CURRENT LAW.

VOLUME II. MARCH, 1904. NUMBER 1.

FIRES.[1]

§ 1. Liability for loss by fire; contributory negligence or assumption of risks.[2] —Railroad companies are liable for fires started by locomotives unless they are properly equipped and operated;[3] or where property placed in their hands for carriage is negligently allowed to remain in danger of fire.[4] Negligence is not always necessary to make liability for railroad fires,[5] though a railroad company is not an insurer against fires occurring without negligence.[6] Failure of a train crew to leave their train to put out a fire in grass, started by the locomotive is not negligence.[7] Wrongful presence of property on railroad land is no defense to its willful destruction.[8] Where a fire was started in crops by a locomotive, and plaintiff, in trying to save property, was surrounded by fire and severely burned, defendant's negligence was not the proximate cause of such personal injuries.[9] An ordinance limiting speed of trains has no reference to duty of the railroad company regarding precautions against burning buildings near the track.[10] A private railroad com-

1. Fires feloniously set see Arson, 1 Curr. Law, p. 217.

2. Act June 25, 1836, amending charter of N. Y. P. & B. R. Co., and providing for liability for fires, covers all kinds of property burned. Spink v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co. [R. I.] 54 Atl. 47.

A statute requiring railroad companies to keep their rights of way free of dry vegetation and undergrowth, violates neither the federal nor state constitution against taking private property for private use [Rev. St. 1889, § 2614, construed in light of 14th Amend. U. S. Const., and provision of Mo. Const.]. McFarland v. Miss. R. & B. T. R. Co., 175 Mo. 422.

3. White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327. Negligent operation of an engine, or operation of a defective engine is sufficient to show liability. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Perrow [Va.] 43 S. E. 614. Failure to use a certain kind of coal which lessened the danger of flying sparks was not negligence. Raleigh Hosiery Co. v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 131 N. C. 238.

Evidence that the requirements of the statute had been complied with in equipping its locomotives and that they were properly operated, establishes a good defense. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Wahlers, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 310.

The company need show only ordinary care in equipment of its engines with the most approved spark arrester in general use (St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 607), and use of ordinary care to secure them and keep them in proper repair (St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Goodnight [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 583; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 607), except in Kentucky, where the statute requires the best and most effectual spark arresters known and of practical use, properly adjusted [St. 1899, § 782] (Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 29). Where inflammable goods are placed near the track the company does not assume all risk from a properly equipped and operated engine. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scottish U. N. I. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1088.

4. Allowing bales of cotton to stand on a platform near the track until the bagging came off, so that it was easily ignited by a passing engine, by reason of which a building burned, is negligence. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 132 N. C. 75.

5. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1111. Wabash R. Co. v. Ordelheide, 172 Mo. 436.

6. Creighton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 527.

7. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Chittim [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 294.

8. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Perrow [Va.] 43 S. E. 614.

9. Logan v. Wabash R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 461.

10. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327.

pany is as liable for negligent fires as a public railroad company.[11] That a fire was caused by an engine of another company allowed to run on a railroad will not relieve the company owning the tracks.[12] Negligence is necessary to liability for fire resulting from sparks escaping from a saw mill.[13] Fires may be kindled on land for husbandry purposes, and no liability will result for damages in the absence of negligence.[14] Failure to keep, ready for use, appliances to extinguish fire is not negligence, where it is shown that the fire could not have been controlled with any equipment.[15]

A property owner may use his property in the ordinary and usual way without being charged with contributory negligence, and may assume that a railroad company will not be negligent;[16] but he must use "reasonable" diligence to reduce or prevent loss resulting from a fire negligently set.[17] He cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence because his buildings were easily inflammable or because he took no precautions in case of fire.[18] A shipper placing property near a railroad track,[19] under a custom allowed by the company, is not contributorily negligent;[20] but he is negligent if he, with knowledge of the circumstances, requests operations by the railroad resulting in fire.[21]

Contracts respecting liability.[22]—A contract between a railroad company and another, exempting the company from loss by fires, is not against public policy if the company does not contract as a public carrier;[23] nor is it unconstitutional.[24] Exemptions from liability from fires in a lease of a storage platform near a railroad will not bind one not in privity with the lessee storing goods thereon without knowledge of the exemptions.[25]

11. Timber road. Craft v. Albemarle Timber Co., 132 N. C. 151.

12. Jefferson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 94 N. W. 289.

13. Gerrish v. Whitfield [N. H.] 55 Atl. 551.

14. The owner cannot be charged with negligence in not guarding against a whirlwind which carries the fire beyond control. Bock v. Grooms [Neb.] 92 N. W. 603.

15. Balding v. Andrews [N. D.] 96 N. W. 305.

16. He may use his property as though no railroad passed near to it. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Tate, 104 Ill. App. 615. Mere failure of an owner of an inflammable structure on a street near a railroad to comply with an ordinance requiring the sidewalk to be swept without knowledge of plaintiff that engines were allowed to emit sparks in passing, will not prevent recovery from the railroad company for burning a building. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327.

17. Building destroyed by sparks from passing engine. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327. Need use only reasonable efforts to prevent loss and need not extinguish it as speedily as possible [sufficiency of instructions]. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 704. The owner of grain is not bound to guard against its destruction by fire from a defective threshing engine unless he knew or ought to have known the danger of fire from the defect (Civ. Code 1895, § 3830 applied). Mansfield v. Richardson [Ga.] 45 S. E. 269.

18. Pottery plant set on fire by locomotive. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 704.

19. Temporary storing of cotton, covered with tarpaulins, on lots adjoining a railroad, is not in law contributory negligence, where a watch is kept at all times and facilities provided for extinguishing fires. Ala. & V. R. Co. v. Sol Fried Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 74. Placing bales of cotton on an open platform 50 feet from the main track, is not such contributory negligence as will prevent recovery for its loss by fire. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Short [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 936.

20. Where a railroad company had allowed growth of a custom of placing timber intended for shipment on the right of way, the owner was not guilty of contributory negligence in so placing it. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 999.

21. The fire resulted from plaintiff's negligence and failure to keep his contract respecting a side track. Mann v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 721.

22. Under a contract for the sale of certain timber by a land owner giving the grantee the right to build railroads for its removal and use timber necessary for such work, the duty of protecting the property is upon the land owner, though the grantee had permitted brush and combustibles to accumulate on the road bed. Simpson v. Enfield Lumber Co., 131 N. C. 518.

23. Contract for construction of side track for shipper's convenience. Mann v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 721. Contract for erection of building on right of way. Wabash R. Co. v. Ordelheide, 172 Mo. 436.

24. Wabash R. Co. v. Ordelheide, 172 Mo. 436.

25. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287.

§ 2. Who may recover penalty or damages.—Title in plaintiff is essential,[26] but an equitable title will support recovery,[27] Failure of a railroad company to comply with a statute requiring rights of way to be kept free from combustible material under pain of penalty is not an offense within a statute for recovery of penalties, and the state cannot sue for the penalty, but the landowner suffering injury may recover both penalty and damages.[28]

§ 3. Measure of damages.—The measure of damages for grass destroyed is its reasonable market value if it has one, if not, then its value for the purpose for which it was used; for a fence, the cost of labor and materials necessary to build an equally good fence;[29] for injury to soil or turf, the difference between the value of the land immediately before and after the burning;[30] to fruit trees and a hedge fence, the amount of damage, or the value of the trees or hedge destroyed, considered as a part of the realty;[31] for burning a meadow by a railroad engine, the cost of reseeding, and the rental value of land during unproductiveness for meadow purposes, as shown by productiveness of the remainder of the tract.[32] The amount plaintiff paid for his farm is immaterial.[33] Interest may be added to damages for fires set by railroads from date of the loss.[34]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure. Pleading.[35]—If the complaint alleges negligence it need not state the details thereof.[36] If it alleges negligence in permitting fire to escape to adjoining land and thence to plaintiff's land, it need not allege negligence in permitting escape from the adjoining land to land of plaintiff.[37] A complaint is not indefinite or uncertain as to the cause of action which charges negligent destruction of plaintiff's property by defendant's engine on a certain date.[38]

The evidence must conform to the allegations of the complaint.[39] Plaintiff

26. One employed to chop ties does not have title. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Baker [Ga.] 45 S. E. 673.

27. Possession by plaintiff of unindorsed warehouse receipts of cotton bought and paid for by his agent will vest title giving him right to sue for its destruction by a railroad company. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450.

28. Rev. St. 1889, § 2614 and Rev. St. 1899, § 2391. McFarland v. Miss. R. & B. T. R. Co., 175 Mo. 422.

29. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Chittim [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 294.

30. Tex. Midland R. R. v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 942; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Chittim [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 294.

31. Kan. City, etc., R. Co. v. Perry, 65 Kan. 792, 70 Pac. 876.

32. General rental values of lands in vicinity cannot be shown. Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 984.

33. MacDonald v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 25 R. I. 40.

34. Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 984; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Sheperd [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 800.

35. Sufficiency of special pleas of contributory negligence and assumption of risk under Code 1896, § 3286, in action for damages for burning of cotton stored in warehouse along defendant's right of way (Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450); of plea of contributory negligence of plaintiff in not taking precautions to prevent burning of a building by a passing engine (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327).

Evidence that the fire department scattered a fire communicated by an engine, in attempting to extinguish it, does not require plaintiff suing the railroad company to show the particular part of the loss inflicted by the company. Ala. & V. R. Co. v. Sol Fried Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 74.

36. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson [Ind.] 66 N. E. 899. Damages for cotton burned in warehouse. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450.

37. Wabash R. Co. v. Lackey [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 278.

38. Rev. Code 1899, §§ 5282, 5284. Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co. [N. D.] 97 N. W. 546.

39. Evidence of presence of combustible material on right of way inadmissible in absence of allegations of negligence in that regard. Noland v. Great Northern R. Co., 31 Wash. 430, 71 Pac. 1098. Evidence of previous fires and of conditions along a railroad conducive to fires may be shown on the issue of the cause, even including a burning over of the railroad land though the company could do as it pleased with the land. MacDonald v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 25 R. I. 40. If the complaint raises no issue as to condition of appliances or as to the particular engine causing the fire, evidence, that other engines caused fires at other times than the one in issue, may be shown on the issue of cause. Noland v. Great Northern R. Co., 31 Wash. 430, 71 Pac. 1098. An allegation that defendant negligently operated its engine so as to allow the escape of sparks setting fire to timber on the right of way, is sufficient to allow proof of insufficient need only prove either of two acts of negligence charged, if such negligence was the proximate cause of loss.[40]

Presumptions and burden of proof; judicial notice.—Plaintiff has the burden of proving both the cause of the fire and defendant's negligence;[41] defendant, that his appliances were properly equipped and properly operated.[42] Where the evidence was conflicting as to the cause of a fire, that being the real issue, defendant need not show freedom from negligence.[43] Where fire is shown to have been started by a locomotive, negligence is presumed, and the railroad company has the burden of overthrowing the presumption.[44] If the inferences for and against a locomotive as the cause of a fire are equal in strength, no recovery can be had.[45] An engine operating on the tracks of a railroad company is presumably its property and being operated by it;[46] it may be properly concluded that a heavily loaded freight train passing up a grade will throw out sparks.[47] The unusually copious discharge of sparks is sufficient to warrant an assumption that the spark arrester was not in proper condition and that the company was negligent.[48] Judicial notice will be taken of the fact that a locomotive cannot be so constructed as to prevent entirely the escape of sparks.[49]

Admissibility of evidence; witnesses.[50]—Evidence of other fires in the vicinity at about the time of the fire in question, and from the same or a similar cause, may generally be shown,[51] unless the time is too remote.[52] Facts respecting opera-consideration and equipment of the engine as well as of negligent operation. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 999.

40. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 704.

41. Balding v. Andrews [N. D.] 96 N. W. 305; Creighton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 527. The burden is on plaintiff to show that fire resulted from absence of a proper spark arrester. White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497.

42. Creighton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 527.

43. Duckworth v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 913.

44. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Goodnight [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 583; Tex. Midland R. R. v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 942; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hornsby, 202 Ill. 138; Tex. S. R. Co. v. Hart [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 833; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Needham, 105 Ill. App. 25; Rogers v. Kan. City & O. R. Co., 52 Neb. 86; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Beal [Neb.] 94 N. W. 956; West Side Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 95 N. W. 193; Raleigh Hosiery Co. v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 131 N. C. 238; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 254; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Tate, 104 Ill. App. 615; Franey v. Ill. Cent. R. Co,. 104 Ill. App. 499.

Code, § 2056. Kennedy v. Iowa State Ins. Co. [Iowa] 91 N. W. 831.

45. Bates County Bank v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 330.

46, 47. Brooks v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 166.

48. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Caskey, 24 Ky. L. R. 2392, 74 S. W. 201.

49. The railroad company only becomes liable when it has negligently used an engine improperly equipped. White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497.

50. Rulings as to admissibility of evidence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Beal [Neb.] 94 N. W. 956. Rules for employes excluded. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450.

Damages. Evidence of the amount plaintiff paid for his farm is immaterial. MacDonald v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 25 R. I. 40.

51. If no direct proof appears as to origin of the fire. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Chittim [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 294. Fires set by other engines similar in construction. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Short [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 936. Where the particular locomotive alleged to have caused a fire is not identified, evidence of a similar fire set in the same place, shortly before, by a locomotive, is admissible. Cotton destroyed on platform of carrier for shipment. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 254. Together with other evidence, it may be shown that another fire was set by sparks from a passing engine as far from the track as the house burned, on the issue whether the fire in question was caused in a similar manner. Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 29. Evidence that about the time of the fire and the passing of a locomotive alleged to have caused it, other fires appeared at points near by along the track, may be shown as tending to establish that the fire was caused by such locomotive and negligence in its construction and operation. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287. Evidence that other like engines had been seen to throw sparks nearly as far as the hay stacks burned. Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 984. Evidence as to other fires from the same engine at the same place, shortly after the fire in question in connection with evidence that other engines passed without causing fire, is admissible to rebut evidence that the engine blamed was in proper condition. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450. It may be shown that engines emitted great quantities of sparks and started many fires in the vicinity shortly before and durtion, or tending to show condition of a locomotive,[53] whether direct or circumstantial or both,[54] and opinions pointing to negligence as a cause may be heard.[55]

Title may be shown by warehouse receipts.[56]

Sufficiency of evidence.[57] Instructions.[58]—The court cannot charge as to con-ing the time of the injuries sued for, and that cinders lay along the track and beyond the right of way, though the railroad employes testified that the engines which caused the fires were properly equipped. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Scheible, 24 Ky. L. R. 1708, 72 S. W. 325.

52. Evidence of defective condition of engine spark arresters during the winter before the fire is inadmissible. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Needham, 105 Ill. App. 25. Where a particular engine was identified as causing the fire, a witness cannot testify generally that defendant's engines threw out sparks on other occasions ten months before the fire. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 999.

53. Evidence of the volume and height of, sparks thrown from a locomotive while switching near a warehouse, is admissible in an action for burning cotton in the warehouse. In an action for damages from a fire caused by a passing engine, evidence that other engines at other times discharged an unjustifiable quantity or size of sparks may be shown to establish negligent construction of the particular engine. White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497. Where it appears that sparks were thrown out by a passing engine and that the fire was caused thereby, and another fire as well in another field near by, and that the engine was using slack coal which was dangerous because of the dry weather and the season, there is sufficient to take the case to the jury. Glanz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 93 N. W. 575.

54. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson [Ind.] 66 N. E. 899. Evidence tending to show that such a mill as defendant's had thrown sparks as far as plaintiff's house was distant, must be given by plaintiff before resting. Under Court Rule 50 (56 N. H. 589) allowing only rebutting evidence to plaintiff after resting unless by permission of court. Gerrish v. Whitfield [N. H.] 55 Atl. 551. The defective condition of apparatus may be shown by witnesses who saw it at the time and place of the fire. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Scottish U. N. I. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1083.

55. Expert testimony as to the liability of a locomotive, under certain circumstances, to throw out sparks and live cinders, there being evidence that the escape of sparks cannot be wholly prevented. Hypothetical state of facts based on the evidence. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 47 Law. Ed. 1057.

Mere negative opinions as to the cause of the fire are rejected. Id.

56. Burned cotton. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450.

57. Sufficiency of evidence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Beal [Neb.] 94 N. W. 956; Rowan v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 80 App. Div. (N. Y.) 31. As to cause of fire. Bates County Bank v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 98 Mo. App. 330; Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 984; York v. Cleaves, 97 Me. 413; Peffer v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 291. To show that passing engine was cause of fire. Brooks v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 166; Ragsdale v. Southern R. Co., 121 Fed. 924; White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497. To carry question of negligence to the jury. Craft v. Albemarle Timber Co., 132 N. C. 151; Balding v. Andrews [N. D.] 96 N. W. 305; Judd v. N. Y. & T. S. S. Co. (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 206, rehearing granted, 118 Fed. 826; Carter v. Pa. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 120 Fed. 663; Brooks v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 166; Smith v. Long Island R. Co., 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 171. To show that passing engine negligently fired timber deposited by plaintiff on defendant's right of way for shipment. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 999. As to proper appliances and skilful operation to rebut prima facie case for plaintiff requiring him to show negligence. Smith v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 22. To raise issue as to condition and operation of engines. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Perrow [Va.] 43 S. E. 614. Plaintiff need only show the fire to have resulted from a spark from defendant's engine to establish negligence [3 Starr & C. Ann. St. (2d Ed.) p. 3294, c. 114, par. 123]. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hornsby, 202 Ill. 138. Proof of negligence in permitting emission of sparks from the locomotive is not alone sufficient. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 704. That railroad tracks and right of way were allowed to become covered with inflammable material, by which fire was carried through sparks from an engine to adjoining property, is sufficient evidence of negligence to carry the case to the jury. Livermon v. Roanoke & T. R. R. Co., 131 N. C. 527. Evidence of a train dispatcher that no train went out without orders, and that no order for a train appeared during the time when plaintiff's property was set on fire as shown by the records or the books of the conductor, is not conclusive evidence that no train was sent out. Brooks v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 166. That soon after an engine passed a fire started in a field covered with dry vegetation and ran before a high wind, will support a finding that the engine was the cause of the fire without a showing that live cinders were thrown out or that the engine was under more than ordinary strain. Kan. City, etc., R. Co. v. Perry, 65 Kan. 792, 70 Pac. 876. Where the particular engine causing a fire is not identified but there is sufficient evidence of defects as to particular engines to show responsibility of defendant, it cannot be said that there was no evidence of negligence as to such engines. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lawrence [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 254.

58. Sufficiency of particular instructions: As to measure of damages for destruction of fences, grass and turf. Tex. Midland R. R. v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 942. As to plaintiff's care of property and precautions to prevent fire. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 704. Regarding finding as to condition of dition of appliances where the complaint charges no defects.[59] A charge that a prima facie case of liability for fire is made is not incorrect because a separate issue of contributory negligence was raised where it was properly submitted.[60] A charge under a special statute concerning liability for fires from engines, which properly limited recovery to damage from that source under the pleading and evidence, need not limit recovery to fires originating from sparks from the engine.[61]

Trial, findings and judgment.[62]—The manner of operation of engines alleged to have caused the fire, and the condition of spark arresters at the time, are questions for the jury, though witnesses for the company testified that the engines were examined the night of the fire, and the morning after, and found to be properly equipped and in proper condition.[63] An allegation of negligence of employes will not support a finding of use of defective apparatus.[64] A judgment against one of several defendants, after nonsuit as to the remainder, is conclusive as to the latter where they were parties to the record and defended.[65]

As to origin of fire alleged to have resulted from a locomotive as authorizing the jury to find for plaintiff if the locomotive caused the fire, without requiring a finding of negligence of defendant in regard to condition and operation of the locomotive and as shifting the burden of proof of the whole case to defendant. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Florence [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 802. Propriety and sufficiency of instructions under pleadings in action for damages from fire by sparks from passing engine. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327.

In an action for damages from a fire set by sparks from an engine the jury cannot be instructed to find for plaintiff if they find that sparks would not be thrown as far as they were thrown by the engine in question if properly constructed and operated, where there was evidence that at the time a high wind was blowing. Id.

An instruction that—if the jury find that the railroad company failed to cause the removal of inflammable material on its right of way, and that its agents or servants while operating a locomotive permitted fire to escape to such inflammable material near the road from which it escaped to adjoining premises and destroyed plaintiff's property, etc.,—is proper as requiring a finding that the fire began on the right of way and escaped to the adjoining property, and that the failure of the company to clear the right of way was the proximate cause of the fire. McFarland v. Miss. R. & B. T. R. Co., 175 Mo. 422.

An instruction that though the jury may believe from the evidence that the fire was caused by sparks from the locomotive, this will not show negligence of defendant unless it further appears that there was negligence in allowing the sparks to escape, is incorrect, since under the statute the fact that fire is set by a locomotive while on or passing a railroad, is prima facie evidence of negligence in the operation of such railroad. ing of game,[67] but concurrent jurisdiction over boundary waters does not allow either state to legislate as to fish in portion of such waters within the boundaries of the other.[68]

Offenses and prosecutions.[69]—The Illinois act includes not merely game birds but all birds ferae naturae.[70] Quail may not be killed out of season in Iowa even for scientific purposes.[71] A purchaser in good faith of deer and moose skins for tanning purposes acquires a valid title thereto, and in an action therefor against the game warden is not required to show that the animals were lawfully killed.[72] Occupancy of a tent in a yard temporarily by a hunter who other times slept on the porch of a crowded house, does not make him a camp hunter under the Arkansas laws.[73] It is no defense to a charge of killing a deer without horns under the Vermont laws that accused, intending to kill the animal, did not know that it was a deer without horns.[74] That fish were purchased during the open season is no defense to a prosecution for having possession of salmon during the closed season.[75] Justices of the peace have such jurisdiction as the statute gives.[76] An indictment is not objectionable by reason of omission of word "did" before the words "have in his possession" or the use of verbs in improper tense.[77] An information for hunting on enclosed and posted agricultural or grazing lands need not negative an exception in another section of the law applicable to enclosed and posted lands not used for grazing or agricultural purposes.[78] There must be proof that dynamite was used where explosion of dynamite as a means of catching fish is charged.[79] Cases as to quantum of proof are collected in footnote.[80] Cases relating to fines are collected in the note.[81]

The New York game law allows a civil action to recover penalty in addition to criminal liability.[83]

Fishery rights.—An exclusive right of fishery on tide lands cannot be acquired by long use,[84] but in some states location of exclusive rights is provided for by statute,[85] and the owner of private waters has the exclusive right of fishery therein.[86] New Jersey provides for the establishment of free public fisheries in fresh water lakes on approval by the voters of the counties containing such lakes.[87] Damages are recoverable for forcible exclusion from public fishing grounds,[88] or for wrongful fishing in private grounds,[89] or negligent injury to nets;[90] but there can be no conviction for fishing in private waters unless state laws as to posting have been complied with.[91] In Maine a penalty is imposed for maintaining fish weirs upon another person's shore.[92]

Shooting rights.—The owner of land for the purpose of shooting has an interest in the soil and not a mere easement, and may maintain the action for unlawful shooting on such grounds.[93]

Oysters and clams.—The laws of Virginia allow a verbal application for an oyster planting location.[94] In Maryland there may be no private location of natural beds.[95] Private clam beds are authorized by the laws of North Carolina.[96]

92. The Maine statute imposing a penalty for maintaining a fish weir below or beyond low water mark in front of the shore or flats of another allows the action where the weir is so near or is so situated with reference to complainant's shore that it injuriously affects his enjoyment of his rights as owner. The action is not to be defeated by the fact that a portion of the weir but not the larger portion is removed annually [Rev. St. Me. c. 3, § 63] Dunton v. Parker, 97 Me. 461.

FIXTURES.

§ 1. Definition.—The word fixtures, though it would seem proper to apply it only to those chattels which have become part of the realty, is sometimes used in the opposite sense to signify those which may be removed.[97]

§ 2. Annexation and intent. Requisites of the annexation.—The intent with which an annexation is made is the test of the character of a chattel alleged to be a part of the realty.[98]

Indicia of intent.—The purpose, effect and manner of placing[99] the liability of serious injury to the realty from the removal of the chattel,[1] also whether the owner of the realty has at any time asserted a right to the chattel,[2] and whether the chattel sought to be held as realty could be used with equal efficiency in any establishment similar to that in which it is found,[3] and the nature of the occupancy of the land,[4] respectively show intent. It is immaterial, however, where the intent to annex is otherwise clear, whether the chattel would have to be taken apart in order to be removed and would necessarily suffer more or less damage in the process,[5] or whether the chattel, while annexed, was sold by the sheriff under execution sale as personal property.[6] So, also, proof of acts of the tenant after the annexation will not be admitted.[7]

Whether a chattel has become a part of the realty, or has remained personalty, is a mixed question of law and fact.[8]

A chattel does not become a fixture unless (1) it is physically annexed, at least by juxtaposition, to the realty or some appurtenance thereof, (2) it is adapted to and usable with that part of the realty to which it is annexed, and (3) it was so annexed with the intention, on the part of the person making the annexation to make it a permanent accession to the realty. An agreement[9] or an estoppel as to the movable or fixed character of annexed chattels may arise against the landlord[10] or the tenant from the renewal of a lease without reservation.[11]

Third persons, though bona fide purchasers, do not become entitled to regard as fixtures that which by agreement is made a movable.[12]

§ 3. A severance does not result from the substitution of one for another annexed chattel.[13]

FOOD.[14]

The legislature has power to enact pure food regulations for the protection of the public.[15] The Department of Agriculture authorized to make regulations for sanitary inspection of oleomargarine cannot make such as are preventive of fraud.[16]

Offenses.[17]—Guilty knowledge is essential to the "willful" selling of bad food.[18] When a pure food statute adopts no purity standard, that of a standard book of formulae may be taken.[19] The sale of colored oleomargarine may be made unlawful, though it be sold for what it is.[20] The manufacture of a proscribed commodity is not legalized by an act licensing dealers and manufacturers.[21] Oleomargarine is not an "imitation" if the ingredients naturally produce a yellow color.[22] Vinegar may be an imitation, though made from apple products.[23] Corn

Indictment and prosecution; Penalties.[25]—It need not be alleged that milk is an article of food.[26] When an increased punishment follows a second offense it must be pleaded.[27] Distinct sales, each bearing a penalty, must not be joined in one count, but be separately pleaded.[28]

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

§ 1. Civil rights and remedies. A. The cause of action.—At common law, forcible entry "is the violently taking possession of lands and tenements with menaces, force and arms, and without authority of law."[29] It is quasi ex delicto in its nature.[30] The plaintiff must have had a right of possession at the time of the entry,[31] but it suffices if it be good only as against defendant.[32] Proof of force is necessary, and a merely unlawful but peaceable entry makes no case.[33] A tenant who after notice holds possession contrary to his lease is guilty,[34] likewise a sublessee holding without right,[35] or a purchaser at foreclosure sale who refuses a valid tender for redemption.[36] Unless it be concerted, a tenant is not liable who merely puts a stranger in at the end of the term.[37] Threats of force may work a "forcible ejection or exclusion."[38] An action of forcible entry and detainer cannot be maintained where the object of the action is merely to recover rent alleged to be due by reason of the fact that the tenant has exercised his option to renew his term, and has entered upon such renewed term. The action should be to recover rent.[39]

The right to recover damages is sometimes given,[40] but in unlawful detainer only from the date of the demand for possession.[41] When, during the period of the lease, the lessor is guilty of forcible entry, damages therefor may be recovered by the tenant, even though, prior to the trial of the action, the lease has expired. Judgment for restitution in such case, however, will not, of course, be given.[42]

It is no defense that defendant is tenant under a void lease,[43] nor that a holdover tenant has begun adverse proceedings against the land.[44] As in other cases a tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title,[45] but he may show that his detainer is lawful because the landlord has no right to possession.[46] The validity of an assignment of a lease is not material when the action is laid on a wrongful holding over after the term.[47]

B. Procedure. Practice.—The proceeding is expeditious and somewhat summary in its character.[48] It is within the discretion of the trial judge to grant separate trials to defendants.[49]

The action being legal in its nature,[50] the ultimate equitable rights of parties cannot be determined therein.[51] The question of title is not involved. The action may be maintained where the plaintiff can show that he was rightfully in possession.[52] A party may, however, prove his title in order to show that he was rightfully in possession, and the extent of such possession, the court properly instructing the jury with reference to the purpose for which the evidence was allowed.[53]

Parties.—The person entitled to possession at the time of the entry[54] or the

54. Under the Code of Mississippi, an ac-

Jurisdiction must be had according to the statute.[57]

Pleading.[58]—A complaint is sufficient if it recites the facts alleged to constitute the wrongful act in the language of the statute.[59] A mere allegation of ownership in fee by the plaintiff does not plead a possession.[60] Good pleading requires an allegation that the premises were unlawfully detained at the time of bringing action.[61] A description of the land, as in the deed of conveyance, and sufficiently definite to enable the officer, with the assistance of the plaintiff, to avoid mistake in regard thereto, will satisfy the requirements in an action of unlawful detainer.[62] Allegations of rent due at the time of bringing action go merely to the measure of the recovery and do not impair the complaint.[63]

After the criminal character of the action of unlawful detainer became somewhat modified by statute, the criminal prosecution and the civil remedy continued to be governed by the same rules.[64] It may still be requisite, therefore, under certain forms of statute, to allege facts sufficient to show that the case is one in which an action of that strict character may be brought.[65]

Under a statute which recognizes both the civil and the criminal character of an action in unlawful detainer and for restitution, an oral plea of not guilty will be deemed merely a denial of the general allegations of the complaint. In order to set up new matter by way of defense or in mitigation, the answer must be in writing.[66] Admission of plaintiff's possession will be implied from an answer which admits the making of the lease, and rests solely on the plaintiff's breach of certain covenants of the lease.[67]

The warrant should state the county in which are found the premises in controversy.[68] It does not change the cause of action to amend a writ by stating that plaintiff was in possession at the time of entry.[69]

tion of unlawful entry and detainer should be instituted by the tenant against a third party alleged to have unlawfully entered. It is at least clear, that if the action could be maintained by the owner of the land, the rightful tenant would have to be made a party. Hammel v. Atkinson [Miss.] 34 So. 225. By statute (Rev. Enforcement of judgment.—In an action of unlawful detainer, plaintiff is entitled to execution under an alias writ where the officer failed to execute the first writ issued by reason of the inclemency of the weather and the physical condition of the wife of the defendant.[70] A tenant's right to pay into court the rent found due, and thereupon have restitution under the California Code, is confined to cases where action is based solely on breach of covenant to pay rent.[71]

A retention bond carries no liability in favor of the original plaintiff for a holding over after plaintiff conveyed all his interest.[72]

Objections to a notice to quit[73] or to legality of service of process may be waived if not seasonably taken.[74]

The right of new trial, appeal or other review and the practice thereon is usually specially defined.[75]

§ 2. Criminal responsibility.—At common law, an action of forcible entry and detainer was a criminal or quasi criminal process. It was permitted only where the entry and detainer were by the use of force.[76] Under the early English common law, forcible entry was an offense against the public.[77]

In an action constituting a mere prosecution for forcible entry, the description of the premises need not possess the particularity and definiteness requisite where the action is also for restitution.[78]

St. 1894, c. 86, determining the mode of appeal to said court. Watier v. Buth, 87 Minn. 205. Proceedings in District Court are reviewable only by certiorari. Johnson v. Booge [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 238. § 2. Sale by trustee in deed or under power. A. Right to sell.—In certain states foreclosures by sale under power in the mortgage or by trustee in trust deeds are not recognized.[82] The rule differs as to the right to sell after the grantor's death,[83] or that of one assuming the mortgage.[84]

Negligence of recording officer in failing to record the power of sale will not invalidate a foreclosure by advertisement.[85] If a substitution of trustees must be recorded, it is necessary that a change in the trustee, who is such ex-officio as treasurer of a corporation, appear of record.[86] A default may consist in the nonpayment of interest or any part thereof when due if the mortgage so provides, though it is silent as to default in an instalment of principal.[87] Limitations of actions in personam do not bar the right to sell under a power,[88] nor do limitations applicable to mortgage foreclosures.[89]

Substitution of a trustee must rest on some failure of duty,[90] under the terms of the deed.[91]

In proceedings to enjoin the exercise of a power of sale, for the reason that it will constitute a cloud on title, it must be shown how they will so operate.[92] The power cannot be exercised after bill filed to protect equity of redemption by an accounting and redemption.[93]

A wife may execute an antenuptial power to foreclose without joinder of her husband.[94]

be strictly followed.[95] The debtor's nonresident attorney in fact[96] or subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers are not entitled to notice.[97]

(§ 2) C. Sale.[98]—The sale must be honestly conducted so that the best price may be realized.[99] Sales are not vitiated by non-prejudicial defects.[1] Separate sales of distinct tracts under one mortgage,[2] or a sale of the property as a whole, where the trustee is given an alternative as to a sale in parcels or in gross, are not abuses of discretion.[3] The latter is merely voidable for good cause though one of several distinct tracts constituted a homestead.[4] Sale in the mortgagee's absence though at the time specified by his notice cannot be made at the mortgagor's instance,[5] and resale thereupon had is not invalidated by the fact that the mortgagor leaves the place of sale after the first sale, if there are no bidders who disperse before the second sale is made or who are deterred from bidding.[6] A sale properly made is not invalidated as to one mortgagor, by failure of another to perform acts which might have prevented foreclosure.[7]

The mortgagor,[8] or a corporation of which the trustees are stockholders and directors,[9] may purchase.

If the sale is made with the understanding that it is for cash it will not be invalidated by a subsequent agreement by the creditor to extend credit.[10] A mortgagee executing the power is not bound to protect subsequent incumbrancers' rights in any surplus.[11] The purchaser is not bound to see that the money is applied by the trustee to the debt.[12]

a power is the same as that of one complaining of an unconfirmed judicial sale.[14] Inadequacy of price is not alone sufficient,[15] unless so great as to shock the conscience.[16] The maker of the deed may still insist that the trustee cannot purchase at the sale though the property has been transferred to one who assumed the debt.[17] Where the purchaser is not, by connection with the deed of trust, charged with any responsibility for the regularity of the trustee's proceedings, the burden of showing defects or irregularities of the sale is on the party asserting them.[18] The trustee's deed is admissible to show proper execution of the power, where it stipulates that its recitals shall be prima facie evidence of facts stated.[19]

Ratification.—The mortgagor may ratify a sale by recognizing its validity,[20] but he cannot affect the rights of his previous grantee.[21] An acceptance of the proceeds is a ratification.[22]

(§ 2) D. Costs and attorney's fees.—Counsel fees should not be allowed unless it is shown that they were necessary to the proper performance of the trustee's duties.[23] The trustee is not entitled to attorney's fees provided for in mortgage notes where he collects them by sale under the power.[24] Auctioneer's charges cannot be allowed a trustee unless arranged for in advance,[25] and it has been held that such fees must be paid by the trustee.[26] A statement of the principal and interest due does not estop the trustee from claiming an additional amount as commission.[27]

(§ 2) E. Defective foreclosures and rights under them.—Defective foreclosures under power may be validated by curative acts.[28] If the trust deed provides that a conveyance by the trustee shall be conclusive against the grantor, such a deed will be conclusive in an action involving only the legal title though perhaps the fairness of the sale might be inquired into in equity.[29]

A sale in accordance with law and the deed of trust vests in the purchaser an equitable title on payment of the purchase money, though the trustee is not qualified to execute a deed by reason of his authority not having been in writing.[30]

If the mortgagee purchase without authority he is bound to account only as a mortgagee in possession.[31] A purchaser under a deed of trust cannot be dispossessed by the mortgagors until payment of the debt secured.[32]

§ 3. Strict foreclosure cannot be had against the owner of the legal title to the mortgaged premises,[33] or of an equitable mortgage.[34]

§ 4. Foreclosure by action and sale. A. Right of action.—Though by statute foreclosure proceedings are provided which are adjudged to be an action at law, nevertheless a proceeding for foreclosure may be regarded as in equity where the questions presented are not such as may be adjudicated at law.[35]

Default must precede the bill.[36] Under some statutes, the mortgage need not express the right to foreclose for default in interest.[37] The provision may be made in a renewal note.[38] Acceptance of payment of a second coupon does not prejudice foreclosure begun on default in a first interest coupon.[39] Default in payment of a note given in payment of interest due warrants foreclosure.[40]

A mortgagee may be estopped to foreclose, where by his conduct he has led the mortgagor to believe that the time for payment of the debt was extended,[41] but extension does not remove the right to declare the entire debt due on failure to pay interest and taxes.[42]

Foreclosure may be had for breach of covenants to insure or repay expenditures for insurance and abstracts of title.[43]

An option to declare the entire debt due is removed by tender before its exercise,[44] by receipt of the overdue interest without objection.[45] Notice of election is waived by the mortgagor, if he absent himself from his usual residence, without making any provision by which he may be found, or notifying the mortgagee.[46] Filing the bill is sufficient exercise of the option.[47] A trustee may foreclose on default in interest without complying with other provisions in the deed relating to an election by a majority of the bond holders, to declare the principal sum due.[48]

Title of mortgagor necessary to suit.—Where a mortgage is executed jointly and one of the mortgagors is entitled to a homestead exemption, the interest of the other may be sold.[49] A mortgage may be foreclosed on a remainder, though there is a possibility that it may be devested before determination of the particular estate.[50]

Foreclosure may be had on cross bill in a suit to quiet title despite the uncertainty as to title in plaintiff.[51]

Suspension and stay.—Foreclosure proceedings are not within statutes forbidding actions against executors or administrators for a specified period after grant of letters or probate.[52] The decree is not for the payment of money within the meaning of statutes suspending for a time sales under such decree.[53]

Foreclosure may be enjoined until the determination of collateral questions of fact,[54] though not to protect a trifling right.[55]

Defenses.—Payment,[56] duress,[57] fraud,[58] or illegality of consideration,[59] may furnish good defenses. Collateral agreements may, if binding, afford a defense.[60]

Tender made before foreclosure was brought is sufficient to authorize dismissal,[61] but foreclosure for the entire amount begun on default in an instalment cannot be stayed by payment of the amount and expenses due to date.[62]

Other suits or actions pending.—An original bill cannot be maintained on an unrecorded mortgage pending suit on another mortgage.[63]

Foreclosure of a mortgage after foreclosure of a second mortgage on other property but as additional security for the original debt and advances is not within statutes against foreclosure pending action on the debt.[64] Under such statutes leave to sue on the bond pending foreclosure cannot be granted on the ground that the mortgage security is insufficient.[65] The question may be raised by interveners who have acquired the interests of the mortgagors, and the rule applies though the allegation is made in a cross petition by the holders of a second mortgage.[66] Failure to prove that no legal proceedings have been had simply authorizes dismissal.[67]

Bar by limitation.—The suit to foreclose may be maintained though action at law on the debt is barred.[68] Statutes barring foreclosure at the same time action on the mortgage debt is barred apply to mortgages executed before their passage.[69]

By impleading persons as defendants their right to plead the statute of limitations is admitted.[70]

Jurisdiction and venue.—Where personal service is had of the mortgagors, there may be a decree for the sale and conveyance of a portion of the premises outside of the state.[71] Defendants on cross petition seeking damages for fraudulent representations inducing execution of a mortgage cannot have a change of venue to their respective counties.[72]

(§ 4) B. Parties and process. Who may use.—Foreclosure must be brought by the person entitled to the security.[73] Where several parties are secured, one may bring the action in behalf of himself and the others in interest.[74] Nonconcurrence with respect to a discretion imposed in joint trustees to determine the advisability of foreclosure is a failure to sue which warrants the beneficiaries in suing for themselves.[75] Claimants of title adverse and paramount to both mortgagor and mortgagee are not ordinarily proper defendants,[76] but all persons in interest whose rights are sought to be concluded are necessary parties.[77]

The holder of an unmatured tax lien need not be made a party to foreclosure of a subsequent mortgage.[78] Contingent remaindermen must be joined where it is sought to impose an additional lien on their expectancies.[79] Executory devisees not in esse need not be made parties.[80]

Where the mortgage and notes run to different persons, both should be joined.[81] Mere possession of the evidence of debt does not necessitate joinder.[82] A holder of the indebtedness who is also trustee need not, on suing to foreclose, join himself as trustee.[83]

Assignees of a mortgage who have given security for its payment may be joined for the purpose of securing a deficiency decree against them under statutory provisions providing for the joining of persons besides the grantor, whose obligations secure the mortgage debt.[84] In some states the assignee of a mortgage need not join his assignor.[85]

A subsequent judgment creditor entitled to any surplus may be admitted as a party defendant after sale.[86] The administrator with the will annexed is not ordinarily entitled to come in to deny the validity of the mortgage.[87]

Where a lis pendens has been filed, one purchasing at an execution sale need not be made a party to foreclosure.[88]

Process.—The original notice need not describe the land or cite the record, where the mortgage may be found in order to state the cause in general terms.[89] Errors which do not mislead or prejudice defendants are not fatal,[90] but where service is constructive, a variance in the initials of the party in the sheriff's return and decree is fatal.[91] Timeliness of publication of notice of foreclosure must appear from the record itself.[92] Notice by publication is sufficient to uphold the sale as against a subordinate lien holder who does not show good cause to set it aside.[93]

Averments of the nonpendency of action on the debt need not literally follow the statute.[98] Where the mortgagee has taken judgment, he need not, in the petition to foreclose, state the nonexistence of other proceedings to enforce the judgment.[1]

Answer and other responsive pleadings.—Alteration after execution and delivery must be pleaded and proved.[2] If the pendency of another action does not appear from the pleadings the objection is waived unless raised by answer.[3] Failure to set out the notes and mortgage or attach copies as exhibits is not ground for demurrer.[4] Failure to join a necessary party defendant is waived by absence of demurrer.[5] A party which is made a defendant on the ground that it possesses or claims a lien, the exact nature of which is unknown to complainant but is alleged to be inferior to his lien, cannot demur on the ground of limitations without disclosing the nature of its claim.[6] The question of usury cannot be raised by a demurrer directed to the bill as a whole, if the bill seeks foreclosure as to the principal sum secured as well as the interest.[7] Sufficiency of allegations of defense has been passed on in cases cited.[8]

Additional rights as to interests in the property cannot be set up in reply but must be urged by amendment.[9] A special reply is demurrable which contains matter provable under a general denial.[10]

by cross bill, facts constituting the fraud alleged as ground must be substantially alleged.[12] Where parties have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, they cannot complain of the lack of notice of the filing of a cross petition on which foreclosure is decreed.[13]

Issues and proof and variance.—In Nebraska, the petition must allege whether any proceedings at law have been had for the recovery of the debt or any part thereof, and where the answer is a general denial, there can be no recovery in the absence of proof sustaining such allegation of the petition.[14] Allegations of a claim of right do not admit its existence.[15] The execution of extension notes need not be proved where not denied.[16] If defendants are allowed to give evidence of a gift of the mortgage to them, plaintiff may introduce evidence that the gift was fraudulent, though it has not alleged such fact.[17] A tender of the amount due, except that sum claimed as costs and attorney's fees, is a waiver of variance as to ownership of the notes secured.[18] A discrepancy consisting only in additional matter of description is not variance.[19]

Trial.—Where the only issues are those arising on a counterclaim and reply thereto, they may be noticed for trial at a law term without their being settled.[20] Failure to introduce the mortgage cannot be objected to after judgment.[21]

Evidence and burden of proof.[22]—The complainant must establish his title to the mortgage.[23] The burden is on the alleging party to establish payment,[24] or an agreement not to foreclose,[25] or priority of a hostile lien,[26] or fraud which must be sustained with clear and cogent evidence.[27]

Evidence looking to a settlement held sufficient to show that no action has been begun to collect the mortgage debt. Klingenfeld v. Houghton [Neb.] 96 N. W. 76. On foreclosure of trust deeds given by bank stockholders to secure certificates of deposit issued by the bank, an allegation that plaintiff recovered a judgment at law against the bank and an execution was returned unsatisfied, does not take the place of the allegation required by Code Civ. Proc. 1901, § 850. Mich. Trust Co. v. Red Cloud [Neb.] 96 N. W. 140.

24. Evidence held insufficient. Archibald v. Banks, 203 Ill. 380; Omaha L. & T. Co. v. Luellen [Neb.] 92 N. W. 734. Offer of the notes and mortgage is sufficient as against a plea of payment of which no evidence is introduced. Id. Where in defense to foreclosure of a trust deed it is alleged that the bonds secured have been satisfied by the execution of a new deed and bonds, the burden of proof of such fact is on defendant and if the agreement is alleged to have been between the president of the trust company which was acting as trustee and the president of the mortgagor company, the burden is on defendant to show that the president of the trustee had authority to represent the bond-holders, the bonds having passed into the hands of numerous parties by transfer. 25. Unity Co. v. Equitable Trust Co., 204 Ill. 595.

26. Allegation in answer setting up the prior lien of a judgment against the mortgagor's vendee. Foster v. Bowles, 138 Cal. 449, 71 Pac. 495. A senior mortgagee has the burden of proving the junior incumbrancer's knowledge of his unrecorded mortgage. Schoonover v. Foley [Iowa] 94 N. W. 492.

27. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud and duress in obtaining a mortgage.

(§ 4) D. Decree or judgment.—The decree need not be signed by the presiding judge.[28] The findings must establish a trustee's right to sue.[29] It need not find the amount paid on each note secured when paid, etc.,[30] but must adequately describe the land[31] and identify the parcels if it direct a sale in parcels.[32] Relief must be confined to matters well pleaded,[33] and prayed,[34] and operate on parties before the court;[35] but incidental relief may lie in a general prayer.[36] Sale should not be decreed if the debt is paid pending suit.[37] The mortgagee may be given judgment for possession though foreclosure is denied on account of immaturity of the debt.[38] A money decree can be rendered for a deficiency only.[39] Interest and advances may be awarded.[40]

A judgment creditor may be entitled to relief as against other defendants in a suit brought against him to foreclose a prior lien.[41]

Instructions as to appraisement may be omitted.[42] Where the wife is a party to foreclosure against the husband as the holder of an encumbrance, a superfluous recital as to the wife's right to credit in case she became a purchaser at the sale is not fatal.[43]

The decree may adjudicate upon a contingent interest,[44] and should be so drawn as to protect an inchoate right of dower,[45] but the determination thereof may be reserved to be taken up on the disposition of the proceeds.[46]

44. Where the mortgage contains a covenant of title in fee simple, whereas the mortgagors had only a life estate with a possibility of a remainder, the decree properly covers their future interest. Rudd v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2141, 73 S. W. 759.

45. State Bank v. Backus, 160 Ind. 682.

46. Gifford v. McGuinness, 63 N. J. Eq. 834.

Amendment, opening, or vacating.—A decree ordering that sale be made by the sheriff may be amended without notice to defendants by authorizing sale by a commissioner.[47] A junior lienor who took pending suit must move to set aside the decree within statutory time.[48] Ground for vacating or opening[49] must be well pleaded.[50] The decree may be opened but not set aside or a grantee of the purchaser dispossessed on account of the insufficiency of the affidavit for service by publication to give relief to a transferee subsequent to the mortgage.[51]

Supersedeas.—A motion for a new trial will not supersede a decree of sale.[52] Supersedeas bonds must be conditioned as provided by statute.[53] They must provide for the value of the use and occupation of the property.[54] Defendants, after obtaining a stay of judgment, are estopped from attacking such judgment in any manner.[55]

Appeal.—Reviewability depends on the statutes and the general rules of appellate procedure.[56] The same is true of the saving of questions,[57] and the grounds for reversal or affirmance.[58]

47. There being no showing of prejudice or that the property brought less than its full value. Code Civ. Proc. § 726, authorizes the appointment to be made by judgment or at any time after judgment. Granger v. Sheriff, 140 Cal. 190, 73 Pac. 816.

48. Three years as prescribed by Civ. Code Proc. § 518, § 344 for setting aside judgments. Hays v. Gilbert, 24 Ky. L. R. 1386, 71 S. W. 652.

49. Evidence held insufficient to authorize the vacation of a foreclosure decree on the ground that the mortgage had never been executed by defendant and that he had been improperly represented by his attorneys. Klabunde v. Byron-Reed Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 4.

50. An affidavit seeking to open a decree on the ground that the money was advanced by affiant, the mortgagor, to secure a loan to her husband to carry on a gambling business, is not sufficient if there is no allegation that the business was ever carried on. Pereles v. Leiser [Wis.] 96 N. W. 799.

57. Objections and exceptions to a sale do not bring up for review errors or irregularities in the decree of foreclosure or prior thereto. Neb. L. & T. Co. v. Dickerson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 774; Stein v. Parrotte [Neb.] 96 N. W. 155. Foreclosure of railroad mortgage. Cent. Trust Co. v. Peoria D. & E. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 30; Tichey v. Simecek [Neb.] 97 N. W. 323.

Not be reversed for matters not shown in the record: It will not be presumed that a renewal note increased the rate of interest, thus rendering a junior mortgage a prior lien. First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' State Bank [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 726. The question of whether an alias order of sale was irregularly issued cannot be reviewed where none of the proceedings in the case prior to the issuing of the order have been brought up. Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Crandall [Neb.] 96 N. W. 624. Or matters not urged below: Right to render judgment for possession only. Sperry v. Butler, 75 Conn. 369.

58. Where an abstract of title has been admitted over objection showing complainant's right to foreclose, the court on appeal will not assume the abstract to be false in order to sustain the decree. Goddard v. Clarke [Neb.] 96 N. W. 350. Reversal of a judgment on the note will not affect the decision of an appeal from the decree. An erroneous decree refusing foreclosure of a mortgage by a husband and wife on the ground that the debt was barred as against the wife in whom was title to the property will be reversed though a personal judgment against the husband on the note has since also been reversed. Cooper v. Haythorn, 66 Kan. 91, 71 Pac. 277. Not reversible for errors cured. Civ. Code Proc. § 692, provides that other lien holders shall not have any of the proceeds of the sale until they have shown their right thereto by answer and cross petition. Held, that where mortgagees who had not answered, were given a personal judgment and the priorities of their mortgages established the error was cured by a subsequent order that they should not receive any of the proceeds until answer was filed, and that such order was properly made after the term. James v. Webb, 24 Ky. L. R. 1382, 71 S. W. 526. Occupancy and improvements by the purchaser pending hearing on appeal are not grounds for a rehearing of a reversal. Hunt v. Whitehead, 19 App. D. C. 116.

Proceedings below after appeal.—If it is decided that the judgment is too large and the court below is directed to enter judgment accordingly, it cannot be done by modifying the previous judgment so as to preserve its vitality.[59] Where a commissioner is appointed to make sale under foreclosure but the writ of execution is returned without sale on account of an appeal from the decree and stay of execution, the court may, on affirmance of the decree, make an ex parte order reappointing the commission and ordering a sale.[60]

(§ 4) E. Sale. Order of sale.—A copy of the decree need not ordinarily be attached to the order of sale.[61] An assignment of the decree need not be shown.[62] The failure of the clerk to attach his seal to the order until after the sale has been held not fatal.[63]

A special execution on the decree when authorized should be executed and returned as such and not as a general execution.[64]

If the description in the mortgage is not sufficient without extrinsic evidence, the execution plaintiff, after foreclosure, has the burden of identification as against a claim interposed to a levy of the mortgage execution.[65]

Notice of sale unless so required by statute need not state the amount of the decree,[66] nor that the land is to be sold in separate tracts.[67] The date of the notice has been held not material, the other essentials being correct.[68] Description of the land may be sufficient though the county is omitted.[69] Proof of publication must be such as to satisfy the statute or the decree.[70]

The appraisement is to prevent sacrifice of the debtor's property,[71] and is to follow the statute providing for it.[72]

An appraiser may be a "free holder" though he has not yet received a deed.[73] He should be disinterested and impartial.[74]

60. The order is not invalidated by the fact that the clerk, although he has received the certificate of remittitur from the supreme court, has not attached the certificate on the judgment roll and entered a minute of the judgment on the docket against the original entry, as required by Code Civ. Interest is not shown by former negotiations for purchase of the land. The appraiser had long previously inquired the price from the owner of the land and had asked the owner of the decree his price for the decree, but the negotiations were dropped. First Nat. Bank v. Tyler [Neb.] 93 N. W. 383.

Non-prejudicial irregularities will not vitiate an appraisal.[75] There must be fraud or irregularity taking away the power of the appraisers to act or in some way affecting the substantial rights of defendants,[76] and that it is too low does not alone suffice.[77]

Failure to deduct incumbrances is cured by sale for more than the amount of the appraisement,[78] or for more than the statutory proportion of the gross valuation;[79] but in such case, if the result of a sale is for a price so low that to uphold it would be inequitable and against good conscience, it should be set aside.[80]

Deduction of a junior lien is not necessarily prejudicial,[81] but the appraisers have no right to treat a junior lien as senior.[82] The amount of taxes due may be deducted from the appraised value despite a finding that the mortgage is a first lien,[83] and though, as between other parties, similar taxes have been declared void.[84]

Objections to an appraisement must precede sale.[85] They must be specific.[86]

75. Union Sav. Bank v. Lincoln Normal University [Neb.] 93 N. W. 408. Such as no oath being returned, signature some four days after appraisement, no notice to defendants to be present, no examination of inside of houses, no venue on the sheriff's certificate to a copy of the appraisement, no certificate of liens. Defendant cannot object that appraisers do not deduct liens from the appraisement.[87]

Affidavits attacking the amount of the appraisement must show the qualification of the affiants.[88]

The right to a reappraisement is restricted to occasions fixed by statute.[89]

Conduct of sale.—The sale must be made by the proper officer,[90] at the place and in the mode prescribed.[91] A sale made after the return day of a special execution may be cured by confirmation.[92]

Separate[93] parcels should be separately offered, but sale may be in gross if one parcel is insufficient.[94] The debtor cannot, as against the mortgagee, fix the order in which several properties shall be sold.[95]

Payment of bid and completion of purchase.—The court may prescribe reasonable rules as to deposits by the purchaser.[96] Satisfaction of the debt may be regarded as the same as a money payment,[97] but an assignee of the decree so buying in must prove the assignment before confirmation will be made.[98] Defects in title authorize a refusal to comply with bid,[99] but not matters of which he had knowledge.[1] On refusal of the purchaser to comply with his bid, the court has discretion as to whether it will order a new sale or compel the purchaser to go on.[2]

Resale.—A resale, after a defective one, may be permitted after the expiration of the time limited for payment of the debt.[3] Where a deed is not taken on an unconfirmed first sale, it cannot be urged against a second sale to the same purchaser if the court uses the date of the first sale as a basis for adjusting the rights of the parties.[4] Where a resale brings a greater price it obviates any objection as to the nonacceptance of the bid at the first sale.[5]

Return.—An officer's return of sale will be regarded as true in the absence of a showing to the contrary.[6] An order of sale is not to be regarded as returnable as general execution.[7]

Confirmation or setting aside.—Though a foreclosure is regarded as not in equity, the court may, by its decree, provide that the sale and sheriff's deed shall pass title to the purchaser, and that he shall be given possession, and confirmation of the sale is unnecessary to pass title while the decree stands unreversed.[8] Allowance of a writ of assistance is equivalent to confirmation of the sale.[9] The jurisdiction to confirm a sale carries with it jurisdiction to overrule objections,[10] and making an order of confirmation overrules them without specific mention.[11] They must be promptly urged,[12] and must specifically state the grounds.[13] The hearing on them should be on affidavits unless it is necessary that they be referred to an examiner.[14]

Non-prejudicial irregularities will not authorize the setting aside of a sale.[15] Inadequacy of price is not a ground.[16] Great inadequacy together with slight circumstances of unfairness will raise a presumption of fraud,[17] unless so great as to shock the conscience.[18]

Objections to confirmation of sale must be presented below to be considered on appeal.[19] A bill in equity will not lie to set aside an order of confirmation which was entered into in open court by agreement of counsel for both parties.[20] Limitations of actions to recover real estate sold on execution apply to foreclosure sales in some jurisdictions.[21] On reversal of a decree of foreclosure, defendant is entitled to have the sale set aside.[22] A sale is not set aside by an order vacating the judgment as to the owner of the equity of redemption only.[23]

Rights of purchaser.[24]—A mortgagee who becomes purchaser is not vested with the legal title by the sale.[25] The purchaser acquires the title that was passed by the mortgage or deed of trust without any limitations that may be attempted to be put on such title by mere notice given at the foreclosure sale.[26] He acquires the entire interest of all parties unless the decree otherwise stipulates,[27] and is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.[28] An easement in favor of the premises, created after execution of a mortgage, passes.[29] Whether property is fixtures becomes immaterial where it is agreed that they shall not pass by the mortgage.[30]

The purchaser who enters under a void or reversible sale will be regarded as a mortgagee in possession.[31] He may be allowed for improvements.[32] Where a mortgagee by stifling bidding secures property at less than its value, profits derived from him on a resale soon after may be applied to the mortgage debt,[33] or if the appellee purchases and takes possession, the supreme court on reversal should authorize proper proceedings to be taken for an accounting as to rents and profits and for restitution.[34]

An omission of part of the premises from the foreclosure suit cannot be cured by a bill to amend the original bill by adding a proper description and for a deed in accordance.[35]

A sale on a judgment rendered on a void mortgage confers no title.[36]

The certificate of purchase conveys no title, only an equity.[37] It becomes void on failure to take a deed within the period prescribed by statute. It is immaterial that the purchaser be in possession,[38] and such possession will not work an estoppel as against a grantee of the mortgagor.[39]

Deed.—The purchaser does not, in some jurisdictions, acquire title until he takes a sheriff's deed.[40] He may quitclaim and his grantee receive the deed.[41]

41. McLean v. McCormick [Neb.] 93 N. W.

The sheriff's deed under certain statutes may be made previous to an order of the court approving the sale.[42] Error in the recitals in the deed may be corrected by the sheriff where the proceedings are regular.[43]

Possession and restitution.—Where foreclosure is in equity, the court may issue a writ of assistance to put the purchaser into possession.[44] The writ will not issue from a judge at chambers.[45] In Florida it will not issue until the decree is signed and recorded.[46]

Invalidity of a mortgage cannot be asserted in defense to ejectment by the purchaser at foreclosure,[47] though irregularities in the sale may.[48]

In an action to recover possession, the purchaser is not entitled to a receiver of rents and profits as against a transferee of the owner of the equity of redemption, where the mortgage does not pledge the rents and profits and it does not appear that the mortgagor is insolvent or the property is insufficient security.[49]

An order of restitution of the property sold may be had only in a proceeding to which the purchaser is a party.[50]

Where the mortgagee becomes the purchaser, the mortgagor cannot bring ejectment, on the ground that the decree was defective for lack of a necessary party defendant, without paying the mortgage debt.[51]

(§ 4) F. Deficiency and liability therefor.[52] The repeal of a statute providing for the rendering of a deficiency judgment does not affect cases pending,[53] or rights existing under mortgages executed prior thereto.[54] If statutes provide that after foreclosure no proceedings on the mortgage debt may be had, such proceedings cannot be maintained in another state.[55] A maker of a note and mortgage may take it by assignment and obtain a deficiency judgment against his co-makers and against vendees who assumed the note and mortgage.[56]

Persons liable.—The original debtor[57] or his heirs,[58] or a promisor by collateral agreement,[59] e. g., an agreement to assume,[60] may be liable.

The mortgagor may relieve himself from liability for a deficiency resulting from waste of the property by a transferee by notice to the mortgagee to foreclose promptly.[61]

Defenses.—Representations to the maker that he was assuming no personal liability may be a defense,[62] also delay in proceeding against the estate of the deceased mortgagor,[63] and acts of the mortgagee to prevent redemption or a proper defense on foreclosure;[64] and if the makers no longer held the equity of redemption at the time of sale, they may show that an insufficient price was realized.[65] Only such defenses as accrue after entry of judgment on a note can be interposed against a deficiency judgment entered after the coming in of the report of sale of mortgaged premises.[66]

On cancellation of the mortgages on account of the mental incapacity of the mortgagor there being also a plea of fraud and failure of consideration, personal judgment should not be entered against the mortgagor's estate though the defense was not asserted by the administrator but only by the widow and heirs.[67] Waste by the mortgagee in possession may be counterclaimed.[68] An application by the assignee of a second mortgage for leave to sue for a deficiency will not be overcome by statements of the assignor that he had been informed that personal judgment would not be sought against him on foreclosure of the second mortgage and that he was released from his guaranty of such mortgage by failure to make him a party to foreclose the first mortgage.[69]

Sufficiency of process, pleadings, and decree.—Service of process on a trustee holding the legal title to the mortgaged property, while perhaps sufficient to authorize a decree of foreclosure binding the beneficiary, will not authorize a personal judgment against the beneficiary.[70] A defendant against whom a deficiency judgment has been rendered cannot complain of failure to serve a co-defendant.[71]

If a personal judgment is sought against a subsequent grantee, the facts showing his liability must be pleaded.[72] A prayer for a decree for the amount found due will authorize the court, on finding for defendant on a cross bill denying the validity of the mortgage, to render a personal judgment for the debt, and decree that the deed be set aside on payment.[73]

A decree finding that one of the defendants assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage debt is sufficient to support a deficiency judgment for him.[74] Where it is sought to foreclose as against a grantee of the mortgaged property and to obtain a personal judgment, the deed of conveyance need not be reformed, though the grantee's name does not appear therein, if the grantee is otherwise sufficiently identified.[75]

Procedure after sale.—The liability of defendants to a deficiency judgment may be properly litigated after sale,[76] for any unsatisfied balance.[77] The right to a personal judgment may be fixed by the original decree and the amount left undetermined,[78] but in Nebraska, judgment may be rendered only after the mortgaged property has been exhausted, and entered only after the coming in of the report of sale and the affirmance thereof.[79] Where the master reports a deficiency, a decree may be entered therefor,[80] but judgment need not be rendered at once on the coming in of the report of sale.[81]

Application may, in some states, be by motion and notice and not by verified petition and service of process.[82] Where transferees of the premises have assumed two mortgages, their liability for a deficiency cannot be determined in an action by a second mortgagee to which the first is not made a party.[83]

The burden is on the mortgagee, seeking to establish a wife's liability for a deficiency, to establish her disputed execution of the mortgage with her husband.[84]

(§ 4) G. Receivership in foreclosure.—The appointment of a receiver is to be regarded as an equitable remedy and not a legal right.[85] It is not confined to a statutory right.[86] It is discretionary[87] where the rents and profits are pledged,[88] though the mortgage provide for appointment.[89] The appointment may be without regard to the mortgagor's solvency.[90]

Where rents and profits are not pledged, the premises must be shown to be inadequate security or the mortgagor to be insolvent,[91] unless the statute prescribes grounds.[92]

The mortgagee may have a receiver though there is a statutory provision for sequestration of the property.[93] The fact that a tenant is in possession under a void lease is no objection to the appointment of a receiver, nor the fact that under the mortgage the mortgagee may compel the tenants to pay their rents to him,[94] or that the wife's portion of the property is released, since the rents if pledged for the payment of the husband's debt, being community property, can be reached.[95]

Where the property is a homestead, a receiver will ordinarily not be appointed,[96] except as to separable parts not homestead.[97]

Custody.—The receiver may be allowed to remain in possession in the interim between the decree and the sale.[98] As against a receiver appointed pending an appeal from confirmation of a foreclosure sale, the mortgagor's tenant is entitled to growing crops.[99]

Effect of appointment.—By appearance and consent to the appointment of a receiver, the right of possession and to rents and profits is concluded.[1] The party securing the appointment of a receiver may be liable for a deficiency judgment in case the sale of the premises does not satisfy the expenses.[2]

Procedure.—An order for the appointment of a receiver can be made only in the county where the action is triable.[3] Appointment may be by a decree subsequent to the original one.[4] The petition need not propose the name of a person as receiver or names of persons as sureties for him or for the applicant.[5] An allegation of the insolvency of persons primarily liable to pay the debt and that the property described in the mortgage is probably insufficient to satisfy the debt is sufficient.[6]

The granting of a receiver before the applicant's bond has been filed and approved is cured by a subsequent acceptance and approval of the applicant's bond during the same term by the judge granting the order.[7] Objections to the form of an order appointing a receiver, to the amount or conditions of his bond, or to the approval of the bond by a judge, other than the one issuing the order, not made in the lower court, cannot be urged on appeal.[8]

Disposition of funds.—The mortgagee may be entitled to have the proceeds of the operation of the mortgaged property by the receiver applied to a deficiency without the rendition of a deficiency decree, where the fund in controversy is in court and the contestants appear.[9] Though a junior mortgagee secures appoint-

9. A deficiency decree under which by an execution the marshal may bring outside

ment of receivership, he is not entitled to the funds resulting therefrom as against a senior mortgagee unless the order so stipulates;[10] but if the senior mortgagee became the purchaser, he is not entitled to have the receivership funds applied to the payment of taxes which were a lien at the time of his purchase,[11] and in any event, a purchaser at foreclosure is not entitled to have funds in the hands of the receiver applied to the payment of taxes due before the confirmation of the sale, where the sale is made subject to taxes.[12]

If the property sell for less than the debt, a statutory exemption cannot be claimed from the rents and profits during the period for redemption.[13]

(§ 4) H. Distribution of proceeds and surplus.—Assignees of a portion of the decree are entitled to priority over the portion retained by their assignor though not over a portion reassigned to him, but account should not be taken of expenses incurred by the assignees in protecting their interest by removing a tax title.[14] The beneficial owner of the equity of redemption takes the surplus,[15] and second mortgagee or junior lieners if made parties on foreclosure have a lien on it.[16] Contract creditors whose claims are established after the sale may share in the surplus moneys.[17]

A person seeking to recover, against the sureties of a sheriff, the proceeds of a foreclosure sale, must show that the sale was confirmed.[18] Surplus money on sale of the lands of a deceased mortgagor should be paid into the court from which letters testamentary have been issued, if issued within four years before sale.[19] A contract creditor may move for distribution[20] which should be on notice.[21] A lien holder may bring assumpsit.[22]

Wife was surety in the second mortgage but was discharged from liability by an extension of time of payment. White v. Smith, 174 Mo. 186. Where a cross petitioner holding a second mortgage secures the establishment of the lien of such a mortgage, he is entitled to be repaid from the proceeds of the sale, though the decree so far as it establishes a first mortgage is reversed. In New York, where a surplus has been paid into the hands of the county treasurer, it is error to grant an ex parte order that it be paid into the Surrogate court at the instance of a creditor of the deceased mortgagor, if there are other actions pending to foreclose liens, the holders of which were parties to the action to foreclose. Wash. L. Ins. Co. v. Clark, 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 160.

(§ 4) I. Effect of proceedings.—The mortgage lien merges into the foreclosure decree,[24] when it becomes a finality[25] ordinarily as to the whole debt.[26] The lien of the decree on other property is not destroyed by a purchase and sale of a portion of the property for a portion of the amount.[27] If there is a redemption from a foreclosure for overdue interest, there may be subsequent foreclosure on default in other instalments.[28] Irregularity in foreclosing for interest must be availed of in direct proceedings.[29]

Persons not joined as parties.—A trustee seeking foreclosure in his representative capacity is barred as to individual rights inconsistent therewith.[30] As against necessary parties not joined, the purchaser stands in the position of an assignee of the mortgage.[31] The holder of an unrecorded mortgage is bound by a decree in foreclosure, though he is not a party.[32]

Prior liens.—A paramount lien cannot be cut off by foreclosure, though the holder is made a party defendant,[33] nor in any way affected unless the court adjudicates upon it.[34]

Junior liens are divested by confirmation of foreclosure sale though their amount has been wrongfully deducted in the appraisement,[35] and if their amounts and priorities are fixed by the decree, the junior lienors being cross petitioners, a sale is regarded as a complete satisfaction though the amount realized is not sufficient to pay all the liens.[36] Where a subsequent lien is not expressly adjudicated upon under proper issues, it is not affected by the decree as far as its validity or standing is concerned as between the parties.[37]

The mortgagee is bound to set up any junior liens which he may hold or he cannot assert them as against parties to the decree or their privies.[38]

Junior lienholders not concluded by a decree of foreclosure are not entitled to insist that the mortgage lien is merged in the title of the purchaser.[39]

Where a junior encumbrancer is not joined, the purchaser may bring an action to foreclose his lien and compel him to redeem, and if the suit is by an assignee of the purchaser, the purchaser need not be joined.[40]

(§ 4) J. Costs.[41]—If the mortgage provides for counsel fees, a personal judgment may be rendered therefor,[42] but where a mortgage given under a specific state of circumstances is abrogated by a change in the condition of the parties, a provision for attorney's fees contained in it is no longer applicable.[43] A tender of the amount due less attorney's fees and costs is an admission of the right to foreclose carrying with it the right to costs provided by deed,[44] and plaintiff may be allowed costs though the action is dismissed on account of a tender having been made by defendants before suit was brought.[45] None should be allowed to a defendant foreclosing by cross bill in a suit to quiet title.[46] The solicitor's fee may be fixed by proof taken preceding the close of complainant's evidence in chief before a master.[47] If the mortgage provides for costs and attorney's fees, the holder of a note may have judgment including costs on proof of breach of the covenant to keep the property insured and repay the cost of procuring an abstract.[48]

Services in determining a question of ultra vires in the execution of a trust deed and the bonds secured thereby by the mortgagor, a corporation, may be considered in determining the amount of solicitor's fees.[49] Additional costs may be allowed in New York in foreclosure of a difficult or extraordinary nature.[50]

§ 5. Redemption. Nature of right.—In the absence of statute, the right to redeem terminates by sale to a stranger, and does not survive until the deed is made.[51] There is, in the absence of fraud, no right of redemption in equity after foreclosure by judgment,[52] the right prescribed in cases of foreclosure by exercise of a power of sale not being applicable. Partial redemption cannot be demanded,[53] but may become binding by consent,[54] and on redemption a party cannot repudiate one portion of the decree while claiming under another.[55] The owner of the equity of redemption may redeem,[56] but one acquiring a judgment lien pending

56. A purchaser on a sale under a junior judgment made after foreclosure sale, may redeem, without regard as to whether his statutory lien under the judgment is still alive. Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Maxwell, 119 Iowa, 672. In some states a purchaser at execution sale cannot redeem as a judgment creditor but as successor in interest of the judgment debtor [Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subds. 1, 2]. Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 390, 71 Pac. 454, 648. A second mortgagee who foreclosure has no right of redemption save that provided by statute.[57] A junior mortgagee who is not a party has an absolute right of redemption,[58] and if made party and his lien adjudicated he may in proper cases redeem in order to work out his equities.[59]

The right of the judgment creditor to redeem from a mortgage is statutory and cannot be exercised under a judgment prior to the statute.[60] A demand made to cut off the right must be on all co-tenants.[61] The right may be controlled by agreement.[62] An incumbrancer who induces the mortgagor not to redeem may be held accountable for profits made by buying in and reselling.[63]

An equity of redemption is "assets,"[64] and is leviable in many states.[65]

Time.[66]—A right to redeem may be extended by the appellate court, where it expires pending an appeal.[67] Statutory time has been held not to be extended by the pendency of a controversy with the purchaser in possession as to the amount of rents applicable to the debt.[68] A premature redemption by a junior mortgagee may be waived by the purchaser under a senior mortgage in which case the title may vest in the junior incumbrancer on expiration of the time for redemption.[69]

Amount required.—Statutes in force at the time of sale govern.[70] Generally speaking, the amount of all adjudicated liens and charges prior to the redemptioner must be paid.[71]

A junior mortgagee seeking to redeem need pay only the amount of the incumbrance and interest,[72] but a redemptioner must pay the full amount of the mortgage lien though the land sold for less.[73]

Walsh v. Robinson [Mich.] 97 N. W. 55.

72. He need not pay the cost of foreclo-

The mortgagee is not entitled to compensation for improvements other than necessary to keep the premises in repair, on redemption, and the rule extends to the administrator of the mortgagee,[74] and it is held that one buying with notice of the rights of a junior mortgagee to redeem cannot claim compensation for improvements.[75]

A holder of a certificate of purchase at foreclosure who pays taxes does so as a volunteer, and cannot recover them from a redemptioner.[76]

The presumption is that a sum deposited for redemption is sufficient to cover a fee for the recording of the certificate of redemption.[77]

Mode of redemption.—The tender must be definite,[78] and the redemptive acts substantially regular.[79]

The certificate of redemption need not state in what capacity redemption was made.[80] After the lapse of many years the legality of the redemption may be established by the testimony of the sheriff issuing the certificate of redemption, together with that of the attorney for the redemptioner.[81]

Junior lienholders, who do not attempt to redeem from the foreclosure of a senior mortgage, are not in a position to challenge the regularity of a redemption by other junior encumbrancers,[82] nor are they prejudiced by the fact that the sheriff's deed is issued to the redemptioner who is a junior encumbrancer rather than to the purchaser at the sale.[83]

Action to redeem must be seasonable,[84] and a bill to redeem after the statutory time cannot be sustained where it discloses a fraudulent attempt on the part of complainants to defeat the claims of other creditors.[85] An action for redemption on the ground of a promise to allow such redemption is not for fraud.[86] An objection to the amount stated in the complaint as requisite to redemption by the junior encumbrancer cannot be raised by demurrer.[87]

Though a second mortgagee has obtained an assignment of the first, its lien is not extinguished by his purchase of the property for the amount due on the second mortgage, and the mortgages should be treated as separate in an action to compel an equitable redemption, though they were executed at the same time.[88]

One tenant in common who brings an action to redeem is entitled to recover the entire balance found due on account of surplus rents and profits.[89]

Effect.—A mortgagee waives all legal defects in procedure by accepting and retaining the full amount of redemption money.[90] A mortgagor who redeems cannot question the validity of a provision that on foreclosure for an instalment, sale shall be subject to the principal remaining due.[91] In California, the grantee of a devisee of the mortgagor is not regarded as a redemptioner entitled to a deed without resale.[92]

A judgment creditor, party to foreclosure, cannot reach the premises by execution after redemption by a person other than the judgment debtor.[93]

Where a decree of foreclosure of a second lien is severable, a redemption by one of the decree creditors from a prior mortgage sale does not inure to the benefit of the rest.[94]

A junior judgment creditor who redeems from a prior mortgage foreclosure sale becomes subrogated to all the rights possessed by the prior mortgagee who was the purchaser, if no further redemptions are made within the statutory period.[95]

On redemption from a junior encumbrancer who has redeemed, the redemptioner is not bound by an agreement of which he has no knowledge, made by the junior encumbrancer to pay an intervening lien.[96]

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.[1]

§ 1. Status and regulation.—A corporation has no legal existence beyond the sovereignty where created.[2] The recognition of its contracts[3] and permission to it to carry on business in other states rest on the comity existing among the states which may be modified or withdrawn under statutes enacted in pursuance to the organic law unless the modification or withdrawal conflicts with the federal constitution.[4] Statutes conferring on foreign corporations the privileges conferred by general local laws do not make them local corporations.[5]

Right of residents to incorporate out of state.—A foreign incorporation by

90. MacGregor v. Pierce [S. D.] 95 N. W. 281.

91. Neb. L. & T. Co. v. Haskell [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1045.

92. Code Civ. Proc. § 703. He is not in such redemption entitled to a decree requiring other devisees to pay their share of the sum required in 60 days. Warner Bros. Co. v. Freud [Cal.] 72 Pac. 345.

93. Redemption by one to whom a mortgagor had conveyed before foreclosure was begun but whose deed was not recorded until afterward. Williams v. Wilson, 42 Or. 299, 70 Pac. 1031.

94. Morava v. Bonner, 205 Ill. 321.

95. Comp. Laws 1887, §§ 5151-5154, 4339, 5421, 5423. MacGregor v. Pierce [S. D.] 95 N. W. 281.

1. All questions not arising from foreign incorporation are treated in article "Corporations." See Railroads; Building and Loan Associations; Insurance; for questions peculiar to foreign corporations of peculiar nature. For taxation of foreign corporations, see Taxation.

2. Chapman v. Hallwood Cash Register Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 969.

3. Which will not be extended where the powers of the corporation or their exercise are prejudicial to the interests or repugnant to the policy of the state. Chapman v. Hallwood Cash Register Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 969.

4. State v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 La. 180.

5. Especially where the act provides that it shall not limit the rights of the corporation under its charter of the foreign state, and does not intimate an intent to create a corporation, although it authorizes a consolidation with other corporations into a general corporation under a new name [Acts Ala. 1892-93, p. 454]. Goodloe v. Tenn. C., I. & R. Co., 117 Fed. 348.

residents of the state to secure the benefit of more favorable laws can be complained of only by the state.[6]

Statutory provisions.—A statute prescribing the terms on which foreign corporations may do business is not invalidated by the fact that it also makes a possible invalid provision as to partnerships, if the provisions are clearly severable.[7] An act requiring the filing of articles of incorporation with the secretary of state does not repeal an act requiring the designation of a person for service of process as a condition to the maintenance or defense of an action in the state courts.[8] A statute conferring mechanic's liens on the property of foreign corporations is not repealed by a general revising act unless expressly referred to and comprehended within the title of the act.[9]

Constitutionality of statutes.[10]—Regulations of the doing of business must not conflict with interstate commerce,[11] though corporations engaged in such commerce may be regulated as to intra state acts.[12] Statutes may be saved from invalidity by local construction.[13]

Equal protection of laws is not denied by statutes imposing the conditions upon which corporations may do business within a state,[14] nor do they deny the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states.[15]

The obligation of contracts is not impaired by statutes making contracts entered into by a foreign corporation before compliance with their provisions void, where sought to be enforced by the corporation, but valid against it.[16]

Retroactive effect of statutes.—Statutes prescribing the conditions on which foreign corporations shall do business are not applicable to contracts previously entered into,[17] but a prohibition of the doing of business after a statute goes into effect is not retroactive with regard to that business, though done in pursuance of an earlier contract.[18]

6. A foreign corporation is entitled to invoke the laws of the state for the protection of large property interests, though but one of its incorporators was a resident of the state of incorporation. Cumberland Tel. Co. v. Louisville Home Tel. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1676, 72 S. W. 4.

7. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 1770b, 4978, in so far as it requires a filing of a copy of the charter with the secretary of state. Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611.

8. Act March 8, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 108, c. 93) does not repeal act March 17, 1899 (St. 1899, p. 111, c. 94). Keystone Driller Co. v. Superior Ct., 138 Cal. 738, 72 Pac. 398.

9. Comp. Laws 1897, § 5472, is not repealed by Pub. Laws (Act 1877 No. 113) since the title thereof limits its effect to domestic corporations, it being "to revise the laws providing for the incorporation * * * and to fix the duties and liabilities of such corporations." Bullock Mfg. Co. v. Sunday Lake Iron Min. Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 611.

10. See Commerce for complete treatment of this question of interference with interstate commerce.

11. Foreign corporations lacking a permit to do business may be sued on a note for the price of machinery, if the transaction was one of interstate commerce. Lane & Bodley Co. v. City Elec. L. & W. W. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 425. Rev. St. §§ 1025, 1026, requiring filing of a copy of the charter and obtaining of a certificate from the secretary of state, is not a regulation of interstate commerce. Fay Fruit Co. v. McKinney [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 160.

12. License tax on the instruments of a non-resident telephone corporation used within the state. State v. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co., 27 Mont. 394, 71 Pac. 311. License on telegraph poles and wires. Western Union Tel. Co. v. New Hope, 187 U. S. 419. The fact that business under a contract by a foreign corporation may extend beyond the limits of the state, does not relieve it from the operation of Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 1770b, 4978, requiring the filing of a copy of the charter with the secretary of the state. Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611.

13. A franchise fee required of foreign corporations may be sustained if construed to have no application to foreign corporations whose business relates entirely to interstate commerce [Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8574]. Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co. (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 239.

14. Pollock v. German F. Ins. Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 436. License tax. State v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 La. 180.

15. State v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 La. 180.

16. Though the statute does not go into effect until after the contract is made, and especially where enacted before the making thereof. Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611.

17. Laws 1889, p. 68, c. 69. Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Howe [Minn.] 94 N. W. 723. Pub. Laws, c. 980, amending Gen. Laws, c. 253, § 36. MacLeod v. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 24 R. I. 500.

Conditions.[19]—A judgment for tort is not a contract, enforcement of which is denied on failure to comply with regulations.[20] Congress has power to adjust the rates of foreign telephone corporations in the District of Columbia.[21] The corporation may be a "merchant" subject to license.[22] The question of whether a corporation is transacting or carrying on business within the state may be a question of fact.[23] Particular decisions are grouped in the notes.[24]

Effect of failure to comply with statutes.—Unless expressly provided by statute, failure to comply with conditions for doing business renders a corporation's contracts void.[25] Certain states hold that one contracting with a foreign corporation cannot assert such failure.[26] Notes payable to it may be enforced by a bona fide holder.[27]

Mandamus.—Compliance with a statute requiring foreign corporations maintaining an office in the state to keep a stock book open for stockholders' inspection

19. In Tenn. Acts 1895, p. 123, c. 81, § 1, is regarded as superseding Acts 1891, p. 264, c. 122, § 2, and abstracts of charters are no longer required to be filed in each county in which the corporation desires to do business. Nichols, etc., Co. v. Loyd [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 911.

20. MacLeod v. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 24 R. I. 500.

21. Though entirely insufficient to meet the necessary expenses of the services to be performed. Manning v. Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co., 18 App. D. C. 191 (the Supreme Court of the United States reversing this decree on other grounds, expresses no opinion as to the constitutionality of such a regulation. Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 238).

22. Corporation having an agent within the state in charge of goods used to fill contracts of sale made by its salesmen and other sales by the corporation itself. American S. & W. Co. v. Speed [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 1037.

23. Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. The Fred W. Wolf Co. (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 239.

24. Transactions held within regulatory statutes: The buying of timber and lumber within the state and shipping it out [Rev. St. 1899, § 1024]. Chicago M. & L. Co. v. Sims [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 128. The entering into a contract to manage a factory within the state and to furnish a superintendent therefor [Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 1770b, 4978]. Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611. Where before entering into a contract the corporation did not register for the service of process, it cannot enforce its contract [Act Apr. 22, 1874 (Pub. Laws 108)]. Delaware River Q. & C. Co. v. Bethlehem & N. Pass. R. Co., 204 Pa. 22. The making of a loan by a building and loan association and the taking of a note and mortgage is a doing of business within the state, necessitating the appointment of an agent for service of process, under Alabama Const. art. 14 and Alabama Code 1896, §§ 1316, 1318, 1319, though it is contended that the note and mortgage were drawn and payable in the state of incorporation, and only those acts which the borrower was required to do as a condition precedent to the loan were performed in Alabama. Chattanooga Nat. B. & L. Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 47 Law. Ed. 870. An exception that a regulating statute shall not apply to drummers or traveling salesmen soliciting business within the state for foreign corporations which are entirely non-resident, is not applicable where the corporation maintains a general agent with an office in the state and ships its commodities into the state to itself, and they are exhibited and sold in the car by the agent. Fay Fruit Co. v. McKinney [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 160.

Held not within statutes: A single transaction. Henry v. Simanton [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 153. The making of a single contract does not entail payment of a franchise fee. Where not of a character to indicate a purpose to engage in business in the state, is not within the meaning of Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8574. Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co. (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 239. The acceptance of a stock subscription being incident to the erection of the corporation [Act Apr. 22, 1874]. Galena M. & S. Co. v. Frazier, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 394.

Employment of men within a state to obtain orders for the corporation's publication, the orders being addressed to the corporation in another state where it had its books and offices requiring a certificate of incorporation for the maintenance of an action. Crocker v. Muller, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 685. Soliciting orders by a traveling salesman, subject to approval at the home office [Laws 1901, p. 1826, c. 588]. Jones v. Keeler, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 221. Employment of an agent to solicit orders, subject to acceptance at the domicile of the corporation and filled therefrom, the agent being paid by commission, (Gen. Corp. Law, § 15) nor the taking out of a fire insurance policy through brokers in the state. Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Mfrs. Mut. F. Ins. Corp., 173 N. Y. 633. A contract with a city for street lighting not invalidated on account of not having established a public office for the keeping of books and receipt of service and not having paid a license tax and fee as required by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024, 1025. Hogan v. St. Louis, 176 Mo. 149.

25. Blodgett v. Lanyon Zinc Co. (C. C. A.) 120 Fed. 893.

26. Failure to file a statement giving the location of its office and the name of an agent on whom process may be served [Ky. St. § 571]. Hallam v. Ashford, 24 Ky. L. R. 870, 70 S. W. 197.

27. Though not enforceable by the corporation on account of failure to pay fees imposed by Sess. Laws 1897, p. 157, c. 51. McMann v. Walker [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1055.

may be enforced by mandamus if the corporation maintains in the state an office or a stock transfer agent.[28] Evasive answers to repeated demands for an inspection of a stock book may be equivalent to a refusal.[29]

§ 2. Powers, contracts, stock subscriptions, and assessments; liability of officers.—As a general rule foreign corporations are not allowed to transact business on conditions more favorable than those prescribed for domestic corporations.[30] The fact that charter powers permitted to a corporation by the laws of its incorporation are prohibited by the laws of the state in which it is doing business will not prevent it from therein exercising such powers as are sanctioned by the state laws.[31]

A foreign corporation, the operation of which is in the state of its domicile limited to particular counties, is not entitled to exercise the right of eminent domain in another state by general statute granting such right to foreign corporations.[32]

The courts of a corporation's domicile will presume in the absence of statutes or decisions of a foreign state to the contrary that the corporation may exercise the same powers in the foreign state that it may in the state of its incorporation.[33]

Contracts[34] of a foreign corporation are governed by the laws of the state in which it is doing business, though, where there is no restriction as to contract, it may make the law of the state of its incorporation applicable.[35]

Where not otherwise provided by statute, a foreign corporation may contract as to real estate in the same manner as in the state of its incorporation.[36]

Official capacity of a person signing the contract may be proved by his signature of a certificate designating persons to receive service of process.[37] Authority to contract may be shown by surrounding circumstances.[38]

28, 29. People v. Montreal & B. Copper Co., 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 282.

30. Under the Constitution and judicial decisions of Washington, a corporation cannot hold stock exercising the usual rights of stock-holders in a corporation in that state, and an attempt by a foreign corporation to do so may be restrained. Coler v. Tacoma R. & P. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 54 Atl. 413. Foreign corporations cannot transact business prohibited to domestic corporations whether doing business by comity or under express statute. State v. Cook, 171 Mo. 348. In states in which foreign corporations are subjected to the restrictions imposed on domestic corporations, they must comply with provisions limiting the duration of corporate charters and fixing the manner by which they may be extended. Hence, under Mills' Ann. St. §§ 473, 499; Sess. Laws 1899, p. 163, c. 89, a foreign corporation though chartered for 50 years must obtain an extension in Colorado if it does business therein for more than 20 years. Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Cowie [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1067. An English corporation cannot refuse the transfer of stock standing in the name of a decedent to his local executrix, though his estate is not administered on in England. London, P. & A. Bank v. Aronstein (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 601. A requirement of legislative permission to enable a corporation to acquire or vote the stock of another corporation, is applicable to foreign corporations. Const. Wash. art. 12, § 7, provides that foreign corporations shall not be allowed more favorable terms than domestic corporations. Coler v. Tacoma R. & P. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 54 Atl. 413.

32. Corporations authorized to construct telephone and telegraph lines, are not within the meaning of acts 1880, No. 124, which is applicable only to corporations authorized as far as they may be by the states creating them to carry on their business elsewhere. Southwestern Tel. Co. v. Kan. City, S. & G. R. Co., 108 La. 691.

33. New Jersey corporation will be presumed to have the power to own and vote shares of stock in a Washington corporation. Coler v. Tacoma R. & P. Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 117.

37. Owyhee L. & I. Co. v. Tautphas (C. C. A.) 121 Fed. 343.

38. Plaintiff may testify to a request to go to the corporation's office and to his presence at a meeting of the board of directors in the office of the person signing the contract sued on as president and evidence of occurrences at a meeting in the office of the alleged president, at which those purporting to be directors were present, together with the letters purporting to come from the company's office, and signed by the person transacting business there, is admissible. Owyhee L. & I. Co. v. Tautphas (C. C. A.) 121 Fed 343.

Enforcement of obligations.—In order that a foreign corporation resulting from the merger of other foreign corporations be liable for the debts of an absorbed company, the merger and the law of the state in which it took place must be established.[39] Priority recognized in the state of the corporation's domicile will not be recognized in attachment against an insolvent foreign corporation, unless statutory.[40]

A debt due a foreign corporation by a foreign corporation within the state cannot be attached.[41]

Subscriptions to stock.—A subscriber to the stock of a foreign corporation subjects himself to the laws of its domicile as to corporate powers and obligations;[42] hence, an express promise need not be averred in an action to recover an assessment on the capital stock of an English corporation,[43] and the action may be maintained without sale or forfeiture of the stockholder's share though the articles provide a remedy by forfeiture.[44] The necessity of an assessment on capital stock will not be investigated in the absence of fraud.[45]

A stock subscription, induced by statements that the corporation had performed acts which by reason of its being a foreign corporation it was unable to do, cannot be enforced.[46]

Personal liability of officers.—A certificate precedent to doing business is within the statute imposing personal liabilities on corporate officers for falsity.[47] A creditor may enforce such liability, though not deceived by the certificate,[48] and though there was no intention to sell stock or obtain credit.[49]

§ 3. Jurisdiction of the courts over the affairs of foreign corporations; visitorial power. Remedies of resident stockholders.—An accounting as to an unauthorized issue of stock cannot be had against the corporation and certain of its directors unless the transaction was invalid in the state of incorporation.[50] Charges of conspiracy must be specific.[51]

Injunction.—On a suit for an accounting, an injunction may be awarded to prevent the directors from disposing of any of the property within the court's jurisdiction pendente lite, but the exercise of the charter powers will not be interfered with.[52]

42. The articles of incorporation may provide that notice to non-resident shareholders who do not furnish their addresses may be posted in the registered office of the company and under such provision, posting of a notice of a call on the shareholders for a month before the call is due, and the forwarding of a printed notice to the shareholders, is sufficient. 46. Statements in prospectus that the corporation had purchased a site for an apartment house and was erecting a building thereon. Quaker City Apartment House Co. v. Matthews, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 519.

47. A statement of the book value and not the actual or estimated value of an asset may be a falsification. (Statements, copyrights and privileges, $120,396, and fair market value not in excess of $10,000 in certificate under Rev. St. c. 126, §§ 13, 14, is falsification within c. 110, § 58). Heard v. Pictorial Press. 182 Mass. 530.

48. Heard v. Pictorial Press, 182 Mass. 530.

49. For falsity in making a certificate as a condition precedent to doing business within the state of the amount of capital stock, amount paid up, and assets and liabilities. Heard v. Pictorial Press, 182 Mass. 530.

50. An issuance of stock to directors in consideration of the transfer of patents worth less than the stock issued must be alleged to be invalid in state of domicile though void in New York. Ins. Press v. Montauk F. Detecting Wire Co., 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 259.

51. Ins. Press v. Montauk F. Detecting Wire Co., 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 259.

52. On a showing that access to the books had been denied, that the company had become insolvent since the last annual meeting, and that all the stock was not accounted for by the directors. Moneuse v. Riley, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 110.

Where there is reasonable doubt as to the authority to issue stock under the statute of state where incorporated, a stockholder in the state where the directors reside and the corporation maintains its principal place of business and in which all directors' meetings are held may in that state enjoin the issue though the annual stockholders' meeting is held in the state where incorporated.[53] A consolidation made by a corporation in a foreign state which is equivalent to a dissolution may be restrained in the courts of its domicile where it is not carried out by such proceedings which are prescribed by the statutes for dissolution.[54]

Receiverships.[55]—The fact that a foreign corporation is proposing to take its assets to its own domicile is not a ground for the appointment of a receiver in behalf of a resident stockholder.[56]

Where a receiver is appointed in a federal court in a district foreign to the corporation's domicile, the court making the appointment has primary jurisdiction,[57] and courts of other states making appointments though in entirely independent suits will treat their jurisdiction as ancillary.[58] The receiver so primarily appointed is entitled to possession of property in another state, also foreign to the corporate domicile, as against a receiver appointed by a state court therein, in a stockholder's suit instituted after the filing of petition and service in the federal court.[59] The receiver takes a qualified title to all of the corporation's property within the court's jurisdiction, together with a right of possession for purposes of administration.[60]

On an application by a foreign receiver for an appointment to sell property within the state, there should be a reference to establish the right.[61]

Enforcement of stockholder's liability.—Where the jurisdictional facts exist, a creditor may enforce a stockholder's liability for debt of an insolvent corporation imposed by statute in the federal court of another state,[62] but the liability cannot be enforced in a suit brought in equity outside of the state where the corporation resides on the ground that it is an ancillary or auxiliary proceeding to enforce an equitable decree of the court of that state, if such court had no jurisdiction of nonresident stockholders.[63] A receiver in an action brought by a judgment cred-

Pleadings held insufficient to warrant the taking of possession of the property of a foreign corporation by a receiver pendente lite, it not being shown that they were not in legal fraud, the matters set up as a reason for interfering with the judgment against plaintiff by defendant being such as could have been raised in the original action and there having been delay and laches. 57. Should be recognized as having such jurisdiction by the courts of the state of the corporation's domicile, especially where it conducts no business therein, has no property, and but the single stockholder necessitated by the local law, and the appointment is had in a district where it owns real and personal property. 61. On application in New Jersey of a receiver of a foreign building and loan association, proof should be taken of the proceedings in which the receiver was appointed, of the order approving the contract of sale of the property, whether there were New Jersey creditors or shareholders, whether the corporation did business in New Jersey, apart from holding the property, and whether the required deposit was made with the secretary of state to secure New Jersey creditors. itor to enforce the stockholder's liability of a local corporation cannot, by virtue of a general appointment and direction to sue, maintain an action at law in a foreign jurisdiction against a nonresident stockholder,[64] nor can he sue in equity,[65] nor will equity take jurisdiction to prevent multiplicity of suits;[66] but it was held in one Federal court that it would retain jurisdiction of an action brought by the receiver of a foreign corporation to enforce a stockholder's liability despite his want of title to sue for which reason an action in the domicile would have failed.[67]

In Illinois, the courts will not take jurisdiction of a creditor's bill to fix liability of resident stockholders of an insolvent foreign corporation.[68]

The Federal courts will follow the decisions of the State courts as to the bar of actions to charge stockholders with liability for corporate debts.[69]

§ 4. Right of foreign corporation to sue and liability to be sued. Procedure. —Compliance with statutes may be essential to suit,[70] but statutes imposing conditions on the maintenance of actions do not apply to the defense thereof,[71] or to the appeal of judgments rendered in actions brought by other parties,[72] or to actions in Federal courts.[73] There is a variance of authority as to whether subsequent compliance with statutes confers a right to sue on contracts previously entered into.[74] Compliance is not requisite to the maintenance of an action on

Note. "The courts are universally agreed that, where a liability imposed upon stockholders or corporate directors or officers is in its nature penal, the liability is to be deemed merely local, and will not be enforced by the courts of a foreign jurisdiction. So much is clear. When, however, investigation is made with reference to the enforcement of a statutory liability not penal, a wide difference of view is found. It may be said in general that no extraterritorial force can be given to the laws or judicial processes of a state. An attempt by a state to give force to a legislative enactment of its own in a foreign state would constitute an encroachment on the independence of such foreign state, and would be justly and properly resented. A state court has jurisdiction of all persons and property within its boundaries, however, and it would seem that the fact that the laws of one state have no force within the boundaries of another should not be deemed ground for a refusal by a state to enforce within its borders the liability of a person as a shareholder in a corporation created under the laws of another state, and a majority of the decisions in reference thereto so hold. Where, however, no judicial proceedings have been instituted, in the foreign state under the laws of which the corporation was created, to determine the liability of the parties sought to be charged, the courts of Massachusetts have declined to take jurisdiction of a suit instituted within that state for that purpose. Its declination does not rest upon the ground that an enforcement of such liability would constitute an enforcement of a penalty, nor on the ground that a suit of this character would be contrary to the policy of the commonwealth, but on the ground that such suit involves the relation between a foreign corporation and its members, and essential justice can be more fully worked out in the state to the laws of which the corporation owes its existence. Where the nature and degree of the liability imposed by constitutional provision is undetermined, this doctrine has special force, since it is the peculiar privilege of the court of highest jurisdiction of a state to interpret the organic laws of its state, and courts of other jurisdictions are reluctant to intermeddle therewith." Helliwell, Stock & Stockholders, 868.

a contract made in a foreign state,[75] and a foreign corporation which in the course of business in its home state becomes the assignee or trustee of a claim against a citizen may pursue any remedies against him in the state without compliance with the requirements of the statutes as to corporations desiring to become resident foreign corporations;[76] so it may maintain an action to secure possession of realty within the state.[77]

Substantial conformity with the law requiring reports to the secretary of state has been held sufficient to support procedure in the state courts.[78]

Pleading and proof of compliance with statutes.—The rule varies as to the duty of pleading or denying compliance with statutory provisions, and hence as to duty of proving such compliance.[79] A plaintiff corporation must be shown to be doing business before failure to comply with statutory conditions thereto may be urged against it.[80] The pleadings should state the time when the business was transacted, and its character.[81] Noncompliance with statutory provisions must appear from the record to be a ground for demurrer.[82] By statute, it may be provided that if a foreign corporation defendant desires to place the fact of its nonresidence in issue, it must make an affirmative verified allegation that it is not a corporation.[83]

The procedure generally applicable to nonresidents is applicable to foreign corporations.[84]

within the state may be subject to the jurisdiction of the state courts,[86] but there is no presumption, supporting such jurisdiction that their contract is so made or concerns property within the state.[87] The fact that a contract is entered into subject to approval at the home office of the corporation does not divest the courts of the place of contract of jurisdiction.[88] The situs of shares of stock in a domestic corporation held by a foreign corporation is regarded for the purpose of jurisdiction as the domicile of the domestic corporation.[89]

A stockholder of a foreign corporation may sue in the state courts on account of a questionable transfer of its assets to a domestic corporation,[90] and, by code provisions in certain states, a nonresident may sue a foreign corporation on a cause of action arising in the state.[91]

A corporation may, by appearance and plea to the merits, submit itself to the jurisdiction of a federal court for other than the district of its domicile.[92] A stockholder or creditor who appears by intervention, cannot thereafter object to the jurisdiction.[93] Where the statute of a state provides for the designation of agents for the service of process, and if none, for service on any officers, agent, or employe, an agent without authority to represent the company cannot, by acceptance of service, confer jurisdiction on a federal court.[94]

Jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against a foreign corporation cannot be acquired except where the corporation is doing business or has a business office or agency in the state where sued.[95]

Removal of causes.[96]—Where, on consolidation of corporations existing in separate states, the articles of the consolidated corporation are filed with the secretaries of state of each of such states, the consolidated corporation is a citizen of each of such states and cannot remove an action, against it in one of them, to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship.[97] A suit against a foreign corporation operating a railroad within the state as lessee may be removed to the federal court, since it will not be presumed that, since it has become entitled to do business within the state as a corporation, the stockholders are citizens thereof and no diversity of citizenship exists.[98] A proceeding against foreign corporations in which a right of action is also asserted against directors, a portion of whom are residents of the same state as complainants, may be removed to the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship if the controversy is separable.[1]

Service of process.[2]—In general, statutory regulations must be followed.[3] A foreign corporation may be served by publication in the manner of other nonresidents.[4] Constructive service provided as to corporations doing business within the state will not confer jurisdiction of one not doing business.[5] Where the corporation has not appointed an agent for service it is not entitled to protection of provisions for the service of nonresident defendants.[6] Service obtained on the president of a foreign corporation while within the state may be sufficient.[7] If the statute allows service on the president if it can be made personally within the state, it may be made while he is present on private business.[8] The managing officer within the state to attend a sale of land under a decree of the federal court is not exempt from service of process, as in attendance on a judicial proceeding though the corporation was a party to the action under which the sale was had, and the same is true of a nonresident attorney in the state to represent his clients.[9] Service on the president and vice-president may be at the office of another corporation at which they are settling up their affairs, preparatory to cessation of business.[10] Where the corporation has ceased to do business within the state and has designated no agent for the service of summons, jurisdiction cannot be acquired by service on resident directors.[11] The return of process must show the facts warranting the service and manner in which it was served.[12] A return that the secretary and general manager of a corporation was served is not sufficient if it does not state that defendant is an inhabitant of the district or has become subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and such facts do not appear from the

Pleading.[16]—A managing director[17] or attorney of a foreign corporation may verify its pleading.[18]

A foreign corporation cannot demur to a complaint on the ground that it does not show that complainant is not a nonresident.[19]

Effect of dissolution.—If, pending an action, the foreign corporation is dissolved under the laws of the state of its domicile, supplementary proceedings cannot be begun against it on the judgment.[20]

FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

§ 1. Recognition and mode of proving.—The clause of the constitution of the United States that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings in every other state,[21] requires recognition of judgments of state courts by federal courts,[22] and, vice versa, judgments of federal courts by state courts.[23] The clause applies to decrees for costs,[24] judgments in garnishment proceedings,[25] adjudication of matters affecting estates of decedents in a domiciliary court,[26] judgments entered by agreement of the parties,[27] and orders of federal courts in bankruptcy proceedings.[28] The clause applies only where the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter.[29]

There is a presumption of validity of foreign judgments,[30] and the courts will be presumed to possess the powers which they appear to have exercised unless the

30. Gottlieb v. Alton Grain Co., 87 App. Div. (N. Y.) 380. A complaint alleging the foreign court to be one of record and general jurisdiction, it will be presumed that it contrary is made to appear.[31] The presumption of jurisdiction does not arise where the record and pleadings show the facts on which jurisdiction depends.[32] The clause does not prevent an attack that could have been made upon the judgment in the state of rendition.[33] Fraud inducing its rendition,[34] as where defendant was decoyed into the state so that process could be served upon him,[35] or a fictitious domicile acquired in divorce proceedings[36] may be asserted. The clause is not infringed by limitations on the power to sue on judgments affecting foreign corporations,[37] nor by the refusal of a state court to give a strained construction to language of a foreign decree.[38] It is violated by laws barring maintenance of actions against residents on judgments of foreign courts, founded on causes barred by domestic laws, but not barred by the laws of the foreign state.[39] A foreign judgment is admissible to show fact of lien declared against property removed from the state of rendition.[40] The judgment of a court of a foreign nation, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties after a full hearing, is conclusive on the courts of this country.[41]

Deposition of a foreign justice as to the legal existence of his court is admissible on the question of the justice's jurisdiction, though not the best evidence.[42]

§ 2. Matters adjudicated and concluded by foreign judgment.—The doctrine of res judicata extends only to those facts which must necessarily be made to appear as a basis of the judgment, and without a showing of which the judgment could not have been rendered.[43] A foreign judgment is merely prima facie evidence of what it purports to decide.[44] A foreign court may not conclude domestic taxing officers acting under local revenue laws.[45] Whether a judgment, dismissing an action on a note in one state, as barred by the statute of limitations of that state, determines the merits of the case and bars another action in a sister state, depends on the effect the courts of the former state would give such judgment.[46] One obtaining a divorce in a foreign court will not thereafter be heard to deny its validity, though in states not recognizing such divorces.[47] A limited divorce for desertion bars a subsequent action for same cause in another state.[48] The judgment of a sister state, giving faith and credit to a decree, is not res judicata so as to prevent parties from asking courts in the state of rendition to set the decree aside for fraud.[49]

§ 3. Actions on foreign judgments.—The foreign judgment will not become a lien without suit brought and judgment recovered thereon.[50] A defense going to the merits of the action in the sister state may not be interposed as a defense.[51] The jurisdiction of the court of rendition may be questioned notwithstanding the record.[52]

§ 2. Logs and Lumbering.—Logging Roads (53); Booms and Floating Logs (53); Flotage Rights (53); Lumbering Contracts (54); Liens (56).

§ 1. Protection and regulation of forests and trees.[53]—The authority given the secretary of the interior over forest reservations is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative authority.[54] A right of action in the people for cutting and taking away trees on the forest preserve exists in New York.[55]

Trespass in cutting timber.[56]—Four remedies will lie for cutting timber on land of another, viz., trespass quare clausum fregit, replevin, assumpsit, and trover, so that if the owner brings trover he waives the others.[57] An injunction against cutting timber will be denied where the abstract of title attached to the petition is not in statutory form because it fails to show a perfect paper title, and where no allegation appears that defendant is insolvent or showing damages to be irreparable.[58] For timber cut by a trespasser under belief of title, the measure of damages is the value at the cutting less the amount added to its value.[59]

The forest commission of New York is not placed in such possession of lands by a special statute giving them control of the forest preserve, that it may be sued in ejectment by claimants [Laws 1885, p. 482, c. 283]. To allege that the lands in question are in possession of the commission must admit that the lands under the law belong to the state. Raquette Falls Land Co. v. Middleton, 41 Misc. (N. Y.) 461.

59. In trover. Anderson v. Besser [Mich.] 91 N. W. 737. The measure of damages for the willful or negligent taking of timber from land without right is the increased value of the property taken when finally converted to the trespasser's use but if the property is taken through mistake or in the honest belief that the trespasser is acting within his legal rights, the measure of damages is the value before taking; but as to one who acts on the advice of capable counsel as to his legal rights in cutting timber the measure of damages should be reduced

§ 2. Logs and lumbering; booms and flotage. Logging roads.—A law authorizing county supervisors to lay out a temporary highway on petition of a certain number of timber landowners, to give them access to their timber, authorizes only such roads as shall be accessible to the public from another highway.[60]

Booms and floating logs.[61]—A boom company may select its location in good faith, and bad faith in such selection is not shown by the extension of its business farther down the river.[62]

The owner of logs lying on riparian lands for years does not forfeit title thereto under a statute regulating flotage, where part of the logs had never been afloat but remained on the rollway, and the landowner had not proceeded under the statute to obtain title.[63]

A boom operator under contract to boom logs must exercise ordinary care and diligence according to the usual methods of operation.[64] A previous implied contract with a boom operator for the handling of logs is merged in a subsequent express contract for the same purpose.[65]

Merely moving logs aside to allow plaintiff's logs to pass is not a breaking of a jam for which plaintiffs could recover expenses under a law regulating use of a river so as to prevent interference with logging operations of others.[66] Where a railroad company cut loose a raft which had broken from its moorings and was endangering a railroad bridge, and set the logs adrift in the river, it was not its duty to save the logs, if the means at hand were not sufficient to save both the bridge and the logs.[67] Where a boom used by defendants, located in a dam owned by plaintiff, broke, and on notice from defendants, plaintiff repaired it and sent the bill to defendants, who paid it, on a second break in a new place, it cannot be said that plaintiff assumed the responsibility of repair and maintenance.[68]

Remedies for protection of flotage rights.[69]—A demand is unnecessary before replevin to recover marked logs on riparian lands, as against a purchaser of the lands.[70] Moving defendant's logs aside to allow his own to float past did not to the value of the property taken before cutting. U. S. v. Homestake Min. Co. (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 481.

Where plaintiff sues for expenses in running and driving defendant's logs in the river made necessary because of their interference with the driving of his own logs, he may show what part of the defendant's logs it was necessary to drive and may show that contrary to the custom, defendant put hard wood logs in the river early in the spring by reason of which they would not float rapidly. Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 286.

Sufficiency of evidence in action to recover damages for the negligent management of reservoir dams by a log driving company so as to overflow plaintiff's land. Akin v. confer such a benefit on defendant as will enable plaintiff to recover expenses in assumpsit.[71] A federal court cannot restrain a boom company from obstructing a navigable stream for maintenance of a boom and occupying the boom site, which plaintiff claims as an appurtenance to his riparian lands, where defendant denies his title and claims ownership of the boom through purchase of the stream bed from the state as tide lands, and the right to maintain the boom by a state franchise.[72] An agreement between two parties that one should drive all the logs of both and should share the actual expense in proportion, did not make the latter a partner so as to be party plaintiff against a third owner of logs, to recover increased expense from handling the latter's logs in order to drive the logs under the agreement.[73] On an issue of ownership in replevin of logs alleged to have been abandoned on riparian lands, advice of an attorney to the landowner that he had acquired title cannot be shown by a subsequent purchaser of the lands.[74] Under an allegation of a contract to boom timbers and negligence through which they were lost, defendant's title to the boom was immaterial and it was liable whether operating as owner or lessee, for loss from negligence.[75] In an action for damages for destruction of a raft of logs by a railroad company, where it appears that the raft was broken loose by a freshet and the company through its employes broke up the raft and turned the logs adrift in the current so that they were lost, the complaint alleging wanton negligence on the part of the company, the only issues for the jury were those of negligence, and contributory negligence in not saving the logs after they were turned loose in the river.[76] The question of abandonment of logs on a rollway, or otherwise on riparian lands, is for the jury.[77] Expert testimony is admissible on the issue of negligence in handling log booms.[78]

79. Sufficiency of description of standing timber in a contract for its sale to pass title. Hays v. McLin, 24 Ky. L. R. 1827, 72 S. W. 339.

