ordinarily essential. Error or inadvertence of clerk in improperly designating his official title,[1] or the fact that the registrar's books were kept open for a period before the election,[2] has been held not to effect the validity of an election.

Providing for payment of bonds. See 10 C. L. 878—Constitutional or statutory provisions require provisions as to payment before an indebtedness is incurred such as a sinking fund,[3] or that the proposition submitted state the rate of interest,[4] or sum to be raised.[5] Where the authorizing statute provides the manner of payment, it should be substantially complied with,[6] and in such case errors in the proposition submitted are harmful only when the voters are misled.[7]

2. Bond issue under Priv. Laws, 1907, p. 246, c. 83, not invalid where books kept open 20 days before election, it being evident that purpose of act was to require election pursuant to charter with additional requirement of notice by registrar. Cottrell v. Lenoir, 148 N. C. 137, 61 SE 599.

3. Constitutional provision for a twenty-five year sinking fund clearly contemplates term of bonds. Const. art. 10, § 27. State v. Millar [Okl.] 96 P 747. City ordinances providing continual annual tax and sinking fund, sufficiently comply with Const. art. 10, § 27, as to providing funds to pay bonds issued in constructing public utilities. Id. Where village issued bonds for local improvement maturing in 30 years and provided for payment of 90 per cent of cost by assessments in five annual installments, proceeds of such assessments should be invested in sinking fund to retire bonds on maturity and no annual tax for improvements except to pay 10 per cent share of village was permitted as long as moneys from local assessment fund were available. Use of assessment fund except to retire bonds restrained. In re Village of Kenmore, 59 Misc. 388, 110 NYS 1008.

4. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1704, 1705, 1708, 1712, ordinance directing issuance of bonds and notice of special election submitting proposition that bonds were to "bear interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent per annum" sufficiently specific to render bonds issued at 5 per cent valid. City of Cheyenne v. State [Wyo.] 96 P 244.

5. Under General Municipal Law, Laws 1892, p. 1734, c. 685, § 5, proposition submitting improvement of streets at cost of $18,400 to be borrowed on bonds, a sum to be raised annually by levying tax, sufficient to pay principal and interest of said bonds as they become due, was not fatally defective as failing to specify the sum to be raised to pay such principal and interest. Village of Bronxville v. Seymour, 122 App. Div. 377, 106 NYS 834.

6. Manner of payment and issuance provided by ordinance sufficient compliance

§ 3. Execution.[8]—See 8 C. L. 1051—The corporate seal is not required where a statute authorizes bonds by township commissioners "under their hands and seals respectively." [9]

§ 4. Form and requisites.[10]—See 10 C. L. 879—In a broad sense a bond comprises a negotiable promissory note under seal.[11] A bond takes effect from delivery and carries interest from the date of issue.[12]

Validation proceedings See 10 C. L. 879 provided in some jurisdictions have been held constitutional,[13] and a judgment of validation pursuant to statute is conclusive upon citizens as to the validity of an issue of bonds.[14]

§ 5. Issue and sale.[15]—See 10 C. L. 879—The issuance of bonds may be compelled by mandamus upon a sufficient petition,[16] or restrained when unauthorized.[17] A of interest on bonds, in excess of the amount required, cannot be applied to general expenses.[30] The place of payment may be outside of the state.[31] The statutes contain provisions as to the retirement of bonds from the sinking fund,[32] provide for the payment of interest annually,[33] or that payment of certificates of indebtedness be subject to a county court.[34] A city given statutory authority to borrow money for the erection of public buildings and issue bonds therefor has not the right to use its current revenues for that purpose, as against a judgment creditor whose judgment is payable only from the surplus of such revenues above current expenses.[35] The Alabama statute for refunding the indebtedness of Mobile provides for payment by only two methods, sale or rental of certain property, and a tax to be levied by the act.[36]

Payment from special fund or tax. See 8 C. L. 1055—Charter provisions where a public utility is purchased may provide for a special fund to pay such bonds and interest.[37] A fund raised from water rents is not a trust fund, and the city may by ordinance provide for payment of taxes raised in this manner into the general fund.[38]

City of Eugene v. Willamette Valley Co. [Or.] 97 P 817.

38. Under St. 1871, p. 514, c. 133, § 15, authorizing water bonds and § 17 authorizing regulation of price for payment of debt, the fund raised by prescribed water rates was not trust fund, but merely a direction to raise, as far as practicable, a sum sufficient to pay debt. Sinclair v. Brightman, 198 Mass. 248, 84 NE 453. Ordinance under St. 1871, p. 514, c. 133, § 17, creating special fund from water rents, not exhaustion of council's power and council might amend to require payment of water rents into general fund with special appropriations to pay expenses, principal and interest of waterworks. Id. Such ordinance not contrary to public policy of commonwealth as displayed in constitution and legislation. Id. Such ordinance not objectionable as impairing contract, since neither legislation or ordinances constituted contract. Id. Ordinance not objectionable as creating disproportionate burden of taxation, since users of water do so voluntarily. Id. St. 1902, p. 310, c. 393, § 23, cl. 15, that Fall River water department be under Watuppa Water Board, held not to take away council's power to make appropriations for expenses of board and to dispose of income. Bill in equity by holder of improvement bonds alleging that by statute city is trustee to levy and collect special assessments on property benefited by improvement and apply proceeds in payment of bonds, that it has diverted such proceeds and threatens to continue so doing, states cause of action for equitable relief which court of law could not afford. Olmstead v. Superior, 155 F 172.

42. Where supreme court held that state statute created general liability of city for payment of certain issue of bonds in addition to making city statutory trustee for collection of special assessment, bill in equity seeking to make city primary debtor as well as statutory trustee by praying money judgment was not multifarious. Olmsted v. Superior, 155 F 172.

43. Bill to charge municipality as voluntary trustee under legislative act for payment of certain bonds, showing refusal of defendant twenty-five years before to perform required acts, showing no payment of interest, that bonds matured eight years before suit and failing to show excuse for delay, presents laches and is demurrable. Eddy v. San Francisco [C. C. A.] 162 F 441.

44. Where declaration alleges bonds made by and under hands and seals of commissioners of township, such declaration is not demurrable because instruments sued on are not sealed, although declaration also averred that there was no formal scroll or seal on the bonds, but that they contained recitals of sealing on special date, that township might not have seal, that seal of commissioners had no legal efficacy, etc. Smythe v. New Providence, 158 F 213. Averment of sealing of bonds not destroyed by other averments, conclusions. Id. Averments that individual seals of commissioners had no legal efficacy, mere conclusion. 46. This article is designed to treat, as strictly as may be the law of municipalities as distinguished from that of streets and other public ways (see Highways and Streets, 11 C. L. 1720), parks and public grounds (see Parks and Public Grounds, 10 C. L. 1079), bridges (see Bridges, 11 C. L. 441), public utilities, works and improvements (see Public Works and Improvements, 10 C. L. 1307), health and sanitation (see Health, 11 C. L. 1717), buildings and injuries

§ 1. Nature, attributes and elements.[47] See 10 C. L. 881—The term "municipal corporations" as ordinarily applied includes all corporations created for the local exercise of delegated governmental functions.[48] They are auxiliaries or instrumentalities of the general government of the state for the purpose of municipal rule.[49] The powers of a municipality are wholly delegated,[50] but in the exercise of powers so conferred, it is subject only to constitutional restrictions.[51] The distinctions between its governmental and private functions are chiefly important in determining liability for tort.[52]

§ 2. Creation and corporate existence. A. Creation and organization.[53] See 10 C. L. 882—The creation of municipal corporations by special act is prohibited by the constitutions of most states.[54] An enactment authorizing the organization of a municipality at once, though the statute does not become effective until a future date, is not invalid as a delegation of legislative power.[55] An enactment as to the time of notice before an election has been held to be merely directory.[56] The inclusion of farm lands in an incorporated municipality may operate to render the incorporation void,[57] or at most a de facto municipality,[58] but in determining such question therein and public regulations (see Buildings and Building Restrictions, 11 C. L. 479), the local taxing power (see Taxes, 10 C. L. 1776), local and special assessments (see Public Works and Improvements, 10 C. L. 1307), licenses and licensing (see Licenses, 10 C. L. 622), the granting of franchises (see Franchises, 11 C. L. 1560), and the law of public officers generally (see Officers and Public Employes, 10 C. L. 1043). The particular applications of the general law of municipalities to these several enumerated subjects should be sought in the titles cited. The body of laws relating to each of these largely involves powers and duties of counties, towns, and of the public generally, as well as powers of municipalities. All this has been brought together into titles relating to the subject-matter of such powers and duties.

49. Subordinate governmental entities (State v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 47 S 358; Hardee v. Brown [Fla.] 47 S 834), instrumentality of state (Ware v. Fitchburg, 200 Mass. 61, 85 NE 951) with local functions subject to state's power (O'Haver v. Montgomery [Tenn.] 111 SW 449), with powers, rights, duties and privileges as conferred by statute (People v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P 294), constitute part of civil government of state (Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. v. Mobile, 162 F 523), public in their nature (Cox v. Pitt County Com'rs, 146 N. C. 584, 60 SE 516), created as convenient agencies for exercising governmental powers as state may intrust (People v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 85 NE 1070; Schigley v. Waseca [Minn.] 118 NW 259; City of Burlington v. Central Vermont R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 826), have constitutional right of self-government (Davidson v. Hine, 151 Mich. 294, 14 Det. Leg. N. 957, 115 NW 246; Summit Tp. v. Jackson [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 679, 117 NW 545), partly agent of state to assist in civil government but chiefly to administer local affairs (People v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P 294), in absence of constitutional restrictions, are subject to legislative control, object being common good (Lutterlot v. Fayetteville [N. C.] 62 SE 758; People v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P 294). Legislature may establish municipality to exercise certain governmental powers of state within territorial limits. State v. Cederaski, 80 Conn. 478, 69 A 19.

58. Where municipality incorporated con-

the character of the district as a whole must be considered.[59] Though the organization of municipalities including the extent of their territory is exclusively legislative,[60] a court or other official body may be authorized to determine the existence of requisites fixed by the legislature.[61] The determination is subject to review,[62] but judgments of such courts, if within jurisdiction, can only be attacked upon allegations of fraud or excess of jurisdiction.[63] The Oklahoma statute as to incorporation of cities of the first class has been held inapplicable to those cities that became cities of the first class upon the admission of the state.[64] A town may be recognized as such, though no map showing its subdivisions is recorded.[65]

(§ 2) B. Consolidation, succession and dissolution.[66]—See 10 C. L. 882—Consolidation is sometimes provided for by statute.[67] Incidental to consolidation, the legislative enactment usually provides for the vesting of property and rights and the tained 4 square miles including agricultural lands, city was de facto corporation, though Rev. St. 1895, art. 386a, limited territory to 2 square miles. City of Carthage v. Burton [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 440.

State v. Bellflower, 129 Mo. App. 138, 108 SW 117. In absence of statute unplatted outlots and lands used for agricultural purposes may, within reasonable restrictions and limitations, be included in the corporate limits. (§ 2) C. Classes and classification.[71]—See 10 C. L. 883—Municipalities may be classified for purposes of legislation provided such classification is reasonable and based on real and substantial differences of population or situation.[72]

(§ 2) D. Attack on corporate existence; quo warranto.[73]—See 10 C. L. 883—The validity of the organization and existence of a municipal corporation can only be questioned in a direct proceeding,[74] at the instance of the state,[75] on the relation of tax payers[76] against the officers of the municipality.[77] The proceeding is improperly joined with an action to enjoin a tax levy,[78] and is subject to limitations[79] or laches.[80] The failure of officers to exercise their conferred powers is justified when prevented by the remonstrants.[81] Where a legislative enactment authorized county courts to exclude farm lands from villages, such act was held not to deprive the relators of relief by appeal on quo warranto.[82]

§ 3. The charter; adoption, amendment, repeal and abrogation.[83]—See 10 C. L. 883—The enactment of municipal charters is subject to constitutional restrictions relative to the title of the act.[84] Special charters are prohibited by the constitutions of a majority of the states,[85] and the same restriction is applicable to amend-

84. Charter not invalid as to title because providing that city be also independent school district. Orrick v. Fort Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 677. Though provisions relative to school district might be invalid, they were severable and would not invalidate charter. Id.

85. Const. art. 4, § 13, as to classification

ments.[86] The legislature in granting a charter to a city of a required population will be presumed to have ascertained the population.[87] The repeal of a provision of a city charter must be effected by express enactment,[88] or charter provisions may be repealed where a city adopts the provisions of a general law.[89] The California constitutional guaranty preventing the repeal of statutes of organization has been held to extend only to municipalities organized before the adoption of the Constitution.[90]

Home-rule charters.—A provision that a charter be effective if accepted by a majority of the inhabitants is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power.[91] A municipality in framing a charter or organic law has only such power as is delegated by the constitution or legislature.[92] A charter adopted pursuant to an express constitutional grant has the force of a legislative act with respect to municipal matters.[93]

Initiative and referendum; commission governments.—In Oregon by amendment to the constitution, the power to amend, enact or repeal municipal charters has of cities, prevents grant of special charters to cities and requires classification of all cities and for code of laws for government of all cities of same class. People v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P 294. In Const. art. 14, § 13, "powers" and "restrictions" are manifestly such powers and restrictions as relate to subjects pertaining to local self-government rather than subjects involving relation of citizens or cities to state. Id. Reasonable classification proper, such as population. McGarvey v. Swan [Wyo.] 96 P 697.

86. Act Oct. 28, 1907 (P. L. p. 705), entitled "An act concerning government of cities of first class" not violative of Const. N. J. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, prohibiting special legislation regulating the internal affairs of cities since office of police justice and city collector created by charter. McCarthy v. Queen [N. J. Law] 69 A 30. Under Const. art. 3, § 27, municipal charter cannot be amended by local or special law. McGarvey v. Swan [Wyo.] 96 P 697. Laws 1903, p. 9, c. 7, authorizing cities "hereinbefore" incorporated with less than 10,000 inhabitants, having power to make assessments for sewers, to make assessments in specified manner, not "local" or special law. Id. Act not local or special when limited to city of 10,000 inhabitants as determined by "last preceding United States Census" on theory that phrase limits act to cities having required population at last census before act passed, since phrase relates to census last preceding any date material in ascertaining of city within statute. Id. Act not local or special because restricted to cities incorporated under special charter having 10,000 inhabitants. Id. Act not local or special because limited to cities "having power to make special assessments to construct sewers" though only one city so situated. Id.

Id. Board of freeholders elected pursuant to Const. art. 18, § 3 (Burn's Ed. §§ 413, 414), to prepare charter have no authority to adopt ordinance for nomination and election of elective officers provided for in charter framed, independent of reserved right of people to ratify or reject acts of said board. Id. Election ordinance for election of officers at same election as charter is voted on will not be in force until such ordinance is ratified by qualified electors. Id.

93. Including special assessments for local improvements. Fruin-Bambrick Const. Co. v. St. Louis Shovel Co., 211 Mo. 524, 111 SW 86.

been vested in the people [94] and carried into effect by a legislative enactment whereby amendments might be proposed by a city council with or without initiative petition.[95] The initiative and referendum powers were also reserved to the people with respect to legislation.[96] The power to amend as delegated by the legislature of Washington is subject to the control of general laws.[97] The government of municipalities being a legislative matter,[98] different forms of government may be established, subject only to constitutional restrictions,[99] and different methods of election of officers provided.[1]

§ 4. The territory.[2]—See 10 C. L. 884—The legislature may change the boundaries

94. Under amendments to Const. art. 4, §§ 1, 1a, and art. 11, § 2, manifest purpose was to take away from legislature and vest in people the power to amend municipal charters. Farrell v. Port of Portland [Or.] 98 P 145. Under amendment to Const. art. 11, § 2 (adopted June 4, 1906), legislature was deprived of power to amend, enact or repeal charters and such powers conferred on voters of municipalities subject to limitation of improvement of vested rights. City of Eugene v. Willamette Valley Co. [Or.] 97 P 817. Under Sp. Laws Or. 1905, p. 274 (Eugene City Charter) § 108, authorizing issuance of improvement bonds, where municipal indebtedness authorized in respect to sewer bonds was not increased or diminished by amendment, such law was not amendment of charter but re-enactment thereof. Id. Amendment to Const. art. 11, § 2, (adopted June 4, 1906) empowering voters to amend charters, etc., not self-executing and did not alter charter enacted Feb. 7, 1905 (Sp. L. 1905, p. 989). Hall v. Dunn [Or.] 97 P 811. Prior to amendment of Const. art. 11, § 2 (June 4, 1906), prohibiting amendment or repeal of municipal charters, legislature could alter city's charter and take territory out of local option law (Gen. Laws 1905, p. 41). Id. Medford City Charter (Sp. Laws 1905, p. 996, c. 4) § 25, subd. 19, authorizing licenses for saloons, etc., and containing repealing clause, repeals local option law (Gen. Laws 1905, p. 41), in so far as applicable to city. Id.

95. McKenna v. Portland [Or.] 96 P 552. Where no legislation by city regulating manner of submitting amendments, conflicting with general law, latter applicable. Id. Right of voters to enact or amend charter not necessarily an initiative power. Id. Exists by virtue of Const. art. 11, § 2, as amended in 1906, and not by iniative and referendum amendments adopted at same election. Construing Const. art. 11, § 2, and amendment, art. 4, with new section, § 1a, Laws 1907, p. 405, § 10; Laws 1907, p. 406, § 12, since no method of submission of amendments is provided Law of 1907 is applicable. Id. Initiative and referendum law (Laws 1907 p. 398, c. 226), according to Const. art., 4, §§ 1, 1a, and art. 11, § 2, a general law within Const. art. 4, § 1a. Applicable to port of Portland not city or town. Farrell v. Port of Portland [Ore.] 98 P 145. Where original incorporation of port of Portland was "to promote maritime, shipping and commercial interests," amendment adopted by voters whereby powers were extended to maintain towage and pilotage service to operate tugboats, etc., and issue bonds therefor, was an extension of powers germane to the original purpose of incorporation and not new legislation. 99. Under Const. Amend. art. 2, and considering Declaration of Rights, art. 9, pt. 1, giving inhabitants of commonwealth right to elect officers for public employments, different cities may be established with different kinds of government officers and modes of election. Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 85 NE 1009. In considering St. 1908, p. 542, c. 574, amending charter of Haverhill by providing radically different method of government, court will only consider if act within power of legislature, not if statute adapted to conditions of city. Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 86 NE 1009. Adoption of amended city charter providing different manner of government and election, purely matter of local concern. Id. Provision that St. 1908, p. 542, c. 574, amending charter of Haverhill, be ineffective until adoption by voters, proper. Id. Will only be interfered with in case of flagrant violations of sense of constitution. Eckerson v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 452, 115 NW 177. Acts 32d Gen. Assem. p. 38, c. 48, providing "commission" form of government held constitutional. Id. U. S. Const. art. 4, § 4, guaranteeing republican form of government is inapplicable to systems of local government provided by states for regulation of municipalities or other subdivisions. Id. Const. art. 3, § 1, providing that government of Iowa be divided into three departments, legislative, executive and judicial, is inapplicable to the government of municipalities. Id. State constitution being practically silent as to local self-government, legislature may select agencies appropriate for the purpose, and clothe such agencies with powers to be exercised as prescribed therefor. Id. Unrestricted authority to organize includes authority to prescribe powers within constitutional limits, and to designate officials to carry powers into execution. Id. Form of government provided held not local or special legislation. Id. Const. art. 1, § 6, as to uniform operation of laws of general nature not violated. Id. Plan of local government as embodied in legislative act may be submitted to voters of municipality. Id.

of a city [3] without apportioning its indebtedness and providing for the enforcement of its liability therefor.[4] Boundaries acquiesced in by the public and the legislature cannot be subsequently overthrown without the consent of the legislature, though a departure from the limits specified in the charter is evident.[5]

Annexations See 10 C. L. 885 are authorized by legislative enactments [6] or the power may be conferred upon the voters of a municipality.[7] The extent and manner of annexation is a question of legislative discretion [8] not to be interfered with by the courts [9] except in equity [10] pursuant to statute,[11] and appeals are also provided by statute.[12] If, however, property rights are unduly impaired, the statute is invalid.[13]

Laws 1907, p. 1292, c. 489, construed and held to provide that qualified voters in both old and annexed territory were entitled to vote in election ratifying annexing act. Id. Under St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247, as amended by St. 1905, p. 551, c. 411, ballots cast at election when stamped in line bearing phrase "for annexation" were not invalid though not stamped in voting square as required by general election law. Haskell v. Long Beach, 153 Cal. 543, 96 P 92. Under Ann. Code 1892, §§ 2926, 3018, 3020, 3748, 3771, authorizing tax levy on property acquired before February 1st., city may not tax territory annexed in April, that year. City of Gulfport v. 7. Under Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), power conferred with no limitation as to extent or form of territory to be annexed. People v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 97 P 311. Legislative authority to provide for annexation conferred by Const. art. 11, § 6, authorizing provisions by general laws for incorporation of cities. Id. No objection that territory is mads contiguous to other cities [St. 1889, p. 360, c. 247] (Id.); that annexation will in future compel consolidation with smaller cities since under statute consent of such smaller cities is requisite (Id.); that annexation prevents expansion of another city in that direction (Id.). Disregard of ordinance as to publication of election immaterial in annexation proceedings since Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), providing generally for annexation, is superior to charter provisions except in "municipal affairs" and annexation is in no sense a municipal affair within constitution. People v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 97 P 311. Notice of annexation election pursuant to act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), not void as to provisions of Pol. 11. County commissioners exercise judicial function in acting upon application for annexation of territory to municipality, where application is granted merely because of passage of ordinance authorizing annexation, commissioners misinterpret and fail to properly exercise their judicial functions, and injunction will lie to prevent recording of an annexation thus affected; and especially is this true if the ordinance was passed at suggestion of commissioners for purpose of throwing on council responsibility for project to which they were themselves opposed. Shipbaugh v. Kimball, 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 514. Requirement of Rev. St. § 1590 (1536-32) et seq., with reference to filing with municipal clerk transcript of proceedings by county commissioners upon application by citizens for annexation of territory to municipality, apply under section 1599 (1536-41) to annexation of territory upon application of corporation itself, and injunction will lie to prevent county recorder, to whom such proceedings have been certified, from making record thereof. Id. Granting of injunction to restrain recording of annexation of territory to municipality, because of failure of county commissioners to give judicial consideration to questions and interests involved, does not have effect under section 1592 (1536-34) of barring further proceedings with reference thereto. Id.

12. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 5519, 5574, 5575, 5576, as to annexation proceedings with provision for 30 days delay, such delay is to allow persons contesting proceeding an opportunity to appeal and protest, though stating no reasons for attack was sufficient to entitle persons to appeal, when filed within 30 day period. Barnwell v. Gravette [Ark.] 112 SW 973. Act Apr. 22, 1903 (P. L. 247), relating to annexation of adjacent territory repeals Act June 2, 1871 (P. L. 283, § 4), giving right

Severances.[See 10 C. L. 885]—In some states courts are authorized by statute to disconnect territory from cities after judicial investigation upon petition of a majority of the owners [14] and such statutes are generally held constitutional.[15] A municipality may be estopped by long acquiescence to question a detachment of territory.[16]

Plats.[See 8 C. L. 1060]—The sale of land before being properly platted may by statute be a misdemeanor.[17]

§ 5. Officers and employes.[18]—[See 10 C. L. 886]—This subject is fully treated in another topic, only a few holdings of peculiar application to municipalities being retained.[19] The state having power to create municipal corporations, it may designate the various municipal officers,[20] and fix their compenation.[21] The office may

Where record of annexation proceedings filed in court of quarter sessions pursuant to Act Apr. 22, 1903 (P. L. 247), court may only pass upon irregularity in record itself, and may not question whether council acted on good grounds, after consideration of facts involved, etc. Clairton Borough, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 74; Beaver Borough, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 467.

13. Where annexation of territory pursuant to Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 322, c. 24, § 195, included toll road which by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1996, c. 138, § 12, could not exist in city. City of Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnpike Co., 234 Ill. 428, 84 NE 1049.

14. Under Law 1907, p. 294, c. 221, providing for separation of unplatted agricultural land from cities of 10,000 or less inhabitants, primary use of land must be for agricultural purposes. Eugiere v. Tracy, 104 Minn. 378, 116 NW 922. Use of portion for purposes incidental to primary use does not exclude. Id. If purpose of retention is revenue, land should be relieved from taxation. Wilson v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 628, 116 NW 734. Under Cobbey's St. 1907, § 8978, it is no defense that city is indebted upon its bonds or otherwise. Bisenius v. Randolph [Neb.] 118 NW 127. Trial of petition to sever territory is by statute less technical than ordinary trials. Wilson v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 628, 116 NW 734. Result not disturbed unless abuse of discretion. Id. Statute provides for jury on demand. Peek v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 650, 116 NW 735. Proceeding for severance governed by ordinary rules as to admission of evidence. Id. Evidence may be submitted by affidavits in support of or against petition. Id. Under Code §§ 622-627, evidence of higher rate of assessment by city than township was inadmissible to show depreciation of market value by being included in city. Peek v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 650, 116 NW 735; Wilson v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 628, 116 NW 734. Motive of original annexation immaterial. Id. Presumption that severance granted on other grounds where jury instructed that severance would not be granted from mere increase of taxation. Wilson v. Waterloo, 138 Iowa, 628, 116 NW 734. No new trial after adjudication of severance from mere fact that portion of premises because of amusement park would necessarily require police protection, and should therefor be retained. Johnson v. Waterloo [Iowa] 119 NW 70.

15. Cobbey's St. 1907, § 8978, as to severance, not invalid as delegation of legislative authority to courts, and not violative of Const. art. 3, § 1, or art. 2. Bisenius v. Randolph [Neb.] 118 NW 127. Laws 1907, p. 294, c. 221, providing for separation of unplatted agricultural land from cities of 10,000 or less, is not unconstitutional, as to expression of act in subject of title, though § 4 excludes home-rule cities because not applying equally to all cities, since exclusion of home-rule cities is proper; as to discrimination in favor of agricultural lands since ordinarily such lands derive no benefit from city, while others may; as to classification in discrimination against owners of lands of less than forty acres; as to delegation of legislative powers to court since language used though permissive in form is in effect mandatory. Euziere v. Tracy, 104 Minn. 378, 116 NW 922. Laws 1907, p. 294, c. 221, does not include boroughs. Inapplicable to borough of Belle Plaine. Brenke v. Belle Plaine, 105 Minn. 84, 117 NW 157. Laws 1905, p. 408, c. 273, authorizing detachment of agricultural land from villages void as attempted delegation of legisative power and discretion to district courts. Id.

17. Under St. 1893, p. 96, c. 80, as amended by St. 1901, p. 288, c. 124, as to platting of lots and providing that sale before plat is "made out, acknowledged and filed," is misdemeanor where proprietor made out and acknowledged plat, deposited with city engineer and received it after reference to council and then handed to recorder with fee and then made sale, though plat was referred to city surveyor for corrections, such sale was not in violation of statute, "filing" by proprietor, not recorder, being requisite. Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 96 P 890.

available to relieve apparent unreasonableness. Id. Tampa municipal ordinance contract construed and elimination of invalid portions held not to effect. Id. Ordinance granting rights to water company for fifty years, not being prohibited by statute or preventing others from receiving the right to supply inhabitants, and at most granting monopoly for that period, may not be enjoined by taxpayers who have no personal interest therein. Brummitt v. Ogden Waterworks Co., 33 Utah, 285, 93 P 828. Contract granting right to construct water works not unreasonable so as to prevent specific performance, because city reserved right of purchase without corresponding right of company to enforce sale. City of Eau Claire v. Eau Claire Water Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 555. City of Tampa not authorized to grant exclusive privilege of use of streets for water supply. State v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 47 S 358. No objection to contract that city gave water company exclusive franchise and was thus precluded from entering into competition with such company for erection of waterworks. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. v. Columbus, 161 F 135. Statutes held to authorize city of Omaha to acquire waterworks company, though such property continued into several adjoining municipalities. Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha [C. C. A.] 162 F 225. Where city elected to purchase waterworks pursuant to statute, it could not require company to keep outlying distribution systems and sell main system. Id. St. 1892, p. 164, c. 185, provide for taking of water under power of eminent domain, authorizing additional water supply for city of Pittsfield. Bryant v. Pittsfield, 199 Mass. 530, 85 NE 739. City has no power to contract to furnish inhabitant outside territory with water. Not conferred. City of Paris v. Sturgeon [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 459. City may contract to furnish another city with water. City of Colorado Springs v. Colorado City, 42 Colo. 75, 94 P 316. Municipalities have the power and it is the duty of officers to apply surplus power and use of public utilities for benefit of citizens, provided such application does not materially impair usefulness of such facilities. Id. City furnishing water to another city after being granted right of way through latter's streets, agreement being acquiesced in thirty years, will be estopped to repudiate contract as illegally made. Id. City supplying water may prescribe character of meter to be used. Anderson v. Berwyn, 135 Ill. App. 8. Provisions in ordinance as to rates in contract for water supply to be construed as referring to expressed design for adequate water supply, and to governmental authority when rights affect public. State v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 47 S 358. Regulation of water rates governmental function which cannot be surrendered or suspended by city council. Brummitt v. Ogden Waterworks Co. 33 Utah, 285, 93 P 828. Municipalities cannot enter into binding contract regarding rates for services rendered to the public. Right not to be surrendered in absence of constitutional or statutory authority. Id. Ordinance readjusting rates with water company and providing for payment for water used on school lawns cannot be enjoined by taxpayer, because such water was previously supplied free. Not matter for judicial review. Id. Exemption from water rates of educational and like institutions, proper. Property owned in quasi private capacity. City of Chicago v. University of Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 361. Ordinance exempting educational and like institutions from payment of water rates held to include dormitories and commons for use and enjoyment of which fees were charged by such institution. City of Chicago v. University of Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 361.

50. Power to prescribe rates for gas necessary to safeguard rights of inhabitants. Boerth v. Detroit City Gas Co., 152 Mich. 654, 15 Det. Leg. N. 347, 116 NW 628. City of Detroit impliedly authorized to contract with gas company for rates to be charged. Id. Not prohibited by statute from prescribing rates. Id. Ordinance construed as giving gas company authority to charge 80 cents per 1,000 feet for fuel gas. Id. Power to regulate price at which gas shall be furnished must be exercised in good faith; and bad faith on part of council in fixing inadequate price or in making unreasonable and arbitrary regulations is proper subject of inquiry, when put in issue. City of Akron v. East Ohio Gas Co., 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 553.

51. Contract for lighting streets within power of village trustees. Laws 1891, c. 139, p. 310; Laws 1888, p. 743, c. 452; Village Laws (Becker & Howe [3rd Ed.] § 240, p. 206). Not repealed by transportation. Wakefield v. Theresa, 125 App. Div. 38, 109 NYS 414. Under Bay City Consolidated Charter (Loc. Acts 1903, p. 720, No. 514), §§ 166, 167, city council had no power to provide for city electric lighting plant where it did not first adopt resolution determining expediency of purpose by two-thirds vote of aldermen. Bay City Trac. & Elec. Co. v. Bay City [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 1039, 119 NW 440. Passage of resolution of expediency after letting contracts ineffective, being mere attempt to supply preliminary power. Id. Express authority not shown by statutes to operate electric lighting plant. Posey v. North Birmingham [Ala.] 45 S 663. Electric lighting plant not indispensible, or fairly implied. Id. Swanton village charter, Acts 1888, p. 268, No. 252, § 31, as amended by Acts 1890, p. 132, No. 93, and § 32; p. 269, as amended by Acts 1894, p. 251, No. 193, § 2, held to confer neither express or implied power to furnish inhabitants with electric light for private use. Village of Swanton v. Highgate [Vt.] 69 A 667.

52. Power to own and operate utilities for persons situated beyond corporate limits must be clearly conferred. City of Paris v. Sturgeon [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 459. General incorporation act, Sayles Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 418, does not authorize city to furnish water to persons not inhabitants. Id.

53. Construction of sewer within charter and a familiar and necessary part of function of government. Bell v. Kirkland, 102 Minn. 213, 113 NW 271. Power vested by statute. Googin v. Lewiston, 103 Me. 119, 68 A 694. P. L. 1902, p. 371, authorizing system of sewers applies to any town incorporated at time proceedings under act are begun. Frelinghuysen v. Morristown [N. J. Law] 70 A 77. P. L. 1902, p. 371, c. 124, not invalid because power given to erect sewage disposal works within dock,[55] or to subscribe for the stock of a corporation.[56] The power of eminent domain may be delegated.[57] Unless restrained by statute, a municipality has discretion in the method of exercising governmental or other public powers,[58] but all acts beyond the scope of the powers granted are void.[59] Where the mode of exercise of a conferred power is prescribed, such mode must be pursued.[60] The exercise of assumed and unwarranted corporate powers may be ousted by quo warranto.[61] Public powers conferred upon a municipal coporation and its officers cannot be surrendered or delegated.[62]

Judicial control over exercise of powers. See 10 C. L. 891—The acts of municipal officers in the exercise of administrative or legislative discretion [63] are not subject to judicial review,[64] where there is no abuse of discretion,[65] or fraud,[66] but when authorized the action taken is presumed to be correct.[67] bounds of another municipality. Id. Under P L. 1902, p. 371; Id. 1907, p. 707, municipality need not secure consent of another municipality to erection of sewage disposal works within territorial limits of latter. Id. Action of sewerage board under P. L. 1902, p. 371, c. 124, only preliminary to legislative action by governing body of town, and voters at special election. Determination of sewerage board fixing site for disposal works, land on which member interested, not voidable in absence of fraud. Id.

54. State may authorize cities and towns on navigable rivers to build and operate public wharves. City of Burlington v. Central Vermont R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 826. Acts 1906, p. 356, No. 262, authorizing city of Burlington to construct and maintain public wharf, and to borrow money for that purpose, are valid. Id. Acts 1906, p. 356, No. 262, authorizing city of Burlington to condemn land for public wharf, with power of council to award damages and allowing appeal, are not unconsitutional as denying due process of law. Id.

55. Statute of Oregon authorizing Portland (Laws 1901, p. 417) to maintain dry dock not in violation of constitution as to title of act. The George W. Elder, 159 F 1005. Statute of Oregon as amended by Laws 1901, p. 417, authorizing maintenance of dry dock by city of Portland, not unconstitutional because of levy of taxes, such levy being for public purpose. Id.

56. Water company. Town of Southington v. Southington Water Co., 80 Conn. 646, 69 A 1023. Corporation accepting town as associate, and accepting subscription, is chargeable with notice of town's powers, charter and limitations. Id.

57. Legislature has constitutional right to delegate power of eminent domain to cities to condemn property for parks for health and pleasure of people. Brunn v. Kansas City [Mo.] 115 SW 446. Where power of eminent domain delegated, city may, in charter, frame code of procedure for exercising right. Id. Special charter procedure in condemnation proceedings, if not inimical to general scope of constitution and laws, governs as against general law, such provisions being exceptions read into general law. Id.

58. Limitations, good faith and reasonableness, not perfection. State v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 47 S 358.

59. Posey v. North Birmingham [Ala.] 45 S 663. Fourth of July celebration. Marth v. Kingfisher [Okl.] 98 P 436.

60. McGillic v. Corby, 37 Mont. 249, 95 P 1063.

61. Where city permitted gambling houses and saloons giving immunity from prosecution on payment of simulated fines and forfeitures. State v. Coffeyville [Kan.] 97 P 372.

62. Benton v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 96 P 1033. Municipality cannot absolutely alienate and abdicate its power to supply water. Rogers Park Water Co. v. Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 35. Franchise ordinance granting "exclusive" right held not to preclude municipality from supplying water. Id.

63. Not reviewable when question is one within competency of legislative tribunal to determine. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Hartford City, 170 Ind. 674, 85 NE 362. Court slow to review judgment of council imposing tax for use of privileges of city market. Meushaw v. State [Ind.] 71 A 457. Removal of trees from street. Rosenthal v. Goldsboro [N. C.] 62 SE 905. Designation of streets to be occupied by street railway. Wagner v. Bristol Belt Line R. Co., 108 Va. 594, 62 SE 391. Conclusion of council as to salary of officer not interfered with. De Merritt v. Weldon [Cal.] 98 P 537. Adoption of plans for elevation of tracks. People v. Grand Trunk, etc., R. Co., 232 Ill. 292, 83 NE 839. Taxpayer cannot enjoin ordinance relinquishing city's right to purchase water plant, since question of purchase discretionary with council and not subject to judicial review. Brummitt v. Ogden Waterworks Co., 33 Utah, 285, 93 P 828.

64. Strict construction of municipal powers not applicable to method of carrying power granted into effect. Henniger v. Memphis [Tenn.] 111 SW 1115. Where statute vests city with power to do specified act, validity of action does not always depend on strict observance of statute. Fullerton v. Des Moines [Iowa] 115 NW 607.

65. Rosenthal v. Goldsboro [N. C.] 62 SE 905; Southern R. Co. v. Mecklenburg County Com'rs, 148 N. C. 220, 61 SE 690. Will not restrain or control action because unwise or erroneous. People v. 67. Hardee v. Brown [Fla.] 47 S 834. When specially authorized, courts will declare ordinance void only when in conflict with constitution. Landberg v. Chicago, 237

§ 8. Legislative functions of municipalities and their exercise. A. Nature and extent of legislative power.[68]—See 10 C. L. 891—Municipalities may only exercise the legislative powers expressly or impliedly conferred.[69] In practice the legislative power is confined chiefly to the enactment of police regulation,[70] the functions of the legislative department in the initiation of public contracts and improvements,[71] and in the fiscal management of the municipality,[72] being largely of an administrative character. The legislative power is usually vested in a mayor and a council.[73] Legislative functions cannot be delegated,[74] but an ordinance may be made operative upon the happening of a contingency,[75] the municipality may delegate authority as to the execution of an ordinance,[76] and the legislature may provide that popular vote be resorted to in the enactment of municipal ordinances.[77]

Ill. 112, 86 NE 638. Such action would be substitution of judicial judgment. Id. Where general power granted courts assume that power authorized be exercised in reasonable manner. Id.

77. Const. art. 3, § 1, not applicable. Eckerson v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 452, 115 NW 177. Initiative and referendum provisions of Const. (art. 5, §§ 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and art. 18, §§ 4, 5), not conflicting with Const. U. S. art. 4, § 4, guarantying republican form of government. Ex parte Wagner [Okl.] 95 P 435. Provision of St. 1908, p. 542, c. 574, amending charter of Haverhill providing for initiative and referendum as to ordinances not unconstitutional, since constitution forbidding referendum applies to legislature, not subjects of local concern. Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 85 NE 1009. Initiative and referendum provisions of constitution (art 5, §§ 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and art. 18, §§ 4, 5), not self-executing. Made effective by act of legislature approved Apr. 16, 1908. Ex parte Wagner [Okl.] 95 P 435. Petition for referendum not effective until provided for by legislation. Id. Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving initiative and referendum to voters of municipalities as to legislation not self-executing. Long v. Portland [Or.] 98 P 149, afd. on rehearing [Or.] 98 P 1111. Act Feb. 25, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 398), to carry into effect initiative and referendum powers reserved by Const. art. 4, § 1a, not amendment to charter prohibited by Const. art. 11, § 2. Id. Referendum power reserved by Const. art. 4, § 1a, not dependent upon anything except provision of general law as to exercise. Id. Under Const. art. 4, § 1a, the only acts of council subject to referendum are those within the term "municipal legislation." "Legislation" used in sense of general laws, permanent, uniform, universal. Id. Right of referendum reserved by Const. art. 4, § 1a, superior to charter. An amendment to charter subject only to provision of law to make available. Long v. Portland [Or.] 98 P 149. Ordinance of city on which

(§ 8) B. Meetings, votes, rules and procedure.[78]—See 10 C. L. 892—Statutes provide for the calling of special meetings after notice,[79] or fix the place of meetings.[80] An adjourned regular meeting is but a continuation of a regular meeting,[81] and in the absence of statute, the legislative body when lawfully in session with a quorum present has inherent power to adjourn by majority vote to a future date,[82] but where the method and time of holding meetings is prescribed by statute, it must be strictly followed.[83] A statute requiring the city council to sit with open doors applies where the council sits as a committee of the whole.[84] Where the legislative branch of a city is composed of two houses, either may appoint a committee to investigate matters properly before it.[85]

(§ 8) C. Records and journals.[86]—See 10 C. L. 892—Statutory provisions relative to the recording of ordinances are generally held to be merely directory.[87] The language of a record is to be construed favorably to the validity of the action of a legislative body.[88] Special meetings may be required to be fully entered on the journal.[89]

(§ 8) D. Titles and ordaining clauses.[90]—See 10 C. L. 893—Constitutional provisions relative to the title of legislative acts have no application to ordinances,[91] and unless required by legislative enactments,[92] the misrecital of an ordinance as to referendum invoked takes effect from proclamation of mayor as provided by Act Feb. 25, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 398), §§ 9, 10, pursuant to amendment to Const. art. 4, § 1a. Id.

Amending ordinance extending time for furnishing light and heat by natural gas "general and permanent" within Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 924 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 694). Town of Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co. [Okl.] 97 P 1007. Under Ill. Const. 1870, art. 11, § 4, license for use of streets by railroad must be by ordinance. Potter v. Calumet Elec. St. R. Co., 158 F 521. Term "by-law" is almost equivalent to "ordinance" meaning the by-laws adopted by municipalities. Town of Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co. [Okl.] 97 P 1007. Fundamental and well recognized distinction as to resolutions and ordinances. State v. Duis [N. D.] 116 NW 751.

97. Long v. Portland [Or.] 98 P 1111; Anderson v. Berwyn, 135 Ill. App. 8. Bond issue election may be by resolution. Ryan v. Tuscalloosa [Ala.] 46 S 638. Resolution executive in character merely step in execution of ordinance, valid. Anderson v. Berwyn, 135 Ill. App. 8.

98. Whether called ordinance or resolution. Steenerson v. Fontaine [Minn.] 119 NW 400.

99. Under Act April 21, 1896, requiring grant by ordinance, etc., resolution authorizing street railway to construct turnouts, adopted without required notice, hearing and consent is invalid. Specht v. Central Passenger R. Co. [N. J. Law] 68 A 785. Under Act April 21, 1896 (P. L. 1896, p. 329), council may not grant permission by resolution without property owner's consent to street railway to construct turnouts, where previous ordinance as to construction fixed with precision the location of tracts, turnouts, etc., and did not include turnouts covered by resolution and it also appeared that membership of council was changed between ordinance and resolution. Id. City council bound by limitation of Act Apr. 21, 1896, P. L. 1896, p. 329, that permission to construct street railways be granted on consent of owners of one-half of property fronting streets to be used. Id. Appointment of policeman by resolution ineffective, when statute required ordinance. Bullis v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 472, 85 NE 614. Under general municipal law, council had no authority to declare policemen officers of city. Id.

1. Operates to incorporate into city ordinances all offenses against state of grade of misdemeanors. Smothers v. Jackson [Miss.] 45 S 982. Prospective in operation and includes offenses of the grade named which may subsequently be passed by the legislature. Id. Where Kirby's Dig. § 5463, authorized prohibition and punishment of act made misdemeanor by state, action of city council incorporating §§ 5137, 5140-5146, prohibiting "blind tigers," was valid and made such statutes valid ordinances of city. City of Searcy v. Turner [Ark.] 114 SW 472.

2. Unless statute expressly or impliedly declares ordinance void if prescribed form be not pursued. State v. Wilder, 211 Mo. 305, 109 SW 574. Ordinance directing street improvement valid though passed at only one meeting of council where all members voted for ordinance. Huesman v. Dersch, 33 Ky. L. R. 77, 109 SW 319.

3. State v. Wilder, 211 Mo. 305, 109 SW 574. Failure of record to show presentation to or signature of mayor, fatal. Id. Signature to minutes not effective as signature to ordinance. Id. Domestic census nullity where ordinance passed in disregard of Rev. St. 1899, § 6300 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3147), requiring mayor's signature, etc. Id. Signature of mayor by third person when under imme-

ing may, however, be a ministerial act.[4] The veto power of the mayor, or similar official[5] extends to legislative resolutions as distinguished from administrative.[6] The mayor's approval of an annexation ordinance is invalid, where he has considerable financial interest in the proposed territory.[7] Disregard of legal formalities or orderly mode of procedure does not render a resolution illegal.[8] The council being a continuous body, a resolution may be passed over the mayor's veto, though an election intervenes.[9] The mayor's right to vote in the case of tie vote of the council is dependent upon statute.[10] Constitutional provisions as to the reading of bills in the legislature do not apply to proceedings in municipalities,[11] but similar rules may be required by statute,[12] and by-laws requiring advertisement between readings may be adopted.[13] When an ordinance recommended by the board of improvements is passed by the council, the act is that of the latter body.[14] A resolution with provisions that the same shall be void unless accepted by a majority of the legal voters does not become operative where a town fails to accept.[15] A taxpayer has no beneficial interest to secure a writ of mandate compelling a council to submit to the vote of the people the construction of a pier by a railroad pursuant to grant.[16] diate direction of mayor, and authenticated by city clerk, under seal sufficient. Porter v. R. J. Boyd Pav. & Const Co., 214 Mo. 1, 112 SW 235. Under Act May 23, 1893, P. L. 113, requiring approval of chief burgess to every resolution, where resolution authorized borrowing of money and giving of judgment note and was not approved, it was invalid and judgment would be stricken off. Long v. Lemoyne Borough [Pa.] 71 A 211. Implied approval insufficient where signature of chief burgess required. Act May 23, 1893, P. L. 113. Id.

4. Act of president of board of trustees of city of fifth class in signing ordinance under Act March 13, 1883, (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), preliminary to publication, ministerial and subject to mandamus. City of San Buenaventura v. McGuire [Cal. App.] 97 P 526. In mandamus to compel signature to ordinance before publication, though city and members of board of trustees are not all necessary parties, they are proper parties. City of San Buenaventura v. McGuire [Cal. App.] 97 P 526.

5. General municipal act Mch. 13, 1883, (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), and Act Mch. 27, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 190, c. 129), § 1; § 4, p. 191, construed, and to prevent absurdity words "mayor" in § 1, held to mean all executive officers similarly situated in various classes of cities, thus preventing construction whereby veto power given to president of trustees in fifth and sixth classes, and denied to mayor of fourth class. City of San Buenaventura v. McGuire [Cal. App.] 97 P 526.

6. State v. Duis [N. D.] 116 NW 751. Under Rev. Code 1905, § 2658, as to veto power of mayor, resolution for pavement of certain avenues is of legislative character and subject to veto. State v. Duis [N. D.] 116 NW 751. Decision as to public improvements legislative in character. Id.

7. Under section 125 of the municipal code of 1902, clothing mayors with the impartial and disinterested legislative function of approving or vetoing ordinances, approval is clearly against public policy. Shipbaugh v. Kimball, 7 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 514.

8. Farley v. Lockport, 113 NYS 702.

9. Resolution for street paving passed by required vote of council, though election intervened and new members set. People v. Buffalo, 123 App. Div. 141, 108 NYS 331. Under charter of Buffalo, (Laws 1891, p. 139, c. 105, etc.) § 18, as to passage of ordinance after veto of mayor, such ordinance need not be acted upon at meeting when returned for reconsideration. Id.

10. Mayor in city of second class held to have right to cast deciding vote in contest over liquor license, construing statutes. In re Hastings Brew. Co. [Neb.] 119 NW 27. President of council in city of second class not member and his vote not to be counted in determining whether ordinance passed by majority vote. Laws 1903, p. 69, §§ 2, 5. Merriam v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 247, 111 SW 876.

12. General ordinance void when advance from first to third reading on same day without two-thirds vote of council contrary to Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 924 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 694). Town of Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co. [Okl.] 97 P 1007. Ordinance extending street railway grant not of general or permanent nature and not rendered invalid by reason of failure to read on three different days or to suspend rules. State v. Oakwood Street R. Co., 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 263.

13. By-law adopted by board of street and water commissioners of Newark requiring advertisement between first and second reading of ordinance not based on notice of intention cannot be suspended to permit passage of ordinance at same meeting. Eggers v. Newark [N. J. Law] 71 A 665.

15. Town of Southington v. Southington Water Co., 80 Conn. 646, 69 A 1023. Resolution requiring question to be decided only requires majority of votes cast rather than majority entitled to vote. Id.

16. Where railway granted right to construct pier in San Diego Bay by state board of harbor commissioners, and council refused to pass ordinance or submit vote to people as required by charter. Webster v. San Diego Common Council [Cal. App.] 97 P 92.

An ordinance cannot be amended, suspended or repealed by resolution,[17] but an amendment to a resolution previously adopted is permissible in any deliberative body.[18] Repeals by implication are not favored.[19] The repeal of an ordinance will not operate to disturb private rights vested under it,[20] and a repeal pending prosecution does not relieve a defendant unless so provided by the repealing act.[21]

sustain them, if possible.[38] In determining validity, the court will treat the question as one of law,[39] and an ordinance must be judged from its purport and effect,[40] the motive of enactment being immaterial.[41] A court cannot presume that a city adopting an ordinance belonged to the authorized class when the only evidence within judicial knowledge shows the contrary.[42] The question of whether an ordinance conflicts with a general law cannot be determined by a fixed rule.[43] The words of ordinances are construed the same as statutes.[44] The rule that the practical construction of administrative officers will be followed by the court is inapplicable where the case is not doubtful.[45] A city ordinance to a street railway granting privileges is to be strictly construed,[46] and in a civil action to which a city is not a party, where a breach of ordinance is invoked to avoid a contract, the ordinance will be strictly construed.[47] Courts of equity will not interfere or reform ordinances for mutual mistake.[48]

Municipal ordinances are necessarily local,[49] but an ordinance passed pursuant to legislative authority has the force and effect of a law within the corporate limits.[50] An ordinance is affective within the town limits regardless of the regulations of the county.[51]

(§ 8) G. Pleading and proving ordinances and proceedings.[52] See 10 C. L. 895 Judicial notice cannot be taken of city ordinances.[53] Statutes usually provide that the legally issued book of ordinances of a municipality be prima facie proof of the existence, passage or publication of an ordinance,[54] but such method is not exclusive.[55] The omission of enacting clause in a compilation of ordinances is not fatal,[56] but an inference of no publication follows from the omission of a note in the ordinance book as required by statute.[57] The record of a village board showing the time of passing an ordinance is sufficient proof.[58] As to whether publication of an ordinance must be proved, there is a conflict of authority.[59] The location of streets in a public improvement ordinance, when misnamed, may be shown by parol.[60] An objection to the manner of proving an ordinance must be specific.[61]

(§ 8) H. The remedy against invalid legislation.[62] See 10 C. L. 895—While the courts are without power to review the exercise of legislative discretion,[63] certiorari will lie for total invalidity,[64] and injunction is available in the case of an invasion

Super. Ct. 7. Building ordinance ultra vires and void since Gen. Laws 1896, c. 40, § 21, as to general power of municipality, held not to authorize. State v. Crepeau [R. I.] 71 A 449. Restrictive building ordinance operating to make enjoyment of property depends upon arbitrary will of council and failing to furnish uniform rule of action held unconstitutional and void. Id.

96. Erection of buildings for resort of larger number of people subject to police power. McGee v. Kennedy [Ky.] 114 SW 298. Ordinance requiring fire exits from main floor of theatre, with specifications as to width, etc., not unreasonable. Id. Where ordinance prescribing exits of theater was mandatory, another ordinance could not be construed to authorize board of public safety to waive such requirements, since ordinance would be violative of charter and constitution. Id. Permit issued mere license and violative of ordinance subject to prosecution, though building partially constructed and permit not withdrawn. Id.

97. State may regulate individual's use of property so that public health and safety be best conserved (State v. Whitlock [N. C.] 63 SE 123), but secure structure on private property not as nuisance cannot be made so by ordinance and then prohibited (Id.). Ordinance requiring billboards to be two feet more than height of board from outer edge of sidewalk unreasonable. Id. Ordinance absolutely prohibiting sky signs over 9 feet high, taking of property without compensation. People v. Murphy, 113 NYS 855, rvg. 60 Misc. 536, 113 NYS 854. Ordinance regulating partition fences held invalid, not being sustained by danger to public life, that such fences were nuisance, etc. City of Dixon v. Messer, 136 Ill. App. 488.

