§ 5. The beneficiary. His estate, rights and interest.—The estate of the beneficiary has been likened to an equitable lien.[38] It is not sufficient to permit him to lease, though he is in permissive possession.[39] The interest of the beneficiary of a resulting trust descends to his heirs[40] like other realty.[41]

The Statute of Uses, which is a part of the law of almost all the states, operates to convey the legal as well as the equitable title to the beneficiary of a passive trust.[42]

Rights between beneficiaries.—Beneficiaries must contribute to co-beneficiaries to make good losses from breaches induced by them or in which they profit.[43] Where one who has a common interest in a trust fund takes proceedings to protect or preserve it, he is entitled to reimbursement out of the fund itself or by contribution from those who accept the benefit of it;[44] otherwise if in the proceedings, he stands adverse to the fund.[45] Other beneficiaries are not liable for acts giving a portion of the beneficiaries an action of trespass against the trustee.[46]

Income and principal.[47]—The beneficiary of income is entitled to a stock dividend based on accumulated profits[48] or the proceeds of its sale,[49] and to an extra cash dividend;[50] but subscription rights to an increased stock issue are corpus,[51] or funds realized from sale of such rights,[52] and it is also held by perhaps better authority that where a corporation converts earnings into capital stock, dividends are corpus.[53] Proceeds of sale of stock above inventoried value is principal,[54] and premiums paid on investments are charged as principal.[55]

Profits from a purchase and sale to protect the corpus are not income, but income should not be charged with interest on a loan secured to effectuate the transaction.[56]

Charges on income.—A legacy payable in the future must be met by deduc-husband's name under fraud or mistake [Ky. St. 1903, § 2353]. Planters' Bank & Trust Co. v. Major [Ky.] 79 S. W. 264. To show use of wife's funds in purchase in name of husband. Emfinger v. Emfinger, 137 Ala. 337.

tion annually from the income of such sum as with interest will produce the amount.[57] As against a debtor beneficiary, a testamentary trustee, also executor, cannot apply income to a debt to the estate.[58]

A beneficiary of income less taxes is not to be charged in favor of the remainderman with taxes which were paid by the trustees on foreclosure of a mortgage which they had taken as an investment and which were a lien on the land when they bought it on foreclosure.[59] Inheritance taxes charged on the income must be paid before any payment to the beneficiary,[60] and those which fall on principal and income must be so apportioned and the income not all paid out leaving the principal to bear the whole burden.[61] The trustee cannot cease payment of income on accrual of taxes where they can be met in the ordinary course of administration.[62] Where a trust estate was established and the beneficiary was also given use of a dwelling, taxes, repairs, etc., are to be paid from income and not principal of the residuary estate.[63]

A loss should be apportioned in the proportion the corpus bears the unpaid interest due the life tenant.[64] The trustees cannot withhold income to make good losses for which they and their sureties are liable.[65] Money borrowed to protect stock under agreement that dividends shall be applied to the loan must be reimbursed to income.[66]

Where beneficiaries are to take the corpus on reaching majority, the first takers' shares are to be charged with a proportion of the expenses of continuing the trust, the provision being for equal shares.[67]

Claims enforceable against trust funds or estate.[68]—Dower and homestead in favor of a husband cannot be allowed from land held by the wife in trust for children by a former marriage.[69] Legacies placed in trust by the executor for the legatees may be reached by a judgment creditor of decedent who has not been paid.[70] Though a mortgage is excepted from the covenants of a trust deed, such does not indicate an intention that it should not be made a charge on other land under a general charge for payment of debts.[71] When a trust for the benefit of the settlor has been judicially declared valid in a direct attack, a creditor junior to the deed cannot reach the corpus.[72]

Where the trust estate is sold to satisfy a prior encumbrance, any surplus goes to the beneficiary, and any income of the entire estate up to time of sale which has not been applied to incumbrances as directed by testator.[73] A deposit of trust fund cannot be appropriated to the trustee's individual debt.[74]

Rights of creditors and assignees of beneficiary.—A beneficiary of income may assign or alienate his rights thereto,[75] unless under a spendthrift trust,[76] in which case the creditors of the beneficiary cannot reach his equitable interest,[77] and even advancements by the trustees cannot be recouped before a reasonable allowance for support is made;[78] but after income is paid over to him, it may be liable.[79]

Where the trustees are directed to pay a mortgage on the life estate from the residuary estate to the income of which the beneficiary is also entitled, his creditors may reach the proceeds of sale of the residuary estate to the extent they should have been applied to the protection of the life estate, if the trustees at the request of the beneficiary allow that property to be sold at foreclosure.[80]

Representation of beneficiary by trustee.—Persons for whose benefit property is conveyed are not liable for purchase money on the trustee's promise.[81] A husband, trustee for his wife, cannot bind her by a statement that stocks standing in her name and presumptively belonging to her were held in place of trust funds disposed of by him, unless she is shown to have acquiesced in such statements.[82]

A beneficiary after obtaining title cannot sue in his own name for rent during the years when the status of the property was in litigation between the trustee and beneficiary on a lease executed by the trustee.[83]

§ 6. The trustee. Appointment, qualification, resignation and removal. Who may be trustee.—Trustees under a will may also be beneficiaries,[84] but the trustee must not be the sole beneficiary.[85]

Appointment by court.—Judicial appointment will not be made in the absence of wrongdoing or neglect of trustees appointed by the donor.[86] It will be made on death of trustee where the trust is permanent,[87] or in case of incompetency.[88] A successor to a deceased trustee may be appointed on petition of any party interested in the property.[89] In New York, until recently, the supreme court would execute the trust without appointing a trustee in case of death.[90]

90. A trust to pay income and principal

A provision that vacancies may be filled by a designated court, "subject to the approval of the persons interested in the estate," prevents arbitrary appointment of even a qualified person. Such a provision applies to all vacancies,[91] and only the very persons whose approval is indicated may give it.[92]

The court does not lose jurisdiction to appoint a trustee to whom the executor shall pay funds in his hands at final accounting by the fact that after consent to the appointment the executor appealed from his allowance, and some time intervened before the order of appointment was entered.[93]

Resignation.—Persons who are both testamentary guardians and trustees cannot resign in one capacity and not the other.[94] An order appointing a trustee on resignation of a testamentary trustee vests the new trustee with the legal title.[95]

Trustees are charged with expenses of a voluntary motion to resign.[96]

Removal is warranted by circumstances or conduct jeopardizing the estate,[97] but not by mere irregularity in appointment[98] or causes not affecting proper discharge of the trust,[99] or on account of conduct of a co-trustee not known to or approved by him;[1] but want of harmony between trustees may be a ground.[2] The property will not be committed to a receiver if the trustee has acted with fidelity and good judgment.[3]

Proceedings for removal are presumed to be regular after lapse of a long time.[4] Where plaintiff with knowledge of the relation of would-be purchasers of the corpus fails to make them parties on commencing the action, refusal of his subsequent motion to make them defendants is discretionary.[5] The application may be in chambers.[6] It is not usual to refer a motion for removal to a master.[7] See the footnotes for authority as to evidence, issues, etc.[8]

Bonds.—By the statutes of some states, the amount of bond is discretionary with the court.[9] Sureties are in New York protected against unauthorized withdrawals by a statute requiring their consent to withdrawals and notice before an order of court may be made allowing payments from the funds.[10]

The enforcement of sureties' liabilities is largely governed by the statutes, and peculiar procedure of various jurisdictions.[11] They may be discharged by alteration of the bond.[12] They have the burden of accounting for funds, the receipt of which the trustee has acknowledged.[13] It is immaterial as to them whence the trust funds came,[14] or when or in what manner they were delivered.[15] They cannot assert that the estate was never legally distributed under the will, where the parties mutually interested have agreed to the distribution.[16] They cannot hold the beneficiary as owner of stock in which the trustee was permitted to invest and be regarded as borrowing the amount so invested.[17]

Substitutions.—A designation of an officer as substitute when annexed to words of time nominates only that person who is incumbent when the time arrives.[18] A testamentary trustee succeeding an executor who has fully administered does not succeed as executor.[19] A person whose interest if any is junior to a trust cannot question a substitution.[20]

§ 7. Execution and administration of trust. A. Nature of trustee's title and establishment of estate.—The trustee takes only such estate as demanded by the purposes of the trust.[21] Legal title as between the parties passes without de-suits may be introduced, though plaintiff was not a party, to show that matters which plaintiff alleged were still open and unsettled by a previous contract had been settled and were the matters referred to in the agreement on which action was based. Receipt and establishment of estate.—A decree, on settlement of an executor's accounts, that he holds a fund in trust establishes the trust.[25] Though receipt of trust funds is acknowledged in writing by co-executors, subsequent declarations by one of receipt individually may prevent his administrator from denying it.[26] If there has been a prior trust the prior trustee must have turned over the property.[27]

Possession by either trustee or beneficiary is not presumed to be hostile to the other.[28] A co-trustee cannot recover entire individual possession.[29]

(§ 7) B. Discretion and general powers of trustees and judicial control.—In addition to the express powers,[30] powers necessary to the exercise of those granted will be implied.[31] A testamentary trustee taking after full administration and discharge of an executor has only a trustee's powers, despite an appointment also as administrator de bonis non.[32] One of joint trustees cannot exercise powers entrusted to joint discretion.[33] Trustees are not bound by the individual acts of a co-trustee.[34] A ratification of his unauthorized act must be with full knowledge of all facts.[35]

Statutes allowing a surviving or continuing trustee to act unless appointment of a successor is necessary are not retroactive.[36] A successor may exercise powers not personal to the original trustee.[37]

Powers may be in some cases delegated to the beneficiary,[38] or to an agent.[39]

order or decree would be granted on a proper showing.[40] Where he is uncertain as to a proper action he may have the direction of equity.[41] The application when not in a pending suit should be by bill.[42] Directions as to disposition of surplus income cannot be given in a proceeding to which those entitled are not parties.[43]

The courts in some states decline to give advice concerning administration of realty outside the state.[44] Equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a trustee from the misapplication of trust funds.[45]

Payments to beneficiary.—As to trust funds applied to the individual indebtedness of the beneficiary's guardian, the trustees are not entitled to credit.[46] A father-in-law, trustee for the wife, cannot charge her funds with gifts to the son without direction.[47] Trustees for support cannot give the beneficiary the immediate benefit of the fund or pay it to him except when his necessities and comfort, as indicated in the will, require it.[48]

Where the trust is for life of parents, the trustee is not bound to notify beneficiaries of their rights as they attain their majority.[49]

Encroachments on principal[50] for the necessity of the life tenant are not allowed where there is a remainder limited.[51] They cannot be authorized on the ex parte application of the trustee.[52] The court has no arbitrary discretion to apply principal to support, but there must be a showing of the necessities and circumstances of the beneficiary.[53] An allowance may be made from a directed accumulation for support or education of a minor beneficiary when so provided by statute.[54] A substituted trustee is not given authority to encroach on the principal by an order of appointment directing him to make loans and pay interest and rents to the life beneficiaries.[55]

(§ 7) C. Personal liability of trustee to estate and third persons.[56]—Trustees contracting without reference to any limitation of liability resulting from an ordinary contract are personally liable.[57] Personal liability exists for injuries from failure to keep the estate in repair as required,[58] and though, there being no charge to repair, the trustees are not liable as such.[59] Where a conveyance though unauthorized is not fraudulent the trustee is not liable in the first instance as for a conversion.[60]

The lien of the beneficiary on the trustee's realty for wasted funds is not superior to a prior acquired lien of a creditor of the trustee.[61]

The administrator of a trustee is not chargeable with interest on trust funds.[62] Claims for interest due at time of death of trustee must be presented by beneficiary of a specific fund against the trustee's estate.[63]

(§ 7) D. Personal dealings with estate.—The trustee is not permitted to derive individual profit from the estate,[64] or act in hostility to his trust,[65] and profits so gained go to the beneficiary,[66] so a trustee who, in his own name, makes a purchase while in the performance of his duties as trustee, holds for the beneficiary,[67] and the disability to purchase continues as long as the legal title rests in the trustee,[68] though such purchases will not be set aside as a matter of course at the instance of the trustee.[69] Hence a purchase from the beneficiary is voidable as to the beneficiary,[70] but the trustee need not account for the difference between the face of the beneficiary's orders to a third person and the amount for which he settles.[71]

A check on trust funds in favor of the trustee's wife is presumed to be in discharge of an obligation of the estate.[72]

A trustee seeking to foreclose prior mortgages is bound by the decree as to junior mortgages held by him individually.[73]

Inducement or ratification of unauthorized acts may prevent the beneficiary from asserting a breach of trust,[74] but the trustee must show good faith.[75] A beneficiary does not abandon stock to trustee by failing to pay assessments.[76]

One to whom mortgages are assigned in trust, for the protection of a subsequent transferee of the mortgagor, on warranties made by him on the transfer of parcels and to preserve funds realized from the sale to the satisfaction of liens, cannot foreclose as against the grantees, nor can an assignee of the trustee. The beneficiary on becoming administrator for the creator of the trust does not waive this right, by an assignment to the trustee of "any interest the deceased may have" in the mortgages. Assignment construed to create such a trust. Richtmyer v. Lasher, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 574. intention to give the trustees as full control as the settlor had had,[78] or though they are empowered to deal with the property in any way they may see fit.[79] When a sale of trust realty results merely in equitable conversion, leaving life estates stand, a re-investment is necessary.[80]

A trust company is not negligent in failing to take precautions imposed by the laws of a foreign state to protect corporate stock from the claims of creditors.[81] Though property made over to trustees is not of the kind in which trust funds are ordinarily invested, it need not be altered unless required by reasonable prudence,[82] but a testamentary trustee may become liable for improper investments by the executor by receiving the securities at the value of the fund invested and reporting them so.[83]

Investments need not be within the state in all cases.[84] As a usual rule the stock of private corporations is not a proper investment.[85]

Preservation of assets and reduction to possession.—Trustees are liable for failure to take charge of trust property unless worthless or so damaged that in their honest and best judgment it is not for the best interest of the trust,[86] they should use the care of an ordinarily careful and prudent man in his own business under the same circumstances, in keeping off squatters and trespassers.[87] Whether they take possession within a reasonable time is usually a question for the jury.[88] Failure to use best judgment and reasonable skill to raise money from estate imposes liability for sufferance of tax sale.[89]

Where the trustee has no power to prevent the beneficiary from taking possession, he is not accountable to the beneficiary for rents received while the grantor was in possession.[90]

Where a trust fund for the support of children is invested in land the trustees may allow the parents of the beneficiaries to take possession and execute mortgages to the trustees, off-setting the support of the beneficiaries against interest.[91]

Delivery of control to beneficiary.—If the trustee is directed to allow the beneficiary to participate in management, he may deliver trust stocks to the beneficiary with power to pledge to secure a loan to the estate,[92] and a pledge of trust securities by the beneficiary is ratified by the trustee by crediting himself with the stock as delivered to the beneficiary for investment.[93]

Estoppel of beneficiaries to question acts may result from acceptance of benefits,[94] but ratification of a loan is not shown by acceptance of a note without objection.[95] Beneficiaries of mortgage securities in possession of the mortgaged property cannot assert the statute of limitations against the trustee, on his attempt to foreclose, in order to hold him personally liable.[96]

(§ 7) F. Creation of charges, mortgage and lease of estate. Power to lease.—A trustee to manage and apply income to support may lease,[97] and under a trust to sell for creditors, a lease may be made pending sale.[98] A lease cannot be for a longer term than the trust,[99] but an excessive term is valid as long as the trust continues.[1]

Under a lease with a covenant to renew, receipt of rent by a beneficiary does not authorize specific performance on the theory of part performance, where the beneficiary does not know that the lease is invalidated by the statute of frauds and the action is unknown to the trustees who have refused to renew and with whom the lessee is dealing for continued occupancy.[2]

Mortgages.—Statutes regulating sales by trustees do not apply to mortgages under power in the deed.[3]

A power to sell does not confer a power to mortgage.[4] A mortgage may be executed to raise money to pay taxes and liens.[5] Under a power to mortgage to execute trust, unimproved lots may be mortgaged for the erection of a building thereon to make them productive.[6]

Beneficiaries are estopped from objecting to a mortgage by signing a stipulation authorizing an order of court permitting it.[7] A judgment of foreclosure will not be deemed an approval of an unauthorized mortgage, when there is no showing of its necessity or of an application of the funds to the estate.[8]

Unless so provided in the deed, the mortgagee is not required to see to proper application of funds.[9] A purchaser under a decree foreclosing mortgage is entitled to protection if the court has jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter.[10]

(§ 7) G. Sale of trust property.[11]—Trustees have no power of sale unless conferred by the deed or will[12] or necessarily implied therefrom;[13] otherwise, consent of all beneficiaries is necessary to permit a sale without order of court.[14] The beneficiaries cannot force a sale to themselves.[15]

A sale by one of co-trustees entrusted with a power of sale is not a conversion.[16]

Provisions for sale may be so read as to make a power conditional or discretionary,[17] or imperative,[18] or for cash only,[19] or one to sell at private sale without order of court,[20] or, under conditions stated, to authorize private sale by one trustee like all were jointly authorized to make,[21] or to enable substitutes to sell at discretion[22] if proper administration according to the settlor's intent requires. A power to sell and a power to revoke or alter may be exercised separately.[23] A provision that the trustees shall not sell all the property unless a stated sum may be realized does not prevent sale of a portion in good faith and for a fair value, unless the sale of a portion injuriously affects the rest.[24] Where corporate stock is converted into realty by division of land constituting the corporate assets, the realty may be sold by the trustee under a power to sell the personalty.[25]

Order of court.—A sale may be under order of court as a change of investment and not in pursuance of the power in the instrument.[26] After an unauthorized sale by a trustee, the court may appoint the trustee and another receiver to sell on a bill to set aside the sale, for an accounting and a receivership to sell, it appearing that the former sale was rescinded.[27]

Statutes controlling procedure are not applicable to cases already begun.[28] Trustees for creditors and administrator of deceased grantor may join in proceedings for sale.[29] Contingent remaindermen need not be parties to authorize conveyance of a fee simple title by the trustee, where he being authorized to sell for reinvestment with consent of life tenant does so under direction of equity.[30]

What may be sold.—A contingent estate may be sold.[31] It may be in an un-

A power of private sale to co-trustees, followed by a provision that a trustee may on default in payment of sums due him have the option to enforce the instrument by a public sale by him individually, allows the co-trustees to sell at private sale for the purpose of paying the individual trustee's debt. Belding v. Archer, 131 N. C. 287.

22. divided portion of realty.[32] A remainderman subject to a power of sale in the trustee of a life estate possesses no equity superior to that of a bona fide purchaser from the trustee.[33]

Conveyances need not recite the terms of the trust nor need such terms follow the signature of the trustee.[34] When the conveyance is defective only in manner of execution, it will be aided in equity.[35] A trust to reconvey is well executed by conveyance after settlor's death to his heirs.[36]

Application of proceeds.—Purchasers under an express power are not held to see that the proceeds of sale are devoted to the purposes of the trust.[37] Where the beneficiaries are infants, statutes requiring proceeds of sale to be paid into court apply.[38] After a homestead has fallen in, a trustee for creditors may apply proceeds of its sale to debts not enforceable against it,[39] and where there is no limitation as to time of sale, to debts that are barred.[40]

Effect of invalid sale.—Persons advancing money used in improving the trust estate on the strength of a mortgage by the grantee of the estate under a deed void as in violation of the trust are entitled to a lien as against the beneficiaries and remaindermen.[41] A beneficiary may attack an unauthorized conveyance, though induced by his release to the trustee.[42] A deed executed to the purchaser by the remaindermen to cure an ineffectual conveyance by the trustee will not be set aside on an unsubstantiated claim that it was delivered without authority.[43]

(§ 7) H. Actions by and against trustees.[44]—The trustee has the power and duty to invoke the aid of equity to protect the trust estate independent of provisions in the deed,[45] and he is bound to prosecute actions, if in his reasonable judgment, to the best interest of the estate.[46] A foreign trustee of a decedent may sue in Washington to collect debts where not in interference with rights of local creditors.[47] As a general rule, matters concerning trust estates are of purely equitable cognizance.[48] After a trustee's account is settled, an action for money had and received will lie, but not sooner.[49]

48. A trustee who is also a beneficiary under a trust for creditors cannot maintain an action in trover for damages against a co-trustee who has disposed of the property; the remedy is in equity. Goldschmidt v. Maier, 140 Cal. xvii, 73 Pac. 984. The ultimate liability of a trust fund for assessments on the stock of an insolvent national bank cannot be determined in an action at law. Hampton v. Foster, 127 Fed. 468.

49. Spencer v. Clarke [R. I.] 55 Atl. 329.

The trustee usually need not join the beneficiaries,[50] though they are necessary parties to a suit to quiet title.[51] The trustee cannot bring them in, in an action against him, where his right will be protected by notice to them of its commencement and pendency.[52]

A co-trustee need not be joined in an action against a trustee on an individual contract,[53] and a substituted trustee need not join resigned trustees, though there is no order finally discharging them.[54]

A complaint on an instrument by a trustee must show the nature of the trust.[55] On a bill to recover property, the trustee may set out efforts looking toward an amicable settlement as bearing on the question of costs.[56] He may set out the terms and origin of the trust,[57] and may state that he has consulted counsel and directed him to ascertain facts necessary to steps for relief.[58]

Defenses by trustee.—A trustee with legal title may, as against garnishment by a creditor of the beneficiary, set up any defense it may have against the settlor.[59]

§ 8. Compensation and expenses.—The amount of commissions where provision is not made is frequently statutory and reckoned on the amount collected and paid,[60] and is apportioned as one commission between co-trustees,[61] unless the statute allows each a full commission.[62] If not fixed, it is a reasonable amount in view of the service rendered and its efficiency.[63] Statutes fixing commissions for like services by personal representatives may be taken as a guide.[64] A trustee cannot apply the trust fund in payment of his services rendered prior to the creation of the trust.[65] Where the circumstances are unusual, the trust of long duration, and where the fund has been largely increased, commissions may be allowed on the principal.[66] While commissions on the principal are not ordinarily allowed before distribution, an exception may be made where numerous unforeseen necessities for sale and reinvestment have arisen, and by reason of unusual efficiency the estate

has largely augmented.[67] When trustees do no more than hold securities and collect the interest thereon, they are not entitled to commission on the corpus.[68] They are entitled to receive commissions for the collection of accruing interest payable to the estate.[69] The transfer of an estate by executors to themselves as trustees is not a collection.[70] Where trustees have received a commission as executors, they are not entitled to another commission thereon as trustees, unless distinct and additional service is rendered.[71] A malfeasant trustee should be denied compensation,[72] and cannot be allowed expenses.[73]

Where repayment of commissions is ordered, an innocent trustee should not be charged with interest.[74] An allowance of a lump sum as compensation for services as executor and trustee by a court without jurisdiction as to the trusteeship cannot be set aside collaterally.[75]

Attorney fees and expenses.—A trustee is entitled to reasonable attorney's fees for services rendered in the execution of the trust.[76] A bequest in lieu of all commissions, etc., covers all expenses in handling the trust funds, but not attorney's fees necessary to the business of the estate.[77] A proportionate sum may be retained from a beneficiary's share to meet a reasonable attorney's fee incurred in an action brought by him to surcharge the account.[78] The trust fund should bear the expense of its administration, but is only chargeable with those expenses incurred for the benefit of all the cestuis que trustent.[79]

the trustee should be charged with at least simple interest from the time of receipt.[82]

As to stock wrongfully withheld, the trustee must account for all sums received thereon with interest, when it is practically converted into money by sale of all corporate assets.[83]

Appropriated assets.—Where securities are converted to personal use, trustee is chargeable with value at time of conversion as shown by actual sales at that time.[84] Where funds have been diverted first by a single trustee and then by co-trustees and property of the first has been turned over, it should be applied first to the payment of sums needful for its preservation, then to the debt of the individual trustee, and then to that of the co-trustees.[85] Where the trustee takes a trust deed as a sham to secure a loan never in fact made, he cannot be charged for a release of the deed without repayment of the loan.[86]

Improper investments.—Where the trustee makes an improper loan, he is chargeable with the amount thereof with interest at the legal rate from the time he is in default;[87] but on an unauthorized loan to a corporation of which the trustee is a stockholder, he cannot be charged with more than the interest received where there is no loss and the rate realized equals the customary rate.[88] If the trustee is also executor, he is chargeable for loss in both capacities.[89]

A trustee may be charged with rents and credited with expenditures for a building erected by his wife on the estate.[90]

The trustee may take an improper investment with which he is surcharged on making it good to the estate.[91]

Credits and charges.—The trustee should be allowed for all proper expenditures.[92] A trustee who under order later reversed has paid money to the wrong person will not be charged for refusing a refund offered subject to unreasonable conditions.[93]

Jurisdiction of accounting is in the court of general equity powers, unless the contrary has been provided by statute.[94] A Federal court will remit such relief to the proper state court, if it appears capable of better administering the remedy.[95]

A proceeding for accounting of testamentary trustees, which involves a cause of action for breach of duties cognizable only in court of equity and a construction of a will, who were not before the county court sitting for probate business is properly brought in the district court [Const. art. 6, 1 Mills' Ann. St. p. 265, § 11]. Currier v. Johnson [Colo. App.] 73 Pac. 882. Surrogate cannot on accounting under Code Civ. Proc. § 2743 determine effect of conveyances and releases between beneficiaries and direct a distribution accordingly, though all beneficiaries consent. In re United States Trust Co., 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 77. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2812, 2813, surrogate cannot exercise equitable powers. Id. Statutes authorizing an executor to settle the accounts of a deceased trustee in the orphans' court does not deprive chancery of its jurisdiction of a suit for an accounting brought by the beneficiary against the administratrix of a deceased trustee. Evans v. Evans [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 872.

95. A Federal court will leave the matter

Where power concurs, one exercise of it does not exclude other courts from later suits.[96] A trustee appointed by a foreign court is amenable only to that court, and the fact that his residence is in another jurisdiction will not confer authority there to control administration or require accountability;[97] but where a foreign court has surrendered possession of the fund, the trust is subject to equitable cognizance in the state in which the funds have been invested and the beneficiaries are resident.[98]

Procedure on accounting.—Where a trustee has mingled trust funds with other funds, a demand therefor is not necessary as a condition to bringing a suit for an accounting.[99] A suit to compel an accounting can be maintained against a trustee only in his representative capacity.[1] The remedy against representatives of a deceased trustee lies primarily through his estate in due course of administration;[2] but sometimes they may be joined as defendants.[3] In an action to compel an accounting, all parties interested in the fund are necessary parties.[4] Interested persons like sureties may file objections to accounts,[5] and show cause, but not after the time allowed.[6] An accounting should be taken from the date of first complaint as to the manner in which income is being applied.[7] A trustee who pays out moneys of the estate must show vouchers therefor in order to receive credit.[8] It is presumed that proceeds of timber sold are applied to reduction of a lien on the land rather than to other indebtedness due from the trustee as such.[9]

An interlocutory order compelling the trustee to pay the fund into court should not be made where he denies liability.[10]

A surrogate's decree on an accounting is not conclusive in subsequent accountings as to items erroneously allowed,[11] or matters not passed on.[12]

Opening account.—Equitable relief will be granted as to a fraudulent settlement acted on without knowledge of the beneficiary and of which she does not learn until too late to appeal.[13] The refusal to open an account does not estop the assertion of invalid acts of the trustee on a subsequent accounting.[14]

§ 10. Establishment and enforcement of trust and remedies of beneficiary. A. Express trusts. Jurisdiction.[15]—An action at law is not a proper remedy to enforce performance.[16] Equity has jurisdiction of a bill to determine whether on the face of a will a trust was created.[17]

Laches and limitations.—Laches will not be imputed in the absence of great delay or gross negligence,[18] nor when occasioned by the trustee,[19] and not until after a refusal to perform.[20]

Limitations may run in favor of the trustee unless the trust is peculiarly within equitable cognizance,[21] but do not run against a breach while the trust is valid and continuing.[22]

Who may sue.—As a rule the beneficiaries have no independent right of action until the trustee has refused to sue,[23] but a beneficiary may sue to protect his possession without his trustees,[24] though an execution sale cannot be enjoined by the beneficiaries where the trustee does not deny the trust and the execution runs against a stranger to the title.[25] The beneficiary of a trust for investment who also is the creator revokes it by demand of repayment, and may thereafter sue at law for repayment.[26] As to general sufficiency of interest to enforce trust see the footnotes.[27]

Dismissal on the merits is not the proper order where beneficiaries have no right to maintain action to recover value of converted property.[28]

Parties.—Where the construction of the trust is involved all beneficiaries should be made parties,[29] but where paragraphs of a will are construed as creating separate trusts, beneficiaries and trustees under distinct paragraphs need not be joined,[30] or a testamentary guardian of a beneficiary who has never qualified.[31] Heirs and personal representatives of the settlor are not necessary parties to a suit involving income.[32] If an equitable title is sufficient subject-matter for a trust enforceable in equity, the rights thereto may be disclosed, without bringing in the legal title.[33]

One charged with holding a bond and mortgage as a trustee cannot be discharged on a mere showing of a redelivery to the settlor and of possession by the executor of the settlor.[34]

Pleading.—The usual rules are applicable.[35] The presumptions are against the pleader.[36] The bill must not be multifarious.[37] On a bill to enforce a trust and conveyance of property where the trustee by demurrer admits a liability to convey complainants are not bound to tender a reconveyance of a portion of the property which he has lawfully conveyed.[38]

Evidence.—In order to establish a trust, the evidence must be clear and satisfactory, both as to its existence and its terms and conditions.[39] The burden of establishing that funds belong to a trust is on complainant.[40] A decree admitting a will declaring the trust to probate need not be shown where the receipt of money on the trust is shown.[41] Where a trust is sought to be impressed on land conveyed without consideration, deeds of other land to defendant also without consideration are irrelevant.[42]

Under statutes requiring a liberal construction of pleadings with a view to substantial justice, an allegation that a warranty deed was delivered to defendant for the purpose of satisfying certain mortgages and that defendant held in trust for such purpose is sufficient against demurrer and it will be presumed that the acceptance of the trust was in writing [Rev. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 117, 119, 136]. Swenson v. Swenson [S. D.] 97 N. W. 845.

37. May set up breaches of trust under the declaration and as a manager of an association of the beneficiaries, but an allegation of a conspiracy between the executive committee of such association and the trustee to effect an unlawful sale of the trust property is not germane. 42. Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425.