Application of general rules of interpretation to timber contracts: Evidence in support of allegations of fraud in the making of a contract for the sale of logs as objectionable on the ground that it alters the terms of the written contract. Hurlbert v. Kellogg L. & M. Co., 115 Wis. 225. Construction of contracts for cutting and loading logs as imposing on defendants the duty to obtain cars (O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson [Wis.] 94 N. W. 337), of contract for sale of standing timber. Bunch v. Elizabeth City Lumber Co. [N. C.] 46 S. E. 24. Where a contract for the sale of saw logs in a river provided that they should be scaled by a certain officer at the port but not that the scale should be final, it was prima facie evidence only of correctness and could be impeached for mistake without regard to fraud or bad faith. Nelson v. Betcher Lumber Co., 88 Minn. 517. Where a contract did not fix the time for the delivery of logs and no custom is shown as to the period for delivery in order to avoid a deduction from the price for depreciation in the value, no such deduction can be made unless it is shown that delivery was not made within a reasonable time. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Stephens, 24 Ky. L. R. 621, 69 S. W. 715. A contract for the sale of timber and timber products with a certain time for removal, will be strictly construed as to such period; timber cut after the limit belongs to the owner of the land. Null v. Elliott, 52 W. Va. 229. One buying standing trees with notice from the owner of the land of a prior sale by a former owner, is not an innocent purchaser for value. Hogg v. Frazier, 24 Ky. L. R. 930, 70 S. W. 291. Where an honest difference of opinion arises as to the manner of measuring logs sold and in settlement the parties agree as to measurement, payment being accepted on that basis, the seller cannot thereafter complain of the measurement. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Stephens, 24 land.[80] A parol license to remove timber from lands, without time or compensation, is revoked by failure to act within a reasonable time.[81] A contract for the sale of logs will not carry to the buyer a claim for the price of logs previously sold and delivered by the seller to another.[82] Where a general merchant sold a boom of logs, his agent grading, scaling and delivering them to the purchaser who inspected them, there is no implied warranty to pay for damages resulting to the purchaser's mill from iron imbedded in the logs.[83] On a contract to sell and deliver logs the buyer must be credited with money paid to the seller's receiver and used by him in getting the logs out for delivery.[84] A written instrument by which a landowner conveyed to another his interest in certain timber on certain land, with authority to enter and remove it for a certain period, conveys simply such interest as the grantor had in such property amounting to a license for its removal.[85] Under a contract for sale of timber allowing the buyer to build railroads for its removal, the duty of protecting the property remains on the landowner, so that the buyer is not liable for fires started by engines properly equipped and operated, though he had permitted brush and combustibles to accumulate on the roadbed.[86] A provision for forfeiture of timber uncut at a certain date cannot be enforced in favor of the party responsible for a delay.[87]

Ky. L. R. 621, 69 S. W. 715. After delivery, a contract for sale of uncut logs cannot be avoided by the purchaser because the subject-matter was not in esse at the time of contract. Ketchum v. Stetson, etc., Mill Co. [Wash.] 73 Pac. 1127. Consideration for a contract for sale of standing timber in Kentucky may be shown by parol. St. 1899, § 470. Strubbe v. Lewis [Ky.] 76 S. W. 150. Sufficiency to identify land. Id. Where a deed conveyed all timber down and standing except hemlock and the grantees cut all the trees except hemlock above a certain diameter, they were liable for cutting trees for chemical and pulp purposes, where there were no chemical factories in the county when the deed was executed and no chemical or pulp wood was cut by them until all the trees fit for timber had been cut and removed. Kaul v. Weed, 203 Pa. 586.

Measure of compensation: Where an agreement was made for the sale of a certain amount of logs at a certain boom in a certain year at the market price, and part of the logs were delivered but the seller unjustifiably refused to deliver the remainder, the contract price which was the market price for logs delivered, is the market price at the place of delivery in the months of the year of delivery which were selected as the time when the contract price was to be fixed; if there were no sales of logs at the boom at the time logs were delivered so as to establish a market price, the market price of logs at the nearest boom where logs were sold at that time, is the market price at the boom in question, to which is to be added the expense and loss in delivery at the particular boom. South Gardiner Lumber Co. v. Bradstreet, 97 Me. 165.

Remedies on contracts: Injury to logs sold from exposure because of delay in delivery may properly be pleaded as a counterclaim in an action for the price; where servants of a buyer put into his rafts logs of the seller not included in the sale, every reasonable presumption must be indulged against the buyer as to the quantity of the timber in requiring him to account, where he had ample means to ascertain and keep an account of such timber improperly included. 84. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Stephens, 24 Ky. L. R. 621, 69 S. W. 715.

Interest: Where a purchaser of logs advanced a certain sum to the seller, part of which is an advance payment on logs delivered, he is entitled to interest from date of payment until delivery of the logs and the amount remaining due for logs delivered less any discount to which he was entitled for cash, may be charged against this balance with interest. South Gardiner Lumber Co. v. Bradstreet, 97 Me. 165.

85. No interest in trees on lands not belonging to the licensor passes though they are described in the instrument. Caughie v. Brown, 88 Minn. 469.

86. Simpson v. Enfield Lumber Co., 131 N. C. 518.

87. Where plaintiff's testator had agreed to cut the pine standing on certain land by a certain time, and later purchased the cedar thereon under an agreement not to endanger the pine by fire by removal of the cedar, and sold the cedar to another by contract requiring it not to be cut ahead of the pine but should be cut before the time above specified and that all the timber left standing at that time should revert to the testator, his executrix could not enforce a forfeiture of the cedar standing among the uncut pine after that date, where the testator failed to cut the pine before that date. Small v. Robarge [Mich.] 93 N. W. 874.

Logging or timber liens.—A logging lien cannot attach to logs cut for the federal government.[88] A parol contract for a lien on timber for purchase price and advances subsequent to a contract for the cutting is valid as to parties and purchasers with notice.[89] A sash and door factory is not a sawmill within the timber lien law of Georgia.[90] A lien on a sawmill and products for supplies furnished cannot apply to products of another mill.[91] The right to a lien on property passed out of possession depends on the statutes, applications whereof are shown below.[92] Contractors furnishing timber to a mill have a lien on its products to the amount of labor actually performed; a teamster employed, a lien to the value of his own labor and that of his team.[93] A lien given persons furnishing sawmills with timber or supplies is superior to all other liens not made prior by law.[94]

Enforcement of liens.—A holder of a logger's lien may enforce it, on transfer and removal from the state of the property, or bring a statutory action for the removal and destruction, at his election.[95] The six-years limitation applies to actions to enforce the logging lien of Washington.[96] The cause of a statutory action for removal of property from the state, which was covered by a logger's lien, accrues against the owner's assignee at time of removal, limitations beginning at that time.[97] A law for attachment of forest products in transit is not unconstitutional because no provision is made to pay the carrier for expense in keeping possession of the property.[98] An affidavit of foreclosure of a lien on a sawmill and products for supplies furnished must allege that timber levied on was the product of the mill for which supplies were furnished.[99] Under a law providing for attachment of forest products in transit, attachment may be made by service of the writ on such products, though they are not to be driven or sorted out, and in such case delivery of them is to be made immediately.[1] Evidence as to what property was

92. Arkansas: Laborers cutting and hauling timber to a mill for one under a contract to furnish it to the mill owner may have a lien on the product of the mill though not directly employed by the owner. Their labor contributed directly to the production and the limit of the lien was the compensation to be paid the contractor by the mill-owner [Sand. & H. Dig. § 4766]. Klondike Lumber Co. v. Williams Bros. [Ark.] 75 S. W. 854.

Maine: The statutory lien for labor on logs protects laborers only and not independent contractors. [Definition of statutory terms "whoever labors" and "laborer"; Rev. St., c. 91, § 38, amended by c. 183, p. 172, Pub. St. 1889.] Littlefield v. Morrill, 97 Me. 505.

New York. One who agrees with another to saw his logs into lumber, pile them in the yard and load them on cars on the latter's order, receiving part of his compensation when the sawing was done and the remainder when the lumber was loaded, has no lien on the lumber for the latter portion of the compensation after it is sawed and piled awaiting shipment. Rhodes v. Hinds, 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 379.

Washington: One who has performed labor in getting out logs for another who manufactures them into lumber, may file a logger's lien thereon, while the lumber is still under the manufacturer's control [Ball. affected by a foreign decree in an action to enforce a logger's lien is immaterial in a statutory action for destruction, or concealment of identity of, the property covered by the lien; a judgment declaring a lien against logs when removed from the state may be shown for plaintiff in a statutory action for rendering impossible the identification of logs covered by the lien.[2]

Elements of offense.—Insertion of immaterial words is not forgery.[4] Uttering must be with intent to defraud.[5] The affixing of names of fictitious personages to national bank notes as president and cashier is forgery,[6] though the notes so signed, being genuine, are redeemable.[7] Decisions as to particular instruments being subjects of forgery are grouped in the notes.[8]

8. Orders: An instrument made in the following form: "Oct. 20 Mr. W. J. Claybrook, pleas pay to Joe Plemons eight dollars and fifty cents $8.50 fore I. A. Butler," is a basis of forgery. Plemons v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 854. The following instrument held subject of forgery without innuendo averments; "Mr. Bryant: Kind Sir: The guitar and case the boy has down there is all right. I am sick and in bed and want the money to get me some things I need. I want as much as $5.00 on it and the case. It is all right. Ella Laurence. (Col.) 405 San Jacinto St. P. S. Bonds: A convict bond furnishing both a common-law and statutory obligation may be a subject of forgery. (Where it binds the principal and surety to pay the amount of a certain fine and to treat the convict humanely during his employment and furnish him sufficient food and clothing.) Crayton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1046.

Teacher's certificate: A teacher's license is a subject of forgery. Arnold v. State [Ark.] 74 S. W. 513. An attempt to pass as true a forged diploma or teacher's certificate, is a forgery [Pen. Code 1895, art. 540a, 542] (Brooks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 507) and its uttering is not harmless where presented to the county treasurer with a warrant for wages as a teacher, because it is not the duty of the treasurer to investigate the license. 2 Sand. & H. A certificate for bounty for destruction of fish nets being illegally used, may be the subject of forgery though it does not contain the date of the destruction of the nets if in substantial compliance with the statute otherwise (Laws 1898, p. 1158, ch. 451) and it need not be uttered before the repeal of the statute providing for such bounty, and may be falsely signed by the town clerk after his term expires. People v. Filkin, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 589.

Miscellaneous writings which may be forgery: A writing on the back of a note stating the material which was to be given in payment, is a subject of forgery. State v. Donovan [Vt.] 55 Atl. 611. A writing which if true shows a waiver of a landlord's lien, is subject to forgery [Code 1892, § 1106]. France v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 313. A.) 118 Fed. 699. A prosecution for forgery of a railroad ticket in the alteration of a date stamp, will not lie where the ticket itself provides that any alteration shall render it void. Indictment charging that the date was obliterated and erased is insufficient. State v. Leonard, 171 Mo. 626.

same person at the same time as one transaction is but one offense.[9] Keeping of two separate forged bank notes in possession with intent to pass them is not a single act,[10] but two convictions cannot be had, one for forging a bank note and one for forging signatures to it.[11]

Defenses.—Intent to pay at maturity is not a defense to a forged indorsement of a note,[12] nor is a belief that the act would be ratified,[13] nor an intent to collect a debt.[14] Reasonable grounds for defendant's belief of authority to alter a note is a question for the jury as well as the existence of an honest belief.[15]

The indictment must set up the forged instrument in haec verba or state that it is lost, destroyed or in possession of defendant, so that access cannot be had to it.[16]

If the instrument does not show on its face a complete obligation, extrinsic facts and circumstances essential should be shown by proper averments.[17] The fact that a forged check is indorsed in a name other than that of the payee does not change its character, so as to render an indictment charging its utterance in such form demurrable.[18] On forgery of an instrument signed by a person as possessing a particular capacity, it need not be alleged that the person actually possessed such capacity, where such fact is not essential to the fraud.[19] An indictment for forgery of a convict bond must allege approval of the bond by the county judge.[20]

Intent to defraud a particular person need not be alleged.[21] Intent to defraud parties in a different status may be alleged, where, from the nature of the offense, it cannot be specifically proved which of the parties it was the intent to defraud.[22]

Where there is no statute making the signing or uttering of a fictitious deed a specific offense, it is sufficient to set out a forged instrument in haec verba without alleging that it was fictitious.[23] "Falsely," though used in the statutory definition, need not be inserted in the indictment.[24] An information need not disclose how a note was passed, whether by delivery, indorsement or otherwise, since the precise manner of uttering is immaterial if accompanied by felonious intent.[25]

An allegation of alteration of a railroad ticket cannot be rejected as surplusage, though the instrument is set forth in haec verba, and the effect is to remove the elements of forgery:[26] in such case it is immaterial that the evidence as to alteration is conflicting.[27]

Counts for forgery of names idem sonans may be joined.[28] Forging and uttering may be charged as one transaction.[29]

Questions of variance are grouped in the notes.[30]

Presumptions.[31]—Possession of the forged instrument and claim thereunder raises a presumption of guilt.[32]

Admissibility of evidence.[33]—A witness who qualifies as to knowledge of defendant's writing, and as a handwriting expert, may testify that he wrote a signature contended to be forged.[34]

Sufficiency of evidence.[35]—A confession may be looked to where the corpus delicti is not sufficient to prove without it.[36] Testimony of two accomplices does not show the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice requisite to a conviction.[37] Where defendant testifies that he has authority to sign a note, the question of

29. An averment that defendant did feloniously and knowingly make, forge, etc., and pass as true and genuine, a certain false, forged and counterfeit note, etc., charges the forging and uttering as a single and continuous transaction and is not repugnant or inconsistent as charging forging a forged note. Selby v. State [Ind.] 69 N. E. 463.

30. Fatal variance in the signature of the instrument where it is alleged that it was the act of one person and proved to be his act with others. Crayton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1046. Between the word "labor" charged, and word of uncertain character resembling "labobor" but not labor. Edgerton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 90.

No variance between an allegation that a forged check was sold and delivered to a certain person, and proof that the check while paid for with such person's money was delivered to his son. State v. Allen, 171 Mo. 562. Proof that only the signature of the deed is forged and indictment setting out the deed at large and alleging forgery of the entire instrument. People v. Variance between instrument set out and instrument introduced, held immaterial where the indictment was amended at the close of the evidence to correspond with the instrument introduced, and the failure to set out the instrument correctly did not vary the proof necessary to be made by either party. State v. Donovan [Vt.] 55 Atl. 611. There is no variance where the note set out in the indictment does not show any indorsement and that offered in evidence bears an indorsement made after the execution of the note and not constituting a part thereof. Brady v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 771.

31. Intent to defraud is not conclusively presumed from the fact that defendant affixed the payee's signature to a check, and evidence explaining the act is admissible. State v. Bjornaas, 88 Minn. 301.

32. Instructions stating such facts are not objectionable as commenting on the evidence and need not state that defendant is not required to repudiate the presumption beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836.

33. On forgery of a deed, statements of a deceased heir of the grantor, that the grantor executed the deed to defendant, is hearsay. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. Grantor's indebtedness to defendant cannot be shown though witnesses for the state had testified that defendant stated that he had loaned money to the grantor and had no writing to show for it. Id. To sustain a conviction for alteration of notes as against a contention that the alteration was justified by a course of dealing between the parties. Towles v. U. S., 19 App. D. C. 471. To justify conviction of uttering and passing a note knowing that the names of sureties had been forged thereon. State v. Caudle, 174 Mo. 388. To sustain a conviction for forgery of a deed. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. Defendant's possession of the forged paper need not be shown. Richie v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1077, 70 S. W. 629.

36. Evidence held sufficient to prove the corpus delicti independent of the confession. Gray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 858.

such authority or his good faith in signing it, believing that he had a right, should be submitted to the jury.[38]

Instructions.[39]—On forgery of a deed the jury may be allowed to consider the fact that the acknowledgment was forged, in determining whether the deed was forged, and such consideration need not be restricted to the question of intent on the part of defendant,[40] and where the necessity of an intent to injure or defraud is explained in a portion of the charge, it need not be repeated in a portion instructing that defendant is guilty, if he forged the instrument with intent to obtain the money therein specified.[41]

Verdict and findings.[42]—If the indictment contains a count for forgery and one for utterance of a forged instrument, judgment of guilty of the offense of forgery may on appeal be altered to conform to a verdict of guilty of uttering.[43]

Punishment.—A provision for the punishment of forgery of notes, checks or other instruments in writing for the payment of money or property, does not include the attaching of a fictitious grantor's signature to a deed.[44]

FORMER ADJUDICATION.

§ 1. The principle.—A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, determining the rights of the litigants on a cause of action or defense, is an effectual bar against future litigation over the same right determined by such judgment, and is for all time, unless reversed or modified, binding on all the parties and their privies in estate or law.[45]

§ 2. Adjudications operative as bar or estoppel. A. In general.—The adjudication must be final,[46] that is, it must have been a complete disposition of the main

Where punishment is a maximum fine of $5,000.00 and imprisonment for not less than one and not more than fourteen years, the court does not abuse its discretion in sentencing one recommended to its mercy to pay a fine of $1.00 and be imprisoned for two years. 46. Baker v. Watts, [Va.] 44 S. E. 929. Finality is lacking in a verdict without a judgment (Harris v. Gano, 117 Ga. 934, 44 S. E. 11), or decree vacated or annulled (Lydick v. Gill [Neb.] 94 N. W. 109; In re Smith's Estate, 54 A. 174, 204 Pa. 337; Spees v. Boggs, 54 A. 346, 204 Pa. 504), e. g. reversal of a judgment of confirmation of special assessments the objections thereto being sustained and the city given an opportunity to file a supplemental petition (City of Chicago v. Hulburt [Ill.] 68 N. E. 786). Order overruling motion to set aside a subpoena is final an appeal therefrom having been abandoned (In re Randall, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 245), and so with failure to take exception to pleadings and remedies at law not being available (Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872), and reversal in part with order that the judgment as to certain parties be undisturbed (Stipe v. Shirley [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 307), where cross writs of error from the same judgment a portion of which is reversed and the remainder affirmed remand the entire cause for a new thing or matter in controversy leaving nothing for the further determination of the court.[47] The principle has no application to pending proceedings,[48] or judgments suspended by appeal.[49] The judgment should be certain,[50] but it is not material which of several defenses was sustained in first action if no new determining matter is presented in the second.[51] The rule of conclusiveness does not bar a direct attack on the judgment, as for fraud,[52] but a fraudulent judgment is conclusive in a collateral proceeding.[53] A judgment is not rendered inconclusive by the fact of rendition on agreed facts.[54]

(§ 2) B. Nature of tribunal.—The adjudication must be that of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter,[55] but within their jurisdiction, equal conclusiveness is attributed to the judgments of inferior courts, such as probate and orphans' courts,[56] county courts,[57] justice courts,[58] and the decisions of trial and no portion of the judgment can be pleaded as a bar to another suit. Empire State-Idaho Mining & Developing Co. v. Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 973. An injunction having been issued and tried contradictorily with a corporation a second injunction will not issue when the grounds alleged could be presented on an appeal. Buck v. Massie, 109 La. 776. An interlocutory judgment of a trial judge on an equitable petition affirmed by the appellate court is not res judicata unless based solely on a question of law. If based on law and evidence it is not binding at the final trial unless the proof is then substantially the same as at the interlocutory hearing. Collins v. Carr, 116 Ga. 39.

51. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County, Kansas [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 82. A former judgment based upon a general finding for defendant which does not disclose which one of several defenses therein was sustained estops plaintiff therein from maintaining a second action between the same parties on different causes of action in which the same defenses are interposed and the same issues presented that were made in the earlier action. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County, Kansas [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 82. In the absence of proof that an issue actually was tried and determined in arriving at a former judgment it is conclusive by way of estoppel only as to those facts which necessarily were involved and without proof of which it could not have been rendered. Waterhouse v. Levine, 182 Mass. 407. Where a judgment can be urged as res judicata on a particular issue only and could have been rendered on either of several issues and the record is silent on the particular issue the judgment is not conclusive of the issue in a subsequent suit. Budlong v. Budlong [Wash.] 73 Pac. 783.

Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Allen [Kan.] 73 Pac. 98. Where a decree establishing a will is void for want of jurisdiction there is a sufficient controversy between the parties to support a subsequent compromise under laws allowing the supreme court to admit wills to probate under such compromises though the probate decree had not been set aside [Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 148, § 15]. Bartlett v. Slater, 65 N. E. 73, 182 Mass. 208.

56. May v. Boyd, 97 Me. 393; Wilson v. Smith, 117 Fed. 707; Snyder v. Murdock [Utah] 73 Pac. 22. The effect of a surrogate's decree on an accounting as to matters not litigated and questions not directly passed upon is not precisely the same as the effect of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction and the fact that as to such matters and questions it was erroneous does not create a binding prece-officers and boards exercising judicial functions.[59] Conclusive effect will be given to the judgment of a court of another jurisdiction, as between state and federal courts,[60] courts of sister states,[61] and as between the courts of this country and courts of general jurisdiction in foreign lands.[62]

(§ 2) C. Nature of proceeding or action.—The doctrine applies to habeas corpus proceedings,[63] partition,[64] mandamus,[65] probate proceedings,[66] taxation of costs,[67] and as between legal and equitable remedies.[68] Findings in ex parte proceedings by insanity commissioners are not conclusive.[69] Where alternative remedies are given as in replevin, a party is not deprived of rights under both alternatives by reason of failure to immediately avail himself thereof.[70]

Where taxes were paid under protest, the action of county boards of equalization in refusing to strike the property from the tax rolls is not conclusive in an action under a statute allowing recovery of taxes illegally exacted, as failure to appeal to the board would have barred relief under the act.[71]

An order by a federal court dismissing a bill against members of a firm on the ground that some of the partners were citizens of the same state necessarily determined that they were necessary parties and prevented leave to amend by striking out such names and allowing suit to proceed against remaining defendants. Raphael v. Trask, 118 Fed. 678. A final judgment dismissing a complaint will not operate as a bar unless it expressly appears that it was rendered on the merits [Rev. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1209]. Glencoe Granite Co. v. City Trust, S. D. & S. Co. (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 886.

73. Code N. C. §§ 144, 166. Prevatt v. Harrelson, 132 N. C. 250; Galletto v. Serafino, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 671. An action by a receiver against a stockholder to enforce a compromise agreement for the settlement of the stockholder's liability in which a voluntary non-suit is entered will not bar a subsequent suit to recover the assessment, the stockholder having failed to carry out the compromise agreement. McClaine v. Rankin (C. C. A.) 119 Fed. 110. A nonsuit as to trespass on a portion of a tract of land will not bar action by transferees of plaintiff against transferees of defendant as to balance of land set out in former declaration. Cassidy v. Mudgett, 71 N. H. 491. A judgment on a counterclaim on defendant's failure to appear has the effect of a nonsuit as to the counterclaim and is not res judicata. Honsinger v. Union C. & G. Co., 175 N. Y. 229.

74. Fischbeck v. Mielenz [Wis.] 96 N. W. 426. Dismissal on demurrer. Clark v. Pence [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 885. Dismissal of counterclaim for failure of proof will not bar action by defendant on cause stated in counterclaim. Jarvis v. N. Y. House Wrecking Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 191. Where individual sued with city for negligence was successful on his plea of limitations the judgment against the city would not be res judicata of the individual's negligence or of his liability over to the city in an action by the city against him. Richmond v. Sitterding [Va.] 43 S. E. 562. A consent decree in suit on mechanic's lien dismissing as to a wife and taking judgment against the husband alone will not bar subsequent proceedings in aid of execution or by creditor's bill. Brand v. Connery [Mich.] 92 N. W. 784.

75. Von Tobel v. Stetson, etc., Mill Co. [Wash.] 73 Pac. 788. A ruling of a district judge vacating a temporary injunction on the ground of insufficiency of petition does not preclude another judge when the cause comes before him on final hearing from rendering a decree according to the prayer of the petition. Commercial State Bank v. Ketchum [Neb.] 96 N. W. 614.

76. Lebanon v. Knott, 24 Ky. L. R. 1992, 72 S. W. 790.

78. Montgomery v. Delaware Ins. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 934.

79. Donaldson v. Nealis, 108 Tenn. 638. A decree dismissing a bill for specific performance of a contract for sale of chattel because of selection of wrong remedy does not adjudicate the rights of the parties under the contract. McNamara v. Home L. & C. Co. (C. C. A.) 121 Fed. 797. A judgment that one may not recover against a county on contract made with an officer thereof does not prevent the party from pursuing a proper remedy for services rendered. Gibboney v. Board of Chosen Freeholders (C. C. A.) 122 Fed. 46.

80. Action prematurely brought and denial of relief on that ground. Barker v. Tenn. Pav. Brick Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1524, 71 S. W. 877. Dismissal by probate court of creditors' petition for accounting on the ground that the proceeding was barred by limitations does not bar action by the creditors to compel the executor to sell real estate to pay the debt. Holly v. Gibbons [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 889.

81. Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Portener, 139 Cal. 90, 72 Pac. 716; Hawkins v. Mapes-Reeve Const. Co., 82 App. Div. (N. Y.) 72; Newberry v. Ruffin [Va.] 45 S. E. 733. Dismissal without prejudice by plaintiff after reversal of a decree in his favor will not bar a suit at law for the indebtedness. Kendall v. Selby [Neb.] 92 N. W. 178. The commencement of replevin and its dismissal without prejudice and delivery of property to defendant will not bar a subsequent action therefor. Cinfel v. Malena [Neb.] 93 N. W. 165.

82. Refusal of motion for a reference or an accounting. Gregory v. Perry [S. C.] 45 S. E. 4. Denial of a motion on the ground of timeliness. Allis v. Hall [Conn.] 56 Atl ply with precedent statutory requirements.[84] A decree sustaining a demurrer to a bill is res judicata only as to the precise point presented by the pleadings and determined by the ruling on the demurrer.[85] Rulings of an appellate court are not res judicata between the parties where the judgment is reversed and dismissed for want of prosecution by the trial court.[86]

§ 3. Adjudication as bar. Identities between first and subsequent actions.—To make plea effective there must be a concurrence of two things, identity of the subject-matter and identity of persons and parties.[87] The parties must be identical,[88] and must sue or be sued in identical capacities,[89] but need not in the subsequent action occupy the same relation as plaintiff and defendant,[90] and there must be identity of subject-matter and issues,[91] and the adjudication does not ap-

637. A judgment overruling a motion by a mortgagee to discharge attached property. Bishop v. Smith [Kan.] 72 Pac. 220. An order of a federal court denying a motion to set aside an assignee's sale of all the interest of the bankrupt in property is not res judicata on the question whether the bankrupt had any interest in the property. Cramer v. Wilson, 202 Ill. 83. A ruling on a motion for the removal of a receiver on the ground that he is a stockholder and hence not a suitable party to enforce stockholders' liability to creditors of bank does not adjudicate the question whether the corporation is a banking institution within the meaning of a constitutional provision. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. American L. & T. Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 189.

83. An order setting aside premises as a homestead during administration and granting monthly allowance is a provisional order and not res judicata on the question of homestead. Lloyd v. Lloyd [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1061.

84. Failure to pay costs of former suit. Sweeney v. Sweeney [Ga.] 46 S. E. 76. Failure of action of forcible entry and detainer for want of the statutory notice to quit will not bar action after service of notice. Burkholder v. Hollicheck [Neb.] 95 N. W. 860.

85. Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Scharf Tag, L. & B. Co. (C. C. A.) 121 Fed. 313. A judgment for defendant on plaintiff's electing to stand on his complaint on the court's sustaining a demurrer thereto for the recovery of money due under a statute is not res judicata where the complaint was fatally defective for failure to aver a demand for an accounting. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. State, 159 Ind. 438. The fact that a former action by the state against a railroad under a charter allowing the state to share in profits was brought under an agreement to submit the question of liability will not make a judgment for defendant on demurrer res judicata in a subsequent action for accounting, the agreement referring only to existing facts without reference to a demand for an accounting. W. 511. Principle is applicable to prevent suit against bondsmen of official where bondsmen for his preceding term were sued for the same delinquency. Work v. Kinney [Idaho] 71 Pac. 477. Judgment in an action on an official bond will not bar another action on a different bond for another term, the parties and the cause being different. Brady v. Pinal County [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 910. To establish the defense of res judicata it should appear that the parties and the issues in the action were the same and that the question which it is proposed to litigate again was necessarily involved or decided by the former judgment. Muller v. Naumann, 85 App. Div. (N. Y.) 337.

88. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. v. Hammer, 124 Fed. 222; Bliss v. Ward, 198 Ill. 104; Seabury v. Fidelity Ins., T. & S. D. Co., 205 Pa. 234. Persons injured by willful negligence are not precluded from recovering exemplary damages by the fact of the recovery in a prior action by another person injured in the same accident. Griffin v. Southern R., 65 S. C. 122. Where an action was brought for services, the fact that another action was pending between plaintiff and one of the parties to which action the other defendant was not a party will not operate as a bar. Linton v. Cathers [Neb.] 97 N. W. 800.

Bailey, 204 Pa. 524. Taxability of property—no change since decision affecting taxes for former years. N. J. Junction R. Co. v. Jersey City [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 121; Defries v. McMeans [Iowa] 97 N. W. 65. Separation for desertion bars divorce for same cause by opposite party. In re Heins' Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 31. A second suit may not be maintained against a pledgee for the same relief by merely alleging a different source of title. Shinkle v. Vickery, 117 Fed. 916. Where the heirs at law of an estate have recovered against the administrator's judgments de bonis testatoris and de bonis propriis they cannot for the same cause recover another judgment de bonis propriis against the ad-ply to matters arising after the termination of the earlier suit,[92] as in actions for taxes,[93] or licenses for different years,[94] or successive elections.[95] So an action defeated on the ground of a breach of warranty will not prevent an action for the value of the article sold.[96] The invalidity of a municipal contract as exceeding the debt limit will not prevent recovery against property owners for work already done.[97] The estoppel exists, although the demand in the two cases is not the same, if the question upon which the recovery in the second case depends has been before decided under like conditions between the same parties or those in privity with ministrators on their bond. Ross v. Battle [Ga.] 45 S. E. 252. Where subject-matter substantially identical and new matter could have been included a decree dismissing an intervening petition to establish a maritime lien will be res judicata. The New Brunswick, 125 Fed. 567.

96. Manitowoc S. B. Works v. Manitowoc Glue Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 515; Cox v. Wiley, 183 Mass. 410. A judgment for defendant in an action on a special contract for machinery, the petition setting out the contract performance by plaintiff and nonpayment by defendant and answered by a general denial, did not prevent an action on the implied contract to pay the reasonable value of the machinery retained by defendant, the former judgment being res judicata only as to whether plaintiff performed the contract. Arthur Fritsch F. & M. Co. v. Goodwin Mfg. Co. [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 136.

97. Davenport v. Allen, 120 Fed. 172.

them.[98] A decree passing on the validity of an ordinance will not prevent contest of its validity on other grounds in another proceeding.[99]

Matters which might have been litigated.—The rule as to identity of issues is broad enough to conclude not only as to matters actually litigated but as to every ground which might have been presented and determined under the issues made,[1] and one may not urge a defense which he failed to make when he had an opportunity,[2] unless he had no knowledge of the existence of the defense.[3] The principle does not allow a defeated suitor to raise the same question, though later averred with more particularity;[4] or in a different form.[5] The rule is limited to such matters only as might have been used as a defense, and such matters as, if considered in the later action, would involve an inquiry into the merits of the former judgment,[6] and of course has no reference to matters that could not have been litigated,[7] as where the relief demanded could not have been granted in the first action or proceeding.[8] The rule prevents splitting entire demands,[9] as where

A recovery for a part of the goods wrongfully levied on by a sheriff bars a later action between the parties to recover for the remainder, although sold under other attachments. Burdge v. Kelchner, 66 Kan. 642, 72 Pac. 232. Foreclosure of lien for contract price of removal of buildings is not barred as splitting demands, where laborers have previously foreclosed a lien for amounts due them on account of their work the injury is of a permanent character,[10] otherwise where a nuisance is not of a permanent character.[11] A judgment on the first of a series of notes is not conclusive of the whole transaction, unless it appears that the defense extended to the entire subject-matter of the controversy.[12] The judgment in an action against a township on certain coupons is not binding as to the validity of the bonds in subsequent action on other coupons.[13] Equity will relieve a party from the effect of a bar caused by splitting a cause of action through an honest mistake by vacating the judgment urged as a bar to the prosecution.[14]

When the second suit is upon a different cause of action but between the same parties as the first, the judgment in the former action is an estoppel in the latter as to every point and question which was actually litigated and determined in the first action, but it is not conclusive as to other matters which might have been but were not litigated or decided.[15]

The doctrine of inclusion of matters within the scope of the litigation is a common law doctrine and does not obtain in Louisiana. In that state the statute limits the adjudication to the matter of the demand.[16]

Defenses and counter claims.—Right to sue upon a counter claim or set off is not lost by failure to set up same in action against defendant.[17]

§ 4. Adjudication as estoppel. Persons entitled to claim.—The estoppel may be urged only by parties or privies; it is not available to a stranger.[18]

Courtney v. Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co. [Md.] 55 Atl. 614. A judgment against contestants of a local option election is conclusive on all persons in the territory affected. Locke v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 654, 69 S. W. 763. Where a will devised land to testator's son, if he should return within 10 years, a divorce decree vesting the son's interest in the land to the wife will not bar an action by the subse-originally a party is bound if he appears.[22] The adjudication, although conclusive between the adverse parties, is not conclusive as between numerous defendants, un-quent takers after the 10 years. Connor v. Sheridan, 116 Wis. 666. Where the validity of a note given by directors of a bank to make good an impairment of assets is determined in an action brought by the receiver against the makers the judgment bars a petition filed by the directors to share in the assets of the insolvent in the hands of the receiver. Skordal v. Stanton [Minn.] 95 N. W. 449. A judgment against a receiver of a firm in an action brought by leave of court on a contract of the receiver in the management of the firm's business is conclusive against a surviving partner and creditors of the firm whether partners or not. Painter v. Painter, 138 Cal. 231, 71 Pac. 90. The creditors of an estate are bound by a decision as to the disposition of the estate by a competent court where the administrator was a party to the action. Moore v. Sloan [Ark.] 76 S. W. 1058. In an action by an endorser to recover the amount he was adjudged to pay in consequence of the forgery of the signature of a prior endorser and defendant having timely notice of the pendency of the suit and an opportunity to defend will be concluded as to the forgery. First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 68 Ohio St. 43. A judgment vesting in plaintiffs all title of third persons is admissible as a muniment of title against persons not parties to the action. Ellis v. Le Bow [Tex.] 74 S. W. 528.

Vendor and vendee. Day & C. Lumber Co. v. Mack, 24 Ky. L. R. 640, 69 S. W. 712; Huber v. Ehlers, 76 App. Div. (N. Y.) 602.

Stockholders: A nonresident stockholder is bound by proceedings in courts of the corporation's domicile assessing stockholders' statutory liability though not a party thereto except as represented by the corporation. King v. Cochran [Vt.] 56 Atl. 667. Under the laws of Kansas a judgment against a bank adjudging it liable for an assessment as a stockholder in another bank is conclusive on its stockholders as to such liability. Martin v. Wilson (C. C. A.) 120 Fed. 202. Sustaining a plea of the statute of limitation by stockholders in an action against them on an assessment in a sister state makes the decree res judicata as to all stockholders whether parties or not as to the necessity of the call and its validity but the plea of limitations being a personal one cannot be availed of by stockholders not parties. Otter View Land Co.'s Receiver v. Bowling's Ex'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 1157, 70 S. W. 834.

Landlord and tenant: Where the action of unlawful entry and detainer was brought against the tenant the landlord not being a party is not concluded though he knew of the pendency of the action. Cope v. Payne [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 820. The judgment for a lessor railroad in an action on the merits precludes an action for the same negligence against a lessee railroad, the lessor being absolutely liable for negligence of lessee. Anderson v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 200 Ill. 329. A landlord notified and having an opportunity to defend an action against a tenant by a sub-tenant in which the landlord is ultimately liable is bound by a judgment against the tenant that the subtenant was not guilty of contributory negligence. Prescott v. Le Conte, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 482.

Citizens and municipality: Rate payers are bound by proceedings against a municipal corporation to enjoin an ordinance reducing rates as the corporation represents the rate payers. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574. A judgment effective against a property owner as a member of the general public of the city will not conclude such property owner as to matters in his individual capacity. Long v. Wilson, 119 Iowa, 267.

Husband and wife: A husband uniting with wife to set aside sale of homestead on execution is bound by the judgment. Lee v. Hughes, 25 Ky. L. R. 1201, 77 S. W. 386. A judgment in a joint action by husband and wife for injuries to the wife is res judicata on the issues therein, in an action by the husband for damages accruing to him from such injuries. Brown v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 164.

Sureties and indemnitors: Sureties on municipal contractors' bonds are bound by stipulation to be concluded by judgments against the city for negligence of their principal. Spokane v. Costello [Wash.] 74 Pac. 58. Where the issue whether a widow had accepted the provisions of her husband's will had been tried in an action between the widow and the executor and had been decided in the widow's favor the judgment on that issue was conclusive against the executor's sureties. Frazer v. Frazer, 25 Ky. L. R. 473, 76 S. W. 13. On the issue of the destruction of a certificate of deposit as determining liability of sureties the judgment is final, the merits having been passed upon. Cook v. Casler, 76 App. Div. (N. Y.) 279. A surety in a contract of indemnity against liens under a building contract notified of an action against the obligee and conducting the litigation is concluded as to the nature and extent of obligee's liability by a judgment entered therein. Great Northern R. Co. v. Akeley, 88 Minn. 237. A nonresident indemnitor having sufficient notice of a suit against the party indemnified is concluded thereby. South Bend Pulley Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 269. Where attached property is taken possession of by defendant's sureties they are bound by the judgment against their principal. Parish v. Smith [S. C.] 45 S. E. 16.

Persons not in esse: Where in a suit for construction of a will it is decreed that remainders to grandchildren are contingent and the one living grandchild is a party to the suit, the decree is binding on afterborn grandchildren. Thompson v. Adams [Ill.] 69 N. E. 1. A decree reforming on the ground of mistake a deed conveying land to a trustee for sole use of a wife for life, with remainder over to her heirs so as to convey her the estate in fee, rendered in a suit by her against the sole heir and trustee in the deed, is conclusive and vests an estate in her as against unknown or possible heirs an estate in fee so that she less their rights were necessarily involved.[23] The judgment is binding on withdrawing parties,[24] but not parties dismissed from the action without prejudice.[25] A judgment against one of several jointly liable is conclusive only where satisfied.[26] may convey a marketable title. Kendall v. Crawford, 25 Ky. L. R. 1224, 77 S. W. 364.

Trustee and beneficiaries: Beneficiaries of a testamentary trust are bound by judgments against the trustee. Johnson v. De Pauw University, 25 Ky. L. R. 950, 76 S. W. 851.

Guardian and ward: In re Turner, 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 495. Conclusiveness is not affected by fact that infants defended by guardian ad litem. Fiene v. Kirchoff, 176 Mo. 516. Where rights of minor legatees are fully determined in proceedings brought by them and rights of all parties have been determined a guardian's action involving the questions is properly dismissed. Burkitt v. Burkitt [Miss.] 33 So. 417.

Parties to mechanic's lien: A judgment by a claimant against a contractor is not conclusive on the owner of the property. Taylor v. Wahl [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 40. Assignees of mechanic's liens are concluded as to any point decided in a decree of foreclosure which concluded their assignor. Shryock v. Hensel, 95 Md. 614.

App.] 74 S. W. 81; Citizens' State Bank v. Porter [Neb.] 93 N. W. 391; Bancroft v. Wicomico County Com'rs, 121 Fed. 874. Orders of State Board of Tax Commissioners reducing valuation of special franchises in a city are not conclusive as to the city not a party to the proceedings. People v. Priest, 41 Misc. (N. Y.) 545. A judgment will not conclude one though a defendant in the action where he did not appear and his rights were not litigated and his cause of action would not have been a defense. Earle v. Earle, 173 N. Y. 480. Wife of defendant not a party to an action to have a conveyance to defendants set aside as in fraud of creditors is not concluded by the judgment entered in such suit. Finch v. Finch, 131 N. C. 271. A judgment dismissing a suit brought by mortgagees to annul a tax sale of the property mortgaged does not constitute res judicata as against the owner of the property, who had acquired from such mortgagees before the tax sale, and who was not a party to such judgment. McWilliams v. Gulf States L. & I. Co. [La.] 35 So. 514. A surety not summoned is not concluded as to defense by judgment against other sureties. Bath Gaslight Co. v. Rowland, 84 App. Div. (N. Y.) 563. A partnership is not bound by a judgment rendered against a member thereof in a suit to which it was not a party. Pate v. Geo. P. Wyly & Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 217. A judgment for trespass, against parties who had justified as township officers is not conclusive against the township, the township not being the real party in interest in the former suit. Turner Tp. v. Williams [S. D.] 97 N. W. 842. The judgment of a probate court ordering the sale of land for the payment of decedent's debts is not binding on one owning the equitable title of such land. Stacy v. Henke [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 925. The beneficiary under a trust deed is not a necessary party on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien and is not bound by the judgment and may attack its validity by injunction suit. Fleming v. Prudential Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 73 Pac. 752. The order of a county court for the incorporation of a town is a judgment though not conclusive in a proceeding by the state to test its legality, the state not being a party to the proceedings for incorporation. State v. Mansfield, 99 Mo. App. 146. A decree in a debtor's suit, to which creditors are not made parties, directing the payment of a certain fund to the attorney, by virtue of an assignment is no bar to a suit by a creditor attacking the appropriation of such fund by the attorney as made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud such creditors. Sibley v. Stacey, 53 W. Va. 292. A judgment against two joint obligors served with process is no bar to a subsequent judgment against a third obligor in the same suit who was not served with process or before the court at the time the first judgment was rendered. Armentrout v. Smith, 52 W. Va. 96. A default judgment against a tax collector in a suit by a tax payer to enjoin the collection of taxes in which the county is not a party is not binding on the county to prevent action for the collection of such taxes. Henderson County v. Henderson Bridge Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 421, 75 S. W. 239.

22. Elliott v. Haun, 25 Ky. L. R. 139, 74 S. W. 743; Freilsen v. Strader Cypress Co., 110 La. 877; Skelton v. Sharp [Ind.] 67 N. E. 535; Nash v. D'Arcy, 183 Mass. 30; Equitable Trust Co. v. Wilson, 200 Ill. 23; Penfield v. Potts (C. C. A.) 126 Fed. 475. The creditor of a bankrupt filing a claim and submitting to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is bound by the decision disallowing his claim, it not being appealed from. Hargadine, etc., Co. v. Hudson (C. C. A.) 122 Fed. 232.

23. Jackson v. Lemler [Miss.] 35 So. 306; Huntress v. Portwood, 116 Ga. 351; Smith Bros. & Co. v. N. O. & N. E. R. Co., 109 La. 782; Fuller v. Venable (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 543.

24. Poillon v. Poillon, 35 N. Y. Supp. 689.

25. Agnew v. Omaha Nat. Bank [Neb.] 96 N. W. 189.

26. Recovery of judgment against one of two joint wrong doers, so long as the judgment remains unsatisfied is not a defense to a separate action against the other. Cushing v. Hederman, 117 Iowa, 637. A

Taking judgment against one partner on a joint claim bars action against the other.[27] A judgment of mortgage foreclosure and sale of premises will not bar a subsequent suit of mortgagor's widow to recover her dower interest, she not having joined in the mortgage.[28] Recognition and sanction will bind persons not parties.[29] The inchoate dower of a wife is not barred by suit to which she is a defaulting party.[30]

Matters concluded.—The judgment concludes as to all matters in issue,[31] and passed upon.[32] It is not conclusive as to matters without the issues,[33] as where judgment against one of two joint and several obligors which has never been satisfied is no bar to a suit against the other. Booth v. Huff, 116 Ga. 8.

27. Tootle v. Otis [Neb.] 95 N. W. 681.

28. Beverly v. Waller, 24 Ky. L. R. 2505, 74 S. W. 264.

29. In a suit to remove trustees for breach of trust, records in prior suits settled by the deed of trust are admissible though plaintiff was not a party to such suits, he having expressly recognized the terms of the settlement. Belding v. Archer, 131 N. C. 287. Where a husband sues for injuries to the wife and the wife made no objection but testified at the trial, the judgment will be res judicata in an action by her for the same injuries. Harkness v. La. & N. W. R. Co., 110 La. 822.

30. Jewett v. Feldheiser [Ohio] 67 N. E. 1072.

Thus, authority to issue is concluded by judgment sustaining attachment (Hamilton v. Spalding, 25 Ky. L. R. 847, 76 S. W. 517); title by judgment in ejectment or trespass (Holcomb v. Combs, 25 Ky. L. R. 957, 76 S. W. 847); want of probable cause by judgment for defendant in attachment (Anvil Gold Min. Co. v. Hoxsie [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 724); quantity and boundaries of land by partition decree (Norwood v. Gregg [S. C.] 45 S. E. 163); usury by decree in suit to sell under deed of trust (Best v. British-American Mortg. Co., 133 N. C. 20); validity of assessments for local improvements by judgment of sale on first instalment (Treat v. Chicago, 125 Fed. 644); absence of fault of colliding tug by dismissal of libel (Williamson v. McCaldin Bros. Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 63); insolvency of each partner by adjudication of insolvency of partnership on admission of parties (Gray v. Brunold [Cal.] 74 Pac. 303); necessity and amount of land needed by condemnation judgment (Dillon v. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. [Kan.] 74 Pac. 251); fact of possession by order of dispossession (Schrenkeisen v. Kroll, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1072); interest of parties by judgment in partition (Allen v. Foster [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 800); claims for improvements by decree partitioning community property (Moor v. Moor [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 794); right to exemption for succeeding years under unchanged conditions by judgment passing on right (Kan. City Exp. Driving Park v. Kan. City [Mo.] 74 S. W. 979); necessity for improvements by judgment allowing recovery of penalties for failure (Tenement House Department v. Moeschen, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 446); sufficiency of petition by judgment granting liquor permit (McConkie v. Remley, 119 Iowa, 512); taxability in jurisdiction to exclusion of other jurisdiction by judgment in favor of state (Spalding v. O'Callaghan's Ex'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 629, 76 S. W. 189); fact of liability for damages but not of amount by mandamus compelling payment of warrants (State v. Adams [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 497); marriage by proceeding finding an insane person a married woman in guardianship proceedings (Burgess v. Stribling [Mich.] 95 N. W. 1001).

A "right question or fact" distinctly put in issue and determined cannot be questioned in a subsequent suit between the parties or their privies though the second suit is for a different cause of action. State v. Broatch [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1016. The doctrine of res judicata extends only to those facts which must necessarily be made to appear as a basis of the judgment and without a showing of which the judgment could not have been rendered. Tremblay v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 97 Me. 547. An action to determine priority rights in water and construing a deed from a common grantor precludes a later inquiry in another action as to rights prior to such deed. Horne v. Hutchins [N. H.] 54 Atl. 1024. A special finding of the jury on the question of duration of lease being a part of the verdict is conclusive on that issue in a later suit between the parties. Sowles v. Sartwell [Vt.] 56 Atl. 282. Where defendant in an action to quiet title answered setting up paramount title in himself and judgment was rendered on issue of title alone and found without merit he may not thereafter deny the right of plaintiff to maintain the action for the reason that plaintiff was not in possession of the realty in question. Mosier v. Momsen [Okl.] 74 Pac. 905. A petition on an agreement attempting to preserve an attorney's lien denied on the ground that consent to substitution of an attorney in petitioner's place terminated the lien is res judicata of the question of termination of lien. Randel v. Vanderbilt, 75 App. Div. (N. Y.) 313. The question as to whether an ordinance requiring removal of obstructions is necessary to entitle a city to maintain ejectment is a legal question on which a judgment for the city is conclusive. Hawkshurst v. Asbury Park [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 697.

32. Dunsmuir v. Port Angeles Gas, W., L. & P. Co., 30 Wash. 586, 71 Pac. 9; Defries v. McMeans [Iowa] 97 N. W. 65. A matter expressly excluded from the earlier the complaint stated no cause of action against a party,[34] nor as to immaterial matters in the decree.[35] Adjudication of invalidity of contract sued on concludes all recovery under such contract.[36] A judgment against a city of which a lot owner has notice is conclusive on the latter as to the fact, cause, and extent of the injury, but not as to his responsibility for the cause.[37] A judgment by default is conclusive against the parties as to all matters properly pleaded in the declaration.[38] A judgment against land by default for delinquent taxes is not conclusive against the owner as to the legality of the taxes.[39]

§ 5. Pleading and proof.—The defense must be pleaded,[40] unless the facts appear on the face of the complaint or declaration, when the question may be raised by demurrer.[41] Where the fact of the former adjudication and satisfaction of the judgment are brought out on cross-examination of a witness, the matter will not be reinvestigated, though not pleaded in bar nor proven at the trial.[42] The plea should set out the pleadings, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment in the former action,[43] and aver that the judgment had not been super-case by admissions in the pleadings cannot be said to have been passed upon. Hodge v. U. S. Steel Corp., 64 N. J. Eq. 90. A judgment for plaintiff as to the validity of his patent in an action for royalties—invalidity being urged as a ground to defeat recovery—is conclusive. Wilcox, etc., Mach. Co. v. Sherborne (C. C. A.) 123 Fed. 875. Where the validity of the statute under which bonds were issued was not involved the judgment was not binding in an action to declare the bonds invalid on account of invalidity of statute. Debnam v. Chitty, 131 N. C. 657. A decree of foreclosure for the full amount of a mortgage debt is not conclusive on the right of a corporate director purchasing for the corporation with his own funds to receive such amount from the corporation as no question as to his capacity was presented or determined. Kroegher v. Calivada Colonization Co. (C. C. A.) 119 Fed. 641. Judgments in actions for settlement of executors' accounts in which certain provisions of the will were construed but not whether a provision created an invalid accumulation are not res judicata of that question. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. (N. Y.) 405.

33. Patterson v. Mills, 138 Cal. 276, 71 Pac. 177; State v. O'Connor [Tex.] 74 S. W. 899; Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Hamilton County Com'rs (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 82. A judgment is not res adjudicata as to facts dependent on the theory not advanced on the trial as whether work and materials were extra work or contract work in mechanics' lien. Wear v. Schmelzer, 92 Mo. App. 314. Injunction against carrying on warehouse not conclusive on right to sell property used for warehouse purposes. State v. New Orleans Warehouse Co., 109 La. 64. Adjudication that a seller was not responsible for its conversion does not determine the liability of another for the conversion. Loetscher v. Dillon, 119 Iowa, 202. A judgment for defendants in an action to rescind a contract of sale for fraud exculpating them from the charge of fraud is conclusive of all matters at issue and prevents a subsequent action for damages for the alleged fraud. Gutheil v. Goodrich, 160 Ind. 92. Order of sale to pay debts does not pass on validity of debts paid from proceeds. Austin v. Austin, 132 N. C. 262. Dissolution of injunction does not determine that it was improvidently issued. Gray v. Bremer [Iowa] 97 N. W. 991.

34. A judgment in foreclosure is not res judicata of the right of the plaintiff to have a personal judgment against payee where the complaint stated no cause of action against the payee. Huston v. Fatka, 30 Ind. App. 693.

35. The provisions of a decree as to matters immaterial to the issues will not conclude the parties. Stokes v. Foote, 172 N. Y. 327.

36. Camp v. Jennings [Fla.] 32 So. 934; Hirshbach v. Ketchum, 84 App. Div. (N. Y.) 258.

37. Lincoln v. First Nat. Bank [Neb.] 93 N. W. 698.

38. Taylor v. Sledge [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 1074. Where judgment by default is rendered in a case in which the damages are not liquidated the defendant is concluded as to the truth of all the material allegations except as to the amount of the damages. Lenney v. Finley [Ga.] 45 S. E. 317.

39. Elmwood Cemetery Co. v. People, 204 Ill. 468.

40. Willis v. McKinnon, 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 249; Turpen v. Turlock Irr. Dist. [Cal.] 74 Pac. 295; Interstate Nat. Bank v. Claxton [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 44; E. J. Codd Co. v. Parker [Md.] 55 Atl. 623; Carnahan v. Brewster [Neb.] 96 N. W. 590; Bramlett v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 976, 70 S. W. 410; Brutsche v. Bowers [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1076. Under the New York procedure an objection of res judicata in summary dispossession proceedings can be raised only by answer and not by motion to dismiss. Fritztuskie v. Wauroski, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 150.

41. Where defense appears on face of petition it may be raised by demurrer. Fricke v. Wood [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 781; Keen v. Brown [Fla.] 35 So. 401.

42. Persons v. Persons [N. D.] 97 N. W. 551.

43. Dixon v. Caster, 65 Kan. 739, 70 Pac. 871. A plea in equity setting up a former judgment in bar must set forth so much of the pleadings or proceedings in the former suit as will show that the same point

seded, reversed or appealed.[44] Where the court has general jurisdiction, that fact need not be pleaded.[45]

Where the matter is res judicata and the courts have prohibited the further litigation of the matter, the later action raising the same issue may be dismissed on motion as being impertinent, vexatious and contemptuous.[46]

Evidence is admissible to show the issues in the former suit,[47] unless there can be no dispute about the issues.[48] The judgment may be proved,[49] but not impeached.[50]

FORMS OF ACTION.[51]

This topic includes holdings of general application as to the distinctions between particular forms or kinds of actions; grounds for particular actions being excluded to the title appropriate to each action. The common-law forms of personal actions, now abolished in many states, will be found treated under appropriate heads.[52] But however sweeping the abolition, it goes only to the form of the action, and the ancient distinctions between the kinds of actions are in many respects important. Thus it is generally held that the essential distinction between legal and equitable actions is not destroyed by the codes,[53] and the determina-was there in issue as in the pending suit. Keen v. Brown [Fla.] 35 So. 401. Plea of res judicata held sufficient where failing to aver an assignment by authority yet such fact was fairly inferable from other facts pleaded. Abilene v. Cornell University (C. C. A.) 118 Fed. 379. A plea is good in an action for damages for fraud averring a former judgment for defendant in an action to rescind for the same fraud though it does not state that no fraud was and might have been based on the special finding. Gutheil v. Goodrich, 160 Ind. 92. A general denial that the parties and issues are the same does not put in issue a plea of res judicata setting forth with particularity pleadings, issues and judgment as it leaves undenied all the allegations of fact set forth. Small v. Reeves, 25 Ky. L. R. 729, 76 S. W. 395.

44. Hornick v. Holtrup, 25 Ky. L. R. 1030, 76 S. W. 874. The plea is not demurrable for failure to show affirmatively that the former judgment has not been appealed from. Fenn v. Roach & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 361.

45. Highway Com'rs v. Big Four Drainage Dist. [Ill.] 69 N. E. 576; Bailey v. Gleason [Vt.] 56 Atl. 537.

46. Kirby v. Pease [Wash.] 74 Pac. 665.

47. Monroe v. Fourakers, 117 Ga. 901; Cassidy v. Mudgett, 71 N. H. 491; Anhalt v. Lightstone, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 822; O'Connor v. Byrne, 86 App. Div. (N. Y.) 627. The petition and answer in the former suit are admissible to establish plea. San Antonio & G. S. R. Co. v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 782. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a dismissal was not on merits. Burkholder v. Hollicheck [Neb.] 95 N. W. 860. The fact that a number of demands of a creditor against a corporation were merged in a single judgment before proceedings were commenced against a stockholder thereon does not preclude the creditor from showing that liability of the corporation on one of the demands was contingent only and the date when it became fixed to meet defense of limitations. Crissey v. Morrill [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 878.

48. Where a judgment is rendered on sustaining a demurrer for insufficient facts evidence of judges in a subsequent action that the decision was on the merits and not on the form of the complaint is inadmissible. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. State, 159 Ind. 438.

49. The existence of a judgment may not be proved by memoranda thereof contained in the judgment docket. Red Cloud v. Farmers' & M. Banking Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 160. A mere abstract, not being a copy of a judgment does not prove the existence of the judgment if controverted. McGraw v. Roller, 53 W. Va. 75. A party may waive the production of the entire record. Clem v. Meserole [Fla.] 32 So. 815.

50. On plea of res judicata evidence is inadmissible to impeach the record. Rubel v. Title G. & T. Co., 199 Ill. 110. The recital of due service in the judgment by domestic courts raises the presumption of valid service and every presumption must be indulged in favor thereof. Ballard v. Way [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1067.

51. A purely statutory right requires a strictly statutory remedy. Recovery of landentry money. Hoffeld v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 230.

52. See Assumpsit; Covenant, Action of; Trespass, etc.

53. State v. Evans, 176 Mo. 310. Whether a cause is to be judged an action at law or a suit in equity must depend on the facts of the case. Id. The mere fact that recovery of money only is demanded does not necessarily make the action one at law. Schulsinger v. Blau, 84 App. Div. (N. Y.) 390. In action on note where answer pleads want of consideration the action is only one at law. Boone v. Goodlett [Ark.] 76 S. W. 1059. Replevin is not a chancery action which can be invoked for the cancellation of a contract. Penton v. Hansen [Okl.] 73 Pac. 843. A motion for a judgment for money where a notice takes the place of the writ and declaration in an action at tion of the right to a jury trial[54] is but one illustration of its importance under the codes. In like manner the distinction between civil and criminal actions,[55] proceedings in rem and in personam,[56] and between actions ex contractu and ex delicto,[57] are of importance in respect to many matters of procedure. Thus causes of actions on contract and in tort cannot be joined,[58] and the measure of damages varies according to the form of the action.[59] The character of the action as in per-

law. Reed v. Gold [Va.] 45 S. E. 868. Where the pleadings presented a suit in equity in the lower court its character would not be changed because the decree in some respects took the form of a judgment at law. State v. Evans, 176 Mo. 310. The distinction between legal and equitable forms of action being abolished by the code a court may not dismiss a suit for damages for wrongful ejection of a tenant on the ground that relief could only be granted in equity. Browder v. Phinney, 30 Wash. 74, 70 Pac. 264. In Wisconsin one suing in equity in good faith may have legal relief where the evidence entitles him thereto but fails to establish facts entitling him to equitable relief (Gates v. Paul [Wis.] 94 N. W. 55), otherwise in federal courts (Jones v. Mut. Fidelity Co., 123 Fed. 506). The codes of some of the states allow the union in one action of all claims both legal and equitable so far as they are consistent with one another and affect the same parties. Tootle v. Kent [Okl.] 73 Pac. 310. Where the appellate court has decided an action to be equitable and not legal, the lower court must dismiss if plaintiff fails to establish a cause in equity and may not treat it as an action at law and render judgment accordingly. Porter v. International Bridge Co., 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 358. An action for a money judgment by a partial assignee in his own name is one at law. Barto v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., 28 Wash. 179. 68 Pac. 442. And see Equity, ante, p. 1043.

55. Quo warranto to determine title to office is in the nature of a civil action. Fordyce v. State, 115 Wis. 608. Bastardy proceedings under the Washington statute are civil and not criminal (State v. Tieman [Wash.] 73 Pac. 375) and proof by a preponderance of the evidence is sufficient (Priel v. Adams [Neb.] 91 N. W. 536). An action for penalty for an offense is not a continuance of a prosecution under an indictment dismissed without an order for resubmission. Com. v. Elkins, 25 Ky. L. R. 485, 76 S. W. 25. Where a money penalty is recoverable for violation of an ordinance the proceeding therefor is civil but if punishment by imprisonment is authorized the proceeding is criminal. Unger v. Inhabitants of Fanwood Tp. [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 42.

56. A proceeding for the destruction of gambling devices under Mills Ann. St. § 1242 is in rem. Kite v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 886.

57. The action is ex contractu against a carrier for damages to freight (Louisville & A. R. Co. v. Bennett, 25 Ky. L. R. 834, 76 S. W. 408); against a trustee for negligence in the expenditure of funds (Wallrath v. Bohnenkamp, 97 Mo. App. 242); against a broker by his principal for breach of duty (Morris v. Jamieson, 205 Ill. 87); against an agent by one injured by his unwarranted assumption of authority (Anderson v. Adams [Or.] 74 Pac. 215); against a telegraph company for failure to deliver (Manker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 Ala. 292). A petition to recover money spent by purchaser of machinery under a contract of warranty in installing it and in making alterations and repairs alleged to have been expended for the benefit of the seller at his request and for his use states an action on an implied assumpsit and not for damages for breach of warranty. Griffith v. Williams P. C. & P. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 330. The action is ex delicto for damages for deceit (Francisco v. Hatch [Wis.] 93 N. W. 1118; Lambert v. Jones, 91 Mo. App. 288); for injuries to land caused by flooding caused by failure to fill lands according to agreement (Post v. Merritt, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 239); for damages for refusal to return securities on the performance of services according to contract (Scrivner v. Woodward, 139 Cal. 314, 73 Pac. 863). Liberality in the construction of pleadings will not allow one in an action based on fraud in the sale of an article to recover on proof of breach of warranty the tort not being waived. Postal v. Cohn, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 27. Where tried on the theory of an action on contract the case will be so regarded on appeal. Manker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 Ala. 292. Where the complaint for damages for breach of warranty sounds in tort an amendment setting up negligence of manufacturer may not be opposed as converting an action of contract into one of tort. Wood v. Anthony & Co., 79 App. Div. (N. Y.) 111. The nature of the action is determined from the facts alleged rather than the form of action adopted. Penoyer v. People, 105 Ill. App. 481. Where pleadings are ambiguous the intention of the pleader will be considered in determining the question. Southern Bell Tel. Co. v. Earle [Ga.] 45 S. E. 319. For breach of a contract to build a sufficient retaining wall an adjoining proprietor may be sued either for breach of the contract or in tort for the damages. Church of Holy Communion v. Paterson Extension R. Co., 68 N. J. Law, 399. In Missouri one whose lands are trespassed upon by cattle may waive the trespass and sue on an implied promise to pay rent. Gillespie v. Hendren, 98 Mo. App. 622.

sonam or in rem is important in determining questions of jurisdiction and process,[60] and the right to a jury trial.[61]

The common-law distinction between real and personal actions is also important in some states principally as determining the extent of relief to be granted.[62] The principal forms of real actions are treated under appropriate heads.[63]

Where several forms of action are available, plaintiff is put to his election,[64] but after an action is commenced, the pleadings and proceedings may change the form thereof.[65]

Petitory actions under Louisiana practice: Defendant cannot urge rights between plaintiff and a third person. Leathem & S. Lbr. Co. v. Nalty, 109 La. 325. Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title (Wilson v. Ober, 109 La. 718; Slattery v. Heilperin, 110 La. 86) and must declare on all title held by him (Hargrave v. Mouton, 109 La. 533). Plaintiff must show some title in himself. Granger v. Sallier, 110 La. 250. Where defendant disclaims, the owner being brought in is the real defendant (Jewell v. De Blanc, 110 La. 810) and damages for timber removed by the disclaiming defendant being the subject of a personal action cannot be tried (Adams v. Drews, 110 La. 456).

Appearance and joinder of issue changes a divorce action from a proceeding in rem to one in personam. Gibbs v. Gibbs [Utah] 73 Pac. 641. Where, in ejectment defendant answers setting up an equitable defense but not as a cross bill and does not ask affirmative relief the case is not changed to an equitable case. Hall v. Small [Mo.] 77 S. W. 733. Where insurer paid loss into court to abide decision as to rights as between receiver of insured and assignee and receiver claimed a fraudulent assignment the action thereupon became a suit in equity. Voss v. Smith, 84 N. Y. Supp. 471. Where the defendant files a complaint in equity in an action at law and the code requires the suit thereafter to proceed as in equity and stays the proceeding at law the legal matters not being adjudicated therein and the decree preventing no obstacle the action at law for damages may be proceeded with [B. & C. 67. Definition: A franchise is a special privilege conferred by governmental authority upon individuals and which does not belong to citizens of the country generally as a matter of common right. It is also to be regarded as a generic term covering all rights granted to a corporation by legislative act or statute. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 234. Corporate franchises in this country emanate from the government or sovereign power, owe their existence to a grant, or as at common law to prescription which presupposes a grant and are vested in individuals or a body politic. Cain v. City of Wyoming, 104 Ill. App. 538. A city ordinance granting the privilege of constructing and operating a system of water works is a license and not a franchise a municipal body having no power to grant a franchise that power belonging to the legislature. Id.

68. An ordinary railroad company may not, under the laws of Wisconsin, accept a street railroad franchise. State v. Milwaukee, B. & L. G. R. Co., 116 Wis. 142. An ordinance granting an ordinary railroad an elevated railroad franchise in streets many of which contain surface roads and limiting fares and requiring free transportation of city officials is an attempt to confer on such railway a street railway franchise. Id.

69. The laws of Illinois do not authorize county boards to grant franchises to individuals to operate street railways over county highways. Goddard v. Chicago & N.

grant,[70] but long acquiescence presumes a compliance with conditions precedent;[71] and curative acts[72] or ratification by the granting power[73] may obviate defects. Exclusive franchises are not favored.[74] Interstate roads are exempted from provisions requiring sale of franchises.[75] In Kansas, a certified copy of the secretary of state's certificate of organization must be filed with the recorder of deeds of the county in which the corporation is located.[76] Acceptance is required,[77] and where accepted with conditions, the reasonableness of such conditions may not be questioned by the acceptor.[78] There may be an acceptance of a franchise with conditions by conduct without the formality of a written acceptance.[79] Franchises are contracts within the constitution,[80] and only such amendments are permissible as do

W. R. Co., 202 Ill. 362. Municipalities are generally given the power to grant franchises allowing use of streets and alleys by traction, lighting and water companies. A city owning the fee of its streets may authorize their use by electric light companies. McWethy v. Aurora Elec. L. & P. Co., 202 Ill. 218.

70. A provision in a statute regulating the grant of municipal franchises that they shall be granted on the conditions in the act provided and not otherwise is imperative and requires strict compliance. Act Cal. March 11, 1901, will not allow the acceptance of an oral bid, it being the duty of the council to award the franchise to the next highest bidder on default of the lowest bidder. Pac. Elec. Co. v. Los Angeles, 118 Fed. 746. Where an ordinance authorizing the advertisement and sale of an exclusive telephone franchise and another ordinance ratifying a sale to plaintiff under the first ordinance passed at the meeting at which they were introduced the franchise is void under an act applicable to franchises that a certain number of days shall elapse after the introduction of the ordinance before granting the franchise. Maraman v. Ohio Valley Tel. Co. (Ky.) 76 S. W. 398. The consents of abutting property owners necessary to the passage of an ordinance allowing construction of a street railway must be sealed [P. L. N. J. 1896, p. 329]. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United N. J. R. & C. Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 588. There may be no evasion of laws requiring subscription of certain amounts of stock per mile. Code N. C. §§ 1932, 1933, requiring subscription of $1,000 a mile with five per cent thereon paid in good faith is not complied with by subscription of $32,000 on a proposed road 60 miles in length. Kinston & C. R. Co. v. Stroud, 132 N. C. 413.

71. Long acquiescence in occupancy of streets for gas conduits may imply a compliance with conditions as to municipal consent thereto. People v. Cromwell, 89 App. Div. (N. Y.) 291.

72. The Tennessee laws validate charters defectively acknowledged. Tenn. Cent. R. Co. v. Campbell, 109 Tenn. 655.

73. The failure to give notice to a member of a meeting to grant a franchise may be cured by subsequent ratification. Territory v. De Wolfe [Okl.] 74 Pac. 98.

74. Under the laws of Illinois a municipal corporation cannot grant a street railroad company the right to the exclusive use of a street. Russell v. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co., 205 Ill. 155. County commissioners in Florida have discretion as to grant of different ferry franchises for the same point. Green v. Ivey [Fla.] 33 So. 711. Cities in Oklahoma may not grant exclusive gas and electric franchises. Territory v. De Wolfe [Okl.] 74 Pac. 98.

75. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904. An interstate electric road is trunk railway within a constitutional provision exempting trunk railways from corporate franchises to be granted to the highest and best bidder. Diebold v. Ky. Traction Co. (Ky.) 77 S. W. 674.

76. Ryland v. Hollinger (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 216.

77. The acceptance of an ordinance authorizing the construction of a telephone line and fixing rights as to transferees constitutes a contract between the grantee and the city. Mahan v. Mich. Tel. Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 629. A corporation incorporating under general laws accepts the provisions of the act as part of the charter. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L. R. A. 631.

78. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Newport (Ky.) 76 S. W. 159.

79. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Newport (Ky.) 76 S. W. 159. A prima facie case of assumption of power by user is shown by a certified copy of the act incorporating the company and acts amendatory thereof, a resolution to change the corporate name, the order of court allowing the change, acts of the company in the execution of a power of attorney under its name before change and after and the loan of money and taking of notes therefor. U. S. Mortg. Co. v. McClure, 42 Or. 190, 70 Pac. 543.

80. There is an impairment of a contract by an ordinance for the erection of electric or water works in competition with a company operating under a prior ordinance granting a franchise for a term of years (Southwest Mo. Light Co. v. Joplin, 113 Fed. 817; Potter County Water Co. v. Borough of Austin, 206 Pa. 297); if the franchise be accepted and used (Capital City L. & F. Co. v. Tallahassee, 168 U. S. 401, 46 Law. Ed. 1219; Underground R. v. New York, 116 Fed. 952). An unexercised option to buy such works is not impaired by constructing new works. Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, 113 Fed. 677. Where a telephone company uses a street under permission of the city under a grant and has established a plant, it may not be required thereafter to pay for the use of the street as an additional condition. Sunset Tel. Co. v. Medford, 115 Fed. 202. An electric franchise accepted by a corporation on which large sums of money had been ex-not impair the obligation thereof.[81] Regulations in the exercise of the police power are valid.[82] Thus railroads may be required to construct[83] and maintain grade crossings,[84] to clean between its tracks[85] or to pave them,[86] and the rates that may be exacted under a charter may be regulated.[87]

§ 2. Powers and duties under franchise.—Under the laws of Pennsylvania, a company is invested with an exclusive privilege in the street though the act does not allow construction to commence for 30 days.[88] A corporation may not engage in a business not authorized by its charter.[89] A grant to a street railroad company to maintain a railroad on a certain street has no relation to its corporate franchise and may be abandoned on consent of property owners and the city without the consent of the state.[90] A franchise allowing use of streets for gas mains applies to streets laid out thereafter.[91] A franchise allowing the construction of an interurban railroad between certain termini does not allow the construction of a pended in making improvements amounts to a contract which cannot be changed without the consent of the company and will prevent a demand for compensation for use of ground occupied by poles. Hot Springs Elec. Light Co. v. Hot Springs, 70 Ark. 300.

81. An amendment to a charter relieving a railroad company from the necessity of constructing a portion of a road and creating a corporation to construct such portion with powers and duties of the original corporation does not annul the original corporation. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. State, 159 Ind. 438. A city council may allow the removal of pipes from places where public necessity no longer requires them without impairing the original contract between the city and the company. Asher v. Hutchinson W., L. & P. Co., 66 Kan. 496, 71 Pac. 813. Where a street railroad company, incorporated under general statutes, has not obtained the consent of the city authorities, it may not object that there is an impairment of obligation of contract by the construction by the city of a railroad on streets selected for its lines. Underground R. v. New York, 116 Fed. 952.

82. A street railway grant to use streets may not be arbitrarily impaired or rejected, though it is subject to conditions imposed by statute and to the proper exercise of the police power of the municipality. Town of Mason v. Ohio River R. Co., 51 W. Va. 183; Springfield v. Springfield St. R. Co., 182 Mass. 41; Worcester v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co., 182 Mass. 49. The fact that the Idaho statutes term water companies "private corporations" does not exempt them from public control. Boise City, etc., Water Co. v. Boise City (C. C. A.) 123 Fed. 232. A street car franchise is not rendered invalid by a reservation allowing change of location of tracks and poles on application of the company. Shepard v. East Orange (N. J. Law) 53 Atl. 1047. The legislature may revoke permission for the use of streets for electric wire conduits, the right being reserved by ordinance. Boston Elec. Light Co. v. Boston Terminal Co. [Mass.] 69 N. E. 346. A resolution allowing the construction of a surface road on condition that portion of street occupied and a certain distance on either side be kept in repair with a certain kind of stone does not prevent a later resolution changing the material for repairs. Binninger v. New York [N. Y.] 69 N. E. 390.

83. Code 1892, § 3555. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Copiah County [Miss.] 33 So. 502. Pub. Laws 1898, p. 110. Palmyra Tp. v. Pa. R. Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 799. An act allowing the making of contracts with railroads for the relief of city from obstruction of railroad crossings and grade under a plan adopted or to be adopted by commissioners to be appointed, giving commissioners power to adopt a general plan and change the same as to any detail, but denying them a right to adopt a general plan extending beyond the one heretofore adopted, or from extending the general plan adopted by them, does not amount to an impairment of the obligation of the contract. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Adam, 70 App. Div. (N. Y.) 427.

86. Asphalt instead of stone as prescribed by charter. Binninger v. New York, 80 App. Div. (N. Y.) 438. A surface road is relieved from a franchise requirement as to paving repairs by a municipal contract binding paving contractors to keep the same in repair, the company paying its proportion of the original cost. Binninger v. New York [N. Y.] 69 N. E. 390.

87. Kentucky municipalities have power to fix rates to be charged consumers of water [Ky. St. 1899, § 3290]. Owensboro v. Owensboro Waterworks Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 82, 48 Law. Ed. —. In Nebraska it is no objection to a gas franchise that the ordinance granting it does not reserve the power in the municipality to regulate rates. Ray v. Colby [Neb.] 97 N. W. 591. A city may on behalf of its inhabitants sue a gas company for violation of its contract with a city as to maximum prices to be charged consumers. Muncie Natural Gas Co. v. Muncie [Ind.] 66 N. E. 436. Injunction may be invoked against a gas company violating its charter as to the prices charged consumers. Id.

branch road in one of the towns passed through.[92] Under the laws of Kentucky, the right of a turnpike company to collect tolls depends on whether the road is kept in good condition.[93]

§ 3. Duration and extension of term.[94]—Grants for unreasonably long periods are opposed to public policy.[95] An extension of a charter is not equivalent to the granting of a new charter.[96] An ordinance extending the time when a city might exercise an option to acquire a waterworks system violates a provision against extending public franchises without the approval of municipal electors.[97] An act legalizing an extension of a particular municipal franchise beyond the statutory time is invalid as a local or special law.[98] Under laws limiting the life of franchises, an ordinance giving a corporation powers after the expiration of such term is void as to such extension only.[99]

§ 4. Transfer of franchise.—Franchises may be sold,[1] or leased[2] so as to pass rights[3] and liabilities[4] of the original holder. Sale or lease to rival companies is allowed.[5] Entire franchises may not be severed and portions thereof assigned.[6] A franchise based on a compact between different states to be revocable only by the action of both states can be transferred only by consent of both states.[7]

99. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 117 Iowa, 250. There is no implied waiver of rights of a city against a water company after the expiration of a franchise by the passage of an ordinance fixing water rates and accepting water service. Id. The failure of the state at the expiration of a franchise to institute quo warranto does not justify a water company in exercising powers nor prevent a collateral attack denying existence where such company seeks to enjoin the enforcement of ordinances fixing rates. Id.

1. Purchasers of a franchise taking possession of the property and using same are estopped to deny the authority of officers making the sale. Badger Tel. Co. v. Wolf River Tel. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 907. An ordinance granting a franchise to a telephone company and its successors and assigns is assignable though the words successors and assigns do not appear in the title. Old Colony Trust Co. v. Wichita, 123 Fed. 762. Where a town exercises an option to purchase a waterworks plant the franchise passes to the town and the owners thereafter can do no act to forfeit same. Bristol v. Bristol & W. Waterworks [R. I.] 55 Atl. 710.

2. The laws of Georgia allow a leasing of franchises of connecting lines. Ga. R. & B. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64. A traction company leasing the franchises of various railway companies exercises the franchise of a street railway. Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Traction Co. [Pa.] 55 Atl. 762. A lessee of a franchise terminable by either party on notice cannot maintain a suit to determine his lessor's rights under a contract between it and another party without making the lessor a party. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pa. R. Co., 120 Fed. 362.

3. A traction company leasing the road of street railroad company succeeds to the lessor's right to use of the streets. Conshohocken Borough v. Conshohocken R. Co., 206 Pa. 75.

4. A motor company acquiring the franchise of an electric road operating along the same street and changing its power to electricity is regulated by the provisions of the electric railroad franchise. Snouffer v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 287. A street railroad company acquiring another company is bound by the charter of the company which it purchases as to street repairs and not by its original charter, the powers of which it had not exercised. Kent v. Common Council, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 1.

5. The laws of Wisconsin allow the purchase of a telephone franchise by a rival company [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 1775, 1775a]. Badger Tel. Co. v. Wolf River Tel. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 907. Water companies may sell or assign their franchises to similar corporations under the laws of Pennsylvania. Hey v. Springfield Water Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 265. A statute allowing the consolidation of gas companies in the same city having general application does not violate the constitutional inhibition against passage of local laws granting special privileges or franchises. People v. People's G. & C. Co., 205 Ill. 482.

7. Pinnix v. Lake Drummond C. & W. Co. 132 N. C. 124.

§ 5. Revocation and forfeiture.—A franchise may be forfeited for a substantial[8] failure to comply with the conditions on which it was granted,[9] as failure of water company to furnish pure water.[10] When not amounting to a contract,[11] a franchise may be annulled by the granting power.[12] It may be taken under condemnation proceedings,[13] declared invalid for unreasonableness,[14] or forfeited for insolvency of the corporation,[15] or sale of its franchises to a foreign corporation.[16]

Failure to comply with conditions will not affect a forfeiture ipso facto,[17] and a cause for forfeiture cannot be taken advantage of or enforced in a collateral proceeding,[18] but this rule will not prevent a defense by a city that the franchise of water company had expired where the company sought to restrain the enforcement of an ordinance fixing rates to be charged.[19]

8. A law making failure to equip a certain amount of right of way each year after incorporation until the whole line is completed work a forfeiture of corporate existence and a cessation of powers as to uncompleted line will not apply to failure to occupy a short portion necessary to connection with another line in a city—the line having been built into the city in due time. A franchise granted by a township and accepted by an electric railway cannot be annulled by a borough afterwards formed from a part of the township. Jersey City, etc., R. Co. v. Garfield, 68 N. J. Law, 587.

13. In condemnation of a water plant under eminent domain proceedings compensation must be allowed for franchises taken. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185.

14. A village ordinance granting a lighting franchise for 30 years will be held invalid for unreasonableness where the charges are grossly excessive and the population of the village is sufficient to make the village a city to which a state law applies limiting the power to contract to 10 years. Le Feber v. Northwestern Heat, L. & P. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 203. The fact that an ordinance granting a franchise has been approved by a majority of the electors of a municipality will not prevent an inquiry as to its reasonableness. Id.

supreme lodge will not prevent a local lodge from being regarded as an unincorporated association, if it has the sole management and control of its benefit fund.[27]

Where both the national and state governing bodies of a fraternal society are supported by taxes on the members, but neither have any power to enforce the tax, though the state body collects both its own and the national taxes, the national body cannot hold collections as a trust fund for its benefit without establishing that the moneys were collected expressly on a tax levied for its benefit;[28] but on establishment of such fact, the state officers cannot evade the liability on the ground that they have paid it out for other purposes of the order.[29] On withdrawal of a majority of the members of a local lodge from the grand lodge, the minority must act in good faith as a subordinate lodge in order to be entitled to the personal property.[30] After a local lodge has by resolution declared that it is no longer a member of the grand lodge, at a time when there is no dissent to such action, the grand lodge can no longer prescribe rules and regulations for it, so that those dissenting on a vote as to an adoption of such rules and regulations may claim to be the official subordinate lodge and entitled to its property.[31]

Ultra vires cannot be asserted against a certificate on the strength of which the member has in good faith paid dues.[32]

Consolidation of fraternal beneficiary associations must be based on statutory authorization.[33]

Suspension of business.—Suspension of business under the by-laws defeats a recovery by the beneficiaries.[34] The association may sell its property to pay debts, though an article of its regulations prohibits dissolution of the society and disposal of its funds so long as a certain number of members adhere to it;[35] but a sale to a syndicate representing a majority of the members is fraudulent as to a dissenting minority.[36]

By-laws.—Though directors are not authorized to make by-laws, they may be allowed to determine when they shall go into effect.[37] A formal adoption is not necessary if by-laws are in fact accepted and put in operation.[38]

Where the by-laws provide the manner in which amendments may be made, an amendment to such provisions must be in compliance with its requirements.[39] In the absence of by-laws, an amendment need not be published in order to give it effect, the members being charged with notice of its adoption.[40] Statutory pro-

And an estoppel to plead the ultra vires character of such act does not arise against the association by the fact that large numbers of the absorbed association were induced to become members of the first, or that by the resignation of the officers of the absorbed association it went into the hands of officers named by those managing the former. visions requiring copies of amendments or alterations in the constitution or by-laws of beneficial societies to be filed with the state officer have been held not to impair the obligation of contracts, which reserve a power to alter or amend the by-laws.[41]

§ 2. Foreign associations. Authorization to do business. Regulations.—On compliance with local statutes it may become mandatory on the superintendent of insurance to issue to a foreign insurance company a certificate authorizing it to do business within the state.[42] A provision that insurance companies must specify the exact sum of money which they intend to pay is applicable to both foreign and local insurance companies.[43] Statutory provisions requiring copies of amendments or alterations in the constitution or by-laws of beneficial societies to be filed with the state officer apply also to foreign benefit associations.[44]

Privileges.—Foreign societies may be exempt from taxation,[45] or general insurance laws,[46] but they must have complied with conditions precedent to doing business.[47]

Process may under some statutes be served on any one of the associates where no officer is within the state.[48] One collecting premiums from a local branch and transmitting them to the central organization is not a managing agent for the service of the process.[49] Unauthorized service is not aided by the fact that there is a representative on whom service could properly have been made.[50]

Insolvency.—On insolvency of a foreign association, domestic beneficiaries are entitled to priority in payment out of funds within the state collected by an ancillary receiver before such funds are transferred to a domiciliary receiver.[51] Relief funds on deposit in a domestic bank, passing into the hands of a domiciliary receiver, remain in trust for the payment of claims for disabled and deceased members.[52] Resident creditors cannot acquire a preference by attachment of a domestic bank deposit,[53] but if there is a domestic receiver, domestic creditors may be protected by ordering the deposit paid over to him to be applied to the expense of his receivership and then turned over to the foreign receiver on his bond to distribute it in accordance with the local law.[54]

Misappropriation of funds.[59]—The recording and financial secretary of a lodge cannot be convicted of embezzlement of its funds, if it is the duty of the permanent secretary to receive its money, since the fiduciary relation does not appear.[60]

§ 4. Discipline of members.—Provisions limiting membership of an order to a certain religious denomination and expelling a member who no longer keeps such religious connection do not impose a religious test.[61]

By-laws providing that a fine will be imposed on members failing to comply therewith are not self-executing.[62]

Members of mutual benefit associations cannot be expelled arbitrarily or without cause,[63] since rights of membership may be property rights,[64] though the internal policy of beneficial societies is not subject to judicial control.[65] Proceedings in accord with by-laws are due process of law.[66]

Members are entitled to notice and specification of charges against them,[67] but if the member has actual notice of the particular charge, it need not be formally stated.[68]

Charges may be heard and a member expelled on Sunday.[69] If he default, he may be expelled on evidence tending to establish his guilt.[70] A plea to the jurisdiction of a society tribunal waives objections not stated.[71]

A provision for an appeal to a superior body of an order by a member aggrieved by a decision will not deprive a court of jurisdiction of an action to reinstate a member expelled without notice or hearing.[72]

Part II. Benefits or insurance. § 5. Membership securing benefits. A. Requisites. Necessity of certificate.—Constitutional provisions for the obtaining of benefit certificates must be complied with.[73] Delivery of the certificate during life and good health of the applicant may be requisite,[74] or countersigning by the secretary and president of the local lodge.[75]

Necessity of initiation into order.—A benefit certificate cannot be rightfully issued before initiation into a local lodge.[76] Defective initiation is waived by treatment of a member as such and delivery of a certificate to him.[77] Requirements may be waived as to charter members.[78]

(§ 5) B. Nature and construction of contract.—By the issuance of a benefit certificate, a fraternal order assumes contractual obligations which are enforceable in the courts unaffected by the right to make rules for the internal discipline of its members.[79] The internal affairs of the corporation and the equities of its members among themselves do not affect such obligation.[80] Being a contract, the certificate can be changed only by consent of both parties.[81] Benevolent associations have been regarded as mutual life associations governed by the general rules applicable thereto, where their certificates are payable from a fund maintained by assessments.[82] In construing a contract embodied in a certificate and by-laws, it should be borne in mind that the predominant intention of the parties is indemnity.[83] The rule that members are charged with knowledge of by-laws does not prevent ambiguous clauses in the contract from being strictly construed against the insurer.[84]

What law governs.—In an action on a policy subject to the laws of a foreign state, if such laws are not pleaded, the liability of defendant must be determined according to the common law.[85]

(§ 5) C. Charter and by-laws as part of contract.—The certificate, constitution, and by-laws are regarded as constituting the contract,[86] though it is held also that by-laws must be made a part of the policy in order that they may affect its terms.[87] A provision that is not reasonable as a by-law may be good as a contract.[88]

St. § 679]. Mooney v. Ancient Order, U. W., 24 Ky. L. R. 1787, 72 S. W. 288. Where the certificate embraces the statements in the application

Retroactive by-laws.—A by-law not made expressly retroactive will not be so construed.[89] Where the member's rights to special benefits accrue according to the constitution and by-laws of the association, they cannot be subsequently affected by a change in such laws.[90] A beneficiary whose certificate is expressly excepted from the operation of changed by-laws cannot complain.[91] A change in by-laws will be deemed acquiesced in by a member who pays assessments until the time of his death in accordance with such change and without dissent.[92]

Reserved power to amend constitution or by-laws.—Unless express authority is reserved in the association, the contract rights of members cannot be altered by amendment of the constitution or adoption of by-laws.[93] The member may agree that he shall be bound by after-enacted by-laws or constitutional amendments.[94] Such a contract is binding on the beneficiary.[95] Where a member agrees to comply with laws and regulations "now in force or that may hereafter be enacted," by-laws may be retrospective except as to rights fixed by the terms of the original contract.[96] Provisions that the certificate is accepted subject to all future laws of the association, do not refer to laws impairing the contract of insurance, but only to laws for the conduct of the association, duties of the members, and the like;[97] hence as part of the contract but not the by-laws, the by-laws become no part of the contract (Purdy v. Bankers' Life Ass'n [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 486) unless to the holder's benefit. Certificate in form of a life policy entitles the member to the benefit of a section of the by-laws providing that if in good standing he might, on disability by reason of accident, be at his option paid one half the amount of the certificate in full satisfaction of all claims against the order. Enactments requiring a statement from the member to whom death benefits are to be paid do not require the issuance of a certificate designating the beneficiary to one who was a member prior to its adoption. Pfeifer v. Supreme Lodge, B. S. B. Soc., 173 N. Y. 418. Though the application contains an agreement to abide by the regulations as they may thereafter be constitutionally changed, it is not subject to changes which indicate that they are to be applicable only to policies issued in the future. Knights Templars', etc., Indem. Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197.

Where a member of a pilot association is entitled to half pay on the loss of his license until re-instatement, his rights cannot be affected by an alteration in the by-laws classifying disabilities as temporary or permanent with different results in regard to benefits. 94. Ross v. Modern Brotherhood [Iowa] 95 N. W. 207. An agreement to be bound by by-laws in force or thereafter to be adopted, causes by-laws changed after the issuance of the certificate to become a part of the contract. Evans v. Southern Tier M. R. Ass'n, 76 App. Div. (N. Y.) 151. An acceptance of membership subject to provisions of the constitution which may thereafter be adopted, causes the member to be bound by a subsequent reasonable amendment. Hall v. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n [Neb.] 96 N. W. 170. Where an association has two classes of members, one participating in benefits and the others not, a by-law may be amended to authorize participating members to change to the non-participating class on payment of all assessments due and where many of the participating members were dissatisfied and withdrawing, such an amendment is reasonable. French v. N. Y. Mercantile Exch., 80 App. Div. (N. Y.) 131. The by-laws may be changed so as to provide that on the death of the beneficiary before the member, the administrator of the beneficiary instead of the administrator of the member shall be entitled to the proceeds. O'Brien v. Supreme Council, C. B. L., 81 App. Div. (N. Y.) 1.

95. Supreme Tent, K. M. W., v. Stensland, 105 Ill. App. 267. Where the beneficiary's rights are to be determined by the laws in force at the time the same is payable, a subsequently adopted by-law, providing that one-fourth of the face value at the time of death, must have been paid in assessments, or the deficit thereof must be deducted from the policy, is binding. Morton v. Supreme Council, R. L. [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 259. Certificates of members engaged in the liquor business cannot be made void the amount payable on a benefit certificate cannot be reduced,[98] though the promise was only to pay an indefinite sum not exceeding the amount named in the certificate,[99] nor can the payments on disability be changed from a sum in gross to annual instalments.[1] Under a reserved power to amend by-laws, an amendment may be adopted against suicide,[2] though the contrary is also held.[3] The member may be bound by a subsequent specific definition of an injury, which is reasonable.[4] A by-law which is unfair and unreasonable does not affect a member, though the certificate is subject to by-laws existing or to be adopted.[5] Amendments are held unreasonable only where unfair and oppressive in their operation or in disturbance of vested rights.[6]

Rights of members on alteration of by-laws.—If the society arbitrarily reduces the amount payable on certificates, a nonassenting member may treat the contract as rescinded and recover the payments which he has made thereon,[7] or for the proportion representing the canceled insurance,[8] but in Massachusetts it has been held that such a provision being invalid there is no breach until refusal to pay on death of the member, and action for assessments paid or for the amount of the certificate cannot be maintained prior thereto.[9] Payment of assessments under by amendment. Where payments have been made for six years by one engaged in selling liquors which he had a right to do under the laws of the order at the time he became a member. Deuble v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., 172 N. Y. 665.

2. Forfeiture of benefits in case of a member taking his own life, whether sane or insane at the time, provided that in case of suicide twice the amount of all the assessments or monthly rates paid the supreme lodge by the member shall be paid back to the beneficiary. Eversberg v. Supreme Tent, K. M. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 246. Where the certificate is subject to the by-laws and constitution in force or thereafter to be adopted, a member and a beneficiary are bound by the acceptance of a statutory provision exempting liability in case of suicide, made prior to the death of the member. [Acceptance of Laws 1897, p. 122; Rev. St. 1899, § 1408.] Morton v. Royal Tribe of Joseph, 93 Mo. App. 78.

3. Rights under an original insurance against unintentional self-destruction after one year not forfeited by an amendment avoiding the policy for self-destruction while insane, within five years. Weber v. Supreme Tent, K. M., 172 N. Y. 490. If the contract does not make any provision for suicide while insane the association cannot divest itself of such risk by a subsequent amendment of the by-laws, though it may as to suicide while sane, since such regulation does not interfere with the vested right. Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398.

4. Definition of broken leg. Ross v. Modern Brotherhood [Iowa] 95 N. W. 207.

5. By-law limiting liability on death by suicide, sane or insane, of alcoholism or legal execution for crime is unreasonable. Bottjer v. Supreme Council, A. L. of H., 78 App. Div. (N. Y.) 546. An amendment forfeiting the certificate of members taking up prohibited occupations such as that of freight brakeman, is unreasonable and void, where it does not provide for notice of the change to existing members, though the applicant has agreed to be bound by rules to be enacted. Tebo v. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum [Minn.] 93 N. W. 513. Not reasonable to provide that the beneficiary shall receive only such amount as the member has paid in assessments, where the member has paid assessments on the basis of a certificate calling for a stated sum. Wuerfler v. Wis. Order of Druids, 116 Wis. 19.

6. Amendments excepting injuries received as a result of vertigo from those for which benefits will be payable are reasonable. Hall v. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n [Neb.] 96 N. W. 170. It is reasonable to alter existing by-laws so as to provide that on the death of the beneficiary before the member, the beneficiary's administrator and not the administrator of the member shall receive the proceeds. O'Brien v. Supreme Council, C. B. L., 81 App, Div. (N. Y.) 1.

protest on the reduced basis, the full amount being tendered is not regarded as a waiver.[10] On learning of the reduction, the member may stop payment of a check previously sent in payment of an assessment.[11] The action for breach is not governed by a limitation as to time applicable to death claims.[12]

(§ 5) D. Representations of organizers and agents.—An organizer appointed by the Supreme Lodge cannot acquire powers in excess of those conferred on him by it, through an arrangement by the secretary of a local lodge.[13] Where those dealing with an agent know the extent of his powers as conferred by the by-laws or by provisions in the policy, he cannot bind the association in excess thereof.[14] Limitations in the certificate or the by-laws made part of the contract are notice to the insured and beneficiary of limitations on the powers of the agent.[15]

§ 6. Application.—Provisions that the application or charter or by-laws must be attached to be treated as a part of the policy[16] apply to fraternal orders.[17]

Misrepresentations.—Fraternal beneficial orders may be exempt from provisions applicable to life insurance companies, generally rendering false immaterial statements in applications harmless.[18] The policy may be avoided, if the representations are substantially untrue,[19] or if facts are fraudulently concealed, inducing the issuance of the certificate.[20] Answers as to present and past condition of health must be true, whether warranties or representations.[21] A statement of good health is construed to mean that the applicant is free from sensible disease and from any apparent derangement of the functions by which health may be tested.[22] Miscellaneous holdings as to falsifications are grouped in the notes.[23] It may be

19. Substantially true means without qualification in all respects material to the risk. Jeffrey v. United Order of Golden Cross, 97 Me. 176. Where the issuance of a certificate is secured through the reliance of the officers on a false representation that the beneficiary was one of a class for whose benefit the mortuary fund is established, the beneficiary's claim may be defeated on the ground of fraud. Koerts v. Grand Lodge of Wisconsin of Order of Hermann's Sons [Wis.] 97 N. W. 163.

20. Failure to state the death of brothers where such question is not directly asked is not to be regarded as a warranty. Callies v. Modern Woodmen of America, 98 Mo. App. 521.

a question for the jury whether false answers were under misapprehension as to the question,[24] or whether statements in the application are false, but not whether they are material when such fact is determined by the contract.[25]

Warranties.—Unless the certificate of insurance refers to the application, the answers contained therein are not warranties.[26] If the statements are made warranties, it is not essential that they be material,[27] and good faith is then not controlling.[28] A warranty of answers, to be true and complete statements of all material facts within the applicant's knowledge, is not a warranty of knowledge.[29] The fact that insured is required to warrant the truthfulness of his statements does not make answers in an application and medical examination more than representations.[30] See foot notes for particular warranties.[31]

Waiver and estoppel as to application.—Provisions that laws relating to the substance of the contract for payment of benefits cannot be waived do not refer to the preparation and acceptance of applications.[32] There can be no waiver without knowledge.[33]

Protection, 123 Fed. 152. Insured may have been in a state of alcoholism from continuous use to excess without great intoxication at any time, thus not causing a negative answer to the question "Were you ever intoxicated?" to be necessarily a misrepresentation. Bacon v. New England Order of Protection, 123 Fed. 152. Failure to mention a small amount of other insurance carried will not vitiate a certificate in the absence of fraud, notwithstanding a clause in the application stating that if there were in any of the answers any untrue or evasive statements or concealments of fact, then all claims on the benefit fund should be forfeited. Robinson v. Supreme Commandery, United Order of the Golden Cross of the World, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 215. A misstatement as to membership in another insurance order will not invalidate the certificate where the insuring association is not misled, and its agent taking the application has knowledge of the facts. Membership in the other order was essential to membership in the insurance association. Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club [Iowa] 97 N. W. 91. 31. A false statement that a physician had not been consulted during the preceding seven years avoids the certificate without regard to the nature of the ailment for which the physician was consulted. McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 Mo. App. 636. An answer that applicant has never had any serious illness, being regarded as an expression of opinion, is not a warranty avoiding a policy, unless the applicant makes such answer with knowledge of its untruthfulness. Evidence held insufficient to show untruth of statements as to health, as against evidence that applicant was at the time suffering from tuberculosis and had pleuro-pneumonia. Supreme Ruling of the Fraternal Mystic Circle v. Crawford [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 844. Statement that applicant was in sound mental and physical health not rendered false by the fact that insured had shortly before consulted a physician with regard to a pain in the stomach, indigestion and congestion of the liver, if such ailments were merely transient. McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 Mo. App. 636.

Objection is waived where on applicant stating the facts as to insanity in his family was advised to answer "No" by the examining physician who was an agent and officer of the association and wrote the answer. Shotliff v. Modern Woodmen of America [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 326. If the agent accepts an applicant on the understanding that he will subsequently comply with conditions as to eligibility, his noneligibility at the time of delivery of the certificate cannot be availed of by the association there having been a subsequent compliance. Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club [Iowa] 97 N. W. 91. Where a deputy organizer testifies that he examined an applicant himself through an arrangement

§ 7. Dues and assessments.[34]—Members may be required to pay monthly assessments under constitutional provisions fixing the rates of assessment and requiring that they be paid monthly, provided twelve are required to meet death losses.[35]

Where the death benefit assessment may be fixed according to the age of the member, it may be governed by his age at the time of assessment and not that at the time of entry.[36] A notice of assessment and a call on the beneficiary funds of subordinate lodges may be approved and construed as one instrument.[37]

Notice of assessments.[38]—Service of notice of assessment by mail as provided by the by-laws is sufficient where the by-laws constitute part of the contract.[39]

If a certificate provides that annual dues are to be paid on a certain day and there are also provisions for death assessments, a promise made by the agent that insured should have a certain notice of anything to be paid under the policy, does not cover annual dues.[40]

Actions to collect assessments.—Where the member may be expelled on nonpayment of dues, an action at law cannot be maintained therefor.[41]

§ 8. Forfeitures and suspensions; reinstatement.—The enumeration of different means of forfeiture indicates an intent not to include one in the other.[42]

Change in habits of member.—Where the articles contemplate no forfeiture of a certificate for anything except for default in payments, it cannot be forfeited by a subsequently enacted by-law, on the ground that member's habits had become intemperate, though such fact might be a good defense to an action on the certificate.[43] with the state deputy by which he was to examine his own applicants for membership, and have physicians of his own selection sign the reports, the examination may be sufficient though the laws require examinations to be by an examiner approved by the supreme medical director, such an examiner having in this case signed the organizer's report. Supreme Ruling of the Fraternal Mystic Circle v. Crawford [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 844.

33. A waiver of forfeiture on account of the use of intoxicants after issuance of certificate is not a waiver of misrepresentations concerning such use in the application, if there is no evidence that the association had knowledge, nor does such waiver result from a reversal of action after trial for expulsion, until the member should be released from an asylum in which he was. Callies v. Modern Woodmen of America, 98 Mo. App. 521. Furnishing blank proofs of death does not amount to a waiver of misrepresentations in the application unless the association is shown to have had knowledge thereof. Id. The question of whether a society had knowledge of, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known of statements in, an application for insurance which was previously rejected, is for the jury. 34. Under articles of incorporation providing that the benefit fund shall consist of all moneys collected for the payment of death losses, and shall be collected by a pro rata assessment levied on the guaranty fund of the association, and that the guaranty fund consists of deposits pledged for the payment of assessments by each member of the association, assessments must be passed, if there is money enough on hand, to pay mortuary benefits on hand. Failure to give notice of illness may forfeit benefits.[44]

Nonpayment of assessments.—Provision for prompt payment of assessments are of the substance and essence of the contract,[45] hence, failure to comply with by-laws in this regard may forfeit death benefits,[46] but penalties suspending the rights of members for a period after payment of arrears are regarded as unreasonable.[47] Nonpayment is not excused by the fact that a member is delirious at the time dues become payable,[48] or failure of an agent to pay, though the member has no knowledge thereof.[49]

Payment from local funds to prevent forfeiture.—The local council may, in the absence of a prohibition, keep up the payments of a delinquent member, preventing the supreme council from denying the member's standing.[50] By-laws providing for payment of assessments during sickness of members are mandatory.[51] Any one knowing the facts may give notice requiring such a payment.[52] The notice must state the member's inability if inability is a prerequisite.[53]

Duty to apply funds of member in hands of lodge to avoid forfeiture.—If the subordinate lodge has money in its possession belonging to a member, and the power to apply it, it must be applied to assessments due from the member to save a forfeiture of the contract though the member does not make an express direction,[54] but sums paid on account of lodge dues cannot be required to be paid out by the subordinate to the supreme lodge in satisfaction of assessments thereafter called.[55]

Status of local lodge or officers as agent.—Where the member is distinctly required to pay assessments to the financial officer of a local lodge, and there is no other method of payment, the local officer is the agent of the supreme lodge to receive and forward the payment.[56] The rules of the order may make the

Brown v. Supreme Court I. O. F. [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 145. Where the insured leaves sums of money with the local financier for application on assessments when they fall due, insured is not responsible for his failure to apply the funds as directed, if the financier in so accepting money does not transgress a collector of a local lodge the agent of the assured and beneficiary,[57] though not when in contravention of by-laws establishing agency for the order.[58]

Notice and other proceedings to effectuate forfeiture.—By-laws or regulation forfeiting benefits or membership are not as a rule self-executing,[59] except when for nonpayment of an assessment,[60] or so provided in the contract.[61] Where the by-laws provide that the financial secretary shall notify members of arrears, a member's right cannot be forfeited for nonpayment of a fine, if he is not notified of its imposition.[62] The validity of a forfeiture depends rather on the association's compliance in good faith with the by-laws in attempting to notify the member, than on his timely receipt of the notice.[63]

The question of whether the by-laws of a benefit order conferred jurisdiction to try a member on notice to him, after he has become insane, is for the court, and in case such jurisdiction is not clearly given, an expulsion based on a notice which is merely addressed to the insane member and deposited in the post-office will not affect the right to benefits.[64]

Rights of member on unauthorized declaration of forfeiture.—Expulsion must be in the formal manner prescribed.[65] If wholly void and unauthorized, the member may treat it as such and does not waive rights by failure to tender his assessments.[66]

Recovery of assessments paid.—The beneficiary cannot, on the death of the member before reinstatement, recover assessments paid by him before suspension.[67]

Waiver of illegal expulsion.[68]—Failure for several months to make efforts for reinstatement is to be regarded as an acquiescence in expulsion,[69] but only where the member may seek reinstatement by appeal to some other tribunal of the order.[70] positive law of the association. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Scott [Neb.] 97 N. W. 637.

57. In such case the beneficiary cannot take advantage of an erroneous acceptance of assessments due after the death of assured. Voelkel v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World, 116 Wis. 202.

58. Where the by-laws provide that the clerk of the local camp shall collect and remit assessments to the head camp, he is the agent of the head camp in such collection, though there is another provision that he is the agent of the local camp and not of the head camp and that no act or omission by him should create any liability or waive any right of the society. Modern Woodmen of America v. Tevis [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 369. If the by-laws require payment to a local secretary, he cannot be made the agent of the member. Ancient Order of Pyramids v. Drake, 66 Kan. 538, 72 Pac. 239.

59. A provision that a person engaged in the sale of intoxicating drinks cannot be admitted or retained as a member is not self executing. Steinert v. United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America [Minn.] 97 N. W. 668. In the absence of a by-law or provision in a contract or application making false warranties in an application for reinstatement a forfeiture of the insurance contract, a forfeiture for a claimed breach of warranty, is not self-executing. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 200 Ill. 359. A by-law requiring that members shall remain practical Catholics and communicants of the church is self-executing and the liability of the society ceased without an expulsion of the member where he excommunicates himself by being married by a Protestant minister. Barry v. Order of Catholic Knights of Wisconsin [Wis.] 96 N. W. 797.

60. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Marshall [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 605. If there is a provision that members in arrears to a certain amount shall not be entitled to death benefits, it is immaterial that he is not suspended or his name stricken from the rolls before his death, both being constitutional provisions. Phillips v. United States Grand Lodge of Independent Order Sons of Benjamin, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 296.

69. Foxhever v. Order of Red Cross, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 56.

70. Suspension of member while the association has money in its hands to discharge any assessments for which he is liable. Pur-

Fraud prior thereto is waived by submission of proofs of death and a hearing before the trustees of the order.[71]

Waiver of forfeiture.—Officers of local lodges have no authority to waive constitutional restrictions,[72] or rules of the order forming a part of the contract of membership.[73] Acceptance of assessments with knowledge of a right of forfeiture is, in general, a waiver thereof.[74] Acceptance of a payment in ignorance of decease of applicant does not estop the lodge.[75]

The effect of the receipt of assessments after due as a waiver of timely payment is controlled by custom,[76] and the question of whether the local lodge or officer is to be regarded as the agent of the order,[77] or of whether such power is specifically denied.[78] A former habit of allowing delinquencies will not justify

74. Assessments were retained until after the death of the member. Modern Woodmen v. Colman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 814. Where a fraternal order maintains an insurance department, it is bound by rules which govern other insurance contracts and must act with reasonable promptness though by its laws it has the right to expel or suspend members. Supreme Lodge, K. P., v. Wellenvoss (C. C. A.) 119 Fed. 671. A waiver will result where the clerk of a local camp through an assistant, collects monthly assessments of dues and remits them to the head clerk with full knowledge of the circumstances for a period of three months, and until the death of insured (waives a forfeiture on the ground of failure to file a waiver of liability for death, as a direct result of engaging in a specified occupation). Modern Woodmen v. Colman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 814. Where a member has been suspended on account of disobedience to the rules of the order more than six years after the offense and at a time when by reason of his condition he is unable to obtain other insurance, the order cannot refuse payment, having accepted assessments during the entire six years. Supreme Lodge, K. P., v. Wellenvoss (C. C. A.) 119 Fed. 671. Payment of assessments by the beneficiary, under the advice of the regular officer of the lodge to whom dues are payable, may estop the lodge to claim fraud in that the certificate was issued to the beneficiary as the insured's lawful wife, which in fact she was not and which she disclosed to the financier at the time the advice was given. Alexander v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., 119 Iowa, 519. After receipt of dues for a long time the association may be estopped to deny that the beneficiary is within a permitted clause, there being no deception or fraudulent misrepresentation pleaded. Tramblay v. Supreme Council, C. B. L., 85 N. Y. Supp. 613.

76. Courtney v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 878. Where there is an invariable custom of a local lodge to receive dues after they are payable, a member with knowledge of such custom is not suspended by mere failure in prompt payment; and this though the by-laws of the order make the clerk of a local camp the agent of such camp, and expressly provide that he shall not be the head camp agent, where other provisions in fact constitute him such an agent. Andre v. Modern Woodmen [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 710. The fact that a local secretary allows payment of assessments when delinquent twice, does not establish a binding custom in the absence of knowledge of the superior officers. Fraternal Union v. Hurlock [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 539. A forfeiture for non-payment of assessments may be waived where there is a custom to accept assessments after due by the subordinate lodge. Bell v. Supreme Lodge, K. of H., 80 App. Div. (N. Y.) 609. A custom to accept dues from members in good health after due, is not a waiver of forfeiture in case of a non-payment by a sick member. Smith v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen [Mo.] 77 S. W. 862. Where a collector has advanced a monthly payment for a member without knowledge of the local or supreme council, it does not amount to a waiver of timely payments. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Taylor (C. C. A.) 121 Fed. 66.

77. If the contract is with the supreme lodge, a custom of the local officers to waive forfeiture for timely payment of dues, which is unknown to the supreme lodge, does not estop it (United Moderns v. Pike [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 774), nor does a custom by the supreme lodge to accept reports from the local officer later than directed by the by-laws (Id.). In the absence of evidence of custom, a local secretary has no power to waive a forfeiture of a certificate by receiving subsequent assessments. Boyce v. Royal Circle, 99 Mo. App. 349. In the absence of notice or knowledge and acquiescence by the principal officers of the head camp, a clerk of a local camp cannot extend the time of payment of an assessment, waive default, or re-instate a suspended member without warranty of good health in contravention of the by-laws forming a part of the contract. Modern Woodmen v. Tevis (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. 369. A subordinate lodge may waive a forfeiture for non-payment of assessments, their relation to the grand lodge being that of agency. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., v. Lachmann, 199 Ill. 140.