99. Establishment, discontinuation or regulation of cemeteries, proper legislative power which may be delegated to municipality. Bryan v. Birmingham [Ala.] 45 S 922. Control must be primarily to protect health and well being of people. Id. Evidence insufficient to show that cemetery ordinance was unreasonable and discriminatory. Id. Prohibition of cemetery if nuisance proper but not where cemetery is to be located in sparsely settled portion of city unless burials will impair public health. Id.

1. Right to regulate or prohibit rests on consideration of public health, to prevent public nuisance. Zimmerman v. Gritzmacher [Or.] 98 P 875. Criminal prosecution barred when house authorized by unrepealed statute. Id.

2. Livery stable ordinance providing for consent of property owners in residence section of city not invalid as delegation of legislative powers, such ordinance being in reality prohibitive. City of Spokane v. Camp [Wash.] 97 P 770.

3. Ordinance prohibiting sale of stale meat, fowls placed in cold storage prior to removal of entrails, etc. People v. Reicherter, 128 App. Div. 675, 112 NYS 936. Not unreasonable as applying to newly-killed fowl rather than when such fowl becomes unwholesome. Id. Ordinance merely transfers duty from buyer to seller without placing limitation upon increased price for such duty. Id. Authority to enact ordinances in addition to state laws as to purity of dairy products conferred by charter. City of St. Louis v. Klausmeier, 213 Mo. 119, 112 SW 516; City of St. Louis v. Wortman, 213 Mo. 131, 112 SW 520. Inspection of cows and regulation of dairies authorized. City of New Orleans v. Charouleau, 121 La. 890, 46 S 911. Destruction of cows affected with tuberculosis, without compensation, proper. Id. Where charter permitted urgent ordinances for preservation of health to become effective immediately upon two-thirds vote of council, an ordinance that milk contain small additional percentage of fats and solids was not within such provision as to urgency. Ex parte Hoffman [Cal.] 99 P 517. Invalid emergency clause does not render ordinance void but postpones operation. Id. Nature of ordinance is determinative of urgency not the declaration. Statement of facts constituting urgency proper after declaration. Id.

4. Bradbury v. Vandalia Levee & Drainage Dist., 236 Ill. 86, 86 NE 163. Drainage district for agricultural purposes and not within police power to be exempt from damage caused by levee. Id.

5. Test of validity is reasonableness. City of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 10 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 495. Smoke ordinance is proper, but application must be limited to smoke of such character to invade rights of persons and property. Atlantic City v. France, 75 N. J. Law, 910, 70 A 163. Ordinance must be aimed at emission of smoke containing soot or other substances so as to constitute nuisance. Id. Whether in given case soot is invasion of personal or property rights or injurious to health can only be determined by court. Id.

stroyed.[8] The regulation of the transportation of garbage is proper,[9] and the exclusive right to remove such matter may be granted to one person.[10] A municipality which purchased lands outside the city limits has been held to have no power to bring diseased patients into the township unles the township officers consented.[11]

(§ 10) D. Regulation and inspection of business.[12]—See 10 C. L. 899—The exercise of the police power over nonuseful callings is much broader than otherwise,[13] and an ordinance restricting a useful occupation will be strictly construed.[14] The city's power to regulate will authorize ordinances prohibiting drumming by agents of doctors,[15] or forbidding business on Sunday.[16] A proper exercise of the police power is by the imposition of reasonable license fees for the better control of certain callings or occupations.[17] Licenses for revenue may be authorized.[18]

8. Municipality not liable for destruction of private property in interest of public health to prevent spread of contagion. Perry v. Oregon, 139 Ill. App. 606. City may declare building public nuisance and have it destroyed, if only method of preventing contagion. Sings v. Joliet, 237 Ill. 300, 86 NE 663. Decision of council not final and question may be adjudicated in action for damages. Id.

9. Buffalo Fertilizer Co. v. Cheektowaga, 118 NYS 901. Ordinance prohibiting transportation of garbage without consent of commissioner of highways an illegal attempt to license. Id. Not conferred by Laws 1906, p. 714, c. 306. Id. Ordinance void as giving commissioner of highways arbitrary power to consent to license transportation. Id.

10. Ordinance must be reasonable and directed solely to regulation. Dreyfus v. Boone [Ark.] 114 SW 718. Ordinance requiring removal of deposits from unsevered privies at proper intervals, by certain persons at compensation to be fixed by city and paid by owner, proper. Id. Invalid where city became sharer in revenue. Id. Garbage ordinance held reasonable when removal by licensed officer of night soil and other matter was only limited after same became nuisance, and providing further for removal in water-tight vessels, etc. Anderson v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 243, 109 SW 193. Collection and sale of manure legitimate business, but may be conducted so as to be injurious to health. Landberg v. Chicago, 237 Ill. 112, 86 NE 638. Monopoly as to removal of manure unreasonable when having no legitimate relation to purpose to be accomplished. Id.

13. May be prohibited. Ex parte Murphy [Cal. App.] 97 P 199. Where business useful, city may regulate, and reasonableness of regulation may be questioned by judicial inquiry. Id. Skating rink lawful business to be regulated in reasonable way and only suppressed when nuisance. Johnson v. Philadelphia [Misc.] 46 S 526. Authorization by state law evidence that business is lawful. Id. Skating rink not nuisance per se. Id. Requiring skating rinks to be closed from 6 o'clock p. m. until 6 o'clock a. m. unreasonable. Pool and billiard rooms; liquor business (see ante, § 10B).

14. Citizen has right to labor at any honest employment. Felton v. Atlanta, 4 Ga. App. 183, 61 SE 27. Business of plumbing related to public health and subject to regulation. Id. Plumbing ordinances construed as inapplicable to apprentices or helpers working under licensed masters or journeymen plumbers, they not being specifically named. Id.

15. Burrow v. Hot Springs, 85 Ark. 396, 108 SW 823.

16. Under act May 23, 1889, art. V, § 3, cl. 28, city of third class may enact ordinance forbidding sale of fruits, merchandise, etc., on Sunday and by cl. 20, impose penalty. New Castle v. Cummings, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 443. Sales of soda water and ice cream within meaning of Sunday ordinance, though served in glasses, and plates and consumed on defendant's premises. Id.

17. The subject of licenses is more fully treated in a separate topic (see Licenses, 12 C. L. 593). Regulation by license recognized exercise of police power. Gettysburg Borough v. Gettysburg Transit Co., 36 Pa. Super Ct. 598. Power not to be used for revenue. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Hot Springs, 85 Ark. 509, 109 SW 203. Ordinance imposing license presumed lawful. Gettysburg Borough v. Gettysburg Transit Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 598. License fee treated as regulation rather than taxation. State v. Cederaski, 80 Conn. 478, 69 A 19. Where ordinance-police regulation tending to accomplish object sought, under power to regulate, ordinance must be sustained though no authority in charter to license. Commonwealth v. Jackson, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 178. Courts will not declare ordinance void because of unreasonableness of fee, unless abuse of discretion. Gettysburg Borough v. Gettysburg Transit Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 598. Where license annual tax under guise of police regulation, municipality must show express legislative authority. Commonwealth v. Jackson, 34 Pa. Super Ct. 178. License fee for distribution of advertisements must be reasonable, not with view of revenue or prohibition. Id. License fee of $5 per day equivalent to $1500 per year for distribution of advertisements in borough of 5000 population, unreasonable. Id. Distribution of advertisements, see post, § 10E. Ordinance void when no distinction as to amount of license fee for itinerant merchant whether business engaged in one or a number of days. City of Dixon v. Messer, 136 Ill. App. 488. Buffalo Charter Laws 1891, p. 137, c. 105, § 17, subd. 6, as amended, Laws 1904, p. 83, c. 31, authorizing automobile license or tax repealed by Motor Vehicle Act, Laws 1904, p. 1316, c. 538, § 4, subd. 3. City of Buffalo v. Lewis, 123 App. Div. 163, 108 NYS 450. Under general welfare clause (Act 1887, art. VII, § 2, cl. 47; and Act 1889, art. V; § 3, cl. 46), billposters might be regulated, subject to police powers of city. Titusville v. Gahan, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 613. Under Act 1887, art. VII, § 2, cl. 4, and Act of 1889, art. V, § 3, cl. 4, municipality may not collect tax from theaters for general revenue, but under Act 1887, art. VII, § 2, cl. 26, and Act 1889, art. V, § 3, cl. 25, power delegated to municipality is that of regulation by virtue of police power. Id. Ordinance imposing license tax on theatres and billboards construed as revenue, not police measure and declared invalid. Id.

Vehicles: Ordinance imposing license fee on wagons and vehicles, to be used in repairing streets, valid. Harder's Fireproof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 NE 245. Such tax valid though owner also pays ad valorem tax on vehicles as property since legislature in effect has declared use of streets privilege. Id. Where Hurd's Rev. St. c. 24, art. 5, § 1, provides that city council in cities and trustees in villages have following powers, etc., and cl. 96, authorizes license tax on vehicles, such clause is applicable to both cities and villages. Id. Power not limited by Const. art. 9, §§ 1, 2, limiting taxing power. Id. Power not limited by Const. art. 9, § 9, as to limitation of taxes since such section applies to taxation of property, not taxation of privilege as use of streets. Id. City council may require public carts to obtain license. Hastings Exp. Co. v. Chicago, 135 Ill. App. 268. Ordinance as to licensing of public carts not invalid as illegally discriminating. Johnson Exp. Co. v. Chicago, 136 Ill. App. 368. Must be some other reason for classification than use of vehicle, unless use of itself affords grounds for distinction. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Hot Springs, 85 Ark. 509, 109 SW 293. Requiring fee of $50 for coal wagon unreasonable and discriminatory where other vehicles only taxed $10. Id. Ordinance regulating hackmen not void because conferring discretion on authorities as to who should have permits. Kissinger v. Hay [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 1005. Where ordinance regulating hackmen was alleged to be unreasonable, petitioner should allege facts showing unreasonableness or wherein city exceeded powers. Id. City authorized to prevent incumbering of streets by regulating use of public vehicles for hire, fix stands for same and prevent use of streets for stands. Id.

Soliciting by hackmen: City authorized to regulate occupations affecting good order or public peace (Pierce's Code § 3732, subds. 34, 86 [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3732]) may prohibit soliciting of hack drivers at railway station. City of Seattle v. Hurst [Wash.] 97 P 454. Not restriction of private contract or property rights. Id.

Hotels: Power conferred by Kirby's Dig. § 5454, to regulate hotels includes power to license as means of regulation. City of Helena v. Miller [Ark.] 114 SW 237. Fee for license to cover expense of issuance and inspection or superintendence proper. Id. License fee of $25 not unreasonable though no additional policemen or sanitary officers employed for inspection. Id.

Peddling: Ordinance against peddlers held to apply to residents and nonresidents and valid. Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486, 15 Det. Leg. N. 496, 116 NW 1070. Regulation of hawkers and peddlers by means of license valid, as long as provisions within limitations of legislative power. State v. Cederaski, 80 Conn. 478, 69 A 19. Ordinance prohibiting peddling of provisions by others than producers not invalid because peddlers had license from state, since such license would not authorize disregard of ordinance and peddlers might vend other goods. Dulton v. Knoxville [Tenn.] 113 SW 381. Not discriminatory, since hawkers are persons who would engage in "forestalling" and "regrating" practices city was authorized to prevent. Id. "Forestalling" consists of buying victuals on their way to market with intent to resell at higher price. Id. "Regrating" is buying of corn or other dead victual in any market and selling again, thus enhancing price since successive sellers must have profit. Id.

Junk dealers: Ordinance not void for discrimination as excepting manufacturers of brass goods, pig iron, belting, etc. Levi v. Anniston [Ala.] 46 S 237.

Employment agencies. City of Spokane v. Macho [Wash.] 98 P 755.

18. Charter of Miami authorizes license tax upon privileges, occupations, etc., and taxes not controlled by general law as to amount. Hardee v. Brown [Fla.] 47 S 834. $100 license tax upon express companies not violative of United States constitution expressed as limitation. Id. Limitation would be implied if not expressed. Id. Occupation tax on agents of packing houses authorized by charter. City of Savannah v. Cooper [Ga.] 63 ES 138. Tax on occupation of agents of packing houses not void on ground that state had previously licensed. Id. Classification proper if not arbitrary. Classifying agents of packing house on basis of those who sell fresh meat in city and those who do not, not arbitrary. Id. Ordinance en agents of packing houses held unreasonable, when imposing tax of $400 on agent earning $1800. Id. Power granted to levy occupation tax on "contractors" not sufficiently generic to cover "persons doing contract work," and license on latter class void. Ex parte Unger [Okl.] 98 P 999. Attempt of city to extend taxing power granted by defining word "contractors" as "persons doing contract work," futile. Id. "Contractor" one who contracts to perform work on large scale, at certain price or rate, as in building houses or making railroads. Id. Where express power to license for revenue and regulation, and ordinance imposes license on business which is not subject to regulation, presumption is measure for revenue, though no language indicative of such purpose. Ex parte Diehl [Cal. App.] 96 P 98. License for revenue authorized by Freeholder's Charter St. 1903, p. 697, c. 31, since "business" includes all manner of occupations and means of livelihood. Id. Horseshoeing business which cannot be regulated. Id. Pol. Code of 1901, § 3366 restricting licenses inapplicable to municipalities governed by Freeholder's Charter St. 1903,

(§ 10) E. Control of streets and public places.[19]—See 10 C. L. 900—Paramount authority over municipal streets resides in the state, which may delegate such powers as it sees fit.[20] Under its delegated authority a municipality may regulate traffic,[21] the speed of vehicles,[22] or trains,[23] require precaution in the operation of street cars,[24] or locomotives,[25] prohibit cattle from running at large,[26] require the removal of trees,[27] or stationary awnings,[28] prohibit advertising wagons,[29] and prevent the distribution of advertising matter.[30] The city's power to regulate the use of streets does not authorize an interference with the personal liberty of citizens.[31] In the exercise of its police power, a municipality may supervise and control the introduction and maintenance of the various appliances which subserve the several urban uses of streets,[32] such as the placing of telegraph and telephone lines,[33] and gas mains,[34] and the operation of street railways.[35]

p. 697, c. 31, authorizing license of business for revenue, when considered in connection with Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1896 (St. 1895, p. 450, c. 23), declaring charters of cities subject to general law "except in municipal affairs." Id. Charter of Baltimore authorizes tax for revenue for use of city market and license not considered as regulation. Meushaw v. State [Md.] 71 A 457.

authorized.[61] The police power will authorize the summary opening of streets,[62] and a city is not estopped[63] or barred by limitations[64] from removing encroachments. The city may not remove lawful structures,[65] and the authorization of a court if used only for that purpose,[66] an areaway,[67] or an encroachment on an alley,[68] is proper. An ordinance vacating a street[69] to serve a purely private interest is void,[70] but the rule is inapplicable when the subservience of such interest is only incidental.[71] A wrongful conveyance[72] may be saved by a confirmatory act.[73] Where additional burdens were imposed upon streets by the legislature, and the fee remained in the abutting owners, such owners might seek redress, but the city is not a trustee to enforce such rights.[74]

§ 12. Contracts.[75]—See 10 C. L. 904—Contracts by public governmental bodies are fully treated in a separate article.[76] Practically the only questions arising upon such contracts which are peculiar to municipalities and proper to be treated here are those relating to unauthorized contracts and the implications and estoppels resulting therefrom. It results necessarily from the limited and delegated character of muappropriation of money to a debt, placed with a proper officer so as to be available to the debtor, is a tender effective to stop interest.[18]

Liens See 10 C. L. 908 to secure moneys due a municipality usually arise in connection with taxes[19] or assessments for public improvements.[20]

Warrants. See 10 C. L. 908—A warrant issued by the proper authorities of a city in consideration of a valid indebtedness against it is a written acknowledgment of such indebtedness and promise to pay it.[21] Special assessment warrants for local improvements are not obligations of a city.[22] Warrants issued in excess of the limitation of indebtedness are void,[23] but warrants are not invalidated by a recital of payment from a fund which a city is not authorized to create,[24] or from a fund which was authorized but due to negligence was not created.[25] Charter provision may require that a claim for an official's compensation be presented and audited before a warrant issue.[26] A custodian of municipal warrants is without authority to sell them before funds are raised by the municipality for redemption.[27] The warrants of a de facto corporation constitute a debt evidenced in writing, in regard to the statute of limitations,[28] and the statute does not run against warrants payable from a special fund until such fund is created and contains a sum sufficient to pay the warrants.[29] A city is liable in damages for the wrongful diversion of a special assessment fund without paying outstanding warrants.[30] Presentation and demand for payment is prerequisite to a suit.[31] Where charter provisions as to the issuance of warrants were disregarded, mandamus would not lie to compel such issue.[32]

Limitation of indebtedness.[33] See 10 C. L. 908—Legislative[34] or constitutional limitations of indebtedness are usually based upon a percentage of the assessed valuation.[35] It is sometimes provided that the general limit may be extended when the purchase of public utilities is involved.[36] Otherwise the limitation is absolute[37] and an excessive tax levy may be enjoined.[39] A recent case illustrates the determination of whether the purchase of a waterworks company would necessitate the incurring of an excessive indebtedness.[39] An indebtedness existing prior to the first assessment is valid if within the constitutional limitation,[40] and the limitation has been held inapplicable where a statute provided for the return of unearned license fees [41] where a city contracted for a water supply,[42] or to the pledge of water receipts as a special fund.[43] Where a city purchased a park in excess of the limitation, but the taxpayers paid the assessments, the city recorder could not refuse an order for the payment of interest on the ground of illegality.[44] A city which purchased an engine in excess of the limitation was not entitled to retain such engine, giving the seller only the option to rescind, but such seller might enforce his lien by sale.[45]

§ 14. Torts and crimes.[46]—See 10 C. Municipality has burden of proving acts of agents ultra vires. Id.

56. Liability of emission of smoke from city's pumping plant not effected by question whether property located within limits. Gordon v. Silver Creek, Sup., 127 App. Div. 888, 112 NYS 64. Cannot avoid liability by plea that pumping plant is maintained in exercise of governmental functions. Id. Under Buffalo City Charter § 395, requiring city to abate nuisancee and Laws 1906, p. 1439, c. 527, § 1, giving city full power in premises and also declaring periodic overflow of Buffalo river to be nuisance, city is liable for refusal to abate such nuisance caused by such periodic overflow. White v. Buffalo, 60 Misc. 611, 112 NYS 485.

57. Statutes imposing liability on cities for destruction by mobs are enacted by virtue of police power of state, not on theory of negligence of city in failing to disperse mobs. Sturges v. Chicago, 237 Ill. 46, 86 NE 683. Laws 1887, p. 237, § 1, providing liability of city when property is destroyed by mobs is not unconstitutional as imposing liability for mob assembling beyond its borders, as to so construe statute would be unreasonable. Sturges v. Chicago, 237 Ill. 46, 86 NE 683. Powers are granted by legislature and in return certain duties are exacted, such as that of preserving public peace. Implied contract to preserve peace. Id. Statute as to indemnification of property owners from riots not special legislation. Dawson Soap Co. v. Chicago, 234 Ill. 314, 84 NE 920.

58. Doctrine of respondeat superior applies to municipalities only in their corporate capacity. Evans v. Kankakee, 132 Ill. App. 488. City liable for negligent act of employe in swinging bridge against vessel. Lehigh Valley Trans. Co. v. Chicago, 141 Ill. App. 618. Liability of city as to bridge same as street. Id. Municipality liable for wrongful acts of officers expressly authorized or ratified, if not wholly ultra vires. Faucheux v. St. Martinville, 120 La. 764, 45 S 600. Municipality liable for wrongful act by street commissioner while improving street, work being ministerial function and relating to corporate interests. Barree v. Cape Girardeau, 132 Mo. App. 182, 112 SW 724. Instructions failing to recognize doctrine of municipal exemption where in exercise of governmental function, but rather to be based on theory of negligent act incident to defendant's water service, erroneous. Judson v. Winsted, 80 Conn. 384, 68 A 999. Where borough engaged, through employe in exercise of powers granted to it as special privilege of benefit of corporation or inhabitants, rule of respondeat superior applies. Id. City not liable for unauthorized acts of contractor in making change of grade. McQuarter v. St. Joseph [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1140. Acts of agents outside limits of corporate duty to municipality not act of city. Valentine v. Englewood [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 344. Wrongful threats of repeated prosecutions made by officers. Butler v. Moberly, 131 Mo. App. 172, 110 SW 682. Officers' refusal to issue peddler's license. Id. Unauthorized acts of inspector in commanding contractor to excavate on land outside alley being paved and graded. McGrath v. St. Louis [Mo.] 114 SW 611. Nothing in contract for grading and paving public alley which required contractor to trespass and injure property, so as to render city joint tort feasor. Id. Municipality not liable for acts of board of health created by public statute for public benefit though members appointed by municipal authorities. Valentine v. Englewood [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 344. Appointment does not make them agents. Id. Board of health. Agent of public not city. Prime v. Yonkers, 192 N. Y. 105, 84 NE 571. Where city placed structure in stream which did not affect flow of water until removal of dam by board of health and several years later owner sued for injury to property, no request having been made for removal of abutment, but which city then did remove and built wall to prevent further injury, it was held not to appear as matter of law that city failed to exercise reasonable care. Id. City's duty to change waterway not absolute but merely to exercise reasonable care. Id. In action for false arrest, it is necessary, in order to render village liable, to aver not only that those who made the arrest were officers of village, but also that they were acting at time in their official capacity. Shank v. St. Louisville, 5 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 510.

59. McGrath v. St. Louis [Mo.] 114 SW 611. Failure of street cleaners to turn off hydrant flooding bowling alley. Frank v. Rome, 125 App. Div. 141, 109 NYS 247. Where in grading and paving alley contract specified that improvement be made wholly within alley, fact that wall of adjacent house cracked and fell would not alone authorize is a duty owing to the public.[60] Where a permit is given for the storing of a specified quantity of explosives and a much larger amount is stored, the city is not liable for the injury caused by the explosion.[61] With respect to facilities designed for the use and benefit of the public, the municipality is not liable for any matter growing out of the plan of the work,[62] but is liable for failure to keep such facilities in repair,[63] or for negligence in the actual execution or construction of its public works.[64] A city's liability may attach in regard to street lighting,[65] and the maintenance of gutters, drains and sewers.[66] Dangerous places in grounds or ways for public use recovery against city. McGrath v. St. Louis [Mo.] 114 SW 611. No negligence in plan requiring excavation wholly within public alley, to be carried to lower level than foundation of adjacent building, as matter of law. Id. City not liable for injury from collapse of building though city building department approved defective plans. Stubley v. Allison Realty Co., 124 App. Div. 162, 108 NYS 759. Building department not administrative department. Id.

60. City liable for defect in street though work of repair in hands of independent contractor. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 NYS 676.

61. New York city not liable for injury caused by explosion of 200 pounds of dynamite stored in street by subcontractor in constructing subway, though city fire commissioner gave permit for storage of 50 pounds. Murphy v. New York, 128 App. Div. 463, 112 NYS 807.

62. City in governmental capacity may maintain streets with center elevated and with gutters at side and is not liable for danger inherent in plan adopted. Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 SW 674. City not liable for failure to improve a street. May leave in condition it was. Harney v. Lexington [Ky.] 113 SW 115. Ceasing to maintain gutters after grading school lots not cause for city's liability when no duty to maintain on first instance. O'Neill v. St. Paul, 104 Minn. 491, 116 NW 1114. Trespass not maintainable against borough for injuries to abutting owner resulting from change of grade, there being no actual taking of property. Deer v. Sheraden Borough, 220 Pa. 307, 69 A. 814.

63. City liable for negligent construction or maintenance of plan of streets, as to gutters or cross walks. Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 SW 674. Municipality not insurer against damage from construction works but obligation measured by exercise of reasonable care and liability only predicated upon neglect. Ettlinger v. New York, 58 Misc. 229, 109 NYS 44. In action for consequential injury to property by city's act in leaving abutment in stream, where individual could not question authority of city to so do, city was only liable for negligence in construction. Prime v. Yonkars, 192 N. Y. 105, 84 NE 571. City liable in damage for faulty construction of street and gutter in front of abutting owner's premises or failing to keep in repair, if notified of defect, and no contributory negligence. Edwards v. Williamsport, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 43.

64. Municipality not insurer for works under construction but liability measured by reasonable care, based on neglect. Silverberg v. New York, 59 Misc. 492, 110 NYS 992. In lawful improvement of alley where owner of adjacent house knew that excavation would be lower than foundation, such knowledge dispensed with any formal notice by city of work. McGrath v. St. Louis [Mo.] 114 SW 611.

65. Liable for negligence in the maintenance of public ways. Town of Newcastle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 757. Municipality exercises quasi judicial function in establishing street lights. Andrews v. Elmira, 128 App. Div. 699, 113 NYS 711. Error in exercising function of establishing street lights not negligence. Id. Failure to light highway may be negligence. Id. Cities and towns not liable when under no statutory duty to light highways. Town of Spencer v. Mayfield [Ind. App.] 85 NE 23. Municipality not liable for discretionary acts. Town of Spencer v. Mayfield [Ind. App.] 85 NE 23.

66. Municipality liable for damages caused by careless construction of gutters, drains, sewers. Edwards v. Williamsport, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 43. Liable for collection of sewage and discharge into stream to injury of riparian owner. Kellogg v. Kirksville, 132 Mo. App. 519, 112 SW 296. Municipality has no right to divert surface water by artificial drains and injure land otherwise not subject to such water. Kehoe v. Rutherford, 74 N. J. Law, 659, 65 A 1046. Exemption of municipality does not extend to actions where injury is result of active wrong doing chargeable to corporation. Id. Liable for discharging in direction where it would not naturally flow on private property. Prime v. Yonkers, 192 N. Y. 105, 84 NE 571. City not under obligation to provide system of sewerage to carry off surface water. Id. City sued for pollution of stream may not deduct sum representing injury inflicted if without sewers, where no evidence to determine allowance. Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Eq.] 69 A 225. City may not collect water from large area and cast on lands where it would not otherwise flow, to injury of owner without compensation. Id. Responsible for street wash diverted into sewers emptying in stream by artificial means. Id. Not responsible for street wash going into stream though in time of rain and on account of paved surface more will pass into stream. Id. Evidence insufficient to show city's right by prescription to pollute stream. Id. Not invasion of riparian owners' rights until city poured more sewage than stream could take care of. Id. City not liable for flooding of cellar from obstruction of water course where plaintiff wrongfully without city's knowledge connected cellar by drain with such water course and such water course was not must be guarded with reasonable prudence.[67] Actual or constructive notice is prerequisite to a municipality's liability for the defective condition of public places or facilities.[68]

§ 15. Claims and demands.[69] See 10 C. L. 912—Statutes usually require that notice be given to municipalities within a limited time of demands for injuries re-

ueed as sewer. Levasseur v. Berlin [N. H.] 71 A 628. Liable when in repairing sewer pipe of one who has lawfully connected therewith is stopped up and bursts. Googin v. Lewiston, 103 Me. 119, 68 A 694. Under Priv. and Sp. Laws 1903, p. 415, c. 263, giving board of public works care and control of sewers, city is nevertheless liable for defective repairing the same as if council or other municipal agency was charged with duty. Id. City required by charter to promptly repair sewers not liable for obstruction not caused by negligence. Katzenstein v. Hartford, 80 Conn. 663, 70 A 23. Damages for failure to remove obstruction in sewer only recoverable if negligence in failure to make repairs after notice. Id. No liability for diversion of surface waters when incident to improvement. Construction of retaining wall in grading school lots. O'Neill v. St. Paul, 104 Minn. 491, 116 NW 1114. Not liable for discharge of surface water resulting solely from grading streets pursuant to legislative authority. Prime v. Yonkers, 192 N. Y. 105, 84 NE 571. No action for drainage of public road causing diversion of surface water. Heape v. Berkeley County, 80 S. C. 32, 61 SE 203. City not liable for injury caused by drain where no allegation that city made drain or acted as to it, and petition permitted conclusion that drain was natural until filled with debris. Harney v. Lexington [Ky.] 113 SW 115. Drainage district organized pursuant to Laws 1879, p. 120, and amendments is liable for damage resulting from construction of levee whereby flow of river obstructed and water diverted upon other lands. Anderson v. Berwyn, 135 Ill. App. 8.

85. Legislature has conferred attribute of residence in counties. Maisch v. New York, 193 N. Y. 460, 86 NE 458, afg. 127 App. Div. 424, 111 NYS 645. Under Const. art. 6, § 14, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340, 341, as to jurisdiction of county courts when considered in connection with Laws 1897, p. 1, c. 378, § 1; Laws 1901, p. 1, c. 446, § 1, whereby city of New York is domestic corporation; such city is not resident. Principal place of residence is where chief governmental functions are exercised. Id. Of Kings County. Id. County court of Kings county has no jurisdiction of city of New York in county of New York. Id.

86. State proper party. Alabama Western R. Co. v. State [Ala.] 46 S 468.

87. Burke v. New York, 108 NYS 650.

88. May be proceeded against directly and fact that county treasurer and bondsman are liable is immaterial. City of Chadron v. Dawes County [Neb.] 118 NW 469.

89. Declaration failing to allege notice defective. Smith v. Chicago Heights, 141 Ill. App. 588. Where charter provided for filing of claim for damages within 30 days, and complaint for diversion of special assessment fund without paying warrants failed to allege such filing, it was insufficient. Jurey v. Seattle [Wash.] 97 P 107. Where complaint alleged filing of notice of intention to sue as required by Laws 1886, p. 801, c. 572, which allegation was not denied, filing of such notice was not in issue. Bogart v. New York, 112 NYS 549. Where action against city complaint alleged filing of notice of intent to sue, city would be presumed to have knowledge of filing and denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form belief as to such allegation is frivolous. Id. Where original petition alleged notice as given to officers, and copy appended to petition as exhibit showing substantial compliance with statute, amendment specifically setting out damages presents no variance. Smith v. Elberton [Ga. App.] 63 SE 48.

90. Under Act No. 5, p. 10, § 1, of 1870 (Extra Session), payment of claims from city legislative act for the payment of bonds may be barred by laches.[91] In an action or warrants where the petition avers a lien on funds collected and prays judgment for the debt with collections to be applied in payment, the lien on the general fund is not waived.[92] Under proper circumstances and where not forbidden by statute, mandamus will lie to compel a levy of taxes to pay a judgment against a county.[93] Ordinarily, taxpayers may enjoin acts injurious to property, unauthorized contracts, unlawful disposition of funds and similar acts resulting in the squandering of taxpayers' property.[94] The award of an execution against a city [95] or costs [96] may be error. A mechanics' lien judgment against a city fund may be authorized.[97] treasury cannot be enforced by mandamus and, though city diverted funds, mandamus will not lie. State v. Kennedy, 121 La. 757, 46 S 796.

91. When refusal to pay interest 25 years before and bonds matured 8 years before. Eddy v. San Francisco [C. C. A.] 162 F 441.

92. City of San Antonio v. Alamo Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 909. Petition to recover sum due on warrants, though showing uncollected sum on back tax rolls sufficient to pay plaintiff's claim, is sufficient without alleging diversion of same or denying plaintiff's right to receive payment of warrants from current fund of that year. City of San Antonio v. Alamo Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 909.

93. Lake County Com'rs v. Schradsky, 43 Colo. 84, 95 P 312. Funding bond act of 1899 (3 Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 780a, et seq.), provides additional means for payment of judgment against county, but does not forbid mandamus. Lake County Com'rs v. Schradsky, 43 Colo. 84, 95 P 312. No abuse in grant of mandamus to pay judgment against county though debt large. Id.

Injunction by taxpayer when expenditure in disregard of statutory method. Dunkin v. Blust [Neb.] 119 NW 8. Where Ky. St. 1903, § 3175, provided for recovery of taxes collected and expended, under ordinance not specifying purpose of tax, by city solicitor, or if he failed for six months "any person" might institute action, petition by citizen without allegations showing him in fact to be taxpayer was sufficient. Duncan v. Combs [Ky.] 115 SW 222. Taxpayers' act (Laws 1881, p. 709, c. 531, as amended Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301), designs to prevent illegal usurpation of powers by public officials and to restrain illegal acts, and taxpayers may enjoin only when acts are without power or when fraud is charged. Farley v. Lockport, 113 NYS 702. Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, providing that officers or agents of municipality may be restrained from illegal acts or committing waste and be compelled to restore funds unlawfully appropriated, not repealed by implication. Steele v. Glen Park, 193 N. Y. 341, 86 NE 26. Village proper party defendant. Id. Under Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, authorizing taxpayer's action in case of illegal acts of officers, unlawful appropriations, etc., plaintiff need not be resident. Steele v. Glen Park, 193 N. Y. 341, 86 NE 26.

§ 1. Names.[99]—See 10 C. L. 915—As a general rule the common law recognizes but one Christian name [1] and takes no account of middle names or initials,[2] but this rule is ordinarily applied as excusing only their omission and not their misstatement.[3] While it is a general rule that initials cannot be substituted for Christian names in judicial proceedings,[4] this rule has been greatly relaxed and the use of initials [5] or contractions [6] is frequently sanctioned where identity of person is clear.[7] Parol evidence is admissible to show such identity.[8] Except where it may be cured by amendment,[9] material variance of name is fatal in judicial proceedings,[10] but to be material the variance must be such as to mislead the opposite party to his prejudice.[11] The suffixes "Jr." and "Sr." are not part of a name,[12] but the word "trustee" inserted after the name of the grantee in a deed is not merely descriptio per-

3. Insertion of wrong initial in service by publication held fatal. D'Autremont v. Anderson Iron Co., 104 Minn. 165, 116 NW 357. Insertion of wrong initial in name of true owner of property in foreclosure proceedings. Carney v. Bigham [Wash.] 99 P 21.

4. Affidavit on which attachment was based held bad and not amendable, defendant debtor's Christian name not being given in a legal sense, initials being insufficient. McGrew v. Steiner [N. J. Law] 71 A 1122.

5. In Georgia action may properly be instituted by employing initials instead of full Christian name of defendant, men being frequently known by initials of their Christian names. Minchew v. Nahunter Lumber Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 716. "W. B. Priest" proper in indictment of "Wm. B. Priest." State v. Priest [Mo.] 114 SW 949. Where notice to take a deposition gave Christian names of a witness by initials, witness appeared and gave material testimony in action, fact that he subscribed deposition by full Christian names, first letters thereof being the same as initials given in notice, held not to require extrinsic evidence to show that witness testifying was same person as witness named in notice. Walters v. Rock [N. D.] 115 NW 511. Indorsement by initials on envelope sufficient to identify party if additional identification were necessary. Id. Evidence, in connection with Rev. St. 1899, § 3150 (Ann St. 1906, p. 1788), held to sustain finding that Lewis named as defendant in tax suit was owner even though first two initials of defendant therein were "J. W." while initials of grantee were "W. J." Id.

6. "Jno." is generally and correctly used as an abbreviation, abridgment or contraction of the Christian proper name "John," hence indictment by name of "Jno. M." and conviction by name of "John M." proper. McDonald v. State [Fla.] 46 S 176.

7. Abstract of title not vitiated by improper change from contraction to names in full where evidence was sufficient to show that patentees to land, S. Durley and G. T. Gorham, were same as subsequent grantors, Samuel Durley and Gardner T. Gorham. White v. Bates, 234 Ill. 276, 84 NE 906.

8. D'Autremont v. Anderson Iron Co., 104 Minn. 165, 116 NW 357. Whether or not the "Lewis" named as grantee was person who was grantor under name of "Leus" or "Luis" held question of fact there being sufficient evidence from which question could be determined. Einstin v. Holladay-Klotz Land & Lumber Co., 132 Mo. App. 82, 111 SW 859.

9. Rev. Laws 1905, § 4157. D'Autremont v. Anderson Iron Co., 104 Minn. 165, 116 NW 357. Mistakes in names may be corrected as a matter of course where a party appears in court. Simon v. Underwood, 115 NYS 65.

10. Variance, indictment charging "C. Wiltis" proof showing "C. Willis," fatal. Carnes v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 490, 110 SW 750. Indictment alleging deceased's name to be "Frederico Tersero," proof showing name to be "Fredrico Tersero," that in Spanish the two names sound alike, deceased went by both names and that letter "r" was silent in pronunciation of name in Mexican, variance held not fatal. Hernandez v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 468, 110 SW 753. Indictment for bigamy name of defendant's first wife "Rosa Nevill," license showing "Rosa Nevitt"; variance immaterial, proof showing that clerk inadvertently wrote two "t's" instead of two "l's" and that defendant knew that names applied to same person then living in same county. Rice v. Com., 31 Ky. L. R. 1354, 105 SW 123.

11. Kelly v. Kuhnhausen [Wash.] 98 P 603.

12. Property assessed to "Peter Peterson, Jr." redemption expiration notice addressed to "Peter Peterson," held sufficient, "Jr." and "Sr." not being part of a name. Peterson v. Wallace [Iowa] 118 NW 87.

sonae.[13] A presumption of identity of person arises from identity[14] or close similarity in names.[15]

One may sue another by the name by which he is known and by which he contracts[16] and where a person uses two names proceedings may be instituted against him by either,[17] where in fact known by two names it is immaterial that he is not equally known by both.[18] At common law a man may change his name at will and sue and be sued in any name in which he is known and recognized.[19] So, also, may he adopt any name in which to prosecute his business[20] and sue, and be sued, in such name.[21] A change in a woman's surname is presumptively brought about by marriage.[22] A fictitious name cannot be used for the defendant except where his true name is unknown,[23] and where a fictitious name is used, the proceedings must be amended to set forth the true name as soon as such name is discovered.[24]

Idem sonans.[See 10 C. L. 916]—The rule is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in legal documents or proceedings, and that the name, though incorrectly spelled, if it conveys to the ear when pronounced a sound practically identical with the sound of the correct name, is sufficient.[25] Names are idem sonans if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing the names when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation.[26] Whether one name is idem sonans[27] with another is a ques-

15. W. B. Priest and Wm. B. Priest prima facie same person; judgment read in evidence against Wm. B. Priest, prima facie against person indicted under name of "W. B. Priest." State v. Priest [Mo.] 114 SW 949. Presumption of identity. "Clody" Welcome, and "Claude" E. Welcome. McAuliff v. Hughes, 128 App. Div. 355, 112 NYS 486.

16. Gallais v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., 127 Mo. App. 338, 105 SW 693. A judgment obtained against married woman sued as a feme sole in her maiden name, held valid, and particularly since recovered upon contract executed by her in such name. Emery v. Kipp [Cal.] 97 P. 17. Contract and complaint in name "S. Gallais" true name "John B. S. Gallais." Gallais v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., 127 Mo. App. 338, 105 SW 693.

17. Proceedings under either permissible, and record in either name regular. Simon v. Underwood, 115 NYS 65. From similarity in names of "Clody" Welcome and "Claude" E. Welcome, and from proceedings in partition, court assumed that party was called by both names and that he was named and served in partition action by former name. McAuliffe v. Hughes, 128 App. Div. 355, 112 NYS 486. Name of alleged wife "Ida Amacher," proof "Eda Amacher," is sufficient, she being known by both. Nickelson v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 631, 111 SW 414.

18. Defendant in civil action was sued as "William Clarke Jewell," notice given to plaintiff that "Clarke Jewell, defendant," desired poor debtor's oath; notice, held sufficient defendant being frequently called by latter name. Young v. Jewell, 201 Mass. 385, 87 NE 604.

26. Kelly v. Kuhnhausen [Wash.] 98 P 603.

27. Held idem sonans: "Tasso" and "Dasso." Napa State Hospital v. Dasso, 153 Cal. 698, 96 P. 355. In prosecution for bigamy held immaterial that indictment gave defendant's first wife's name as "Staunton" instead of, as evidence showed, "Stanton." People v. Spoor, 235 Ill. 230, 85 NE 207.

"Schutz" and "Schultz": certificate of acknowledgment of deed not vitiated by having improperly inserted letter "l" in grantor's name. Veit v. Schwob, 127 App. Div. 171, 111 NYS 286. "Minnie E. Tilter" used in summons for true name "Minnie E. Tiller." Kelly v. Kuhnhausen [Wash.] 98 P 603. "Holenville" and "Holdenville" held so similar as to give notice under doctrine to telegraph company that telegram addressed to "Holenville" was intended for "Holdenville." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hankins [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 539. "Georgia Holland" and "Georgia Harland" and discrepancy in executive warrant held not to warrant release on habeas corpus. Holland v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 301, 108 SW 1181.

Not idem sonans: "Boulden" with "Bourland." McCormick v. Jester [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 278. "Steinman" and "Stinman." Steinman v. Jessee, 108 Va. 567, 62 SE 275. "Philip McArdle" and "Peter McArdle;" same person. Berkey v. Tipton L. H. & P. Co. [Ind. App.] 85 NE 724.

tion of pronunciation, not of spelling,[28] and where letters may be considered interchangeable after hearing the pronunciation of the names, it is a question for the court to determine whether or not the rule applies.[29] The doctrine is unavailable to cure variations in the spelling of a name, unless the combination of letters and sylables produce the same sound as the true name.[30]

Business and corporate names.[31]—See 10 C. L. 916—Individuals may adopt or assume as their trade or business name any name they desire, except as prohibited by statute,[32] and in such name sue and be sued,[33] but in some states it is a penal offense to carry on, conduct or transact business under an assumed name unless a certificate showing the same is filed with the county clerk.[34] If the name in which a suit is brought is not in fact the plaintiff's trade name, the question should be raised by a plea in abatement setting up the misnomer.[35]

§ 2. Signatures.[38]—See 10 C. L. 916—No particular form of "signature" [37] is required provided it is adopted as the signature of the person intended.[38] Generally, when a document is required by the common law or by statute to be "signed" by any person, a signature of his name in his own proper personal hand writing is not required,[39] and, where a sealed instrument is in fact signed by another in one's presence and immediate parol direction,[40] it becomes his valid act though the other's authority for executing it is not under seal.[41] A signature may be made by a rubber stamp [42] and be valid though nothing but a mark,[43] and though not attested where attestation is not required by statute.[44] Under statute requiring that "when the signature is required he must write it or make his mark" where there is no doubt as to the identity of the person having made the mark, it is immaterial that the scrivener in writing the name makes a mistake in spelling such party's name.[45] Addition of words "secretary" "treasurer," etc., to signatures to indicate offices in a voluntary association in no wise affects the individual liability of the members having signed an association note,[46] but although the pronoun "we" is used in the body of a note it is prima facie a corporate obligation if signed by the corporation acting by its officer or officers.[47]

Evidence and proof.—A standard of hand writing need not be proved by the testimony of a person who saw the signature offered written,[48] nor can it be proved by the opinions of witnesses;[49] but the same may be proved by any evidence direct or circumstantial independent of opinions,[50] and a witness, although not an expert, may state his own knowledge as to whose handwriting a signature is.[51] One asserting that a deed is a forgery has the burden to establish the fact by a preponderance of the testimony,[52] but where, pending an action to recover land, affidavits alleging the forgery of the deed under which defendant claims are filed by the plaintiff, the burden of proving genuineness rests on the party asserting the same.[53] In trespass to try title involving the identity of a person to whom a patent was granted, evidence that a person with the same name under which plaintiff claimed was within the state at the time the certificate issued is relevant,[54] and it is competent to prove the fact by family history.[55] A partial identity in name in the absence of controverting evidence is sufficient to show that the person to whom land is devised is the same person as the one who signed a deed of the land,[56] and a recital of identity of person in such case is competent evidence on that issue.[57] Where undisputed signatures can be procured, it is within the discretionary power of the judge to refuse to receive evidence as to signatures which are in litigation or in dispute,[58] but the judge has no such discretion where the case at hand is not an extraordinary one.[59] The admission of the genuineness of certain signatures does not estop one from denying similar signatures on other instruments sued on.[60] Agency can be proved only by evidence tending to show authority to sign.[61] Under statute, where the person against whom an instrument is offered denies his signature, he is barred from every other defense.[62]

§ 3. Seals.[63]—See 10 C. L. 917—By attaching one's signature to an instrument containing a printed "seal" at the place provided for the signature, the instrument in law becomes sealed.[64] Where a contract need not be under seal, the fact that an agent executes such contract under seal does not affect its validity,[65] and in Missouri the use of private seals in written or other instruments is abolished, and a seal if used does not affect the force, validity or character of the instrument or in any way change its significance or construction.[66] A seal imports consideration,[67] but in some states by virtue of statute it is only presumptive evidence thereof.[68] Under statute oyer may be craved of all instruments declared on whether sealed or unsealed.[69]

§ 1. What are navigable.[71]—See 10 C. L. 918—Navigable waters[72] are such as in their natural state[73] are navigable in fact[74] either continuously or periodically[75] for the ordinary purposes of commerce.[76] Streams not navigable, within the general definition, are in some jurisdictions held navigable for a particular purpose[77] or subject to an easement for navigation[78] not inconsistent with private ownership.[79] The navigability of water does not depend upon its actual use for navigation but on its capacity for such use.[80] A legislative declaration of navigability[81] or non-naviga-

70. Includes the definition and nature of navigable waters, the general rights of navigation and of access thereto, and the regulation and control of such rights. Excludes all matters with regard to riparian rights, accretion, reliction, subaqueous and tide lands (see Riparian Owners, 10 C. L. 1528; Waters and Water Supply, 10 C. L. 1996), bridges (see Bridges, 11 C. L. 441), ferries, (see Ferries, 11 C. L. 1467), wharves and wharfingers (see Wharves, 10 C. L. 2034), fishing rights (see Fish and Game Law, 11 C. L. 1471), and rights to consumptive use, reclamation, pollution and political jurisdiction (see Water and Water Supply, 10 C. L. 1996), except as affecting or affected by navigability. Excludes, also, methods of navigation and the rights and liabilities incident thereto as distinguished from the general right of navigation (see Shipping & Water Traffic, 10 C. L. 1655), and matters relating to the jurisdiction of courts of admiralty and practice and procedure therein (see Admiralty, 11 C. L. 33).

72. Defined: Water is navigable when in its ordinary state it forms by itself or by its connection with other waters a continuous highway over which commerce is or may be carried in customary mode in which such commerce is conducted by water. State v. Columbia Water Power Co. [S. C.] 63 SE 884. In its natural state, stream must, to be navigable, be capable of use by public, either at all times or periodically during the year for times long enough to make it susceptible of beneficial use to public for transportation. Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 563. Navigable stream is one capable of bearing upon its bosom, either for whole or part of the year, boats loaded with freight in regular course of trade. Mere rafting of timber or transportation of wood in small boats does not make stream navigable. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Sikes, 4 Ga. App. 7, 60 SE 868.

73. The great rivers of the state which are navigable by nature are public highways by common law. Commonwealth v. Foster, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 433. Under present accepted definition, a stream not naturally navigable is not legally navigable though by improvement it is navigable in fact. State v. Columbia Water Power Co. [S. C.] 63 SE 884.

74. At English common law only tidal waters were navigable, but in United States those which are navigable in fact. McGilvra v. Ross, 161 F 398. Instruction, that "such waters as are navigable in fact are navigable waters," while not erroneous fails to inform jury as to what waters the law considers navigable in fact. Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 563.

77. Rockcastle river is navigable for logs but not for boats. Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell [Ky.] 113 SW 56. St. 1898, §§ 3374-3406, regulating millidams on navigable waters does not necessarily apply to a stream navigable for logs. Allaby v. Mauston Elec. Service Co., 135 Wis., 345, 116 NW 4.

78. All streams capable of floating logs or boats. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Idaho, 561, 95 P 499. Public easement in non-navigable water was the same at common law. Id. Legislation declaring small stream a public highway grants no rights the public did not previously possess. Commonwealth v. Foster, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 433.

bility [82] will control subsequent legislation not unequivocally inconsistent therewith; [83] but neither legislative declaration [84] nor meanders [85] or other government surveys [86] are conclusive as to the navigability of a stream or other body of water, although the absence of such indicia has been held prima facie evidence of non-navigability.[87] The modern judicial tendency is to hold water to be navigable which is of general use for pleasure boating though not useful for commercial purposes.[88] A canal constructed to improve the navigation of navigable rivers is navigable water.[89]

§ 2. Relative, public and private rights.[90]—See 10 C. L. 918—Navigable water is a public highway of which the public is entitled to make reasonable use for the purposes of travel either for business or pleasure [91] or for any other lawful purpose not inconsistent with the rights of the riparian owners.[92] The title to subaqueous lands is held subject to the public's paramount right of navigation.[93] Between individuals the right is equal and concurrent [94] and the navigator must conduct his operations with due regard to the rights of others.[95] The public has a right to assume that raises no presumption of non-navigability. Id.

Liability for injuries caused by floating logs: The fact that there exists a common right to run logs in a navigable stream gives no immunity to individuals for injuries committed while using it. United States v. Mississippi & R. R. B. Co., 1 McCrary 601, 3 F 548. While land on navigable streams is subject to the danger incident to the right of navigation (Field v. Apple River Log Driving Co., 67 Wis. 569, 31 NW 17), and the owner of logs floating on a navigable stream is not an insurer of the riparian owner against damage thereby (Coyne v. Mississippi & R. R. B. Co., 72 Minn. 533, 75 NW 748, 71 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 L. R. A. 494), still he must exercise ordinary care (Coyne v. Mississippi & R. R. B. Co., 72 Minn. 533, 75 NW 748, 71 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 L. R. A. 494; Gulf Red Cedar Co. v. Walker, 132 Ala. 553, 31 S 374) irrespective of the magnitude of his operations (Sewall's Falls Bridge v. Fisk, 23 N. H. 171), to avoid injury to riparian rights, or to bridges (Cue v. Breeland, 78 Miss. 864, 29 S 850; Thurlow Twp v. Bogart, 15 U. C. C. P. 9; Sewall's Falls Br. Co. v. Fisk, 23 N. H. 171; Ward v. Grenville Twp., 32 Can. S. C. 510; Wellington Co. v. Wilson, 16 U. C. C. P. 124), mill dams (James v. Carter, 96 Ky. 378, 29 SW 19; Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 Mich. 610, 38 NW 649, 14 Am. St. Rep. 527; Buchanan v. Grand River & G. L. R. Co., 48 Mich. 364, 12 NW 490), or to other persons concurrently navigating said waters (Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 476, 85 NW 1103), and the logger is entitled to claim from others a due observance of the fundamental rules of navigation in the concurrent use of the stream (The Athabasca, 45 F 651). The fact that a mill dam exists there are no unlawful obstructions,[96] however, a navigator is not authorized to unnecessarily and negligently run into an unlawful obstruction to navigation,[97] although, such obstructions being a public nuisance, proper steps may be taken to abate the same.[98] The improvement of a navigable stream is sufficient consideration to the public for the exaction of a toll and such exaction is not a violation of the statutory or constitutional promise that all navigable water shall be free,[99] and collection of such tolls does not affect the legal navigability of the stream.[1] At common law and in many jurisdictions there exists an easement for public travel over waters not technically navigable,[2] but the right of the public to use water courses as a public highway is restricted in some states,[3] although the public may acquire such a right by prescription and lose it by nonuser.[4] The right of the public acquired by prescription in non-navigable streams is not exclusive but concurrent with that of the owner.[5] A bridge is subject to a public easement for navigation[6] even when the stream is non-navigable, if it might reasonably be anticipated that the stream would become navigable through artificial means.[7] A railroad is not required to without authority does not excuse willful or neligent injury thereto (Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 196, 19 SE 521, 45 Am. St. Rep. 894, 23 L. R. A. 674), but the logger may use reasonable means for passing the obstruction (Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Dwinel v. Veazie, 44 Me. 167, 69 Am. Dec. 94; Crookston Waterworks, P. & L. Co. v. Sprague, 91 Minn. 461, 98 NW 347, 99 NW 420, 103 Am. St. Rep. 525, 64 L. R. A. 977). While incidental delays to concurrent navigators are justifiable, the logger is liable for unreasonable delay or obstruction of others entitled to make use of the streams (McPheters v. Moose River Log Driving Co., 78 Me. 329, 5 A 270; Crandall v. Mooney, 23 U. C. C. P. 212; Cockburn v. Imperial L. C., 30 Can. S. C. 80), but not where such obstruction is primarily caused by another (Gifford v. McArthur, 55 Mich. 535, 22 NW 28). The use of splash dams and the consequent sudden flooding of the stream is not a lawful use of a navigable stream and the logger is liable in damages for injuries occasioned thereby (Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co., 169 NY 73, 62 NE 164, 58 L. R. A. 495; Kentucky Lbr. Co. v. Miracle, 101 Ky. 364, 41 SW 25; Ford Lbr. & Mfg. Co. v. Clark, 24 Ky. L. R. 818, 68 SW 443), or by withholding the water from a person lower down the stream (O'Brien v. Northwestern Improvement & Boom Co., 82 Minn. 136, 84 NW 735), but the fact that such splash dams are maintained does not render the owner liable for damage occasioned by the acts of another logger (Bauman v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 66 Mich. 544, 33 NW 538), or an independent contractor (Carter v. Berlin M. Co., 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572), unless such damage is the necessary result of the contract (Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 NW 58). The logger is liable for lands flooded by jams which he negligently allows to form (Hopkins v. Butte & M. Commercial Co., 16 Mont. 356, 40 P 865; Alabama Lumber Co. v. Keel, 125 Ala. 603, 28 S 204, 82 Am. St. Rep. 265), or for raising the water by allowing additional logs to enter a jam already formed (Bauman v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 66 Mich. 544, 33 NW 538), and has no right to flood the stream to the full extent of the most extraordinary freshets (Witheral v. Muskegon Booming Co., 68 Mich. 48, 35 NW 758, 13 Am. St. Rep. 325). The gist of an action for injury, consequent upon improper use of the stream, is negligence. Hunter v. Grande Ronde Lumber Co., 39 Or. 448, 65 P 598.—Adapted from 64 L. R. A. 983.