Costs.—On appeal from a refusal to take jurisdiction, the court on reversal has no data on which to award or apportion costs.[43]

(§ 10) B. Constructive trusts. Venue.—Action is properly brought where the corpus, if realty, is situated.[44]

Laches and limitations.—The rules are similar to those governing other trusts.[45] Limitations commence to run against a cause of action for money held under a constructive trust from the time the beneficiary has notice.[46] A mere admission of the receipt of money for the benefit of another does not transform a constructive trust into a continuing one so as to postpone the running of limitations,[47] or from a repudiation where there is no actual fraud.[48] Acquiescence may bar relief.[49]

Where a constructive trust arises from a trust in favor of an ancestor, limitations run against the heir from the time they begin against the ancestor.[50]

Pleading.—A complaint seeking to establish a constructive trust must allege fraud.[51] It need not allege a consideration.[52] The averments must not establish an express trust.[53]

Relief granted.[54]—On decreeing a constructive trust, the matter of an accounting may be reserved.[55]

(§ 10) C. Resulting trusts.—Equity may impose a lien on land for trust funds though there is an adequate remedy at law.[56] A libel in admiralty is the proper proceeding to impress a trust on a deposit of freights.[57] Demand before suit is unnecessary where trustee admits a confusion.[58]

Laches and limitations.[59]—Delay for a short time may bar relief where rights of third parties intervene,[60] otherwise laches does not run against the beneficiary until the trustee disavows the trust,[61] or while the beneficiary is in possession.[62]

Heirs held not barred until right of entry accrued and equity suit tolled by action at law. Condit v. Bigalow, 64 N. J. Eq. 504.

60. Despard v. Despard, 53 W. Va. 443.

61. Crowley v. Crowley [N. H.] 56 Atl.

Limitations do not run until discovery of the wrongful taking of title.[63] Possession by a resulting trustee after death of the beneficiary is presumed to be in the same capacity,[64] and an heir of a wife, beneficiary of a resulting trust in land held by the husband, is not barred by the possession of the husband as tenant by curtesy.[65]

Parties.—Where reason to the contrary is not shown, all beneficiaries should join.[66] Action may be brought against the trustee alone.[67] A corporation organized after the conveyance is not a proper complaint nor is it made so by a prayer that the property be conveyed to it as trustee its capacity to act as trustee not appearing.[68]

Pleading.[69]—The complaint must contain averments bringing the case within statutory provisions.[70]

Evidence.[71]—The existence of a trust fund cannot be established against a grantee of land into which it is sought to be traced by the admissions of the trustee after the grant or by judicial proceedings to which the grantee was not a party.[72]

A deed from the trustee of a resulting trust to the beneficiaries is immaterial in an action by them to enforce the trust against an execution purchaser of the land on judgment against the trustee.[73]

A deed from complainants to a third person describing other lands cannot be urged as a defense on the theory that it was intended to describe the land in suit.[74]

Relief granted.[75]—A cross bill is necessary to entitle a defendant to affirmative relief,[76] but a beneficiary made defendant is entitled to relief where plaintiff has set out his rights and prayed for relief for him though the beneficiary did not answer and plaintiff sued in his own behalf.[77] Defendant may be given a lien for his protection where he has acted innocently.[78]

Where complainant has not tendered such sums, he should be charged with costs. Bell v. Solomons, 142 Cal. 59, 75 Pac. 649.

estate of which plaintiff was beneficiary does not change the legal title until execution of conveyances as directed.[79]

Where it has been determined that property purchased with the proceeds of sale of mortgaged chattels is subject to a trust in favor of the mortgagees in the hands of the mortgagor's wife such property may be ordered sold without first determining the value of the mortgaged property applied.[80]

§ 11. Following trust property.—Beneficiaries may follow a trust fund into all forms of investment which it may assume,[81] and one taking with notice of an express[82] or resulting[83] or constructive trust may be held as a trustee,[84] though the trustee may pass the bare legal title.[85] A similar rule is applied in quasi trust relation.[86] To give a claim for trust funds a preference, their use must have enlarged the fund sought to be reached.[87]

Where the trust is merely implied in equity, the amount of the funds only can be recovered and not the property into which they have been converted.[88]

A trust not enforceable against land cannot be enforced against the proceeds of its conversion;[89] but where a trust may be impressed or proceeds of land sold, the trust forms a lien on the land, the purchase price not being paid.[90]

A beneficiary by election to charge with a trust one of particular tracts equally subject, releases the others;[91] but a judgment against the trustee does not affect the lien on lands into which a trust fund has been diverted,[92] or a settlement by a trustee in bankruptcy of the trustee.[93]

Identification of fund.—It must be pleaded and proved that the funds in some form are in hands of defendant.[94]

Where the trust fund is money, it may have been mingled with other funds.[95]

A fund recovered by the trustee in bankruptcy of the trustee in settlement of an action to recover property in which trust funds had been invested and conveyed by the trustee on the ground that the conveyance was in fraud of creditors cannot be impressed with a trust as representing a part of the beneficiary's estate, but the settlement does not affect the beneficiary's right as against the transferee. Welch v. Polley, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 260.

95. Where a factor has notice of a for-

The doctrine of restoration of a trust fund after confusion usually is based on a case where the trustee still desiring to protect the beneficiaries sets apart from his own or commingled funds property which he dedicates to the trust uses.[96]

Bank deposits.[97]—A trust fund does not lose its identity because of deposit in name of trustee.[98] Where the bank has knowledge of the trust character of the fund, it must not permit its application to debts due the bank[99] or to others.[1]

Withdrawals by a trustee from a mingled deposit will be deemed to be from his own in preference to trust funds.[2]

Use of proceeds of a collection in bank's business in place of remitting does not permit assets to be held as trust fund on insolvency.[3]

A fund belonging to clients, mingled with a partnership deposit by attorneys, is not a trust fund so that it escheats, though originally funds of an estate.[4]

Bona fide purchasers[5] are protected against secret trusts,[6] and so a purchaser on execution takes free from a dry trust of which he has no notice.[7] The purchaser must show a valuable consideration.[8]

Notice of trust.—Where the circumstances place on him the duty, the depositary of a trust fund must make inquiry or satisfactorily explain his failure,[9] even though inquiry can be made only of the depositor.[10] It will be presumed against a trustee or depositary unless bona fide and without notice that a deposit in the name of an individual as trustee is of trust funds or property substituted therefor.[11] Possession by the beneficiary is notice.[12]

Where the purchaser has knowledge, it is a trustee without regard to the legal advice on which it acted or its opinions as to liability.[13] As to sufficiency of miscellaneous matters to constitute notice, see the footnotes.[14]

§ 12. Termination and abrogation of trust. Acts of settlor.[15]—In the absence of a reserved power, a trust cannot be revoked[16] without consent of the beneficiaries or an action to which all persons in interest are parties,[17] hence the trustee or beneficiary is not bound by subsequent declarations of the settlor.[18] A revocation by will is void where not provided for.[19]

Mistake.[20]—Failure to insert a power of revocation is not material in a voluntary settlement for the benefit of the settlor in obedience to a desire expressed in her husband's will.[21] Beneficiaries after seeking the appointment of a trustee cannot maintain a bill to set the trust aside on the ground of mistake.[22]

Agreement of beneficiaries.—Where the legal estate is in the trustee in the absence of statute, a trust will not be dissolved where the purpose has not been accomplished or rendered impossible of execution;[23] so beneficiaries cannot arrest the continuance of a testator's business by executors under a direction to do so creating a trust,[24] merely to allow a beneficiary to carry it on,[25] but a purely passive trust may be terminated in equity by the agreement of all parties in interest.[26]

Where the final takers are undetermined, beneficiaries in esse cannot compel distribution and urge that any new beneficiaries may hold the distributees as trustees.[27] So where remaindermen not in being are provided for, the trust must be performed.[28] Possibility of issue of a woman cannot be shown to be extinct by expert evidence.[29]

deed expressing a valuable consideration, it does not revert on failure of the grantee to perform.[30]

After the active duties of a trust have ceased, the beneficiary is entitled to have it terminated,[31] so a trust for married woman's sole and separate use terminates on the husband's death[32] or on divorce.[33]

A spendthrift trust may be terminated on reformation[34] if its purpose is clearly expressed,[35] but though antecedent life tenants are not proper subjects of a spendthrift trust, the trust remains executory if there is one subject who under cross remainders may become entitled to income under the preceding shares.[36]

Where the interest of the beneficiary is vested and absolute, provisions postponing the payment of the principal to him after his majority are void.[37] The right cannot be denied on the theory that the trust is active.[38] For the construction of miscellaneous provisions of the trust instrument, see the footnotes.[39]

Adverse possession.—The trustee's title may be extinguished by adverse possession by the beneficiary under a deed from the trustee.[42]

Procedure to dissolve.—A bill to set aside may be barred by laches.[43]

A trustee without interest save his future compensation for services cannot resist an application by the beneficiaries for a dissolution,[44] and a decree dissolving a trust is not reversible for failure to award compensation to the trustee, where he did not answer or set up any right to compensation.[45]

UNITED STATES.

Scope of title.—The powers of the United States are nearly if not always raised in questions of constitutional law.[46] Its political power is investigated in the same class of questions, also in cases of treaties,[47] or pertaining to territories and Federal possessions,[48] extradition,[49] and the like which obviously command a separate treatment. Property rights in the public domain have also been elsewhere treated.[50]

§ 1. Contracts.—Where contracts with the government are required to be in writing and signed, no action can be maintained for defendant's breach unless the statutory requirements have been complied with.[51] In such cases, the preliminary advertisements, proposals, and acceptance, must be viewed only as a part of the negotiations looking to a formal contract.[52] In contracts for public works persons supplying labor and material to the contractor may bring suit therefor in the name of the United States.[53] But where a sum of money is retained to pay for work and material, the workmen and materialmen have no enforceable lien or preference over other creditors in the distribution of the amount retained.[54] Persons dealing with officers of the government are supposed to have a legal knowledge of the extent of their powers, and are bound by the legal effects of such knowledge. No contract can be implied by the use of a patented article by subordinates where the chief of the department refused to contract for its use.[55] No public contract may be transferred by the contractor to any other party under penalty of annulment.[56] In a contract with the government, containing a provision allowing annulment in the "judgment of the engineer in charge," it is questionable whether a notice from the superior officers of the engineer can effect an annulment.[57] Medical attendance and care furnished to a soldier at request of his captain by a private hospital constitutes a valid claim against the United States on implied contract.[58] Contracts with the United States to return in good condition articles loaned a contractor to perform government work means that ordinary wear incident to the use contemplated is excepted.[59]

§ 2. Officers and employes.—An auditor of the World's Columbian Commission is an employe of the United States and entitled to compensation until the completion of the work of the commission.[60] Presidential electors are state officers within the meaning of a constitutional provision that vacancies in office in a state shall be filled at the next annual election in which city, town, county, district, or "state" officers are to be chosen.[61] Where one is employed by the government, and his account is approved and paid at a designated rate of compensation, and he is continued in the employment, he has a right to infer that it will be at the same rate.[62] Where an office is established by statute and has a specific salary attached to it, the legal incumbent is entitled to the salary, but this right does not extend to cases where the appointment and salary depend upon appropriations alone.[63] An employe may sue for fees allowed and paid him, and then disallowed and deducted from his account, and the statute of limitations runs only from the time of the disallowance.[64]

United States employes are liable for the property committed to their care, even when lost through no fault of theirs.[65] The superintendents of the mint are responsible for the safe keeping of the money passing into their hands by virtue of their office.[66] An officer having money of the government in his possession is bound to exercise the care and diligence of an intelligent and faithful business man in his specialty.[67] Mere temporary employes of the government are not entitled to absence with pay.[68] Government employes serving fractional parts of a year are entitled to absence with pay.[69] A government clerk is entitled to the salary of his office during an invalid suspension.[70] A laborer or mechanic who knowingly works more than eight hours a day for the government cannot recover more than his contract calls for. The eight-hour labor law gives him no right to extra compensation, unless by express agreement.[71] The dismissal of a clerk in the classified service, upon charges made, cannot be reviewed by the judiciary. A government printer on duty at night is entitled to 20 per cent. in addition to the amount paid for day labor.[72]

§ 3. Claims.—Claims against the United States for salary or fees are not within the jurisdiction of the federal, district, or circuit courts. The court of claims alone can adjudicate them. A claim being once allowed and paid, the government cannot reclaim the money unless it was paid through fraud or a mistake of fact. The law allowing the revision of an account by the comptroller of the treasury applies only to pending claims.[73] Claims against the United States, if presented on false evidence, are ground for criminal prosecution.[74] All transfers or assignments of claims against the United States are void unless executed in a certain manner, but the courts may make any orders adjudicating the rights of parties to the claim that do not interfere with the action of the government officers in allowing or paying it.[75]

In claims for property destroyed by the Indians, the claimant must prove his title to the property according to the ordinary legal rules,[76] and must show that the tribe was in amity with the government.[77] The temporary residence of American Indians in Mexico, without the consent of the United States, does not terminate their relations or relieve the United States from the responsibility which they have assumed for their depredations.[78] The United States as guardian of the Indians deals with certain distinct entities of Indians, and not with the individual Indians composing such entities.[79]

The government is liable to a state, which raised troops in its behalf during the civil war for "expenses properly incurred," but not for damages for injury to property.[80] In a claim by a state against the United States for allowance made for troops called into service by the governor, information must be obtained in strict conformity with rules of judicial procedure and from competent evidence.[81] If, while a claim for reimbursement to a state is pending, congress directs accounting officers to reopen claims heretofore disallowed, further action by the court will be unnecessary, and the papers in the case will be returned to the secretary, who transmitted them.[82] Where the military accounts of a state for the state and of that state for the United States are mingled in one account, it cannot be regarded as the account of the principal, the United States. The state, as agent, must establish its expenditures specifically by other proof.[83]

In a claim for seizure of a vessel under "French spoliations," the citizenship of the owners and the American registry of the vessel must affirmatively appear,[84] and the illegality of the seizure established as against the presumption that the right thereto was legally exercised.[85] Where insurers of a vessel claim under the "French spoliations," the liability of France is limited to the value of the vessel, but not to the premium paid for insurance.[86]

Debts due to the United States have priority in the administration of the estates of insolvents, but not against the sureties of debtors[87] where such sureties are solvent.[88] Nor does the fact that the United States first brought suit on the bond give it such priority, but, the fund having been paid into court by the surety, the court may determine the rights of the United States, under the statute, as against other claimants.[89]

Appropriations by congress cannot be deemed to have the effect of identifying the individuals composing the class of distributees.[90] Congress may pay moral claims against the United States.[91] The Indian department of the government has

§ 4. Actions by and against.—The United States as suitor in a judicial tribunal has no superior rights, but is controlled by the same principles of law and rules of practice as one of her citizens.[93] Suits on claims against the United States are subject to the same rule as to appeals as other actions, which apply equally to the claimant and the United States.[94] In an action by the United States to recover money misappropriated by one of its officers during the military occupation of Cuba, the dismissal of a proceeding in the Cuban courts to punish such act is not a bar to recovery.[95] In an action by the United States, copies of bonds and contracts certified by the secretary or an assistant secretary are admissible in evidence.[96] In actions by the United States, no affirmative judgment can be rendered against the plaintiff, by reason of any set off. A balance found due the defendant is only available to the extent of the demand made by the United States.[97] The remedy by action to recover money fraudulently obtained as a pension is a common-law right, and the remedy by penal suit, given by statute, is cumulative and not exclusive.[98] In an action at law against a contractor's surety, a court of equity, in marshalling the claims of all the creditors, cannot enjoin the United States from proceeding to judgment and must admit it to a pro rata share in the fund.[99]

UNITED STATES MARSHALS AND COMMISSIONERS.

§ 1. Marshals.—Allowance of expense accounts and fees. The allowance by the district judge of the account of a United States marshal is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of the accounts.[1] The statutory fees and allowances[2] will not be refused because the services rendered might have been unnecessary,[3] nor because two services required no additional time or labor or were rendered concurrently.[4] Expense will be limited to that actually incurred,[5]

4. As where his deputy attends before a commissioner, though also paid as bailiff be-but mileage may be figured by the ordinary route, though there be a shorter one.[6] Expenses in transporting a prisoner will not be allowed where the prisoner escaped through the deputy's negligence.[7] A marshal may properly be allowed compensation, outside his statutory fees, for authorized services outside of his district.[8] Marshals must take arrested persons before the United States commissioner nearest the place of arrest or be allowed no fee therefor.[9] The law authorizing five bailiffs for each court was not repealed by the sundry civil appropriation law of 1895, providing for pay of only three bailiffs in each court.[10] Hence the marshal is entitled to an allowance for four bailiffs on days when they were employed by order of the court.[11] On days when the district and circuit courts are held by a single judge at the same time, a marshal is entitled to allowance for per diem compensation to bailiffs, in excess of three, but not exceeding six, in attendance on such courts.[12] Bailiffs are not entitled to pay for attendance on court for the same days on which they attended and earned fees as deputy marshals.[13] The statute authorizing allowance of marshal's expenses for contingencies that may arise in the courts[14] permits an allowance of the expenses of bailiffs when serving subpoenas, all the deputy marshals being otherwise employed, and the witnesses being required,[15] and for meals of officers in charge of prisoners and witnesses in custody.[16] A marshal may recover from the United States an amount twice paid in.[17]

§ 2. Commissioners.—The power of a United States commissioner in criminal cases is governed by the statutes of the state in which the commissioner sits.[18] A United States commissioner, having power to act as a committing magistrate in New York, has authority to issue subpoenas,[19] but has no power to punish for contempt, for disobeying a subpoena;[20] this power existing only in the court by which the commissioner is appointed.[21] A United States commissioner cannot act in extradition cases without special authority.[22] A commissioner authorized to act in extradition proceedings has jurisdiction without a preliminary requisition from the demanding government.[23]

USES.

By virtue of the statute of uses a use or trust which imposes no active duties is instantly executed so that the cestui que use or cestui que trust holds the legal title.[24] It does not obtain in California,[25] but was adopted in Colorado as part of the common law.[26] Such statute does not operate to execute invalid uses or trusts,[27] or those dealing with personalty.[28] It is sufficient that the deed be capable of acting as a feoffment.[29] A trust to hold for the sole and separate use of a married woman is active[30] and does not become executed until she is discovert.[31] But under the married women's acts even such a trust may impose no active duties.[32] In this case a trustee for a married woman, though in possession, has no title to sue to recover any interest in the realty.[33] Where by a postnuptial agreement property was conveyed to a trustee for a married woman, with power to her to dispose of it as she might choose after consultation and advice from the trustee, he must join in a conveyance or mortgage.[34] A trustee's title is not nominal so as to be executed unless the grant to him negatives the implied power of alienation,[35] and the mere fact that a beneficiary is named does not do so,[36] and the fact that an active trust is indefinite will not render it passive subject to the statute.[37] If on termination of a trust for support for life the trustees are to sell and divide lands, the ultimate beneficiaries under the instrument take no title which they may convey.[38]

USURY.

§ 1. Elements and indicia.—Usury consists in intentionally taking or reserving, for the use of money, interest at a greater rate than is allowed by law.[39]

There must be an intention to exact an excessive rate,[40] and in ascertaining such intention, the court will look to the substance, disregarding the form, of the transaction.[41] So that any fiction in the contract made to simulate something else than a loan or forbearance,[42] or to falsify the actual amounts,[43] will avail nothing. A forfeiture or penalty for the nonpayment of interest on a loan is unlawful,[44] but in the case of a loan on an insurance policy, it must be such as to diminish the cash surrender value.[45] A renewal note for a sum including usurious interest on the old debt is usurious, though bearing interest at the legal rate.[46]

There must be a loan or forbearance in order to offend the usury laws.[47] A

39. Wagoner v. Landan [Neb.] 95 N. W. 496. "Offense of usury" in Idaho is the taking of an unlawful or illegal rate of interest. Sanford v. Kunz [Idaho] 71 Pac. 612.

40. Where the debtor was to pay interest and taxes "on account of the mortgage or the debt" secured, but the creditor and the lender did not know the aggregate reserved would exceed the legal rate, the contract was not per se usurious. Green v. Grant [Mich.] 96 N. W. 583. Where a contract imports usury on its face, such corrupt intention is apparent. Trainor v. German American Sav. Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Ill. App. 604. Claim of usury not established where debtor merely failed to call for money left for him in agent's hands. Farm Land Co. v. St. Raynor [Neb.] 97 N. W. 330. Excess paid by mistake or to apply on principal not usury. Rushton v. Woodham [S. C.] 46 S. E. 943. An agreement for usurious interest must be shown; a mere proof of excessive payment not sufficient. Bosworth v. Kinghorn, 87 N. Y. Supp. 983.

41. The court will look to the substance, and not allow the statute to be defeated by the form of a transaction. Whinery v. Garrett, 24 Ky. L. R. 1558, 71 S. W. 855; Hagen v. Barnes [Minn.] 99 N. W. 415.

42. Sums paid as "profits" and "rent" and use of apartments, construed as realty interest, and being in addition to 6% charged constituted usury. Reich v. Cochran, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 621. A note with an agreement to hire the lender to sell cotton at a fixed price or pay liquidated damages for failure to deliver the cotton, held a cover for usury, the "cotton contract" not being genuine. Waxahachie Loan & Trust Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 792. An issue of corporate bonds, bearing interest at six per cent, to be sold below par, is usurious. George N. Fletcher & Sons v. Alpena Circuit Judge [Mich.] 99 N. W. 748.

43. Where, on a loan of $500, the lender took two notes, one for $500, and one for $43.48, instead of interest in advance for one year, the transaction was construed as a single one and usurious as exacting more than 8% on the loan. Howell v. Pennington, 118 Ga. 494.

A note for a greater sum than the borrower actually receives, with interest thereon at the highest legal rate, is usurious. Note for $235, interest at 10%, for loan of $200. Rosetti v. Lozano, 96 Tex. 57, 70 S. W. 204. An answer setting up that only $207.90 was received on a note given for $497.00 states a clear defense of usury and is not demurrable. Johnson v. Joyce, 90 Minn. 377, 97 N. W. 113.

44. Where an insured was to forfeit several years of extended insurance and lose interest for failure to pay a premium borrowed, the arrangement was unlawful. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Davis, 24 Ky. L. R. 2291, 73 S. W. 1020.

45. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 172, 74 S. W. 1066.

46. Where 7% on the interest due on an old note and 12% on overdrafts were included in the new note, it was usurious. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, 172 Mo. 284, 72 S. W. 925. A surety who gives a new note to take up old usurious notes is entitled to plead usury and have the entire transaction purged of usury. Whinery v. Garrett, 24 Ky. L. R. 1558, 71 S. W. 855. A renewal or substitution is infected if the usury passes into it, leaving the rights of the parties subsisting and unchanged. See post, § 3.

47. Held, there was not a loan, but an undertaking to answer for default of others agreeing to pay. Wagoner v. Landon [Neb.] 95 N. W. 496. Contract construed as an investment through defendant, a certain interest being guaranteed, and not a loan to him, and hence usury was no defense in an action to reform a deed. Conolly v. Keenan, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 589. A contract whereby A purported to buy B's future unearned salary for a month, and to be entitled to five percent a month for forbearing to take it, was a loan and usurious. Van Vechten v. McGuire [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 123. Same was held as to a similar contract of sale with a revocable sale of accommodation paper is a loan and is usurious when discounted beyond the legal rate of interest.[48] A bona fide collateral contract will not render a loan usurious,[49] and usury laws do not apply to other transactions.[50]

The aggregate of the exactions must exceed the legal rate,[51] and collateral benefits not of the nature of payment for use of the money are excluded, e. g., payment of taxes on the security,[52] or the assumption or purchase of other obligations.[53] For a like reason, a legitimate commission, bonus or discount is permissible.[54]

Discounts, bonuses, commissions, and other deductions or charges.—The taking of interest at the highest legal rate, in advance, by way of discount on short loans, in the ordinary course of business, is not usurious.[55] But where the interest reserved and that contracted to be paid, on a long loan, aggregate a sum in excess of the legal rate, the transaction is usurious.[56]

A bonus given at the time of making the loan[57] or for a forbearance,[58] or commissions, in addition to interest,[59] may render the transaction usurious, according to their real character as fictions to cover usury or as extra consideration for additional and real benefits or services rendered. But the exaction of a commission by an agent of the lender without the knowledge or consent of the principal does not render the contract usurious as to the principal.[60] So the charging power of attorney to the debtor to collect until default. Tolman v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 90 Mo. App. 274. A transaction construed as a loan with pledge of note as security and a contemporaneous release of attorney's fees held void, because constituting usury. Johnson v. Zweigart, 24 Ky. L. R. 1323, 71 S. W. 445. Where plaintiffs could not procure the purchase price of land ($513.45) and defendant agreed to and did pay the vendor, and plaintiffs took title directly from vendor, and gave defendant notes and mortgages for $672.86, with interest at 7%, the transaction between plaintiffs and defendant was a loan, not a purchase and sale, and usurious. Hagen v. Barnes [Minn.] 99 N. W. 415.

48. Simpson v. Hefter, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 482.

49. Stipulation in note that debtor would consign 100 bales of cotton during the season or pay 50 cents commission per bale not shipped did not render note usurious. Kitchen & Bro. v. Robinson Bros., 138 Ala. 419.

50. Payment in consideration of forbearing to obtain judgment by default and allowing time for preparation of defense. Alexander v. First Nat. Bank, 24 Ky. L. R. 1486, 71 S. W. 883.

51. Taking a note and mortgage for $800, due in five years with interest at 6% per annum, payable semi-annually for a loan of $676.48 due in five years with interest at 10% per annum, payable semi-annually, is not as a matter of law usurious. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Dakko, 89 Minn. 386, 94 N. W. 1088.

52. An agreement to pay interest and in addition all taxes and assessments on the security is not per se usurious, though the aggregate may exceed the legal interest rate. There must be in addition the intention to exact an illegal rate. Green v. Grant [Mich.] 96 N. W. 583.

53. Where the borrower proposes to take up the note of a third party and give his own note, for a loan, the transaction is not usurious, whether the third party's note is solvent or insolvent. Note of $200, given for loan of $235, and a note for $50 taken up. Crawford v. Benoist, 97 Mo. App. 219, 70 S. W. 1098. An agreement to pay legal interest and also pay off a judgment on which the borrower and lender were both liable is not usurious, though the judgment is one on which contribution could not be enforced. Southern Trading Co. v. State Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 644.

54. See infra this section Discounts, bonuses, etc.

55, 56. McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 235.

57. Brown v. Skotland [N. D.] 97 N. W. 543. Lender received a bonus but pretended to act as agent for a "straw-man" whose knowledge of bonus was denied. Transaction held usurious. Leipziger v. Van Saun, 64 N. J. Eq. 37. "Premiums" for a loan rendered contract usurious. Madsen v. Whitman [Idaho] 71 Pac. 152. Bonus paid the agent with knowledge of the principal. Richards v. Bippus, 18 App. D. C. 293.

58. When a note on its face bears all the interest allowed by law, a bonus for a forbearance is usury. Mo. Real Estate Syndicate v. Sims [Mo.] 78 S. W. 1006.

59. That it was customary to charge such commissions was immaterial. Cowgill v. Jones [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 995.

60. McCall v. Herring, 118 Ga. 522; Flanagan v. Shaw, 74 App. Div. [N. Y.] 508; McWhirter v. Longstreet, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 831. Held that bonus to agent was without authority or knowledge of lender and contract was not usurious. Hare v. Winterer [Neb.] 96 N. W. 179. Where the husband was paid $50 for securing a loan for plaintiff, the wife who loaned the money knowing nothing of such payment, and receiving no part thereof, the loan was not void for usury. Bovee v. Butters [Minn.] 99 N. W. 641. A usurious exaction by an agent, making a loan for his principal, solely for the agent's benefit, without the knowledge or sanction of the principal, and he having no reason to anticipate such action by the agent, does not render the loan usurious as to the principal. Com. Title of a commission by the agent procuring the loan, without the knowledge or consent of the lender, will not taint the transaction with usury.[61] Brokers negotiating loans for others may charge the borrower commissions without making loans at the full legal rate usurious.[62]

The parties may remove the taint of usury by agreement;[63] but an invalid mortgage is not rendered enforceable by the mortgagee's crediting usurious payments received as usury, on the debt, where the statute is aimed at the exaction as well as receipt of usury,[64] and an express agreement, not a cover for usury, though resulting in compound interest, may be enforced.[65]

Usury statutes do not retroact on contracts already made.[66] Statutes in some states regulate the compounding of interest.[67] Under Connecticut statutes it is held that persons other than pawnbrokers or those loaning on personal security may charge any rate of interest, and no interest paid can be recovered.[68] In California, constitutional provisions that the value of mortgaged property and of the security shall be assessed for taxes to their respective owners, and that any agreement requiring the mortgagor to pay taxes on the mortgagee's interest is void, are held to be laws against usury.[69] Florida laws make usurious any "contract, contrivance or device" whereby a rate greater than the law allows is exacted.[70] The Nebraska statute does not authorize the taking of interest for more than one year in advance, if thereby more than ten per cent. interest per annum is received.[71]

Conflict of laws.—By the weight of authority, the legality of the rate of interest depends upon the law of the place of performance of the contract,[72] usually the place of payment of a bond.[73] This is the rule, though property mortgaged as

63. Agreement for rebate as to unearned interest. Cowgill v. Jones [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 995. A usurious contract may be purged by the making of a new contract eliminating usury, when no usury has been paid. Borrower then is bound to pay the legal rate on the new contract. Sanford v. Kunz [Idaho] 71 Pac. 612. A usurious contract may by agreement of the parties with knowledge of their rights be purged of its usury and validated. Trainor v. German-American Sav., L. & Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Ill. App. 604.

64. Adams v. Moody, 91 Mo. App. 41.

65. A bank and a customer orally agreed that the customer should pay 10% per annum on overdrafts, interest so accruing to be payable at the end of the month, and if not paid, to bear interest at 10% per annum. This agreement, though resulting in compound interest, held not usurious. Hillsboro Oil Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 336.

66. The rate agreed upon until the debt is paid may be collected, though the statute has reduced the legal rate. Mastin v. Cochran's Ex'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 712, 76 S. W. 343. The mere assumption of a contract, valid when made, will not be rendered usurious by the statutory reduction of the legal rate between the making and assumption of such contract. Adams v. Shirk [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 801.