78. Where it is expressly agreed in a contract that a local agent cannot waive a provision for forfeiture on non-payment of dues, his acceptance of dues after time will not further neglect in payment, where there has been a movement to secure strict compliance with the by-laws.[79]

Refusal to settle a claim on the ground that an assessment was not paid is a waiver of other known defenses.[80]

The doctrine of estoppel and waiver will not apply to a contract of membership, where the applicant dies before delivery of the certificate and hence never becomes a member.[81]

Reinstatement.—Where a member secures his reinstatement after the lapse of several months in which he has paid no assessments, he becomes a new member.[82] Where a certificate is forfeited ipso facto for nonpayment of an assessment, it cannot be renewed after the death of the insured,[83] nor will informal measures for reinstatement restore the rights of the beneficiary of a member who dies before the requirements are complied with,[84] and delay of a local branch in transmitting a certificate for reinstatement will not prevent the supreme branch from asserting noncompliance.[85] A receipt of reinstatement dues does not waive other conditions for reinstatement, where accompanied by express requirement of such conditions.[86] If a member may, under the rules, be reinstated only while in good health, there is no waiver through a receipt of reinstatement dues by the secretary of a subordinate lodge while the member was in his last illness.[87]

Where timely payment of dues is waived, thus preventing suspension, the member on payment of his dues is not required to make a warranty of health as in the case of reinstatement.[88] A health certificate does not, by general reference to the original application, amount to a reassertion of its statements as of the time of the certificate.[89] A request of the beneficiary to prepare and present proofs of death is a waiver of a breach of warranty as to health at time of a reinstatement if the facts are known.[90]

§ 9. The beneficiary. Persons who may be beneficiaries.—The beneficiary must bear to the member a relation provided for in the constitution or by-laws and within the provision of the statute under which incorporation is had.[91] See foot-

By-laws requiring assessments to be paid to the collector of the council are not so binding that payment in another manner may not be ratified by the association preventing forfeiture on account of delay of an agent accustomed to receive and forward assessments. Where the by-laws provide that in case of death within 183 days from admission the benefits should be merely nominal, the fact that the registration blank signed by insured on reinstatement contains the words "or if expelled, then from the day of re-instatement" in addition to the words "within 183 days from admission," does not change the effect of the by-law. 91. Kirkpatrick v. Modern Woodmen of America, 103 Ill. App. 468. In Kansas, fraternal beneficiary associations created under the statutes of the state may pay benefits only to members or beneficiaries named by them. Bankers' Union of the World v. Crawford [Kan.] 73 Pac. 79. Where a statute amends a former provision as to who may be beneficiaries and provides that foreign as-notes for interpretation of particular certificates payable to member's estate,[92] legal heirs,[93] survivors,[94] wife,[95] dependents.[96]

Where, after knowledge that a beneficiary is not qualified, the association receives the member and accepts his dues for several years, the person designated may take the benefits as against the member's next of kin.[97]

Status of beneficiary.—The beneficiary does not take a vested interest in the certificate or fund provided for payment until the decease of the member.[98] If benefits are payable in case of accidental death, the beneficiary acquires a vested interest at the time of death and not of the accident.[99] If the member has an absolute right to change the beneficiary, the beneficiary has no right, on his disappearance, to maintain an action to reinstate the policy.[1] The assignee in bankruptcy of the original beneficiary cannot reach the benefits, if she has transferred them to others in pursuance of a deathbed direction of the insured, though there has been no formal change of the beneficiary.[2]

Rights of persons advancing dues.—The member is not bound to make an appointment in favor of a person furnishing money to pay certain of the assessments, where the beneficiary has already been named.[3] Such payments are gratuitous in the absence of contract.[4] On change of beneficiary, though the former beneficiary has paid premiums without knowledge of the power to change the designation, she cannot recover them.[5]

sociations doing business in the state may continue, if they file annual reports and comply with similar regulations and may avail themselves of the amendment as to beneficiaries by amendments of their constitutions or articles or by re-incorporation, a foreign association which complies with the requirements for reports but does not amend its constitution is governed by laws as to beneficiaries previously existing. By-laws providing that beneficiaries must be members of the insured's family, as well as statutes providing that the status of beneficiaries shall be controlled by the law in effect at the time of the member's death, are not retroactive. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World v. McAllister [Mich.] 92 N. W. 770. A divorced wife whom the member has promised to remarry if "he got into some kind of business where he could support" her is not an affianced wife or wife. Kirkpatrick v. Modern Woodmen of America, 103 Ill. App. 468.

tainty in the name of the beneficiary.[6] Where the insured has a mere power of appointment of a beneficiary, the beneficiary may take title without delivery of the certificate to her, there being an indorsement exercising the power.[7]

Failure or death of beneficiaries.—If no persons exist to whom payment may be made, under the rules of the order, the fund reverts to the society free from the claims of creditors or estate of deceased member.[8] Where, on the death of the original beneficiary, a new appointment is ineffective, the proceeds are payable according to the provisions of the by-laws.[9] The relatives of the member take as against the representatives of the beneficiary, where the beneficiary and insured perish in the same disaster and there is no proof that the beneficiary was the survivor.[10]

Change of beneficiaries.[11]—By statute in some states, members may at any time, with the consent of the association, substitute beneficiaries.[12] A custom to change beneficiaries may do away with a failure of the by-laws to provide for such change.[13] A statute limiting persons to whom death benefits may be payable cannot be made retroactive, depriving a member of the right which he had before its passage to change the beneficiary.[14] As a general rule, the regulations of the association respecting a change of beneficiary should be followed, though exceptions exist, where the society waives strict compliance, where the insured is unable to comply literally or where death intervenes before the consummation of the change and after he has done all the acts imposed on him.[15] The former beneficiary need not have knowledge.[16] Where the only acts remaining to be done before the death of the member to effect a change of beneficiary are formal acts on the part of the association, the change will be considered to have been made;[17] but if the old certificate is in effect until a new one is delivered, a change which is not accepted before the death of the member because not in proper form as to a portion of the fund, is not operative as to the part concerning which it is in form.[18] Where, on application for higher benefits, the supplementary applicant designates no beneficiary nor does the new certificate, there is no change of beneficiaries, though the new certificate is delivered to another who is declared to be his beneficiary by the member at the time.[19]

Competency of member to make change.—Where the beneficiary is changed by the principal while mentally incompetent, the original beneficiary may, after death of the insured, contest the validity.[20] Lack of mental capacity is not shown by the writing of a letter to effect a change of beneficiaries instead of filling blanks on the benefit certificate.[21] A letter substituting beneficiaries will be presumed to be voluntarily and consciously signed, the genuineness of the signature being proven.[22]

Surrender of original certificate.—Where the constitution provides that a new certificate may be issued where the benefit certificate is lost or beyond the control of the member, the member may secure a new certificate to be issued to a new beneficiary, though the former beneficiary having possession of the certificate refused to surrender it;[23] but the equities in favor of the former beneficiary may be so strong as to support his right to the fund, as where the wife of a member supported him and secured his reinstatement in the lodge, paying the assessments, and under a subsequently passed by-law, he attempted to make a change in favor of a sister, though his wife would not surrender the certificate.[24] Where the certificate must be surrendered on change of the beneficiary, except where lost or beyond the member's control, an affidavit stating that the member has no longer control of the certificate must be made by the member and without undue influence.[25] Equity will aid subsequent beneficiaries by regarding that as done which ought to have been done.[26] Where a duplicate certificate is issued, a substitution of beneficiaries may be effected by a surrender of such certificate, though the original is in existence.[27] The fact that the association accepts dues from the original beneficiary does not estop it from denying liability on the original certificate in favor of a substituted certificate in which the original beneficiary and another are made beneficiaries.[28]

Designation by will.—Where the by-law provides that the death benefits are payable to widows and children of deceased members, a minor child of a member is entitled thereto, though the member leaves his entire estate by will to a person whom he authorizes to collect from the association the sum payable on his death.[29]

Assignment of benefits.—A benefit certificate, though not assignable at law, may be transferred in equity as security.[30] If there are provisions in the constitution and laws against making policies payable to creditors or assignable, a cr itor cannot obtain right to benefits of an assignment indorsed on the policy The same is true where by statute it is provided its certificates shall not be assig able save to certain persons, among whom are not included creditors.[32]

Exemption of benefits from debts.—In certain states moneys received as be fits are exempt from execution.[33] If payable to certain relatives, they are not be regarded as a part of the insured's estate.[34]

Statutes exempting benefits to be paid from garnishment or other process not a denial of the equal protection of the laws, where fraternal orders are se rately classed under the statutes,[35] but a statute which exempts from its pro sions as to benefit associations generally, certain designated orders which are shown to reasonably receive a different classification, is invalid, as discriminating and the section which deprives such orders of the privilege conferred on the oth cannot be disregarded, allowing the other sections to remain valid.[37]

§ 10. Contingencies on which benefits accrue; amount. Essential durati of membership.—Where an association of teachers of public schools provides annuity for members who have completed a term of school service of cert length, a public school teacher may be entitled to an annuity though a porti of her service was in a private school.[38] Where the members of an absorbed or are to be given the same standing which they held in their own organization, th membership in the order absorbed cannot be linked with membership in the sorbing order so as to entitle them to the greater benefits conferred as incident longer membership in this order.[39]

Incontestable clauses are to be construed against the insurer, but a consti tional provision that a certificate shall be incontestable if the member confo to the laws and rules does not comprehend agreements made independently a outside of the laws and rules of the association.[40]

Suicide as a forfeiture of benefits is a question as to which the courts are widely variant.[42]

An incontestable clause may estop the association from claiming the benefit of a provision against suicide,[43] and where trial and conviction is provided to establish loss of good standing, suicide will not forfeit such standing.[44]

A member may be regarded as insane at the time of committing suicide if he was then without sufficient reason to know what he was doing or to distinguish right from wrong, or if he had not sufficient will power to govern his actions, by reason of some insane impulse which he could not control.[45] An illness need not be such as to confine the member to bed, to render the association liable for benefits on suicide in "delirium" resulting from illness.[46] A finding of the commission of suicide amounts to the determination that it was the intentional act of a sane man.[47]

with experience in boarding and alighting, the train moving from eight to ten miles an hour. Small v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n [Ga.] 45 S. E. 706. An exception against accident or death, while insured is on a railroad bridge or a road bed violating laws or rules of a corporation, does not apply to an insured carefully crossing a railroad track at a point recognized as a thoroughfare to a depot. Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 342.

42. Illinois: Benefits are not forfeited by suicide on the ground that it is a death in violation of law, nor does it involve an attempt to commit suicide, which is a crime. Royal Circle v. Achterrath, 204 Ill. 549. A stipulation in a contract that benefits will not be paid on death by suicide, whether sane or insane, prevents a recovery, though the member by reason of his total insanity was incapable of forming an intent to take his life. Seitzinger v. Modern Woodmen, 204 Ill. 58. Where liability on account of death by suicidal act, sane or insane, is stipulated against, liability exists only where insured, on committing suicide, is in such a state of mind as to be unconscious of the physical nature of the act which caused his death and it is error to instruct that there could be a recovery unless insured at the time of his death was capable of forming a rational intent and he did with rational intent commit suicide. Supreme Lodge, O. M. P., v. Gelbke, 198 Ill. 365.

Kentucky: Though there is no stipulation as to suicide, benefits are not payable on suicide of the insured when sane, though otherwise if insane. Mooney v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., 24 Ky. L. Nebraska: Where there is no such provision in the contract, suicide of the assured does not avoid the right to benefits. Supreme Lodge, S. & D. of P., v. Underwood [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1051.

New York: The beneficiary stands in the same position as the beneficiary of an ordinary life policy with regard to the wrongful act of the insured in taking his own life. Suicide is an illegal act within a restriction against death of insured by any illegal act of his own. Id.

Texas: It cannot be contended that rights of membership and rights of participation in the benefit fund are distinct, thus allowing the beneficiary to recover in case of a suicide, where the laws provide that self-destruction, whether sane or insane, will render the benefit certificate null and void. 48. "Disability," is inability to perform the insured's ordinary duty in the employment in which he was engaged at the time of his injury. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 831. Total and permanent disability to follow any occupation, is such as incapacitates the member from following his usual business and renders him unable to perform labor more than sufficient to pay his board. Monahan v. Supreme Lodge, O. C. K., 88 Minn. 224. Total incapacity to perform manual labor means total inability to perform manual labor to an extent necessary to entitle the member to receive earnings. Grand Lodge, L. F., v. Orrell [Ill.] 69 N. E. 68. A definition of "permanently" in relation to an injury as one that will exist throughout all time, cannot be complained of by the association. Id. Under by-laws providing for payment of benefits on disability, disabling the member to direct or perform the kind of business or labor which he has always followed, and by which alone he can thereafter earn a livelihood, a farmer who also operates a portable saw-mill is entitled to benefits where by an accident his arm is rendered useless, render-

§ 11. Proofs of death or right to benefits. Time.—A provision for payment within ninety days of proof of death does not impose a forfeiture for failure to make proof within ninety days.[49]

Waiver of proofs.—Formal proofs of death are unnecessary where the association disclaims all liability, basing its refusal to pay on other grounds,[50] or where it has failed to furnish blanks on demand;[51] so of blanks for sick benefits.[52] A grand recorder may waive proofs of death.[53] Where the claimant presents his claim in a manner satisfactory to the subordinate lodge, which certifies them to the grand lodge, and the grand lodge receives and acts on them as having been properly presented, it cannot thereafter complain as to the manner of presentation of the claims.[54]

Conclusiveness and effect of proofs.—Where no equitable estoppel exists, statements in the proof of loss may be contradicted.[55] Such estoppel does not arise from negligence in not reading proofs of loss,[56] or where it does not appear that the insurer relied on the statements, or was in a serious condition on account thereof.[57]

Officers of local lodges furnishing death proofs may act as agent of the general body to such a degree as to render admissible statements and admissions against the society's interest made in filling out such proofs.[58]

Admissions of liability.—Liability cannot be imposed on grand lodge by acts of subordinate lodge officers if they have no authority over the payment of death benefits.[59] A death notice from the subordinate lodge to the supreme lodge reciting that the dues of the assured had been paid and that the beneficiary was entitled to the death benefits on which the supreme lodge acts and refuses an assessment is an admission of liability.[60] A statement by member of finance committee of grand lodge that a receipt for a last payment fixed the lodge's liability does

57. Where some two months before trial, the insurer, by replication, had notice that suicide would be controverted, and there was also a special written notice to the same effect, evidence that death did not result from suicide, contradicting the statements in the proofs of loss, may be admitted. Supreme Tent, K. M., v. Stensland [Ill.] 68 N. E. 1098.

58. Where the by-laws of defendant society and the form for proof of death provided by it, imposed on the officers of the assembly, of which the deceased was a member, the duty of preparing, certifying to, and forwarding to the head office, proofs of death, and their opinions as to the validity of the claim, using blank forms furnished for that purpose by the supreme secretary. Patterson v. United Artisans [Or.] 72 Pac. 1095.

59. An invitation to the attorney of a beneficiary to lay his case before the grand lodge finance committee, is not a binding admission of liability where liability had been previously denied and payments to secure re-instatement tendered back. Adams v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 588.

not waive forfeiture for failure to comply with other conditions.[61] If, on the suicide of a member, the association is liable for the assessments paid in, the association does not waive a defense of the suicide by allowing the beneficiary to furnish proof of death and conduct an appeal before tribunals of the order after her claim for full amount was rejected.[62]

§ 12. Payment of benefits.—A trustee appointed by the subordinate lodge of the society is the agent of the subordinate lodge and not of the beneficiary, so that the supreme council does not discharge itself by the payment of the amount of death benefits to him.[63]

Settlements and release of liability.—A release signed by the beneficiary under surprise and pressure for immediate action, without opportunity to seek legal advice or ascertain the facts, may be set aside in equity.[64] A receipt or release by the beneficiary given on payment of the amount for which the association concedes its liability is without consideration as to the difference between such amount and that actually due on the certificate.[65]

The fact that the association acknowledges that a certificate has been taken up by mistake on settlement of a claim for benefits and that it is reissued and premiums are accepted, does not waive the right to insist on a return of the amount paid under the settlement as a condition for a rescission thereof.[66]

Where a settlement of all claims which the holder had or might have against the association is pleaded, it will be construed not to cover a subsequent death of insured in the same accident and to be a defense only to the amount of payment alleged.[67]

Where an applicant for membership in a beneficiary society has released his mortuary benefits in another society and died before the consummation of transfer of membership, the beneficiary cannot claim benefits from both societies where he accepts those payable by the society of which decedent intended to become a member on an agreement to relinquish to it the sum which would have been due him from the prior society.[68]

Interpleader of claimants.—If the association pays the money into court and interpleads the claimants, its distribution may be awarded according to the equitable principles without regard to technical defenses which could be asserted by the association.[69]

Amount payable and funds which may be resorted to.—Where from the contract it is uncertain as to whether a fixed sum is to be paid or only the amount realized by an assessment on the members, the construction most favorable to the insured will be adopted and the fixed amount awarded.[70]

A proviso in a by-law that the face value of the benefit certificate shall be paid means the amount stated in the body of the certificate, though in another portion of the same by-law it states that a certain sum shall be the highest amount paid.[71]

A judgment cannot be rendered for the full amount of a policy where the

by-laws in force provide that one assessment is to be levied for each loss, whi is to go as far as it will toward paying the face of the certificate, and there no evidence as to the amount which would be raised by such an assessment oth than the amount raised by monthly assessments under by-laws which are declar void.[72]

The beneficiary is not entitled to resort to an equalization fund maintain to be resorted to when the death rate should necessitate more than a certain nur ber of assessments in a year, unless such death rate has existed.[73]

If the benefit certificate and constitution and by-laws show that assessmen are made to accumulate and replenish a fund for the payment of death losses ar not to pay particular losses, the representatives of a member are not the owne of any specific portion of the fund levied, for their particular and exclusive use

Interest and damages.—On recovery, plaintiff is entitled to interest from t time the policy is due.[75]

Where the defendant fails to show that it was a fraternal benefit associatio plaintiff may recover damages and attorney's fees.[76]

§ 13. Procedure to enforce right to benefits. Form of action.—Where the is a fixed promise to pay a certain sum, an action at law will lie,[77] though n where the agreement is that the beneficiaries are to receive from the benefit fun the amount of one assessment from each contributing member.[78]

ing the procedure and exhausting the remedies prescribed by the constitution and by-laws of the order, provided such regulations and by-laws are not violative of the law,[83] but exhaustion of remedy by appeal within the order must be made obligatory by the laws of the society,[84] but before an order can hold a member to strict observance of its rules regulating procedure on appeal, it must show that in all matters touching his substantial rights, it has observed these regulations.[85] Non-action of the supreme lodge of an association, on an appeal on account of no appearance for complainant, does not affect the claim any more than in the case of a continuance to another term for default in not appearing and demanding trial.[86]

Provisions in the by-laws for arbitration before suit on disputed claims must be complied with by the beneficiary,[87] but are waived by an unqualified denial of liability,[88] or answer to the beneficiary's complaint.[89] Where the beneficiary has no alternative after expulsion of a member but to submit the matter to arbitration, the beneficiary may resort to the courts on a refusal of an offered arbitration, not having a right to appeal to the higher tribunals of the order.[90]

Failure for nine years to appeal to supreme lodge or the civil courts from rejection of an application for transfer will justify the order in believing that the member was satisfied with the result reached.[91]

den of proof of suicide does not shift during the trial.[14] The presumptions are in favor of sanity.[15]

Admissibility of evidence.[16]—Experts should not be allowed to testify as to suicidal intent.[17] An objection, that while experts may know the condition of a body in case of ordinary strangulation, they may not be experts in cases where the body was partially resting on the floor, is frivolous.[18]

Statements of the insured tending to falsify statements in his application, made some years before the date of the application, are inadmissible as against the vested right of the beneficiary.[19] The admissions of the insured that he shot himself are admissible only as part of the res gestae.[20]

A coroner's inquisition record is not in Oregon of sufficient judicial character to be admissible to show cause of death,[21] nor is it admissible, though attached to the proofs of death made by the beneficiary, if furnished by the subordinate lodge.[22]

Papers purporting to be receipts for assessments and dues cannot be admitted without identification.[23] Alterations in receipts for assessments must be explained.[24] Where plaintiff is also a member of the order, receipts showing payment of assessments by him are not admissible except as they may tend to explain disputed receipts claimed to have been given to deceased, in which case they may become material in rebuttal.[25]

On an issue of bad faith in an answer as to prior rejection, statements of the agent to insured to answer the way in which he did and a promise by the agent to explain the rejection to the company are admissible.[26]

Where proofs of death are required to contain affidavits of the president and secretary of the subordinate lodge as to decedent's record as a member, an unsigned affidavit which had been presented by the plaintiff to the officers and of which signature was refused on the ground that it was not correct, is inadmissible especially where accompanied by an affidavit of plaintiff that decedent had paid all assessments due at the time of his death. Rambousek v. Supreme Council, M. T., 119 Iowa, 263. Where notice under the laws of the order was to be made through a lodge paper an affidavit of the publication and mailing of the paper containing a call for assessments is admissible, payment of assessments being disputed. That an executor honestly believed such means to be the best method of protecting property of an estate will not relieve a constructive fraud by him in conveyance of property to the widow whose confidential advisor he was, under representations that she was receiving a fee instead of a life estate. Lampman v. Lampman, 118 Iowa, 140.

65. Confidential relations of partners, as affecting a fraud practiced by one on the other, continues after formation of a corporation to take over the firm property. Sullivan v. Pierce (C. C. A.) 125 Fed. 104.

66. Transactions between an attorney and client will be presumed fraudulent unless the attorney shows the utmost good faith. Young v. Murphy [Wis.] 97 N. W. 496; Goldberg v. Goldstein, 84 N. Y. Supp. 732; Myers v. Luzerne County, 124 Fed. 436. Conveyances between an attorney in fact of an insane person, appointed before insanity and a third person whereby the title to incompetent's land was vested in the attorney will be set aside for fraud. Clay v. Hammond, 199 Ill. 370.

67. Misrepresentations to his principal by an agent concerning the value of land whereby the latter profited under a secret agreement with a third person, amount to fraud. White v. Leech [Iowa] 96 N. W. 709. Fraud of a broker as to his principal forfeits his commissions. Whaples v. Fahys, 84 N. Y. Supp. 793. Where an agent of one of the parties is intrusted with the duty of making an agreed change in an award by arbitrators, his failure is a fraud on the other party whether he so intended or not. McCurdy v. Daniell [Mich.] 97 N. W. 52. A broker for sale of lands on learning that a more advantageous contract than the offer or corporate directors and stockholders,[68] will be carefully scrutinized by the courts to prevent fraud or undue influence. Though no particular relation exists between parties beyond that of great confidence, transactions will be set aside where one party is weak and ignorant and the other by superior knowledge or influence secures an undue advantage.[69] An owner retaining a balance for the general contractor is not under obligation to protect interests of a subcontractor who knows of a transfer to the owner by the general contractor, of all his property after insolvency, but does not act thereon.[70]

§ 4. Remedies.[71]—An action for fraud in concealing that stock sold was diseased is for deceit, and may be instituted in the county of the fraud.[72]

Pleading.—Plaintiff must prove the representation, its falsity, his reliance thereon, the intent to deceive, and damages suffered.[73] The circumstances of the fraud are properly averred where the fraud and damage sustain to each other the relation of cause and effect.[74]

Fraud as a defense should be raised by plea or answer.[75]

Evidence; questions of fact; verdict.[76]—Evidence that the injured person opened negotiations is admissible; also, evidence of a conversation between defendant and a witness before the transaction relating to another matter, was not prejudicial.[77] In an action for fraud, a verdict for defendant as to the issue of fraud, whether on the main issue or the plea of privilege denying the fraud, is a verdict for defendant on the merits.[78]

maintained on any contract not to be performed within a year,[79] but the statute of frauds has no application unless it can be shown that the agreement could not be performed within a year,[80] though in fact it is not performed within that time,[81] nor where it runs for an indefinite time,[82] nor where it might be terminated within the year by the death of one of the parties,[83] or of a third party,[84] or by mutual consent,[85] or by some external force,[86] or by some act of either party without violating its terms;[87] the test being whether performance was possible and not the expectation of the parties;[88] and where the payment of the consideration is the sole act not to be performed within the year it is not within the statute.[89] A subsequent oral acknowledgment will not validate a contract offending this requirement.[90]

§ 2. Promise to answer for debt or default of another.—A collateral agreement to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage[91] must be in writing,[92] but not where the promise is based on a new and substantial consideration,[93] or the promisor has money or property in his hands to pay another's debt,[94] or where the promise is not collateral,[95] or is a novation.[96]

§ 3. Agreements in consideration of marriage.—A parol promise to pay debts,[97] or the conveyance of land in consideration of marriage with the promisor is void.[98]

§ 4. Representations as to character or credit of another.—In some jurisdictions[99] representations as to the credit or character of another must be in writing to render the maker liable,[1] but representations made pursuant to a secret conspiracy to defraud are not within the statute.[2]

§ 5. Agreements with real estate brokers.—In some jurisdictions[3] a contract to pay commissions to a real estate broker must be in writing,[4] and this applies to any person acting as broker, though he may pursue some other vocation.[5] A written promise to pay a certain percentage complies with the statute, though the selling price is afterwards changed by parol.[6]

§ 6. Agreements by executors or administrators.—To charge an executor with personal liability to pay the debt of his testator, the promise must be in writing.[7]

§ 7. Agreements respecting real property or an estate or interest therein.—Other than leases for not more than one year,[8] no estate or interest in land or in any way relating thereto, may be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared unless by act or operation of law or by deed or conveyance in writing subscribed by the parties thereto.[9] To be within the statute, the contract must be one which transfers or creates some interest in land and merely incidental collateral to a conveyance thereof.[10] Thus an agreement to look after land and pay taxes as they accrue,[11] or to divide profits derived from,[12] or to enter into a partnership to deal in, lands, is not within the statute,[13] and similarly the assumption of the mortgage debt by a purchaser from the mortgagor,[14] or a promise by mortgagee to accept a deed of the mortgaged premises in full satisfaction of the debt,[15] or to make a final payment on a land contract is not within the statute,[16] and a parol gift of a land contract is good where no voluntary act on part of the donor or donee remained to be performed.[17] The sale of all the capital stock of a corporation owning real estate does not transfer an "estate" or "interest" in the lands.[18] An oral agreement establishing a boundary line is good for it is assumed that the parties merely decide what is the true line,[19] but not a parol exchange where some interest in lands is transferred,[20] and similarly an agreement to construct works on the land of the promisor or another, such as digging an irrigating ditch[21] or a well,[22] or opening streets, is not within the statute.[23]

Except in a few jurisdictions in equity, an oral promise to enter into a written contract upon a subject governed by the statute of frauds is unenforceable.[24] Thus an agreement to lease for more than one year must be in writing,[25] but not an agreement for a future lease for less than a year,[26] and so an agreement to devise,[27] or an agreement to dedicate ways.[28] A sale of standing timber when its immediate conversion into personalty is not contemplated is treated as a sale of real estate,[29] as is a sale of growing grass,[30] or an agreement to extract minerals.[31]

The creation of an easement must be by a written instrument,[32] and a parol permission to use the land of another amounts to a mere license which may be revoked at any time.[33]

Agreements by heirs for the relinquishment of their interests,[34] or to treat conveyances as advancements,[35] or in the nature of a compromise of their claims,[36] are so related to estates or interests in lands as to come within the statute.

Generally an express trust of lands is not enforceable unless it is in writing,[37] but the statute does not apply to constructive or resulting trusts which are created by operation of law;[38] but the mere refusal to perform an oral trust will not create a resulting or constructive trust,[39] though courts will not permit a man to use the statute as an instrument to commit fraud.[40]

accept part of the goods so sold and actually receive the same or give something in earnest in part payment to bind the bargain.[44] The memorandum is merely evidence of the sale, and is wholly distinct from the contract of sale itself.[45] The statute has to do with executory sales of property[46] and not contracts for work and labor,[47] or for the manufacture[48] or installation upon real property[49] of materials. The phrase "goods, wares and merchandise" is broad enough to cover all kinds of personal property,[50] such as certificates of stock,[51] choses in action,[52] but not the inchoate right to an unissued patent.[53] But where the contract does not contemplate the passing of title but merely the possession as security, it need not be in writing.[54] Unless so required by statute, a trust of personal property need not be in writing.[55]

§ 9. What will satisfy the statute. A. Writing.—The writing requisite to satisfy the statute as to a sale of goods should designate with reasonable certainty (1) the parties, (2) the subject-matter, (3) and in some states the price for which the goods sold.[56] It may be spelled out of one or more written documents,[57] but these must show that a contract was mutually agreed upon,[58] and be so connected, either by reference or otherwise, that no misunderstanding is possible.[59] The tender of an executed deed in performance of a land contract signed by the other party is held to be sufficient compliance with the statute,[60] but a check bearing on its face the statement that it is in "part payment for coal lands" is not sufficient to constitute a written acceptance of a contract for sale of lands,[61] nor an undelivered deed to evidence a land contract,[62] but an improperly executed will may be treated as a contract to devise.[63] The resolution of a corporation authorizing an officer to sell real estate cannot be construed as part of a contract for sale.[64] In the case of a sale of goods the writing need only be signed by the party to be charged, and parol acceptance by the other party brings it within the statute,[65] but where the entire contract must be in writing, the acceptance as well as the offer must be written,[66] and when signed by one party only, it is unenforceable,[67] but it is treated as signed if the name of the party appears at the top, middle or end of the instrument,[68] and where purporting to be executed in duplicate, if one copy is properly made, it is sufficient.[69] An extension of a written lease must be in writing.[70] A telegram signed by the party is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute as to a sale of goods.[71] Auction sales are within the terms of the statute, and to bind the parties the sale must be evidenced by some note or memorandum.[72] Written admissions to third persons of existence of a parol contract are not equivalent to the writing required,[73] but are strong evidence to show the existence of a parol contract when specific performance is sought.[74] The writing should also contain all the substantial terms of the agreement.[75] In some states the consideration must be so expressed as to render parol evidence thereof unnecessary,[76] but if it can be gathered from the entire contract it is sufficient,[77] and in some jurisdictions this requirement is made unnecessary by statute,[78] and even where the consideration must be expressed, the statute does not prevent inquiry as to the true consideration and recovery thereof.[79] The description of the subject-matter is an essential part of the writing,[80] but need only be such as to identify it with reasonable accuracy.[81] It cannot be identified by the words,—"lots to be subsequently picked out" by one of the parties.[82]

At common law the authority of an agent to execute an unsealed instrument need not be in writing,[83] but in many jurisdictions this is changed by statute or decision,[84] and this applies to the authority of a trustee to sell.[85] The statute has no application to the case of an undisclosed principal,[86] and the improperly authorized action of the agent may be ratified by the acts of the principal.[87] sufficient to satisfy the statute,[88] and the memorandum of an auction sale may be executed by the auctioneer.[89]

(§ 9) B. Delivery and acceptance.—The delivery of the goods and acceptance by the purchaser is sufficient to satisfy the statute,[90] and this applies to the delivery of an assignment of a chose in action.[91] There must be manual delivery and acceptance and not merely that which would constitute a sale,[92] and the delivery must be with the assent of the vendor,[93] and where there is no change of custody there must be plain and unequivocal proof that there was an intention to vest possession in the vendee discharged of all liens and the vendee must accept the goods so purchased;[94] and placing the goods in an agreed place where they would still be in the possession and control of the seller,[95] or delivery to a common carrier,[96] or leaving with the vendor who is co-owner,[97] is insufficient.

(§ 9) C. Part payment and earnest money.—The part payment required by the statute must be for the specific goods sold and not on a running account,[98] but need not be made at the time of sale.[99]

§ 10. Operation and effect of statute.—Noncompliance with the statute of frauds, save in the case of sales of goods, does not make the transaction void but merely unenforceable;[1] nor where fully executed may it be set aside;[2] nor is the statute of frauds any bar to an action for a money consideration when the contract is otherwise fully executed,[3] nor to a suit on the common counts for the part fully executed;[4] but no recovery may be had on the executory part of the contract.[5] Moreover, a court of equity will not permit the statute to be used as an instrument for fraud, and in some cases where the parties have so altered their position that damages are inadequate and it would amount to gross fraud not to give relief, specific performance or a constructive trust will be decreed,[6] and some courts place their remedy on the ground of equitable estoppel,[7] but not every case where the nonperformance of a parol agreement whether through ignorance,[8] or otherwise,[9] will be construed as a constructive or resulting trust. Courts of equity will enforce specific performance of a parol contract on the ground of part performance when the agreement is certain and definite,[10] and not subject to a conflict of evidence;[11] the acts refer to and result from the agreement and are evidence thereof,[12] and the contract is so far executed that he cannot be compensated in damages.[13] In case of a parol conveyance or land contract there must be a change of the possession[14] which must be new, absolute, and yielded to by the other party and not a mere continuation of a former possession,[15] and valuable improvements,[16] with assent of grantor.[17] Payment of a money consideration by itself is insufficient.[18] Where the contract is entire and any part is within the statute, the whole must satisfy the statute.[19] Where the statute goes to the validity of the contract as in case of a sale of goods, the law of the state where the contract was made governs,[20] and similarly the law existing at the time the contract was made.[21] The exception of judicial sales from the operation of the statute does not apply to mortgage foreclosures under a power of sale.[22] The defense is personal to the parties, hence a stranger cannot avail of it to avoid the contract;[23] but he may do so to show that a sale of goods to a prior vendee was void.[24] by the statute, demurrer is the appropriate remedy,[26] and in some jurisdictions an answer setting up the statute of frauds against such a complaint will be held bad,[27] though where the fact that contract, unenforceable by the statute, appears for the first time at the trial, an objection to the admissibility of evidence will be sustained.[28] Generally, to take advantage of the statute of frauds it must be pleaded,[29] and that the contract was oral cannot be shown under a general denial,[30] but in some states this is permitted, where, by the terms of the statute, the contract is void,[31] and a general denial by a subsequent purchaser of goods to an allegation of ownership is sufficient to raise the question of the statute of frauds;[32] but where the question of the invalidity is not raised at the trial, it cannot be raised on appeal.[33] Written statements to others, not sufficient to constitute the writing required by the statute, are evidence of an oral promise.[34]

§ 12. Question for court or jury.—A question of fact, such as the authenticity of a signature,[35] or whether there was an acceptance of goods,[36] is a question for the jury.

§ 13. Instructions.—The court should explain to the jury the difference between the acceptance and delivery required by the statute of frauds and that requisite to pass title to a sale of goods,[37] and an instruction that where the contract was unenforceable the parol contract established the rate which the plaintiff was entitled to recover on quantum valebat was also held to be bad,[38] and also that an agreement settling a boundary must be in writing.[39]

a mortgage to secure future advances is valid,[42] but under the statute an unrecorded reservation of title in the seller, the purchaser to have possession or power of disposition, is void as to the latter's creditors.[43] Generally, fraud is never presumed,[44] and the burden of establishing it is on the party averring it,[45] by clear and convincing evidence.[46]

(§ 1) B. Consideration.—A voluntary conveyance is not per se fraudulent as to existing creditors;[47] to render it void it must appear that the grantor was insolvent at the time of the transfer,[48] which the creditor has the burden to prove,[49] and that the creditors[50] seeking relief[51] were prejudiced in the collection of their debts thereby, whether the grantee had notice of the grantor's fraud or not,[52] and a transfer of property exempted from the debts of the grantor[53] as a homestead, cannot be said to prejudice them,[54] unless the property is above the statutory limit in value.[55]

A voluntary transfer may be void as to creditors, though made to a corporation.[56]

A pre-existing debt,[57] though barred by limitations, may constitute a valid consideration,[58] but a conveyance in consideration that the wife would discontinue divorce proceedings is invalid.[59] In the absence of a fraudulent intent that the grantor took in payment stock of the grantee corporation does not render the conveyance fraudulent.[60] A misstatement of the consideration is only presumptive evidence of fraud.[61]

The retention by a debtor in failing circumstances renders the transaction fraudulent as to creditors. Spencer v. Mugge [Fla.] 34 So. 271. The retention of possession by the debtor after a sale renders the transfer void.

unequivocal so as to apprise others that the title to the goods has changed hands;[63] a presumption of fraud arises from the continued possession by the seller,[64] and the burden is on the purchaser to overcome this presumption[65] by proof of payment of a bona fide consideration,[66] and that the vendor's possession was consistent with the bill of sale or unavoidable or for the temporary convenience of the vendee.[67] What constitutes a sufficient change is to be determined from the facts in each particular case,[68] and is generally a question for the jury.[69]

If the transfer is void, notice of the sale will not affect the rights of the creditor.[70]

The mere retention of a stock of goods for a short time by the mortgagor is not of itself sufficient to establish fraud,[71] but if he is permitted to retain possession and dispose of the goods in the ordinary course of business[72] without accounting, the mortgagee renders the mortgage fraudulent as to creditors and subsequent purchasers,[73] and this whether the power is conferred by the terms of the mortgage or by a parol agreement.[74] A contrary rule however prevails in Indiana.[75] To render a chattel mortgage void as to creditors, it must appear that the failure to record was due to an agreement or that prejudice resulted to creditors therefrom.[76] Retention of chattel mortgage from record to avoid injuring mortgagor's credit.[77] The subsequent recording is ineffectual as to existing creditors.[78]

79. State Bank v. Backus [Ind.] 67 N. E. 512. Evidence held insufficient to show change of possession without recorded conveyance so as to render the transfer valid as to creditors. Young v. Evans, 118 Iowa. 144. Burn's Ind. Rev. St. § 3350, applies only to subsequent purchasers, mortgagees and after conveyance while insolvent, while evidence of fraud,[80] is not of itself sufficient to show fraud.[81] If the grantor retains possession of the deed, a creditor whose claim was created between the time of execution and delivery of the deed may attack it as fraudulent.[82]

(§ 1) D. Reservation of benefits and resulting trusts.—Secret trusts generally are void as to creditors,[83] irrespective of the knowledge of insolvency on the part of the transferee,[84] as a reservation of rents to the grantor.[85] A transfer in consideration of a valid debt by an insolvent, with a reservation of a right to repurchase and a percentum of the rents during the life of the option, is not fraudulent as to other creditors.[86] If the purchaser of realty for a valuable consideration causes the title to be conveyed to a third person, the latter holds the property in trust for the creditors of the purchaser.[87]

(§ 1) E. Intent.—An intent to defraud creditors will be presumed from the facts of insolvency of the grantor, and from the lack of consideration,[88] irrespective of intent as to existing creditors.[89] The mere fact that a judgment to avoid which the conveyance had been made, had not been obtained, will not make the conveyance less frauduent as to creditors.[90]

As to subsequent creditors, it must appear that the conveyance was made with intent to defraud them;[91] such an intent need not be proven as an independent fact,[92] and fraudulent intent is shown where the transfer is made in anticipation of entering on a new business.[93]

The fraudulent intent need not be proven beyond a doubt.[94] The mere fact that the corporation gave stock in consideration is not proof of a fraudulent intent.[95]

(§ 1) G. Preferences to creditors.[5]—Generally a transfer to a creditor b way of preference is valid,[6] though the creditor had knowledge thereof,[7] and t the debtor's intent to hinder, delay, or defraud other creditors,[8] but it is otherwi if the creditor participated in the fraud.[9]

(§ 1) H. Relationship of parties.—While transfers between relatives wi be closely scrutinized,[10] yet there is no presumption of fraud from the fact of r lationship.[11] They are however prima facie fraudulent if at the time of tl transfer the transferror was insolvent.[12] If based on a valid consideration tl transfer is not void, regardless of the relation of the parties or the badges of fraud, and in case of conveyances between husband and wife, any presumption of wa of consideration is one of fact and not of law.[14] The husband's consent to h wife's testamentary disposition of her personalty is not a fraud as to his creditors.

The transaction of the wife's business by the husband, whereby she acquires property in her own right, is not a fraud on the husband's creditors.[16] A presumption of fraud arises though, where a husband, while in debt or insolvent, purchases land, taking the title in the name of his wife.[17]

The creditor has the burden of proving that the transfer between relatives was made to hinder, delay and defraud,[18] and the transferee has the burden of proving bona fides[19] and consideration,[20] by clear and satisfactory evidence.[21] and subsequent creditors may avoid a conveyance made pursuant to an agreement between the parties for the purpose of defeating collection of a possible judgment against the grantor,[23] or where the debts were fraudulently contracted.[24] Constructive notice resulting from recording the instrument is not sufficient to bar subsequent creditors from impeaching the conveyance on the ground that it was made with intent to hinder and delay subsequent purchasers.[25]

As to subsequent purchasers from the grantor with knowledge of the fraudulent conveyance it is binding,[26] and the transferee of notes taken in payment of a fraudulent sale takes title thereto if he did not participate in the fraud.[27]

If the contract is executory, equity will leave the parties where their fraud left them;[28] if executed, no estate either legal or equitable, passes as against creditors,[29] but it is binding as between the parties to the contract[30]—though the grantee is the wife of the grantor and participated in the fraud and the grantor retained possession[31]—and their heirs,[32] and representatives except in so far as there is a deficiency of assets to pay debts.[33] On the question of whether the general assignee of the grantor can avoid fraudulent transfers, the decisions are conflicting; in California,[34] Kentucky,[35] Maine,[36] and Ohio,[37] he may, but the contrary rule prevails in Illinois,[38] Montana,[39] and North Carolina.[40] It is, however, generally held that the trustee of the grantor in bankruptcy can avoid any fraudulent disposition of property by him.[41]

The transaction will be held valid only to the amount of the actual consideration,[42] and if the transfer is void as to one creditor of a particular class it is void as to all creditors of the same class.[43] Title is not restored to the transferee by adjudicating the transfer void as to creditors.[44] The creditors of the fraudulent grantee cannot avoid a reconveyance to the grantor prior to any attempt on their part to subject it.[45] The mere fact that a previous mortgage was withheld from record with fraudulent intent will not vitiate a subsequent bona fide mortgage.[46]

A creditor may be estopped from setting aside the transfer.[47]

§ 3. Who may attack and conditions precedent.—Only creditors holding due existing claims against the grantor can avoid the transfer.[48] All classes of claims, including actions ex delicto, are entitled to the benefit of the act,[49] and if the sale is void by reason of the mental incapacity of the seller, he is a creditor entitled to attack a fraudulent mortgage on the goods by the purchaser,[50] but the decisions on the question of whether the claim must first be reduced to judgment or some judicial lien acquired are conflicting.[51] The statutory remedies in aid of execution need not be resorted to before resort can be had to property fraudulently transferred.[52] One who had a valid existing lien on the property cannot raise the question of fraud in the transfer thereof,[53] and if the claim is a secured obligation, the creditor must first exhaust the security.[54]

§ 4. Rights and liabilities of persons claiming under fraudulent grantee.—A bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent grantee takes good title,[55] but notice is chargeable against a purchaser from the grantee from the fact that he had prosecuted an action to avoid the conveyance to his grantor,[56] nor is a judgment creditor of the grantee a bona fide purchaser within the statute.[57]

§ 5. Extent of grantee's liability.—A bona fide transferee is entitled to be reimbursed the consideration.[58] For expenditures to preserve the property against existing liens,[59] such as taxes, the grantee should be reimbursed,[60] but if the payments to remove liens were made as a part of the fraudulent scheme they will not be allowed,[61] and if the transfer was without consideration, he may be charged with the rents and profits.[62] A fraudulent holder with knowledge cannot claim compensation as trustee of the property.[63] The grantee can be held liable only to the extent of the value of the property transferred to him,[64] and only the property transferred to him can be subjected. A personal judgment for the value thereof should not be rendered,[65] except where he had converted the property,[66] or where it has passed to a bona fide purchaser.[67]

§ 6. Remedies of creditors.—A creditor affected may proceed by attachment,[68] followed by judgment,[69] and execution thereon,[70] and after seizure of the property under execution, the creditor may recover possession at law or resort to equity to remove the cloud.[71] If, however, the legal title had never been in the debtor, as where he caused title to the property purchased to be taken in the name of a third person, the creditor cannot enforce by execution but must resort to equity,[72] and a creditor's bill will not lie where the property was fraudulently transferred after the judgment sought to be enforced had become a lien,[73] and though the property transferred is not subject to garnishment, the proceeds realized thereon by the transferee are.[74] The judgment creditor of the mortgagor may, in replevin by the mortgagee, impeach the mortgage on the ground that it was fraudulent.[75] Only judgment creditors can restrain an intended transfer by the debtor,[76] and an injunction to restrain the transferee from disposing of the property will not issue where a money judgment alone is asked.[77]

A receiver pending the action may be appointed.[78]

The creditor's remedy may be lost by reason of his laches,[79] or barred by limitations, and reference to the footnotes will show the time within which the remedy should be resorted to under the various statutes,[80] and the time of the accrual of the action.[81] Attornment by the tenant to the grantee is insufficient to set the statute in motion as to time within which to avoid the transfer.[82]

On the question of whether the grantor is a necessary party, the decisions are conflicting; in Nebraska he has been held a necessary party,[83] but he is not in Missouri[84] or Colorado, where, by the conveyance, he had parted with his interest.[85]

In Virginia the action is not barred by the five year statute (Code, § 2929). Flook v. Armentrout's Adm'r, 100 Va. 638. In Louisiana an action to avoid a preference to a creditor is barred after the lapse of one year. Meyer v. Moss [La.] 34 So. 332. Suit to avoid an undocketed justice's judgment confessed as a preference need not be brought within four months. Nuzum v. Herron, 52 W. Va. 499. In Kansas a delay of two years in reducing the claim to judgment will bar the action to avoid a conveyance by the debtor as in fraud of the creditor. Donaldson v. Jacobitz [Kan.] 72 Pac. 846.

81. The action does not accrue at the time of recording the instrument but at the time of the actual discovery of the fraud. Ohio Rev. St. 1892, § 4982 includes actions to avoid deeds constructively fraudulent. Stivens v. Summers, 68 Ohio St. 421. The statute begins to run from the time of recording the deed where the creditor knew of the purchase but supposed that the title was taken in the debtor's name, title having been taken in the wife's name. Donaldson v. Jacobitz [Kan.] 72 Pac. 846. It begins to run from the time of the sale, under the execution. Brasie v. Minneapolis Brewing Co., 87 Minn. 456. 85. Homestead Min. Co. v. Reynolds, 30 Colo. 330, 70 Pac. 422.

The person through whom the fraudulent transaction was perpetrated, who merely conveyed by quitclaim, is not a necessary party.[86] To an action to declare property purchased, in the name of a third person, to be the property of the debtor, the real purchaser, the vendor is not a necessary party defendant.[87]

The judgment debtor may defend on the ground that the judgment creditor is indebted to him on contracts in a sum greater than the amount of the judgment.[88]

A cause of action to declare additions to the homestead fraudulent as to creditors may properly be joined.[89] A personal judgment cannot be had against the grantee unless so demanded in the petition.[90] In the footnotes are collected the cases construing particular petitions, complaints or bills.[91] The petition need not contain a detailed and accurate statement of the fraudulent act,[92] and answers,[93] the admissibility of evidence in particular instances,[94] and the sufficiency of instructions to the jury, and sufficiency of instructions generally.[95]

§ 7. Priorities between creditors on setting aside conveyances, and disposition of proceeds.—The creditor who first institutes the suit to avoid the conveyance is entitled to priority of payment.[96] The judgment creditor of a fraudulent grantee acquires no rights by virtue of his execution on the property.[97]

GAMBLING CONTRACTS.[98]

§ 1. What constitutes a wagering contract.[99]—On contracts of sale for future delivery, the intention as to actual delivery is the test.[1] The name by which the parties have designated the transaction is immaterial.[2] A mere deposit of margins,[3] or an order to a broker to sell a certain number of shares of a certain stock,[4] will be presumed to be legal. An agreement on the part of a vendor to repurchase at par upon specified notice, does not make the sale a gambling transaction.[5]

A statute prohibiting any person other than the owner of a racing horse from having pecuniary interest in the prizes it wins does not render illegal a contract to train a horse for a specific sum and a percentage of the prize money.[6]

§ 2. Rights and remedies of parties and their privies.—A statute declaring void transactions in futures does not deprive a person of his property without due process of law.[7] Property rights in gambling devices will not be protected,[8] unless the device is capable of an innocent use,[9] nor can the purchase price of a gambling device be recovered.[10] Money held under a wagering contract may be recovered[11] in assumpsit.[12]

11. Mendel v. Boyd [Neb.] 91 N. W. 860. That the money is held by one employed to gamble in futures, does not alter the rule. Munns v. Donovan Commission Co., 117 Iowa, 516. A statute rendering void a mere dealing in futures cannot be invoked to defeat an action to recover margins advanced under rules requiring actual delivery. Parker & Co. v. Moore, 125 Fed. 807.

Statutes in many states allow the recovery back of money lost in gambling.[12] Where the action is in name of third person, defendant may show it is really in interest of loser,[14] and this may be shown under the general issue,[15] but it has been held that collusion between the loser and the person suing is no defense.[16] Action must be brought in county where loss occurred.[17] Giving of notes is not a payment which may be recovered back, nor is payment by sureties on supersedeas bond given on appeal from judgment on such notes.[18]

A medium between two parties to a gambling contract is particeps criminis.[19]

§ 3. Effect of illegality on substituted or collateral contracts or securities.[20]—A loan of money to pay a past gambling debt is not within the statutes,[21] but an advance of money to be used in gambling is,[22] and a judgment for a gambling debt is sometimes made unenforceable.[23] A subsequent promise to pay a note given for a gambling debt is ineffectual if the holder had notice of the defect,[24] but if he had not and was induced by the promise to take the note, it operates as an estoppel.[25] Illegality in a proposed corporate scheme of distribution of property by a drawing is not available to stockholders in defense of an action on the subscription.[26] Under a statute authorizing recovery of money deposited in stock gambling, foreclosure of a mortgage deposited as security may be enjoined.[27]

13. Such statutes do not create a right which cannot be divested by a repeal after the cause of action accrues. Wilson v. Head [Mass.] 69 N. E. 317. St. 1901, c. 459 does not repeal St. 1890, c. 437 except so far as it is inconsistent therewith (Wilson v. Head [Mass.] 69 N. E. 317) and a declaration following the language of the amendment but stating a cause of action under the unrepealed portion of the original act is good (Loughlin v. Parkinson [Mass.] 69 N. E. 319).

33. In Iowa plaintiff must claim more than $5 to entitle him to the writ, and a recovery of less than that amount necessitates his payment of the costs [Code, § 4579]. Insel v. Kennedy [Iowa] 94 N. W. 456.

34. A money judgment against a plaintiff may be the basis for garnishment. Donohoe, etc., Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 Pac. 93.

35. Pope v. Kingman [Neb.] 96 N. W. 519.

36. Only such obligations as would sustain an action of debt. Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Nathan [Ala.] 35 So. 355.

A promise by the garnishee that he would pay defendant a certain amount more than the contract price for work being done is a mere gratuity and does not create the relation of debtor and creditor. Willingham S. & D. Co. v. Drew, 117 Ga. 850.

A credit arising from an obligation given to a wife on a consideration moving from her husband may be garnished in a suit against him. Potter v. Skiles, 24 Ky. L. R. 910, 70 S. W. 301.

It is the proper remedy for a judgment creditor of a corporation to subject unpaid stock subscriptions to the payment of his claim (Henderson v. Hall, 134 Ala. 455), but is not the proper remedy to recover of a third party money which has been equitably assigned to plaintiff and deposited with such party by defendant (Kerr v. Kennedy, 119 Iowa, 239).

37. Funds to become due defendant for performance of public work for a municipality are not subject to garnishment. Building a sewer. Pringle v. Guild, 118 Fed. 655. An undetermined interest of an heir cannot be reached by fieri facias on attachment but the creditor must pursue his remedy in the orphans' court. Ellwanger v. Moore, 206 Pa. 234. A fund which at the time of service is not garnishable, but which becomes so before the garnishee's answer is taken may be held. Funds in executor's hands made payable by order of distribution. First Nat. Bank v. Manning [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1128. Building contract held substantially performed so as to make contract price garnishable. Allen v. Mayers [Mass.] 69 N. E. 220. Payments on building contract held not due and garnishable until completion of building. Mundt v. Shaborn [Wis.] 97 N. W. 897.

38. In some jurisdictions only a debt or liability absolutely owing as a money demand and free from conditions or contingencies is subject to garnishment. Reid v. Mercurio, 91 Mo. App. 673. A claim for unliquidated damages is not garnishable, even after verdict, if before judgment. Wilde v. Mahaney, 183 Mass. 455, 59 L. R. A. 353. A debt arising against an insurance company by virtue of a loss is not exempt from garnishment before adjustment as its amount may be ascertained. Sexton v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 1.

Money due on a policy of fire insurance is subject to garnishment. Id. But the company may show there were no proofs of loss served on it by the assured, and plaintiff may show a waiver of such proofs. Reid v. Mercurio, 91 Mo. App. 673. But assured's interest in a tontine life insurance policy payable to his children is not garnishable, where at the expiration of the tontine period he elected to take one payable to his children at his death. Columbia Bank v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 601. Compare Ellison v. Straw [Wis.] 97 N. W. 168. The claim under a fire insurance policy, after loss, is subject to garnishment. Meridian L. & I. Co. v. Ormond [Miss.] 35 So. 179. A public contractor has no garnishable interest until he has completed his contract and furnished releases of all claims for material, etc., as provided by his contract. Gastonia v. McEntee, etc., Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 359.

39. A purchaser in good faith who has

A debt due a partnership cannot be garnished for the individual debt of a member of the firm.[41] Property held as security is not subject to garnishment.[42] By the statutes of most states, indebtedness evidenced by notes is not subject to garnishment,[43] and notes are not subject to garnishment as property.[44] Distributive shares in a decedent's estate are garnishable,[45] but not the proceeds of an unexecuted testamentary power to sell and distribute,[46] nor a fund in the interest from which a third person has a life estate.[47]

A landlord's interest in crops raised by a tenant on shares may be reached.[48]

Garnishment process cannot be used to interfere with interstate commerce.[49]

§ 4. Persons liable to garnishment.—Unless expressly provided by statute an executor is not garnishable for funds he holds as such,[50] nor is a town,[51] or a county.[52] A receiver,[53] or a sheriff or constable[54] may be.

given his check for the price has so far paid for the article bought that he is not subject to garnishment as the seller's debtor. Prewitt v. Brown [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 897.

Payment in advance, before garnishment, on account of salary yet unearned will defeat garnishment as to wages yet to be earned. Where the garnishee before summons, had advanced defendant, its employe, money on salary account as yet unearned, it was not indebted to defendant and did not become so until the amount so advanced had been earned. Odum v. Macon & B. R. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 619.

40. Boyle v. Musser, etc., L. & M. Co., 88 Minn. 456; Allen v. United Cigar Stores Co., 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 500. The situs of a debt is generally at the place where the creditor is domiciled. Where the defendant was a nonresident and the garnishee's answer did not state where the debt was payable, it was presumed to be at the domicile of defendant and hence without the jurisdiction of the court. Beasley v. Lennox-Haldeman Co., 116 Ga. 13; Pa. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450. A debt due from a New York insurance company for loss sustained in North Carolina has situs in New York. Sexton v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 1. A debt due a nonresident from a citizen of a certain state may be garnished in that state. Dinkins v. Crunden, etc., Woodenware Co., 99 Mo. App. 310. A judgment of a court of one state cannot be subjected to garnishment in another. Boyle v. Musser, etc., L., L. & M. Co., 88 Minn. 456. Proceedings against a life insurance company domiciled in another state begun by service on its agent in the state of the forum are not so entirely without jurisdiction as to be void, but at most are only voidable. Metcalf v. Bockoven [Neb.] 96 N. W. 406.

Neither defendant nor the garnishee can plead that in the state where defendant resides the debt garnished is exempt from execution. Dinkins v. Crunden, etc., Woodenware Co., 99 Mo. App. 310; Sexton v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 1; Pa. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450; Williams v. St. Louis & S. W. R. Co., 109 La. 90.

A nonresident, temporarily in the state, cannot be held in garnishment where his answer shows his nonresidence and that he has no property of the defendant in his possession in the state and is bound to pay him no debt within the state. Pa. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450. Foreign corporations and nonresident individuals stand upon the same footing as regards garnishment except that where a corporation has done business in a state other than its home to the extent of becoming domiciled there it may be garnished in such state. Id.

41. Raley v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 54.

42. Gregg v. First Nat. Bank [Mich.] 97 N. W. 713.

43. But a statute providing that garnishees shall not be liable on negotiable promissory notes does not avoid a judgment based on a disclosure by a garnishee that he owes defendant on notes not stating whether they are negotiable (Harwi Hardware Co. v. Klippert [Kan.] 74 Pac. 254) and where notes and accounts fraudulently acquired by a garnishee have been collected, the funds are subject to garnishment in his hands as property of the grantor (Cottingham v. Greely, etc., Grocery Co., 137 Ala. 149.

44. Being mere choses in action. Cottingham v. Greely, etc., Grocery Co., 137 Ala. 149).

45. A distributee's share in the estate of a deceased person may be reached by trustee process. Howe v. Howe, 97 Me. 422; First Nat. Bank v. Manning [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1128.

46. But the interest of a son in the estate of his father devised to executors to sell and divide the proceeds in a certain way is not garnishable. Harris v. Kittle [Ga.] 45 S. E. 729. But see In re Weeter's Estate, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 241; cf. Ellwanger v. Moore, 206 Pa. 234.

47. Where a widow consents to a sale of lands set apart to her as dower and agrees to hold the proceeds in trust for the heirs having the interest thereon for her own use, such proceeds cannot be garnished as her property. Bank of Odessa v. Barnett, 98 Mo. App. 477.

48. Jolls v. Keegan [Del.] 55 Atl. 340.

49. A railway company having possession of cars of another company employed in interstate commerce is not subject to garnishment as to the cars on its line under contract between the two companies that they shall be unloaded, reloaded and returned to the owning company for delivery. Wall v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 52 W. Va. 485.

50. Harris v. Kittle [Ga.] 45 S. E. 729.

51. Pringle v. Guild, 118 Fed. 655.

In North Carolina, an ordinary debt owing by a town may be garnished. Town of Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 359.

§ 5. Rights, defenses and liabilities between plaintiff and garnishee.—The garnishee must maintain the status quo,[55] but plaintiff acquires no greater rights against garnishee than defendant has,[56] and cannot rightfully enforce any claim against him that will expose him to the liability to pay his debt twice.[57] Neither can he raise the question that an assignment to the trustee by defendant was fraudulent.[58]

An administrator, when garnished as debtor of a distributee of the estate, cannot set off money owing him in his individual capacity,[59] nor contest the judgment in the principal case on the ground that the account filed by the plaintiff was insufficient.[60]

After an attorney has obtained judgment for his services, the defense that the contract is void for champerty cannot be raised in garnishment proceedings to collect the judgment.[61]

The garnishee is interested only in the question whether he has funds of the debtor subject to execution; the solvency of the debtor and the evidence on that question do not concern him.[62]

§ 6. Rights, defenses and liabilities between defendant and garnishee.—Where a debt has been recovered of a debtor under the process of foreign attachment, fairly and not collusively, the recovery is a protection to the garnishee against his original creditor, and he may plead it in bar,[63] but the validity of the garnishment proceedings must be shown,[64] and payment by garnishee of a judgment, void for want of jurisdiction, is no defense to a subsequent suit by the debtor.[65]

Whether or not the garnishee may or should claim for his creditor the benefit of exemptions allowed by law is held differently in different states, some jurisdictions holding that he should.[66]

52. Duval County v. Charleston Lumber & Mfg. Co. [Fla.] 33 So. 531; Michigan Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Duval County [Fla.] 34 So. 245. A default judgment taken against a county as garnishee is void. Id.

53. With leave of court. Yeiser v. Cathers [Neb.] 97 N. W. 840. Rents and profits of lands in the hands of a receiver cannot be garnished. Campau v. Detroit Driving Club [Mich.] 98 N. W. 267.

54. Pierce v. Commercial Inv. Co., 30 Wash. 272, 70 Pac. 496.

55. The garnishee must hold the property in the same condition it is in when he is garnished; failing in this he is guilty of conversion and will be liable to a money judgment; he cannot, after that, be discharged by delivery of the property to the sheriff. Dunning v. Bailey [Iowa] 95 N. W. 248. By turning over money on order of the principal debtor pending an equitable action to enforce payment from him he becomes liable to the creditor therefor. (Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Mosher [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1003), and a transfer of the property by the garnishee after service and before answer does not destroy plaintiff's right to try that question [Rev. St. 1895, art. 240] (Houston Drug Co. v. Kirchhain [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 608).

In Missouri the lien attaches to all credits the garnishee has in his possession at the time of service and all that come into possession between that time and the time of filing his answer. Wages earned by a nonresident head of a family are thus bound (Rev. St. 1899, § 3436). Dinkins v. Crunden-Martin Woodenware Co., 99 Mo. App. 310. Where garnishee disposes of the property after service and before trial judgment may be entered against him. Dictum, the court holding that such judgment was at least good against collateral attack. Eidemiller v. Elder [Wash.] 73 Pac. 687.

56. Wall v. Norfolk R. Co., 52 W. Va. 485; Dole v. Farwell [N. H.] 55 Atl. 553; Town of Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 359; Fidelity Trust Co. v. New York Finance Co. [C. C. 66. Rumbold v. Supreme Council Royal League [Ill.] 69 N. E. 590. That exemption

Payment into court of the full amount of a garnishee's indebtedness to a debtor operates to fully discharge garnishee's debt.[67] Where a garnishee pays a judgment rendered on a claim sent out of the state in violation of the law, he will be protected, it not appearing that he failed to make all defenses known to him.[68]

The debtor cannot maintain a rule against the magistrate for money adjudged subject to garnishment, without first showing that the judgment has been set aside.[69]

§ 7. Conflicting and hostile claims and liens.—Obviously where a fund has been in good faith assigned by the defendant before garnishment, the garnishee is no longer the defendant's but another's debtor, and there is nothing to which the garnishment lien can attach.[70]

The lien of a purchaser or pledgee of stock is superior to that of a subsequent attachment, though the transfer has not been recorded on the books of the corporation.[71]

Plaintiff in garnishment can acquire no lien superior to that of a second mortgagee by garnishing a first mortgagee who has in his hands a surplus arising from a sale under the first mortgage.[72]

Where plaintiff takes a general judgment in the main case and promptly resorts to an equitable suit to enforce payment from garnishees, his lien extends through the equity suit.[73]

Garnishment is superseded by bankruptcy within four months.[74]

An amendment of a prior writ in a mere matter of form will not postpone its lien in favor of a subsequent writ.[75]

§ 8. Jurisdiction and venue.—Courts have no extraterritorial jurisdiction over either persons or property. To maintain a proceeding, there must be jurisdiction over one or the other, or both.[76] An order of garnishment has no effect to give a lien on property beyond the county in which it is granted.[77] is a personal privilege of the debtor that cannot be asserted by a garnishee. Dinkins v. Crunden-Martin Woodenware Co., 99 Mo. App. 310.

68. As he is not obliged to gratuitously defend the main action, nor to appeal, where a true disclosure has been made. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 159 Ind. 688, 60 L. R. A. 396.

69. Lampkin v. Northington, 115 Ga. 989.

70. That the garnishee had no notice of the assignment until after service of the writ is immaterial. Howe v. Howe, 97 Me. 422; Williams v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 199 Ill. 57. Assignment before suit of future wages is valid. Dole v. Farwell [N. H.] 55 Atl. 553. A bank which has received and accepted a check for a deposit and transferred the account to the person presenting the check is no longer the debtor of the original depositor and cannot be held as garnishee. Young v. Bank of Princeton, 97 Mo. App. 576. But a bank check given before but not presented until after service of garnishment summons on the bank, does not act as an equitable assignment pro tanto of the sum named therein. Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 Pac. 93. Assignment of a chose in action pending suit thereon defeats subsequent garnishment of the proceeds of the judgment. A personal injury case (Williams v. West Chicago R. Co., 199 Ill. 57), notwithstanding failure to give notice of assignment on the record (Westminster Bank v. Atherton, 24 R. I. 334). Lease assigned by the lessor in good faith before garnishment of the tenant. First Nat. Bank v. Stone [Iowa] 91 N. W. 1076. Though an assignment of property for benefit of creditors does not become effective until accepted by them so as to relieve it of liability to garnishment, where there is no showing as to whether there was an acceptance it will be presumed. 77. Benedict v. T. L. V. Land & Cattle Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 210.

Several writs may issue to sheriffs of different counties in the same suit.[78]

Where a writ is made returnable to a wrong term and district it may be amended.[79]

§ 9. Affidavit or application for writ.—An affidavit showing the necessary statutory facts as ground for the issuance of the writ is essential.[80]

§ 10. Bond for writ.—The bond and affidavit for a writ in another county need not show the making of copies thereof and transmission to the county where the main case is pending.[81]

§ 11. Writ or process to garnishee and return.—It is essential that there be a valid writ.[82]

The writ may be amended notwithstanding subsequent attachments, and neither the defendant nor the trustee can object,[83] and the plaintiff in a subsequent action is not entitled to notice;[84] but where an amendment would necessitate further service of process and the same result is attainable by service of mesne process, the amendment is properly denied.[85]

The garnishee being a mere stakeholder cannot give the court jurisdiction of the debt due from him by voluntarily appearing when the attempted service on him was invalid.[86]

There must be a return showing a valid service,[87] but a writ is not invalidated by failure of the sheriff to make return in due season.[88]

By appearing and answering without objection a garnishee waives his right to prepayment of his witness fees. Pope v. Kingman & Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 519.

87. A return that the officer summoned the garnishee "to answer touching his indebtedness to defendant" is insufficient. Decker v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 92 Mo. App. 50. Failure to show in the return that the agent of a foreign corporation, on whom

§ 12. Answer or disclosure and later pleadings or traverse.—The answ should disclose all facts and circumstances necessary to a complete understandi of the garnishee's indebtedness.[89]

To charge a garnishee on his own answer, his liability must clearly appe and if there is any reasonable doubt of such liability he should be discharged.[90]

Plaintiff's right against garnishee is governed by what the disclosure its contains rather than by that portion of it specially called to the court's attention

In Rhode Island, the disclosure by an attachment defendant in equity is the discretion of the court.[92]

A garnishee is not interested in an issue between plaintiff and intervenc claiming assignment of the fund, and his answer setting up the same facts plead by intervenors is properly disregarded;[93] but he may defend on the ground th money in his hands belongs to a third person who has not intervened,[94] and whe a garnishee has notice of a claim by a third person on the fund in question a fails to bring it to the notice of the court, he may be charged by such third pers though he has suffered judgment to go against him and has paid it. The thi person is not required to intervene.[95]

A default taken against a trustee may be stricken off at any time before juc ment.[96]

A disclosure may be amended if made under mistake as to the person ow by defendant.[97]

An issue as to the truth of the disclosure is raised by filing an affidavit stati plaintiff's belief and reasons for believing it untrue.[98]

In Michigan, the plaintiff has thirty days after disclosure in which to su mon the garnishee to show cause why judgment shall not be rendered against hi To render judgment against the plaintiff discharging the garnishee on filing disclosure on the return day is error.[99]

Plaintiff's notice of issue to garnishee's original answer stands also as not to an amended answer subsequently filed.[1]

The plaintiff's contest of garnishee's answer is amendable.[2]

§ 13. Claims or interventions.—An intervening claimant may object th the fund due defendant is not garnishable.[3] service was made, resides in the county in which he was served renders the service invalid. Pa. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450. In Missouri, if the return of the constable indorsed on the notice of garnishment fail to set forth that he declared to the debtor that he attached all debts due from him to defendant as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 388, subd. 5, it is void; but where there is also a return on the execution which contains the necessary averment the latter will govern. Kan. & T. Coal Co. v. Adams, 99 Mo. App. 474. Jefferson Cou ty Sav. Bank v. Nathan [Ala.] 35 So. 355

99. Comp. Laws, § 997. Hyde v. Ch wick [Mich.] 93 N. W. 616.

1. Ellison v. Straw [Wis.] 97 N. W. 1

Demurrer is the only remedy for a defective statement of claimant's claim[4] and a defective statement may be amended.[5]

After a garnishment has been abandoned, the garnishee interpleading as claimant of attached goods is not bound by the return but may show that he was in fact not served as stated therein.[6]

Trial of a claim is premature where no service has been had on the defendant and no publication has been made.[7]

Where no fund is found subject to trustee process, the claimant cannot have judgment for more than his costs.[8]

§ 14. Dissolution of writ.—Taking a general judgment and issuing execution thereon is not a waiver of the lien acquired by garnishment; neither is failure to take an order against the garnishee who does not admit liability.[9]

A petition in bankruptcy in which plaintiffs waive all liens and advantages created by prior garnishment proceedings does not amount to an abandonment of the garnishment. On refusal of the federal court to declare bankruptcy plaintiff may prosecute his garnishment.[10]

The giving by defendant of a bond to dissolve a garnishment does not convert the proceeding into a suit authorizing a judgment in personam against the debtor.[11]

A motion to dismiss on the ground that no debt has been seized is premature before the garnishee has answered.[12]

A bond to discharge the garnishee must follow the statute.[13]

Where the garnishee answers that he is indebted to one of two defendants, the other cannot procure the discharge of the writ on filing bond without showing his title to the fund.[14]

Where disclosure shows no funds in the hands of the trustee, he is properly discharged though a bond has been given to dissolve the attachment, and the defendant, being absent, has not been served.[15]

§ 15. Effect of pendency of other proceedings; stay, etc.—Where defendant was sued and his debtor garnished in one state, his subsequent suit and recovery of a judgment against his debtor in another, before the rendition of judgment in the garnishment proceeding, would not preclude payment of the garnishment judgment.[16]

§ 16. Trial, verdict and judgments, costs and execution.—The court must take judicial notice of the existence and provisions of the judgment.[17]

16. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Adams, 159 Ind. 688, 60 L. R. A. 396. In Texas an admission of plaintiff's demand filed by garnishee to obtain the right to open and close admits defendant's indebtedness and garnishee's possession of funds belonging to him. Ferguson, etc., Dry Goods Co. v. City Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 604.

17. The garnishment proceeding being ancillary. Jeffries v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 48; Dinkins v. Crunden, etc., Woodenware Co., 99 Mo. App. 310.

In a garnishment against an insurance company it must be shown that defendant owned the goods covered by the policy to hold the company.[18]

Where garnishee denies liability to defendant, the burden is on plaintiff to show such a relation between them that debt or indebitatus assumpsit would lie against the garnishee.[19]

A garnishee's admissions against interest may be shown by testimony of plaintiff's attorney.[20]

While ancillary to the main suit, a garnishment is a distinct cause of action between different parties requiring a separate and independent judgment.[21]

In Iowa, it is held that no judgment can be taken against the garnishee until proper notice has been served on the principal defendant;[22] while in Georgia, a judgment against the defendant is a pre-requisite to one against the garnishee.[23]

A judgment in favor of the garnishee in a case in which the defendant was not served and did not appear is not binding as between plaintiff and defendant,[24] but where defendant has notice and is in effect a party to the suit, a judgment against the garnishee binds him.[25] A garnishee may be charged with interest.[26]

Where the garnishee's indebtedness has been disputed and judgment rendered in his favor in the garnishment proceedings, such judgment is conclusive of his rights in a subsequent bill in equity to charge him as debtor of the same person.[27]

A judgment against a garnishee that he pay money into court can be set aside only as other judgments are.[28]

On appeal from a justice's judgment discharging garnishees, a final judgment against the garnishees in the first instance for failure to answer is error.[29]

A default judgment taken against a garnishee before expiration of the time in which he may answer is properly set aside.[30]

There is no provision in the law for the recording in one county of an order of garnishment taken in another.[31]

Where in Missouri the justice fails to note in his docket and on the back of the execution an account of the debt, fees, etc., as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 4037, the execution is void and creates no lien.[32]

§ 17. Review.—The return of the officer showing service cannot be impeached on certiorari.[33]

Where the principal defendant, being absent, is not served, an order discharging the trustees is final and appealable.[34]

§ 18. Wrongful garnishment.—Plaintiff is liable in reconvention for suing out a writ of garnishment in a suit against defendant on a ground that did not in fact exist though plaintiff's agent believed its existence.[35]

Injunction is the proper remedy to prevent oppressive garnishments of debtor's exempt wages from month to month.[36]

Prohibition lies from the circuit court to a justice of the peace to restrain him from proceeding with garnishment suits oppressive in their nature and of which he has no jurisdiction though he has erroneously determined that he has.[37]

GAS.

§ 1. Gas franchises.[38]—A gas franchise is of a public nature, and the company has the power of eminent domain,[39] and is bound to supply gas to consumers on reasonable conditions on demand.[40] An ordinance relating to gas supply is to be strictly enforced when accepted.[41] Where a maximum rate is fixed by contract between a city and a gas company, a violation of the contract may be restrained by injunction.[42] A natural gas company has no incidental power to construct and maintain telegraph and telephone lines,[43] nor any right to lay pipes outside the territory granted,[44] and a franchise is void so far as it goes beyond the charter power of the corporation.[45] Consent of municipal authorities is essential to laying of mains in streets.[46]

§ 2. Torts arising out of use or manufacture of gas.—A gas company is not an insurer, but is liable for negligence;[47] and contributory negligence will bar

Evidence merely that there was an escape of gas which caused an explosion held insufficient to show negligence. King v. Consolidated Gas Co., 90 App. Div. (N. Y.) 166. No duty imposed on gas company's servant when making repairs to see that all gas jets in house are turned off, if he notifies the person in charge. Skogland v. St. Paul Gaslight Co. [Minn.] 93 N. W. 668. Gas company owes recovery.[48] The measure of damages to property from explosion of gas is the reasonable cost of restoring the property to its former condition.[49]

§ 3. Crimes and offenses.—A statute imposing a penalty for escape of natural gas is constitutional as an exercise of police power.[50]

GIFTS.[51]

§ 1. Definition and distinctions.—The essential distinction between a gift and a contract transferring property is that the former is not and the latter must be founded upon a consideration.[52] The distinguishing feature of a gift causa mortis is that it be made in expectation of death, during the last illness of the donor or on an occasion of peril.[53] Gifts of this kind are on an implied condition that the donor die of such illness or peril and are revokable during his lifetime, while gifts inter vivos are absolute,[54] but subject thereto, it must go into immediate effect.[55]

§ 2. Validity and requisites.—To constitute a gift either causa mortis or inter vivos, there must be a clear intent to give;[56] a delivery which, as has been said, must be absolute in case of a gift inter vivos and conditional in case of a gift causa mortis;[57] and acceptance of such delivery.[58] Neither the gift nor the no duty generally to inspect pipes in a private house, even though long out of use. Smith v. Pawtucket Gas Co. (R. I.) 52 Atl. 1078.

48. Sleeping in vicinity of escaping gas not contributory negligence. Apfelbach v. Consolidated Gas Co., 204 Pa. 570. Allowing a tenant to cause gas to be introduced into defective pipes is contributory negligence of the owner and the company is not liable to such owner. Smith v. Pawtucket Gas Co. (R. I.) 52 Atl. 1078. Standing near an inspector looking for a leak with a lighted match. Tipton L. H. & P. Co. v. Newcomer [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 548. The term "natural flow" within the meaning of statutes prohibiting its increase, means the entire volume of gas that will issue from the mouth of a well, when retarded only by the atmospheric pressure, and hence the "natural flow" is not increased by pumping, unless the back pressure is removed to such an extent as to cause suction. acceptance thereof need be in writing,[59] unless the gift be of land.[60] The delivery must deprive the donor of all control, but need only be such as the nature of the article given reasonably admits of.[61]

Delivery of a note of donor, being a mere promise, is not a completed gift.[62]

§ 3. Fraud, undue influence, mistake or incapacity.—To be valid, a gift must be free from fraud,[63] undue influence,[64] or mistake,[65] and the donor must be competent to contract.[66]

63. Bishop v. Leonard, 123 Fed. 981. A gift of real or personal property by a husband to his wife, made in ignorance of the fact that she has had illicit relations with another man and contemplates the continuance of such relations, may be revoked by

GOOD WILL.

Good will is property[67] subject to sale[68] or bequest,[69] and passes with the estate to a trustee in bankruptcy,[70] or to a surviving partner purchasing the interest of deceased;[71] and one who transfers it must not solicit orders of same character among old customers,[72] but may engage in the same business in the same locality.[73] Right to the use of a "firm" name passes under a sale of its good will.[74]

GRAND JURY.[75]

Terms or sessions.[76]—A county law and equity court created by special act with powers of circuit, chancery, and county courts, may organize a special grand jury.[77] Where the statute provides for discharge "on completion of its business," the authority of the court to excuse it temporarily is not limited.[78]

Selection.—Where the grand jury has been discharged by reason of the irregularities in summons, jurors may be summoned from the body of the county.[79] Exclusion of negroes, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a negro, is a denial of the equal protection of the laws.[80]

Qualifications of grand jurors.—A grand jury summoned before a statute becomes operative cannot be impaneled thereunder where previously existing rethe husband upon the discovery of the facts. Evans v. Evans [Ga.] 45 S. E. 612.

64. The influence must have been such as to destroy free agency. Citizens' Loan & Trust Co. v. Holmes [Wis.] 93 N. W. 39; Prescott v. Johnson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 891. A married woman may make a valid gift to her husband. Where, therefore, a gift has been made by a wife to her husband, and the transaction is free from fraud, oppression, and all undue influence, it will be sustained. Fritz v. quirements relating to selection and qualification are substantially different and are not continued in force until the new law becomes operative,[81] and a grand jury previously drawn impaneled after the statute takes effect and before the operation of a law enabling previously drawn juries to serve their terms is void.[82] Qualifications prescribed generally demand that the juror be an elector,[83] unbiased,[84] free from imputation of crime,[85] and, in certain states, taxpayers.[86]

Oath.—A recital in the indictment that the grand jurors aforesaid were duly sworn, is sufficient.[87]

Objections and challenges.—A statute applying provisions covering qualifications, exemptions, drawings, etc., of petit jurors, does not extend all the grounds of challenge to petit jurors to grand jurors.[88] Objections to the mode of summoning the grand jury may be taken only by challenge of the array or motion to quash.[89] Failure to challenge the array is not a waiver of discrimination in selection of the grand jury where defendant has had no opportunity to do so,[90] but failure to afford accused an opportunity to challenge the grand jury will not invalidate the indictment where none of the grounds of challenge exist.[91] Challenges to individual grand jurors based on the ground of prejudice or bias must be interposed before they are sworn though defendant had not previously been bound over to await the action of the grand jury.[92] Irregularities not affecting qualifications must be attacked by challenge for cause.[93] Irregularities in the drawing of the jury will not invalidate it where it affirmatively appears that no possible injury could accrue to the defendant.[94]

Secrecy of deliberations.—Members of the grand jury cannot be questioned for the purpose of impeaching the indictment,[95] and if the right is conceded it

83. The fact that a grand juror's name does not appear on the poll books, and has not voted, or that the sheriff does not succeed in locating him, or another man having a wide general acquaintance in the neighborhood has no knowledge of such person, does not show that he is disqualified as a grand juror as not being an elector. State v. Harris [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1093.

84. An opinion unfavorable to defendant based on evidence heard in a trial of a civil action, is a disqualification though the grand juror states under oath that he acted impartially and fairly, and Pen. Code, § 396, subd. 6, provides that in case of such oath no person shall be disqualified on account of an opinion founded on public rumor. People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 426, 73 Pac. 153.

85. Acts 1898, No. 135, § 1, providing that persons to be eligible must not be charged with any crime or offense or convicted at any time of any crime or offense punishable by hard labor, etc., does require the disqualifying charge to be of an offense punishable by hard labor. State v. Nicholas, 109 La. 84.

86. Failure to pay poll taxes under an after enacted statute is not a disqualification. Indictment was returned Jan. 15, 1903, and statute passed Nov., 1902, required payment of poll taxes before Feb. 1. Cubine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 396.

Ford v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 301.

95. Cannot be asked whether the indictment in the case was either read, presented to, or voted on by the grand jury, or whether in the return of such indictment cannot be exercised in another court to which the record has been removed.[96] return into court and entry on the minutes no part of presentments signed the grand jurors can be attacked on the ground that the grand jurors had participated.[97] The rule requiring secrecy of proceedings does not preve evidence of the grand jurors being received to impeach a witness,[98] or prev grand jury from compelling a witness to produce papers before them by m contempt proceedings based on a report to the court.[99]

Persons entitled to be present.—It is not a ground for quashing an ment that a member of the bar appointed by the court to assist the county a appeared before the grand jury and examined witnesses, though the appoi of an assistant to the county attorney is not authorized before trial.[1] A rapher for the solicitor for the state may be present at the proceedings of the jury for the purpose of transcribing evidence.[2]

Proceedings and return of indictment.—A special grand jury called o mission of an offense during a session of court and after discharge of the jury need not be limited by a description of the offense or designation of the accused in the order.[3] Where the court, after refusal of the jury to indict son, by a charge virtually directs them to do so, the indictment is void.[4] T sumption of existence of proper evidence is not overcome by the fact that th in his charge read affidavits tending to show commission of the crime for defendant was indicted.[5]

A witness cannot refuse to obey a subpoena to produce books and for the grand jury, on the ground that their contents are immaterial.[6]

Fees.—Federal grand jurors are entitled to mileage for four sing where after attendance on the first day of the term they are discharge a late day, when they attend and are dismissed.[7]

and not a pledge or mortgage of property for another's debt.[10] There must be a subsisting and contemplated debt or otherwise it is a contract of indemnity,[11] or a novation,[12] or an original promise.[13] The debt must be of another;[14] where a promise is founded on a consideration which subserves some interest or purpose of the promisor,[15] or is to pay from a fund placed in his hands for that purpose,[16] it is generally said to be an original promise and it is immaterial in either case that the debt of another also subsists and incidentally will be paid.[17] A promise as to quality, value, character, or worth, is properly a warranty,[18] though sometimes called a guaranty, but courts do not apply the principles of the law of guaranty to such promises.[19] And similarly where negotiable paper is transferred by indorsement the former owner is liable as an indorser but not as guarantor.[20] But the guaranty of payment or indorsement in blank on back of a note does not make the guarantor an indorser when he has no interest in the note;[21] but one may show by parol evidence what liability was intended to be assumed.[22]

§ 2. Form and requisites of the contract.—A promise to pay debts which may arise in the future is called a "continuing guaranty" and is in fact a standing offer of guaranty;[23] but unless the instrument admits of no other construction, this is not presumed.[24] To be binding on the promisor, an offer of guaranty must be accepted by the creditor within a reasonable time,[25] and this must be com-

Promises held to be original: Cox v. Peltier, 159 Ind. 355; Champlain Const. Co. v. O'Brien, 117 Fed. 271, 788. The giving of credit to promisor alone or with the other debtor is evidence of the character of the transaction (Burson v. Bogart [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 605), but not conclusive (Kesler v. Cheadle [Okl.] 72 Pac. 367; Indiana Trust Co. v. Finitzer, 160 Ind. 647), and is a question for the jury (Kesler v. Cheadle [Okl.] 72 Pac. 367). Where goods are delivered to a third party at the request of another the debt will be presumed to be that of the party ordering and not of him to whom the goods are delivered (Cox v. Peltier, 159 Ind. 355), but the obtaining of a judgment against the debtor is conclusive that creditor did not regard the promisor as primarily liable (Beard v. Hoffman [Mich.] 95 N. W. 707).

municated to the promisor;[26] but notice of acceptance may be waived.[27] There must be a new consideration for a promise to pay a pre-existing debt,[28] and if in fact there is no consideration, a provision of the Code that all contracts in writing import a consideration will not cure it;[29] but in New York where a written guaranty recites a valuable consideration for a promise to pay a pre-existing debt, that is sufficient,[30] and under the present amended New York Code, the consideration for a contract of guaranty need not be recited in the instrument.[31] Actual forbearance to sue for a reasonable time is sufficient consideration to support a contract of guaranty,[32] but not a promise of forbearance for an indefinite time.[33]

By the statute of frauds a guaranty must be in writing.[34]

§ 3. Operation and effect of guaranty. A. Interpretation in general.—A contract of guaranty must be interpreted according to the evident intention of the parties,[35] and as favorably to the creditor as any other written contract.[36]

(§ 3) B. Fixing default and liability of guarantor.—In the absence of objection at trial, the admissions of the principal as to the amount of the debt are binding on the guarantor.[37] A pre-requisite to liability of the guarantor is that there must be a demand of payment on a default by the principal debtor,[38] and generally this is sufficient to render the guarantor liable,[39] but in some jurisdictions the creditor must first exhaust all remedies against the solvent principal debtor;[40] but even then after the security for a debt is sold, the creditor can call on the guarantor for payment without first taking a deficiency judgment against the debtor.[41] Failure to notify the guarantor of default of the principal debtor within a reasonable time discharges the guarantor pro tanto,[42] but this notice may be waived.[43] Irrespective of fraud or knowledge of the creditor, a guarantor can recover from him the amount paid on the representation that the debtor was in default.[44]

(§ 3) C. Persons benefited by guaranty.—Where the guaranty is of a contract already made which is definite in extent and amount, unless the contrary appears to be the intention of the parties, it is assignable along with the principal debt.[45]

(§ 3) D. Defenses and discharge of guaranty.—The contract between the creditor and the guarantor may be set aside when fraudulently procured,[46] and where the guaranty is for an illegal purpose it is not enforceable.[47] Where there is a real or equitable defense to the principal debt, it is a defense to the contract of guaranty.[48] A release of the principal or co-guarantors discharges the other guarantors pro tanto,[49] and the extension of time of payment without his consent discharges the guarantor absolutely,[50] except in cases which leave no defense to the principal debtor to suit by the creditor at the time the guarantor's liability accrues.[51] The creditor if so instructed is bound to apply security he may have in his hands to payment of the principal debt before having recourse to the guarantor,[52] and unless the guaranty is continuing the creditor is bound to apply the first payments on a debt to the discharge of the guarantor.[53] That the principal has a personal defense against the creditor is no defense to the guarantor.[54]

§ 4. Rights and remedies between guarantor, principal debtor, and co-guarantors.—On default of the principal debtor and payment of the debt, a right to sue the principal for indemnity immediately accrues to the guarantor entirely independent of his right to be subrogated to the principal debt.[55] Where several persons are liable on the same guaranty, the presumption is they are liable to contribute equally but this may be rebutted; yet this presumption holds good even when some of the guarantors are sureties on the principal debt.[56] They may be sued jointly in one action even in states where the guarantor and principal must be sued separately.[57]

§ 5. Action on guaranty.—A guaranty must be specially declared on,[58] and performance of conditions by plaintiff must be specifically alleged.[59] Performance of the act guaranteed may be shown under a general denial.[60]

GUARDIANS AD LITEM AND NEXT FRIENDS.

§ 1. Necessity or occasion for appointment.—A guardian ad litem or next friend should be appointed whenever an infant[61] or incompetent[62] sues or is sued.[63]

§ 2. Qualification and appointment.—The person appointed should be impartial,[64] but need not be a resident of the state.[65] A guardian ad litem or next friend may be appointed to continue an action begun by a minor,[66] or one begun by a guardian who was not qualified.[67] The proceedings for appointment are within a general statute permitting amendments.[68]

§ 3. Powers and duties.—The guardian may assert rights on his own behalf in the same action,[69] and may, if he act in good faith, buy property of the ward.[70] Proceedings should be had in the name of the guardian,[71] but the minor is the real party in interest,[72] and the guardian cannot satisfy the judgment on part payment,[73] and his right to dismiss the action is not absolute,[74] while a ward who took an appeal may himself dismiss it.[75] A ward, upon approaching majority, may bind herself by acts inconsistent with advice of guardian ad litem.[76] In some states, the guardian ad litem is liable for costs,[77] and may sue in forma pauperis.[78] Where compensation is allowed the guardian, it should be moved for in the lower court.[79]

the infant controls jurisdiction[82] and an infant abandoned by parents and committed to a public institution is a resident of the county wherein the institution is situate.[83] In the case of a non-resident infant situs of property controls and a simple contract obligation is not property within the state.[84]

By statute in some states a testamentary nomination may be made,[85] and infants above fourteen years of age may nominate their guardian.[86] As between several parties entitled to letters the selection is within the court's discretion,[87] the welfare of the infant being the primary consideration,[88] and except for sufficient reasons the surviving mother should be appointed,[89] even over a testamentary appointment by the deceased father.[90]

In Louisiana the under tutor may make the application.[91] The father of the infant is entitled to notice of application for the appointment.[92] It is proper to require a bond in double the amount of the inventory,[93] though the mere failure to require a bond will not invalidate the proceedings.[94] If the oath describes the appointee as guardian it need describe him as guardian of the person and estate of the minor.[95]

The order appointing a guardian is appealable,[96] and it is not subject to collateral attack,[97] for mere irregularities in the appointment.[98] It may, however, be collaterally attacked for want of jurisdiction[99] but the failure to require a bond is not a jurisdictional defect.[1]

Removal of an appointee is generally discretionary with the court[2] and if this management of the trust property is adverse to the interests the ward has he should be removed.[3] Change of residence by the guardian will not oust the appointing court of jurisdiction to remove him.[4] Before a successor can be appointed the original appointee should be removed.[5] Notice need not be given on appointing a successor to a removed guardian.[6]

The relationship is terminated by the majority of the ward,[7] and at common law by the marriage of the female ward.[8]

The existence of guardianship must be shown by record.[9]

§ 2. Custody, support, and education of the ward.—A mere application for letters does not confer on the applicant a present right to the custody of the infant.[10] In determining the right of the guardian to the custody of the person of the ward, the controlling consideration is the present and prospective welfare of the minor,[11] and the right of a foreign guardian to the custody of a resident minor is recognized only as a matter of comity.[12]

While expenditures for education and support of the ward should be made only after leave obtained, the court will, in proper cases, allow a credit therefor,[13] as where they were reasonable, and did not exceed the income of the estate,[14] and in computing income the expenditures for support and the income should run concurrently.[15] In case of rents as income which the guardian may expend for necessaries without leave of court, expenses for taxes, insurance, and repairs should first be deducted.[16] If the ward renders services for the guardian which fully compensate him for support, he will not be allowed therefor.[17] The allowance for board and clothing by the probate court is binding on the appellate court unless made through fraud and collusion on the part of the guardian.[18]

liable for necessaries furnished the ward by third persons,[19] and in case of a contract he is personally liable thereon.[20]

§ 3. Powers, duties, and liabilities of guardians.—Whether the property shall be surrendered to a foreign guardian depends on whether the removal would be for the best interests of the ward.[21] In respect to the ward's estate, the guardian has only a naked power not coupled with an interest.[22]

In the management of the property, a guardian is bound to exercise such care as a prudent man would in the conduct of his own business,[23] and for losses resulting from his negligence he will be personally charged.[24] Generally, the principal estate should be encroached upon for expenses only in cases of great necessity.[25] For advancements by the guardian to protect the property, he is entitled to a lien.[26]

A guardian cannot without leave of court bind the estate by contract,[27] even though made in the conduct of a general merchandise business authorized by the court;[28] he cannot therefore compromise a claim in favor of his ward,[29] or employ an agent to effect a sale of the realty,[30] or bind the estate for improvements made thereon,[31] or to mortgage[32] or lease the realty.[33] He will, however, be credited with expenditures which would have been allowed if application had been made.[34] The estate may be liable on contracts for services necessary for its preservation as with attorneys to defend or prosecute suits,[35] but not for expenses of an agent in the collection of rents where the property is not so situated as to justify the employment.[36] If the contract was such as the guardian could make, that he signed it in his individual as well as representative capacity will not make it a joint contract.[37]

Investments should be made only on authorization.[38] The guardian is chargeable with the funds loaned without leave of court,[39] or loaned on personal credit.[40]

On money he should have put at interest, he will be charged interest.[41] If he used the funds in his own business, he should be charged with the amount with interest,[42] or if he occupies premises belonging to the ward, he will be charged with the rental value.[43] For funds received by the guardian without authority, the estate cannot be charged.[44]

The guardian is liable for taxes accrued on the ward's property while in his possession.[45]

The guardian cannot make admissions against the interests of his ward.[46]

In case of guardianship of two or more wards, the estate of one cannot be charged with commissions on disbursements on account of the other,[47] and each guardian acting is liable for his own acts of maladministration.[48]

The unauthorized acts of the guardian may be validated by ratification by the ward after majority,[49] and a retainer of the articles purchased by the guardian without authority is a ratification.[50] Since dealings between the guardian and ward after the ward arrives at majority will be closely scrutinized, a transfer immediately after majority of a share of the estate in consideration of love and affection is invalid,[51] but in the absence of fraud, a settlement with the guardian after majority of the ward is binding.[52]

of the sale are mere irregularities not invalidating the sale;[60] but the sale is void if the court authorizing it was without jurisdiction,[61] or if it was made privately.[62] Where a part of the consideration for the sale was the satisfaction by the purchaser of a claim against the guardian, the sale is void,[63] but merely because, before applying for leave to sell, the guardian procured the obligation of an intending purchaser to bid an adequate price or because after the purchase he advanced the amount of the bid,[64] or because the guardian purchased by permission of the court, will not render the sale invalid.[65] The probate court may, on the guardian's application, authorize a conveyance to cure irregularities in proceedings.[66] A surrender at a discount of the purchase-money notes to the purchaser by the guardian will not relieve the purchaser from liability.[67]

§ 5. Presentment and allowance of claims.—Directing payment of a claim on an ex parte application is improper.[68] In Kansas, the probate court is without jurisdiction to allow claims arising on contracts with the guardian,[69] and in Rhode Island it cannot be allowed on petition, and can only be allowed on settlement of the final account with the consent of the guardian.[70] A claim under a contract by a guardian which is binding on the estate may be presented as an ordinary claim,[71] and the petition for the allowance need not aver that the contract was reasonable.[72] The issuance of a summons is not a prerequisite to allowance,[73] nor is the entry of the approval on the court's minutes necessary.[74] The allowance of a claim can be received only by appeals.[75]

§ 6. Actions by and against guardians.—The guardian may represent the wards in an action in which he has a personal interest.[76] A guardian cannot maintain an action for deceit by one purchasing the ward's property from him.[77] An action against the guardian will not lie on a debt of the ward.[78] An action,

"A, guardian for C and D, infants," is a personal action against the guardian,[79] and a judgment against a guardian not describing him as such is a personal judgment against him.[80]

§ 7. Accounting and settlement.—The ward's right to sue for an accounting may be barred by limitations.[81] Delay in issuing the citation will not affect the court's jurisdiction if it is issued before publication is commenced.[82] The mere omission of the word "seal" in the copy citation published is immaterial.[83] Citation to "report" after majority of the ward means to render the final account.[84] Objections to account must be made in the probate court.[85] The order settling the particular items of account is conclusive,[86] but an annual settlement is not a judgment binding on the sureties.[87] In case of death of the guardian pending an appeal from a decree settling his accounts, there being no necessity for administration on his estate, his heirs may be made parties.[88] The giving of a note by the guardian for the balance due the ward does not discharge the liability.[89] The guardian may be required to deposit the funds in court.[90]

§ 8. Compensation of guardian.—Allowance for compensation is within the discretion of the court.[91] Negligent conduct whereby losses result to the estate will cause a forfeiture of commissions.[92]

§ 9. Liabilities on guardianship bonds and actions thereon.—To be released from liability as surety, the surety must pursue the statutory methods.[93] The sureties are not liable for any misapplication prior to the execution of the bond.[94] That the guardian loaned the funds without leave of court will not release his sureties.[95] They are liable for the ward's funds borrowed by the guardian,[96] and a conversion of the proceeds of a note is a breach of the bond which continues as to the second bond where the guardian carries over the note in his final accounts.[97] After death of the guardian, the surety is not liable for interest until after demand made on him,[98] and attorney's fees on accounting by the surety will not be allowed.[99] The sureties on the original bond and on the bond in proceedings for the sale of realty by the guardian are jointly liable for the proceeds of the sale.[1] If the ward's estate is being administered jointly, the guardian's sureties are liable to each of the wards for his share.[2] The sureties' liability continues until actual payment to the ward.[3] On payment by the surety he is entitled to be subrogated to the successor guardian against the parties knowingly participating in the original conversion.[4]

A settlement of the accounts is a condition precedent to suit on the bond,[5] but if it is impossible to procure an account, as where the guardian had absconded, an action may be brought on the bond.[6]

The action may be maintained by the ward after his majority,[7] or by the assignee of his judgment against the guardian,[8] and by creditors of the ward whose claims have been reduced to judgment.[9] The general guardian may maintain an action on the bond of his deceased predecessor.[10] The successor guardian may properly maintain a single action to recover for several conversions by his successor against the parties severally liable.[11] The limitation against actions on bonds begins to run from the time of the judicial ascertainment of the principal's liability,[12] or from the majority of the ward since that terminates the relationship,[13] and at common law, from the time of the marriage of the female ward.[14]

writ,[17] and does not lie to review mere errors and irregularities,[18] but only to relieve from imprisonment without jurisdiction;[19] but considerable liberality is usually exercised in deciding what are jurisdictional questions.[20]

In urgent cases, the federal courts grant summary relief by habeas corpus to persons imprisoned by state authorities for acts done under the federal laws or constitution.[21] The exercise of this jurisdiction is, however, a delicate matter and consistently restricted to extraordinary cases,[22] and in general, Federal courts interfere only to enforce Federal statutes or the guaranties of the Federal constitution.[23] The legality of proceedings for international extradition may be tried by habeas corpus in the Federal courts;[24] likewise the legality of the deportation of immigrants alleged to be unlawfully in the country.[25] A person held for interstate extradition may, upon habeas corpus, try the various issues determining the legality of his detention.[26] Commitments for trial by magistrates are reviewed by means of habeas corpus.[27]

It is necessary for the issuance of the writ of habeas corpus that a person be held in custody,[28] but there may be constructive custody.[29] By the weight of authority one enlarged on bail is not constructively in custody.[30] Release on own recognizance and surrender for purpose of writ is insufficient.[31] Various kinds of custody which have been passed upon are given in the note.[32] The doctrine of res adjudicata applies to petitions for writs of habeas corpus and the dismissal of one petition ends the petitioner's rights unless new facts arise.[33] Persons held on an indictment which the court, in which it is pending has power to dismiss, should apply to that court before seeking relief on habeas corpus.[34]

§ 2. Jurisdiction.—The writ of habeas corpus may be issued by courts of general common-law jurisdiction without special statutory authorization.[35] The judge of an inferior court may, upon habeas corpus, discharge a person held under a void judgment of a superior court.[36] An application by the custodian of a child to the court of ordinary for letters of guardianship does not affect the father's right to sue out habeas corpus.[37] The place of detention fixes the jurisdiction of the habeas corpus judge without reference to the residence of the detaining person.[38] State courts cannot grant writs of habeas corpus to try the validity of restraint imposed by officers of the United States,[39] but Federal courts occasionally interpose to release persons held under state authority.[40]

case by affidavit in his application.[41] The applicant may be either the prisoner or another for his benefit.[42] When the petitioner is not the prisoner, the allegations in the petition may be upon information and belief.[43]

§ 4. Hearing on petition and issuance of writ.—Habeas corpus is a legal proceeding but not one triable to a jury.[44] No one has the right to appear and object to the issuance of the writ in cases of illegal imprisonment.[45] The writ of habeas corpus should be addressed to the individual having the actual physical custody of the person held or if this is impracticable to some one party to the detention, and not to a corporation although it be liable for the detention.[46] It is the duty of the judge to refuse to proceed to the hearing until the body of the person is produced or satisfactory excuse given.[47] If the prisoner is not produced, the court may issue an alias writ or attachment for contempt.[48]

§ 5. The writ; service thereof; effect of writ.—After the issue of the writ of habeas corpus, the prisoner is in the custody of the court issuing the writ and is not held under the original commitment.[49] An appeal from an order remanding petitioner upon habeas corpus proceedings which the prisoner had brought because of delay before his trial does not however necessitate a postponement of his trial for the crime.[50] If the custodian of a prisoner knowing that a writ of habeas corpus directed to him has been issued takes active steps to get the prisoner out of the state before service of the writ, he is guilty of contempt of court.[51] Under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1320, bail is not allowed to a Chinaman seeking to land in the United States and applying for a writ of habeas corpus.[52]

§ 6. Certiorari in aid of habeas corpus.—A person imprisoned as guilty of a crime may use certiorari as ancillary to habeas corpus to bring up the record of the proceedings leading to his imprisonment.[53] The combination of certiorari with habeas corpus does not bring up the evidence for review but leaves the issues the same, viz., the jurisdiction of the court and expiration of the sentence.[54]

§ 7. Hearing and determination on return; judgment costs.—After the writ has issued, the sufficiency of the petition cannot be tested by demurrer, but insufficient averments in the petition are sometimes held ground for motion to quash the writ. This practice is disapproved.[55] In habeas corpus proceedings, strictly speaking, no judgment is rendered against any one, but the judgment simply fixes the status of the imprisoned person.[56]

§ 8. Review.—At common law, there is no right of appeal in habeas corpus proceedings.[57] Under the modern practice, however, an appeal is generally provided for.[58] After indictment, the prisoner cannot prosecute an appeal from a

HABITUAL DRUNKARDS.

A commission should not be appointed without notice to the alleged incompetent.[61] Habeas corpus for release from custody of a committee may be brought on the ground of reformation.[62] Discharge is not prevented by statutory provisions for remand to custody if in habeas corpus it is found that relator is detained by final order of a competent tribunal in a special proceeding.[63] The committee cannot complain if the release is on probation.[64]

HARMLESS AND PREJUDICIAL ERROR.[65]

§ 1. The general doctrine.—Generally speaking, a judgment will not be reversed or a verdict set aside or other proceeding overthrown because of error of which it can be said that no harm resulted to the complaining party,[66] even though peal by petitioner. Gaster v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 787.

Review being restricted to the "record" and to properly saved objections therein, the appellate court will not go into the reasons for a decision unless considered by the trial court and properly saved for review.

he has properly saved his objection and excepted to the ruling,[67] and has regularly preserved it in the "record."[68] The policy of courts is against so doing.[69]

The party must affirmatively show error apparent on the "record."[70] It must harm him rather than a co-party,[71] and must be one which he has not invited,[72] and which he can assail without inconsistency to his contentions made on the trial.[73]

Prejudice not presumed from facts shown. —Mode of testifying to plaintiff's injuries

Errors which favor the party objecting are of course not ground for reversal,[75] nor are such as may be corrected without resort to a new trial.[76]

§ 2. Triviality constituting harmlessness.—An error is harmless if too trivial in its nature or consequences to have substantially influenced the result.[77] The weakness of the evidence may augment,[78] or its strength diminish, the importance of error.[79]

Cases applying these principles to errors or irregularities in process or appearance,[80] parties,[81] pleadings and formation of issues,[82] provisional and interlocutory in evidence is innocuous in a trial of facts by the court as in equitable actions where it may be supposed he founded his decision solely on proper proofs.[91] An improper mode of questioning or an erroneous ruling on a proper question may be harmless because of the answer given,[92] or the lack of an answer.[93] Applications of these doctrines to cross-examination[94]—which is largely controlled by discretion of the court[95]—and to the order of taking proof,[96] and to the rulings on motions to strike evidence,[97] and the reception of affidavits and depositions,[98] are cited below. A few illustrative cases wherein errors respecting evidence have been held prejudicial are collected.[99] go v. Le Moyne [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 662. Further opinion. Illinois Steel Co. v. Sitar, 199 Ill. 116.

The court has discretion to reject cumulative evidence under proper circumstances. See Trial.

Improper argument or conduct of counsel or interference with the right to open and close may be disregarded if without material effect on the result.[1] The same is true of remarks by the court.[2]

Error in instructing the jury or refusing to do so is ground for reversal when the jury has been misled or it has been efficient to the result declared in the verdict.[3] If as in equitable issues the verdict is merely advisory, such error is presumably harmless.[4]

HEALTH.[26]

§ 1. Health and sanitary regulations. Power to adopt measures for public health.—Legislative regulation of the length of hours of labor in industries not considered healthful is justified under the police power,[27] as are provisions for the licensing of barbers,[28] or requiring locomotive firemen to prevent the escape of smoke from their locomotives.[29]

A city under a power to regulate the removal and disposition of garbage and refuse has power to grant an exclusive right for a term of years to those erecting a crematory.[30] A board of health cannot prohibit the collection of refuse from a sanitarium for consumptives, where it is not shown that such refuse is more dangerous to health than from hotels or other public houses.[31]

Precautions against contagious diseases.—A Christian Science healer is not regarded as a physician required to report contagious diseases.[32] Authority conferred by the state on local governments to adopt rules and regulations for preservation of health must be exercised in the manner prescribed.[33]

Vaccination.[34]—Laws requiring compulsory vaccination of school children are regarded as valid exercises of the police power.[35]

App. 204.

33. A local board of health cannot enforce a quarantine in Iowa, without written notice of the existence of disease given by a physician. [Act 24, Gen. Assembly, c. 59, Code, § 2568]. State v. Kirby [Iowa] 94 N. W. 254. Where notice of quarantine is not given to the mayor, one who violates such quarantine cannot be convicted of a violation of the quarantine statute. Id.

34. In an action for refusal to suffer vaccination, medical history of individual cases of vaccination is inadmissible to show injurious effect. Commonwealth v. Pear

Taking of property and compensation.—The owner of one-half of a double house cannot recover against the owner of the other half for loss of lateral support where such half is torn down by the other under order of the board of health.[36] In the absence of a statute imposing liability, a municipality is not liable for damages in enforcing health ordinances,[37] but the health officers personally may be,[38] as where they act under a void ordinance.[39] A board of health may abate a cause of sickness without hearing, though it necessitates the destruction of private property.[40]

Punishment and prevention of violation of regulations.[41]—Where statutes make separate provision against drainage into the stream, and against maintenance of structures producing such drainage, the penalty provided for one cannot be applied to the other.[42]

Care of contagion.—The establishment of a pest house within statutory limits from a city has been held the proximate cause of injuries sustained by one visiting a family resident near the pest house, and contracting smallpox from a member thereof who has been infected from the pest house.[43]

The fact that a board of health has assumed control of an infected railroad train, and the company has complied with the direction of the board, may relieve the company from liability for diseases communicated subsequently.[44] Where, by failure to appoint a successor to a county physician, the county necessitates an employer's furnishing supplies for medical attendance, etc., to his employes who have been quarantined, it becomes liable to him for the expense incurred.[45] A town is liable for services and expenses incurred at the direction of a town health officer in taking charge of quarantined premises in which are smallpox patients.[46]

By statute, the county may be liable to townships for necessary quarantine expenses and for medical treatment,[47] or to cities.[48] To render the county liable

35. Viemeister v. White, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712. Though compliance is made a condition for attendance on the public school, they do not infringe on individual rights or deny equal protection of the laws and the fact that the constitution provides for the maintenance of public schools does not confer a constitutional right of education which the legislature cannot regulate by requiring vaccination as a condition for attendance. 41. Jurisdiction of the municipal court of New York of an action for violation of orders of the health department is not divested by the fact that the action is not brought in the district where the violation occurred and a removal must be demanded on or before joinder of issues [Laws 1902, p. 1497, c. 580, § 25, subds. 4 and 5]. Department of Health of N. Y. v. Halpin, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 243.

42. Under Act March 24, 1897, the only jurisdiction of the court of equity is to abate the structure complained of and a preliminary injunction against a flow of sewerage cannot be awarded. Board of Health of Paterson v. City of Summit [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 125.

43. Evidence held to show that plaintiff was contributorily negligent. Henderson v. O'Haloran, 24 Ky. L. R. 995, 70 S. W. 662, 59 L. R. A. 718.

47. Gen. St. § 7059. Town of Louriston v. Board of Com'rs [Minn.] 98 N. W. 1053. Provisions for re-payment to township board of health of expenses incurred as to contagious diseases, do not cover a voluntary donation to a physician for care of smallpox patient for persons employed by a city board of health in relation to a pest house, the county must have notice of employment.[49]

Statutes imposing liability on the county for village expenditures in controlling contagious diseases are not retroactive as to bills actually paid and adjusted before its enactment.[50] The county may be bound in the absence of statutes to the contrary, though the contract does not appear on the proceedings of the county board of health.[51]

Recovery is usually allowable only where not to be had against the individuals in whose care expenses are incurred.[52] Failure to pay quarantine expenses does not render the person quarantined a public charge in the sense that recovery over may be had from the county of his last settlement.[53]

Allowance and payment of claims.—A township board of health need not keep, in a book of its own, an account of items furnished each person, if it is able to render the itemized and separate statement required.[54] Statutes providing that the necessary expenses of town health officers shall be paid by the county treasurer on approval of their bill by the county health officer do not require that bills for services rendered at the direction of the health officer must be paid by him or that they should be paid only when approved by the county health officer.[55] In Oklahoma, the county board of health must audit and allow or reject, or modify and adjust, accounts against the county incurred in the discharge of its duty or of its members, and then certify them for payment to the board of county commissioners.[56] The commissioners can act only on the certification of the board of health, and not on certification by individual members, and the proceedings of the board cannot be shown by parol evidence where the record is not destroyed.[57] Where the county is made liable for expenses of quarantine, an allowance by a township board of health is binding on the board of supervisors of the county as to the character of the disease, the necessity and fitness of the articles furnished and rendered, as well as the fact that they were furnished.[58] An action against the county to recover expenditure in caring for quarantined

48. Where the county physician refused to attend a person suffering with a contagious disease, expense incurred by a city health officer may be recovered against the county, or additional salary paid an inspector for extra services in locating and controlling contagion under Laws 1902, c. 29, § 29. Mankato v. Blue Earth County, 87 Minn. 425. The county is not liable for compensation of persons employed by a city health board to disinfect the premises and effects of persons quarantined for smallpox. [Code, §§ 1034, 1037, 1040, 1041]. Schmidt v. Muscatine County [Iowa] 94 N. W. 479. A statute conferring power on county boards of health to quarantine for contagious diseases, renders the county liable for expenses though the quarantine is ordered by the town council at the direction of the board. 51. Bardstown v. Nelson County, 25 Ky. L. R. 1478, 78 S. W. 169.

52. A physician can recover against the county only for services rendered and furnished to indigent persons and for services and general supervision rendered by him necessary to quarantine, and keep smallpox under control, and for attention to persons quarantined. Hudgins v. Carter County, 24 Ky. L. R. 1980, 72 S. W. 730. A physician caring for a smallpox hospital at direction of the city board of health, cannot recover against the county unless it is shown that the patients or those liable for their support, were unable to pay. Walker v. Boone County [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1077. Allowance by the township board is conclusive as to the inability of the patient to pay. Cedar Creek Tp. v. Board of Sup'rs [Mich.] 97 N. W. 409.

53. Town of Louriston v. Board of Com'rs [Minn.] 93 N. W. 1053. persons is not similar to actions on account in which the account cannot be controverted, unless denied in a previously filed affidavit.[59] Objection that the petition does not allege that articles furnished were absolutely essential must be taken by special exception.[60]

§ 2. Health officers.[61]—Under the Greater New York charter, the coroner may appoint a coroner's physician, whose term of office is identical with that of the coroner.[62] After the abolition of the coroner's office, the physician is not eligible to the civil service preferred list of suspended employes.[63] A statute substituting for town boards of health, a physician appointed by the judge of the superior court, does not abrogate previous statutes binding towns to take such measures as are necessary to prevent the spread of diseases.[64]

Sanitary inspectors, under the Greater New York charter, are officers entitled to salary, though temporarily prevented from performing their duty.[65] Where it is provided that the salary of a health officer is to be fixed by the board of supervisors, the officer cannot sue on a quantum meruit.[66]

The general rule which prohibits a member of a board or council from employing or contracting with one of the members does not apply to boards of health, and it is within the power of such board to employ a member, a physician, to care for persons affected with contagious diseases.[67] A board of health under authority to make necessary by-laws may enact a by-law authorizing its secretary to employ a physician for attendance on smallpox patients.[68] Such physician may recover reasonable compensation if there are no regulations as to charges, and such compensation is not affected by an attempt by the board of health to fix the amount after the services are rendered.[69] The amount previously paid others by the town for similar services cannot be shown.[70]

Note—Vaccination: A board of health may be empowered to require vaccination (State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691; State v. Board of Education, 21 Utah, 401; Matter of Rebenack, 62 Mo. App. 8), and may without express authority, require it as prerequisite to attendance at school (State v. Board of Education, 21 Utah, 401; but see State v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 390, 60 Am. St. Rep. 123), but only where there is an epidemic of smallpox in the city (Lawbaugh v. Board of Education, 177 Ill. 572; School Directors v. Breen, 60 Ill. App. 201; Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 67). A condition of health rendering vaccination dangerous is a defense to a prosecution for failure to obey a regulation requiring it. State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691. Only a person who is infected or has been exposed may be quarantined for refusal to be vaccinated. Matter of Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769. From note to Blue v. Beach, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195. The constitutionality of compulsory vaccination laws was first upheld in Morris v. City of Columbus, 42 L. R. A. 175. Regulations requiring vaccination of school children have also been upheld in Duffield v. School District, 162 Pa. 476, reported with note 25 L. R. A. 152, and State v. Zimmerman [Minn.] 90 N. W. 783. The doctrine that the existence of an epidemic is necessary to the validity of such a regulation was denied in Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 29 L. R. A. 251.

HIGHWAYS AND STREETS.

§ 1. Definitions and classifications.—In popular but not technical use, highways are rural and streets are urban thoroughfares,[71] and in some limited senses a private way may be included in the meaning.[72] Where a country road is taken into a city by annexation, it becomes a city street without formal action,[73] but the extension of the territorial limits of a city to include a turnpike will not deprive its owner of his rights therein.[74]

§ 2. Establishment by dedication, prescription, or user.—Dedication and acceptance by the public must concur,[75] though where a highway is established by the state no acceptance is necessary.[76]

No declaration, oral or written, is necessary to dedicate a street. Such an intention may be established in any way by which it may be made manifest. A survey and plat may be alone sufficient.[77] The intention must, however, clearly appear either from declarations or circumstances.[78]

71. The word "highway" or "road" in its popular sense includes all public traveled ways, whether county or town ways. Clark v. Hull [Mass.] 68 N. E. 60. In Texas a public road or highway is one to which the commissioner's court has assigned hands to work, and the hands so assigned have worked; and the public use as such. Torno v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 500.