96. After vain efforts by railway employes and raft owner for eighteen hours to remove raft without breaking up, cutting the raft held proper procedure to abate nuisance, although navigation was not wholly obstructed. keep the space under its drawbridges free from obstructions which are present without its fault but it has a duty to prevent the accumulation of wreckage around its piers which would obstruct navigation.[8] A riparian owner may lawfully maintain a milldam across a navigable stream if it does not unreasonably obstruct navigation.[9] The right to maintain an obstruction in a navigable stream may be acquired by prescription as against private persons, although a public nuisance,[10] but there must be an assertion of prescriptive right in order to start the running of the period of limitations,[11] and the fact that such prescriptive right has been acquired gives no right to increase the obstruction.[12] The policy of the courts of Wisconsin is to scrupulously protect the navigable waters of the state from impairment.[13]

Right of access.[See 10 C. L. 919]—Riparian owners have the right of access to the navigable waters opposite their respective holdings[14] whether on surf-beaten shores or other navigable waters,[15] subject to state or congressional regulation[16] or withdrawal,[17] and it is the duty of navigators to conduct their operations with due regard to such rights.[18] At the common law the title of the littoral owner did not extend beyond highwater mark,[19] and the public has the right over the beach between high and low water,[20] subject to the riparian owner's right of access.[21] Although the common law has been, by federal statute, extended to Alaska, this rule does not apply to tide lands claimed by littoral owners at the time the statute went into effect.[22] The riparian owner, although not entitled to wharf rights, may maintain action to prevent wharfage interfering with his right of access[23] but there is a presumption that a wharf aids rather than impedes such access.[24] The adoption of the common law in this country did not, however, always include the rigid rules as to littoral rights not adaptable to our political and geographical conditions.[25] The littoral owner may divest the property of a right of access to the navigable water[26] and does so by dedicating the foreshore as a public highway,[27] but the right of a riparian owner to have the stream flow past his property in a natural way has been held to be inseparably annexed to the soil.[28]

Right of wharfage and reclamation. See 10 C. L. 920—A riparian owner may have the right erect wharves, piers and booms in the shoal water opposite his land, in aid of, and not obstructing, navigation.[29] This is a riparian right, not dependent upon ownership of the bed of the stream but of the bank.[30] It may be prohibited or regulated by the state but in the absence of such qualification is a private right derived from implied license.[31] It is an incorporeal hereditament[32] and may be the subject of a separate grant,[33] and the grantee does not hold adversely to the public, at least until notice of such adverse holding is brought home to the state.[34] The general rule is that frontage on navigable waters for wharfage purposes is proportionate to the shore frontage.[35] The right of the riparian owner to use the navigable water opposite his land is not exclusive[36] and he must use the same with due regard to the concurrent rights of the public;[37] but, where the rights of the public are released or extinguished, such rights at once become vested in the riparian owners.[38]

§ 3. Regulation and control.[39]—See 10 C. L. 920—In the exercise of its supervisory power over the navigable waters of the United States, congress has power to order the removal of obstructions thereto,[40] and authority to determine what are unreasonable obstructions and to order their removal may be delegated to an executive department[41] which determination by proper authority is conclusive.[42] The removal of a structure so condemned is not an exercise of eminent domain.[43] The title to lands under navigable waters is in the state or the United States, in trust for the public,[44] including lands between high and low-water mark[45] and lands underlying navigable fresh water,[46] and the state or national government alone has power to regulate, control[47] or improve the same.[48] Such control, however, can-would work great hardships, the final order may be deferred pending solution of the engineering problem.[64] Nonuser by the public is no defense to such an action.[65] Failure to comply with an executive order to remove an obstruction is punishable by fine and each month's delay is a new offense.[66] Damages by reason of the obstruction of a navigable stream may be recovered against the party maintaining the nuisance [67] unless barred by limitations,[68] but a party who did not erect the obstruction is liable for its maintenance only after notice to remove.[69] Upon the question of damages, a qualified person may testify as to the deterioration of value in consequence thereof.[70] Where a milldam is an illegal obstruction, the remedy is by legal proceedings to abate the nuisance and not by damming the river up stream to provide a sudden flow for the passage of logs.[71]

NE EXEAT.[72]

This topic includes only matters relating to the writs of ne exeat.

The extraordinary writ of ne exeat will not issue pending an appeal in the absence of a sufficient showing that the appellant is about to leave the jurisdiction, and that the applicant is not otherwise secured;[73] but where defendant has expressed an intention of leaving the jurisdiction and the evidence discloses such conditions as would naturally impel him to go away, a writ will not be discharged though the defendant denies even having expressed a purpose to leave the state,[74] although if the restraint of the writ should be found to interfere with the freedom of defendant's movements in meeting pressing business engagements out of the state, a motion for the substitution of a bond to answer the decree will be entertained.[75] The writ is a civil proceeding and the bond required to be given to exempt a defendant from incarceration and detention in the county jail thereunder is a bail in a civil case,[76] and under statute a recovery upon the bond will not be sustained in the absence of the issuance of a capias ad satisfaciendum and a return thereon non est inventus.[77] While a bond given to procure the release of one arrested under a writ of ne exeat regno differs from an ordinary bail bond in requiring the constant presence of the principal within the jurisdiction, yet the chief object of the two obligations is to obtain security that the principal shall abide any decree which the court may render

NEGLIGENCE.

The scope of this topic is noted below.[83]

§ 1. Definitions.[84] See 10 C. L. 922—Broadly speaking, negligence may be said to be a breach [85] of duty,[86] consisting either of action or nonaction.[87] The definition commonly given, however, is that negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care,[88]

84. This section defines negligence, including willful or wanton negligence, merely in its abstract and relative sense and discusses degrees of negligence only where the comparative negligence of the parties is not questioned. Definitions of the various phases and elements of, and defenses to, negligence, are treated in following sections deemed appropriate therefor.

86. Where there is no duty, there can be no negligence. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 699.

87. Act of omission may be negligence as well as one of commission. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 480. Failure of engineer to prevent engine from moving while fireman was under it. Id. Negligence is the failure to discharge a duty which may be the omission of a duty, or doing that which is contrary to a duty. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 699.

88. Adkisson's Adm'r v. Louisville H. & St. L. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 204, 110 SW 284; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844; Cross v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. App. 296, 109 SW 62; Smith's Adm'r v. Norfolk & P. Trac. Co. [Va.] 63 SE 1005. As a general rule, in all cases grounded upon negligence, the law imposes the duty of ordinary care which must be exercised by both which is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.[89] But since the terms negligence[90] and ordinary care[91] or reasonable prudence[92] have only a relative significance, no particular conduct in the abstract can be said to be negligent,[93] but necessarily depends upon the circumstances and dangers surrounding the parties and their situation at the time.[94] To this rule there is the single exception that the violation of a rule of conduct prescribed by law is always negligence.[95] Actionable negligence, like negligence which the one causing the injury and the one sustaining it. Wilkinson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 99 P 466.

89. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Kelley, 138 Ill. App. 109; Adkisson's Adm'r v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 204, 110 SW 284; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844; Cross v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 432, 110 SW 290; Mitchell v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 143, 112 SW 291; Wilkinson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 99 P 466. One's conduct is to be judged by the standard of an ordinarily prudent man. Hebeler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 551, 112 SW 34; Robinson v. Cowan [Ala.] 47 S 1018. Definition of simple negligence as the failure to do what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the circumstances, or the doing of that which an ordinarily prudent person would not have done, preferred over the definition that it "is the doing of an act, or the omission to act, which results in damage, but without intent to do wrong or cause damage," which was said to be inaccurate and too broad. Alabama City G. & A. R. Co. v. Bullard [Ala.] 47 S 578. That ordinary care is the care which an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances, and that negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care, is a "maxim" needing no proof, argument or discourse. Felver v. Central Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 980.

90. Negligence is a relative term, and what is negligence in one case may not be in another. Gallagher v. City of Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 SW 674; Cordray v. Savannah Elec. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 710.

91. The expression "ordinary care" is a relative term rather than a fixed and unvarying one. What would be ordinary care under one state of facts would be "gross negligence" under other conditions; and so what would amount to the "highest and utmost care" in one situation would only be "ordinary care" in another; and therefore when the term "ordinary care" is used, such care is meant as is proportionate to the danger to be avoided or the risk to be incurred, judged by the standard of common prudence and the surrounding facts and circumstances. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. [Idaho] 99 P 91. What is "ordinary care" must be gauged and determined by the danger which its exercise requires to be overcome, for what would be ordinary care under certain conditions, might, under other conditions, be gross negligence. Galveston, H. & T. A. R. Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 106. What is ordinary care depends upon the circumstances of each case, and when the circumstances are such that an ordinarily prudent person would take greater precautions for his own safety than under less threatening circumstances, the greater degree of caution would be ordinary care. Dickson v. Swift & Co., 238 Ill. 62, 87 NE 59. Due care is care according to time and circumstances, hence, what is due care in one case might be negligence in another, and its gauge rises as the danger increases. Riggs v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 969. Though the foreman of a section gang might not have been negligent in suddenly stopping a hand car, had the injured person been standing squarely upon it and facing the direction in which it was going, the evidence was sufficient to show his negligence when the injured party was in an insecure position and riding backwards, such position being usual in the performance of his duties. Doss v. Missouri, K & T. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 458.

92. The terms "ordinary care" and "reasonable prudence," as applied to the ordinary conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be ordinary care in one case may, under different surroundings and circumstances, be gross negligence. Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622.

93. There is no such thing as negligence at large, it being, in its essence, always concrete. Wyckoff v. Birch [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 243. The mere presence or absence of certain evidentiary facts will not always determine the question of negligence without reference to other facts appearing in particular cases. Stearns v. Boston & M. R. A. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 213. Conduct of the parties resulting in injury to one is to be judged not by fact that injury resulted from the course pursued but in the light of the circumstances known or discoverable by the use of ordinary care. Id.

94. Willson v. Logan, 139 Ill. App. 204. Although the standard raised by the law for the measurement of damages is that of an ordinarily prudent person only, the degree of care required is always to be exercised in view of the circumstances and dangers attending the parties and their situation at the time. Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 458. "Negligence" is the failure to observe for the protection of another's interests such care and precaution as the circumstances justly demand. Florida R. Co. v. Sturkey [Fla.] 48 S 34. Negligence consists of a failure, under the circumstances, to use ordinary care. Smith's Adm'r v. Norfolk & P. Trac. Co. [Va.] 63 SE 1005.

95. Where the law prescribes the duty and also defines what constitutes ordinary care in discharging it, neither party may rely upon the care of the other, but must comply with the duty which the law imposes. Wilkinson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 99 P 466. Duty of traveler upon highway is nonactionable, must be predicated upon a breach [96] of duty [97] in the commission or omission of an act [98] without wrongful intent; [99] but, in addition, such breach of duty, which is merely a failure to exercise ordinary care,[1] must proximately [2] result [3] in actual [4] injury [5] to the person to whom the duty is owed.[6] Use of the phrases customarily found in the definitions may not be essential [7] and some have even been criticised as inaccurate [8] and of but little practical value.[9] The modern tendency and trainmen approaching railroad crossing. Id. See, also, § 2, post.

96. Must be breach of duty. City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995; Kelly v. Benae [Mo.] 116 SW 557; Pullman Co. v. Cavinere [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 410; Herndon v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah, 65, 95 P 646; Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311. Actionable negligence consists of a failure of duty, the omission of something which ought to have been done, or the doing of something which ought not to have been done. Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821. A person cannot be held liable for negligence, unless he owed some duty to the plaintiff and that duty was not performed. McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 147 N. C. 142, 60 SE 912. Must be breach of duty. Richmond v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 463, 113 SW 708.

97. Must be a duty. City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995. Must be duty to use due care. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311; Pullman Co. v. Caviness [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 410. The expression "duty" properly imports a determinate person to whom the obligation is owing, as well as the one who owes the obligation; there must be two determinate parties before the relationship of obligor and obligee of a duty can exist. McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 147 N. C. 142, 60 SE 912. Where plaintiff standing in highway shot into shanty containing dynamite located on defendant's premises, held that there was no duty owed by the latter to the former. Id. Railroad under no duty to use care in handling of cars in its yards in anticipation of unauthorized intrusions. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311.

98. A wrongful omission is as actionable as a wrongful commission. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643.

99. Richmond v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 463, 113 SW 708; Pullman Co. v. Caviness [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 410. Wantonness or willfulness are not elements of simple negligence. Heinzle v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 213 Mo. 102, 111 SW 536.

1. Richmond v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 463, 113 SW 708; Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311; Pullman Co. v. Caviness [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 410. The test of actionable negligence is whether the degree of care which persons of ordinary prudence and intelligence commonly exercise under the same circumstances was exercised in the case at bar. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. If the care exercised rises to this standard, there is no right of action; if it does not, there is. Id.

2. See § 3, post.

3. A failure to do a futile act cannot be made the basis of negligence. Lissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104; Stearns v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 21; Slaughter v. Huntington [W. Va.] 61 SE 155.

4. Where recovery is sought for negligent injury, an actual injury must be shown. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 107 Md. 600, 69 A 422. Visible external wounds are not essential, hence internal injuries, of which there are no external evidences, are sufficient. Id. Negligence causing fright not resulting in personal injury is not actionable. Reed v. Ford, 33 Ky. L. R. 1029, 112 SW 600; Miller v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 78 Ohio St. 309, 85 NE 499. Where one was injured while attempting to escape imminent danger, accompanying fright, held irrelevant to the issue of negligence. Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622. Negligence causing fright resulting in personal injury is actionable. Sandy v. Swift & Co., 159 F 271.

5. Injury must result. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311; Nichols v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808; City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995; Hughes v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 924. Negligence of carrier towards passenger is not actionable unless it results in injury. Sullivan v. Old Colony St. R. Co., 200 Mass. 303, 86 NE 511.

6. There is no liability to one to whom no duty is owed. Hone v. Presque Isle Water Co. [Me.] 71 A 769. An act or omission may be negligent as to one and innocuous as to another, since a duty may be owed to one and not to another. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 699. Water company not liable to individuals for negligent failure to supply water adequate to extinguishment of fires in accordance with its contract with municipality. Hone v. Presque Isle Water Co. [Me.] 71 A 769.

7. Care ordinarily exercised by the great mass of persons under like circumstances used rather than that of the "ordinarily prudent man." Bandekow v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 136 Wis. 341, 117 NW 812. Expression "ordinary care" in portion of charge instead of "ordinary care and diligence" will not require a new trial where the meaning of "ordinary care" is clearly defined, and it is shown that no peculiar or restricted meaning was attached to it. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281. Objection to instruction on ground that negligence must have "caused" injury rather than "occasioned" it held not tenable. Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 SE 385. "Ordinary care" and "ordinary diligence" synonymous term when applied to same conduct. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson [Ga.] 62 SE 281.

8. The care that an "ordinarily prudent man" would exercise when used as the standard upon which to determine the existence or nonexistence of contributory negligence is to disregard degrees of care and negligence,[10] but qualifying adjectives are still frequently used[11] though principally for the purpose of showing the variable quantity of the terms negligence and ordinary care.[12] Gross negligence, in particular, is recognized[13] and has been defined to be the failure to exercise slight care.[14] The term "negligence" without any qualification usually means ordinary negligence.[15]

Willfulness and wantonness.[See 10 C. L. 923]—These terms[16] and others of similar import,[17] which may[18] or may not[19] be equivalent, always imply something more than simple negligence.[20] To constitute wanton[21] negligence there must be suggests mediocrity of care, if not carelessness, and held too low when applied to telephone lineman. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599.

9. Note: For a dicta discussion of the meaning and value of the terms "ordinarily prudent man", "ordinary care" and like terms as used to define the standard of care upon which the question of the existence or nonexistence of neligence in a particular case is to be determined, see Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825.—[Ed.]

10. See, also, § 4, subdivision "comparative negligence," post. Instruction qualifying terms "care" and "negligence" by the use of the adjectives "slight" and "ordinary" is error. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Kelley, 138 Ill. App. 109. The terms "light" and "heavy" as applied to negligence unwarranted in action against electric light company for injury caused by live wire when no evidence that defendant maintained a common nuisance or was guilty of wanton negligence. Weir v. Haverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874. Gross negligence need not be shown under Ky. St. 1903, § 6, giving a cause of action for death by another's negligence. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Evan, 33 Ky. L. R. 596, 110 SW 844.

11. Highest degrees of care required of electric light companies. Weir v. Haverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874. Highest degree of care commensurate with the dangers required of electric light companies. Electric light company. Walter v. Baltimore Elec. Co. [Md.] 71 A 953. Slightest neglect held sufficient to create liability of carrier for injury to passenger. Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 SE 385. Common laborer chargeable with lesser degree of intelligence than employer. Vaugh v. Glen Falls Portland Cement Co., 59 Misc. 230, 112 NYS 240.

12. Gross neligence under one state of facts, ordinary care under another. Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622; Cordray v. Savannah Elec. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 710; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 106. Highest degree of care required in some cases, yet this is but ordinary care under the facts. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. [Idaho] 99 P 91.

13. When one stationed at crossing gates leaves them open and permits team to cross while train is approaching, there is gross negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth [Ky.] 114 SW 264. Decedent held grossly negligent in not avoiding being run over by train. Holland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 210 Mo. 338, 109 SW 19. Engineer held grossly negligent in approaching crossing without keeping proper lookout. Alten v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 425, 113 SW 691. Gross neligence in running train faster than limit permitted by ordinance. Neary v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 461, 97 P 944.

14. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth [Ky.] 114 SW 264.

15. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy [Kan.] 97 P 1025.

16. Term "wanton negligence" always implies something more than negligent act. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912. Proof of simple negligence will not support a charge of willful and wanton misconduct. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. v. Carnahan [Miss.] 48 S 617; Robinson v. Helena Light & R. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 837. Instruction permitting recovery in such case erroneous. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. v. Carnahan [Miss.] 48 S 617.

17. "Recklessness" and "wantonness" are stronger terms than mere or ordinary negligence. No testimony to show wanton negligence. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy [Kan.] 97 P 1025. The word "recklessly" when used conjunctively with "wantonly" always means something more than negligently and can never import less than willful misconduct and intentional wrong. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912. Proof of simple negligence will not support a charge of reckless and wanton misconduct. Id.

18. An allegation of "willful," "unlawful" and "reckless" conduct does not charge negligence, but charges willfulness, since "unlawful" assigns no specific character to the acts alleged, and since the word "reckless" is equivalent to "willful." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 24, 61 SE 1064. Reckless disregard of security, wantonness or other equivalent of bad faith, and the willful or malicious disposition to injure, all involve something else than negligence. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Walters [Kan.] 96 P 346.

19. "Reckless" means heedless, careless, rash indifference to consequences, but does not imply willfulness. Robinson v. Helena Light & R. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 837.

20. Negligent injuries are to be distinguished from intentional ones. Cunningham v. Pease House Furnishing Co., 74 N. H. 435, 69 A 120.

21. Wantonness is the conscious failure of one charged with a duty to exercise due care and diligence to prevent an injury after the discovery of the peril, or under circumstances where he is charged with a knowledge of such peril and being conscious of the inevitable or probable results of such failure. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Williams [Ala.] 48 S 93. Held open to the jury to infer wantonness. Id. Complaint held not to charge wanton misconduct in starting car knowledge,[22] actual or constructive,[23] of the imminence of danger [24] and a failure to use reasonable effort to prevent it.[25] To constitute willful negligence [26] there must, in addition to the element of knowledge,[27] be a design, purpose or intent to do wrong or to cause the injury,[28] though recklessness amounting to an utter disregard of consequences will be held to supply the place of specific intent.[29] Mere forgetfulness, however grievous the consequences, does not constitute a willful or wanton neglect of duty.[30]

§ 2. Acts or omissions constituting negligence. A. Personal conduct in general.[31]—See 10 C. L. 923—As seen in the preceding section, negligence must be predicated upon a legal duty.[32] This duty may be created by statute [33] or ordinance,[34]

while passenger was alighting. Selma St. & S. R. Co. v. Campbell [Ala.] 48 S 378. No evidence of wantonness. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Haggard [Ala.] 46 S 519. No evidence of wanton misconduct by defendant to one riding on engine. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912.

22. That ordinary diligence would render the danger apparent is insufficient since it constitutes simple negligence. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker [Kan.] 98 P 804.

23. Constructive knowledge. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker [Kan.] 98 P 804; Birmingham, S. R. Co. v. Kendrick [Ala.] 46 S 588. To constitute constructive knowledge, the probability of accident must be so great, its obviousness so insistent, that its happening is to be expected. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker [Kan.] 98 P 804.

24. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, [Kan.] 98 P 804.

25. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker [Kan.] 98 P 804. Where after discovery of peril it is impossible to avoid it, there is no wanton or subsequent negligence. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. Failure of motorman to stop car, if he can, after notice of plaintiff's peril, is wanton negligence. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. v. Carnahan [Miss.] 48 S 617.

26. Evidence held not to show wilful negligence of carrier causing injury to passenger. McLean v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 100, 61 SE 900; Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 24, 61 SE 1064. Held no evidence of willful misconduct leading to injury of one riding on engine without invitation. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912. Failure of motorman to stop car after notice of plaintiff's peril, provided he is able to do so is willful negligence. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. v. Carnahan [Miss.] 48 S 617. No evidence of willful misconduct. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Haggard [Ala.] 46 S 519.

27. There must be knowledge or a duty to know of the imminence of danger. Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Kendrick [Ala.] 46 S 588. Complaint held not to charge such knowledge or duty. Id.

32. Evidence held to show physician owed patient duty to remove her from operating room to lower floor after operation, and hence he was liable for negligent injury to her while she was being so moved. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa, 205, 115 NW 921. Independent contractor owes duty to occupants of building which he is repairing to adopt most approved expedients to protect them from injury. Eberson v. Continental Inv. Co., 130 Mo. App. 296, 109 SW 62. One employed by a contractor to do a certain portion of a work owes to the servants of the latter the duty to use reasonable care, in the operation of his work, not to injure them. Genovesia v. Pelham Operating Co., 114 NYS 646. Duty of city in construction and maintenance of streets discussed. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah, 65, 95 P 646. Where a plumber was sent to work in defendant's building, the latter owed him no duty to furnish him proper scaffolding to get his ladders, etc., to the place of work, and was not liable because he fell from loose planks put up by another workman for his own use. Hordern v. Salvation Army, 124 App. Div. 674, 109 NYS 131.

33. Held negligence: Employment of minor without requiring production of age and school certificate gives right of action for injury resulting from employment. Forer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588. Negligence per se. Burnett v. Ft. Worth L. & P. Co. [Tex.] 112 SW 1040. Violation of Pub. Acts 1901, p. 157, No. 113, as amended by Pub. Acts 1905, p. 239, No. 171, prohibiting employment of child under 14 in manufacturing establishments. Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438, 15 Det. Leg. N. 509, 116 NW 1107. Violation of Acts 1899, p. 231, c. 142 (Burn's Ann. St. 1918, § 8021) prohibiting employment of minors under 16 years of age for more than a certain number of hours per day and week, held negligence per se where injury resulted indirectly from such violation. Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak [Ind.] 87 NE 229. Violation of statute prohibiting railroad company from obstructing street. Houren v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 620, 86 NE 611. Violation of Kirby's Dig. § 5352, requiring mine operator to keep timber for props and deliver props when required, is negligence per se. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722. Failure of Union Station Ass'n to though this will not by implication abrogate correlative duties existing at common law.[35] Where a duty exists it cannot be delegated.[36] Ordinarily, negligence does not arise from a breach of contract,[37] but there are cases when it may.[38] While a custom [39] may not be a test of due care,[40] it may be sufficient to refute an inference.[41] Negligence cannot be based upon injuries arising from dangers incident to a lawful occupation,[42] mere errors of judgment,[43] the mere fact that the injury might have been avoided,[44] the failure to perform futile acts,[45] or knowledge of similar acciobey statutory requirements. Parker v. Union Station Ass'n [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 909, 118 NW 733. Sale of impure food in violation of Pure Food Law. Meshbesher v. Channellem Oil & Mfg. Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 428.

Held evidence of negligence: Violation of Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 477, c. 415) 370, prohibiting employment of minors under 14 years of age, is per se evidence of negligence. Koester v. Rochester Candy Works [N. Y.] 87 NE 77. Negligence being the gist of a civil action in such cases, the master cannot be held liable if he exercised due care in the premises. Id. Employment of child under 16 to work about dangerous machinery without certificate required by Laws 1907, p. 576, c. 408, prima facie evidence of negligence. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475. Employment in factory of child under 14 years of age in violation of Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 477, c. 415, § 70), is of itself sufficient to warrant recovery for injury results. Danaher v. American Mfg. Co., 126 App. Div. 385, 110 NYS 617. Automobilist's failure to sound horn or gong, as required by statute, held evidence for the jury on the issue of his negligence in frightening horse, thereby causing runaway. Shaffer v. Coleman, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 386. Fact that street car was running at an unlawful rate of speed at time of collision is sufficient to take the question of negligence to the jury. Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 451.

34. Held negligence: Violation of ordinance regulating speed of trains negligence as a matter of law. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sack, 136 Ill. App. 425; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Summers [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 211; Pittsburgh, etc., Co. v. Rogers [Ind. App.] 87 NE 28. Backing engine through city streets at speed in excess of that limited by ordinance and without warnings. Nichols v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808. Employment of unlicensed elevator operator negligence per se. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co. [Cal.] 93 P 1063.

Evidence of negligence: Evidence of negligence but not conclusive. Davis v. John L. Whiting & Son Co., 201 Mass. 91, 87 NE 199. Hence evidence in explanation of the unlawful conduct and tending to diminish its effect as evidence of negligence may be shown. Davis v. John L. Whiting & Son Co., 201 Mass. 91, 87 NE 199. Violation of ordinance limiting rate of speed of trains prima facie negligence. Guthenann Transfer Co. v. McGuire, 138 Ill. App. 162.

35. Statute requiring automobilists to stop upon signal does not relieve them from the duty of stopping without signal when the necessity therefor is apparent. Walkup v. Beebe [Iowa] 116 NW 321.

36. One cannot escape liability by devolving a duty upon an independent contractor. Press v. Penny [Mo. App.] 114 SW 74.

37. Glenn v. Hill, 210 Mo. 291, 109 SW 27. Landlord's breach of promise to repair. Glenn v. Hill, 210 Mo. 291, 109 SW 27. When defendant contracted to construct electric light plant for city in workmanlike, etc., manner, and one was killed because of defective insulation of wires and judgment therefor recovered against city, latter's action to recover amount thereof from contractor sounded in contract and not in tort for negligence. City of Owensboro v. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. [C. C. A.] 165 F 385.

38. University athletic association impliedly contracts that its stands are safe for occupancy of its patrons, except for defects not discoverable by reasonable means. It is not enough that stands were well built, of good material, and pronounced safe upon inspection. Scott v. University of Michigan Athletic Ass'n, 152 Mich. 684, 15 Det. Leg. N. 392, 116 NW 624.

39. As to the admissibility of a custom in evidence, see § 5, post.

40. The test of the exercise of reasonable care is what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in a like situation and not what has been the practice of others. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Moore [C. C. A.] 166 F 663. Practice of others as to conduct of similar business. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657.

41. Proof that the conduct of a defendant coincided with the customary method of doing the business employed by others under like circumstances excludes the inference of negligence. Bandekou v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 136 Wis. 341, 117 NW 812. Carrying a bucket attached to a car, but which extends out from the tracks no further than certain types of cars in common use, is not negligence. Id.

42. Persons engaged in a necessary and lawful work are not negligent on account of dangers or defective conditions caused thereby. Fitzgerald v. Degnon Cont. Co., 126 App. Div. 363, 110 NYS 857. Removal of flag in sidewalk to put cinders under it. Id.

43. Error of judgment not negligence. Wyman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 957.

44. The test is, rather, was there negligence in doing the particular thing which was done in view of the circumstances and conditions existing at the time. Carscallen v. Coeur D'Alene & St. Joe Transp. Co. [Idaho] 98 P 622. Applied to collision of vessels. Id. A discovery of peril raises only a duty of using the means then practicable to prevent the injury. Morgan v.

dents.[46] Among the matters unsuccessfully invoked to refute negligence are concurring acts of third parties,[47] contracts with third parties,[48] loss of life in an effort to prevent the injury,[49] ignorance of physical infirmities of the person injured,[50] and the fact that such infirmities increased the injury.[51] The standards of care raised by law, as already defined, is that of ordinary care, or the care of an ordinarily prudent person.[52] In the application of this standard, the circumstances [53] of each particular case, which may include the relation [54] and relative rights [55] of the parties, Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 978. Instructions held to impose too high a degree of care. Id.

45. When plaintiff knew of excavation, failure to place lights around it was not negligence. Slaughter v. Huntington [W. Va.] 61 SE 155. When plaintiff knew that train was approaching, failure to sound warnings was not negligence. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104; Stearns v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 21; Heise v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 371.

46. Hence fact that explosion of asphalt tank was so unusual as to be unknown to experienced men no defense, since due care might have been exercised in all other cases. Dulligan v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 201 Mass. 227, 87 NE 567.

47. See, also, § 8 post. The concurring act of another will not relieve defendant from liability for his negligence without which the injury would not have happened. Flanagan v. Wells Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 82, 86 NE 609. Failure of policemen to uncouple cars across street and thereby permit fire department to pass did not excuse railroad company's negligence, in obstructing street. Houren v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 620, 86 NE 611. Driver of automobile liable to passengers for colliding with street car when collision would not have occurred in absence of his negligence, though it might also have been avoided but for breaking of brake-rod on automobile owing to latent defect. Johnson v. Coey, 237 Ill. 88, 86 NE 678. Negligence of motorman would not defeat conductor's right to recover for negligence of wagon driver in colliding with car. Ford v. Hine Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 463, 86 NE 1051.

48. Municipality not excused for negligent maintenance of streets because traction company has agreed to keep them in proper condition. City of Chicago v. Kubler, 133 Ill. App. 520.

49. The fact that one loses his own life in accident is no proof that it was not caused by his negligence. Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821.

50. Fact that defendant was ignorant of pregnant condition of woman does not lessen his liability for negligently injuring her. Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 A 522.

51. One is liable for injuries negligently inflicted, though the result would have been less disastrous had the injured person been in good health at the time of the accident. Miehlke v. Nassau Elec. R. Co., 129 App. Div. 438, 114 NYS 90.

52. See § 1, ante, for authorities holding this to be the standard, and discussions as to its practical value.

53. Care required of street railways toward pedestrians. Liutz v. Denver City Tramway Co., 43 Colo. 58, 95 P 600. Care required of pedestrian crossing street car tracks such as a reasonably prudent man would have exercised. Evidence held to require submission of question of engineer's negligence in backing engine into cars thereby killing brakeman. Mahoning Ore & Steel Co. v. Blomfelt [C. C. A.] 163 F 827. Carrier not required to keep station platform free from snow and ice nor to sprinkle ashes, sawdust, etc., during storm. Strong v. Long Island R. Co., 129 App. Div. 361, 113 NYS 828. City's failure to prevent public from using bridge under its control which was insufficiently lighted and without switchman held to justify finding of negligence. City of Chicago v. Thomas, 141 Ill. App. 122. Care required of automobilists. Sapp v. Hunter [Mo. App.] 115 SW 463. In the absence of a law requiring it, vessel's failure to display a light is not negligence per se, but the necessity is a question of fact to be determined in view of the existing circumstances and conditions. Carscallen v. Coeur D'Alene & St. Joe Transp. Co. [Idaho] 98 P 622. Defendant's act in letting go of rope holding scaffold on which plaintiff was painting was not excused by belief that plaintiff called to him to let go, unless in the exercise of that belief he acted with the prudence which the situation demanded. Irregang v. Ott [Cal. App.] 99 P 528. Care required of one rightfully starting a fire is that which a reasonably prudent man would have exercised under the circumstances. Robinson v. Cowan [Ala.] 47 S 1018. Not required to anticipate arising of unusual wind. Id. Finding of negligence, in view of all the conditions and circumstances, not disturbed however. Robinson v. Cowan [Ala.] 47 S 1018.

Rate of speed of vehicle: Ordinance prescribing maximum rate of speed does not necessarily permit such speed to be maintained at all times and under all circumstances. Irwin v. Judge [Conn.] 71 A 572. The fact that one was driving slowly at the time of a collision may be some proof of due care while fast driving may of itself be negligence, both propositions being dependent upon time, place, and other circumstances. Armour & Co. v. Kollmeyer [C. C. A.] 161 F 78. A "high rate of speed" as an element of negligence is an unreasonable one, considering time and place and one which prevents the driver from exercising such control as will avoid collisions. Irwin v. Judge [Conn.] 71 A 572. Driving an automobile at a high rate of speed through city streets held negligence under the circumstances. Id.

54. Negligence of a bailee for destruction of, or injury to, the property bailed, is actionable both under the common and civil law. Sea Ins. Co. of Liverpool, Eng. v. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 676.

55. Due care may be dependent upon the right to do a thing, but such right cannot excuse the doing of a thing negligently.

the actions [56] and age [57] of the person injured, knowledge,[58] actual or constructive,[59] of the danger, or a duty to acquire it,[60] imminence of other dangers,[61] appreciation of the work,[62] and the duty to anticipate results,[63] must necessarily be considered, Riedel v. Wheeling Trac. Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 SE 821. Crossing tracks when danger was obvious. Id. Since pedestrians and street car companies both have a right to use public street, each must exercise ordinary care, one to avoid injury and the other to avoid inflicting injury. Luity v. Denver City Tramway Co., 43 Colo. 58, 95 P 600. Rights and duties of railroads and those crossing tracks on highways. Nichols, B. & O. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808; Riedel v. Wheeling Trac. Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 SE 821. Persons engaged in the construction of a building owe to each other the duty of working in such manner as not to negligently cause injury. Flanagan v. Wells Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 82, 86 NE 609. Third parties rightfully upon premises owes the duty of exercising reasonable care for the safety of the other. Servants of different contractors working on same building. Langan v. Enos Fire Escape Co., 233 Ill. 308, 84 NE 267.

56. Motorman not negligent though he might have been had not decedent signaled her intention of boarding. Luitz v. Denver City Tramway Co., 43 Colo. 58, 95 P 600.

57. The fact that children act upon childish instincts and impulses is an element to be considered in determining whether due care was exercised toward them. Force v. Standard Silk Co., 160 F 992.

58. Knowledge by defendant: When injury resulted by negligent blasting and defendant knew or should have known that plaintiff was working nearby, there was a violation by defendant of a duty he owed plaintiff constituting actionable negligence. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Salser [Ala.] 48 S 374. Those repairing sidewalks owe a duty to guard all defects occasioned thereby, since it is a matter of common knowledge that sidewalks will be used. Kampmann v. Rothwell [Tex.] 109 SW 1089. Owner's knowledge of animal's disease and negligence in manner of keeping it essential to liability for communication of disease. Eshleman v. Union Stockyards Co. [Pa.] 70 A 899. Railway company not liable in absence of knowledge of defect in tracks causing injury, and negligent failure to repair. Miller v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 69 A 636. In action against engineer by fellow-employe allegation that defendant suddenly and negligently stopped train thereby throwing plaintiff from caboose, subject to demurrer in absence of allegation of facts showing knowledge of plaintiff's position. Southern R. Co. v. Cash [Ga.] 62 SE 823.

Knowledge by plaintiff: Failure to signal approach of train of which plaintiff had knowledge not negligence. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104; Heise v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 371. Failure to place lights around excavation of which plaintiff had knowledge not negligence. Slaughter v. Huntington [W. Va.] 61 SE 155.

Seasonableness of knowledge: In order that defendant's knowledge of a defective condition may constitute an element of negligence, it must have existed for a sufficient length of time to have enabled defendant to remedy the defect. Gay v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & Light Co. [Wis.] 120 NW 283. Finding merely that defendant had, or ought to have had, knowledge not finding of negligence. Id. But insufficient time to make repairs is no defense when defective condition is created by defendant. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 NYS 676. Where temporary filling in break in asphalt pavement was put in under supervision of city inspector, city liable for injuries regardless of length of time in which to make repairs. Id.

59. The rule of constructive notice of structural defects which are patent has no application to a latent defect which defendant is justified in believing does not exist. Sack v. Ralston, 220 Pa. 216, 69 A 621. Not applicable where injury was caused by latent defect in bolt made and placed by experienced men and the elevator having been duly inspected and pronounced safe. Id. Whether such a length of time had elapsed since the construction of a wooden sewer as to impute notice of its defective condition to the city held for the jury. City council of Montgomery v. Comer [Ala.] 46 S 761. Knowledge of defects in appliances imputed to master because of lapse of time though caused by fellow-servant, and used intermittently. Kolodrianski v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 69 A 505.

60. Where injury was caused by explosion of asphalt tank, it was held that the jury might find that if defendant was compounding a substance at a considerable heat and was applying the chemical processes thereby set in motion to asphalt and petroleum product in the tank, it ought to have known that dangerous gases were liable to be generated and that due care required precautions to prevent their accumulation in dangerous quantities. Dulligan v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 201 Mass. 227, 87 NE 567. One who knew that a building had a plate glass front including the door was negligent in not ascertaining where the door was and in attempting an exit where there was no door, though he was somewhat blinded by the sun. Clardy v. Hudspeth [Ark.] 115 SW 1134. Whether injury resulted from defective condition of belt, which could not have been discovered by reasonable inspection, held for jury. Dittman v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 125 App. Div. 691, 110 NYS 87. False representations which the maker should have known to be false, though he in fact believed them true, when made for the purpose of inducing another to change his position, constitute actionable negligence. Cunningham v. Pease Home Furnishing Co., 74 N. H. 435, 69 A 120. Assurances of safety of stove polish to induce sale. Id.

61. Danger to one child near track not so imminent as a matter of law as to excuse motorman from seeing dangerous situation of another child. Davis v. Westmoreland County R. Co. [Pa.] 71 A 538.

NOTE: This element as a refutation of contributory negligence is treated in § 4, post.

62. Where the risk is abnormal and the master appreciates it while the servant does since ordinary care must be commensurate with the dangers [64] which its exercise is not, the former must use ordinary care to enable the latter to avoid injury. Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 A 525. In such case the question for the court is not whether it can be found, but whether it must be held that plaintiff appreciated the risk. Id.

63. When the facts disclose a situation, dangerous to life or limb, into which, from its very nature, it is practically certain every prudent man may be induced to enter, and it is practicable to remove such danger, a rule of law will be adopted which prevents injury rather than one which invites or even permits it. Cameron v. Lewiston, B. & B. St. R. Co., 103 Me. 482, 70 A 534. Whether an act is negligent depends upon whether, by the exercise of due care and foresight, the result was to be anticipated. Karcher v. Fiss, Doerr & Carroll Horse Co., 127 App. Div. 203, 111 NYS 54. Where ordinary prudence would suggest that the act or omission would probably result in injury, it is sufficient to support the charge of negligence. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa, 205, 115 NW 921. Where injury could reasonably have been anticipated as the natural or connected result of the negligence charged, it is sufficient to create liability therefor. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 133 Ill. App. 2. Employe throwing boards out of window should have anticipated that plaintiff would be underneath and his failure to look was negligence. Schmelzer v. Central Furniture Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1043. Street railway company maintaining pole close to tracks should have anticipated that person on running board of car would be struck thereby. Cameron v. Lewiston, B. & B. St. R. Co., 103 Me. 482, 70 A 534. Where master failed to warn young and inexperienced servant of danger of employing a certain method of work which other servants used and instructed him to follow, negligent though he did not anticipate injury. Godroe v. Dodge Clothespin Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1073. Consequences of an act need not be forseen; it is enough if the result is natural, though not necessary or inevitable. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa, 205, 115 NW 921. Leaving invalid's chair facing open elevator shaft, the chair being so constructed that it started very easily, was the natural and probable result of its moving forward into the shaft and injuring occupant. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa, 205, 115 NW 921. Negligence of physician in charge of patient though not with her when she was left alone by attendant held for jury. Id. Where defendant should have anticipated an accident, the fact that the precise manner of its occurrence was unforeseeable is immaterial. Holliday v. Duncan, 199 Mass. 121, 85 NE 186. It is not necessary that defendant should have contemplated the particular consequences of his act; it is sufficient if, by the exercise of reasonable care, he might have forseen that some injury would be likely to result. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. Running train at high rate of speed over newly-ballasted track held negligence, though fact that some one would be walking on track and be injured by derailment of train might not have been foreseeable. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. One must guard against the equal and likely consequences of his act. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 NE 9. Exceptions likely to occur must be anticipated, though due care does not ordinarily require one to base his conduct upon exceptions. Karcher v. Fiss, Doerr & Carroll Horse Co., 127 App. Div. 203, 111 NYS 54. Cutting horse with whip, when he was in such position that by kicking he struck bidders in the horse market, could be found to be negligence, though horse which will kick when struck was said to be an exception. Karcher v. Fiss, Doerr & Carroll Horse Co., 127 App. Div. 203, 111 NYS 54. Not bound to guard against slightly or remotely probable consequences. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 NE 9. Improbabilities need not be anticipated. Chicago City R. Co. v. Soszynski, 134 Ill. App. 149. Dangers not to be anticipated in operation of train. Chicago City R. Co. v. Soszynski, 134 Ill. App. 149. Instructions held applicable to evidence in this regard. Id. Held that injury from defect in highway could not have been reasonably anticipated by municipality. Town of Spencer v. Mayfield [Ind. App.] 85 NE 23. Where temporary filling in asphalt pavement was left unguarded during rain, fact that rain would wash it out should have been foreseen. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 NYS 676. Injury from board protruding from fence not in contemplation of defendant as a matter of law, when it turned over control of fence to subcontractor. Moret v. George Fuller Co., 195 Mass. 118, 80 NE 789. One assaulting another thereby frightening a third person whose presence is unknown to him is not guilty of negligence toward said person, since such a consequence could not have been anticipated. Reed v. Ford, 33 Ky. L. R. 1029, 112 SW 600. That a piece of rack falling from a car would cause plantiff to slip and fall was improbable. Cook v. U. S. Smelting Co., 34 Utah, 190, 97 P 28. Law does not require anticipation of unusual or extraordinary conduct, hence motorman not required to anticipate accident caused thereby. Wilson v. Chicago City R. Co., 133 Ill. App. 433. Fright and disability resulting from an act not probable or foreseeable result. Miller v. Baltimore, etc., Co., 78 Ohio St. 309, 85 NE 499.

required to overcome. It follows that exigent demands of human safety override mere property rights.[65]

It may be held that a certain act is not negligence per se,[66] since this goes only to the bare act itself and not to its quality as affected by the circumstances which may, or might, surround it; and the existence [67] or nonexistence [68] of negligence is

68. Held no negligence in operation of street car. Wilson v. Chicago R. Co., 133 Ill. App. 433. Motorman not negligent in failing to foresee that car wheel would slide upon track. Hebeler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 551, 112 SW 34. Rate of speed of street car held not to show negligence. Wilson v. Chicago R. Co., 133 Ill. App. 433. Evidence held to show that dispatcher was not negligent in sending out car in crippled often determined as a matter of law,[69] as distinguished from a finding of negligence per se,[70] but here the surrounding circumstances are always considered by the court and hence in neither case is there an exception to the rule that negligence depends upon the circumstances.[71]

Act of God and unavoidable accident.[See 10 C. L. 925]—There is, of course, no liability for an act of God[72] or an unavoidable accident[73] since the essential element of legal duty is wanting.[74] These elements do not afford immunity, however, unless they proximately cause[75] the injury sought to be redressed.[76] The primary question involved in this connection is whether a particular occurrence is in fact an act of God[77] or an unavoidable accident,[78] which calls for an application of the various definitions[79] of such elements to the facts of the case in hand. An unforeseeable condition and ordering another car to follow, the only negligence, if any, being the inspection of the crippled car. Welch v. Jackson & B. C. Trac. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 767, 117 NW 898. Failure to prevent railroad accident. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Berkowitz, 137 Ill. App. 95. Engineer not negligent in running down trespasser on track. Beach v. Southern R. Co., 148 N. C. 153, 61 SE 664. Evidence held to show no negligence on part of defendant in regard to injury caused by defective coupler. Southern R. Co. v. Moore, 108 Va. 388, 61 SE 747. Evidence held not to show negligence of motorcyclist in frightening horse. Long v. Warlick, 148 N. C. 32, 61 SE 617. Where automobilist run into rear of loaded truck in attempting to pass, there was no negligence on part of truck driver, even though truck was standing still and accident happened in the dark. Lorenz v. Tisdale, 127 App. Div. 433, 111 NYS 173. In action to recover for injuries sustained by child run over by automobile, evidence held to show due care of driver, the child having run in front of the machine when it was in full view on proper side of street, and driver having done his best to stop in time after seeing the danger. Jordan v. American Sightseeing Coach Co., 129 App. Div. 313, 113 NYS 786. No negligence in guarding excavation. Tagge v. Roslyn [Wash.] 98 P 668. Evidence held not to show negligence in instalation of gas lights. Torrans v. Texarkana Gas & Elec. Co. [Ark.] 115 SW 389. No negligence of telephone company where employe was injured by climbing rotten telephone pole, it being his duty to inspect pole before climbing it. Eigenbrod v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co., 121 La. 228, 46 S 219.

69. See post § 5, subd. Questions of law and fact.

70. There may be negligence as a matter of law as distinguished from negligence per se. Cotter v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 101. A failure to look, when looking would disclose the danger, is negligence and in such case, unless there is evidence of conditions or circumstances which would excuse looking, a jury is not warranted in finding that such failure to look did not constitute negligence. Id. Failure of motorman who had seen another car approaching his track to look again after starting his car, in absence of an excuse therefor, was negligence in fact, though not in law negligence per se. Id.

71. NOTE: That the violation of a rule of conduct prescribed by law is negligence regardless of surrounding circumstances discussed generally in § 1, and specifically in this section, ante, is ths only exception to such rule noted in this article. [Ed.]

72. Eagan v. Central Vt. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 732.

73. McFeat v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 69 A 744.

74. Cannot, therefore, be a case of negligence. Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 SE 385.

75. In this connection see § 3, post. As to when and where not proximate cause, see § 3, post.

76. Where negligence is proximate cause of injury, fact that act of God concurs therewith to produce result is no defense. City of Richmond v. Wood [Va.] 63 SE 449. If defective condition of culvert was proximate cause of damage, fact that injury would not have occurred but for extraordinary and unforeseeable flood, no defense. Id. Where a cover for growing plants was burned through the negligence of defendant, the resulting injury to the plants by cold and frost is not such an act of God as will relieve defendant from liability. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732.

77. Injury by coming in contact with electric wires during severe storm held due to an act of God, and not to negligence in maintaining uninsulated or unguarded wires. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Keys [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 767. Extraordinary flood which culvert was unable to carry away held act of God. Eagan v. Central Vt. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 732. Extraordinary flood known to occur every six or seven years is not an act of God. Kuhnis v. Lewis River Boom & Logging Co. [Wash.] 98 P 655.

78. A pure accident comes under the head of unavoidable accidents. McFeat v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 69 A 744. Where stick of wood thrown from car rebounds and strikes a man sitting on the car, the injury is a pure accident. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. v. Benton [Ark.] 110 SW 1037. Servant's injuries held attributable to a pure accident. Jones v. Pioneer Cooperage Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 94. Breaking of bridge because of undiscoverable defect, an inevitable accident. Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 SE 385.

79. Act of God: Any accident due directly and exclusively to a neutral cause without human intervention, which by no human foresight, pains or care reasonably to have been expected, could have been prevented, is injury is ordinarily in the category of unavoidable accidents [80] for which there is no liability,[81] though the fact that the particular occurrence of the injury was unforeseeable will not render it such.[82] Unusual operations of the forces of nature known to occur with more or less regularity are not acts of God [83] and require the exercise of due care to guard against injury likely to be caused thereby,[84] but an occurrence may be an act of God though it is not the first of its nature within the memory of a generation.[85]

Joint and several liability. See 10 C. L. 926—Joint negligence gives rise to a joint and several liability [86] though, if all are severally sued, the actions will usually be consolidated,[87] and the several liability of a tort feasor is not affected by the fact that the negligence of another concurred.[88] The liability must rest on breach of duty [89] but the authorities are in conflict as to whether a joint duty is prerequisite to a joint liability.[90] caused by an "act of God." Briggs v. Durham Trac. Co., 147 N. C. 389, 61 SE 373. For numerous definitions of "Act of God" see Kuhnis v. Lewis River Boom & Logging Co. [Wash.] 98 P 655.

Inevitable accident: Accident is inevitable if the person by whom it occurs neither has, nor is legally bound to have, sufficient power to avoid it, or prevent its injuring another. Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Sterrett, 108 Va. 533, 62 SE 385.

80. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Barwick [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 953.

81. No liability arises from an accident which defendant could not have foreseen and for which he was not responsible. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. DeLaney, 133 Ill. App. 135. Fall of loose rock which was not due to negligence not to be anticipated. Id.

82. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Barwick [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 953.

83. Extraordinary flood known to occur every six or seven years. Kuhnis v. Lewis River Boom & Logging Co. [Wash.] 98 P 655.

84. Protection against an ordinary flood which occurs every year is not an exercise of due care to protect against an extraordinary flood known to occur every six or seven years, since the latter is not an act of God. Kuhnis v. Lewis River Boom & Logging Co. [Wash.] 98 P 655.

85. Fact, that as large a flood had occurred thirty years before and that original culvert carried that away, did not take the occurrence out of the category of acts of God nor create liability. Eagan v. Central Vt. R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 732.

86. Fulwider v. Trenton Gas. L. & P. Co. [Mo.] 116 SW 508. Declaration is not demurrable as to one because it alleges the negligence of the other. Tetreault v. Smedley Co. [Conn.] 71 A 786. Motorman and driver of ice wagon jointly liable to man on rear of ice wagon for injuries sustained in collision. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Sine, 33 Ky. L. R. 792, 111 SW 356.

87. When the duty broken is joint, the liability for resulting injuries is joint, and separate actions against the joint tort-feasors are properly consolidated. Martin v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 148 N. C. 259, 61 SE 625. Collision between train and street car, resulting from failure to establish rules regarding crossings. Id.

88. Byerly v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co., 130 Mo. App. 593, 109 SW 1065; Goldstein v. Tunick, 59 Misc. 516, 110 NYS 905. Obstruction of street not excused by failure of city to remove it. Smith v. Preston [Me.] 71 A 653. Abutting owner, who by erection of structure on his land causes obstruction of street by discharge of water thereon, is guilty of negligence. Id. Where the negligence of a bailee and a third person concur to destroy the bailed property, the bailor may sue either or both. Neither can interpose the negligence of the other as a defense. Sea Ins. Co. of Liverpool v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 676.

89. But one, having no control over, or interest in, the act or omission constituting the negligence complained of, is not liable therefor. Independent contractor not liable for injuries caused by railway company while engaged in a work independent of that of the contractor. Gurdon & Ft. Smith R. Co. v. Calhoun [Ark.] 109 SW 1017. Landlord and not tenant liable for obstruction of street caused by defect of building over which former had control. Smith v. Preston [Me.] 71 A 653.