67. Rev. St. 1899, § 3711 prohibits compounding oftener than once a year, and compounding every six months was a violation. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

71. Allen v. Dunn [Neb.] 99 N. W. 680. When a note for $690, with interest at 7%, was given for a loan of $600 for five years, the transaction was regarded as a device to avoid the usury law, and since more than 10% per annum was thereby agreed to be paid, the loan was usurious. Id.

security is situated in another state.[74] In the absence of proof to the contrary, the place of performance of a note or mortgage is presumably the place where it is dated.[75] Where another intention can be gathered, it will not be presumed that parties contracted with reference to a law that would make the contract usurious, where there is no attempt to evade the usury law.[76] Contracts with foreign associations made in the state which is the domicile of the borrower, with association's agent therein, are governed by the laws of the state where so made.[77] The presumption being that the common law prevails in a state, there is also a presumption that there is no legal limitation on the rate of interest in that state.[78]

Usury laws as applied to building and loan association contracts.—Building and loan associations are commonly excepted from the usury laws by statute or judicial decision, because of the interest which the borrower in such an association has in the profits.[79] Such statutes are constitutional,[80] but will be strictly construed,[81] and loans must be made in the mode prescribed by them in order to preclude the defense of usury.[82] So there must be competitive bidding for loans when the statute so requires.[83] Establishing a minimum premium violates the rule requiring competitive bidding, and lets in usury as a defense.[84] But a fixed premium for loans, instead of competitive bidding, may be authorized by statute.[85] The courts may determine whether a premium fixed by the by-laws, according to the statute, is an extortionate charge for a loan.[86] In construing building and loan association contracts, the stock contract calling for premiums and monthly dues is regarded as separate and distinct from the loan contract calling for interest.[87] Where a loan by such an association is not a building and loan association contract, but has the characteristics of an ordinary loan, the usury laws apply.[88] The mere fact that a contract is a building and loan contract in form is not conclusive on the question whether the lender is an association entitled to the benefit of preferential statutes.[89] In some states the ordinary usury laws are applied to such contracts.[90] Where building and loan contracts are regarded as usurious, the ordinary rules as to the application[91] or recovery[92] of usurious payments control. The entire amount of the usury should be credited on the debt, regardless of the disposition made thereof by the company.[93] An assignee of the rights of a member, when recognized as a member of the association, is entitled to credit for usurious payments by his assignor.[94]

§ 2. The defense of usury.—The defense of usury is personal to the debtor and cannot be interposed by another without his consent and concurrence,[95] nor by the creditor.[96] So it cannot be set up by the trustee in a trust deed given to secure the debt.[97] But the defense is open to a surety.[98]

A purchaser of mortgaged property subject to a usurious mortgage cannot set up the taint of usury[99] unless authorized by his grantor.[1] But it was held that the original mortgagor, suing in his own interest and as executor of his grantee, could have the usurious mortgage canceled, when the debt was extinguished by payments by him and his grantee.[2]

1. Bacon v. Iowa Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Iowa, 449, 96 N. W. 977.

The defense may be waived,[3] or the debtor barred to set it up.[4] It is not waived by consenting in the answer in foreclosure suit to a decree for sale of the property.[5] A borrower will not be estopped by the payment of instalments of usurious interest from setting up usury, when the lender has not changed his position as the result of such payments.[6] To avoid a defense of usury, one claiming as a bona fide taker must plead and prove every fact showing that he is such.[7]

The defense of usury being in the nature of penalty or forfeiture may, by the repeal of the statute, be taken away from contracts already made.[8] But it has been held that the repeal of a usury law will not deprive a debtor of his defense where he has made a tender to effectuate the same.[9] If a usurious contract is validated by statute as to the principal debtor, it is validated as to his surety.[10]

In Georgia, creditors may prevent the enforcement of a usurious claim against an insolvent debtor.[11]

Pleading and proof.—The defense of usury must be pleaded by special plea or answer.[12] It cannot be made by demurrer to bill for foreclosure of principal and interest, where the statute provides for forfeiture of the interest only, for usury.[13]

A plea of usury is sufficient where it is such that the plaintiff could not have been misled as to the defense intended.[14] It should state with whom the agreement for usurious interest was made, the time, place, and the facts which make the transaction usurious.[15] It is not sufficient to simply allege that a note, and a renewal thereof, are usurious, and that the debtor paid more than the sum actually owed.[16] But in West Virginia a defense of usury is well pleaded by pleading generally that the contract or assurance sued on called for interest at a rate greater than that allowed by law.[17] Where a plea is simply for the purpose of invalidating a deed, particularity as to amount is not required.[18] An admission of usury in the answer may cure insufficient allegations thereof in the petition.[19]

another state, the reply denying usury should plead the statutes or laws of such other state.[20]

The party alleging usury must prove it.[21] It is not established by evidence showing that excessive interest was collected by mistake, or that excessive interest was accepted to be applied on interest at a legal rate and then on the principal,[22] or that the debtor merely neglected to call for money left in the agent's hands and placed to his credit,[23] or merely showing that excessive payments were made for some years, without proof of an agreement for usurious interest.[24] A note being made payable to a bank cashier individually, there is no presumption that the note is the bank's property, and it is not evidence of usury against the bank so as to warrant the recovery of double usury from it.[25]

§ 3. The effect of usury.—Where a usurious bonus is promised for a forbearance, the creditor is bound by the agreement to forbear, but cannot recover the bonus.[26] A joint maker of the original usurious note, frequently renewed, who gives his sole note on new security, is not thereby deprived of the defense of usury,[27] but a guarantor giving a new note is.[28]

A contract tainted with usury, if not thereby rendered void, is good in the hands of bona fide holders.[29] The burden is on the indorsee to prove bona fide holdership.[30]

A new and independent transaction will not be void for usury in a prior one,[31] nor will the fact that part of the debt represented by a note is usurious affect the liability of the debtor as to the balance.[32] A second or substituted contract, based on a prior usurious contract, the usury being carried into the new contract, renders it usurious.[33] All dependent rights or contracts fall with the invalidity of the principal one,[34] hence if a deed is void for usury, a power of sale therein is void also.[35] Where a mortgagee exacts usury from the mortgagor, the lien of the mortgage becomes void.[36] A chattel mortgage given to secure a usurious loan is void.[37]

The effect of usury on a contract is to be determined from the statute. In some states the contract is void only as to the usury, or interest in excess of the legal rate;[38] in others it is void as to all interest, only the principal being recoverable.[39]

Forfeitures.—Under the national banking law, usury causes the forfeiture of all interest.[40] In Idaho, the lender forfeits all his interest and the borrower forfeits to the school fund ten per cent. per annum on the entire principal;[41] and in Oregon, a usurious contract being shown, the whole debt, without interest, is forfeited to the school fund of the county where suit is brought.[42]

Application of usurious payments.—So long as any part of the principal debt with legal interest remains due, no payment is usurious.[43] But any excess over the amount of the debt with legal interest will be usury,[44] and should be credited on the debt.[45] A buyer of property "subject" to a usurious mortgage cannot have usurious payments made by his assignor applied to the principal,[46] but is entitled to have excess interest paid by himself so applied.[47]

§ 4. Affirmative relief and procedure. Recovery of usury.—It is generally held that usurious interest paid by the debtor may be recovered,[48] after the debt and all usurious interest thereon have been fully paid.[49] This was a common-law right and still exists in the absence of any statute to the contrary.[50] A recovery back of usury paid will not lie on payment of less than would have been due at the legal rate,[51] nor will payments of interest made by consent to cause a delay in legal proceedings support such a recovery.[52] Where usury is sought to be recovered or set off against a claim sued on, the facts showing the amount must be set out.[53]

of recovery is the residue after crediting all payments of usury on the principal.[54] In the absence of a statutory provision to that effect, the debtor's right to recover usurious payments does not survive to his personal representative, heir, or assign at his death.[55] It has been held that affirmative relief is barred as to a fully executed contract.[56]

In Oregon, it was held that usurious interest voluntarily paid cannot be recovered.[57] Recovery or set off of alleged excessive interest paid is prohibited by statute in Connecticut.[58]

An action under a statute to recover usury must be brought within the prescribed time.[59] The national banking act, and not local law, governs in the case of a usurious loan for the benefit of a national bank, though in form made by its president.[60]

A statutory judgment on a usurious contract bears the ordinary legal interest.[61]

The penalty for usury provided in the national banking law can be recovered only in an action brought under the statute[62] and cannot be sued by cross bill.[63] The action to recover a penalty is a "civil action,"[64] and may be recovered in the state court.[65] Interest on the penalty recoverable cannot be recovered.[66]

In Texas, the borrower may recover double the amount of usurious interest exacted[67] in an action of debt instituted within two years after payment of the usury.[68] The statute in Texas requires either an original action or a cross action, to recover the penalty, and a purely defensive pleading in a suit on the debt, will not avail for that purpose.[69] The "person, firm, or corporation" receiving the usurious interest, is alone liable for the penalty.[70] The statute giving the right of action to the payor's "legal representative" makes the claim assignable, and it passes to a trustee in bankruptcy.[71] Where the maker of a usurious note transfers property to one who assumes payment and pays it, the maker is to be deemed the real payor, and may maintain the action for the penalty.[72] A remaining partner who has assumed liability on a partnership note after the withdrawal of another, may maintain the action for a penalty against the payee.[73]

There must be a payment to support a recovery under the North Carolina act.[74] The giving of a renewal note to the assignee of the usurious note is not a payment of the original note so that the maker may not recover for usury from the original payee.[75]

A court of equity will not grant relief unless the borrower pays principal and lawful interest justly due.[76] The court will impute all guilt to the lender and excuse the borrower, on the ground that he was overmatched or coerced by want.[77] Where the statute makes usurious securities unenforceable by the usurer, a court of equity will grant injunctive or other relief against him.[78] The grantor in a deed of trust to secure a usurious debt, may in a suit in equity to purge the debt of usury, after conveyance of the land by him to a third party, have the sale of the land under the trust deed enjoined pending the suit.[79]

VAGRANTS.

The statutes[80] defining vagrancy have been construed to include, in addition to idleness by one able to work but without means of support,[81] the case of prostitution in violation of tenement house laws.[82] It is necessary to prove either age within the statute or inability of parents to support accused.[83] The earning of a support however meager is a defense,[84] but not the mere fact that a woman otherwise vagrant and a prostitute has at times earned a little money honestly.[85]

offenders may be given into charge of charitable, reformatory or protective institutions.[87] When provision of the mode for discharge is made calling for consent of the committing magistrate, it cannot be dispensed with.[88]

Averments of all the facts essential to the offense as defined will sufficiently charge it,[89] whereupon a verdict of guilty has the usual meaning.[90] An erroneous but not uncertain recital of the name of the act in the commitment is immaterial.[91] A commitment on this charge will not be reviewed on writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, where the magistrate had jurisdiction of the charge and authority to impose the sentence.[92] A person having been found guilty of vagrancy under the Georgia vagrancy act it will be presumed that an opportunity was allowed, or would have been allowed, if asked for, to give bond for future industry and good conduct for one year, before the court passed sentence.[93] In such case, even if sentence was improperly passed, defendant would not be entitled to be discharged upon habeas corpus but should be held in the custody of the sheriff to await proper sentence, in the event no bond was given.[94]

VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

§ 1. The contract generally and interpretation of it.—The contract to convey land must not be confused with the contract whereby land is conveyed,[95] and the rights conferred or estates created[96] by such conveyance must be distinguished from those rights which grow out of the contract to convey both before and after its performance or rescission. The contract being one for an interest in lands must be in such writing as is required by the statute of frauds,[97] and so with an agent's authority to sell;[98] but an agent may negotiate a bargain under oral authority unless the contrary be enacted.[99] Statutes relating to "conveyances" do not apply.[1] It must also be borne in mind that the contract to convey is gov-

88. A vagrant committed to the workhouse for the first time is entitled to a discharge, in five days, by order of the commissioner of charities, only with the consent of the committing magistrate. Greater N. Y. Charter, § 710. People v. Warden of City Prison, 37 Misc. [N. Y.] 635.

89. Under Acts 1903, p. 46, an accusation charging that the accused was able to work, and had no property and had no visible or known means of a fair, honest, and reputable livelihood, set forth an offense against the penal laws of the state. Morton v. Nelms, 118 Ga. 786.

90. Means that the accused was guilty of the acts specified in the accusation. Morton v. Nelms, 118 Ga. 786.

98. Authority to an agent to sell land must be conferred by an instrument in writing when the statute so provides. A series of letters held not to have conferred authority to sell land. Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53.

1. Contracts to convey land, enforceable in equity under the statute of frauds, do not fall within the statute requiring conveyances of title to real estate or contracts creating or evidencing incumbrances there-

erned by the rules applicable to all contracts,[2] and that the capacity of parties to take not only involves general contractual capacity[3] but also incapacity growing out of the nature of the subject-matter as being a contract for an interest in lands.[4] The rights of the parties are governed by the law of the situs of the property.[5] on to be by deed, signed and acknowledged. [Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4517, 4518]. Anderson v. Wallace Lumber & Mfg. Co., 30 Wash. 147, 70 Pac. 247.

2. See Contracts, 1 Curr. Law, p. 626.

The contract must be mutual: Where one agreed to convey a right of way whenever another should demand it and tender the price, the contract was not mutual. Bauer v. Lumaghi Coal Co. [Ill.] 70 N. E. 634. Where time of performance is optional with the grantee, the contract is not lacking in mutuality. Either party may tender performance within a reasonable time and thereupon a right of action will accrue against the defaulting party. Time when consideration was to be paid. Burnell v. Bradbury, 67 Kan. 762, 74 Pac. 279. A declaration made by a vendor to his agent is not binding on the vendee unless communicated to him. That contracts would have to be signed and money paid by a certain date. Gough v. Loomis [Iowa] 99 N. W. 295.

Signing: A contract for the sale of land may be mutually binding, though signed only by the vendors. Vance v. Newman [Ark.] 80 S. W. 574. A contract reciting that the vendors have sold the premises to the vendee and that the vendee agrees to pay the purchaser money is binding on both parties, though signed only by the vendors and accepted by the vendee. Forthman v. Deters, 206 Ill. 159, 69 N. E. 97. The plaintiff agreed to sell land to A, B, C and D. The contract was reduced to writing and signed by the plaintiff and A, B and C, but D refused to sign it. Held no contract between the plaintiff and A, B, C and D, since it had not been fully executed. Knickerbocker v. Robinson, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 614.

There must be a consideration: Where the circumstances showed there was no intention to donate lands deeded, the grantee must pay therefor or surrender the conveyance. George Cheap & Son v. Jackson, 25 Ky. L. R. 55, 74 S. W. 692. A promise to pay a certain sum as purchase price is a sufficient consideration for a contract to convey. Rodman v. Robinson [N. C.] 47 S. E. 19.

Legality: A contract to convey land entered into on Sunday is not invalid as against public policy. Rodman v. Robinson [N. C.] 47 S. E. 19. Nor, if it is not an act done as a part of a usual business, is it contrary to a statute prohibiting labor, work or business of one's ordinary calling on Sunday [Code N. C. § 3782]. Id.

Offer and acceptance: An offer to sell or buy must be unconditionally accepted. An agreement to accept at the price offered, vendor to furnish an unlimited certificate of title from a title insurance company, is not such an unconditional acceptance as is required to constitute a contract. Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53. A letter in which a vendee offered a certain price, to be paid at a certain time, under certain conditions, on the back of which the vendor wrote "accepted subject to a lease" and signed his name, taken in connection with subsequent conduct of the parties, submitting abstracts, formal contracts, etc., constituted a binding contract. Gough v. Loomis [Iowa] 99 N. W. 295. Where an offer to sell land was accepted by the purchaser's attorney, it was valid against the seller, though the attorney had not been authorized in writing. Fowler v. Fowler, 204 Ill. 82, 68 N. E. 414. In an action for damages for failure to convey land, it appeared from the correspondence that the owner had never definitely promised to convey, but had said he could not give a clear title but was willing to do what the other owners along a proposed railway line did. The contract was held too indefinite. Abbott v. Kline, 33 Wash. 686, 74 Pac. 1014.

Whether entire or severable: A contract between a vendee and three vendors owning separate tracts of land, construed as a severable contract. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042. A contract to convey an interest in a firm and a homestead entry on which final proof had not been made construed as an entire contract and unenforceable in toto. Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 83, 72 Pac. 698.

Oral preliminary arrangements are merged in a subsequent written contract. After an oral agreement for sale of a lot and giving a receipt for first payment showing terms of sale, and vendees went into possession but the vendor refused a deed on account of certain unadjusted matters, and a formal contract was drawn up adjusting such matters, their rights under the former negotiations were merged and ejectment could not be maintained against the purchasers until they failed to perform its terms. Hutchinson v. Coonley [Ill.] 70 N. E. 686.

A contract between husband and wife that they should execute papers so that property owned in fee by him should be exclusively his and property owned in fee by her should be exclusively hers is void under Oregon statute, because it is relative to dower and curtesy. Potter v. Potter, 43 Or. 149, 72 Pac. 702.

The possession of land by the filer of a homestead thereon and improvements made by him are valuable rights which may legally be conveyed. Holloway v. Miller [Miss.] 36 So. 531.

Where a contract to convey the homestead was signed only by the husband, and a deed was signed by husband and wife but acknowledged before a notary disqualified by interest, the contract to convey was not enforceable. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042.

Existence of the contract is for the jury,[6] if the evidence is sufficient[7] to support a finding.

No time of performance need be stipulated.[8] An immaterial alteration extending time does not avoid the contract.[9] The purchase price[10] must be fixed,[11] but may be shown by parol when the contract fails to state it.[12]

Whether the contract is one to convey land,[13] or one of a different nature,[14] as a conveyance[15] or a mere receipt,[16] depends on the legal effect of the instrument as made, illustrating which are the cases cited.

7. Conflicting declaration by a father that, in consideration of his support by his daughter, he intended to give her certain real estate, is not sufficient to establish a parol agreement to convey, especially since the conduct of the parties thereafter was inconsistent with the existence of such a contract. Truman v. Raybuck, 207 Pa. 357. Correspondence held to show that the minds of the parties met on all the essential terms of the contract and to constitute a valid contract of sale. Gates v. Dudgeon, 173 N. Y. 426, 66 N. E. 116. An offer to buy and an unconditional acceptance thereof constitute a valid contract of sale. Phila. M. & T. Co. v. Hardesty [Kan.] 75 Pac. 1115. A letter, in which defendant, in response to an offer for his farm, stated, "I will sell for that price if it is not already sold. Call me up by 'phone and we will talk the matter over," held not to be a contract to sell and convey the land. Mathes v. Bell, 121 Iowa, 722, 96 N. W. 1093. Evidence held sufficient to show existence of contract. Brown v. Silver [Neb.] 96 N. W. 281.

8. Leis v. Sinclair, 67 Kan. 748, 74 Pac. 261.

9. Indorsement extending time of payment one week held not a material alteration of the contract, sufficient to avoid it, tender of payment having been in fact made in three days and before vendor was ready to perform. Johnson v. Weber [Neb.] 97 N. W. 585.

10. An executory contract for the sale of land, providing for the payment of $400 annually during the life of the vendor, and that, if he died within two years after the making of the contract, the vendee should pay $800 for the farm in four annual payments, construed, and held that the $400 payment was an annuity, and that, upon the death of the vendor within the time specified, the vendee was thereafter required to pay $800 in four annual instalments. Carpenter v. Hewitt, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 260.

11. Arbitrators appointed to determine price failed to agree. Louis Werner Sawmill Co. v. O'Shee, 111 La. 817. An option to purchase at a price not to exceed $3,000.00 is not fatally ambiguous as to the purchase price. Heyward v. Willmarth, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 125.

13. A contract construed as a contract for future conveyance within Laws Minn. 1897, p. 431, c. 223, so that vendee's rights could be terminated only by the notice required by that statute. Lamprey v. St. Paul & C. R. Co., 89 Minn. 187, 94 N. W. 555. A contract by which one agreed to pay ten dollars an acre for land, if within 30 days the vendor furnished a good title and obligating a conveyance to any one whom the purchaser might name, is a contract for sale. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227. A writing purporting to be an express contract to convey land cannot be construed as a mere option. Anderson v. Wallace Lumber & Mfg. Co., 30 Wash. 147, 70 Pac. 247. A bond reciting the purchase of a lot, payment of a certain amount thereon, future payments to be made by parties named and that such payments being made, the lot is to be deeded, is a binding contract of sale and not a mere option. Vance v. Newman [Ark.] 80 S. W. 574.

14. Defendant agreed with three others in consideration of supplies and expenses in Alaska for a year to give them a half interest in the mines he then possessed. Held a contract of bargain and sale and not a partnership agreement or grub-stake contract, and gave no right to the three in mines subsequently owned by him. Roberts v. Date [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 238. A note containing a stipulation on the back that it is not payable until a deed of certain land is made held not to show of itself an agreement to convey. Enlow Cattle Co. v. Gannow [Neb.] 94 N. W. 978. Where a boat captain had lived with a party on and off for 20 years, evidence held sufficient to show an agreement to devise them a house and lot. Winfield v. Bowen [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 728.

15. See Deeds of Conveyance, 1 Curr. Law, p. 908. Instrument held to be an executed contract of sale or conveyance and not a mere bond for title. Yeary v. Crenshaw, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 399, 70 S. W. 574; Id., 72 S. W. 69. Plaintiff delivered to defendant a deed absolute on its face, but in fact a mortgage, the consideration being stated as $40,000, with an option in the defendant to buy within a year. Defendant exercised the option and plaintiff wrote defendant that he released the land. In an action for the price, held there had been no grant of the property to defendant for which he was liable to pay, the title still remaining in the plaintiff. Reich v. Dyer, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 240. Facts held to show relation of mortgagor and mortgagee. English v. Rainear [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 41. Evidence held to show a sale with a right to repurchase and not a mortgage. Martin v. Option to purchase.—Closely related to the contract to convey is the contract giving an option to purchase, which is a mere privilege depending upon election,[17] and is not in any sense a binding contract until acceptance,[18] according to its terms,[19] within the time limited therein,[20] before which time it may be revoked unless given for a valuable consideration.[21]

Failure to comply with a statutory requirement that a license be procured held not to avoid the contract.[22]

Assumption of incumbrances is sometimes promised. Where the purchaser is bound to pay off incumbrances, he is not entitled to possession until such payment is made,[23] but he does not assume any personal liability,[24] though he is liable to the vendor who is compelled to pay it.[25] An agreement guarantying that the incumbrance will be extended is indefinite where the time of extension is not stipulated,[26] and a mere attempt to secure such extension is not a compliance with the stipulation,[27] and on vendor's failure to obtain extension, the purchaser may do so. The vendor is liable for any excess of interest or charges for the use of the money over the amount stipulated in the agreement.[28]

property in fraud of the promisee, an immediate action to cancel the conveyance arises.[30]

§ 2. Title and incumbrances.—Unless the contract otherwise provides, a purchaser is entitled to receive a "marketable title,"[31] and though the courts sometimes hold that purchaser is entitled to good title it does not appear that any less title than a "marketable" one is intended thereby.[32] A marketable title is a good title free from reasonable doubt,[33] or as it is sometimes stated one that is not "fairly debatable."[34] Where the doubt as to the vendor's title arises from ascertaining the construction of some ill-expressed instrument, the title is not marketable,[35] but a mere mistake of fact on part of the purchaser does not make title unmarketable.[36] Where it has once been judicially determined that the defect complained of does not constitute a cloud or the defect has been cured, the title is marketable,[37] or where the defect has existed for a long term of years without objection,[38] or where a possible claimant has been missing so long as to raise the presumption of death.[39]

31. Felix v. Devlin, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 103; Roberts & Corley v. McFaddin, Weiss & Kyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 105. Evidence held to show title marketable. Young v. Hervey, 207 Pa. 396. A vendor contracting to give good title or warranty deed must produce and tender a marketable title, free from incumbrances and unclouded unless an intention to transfer subject to defects be shown. Glassman v. Condon [Utah] 76 Pac. 343. There is an implied condition that the title shall be perfect. Wilson v. Clark [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 649.

Inability to make title is not a breach if the parties knew the facts and understood that approval of the record owner was to be had. Where the husband contracted to sell land the record title to which was in the wife, the vendee, having knowledge of the facts, and there being an understanding that the contract was subject to the wife's approval, could not recover damages for the wife's failure to approve, or set up that the conveyance to the wife was in fraud of the husband's creditors or of subsequent purchasers. Saunders v. King, 119 Iowa, 291, 93 N. W. 272.

32. In an executory contract for the sale of land, in the absence of anything therein to the contrary, there is always implied the right to receive a good title, free from defects and incumbrances. Turner v. Walker, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 379.

33. Felix v. Devlin, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 103; Young v. Hervey, 207 Pa. 396. It is not enough that the objections raise a remote suspicion against the title. The objections must be grave and reasonable, for few titles can be established with mathematical certainty. Hollifield v. Landrum, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 187, 71 S. W. 979.

Where there are outstanding leases, if in a previous action there was a decree that the lessee who had not appeared in the action should be barred. Dresser v. Travis, 177 N. Y. 376, 69 N. E. 736. Vendee cannot have an action for rescission if a defect in title to which he objects has been cured before trial. Mock v. Chalstrom, 121 Iowa, 411, 96 N. W. 909. Where petition for the appointment of a guardian for an infant defendant was verified before a disqualified notary, and the defect was cured by an affidavit in proceedings to correct the error. Baumeister v. Demuth, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 394. Plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant realty which had been pledged by plaintiff's predecessor by deed of trust to secure certain notes. The deed did not appear satisfied of record. Plaintiff agreed by his contract of sale to remedy defects of title. Later he gave defendant a warranty deed and thereafter entered into a written agreement with him providing that one of the notes given for the purchase price should be held by a third person until the notes secured by the deed of trust were produced and such person was satisfied that they had been paid and the deed of trust released. The notes could not be found and the heirs of the beneficiary in the trust deed quitclaimed the premises. Held that the purpose of the contract was only to protect defendant against the possible defect in his title, and hence, though unable to produce the note, plaintiff was entitled to receive the purchase money note, on a decree declaring the trust deed satisfied. Meyer v. Christopher, 176 Mo. 580, 75 S. W. 750.

38. Levy v. Hill, 174 N. Y. 536, 66 N. E. 1112. The vendee cannot object to a defective execution of a power of sale in the chain of title if no objection has been raised against it for 40 years. Binzen v. Epstein, 172 N. Y. 596, 64 N. E. 1118. A mortgage was assigned to A and recorded but no assignment by A was recorded. The original mortgagee assigned to B who assigned to C. B bought at foreclosure sale. 23 years thereafter one claiming under B was allowed specific performance of a contract to purchase. Barger v. Gery, 64 N. J. Eq. 263. Where in partition proceedings 70 years old it did

Title depending upon adverse possession is marketable.[40] Building restrictions destroy marketability.[41] Title which may be divested is not marketable.[42] Outstanding claims though in fact void,[43] defective judicial proceedings,[44] failure to prove foreign will properly executed,[45] and defective acknowledgments, render the title unmarketable.[46] Encroachment of a building on an adjoining lot renders the title unmarketable,[47] but a projection into a street has been held not to affect the title.[48] Vendor need not have title at date of contract.[49]

The burden is on the purchaser to show title unmarketable, when he seeks to recover the purchase price,[50] but the vendor seeking specific performance must affirmatively show good title.[51]

The property must be free from incumbrance.[52]

41. Roussel v. Lux, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 508. A contract between adjoining landowners expressly agreed to run with the land by which the depth of foundations on the dividing line is limited, and it is agreed that if either party goes lower he shall protect the wall of the other, is a cloud, justifying the vendee in refusing to take a deed. Leinhardt v. Kalchheim, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 308.

42. Conveyance in the lifetime of devisee for life from a child passing a vested estate under 1 Gen. St. p. 1195, but subject to be divested by the death of such child leaving issue in the lifetime of the devisee for life. Lamphrey v. Whitehead, 64 N. J. Eq. 408. Doubt as to whether, on account of disability, the statute of limitations has run against a possible claimant. Baumeister v. Silver [Md.] 56 Atl. 825.

48. The fact that the stoop of a building projects several feet beyond the lot and into the street is not a defect entitling the vendee to refuse a deed or recover back the purchase money. The projection is not necessarily unlawful and the question can only arise between the municipal authorities and the owner of the building. In this case the encroachment had existed for over thirty years without objection. Levy v. Hill, 174 N. Y. 536, 66 N. E. 1112.

49. Coleridge Creamery Co. v. Jenkins [Neb.] 92 N. W. 123. The contract will generally be upheld if made in good faith and the vendor has such an interest in the land or is so situated with reference thereto that he can carry into effect the agreement at the time fixed for performance. Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh [Kan.] 75 Pac. 498. Specific performance will not be denied to the vendor if he can give a good title even if he had no title at the time the contract was made. Vendor had a parol gift of land from his father and subsequently obtained a conveyance (Hollifield v. Landrum, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 187, 71 S. W. 979), provided there has been no change in the position of the parties making performance inequitable (Baumeister v. Demuth, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 394).

51. McAllister v. Harman, 101 Va. 17.

52. What is an incumbrance: An easement of light. Denman v. Mentz, 63 N. J. Eq. 613. Right of way and right of entry. Turner v. Walker, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 379. In an action for the purchase price it appeared that there was in the chain of title a condition that no saloon should be maintained on the premises on penalty of reverting. Held that this was not a breach of the implied covenant against incumbrances in the absence of an eviction or disturbance suffered by the vendee. Thurgood v. Spring, 139 Cal. 596, 73 Pac. 456. The unauthorized act of the vendor's agent in renting the land sold is no defense in a suit for specific performance by the vendor. Hames v. Swanzey [Iowa] 98 N. W. 586.