A highway is a passage road or street which every citizen has a right to use (3 Yeates, 421; 16 Mass. 33). "Highway" is generic for all public ways, whether carriage ways, bridle ways, foot ways, bridges, railroads, canals, or navigable rivers. Cyc. Law Dict. "Highways."

A street is a public highway in a city or village. Cyc. Law Dict., "Street," citing 4 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 106; 11 Barb. [N. Y.] 399.

72. Whether or not a private way used by many people is a street within the meaning of an ordinance regulating the conduct of railways at street crossings was held to be a question for the jury. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Robson [Ill.] 68 N. E. 468. A street located on the campus of a university, and on ground owned and controlled by the university, the use of which by the public has not been inconsistent with the university's private ownership, is not a public street. 74. Columbia & Cedar Creek Turnpike Co. v. Vivion [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 89.

75. Use for statutory period by public makes no highway (Postal v. Martin [Neb.] 95 N. W. 8), though a map was made deliminating a street at such point, there having been no public work ever done and the strip having been fenced much of the time (Loughman v. Long Island R. Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 629). Mere acceptance of the plat and inclusion of the territory within the city limits is not an acceptance, and selling platted lots does not create a highway. Russell v. Chicago & M. Elect. R. Co., 205 Ill. 155. Compare Village of Lee v. Harris [Ill.] 69 N. E. 230.

Matthews, 137 Ala. 523; Wright v. Oberlin, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 509; Price v. Stratton [Fla.] 33 So. 644. Defects in plat held cured by Comp. St. art. 1, c. 14, § 115. Bellevue Imp. Co. v.

An ordinance requiring that plats be submitted to the city engineer for approval before approval by the council is valid.[79]

The acceptance need not be express or formal.[80] It may be affirmed if defective,[81] and presumptively goes to the entire plat.[82] A dedication once accepted by the public cannot be retracted.[83]

To establish a highway by perscription, there must be user by the general public, under a claim of right, which is adverse to the occupancy of the owner of the land, of some particular or defined way or track uninterruptedly, without substantial change, for a period of time necessary to bar an action for the recovery of the land.[84] Such a use, it is said, confers a permanent easement on the public, and presumes a dedication;[85] but the use of a strip of land as a private road cannot convert it into a public highway[86] even if the owners allow the public to travel over it.[87] Nor will such use authorize the city to accept and lay it out as such as though it had been dedicated.[88] The passing over a part of an open common will not convert that part into a public highway.[89] Such acts as would establish a way by prescription over the lands of a private person are sufficient.[90]

Legislative dedication in the public domain.—The rule that a highway cannot be established by prescription as against the government has no application to any portion of the public domain within the act of congress giving a right of way for highways.[91] Such act is a present grant, which when accepted by the public establishes a highway.[92] A state statute declaring that in counties containing public lands, section lines shall be public highways, is an acceptance of the grant so that purchasers of such lands take them subject to the easement.[93]

§ 3. Establishment by statutory proceedings.[94]—The power of municipal officers to establish new roads must be found in the statutes.[95]

Occasion or necessity for road; objections.—To justify laying out a road, it must be shown to be necessary or at least useful to the public.[96]

A turnpike company has no standing to oppose the laying out of a necessary road merely because it parallels its road and will reduce its tolls.[97] A crop of timothy on the land is no ground for a perpetual injunction against laying out a road,[98] and that a proposed street crosses railroad tracks is not of itself sufficient to defeat the opening of the street and the appropriation of the company's land therefor.[99]

Location.—In many states, provision is made for highways along county and town lines.[1]

Though an application is necessary, the description therein does not ordinarily conclude the locating power which may lay out the road between the same termini over any other route,[2] and one who consents to the route as reported cannot object would not make it a public way. Marino v. Central R. Co. of N. J. [N. J. Sup.] 56 Atl. 306.

to the variation.[3] A road to a point designated may be laid partly over the bed of a road already laid out and opened.[4]

The omission in the petition of the name of the township is not fatal where the termini of the road are precisely described,[5] nor is an allegation that provision is made for payment necessary.[6]

Notice conformable to the statute,[7] if any is required,[8] is essential. The notice may be waived.[9]

The order appointing commissioners need not affirmatively show that they are eligible,[10] though if such a statement were necessary an averment that they are "disinterested freeholders" is sufficient.[11]

The report of viewers or commissioners is analogous to the verdict of a jury in an action at law, and if defective in substance no valid judgment can be pronounced,[12] and if it is not their true judgment but is made under pressure from the public officers will not be confirmed.[13] That it does not set forth that notice was given to the landowners or how it was given does not render the proceedings invalid.[14] If not accepted or rejected within the statutory period, the proceeding is null.[15]

The order locating a road should define it with certainty,[16] and contain such findings as are necessary to support it,[17] but cannot be collaterally attacked for a mere irregularity.[18] Statutory procedure to vacate it must follow the statute as to timeliness.[19] An adjoining landowner failing to appeal cannot sue in equity to vacate the proceedings.[20]

In Indiana county commissioners cannot, after a final order establishing a highway has been made and recorded, vacate or modify it. Robson v. Richey, 159 Ind. 660.

Taking and compensation.—A land-owner cannot be required to surrender his land for a public road until his damages are first ascertained and either paid or proper provision made for their payment.[22] The damage to lands by the acquisition of a fee for street purposes of land in front thereof already dedicated to street uses is any depreciation in the market value of the lands caused thereby,[23] but a dedicator of platted streets is not damaged by their being laid out as a highway.[24] The expense of maintaining a railroad crossing is a proper element of damages.[25] The laying of local assessments is a wholly statutory proceeding.[26]

Filing a claim for damages which was never acted upon will not estop a land-owner from denying the existence of a highway attempted to be laid out over his lands,[27] or constitute a defense to an action by him to recover such damages.[28]

Property acquired.—Such an estate may be taken as the statute warrants.[29] A highway is presumed to be of the width provided by law though the survey states no width.[30]

An appeal or other review may, if allowed, be taken by a person entitled,[31] from such orders as are "final."[32] Owners of land over which the road is laid out are entitled to appeal, but certiorari will not lie where no defect in jurisdiction is shown and no reason appears why an appeal could not be taken,[33] nor to try facts.[34] An appeal from an assessment of damages in proceedings to open a highway brings up no question but the damages,[35] and generally where there is no question of damages no appeal will lie.[36] Ordinary rules of review prevail.[37]

§ 4. Ascertainment and resurvey; relocations.—A resurvey of a highway is authorized in Vermont only when the highway has previously been laid out and surveyed, and the survey has not been properly recorded, or the record preserved, or its terminations and boundaries cannot be determined.[38] Prescriptive highways may be ascertained and declared in Indiana, under the present law, though less than 30 feet wide, and the burden of showing that none of an objector's land would be unconstitutionally taken thereby is on the petitioner.[39]

§ 5. Alterations and extensions.[40]—A highway established only by prescription may be changed as to location like any other.[41] An extension of a street may be effected by the actual prolongation of it by travel and use of it by the public for the requisite period and the acceptance by the village of the public way thus created as an extension of the street.[42] An alteration properly adopted[43] operates to discontinue the old road,[44] but when the route of a public road is changed, the old road continues a public highway until the new is laid out, opened, and made practicable.[45] On the hearing, matters relevant to the cost of the proposed change may be shown.[46] An assessment of damages and benefits in equal amount entitles one to apply for a review of the assessment.[47] Plaintiff cannot complain of the inequity of the assessment of another who does not complain.[48]

not object.[50] An abutting owner is entitled to damages arising from a change of grade of a street,[51] unless he purchased with knowledge of the order authorizing the change.[52] No damages are recoverable until the actual work of grading is begun; and where plaintiff has built with reference to it, and has paved the street at such grade, he has no claim.[53] A municipality may be responsible for the damages to property outside its boundary arising from a change of the grade of a street forming its boundary.[54] A petition for a change of the grade of a street waives damages only for the establishment of the grade and not for the act of grading.[55]

§ 7. Improvement and repair.[56]—"Improvement" may include extension,[57] but "repairs" do not include improvements.[58] Procedure for improvements,[59] the right to assess cost,[60] and the relative liability of co-terminous and co-extensive municipalities,[61] are governed by statute as illustrated by cases in the notes.

There is no remedy to control official discretion in ordering improvements,[62] but a resident taxpayer has a right to enjoin the wrongful application of funds raised for the improvement of roads,[63] and a contractor may recover against a city which has diverted into other channels money raised by special assessment for the work he contracted to do;[64] but the town board may change the details of the plans for the improvement of highways after bonds have been voted, so long as the character of the improvement is not changed or the authorized limit of expenditure exceeded.[65] building their own sidewalks, they cannot object that the privilege granted was insufficient when required to pay for walks built by the town.[66]

A county is not liable to landowners for damages caused by surface water turned upon their lands by ditches constructed on or near the highway,[67] at least not where they have used due care and the improvements are usual and necessary.[68] Nor can an abutting owner enjoin the proper building of a necessary culvert across the highway though it may have the effect to divert surface drainage to his lands;[69] but if the alleged improvement is in fact made to serve personal ends and is not necessary, it may be enjoined.[70]

A person peculiarly injured by failure to repair may maintain an action therefor against a private corporation charged with repairing a bridge on a public way.[71]

An indictment for failure to perform a contract to repair a public road must allege that the law providing for contracts has been put in operation in the county,[72] that a valid contract has been made,[73] and show that defendants had time and opportunity to repair.[74] Where the supervisors of the county in adopting the "contract law" failed to comply with its essential provisions, no delinquency can arise.[75]

§ 8. Abandonment and diminution.—Where a highway is established, neither its character as a highway nor the right of the public to use it as such can be lost by nonuser,[76] nor can title be acquired to it by prescription.[77] Mere nonuser[78] or adverse possession by an abutter, however long continued, will not change its public character,[79] nor operate as an abandonment,[80] nor create an estoppel as against the public, though the abutter has paid taxes thereon.[81] Neither will occupation for buildings by the public itself,[82] or a grant of use to a railroad,[83] so operate. The contrary is held however in Illinois and Iowa, where it is said that the public right of occupancy may be lost by estoppel.[84]

An attempted vacation, though invalid, and subsequent adverse possession by an abutter, will amount to an abandonment of a platted street on which no public work has ever been put.[85]

85. Weber v. Iowa City, 119 Iowa, 633.

A landowner, by platting an addition to a town through which a state road runs, cannot reduce the width of such road.[86]

The commissioner is entitled to file a certificate of statutory abandonment only when the highway has not been worked for the prescribed period. The erection of bars and gates by abutting owners will not authorize it.[87]

§ 9. Vacation.—The public authorities may vacate a street in whole or in part for the public welfare, but not that the ground may be taken for private use.[88] A highway made highly dangerous to the traveling public by the legal occupancy and use thereof by a railroad may properly be discontinued.[89] The legislature may provide how and by whom such power may be exercised.[90] A highway laid by a superior governmental agency cannot be discontinued by an inferior one.[91] Under the authority to change the location of a highway to avoid or improve a railroad crossing, the persons given such power may discontinue a part of a road.[92]

Highways do not become vacant by inclusion within an incorporated town or city.[93] A road properly surveyed, but not traveled for the statutory period, is vacated by the express provisions of the statute in Nebraska.[94]

A variance between the notice and petition for vacation in stating the place of termination of the road is fatal.[95]

The commissioners to determine the uselessness of a highway must be disinterested freeholders at the time of their appointment.[96]

In Wisconsin failure to serve notice on all owners along a whole highway is fatal though those abutting on the part discontinued have waived notice,[97] but in Indiana, none but owners whose lands abut on that part of a street to be vacated have power to prohibit vacation by objection.[98] The owner on the opposite side may object to the narrowing of a street by vacating a strip.[99] Where the petition sets forth that the road has become "useless, inconvenient, and burdensome," and the report of viewers shows that it crosses a new double track railroad at grade, there is sufficient to move the court to vacate it.[1]

A vote of the town to "rescind the action of the selectmen" in regard to laying out a proposed road sufficiently states the purpose to discontinue it.[2]

Failure to award damages or secure a release thereof from all interested avoids the proceedings.[3]

Proceedings to vacate, though not strictly regular, may estop a municipality from thereafter claiming the vacated premises as a public street.[4] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, proceedings to vacate a road will be presumed, on collateral attack after ten years, to have been regular.[5] But where an order vacating a portion of a street is absolutely void, it is open to collateral attack by injunction.[6] Mere inconvenience to a property owner, such as will result to the general public, will not authorize injunctive relief,[7] though one so injured may appeal from the order of vacation.[8] No appeal lies in Pennsylvania from an ordinance vacating a street.[9] On an appeal from an order vacating a road, an objection that the report of viewers does not set forth the improvements on the land cannot be raised for the first time.[10]

One only of the two supervisors cannot bind his town by contract for the entire reconstruction of a road for a large sum of money; though the other does not object. Logan v. Rochester Tp., 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 113.

A town is not liable for the negligent individual act of its highway officer or employe while repairing highways,[17] nor for an act done by him on the land of a private person off the limits of the highway.[18]

Highway officers are not liable for injuries to persons employed by them, as such employment does not create the relation of master and servant.[19] If county commissioners take land for a highway without lawful authority they are individually liable for their wrongful act but are not liable in their official capacity.[20]

It is no defense to a prosecution under the Texas law for refusing to serve as a road overseer that defendant could not read or write.[21]

§ 11. Fiscal affairs.—Assessments for highway purposes, like those in ordinary tax proceedings, must conform to the statute authorizing them, and levies not so conforming are void.[22] The commissioners of a road district cannot levy an additional tax for road and ditch damages after having levied the full amount allowed for roads and bridges.[23] A tax levied at a date other than that provided by statute is void.[24] If funds are separated and localized, property in one district cannot be taxed for another.[25]

A license tax imposed for the use of the streets of a city cannot be imposed upon nonresidents of the state.[26]

One is liable to road duty only in the jurisdiction where he resides.[27] His default is not excused by reliance on another's promise to do the work.[28] The vote on the question whether "such roads" shall be constructed by general tax should be confined to a particular road and not to roads in general.[29] Certiorari will not lie at the suit of the commissioner of highways to review the action of the town board of auditors in auditing claims for work on the highways unauthorized by him.[30] divisions of the highway as to work injury to the abutting owners, their remedy is not in equity but in the courts of law.[32]

A city has implied power to light its streets and public places.[33] It may prohibit awnings or projections from abutting buildings,[34] or the distribution of hand bills in the street.[35] A park board regulation prohibiting freight wagons on a boulevard is reasonable.[36] An ordinance requiring abutting owners to keep sidewalks free from snow and ice has been upheld against objections to its constitutionality.[37] But a city cannot grant privileges which impair the public easement.[38] The establishment of a public market in a portion of the street does not constitute a nuisance per se where it amounts only to a partial and temporary obstruction.[39] Where an ordinance confers power to issue permits to erect stands on the streets, one who receives one from a subordinate has no standing to recover his damages arising from its revocation by the superior.[40] A permit to move houses along the street will not authorize cutting branches of trees along the street though necessary to use the permit.[41] Works of construction in or beneath a highway can be made only under such regulations and conditions as may be prescribed.[42] Permission from the authorities to maintain a coal hole under the sidewalk will be presumed from several years' maintenance without objection.[43] One who has a grant of privileges may protect it at law against other claimants.[44]

44. A gas company having an exclusive franchise to furnish gas may maintain suit for an injunction to restrain another from setting up claim to an exclusive franchise to do the same thing, though plaintiff has not possession of the streets. People's Elect. Light & Power Co. v. Capital Gas & Elect. Light Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 327, 75 S. W. 280. Under laws 1848, p. 51, c. 37, a gas company which has used the streets of a town for 50 years may occupy new streets as a matter of law. People v. Cromwell, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 291.

its streets.[45] The act of congress authorizing the erection of telegraph lines over post roads operates only to confer the rights of the federal government and does not give telegraph companies any rights in the streets and alleys of a municipal corporation. Neither is a foreign telegraph corporation engaged in interstate commerce entitled to use them without compensation.[46] Merely granting to a city general power over streets does not necessarily give to the city power to regulate and control the building of street railroads within the streets of the city,[47] and authority to grant rights to street railway corporations does not authorize a grant to an individual.[48]

A permit to individuals to lay spur or side tracks to their property is not void as a grant of the street to private use.[49] Where a company has upon proper authority erected works in the streets, it has a vested right to continue them and the municipality cannot revoke its license at its pleasure.[50] Such right cannot be impaired by another company by erecting its works in such a manner as to interfere with the prior use,[51] but the builder of an electric conduit on certain streets has no such vested right in the street as will invalidate a vacation of such street by the proper authority.[52] A railway company laying tracks in a city street under a limited franchise does not acquire a perpetual easement in the street,[53] and the public may remove tracks from its streets where the corporation laying them has forfeited its franchise by failure to complete its line within the prescribed period,[54] or where the franchise has expired by its own limitation.[55]

A special grand jury may recommend the adoption of the alternative road law by a county in Georgia.[56] Where the alternative road law has been adopted by popular vote, the recommendation of the grand jury is not necessary to put it into effect.[57]

§ 13. Rights of public use—Law of the road.—The right apart from franchise is a right of passage or travel.[58]

The custom of the road in America is for vehicles to go to the right on meeting and to the left on overtaking and passing,[59] and this rule applies as well to bicycles as to other vehicles.[60]

A public street is a passage open to all the citizens of the state to go and return, pass and repass at their pleasure. Subject to the law of the road, no one man or body of men has a superior right in the street as against the general public.[61]

Under the charter of Greater New York, fire apparatus on duty proceeding to a fire has the right of way over all vehicles except those carrying United States mail,[62] but a fire patrol is not thereby absolved from liability for negligence resulting in injury to pedestrians.[63]

A person on foot desiring to cross a city street has a right to cross wherever he pleases;[64] and one driving a horse[65] or propelling a street car[66] along the street is bound to be watchful at all points as well as at crossings, so as not to injure persons crossing. Whichever vehicle will at ordinary speed reach a street intersection first has the right of way and there is a warranted assumption that the driver of the other will regard such right.[67] There is a street crossing though the two ends of the intersecting street are not exactly opposite and co-incident.[68] A regulation giving the right of way to vehicles going in a northerly or southerly direction over those going in an easterly or westerly direction is material on the question of responsibility for a collision between a street car and other vehicle at a street crossing.[69]

It is the duty of persons propelling automobiles,[70] bicycles,[71] street cars,[72] or a locomotive,[73] or traction engines over public highways,[74] to act with due regard for the rights and safety of others traveling; failing in this they will be required to respond in damages; but a motorman is required to take no more care to avoid frightening horses on the highway than the drivers of other vehicles are.[75]

Co. v. McHugh, 25 Ky. L. R. 1112, 77 S. W. 202. Failure of plaintiff, riding a bicycle, to turn out sufficiently to pass a street car employe alighting from the car was held to be the proximate cause of her injury. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Cossar, 203 Ill. 608. While one in charge of a push cart on the street has the same right that a truck driver has, he is not entitled to act upon the presumption that the truck driver will turn out to avoid a collision with him, neither is he obliged to protect himself against the driver's negligence. Cohn v. Palmer, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 506. In such part of a street or public road as may comprise the bed of a railway, neither the railway company nor the public have any exclusive right of occupation, subject to the duty of being diligent in avoidance of probable danger,—a duty which, as between them, is reciprocal—the public has a right to use the whole of the highway and the company has the privilege of operating its trains. 74. Miller v. Addison, 96 Md. 731. Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 1347b., as amended by Laws 1899, c. 197, applies only where the team is approaching the engine with a purpose of passing, and not to a team standing still. Cudd v. Larson [Wis.] 93 N. W. 810. Negligence of plaintiff driving on street being repaired by use of steam road roller was held to be a question for the jury. Haller v. City of St. Louis [Mo.] 75 S. W. 613.

The owner of a manhole cover over a conduit built in the public street by lawful authority may maintain an action for injury thereto by negligently driving an excessive load over it.[76]

That a team is running away on a public street without a driver is prima facie negligence,[77] and a bicycle rider frightened into falling from her wheel by seeing an unattended horse coming towards her in the street may recover from the owner of the horse for her injury he having turned the horse loose to return to the stable as was his custom;[78] but a chaffeur is not required on leaving an automobile in the street temporarily to chain it to a post or otherwise fasten it so that it cannot be started by the act of another.[79]

To drive at an immoderate and dangerous speed upon a public street is negligence,[80] and generally, by statute, unlawful,[81] and for careless and reckless driving whether faster than lawful or not, one may be made to respond in damages.[82]

The question as to which of the parties to a collision between vehicles is responsible for the injury is generally one of fact,[83] and the issue of negligence vel non in this as in other cases is generally one of fact for the jury.[84]

The failure of a city to warn plaintiff of the presence of a steam road roller could not be the proximate cause of frightening his horse when he knew of its presence.[85]

The effect of contributory negligence on the part of one who is injured while traveling on a public way is the same as it is in other negligence cases, and the question whether such negligence exists is generally one of fact.[86] A child playing

A bicycle rider must use the same degree of care required of the drivers of other vehicles.[89]

The owner of a team and wagon left unattended and unhitched in the street in violation of a city ordinance cannot recover for their injury by a collision with a street car if such violation contributed to the injury.[90]

§ 14. Rights of abutters—Ownership of fee.—A purchaser of lands bounded by a street takes an easement in such street to its full length,[91] and his grantor is estopped to deny his right of passage.[92] Having an interest not shared in by the general public, he may maintain injunction against a private person,[93] or an action for damages against a city closing its terminus,[94] or grading down his sidewalk and so changing the surface of the street as to impair the value of his property.[95] He cannot reclaim submerged lands so as to destroy public access to the water to which the highway leads,[96] and he has no right to use the street fronting his house as a carriage stand for hire.[97]

An abutting owner has a property right in ornamental trees on the street opposite his premises, by whomsoever planted, and is entitled to have them protected against willful or negligent injury.[98] He has also a litigable right to the air, light, and access furnished by such street,[99] unless he has lost it by consent or laches,[1] and the consent of his grantor will not bind him if he had no notice thereof.[2] His right in this respect extends to the center of the street, and is independent of the opposite abutters;[3] but he cannot sue to nullify a street railway franchise to use the street.[4] His right in the street is subordinate to that of the public to locate street railways or other public service franchises[5] provided the highway is one on which no additional servitude is thereby laid.[6]

An abutting owner has no common-law remedy for an interference with his use by any public improvement such as a viaduct, hence he cannot enjoin its building. His only remedy in such case is that given against the public by statute.[7]

An abutting owner attempting, on the ground of the ownership of the fee, to enjoin the construction of a driveway encroaching on the sidewalk in front of his lot, must allege his ownership or his complaint will be demurrable for want of facts.[8]

The ownership of the fee of a highway passes by a deed of the land through which it runs though expressly reserved therefrom,[9] and a deed reciting a street as a boundary will convey title to the center of the street, especially where the same grantor, in conveying lots on the opposite side of the street, conveyed to the center.[10] But the grantee of a municipality will take no right in a street designated on a plat and expressly reserved from his deed though it has never been legally laid out.[11]

6. The county court in Arkansas, though vested with general jurisdiction over public roads, cannot impose an additional servitude thereon by granting the right to construct a street car system. Humphreys v. Ft. Smith Traction Light & Power Co. [Ark.] 71 S. W. 662. In some states, however, a street railway is not regarded as an additional servitude (Georgetown & L. Traction Co. v. Mulholland, 25 Ky. L. R. 578, 76 S. W. 148) though the grade of the highway is, to accommodate it, so changed as to impair the value of the abutting property (Austin v. Detroit, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 35). Gas pipes in a country road are an additional servitude. Ward v. Triple State Nat. Gas Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 116, 74 S. W. 709.

7. Sauer v. City of New York, 85 N. Y. Supp. 636. Damages held inadequate, raising grade of street. Goetz v. State, 85 N. Y. Supp. 739.

Abutting owners are entitled to enjoin the construction of a telephone line where they have not been compensated, as such service amounts to an additional servitude. Gray v. New York State Tel. Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 108. Contra. Kirby v. Citizens' Tel. Co. of Sioux Falls [S. D.] 97 N. W. 3. But where the fee is in the city, they must show that their injury is irreparable and cannot be compensated in damages; a mere allegation of unlawfulness is not sufficient. Aurora Elect. Light & Power Co. v. McWethy, 104 Ill. App. 479.

10. Healey v. Kelly, 24 R. I. 581.

11. Whitman v. City of New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 468.

And the grantees of all the land on both sides of a platted street, on failure of the city to accept it, will not be permitted to lay claim to the fee thereof to the exclusion of the public.[12] The purchaser of a lot abutting on a platted alley takes only to the lot line and not to the center of the alley.[13]

The city of New York holds title in the lands of its public streets in trust for the public use.[14]

When stone flags are embedded in the soil with the intention of using them permanently as a walk on the street they become an appurtenance to the abutting land and the village laying them cannot remove them again merely because the lot owner will not pay for them;[15] but building a sidewalk will not give a mechanic a lien on the lot in the absence of an express statutory authority.[16]

An abutter is liable to a traveler for injuries due to negligent misuse of properties on the abutting land.[17]

§ 15. Defective or unsafe streets or highways. A. Liability of municipalities in general.—Where a municipal corporation has exclusive control and management of its highways with power to raise money for their construction and repair, a duty, though not expressly imposed by statute, arises to the public to keep them in a condition reasonably safe for public travel and it is liable for injuries resulting from a neglect to perform that duty.[18]

The duty of a municipality extends to the exercise of ordinary care in keeping its highways in a condition reasonably safe for public travel[19] by those who are in the exercise of reasonable care.[20]

A city is not an insurer against accidents,[21] and its duty does not extend to provision against extraordinary events.[22] The duty to repair extends only to streets under the control of the municipality,[23] but where a sidewalk or street causing injury is in actual control of the municipality and has been for so long a period that a highway by prescription has been established, it is no defense that no formal dedication, acceptance, or establishment can be shown.[24]

The duty extends to one on a hillside in the outskirts of the city,[25] to a "parkway" under the control of the park board,[26] and to a bicycle path which the city was under no obligation to construct,[27] but where a portion of a toll turnpike is included in the limits of a city, the city is not bound to keep it in repair.[28]

If the highway is in such a condition that an injury to an ordinarily prudent traveler thereon will be the natural and probable result thereof and ought reasonably to be foreseen by reasonably prudent officials, the town is liable and not otherwise.[29]

A road which is reasonably safe for travel of ordinary kinds is not defective merely because not fit for use with bicycles;[30] but where a bicycle path is constructed by the city it is liable for injuries to a bicycle rider resulting from defects in construction, though other portions of the street were safe.[31]

The public right to use a street extends to its entire width,[32] and where no part of the street has been set apart for sidewalks and teams are habitually driven over its entire width, it is not negligent to drive between fire hydrants and the property line.[33] The public is also liable for an injury arising from a defect near the boundary of a street and separated therefrom by no visible mark which may aid a traveler in keeping the public thoroughfare, but is under no duty to see that a path or driveway on private property made by the public in crossing the same is free from obstruction.[34]

It is liable to the driver of a patrol wagon for injury by being struck by the limb of a tree projecting into the street dangerously low,[35] and for an injury to a pedestrian by the falling branch of a tree.[36] An open gutter is not a defect,[37] and the question of the safety of a gutter[38] with reference to its width and depth is one of fact.[39] A city is liable for an injury resulting from a fallen electric wire where it did not cause it to be removed within a reasonable time.[40] A fire plug close to the traveled part of the street and concealed by weeds[41] and a gravel heater which the city has allowed to remain in the street over a week are actionable defects;[42] but to leave a water pipe at the edge of the sidewalk is not negligent, there being plenty of room for travelers.[43] A town is not liable for an injury to one riding on a street car by a tree standing near the track where it had authority neither over the building of the track nor to remove the tree.[44]

If authority to provide for lighting its streets is enabling but not mandatory there is no general duty devolved upon the city to light them,[45] but a city may be liable for an injury arising from a failure to properly light its streets at a point where contractors have placed building materials,[46] or are constructing a sewer,[47] though the contractors have failed to keep danger signals burning thereon, and the electric light company having the contract to light the streets has failed to comply with its contract.[48] Where a city owns and operates an electric light plant it is held to the same degree of care, to refrain from injuring travelers on its streets by means of fallen wires, that a private corporation would be.[49]

Lack of funds will not relieve a municipality of its duty to repair its highways,[50] though in Massachusetts it is held that the city may show its financial resources and street mileage on the question of its reasonable diligence in caring for its streets.[51]

In the Indian Territory, municipalities are not liable for injuries to individuals caused by defects in streets and highways, congress having adopted the municipal corporations law of Arkansas for the government of that territory, and the supreme court of Arkansas having given its law that construction.[52]

Since the liability of county commissioners for damages resulting from the defective condition of highways in their county arises wholly from the statute, an act that deprives them of almost all control of the highways takes away the basis of their liability.[53]

A city is not liable to a traveler for an injury caused by unlawful coasting since in preventing that the city acts as agent of the commonwealth.[54]

(§ 15) B. Notice of defect.—It must be shown that the municipality through its proper officers had notice of the defect,[55] or else that it has existed so long and is of such nature that its officers are presumed to know of it.[56] Actual notice as distinguished from constructive notice is not required.[57] Notice, however, or the circumstances from which it is presumed, must be proved. They are not open to inference.[58]

Notice of the particular defect causing the injury is not necessary;[59] and the general bad condition of the walk or road though not confined to the exact time or place of the accident may be shown,[60] but if the witness is unable to locate his observations as anywhere near the time of the accident, his testimony is inadmissible.[61]

The length of time necessary to charge municipal officers with constructive notice is generally one of fact;[62] but where from the evidence but one conclusion can be drawn, the question is one of law.[63] Merely that a wooden culvert has been built for twenty years will not charge a town with notice of its defective condition,[64] but obvious defects of which the city is charged with notice will presume notice of others not apparent which would have become so on investigation of the obvious ones.[65]

Where actual notice is required, the fact that one of its officers casually walked along the street on which the defect existed is not sufficient,[66] but actual personal knowledge is sufficient, there being no distinction between personal and official knowledge.[67]

No notice of a defect in the construction itself is necessary,[68] and a city is chargeable with notice of the fact that its employes place insecure temporary bridges over trenches in the streets dug in installing a sewer system;[69] but where the defect in the original construction contributed only remotely to the injury, notice of the want of repair is necessary.[70]

A defect in a sidewalk may be so slight as to justify a municipality in disregarding it in the first instance;[71] the city being required to use only reasonable care to keep its walks reasonably safe,[72] but the occurrence of numerous accidents will be sufficient to characterize it as dangerous and require its repair.[73] Where the action is predicated on the failure of the city to see that a public contractor guarded an excavation with danger signals the fact that the authorities learned of the lack of lights but a few minutes before the accident and took immediate steps to provide them is no defense,[74] since the period of existence of the excavation requiring signals and not the length of time the dangerous place was without signals at night governs the question of notice.[75]

Inspection, to relieve the city, must be such as ordinary care and prudence require,[76] and the duty to repair a street or walk is not discharged by merely sending a man to repair it.[77]

(§ 15) C. Sidewalks.—The entire width of the sidewalk must be made and kept reasonably safe, including the curb, and if any part of it is taken up by an open area or cellarway connecting adjoining premises, with or without a license, it is an obstruction, for negligently permitting which, to remain open or unguarded, the city[78] and the abutting owner are liable.[79] Reasonable safety includes all hours of the day and night.[80] Cellar doors in a sidewalk affording, when closed, a safe passage way for pedestrians, are not negligent per se;[81] and whether, by being raised above the general level of the walk, they constitute negligence, is for the jury.[82]

Defects in the original plan of construction as well as those arising from age and wear are actionable.[83] Where a portion of the sidewalk is elevated above the rest and causes injury, there is no presumption that the elevated portion was built on a general plan and therefore not a defect,[84] and whether an uneven sidewalk is negligent is for the jury.[85] Construction of a walk of poor material may be negligence.[86]

86. That the property owner constructed the walk of his own accord is no defense to the town, where it is in the inhabited part of the town and the authorities have control of the street and invite the public to use it.

(§ 15) D. Barriers, railings, and signals.—Under the statutes imposing upon a town the duty of keeping its highways in repair it is held that they are liable for failure to properly guard bridges and embankments by rails.[87] The railing should be sufficient to meet all those incidental uses to which it would reasonably be put by persons crossing;[88] but the city is under no duty to place barriers along a path, not at a street intersection, where people are accustomed to cross the street.[89] Where there was no barrier and plaintiff's horse was frightened by an automobile, driven with due care, and plunged down the embankment, the town was held liable.[90]

The duty also extends to enclosing dangerous places.[91] A partial enclosure by barriers does not relieve the city where injury occurs from obstruction in the unenclosed part,[92] and where a long trench is guarded only by a light at each end, the question of negligence is for the jury.[93] The violation by defendant of its own ordinance requiring barriers and lights to be placed about excavations in streets does not establish its negligence as a matter of law.[94] Sharp turns may make barriers a necessary guard against running off the way.[95] A city is not bound to anticipate that the holder of a building permit will be negligent.[96]

Where work contracted for necessarily constitutes an obstruction or defect in the street of such nature as to render it dangerous or unsafe for public travel unless properly guarded, the city as well as the contractor is liable for any injury resulting from the acts which the contractor engaged to perform.[97] In Texas, however, it is held that if the person prosecuting the work violate a city ordinance by failure to guard his work he alone is liable, though he has permission from the city to make the excavation.[98]

(§ 15) E. Snow and ice.—A city or town is ordinarily not liable for injuries arising from ice on its walks or highways from natural causes,[99] but ice from artificial causes is ground for an action,[1] and where from natural causes it has existed so long as to charge the city with notice of its dangerous character, the duty arises to remove it and failing this the city is liable.[2]

One slipping on ice which he knew of and had previously avoided is not necessarily negligent,[3] and proof that plaintiff walked a part of the journey in the roadway and returned to the sidewalk only where it was covered by an awning is evidence of care.[4]

(§ 15) F. Defects created or permitted by abutting owners and others—Joint and several liability.—Where a city permits a structure on its streets which is liable to be used by pedestrians, it is bound to see that it is kept in good condition.[5] It is liable for an obstruction temporary in its nature left in the street by a private person,[6] such as a negligently constructed awning being thrown on plaintiff by the passing vehicle of another;[7] especially where the individual has been accustomed to make the same obstruction frequently for so long that the city must be deemed to have known of it,[8] or where it authorizes the maintenance of a structure which is a nuisance per se though such authorization was ultra vires.[9]

A town is not liable for injuries sustained by falling into a ditch dug across the street by a private person;[10] otherwise for an injury resulting from a defective street though another is primarily under the duty of maintaining it and is therefore also liable.[11]

In several states, the person who is primarily responsible for a defective sidewalk must be joined with the city in an action for an injury arising from such defect;[12] but the city cannot complain that it is not done as it is not thereby precluded from pleading the owner's negligence as a joint tort feasor and so securing a dismissal for defect of parties.[13] In Georgia they are held not to be joint tort feasors so as to deprive the city of its remedy by claiming contribution.[14] If the statute requires plaintiff to exhaust his remedy against the lot owner, judgment cannot be taken against the city before judgment has been taken against the lot owner.[15]

For damages arising from ordinary want of repair of a sidewalk or street, the lot owner is not responsible in the absence of statute, but for any negligent act creating a dangerous defect or obstruction in the street or highway he may be made to respond in damages, as, for the maintenance of a drain across the walk;[16] digging a ditch in the highway;[17] leaving an opening in the sidewalk dangerous to pedestrians;[18, 19] failure to properly guard a licensed excavation[20] as required by ordinance, such failure being negligence per se;[21] piling lumber in the street,[22] though the lumber was not negligently stacked;[23] permitting a wire fence along a public highway to become dangerous;[24] leaving a heavy vault door in the street leaning against a building and so nearly on a balance that a slight push tips it over;[25] and obstructing a street in violation of a city ordinance.[26] Those doing business along streets may obstruct the sidewalks temporarily for the purpose of business.[27]

An elevated railway company is liable for an injury caused by ice formed in the street from the drip from its train where it knew of such drip and the resulting ice and could have prevented it.[31] A street railway company may be liable for an injury resulting from a defect in a street owned by a university with which it has contracted to keep the street in repair.[32] A railway company failing to restore a crossing to a condition of safety assumes the risk of injury to travelers.[33] Where a city has assumed to repair the whole of a street and has assessed a portion of the cost to the railway company, the company is no longer responsible for injuries occurring from defects in its portion of the pavement.[34]

A telephone company is liable for injuries caused by guy rope stretched across the street,[35] or the placing of poles in too close proximity to the traveled part of a highway.[36]

A water company is not liable for the city's neglect to properly guard a fire hydrant.[37]

(§ 15) G. Persons entitled to protection.—The protection of the law extends only to those who are properly using the highway for travel, and not to those who are engaged in some act not a necessary or usual incident to such travel,[38] but a pedestrian has a right to stop on the street for a reasonable time,[39] and a child of tender years is not negligent though playing in the street.[40] Those who travel at night as well as those who travel by day are protected,[41] and the fact that plaintiff's horse was in the act of running away when the injury occurred will not place him without the pale of protection if the injury would not have occurred but for the defect.[42]

(§ 15) H. Remote and proximate cause of injury.—The principle of proximate cause applies as well to injuries from defective highways as to other negligence cases though the liability is created by the statute;[43] the question of which of several efficient causes is responsible for an injury being generally one of fact,[44] though in cases where the evidence is undisputed or open to but one conclusion, it is a question of law.[45] The negligent,[46] but not the non-negligent act of another, may be such a concurring or intervening cause as to relieve a municipality from liability for an injury which would not have occurred but for a defect in its highway.[47] So also the question whether plaintiff's own acts so contribute to his injury as to relieve the municipality of its liability for the defect depends upon whether his act was negligent;[48] and where a frightened horse encounters a defect in the street which causes an injury that would not otherwise have occurred,[49] or where a defect causes fright in a horse which results in injury,[50] the defect is responsible for it.

(§ 15) I. Contributory negligence of person injured.—The negligence of the plaintiff in cases of injury from defects in the highway has the same effect that it has in other negligence cases, the question being, on a conflict of evidence, one for the jury.[51] The question is whether the plaintiff at the time of the injury was in the exercise of reasonable care, under all the circumstances.[52] Mere contributing negligence on the part of the plaintiff will not defeat him. His negligence must have been such that but for it the injury would not have occurred.[53]

Instructions considered. City of San Antonio v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 28. Reference to "safe condition" held to mean "reasonably safe condition" because so qualified in other charges. Campbell v. City of Stanberry [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 292. Instructions as to care by bicycle rider suffisaid however to raise a presumption of negligence that must be rebutted by evidence of circumstances showing a reasonable excuse for the lapse of memory resulting in the injury.[64] Where a traveler has no alternative but to pass the dangerous place, he is not required to forego his journey. In such case if he is injured while in the exercise of due care under the circumstances, he can recover.[65] So if all other routes to his destination are equally dangerous,[66] or if one is apparently no more dangerous than the other.[67] Neither is one obliged to take an indirect route which is safe, being entitled to travel upon the streets by the most direct route.[68]

The intoxication of plaintiff may be considered on the question of his care.[69]

A bodily infirmity may cast upon a traveler the duty to use greater care than would be required of an ordinary person.[70] And the condition of the weather and the time of night are proper circumstances to consider.[71] But the degree of care required, as a matter of law, is not changed by these circumstances, all persons traveling being required at all times to use such reasonable care as the circumstances demand.[72]

(§ 15) J. Notice of claim for injury and intent to sue.—It is frequently provided by statute that no action shall be brought to recover for injuries unless notice of claim for such injury shall have been seasonably served on the municipality liable.[73] These are statutes of repose,[74] and have been held constitutional;[75] but not applicable to an action by an abutting owner for injury by obstruction,[76] to an injury in a sewer to a workman,[77] to an action of trespass in going on plaintiff's property to lay out a highway,[78] nor to injuries sustained before their passage.[79]

It is generally provided that such a notice must be verified,[80] addressed to,[81] and served upon, some particular board or officer[82] within a certain period after injury.[83]

81. Notice held sufficient though addressed

Its sufficiency as to form is a question of law for the court, and it should state the place of injury,[84] describe the defect,[85] and the injury,[86] and in some states state an intent to sue.[87]

(§ 15) K. Actions.—The complaint need not expressly state that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury,[88] or negative contributory negligence.[89] A complaint counting on a defect must either allege notice to the municipal authorities or facts from which notice may be inferred,[90] and a general averment of knowledge of the defect is proved by facts constituting constructive notice.[91] Service of the statutory notice of injury must be alleged.[92] Amendments are allowed in these as in other cases.[93] The place[94] and the defect, or other cause of injury,[95] must be substantially well pleaded and proved. One relying on a permit to open a trench across the sidewalk must plead it.[96] of an injury caused by a defect in its streets, but negligence must be proved as charged in the petition.[97] Ordinarily, a traveler is presumed to be in the exercise of due care, and if the defendant claims he was not, defendant must prove it.[98]

Evidence of subsequent precautions cannot in general be shown,[99] but where such testimony is merely a part of the testimony of witnesses to the long continued general bad condition of the walk, it is not prejudicial.[1] Proof of other accidents subsequent to the one in question and the subsequent condition of the sidewalk or street is inadmissible.[2] Neither, in Missouri, can accidents to other persons caused by the same defect be shown;[3] but in Washington the fact that other persons at other times have slipped and fallen on the alleged obstruction is held admissible as tending to describe the condition of the walk.[4] Plaintiff cannot show that he has told of falling at other times.[5] Defendant's efforts to repair a break in a water conduit causing a dangerous place in the highway, and the difficulties and skill required in the original construction, are inadmissible.[6] A witness cannot state his opinion as to whether the walk was reasonably safe.[7] It may be shown that a walk is not level where the injury was from slipping on mud negligently allowed to remain on the walk, though the slope of the walk is not negligence in itself.[8] An ordinance specifying the details of sidewalks is admissible to show the extent of the duties of the municipal officers.[9] The cause of plaintiff's accident, where his wagon wheel slipped into a rut near the street car track,[10] and the question of the depth of a hole in a walk, were held questions for the jury.[11]

Instructions must submit all the issues clearly[12] and one that purports to state the elements of defendant's liability and fails to mention the necessity of notice of the defect causing the injury is bad.[13]

A city is not entitled to an interrogatory calling for a finding as to how it received notice of the defect in the walk.[14]

A street leading to water cannot be obstructed by reclamation of abutting submerged lands. Borough of Seabright v. Allgor [N. J. Law] 56

It is the duty of a city to protect its streets from unlawful occupancy and molestation,[16] and in the exercise of that duty, it may maintain an action to test the legality of their occupancy,[17] is entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the removal of an encroachment,[18] or to restrain its erection;[19] and may maintain ejectment to regain possession of any part of a street or alley unlawfully withheld from it though it has not the legal title to such street or alley.[20]

It is the duty of selectmen to remove obstructions from the highway and in so doing they may use such force as is reasonably necessary for that purpose.[21]

A shade tree standing in the sidewalk may be an obstruction subject to removal by the authorities against the protest of the abutting owner.[22] The builder of a bridge may close traffic on the highway at that point for a reasonable time by removing the old bridge, without liability.[23] One who builds a bridge thereby obstructs a road running at right angles to the approach to such bridge, which road is in process of alteration not yet made effectual by the opening of the new road.[24] The obstruction of the public highway is an act which in law amounts to a public nuisance, and a person who sustains a private and peculiar injury from such an act may maintain an action to abate the nuisance and recover his special damages,[25] or enjoin its construction,[26] though a suit brought by the city for the removal of the obstruction is pending.[27] But a private person cannot enjoin the obstruction of a public way at a point where he is not an abutting owner, the injury to him differing only in degree and not in kind from that suffered by the public,[28] nor can he enjoin the occupancy of the street by gas mains under similar circumstances;[29] but one who will be specially injured thereby may enjoin the unauthorized building of a spur railway track across the street,[30] or the occupancy of a portion of the street by a building,[31] and where a spring and the approach thereto constitute the common water supply for a town, any citizen thereof may sue to restrain its enclosure, there having been no town government for many years.[32]

One leaving in the highway an obstruction of unusual appearance calculated to frighten horses is liable for injuries resulting therefrom.[33]

Where a highway has been obstructed or encroached upon, the commissioner may be compelled by mandamus to remove them,[34] and the relator is not obliged to show any special interest to entitle him to move in the matter.[35]

One who is himself obstructing a highway cannot maintain a suit to enjoin another from obstructing it.[36] An abutting owner is entitled to damages for injury by obstruction by a railroad company in changing the grade of a crossing though it might have obstructed the street in another manner without liability.[37] If plaintiff could have removed the obstruction complained of at trifling expense, such expense is the measure of his damages.[38]

The bounds of a street must be proved[39] by him who alleges them.[40]

An indictment will lie in some states for an obstruction of a public highway,[41] but not in Colorado for obstructing a highway by causing water to flow upon it, the statute having provided an exclusive remedy by action for damages.[42] An indictment must be certain as to place,[43] and as to mode or kind of obstruction. Evidence of distinct obstructions is inadmissible; prosecution must stand on one.[44]

Holiday as dies non.—Contempt proceedings had on a legal holiday are void unless excepted from a general prohibition of judicial business,[46] and as objection on this ground goes to the jurisdiction, it may be raised for the first time on appeal.[47] In Nebraska, the continuance of an action to a legal holiday, the making of a summons returnable on that day, and a continuance of the cause to the day following, is not ground for restraining enforcement of a judgment entered in the action.[48] In Massachusetts, the jury may be instructed on a legal holiday.[49] In Georgia, a sheriff's sale on the 4th of July is valid.[50] In many states, service of process on a legal holiday is void.[51]

In determining the time for appearance under a summons, a holiday which is not the last day must be included.[52]

HOMESTEADS.

§ 1. The right to homestead in general.—Homestead is a statutory right,[53] and when once it vests cannot be destroyed by repealing acts.[54] To constitute property a homestead, there must be a concurrence of actual occupancy for homestead purposes,[55] and intention to make the property a home.[56]

53. An agreement by a married woman to convey all her "statutory rights" in and to certain land is a contract to convey her homestead rights. Cone v. Cone, 118 Iowa, 458.

54. In Washington it is regarded in the nature of a vested interest or species of estate. The homestead law of 1895; Ballinger's Ann. Code & Stat. § 5214 et seq. did not repeal the prior homestead law. Whitworth v. McKee [Wash.] 72 Pac. 1046.

55. Mere intention by the owner of land to establish a homestead thereon is not sufficient to give it the status of a homestead. Feurt v. Caster, 174 Mo. 289. Residence on land necessary to give homestead status. Delray Lumber Co. v. Keohane [Mich.] 92 N. W. 489. In Louisiana the exemption extends to lands "owned and occupied" by the debtor. Land adjoining the tract on which the debtor resides, but not "occupied as a homestead," is not exempt. Bank of Jeanerette v. Stansbury, 110 La. 301. Under Const. La. 1898, art. 244, where the owner of a lot which would otherwise be exempt and on which he resides, divides off and leases a part of it to others, the part so leased loses its character as homestead property, since no longer "occupied" by the debtor and can be subjected to his debts. Clausen v. Sanders, 109 La. 996.

In Texas, if there be a bona fide intention to occupy, actual occupancy is not indispensable. Thus where premises were purchased for the purpose and with the intention of being used as a home, they are exempt though not actually occupied by the debtor and his wife, where it appears that they moved in some furniture but were prevented from completing their occupation by reason of the illness of the wife, and during her illness rented the premises to the person from whom they purchased. Hardin v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 334. Especially where the land as to which the exemption is claimed is purchased with the proceeds of the sale of a former homestead and the claimant has no other land used as a home for himself and family. 56. Wilmoth v. Gossett [Ark.] 76 S. W. 1073; Long v. Long [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 587. Thus where the owner of an undivided interest occupied land under a lease from the administrator of the ancestor under whom he held title, it was held that his

Statutes authorizing homestead exemptions.—The right of homestead is to be determined by the statutes in force when the debt sought to be enforced against it was contracted.[57] Such statutes should be liberally construed in favor of the exemption,[58] and statutes lessening the exemption are not presumed to be retrospective.[59]

Constitutionality.—A statute increasing the amount of exemption does not as to previously incurred indebtedness impair the obligation of a contract,[60] but it is otherwise as to debts previously reduced to judgment.[61]

§ 2. Persons entitled.—A nonresident cannot have any homestead exemption.[62] In Washington either a husband or wife can select a homestead in community property while both are living.[63] In many jurisdictions, the statutes grant the exemption to the "head of a family."[64] The head of a family means one who has others living with him and dependent on him in whole[65] or in part[66] for support, and this dependence includes mental and moral training as well as food and clothing.[67]

occupancy was that of a tenant and not an owner and hence was without an intention to make the premises a homestead. Rank v. Garvey [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1025. The occupancy must be with a bona fide intention to make the premises a home for the family; a temporary residence on a debtor's land by his wife and children for the purpose of exempting it, he never in good faith living thereon, is insufficient. Clement Bane & Co. v. Kopietz [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1126.

57. Sloan v. Hunter, 65 S. C. 235. The South Dakota Homestead Law of 1890 expressly excepts from its operation debts contracted prior to its enactment, and the owner of premises occupied as a homestead is entitled to the exemption of the quantity of land which was exempt at the time of contracting the debt. Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Cunningham [S. D.] 94 N. W. 389.

58. Clark v. Thias, 173 Mo. 628; Roark v. Bach, 25 Ky. L. R. 699, 76 S. W. 340; Clement Bane & Co. v. Kopietz [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1126; Folsom v. Asper, 25 Utah, 299, 71 Pac. 315. In Nebraska a creditor of one who occupies land which exceeds in value or amount the amount exempt may, by complying with certain statutory requirements to secure an appraisement, have the land sold and the excess of the proceeds over the amount exempt subjected to the payment of his claim, but in order to make a valid sale, compliance with such statutory requirements is imperative. Van Doren v. Weideman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 124.

59. The amendment Const. Minnesota, adopted Nov. 8, 1888, providing that the homestead shall be liable for work done or material furnished in the construction, repair or improvement of the same, is not retrospective and hence the homestead is not, after its adoption, liable for debts contracted prior to its adoption and not then enforceable against it. Brown v. Hughes [Minn.] 94 N. W. 438.

60. If necessary to the general welfare of the state. In the absence of a showing to the contrary such necessity will be presumed to exist. Folsom v. Asper, 25 Utah, 299, 71 Pac. 315.

61. Thus where at the time a judgment was entered, it was a condition precedent to the right to have the land exempt that the claim of homestead should be registered, the enactment of a statute giving the right of exemption without registration and merely by virtue of the fact that the debtor is the head of a family and has no other property which is exempt, will not defeat the enforcement of the judgment against property which the debtor had not registered as a homestead and on which the judgment was a lien. Blouin v. Ledet, 109 La. 709.

62. Cope v. Snider [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 10. Nor can any other person assert it for him. Thus one claiming under a conveyance from the debtor, executed subsequent to the levy, cannot claim that it was exempt as a homestead. Cope v. Snider [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 10.

Spinster caring for minor nephews and nieces is such. American Nat. Bank v. Cruger [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 784.

66. Where children who have reached their majority live with their widowed mother on land owned by her and are in part supported by her, though they render services to her, the widow is the head of a family within the purview Fla. Const., art. 10, § 1, and her devise of the homestead to a part of her children to the exclusion of others is void. Caro v. Caro [Fla.] 34 So. 309.

Housekeeper with a family.—Where the owner of land, on which he lives with his wife and an infant child, induces a married daughter to live in the house and take care of them and pay the expense of maintaining it, he is a "housekeeper with a family" so as to entitle him to the homestead exemption of such land and hence it is not "any estate that could be subjected to a debt" within the purview of Ky. St., § 257, allowing the state hospital to recover for the care of an insane person having such an estate. Holburn v. Pfanmiller's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1613, 71 S. W. 940.

67. American Nat. Bank v. Cruger [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 784.

In some states a married woman living with her husband[68] on her own land may have homestead exemption therein,[69] though the husband own other lands suitable for a home.[70]

An abandoned wife when free from fault is entitled, under many statutes, to the possession and use of premises which had been occupied as a homestead before the desertion,[71] though she may, by her disregard of her marital obligations and immoral conduct, forfeit such right.[72]

Adult children living at home as a part of the family may claim homestead in right of either parent.[73]

§ 3. Properties and estates in which homestead may be claimed. As dependent on nature of claimant's title.—It is not necessary that a debtor should own an assignable interest in land in order to assert homestead rights therein. Such right may be predicated on a bare right of possession,[74] an equitable title,[75] a life estate,[76] or an undivided interest in land, accompanied by the exclusive occupancy.[77] Crops growing on a homestead are exempt as a part thereof.[78]

As dependent on whether lands are rural or urban.—Whether lands are exempt as a rural or urban homestead depends on the conditions which exist at the time the adverse right is asserted.[79] Where the facts in regard to the situation

At least until such right is cut off by proper proceedings, and the fact that she is confined in an insane asylum does not deprive her of such right. Way v. Scott, 118 Iowa, 197.

72. Desertion of husband and living in adultery. Freeman v. Freeman [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 825.

73. Father had lost it but it remained in mother who was insane. Way v. Scott, 118 Iowa, 197.

74. Birdwell v. Burleson [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 446. Where the owner of a homestead conveys the same, but continues in possession with his or her family the same as before the deed, an attachment against the grantor, levied subsequent to the execution of the deed but prior to its registration, is ineffectual to affect the title. The conveyance in such case did not constitute an abandonment of the grantor's homestead, since he had a possessory interest. American Nat. Bank v. Cruger [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 784.

Possessory interest necessary.—In order that the occupant of land may claim that ungathered crops growing thereon are exempt as being on his homestead, the claimant must have a possessory interest in the land. The right of a mere cropper is not such a right as will support a claim of homestead. Webb v. Garrett [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 992.

75. Hunter v. Griffith [Okl.] 72 Pac. 361. A homestead may be claimed in land of which the debtor is in possession under a contract to purchase. Keith v. Albrecht [Minn.] 94 N. W. 677.

77. Clark v. Thias, 173 Mo. 628; Rank v. Garvey [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1025; Birdwell v. Burleson [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 446. In Louisiana the right of homestead cannot exist with respect to lands held in indivision. Bank of Jeanerette v. Stansbury, 110 La. 301.

78. Hence, where a homestead is in the possession of one who is farming it on shares for the owner, the garnishment of the tenant while the crops are ungathered does not authorize their application by the tenant, after severance, to the satisfaction of the claim of the garnishee plaintiff. Staggs' Heirs v. Piland [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 762.

79. Lauchheimer v. Saunders [Tex.] 76 S. W. 750.

Quantum of unplatted urban lands exempt.—Where a person is entitled to a homestead exemption in unplatted land lying within the corporate limits of a city, "it is probably true that the tract which could be claimed to be exempt would be limited to an area equal to two lots (the number exempt in platted city lands) in that portion of the city adjacent to the tract;" dictum in Rank v. Garvey [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1025. The right to claim land as a homestead may be lost by a change in the character of the same from rural to urban lands. The mere extension of the corporate limits of an adjacent town or city so as to include therein lands formerly rural will not deprive a rural homestead of its character. Land originally rural which by growth of adjacent town became surrounded on all but one side with dwellings, though it had not been platted, and and character of the land are undisputed, it is for the court to determine whether or not it is a homestead.[80] A rural condition at the commencement of the owner's occupancy is presumed to continue.[81] In Texas, a homestead cannot be asserted as to land in part rural and in part urban.[82]

As dependent on relative location or value of lands.—In some jurisdictions, occupation of land as a homestead draws to it and also exempts contiguous land used in connection with that on which the dwelling is situate, when the area or valve of the two tracts do not in the aggregate exceed the amount exempted.[83] In Utah, it is not necessary that the premises selected as a homestead should include the home place of the family.[84] Lands not contiguous to the dwelling but used in connection therewith may be selected to make up the amount.[85]

Amount exempt.—Where a life tenant claims exemption, the value of the fee is the basis on which to determine value,[86] but where the land is encumbered, the value of the equity of redemption alone is to be considered.[87] Where contiguous lots acquired at different times are claimed, the amount is computed by taking the value of the whole immediately after the last acquisition not the aggregate of the value of each lot at the time it was acquired.[88] If land exceeding in value the amount exempted is set aside as a homestead, the exemption is invalid and creditors can enforce their claims against the premises.[89] which the owner returned for taxation as a part of the town, the owner voting at town elections and holding a town office, held to have lost its character as a rural homestead. Lauchheimer v. Saunders [Tex.] 76 S. W. 750.

81. Lauchheimer v. Saunders [Tex. Sup.] 76 S. W. 750.

82. Mikael v. Equitable Securities Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 67. Where a debtor lives on a tract of land situate within the limits of an incorporated village, he cannot claim a homestead in farm lands lying outside the corporate limits which he cultivates for the support of himself and family, though lying in close proximity to the urban lands and the latter are not worth the full amount allowed as exempt. Ryon v. George [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 48. See, also, Lauchheimer v. Saunders [Tex.] 76 S. W. 750.

Loss of status as homestead by change from rural to urban character, see infra, § 6, Loss or Relinquishment.

What constitutes a village.—An assemblage of six or seven dwellings occupied by families, two stores, a blacksmith shop, a postoffice and a school house, the latter being used for church services, though unincorporated and not platted, held to be a village within purview of Texas constitution in regard to urban homesteads. Mikael v. Equitable Securities Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 67.

83. Clark v. Thias, 173 Mo. 628. Thus where a father, as natural guardian of his minor children, has possession of land belonging to one of them and occupied as a home for himself and children, which land adjoins land owned by the father which is used in connection with the minor's land, the land owned by the father is exempt. Birdwell v. Burleson [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 446. But see Bank of Jeanerette v. Stansbury, 110 La. 301. In Illinois a homestead exemption cannot extend beyond the tract on which the dwelling is situate, if the value of such tract aggregates the amount allowed as a homestead exemption. Hopkins v. Cofoid, 103 Ill. App. 167.

84. Folsom v. Asper, 25 Utah, 299, 71 Pac. 315.

85. Such lands may be selected in the shape in which they already exist, but a claimant will not be allowed to make a selection which is irregular or fantastic in shape, totally disregarding surveys and made in a manner indicating that it is capricious and arbitrary. Slappy v. Hanners, 137 Ala. 199.

86. McDowell v. Grubbs, 25 Ky. L. R. 1020, 76 S. W. 846.

87. Where a man and his wife execute a mortgage on a part of a tract occupied by them as a homestead and on which the dwelling house stands, a sale under foreclosure of the part mortgaged does not destroy the widow's right to a homestead in the residue, where the value of the whole tract, after deducting the encumbrance, does not exceed $1,500. Houf v. Brown, 171 Mo. 207.

88. If the lot originally designated has, at the time of the acquisition of the other, enhanced in value so as to exceed the amount exempted, the debtor may claim all of the same as exempt, but in such case he is not entitled to exemption of any of the subsequently acquired lot or lots. Fitzhugh v. Connor [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 83.

89. Evans v. Piedmont Nat. B. & L. Ass'n, 117 Ga. 940, 44 S. E. 2. One seeking to enforce a claim against premises constituting a homestead, to the extent the value thereof exceeds the amount exempt, must allege and prove the value in excess of the amount exempt. Masillon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Carr, 24 Ky. L. R. 1534, 71 S. W. 859. When the owner of a flat building or apartment house, situate on a single lot, occupies a flat or apartment therein which equals or exceeds in value the amount exempted, he can claim only so much thereof as exempt, and after his death his widow is bound to account to his estate for rents received by her from other parts. Potter v. Clapp [Ill.] 68 N. E. 81.

§ 4. Liabilities superior or inferior to homestead.—In the absence of a contrary provision in the statute, the homestead right is superior to debts antedating the acquisition of the property,[90] though the debtor was insolvent at the time,[91] but in some states it is otherwise provided.[92] Under such statutes if the debtor has a homestead antedating the debt, he may sell it and invest the proceeds in another,[93] or abandon it and claim another in subsequently acquired lands.[94] In some states a debtor may, within a reasonable time after acquisition of land by descent or devise, claim it as a homestead, as against antecedent debts.[95]

90. In Nebraska a debtor may acquire a homestead and hold it exempt as against debts not reduced to judgment at the time of its acquisition, even if he exchange for it property which was not exempt. Jayne v. Hymer [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1019. In Utah a judgment debtor who is the head of a family may select his homestead from the lands which he owns at the time of a levy irrespective of whether the same were acquired before or after he entered into the contract or obligation upon which the judgment is based. Folsom v. Asper, 25 Utah, 299, 71 Pac. 315. If the homestead be sold pursuant to a judgment entered on a debt not contracted prior to the acquisition of the homestead, the sale will be set aside. Proof that the judgment was on a note dated subsequent to the attaching of the homestead right prima facie entitles the plaintiff to have the sale set aside; the burden of showing that the note was given for a debt which antedated the homestead rests on the judgment creditor. Walker v. Walker, 117 Iowa, 609.

91. Thus where a husband in contemplation of insolvency gave his wife money with which she paid off a mortgage on the homestead, the creditors of the husband could not enforce their claims against the homestead even to the extent of the funds given to the wife and so used by her. Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 615, 74 Pac. 303. Such is the rule in Oklahoma, provided the non-exempt funds used are not the proceeds of non-exempt property which was the basis of the credit sought to be enforced or were themselves relied on as the basis of such credit, even though the debtor has the title to the land taken in the name of another for the purpose of removing it from the claims of creditors, if the object of the debtor was to provide a home for himself and family. Land purchased by widow with proceeds of insurance on life of husband, his death occurring after entry of judgment sought to be enforced, and used by her as a home for herself and family, held exempt. Hunter v. Griffith [Okl.] 72 Pac. 361.

92. Under Gen. St. Mo. 1865, p. 450, § 7, providing that the time of filing the deed shall be deemed the time of acquiring the homestead, land occupied as a homestead is subject to a debt contracted subsequent to the conveyance to the debtor but before the filing of the deed for record. Such statute is applicable to lands owned and occupied as a homestead at the time of its enactment. Clark v. Thias, 173 Mo. 628, 73 S. W. 616. On an adjudication of bankruptcy, the title to the debtor's homestead does not vest in the trustee, and where a single creditor has a right to subject the homestead to the payment of a debt because it was contracted prior to the acquisition of the homestead, the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to order the sale of the premises and application of the proceeds to the payment of such debt. The creditor must proceed in the state courts and the bankruptcy court will withhold the debtor's discharge a reasonable time for such proceeding. Ingram v. Wilson [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 913.

Where an illegitimate son was given land by the widow and heirs of his putative father, he was held to have acquired it as an heir rather than a purchaser, and hence could hold it exempt as to debts contracted prior to his acquisition of title. Roark v. Bach, 25 Ky. L. R. 699, 76 S. W. 340. Laws Mo. 1887, p. 198 places homesteads acquired by descent or devise within the protection of the homestead statutes as to debts contracted subsequent to the acquisition of title. Clark v. Thias, 173 Mo. 628.

97. A lien on a homestead, given as security for money borrowed for and used in discharging liens against it which had attached prior to its becoming a homestead, is enforceable against the homestead, notwithstanding a constitutional prohibition of the loaning of money on the security of the homestead. Johnston v. Arrendale [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 45; Cahill v. Dickson [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 281. No exemption can be asserted as against claims for the purchase price of the homestead. Boles v. Walton [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 81. Hence where a married woman conveyed her homestead for a more valuable tract and gave vendor's lien notes for the additional value, she cannot claim the newly acquired property as a homestead, as against such lien, even to the extent of the value of the old homestead. Simpson's Guardian v. Miller, 24 Ky. L. R. 2378, 74 S. W. 213. A homestead is not exempt in the hands of the children of a deceased owner as to a debt owing for money loaned to decedent for the purpose of purchasing the homestead and so used by him. Weber v. Weber, 25 Ky. L. R. 908, 76 S. W. 507.

98. Where land, a part of which is exempt as a homestead, is mortgaged or encumbered by a vendor's lien, the owner of the homestead, as between himself and his general creditors, has a right to have the non-antedating the acquisition of the land or the husband's estate;[99] but a mortgage can be enforced only by foreclosure.[1] Where the court has power to award the homestead to the innocent party on granting a divorce, it may order its sale and alimony from the proceeds,[2] or make the alimony a lien on the homestead.[3] A homestead awarded to a wife as alimony retains its exempt character.[4] One taking a homestead by a will charging it with debts takes subject to such debts.[5] In Wisconsin, the statutes provide that no general direction in a will to pay debts out of the testator's property shall subject the homestead to the payment thereof.[6] A distinction is sometimes made in favor of debts arising ex delicto,[7] or by breach of trust.[8] exempt part of the tract first applied to the discharge of the incumbrance. This rule applies not only to instances where the technical relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists, but to cases where the legal title is in a vendor and the equitable title in the debtor under a contract to purchase. Keith v. Albrecht [Minn.] 94 N. W. 677. Homestead assigned to widow and included with other lands in mortgage executed by her and her husband, held only secondarily liable for payment of mortgage debt. Bissell v. Bissell [Iowa] 94 N. W. 465. Where, in consideration of the sale of certain machinery to him, the purchaser agrees to give the seller a mortgage on the land on which the machinery is to be installed to secure the purchase price of such machinery, but which land the buyer does not own, the execution by him of a mortgage subsequent to his acquiring title to the land will be deemed to relate back to the time of his agreement to give the mortgage, so as to antedate any homestead claim to such land by the buyer, the seller not having any notice at the time the agreement was made that the land to be purchased was to adjoin a part of the buyer's homestead and become a part of it, and the sale having been made in reliance on such promised security. Ferguson v. Walter Connally & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 609. While a debtor to whom lands have come by descent has a right, within a reasonable time, to enter on the same and claim a homestead therein as against pre-existing debts, if he contracts an indebtedness and executes a mortgage to secure it on lands so acquired, before he has occupied them as a homestead, his subsequent occupancy thereof as a home does not confer a right therein on the wife of the mortgagor, she not having joined in the execution of the mortgage which is superior to the right of the mortgagee. Park v. Wright, 25 Ky. L. R. 128, 74 S. W. 712.

99. Since a life tenant discharges incumbrances presumably for the benefit of his own estate and is subrogated to the incumbrancee's rights only for the purpose of reimbursement, the incumbrance is, so far as a wife's homestead in the life estate goes, extinguished when the husband pays it and takes an assignment and a new incumbrance is substituted which is inferior. Downing v. Hartshorn [Neb.] 95 N. W. 801.

1. Not by execution on money judgment. Baldwin v. Thomas [Ark.] 72 S. W. 53.

2. Comp. Laws S. D., § 2585. Harding v. Harding [S. D.] 92 N. W. 1080. The court has not however power to decree that the purchaser shall have immediate possession. The debtor has a year to redeem and during such time is entitled to possession. He cannot be deprived of his right to redeem. Id.

3. The fact that such decee is made on condition that the wife shall pay out of the money awarded as alimony, a joint judgment against herself and husband does not constitute an invasion of the husband's right to have his homestead exempted from the payment of his debts, since the award and lien can only be enforced by the wife. Johnson v. Johnson, 66 Kan. 546, 72 Pac. 267.

4. It cannot be subjected in bankruptcy to the payment of her debts. In re Le Claire, 124 Fed. 654.

5. Her election will not however affect the rights of minor children, and the homestead can be sold only to pay decedent's debts, subject to their right to occupancy during their minority. Kiesewetter v. Kress, 24 Ky. L. R. 1239, 70 S. W. 1065.

6. Testamentary provisions held not to constitute a charge on the homestead. Pym v. Pym [Wis.] 96 N. W. 429; Kuener v. Prohl [Wis.] 97 N. W. 201. Such statute does not prevent the testator from making a legacy a charge on the homestead; it relates only to the debts of the decedent. Kuener v. Prohl [Wis.] 97 N. W. 201.

7. A judgment for damages for breach of a covenant in a deed is a judgment in an action ex contractu, as to which the homestead is exempt, the statute exempting it as to debts contracted. Code Ala., § 2033; Const. Ala. 1875, art. 10, § 2. Knight v. Davis, 135 Ala. 139.

8. In Kentucky a sheriff's homestead is subject to a lien in common with any other real estate he may own for money collected by him for taxes and not paid over. Baker v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 24 Ky. L. R. 2196, 73 S. W. 1025.

nor can involuntary liens attach.[11] If, however, the land conveyed exceeds in value the amount exempted, it may be fraudulent as to such excess value.[12]

Power to incumber under statutes or constitutional provisions prohibiting the incumbrance of a homestead except for the purchase price.[13] A mortgage on an existing homestead for other debts has no validity to be called into force on the extinguishment of the homestead right,[14] nor can representations or recitals of the nonexistence of homestead estop the incumbrancer at least when variant from an actual occupancy,[15] nor will the fact that the mortgage contains an express waiver of the mortgagor's homestead rights.[16] Indirect modes of incumbering the land are equally impotent.[17]

A mortgagee of property bought with proceeds of a homestead, and impressed with its character, is inferior if he had notice, otherwise superior to the claim.[18] The same is true if vendor's lien notes, arising from a fictitious conveyance and reconveyance of the homestead, be transferred.[19]

Necessity of consent of wife to conveyance or joinder therein.—In many jurisdictions, a conveyance of homestead premises not executed by both the husband and wife is void.[20] The wife's joinder must be cotemporaneous with the execution of the conveyance by the husband.[21] A conveyance of part of the homestead[22] or of a future estate, which may by a contingency[23] abridge the wife's rights, requires her joinder. Joining is not necessary if no homestead rights have yet had their inception.[24] In Kentucky, a joining in execution of a deed must be coupled with also, infra, "Exemption of proceeds of homestead or of substituted properties."

In Washington the surviving spouse takes title to a homestead selected from community property, and while occupied by him or her as a homestead may be conveyed free of the debts of the grantor as well as community debts. In re Feas' Estate, 30 Wash. 51, 70 Pac. 270.

13. Georgia.—Since the adoption of Constitution of 1877, a homestead, though set apart under the Constitution of 1868, cannot be mortgaged. Such prohibition extends to a homestead set apart to a wife out of her husband's lands on her own application, he having refused to make the application, and continues as to such lands during her widowhood. Ach & Co. v. Milam [Ga.] 44 S. E. 870.

19. One who takes such notes as collateral, with knowledge that the obligor therein had during all the time of the conveyance and reconveyance transactions resided on the land, is not a bona fide holder and cannot enforce them against the widow of the obligor. Harbers v. Levy [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 261. One who takes after maturity and for a pre-existing debt not a bona fide holder. Lybrand v. Fuller [Tex. Civ. App.] 69 S. W. 1005.

No refinement of equity will be permitted to circumvent the express and salutary requirement that the wife must concur in the encumbrance of the homestead. Applied where the husband, a life-tenant, paid and took assignment of a mortgage and in turn assigned it without the wife's joining. Downing v. Hartshorn [Neb.] 95 N. W. 801.

21. Mortgage. Hubbard v. Sage Land & Imp. Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 413.

22. Contract entered into by the husband alone and purporting to confer on another the right to appropriate and permanently use a part of homestead premises in such a manner as to curtail the beneficial use and enjoyment thereof by the owner and his family is void. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Cluck [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 83.

23. Deed reserving to husband the right of possession and the rents and profits of the land, though it does not deprive him of his homestead rights in the premises, might by reason of his predeceasing the wife, deprive her of her right during widowhood. Park v. Park [Ark.] 72 S. W. 993.

24. Before homestead has been selected and allotted he can convey by sole deed. Joyner v. Sugg, 132 N. C. 580. A lease of a part of a governmental subdivision which aggregates the quantity of land exempt as a homestead and on which the lessor's family apt words of grant from the wife.[25] If the wife has by her desertion and adultery forfeited her right, she need not be joined in a subsequent conveyance.[26]

A vested right to alienate lands without the wife's joinder cannot be retroactively taken away by a statute subsequent to the acquisition of such lands making her joining necessary.[27]

In Iowa, a husband can convey a homestead, the title to which is in him, directly to his wife and it is not necessary for her to join in the execution of the deed.[28] Survivorship rights in a community homestead in California cannot be divested by a deed from the husband alone to the wife.[29]

A conveyance defective in this particular may become effective by a subsequent extinguishment of the homestead right of the wife,[30] but not one which is for want of her joinder a nullity.[31]

The "joint consent of the husband and wife" need not be in writing unless so required by the statute, but they both must consent at the time the conveyance takes effect.[32]

An "abandonment of possession to the grantee" in order to alien homestead must be for that very purpose.[33]

A conveyance or mortgage in which she does not join may be valid as to the excess above the statutory exemption,[34] but not when it is for that reason a complete nullity,[35] or it may be color of title on which to predicate adverse possession though otherwise void.[36]

Acknowledgment of conveyance.—A conveyance of a homestead executed and acknowledged without the separate examination of the wife by the officer before resides, no homestead having been selected or homestead declaration filed prior to or after the execution of the lease, is not a conveyance or incumbrance of a part of the homestead, requiring execution and acknowledgment by the lessor's wife, it appearing that the lessor had other contiguous land from which the full quantity exempt could be claimed. By so treating the land, the lessor in effect declared that the homestead thereafter to be selected should be carved out of the remaining land. Wegner v. Lubenow [N. D.] 95 N. W. 442.

25. Masillon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Carr, 24 Ky. L. R. 1534, 71 S. W. 859.

26. Freeman v. Freeman [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 825.

27. Prior to the statute of 1895, the husband could sell or encumber the land occupied as a home, subject to the wife's inchoate right of dower, without the joinder of the wife, except where the wife had filed a claim of homestead as provided by Rev. St. 1889, § 5435. As to land used as a homestead and not claimed by her, he had a vested right to convey, which the legislature could not impair. The right was no less a vested right by reason of the fact that the wife could defeat it by filing her claim of homestead. The act of 1895, prohibiting the conveyance of land occupied as a homestead without the joinder of the wife, was not a change in the procedure by which the wife was to protect her homestead right, since it did not require any action on her part. Gladney v. Sydnor, 172 Mo. 318.

28. Beedy v. Finney, 118 Iowa, 276.

29. Pryal v. Pryal [Cal.] 71 Pac. 802. As to rights of surviving spouse in homestead selected from community property, see post, § 7.

30. In Wisconsin the statutory disability of the husband goes only to such dealings as interfere with the use of the land as a homestead, and a deed executed by him alone will be construed as an executory contract to convey after the extinguishment of the homestead right, by the death of the wife or otherwise. Grantee of husband awarded specific performance against heirs of husband after death of wife. Jerdee v. Furbush, 115 Wis. 277. So too the husband may, after the death of his wife, or after the homestead character of the premises has ceased, estop himself to deny the validity of the deed. The fact that he did not know that the deed was ineffectual does not remove the estoppel. Hence where, after the death of the wife and his abandonment of the premises, he permits the grantee to expend money in improving the premises, he is estopped to deny the validity of the deed. Adams v. Gilbert [Kan.] 72 Pac. 769.

31. Lange v. Geiser [Cal.] 72 Pac. 843.

32. A finding that the wife, prior to the execution of a deed, expressed herself as willing to join in its execution and that after its execution by the husband alone, she expressed herself as satisfied with it, does not show such joint consent as will validate the deed. Durand v. Higgins [Kan.] 72 Pac. 567. Under such provision a deed executed by a husband and the guardian of his insane wife is ineffectual. Adams v. Gilbert [Kan.] 72 Pac. 769.

whom the acknowledgment is made, as required by law, is void.[37] The statute not requiring that the certificate should show that the wife acknowledge the conveyance separate and apart from her husband, such fact may be shown by parol.[38]

Contracts to convey.—Specific performance of a contract to convey a homestead, not properly executed and acknowledged by the owner and his wife, should not be enforced at the suit of either party.[39] It is not necessary that the wife should sign the contract at the same time that the husband does. The subsequent execution by her of one of the copies of the contract and an offer to sign the other, renders it a binding and valid contract, entitling the vendor to specific performance.[40]

The personal representative of a deceased vendor may maintain a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract for sale of a homestead, making the heirs parties defendant.[41]

§ 6. Loss or relinquishment.—The homestead right is purely personal and may be waived or renounced,[42] but husband and wife must both participate,[43] and a waiver by a wife can only be made in the manner prescribed by statute.[44] An antenuptial agreement whereby the woman agrees to waive her homestead rights in the lands of the man will not be enforced if at the time of the death of the husband there are minor children living who are the issue of the subsequent marriage.[45] Failure to object to a sale is not a waiver,[46] but by failure of a husband to assert in a foreclosure suit want of acknowledgment by himself of his wife's mortgage, he may waive homestead.[47] The homestead right is not lost by his loss of Bank v. Citizens' State Bank [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 726. Acknowledgment before officer having pecuniary interest in sale of no effect. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042.

Acknowledgment essential to "execution" of conveyance.—Acknowledgment is essential to the "execution" of a conveyance of a homestead. Hence an admission in a pleading that a contract for sale of a homestead was "duly executed," in the absence of anything to restrict its meaning, is an admission that it was acknowledged. Solt v. Anderson [Neb.] 93 N. W. 205.

See also cases cited, ante, p. 18; note 30.

When, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, the husband of the mortgagor fails to set up that he did not acknowledge it, he will be deemed to have waived his homestead rights and equity will not, after judgment of foreclosure and sale, enjoin the proceeding to confirm the sale. 40. Such signing by the wife at a later date is not an alteration of the instrument which will render it invalid. Epperly v. Ferguson, 118 Iowa, 47. If the wife's name does not appear in the body of the contract, any defect arising by reason of such fact is cured by her subsequent execution, within the time limited by the contract, with her husband of a valid deed of the premises. Id.

41. Solt v. Anderson [Neb.] 93 N. W. 205.

Admission in pleading by personal representative.—The proceeds of the sale of a homestead is exempt from debts and liabilities of the estate, and the heirs are the real parties in interest; hence an allegation in the pleadings of the personal representative adverse to their rights is not binding on them. Id.

42. Gilbert v. Provident Life & Trust Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 488.

43. The acceptance of the surplus, on an execution sale of a homestead, by the owner of the legal title, does not constitute a waiver of the homestead right so as to vest the execution purchaser with a title that will support ejectment. The fact that the sheriff in paying over the surplus required the husband to sign the receipt with the wife, she being the owner of the legal title, does not constitute a waiver by him, the order under which the money was paid over not requiring it. Van Doren v. Weideman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 124.

44. A mortgage purporting to be the deed of the husband only, but executed by the wife and containing a waiver of her right of dower, does not preclude her from claiming her homestead rights. Kiesewetter v. Kress, 24 Ky. L. R. 1239, 70 S. W. 1065. So a waiver by her in a mortgage, which purports to be only a waiver by her, is not a compliance with a constitutional provision that a person entitled to a homestead may waive the same by signing with his wife and recording a written waiver and does not affect the husband's rights. Bank of Jeanerette v. Stansbury, 110 La. 301.

45. Zachmann v. Zachmann, 201 Ill. 380.

46. Failure of widow to object to sale of land at instance of public administrator, and the fact that she bids for it at such sale, does not estop her to claim in ejectment by the purchaser, that the land was homestead, not subject to sale to pay decedent's debts. Houf v. Brown, 171 Mo. 207.

status as the head of a family,[48] nor by a temporary removal animo revertendi,[49] but such intention must be definite and certain. An intention to return only on the eventuating of certain contingencies is insufficient,[50] and it is the intention entertained at the time it is sought to subject the land which governs.[51] Intent to abandon and actual removal from the premises must co-exist.[52] In Kentucky, the husband's life estate in the homestead of his deceased wife continues only during his occupation thereof,[53] but in some states receipt of rents and profits by a widow are by statute deemed equivalent to occupancy.[54] Where the owner of a business homestead disposes of all his stock of merchandise and ceases to do busi-

In Washington a husband may after his wife's death select a homestead from community property for the benefit of himself and family. The fact that the minor children attain their majority after the selection does not deprive the father of the right to claim it as a homestead. In re Feas' Estate, 30 Wash. 51, 70 Pac. 270. In Florida a contrary rule prevails, and the land loses its status as a homestead when the owner ceases to be the head of a family. Herrin v. Brown [Fla.] 33 So. 522.

49. Ragsdale, Cooper & Co. v. Watkins, 25 Ky. L. R. 506, 76 S. W. 45; Herring v. Johnston, 24 Ky. L. R. 1940, 72 S. W. 793; Birdwell v. Burleson [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 446; Bank of Jeanerette v. Stansbury, 110 La. 301. Under such circumstances the land does not lose its status as a homestead so as to permit of its conveyance by the husband without the joinder of the wife. Collins v. Bounds [Miss.] 34 So. 355. A conveyance to a third person who immediately conveys to the wife of the debtor is not an abandonment. Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son [Mich.] 92 N. W. 778.

Presumptions.—The homestead character of premises being once shown to have existed, the burden of showing an abandonment is on the person seeking to subject it to execution. McCord, Brady Co. v. Tessier [Neb.] 96 N. W. 342.

Question of fact.—Whether or not a removal from a homestead constitutes an abandonment depends on the facts of each particular case. Wapello County v. Brady, 118 Iowa, 482. Hence it is error for the court to single out any particular circumstance and charge as to whether it does or does not show an abandonment. White v. Epperson [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 851.

Evidence of abandonment.—The mere fact that the absence from the land claimed as a homestead is protracted is not conclusive of an intention to abandon. Six years. Omaha Brewing Ass'n v. Zeller [Neb.] 93 N. W. 762. Absence for eight years with other evidence held to show an abandonment. McCord, Brady Co. v. Tessier [Neb.] 96 N. W. 342. The renting of the premises is regarded as indicative of an intention to abandon, though not conclusive. Wapello County v. Brady, 118 Iowa, 482; Smith v. Kneer, 203 Ill. 264. So too evidence of the retention of a part of the premises and the storing of furniture therein is admissible as showing an intention to return. Ragsdale, Cooper & Co. v. Watkins, 25 Ky. L. R. 506, 76 S. W. 45; Wapello County v. Brady, 118 Iowa, 482; Collins v. Bounds [Miss.] 34 So. 355; Ball v. Ramsey, 25 Ky. L. R. 1268, 77 S. W. 692. Offers to sell after leaving are admissible to negative an intention to return. Wapello County v. Brady, 118 Iowa, 482. Declarations made by the owner after his removal, as to whether he intended to live on the land again, are admissible. White v. Epperson [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 851. Loose declarations of a debtor, made subsequent to his removal from land occupied as a homestead, that he did not intend to live on it again, there being nothing in his conduct to show that such was his intention, will not alone be sufficient to show such an intention where he testified positively that he intended to return and live on the premises. Galloway v. Rowlett, 24 Ky. L. R. 2503, 74 S. W. 260.

52. An intention to become a nonresident of the state, entertained at the time of a sale of premises, theretofore occupied as a homestead, where the intention is not carried into effect by actual removal, is insufficient to constitute an abandonment of the right to hold other property purchased with the proceeds of the sale of the homestead, exempt as to debts contracted prior to the reinvestment. Lee v. Hughes, 25 Ky. L. R. 1201, 77 S. W. 386.

53. Hence when he procures a sale thereof for partition, he is not entitled to a life estate in the proceeds of the partition sale. Clay's Guardian v. Wallace, 25 Ky. L. R. 820, 76 S. W. 388.

54. In Texas the homestead rights of a widow and minor children in land occupied as a home by the family before the husband's death is not lost by their removal from the state, provided the rents and profits are used for their support. Powell v. Naylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 338. In Tennessee the surviving wife may sell or lease her life estate and the lessee or purchaser, if he be a resident of the state, may hold it during the life of the widow, but if she removes from the state she abandons her rights, and the life estate is terminated. This effect is not avoided by the fact that she intended to retain her homestead right and continued to receive the rents and profits for her support. Coile v. Hudgins, 109 Tenn. 217.

ness, he thereby abandons his business homestead.[55] Though a judgment against the owner of land used by him as a homestead is not a lien on the land so long as it is used for homestead purposes, the lien attaches the moment it is abandoned as a homestead.[56]

§ 7. Rights of surviving spouse, children, heirs, or dependents.—The homestead laws generally continue the estate for the benefit of the widow or the widower or children of a homestead holder. Cases construing such statutes are cited in the note.[57] In Illinois it has been held that the homestead of a second wife is superior to dower of a divorced wife.[58] Where the statutes confer on minor children the right to occupy jointly, with the widow, the homestead of their deceased father, the widow cannot deprive them of such right.[59]

Such right may be barred by an election,[60] if it is inconsistent with some other claim.[61]

55. In re Flannagan, 117 Fed. 695. Hence, where a creditor of one owning a business homestead attaches it after the land constituting the homestead as well as the stock of goods with which the business was carried on have been sold, but before the recording of the deed, the attachment takes precedence of the deed, since at the time of attachment it had ceased to be a business homestead. R. E. Bell Hardware Co. v. Riddle [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 613.

56. Smith v. Thompson, 169 Mo. 553. If the judgment is entered in the county where the land is situate, it is not necessary to the attachment of the lien of the judgment that the sheriff file a notice of levy, as is required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3178, in cases of a levy on land in a county other than that in which the judgment is entered. Id.

57. Under the Missouri law as it was in 1873, the widow of the owner of a homestead took immediately on his death the same estate which he himself had, and a conveyance made by her before the assignment thereof to her passed her title to her grantee. Johnson v. Johnson, 170 Mo. 34, 59 L. R. A. 748.

In Virginia the widow's right to occupy a homestead, which during the life of her deceased husband was set off to him, during her life or widowhood, which accrues when the husband dies leaving debts, cannot be defeated by the heirs buying up and discharging claims against the decedent's estate. Davis v. Davis [Va.] 43 S. E. 358.

In Nebraska a mortgagee of a homestead is not entitled to a receiver as against the widow of the mortgagor. Joslin v. Williams [Neb.] 93 N. W. 701.

Deserting wife.—Her right to occupy the homestead of which her husband died seized is not forfeited by the fact that she had prior to his death deserted him and lived in adultery with another. Nor does the fact that she lived in another state affect such right, since her legal domicile is that of her husband. Lyons v. Lyons [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 467.

Rights of children. In Mississippi the homestead descends to the widow and children in equal parts. Hubbard v. Sage Land & Imp. Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 413. In Washington one or the other spouse must have selected a homestead in community lands. On the death of the father, no homestead having been selected in community lands, the land descended one-half to the widow as her separate estate and one-half to the children, adults as well as minors, subject to the right of the widow to select a homestead therefrom; but as she failed to exercise that right, the children's one-half vested in them in fee on her death. Stewin v. Thrift, 30 Wash. 36, 70 Pac. 116.

58. Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592.

59. Houf v. Brown, 171 Mo. 207; Phillips v. Presson, 172 Mo. 24. Thus her election to take under a will devising the homestead and other lands, subject to the testator's debts, will not deprive the children of their right to occupy the homestead during their minority, and it can be sold only to pay the testator's debts subject to their right. Kiesewetter v. Kress, 24 Ky. L. R. 1239, 70 S. W. 1065.

60. Where a married woman devises lands, including the homestead, to her husband, his election to take under the will rather than under the statute deprives the land in his hands of its homestead character. Where a married woman dies without carrying into effect a contract to convey land occupied as a homestead by herself and husband, and devises all her land to him and appoints him executor of her will, the fact that the husband after his wife's death contracts with the vendee, to qualify as executor and procure an order for the conveyance of the land to the vendee, does not constitute an election to take under the will so as to preclude his election to take a homestead right in the property, so as to exempt the proceeds from application in discharge of his debts. Milner v. Davis [Iowa] 94 N. W. 511.

61. She is entitled to a life estate in lands on which she was living with her deceased husband at the time of his death, though she owns lands on which they had formerly lived, but had abandoned as a homestead, and in which she had a right to acquire a homestead. Wilmoth v. Gossett [Ark.] 76 S. W. 1073.

In Kentucky a widow cannot have both dower and homestead rights in lands of her deceased husband. Hogg v. Potter, 25 Ky. L. R. 492, 76 S. W. 35.

In Georgia she is not entitled to a homestead and a year's support where the aggregate of the two provisions exceeds the amount which may be set apart as a homestead. If she has a year's support set apart to her out of the land already held as a homestead, the latter becomes extinguished, the lesser estate being merged in the greater. The mere fact that a widow's application

If no homestead has been selected, a formal proceeding to set out one may be necessary where the statute does not designate it.[62]

Duty to pay taxes and make repairs.—Where the statutes give the surviving spouse a life estate in the homestead, or the minor children the right to occupy during minority, it is the duty of the owner of the particular estate to pay the general taxes and keep the premises in repair.[63]

Ordinarily the heirs take title, subject to the right of the surviving spouse, and the debts of the deceased owner.[64]

§ 8. Exemption of proceeds of homestead or of substituted properties. Voluntary sales.—In the absence of a statute, the proceeds of the voluntary sale of a homestead are not exempt,[65] unless the sale was for the purpose of reinvesting the proceeds in another home,[66] the burden of proving his intention being on the

for a year's support is granted, she not taking any steps to enforce it against the homestead, does not constitute an election to waive her homestead. Green v. Hambrick [Ga.] 45 S. E. 420.

62. In Texas the right of the surviving spouse to a homestead is secured independent of the action of any court and depends only on the use or occupancy thereof by such survivor. The right of the minor children to use and occupy the homestead of their deceased parent during their minority is dependent on their having secured through their guardian an order of court giving them permission to use and occupy it. Without such an order, the homestead is not established and may be partitioned at suit of any one owning a part of it. The approval of an inventory of the minor's property, in which it was stated that the minors were entitled to the use and occupancy of the premises as a homestead, does not take the place of the order contemplated by the constitution. Powell v. Naylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 338.

In Alabama, where the owner of a homestead dies leaving no other real property, the title to the homestead vests in the widow and children without administration, and it is not necessary that they should have such homestead set apart to them. They become tenants in common. A grantee of a child who has reached his majority may maintain partition against the widow and minor children. Faircloth v. Carroll, 137 Ala. 243.

63. If the remainderman is compelled to pay the taxes he can recover the amount paid from the life tenant and have the same decreed a lien on the latter's interest in the land. Wells v. Sweeney [S. D.] 94 N. W. 394.

In Kentucky, where the income from the widow's homestead estate is insufficient for her support and also to make needed repairs, a court of equity may authorize the master commissioner to sell enough timber from the land to make the repairs, they being of such a character as to inure to the advantage of the remainderman. Flener v. Flener, 24 Ky. L. R. 725, 69 S. W. 954. But such rule as to taxes does not apply while the claimant of a homestead is in possession of a tract exceeding the amount exempt as a homestead, but not divisible, pending proceedings to establish the priority of judgment and attachment liens on the surplus. Baker v. Grand Island Banking Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 428.

64. Where the widow paid into the estate of decedent the amount of excess valuation of a tract over the statutory homestead, the whole tract is exempt until her death, and majority of children and their creditors can subject such proportion as the homestead bore to the appraised value. Groover v. Brown [Ga.] 45 S. E. 310. The reversion in homestead lands may be sold in course of administration to pay debts of the deceased husband. Derge v. Hill [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 105.

In California the reversion in a homestead set out of the husband's separate lands may be reached by creditors. In re Tittels' Estate, 139 Cal. 149, 72 Pac. 909.

There can be no partition by the heirs during the continuance of the homestead life estate. McAnulty v. Ellison [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 670. In South Carolina, the heirs can maintain partition of land which the widow has had set off to her as a homestead, where there are no minor children. Saunders v. Strobel, 64 S. C. 489. The surviving spouse may however abandon his homestead rights, if there are no minor children, and thereupon maintain partition as one of the heirs. Wells v. Sweeney [S. D.] 94 N. W. 394.

In Iowa the heir, where the deceased owner of a homestead leaves no surviving spouse, takes title to the homestead and may hold it exempt as against the debts of his ancestor or his own, except those contracted prior to its acquisition. A nonresident heir is entitled to hold his share exempt from his debts. Kinzer v. Stephens [Iowa] 96 N. W. 858.

65. Kinzer v. Stephens [Iowa] 96 N. W. 858. Where the owner of a homestead executes a voluntary conveyance thereof to another, the reconveyance by such other does not rehabilitate the first owner with the rights of a homestead in the land, she not being at the time of the reconveyance a person entitled to the exemption; nor can it be held as a homestead purchased with the proceeds of the sale of a homestead. Slattery v. Keefe, 201 Ill. 483.

66. Kinzer v. Stephens [Iowa] 96 N. W. 858. When the homestead is sold under a power of sale in a mortgage, the excess after paying the mortgage is exempt, if mortgagor intends to use such surplus to purchase another home. State v. Hull [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 888. Where a debtor takes a note in part payment of the sale of two tracts of land, one of which is his homestead, and his trustee in bankruptcy, purdebtor.[67] While the statute does not specify the time within which the reinvestment must be made, they will be exempt for a reasonable time,[68] or for so long a time as the intention to reinvest in another home continues.[69] The debtor may purchase another home and have it conveyed directly to his wife. Such conveyance is not fraudulent.[70] If the homestead sold is part of a tract larger than is exempt, he may hold the value of a tract of the size exempt.[71] If he invests in a new home, it is exempt only as to debts not enforceable against the one sold.[72] The land purchased acquires the homestead character eo instanti on the title passing to the debtor, he having no other home for his family, though he does not take possession immediately.[73] Lands taken in exchange for the homestead are exempt for the same period of time that the proceeds of a sale are.[74]

Involuntary sales.—If the sale is involuntary, the proceeds are exempt, at least for a reasonable time in which to reinvest them,[75] as are also damages for a tort to the property.[76] So too in case of an involuntary substitution of nonexempt property for the homestead, the substituted property will be exempt.[77]

§ 9. Remedies and procedure. Formal selection.[78]—When lands owned by a debtor are of no greater value than the prescribed limit and are used for the support of himself and family, they are exempt without any formal selection;[79] also where actual occupancy gives the land the status of a homestead.[80] Property claimed to be exempt as a homestead must be shown to have had that character at suant to an agreement made by the debtor and in good faith, accepts less than the full amount of the notes in discharge thereof, the debtor is not entitled to receive from the trustee, as exempt, the full nominal sum for which the homestead was sold, but such nominal price should be reduced in the proportion which the whole discount bears to the nominal selling price of both tracts. Where, in a divorce action, the court decrees that the defendant husband shall convey the homestead to the wife on the payment by her of a designated sum for his interest therein, the creditors of the husband are not entitled to satisfaction of their claims out of the proceeds of such forced sale. Canney v. Canney [Mich.] 91 N. W. 620. Where the homestead of a deceased person is sold pursuant to a decree in a suit for specific performance of a contract entered into by the decedent, the proceeds are exempt from the debts of the estate and belong to the heirs. Solt v. Anderson [Neb.] 93 N. W. 205.

76. Kinzer v. Stephens [Iowa] 96 N. W. 858. A creditor cannot offset against a judgment against him for injury to a homesteader's possession of a homestead, a judgment which he has against the owner of the homestead. Lewis v. Scott, 24 Ky. L. R. 2367, 73 S. W. 1131.

78. Necessity of joinder of wife in selection. Where a tract owned by a married man, and occupied and used as a home by him and his wife, exceeds in area the amount exempt as a homestead, a designation by the husband without the joinder of the wife, of a homestead in a part of the tract not covered by a mortgage executed by him alone, there being enough of the land unmortgaged to make up the full quantity exempt, is binding on them. Anderson v. Brin [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 838.

Establishing copy of lost schedule and plat of homestead.—After a schedule and plat in homestead proceedings have been established and recorded, they, as muniments of title, can be established in the superior court by copies when the originals have been lost, under provisions Code Ga., § 4745. Paschal v. Turner, 116 Ga. 736.

79. Folsom v. Asper, 25 Utah, 299, 71 Pac. 315. In an action of ejectment brought by a purchaser at administrator's sale, where the defense is that the land was exempt from sale as a homestead and the value of the tract does not exceed the amount allowed by law as being exempt, there is no necessity for the appointment of commissioners to set off the homestead, under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 3624. Houf v. Brown, 171 Mo. 207.

Necessity of assignment to widow.—Where the land owned and occupied as a home at the time of the owner's death is worth less than the amount allowed as a homestead, it is not necessary that his widow should have the same assigned to her in order to give the property the status of a homestead and vest her with a life estate. Carver v. Maxwell [Tenn.] 71 S. W. 752.

the time of its seizure.[81] In Utah and Washington, the selection of the homestead may be made at any time before the execution sale.[82] It is the intent of the homestead law that a homestead in real estate in kind should be set aside whenever practicable.[83] Homestead may be set out in a tract without bounds relegating the widow and fee owners to partition if agreement proves impossible.[84] A judicial designation of homestead is conclusive of the debtor's right as against a creditor who failed to object,[85] and when recorded is notice to all the world of the existence of the homestead.[86]

Remedies by suit or action.—The wife may enforce her right in equity,[87] and it is not a proper subject for consideration in proceedings for the confirmation of an execution sale thereof.[88] The owner of a homestead may interpose his claim of exemption as a defense to an action of ejectment brought by the execution purchaser thereof.[89] He may plead and prove facts showing that the property was such that it was not subject to execution sale or he can plead and prove that the question had been adjudicated between the parties in a court of competent jurisdiction having the parties and the subject-matter before it.[90]

Remedies of creditors against excess.—A judgment, not being a lien on a homestead, cannot be enforced by execution against the land where the homestead character of the land continued up to the time of the debtor's death.[91] One seeking to subject excess value of a homestead has the burden of showing such value.[92]

Knight v. Davis, 135 Ala. 139.

Evidence.—In an action to cancel a sheriff's sale of land on the ground that it was exempt from sale as a homestead, evidence of the debtor's residence on the land, just prior to and at the time of and subsequent to the filing of the declaration of homestead, is admissible to show that it was a bona fide residence. § 2. Murder.—To constitute murder there must be malice aforethought[7] and a premeditated[8] design to cause death,[9] but an intent to kill another than the person actually slain is sufficient.[10] But malice is implied from a wanton killing,[11] or one committed in the perpetration of a felony,[12] or in resistance to a lawful arrest,[13] and the offense is murder.

Degrees.—Murder is by statute in most states divided into degrees; the test of murder in the first degree being ordinarily premeditation and deliberation,[14] or in the commission of a crime.[15] Intoxication, while no defense,[16] may reduce the degree of the homicide by rendering defendant incapable of premeditation.[17]

§ 3. Manslaughter.[20]—Manslaughter is variously defined by statute in the several states, the definitions embracing all forms of criminal homicide in which malice or intent to kill is absent. Thus it is manslaughter if the homicide is committed by gross negligence,[21] or in a cruel and unusual manner but without intent to kill,[22] or in sudden combat,[23] or in the heat of passion[24] produced by reasonable provocation,[25] and before the lapse of reasonable cooling time.[26]

§ 4. Assault with intent to kill or do great bodily harm.—In most states the offense consists of an assault with intent to murder or, sometimes, to do great bodily harm.[27] Under such statutes the prescribed intent is essential,[28] and the

The fact that an officer having the right to search defendant for concealed weapons, accosted him in insolent manner, is not sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892. Under the Texas Statute making insults to a female relative adequate provocation it was held that the statute applies to insults to such relative by her husband; that it applies to relatives not living at the time of the homicide; that an attempt by deceased to forcibly administer poison to defendant's sister is provocation sufficient to reduce the degree; that the fact that defendant required his wife to submit to excessive sexual intercourse is not such an insult as will mitigate the killing of defendant by her brother, and that declarations by deceased adopting and boasting of insults to defendant's female relative by another, constitute adequate provocation within the statute. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 790.

26. Living with wife for several weeks after learning of adultery. McCarty v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1427, 71 S. W. 656. Waiting fifteen hours after learning of insult to wife. State v. Powell, 109 La. 727. The fact that deceased had seduced defendant's sister does not mitigate a homicide committed by lying in wait. State v. Hicks [Mo.] 77 S. W. 539. Where defendant has known for weeks of adultery between deceased and defendant's wife and has assured deceased that he need fear no injury from him, there is no provocation reducing the offense to manslaughter. State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207. Sufficiency of cooling time is for the jury. White v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 595. Whether three-quarters of an hour is sufficient cooling time is for the jury. State v. Vinso, 171 Mo. 576.

27. The intent required by the Mississippi statute is to murder and the intent to kill or wound is not sufficient. Thames v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 171.

28. The intent to murder must be clearly shown. State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. One too drunk to entertain an intent to kill cannot be convicted. State v. Pasnau, 118 Iowa, 501; State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. A mere wanton act without specific intent (throwing stone into crowded street car) is not an assault with intent to kill. Bray v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 597. The pointing of a pistol in a threatening manner with intent to alarm only does not consti-assault must have been such that had death resulted it would have been murder.[29] The character of the weapon is immaterial where the offense is defined as an assault with intent to kill,[30] but some statutes require the use of a deadly weapon.[31]

§ 5. Justification and excuse.[32]—Homicide is justifiable as committed in self defense, where defendant, without having provoked the difficulty,[33] and without justification,[34] is assaulted in such manner that he in good faith believes[35] and has reasonable ground to believe,[36] that he is in imminent danger[37] of death or great tute an assault with intent to murder. Wright v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 809. The nature and extent of the injury invoked may be sufficient to establish intent to murder. Starr v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 527. Where a firearm was used and a person wounded, testimony of defendant that he shot to frighten only is unavailing. State v. Hamilton, 170 Mo. 377. An intent to kill another than the person actually injured is sufficient. Bush v. State, 136 Ala. 85. Sending an infernal machine by mail addressed to the sender and accompanied with a letter calculated to arouse his wife's jealousy, shows an intent that she should be led to open the box and be killed thereby. State v. Hoot [Iowa] 94 N. W. 564. Malice may be inferred from want of provocation. Howard v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1301, 71 S. W. 446.

29. State v. Williamson, 65 S. C. 242; State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. Assault with intent to commit manslaughter is a crime in Florida. Bryan v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 243.

30. Gray v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 295; Drummer v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 1008; McDonald v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 72.

31. A deadly weapon is one calculated to produce death when used by a person of defendant's strength in the manner in which he used it. Cosby v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 2050, 72 S. W. 1089. An ordinary penknife is a deadly weapon if used in a manner likely to produce death. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997. A gun fired only to frighten is not as a matter of law a deadly weapon. Angel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 553. Whether an iron cigar cutter is a deadly weapon is for the jury. State v. Anderson, 30 Wash. 14, 70 Pac. 104.

32. The distinction, often overlooked, between justification and excuse is pointed out in 1 Clark & Marshall on Crimes, p. 592, and see Erwin v. State, 29 Ohio St. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 733.

33. One who commits an assault is not entitled to kill in self defense in the course thereof. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. One arming himself and seeking the quarrel (Reese v. State, 135 Ala. 13), or who after a quarrel arms himself and seeks to renew the same, is not entitled to urge self defense (People v. Filippelli, 173 N. Y. 509). One bringing on an altercation without felonious intent, may justify an assault with a deadly weapon in the course thereof. State v. Garrett, 170 Mo. 395. One who makes an assault with felonious intent is guilty of murder if he kills in self defense in course of the altercation, but if the assault was without felonious intent, he is guilty of manslaughter only. People v. Filippelli, 173 N. Y. 509.

The fault which will prevent defendant from claiming self defense, must be an act of aggression or immediate wrong doing bringing on the altercation. Bassett v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 262. Something said or done with intent to bring about the difficulty which would have rendered defendant criminally responsible. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813. Previous slanderous statements by defendant are not such a provocation of a quarrel as will deprive him of the right of self defense against a murderous assault. State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756.

Though defendant may have sought the quarrel with intent to kill, if he had abandoned the same and was seeking in good faith to retreat therefrom, he may justify a killing in self defense. Pulpus v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 2; State v. Gibson [Or.] 73 Pac. 333. Where deceased was shot in the back after he had been disabled, the fact that he brought on a difficulty shortly before the homicide is no justification. Hudson v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 785, 69 S. W. 1079.

34. One attacked by a policeman independent of an attempt to arrest has the same right of self defense as against a private person. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813. One standing peaceably on the street at night is entitled to resist an effort by a policeman to strike him for failing to move on when ordered to do so. State v. Meyers, 174 Mo. 352. The owner of premises may call on bystanders to eject a trespasser and the latter has no greater right of resistance against them than he would have against the owner. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997. If the owner use undue force in ejecting a trespasser the latter may defend himself. Thomas v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 201, 74 S. W. 1062. The right to eject a person from a saloon or gambling house is somewhat narrower than the right of ejection from a domicile. State v. Williams [La.] 35 So. 521. A clerk in a store has the same right as his employer to eject an intruder. State v. Hamilton, 170 Mo. 377. Slanderous words spoken of a decedent's brother do not justify an assault by him so as to debar defendant from self defense. State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756.

35. A reasonable appearance of imminent peril is sufficient and it is not essential that the killing should be shown to have been necessary. State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005; Alexander v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 748; Lane v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 896; Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 871; State v. Miller [Or.] 74 Pac. 658. So held where deceased put his hand in pocket as if to draw a weapon. Newman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 951; Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 871.

36. State v. Smith [Or.] 71 Pac. 973; State v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 224; State v. McKenzie [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1015; State v. Allen [La.] 35 bodily harm,[38] and that no safe means of avoiding the same is open to him except the killing of his assailant,[39] and under the same limitations the right is extended to the defense of others,[40] and to the defense of home or family if the force used is proportioned to the nature of the threatened wrong.[41] If defendant was acting in self defense when the fatal shot was fired, he is justified, though subsequent shots were fired in anger.[42]

Accidental homicide.—Homicide is excusable if committed by accident without negligence and while defendant is not engaged in an unlawful enterprise.[43]

Order of military superior.—Where martial law exists, a soldier is justified by the orders of his officer.[44]

§ 6. Indictment or information.[45]—Holdings as to the formal commencement

So. 495. The appearance of danger must be such as to lead a reasonably prudent man to deem himself in peril. State v. Brown [Del.] 53 Atl. 354; Lane v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 896. Threats not accompanied by any act of aggression are insufficient. State v. Smith [Or.] 71 Pac. 973; Morrell v. State, 136 Ala. 44. Whether defendant believed himself in danger and whether such belief was reasonable, are for the jury. Rowsey v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. L. R. 841.

37. It is not necessary that deceased should have attacked defendant if he was about to do so. Nix v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 764. Where deceased has abandoned his attack and is fleeing when shot, self defense cannot be urged. Angling v. State, 137 Ala. 17. Previous felonious assault by decedent does not justify a homicide by lying in wait. State v. Rodman, 173 Mo. 681.

38. The right of self defense extends not only to danger of life but of great bodily harm. State v. Petteys, 65 Kan. 625, 70 Pac. 588. It is not necessary that the assault should have been made with a deadly weapon if the disparity in the strength of the parties is such that serious bodily injury might be apprehended. State v. Gray [Or.] 74 Pac. 927. One may use a weapon to defend himself from a public whipping by one much stronger than himself. State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756. Though an arrest was not justified and defendant did not know the official character of the officer, a shooting to prevent such arrest is not justified. Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892. The relative size and strength of the parties is immaterial to the right of self defense where firearms were drawn by both parties. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813.

39. One assailed without provocation and with a deadly weapon, in a place where he has a right to be, need not retreat. State v. Gibson [Or.] 73 Pac. 333; Hammond v. People, 199 Ill. 173; State v. Petteys, 65 Kan. 625, 70 Pac. 588; State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756. Where the assault on defendant is without provocation and threatens imminent death, defendant need not retreat. State v. Gibson [Or.] 73 Pac. 333. In Texas, one assailed with a deadly weapon is not bound to retreat. Alexander v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 748. It is not enough to debar defendant from the right to kill in self-defense that there was a reasonably safe means of averting the danger; he is not required to abandon his right to self-defense, unless absolute safety is offered by the alternative means. Tompkins v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 77 S. W. 712.

40. One may defend a near relative from death or great bodily harm to the same extent that he may defend himself. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. To render homicide justifiable as in defense of defendant's wife, it is necessary that she be not in such fault as would preclude her from urging self defense and if she was it is immaterial that defendant did not know it. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129.

41. One is justified in killing the father of his wife to prevent the father taking his wife and children from him. Cole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 527. One may, after exhausting all other means of resistance, kill to prevent being forcibly driven from his own premises. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 17.

42. State v. Linhoff [Iowa] 97 N. W. 77.

43. It is not necessarily true that defendant is excusable if the death was caused by the accidental discharge of a gun if he was at the time engaged in an assault or other unlawful act in the endeavor to obtain possession thereof, but on such facts he may be guilty of manslaughter. State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094.

44. Killing by a member of the militia called out to suppress disorder and acting under the orders of his superior officer, is justifiable unless so apparently unwarranted that a man of good understanding must have known that it was unauthorized. Commonwealth v. Shortall [Pa.] 55 Atl. 952.

45. An information that at a time and place specified, defendant did feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditately, and with malice aforethought, assault and kill a person named with a certain deadly weapon described, is good. State v. Reynolds, 171 Mo. 552. An indictment alleging that defendant at a time and place stated, feloniously and with premeditated malice, killed and murdered a person named, by shooting him with a deadly weapon called a revolver, of which wound he died, sufficiently describes the offense. Freese v. State, 159 Ind. 597. An indictment in the usual form giving dates, places and acts, is sufficient. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. Under Mills Ann. St. § 1433, an indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient. Cremar v. People, 30 Colo. 363, 70 Pac. 415. Indictment under Ky. St. § 1166, for shooting and wounding held not to join a charge under § 1224 for shooting from ambush. Collins v. Com. [Ky.] 70 S. W. 187. An indictment describing one wound and alleging that deceased died from said "wounds" is not invalid. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. An unnecessary averand conclusion of indictments,[46] the designation of the offense[47] or the degree thereof,[48] averment that deceased was a human being,[49] and averments as to intent and premeditation,[50] place of the offense,[51] nature of the weapon,[52] manner of committing the offense,[53] and the time of death,[54] are grouped in the footnotes.

ment that deceased was in the peace of the state, etc., does not vitiate the indictment. State v. Coleman [La.] 35 So. 560.

46. An indictment for murder must conclude "so the grand jurors upon their oath do say," etc. State v. Cook, 170 Mo. 210. An indictment commencing in the language of the constitution "In the name and by authority of the state," etc., is sufficient, though Code Crim. Proc. art. 439 requires the word "the" before "authority." Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 564. A conclusion that the grand jurors, upon their oath, say that defendant killed deceased "by the means aforesaid" instead of "in the manner and form aforesaid" is sufficient. State v. Gleason, 172 Mo. 259. An indictment showing an assault with intent to kill and concluding "whereby the accused is deemed to have committed" such crime, is sufficient. Gray v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 295; Brinkley v. Same [Fla.] Id. 296.