90. While several may be guilty of several distinct negligent acts, yet, if their concurrent effect is to produce an actionable injury, they are all liable therefor, the action being not to recover for the act or acts but to recover damages for the injury which they produce. Clinger's Adm'x v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 83 Ky. L. R. 86, 109 SW 315. Where the negligence of two parties produces a single and indivisible injury, they are joint tort-feasors though acting independently of each other. Walton v. Miller's Adm'x [Va.] 63 SE 458. In order to render persons jointly liable for a tort, it must appear in some way that it was the result of their joint action or joint neglect of duty. A brewing company which merely held the city license for running a saloon which is owned and conducted wholly by another is not liable for injuries caused by a trick stairway therein. Mead v. Ph. Zang Brew. Co., 43 Colo. 1, 95 P 284. No joint liability between logging company and railway hauling its logs for injury to latter's brakeman, caused by log falling from car. Stephens v. Louisiana Long Leaf Lumber Co. [La.] 47 S 887.

(§ 2) B. Use of property in general.[91]—See 10 C. L. 926—The owner[92] of property owes to all persons rightfully thereon[93] the duty of using reasonable care[94] to keep the premises in reasonably safe condition[95] and to obviate known defects[96] within a reasonable time,[97] and a like duty is owed as to instrumentalities and appliances furnished for the use of others.[98]

*Dangerous machinery and substances.*See 10 C. L. 927—In the use of inherently dangerous articles, care commensurate with their dangerous character must be exercised,[99] and one is bound to anticipate perils resulting therefrom.[1] A vendor of dangerous articles who gives a false assurance of safety[2] or fails to give proper warn-

94. Owner not bound at his peril to see that sign in front of building was safe. McNulty v. Ludwig & Co., 125 App. Div. 291, 109 NYS 703.

95. Defendant held negligent toward contractor, on premises to supervise work, in failing to give warning that a tank, normally covered, was at the time uncovered when plaintiff had reason to believe it covered and defendant knew that it was not. Ward v. Hill, 125 App. Div. 587, 110 NYS 106. Negligence cannot be predicated upon the mere leaving of a horse unattended for the time being on the street, while it is eating. Corcoran v. Kelly, 61 Misc. 323, 113 NYS 686.

96. Knowledge of vicious propensity of horse necessary to a recovery for a bite. Corcoran v. Kelly, 61 Misc. 323, 113 NYS 686. Defendant's knowledge is not essential, where a duty exists to keep in a safe condition. Knowledge of telephone company of proximity of lighting company's wires to its poles unnecessary, it being the former's duty to see that wires were a safe distance from poles. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599. Knowledge of an immaterial element of the defect causing the injury is not essential. Sag of lighting wires which was not shown to materially increase the danger. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599.

97. The owner of property is entitled to a reasonable time to remedy defects after notice thereof. Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032.

98. A person undertaking to furnish appliances for the use of others assumes the duty to furnish reasonably safe ones and is liable for negligence in that regard resulting in injury, regardless of any contract relation between the parties. Dougherty v. Weeks, 126 App. Div. 786, 111 NYS 218. Yet to hold one guilty of negligence in not discovering and remedying a common defect in a simple appliance of good material and well constructed, it must appear that such defect had existed for so long that defendant ought to have known of it, and therefore was as responsible, as, knowing the defect, he had failed to remedy it. Loose rung in ladder insufficient proof of negligence. Id.

99. Eagle Hose Co. v. Electric Light Co., 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 581. Electric companies must use every care to properly insulate and maintain wires. Von Trebra v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 209 Mo. 648, 108 SW 559. Required of electric companies in using streets. Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032; Byerly v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co., 130 Mo. App. 593, 109 SW 1065. Evidence of negligence in failing to test electric wires after storm sufficient to entitle plaintiff to go to jury. Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032. Evidence sufficient to show negligence in maintaining uninsulated wire. Luehrmann v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 127 Mo. App. 213, 104 SW 1128. Highest degree of care required of electric light companies toward persons lawfully near wires. Weir v. Haverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 661, 70 A 874. An electric company using poles in common with a telegraph company is not required to give notice to anyone working on the poles that it is using a strong current, or is about to do so. South Shore Gas & Elec. Co. v. Ambre [Ind. App.] 87 NE 246. Electric lighting company using public streets is required to exercise highest degree of care and employ the best appliances known to science for the protection of the public, though it is not an insurer. Held liable for injury to one rightfully on streets caused by shock from contract with guy wire heavily charged with electricity. Shawnee L. & P. Co. v. Sears [Okl.] 95 P 449. Electric companies held to highest degree of care. Younie v. Blackfoot Light & Water Co. [Idaho] 96 P 193.

1. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599. Owner held bound to anticipate danger incident to use of machinery. Standard Steel Car Co. v. McGuire [C. C. A.] 161 F 527. The rule, that those operating dangerous instrumentalities must guard against such dangers as could or ought reasonably to be apprehended by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, has no application to third parties having nothing to do with such operation. Elevators. Anderson v. Pelham Hod Elevating Co., 113 NYS 989.

2. One selling dangerous substances with assurances of safety is liable for resulting injuries to third persons, where liability ings [8] is liable even to one to whom he sustains no contract relation; [4] a fortiori if the danger results from a known violation of law.[5]

Liability of manufacturers. See 10 C. L. 928—A manufacturer, selling a defective article, is liable for resulting injuries [6] but not for injuries resulting from its being allowed to fall into disrepair by the user.[7]

(§ 2) C. Use of lands, buildings and other structures.[8]—See 10 C. L. 930—While negligence cannot be predicated on the lawful and ordinary use by one of his own premises,[9] he must so use his own property as not to wrongfully injure that of others,[10] and must use reasonable care [11] to render his premises reasonably safe [12] would exist had the injuries been to the purchaser. One not the purchaser allowed to recover for injuries caused by explosive stove blacking. Cunningham v. Pease House Furnishing Co., 74 N. H. 435, 69 A 120.

3. If one sells a dangerous article to a child whom he knows to be, by reason of his use and inexperience, unfit to be trusted with it and who probably might innocently and ignorantly play with it to his own injury, and injury does in fact result, he is liable in damages therefor. Negligence of storekeeper in selling small quantity of gunpowder to boy of twelve years held for jury. McEldon v. Drew, 138 Iowa, 390, 116 NW 147.

4. A vendor of inherently dangerous articles may be liable to one injured thereby though there is no contract relation between. Explosion of siphon bottles of aerated water. Torgesen v. Schultz, 192 N. Y. 156, 84 NE 956. A wholesaler is liable for injury sustained by a customer of its vendee by the use of an article sold as coal in the starting of a fire, where the wholesaler, knowing that such article contained gasoline, sold it in violation of statute and where neither the retailer nor customer knew of the presence of gasoline, and the use of coal oil to start fires was customary. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 53 Law Ed.—.

5. Sale by company to retailer of coal oil, containing gasoline, as pure coal oil in violation of statute and with knowledge of the facts, held proximate cause of injury resulting from explosion caused by use of such article to start fire, since such consequence should have been expected. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 53 Law Ed.—.

6. Standard on threshing machine fastened merely by nails driven through from the bottom and not clinched. Pierce v. Bidwell Thresher Co., 153 Mich. 323, 15 Det. Leg. N. 477, 116 NW 1104. Whether such construction was such as to make machine imminently dangerous properly submitted to jury. Id. Whether defendant knew of or appreciated the dangerous character of the machine held properly submitted to the jury under the evidence. Id. A manufacturer, who so negligently constructs an article for market that it is imminently dangerous to life and limb, is liable for injuries resulting from its use for the purpose to which it is adapted regardless of any contract relation with the person injured or fraud or deceit in its sale. Steam boiler. Statler v. Ray Mfg. Co., 109 NYS 172.

7. A manufacturer of machinery who leases it is not liable for injuries to a servant of the lessee, caused by having fallen into disrepair while in the lessee's possession, and the fact that the manufacturer voluntarily and without consideration agrees to keep the machinery in repair does not alter the rule. McClaren v. United Shoe Mach. Co. [C. C. A.] 166 F 712. For an elaborate exposition on this question, see Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 202, 25 Law Ed. 621, et seq. and note to Standard Oil Co. v. Murray, 57 C. C. A. 1, 119 F 572.

9. An owner is not bound to keep his premises attractive for the delectation of his neighbor, nor is he compelled to refrain from making them unattractive lest he might offend his neighbor's asthetic senses. So long as his use of the premises does not interfere with the use by others of their premises, there is no actionable damage. Heilbron v St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 610. Whether maintenance of exhaust pipe near highway was negligence held for jury. Ft. Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 170 Ind. 585, 84 NE 145. Owner may build on hillside and so arrange entrances as to meet the varying grade. Hoyt v. Woodbury, 200 Mass. 343, 86 NE 772. One may burn brush or rubbish on his own land if he exercise that prudence in starting the fire and in the management of it after it is started which the rules of ordinary care demand. Evidence sufficient to go to the jury on the issue of negligence in starting fire and in its management thereafter. Miller v. Neale, 137 Wis. 426, 119 NW 94. One has a right to build a fire on his own premises and is liable only for failure to exercise ordinary care in starting it to prevent its spreading to other premises. Evidence held not to show negligence. Pfeiffer v. Aue [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 300. Where a road located on a railroad's right of way is not a public highway, the railroad may destroy it for its own purposes if it acts in a lawful manner in so doing. Heilbron v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 610.

10. Charlie's Transfer Co. v. Malone [Ala.] 48 S 705.

11. For jury. Schneider v. Schmidt [N. J. Eq.] 70 A 731; Huff v. Wells Fargo & Co., 141 Ill. App. 434. An owner's duty to one upon his premises on business and by invitation is to exercise reasonable prudence and care to protect him from unreasonable and unnecessary danger. Miller v. Twiname, 114 NYS for persons thereon by express or implied invitation,[13] and to warn such persons of hidden or latent perils.[14] The liability of the owner must be based on actual 151; Ft. Worth & R. C. R. Co. v. Eddleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 425. The standard of care in the use of property is that which an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the circumstances. Fowle v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 174 N. C. 491, 61 SE 262. When plaintiff was on defendant's premises on business and ran into highway to escape danger from a blast of rock on said premises, where he was struck by flying stone, complaint was held to state cause of action for negligence in use of premises rather than one in trespass for injury to a traveler along highway, and hence evidence as to the care exercised for plaintiff's safety was admissible. Id.

12. Smith v. Delaware River Amusement Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 970. The mere maintenance of a defective structure is not necessarily negligence if constructed by competent person, of good material, and not negligently permitted to become defective. Fowle v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 147 N. C. 491, 61 SE 262. Applied to customer in store injured by falling down unguarded cellarway of which he had no knowledge, where owner was standing by and had notice of plaintiff's presence. Montague v. Hanson [Mont.] 99 P 1063. The use of an open and unguarded cellarway in a store for business purposes is not negligence per se, though it might be considered a trap, but requires the exercise of ordinary care to prevent customers being injured thereby. Montague v. Hanson [Mont.] 99 P 1063. Refusal of instruction that maintenance of such stairway was not negligence per se, while it might properly have been given, was not error where jury was instructed that only ordinary care was required to prevent injury therefrom. Id. Held negligent in construction of staging over machinery. Vaisbord v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 74 N. H. 470, 69 A 520. When plumber sent to work in defendant's building fell from planks, put up by another workman for his own use, while using them to get his ladders, etc., to place of work, no negligence on defendant's part was shown, plaintiff neither being invited nor obliged to use such planks. Hordern v. Salvation Army, 124 App. Div. 674, 109 NYS 131. Facts held not to constitute negligence, negligence alleged being misplacement of steps. Stevenson v. Smith Cont. Co., 220 Pa. 220, 69 A 676. Customer injured by inequality in passageway of department store. Bloomer v. Snellenburg, 221 Pa. 25, 69 A 1124. Customer injured by falling down hatchway which she took for entrance to department store. Ayers v. Wanamaker, 220 Pa. 313, 69 A 759. An owner who builds a stone foundation on his land and thereafter employs one to erect a brick wall thereon is liable for injuries occasioned to the latter by reason of defects in foundation. Hagen v. Lehtenter, 236 Ill. 467, 86 NE 112. Defendant liable for defects in yards of which it ought to have known, when plaintiff was injured thereon while in the pursuit of the business for which the yards were maintained. Perrine v. Union Stockyards Co. of Omaha [Neb.] 116 NW 776. Owner of a swimming pool who invites the public thereto must make reasonable provision to guard against those accidents which common knowledge and experience teach are liable to occur. Decatur Amusement Park Co. v. Porter, 137 Ill. App. 448. Owner of amusement park held negligent in permitting ball to be played in an unusual place by guests at park, the usual grounds being occupied, guests having a right to assume that dangerous sports will be confined to places set apart for them. Blakeley v. White Star Line [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 835, 118 NW 482. Duty to keep sufficient number of watchmen or guards to protect guests at amusement parks. Id. Liable for injury to guest at amusement park caused by being hit by ball thrown by another guest. Id. Owner of shop liable to customer for injuries sustained by tripping over a large spike projecting from stair landing. Roth v. G. A. Feld Co., 59 Misc. 214, 110 NYS 427. Contractor operating car tracks along streets not free from negligence as matter of law where it left cars on crossing with no one there in charge to give warning. Batchelor v. Degnon Realty & Terminal Imp. Co., 115 NYS 93. It is negligence to maintain a guy wire from a telephone pole to the ground twenty-five feet distant from the pole and across the line of travel from a street to a railroad station without anything to warn or protect travelers from running into it. Grant v. Sunset Tel. & Trac. Co., 7 Cal. App. 267, 94 P 368. Violation of mine owner of duty imposed by St. 1903, § 2731, to guard mouth of shafts with safety gates, is negligence. Moseley's Adm'r v. Black Diamond Coal & Min. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 110, 109 SW 306. Leaving gate to pen in stockyards open in close proximity to passing trains held negligence. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. Where plaintiff drove on premises to unload at invitation of owner and was directed to unload at an unsafe place by defendant's servant who had knowledge of the danger, the owner was liable for resulting injury. Hobart Lee Tie Co. v. Keck [Ark.] 116 SW 183. Finding that owner of building in state of repair was not negligent because a workman stumbled against a cornice and caused it to fall upon a pedestrian below held warranted. Chute v. Moeser, 77 Kan. 706, 95 P 398. Not duty of owners as a matter of law to anticipate that a workman would stumble against a green cornice and cause it to fall to sidewalk. Id. An owner maintaining an awning over a sidewalk is bound to exercise ordinary care to have it so secured as to withstand such storms as are likely to occur. McCrorey v. Thomas [Va.] 63 SE 1011. Contractor is liable for injury caused by falling of awning before completion of work of putting it up, while owner is liable thereafter. Id.

14. Operators of a "scenic railway" not negligent in failing to warn passenger to hang on where she knew of the danger and rode for the purpose of enjoying the sensations caused thereby, and the accident was caused by the usual jerks and swaying of the car in making the trip. Lumsden v. Thompson Scenic R. Co., 114 NYS 421. Defendant held negligent in not warning employe of or imputed notice of the danger,[15] and negligence of a third party in the use of property is not to be imputed to the owner merely because of ownership.[16] An owner is not responsible for the acts of independent contractors, unless he is guilty of some active negligence.[17]

Liability to trespassers and licensees. See 10 C. L. 931—The only duty owed to trespassers and bare licensees [18] is to refrain from wanton injury to them,[19] and ac-dangers in stepping on pile of seed covering moving machinery. Brinkman v. St. Landry Cotton Oil Co., 118 La. 835, 43 S 458. Failure to warn employe of defective staging over her machine. Vaisbord v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 74 N. H. 470, 69 A 520.

15. Fact that owner of premises has no knowledge of defects is no defense if, in the exercise of ordinary care, he ought to have had such knowledge. Roth v. G. A. Feld Co., 59 Misc. 214, 110 NYS 427. Knowledge of defective construction of staging imputed from lapse of time and held to amount to a ratification. Vaisbord v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 74 N. H. 470, 69 A 520.

16. Owner not liable for acts of driver outside of scope of employment in instructions. Danforth v. Fisher [N. H.] 71 A 535. One cannot be charged with liability for defects in premises over which he has neither possession nor control. Complaint insufficient to show possession or control by defendant. Martin v. Louisville & J. Bridge Co., 41 Ind. App. 493, 84 NE 360.

17. No inference of such negligence could be drawn from the evidence. Silverman v. Binder, 115 NYS 54.

18. Where one enters upon the premises of another with his consent, but without an invitation, he is a bare licensee. Shults v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 119 NW 463. One using an apparently public alley as a highway is not a trespasser because he steps over the technical boundary. Everett v. Foley, 132 Ill. App. 438. Though one is "lawfully" upon premises, he may still be a mere licensee. Stern v. Miller, 111 NYS 659. Evidence held to show that child on railroad track was a trespasser. Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 97 P 689. It being a misdemeanor for a drunken man to take charge of a locomotive, one upon premises in such condition and for such purpose is not there as an employe but as a trespasser. Seaboard Air Line R. v. Chapman, 4 Ga. App. 706, 52 SE 488. One entering private alleyway held trespasser. Briscoe v. Henderson L. & P. Co., 148 N. C. 396, 62 SE 600. One who boarded locomotive in violation of rules was trespasser. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912. One walking beside street car tracks in street is not a trespasser, since company has no exclusive right to portion of street occupied by its tracks. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Williams [Ala.] 48 S 93. Child carried onto premises by mother to carry lunch to father who was in charge was without free agency and not a trespasser. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289. When a child is carried on to premises by its mother and then left to wander about alone with the knowledge of the owner, the rule relative to the care required toward incapacitated persons received on premises accompanied by an attendant does not apply. Id. Evidence held to show plaintiff a bare licensee though on premises by permission. Jacobs v. Michel, 137 Ill. App. 221. A policeman who accompanies one going upon the premises of another on business, he himself having no business with the owner, but being present merely to afford protection from strikers, yet being under no duty to enter the owner's buildings, is a mere licensee in so doing, there being no invitation from the owner. Casey v. Adams, 137 Ill. App. 404. One following railroad track as a path used by public with company's acquiescence was there by sufferance merely and not by implied invitation. Holmes v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 112 NYS 421.

19. Bowler v. Pacific Mills, 200 Mass. 364, 86 NE 767; Minneapolis General Elec. Co. v. Cronon [C. C. A.] 166 F 651; Shults v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 119 NW 463; Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P 689; Holmes v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 112 NYS 421; Casey v. Adams, 137 Ill. App. 404; Briscoe v. Henderson L. & P. Co., 148 N. C. 396, 62 SE 600; Muse v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 102; Montague v. Hanson [Mont.] 99 P 1063; Chaves v. Torlina [N. M.] 99 P 690; Southern R. Co. v. Fisk [C. C. A.] 159 F 373; Derrickson's Adm'r v. Swann-Day Lumber Co. [Ky.] 115 SW 191. The only duty a railroad company owes a trespasser is to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him after discovering his peril. Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 442. After one discovers another's peril it is his duty to use every means in his power to avoid injury to him. Applied to trainmen seeing person on track. Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 154; Tatarewicz v. United Trac. Co., 220 Pa. 560, 69 A 995; Ling v. Great Northern R. Co., 165 F 813; Southern R. Co. v. Forrister [Ala.] 48 S 69. Discovery of peril alone is not sufficient to fix liability upon defendant; there must also exist the present ability to avoid injury. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Cushman [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 198. When insane father held two small children on track in front of approaching train, engineer was not negligent in failing to anticipate that they would not move in time to avoid injury. Parnham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 154. Evidence held to show that defendant did not know of peril of volunteer on freight train. Derrickson's Adm'r v. Swann-Day Lumber Co. [Ky.] 115 SW 191. A railroad company owes to men, permissive licensees crossing its tracks at place other than public crossings, only the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring them after becoming aware of their peril, and is not required to give the statutory warning of train's approach to crossing. Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Kendrick [Ala.] 46 S 588. Railway company under no duty to keep active lookout for trespassing children. Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P 689. Where one on cordingly no negligence,[20] even though gross [21] or involving violation of statute,[22] will warrant recovery, there being ordinarily no distinction in this respect between trespassers and bare licensees,[23] though in some cases a distinction is made based on the probability of the presence of such persons and the resultant duty to anticipate it.[24] Where, however, one enters not by sufferance but upon invitation, ex-railroad track merely by sufferance was injured by explosion of torpedo used for train signal, company was not liable. Holmes v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 112 NYS 421.

20. Without legal duty there cannot be actionable negligence; hence the rule relative to trespassers. Swartwood's Guardian v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 785, 111 SW 305; Louthian v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 665; Berry v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27; Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Godfrey [Ala.] 47 S 185; Mahoney v. Murtfeldt Co., 198 Mass. 471, 84 NE 798; Ling v. Great Northern R. Co., 165 F 813; Breach v. Southern R. Co., 148 N. C. 153, 61 SE 664. Railway company not liable for death caused by trespasser riding on engine unless willfully or wantonly negligent. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co. [N. C.] 62 SE 912. One standing in highway and shooting into private premises is a technical trespasser thereon and cannot recover for injuries from unlawfully stored dynamite exploded by the shot. McGehee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 147 N. C. 142, 60 SE 912. While, as a rule, a party will not be deemed to anticipate the commission of a willful wrong, yet, when under the circumstances a technical trespass may reasonably be anticipated, he will be liable for a failure to take reasonable precautions to prevent injury to such trespassers. Held that one storing dynamite in shanty on his premises could not reasonably have anticipated that another would stand in highway and shoot into shanty, thereby causing explosion. Id. A mill hand's child who fell into a trench under a path from mill to tenement houses for employes held a trespasser. Davis v. Joslin Mfg. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 65. The absence of intentional injury no liability except for active intervention. Hobbs v. Blanchard & Sons Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1082. A person injured, although an infant, by falling down an elevator shaft in a wholesale grocery, which was left unguarded, in order to recover must show that the owner of the premises was under obligation to protect him from the injury (Faurot v. Oklahoma Wholesale Grocery Co. [Okl.] 95 P 463), and the owner of such premises is liable for an injury occurring therein through his negligence only when the injured person comes upon them by invitation, express or implied, of the owner (Id.). Child going upon premises in behalf of a third person without knowledge or consent of owner is not invited, though his visit partakes of a business nature. Faurot v. Oklahoma Wholesale Grocery Co. [Okl.] 95 P 463. Rule applicable to servant of independent contractor who fell into excavation existing at the time of entrance upon premises. Breen v. Gill, 125 App. Div. 642, 110 NYS 64. Dangerous work in plain sight is notice to a licensee. Id. Degree of care required and liability under various conditions and relations of the parties, which might have existed, discussed. Id. Policeman accompanying expressman to afford protection from strikers, the expressman being ordered by defendant's tenant, was a mere trespasser or licensee in entering defendant's building. Casey v. Adams, 234 Ill. 350, 84 NE 933.

21. Instruction that trespasser might recover for gross negligence erroneous, since liability to a trespasser is based on injuries wantonly, as distinguished from negligently, inflicted. Southern R. Co. v. Fisk [C. C. A.] 159 F 373.

22. A trespasser acquires no greater right from negligence arising from the breach of a statute or ordinance than from common-law negligence. Burnett v. Ft. Worth L. & P. Co. [Tex.] 112 SW 1040.

23. A bare licensee is only relieved from the liability for being a trespasser, and takes upon himself all ordinary risks attached to the premises and the business carried on there. Harlow's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 108 Va. 691, 62 SE 941; Joseph v. Philip Henrici Co., 137 Ill. App. 171; Burden v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 867; Chares v. Torlina [N. M.] 99 P 690; Eckels v. Maher, 137 Ill. App. 45. One upon premises "not with a view of transacting any business with the owner is a mere licensee and the owner owes him no higher duty to protect him from injury than he would if he were a trespasser;" but, on the other hand, "the duty of the owner to one who comes there by the owner's invitation to transact business in which the parties are mutually interested is to exercise reasonable care for his safety while on that portion of the premises required for the purpose of the visit," and "under such circumstances the party is said to be upon the premises by implied invitation of the owner." Huff v. Wells Fargo & Co., 141 Ill. App. 434, quoting from and following Pauckner v. Wakem, 231 Ill. 276, 83 NE 202. Where the owner of premises laid out a street thereon for use in connection with its business, and posted notices that it was a private way, its use by the public was permissive only, it being impracticable to entirely exclude them. Bowler v. Pacific Mills, 200 Mass. 364, 86 NE 767.

24. Where people are constantly entering on railroad track with acquiescence of company, latter is liable for failure to reasonably lookout, if by so doing injury could have been avoided, especially where injury is caused by backing train. Florida R. Co. v. Stuckey [Fla.] 48 S 34; Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 442; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wall [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 453; Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Evidence as to customary use of stockyards by shippers admissible where shipper was injured while caring for his stock located in stockyards. Franey v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co., 235 Ill. 522, 85 NE 750, afg. 138 Ill. App. 215.

25. The rule that one entering premises by invitation may assume that they are reasonably safe does not apply to one entering without knowledge of such invitation. Such person is negligent in assuming the safety of conditions of which he is ignorant, especially at night. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Godfrey [Ala.] 47 S 185. The term "invitation" within the rule that the owner of the property who has held out any invitation, allurement or inducement for others to come upon the property, must keep his premises in a safe condition, imports that the person injured did not act merely for his own convenience and pleasure and from motives from which no act or design of the owner contributed, but that he entered the premises because he was led to believe that they were intended to be used by visitors and that such use was not only acquiesced in by the owner, but that it was in accordance with the intention and design with which the place was adapted, prepared to be so used. Id. Open door of elevator may be an invitation to enter, and therefore operate to throw plaintiff off his guard. Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Carr, 85 Ark. 479, 108 SW 1053. Contra. Kaplan v. Lyons Building & Operating Co., 61 Misc. 315, 113 NYS 516. Open gates at railroad crossing implied invitation to traveler of highway to enter upon crossing. Delaware & H. Co. v. Larnard [C. C. A.] 161 F 520. Boy riding on top of elevator with knowledge and implied consent of operator is not a trespasser, and hence ordinary care must be exercised for his safety. Davis Adm'r v. Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Co., 32 Ky. L. R. 627, 106 SW 843. One assisting train crew with their knowledge and consent held volunteer and not a trespasser. Clarke v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 797, 111 SW 344. A mere passive acquiescence by the owner in the use of his premises by others involves no liability. Alabama & G. S. R. Co. v. Godfrey [Ala.] 47 S 185; Briscoe v. Henderson L. & P. Co., 148 N. C. 396, 62 SE 600; Harlow's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 108 Va. 691, 62 SE 941; Muse v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 102; Curtis v. Southern R. Co., 130 Ga. 675, 61 SE 539. But if he directly, or by implication, induces persons to enter his premises, he thereby assumes an obligation that they are in a safe condition. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Godfrey [Ala.] 47 S 185. Where customer of meat market was struck by refrigerator door, evidence held to warrant finding of negligence, regardless of testimony that customer was warned. McDermott v. Sallaway, 198 Mass. 517, 85 NE 422. A subcontractor working on a building is there as a matter of right by invitation and is neither a trespasser nor a licensee. Dougherty v. Weeks, 126 App. Div. 786, 111 NYS 218.

26. Ferguson & Palmer Co. v. Ferguson's Adm'r [Ky.] 114 SW 297; Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289; Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057; Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557; Delaware & H. Co. v. Larnard [C. C. A.] 161 F 520. The owner or occupant of land is liable to those entering thereon, with due care, at his invitation or inducement, express or implied, on any business to be transacted or permitted by him for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land or access thereto which is known to him and not to them and which he has negligently suffered to exist and given them no notice of. Union Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Franey, 138 Ill. App. 215. Where premises are used for the storage of live stock for hire, one thereon caring for his stock is not a mere licensee but is deemed to be there at the invitation of the owner. Id. When tenant walked through open door of elevator and fell down shaft because the elevator had been moved to the top, landlord was held negligent, though one who had moved the elevator was not at the time in defendant's employ. Fact that door was open and that elevator boy stood by as usual when elevator was in readiness for passengers was such an implied invitation to enter that defendant became an insurer against accident. Jolliffe v. Miller, 126 App. Div. 763, 111 NYS 406. Owner liable for injuries caused by stepping into hole in floor of building into which plaintiff was impliedly invited. Stern v. Miller, 111 NYS 659. Hole in floor held a defect in the nature of a snare which a person invited had the right to assume did not exist. Id. Servant of independent contractor held to be on premises by express permission of owner and not to be a trespasser. Standard Steel Car Co. v. McGuire [C. C. A.] 161 F 527.

27. Where plaintiff was invited to load wood at a certain place, he could not recover for injury received while loading at another. Ferguson & Palmer Co. v. Ferguson's Adm'r [Ky.] 114 SW 297. Workman leaving building through an exit which he had no invitation to use took the risk incident to unfinished condition of building. Burke v. Cowen & Co., 114 NYS 505.

28. Operators of train owe no duty to trespassers on track except to use reasonable diligence to prevent injury to him after discovery of his peril and the fact but, when their presence is discovered, greater vigilance is required to avoid injury to them on account of their incapacity for self-preservation,[29] and this is particularly true where there is an implied or permissive invitation.[30] Under the rule commonly known as the turntable doctrine, the owner of premises must anticipate the propensity of children to play with attractive and dangerous appliances.[31] that such trespasser is a small child does not increase the duty. O'Bannion's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 315, 436, 110 SW 329. Children trespassing upon premises take the risks thereof, unless they are allured thereon, by something of peculiar attractiveness to children. Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb's Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 909, 111 SW 712. Not negligence for defendant to fail to anticipate that child would find her way to stringers across canal, they not being for public use. Blum v. Weatherford, 121 La. 298, 46 S 317. Standard of duty is the same whether the person injured is an adult or a child. Girl of 8 years. Walsh v. Pittsburg R. W., 221 Pa. 463, 70 A 826. Though a child because of his age cannot be a trespasser or charged with contributory negligence, this does not render another liable for his injuries. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311. Inability of children to care for themselves does not cast upon the owner of lands, upon which they trespass, the duty of protection. The duty rests primarily upon the parents and is not shifted by their negligence. Davis v. Joslin Mfg. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 65.

29. Where children of tender age are invited by the owner of dangerous machinery to go about the same or where their presence there is discovered, a duty arises to exercise ordinary care for their protection, where they are of insufficient age and intelligence to appreciate the danger to which they may be exposed, or into which from childish curiosity they may go. This doctrine is distinguished from that of the turntable cases, it being based largely on the doctrine of discovered peril. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Davis [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 939. A discovery of the presence of a 25 months old child on a railroad track by trainmen is a discovery of its peril, since they have no right to assume that it will move off. Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 787. Duty of owner not to knowingly permit child 4½ years old to remain unattended in seedroom containing dangerous machinery. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289. Care required may depend on knowledge of danger. Knowledge of danger to child from starting motor held for jury. Walsh v. Pittsburg R. Co., 221 Pa. 463, 70 A 866. Where a child of tender years or of immature judgment, although a trespasser, is discovered upon premises, the owner or occupier may not, as in the case of an adult, act upon the assumption that it will take care of itself, but a further duty is imposed to exercise care commensurate with the circumstances to avoid injuring it. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311. Railway company held not negligent in failing to anticipate return of children to yards after they had been driven off. Id. Ordinary care requires locomotive engineer who sees small child on track in front of him to exercise highest degree of care to avoid collision. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. [Idaho] 99 P 91.

30. Children held not invited to use lumber yard as playground, though they were not always driven away by the watchman. Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557. Evidence of permission given by railroad employe to child to play on turntable, admissible. Dampf v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. [Miss.] 48 S 612.

31. Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557. Where premises are attractive to children, the owner owes a higher degree of care for their safety than for the safety of adults. Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P 689. The "turntable" doctrine is that a railroad turntable is a dangerous machine created by the act of its owner, peculiarly attractive to the childish instincts of children as a merry-go-round, and, if left unlocked (when it might be easily locked) and when exposed in a public place where children resort to it with the knowledge and tacit acquiescence of its owner to play on it, becomes an attractive nuisance and operates as an inducement, an implied invitation to them, and therefore, when injured thereon, they are not treated strictly as voluntary trespassers but as tolled into a hidden pitfall or trap. Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557. What are attractive nuisances is ordinarily for the determination of the jury. Linnberg v. Rock Island, 136 Ill. App. 495. The doctrine of the "turntable cases" is founded upon the principal that when one sets a temptation before young children, under circumstances which in law is equivalent to the holding out of an inducement to enter his premises, he must use ordinary care to protect them from harm. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311.

Doctrine applied: Rule applied to pond in street upon which floated boards, planks, and parts of sidewalk tempting children to ride thereon. Linnberg v. Rock Island, 136 Ill. App. 495. Railroad, which leaves turntable unguarded and unfastened in a locality where children are likely to play and permits them to play on the turntable, impliedly invites them to so play and is liable for resulting injuries. Berry v. St. Louis M. & S. E. R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27. Complaint, alleging negligence of railroad company in leaving turntable unguarded and unfastened whereby child of tender years was injured in attempting to play with it, not demurrable. Lewis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 84 NE 23. Railroad companies are not to be deprived of the use of structures or appliances necessary for the carrying on of their business because they are attractive and may result in injuries to children by reason of their

To the application of this doctrine, it is essential that the attractive and dangerous character of the appliance be known to the owner,[32] that the injured child be so young as to lack discretion,[33] and that the injury result from the appliance in question.[34]

§ 3. Proximate cause.[35]—See 10 C. L. 934—Negligence is not actionable unless it is the proximate cause of the injury complained of,[36] and this rule applies want of judgment, but where with but little pecuniary expense such properties may be made reasonably safe, an obligation rests upon such companies to take the measures necessary therefor. Id. Evidence held sufficient to go to jury on question of whether car was peculiarly and especially attractive to children. Gates v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 103, 94 P 751. Doctrine of "turntable cases" applied to injury from pushing a car left in place frequented by children. Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 P 84.

Doctrine held inapplicable: "Turntable cases" doctrine not applied to injury caused by child's entering private premises to "see into" theater. Briscoe v. Henderson L. & P. Co., 148 N. C. 396, 62 SE 600. A depot is not a place which allures children of tender years nor does the company hold out to them an implied invitation or special attraction to visit it. Ling v. Great Northern R. Co., 165 F 813. Lumber piles held not an attractive nuisance as defined in the turntable cases. Kelly v. Benas [Mo.] 116 SW 557. Railroad trains are not to be classed with turntables, and there is no duty to guard them from the intrusion of children. St. Louis S. R. Co. v. Davis [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 939. Electric wire which can be reached only by the climbing of the poles to which it is fastened is not peculiarly attractive to children within turntable cases, and that children will climb the poles and come in contact with the wire is not to be reasonably anticipated. Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb's Adm'r, 33 Ky. L. R. 909, 111 SW 712. Stringers across canal held not an attractive place for children. Blum v. Weatherford, 121 La. 298, 46 S 317. Not applied to railroad yards, where children were repeatedly ordered out, but rather to a thing at rest and left unguarded. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311. Hence it is not generally applied to the conduct of a business, for here the implied invitation is lacking. Id. A railroad track in the open country is not attractive or alluring to children within the doctrine of the "turntable cases." Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P 689.

Doctrine repudiated. Conrad v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 44. Held that the law imposes no liability upon railroad companies in favor of children for maintaining unfastened and unguarded turntable even in thickly settled community. Id.

32. Owner held under no obligation to anticipate that child would enter private alley to look into back windows of theater, and hence owed no duty to guard dangerous agencies in such alley. Briscoe v. Henderson L. & P. Co., 148 N. C. 396, 62 SE 600. Where the owner has no knowledge of the danger of an instrumentality which causes injury to trespassing children, he is not liable, though he allows them on the premises and gives no warning of danger. Corn bin in distillery. Kisler's Adm'r v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 913. Fact that children occasionally had gone into bin in presence of miller did not charge owner with knowledge that they would go into it on other occasions under different conditions. Id. To bring a case within the doctrine of the "turntable cases," defendants must be shown to have known of the attractiveness of the instrumentality in question to children. Gates v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 103, 94 P 751.

33. Whether child of 10 was of sufficient age and intelligence to exclude him from the benefit of the rule held for the jury. Linnberg v. Rock Island, 136 Ill. App. 495. Where a child is prima facie a trespasser, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that he was incapable of exercising the degree of care necessary for his safety. Gates v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 103, 94 P 751.

34. Sudden excitement occasioned by danger of another child, causing deceased to jump from his raft, held one of the events which was liable to happen and not to relieve defendant from liability. Linnberg v. Rock Island, 136 Ill. App. 495. Sandpile which attracted child to railroad yards had no connection with his injury by jumping on and off trains. Swartwood's Guardian v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 785, 111 SW 305.

Ash [Wash.] 97 P 748. Facts held as consistent with defendant's theory as with plaintiff's and hence the cause of the accident being still a matter of conjecture, a verdict was properly directed for defendant. Tibbits v. Mason City Ft. D. R. Co., 138 Iowa, 178, 115 NW 1021.

37. Because an ordinance is violated does not authorize a recovery when a person is injured by acts of his own, which, if known, could not have been prevented by defendant had it complied with ordinance. King v. Wabash R. Co., 211 Mo. 1, 109 SW 671. Unlawful employment of a minor under 16 years of age in violation of Burn's Ann. St. 1908, § 8021, required defendant to anticipate injury resulting from his exhaustion. Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak [Ind.] 87 NE 229. Railroad's obstruction of street in violation of law held proximate cause of destruction of building by fire, where fire department was destroyed by such obstruction, since such a result should have been anticipated. Houren v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 236 Ill. 620, 86 NE 611. Violation of Rev. St. 1905, § 3362, prohibiting employment of children under the age of 12 years in certain cases is negligence per se. Starnes v. Albion Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 556, 61 SE 525. Violation of Rev. St. 1905, §3362, prohibiting employment of children in certain case, held proximate cause of injury to child, though engaged at the time of the injury in work outside the scope of his employment. Id. Sale of impure food to retailer in violation of statute was proximate cause of sickness of consumer resulting from its use. Meshbesher v. Channellene Oil & Mfg. Co. [Minn.] 119 NW 428. Evidence sufficient to go to jury on question whether sale of gunpowder to child of 12 was proximate cause of latter's injury by its explosion. McEldon v. Drew, 138 Iowa, 390, 116 NW 147. Violation of Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, §§ 2, 8; 27 Stat. 531 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174), requiring automatic couplers, proximate cause of injury to brakeman while making coupling. York v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Ark.] 110 SW 803. The unlawful employment of a minor may be regarded as the proximate cause of his injury arising from such employment. Frorer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588. Violation of statute forbidding placing of baggage car behind passenger car held not proximate cause of injury. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Schepman [Ind.] 84 NE 988. That plaintiff was working without permit as required by ordinance not proximate cause of injury as matter of law. McCarthy v. Morse, 197 Mass. 332, 83 NE 1109. Failure to comply with Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415) § 20, amended by Laws 1899, p. 350, c. 192, requiring elevator shafts in buildings in course of construction to be enclosed, not cause of injury of employe who was thrown off elevator into cellar caused by its sudden descent and stoppage. Genovesia v. Pelham Operating Co., 114 NYS 646.

38. Proximate cause defined: Proximate cause is the efficient cause or that which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other as mere instruments or vehicles in the natural lines of causation to the result in controversy. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 NE 9. The proximate cause is to be defined generally as the cause which led to, or might naturally be expected to produce, the result. Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76. The proximate cause of an injury is the natural and continuing sequence unbroken by an intervening cause producing the injury, and without which it would not have happened. Hull v. Thomson Transfer Co. [Mo. App.] 115 SW 1054. The "proximate cause" of an accident is the immediate cause, or that without which it would not have happened. It is not the remote cause or occasion of the accident, and where the original wrong only becomes injurious because of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act of another, the injury is imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer [Ky.] 113 SW 433. "Proximate cause" is that which naturally leads to, or produces, or contributes directly to produce, a result such as might be expected by any reasonable and prudent man as likely to directly and naturally follow or flow out of the performance or nonperformance of any act. Williams v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 48 S 209. The proximate cause is the direct and immediate, efficient cause of the injury. Malcomb v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 46 S 768. The requisites of proximate cause are first, the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee might naturally or probably produce the injury, and second, that such act or omission did produce it. Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 108 Va. 822, 62 SE 972. Proximate cause is that cause which, in natural and continued sequence unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produced the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred. Town of Lyons v. Watt, 43 Colo. 238, 95 P 949. Negligence cannot be the proximate cause of an injury unless it can be said that, but for such negligence, the injury would not have happened. Tibbitts v. Mason City, etc., R. Co., 138 Iowa, 178, 115 NW 1021. Where a flood was caused by open faucet in upper story in sole possession of defendants, testimony of one, that he had turned it on but found no water running but that he was "quite sure" he turned it off, raised presumption of negligence which was not rebutted. Baker v. Schwartz, 113 NYS 727. Negligence, if any, in leaving horse unattended for the time being on the street while it was eating, was not the proximate cause of its biting a passerby, but its vicious propensity was. Corcoran v. Kelly, 61 Misc. 323, 113 NYS 686. Negligence having no connection with the injury cannot be the proximate cause thereof. Negligence, if any, in original placement of a box, not proximate cause of injury from its falling after replacement. Williams v. Citizens' Steamboat Co., 128 App. Div. 827, 113 NYS 616. One, who while walking along railroad track picked up torpedo and struck it to open it, was guilty of negligence proximately causing his injury resulting from the torpedo's explosion, even though company was negligent in placing it there. Holmes v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 112 NYS 421. Defect in bridge held proximate cause of injury, though it might not have happened but for breaking of buggy tongue and irritation of restlessness of horse. Hubbard v. Montgomery County [Iowa] 118 NW 912. Where one switchman, riding in front of engine being run by the engineer at an excessive rate of speed, saw his danger of being crushed because of a probable failure of the engine to couple with the car in front owing to nonalignment of coupling bars, and being unable to jump sought to align said bars and was injured thereby, the negligence of the engineer was the proximate cause. Murphy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 390. Defect in coupler held proximate cause of injury to brakeman who went between cars to ascertain why it did not work. Sprague v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 104 Minn. 58, 116 NW 104.

Illustrations: Failure to signal having induced plaintiff to approach so near track that his view was obstructed was held proximate cause of collision at crossing. Kujawa v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 135 Wis. 562, 116 NW 249. Failure of train to sound crossing signals not proximate cause of accident. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r [Va.] 63 SE 1007. Fact that street car was running at an excessive rate of speed did not of itself show that it was the proximate cause of injury to child on track. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 553. Where at the time of collision a train is running at a proper rate of speed, fact that just prior thereto it had been running at a rate exceeding that limited by ordinance is not proximate cause thereof. Holland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 210 Mo. 338, 109 SW 19. Speed of train held not shown to have contributed to accident. McDoel v. Heuermann, 141 Ill. App. 113. Rapid rate of speed of street car at street intersections held proximate cause of injury. Chicago City R. Co. v. Kastrzewa, 141 Ill. App. 10. Purchaser of diseased cattle after disease has been communicated to them has no right of action for the negligence to which the disease is due. Eshleman v. Union Stockyards Co. [Pa.] 70 A 899. To start a vessel on voyage without inspection is such gross negligence as to be the proximate cause of injury because it leaked. Bell v. Mutual Mach. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 680. Negligent delay in delivery of telegram informing plaintiff of the death of his mother whereby he missed two trains was proximate cause of his failure to get to the funeral, though after receiving telegram he caught a train which would have carried him through in time but for a defect in the track, where such defect would not have affected the passage of the trains which he missed. Sutton v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 577, 110 SW 874. Where horses were injured by coming in contact with an electric wire blown down by storm, proximate cause of injury was the storm, an act of God, and not negligence of defendant in maintaining uninsulated and unguarded wires. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Keys [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 767. Proximate cause of injury to sectionman on hand car caused by explosion of torpedo on track was defendant's failure to warn him that torpedo was there. Galveston H. & N. R. Co. v. Murphy [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 443. Where boy who had picked up dynamite cap on defendant's premises was allowed to retain it by parents and some time afterward traded it to another boy, the parents' negligence broke the casual connection between the defendant's negligence in leaving the cap where it did and the injury, hence defendant's negligence was not the proximate cause. Pittsburg Reduction Co. v. Horton [Ark.] 113 SW 647. Where glass was broken by explosion of dynamite for purpose of stopping spread of fire, the fire, and not the explosion of dynamite, was the proximate cause. Frisbie v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 133 Mo. App. 30, 112 SW 1024. Neglect of defendant in failing to inform owner to whom gun was returned that it contained an unexploded shell not actionable, the efficient cause of the injury, resulting from its explosion, being the owner's negligence in taking the gun apart without ascertaining whether it was in same condition as when lent. Smith v. Peach, 200 Mass. 504, 86 NE 908. Plaintiff's fright held not proximate cause of injury. Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622. Defendant's negligence in turning suddenly into street in front of a woman held proximate cause of injury and not her sudden fright. Sandy v. Swift & Co., 159 F 271. Plaintiff's fright and not defendant's negligence held proximate cause of railroad crossing accident. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Abegglen, 41 Ind. App. 603, 84 NE 566. Negligence of defendant rather than physical condition of person injured held proximate cause of injury, resulting from fright occasioned by sudden closing of train after person had passed through. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Murdock [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 139. Owner's fault in knowingly employing careless chauffeur not proximate cause of collision, where latter stole machine to use for his own purposes. Danforth v. Fisher [N. H.] 71 A 535. Giving of chloroform in operating on injury rather than injury itself held proximate cause of death. Mella v. Northern S. S. Co., 162 F 499. Where negligence of fellow traveler is the proximate cause of the injury, there can be no recovery against municipality under the statute rendering them liable for injuries caused by defective highways. Hinckley v. Danbury [Conn.] 70 A 590. Motorman's failure to warn conductor of obstacle near track not proximate cause of passenger's injury thereby. Id. Failing of hammer which struck plaintiff's umbrella causing her to suddenly twist her body thereby producing the injury held proximate cause, actual physical impact being unnecessary. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 107 Md. 600, 69 A 422. Failure to properly construct staging over machinery held proximate cause of servant's injury rather than negligence of fellow-servant in running into horse supporting staging. Vaisbord v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 74 N. H. 470, 69 A 520. Destruction of trunk by fire not the natural and probable result of delay in forwarding it. French v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 199 Mass. 433, 85 NE 424. Held under the evidence that court could properly find defective condition of wagon was due to defendant's negligence and was proximate cause of injury rather than act of bystander pulling out blanket caught between different parts of wagon. Hollidge v. Duncan, 199 Mass. 121, 85 NE 186. Conductor's position on car held but the occasion and not the cause of the injury. Bennett v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 560. Negligence of elevator boy in leaving elevator alone and in the condition shown held proximate cause of passenger's injury, since under the circumstances it was to be expected that latter would return to car in former's absence. Toohy v. McLean, 119 Mass. 466, 85 NE 578. Evidence held to warrant finding that defective wheelborrow was proximate cause of injury. O'Toole v. Pruyn, 201 Mass. 126, 87 NE 608. Where plaintiff who had hold of one end of beam had hand crushed because other workmen let go of their end, their letting go, and not foreman's order to plaintiff to raise beam by his hands rather than by cross-bar, was proximate cause of injury. Carlsen v. McKee, 114 NYS 280. Execution of order by servant held proximate act, but giving of order by foreman was proximate cause of injury. Deon v. McClintic-Marshall Const. Co., 114 NYS 28. Decedent's negligence in stopping on track in front of approaching car held proximate cause of her injury. Liutz v. Denver City Tramway Co., 43 Colo. 58, 95 P 600. Switching of car held not proximate cause of injury to child who was struck by it, but rather the attempt of the child to ride upon it. Smalley v. Rio Grande W. R. Co., 34 Utah, 423, 98 P 311. Defective condition of machinery held proximate cause of explosion of gasoline engine. Meshishnek v. Seattle Sand and Gravel Co. [Wash.] 99 P 9. Proximate cause of an explosion was not defendant's act in storing it on his premises but plaintiff's act in shooting into it. McGhee v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 147 N. C. 142, 60 SE 912. Where injury was caused by trespassing boys throwing hog wire across electric wires at an uninsulated spot, thereby causing plaintiff who came in contact with hog wire to receive shock, negligence of company in maintaining uninsulated wires was not proximate cause of injury. Luehrmann v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 127 Mo. App. 213, 104 SW 1128. In action for injury to marine railway struck by tug, proximate cause of injury was negligence of tug in not proceeding in its course. Ives v. Gring [N. C.] 63 SE 609. No casual connection between failure to have lookout on cars and injury, where motorman himself saw plaintiff near track. Downey v. Baton Rouge Elec. & Gas Co. [La.] 47 S 837. Negligence of engineer, if any, held not to proximately contribute to his injury received in collision, the proximate cause being negligence of train dispatcher. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Farr [Miss.] 48 S 520.

39. Where a new and independent cause intervenes between the wrong and the injury, the connecting chain is broken and the wrongful act cannot be said to be the proximate cause. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Vail [Ala.] 46 S 587; Mella v. Northern S. S. Co., 162 F 499; Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732; Brubaker v. Kansas City Elec. L. Co., 130 Mo. App. 439, 110 SW 12; Ostrander v. Orange County Trac. Co., 125 App. Div. 603, 110 NYS 15. Ordinary conditions and forces of nature are not generally independent intervening causes, since those who are negligent are held to have had them in contemplation. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732. An act, which does not break the chain of causation between prior negligence and the injury or isolate the two, cannot be said to be the active and efficient cause of the injury. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643.

Illustrations: Negligence in leaving excavation unguarded not actionable where injury therefrom would not have occurred but for plaintiff's negligence in mistaking the lot, where it was located, for another. Town of Lyons v. Watt, 43 Colo. 238, 95 P 949. Though an accident would not have happened but for the giving of a signal, foreman's act in ordering elevator raised in response thereto was an intervening act proximately causing plaintiff's injury. Boyle v. McNulty Bros., 129 App. Div. 412, 113 NYS 240. Furnishing lineman improper measuring tape held proximate cause of his receiving an electric shock where the accident could not have happened had the tape been a proper one, though lineman contributed to the cause by whipping the tape against the wires (Murphy v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 127 App. Div. 450, 112 NYS 149), but it cannot be attributed to a cause unless without its operation the accident would not have happened (Id.). Fact, that another street car passenger was struck by passing team, thereby throwing plaintiff to street, held not an independent intervening cause where such passenger would not have been struck but for company's negligence. Lockwood v. Boston El. R. Co., 200 Mass. 537, 86 NE 934. Defendant's negligence held proximate cause of premature birth and death of child conceived after injury, since perpetuation of the human race is not a pated in the exercise of reasonable foresight.[40] Negligence is actionable when the injury resulting therefrom is the probable result thereof, it not being necessary that such result could have been foreseen.[41] The test of proximate cause is whether there was an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury.[42] It need not be the sole cause [43] or the direct cause [44] or the last in point of time.[45] voluntary act and hence conception of the child was not an intervening agency relieving defendant of liability. Sullivan v. Old Colony St. R. Co., 197 Mass. 512, 83 NE 1091.

40. Farrier v. Colorado Springs, etc., R. Co., 42 Colo. 331, 95 P 294; Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732; Brubaker v. Kansas City Elec. L. Co., 130 Mo. App. 439, 110 SW 12; Luehrmann v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 127 Mo. App. 213, 104 SW 1128; Cox v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 250; Muse v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 102. Held no evidence that defendant ought to have anticipated that removal of boxing from drum would cause brake to be released and bucket to be precipitated down mining shaft. Reino v. Montana Mineral. Land & Development Co. [Mont.] 99 P 853. Foreman should have seen that sudden stopping of hand car would throw off section hand standing thereon in an insecure position. Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 458. Though leaving stock yards' gate open in close proximity to passing cars was negligence, there was no liability for injury to stock attendant hanging on side of car unless defendant should have anticipated that he might occupy such position. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. Evidence held to show that defendant bad reason to anticipate that stock attendant in performing his duties might be hanging on the side of a train passing through the yards, this being a common custom, and hence the leaving open of a pen gate so that it swung in close proximity to the tracks was actionable negligence. Id. Held, as a matter of law, that leaky engine, necessitating running of double header, was not proximate cause of an injury resulting from engine running into train from rear while it was standing still to permit the repair of a broken knuckle. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer [Ky.] 113 SW 433. Held that injury caused by negligence in making coupling was not proximate cause of injury to one going to freight depot on business, since his presence at the place of injury was not to be reasonably anticipated. Louthian v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 665. The rebound of a stick of wood, thrown from a car in such a way as to strike the legs of a man sitting on the car, is not such a consequence as ought to have been foreseen to result from permitting wood to be so thrown. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. v. Benton [Ark.] 110 SW 1037. Was a consequence which might have been foreseen, and required submission of the question of proximate cause to the jury. Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 211 Mo. 419, 111 SW 109. Failure of defendant to construct its line properly and to repair defect in wires not proximate cause of injury by coming in contact with a wire thrown over defendant's wires by a third person. Brubaker v. Kansas City Elec. L. Co., 130 Mo. App. 439, 110 SW 12. Defective repairing of boat held not proximate cause of injury from leakage and water coming in contact with lime on board, thereby setting fire to vessel, where defendant had no notice that lime was to be carried. Bell v. Mutual Mach. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 680. Where a shock and injury from a collision was to be reasonably anticipated, the fact that its extent was not to be anticipated and indeterminable was no bar to a recovery for the actual pecuniary lose sustained. Armour & Co. v. Kollmeyer [C. C. A.] 161 F 78. Where an employe in a mine was overcome by explosion of gas and while being carried to the surface was injured by carelessness of fellow-servants in placing him on elevator, such injury was not proximately caused by the explosion. Teis v. Smuggler Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 158 F 260.