53. Construction of particular agreements: An agreement withdrawing from the sale any portion to which title cannot be perfected within a year binds the vendor to use reasonable efforts to clear the title. He cannot bring suit to set aside tax sales instead of redeeming them with money furnished by the vendee, especially as such suit would probably last beyond the year. Sykes v. Robbins [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 433. An agreement to sell for $7,000 "net," "free of all or a "perfect title" is not fulfilled by giving a title depending on adverse possession,[54] nor by tender of a deed subject to encumbrances,[55] but only by conveyance of the fee.[56] Specific defects in the title need not be pointed out,[57] but a marketable title has been held sufficient after part performance.[58] Contracts to convey "by good warranty deed" do not require the release of dower,[59] but a mortgage is an incumbrance releasing the purchaser.[60]

A conveyance showing that the grantee acquired his grantor's rights under a contract of sale of all the right, title, and interest of such grantor, shows prima facie that the grantee took only such title as the grantor had.[61]

commissions, taxes and all other charges," is an agreement to sell for that amount subject to the existing lien of a special assessment. Gibbs v. People's Nat. Bank, 108 Ill. 307, 64 N. E. 1060. Where one contracted to sell "all his right, title, and interest," a subsequent clause to the effect that on payment of a certain sum he would execute a warranty deed of the premises, could not be construed to enlarge the agreement. Henderson v. Beatty [Iowa] 99 N. W. 716. Where a contract called for a title free from incumbrances within a specified time during which the purchasers knew of certain park restrictions and were satisfied to take subject thereto, the existence of such restrictions did not put the vendor in the wrong in an action for damages for breach of the contract. They must show a refusal to convey subject to the restrictions. Marcus v. Clark [Mass.] 70 N. E. 433. A contract called for a title free from incumbrances. The purchasers sued for damages because the vendor had placed park restrictions on the property. The vendor introduced evidence that the purchaser had asked for an extension because of difficulty in obtaining the purchase money. Held, that it was proper to exclude evidence in rebuttal showing that the real purpose in asking for the extension was to see if they could handle the property with the restrictions. Id. A contract for the sale of land by heirs of the former owner in which they agreed to give a "good deed free from all incumbrances" imposed upon them the obligation of exonerating the land from payment of claims allowed against the estate of the ancestor. Forthman v. Deters, 206 Ill. 159, 69 N. E. 97. Where a contract provided for a title clear of incumbrances except a certain mortgage and the abstract showed an additional mortgage and a cloud on title to part of the property, it justified a refusal to comply with the contract. Tryce v. Dittus, 199 Ill. 189, 65 N. E. 220. Where vendee agreed to assume $250 of a $1,000 mortgage, the vendor to furnish a warranty deed "subject to a mortgage of $250," he was not obliged to accept a deed subject to an outstanding mortgage of $1,000. Glassman v. Condon [Utah] 76 Pac. 343. A contract provided for a title free from incumbrances and the purchasers sued for damages on the ground that prior to the contract the vendor had put park restrictions on the land. Held, though the suit was for the benefit of an assignee of the contract, evidence that the purchasers had asked for an extension of the time limit was admissible where the vendor had no notice of the assignment. Marcus v. Clark [Mass.] 70 N. E. 433.

54. Bruce v. Wolfe, 102 Mo. App. 384, 76 S. W. 723; Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 Pac. 851. Rescission refused to vendee where part of the land was adjudged the property of a third party, the vendee knowing that the title to a portion was in dispute, and the contract providing that the price should be reduced pro rata if adverse claims were established to any portion. Smith v. Detroit & D. Gold Min. Co. [S. D.] 97 N. W. 17.

55. Tryce v. Dittus, 199 Ill. 189, 65 N. E. 220.

56. Where one contracted to sell his interest in premises, but a subsequent clause of the contract stipulated that the purchase price should be paid on presentation of an abstract showing a good and perfect title, the contract requires the conveyance of a fee. Henderson v. Beatty [Iowa] 99 N. W. 716.

57. Where the agreement provides for an "abstract showing perfect title," the vendee need not point out specifically defects in title, in order to insist on a breach of the agreement. Lessenich v. Sellers, 119 Iowa, 314, 93 N. W. 348.

58. Where the conveyance is not the whole consideration, a merchantable title is a substantial compliance with a contract calling for a perfect title, especially where the vendor has performed by erecting a factory. McCleary v. Chipman [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 320.

59. A contract to convey by good warranty deed does not compel the vendor to give a deed with a release of dower, unless there is a covenant against incumbrances. Peoples' Sav. Bank Co. v. Parisette, 68 Ohio St. 450, 67 N. E. 896.

60. In an action for damages for the breach of an agreement to exchange real estate, the existence of a mortgage on plaintiff's property is a defense, whether the agreement was for a warranty deed or the defendant represented the estate free from encumbrances. Godfrey v. Rosenthal [S. D.] 97 N. W. 365.

61. Slaughter v. Coke County [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 863. Where the contract was for "all one's right, title, and interest," it was a contract for such interest as the vendor had and not for any particular estate or fee simple. Henderson v. Beatty [Iowa] 99 N. W. 716.

62. Purchase of oil well. Bailey v. Gib-

Quantity.[64]—The amount may be ascertainable by election of the vendee or by such resales as he may make.[65] When the sale is not at a specified rate per acre, but for a specified tract, the vendee is entitled to the quantity within the designated boundaries without reference to the quantity described.[66] Where a certain price is fixed per acre, the area of highways in the described tract is included.[67] An agreement to convey land fronting on a public highway includes the vendor's title to the center of the highway unless a contrary intention plainly appears.[68]

Description.[69]—The description is construed liberally,[70] but it must be sufficient to identify the land.[71] Parol evidence is admissible to render the description certain,[72] or show the true acreage.[73] The uncertainty of description in an infor-son, 20 Pa. Super. St. 429; Trenchard v. Kell, 127 Fed. 596. Vendor owes no duty to inform vendee that he had previously concluded to sell for a lower price. Morrow v. Moore [Me.] 57 Atl. 81. One who purchased a lot relying on a newspaper advertisement authorized by the owner which falsely stated the frontage to be 54 feet greater than it was and 100 feet deeper, could not be compelled to perform. McIntyre v. Harrington, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1028.

63. The vendee need not disclose the value of the land. Pratt Land & Imp. Co. v. McClain, 135 Ala. 452. The holder of an option is not bound to inform the vendor of matters which will increase the value of the property. Guaranty S. D. & T. Co. v. Liebold, 207 Pa. 399. Where an agent accepts an option in his own name and assigns it to his principal, it is not fraud on the vendor not to disclose that he is acting for a principal or what use is to be made of the land. Standard Steel Car Co. v. Stamm, 207 Pa. 419.

65. Contract construed: Vendee held not to have obligated itself to purchase the whole tract of land, but was to take no more than it could sell to third parties, unless it elected to do so and performed to that end. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. McDonnell, 32 Wash. 418, 73 Pac. 484.

66. Sale of 234 acres of the east half of a section, described by metes and bounds. This was 46 acres more than that described by metes and bounds. Pearson v. Heard, 135 Ala. 348. Agreement to sell which did not mention the number of acres contained in the property construed and held to provide for a sale per aversionem. A sale is perfected between the parties on the signing of the agreement under La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2456). Teal v. McKnight, 110 La. 256.

70. Contract dated Indianapolis, Mar. 15, and land described as "Lot 30 Douglas Park." Held the description sufficiently certain. Maris v. Masters, 31 Ind. App. 235, 67 N. E. 699.

71. Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 Pac. 851. Description held too indefinite to be specifically enforced. Bauer v. Lumaghi Coal Co. [Ill.] 70 N. E. 634. Four acres of land * * * out of the Williams League beginning 129.72 varas north from a point where the south line of the Vercher 100 acre tract intersects the west line of the Langham survey is insufficient. Commack v. Prather [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 354. "A tract of land known as the 'Triangle' or 'Cut off Pasture' now occupied by Booth," held a sufficient description. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227. Where land was described as belonging to A when in fact it belonged to B such description may be discarded as immaterial. Tobin v. Larkin, 183 Mass. 389, 67 N. E. 340. Where land agreed to be conveyed is to be selected by the vendee, the description offered by him is sufficient if the surveyor can locate the land. Ehrich v. Durkee [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 814.

Description in other agreements: An agreement to convey a lot 125 feet deep is not satisfied by tendering a deed of a lot 115 feet deep with the remaining 10 feet included within a street as laid out according to a map filed by the commissioner of streets though that part was never actually laid out as a street. Ring v. Palmer, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67. Vendor gave a bond to convey all that he owned of a certain strip of land referring to the records for description, "said to be 175 by 3,000 feet." Held, he was bound to convey only what he owned. Sumpter Gold Min. Co. v. Browder, 31 Colo. 269, 73 Pac. 38. A deed of a sugar plantation "with all the buildings and appurtenances thereof," with a later clause that the appurtenances included are mentioned in a schedule made a part of the deed, passes only those in the schedule, except fences which pass anyway with the land. Bagley v. Rose Hill Sugar Co., 111 La. 249. Where the vendee buys relying on plats showed him by the vendor describing the lot as bounded by natural environments, he is justified in assuming that the plat is correct and is not bound by the survey as actually laid out. Otherwise in city lots. Carlyle v. Sloan [Or.] 75 Pac. 217. Where a vendee buys land according to a plan showing proposed streets, he has a right of way over the portion described as streets to reach the public ways, when the vendor retains title to such portion. Drew v. Wiswell, 183 Mass. 554, 67 N. E. 666; Mann v. Bergmann, 203 Ill. 406, 67 N. E. 814. See, also, Easements, 1 Curr. Law, p. 962.

72. A lease gave an option to the lessee to purchase the premises "and the land of the lessor adjoining on the east" extrinsic evidence showing the unity of the entire tract rendered the description certain and mal contract is cured by a signing of a formal contract by the party to be charged.[74] The vendor is bound by the description written except for mistake or fraud.[75] The vendee may select land granted out of a larger tract but not set off;[76] but he need not have the land surveyed.[77]

§ 4. Rights and liabilities between date of sale and delivery of deed.—Under an executory contract to sell, the legal title remains in the vendor subject to the vendee's equities.[78]

If the vendee is not in possession or the vendor has not complied with all the conditions of the contract, title has not passed.[79] The law of the state in which real estate is situated governs in transfers as to when title passes.[80]

The vendor is liable for the taxes[81] and has an insurable interest in the buildings,[82] and mechanics' liens attach notwithstanding agreement to the contrary between vendor and purchaser.[83] A vendee in possession under an executory contract to sell is the equitable owner,[84] and his equity is superior to the vendor's.[85] His interest may be sold or mortgaged,[86] or leased,[87] and may be taken on execu-

Morey v. Clopton [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 467.

77. A receipt executed by an owner of land reciting that he had received a specified sum as earnest money on the purchase of certain land from him, and setting forth the price per acre and terms of payment, and stipulating for the execution of the deed and for the return of the money on the title proving unsatisfactory, does not require the purchaser to have the land surveyed. A woman can have no dower in land which her husband held under an executory contract to convey. Schaefer v. Purviance, 160 Ind. 63, 66 N. E. 154. A contract for the sale of land title to pass to vendee on fulfillment of certain conditions passes only the equitable title. Slaughter v. Coke County [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 863.

79. A contract for the exchange of property provided that abstracts should be furnished. One party had deposited a deed in the bank stipulated, but the other party had not, completed his abstract nor paid taxes nor furnished a bill of sale of personal property as required when the hotel which was to be conveyed burned. The loss fell on the original owner. Bowdle v. Jencks [S. D.] 99 N. W. 98. In a suit to cancel a deed, where it was claimed that title had not passed because conditions were not complied with, but that the vendees had wrongfully taken it from the bank where it was deposited, evidence of the judgment roll in an action of replevin by the vendees to recover it was inadmissible. Id.

81. He is the owner within the meaning of a statute assessing taxes to the owner. Nunngesser v. Hart [Iowa] 98 N. W. 505.

82. He may insure a house erected by the vendee and the vendee has no interest in the amount paid the vendor by the insurance company. White v. Gilman, 138 Cal. 375, 71 Pac. 436. See, also, Dankwardt v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 603.

83. A mechanic's lien attaches to the land even though it is agreed between the vendor and a conditional vendee that improvements must be made at the cost of the vendee and that the vendor shall not be liable for labor or materials, unless notice is given. Ah Louis v. Harwood, 140 Cal. 500, 74 Pac. 41.

A contract to sell land confers an interest on the vendee who is to pay a certain debt and continue to occupy and pay rent for the lands, though he has paid none of the debt and has performed only in respect to the other promises. Cone v. Cone, 118 Iowa, 458, 92 N. W. 665. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 4280, providing that "when a grant is made to one and the consideration paid by another, no use shall result in favor of the latter," has no application to an executory contract for the sale of land. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lund [Minn.] 97 N. W. 452. A title bond to real estate, though insufficient to pass the legal title, gives the holder an equitable right superior to the title of a subsequent purchaser with notice. McGuire v. Whitt [Ky.] 80 S. W. 474.

85. A vendee holding a bond for title has a title superior to that remaining in the vendor. Stipe v. Shirley [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 307.

86. Titcomb v. Fonda, J. & G. R. Co., 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 630.

87. An agreement by which the vendee shall have a deed on payment of a certain amount, and shall have the use of the land and pay taxes, repairs, etc., gives the vendee

tion,[88] and he may maintain an action for damage to the land.[89] The rights of the vendor's judgment creditors are superior to his.[90] Subsequent purchasers must take notice of a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale,[91] but his title is inferior to subsequent bona fide grantees.[92]

His possession is not adverse to the vendor as long as the purchase money is not paid or at least not before the vendee is entitled to demand a deed.[93] He is not a tenant and is not liable for use and occupation.[94] He cannot as against the vendor remove fixtures placed by him on the land.[95] The vendee is a necessary party to a foreclosure of a precedent mortgage.[96]

One who has contracted to sell all his interest in land may transfer his title to another, but such transfer is subject to the rights of the purchaser.[97] If the purchaser refuses to accept title from the vendor's grantee, the latter may have the contract canceled as a cloud on his title.[98]

An assignee of a contract to purchase land, who as a consideration therefor promises to pay notes given under the contract, is liable to the payee on such notes, though his promise has not been accepted by him.[99] It is no defense to an action against a vendor by the assignee of a contract of sale that the assignment was as security only.[1] The purchaser of a merely equitable title is not protected as against the equities of his grantor's vendor.[2]

92. See Notice and Record of Title, 2 Curr. Law, p. 1053. Where, in an action to try title, one pleads legal title and shows a complete chain, beginning with a contract to sell, and another sets up a claim under a prior unrecorded conveyance which under the laws of that state (Texas) was void as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser, evidence is admissible to show that the first party was a bona fide purchaser. Lee v. Wysong [C. C. A.] 128 Fed. 833. Certain tracts of land in Texas were conveyed to two individuals who were at the time partners; one of them, by an act of sale in New Orleans, which was insufficient under the laws of Texas, conveyed his interest to the other. Subsequently, the sole heir of the one who conveyed sold an undivided half of such lands to an innocent purchaser. Held, that such purchaser acquired a legal title. Id. The purchaser's possession is good as against his assignee apparently absolute, but really for security only.[3]

§ 5. Waiver of performance or of defects.[4]—A party to a written contract for the sale of land may waive his rights thereunder by parol.[5] Provisions exclusively for one party's benefit are waived by his act preventing fulfillment.[6] The burden of proving a waiver is on the party alleging it.[7]

What constitutes.—A default is waived by acts showing an intention still to insist on performance.[8] A refusal to accept tendered performance, though for other reasons than that it was different from the contract, works no waiver.[9] Acceptance of payments is a waiver of default,[10] or of unauthorized assignment,[11] or breach of conditions;[12] but not of subsequent defaults.[13] The payment need not be so large as was stipulated in the contract.[14] Acceptance of deed waives objection to its form,[15] and matters affecting marketability of title,[16] but not of quantity.[17]

A purchaser failing to object in time cannot afterwards raise questions as to title,[18] nor can he do so after his own default,[19] nor can he have specific performance after he has abandoned the contract,[20] nor set up false representations in suit for specific performance after seeking rescission on ground of defective title.[21]

3. Evidence held to show that an assignment of a contract to purchase land was for security only, though absolute on its face. Fifer v. Fifer [N. D.] 99 N. W. 763.

4. Waiver of vendor's lien, see post, § 12.

5. Wadge v. Kittleson [N. D.] 97 N. W. 856. Waiver of forfeiture. Whiting v. Doughton, 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026.

6. A provision for an action to quiet title to be prosecuted by the vendee, held to have been waived by him. Meyers v. Markham, 90 Minn. 230, 96 N. W. 835.

7. Sessa v. Arthur, 183 Mass. 230, 66 N. E. 804.

8. Where a vendor after the time limit for acceptance of a contract prepared by the vendee had expired, handed the vendee a contract which he had prepared himself and said that it and no other would do, he thereby waived the time limit. Gough v. Loomis [Iowa] 99 N. W. 295; Fulenwider v. Rowan, 136 Ala. 287.

9. Where a vendee makes no effort to perform his part of the contract, but submits a proposition entirely different from the contract, the vendor does not waive such failure to perform by the vendee by refusing to convey on other grounds. Burns v. Freling, 98 Mo. App. 267, 71 S. W. 1128.

10. Ross v. Page, 11 N. D. 458, 92 N. W. 822. Where vendor has accepted payments from time to time and has made no objection that taxes which the vendee assumed have not been paid. Kicks v. State Bank of Lisbon [N. D.] 98 N. W. 408. Evidence held to show that where the vendee made payments after the election of the vendor to declare a forfeiture, they were received for an independent indebtedness and so no waiver. Sutphin v. Holbrook [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1100. Where a contract provided that the price was to be paid in instalments and on default of payment the vendor might terminate the contract, yet when he receives irregular payments, he will be considered as treating time not of the essence of the contract and cannot terminate it without allowing a reasonable time for performance. Murray v. Harbor & Suburban B. & S. Ass'n, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 397.

11. Ross v. Page, 11 N. D. 458, 92 N. W. 822.

12. Provisions as to improvement by the vendee, manner of cultivation, and mode of payment, may be waived by the vendor. Ross v. Page, 11 N. D. 458, 92 N. W. 822.

13. Accepting payment of one instalment after default is not a waiver of the right to insist upon the terms of the contract after default in paying a later instalment. Keefe v. Fairfield, 184 Mass. 334, 68 N. E. 342.

14. Where a deed provides for a repurchase of the property within two years, the option survives after such time where the grantees receive remittances, though at a lower per cent. than that provided for in the deed. Connolly v. Keenan, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 589.

15. Acceptance of a trust deed is a waiver of a right to ask for specific performance of a contract to give an absolute deed. Albrecht v. Albrecht, 121 Iowa, 521, 96 N. W. 1087.

16. Acceptance of a deed is a waiver of all matters affecting the marketability of the title. Roberts & Corley v. McFaddin, Weiss & Kyle [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 105.

17. Deed conveyed less than purchaser contracted for. Sessa v. Arthur, 183 Mass. 230, 66 N. E. 804.

18. Specific performance will not be refused because of a defect in title to which purchaser did not object and which could have been cured had he objected. Wold v. Newgard [Iowa] 94 N. W. 859.

19. A purchaser refusing to accept a deed because of lack of funds cannot afterward object to the title. Schwartz v. Woodruff [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1067.

20. Milmoe v. Murphy [N. J. Err. & App.] 56 Atl. 292; Wadge v. Kittleson [N. D.] 97 N. W. 856. Refusing a deed when tendered. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042; Milmoe v. Murphy [N. J. Err. & App.] 56 Atl. 292. Vendee went into possession and the vendor sold to a third person who brought forcible entry and detainer. Judgment was

§ 6. Default and its effect.—It is a default as soon as a party intentionally disables himself to perform.[22] Inability to pay the purchase money when due, not attributable to the fault of the vendor, cannot be regarded as an excuse for failure to pay at maturity or upon demand thereafter.[23] The purchaser cannot recover after his own default.[24] If either party fails to perform his part of the agreement, the other party may notify him to do so within a reasonable time, and if he neglects to perform within such specified period, he cannot thereafter have specific performance.[25] The notice must be express, clear, distinct and unequivocal.[26] What is a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of the particular case.[27] Where a default of payment is waived, the vendor cannot declare a forfeiture without giving notice to the vendee and allowing him a reasonable time to comply with the contract.[28] The word "improvements" in an agreement for the sale of mining claims which on default become the property of the vendor refer to removable betterments.[29] The contract may stipulate the consequences of a default.[30]

§ 7. Performance of the contract. Time for performance.—Performance must be within a reasonable time where no time is specified.[31] The general rule is that time is not of the essence,[32] and it will not be so regarded merely because definite dates of performance are designated therein;[33] but it is of the essence where it appears that a material part of the value of the transaction is that it be done at a certain time, or that a failure to carry out the agreement within the specified time will result in damage or material inconvenience.[34] If time be of entered for the plaintiff by consent, and that he should convey a portion to the original vendee. Held an abandonment. Robison v. Barlow, 203 Ill. 287, 67 N. E. 776.

21. Hawes v. Swanzey [Iowa] 98 N. W. 586.

22. Where there was an agreement to pay a balance due out of proceeds of a resale, and vendees sold to a corporation, formed by them, for a nominal consideration, they were liable for breach. Gutheil v. Gilmer [Utah] 76 Pac. 628.

23. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271.

24. There can be no recovery by a vendee who makes payments and afterwards ceases to make them, where the vendor stands ready to perform. Keefe v. Fairfield, 184 Mass. 334, 68 N. E. 342. A considerable increase in the value of the land after default of the vendee by failure to pay an instalment of the purchase price at the time stipulated in the contract may be a sufficient reason for denying him specific performance. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271.

25, 26. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271.

27. Four months held reasonable. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271. When the time specified in the notice is assented to by the defaulting party, either expressly or by implication, he cannot question its reasonableness. Failure to object is assent. Id. But where the buyer thereafter seeks to attach new conditions, and notifies the seller that unless they are agreed to he will not buy, this is, as to the buyer, a reopening of the negotiations, permitting the seller to impose new conditions, and the buyer cannot recover damages for the seller's refusal to convey, without showing a new agreement reached after such reopening. Philadelphia Mortg. & T. Co. v. Hardesty [Kan.] 75 Pac. 1115.

28. Graham v. Merchant, 43 Or. 294, 72 Pac. 1088; Whiting v. Doughton, 31 Wash. 327, 71 Pac. 1026.

29. Smith v. Detroit & D. Gold Min. Co. [S. D.] 97 N. W. 17.

30. A provision in a contract of sale for forfeiture of possession and all rights under the contract construed as merely a form of security. Harris v. Greenleaf [Ky.] 79 S. W. 267.

31. Coleridge Creamery Co. v. Jenkins [Neb.] 92 N. W. 123. Ordinarily, where no time is stipulated within which the contract is to be performed, it must be performed within a reasonable time, and an absence of such stipulation will not render it void. Leis v. Sinclair, 67 Kan. 748, 74 Pac. 261. Where the vendor on the day of performance offered to convey and demanded the purchase money and the vendee refused to take the land for several days, vendor was relieved from the obligation to perform. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042. An acceptance by a vendee, of a contract and a return thereof to the vendor within four days of its submission to him is within a reasonable time. Gough v. Loomis [Iowa] 99 N. W. 295.

32. Fulenwider v. Rowan, 136 Ala. 287. The purchase money is a simple debt and interest is compensation for delay in payment. Wheeling Creek Gas, Coal & Coke Co. v. Elder [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 357.

33. Lapse of time after maturity before the payment of purchase money, may generally be compensated for by interest. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271. Where vendee agrees to pay on certain dates, payment on those dates is not essential to preserve their rights Vance v. Newman [Ark.] 80 S. W. 574.

34. Woods v. McGraw [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 914. Vendor informed purchaser that he was selling because he needed money to pay his debts and later fixed a time within the essence, the contract must be performed according to its terms,[35] unless the other party is himself unable to perform,[36] or waives compliance;[37] but time being not of the essence the vendor cannot tender a deed on the day of payment and declare the contract void,[38] and a mere failure to pay promptly will not deprive the purchaser of his rights.[39] Time to examine an abstract may run from its delivery though delivered before it was required.[40]

Extension of time[41] must be shown by the purchaser.[42]

A purchaser is not bound to take nor entitled to possession until conditions precedent are performed.[43] Where a substantial part of the consideration is paid, the covenants and undertakings are generally deemed independent and not conditions precedent.[44]

If payment to have been made in work has become impossible, an equivalent money value is a good payment.[45] A purchaser who has paid for all but has taken which payment must be made. Boldt v. Early [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 271. Vendor needed the money and time was fixed, after negotiation, at a date later than he desired. Woods v. McGraw [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 914.

35. McAdams v. Felkner, 140 Cal. 354, 73 Pac. 1064. Where time is of the essence of the contract, a court of equity will not extend that fixed by the parties by enforcing specific performance after it has expired without any offer of performance. Woods v. McGraw [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 914. Specific performance refused where vendee tendered purchase money after it was due, and time was of the essence. McKenzie v. Murphy, 31 Colo. 274, 72 Pac. 1075.

36. Specific performance granted to vendee in a contract where time was made of the essence, even though the vendee did not offer to pay on the day, if at that time the vendor could not give a good title. Wheeling Creek Gas, Coal & Coke Co. v. Elder [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 357.

37. As by continuing to recognize the contract as existing after failure to pay on day. Wheeling Creek Gas, Coal & Coke Co. v. Elder [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 357. Permitting payment of one instalment after due is not a waiver as to subsequent instalments. McAdams v. Felkner, 140 Cal. 354, 73 Pac. 1064.

38. Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Smith, 207 Pa. 210.

39. Where the value is not precarious nor fluctuating and there is no stipulation in the contract as to forfeiture or making time of the essence, the vendee may have specific performance, even though he did not pay the balance on time. Castleberry v. Hay [Idaho] 70 Pac. 1055. An option accepted within the time stated becomes an absolute sale but failure to pay the price on the day stated will not be a revocation unless time is of the essence. Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Smith, 207 Pa. 210. Delay of payment for a month after due is not a breach. Maris v. Masters, 31 Ind. App. 235, 67 N. E. 699.

40. Where the contract provides for an abstract within 10 days and gives 20 days for examination thereof, and the vendor in his receipt for the consideration given at the date of the contract conditions the acceptance within 20 days from the date thereof, the 20 days run from the date of the contract, if the abstract is then given. Womack v. Coleman, 89 Minn. 17, 93 N. W. 663.

41. An instrument reciting that the owner of land, sold under a power of sale in a trust deed, should have ten days in which to repay the purchase price, and on his doing so defendant would resell the land to him or cancel the sale, held to be a mere option to repurchase and not an extension of time for the payment of the debt secured by the trust deed. Woods v. McGraw [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 914.

42. Purchaser claimed a parol agreement. Graham v. Merchant, 43 Or. 294, 72 Pac. 1088.

43. Where a vendor who had not complied with conditions of a contract when the property was burned contended that his possession was by permission of the vendee. Bowdle v. Jencks [S. D.] 99 N. W. 98. A condition requiring a vendor to show an abstract of title subject to an incumbrance of $1,000 is not satisfied where there is a trust deed securing three notes for $1,000 each and an offer to surrender two of the notes, and have interest paid on the third to date, but unaccompanied by any satisfaction signed by the grantee in the trust deed. Hutchinson v. Coonley [Ill.] 70 N. E. 686. Where a contract, adjusting matters between parties, including a sale of a lot of which the vendees were in possession, called first for the vendor to furnish an abstract showing title, this was a condition precedent, and until it was performed the vendees were under no obligation to make or keep good a tender. Id. Where one employed an attorney to purchase a lot and as compensation for his services he was to have conveyed to him a one-half interest in the lot on payment by him of a certain amount within a specified time and he never paid it but expended about $40 in connection with the transaction, he was not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of the lot when sold by the party for whom he purchased. Walker v. Sawyer's Estate [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 540. An oral agreement provided that a written contract should be executed on payment of the second instalment. The execution was delayed through no fault of the vendor until after the third instalment came due. Held the vendor could refuse to execute the contract until such instalment was paid. Lysne v. Hunstad [Minn.] 99 N. W. 634. Evidence held to show that there was no agreement for an extension of the time on such third payment. Id.

44. Fulenwider v. Rowan, 136 Ala. 287.

45. A bond for a title provided that the vendee should pay the purchase price in a deed excluding part, because the vendor claimed he had sold it, may compel vendor subsequently getting it in to convey the excepted part without further payment or tender.[46]

Tender of performance.—The vendor must tender a deed in order to put the vendee in default,[47] unless the purchaser has refused to perform,[48] and the purchaser should tender performance[49] unless the vendor has repudiated the contract[50] or has extended the time of performance;[51] but a mere expression of willingness to perform is sufficient,[52] coupled with a condition that vendor perform his part.[53] Offer of an insufficient deed is a refusal of the tender.[54]

The purchaser need not tender payments not yet due.[55] Tenders of the purchase price sufficient in amount and properly made stop the running of interest.[56]

If action is begun tender thereafter is bad.[57]

The deed need not embody conditions collateral to the contract of sale,[58] and need not be delivered until the contract is entirely performed.[59] The contract may require conveyance on payment before the due day.[60] work to be performed on a mill. The mill was abandoned but the vendor had him do some work on a dwelling house. Held the vendee was entitled to a deed on payment of the purchase price in cash less the value on the house. McGuire v. Whitt [Ky.] 80 S. W. 474.

46. Guthrie v. Martin, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 385.

47. Glos v. Wilson, 198 Ill. 44, 64 N. E. 734; Evans v. Jacobitz, 67 Kan. 249, 72 Pac. 848. A contract to convey land or to see that a third person conveys it is not performed by an indorsement by the third person on the deed to him that he conveys the property. Joines v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 487. Where all payments on an instalment contract are due, the vendor may recover all but the last without a tender. Gray v. Meek, 199 Ill. 136, 64 N. E. 1020.

48. Vendee made known to the vendor his determination not to perform the contract. Moore v. Galupo [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 628.

E. 699; Harris v. Greenleaf [Ky.] 79 S. W. 267. The money need not be paid into court. Murray v. Nickerson, 90 Minn. 197, 95 N. W. 898. But failure to make only affects the question of costs. Murray v. Harbor & Suburban B. & S. Ass'n, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 397. Where the conveyance is not to be made until the balance of the purchase money is paid, the vendee, in order to recover the money paid, in the absence of a provision in the agreement for the return of the money, under other circumstances must show that he paid or tendered the balance, except in case of rescission by consent. Leach v. Rowley, 138 Cal. 709, 72 Pac. 403. A tender of a check by the vendee, and on refusal thereof, of cash, on the day of performance, entitles him to a conveyance by the vendor. Watkins v. Youll [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1042. Where a purchaser agrees to assume a certain incumbrance, a tender of a deed for execution, running to a third person, and merely reciting that it is made "subject to a certain deed of trust," is not such a tender of performance as will support an action for breach of the contract to convey against the vendor. Burns v. Freling, 98 Mo. App. 267, 71 S. W. 1128.

50. Vendor repudiates contract from the beginning, and the vendee is ready and willing to perform. Tobin v. Larkin, 183 Mass. 389, 67 N. E. 340. Where the vendee is to give a mortgage back upon receiving a deed, if the vendor refuses to give the deed, there need be no tender of the mortgage. Kepler v. Wright, 31 Ind. App. 512, 68 N. E. 618.

51. Where the vendee has paid part of the purchase money and has tendered the balance, which the vendor refuses to receive until an injunction is removed but promises to let the vendee know when it is removed, the vendee is absolved from further tender until he receives information from the vendor. Harriman v. Tyndale, 184 Mass. 534, 69 N. E. 353. Where the parties agree to advance the day of performance fixed in the contract, and the vendor cannot then perform, the vendee owes no duty to make tender of performance on the day originally agreed upon. Daly v. Bruen, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 263.