47. Under Code, § 5281, providing that the name of the offense, if it have any, shall be inserted, an indictment designating the offense as murder without stating the degree is sufficient. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. An indictment alleging a shooting and wounding from ambush with intent to kill, charges an offense under statute, § 1166, prohibiting shooting and wounding with intent to kill, not under § 1224, prohibiting shooting from ambush without wounding. Collins v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 884, 70 S. W. 187.

48. Sts. 1899, p. 430, allowed presentation of indictments in terms for murder in the second degree, and such a provision is within the power of the legislature. Com. v. Ibrahim [Mass.] 68 N. E. 231. Public Laws 1893, p. 76, providing that nothing in the provision thereof dividing murder into degrees shall require a change in the existing form of indictments for murder, does not violate the constitutional requirement that every man be informed of the accusation against him. State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069.

49. An indictment for killing a certain person which neither alleges that deceased was a human being nor uses the word murder, is insufficient. People v. Lee Look, 137 Cal. 590, 70 Pac. 660. That deceased was a human being will be implied from the averment of his name. Cremar v. People, 30 Colo. 363, 70 Pac. 415.

50. An indictment for killing "with premeditation" is sufficient, and need not allege that the killing was "after premeditation." Green v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 665. Where it is alleged that the mortal wound was inflicted with premeditation and malice aforethought, it need not be expressly stated that the murder was so committed. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. An indictment charging that on a certain day, defendant, with premeditated design and intent to kill a certain person, made an assault upon him, sufficiently alleges that the assault was made with such intent. Anderson v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 294. An indictment alleging that the killing was done unlawfully, feloniously and with premeditated design to effect death, need not also allege malice aforethought. Williams v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 279. Under Public Laws 1893, p. 76, providing that nothing therein shall require a change in the existing form of indictments for murder, an indictment for murder is sufficient though it does not allege the elements of premeditation and deliberation added by such statute. State v. Cole [N. C.] 44 S. E. 391. An information charging that the killing was felonious and with malice aforethought is sufficient though it does not allege that it was unlawful or willful. Carroll v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 471. Information not specifically charging intent to kill, held sufficient under Ball. Ann. Codes & Sts. § 6850, making an indictment sufficient if a person of common understanding would know what was intended. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. Information held to attribute the intent to kill to the preparation of the weapon and not to the killing. State v. Linhoff [Iowa] 97 N. W. 77. Averment of deliberation, malice, etc., held sufficient. State v. Shuff [Idaho] 72 Pac. 664.

51. An indictment which alleges that the crime was committed in a certain house in the District of Columbia sufficiently states the place of the offense. Lanckton v. United States, 18 App. D. C. 348. The place where deceased died need not be stated. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287.

52. An indictment charging a shooting with a gun which the said defendant "then and there held in his hands, loaded with gunpowder and leaden bullets," is good, and does not charge that defendant's hands and not the gun was loaded. Green v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 665. Where it is charged that death resulted from a beating, it need not be alleged that the instrument used was a deadly weapon. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 195. It is not necessary that the indictment allege that the gun was loaded. Cook v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 64; McDonald v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 72. An indictment charging murder with "an iron instrument" held sufficient after verdict. State v. Anderson, 30 Wash. 14, 70 Pac. 104.

53. An indictment for shooting with a pistol, omitting the word "with" is sufficient, if the manner of the killing clearly appears. State v. Heinzman, 171 Mo. 629; State v. Gleason, 172 Mo. 259; State v. Wilson, 172 Mo. 420. An indictment for killing by unlawful beating need not allege that the same was cruel, brutal or inhuman. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 195. Under Code, § 4911, allowing different means to be alleged in the alternative in the same count, an indictment for killing with a certain instrument, or with some sharp instrument, to the grand jury unknown is sufficient. King v. State, 137 Ala. 47. Information held to sufficiently state the time, place and manner of giving a mortal wound. State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207.

54. Where the indictment alleged the day on which the wounds were inflicted and that deceased died therefrom, and the indictment itself is dated three days after the day so

Slight variance as to the time,[55] or as to the weapon used,[56] is not fatal. Murder committed in an attempt to escape from prison may be shown under an indictment in the usual form.[57]

Included offenses.—A conviction may be had for a lesser degree than that charged or an offense included in the charge,[58] the usual practice being to always indict for murder in the first degree, though in Massachusetts a statute provides for indictments in form for murder in the second degree.[59]

§ 7. Evidence.[60] A. Presumptions and burden of proof.—Defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[61] and is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt arising on the evidence as to the degree of crime;[62] but homicide, when proved, is presumptively murder in the second degree, where nothing appears to qualify the same,[63] malice being presumed from lack of provocation,[64] and intent to kill from use of a deadly weapon.[65] In Wisconsin it is held that homicide committed by an act naturally calculated to cause death is presumptively murder in the first degree.[66]

alleged, it sufficiently appears that death occurred within a year and a day. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. Where the indictment alleged that deceased "then and there languished, and languishing died," the words "then and there" apply to the time when the wound was inflicted and qualify not only "languishing" but "died." State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557.

55. Proof of assault on the 11th, and death on the 14th, is not fatally variant from an information charging an assault on the 12th, and death on the same day. State v. Anderson, 30 Wash. 14, 70 Pac. 104.

56. An indictment for shooting with a pistol may be supported by proof that it was with a gun (Drummer v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 1008), or one for shooting with a gun, by proof that it was with a pistol (Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 396). Evidence of a killing with any cutting instrument supports an indictment for homicide with a knife. Jones v. State, 137 Ala. 12.

57. People v. Flanigan, 174 N. Y. 356.

58. One charged with shooting with intent to kill may be convicted of the statutory crime of wounding, under circumstances which would have constituted manslaughter had death ensued. State v. Ryno [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1114. Under indictment for assault with intent to murder conviction may be had of assault with intent to do great bodily harm. Birker v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 643. Under indictment for assault with deadly weapon with intent to do great bodily harm, conviction of simple assault cannot be had. State v. Climie [N. D.] 94 N. W. 574. Under an indictment for murder by shooting, a conviction of the statutory offense of shooting at another may be had. Watson v. State, 116 Ga. 607. On indictment for assault with intent to kill, conviction of simple assault may be had. State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. There cannot be a conviction of assault on indictment for murder, where it appears that the assault was the cause of death. People v. Wheeler, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 396, 12 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 285.

59. Stats. 1899, p. 430. Such a statute is valid. Com. v. Ibrahim [Mass.] 68 N. E. 231.

60. Many matters common to other offenses, particularly expert evidence and evidence of insanity are treated in Indictment and Prosecution.

61. See Indictment and Prosecution, § ——.

62. Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488; State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489; Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444; Arnold v. Com. [Ky.] 72 S. W. 753. Facts mitigating the degree of the crime need be proved only to the satisfaction of the jury and not beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005. Where defendant claims that he killed deceased at the next meeting after an insult to defendant's wife, defendant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt as to whether the homicide occurred at the next meeting. McComas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 533.

63. State v. Bishop, 131 N. C. 733; State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608; Trejo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 546. Evidence of circumstances of killing held to show such circumstances in mitigation that the burden of showing the same did not devolve on defendant. Tanks v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 851.

64. State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. A killing without an antecedent quarrel arising on a sudden difficulty is not murder in the first degree. Garner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 797.

65. The statutory presumption of intent to murder from the use of a deadly weapon, is applicable only where no circumstances of mitigation or justification appear by the evidence. State v. Gibson [Or.] 73 Pac. 333. Firing off a gun at a person with fatal effect is not presumptive evidence of intent to kill. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660.

66. Cupps v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 210.

67. Miscellaneous holding as to relevancy.—Evidence of declarations of intended suicide three years before, held admissible. Exclusion of such declarations held harmless. People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333. Evidence that defendant drank liquor is inadmissible, there being no evidence that he had been drinking at the time of the homicide. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. The fact that the body of deceased was exhumed on the order of an unauthorized person does not invalidate evidence derived therefrom.

and probable consequences of the injury may be shown,[68] particularly where defendant testifies that he fired only to scare.[69] The evidence at the inquest is inadmissible except for the purpose of impeachment.[70] Except where circumstantial evidence is resorted to, in which case a wide range is allowed,[71] the evidence is generally confined to matters which are part of the res gestae,[72] and except as to acts tending to show

Com. v. Grether, 204 Pa. 203. Evidence incidentally tending to impeach defendant as a witness, without a foundation, is proper where it is material as rebuttal. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. Any facts bringing the case within the provision of the statute are admissible. People v. Sullivan, 173 N. Y. 122. Where a witness testifies to having seen defendant, deceased and a third person together before the homicide, he may identify a co-defendant not on trial, as the third person. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Purchase of a revolver by defendant and delivery of it to the person who committed the homicide is admissible as evidence of the conspiracy. Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993. Admissibility of evidence to show conspiracy between defendant and the person who fired the fatal shot, discussed generally. Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993. Whether a witness was playing cards at the time of the homicide is immaterial. Goodlett v. State, 136 Ala. 39. The fact that defendant had been released on low bail is inadmissible. Greason v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 615. Evidence that defendant was at the time of the homicide, a convict, and that deceased was a guard at the prison, is admissible. Stone v. State, 137 Ala. 1. Evidence that the person assaulted was a police officer is admissible, though the information does not so charge. Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892. Evidence that accused owned a certain knife is admissible in connection with proof that deceased died of incised wounds, though there is no proof that defendant had the knife on the day of the homicide. Jones v. State, 137 Ala. 12. Where defendant, a police officer, claimed that he was endeavoring to arrest deceased for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, the exclusion of an ordinance forbidding persons being on the street after a certain hour at night is not error. Davis v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 1101.

Explanation of matters appearing in evidence.—Where it appears that a committee of neighbors had called on deceased in regard to the difficulty between him and defendant, the personnel of such committee is improper. State v. Rodman [Mo.] 73 S. W. 605. Where it appears that deceased interfered on behalf of certain negroes in a previous altercation with defendant, the state may show the nature of the difficulty. Rone v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1174, 70 S. W. 1042. Where deceased went to the scene of a difficulty between defendant and another taking place in his view, evidence of the particulars of such difficulty are immaterial. Thacker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1584, 71 S. W. 931. Where defendant testifies that he was playing cards with deceased, a negro, at the latter's solicitation, his reputation for gambling with negroes may be shown. Rogers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 18. Evidence of other crimes by defendant are not admissible to show why a witness was afraid of him. Black v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1974, 72 S. W. 772.

68. Jowell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 286.

69. State v. Hamilton, 170 Mo. 377.

70. Hall v. State, 137 Ala. 44; State v. Gilliam [S. C.] 45 S. E. 6.

71. Evidence of the movements of an accomplice in connection with the homicide and after the same is admissible. Jenkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 312. The exclusion of evidence that defendant had offered a team to be used in searching for the body of deceased is proper, the body having later been found in defendant's cistern. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940.

72. The conduct of both parties from the inception of the affray to the homicide is part of the res gestae. State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3; Robinson v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 985. Statements by defendant, and deceased in each other's presence, after the homicide and the arrest of defendant are admissible. State v. Dennis, 119 Iowa, 688. Where the killing grew out of an assault by defendant on a third person, a previous assault by him on such person is part of the res gestae. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 178.

Acts and statements of accused.—Evidence of previous and subsequent conduct held part of the res gestae of a homicide committed in an attempt by a number of soldiers to rescue a companion from jail. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. A declaration of defendant immediately after the homicide that he would kill any one who would try to pull him off his hack is admissible as part of the res gestae. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813. Where accused poisoned her children and attempted suicide, her statements immediately on regaining consciousness are part of the res gestae. People v. Quimby [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1061. Explanations by defendant some time after the homicide, as to marks on his face, are no part of the res gestae. Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 969. Declaration of defendant that deceased was not hurt, made immediately after the homicide, is admissible where intent to kill is in issue. State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3. The appearance and expression of defendant after a quarrel with deceased and before the homicide held part of the res gestae. Hainsworth v. State, 136 Ala. 13. Statement of defendant to one whom he asked to go for a doctor held inadmissible. Holmes v. State, 136 Ala. 80. A remark of defendant "That was a good shot with my left hand" is admissible. State v. Utley, 132 N. C. 1022. Declaration by defendant after his arrest held not part of the res gestae, time in which to invent an explanation having elapsed. State v. McCann [Or.] 72 Pac. 137. Evidence of previous shooting by defendant held part of the res gestae. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 928. Where an assault was committed in an altercation with two persons, evidence of the cutting of one is admissible on intent, malice or motive,[73] or admissions and confessions of guilt,[74] evidence of a prosecution for striking the other, as part of the res gestae. Starr v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 527. Statement made by defendant after the homicide held not part of the res gestae. Davis v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 1101.

Acts and statements of deceased.—Declaration of deceased just after the assault held part of res gestae. Starks v. State, 137 Ala. 9. Narration by deceased after the assault held not part of the res gestae. State v. Hendricks [Mo.] 73 S. W. 194. A statement by deceased that defendant was not to blame is hearsay. State v. Terry, 172 Mo. 213. Remark of deceased to third person just after the assault held part of the res gestae. Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325. Statement of deceased a few minutes after the homicide as to who shot him is part of the res gestae. State v. Wilmbusse [Idaho] 70 Pac. 849. What deceased was doing just before the homicide is part of the res gestae. State v. Hunter, 118 Iowa, 686. A statement of deceased reported to defendant and which influenced his conduct is part of the res gestae. McCormick v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 606. An exclamation by deceased, "I am killed," is part of the res gestae. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 950, 70 S. W. 295.

Acts and statements of third persons.—Declaration of bystander held part of res gestae. Caddell v. State, 136 Ala. 9. Exclamations by decedent's wife immediately after the shooting are part of the res gestae. Collins v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 884, 70 S. W. 187. Remark of third person immediately after the homicide "You have killed him" held admissible. Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254. Threats against deceased by third persons on the night of, but some time before, the homicide, are not part of the res gestae. Webb v. State, 135 Ala. 36. Evidence of tracks made by another than defendant fleeing from the scene of the crime, and the general incidents of such flight, are admissible as part of the res gestae. State v. Moore [Kan.] 73 Pac. 905. Declarations of a third person several hours after the homicide that he shot deceased are no part of the res gestae. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 973. A statement by defendant's wife after the altercation was over and defendant had left is no part of the res gestae. State v. Gallehugh [Minn.] 94 N. W. 723.

73. Provocation and evidence of animus generally.—Proof of previous insults to defendant's female relative is admissible. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 790. Remark by defendant referring to trouble between himself and deceased, that he was a pretty good marksman (Hudson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 764), or that "he had friends" is admissible to show animus (Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 595). A declaration by defendant that he would rather have a murder case against him than a prosecution for illegal selling of liquor is immaterial. Walker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 997. Evidence tending to show that defendant feared that deceased intended to institute a prosecution against him for illegal sale of liquor, held inadmissible. Walker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 997. A threat by defendant to divorce his wife held inadmissible on a prosecution for killing her. Raines v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 19. A declaration showing general malice, though not directed against any person (State v. Vance, 29 Wash. 435, 70 Pac. 34), generally belligerent conduct of defendant before the homicide (State v. Hamilton, 170 Mo. 377; Hutsell v. Com. [Ky.] 75 S. W. 225), or a declaration by defendant as to his willingness to kill negroes generally, is admissible (State v. Gallehugh [Minn.] 94 N. W. 723). Statements of a certain woman inciting defendant to kill deceased are admissible. People v. Gallagher, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 39, 11 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 348. Domestic troubles of defendant are inadmissible as bearing on his state of mind, where there is no other evidence of insanity. State v. Vance, 29 Wash. 435, 70 Pac. 34. That defendant had taken four or five drinks before the homicide. Jowell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 286. Where defendant claims that he killed deceased because of insults to defendant's daughter, slanderous remarks by deceased concerning other women are inadmissible, but his general reputation for lewdness may be shown. McComas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 189. Though the difficulty grew out of defendant's attention to the daughter of deceased, evidence of their engagement is inadmissible. State v. Rodman [Mo.] 73 S. W. 605. The defendant may state generally whether he entertained malice toward deceased or whether he feared him. State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030. Declaration of defendant that witness might hear of his being in jail the next day for killing deceased is admissible. Ditmer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 34. Whether defendant was a trespasser on the premises of deceased held material. Nix v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 764. Declarations of defendant showing anger and motive are admissible. Harris v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 1044. Though the killing was the result of a feud growing out of the previous murder of defendant's brother, the details of such previous killing are inadmissible. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565. A statement by defendant showing that he apprehended difficulty with deceased, is admissible. Id. Evidence that defendant had been told by a third person that deceased had nothing against him is admissible as bearing on his state of mind. Rush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 927. Evidence that deceased had been a witness against defendant in another case, held admissible. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 928. Where self-defense is alleged and the evidence is that deceased threw a knife at defendant, evidence that the railroad gang to which defendant and deceased belonged were in the habit of playfully throwing knives at each other is inadmissible. McCardell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 446.

Previous assaults. Previous assaults by defendant are admissible to show animus. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162; Jahnke v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 158. Previous indictment for aggravated assault upon deceased may be shown. Powell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 218. Previous ill treatment of a wife inadmissible in a prosecution for killing her. Raines v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 19. Previous disconnected difficulties are prior[75] or subsequent acts is generally inadmissible.[76] Evidence as to the movements of a third person whom defendant claims is the guilty party is generally

Threats and arming. Previous threats by defendant against deceased are admissible. Porter v. State, 135 Ala. 51; People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 Pac. 1014; Barnes v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1143, 70 S. W. 827; Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 396; Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025; Marchan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 532. Threats by defendant are not rendered inadmissible by remoteness in point of time. Johns v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 71. Threats four or five years before the homicide are inadmissible. McMasters v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 2. Threats by defendant are admissible, though the person threatened was not named. Holloway v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 14; Starr v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 527. Threats made by defendant against deceased at a meeting of neighbors to discuss the trouble between them, held admissible. Baker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 618. Statements by defendant that he was satisfied with a settlement with deceased do not render inadmissible threats of violence in case he was not satisfied. Hudson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 764. Where one is charged as principal in the second degree, prior threats by him are admissible. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. Previous quarrels and accusation of crime between the parties are admissible to show motive. State v. Coleman [La.] 35 So. 560. Though the fact of previous quarrels between the parties is admissible, the merits thereof are not. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. Where the prosecution proves threats by defendant against his wife, evidence of a subsequent reconciliation should be received. Petty v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 213. Evidence that defendant sought to borrow a gun on the day of the homicide, that such gun was afterward taken from the possession of the owner and found later in the possession of a third person, who testified that he obtained it from defendant, is admissible. Webb v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1011. Evidence of the borrowing of a pistol by defendant and threats by him against deceased ten months before the homicide, admissible in connection with proof of continued ill feeling. Rush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 927. Defendant may explain why he had a gun with him at the time of the homicide. State v. Shuff [Idaho] 72 Pac. 664. Testimony that the person from whom defendant obtained the weapon got it from another in a clandestine manner is inadmissible where there is no evidence of collusion. Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 595. A threat to shoot deceased if he caught him destroying a certain fence, held admissible. State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030.

Evidence of motive. Receipt of insurance money under suspicious circumstances by deceased who was defendant's paramour and of efforts by defendant to obtain the same is admissible. Bess v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 349. Evidence that defendant stole money from the person of deceased is admissible to rebut a defense of insanity. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. Affectionate letters written to defendant by the decedent's wife, and letters from her to decedent, devoid of affectionate expressions, are admissible. Stokes v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 248. Insurance on decedent's life, payable to defendant's wife, cannot be shown without evidence that he knew of it before the homicide. State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668. Where the contention of the state is that the murder was committed by defendant to conceal previous larceny by him, evidence tending to show that he did not commit such larceny is admissible. Goebel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 460. Where the alleged motive was to obtain possession of evidence of indebtedness held by deceased, the state of defendant's bank account may be proved. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 73 Pac. 562. That defendant manifested jealousy of attentions to a certain woman is admissible. Jones v. State, 117 Ga. 324. Statements of deceased to a third person, overheard by defendant and by which his anger was aroused, are admissible. McCormick v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 606. Evidence that deceased had recently shot a relative of defendant is admissible. Lawrence v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 87. Evidence of improper relations between defendant and a woman is admissible, where he is charged with complicity in the murder of his wife by such woman. Caddell v. State, 136 Ala. 9. Evidence that shortly before the homicide a woman urged defendant to assault deceased is admissible. People v. Gallagher, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 39. Trespasses on defendant's land out of which the altercation grew are admissible. State v. Campbell, 25 Utah, 342, 71 Pac. 529.

74. See Indictment and Procedure. A general declaration of having killed a negro is admissible. Somers v. State, 116 Ga. 535. Evidence that an accomplice had changed certain money after the homicide and that other money was found where he confessed to having hidden it are admissible in corroboration of his confession. State v. Gallivan, 75 Conn. 326.

75. Evidence as to what was said and done between the parties several hours before is inadmissible. Starr v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 527. On a prosecution of a foreman for the killing of a man under him, evidence that such foreman had not sent the man sufficient dinner on that day is inadmissible. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. Evidence of a previous accidental discharge of a gun by defendant near a witness, held immaterial. Goebel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 460. Evidence that on a night previous to the homicide some one had knocked on the side of deceased's house and gone away when he came out is inadmissible where there is no evidence that deceased was decoyed from the house on the night of the homicide. Smith v. State, 137 Ala. 22. Statements by defendant to a third person before the homicide, as to his purpose in going to the place where the homicide occurred, are inadmissible. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494.

76. Statements after the homicide are not admissible against one charged as accessory before the fact (Powers v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1007, 1186, 70 S. W. 644, 1050), nor is evidence of facts which would have made inadmissible.[77] Articles connected with the homicide, such as weapons with which it might have been committed belonging to defendant,[78] or found near the scene of the homicide,[79] clothing of deceased,[80] articles belonging to deceased, left by defendant with a third person after the homicide,[81] and appearances at the scene of the homicide,[82] are admissible. Photographs of deceased held inadmissible to show character and location of wounds.[83]

him an accessory after the fact, admissible against one charged as principal in the second degree (Harper v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 572). Deposit of money in bank the next day by defendant is admissible where he confessed to depositing money taken from deceased. Ransom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 960. Flight immediately after homicide. State v. Vinso, 171 Mo. 576. Attempt to escape. Barnes v. Com. [Ky.] 70 S. W. 827; State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544; Anderson v. Com., 100 Va. 860. Evidence on a trial for wife murder that the manner of deceased indicated that she believed defendant guilty is inadmissible. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. That defendant appeared at the market place shortly after the homicide and admitted the shooting is sufficient to admit proof that one of the perpetrators of the crime fled in that direction. Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52. The fact that defendant did not speak to his wife on being taken to see her before her death held inadmissible. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210.

77. Where it appears in evidence that the person who committed the homicide ran past a certain street corner immediately afterwards, the state may show that the person whom defendant claims committed the homicide was not the person who ran past such corner. Cecil v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 197. Though it was claimed by defendant that a third person did the killing, the state cannot show the conduct of such person subsequent to the homicide. Cecil v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 197. That a third person left the neighborhood shortly after the homicide is irrelevant. Goodlett v. State, 136 Ala. 39.

78. A pistol belonging to defendant of the same calibre as that with which deceased was shot is admissible. Carr v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 892. Evidence of the finding at defendant's house of shells similar to those with which deceased was shot is admissible. Litton v. Com. [Va.] 44 S. E. 923. The frame and center pin of a revolver, and cartridges found on the premises of deceased are admissible. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. Finding of a cartridge which fitted defendant's gun at a point two miles from the scene of the homicide, held admissible, the country being sparsely settled. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. Where the homicide was committed while resisting arrest for burglary, weapons and other articles on the person of defendant may be introduced. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660.

79. An ax found in the river near the body of deceased is admissible, where there is proof that the homicide was committed with such an instrument. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Evidence of the finding of an instrument such as might have committed the injury, near the scene of the homicide, held admissible. Yancy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 571. Evidence of the finding of a club near the scene of the homicide is admissible where defendant claims that he was assaulted by defendant with such a weapon. State v. Cather [Iowa] 96 N. W. 722.

80. The clothing of deceased and vehicle in which he was riding showing bullet marks are admissible. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. Clothing worn by deceased at the time of the homicide is admissible. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 25.

81. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489.

82. The tracks in the snow near where the person committing the murder stood are admissible. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 950, 70 S. W. 295. Shot holes in the walls are immaterial if there is no evidence when they were made. Raines v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 19. Evidence of the finding of a bullet at the place of the homicide three months later, held inadmissible. Hickey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 920.

83. State v. Miller [Or.] 74 Pac. 658.

84. Defendant on a plea of self defense may show the dangerous character of deceased. State v. Hunter, 118 Iowa, 686. Defendant may show that deceased was a dangerous man and habitually armed. Com. v. Booker [Ky.] 76 S. W. 838; State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030. Defendant may show that deceased was usually armed and bore a nickname indicating his asserted readiness to use dangerous weapons. State v. Thompson, 109 La. 296. Evidence of the good reputation of deceased for peace is admissible, where self defense is alleged. People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662. Evidence of general reputation of deceased for violence, is admissible but not specific acts. People v. Gaimari [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 112; Andrews v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 852. Evidence of the dangerous character of deceased is inadmissible where there is no evidence that he was the assailant. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494. The violent character of deceased cannot be shown where there is no evidence that the killing was in self defense. Morrell v. State, 136 Ala. 44. Where there is evidence that deceased made a gesture as if to draw a weapon, evidence of his general reputation in respect to resort to fire arms is admissible. State v. Ellis, 30 Wash. 369, 70 Pac. 963. Where there is evidence that deceased was quarrelsome and irritable, evidence of his good reputation is admissible for the state though defendant gave no general evidence of reputation. People v. Gallagher, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 39.

85. Evidence that at the time of making previous threats deceased had a knife in his hand is not admissible. State v. Parker [Mo.] 72 S. W. 650. Threatening remark of deceased held admissible though it was and if deceased had at the time of the homicide committed some overt act of violence,[87] as are previous assaults,[88] facts showing that deceased was in a belligerent state of mind,[89] and evidence as to whether deceased was armed.[90] Where at the time of the homicide deceased was accompanied by a third person, defendant may show that deceased and such third person were both angry with him in respect to the subject which was then being discussed.[91] Previous threats by defendant are admissible, the defense being justification.[92] That defendant had not filed a complaint to place deceased under peace bonds after hearing threats is improper.[93] Where defendant alleges that the homicide was committed in necessary defense of decedent's sister, evidence of improper relations between defendant and the sister is admissible.[94] Where defendant claimed justification in that deceased was trying to take defendant's wife from him, letters of the wife to defendant expressing affection are admissible.[95] An opinion of the sheriff that a hole in defendant's hat was caused by a bullet, held admissible.[96] Evidence that the brother of deceased was seen near defendant's house armed prior to the homicide is irrelevant.[97] Where defendant, urging self defense to an indictment for patricide, testifies that his mother told him of threats against her by deceased, evidence that the mother had, but not in defendant's presence, threatened to have deceased killed, is inadmissible.[98] Evidence that the position of the body of deceased indicated the absence of a struggle is admissible in rebuttal of evidence in self defense.[1] Where doubtful whether it was addressed to defendant. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 612, 69 S. W. 721.

86. Evidence of threats by deceased not communicated to defendant, held inadmissible. Crockett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 4. Where defendant testified the killing was in defense of his sister, prior threats by deceased against her are admissible, though not communicated to defendant. State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668.

87. Evidence of threats is not admissible, unless there is some hostile demonstration. State v. Harrison [La.] 35 So. 560; State v. Tasby, 110 La. 121. Threats by deceased are admissible, though he made no effort to execute the same. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 756. Evidence of the dangerous character of deceased and threats by him is inadmissible where defendant was the aggressor. Morrison v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 277.

88. Evidence of former assaults by decedent are admissible. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 756; State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668. Evidence of previous unconnected assaults by deceased held inadmissible. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Who had been successful in previous disputes between the parties is immaterial. Bohlman v. State, 135 Ala. 45.

89. Defendant may show that some time before the homicide deceased manifested anger toward him. Com. v. Booker [Ky.] 76 S. W. 838. Evidence of decedent's condition of mind just before the homicide is admissible. State v. Hunter, 118 Iowa, 686. Evidence of belligerent conduct of deceased at a remote time not known to defendant is inadmissible. State v. Sale, 119 Iowa, 1. Where the evidence as to who was the aggressor is conflicting, evidence of acts of aggression by deceased on other persons shortly before is admissible, though it was not known to defendant. State v. Beird, 118 Iowa, 474. Evidence that deceased, a convict, had shortly before assaulting defendant said that he had served one term for murder, is admissible. Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 969. Use of abusive language by deceased immediately before the homicide is admissible. State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608.

90. The wife of the person assaulted may testify as to what firearms he owned and whether he had them with him, where self defense is urged. State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030. The reputation of deceased for carrying weapons is admissible. Com. v. Booker [Ky.] 76 S. W. 838; State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030; State v. Thompson, 109 La. 296. Evidence of previous arming by deceased is inadmissible where there is no evidence that the killing was in self defense. State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207. Testimony that a third person took a pistol away from deceased just before the homicide is admissible in rebuttal where defendant testified that deceased had a pistol at the time of the shooting. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 36. Previous declarations by deceased known to defendant as to his being armed are admissible. People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662. Evidence that deceased was in fact not armed is admissible. Id.

97. Green v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 665.

98. Owens v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 598.

1. Com. v. Conroy [Pa.] 56 Atl. 427.

there was a conflict as to whether a third person was holding deceased at the time of the homicide, bloody clothing of the former is admissible to corroborate his statement that he was.[2]

Harmless error in the admission or exclusion of evidence is treated in the note.[3]

(§ 7) C. Dying declarations.—To admit declarations of deceased it must appear that they were made in expectation of imminent death and after hope of recovery has been abandoned,[4] though death did not occur at the time expected.[5] A dying declaration is admissible though there were eye-witnesses to the homicide.[6] One hearing a dying declaration may testify orally thereto,[7] and written

2. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 36.

3. The striking out of evidence held to cure error in its admission. Bassett v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 262. Exclusion of evidence showing the inadmissibility of a dying declaration is cured by subsequent admission thereof. State v. Wilmbusse [Idaho] 70 Pac. 849. Error in admitting evidence is cured by its subsequent withdrawal. State v. McKnight, 119 Iowa, 79. Evidence of difficulties between other persons, held harmless. Cook v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1409, 71 S. W. 522. Admission of evidence as to nature of wound is harmless where defendant admits the shooting. State v. Hamilton, 170 Mo. 377. Evidence of statements of defendant in the presence of deceased held prejudicial. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. Evidence that the weapon used by defendant was lost by a witness some time before when defendant was in his employ, held harmless. State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808. Evidence that a witness knew a man who was with deceased at the time of the difficulty is harmless. Cecil v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 197. The reception of improper evidence or the rejection of competent evidence is ground for reversal. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. The exclusion of expert opinion before proper foundation was laid is not error. Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488. Conviction of a lower degree as to which there was no evidence is not prejudicial. Glenn v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 254. Where previous assaults by defendant are proved by him to show insanity, evidence that he had been sent to the penitentiary for previous assaults is harmless. Black v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1974, 72 S. W. 772.

4. Statements admissible if made with a realization of impending death. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210; State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808. Dying declarations must have been made under the influence of impending dissolution. Fuqua v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2204, 73 S. W. 782.

Admissibility of evidence to show expectation of death: Conversations by declarant as to his funeral arrangements admissible. State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608. Condition of declarant two days after making the declaration is inadmissible. State v. Wilmbusse [Idaho] 70 Pac. 849. What decedent said as to his hope of recovery is admissible. Id.

Sufficiency of showing. State v. Gray [Or.] 74 Pac. 927. Where deceased had been informed by his physician that he would not live, his dying declarations are admissible though he expressed no conviction of impending death. Where deceased declared that he was dying and gave instructions as to his funeral, dying declarations are admissible. Grant v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 603. A statement of deceased, "I am shot to death, I cannot live," is sufficient to admit dying declarations. Starks v. State, 137 Ala. 9. A statement "I can't stand it if this pain does not leave me soon," does not show expectation of death. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. Statement by deceased that he would never get well, made while in fact in a very bad condition, renders his declaration admissible. State v. McKnight, 119 Iowa, 79. Statement by deceased that he did not expect to live, made on the day of his death, sufficient to admit his declaration. Arnett v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1440, 71 S. W. 635. A statement by deceased that he did not expect to live until morning and wished to leave a statement of the facts, is a sufficient foundation for the admission of dying declarations. Smith v. State, 136 Ala. 1. Declarations made after deceased had been told by a physician that he would die, and had stated that he so believed, are admissible. People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339; State v. Dennis, 119 Iowa, 688; Fuqua v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2204, 73 S. W. 782. Where defendant stated that he was without hope of recovery and that the physicians had advised him that he could not live, his declaration is admissible though there is testimony by his wife that he did not believe he was going to die. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191; State v. Boggan, 133 N. C. 761. Declarations in articulo mortis held admissible. Anderson v. State, 117 Ga. 255. Evidence of spontaneous declaration, made a few moments after the homicide in which deceased said that he was going to die, held admissible as a dying declaration. Mathews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 218. Statements of deceased that he had no hope of recovery, held to make his declarations admissible. Rowsey v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 409. Evidence that deceased declared that he was about to die and made his will and that he never thereafter expressed hope of recovery, is sufficient to admit dying declarations made two weeks later, though his condition improved in the meantime. Crockett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 4. Testimony of a physician that he had informed deceased that he was dying, is sufficient to admit a dying declaration. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025.

5. State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654. Declarations made in expectancy of death, admissible though declarant lived for eleven days thereafter. Burton v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1162, 70 S. W. 831.

declarations are admissible if read to and signed by declarant, though written out of his presence,[8] but not the notes from which such statement was written,[9] nor a statement not signed by deceased or read over to him,[10] though it may be used by the witness to refresh his memory.[11] Statements by deceased at about the time of a written statement but not included therein are admissible.[12] Competency of the declarant must be shown,[13] as where he is a child of tender years.[14] The declaration must be confined to statements of fact[15] relating to the homicide.[16] Where objectionable matter in a dying declaration is so interwoven that it cannot be separated without destroying the sense, the whole is admissible.[17] Whether the declarations were in fact made,[18] whether they were made under a belief in impending death,[19] and their weight,[20] is for the jury. Evidence of circumstances under which declarations were made is admissible as affecting their weight.[21] Statements other than dying declarations are not admissible to corroborate the same.[22]

(§ 7) D. Sufficiency.—In the footnotes are grouped cases as to the sufficiency of evidence in general,[23] and its sufficiency to establish the corpus delicti,[24] malice

12. Hendrickson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2173, 73 S. W. 764.

13. State v. Wilmbusse [Idaho] 70 Pac. 849.

14. Child ten years old. State v. Frazier, 109 La. 458.

15. A declaration by decedent that he was to blame, is a mere conclusion and not admissible. State v. Sale, 119 Iowa, 1. A declaration that one of two persons committed the crime is not a mere opinion. Henderson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1985, 72 S. W. 781.

16. Dying declarations as to previous quarrels between defendant and deceased are inadmissible. Foley v. State [Wyo.] 72 Pac. 627. Declarations as to occurrences not connected with the homicide, inadmissible. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. Statements that deceased had never made any threats against defendant and knew of no reason why defendant should shoot him, are inadmissible as referring to matters previous to the killing. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191. Statements that just previous to the killing he saw that defendant was mad and that he asked him what he was mad about are admissible. Id.

17. Bennett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 314.

18. State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654.

19. The preliminary question of admissibility is for the court, but the belief of declarant should be submitted to determine their weight. Smith v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 817. But see Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29.

20. The jury should be instructed that they are judges of the weight of a dying declaration. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. An instruction that a dying declaration should be given such weight as the jury thought it should have in connection with the other evidence, is proper. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191. Dying declarations are not governed by the same rule of caution that applies to the testimony as to declarations generally. State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654. It is error to instruct that they should be received with great caution. Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29.

21. State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030.

22. State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654.

23. Proof of motive is not indispensable. Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892; Cupps v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 210; State v. Dull [Kan.] 74 Pac. 235; State v. Gregory [Mo.] 76 S. W. 970; State v. Crabtree, 170 Mo. 642. The fact that one accused as principal in the second degree had a lawful purpose in going to the scene of the homicide is not conclusive in his favor. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. Evidence of murder by poisoning well, held sufficient. Lazenby v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1051. Evidence held sufficient to show murder committed in the perpetration of robbery. State v. Wilson, 172 Mo. 420. Evidence corroborating accomplice held to sustain conviction of murder committed in the perpetration of robbery. State v. Nelson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 652. Evidence of murder by agreement for mutual suicide held insufficient. Burnett v. People [Ill.] 68 N. E. 505. Evidence of infanticide held sufficient. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 15. Defendant must be identified beyond a reasonable doubt. Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230. Identification only by the voice may be sufficient. Evidence held insufficient in particular cases, where voice was not peculiar and was heard at some distance by one slightly acquainted with the party. Id.

Circumstantial evidence: Evidence held sufficient to establish that defendant was the person who committed the crime,—confession corroborated by circumstances. People v. White [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 630. Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction, the principal evidence being a confession which defendant admitted but claimed was made only as a joke in the course of a narration of alleged crimes between himself and the witness. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. Evidence connecting defendant with crime held insufficient to corroborate accomplice. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 545. Circumstantial evidence and confession held sufficient. Lawrence v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 87. Circumstantial evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction. State v. Gilliam [S. C.] 45 S. E. 6; State v. Boggan, 133 N. C. 761; McMasters v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 302; People v. Van Wormer, 175 N. Y. 188; Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940; Brown v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 727, 69 S. W. 1098; Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751; State v. Ryno [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1114; McKinney v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 753. Circumstantial evidence held insufficient. State v. Crabtree, 170 Mo. 642; Hernandez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 840. Evidence of identity held sufficient; confession, tracks and possession of weapon. Howard v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 950, 70 S. W. 295. Circumstantial evidence held sufficient to show murder of one whom defendant and his associates mistook for a laborer hired in their stead. State v. Dennis [Iowa] 94 N. W. 235. Circumstantial evidence held to sustain conviction of murder of defendant's paramour, the defense being that she committed suicide. State v. Lucas [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1003. Circumstantial evidence of wife murder by poisoning held sufficient. Wilkerson v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. L. R. 780, 76 S. W. 359. Circumstantial evidence of murder in the perpetration of robbery held sufficient. State v. Tyler [Iowa] 97 N. W. 983; State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. Evidence of conspiracy held sufficient. Martin v. State, 136 Ala. 32.

As against evidence of self-defense or other justification: Evidence held to show self defense and to be insufficient to sustain conviction. Chambless v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 2; State v. Moore [Neb.] 95 N. W. 334; State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756; Newsome v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 296. Where assailant is cut by grasping a knife with which defendant sought to defend himself, justification or excuse is apparent. Bailey v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1114, 70 S. W. 838. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction notwithstanding a plea of self defense. State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668; People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662; Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162; Bundren v. State, 109 Tenn. 225; State v. Rodman, 173 Mo. 681; People v. Gaimari [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 112; Mow v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1069; State v. Gallehugh [Minn.] 94 N. W. 723; State v. Gregory [Mo.] 76 S. W. 970. Evidence held to show that a foreman killing a man under him in the course of an altercation in a lumber camp, was acting in self defense. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. Evidence held to show that deceased though the aggressor, had sought to retire from the combat. White v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 595. Evidence that killing was justified as in defense of decedent's sister held insufficient. Morrison v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 2493, 74 S. W. 277. Evidence held not to show self defense. Deceased arose from his chair using abusive language but made no threatening movement. People v. Dobbins [Cal.] 72 Pac. 339. Evidence of excessive force used by an officer in overcoming resistance to an arrest, held sufficient. State v. Phillips [Iowa] 94 N. W. 229. Evidence held to show justification in that defendant discovered deceased with defendant's wife under circumstances creating a reasonable belief that adultery had been or was about to be committed. Dewberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 307. Evidence held to show that killing by militiaman was justifiable as committed under the orders of his superior officer. Commonwealth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165.

As against evidence of suicide: Evidence of murder held sufficient as against a defense of suicide. State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120; State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489. Evidence of wife murder held sufficient, the defense being suicide. People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333.

As against evidence of insanity: Evidence of wife murder held sufficient to sustain conviction, the defense being insanity. People v. Ennis [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 357. Evidence of murder held sufficient as against defense of insanity. People v. Tobin [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 359; Jackson v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 690; People v. Egnor, 175 N. Y. 419; Hoover v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 591; State v. Dunn [Mo.] 77 S. W. 848.

24. Evidence of corpus delicti held sufficient, the body having been partially burned. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771. It is not necessary that the body of deceased should show that the death was by criminal means. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940. Conviction of poisoning a well cannot be had on an uncorroborated confession without proof of the corpus delicti. Stanley v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 360. Finding a body bearing marks of violence held sufficient evidence of corpus delicti. Hunt v. State, 135 Ala. 1.

25. Circumstances showing a sedate, deliberate purpose and formed design, prove express malice. State v. Di Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. Evidence held insufficient to show premeditation. State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069. Malice and deliberation may be shown by circumstantial evidence. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. The striking of one blow with a razor during a quarrel does not show express malice. Rogers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 18. Evidence held sufficient to show deliberation. State v. Vinso, 171 Mo. 576. Evidence held insufficient to show deliberation. State v. Bishop, 131 N. C. 733. Arming and previous threats held sufficient to show deliberation. Commonwealth v. Kilpatrick, 204 Pa. 218. Malice and deliberation must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. That defendant was in an out of the way place on an intensely cold night, armed with a deadly weapon, and followed deceased and killed him without warning, shows premeditation and deliberation. State v. Dennis [Iowa] 94 N. W. 235. Evidence of threats and declarations manifesting extreme jealousy, held to show malice. Rowsey v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. L. R. 841, 76 S. W. 409.

Murder in first degree: Evidence held sufficient for the jury as to murder in the first degree. State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005; Fugett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S.

(§ 8) Trial and punishment. A. Conduct of trial in general.[27]—Where defendant poisoned her two children at the same time, evidence of both poisonings is admissible on the trial for the murder of one child.[28] The weapon with which the homicide was committed may be exhibited to the jury.[29]

(§ 8) B. Instructions.—Instructions need not be given on matters as to which there is no evidence.[30] Such included offenses as might be found under the evidence must be submitted,[31] and in some states an instruction that defendant must

Y. 509; Commonwealth v. Dudash, 204 Pa. 124; State v. Gurley, 170 Mo. 429; Commonwealth v. West, 204 Pa. 68; Mitchell v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 1009; State v. May, 172 Mo. 630; Jahnke v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 158; Hainsworth v. State, 136 Ala. 13; Cohen v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 801 (syllabus decision).

Murder in second degree: Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of murder in the second degree. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997; State v. Steffen, 174 Mo. 628; State v. Sale, 119 Iowa, 1; State v. Ashcraft, 170 Mo. 409; Wilson v. State, 109 Tenn. 167; White v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 173. Defendant went to the house of deceased and killed him without provocation. Burrows v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 848.

Murder in third degree: Evidence held to show murder in the third degree. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287.

Manslaughter: Evidence of firing at persons creating disturbance near defendant's house held to warrant conviction of manslaughter. Allen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 218. Evidence showing the discharge of a pistol by accident while deceased was attempting to take the same from defendant's pocket held to show nothing more than manslaghter. Tanks v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 851. Evidence of manslaughter by mis-treatment of a child, held sufficient to go to the jury. State v. Goode, 132 N. C. 982. Evidence held sufficient to show manslaughter in the third degree. Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325. Evidence on prosecution for killing police officer held to show a legal arrest by him. Commonwealth v. Carter [Mass.] 66 N. E. 716. Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of manslaughter. People v. Cebulla, 137 Cal. 314, 70 Pac. 181; Hatcher v. State, 116 Ga. 617; Bohannan v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1814, 72 S. W. 322.

26. Evidence of murder held sufficient notwithstanding plea of accidental shooting. Teel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 11; Cubine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 39. Evidence of intent to kill held to warrant conviction. Middlebrooks v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 607; People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. (N. Y.) 55. Severity of wound held sufficient to show intent to kill. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 178; Drummer v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 1008. Evidence held sufficient to show assault with intent to commit manslaughter. Bryan v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 243. Evidence of wantonly throwing a stone into a street car, held not to warrant a conviction of assault with intent to murder. Bray v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 597. The fact that the wounds inflicted on the person assailed were incise and confined him to the house for three or four days and at one time threatened his life, is of itself insufficient to show that the weapon used was deadly. Cage v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 806. Evidence of an assault with a razor held sufficient to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to kill. Bell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 787. Effect of inviting conflict and firing and wounding an unarmed man, held to justify a conviction of assault with intent to kill. Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 17. Evidence held insufficient to show intent to kill—altercation but no wound though defendant might easily have produced injury had he so intended. Sloan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 922.

27. Most questions relating to conduct of trial are common to all crimes and are treated in Indictment and Procedure.

28. People v. Quimby [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1061.

29. State v. Tucker, 52 W. Va. 420. Prejudice does not necessarily result from the fact that the jury had the weapon with which it was alleged the crime was committed during their deliberations. State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808. The court may admit a partially identified weapon on promise to subsequently complete the identification. Worrill v. State, 116 Ga. 853.

30. Whether deceased died within a year and a day when the evidence was that he died in five minutes. Early v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1181, 70 S. W. 1061. Evidence held to require an instruction as to casual connection between shooting and death. Garner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 797. Charge as to the law of accessories is properly refused where the evidence showed that defendant was present aiding and abetting. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 15. In a prosecution under Ky. St. 1899, § 1166, for cutting, striking or stabbing with deadly weapon with intent to kill, the evidence showing that the offense was committed by striking, it is error to give an instruction under section 1242 relating to cutting, thrusting or stabbing in heat of passion, which section does not contain the word "strike." Honaker v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 154. Evidence held insufficient to warrant instruction as to common intent of persons resisting an officer. State v. Meyers, 174 Mo. 352. Evidence held not to justify an instruction that homicide committed in flight after a burglary, was not in the perpetration of the burglary within the statute. People v. Wardrip [Cal.] 74 Pac. 744.

31. Although the evidence tended strictly to show that the homicide was committed in the perpetration of another crime and was accordingly murder in the first degree, submission of lesser degrees is not error. State v. Howard [Wash.] 74 Pac. 382. Instruction on lower degree error where no evidence to be convicted, if at all, of the degree charged, is held error.[32] Defenses should be submitted when, and only when, there is evidence supporting the same.[33]

justify it. Jordan v. State, 117 Ga. 405. Included offenses should not be charged where under the evidence defendant must be guilty of that charged or not guilty. State v. Hoot [Iowa] 94 N. W. 564. The court may exclude from consideration a degree of the crime as to which there is no evidence. Carr v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 892. Evidence held not to require instruction on lesser degrees. Jahnke v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 158. Instruction as to first degree only is proper where the killing was from ambush. State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808. Evidence held not to justify instruction as to acts eminently dangerous and evincing a depraved mind. Strickland v. State [Miss.] 32 So. 921; Wood v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 285. Evidence of subsequent unfeeling remarks of defendant held to justify submitting murder in the first degree. State v. Sale, 119 Iowa, 1.

Murder in second degree: Evidence that after an altercation defendant returned and shot deceased without further provocation, warrants an instruction on murder in the second degree. State v. Gleason, 172 Mo. 259. Instruction as to second degree held proper though the evidence showed premeditation. State v. Schaeffer, 172 Mo. 335. Instruction should be given as to second degree, where the jury might find the same. State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608. An instruction as to murder in the second degree and manslaughter properly refused where defendant after threatening a woman pursued and stabbed her. State v. Gurley, 170 Mo. 429. It is proper for the court to instruct on both degrees of murder. Jackson v. State, 136 Ala. 22. Where the evidence is circumstantial and capable of an interpretation, excluding premeditation, an instruction as to murder in the second degree should be given. State v. Moore [Kan.] 73 Pac. 905. Evidence disclosing practically nothing of the circumstances of the killing held to require charge on murder in the second degree. Tiejo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 546. Evidence as to homicide in an attempt to rescue a person from jail held not to require an instruction as to murder in the second degree. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611.

Manslaughter: Evidence held not to require instruction as to manslaughter. Prior v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 598 (syllabus decision); Mow v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1069; State v. Utley, 132 N. C. 1022; Cox v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 680, 69 S. W. 799; New v. Territory [Okl.] 70 Pac. 198; Dean v. State, 116 Ga. 534; Hunt v. State, 135 Ala. 1; Jordan v. State, 117 Ga. 405. Defendant's pistol accidentally discharged while being used in self defense. Teel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 11. Discharge of a pistol which deceased was trying to take from defendant either wrongfully or to prevent defendant from shooting him. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 859. No provocation except abusive language. State v. May, 172 Mo. 630; State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489; State v. Spivey, 132 N. C. 989. Deceased approached defendant in threatening attitude. State v. Diller, 170 Mo. 1; State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489; State v. Ashcraft, 170 Mo. 409. Defendant shot one walking toward him without demonstration. Pollard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 953. Evidence of long antecedent provocation. State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207. Evidence of either murder or accidental shooting. Com. v. Sutton, 205 Pa. 605. An instruction as to mutual combat need not be given in connection with one on self defense unless the evidence justifies the same. Jordan v. State, 117 Ga. 405. Evidence held not to justify an instruction as to sudden quarrel. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. An instruction submitting the question of cooling time to the jury, is properly refused where the original provocation was as a matter of law inadequate (Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025) or where defendant had made previous threats and had armed himself, though only five minutes elapsed between an altercation and the killing (State v. Spivey, 132 N. C. 989). Evidence held not to justify an instruction as to fighting by agreement with deadly weapon. Rogers v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 320. Evidence held not to warrant instruction as to neglect of child after inflicting injuries. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 195. Where the evidence shows wanton shooting into a crowd (Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254), or where an intent to kill is obvious from the evidence, an instruction as to involuntary manslaughter need not be given (State v. Vinso, 171 Mo. 576).

Evidence held to require instructions as to manslaughter. State v. Buffington, 66 Kan. 706, 72 Pac. 213; Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325; State v. McKenzie [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1015; Whatley v. State, 116 Ga. 86; Cavaness v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 908; Aldredge v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 843. Mutual combat. Smith v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 817. Provocation by slander of defendant's wife. McComas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 533. Abusive language and assault. Gardner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 13. Defendant was intoxicated and there was no proof of motive. Henderson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1985, 72 S. W. 781. Weapons drawn by both parties. Hatcher v. State, 116 Ga. 617. Several persons without warrant sought to arrest defendant. Strickland v. State [Miss.] 32 So. 921. Where the evidence showed that deceased assaulted defendant and struck him just before the killing, it is error to refuse to charge on manslaughter in the fourth degree which includes every homicide not justifiable or excusable or specifically covered by the higher degrees of homicide. State v. Weakly [Mo.] 77 S. W. 525. Evidence held to require charge on negligent homicide. Morton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 281. Evidence of accidental shooting held to require an instruction on involuntary manslaughter. Messer v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 331.

Assault with intent to kill: Where the killing actually occurred in pursuance of a conspiracy to rescue a person from jail, an instruction as to assault with intent to kill, is not required. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611.

Aggravated assault: Evidence of killing of child held to require instruction on ag-

In the footnote are grouped holdings as to the correctness of instructions relating to causal connection between injury and death,[84] participation by defend-gravated assault. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 195. Aggravated assault need not be submitted where the evidence shows either manslaughter or self defense (Estep v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 966), or shows either a murderous assault or self defense (Duval v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 543). The fact that defendant did not hit the person fired at though close to him, is sufficient evidence of lack of intent to kill to require instruction on aggravated assault. Cubine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 396. Evidence that defendant fired only to frighten held not to require an instruction on aggravated assault. Bouldin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 907. Evidence on a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, that defendant shot his wife because she refused to return to him, does not require a charge on aggravated assault. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 964. Evidence that shot was fired only to frighten held to require charge on aggravated assault. Angel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 553. Evidence of homicide with a small pocket knife in the course of an altercation held to require an instruction on aggravated assault. Newsome v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 296. Evidence of altercation held to require instruction as to aggravated assault on prosecution for assault with intent to murder. Carlisle v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 213; Morris v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 472; Evans v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 467; Spiller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 809.

Assault and battery: Evidence on trial for assault with intent to murder held to show accidental shooting so as to require an instruction on simple assault. Catling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 853. Evidence held not to require the submission of assault and battery on an indictment for assault with intent to kill. Robinson v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 804.

32. An instruction that defendant was guilty of murder or nothing, is on the weight of the evidence. Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993. An instruction peremptorily requiring the jury to convict to a certain degree or acquit, is improper in Ohio. Lindsey v. State, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 1. In North Carolina, an instruction that if the jury believed the evidence, they should return a verdict of manslaughter was sustained, where there was no evidence of self defense. State v. Hagan, 131 N. C. 802.

33. Self defense: Evidence held not to require an instruction as to self defense. Bruner v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 244; Lewis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 788; Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52; Sparks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 811. Assault without a weapon. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. Deceased shot while fleeing. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 543. Evidence held insufficient to require instruction as to defense of property. Hudson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 764. Evidence held to require instruction as to the right to resist wrongful seizure of property. Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 564. Evidence of sudden assault held not to require an instruction as to the duty to retreat. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Instructions on self defense held properly refused because the evidence showed that the defendant was the aggressor. Jackson v. State, 136 Ala. 96. Evidence held to support an instruction as to the right of one provoking a difficulty to urge self defense. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162; Wallace v. U. S., 18 App. D. C. 152; Monson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 570; Starr v. State, 160 Ind. 661. Evidence held not to support instructions as to provoking of difficulty by defendant. Pollard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 953; Pulpus v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 2. Evidence held not to require instruction as to provoking a conflict without intent to kill. State v. Hicks [Mo.] 77 S. W. 539. Instruction as to retreat and subsequent renewal of combat, held not justified by the evidence. State v. Miller [Or.] 74 Pac. 658. Evidence of defendant's freedom from fault held sufficient to entitle him to instructions as to self defense. Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52. No evidence to show that defendant sought to withdraw from combat. Canada v. Ter. [Okl.] 72 Pac. 375. Instruction as to assault provoked by slanderous statements by defendant, held not justified by the evidence. State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756. Evidence held not to justify an instruction as to the rights of one assaulted in his place of business. Stevens v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 122. Evidence held to warrant a charge as to attempt by deceased to eject defendant from premises at the owner's request. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997. Where defendant and deceased were passing along the road together, and defendant dropped back and fired on deceased from behind, an instruction as to defendant being forced into a dangerous position is not justified by the evidence. Juley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 468. Evidence held to require an instruction on self defense. Newsome v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 296; Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 928. Deceased drew pistol and made threats. Orta v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 755. Person assaulted had thrown a knife at defendant and was in the act of picking up such knife with apparent intent to throw it again. McCardell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 446. No instruction as to rights of officer is required when it appears that defendant was not acting in his official capacity. Philpot v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 757, 69 S. W. 959; People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. (N. Y.) 55.

Accident: Where defendant testified fully to a killing in self defense but stated also that the killing was accidental, no instruction as to accident is necessary. Dunn v. State, 116 Ga. 515. Evidence of accidental firing of a gun raised in self defense requires instruction as to accidental shooting. It is a lawful act by lawful means with ordinary and usual caution within Rev. St. § 4367. Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488.

34. Instructions as to causal connection between wound and death held sufficient. Gardner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 13; Lauckton v. U. S., 18 App. D. C. 348. Where a wound was inflicted by deceased which might have been mortal and one by another person which was certainly mortal and which caused the death, an instruction that defendant might be convicted though there was no conspiracy between the parties, is error. Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 537.

35. An instruction that if a jury entertained a doubt as to whether a certain third person killed deceased, they should acquit "him" is erroneous. Giles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 961. Instruction as to aiding and abetting held sufficient as to intent and deliberation in connection with other instructions. People v. Morine, 138 Cal. 626, 72 Pac. 166. Instruction as to aiding and abetting held erroneous for not excluding conspiracy. Martin v. State, 136 Ala. 32. An instruction that one aiding and abetting is equally guilty without requiring him to participate in the intent or premeditation, is error. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. An instruction that if defendant and another made a similar assault on deceased and the other person without defendant's knowledge killed deceased, defendant was not guilty, should be given when required by the evidence. Cecil v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 197. Where defendant's guilt arises from his participation in a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, an instruction as to what constitutes an unlawful act should be given. Powers v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1007, 1186, 70 S. W. 644, 1050. Instructions as to malice in one aiding and abetting, held correct. State v. White [S. C.] 45 S. E. 210. Instruction as to guilt of one aiding and abetting held erroneous in not requiring malice and premeditation. Harper v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 572. Instruction as to aiding and abetting making defendant guilty in case of the approval of the crime, held erroneous. Id. An instruction that though defendant told another to kill deceased, if the killing was because of a subsequent quarrel and not because of what defendant said, he was not guilty, is improperly refused. Owens v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 718. Instruction as to guilt of one aiding and abetting held erroneous because not allowing defendant the benefit of justification to one firing the shot. Harper v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 572.

36. Instructions withdrawing evidence from jury held properly refused. Self defense. Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52. Sufficiency to convict. Jackson v. State, 136 Ala. 22; Hainsworth v. State, 136 Ala. 13. Instruction held to indicate opinion on weight of evidence. State v. Barry, 11 N. D. 428. Assumption that defendant made assault held to invade province of jury. State v. Marsh, 171 Mo. 523. Assumption that deceased died of blood poisoning held not an invasion of province of jury. State v. McKnight, 119 Iowa, 79. An instruction that the jury are the judges of the weight "if any" of a dying declaration is properly modified by striking out the words quoted. State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654. An instruction referring to the jury the question whether a dying declaration was made under a conviction of impending death, is erroneous. Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29. Instruction submitting to jury sufficiency of preliminary proof of dying declarations held correct. Smith v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 817. An instruction that dying declarations are to be received with great caution, is properly refused. Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29. Instruction as to consideration to be given evidence which tended to show defendant guilty of another crime held so ambiguous as to be error. Bess v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1091, 77 S. W. 349. An instruction that previous assaults on deceased were to be considered only in determining the state of defendant's mind and not in fixing the punishment, held sufficiently favorable. McCarty v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1427, 71 S. W. 656. The court should instruct that the evidence of the state may be looked to in establishing self defense. State v. Cottrill, 52 W. Va. 363. Instruction enumerating previous threats by deceased held to give undue prominence thereto. Reynolds v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1742, 72 S. W. 277. There should be an instruction that prior declarations of defendant are to be considered only as bearing on intent or motive. Thacker v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1584, 71 S. W. 931. An instruction that the evidence tends to show mutual combat, is on the weight of the evidence. Stephens v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 619.

37. Instruction as to presumption and burden of proof as between the different degrees of crime held not to throw the burden of proving innocence on the defendant. State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489. An instruction as to degree which does not give defendant the benefit of the doubt as between two degrees, is error. Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. It is error not to instruct that if the jury doubt of which of two degrees defendant is guilty, he can be convicted only of the lower. Arnold v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1921, 72 S. W. 753. Instruction as to murder in the second degree held correct though it failed to require the killing to have been intentional or willful. State v. Marsh, 171 Mo. 522. Merely giving the statutory definitions of degrees of murder is inadequate. State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668. Using the word "murder" in referring to murder in the second degree, is not misleading, where the degrees are explained. State v. Gruff, 68 N. J. Law, 287. An instruction requiring defendant to be found guilty as charged under certain circumstances is not error, where the degrees of crime are properly explained in other instructions. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. Instruction distinguishing murder in the first and second degrees, held correct. Downing v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 833. An instruction that defendant should be convicted as charged unless the jury believe him guilty of manslaughter, is erroneous as precluding an acquittal. Woods v. State [Miss.] 32 So. 998. Instruction as to finding of the lower of two grades as to which the jury were in doubt held not to preclude an acquittal in case of doubt. Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488. In connection with an instruction that the burden of mitigating the degree is on defendant, the jury should be told that mitigating circumstances may be found in the state's evidence. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. An instruction that the jury may convict of either one of several enumerated degrees without giving the elements of each degree, is properly refused. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129.

38. An instruction as to absence of motive is improper, where defendant testified that the killing was in self defense. State v. Lynn, 169 Mo. 664. An instruction that motive need not be proved though its absence is a circumstance in favor of defendant, is proper. Lanckton v. United States, 18 App. D. C. 348.

39. Failure to define "feloniously" is not error. Hutsell v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 262, 75 S. W. 225. Definition of "felonious" held correct. Hocker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 936, 70 S. W. 291. Premeditated murder and unintentional murder in the perpetration of felony held properly submitted. People v. Sullivan, 173 N. Y. 122. Instructions as to premeditation and deliberation, held correct. State v. Zdanowicz [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 743. An indictment charging malice aforethought authorizes an instruction on express malice. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 25. The use of the word "anger" as one of the synonyms of malice held not erroneous. State v. Hunter, 118 Iowa, 686. Instruction that the fact that deceased died of the wounds, is not evidence of malice invades the province of the jury. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. An instruction that if the intent to kill was formed in defendant's mind and there was time for premeditation, the conclusion of premeditation follows as a matter of law, is error, as invading the province of the jury. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. Instruction as to intent and deliberation, held correct. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. Instruction that deliberation means in a cool state of blood, is misleading. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. An instruction defining deliberation as the absence of passion is sufficient, where there is no evidence that the killing was a deed of passion. State v. Taylor, 171 Mo. 465. Instruction as to effect of anger on premeditation held correct. Olds v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 296. Instruction as to malice held misleading. Bush v. State, 136 Ala. 85. Instruction as to premeditation and malice aforethought held sufficient. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191. An instruction as to malice in the language of the Penal Code is sufficient. People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 Pac. 965. An instruction that malice may be inferred from the use of a deadly weapon, is proper where defendant denies the killing and no circumstances of extenuation appear (State v. Dull [Kan.] 74 Pac. 235), but not where there is evidence that the killing was accidental (Raines v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 19), or justifiable (Hammond v. People, 199 Ill. 173). Instruction as to implication of malice from use of deadly weapon, held correct. State v. Foster [S. C.] 45 S. E. 1.

40. An instruction that there is no presumption of intent to cause death, where the instrument used was one not likely to produce death, though abstractly correct, should not be given where the killing is admitted and the defense is insanity. Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. Where an express instruction was given that intent to kill is necessary, an instruction as to a lower degree mentioning also intent to do great bodily harm, is not misleading. Valles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 596. An instruction as to intent to kill on a prosecution for assault held not erroneous for failing to charge that such intent must have been specific. Mosely v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 546. Instruction that intent to kill need not exist for any definite time held correct. State v. Spivey, 132 N. C. 989. Where previous threats by defendant are shown, an instruction that the jury should determine whether such threats manifested a present intention to kill, is improper. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. Instruction that defendant could not be convicted unless he intended to kill deceased, had time to think of the consequences of his act and designed to take life before firing, properly refused. Webb v. State, 135 Ala. 36. Instruction as to intent to kill held erroneous as ignoring the issue of self defense. Hammond v. People, 199 Ill. 173. An instruction that an assault with intent to commit a murder must have been made under such circumstances that it would have been murder had death resulted, is proper. Id. An instruction as to defendant's state of mind at the time of the homicide, held not objectionable as singling out particular facts. Clark v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 573. An instruction as to cutting and wounding which does not include an intent to kill, is erroneous, though such intent is required by another instruction. Bailey v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1114, 70 S. W. 838. Where the second of two shots fired by defendant was fatal, instructions should be based upon his intent at the time of firing that shot. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 17. Instruction held not to make intent to kill follow result as a matter of law from the killing. Lowe v. State [Wis.] 96 N. W. 417. An instruction as to the effect of drunkenness to prevent formation of a specific intent, held not covered by the general charge. State v. Pasnau, 118 Iowa, 501. Though great bodily harm was in fact inflicted, if defendant was too drunk to form a specific intent to inflict the same, he cannot be convicted. Id. Where several assaults with specific intent are included in the charge, instruction as to the effect of intoxication should be applied to each. Id. Instruction as to intoxication held erroneous because not covering included crimes. State v. Cather [Iowa] 96 N. W. 722.

41. Where case was tried on theory of homicide by abortion, it is error to instruct as to manslaughter by negligent medical practice. People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 284. Instruction defining manslaughter as a blow given from a heart full of passion, etc., held correct. State v. Bowers, 65 S. C. 207. A definition of heat of passion as that obscuring of the reason which will induce ordinary men of fair average disposition to lose control of themselves, is not erroneous. Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488. Instruction as to reckless shooting held misleading. Bush v. State, 136 Ala. 85. Intent to kill not being an essential to manslaughter, an instruction requiring such intent is properly refused. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. Instruction as to manslaughter in resistance to the wrongful taking of money from defendant by deceased, held erroneous. Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 918. An instruction as to mutual combat on equal terms is misleading where defendant alone was armed. State v. Vance, 29 Wash. 485, 70 Pac. 34. Instruction as to effect of sudden passion to mitigate the degree held confusing and erroneous. Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. An instruction that though defendant has failed to establish self defense, he should not necessarily be convicted of murder but may be guilty of manslaughter only, is a mere argument and properly refused. Stevens v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 122. Instruction as to manslaughter held sufficient. State v. Foster [S. C.] 45 S. E. 1. Where an instruction is given under Penal Code, art. 653, that one failing to call necessary medical assistance after inflicting an injury shall be deemed guilty as though such injury had been necessarily fatal, an instruction should also be given under art. 717 allowing the instrument with which the injury is inflicted to be considered as to the question of intent and also (Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 195) under art. 720 relating to manslaughter with instruments not designed to cause death.

Provocation: An instruction on provocation should require the same to be viewed in the light of all that transpired between the parties. Nix v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 764. Evidence showing only extreme provocation an instruction that slight provocation does not reduce the degree is error. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. An instruction that a killing in a sudden transport of rage is murder in the second degree, without requiring that the rage be unprovoked is erroneous. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 36. What is adequate cause for the passion which will reduce homicide to manslaughter, should be defined. Pollard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 953. It is not necessary to define the assault and battery which will reduce homicide to manslaughter. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 17. Instruction limiting provocation to insult to defendant's daughter, held correct though there was evidence of insulting language by deceased concerning defendant's wife. McComas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 189. An instruction on manslaughter stating that the provocation must be reasonably calculated to excite ungovernable passion sufficiently states the nature of the provocation. Cook v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1731, 72 S. W. 283. It is proper for the court to charge in the language of Penal Code, § 65, that provocation by words is in no case sufficient. Robinson v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 985. An instruction which adds to the language of Ky. Sts. § 1166 relating to manslaughter, an additional requirement of provocation, is error. Hardin v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 1540, 71 S. W. 862. The statute declaring that an assault and battery shall constitute adequate provocation, an instruction that it might constitute such provocation, is error. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Instruction as to manslaughter stating as provocation facts which in law amounted to justification, held error. State v. Halliday [La.] 35 So. 380. An instruction that if deceased made remarks derogatory to defendant's wife and defendant slew deceased on the first meeting, in the heat of passion, it was manslaughter, is sufficiently full. Allen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 85. Instructions as to adultery of deceased with defendant's wife as provocation, held correct. Brown v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 33. An instruction that an assault causing pain and bloodshed was sufficient provocation to reduce the degree, is error, where there is no evidence that any blood was shed in the assault on defendant. Garner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 797. An instruction that provocation involves either an assault and battery or some indignity calculated to throw an average man into a sudden passion, is correct. State v. Gilliam [S. C.] 45 S. E. 6. An instruction that the provocation must arise at the time of the homicide to reduce it to manslaughter, is not erroneous when coupled with one that the provocation urged by defendant, is an exception to such rule. Gossett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 319. Instruction as to cooling time held correct. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025.

42. An instruction as to assault with a deadly weapon defining such weapon as one with which death could be produced, and without referring to the manner in which it was used by defendant, is error. Honaker v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 675, 76 S. W. 154. An instruction defining a deadly weapon as a gun used as a fire arm within carrying distance, held correct where there was no other evidence as to the weapon. Juley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 468.

43. An instruction referring to a "claim" of self defense, is not prejudicial. People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745. The court should not instruct that the jury should consider the disparity in size between the parties. Alexander v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 851. An instruction as to self defense by one charged with aiding and abetting held correct. Benge v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1466, 71 S. W. 648. Instruction as to self defense where deceased was shot while going to his house to get a gun held sufficiently favorable. Ditmer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 34. An instruction that the plea of self defense admits that the killing was intentional, is error. Foley v. State [Wyo.] 72 Pac. 627. Instruction that if defendant acted in self defense subsequent taking of property of deceased did not make him guilty of murder held sufficient. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. An instruction that one accused of patricide is not deprived of any of his legal rights of self defense, is sufficient, though it does not extend the caution as to his rights in respect to provocation reducing the degree. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. An instruction allowing instead of requiring an acquittal if self defense be found, is improper. State v. Nelson, 65 Kan. 689, 70 Pac. 632. An instruction that if defendant was intoxicated he might be more likely to deem himself in danger and that his condition was to be considered in that connection is properly refused. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997. Instruction as to self defense against assault by several held erroneous as excluding the right to defend against assault by deceased alone.

Harmless error.—Erroneous instructions as to matters having no bearing on Garner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 797. An instruction that defendant should be acquitted if he fired in self defense, without stating the elements of self defense, is properly refused. Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29. An instruction that if defendant armed himself and provoked the difficulty, he was guilty of murder, is erroneous as excluding self defense. Rogers v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 320. An instruction as to self defense, speaking of the use of a weapon by deceased when the evidence showed that he merely made a motion as if to draw one. Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 918. Instruction on self defense qualifying defendant's right by reference to the knowledge of the character and disposition of deceased, held error. Hickey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 920; Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 918. Instruction as to self defense held erroneous as imposing the burden of proof on defendant. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813. An instruction requiring self defense to be established beyond a reasonable doubt, is error. Thacker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1584, 71 S. W. 931. Justification need to be proven only by a preponderance of evidence, and an instruction requiring the jury to be satisfied thereof, is error. Foley v. State [Wyo.] 72 Pac. 627; Lane v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 896. General instruction as to self defense held correct. Early v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1181, 70 S. W. 1061; Howard v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. L. R. 612, 69 S. W. 721; State v. Bowers, 65 S. C. 207; Gatling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 471.

Real or apparent necessity of killing: Instructions as to apparent danger held conflicting. State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005. The addition to an instruction of a clause that the jury and not the prisoner were to judge of the force necessary, held erroneous. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. An instruction as to self defense allowing killing under circumstances leading a reasonable man to believe in the existence of danger, is erroneous, if it does not require that defendant so believe. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. Instruction as to self defense held properly modified by adding clause referring to the reasonableness of defendant's belief. People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745. Where the evidence showed that deceased made a motion to draw a pistol, the jury should have been distinctly instructed that defendant need not wait an actual attack. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565. An instruction that defendant was justified if deceased was attempting to strike him with a certain implement, is properly modified by adding that such implement must be found to be a deadly weapon and the killing must appear reasonably necessary. Fulcher v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 170. An instruction as to apparent danger which does not require reasonable cause for the apprehension, is properly refused. State v. Allen [La.] 35 So. 495. The jury should be instructed as to self defense against danger reasonably apprehended where there is evidence warranting such instruction. Stephens v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 619. An instruction on self defense requiring defendant to "in good faith believe" in the impending danger, is not erroneous. Hutsell v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 263, 75 S. W. 225. Instruction as to overt acts which will justify an apprehension of danger held proper. Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 871. An instruction that the killing must have been necessary or apparently necessary, is proper. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. It is proper to instruct that defendant's belief of danger must have been reasonable. Olds v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 296. An instruction that if defendant did not know the danger had ceased, he should be acquitted should be given. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 962. An instruction requiring "just and reasonable" grounds for believing in the existence of danger, is correct. Francis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 751. An instruction that the circumstances must have justified the fears of a "reasonable man," is not error though defendant is a woman. Anderson v. State, 117 Ga. 255. Instruction that the danger need not have been real but only apparent, held properly refused because not embracing all the elements of self defense. Mathews v. State, 136 Ala. 47. Instruction as to self defense held erroneous because omitting the necessity of belief by defendant in the peril. Id. An instruction as to justification in making an arrest held erroneous as not covering apparent necessity. State v. Phillips, 119 Iowa, 652. An instruction on self defense must base defendant's belief on the acts of deceased. Peoples v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 289. An instruction confining defendant's ground of apprehension to what occurred at the immediate time, held erroneous. Wood v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 285. Instruction held to properly submit doctrine of apparent necessity. Benge v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1466, 71 S. W. 648; Teel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 11; Ryan v. State, 115 Wis. 488; Reynolds v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1742, 72 S. W. 277; Rowsey v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 841, 76 S. W. 409; Crockett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 4; State v. Foster [S. C.] 45 S. E. 1; Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 185. Instruction held erroneous as requiring real danger. State v. Ellis, 30 Wash. 369, 70 Pac. 963. An instruction that a killing in self defense must have been necessary, is error. Palmour v. State, 116 Ga. 269. An instruction that if deceased attacked the defendant and defendant struck him with a pistol which was accidentally discharged, defendant was not guilty, is erroneous as ignoring apparent danger and the duty to retreat. Stewart v. State, 137 Ala. 33. Error in an instruction in confining self defense to actual danger, is not cured by a disconnected charge presenting the doctrine of apparent danger. State v. Miller [Or.] 74 Pac. 658. Instruction as to the duty to use no more force than was necessary, held erroneous as ignoring the doctrine of apparent necessity. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769.

Threats by decedent: An instruction that if no overt act was committed by deceased, threats by him are not to be considered, is improper. Lane v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 896. An instruction as to previous threats in the language of the statute is inadequate. Cline v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 23. An instruction that the conduct of deceased must be viewed from defendant's standpoint sufficiently covers the consideration of previous threats by deceased. Newman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 951.

the offense of which defendant was convicted are harmless.[49] The charge is to be construed as a whole, and error in one instruction may be corrected by another.[50]

Nature of apprehended peril: Where the weapon used by defendant was not necessarily deadly, an instruction that he must have feared death or serious bodily harm, is erroneous. Crawford v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 548. An instruction that defendant must have believed he was in "great serious bodily danger" is erroneous. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 962. An instruction as to self defense requiring that defendant must have believed his life to be in danger, is erroneous, as belief in danger of great bodily harm would be sufficient. State v. Singleton [Kan.] 74 Pac. 243. An instruction as to self defense omitting "imminent" before the word danger, is properly refused. State v. Smith [Or.] 71 Pac. 973.

Aggression by defendant: An instruction qualifying the right of self defense with a charge as to provocation of a difficulty by defendant, is error, where defendant's evidence was that deceased was the aggressor. Drake v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 7. An instruction on self defense should contain the qualification that defendant was not the aggressor, where there is evidence justifying the same. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 85 So. 142. Instruction as to self defense held erroneous as not referring to the commencement of the altercation by defendant. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. An instruction not qualified by the doctrine of provoking the difficulty should be given where there is evidence that deceased was the aggressor. Vann v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813. Instruction as to the provocation of the difficulty by defendant should define what constitutes provoking the difficulty. Id. An instruction that an assault without intent to kill does not deprive defendant of the right of self defense is improper, where his assault was committed with a deadly weapon. Bassett v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 262. An instruction as to self defense ignoring the question of defendant's fault, is erroneous. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. Instruction held erroneous because ignoring the question of who was the aggressor. Peoples v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 289.

Duty to retreat: An instruction that the burden is on defendant to prove that he had no other means of avoiding danger than by killing in self defense, is proper. State v. Hutto [S. C.] 45 S. E. 13. Instruction as to self defense in altercation with two persons, held not erroneous as requiring defendant to withdraw from the combat with both before he could defend himself. Starr v. State, 160 Ind. 661. An instruction that defendant is not entitled to urge self defense if there was reasonably safe means of escape, is error, since only an absolutely safe means will debar him from his right of self defense. Tompkins v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1254, 77 S. W. 712. An instruction on self defense should require that there be no other apparently safe means of escape. Thacker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1584, 71 S. W. 931. An instruction that under specified circumstances defendant was not required to retreat to the wall, held correct. State v. Castle, 133 N. C. 769. An instruction that there must appear to be no other safe means of "avoiding" the danger, is not erroneous. Cook v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1731, 72 S. W. 283.

45. Instruction on self defense only improper where there is evidence of defense of defendant's son. Thacker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1584, 71 S. W. 931. Instruction as to right of parent to defend his child held correct. Alexander v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 851. An instruction referring to the right to defend a relative as self defense is not misleading. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132.

46. Instruction as to right to resist arrest for offense not in officer's presence held not justified by the evidence. State v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 224. Where an officer of another county sought to arrest for a misdemeanor, an instruction as to self defense should set out defendant's right to resist such arrest. Bailey v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1114, 70 S. W. 838. An instruction as to the resistance of arrest is erroneous if it does not require the jury to find that defendant knew or should have known that his arrest was sought by lawful authority. State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660. Instruction that if homicide was committed in the course of a struggle to avoid arrest but without circumstances arousing fear of injury, it is manslaughter, is erroneous. Commonwealth v. Grether, 204 Pa. 203. Instruction as to right of officer to kill to prevent escape held sufficient. Com. v. Carter [Mass.] 66 N. E. 716.

47. Where the theory of defendant is that deceased was accidentally shot by a third person, an instruction open to the interpretation that to acquit defendant, it must appear that such person fired at deceased, is error. Bennett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 314. An instruction that if defendant struck deceased with a pistol which accidentally discharged, he should be acquitted, is erroneous as the offense may be manslaughter. Stewart v. State, 137 Ala. 33. An instruction as to the accidental discharge of a gun raised in self defense, held correct. Lankster v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 388. Instruction as to injury caused by police officer firing without intent to kill to attract attention, held erroneous. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. (N. Y.) 55.

48. The court may at the jury's request inform them as to the statutory penalties. State v. Yourex, 30 Wash. 611, 71 Pac. 203. Instruction as to extent of punishment for attempted murder held correct. State v. Mitchell, 170 Mo. 633. Instructions held not to sufficiently present a right of the jury

(§ 8) C. Verdict.—Verdict without caption or title held sufficient.[51] Verdict not naming the defendant held sufficient where there is but one.[52] The verdict must declare the degree.[53] The punishment for murder in the first degree being fixed by statute, the jury need not fix the penalty when they find that degree.[54] A verdict of guilty of assault with a deadly weapon is not sufficient to authorize sentence for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict bodily injury, but is a conviction of simple assault only.[55]

(§ 8) D. Punishment.—The punishment for assault with intent to kill is not mitigated by the fact that no injury was in fact inflicted.[56] Evidence of homicide for the purpose of robbery held to justify the death penalty.[57] The recommendation of the jury that defendant should be punished as for a misdemeanor, is not binding on the court.[58]

HUSBAND AND WIFE.[59]

§ 1. Disabilities of coverture in general; statutory relaxations.[60]—The disabilities of coverture have been removed by statute in most states so that married to recommend life imprisonment. Cohen v. State, 116 Ga. 573. Where the jury do not fix the punishment they should not be informed of the penalties for the various degrees of homicide. Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325.

49. Erroneous instructions as to murder in the first degree are harmless where defendant was convicted in the second degree. Burrows v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 848. Erroneous instructions as to manslaughter are harmless where defendant was convicted of murder. Canada v. Territory [Okl.] 72 Pac. 375. Contradictory instructions as to manslaughter are prejudicial where defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree. State v. Utley, 132 N. C. 1022. Where defendant was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, instructions as to involuntary manslaughter are harmless. Henderson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1985, 72 S. W. 781. Instructions as to provocation are harmless where there was no evidence of adequate provocation. Jowell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 286. Instructions as to murder in the first degree are harmless where the conviction was in the second degree. White v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 173; Downing v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 833. Where the evidence showed clearly murder in the perpetration of robbery, error in instructions as to implied malice is harmless. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 25. Error in an instruction as to reasonable doubt held harmless where the evidence of guilt was clear. Wilson v. State, 109 Tenn. 167. An instruction not defining a term in the definition of manslaughter is harmless where the conviction was of murder. State v. Schaeffer, 172 Mo. 335. Error in an instruction as to manslaughter in the fourth degree is immaterial where defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree. State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608. Failure to define sufficient provocation is harmless whe e the conviction was of manslaughter. Cook v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1731, 72 S. W. 283. Inaccurate instruction as to self defense held harmless where conviction was for manslaughter. Rone v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1174, 70 S. W. 1042. Failure to instruct as to effect of intoxication is harmless where the conviction was of manslaughter. Lanckton v. United States, 18 App. D. C. 348. Instructions as to a degree higher than that of which defendant was convicted, are harmless. State v. Ashcraft, 170 Mo. 409. Failure to instruct as to concert between deceased and another held harmless, verdict and evidence negativing self defense. Thomas v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 201, 74 S. W. 1062. Where defendant both shot and struck deceased, instructions as to homicide by striking are not prejudicial though the evidence is that he was dead from the shooting when struck. Burrows v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 848.

50. Ignoring self defense. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. Definition of malice. Downing v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 833.

women may contract, sue, or be sued, especially with regard to their separate property, as if unmarried; however, many restrictions with regard to contract with the husband or as security for his debts still exist. General provisions will be found in the footnote and particular provisions in their proper places in this article.[61]

53. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751. A verdict of guilty of manslaughter without designating it to be voluntary or involuntary as required by Mills Ann. St. § 1181, is void. Mahany v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 26. General verdict of guilty held sufficient. Lowe v. State [Wis.] 96 N. W. 417. A verdict of "murder" on hearing to fix the degree after a plea of guilty, is insufficient. Lancaster v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 251.

54. State v. May, 172 Mo. 630. A verdict finding defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and fixing his punishment at death, is sufficient under a statute providing the death penalty for "willful murder." Hocker v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 936, 70 S. W. 291. A verdict fixing the penalty at "a term" in the penitentiary without fixing the length thereof, is insufficient. Owens v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 718.

General powers of married women. Construction of Married Woman's Act, June 8, 1893 (P. L. 344) as to general powers to contract. Peter Adams Paper Co. v. Cassard, 206 Pa. 179. In California a wife whose husband has deserted her may sue alone. Code Civ. Proc. § 320, subd. 3. Muller v. Hale, 138 Cal. 163, 71 Pac. 81. Under the constitution and statutes of Florida, no change is made in the status of married women, unless they have been made free dealers, and they cannot bind themselves either at law or in equity so as to authorize personal judgment against them. First Nat. Bank v. Hirschkowitz [Fla.] 35 So. 22. The wife's common-law disability to contract is only partially relieved by statute in Nebraska. Farmers' Bank v. Boyd [Neb.] 93 N. W. 676. Limitations will not run against a married woman during coverture in Texas (Crouch v. Crouch [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 595; Estes v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 1007); the Virginia Married Woman's Act of 1900 § 2, giving them power to contract as if single, does not repeal by implication Code, § 2502 (Augusta Nat. Bank v. Beard's Ex'r, 100 Va. 687). Statutes in Louisiana, regulating privileges and disabilities of married women, are "personal," and purely domiciliary in character, and will not operate to the benefit of married women domiciled elsewhere. Marks v. Germania Sav. Bank, 110 La. 659. She may sue in equity to set aside levy and sale of a homestead. Burkhardt v. James Walker & Son [Mich.] 92 N. W. 778.

Contracts between husband and wife. Before 1874 husband and wife could not contract with each other in Illinois. Strayer v. Dickerson, 205 Ill. 257. She may contract with her husband in Missouri. Rev. St. 1899, § 4335. Rice v. Sally [Mo.] 75 S. W. 398. In Iowa she may enter a business partnership with her husband. Code, §§ 3153, 3164. Hoaglin v. Henderson & Co., 119 Iowa, 720. Under Maine St. 1866, c. 52 (Rev. St. c. 61), husband and wife may contract regarding their property. Peaks v. Hutchinson, 96 Me. 530, 59 L. R. A. 279. In Texas she cannot agree to submit property rights of herself and husband to arbitration. Crouch v. Crouch [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 595. In Oregon husband and wife cannot contract with each other regarding their dower and curtesy in property. B. & C. Comp., § 5234. Potter v. Potter [Or.] 72 Pac. 702.

62. In Vermont a married woman may contract with any person other than her husband and sue and be sued as to contracts made by him. V. S. § 2644. Buck v. Troy Aqueduct Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 285. In Georgia she may contract, obligating herself to render services to be performed by her husband. Orr v. Cooledge, 117 Ga. 195. In Kentucky she may sell her separate or trust estate, her husband joining in the conveyance; Gen. Sts. c. 52, art. 4, § 17 (Johnson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 668, 69 S. W. 751); or contract concerning her separate estate (Robertson v. Robertson, 24 Ky. L. R. 2020, 72 S. W. 813), and may contract for building of a house on her land without his concurrence [St. § 2128] (Ware v. Long, 24 Ky. L. R. 696, 69 S. W. 797); if in business for herself she may buy land and bind her estate therefor, though her husband disapprove [St. § 2128] (King v. Ballou, 24 Ky. L. R. 1946, 72 S. W. 771). In Michigan she may pledge her property for her husband's debt (Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200), but she cannot contract to pay board for her sister without reference to her separate estate (June v. Labadie [Mich.] 92 N. W. 937). Her deed conveying her common-law estate is valid in Missouri. Moston v. Stow, 91 Mo. App. 554. Acts North Carolina, 1901, p. 859, c. 617, subjecting her property to a lien for improvements, and making liens enforceable before a justice when less than a certain amount, does not change the general law that she is not liable on her contracts and cannot be sued before a justice to charge her separate estate therefor. Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352. Registering herself as a free trader during coverture will not governed by the law of the domicile not of the place of contract.[63] The contract of a married woman, if valid at place of execution and performance, is valid everywhere, unless her domicile is in a state where the law renders married women incapable of contracting.[64]

§ 2. Mutual duties, obligations, and privileges. A. Inherent in the relationship.—It is the husband's duty to support the wife; hence, she may bind him by her purchases of necessaries,[65] and in some states his failure or neglect is a criminal or quasi-criminal act.[66] Within certain limits the matrimonial relations may be the subject of binding mutual agreement.[67]

(§ 2) B. Contracts or other dealings.[68]—No common-law right of contract existed between husband and wife; certain statutory rights have been given in the various states but they must only be exercised in the manner prescribed and cannot be enlarged;[69] yet equity will recognize her rights as his creditor or the creditor of a firm of which he is a member and enforce them.[70]

A sale of goods by a husband to a third person and then by such third person to the wife will convey title to her where both bills of sale are given to the wife, though not actually delivered to the third person.[71]

bar her from benefit of an exception preventing the running of limitations against her during coverture. Code, § 1827. Wilkes v. Allen, 131 N. C. 279. Her contract releasing a prior indorser in purchase of a note on which she is accommodation indorser is binding in New Jersey if the consideration is sufficient. Married Woman's Act, § 26 (2 Gen. St. p. 2017). Headley v. Leavitt [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 731. A judgment confessed by a wife in Pennsylvania which does not appear on its face to be affected by statutory limitations of her power, is prima facie valid. Act June 8, 1893. Good Hope Bldg. Ass'n v. Amweg, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 143. Wisconsin Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2342, 2343, removing common-law disabilities of married women, must be liberally construed; she may acquire property of any kind in any way, and dispose of it as though unmarried. Kriz v. Peege [Wis.] 95 N. W. 108. It is essential to her contract that she must have separate property and intends to charge it; and her capacity to bind herself for a debt for property acquired by her does not depend upon the purposes to which she intends to devote the property, or whether she has a separate property or business. Id. Even without separate property she may purchase land from a stranger and assume the payment of a mortgage therefor. Citizens' Loan & Trust Co. v. Witte [Wis.] 92 N. W. 443.

Codes & Sts. § 4492 (Pierce's Code, § 3883), providing agreements between spouses for separate property in survivor of the community for life, did not repeal L. 1854, p. 314, § 11, 1 Ball. Ann. Codes & Sts., § 4601, as to construction of wills. McKnight v. McDonald [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1060.

Sufficiency of evidence to show a contract between husband and wife, whereby she was to take stock of a corporation of which she was an officer in part payment of land sold the corporation, through him as its agent. Harter v. Capital City Brewing Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 155.

69. Fritz v. Fernandez [Fla.] 34 So. 315. The wife may contract with her husband in Missouri, and such contract is enforceable at law. Rev. St. 1899, § 4335. Rice v. Sally [Mo.] 75 S. W. 398. She cannot agree to submit to arbitrators the rights of herself and husband to property in Texas. Crouch v. Crouch [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 595. Husband and wife may contract in Maine that a building put up by him on her land shall remain his property. St. 1866, c. 52 (Rev. St. c. 61), giving married women the right of separate contract. Peaks v. Hutchinson, 96 Me. 530, 59 L. R. A. 279.

72. Money or property delivered to a wife by her husband is presumed to be a gift. Horner v. Huffman, 52 W. Va. 40. Deposit of money by a husband to the credit of his wife, delivery of the bank book to her, and her acceptance by drawing checks to the account, amounts to an absolute and irrevocable gift. In re Holmes, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 264. It is presumed that a husband intended a gift to his wife where he pays the price of land and takes title in her name. Solomon v. Solomon [Neb.] 92 N. W. 124. Sufficiency of facts to show that money deposited by a husband in a bank was an executed gift to his wife. Slee v. Kings County Sav. Inst., 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 534, 12 Ann. Cas. 351.

equity, where fair and reasonable, and free from fraud, duress, or undue influence,[73] the burden of showing which is on the husband, or those claiming under him.[74] His gift to her of the proceeds of her property makes them her separate property.[75] A gift by a husband to his wife without knowledge of her previous adultery may be revoked by him on discovery of her misconduct; or when she subsequently elopes in execution of her plan formed when the gift was made.[76]

Antenuptial contracts between husband and wife[77] must be founded on a sufficient consideration.[78] Such a contract regarding her property is rescinded pro tanto by their joint conveyance of part of the property.[79] A limitation of support of the wife to widowhood only is not a condition subsequent, rendering an antenuptial contract valid as a jointure.[80] Such an agreement, providing that at the husband's death the wife should receive as her full dower a child's part, sharing with children of a former wife, contemplated an interest accruing only on his death and conferred an equitable jointure which was forfeited under a statute providing that her voluntary desertion and subsequent adultery shall bar her jointure or dower, or if it be deemed that the statute applies only to legal jointures on general equitable principles, her dower right terminated under other statutes forfeiting the rights of the guilty party in case of divorce.[81]

Agreements for separation and separate support.[82]—A separation agreement is void as against public policy when made in contemplation of future separation.[83] If the agreement is partially valid because of execution, the wife generally must

73. It must be consummated by delivery of the object, and a loan by her to her husband or a firm of which he is a member, notes being given in return, which she keeps in her possession until her death, does not amount to a gift of the notes to the husband and they are assets of her estate. 77. Construction of antenuptial contract as to rights of wife in estate of husband under his will, made in view of the contract, where she took out letters testamentary. Bowman v. Knorr, 206 Pa. 270. Where a husband and wife made an antenuptial contract in order to secure to her full control of her property for life and the right to dispose of it at death, agreeing that she should hold it as if single and that at her death, all remaining should descend to the children she should then have, according to her share, she could incumber or sell the property, and the remainder at her death was subject to her debts. Stevenson v. Renardet [Miss.] 35 So. 576.

78. Sufficiency of consideration for antenuptial contract to bar the dower rights of the wife in the land of the husband. Rev. St. 1899, § 5246. Moran v. Stewart, 173 Mo. 207. A debt for money advanced before marriage to pay a loan on land of one of the parties, secured by mortgage executed on the land after marriage, is extinguished by marriage so that the mortgage, as against the owner of the land, is void for want of consideration. Dillon v. Dillon, 24 Ky. L. R. 781, 69 S. W. 1099. An antenuptial contract, made when title to the wife's estate did not vest in the husband on marriage and giving the wife full ownership and control of her separate property and barring her from claim on his estate as dower or otherwise, is void for want of consideration, and will not bar her statutory allowance as widow for support, nor her additional allowance out of his personal estate given by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 105-107, 109. Coulter v. Lyda [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 720.

79. It may be rescinded at their joint pleasure. Stevenson v. Renardet [Miss.] 35 So. 576.

82. The validity of contracts made in effecting a compromise or settlement of a divorce suit is exhaustively discussed and the authorities collected in a note to Oppenheimer v. Collins [Wis.] 115 Wis. 283, 60 L. R. A. 406. An agreement between husband and wife after his abandonment of her not amounting to a deed of separation, made at her suggestion, binding him to pay her a certain sum each month until revocation of the agreement by mutual consent, will prevent a divorce from bed and board by her for desertion after breach of the agreement by him, where payments were made thereunder for over seven years. Barclay v. Barclay [Md.] 56 Atl. 804.

83. Contract between a husband and wife and a third person, whereby the latter was to indemnify the husband against debts of the wife, and husband and wife were to separate during the remainder of their lives, reciting that before such separation he had agreed to pay her during life, a certain amount to support herself and children, and that in consideration thereof he would consent to the consideration and would not interfere with her or disturb any one harboring her. Edic v. Horn, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 26.

return consideration received before asking rescission,[84] unless fraud appears and she is unable to repay money given her to induce her agreement.[85] An agreement to separate, whereby the husband was to pay the wife a certain amount for support of herself and children, she to have custody of them and defendant to visit them once a week, was violated so as to prevent her recovery by her taking the children to Europe for six months.[86]

Agreements for resumption of marital relations.[87]—A contract whereby husband and wife agree to live together again and that if he shall desert, or fail to support her, she shall become vested with dower interest in his realty, is in harmony with public policy, and possesses mutuality, though if she thereafter leaves him he is remediless to compel a resumption of the relation.[88] It does not violate a statute preventing her contract for dissolution of marriage or to relieve him from support. Her discontinuance of an action for separation in which she might have had temporary or permanent alimony and counsel fees is sufficient consideration. She takes a life interest so that her executor may recover income after breach by the husband only until her death. Her failure to discharge her marital obligations will prevent her recovery; and, in any event, she has no right of action for breach as against his co-tenant.[89]

Conveyances; mortgages; contracts to convey.[90]—Husband and wife cannot contract with each other as to dower and curtesy rights in Oregon;[91] otherwise in Pennsylvania.[92] Transactions between them must have a sufficient consideration,[93]

84. An agreement of separation whereby a husband purchases his wife's interest in lands constituting their property and pays her consideration therefor is valid to the extent that it is executed so as to prevent rescission by the wife without a return of the consideration, though the agreement is void as relating to the interest each had in the property of the other, and though it was rescinded by a resumption of marital relations. Baird v. Connell [Iowa] 96 N. W. 863.

85. Where a wife sues to set aside a contract for separation and settlement of property rights between herself and husband, alleging that the contract was procured by fraud of the husband and his agent in representing that the husband intended to live with and support the wife, and that the contract was for the purpose of reconciliation, a demurrer to the bill will be overruled, where it appears therefrom that she is not able to repay the money given her by her husband to induce her to execute the contract. Cheuvront v. Cheuvront [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 233.

86. Muth v. Wuest, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 332.

87. The validity of such agreements is generally upheld. See cases hereunder and also exhaustive note to Oppenheimer v. Collins, 115 Wis. 283, 60 L. R. A. 406, 409.

90. Sufficiency of evidence to show that a deed from husband to wife absolute on its face was intended as a mortgage. In re Holmes, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 264. Of evidence to show that a moral obligation by a husband to repay moneys received from his wife, before their power to contract with respect to it was recognized by statute, was regarded by him as consideration for a deed to her in a suit by her to correct the description in the deed. Strayer v. Dickerson, 205 Ill. 257. To set aside a conveyance by a husband to his wife in pursuance of an agreement for permanent separation on refusal of the wife to give a bond with sureties to protect him against her future support. Holihan v. Holihan, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 475.

91. Execution of papers by him for the purpose of making land owned in fee by him exclusively his and that owned by her exclusively hers. B. & C. Comp. § 5234. Potter v. Potter [Or.] 72 Pac. 702.

92. A postnuptial agreement between husband and wife, releasing her inchoate right of dower for an adequate consideration, will bind her, though there is no intention to suspend the marital relation. Act June 8, 1893; Pub. L. 344. In re Fennell's Estate [Pa.] 56 Atl. 875.

93. Equity will not give relief in the absence of showing of valuable consideration in a suit by a wife to correct the description in a deed from her husband. Strayer v. Dickerson, 205 Ill. 257. Love and affection will support a deed from husband to wife if rights of third persons do not intervene. Paulus v. Reed [Iowa] 96 N. W. 757. Where a couple were married in 1849 and moneys received by him from her before 1861 having been his absolute property and that received from her between 1861 and 1874 not having been the subject of the contract between them, since their power to contract before 1874 was not recognized by statute, the receipt of the latter money created no suspended legal obligation to repay, out of which a moral obligation sufficient as a consideration for a deed to the wife could arise. Strayer v. Dickerson, 205 Ill. 257. A deed of land by a husare voidable for fraud[94] or undue influence,[95] and may be equitably enforced where reasonable and good at law, if made by him with a trustee for her.[96] A conveyance ordinarily passes title into the wife's separate estate.[97] Where the husband's common-law rights had not been abrogated, a wife cannot recover from his heirs, rents and profits though he had held under a mortgage from her; nor can they be allowed for taxes paid or improvements.[98] An agreement for the husband to receive all rents and profits from an entirety in consideration of paying the wife a certain amount per month, will not prevent partition by him where he seeks no relief against such agreement and a decree of divorce had changed their estate to a tenancy in common.[99] An original contract between a husband and wife for transfer of his lands to her, on which she was to borrow money and pay a note of his, was not within the statute of frauds whether or not he remained liable on the note.[1] A right to cancel an agreement fixing property rights may be so waived by acquiescence in an unwarranted exercise of possession as to bind heirs.[2]

A contract under which, on payment of a certain sum, the husband agrees to convey land to his wife on her execution of a paper releasing her dower interest in his land and his release of curtesy in her land, is entire, so that it cannot be specifically enforced as to the first part because of the invalidity of the latter,[3] but he cannot complain in such a suit that there is no mutuality of remedy whereby he might have compelled her to live with him according to her promise if she had broken it.[4]

§ 3. Property rights inter se.[5]—This section is confined to the property rights of husband and wife in states under the common law or statutory modifications thereof; rights in states having the community system will be found in the succeeding section.[6]

band to his wife, in which she joined, providing that the property conveyed should be in lieu of her interest as widow in his land, an instrument expressly referring to the deed executed between the two, releasing the interest of each as survivor in the other's land, should be construed as one instrument, so that there is consideration for his agreement. James v. Hanks, 202 Ill. 114. Where husband and wife are living apart because of grounds of divorce in her favor, and she has drawn a petition for divorce, an agreement by him to convey property to her children is sufficiently supported as to consideration by her forgiveness and return to live with him. Moayon v. Moayon, 24 Ky. L. R. 1641, 72 S. W. 33, 60 L. R. A. 415. Where the consideration for a deed from husband to wife is questioned, it is presumed that it was a gift or advancement and the grantee has the burden of showing otherwise. Strayer v. Dickerson, 205 Ill. 257.

94. The husband must show, in a suit against him by his wife to cancel a contract or deed between them because of fraud of himself and agent in its procurement, that she was fully informed as to the effect of the transaction and its fairness. Cheuvront v. Cheuvront [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 233.

95. In a suit between the guardian of an old husband mentally weak and illiterate, and the father of his wife, who claimed an interest in lands conveyed to her by her husband under the statute of descent, an implied trust will be declared in favor of the husband preventing the father from claiming any equities in the property, where it appears that the wife was a young, strong woman with great influence over her husband and that she controlled the property after its conveyance, in such a manner as to deprive him of all interest or benefit. Paulus v. Reed [Iowa] 96 N. W. 757.

96. Moayon v. Moayon, 24 Ky. L. R. 1641, 72 S. W. 33, 60 L. R. A. 415.

97. A conveyance of land from husband to wife in consideration of an antenuptial contract in the usual form, and reciting a consideration of love and affection, passes title to the wife and vests a separate estate in her, though no words therein show an intent to create such separate estate. Barnum v. Le Master [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 1045.

98. He was entitled to possession and rents and profits. Dillon v. Dillon, 24 Ky. L. R. 781, 69 S. W. 1099.

He thereby waived his right to cancel such agreement and to claim any interest in her property, though surviving her, so that his action will bind his heirs. James v. Hanks, 202 Ill. 114.

(§ 3) A. In general.—Statutes intended to free the ownership of husband or wife from marital rights of the other do not prohibit them from acquiring adverse claims.[7] In the absence of evidence,[8] it is presumed that gains made by husband and wife in pursuing a business are his.[9]

(§ 3) B. Of husband in wife's property.—At common law, now largely abrogated, he might reduce all his wife's property to possession taking personalty absolutely,[10] and by the curtesy he held a life estate in her lands of inheritance.[11] Though he may reduce her choses in action to possession, he is not required to do so, and may allow them to remain so as to be impressed with the character of her separate estate.[12] Estates by curtesy have been abolished in some jurisdictions,[13] but laws changing his rights do not retroact on his vested rights.[14] His right to possession of her property will be barred by limitations if not asserted,[15] but the

7. Code, § 3154, providing that when property is owned by the husband or wife, the other has no interest which can be the subject of a contract between them nor which will make the same liable for contracts or liabilities of the one not the owner, relates to the interest which husband or wife has in lands of the other because of marital relations, and does not apply to interests either may have in land of the other resulting from contracts with third persons. Baird v. Connell [Iowa] 96 N. W. 863.

8. Sufficiency of evidence to show that stock on a farm belonged to the husband. Van Horn v. Nelson [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1105. Evidence in an action by a husband for damages to cotton grown and ginned on his wife's land, that he claimed it because of an oral understanding between them, will not show title in him. Code 1892, § 2294. Williams v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 169.

9. Profits from keeping boarders by husband and wife, the wife taking charge of the house, belong to the husband in New York, regardless of statutes concerning married women's estates. Briggs v. Devoe, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1063. See post, § 4, as to the "Community" system.

10. Unless land of the wife was acquired by gift, bequest, inheritance or purchased with separate means, the husband is entitled to possession. He may sue in ejectment without joining her. Rev. St. 1899, § 4340. Black v. Slaton, 92 Mo. App. 662. In Rhode Island he is entitled to rents and profits of her realty to his own use until she terminates such right as provided by law. Digest 1844, p. 270, §§ 1, 7. Cranston v. Cranston [R. I.] 53 Atl. 44. Where a married woman buys a home on her own account and keeps boarders to earn money for herself, her earnings are not subject to her husband's debts. Rev. St. 1899, § 4340. Furth v. March [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 147. Proceeds of her property, sold after marriage in Kansas, are held by him in trust for her use and benefit, her property rights remaining the same, though the proceeds are taken by him into another state and are subject to its laws. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, § 3752. Brown v. Daugherty, 120 Fed. 526.

11. See Curtesy, 1 Curr. Law, p. 830.

Curtesy in a wife's separate estate vests for the first time in her husband at her death. McNeeley v. South Penn Oil Co., 52 W. Va. 616.

13. He cannot sue after her death to redeem her lands from a sale during her lifetime for a ditch assessment. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2639, abolished estates by curtesy and no later statute gives him any inchoate interest in her lands alienated voluntarily or by judicial sales before her death. Turner v. Heinberg, 30 Ind. App. 615. The wife holds her real estate in Maryland by a fixed, vested title, subject merely to her husband's expectant interest and not to his right of possession. Code, art. 45. Harris v. Whiteley [Md.] 56 Atl. 823.

It exists in Missouri. Propes v. Propes, 171 Mo. 407.

14. The husband's right to possession of his wife's realty, before passage of an act giving her the right to sue for such possession, arose from the marital relation and was vested so that it could not be taken away by the married woman's act. Act 1889 (Rev. St. 1899, § 4340). Vanata v. Johnson, 170 Mo. 269. The statute providing that realty of a wife before marriage shall be absolutely her separate property is not retroactive so as to take away the husband's vested estate previously acquired by marriage, and his right to rents and profits until she has terminated such right as provided by law. Gen. Sts. c. 152, construed in connection with Dig. 1844, p. 270. Cranston v. Cranston [R. I.] 53 Atl. 44. The common law as to estates by entirety in personal property has been changed as to married women's property, so as to take away the husband's common-law right to the wife's personalty and choses in action, except as to such property as to which he had a vested right to reduce to possession before passage of the Married Woman's Act. Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91.

Acts 1898, p. 1083, c. 457 construed with Code, art. 45, § 7, providing that a husband by virtue of marriage shall acquire a one-third life estate in his wife's land, will not operate retroactively as to such lands to disturb her vested rights under a former statute giving her a vested title in her realty subject to his expectant life interest, which became consummated only on her death intestate and his survival. Harris v. Whiteley [Md.] 56 Atl. 823.

wife's possession is not adverse to a claim which he may have against her land.[16] Her rights in property are not changed by his taking it into another state.[17] If they are living together, he can, it seems, obtain no title to her land by adverse possession.[18]

His rights may be terminated by judicial proceedings if he is a party,[19] as by divorce,[20] or statutory remedies provided for the event of separation or neglect.[21]

The effect of appropriation of her money,[22] or power to draw from her bank account[23] is to create ownership or not according to the intent and the circumstances. Payments benefiting her estate do not of themselves raise equities on his behalf.[24] Purchase by the husband of a mortgage given by the wife on her separate estate will not merge it in any legal estate held by him when it was given.[25] A deed by a husband made while he had the right of possession, purporting to convey the wife's land constitutes color of title though he had not reduced it to possession.[26] He cannot claim a homestead by right of survivorship as against her creditors in land devised to him by her.[27]

(§ 3) C. Of wife in husband's property.—Apart from contract or conveyance, she has only such rights as dower in his realty.[28] A widow paying for improvements without misrepresentations or undue influence under the idea that she was entitled to dower in an estate per autre vie, owned by her husband, cannot recover therefor in equity.[29] Desertion by a husband, and his leaving the state, will not transfer title to his exempt property to his wife nor deprive him of the right to create a lien thereon; nor will an appraisement after attachment by his

15. Limitations will run against the right of a husband to the possession of his wife's realty, the right existing before Act 1889 (Rev. Sts. 1899, § 4340), giving her a right to sue for possession. Vanata v. Johnson, 170 Mo. 269. Where a guardian's possession of his ward's choses in action was transferred to her husband so that he could maintain an action to recover them or their value if converted, limitations will run against him as to an action on the guardian's bond from the date of marriage which occurred in 1865. Fowler v. McLaughlin, 131 N. C. 209.

16. Where he buys a mortgage by her on her separate estate, no adverse possession in her favor will cause limitations to run during their possession and enjoyment of the profits of the estate in common, where she does not deny his rights under the mortgage. Skinner v. Hale [Conn.] 56 Atl. 524.

21. In Missouri if he has compelled her to live apart from him by ill usage, she may have decreed to her sole use and benefit her lands and all rents against her husband from commencement of suit. Rev. St. 1739, § 3292. Propes v. Propes, 171 Mo. 407.

22. Mere receipt and appropriation of money received from estates of her deceased relatives will not make him her debtor unless he has promised to repay or secure it. Downs v. Miller, 95 Md. 602.

23. That she gave him authority to draw against her bank account while she was in feeble health and living at a considerable distance will not constitute them owners in common of the fund. In re Holmes, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 264.

24. A lien on land conveyed to his wife to the extent of the purchase money paid by the husband cannot be established for his benefit, where he had received rent and money from the wife, sufficient to repay such purchase money. Clay v. Clay's Guardian, 24 Ky. L. R. 2016, 72 S. W. 810. That he paid the debt alone after joinder in a mortgage of land of which she held the legal title will give him and his heirs no right in the land as against her. Joyner v. Sugg, 132 N. C. 580. Where a married woman and others, holding land in common as heirs, made partition deeds, she and her husband receiving more than her share and executing a note to another heir for the surplus, on which he made a payment, he had no interest in the land, but must be considered as making the payment as her surety with a right to credit therefor with interest against her. debtor, filing of her inventory and claim of exemptions, and dismissal of the attachment, have that effect.[30] Conveyances by him to defraud her may be set aside by her in a proper case.[31] The husband's purchase of a mortgage given by his wife on her sole property does not merge in her estate,[32] nor has she any but contract or statutory rights in his personalty.[33] The wife must join in the execution of a chattel mortgage on chattels exempt from execution or no lien follows,[34] and the rule applies to exempt personalty belonging to the head of the family.[35] Money given by an insolvent to his wife used by her in good faith for living expenses before he was adjudged a bankrupt, and only such as was reasonably necessary to support the family for three months, cannot be recovered by the trustee in bankruptcy.[36]

(§ 3) D. Estates in common, jointly and as an entirety.—In a tenancy by entirety, the husband and wife hold as one person or unity;[37] hence, a husband cannot by his sole deed bar his wife's interest in an entirety,[38] nor is it subject to sale under execution against one of the spouses.[39] A tenancy by entirety in personalty may exist where such estates are recognized and the husband's common-law right to his wife's goods is abrogated.[40] They have generally been abolished by statute,[41] but such a statute is not retroactive.[42] A constitutional provision that property of a married woman shall be her separate estate, to be disposed of by her as sole, will not prevent creation of an estate by entirety.[43] A title taken in

30. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Hoffman [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1044. That a third person, with knowledge of the facts, took a chattel mortgage and bill of sale on the property from the husband to secure a pre-existing debt and an additional loan made at the time, was not per se a fraud on the wife. Id.

Phillips, 30 Colo. 516, 71 Pac. 363. Where a son receiving a conveyance of land from his father paid the father's wife for signing the deed, she could not set the deed aside after her husband's death and recover her distributive share of the land because the deed was in fraud of her rights in his property, the consideration received by her from the grantee being in fact property of her husband. Conveyance to husband and wife by limitation in the granting clause to "their heirs and assigns forever," and in the habendum clause to them "their heirs and assigns to and for their sole use and benefit forever," carries an estate by entirety; the Married Woman's Act has not abolished the common-law estate by entirety. The abolition of survivorship in estate by entirety by act July 1, 1850, in Virginia, § 18, c. 116, Code of 1849, was continued in the West Virginia Code of 1868, c. 71, § 18. McNeeley v. South Penn. Oil Co., 52 W. Va. 616. Conveyance of land to husband and wife after April 1, 1869, in West Virginia, created a joint tenancy, making her interest a separate estate, and not an estate by entirety. The effect of Code, § 18, c. 71, abolishing survivorship in estate by entirety, and c. 66, Code 1868, relating to separate estates of married women, is to abolish the estate by entirety and give curtesy to the husband in her half interest after her death, but does not entitle him to sole possession during coverture. the name of husband and wife on a consideration of which each gave part is joint and not entire,[44] unless in some states where the parts were equal.[45]

Possession of a purchaser under the husband's executory contract of sale of land owned in joint tenancy by a husband and wife is not adverse to the latter.[46]

(§ 3) E. Wife's separate property.[47]—Abolition by statute of the distinction between the general and separate estates of a married woman is retroactive where it merely enlarges her powers and does not affect the title,[48] and the Married Women's Act does not necessarily free her separate estate from a trust for her benefit.[49] Statutes have generally extended the right to property coming to the wife during marriage from various sources. Cases are cited below.[50] The separate estate is free from the husband's claims, thus he cannot

An investment by him of part of her separate estate with his own money in a note secured by deed of trust on realty, payable to them jointly, with her knowledge and consent, will not constitute an estate by entirety, with right of survivorship in the husband, but he is entitled to a proportionate share. Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 91.