41. Murphy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 390. In order to make a negligent act the proximate cause of an injury, it is not necessary that the particular injury and the particular manner of its occurrence could reasonably have been foreseen. Ford v. Hine Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 463, 86 NE 1051. If the consequences follow in an unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury without an intervening efficient cause, it is sufficient if, at the time of the negligence, the wrongdoer might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have foreseen that some injury might result from his negligence. Id.

42. Defendant's negligence in starting fire, and not decedent's attempt to put it out, was proximate cause of death from burns. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 133 Ill. App. 2. The chain of proximate cause will be extended to its natural limit in each particular case. Recovery for death by fire spreading from railroad right of way. Id. The primary fault and not the duty raised thereby is the proximate cause of resulting injury. Starting of fire, and not attempt to extinguish it, proximate cause of death from burns. Id. The test of proximate cause is whether the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together that they become a natural whole, or whether the chain of events is so broken that they become independent; and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequences of the primary cause, the negligence of the defendant. Eagle Hose Co. v. Electric Light Co., 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 581. But negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury of which it is not the sole or immediate cause. Id. If the defendant's negligence concurs with some other event, not due to the plaintiff's fault, to produce the injury so that it clearly appears that but for such negligence the injury would not have happened, the defendant is responsible though his negligent act was not the nearest cause in the order of time. Id. Electric light company is liable for injuries caused by falling of defectively fastened street lamp, though immediate occasion of its fall is an unavoidable fire with which defendant has no connection, the fire being treated as an intervening agency bringing defendant's negligence into dangerous prominence and combining with it to cause the injuries. Id. One who violates a duty imposed by common law is liable to every person who is injured as a natural and probable consequence. Pittsburg Reduction Co. v. Horton [Ark.] 113 SW 647.

43. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. McBride [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 638; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Lasater [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 103. Instruction, erroneous as ignoring defendant's liability of its negligence, was a concurring cause proximately contributing to the injury. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Garber [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 227. The fact that other acts concur with the negligence proximately causing the injury is no defense. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Monell [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 504. One is not relieved of liability for his own negligence which proximately caused an injury because some natural force or the activity of a third person exerted an influence in causing the injury. Fleddermann v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 113 SW 1143. Fact that gas pipes in street were started rolling by children does not relieve gas company of liability for negligently leaving them in the street insufficiently blocked. O'Hara v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 131 Mo. App. 428, 110 SW 642. One is liable for injuries resulting from his negligence, though they probably would not have happened but for an intervening or concurring cause for which neither party is responsible. City liable for defective street though injury probably would not have happened but for fact that horse became frightened. McLemore v. West End [Ala.] 48 S 663. Where a shipper provided a cover for growing plants which was negligently burned by defendant under such circumstances as must have imputed knowledge to him that the cover was necessary for the plants' preservation, he was liable for resulting damage. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732. The defendant's negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury though other circumstances and conditions may have contributed thereto. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Vail [Ala.] 46 S 587. Icy condition of ground where employes were working. Id. A person injured by the fault of another, without which fault the injury could not have occurred, is not to be deprived of his remedy because the fault of a stranger, not in privity with him, also contributed to the injury, for the original negligence still remains as the culpable and direct cause of the injury, and the intervening events and agencies, which may contribute to it, not to be regarded. Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. [Or.] 99 P 76. Uninsulated wire could not be said, as a matter of law, not to be proximate cause of injury to lineman, where there was evidence tending to show that defendant failed to furnish properly insulated wires, though negligence of fellow-servant contributed to injury. De Kallans v. Washtenaw Home Tel. Co., 153 Mich. 25, 15 Det. Leg. N. 337, 116 NW 564. Where several concurring acts or conditions of things, one of them a wrongful act or omission, produce an injury, such wrongful act or omission is to be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury if it be one which might reasonably have been anticipated therefrom and would not have occurred without it. It is immaterial that it could not reasonably have been anticipated in the particular way in which it did in fact happen. Evidence held to warrant finding that city's negligence in permitting obstruction in streets was proximate cause of injuries resulting from a runaway horse running into it. McDowell v. Preston, 104 Minn. 263, 116 NW 470. The concurrent negligence of a third person operating to produce the injury does not relieve defendant of liability. Negligence of nurse and hospital attendants did not relieve physician, though they were not in his employ or under his control. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa, 205, 115 NW 921. Where the injury is the result of the defendant and that of a third person, or of the defendant and an inevitable accident, or where an inanimate thing has contributed with defendant's negligence to cause the injury, the plaintiff may recover if the negligence of the defendant was an efficient cause of the injury. Wells Bros. Co. v. Flanagan, 139 Ill. App. 237. The negligence of two independent persons resulting in injury to a third, where neither is sufficient within itself, both are to be treated in combination as the proximate cause of the injury. Id.

44. Defining it as "direct cause" held error, but harmless where defendant's negligence, if the cause at all, must have been the direct cause. Wheeler v. Milner, 137 Wis. 26, 118 NW 187. Instruction, excluding necessary fact that negligence must have been the direct cause of the injury, erroneous. Lichtenstein v. Hudepohl Brew. Co., 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 441. One is responsible for all the consequences which naturally and reasonably flow from his negligent conduct, though the result is not immediately connected with the cause. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daugherty, 32 Ky. L. R. 1392, 108 SW 336.

45. The fact that the negligence of a third person contributed to the injury does not profit defendant if his negligence was a concurring cause. Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. [Mont.] 98 P 643. The proximate cause need not be the last act or the nearest to the injury. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. McBride [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 638. Proximate cause is not always the last act of cause or nearest act to the injury, but it is such act as actively aided in producing the injury as direct and concurring, such as might reasonably have been contemplated as involving the result under the attending circumstances. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bellar [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 323. Though blood poisoning was the direct and immediate cause of intestate's death, it was in the chain of causations originating in burns received and sued for. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Hinton [Ala.] 48 S 546. By "proximate cause" is not meant the last cause, nor the sole cause, but any act that aided in producing the result. Negligence in failing to have ticket office open and negligence in starting train before passengers could procure ticket were concurring causes, constituting the proximate cause. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Trigo [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 1193. Proximate cause as a rule is for the jury. Proximate cause for the jury, though the immediate cause was not defendant's negligence. Wells Bros. Co. v. Flanagan, 139 Ill. App. 237.

§ 4. Contributory negligence.[46]—See 10 C. L. 938—The doctrine of contributory negligence is to be distinguished from that of assumption of risk.[47] Contributory negligence proximately contributing to the injury [48] bars recovery for negligence,[49] though the negligence consists in violation of statute [50] but not for willful injury.[51]

47. Where want of proper care on the part of a person brings about his injury, the doctrine of "contributory negligence" is applied to his act; when a servant is injured from one of the well known dangers ordinarily incident to his service, then his injury is ascribed to one of the ordinary risks of employment which he assumed in entering upon the service. Louisiana & F. Lumber Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 950. Contributory negligence is an act or omission on plaintiff's part proximately causing his injury, and is a defense notwithstanding defendant's negligence while assumed risk rests upon a contract, generally implied, that the servant will assume the ordinary risks of his employment. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722. See, also, Master and Servant, 12 C. L. 665.

48. Inadvertent omission of word "proximate" before word "cause" held not to require reversal, however, in view of the evidence. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1098. Instruction ignoring the necessity of plaintiff's negligence being proximate cause in order to bar recovery erroneous. Bivis v. Vanceburg Tel. Co. [Ky.] 113 SW 811; St. Louis S. R. Co. v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 877; Vertrees v. Gage County [Neb.] 115 NW 863; Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475; Zelenka v. Union Stockyards Co. [Neb.] 118 NW 103; Atlanta & B. Air Line R. v. Wheeler [Ala.] 46 S 262. "Proximately contributing" distinguished from "materially contributing." Chicago City R. Co. v. Donnelly, 136 Ill. App. 204. Route selected by shipper in attempting to reach and care for stock in defendant's yards immaterial where injury would have resulted from the selection of any other route. Franey v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co., 235 Ill. 522, 85 NE 750, afg. 138 Ill. App. 215. Negligence of employe in failing under cars no defense to negligence in backing them to release him. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Inzer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 444. Negligence on the part of plaintiff proximately causing the injury is contributory negligence. Ives v. Gring [N. C.] 63 SE 609; Riedel v. Wheeling Trac. Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 SE 821. When the act and the injury are not known by common experience to be actually and usually in sequence, and the injury does not, according to the ordinary course of events and affairs, follow from the act, whether negligent position assumed by servant at machine was proximate cause of injury, held at least for the jury. Fact that patient did not follow physician's directions and discontinued treatment too soon no bar to recovery for injuries caused by malpractice. Sauers v. Smits, 49 Wash. 557, 95 P 1097.

49. Haralson v. San Antonio Trac. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 876. Negligence of the person injured proximately contributory to the injury precludes recovery at common law. Apperson v. Lazro [Ind. App.] 87 NE 97; Louisville R. Co. v. Boutellier, 33 Ky. L. R. 484, 110 SW 357; Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Fortner, [Ky.] 113 SW 847; Oliver v. Ft. Smith L. & Trac. Co. [Ark.] 116 SW 204; Feher v. [Pa.] 71 A 1053; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Baldwin [C. C. A.] 164 F 826. Charge that injury was caused by failure of street car operators to keep proper lookout charged simple negligence and not wanton or willful misconduct, hence plea of contributory negligence was not demurrable. Mobile Light & R. Co. v. Baker [Ala.] 48 S 119.

50. Whether miner was guilty of contributory negligence in working without props required by Kirby's Dig. § 5352, depended upon the obviousness of their necessity and was a question for the jury. Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. [Ark.] 114 SW 722; Burnett v. Ft. Worth L. & P. Co. [Tex.] 112 SW 1040. Speed of trains. Holland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 210 Mo. 338, 109 SW 19. Fact that plaintiff immediately before being run into by street car had been driving faster than allowed by ordinance did not preclude his recovery unless such conduct contributed to his injury. Mullane v. St. Paul City R. Co., 104 Minn. 153, 116 NW 354. Whether such conduct contributed to injury question for jury. Id. Violation of 1 Ann. St. 1906, § 1102, requiring trains to sound signals of approach to crossings. Turner v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1026. Failure of train to sound crossing signals as required by law where plaintiff, by exercise of ordinary care, should have heard and seen train. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r [Va.] 63 SE 1007.

Contra: No defense to violation of § 11, Child Labor act. Frorer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588. Laws 1907, p. 491, c. 595, abrogating contributory negligence as a defense in certain cases, held not to apply to Plaintiff's duty is measured by the same standards as that of defendant,[52] he being required to exercise ordinary care [53] under the circumstances [54] commensurate with the danger to be apprehended,[55] and his condition [56] and capacity.[57] Among the common cases of contributory negligence are failure to exercise due care after crossing accident which happened before its passage. Clemons v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 Wis. 387, 119 NW 102. Employment of minor under 14 years of age in violation of Laws 1897, p. 90, § 1 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 48, § 33). Strafford v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 238 Ill. 371, 87 NE 358. Employment of minor under 16 years of age for more than certain number of hours per day and week in violation of Acts 1899, p. 231, c. 142 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8021). Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak [Ind.] 87 NE 229.

51. Cunningham v. Pease House Furnishing Co., 74 N. H. 435, 69 A 120; Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Haggard [Ala.] 46 S 519; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Moore [Ga. App.] 63 SE 642. Held that evidence tended to show misconduct of such nature, hence question was for jury regardless of plaintiff's conceded negligence. Jackson Elec. R. L. & P. Co. v. Carnahan [Miss.] 48 S 617. Hence, where certain counts allege wanton negligence, pleas of contributory negligence are insufficient answers thereto. Kelly v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 45 S 906.

52. There is no distinction between negligence on the plaintiff's part and negligence on defendant's part, except that the former is called "contributory negligence." Smith's Adm'r v. Norfolk & P. Trac. Co. [Va.] 63 SE 1005. Contributory negligence is no more than a case of negligence, and not dependent upon any different rule of law, though presupposing the limitation of the issue of negligence to an inquiry as to which of two persons its final impulsion is to be attributed. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 104 Minn. 138, 116 NW 475.

53. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth [Ky.] 114 SW 264; Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 A 525. Instruction that if conductor could have performed his duties and still have avoided being struck by car imposed too high a degree of care since it required more than an exercise of reasonable care. Smith's Adm'r v. Norfolk & P. Trac. Co. [Va.] 63 SE 1005. Unless it can be said that the danger was so apparent that no prudent man would incur it, plaintiff cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence. Goodale v. York, 74 N. H. 454, 69 A 525. Plaintiff held not negligent. Id. Instruction that "ordinary care is such care as a prudent man of the requisite skill will take under the circumstances of the particular case," and "such care as ordinarily prudent men exercise in matters affecting their own interests," held erroneous. Reffke v. Patten Paper Co., 136 Wis. 535, 117 NW 1004. "Ordinary care" is that care which ordinarily prudent persons use in their business or such care as the great mass of mankind observe in the transactions of human life. Grimm v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & Light Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 833.

54. The care required depends to a considerable degree upon the exigency in which one acts and what ought then to have been foreseen and not so much upon what the event shows to have been the real danger. McCarthy v. Morse, 197 Mass. 332, 83 NE 1109. If what is done in an emergency is no more than might have been expected from an ordinarily prudent person placed under like circumstances, then due care is not wanting. Burger v. Omaha, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 117 NW 35.

55. One who in an effort to escape immediate danger places himself in other peril, there being no time for clear thought or reflection, will not be held contributorily negligent, but if he needlessly places himself in such other peril or fails to exercise due care under the circumstances he is guilty. McFeat v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 69 A 744. One approaching railroad crossings must give that attention to sights and sounds of warning that a man of ordinary prudence would give. Id. The inherent danger of the instrumentality does not relieve one from the consequences of contributory negligence. Electric light wires. Weir v. Hoverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874. The care required of one going into a perilous situation is to be determined in view of the circumstances and conditions at the time of entry and not afterwards when the danger has become so imminent as to prevent the exercise of sound judgment. Louisiana & A. R. Co. v. Ratcliffe [Ark.] 115 SW 396.

56. Voluntary intoxication does not excuse a failure to exercise the degree of care required of a sober person. Kresban v. Elgin, Aurora & S. Trac. Co., 132 Ill. App. 416. The mere fact of intoxication does not show contributory negligence, nor relieve defendant of liability for its negligence. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Young [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 764. A theory that partial intoxication of plaintiff caused the injury is covered by an instruction that if plaintiff's state of intoxication, if any, caused him to fail to exercise the care that a reasonably prudent man would have exercised and his injury was caused thereby, then he could not recover. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Ryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 906. An intoxicated person is required to act with the same degree of care as if he were sober. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Chapman, 4 Ga. App. 706, 62 SE 488.

57. Blind man traveling streets need exercise only ordinary care, and the fact that he is blind as well as all other facts and circumstances are to be considered in determining what is ordinary care in such case. Apperson v. Lazro [Ind. App.] 87 NE 97. The fact that a person who is nearly blind travels the streets unattended does not show contributory negligence. Id. The standard of care required of a woman is the same as that required of a man, but in determining the question of her negligence, as in the case of children, the jury should be instructed to consider her sex, age, knowledge, experience and capacity. Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825.

discovery of peril,[58] failure to use one's senses to ascertain danger,[59] failure to use safeguards provided,[60] commission of obviously dangerous acts,[61] and needless exposure to a known danger.[62] Contributory negligence ordinarily involves some knowledge of the peril,[63] one being ordinarily entitled to anticipate that reasonable care will be exercised by others;[64] but lack of vigilance or a negli-

58. Waddell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 213 Mo. 8, 111 SW 542.

59. One driving along the track of an electric car line, with the expectation that a car will come behind him, and an opportunity to turn off the track, and in the full possession of his faculties, is without excuse if he is overtaken by a car and his wagon is wrecked and he is himself injured. Cincinnati Trac. Co. v. Kroeger, 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 123.

60. Failure to keep hold of hand rail in descending icy steps with a knowledge of danger and means of protection held negligence, reasons for not using rail being insufficient. Stevenson v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 219 Pa. 626, 69 A 45.

61. Entering elevator with no one in charge held negligence, though door was open. Kaplan v. Lyons B. & Operating Co., 61 Misc. 315, 113 NYS 516. Whether, under these circumstances, it was plaintiff's duty to stop and investigate conditions before entering elevator held for jury. Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Carr, 85 Ark. 479, 108 SW 1053. Passenger on freight train not negligent as a matter of law in seating himself on trunk near door, though he knew there was some danger in such a position. Mitchell v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 143, 112 SW 291. Position of sectionman on hand car. Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 458. Contributory negligence to walk on deck of ship when vision is obscured, knowing of existence of a hatchway, but not knowing whether it was open or closed. The Lehigh Valley Transp. Co. v. Cook, 138 Ill. App. 405. Placing one's self dangerously near tracks on which trains are liable to pass without keeping careful watch held negligence. McDoel v. Heuermann, 141 Ill. App. 113. Contributory negligence of plaintiff in lacing a belt while on the pulleys for the jury where he was injured by a wrongful starting of the machinery, there being evidence that he was doing the work in the ordinary manner, and that it was practicably impossible to do it in any other way. Silverman v. Carr, 200 Mass. 396, 86 NE 898. Failure to equip tight and loose pulleys in such case not conclusive evidence of contributory negligence. Id. Child who ran in front of plainly visible automobile to get ball in street held guilty of contributory negligence. Fay v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 129 App. Div. 375, 113 NYS 689.

62. Going from station onto dark platform where injury was caused by falling into a hole. Tuten v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 4 Ga. App. 353, 61 SE 511. It is one's duty to avoid knowingly placing himself in danger. United States Exp. Co. v. Kraft [C. C. A.] 161 F 300.

63. Pedestrian ignorant of defect in street until injured thereby held not negligent. City of San Antonio v. Wildenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 231. Rear man on ice wagon whose view was obscured by its cover was not negligent in failing to avoid collision with street car. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Sine, 33 Ky. L. R. 792, 111 SW 356. Stock attendant climbing down car not negligent in failing to see open gate to stock pen in close proximity to car where its being open was unusual and due to negligence. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. One going from lighted station onto dark platform where she stepped off the edge not within rule since she ought to have foreseen such a consequence. Tuten v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 4 Ga. App. 353, 61 SE 511. Knowledge of danger alone may not be sufficient to impute contributory negligence, there must also be an appreciation of the risk. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co. [Mont.] 99 P 142; Frost v. McCarthy, 200 Mass. 445, 86 NE 918; City of Lafayette v. West [Ind.] 87 NE 550. Defense not made out in action by servant for injury received while operating machinery where plaintiff was not employed to operate the machinery, was not a machinist, and did not appreciate the danger. McCreery v. Union Roofing & Mfg. Co. [Iowa] 119 NW 738. Intelligent appreciation of the risk cannot necessarily be predicated upon a mere knowledge of some danger. McCarthy v. Morse, 197 Mass. 332, 83 NE 1109. A lineman measuring distances between wires with a tape containing a metal wire of which he had no knowledge was not guilty of negligence contributing to an electric shock caused by the metal coming into contact with the wires. Murphy v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 127 App. Div. 450, 112 NYS 149. In absence of showing that plaintiff appreciated risk, he was not negligent in crossing street from side which was obstructed to side which was not, but where ladder and staging were above him. Davis v. Whiting & Son Co., 201 Mass. 91, 87 NE 199. Knowledge of workman in trench that his footing was slippery did not require him, as a matter of law, to anticipate that grabbing car rail to save himself from falling would cause his hand to be run over. Hanley v. Boston El. R. Co., 201 Mass. 55, 87 NE 197. Plaintiff was not negligent in running into guy wire stretched from telephone pole to ground and across line of travel, when he had no knowledge or warning of its existence, though it had been maintained there for 18 months. Grant v. Sunset Tel. & T. Co., 7 Cal. App. 267, 94 P 368.

64. One traveling a public street may assume that horses thereon are under the control of their drivers, and is not negligent in failing to look and listen for runaways, nor is the hearing of a team coming notice that it is running away. Corona Coal & Iron Co. v. White [Ala.] 48 S 362. A person invited upon premises is not negligent in failing to keep a constant watch for dangers because he may assume that the gent failure to act may constitute contributory negligence as well as negligent action.[65] Mere inattention or temporary forgetfulness is not necessarily negligence,[66] but carelessness resulting from long familiarity with the danger is.[67] Neither haste nor mental preoccupation will excuse the exercise of due care.[68] While failure to use one's senses, when such use would have rendered an injury avoidable, is ordinarily contributory negligence,[69] errors of judgment by one in a position of peril are not,[70] though one in such situation must act as an ordinarily prudent man would under like conditions,[71] and one who unnecessarily and negligently places himself in a position of danger cannot invoke the benefit of the doctrine of sudden peril.[72] Some relaxation of the rules of care is also made in owner has performed his duty to keep them safe. Montague v. Hanson [Mont.] 99 P 1063. Care required dependent upon implied assurances of safety. Though tenant walked through door to elevator without looking to see whether or not elevator was there, fact that door was open and that elevator boy stood by it as was customary when waiting for passengers held such an assurance of safety as to make the question of contributory negligence one for the jury. Joliffe v. Miller, 126 App. Div. 763, 111 NYS 406. Not negligence per se for guest at hotel to assume such position in elevator as its construction invites. Fraser v. Harper House Co., 141 Ill. App. 390. Contributory negligence cannot be imputed to one for failure to anticipate a violation of law. Violation of speed ordinance by railroad company. Dukeman v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 237 Ill. 104, 86 NE 712. No contributory negligence under the circumstances in passengers re-entering elevator in absence of operator. Toohy v. McLean, 199 Mass. 466, 85 NE 578. One is justified in relying on the presumption that others will act lawfully. One crossing tracks in front of approaching street car justified in believing that car will not run faster than the rate of speed fixed by ordinance. Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 451. One rightfully sitting on bench in park not negligent in failing to maintain lookout for wagons which might run over his feet. Silverman v. New York, 114 NYS 59.

65. Instruction held not misleading. Douglass v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 63 SE 5. Mere passive negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury, if it directly contributed thereto. Not necessary to show active, affirmative negligence in all cases. McLean v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 100, 61 SE 900.

66. Plaintiff not negligent as matter of law in falling over cake of ice on walk, though he could and would have seen it had his attention not been diverted. Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Bargholt, 33 Ky. L. R. 488, 110 SW 364. Fact that one knows of defect in sewer under walk does not of itself show that he failed to exercise that care which a reasonably prudent man would have exercised in passing along the sidewalk. City Council of Montgomery v. Comer [Ala.] 46 S 761. Momentary forgetfulness of a known danger is no excuse where, under the circumstances, one ought to use due care to remember it. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 518.

67. Negligence in unnecessarily incurring obvious danger not relieved by custom. Perkins v. Oxford Paper Co. [Me.] 71 A 476.

68. Pedestrian crossing street car tracks. Riedel v. Wheeling Trac. Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 SE 821.

69. Such failure being shown a verdict for defendant should be directed. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Baldwin [C. C. A.] 164 F 826.

70. One placed in a position of peril by another's negligence is not chargeable with contributory negligence if he acts in a way that seems prudent to him under the circumstances. Ft. Worth & R. G. Co. v. Eddleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 425; Hull v. Thompson Transfer Co. [Mo. App.] 115 SW 1054; Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r [Va.] 63 SE 1007; Walton v. Miller's Adm'x [Va.] 63 SE 458; Poor v. Madison River Power Co. [Mont.] 99 P 947; Braly v. Fresno City R. Co. [Cal. App.] 99 P 400; Stearns v. Boston & M. R. R. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 21; Sandy v. Swift & Co., 159 F 271; New York Transp. Co. v. O'Donnell [C. C. A.] 159 F 659; American Car & Foundry Co. v. Inzer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 444; Murphy v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 390; Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 118 NW 451; Leonard v. Joline, 61 Misc. 336, 113 NYS 682. Rash or negligent conduct on the part of the plaintiff in attempting to escape from a peril in which defendant's negligence has placed her, and for which she is not responsible because of her fright, is not contributory negligence. Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825. Refusal of instructions embodying this rule error. Id. Instruction that danger must actually exist where requested instruction embodying general rule was refused held clearly erroneous. Id.

71. Davis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 10. Though one working under the high tension of emergency may not be negligent because he has forgotten other dangers, yet he must exercise his faculties for his own protection, and when clearly negligent recovery is barred as in other cases. One who in wheeling a truck ran into an obstacle and while attempting to get around it stepped backward into a hole, the existence of which he well knew, was negligent as a matter of law. Brett v. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 P 1051.

72. Person unnecessarily walking so fast that he could not stop when he saw car approaching. Rundgren v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 201 Mass. 156, 87 NE 189. A person cannot voluntarily and recklessly place himself in danger and then shift the re-case of persons endeavoring to save life [73] or property.[74] The fact that plaintiff was engaged in the performance of an unlawful act when injured is not negligence per se.[75]

Children.[See 10 C. L. 942]—A child is required to exercise only such care as may reasonably be expected from one of its age, understanding and experience,[76] the determination of whether such care was exercised by the child in particular cases being ordinarily for the jury.[77] A presumption of capacity is usually indulged as sponsibility after an injury has been received. Master not liable for furnishing defective appliances, the danger of using which is perfectly obvious and known, or such as ought to be known by the servant. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, 77 Kan. 642, 95 P 1049.

73. Exposure to danger in order to save human life is justified only when the method employed is neither rash nor reckless in the judgment of prudent persons and the danger to the one sought to be saved is imminent. Effort of brakeman to frighten away children who were hanging on to train held unwarranted. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364.

74. It is not contributory negligence per se to attempt to save property from destruction by the negligent act of another. Fire. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 133 Ill. App. 2.

75. Working without permit required by ordinance. McCarthy v. Morse, 197 Mass. 332, 83 NE 1109. Though such fact may be considered by the jury. Id.

76. Moeller v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 133 Mo. App. 68, 112 SW 714; McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crump [Tex.] 115 SW 26; Force v. Standard Silk Co., 160 F 992; Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Rogers, 136 Ill. App. 36; Glynn v. New York City R. Co., 110 NYS 836; Cook v. U. S. Smelting Co., 34 Utah, 190, 97 P 28. Applied to boy of 14. Erie R. Co. v. Welnstein [C. C. A.] 166 F 271; Adkisson's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 33 Ky. L. R. 204, 110 SW 284. Instruction that ordinary care "means that care which a person of his age and condition would have used under similar circumstances" held good as against objection "that the person should be described as one of ordinary prudence," whether an adult or not. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crump [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 1013. Instruction on contributory negligence of twelve-year old boy alleged to be erroneous for failure to mention "experience" of boy held cured, if erroneous, by reference to "like circumstances and like surroundings." Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. Co. v. Fowler, 138 Ill. App. 352. A boy of 17 years is not to be held to the degree of care to be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence without regard to his age. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 758. Whether child was of sufficient age and intelligence to be chargeable with negligence was for the jury. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Coleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 690. Age alone is not the criterion by which a child's capacity is to be determined, but should be submitted to the jury to decide in view of all the circumstances of the case. Instruction fixing standard as "average capacity of children of his age" held erroneous. Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Higgins, 108 Va. 324, 61 SE 766. Instruction should permit jury to determine due care under this rule and not state the degree of knowledge required of child. Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Mach. Co. [Wash.] 99 P 1038. Court did not err in refusing to tell jury what degree of knowledge was required. Id. Though a child is sui juris, he is not held to the same degree of care as an adult, and hence his age and discretion are proper subjects of inquiry by the jury. Child of 10. Colehour v. Rockford & Interurban R. Co., 132 Ill. App. 558. Instruction erroneous in not correctly stating degree of care required. Decatur Amusement Park Co. v. Porter, 137 Ill. App. 448. To justify an instruction embodying this rule it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove the extent of these qualities. McGuire v. Richard Guthmann Transfer Co., 234 Ill. 125, 84 NE 723. The word "capacity" means ability to learn by experience and does not include experience itself. Fowler v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 234 Ill. 619, 85 NE 298. In action against storekeeper for sale of gun powder to boy of twelve, the latter's negligence held for the jury. McEldon v. Drew, 138 Iowa, 390, 116 NW 147.

77. It must be a strong case to justify a court in holding, as a matter of law, that a child of 12 years of age is guilty of contributory negligence. McEldon v. Drew, 138 Iowa, 390, 116 NW 147. Child of 4½ years old not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law in wandering around seed room containing dangerous machinery. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289. Child of 4 years injured on turntable where he was taken by other children, as a matter of law, was not guilty of contributory negligence. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27. Bright boy of 13 years negligent as matter of law in attempting to cross track in front of approaching train. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33. Child under 25 months old not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in going and remaining on railroad track though train is approaching. Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 787. Fact that parents warned child of danger of playing around gas pipes beside street but that child was in middle of street when struck by pipe started rolling by other children refutes charge of contributory negligence. O'Hara v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 131 Mo. App. 428, 110 SW 642. Whether child was guilty of contributory negligence in coming in contact with loose wire suspended from electric wires held, under the evidence, for the jury. Bourbaker v. Kansas City Elec. Light Co., 130 Mo. App. 439, to children above a certain age,[78] and below such age the presumption is of incapacity,[79] and as to infants below the age of seven this presumption is sometimes absolute,[80] though in some states this presumption is not recognized.[81]

Comparative negligence.[See 10 C. L. 943]—In some few jurisdictions degrees of negligence are recognized and the negligence of the parties will be compared,[82] but 110 SW 12; Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 787. Child of 4 years not guilty of contributory negligence in going upon railroad track. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. [Idaho] 99 P 91. Whether child of 8 years was sui juris or non sui juris was a question of fact to be determined by the evidence under the existing circumstances, and court erred in holding, under the evidence, that child was sui juris as a matter of law. Corsale v. Facini, 111 NYS 779. Where child's injury from dynamite explosion might have been caused by his intentionally striking it or by coming in contact with it accidentally, the probabilities being equal, a verdict should be directed for defendant unless plaintiff may recover on either view of the facts. It must be assumed in such case that the child intentionally struck the dynamite, but this does not include an assumption that he intentionally exploded it or that he knew he ought to let it alone. Hobbs v. Blanchard & Sons Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1082. Care required of child of seven years in crossing tracks on the evidence as to intelligence and ability to care for itself, and under the particular circumstances, held for jury. Simkoff v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 190 N. Y. 256, 83 NE 15. Under no view of the evidence was a lack of contributory negligence shown where child 9 years old was struck by horse. Russo v. Charles S. Brown Co., 198 Mass. 473, 84 NE 840. Contributory negligence held for jury in injury at railroad crossing, where train came from unexpected direction, though evidence did not show that plaintiff looked in that direction before crossing. Fowler v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 234 Ill. 619, 85 NE 298. Evidence held to show children killed at crossing were negligent as a matter of law, train being visible for long distance and ample opportunity to turn from road traveled. Clemons v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 Wis. 387, 114 NW 102. Where plaintiff, a child of about four years of age, playing ball on sidewalk, went into street to get a ball which had rolled there, his contributory negligence to an injury received by being run over while so doing was for the jury. Grotzky v. Rosary Flower Co., 61 Misc. 99, 113 NYS 117. Negligence of child of seven injured by being run over held for jury. Guthmann Transfer Co. v. McGuire, 138 Ill. App. 162. Child of 8 years and 10 months old held negligent in attempting to pass in front of approaching train. Downey v. Baton Rouge Elec. & Gas Co. [La.] 47 S 837.

78. An infant, after reaching the age of 14 years, is presumed to have sufficient discretion and understanding to be responsible for his wrongs, to be sensible of his danger and to avoid it. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 875. The burden of proving the incapacity of a child over 14 years of age is upon the party alleging it. Id. There is no precise age at which a child is to be held accountable for all his actions to the same extent as one of full age. There is no conclusive presumption that a boy of 12 years is able to foresee and avoid dangers. Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 P 84.

79. A child between 7 and 14 years of age is presumed to be incapable of contributory negligence, but this presumption may be overcome by the evidence and circumstances of the case tending to prove his maturity and capacity. Jury should be so instructed. Norfolk R. & Light Co. v. Higgins, 108 Va. 324, 61 SE 766. Children sui juris are capable of contributory negligence. Child of 10 is sui juris. Colehour v. Rockford & Interurban R. Co., 132 Ill. App. 558. There is a rebuttable presumption of incapacity of children between 7 and 14 years of age to appreciate obvious dangers. Goodwin v. Columbia Mills Co., 80 S. C. 349, 61 SE 390.

80. A child under the age of seven cannot be charged with contributory negligence. Schneider v. Winkler, 74 N. J. Law, 71, 70 A 731. Contributory negligence cannot be imputed to a child less than 7 years old. Hackett v. Chicago City R. Co., 235 Ill. 116, 85 NE 320. Though a child may be incapable of contributory negligence, it may be necessary for plaintiff to show its situation and conduct as bearing on the issue of negligence. 4 year old child injured by street car. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 553.

81. An infant, whether sui juris or non sui juris, must exercise such reasonable care in avoiding the injury of which he complains as can fairly be expected of a child of his age, natural capacity, intelligence, physical condition, training, experience, habits of life and surroundings. Infant of 4½ years not relieved of all duty of exercising care on his own account. Ardolino v. Reinhardt, 114 NYS 508. The age at which a child becomes sui juris is not fixed in years, in New York, even as a presumption of fact capable of being rebutted by evidence, but is variable and generally for the jury. Error to hold turning point at twelve years of age as matter of law. Batchelor v. Degnon Realty Ter. Imp. Co., 115 NYS 93.

82. Where the doctrine of comparative negligence prevails, plaintiff can recover only where his negligence is less than that of the defendant. Civ. Code of 1895, § 2322, interpreted. Macon R. & L. Co. v. Carger, 4 Ga. App. 477, 61 SE 882. Under this doctrine plaintiff's negligence is material not only on the question of diminution of damages but on the right to recover on all, since, if his negligence is as great as defendant's, recovery is barred. Id. Plaintiff may recover where his negligence is only slight or remote. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Walters [Kan.] 96 P 346. Mere fact that plaintiff deviated from the highway in crossing tracks, when his purpose to cross was not thereby in most states this doctrine is repudiated,[88] degrees of negligence being ordinarily measured only by the exigencies of each particular case.[84]

The last clear chance doctrine See 10 C. L. 948 is merely a phase of proximate cause [85] in which the negligence of him who fails to avail himself of a last clear chance to avoid an injury by the exercise of ordinary care is deemed the proximate cause of the injury,[86] the most frequent application being to charge with negligence one who, having discovered the peril in which another has negligently placed himself, fails to exercise ordinary care to avert injury,[87] knowledge of the peril or obscured, did not absolve railroad company from liability for its negligence. Southern R. Co. v. Fisk [C. C. A.] 159 F 373. Where both the parties are at fault, damages are to be apportioned according to the degree. Florida R. Co. v. Sturkey [Fla.] 48 S 34.

83. Weir v. Haverford Elec. L. Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Walters [Kan.] 96 P 346; Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. Wheeler [Ala.] 46 S 262; McLean v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 100, 61 SE 900; Miller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 135 Wis. 247, 115 NW 794; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 108 SW 480; Felver v. Central Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 980. Negligence of plaintiff contributing proximately to his injury will bar recovery, though defendant's negligence was much greater. Memphis, Consol. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Simpson [Tenn.] 109 SW 1155. At common law, if plaintiff's negligence materially contributed to the injury, his action is absolutely barred, irrespective of the defendant's negligence. Tuten v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 4 Ga. App. 353, 61 SE 511. The doctrine of comparative negligence and consequent apportionment of damages was adopted from admiralty law, and is embodied in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2322, 3830, but injury having been received in a common-law state, common-law rule prevailed. Id.

84. Even degrees of care are now abolished, the question always being, has the care demanded by the peculiar circumstances been exercised in the particular case; if so there is no negligence, if not there is negligence. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Walters [Kan.] 96 P 346.

85. See ante, § 3.

86. Where, by the exercise of ordinary care, defendant might have avoided the injury notwithstanding plaintiff's precedent negligence, such negligence does not exculpate the defendant from liability. Child of four years injured by train on railroad track. Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co. [Idaho] 99 P 91. Contributory negligence is no defense against a case of discovered peril. St. Louis, B. & M. R. Co. v. Droddy [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 902; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Alleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 73. By basing his action upon the humanitarian doctrine, plaintiff admits contributory negligence. The humanitarian theory raises the question whether defendant could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen plaintiff in time to have avoided injury to him, regardless of contributory negligence. Felver v. Central Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 980. Negligence which is not the proximate cause of the injury will not bar a recovery, since it is not contributory negligence but merely a condition which the other party must, in the exercise of due care, observe. Fact that one was on street car track when killed did not of itself render him contributorily negligent. Pilmer v. Boise Trac. Co., 14 Idaho, 327, 94 P 432. Fact that plaintiff attempted to cross street car tracks in city without looking or listening did not bar recovery for motorman's subsequent negligence. Id. Refusal to charge that negligence of decedent in going on track barred recovery unless defendant negligently failed to avoid injuring him after seeing his peril held error. Gregg v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 49 Wash. 183, 94 P 911. Applied to railroad company after seeing peril of one negligently on track. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Baker [Okl.] 95 P 433. The foundation of the humanitarian doctrine is that no person has a right knowingly and negligently to injure another, when he knows, or should know, if he is reasonably careful, that his fellow is in danger of injury at his hands and he possesses the means of removing that danger. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 472, 112 SW 9.

87. Defendant liable if motorman could have avoided collision with ice wagon after seeing the danger thereof, notwithstanding negligence of driver. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Sine, 33 Ky. L. R. 792, 111 SW 356. The humanitarian rule or last clear chance doctrine applies where plaintiff has negligently placed himself in a position of peril, which defendant discovered, or by the exercise of ordinary care would have discovered, in time to avoid injury. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33. Rule as to discovered peril does not apply to section hand who remains on track after all his companions have gotten off, since trainmen may assume that he will get off also before train reaches him. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104. Contributory negligence does not bar recovery for railroad accident where, after discovery of peril of person injured trainmen could, by any means within their power consistent with safety of train, have avoided the injury. Missouri, K. & T. Co. v. Reynolds [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 340. Motorman must exercise due care toward person he sees on track regardless of their negligence. Felver v. Central Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 980. Doctrine not applicable under the evidence where child was run over by street car. Norfolk R. & L. Co. v. Higgins, 108 Va. 324, 61 SE 766. Duty of engineer, when he sees one on track and has notice of his inability to save himself, to use every effort to avoid injuring him. Beach v. Southern R. Co., 148 N. C. 153, 61 SE 664. Where plaintiff's passage across street car track was prevented by congested traffic, and the conditions did not permit of with-reasonable ground to apprehend it being necessary to charge one with such subsequent negligence.[88] The doctrine applies to exclude contributory negligence only when defendant's negligence is subsequent to plaintiff's[89] or at least where no subsequent negligence of plaintiff precluded defendant's opportunity to avert the injury.[90]

Imputed negligence. See 10 C. L. 944—Except where the relation of master and servant exists,[91] the negligence of the driver of a vehicle cannot be imputed to pas-

drawing from the danger, motorman who saw her danger should have used every reasonable effort to avoid collision. Bladecka v. Bay City Trac. & Elec. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 965, 118 NW 963. Evidence held to show that motorman was negligent in running into plaintiff. Id. The rule that one who, through his own negligence, places himself in a position of danger, is precluded from recovery for injuries inflicted by another, is subject to the exception that where his peril and inability or lack of effort to escape therefrom are discovered, or should be discovered, by defendant, the duty becomes imperative for the defendant to use reasonable care to avoid the injury, and if this is not done he becomes liable notwithstanding the negligence of the injured party. Whether engineer could have avoided injury held for the jury. Neary v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 461, 97 P 944. Where defendant, after becoming aware of the peril in which plaintiff has negligently placed himself, fails to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him and such failure is the proximate cause of the injury, plaintiff's negligence is no defense. Nichols v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808. Contributory negligence is no bar to an action where the party injured is, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been, found in a place of danger in time to have prevented the accident by the exercise of ordinary care. King v. Wabash R. Co., 211 Mo. 1, 109 SW 671. Contributory negligence in placing oneself in a position of peril is no defense to charge of failure on defendant's part to use ordinary care to avoid injury after discovery of the peril. St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Summers [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 211. Facts held to establish discovered peril. Id. Contributory negligence in incurring danger does not bar recovery for an injury where the peril is discovered by defendant in time to avoid injury by the exercise of ordinary care. Morgan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 978.

88. Complaint insufficient to bring case within the "last clear chance" doctrine, where it did not show that defendant knew of plaintiff's danger in time to avoid accident. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Bray [Ind. App.] 84 NE 1004. Peril which is "apparent" or "reasonably apparent" is known peril. As related to discovery of trainmen of peril of one on track. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Reynolds [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 340. Where the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence, he must, in order to recover, show that defendant saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, his danger and avoided injury to him. Trigg v. Water, Light & Transit Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 972. Arises where the circumstances are such that an ordinarily prudent person would have reason to apprehend the existence of such negligence. Nichols v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808. The doctrine is not limited to those cases where plaintiff's peril is known but extends to those where, by the exercise of ordinary care, it should have been known. Id. Last clear chance doctrine not applicable where trainmen had right to assume that one would not attempt to cross tracks in front of rapidly approaching train, and where peril was realized it was too late to avoid it. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r [Va.] 63 SE 1007.

89. Defendant's negligence before plaintiff has created the danger by his own negligence cannot be held a failure to save the latter from his own want of care. Stearns v. Boston & M. R. Co. [N. H.] 71 A 21. One who drives across car tracks immediately in front of car with full realization of danger cannot invoke the doctrine. Kinlen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 523. Negligence of decedent in attempting to cross track in front of approaching train held proximate cause of injury even though trainmen were guilty of prior negligence. Sutton v. Lee Logging Co., 121 La. 557, 46 S 649. Where the negligence of both parties continues up to the last moment, no element of the last clear chance doctrine is presented. Muse v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 102.

90. The fact that plaintiff's negligence continued to the moment of injury and is coincident with the negligence of defendant does not preclude a recovery for defendant's failure to perform a humanitarian duty arising from the fact that the plaintiff has placed himself in a position of peril. Cole v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 440, 113 SW 684.

91. There can be no such thing as imputable negligence except in such cases where such a relation exists as that of master and servant or of principal and agent; they must stand in such relation of privity that the maxim "Qui facit per alium facit per se" directly applies. Nonn v. Chicago City R. Co., 232 Ill. 378, 83 NE 924. The negligence of one party will not be imputed to another unless they sustain such relation to each other in regard to the matter in hand that, upon the principal of agency or co-operation in a common enterprise, the negligence of one is that of both. Nothing in the relation of lessor and lessee to preclude recovery by the latter for injuries occasioned by excavations by a third party, though the lessor may have contributed to the injury. Contos v. Jamison, 81 S. C. 488, 62 SE 867. The negligence of one party will not be imputed to another who neither authorized it, nor participated therein, nor had the right or power to control it. Id. Where owner of cotton delivered it to compress company, its destruc-

sengers therein,[92] though one may be negligent in entrusting his safety to the driver if he have equal opportunity to observe the peril.[93] In most jurisdictions the negligence of a parent is not imputed to a child in an action for the latter's benefit,[94] nor is the negligence of a husband imputable to his wife.[95] In an action for the parent's benefit, his negligence may be imputed to a child.[96] Negligence of a bailee cannot ordinarily be imputed to the owner.[97] The question of imputed negligence is ordinarily one of fact, [98, 99] unless there has been a voluntary noncontractual surrender of all care by one party to the other. The doctrine of contributory negligence of a fellow-servant cannot be invoked by a stranger against an injured party.[1]

§ 5. Actions.[2]—See 19 C. L. 945 Pleading.—The declaration or complaint See 19 C. L. 945 must state all facts constituting the cause of action,[3] including defend-tion caused by negligence of company was not imputable to owner since neither the relation of master and servant nor principal and agent existed between them. Sea Ins. Co. of Liverpool v. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 676. Negligence of bailee not imputed to bailor where relation of agency or master and servant does not exist. Id. Negligence of driver not imputable to person riding with him, since the facts brought case within above rule. Chicago City R. Co. v. Nonn, 133 Ill. App. 365. Negligence may be imputed where one is injured through the contributory negligence of another while that other is acting either under his direction or with his consent and approval, or where by his own act he directs or controls the other. Id.

92. Negligence of driver of ice wagon in driving on street car tracks not imputable to man on rear of wagon, they being fellow-servants with no control over each other's acts. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Sine, 33 Ky. L. R. 792, 111 SW 356. Plaintiff riding with driver of truck held not chargeable with negligence of driver in crossing street car track. Caminez v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 127 App. Div. 138, 111 NYS 384. Negligence of automobile driver not imputable to passenger. Chadbourne v. Springfield St. R. Co., 199 Mass. 574, 85 NE 737. Negligence of automobile driver in running into excavation in street could not be imputed to passenger, provided jury found accident would not have happened but for city's negligence. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Maryland [C. C. A.] 166 F 641.

93. Negligence of driver in going upon railroad track held imputable to passenger who sat beside him and made no objection. Davis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 10.

94. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Flinn [Ark.] 115 SW 142. Negligence of custodian of child of twelve years not imputable to child in action by his administrator. Congee v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 31 App. D. C. 139. Contributory negligence of the parents of a child fifteen months old killed by being run over by a train will not be imputed to the child. Southern R. Co. v. Forrister [Ala.] 48 S 69. In an action by an infant in its own right, the negligence of the parents cannot be imputed to it. Neff v. Cameron, 213 Mo. 350, 111 SW 1139. See this case for discussion of the doctrine. Id. Where an infant sues in its own right, its parents' negligence is not imputable to it. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27.

95. Hence the fact that his negligence concurs with that of a third person to cause her injury does not bar her recovery. Louisville R. Co. v. McCarthy [Ky.] 112 SW 925. Negligence of husband in driving on tracks not imputable to wife riding with him. Bohlen v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 261.

96. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27.

97. Not where liveryman hired out horse and wagon to employe and injury resulted from collision with street car. Currie v. Consolidated R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 356.

98, 99. Peabody v. Haverhill, etc., R. Co., 200 Mass. 277, 85 NE 1051.

1. Where plaintiff was without negligence, negligence of driver of vehicle whom he was assisting in delivery of goods cannot be availed of as negligence of fellow-servant by street railway injuring plaintiff. Nonn v. Chicago City R. Co., 232 Ill. 378, 83 NE 924.

3. The complaint must show the duty its breach and injury proximately caused thereby. Poteet v. Blossom Oil & Cotton Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 289; Greinke v. Chicago City R. Co., 234 Ill. 564, 85 NE 327; German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740; Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. [Fla.] 46 S 732; Town of Newcastle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 767; City of Lafayette v. West [Ind.] 87 NE 550. Where cause of action was for the frightening of a horse by negligently leaving hand car in street, complaint was bad for failure to allege that hand car was calculated to frighten horses. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vansant [Ala.] 48 S 389. In action against electric light company for injuries caused by glass falling from street lamp broken by slipping trolley pole on street car, declaration should allege slipping of pole was not due to railway company's negligence, simple averment that pole slipped "accidentally" being insufficient. Nelson v. Narragansett Elec. L. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 1001. Declaration in action against theatre proprietor for injury caused by bi-ant's duty,[4] his violation thereof,[5] and injury proximately resulting therefrom.[6] When the action is based upon the violation of an ordinance, the complaint should set out its due enactment, present effect and substance.[7] Though it is often said that negligence may be pleaded generally,[8] specific averment of facts is ordinarily cycle rider's running off stage into audience, which avers a duty to provide "protection" for the audience, is not demurrable on the ground that no duty existed to "erect barriers which would prevent the audience from seeing the performance," since such means were not necessary to afford protection. Brown v. Batchellor [R. I.] 69 A 295. Where the gravamen of an action is the alleged nonfeasance or misfeasance of another, as a general rule it is sufficient if the complaint avers the facts out of which the duty arises, and the failure in its performance. It is not necessary to specify the particular acts of diligence which should have been exercised in the performance of such duty. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Church [Ala.] 46 S 457. It must in every case show the existence of a duty, a failure in its performance, and resulting injury to plaintiff. Wabash R. Co. v. Reynolds, 41 Ind. App. 678, 84 NE 992. Certain counts sufficiently charged negligence in failure to provide suitable protection against drowning in swimming pool kept by defendant, while other counts were defective. Decatur Amusement Park Co. v. Porter, 137 Ill. App. 448.

4. Hone v. Presque Isle Water Co. [Me.] 71 A 769; Flanagan v. Wells Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 82, 86 NE 609. The complaint must allege facts sufficient to fix responsibility upon defendant. In action for injuries occasioned by defective premises, allegation that defendant had leased a "portion or all" thereof held merely an averment that it had leased a portion, and the accident not being shown to have occurred on such portion was insufficient. Martin v. Louisville & J. Bridge Co., 41 Ind. App. 493, 84 NE 360. Averment of lack of due care sufficient, it being construed to mean no care or slight care and not the highest degree of care, since it does not import the latter. Lay v. Elk Ridge Coal & Coke Co [W. Va.] 61 SE 156. Averment that place of injury was a public street and that plaintiff was a traveler thereon sufficiently showed city's duty to plaintiff. City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995. Where negligence is based upon defendant's knowledge of a dangerous defect in his premises and a failure to repair them, facts showing a knowledge of the need of repairs or facts from which such knowledge may be inferred must be alleged. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Pierson, 170 Ind. 543, 84 NE 1088. Complaint good as against objection that it failed to allege defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's presence near blasting operations, where it alleged failure to give notice of the setting off of a blast. Sloss Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Salser [Ala.] 48 S 374. Failure to negative fact that plaintiff was trespasser immaterial, since negligent injury even to trespasser would render defendant liable. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dalton [Ky.] 113 SW 842. If injury to pedestrian on railroad track occurred where no lookout was required and trainmen did not discover plaintiff's peril in time to avoid injuring him, this was a matter of defense which plaintiff was not required to negative. Id. Under the rule that pleadings are to be liberally construed on demurrer, an allegation that plaintiff was "lawfully" upon premises was held to allege that she was there by invitation, though a mere licensee might be lawfully upon premises. Stern v. Miller, 111 NYS 659.

5. Must state time of negligence. Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & Ice Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032. Allegation that building material was left in street "without" guards sufficiently positive negation of existence of guards. City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995.

6. Leynes v. Tampa Foundry & Mach. Co. [Fla.] 47 S 918. A petition which, though it alleges acts of negligence, shows that the injury did not proximately result from the acts of negligence specified, is bad on demurrer. Ayers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 530. Held insufficient as not showing that being caught by loose telephone wire was cause of being thrown from wagon. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Pierson, 170 Ind. 543, 84 NE 1088. Complaint held to sufficiently charge that excessive rate of speed of locomotive and absence of signals and warning was proximate cause of injury. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Houghland [Ind. App.] 65 NE 369. Where injury was caused by falling blind, a simple allegation that it fell by reason of defendant's negligence in failing to have it securely fastened to the building was all that was necessary, yet in this case a more lengthy averment fell short of this essential allegation. Lawless v. August, 125 App. Div. 708, 110 NYS 86. Held sufficient in action for injuries sustained by horse becoming frightened at hand car negligently left in street. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vansant [Ala.] 48 S 389. Petition held to sufficiently allege that negligence complained of was proximate cause of injury. Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567. Complaint in action by passenger against carrier held to show that defendant's negligence was proximate cause of injury. Pullman Co. v. Hoyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 315. That master's negligence in regard to place of work was proximate cause of servant's injury held sufficiently alleged as against demurrer. Fearon v. Mullins [Mont.] 98 P 650.

7. A declaration must either set out the manner in which the alleged acts of negligence caused the injury with sufficient particularity to advise the defendant of the case she has to meet or to charge in terms that defendant's negligence was the cause of the injury. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Pierson, 170 Ind. 543, 84 NE 1088. A complaint which avers that a train was run at thirty miles per hour in violation of an ordinance adopted by the city limiting the speed to six miles per hour, that the ordinance was in force at the time and setting it forth, directly avers that such ordinance was in force. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers [Ind. App.] 87 NE 28.