52. Harris v. Greenleaf [Ky.] 79 S. W. 267. Facts held to show that a lessee having an option to purchase had properly exercised the same, though he had not succeeded in his attempts to make an actual tender. Sizer v. Clark, 116 Wis. 534, 93 N. W. 539.

53. Maris v. Masters, 31 Ind. App. 235, 67 N. E. 699.

54. Where the vendee tenders the money and the vendor offers a deed not sufficient to convey a fee simple, it is a refusal of the tender. Latimer v. Capay Val. Land Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 Pac. 82.

55. To entitle an obligee in such a bond to receive a conveyance, he need only pay or tender the amount of the principal and accrued interest at date of tender. Handy v. Rice, 98 Me. 504.

57. Hutchinson v. Coonley [Ill.] 70 N. E. 686.

58. A contract to convey land and to sign a petition for a dramshop license for the vendee is not broken by the vendor's refusal to put a condition in the deed about the dramshop, it being merely personal. Reitz v. Lotz, 102 Mo. App. 672, 77 S. W. 145.

59. In an instalment contract where no time is fixed for delivery of the deed the vendee is not entitled to a deed until the

§ 8. Rescission and reformation.—Right to rescind rests upon the same general rules as in the case of other contracts.[61] The right exists in case of a mutual mistake,[62] inability of the vendor to perform,[63] or for default,[64] or for failure of title;[65] but if title was warranted, there can be no rescission except in the case of actual fraud or insolvency of the warrantor.[66]

Where there is actual fraud, the purchaser may rescind or sue for damages.[67] The representation must be as to a present fact,[68] but where the parties were in fiduciary relations misrepresentations of law were held fraudulent.[69] It need not be false to the knowledge of the vendor if he ought to have known it,[70] but mere expressions of opinion, though false, are not enough.[71] Where the vendee last payment is made. Gray v. Meek, 199 Ill. 136, 64 N. E. 1020.

60. A clause in a bond for a deed giving dates of the maturity of notes to be paid by the obligee to entitle him to a conveyance is not repugnant to a later clause requiring the obligor to convey on payment of the sum agreed upon "before or at the time the same shall become due." Handy v. Rice, 98 Me. 504.

61. See Contracts, 1 Curr. Law, p. 626, and the various topics dealing with contractual capacity. Allowed where vendor was intoxicated when the contract was made. Moetzel v. Koch [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1079. Refused where no advantage was taken of insane vendor. Scott v. Hay, 90 Minn. 304, 97 N. W. 106. Evidence held to show vendor sane. Eades v. Owens, 24 Ky. L. R. 2328, 74 S. W. 186. The vendor in a contract to convey land cannot without cause repudiate the contract without the consent of the vendee. Rodman v. Robinson [N. C.] 47 S. E. 19.

62. Rhodes v. Stone, 25 Ky. L. R. 921, 76 S. W. 533. When a misdescription so far affects the subject-matter that it may reasonably be supposed that but for such misdescription the contract would not have been made, the vendee may avoid the contract at his election. 63. Burke v. Schreiber, 183 Mass. 35, 66 N. E. 411. Cancellation decreed at suit of vendee under a contract by which vendee's payments could be forfeited where vendor had put it out of his power to perform. Newcomb v. Ogden Plow Co., 120 Iowa, 570, 95 N. W. 174. Rescission denied where facts showed performance by defendant. Johnson v. Cressey [S. D.] 94 N. W. 703.

64. See ante, § 6. Agreement to sell real estate, one-half the price to be paid on a certain day and the balance in one year therefrom, and on failure to make payments the agreement to be void, gives the vendor a right to the cancellation of the contract on failure to pay the first instalment. Jeffrey v. Pennsylvania Min. Co., 204 Pa. 213. Evidence held to show that the vendor had not canceled a contract for alleged defaults of the vendee. Buchholz v. Leadbetter, 11 N. D. 473, 92 N. W. 830.

Rescission granted: Where the vendee bought on the representation that the land abutted on a street dedicated to the public which was not the fact. Cleveland v. Bergen Bldg. & Imp. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 117. Where false representations were made by vendor as to quality, presence of timber, etc., and vendee was in another state and did not view the land. Sykes v. Reiher [Iowa] 91 N. W. 920. On the ground of fraud where vendee's agent represented that he was buying for a head of a family seeking a home, when in fact he was acting for the Roman Catholic Archbishop. Thompson v. Barry, 184 Mass. 429, 68 N. E. 674. Setting aside of sale for lesion beyond moiety under the Civil Law. Maynard v. Laporte, 109 La. 101; Bonnette v. Wise, 111 La. 855; Linkswiler v. Hoffman, 109 La. 948; Smart v. Bibbins, 109 La. 986. Rescission refused as no false representations. Denman v. Mentz, 63 N. J. Eq. 613; Muir v. Pratt [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 896.

Fraud as to third person: Where the vendee assigns his contract to the plaintiff to secure a debt and afterwards the vendee obtains possession of it and burns it at the suggestion of the vendor who has knowledge of the plaintiff's claim and takes a new contract, the vendor is liable to the plaintiff for the amount of the debt due the plaintiff from the vendee. Louis C. Mittlestadt & Co. v. Gannon [Neb.] 95 N. W. 479. That the purchaser continued in possession of a saloon, and secured a renewal of the license while an action to rescind the contract of sale was pending and for eleven months after discovery of the fraud, was held no bar to relief in the suit to rescind on the ground of fraud. Keefuss v. Wellmunster, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 306. Where one sustaining a fiduciary relation contracted to purchase land of his client and sent to her his note, and a contract of sale to be executed but which was never executed, when the client sought to avoid the sale for fraud a tender of the note in open court and a waiver of any claim thereon, entered of record, constituted a sufficient rescission. Schneider v. Schneider [Iowa] 98 N. W. 159.

is induced to purchase by the false representations of the vendor, he must disaffirm within a reasonable time after learning the truth or he will be deemed to have waived his rights.[72] The right is waived by insistence on performance.[73] The vendee cannot rescind on the ground of failure of title when a good title is procured and tendered within a reasonable time by the vendor, the vendee having acquiesced in the delay.[74] A tardy tender is no defense.[75] A nonconsenting coowner may affirm by accepting benefits.[76]

In Louisiana, a vendor may demand rescission of the contract if the realty is worth more than twice the price paid.[77] In such case the vendee may either restore the property or make up the just price, and is entitled to the value of improvements made by him.[78]

Where the contract is executed, there can be no rescission without a return of, or an offer to return, everything of value received.[79] Tender of the price paid is not a condition precedent to relief in an action for lesion beyond moiety.[80]

Rescission may be by consent,[81] and may be implied from conduct,[82] or the right may be reserved in the contract.[83]

Silence of one party for two years will be

Exercise of right.—The right to rescind must be exercised within a reasonable time.[84] In case of fraud, there is no laches if the period of limitation applicable has not elapsed.[85] The rescission must be absolute,[86] and the person asking for it must not be in default.[87] It may be exercised by parol,[88] and if founded on a specific ground, it cannot thereafter be supported by proof of a wholly different one.[89] Before a vendor can cancel the contract for noncompliance with its terms by the vendee, he must proceed promptly on the default to declare his election to cancel or he will be deemed to have waived his right.[90]

Reformation.—A contract for sale of land will not be reformed unless the evidence of intention is clear;[91] nor has equity jurisdiction of a bill to construe a written contract and give damages for its breach where there is no allegation of fraud or mistake or prayer for a reformation.[92] A vendor is presumed to know the contents of a contract which he signs, and misdescription therein will not be reformed save for actual fraud or mistake.[93]

§ 9. *Adjustment of rights after conveyance or rescission of contract. deficiency.[95] A claim for compensation for deficiency is subject to the statute of limitations.[96]

Partial failure of title entitles purchaser to a pro rata recovery of the purchase price;[97] but he cannot be compelled to take such title with such compensation instead of the title he contracted for.[98] In an action by the vendee for false representations in the sale of land, the measure of damages is the difference in value between the land as it was and what it would have been worth if as represented.[99]

Rescission bars all rights under the original contract.[1] The vendee on failure of the vendor to carry out his contract may recover the purchase money,[2] and taxes paid on the land,[3] and may recover interest unless he has had possession of the land.[4] Where vendee is in default, he may on rescission by consent recover the purchase price less damages to the vendor.[5] The purchaser on rescission has a lien for his purchase money.[6] The vendee may recover for improvements,[7] unless he made such knowing he would rescind.[8] The cause of action to recover back the purchase price of land accrues when the money is paid.[9]

6. Upon rescission by the vendee, the purchase money paid by him will be decreed a lien on the property, notwithstanding mortgages have been foreclosed which the vendee was to have paid, provided the vendor has notice in time to protect himself. Cleveland v. Bergen Bldg. & Imp. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 117.

7. Where the vendee makes improvements and the vendor cannot give title, the vendee may rescind and recover the value of such improvements, and such right passes to his assignee. Latimer v. Capay Val. Land Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 Pac. 82. Where the vendee has taken possession and made improvements and the vendor cannot perform, the latter cannot recover possession of the land without restoring to the vendee the value of the improvements. Crouch v. Nast, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 492. Where the vendee builds a house on the land and afterwards rescinds on the ground of fraud, he may move away the house. Cutter v. Wait, 131 Mich. 508, 91 N. W. 753.

8. Improvements made by vendee cannot be allowed if when made he knew or should have known that he would rescind. Neely v. Rembert [Ark.] 71 S. W. 259.

9. Vendor had no title but acted in good faith. Barden v. Stickney, 132 N. C. 416.

10. The purchaser of government land sold the same to plaintiff before final payment therefor had been made, plaintiff taking subject thereto. The vendor claimed a rebate from the government on the purchase price and agreed that plaintiff should receive one-half of any sum so remitted, and executed a mortgage to him to that effect. Held to be a valid and enforceable contract though the time when such rebate should be made was uncertain and to entitle plaintiffs to one-half the amount remitted by the gov-

date is not broken because previous to the making of the agreement the vendor had remitted rents due from tenants after the date set.[11]

Contract to repurchase.—The purpose of such contract is to indemnify the vendee against loss and the vendor is liable only for such loss as he has actually sustained.[12] Under an agreement to repurchase land if the vendee is unable to sell it within a certain specified time, he has a reasonable time after the expiration of such period in which to elect to enforce it.[13] What is a reasonable time is ordinarily a question for the jury,[14] as is the question of reasonable efforts on the part of the vendee to sell.[15]

§ 10. Enforcement generally.—A vendee in possession under an executory contract to convey may, upon default of the vendor, sue for damages or have specific performance.[16] A vendor in an executory contract of sale, who retains legal title to the premises, may have strict foreclosure against a vendee who has made default in payments.[17] The remedy for a vendee's failure to perform a contract for the sale of land is an action for damages; an action for the purchase price will not lie.[18] An election to recover land may be made after suing where the purchaser has put in a defense of limitations to the price.[19]

The vendee is not bound to bring an action at law for damages for breach of the contract, but may sue for specific performance.[20] A vendee of land, the title to which is in the United States, need not await eviction, but may at once abandon possession and bring action for breach of warranty and recover the purchase price.[21] But such vendee cannot retain possession, secretly perfect title in himself, and then recover the purchase price from his vendor, retaining improvements made by the vendor.[22] A vendee may recover damages for fraudulent misrepresentations as to number of acres conveyed without rescinding the contract.[23] In Louisiana, one cannot recover price if he knew the defects, nor sue for eviction if he acquired title.[24] He may sue before time for performance has expired, where the vendor has made it impossible to perform.[25] ernment before the final payment to it was due. Gumaer v. Day [Neb.] 93 N. W. 933.

11. In an action for a breach of an agreement in a contract for the sale of a house that rent of tenants shall be adjusted as of June 1, 1901, the plaintiff must prove that rent is actually due. No breach, if vendor agreed with the tenants in May that no rent for June and July should be charged, the vendor not being guilty of misrepresentation. Lester v. Lawton, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 772.

12. If he has sold or disposed of part of the property and so lessened his loss, the vendor is only bound to indemnify him as to the balance. Maier v. Rebstock, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 587.

13. Maier v. Rebstock, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 587. Letters of the purchaser's brother to the vendor with reference to the land and vendor's offer to him to take back the land were admissible against the purchaser, in an action to recover the purchase price under an agreement to repurchase, the brother having acquired an interest in the land. Id.

14. Five years unreasonable as a matter of law unless the vendor has acquiesced in the delay. Maier v. Rebstock, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 587. Whether the vendor acquiesced in any delay in reconveying the land after the expiration of such time is for the jury. Id.

18. A contract for the sale of a farm was so unequal that it could not be specifically enforced. Goodwine v. Kelley [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 832.

19. Where a vendor sued to recover on a note given for the purchase price, and to foreclose a vendor's lien, and defendant pleaded limitations, the vendor could elect to sue for the land, and his right of recovery could be defeated only by the purchaser paying the balance of the purchase price represented by the note. 24. The vendee cannot sue for failure of title under Code La. art. 2505, if he has full knowledge of the defects, nor for an eviction if he subsequently obtained a patent from the United States. Ellis v. John Crossley & Sons, 119 Fed. 779.

25. Vendor had repudiated the contract

The measure of damages on default is the value of the land[26] in arriving at which some courts hold that the purchase price which was to have been paid is controlling,[27] or is at least prima facie evidence;[28] but in other jurisdictions the complaining party is given the benefit of any rise in the market value,[29] provided the contract was in writing, for if not, the loss of the bargain is not included and only money paid as consideration and expenses is recoverable.[30] Amounts expended in examination of title cannot be recovered back.[31] The measure of damages for breach of warranty, where vendee remains in possession and perfects title in himself, is the expense of protecting his possession and perfecting title and other damages resulting from the breach.[32] To prove value of land, it may be shown how it was used and its condition.[33]

Amounts payable for options, reckoned by the number of acres, means actual acres if description is by metes and bounds.[34]

The price may be recovered by instalments if it is so payable,[35] and if so provided, he may declare all of them due for default of one and sue at once.[36] A total or partial failure of title may be set up in an action for the purchase price, and where the vendee has paid off an incumbrance, that amount may be set off against the purchase-money notes sued upon.[37] In an action on a purchase-money note, the vendee cannot defend upon the ground of false representations, though these might entitle him to rescind;[38] but fraud may be shown to reduce the price[39] or breach of covenant in the deed may be recouped.[40] He may counterclaim for fraud.[41] and placed himself in such a position that he could not carry it out without the aid of the court. Payne v. Melton [S. C.] 45 S. E. 154; Guthell v. Gilmer [Utah] 76 Pac. 628.

26. Krepp v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 99 Mo. App. 94, 72 S. W. 479. The measure of damages in a vendor's action for the vendee's breach of a contract is the difference between the price fixed in the contract and the fair cash value at the time of the breach. The purchase price is not recoverable. Goodwine v. Kelley [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 832.

27. Stuart v. Pennis, 100 Va. 612.

28. Where the vendor was to receive part money and part land and the vendee refused to convey the land, the measure of damages is the value of the land so refused, and the value stated in the contract is prima facie evidence thereof. Humphreys v. Shellenberger, 89 Minn. 327, 94 N. W. 1083. But see Middleworth v. Lowery, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 418, where evidence of value was held inadmissible under pleading setting forth damage from loss of opportunity to resell.

31. Executors as such are not liable to one who agreed to buy from them, for the amount spent by him in examination of title, where the title is defective and the vendee sues for damages. Carideo v. Austin, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 35.

32. Holloway v. Miller [Miss.] 36 So. 531.

33. In an action against the assignee of a contract for the purchase of land, evidence that the assignee took possession of the land and removed machinery and what the land was used for was admissible. Baltes Land, S. & O. Co. v. Sutton [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 179. In an action on a contract for sale of land and machinery, evidence of what machinery and fixtures were on the land was harmless error. Id.

34. Where one agrees to pay for an option four per cent of the purchase price, fixed at $25 per acre and describing the tract by metes and bounds, and stating that it contains 410 acres, the measure of liability is to be determined by the actual acreage and not by the number of paper acres. Warden v. Tesla, 87 N. Y. Supp. 853.

35. Where instalments of money are provided for, suit may be brought for them as they accrue. Colwell v. Fulton, 117 Fed. 931.

36. In an instalment contract containing a provision for forfeiture upon nonpayment at the option of the vendee, the vendor may waive the forfeiture and sue for the unpaid instalments, any time before the statute of limitations has run. North Stockton Town Lot Co. v. Fischer, 138 Cal. 100, 70 Pac. 1082.

37. Dahl v. Stakke [N. D.] 96 N. W. 353. A conveyance of "all one's right, title and interest in a leasehold" without warranty; there could be no abatement of purchase price on partial failure of the consideration. Scott v. Slaughter [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 643.

39. But a vendee who is induced by fraudulent misrepresentations to pay more than he otherwise would for land is entitled to an abatement of the purchase price. Ludwick v. Petrie [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 280.

40. Where the vendor agrees to give a good title and the vendee accepts the deed, he is remitted to the covenants in the deed and in an action for the purchase price may set up a breach of a covenant against en-

Overpayments may be recovered back.[42] If the suit is in equity, it may retain it and do complete justice.[43]

Pleading and proof.—As in other contracts, plaintiff must allege performance.[44] In an action for the purchase price, failure by the vendor to perform conditions are matters of defense and cannot be taken advantage of by general demurrer.[45] Where the suit is for breach, the recovery cannot be for money paid on the price.[46]

Performance or tender of performance or facts excusing performance or tender must be proved,[47] and is not admitted by a general denial and allegations of excuse for nonperformance by the other party.[48] A purchaser who gives a note and receives a deed has the burden of showing, when sued on the note, that the sale was upon a condition which has not been fulfilled.[49] Parol evidence is admissible to show the real consideration.[50] A deed is not conclusive, when it appears that the consideration was computed on a mutual mistake as to the quantity of land conveyed.[51] Evidence of value is inadmissible under averments of loss of resale at a fixed price.[52] Whether a plaintiff suing for earnest money himself broke the contract is for the jury.[53]

Possession will be awarded under a statutory proceeding only in strict accord with the procedure fixed.[54]

§ 11. Vendor's lien. A. Implied.—Generally, the vendor of real estate has an implied lien thereon for the unpaid purchase money against the vendee and those who take with notice,[55] though the contract to convey was oral,[56] and though cumbrances by way of counterclaim. Thurgood v. Spring, 139 Cal. 596, 73 Pac. 456.

42. Where a contract provided that the price should be $50 per acre and such contract was not merged in the deed which recited a sale for a lump sum, the vendee could recover an overpayment made by reason of a mutual mistake as to the quantity of land conveyed. Butt v. Smith [Wis.] 99 N. W. 328.

43. Where a vendor brought a suit to recover the balance of the purchase price and to foreclose a vendor's lien therefor, and a demurrer to the complaint was sustained because of the defective description of the land the court had jurisdiction to render judgment for the vendee on a counterclaim for earnest money. Cammack v. Prather [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 354. Though specific performance be refused in a suit therefor, a court of equity will retain jurisdiction where the purchaser has paid part of the purchase price, order an accounting and adjust the rights of the parties. McAllister v. Harman, 101 Va. 17.

44. The plaintiff must allege the performance of conditions precedent. Collins v. Amiss, 159 Ind. 593, 65 N. E. 906.

45. Gummer v. Mairs, 140 Cal. 535, 74 Pac. 26.

46. Where the pleadings in an action by the purchasers were on the basis of an affirmance of the contract and damages for its breach, on failing to establish the breach, they were not entitled to recover a note given in part payment. Marcus v. Clark [Mass.] 70 N. E. 433.

47. Newberry v. Ruffin [Va.] 45 S. E. 733; Fisher v. Buchanan [Neb.] 96 N. W. 339.

48. In an action for breach of a contract to convey where the complaint alleges full performance by the vendee, the plaintiff must prove his performance, though the vendor in his answer makes a general denial, and sets up inability to perform because he cannot get the title. Burns v. Freling, 98 Mo. App. 267, 71 S. W. 1128.

49. Rose v. Ware, 24 Ky. L. R. 2321, 74 S. W. 188.

50. That it was different from that expressed in the deed. Butt v. Smith [Wis.] 99 N. W. 328.

51. Butt v. Smith [Wis.] 99 N. W. 328.

52. In an action by the vendee for damages for a breach alleging as damages the difference between the contract price and the price for which he had agreed to sell to a third person, evidence of value is inadmissible. Middleworth v. Lowery, 39 App. Div. [N. Y.] 418.

53. Alexander v. Von Koehring [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 629.

54. In Michigan, judgment must state amount, and writ of restitution cannot issue for vendor if amount and double costs be paid within five days. Lambton Loan & Inv. Co. v. Adams [Mich.] 93 N. W. 877.

55. Brown v. White [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 273; Mulky v. Karsell, 31 Ind. App. 595, 68 N. E. 689; Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505. Vendor delivered possession on vendee's promise to make such annual payments as she could. Hubbell v. Henrickson, 175 N. Y. 175, 67 N. E. 302. Vendor's privilege under the civil law. Swoop v. St. Martin, 110 La. 237; American Homestead Co. v. Karstendiek, 111 La. 884. The grantee of an unrecorded deed executed a trust deed to secure the purchase-money notes without referring to them otherwise than as ordinary notes. Held, the trust deed was not notice to a purchaser from the vendor. Hart v. Gardner, 81 Miss. 650. It attaches to land received in exchange as well as where money a conveyance to the purchaser is not made;[57] and it does not depend upon the transfer of a perfect legal title,[58] nor upon surrender of possession to the purchaser;[59] but does not attach where vendor remained in possession and committed waste.[60] The lien exists only on a sale of land and not on a sale of that which is to become a fixture.[61] The right to enforce the lien exists even where there is a remedy at law.[62]

Nature.—The lien is not an interest in land.[63] The parties are considered each the trustee for the other.[64]

Waiver.—The vendor may be estopped to claim his lien,[65] and it is waived by taking other security,[66] but merely taking a purchase-money note is not a waiver.[67] The lien may be enforced even after an unsuccessful suit by the plaintiff to cancel the contract and deed on the ground of fraud.[68]

Priority.—The lien is superior to that of a mortgagee with notice,[69] and has priority over assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency or an assignee for the benefit of creditors;[70] and over a receiver.[71]

Payment[72] and enforcement.—A purchaser of a note given as part payment for land may enforce the vendor's lien against the land for the balance of the purchase money.[73] The sale should be in the inverse order of alienation where a whole tract subject to lien is transferred in parcels.[74] On appeal, the purchaser is not liable on his supersedeas bond for occupation during extension of time by the court.[75] The lien should be satisfied out of a refunding bond and not by sale of the land.[76] is to be paid. Johnson v. Burks [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 133.

In Pennsylvania the vendor does not have any lien distinct from his legal title. In re Clark, 118 Fed. 358.

59. The lien may be implied even when the vendor remains in possession. Johnson v. McKinnon [Fla.] 34 So. 272.

60. Vendor in possession allowed estate to depreciate and omitted to pay taxes. Johnson v. McKinnon [Fla.] 34 So. 272.

61. Vendors, under a contract for the sale of fruit trees providing that they should be entitled to certain fruit crops to be raised on trees selected by them, acquired thereby no lien on the land on which the trees sold were planted. Butler v. Stark [Ky.] 79 S. W. 204.

62. The purchaser was solvent and the deed contained a covenant of warranty. Johnson v. Burks [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 133.

63. But is a right to demand the use of equity jurisdiction to enable the vendor to acquire an interest. Halvorsen v. Halvorsen [Wis.] 97 N. W. 494.

64. The vendor is a trustee of the land for the vendee upon payment of the purchase money and the vendee a trustee of the purchase money for the vendor, hence the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the trust relation is determined. Williams v. Young [Ark.] 71 S. W. 669; Forthman v. Deters, 206 Ill. 159, 69 N. E. 97.

65. Holder of lien present at sale told purchaser's grantee he would not look to him for payment, and refused payments offered by such grantee. North v. Rogers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1542, 78 S. W. 165.

71. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 393.

72. Evidence held to show payment in full by vendee. Yancey v. People's Bank, 101 Mo. App. 605, 74 S. W. 117.

73. But if he takes after maturity, it is subject to every defense to which it was subject in the hands of the payee. Williams v. Baker, 100 Mo. App. 284, 73 S. W. 339. In Georgia, by statute, the assignee or holder of a note given for the purchase money of land may in appropriate proceedings, subject the land to his debt [Civ. Code 1895, § 5432]. Ray v. Anderson [Ga.] 47 S. E. 205.

74. But a complaint in an action to foreclose the lien on one of the parcels is not demurrable because it does not show that such parcel was the last one sold. Diamond Flint Glass Co. v. Boyd, 30 Ind. App. 485, 66 N. E. 479.

75. The vendor foreclosed a contract for the sale of land and the vendee was given by the court until a certain day to complete his payments or deliver possession. On appeal the court extended the time. Held, the vendee was not liable prior to the extended date on his supersedeas bond conditioned to pay for use and occupation from the time of his appeal until the delivery of possession. Buckley v. Crane [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 29.

76. Where part of land subject to a ven-

(§ 11) B. Express lien.—A lien may be created by the agreement of the parties,[77] and may be retained for the benefit of a third person.[78]

Nature.—The lien is in effect a mortgage,[79] and the purchaser's grantee occupies a position similar to one taking subject to a mortgage.[80]

Waiver.—A lien expressly reserved is not waived by taking security.[81]

Priority.—The lien prevails over subsequent mortgagees[82] or purchasers who take with notice,[83] and over a subsequent mechanic's lien.[84]

Payment[85] and release.[86]—Release of a purchaser with no intent to release his grantee does not release the lien against such grantee.[87] One joint owner may compel contribution against the others when he has paid off the lien.[88]

Enforcement—Foreclosure.—The vendor, or his assigns, may recover back the land where the purchase price has not been paid even after the statute of limitations has run against vendor's lien notes,[89] but where there are a series of the dor's lien is sold to pay a judgment and a refunding bond is given to pay the lien if it be adjudged valid, the balance of the land should not first be sold to satisfy the lien. Vaught v. Murray, 24 Ky. L. R. 1587, 71 S. W. 924.

77. Lien reserved in deed. Foster v. Ross [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 990.

Liens reserved in the purchase-money notes are frequently met with. It will be seen that most of the liens hereinafter discussed are of this character.

Purchase-money mortgages, see Mortgages, 2 Curr. Law, p. 905; Foreclosure of Mortgages on Land, 2 Curr. Law, p. 14. A vendee who has given an absolute bond and mortgage to secure deferred payments cannot show by parol evidence an agreement that the bond was conditional on clearing a defect in title, unless he would not have purchased but for such agreement. Stewart v. N. Y. & C. Gas Coal Co., 207 Pa. 220.

78. And is enforceable by him as between him and the vendee, and against anyone with notice. Hurst v. Hurst, 25 Ky. L. R. 714, 76 S. W. 325.

79. Wade v. Bent, 24 Ky. L. R. 1294, 71 S. W. 444.

80. The grantee of land subject to a reserved vendor's lien is in the same position as if it were subject to a mortgage, and as to the land, and to the extent of its value he stands in the relation of principal debtor and his grantor in that of surety. Wade v. Bent, 24 Ky. L. R. 1294, 71 S. W. 444; Fox v. Robbins [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 597.

81. Nixon v. Knollenberg, 92 Mo. App. 20.

82. Hall's Adm'r v. Hall's Adm'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 2317, 73 S. W. 1120. Where a contract to sell land may be recorded, a bond for title taken by the vendee will not prevail over a subsequent mortgage, unless the contract is recorded. Hurst v. Hurst, 25 Ky. L. R. 714, 76 S. W. 325. The holder of a junior lien cannot prevail over a vendor's lien reserved in a deed where the note is assigned and unrecorded unless he can show that he is a purchaser for value without notice and the burden is upon him, in an action on the original notes. King v. Quincy Nat. Bank, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 92, 69 S. W. 978.

83. A purchaser from a vendee who buys subject to an express vendor's lien is bound by the lien shown on the records. Malone's Committee v. Lebus, 25 Ky. L. R. 1146, 77 S. W. 180.

84. For permanent improvements placed on the land and which become part of the realty. Watson v. Markham [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 660.

85. Evidence held to show lien had been paid. Barbour v. Huber's Ex'r [Ky.] 78 S. W. 869; Fellows v. King [Ky.] 78 S. W. 468. Evidence held to show payment of notes given in part payment of purchase money. Morris v. Hill, 25 Ky. L. R. 252, 74 S. W. 1043. The vendee paid part of the purchase price, gave vendor's lien notes for the balance, and received a deed. He afterwards conveyed the land to a third person, and subsequently paid the notes. Held, that his grantee took full title and not merely title to such proportion as the vendee's original payment bears to the whole purchase money. The purchaser by paying the notes acquired no rights against his grantee. Ford v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 353.

86. A guardian who sells his ward's estate taking purchase money notes therefor cannot surrender the notes to the vendee at a discount without authority from the probate court, and if the guardian converts the amount paid to his own use the vendee is still liable. Brown v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 944.

87. Where vendor reserved a lien and the vendee sells to A who assumes the note and gives another note which is assigned to plaintiff, and the vendor afterwards filed a release acknowledging payment in full and took new notes with a lien from A, intending to relieve the first purchaser but not intending to waive the lien, held this did not amount to a release giving plaintiff's lien priority. Maas v. Tacquard's Ex'rs [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 350. Evidence held to show that two of a series of notes had not been paid and were equal liens with the rest of the series. Morris v. Hill, 25 Ky. L. R. 252, 74 S. W. 1043.

88. A money judgment may be rendered against them. Wilkerson v. Bacon [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 348.

89. Sanders v. Rawlings [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 41. Where plaintiff has bought in the superior title from the vendor, he may recover the land though the statute of limitations has run against the vendor's lien note held by him, the note never having been paid. Finks v. Abeel [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 650.

notes, he cannot rescind in part and foreclose on those not barred.[90] All lien holders should be made parties defendant,[91] but purchasers from the vendee before suit brought are not necessary parties,[92] nor is the holder of an unrecorded deed.[93]

Possession of a third party claiming title is no defense.[94] A purchaser from the vendee may set up a breach of warranty of title when sued on the purchase money notes.[95] The bona fide purchaser of vendor's lien notes takes same clear of defenses.[96] A lien reserved in a deed as security for the payment of the purchase-money notes is analogous to a mortgage and passes with a transfer of the notes.[97] The description must be sufficient to identify the land,[98] and there must be no variance.[99] The burden is on plaintiff to show amount due.[100] Judgment with stay until incumbrances are removed is proper.[101] The purchaser who buys on foreclosure of an outstanding incumbrance occupies no different position as respects the vendor's lien notes than had the incumbrance been paid by a third party.[102] A sale is usually directed.[103] The market value determines the fairness of the sale.[104] Surplus after sale belongs to the vendee.[105] The surety on

90. Where one of a series of vendor's lien notes is barred by limitations, the plaintiff cannot rescind as to the proportion of land covered by that note, and foreclose as to the balance, but must elect to rescind in toto and recover the land or else sue on the unbarred notes. Wilkerson v. Bacon [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 348.