Real estate bought by her, title being taken in her name, with the income from a business accruing after marriage, where the business was hers before marriage and the proceeds were handled by her as her own after marriage, constitute her separate property free from claims of her husband's creditors. Carson v. Carson, 204 Pa. 466.

A note executed to a feme sole will not become void on her marriage with the maker; she retains all rights respecting it except the right to sue, and may validly transfer it for collection. V. S. §§ 2644-2647. Spencer v. Stockwell [Vt.] 56 Atl. 661. An insurance policy on any life for the benefit of a married woman vests a contingent interest in the proceeds in her as her separate property beyond control of her husband or reach of any creditors, where no restrictions are made as to who shall become the beneficiary in case of her failure to survive. (Rev. Sts. 1898, § 2347). Ellison v. Straw, 116 Wis. 207. Where money received from a sale of his wife's property and business in her own name is invested by the husband in other property in her name, and afterward reinvested in a farm, title being taken in her name, the proceeds of the farm are the property of the wife on sale, though received by him, where she never gave him written authority to dispose of her property (Rev. St. 1889, § 6869). Brown v. Daugherty, 120 Fed. 526. Where a husband became owner of a note payable to bearer, as heir of an estate divided without administration, and transferred the note to his wife as collateral for an old debt and a new loan beyond its face, and she was not paid but held the note in her exclusive possession and he was not a party to the note or bound thereon, she was the lawful holder. Buck v. Troy Aqueduct Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 285. A defense cannot be made in an action by a married woman in Indiana on a note given her in Illinois for money acquired by her while living there with her husband that under the common law presumed to be in force in the latter state, such money was his property for which he could not sue without allegations to that effect, since it is presumed under the statute giving the wife power to sue alone concerning her separate property that the note was her separate property. Winklebleck v. Winklebleck [Ind.] 67 N. E. 451. That a wife had a small bank account and purchased a small business establishment and ran the business together with her husband, and that her husband was successful in his business so that their deposits to their joint account were large and that she added thereto certain sums received by her from outside sources, and that he later placed property in her hands to hinder creditors, will not support her claim after divorce that she was the equitable owner of all of a valuable estate held by them thereafter as tenants in common on the ground that it was purchased with funds she had at time of marriage, together with funds afterward received by her from her parent's estate. Buttlar v. Buttlar [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 722. Where a married woman owns separate property under the statute and is permitted to manage and control it by her husband, and it does not appear that he exercised set off support and necessaries furnished as against liability to account for her separate property.[51] His creditors have no claim whatever on her separate property,[52] even though his money went into it unless he defrauds them,[53] or it would be a fraud to deny their claims.[54] It is not lost by mere failure to intervene in a proceeding against it as his.[55]

The wife must prove her separate property not only by payment but also by showing the source of the money,[56] but the same amount and kind of evidence will avail as would to establish other ownership.[57] A trust is not implied against money any improper influence over her in its disposal or management, and she loans money to him or to a firm of which he is a member, disclaiming all interest in the business, except that of creditor of the husband or firm, her relations being distinctly understood between them, and notes are given to her or to a trustee for her for such loan, and she dies, leaving a will naming an executor, and after her death the notes are delivered to the executor by the bank in which she deposited them, a decree cannot be rendered on a bill filed by the executor, declaring the business and property in which the loan had been invested to be her business and property. Fritz v. Fernandez [Fla.] 34 So. 315. Where board is furnished in a household, it is presumed, in the absence of agreement or understanding otherwise, that the husband is to receive compensation therefor; and where it appears that a mother furnished support to a daughter after the latter had separated from her husband and was living with the mother in order that the latter may collect from the husband, it must be shown that the board was furnished out of her own estate or that her husband supplied it under an agreement that she was to receive compensation as her own money. Cory v. Cook, 24 R. I. 421. Where certain money was regarded as belonging to the husband when a separation agreement was made by them, unless mistake or fraud occurs at the time, the wife cannot afterward claim such money as her property because received by the husband as proceeds from land conveyed to her formally by him in fraud of his creditors. Baird v. Connell [Iowa] 96 N. W. 863. Acts 1884, p. 119, No. 140, giving a married woman the right to hold separate personal property acquired before or during coverture, excepting property acquired by her personal industry or gift from her husband, does not impliedly prohibit her from holding personal property given her by him, but leaves her rights therein as they were under the common law, whereby she could hold personalty coming as a gift from her husband as against creditors of the husband subsequent to the gift. Fletcher v. Wakefield [Vt.] 54 Atl. 1012.

51. Money expended by the husband for medical services and traveling expenses of his wife cannot be offset against rent received by him from her land and money received from her. Clay v. Clay's Guardian, 24 Ky. L. R. 2016, 72 S. W. 810. A husband receiving a large amount of money from his wife's separate estate as her agent cannot on accounting charge sums deposited to her credit in her bank account, used entirely for payment of family expenses, in the absence of evidence that she had agreed to support the family. Young v. Valentine, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 633.

52. However binding an obligation of a husband to pay a debt to his brothers and sisters, his wife is not required to allow it to be paid from her separate estate. Stewart v. Stewart [Pa.] 56 Atl. 323. Where a husband managed a business in which the separate property of his wife was invested, receiving a salary for his services, and the business having greatly increased in value, other property was bought with the profits, it not appearing certainly as to what was the value of the whole property and there being considerable debts against it and the salary appearing to be as much as his services were worth, his creditors cannot subject the property or any part of it to his debts. Hayner & Co. v. McKee, 24 Ky. L. R. 1871, 72 S. W. 347. A deed of trust on an equitable separate estate of the wife, created by a deed of settlement executed by husband and wife to secure payment of their joint note, is void. She cannot bind such separate estate for payment of her debts or those of her husband. Fields v. Gwynn, 19 App. D. C. 99.

53. A husband, by contributing from his salary, which is exempt from creditors, to pay an incumbrance on his wife's land, does not commit a fraud as to creditors so as to subject the land to their claims. Rev. St. 1899, § 3162. Furth v. March [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 147.

54. Where a solvent husband with his wife's consent spends all his money in improving her property, increasing its value many times, creditors for materials furnished believing the property to be his can follow the improvements to her premises. Brand v. Connery [Mich.] 92 N. W. 784.

55. The wife may recover her personalty taken in foreclosure as that of her husband, though she did not file an inventory. The failure merely subjected her to the burden of proving her ownership; Comp. Laws, § 2593, merely providing that such should be prima facie of her ownership. Anderson v. Medbery [S. D.] 92 N. W. 1089.

56. In a suit by creditors to charge land with the husband's debts, the wife must prove not only that she paid for the land, but that it was bought with the funds of her separate estate. Harr v. Shaffer, 52 W. Va. 207.

57. A married woman suing in replevin to recover property seized under a judgment against her husband need not establish her title by stronger evidence than would be required of a feme sole, and she need not show the precise facts of her claim of title or disprove fraud. Mills' Ann. Sts. §§ 3019-3021. Rachofsky & Co. v. Benson [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 655. Where notes payable to received by the husband from the wife at a time when she had no statutory separate estate therein.[58]

§ 4. Property rights under the community system.[59] What law governs.—Marital rights in property are governed by the law of the state from which the property came,[60] except when realty is concerned;[61] but the domicile must be definitely acquired.[62]

Separate estate of wife.[63]—Only positive fraud, concealment or suppression, equivalent to fraud, will estop a married woman from asserting her claim to realty.[64] A gift from her husband,[65] unliquidated damages for her personal injury before mara husband are transferred by him to secure a joint debt of himself and wife, without revealing that they were made to him by mistake and belong to his wife, he can show such fact after they have been seized by his other creditors by the same amount of proof as is necessary to establish her ownership in any other kind of property. Sallinger v. J. W. Perry & Co. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 360. In an action by the wife to recover for board furnished to one living in their home, statements of the husband concerning an agreement between himself and wife, that she should receive the compensation, may be given. Briggs v. Devoe, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1063. Evidence that a piano was insured in the wife's name with knowledge and acquiescence of her husband is admissible on the question of her ownership. Fletcher v. Wakefield [Vt.] 54 Atl. 1012.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that money contributed by the wife to a loan by herself and husband to another belonged to her and not to her husband. Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 71. To show that property was purchased with money received by the wife in gifts from third persons. Lyon v. Lyon, 24 Ky. L. R. 2100, 72 S. W. 1102. To show that wife was entitled to compensation for board furnished the family because supplied from her separate estate. Cory v. Cook, 24 R. I. 421. In attachment of property of husband, in which the wife interpleaded to recover her separate property, to show transfer of possession so as to affect the rights of plaintiff attaching the goods a few days after execution of a mortgage by the wife, which was unrecorded with notice of the wife's claim. Rice, Stix & Co. v. Sally [Mo.] 75 S. W. 398.

58. Where he bought land with her money from her father's estate before passage of the Married Woman's Act, 1876-77, it is presumed that he received the money because of his marital rights. Jesser v. Armentrout's Ex'r, 100 Va. 666.

59. Husband and wife may hold lands as cotenants in California [Civ. Code § 161]. Wagoner v. Silva [Cal.] 73 Pac. 433.

60. Lands in Texas purchased by a husband after removing there, with money earned in another state as a citizen thereof, are not community property where the money constituted his separate property in the former state. Blethen v. Bonner, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 585.

61. The capacity of husband and wife to deal with each other as to immovable property in Louisiana, must be determined by laws of that state. Rush v. Landers, 107 La. 549, 57 L. R. A. 353.

62. One removing to a state remained several years, then to another state residing there for twenty years without intent to live anywhere else, though thinking he might return to the former state, does not thereby obtain a domicile in the latter state, so as to be temporarily absent during that time, and render the marital rights as to property in the second state governed by the laws of the first. Blethen v. Bonner, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 585.

63. Evidence as to separate estate. A contract to purchase by a wife does not presumptively vest title in her as her separate property; Civ. Code, § 164, raises the presumption as to title to property conveyed to her by an instrument in writing. Peiser v. Bradbury [Cal.] 72 Pac. 165. Where plaintiff in trespass to try title claimed under a deed from a married woman, evidence by her that the land was always recognized by her husband as her separate property, and that when the land was conveyed to her by her husband the grantor understood that title was to vest in her as her individual property was admissible on the question whether it was her separate property and whether she had the right to convey. Wren v. Howland [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 894.

Sufficiency of evidence in an action by a surviving husband against his daughter to recover realty devised to the daughter by the wife to show that the land was the separate property of the wife and not community (Arkle v. Beedle [Cal.] 74 Pac. 1033); to show that property taken in execution against the husband was the property of his wife (Richey v. Haley, 138 Cal. 441, 71 Pac. 499); of facts to show that money on deposit in a bank was the wife's separate property (Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. [Cal.] 73 Pac. 172).

64. Williamson v. Gore [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 563.

65. A gift by a husband to his wife of proceeds of her dairy will make property purchased with such proceeds her separate property. Dority v. Dority [Tex.] 71 S. W. 950. Where a husband insured his life in favor of his wife and on settlement of the policy gave her the most thereof and afterward the firm of which he was a member borrowed the money from her, executing a note and deeds to her for certain land, the husband testifying without contradiction that the money was the separate property of his wife and was used to buy the land and at the time of the loan he and the firm were solvent, the land was not community property and was not subject to his debts. Hall v. Levy [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 263.

riage,[66] interests in public lands acquired by her,[67] or in a homestead where she completed the rights after his death,[68] and land conveyed to her by an instrument declaring it to be her property, is her separate property,[69] but a deed from husband to wife will vest title in her without a recital that the property is to become her separate property or proof of payment from her separate estate.[70] A mere loan of her separate funds to her husband, without specific arrangement as to its application, will not vest in the wife title to property purchased with the loan by the husband as to which title would otherwise vest in him.[71]

Where a conveyance to a married woman shows that property was vested in her as her separate estate, one claiming through a deed from her husband alone is not an innocent purchaser.[72] Issue and profit arising from investment of the wife's separate property cannot be taken in execution against her husband.[73]

In Texas, the husband may manage her separate estate while they are living together,[74] but she may be granted the right to manage and control her separate realty, and he will be restrained from interference where they are living apart, and he contributes nothing for her support while using the entire income from her separate realty for his own benefit without paying the taxes.[75] On conveyance of his homestead to her for a consideration from her separate estate, his possession is not thereafter adverse to her,[76] nor upon declaration of a homestead from her separate estate in California.[77]

Husband and wife must join in conveyance, mortgage or lease of her property, except as to yearly leases in Texas.[78] If they are living separately and he is con-

67. Any interest acquired by the wife in a land certificate issued to heirs of her former husband, remains her separate estate, so that her last husband does not acquire any interest in the certificate or the land; [Act of Congress of Tex. Jan. 29th, 1840, especially section 3]. Laufer v. Powell, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

68. Where a homesteader had not been in possession of property five years before his death, but his widow remained in possession five years after his death and proved the homestead, entered in her own name and obtained the patent, the property became hers. The community was dissolved at the date of the husband's death, at which time the property still remained in the government, and title was acquired by her after dissolution of the community. Richard v. Moore, 110 La. 435.

69. A deed to a married woman containing a clause giving her the right of disposal, use and benefit at will, makes such land her separate property. Laufer v. Powell, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 604. A husband is estopped from denying that property purchased during marriage belongs to his wife where title is taken in her name and he declares in the authentic act of purchase that it was paid for from her paraphernal funds. Westmore v. Harz [La.] 35 So. 578.

73. Section 4479, Rev. St. 1887. Evans v. Kroutinger [Idaho] 72 Pac. 882.

74. Where a lessee paid rents to a husband for the wife's separate property leased by the husband while husband and wife were living together and he is in apparent rightful custody of her separate property, the wife cannot recover such rents from the lessee. Dority v. Dority [Tex.] 71 S. W. 950. Where a judgment debtor owning stock in a corporation transferred certificates to another for payment of debts due to the latter's wife and child, but no transfer of the stock was made on the books and a creditor afterward sued out a garnishment against the corporation, the consent of the husband was binding on the wife, because of his statutory right to management of her estate. South Texas Nat. Bank v. Texas & L. Lumber Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 412.

75. After a permanent separation, he will not be permitted to exercise the marital right of management of his wife's separate property. The right depends upon their living together and his proper exercise of the trust. Dority v. Dority [Tex.] 71 S. W. 950.

78. A married woman living with her husband cannot without his joining, give a valid power of attorney to a third person to sell her separate realty. Nolan v. Moore [Tex.] 72 S. W. 583. Sole management of her property during marriage, given to him by statute, will not authorize him to lease her realty for longer than a year without her signature. [Rev. St. arts. 624, 628, 635, 2967]. Dority v. Dority [Tex.] 71 S. W. 950. Foreclosure cannot be had of a chattel mortgage given by a husband on separate proptributing nothing to her support, she is entitled to sue him and a lessee to cancel a lease made by him of her separate property without her knowledge, and to recover rents appropriated by him to his own use.[79] She cannot convey her separate estate by deed to her husband.[80] With authorization of her husband she may sell her paraphernal property and use the proceeds as she thinks best, though she turns them over to him, providing a method for her own security, and it does not matter that she announces such purposes in advance.[81] A surviving husband cannot sell property belonging to the separate estate of his wife to pay her debts or for any purpose.[82] A decree of partition of the community property is conclusive of claims made in the suit of a part of the property as separate.[83]

Separate estate of husband.—Where husband and wife were in possession of land under a railroad grant and conveyance from the company, and she died before the grant was forfeited and he purchased the land from the government, it was his separate property.[84] The community cannot charge him with the amount of rents of his paraphernal property which he applied during his second marriage to payment of an interest bearing mortgage debt on the property at the time of his marriage.[85] On a sale and reinvestment of his separate property, in order that he may claim the newly purchased property, the sale and purchase need not be contemporaneous, but it must appear that the funds before being separately reinvested had not been used in purchase of community property.[86] She cannot acquire title to his land by adverse possession during the marriage relation, though he abandoned her without cause. He cannot recover from her heirs for any of the rental value of his property before her death, though he may be entitled to rent for his part of the premises thereafter, where she took possession of his land, improved it and paid taxes upon it with community funds until her death. His land is liable to her heirs for half the cost of improvements and taxes on his separate property for which she used community funds, after abandonment.[87]

Community property.—All property, real and personal, acquired during marriage, is presumed to be community property, unless it is shown to have been purchased with proceeds of separate property or with intent to make it separate.[88]

W. 76. Lands or personalty acquired in Texas during marriage are presumed to be community property. Thayer v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1050. Land conveyed to a married woman during her husband's life is presumably community property, where the deed shows no recital making it her separate estate. Flannery v. Chidgey [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1034. The presumption that property in possession of either husband or wife is community property, may be overcome by evidence such as under the circumstances will ordinarily convince an unprejudiced mind that it is separate property of one. Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. [Cal.] 73 Pac. 172. Where evidence is shown that property was bought, possession taken and payment made before marriage of the purchaser, testimony of one who said that she did not know when the wife moved on the property, but that she saw a woman soon

Property claimed as separate if mingled with the community so that its separate character cannot be identified,[89] or land which a husband entered as a homestead during his wife's life, but as to which he made final proof and obtained a patent after her death, is community property.[90] One locating a mining claim has no such title or interest therein after conveyance and abandonment that the community interest of the wife attaches.[91] Rents of a married woman's separate estate are community property in Texas.[92] A deserted wife left in possession of property claimed as a homestead may show that she gave no cause for abandonment so as to forfeit her marital rights in the property which the husband now seeks to recover.[93]

Powers as to community property.[94]—Neither husband nor wife alone can dispose of community property,[95] but the separate right of each to use water from a lake on their lands may be granted.[96] A deed by them must be executed by the wife according to the statute.[97] Assent to a contract by both express or presumed is necessary to warrant specific performance in behalf of a purchaser.[98] That her husband had permanently abandoned her, and without her fault, and had left the state, will authorize the wife to sue for the community property.[99]

after the purchase of part of the property bought first, is insufficient to rebut the former evidence as to the issue of payment before marriage. Gilbert v. Edwards [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 959. Where lands in Texas were conveyed to a husband residing with his wife in New York, and it appears that under the laws of New York, during coverture, all property acquired by the joint efforts of husband and wife, is the husband's separate property as well as all his real estate in which the wife has merely a right of dower, and it does not appear by what title he held the money with which the land was bought, the presumption that it was community property is rebutted. Thayer v. Clarke [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1050.

Property purchased by him during community will not be his separate estate unless in the purchase he declares that it is bought with the proceeds of his individual property and for his individual account to replace property which he sold. Sharp v. Zeller, 110 La. 61. Where land was deeded to a wife as consideration of transfer of certain community property to herself and husband without a recital that it was intended to be her separate property, and husband and wife afterward sold the land, taking vendors' lien notes, which the husband transferred as collateral for a debt due to a bank, and on the latter requiring personal security for the debt, plaintiffs became surety under an agreement that the notes and other collateral should inure to their benefit, without notice of the wife's claim that the land was her separate property, but exercised due diligence in collecting and accounting for the collateral, in an action to recover on the notes and foreclosure of the vendor's lien, it could not be said as against them, that the wife's claim of the land as her separate property was valid, preventing her husband from pledging the notes. 97. While the acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed in proper form is conclusive between the parties in the absence of fraud, where the facts stated in the certificate of acknowledgment are traversed by answer and the answer also alleged that plaintiff acquired the deed with notice that the certificate was false, but the answer failed to allege that the certificate was obtained by fraud, the acknowledgment will be held valid. Brand v. Colorado Salt Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 458.

98. Where one purchasing real estate consisting of community property by oral contract of the husband, enters possession and pays the price, it will be presumed that both husband and wife agreed to the sale and in the absence of other showing, the purchaser is entitled to specific performance. Community debts.[1]—Debts created during coverture are presumed to be community debts.[2] They attach to the property and follow it into the hands of third persons.[3] They constitute a property right totally distinct from the right of a minor heir against his tutor,[4] and are prior to the right of ownership of a surviving spouse at dissolution of the community,[5] or rights of separate creditors of the spouse as to community property,[6] and the creditor of the community cannot be deprived of such priority by any action of the surviving spouse in his own name or as tutor, or of the heirs, whether of age or not.[7] Where minor heirs inherit a paraphernal claim against the community from the mother, and the father qualifies as tutor, the legal mortgage in their favor does not absorb their claim as community creditors, nor alter its character from one due by the community to a debt due by the tutor.[8] Registry of a claim is unnecessary to its enforcement against persons subsequently acquiring rights in the property.[9] There is no legal duty on minors at the time of sale of their interest to put at issue their right to sell the husband's interest in community property or their own claim as community creditors.[10] A voluntary expenditure by the husband after divorce, to support and educate a minor daughter, cannot be charged against the wife's part of the community estate.[11] After dissolution of the community by death of the wife, her heirs may enforce a paraphernal claim of hers descended to them against the community as an ordinary community debt.[12] Property of dissolved but unsettled community continues community property, liable to community debts, regardless of successive sales to purchasers in good faith without knowledge of such debts.[13]

Effect of partition: Where a decree in partition of a community estate adjudged the taxes in a certain year a community debt on the estate determines the aggregate on the community debts, a decree that each one interested should recover of the other, half of the community property, and that the half interest allotted to one should be liable for half the debts, and that each should have a lien on the part of the other for reimbursement for any payment in excess of the charge, the husband could not recover for payments of interest on community debts from the wife's portion, though it appears that she had paid one half the community debts charged to her, and he had not paid his half, since interest was not within the purview of the decree. Moor v. Moor [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 794. In an action by a creditor to subject community property to a note, the wife cannot maintain a cross-action asking that the title of the community lands be divested and title be given to her, such being an attempt to secure partition of the community property with which plaintiff was not concerned, and which defendants could not litigate against his objection. Teague v. Lindsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 573.

munity is dissolved by death of one of the spouses, the property falls into moieties, one of which belongs to the survivor, the other to the heirs of the deceased spouse, community debts first having been paid.[15] That the survivor qualified will not change the interest of heirs of the deceased spouse.[16] Where a husband dies intestate, leaving no issue of marriage with the survivor, she is entitled to the usufruct of so much of the deceased's interest in the community as would be inherited by children;[17] such right is personal and independent and will not shield her from the necessity of accepting or renouncing the community when called upon to elect.[18] Her interest in the community property cannot be affected adversely by a sale of such property under a power in the husband's will.[19]

The community survivor has only a residuary interest and can transfer no greater right.[20] A wife as survivor cannot sell community realty of her husband except to pay community debts.[21] A surviving husband who qualifies in time[22] and takes under a decree regular on its face[23] is not liable to collateral attack on his title, and a purchaser from him for full value, acquires title as against her heirs, without notice that the property was her separate estate.[24] Where there are community debts and the husband surviving sells community lands, the purchaser is not required to see that the proceeds are applied to the debts, nor is his interest affected by a subsequent declaration of the husband that he transferred the property for another purpose.[25] A widow and executrix is liable for her husband's debts and debts of

Reems v. Dielmann [La.] 35 So. 473. Common property referred to by a law providing that, if a decedent was a widow and left no kindred, and the estate, or part thereof, was community property of her and her deceased spouse while he was living, such property shall go to the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister of her spouse by representation, was such property as remains undisposed of by the spouse at his or her death, and did not include property which might have been community property during the husband's life, but which during that time he conveyed to his wife. the community to the extent of his separate property and community property received by her.[26] Where only the minors' interest in property held in indivision is sold, they do not become warrantors of the title so as to prevent them from afterward urging claims against their co-owner's interest in the property.[27] Where the surviving community partner sells his interest and, as natural tutor under authority of a family meeting, conveys at private sale to his vendee the interest of minor heirs, the heirs, on seeking to subject the part of the community property coming to their father to the payment of debts due them from the community, are not estopped by failure to set up the defeasible character of their father's interest or to urge their claims as community creditors in proceeds for the sale of their interest.[28] A conveyance by a surviving wife of a part of community land equal to a portion to which the daughter was entitled in the estate of the deceased husband and of the mother in satisfaction thereof, with the acquiescence of all parties in interest, passes title to the daughter and does not operate as a partition of the estate.[29]

If a surviving widow takes possession of community property beyond her share, she owes the value of her husband's share to his succession or heirs, and not personally by direct action against her to any particular creditor.[30]

Debts incurred by a surviving wife who qualified as administrator of community property, but did not act in that capacity for benefit of the estate, but for her personal advantage, and for which she gave ample security, are not liens on the entire estate including the interest of her husband's children.[31] A husband who executed certain notes after his wife's death, in renewal of notes executed by him during her life for their joint debt, was not liable thereon as executor of her estate or as survivor.[32] Where the husband alone was interested in community property after the death of his wife, and there were no debts, a contract by him for the purpose of clearing title that another should act as administrator for a certain compensation, his duties being formal only, not giving him right to interfere in management of the property, is valid.[33]

Authority of the survivor to sell,[34] or that a sale was made to pay community debts, will be presumed after great lapse of time.[35] A return by the executor of sale of community property under a power in the husband's will must show that it was sold to pay debts, though it appears that it was sold under the power.[36]

The executor of the husband cannot represent the wife's estate on appeal from an order of sale of community property by them under a power in his will on the ground that her interest was erroneously included, since their interest is adverse to her. In re Wickersham's Estate [Cal.] 71 Pac. 1079. In a petitory action by one as heir and administrator of the succession of his mother, not professing to act for creditors or for his co-heirs who accepted the succession by an extra judicial partition, but who did not authorize the suit which attacked the title, to which the plaintiff's father, then living in

§ 5. Liability for necessaries. Liability of husband.—The husband is liable for necessaries of his wife and family,[44] for which she has presumed authority to bind him,[45] unless furnished her on her personal credit;[46] but if he provides for her she cannot bind him by her contracts unless with his authority or assent.[47] Though he and his wife are separated, he is liable unless an agreement or decree exists relieving him,[48] or unless he has provided for support,[49] or unless she has voluntarily

Where a wife died leaving land subject to a mortgage of herself and husband to secure a loan used to pay living expenses and for her medical services and other family necessaries, notes for which were not signed by the husband but which the mortgage expressly bound the mortgagor to pay, the debts thus secured were those of the husband and his one-third interest in the land after her death should be first applied to the debt as between a purchaser from him and his wife's administrator. left him without sufficient cause and against his will.[50] That necessaries were furnished under a void contract with the wife will not prevent his implied liability.[51] If they are living apart, there is no implied agency binding the husband for her necessaries.[52] Abandonment of the wife by the husband, or turning her away without reasonable cause, or compelling her to leave because of ill usage, will render him liable for necessaries suitable to his station and estate and others may credit her to that extent.[53] Attorney's services to the wife for separation may constitute necessaries.[54]

Liability of wife.—Generally the wife or her separate estate is not liable for family necessaries,[55] while residing with the husband,[56] except by her separate agreement,[57] binding her separate estate;[58] even as to expenses made by her for him, her separate estate is not always liable.[59]

§ 6. Contract rights and liabilities of husband as to third persons.—A mere promise to remit when told of the claim, without any consideration for such promise, will not bind a husband to pay a debt of his wife.[60] A mortgage by an insolvent debtor to his wife, assigned for value by her to third persons knowing of his embarrassment and that she never had any separate business, on their payment of one-fourth of its face value, is invalid as against his creditors.[61] A contract between a husband and a railway company for safe carriage of his wife will not be implied by mere purchase of an ordinary ticket by him for her, any implied contract for that purpose being in favor of the wife only.[62] The husband is not liable for unauthorized purchases by the wife of other than necessaries.[63]

A law of Illinois making both husband and wife liable for family expenses, though applying to citizens of other states temporarily residing there, will not impose any liability on the wife to be enforced by the courts of Massachusetts for purchases of the husband without her knowledge while they were temporarily in Illinois. Mandell v. Fogg, 182 Mass. 582.

But in Nebraska medical attendance of the husband while living with his family is a family necessary for which the property of the wife is liable; where afterward the family removed to another state, a judgment against the husband in the latter state and a return of execution unsatisfied is sufficient to render the separate property of the wife liable for the debt [Comp. St. c. 53, § 1]. Leake v. Lucas [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1019.

56. Where she resides with him in a house occupied by them as a home, she is not liable for rent or value of use and occupation. Grandy v. Hadcock, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 173.

57. A wife may make a separate contract for her nursing and care in her last illness. Dearing v. Moran [Ky.] 78 S. W. 217. She is not personally liable for medical services for herself and children, at her request, without a special agreement [Laws 1896, p. 220, c. 272]. Richards v. Young, 84 N. Y. Supp. 265.

58. Medical services for her husband or family. Hazard v. Potts, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 365. That a husband is liable for necessaries of his wife will not prevent her from contracting for services as a companion or nurse to be paid out of her own estate. Bonebrake v. Tauer [Kan.] 72 Pac. 521.

59. Expenses for nursing husband [Rev. St. 1895, art. 2970]. Flannery v. Chidgey [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1034.

60. McBride v. Adams, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1060.

61. Monessen Nat. Bank v. Lichtenstein [Pa.] 56 Atl. 405.

62. Aiken v. Southern R. Co. [Ga.] 44 S. E. 828.

63. If a husband furnished his wife with

Agency of wife for husband.—The wife's agency for the husband is always a question of fact arising either from his failure to supply her with necessaries or from his express or implied authority to be inferred from the circumstances.[64] One attempting to hold the husband must show such agency.[65]

§ 7. Contract and property rights and liabilities of wife as to third persons.[66]—Contracts of married women are governed by the law of the state where made,[67] unless they concern realty, when usually the law of the situs of the property will govern.[68]

Agency of husband for wife.—A husband cannot create a leasehold interest in land of his wife as her agent in Minnesota.[69] Clear and unequivocal evidence is necessary to bind the wife by acts of her husband as her agent.[70] If his agency for necessaries suitable to her position, and means with which to pay therefor, he is not liable for other goods sold to her, unless prior authority or subsequent ratification is shown. Wanamaker v. Weaver [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 135. His mere failure to give notice of a separation will not render him liable to a dealer without notice of the separation, where no previous course of dealing would authorize the seller to believe that the husband approved the purchase. Sanger v. Bernay [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 605.

64. Martin v. Oakes, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 201. Sufficiency of instructions regarding her authority to act for him, charging that proof of marriage is not conclusive evidence of agency, and that no presumption lies of the agency. Brown v. Woodward, 75 Conn. 254. Express authority must be shown to hold him liable for articles ordered by her which are not necessaries or of such character as to raise an implied agency for him; purchase of jewelry. McBride v. Adams, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1060. Testimony of a third person that he acted as broker for the wife in procuring a loan for her husband may be considered after proof from other evidence that she acted as agent for the husband in that transaction. Brown v. Woodward, 75 Conn. 254. That two persons are husband and wife living together, when she secures a loan on a note signed by him, is evidence to be considered, though not conclusive, in determining whether he obtained the money through her as his agent; her acts will more readily be supposed to be performed with his consent than those of a stranger. Id. Where it did not appear that the wife had any authority to make an agreement for her husband for work or that she had ever acted as his agent except to keep accounts and collect bills a statement by her to defendant for whom the husband performed services on receiving part payment that the husband would complete the contract, would not bind him. Butler v. Davis [Wis.] 96 N. W. 561.

65. Jewelry purchased by wife. McBride v. Adams, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1060.

66. Property rights which depend on the mutual rights of spouses are also treated ante, § 2.

Construction of Civ. Code provision, § 164, providing that title to property conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing is presumptively vested in her as her separate estate, as to purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith and for valuable consideration. Peiser v. Bradbury [Cal.] 72 Pac. 165.

67. A note signed by a wife living with her husband in Tennessee, delivered and consummated in Ohio and payable there, is an Ohio contract. Coverture is a defense in an action on the note in Tennessee, though valid and enforceable in Ohio. First Nat. Bank v. Shaw, 109 Tenn. 237, 59 L. R. A. 498.

If the law of another state as to power of a married woman to contract is not proven it will be presumed to be the same as that of the forum. In a suit on contract made in the other state. Peter Adams Paper Co. v. Cassard, 206 Pa. 179.

See further, Conflict of Laws, 1 Curr. Law, 559.

68. A covenant of warranty in a deed by a married woman in South Carolina conveying land in North Carolina, must be governed by the laws of the latter state as to validity in determining whether an estoppel is created against the covenantor to claim; where the covenant of warranty violates the law of South Carolina, she is not estopped from recovering the land. Smith v. Ingram, 132 N. C. 959.

69. Gen. St. 1894, § 5534. Van Brunt v. Wallace, 88 Minn. 116.

70. Brown v. Daugherty, 120 Fed. 526. Sufficiency of facts showing husband's authority to contract for sale of her land (Saunders v. King, 119 Iowa, 291); to show that he had special authority to sign her name to a certain note, or general authority to sign her name to notes (Bank of Ravenna v. Dobbins, 96 Mo. App. 693). The mere fact of the marriage relation will not raise a presumption that he acts as her agent in management of her interest in lands held by them as co-tenants [Civ. Code, § 172]. Wagoner v. Silva, 139 Cal. 559, 73 Pac. 433. His mere statement that he has authority to pledge her property for his debt, is insufficient evidence of such authority. Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200. Her denial of his authority to contract for sale of her land, as asserted by the purchaser attempting to enforce the contract, will show lack of such authority, plaintiff having the burden to establish the agency. Saunders v. King, 119 Iowa, 291. That she allowed him to manage land conveyed by him to her, sell the products and handle the proceeds, will not show his authority to sell the land. Id. Where a married woman was building on a lot owned by her and the contract for materials for that purpose was made by her her is known, she may extend her liability through him by allowing him to contract for her as to other matters,[71] but her ratification of his acts will not raise a presumption of continuance of his agency.[72] Declarations of the husband to a stranger regarding the wife's liability will not bind her unless his agency for her is shown,[73] or unless she afterward ratifies them.[74] The third person attempting to hold the wife liable for her husband's acts must show the agency.[75]

Contracts in general.[76]—Generally the wife may contract as if single, where she binds her separate estate,[77] and the debt appears necessary to her separate estate husband, in an action against her to recover therefor on the ground of his agency, evidence may be shown as to his purchase of articles to be used for the property without special instructions from her. Rahm v. Newton, 87 Minn. 415.

71. After buying goods for her, he may bind her for supplies for her plantation which he manages as her agent [Code 1892, § 2293]. Johnson v. Jones [Miss.] 34 So. 83.

72. Though the act of a husband making his wife joint purchaser of a patent right is ratified by her joinder in a note therefor, it will not be presumed that his agency continues so that she will be estopped to claim that the note is void as against an assignee because not indorsed "peddler's note" as required by St. 1899, § 4223, for the reason that he asserted to the assignee on the purchase of the note, that there was no defense against it. Hays v. Walker [Ky.] 76 S. W. 1099.

73. Recognition by husband of broker's right to commissions from her. Winans v. Demarest, 84 N. Y. Supp. 504. The wife is not bound by false statements and representations of her husband to induce a sale of her land. Lewis v. Hoeldtke [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 309. In a suit by a wife to recover stock belonging to the community after abandonment by her husband, a conversation between defendant and the husband, from whom it is claimed the horses were bought, is inadmissible, and where no sale is shown to have been pleaded an admission of evidence by the wife as to a mortgage by her on the horses was not prejudicial. Word v. Kennon [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 365. Where one became a tenant at will of premises of the wife, entering without authority and paying rent, false representations of the husband as to the condition of the premises, as agent of his wife, cannot be shown in defense, in an action by the wife for rent. Van Brunt v. Wallace, 88 Minn. 116. Declarations of a husband to a stranger while in possession of his wife's land as her agent regarding its boundaries are not admissible against her. Perkins v. Brinkley, 133 N. C. 348.

74. A declaration of a husband to a plaintiff in a suit against his wife on a note executed by him, which it was alleged she had agreed to pay, concerning his conveyance of property to her to enable her to make a loan to pay the note, could be shown where it was communicated to the wife and she admitted that such an arrangement was made. McIntire v. Schiffer [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1056. Where a husband made a contract with a broker to exchange real estate, a later contract by his wife for the same purpose with full knowledge of the facts, is a ratification of the broker's acts in securing the contract. Charles v. Cook, 84 N. Y. Supp. 867. Where a wife knew that a tenant dealt with her husband as the real owner of premises and took part in negotiations, was present when the lease was signed, received rents and receipted in her husband's name and had knowledge that the tenant was improving the property relying on the lease, she is estopped to dispute the title and authority of her husband as against the tenant. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. v. Rea, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 576.

75. Saunders v. King, 119 Iowa, 291.

76. Sufficiency of instruction in action for recovery for supplies furnished a wife through her husband for her separate business on question whether plaintiff was entitled to believe and did in good faith believe that she was the purchaser. Seavy Co. v. Campbell, 115 Wis. 603. Where in trespass as to land belonging to husband and wife as tenants in common a settlement was claimed to have been made with their agent, a deed by them after such settlement and tendered to defendant by the alleged agent does not show that the wife was a party to the agency in the settlement. Wagoner v. Silva [Cal.] 73 Pac. 433. Acts 1901, p. 859, c. 617, subjecting the property of a married woman to a lien for improvements and making liens enforceable before a justice of the peace when less than a certain amount, does not change the general law that she is not liable on her contracts and cannot be sued before a justice to charge her separate estate therefor. Harvey, Blair & Co. v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352. Evidence in an action against a wife on a note executed by her husband, which it is alleged she had agreed to pay, in return for his conveyance of property to her to enable her to make the loan, that at the time she admitted that such arrangement had been made between them, plaintiff intended to attach the husband's property if she did not agree to pay the note, was not prejudicial to her. McIntire v. Schiffer [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1056.

77. Sufficiency of recitals in note signed by husband and wife to bind her separate personal estate. Harvey, Blair & Co. v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352. That a husband is liable for necessaries of his wife will not prevent her from contracting for services as a companion or nurse to be paid out of her own estate. Bonebrake v. Tauer [Kan.] 72 Pac. 521. A contract by a wife to pay board of an adult sister and her child is void under the married woman's act since it has no reference to her separate estate. June v. Labadie [Mich.] 92 N. W. 937. Separate property belonging to a married woman carrying on business in her own name and having property in such business and purchasing goods on her own credit for that purpose may be subjected in equity to the and business;[78] however, in New York, she is liable for goods purchased on her individual credit, though engaged in no separate business and without separate property.[79] The consideration for her contract must be sufficient.[80]

She may contract for a division of property as between herself and husband on one side and her adult children on the other.[81] She may obligate herself for services to a partnership to be performed by her husband as traveling salesman.[82] A note of a husband and wife without her privy examination cannot be enforced against her separate realty.[83] The contract of release of a prior indorser, made by a married woman in purchase of a note on which she is accommodation indorser, is binding.[84]

That part of a debt for which her note has been given is affected by usury, and another part is that of her husband, will not prevent her liability for the part which she owes.[85] Where a husband agreed with his wife to transfer his land to her if she would borrow money and discharge his note then due, commencement of action against the husband on the note did not waive the right to sue the wife.[86] A wife making a payment in good faith after her husband's death, on a note given by them, void because of coverture, believing it valid as to her, cannot recover, the mistake being one of law;[87] but her recognition of the debt after his death, by making a partial payment and promise to pay the remainder without a new consideration, claims of such creditors. First Nat. Bank v. Hirschkowitz [Fla.] 35 So. 22. A lease of realty to a married woman and her husband, gives her as separate property, an undivided half interest in the estate, as though she were a feme sole, making her liable for payment of rent though she intends in the transaction to aid her husband in securing a place of business. It is essential, that at the time of contract, she have separate property and intends to charge it; but this will not apply to a debt for property acquired by her, as to which, the purpose to which she intends to devote the property, or her possession of separate property need not appear. Kriz v. Peege [Wis.] 95 N. W. 108. The holder of a note signed by a married woman has the burden of proving that she intended thereby to bind her separate estate. Farmers' Bank v. Boyd [Neb.] 93 N. W. 676; Farmers' Bank v. Normand [Neb.] 92 N. W. 723. A parol promise by an executrix to pay for nursing of her testator husband is void under the statute of frauds, whether made as executrix or widow [Rev. St. 1895, art. 2543, §§ 1, 2]. Flannery v. Chidgey [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1034. That a married woman, when acquiring property and pledging credit therefor, intends to devote it to the benefit of her husband, and that the creditor knew of this fact, thereby being induced to extend credit to her, will not prevent legality of her promise to pay. If no obligation exists in the transaction that she should so devote the use of the property. Kriz v. Peege [Wis.] 95 N. W. 108.

78. That the note of a husband and wife bears a statement below the signature made by the wife to the effect that the note is for benefit of her separate estate, which she makes liable for its payment, will not warrant recovery against her on the note, unless it appears that the loan was necessary for her separate estate or to carry on her separate business, or with regard to her personal services. Ritter v. Bruss, 116 Wis. 55.

79. Minners v. Smith, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 648.

80. Release of a subsisting valid lien is sufficient. Field v. Campbell [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 1040. A note for a loan is on sufficient consideration. Purchase of a promissory note is on a valid consideration since note is property. Crampton v. Newton's Estate [Mich.] 93 N. W. 250. The consideration is sufficient if it passes to a third person at her request; contract for release of prior indorser in purchase by her of note on which she is accommodation indorser [2 Gen. St. p. 2017]. Headley v. Leavitt [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 731. Where a wife gave her note for her husband's debt to prevent suit against him on the note, there is a sufficient consideration. King v. Hansing 88 Minn. 401. A mortgage given by a married woman on her separate estate merely to secure a prior debt of her husband or of a third person without present consideration is void. Conkling v. Levie [Neb.] 94 N. W. 987. A note by a lessee and his wife for past due rent, is supported by a sufficient consideration where the time for payment was extended, forfeiture of the lease waived, and the lessee allowed to remain in possession. Emery v. Lowe [Cal.] 73 Pac. 981. The validity of her contract pledging her credit for property, whether in form of money or any other value, requires only that the equivalent for the credit shall actually pass to and invest in her without regard to any obligation preventing her from enjoying it as her separate property. Kriz v. Peege [Wis.] 95 N. W. 108.

81. Crouch v. Crouch, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 288.

82. Orr v. Cooledge, 117 Ga. 195.

83. Harvey, Blair & Co. v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352.

84. If the consideration is sufficient [Married Woman's Act, § 26 (2 Gen. St. p. 2017)]. Headley v. Leavitt [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 731.

85. Lanier v. Olliff, 117 Ga. 397.

does not amount to a ratification.[88] An equitable lien on the estate of a married woman will exist in favor of one furnishing money for benefit of her estate,[89] and the creditor who first moves has priority.[90]

One in possession of money belonging to a married woman is liable as for money due and received to her use, where, without her knowledge or consent, it is used by a firm of which he is a member, on her husband's order and credited to him.[91]

Contracts of suretyship.[92]—Unauthorized married women cannot become sureties in Louisiana.[93] A mortgage given by a married woman to secure the debt of a third person cannot be avoided by her when it was made at the time she took title to the premises and as a part of the transaction which vested her with title.[94]

The wife cannot become surety for debts of her husband,[95] except in states providing for such contracts by constitutional provisions or statutes which must be strictly followed;[96] and generally there must appear a clear intention to bind her separate estate.[97]

89. Fletcher v. Brainerd [Vt.] 55 Atl. 608.

90. Filing a bill to subject separate statutory property of a married woman to her debts and for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of such property, gives a creditor a prior lien over other creditors as to the funds in the hands of the receiver, if the suit is successfully brought to final decree. The decree takes effect by relation to the appointment of a receiver. First Nat. Bank v. Hirschkowitz [Fla.] 35 So. 22.

91. The firm or its members did not part with anything of value in return for the money and the wife did nothing to change the condition of the partner nor did she fail to disclose her interest nor was she responsible for any impression of the partner that the money was the property of the husband or that he had the right to dispose of it as her property. Comer v. Hayworth, 30 Ind. App. 144.

92. Sufficiency of statement in affidavit by a wife on application to open a decree foreclosing her mortgage to secure her husband's debt to show that the money was advanced to prepare the premises for an illegal purpose. Hallowell v. Daly [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 234.

Where one loaning money to a husband took the note of the husband and wife without negotiations with her, he cannot set up an estoppel against her to prevent her assertion that she was a mere surety. Ritter v. Bruss, 116 Wis. 55.

In an action on a note of husband and wife, a law providing that transactions between the trustee and beneficiary are presumed to be without sufficient consideration as to the latter and under undue influence, will not apply where the wife contends that she signed as a mere surety under undue influence of her husband [Civ. Code § 158, construed in connection with § 2235]. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. De Shorb, 137 Cal. 685, 70 Pac. 771.

93. State ex rel. Mt. Calvary M. E. Church v. St. Paul [La.] 35 So. 389.

94. Conkling v. Levie [Neb.] 94 N. W. 987.

95. Transactions by which it is intended that a wife should bind herself or property for debts of her husband, cannot be sustained as between the parties, whatever their form, nor can the wife be estopped in attacking them by her own admissions or conduct, nor is she confined in cases of authentic acts, to counter-letters or interrogatories, but may resort to parol evidence. Caldwell v. Trezevant [La.] 35 So. 619. No personal liability as to a married woman arises from her signing her husband's note as surety. Magoffin v. Boyle Nat. Bank, 24 Ky. L. R. 585, 69 S. W. 702. Where a contractor borrowed money to complete a building, giving a note and mortgage on realty from himself and wife, the land being held by them as tenants by entirety, and the owner was unable to pay the contractor and assigned to him a contract for purchase of the land, which land was afterward conveyed to the wife, the conveyance did not render her a principal instead of a surety on the notes and mortgage. Guy v. Liberenz, 160 Ind. 524.

96. Though the wife's name appeared first on notes of herself and husband, which are in substance an assumption by her of his debt, she is not liable unless she binds her separate estate as required by statute by mortgage or other conveyance [St. 1899, § 2127]. Planters' Bank & Trust Co. v. Major, 25 Ky. L. R. 702, 76 S. W. 331. A married woman's consent that her separate property shall be liable for her husband's debts must be in writing and executed according to the statute regulating conveyances by married women of the class of property to which the consent relates [Express provision of Const. 1885, art. 11, § 1]. Springfield Co. v. Ely [Fla.] 32 So. 892. Written authority given by a wife to her husband to deposit certain stock certificates from her separate property as collateral security for his debt, together with a mutual agreement between the wife and creditor after her divorce from her husband, substituting other stock certificates in the place of those deposited by the husband, will entitle the creditor to subject the latter certificates to his debt; the wife's consent to the original pledge was sufficient under Constitution 1885, art. 11, § 1. Id. The mortgage of a married woman to secure her husband's debt is valid if made according to statutory requirements. Hallowell v. Daly [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 234. A mortgage executed by a wife on her separate estate to indemnify her husband's sureties, is voidable merely and she must avoid it by some affirmative action of herself or her privies (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6964]. Field v. Campbell

Whether a married woman is surety or principal is to be determined from whether she received in person or as to her separate estate, the consideration of the contract and not from its form.[98] Her action in signing a note and mortgage on realty, held by herself and husband as tenants by entirety, in securing a statutory deduction, will not estop her from asserting that she was a mere surety, if it does not appear that the mortgagee had been misled to his prejudice.[99]

[Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 911; former opinion, 67 N. E. 1040. The wife cannot become her husband's surety in Louisiana, but she may become the surety of a partner to secure advances to the partnership, though her husband is a member thereof, the partnership being a distinct personality from the individuals who compose it. Stothart v. Hardie & Co., 110 La. 696. A mortgage executed by a married woman on her separate property, to secure a debt of her husband, is valid, though the whole consideration went to him. Wilson v. Neu [Neb.] 95 N. W. 502.

97. Where husband and wife joined in a deed with covenants of general warranty, conveying his lands in trust to secure debts owed by him to her, she is not bound by covenants of warranty in a subsequent similar deed in which she joined with the husband, conveying the same land to another, where the first deed was not postponed to the second nor was there any reference to her separate estate [Code, § 2502 (Amended Act March 6, 1890)]. Augusta Nat. Bank v. Beard's Ex'r, 100 Va. 687. Where a husband and wife joined in a deed with covenants of warranty, conveying his land in trust for her to secure his debt to her, a second similar conveyance of the same land by them, to secure debts of his to a third person, will not amount to a release of her interest as required by the first deed where no such purpose is disclosed by the second deed. Id. A mere covenant of warranty in a deed by husband and wife, conveying land which had been previously conveyed by both of them with covenants of general warranty to a trustee to secure debts owed by the husband to the wife, will raise no implied promise to charge her separate estate [Code, § 2502]. Id. Signing a note will create no presumption of consideration or of intent of a married woman to bind her separate estate. Farmers' Bank v. Boyd [Neb.] 93 N. W. 676. Where it appears that a married woman had signed a judgment note as surety for her husband who was a builder, and had purchased materials from plaintiffs to a certain amount, part of which had gone into the wife's houses, and it did not appear whether two sums paid upon the debt was the money of the husband or the wife, the judgment should be opened as to the wife as to the amount in access of the value of materials put into her houses, less the first payment made, when the materials for her benefit constituted the only indebtedness to plaintiffs. Hill v. Garrison, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 440.

98. Where it appears that an indorsement by a married woman of a note was solely for her husband's benefit and she received no benefit from the consideration, she was surety of her husband and not liable on the note [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6964]. John C. Groub Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 1030. Where the consideration for a note of husband and wife secured by their mortgage on realty held by them as tenants by entirety, was used entirely to pay the husband's individual debts, the wife was a surety only. Guy v. Liberenz, 160 Ind. 524. As to the note of a husband and wife secured by a mortgage on land held by them as tenants by entirety, no presumption exists that the consideration was not used for the benefit of such land or that she is surety, the burden being on her to allege and prove such fact. Id. Where after execution of a mortgage by a husband and wife including her separate estate to indemnify his sureties, she subsequently obtains a loan on other separate property to relieve her land from the mortgage which has become a valid lien by her election not to defend against it, she cannot defend against the later mortgage on the ground that it was made to secure her husband's debt, since the consideration was the release of a subsisting lien. Field v. Campbell [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 911; former opinion 67 N. E. 1040. Where it appeared that at the time a husband and wife executed notes to a bank, his account was overdrawn and the bank held a note for such overdraft against him, and when he negotiated the note executed by himself and wife its proceeds were applied to such indebtedness, and the balance placed to his credit, the wife having nothing to do with the transaction, it sufficiently appeared that she signed as a surety merely, so that recovery could not be had against her, though her name appeared first on the notes. Planters' Bank & Trust Co. v. Major, 25 Ky. L. R. 702, 76 S. W. 331. Where property is sold to the wife after refusal to sell to the husband because of his inability to give security, and title is conveyed to her with her knowledge, she executing a mortgage to secure the purchase money, she is liable as principal and purchaser and not as a surety on the debt of her husband, so as to render her not liable on the purchase notes. McDonald v. Bluthenthal, 117 Ga. 120. Where a husband borrowed money executing mortgages on his separate property and no part of the loan was applied to the benefit of the wife's separate estate and after maturity of the mortgages, the husband and wife gave a deed of trust as additional security on city lots, a part interest of which belonged to the wife, with knowledge by the beneficiaries that the deed was given to secure his debt and that she had received no benefit of the money, she and her property were merely surety for his debt. White v. Smith, 174 Mo. 186. Where a husband in debt to a bank of which he is president borrows money to pay the debt and his wife, under no liability therefor, gives her individual note with bank stock as collateral and her bond secured by mortgage in which her husband joins, she is surety only for his debt. Stewart v. Stewart [Pa.] 56 Atl. 323.

A subsequent creditor of the husband cannot require the holder of a former mortgage, given by the wife on her land to secure his debt, to proceed against her property first nor claim subrogation to the mortgagee's security against her.[1] A wife executing a mortgage on her property to secure her husband's debt does not stand as his surety, so that her property is released by a novation which would release a mere surety.[2] A pledge of a promissory note of a wife to secure a debt part hers and part that of her husband, the separate interests being readily ascertained, is valid as to the part of the debt due from the wife, and the pledgee may recover against her on maturity.[3] Where husband and wife gave a mortgage on realty owned as tenants in entirety, to secure their note, the wife acting merely as surety, her subsequent joinder with him to secure a deduction under the statute is not an election by her to treat the note and mortgage as binding her.[4] Appointment of a receiver for an indefinite time for rent of a married woman's separate property, which was mortgaged to secure her husband's debt, she joining in the assignment of the rent, was not a deprivation of her property without her consent and due process of law.[5] Where husband and wife conveyed property of her separate estate to a third person, who immediately reconveyed to the husband, both conveyances reciting a cash consideration, a subsequent purchaser from him cannot be charged with notice that the transaction was only colorable and made to evade a provision of the instrument creating her separate estate, by which she was prohibited from selling or encumbering it for debts of her husband.[6]

Conveyances; mortgages; contracts to convey; powers.—Statutes permitting married women to convey their property must be strictly construed.[7] A married woman's deed conveying her common-law estate is valid and enforceable in Missouri.[8] A wife must acknowledge privily her conveyance of her separate estate[9] or her contract to convey,[10] and it must appear that she signed willingly.[11] The husband generally must join in her conveyance or mortgage,[12] but if she executed a deed without his joinder and afterward becoming a party, while a feme sole trader, to a partition proceeding in which the land conveyed by her is concerned, she will be deemed to have ratified her deed if she does not repudiate it.[13] She may execute a power given before marriage without his joinder in Alabama.[14]

12. An individual contract of a married

That consideration for a deed of a husband and wife was largely an old account due from her husband to the grantee is insufficient to avoid the conveyance.[15] She is bound by covenants in her deeds referring to her separate property.[16] She cannot deny the recital of her deed conveying her separate property as a consideration, as against a subsequent innocent purchaser.[17] A sale of realty by the wife will not be held a mortgage merely because she believed it to be such.[18] One entering land of a married woman under her void contract for its sale is liable only for rent.[19] That she permits a grantee and his subsequent grantees to take possession of land and improve it under a void deed from her will not estop her from its recovery.[20] An invalid power of attorney, given by a wife to sell her separate realty, and in which her husband did not join, and a deed from the attorney, may be shown as a basis for a claim for improvements in good faith by the grantee.[21] Threats by the husband to leave his wife, by which he procured her signature and acknowledgment to sale of a homestead, will not prevent specific performance where the vendee is entirely innocent.[22] Indorsement by a notary on the back of a contract by the husband and wife for the sale of her land, whereby an extension of time is given for the first payment, made without authority of the wife, will not avoid the contract nor warrant her repudiation.[23]

The wife may, as to an innocent person without notice, lose her rights in property,[24] but her husband's grantee of lands which they own jointly can have no ad-woman for sale of her lands and to execute a bond given for a deed is void and furnishes no consideration for notes for purchase money [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6961]. Shirk v. Stafford [Ind. 24. Where a husband and wife owning land in entirety, conveyed it to a third person who negotiated a loan for benefit of the husband, to whom the third person reconveyed the property, the deeds being absolute in form, and it was agreed between husband and wife that when the loan was made the land should be reconveyed, the renter at time of loan knowing nothing of such agreement or conveying of title, except as shown verse possession until the husband's death.[25] Knowledge of a married woman that her husband is negotiating an exchange of a whole tract of land owned by her and him together in his own name, or has exchanged it as his own land, or her casual expression of satisfaction with such an exchange, or her silence, will not bar her right by an estoppel in pais.[26] Joinder with her husband in a suit for cancellation of his sole contract for the sale of land in which they each owned an undivided half, and for forfeiture of all payments by the vendee under such contract, amounts to an acceptance and ratification of the contract by the wife.[27]

Where a grandfather agreed to bequeath property to his grandson's wife, if she survive him, in return for maintenance and comfort to her husband during life and payment for medical services, and funeral expenses of the grandson at his death, she was entitled to enforce the contract against the grandfather's estate, where she expended her property, relying on the promise.[28] A parol gift of realty from her father and taking possession with her husband will not estop a wife from setting up an equitable title therein, by an agreement for consideration, that a purchaser shall take a deed directly from the father and by surrendering possession under such agreement.[29] Where a mother borrowed money from her daughter, executing notes therefor, to the amount of which, after the daughter's marriage, the latter would have been entitled on an equitable settlement between herself and husband, whether the husband had reduced it to possession or not, the mother was not entitled to set off a claim against the husband against the notes.[30] An agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagees whereby, for a certain consideration and payment of the costs of a foreclosure sale, the mortgagees, without the wife's knowledge, allowed the sale to be made as advertised and arranged not to advertise the property under the mortgage until later, amounted to a suspension of the right to foreclose, discharging the wife from liability.[31] Where a husband gives another a warranty deed of land and with the proceeds buys land, taking title by entireties in himself and wife, such land is not bought with the money of the third person so as to subject it to his execution as land held in trust, though he obtains a judgment against the husband for breach of the covenant of warranty.[32] A married woman in Kentucky can contract for the building of a house on her land without concurrence of her husband,[33] and may sell her separate estate or trust estate, conveyed or devised to her, on any terms satisfactory to her, or convey by deed of gift, if her husband joins.[34]

by the abstract he had the right to rely on such apparent title of the husband to the property, and was not put on inquiry as to the secret agreement between husband and wife, by the fact that she transferred her interest just before the loan was made, or that the consideration in the deed was nominal [Burns' Rev. 35. A deed by an execution purchaser to a married woman passes the legal title as her separate estate or as the community estate of herself and husband, and vests the real and beneficial interest, either in her as her separate property or in herself and husband as community property, unless the legal title was for the use and benefit of another. Williamson v. Gore [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 563.

Fraudulent conveyances.[36]—Transactions between husband and wife in prejudice of creditors will be carefully scrutinized, but there is a presumption of their good faith which must be overcome by affirmative proof.[37] Money or property delivered by a wife to her husband is presumed to be a gift as between her and his creditors, and the burden is on her to show that it is a loan.[38]

§ 8. Torts by husband or wife or both.—A minor cannot recover damages from his father and step-mother for personal injuries inflicted by the step-mother.[39] Where misrepresentations regarding a wife's land sold by herself and husband were made by both, he was equally liable with her therefor, though he acted as her agent; and though, in assuming to make such statements, he was merely mistaken.[40] Where a husband and wife executed a deed containing a false statement as to the amount of incumbrance on property assumed by the grantee, the husband was liable for the amount the grantee was compelled to pay because of the deceit.[41] A husband is liable for an assault by his wife only when she is coerced by him, though he is present.[42] Her plea to an action to charge her with individual liability for tort, that he was present and participated, is insufficient, as merely raising a prima facie presumption of his coercion, which is an essential ingredient of her defense.[43] His liability for her tort which is not committed with any reference to her separate property is not affected by her statutory right of separate estate and its management.[44] He is not liable for her negligent act, not committed in his presence or by his direction, while driving his team as his wife and not as his servant.[45] She is not liable for deceit for joining with him in a deed falsely stating the amount of incumbrance on property assumed by the grantee, where the property is not hers.[46] That a judgment has been recovered against her for making the same slanderous accusation independent of him was no bar to an action for slander against him.[47]

§ 9. Torts against husband or wife or both. Wrongs to property.—Husband and wife may sue jointly for trespass on lands held in common.[48] He may sue for injury resulting in a past reduction of the value of rents and profits of her lands without joining her as plaintiff.[49] If he is in possession of her land with her consent and puts in a crop, furnishing materials under an arrangement whereby he is to have the entire proceeds, he may sue in his own name for a tort as to the unsevered crop, without regard to the form of the contract with his wife.[50]

Wrongs to the person.—The liquor laws usually provide a redress for injuries resulting from sale of liquors to the husband.[51]

Death or personal injuries.—The statutory right of action for the negligent killing of the husband is sometimes invested in the wife, to the exclusion of other dependents,[52] or the administrator.[53] A wife freed from disability to sue may recover for expense, notwithstanding she might have looked to her husband who was liable.[54] In California a deserted wife may sue a third person for wrongful death of a child.[55] The husband may recover for loss of his wife's services and her companionship, though her earnings are separate and her right of action is sole.[56] Husband and wife cannot recover damages separate to each in their joint action.[57] Where husband and wife joined in an action for personal injuries to her, the cause being barred unless coverture saved her the right to sue, the action being essentially the wife's under the statute and he being merely a formal party, coverture suspended the limitation, though on recovery the husband could reduce the judgment to possession, subject to her equity.[58] A suit in Louisiana under the community regime, to recover damages for personal injuries of a married woman, must be brought by her in her own name for her separate use and benefit, with authorization of her husband or the court.[59] In Texas, the wife is neither a necessary nor a proper party to a suit by the husband for injuries to her from defendant's negligence,[60] but joinder of him as plaintiff in an action begun by her before marriage is not misjoinder.[61]

Judgment in a joint action by husband and wife for personal injuries to the latter is res judicata as to all issues therein determined in an action by the husband for damages for the same injuries;[62] but a judgment in favor of a wife in an action by her cannot be admitted as evidence in an action by the husband for loss of her services and expense of medical treatment.[63] Where he sues for injuries to her in his own name, under pleadings showing his object to be recovery of damages for her personal injuries, and his want of capacity to sue is not raised seasonably, judgment for damages may be given, which will become the property of the wife;[64] and she having appeared and testified and actively assisted in prosecution, the judgment is res judicata as against her.[65]

Damages for personal injuries to the wife may include compensation for pain and suffering past and future and permanent injuries,[66] physician's services,[67] damages to the community, permanent and temporary, mental anguish, cost of nursing and loss of her household services;[68] the husband may recover services in nursing her, but not loss of salary while so engaged.[69] In an action for personal injuries, she cannot recover for inability to perform manual labor,[70] nor for loss of earnings or diminished capacity to earn, if she has never had a separate estate, or does not expect to hold one, or is not engaged in separate business.[71]

70. An instruction that a married woman suing for personal injuries may recover for inability to perform manual labor, is incorrect, where there was no evidence as to her

Criminal conversation and alienation of affections.—Under the common law, the wife had no property right in performance of the husband's marital duties, and a law enabling her to sue in her own name for injury to her personal character will not confer a right of action for enticing away her husband.[72] The Married Woman's Act of New Jersey has not changed the common law.[73] An agreement between husband and wife on separation, giving her personal property which she brought with her at the time of marriage or made while with him, and money, in lieu of right of dower and homestead, will not bar her right to sue a third person for alienation of his affections.[74] Intentional enticement of a husband to separate from his wife is alone a wrongful and illegal act in Missouri; parents are liable for enticing away their minor son, though he married without their consent and against their wishes.[75] If the husband had no affection for her when the alleged enticement occurred, because of previous alienation or otherwise, the wife cannot recover.[76] Plaintiff's neglect and indifference is not provable against her unless it appears that such was without his consent or that it affected him.[77] The act of sexual intercourse is not necessary to liability.[78] That the husband seduced defendant is no defense to the wife's action.[79]

Pleading and proof.—An allegation that defendant wrongfully, wickedly and unlawfully sought and courted the husband, sufficiently charges malice in the act.[80] A complaint stating that defendant by words and conduct did alienate his affections, and that such was his purpose in words and acts, sufficiently states the intent and accomplishment of the alienation.[81] A demurrer to a paragraph of the answer, alleging that the separation was caused by plaintiff's fault, is properly sustained.[82] The wife suing cannot be allowed to state on cross-examination a single act of defendant which caused separation, where she relied on a series of acts and circumstances covering a considerable period.[83] The husband cannot show, in an action against his mother-in-law, the amount of money left defendant by her husband, and that it had never been divided between her and the wife, where he did not allege any damage by deprivation of benefit of his wife's property.[84] An admission by general denial that whatever relations defendant had with the wife were with plaintiff's knowledge and consent is not of fact for purposes of trial, but only for purposes of pleading; nor is it an admission of sexual intercourse with the wife.[85]

Plaintiff may be required to file a bill of particulars giving the particular place, time and date of each act of criminal conversation of which she intends to give evidence, where her declaration specifies particular acts without thus identifying them.[86]

Evidence.[87]—Declarations showing the feelings of parties,[88] but not causes of alienation from a former wife,[89] are admissible.

Financial condition of defendants may be shown.[90] A letter of defendant relating solely to proposition to settle "our affair," could not be shown in evidence as offer of compromise, where it contained no admissions of fact, though it stated as a conclusion that plaintiff should be paid, without a statement for what he should be paid.[91] In an action by a husband against his mother-in-law, she may offer the wife as a witness without previously ascertaining whether the husband will permit her to testify, where he had previously stated in his testimony what his wife had said in various interviews.[92] Where the wife denied illicit intercourse with defendant, a copy of a letter to defendant in her handwriting, admitting the wrong, could be admitted to contradict her where plaintiff testified that she wrote the letter in his presence and he mailed it to defendant.[93] Where defendant testified on direct examination that, though both husband and wife consented to an arrangement whereby he was to sustain improper relations with the wife, she concurring if she could have her own room, he never occupied any but his own room, he could not be asked on cross-examination whether he had sexual intercourse with her.[94]

Damages.—The husband can recover for only natural and probable consequences of alienation of his wife's affections by her father.[95] He may show the value of his wife's services per year; and the disposition of his children on breaking up his family because of the wife's conduct.[96] Where, in an action by a wife, there was no evidence as to the value of her support, the jury may nevertheless be instructed to consider it as an element of damage where circumstances of the parties have been fully given.[97]

plained of as criminal conversation shows collusion or connivance is a question for the jury, and the court cannot so instruct as to take away that question.[99]

§ 10. Remedies and procedure generally as affected by coverture.[1] Right of action; joint or separate; parties.[2]—A husband must sue alone for support of a third person in his household, though the services were largely the personal attendance of his wife.[3] But in New York she must sue when it was under agreement between them that she alone should receive the compensation.[4] Expenses resulting from breach of contract respecting the wife may be recovered by the husband though she was not a party and did not assign the claim to him,[5] but an action for services rendered almost entirely by the wife should be brought by her alone if she has capacity to sue.[6] As to possession of land acquired by descent before passage of the law giving the right to sue in her own name, the wife cannot sue a third person during her husband's life.[7] She may sue in equity to set aside a levy and sale of a homestead,[8] and may interplead in attachment against her husband to recover her separate property, whether acquired from him or from third persons.[9] Where land is conveyed to a wife during coverture and it does not appear that the consideration was her separate means, she cannot sue in her own name to recover possession after being ejected on process against the husband.[10] A wife whose husband has deserted her may, under enabling laws, sue alone.[11] Title to homestead may be quieted in the district court in one of the spouses without concurrence of the other.[12]

Where a widow after her husband's death was paid in full for her first year's support and her interest in his estate, she could not sue to set aside a deed of his property to his son to recover her distributive share, on the ground that it was made to defraud her of her interest, without a tender of return of money received from the son for her signature to the deed.[13] To set aside a deed of husband and wife for his fraud, it must appear that the grantees participated in it or gave consideration with notice of it.[14] An action may be maintained to charge the wife's separate personal estate, though it does not exceed the exemption allowed by law, since that exemption is to be allowed when execution is issued.[15]

An action in form of a common count in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered is the proper remedy for recovery from a husband for necessaries furnished his wife while living apart from him through his fault.[16]

The husband is a proper party defendant in a suit against the wife to set aside a deed to her,[17] notwithstanding a statute providing that she may sue and be sued alone;[18] or in an action against her seeking to charge her personal estate,[19] or to a suit by the wife to protect her lands, but he must be made a defendant in the latter suit.[20] That he joined her as co-defendant in a suit to avoid judgment of a foreign court which declared her to be equally entitled with complainant to share in a trust fund, and to recover from her and her curator the real and personal property obtained under the alleged fraudulent judgment, will not require his joinder with her in a compromise agreement or in an answer confessing the bill.[21] He is a necessary defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage against her property.[22] The wife of the vendee in an executory contract for conveyance of land on payment of the price is not a necessary party to a foreclosure by the vendor of the vendee's equity in the land.[23] Improper joinder of wife as plaintiff with her husband can be raised only by notice of misjoinder under the proper statute.[24]

Limitations.[25]—Limitations will not run against a married woman during coverture.[26] One in actual adverse possession, under color of title, of land of a married woman, for seven years before death of her husband, has a good title as against her heirs, where she did not seasonably bring an action to recover after her husband's death.[27] Registering herself as a free trader during coverture will not bar a married woman from benefit of an exception preventing the running of limitations against a married woman during coverture.[28] That a wife seeking cancellation of a deed by herself and husband for his coercion, waited three years before suing, will not prevent relief.[29]

Appointment of a receiver to take the wife's separate property into the custody of the court is an equitable attachment making a lien on the property in favor of the creditor as a levy of an execution or an attachment at law.[30]

Pleading and proof. Issues.[31]—Where a married woman may contract and sue as if unmarried, it need not be alleged in a suit on a contract with regard to her separate estate, that she owned such separate estate, and that the contract was made with reference thereto.[32] Plaintiff seeking to recover for necessaries supplied at the wife's request need not negative facts which the husband may set up as a defense.[33] An allegation in a bill to cancel a deed of husband and wife for duress and undue influence, that the grantee knew the character of the husband well enough to put him on notice of the coercion, will not show constructive notice;[34] allegations as to duress mingled with allegations as to promises of benefits are insufficient.[35]

Coverture relied upon as a defense must be pleaded.[36] In an action on a note by husband and wife, the answer must allege the facts constituting undue influence or duress.[37] In an action by a married woman on a note for money acquired by her while living with her husband in another state, a plea of no consideration will not raise the question of her inability to sue.[38] If a petition to recover for necessaries furnished a wife and child at her request does not show that the child was under 21, defendant must raise such omission by plea and not by special demurrer after appearance term.[39] Where in ejectment by a husband and wife, they claimed that the land, which had been sold under execution against him, had been bought by them, the money being furnished equally by each, the submission of an issue as to the equal furnishing of such money to procure a home was sufficient in form and substance to present the controlling issue in the case.[40] Where a wife as co-defendant in an action on a promissory note pleaded coverture and that it was for her husband's debt and proved coverture, but failed to show the consideration, an affirmative charge with hypothesis for plaintiff on the plea of coverture was proper.[41] Where a wife defends, in an action on a note given by herself and husband, on the ground that she was a mere surety, she must show knowledge of that relation by the payee and his consent to such arrangement.[42] Where she pleaded the general issue in an action on a note made by her and indorsed by her husband, giving notice of the marriage and that the note was for money for his use, plaintiff made a prima facie case by introducing the note, and she is not relieved from proving facts preventing her liability by the notice.[43]

Evidence; questions of fact.[44]—The burden of proof is on a lessee to show that a wife is bound by a lease of her property under seal not purporting to be executed by her or in her behalf, but in fact executed by her husband.[45] In ejectment by husband and wife for land which had been purchased by them, each furnishing funds, the purposes for which money was furnished by her and her accompanying directions may be shown.[46] Evidence of business relations between defendants, and the amount of property and extent of business of each other, is admissible in an action against the husband and wife on a note made by her and indorsed by him which they claim was for money for his use.[47] The burden of proving necessaries is on plaintiff.[48] Whether there was evidence tending to show that goods were furnished the wife on her own personal credit is a question for the court in an action to recover from the husband;[49] the jury cannot determine whether his allowance for her personal expenses was enough unless evidence appears as to his means or his usual manner of keeping his family.[50] Whether a loan was obtained by a wife on a note made by her and indorsed by her husband under representations that it was for her separate estate is a question for the jury, where it appears that she stated that she did not like to request him to sign, which she did not deny but merely claimed that the money was for his use.[51] In an action by a wife, the owner of an hotel, to recover for board, where plaintiff seeks to set off a debt due from the husband, the question whether the husband had so taken part in the business as to lead defendant to believe that he was the owner was for the jury, where it appears that both were engaged in the business, that the contract was made by the husband, and that he had been allowed by her to act as agent.[52] Where in an action against a married woman by a physician to recover for professional services, it appears that she has a separate estate and plaintiff testifies that she agreed to become responsible for such services before they were rendered while she pleads and testifies that no such special contract was made, the question is for the jury.[53]

Judgment or decree; allowance of fees.—A judgment against husband and wife need not state specifically that her separate property is liable therefor.[54] Judgment cannot be rendered against him merely because he is joined as defendant with her in an action seeking to charge her personal estate.[55] Where both sued for breach of covenant in their deed of right of way to a railroad company, and it appeared that she had no interest except her right of dower, no issue being made as to her right to recover as joint plaintiff, judgment was properly entered on verdict in favor of them jointly.[56] A judgment against her alone in foreclosure of a mortgage of her land, executed without his joinder, binds her and her heirs.[57] If she fails to plead her suretyship for him when sued, she is estopped by a judgment against her so that execution sale of her land cannot be set aside because of suretyship.[58] A judgment in ejectment for one holding paper title against one claiming by adverse possession is not binding on the latter's wife, not a party, in a later action by her to protect her homestead rights, where the adverse possession had ripened into a title in fee before the first action was brought.[59] Where a declaration in tort by husband and wife allege joint damage and in the same court special damage to the husband alone, a verdict for a single sum and judgment for "said damages" is for the joint damage only.[60] Where a divorce petition, answer, and reply submitted the property rights, the decree settling her property rights is conclusive in a pending suit for recovery of the land.[61] Where a decree of the circuit court in an action by a wife for separate maintenance fixed her solicitor's fees and pending an appeal by the husband from the decree and from a judgment of contempt for disregarding its terms, the wife petitioned the circuit court for solicitor's fees in defense of the appeals and the circuit court on remand of the original suit expressly reserved by the decree the future settlement of such fees, it had jurisdiction to allow the wife solicitor's fees for services rendered subsequent to the original decree.[62]

§ 11. Proceedings to compel support of wife (civil and criminal). Right of action; prosecution.—The constitution does not prevent the general assembly from making desertion of the wife without just cause, or willful neglect to provide for support of a family who are destitute, a misdemeanor.[63]

To convict a husband of abandonment under Greater New York Charter, it must appear that the wife is in danger of becoming a public charge.[64] His infidelity is insufficient to constitute statutory abandonment amounting to disorderly conduct.[65] He is not guilty if he offered to give her a place to live and she refused.[66]

"Abandonment" in a law rendering one liable for leaving a wife whom he has married to escape prosecution for seduction or bastardy, means physical and not constructive abandonment.[67] A divorce obtained by a wife, whose husband had married her to escape prosecution for bastardy or seduction, after his desertion and before bringing suit for a statutory penalty for desertion and failure to provide, is no defense in such suit.[68] That both parties to a marriage consented to execution of a false marriage certificate to conceal illegitimacy of a child born before marriage actually occurred will not affect validity of the marriage in a criminal action by the wife for nonsupport.[69]

In Minnesota a wife living apart from her husband for justifiable cause can bring an equitable action for separate support independent of an action for divorce.[70]

In a proceeding to compel support, he may show that she has a former husband still living from whom she was never divorced.[71]

Pleading and issues; information or indictment.—A petition alleging that plaintiff and defendant were husband and wife, that she properly deported herself and treated him with kindness and affection, but that he wilfully abandoned and refused to support her, is sufficient on appeal to authorize the inference that he abandoned her without due cause.[72] An unnecessary allegation in a petition by a wife for support, that she is living apart from her husband does not require a further allegation of justifiable cause and statement thereof.[73]

An indictment for abandonment must charge failure to support.[74] If an information for abandonment charges that he wilfully and without cause left her, it need not charge that he left against her will.[75] An information alleging that he abused her so that she was compelled to leave, and refused to contribute to her support, will be sustained as substantially alleging desertion.[76]

Evidence.[77]—Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not dispensed with by statutes allowing proof of the marriage by a preponderance.[78] In an action to recover a penalty for abandonment, evidence tending to show her treatment of him may be considered with other evidence in determining the relations between them as showing whether he had sufficient cause for leaving her.[79] A marriage certificate marked "copy" made by a justice, though never recorded, is admissible to show marriage in a criminal action for nonsupport, though the husband testified that it was fraudulent and made merely because the parties were parents of an illegitimate child;[80] that he held her out as his wife, recognized their children as his own, supported the family, and treated her in every way as his lawful wife, may be shown in corroboration of other evidence of marriage where he denies the marriage and declares a marriage certificate introduced to be void.[81] A finding, in a prior suit for divorce by the husband, that the wife was not guilty of willful desertion, is immaterial in a suit by her for support.[82]

Verdicts and findings; judgment or decree.[83]—Temporary alimony may be allowed in an action for separate maintenance though the husband sets up a cross

IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

This article treats only of the so-called quasi contracts, or contracts implied in law.[90] Contracts implied in fact are treated elsewhere.[91]

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.—A contract implied in law is an obligation which grows out of certain relations between persons, whereby they become bound to each other without regard to their consent, by duties similar to those arising from contract.[92] It is in fact not a true contract and differs from a contract in that there is no concurrence of agreement and obligation. But by reason of the fact that the law imposes an obligation and permits it to be enforced by remedies applicable to contracts, it is commonly called a contract implied in law.[93]

84. Cupples v. Cupples [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1056. An award of $125.00 counsel fees and temporary alimony of $25 a month, in an action for separate maintenance, was not an abuse of discretion where defendant testified that he earned $95 a month and had property worth $3,000.00 and there was other evidence that its value was greater. 93. Hammon, Cont. 23. A quasi contract is not an implied contract within the meaning of the Municipal Court Act of New York, Laws 1902, p. 1487, c. 580, tit. 1, § 1, subd. 1. Pache v. Oppenheim, 84 N. Y. Supp. 926.

Note. The doctrine of contracts implied as a fact, that is, that a real contract may have existed though not declared in express terms, is limited by the following propositions:

(a) None will be implied where the conduct of the parties does not show an actual agreement;

(b) nor where the matter in question is fully covered by an express contract;

(c) nor where the law requires a contract upon the subject to be in writing.

Thus there is no implied agreement to pay for benefits conferred without knowledge or consent or where the parties stand in such relations, like that of parent and child, as that a gratuity may have been expected. These rules are rebuttable presumptions of fact. Furthermore if the transaction amounts to a tort no contract can from the nature of things be inferred.

The existence of an express contract precludes any supposition that the parties made a different unexpressed agreement relating to the same matter. Again when the law makes an agreement void because not in writing it will not imply an unwritten agreement to take the place of the void one.

Neither the law of actual agreement nor the existence of an express contract, nor the invalidity of a contract because unwritten will prevent the "implication in law" of an obligation in favor of one who confers benefits upon another.

A contract implied in fact is a real contract based on assent, while one implied in law is an obligation regardless of assent. Hammon, Cont. §§ 53, 57, wherein the subject is fully discussed and the cases collected.

§ 2. Work and labor or services and materials furnished.—A contract implied in law will arise to pay for work and labor done or materials furnished at the request of another,[94] or by his permission,[95] under circumstances warranting an expectation to receive payment therefor. But not for work done in an inferior manner,[96] nor for materials furnished under circumstances not constituting a sale,[97] nor for benefits conferred upon the United States without its authority.[98] The fact that one forbears from asserting his claim for services rendered in the expectation that they would be paid for does not prevent him from suing therefor.[99]

Obligation of a husband[1] or parent[2] for necessaries furnishes another instance of an implied contract.

Services rendered without a request, and under circumstances not showing an intention to receive pay therefor, do not raise an implied promise for their payment.[3] Whether services rendered were intended to be gratuitous is a question for the jury.[4]

W. 1034.

Board and lodging: Under Ky. St. § 2178, an implied contract does not arise to pay for board furnished by one other than the keeper of a tavern or house of private entertainment, in the absence of an understanding to that effect. Hancock v. Hancock's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 664, 69 S. W. 757. Under this statute a claim for keeping her son cannot be recovered against a decedent's estate, in the absence of an agreement to pay or evidence showing the plaintiff to be an innkeeper. Ramsey v. Keith's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 582, 76 S. W. 142. But an implied promise does not arise to pay for board furnished to a relative visiting the plaintiff at his wife's request. Harrison v. McMillan, 109 Tenn. 77.

97. Provisions furnished to back a son engaged with others in a mining venture does not raise an implied promise on the part of the son's associates to pay therefor. Snow v. Mastic, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 165.

98. A contract cannot be implied against the United States for unauthorized changes ordered by an architect though the defendant has been benefited thereby (McLaughlin v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cl. 150), nor from the use of an invention by the subordinates of a chief of engineers who had expressly refused to purchase the patented device (Sprague v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cl. 447).

Smith v. Hobbs [Ga.] 45 S. E. 963.

There is no implied contract on the part

Under express contracts.—Services rendered and materials furnished under an express contract cannot be recovered for on an implied contract,[5] unless they fail to comply with the contract and are accepted and used by the defendant,[6] or unless the contract by mistake fails to contain certain specifications;[7] and except under rules of practice, where the proof fails to establish an express contract.[8] Additional services rendered under an express contract cannot be recovered for on a quantum meruit,[9] unless accepted by the employer.[10]

An implied contract will not result for services rendered and materials furnished under an express contract void in law,[11] though it is otherwise where the

of an owner of property to pay for improvements made thereon without his knowledge or consent by one who entered as a purchaser from the owner's agent to rent only. Topliff v. Shadwell [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1120.

A recovery on a quantum meruit cannot be had for goods sold to a township under a contract not made in conformity with a statute, where the goods can be taken back. Union Nat. Bank v. Franklin School Tp. [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 328. Recovery on a quantum valebat for goods furnished under an invalid contract cannot be had after the contract price is received, on the ground that the goods had increased in price. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. U. S., 191 U. S. 159. But the statement by defendant that "he would pay her for all she had ever done or would do for him" and "would make out a will for her and her children" does not prove an express contract so as to exclude an implied one. Garr v. Cranney, 25 Utah, 193, 70 Pac. 853.

6. Where materials furnished under an express contract fail to comply therewith in a material respect, but are retained and used, recovery therefor may be had on a quantum valebat to the amount of benefit conferred on the purchaser. Manitowoc Steam Boiler Works v. Manitowoc Glue Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 515. But it is held that one cannot recover for services in action to foreclose a lien on materials furnished, upon failure to prove a substantial compliance with his contract, even though the defendant has been benefited by such services. Hawkins v. Chambliss, 116 Ga. 813.

7. One performing work under a contract which by mistake omits certain particulars as to the work, may recover the value of his work as done. Voss v. Schebeck, 25 Ky. L. R. 481, 76 S. W. 21.

But one rendering services in consideration of a devise, void under the statute of frauds, may recover the reasonable value of his services. In re Sheldon's Estate [Wis.] 97 N. W. 524.

Note. Recovery quasi ex contractu on contract offensive to Statute of Frauds: "While a party who has performed his part of an agreement falling within the statute of frauds may not enforce the oral promise of the other party, yet the law allows him to recover as upon an implied promise arising from the benefits received by the other from the part performance. The recovery in this case is quasi ex contractu and it is allowed upon the theory that the defendant has received benefits from the part performance for which he ought in justice to pay. This being the ground of recovery, it follows that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, he must do more than prove that he has suffered damage in consequence of the defendant's breach of the agreement. He must show that the defendant will, unless a recovery is allowed, unjustly enrich himself at the plaintiff's expense. And the measure of recovery is not the contract price, but the value of the benefit conferred upon the defendant by the plaintiff's performance; and this is true, whether the value is less or more than the price."

Defendant in default—Recovery for benefits allowed: "If an oral contract falling within the scope of the statute has been performed by the plaintiff, either in whole or in part, and the defendant refuses to carry out the agreement, the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for such benefits as the defendant has received from the performance, whether by way of money paid to him, or goods delivered to him, or labor or services performed for him, under the oral contract. Thus, payments made by a purchaser in a parol contract for the purchase of land may be recovered back if the vendor refuses or renders himself unable to convey the premises; and a recovery may be had, notwithstanding the purchaser has occupied the land under the contract, or is still in possession of it. The rule allowing a recovery for benefits conferred under an oral contract falling within the statute of frauds, where the defendant refuses to perform the agreement, prevails in favor of a purchaser who has rendered services on the faith of an oral contract to convey real estate, and also in favor of a person who has made improvements on another's land relying upon a verbal promise of a lease, a devise or a conveyance of the premises.

"A vendor, on the other hand, may recover for use and occupation against a purchaser who has been in possession of real estate under an oral agreement for a conveyance, contract is merely unenforceable, as not binding on the other party.[12] Services rendered under a unilateral contract, which therefore cannot be sued on by the one so contracting, raise an implied promise on the part of the person for whom the services are performed to pay therefor.[13]

Under unfinished contract.—An implied contract also arises to pay for services rendered under an express contract, where it is unavoidably terminated and further performance thereby prevented;[14] or where further performance is prevented or excused by a breach of contract by the defendant,[15] and in such case the plaintiff's failure to perform will not be a defense to his action for services rendered,[16] nor can the defendant recover, by way of a counterclaim, damages for delays after the suit was begun.[17] The same rule applies to goods furnished under an express contract.[18] where the purchaser refuses to carry out the contract.

"Upon the same principle, a plaintiff who has rendered services under an oral contract not to be performed within a year may recover the value of the services so rendered, if the defendant refuses to perform the contract."

Defendant not in default—Recovery not allowed: "Either party being at liberty to perform an oral contract falling within the statute of frauds, and it not being the policy of the statute to discourage the performance of such contracts, it is generally held that there can be no recovery against a defendant not in default for benefits received by him from the plaintiff's part performance of the contract. To justify a recovery, the promisor must refuse to perform. If he stands ready to keep his oral promise, the other party cannot recover as upon an implied contract to pay for the benefits received. Accordingly, money paid under an oral agreement cannot be recovered back merely because the agreement is within the statute of frauds, and hence unenforceable. A purchaser, for instance, cannot recover back a deposit paid on an oral agreement for the sale of real estate, if the vendor is able, ready, and willing to complete the contract. Not only may the one party keep money actually paid to him by another, but, if money is delivered to a third person, to pay over to him upon the oral agreement he may recover it as money received to his use.

"For the same reason, a vendor who has refused to execute a conveyance of real estate cannot recover for use and occupation against a purchaser who has occupied the same under an oral agreement for the purchase thereof, if the purchaser is able and willing to perform the contract.

"Again, one who has paid money or rendered services under an oral contract not to be performed within a year, and who refuses to perform further, cannot recover for the benefit conferred on the defendant, if the latter is not in default. To justify a recovery for services rendered under an informal agreement within the statute of frauds, the plaintiff must have been willing to carry out the agreement in full. If he refuses to go on with the work, he cannot recover for what he did as upon an implied contract.

"Even in those jurisdictions where a noncompliance with the statute of frauds renders the contract, not voidable, but void, it would, in reason, seem that the plaintiff should not be allowed to recover against a defendant not in default; yet the contrary has been held." 18. Where a contract for the sale and delivery of fruit is broken by the purchaser, the seller may rescind the contract and recover for fruit delivered. Minaker v. Cali-

Though contrary to the rule in some cases,[19] it is held in some jurisdictions that where one abandons or fails to comply with his contract of employment after part performance, without a justifiable cause, he may recover on a quantum meruit the value of his services rendered, less any damage sustained by the employer by reason of such breach of contract.[20] But the plaintiff must show that the work done and materials furnished were beneficial to the defendant and were accepted by him.[21]

Services by member of family.—Where services are rendered between persons occupying the family relation, and living together as one household, the presumption is that the services are intended to be gratuitous, and in order to recover therefor one must rebut this presumption by showing an express or implied agreement for compensation;[22] but this does not apply to persons not living together as one household, though members of the same family and though living in the same house.[23] This rule is true although there has been a request and promise to pay where the circumstances negative an intention to receive pay.[24] But in order that such relation may be set up as a defense it must be specially pleaded.[25] Whether in a given case services rendered by one member of a family for another were intended to be gratuitous or on an implied contract is a question for the jury.[26]

Amount of recovery.—If the circumstances of the case show that the work was to be done for a certain price, that would be the amount of recovery.[27] And where one continues to render services after the expiration of a contract of employment, without a new agreement, it is presumed to be at the original rate of compensation.[28] But in the absence of such circumstances, the one doing the work could recover only the reasonable value of his services.[29] It is inadmissible

Voluntary payments.—An implied contract does not arise in favor of one voluntarily paying money for another without the latter's request,[45] or on an invalid claim with a full knowledge of all the facts.[46] Money paid for another, which the latter was under no obligation to pay, does not raise an implied contract for its repayment.[47]

By mistake.—Money paid under a mistake of fact raises an implied contract for its repayment,[48] but, in the absence of fraud, not when paid under mistake of law,[49] unless the payment is for matters which have already been paid for.[50]

On contract subsequently broken.—Where money is paid under a contract which is subsequently broken or rescinded by the defendant, the law implies a promise to refund it.[51] And the fact that the contract was ultra vires or void under the statute of frauds is no defense in such a case, for money expended before the contract is repudiated.[52]

Note. Recovery of money paid or property delivered under illegal agreements: "As a rule, money paid or property delivered under an unlawful agreement may not be recovered back, either at law or in equity. In other words, where an agreement has been executed, though upon an illegal consideration or for an unlawful purpose, neither party may recover back what he has parted with in carrying the compact into effect. This, as has been said, is an application of the maxim, In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis et possidentis. To illustrate: If a man pays money or delivers property under an agreement entered into on Sunday in violation of law, he cannot recover it back; and the same is true of property pledged to secure the payment of an illegal demand, and of money lent to be used in an unlawful manner. Money lent to make or to pay bets might be recovered at common law; but in those jurisdictions where a wager is illegal, money lent to a man in order to enable him to make a wager cannot be recovered; and the same is true as to recovering back money placed in the hands of a broker for unlawful speculation, and used by him therein. Money paid or property delivered under a wager may usually be recovered back by virtue of statute, but, in the absence of statute, it cannot be recovered back in those jurisdictions where a wager is illegal. In several states, if a greater rate of interest is paid than is allowed by law, the debtor may recover it back or set it off against the principal debt and, in a few states, by way of penalty, the creditor is subjected to liability for two or three times the sum exacted by him in excess of the legal rate. The rule precluding a recovery of money or property parted with under an illegal agreement applies also where the consideration for the payment or delivery has been performed only in part, and not in toto. Thus, if A. pays $100 to B. on the latter's promise to murder C. and D., A. cannot recover back the payment after B. has murdered C., although he has not murdered D."

Locus poenitentiae. "If a party to an illegal agreement repents of his unlawful design before it is carried into effect, the law allows him to rescind the agreement, and recover back whatever he has paid or delivered under it. The period during which an unlawful agreement remains executory is accordingly termed 'locus poenitentiae.' This right of rescission is allowed mainly for the purpose of encouraging the abandonment of illegal designs. However, the repentant party gets the direct benefit of it. A common illustration of the rule occurs in the case of agency. If an agent receives money to be paid out for an unlawful purpose, the principal may recover it back at any time before it is so expended. Upon this principle, money placed in the hands of a person as stakeholder to abide the event of a wager is recoverable from the stakeholder either before or after the determination of the wager, and even after the money has been paid to the winner, if the authority to pay was withdrawn by the plaintiff before payment, and in this latter event, if the loser does not choose to hold the stakeholder, he may recover the money from the winner. However, as we have seen in another connection, if the party delivering the goods or paying the money waits until the illegal purpose is accomplished, so that the transaction becomes executed, he cannot recover."

Par delictum. "All that has been said in reference to the inability of a man to obtain relief from an illegal agreement to which he is a party presupposes a guilty party. It may happen, however, that only one of the parties to an agreement entertains an unlawful intent. In this case, the innocent party may recover what he has parted with upon the faith of the agreement before he learned of the illegality. Again, the law admits degrees of guilt, and, even though both parties contemplated an unlawful act, yet, under some circumstances, if one is more excusable than the other, he may recover what he has paid or delivered in performing the illegal agreement. The rule may be stated thus: Where the parties to an illegal agreement are not in pari delicto, and where public policy is considered as advanced by allowing either, or at least the more excusable, to sue for relief against the transaction, relief is given him, either at law or in equity, by way of allowing him to recover back money or property paid or delivered pursuant to the terms of the agreement; and this is true, even though the agreement is fully executed. Accordingly, if a man is induced to enter into an agreement by fraud or imposition, or by coercion, whether by duress, oppression, threats, or undue influence, he may avoid it, and recover what he has conveyed or delivered or paid thereunder, even though the object of the agreement is illegal. Thus, if a creditor refuses to assent to a composition unless the debtor secretly and in fraud of the other creditors pays him an additional sum, which is done, the debtor may recover back the extra payment as being unlawful and brought about by compulsion. The parties are not regarded as being in pari delicto where the illegality consists in a violation of a statute which was intended for the constraint of one party only, or for the protection of the other. Thus, a bank issuing bills contrary to law might be compelled to reimburse the holder in an action for money received, even though the bills were void, if the receiving of the bills was not expressly prohibited. The bank is deemed more guilty than the members of the community who receive the unlawful currency. The latter are regarded

Money paid under duress may be recovered back upon an implied promise for its repayment;[55] but not where he voluntarily pays without protest;[56] and even where one pays under protest, if he has other means of immediate relief at hand than by making payment, he cannot recover.[57] The duress, however, must be illegal, unjust, or oppressive.[58] It is not duress to institute or threaten to institute civil suits, or take proceedings in court, or for any person to declare that he intends to use the courts wherein to insist upon what he believes to be his legal rights.[59]

Money lent.—Where one lends money to or for another, in the absence of an express contract, there is an implied contract on such other to repay it,[60] as where it was loaned through the agency of another.[61] Money loaned under a mistake of fact may be recovered,[62] but not where the mistake is one of law.[63]

§ 4. Use and occupation.—One may also be held on an implied contract for using and occupying another's property; but in order that an action of assumpsit may be maintained in such case, the relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to have existed between the parties at the time.[64] It will not lie against one in possession claiming under an adverse title;[65] nor against one entering under an executory contract to purchase;[66] nor against a mere trespasser;[67] but a former tenant is not liable for use and occupation for leaving property on the premises, where he plainly abandons such property.[68] The measure of recovery for use and occupation is the reasonable value of the use of the land, not the amount of profit derived therefrom.[69]

may elect to waive the tort and treat it as an implied contract on which he may sue to recover the value of that which has been taken or used.[70] One may waive the tort and sue on an implied contract, where another has obtained his money through fraud,[71] or has converted[72] or stolen or embezzled his property.[73]

§ 6. Remedies and procedure.—An implied contract is properly enforced by an action of general assumpsit[74] for money had and received,[75] or for money paid for the defendant's use;[76] though in some cases a petition in the form of a common count may be maintained.[77] In states having Code procedure, the remedy for money had and received or money paid, depends upon the statutes.[78]

In an action of assumpsit for money had and received, the origin and character of the fund must be pleaded.[79] But it is unnecessary in an action on the common counts to allege that the defendant promised to pay,[80] or that he had converted the property or money.[81] Nonpayment should be alleged.[82] In an action for work and labor, the defense that services were rendered by one as a member of a family must be pleaded.[83] If the action is brought on an express contract, recovery cannot be had on a quantum meruit unless it is pleaded.[84] The fact that

78. In New York money paid on wagers may be recovered in a civil action [Laws 1895, p. 377, c. 570, § 17]. Moulton v. Westchester Racing Ass'n, 84 N. Y. Supp. 871. In suing in assumpsit for fraud and deceit under a statute, the statute or equivalent facts must be pleaded. Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs [Mich.] 95 N. W. 985.

79. Where one suing for money had and received fails to plead its origin and character he cannot claim that it was received under circumstances preventing the defendant from retaining it for services rendered. Dobbs v. Campbell, 66 Kan. 805, 72 Pac. 273.

80. It is sufficient to state facts showing the duty, from which the law implies the promise. Boston Clothing Co. v. Garland [Minn.] 97 N. W. 433. An allegation that defendant had received a certain sum of money for the use and benefit of the plaintiff is sufficient. Waite v. Willis, 42 Or. 288, 70 Pac. 1034. It is no defense to an action for the price of goods sold and delivered that the defendant did not promise or agree to pay therefor. Guenther v. American Steel Hoop Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 795, 76 S. W. 419.

81. The action will lie whether or not trover could be maintained. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138.

Recovery may be had for services as on implied contract though declaration purports to be on a contract attached which in reality is only an account or memorandum. Noyes Carriage Co. v. Robbins [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 959. Election to rely on count based on disaffirmance and recovery of quantum meruit may be at close of plaintiff, in an action on a quantum meruit, in his replication admits the existence of a written contract, but denies that it contains the entire agreement, or that defendant had performed his part of the contract, and alleges a separate contract for extra compensation, does not entitle the defendant to judgment on the pleadings.[85]

An action for services rendered matures upon the completion of the services, and must be brought within the period limited by the statute from that time.[86] In an action for money had and received for a conversion, the statute begins to run from the time the plaintiff has knowledge of the wrongful act.[87]

INCEST.[88]

Statutes declaring the crime must be certain and definite.[89] Consent of the woman is not necessary to make out the crime against the man.[90] But if she willingly submits, though with a different mind from him, she is an accomplice to be corroborated.[91] On trial of the man, the fact that the woman was jointly indicted does not prevent disproof by the state of her consent.[92] Prior acts between the parties may be shown,[93] but not acts of prosecutrix with other men,[94] nor her character for chastity.[95] Where there is positive testimony of the intercourse, an instruction on the law of circumstantial evidence is harmless, though erroneous.[96]

INCOMPETENCY.[97]

§ 1. Mental weakness sufficient to constitute incompetency.—The test of capacity to contract is the possession of sufficient reason and understanding at the time to know the nature of the contract and to appreciate its probable results.[98] Mere weakness of mind or sickness in body,[99] unaccompanied by fraud or undue influence,[1] will not render one incompetent. Old age and physical infirmity merely,[2] or old age, and weakness of mind resulting from trouble,[3] or from physical weakness, debility or disease of body,[4] will not amount to incom-

4. Meyer v. Jacobs, 123 Fed. 900. That one making a deed was subject to spells of deafness and dizziness due to old age is insufficient to show incompetency where it

petency to contract, if sufficient intelligence remains to comprehend the transaction and its probable effect;[5] or old age with mere failure of memory,[6] or accompanied by illiteracy and unfamiliarity with English and terms used in conveyances.[7] Mental incapacity to set aside a conveyance need not amount to idiocy or insanity; a mental deficiency precluding deliberate judgment being sufficient.[8]

One who uses intoxicants habitually and excessively may still contract and convey property, unless actual intoxication had dethroned reason or impaired understanding so that he was mentally unsound at the time of the act;[9] but if his condition was verging on delirium tremens when he executed a deed, he is incompetent.[10]

Evidence.[11]—Opinions of nonexpert witnesses, who have been in close relations with one who has made a contract, may be given as to his competency to contract.[12] The alleged incompetent's declarations as to why he so acted[13] and other statements by him at the time of the transaction in question are admissible.[14] Proof of old age and ill health, and of disregard of his children's interests, will not show mental incapacity of a grantor so as to shift the burden to the grantee.[15]

§ 2. Effect of incompetency on contracts.—The deed or gift of an insane person who has never been adjudged insane is voidable, and is in full force until such election is exercised by him,[16] or possibly by his executor after his death.[17] Ratification on return of reason makes the deed good.[18] Intoxication at time of contract, though caused by the other party, renders the contract voidable, not void.[19]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure.—On making a deed after restoration to sanity, the grantee therein may sue to avoid the one made while insane.[20] A void deed will not be set aside in equity for insanity of the grantor, there being a remedy at law.[21] One seeking to avoid a contract for mental incapacity must prove it.[22] One claiming under a deed made by an adjudged lunatic must show that the instrument was made during a lucid interval.[23] A finding of incompetency suffices if substantially like a statute defining it.[24]

INDECENCY, LEWDNESS, AND OBSCENITY.[25]

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation, as a statutory offense, is not shown by a single act, or occasional acts, but by such cohabitation as that of husband and wife. The relation of master and servant may co-exist with such cohabitation.[26] In an indictment for the statutory crime of taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child under the age of consent, it is not necessary to allege the particular acts, though it should be alleged that such acts do not amount to a rape, or an assault or attempt to commit a rape.[27]

Using obscene or indecent "language"[28] has been held to exclude written communications.[29] "Woman" is equivalent to "female" in averring the utterance in her presence.[30] In such a prosecution, a witness may give his opinion whether the females could have heard the language,[31] and may state the language used, though he cannot say whether it was abusive and insulting.[32]

Mailing obscene letters.—Deposit in the mails of a sealed letter containing matter offensive to a sense of chastity and calculated to excite impure thoughts in the mind of the addressee is an offense, if not written in proper exercise of professional duty or legitimate calling, rendering such language necessary.[33] Mailing a private sealed letter, containing indecent charges against the writer's mother, to her, is not the offense of mailing a letter containing obscene, lewd and lascivious matter; the letter sent must tend to corrupt the morals of the addressee, there being no presumption that it is intended for, or will be read by, others.[34] An indictment for mailing an obscene letter, setting it out and showing an address, need not allege its inclosure in an addressed envelope or wrapper.[35]

Public indecency and lewdness.—A "notorious act of public indecency" must be committed when and where it can be seen by more than one person.[36] An indictment for willful and lewd exposure must charge that it was "lewdly" made.[37] Omission of statutory words "tending to debauch the morals" in an accusation for a notorious act of public indecency cannot be reached by an oral motion to quash.[38] Instructions as to willful lewd exposure as a statutory offense must be confined to acts both willful and lewd.[39] The indecent exposure being shown on trial to have been willful, evidence of previous similar acts is inadmissible.[40]

36. An indictment failing to so charge

INDEMNITY.

§ 1. Definition and distinctions.—Indemnity may be defined as a contract to save harmless whereby one party agrees to secure another against an anticipated loss or damage.[1] Where the indemnity is given against a class of casualties or for protection of specific property, it is generally called insurance.[2] Indemnity is to protect the promisee from liability for loss arising out of the act of another to him or from his acts to a third person while guaranty or suretyship is to protect the promisee from loss on the liability of another to him.[3] It is an independent and not a collateral undertaking, and so evidence of the principal contract against loss on which the promisee was indemnified may be immaterial.[4] A contract of indemnity is distinguished from a contract to pay a certain sum of money or to do a certain act in that the cause of action does not arise on default, but when the person indemnified against is damaged.[5] Courts are now inclined to construe bonds and contracts as contracts of indemnity only, and will attach more importance to the general purpose of the contract than the precise form of words employed,[6] or the terms by which the parties refer to it,[7] and so a promise to "pay for" goods loaned if they are damaged is regarded as a promise of indemnity and not of purchase.[8] A contract of indemnity is implied in favor of one co-obligor who pays an entire sum for which the other ought in equity to be solely liable.[9] These implied contracts will be treated later under the title Suretyship.[10]

§ 2. The contract—Requisites and validity. A. Oral or written.—In nearly all states a contract of indemnity is not within the statute of frauds and need not be in writing,[11] it being generally referred to as "an original promise."[12] should be quashed on demurrer [Pen. Code, § 390]. Lockhart v. State, 116 Ga. 557. Sufficiency of evidence of notorious act of public indecency under Pen. Code, 1895, § 390. Gilmore v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 226.

demnitor must be supported by a good and valuable consideration. A release from foreclosure proceedings,[13] or a mortgage indemnity for further security,[14] or a promise of another,[15] is sufficient consideration to bind the promisor. And where an indemnity bond is issued and delivered to the person indemnified against, and by him delivered to the indemnitee, the indemnitor cannot set up as a defense that there was no consideration to the contract,[16] nor can the promisor set up as a defense that there was no legal obligation on his part to give the indemnity bond.[17]

(§ 2) C. Legality of object.—It is not fraudulent towards co-sureties for a principal before the execution of the contract to stipulate as to separate indemnity with a surety,[18] and it has been held not to be against public policy for a carrier to make a contract with a shipper whereby the latter was to indemnify it against all losses occurring from its negligence or otherwise.[19]

§ 3. Interpretation and effect of contract.—The construction and interpretation of contracts of indemnity is for the court.[20] The court will construe the instrument freely, taking into consideration the positions of the respective parties to determine their intent.[21] Unless the contrary affirmatively appears,[22] it will be presumed that a contractor's promise to indemnify his principal covers only losses arising out of his own or his servant's negligence and not from that of the principal.[23] But in a fidelity bond any ambiguity is to be construed most strongly against the indemnitor.[24] A renewal bond guaranteeing fidelity of employe for following year, where there is a recital that it is subject to the conditions of the first bond, amounts in effect to but one bond with one penalty;[25] but renewals of a surety bond for successive periods cover losses sustained during the current periods only,[26] and the fact that it is stipulated that on the issuance of any subsequent bond all responsibility under the bond first issued should cease operates merely to protect against double responsibility, and does not prevent a recovery for a loss discovered after the expiration of the first bond but within the period insured against.[27] The indemnitor is liable only to the indemnitee and not for losses to those who stand in privity with him;[28] but where the indemnity bond runs to the assignee of the contract indemnified against he may recover.[29] The breach of a contract of indemnity does not arise till loss or damage occurs to the promisee,[30] and generally till the amount of the loss is paid,[31] though in some instances entry of judgment without payment is sufficient to fix the liability.[32] The liability becomes fixed when the final judgment is entered after appeal.[33] The payment must be involuntary.[34] The burden of proving loss is on the person seeking to be indemnified.[35] If the loss is occasioned by the act of a third party, even if so provided in the contract, there is no duty to sue if he is insolvent.[36] Where there is a covenant of indemnity as to quiet possession of land, a cause of action arises only on ejectment and a complaint failing in such an allegation is demurrable,[37] and the surrender of possession before judgment gives rise to no right of action.[38] In the absence of any provision in the contract, the indemnitor is not entitled to any notice to come in and defend;[39] but where by the terms of the contract the indemnitor may come in and defend in the absence of notice, he cannot be held liable.[40] The principal and sureties of an indemnity bond may always defend a suit against the indemnitee on account of which they would have to reimburse him,[41] and even where they do not assume the defense, the judgment or recovery would seem to be conclusive as to them,[42] except where, by the terms of the verdict, the question is still left open,[43] or where it is a collateral judgment which does not involve the same point.[44] Where there is nothing in a contract of indemnity to indicate that the parties intended the contrary, it is presumed that it terminates with the death of a party.[45] Liability on a bond continues for the period of limitations after the expiration of the time for which a bond runs,[46] but it would seem that the loss must not be too remote from the act complained of.[47] The liability may be terminated by a decree of the court, in which case the persons who might be liable are necessary parties.[48]

§ 4. Defenses.—Any material misrepresentation as to the nature of the liability against which the indemnitor holds himself liable, or any variation of the risk, is a complete defense to the contract. These statements are frequently termed and classed as warranties.[49] Thus it is a defense to a policy insuring an employe's fidelity that the employe had duties other than those mentioned in the statement which involved the receipt and expenditure of money;[50] but the statement that the employe had no authority to sign checks is not necessarily false, where the employe had only authority to fill in blank checks.[51] To render statements concerning an employe's habits material, it must be shown what was the nature of the habits referred to.[52] The statements of the person indemnified must appear on the face of the agreement to become warranties,[53] and those made by the employer in support of the employe's application for a fidelity bond are binding upon him.[54] False answers as to an application by the employe to an indemnity company, made with knowledge of the party for whose benefit the bond is required, invalidate it;[55] but a surety is not relieved from liability on the bond of an employe, by a statement of one of the corporate officers that the employe's accounts were correct, where such statement is that of the officer personally and on knowledge and belief, though the auditing committee of the corporation knew of the existence of a mistake.[56] Whether the statements are true is a question for the jury.[57] Where there is an endeavor to show false representations by an officer of insured as to the qualifications of an employe, he cannot be asked as to the employe's failure to make a certain report, unless the duty to make such report is established.[58] Where in the application for an indemnity bond there is a statement that the insured will use certain checks to audit the employe's accounts or require certain reports, a failure to comply is a complete defense;[59] but where the insurer knows of the alteration of the risk and continues with the policy, it is estopped to set up the defense which it is deemed to have waived,[60] and so where one is indemnified against loss by failure of a contractor, the indemnitor is not discharged when he knew of an unauthorized change in the contract and did not notify the indemnitee.[61] In Kentucky, by statute, no representation of warranty made in application for insurance policy defeats the same, unless made with the actual intent to deceive or unless it increases the risk. This applies to fidelity bonds,[62] but this does not alter the effect of representations which are not material made with intention of deceiving,[63] and it is a question for the jury as to whether at the time of the execution of the policy the insurer knew the employe was short in his accounts,[64] or was engaged in hazardous speculation.[65] The receipt of renewal premiums, with the knowledge that the employe whose fidelity is insured has not signed the bond, is a waiver of such signature,[66] nor does the handing over to the employe of such bond for delivery to the insured give him any authority to waive such signature;[67] but the insurer cannot set up as a defense that the local agent had not signed at the time of the liability where he had previously promised to sign.[68] If a master discovers any act of dishonesty on part of the employe, his failure to notify the indemnitor immediately is a good defense to its liability.[69] But a short delay in notifying a surety company of an employe's wrongdoing is not, as a matter of law, a violation of a condition for immediate notice,[70] and the necessity of this notice may be waived by implication,[71] and so may be the failure to perform any condition subsequent to the contract;[72] but in the absence of waiver, these conditions will be rigidly enforced.[73] Where the promise is to save harmless from actions a long delay in giving notice does not conclusively amount to a discharge of the indemnitor.[74] The fact that a responsible third party is responsible to the indemnitee for the loss caused by the person indemnified against is no defense to the indemnitor,[75] nor is the giving of security by the wrongdoer to cover a loss arising prior to the contract of indemnity.[76] The statute of limitations runs in favor of the promisor from the time of the breach, which is when the indemnitee suffers damage,[77] and not from the happening of the event against which he promised to hold the promisee harmless,[78] or in some jurisdictions from the time of final judgment.[79]

§ 5. Measure of recovery.—After breach of a contract of indemnity, the promisee can recover damages equal to the amount of the loss he has sustained,[80] together with interest from time of payment thereof.[81] The amount of judgment with costs may be recovered,[82] whether or not an opportunity was given to defend;[83] but not where the judgment is obtained by the negligence of the indemnitee.[84] Whether he may recover his attorney's fees depends upon the intent of the parties as expressed by the contract.[85] That an attorney indemnified joins with others does not as a matter of law give him right to attorney's fees,[86] and there would seem to be no question of this liability when the indemnitor fails to defend when he has had due notice of the suit,[87] especially where he has promised to assume the defense.[88] Unless made in bad faith,[89] on due notice the indemnitor is bound by the settlement of any liability made by the indemnitee.[90] Where the indemnitor has control of the defense, a judgment against the indemnitee is conclusive and binds him absolutely as to the amount,[91] and he is liable for the costs in case he appeals.[92] The same presumption is true of a default judgment where the indemnitor has been notified but fails to defend;[93] but if the indemnitor refuses to defend, it is presumptive evidence against him and the burden is on him to rebut.[94] Declarations of an employe made after an alleged embezzlement are not binding upon the insurer;[95] but those of the indemnitee would seem to be binding as to the amount of liability of the indemnitor,[96] and generally the judgment roll in the principal action is admissible in evidence in an action brought by the indemnitor against the indemnitee.[97] In an action on a fidelity insurance bond, the complaint need not set out the several items of loss and the evidence in support, where it is alleged that a statement and proof of the losses have been furnished the defendant.[98]

§ 6. Securities by way of indemnity.—Where there has been a deposit of money to indemnify the surety of a bond in case loss should occur, there can be no recovery of this money till the expiration of the statutory period, after which any liability may arise on the bond.[99]

An independent contractor as distinguished from a servant undertakes to perform work according to his own discretion and control, being answerable, generally speaking, only for the result.[1] He may be such though hired by the day.[2]

The employer of an independent contractor is liable for the acts of the contractor or servants only when some duty of the employer to afford protection against such act exists,[3] as where he exercises a direction or control,[4] or furnishes defective plans[5] or facilities.[6]

INDIANS.