8. Murray v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.]

requisite,[9] and specific averments following general will be taken as specifications thereon.[10] It is sometimes said that the acts relied on must be specifically characterized as negligence.[11] The pleading must clearly show whether it seeks to recover for negligence or willful injury.[12] As in other cases, neither evidentiary facts[13] nor conclusions[14] should be pleaded. Several distinct acts of negligence

115 SW 821; Chicago City R. Co. v. Ratner, 133 Ill. App. 628; Birmingham, R. L. & P. Co. v. Haggard [Ala.] 46 S 519; Crane v. Congleton [Ky.] 116 SW 341. The specific acts constituting the negligence need not be alleged. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dalton [Ky.] 113 SW 842. In pleading negligence, it is sufficient as against a demurrer for want of facts to characterize the act which caused the injury as having been negligently done. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Bray [Ind. App.] 84 NE 1004. But it is necessary to directly and plainly allege facts showing a legal duty owing by the alleged wrongdoer to the party injured. Id. The violation of that duty is that act which may be characterized as negligently performed or omitted. Id.; Lexington R. Co. v. Britton [Ky.] 114 SW 295. A general allegation of negligence is sufficient to withstand a demurrer for want of facts. Apperson v. Lazro [Ind. App.] 87 NE 97. As a rule negligence may be pleaded generally, it being an ultimate fact and not a conclusion of law. Allegation of negligence in constructing, putting in, operating and maintaining defective system of wires admitted proof of negligent operation consisting of specific acts, in absence of a special demurrer. Younie v. Blackfoot Light & Water Co. [Idaho] 96 P 193. Where the mere happening of an accident calls for an explanation, specific allegations of its cause are not required. As where bicycle rider in theatre rode off the stage into audience. Brown v. Batchellor [R. I.] 69 A 295.

9. Complaint by parents for loss of services of child through injuries held to sufficiently itemize injuries. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Chastain [Ala.] 48 S 85. In common-law actions the negligence relied on must be averred in direct and positive terms, or such facts must be stated as to compel the presumption that the injury sued for was caused by defendant's negligence. Complaint insufficient in action against carrier. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Schepman [Ind.] 84 NE 988. Necessary to aver specific acts of negligence. Inman & Co. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 159 F 960. The negligence relied on must be directly and specifically charged, or facts must be alleged which force an inference of negligence proximately causing the injury. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins [Ind.] 86 NE 405. Positive and direct averment that night was dark unnecessary when the facts show that the accident occurred in the night time. City of Laporte v. Osborn [Ind. App.] 86 NE 995. The manner in which the injury was received must be stated with sufficient accuracy. Allegation that belt broke and a piece thereof flew off and struck plaintiff in the right eye held sufficient. Dittman v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 125 App. Div. 691, 110 NYS 87. The complaint must aver in direct terms the acts or omissions of the defendant that are relied on as constituting negligence. It is not sufficient that they appear by way of recital or unnecessary inference. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Abegglen, 41 Ind. App. 603, 84 NE 566. Theory that plaintiff's lose of presence of mind was defendant's negligence insufficiently pleaded. Id.

10. Where a general charge of negligence is followed by specifications of particular acts, the specifications are deemed explanatory of the general charge. Hence plaintiff is confined to proof of the acts specified. Thompson v. Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co., 214 Mo. 487, 113 SW 1128. The real inquiry in construing such a pleading is: What must defendant have understood by it? Id. General allegation merged in specific except where action originates in justice court. Under a general charge of negligence, followed by allegations of specific acts, evidence of negligence not specified was admissible under the general charge, since no formality of pleading is required in justice court where action originated. Dalton v. United R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 561. Where a general charge of negligence is followed by allegation of specific acts, the proof is limited to such acts. Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co. v. Ballard [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 93. Specific allegations control general ones. As to happening of accident and negligence imputed to defendant. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 NE 9. Declaration held to show that slipping of plaintiff's foot whereby he was caught by car was proximate cause of injury, and no negligence being specifically charged as having caused his foot to slip, demurrer was good. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 170 Ind. 222, 84 NE 9.

11. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not raised by averments of specific acts of negligence, there being no averment of negligence generally. Crawford v. Chicago Union Trac. Co., 137 Ill. App. 163.

12. Complaint held to charge simple negligence as distinguished from wanton or willful misconduct. Hobdy v. Manistee Mili Co. [Ala.] 47 S 69. Petition construed as based not on negligence but on willful and wanton acts. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Moore [Ga. App.] 63 SE 642. Complaint held to sufficiently charge willful and wanton misconduct. Birmingham, R. L. & P. Co. v. Hoggard [Ala.] 46 S 519. Allegations insufficient to show a willful injury. Wabash R. Co. v. Reynolds, 41 Ind. App. 678, 84 NE 992. An allegation of gross and wanton negligence permits a recovery upon proof of ordinary negligence. Gorton v. Hannon, 152 Mich. 473, 15 Det. Leg. N. 250, 116 NW 443.

13. Declaration held to plead evidence. Elgin A. & S. R. Trac. Co. v. Wilcox, 132 Ill. App. 446.

14. Averment held mere conclusion of law. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hamilton [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1044. Mere conclusion that injury resulted from negligent conduct of defendant is insufficient. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Wheeler's Adm'r, 108 Va. 448, 62 SE 269.

may be counted on[15] if not repugnant.[16] An action for common-law negligence and an action for breach of a city ordinance cannot be joined.[17] Contributory negligence need not ordinarily be negatived,[18] and allegations to that end are surplusage,[19] but if the facts alleged show that plaintiff was negligent, the declaration is demurrable,[20] and statutes sometimes provide for a general denial by plaintiff of his negligence.[21] An ambiguous complaint will be construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff.[22] Defects in pleading may be cured as in other cases by verdict and judgment.[23]

Answer. See 10 C. L. 947—While contributory negligence may be availed of without plea if it appears by plaintiff's evidence[24] or was proved without objection,[25]

Allegations as to duty of telephone company under ordinance held conclusive. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Pierson, 170 Ind. 543, 84 NE 1088. Averment that plaintiff was thrown from car platform because trains were not vestibuled as advertised held conclusive. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Lehepenan [Ind.] 84 NE 988.

15. Plaintiff is not limited as to the acts of negligence, but may plead in the same count several acts not inconsistent with each other, either of which, or all of which together, might have produced the result complained of. This is not stating more than one cause of action. Thompson v. Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co., 214 Mo. 487, 113 SW 1128. It is therefore competent to include in one count an act or acts constituting negligence at common law, and an act or acts of negligence arising under a statute or ordinance, all pointing to the same result. Id. As many acts of negligence may be charged as relate to the injury complained of. Master and servant case. Crane v. Congleton [Ky.] 116 SW 341.

16. Acts specified held consistent. Heinzle v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 213 Mo. 102, 111 SW 536. Allegations that injury was caused by sudden starting of cars, and also that it was caused by sudden stopping of car after starting, held consistent. Alten v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 425, 113 SW 691. Repugnancy between counts is not fatal to the declaration, it being good practice to vary the statements in different counts to meet the various phases of the testimony. Seal v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 108 Va. 86, 62 SE 795. Declaration averring decedent's due care, and also that he was so drunk that he was unable to care for himself, bad for repugnancy. Keeshan v. Elgin, A. & S. Trac. Co., 132 Ill. App. 416.

17. Advantage of such misjoinder should be taken by demurrer. Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 625, 113 SW 713.

18. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Abegglen, 41 Ind. App. 603, 84 NE 566; Simeoli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546; Smith v. Delaware River Amusement Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 970; Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 950; Davis Adm'r v. Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Co., 32 Ky. L. R. 627, 106 SW 843; Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak [Ind.] 81 NE 229; Murray v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 115 SW 821. Mere failure to explain plaintiff's purpose in leaving seat in car and going upon platform does not show negligence as a matter of law. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Young [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 764. The burden of showing contributory negligence being on defendant by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 362. A complaint is good against a demurrer on that ground unless it alleges facts which overthrow the presumption against contributory negligence. City of Lafayette v. West [Ind.] 87 NE 550. Complaint held not to overthrow presumption against contributory negligence. Id.

19. Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825. Conclusion that plaintiff was without fault not fatal, since contributory negligence is a matter of defense. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Lyons [Ga. App.] 63 SE 862.

20. Smith v. Southern R. Co., 80 S. C. 1, 61 SE 205. Petition held to negative fact that plaintiff was trespasser and not to show that he was guilty of contributory negligence, so as to place the burden upon him of showing by other facts that he was not negligent. El Paso Electric R. Co. v. Ryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 906.

21. Under Acts 1899, p. 58, c. 41, an averment in the complaint that there was no contributory negligence entitled plaintiff to a submission of that issue to the jury, unless the facts stated compel the legal conclusion that there was contributory negligence. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lynn [Ind.] 85 NE 999.

22. Use of word willful in last paragraph of complaint held to render it ambiguous at most, and where the complaint otherwise stated a cause of action for simple negligence, which was supported by the proof, such paragraph was dropped from consideration. Robinson v. Helena L. & R. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 837.

23. Averments of contributory negligence, if insufficiently specific, held cured. Kirkpatrick v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 855. Failure to allege due care of parents in action for death of child held cured by verdict. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Warriner, 132 Ill. App. 301.

24. But if plaintiff's evidence shows such negligence, the court may take the case from the jury on demurrer to the evidence, though it was not pleaded. Sissell v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104; Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 131.

25. While contributory negligence must ordinarily be pleaded to be available as a defense, yet where both parties introduce evidence on that issue and the court proceeds upon the assumption that it was pleaded, and no attention is called to its absence until the last argument is being made, it is not error to instruct on the law it cannot be affirmatively shown unless pleaded.[26] The plea is in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance,[27] but, when joined with the general issue, does not admit defendant's negligence.[28] It is subject to the same rules as the pleading of actionable negligence.[29]

Reply.—The plea of contributory negligence must be traversed.[30]

Issues and variance.[See 10 C. L. 949]—Where negligence is specifically alleged, material variance is fatal,[31] but where it is alleged generally, any specific acts within of contributory negligence. Webster v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 81 S. C. 46, 61 SE 1080.

26. American Bolt Co. v. Fennell [Ala.] 48 S 97; Collins v. Fillingham, 129 Mo. App. 340, 108 SW 616; Hebeler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 551, 112 SW 34; Knight v. Donnelly Bros., 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687; Sissell v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104; Von Trebra v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 209 Mo. 648, 108 SW 559. Hence a general denial to a complaint which alleges an absence of contributory negligence does not put that allegation in issue. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Peck [Kan.] 100 P 54; Kenny v. Kennedy [Cal. App.] 99 P 384; O'Brien Co. v. Omaha Water Co. [Neb.] 118 NW 1110. Disapproving Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 55 Neb. 748, 76 NW 462, and Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lagerkrans, 65 Neb. 566, 91 NW 358, 95 NW 2; Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1013; Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co. [Mont.] 99 P 131. Evidence of contributory negligence is admissible under a general denial. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers [Ind. App.] 87 NE 28.

27. Answer held to directly negative the cause of action where it alleged that plaintiff's negligence was sole cause of injury, and hence did not plead contributory negligence. Ramp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 700, 114 SW 59. The question of negligence is not in issue, where defendant prays for a directed verdict because of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Booth v. McLean Const. Co. [Md.] 70 A 104.

28. Birmingham R. L. P. Co. v. Haggard [Ala.] 46 S 519. Contributory negligence is not inconsistent with general denial. Litchtenstein v. Hudepohl Brew. Co., 11 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 441.

29. Answer held to sufficiently plead contributory negligence as against objection that it set forth merely a legal conclusion. Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 214 Mo. 515, 113 SW 1104. A failure to aver that plaintiff's knowledge or means of knowledge of danger was equal to that of defendant is not necessarily fatal. Absence of such averment immaterial, when inexperienced employe was working on dangerous machinery without adequate instructions. Simioli v. Derby Rubber Co. [Conn.] 71 A 546. An answer in personal injury case, which sets forth an act or omission of plaintiff, characterizes it as negligent, and alleges that it caused or contributed to injury complained of, is sufficient to tender affirmative issue of contributory negligence. Lincoln Trac. Co. v. Brookover, 77 Neb. 217, 111 NW 357. Plea held sufficient to admit evidence that plaintiff, though warned, knowingly encountered danger of running train at high rate of speed around a curve. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958.

30. Otherwise a verdict for defendant should be directed on the pleadings. Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 112 SW 874.

31. Recovery must be had, of it all, upon the breach of duty charged. South Shore Gas & Elec. Co. v. Ambre [Ind.] 87 NE 246; Jones v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 4. Plaintiff may not plead one cause of action and recover on another, for charging specific acts of negligence is equivalent to admitting that there were no other acts on defendant's part which caused or contributed to the injury. Beave v. St. Louis Transit Co., 212 Mo. 331, 111 SW 52. Where negligence is alleged specifically, no recovery can be had for negligence not alleged. St. Louis, B. & M. R. Co. v. Droddy [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 902; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 48 S 99; Hackett v. Chicago City R. Co., 235 Ill. 116, 85 NE 320; Chicago & Eastern Ill. R. Co. v. Walker, 137 Ill. App. 428; Hagen v. Schlenter, 236 Ill. 467, 86 NE 112; St. Jean v. Lippitt Woolen Co. [R. I.] 69 A 604; City of San Antonio v. Wildenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 231; Lexington R. Co. v. Britton [Ky.] 114 SW 295; Crane v. Congleton [Ky.] 116 SW 341; Murray v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 115 SW 821; Miller v. Kenosha Elec. R. Co., 135 Wis. 68, 115 NW 355; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Elrod [Kan.] 98 P 215. No variance is material unless it actually misleads. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards [Mo.] 114 SW 1057; Knicely v. West Virginia M. R. Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 811. No material variance between allegation that plaintiff was injured while climbing down side of car and proof that injury occurred while he was climbing down a ladder at the rear with his hand extended around to a hook on the side. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. Allegation that passenger was injured by sudden starting of car does not admit proof of injury received while stepping from a moving car. Haralson v. San Antonio Trac. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 876. Negligence in failing to rescue employe after injury not in issue when the only negligence alleged was that causing the injury. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. State [Md.] 70 A 413. Proof that an accident happened from an unknown cause will not support averments specifying the cause. Where count alleged negligence in suffering street car to be out of condition, but there was no evidence thereof, request that there was no evidence warranting a verdict for plaintiff on such count should have been given. James v. Boston El. R. Co., 201 Mass. 263, 87 NE 474. Doctrine of the "turntable" cases will not be applied where the petition and proof proceed upon the averment will suffice,[32] and where several acts of negligence are averred, proof of one will support a recovery.[33] Immaterial allegations need not be proved.[34]

Admissibility of evidence. See 10 C. L. 948—The admissibility of expert and opinion evidence frequently arises in negligence cases, but is governed by general rules.[35] The general character of a party as to care [36] or his habits as to intoxication [37] are not admissible. Evidence of plaintiff's intoxication at the time of the injury is admissible on the issues of contributory negligence.[38] Evidence of prior and subsequent conditions is admissible if not too remote,[39] particularly to show notice,[40] and conduct of defendant immediately after the accident is usually admissible [41] as are other matters part of the res gestae.[42] Evidence of prior similar occurrences is sometimes admitted.[43] Evidence of the surrounding circumstances and conditions is admissible.[44] Evidence of subsequent repairs is usually excluded.[45] Custom a different theory. Marcheck v. Klute, 133 Mo. App. 280, 113 SW 654.

32. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lowe [Ala.] 48 S 99. Where negligence is alleged generally, specific acts of negligence may be put in issue. Texarkana, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 173. The rule that plaintiff shall not state one cause of action and recover on another has no application where the specific negligence proved is within the scope of negligence generally pleaded. Knight v. Donnelly Bros., 131 Mo. App. 152, 110 SW 687. Where the proof establishes the negligence charged, it is immaterial the particular occurrence which occasioned the injury is shown to be other than that alleged. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 196.

33. Louisville, etc., Trac. Co. v. Worrell [Ind. App.] 86 NE 78; Alten v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 425, 113 SW 691. Complaint charging negligent starting and negligent stopping of car whereby passenger was injured held supported by proof of negligent starting. Millar v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 945. Proof of any one act entitling plaintiff to recover is sufficient, the others thereupon becoming immaterial. Bull v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 126.

34. In action against automobilist for frightening horses, size of automobile need not be proved. Brinkman v. Pacholke, 41 Ind. App. 662, 84 NE 762.

35. See Evidence, 11 C. L. 1346.

36. The defendant's character for care and caution is ordinarily incompetent, since the question of negligence must be determined by the act or omission complained of. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Finley [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 531.

37. Plaintiff's intoxication on occasions previous and subsequent to the time of the accident is inadmissible as evidence in chief on the issue of contributory negligence. Kansas City M. & O. R. Co. v. Young [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 764.

38. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. O'Conner [Ind.] 85 NE 969.

39. The admissibility of evidence of conditions prior to the accident is not dependent upon the time of their existence, but upon its relevancy to the issues. Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown [Md.] 71 A 1005; Willson v. Logan, 139 Ill. App. 204. Evidence of condition of instrumentality causing accident immediately after its occurrence is admissible to show condition at time thereof or just prior thereto, where there has been no intervening change. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657.

40. Evidence of prior knowledge of dangerous conditions is competent to prove actual knowledge at the time of the injury. Williams v. Granite City, 140 Ill. App. 288.

41. In action against automobilist for frightening horse, evidence that after defendant had passed the place of accident plaintiff heard some one calling to defendant to stop was admissible as tending to show that he had not attempted to stop his machine. Walkup v. Beebe [Iowa] 116 NW 321.

42. In action to recover for injuries caused by negligently starting and maintaining fire, testimony of defendant's neighbor that defendant asked him if fire would harm his buildings and that he said it would not was admissible as a part of the res gestae as tending to disprove negligence. Miller v. Neale, 137 Wis. 426, 119 NW 94.

43. Where gravamen of action is negligent failure to maintain boiler in safe condition, evidence of prior explosions admissible to show their tendency to become impaired by the particular use, defendant's knowledge of such tendency, and precautions which should have been taken. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. Evidence of previous accidents are admissible to show defendant's knowledge of dangerous conditions. Hotchkiss Mt. Min. & Reduction Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 P 331.

44. Evidence as to absence of lights on vehicle admissible, though not alleged as negligence is relied on, and though no ordinance requiring lights was introduced. Livingston v. Blind, 138 Ill. App. 494.

45. Instruction that in order to find for plaintiff it must be found that machinery was out of repair at time of injury held not to cure error in admission. Stonington Coal Co. v. Young, 137 Ill. App. 462. Antecedent negligence may not ordinarily be shown by evidence of repairs made after the accident. Place v. Grand Trunk R. Co. in Canada [Vt.] 71 A 836; Pribbeno v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 494; Davenport v. Matthews, 114 NYS 715; Lay v. Elk Ridge Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 61 SE 156.

may be admissible in evidence on the issue of negligence,[46] but is usually deemed irrelevant.[47] Violation of rules may be some evidence of negligence.[48] The parent's circumstances in life may be admissible on the issue of their negligence in permitting their children to go outdoors unaccompanied by grown attendants.[49] Ordinances which are alleged to have been violated may be admissible.[50]

The sufficiency of evidence either involves the consideration of the province of court and jury [51] or the sufficiency of facts to constitute negligence, in which latter case it is treated with the substantive holdings thereon.

Presumptions and burden of proof. See 10 C. L. 950—By the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, negligence will be presumed from an occurrence which in the ordinary course of affairs could not otherwise have happened.[52] The doctrine cannot be ap-

46. To raise an implication of knowledge on defendant's part of the situation and danger, where knowledge is an element of negligence. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Draper, 136 Ill. App. 12. May be admissible as bearing upon plaintiff's negligence in following the custom. Id. The practice of others though not prevailing in general is some evidence of what should have been done Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. While admissible to show due care of railroad company in maintaining post near track, it is not conclusive and witnesses may be cross-examined to show the safety of customs established by their testimony. Wilson v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 364. Custom of not exploding charges until after men have left mine admissible, though not pleaded. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Thil, 128 Ill. App. 249. Where the act resulting in injury is not negligence per se, it is competent to show that other persons experienced in the same business, under similar circumstances, pursued the same course. Neary v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 461, 97 P 944. Evidence of precautions taken in daytime admissible to show precautions which might reasonably be expected in night time. City of Chicago v. Thomas, 141 Ill. App. 122.

47. Evidence which goes only to the custom of defendant, which may be either negligent or careful, is inadmissible. Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown [Md.] 71 A 1005. Evidence as to the degree of care commonly exercised by ordinarily prudent men under circumstances like those in the case at bar is ordinarily admissible to show whether the standard of care required was exercised. Lake v. Shenango Furnace Co. [C. C. A.] 160 F 887. The fact that the act complained of was done in the usual and customary way does not disprove negligence, since such way may be negligent. Admission of evidence as to custom held erroneous. Union Wire Mattress Co. v. Wiegref, 133 Ill. App. 506.

48. Rule forbidding operation of two cars at same time on double tracked narrow bridge. Chadbourne v. Springfield St. R. Co., 199 Mass. 574, 85 NE 737.

49. To show their ability or inability to procure such attendants. Distasio v. United Trac. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 406. Situation of parents, manner of living, health of children and all attendant circumstances may be considered by the jury. Murray v. Scranton R. Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 576.

50. Safety ordinances directed at railroads. Nichols v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808. Requiring street car operators to give warning of approach to crossing. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Martin [Colo.] 98 P 836.

The mere happening of an accident is, of itself, no evidence of negligence. Southern R. Co. v. Moore, 108 Va. 388, 61 SE 747; Robinson v. Cowan [Ala.] 47 S 1018; Feingold v. Ocean S. S. Co., 61 Misc. 638, 113 NYS 1018; Union Wire Mattress Co. v. Wiegref, 133 Ill. App. 506. Under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the plaintiff may ordinarily go to the jury upon evidence of injury and negligence without proof of the particular cause of the injury, where such cause is not within his reasonable knowledge. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Baker [Ky.] 113 SW 449. Where it is as probable that the injury resulted proximately from some other cause as that it was caused by defendant's negligence, the doctrine does not apply. Moriarty v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co., 132 Mo. App. 650, 112 SW 1034. Doctrine has no application unless the thing causing the injury is under defendant's control and the accident is such as does not ordinarily occur if due care is used. Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson [Texas Civ. App.] 114 SW 658. The application of the maxim res ipsa loquitur renders proof of the accident alone reasonable proof of negligence. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Roach [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 418. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not confined to cases where the person sought to be held is an insurer of the person injured. La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. [Wash.] 97 P 1104. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur can only be applied where there are actually shown such facts and circumstances in the nature of the defendant's undertaking, and of the accident itself from which the jury are able, if not compelled, to draw the inference of negligence. Keenan v. McAdams & Cartwright Elevator Co., 129 App. Div. 117, 113 NYS 343. Application of rule error where no specific acts of negligence were proved, and cause of accident was left wholly to conjecture. Id. It is not sufficient to show that an accident happened and an injury ensued. The evidence must point out that the negligence of the defendant was the direct cause. Minneapolis General Elec. Co. v. Cronon [C. C. A.] 166 F 651. Under such circumstances it is for the jury to find whether the accident was owing to negligence on the part of the defendant, or to some cause for which the defendant was not responsible. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co., 194 N. Y. 37, 86 NE 805. If, however, proof of the occurrence shows that the accident might have happened from some cause other than negligence of the defendant, the presumption does not arise and the doctrine cannot be applied. Id. If the res, or the entire occurrence as proved, could not have happened without negligence of some kind, negligence is presumed without showing what kind, and the burden of the explanation is thrown upon the defendant. Id. It is applied when the inference of negligence is required by the nature of the occurrence. Id. If proof of the occurrence shows that the accident was such as could not have happened in the ordinary course of events, the doctrine is applied, even if the precise omission or act of negligence is not specified, and even when it does not appear whether the accident was owing to some act done or to some act not done. Id. The doctrine does not permit a recovery without some proof of negligence, but it regulates the degree of proof required. Id. The "res" in the maxim res ipsa loquitur is not simply an accident resulting in injury, but the accident and surrounding circumstances necessarily shown by proving how the accident occurred. Id. Proof of an injury occurring as the proximate result of an act which, under ordinary circumstances, would not, if done with due care, have injured anyone, is enough to make out a presumption of negligence. Drake Standard Mach. Works v. Brossman, 135 Ill. App. 209. The presumption of negligence does not arise except out of the fact that there is no other way to account for the occurrence in the absence of explanation, in which case such explanation must be given by defendant. Elliott v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 127 App. Div. 800, 111 NYS 358. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply to an accident simply because it is unusual and unexplained. Yet circumstancee held to warrant inference of negligence. Dittman v. Edison Elec. Illuminating Co., 125 App. Div. 691, 110 NYS 87. Under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, negligence may be inferred, not from the accident alone but from the accident and the attending circumstances (Eaton v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 125 App. Div. 54, 109 NYS 419), and the question whether such accident and circumstances are sufficient to authorize such inference for the determination of the court in each particular case (Id.). Negligence held properly referred to jury. Id. Res ipsa loquitur applies upon proof that the instrumentality causing injury was under defendant's control and that plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. Proof of cause of accident not essential to prima facie case in action by passenger against carrier. Greinke v. Chicago City R. Co., 234 Ill. 564, 85 NE 327. But when the thing is shown to be under the management of defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of events does not happen if it is managed with due care, a presumption arises, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. Drake Standard Mach. Works v. Brossman, 135 Ill. App. 209; Whitehouse v. Pittsburg R. Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 581. In such case the inference of negligence remains until overcome by countervailing proof. Whitehouse v. Pittsburgh, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 581. Where, after plaintiff has shown the circumstances under which the accident happened, the question is raised as to whether, under the circumstances, defendant was negligent, the doctrine does not apply. Dentz v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 893, 70 A 164. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot be applied where the proof does not negative the fact that the injury might have been caused by agencies not under defendant's control. Cass v. Sanger [N. J. Law] 71 A 1126. The proof of the occurrence and the surrounding circumstances, the "res," makes a prima facie case, the legal presumption arising from such proof establishing prima facie the defendant's negligence. Moglia v. Nassau Elec. R. Co., 127 App. Div. 243, 111 NYS 70. Prima facie case must prevail, in the absence of evidence to rebut it. Id. Proof that plaintiff received an electric shock in a public place from a pole belonging to, and in the control of, defendant, raises a presumption of negligence. Moglia v. Nassau Elec. R. Co., 127 App. Div. 243, 111 NYS 70. The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" simply calls upon the defendant, after proof of the accident, to give such proof as will exonerate him, and relieve the plaintiff from the burden of proving the nonexistence of an adequate explanation or excuse. Id. Where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, defendant must meet the presumption by showing that the accident was not due to its negligence. Proof insufficient. Van Inwegen v. Erie R. Co., 126 App. Div. 297, 110 NYS 959. City must meet presumption of negligence arising from leakage in its waterpipes. Proof insufficient. Silverberg v. New York, 59 Misc. 492, 110 NYS 992; Rothblatt v. Solomon, 59 Misc. 519, 110 NYS 1039. Where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable, the burden is on defendant to explain the cause of the accident. Eaton v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 155 App. Div. 54, 109 NYS 419.

Held applicable: Applied where one was killed by being run over by train. Ellenberg v. Southern R. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 240. Doctrine applicable where "tie-jack" fell from car, where it could not fall if used with ordinary care in the usual manner. Gurdon, etc., R. Co. v. Calhoun [Ark.] 109 SW 1017. Applied to injury caused by explosion of dynamite in well, there being explanatory evidence of due care or that injury was due to accident or unforeseen cause. Chapman v. Warden [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 588. Servant injured by master's use of dynamite in work outside scope of employment. Stephen v. Duffy, 136 Ill. App. 572. Applicable where street car was stopped in middle of street and passenger was injured by collision with hose wagon on way to fire. Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 875, 113 SW 239. Collision of boat with submerged telegraph wire in navigable stream. Heiberger v.

Missouri & Kan. Tel. Co., 133 Mo. App. 452, 113 SW 730. Doctrine applied where servant was injured by bale of cotton falling on him from a loaded car when he opened car door. Chamberlain v. Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 48 S 703. Doctrine applicable where passenger was injured by explosion of drum connected with heating apparatus of car, and instruction predicated on the rule was proper. Houston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Roach [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 418. Proof of the explosion of street car controller establishes prima facie negligence (Gay v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & L. Co. [Wis.] 120 NW 283), but this is met by proof that controllers may explode without negligence (Id.). Applies to derailment accident. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 777; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 106. Doctrine applied when section hand was killed by derailment of first train over newly-ballasted track, the speed of which much exceeded that scheduled. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 46 S 360. Res ipsa loquitur held to apply to accident caused by train running off its regular track and colliding with engine, throwing it over on to plaintiff. Van Inwegen v. Erie R. Co., 126 App. Div. 297, 110 NYS 959. Did not apply to cause derailment and overturning of freight car. Henson v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. [N. Y.] 87 NE 85. Applied to explosion of controllers in street car where there was nothing to show that it might have been expected to happen if proper care was used. Beattie v. Boston El. R. Co., 201 Mass. 3, 86 NE 920. Applied to injury caused by improper insulation of electric lighting appliances. Shawnee L. & P. Co. v. Sears [Okl.] 95 P 449. Applied to injury from contact with live wire. Walter v. Baltimore Elec. Co. [Md.] 71 A 953. Applied where person not a servant of defendant was injured by unsafe appliances used in moving timbers. Jeffreys v. Nebraska Bridge Supply & Lumber Co., 157 F 932. Would not have applied had the relation of master and servant existed. Id. The presumption of negligence does not arise against a railway company for damages done to person or property until it appears that a proximate cause of the injury was occasioned through the operation of its "locomotives, cars or other machinery," or by the act or misfeasance of some person in its service. Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [Ga. App.] 62 SE 1020. Falling of awning raises presumption of negligence. McCrorey v. Thomas [Va.] 63 SE 1011. In passenger and carrier case, influence of negligence overcome by defendant's testimony, there being no direct proof of negligence. Christensen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 99 P 676. Res ipsa loquitur held to apply where passenger was injured while carefully leaving car because frightened by explosion of controllers. Louisville & S. I. Trac. Co. v. Worrell [Ind. App.] 86 NE 78. Burden upon carrier to show due care where passenger sues for injury by derailment of train. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Brandon, 77 Kan. 612, 95 P 573. Applied to injury of passenger by derailment of train. Id. Proof that colliding wagon bore defendants, together with admission in answer that defendant operated wagons in and about the place of the accident, established prima facie ownership. Gershel v. White's Exp. Co., 113 NYS 919. Res ipsa loquitur applied to fall of passenger elevator in store. Steiskal v. Marshall Field & Co., 238 Ill. 92, 87 NE 117. Machinery started without apparent cause, and would not have done so except from defect or careless handling. Silverman v. Carr, 200 Mass. 396, 86 NE 898. Where dye in defendant's vats leaked through floor, flooding plaintiff's stock, evidence held to establish a prima facie case. Love v. Globe Hat Mfg. Co., 114 NYS 52. In action for damages caused by leakage from floor above, proof that defendant was in exclusive possession of such floor made a prima facie case. Rothblatt v. Solomon, 59 Misc. 519, 110 NYS 1039. Res ipsa loquitur applied to leakage in water pipes controlled by city. Silverberg v. New York, 59 Misc. 492, 110 NYS 992. Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable where plaintiff admittedly in the exercise of due care and machinery causing injury was under control of defendant. Elvis v. Lumaghi Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 112. The fact that a team runs away raises a presumption of negligence in its management. In absence of explanation, owner is liable for injuries caused thereby. Kokoll v. Brohm & Buhl Lumber Co. [N. J. Law] 71 A 120. Res ipsa loquitur where sign over entrance to building fell and injured passerby. McNulty v. Ludwig & Co., 125 App. Div. 291, 109 NYS 703. Presumption of negligence of owner from fall of sign over entrance to his building could be overcome by proof that it had been hung by competent workman upon whom he relied, the thing itself not being inherently dangerous. Id.

Held not applicable: Doctrine inapplicable where employe was injured by slipping of a skid placed on a wagon and adjusted to an ice chute. Lone Star Brew. Co. v. Willie [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 186. Not applicable to injury caused by spread of fire rightfully started by defendant on his own premises. Pfeiffer v. Aue [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 300. Not applicable to injury caused by fall of pile of sacks piled in customary manner. Arkansas Cotton Oil Co. v. Carr [Ark.] 115 SW 925. Not applicable to injury caused by logs falling from load which plaintiff was driving, though logs were loaded by defendant, considering the relation of the parties and all the circumstances. Hogg v. Standard Lumber Co. [Wash.] 100 P 151. Res ipsa loquitur held not to apply to injury caused by bucket falling down mining shaft. Reino v. Montana Mineral Land & Development Co. [Mont.] 99 P 853. Doctrine applied where a basket from an overhead carrier system, of standard make and in general use, fell on a customer. Anderson v. McCarthy Dry Goods Co., 49 Wash. 398, 95 P 325. Mere starting of machine without intervention of human agency is evidence of its defective condition. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 310. Where workmen are engaged in tearing down wall, fact that it finally falls is not of itself evidence of negligence. Henahan v. Lyons, 201 Mass. 269, 87 NE 602. Can have no application where accident is due to defective appliance under management of plaintiff, or where the accident may be attributable to any of several causes for some of which defendant is not responsible.

plied when specific acts of negligence are charged, and in such case plaintiff can make out a case only by proof by direct or circumstantial evidence that the negligence charged was the proximate cause of the injury,[53] but an unsuccessful attempt to prove by direct evidence the precise cause of an action does not bar the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.[54] The presumption raised by the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is rebuttable.[55] Since due care and proper performance of duty are presumed,[56] except as rule of res ipsa loquitur is applicable, plaintiff must prove the negligence charged [57] and that it was the proximate cause of the injury

Peters v. Lynchburg, L. & Trac. Co. [Va.] 61 SE 745. Has no application to action for breach of warranty that rope was strong enough for purpose for which it was purchased. Oregon Auto-Dispatch v. Portland Cordage Co. [Or.] 95 P 498. Not applicable when place where injury occurred was in exclusive control of another than defendant and where defect in instrumentality causing injury was not due to defendant's fault. Minneapolis General Elec. Co. v. Cronon [C. C. A.] 166 F 651.

Rule applied to plaintiff's negligence: Applies to crossing accident when the facts indicate that had deceased used due care the accident would not have happened. Clemons v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 Wis. 387, 119 NW 102. Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur inapplicable where horse fell into trench and cause thereof was alleged to be its negligent filling. Neiderman v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co., 140 Ill. App. 524. No presumption of negligence from mere fact of collision of boats, where plaintiff shows several acts of defendant, all of which might have tended to the result without requiring an inference of negligence. Dentz v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 893, 70 A 164. Held not to apply where a child standing on platform while car was in motion preparatory to alighting was thrown off by reason of the cars turning into a turn-out while running at a moderate rate of speed. Pascell v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 836, 69 A 171. Does not apply in the case of injury from falling objects where the source and place from which the object came and the cause of its precipitation are left in doubt, but where these matters are clear it does apply. Stumpf v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 207. Explosion caused by fire alleged to be due to defendant's negligence, where origin of fire was unexplained. Stewart v. De Noon, 220 Pa. 154, 69 A 587. Inapplicable where wheels of plaintiff's buggy fell into cable slot maintained by defendant railway company. Miller v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 69 A 636. Held not to apply where employe of independent contractor fell down elevator shaft where he had full control of the appliances which caused the accident. Connolly v. Union League, 221 Pa. 21, 69 A 1125. Inapplicable to establish defect in construction of window or failure to repair it from mere fact of glass falling therefrom, where negligence cannot be fairly inferred from the circumstances themselves. Stewart & Co. v. Harman [Md.] 70 A 333. Where collision by horse happened through negligence of another company than defendant, doctrine did not apply. Elliott v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 127 App. Div. 300, 111 NYS 358.

54. Louisville & S. I. Trac. Co. v. Worrell [Ind. App.] 86 NE 78.

55. Paducah Trac. Co. v. Baker [Ky.] 113 SW 449. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is merely a rule of evidence to be used by the jury for their guidance in arriving at the truth. Inference of negligent construction of building may be drawn from unaccountable fall of window, which might be rebutted by the fact that approved appliances were used to fasten windows, both questions being for the jury. Monahan v. National Realty Co., 4 Ga. App. 680, 62 SE 127. Though the mere happening of an accident may make out such a case of prima facie negligence as alone entitles plaintiff to go to the jury, it does not ordinarily create an irrebutable presumption of negligence. Briggs v. Durham Trac. Co., 147 N. C. 389, 61 SE 373. It only requires defendant to meet the presumption by showing that the accident could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care. Id. Defendant's proof insufficient to rebut presumption of negligence arising from bolt falling from elevated structure. Sturza v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 113 NYS 974. Presumption of negligence arising from injury held not to have been overcome. Elvis v. Lumaghi Coal Co., 140 Ill. App. 112.

56. In action against stockyards company for communication of disease to cattle, plaintiff must show the why and the wherefore, since company is presumed to have performed its duty. Eshleman v. Union Stockyard Co. [Pa.] 70 A 899. Presumed that engineer exercises due care in approaching crossing and that after discovery of one's presence on the track he does not purposely run him down. complained of.[58] Proof of a violation of an ordinance may constitute prima facie negligence,[59] but leaves the burden upon plaintiff to show that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.[60] The rule that the burden of proving specific acts of negligence is assumed by alleging them does not apply where all specific acts are embraced in a general allegation, and in such case plaintiff is not precluded from invoking presumption of negligence arising from the accident.[61] The burden is usually held to be on defendant to prove contributory negligence[62] by a show the duty owed, its nonperformance, and that such dereliction of duty was the proximate cause of the injury. Cook v. U. S. Smelting Co., 34 Utah 190, 97 P 28. Plaintiff must show the particular negligence which caused the injury. Where showed running away of cars but not what caused them to run away, he failed to make out a case. Lane v. New York Cont. Co., 125 App. Div. 808, 110 NYS 91. Existence of negligence cannot be left to conjecture. Id. The burden is upon plaintiff to show the particular act or omission which constitutes the negligence charged. Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821.

58. Moscarello v. Haines, 114 NYS 519; Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066; Morse v. Consolidated R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 553. Casual connection between excessive speed of train and failure to keep lookout and the killing of an animal on track was left wholly to conjecture. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Latham [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 890. Evidence that injury was caused by coming in contact with electric wires insufficient to go to the jury, where it was equally probable that it was caused otherwise. Byerly v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co., 130 Mo. App. 593, 109 SW 1065. Plaintiff must show by direct or circumstantial evidence that the negligence complained of caused the injury. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33. Evidence insufficient where it failed to show how death was caused or to connect it with dangerous condition charged. Steele's Adm'r v. Hillman Land & Iron Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 311. Burden of proving that negligence complained of was proximate cause of injury on plaintiff. Where negligence alleged was defect in sidewalk. Taylor v. Manson [Cal. App.] 99 P 410. Charge of negligence in stringing uninsulated conduit wires across a building not sustained by the proof. Lewis v. Water & L. Co. [Neb.] 118 NW 560. The burden of showing that the negligent act of stranger was not the sole cause of the injury is upon plaintiff. Where defendant railroad introduced evidence that injury to passenger was caused by wrongful backing of wagon into car. City of Chicago R. Co. v. Ratner, 133 Ill. App. 628; Wilson v. Chicago City R. Co., 133 Ill. App. 433. The burden is upon the plaintiff to show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Stumpf v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 207. A plea that decedent's death was caused by his own negligence does not relieve plaintiff of the burden of proving that it was the proximate result of the negligence charged. Steele's Adm'r v. Hillman Land & Iron Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 311. Where the cause of the injury is left in doubt, verdict should be directed for defendant. Cupp v. Elmira, 126 App. Div. 539, 110 NYS 742.

59. Ordinance regulating speed of motor vehicles. Hartje v. Moxley, 235 Ill. 164, 85 NE 216. Introduction of ordinance regulating speed of trains, proof of its violation, death resulting therefrom, and due care upon the decedent's part, makes prima facie case. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. In absence of evidence it will be presumed that pedestrian injured on track used due care to look and listen to avoid injury. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wall [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 453. Where negligence on part of carrier is established, it has the burden of proving contributory negligence on part of passenger. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gilbreath [Ark.] 113 SW 200. In a hearing in damages after default in an action for injuries caused by alleged negligence, the defendant has the burden of proving contributory negligence. Cutler v. Putnam L. & P. Co., 80 Conn. 470, 68 A 1006. Where injuries are received in a collision at a crossing, burden is upon railroad company under Acts preponderance of the evidence,[63] except where the evidence adduced by plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of contributory negligence,[64] though the contrary is held in a few states.[65] The burden of disproving contributory negligence is on children as well as adults, varying only in degree, which depends upon natural capacity, physical capacity, training, habits of life, surroundings, and the like.[66] A child under fourteen years of age is presumed to be unable to appreciate dangers,[67] and this presumption must be conclusively overcome to justify the court in holding as a matter of law that he is guilty of contributory negligence.[68] The unexplained presence of a child non sui juris in a place of danger and unattended is prima facie

1899, p. 58, c. 41 (Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lynn [Ind.] 85 NE 999), and such negligence must be established by evidence and not by presumption (Id.). The presumption which arises from the known instincts of self-preservation may constitute a prima facie inference against contributory negligence. German-American Lumber Co. v. Brock [Fla.] 46 S 740.

63. Where the evidence is evenly balanced, contributory negligence is not established, and upon this issue the verdict must be for plaintiff. Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825. Presumptions may be overcome by counter presumptions. Failure of traveler on highway to look and listen raises a presumption of negligence which overthrows the presumption of due care. Clemons v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 Wis. 337, 119 NW 102.

64. Braly v. Fresno City R. Co. [Cal. App.] 99 P 400; Harrington v. Butte, A. & P. R. Co., 37 Mont. 169, 95 P 8. Where defendant pleads contributory negligence and adduces evidence in support thereof, it cannot complain of an instruction that it has the burden of proving such issue, though such negligence appears from plaintiff's own evidence. Tinkle v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 212 Mo. 445, 110 SW 1086. It is only in cases where plaintiff's allegations or evidence show prima facie negligence on his part that it devolves upon him to show facts from which the jury upon the whole case may find him free from negligence. Case at bar not within this exception to rule that burden of showing contributory negligence is on defendant. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Conuteson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 187. A bare admission by a passenger that he was standing up when injured does not show prima facie negligence on his part. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gilbreath [Ark.] 113 SW 200. Although plaintiff is not required to show want of contributory negligence, yet if such negligence be disclosed by his case it will defeat recovery, since the burden resting upon defendant is thus dispensed with. Instruction embodying the above rule held proper where there was no other testimony than that contained in "plaintiff's case." Pereira v. Star Sand Co. [Or.] 94 P 835. Plaintiff's failure to explain her actions does not show contributory negligence where the circumstances are such that she could not be expected to act with deliberation. Beattie v. Boston El. R. Co., 201 Mass. 3, 86 NE 920. Presumption of due care in the absence of eye-witnesses not applicable where evidence shows what plaintiff did and how the accident happened. Casey v. Adams, 137 Ill. App. 404. Though defendant has the burden of showing contributory negligence, this burden need not be discharged by defendant's evidence alone. General charge placing burden upon defendant erroneous as pretermitting jury from considering all the evidence in the case on such issue. Suderman v. Kriger [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 373.

65. Wilson v. Chicago City R. Co., 133 Ill. App. 433; Casey v. Adams, 137 Ill. App. 404; Ralph v. Cambridge Elec. L. Co., 200 Mass. 566, 86 NE 922; Fay v. Hartford & S. St. R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 364; Bell v. Mutual Mach. Co. [N. C.] 63 SE 680; Popke v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 1098; Shum's Adm'x v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 945. No presumption that deaf person crossing tracks exercised due care. Shum's Adm'x v. Rutland R. Co. [Vt.] 69 A 945. The plaintiff must bar out by a preponderance of the evidence the casual connection with his injury of all other facts than defendant's negligence. Childs v. American Exp. Co., 197 Mass. 337, 84 NE 128. Evidence insufficient as leaving cause of injury wholly to conjecture. Where plaintiff was injured by giving way of trunk handle while helping expressman carry it, at latter's request, he could not recover of express company in absence of evidence that handle was worn or defective, and that its condition might have been discovered by reasonable inspection. Id. Must be some evidence, direct or circumstantial, of the exercise of ordinary care. City of Chicago v. Carlin, 141 Ill. App. 118. Held no evidence of exercise of ordinary care, but merely a presumption based upon a presumption which the law does not tolerate. Id.

66. Ardolino v. Reinhardt, 114 NYS 508. Where the circumstances will not justify a recovery by an infant plaintiff unless such infant is non sui juris, the burden is upon plaintiff to prove this fact. Corsale v. Facini, 111 NYS 779. Where defendant contends that a higher degree of care than that reasonably to have been expected should have been exercised in a particular case, he has the burden of proving the special facts or circumstances calling therefor. Where plaintiff was a child of seven years. McGuire v. Guthman Transfer Co., 234 Ill. 125, 84 NE 723.

67. Dangers incident to railroad crossings. Davis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 388.

68. Contributory negligence held properly submitted to the jury. Davis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 388. The burden of proving that a child was non sui juris is on its plaintiff. Injury at railroad crossing. Child seven years of age. Simkoff v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 190 N. Y. 256, 83 NE 15.

evidence, though not conclusive, of contributory negligence on the parent's part.[69] While plaintiff has the burden and must at least introduce evidence from which negligence may be inferred, he need not prove the specific acts of negligence.[70] If the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, and the defendant, instead of introducing evidence to negative the facts which plaintiff's evidence tends to establish, proposes to show a distinct proposition which avoids the effect of the plaintiff's evidence, there the burden is said to shift[71] and rests upon defendant; if evidence is adduced to prove this proposition, then the onus is again cast upon the plaintiff to show that the defendant is nevertheless liable because his proof does not excuse him,[72] but the burden of proof proper never shifts but rests upon plaintiff to the end,[73] even where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies.[74]

Questions of law and fact.[See 10 C. L. 952]—Negligence is ordinarily a mixed question of law and fact,[75] and unless the evidence is such that reasonable men could not differ in the inference to be drawn therefrom[76] and particularly where it is

69. Presence held unexplained and prima facie case made out. Harrington v. Butte, A. & P. R. Co., 37 Mont. 169, 95 P 8.

70. Action against warehouseman for negligent injury to stored poultry. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066.

71. Whether there is sufficient evidence to shift the burden of proof is ordinarily a question for the jury. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066. After establishment of prima facie case, defendant must rebut the presumption of negligence. Walter v. Baltimore Elec. Co. [Md.] 71 A 953.

72. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066.

73. Everett v. Foley, 132 Ill. App. 438.

74. The burden of establishing the ultimate fact of negligence abides with the plaintiff to the end of the case, and the sole function of the doctrine (of res ipsa loquitur) is to raise a prima facie presumption of negligence from a given state of facts which will become conclusive if not rebutted. Where the evidence of both parties disproves the allegation of negligence, the court should declare as a matter of law that plaintiff's burden is not sustained (Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032), and the burden of proof is not shifted by raising a presumption in favor of plaintiff on the evidence which is submitted to the jury for the purpose of allowing it to draw an inference antagonistic thereto (Dentz v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 893, 70 A 164). Where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable, the burden of explaining the negligence is upon defendant, yet this does not mean that the burden shifts to defendant (Everett v. Foley, 132 Ill. App. 438), but only that he must rebut the presumption arising from the proven facts (Id.). The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur requires defendant to exculpate itself by proving performance of its legal duty. Where injury was caused by catching of wagon wheel in switch device and consequent throwing of plaintiff to the ground, proof that switch was of standard make, properly installed, and in general use showed performance of duty. Alcott v. Public Service Corp. [N. J. Law] 71 A 45.

75. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Houghland [Ind. App.] 85 NE 369.

76. Nichols v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Colo.] 98 P 808; Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sack, 136 Ill. App. 425; Casey v. Adams, 137 Ill. App. 404; Crawford v. Chicago Union Trac. Co., 137 Ill. App. 163; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Harrod's Adm'r [Ky.] 115 SW 699; Combs v. Kirksville [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1153; Neary v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 37 Mont. 461, 97 P 944; Toppi v. McDonald, 128 App. Div. 443, 112 NYS 821; Wagner v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 147 N. C. 315, 61 SE 171; Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Shepherd, 20 Okl. 626, 95 P 243; Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway [Okl.] 99 P 153; Gerding v. Standard Pressed Steel Co., 220 Pa. 229, 69 A 672; Weir v. Haverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874; Lone Star Brew. Co. v. Willie [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 186; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wall [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 453; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Stoker [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 910; Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P 689; Roanoke R. & Elec. Co. v. Young, 108 Va. 783, 62 SE 961; Gregg v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 49 Wash. 183, 94 P 911; Grimm v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & Light Co. [Wis.] 119 NW 833. It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or influence other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that negligence is established. Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. Co. [Cal.] 97 P 520. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury. Id. It is for the court to determine whether any facts have been established from which negligence may be reasonably inferred, but it is the province of the jury to say whether from those facts negligence ought to be inferred. Evidence sufficient to go to jury on proper construction of storage plant. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066. Where contributory negligence is so conclusively proven that a verdict for plaintiff, if returned, must be set aside, the court is not bound to submit the case to the jury, but may direct a verdict for the defendant. United States Exp. Co. v. Kraft [C. C. A.] 161 conflicting,[77] negligence[78] and contributory negligence[79] are questions of fact, as

F 300. But the rule generally applicable is that as the question of negligence on the part of the defendant is one of fact for the jury to determine under all the circumstances of the case, and under proper instructions from the court, so, also, is the question whether there was negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Armour & Co. v. Kollmeyer [C. C. A.] 161 F 78. Rule applied where plaintiff, riding on running board of street car was injured by wagon standing in street. Id. Where under the undisputed facts a negligent act of plaintiff proximately contributed to the injury, the question of proximate cause should not be submitted to the jury. Birge-Forbes Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 333. Where either an inference for or against the existence of negligence would be justified, the question is for the jury. Samboa v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567.

77. Hamilton v. Niles-Bement-Pond Co., 192 N. Y. 179, 84 NE 801; Davis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 34 Pa. Super Ct. 388; Webb v. Heintz [Or.] 97 P 753. Where facts are disputed, contributory negligence is for the jury. Ford v. Hine Bros. Co., 237 Ill. 463, 86 NE 1051. Negligence for the jury on conflicting evidence, regardless of improbabilities therein. Chicago City R. Co. v. Donnelly, 136 Ill. App. 204. Mere scintilla of evidence will not justify leaving the case to the jury. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. State [Md.] 70 A 413.