91. Under Civ. Code Ky. § 694, subsec. 3. Leonard v. Welch, 25 Ky. L. R. 692, 76 S. W. 338.

The various holders of a series of vendor's lien notes should be made parties defendant or they are not precluded by the decree. Soule v. Ratcliff [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 583.

92. Talbot v. Roe, 171 Mo. 421, 71 S. W. 682.

93. Her remedy is not against the vendor but against her grantor on the warranties in her deed. Friend v. Means, 25 Ky. L. R. 1540, 78 S. W. 164.

94. It is no defense to an action on a vendor's lien that part of the land is in the possession of a third person claiming under a superior title, without showing actual adverse possession when the vendee took his deed or that the superior title has been adjudicated. Jett v. Farmers' Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 817, 76 S. W. 385.

95. Williams v. Baker, 100 Mo. App. 284, 73 S. W. 339. In an action on vendor's lien notes the plaintiff cannot recover unless he shows that the title was good, if recovery on the notes was expressly made dependent on the validity of the title. Zimmermann v. Owen [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 971.

96. Evidence held to show that the purchaser did not take in good faith and held insufficient to estop payee from claiming land was homestead. Lybrand v. Fuller, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 69 S. W. 1005. Where a series of notes is given, each providing that failure to pay one shall mature them all, a person who takes them when one is overdue takes them with notice of defenses as to all. Id. Indorsee of a purchase-money note allowed to rely on statement of vendor's attorney that the sale was bona fide. Cochran v. Siegfried [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 542. Where husband and wife sell land taking vendor's lien notes therefor with no recital that the land is her separate property, the wife cannot set up her claim as against a purchaser from a pledgee of the husband. Ramey v. Eskridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 763.

97. Smith v. Butler [Ark.] 80 S. W. 580. A lien was reserved in a deed to secure payment of several purchase-money notes which were assigned to different persons; they were entitled to participate ratably in the proceeds of the sale if there was not enough to pay all. Id.

98. Description held sufficient which was adopted from the deed and though somewhat vague could be made certain. Tichenor v. Wood, 24 Ky. L. R. 1109, 70 S. W. 837.

99. Description in pleading "being all of abstract No. 96, cert. 1-108, grantee B. S. & F., containing 640 acres." Plaintiff introduced records "to show sale and transfer of section No. 69 cert. No. 1-104 original grantee B. S. & F., Blk. K. 7 Deaf Smith County." Variance held fatal. Wagley v. Western Union Land Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1065.

100. The burden is on plaintiff, in an action to foreclose a lien, to show the amount due, where the notes were fraudulently made without consideration, to raise money, with a homestead as security. Harbers v. Levy [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 261.

101. In a suit on purchase-money notes and to foreclose a vendor's lien it appeared that after the notes were due an outstanding deed of trust was discovered. Held, that judgment on the notes with a stay of execution until the release of the deed is proper. McLean v. Connerton [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 238.

102. Heard v. Thrasher, 96 Tex. 380, 73 S. W. 893.

103. In an action to enforce a lien against a purchaser who assumed the debt, a sale of the land is proper. McBrayer v. Hanks' Ex'rs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1699, 72 S. W. 2. The fact that a 50 acre lot is of little value is no reason for refusing a sale to satisfy a vendor's lien, under Civ. Code Proc. § 694, subsec. 3, authorizing a sale "unless it appears the land is not susceptible of advantageous division." Haven v. Daugherty's Adm'r [Ky.] 79 S. W. 191.

104. In a suit to set aside a decree foreclosing a vendor's lien, the market value must be taken in determining the fairness of the sale and not that value plus its then the note purchasing at the foreclosure sale is a purchaser for value.[106] Title derived from the original vendor's lien notes is superior to that derived from lien notes given on a subsequent sale by the purchaser.[107]

VENUE AND PLACE OF TRIAL.

§ 1. The proper venue. A. The nature of the action is determined when it is begun from the complaint,[1] and if local and transitory causes be joined, one as principal and the other as ancillary, the former controls.[2]

(§ 1) B. Local actions; actions concerning real estate.—By the common law of England and in most of the states, an action for the recovery of damages for injury to land is local and can be brought only where the land is situated.[3] Such are actions for damages to real estate;[4] to foreclose liens and mortgages,[5] even though the mortgage note be held and is payable in another county;[6] to reclaim property on account of lesion;[7] to declare a trust in lands;[8] to set aside a deed,[9] or other instrument of title or security on land,[10] for the condemnation of lands by a city or county, though in ordinary actions the city should sue where defendant lives,[11] or actions to obtain partition of lands.[12] unknown value as oil property. Fox v. Robbins [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 597.

105. Where land is sold on foreclosure of vendor's lien notes, the excess of the proceeds over the amount due on the notes goes to the vendee or his heirs. Dodd v. Hewitt, 24 Ky. L. R. 708, 69 S. W. 955.

106. A surety on a purchase-money note after judgment against the principal, by purchasing at foreclosure sale by paying the amount of his bid and the balance of the judgment is a purchaser for value. Sullivan & Co. v. McLane, 96 Tex. 144, 70 S. W. 949.

107. Edwards v. Anderson, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 71 S. W. 555.

1. Miller v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836.

2. In an action by a surety against the principal for the debt, also to decree the application of certain paper pledged as collateral for the surety's indemnification to which ancillary process of claim and delivery was sued out against the principal, who had regained possession of the paper, the recovery by claim and delivery was not the principal cause of action. The others fixed the venue which need not have been where the paper was situated. Woodard v. Sauls [N. C.] 46 S. E. 507. Suit for injunction, ancillary to proceeding, to declare priority of liens is not one to enjoin a judgment. D. June & Co. v. Doke [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 402. Restraining foreclosure as ancillary to suit for fraud and cancellation. State v. Dearing [Mo.] 79 S. W. 454.

4. Koorie v. Wichmann [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 148.

Contra in Minnesota, as to trespass. Peyton v. Desmond [C. C. A.] 129 Fed. 1. While either party may, in an action of trespass to lands, insist upon a trial in the county where the land lies, the action may be prosecuted in any county where defendant may be found. Freud v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 131 Mich. 606, 92 N. W. 109.

5. Fields v. Daisy Gold Min. Co., 26 Utah, 373, 73 Pac. 521; Noyes v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 649.

Proceedings for a sale under a security deed do not constitute a "pending proceeding" which may be enjoined by the court of a county other than that in which the grantee resides. Meeks v. Roan, 117 Ga. 865.

6. Sherman v. Droubay [Utah] 74 Pac. 348. A third party, nonresident, having in his hands the note and mortgage, is properly brought in by publication of summons. Mack v. Austin, 67 Kan. 36, 72 Pac. 551.

7. Smart v. Bibbins, 109 La. 986.

8. On ground of fraud. Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 471, 74 Pac. 11.

9. Hunt v. Dean [Minn.] 97 N. W. 574.

10. An action by a corporation against its promoters and others for personal judgment for value of property fraudulently obtained, for damages for fraud, a cancellation of notes given in payment for land, and an injunction restraining foreclosure of a trust deed, is not an action which "may affect the title to real estate" within a statute regarding the venue of such actions. State v. Dearing [Mo.] 79 S. W. 454.

11. The provision in the code that actions by city or county against citizen of another county must on motion of defendant be transferred, refers to ordinary actions and not condemnation proceedings. City of Santa Rosa v. Fountain Water Co., 138 Cal. 579, 71 Pac. 1123, 1136.

12, 13. Murphy v. Superior Court, 138 Cal.

If the land lies in different counties, the action may be brought in any one of them.[13]

Where a cause is removed to a superior court, because title to realty is involved, defendant has not an absolute right to have "new action" transferred to the county where land lies; otherwise if originally begun above.[14]

However, an action merely for specific performance of agreement to convey land should be brought in the county of defendant's residence.[15] Similarly, a suit to cancel mortgages executed by plaintiff himself, on the ground of procurement by fraud, is transitory and not a suit to quiet title.[16] An action for damages by reason of defendant having built a canal across plaintiff's land is not one to quiet title which is local.[17]

An action to obtain permission to disinter a body from a cemetery is not necessarily triable in the county where the land lies.[18]

An action to set aside fraudulent conveyances may be begun where debtor resides, and transferee may be served at his residence in another county.[19]

Penal actions are local.[20]

(§ 1) C. Transitory actions.—Parties have usually the right to sue or be sued in the county of their residence, but the residence of parties in interest who are not parties to the record cannot be considered;[21] nor the fact that the cause of action originated elsewhere.[22]

A temporary residence does not suffice.[23] In Maryland, statute authorizes suit in the county of residence, or the county where party transacts business.[24]

The transitory nature of the action being determined when it is commenced is not so altered as to affect the venue by the filing of answer localizing the issues.[25]

"Domicile" when it means residence may be had in more than one county.[26]

In some states, a purely personal action for the recovery of money only must 69, 70 Pac. 1070; Hunt v. Dean [Minn.] 97 N. W. 574. Under a statute requiring suit to be brought "where subject of action is located," an action to enforce specific agreement to convey land is properly brought in county where some of the land is, though some be out of the state, and the action affects personal property in the county of the suit, and none of the parties resided there. 16. The fact that deeds have been recorded makes no difference. Shouse v. Taylor, 24 Ky. L. R. 1842, 72 S. W. 324.

17. Miller v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836.

18. Cohen v. Congregation Sherith Israel, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 65.

19. First Nat. Bank v. Gibson [Neb.] 94 N. W. 965. Cancellation of fraudulent mortgage. Shouse v. Taylor, 24 Ky. L. R. 1842, 72 S. W. 324.

20. Action for treble damages. Staninger v. Tabor, 103 Ill. App. 330.

21. Motion for change. Lane v. Bochlowitz, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 171.

The right to sue in plaintiff's residence pertains to one suing as trustee of an express trust. Under a statute providing for trial of actions in the county in which plaintiff or defendant or any of them resides, it was held error to remove from a county where the plaintiff, trustee of an express trust, resided. Riley v. Pelletier [N. C.] 46 S. E. 734.

22. Plaintiff was directed by defendant in one county to get goods in another county on which defendant had chattel mortgage. Having to pay a judgment for so doing, he sued defendant for reimbursement. Suit was properly brought in county where both plaintiff and defendant lived. Hoggan v. Cahoon, 26 Utah, 444, 73 Pac. 512.

23. Working for several weeks in county where he was injured while at such work does not establish a "residence" in such county under the statute relating to venue for such actions. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Cloyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 43.

24. Cromwell v. Willis, 96 Md. 260. Under Code, art. 75, § 132, authorizing one engaged in regular business or avocation to be sued in the county where his business is carried on, a nonresident who managed and received rents of his own property and also of property he owned in common with another and used an office on which his sign remained which he had used when a resident, was not within the meaning of the statute. State v. Shipley [Md.] 57 Atl. 12.

25. Miller v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836.

26. A person residing in his house in one county part of the year and on a ranch in another county the balance of the year may be sued in either county for an assault in one of them. Pearson v. West [Tex.] 77 S. W. 944. Held estopped to deny domicile, Id.

be brought in the county where the defendant or one of several defendants resides or may be summoned.[27]

In Minnesota, actions against nonresidents of the state for the recovery of money may be brought in any county of the state, and writ of attachment issued to sheriff of any other county.[28]

Contracts are sometimes made suable where they are to be performed, as a promissory note payable in a particular county;[29] but not a mortgage note, if the suit is to foreclose on land lying in a different county.[30] When such contracts are required to be in writing,[31] a parol promise in satisfaction of the contract is outside the statute.[32] A plaintiff who renders bills calling for payment in his own county does not establish a "contract in writing" specifying performance in a particular county, unless defendant in some way assents.[33] A mere promise to remit is insufficient.[34] Actions grounded on deceit in a sale may be brought in the county where the fraud was committed, and are not on a contract in writing suable where defendant resides.[35]

Causes of action in tort for personal injuries are transitory.[36] In Minnesota, an action for damages for trespass to real estate is regarded, not as relating to the real estate, but as a personal remedy, and transitory, not local in nature.[37]

Where there are several defendants, the court cannot acquire jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant, when the resident defendant is not liable,[38] or when no substantial equitable relief is asked against him.[39] Neither can a party be impleaded who has the right to be sued in another county.[40]

Where a joint liability is asserted against several defendants to maintain an action against one or more of them in a county where some do not reside, the latter are not to be held on a different and several liability even if disclosed by the pleadings and proofs.[41] If the liability be not joint, they must not be impleaded to sue where they do not reside.[42]

Principal and surety in a promissory note, being joint promisors, may be sued as such in the county of the residence of either.[43]

Distinct causes of action.—Where there are distinct causes of action that may be joined in the same suit, venue as to one of them will not confer venue as to the others.[44]

(§ 1) D. Special actions and proceedings and equitable proceedings. Divorce.—Under a statute authorizing plaintiff to bring action for divorce in the county where he resides, it is not error to refuse to transfer to county of defendant's residence.[45]

Actions for penalties.—An action to recover treble money lost in gambling is for a penalty, and should be brought in the county where gambling was done and money lost.[46]

Injunctions.—Injunctions against a pending proceeding are usually to be brought where the proceeding is pending,[47] and the execution of writs may be enjoined wherever it is to be performed.[48] To enjoin enforcement of a judgment, action should be brought in the county and court where the judgment was rendered, unless rendered in the supreme court, and not in a county where a transcript has been filed.[49] This is not always true where such injunctive relief is merely ancillary.[50]

Forfeiting recognizances.—The U. S. court in which an indictment is pending has right to forfeit recognizance if defendant fails to appear, the surety being resident of another district.[51]

(§ 1) E. Suits against corporations.—At the common law no suit against a corporation was authorized except in county where the corporate property was in whole or part situate or where it transacted a substantial part of its business, and this rule is very generally adopted by the states.[52] Suits for equitable relief should be brought in the county fixed by the charter as the principal place of business.[53]

Private corporations are allowed by many statutes to be sued in any county where they have an agency or representative.[54] A breach of warranty by a for-

48. Where proceedings in district court of Ga., on which execution was founded, were void, circuit court of U. S. for northern district of N. Y. has jurisdiction to restrain marshal of latter district from levying on property of debtor therein. Kirk v. U. S., 124 Fed. 324.

A suit for injunction to restrain an execution sale in favor of a county is returnable to the court of the county where the sheriff against whom it is directed has his domicile and not to a court within the county holding the judgment. Little v. Griffin [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 635.

49. So by statute in Iowa, a transcript of a justice court judgment to district court is there treated as a judgment of that court. Brunk v. Moulton Bank, 121 Iowa, 14, 95 N. W. 238.

50. A suit to enjoin a foreclosure suit which makes no attack on the validity of the decree but is merely ancillary to a proceeding to have plaintiff's lien declared superior to lien of plaintiff in the foreclosure suit is not within the meaning of the law requiring suits to enjoin the execution of judgments to be brought in the county of their rendition. Boyd v. Blue Ridge R. Co., 65 S. C. 326. A suit for damages to property carried over two roads lies against both roads and may be brought in any county through which either road is operated, even though one of the roads has its domicile in the state and in another county. 54. President of a corporation who has no office other than the county of his resieign corporation of a sale on order taken and approved without the state accrues in "part" where the order is taken and may be there sued.[55] Statutes providing that suits against railroad companies shall be brought in the county where the cause of action arose, if the company has an agent in such county, apply to foreign as well as domestic railroad corporations.[56]

For causes of action—damages, injuries, etc.—arising in the state, action must usually be brought in the county where the cause of action arose,[57] and defendant company cannot by silence give jurisdiction to the wrong court.[58] If injury is caused by negligence in one county and death results therefrom in another, action for death is maintainable in either county.[59]

For causes of action arising out of the state it is required in Georgia that the action be brought in the county where the charter locates the principal office.[60] In other states, the action is triable in any county where the defendant operates its road.[61] Statutes authorizing suit against either of connecting carriers in any county where either is or is operated have been recently construed.[62]

(§ 1) F. De facto counties may be the seat of venue; a de jure organization is not essential and cannot be questioned.[63]

(§ 1) G. Effect of improper venue.—A proviso in a certificate of a building association that actions by the holder must be brought only in a certain county affects the venue only and is no defense.[64]

§ 2. When change is allowable, necessary or proper.—The privilege of being sued in the county of one's residence is a mandatory cause for change,[65] if sea-

dence, and performs all his official acts there, is a "representative." Sharp v. Damon Mound Oil Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 562, 72 S. W. 1043. Suit for damages must be brought in county where injury occurred. LeCroix v. Western & A. R. Co., 118 Ga. 98. Action against railroad for malicious prosecution and imprisonment is properly brought in county through which plaintiff was transported on defendant's road after his arrest, though he was not a resident, and defendant's chief office was located elsewhere. 62. Under a statute permitting action for injury to freight or property shipped over more than one line to be brought against any or all of the owning corporations in any county where one or more of the lines are extended or operated, one of two railroad corporations sued for injury to a shipment of live stock, cannot object that suit was brought in a county where it did not have a domicile. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Murtishaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 953. This statute applies to shipments the destination of which is beyond the state boundary. Id. The statute does not authorize suit against two railroads in a county in which neither extends, but in which the road of a third company, not sued or liable, extends. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. The act does not apply to a road not engaged in transportation within the state but which only transfers freight and baggage between it and a connecting line, the engines and cars of each reciprocally passing over the state boundary in the course of such transfer. sonably claimed;[66] but it cannot be defeated by consent of other defendants to a trial in the county where action is begun, none of those defendants residing in that county.[67] While a foreign corporation waives jurisdictional defenses by appearing to urge such defenses, it does not thereby waive its privilege of being sued in the proper county.[68]

One of several defendants cannot have a cause removed without the consent of the other co-defendants,[69] nor can one party claim it for another aligned on the same side with him.[70] In Minnesota, where an action is against several defendants, residing in different counties, a majority of them may secure a change of venue.[71] Disqualifying prejudice or bias of the court,[72] or the fact that he was disqualified by having been of counsel,[73] ordinarily makes an absolute ground for a change. There is no conflict between such a provision and one authorizing appointment of a substitute judge.[74] If, however, the prejudice of the court be not such as to disqualify him, that ground is addressed to his discretion.[75] The prejudice or bias of the judge may be either in favor of the adversary or against the applicant.[76]

The convenience of parties,[77] or witnesses,[78] or local prejudice,[79] is a ground addressed to discretion.

The place of trial will not be changed for the convenience of a party to the action or a single witness; nor unless the witness' testimony is material and competent, and not obtainable from other witnesses in the county;[80] nor for the convenience of expert witnesses to prove value of attorney's services;[81] on such application, the condition of the calendar and duration of the respective terms of court will be also considered.[82] A statute providing for change of venue for local prejudice where the opposite party is a corporation having more than fifty stockholders and maintaining its principal office or place of business in the county where the action is pending, is not a denial of equal protection of laws.[83] The The right of trial by jury as it existed at common law and as secured by modern constitutions includes the right to a change of venue to secure a fair and impartial trial by the prosecution as well as by the defendant.[84]

Statutes providing for changes of venue do not apply to contempt proceedings, unless specifically included.[85] Judges of a lower court brought before a higher court on writ of certiorari have no right to a change of venue.[86] In disbarment proceedings in Indiana an attorney has the same right to change of venue from court and judge as in civil actions.[87]

A county exists de facto from the date of the governor's proclamation and cannot be attacked collaterally, on a proceeding for a change to it.[88]

On appeal from inferior to superior courts.—A cause appealed from the county court to the district court stands on the docket as any other cause in respect to right to change of venue.[89]

§ 3. Procedure for change.—The court cannot order a change of venue of its own motion, but only on motion of a party.[90] If action be brought in a different county from that stipulated, the remedy is by motion to transfer.[91]

All parties who are adverse to applicant[92] are entitled to a seasonable[93] notice which, however, is waived by appearance.[94]

The motion or application should be timely made, usually before answer or before trial.[95] The objection to the venue cannot be urged the first time on appeal.[96]

Where relationship of judge to party to the suit was disclosed on the trial, but no application made till after decision was filed, the right to change of venue was waived. Smith v. Amiss, 30 Ind. App. 530, 66 N. E. 501. When the defendant seeks a change of venue as a matter of right on the ground that the county designated in the summons and complaint is not the proper county, the motion therefor must be made at the return term, if the complaint be then filed, or if it is not, then as soon as the complaint is filed, and before answering. Riley v. Pelletier [N. C.] 46 S. E. 734. Under statutes permitting a change of venue as a matter of right in certain cases, on motion therefor before the time for answering expires, the filing of an answer without a demand for removal (Id.), or the acceptance of a special order extending the time for answering, is a waiver of the right of removal (Id.). Under Code Civ. Proc. § 890, objection that an action in a justice's court is brought in the wrong township is waived if not taken at the trial. McGorray v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, 141 Cal. 266, 74 Pac. 853.

before answering, he cannot by joining in with others whose time for answering has not expired, but who have no right to the change, obtain a transfer of the case.[97]

The filing of a general demurrer and general denial confers jurisdiction and waives all questions of venue.[98]

The right is not lost by moving to strike out parts of the complaint.[99] A motion to remove a cause must be made before a judge, and an affidavit and motion made before the clerk in vacation is invalid.[1] A motion for change of venue on the ground that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be thereby promoted may be made at any time in the progress of the cause.[2] Where a majority of several defendants residing in different counties are permitted by statute to secure a change of venue, they may secure the same by making the proper affidavit and serving a joint demand before the time for answering has expired as to any of them, or by each making a separate affidavit and demand before his time for answering expires.[3]

The affidavit must state residence as of the commencement of the action,[4] and where convenience of witnesses is sought, it must show that the testimony they will give is material,[5] or in case of local prejudice that it is detrimental to the applicant.[6] Affidavit that witnesses would testify to facts need not show that applicant talked with them and had their assurance that they would so testify.[7] Insufficiency of an affidavit is waived by a general appearance.[8]

The burden of proof is on the applicant. Thus he must show that plaintiff is not resident where he has sued.[9] Where counter-affidavits show that more witnesses reside in the county where action was brought than in the county transferred to, the order granting change is not justified.[10] Counter-affidavits may be received as to grounds which are subject to proof, time being offered for opposing affidavits.[11]

Counter-affidavits are not admissible to traverse a charge of a disqualifying interest or bias of the judge.[12]

The objection that plaintiffs are not the true parties in interest cannot be considered on a motion for change of venue.[13] The answer is not to be considered on a motion to transfer, nor proposed testimony concerning new matter in the complaint, not traversed by answer.[14]

On motion by a defendant to change to the county in which he resides, the venue of an action which has been laid in a county in which neither of the parties thereto resides, it is improper for the court to order a change of venue to the county where plaintiff resides, against defendant's objection.[15]

If change be asked on the privilege of residence, the filing of the proper affidavit as to residence and the proof of service change the place of trial ipso facto.[16]

The order granting the change need not show the ground upon which it is granted, if it is shown by the whole record. A court may, at the term at which it makes an order for a new trial, set aside the order without first passing on an application for a change of venue.[17] A transfer of a cause from one district court to another amounts to a change of venue.[18]

The clerk of the court from which change is made must transmit all papers and a transcript of proceedings to the clerk of the court to which case is transferred. The identity of the papers does not depend on the clerk's certificate, but on the fact that they were transmitted with the transcript.[19]

Mandamus will not usually lie to compel change of venue;[20] but the court must act after the proper steps are taken by the party.[21] It is the proper remedy where judge was of counsel in the case,[22] or where it is sought to have a case remanded to the first court, whence it had been illegally transferred. The second court has jurisdiction to remand.[23]

Prohibition.—Error or abuse of discretion of a district court in passing on a motion for change of venue cannot be reviewed on prohibition.[24]

§ 4. Results of change of venue.—The venue of a prosecution being changed, the second court has jurisdiction,[25] and the jurisdiction of second court having attached, the first court cannot by setting aside the order resume jurisdiction.[26] Exceptions cannot be allowed after the change, to rulings made before it;[27] but an act to be done within a time certain is good within that time, though after a change.[28] On appeal from an order changing place of trial, questions as to plaintiff's removal to the county of the suit solely for the purpose of bringing the action there are immaterial.[29]

§ 5. Wrong venue as cause of abatement.—A plea of residence of defendant in another county is a plea in abatement and must give plaintiff a better writ.[30] The facts showing that the venue is wrongly laid must be alleged in such a plea,[31] and unless the complaint shows that none of the parties reside in the county where suit is brought, the question is not raised by demurrer.[32]

VERDICTS AND FINDINGS.

Scope of title.—The present title treats of verdicts general and special and findings of fact and of law. It does not cover the procedure anterior[33] or posterior to them.[34]

§ 1. Definitions and nature.—A general verdict finds generally for one of the parties.[35] A special verdict is that by which the jury find the facts only, leaving the judgment thereon to the court.[36]

§ 2. General verdicts.—A general verdict or its equivalent is required in all cases.[37]

It should not contain special findings and they will, if not requested, be treated as surplusage, though responsive to the issues.[38] The verdict should be based upon the evidence as introduced, and errors or omissions of the court in the statement thereof should be disregarded.[39] It should be in accordance with the instructions given,[40] and must be responsive to all the material issues,[41] and not include any claim that matured after the commencement of the suit.[42] A verdict must be certain and definite.[43] It should be definite in amount, or the court may refuse to receive it,[44] and should sufficiently identify the parties against whom it is directed,[45] unless the case itself leaves no room for doubt.[46] It is the duty of the jury, and not the court to compute the interest awarded in a verdict.[47] If in a

44. A verdict "for plaintiff, the whole amount, less what was paid" is too informal and was properly returned to the jury with directions to assess the damages without further instructions. Hill Bros. v. Bank of Seneca, 100 Mo. App. 230, 73 S. W. 307. Verdict not void for uncertainty. E. R. D. Dove & Co. v. J. T. Stewart & Son, 118 Ga. 872. The verdict in a finding for plaintiff should state the amount of defendant's payments and damages. Rogers v. O'Barr & Dinwiddie [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 593.

45. A verdict against the "M., K. & T. Ry. Co." sufficiently identifies the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas to authorize entry of judgment against it. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cardwell, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 164, 70 S. W. 103.