§ 1. Who are Indians and what is their legal status.—Indians include all persons of full Indian blood, or of the half or mixed blood living with their tribe on the reservation,[7] and congress may maintain its jurisdiction over persons of Indian descent even after they have left the reservation and are living with whites and holding lands in severalty.[8] The status of Indians is that of members of "domestic dependent nations," and they are said to be "in a state of tutelage," and are often described as "wards of the nation."[9]

§ 2. Federal and state government of Indians and their habitat.—Where Indians have taken lands in severalty and adopt the habits of civilized life, they are subject to the criminal laws of the state in which they reside, whether the crime is committed on the reservation or not,[10] and the Federal criminal law no longer applies.[11] State or Indian courts will not take judicial notice of the statutes of Indian nations, and in the absence of their being pleaded, the law will be presumed to be that of the forum.[12]

§ 3. Tribal government subject to Federal dominion.—The power of congress to legislate concerning Indians is absolute,[13] and is superior to any pre-existing treaty[14] or tribal constitution,[15] or laws,[16] and congress can put into effect as laws the code of a neighboring state;[17] but a treaty with an Indian nation takes precedence over prior acts of congress.[18] Such legislation is void if it conflicts with the Federal constitution.[19] Courts will not consider the question of whether a treaty with Indians was executed under duress.[20] Congress may prescribe who are members of tribes or Indian nations, though this differs from the existing laws of the tribe.[21]

§ 4. Indian lands and properties.—Except among the five civilized nations, the fee to the Indian lands is in the United States, but the right of possession is in the individual Indians,[22] and is such an interest in land as to be within the statute of frauds;[23] but the United States has such interest in the land allotted to Indians as to authorize it to maintain a bill in equity to restrain the collection of an invalid tax.[24] In New York, the state legislature may authorize the individual Indians to acquire the fee of their holdings.[25] Congress may authorize the Secretary of Interior to lease oil or mineral lands for the benefit of the tribes residing thereon, even when the fee is owned by the tribe.[26] Under the Dawes Act, certain tracts of Indian lands are allotted to the individual members of the tribes. The United States holds the fee in trust for twenty-five years and then issues a patent to the allottee or his heirs. The act applies to all Indians of mixed blood living on the reservations with their tribes,[27] and it is immaterial whether father or mother was an Indian;[28] but a full blood temporarily absent does not forfeit his right to an allotment.[29] Pending the issuance of the patent, the lands are not alienable and all leases thereof must be approved by the secretary of the interior. No rights are acquired under a lease not so approved,[30] nor by an unauthorized sub-tenant of an approved lessee.[31] In a suit for possession by an Indian under a void lease, the tenant cannot deny the landlord's title,[32] but the Indian lessor is not so estopped as to his lessee.[33] The title of the allottee is that of the equitable owner and descends according to the law of the state in which the land is situated,[34] or if in the Indian Territory, according to the law then in force,[35] and the heirs cannot be divested of their rights by a will executed by the allottee.[36] As the fee of land allotted under the Dawes Act remains in the United States, the land is not subject to state or local taxation.[37] By the terms of the act in case any Indian regards himself aggrieved by the allotment, he may bring an action in circuit court. This statute operates as an act of the United States, giving its consent to be sued and it is bound thereby,[38] and in these cases the court is not bound on questions of either law or fact by prior decisions of the interior department.[39] Where half breed script is issued, it is by its terms not assignable, but an irrevocable power of attorney to locate land may be granted, and the land once located may be conveyed.[40] Under the Curtis Act[41] it was provided that all leases of Indian lands among the five civilized nations, where the lessee was not an Indian citizen by birth or adoption, should terminate July 1, 1900, and where the tenant had made valuable improvements, he should either be compensated therefor or after an appraisement of the improvements and the rental value of the land, he should continue in possession

40. Buffalo Land & Exploration Co. v Strong [Minn.] 97 N. W. 575.
41. Act of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. 501).

till the value of the accrued rental equaled the value of the improvements, and on tender of the value of the improvements, the right of the lessee to the land instantly terminated.[42] An Indian court has the power to decree that a lease shall terminate at a certain future date when the appraised value of the improvements shall equal the accumulated rents.[43] The Curtis Act in no way affects the title of United States citizens who obtained conveyances of town lots prior to its passage.[44] While the sale of land in the Indian Territory to others than Indians is prohibited, this does not render a mortgage thereof void, but on foreclosure the land must be sold to an Indian.[45] The provision, that after executions of other than Indian courts are returned nulla bona execution may be had against the improvements on Indian land, does not apply to Indians by blood.[46] Where, prior to the Curtis Act, there was a provision that the value of improvements on Indian lands should be paid for if the land is put in the hands of a receiver and the plaintiff could establish no title, the money was turned back to the intruder.[47] Possession may be recovered by suit by the Indian nation in which the land was located, and if the governor or chief failed to bring suit on request, any individual citizen could sue, and while citizenship is a prerequisite to suit, it need not be alleged in the complaint.[48] It was not the intention of congress under this act that a white man could hold the land till he was reimbursed for his improvements,[49] but that all such leases were void, and in the absence of valuable improvements should terminate at the time set,[50] and a white claiming under a deed or anything else than a lease could be ousted at any time.[51] The Indian grantee or lessee of a white purchaser or lessee acquired no rights, since the first deed or grant was void.[52] Where an action is brought under this act for the possession of leased land by an individual Indian citizen, there must be an allegation that the governor and chiefs failed to sue;[53] but an allegation that a request was made is unnecessary.[54] When a suit is brought in which any of the five nations are interested, both the Curtis Act and the Atoka Agreement provide that that nation shall be made a party. But in an action for unlawful detainer for holding over on a lease, the nation is not a necessary party, for it is merely a matter of contract.[55] So where there is a claimant to land, he may be joined in an action of ejectment before the state court.[56] Where an Indian nation attempts to enjoin the secretary of interior from executing a lease of their lands, the proposed lessees are not necessary parties.[57]

§ 5. Rights and liabilities of other persons in Indian country dealing with Indians.—Every one in the Indian country not a member of a tribe is subject to the rules of the Secretary of the Interior.[58] Under an act of congress[59] an Indian agent may remove from the Indian country any person not an Indian by birth or adoption,[60] though this has been modified as to persons in lawful possession of land under lease;[61] but this does not invest the agent with judicial power to determine the lawfulness of the possession.[62] The penalty of a thousand dollar fine for returning after once removed is not in the nature of a criminal prosecution, but a penal sum to be recovered in a civil action.[63] By the Indian Intercourse Act,[64] a citizen of the United States may recover from the government for losses caused by Indian depredations off the reservations by Indians with whom the United States was then at peace. The claimant must be a citizen of the United States,[65] and this only includes those portions of the United States to which it specially referred, or to which it has since been extended.[66] It includes depredations by all Indians who are wards of the United States, even where they are temporarily present in Mexico and make incursions from there.[67] Where the United States by treaty promises to compensate Indian tribes for the destruction of their property on reservations by white men, this does not permit recovery by individuals for their individual losses.[68]

§ 6. Crimes and offenses by or relating to Indians.—Under the Dawes Act, Indians who have adopted the habits of civilized life and have been allotted land in severalty become subject to the civil and criminal laws of the state in which they reside, and may be punished in state courts for crimes committed on a reservation,[69] and they are no longer subject to the Federal law.[70] They are still Indians within the meaning of the act which prohibits the sale of liquor to Indians;[71] but the statute making it a felony to assault with deadly weapons any person authorized to make seizures of contraband goods applies to revenue officers and not to Indian agents searching for liquor.[72] An act of congress provides that where a citizen of the five civilized nations is charged with a crime in a court of one of the nations, he may file an affidavit of prejudice and have the cause removed to the Federal courts. His citizenship must be proved by evidence other than his affidavit.[73] Indians gathering in communities without attempting to incorporate do not come under the clause of the Curtis Act which makes it a penal offense to plat townsites in the Indian Territory.[74]

Scope of topic.—This topic includes general criminal procedure from indictment to final judgment. The substantive law of crimes[75] and procedure before indictment[76] are elsewhere treated, and matters of procedure peculiar to particular crimes are treated under the titles of such crimes.

§ 1. Limitation of time to institute.[77]—Limitations imposed by statute[78] bar prosecutions not commenced within the time limited.[79] A crime consisting in receiving money survives from the last payment and not from the date of a writing of indebtedness, itself unlawful.[80]

§ 2. Jurisdiction.—Statutes usually restrict the jurisdiction of inferior courts with reference to the grade of the offense or the extent of the penalty,[81] and to certain localities.[82] If the court has jurisdiction of the offense charged it does not lose jurisdiction because the proof shows only a lesser included offense.[83] Only the state or nation where a crime was committed has jurisdiction to punish the same,[84] but murder may be prosecuted where the mortal wound was given.[85] An offense relating to certain premises is of that location and not the violator's habitation.[86] Offenses on Federal territory or against Federal laws[87] are within the jurisdiction

85. Though death occurred in another state. Davis v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 822.
86. State v. Marmouget [La.] 34 So. 408.
87. Under the Federal constitution either consent to a Federal purchase or an express cession of jurisdiction is operative. U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. 518. Locks and dams acquired by consent are Federal though ac-of Federal courts, though there may be a concurrent jurisdiction,[88] and Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of offenses by Indians.[89] A warrant is not essential to jurisdiction of the person.[90] Where jurisdiction is concurrent, that court, which having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and in good faith begins the prosecution, obtains jurisdiction.[91]

Transfer to a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction is often provided for by statute.[92] A case remitted from the Federal district to the next "session" of the circuit means the next sitting (even in the same term) and not the next term.[93] Though change of venue is mandatory, denial does not divest jurisdiction,[94] nor does continuance by consent after order for trial.[95]

§ 3. Place of prosecution and change of venue.—Prosecution may be had in the county in which the offense is consummated,[96] or in the county where it was initiated, if a complete offense was there committed.[97] Larceny may be prosecuted in a county to which the stolen property was taken by the thief.[98] A statute allowing prosecution to be had in a county for offenses within 400 yards of its boundary applies, though the boundary is a river.[99]

Change of venue.—In some jurisdictions change of venue is of right on filing the prescribed affidavit,[1] in others the question of fact is in the discretion of the court.[2] On a prerogative writ of certiorari to remove the record and for a change quisition preceded consent by the state. Id.

88. The offense of extortion by threat to prosecute under federal revenue law may be punished as a violation of a state law, though it also offends against U. S. Rev. St. § 5484; section 5328 saving concurrent state jurisdiction. Sexton v. Cal., 189 U. S. 319, 47 Law. Ed. 833. Perjury in naturalization proceedings in state courts is a state crime and by statute is also a Federal crime [U. S. Rev. St. 1875, § 5395]. The court is a state court though acting under Federal laws. U. S. v. Severino, 125 Fed. 949.

89. Act Cong. Mch. 3, 1885, c. 341, § 9 (23 Stat. 385), conferring exclusive jurisdiction on United States courts for crimes committed by Indians on Indian reservations, refers only to Indians sustaining tribal relations, and does not deprive state courts of jurisdiction where the tribal relation has never been sustained or has been severed. State v. Howard [Wash.] 74 Pac. 382. The jurisdiction of a state court to try an Indian who had not severed his tribal relation for a crime committed on an Indian reservation may be questioned for the first time on appeal. Id.

App.] 73 S. W. 968) and objection that the transfer was made before the beginning of the term of the district court must be taken before the trial (Palmer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 206) and is cured by a subsequent order (Id.). The affidavit of defendant that he is a member of the Chickasaw tribe is not conclusive but he must submit proof thereof. Bruner v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 244. In Texas a justice of the peace has no authority to transfer to the county court a case in which he has authority to sit as a trial court. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 611, a justice of the peace before whom a prosecution for unlawfully catching fish is instituted under L. 1901, p. 21, c. 18, cannot transfer it to the county court. Gill v. of venue, the supreme court will follow its own judgment on the facts.[3] Bias of the judge[4] and existence of local prejudice[5] are the principal grounds. The venue may be changed as to one joint defendant alone.[6] The motion may be oral in New Mexico.[7] It must be promptly made.[8] Refusal to direct an issue of subpoenas to witnesses to testify on a motion for a change of venue is not an abuse of discretion.[9] The papers transferred should be certified,[10] but defects in the certificate are not jurisdictional.[11] The change is not operative until the papers and the prisoner have been transferred,[12] but when made divests the court of jurisdiction, not only of the indictment transferred, but of a subsequent one for the same offense.[13] Where a cause is improperly returned to the original court by the court to which it was transferred, it may be tried in the former court if no objection is made.[14]

§ 4. Indictment and information. A. Necessity of indictment.—Prosecution by information, for all or nearly all offenses, has by statute in many states quite superseded indictments. In such states as still retain the form of procedure by indictment, it is as a rule only infamous crimes or felonies that are necessarily so prosecuted,[15] the right to prosecution by indictment not extending to misdemeanors.[16] Under the constitution of Missouri, however, indictment and information are concurrent remedies for felony,[17] and in New York violations of the liquor tax law, from the penalties imposed, partake of the nature of felonies and should be prosecuted by indictment.[18] One in custody under an information is not entitled to have the grand jury inquire into his case.[19]

5. A change of venue is not warranted by the fact that crime is rampant at the place of the crime, and that the newspapers were laden with sensational reports of sensational crimes, whereby the public mind was so inflamed that one charged with a heinous crime could not obtain justice. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. It is not reversible error to refuse a change of venue for prejudice of the inhabitants of the county, based on newspaper articles where the record does not show that the jurors had read or heard discussed such articles. Pen. Code Mont. § 2051. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. It is not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse a change of venue for prejudice of the inhabitants in the part of a county where the crime was committed, where the prejudice did not extend to the entire county, and a jury is obtained from the regular panel and a special venire. State v. Armstrong [Or.] 73 Pac. 1022. Though all witnesses testify that an impartial jury may be secured, a change of venue should be granted where it is apparent that all concede that an effort would be necessary to secure such a jury on account of frequent trials of the action and the prominence of the race question. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 453. It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse a change of venue where twenty-seven persons testified that prejudice existed against the accused and twenty-two that he could have a fair trial. Connell v. (§ 4) B. Finding and filing and formal requisites. Indictments.—In some states, in the absence of some pressing and adequate necessity, it is improper for the district attorney to send an indictment before the grand jury without a preliminary hearing or the sanction of the court.[20] In Arkansas, where the facts warrant an indictment for a greater degree, the court can before trial suspend proceedings under an indictment for an inferior degree of crime and order the case resubmitted to another grand jury.[21] When an indictment is lost, the prosecution may proceed to trial on a substituted copy, if exact, and the proof of it conclusive;[22] but there must be a hearing at which defendant is represented.[23] Although one convicted of manslaughter on indictment for murder and granted a new trial cannot be convicted of a higher degree, no new information is necessary.[24] It is often required that the name of the prosecutor be endorsed,[25] or that the evidence be returned with the indictment.[26]

Commencement "In the name and by authority of the state" is sufficient.[27] A count failing to conclude against the peace and dignity of the state is bad,[28] but absence of other formal words has been dispensed with.[29] An averment in the charging part that the grand jurors of the "county of Lyon" accuse defendant is equivalent to "Lyon county," the words used in the statute creating the county.[30]

The pendency of another indictment for the same offense,[31] or for another offense growing out of the same acts, cannot be pleaded either in abatement or in bar of the indictment upon which the case was tried;[32] but the court will in its discretion quash one of them.[33]

Failure to endorse the names of all the witnesses is ground for a motion to set aside.[34] An indictment need not be signed by the foreman of the grand jury.[35] An indictment is not invalidated by an irregularity of the county board in designating the place of holding court.[36] Indictments returned by a grand jury after the expiration of the term to which it was summoned are not void.[37] An indictment returned against a negro by a grand jury from which negroes were excluded

The failure of the clerk to properly note the presentation and filing of the indictment may be corrected by nunc pro tunc order.[40]

Informations.—The facts necessary to authorize the filing of an information need not be set up in the information itself.[41] It is not necessary that an information filed in place of one lost shall be a copy of the lost one.[42]

Information in courts of record may be filed only by the proper prosecuting officers, deputies and regular and special assistants, being generally held to be authorized;[43] but in Missouri an information before a justice of the peace need not be made on the personal knowledge nor verified on the oath of the prosecuting attorney, but may be exhibited on the written complaint of any citizen having personal knowledge of the offense.[44]

An information must be signed or indorsed by the prosecuting officer,[45] or witness,[46] and in most states verified by the public prosecutor under oath,[47] or accompanied by the affidavit of some competent witness having knowledge of the facts.[48] As is the case with indictments, it is generally provided that the names of the witnesses be indorsed thereon.[49]

It must generally be preceded by a sufficient preliminary complaint and examination,[50] and be filed within a certain time thereafter,[51] though in Oregon the preliminary examination is not necessary,[52] and technical exactness is never required in the complaint.[53]

(§ 4) C. Requisites and sufficiency of the accusation. General rules.—The indictment for any offense must charge every act made by the law essential to the punishment thereof[54] in positive terms,[55] and statutory forms must meet constitutional requirements of certainty,[56] but if this be done, an information conforming substantially to the statutory forms is sufficient.[57]

the one who verified it that it was filed without personal knowledge of the facts (Vickers v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 845), nor on the ground that the affidavit accompanying it was made by one who appeared at the trial to have had no personal knowledge of the facts (Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392). A duly verified information filed cannot be attacked by counter affidavits of the person verifying it that it was not verified by a person having personal knowledge of the facts. Vickers v. 50. A complaint on which an information is based is sufficient if it state merely that complainant has good reason to believe. Tompkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 800. It is no ground for setting aside an information, that the preliminary examination was postponed by the examining magistrate without the defendant's consent, contrary to Pen. Code Cal. § 861. People v. Boren [Cal.] 72 Pac. 899.

Leave to file an information for murder without a preliminary examination where necessary will not be granted as of course but rests in the sound discretion of the court. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. The application need not show the facts, it being sufficient that reasons satisfactory to the court were presented without regard to the manner of presentation. Id. but it is sufficient if it sets forth the act charged so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended.[59] Thus, where one is charged with a crime that can be committed only by certain officers or members of certain professions, it must clearly appear that defendant is one of the class to which the statute applies.[60] Where a statute enumerates several means or modes of committing an offense connecting them by the disjunctive, and such connected words are not synonymous, a count charging the commission of the offense by such means in the disjunctive is bad for uncertainty,[61] except in those jurisdictions where by special statute it is provided otherwise.[62] An information which, after charging a felony in the usual form, alleges that defendant aided, abetted and procured another to commit it, is not demurrable on the ground that it states a mere legal conclusion.[63] Where several are jointly indicted, all having been present at the commission of the offense, it is not necessary to charge the act upon any one of them.[64]

Bad spelling and ungrammatical construction will not vitiate an indictment,[65] and an interlineation is not a defect.[66]

Intent or knowledge.—Where guilty knowledge is not an essential ingredient of the offense or where a statement of the act itself necessarily includes a knowledge of the illegality of the act, no averment of knowledge is necessary;[67] but an indictment for murder must charge with certainty that the assault was made with intent to kill.[68]

Venue.—An indictment must be direct and certain as regards the jurisdiction in which the offense was committed,[69] though no particular form of words is necessary,[70] and it need not specify a particular place within the county.[71] Where larceny was committed without the county and is triable therein by reason of the stolen goods being brought into the county, the place of committing the offense may be alleged as in the county where the trial is had.[72]

Surplusage.—If an indictment on a statute covers in allegation all the statutory terms, thus showing a complete offense, it will not be ill should it add something by way of making the offense appear more enormous.[73]

Time.—It is not necessary to allege the precise date of the commission of an offense, except when the date is a material ingredient of the offense,[74] or to show that limitations have not run against the prosecution,[75] or as determining whether a statute existed under which it could be punished;[76] but where the crime is alleged to have been committed at a time subsequent to an amendment of the law punishing it,[77] or at a time so remote that limitations have run against it, the date is material and must be taken as true.[78]

Avoiding statute of limitations.[79]—An indictment showing on its face that limitations have run against the crime is bad,[80] and the indictment must show suspension of the statute if it is relied on.[81]

Repugnancy.—The necessary allegations of an indictment must not be inconsistent with each other,[82] but a count conjunctively uniting all the disjunctive elements of forgery as described in the statute is not repugnant or inconsistent.[83]

Designation and characterization of offense.—The offense need not be designated as a felony or misdemeanor,[84] and since the name of a crime is controlled by the specific acts charged, an erroneous name will not vitiate the indictment.[85] The word "feloniously" is not necessary in a count charging all the essential elements of a felony,[86] but an indictment for a statutory offense, not alleging it to have been done "willfully" and "unlawfully," is bad, though the word "feloniously" is used,[87] though "malicious" may be used in lieu of willful.[88] In an allegation that defendant did "unlawfully sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of" intoxicating liquors, the word "unlawfully" applies to each of the acts alternatively stated, and it cannot be objected that the acts are not charged to have been done unlawfully.[89]

Statutory crimes.—An indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient in those cases in which all the facts that constitute the offense are set forth in the statute,[90] but if the description does not contain all the particulars essential to constitute the offense,[91] or when the statute punishes an offense by its legal designation, without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to use the terms which technically charge the offense.[92] The statutory language need not be used, however, nor need the statute be referred to if the indictment in fact adequately charges the offense set forth.[93]

Exceptions and provisos.—Where there are exceptions in the act itself, part and parcel of the offense, they must be negatived before there can be a valid indictment under the statute,[94] but it is otherwise where the exception is not a part of the definition of the crime, whether placed close to or remote from such enacting clause.[95]

Setting forth written or printed matter.—The pasting of an instrument, instead of setting it forth in writing according to its tenor, is, if a defect, cured by the statute of jeofails,[96] and an averment of "probable cause to believe" when required must be direct.[97]

Principals and accessories.—An indictment charging accused with being an accessory to a felony after the fact should allege facts constituting the felony with the same degree of certainty required if the principal were alone indicted.[98]

Designation of accused.—Where an error occurs in the name of the accused, the indictment is not vitiated thereby, but on the true name appearing an entry should be made on the minutes, stating his name and the fact of his having been indicted by the name mentioned in the indictment,[99] and where he corrects it on arraignment, the cause may proceed as if his true name had been first recited in the indictment,[1] but at the common law such a defect is ground for a plea in abatement.[2] Where defendant is designated under an alias surname, it is not necessary to repeat his Christian name before such alias.[3] The omission of defendant's middle initial is not material,[4] and an indictment of "one Morgan whose given name is to the grand jury unknown" is sufficient.[5] That defendant's given name is so illegibly written that it may be read either correctly or incorrectly is no objection.[6] Where defendant's name is properly set out in the first instance, it is not rendered insensible by subsequently referring to him as "the said," giving him a wrong name.[7]

The statute of 1 Hen. V., ch. 5 (A. D. 1413), providing that defendant's degree or mystery, and the town, hamlet, place or county in which he was conversant must be set out, is no longer of force in the District of Columbia.[8]

Designation of third persons.—Where ownership is laid in a corporation, a specific averment of incorporation is not necessary, nor need there be an allegation of the correct name of the corporation where it is designated by the name by which it is generally known.[9] An averment that property was the personal property of certain persons "as trustees" of a certain church is not bad for failure to state the corporate name of the church, where it is not alleged that it was ever incorporated.[10] The designation of a married woman by her husband's Christian name is proper.[11] The statute in Kentucky provides that an indictment otherwise sufficient shall not be bad for an incorrect designation of the person injured.[12] In Alabama, by provision of the statute, an indictment for illegal sale of liquor need not state the name of the purchaser.[13]

Description of money.—Descriptions of money in larceny and kindred offenses need not be exact.[14] Whence an allegation as to a certain amount in "money of the United States, the further description of which is to the grand jury unknown" is a sufficient description of anything current as money.[15] Under an indictment for larceny of "United States Currency," evidence of treasury notes, national bank notes or gold or silver certificates is admissible.[16] An amount of the embezzlement of "about" a certain amount is sufficiently definite as to amount.[17] While under the statute in New Jersey, it is sufficient to charge the embezzlement to be of money without specifying any particluar coin or valuable security.[18]

Ownership of property may be averred in a certain estate,[19] and the statute in Texas expressly permits an indictment to allege ownership of property in the person in possession thereof, though the actual title is in another.[20] The statute in Kentucky provides that an indictment otherwise sufficient is not bad for an incorrect statement of ownership of property.[21]

(§ 4) D. Issues, proof and variance.—All necessary averments in an indictment must be proved as laid,[22] and if a necessary allegation is made unnecessarily minute in description, the proof must satisfy the descriptive as well as main part, since the one is essential to the identity of the other;[23] but where the allegation itself is unnecessary, not essential by way of identification, and can be omitted without affecting the charge, it is mere surplusage and may be disregarded.[24] Unnecessary averments negativing exceptions to the statute creating the offense, therefore, need not be proved,[25] but wherever such an averment must be introduced to bring defendant within the statute, it is material and must be proved as laid.[26] An allegation, after a full description of money stolen, that the grand jury are unable to give a more particular one, need not be proved,[27] and an averment that the description of money stolen was to the grand jurors unknown and evidence that its owner was before the grand jury is no variance.[28] Where an indictment for an offense under a statute that has been repealed contains, after striking out the statutory matter, a sufficient charge of a common law offense, the indictment is good, since the statutory matter is mere surplusage unnecessary to be proved.[29]

A videlicet will not have the effect to relieve the pleader from proof of any fact necessary to the description or the identity of that which it is connected.[30]

If the indictment professes to set out a writing by its tenor, whether in the particular case this exactness of averment is necessary or not, the proof must conform thereto with almost the minutest precision.[31]

An averment in the conjunctive of the several modes of committing the offense recited in the statute in the disjunctive will not hold the prosecution to proof of all the conjunctive averments,[32] and a proof of any one of them will support a conviction.[33]

A conspiracy to commit the offense charged[34] and proof of other offenses in themselves constituent parts of the offense charged may be shown, though not specifically alleged;[35] so also, an indictment for a constituent offense is supported by proof of the offense of which the one described is a constituent,[36] whence an indictment for an attempt to commit an offense is supported by proof of the actual commission of the offense;[37] but an indictment as accessory before the fact to a felony is not supported by proof that defendant committed the crime.[38] Neither may one indicted for murder as a principal be convicted as an accessory after the fact;[39] but where the distinction between principal and accessory is abolished, there is no variance between indictment as principal and proof of aiding and abetting.[40] Evidence of the receiving of stolen goods will not support a conviction of larceny,[41] and a conviction of receiving stolen goods cannot be had on an indictment for larceny.[42]

The venue must be proved as laid,[43] but the date is not material as a rule except as showing that limitations have not run against the offense;[44] though where the date is laid subsequent to a change in the law punishing the offense, proof of the commission of the crime before the change in the law is fatal.[45] Ordinarily when a month is referred to in testimony it will be understood to be of the current year, unless from the connection it appears that another is intended.[46] It is generally not necessary to prove that the offense was committed on the very day alleged in the indictment,[47] and circumstantial evidence thereof is sufficient.[48]

Name or other description of accused or third person.—An error in spelling defendant's name is not material,[49] and where a party is commonly known by one name, and that name is alleged in the indictment, the fact that the evidence shows that he is also commonly known by some other name or names will not defeat the prosecution.[50] An averment that defendant was employed by a certain company and evidence that he was acting in its interests under orders of its president are not variant.[51] Where ownership is alleged in different counts in different persons, proof of ownership in either supports a conviction.[52] In an indictment for seducing "Mary Ellen," evidence of the seduction of "Nellie" is no variance, though there is no proof that the same person is meant;[53] but a charge of ravishing Rosa Lee Nelson is not supported by evidence of ravishing Rosa Lee Ann.[54] Description of injured person as "Ed. H." and proof that his name is "Edmund Green H." and that he is always called "Green H." is a fatal variance.[55] Indictment alleging offense in "Guadlupe" instead of "Guadalupe" County is good.[56]

(§ 4) E. Defects, defenses and objections.—An indictment may be quashed on oral motion only for defects for which the judgment on it should be arrested,[57] and exceptions which go merely to the form of an indictment must be made by demurrer or motion to quash before pleading to the merits,[58] since by pleading defendant waives his right to demur or move to quash,[59] and admits that he is charged by his right name,[60] and in the absence of a demurrer pointing out its defects, an indictment will in general be sustained;[61] but a plea of guilty to a defective count does not preclude the defendant from attacking such count on the ground that it charges no offense,[62] and such objection may be taken under a plea of not guilty, or may be raised by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment;[63] hence, the sufficiency of an indictment to support a conviction may be questioned for the first time in the supreme court.[64] Since the insufficiency of an indictment may be first raised on appeal or error in any case where the defect would have been available on motion in arrest,[65] even though no demurrer or motion to quash was filed below, the refusal to permit it to be filed after issue joined is of no moment on appeal.[66] A statutory enumeration of grounds has been held exclusive.[67] Where certain counts in an indictment are good and others are bad, the court may quash the bad counts and leave the good counts stand,[68] and a conviction based on several counts will not be reversed if any count is good.[69]

That a negro is indicted by a grand jury composed exclusively of white men, negroes having been excluded because of race, color or previous condition of servitude,[70] that defendant was compelled to go before the grand jury and testify as to matters connected with the charge in the indictment,[71] and that an unauthorized person was present during the deliberations of the grand jury, are grounds for motion to quash;[72] but neither a regularly appointed special assistant prosecutor,[73] nor a legally qualified and appointed stenographer,[74] is an unauthorized person. In some states a motion to set aside may be entertained on the ground that one of the grand jurors was disqualified,[75] but the contrary rule prevails.[76] Irregularity in summoning grand jury may be raised by motion to quash the indictment,[77] but not prejudice of individual grand jurors.[78] That defendant was not given an opportunity to challenge grand jurors,[79] and that an indictment was returned by the grand jury after the expiration of the term to which it was summoned, do not vitiate it.[80] Since the statute in Michigan expressly provides on what grounds a challenge to the array of a grand jury may be made, an indictment found by a de facto grand jury may not be set aside by such challenge on any other ground,[81] as that it was returned by the grand jury after the expiration of the term to which it was summoned.[82] In Florida, objections to the panels of grand juries not appearing of record must be taken by plea in abatement and not by motion to quash.[83]

Courts have the power to set aside indictments whenever it appears they have been found without evidence or upon illegal and incompetent testimony,[84] and an indictment sent before the grand jury without a preliminary hearing or the sanction of the court may be quashed.[85] That the information on which an indictment is founded does not contain as full and specific a statement of the offense as the indictment contains is no ground to quash,[86] and a demurrer on the ground that the indictment was not properly filed is properly overruled, since such omission may be corrected nunc pro tunc.[87] An error in the caption of the indictment as to the term at which it was found is not ground for a motion to quash, since the record shows the time and the caption is amendable by it.[88]

An objection that an indictment charges several petit larcenies rather than one grand larceny goes to the jurisdiction of the court and can be raised by an objection to the introduction of any evidence and motion to compel an election.[89] In Minnesota, duplicity may be objected to only by demurrer and not by objection to the introduction of evidence after plea.[90]

A general motion to quash an indictment need not set out the reasons relied on,[91] but a motion to quash for incorrect designation of accused is properly overruled where his correct name is not suggested therein.[92] A demurrer for misjoinder of offenses must specify the offenses joined.[93] A single demurrer or plea to two or more separate indictments is irregular and should be stricken out.[94] Where the accused believes that he is insufficiently advised by the indictment as to the particular facts that will be proved against him, his remedy is not by demurrer but by notice for a bill of particulars.[95] A motion to instruct the jury to find the defendant not guilty before the introduction of any evidence is in effect a demurrer to the indictment;[96] but objection to the introduction of any evidence under an information is not a proper method of assailing its sufficiency.[97] An indictment not absolutely void cannot be collaterally attacked by the sureties in the recognizance,[98] nor on habeas corpus in another jurisdiction.[99]

On demurrer to an indictment and bill of particulars, the court considered the indictment as though it contained a recital of all facts set forth in the bill.[1] On demurrer it is proper to allow the state to withdraw the indictment and present the matter to the grand jury anew, notwithstanding the statute providing that the court must give judgment on the demurrer.[2] After removal of cause, indictment is of record and not impeachable by evidence.[3] Grand jurors cannot testify to lack of majority.[4]

(§ 4) F. Joinder and separation of counts and election. Joinder of parties.—Two persons cannot be severally charged in a single count with committing different offenses;[5] but principals in the first and second degree and accessories before and after the fact may all be joined.[6] A joint indictment of two for murder is not bad for charging that "each of his malice aforethought" did kill deceased.[7]

Joinder of counts.—The joinder of different offenses in the same indictment in separate counts is not necessarily fatal to the pleading itself, as ground of demurrer or arrest of judgment,[8] but the court may in its discretion quash the indictment or compel the prosecutor to elect,[9] and two or more distinct misdemeanors of the same nature may always be joined.[10] Where an act may constitute one or more of several distinct crimes, each of such crimes may be charged in a separate count to meet the different phases of the proof,[11] and an offense and a conspiracy to commit such offense may be joined.[12] Two or more counts relating to the same transaction, but charging offenses under different statutes to meet different phases of the evidence, are properly joined.[13] Counts charging the forgery of a name by different spellings are proper, the different versions being idem sonans.[14] An indictment is not double because several defendants are jointly accused in the first count and in the other counts each defendant is accused of committing the offense and the others of aiding and abetting therein.[15]

Duplicity.—A count that charges two separate and distinct offenses is bad and should be quashed on motion;[16] but where a statute makes two or more distinct acts connected with the same transaction indictable, each one of which may be considered as representing a phase of the same offense, they may be coupled in the same count,[17] and there is no misjoinder of offenses in a count that charges a statutory offense and includes therewith descriptive language used in a statute describing another crime,[18] or language charging an inferior degree or offense included in the crime charged;[19] but where the language used is in fact comprehensive enough to include two offenses, a demurrer should be sustained unless the prosecution elects to prosecute for one of them only.[20] A count charging that defendant did the unlawful act with two or more intents named in the statute,[21] or that defendant intended to consummate his unlawful purpose by two different means,[22] or that alleges a felonious taking as usual and that such taking was with the felonious intent to convert the property to defendant's use, is not double,[23] neither is a count charging that defendant embezzled property belonging to a certain company and divers persons unknown who had intrusted it to the company,[24] since taking by one act the property of several is a single offense.[25] The conjunctive averment of the different means or modes of committing an offense set out disjunctively in the statute is proper,[26] and the indictment may by statute allege the modes and means in the alternative.[27] By the express provisions of the act of congress, but three offenses committed within the same six calendar months can be joined in one count.[28] Where an indictment for murder in charging the assault describes but one wound, the averment that the person assaulted died "of said mortal wounds" will not render it double.[29] A charge that defendant, on a certain date and "on divers dates and days from thence continuously" to another date, converted funds to his own use, is not double, since it charges a continuous offense.[30] A charge of a bigamous marriage in another state and unlawful cohabitation in the state where the prosecution is had is not double, since the marriage is no crime in the state where the prosecution is had.[31] An indictment charging two as principals and one of the two as present aiding and procuring the felony is not double, since both are principals.[32]

Election.—Where more than one count is inserted in the indictment to meet the probable state of facts provable at the trial, it is not necessary for the state to elect,[33] but it is otherwise where several distinct offenses are charged,[34] though no election between counts can be required in cases of misdemeanor.[35] Where an offense is charged as committed in the several ways in which it is described in the statute, the state cannot be required to elect on which act it will rely.[36] Where an indictment charges an offense on a certain date and evidence is introduced of prior attempts to commit the same offense, there is nothing requiring the state to elect;[37] but if there is evidence of several offenses, an election must be made.[38] Where an indictment assigns several statements as perjury, all growing out of the same testimony, the state cannot be compelled to elect.[39] Where one is charged both as agent and attorney of another, an election to rely on the relation of principal and agent is sufficient.[40] If proof of but one act be offered, that is a sufficient election.[41] Where several offenses are shown, the remedy is by motion to require an election, not by request for an instruction confining the jury to one.[42]

Consolidation.—In Louisiana, two indictments against two defendants for rape, each upon a separate female occurring the same day, were by consent of counsel consolidated and tried together, the supreme court remarking, however, that the practice was not to be commended.[43] By requesting that two indictments for misdemeanor and one for felony growing out of the same transaction be consolidated, defendant precludes himself from objecting to the consolidation, the waiver of separate trials going only to the misdemeanor.[44]

(§ 4) G. Amendments. Indictments.—An indictment cannot in general be amended as to matters of substance except by the grand jury of the county or district in which the crime occurred,[45] though the ancient rule has been somewhat relaxed in some states by statute,[46] but formal matters can be amended by the court in all cases where not unfair to the defendant.[47]

Informations.—The prosecuting attorney being, unlike the grand jury, always in court, an information is always amendable, as to matters of form[48] or sub-

48. State v. Bugg [Kan.] 72 Pac. 236. A new information in which the several counts stance[49] at the same or a succeeding term[50] or during the trial,[51] within the discretion of the court.[52] The number of amended informations which may be filed rests in the discretion of the court.[53] An entirely new cause of action cannot be introduced, however,[54] though in New Hampshire it has been held that a petition for the abatement of a liquor nuisance may be so amended as to convert it into an information for a violation of the liquor law.[55]

An information may, by leave of court, be amended by the successor in office of the state's attorney filing the original,[56] but not in the county in which the criminal case is pending after a change of venue has been granted.[57]

On quashing an information, the court may permit a new one to be filed immediately, but defendant is then entitled to the statutory two days for preparation.[58]

(§ 4) H. Conviction of lesser degrees and included offenses.—Upon the trial of an indictment charging an offense consisting of different degrees, the jury may acquit the defendant of the degree charged and convict him of any of the inferior degrees.[59] Or if the offense charged includes minor constituent offenses, the conviction may be for one of those,[60] as for an attempt to commit the offense[61] or for an assault with intent to commit the offense;[62] and it is immaterial in most American states that the minor offense is only a misdemeanor while the offense charged is a felony.[63]

Several states have statutes providing that a conviction of an assault or attempt cannot be had where the evidence shows that the crime intended or attempted was actually committed in pursuance of such attempt.[64] And in the ab-have proper commencements may properly be filed as an amendment to one deficient in such respects. Fortenberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 593. At common law and under Rev. St. 1899, § 2481. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836.

49. An information for felony may be amended, as informations could be at common law, though at the common law prosecution by information was limited to misdemeanors. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942.

50. Where one has been arraigned on an information for murder and the cause continued, the prosecuting attorney at the next term may file a new information charging the same crime on which the defendant may be arraigned and tried. State v. Vinso, 171 Mo. 576.

51. An information may be amended in matter of form at the trial, and when so amended need not be verified, nor is defendant entitled to a rearraignment. State v. Bugg [Kan.] 72 Pac. 236. sence of such a statute where in rape the prosecutrix was under age and consented, no conviction of lesser degrees can be had.[65] But an indictment for common-law rape includes an assault with intent to rape, assault and battery, and simple assault, and it is error not to so instruct.[66]

One indicted for larceny cannot, on failure of proof of felonious intent, be convicted of the statutory misdemeanor of taking possession of the property of another without his consent but not feloniously.[67] And where a count charges a greater as well as a lesser offense, the defendant may be placed on trial for the lesser offense.[68]

§ 5. Arraignment and plea. Arraignment.—In most jurisdictions a formal arraignment is not necessary if the substantial rights of accused are preserved.[69] Defendant may waive formal arraignment.[70] Defendant is not entitled to a new arraignment where the information is amended at the trial,[71] or where a new information is filed in lieu of one lost.[72] Persons jointly indicted may be arraigned either jointly or separately.[73] A defendant may appear by counsel and refuse to plead to a misdemeanor.[74]

Time to plead is in most states allowed by statute.[75]

General pleas.—The court after setting aside verdict for first degree may at same term accept plea of guilty for included offense over prosecutor's objection.[76] Withdrawal of a general plea is in the discretion of the court.[77] Where the indictment specifically sets out the value of the stolen property the court need not on plea of guilty take testimony as to value.[78] A statute imposing on the court the duty of determining the degree of a crime where the defendant pleads guilty is not unconstitutional.[79]

Pleas in abatement and special pleas.—A plea in abatement is necessary to raise the objection that there was no preliminary examination[80] or that defendant is being tried for an offense different from that for which he was extradited.[81] Mere irregularities in drawing the grand jury are no ground for abatement.[82] After information it is no ground of abatement that defendant has not been arrested.[83] Pleas in abatement should be separately tried[84] and must be made at arraignment.[85] A plea of irregularity in drawing the grand jury[86] or in its proceedings[87] must be certain to every intent.[88] Demurrer to a plea in abatement that "the facts stated are not sufficient to constitute a plea in abatement" is bad.[89] A plea of present insanity must show incapacity to proceed to trial.[90] The burden is on defendant to establish his plea if it is denied,[91] and a verdict thereon may be set aside as against the weight of evidence.[92] A special plea in bar[93] or a plea in abatement is not to be taken as true because not traversed.[94]

A plea of former acquittal or conviction must allege that defendant was either acquitted or convicted.[95] Where a plea of former conviction is sustained after verdict of guilty, the proper practice is to sustain the plea as on demurrer, not to enter a judgment of acquittal on the verdict.[96]

§ 6. Preparation for, and matters preliminary to, trial.—It is generally provided by statute that defendant be served with a copy of the indictment or information,[97] the jury list,[98] and sometimes with a list of the witnesses.[99] Allowance of a bill of particulars is generally discretionary.[1]

Under a statute requiring a copy of the information to be given to the defendant a true copy is meant. State v. De Wolfe [Mont.] 74 Pac. 1084. Where the copy of an information delivered to the accused is not a true copy and the court sustains his objection thereto and orders a true copy to be furnished to him, a refusal to allow him the statutory time to plead thereafter is reversible error. Id. Where the statute requires that defendant shall be served with a true copy of the indictment, he may object to going to trial where there is a variance in the copy served as to a material allegation. Variance in the copy in alleging the crime to have been committed on a day subsequent to the trial is fatal under Bill of Rights, § 10, Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 540-542, 567-569. Lightfoot v. A bill of particulars setting forth the failure to account for certain sums received at various times does not show more than one offense to be proved. State v. Dix [Wash.] 74 Pac. 570. Motion for bill of particulars should specify wherein particularity is wanting and what is needful. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. After plea to merits bill of particulars is wholly within discretion. Id.

2. The practice of filing away indictments and discharging defendant from custody, he insisting on trial, is improper. Jones v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1434, 71 S. W. 643. Grand jury cannot continue a presentment. State v. Graham [Ala.] 33 So. 826.

5. Where the jail was quarantined for small pox down to the day of trial, it is error to refuse a continuance. Mays v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 162. Denial of continuance for want of preparation held error where defendant was put on trial four days after the crime and on the day of indictment. Hensley v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 48, 74 S. W. 677.

6. A statute allowing defendant a continuance where the state obtains leave to examine witnesses not testifying before the grand jury without giving four days' notice, is satisfied by a continuance of more than four days. Continuance over the term is not required. State v. Snider [Iowa] 91 N. W. 762. Indorsement of names on indictment after trial has begun is ground for continuance. State v. Lewis [Wash.] 72 Pac. 121.

7. Refusal of a continuance on the ground of absence of counsel is not error where injury is not shown and defendant is represented by the counsel. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 449; State v. Murray, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 786; Marchan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 532.

That a codefendant was a fugitive is not ground for continuance. Godwin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 804. Trial should await return of subpoenas to witnesses in foreign counties, they having been seasonably procured. State v. Scott [La.] 34 So. 479. Showing for continuance is not necessary in such case until after reasonable time. Id. A continuance should be granted on account of the absence of a witness in a homicide case who will testify that deceased made the first hostile demonstration. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565. Absence because of sickness of an eye witness to crime held ground for continuance. Swan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 464. Refusal of continuance for absence of witness to testify that he was owner of alleged stolen property and had authorized defendant to take it held error. Bain v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 542. It is error to deny a motion for a new trial where the affidavit of an absent witness shows absolutely that he would have testified to the material facts on which the application for continuance is based. Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 505. Denial of continuance for absence of witness to prove declaration of deceased to facts amounting to justification held error. Dewberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 307. Refusal of continuance for absence of witness to testify that she heard prosecutor authorize defendant to sign alleged forged note held error. Knowles v. State [Tex. Cr. A continuance to obtain a witness to show that the accused and the deceased were in the habit of using rough language to each other without animus, is properly refused, the witness not being present at the time of the crime. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Continuance for absence of witness to testify to his ownership of certain property not identified as that alleged to be stolen properly refused. Ivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 549. Absence of a witness by whom defendant expected to prove that the family of prosecutrix had made other accusations as to the crime, is not ground for a continuance where it is not shown that an attempt was made to shift the offense to the persons thus accused. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 449.

12. Evidence probably false. Roberts v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 423; Dodd v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 1015. Evidence at trial showed probable falsity. Landreth v. State [Tex. Cr. W. 522; Cogdell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 311; Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 10. A continuance will not be granted in behalf of defendants on account of the absence of the prosecuting witness by whose evidence defendant expects to prove that witness was the aggressor. It appeared that the witness had made a contrary statement at a previous trial and the affidavits attached to the motion for continuance were as to matters which could not be used save in impeachment of such evidence. Service of process on sick witness the day before the trial is sufficient diligence. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 386. Witness at place of trial and whereabouts known to defendant. Berry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 170. Subpoena not issued until long after indictment. Merrell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 979. Diligence held sufficient where subpoena was issued and witness not found; it appearing that on the next day he was at his residence. Truelove v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 601. Where the testimony was very important it was held error to refuse a continuance though due diligence did not appear. Ball v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 384. Continuance to obtain witnesses will not be granted where there had been a previous continuance to obtain the depositions of such witnesses, and no effort to do so had been made, and subpoenas to two of the witnesses had been returned, and one of them was ill. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. Refusal of continuance proper where for two months defendant took no steps to secure attendance of his witnesses. State v. Box, 66 S. C. 402. Obtaining the promises of witnesses to attend without subpoenaing them is not sufficient diligence. State v. Phillips [S. D.] 98 N. W. 171. Application for a second continuance for an absent witness is properly refused where the defendant does not show that he used due diligence to obtain the witness or his deposition. Hutsell v. Com. [Ky.] 75 S. W. 225. A continuance to obtain an absent witness is properly refused where due diligence has not been used to obtain him. Carroll v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 471. One who fails to have his witnesses arrested and put under bond to appear is not entitled to a continuance if they fail to appear on subpoena. State v. Hutto [S. C.] 45 S. E. 13. Diligence to secure depositions of ab-witness will testify as stated will not avoid a continuance.[16] The cases are conflicting as to whether an opportunity to take the deposition of a witness bars a continuance because of his absence.[17] Disqualification of regular jury panel is no ground for continuance.[18] Refusal to delay trial to bring in venireman whom the court is informed is a Federal officer is proper.[19] A postponement of a trial until after that of a co-defendant will be refused where by reason of a change of venue it would work a continuance.[20] Trial not postponed to admit amendment of immaterial variances.[21] The application[22] must be in writing,[23] and must state that defendant believes that the alleged testimony of the absent witness was true.[24] The papers must show due diligence,[25] that there were no other witnesses by whom the facts could be as well proved,[26] that the witness is unable to appear,[27] that he is not absent by defendant's consent or procurement,[28] is necessary,[29] will be able to attend if a continuance is granted,[30] and show what his testimony will be.[31] Counter affidavits may be heard,[32] but facts controverting the facts ex-sent witnesses must be displayed to warrant a continuance. Rush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 927. A continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses may be denied where there is no showing of diligence. Witness to show that property alleged to have been stolen from a certain locality had in fact in a different locality long previous to the crime. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 561. Failure to ask for attachment or take deposition. Cogdell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 311. Where defendant made no application to have a witness summoned until after the state rested and the witness was then 50 miles distant though he had been present during part of the trial the application will be denied. People v. Hossler [Mich.] 97 N. W. 754. Not sufficient to show that a deposition was forwarded to the place where the witness resided without a statement that funds were forwarded therewith, it being merely stated that defendant's friends provided the necessary funds to pay the expense of taking the depositions, and want of diligence in summoning the witness before a second indictment was presented excused only by the fact that the witness who was a soldier had been discharged at about that time and his locality had remained undisclosed until the depositions were sent. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. It is proper diligence, authorizing a continunace, for a subpoena to be issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff for witnesses residing within a mile of the place of trial three days before the date of trial. pected to be shown by an absent witness are not admissible to avoid a continuance.[33] Where time to discover evidence is sought there must be a showing as to its probable existence.[34]

§ 8. Dismissal or nolle prosequi before trial.—It is provided by statute in many states that if defendant is not indicted within a certain time,[35] or if after indictment he is not brought to trial within a prescribed time,[36] he is entitled to a dismissal. Lapse of a term after commitment for trial without convention of the court does not work a discontinuance.[37] An agreement of counsel as to the punishment on one indictment and for a dismissal of others is not binding.[38]

31; Fox v. State [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 815. Affidavit should fully state proposed testimony —statement that witness would testify to improper familiarity with prosecutrix, no time or place being given, insufficient. Merrell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 979. It must appear that the witness knew of his own knowledge the facts stated. Lively v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1048. Not sufficient to state that it was expected to prove by a witness in a prosecution for sale of intoxicating liquors that witness was living with defendant at the time of the offense, intimately connected with his business and actions, and during such time and at the time alleged in the indictment defendant never sold or was interested in the sale of intoxicating liquors. Ford v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 800. The trial court may compel defendant to disclose what he expects to prove by an absent witness. State v. Jones [W. Va.] 45 S. E. 916. Continuance of prosecution for hunting on posted lands properly denied where affidavit as to absent witness to testify that one gate was unposted failed to show which gate. Davis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 909. A continuance is properly refused where sought on account of absence of witnesses shown by defendant's evidence not to have knowledge of the facts he seeks to establish. Alibi. Leach v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 220. Absence of a witness by whom defendant intended to prove that statements made by a witness for the state were procured through intimidation, should disclose what such statements were. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 449. A motion for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness by whom defendant intends to prove an alibi, should be specific as to the place at which defendant was. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 449.

32. It is proper practice within proper limits to allow the introduction of counter affidavits on a motion for a continuance at the sound discretion of the trial judge, but the affidavits should not be allowed to go to the extent of trying a case on its merits on the preliminary question of a continuance. Shoun v. State [Tenn.] 78 S. W. 91. Where the ground for an application for a continuance for absent witnesses is controverted the court may refuse to hear evidence on the controversy. Where the applicant claimed to have been misled as to the time of the trial, which fact was controverted by the prosecuting attorney. Nelson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 502. A motion for a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, is properly denied where the statement as to what the witnesses would testify, is controverted by affidavits of the witnesses themselves and other persons. Rush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 927. The motion for continuance is properly denied where the state produces the affidavit of the absent witness denying the facts which the motion states he will testify to. Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. 35. Under a statute requiring a dismissal if an information is not filed within a certain time after the defendant was held to answer unless good cause to the contrary is shown, an error of one day in the stenographer's notes will warrant a refusal to dismiss, where the trial is had within sixty days from the commission of the offense [Pen. Code Cal. § 1382]. People v. Farrington [Cal.] 74 Pac. 288.

36. The four months within which a defendant must be brought to trial runs from the magistrate's commitment, not from indictment [Cr. Code par. 623]. Guthman v. People, 203 Ill. 260. "Admitted to bail" in a statute requiring speedy trial of persons not so admitted means released on bail. State v. Larson [N. D.] 97 N. W. 537. Where the delay was on application of defendant, he is not entitled to release. Id. Second continuance at request of state after reversal and remand held denial of right to speedy trial. Ex parte Wells [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 541. The fact that defendant was released on bail for a few hours only and then confined in jail does not affect such right. Holden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 600. A statutory provision giving a defendant a right to discharge, in case he is not brought to trial, before the end of the second term, after the indictment is returned, does not authorize his discharge in case of mistrial occasioning a continuance to a subsequent term, at which an amended information is filed. First information filed Sept. 21, 1901, and after mistrial continued to March term, 1902, does not bring the case within [Rev. St. 1899, § 2641]. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. A subsequent trial and conviction is not prevented by the fact that the accused fails to secure a speedy trial and the prosecuting officer, for insufficient rea-

§ 9. Evidence.—Judicial notice will be taken of the nature[39] and intoxicating character of liquors,[40] and that a glass of whisky sold for ten cents is a quantity less than three gallons.[41] The political divisions of the state will be judicially noticed.[42]

Presumptions and burden of proof.—The presumption of innocence[43] casts on the state the burden of proving every essential fact, including the venue,[44] and the guilty intent,[45] but the burden of proving insanity is usually held to be on defendant,[46] and where insanity of a temporary kind is shown, there is no presumption of its continuance.[47] Though the state must show the capacity of an infant under fourteen years,[48] accused over fourteen has the burden of proving incapacity.[49] After evidence of insanity has been introduced, the prosecution must prove sanity beyond a reasonable doubt.[50] Inferences from facts arise against a defendant.[51]

Relevancy and competency in general.—Any fact is relevant which alone or in connection with other facts warrants an inference as to the issue on trial.[52] A presentment against defendant's tenant for keeping a gaming house is admissible to show defendant's knowledge of the purpose for which the building was used.[53] Where part of conversation is admitted, defendant is entitled to the remainder which explains statements in the part introduced.[54] Evidence that defendant had been released on low bail is irrelevant.[55] Flight or other conduct of defendant after the offense tending to show a consciousness of guilt,[56] or attempt to 51. Suppression of evidence. Hubbard v. State [Neb.] 91 N. W. 869.

52. Stone v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 630. The fact that testimony given in support of an information was not in the mind of the prosecuting attorney when it was filed is not material. State v. Davis [Kan.] 73 Pac. 87. Why a witness went to a place where he learned material facts is inadmissible. Hill v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 406.

Motive: Evidence of motive on the part of others than the defendant to do injury to or perhaps take the life of some of the decedent's family is incompetent. In a prosecution for homicide where it is claimed that a bad feeling existed between the deceased and his family and other persons. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. Evidence of an examination of the circumstances of a crime and the connection therewith of the accused's friends is competent to show the accused's motive in removing from a public office indictments against such friend. People v. Mills, 86 N. Y. Supp. 529.

53. Rivers v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 859.

54. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771; Fields v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 185.

55. Greason v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 615.

56. Williams v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1014. The conduct of defendant during flight in assuming false names, carrying weapons, etc., is admissible. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771. That defendant procured weapon while in jail. Barnes v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1143, 70 S. W. 827. Forfeiture of bail. State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530. Flight from officer immediately after offense. State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544. Flight of the defendant on meeting the prosecuting witness. McFarland v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 788. Declaration of defendant as to plan to suppress evidence is admissible;[57] but that defendant refused opportunities to escape from jail is not.[58] Refusal to go before the grand jury is not.[59] Defendant's mental condition before and after the offense is relevant,[60] but reputed insanity of an ancestor is not.[61] To rebut such defense, defendant's normal business habits may be shown,[62] as may his good physical condition shortly after an alleged attack of insanity,[63] or that defendant was intoxicated at the time of the acts alleged to be insane,[64] or that the accused was guilty of larceny from the deceased at the time.[65] Evidence rebutting an alibi is admissible, though it does not tend to show defendant's presence at the time of the crime.[66] The cases[67] sanction the reception of evidence of the trailing by bloodhounds when a proper foundation is laid,[68] but in Nebraska, evidence of this kind is rejected.[69]

Other offenses, convictions or acquittals.[70]—Proof of other offenses distinct from that charged is inadmissible,[71] except for the purpose of showing guilty escape held admissible. Bines v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 376. Evasion, flight, concealment, resistance to arrest may show guilty conscience. Carr v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 892. Exhibition of arms used in resistance proper in corroboration of testimony to such matter. Id. Attempt to break jail. Anderson v. Com. [Va.] 42 S. E. 865. Where defendant's flight is used as evidence against him, he has the right to explain such flight. Evans v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 467. Flight may not be explained by a later declaration of accused unless it is part of res gestae. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129.

57. Suppression of evidence. Hubbard v. State [Neb.] 91 N. W. 869. Endeavor to bribe witness to leave state. Ezell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 283. But see Hankins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 787.

58. State v. Wilcox [N. C.] 44 S. E. 625; State v. Bickle [W. Va.] 45 S. E. 917.

59. Rogers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 18.

60. Queenan v. Territory, 11 Okl. 261, 71 Pac. 218. That a co-defendant was confined in an insane asylum at the time of trial, three years after the murder, is irrelevant. Caddell v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 191. The acts and conduct of defendant between the time of an injury and the date of the crime are admissible as to his insanity. People v. Manoogian [Cal.] 75 Pac. 177. A deed executed four days after a crime may be admitted to show sanity at the time of the crime. State v. Privitt [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 457.

61. Wright v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1838, 72 S. W. 340. Family tree with names of insane ancestors indicated excluded. Id.

64. Porter v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 694; Hoovers v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 591.

65. Homicide in insane frenzy was claimed. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556.

66. State v. Manning [Vt.] 54 Atl. 181. Where defendant in support of an alibi testified to making a trip on a certain locomotive, testimony of a brakeman that no locomotive of the type described was used on that road is admissible. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771.

67. See Pedigo v. Com. [Ky.] 42 L. R. A. 432 and note thereto.

68. Action of dogs in following criminal's trail is admissible on proof of such breed, training and qualities as to warrant reliance on their accuracy. Davis v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 76.

69. Brott v. State [Neb.] 97 N. W. 593.

70. Evidence of other offenses is admissible if it discloses motive, criminal intent or guilty knowledge, if it identifies defendant or is part of a common plan embracing the several crimes. State v. Ames [Minn.] 96 N. W. 330. Evidence of extraneous offenses may be admissible to establish the res gestae, prove a relative or competent fact, the circumstance connecting defendant with the crime charged, to explain his intent or make out his guilt by circumstances, and may also be admissible when they tend to show system. Glenn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 757.

71. U. S. v. Densmore [N. M.] 75 Pac. 31; State v. Berger [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1094; People v. Romano, 82 N. Y. Supp. 749; State v. Hendrick [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 247; Nix v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 764. Rape. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 556. Receiving bribes. State v. Fitchette, 88 Minn. 145. Other acts of indecent exposure. State v. Vance [Iowa] 94 N. W. 204. Larceny of clothing after rape; evidence not necessary to identification. Dabney v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 973. Another burglary on preceding night. McAnally v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 404. Another burglary on same night. Hill v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 9. Plea of guilty to similar offense several months before. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 407. Prior rape on same woman. Barnett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 399. Prior acts of intercourse in prosecution for rape. Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 Pac. 417. Previous attempts to rape same woman admissible. State v. Scott [Mo.] 72 S. W. 897. Subsequent acts of intercourse have been admitted. State v. King, 117 Iowa, 484. But see Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 401. Other assaults. Kessinger v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 597; Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Arson. State v. McCall, 131 N. C. 798. Previous beating of daughter not admissible on trial for incestuous rape. Ball v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 384. Other sales of intoxicating liquor. Walker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 401, 861. Other sales of liquor on Sunday. Allen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 397. Evidence that other articles than those charged were taken knowledge,[72] intent or malice,[73] as where the offense charged is part of a system.[74] Relevant evidence is not to be excluded because it also tends to show another crime,[75] and other offenses part of the res gestae may be shown.[76] Evidence of previous conviction of another independent crime is inadmissible except for impeachment.[77] Where admissible, other offenses cannot be proved by the admission of defendant;[78] there must be pertinent testimony tending to show that defendant was guilty of the extraneous offense,[79] and it is only on cross-examination of defendant that parol proof of a former conviction is admissible.[80]

Character and reputation.—Defendant is entitled to show his good character[81] in respect to the traits of character involved in the accusation[82] unless it is admitted to be good[83] and such evidence is to be considered in connection with the other proof.[84] Relevant evidence is not to be excluded because it also tends to impeach defendant's character.[85] Proof of defendant's vagrant habits is not admissible.[86]

Hearsay—Admissions and declarations.—Declarations by defendant are admissible if of an incriminating tendency[87] and testimony on preliminary hearing is at a burglary is not within the rule. People v. Loomis, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 243.

72. Receiving stolen goods. Goldsberry v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 906; People v. Doty, 175 N. Y. 164. Confidence game. Du Bois v. People, 200 Ill. 157. It is immaterial that there was also direct evidence of knowledge. Goldsberry v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 906. Selling liquor to other minors at same time. Gray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 169.

73. State v. Williams [La.] 35 So. 505; People v. McGlade [Cal.] 72 Pac. 600; People v. Putnam, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1056. Other forgeries. Wright v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1009. Previous assaults. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162; Robbery a few minutes before the assault on trial. State v. Ward [Iowa] 91 N. W. 898; O'Brien v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2511, 74 S. W. 666. But see State v. Spray [Mo.] 74 S. W. 846. Not admissible where specific intent is not essential. State v. Roscum [Iowa] 93 N. W. 295. Nature of alleged sale of intoxicants if the transaction was disguised and defendant denies that there was a sale. Hollar v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 961.

74. Confidence game. Du Bois v. People, 200 Ill. 157. Obtaining goods under false pretences. Com. v. Lubinsky, 182 Mass. 142. False pretences. State v. Soper, 118 Iowa, 1. D.] 91 N. W. 605; Oakley v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 23. On a prosecution for homicide committed during an attempted rescue from jail, it may be shown as a part of the res gestae for what offense such person had been arrested. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. Where confession of one burglar disclosed the hiding place of certain property, evidence of other burglaries at which such property was stolen is admissible to connect his accomplices with the crime on trial. O'Brien v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 666. That defendant on being arrested for another burglary disclosed the hiding place of the property then taken and that with it was found property taken at the burglary on trial is admissible. Bright v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 912.

77. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771.

78. State v. Snyder [Iowa] 91 N. W. 765.

85. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751.

86. State v. Berger [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1094.

87. State v. Carpenter [Wash.] 73 Pac. 357. Statements as to engagement in prosecution for seduction. Merrell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 979. Declaration showing animus, made after the crime is admissible. Jones v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 793. On a joint trial admissions of one are admissible, it being properly confined by instructions. Collins v. State, 115 Wis. 596. Letter from defendant to his first wife is admissible on trial for bigamy though written long before second marriage. Crow v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 392. Petition for divorce admissible as judicial admission,[88] but declarations which make in his favor are not.[89] Declarations of third persons[90] or of the person injured by the crime[91] are hearsay unless made in the presence of defendant,[92] and assented to by him[93] or not denied.[94] Witness who heard only part may testify to that.[95]

Confessions.—A confession is admissible[96] if it be voluntary without threat or inducement.[97] In some states it is required by statute that defendant be from first wife admissible. Crow v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 392. Offer of compromise admissible. Collins v. State, 115 Wis. 596. Threats of violence after commission of larceny. Ezell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 283. Request for time to consult an attorney on payment being demanded. Meadows v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 183. Statements by defendant in the course of a pretended search by him for the criminal. Cowan v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 193. Declarations admissible to show motive though falsifying other declarations. Hooker v. State [Md.] 56 Atl. 390. Prejudicial statements of the accused while drunk, but conscious of the meaning and effect of his words are admissible. People v. Farrington [Cal.] 74 Pac. 238. Admissions of guilt of an offense are irrelevant to an offense under a later law which magnified the offense. State v. Wenzel [N. H.] 56 Atl. 918. A druggist's reports of liquor sold by him in a local option district are admissible against him. People v. Robinson [Mich.] 98 N. W. 12.

Statements before examining magistrate: Statements made by one as a witness against another before an examining magistrate are not within a statute providing that before a prisoner may be examined he must be informed of the charge and allowed counsel. State v. Simpson [N. C.] 45 S. E. 567. Plea of guilty before magistrate held induced by threats. McMaster v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 156. Testimony on other proceedings though it has been reduced to narrative form. Ferrell v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 220.

88. Angling v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 846. Admissions freely made on arrest and on preliminary hearing. Jones v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 681. Testimony of defendant on a former trial may be introduced though he does not testify on the second trial. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 401. Reading the testimony from official stenographer's notes. McMasters v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 302. An objection, to the reading of such testimony, on the ground that it is in the nature of a confession is not maintainable. Id.

89. Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186; State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530. Declaration before meeting deceased showing innocent purpose in going to place of homicide. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494. Declarations must be connected with accused. Dolan v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 52; Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 403. Evidence held not to show efforts on the part of a third person to procure perjured evidence against defendant so as to entitle him to show conversations between such persons and a witness. Hackney v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 554.

91. Declaration by victim of larceny as to his ownership. Long v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 870; State v. Deal [Or.] 70 Pac. 534. Declaration by deceased that a third person had threatened his life. Goodlett v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 892. Declarations by victim of seduction. People v. Elco [Mich.] 91 N. W. 755. Declaration of deceased that he was to blame. State v. Terry, 172 Mo. 213. Recognition of photograph of defendant. State v. Houghton [Or.] 71 Pac. 982. Statements by deceased charging defendant with the crime made in the absence of defendant, are inadmissible. Wilburn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 3.

92. People v. Philbon, 138 Cal. 530, 71 Pac. 650; Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 380. Narrative of events held to sufficiently show that defendant was present when a statement was made. Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325.

93. Anthony v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 818.

94. Com. v. Coughlin, 182 Mass. 558. Silence in the presence of an accusation of guilt is admissible in evidence as tending to show guilt. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 73 Pac. 562. Conduct of deceased, defendant's wife; evidencing belief in defendant's guilt not admissible where her condition was such that he could not protest. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. Not clear that defendant heard statement. People v. Bissert, 172 N. Y. 643. Remark of bystander "You have shot him." Clark v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 853. Charge by accomplice at preliminary examination denied on following day inadmissible. Com. v. Zorambo, 205 Pa. 109. Silence under arrest raises no inference especially in case of incapacity from sickness. State v. Epstein [R. I.] 55 Atl. 204. It is only where the circumstances require defendant to speak that his silence is an implied admission. Graham v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 616. Failure to become a witness in a civil action to deny statements made in testimony therein is not an implied admission. Com. v. Burton [Mass.] 67 N. E. 419. Silence at judicial inquiry not to be considered an admission. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 1005.

95. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. A witness testifying that he heard all that the defendant said, except one word, in a conversation between the defendant and deceased may testify to the fact of a threat made by the defendant in such conversation. State v. Allen [La.] 35 So. 495.

96. Green v. State, 96 Md. 384; Mathews v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 838.

97. State v. Michel [La.] 35 So. 629; Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406; State v. Robertson [La.] 35 So. 875. That person receiving confession was friend of defendant raises no warned that what he may say will be used against him.[98] If a statement was involuntary it is inadmissible, though it was designed as an exculpation rather than presumption of influence. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 970. On conflicting evidence, defendant against officers, confession held admissible. State v. Jones, 171 Mo. 401. Confessions voluntarily made to a coroner and others while in a hospital are admissible. The fact that he was under the influence of a drug at the time affects only their weight. People v. Kent, 83 N. Y. Supp. 948. Confession made in conversation with private person after arrest held admissible. Ginn v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 294.

Confessions by persons in custody: Mere fact that defendant is in prison does not raise presumption of duress. State v. Hernia [N. J. Err. & App.] 53 Atl. 85. Confession is not involuntary because made to officer under arrest and while frightened despite reassurances by officer. Stevens v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 122. That a confession was made to the jailor does not render it inadmissible. People v. Egnor [N. Y.] 67 N. E. 906. Evidence showing confession to officer while under arrest to have been persuaded and not voluntary. State v. Nagle [R. I.] 54 Atl. 1063. Evidence of statements made to a jailor, who testified that no inducements were held out to the defendant to make the statements is admissible. State v. Carpenter [Wash.] 73 Pac. 357.

Threats or inducements: A statement by a detective to defendant that he was in a bad fix and that the truth would not hurt him does not exclude confessions made as a witness on the trial of a codefendant several days later. Whitney v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 257. Where the private person arresting defendant said that he must state the facts to the officers and he would be released a confession is inadmissible. State v. Force [Neb.] 95 N. W. 42. Confession obtained by furnishing defendant with liquor and questioning him held inadmissible. McNutt v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 143. Confession induced by statement that accomplice is going to turn state's evidence inadmissible. State v. Wilson [Mo.] 72 S. W. 696. Confession to a deputy sheriff on promise by him to help defendant held involuntary. McMaster v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 156. That an officer obtained a confession by pretending friendship to defendant does not exclude it. People v. White [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 630. That the person aggrieved offered to settle on payment of his loss does not render a confession to him involuntary. Meadows v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 183. That defendant was untruthfully told that an accomplice had confessed does not exclude a confession. McNutt v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 143. Statement by a private person to defendant that he would get off easier does not exclude a confession made after warning by an officer. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 25. Small gifts by officers to defendant after confession held not to make confession inadmissible. Com. v. Corcoran, 182 Mass. 465. Promise to protect defendant from vengeance of his accomplices does not render confession inadmissible. Hunt v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 329. It is no objection to a confession that the officer stated to the defendant that the deceased's relations with the defendant's wife might help him. Brown v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 33. An affidavit secured from defendant by the acting county attorney under the guise of using it as evidence against the unknown perpetrators of the crime, is not admissible. Tines v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 363.

Repetition of confession: Subsequent confession must be clearly shown to be free from influences which induced former involuntary one. McNish v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 219. McMaster v. State [Miss.] 34 So. 156. Confessions subsequent to an involuntary one must be so remote in time and circumstances from the first confession as to avoid the presumption that the same influences operated to produce it. State v. Force [Neb.] 95 N. W. 42. Second and different confession made some time after one on inducements held admissible. Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186.

98. Warning the day before the confession held sufficient. Richardson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 320; Yancy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 571. It is not necessary that defendant be told that he has a legal right to refuse to answer. Hill v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 754. Confession after warning held admissible. Ransom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 960. Testimony of defendant at preliminary examination held inadmissible because there was no showing that he was duly cautioned. State v. Parker [N. C.] 43 S. E. 830. Confession to private person after warning by officer held sufficient. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 970. One who has surrendered himself is within the statute though there was no formal arrest. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 962. Where some time elapses between warning and confession it must be shown that the confession was in view of the warning. Gray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 858. An officer of a society for the prevention of vice may testify as to a conversation had at his office with the accused, though the latter is not informed of the purpose of the conversation, or that it might be used against him. People v. Bushnell, 83 N. Y. Supp. 403. Taking measurement of defendant's feet to compare with tracks is not a confession so as to require warning. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 914. A warning that what defendant said might be used "for" or against him is insufficient. Glover v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 465. Incriminating declarations by defendant several hours after crime, inadmissible as declarations against interest because he was not warned, are not part of the res gestae. Smotherman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 540.

What is arrest or restraint: Statements of accused while not formally under arrest though he would not have been permitted to depart, and while he was not conscious of being under restraint are admissible against him. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Statements by one thinking himself under arrest are inadmissible unless he has been warned. Bain v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 542. Facts held to show that in making statement to sheriff defendant deemed himself under restraint, so that warning was necessary. Id.; Patrick v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 550. Statements made by defendant to the sheriff ina confession.[99] Evidence discovered through an involuntary confession is admissible,[1] and it has been held that where such evidence is disclosed the confession is admissible, though made without the statutory warning.[2] There should be preliminary evidence of the voluntary character of the confession,[3] a general statement that no inducement was offered or threat made being generally sufficient.[4] The preliminary question of admissibility is for the court.[5] One may testify to a confession, though he is able to state only the substance thereof.[6]

Acts and declarations of co-conspirators.—Acts and declarations of a conspirator in furtherance of the common object are admissible against his co-conspirators,[7] but not acts and declarations after such object has been accomplished,[8] nor narration of past occurrences.[9] Evidences of guilt found on one of two persons committing a crime by conspiracy are admissible against the other defendant.[10] The fact that others than the conspirators participated in the actions shown is no objection.[11] There must be preliminary proof of the fact of conspiracy,[12] though the order of proof is discretionary.[13]

70. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 401. Where the record shows that the notes from which the defendant's testimony on a former trial is read, is the official stenographer's notes; shows the time, the place, and the circumstances under which they were taken; and is certified by the official stenog-

one which the magistrate cannot positively verify.[71] Recollection of magistrate is not admissible.[72]

Quantity required and probative effect.—The proof of guilt must be beyond all reasonable doubt,[73] and this includes the corpus delicti,[74] the venue,[75] jurisdiction,[76] and the time of the offense.[77] Testimony of a prosecuting witness to all the essential elements of a crime is sufficient to convict without corroboration.[78] Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient.[79] The rule varies as to the degree of proof of insanity.[80]

Though the testimony of an accomplice is viewed with suspicion, it may be sufficient to convict,[81] unless corroboration is required by statute.[82] To be an ac-rapher as a true transcript it is sufficient for their introduction. McMaster v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 302. Interpolated words in transcript, stricken out on object, do not exclude the transcript. People v. Witty [Cal.] 72 Pac. 177.

A conviction may be had on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. State v. Register [N. C.] 46 S. E. 21. The weight of an accomplice's testimony is for the jury to determine. State v. Michel [La.] 35 So. 629.

82. That the person accused of giving a bribe drew the amount from the bank is insufficient to corroborate his testimony. People v. Bissert, 172 N. Y. 643. Evidence of larceny held insufficient to corroborate accomplice. People v. Hoagland, 71 Pac. 359, 138 Cal. 338. The corroborating evidence required by Pen. Code, § 1111, must tend to connect defendant with the crime. People v. Hoagland, 138 Cal. 338, 71 Pac. 359. Similarity of tracks held insufficient corroboration. Barber v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 210. The corroborating testimony need not be in itself sufficient to sustain a conviction. Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186. Evidence of larceny held sufficient to corroborate accomplice. State v. Blain [Iowa] 92 N. W. 650. Corroboration held sufficient on prosecution for aiding and abetting a prize fight. People v. Finucan, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 407. Corroboration held insufficient on charge of receiving stolen goods. Bismarck v. State

complice one must have been guilty of criminal participation[82] in the particular crime.[84] Evidence of another accomplice is not sufficient corroboration.[85]

A confession is not sufficient without proof of the corpus delicti,[86] but such proof need not be independently sufficient.[87] Confession and proof of corpus delicti will usually sustain a conviction,[88] though in some states corroboration is required.[89] The weight to be given to a confession is for the jury.[90]

§ 10. Trial. A. Conduct of trial in general.—Separate trials of persons jointly indicted is in the discretion of the court[91] and must be asked before trial.[92] By statute in some states, one jointly indicted may have his co-defendant tried first in order to secure the benefit of his evidence.[93] Consolidating indictments is same as charging several crimes in one, within provision against cumulating sen-

[Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 965. A state statute requiring corroboration of accomplices does not control in federal court. Hanley v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 849. It is sufficient if he is corroborated as to the main facts, though not as to some of the details. Locklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 305. Testimony of an accomplice clearly corroborated by circumstances is sufficient to support a verdict of guilty. Stiles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 511. Acts, statements or declarations of an accomplice are not corroborative of her testimony. Seduction. Barnard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 475.

83. Mere nondisclosure does not make one an accomplice. Bird v. U. S., 187 U. S. 118, 47 Law. Ed. 100; Cruse v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 818; Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 973. A woman under age of consent is not an accomplice though she consents to the intercourse. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 401. That one was jointly indicted does not make him an accomplice if there was no evidence of his guilt. Walker v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 608. Testimony of a sister, in a prosecution for incest, as to fact of seeing defendant sitting on the bed in which she and her sister, upon whom the incest was committed, held not to constitute her an accomplice. Ingram v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 304. The prosecuting witness in local option cases is not an accomplice. So provided by statute. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 801.

84. Thief is not an accomplice of one receiving stolen goods. State v. Rachman [N. J. Law] 53 Atl. 1046. The person paying a bribe is an accomplice of the person who receives it. People v. Bissert, 172 N. Y. 643. Consenting woman on whom abortion is practiced is not technically accomplice of one attempting to produce it. State v. Carey [Conn.] 56 Atl. 632. An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice. State v. Phillips [S. D.] 98 N. W. 171. The test of whether a witness is an accomplice is whether he could have been indicted for the offense. Suborner is not accomplice of perjurer. Stone v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 630. That a witness was an accomplice in a homicide does not make him an accomplice in perjury committed by defendant at the inquest. Stanley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 320.

89. Condition of injured person immediately afterward and declarations by her part of the res gestae sufficient to corroborate confession. Joinder v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 412. Proof of corpus delicti and presence of defendant alone near scene of crime is sufficient to corroborate a confesson. Sanders v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 365.

90. It should be considered as a whole. Kirby v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 836.

91. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162; State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. In a trial for misdemeanor. State v. Davis [Kan.] 73 Pac. 87. An affidavit by a defendant stating that there is evidence admissible against co-defendants not admissible against him does not entitle him to a severance, where the evidence does not relate to reputation, under Laws Colo. 1891, p. 132. Moore v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 30. On an indictment for conspiracy a defendant is not entitled to a severance where the evidence, consisting of acts of his co-conspirators, is admissible against him when the conspiracy is proved. Id. Where two are indicted for the same transaction made up of two different killings, there may be a severance [Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 707]. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 928.

92. Motion for severance cannot be made after jury is impaneled. Crawford v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 552. Severance is discretionary when claimed after court sets trial day as provided by rule 32. Severance asked on trial day refused. Hudson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 854.

93. Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 707, where a defendant makes affidavit that the evidence of the other party is material to his defense and believes that there is not sufficient evidence to convict him, it is error to dismiss as to such defendant and not require him to be first tried, thus permitting him on the trial of affiant to refuse to testify on the ground that his evidence might incriminate him. Manor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 785

tences.[94] It is reversible error to refuse a separate jury trial of the issue of insanity.[95]

Appointment of counsel.—The court has power to appoint private counsel to assist in the prosecution.[96] An indigent defendant is entitled to have counsel appointed to defend him.[97] The court may refuse to permit the defendant's attorney to withdraw after a continuance has been denied and a jury has been called.[98]

Names of witnesses may be indorsed at any time before the jury is sworn.[99] Witnesses whose names are not indorsed on the indictment may be admitted.[1] Giving of list of witnesses has been held a substitute for indorsement on the information.[2]

The state need not call all the eye-witnesses,[3] nor all the witnesses whose names are indorsed on the indictment.[4] Allowance of time to consult with a witness is discretionary.[5] Even temporary absence of the judge from the court-room is fatal,[6] but the court may, during the argument, occupy himself in drawing instructions.[7]

Defendant must be present in court during the whole of a trial for felony,[8] but cannot be compelled to be present at a view.[9]

It is discretionary to put witnesses under the rule,[10] or to send the jury out

10. Putting of witnesses under the rule, and allowing witnesses to testify after violation of the rule is discretionary. Loose v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 526. That one summoned but not examined remained in court is not error. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. Instructing witnesses not to converse with other persons and allowing witnesses during an argument on the admissibility of confessions.[11] The right of defendant to confront the witnesses[12] may be waived,[13] and is not infringed by the reading of testimony at a former trial.[14] The making of a supplemental statement by defendant is not a matter of right.[15] He cannot be cross-examined on such statement.[16] The court may in its discretion suspend the trial for a short time.[17] Allowance of time for consultation is discretionary.[18] The court may on reversible error being committed order a mistrial,[19] and may of its own motion stop acts which might cause a mistrial,[20] or strike answers to bad questions.[21] The court may examine a witness.[22] Defendant may be required to stand up to be identified in court.[23] Physical examination of state's witnesses cannot be compelled.[24] The accused on a proper motion has a right to the inspection of public documents.[25] The order of proof is in the discretion of the court,[26] as is the reopening of the case for further evidence.[27] Ad-who have testified to return to the room with the other witnesses is discretionary. Kelly v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 413. It is not ground to set aside a verdict that the court permits expert witnesses to remain in the court room during the trial. State v. Forbes [La.] 35 So. 710.

11. People v. Kent, 83 N. Y. Supp. 948.

12. Certificate of clerk that he found no record of a certain marriage held inadmissible. People v. Goodrode [Mich.] 94 N. W. 14. School census held admissible. McAnally v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 404. Prosecutions in state courts are not within amendment six, constitution of the United States, entitling the accused to be confronted by the witnesses against him. People v. Welsh, 84 N. Y. Supp. 703.

13. Odell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 964. The right of defendant to be confronted by the witnesses against him may be waived by counsel. And a trial for misdemeanor may be had in the absence of the defendant if he appear by counsel under Code Cr. Proc. N. Y. § 356. People v. Welsh, 84 N. Y. Supp. 703. A stipulation in open court by the defendant admitting that if a certain witness were present he would testify to certain facts and agreeing that it should be submitted to the jury is not in violation of the constitutional right to be confronted by witnesses against him. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 73 Pac. 562.

14. Defendant having had the opportunity there to confront the witnesses. State v. Kline, 109 La. 603; State v. Banks [La.] 35 So. 370; People v. Elliott, 172 N. Y. 146.

15. Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186.

16. Even as to a matter which he referred to in response to a suggestion of his counsel. Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 537.

17. Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 537; Perry v. State, 116 Ga. 850; Clark v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 853. The court may temporarily suspend the trial to investigate a charge of bribery of witnesses. People v. Salisbury [Mich.] 96 N. W. 936.

18. A request by the state after it had closed its case to withdraw one of the defendants from the stand to consult with him before testifying as a witness of the defendant is properly granted. State v. Gosey, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 786. A request by defendant's counsel, on a trial of two, to withdraw the other defendant from the stand to interview him before testifying is properly refused. 19. Oliveros v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 596.

20. Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230.

21. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025.

22. If questions are not put in a prejudicial form. People v. Hackett, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 86; Beal v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 58.

23. Coles v. State, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 313.

24. A physical examination cannot be compelled in a prosecution for slander to support the accused's statements. Bowers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 299.

25. As a record of proceedings before a justice which is in the hands of the state. Jenkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 312.

26. Admission of evidence not relevant until connected held not error. People v. Monroe, 138 Cal. 97, 70 Pac. 1072. Communication of threats may be excluded until it is shown that the threats were made by deceased. Hudson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 785, 69 S. W. 1079. Admission of evidence in rebuttal which belongs to the state's case in chief. State v. Hunter [Iowa] 92 N. W. 872; Bryan v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 243; Davis v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 822. But see Mosley v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1811, 72 S. W. 344. The admission of evidence in rebuttal which should have been introduced in chief is not error of which the defendant can complain unless the trial court's discretion was abused to his prejudice. Porter v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 879. It is within the discretion of the court to permit counsel for the state to introduce evidence of which he learns after the state rests in chief. State v. Dunn [Mo.] 77 S. W. 848. Where one witness fixed the time of the offense as October and another stated generally that it was in the fall, and defendant proved an alibi for the month of October, it was not error to admit testimony in rebuttal fixing the time in September. Turpin v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 90, 74 S. W. 734. Where the clothes of a prosecuting witness have been previously identified, they may be exhibited to the jury after the state has closed its case. State v. Thornhill [Mo.] 76 S. W. 948. It is a matter of discretion with the court to reopen an examination of witnesses. State v. Robertson [La.] 35 So. 375.

27. Anthony v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 818; Duggan v. State, 116 Ga. 846; Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 969; Kelly v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 756; Ferrell v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 220. Refusal to allow defendant to be recalled after argument had commenced held error. Lewandowski v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 594. Reopen-mission of evidence on promise to connect it is error, where both the court and the district attorney knew that such connection could not be made.[28] The district attorney cannot be required to make a statement of what the state will undertake to prove before introducing evidence.[29] It is not error to exclude repetition[30] or cumulative evidence,[31] or evidence on a point covered by an admission.[32] Statutes sometimes permit the court in its discretion to allow a view.[33]

Remarks of the court are not ground for reversal unless both improper and harmful.[34] Private conference between court and counsel is to be avoided.[35]

ing for additional evidence is discretionary. Green v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 990. Refusal to reopen the case to allow statement by defendant held proper. Dunwoody v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 412. Under Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 5371, prescribing the order of proceedings in criminal cases it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to permit the defendant to explain certain statements alleged to have been made by him, after the evidence is concluded. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. By statute in some states evidence of material character may be introduced at any time before the closing of the argument. Fugett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 461.

28. Tijerina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 913.

29. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565.

30. State v. Rodman [Mo.] 73 S. W. 605. Exclusion of question calling for repetition of "exact words" not error and not harmful. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. Exclusion of question on cross-examination calling for repetition sustained. State v. Donovan [Vt.] 55 Atl. 611. Questioning a witness directly as to a certain matter after his denial thereof is not prejudicial error. Asking him whether he had not made a certain memorandum after his denial that it was in his handwriting. People v. Dowell [Cal.] 75 Pac. 45.

31. State v. Johnson [S. C.] 44 S. E. 58; Lockland v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1054.

32. Character of defendant. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 862.

33. Litton v. Com. [Va.] 44 S. E. 923. A statute authorizing the trial judge to permit the jury to view the place of the offense limits the inspection to inanimate objects [Pen. Code Mont. § 2097]. State v. Landry [Mont.] 74 Pac. 418.

34. Perry v. State, 116 Ga. 850. Remark that question was about an immaterial matter harmless. State v. May [Mo.] 72 S. W. 918. It is not prejudicial error for the court to remark in excluding testimony that he had ruled on a similar question before, and he desired the ruling of the court respected. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 790. Addressing prosecutrix as "my girl" harmless. State v. Burns [Iowa] 94 N. W. 238. Remark allowing comment by prosecuting attorney on occurrences in the court room held not to show bias. Clark v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 853. Remark that it was immaterial what defendant was doing several years before held not to belittle evidence of his good character. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 862. Remark on plat being offered and objected to "Tie a piece of red tape around it and go ahead with the case" is harmless. Ragland v. State [Ark.] 70 S. W. 1039. Reproaching jury in similar case for verdict of acquittal received during the trial not ground for reversal. Lehman v. D. C., 19 App. D. C. 217. Remark that delay was caused by request that charge be put in writing is harmless. Hodge v. State, 116 Ga. 852. Asking accused if he objects to the jury separating for meals is harmless. State v. Regard, 65 Kan. 716, 70 Pac. 634. Remark that examination of witness had been unusually protracted is harmless. Com. v. Coughlin, 182 Mass. 558. Remarks on evidence, which the jury are told to disregard is harmless. State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354; State v. Humphreys [Or.] 70 Pac. 824. Remark that evidence was not part of res gestae but might be considered as corroboration held error. Bradshaw v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 215. Where defendant's statement is rambling and irrelevant the court may admonish him to come to the issue. Long v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 416. Remark in admitting evidence that it was material, held not error. Cogdell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 311. Remark which might be construed as approving the explanation given by a witness of a mistaken statement held error. Potter v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 37. It is error for the court to ask an expert who had testified to defendant's insanity his opinion as to the sanity of the persons who had recently burned a negro accused of crime. Lowe v. State [Wis.] 96 N. W. 417. Telling counsel his "head is full of cobwebs" is indiscreet but not necessarily error. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. The court's remark in overruling a motion to open the case to admit other evidence that "it is no issue in this case, and the jury will disregard from their deliberations the matter suggested" is not a comment on the evidence and objectionable. State of Eubank [Wash.] 74 Pac. 378. The court should use no language within hearing of the jury tending to comment on the evidence. State v. Shuff [Idaho] 72 Pac. 664. The court should be careful in admonishing counsel either for state or defendant lest in so doing the influence of counsel may be improperly weakened or disparaged with the jury. Remarks of the trial judge in ruling on the admissibility of evidence held erroneous. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565.

35. Matters arising for decision should not be the subject of private conference between court and counsel. They should be heard and decided in presence of opposing counsel. Peaden v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 204.

36. Applauding of prosecuting attorney's

(§ 10) B. Arguments and conduct of counsel.[37]—In the absence of statute, the number[38] and order of the arguments,[39] and the length of time allowed,[40] is in the discretion of the court, though it is sometimes held that in a capital case any limitation of time is error.[41] It is the duty of the prosecuting attorney to see that defendant has a fair trial, and he should abstain from artifice and insinuation,[42] such as unfair conduct in offering evidence and examining witnesses[43] or jurors.[44] He may in his opening state any facts which he has a right to prove,[45] and argue the effect thereof.[46] He may in argument refer to his own lack of interest in the result,[47] to the necessity of enforcing the laws,[48] to the infrequency with which capital punishment has been inflicted in that locality,[49] to the manner of defendant during the trial,[50] and may discuss the evidence to the same extent as in a civil case,[51] and assert conclusions therefrom,[52] may make a diaargument held not prejudicial. State v. Cartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Concerted leaving of court room during argument of defendant's attorney held ground for reversal. State v. Wilcox, 131 N. C. 707.

37. Curing misconduct by withdrawal or admonition, see post, § 16.

38. Under the express provisions of Comp. St. § 2899, defendant has a right to be heard by two attorneys. Territory v. Sheron [N. M.] 70 Pac. 562. Where the statute gives a right to two arguments on each side the state may make two though defendant's counsel declined to argue the case. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 862.

39. Where documentary evidence has been introduced by defendant he is not entitled to open and close as having introduced no "testimony" [Pen. Code, § 1029]. Hargrove v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 58.

40. Allowing defendant's counsel 30 minutes where 15 witnesses were examined sustained. Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392. Allowance of 20 minutes sustained. Wright v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 819. Limitation to two hours on each side sustained in homicide case. Harris v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 1044.

41. State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3.

42. State v. Irwin [Idaho] 71 Pac. 608.

43. Repetition of questions as to past misconduct of defendant after ruling against the same. People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467; State v. Irwin [Idaho] 71 Pac. 608. Offering evidence which had been excluded on a former trial held not error. Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392. A statement that the state will not call a certain witness because it will not vouch for his credibility held not improper. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494. Questions designed only to create prejudice. Tijerina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 913. A state's attorney's remark: "Yes, it was an injustice not to let you testify in French" to a state's witness is without prejudice to the accused and no ground for setting aside the verdict. State v. Halliday [La.] 35 So. 380. Where a prosecuting attorney abandons a line of examination, to which objection is sustained, it is not misconduct in asking questions thereon. People v. Glaze [Cal.] 72 Pac. 965. An attempt by the prosecuting attorney to introduce the record of a previous conviction for larceny, is prejudicial. A justice of the peace was called, the fact that he had been justice of the peace established, and the prosecuting attorney then said: "I wish you would turn to your docket, State of Missouri v. John Rose, for larceny." State v. Rose [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1003. It is prejudicial error to place the defendant's wife, whom he had married the day before the trial, on the stand and compel him to object to her testimony against him. Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 497.

44. Error to ask jurors if they knew certain other persons under indictment for the same offense. State v. Meysenburg, 170 Mo. 1.

45. That before the crime defendant was shabbily dressed and without means of support. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Facts tending to show conspiracy. People v. Gorsline [Mich.] 94 N. W. 16. Where counsel in good faith stated his intention to prove incompetent matters but desisted promptly on intimation from the court that such proof was inadmissible there is no error. State v. Trusty [Iowa] 97 N. W. 989. Statements in opening not supported by evidence improper. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771. Highly prejudicial comments on the defendant's character by the prosecuting attorney in his opening statement are grounds for reversal. Marshall v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 584.

46. A statement that defendant must show what he did with certain bloody clothing is not objectionable as a statement that defendant must testify. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. A statement that the jury could act on their common knowledge that houses of prostitution could not run without the aid of the police is improper. People v. Bissert, 172 N. Y. 643.

47. Webb v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 487.

48. State v. John [Iowa] 93 N. W. 61. An appeal for conviction based only on the evidence is not improper. Parker v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1037. A statement that an acquittal would make the jury particeps criminis is ground for reversal. People v. Bissert, 172 N. Y. 643. Statement that the community having refrained from lynching defendant expected the jury to impose capital punishment is improper. Fredericson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 754. Remarks on tendency and dangers of lynching held proper where defendant was accused of murder by lynching. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188.

49. Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 89.

50. State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354.

51. People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165. A statement that defendant offers no contradiction but his own testimony is proper if gram to illustrate his argument,[53] or use a plat not in evidence which has been referred to by defendant's counsel,[54] may read the statute under which the prosecution was had,[55] and where the jury are judges of the law, may read reported decisions.[56] He should not refer to matters outside the issues[57] or not sustained by the evidence,[58] nor state his personal belief of defendant's guilt.[59] He cannot argue that objections made to testimony show a desire to avoid disclosure of the facts[60] or that requesting a charge on mitigation was an admission of guilt;[61] nor can he comment on failure of defendant to offer evidence of his good character.[62] Defendant's failure to call his wife as a witness,[63] or to call a witness who testified on a former trial,[64] is a proper subject of comment; but his own failure to testify cannot be referred to.[65] Where defendant goes on the stand, the de-true. Hawkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 756. Refusal to interfere with illogical or baseless argument not error. Suggestion that witnesses who had come from a distance were all untrustworthy because one was proven so. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. Statement that a certain saloonkeeper "and his gang" tried to prove an alibi for defendant when he was arrested held a proper comment on the evidence. Hawkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 756. Difference in conduct of policemen after they discovered that accused was an officer may be commented on. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55. Statement that if all but one were shown innocent the remaining one must be guilty and that he dared defendant to arraign the other men in the neighborhood held not misconduct. Alderson v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 679. Remark of prosecuting attorney as to the manner in which confession was made held not ground for reversal. State v. Nelson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 652. So long as counsel is within the issues and evidence the manner of making his argument is within the discretion of the trial court. People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333. Argument based on the evidence that another crime was the motive for the one in issue is admissible. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265. Where the evidence shows that defendant had been in the penitentiary, the prosecuting attorney may allude thereto in argument. May state that defendant's name is written on the walls of the penitentiary. State v. Boyd [Mo.] 76 S. W. 979. Remarks of prosecuting attorney in commenting on evidence held to be a legitimate argument. Ingram v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 304. It is not error for the prosecuting attorney to state to the jury in his arguments, facts intended only as an illustration, not intending them to be used as facts in the case or to become factors in the formation of the verdict. Dennis v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 651.

53. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751.

54. Crawford v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 762.

55. The prosecution was for seduction and the statute read contained a provision that if defendant marry the woman after conviction it barred the penalty. State v. Dent, 170 Mo. 398.

56. Counsel may read judicial opinions with so much of the facts therein as are proper to the understanding thereof. Cribb v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 396.

57. Statement that defendant's counsel was employed only in desperate cases held improper but harmless. Johnson v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 842, 70 S. W. 44. Statement that defendant intended to commit also a crime not charged is improper. Long v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 224. On prosecution under liquor laws, a reference to a murder growing from violation thereof is improper. State v. Tuten, 131 N. C. 701. Statement that had defendant married prosecutrix his parents would have had no cause to mourn held not error. State v. Burns [Iowa] 94 N. W. 238. Refusal to permit argument on excluded issue is proper. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025.

58. Reference to unproven statement of state's witness corroborating his testimony improper. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. Statement that certain witnesses not called were subpoenaed by defendant improper. State v. Goode [N. C.] 43 S. E. 502. The mere fact that a club was found near the scene of the murder does not support a theory that the crime was committed therewith, and it is error to allow argument based thereon. People v. Montgomery [N. Y.] 68 N. E. 258. In arguing on motive it is not error for counsel to state that "there was some mysterious feeling of jealousy between defendant and deceased, which under the law the state was not permitted to show." State v. Dunn [Mo.] 77 S. W. 848.

59. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321.

60. Com. v. Coughlin, 182 Mass. 558.

61. White v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 177.

62. Failure of defendant to put his reputation in issue cannot be referred to. Cline v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 23. Urging inferences from the failure of defendant to offer evidence of his good character is improper. State v. Williams [Iowa] 97 N. W. 992. Except where defendant's counsel in argument asked why the state did not attack it. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 962. Comment on failure of defendant to bring witnesses as to his character is not justified by argument for defendant commenting on failure to attack character. State v. Shipley [Mo.] 74 S. W. 612.

63. Richardson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 320; Locklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 305.

64. State v. Parker [Mo.] 72 S. W. 650.

65. State v. Stoffels [Minn.] 94 N. W. 675. Statement that certain evidence is not contradicted is not such a reference though defendant was the only one who could contradict it. State v. Snider [Iowa] 91 N. W. 762; State v. Hasty [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1115.

cisions are in conflict as to right to comment on his failure to testify as to certain matters.[66] The character and conduct of defendant as they appear in the evidence may be referred to,[67] but abusive language is improper.[68] Explanations of procedure and in anticipation of the charge are of doubtful propriety.[69] A statement as to what was done during the deliberations of a jury at a former trial is not regarded as a reference to a former conviction within a statutory prohibition.[70]

Argument by defendant's counsel.[71]—Counsel may be stopped from arguing before the jury a proposition of law contrary to the well established law of the state.[72] If counsel for defendant is permitted to go outside the record in argument, the state may do likewise in answering it.[73]

People v. Hammond [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1084. A statement that only defendant and prosecutrix knew the facts; that prosecutrix had told her story and there was nothing to prove it untrue, is a reference to defendant's failure to testify. People v. Payne [Mich.] 91 N. W. 739. Statement that when defendant's counsel said that the witnesses for the prosecution were the only persons who knew certain facts he forgot his client is not improper. People v. Hammond [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1084. Though the reference be made by way of disclaimer of intent to urge any inference therefrom it is reversible error. Jackson v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 243. Discussion of defendant's failure to testify is ground for reversal though the jurors concurred in saying that it did not influence them. Fine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 806. An allusion to defendant's failure to testify need not be direct in order to justify a reversal. In alluding to an absence of proof, the prosecuting attorney pointed his finger at defendant, and the court cautioned and directed the jury to disregard his remarks in such connection and also reprimanded the attorney. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 810. A remark of the prosecuting attorney in his argument that "there sits as guilty a man as was ever tried for stealing a horse, and why is there not some one here to deny these things?" is not improper as calling the jury's attention to the fact that the defendant did not testify. Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29.

66. Where defendant goes on the stand his failure to testify as to certain matters cannot be commented on. State v. Guinn [Mo.] 74 S. W. 614. Prosecuting attorney may comment on the accused's testimony failing to deny statements made by other witnesses. People v. Wong Bin [Cal.] 72 Pac. 505.

67. Statement that it would be best for defendant's father if defendant were convicted sustained. Puckett v. State [Ark.] 70 S. W. 1041. Statement that defendant had been arrested so often that he could not remember how often held proper. Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 871. Severe arraignment of defendant sustained. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 950, 70 S. W. 295. Statement that after the crime everybody went to see about defendant held error. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. Remark that certain conduct was appropriate for the stage but should not be permitted in real life held harmless. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55. It is not cause for reversal of a conviction of manslaughter that the prosecuting attorney in his argument referred to the accused as a murderer and the crime as the most tragic ever committed in the county. Carroll v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 471.

68. Statement that the defense was "brutal, cowardly and contemptible," and that had prosecutrix had male relatives no trial would be needed is improper. People v. Payne [Mich.] 91 N. W. 739. That defendant was a bad man held not improper. People v. McDonald [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1064. Reference to defendant as a "brute" held not misconduct where the evidence showed rape with circumstances of aggravation. State v. Allen [Mo.] 74 S. W. 839. Reference to defendant as an "assassin" and a "snake" held not improper. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Reference to the crime as one of the worst ever committed in the county held not ground for reversal. Fredericson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 754.

69. Reference to right of appeal and to the pardoning power held not ground for reversal. State v. Rodman [Mo.] 73 S. W. 605. Remark that case was moved pending an election because of strenuous efforts by defendant to delay it held not ground for new trial. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55. Argument and illustration that however weak the evidence the court was bound to submit an issue approved. Hudson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 764.

70. Code Crim. Proc. 1895, art. 823. Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 10. An accidental reference to defendant's former trial as a conviction is not reversible error where the prosecuting attorney corrected the mistake in his argument on his attention being called to it, and the court instructed the jury to disregard the remark. Dina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 229.

71. Where it appears that the principal witness for the state appeared also against other persons who were acquitted, defendant's attorney is entitled to comment thereon. State v. Hall [N. C.] 44 S. E. 553. Counsel for the accused cannot make statements in the presence of the jury making admissions against him, and it is error to instruct the jury that they may consider such statements. State v. Shuff [Idaho] 72 Pac. 664. Comment on defendant's refusal to answer questions of police after arrest as indicating guilt held not improper. People v. McDonald [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1064.

72. As that a verbal agreement of the accused and his victim to take each other for man and wife constitutes marriage.

(§ 10) C. Questions of law and fact.—Questions of fact in criminal cases are peculiarly within the province of the jury.[74] Among such questions are the place where the offense was committed,[75] the credibility of witnesses,[76] sufficiency of evidence,[77] even where it is uncontradicted.[78] Whether defendant was extradited for the offense on trial,[79] or whether the warrant is valid,[80] are questions of law. The right of counsel to appear is a question of law for the court.[81]

(§ 10) D. Taking case from jury.—In some states peremptory directions for acquittal are not allowed,[82] and even when proper, the giving thereof is discretionary.[83] If matter of absolute defense is admitted in the prosecutor's opening statement, the court may on its own or counsel's motion direct an acquittal.[84] Where there is evidence to support a conviction, the case should not be withdrawn from the jury.[85] In passing on a demurrer to evidence, every part of it should be considered.[86] A motion to exclude the evidence from the jury because it is insufficient to convict is not equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence.[87]

(§ 10) E. Instructions. Necessity and duty of charging—Requests. Even where the jury are judges of the law, the court may give instructions.[88] The jury should be instructed as to the issues,[89] the theories of the prosecution and defendant,[90] the elements of the offense charged,[91] and the defense urged,[92] and as

State v. Menard [La.] 35 So. 360. The jury are judges of the law subject only to the supervision of the court and the court is not bound to sit by and let wrong propositions of the law be argued to them. Id.

73. Gipson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 216. Not error to allude to convictions in another county of other persons in answer to an argument by defendant's counsel that he had never heard of such a case. Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 10.

76. Parker v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1037. Defendant. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494. Credibility of uncontradicted witnesses is for jury. Townsend v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 382.

77. Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392; Powers v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1007, 70 S. W. 644. Conspiracy is not a jury question until a prima facie case is made. Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993. Where there is any evidence tending to connect defendant with the crime, its sufficiency to corroborate an accomplice is for the jury; but if there is no evidence the question is one of law. People v. O'Farrell, 175 N. Y. 323.

89. Not as to a count which has been dismissed. Oakley v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 693. Where prosecution has elected between several acts, the jury should be confined to that on which it has elected to stand. Price v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 966. Premeditated murder and killing in perpetration of burglary are not so inconsistent as to preclude submission of both. People v. Sullivan, 173 N. Y. 122. The law of the case should be charged though not requested. Ter. v. Baca [N. M.] 71 Pac. 460.

90. Ter. v. Baca [N. M.] 71 Pac. 460. Defendant's theory as to his possession of stolen goods should be presented. State v. Brady [Iowa] 91 N. W. 801. A theory arising only from the statement of defendant need not be charged. Walker v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 737. Instruction held to sufficiently present theory of defendant that prosecution was result of a conspiracy against him. People v. Rich [Mich.] 94 N. W. 375. Failure to charge on one of two theories of defense not error in absence of request. Smith v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 703. But see Feinstein v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1052.

91. All essentials must be given in an instruction purporting to state them. Goldsberry v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 906. It is error to refer the jury to the indictment for the elements of the crime. Ter. v. Baca [N. M.] 71 Pac. 460. A charge as to acts in pursuance of a conspiracy to do an unlawful act should define an unlawful act. Powers v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1007, 70 S. W. 644; Id., 24 Ky. L. R. 1186, 70 S. W. 1050. Where other offenses are shown to prove guilty knowledge, it is not necessary to instruct fully as to the elements thereof. Goldsberry v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 906. Degree of care required of physician on trial for negligent homicide. People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 294. Where all the elements of the crime are stated failure to define it is not error. State v. Douette [Wash.] 71 Pac. 556. Where deceased was knocked down with an ax and robbed an instruction as to murder in perpetration of to the burden of proof.[93] Where the jury do not fix the penalty, they need not be instructed as to the legal extent thereof.[94] Technical terms used in the instructions should be defined.[95] Where evidence is admissible only for a particular purpose, there should be an instruction limiting its effect.[96] The authorities are in conflict as to the propriety of instructing, even on request, that no inference is to be drawn from defendant's failure to testify.[97]

Aside from the definition of the issues, defendant cannot complain of failure to instruct unless he has requested an instruction.[98] The time for making re-robbery need not define robbery. Ransom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 960.

92. Charge as to limitations should be given where the evidence would sustain it. State v. Kunhl [Iowa] 93 N. W. 342. Instruction as to defense shown only by statement of defendant must be specially requested. Walker v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 608; Murphy v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 609.

93. Instruction as to burden of proof should be given. State v. Hardelein, 169 Mo. 579. An instruction that the evidence must be so convincing as to lead the minds of the jury to a conclusion of guilt should be given. Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 429. Instructions held adequate in the absence of request. Cremar v. People [Colo.] 70 Pac. 415. It is not error for the court to refuse to define "reasonable doubt," telling the jury that he deems the phrase sufficiently intelligible. Meehan v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 173. Error to refuse to define "reasonable doubt." Davis v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 76.

94. Edwards v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1038.

95. "Falsely" and "fraudulently" need not be defined. State v. Gregory, 170 Mo. 598. Failure of an instruction to define the terms "right" and "fraudulently" in a prosecution for appropriating funds fraudulently and without right, is error. State v. Com. [Ky.] 75 S. W. 244. Definitions of words used in the instructions must be specially requested. State v. Atkins [Iowa] 97 N. W. 996.

96. When prior acts and declarations of co-conspirators are admitted in evidence the jury should be instructed that the separate and individual acts of other conspirators should not be considered against defendant for the purpose of establishing a conspiracy as to defendant. Chapman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 477. Where extraneous agreements are introduced on cross-examination of defendant as a witness for the purpose of affecting his credibility, it is error for the court to fail to limit the effect of such testimony to such purpose. Scoville v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 792. A charge on the acts and conduct of other conspirators in the absence of defendant need not be given where the evidence is positive that defendant was present. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. Where evidence is admitted to corroborate a witness after an attempt has been made to impeach him, the jury need not be instructed as to the effect thereof where there is no danger that it will be appropriated by the jury for any other purpose. Id. It is the duty of the court where extraneous crimes are introduced on a controverted question of intent to limit the same to that purpose. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 928. Proof of inconsistent statements should be limited to effect on credibility of witness. Mosley v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1811, 72 S. W. 344; Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 382; Olds v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 296; Fuqua v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2204, 73 S. W. 782. Instruction as to the weight to be given an admission that an absent witness would testify as stated in an application for continuance approved. McCormick v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 606. It is error to fail to limit evidence of conspiracy introduced on a trial for murder. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1225, 70 S. W. 1055. Evidence of other offenses should be limited by instructions. Grant v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 954; Peterson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 978. Where a previous conviction of another crime has been shown by defendant in aid of his defense, it is not error to fail to instruct that previous conviction is to be considered only as to defendant's credibility. Turpin v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 734.

97. Under statutory provisions that the failure of accused to testify shall not be commented upon, it is not to be alluded to even in a cautionary instruction apparently beneficial to accused [Cr. Code, § 223, subs. 1]. Tines v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 363. An instruction that defendant's failure to testify is not to be considered against him is proper. Grant v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 954. If the court charge on the subject of defendant's failure to testify, there must be an instruction to the jury not to discuss or consider such failure. Fine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 806. That the "statute expressly declares that defendant's neglect to testify shall not create any presumption against him," under 2 Ballinger, Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 6941, approved. State v. Mitchell [Wash.] 72 Pac. 707.

99. Requests should be allowed after charge and before jury retire. State v. Barry [N. D.] 92 N. W. 809. It is too late to request a written charge after the court has commenced his charge and the case has been submitted to the jury. State v. Forbes, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 710.

1. By White's Ann. Code Proc. art. 719 requests must be in writing. Bush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 550. A mere verbal request to charge on a certain point is insufficient. Cupps v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 210; State v. Carey [Conn.] 56 Atl. 632. Where it is required that requests be signed by counsel, unsigned requests may be disregarded. Starr v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 527.

Where witnesses testifying in chief contradict each other as to a fact, special instructions as to impeachment are not necessary. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. An omission, in the charge, to confine the venue to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed is not erroneous where there is no question as to the proof of venue. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. Evidence that defendant was the principal offender held not to require submission of question whether he was only an accessory. Early v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1181, 70 S. W. 1061. Charge on responsibility of accessory warranted (abortion). State v. Carey [Conn.] 56 Atl. 632. Sham character of alleged first marriage on trial for bigamy. People v. Goodrode [Mich.] 94 N. W. 14.

Circumstantial evidence. Trejo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 546; Stewart v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 791. Evidence held not to require instruction on circumstantial evidence. Cowan v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 193; People v. Rich [Mich.] 94 N. W. 375. Where circumstantial evidence is corroborative of direct testimony it is not error to refuse instructions assuming the case to be one of circumstantial evidence. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586. A charge on circumstantial evidence need not be given where there is direct testimony. Dying declarations and testimony of eye witnesses in homicide. Cruse v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 818. Instruction as to circumstantial evidence held not required. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. A charge made to circumstantial evidence need not be given where there is testimony of eye witnesses to the crime. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 802. Where the evidence of larceny is possession of the stolen goods, a charge on circumstantial evidence should be given. Cortez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 907; Davis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 544; Carano v. State, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 93; Roberts v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 423.