Miller's Adm'x [Va.] 63 SE 458; Klotz v. Power & Min. Mach. Co., 136 Wis. 107, 116 NW 770. Evidence sufficient to support verdict based on defendant's negligence in letting go of rope holding scaffold on which plaintiff was painting. Irrgang v. Ott [Cal. App.] 99 P 528. Negligence for jury where child was injured by dynamite explosion. Hobbs v. Blanchard & Sons Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1082. Evidence sufficient to show that, after knowledge of presence of child, dynamite was placed so that he could come in contact with it. Id. Whether action of boy in "shooing" mare to make her go back to stable after drinking, whereupon in turning she broke her leg, was negligence held question of fact. Poncelier v. Palace Livery Co. [Ala.] 47 S 702. The facts which constitute the degree of care required are for the jury to gather from the evidence and not of law for the determination of the court. City of Chicago v. Kubler, 133 Ill. App. 520. Though the primary facts are undisputed, the ultimate fact, the existence or nonexistence of negligence, is to be deduced from the former and the making of such deduction is peculiarly within the province of the jury. Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622. Negligence for the jury though facts are undisputed where reasonable men might draw different conclusions therefrom. North Bros. Co. v. Kallas [C. C. A.] 162 F 306; Swift & Co. v. Sandy [C. C. A.] 165 F 622. Storekeeper's exercise of due care for the safety of customers while making repairs, there being evidence to warrant a finding of knowledge, or duty to know, of the particular conditions causing injury, held for the jury. Frost v. McCarthy, 200 Mass. 445, 86 NE 918. Whether the owner of premises to which the public is invited exercises the required degree of care for their safety is a question of fact, since the law has no fixed standard by which the duty can be measured. Ayres v. Wanamaker, 220 Pa. 313, 69 A 759. Open hatchway in a booth which is apparently an entrance to department store, and manifestly a dangerous place. Id. Where defendant knows or ought to know of the danger incident to the condition of his premises in time to remove the danger or give warning thereof, and plaintiff neither knows nor ought to know of such danger, the liability for resulting injury is for the jury. Petrus v. Berlin Mills Co. [N. H.] 71 A 213. Question as to whose negligence caused collision between automobile and bicycle held for jury. Campbell v. Dreher, 33 Ky. L. R. 444, 110 SW 353. Evidence of negligence in failing to take proper precautions to prevent explosion of siphon bottles of aerated water held sufficient for the jury. Torgesen v. Schultz, 192 N. Y. 156, 84 NE 956. Evidence sufficient to show defect causing sudden rise of elevator resulting in injury and defendant's knowledge of such defect, and hence to justify an inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Byers v. Carnegie Steel Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 347. Due care of defendant to protect travelers from contact with live wire for jury. Miller v. Kenosha Elec. R. Co., 135 Wis. 68, 115 NW 355. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding that defendant negligently detached waterpipes from back of kitchen stove whereby steam generated causing an explosion. Scott v. Shaw, 104 Minn. 530, 116 NW 1135. Evidence sufficient to go to jury on questions of negligence where cus-are the particular shares thereof such as proximate cause,[80] knowledge and means of knowledge,[81] the application of the last clear chance doctrine,[82] invitation of plaintiff to the premises,[83] the capacity and care of children [84] and the imputed negtomer in store was injured by falling down unguarded cellarway. Montague v. Hanson [Mont.] 99 P 1063. Cannot be said as a matter of law that one was not negligent in making assurances as to the safety of using a certain stove polish, thereby inducing its sale. Cunningham v. Pease House Furnishing Co., 74 N. H. 435, 69 A 120. Where injury resulted from collision of boat with submerged telephone wire, negligence of defendant was for the jury. Heiberger v. Missouri & Kansas Tel. Co., 133 Mo. App. 452, 113 SW 730.

79. Town of New Castle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 757; Sambos v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 114 SW 567; Perrine v. Union Stockyards Co. [Neb.] 116 NW 776; Devine v. Hayward, 128 App. Div. 705, 113 NYS 898; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 877; Place v. Grand Trunk R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 836. Where the complaint avers the absence of contributory negligence, plaintiff is entitled to go to the jury on that issue unless the facts stated compel the legal inference that it was present (Acts 1899, p. 58, c. 41). Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lynn [Ind.] 85 NE 999. Plaintiff's negligence in being at the place where he was injured held for the jury. Harding v. Tory, 135 Ill. App. 458. Contributory negligence in entering and leaving store held for the jury under the evidence. Frost v. McCarthy, 200 Mass. 445, 86 NE 918. Where injury resulted from collision of boat with bridge, contributory negligence of navigator of boat held for jury. Anderson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 71 A 333. Contributory negligence in drawing water from end of tank car held for the jury. Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Brown, [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 950. Evidence sufficient to warrant finding of lack of contributory negligence in manner of poking into bins to make contents flow down. Vaughn v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co., 59 Misc. 230, 112 NYS 240. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence in coming in contact with live wire. Weir v. Haverford Elec. Light Co., 221 Pa. 611, 70 A 874. Whether plaintiff was drunk when injured held for jury. Tagge v. Roslyn [Wash.] 98 P 668.

80. Steele's Adm'r v. Hillman Land & Iron Co. [Ky.] 114 SW 311; San Francisco & P. S. S. Co. v. Carlson [C. C. A.] 161 F 851. Whether cause of injury was wet and slippery boards or broken plank held for jury. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall [C. C. A.] 159 F 893; Town of New Castle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 757; Clingan v. Dixon County [Neb.] 118 NW 1082; Dodsoe v. Dodge Clothespin Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1073; Stern v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 193 N. Y. 328, 85 NE 1089. Where the cause of an accident is unexplained, and is as consistent with defendant's exercise of due care as with his negligence, a verdict for defendant should be directed. Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 200 Mass. 188, 86 NE 310. Where reasonable men might differ as to what was the proximate cause, such issue is for the jury; but, where there is no room for a difference of opinion, the question where the facts are undisputed is for the court. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kriffer [Ky.] 113 SW 433; Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 165 F 869. Proximate cause need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt and may be shown by circumstantial evidence, though such evidence must establish a logical basis for an inference as to the cause. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co. [Conn.] 71 A 553.

81. Knowledge of plaintiff of proximity of lighting company's wires to those of telephone company for which he was working held for jury. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 70 A 599. What should have been reasonably anticipated a question of fact. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 133 Ill. App. 2. Whether injury should have been expected and provided against held for jury. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. v. Kreiner [Md.] 71 A 1066. Evidence insufficient to show that one working in between cars in factory knew of approach of engine. Shall v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 152 Mich. 463, 15 Det. Leg. N. 295, 116 NW 432.

82. Whether motorman could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered plaintiff's peril and avoided accident, held for jury. Felver v. Central Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 115 SW 980.

83. Evidence held sufficient to support the verdict for plaintiff, whether he was a trespasser or licensee, or guilty of such contributory negligence as was sufficient to reduce the damages, though not sufficient, in connection with the greater negligence of defendant, to defeat his recovery. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Barfield [Ga. App.] 63 SE 514. Finding that plaintiff was personally invited upon premises held against the weight of the evidence. Silverman v. Binder, 115 NYS 54. Evidence insufficient to show an implied invitation to child of mill hand to use a path from the mill to tenement houses for employes. Davis v. Joslin Mfg. Co. [R. I.] 69 A 65. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding of implied invitation to enter premises where child was injured by explosion of dynamite. Hobbs v. Blanchard & Sons Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1082.

84. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33. But he may have arrived at such a degree of maturity in age and judgment that the court might say as a matter of law he could be guilty of contributory negligence. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27. And, on the other hand, he may be so tender in age and judgment that the court, as a matter of law, might rule he could not be guilty thereof under the circumstances of a given case. Child four years old injured on turntable where he was taken by other children within this class. Id.; McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114 SW 33. Bright boy of thirteen years attempting to cross railroad track in front of approaching train. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 214 Mo. 530, 114

ligence of parents.[85] Inferences of fact from proven facts and circumstances are peculiarly within the province of the jury.[86]

Instructions.[See 10 C. L. 958]—The questions most frequently arising as to instructions in negligence cases are the definition of negligence[87] and contributory negli-

SW 33. Whether or not a child has exercised due care should in every case be left to the jury to determine with regard to the child's age, maturity and intelligence. Batchelor v. Degnon Realty & Terminal Improvement Co., 115 NYS 93. Contributory negligence for jury where boy of fifteen was injured by fall of machine at which he was working. Gerding v. Standard Pressed Steel Co., 220 Pa. 229, 69 A 672. Contributory negligence of child for the jury under the evidence. McGuire v. Richard Guttemann Transfer Co., 234 Ill. 125, 84 NE 723. Contributory negligence of child of six, who fell and was injured on street car track while attempting to climb snowbank in its immediate neighborhood, held for jury. Fogarty v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. [N. J. Law] 69 A 964. Where boy of fifteen was injured by falling of machine at which he was at work, truth of testimony establishing negligence held for jury. Gerding v. Standard Pressed Steel Co., 220 Pa. 229, 69 A 672. Where child entered premises upon implied invitation, his contributory negligence in exploding dynamite held for jury. Hobbs v. Blanchard & Sons Co. [N. H.] 70 A 1082. As a general rule the question of a child's contributory negligence is for the jury. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 214 Mo. 593, 114 SW 27.

85. The question of parent's negligence in permitting young children to play out doors unattended by grown people is ordinarily one of fact for the jury. This may depend, however, upon parent's circumstances in life. Murray v. Scranton R. Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 576; Distasio v. United Trac. Co., 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 406. Where evidence showed that child twenty-five months old was obedient and bright for its age and had been intrusted to the care of a boy of eleven years, the issue of its mother's negligence was not raised. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Olds [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 787.

86. In arriving at a verdict, the jury, from the facts proven and sometimes from the absence of counter evidence, may infer the existence of other facts reasonably and logically consequent upon those proved. Cochrell v. Langley Mfg. Co. [Ga. App.] 63 SE 244. Held that from facts proved jury would have been authorized to infer one or more of the specific acts of negligence alleged, hence nonsuit was improper. Id. The jury may infer negligence from the facts proved but may not infer the existence of facts which constitute negligence. Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains [Ind. App.] 85 NE 1038. Negligence may exist as an inference justly deducible from all the facts in evidence, and such inference may be considered by the jury with as much propriety as the facts out of which it arises. Negligence need not rest on direct testimony. Shaffer v. Coleman, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 386. Natural instinct of self-preservation may be considered. City of Chicago v. Thomas, 141 Ill. App. 122.

87. Refusal to instruct that failure to look before crossing track was negligence held error, though train came from unusual direction, and though instructions of general character as to due care were given. Fowler v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 234 Ill. 619, 85 NE 298. Instructions that jury must determine whether defendant was exercising the degree of care required, "and if you find he was not, then you will find that he was in the exercise of ordinary care," held not misleading though inadvertent insertion of the word "not" changed the intended meaning. Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 118 NW 533. In action for injuries sustained in collision with automobile, charge held good, when viewed as a whole, as against contention that it singled out plaintiff as an object of care. Erks v. Ewers [Iowa] 119 NW 603. Instruction held not to authorize the jury to find for plaintiff in the absence of defendant's negligence. Harding v. Tory, 135 Ill. App. 458. Instructions as to automobilist's duty in regard to avoiding collision, use of highway and burden of proof held good under this rule. Irwin v. Judge [Conn.] 71 A 572. Instruction on duty of train operators when approaching crossing good when construed in connection with other instructions. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Lynch [Ind. App.] 87 NE 40. Where the duty varies with conditions, a general statement of the law in regard to the duty is sufficient. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah, 65, 95 P 646. Where the degree of care is correctly charged, there is no error in failing to define such degree in the absence of timely written requests therefor. Savannah Elec. Co. v. Bennett, 130 Ga. 597, 61 SE 529. Instruction that the care required was that which a discreet and cautious individual would or ought to have used held in effect to state the correct rule that the care required was that which an ordinarily prudent man would have exercised under all the circumstances of the case. American Locomotive Co. v. Hoffman, 108 Va. 363, 61 SE 759. An instruction fully instructing as to degree of care required of defendant, and submitting fairly questions of negligence of defendant and assumed risks by plaintiff, does not assume way unsafe, in instructing that if defendant knew, or by exercise of ordinary care could have known, certain conditions existed, then it is liable. Hotchkiss Mountain Mining & Reduction Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 P 331. Instruction imposed too high a degree of care upon carrier toward one not a passenger. Elgin A. & S. Trac. Co. v. Wilcox, 132 Ill. App. 446. Not misleading as to degree of care required in management of street car when viewed as a whole. City of Chicago v. Ratner, 133 Ill. App. 628. Instruction as to degree of care required in management of street car held not erroneous. Id. Where the issues involved defendant's liability under the last clear chance doctrine, an instruction that contributory negligence barred recovery was not cured by an instruction that it was no defense. McDivitt v. Des Moines City R. Co.

[Iowa] 118 NW 459. Definitions of negligence are to be considered with what the court says upon those subjects in other portions of the charge. Smith v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 15 Det. Leg. N. 1055, 119 NW 640. An instruction defining "ordinary care" as that degree of care, precaution, or diligence which may properly be expected or required, having regard to the nature of the act or duty, and to the attending circumstances, was not such error as called for reversal yet the usual definition would have been preferable. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Roberts [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 982. Where the court defined negligence of a railroad company to be a failure to use such care as an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the circumstances, a refusal to qualify it by instructing the jury to take into consideration all the circumstances and not to view the accident from a retrospective point of view was not erroneous. Galveston H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds [Tex. Civ. App.] 112 SW 787. Requested instructions on ordinary care and the effect of its exercise held substantially covered. Bohlen v. Chicago City R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 261. Instruction on standard of care and practice of others held correct, though permitting a finding of negligence even though conduct was in accordance with prevailing practice. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough [C. C. A.] 161 F 657. Instruction on wanton and willful negligence held not erroneous in view of other instructions correctly stating the degree of care required, though those elements were not in the case. Wheeler v. Milner, 137 Wis. 26, 118 NW 187.

88. Instruction as to contributory negligence of one riding on running board of street car who was hit by standing wagon held fair. United States Exp. Co. v. Kraft [C. C. A.] 161 F 300. Instruction on due care of one killed by live wire not erroneous as a whole. Prince v. Lowell Elec. L. Corp., 201 Mass. 276, 87 NE 558. Where court instructed that to be a bar plaintiff's negligence must have contributed to his injury, the omission of this qualification in other parts of the charge was not error. Buchman v. Jeffery, 135 Wis. 448, 115 NW 372. An instruction that to find for plaintiff the jury must find that the accident occurred without any fault on his part is sufficiently favorable to defendant in the absence of a request for a correct instruction on contributory negligence. Carscallen v. Coeur D'Alene, etc., Transp. Co. [Idaho] 98 P 622. Instruction on relative negligence of plaintiff and defendant fully and accurately submitted to jury. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Barfield [Ga. App.] 63 SE 514. Where contributory negligence is in issue, a refusal to define it and apply the doctrine to the facts may be error. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Moberly [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 483. Definition of contributory negligence as "where the plaintiff does some negligent act or omits to perform some act which, co-operating with some negligent act or omission on the part of the defendant, contributes to, and is the proximate cause of the injury," held proper. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 1098. Where instruction authorized verdict for defendant if it proved contributory negligence alleged, it should also have authorized verdict for plaintiff if it failed in such proof. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 758. There is no material difference between the words "apparent" and "reasonably apparent" peril and "realized his peril" as used in a charge on discovered peril. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Reynolds [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 340. To modify an instruction that "if plaintiff could have seen the danger" he could not recover, by saying that "if by the exercise of ordinary care he could have seen the danger," is not error. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. Instruction predicating contributory negligence on child's age and realization of danger alone was misleading and an instruction that jury should consider all the facts and circumstances bearing on such issue was proper. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Poteet [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 883. Where contributory negligence is dependent upon plaintiff's knowledge of the danger, the instruction should submit to the jury not only the question of actual knowledge, but also the duty to know. Where under the circumstances such duty might be inferred. Place v. Grand Trunk R. Co. [Vt.] 71 A 836. Instruction that if before crossing street car tracks plaintiff looked the distance she thought sufficient, erroneous. Detroit United R. Co. v. Nichols [C. C. A.] 165 F 289. Omitting certain elements of contributory negligence, and failure to define due care, not objectionable in view of the whole charge. Brinkman v. Pacholke, 41 Ind. App. 662, 84 NE 762. Instruction erroneous as permitting jury to infer that presence of watch tower at railroad crossing excused plaintiff from failure to see approaching train. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lynn [Ind.] 85 NE 999. Presumption that error was prejudicial in such case. Id. Instruction as to effect of plaintiff's knowledge of defect in street causing injury properly refused as obscure and misleading. Town of Newcastle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 757.

89. Instruction as to whether plaintiff was a trespasser fully and accurately submitted to the jury. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Barfield [Ga. App.] 63 SE 514. Instruction as to whether plaintiff was a licensee fully and accurately submitted to the jury. Id.

90. Held good on burden of proof where passenger was injured by derailment of train. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Brandon, 77 Kan. 612, 95 P 573. Instruction that no presumption arose that fire which arose shortly after passing of train was caused by sparks from engine, though correct in the abstract was misleading and properly refused, where evidence showed that engine emitted large quantity of sparks. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Hinton [Ark.] 48 S 546. Instruction held not erroneous as leading others to believe that defendant must show contributory negligence by his own evidence where plaintiff's evidence added nothing to defendant's on such issue. El Paso Elec. R. Co. v. Ryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 906. Instruction on presumption and burden of proof

All issues, theories and defenses must be submitted [92] and no material evidence eliminated,[93] and the charge must be restricted to the issues and evidence.[94] The held confusing. Hainlin v. Budge [Fla.] 47 S 825. Repetition of instructions that burden of proving negligence is on plaintiff not ground for reversal. Beatty v. Metropolitan, etc., R. Co., 141 Ill. App. 92. An instruction to find for defendant "if you are in doubt as to the preponderance of the evidence" is erroneous and is correctly charged to "if you are unable to determine as to its preponderance." Illinois Steel Co. v. Koshinski, 135 Ill. App. 587. Instruction placing burden of proving contributory negligence on defendant under his plea thereof not ground for reversal where jury was also instructed that question was to be determined from the whole evidence. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit [C. C. A.] 160 F 440.

91. Instruction that, "in order for plaintiff's injuries to be direct and proximate result of protruding tie, if any there was remaining in track, evidence must show that plaintiff caught foot under or against same in crossing track in performance of duty, and was thereby caused to fall," does not assume existence of sliver on tie. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Cleland [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 122. Instruction held to sufficiently charge that contributory negligence, to bar recovery, must have directly and proximately contributed to the injury. Morgan v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 SW 978.

92. Any instruction conditioning plaintiff's right to recover upon his exercise of due care, and leaving the jury to determine whether such care was exercised, submits the issue of contributory negligence. Clingan v. Dixon County [Neb.] 118 NW 1082. Instruction held to erroneously submit such issue, there being no evidence from which contributory negligence could be inferred. Id. Where a general instruction on contributory negligence is given, it is unnecessary to refer to every item of evidence tending to show specific acts of contributory negligence. Hubbard v. Montgomery County [Iowa] 118 NW 912. Where injury was caused by falling down open and unguarded elevator shaft, the requirement of St. 1898, § 1636j, that all elevators be securely guarded, was sufficient by charging that the burden was on plaintiff to show the failure to guard the entrance and submitting to the jury the question whether defendant negligently failed to reasonably guard it at the time of the accident. Anderson v. Horlick's Malted Milk Co., 137 Wis. 569, 119 NW 342. When the case turns solely upon the question of willful or wanton injury, such issue should be presented to the jury unconfused with any other question. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Moore [Ga. App.] 63 SE 642. Instruction remitting the jury to the pleas to determine what negligence was alleged held confusing. Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. Wheeler [Ala.] 46 S 262. Defendant is entitled to an instruction grouping the facts relied on to show contributory negligence, even though the plea is not as specific as the testimony relating thereto. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958. That injury was caused by defective construction of sidewalk, or from a defect therein which defendant should have discovered. City of Covington v. Webster, 33 Ky. L. R. 649, 110 SW 878. Defense of contributory negligence of sectionman struck by train held sufficiently presented. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Alleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 73. As to disregard of contract requiring stock attendants to ride in caboose and custom of such attendants to climb in and out of cars. Crawford v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. [Mo.] 114 SW 1057. The jury should be permitted to consider them. Id. Where contributory negligence is pleaded generally, defendant is entitled to have any facts in evidence which raise that issue grouped and affirmatively presented to the jury. Was not confined to negligence of partially blind man in walking along embankment near excavation in street in night time, but might go to negligence in walking on such street at all under the circumstances. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Samuel [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 133. Instruction stating elements to be considered on the issue of contributory negligence erroneous as omitting the elements of experience. Fowler v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 234 Ill. 619, 85 NE 298. Instruction properly refused because ignoring issues. Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown [Md.] 71 A 1005. Instruction to effect that imminent, sudden danger rendered doctrine of contributory negligence inapplicable erroneous for failure to instruct that fault in getting into the place of danger might render it applicable. New York Transp. Co. v. O'Donnell [C. C. A.] 159 F 659. Error not cured by instruction in other parts of charge dealing with negligence. Id. Where defense was plaintiff's knowledge, refusal to direct that if plaintiff had knowledge he could not recover held error. Hamilton v. Niles-Bement-Pond Co., 192 N. Y. 179, 84 NE 801. Negligence of plaintiff with reference to harness where horse was frightened by automobile. Brinkman v. Pacholke, 41 Ind. App. 662, 84 NE 762. Evidence held to require a charge on discovered peril. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Reynolds [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 340. Where there was evidence that cable company placed proper signals to warn trainmen of obstacle on track, a charge that if company left obstacle on track it was negligent was erroneous as pretermitting the question of due care as to warnings that obstacles were on track. Chute v. Moeser, 77 Kan. 706, 95 P 398.

93. Evidence as to capacity of child (Norfolk R. & L. Co. v. Higgins, 108 Va. 324, 61 SE 766), or take from the jury theories which the evidence tends to support (Id.). Theory of defense of contributory negligence. Id. Instruction properly refused on this ground, Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown [Md.] 71 A 1005.

94. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958. Instructions must conform to the issues. Where case was tried on theory of negligence and not of wanton injury, refusal to province of the jury[95] must not be invaded,[96] nor should disputed facts be assumed.[97]

Verdicts and findings. See 10 C. L. 961—Separate verdicts for different amounts may be awarded against joint tort feasors.[98] Interrogatories should not be in the alternative.[99] Verdicts will be construed in accordance with the instructions given,[1] and must be responsive to the issues.[2] Where several grounds of negligence are charge specifically and in the abstract on "wanton injury" was proper. Weitzmann v. Barber Asphalt Co., 129 App. Div. 443, 114 NYS 158. Instruction as a whole held to properly submit the issues, where action depended on whether defendant owned and controlled premises where injury was inflicted. Id. Instruction should not submit issues not raised. Ramp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 700, 114 SW 59. Hence, under a general charge of negligence, jury need not be told what facts, which the evidence tends to prove, would constitute the negligence complained of. Moore v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 116 SW 440. Instruction that willful negligence on defendant's part would render it liable regardless of contributory negligence erroneous where there was no allegation of willful negligence. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Baker [Okl.] 95 P 433. Where there is no evidence of contributory negligence, such issue should not be submitted to the jury. D. J. O'Brien Co. v. Omaha Water Co. [Neb.] 118 NW 1110; Clingan v. Dixon County [Neb.] 118 NW 1082. Issues raised by the pleadings alone and unsupported by the evidence should not be submitted to the jury. Brown v. Consolidated L. P. & I. Co. [Mo. App.] 109 SW 1032.

95. See ante this section.

96. Instruction properly refused as invading province of jury to determine what certain evidence did or did not establish. Louisville & S. I. Trac. Co. v. Worrell [Ind. App.] 86 NE 78. Instruction as to plaintiff's knowledge of danger and effect thereof held properly refused as invading province of jury. Town of Newcastle v. Grubbs [Ind.] 86 NE 757. By statute the trial judge is prohibited from expressing or intimating his opinion that certain facts do or do not constitute negligence. Instruction held to violate statute. Lay v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Ga.] 62 SE 189. Refusal to charge that certain facts would constitute the proximate cause held proper. Ives v. Gring [N. C.] 63 SE 609. May assume negligence in failure to keep watchman at a crossing in a populous neighborhood. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 107 SW 658. It is error to assume that it is contributory negligence for plaintiff to look in another direction than that in which he was walking. Lattimore v. Union Elec. L. & P. Co., 128 Mo. App. 37, 106 SW 543. Cannot assume negligence in running train at rate of fifty or sixty miles per hour, unless, perhaps, undisputed evidence shows it so. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worth [Tex. Civ. App.] 20 Tex. Ct. Rep. 772, 107 SW 958. Instruction that if jury believe, from evidence, that plaintiff was injured by negligence of defendant, as charged in declaration, does not assume that defendant was negligent. Pronskevitch v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 232 Ill. 136, 83 NE 545. Where the facts are disputed, it is error to instruct that a certain state of facts would constitute negligence per se. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Moberly [Tex. Civ. App.] 109 SW 483. The court should not submit the legal conclusion arising from the facts. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Eddleman [Tex. Civ. App.] 114 SW 425. Instruction that there is no evidence that plaintiff was or is permanently injured. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109.

97. Instructions in personal injury action, claimed to assume that failure to construct barriers was negligence, thus taking question from jury, when construed as a whole, although argumentative and disjointed, held harmless. Village of Oden v. Nichols, 133 Ill. App. 306. The term "if he did so" can have no other effect than to leave to jury question whether or not act was done. Frankfort & V. Trac. Co. v. Hulette, 32 Ky. L. R. 732, 106 SW 1193. Charge that if plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to his injury, they must find for defendant, even though defendant was guilty of negligence, assumes plaintiff's negligence. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 48 S 109. Charge erroneous which assumes that horse and wagon were left unattended in street and that driver was guilty of negligence. Southern Hardware & Supply Co. v. Standard Equipment Co. [Ala.] 48 S 357. Requested instruction properly refused on this ground. Maryland, D. & V. R. Co. v. Brown [Md.] 71 A 1005.

98. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth [Ky.] 114 SW 264.

99. "Did defendant company have knowledge of defective condition of controller or ought it to have known of such defective condition" held objectionable. Gay v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & L. Co. [Wis.] 120 NW 283.

1. Where jury were instructed that plaintiff could not recover if accident was result of defective operation of boiler and did not result from defective construction, a verdict for plaintiff will be construed as finding that injury was caused by defective construction. Statler v. Ray Mfg. Co., 109 NYS 172. Under instructions which permit a finding that the negligence was that of a vice-principal, a fellow-servant, or the combined negligence of both, a finding that it was that of a fellow-servant excludes other negligence and negatives a right to recover, it not being a mere conclusion. Wichita Gas, Elec. L. & P. Co. v. Crist [Kan.] 97 P 1134.

2. Findings that spikes were loose in ties, and that soft wood insufficient to hold spikes was failure to use best method of keeping roadbed in proper condition, supported allegation of negligence in action by charged and a certain defense is available to some, but not to others, a special verdict for plaintiff which fails to state the grounds on which it is based is fatally defective.[3] If a general verdict is inconsistent with the answers to interrogatories, the latter must prevail.[4] Inconsistent answers to interrogatories annul each other.[5]

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

passenger for derailment of train. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Brandon, 77 Kan. 612, 95 P 573.

3. Reffke v. Patten Paper Co., 136 Wis. 535, 117 NW 1004.

4. Special verdict held not inconsistent with general verdict necessarily finding existence of negligence in maintainance of steam exhaust near highway and nonexistence of contributory negligence. Ft. Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 170 Ind. 585, 84 NE 145. Where complaint alleged rate of speed at which train approached crossing and special verdict neither found the rate of speed nor that warning given might not have been in time to permit plaintiff to avoid the collision, the general verdict for plaintiff was not overcome, for it could not be presumed, as against it, that plaintiff heard or could have heard the warnings. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Lynn [Ind.] 85 NE 999. Where answers to interrogatories exclude every conclusion authorizing recovery for plaintiff, judgment non obstante veridicto should be rendered for defendant. Apperson v. Lazro [Ind. App.] 87 NE 97. Rule not applicable to either defendant where complaint alleges that both were in possession and control of instrumentality causing injury, which fact was not contradicted by the interrogatories. Id. In action against automobilist for frightening horse, finding that he did not run at an unlawful rate of speed did not negative other provisions of the statute on negligence and hence was not inconsistent with general verdict for plaintiff. Walkup v. Beebe [Iowa] 116 NW 321. Findings held inconsistent with each other but not with general verdict for plaintiff. Louisville & S. I. Trac. Co. v. Worrell [Ind. App.] 86 NE 78.

5. South Shore Gas & Elec. Co. v. Ambre [Ind. App.] 87 NE 246.

6. This topic treats of negotiable instruments as a special class of contracts, the general law of contracts being retained only so far as is absolutely essential to the proper treatment of the subject in hand. See generally such topics as Contracts, 11 C. L. 729; Fraud and Undue Influence, 11 C. L. 1583; Frauds, Statute of, 11 C. L. 1609; Usury, 10 C. L. 1937. Conflict of laws as to negotiable instruments is treated elsewhere (see Conflict of Laws, 11 C. L. 665), as is also the laws of banking (see Banking and Finance, 11 C. L. 370). As to pledge of

§ 1. Definition and indicia. Definition.[7]—See 10 C. L. 962—Written evidence of a debt, though in the form of a promise, is not necessarily a promissory note,[8] and even when it constitutes a promissory note it is not necessarily negotiable.[9] The negotiability of an instrument depends upon its terms,[10] with reference to certain elements fixed by law as the indicia of negotiability.[11] When a negotiable instrument is defined by statute, negotiability must, of course, be determined with reference to such definition,[12] and sometimes it becomes necessary to determine negotiability with reference to some particular statute not dealing primarily with negotiable instruments.[13] A bank check is an instrument by which a depositor seeks to withdraw funds from a bank, and as between the drawer and the payee it is not only evidence of indebtedness,[14] but is also, legally and commercially, equivalent to the drawer's promise to pay.[15] It is, furthermore, a bill of exchange payable on demand [16] and is negotiable.[17] A bill of exchange or draft is distinguished from a note [18] and also from a chattel.[19] Non-negotiable paper does not become a bill of exchange merely negotiable instruments as collateral, see Pledges, 10 C. L. 1253. As to transfer of bills of lading as transfer of goods, see Carriers, 11 C. L. 499. As to negotiable instruments as a medium of payment, see Payment and Tender, 10 C. L. 1147. 8. Writing in following terms, "I do hereby promise to pay Mary G. Russell $1,000—one thousand dollars—or leave that sum to be paid to her at my death, for services rendered me by her as housekeeper and companion and nurse, for the past four years and until my death, besides her weekly wages which I pay her quarterly," held not a promissory note and hence valid and binding, though not delivered during lifetime of maker. Russell v. Close's Estate [Neb.] 119 NW 515.

9. Boyd v. Beebe [W. Va.] 61 SE 304.

10. Promissory note becomes a negotiable note when it contains the necessary elements of negotiability. Boyd v. Beebe [W. Va.] 61 SE 304. Certificate of shares in cemetery association, by its terms "transferable only on the books of the cemetery association upon surrender of the certificate," is on its face non-negotiable. American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Woodlawn Cemetery [N. Y.] 87 NE 107. Bill of lading is negotiable. Acts 1898, No. 150, p. 193. Schenermann v. Monarch Fruit Co. [La.] 48 S 647. Accepted sight draft with bill of lading attached, indorsed and negotiated by the payee is governed by commercial law. Bank of Guntersville v. Jones Cotton Co. [Ala.] 46 S 971. Special assessment vouchers or bonds are not negotiable instruments. First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Elgin, 136 Ill. App. 453. Receiver's certificate is neither negotiable nor quasi negotiable. McCarthy v. Crawford, 141 Ill. App. 276. Receiver's certificate is not a negotiable instrument, though issued under an order in terms authorizing issue of negotiable certificates. Bernard v. Union Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 159 F 620.

17. At common law. Purcell v. Armour Packing Co., 4 Ga. App. 253, 61 SE 138.

18. Instrument directing certain party to pay to maker or drawer, at certain time, certain sum, to be charged to account of maker or drawer, is bill of exchange and not note. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Kramer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 84.

19. Express order upon foreign bank to pay to certain person a certain sum in local currency "on presentation of this check, out of our balance," held not a chattel, the de-

by endorsement by the payee,[20] but such an indorser will be held liable as the maker of a bill where the evidence shows that the indorsement was made with such intention.[21]

Elements of negotiability. See 10 C. L. 992—The promise constituting the obligation of the maker of a negotiable instrument must be unconditional.[22] The promise must usually be for the payment of money,[23] though this rule is not of universal application.[24] A recital will not destroy negotiability unless it in some way qualifies the promise or renders it uncertain,[25] and so also with regard to collateral stipulations.[26]

The time of performance of the obligation evidenced by the instrument must be certain.[27] The date of payment is not rendered indefinite by a provision giving the holder an option to extend the time of payment, where the note is expressly payable on or before a certain date.[29] Negotiability is not destroyed by a stipulation waiving presentment, protest and notice.[29]

§ 2. Contractual elements, requisites and validity. A. Of the instrument itself. In general.[30] See 10 C. L. 994—The creation and validity of a negotiable instrument is controlled by the principles applicable to contract generally,[31] and hence it must be properly and sufficiently executed [32] by one having proper mental capacity [33] and due livery of which would terminate drawer's liability. Moy Sie Tighe v. Fargo, 61 Misc. 181, 112 NYS 927.

32. Execution by mark without attestation held sufficient. Jackson v. Tribble [Ala.] 47 S 310. Execution by mark held sufficient without attestation where maker and witness authority in the premises,[34] and must be delivered [35] by proper authority.[36] Paper executed and delivered conditionally becomes effective as between the parties thereto only upon the performance of the conditions,[37] and where a note intended to be delivered in escrow is wrongfully delivered to the payee, the delivery is ineffectual.[38]

A negotiable instrument imports a consideration,[39] except, of course, where a contrary rule is prescribed by statute,[40] especially where value received is recited,[41] or where the instrument is under seal.[42] The actual consideration, however, may be inquired into,[43] and aside from the effect of negotiation,[44] it is no less essential than in the case of other contracts that there be a consideration [45] that is legal [46] and

sufficient.[47] Lack or failure of consideration is distinguished from breach of the contract evidenced by the note,[48] or of the contract pursuant to which the note is given,[49] but it is held that failure of consideration may consist in a breach of condilegality of $400 of consideration for promissory note of $1,000 held fatal to whole. Id. Note given in part for pre-existing debt and part to secure discontinuance of criminal prosecution held invalid. Stanard v. Sampson [Okl.] 99 P 796.

47. In suit between maker and payee, on purchase-money note, maker may defeat or limit amount of recovery thereon by proving in one case a total unexecuted nonperformance on the part of the vendor of his contract to deliver the property, or loss, on part of vendee of the benefit of the contract, occasioned by want of title in vendor, and in other case refusal of vendee to accept property and notice of his intention not to do so given before title passed; all on the theory of failure of consideration in whole or in part. Acme Food Co. v. Older [W. Va.] 61 SE 235.

Held insufficient: Where agent of seller receives commission of latter, a note executed by buyer representing additional bonus or commission on sales is, unless expressly agreed to, without consideration and voidable. Shelton Implement Co. v. Schieck [Neb.] 116 NW 951. Subscription to stock before company is incorporated is not a valid consideration. Avon Springs Sanitarium Co. v. Kellogg, 125 App. Div. 51, 109 NYS 153. Indebtedness of maker to payee principal held no consideration for note payable to agent personally, principal not having directed making of note in such manner and the indebtedness to principal not having been satisfied by the note. Roberts v. Feringer [Tex. Civ. App.] 113 SW 149. Note given in consideration of assignment of mortgage held without consideration in that mortgage was comparatively valueless. Mussey v. Notes given by lessee of part of building to lessee of other part to prevent latter from making a certain sublease held supported by valid consideration, without regard to first lessee's right to accomplish the same thing by enforcing restrictions contained in his lease. Rosenblum v. Blaser, 115 NYS 219. Consideration held sufficient waiver of legal right. Withdrawal of objection to widow's allowance held sufficient consideration for widow's promise to pay creditor's claim if not paid by estate. Golding v. McCall [Ga. App.] 63 SE 706. Abandonment of land allotment contest before commission to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. Williams v. First Nat. Bank, 20 Okl. 274, 95 P 457. No failure on ground that payee had no interest in premises conveyed and for which note was given, where conveyance was a mere quitclaim purporting to convey only such right as payee might have. Id. Conditions assumed on the part of the party to whom it is delivered. Note given to trade union in earnest for maker's observance of agreement with union held supported by conditions assumed by union. Simers v. Halpern, 114 NYS 163. Antecedent debt. Acts 1904, p. 220, c. 102, § 26. Hermann's Ex'r v. Gregory [Ky.] 115 SW 809. Where note was executed to one who had paid off debt of maker, it was executed for value. Id. Notes given for pre-existing indebtedness on consideration that maker, a commercial firm, be allowed to sell its stock to pay creditors and that the payee furnish it new stock held for valuable consideration. Richardson v. Wren [Ariz.] 95 P 124. Receipt of note as security for debt or forbearance to sue upon a present claim or debt, or the giving of an extension of time to an imputed debtor, is a sufficient consideration. Zimbleman v. Finnegan [Iowa] 118 NW 312.

48. Failure to keep promise constituting consideration for note held not failure of consideration. Clarke v. Newton, 235 Ill. 530, 85 NE 747, afg. 138 Ill. App. 196.

49. Where note is given for purchase

tions.[50] A promissory note cannot operate as a gift, for, as such, it would be unexecuted and incomplete, amounting only to a promise to give,[51] but a note in the nature of a testamentary disposition of property will not be declared invalid by reason of disparity between the amount thereof and the value of the consideration.[52] Where the maker seeks to avoid liability on the ground of failure of consideration, he must return the consideration if possible,[53] unless such consideration is totally worthless.[54] The defense of lack or failure of consideration is available to sureties,[55] but defenses based upon the legality or sufficiency of the consideration between the maker and the payee are not available to an indorser as against an indorsee.[56]

As in the case of other contracts, a negotiable instrument is vitiated by fraud [57] or duress [58] in its inception, the distinction between negotiable instruments and other contracts in this connection being of peculiar importance only with reference to the effect of negotiation,[59] and in the latter connection the distinction between fraud and in the inducement and fraud in the factum also becomes important.[60] Fraud may be perpetrated in connection with the execution of a negotiable instrument with reference to the signatures of coparties,[61] the nature of the instrument executed,[61a] or the consideration.[62] As in other cases, the elements of fraud legally cognizable must exist, and one who signs a note cannot set up a defense that he did not read the fine print on its face,[63] nor can fraud generally be predicated upon a promise inducing the money of property, the contract constitutes valuable consideration for note, and action may be maintained on note, even though property was never delivered and title thereto never passed. Acme Food Co. v. Older [W. Va.] 61 SE 235.

50. Consideration of note given to university in consideration of certain scholarship held not to have failed by reason of consolidation of university with college. Miller v. Central University [Ky.] 112 SW 669. Where payee of note given for patent-right territory procured it to be executed by stipulating with maker that he, the payee, would furnish experienced men to canvass for maker and sell enough territory to pay off note, held breach of such stipulation constituting failure of consideration. Wilson v. Carter, 4 Ga. App. 349, 61 SE 494. Plea alleging that check was given to plaintiff by defendant without any present consideration, but with understanding that if third person would turn certain money over to defendant at future time check would be paid out of such money, and that such money had never been turned over to defendant, held to state a good defense. Purcell v. Armour Packing Co., 4 Ga. App. 253, 61 SE 138.

51. Bade v. Feay, 63 W. Va. 166, 61 SE 348.

52. Note given to near relative by person in declining years, by way of compensation or reward for services rendered and to be rendered. Bade v. Feay, 63 W. Va. 166, 61 SE 348. That such a note so given calls for a larger sum than the services were probably worth does not invalidate it on the ground of failure of consideration. Id.

63. Bank of Morgan City v. Herwig, 121 La. 513, 46 S 611.

execution of a note,[64] though it may be considered upon an issue of fraud,[65] and the promise itself may be fraudulent by reason of a coexisting intent not to fulfill it.[66] An instrument having its inception in fraud may be validated by ratification, waiver or estoppel.[67] So, also, infirmities arising out of fraud in the inception of a note are cured by a reissue of the note by the maker for a valid consideration, before maturity and with knowledge of the facts.[68] Return of the consideration, if possible, is usually essential to a rescission for fraud.[69] The defense of fraud is available to a surety as well as to the principal,[70] but fraud in the inception of the paper is not available to an indorser as against his indorsee.[71]

A note is not necessarily invalid because its execution involves a penal offense,[72] or because a mortgage given to secure it is invalid.[73]

Instruments executed in blank.[See 10 C. L. 968]—At common law, where one signs a blank note and delivers it to another for the purpose of enabling the latter to raise money thereon, the latter may insert whatever sum he pleases in the note,[74] but implied authority to fill in blanks goes no further than to authorize the insertion of that which is necessary to make the obligation speak according to its intended purpose and use,[75] and where the maker of a check does not designate a payee no one else has authority to complete the instrument by writing in the name of a payee, unless it is issued by the payee in such incomplete form.[76] By statute in some states the blank instrument must be filled up in conformity with the authority given by the signer.[77]

Instruments payable to maker or drawer.[See 10 C. L. 964]—An instrument payable

64. That officer of plaintiff bank told defendant to buy certain land, and that the bank would buy the purchase-money notes and allow him to pay same from proceeds of resale of land. State Bank of Iowa Falls v. Brown [Iowa] 119 NW 81.

65. State Bank of Iowa Falls v. Brown [Iowa] 119 NW 81.

66. Note secured by promise which payee does not intend to fulfill. Walters v. Rock [N. D.] 115 NW 511.

67. Renewal note given to collection agent personally upon his false representation that he held original note for collection held validated by principal's ratification of agent's acts. Billingsley v. Benefield [Ark.] 112 SW 188. Payment without knowledge of one's legal rights and while under same influences which induced execution of paper does not operate as waiver, estoppel or ratification of note so as to preclude defense of fraud and lack of consideration. Slaughter v. Ditto, 33 Ky. L. R. 5, 108 SW 882. Where maker renews note in hands of purchaser, he is estopped to assert fraud in inception of original note. Odbert v. Marquet, 163 F 892.

68. Where comaker of note given for purchase of land arranged with vendor for secret profit to such comaker, under which arrangement part of joint notes were transferred to such comaker, and other maker thereafter purchased his comaker's equity in the land, assuming payment of all purchase-money notes as consideration of such purchase. Curry v. Lafon, 133 Mo. App. 163, 113 SW 246. In such case the doctrine that illegality of consideration of original contract invalidates all subsequent renewals thereof does not apply. Id.

76. Reed v. Mattapan Deposit & Trust Co., 198 Mass. 306, 84 NE 469.

77. Note executed in blank to enable person to whom it was delivered to borrow money held filled out and used in conformity with authority conferred by signer, as required by Acts 1904, p. 217, § 102, in order to bind persons becoming parties prior to completion, where it was filled up and made payable to one who had paid debt of person for whose accommodation note was signed in blank, such payment having been made under agreement that such person would secure the note in question as to the maker or drawer has no legal existence until indorsed by him [78] and negotiated.[79]

Accommodation paper.[See 10 C. L. 979]—With reference to its requisites and validity, accommodation paper is in most respects within the category of ordinary commercial paper,[80] but ex vi termini no consideration to the accommodation party is necessary,[81] and hence the holder's knowledge of the accommodation character of the paper does not affect the liability of the accommodation party.[82] On the other hand it follows from the absence of consideration to the accommodation party that no contract is created by his mere execution of the paper and its delivery to the party accommodated,[83] and the accommodation party may cancel his socalled obligation at any time before value has been parted with on the credit of his name [84] or may avail himself of the absence of consideration in any action brought by the party accommodated,[85] and as between such parties the same rule applies to renewals of such a note.[86] There must, however, be a consideration between the party accommodated and the party receiving the paper.[87] Where there is such a consideration, the accommodation party is bound.[88] Aside from the effect of negotiation, accommodation paper becomes effective to bind the accommodation party only where used for the purpose intended by the accommodation party.[89] An accommodation indorsement

Consideration between maker and payee essential to bind accommodation indorser. Osborne v. Fridrich [Mo. App.] 114 SW 1045. Under Laws 1897, p. 727, c. 612, § 54, making absence of consideration a defense as against one not a bona fide holder for value without notice, answer, alleging that paper sued on was made for accommodation of payee, and that plaintiff's indorser secured it from payee by fraud and duress, and that plaintiff received it from such indorser after dishonor, without consideration and with full notice of all the facts, held sufficient as against a motion to strike for priority, though it appeared that there was no diversion of the paper. Weiss v. Rieser, 114 NYS 983.

88. Credit given maker of note is sufficient consideration to bind accommodation indorser. Bank of Morgan City v. Herwig, 121 La. 513, 46 S 611. If one elects to make and deliver his promissory notes to another, to be used to pay debts of latter, and they are so used, former cannot defend on ground that he has received no consideration. Central Typesetting Co. v. Ober, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 291. Debt due from third person is sufficient consideration for note from maker to creditor, provided there be either an express or implied agreement for an extension of time or cancellation of the debtor's liability, and an agreement to extend will be implied if debt is then due and note is made payable at future day. Zimbleman v. Finnegan [Iowa] 118 NW 312. Accommodation indorsement upon strength of which note is accepted by maker's creditor is supported by sufficient consideration. Bowler v. Osborne, 75 N. J. Law, 903, 70 A 149, distinguishing Hayden v. Weldon, 43 N. J. Law, 128, 39 Am. Rep. 551, on ground that in that case note had been delivered to payee and was in his hands when additional indorsement was made. Taking of such paper as conditional payment or as collateral security for antecedent indebtedness constitutes taking for value, provided no restrictions imposed by the accommodation party are violated thereby. Macaulay v. Holsten, 114 NYS 611. Where consideration amounts to diversion of paper, it is insufficient. Id.

secured by the fraud of the payee creates no liability in favor of parties not bona fide purchasers,[90] and so, also, where the consideration for the indorsement is illegal,[91] and the latter defect is not cured by a subsequent waiver of defenses upon giving a renewal.[92] The right of the indorser to defend on the ground of fraud by which the indorsement was induced is not dependent upon a rescission of the contract between the principal parties or upon a return of the consideration therefor.[93]

Collateral stipulations and agreements. See 10 C. L. 964—Aside from the question of usury, stipulations for attorney's fees are sustained in some states and held invalid in others.[94] An agreement to extend the time of payment must be based upon a sufficient consideration,[95] and in this connection the rule that reciprocal promises are a sufficient consideration, the one for the other, applies.[96] Such an agreement may be oral.[97] In some instances, a collateral agreement and the note in connection with which it is made are so inseparably connected in their execution that one cannot be impeached without impeaching the other.[98]

(§ 2) B. Of acceptance.[99]—See 10 C. L. 973—A draft may be presented by the holder's agent,[1] and even when presented by one not authorized, an acceptance inures to the benefit of the holder.[2] Though when a bill is made payable at a fixed time

Note: "It is undoubtedly true that in a number of states it is held legal for creditor and debtor to contract that in case the debtor fail to pay upon maturity that then the creditor may recover, in addition to his debt, interest and costs, a reasonable sum for attorney's fees for collection, and this has been held to be the law in Maryland. Bowie v. Hall, 69 Md. 434, 16 A 64, 9 Am. St. Rep. 433, 1 L. R. A. 546; Gaither v. Tolson, 84 Md. 638, 36 A 449. It is also true that in other states such contracts are held void, and in no state where usury laws are in effect are they permitted to be enforced, if such charges are either unreasonable or made a subterfuge, for usurious exactions. A creditor would not, for instance, under the law of Maryland, under such a contract, be permitted to exact a commission of $500 for collecting a $100 debt. Nor would it be permitted to collect a commission of $1,400 'for collecting' a debt of $28,000 which the debtor came forward, an hour after it was due, to pay and before any attorney had been employed to collect it, for, as said in Bowie v. Hall, supra, the purpose of such a provision 'is clearly not to put money above the legal rate of interest into the pocket of the lender, but merely to enable him to get back his money with legal interest, and nothing more.' And this statement of the law is quoted and approved in Gaither v. Tolson, supra. Very interesting discussions touching the validity and effect of this kind of contracts, pro and con, can be found in Wilson Sewing Mach. Co. v. Moreno, 7 F 806, and Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Sevier, 14 F 662, and note; also, note Bowie v. Hall, 69 Md. 434, 16 A 64, 9 Am. St. Rep. 433, 1 L. R. A. 546, and note to Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493, 41 NW 517, 3 L. R. A. 50. Recognizing that the law in Virginia and West Virginia, two other states in this circuit, as set forth in Toole v. Stephen, 4 Leigh [Va.] 581, in regard to this question, is squarely the opposite to that in Maryland, we here distinctly disclaim any purpose to determine the question as an original proposition, because we are not required to do so by the conditions of this case."—From Chestertown Bank of Maryland v. after its date, presentment for acceptance before that time is not necessary in order to charge the drawer or indorsers, it may be presented for acceptance at any time.[3] Mere delivery to the drawer is not equivalent to an acceptance, though he has sufficient funds of the drawer to pay the bill;[4] but no particular form of acceptance is necessary, and where the holder is assured by the acts and words of the drawee that the paper is good, there is an acceptance.[5] A verbal acceptance is sufficient[6] even though it is made without consideration,[7] but in some states a written acceptance may be required.[8] An acceptance imports consideration to the acceptor[9] and is not dependent upon the acceptor having funds of the drawee,[10] even though the holder knows that the acceptor has no such funds.[11] As against remote parties, such as the payee or indorsee, a failure of consideration involves not merely what the defendant received for his liability but also what plaintiff gave for his title.[12] No consideration from the holder to the acceptor is necessary.[13] The certification of a check operates as an acceptance.[14] An acceptance may be conditional so as to become operative only upon certain contingencies.[15] A promise to accept made by the drawee to the drawer does not amount to an acceptance where it is not acted upon by the holder,[16] even though the promise is in writing,[17] unless the writing is upon the paper itself.[18] An agreement to honor the drafts of a partnership is binding upon the acceptor even after dissolution of the partnership as against persons purchasing or discounting such drafts upon the faith of such promise and without notice of such dissolution,[19] especially where the acceptor knows of the dissolution and fails to notify the party to whom the promise to honor was made.[20] Money paid upon a mistaken acceptance may usually be recovered,[21] but it is incumbent upon the drawee of a bill to be satisfied that the signature of the drawer is genuine, as he is presumed to know the drawer's handwriting, and if the drawee accepts or pays the bill to which the drawer's name has been forged he can neither repudiate the acceptance nor recover the money paid [22] even from the person to whom it was paid,[23] and even though the position of the parties has not been changed.[24] In such case drawee can acquire no rights as against the person to whom payment was made or any person interested in sustaining the payment as valid,[25] nor be subrogated to the right of any such party.[26]

livery,[38] and any bona fide purchaser has authority to fill in his own name.[39] When an instrument is knowingly made payable to a fictitious person, it is payable to bearer and passes by delivery without indorsement,[40] and within this rule a person whose name is used as a mere pretense, without any intention that he shall receive either the paper or the proceeds thereof, is a fictitious person.[41] The rule at common law and under the statutes of the various states is that the maker's or drawer's knowledge of the fiction is essential to render the paper payable to the bearer as such,[42] and in this respect it differs from the rule under the English Bills of Exchange Act, under which the sole test is the fictitiousness of the payee, though the test as to what constitutes a fictitious payee is the same under both rules.[43] Where the instrument passes by delivery, the sufficiency of an indorsement to pass title is immaterial.[44]

Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America [N. Y.] 85 NE 829.

43. Boles v. Harding, 201 Mass. 103, 87 NE 481.

NOTE: At common law and under the statutes of the various states the maker's or drawer's knowledge of the fiction is essential to authorize a recovery by the bearer as such. Boles v. Harding, 201 Mass. 103, 87 NE 481; Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America [N. Y.] 85 NE 829; Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 187; Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 35 NE 982, 37 Am. St. Rep. 655, 6 L. R. A. 625. Selover on Negotiable Instruments, p. 70. The basis of this phase of the rule is that without knowledge the maker or drawer is not estopped. Boles v. Harding, 201 Mass. 103, 87 NE 481. The element of knowledge was dispensed with by the English Bills of Exchange Act 1882, § 7, subd. 3; Bank of England v. Vagliano Bros. [1891] App. Cas. 107; Clulten v. Altenborough [1897] App. Cas. 90; Boles v. Harding, 201 Mass. 103, 87 NE 481; Trust Co. of America v. Hamilton Bank, 127 App. Div. 515, 112 NYS 84. But even under this act which for most intents and purposes makes maker's or drawer's intention immaterial an instrument made to an actual person whose name is used as a mere pretense and without any intention that he shall receive either the paper or the proceeds thereof is payable to bearer and passes by delivery without indorsement. Bank of England v. Vagliano Bros. [1891] App. Cas. 107; Clulten v. Altenborough [1897] App. Cas. 90; Boles v. Harding, 201 Mass. 103, 87 NE 481; Snyder v. Corn Exch. Sometimes cited to the contrary of the last above stated doctrine, is readily distinguished on the ground that the maker was imposed upon and thought that the payees would really receive the paper or the proceeds thereof as intended by the maker. See Snyder v. Corn Exch. Nat. Bank, 221 Pa. 599, 70 A 876; Trust Co. v. Hamilton Bank, 127 App. Div. 515, 112 NYS 84. To same effect as the Shipman Case and distinguishable on the same ground, see Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America [N. Y.] 85 NE 829.—[Ed.]