46. A verdict "for the plaintiff," etc., which does not mention the defendant is sufficient to support a judgment against the only defendant in the case. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Holyfield [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 221; Horner v. Plumley, 97 Md. 271.

possessory action, it should describe the premises definitely.[48] A finding covering an issue not tendered by the parties is erroneous.[49]

The omission, in the form of verdict submitted to the jury, of matters not in issue, is not reversible error.[50]

The general verdict determines all material issues in its favor.[51] No presumptions against a general verdict can be indulged in,[52] but every presumption is in its favor.[53] Where a verdict is based on a count in the declaration which states a good cause of action, it is unnecessary to consider whether the other counts are sufficient.[54] The recovery of less than was sued for on special contract does not import an award on quantum meruit, full performance having become unnecessary.[55] The charge of the court may be consulted to render certain the verdict of the jury.[56] Where an amount expressed in written words in a verdict differs from the numerals, the written words control.[57]

§ 3. Special interrogatories and verdicts. When proper.—The question of the submission of special interrogatories to the jury is addressed to the discretion of the court.[58] If the answer to a special interrogatory most favorable in form to the party offering it would not render such finding irreconcilable with a verdict for the opposite party, it may be refused.[59] A special interrogatory relating to an evidentiary fact is properly refused.[60] So also one embracing a proposition concerning which there is no controversy.[61] Special interrogatories are properly refused when all the material matter in them is covered by special questions asked by the court;[62] especially where the finding answered the only question which could have been properly submitted.[63] The refusal of an interrogatory calling for

Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Henderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 36. an evidentiary fact is proper, especially where either answer to it would not have been repugnant to the general verdict.[64] Interrogatories requiring the jury to state under which paragraph of the complaint they found their verdict are properly refused.[65]

Requests for and submission of special issues or interrogatories.—Where a case is submitted on special issues to the jury, all the material issues requested by parties must be so submitted,[66] where there is evidence as to the facts referred to.[67] It is not error to submit to the jury a special issue raised by the pleadings and evidence, though the form of the issue as presented for submission is objectionable.[68] Requests which do not contain proper statements of the conditions on which the answer shall be made are bad.[69]

A request for special findings on particular questions of fact is proper, but not a request that the jury return a special verdict answering such questions.[70] The right to ask special findings does not go to the extent of permitting a party to cross-examine the jury on the processes employed by them in reaching a verdict.[71] Where special interrogatories have to be stated in writing and submitted before argument, it is proper for the adverse party to read them to the jury and discuss the evidence in their connection, in order to convince the jury that certain answers should be returned.[72] The submission to the jury of but one issue in a case is not the authorization of a special verdict against the protest of either party.[73] Where an interrogatory is propounded by the court without any request, the court must submit it to the party to whom it is adverse.[74] The record need not show the submission of the interrogatories, if it show them returned with their answers, with the general verdict, and that court and counsel treated them as properly before the court without objection.[75]

Form and requisites of special interrogatories.—Special interrogatories should be so framed as to put the exact issue clearly before the jury.[76] They should present all the matters in controversy, to serve as a basis for a verdict.[77] They should call for a special fact and not a general finding.[78] Instructions for special verdict should be directed thereto specifically to the end that the jury may intelligently answer, having regard to the burden of proof; care being exercised not to suggest the effect of the answer,[79] but the court is not required to frame a verdict,

St. 1901, § 555, authorizing the submission to the jury of interrogatories on the issues of the cause does not authorize the submission of the question whether the general verdict was based on the first or second paragraphs of a complaint and the answer to such must be treated as surplusage, that not being one of the issues of the case. so that the effect of particular questions on the final result will be disguised.[80] The instructions should be an explanation of the questions one by one.[81] They should call for answers determinative of the case, otherwise they may be properly refused.[82] Including undisputed matters and requiring answers thereto is however not always reversible error.[83] The jury should be told that they must answer a special question one way or another,[84] and should be told to answer every question.[85]

Issues should be submitted in such form that the answers will not be indefinite.[86] The form is very much in the discretion of the trial court.[87] The court may by a single interrogatory cover two or more proposed questions,[88] but special interrogatories tending to confuse by reason of calling for findings on several distinct propositions are properly refused.[89] A single issue may include all the forms of injury on a question of damages.[90]

The modification of an interrogatory cannot be complained of, where in either form it does not call for a finding of an ultimate fact, or a probative fact from which an ultimate fact resulted, and so was improper.[91]

Form and requisites of special verdict.—A special verdict must state facts sufficient to support a judgment.[92] Where certain of the special findings are not sustained by the evidence, it is the duty of the trial court to set them aside, and judgment cannot be entered on the remainder.[93] The special findings should be statements of fact, not mere conclusions of law[94] or general conclusions drawn from all the evidence.[95] It is only the ultimate facts, controlling the verdict, not mere evidence, that the parties have the right to have contained in special verdicts.[96] The findings should be consistent, certain, and unambiguous in order to sustain the judgment.[97] The court should not accept evasive answers to special interrogatories which if answered in the affirmative would overthrow the general verdict. The jury should be required to answer, or discharged as failing to agree.[98] The legal effect in an answer to special questions determines its sufficiency.[99]

Interpretation and construction.—Findings should be construed according to the natural import of the words used therein;[1] they are to be viewed and interpreted in light of the testimony and other proceedings,[2] and must be construed in connection with the claims of the parties to the suit.[3] Nothing can be added to a special finding or verdict by way of intendment.[4] The special verdict is not designed to elicit from the jury a mere abstract of the evidence.[5] An assumption in an interrogatory is not equivalent to a finding by the jury.[6] A special finding may be used to show the connection of the verdict with certain paragraphs of the complaint.[7] The omission of a negative finding may be construed as an affirmative one.[8] Where findings of fact are silent on a material issue, it is regarded as a finding against the party holding the affirmative, or burden of proof, on that issue.[9] A special finding which shows that the jury based their general verdict on a theory of the case not involved in the issues submitted, and not contended for by the prevailing party, is ground for reversal.[10] Special findings should be consistent with each other and not repugnant in matters material to the issues involved in order to sustain the judgment.[11] Unnecessary[12] or immaterial ones may be ignored.[13] A finding upon subjects where there is no controversy between the parties is unnecessary.[14]

§ 4. Conflicts between verdicts and findings. General verdict and special findings.—A general verdict upon issues and evidence properly submitted is presumed to have decided every fact or deduction therefrom essential to support it, while a special finding of the jury is limited by its specific terms.[15] The general verdict is conclusive unless the special findings of fact by the jury conflict with it in some vital particular, and this conflict cannot be explained by any reasonable intendment, or inference.[16] The party in whose favor it was rendered can invoke no fact in his favor under such presumption that he would not have been allowed to prove.[17] A general verdict prevails over special findings if there could have been, under the issues, proof of supposable facts not inconsistent with those specially found, sufficient to sustain the general verdict.[18] A general verdict will prevail against special findings of fact, unless so incompatible that both cannot be true.[19] But where the special finding of facts is irreconcilably in conflict with the general verdict, the former must control.[20] To sustain a motion for judgment notwithstanding the general verdict, the facts found by the special verdict must be so repugnant to the general verdict that both cannot be true under any conceivable state of facts provable under the issues. On such a motion nothing but the pleadings, the general verdict, and the answers to the special interrogatories, can be considered in determining the force of such specific facts.[21] If the special findings are such as to require a judgment to be entered thereon, notwithstanding the general verdict, a judgment entered upon the general verdict is irregular and may be set aside.[22] Special findings must be construed if possible to harmonize with the general verdict,[23] and may be set aside if, as construed by the court, it is not supported by the evidence.[24] All reasonable presumptions will be indulged in support of the general verdict and against the answers to the interrogatories.[25] A special finding which is in the nature of a conclusion of law will not effect a disturbance of the general verdict, though inconsistent therewith.[26] Mere inconsistency between the general findings themselves is not fatal to the general verdict.[27] The conflict is not to be determined by singling out a single finding, but all must be considered in the light of the pleadings, and if taking them as a whole the inconsistency is not necessarily implied, the general verdict must be sustained.[28] A general verdict cannot be affected by an answer to a special interrogatory of no controlling importance, especially if it is also inconsistent with the answer to another special interrogatory,[29] or because the special findings fail to show some of the material facts,[30] or on account of the failure of the jury to agree on a submitted question, an answer to which was not needed to sustain the verdict.[31]

Between special findings.—Where there is a finding inconsistent with the judgment and other findings sufficient by themselves to warrant such judgment, it should be reversed unless found to be clearly right upon the evidence.[32] The finding of an ultimate fact will be disregarded on appeal, where primary facts are found negativing it,[33] but where the ultimate facts have been found against a party, no probative fact may be permitted to control.[34] The findings of fact on special issues submitted to the jury, where warranted by the evidence, control conflicting findings instructed by the court.[35] Where there is a finding inconsistent with the judgment, and other findings by themselves sufficient to warrant the judgment, it should be reversed unless found to be clearly right upon the evidence.[36]

§ 5. Separate verdicts as to different counts, causes of action, or parties.—A general verdict in a suit on two causes of action will be held, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, to apply to both.[37] So that where a demurrer, overruled subject to exception, should have been sustained as to one of two counts, the verdict must be set aside.[38] The jury may not properly find specially for the defendant on any particular count, if he might be liable under any of the others.[39] Separate verdicts upon separate causes of action are not improper,[40] nor is a verdict erroneous for finding a specific sum of damages separately under the several heads alleged as breaches of contract.[41] A general verdict on one count may necessarily involve a finding on another.[42]

A general verdict found in favor of the plaintiff against one of two defendants, not mentioning the other, is a general verdict in favor of the defendant not mentioned.[43] In an action against several defendants, there being recovery against only some of them, the verdict should be for the plaintiff against them and for the others against the plaintiff.[44] Damages cannot be apportioned if all defendants are wholly liable if at all.[45] A verdict should make separate findings of plaintiff's cause of action and defendant's counterclaim.[46]

§ 6. Submission to jury, rendition and return.—Whenever there are any questions of fact in evidence, the case must be submitted to the jury[47] under proper instructions,[48] and according to the orderly methods of trial procedure.[49]

The amount awarded must be determined by agreement on the evidence and not by the so called "quotient" process, the objectionable feature of which consists more in agreeing beforehand to abide by the result than in the fact that an average was taken[50] on which they were able to agree.[51] The burden of proof is on the party attacking the quotient verdict.[52]

The verdict must be announced by the jury in the presence of all of them,[53] and the announcement rather than a paper prepared by the jury is the real verdict.[54] If signed by jurors, as many must sign as are required to concur.[55] An-verdict for plaintiff does not state on which one it is based, and it was subsequently determined that one count was not recoverable on, judgment will be reversed. Patton v. Wells [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 337.

51. A verdict is not a quotient verdict if it is not agreed that the result of the averaging of estimates be adopted, and it was not adopted, though the jury acted on the suggestion that the estimates of damages be averaged. Where it was agreed upon by the jurors that plaintiff was to have a verdict, but the amount was not agreed upon, it was not misconduct to render a verdict ascertained by striking an average of the sums they thought due. Bell v. Butler [Wash.] 75 Pac. 130. The fact that each juror put down on a piece of paper the amount that he thought plaintiff should recover and the total was then divided by twelve was held not to vitiate the verdict, where the jury stood ten to two for plaintiff, and the verdict returned was a majority one for a different amount, ten of the jurors agreeing thereto. 55. Under a constitution authorizing a verdict where three-fourths of the jury concur, a verdict signed by seven jurors only is swers to special interrogatories must be signed by the jury as a whole or by their foreman; otherwise they cannot be considered for any purpose.[56]

The right of a party to poll the jury after rendition of the verdict exists in civil as well as in criminal cases;[57] but he may not examine them as to what they considered in arriving at the verdict.[58]

Disagreement on the answer to a special interrogatory has the same effect as a disagreement on a general verdict. The jury should be required to answer the question or discharged as failing to agree.[59]

§ 7. Amendment and correction.—A wrong or erroneous verdict not susceptible of amendment or correction may be set aside and a new trial granted or the judgment be arrested,[60] or judgment may be entered non obstante veredicto[61] according to the circumstances; but the court cannot amend it into a verdict that the jury did not give,[62] or change an answer where the evidence is conflicting.[63] A verdict fatally defective will not support a judgment.[64] If it be the result of prejudice or misapprehension, it should be set aside.[65] A verdict rendered under correct instructions will not be disturbed because some of the evidence was irrelevant, or because of remarks of counsel.[66]

The rule that new trial is the proper remedy is not applicable in a case where the verdict is imperfect on its face, as finding the evidentiary and not the ultimate facts.[67] The jury's finding in a special verdict must be contrary to the undisputed credible evidence to justify a directed verdict or the change of an affirmative to a negative answer.[68]

A verdict palpably wrong may be refused and the jury sent out for further deliberation;[69] but a verdict which responds to the issues and is sustained by the evidence must be received by the court.[70] Where an incomplete verdict is returned, the jury may be sent back to complete it;[71] but need not be if it is unlikely that they can or will do so.[72] If the answers to the interrogatories are indefinite, the court may of its own motion direct the jurors to make them more explicit.[73] Where the answering of an interrogatory is dependent upon the answer to a pre-

Where a jury returned a verdict of one dollar, though the premises had been detained six months and their rental value was $150.50 a month, it was proper for the court to refuse to accept the verdict and after they retired and reconsidered the case, to accept their second verdict for $900.00. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 846.

70. The words "and plaintiff to pay all costs" added to a verdict are mere surplusage, the question of costs being one of law for the court. The court has no right to refuse to receive a verdict on account of such surplusage. McEldon v. Patton [Neb.] 93 N. W. 938.

73. Jordan v. Downs, 118 Ga. 544.

vious one, it is error to send the jury back to answer it, when the answer to the previous one did not require that it should be answered.[74]

An ambiguous verdict, on court's refusal to accept same, may be corrected in open court, the jury assenting thereto,[75] and not thereafter if the error be other than formal[76] or a new trial is proper.[77] An amendment to a verdict, if only a verbal unimportant change, may be made after the filing and the discharge of the jury.[78]

A verdict for damages should not be reduced by the court unless excessive. If considered to be the result of passion or prejudice, it should be set aside altogether;[79] but it is proper to announce that a new trial will be granted unless there is a remittitur.[80] It is properly set aside as excessive, where the amount found by the jury exceeds the amount claimed in the complaint, unless the plaintiff consents to a reduction to the amount claimed,[81] and the evidence would support a verdict for the correct amount.[82]

§ 8. Recording, entry and effect of verdict; impeachment.—A verdict is not valid and final until pronounced and recorded in open court.[83] When returned and recorded, it will not be changed on account of a juror subsequently filing an affidavit that he dissented therefrom,[84] especially in the absence of a statement of facts.[85] A writing prepared in the jury room and presented to the court forms no part of the record. The finding delivered by the jury in open court is the verdict and decides the issue and what is recorded.[86]

A verdict or special finding is conclusive as to the matters of fact litigated in the case;[87] but a verdict without a judgment will not sustain a plea of res judicata.[88] It does not decide by inference issues not involved.[89]

In equity suit, the answers to interrogatories submitted to the jury are advisory only, and error cannot be predicated on the form in which the questions were propounded.[90] The court may adopt them in whole or in part or make findings of its own. The fact that a decree was entered in accordance with the verdict is not conclusive that the findings of the jury were adopted without modification.[91]

Statements of jurors as to mode of arriving at verdict may be received in support of the verdict;[92] but not to impeach it,[93] except for intimidation,[94] or when it was determined by chance;[95] and in some states it cannot be so impeached even for that reason.[96]

§ 9. Findings by court or referee.—In proper cases questions of fact may be referred both at law[97] and in equity[98] as has been shown in an earlier topic. The findings of a referee on questions of fact have all the force and effect of the verdict of a jury,[99] and similarly they must conform to the allegations and the evidence.[1] A variance of words and not of substance, in the decision of a referee, from the pleaded defenses, is not to be regarded.[2] A referee's report has no judicial force until confirmed by the court.[3]

Findings by court. What may or must be found.—The court need not make findings as to matters not in issue by the pleadings,[4] nor on facts not of a nature calculated to induce the court to reach a different result,[5] nor as to a matter stated in the pleadings and not denied; the fact admitted is treated as found by the court.[6] Parties to an action cannot insist on a finding of fact, even though material to the issues, unless it appears from the testimony that it was involved,[7] and unnecessary and immaterial findings by the court are not ground for reversal of the judgment.[8] The findings should adequately cover the allegations in the pleadings[9] so as to sustain the judgment.[10] The failure of the court to find on a question of fact alleged in the complaint is error, whether due to regarding such fact as admitted in the answer or through inadvertence;[11] but such error is not ground for reversal if no substantial rights have been injuriously affected.[12] In the absence of a finding of facts by the court as required by law, where the evidence fails to disclose with certainty the rights of the parties, there is nothing to support the judgment.[13] Findings must follow the issues and are bad if outside them even though upon evidence not objected to.[14] Where the judge is required to answer requests of counsel for findings of fact and for conclusions of law, that such requests are substantially answered by the independent findings of the judge is insufficient.[15]

The findings should be statements of issuable facts, not conclusions of law;[16] ultimate facts on which the law must determine the rights of the parties, and not contain a statement of the evidence.[17] A finding should state facts clearly[18] in terms, and not by reference,[19] and a recital in a decree that material allegations are sustained by testimony is not sufficient.[20] A court need not incorporate in its finding the facts and circumstances which lead up to the result, and about which the evidence was contradictory,[21] and a finding substantially sufficient is good, except as against a motion to make it more specific.[22] A mere opinion expressed by a circuit judge, upon a question of fact in an equity case, is not a finding of facts.[23]

The findings of fact should be stated separately from the conclusions of law,[24] but failure to separate them is not always reversible error.[25]

A finding that a "party and his predecessors since a certain date has been and is the owner and entitled to the possession of premises" is a statement of an ultimate fact and not a conclusion, and the fact that it appears among the conclusions is no reason for reversing the judgment. Curtis v. Boquillas Land & Cattle Co. [Ariz.] 76 Pac. 612. A finding that one by reason of nonperformance of a contract was damaged in the sum of $6,000 was a finding of fact. Conner v. 24. So by statute in Pennsylvania. Pittsburg Stove & Range Co. v. Pennsylvania Stove Co. [Pa.] 57 Atl. 77. Where a case is tried by a court without a jury under Pennsylvania statutes providing that the decision of the court shall be in writing, stating separately the facts found in answer to any points submitted and the conclusions of law, where the court fails to make sep-

Interpretation and construction.—A general finding made by the court must stand, unless some of the special facts found are inconsistent therewith.[26] An ambiguous finding by the court may be helped out by the judge's preamble thereto, read in connection with it.[27] Special findings may set out sufficient facts to warrant a decree under part of the complaint and render an error harmless.[28] In Washington, the statute relative to findings of fact does not apply to equitable actions.[29]

Signing, filing, and entering.—The findings should be signed by the judge, and filed;[30] they should also be entered in the record, but the failure to do so affects no substantial right of a defeated party and is not ground for reversal.[31]

The amendment of findings, the time in which it may be done, and the terms imposed therefor, are matters within the court's discretion.[32] During the motion for a new trial in an action tried before the court, the general finding may be modified and part of the sum remitted; judgment being rendered for the balance.[33] The findings of the court should cover all the material facts proved, and if any be omitted the court should be requested to amend the findings and include them, before any motion for a new trial.[34] The motion to have them made specifically must indicate with sufficient clearness the further findings desired.[35]

The effect of findings in a common-law action is the same as the verdict of a properly instructed jury.[36] They are in the nature of a special verdict, and are conclusive on appeal if supported by evidence,[37] but are not so if they really amount to conclusions of law,[38] nor if by the court in an equity case.[39]

Conclusions of law.—A mere decision by the court sitting to try facts is not a conclusion of law,[40] yet where the evidence is undisputed, a finding of a referee

expressed as a finding of fact is, in effect, a conclusion of law.[41] Propositions of law submitted to be held, where a cause is tried without a jury, should state the law only,[42] and should be submitted to the court before argument.[43] The conclusions of law must be justified by the findings of fact,[44] or agreed statement of facts[45] and supported thereby;[46] they do not take the place of findings of fact, except where the law gives a conclusive effect to the fact established or where the evidence is of a conclusive character.[47] The court may amend an obvious mistake in favor of a party, in a conclusion of law, with that party's consent.[48]

§ 10. Objections and exceptions.[49]—Like other objections, a defect in verdict or findings can be presented by none but those aggrieved,[50] and not by one who failed to ask for findings the omission whereof is assailed,[51] or who did not ask in time,[52] or waived his request.[53] A general objection to all of several distinct and separated findings of fact is insufficient;[54] the objections thereto should be definite and specific as to each question.[55] Exceptions must be made also to each alleged erroneous conclusion of law made on special findings; the judgment rendered in conformity therewith is not subject to modification therefor.[56] Such exceptions must be made promptly after their filing,[57] but the delay of the clerk in presenting the filed conclusions to the court should not prevent their being considered.[58] An omission in a verdict must be objected to at the time of its rendition;[59] so also objections relating merely to the form of the verdict.[60]

The proper remedy in Indiana being a motion for a new trial, it is not error to refuse to modify special findings of fact.[61] A motion to modify, change or strike out a special finding, and to make additional findings, is unauthorized and may be properly overruled,[62] and a motion for a supplemental finding does not present any question.[63] These rules do not apply where the verdict is imperfect on its face.[64]

By excepting to conclusions of law an appellant admits that the facts have been fully and correctly found.[65]

VERIFICATION.

Verification is an averment by the pleader that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded. In code pleading it is an affidavit by the party, or his agent or attorney, to the truth of a pleading.[66]

Necessity.—The necessity of verified pleadings in particular actions or defenses at law is governed by statute.[67] In some states the plea of non est factum,[68] especially when signature by defendant is alleged,[69] must be verified. In some, in an action upon a written instrument, the answer denying the same must be verified or the genuineness of the instrument is admitted.[70] The denial by verification of the execution of instruments throws the burden of proof on plaintiff.[71] In others a verified complaint requires a verified answer.[72] But one cannot after the answer is filed verify his complaint and have the answer stricken out.[73] The right to require the plaintiff to verify his petition is substantial, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, its omission cannot be regarded as nonprejudicial.[74]

In equity where discovery sought is only incidental to the main object of the bill, the bill need not be verified.[75] The answer must or need not be verified according as answer under oath is waived or not.[76]

70. Sec. 62 of Civil Code of 1877 provides that when an action is brought upon a written instrument, and the complaint contains a copy of it, its genuineness and due execution are admitted, unless the answer denying the same is verified. Held, does not apply to an action by an indorsee against the maker of a note. Gumaer v. Sowers, 31 Colo. 164, 71 Pac. 1103.

By whom.—An attorney in fact can make the necessary oath where the facts are within his own knowledge,[77] and this will be assumed where the oath is positive in its terms.[78] When verification is by an attorney, it must show why it was not made by the petitioner.[79] Statutes in some states allow verification for several defendants to be made by one,[80] and for domestic corporations to be made by officers.[81]

Form and positiveness.—A verification of a pleading need not be in the exact words of the statute; it is sufficient if the substance of the statutory requirements is fairly set forth.[82] A verification made by one upon understanding or upon information or belief should state the basis of his understanding or the sources of his information or the grounds of his belief.[83] Where all the allegations of a pleading are positive, a verification containing the words "except as to those matters alleged on information and belief" is equivalent to an unqualified verification.[84]

Defects, objections and amendments.—Lack of verification may be waived[85] or cured by permission of court,[86] or by act of parties.[87] The verification of a pleading is amendable when not affecting the merits of the controversy.[88] In most states a defect in a verification, capable of amendment, cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal.[89] Where a pleading lacks a verification and one is essential, motion to strike out the pleading is the proper remedy.[90] It is not demurrable.[91]

WAR.

The rules of international law control and regulate parties with reference to their rights on the high seas during war, and they cannot be changed by the municipal regulations of any single power.[92] Generally speaking, forts, cities and lands taken from the enemy are called conquests; movables taken on land, booty; on the high seas, prize.[93]

Rights of neutrals—On the sea.—A neutral has a right to trade with a belligerent, provided she does not force, or intend to force, a blockade or carry contraband goods,[94] but the act of carrying to an enemy articles directly useful in war is a wrong for which the injured party may punish the neutral taken in the act.[95] Authorities do not agree in defining what articles are contraband.[96] Articles or material which by their nature are fit to be used in war are generally regarded as such,[97] but as to articles of uncertain or ambiguous use there is no fixed rule.[98] One class of writers contends that all such articles are contraband, while another contends that inquiry may be made for determining their probable use in the particular instance. The latter seems to be the better rule.[99] The status of such articles is frequently fixed by treaty.[1] Such treaties are binding only on the powers making them, and are not affected by treaties of either with other powers.[2] The mere presence of contraband articles on board ship as an incident of the voyage, without proof or circumstances sufficient to justify the belief that the ship owners or their agents knew they were violating the laws of neutrality, will not justify the seizure of the ship, but only of the contraband articles.[3] Knowledge on the part of the ship owner of the presence of such articles, or conduct showing such knowledge involves the whole ship.[4] If a substantial part of the cargo consists of contraband articles, the presumption arises that the voyage was undertaken in violation of the duty of a neutral, and with intent to aid the belligerent adversary.[5] If the owners of the vessel also own the cargo and the latter is contraband, both are subject to confiscation.[6] A neutral vessel may forfeit her neutral character by the fraudulent conduct of her master, by false destination, or by resisting search.[7] A blockade runner is ab initio in delicto, and is liable to capture and condemnation not only on the outward but on the return voyage, notwithstanding the fact that her homeward-bound cargo may be innocent merchandise.[8] After reaching her home port she may resume her neutral character, and, having done so, her previous conduct is not open to inquiry.[9] The war vessels of belligerents have a right to stop and search neutral vessels on the high seas for the purpose of obtaining evidence of their neutrality and that of their cargo.[10] The deliberate and continued resistance of search renders the confiscation of the vessel justifiable.[11] The right of search is preliminary to the right of seizure and the right of seizure depends upon the result of the search.[12] A neutral vessel, properly documented, carrying an innocent neutral cargo, with no intent to run a blockade, is subject to search, but not to seizure, and must be released as soon as searched.[13] If a seizure is unjustifiable, the captors are liable in damages to the owners, and the vessel will be released.[14] A neutral vessel voluntarily sailing under belligerent convoy is subject to capture and condemnation as a part of the hostile force,[15] but when she separates from the convoy, voluntarily or involuntarily, she is no longer a part of such force and is not subject to capture as such.[16] Where a neutral vessel, seized by a belligerent, is being taken to a port to undergo prize proceedings, her rescue by her master and crew is unlawful.[17] The justifiability of the seizure is determined in the condemnation proceedings before the prize court of the power making the capture,[18] and until such proceedings are had the captors have no right of property in the captured vessel or her cargo.[19] It is the duty of the captors to preserve the captured vessel in its original condition,[20] to take it into port with reasonable dispatch, and there institute legal proceedings for the purpose of determining the lawfulness of the capture,[21] and to give the captain and the crew every opportunity to defend the vessel in such proceeding.[22] Deprivation of the latter right renders the condemnation prima facie illegal, and the alleged illegality of the voyage cannot be considered.[23] The proceedings to condemn must be in all respects legal, or the judgment will be vitiated.[24] The presumption is that a seizure is properly made, and the burden is on the seized vessel to show that it is not.[25] A protest made at the time is competent evidence to show the circumstances of a capture, what was done with the crew, and the fact of the sale of the vessel.[26] The inability of a master to make protest at the place where his goods were seized may be inferred, where it does not appear that he had an opportunity of doing so, and promptly made protest on the day of his return.[27] A neutral nation has nothing to do with the enforcement or consummation of a belligerent's rights, and owes to either belligerent only limited rights of hospitality.[28]

Prize money and bounty.—Captures of war inure to the government and can become private property only by its grant.[29] By the statutes of the United States, prize money or bounty is given to the vessels making the capture. In case the property is brought in and condemned as prize, the net proceeds of its sale, when the prize was of superior or equal force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, and one-half thereof when it was of inferior force, is divided among the captors, the other half, in the latter case, going to the government.[30] In case a ship or vessel of the enemy is destroyed in battle or it becomes necessary to destroy it by reason of injuries received therein, a sum called bounty is paid to the officers and crew of the ship or ships destroying it.[31] A capture is complete when the ship is brought to and boarded by her captors, even though her flag is not then hauled down or a prize crew put aboard.[32] Until condemnation, captors acquire no absolute right of property in prizes, but they are taken subject to the right of the government to restore them to their original owners.[33] Captors of vessels as prize of war, the proceeds of which prize courts have ordered restored to the claimants with damages and costs, are not liable therefor, where the libels were filed by the United States in its own behalf, praying a forfeiture to it, and alleging a capture pursuant to instructions from the president.[34] In such cases, the prize court may enter a decree against the United States for such damages and costs.[35] Naval vessels not within signal distance of a capture are not vessels making the capture, and cannot be considered in estimating the relative force of captor and prize, for the purpose of determining the proportion of the prize money to which the captor is entitled, even though their proximity may have induced the surrender of the prize to an inferior force.[36] What is signal distance must depend upon the facts in each particular case.[37] Vessels used by the navy as colliers, manned principally by unenlisted men, and armed only for purposes of defense, are not, though

The United States released such claims and elected to hold France alone responsible and hence must be held to have released other nations whose obligations were the same. But where a neutral nation permitted American vessels to be condemned in its own ports by French consular courts, or permitted a seizure to be made in its waters, it alone would be held responsible. By virtue of this treaty, the United States is liable only for such damages as could have been collected from France.[50] Where neither the American registry of the vessel nor the citizenship of the owners is established, there can be no recovery under the act.[51] Insurers have no higher standing in court than the owners, and if the latter cannot recover, the former cannot.[52]

WAREHOUSING AND DEPOSITS.

Who are warehousemen and depositaries.—A warehouse is a place used for the reception and storage of goods and merchandise, and a warehouseman is one who keeps it for hire,[53] holding the goods[54] under an obligation to return.[55] "Depository" and "depositary" have meanings much akin to these[56] but are commonly significant of the keeping of valuables. A carrier becomes a warehouseman under certain circumstances.[57]

Licensing and public regulation of such business is a matter of statute, applications of the statutes having been made in the cases cited.[58] The grain and warehouse statutes of Minnesota do not cover transactions had by a domestic corporation in a sister state.[59]

58. Under laws of Tennessee, a warehouseman is not required to give a new bond on change of location [Code Tenn. §§ 3381, 2597]. Bailey v. Wood, 24 Ky. L. R. 801, 69 S. W. 1103.

Under the laws of Illinois, the management of elevators of class A is a public employment and owners are held strictly to this relation in the management of their elevators. Hannah v. People, 198 Ill. 77, 64 N. E. 776. The Illinois act allowing owners of class A elevators to store their own grain and mix it with that of others and deal in their own warehouse receipts, violates the constitution classifying public elevators and forbidding the mixing of grain [Laws Ill. 1897, p. 302; Const. Ill. § 13]. Id. The constitution does not forbid storage of owner's grain in vacant places in elevator. Id.

59. In re St. Paul & K. C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N. W. 218. Grain receipts issued by a Minnesota corporation covering grain in elevators in that and other states without specifying particular elevators covers only grain in Minnesota, such receipts not being authorized by the laws of the other states. Id. Grain receipts covering grain in "the system of elevators" of the issuing corporation are not so indefinite as to the grain covered as to render them void. Id.