Alibi: Evidence held not to require instruction as to alibi. State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354. Where defendant is first connected with stolen cattle at the time of an alleged purchase, a charge on alibi should be given though there is no direct evidence thereof, the state being compelled to rely on circumstantial evidence to overcome the defense of purchase. Sapp v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 456.

Character of defendant. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489. Rev. St. § 2627 providing for an instruction on character "whenever necessary" requires such an instruction whenever there is evidence on which to base it. State v. Anslinger, 171 Mo. 600. Evidence of good character as to traits not involved in the charge does not require a charge on character. State v. Anslinger, 171 Mo. 600.

Accomplice testimony. Melton v. State, 116 Ga. 582; State v. Meysenburg, 171 Mo. 1; Truelove v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 601; State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 983. Where the evidence in incest shows the woman an accomplice the jury should be instructed that submission without objection renders her an accomplice if resistance or objection would have prevented the act though she is not actuated by the same intent as defendant. Tate v. State [Tex. Cr.

to an instruction based on his own testimony.[4] Matters once covered by the charge need not be repeated.[5] Instructions need not be given in the language of

App.] 77 S. W. 793. Failure to charge on accomplice testimony is not error, there being no evidence that any of the witnesses were accomplices. Reyna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 25. Though one receiving stolen goods ought from the circumstances to have known that they were stolen, in the absence of evidence that he did, a charge on accomplice testimony need not be given. Short v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 11.

Confession. Simmons v. State, 116 Ga. 583. A statement by defendant at the time of arrest that two others should be arrested on the same charge is not a confession requiring the jury to be instructed as to confessions out of court [Cr. Code, § 240]. Tipton v. Com. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 174.

Insanity: Where there is no evidence of insane delusions, an instruction as to their effect as a defense is properly refused. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265. A charge of insanity is not justified by evidence merely going to show that defendant was not strong minded. Griffith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 347. Evidence held not to show any permanent condition of insanity authorizing an instruction as to the presumption that such insanity continues when once established. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265.

Submission of included offenses: Charge that any of certain grades or degrees may be found without defining each held bad. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129. It is not error to refuse to instruct as to a lesser grade of an offense, where under the evidence the defendant is guilty of a higher grade if guilty at all. State v. Ryno [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1114. Although the evidence tends to show one guilty of the highest degree of an offense it is not error for the court to instruct that the charge included a lesser degree of the offense. State v. Howard [Wash.] 74 Pac. 382. Where the commission of an offense is admitted, the only question in issue being the degree of guilt, an instruction cannot charge an included offense upon which a conviction cannot be had under the evidence. Assault and battery not submitted in an indictment for mayhem where the loss of a member is admitted. Carpenter v. People [Wash.] 72 Pac. 1072. An instruction taking from the jury's consideration any question of a less grade of a crime than the highest, is not erroneous where the evidence shows that he is guilty of the highest grade or not at all. State v. Privitt [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 457. It is not reversible error to instruct as to a less degree of crime not in issue, where the court has instructed that the accused under the evidence was either guilty of the highest degree or not at all. Id. See, also, such titles as Homicide.

3. State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132. Instruction as to probative effect of specified facts which the evidence did not show is error. Echols v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 409. Where no evidence of good character is introduced, a charge that character is always an issue in a trial for a criminal offense, and a refusal to charge otherwise is error. Such error held not cured by subsequent remarks as to presumption of good character. People v. Slauson, 83 N. Y. Supp. 107. Instruction as to the presumption arising from the nature of the instrument with which a homicide is committed as to intent should not be given where the entire defense is insanity. Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. A charge on a plea of insanity should be applied to the particular offense for which defendant is to be tried. An abstract definition of insanity is not sufficient. Stewart v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 791.

4. State v. Tough [N. D.] 96 N. W. 1025. An instruction as to a defense shown only by the statement of defendant must be specially requested. Walker v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 608; Murphy v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 609.

the request,[6] and the request may be modified,[7] though it is proper to refuse a whole instruction where part is bad.[8] It has been held, however, that when an incorrect request is made the court should correctly instruct on that subject if it has not done so.[9]

Submission of charge.—The manner in which instructions shall be submitted is usually in the discretion of the court,[10] though statutes in some states require that instructions be in writing.[11]

Form of instructions in general.—Instructions should not be argumentative in form.[12] No one matter should be given undue prominence,[13] as by repetition.[14]

v. Mehaffey [N. C.] 44 S. E. 107. Instruction for acquittal if evidence including that of good character raised reasonable doubt, held covered by general charge. Christie v. People [Ill.] 69 N. E. 33.

6. State v. Anderson, 30 Wash. 14, 70 Pac. 104; People v. Quimby [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1061; State v. Wilcox [N. C.] 44 S. E. 625.

7. Modification of request as to voluntary character of confessions held correct. Meul v. People, 198 Ill. 258. Request as to weight "if any" of dying declaration held properly modified by striking out words quoted. State v. Hendricks [Mo.] 73 S. W. 194. Modification held to classify charge as to considering conduct of parties. Id. Substitution of "beyond a reasonable doubt" for "clearly and conclusively" held proper. Id.

8. State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 983. Request for "following * * * Nos. 1, 2, 3" is for an entire charge and will be refused if any is bad. Verberg v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 848.

9. Admissions. State v. Hendricks [Mo.] 73 S. W. 194.

10. Giving to the jury written instructions signed by counsel is not good practice. State v. McDonald, 27 Mont. 230, 70 Pac. 724. Statutes requiring specially requested instructions to be in writing and signed by the party or his attorney is for the purpose of identification only and it is not reversible error for the court to permit the county attorney to sign with his official title instructions requested by him, and given to the jury [under Act Mont. Feb. 15, 1901, and Sess. Laws 1901, p. 173]. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. It is proper for the court, under a statute requiring written instructions, to take the instructions submitted by the state and by the defendant, giving such instructions from each as he thought properly stated the law, and marking those portions rejected with a lead pencil. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557.

11. An oral statement of the penalty is not a violation of such a statute. Bush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 550. Nor is a mere statement "I will now read you the instructions for the state." State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354. Statement that an instruction is given in connection with the general charge is not a violation. Holmes v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 180. Instruction may be orally explained. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. Directions as to form of verdict given when it is returned are not within the statute. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. Oral statement as to the hour at which the court will return to receive a verdict are not. Williams v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1014. Oral instruction as to character evidence held a violation of the statute though given to correct improper argument of the prosecuting attorney. State v. Shipley [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 612. Under a statute requiring instructions to be written the calling in of the jury after they had retired and asking them as to the possibility of their agreeing upon a verdict are not such instructions. U. S. v. Densmore [N. M.] 75 Pac. 31. Mere directions as to form after verdict in capital case is found for lesser degree need not be in writing. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287; explaining Hubbard v. State, 37 Fla. 156 and statutes.

12. State v. Buralli [Nev.] 71 Pac. 532; State v. Stentz [Wash.] 74 Pac. 588. The court may refuse an instruction charging the jury that they might consider that innocent men had been convicted and the danger of convicting an innocent man. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586. Reference to "humane provision of the law." Bohlman v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 44. Charges as to what might be the effect of a verdict on the moral elevation or degradation of the negro race held argumentative. Pope v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 840. Charge to receive dying declarations with caution because not highest evidence is argumentative. Tarver v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 627. On degree of certainty of proof held argumentative. Smith v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 396. Instructions as to circumstantial evidence of embezzlement held argumentative. Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 429. Instruction as to self defense held argumentative. Deal v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 23. Suggestions as to motives of defendant held argumentative. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. Instruction as to circumstantial evidence held argumentative. Deal v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 23. That contradictory statements by a certain witness might raise a doubt is argumentative. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. It is not prejudicial error for the court to state in an instruction, where self-defense is pleaded, that the court would give a number of instructions based on this "claim." People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745.

13. State v. Buralli [Nev.] 71 Pac. 532. Singling out certain facts. State v. Dodds [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 228. Singling out certain testimony as raising reasonable doubt. Bird v. U. S., 187 U. S. 118, 47 Law. Ed. 100; Wallace v. U. S., 18 App. D. C. 152. Instructions invading the province of the jury, singling out and emphasizing specific parts of the testimony to be considered without reference to the other parts. Baldwin v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 220. An instruction laying special stress upon a single phase of the evidence is properly denied. Thayer v. State [Ala.]

The charge is to be construed as a whole, and deficiencies in one part may be cured by other parts,[15] and withdrawal of an erroneous charge will cure the error;[16] but other independent instructions will not suffice.[17] Introductory remarks as to the gravity of the offense are not improper.[18]

Invading province of jury or charging on facts.—Instructions must not invade the province of the jury,[19] withdraw issues as to which there is evidence,[20] or assume the existence of facts[21] not admitted or undisputed.[22] In many states the 35 So. 406. An instruction which groups and duly accentuates certain facts, is erroneous. Tines v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 363.

14. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 195. Particular mention of previous conviction of defendant in addition to general instruction on credibility held not error. Keating v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 980.

15. People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745; Porter v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 879. The appellate court will not base an error upon a single instruction. Territory v. Garcia [N. M.] 75 Pac. 34; Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892; U. S. v. Densmore [N. M.] 75 Pac. 31; Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287; People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55; State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132; State v. Possession of stolen goods. Roberts v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 803. Malice. Downing v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 833. Burden of proof. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55. It is not error that an instruction taken alone is subject to exceptions; if taken together with adjoining instructions it is sufficient. Baldwin v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 220. An incorrectly stated abstract proposition of law in an instruction is harmless error if taking the instruction together with the other instructions no harm is done. Harper v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 572. But an instruction making an incorrect concrete application of the law to facts not sustaining it cannot be cured by other instructions. Directing a verdict on facts not sufficient to sustain it. Harper v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 572. Omission promptly supplied on request no ground of exception. Reeves v. State, 117 Ga. 38.

18. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942.

19. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. An instruction telling the jury what presumptions arise from certain stated facts, invades the province of the jury. Tines v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 363. That an admission in previous testimony was voluntary does not. State v. Burrell, 27 Mont. 282, 70 Pac. 982. That evidence of detectives should be weighed with greater care than in other cases but should not be disregarded does not. Everson v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 394. That interest of defendant may be considered does not. Territory v. Taylor [N. M.] 71 Pac. 489. Instructions in hypothetical form are not. Monceveis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 94. Classification of witnesses as to credibility held improper. State v. Tuttle, 67 Ohio St. 440. That the guilt of defendant depends on the testimony of a certain witness is improper. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. The province of the jury in assessing the fine cannot be invaded by an instruction that the maximum fine would not be excessive. Rollings v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 349. Charge not to disregard testimony of defendant simply because he is defendant invades province of jury. Stevens v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 122.

20. As to whether accomplices of defendant aided him in aggression. Deal v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 23. An instruction cannot be given so as to take from the jury the importance of the facts given in evidence. Instruction held not to do so. People v. Lagroppo, 86 N. Y. Supp. 116. That there was no evidence to show conspiracy is error. Martin v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 205.

21. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129; Dolan v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 52; State v. Buralli [Nev.] 71 Pac. 532; Hodge v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 370. An instruction charging the jury if they found the defendant had fled they should consider the fact of flight as a circumstance in establishing his guilt is not erroneous as assuming that the defendant had fled. State v. Stentz [Wash.] 74 Pac. 588. Error to assume ownership of embezzled property. State v. Bonner [Mo.] 77 S. W. 463. Where the fact of a conversation is controverted, the jury should not be instructed that evidence thereto should be considered only on the credibility of the witnesses. Spivey v. State, [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. An assumption of a contradiction between witnesses of defendant is erroneous. Dina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 229. An instruction cannot assume as an admitted fact any essential element of the crime, in the absence of such an admission by the defendant. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. Instruction that "if the proof of the alibi," etc., assumes that was such proof. Bohlman v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 44. Instruction as to aiding and abetting not adding "if he did kill" deceased does not assume facts if the jury have been instructed that they must find that the principal killed deceased. Fuqua v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2204, 73 S. W. 782. Assuming existence of good faith in alleged embezzlement. Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 429. Assumption that defendant was aggressor. Hammond v. People, 199 Ill. 173. That certain facts would not justify defendant in killing deceased assumes that he did. State v. Marsh, 171 Mo. 522. Charge held not to assume that if defendant used premises where liquor was found the liquor was in his possession. State v. Stevens [Iowa] 94 N. W. 241. An instruction that it was conceded that deceased died "under the circumstances" stated refers to the time, etc., of death and not to defendant's agency therein and hence does not assume disputed facts. Bliss v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 325. A charge that "statements" of the accused are immaterial does not assume that they were made. State v. Riddell [Wash.] 74 Pac. 477. An instruction that defendant cannot be convicted on the testimony of an accomplice unless it is corroborated assumes the truth of such testimony. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 845.

22. Cupps v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 210. Where the question in issue was the defendant's participation. Koners v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 25; State v. Johnson [S. C.] 44 S. E. 58; Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 960; State v. Nickels, 65 S. C. 169; State v. McKnight [Iowa] 93 N. W. 63. Assumption of affray proper where killing is undisputed. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. Assumption of fact conclusively shown. State v. Evans [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1008. Not error to refer to a thing as fact which testimony of both sides showed. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129.

23. Crawford v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 762; State v. Barry [N. D.] 92 N. W. 809. Const. Wash. art. 4, § 16. State v. Mitchell [Wash.] 72 Pac. 707. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 2061 providing for the jury to be charged that they should view with distrust the testimony of an accomplice, and the oral admissions of a party with caution is unconstitutional as repugnant to the injunction against charges on matters of fact. People v. Wardrip [Cal.] 74 Pac. 744.

Held to be on weight of evidence: Instruction as to the effect of evidence brought out on cross-examination of witnesses as to character, that defendant had been in the penitentiary, held erroneous as on the weight of the evidence and singling out that particular fact. Holloway v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 14. Instruction held on the weight of the evidence which states that if recently stolen property was found in possession of defendant, and that when first challenged he gave an explanation of his possession, which was reasonable, etc., then it devolved on the state to show the falsity of such explanation. Dyer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 456. Calling attention to other crimes as probative of intent is on the weight of evidence. Glenn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 757. An instruction which tells the jury that impeaching evidence is for the sole purpose of aiding the jury in passing on the credibility of the witnesses and in determining the weight to be attached to their evidence is not a charge on the weight of the testimony. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. The statement that possession and claim of title under a forged instrument, raised a presumption of forgery, is not a comment on the evidence. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. That possession of stolen goods could be taken as a circumstance against defendant. McCulloh v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 278. That certain acts are symptoms of insanity. Porter v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 694. That negative evidence is of less value than positive. Sumpter v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 981. Statement that certain evidence "can only be considered as tending to show." Reese v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 424. That certain facts are sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt. State v. Vance, 29 Wash. 435, 70 Pac. 34. That the testimony of prosecutrix should be carefully considered. Knowles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 398. That possession of stolen goods is a "strong criminating circumstance." Roberts v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 803. A statement that evidence had been introduced "tending to show" certain facts. Hollar v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 961; Cortez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 907; Cavaness v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 908. But see People v. Walker, 83 N. Y. Supp. 372. An instruction that the question is not whether defendant was a person of strong or weak mind. Angel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 553. A statement that the evidence tends to show mutual combat. Stephens v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 619. "Murder or nothing." Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993. A peremptory instruction for conviction. Potts v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 31.

Held not on weight of evidence: A statement of the issues and of all the evidence relied on is not forbidden by a constitutional prohibition of charges on matters of fact. State v. Johnson [S. C.] 44 S. E. 58. An instruction as to a fact judicially known (that alcohol is an intoxicant). Sebastian v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 849. Instruction that to convict the jury must be satisfied of certain facts. State v. Douette [Wash.] 71 Pac. 556. Instruction that circumstantial evidence shall receive the same weight as other evidence. State v. Johnson [S. C.] 44 S. E. 58. An instruction that good character was a circumstance but not convincing. State v. Newton, 29 Wash. 373, 70 Pac. 31. An instruction that all evidence is real evidence. State v. Manning [Vt.] 54 Atl. 181. An instruction that if defendant committed certain acts constituting the crime he should be convicted. Valles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 598; State v. Fenton, 30 Wash. 325, 70 Pac. 741. That a certain witness was an accomplice not improper where the evidence conclusively shows it. Winfield v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 182.

24. State v. Barry [N. D.] 92 N. W. 809; Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287; Dozier v. State, 116 Ga. 583; Ashford v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 174. An instruction that the jury are to determine whether an alleged purchase was sham does not intimate an opinion that it was. Bowers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 284. Charge calling attention pointedly to facts impairing the credit of testimony held to intimate an opinion. People v. Goodrode [Mich.] 94 N. W. 14.

25. Instruction that jury should not disbelieve as jurors if they believe as men held proper. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321. An instruction that the presumption of innocence remains with defendant until overcome by evidence is proper. Hodge v. State, 116 Ga. 929. Instruction to acquit if evidence cannot be reconciled with innocence is error. Ter. v. Baca [N. M.] 71 Pac. 460. An instruction that certain proof raises a presumption of guilt is error. State v. Brady [Iowa] 91 N. W. 801. An instruction defining preponderance of evidence is improper. State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668. That accused is to be acquitted if the jury "determine he is not guilty beyond a reasonable doubt" is open to misunderstanding and erroneous. Williams v. State, 116 Ga. 525. An instruction to acquit if there was evidence supporting any theory of innocence is improper. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321. Instruction held not to require defendant to explain his possession of stolen goods beyond a reasonable doubt. Landreth v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 758. An instruction may not charge the jury that the burden is on the accused to prove himself not guilty of a specific degree of a proven crime. Instruction held not to so charge. State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489. An instruction that if the jury did not believe defendant committed the crime they should acquit is misleading. McNish v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 219. An instruction for acquittal in case of a reasonable doubt arising from any part of the evidence is error. Holmes v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 180. Instruction for acquittal if jury doubted evidence of a certain witness properly refused. Id. An instruction that if the jury have a doubt as to the identity of defendant they should acquit is sufficient without saying that they should be convinced by the evidence. Ellison v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 188. An instruction that defendant should be acquitted unless the jury are satisfied of his guilt beyond reasonable doubt is adequate. Loose v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 526. An instruction that the presumption of innocence remains with defendant until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt does not shift the burden of proof. Van Syoc v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 266. Definition sustained as against objection that it tended to lead jury to believe that they should start with an assumption of guilt and convict unless a reasonable doubt was proved. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942. That the presumption of innocence continues until the material allegations are established by evidence excluding all reasonable doubt is correct. Edwards v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1038. An instruction that the finding of stolen goods in defendant's possession casts on him the burden of explaining such possession is not erroneous. State v. King [Iowa] 96 N. W. 712. A general instruction for conviction in case guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt need not state the facts necessary to guilt but may refer to the indictment therefor. Christie v. People [Ill.] 69 N. E. 33. It is proper to refuse a charge that the jury are to take and consider all the evidence in the case in the light of their experience as reasonable, fair-minded men, and upon such consideration to doubt defendant's guilt means to acquit him. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. An instruction that if the jury have a doubt, arising from the evidence or lack of evidence, as to all the material allegations of the indictment, they will find the defendant guilty of such degree of crime as they believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, him to be guilty of, and, if guilty of no crime, then acquit, is confusing and misleading. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. Instruction that unless jury are satisfied of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt they should acquit is sufficient without saying that they should acquit if they had a doubt of guilt. Winfield v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 182; State v. Taylor, 171 Mo. 465. But see, as to the necessity of charging the alternative. Davidson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 808.

Degree in general: Should lead to conclusion that accused "cannot be innocent"—requires too much proof. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129. Instruction for acquittal in case of a "doubt" properly refused. State v. May [Mo.] 72 S. W. 918. An instruction for acquittal in case of the "slightest" reasonable doubt is properly refused. Goodlett v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 892. That defendant should be acquitted "if there was a possibility" that the witness against him was mistaken, properly refused. Wilson v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 171. An instruction that if the jury is not entirely satisfied of the defendant's guilt, they should acquit him exacts too high a degree of proof. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. As does also an instruction defining "beyond a reasonable doubt" as to be wholly satisfied or satisfied to a moral certainty. Id. It is not error to refuse to instruct for an acquittal if from the evidence there is a possibility of innocence, where the court has defined reasonable doubt in its charge. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. An instruction for acquittal in case of "any one fact" raising a reasonable doubt is properly refused. Deal v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 23.

Repetition in respect to particular issues: Reasonable doubt need not be repeated with each special charge. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. An instruction on presumptive innocence until the contrary is proved is not erroneous for not having "beyond a reasonable doubt" after the word "proved" where the court has properly defined reasonable doubt. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. The clause on reasonable doubt need not be repeated in connection with every charge. Price v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 966. A general instruction on reasonable doubt is sufficient and need not be repeated in connection with each item of evidence. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. Reasonable doubt as applied to a particular defense may be treated in another part of the charge than that relating to such defense. State v. Hutto [S. C.] 45 S. E. 13.

As to defenses: Where insanity must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, an instruction that if on all the evidence the jury entertain a doubt they must acquit is misleading. Porter v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 694. An instruction that the jury must be satisfied of insanity held proper. Com. v. Kilpatrick, 204 Pa. 218.

26. Approved charge set out. Com. v. Conroy [Pa.] 56 Atl. 427. Reasonable doubt held argumentative. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. "A doubt for which a reason may be given" sustained. State v. Patton [Kan.] 71 Pac. 840. Reasonable doubt from "any part" of evidence held erroneous as pretermitting all consideration of whole evidence. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025; Snath v. State, 137 Ala. 22. Instruction for conviction if a full consideration of the evidence produces a conviction of guilt which satisfies the mind to a reasonable certainty is correct. State v. Allen [Ohio] 67 N. E. 1053. It is not error to refuse an instruction defining moral certainty where the court has properly defined reasonable doubt. State v. Martin [Mont.] 74 Pac. 725. An instruction defining moral certainty is not prejudicial by use of the word "impression." People v. Lew Fook [Cal.] 75 Pac. 188. An instruction defining reasonable doubt as such a doubt as a man of reasonable intelligence can give some good reason for entertaining if he is called on to do so is proper. People v. Lagrappo, 86 N. Y. Supp. 116. Reasonable doubt—"Such real and substantial doubt as intelligent men may reasonably entertain on a careful consideration" etc. (Given as instruction.) State v. De Guglielmo [Del.] 55 Atl. 350. Reasonable doubt defined. State v. Walls [Del.] 56 Atl. 111. "Moral and not mathematical certainty required" is not error. Jackson v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 604. That moral certainty is the degree of proof which the law requires of moral evidence is confusing. People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 284. "A doubt arising out of the evidence for which the jury can give a reason" held imperfect but not ground for reversal. Caddell v. State, 136 Ala. 9. "Abiding conviction to a moral certainty" sustained. State v. Patton [Kan.] 71 Pac. 840. "Fully satisfied, satisfied to a moral certainty" held correct. State v. Wilcox [N. C.] 44 S. E. 625. "A doubt of guilt reasonably arising from all the evidence or want of evidence in the case" approved. Baker v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 566. It is not necessary to charge that a reasonable doubt may arise from the defendant's statement. Walker v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 850. Reasonable doubt may be defined in a series of instructions if correct as a whole. Johnson v. People, 202 Ill. 53. An instruction that the doubt must be actual and substantial not a mere possible doubt is correct. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. An instruction that a possibility of innocence will not acquit is proper. Id. It is not error to refuse to instruct that the evidence must be such that the jury would be willing to act on it in matters of the highest concern to themselves. Goodlett v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 892. That mathematical certainty is not required is proper. Hodge v. State, 116 Ga. 929. Definition of moral certainty as an impression produced by facts in which a reasonable mind feels coercion or necessity to act in accordance therewith held correct. People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 159, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270. That the doubt must be one arising on the whole evidence and not on any part thereof. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. Doubt which in the graver transactions of life would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause is correct. Martin v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 161. Requiring acquittal in case of reasonable doubt of guilt instead of reasonable doubt of material facts necessary to establish guilt is correct. Benge v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1466, 71 S. W. 648. "Reasonable, well founded doubt" not improper. State v. Mahoney [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1089. Charge on reasonable doubt held sufficient. State v. Pyscher [Mo.] 77 S. W. 836. A refusal to give a charge defining reasonable doubt as one that excludes every reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt, and only when no other supposition will reasonably account for all the conditions of the case can the conclusion of guilt be legitimately adopted is proper. Thayer v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 406. The term "reasonable doubt" means a "fair" doubt growing out of the testimony in the case, based upon reason and common sense; and not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt. State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 Pac. 227.

27. General instruction that defendant was to be acquitted if found to be insane at the time of the offense held sufficient. Miller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 20. An instruction that if defendant was insane to any degree he should be acquitted is incorrect. Copenhaver v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 453. An instruction that the defense of insanity is offered is error where evidence of insanity was introduced only to affect the weight of a confession. State v. Coats [Mo.] 74 S. W. 864. Instruction as to irresistible impulse sustained. People v. Quimby [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1061. Reading of part of a supreme court opinion in a will case as to insanity is improper. Lowe v. State [Wis.] 96 N. W. 417. That insanity is such a perverted and deranged condition of mental and moral faculties as renders a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong or not conscious at the time of the nature of the act which he is committing or where though conscious and able to distinguish between right and wrong yet his will has been otherwise than voluntarily destroyed so that his actions are not subject to it but are beyond his control is correct. Id. Instruction as to insanity held not to belittle the offense. Hoover v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 591. An instruction to find the defendant not guilty if the jury should find that he was unable to know that his acts were wrongful, or to comprehend the consequences of such acts, is not objectionable if the same instruction makes it condition of his guilt that it should be found beyond a reasonable doubt that he knew his acts were wrong and was able to comprehend the consequences of his acts. Queenan v. Okl., 190 U. S. 548, 47 Law. Ed. 1175. A refusal to instruct that a verdict of a special jury as to insanity of the accused was only presumptive evidence, and should have no bearing on the question of sanity at the time of the offense, is proper. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. An instruction cautioning the jury against being imposed upon by an "ingenious counterfeit of insanity" is not prejudicially erroneous. People v. Manooglan [Cal.] 75 Pac. 177.

28. An instruction that intoxication does not excuse or palliate crime is not error. State v. May [Mo.] 72 S. W. 918. An instruction that intoxication might be considered ticular evidence,[30] rules for considering evidence in general,[31] and of particular kinds of evidence, such as circumstantial evidence,[32] accomplice testimony,[33] evi-

in determining the degree of a crime is not a prejudicial error where the defense is that the defendant did not commit or aid in committing the crime. In a prosecution for burglary. People v. Dowell [Cal.] 75 Pac. 45.

29. Where the proof fairly raises the defense of an alibi, the jury should be instructed that if this proof in connection with other proof in the case, raises a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused was at the place of the crime or at a different place, the defendant should be acquitted. Instruction held insufficient. Legere v. State [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1059. Awkwardly worded instruction held sufficient. Winfield v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 182. Instruction that alibi must cover whole time held not error. Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392. An instruction that an alibi is easy to prove and hard to disprove and that evidence thereof is to be carefully scrutinized is not erroneous. People v. Portenga [Mich.] 96 N. W. 17.

30. Instruction that evidence of other crimes was only to affect defendant's credibility held sufficient. Roberts v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 423. An instruction in a prosecution for rape authorizing the jury to consider previous acts of intercourse between the parties is proper to show the defendant's adulterous tendency and the probability of the offense. People v. Edwards [Cal.] 73 Pac. 416. An instruction authorizing the jury to consider the defendant's presence and acts on previous days in determining his guilt on a specified day, without proof that he was present on the latter day, is unjustified in a prosecution for pool selling. People v. Shannon, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1061. Where the acts of co-conspirators are shown, the charge must state not only that such acts may be considered if conspiracy is proved but the reverse proposition. Kees v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 855. Where inconsistent statements could not be considered for any purpose other than as affecting credibility an instruction limiting the same need not be given. Newman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 951. Instruction as to the weight to be given certain statements of third persons in defendant's absence held not misleading. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 473. Instruction as to the duty of the jury to disregard evidence tending to prove other crimes, held misleading, indefinite and ambiguous. Bess v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 349. The jury should be instructed that in case they have a reasonable doubt as to the establishment of a conspiracy between defendant and alleged co-conspirators they must reject all of the individual acts and declarations of such persons. Chapman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 477.

31. An instruction that public belief in defendant's guilt may be considered is error. State v. Whitehead [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 229. Instruction that jury should consider all the evidence held not to deprive them of right to question its truth. Bird v. U. S., 187 U. S. 118, 47 Law. Ed. 100. An instruction that the jury should inquire whether there was any direct evidence of a theory advanced by defendant is error. State v. Gallivan, 75 Conn. 326.

32. Must not only conduce to establish defendant's guilt to a moral certainty, but must also be strong enough to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis consistent with his innocence. Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 10. An instruction that circumstances consistent with a theory of innocence are not to be given any weight against defendant is too favorable. State v. Gallivan, 75 Conn. 326. "On exclusion of every reasonable supposition" held proper. Sherrill v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 129. If there can be any "reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence" is obscure and misleading. Tarver v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 627. Where the evidence is circumstantial only an instruction that the proof must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused is erroneous. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. Where the evidence is not entirely circumstantial it is not error for the court to charge that facts and circumstances surrounding the testimony as to the main element of the crime need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. Erroneous for not using "reasonable" with "hypothesis." Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. An instruction need not require that defendant "alone" committed the crime. Bell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 24. An instruction that "all the circumstances" instead of "each circumstance" must be inconsistent with innocence is not erroneous. Galloway v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 211. Instruction held correct. Id. An instruction that the proof "must be inconsistent with any other rational supposition" than guilt is inadequate. State v. Brady [Iowa] 91 N. W. 801. That every circumstance must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt is improper. State v. Gallivan, 75 Conn. 326. That the evidence is all circumstantial is a mere statement of fact and should not be charged. Hainsworth v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 203. That the evidence must be inconsistent with instead of "must exclude" every reasonable hypothesis, etc., is sufficient. McCoy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1057. An instruction that circumstantial evidence must be inconsistent with every reasonable theory of innocence and so convince the jury that each would be willing to act on it in the matters of highest concern is error. Goodlett v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 892. Instruction using the phrase "each link in the chain of circumstances" held not misleading. State v. Lucas [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1003. Instruction of circumstantial evidence held correct and complete. Lamb v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1050. An instruction that "the proof of guilt must be inconsistent with any other rational supposition" is inadequate where the evidence is entirely circumstantial. State v. Brady [Iowa] 97 N. W. 62. The instruction must state not only the certainty with which circumstances must appear, but that they must be inconsistent with innocence. State v. Hudson, 66 S. C. 394. That circumstantial evidence must be clear, convincing and conclusive, excluding all rational doubt of guilt, and that every material circumstance must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, is correct. State v. Wilcox [N. C.] 44 S. E. 625. A refusal to instruct the jury that it is their duty to adopt a reasonable hypothesis of innocence, even though the hypothesis of guilt be the more probable, and to reconcile the proven facts and circumstances with the theory of innocence, if such can reasonably be done; that there is no presumption of guilt permitted by the law, and that a reasonable doubt can arise from a want of evidence as well as from the evidence itself, is reversible error. Thompson v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 689. An instruction that if any other reasonable hypothesis may be taken from circumstantial evidence, guilt should not be found is proper. Petty v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 213.

33. The giving of cautionary instructions is to a great extent discretionary. State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570. The facts of each particular case must determine the necessity or advisability of the form of charge in regard to accomplice as witness. If there is an issue as to whether a witness is an accomplice, that question and the necessary corroboration may be submitted as an issue of fact. McAlister v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 760. Where the question whether a witness is an accomplice is submitted, what constitutes an accomplice should be stated. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1045. The better practice is to instruct that a witness is an accomplice where the proof so shows, though it is not error to submit it to the jury. Swan v. State. [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 464. The jury should be instructed that the evidence of an accomplice should be received with great caution, but the court need not further call attention to the weight of such testimony. Anthony v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 818. Where the jury are told that a certain witness is an accomplice, a definition of accomplice need not be given. Winfield v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 182. Instruction that accomplice must be corroborated by other evidence sufficient without specifically stating that his own evidence on other points could not corroborate him. Ezell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 283. Where an attempt is made to show that one was a particeps criminis with the defendant, an instruction defining an accomplice is proper. Porter v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 879. Instruction to give accomplice credit only if corroborated and to give it careful consideration approved. Hanley v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 849.

34. Charge that good character may generate doubt though none would have existed but for such evidence, is erroneous. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. A request for an instruction that a finding of a good reputation of the defendant is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt on which to base an acquittal is properly refused. State v. Stentz [Wash.] 74 Pac. 588. An instruction that the good character of the defendant is available as a defense unless he should be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt is proper. Id. That evidence of good character may raise reasonable doubt held properly refused. Bohlman v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 44. Instruction that if evidence of character raises a reasonable doubt defendant should be acquitted is error, the proper instruction being that he should be acquitted if such evidence considered in connection with all the other evidence raises such doubt. Olds v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 296. Instruction that evidence of good character should be considered "in a doubtful case" is error. Com. v. Sayars, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 75. An instruction charging the jury to consider the character of the accused with other circumstances so far as proved is not erroneous where there is no evidence of his character. People v. Farrington [Cal.] 74 Pac. 288. An instruction that evidence of good character "might be sufficient in a doubtful case" is error. State v. Birkby [Iowa] 97 N. W. 980. An instruction that evidence of defendant's good character is competent is sufficient without stating that the jury should consider. State v. Ames [Minn.] 96 N. W. 330. That evidence of good character does not amount to much on a prosecution for gaming is error. Turner v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 598.

35. That defendant's interest in the result may be considered is not error. Keating v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 980; People v. Rich [Mich.] 94 N. W. 375; State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489. That jury are not bound to believe defendant further than he is corroborated is error. State v. Hunter [Iowa] 92 N. W. 872. An instruction that defendant's testimony is to be given such weight as the jury think it entitled to and that his interest in the result should be considered held correct. Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162. An instruction charging the jury in considering the defendant's testimony to consider his manner, relative situation, the consequences of the result of the trial to him, and his inducements and temptations, taken together with another instruction that they were not entitled to disregard his testimony because he was defendant, and that the law presumed him innocent, and allowed him to testify, and that they should consider his testimony impartially and fairly, is not erroneous. Younger v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 551. Where the effect of contradicting evidence is mentioned, attention should also be called to the corroborating evidence. McElroy v. People, 202 Ill. 473. An instruction that the testimony of defendant is to be given "only" such weight as the jury think it deserves is not error. Palmer v. State [Neb.] 97 N. W. 235. That defendant's testimony should be given such weight as the jury deems it entitled to, bearing in mind his vital interest in the event, is correct. State v. Ames [Minn.] 96 N. W. 330. It is not prejudicial error to instruct that though the defendant may testify in his own defense he is not obliged to do so, and that his neglect to do so shall not create a presumption against him, where he has not testified. State v. Ryno [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1114; State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 Pac. 227. It is error to charge that testimony of defendant should be carefully scrutinized without stating that if he was deemed credible his evidence should be given the same weight as that of other witnesses. State v. Graham [N. C.] 45 S. E. 514.

36. Instruction held erroneous. Davis v. U. S., 18 App. D. C. 468. An instruction that the jury should receive all testimony or oral admissions of the defendant against himself with caution is not ground for a reversal.

People v. Wardrip [Cal.] 74 Pac. 744. Instruction as to determining whether confession was voluntary held sufficient. People v. Rich [Mich.] 94 N. W. 375. An instruction that statements by defendant out of court may be believed or disbelieved and are to be given such weight as the jury deem proper is not on the weight of the evidence. State v. Coats [Mo.] 74 S. W. 864. That confession "is of the highest order of testimony" is error. Calvin v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 848. Where the confession of the accused is made before arrest, and before accusation of the crime, admitting the commission of the crime, but he contends it was made while intoxicated, it is not error for the court to refuse to charge that it was a doubtful species of evidence, to be acted upon with caution. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. Instructions are bad which submit credibility of involuntary confessions offered solely for impeachment. Smith v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 396.

37. Charge on credibility of woman consenting to abortion approved. State v. Carey [Conn.] 56 Atl. 632. An instruction that the jury is not bound to believe the uncontroverted statement of a witness or to take the testimony of any witness as true must not be specially directed against one side of the case. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586. It is not error to charge the jury that if they believed a witness was a hired witness they were at liberty to disregard his testimony, unless corroborated, where they were also charged that the credibility of witnesses was a question exclusively for the jury, and could consider their interest in the result. Porter v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 879. An instruction to distrust the testimony of a false witness must state that he was willfully false. State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 983. To distrust the evidence of a witness who had willfully sworn falsely as to a material matter. People v. Stevens [Cal.] 75 Pac. 62. An instruction charging the jury to disregard any or all of the testimony of a witness who has willfully and intentionally testified falsely is erroneous, under Code Civ. Proc. Mont. § 3390, requiring the court to charge that a witness false in one part of his testimony may be disregarded in others. State v. De Wolfe [Mont.] 74 Pac. 1084. An instruction charging the jury that in determining the weight of the evidence of certain witnesses they may consider among other things their relationship to the parties is not erroneous (State v. Morgan [Utah] 74 Pac. 526); and if they believe that he has sworn falsely may disregard his testimony except in so far as corroborated by other evidence (State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac. 489). An instruction in reference to impeaching testimony that it was admitted to affect the witness' credibility, and not to show the guilt of the accused guards its admission sufficiently. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. A statement that some one had willfully falsified is not improper where the testimony is in absolute conflict. People v. O'Connor, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 55. An instruction in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, that a witness testifying falsely is to be distrusted is not error though not to be commended. People v. Dobbins [Cal.] 72 Pac. 339. An instruction that the testimony of a witness who has willfully testified falsely may be disregarded except as it is corroborated is proper. Trimble v. Ter. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 932. Instruction that prior conviction should be considered only as bearing on defendant's credibility held correct. Thornton v. State [Wis.] 93 N. W. 1107. That the animus of prosecution may be considered is argumentative. Holmes v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 180. An instruction as to an impeachment but failing to include the testimony of all witnesses thereon is erroneous. Bennett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 314. A charge which limits the effect of impeaching evidence to the sole purpose of enabling the jury to waive the testimony of the witnesses impeached is too restrictive, since the jury may entirely discard and disbelieve such witnesses. Dean v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 803. An instruction that the experience of courts warns them to scan with caution the evidence of abandoned women, etc., held error. State v. Tuttle, 67 Ohio St. 440. An instruction that the jury may believe one witness and discard all the others is error as permitting them to do so capriciously. Shepherd v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 266. Instruction that evidence of detectives should be considered in the same manner as other evidence held error. Frudie v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 320. That witness who has testified falsely is to be distrusted, proper. People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 Pac. 1014. Instruction that inconsistent statement as to material facts is to be considered on question of credibility is not erroneous as leaving the jury to decide what facts are material. State v. Dent, 170 Mo. 398. Cautionary instruction as to evidence of detectives should be given. State v. Fullerton, 90 Mo. App. 411. A cautionary instruction should be given on trial for receiving stolen goods as to testimony of the thief. State v. Rachman [N. J. Law] 53 Atl. 1046. Instruction as to effect of prior conviction of witness held proper. Keating v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 980. Instruction as to false testimony held sufficient. State v. Fenton, 30 Wash. 325, 70 Pac. 741. An instruction that the jury may disregard all the testimony of a witness who has willfully testified falsely is properly refused. Jackson v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 188. Instructions directed to the credibility of particular testimony are as a general rule improper. Loose v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 526. An instruction on credibility singling out a particular witness is properly refused. State v. Pollard [Mo.] 74 S. W. 969. Instruction referring to witness as "a perjurer, an abortionist, a thief and a prostitute" is properly refused. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940.

38. Instruction held not to clearly state the duty of the jury to return a special verdict as required by statute in case they found defendant insane. Porter v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 694.

39. That a doubt by one juror requires a mistrial is improper. Oakley v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 693. That the case was not

(§ 10) F. Custody of jury, conduct and deliberations.—The jury may be kept under the charge of an officer during the trial,[40] but must be allowed food, etc.,[41] and while the officer should not speak to them[42] or allow them to separate,[43] so doing is not ground for reversal in the absence of other circumstances, and the same liberality is applied in respect to other irregularities in the custody of the jury.[44] It is error to allow the jury to be kept at the house of decedent's uncle.[45] Ability of jury to see from jury room into jail where accused was playing cards to be decided according to the eloquence of counsel is not improper. State v. Evans [Minn.] 92 N. W. 976. That the jury are to arrive at their verdict from the evidence and not by lot is proper. Lankster v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 388. That it was the duty of a juror not to give up his fixed convictions is error. Holmes v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 180. An instruction that the jury may ignore the instructions is properly refused. State v. Powell, 109 La. 727. Instruction in approved form as to duty of jury to try to reach an agreement is not rendered erroneous because of a reference to the names of judges who have given and approved it. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942. Instruction to base verdict solely on evidence and not be influenced by the fact that defendant had been a long time in jail is not error. Foskey v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 967. An instruction that the jury are not to "comment on" the failure of defendant to testify is improper. Lamb v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1050. An instruction objectionable in that it tends to drive the jurors apart, rather than to get them together may be refused. As "if from the testimony in this cause there arises in your minds, or in the mind of either of you, a reasonable doubt as to defendants' guilt, you cannot find such defendants guilty." Baldwin v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 220. An instruction that before the jury can convict each juror must be convinced of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; and if a single juror has a reasonable doubt, from any part of the evidence, the jury cannot convict is properly refused. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. The rule that each juror might act upon his own judgment, and each should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that every element of the offense had been proven, need not be applied to every feature and branch of the offense. State v. Ryno [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1114.

40. State v. Burton, 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640. Whether the jury should be allowed to separate during the trial is discretionary. State v. Nelson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 652. The fact that the deputy who had charge of the jury was a witness is not error. Van Syoc v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 266.

41. The ancient practice in this respect was never in force in Nebraska. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751. At least an ordinary chair and blankets for the night if the weather require should be provided for jurors. State v. Riggs [La.] 34 So. 655.

42. Casual remark held harmless. State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544. Presence of bailiff in jury room at times when jury was not consulting and only to attend to wants of the jury held not error. Shular v. State [Ind.] 66 N. E. 746. Improper remark of sheriff not shown to have been heard by jury held not ground for new trial. Alderson v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 679. In a prosecution for homicide, it is not prejudicial misconduct of an officer in charge of the jury, when viewing the premises, to point out certain places connected with the crime and to repeat words used by the defendant at one of the places on a former occasion. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 74 Pac. 350.

43. Gamble v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 471. Going into adjoining empty room. State v. Callian, 109 La. 346. Separation after retiring to deliberate held harmless. State v. Schaeffer, 172 Mo. 335. Walking in single file through court room harmless though last one is several feet behind others. State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544. Taking of jury into bowling alley held harmless. State v. Cottrill, 52 W. Va. 363. A court is warranted in setting aside a verdict on account of the separation of the jury without leave of court only where such separation prejudices the rights of the defendants. Shivers v. Ter. [Okl.] 74 Pac. 899. Taking jurors to a theater in the custody of a sworn officer, the play having no reference to the trial, is not ground for a new trial. State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 Pac. 227.

44. Evidence of visit by juror to jail held to show no misconduct. People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 Pac. 1014. Jurors' drinking whisky while deliberating is not ground for a new trial if none of them were intoxicated or the drinking was not to excess. Brown v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 33. That sheriff who was disqualified by relation to prosecutrix unlocked and lighted the jury room for the elisor, held harmless. State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544. Taking jury in body to answer call of nature. Id. That a juror was asked by a stranger if he knew that he was a fourth cousin of defendant's wife held not prejudicial misconduct. State v. Hasty [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1115. It is not misconduct of jurors, at a view of premises, to pace off distances between points referred to in the testimony. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 73 Pac. 562. Not error for juror to go to barber shop in custody. Com. v. Gearhardt, 205 Pa. 387. Misconduct of third persons, affecting the jury, but not affecting the verdict, is not ground for a new trial. Horn v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 705. A verdict may be impeached by evidence of intimidation by an overt criminal act; not if the intimidating act was otherwise. State v. Riggs, 110 La. —, 34 So. 655. Matter to show that some jurors decided before all evidence was in impeaches their verdict. Id. Actions of bystanders during an inspection by a jury may be ground for a new trial. Actions indicating that a colt belonged to the prosecuting witness and not to the defendant. State v. Landry [Mont.] 74 Pac. 418.

45. Hensley v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 677.

held not error, though dangerous.[46] Conduct of the jurymen in deliberation will sometimes be deemed ground for reversal.[47] How long the jury shall be kept in deliberation is in the discretion of the court.[48] The jury may be allowed to take out exhibits.[49] Testimony may be read to them at their request.[50] The judge should hold no communication with the jury except in open court,[51] nor should he in any manner coerce an agreement.[52]

(§ 10) G. Verdict.—In polling the jury it is not necessary to call each juror by name.[53] A conditional answer by a juror on being polled does not invalidate the verdict.[54] Refusal to receive a verdict of acquittal because defendant is voluntarily absent from the court room is error.[55] The verdict must be certain and definite,[56] but clerical errors may be disregarded.[57] It must state on which count it was given,[58] must find the degree,[59] and must pass on special pleas.[60] Where

47. Discussion of irrelevant matters is not. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751. Discussion of previous conviction of defendant is forbidden by statute in Texas. Hughes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 746; Hefner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 964. Statement by juror of facts in his personal knowledge held ground for new trial. State v. Burton, 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640; Sims v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 90. The fact that the jury casually learned that defendant had been previously convicted held not ground for new trial. State v. Thompson, 109 La. 296. Statement by juror that if a short sentence was given, defendant would be released from the penitentiary before he was as old as his father had been when he was released, together with a reference to criminal acts of the father since his release. McDaniel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 802. Examination of copy of Code by juror held ground for new trial. Henson v. State [Tenn.] 72 S W. 960. Punishment assessed after a discussion of the votes of the different jurors held not fixed by lot. Burrows v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 848. Discussion of failure of jury to testify is ground for new trial. Doulton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 395. That a juror agreed to a verdict under a misunderstanding of what a witness testified to is not ground for new trial. Blackwell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 960. That a juror suggested that defendant if convicted had the right to appeal is not ground for reversal. State v. Lucas [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1003. That the jury were out only five minutes is no ground for setting aside verdict. Turner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 777.

49. But not depositions. Russell v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 751. The jury may take with them into the jury room the record of a special proceeding to try the insanity of the accused. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. In a prosecution for violating a local option law the jury should not be permitted to handle and smell liquor introduced in evidence but not shown to be the same as that sold on the date charged. Parker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 30.

50. It is not error to refuse to read the cross examination when the jury requests only the direct. State v. Manning [Vt.] 54 Atl. 181.

51. Answering communication from jury as to recommendation to mercy held error. State v. Kiefer [S. D.] 91 N. W. 1117.

52. Request to agree before bedtime if possible held not prejudicial. Wilson v. State [Tenn.] 70 S. W. 57. The court may inquire of individual jurors as to the likelihood of reaching an agreement. Jones v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 877. It is not error for the court to say that he does not wish to force a verdict but will stay with the jury for another day. Id. Statement to jury that court would be in session a week so that they would have ample time to agree is not coercion. Brady v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 771.

56. "Guilty of misdemeanor" insufficient. Wells v. State, 116 Ga. 87. Verdict of guilty without designation of crime is sufficient. Lowe v. State [Wis.] 96 N. W. 417. Where the language of a verdict fails to convict the accused of the specific offense charged he may be found guilty of a lesser included offense. State v. Snider [Wash.] 73 Pac. 355. A verdict purporting to find the accused guilty of a particular offense must specify the particular offense; must find him guilty of all the ingredients of the offense. A partial verdict is not sufficient. Id.

57. "Gunlty." McMillan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 279. Conviction of "Harry" instead of "Henry" held sufficient. Albert v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 846. "Wee" for we is trifling. Johns v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 71. "Gulity" for guilty is self corrective. Webb v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1011. Misspelling of the word penitentiary in the verdict is not error. Gaines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 10.

58. Verdict finding defendant guilty of the specific crime charged in each count and fixing punishment separately need not specify the counts by number or say "as charged in the indictment" after the word guilty. Lawrence v. State [Ark.] 71 S. W. 263. Need not find on counts dismissed at trial. State v. Maurer, 96 Mo. App. 347; State v. Hesterly [Mo.] 76 S. W. 985. A general verdict will be imputed to the count charging the offense sustained by the evidence. Indictment in two counts charging night pleas of former jeopardy and not guilty are tried together, a general verdict is insufficient[61] and must find as to all the defendants on trial.[62] Verdict need not find facts on which penalty is to be computed by court.[63] After the jury have dispersed, the verdict cannot be correct,[64] but before dispersal, they may be sent back to correct a verdict.[65] It is only legal defects however which the court may order corrected.[66]

§ 11. New trial and arrest of judgment. Writ of error coram nobis.—The harmful effect of error is elsewhere discussed.[67]

The grounds for new trial are usually regulated by statute.[68] Accident or surprise is ground for new trial only where diligence was exercised.[69] A new trial is sometimes granted because of the discovery that a juror was prejudiced against defendant or had expressed an opinion as to his guilt.[71] and day burglary both of which were submitted and the evidence justified finding day burglary. Miller v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 800. A conviction on one count implies an acquittal on others not mentioned. Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 Pac. 417.

59. Pen. Code, § 972, so providing. McLane v. Ter. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 938. Where only the offense charged was submitted, a general verdict is sufficient. Heinen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 776; Mahany v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 26.

60. General verdict on pleas of not guilty and misnomer. Davis v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 818.

62. Verdict finding "both guilty" sufficient. State v. Williamson [S. C.] 43 S. E. 671.

63. Dean v. State [Md.] 56 Atl. 481. Failure of the jury to find whether defendant is over 16 is not error where there is no evidence of his age. Boone v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 518.

64. Wells v. State, 116 Ga. 87.

65. Verdict finding defendant guilty of nonexistent crime—"assault and battery with intent to stab." State v. Gonneion [N. J. Law] 53 Atl. 701. The court may have a general verdict corrected by applying it to the only count on which conviction was asked without sending the jury out again. State v. Norris [S. C.] 43 S. E. 791. Where the verdict fails to find on both counts the jury may be sent back to put the same in proper form. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942.

66. Court must accept verdict though for less degree than proof seems to him to warrant. Goolsby v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 212.

67. See § 15, post.

68. Disqualification of some grand jurors for failure to pay poll tax not ground for new trial. Cubine v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 39. Intoxication of defendant's counsel during the trial held not ground for new trial, there being no showing of prejudice. O'Brien v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 666. The receiving by a witness of part of a reward offered for conviction is not of itself grounds for a new trial. State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 Pac. 227.

In Georgia excessiveness of sentence (Sturkey v. State, 116 Ga. 526; Bellinger v. State, 116 Ga. 545), irregularity therein (Chapman v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 814), overruling demurrer to indictment (Veal v. State, 116 Ga. 589; Long v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 416), insufficiency of indictment (Sanders v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 365), overruling motion to quash the warrant (Bellinger v. State, 116 Ga. 545), empannelling of a juror whose name was not on the jury list (Somers v. State, 116 Ga. 535) and disqualification of the judge (Berry v. State, 117 Ga. 15) are not grounds for new trial.

70. State v. Fay [Minn.] 92 N. W. 978. Failure to subpoena a witness under mistake as to where he was not ground for new trial. McFadden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 972. Surprise at testimony of prosecuting witness is not ground for new trial. Curry v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 1077.

71. Declaration by juror held insufficient. Trimble v. Ter. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 932. Previous expressions of opinion by juror, denied on his voir dire. State v. Mickle [Utah] 70 Pac. 856. That juror who knew defendant remained silent when the jury was asked if any one did is presumptively harmless. Dodd v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 1015. Statements of jurors showing prejudice against the defendant, which facts were not known to defendant before trial, is misconduct sufficient for a reversal. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 509. Evidence held not to show prejudicial expressions by juror. State v. Mickle [Utah] 70 Pac. 856. A new trial may be allowed for misconduct of the jury unless shown that defendant suffered no prejudice therefrom. A juror stating to his associates of his own personal knowledge facts, not in the testimony, prejudicial to defendant. State v. Lowe [Kan.] 72 Pac. 524. Knowledge of facts by juror held not ground for a new trial; he not being examined on voir dire and it appearing that he was the last to agree to conviction. Lazenby v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1051. Disqualification of a juror for prejudice against the defendant which fact he had concealed on his examination is ground for a new trial. State v. Mott [Mont.] 74 Pac. 728. A motion for a new trial on the ground of prejudice of a juror is properly denied where he stated that all he had heard of the case was from newspaper reports and hearsay, and that he had no prejudice, and no attempt is made to impeach his competency. Id. It is not sufficient grounds for a new trial that a juror is proven to have stated after verdict that everybody knew the defendant, on trial for gaming, was a gambler, which statement he

Newly discovered evidence to be ground for a new trial[72] must be competent[73] and material,[74] credible,[75] not cumulative or merely for impeachment,[76] and such as to probably affect the result,[77] and it must appear that it could not in the exercise of due diligence have been produced at the trial.[78] denied. Fuller v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 214. Affidavits of statements of jurors controverted by the jurors themselves, examined and held insufficient to authorize a new trial. Cruse v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 818.

72. Statement of all the requirements. Ter. v. Claypool [N. M.] 71 Pac. 463. Grant of new trial for newly discovered evidence and prejudice of a juror discretionary. Jones v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 877; State v. Nelson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 652.

Newberry v. State [Tex.

A motion in arrest of judgment lies only to a material defect[79] apparent on the face of the record,[80] and the objection must of course be one which is not required to be made at the trial.[81]

A writ of error coram nobis will not lie to review errors or matters which may be corrected on motion in the trial court or upon appeal to a higher court,[82] and only to errors of fact.[83]

Practice on motion.—The time within which the motion must be made is regulated by statute.[84] The grounds of the motion must be stated,[85] and the existence thereof shown,[86] as must the timeliness of the motion.[87] Affidavit of juror will not be received to impeach verdict,[88] but may be received to sustain it.[89] Defendant has no constitutional right to be present at the hearing.[90] Oral testimony cannot ordinarily be introduced in support of a motion for a new trial,[91] and there is no error in refusing a motion to be allowed to introduce such testi-

81. See post, § 15.

82. Hamlin v. State [Kan.] 74 Pac. 242. It will not lie from a decision holding jurors to be qualified, though they made false statements as to their qualifications, and defendant did not know of their prejudice until after a motion for a new trial had been overruled. Id.

83. Not to obtain an extension of time to appeal. Collins v. State [Kan.] 71 Pac. 251.

84. The motion cannot be made in vacation. Johnson v. State, 116 Ga. 535; Gardner v. State, 116 Ga. 537. To be entitled to enter a motion more than two days after the trial defendant must show that he has not previously moved for new trial or in arrest. Hines v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 955. Motion for new trial after plea of guilty must be made at the sitting (term) at which sentence was passed. Com. v. Soderquest [Mass.] 66 N. E. 801. The year after "trial" within which motion must be made does not run from plea. The trial judge has discretion to set aside a grant of an appeal and allow time for the preparation of affidavits for a motion for a new trial. Motion made on the same morning that a verdict of guilty was returned for him, of which knowledge had just come to counsel with regard to the misconduct of the jury. Legere v. State [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1059.

85. State v. Shipley, 171 Mo. 544. Under statutes providing that application for a new trial shall be on notice of motion, and the motion when made in certain cases shall be based on an affidavit otherwise on a bill of exceptions, the notice need state only the grounds of the motion. State v. Landry [Mont.] 74 Pac. 418.

86. What the alleged erroneous evidence was. Scott v. State, 117 Ga. 14. Defendant must make affidavit in person that he did not know of the facts before the trial. Malone v. State, 116 Ga. 272. That witnesses refuse to make affidavit for fear of incriminating themselves does not make defendant's statement of their expected testimony sufficient. State v. McCullough, 171 Mo. 571. Oath of defendant alone insufficient. Shutt v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 18. Character of proposed witnesses must be shown in Georgia. Hatcher v. State, 116 Ga. 617. Residence of witnesses should be stated. State v. Fay [Minn.] 92 N. W. 978. Affidavits to obtain a new trial on the ground that jurors had expressed opinions as to the guilt of the accused, must show that such expressions of opinion would have been sufficient to challenge for cause at the impanelling of the jury; and that the accused or his counsel had no knowledge of such facts at the time. State v. Morrison [Kan.] 72 Pac. 554.

87. The motion was required to be made within thirty days after discovery of the facts. State v. Mickle [Utah] 70 Pac. 856.

mony,[92] and when allowed, the burden is on defendant to produce his witnesses at the hearing.[93] Irregularities in affidavits for a new trial are waived by counter affidavits controverting matter alleged in the first.[94] The order denying the motion may be vacated to allow the prosecutor to strengthen his case and the motion then denied.[95] If the motion cannot be sustained as presented, it may be denied.[96]

§ 12. Sentence and judgment.—In sentencing on a plea of guilty, the court may take evidence as to the degree.[97] In cases not capital, it is generally held not reversible error to fail to ask defendant if he has anything to say,[98] but a statute requiring such procedure is held mandatory.[99] A verdict assessing the punishment of both defendants together authorizes the court to sentence as on failure of the jury to assess.[1] Sentence under an indeterminate sentence act is not bad for uncertainty.[2] The sentence must follow the verdict.[3] Sentences for different terms of different co-defendants is not a denial of equal protection to all.[4] It is not error of which a convicted defendant can complain that the court failed to add a term of imprisonment if the fine was not paid.[5] Sentences imposed at the same time will run concurrently unless otherwise expressly stated.[6] The court has no power to suspend sentence indefinitely,[7] and defendant's consent gives no such power.[8] The court may at the same term modify a sentence.[9] A petition alleging insanity in bar of execution of death sentence must allege that it arose after sentence.[10] Judgment cannot be entered nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term where there are no docket entries.[11]

§ 13. Record or minutes and commitment.—The record is conclusive,[12] but may be amended by the court,[13] but only on record evidence.[14] Erroneous entry in minutes does not control the indictment.[15] A mere recital of the proceedings including verdict is not a judgment.[16] A record entry that a "jury" came controls

Passing a peremptory challenge is not a waiver thereof as to jurors subsequently called. Moore v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 30. An objection to testimony being overruled, but no further like testimony introduced and no motion to strike it out being made, is unavailable on appeal. State v. Pittam [Wash.] 72 Pac. 1042.

51. A request for a similar instruction may not prevent the assertion of error in a given instruction which is not substantially the same. A request in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors without a license that defendant should not be convicted unless he "solicited and got others to make orders through him directly or indirectly" does not prevent the assertion of error in an instruction that if defendant procured the sale of intoxicating liquors for others by taking orders therefor, and by purchasing Sufficiency of objections.—The objection must be specific,[53] and a general objection is sufficient only if the evidence is palpably inadmissible,[54] but not otherwise.[55] The objection must be to the question, not to the answer.[56] Where evidence is admitted out of order on promise to connect it, defendant must move to strike it out if the promise be not kept.[57] If evidence is admissible in part,[58] or for any purpose, a general objection is insufficient,[59] or a general motion to strike out denied.[60] Exclusion of an answer cannot be reviewed unless there was an offer of proof.[61] A motion to strike out evidence introduced on promise to connect it is premature if made before conclusion of the state's evidence.[62] That consent of owner of stolen goods was not negatived,[63] or that the offense proved was under another section of the statute,[64] is not raised by a general objection to the sufficiency of the evidence. A general objection to a charge does not raise a question as to its adequacy.[65] The remedy for improper remarks by the prosecuting attorney is by motion that the court withdraw the same, not by motion to set aside the submission.[66]

the liquor and distributing it among them according to their orders, he would be guilty of making an unlawful sale of liquors to those parties. Whitmore v. State [Ark.] 77 S. W. 598. It is not error for the court to refuse the defendant's motion to strike out and to charge the jury not to consider evidence brought out by defendant's counsel on cross-examination of a state witness, such evidence not being referred to in the direct examination. eral rulings, is insufficient if any one was good;[68] but if the error is palpable, a general exception will suffice.[69] The time of taking is usually regulated by statute or rule.[70]

§ 15. Harmless or prejudicial error. Trivial or immaterial error.—To be ground for reversal, error must be harmful[71] to defendant,[72] though prejudice is usually presumed from error.[73] Improper use of evidence in argument does not make its admission error,[74] but the admission of immaterial evidence may become prejudicial error from the use made of it in argument.[75] The rule that there will be no reversal for error which did not prejudicially affect the rights of defendant has been applied to proceedings of grand jury,[76] denial of continuance,[77] grant of mistrial,[78] proceedings on change of venue,[79] ruling on pleas,[80] selection of jury,[81]

Atl. 247. No question is raised on appeal by an exception to an instruction that it contained an improper and inaccurate statement of the law, without showing wherein it was inaccurate. State v. Clark [Utah] 74 Pac. 119.

68. Exception to several instructions. Jones v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 793; Smith v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 79; State v. Hall [N. C.] 44 S. E. 553. General exception is bad to evidence if it is in anywise good. State v. Hendrick [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 247.

69. Misstatement by counsel. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606.

70. Exceptions to giving of instructions may be made on motion for new trial but exceptions to refusal must be taken at the trial. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. Laws 1903, c. 286 which allows exceptions to instructions to be taken at any time during the term does not apply to cases tried before its passage. Secor v. State [Wis.] 95 N. W. 942. A bill of exceptions to the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment must be presented within twenty days. Irwin v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 59. May be taken pendente lite or by bill within 20 days. Long v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 416. A bill of exceptions to the failure of the court to exclude certain evidence and to the charges given, prepared and allowed after the trial of the case is too late. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 473.

71. Wright v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1838, 72 S. W. 340; Wilson v. State [Tenn.] 70 S. W. 57. An error not bearing upon the verdict is not material. State v. Williams [La.] 35 So. 521. Where there was no material error and defendant appears to have had a fair trial, the appellate court will not reverse. New v. Ter. [Okl.] 70 Pac. 198. A new trial should be granted only where it appears that substantial rights of defendant have been violated so that a fair trial was not had. State v. Nelson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 652. An error during the progress of a prosecution to warrant the setting aside of the verdict must be of such import as to give rise to the belief that if it had not been for the error a different verdict would have been given. Error in not stopping intemperate argument not sufficient for a reversal. State v. Forbes, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 710. Correct ruling on wrong ground will not be reversed. State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530.

72. Failure to caution a co-defendant as to his privilege is not prejudicial. Weber v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1726, 72 S. W. 30.

73. Error in instructions. Lane v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 896. Failure to submit charge in writing presumed prejudicial. Arnold v. State [Ark.] 74 S. W. 513. Use of intoxicants by jury. Gamble v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 471. Separation of jury. Id. Refusal of peremptory challenge. State v. Hunter [Iowa] 92 N. W. 872. But see State v. Buralli [Nev.] 71 Pac. 532. Admission of evidence. People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210. Prejudice from error in impaneling jury must be affirmatively shown. Queenan v. Ter., 11 Okl. 261, 71 Pac. 218.

74. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 973.

75. State v. Williams [Iowa] 97 N. W. 992.

76. That the grand jury heard evidence as to a matter of defense after finding the indictment is harmless. Copenhaver v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 453.

77. Testimony of absent witness was cumulative. Hathaway v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 88. Refusal of continuance for evidence which would have operated against defendant. Godwin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 804.

78. The discharge of a jury on continuance of a case for some time and impaneling them anew at the trial is not prejudicial to the defendant. Moore v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 30.

79. Filing original papers in court to which venue was changed. State v. Rodman [Mo.] 73 S. W. 605.

80. It is harmless error for the court not to dispose of a plea of former acquittal by a record judgment where the plea upon its face offered no legal defense and would not have authorized a reversal. Richardson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 505. Striking out instead of overruling a plea is harmless. Wells v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 443. Overruling special plea provable under general plea. Peelle v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 682.

81. Error in impaneling which could not work prejudice. Ford v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 301. Overruling challenge for cause when peremptory challenges are not exhausted. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 396; Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287; Ter. v. Padilla [N. M.] 71 Pac. 1084; State v. Tyler [Iowa] 97 N. W. 983; Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265; State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. Excusing juror. Williams v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 279. Excusing venireman presumptively harmless. State v. Taylor, 171 Mo. 465. Where peremptory challenges are exhausted it need not be shown that an objectionable jury was forced on defendant (State v. McCoy, 109 La. 682) though the peremptory challenges were not exhausted until after the ruling complained of (State v. Stentz, 30 Wash. 134, 70 Pac. 241). In the absense of a showing that a juror was unfair conduct of trial,[82] rulings on indictment,[83] rulings on demurrer to evidence,[84] examination of witnesses,[85] admission[86] or exclusion of evidence,[88] conduct or remarks and impartial, a refusal to allow defendant to challenge the juror for cause or peremptorily after the jury is impaneled on the ground of a mistaken answer as to acquaintance with accused, is not error. Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 918. Exhaustion of peremptory challenges is not enough to establish reversible error in overruling a challenge for cause, but appellant must show that he was compelled to take an unfair juror. Mancillas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 469. A ruling as to the acceptance of a juror subject to challenge for cause cannot be urged by defendant whose peremptory challenges were not exhausted at the time, and it is not shown that the juror was not fair and impartial or that defendant was compelled to take him. Norsworthy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 803. An error in not sustaining challenges for cause to a juror is not prejudicial, where they are afterwards removed by peremptory challenges. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. Acceptance of juror over challenge and afterwards excused on peremptory when peremptories are not shown to have been exhausted. Peaden v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 204. Excusing a juror from serving, for a good cause, is not grounds for setting aside a verdict, where it does not appear that the accused's defense was thereby prejudiced. State v. Michel, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 629. It is not grounds for a reversal that the defendant's challenge for cause to a juror is overruled whereby he is compelled to exhaust his peremptory challenges, where it does not appear that a disqualified juror is forced on him. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. A defendant is not prejudiced in that a talesman not sworn entered a jury box and began a conversation with one who had been accepted and sworn, where he immediately left upon being told that the box was the jurymen's and that they had been accepted (Stiles v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 511) nor because a juryman was related to the prosecuting attorney in the case which fact was unknown to the accused and counsel until after trial under Pen. Code, § 1181. People v. Boren [Cal.] 72 Pac. 899. The fact that the trial judge of his own motion examined and excused a juror is not grounds for a reversal, it not appearing that the defendant did have a fair and impartial trial, nor that the panel was depleted. Keady v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 892. Drawing grand and petit venires in reverse order no bad purpose or injury being shown. Com. v. Zillafrow [Pa.] 56 Atl. 539.

82. The retiring of the jury while defendant's attorney replies to an argument of the district attorney about admissibility of certain evidence is not prejudicial though the jury was allowed to remain during the previous argument. Poole v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 565. Refusal to appoint a stenographer in the absence of the regular stenographer. The bills of exceptions presented by appellant were approved by the judge and counsel for state and defendant agreed on the statement of facts which was approved by the judge. Andrews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 918. It is immaterial that a witness of the accused failed to answer when called if an opportunity to have him heard was given. State v. Forbes, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 710. The admission in evidence of a stipulation that if a certain witness were present he would testify to certain facts is harmless error. State v. Mortensen [Utah] 73 Pac. 562. Notice to produce incriminating document not made in jury's presence. McKnight v. U. S., 122 Fed. 926. Refusal to exhibit to jury writings which accused had previous chance to exhibit. State v. Donovan [Vt.] 55 Atl. 611. Refusal to compel delivery of writings to defendant who had had benefit of them when offered by state. Id. Prompting of witness as to collateral matter held harmless. Copenhaven v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 453. Remark by widow of deceased not shown to have been heard by jury not ground for new trial. State v. Gray [Mo.] 72 S. W. 698. Unauthorized examination of exhibit during deliberations held harmless. People v. Gallagher, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 39, 11 Ann. Cas. 348; People v. Gallagher [N. Y.] 66 N. E. 1113. Inspection by the jury of other things than those provided in the order for inspection may be grounds for a new trial. State v. Landry [Mont.] 74 Pac. 418.

83. Overruling objections to bad counts where good one is proved. Parks v. State, 159 Ind. 211, 59 L. R. A. 190. Overruling demurrer to count subsequently nolled. Oakley v. State [Ala.] 33 So. 693. Overruling demurrer to one count where trial was had solely on another. Hawkins v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1034, 70 S. W. 640.

Held prejudicial: Overruling motion to compel election at beginning of trial, where evidence irrelevant to count on which prosecution subsequently elected to stand was introduced. Burgess v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 499.

84. Refusal to consider demurrer harmless where defendant was thereafter permitted to introduce evidence. Lowe v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 956.

85. Refusal of inspection of letter by which witness refreshed memory held harmless where cross-examination developed that there was nothing material in it. People v. Panyko, 171 N. Y. 669. Allowing cross-examination of defendants for impeachment as to declarations which were admissible as original evidence. State v. Deal [Or.] 70 Pac. 534. Allowing question as to inadmissible conversation where witness denied that it took place. Kelly v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 756. Overruling objection to questions where no prejudicial evidence resulted. McComas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 189. The asking of certain witnesses on cross-examination whether they knew defendant's handwriting cannot be prejudicial where they answer that they do not. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265. Where a witness answers a question as to whether he has attempted to procure others to lie concerning defendant's case in the negative, there is no prejudice. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. Allowing cross-examination on immaterial matter. State v. Bickle [W. Va.] 45 S. E. 917. It is not grounds for a reversal that a witness was asked a certain question unless resulting injury is shown. State v. Allen [La.] 35 So. 495.

People v. Rich [Mich.] 94 N. W. 375. Inadmissible confession harmless where same confession had previously been made after warning. Godwin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 804. Improper evidence of admission where there is undisputed evidence that defendant made the same admission on another occasion. McNutt v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 143. Hearsay as to fact abundantly proved. Com. v. Jacobson [Mass.] 66 N. E. 719. Testimony that bullet wounds in a particular direction in the arm could not have been made while aiming a pistol goes to a physical fact well known to jury and is harmless. Stevens v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 122. Evidence having no bearing on the case is not prejudicial to the defendant. People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745. An error in admitting evidence of the weight of a witness is not prejudicial if the jury saw the witness. Id. Admission of doubtful evidence harmless where the proof of guilt was clear. Vickers v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 618. Evidence that defendant was compelled to make a footprint is harmless where there was no evidence of any comparison therewith. Dunwoody v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 412. It is harmless error to admit in evidence testimony that an accomplice, turning state's evidence, was not induced to do so by promise of immunity from another offense. Lochlin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 305. That an examination as to defendant's sanity was ordered to be had in the presence of the jailor is harmless. Copenhaven v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 453. Admitting secondary evidence as to document which is in evidence. State v. Roller, 30 Wash. 692, 71 Pac. 718. Evidence of purchase of knife after homicide. People v. Morine [Cal.] 72 Pac. 166. Evidence as to facts which defendant admitted. Johnson v. People, 202 Ill. 53. That defendant was the successor of a certain company. State v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 117 Iowa, 524. Erroneous evidence favorable to defendant. Barr v. People [Colo.] 71 Pac. 392. Harmless where the evidence of guilt was overwhelming. Johnson v. People, 202 Ill. 53. Evidence of another attempted burglary without anything to connect it with defendant. Ragland v. State [Ark.] 70 S. W. 1039. Improper admission of certificate of preliminary examination where it was previously proved by competent testimony. Campbell v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 224. Opinion evidence as to weapon with which wound was inflicted when direct evidence was uncontradicted. People v. Morine [Cal.] 72 Pac. 166. Immaterial evidence. Jones v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 715; People v. Glennon, 175 N. Y. 45. In a prosecution for homicide, a question eliciting the opinion of defendant as to whether he thought it was a violation of law to fire his pistol in the public road is not regarded as prejudicial to him. Montgomery v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 788. Evidence not pertinent, not in answer to any question and not prejudicial is not a fatal error. State v. Brown [La.] 35 So. 501. Improper evidence when accused was clearly guilty on his own evidence and admissions. Angling v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 846.

Held prejudicial: Evidence tending to show that defendant's photograph was in the rogues' gallery. State v. Houghton [Or.] 71 Pac. 982. Proof of physician's examination of victim of abduction too remote from crime. People v. Swasey, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 185. Rebuttal that accused who had testified had been unchaste after time when she claimed to have been married to testator of defrauded heirs. Hooker v. State [Md.] 56 Atl. 390. Where an alibi is contended, declarations of prosecutrix that accused did the crime and when and where. Anderson v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 202. It is grounds for a reversal if one of the accused's witnesses is improperly impeached whereby his credibility is prejudiced. Jenkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 312.

88. Exclusion of evidence as to fact otherwise well proved. Ingram v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1531, 71 S. W. 908. Evidence insufficient to authorize a finding. Com. v. Pear [Mass.] 66 N. E. 719. Corroboration of uncontradicted statement of defendant. People v. Goodrode [Mich.] 94 N. W. 14. Held prejudicial: Exclusion of evidence of reputation of deceased as to use of deadly weapons, though there was other evidence of his quarrelsome disposition. State v. Ellis, 30 Wash. 369, 70 Pac. 963.

89. Reference to murder of President McKinley to illustrate the right of defendant to fair trial. People v. Flanigan, 174 N. Y. 356. "I suppose that line of questioning would be objected to some time"—held not harmful, it having been made after witness was passed and no objection having been made. State v. Riddle [Mo.] 78 S. W. 606. Improper remark of court in excusing jury. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 612, 69 S. W. 721. An intimation that testimony introduced by defendant was inadmissible, without telling the jury to disregard it is harmless. Com. v. Burton [Mass.] 67 N. E. 419. A new trial will not be required by reason of a written communication between the judge and jury as to the form of the verdict, after the cause is submitted, if no prejudice results to the defendant. State v. Borchert [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1108. A conviction will not be reversed on account of an improper discussion of the facts by the judge on overruling a motion for a new trial. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 473. See, also, ante, § 10A.

90. Asking improper question. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321. Expression of belief in defendant's guilt held harmless. Hawkins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 756. Improper remarks held harmless where proof of guilt was clear. Brown v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 170. Where evidence as to a certain fact is stricken out, refusal to also direct the jury to disregard reference thereto in his opening will be held harmless. People v. Hackett, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 86. Argument of state's counsel held not to be so prejudicial as to require a reversal, in the absence of a requested charge on the subject, and a bill of exceptions taken to the refusal to give the same. Locklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 305. Counsel had been rebuked for commenting on character of accused. He then said—I am not permitted to "but if I were I could"—and checked himself. The court holds it improper but not reversible error. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142. Improper reference to testimony on former trial harmless where fact involved was not in issue. Lee v. State, 116 Ga. 563. Remark that he thought wit-sentence,[94] refusal of stay.[95] One cannot complain of an indictment and conviction of an attempt to commit a crime when he might have been convicted of the prinness had made clear a matter which had just been ruled out held not ground for new trial. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606. Reference to remarks of defendant's counsel as a "stump speech" held harmless. Id.

Held prejudicial: Repeated efforts to introduce proof of other offenses. State v. Roscum [Iowa] 93 N. W. 295.

91. Error in charging on the law of circumstantial evidence is harmless where there is positive evidence. Gibson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 812. Defendant cannot complain that the jury ignored an instruction directing them to attach an increased penalty to his offense, on the ground of a former conviction. State v. Boyd [Mo.] 76 S. W. 979. Defendant cannot object to a charge on the weight of the evidence which is favorable to him. Tate v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 793. Instruction that good character of defendant is to be considered in reconciling conflicts in the testimony is if erroneous, too favorable to defendant. Maddox v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 822. Erroneous instruction not ground for reversal where no verdict except conviction was possible. Monahan v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 816. Instructions on exception to statute held harmless because of admitted facts. Com. v. McGrath [Mass.] 69 N. E. 340. Refusal to give a special charge as to the lower grades of petit larceny is not grounds for a new trial, where the jury found the accused guilty of robbery. State v. Pastor, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 839. An instruction that circumstantial evidence must be "consistent" instead of "inconsistent" with every hypothesis except guilt is prejudicial. Hampton v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 442. An instruction restricting the jury in its determination cannot be complained of by the defendant where the restriction is favorable to him. People v. Glover [Cal.] 74 Pac. 745. It is not prejudicial error for the court to charge the jury on the theory of lower degree of an offense, where the evidence might have justified a conviction of a higher degree. People v. Lagroppo, 86 N. Y. Supp. 116. Mere verbal inaccuracies not misleading in character will be ignored. Absence of conjunction between two adjectives. McCormick v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 606. Singular instead of plural form on joint trial. Moncla v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 548. The court's failure to reduce an additional charge to writing and file it with the clerk, as is required by statute to be done upon the demand of either party, and which was done with the original instructions, is a technical error merely not justifying a reversal under B. & C. Comp. §§ 132, 1484. State v. Armstrong [Or.] 73 Pac. 1022. Failure of the court to number and sign instructions as required by statute is without prejudice where it does not appear that any of the instructions were lost or others got in. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. An instruction that certain impeaching evidence was proper is harmless where no such evidence had been offered. Jones v. State [Ga.] 43 S. E. 715. Inadvertent statement as to crime charged. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1045. Instruction on insanity not justified by evidence. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 964. That if one of two defendants was not guilty both should be acquitted is not prejudicial. Marx v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 590. Instruction that a certain witness was an accomplice. Winfield v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 182. Failure to instruct as to rights of deceased as an officer is harmless. Philpot v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 757, 69 S. W. 959. Error in instructing as to constructive knowledge where there was proof of actual knowledge. Ross v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 543. Mistaken reference to color of stolen horse, not material to identity. State v. Deal [Or.] 70 Pac. 534. Reference to defendant's right to testify where he exercised such right. State v. Terry, 172 Mo. 213. Instruction that conspiracy may be "inferred" held harmless. Wait v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 604, 69 S. W. 697. Instructing as matter of law as to undisputed fact. Milby v. U. S., 120 Fed. 1. Erroneous instructions as to defense of which there was no evidence. State v. Pohl, 170 Mo. 422. Submitting to jury question which should have been decided as a matter of law against defendant. State v. Douette [Wash.] 71 Pac. 556. Instruction incorrect in abstract but not misleading as applied to evidence. People v. Jackson, 138 Cal. 462, 71 Pac. 566. Erroneous instruction as to omissions harmless where other proof of guilt is clear. Meul v. People, 198 Ill. 258. That but one offense was charged by four counts. State v. Cook, 75 Conn. 267. Instruction too favorable to defendant. State v. Ashcraft, 170 Mo. 409; Olds v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 296; State v. Sally, 41 Or. 366, 70 Pac. 396. Reference to defendant as lessee of a disorderly house though the proof was clear that he was owner and keeper. Ross v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 543; Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 17; State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132.

Held prejudicial: Failure to submit included offenses. State v. Trusty [Iowa] 92 N. W. 677. Instruction that a mistake in acquitting can never be corrected. State v. Hunter [Iowa] 92 N. W. 872.

92. Refusal of proper instructions harmless where the jury must necessarily convict on the evidence. Lyman v. People, 198 Ill. 544. Failure to instruct as to the purpose of declarations admitted to impeach a witness. Cox v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 680, 69 S. W. 799. Failure to submit exception in statute on gaming as to play at a residence is harmless where the evidence is all that the play was in an open field. Nicholson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 969.

93. Conversation between juror and witness held harmless. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 17.

94. Failure of court, before pronouncing sentence, to inform defendant of the verdict, and ask him whether he had anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him, is without prejudice, where the defendant is recalled, informed of the verdict, and the statutory interrogative propounded. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556.

95. Where a stay of execution is granted by the appellate court, an error of the trial court in refusing to suspend the execution of sentence on application and notice of intention to appeal is without prejudice. Id.

cipal crime.[96] An order directing the removal of defendant to another place of confinement, to protect him from threatened lynchings, is not an error of which he could justly complain.[97] That the jury convicted of murder in the second degree when a conviction in the first degree was required by the evidence is no ground for reversal.[98]

Cure of error.—Error, though of a nature to be prejudicial, may be cured by the action of the court in withdrawing from consideration evidence improperly admitted,[99] or admitting evidence improperly excluded[1] by competent evidence to the same point as that erroneously admitted or excluded,[2] or by the admission of evidence making competent evidence received out of order,[3] or by a verdict on an issue to which the error did not relate.[4] Improper statements by counsel are usually deemed cured by prompt withdrawal,[5] or a direction by the court to disregard them,[6]

96. People v. Mills, 86 N. Y. Supp. 529.
97. State v. Armstrong [Or.] 73 Pac. 1022.
98. Russell v. State, 92 N. W. 751.
99. Admission of erroneous evidence cured by striking out. McCormick v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 606; People v. Hackett, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 86; People v. Glennon, 175 N. Y. 45. Instruction not to consider evidence improperly admitted. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 84. Illegal testimony withdrawn by the court and the jury instructed to disregard it is harmless. Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29. Objections to withdrawn testimony cannot be considered on appeal. State v. Melvern [Wash.] 72 Pac 489. Where the rejection of evidence is ordered after it has gone to the jury, the jury should be admonished in explicit language as to what evidence is excluded which should be specified in detail and it is proper to name the witnesses from whom it was elicited unless the evidence is admitted for a specific purpose, though otherwise incompetent, in which case, without giving it undue prominence the court should inform the jury as to the purpose for which it is to be considered. Instruction held insufficient. Bess v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 349.

1. Subsequently allowing witness to answer question excluded. State v. Roller, 30 Wash. 692, 71 Pac. 718. Error in ruling that an expert for defendant cannot answer a hypothetical question based partly on facts to which defendant has testified, is cured by allowing him to answer a question substantially stating all the facts to which defendant has testified. State v. Dunn [Mo.] 77 S. W. 848. It is harmless error to sustain an objection to a question asked if practically the same question is subsequently asked and answered without objection. State v. Armstrong [Or.] 73 Pac. 1022. Exclusion cured by subsequent answer. Sylvester v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 142; Edwards v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1038. Cured by court's asking excluded question after counsel refused to renew it on permission given. Elmore v. State [Ala.] 35 So. 25.

2. Admission or declaration harmless where declarant testified to the same facts. State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354. But see State v. Levy, 90 Mo. App. 643. Evidence corroborating other evidence admitted without objection, the whole being subsequently stricken out. State v. Gregory, 170 Mo. 598. Oral evidence as to brand on cow; hide subsequently produced in court. State v. Sally, 41 Or. 366, 70 Pac. 396. Admission of secondary evidence cured by subsequent proof that the writing was destroyed. Alderson v. Com. [Ky.] 74 S. W. 679. An inaccuracy in an instruction as to what carrying away constitutes larceny, is immaterial, where the evidence shows the carrying away and the defense admits the taking under a claim of right. Williams v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 335. Curing admission by subsequent proof of facts showing competency. Collins v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 993; Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. Where a fact was proved by witnesses for both defendant and the state, refusal to allow a particular witness to testify thereto is harmless. Robinson v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 985. Improper admission of parol evidence of former conviction is not rendered harmless by the fact that defendant subsequently testified so that he might have been cross-examined thereon. Paulson v. State [Wis.] 94 N. W. 771. Introduction of evidence on promise in bad faith to connect it is not cured by withdrawal. Tijerina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 913.

3. It is harmless error to allow proof of declarations of a co-conspirator before the conspiracy is proved, if the existence of the conspiracy at the time of the declarations is subsequently proved. People v. Putnam, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1056.

4. Refusal to submit included offense where defendant was notwithstanding convicted thereof. Morton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 93. Objection that the indictment alleges previous offenses for the purpose of authorizing an increased penalty cannot be raised where the punishment assessed does not exceed that authorized for a first offense. Kinney v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 225. Error in instructions as to a degree higher than that of which defendant was convicted is harmless. State v. Cather [Iowa] 96 N. W. 722; Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. Allowing the information to be amended is harmless where defendant was acquitted on the count amended. Meehan v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 173. Improper evidence to which it appears the jury gave no weight. Litton v. Com. [Va.] 44 S. E. 923. Conviction for murder in the second degree shows harmlessness in error on charge on express malice. Sparks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 811. Refusal of charge on higher degree than verdict. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025.

especially where defendant asks no further action by the court.[7] If it appear at the trial that no harm resulted from the denial of the continuance, it will not be ground for reversal.[8] Error in permitting plea of guilty without appointing counsel is cured by appointment of counsel on whose advice plea is withdrawn.[9] Failure to ask defendant if he had anything to say before sentence is cured by recalling him for that purpose.[10] The doctrine that the charge is to be considered as a whole is elsewhere treated.[11]

§ 16. Stay of proceedings after conviction.—Statutes usually provide for a stay of execution of sentence pending appeal.[12] In some states a certificate of reasonable doubt is necessary to stay proceedings.[13] Mandamus will not issue to compel the judge to suspend a sentence of which he has lost jurisdiction.[14]

§ 17. Appeal and review. A. Right of review.[15]—Statutes sometimes allow an appeal by the prosecutions from orders other than a judgment of acquittal.[16] Such

App.] 70 S. W. 954; McMillan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 279. Error in argument may be cured by an oral direction to disregard the objectionable remarks followed by an instruction to the same effect. Statements by prosecuting attorney that defendant's counsel could have asked defendant about his wife cutting him in former difficulties but he failed to do so. Fugett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 461. An allusion to the date at which an indictment was returned, which the jury is instructed to disregard, is not error. Objected to on the ground that it was not in evidence and had calculated to prejudice and inflame the minds of the jury. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 810. Reference to other crimes by defendant held not cured. People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 71 Pac. 564. Reference to lynching in neighboring county as to which there was much excitement at the place of trial is not cured by admonition to be governed only by the evidence. Powell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 218. Comment on failure of defendant to offer evidence of his good character held not cured by admonition. State v. Shipley [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 612. Prompt statement by court that certain argument was improper cures the error. People v. McDonald [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1064. Merely saying that a remark by the prosecuting attorney referring to defendant as an ex-convict was "improper" is not sufficient. State v. King [Mo.] 74 S. W. 627. Erroneous offer of former plea of guilty in evidence cured by admonition. State v. Allen [Mo.] 74 S. W. 839.

7. State v. Gartrell, 171 Mo. 489; State v. Hernia [N. J. Err. & App.] 53 Atl. 85; State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608. Though the conduct of counsel warrants a mistrial if defendant asks only a rebuke which is granted the error is deemed cured. Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230.

8. State v. Morgan [Utah] 74 Pac. 526. Refusal of a continuance, if error, is cured where on the trial it appears that evidence sought to be obtained was incompetent, irrelevant or was supplied by other witnesses in attendance, or for any other reason the applicant has not been prejudiced. Fox v. State [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 815. Absent witness—evidence at trial showed probable falsity. Landreth v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 758. Alleged illness of witness who testified at trial. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 612, 69 S. W. 721. Absence of counsel or refusal to act; defendant represented by competent counsel. Rone v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1174, 70 S. W. 1042; Howard v. 13. Such certificate cannot be granted by a supreme court judge until the bill of exceptions is settled. Ex parte Warren, 41 Or. 309, 71 Pac. 644. Instruction that disagreement would result in great waste of public money and calling on each juror separately to state if he desired any information is ground for a certificate. People v. Young, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 256. Charge as a matter of fact that defendant was engaged in burglary at time of homicide held ground for certificate. Id. A certificate of reasonable doubt will be granted to one convicted of larceny for obtaining goods under false representations where the representations were not in writing [under Pen. Code N. Y. § 544]. People v. Rothstein, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1076.

14. Suspension was sought pending review. Cribb v. Parker [Ga.] 46 S. E. 110.

right is strictly limited by the terms of the act.[17] A plea of guilty does not waive the right of appeal.[18]

(§ 17) B. The remedy for obtaining review.[19]—Error or "appeal" if appropriate are the ordinary remedies.[20] Questions of law may in some jurisdictions be reported or certified[21] from specified courts,[22] but not the whole case.[23] The supreme court will not, under its supervisory powers, review the guilt or innocence of the accused.[24] Certiorari or prohibition may issue, though an appeal has been taken and abandoned;[25] but where an appeal has been abandoned by an escape, another cannot be brought.[26]

One on bail is not entitled to bring certiorari, so called, to inquire into the cause of his imprisonment.[27]

(§ 17) C. Adjudications which may be reviewed.—The judgment must be a finality in the trial court.[28] Decisions not final on special pleas[29] and intermediate orders generally are not reviewable,[30] nor is refusal to settle a bill of exceptions.[31] The filing away of an indictment subject to future reinstatement is final and appealable,[32] likewise the quashing of indictment.[33] The further appealability of judgments of courts of review rests in statute.[34] State decisions are reviewable by the Federal supreme court only when some constitutionally guaranteed right has been infringed.[35] from a dismissal before information was filed. State v. Murrey, 30 Wash. 383, 70 Pac. 971.

Authority to appeal for state held sufficiently shown. State v. Long, 66 S. C. 398.

17. An appeal or writ of error by the state lies only from the quashing of an indictment, not from the quashing of an information. State v. Beagles [Mo.] 74 S. W. 851; State v. Rozelle [Mo.] 74 S. W. 852.

18. Hogue v. State, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 567.

20. Appeal will not lie to refusal to settle a bill. People v. Jackson, 138 Cal. 32, 70 Pac. 918.

21. Law questions on indictment for felony may be reported. State v. Seguin [Me.] 56 Atl. 840. A motion by the prosecuting attorney to quash the jury list may be reserved for the supreme court. State v. Bollin [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 1. A question of law arising on a motion for new trial cannot be reported to the supreme court until after the motion has been denied. Statute says on trial of one "convicted." Com. v. Burton [Mass.] 67 N. E. 419.

22. The municipal court of Dane County has power to report a question to the supreme court for decision. State v. Knight [Wis.] 95 N. W. 390.

23. Whether an error is prejudicial is not a proper question for certification as it can be answered only on the entire record. State v. Knight [Wis.] 95 N. W. 390.

28. There must be a judgment on the verdict. Hayden v. State [Miss.] 32 So. 922. The verdict is not appealable. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586.

A report of questions on a trial of one "convicted" can be had only on denial of his motion for new trial. Com. v. Burton [Mass.] 67 N. E. 419. In Kentucky the commonwealth may appeal for the review of rulings of the lower court on questions of law while the case is still undetermined [Cr. Code, § 335]. Com. v. Schlitzbaum [Ky.] 76 S. W. 835.

29. Overruling demurrer to plea of former acquittal is not. Ter. v. Pratt [N. M.] 70 Pac. 562. Granting new trial after verdict sustaining plea of former acquittal is not. State v. Ellsworth, 131 N. C. 773.

30. Gen. St. 1901, § 5019, does not apply to criminal cases. State v. Coffelt [Kan.] 71 Pac. 588. Motion for discharge because defendant was illegally brought into jurisdiction is not. Id. Denial of motion to quash indictment for alleging a general conclusion instead of a fact is not. It is not a question of the construction of a statute within Acts 1901, p. 565, § 7. Deane v. State, 159 Ind. 313. Denial of motion to strike out counts is not. State v. Jones [Del.] 53 Atl. 858. An order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586; People v. Ford, 138 Cal. 140, 70 Pac. 1075.

(§ 17) D. Courts of review and their jurisdiction.—As between two courts, the question is usually decided by the existence of certain jurisdictional conditions.[36] Jurisdiction is limited by an enumeration of cognizable cases[37] or provisions founded on the amount of punishment, but if a case is of the class reviewable, the court has jurisdiction for all purposes.[38] Where a trial court had no jurisdiction, the reviewing court acquires none by appeal.[39]

(§ 17) E. Procedure to bring up the cause.—The appeal must be taken within the time limited by the statute,[40] and upon such service or notice as the practice prescribes.[41] Where the transcript is not filed in time, jurisdiction cannot be conferred by agreement between the parties, nor can appeal be granted at later term so as to cure it.[42]

A recognizance on appeal must be in substantial compliance with the law,[43] and seasonably filed.[44] In Texas, it must show the offense and conviction,[45] the punishment imposed[46] or judgment appealed from,[47] must state the names of the sureties,[48] must bind appellant to appear as the statute requires,[49] and abide the judgment.[50] A recognizance binding the principal in a certain sum and each surety in such sum substantially complies with the requirement that the sureties be severally 39. Appeal from justice to superior. State v. Wiseman, 131 N. C. 795.

40. Proceedings in error to vacate a judgment must be brought strictly within the time prescribed by statute. To give the supreme court jurisdiction under Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 5422, as amended by Sess. Laws 1901, § 1, c. 63, p. 65. Caldwell v. State [Wyo.] 74 Pac. 496. The time running from judgment, it is suspended by pendency of motion for new trial. Com. v. Tarvin, 24 Ky. L. R. 1663, 72 S. W. 13. An appeal after an order directing entry of judgment nunc pro tunc as of a date more than a year before the taking of such appeal is too late. People v. Ward [Cal.] 72 Pac. 343.

41. Proceedings in error are not commenced by service of summons on the attorney general alone. Under Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 5423, as amended by Sess. Laws 1901, § 2, c. 63, p. 65, requiring such service on the attorney general and the prosecuting officer of the county. Caldwell v. State [Wyo.] 74 Pac. 496.

Variance between the punishment found in the judgment and that recited in the recognizance, is ground for dismissal of the appeal. Hargrove v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 926.

47. On an appeal from a dismissal of an appeal from a justice to the county court, the recognizance must distinctly state that the appeal is procured from such dismissal. Not proper to state that defendant was convicted in the county court. Buck v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 12.

48. Herbert v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 587.

49. Where the statute requires a recognizance on appeal to bind a defendant to appear before the court at which the conviction was obtained from day to day and from term to term, it is not sufficient that the recognizance requires defendant to appear at the next term. Anderson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 470. Nor is it sufficient to require defendant to appear at the next regular term and there remain from day to day and from term to term [Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 887]. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 470.

50. Obligation to abide judgment of court of criminal appeals without adding "in this case" is bad. Fortenberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 586, 588; Herbert v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. bound.[51] A recognizance "before the court in session" sufficiently shows that it was taken "in open court."[52]

(§ 17) F. Perpetuation of proceedings in the "record." What must appear, and whether by record proper or bill of exceptions.—What must appear to authorize a review of particular errors is elsewhere treated.[53] To sustain the appeal, the record must show jurisdictional facts, such as the indictment or information,[54] arraignment,[55] that accused was present in court,[56] a final judgment,[57] or such aggrieving action as entitles appellant,[58] and that the appeal is by authority,[59] and the procedure essential to transfer the jurisdiction;[60] but on a second appeal, the court will take judicial notice of the filing of its former mandate below, though the record does not show it.[61] In Texas, there must be either a certificate that appellant is confined pending the appeal or a recognizance in the record.[62] Those matters which belong to the record proper must appear thereby,[63] and such matters need not be and cannot be otherwise shown,[64] but all matters not part of the record proper must appear by bill of exceptions or its equivalent,[65] and if there be none, only the record

proper will be reviewed.[66] The omission of such matters is commonly not cured by inclusion in the motion for a new trial,[67] which does not carry with it into the record the proceedings and evidence had on hearing of it.[68] Where both bill of exceptions and statement of facts are required, the former cannot be looked to in aid of the latter,[69] nor can gratuitous recitals in the record supply a material omission from the exceptions.[70] A bill of exceptions referred to in the motion for new trial may be looked to to ascertain the nature of the objection, though the bill was refused by the trial court because the objection was not made in time.[71] Record made on former appeal cannot be used.[72] Where the practice is not to preserve evidence by question and answer, the proper showing must be made to procure it to be done.[73]

Making, settling and approving.—The bill of exceptions or like memorial of the proceedings must be approved by the trial judge[74] within the time limited,[75] and show such facts.[76] A disavowal by him of recollection has been held not a disapproval,[77] nor yet an admission of the particular facts in question.[78] The certificate

Motion for new trial. Call v. People, 201 Ill. 499. Motion for new trial on weight and sufficiency of evidence to support verdict must be in bill of exceptions with exception to ruling on it. McDonald v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 72.

Proceedings on selection of jury are part of record. State v. Vance, 29 Wash. 435, 70 Pac. 34. Written challenge to jury entered in journal is part of the record. Id.

66. In the absence of a bill of exception nothing will be reviewed but the record proper. State v. Horned [Mo.] 76 S. W. 953; State v. Cayce [Mo.] 77 S. W. 525; State v. Farr [Mo.] 74 S. W. 834.

67. Affidavit on motion for new trial does not present objections to argument. Miller v. Com. [Ky.] 77 S. W. 682. A motion to quash an indictment and the evidence in support of it are not sufficiently presented for review by incorporation in a motion for a new trial made a part of the bill of exceptions. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265. Objections to the overruling of challenges for cause cannot be reviewed where shown in the record only on a motion for new trial. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265.

68. Evidence offered on a motion for a new trial, which is refused, cannot be considered on appeal unless brought up by bill of exceptions (State v. Michel, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 629); unless made part of the bill of exceptions testimony taken and objections made at the hearing of an application for a new trial, will not be considered on appeal, though copied in the transcript (State v. Com., 111 La. ——, 35 So. 839).

69. Lively v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 393.

70. The necessity for a bill of exceptions is not relieved by a note made, of the exceptions taken and reversed, by the clerk of the court. State v. Carr, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 839. The taking of exceptions. Bruen v. People [Ill.] 69 N. E. 24. Remarks are not preserved by motion for new trial asserting that they were made. Finlayson v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 203. An appellant cannot eke out the recitals of his bill of exceptions through those contained in his application for a new trial. State v. Brown [La.] 35 So. 818. An explanation by the judge irregularly made is foreign to the record and will be ignored. State v. Riggs [La.] 34 So. 655. Matter assigned for error in the specification is no part of the record though specifications are included in bill of exceptions, the brief being the proper place. Binyon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 265.

71. Allen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 458.

72. Abstract of evidence. State v. Wolf [Iowa] 92 N. W. 673.

73. A defendant cannot by a claim of prejudice, have an examination set out in an appeal record by question and answer, unless such prejudice is made to appear by affidavit under general rules of practice (N. Y.) No. 34. People v. Childs, 84 N. Y. Supp. 853.

74. Signed by county attorney but not by judge a nullity. Tackaberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 384. Entry in stenographer's notes insufficient. Com. v. Dorman, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 20. Affidavits and matter contained in a transcript of files and journal entries made in the course of trial and certified by the clerk instead of judge are not before it. State v. Wood [Wash.] 74 Pac. 880.

75. Wright v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 187. Bill within 60 days after motion in arrest was overruled held in time. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940.

76. Bill must show that it was tendered in time. Harris v. State, 117 Ga. 13. But if it so states the statement is conclusive. Anderson v. Com. [Va.] 42 S. E. 865. A bill of exceptions will not be considered on appeal where the record does not affirmatively show that the statutory notice for its settlement was given to the county attorney [under Pen. Code Mont. § 2171]. State v. Stickney [Mont.] 75 Pac. 201.

77. Statement of trial judge appended to bill that he had no recollection of certain matters therein held not a disapproval. Fredericson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 754.

78. Where the trial judge states that the reserving of any bill or the facts therein recited has entirely escaped his memory, and there is no evidence that exception was made and bill reserved, his signature to the bill cannot be construed as an admission of the truth of its recitals. His statement on the other hand is a negative which would have justified him in refusing to affix his signature to the bill. State v. Murray [La.] 35 So. 814.

must state that all the record is sent up or it will not be so assumed.[79] It must be legally[80] and seasonably[81] filed in court.

It is counsel's duty to see to the making and settlement of exceptions.[82] The remedy for refusal to settle a bill is by petition, not by appeal.[83]

Amendments, additions and corrections.—New exceptions cannot be supplied by amendment after the term,[84] and the supreme court cannot amend the brief of evidence or order it amended,[85] but a subsequent correction of a defect in form has been allowed in a capital case.[86] A motion in the court below is the proper remedy to secure a correction of the record,[87] and notice thereof is properly served on defendant's attorney.[88] A repeated statement of exceptions in an appeal record may be stricken out.[89] The "extraordinary motion or case" which will authorize a second bill of exceptions after affirmance must be something out of the ordinary range of experience, and does not include newly discovered evidence which is impeaching only, nor the existence of excitement at the time of trial.[90]

The statement of facts must be approved[91] or agreed on,[92] unless failure to do so was not at the fault of parties,[93] and its correctness settled,[94] and must be filed within the time required.[95] The statement must be complete when settled.[96] An un-

79. Entire record will not be reviewed (P. L. 1898, p. 915) unless there is a certificate of the trial judge that entire record is returned with writ of error. State v. Hendrick [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 247.

80. Indorsement of filing by ex clerk a nullity. Brundren v. State [Tenn.] 70 S. W. 368.

81. Within term. Galloway v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 211. Consent of prosecuting attorney cannot cure failure to file in time. Pollard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 953. Bill of exceptions filed after the time limited will not be considered. State v. Penn [Mo.] 74 S. W. 616. A bill of exceptions allowed and signed on a certain day to which it was extended as provided by statute is sufficient [under Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 4753]. State v. Bradbury [Kan.] 74 Pac. 231. Consent of a county attorney is not necessary to the extension of time for settling a bill of exceptions, under Pen. Code Mont. § 2171, requiring a person desiring a bill of exceptions, to prepare and present a draft, on notice to the county attorney, to the judge for settlement within a specified time unless an extension of time is granted. State v. Landry [Mont.] 74 Pac. 418.

82. Counsel and not the clerk must present bills of exception and have them signed promptly. State v. Artus [La.] 34 So. 596.

92. A statement of facts which is not signed by the attorneys or approved by the trial judge cannot be considered. Mullins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 560.

93. Facts stated in a motion held insufficient to show that a failure of the trial judge to approve the statement of facts was the fault of the judge. Walls v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 8. The failure of the record to show proof of the statement of facts by the trial judge is due to an error of the clerk in making the record may authorize its consideration. Mullins v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 560. Diligence excusing a timely filing of a statement of facts is not shown where there is no explanation of the failure of defendant's attorney to make an effort to have the statement approved before the last day of the time allowed him, on which day it was presented to the trial judge then holding court in another county, approved and mailed to the proper county, where it was filed on the following day and where it could have been filed on the day previous had the counsel carried it there himself. Spurlock v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 447. Diligence excusing a failure to incorporate a statement of facts in the record is not shown by a disagreement between counsel as to the statement prepared after which no order was taken for time to file a statement and no order presented during term time to the trial judge. Orosco v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 470.

94. The statement of facts cannot be approved by the judge in advance of the agreement of the attorneys representing the state and defendant that it is correct. Walls v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 8.

95. In Texas, before adjournment unless a ten day order is made. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 85; Henderson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 88; Morton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 93; Stuart v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 963. Expressing statement of facts to judge one day before time expired, held not sufficient. Ashman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 317. Statement of facts more than ten days after adjournment too late. Espanosa v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 461. Expressing statement of facts to a third person who failed to deliver it to the judge in time, held insufficient. Hickman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 317.

96. A statement of facts is not sufficient which when presented to the trial judge for approval instead of setting out the orders of the court, contains the words, "the clerk will insert the order here," though the orders are signed bill cannot be cured by a later signing ex parte.[97] The trial court must certify that the record contains "all" the material evidence in the case, else reversal on the facts cannot be had.[98]

Under the Georgia practice, the motion for a new trial must be approved by the judge or the objections therein made will not be preserved, though the motion itself belongs to the record and not to the bill,[99] and so must amendments to the motion.[1] A motion for new trial on the admission of evidence must show the evidence objected to.[2]

Limitation of review to matters in record.—Except as to those jurisdictional matters which the record is in most states required to show,[3] every reasonable presumption is in favor of the correctness of the proceedings below, and unless the record affirmatively shows error, this presumption will prevail,[4] and the certified record is conclusive as to matters contained therein.[5] It must be presumed that the record expresses the judgment rendered.[6]

That there was an ordinance authorizing the taxation of costs against accused. Cranor v. Albany [Or.] 71 Pac. 1042.

Where the record shows that the court heard testimony on a plea of guilty it will be presumed that the evidence was as to defendant's age and that it justified the reformatory sentence imposed. Marx v. People [Ill.] 68 N. E. 436.

Where defendant was sentenced in less than three days after verdict, it will be presumed that the statutory exception as to adjournment within such time existed. State v. Roan [Iowa] 97 N. W. 997.

That a bill of exceptions was signed before it was filed where signing and filing were on the same day. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940.

5. Where the appellant's case showed that the recorder had asked a number of questions of witnesses, but the recorder certified that he had asked only one. People v. Childs, 84 N. Y. Supp. 853. An undated bill reciting a timely signing will be presumed to be so signed. Tarver v. State, 137 Ala. 29. Facts not shown to be inaccurate must be taken as certified by the trial judge. State v. Williams [La.] 35 So. 521.

6. State v. Hesterly [Mo.] 76 S. W. 985.

A transcript containing a formal indictment duly filed in open court in regular term raises a presumption of regularity in all the proceedings prior thereto.[7] The record need not affirmatively show the existence of conditions under which an information may be filed.[8] Accordingly, to entitle appellant to review a ruling, it must affirmatively appear that such ruling was made,[9] or the proceeding had[10] of which complaint is made, and such facts as show that it was error,[11] or explain the objec-

Refusal to give an instruction in reference to an argument of counsel, objected to but no certificate that such argument was made. McLeod v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 522.

11. Failure to put a witness under the rule. It must be shown what evidence he heard before testifying. Dennis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 559. Ruling on competency of witness will not be reviewed unless the record shows that he gave material testimony against defendant. Reys v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 457.

Motion to quash panel must be accompanied by evidence. Trim v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 718. An assignment of error of the court in overruling the defendant's motion to quash an array of talesmen summoned and in compelling him to select jurors from the list cannot be reviewed where the grounds have not been shown as facts. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 790. On exception to the calling of talesmen because there was no complete call of the venire nor any record of those excused, the clerk must under the court's direction take down all the facts (Act No. 113 of 1896, p. 162); hence the judge's explanation that some of the jury were engaged is ignored on review. State v. Riggs [La.] 34 So. 655. Various modes of showing that talesmen were properly called shown. Id.

Rejected evidence or questions: What testimony was excluded by ruling must appear. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 973; Weaver v. State, 116 Ga. 550; Greene v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 599; Carter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 437; Smith v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 79; Peoples v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 289. A bill of exceptions does not show reversible error in excluding evidence of communications by defendant's sister to a witness in reference to acts of cruelty practiced on her by her husband, where it does not show when defendant was informed of the witness' knowledge. Willis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 790. The object and purpose of the evidence must be shown in the bill of exceptions. Id. Error in overruling an objection to a question cannot be reviewed where the answer is not in the record. Dunn v. State [Ind.] 67 N. E. 940. Refusal to permit the defendant to explain certain statements alleged to have been made by him, cannot be questioned on appeal where the bill of exception,[12] and the objection and exception must be shown[13] with the grounds.[14] A mere statement of grounds urged is not a certificate by the trial judge that they are facts.[15]

Setting out evidence or statements of facts.—A statement of facts or other showing of the evidence is necessary to a review of the sufficiency of the evidence,[16] giving or refusal of instructions,[17] denial of a new trial,[18] or of motion to set aside a ver-tions did not show what the testimony would have been, or its materiality. Keffer v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 556. The record must show an offer of proof. Green v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 76. Where evidence is asserted to be res gestae, the bill of exceptions must show the time elapsing. Freeman v. State [Tex Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 17. Bill held not to show that witness testified to conversation as to which defendant claimed right to cross examine. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 973.

Admission of evidence will not be reviewed unless the evidence is in the record Foskey v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 967. A bill of exceptions to the admissibility of evidence of acts of a third person must contain sufficient recitals to preclude the idea that the testimony was relevant and connected defendant with the transaction. Glenn v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 757. The introduction of documentary evidence cannot be reviewed where its contents are not disclosed in the bill of exceptions. Norsworthy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 803. Objection to evidence of the finding of skin of a stolen calf in the possession of others, on the ground that the privity of defendant with such persons is not shown, is not presented by a bill of exceptions merely stating the objection to the evidence on such ground, and not setting up the evidence showing that such connection was not made. Norsworthy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 803. Admission of conversation, record not showing that defendant was not present. Martin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 380. Where all the evidence supporting a dying declaration is not brought up, it will be presumed that the foundation was sufficient. State v. Frazier, 109 La. 458. The state of the evidence must appear to review ruling on propriety of question to expert witness. Baldridge v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 916. Where argument of prosecuting attorney is complained of argument for defendant must be in record. State v. Sale [Iowa] 92 N. W. 680.

Instructions: Unless the whole charge is in the record refusals on the ground that they were covered will be sustained. Finlayson v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 203. If evidence which is in the bill does not sustain a request its refusal will be sustained. Brown v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 82.

Motion for new trial for modification of requests to charge will not be reviewed if the requests are not in the motion. Foskey v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 967. A statement in a motion for new trial that defendant excepted to the overruling of a motion to quash an information is not sufficient to present the question for review. Centralia v. Smith [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 488.

12. A bill of exceptions should be sufficiently definite in its statements of facts to place the matter to which exceptions are reserved before the court for intelligent review. Grounds of objections are not statements of fact. Orosco v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 470.

13. State v. Hicks [Mo.] 77 S. W. 539; State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 983; Butts v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 593; Bruen v. People [Ill.] 69 N. E. 24. To denial of new trial. McDonald v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 72. Exception to remark of counsel. Com. v. Dorman, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 20. Testimony admissible in part and scope of objection not shown. Jowell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 286. Exception. State v. Rigall, 169 Mo. 559. Ruling on motion for new trial for insufficiency of evidence. McDonald v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 72.

14. Objection to an offer of a calendar to establish the day of the week, is not sufficient, being merely "it was a leading question, irrelevant, tended to prove no issue in the case, and calculated to mislead the minds of the jury." Mathews v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 218.

15. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 232. Existence of grounds resting in fact must be directly stated. Sinclair v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 621.

dict,[19] admission of evidence,[20] refusal to strike out evidence,[21] refusal of a continuance,[22] argument of prosecuting attorney,[23] denial of bail,[24] acceptance of juror,[25] variance,[26] excessiveness of sentence,[27] overruling of demurrer to special plea.[28]

(§ 17) G. Practice and procedure in reviewing court.—The transcript and bill of exceptions must be filed at the time prescribed.[29]

Assignments, abstracts, briefs, etc.—It is generally required that all errors to be urged be assigned[30] separately[31] and specifically.[32] Unless a brief of the argument and authorities relied on is presented, only errors apparent on the face of the record will be reviewed.[33] Errors not argued will be deemed to be abandoned.[34] Failure to assign errors or join in co-defendant's assignments abandons a joint writ of error as to that one.[35] The argument must follow the assignment.[36] A pro forma

State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 549. A motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, will not be reviewed where the record contains neither statement of facts nor bill of exceptions. Kimble v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 17.

19. The denial of a motion to set aside a verdict will not be reviewed unless the affidavits supporting the motion are included in the judgment roll, or in the record by bill of exceptions or otherwise authenticated. By Supreme Court rule 29. People v. Lonnen [Cal.] 73 Pac. 586.