44. Drawer who paid draft to holder could not recover money back on ground that payee's indorsement was a forgery, where the draft was payable to bearer, since in such case the holder derived title by delivery and not through the forged indorsement. Trust Co. of America v. Hamilton Bank, 127 App. Div. 515, 112 NYS 84. Title held to have passed by delivery without regard to sufficiency of corporation's indorsement without seal. Hall v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 SW 293. Where one becomes the holder of note by delivery under indorsement in blank by payee, he is entitled to strike out subsequent indorsement under which he does not claim title, and it is immaterial whether such indorsement is restrictive or not. Jerman v. Edwards, 29 App. D. C. 535. Statute authorizing holder to strike out any indorsement which is not necessary to his title is declaratory of law as it existed prior to enactment of statute. Id. Effect of prior blank in-

Form and sufficiency of indorsement. See 10 C. L. 973, 974—An indorsement may be sufficient to pass title though containing no formal words of transfer [45] or expressed intent to sell.[46] The fact that an endorser enlarges his liability by a guaranty does not prevent the instrument from passing as a negotiable one,[47] nor will such an indorsement nullify a prior blank indorsement.[48] Actual ownership of paper payable to another party is essential to sustain an indorsement of the payee's name by the holder.[49] The form of an indorsement is immaterial where it is apparent that the indorser intended to be bound thereby,[50] especially where the indorser receives the benefit thereof with full knowledge.[51] Whether an indorsement is that of a corporation or individuals depends upon both form and intent.[52]

Delivery. See 10 C. L. 973,974—An indorsement by the holder is ineffective to pass the title from him so long as he retains the paper in his own right.[53]

Consideration. See 10 C. L. 973, 974—A consideration is not essential to the transfer of legal title.[54] Ordinarily a failure of the consideration subsequently to the purchase does not constitute in legal conception a failure of the consideration.[55] An indorser's liability is not dependent upon the consideration between the maker and the payee [56] except where the indorsement is for accommodation, which has already been considered.[57]

Fraud and forgery. See 10 C. paper to the holder.[61] On the other hand an indorser for value, as distinguished from an accommodation indorser,[62] cannot plead fraud between the maker and the payee.[63] A forged indorsement passes no title,[64] and no rights can be acquired thereunder,[65] except as between parties guilty of negligence and innocent parties suffering therefrom.[66] Where, however, an indorser guarantees a prior forged indorsement he thereby becomes liable to anyone thereafter purchasing the paper upon the strength of such indorsement.[67] Where the instrument passes by delivery a forged indorsement may be disregarded, since in such case the holder does not derive his claim of title through the forgery.[68] The validity of an indorsement and the contract thereby created is not affected by the fact that the note itself is a forgery,[69] the reason being that the indorser's contract is separate and distinct from that of the maker.[70] of course, a matter of interpretation of the particular stipulation,[79] but it is very generally held that under a stipulation for attorney's fees only such fees can be recovered as have actually been paid or for which the party claiming the recovery has actually obligated himself.[80] In other words, while attorney's fees stipulated for become a part of the principal debt when the contingency specified in the stipulation occurs,[81] such a stipulation is a contract for indemnity and not a liquidation of damages,[82] and hence liability thereunder cannot exceed the liability of the holder to the attorney in connection with the collection of the paper,[83] and the stipulated amount operates as a maximum limit of such indemnity.[84] It follows also that a recovery can be had only for fees necessarily incurred.[85] The fact that notes held as collateral are not due is not conclusive of the necessity of placing them in the hands of an attorney for collection,[86] nor is the liability for attorney's fees in such case affected by the fact that the debt secured is evidenced by a note which also stipulates for attorney's fees;[87] but fees cannot be allowed for collection the expense of which has otherwise been paid.[88] Where the contingency contemplated by the stipulation for fees is postponed upon certain conditions, such conditions must be substantially complied with in order to prevent accrual of liability for fees.[89]

note is presumed to be a principal,[93] but the order of arrangement is not conclusive, and the first signer may show that he signed only as surety,[94] unless the payee in accepting the paper relied upon the credit of such person as a principal.[95]

Signature as indorser See 10 C. L. 963, 974 is ordinarily unaffected by the belief of the person so signing as to the capacity in which he signs, where such belief is not shared by or communicated to the payee,[96] nor is the contract created by a signature as indorser affected by the secret purpose of the party so signing,[97] but a signature as indorser may be characterized by the circumstances under which it is made.[98] There is so much conflict, however, as to the presumption that arises from particular circumstances attending indorsement that no rule of universal application can be stated. Thus, in Missouri, one indorsing otherwise than as payee or indorsee is presumptively a maker,[99] and this presumption continues until overthrown by clear and convincing proof,[1] but where the indorsement appears to have been made before delivery, the indorser is liable as such in the absence of a contrary intention clearly indicated.[2] In Michigan it seems that an indorsement by one not the payee on the back of a note prima facie imports suretyship,[3] but if the indorsement is made before delivery, the indorser becomes prima facie liable as a maker.[4] In Wisconsin a person not the payee signing a note on the back thereof before delivery is deemed an indorser.[5] In North Carolina one indorsing a note in blank before delivery is deemed an indorser unless he clearly indicates in appropriate words a contrary intent.[6] In West Virginia a stranger who indorses negotiable paper at the time it is made is prima facie an original promisor or a guarantor, as the payee at any time may elect.[7] In Tennessee a person indorsing before delivery is deemed an indorser,[8] but this presumption, though statutory, may, as between the original parties, be rebutted.[9] In New York, prior to the enactment of the negotiable instrument law, a person who placed his name on the back of a bill or note before delivery was presumptively a second indorser and not liable to the payee,[10] but this rule was changed by the negotiable instrument law, and now the presumptive capacity in which such a signature is made is controlled by the express language of the statute.[11] The presump-

Under Laws 1897, p. 734, c. 612, § 113, defining indorser as one who signs otherwise than as maker, drawer or acceptor, one who indorses in blank before delivery in order to give credit to maker or acceptor is liable as an indorser. Id. Under Laws 1897, c. 612, p. 719, § 113, providing that one signing instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer or acceptor, unless clearly and expressly otherwise stated, and § 114, providing that one not otherwise a party to an instrument who indorses same in blank before delivery is liable as an indorser where the instrument is payable to a third party, one making blank indorsement of note given by lessee of hotel to owner of furniture as part of tion arising from indorsement after delivery[12] may be rebutted by showing that the paper did not become operative until after delivery,[13] and the payee is not necessarily estopped to make such showing by erroneous book entries dealing with the note as operative from its date,[14] or by entries referring to such indorser as an indorser instead of as a maker.[15]

Indorser.[See 10 C. L. 974]—What constitutes a contract of indorsement has already been considered,[27] as has also the contractual elements and validity thereof.[28] A contract of indorsement is neither primary nor absolute but is secondary and conditional,[29] liability thereon being dependent upon certain contingencies inherent ex

rily liable upon acceptance by the drawee,[48] but is not discharged thereby.[49] Where the drawer of a check delivers it to a person representing himself to be the payee, he impliedly represents that such person is the payee.[50]

*Acceptor.*See 10 C. L. 973, 969—Acceptance of a bill or draft is not a collateral but an original and direct undertaking on the part of the acceptor,[51] whereby he guarantees or admits the genuineness of the drawer's signature,[52] admits the possession of funds of the drawer with which to pay the bill or draft,[53] and becomes primarily liable thereon.[54] The acceptor does not guarantee the payee's indorsement.[55] A conditional acceptance becomes absolute upon performance of the conditions.[56] Acceptance for accommodation is considered in the next subdivision of this subsection.

*Accommodation parties.*See 10 C. L. 979—On account of the absence of consideration, the accommodation party is under no contractual obligation to the party accommodated.[57] As between such parties the accommodation party is in effect a surety,[58] and his right of recourse against the party accommodated is, aside from any collateral agreement, that of a surety against his principal,[59] though, of course, the party accommodated may enter into a special agreement to save the accommodation party harmless,[60] but, as an indorser's liability is secondary to that of the maker, when an accommodation maker acquires the paper as a holder he cannot hold the indorser whom he has accommodated liable thereon.[61] As to holders other than the accommodated party, the accommodation party's liability is generally that of a similar party, that is a maker, acceptor or indorser, who receives value.[62] As to parties with notice, an accommodation party is not bound where the paper is diverted from the use for which it was intended.[63] In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, where several persons indorse for the accommodation of the maker, they are liable as between themselves as successive indorsers and not as joint sureties.[64]

(§ 3) D. Conditions of secondary liability.[65]—See 10 C. L. 975, 976, 978

In general. See 10 C. L. 975, 976, 978—The conditions inherent ex lege in the contract of an indorser or drawer apply only where such contract is confined to the limits fixed by law, and not where the contract is extended by special stipulation or guaranty,[66] nor do they apply where the contract, though secondary in form, is primary in fact.[67]

Presentment and demand. See 10 C. L. 976—Demand or exhaustion of the principal debtor is not essential to fix liability under a contract of absolute guaranty,[68] but presentment for and demand of payment are ex lege a condition precedent, inherent in the contract itself, to liability under a contract of indorsement as such.[69] Presentment and demand are always prima facie necessary to bind the secondary party,[70] and absolutely necessary when so required by statute,[71] unless waived, and when not required by statute as an absolute condition the circumstances may be such as to dispense with the necessity of presentment and demand.[72] Unreasonable delay in presenting a check will operate as a discharge when it causes injury,[73] but not otherwise.[74] The considerations upon which the holder of a check may excuse failure to forward in due course, as against the drawer, are not applicable as against an indorser.[75]

A demand note must be presented within a reasonable time,[76] and the same rule applies to a check.[77] Where the drawer and the payee of a check both reside in the place where the drawee bank is located, the general rule is that a reasonable time for the presentment of the check expires with the expiration of the next day after the date of the check.[78] Under this rule where the check is not received on the day of its date, the time for presentation is extended only to the expiration of the next day after its receipt.[79] As between the drawer and payee, the time is not extended by the latter's indorsement of the check to a third party.[80]

Presentation and demand must be made at the place designated by the parties or the law for that purpose,[81] but the weight of authority seems to be that the law is not over-exacting as to the mode or method of presentation, so long as an opportunity is given to pay or refuse to pay.[82] So far as relates to the necessity of making a personal demand, presentment may be made over the telephone,[83] and such a demand also constitutes presentment at the place where the person upon whom such demand is made receives the telephone message.[84] When a note is made payable at a branch bank located at a certain place, presentment at the office of the principle bank located at another place is insufficient.[85] Actual exhibition of the NOTE. Mode of presentment and demand: "Actual and formal presentation of notes has been held unnecessary to charge the indorser under many varying circumstances, as where the maker dies before the maturity of the note and no representative of his estate has been appointed (Daniel on Commercial Instruments, § 1111), or where the maker has absconded (Id. § 1125), or where the maker has removed from the state and taken up his domicile in another state or country (Id. § 1145; Foster v. Julien, 24 N. Y. 28, 80 Am. Dec. 320; Eaton v. McMahon, 42 Wis. 487; Whitely v. Allen, 56 Iowa, 224, 9 NW 190, 41 Am. Rep. 99; McGruder v. Bank of Washington, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 598, 6 Law Ed. 170). It has been held a sufficient demand and refusal, to constitute a dishonor of a note, if the maker, on the day it is due, calls on the holder where the note is and declares his inability to pay, and desires the holder to give notice to the indorser. Gilbert v. Dennis, 44 Mass. [3 Metc.] 495, 38 Am. Dec. 329. So, too, in an action against an indorser, it appeared the holder met the maker of a note on the street, and was refused payment, making no objection to the place of demand, and the court said:

'If demand be made upon the maker elsewhere than the place appointed, and no objection be made at the time, it will be deemed a waiver of any future demand.' King v. Crowell, 61 Me. 244, 14 Am. Rep. 560.

In the case of Tredick v. Wendell, 1 N. H. 80, the note was at the bank. The maker lived within a few rods of the bank, and a letter was sent him, stating that note was at the bank, and requesting payment. Held a sufficient demand to charge the indorser."—From Gilpin v. Savage, 60 Misc. 605, 112 NYS 802.

83. Gilpin v. Savage, 60 Misc. 605, 112 NYS 802.

NOTE. Presentment by telephone: The holder of the note on the day of maturity, by telephone, "called up" the maker at the place of the presentment, informing him that the note was held for collection. The maker, admitting his liability, refused to pay. Notice of nonpayment was given the indorser. Held, this was a sufficient presentment for payment, exhibition of the instrument being waived and the indorser was liable. Gilpin v. Savage, 60 Misc. 605, 112 NYS 802.

Exhibition of the instrument at presentment for payment may be dispensed with by a refusal to pay on other grounds (Porter v. Thom, 40 App. Div. 34, 57 NYS 479; afd. 167 N. Y. 584, 60 NE 1119), or impossibility (Thackerey v. Blackedt, 3 Camp. 164). At the time of presentment, however, opportunity for payment must be afforded (Parker v. Stroudt, 98 N. Y. 379, 50 Am. Rep. 685; Simpson v. Pacific, etc., Co., 44 Cal. 139), and clearly the telephone gives no such opportunity. While the reasoning of the principal case does not commend itself, the result is supportable. The formal demand itself is not always required, the essential facts to be established as a proper basis for the notice to the indorser, being the certainty of a refusal occurring at the time and place of maturity. Accordingly, the absconding of the maker (Lehman v. Jones, 1 Watts & S. [Pa.] 126), or his death with no administration at the day of maturity (Haslett v. Kunhart, Rice [S. C.] 189; cf. also Hale v. Burr, 12 Mass. 86), are held to make a presentment unnecessary; but the known insolvency of the one primarily liable has not the same effect (Bassenhorst v. Wilby, 45 Ohio St. 340). Telephone conversations, the identity of the parties being known, are admissible as evidence (Galt v. Woliver, 103 Ill. App. 71; see, also, 8 Columbia L. R. 587), and, there being no question of identity in the principal case, the ultimate non-payment of the note, at the time and place of maturity was definitely established and presentment itself was excused.—From 9 Columbia L. R. 185.

84. Gilpin v. Savage, 60 Misc. 605, 112 NYS 802.

85. "Place of payment" specified by instrument, as used in Laws 1897, p. 736, c. 612, § 133, does not refer to an individual or a corporation or an institution, but to a paper is for the benefit of the party primarily bound, and may be waived by him.[86] Such exhibition is waived by failure to demand it and refusal to pay on other grounds.[87]

Default of primary party.[See 10 C. L. 876]—Liability under a contract of indorsement is conditional upon the default of the party primarily bound,[88] and hence an indorser for whose accommodation the paper is executed cannot be held liable thereon to the accommodation maker, though the latter is also the holder.[89]

Protest.[See 10 C. L. 978]—Protest is essential to bind an indorser as such.[90] The term "protest" includes in a popular sense all steps necessary to fix the liability of a drawer or indorser upon the dishonor of commercial paper, and to which he is a party, or accurately speaking, it is the solemn declaration on the part of the holder against any loss to be sustained by him by reason of the nonacceptance or even nonpayment as the case may be, of the bill in question.[91] At common law no formal protest was necessary[92] and this rule still obtains in some of the states,[93] it being sufficient if proper presentment and demand be made and the party secondarily bound be notified of the dishonor.[94] Hence, where such facts are shown, a certificate of formal protest is not essential.[95]

Notice.[See 10 C. L. 978]—As a general rule notice of dishonor and protest is essential to bind an indorser or drawer.[96] In the absence of an express waiver,[97] such notice is always prima facie necessary,[98] and is absolutely necessary where it is made by statute an absolute condition of secondary liability.[99] Otherwise it is not necessary under some circumstances.[1]

Verbal notice of dishonor is sufficient,[2] though given to agent of the indorser instead of to the latter himself.[3] The owner of a note who has placed it with another for collection is not obliged either himself to notify the indorser of dishonor of the note or to make inquires as to whether the indorser receives his mail,[4] but having the right to employ an agent for this purpose, he may leave to the agent the execution of the duty thus delegated to the latter, and, aside from the duty of communicating to the agent any information he may have in regard to the matter, he is bound himself to perform none of the delegated duties.[5] Personal service on an indorser of notice of dishonor is not required, but constructive service will suffice where reasonable diligence is exercised to make it in the manner best adapted to convey actual notice.[6] Notice properly addressed and deposited in post-office is deemed due notice.[7] When the indorser lives in the country and his post-office address is not known to the holder, it is the duty of the latter to make reasonable inquiries, in town or city where the bill is payable, and, in default of more specific information, to address the notice to the nearest post-office.[8] The holder is not justified in all cases, however, in sending the notice to the nearest post-office, but must act in good faith always and with reasonable diligence to learn the place where the indorser receives his mail, and learning it must send the notice there, regardless of whether it be the nearest post-office.[10] The usual rules as to notice to partnerships apply.[11]

Waiver and excuse for nonperformance of conditions. See 10 C. L. 979—Present, demand, protest and notice may be waived by the express provisions of the instrument,[12] or the indorsement thereof,[13] or by subsequent conduct.[14] Where not absolutely required by statute, performance of such conditions will not be required when it would be useless,[15] and in some states the necessity thereof is by statute dispensed with in certain cases.[16] Insolvency of the maker is not alone an excuse for failure to give notice of dishonor to an indorser.[17] It seems that a waiver or excuse may be predicated upon the secondary party's receipt of security or indemnity,[18] but a several waiver cannot be predicated upon the receipt of such security

Story on Prom. Notes §§ 281, 282, 357; Story on Bills (4th ed.) §§ 316, 374; Chitty on Bills (9th Lond. ed.) 440, 449, 506, notes. This principle, thus broadly stated, although approved by some eminent authors, such as Story and Kent, and having the countenance of a dictum in Perry v. Green, 19 N. J. Law, 61, 63, 38 Am. Dec. 536, is doubted or denied by other writers (see 2 Dan. on Neg. Inst. (5th ed.) §§ 1129-1134). The stronger cases which apply the principle base the excuse upon the facts that the indorser himself has received enough or all (if not enough) of the maker's property for the purpose of securing the former against his liability, or for the purpose of or indemnity jointly by several secondary parties and their joint assumption of primary liability.[19]

§ 4. Discharge. A. In general.[20]—See 10 C. L. 969, 972—This section is confined to discharge of the obligation of the instrument itself and of contracts growing out of its indorsement, acceptance, etc., as distinguished from discharge of the obligation for which the instrument was given,[21] and to the discharge of the obligations of valid, subsisting contracts, as distinguished from so-called contracts, which are invalid or incomplete,[22] it being a matter of course that a party may cancel an obligation which has not become binding.[23] Discharge as here used must, furthermore, not be confused with release from secondary liability by reason of nonperformance of the conditions prerequisite thereto.[24]

Matters of discharge or abeyance of the original note may be pleaded against the enforcement of a renewal note.[25] An accommodation party is so far a surety as to holders with notice of his accommodation character that he will be discharged by arrangements to his prejudice and without his knowledge with the principal debtor.[26] The fact that a bona fide holder of negotiable paper did not know at the time he took it that one of the apparent makers was merely a surety will not prevent a discharge by acts prejudicial to the surety committed by the holder after he acquires such knowledge.[27]

(§ 4) B. Particular matters of discharge. Payment.[28]—See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 974—On the maturity of a note the maker has an absolute right to pay and thus relieve himself from the payment of further interest, and if, without further agreement, he neglects to pay it when due, he still has the right to pay it at any subsequent time.[29] Payment as such operates as a discharge,[30] though it is made by a stranger by mistake.[31] It is essential in this connection, however, meeting the obligations which he has incurred on behalf of the latter. Corney v. DaCosta, 1 Esp. N. P. 302, 303, approved, arguendo, in Brown v. Maffey, 15 East, 216, 222; Bond v. Farnham, 5 Mass. 170, 171, 173, 4 Am. Dec. 47; Barton v. Baker, 1 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 334, 336, 7 Am. Dec. 620; Mechanics' Bank v. Griswold, 7 Wend. [N. Y.] 165, 166, 167, 170. * * * Acts, admissions or promises after maturity, in order to be evidential of a waiver of presentment and notice, or of an excuse for the want of presentment and notice, must be done or made with full knowledge of the discharge from liability upon the contract of indorsement and must, in form and effect, be unequivocal and unconditional. to bear in mind the distinction between payment as such, as when the instrument is paid by a party primarily bound, in which case the obligation of the instrument and all obligations dependent thereon are discharged as a matter of law,[32] and payment so-called, which does not discharge the obligation of the instrument unless it is so intended,[33] as when the so-called payment is made by a stranger, in which case the transaction is presumptively a purchase,[34] or where the so-called payment is made by a party secondarily bound, in which case the transaction operates merely to restore to such party the title to the note and the right to the possession thereof,[35] or where the so-called payment is made by a surety.[36] Payment by the drawer of a dishonored draft extinguishes the instruments.[37] Payment to an agent is the same as payment to the principal and any loss resulting from the agent's fraud must be borne by the principal;[38] but the holder is not bound by a payment to which he is not a privy either originally or by ratification,[39] and as in other cases knowledge is essential to ratification.[40] The protection of a law exonerating the drawee upon payment to the wrong person in good faith and in due course of business can be invoked by the drawer only when the payment was in fact in good faith and in due course.[41] Payment may be made without the payee's indorsement.[42] Arrangements for the security of one discounting commercial paper are directly available only to the parties to such arrangement.[43]

Ordinarily payment must be made in money,[44] but payment may be effected otherwise by agreement of the parties.[45] which such indorsement and delivery was predicated.[46] The payee of a bank check may look to the drawer thereof for its payment, and is not required to apply thereto money in his hands on deposit in the name of an indorser.[47]

Failure to pay a note at maturity and its production by the holder raises a presumption of continuous nonpayment.

Payment of renewals is treated in a subsequent subdivision of this subsection.[48]

Counterclaim and set-off. See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 975—Counterclaims and set-offs in favor of a comaker may be set off in full against the amount he might have to pay on the judgment,[49] and a counterclaim allowed in favor of the maker as a set-off against the note operates as a discharge pro tanto of the obligation of the note regardless of the findings as to counterclaims pleaded by other defendants.[50]

Renewal. See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 975—Renewal does not per se discharge the obligation of the paper renewed,[51] even when the security is given with the new note,[52] but the old note will be discharged when such is the intention of the parties.[53] A fortiori, the old note is not discharged where such is not the intent of the parties and the renewal is invalid for any reason not chargeable to the holder.[54] In such case the renewal does not operate to discharge either indorsers [55] or sureties,[56] and where the indorser of an original note repudiates his indorsement of a renewal, his liability upon his original indorsement is revived,[57] unless he has surrendered valuable security upon faith of the cancellation of the original note.[58] A renewal may, however, in certain cases, operate to discharge sureties and secondary parties.[59] Where the renewal refers to the paper renewed, liability for attorney's fees under a stipulation in the latter is not discharged by failure to include any such stipulation in the renewal,[60] especially where the action is upon the original.[61] Payment of a renewal cancels both the renewal and the original,[62] and payments made on Corydon Deposit Bank v. McClure, 33 Ky. L. R. 679, 110 SW 856. an invalid renewal must be credited on the original.[63] Acceptance of the note of a third party will operate as a discharge when so intended.[64]

Release.[See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 975]—In South Dakota a release of one joint obligor does not release the others or affect the right of contribution.[65] A verbal promise to release, without consideration, does not discharge a comaker.[66]

Collateral stipulations and agreements.[See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 975]—Whether there has been a discharge by virtue of a collateral agreement is often merely a matter of construction of such agreement.[67] Breach of warranty operates as a discharge of liability upon a purchase-money note.[68] Such defense is available to the maker of a note executed as collateral security for the purchase-money note,[69] but such maker is not necessarily released by exchange of property purchased for other property covered by a new warranty,[70] though where the collateral note is retained as security for the payment of the price of such other property, he may avail himself of a breach of the new warranty.[71]

Laches.[See 10 C. L. 969, 972, 975]—The liability of the acceptor, being original and primary,[72] is not affected by delay, short of the statutory period of limitation, in presenting the draft for payment.[73] Failure to sue on a note is not ground for release of the maker on the indorser who are not prejudiced by delay.[74] An accommodation comaker is not discharged by his urgent request that the payee proceed against principal maker who is solvent, but should pay the note and bring suit himself.[75]

Extension of time of payment.[See 10 C. L. 972, 975]—Right to extend the time of payment may be reserved by the terms of the note.[76] Extension of time by virtue of an invalid renewal does not discharge parties secondarily liable.[77] It is held that an accommodation maker is so far a surety as to be discharged by an extension without his consent,[78] but it is also held that where such a maker is declared by statute to be primarily liable, he comes within the rule applicable to primary parties generally, and is not discharged by an extension without his consent.[79]

Acceptance of drafts and certification of checks.[See 10 C. L. 973]—An acceptance of a draft or check, as distinguished from a certification,[80] does not discharge the drawer,[81] but where the holder of a check has it certified by the drawer, the drawer and the indorsers are thereby discharged.[82]

Alterations.[See 10 C. L. 969]—A material alteration,[83] if unauthorized, invalidates the instrument [84] even in the hands of an innocent purchaser, unless it is otherwise provided by statute,[85] but it seems that authority to alter may be implied.[88] An indorser is not discharged by an alteration made prior to delivery of the paper and with his consent.[87]

(§ 4) C. Reissue of instruments after discharge.[88]—When a note has been paid the maker may reissue it before maturity for a valid consideration,[89] but a discharged note is not revived merely by indorsement and reissue by the party who effected the discharge,[90] nor is such party paying entitled to subrogation to the rights of the payee.[91] The holder of a check may have it certified, thus discharging the drawer and indorsers,[92] and may then reissue it, thus constituting himself a new drawer.[93]

§ 5. Effect of negotiation or transfer. A. As to transfer of title.[94]—[See 10 C. L. 973]—A transfer by indorsement vests the legal title in the indorsee,[95] and in such case the equitable title is material only as affecting the right to assert defenses against the owner thereof.[98] A pledge of a note as collateral vests the legal title in the pledgee.[97]

(§ 5) B. As to equities and defenses. 1. Doctrine stated.[98]—[See 10 C. L. 980, 981, 984]—Except as to persons who come within the definition of bona fide holders hereafter given,[99] the negotiation or transfer of a negotiable instrument does not cut off or affect defenses thereto.[1] As against such bona fide holders, the general rule is that defenses which do not negative the existence or legality of the contract sued on or the title to the insrument are cut off,[2] but not defenses of the latter character.[3] This rule, however, is not without exceptions and modifications, for the defense of lack or failure of consideration is cut off, regardless of any question of the effect of such defect as between the original parties,[4] and the rule that fraud in the factum invalidates the contract even as against a bona fide holder [5] is subject to the qualification that as against an innocent party one guilty of negligence must suffer the consequences thereof, notwithstanding that fraud may have been practiced upon him,[6] but this qualification is itself subject to the qualification that the innocent party is not entitled to protection unless he was induced to act by the negligence complained of.[7] A fortiori the maker cannot set up his own fraud or wrong in executing the note as against an innocent holder.[8] Where paper is payable to bearer, title thereto may be acquired even from one having no title,[9] and it is held in Georgia that a purchaser for value of commercial paper from the apparent owner acquires a good title [10] even as against the true owner.[11] A rule often applied in deciding a controversy between a holder of negotiable paper and a party who has given it apparent validity in the hands of one transferring it without right is that, when one of two innocent persons must suffer by reason of the wrongful act of a third party, the one must bear the loss who made it possible for the third party to acceptor. Stouffer v. Erwin, 81 S. C. 541, 62 SE 843; National Park Bank v. Saitta, 127 App. Div. 624, 111 NYS 927. Indorsee of draft, drawn by seller of goods to self or order and accepted by purchaser of such goods, held not affected by failure of consideration as between drawer and acceptor. Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Kramer [Ind. App.] 86 NE 84. Where drawer authorized to draw for price of car of oranges included other fruit in shipment but billed whole car as oranges, an innocent purchaser of draft with bill of lading attached took same free from defense of fraud or excess of authority on part of drawer. 5. Where maker did not intend to execute instrument actually executed, is not cut off. Sinnickson v. Rickter, 140 Ill. App. 212. See Rev. Laws 1905, § 2747, relative to signature under erroneous belief or to nature of instrument. Sibley County Bank v. Schaus, 104 Minn. 438, 116 NW 928. Signature and indorsement of payee was either forged or obtained by fraud whereby payee was led to believe that she was signing a paper other than note in suit. Murphy v. Schoch, 135 Ill. App. 550. Acceptor of bill may take advantage of forgery as against holder claiming thereunder. Trust Co. of America v. Hamilton Bank, 127 App. Div. 515, 112 NYS 84.

6. To render fraud or circumvention a good defense as against a holder in due course, the maker must have exercised reasonable diligence and due care on his part, and this is not done where he relies solely upon the reading, explanation or statements of the party procuring the execution of the note, unless reasonable excuse be shown. Commercial State Bank v. Judy, 133 Ill. App. 35. Negligence in signing instrument under erroneous belief as to its nature. See First State Bank of Pleasant Dale v. Borchers [Neb.] 120 NW 142; Sibley County Bank v. Schaus, 104 Minn. 438, 116 NW 928. Negligence in indorsing instrument under erroneous belief as to its nature. Murphy v. Schock, 135 Ill. App. 550. As between drawer and innocent purchaser, former must suffer any loss resulting from his own negligence in issuing the bill issued to an imposter check. Central Nat. Bank of Washington City v. National Metropolitan Bank, 31 App. D. C. 391. Maker held guilty of negligence in signing without having instrument read to him, he himself not being able to read but having abundant chance to have paper read to him. First Nat. Bank v. Hall, 129 Mo. App. 286, 108 SW 633. Where bank issued check on savings deposit payable to its own teller, and latter delivered it to person claiming to be the depositor, but who did not answer to description of depositor on bank's books and did not answer test questions, the bank was liable to one who cashed the check after having used due diligence to ascertain his identity and who thereafter was compelled to remunerate a subsequent indorsee, the check having orlginally been delivered to the wrong person. Gallo v. Brooklyn Sav Bank, 114 NYS 786.

Where drawee remunerates drawer, the former merely takes the place of the latter as against such purchaser. Where drawee bank repays to depositor money paid to another bank upon check negligently issued by depositor to imposter and cashed by such other bank. Central Nat. Bank of Washington City v. National Metropolitan Bank, 31 App. D. C. 391.

7. Where bank issued draft in exchange for forged check and recipient of draft forged payee's indorsement thereto and sold it to another bank, which collected from drawee, negligence of drawer in issuing draft for forged check was immaterial as between drawer and purchasing bank where latter was not induced to purchase by reason of any act or representation of drawer. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America [N. Y.] 85 NE 829.

commit the wrong.[12] In Pennsylvania the defense of material alteration is unavailable against a bona fide holder,[13] and in Massachusetts delivery of the instrument is conclusively presumed in his favor.[14] Defects cured by way of ratification and defenses rendered unavailable by estoppel as between the original parties are, of course, unavailable against subsequent parties.[15]

The fact that a note is secured by a mortgage does not affect the rights of a bona fide purchaser,[16] though the existence of the mortgage is recited by the note,[17] but a transfer of assets in consideration of the assumption of liabilities saves all defenses against a note thus acquired by the transferee.[18] One purchasing from a bona fide holder stands in the shoes of the latter, regardless of his own independent status.[19] As against a holder, a guarantor's liability is coextensive with that of his principal.[20]

Defenses arising between the maker and payee after assignment and notice thereof to the maker are unavailable against the assignee,[21] nor are payments to the payee after the assignment binding upon the assignee,[22] even though the transfer is after maturity.[23] So, also, one making payments without requiring the production of the paper or other evidence that the party receiving payment still holds the paper does so at his own risk,[24] and the place of payment does not affect the maker's duty to see that the person to whom he makes payment has possession of the paper.[25]

The holder is prima facie presumed to be a bona fide holder within the definition given above.[33] This presumption, however, may be overcome by the circumstances under which the instrument was executed or indorsed,[34] as where the instrument has its inception in fraud [35] or duress,[36] or where it is executed without due authority,[37] or where its negotiation or transfer is tainted with fraud,[38] but such is not the effect of mere lack of consideration,[39] or of defects of indorsements subsequent to the indorsement by which title is vested in the holder.[40]

Title and possession. See 10 C. L. 981—Formal indorsement of a note payable to order is essential to constitute the purchaser such a holder as to protect him from defenses already accrued to the maker against the payee.[41] Where the action is by the holder of the legal but not the equitable title, all defenses against the latter are available.[42] Delivery of the paper to an agent for a specific purpose does not ordinarily constitute surrender of possession as a holder.[43] The holder of paper showing no defect in its negotiation as transfer is presumptively the owner,[44] but such presumption is rebuttable,[45] and is overcome by proof that the instrument was stolen or otherwise appropriated in fraud of the owner's rights.[46] Possession of unindorsed paper payable to another raises no presumption of ownership.[47] Nor does such presumption dispense with the necessity of proving the genuineness of an indorsement when the same is properly put in issue.[48]

Before maturity. See 10 C. L. 983—An undated indorsement[49] is presumptively of a date prior to the maturity of the instrument,[50] and while such presumption is rebuttable,[51] it is not rebutted by any presumption of continuance of ownership by the payee.[52] Where paper is payable in instalments, a purchase after some of the instalments have become due is a purchase after maturity.[53]

In due course. See 10 C. L. 983—Due course is sometimes defined as including all the other elements of bona fide holdership[54] as defined above.[55] More narrowly defined, it means usual course of business.[56]

For value. See 10 C. L. 983—Value is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract.[57] In other words the purchaser is deemed to pay value where he gives money, goods or credit at the time of receiving the instrument, or on account thereof sustains loss or incurs liability.[58] Where a purchaser of a negotiable instrument gives the holder an ordinary bank draft therefor, payment is complete as soon as the draft passes beyond the buyer's control.[59] It is sometimes broadly held that receipt of commercial paper as collateral security for an antecedent debt is a taking for value.[60] Holdings to such effect, however, are usually expressly based upon statutory provisions,[61] and the general rule seems to be otherwise in the absence of such provision.[62] Under this rule there must be some further consideration, such as a cancellation of the previous debt,[63] or an extension of the time of payment thereof.[64] It is generally held that there is a taking for value where the paper is received in payment of or as a payment upon an antecedent debt,[65] or when the time of payment of such debt is extended,[66] or when other security is surrendered upon receipt of the paper.[67] Merely crediting a depositor with the proceeds of a note discounted does not constitute the bank a holder for value,[68] but it is otherwise where the proceeds so credited are subsequently actually paid to the depositor or his order,[69] or where the credit to the depositor of the note is given by the purchaser, not on its own books but in a different, solvent bank,[70] or where a bank receives a certified check for deposit.[71] It is held that where a bank discounts a draft for the drawer and credits him with the face value thereof the bank acquires the paper by purchase.[72]

The holder is prima facie presumed to be a holder for value.[73]

In good faith and without notice. See 10 C. L. 981—A distinction is sometimes made between notice which makes the purchaser a party to fraud and notice which merely brings home to him knowledge of prior equities and defenses.[74] Failure to regard this distinction has led to considerable confusion in the past,[75] and may be responsible for the present lack of unanimity on the subject of bad faith and notice, which is almost as pronounced as it was under the early English and American cases.[76] The tendency to disregard such distinction is so universal, however, that it is now of small practical value, and the cases must be grouped under two more or less conflicting doctrines. Under the minority doctrine a purchaser having knowledge of facts sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry is charged with knowledge of all the facts which an inquiry would have revealed,[77] and it is even held by very respectable authority that failure to make inquiry in such case is a badge of fraud [78] and itself constitutes bad faith where an inquiry would have discovered the real situation.[79] A fortiori a purchaser cannot successfully claim to be an innocent purchaser where he purposely refrains from making an inquiry suggested by the circumstances.[80] The object of the inquiry, however, is not to discover negative facts, or such as would arouse suspicion, but positive facts which would allay the suspicion already aroused,[81] and if no inquiry is in fact made to dispel the presumption raised by circumstances, but reasonable inquiry would have led to the discovery of facts which have dispelled it, the purchaser of the paper is entitled to the benefit thereof the same as if he had learned them by proper investigation,[82] the correlative of this benefit being the burden of responsibility for such unfavorable facts as reasonable inquiry would have discovered in relation to the defect that made inquiry necessary.[83] On the other hand, the majority doctrine, which prevails in many of the states and into the statutes of some of which it has been carried, is that notice or bad faith cannot be predicated upon suspicious circumstances,[84] negligence,[85] or even gross negligence [86] actual knowledge or circumstance so cogent as to make the taking itself an act of bad faith being essential to defeat the holder's claim of bona fide holdership without notice,[87] and circumstances short of this being merely evidence to be considered in the determination of the issue.[88] Under this rule, ordinarily, where commercial paper is offered in the usual course of business, the purchaser need not make inquiry as to its ownership when the transaction appears on its face to be regular,[89] but if the purchaser knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the apparent owner is not the true owner, and enters into privity or participation in the fraud upon the true owner, the purchaser's title is defeasible.[90] No imputation of notice or bad faith can be predicated upon facts consistent with regularity of the paper and the transfer thereof.[91] The purchaser is charged with notice of matters appearing upon the paper itself,[92] but the inference to be drawn from the fact of such notice depends, of course, upon the nature of the matter upon which the inference is sought to be based.[93] Paper showing on its face that it is issued pursuant to a certain statute carries with it notice as to the invalidity of such statute so far as such invalidity will be disclosed by examination of the legislative records,[94] but the purchaser need not ordinarily inquire as to whether general, statutory limitations as to amount have been exceeded in the issue of the paper.[95]

Fact that note was executed by partners individually and indorsed by him first individually and then in partnership name raised no conclusive presumption that indorsement was for accommodation of maker or that money received was for his private use. Fact that purchaser of notes given for corporate stock purchased from agent of corporation's president was director of corporation and member of its executive committee which placed matter of stock sales in hands of president held not inconsistent with purchaser's ignorance of fraudulent representations inducing purchase of stock. Reilly v. McKinnon [C. C. A.] 159 F 78. Bank purchasing from the president of another bank acting in his official capacity notes drawn to the president in his individual capacity as payee, and indorsed by both bank and president, had a right to assume that title to notes was in bank, since president acted within the scope of his duties, and fact that notes were drawn in his name was consistent with bank's ownership. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank [Iowa] 115 NW 937. Irregularity in numbers and similarity in signatures or notes held not sufficient to put purchaser on inquiry. Id.

92. One taking a note on which place of payment has been changed cannot avoid defense that change was unauthorized. First Nat. Bank of Wilkes-Barre v. Barnum, 160 F 245. It is no defense to material alterations in printed portions of the notes to say that they are in the handwriting of the maker, the same as the rest of the written parts, dispelling suspicion and thereby doing away with the necessity of inquiry. Id.

93. Fact that consideration is set forth on face of paper does not carry with it notice of failure of the consideration, nor does it ipso facto put purchaser upon inquiry. Simmons v. Council [Ga. Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall [Tenn.] 108 SW 1068. Fact that member of partnership to whom partnership note had been transferred in settlement of partnership affairs indorsed same to purchaser without recourse did not charge such purchaser's indorsee with notice of agreement between partners that as between themselves each was to be liable for only a proportionate share thereof. 96. In re Hopper-Morgan Co., 158 F 351.

The notice which defeats a claim of bona fide holdership is notice prior to or at the time of the purchase,[99] but within this rule the purchase is not deemed complete until payment for the note has been made.[1] Notice to an indorser will not be imputed to his indorsee,[2] but the indorsee succeeds to the title and rights of the indorser regardless of his own knowledge.[3]

A purchase is presumed to be in good faith and without notice,[4] but the presumption is merely prima facie [5] and may be rebutted,[6] but no presumption of notice prior to purchase can be indulged from the mere fact of notice without reference to the time when such notice was had,[7] and the fact that the purchaser does not expressly state that he purchased in good faith does not necessarily negative good faith,[8] but is a fact to be considered in connection with other circumstances.[9] Where the paper is shown to have had its inception in fraud, the presumption of lack of notice fails.[10]

(§ 5B) 3. Rights of holder of accommodation paper.[11] See 10 C. L. 979, 984. Where the instrument is valid between the maker and the holder, it is binding on accommodation indorser,[12] and an accommodation party is liable to the holder regardless of the latter's knowledge that the former is merely an accommodation party.[13] Ignorance of the accommodation character of the paper cuts off any defense based upon the nature of the paper,[14] and where a note is indorsed in blank for accommodation and delivered to the party accommodated, as between the indorser and a bona fide purchaser the former is liable upon the note as filled out by the party accommodated, regardless of any excess of authority upon the part of such person,[15] but this rule does not apply where the paper has been materially altered.[16] As in other cases, the holder must pay value for the paper [17] and acquire the same before maturity.[18]

(§ 5B) 4. Extent of recovery by holder.[19]—See 10 C. L. 984—The fact that the purchaser pays full value for the note does not entitle him to collect the full value where he purchased with notice of payments not credited.[20] An innocent purchaser who has suffered by reason of the negligence of the maker in issuing the paper cannot recover the expense of an unjustifiable defense of a suit against him by a subsequent indorsee.[21] The extent of recovery by the holder is sometimes limited by statute in certain cases.[22]

§ 6. Remedies and procedure. A. Remedies.[23]—See 10 C. L. 987

*What remedies are available.*See 10 C. L. 987—Where a debt is extinguished by a note,[24] the remedy of a payee, who has been compelled to take up the note from an indorsee thereof, against the maker, is on the note and not on the original debt.[25] Since an indorser is liable only in the event of default of the maker, etc,[26] a holder who is also a maker cannot maintain an action on the note against an indorser,[27] although the note was made for the accommodation of the indorser.[28] The remedy of an accommodation party who has paid the note is by action for money paid to the use of the party accommodated.[29] An action will lie for the wrongful negotiation of negotiable paper.[30] Aside from the rights of bona fide holders, the drawer of a check may stop payment thereon.[31] The payee of a check may sue the drawer thereon as upon a promissory note,[32] or he may sue upon the debt evidenced by the check [33] where the drawer refuses to honor the check. The jurisdiction of equity to establish test instruments may be invoked with reference to negotiable instruments.[34]

*Statutory limitations.*See 10 C. L. 988—Limitation begins to run against the remedy of an accommodation indorser against the maker from the time of payment by the indorser, and not from the date of maturity of the note.[35] Special limitations are imposed in some states.[36]

*Plaintiff.*See 10 C. L. 988—At common law a chose in action could not be transferred or assigned so that the transferee or assignee could maintain an action thereon in his own name, but by the law merchant or the customs of merchants a transferee of negotiable paper may sue thereon in his own name.[39] Accordingly, where the instrument shows an assignment by indorsement, it is improper to sue in the name of the payee for the use of the assignee.[40] The holder of the legal title may sue in his own name [41] without regard to the equitable title exept as affecting the right to assert defenses against the owner thereof,[42] and without regard to indorsements through which he does not derive title.[43] By statute in some states the real party in interest may sue,[44] but such statutes do not, it seems, preclude a suit by the holder of the legal title.[45]

*Defendant.*See 10 C. L. 988—Parties primarily liable may be sued contemporaneously with parties secondarily liable,[46] but, in the absence of statutory authority, not jointly,[47] even though the secondary party is sought to be held as a principal party.[48] A joint suit may, of course, be authorized by statute,[49] or such a joinder may even be required.[50] The holder cannot join the maker and one who received payment from the maker after the assignment to the holder.[51] In an action by an assignee of a note against the maker, the defendant cannot recover on a counterclaim against the plaintiff's assignor any sum greater than the amount of the notes sued on with interest, the plaintiff's assignee not being a party.[52] In an action on a negotiable instrument by a trustee, the beneficiaries are necessary parties.[53] The nonjoinder of the de-

(§ 6) C. Pleading.[55]—See 10 C. L. 988

*In general.*See 10 C. L. 988—Nonconformity of a note to the agreement of the parties as to what it should contain is properly pleaded by setting out the note in haec verba and then pleading the real intent.[56]

*Declaration or complaint.*See 10 C. L. 989—The instrument sued on must be properly alleged or described,[57] and a recovery can be had only upon the instrument alleged,[58] though the defendant admits liability on some other instrument.[59] Where the paper is alleged according to its substance and effect, a verbal variance is not necessarily fatal.[60] A negotiable note may be declared on as a promissory note where it is fully described so as to show its negotiability.[61] Where a declaration is on the common counts and does not refer to the note, the latter is no part of the declaration though a copy thereof is annexed as a bill of particulars.[62] The plaintiff may declare in one count upon a renewal note, and in another count upon the original note,[63] and where but one recovery is sought no election is required.[64] Considerable discretion is vested in the court with reference to amendments as to the description of the instrument.[65]

A certain amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff must be alleged,[66] but a promise to pay need not be alleged specifically.[67] The allegation of the promise may follow the allegation of the instrument and be connected therewith by the word "whereby." [68] Nonpayment need not be alleged specifically.[69] The consideration of the paper need not be alleged.[70] In an action by the payee of a note, the plaintiff's ownership of the paper need not be alleged specifically,[71] and so, also, in any action against the maker, the character of the indorsement is immaterial, provided it be sufficient to transfer title to the plaintiff.[72] In suing on an accepted draft, it is unnecessary to allege that the acceptor had funds belonging to the drawer[73] or that the holder was induced to buy the draft from the drawer by any act of the drawee.[74]

One sued in a secondary capacity cannot be held liable in a primary capacity,[75] or in any capacity other than that alleged.[76] In such an action the contract sued on must be sufficiently alleged,[77] and also performance of the conditions of secondary liability,[78] or facts excusing such performance.[79] Protest fees are recoverable in a suit on a promissory note on the common counts.[80] In an action upon a contract of indorsement, the indorsement must be alleged.[81] It is not necessary in a suit by the holder or payee against the maker and an irregular indorser to render the latter liable as a maker, to allege either that such indorsement was prior to delivery of the paper,[82] or that the plaintiff has elected to treat the indorser as a maker.[83] In declaring against indorsers, whose names are found on the back of the paper upon its delivery to the payee, as original promisors, a promise to pay must be alleged.[84]

No recovery can be had upon a collateral agreement unless the same is specifically alleged,[85] and in order to recover upon a stipulation for the payment of attorney's fees upon certain contingencies, the happening of such contingencies must be alleged.[86]

85. Complaint upon a bill or note which does not allege collateral agreement between parties to instrument, and yet seeks a recovery upon basis of liability other than that which is prima facie presumed from terms of instrument, is demurrable. Haddock, Blanchard & Co. v. Haddock, 192 N. Y. 499, 85 NE 682.

86. Attorney's fees to be paid if note

In view of the presumption in favor of the holder,[87] allegation that the plaintiff is a bona fide holder would seem to be unnecessary, but the practice seems to be otherwise.[88] A complaint against the drawer showing that the bill was paid by the drawee to the wrong person, after the expiration of a period which ordinarily would constitute due course, and under circumstances calculated to excite suspicion, sufficiently presents an issue of fact as to payment in good faith and in due course.[89]

Plea or answer. See 10 C. L. 990—As a general rule statutory defenses must be specially pleaded,[90] as must also all collateral agreements or stipulations not sued on,[91] fraud,[92] mistake,[93] or payment.[94] Failure of consideration must usually be pleaded specially,[95] but this rule is not of universal application,[96] and is subject to more or less restricted exceptions in some states.[97] The consideration is not put in issue by a mere denial of indebtedness upon the instrument sued on [98] or by an allegation of incapacity to execute the paper.[99] A plea of total failure of consideration or total want of consideration fails where the evidence shows any consideration

91. Where defendant, maker of note sued on, pleaded that he was not bound, either as principal or surety, and there was nothing to show that he was married or possessed of community property, he could not invoke the laws applicable to community property and suretyships in order to let in evidence of a fraud, collateral agreement limiting his liability. Anderson v. Mitchell [Wash.] 98 P 751. 94. Plea alleging that note sued on was merely evidence of a debt which was also represented by series of similar notes, and that a definitely stated number of the smaller notes had been paid, held good as a plea of partial payment, the dates, maturity, amount and nature of the smaller notes being stated and it being also alleged that they were paid to the holder according to their terms, such terms being stated. Jones v. Taylor [Ga. App.] 62 SE 992. Answer alleging that note sued on was given as security for performance of obligation by third person and that such person had always been ready and willing to perform such obligation states a good defense as against a general demurrer, notwithstanding failure to allege expressly plaintiff's refusal to accept performance by person whose obligation was secured by note sued on. Landrum v. Stewart [Tex. Civ. App.] 111 SW 769. Plea alleging that defendant is an accommodation maker and that paper has been paid by party accommodated states only one defense, that of payment, and is not open to objection that it pleads inconsistent defenses of lack of consideration and payment. at all,[1] and there is a fatal variance where a plea alleges failure of a common consideration for several notes sued on and the proof shows that the consideration for one of the notes was other than that so alleged.[2] The maturity of a debt assumed by the payee in consideration of the note need not be alleged in order to render his failure to pay such debt available as a defense.[3] A plea of lack of consideration is insufficient to present an issue of diversion.[4] Set-offs and counterclaims are pleadable according to statutory authority,[5] but must be specifically pleaded.[6]

In pleading defenses between the maker and payee against an assignee, it must be alleged that such defenses arose prior to the assignment or notice thereof to the assignee.[7] In order to avail himself of the defense that a bank is not a holder for value in that it merely credited its depositor with the proceeds of the paper,[8] the defendant must allege that at the time of the bank's notice of the defects in the paper or defense thereto the proceeds thereof still remained in the bank to the credit of the depositor.[9] As against a bona fide holder, a plea of fraud in the inception of a note must negative negligence on the part of the maker.[10] Failure to deny a specific allegation of nonpayment and of a specific amount due admits such allegation and nullifies a denial of transfer before maturity and ownership of the notes.[11] A plea denying the status of the plaintiff as a bona fide purchaser is insufficient where plaintiff alleges purchase from a bona fide holder.[12]

A verified denial is often required by statute in order to put in issue the execution of the instrument sued on [13] or its indorsement [14] or transfer,[15] but under such statutes verification is not essential to raise an issue of discharge [16] or as to notice of dishonor.[17] A verified denial puts in issue the question of alterations of credits indorsed on the instrument contemporaneously with its execution and before delivery.[18] An admission of the execution of the note sued on admits its execution in the very form in which it is pleaded.[19] Where an allegation is denied of record by virtue of statute, no pleaded denial is necessary.[20]

Reference in a plea to an exhibit as being referred to in the declaration is unavailing where the declaration makes no such reference.[21] Matters relating to amendment of the defendant's pleadings are, as in other cases, largely within the discretion of the court.[22]

Affidavits of defense partake of the nature of pleadings and are interpreted as such.[23]

Reply.—A plea of payment needs no reply.[24] In response to a plea of no consideration, the plaintiff is not bound to allege the consideration.[25] Where the plaintiff declares as the payee of a bill of exchange, a replication alleging purchase after acceptance constitutes a departure.[26] Where a negotiable instrument is pleaded by the defendant as set-off, the plaintiff's reply is in the nature of a plea or answer.[27]

(§ 6) D. Province of court and jury.[28]—See 10 C. L. 890—As in other cases,[29] questions of law are for the court and questions of fact for the jury,[30] and within this rule a question of law only is presented where the facts are established beyond dispute and only one reasonable inference can be drawn therefrom,[31] but where there is a conflict in the evidence or in the inferences deducible from the facts proved, a question of fact is presented to be determined by the jury.[32]

30. What constitutes bona fide holdership is question of law, but the sufficiency of evidence to show facts upon which court's conclusion is predicated is for jury. Arnd v. Heckert [Md.] 70 A 416. What constitutes due diligence in giving notice to indorser is question of law. Vogel v. Starr, 132 Mo. App. 430, 112 SW 27.

31. There being nothing to discredit or contradict plaintiff's evidence showing it to be a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, directed verdict for it was proper. Second Nat. Bank v. Snoqualmie Trust Co. [Neb.] 120 NW 182. Direction of verdict for plaintiff on issue of notice of defenses at time of purchase held proper, evidence adduced by defendant to show such notice being insufficient. Hall v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 116 SW 47, afg. 115 SW 293. Evidence held to show plainly that purchase was before maturity and directed verdict held proper. Id. Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding of notice. Heinbach v. Doubleday, Page & Co., 114 NYS 278. There being no controversy over the material facts, the question whether a notary exercised reasonable diligence in giving notice to an indorser is a question of law. Vogel v. Starr, 132 Mo. App. 430, 112 SW 27. Finding that transaction was payment and not purchase held not sustained by evidence. Prather v. Hairgrove, 214 Mo. 142, 112 SW 552. Finding of chancellor that certain payment was in discharge of obligations other than that of note sued on held not sustained. Westbrook v. Potter's Sons' Trustee, 33 Ky. L. R. 1071, 112 SW 635.

32. Held for jury: Whether amount of note included debt of third party without defendant's knowledge or consent. McAdoo v. Connor & Co. [Ark.] 111 SW 810. Character of,