A storage contract to be implied from delivery and possession in store requires proof of actual possession.[60] The statement of one that his warehouse was at a certain number did not constitute a contract to store at that number.[61] In order to prove delivery to an agent, his authority must be shown.[62]

Warehouse receipts must represent goods actually stored at time of issuance,[63] but though a partner may have perpetrated a fraud on his partner in issuing receipt in firm name, bona fide purchaser will not be affected.[64] A warehouseman may issue receipts for his own property stored in the warehouse and pledge such receipts as collateral security for his own debt.[65] It may be signed by a third person, whose signature was under the warehouseman's supervision.[66] Warehouse receipts not in accordance with the statutory requirements are admissible to prove the actual delivery of the grain.[67] Receipts for grain pledged to secure notes are to be construed independently of the notes they secure, and those covering grain in other states are to be construed according to the laws of the states where situated.[68]

At common law, the transfer of a warehouse receipt absolutely or as collateral security for a loan vests in transferee title to the property represented;[69] but to constitute a pledge by transfer of warehouse receipts, the receipts must have been issued by one in actual possession.[70] Where there was a proven deficiency of goods to meet receipts so that either they had been issued without receiving possession or the goods had been converted, the holder of the receipt must prove goods in store when the receipt issued.[71] The laws of Kentucky place warehouse receipts on the footing of bills of exchange, and negotiable character is not limited to transactions had in Kentucky with citizens thereof.[72] One taking warehouse receipts assumes risk of a landlord's prior lien.[73]

A milling company storing wheat to be manufactured into flour, the wheat in no case being withdrawn but paid for as manufactured, is not a warehouseman within an act giving a preference to holders of warehouse receipts on insolvency.[74]

Care and protection of goods stored.—A gratuitous bailee is bound to use only ordinary care in keeping and caring for deposit.[75] A warehouseman must exercise reasonable care to preserve goods from injury by contact with other goods.[76]

76. Sibley Warehouse & Storage Co. v. Durand & Kasper Co., 102 Ill. App. 406. Instruction held not open to the construction that the bailee need only use reasonable diligence to prevent the grain being mixed with or other causes originating while they are in storage.[77] He is not charged for grain below grade spoiled by delay of depositor in acting on advice of inspectors to mix with higher grade.[78] A carrier storing goods is liable for their destruction by fire from adjoining premises, where it had knowledge of the dangers from proximity to such premises and took no steps to guard against same.[79] A liability for negligence of warehouseman turning over cotton to compress is not shown by failure to require a compress receipt according to custom between the parties.[80] An agreement to furnish any desired temperature does not dispense with all care to provide a proper one if the bailor specifies none,[81] but where the bailor merely hires space, he bears his own loss from improper care of stored goods.[82] Failure to remove vegetables from cold storage on learning that temperature was not proper does not render plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[83] Evidence[84] tending only to show whether the fire department was prompt[85] or declarations after a fire[86] are irrelevant. The unexplained collapse of a warehouse may raise an inference of negligence;[87] but the fact that goods were destroyed by fire does not.[88] It may be shown that similar goods were not affected injuriously.[89] A receipt to a warehouseman on return of the goods reciting their return "in good condition" is not conclusive on receiptor in an action for injury thereto.[90] The real owner may recover for injury through deposit made by another, the warehouseman being informed as to ownership at time of receiving articles.[91]

Insurance.—A contract to insure is not found in a mere statement in receipt: "All cotton stored with us fully insured."[92] The owner may recover where articles are deposited with the warehouseman on his statement that they would be insured under his policies, and the general policies paid to the warehouseman cover other grain or being converted to his own use. Mayer v. Gersbacher, 207 Ill. 296, 69 N. E. 789. Instruction held not to place burden on either party as to agreement allowing substitution, that being the office of another instruction which expressly told the jury that the burden was on defendant. Clipper Line, 30 Wash. 515, 71 Pac. 48. his property and exceed his loss.[93] He is entitled to insurance on goods stored without diminution, though policy taken without his knowledge;[94] but under general policies covering all goods stored must show that he has not been indemnified for the loss by other insurance.[95] Goods stored are within a policy covering goods "held in trust."[96]

Damages.—A cotton compress company losing cotton delivered to it is liable for value at time of discovery of loss and not value at time of suit.[97] The damages recoverable for conversion by licensed warehouseman is the value of the property converted.[98] Original cost may not be recovered for injury to work of art where testimony fixes value at a less amount at time of accident and the article would have some value on being restored.[99] Value of goods must be clearly shown.[1] The value of other owners' property is not admissible,[2] nor is evidence of a price which might have been obtained by one who had no right to sell.[3]

Redelivery to bailor.—The goods must be redelivered to the bailor or owner except where loss is excused.[4] A depositary of a trust fund must restore the fund to the true owner on demand, although the deposit was made by an agent or trustee, and until the demand the owner had no notice of its real character.[5] Where money of a debtor was given to a third party pending a decision as to whether it was exempt and if not exempt to be applied on a certain debt, the creditor was entitled to recover it from the depositary, it being found not exempt, though debtor was dead and his estate insolvent.[6]

Charges and lien therefor.—In order to recover charges, warehouseman must keep the grain or its equivalent in the warehouse. It is not sufficient that the amount was held in another warehouse.[7] An agreement to pay for services will not be found in acquiescence under a suggestion that it be done because anticipated benefits had not been realized.[8] His lien extends to storage services only.[9] A warehouseman has no lien as against mortgagee on property stored in violation of condition against removal.[10] The lien laws of New York give persons performing storage services a right to retain chattel until charges are paid.[11] His lien for storage, accrued prior to laws extending lien as against mortgagees and sellers on conditional sale, is not superior to such liens.[12] The fact that receipt provides for sale without notice will not dispense with a statutory requirement to that effect.[13] Balance after sale for charges is to be paid by lienor into county treasury for benefit of lawful claimant under the laws of Washington.[14]

Conversion.—A warehouseman may be guilty of conversion by delivery of goods to depositor after demand by party entitled to their possession as owner.[15] Where property held by carrier under a claim for charges is attached and thereafter held for two years and sold to satisfy its claim, the surplus being held in trust for claimant, such carrier will not be liable to the true owner for the original value.[16] There being evidence that deposit of wheat was intact at the time of an agreement to allow miller to use same provided the miller kept enough on hand to make good the deposit, it was not erroneous to omit to instruct as to a conversion by mixing before the agreement.[17]

Actions and procedure.—In suing on a bond there must be an allegation of possession[18] and of breach,[19] and even though proof fails to show a warehouse covered by the bond, it suffices as to the principal.[20]

A transferee of a receipt must plead the facts showing his title.[21] On cross-examination, he may show that a signature by a third person was authorized.[22] The amount of a storage lien must be pleaded in mitigation of damages for conversion.[23]

Crimes and penalties.—A warehouseman in Oregon, giving receipts to a depositor of grain not in the statutory form, is properly prosecuted under the statute punishing larceny by a bailee for conversion of grain instead of under special provision relating to warehousemen.[24] Criminal intent need not be proven by direct testimony.[25] The ordinary rules of criminal procedure apply.[26]

WASTE.

It is waste if a particular tenant removes or destroys or injures the realty or fixtures to the injury of the estate,[27] and so with a mortgagee having a right to possession of mortgaged premises who assumes to sell them,[28] or who being in possession sells buildings.[29] A power of appointment as to a remainder will not enlarge a life estate so as to allow children of holder of life estate to recover for waste from an alienee during her life, though future waste might be prevented by injunction.[30] A mortgagee's right to redress for waste by a third person impairing the security does not depend on the mortgagor's insolvency.[31] His measure of damages is the diminution in value of the whole property or the reasonable cost of restoration if that is less than the diminution.[32] Knowledge of the mortgage is shown by proving service of summons in foreclosure prior to the acts of waste.[33] Removing steel beams and lintels in a building wastes the security.[34]

A devise of "use and full control" of realty during life, where the context shows that testator intended the devisee to have full control free from interference by remainderman, gives an estate without impeachment of waste and an injunction to restrain waste will not issue unless such control is used wantonly to the injury of the remainder.[35]

Courts of equity have jurisdiction to enjoin waste by cutting timber constituting chief value of land and incidentally for an accounting for waste previously committed.[36] Waste by a mortgagee in possession may be counterclaimed in an action for deficiency.[37]

The allowance of treble damages for waste under the California statute is within the discretion of the court and wilfulness should be shown.[38] Where treble damages "may" be given, the court has discretion to refuse them.[39] They may properly be refused where the acts of defendant have conferred benefit on the owner and a large corresponding loss on defendant.[40] and agriculture, and power or mechanical purposes, some matters pertaining to traffic navigation and commerce,[41] and fishing and fisheries[42] have been discussed in other appropriate titles.

§ 1. Definition and kinds of waters.—Streams are navigable and nonnavigable. In order to make a stream a navigable water of the United States, it must form, by itself or by its connection with other streams, a continuous highway over which interstate or foreign commerce may be carried on.[43] To make a stream navigable by the public, it must be a public highway, that is, it must have a terminus where the public can enter it and one where they can leave it.[44] The test of the navigability of a stream, in the legal, technical sense of the term, is whether or not it is capable of being used for purposes of commerce and is suitable for the usual purposes of navigation.[45] The question of navigability is one of fact.[46] A stream not navigable in the strict technical sense may be navigable in the common acceptation of the term if it is of sufficient depth for floatage.[47] In determining the navigability of a body of water, it must be considered in its natural condition with all the natural obstructions existing in it at the time.[48]

Where water naturally flows is a natural watercourse, though the volume changes and though at times it may run dry.[49] To constitute a watercourse, there must be a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, in a definite channel having a bed and banks, and usually discharging itself into some other stream or body of water.[50] A channel or other depression in the ground forming the bank of a river, through which water escapes and flows from the river only at times of high water, is not a natural watercourse.[51]

§ 2. Sovereignty over waters.—The water of navigable streams and the soil thereunder belong to the state and are under its sovereignty, in trust for the people, and are not subject to riparian claims by adjoining landowner.[52] Hence, when wharves are erected under public grant at the end of a street, it is extended over them to the water by operation of law.[53] In Tennessee, it is held that if a stream is navigable in the legal and technical sense, the soil under it and the use of the stream belong to the public, but if it is navigable only in the ordinary sense, the soil under it belongs to the riparian owners, but the public has an easement in the stream for the purposes of transportation and commerce.[54]

is a property right and entitled, as such, to the same protection as are property rights generally, and, when vested, can be destroyed or impaired only in the interest of the general public, upon full compensation and in accordance with established law.[56]

Riparian owners are entitled, as against each other, to the reasonable use of the waters of a stream for domestic, agricultural, and manufacturing purposes.[57] What is a reasonable use is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each particular case.[58] But a riparian proprietor has no right so to appropriate it as to unnecessarily diminish the quantity of its natural flow.[59] Storm or freshet waters flowing in a stream may be impounded and used by any one,[60] but their free passage through a lower estate must not be hindered.[61] An upper riparian owner has no right to divert the waters of a stream or any portion thereof and sell them to another.[62] A city which is a riparian proprietor has no right, as such, to abstract the waters of the stream for the purpose of municipal water supply.[63] The use of all the waters of a stream for ornamental purposes is unreasonable.[64] Upon the mere fact that water has long flown down to him, the lower owner can found no adverse or prescriptive rights as against an upper owner.[65] The mere continued use by a lower proprietor is not sufficient to make an adverse user, as against an upper owner, which ripens into a right.[66]

A riparian owner has a right to have the water of a stream come to him in its natural purity, or in the condition in which he has been in the habit of using it for domestic or business purposes;[67] and he has the right to devote the waters of a stream to any use which he may see fit provided that he does not thereby interfere with the rights of other riparian owners therein.[68] The extent to which a riparian proprietor has a right to pollute the stream depends on the circumstances of each particular case.[69] It must not become a nuisance.[70] In many states it is specially forbidden in streams whence public water supply is taken.[71] Distance from the source of pollution is immaterial where damage results.[72] The fact that others beside defendant have contributed to a pollution of a stream does not relieve him from liability.[73] The pollution of a stream constitutes a taking of property which may not be done without compensation.[74]

A riparian owner has the right to enjoy the flow of a stream in its natural channel,[75] carrying spring and surface waters as well as ordinary flow,[76] without disturbance or interruption by any other riparian owner either to impede or backflow or to give unnatural direction and force to the current;[77] and equity will afford

Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 304. But this right does not extend to nonriparian lessees of the right to use water from a canal leading from the river at a point above the flow of the tide, and such lessees are improperly joined with riparian owners in a suit to restrain the pollution of such river. Id. The rights of such lessees are subordinate to the rights of a city located on the river above the intake of the canal to vent its sewage into the stream. Id.

Ontario Talc Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 273. Where defendant obstructed the natural flow of a stream by erecting a dam on his land, and an adjoining owner erected a levee to keep water from being thrown on his lands thereby, defendant is liable for damages due to the washing away of the levee by water collected on account of the dam and the levee, and the consequent flooding of plaintiff's land. relief appropriate to this right,[78] or damages may be recovered.[79] An upper riparian owner has no right to retain the waters of a stream to an unreasonable degree for the purpose of operating machinery, and then discharge it in unreasonable and excessive quantities when the power is applied to the damage of a lower proprietor.[80] Such obstructions may become a public nuisance.[81] An estate may become servient to such interferences by a prescriptive easement[82] or by an implied one;[83] but mere lapse of time will not bar the owner of land from his right to have a stream flow through the same in its natural bed or channel, since he holds such right by the same title that he holds his land.[84] After a reliction one cannot protect his original bank if obstruction ensues.[85] One who is free from fault is not liable because his grantor negligently diverted a stream into a new channel.[86] Such acts by the public must be under the sanction of eminent domain.[87]

It is the duty of a railroad company so to construct its culverts and bridges that they will be sufficient to vent the ordinary high water of a stream.[88] It is those on one side, the owner of the latter cannot build a levee and fill in the low places in the banks on his side so as to cause it unnaturally to overflow the lands of the other. Sullivan v. 81. The discharge of debris from a mine into a river thereby raising its bed and channel, and causing adjoining lands to be overflowed, in times of high water to their damage, constitutes a public nuisance. Yuba County v. Kate Hayes Min. Co., 141 Cal. 360, 74 Pac. 1049.

82. Where the owners of a servient estate have acquiesced in the use of a natural watercourse, as artificially deepened and enlarged, for over 40 years, they cannot close it by reason of such enlargement. Spink v. Corning, 172 N. Y. 626, 65 N. E. 1122. Where the owners of land traversed by a natural watercourse unite in enlarging the same for the purpose of preventing overflows, it will be presumed that it was done under a claim of right, and the owner of the servient estate cannot, 40 years thereafter, obstruct it on the ground that the work was done under a parol license without a showing to that effect. 83. Where the owner of two adjoining tracts of land constructs a dam of a permanent character across a stream on one tract which causes the water to overflow the second tract, a purchaser of the second tract, having knowledge of the dam, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intent, takes it subject to such right of flowage. 86. Where a ditch is obstructed by the deposit of sediment from overflows, due to the changing of the course of a certain creek by plaintiff's grantor before defendant came into possession of the land, the obstruction does not exist by any fault or negligence on defendant's part, and he is not liable for damage, to the adjoining land of plaintiff, resulting therefrom. not bound to anticipate unprecedented floods such as could not have been reasonably foreseen, but must provide for such floods as may occur in the ordinary course of nature and such unusual storms as occasionally occur.[89] It is liable for damages caused by unprecedented floods where such damage would not have occurred but for the negligent construction of its bridge.[90] Whether a flood is extraordinary or unprecedented is a question of fact and the burden of proving it to be such is on the party relying on it as a defense.[91] A railroad company is not liable for damages caused by maintaining an embankment constructed by its grantor, in the absence of notice to it that it was the cause of the flooding of the lands of an adjoining owner.[92]

Every riparian owner on a navigable stream has the right to have free access to the stream over his own lands, and the undisturbed use of these lands.[93] A riparian proprietor on a navigable stream holds subject to all injury, not amounting to a taking of his land, which may result from the lawful improvement of the navigation of the stream or the construction of piers, abutments, or bridges, in the exercise of the public rights in and over the stream, in respect to such matters.[94] The ownership of land on a stream opposite the mouth of a creek gives no right in the navigation of the creek as a riparian proprietor thereon.[95] peculiar advantage is, as to lower proprietors, a gratuity, and the resulting benefit to the latter cannot be the subject of compensation to the former, nor can it be the subject of set-off by him.[96]

Nonriparian owners may acquire by grant or prescription the right to take water from a spring or stream.[97] A riparian proprietor may grant rights in the waters of a stream to third persons not riparian owners.[98]

§ 4. Rights in lakes and ponds.—A riparian proprietor has no right to drain a lake or reduce it below its natural level without the consent of the other riparian owners.[99] A grant of a lake or pond carries with it the right of fishing.[1] The proper remedy for an intrusion on a right of fishery is an action of trespass.[2] Where the title to a lake and the land under it are distinct, adverse possession of one gives no title to or right in the other.[3]

§ 5. Rights in subterranean and percolating waters.—Waters percolating through the ground, without definite channel, are generally considered to be a part of the realty and to belong to the owner of the land.[4]

Some courts hold that he may divert, consume or cut them off with impunity and may even waste them, though in so doing he cuts off the supply of his neighbor's well.[5]

Other courts limit his right to the amount necessary for the reasonable use of his own land, as such.[6] It is not necessary that a defined subterranean stream was interfered with or particular subterranean conditions disturbed, if the act consisted of subsurface excavations.[7]

Other courts hold that he may divert and dispose of the waters for his own beneficial use, either as a water supply for himself or others, or for the improvement and drainage of his own land.[8] But that he must not collect and wantonly waste them where they would otherwise be, or have theretofore been, appropriated

Where a railroad company dug a large well on its own land, which was fed by percolating waters, and drew therefrom water for the use of its locomotives and machine shops, resulting in the drying up of the previously constructed well of an adjoining landowner, the use of the water was held to be unreasonable. by his neighbor for the general welfare of the people.[9] Nor will he be allowed to collect and wantonly waste them for the mere purpose of injuring his neighbor.[10]

On application of what seems to be the second rule, a city constructing a system of driven wells and a pumping station to supply its citizens with water is liable in damages where it thereby diverts and diminishes the surface or subsurface flow of water on the lands of another.[11] In such cases a plea that for more than 20 years the city had pumped water from such land held not to set up a prescriptive right to pump the land dry as a defense based on adverse user.[12] The measure of damages in such cases is the diminution in rental value by reason of the trespass.[13] Plaintiff in such cases will be allowed as damages the cost of sinking his wells to meet the lowering of the water table.[14] But he cannot recover damages for the loss of crops planted with the knowledge that they would prove a failure and that a different crop would yield a good return.[15] By accepting damages and a decree for a conveyance, the damnified owner waives the right to require condemnation proceedings.[16]

In Wisconsin, a law forbidding waste from artesian wells has been held unconstitutional.[17]

But where subterranean waters flow in a defined channel, the rules which govern the use of surface streams apply.[18] In order that there may be a subterranean stream, the water, whether moving slowly or rapidly, and whether passing through sand or gravel or porous rock, must have the characteristics of a stream, in that it has a course, and a channel with definite bounds.[19] The mere existence of the channel is not enough, but it must be known or reasonably ascertainable.[20] The presumption is that such waters are percolating until it is shown that they are supplied by a definite, flowing stream.[21] The burden of proof is upon those asserting the right to waters below the surface, on the ground that they flow in a defined and known channel, to establish the existence of such channel.[22] Where subterranean waters do not exist in the form of a stream, the landowners have no rights therein as riparian owners.[23] Waters passing through the sand and gravel constituting the bed of a stream, and the lands so nearly adjacent that the only and natural outlet would be through such channel, are not percolating waters, as ordinarily defined by the common law, but are a part of the waters of the stream, and are governed by the same rules as the surface flow.[24]

§ 6. Rights in tide waters.—Tide waters are regarded as navigable and the right to them is public, shared by all alike.[25] Tide lands are also public.[26]

§ 7. Rights in artificial waters.—It is presumed that the owner of land bordering on a canal has title to the center of the stream.[27] The rule as to pollution of a non-navigable stream applies to artificial watercourses.[28] Artificial waters and waterways regarded as irrigation and supply,[29] drainage[30] or milling and power[31] plants are considered in subsequent sections.

§ 8. Ice.—Where water becomes fixed by freezing, the ice belongs to the owner of the fee of the land over which it is found,[32] and not in the person entitled to a mill privilege which is separate from the land.[33] For this reason a trespasser has no rights in the ice as against another trespasser until he has made an appropriation of the ice itself.[34] In New York, it is held that ice formed in a state canal basin, constructed upon and entirely surrounded by state land, belongs to the state.[35] Wherefore one having the public permission to cut such ice is superior to adjoining owners.[36]

§ 9. Surface waters and drainage or reclamation; subaqueous lands.—Flood water of a river is not surface water unless it becomes severed from the main current or leaves the same never to return.[37]

Civil law rule.—Under the civil law, an upper proprietor is entitled to an easement over the land of a lower proprietor for the flow of surface water from his land.[38] No change or innovation in the distribution of water from a superior to an inferior tenement is material unless it operates to prejudice or injure in some way the inferior tenement.[39] The owner of the dominant estate has the right

37. Jones v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 188. A lower riparian owner cannot fight off the flood water of a stream, when it has left its natural channel, as he would surface water. Ballentine v. Hammond [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1000. Flood water becomes surface water when it becomes severed from the main current of the stream, or when it leaves the stream never to return, and spreads out over the lower ground. Sullivan v. Dooley, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 589, 73 S. W. 82. If it forms a continuous body with the water flowing in the ordinary channel, or if it departs from said channel, presently to return, as by the recession of the waters, it is to be regarded as still a part of the river. App. 467, 72 S. W. 142; Campbell v. Flannery [Mont.] 74 Pac. 450. In North Carolina, it is held that an injunction will not be granted to restrain the threatened blocking up of a natural depression into which the water from plaintiff's land naturally drained, as he has an adequate remedy at law, either by an action for damages or by cleaning out and deepening the channel under ch. 30 of the Code. Porter v. Armstrong, 132 N. C. 66.

39. Riverside Cotton Mills v. Lanier [Va.] 45 S. E. 875. Landowners are entitled to compensation for the damming of surface water or the obstruction of natural drainage of their land by the construction of a levee. Ham v. Board of Levee Com'rs [Miss.] 25 So to collect water on his land and cast it on the servient estate through its natural channel more rapidly and in greater volume than in a state of nature.[40]

Common-law rule.—Under the common-law rule, surface water is the enemy of all mankind, and each owner has a right to protect his own land therefrom.[41] Owners of lands may improve them by obstructing or diverting surface water, providing the work is not done in a reckless manner resulting in an injury to others.[42] A landowner has the right to prevent surface water from an adjoining tract flowing onto his estate.[43] A county is not liable to landowners for damages to landowners caused by the discharge of surface waters from ditches constructed by the county authorities, though the water is thereby diverted from its natural course.[44]

It is held generally, in states adopting either rule, that a landowner has no right to collect the surface water from his land in a ditch or drain and discharge it on the land of another to the injury of the latter.[45] One has no right to construct a drain and thereby increase the natural flow of water onto the land of another.[46] One on whose land surface water is confined by natural barriers may not, by the construction of a ditch, cast it on the lands of another, to his material injury.[47] Where damages to property from surface water are due to the low situation of the land, it is immaterial whether the doctrine of the civil or common law be applied.[48] There can be no recovery from a municipality for property damaged by surface water simply because it lies lower than the grade of the street.[49]

46. Costello v. Pomeroy, 120 Iowa, 213, 94 N. W. 490. A city which has macadamized a street and constructed catch-basins and conduits whereby the flow of water draining therefrom into a natural watercourse is increased is not liable for damages resulting from the overflow of such stream, unless the drainage is increased to an extent beyond that which could be accommodated by the watercourse in its natural condition. Smith v. Auburn, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 396. Where a town, while grading certain streets and lots, thereby causes a large amount of surface water to be turned into a brook, it is liable for damages to the land of a riparian proprietor resulting from the consequent overflow of such brook. Willoughby v. Allen [R. I.] 56 Atl. 1109. A person has no right to allow surface water to collect on his premises and then discharge it in a body, at one point, on the land of another. Ready v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 467, 72 S. W. 142. Where a railroad company in constructing its road changes the grade of a street, diverts the natural flow of the water, and carries it to the land of an adjoining owner through a box drain, from whence it is carried onto the land of a third person, it is liable to such third person for injuries sustained thereby. Dennison v. Somerset & C. R. Co., 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 248. The company's liability is not affected by the fact that the city consented to the construction of the drain, or that the owner of the land on which the water was first discharged consented thereto, or that other property owners had contributed to the damage by discharging sewage into such drain. Id. Town supervisors, in improving a highway, are not authorized to collect surface water in artificial drains or ditches, out of their natural course, and unnecessarily cause it to flow upon the lands of an adjacent proprietor, to his damage, nor in a greater volume or quantity than it would naturally otherwise do. Gunnerus v. Spring Prairie [Minn.] 98 N. W. 340. Where an owner of a tract divided it into separate lots and conveyed them to different persons, the grantees of the upper lots have, by implication, an easement for flowage of spring and surface water along natural channels over the lower lots. Riverside Cotton Mills v. Lanier [Va.] 45 S. E. 875. Evidence insufficient to show that plaintiff had an easement to have a ditch kept open by defendant. Robertson v. Daviess Gravel Road Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1114, 77 S. W. 189. Defendant held to have waived the right to discharge water on defendant's land. Raleigh v. Clark, 24 Ky. L. R. 1554, 71 S. W. 857. A railroad company has no right to discharge water from ditches along its tracks into a depression or gully, not constituting a natural watercourse, in the land of an adjoining owner. Frisbie v. Cowen, 18 App. D. C. 381.

A person may not allow surface water to accumulate[50] and stand in excavations on his land until it becomes stagnant, resulting in the sickness of adjoining owners. This rule applies to municipal corporations.[51]

Rights in ditches.—The general rules relating to the drainage or reclamation of lands are the subject of a separate article.[52] The uninterrupted use of a ditch as a wasteway may ripen into a prescriptive right, though such use is not exclusive of every one but the user.[53] It must be hostile and notorious as against the servient owner.[54] A bill to enjoin its use as without right will not support relief on a finding that sometimes it had been negligently kept.[55]

The right to acquire and reclaim public subaqueous or swamp lands is given by various Federal and state laws.[56]

§ 10. Levees, dikes, seawalls, and other protective works.—The taking of land for levee purposes,[57] or the construction of a levee along the banks of a river is a public use in aid of which the power of eminent domain may be invoked and assessments levied.[58] In constructing a levee along a river for the purpose of protecting lands from overflow during floods, a city is exercising a governmental function and hence is not liable to a property owner for failure to keep the levee in repair.[59]

50. See Nuisance, 2 Curr. Law, p. 1062. Adams v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 1006. One who suffers special damage through sickness or the depreciation of his property on account of a pool of stagnant water has a cause of action against the party maintaining it, even though it is a public nuisance. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Parish, 117 Ga. 893. A railroad company is not negligent in so constructing and maintaining its road as to cause surface water to be discharged upon a portion of its own land, unless such standing water is, in itself, a nuisance. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Gayton [Neb.] 93 N. W. 163. Hence, where a company so constructs its roadway across its own land that surface water is collected on a portion of it, subsequent grantees of that portion cannot maintain an action against the company by reason of the maintenance of such roadway in its original condition. Id. The fact that water was already standing on land at the time of an unlawful diversion of other water onto it would not necessarily defeat recovery for damages caused by such diversion. Warner v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 120 Iowa, 159, 94 N. W. 490.

51. City of Ennis v. Gilder [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 585. Where a city built a dam across a stream for the purpose of providing a reservoir for a city waterworks, thereby causing the water to back up on plaintiff's land, and the varying rainfall caused the lake so formed to rise and recede, so that pools of stagnant water remained on said land, causing sickness, it was held that such lake was a nuisance and that plaintiff was entitled to have it abated. 54. An answer setting up a prescriptive right to discharge waste waters on plaintiff's land which alleged the maintenance and use of a waste ditch "continuously, openly, peaceably, uninterruptedly, under claim of right, and adversely," showed by implication that such use was notorious. Abbott v. Pond, 142 Cal. 393, 76 Pac. 60. The use so alleged was necessarily "hostile," and it was unnecessary to use that term in the answer. Id.

55. Where plaintiffs sue to enjoin defendants from discharging waste water on plaintiffs' land and it is found that defendants had acquired a prescriptive right to maintain and use a waste ditch for such purpose, plaintiffs are not entitled to relief in such suit, on a finding that defendants had at times been negligent in maintaining the ditch. State v. Woodruff [Miss.] 36 So. 79.

63. The act of Arkansas (Acts 1883, p. 163), providing for building and repairing levees in Chicot county, which by section 18 provides that the damages sustained by a landowner shall be assessed by a sheriff's jury of six men, is therein invalid, as in violation of the constitution of that state (art. 12, § 9), requiring compensation for land condemned by a corporation to be fixed in court by a jury of twelve men. The board of levee inspectors created by the act is a corporation within the meaning of the constitution. Archer v. Board of Levee Inspectors, 128 Fed. 125.

67. Section 238 of the Constitution of Mississippi, declaring that no property situated between the levee and the Mississippi river shall be taxed for levee purposes, refers only to real property or property having the qualities thereof, and hence a tax imposed under Acts 1894, c. 78, on the business of conducting a saloon in such district, is valid. St. §§ 2380-2417), relating to the construction of drainage districts construed, and held that an assessment for that purpose is a lien on the land and not a claim against the owner thereof individually. Scherm v. Short, 25 Ky. L. R. 1108, 77 S. W. 357. The statute of limitations begins to run against such lien from the time the work is accepted by the county surveyor and gives the certificate provided for therein. Dixon v. Labry [Ky.] 78 S. 69. Land acquired by the board of levee commissioners of Mississippi at a valid tax sale for levee taxes cannot be again legally sold for levee taxes while so held by the board. The three years' statute of limitations (Miss. Rev. Code 1892, § 2735) applies only to lands taxable, and therefore subject to sale when the sale occurred. Mitchell v. Bond [Miss.] 36 So. 148. § 12. Milling and power and other nonconsuming privileges; dams, canals and races.—The legislature of a state has power to authorize the construction of a dam across a non-navigable stream.[72] A right to flow the land of others by the erection of a dam across a stream is a right of eminent domain; it will only be granted where the court shall find that it will be of public benefit.[73] The right to flow land may be acquired by prescription.[74] Where a mill is created and water power obtained by the aid and co-operation of adjoining landowners, any right of flowage over their premises of water for the mill arranged for and contemplated by the owners, as subscribers to its construction, becomes appurtenant to the mill.[75] If one owning land traversed by a stream sells a portion thereof to another, and at the same time gives him by parol the right to overflow the remainder of the land by erecting a dam on the portion conveyed, and the purchaser, relying on such agreement, erects and maintains such dam and a mill operated by water, the parol agreement becomes enforceable.[76] A sheriff's deed of mill property, together with the appurtenances thereto belonging, passes the easements appurtenant to such property and necessary to its use and enjoyment, such as the right to maintain a dam and flow adjoining land, owned and used by the mortgagor in connection therewith.[77] An easement consisting of the right to maintain a mill pond upon the land of another does not deprive the owner of the land of any use thereof, which does not interfere with the enjoyment of the easement.[78] An easement for the maintenance of a dam is measured by its capacity as determined from its height.[79]

§ 13. Irrigation and water supply. Common-law rights and the doctrine of appropriation. Common-law rule.—A riparian proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of the waters of the stream flowing by his land for irrigation purposes, subject to the like right of all other riparian proprietors.[80] What is a reasonable use is largely a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances

73. Avery v. Vt. Elec. Co., 75 Vt. 235, 59 L. R. A. 817. In Vermont, it is held that a right to flow the land of others will not be granted under the statute in the absence of any showing of a public use, on the theory that the provision is not a right of eminent domain, but a statutory regulation of rights common to riparian owners. Id. In Massachusetts, a mill owner who flows tillage land is liable merely for damages which are recoverable only under the mill acts. Carmichael v. Henry Wood's Sons Co., 184 Mass. 73, 67 N. E. 961. In an action by the proprietor of an upper water power to abate the dam of a lower owner, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that defendant's dam had been raised in violation of the Wisconsin statute (Rev. St. 1898, § 3375), forbidding the erection of a dam to the injury of any existing mill. Evans v. Bacon, 113 Wis. 380, 95 N. W. 375. In Pennsylvania, it is held that, if by repairs to a dam or by the construction of a new dam to replace an old one, land be flooded to a greater extent than it had been for 21 years before, the owner of the dam is liable for the injury, although its height may not have been increased. Lynch v. Troxell, 207 Pa. 162.

74. Phillips v. Watuppa Reservoir Co., 184 Mass. 404, 68 N. E. 848. Where one maintains a dam which sets water back on the adjacent lands of other owners, there is no interruption in the continuity of the user so as to affect his right to the easement of flooding the land, though periodically and to suit his own convenience, he lets the water out to float logs. Hall v. State, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 96.

76. If viewed as a license, the acts of the purchaser render it irrevocable, and if as an easement they take it out of the statute of frauds. Same rule applies where the land is conveyed in consideration of the erection of the mill, and the privileges given consist of other beneficial rights in connection therewith. Johnson v. Sherman County Irr., W. P. & Imp. Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1096.

77. Johnson v. Sherman County Irr., W. P. & Imp. Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1096. Evidence held to warrant a decree allowing plaintiff to maintain a mill race and a mill pond, and to use such quantity of water as will develop twenty horse power. Id.

of each particular case.[81] It depends primarily on the amount of water available for such purposes, the number of persons who so use it, the size, situation, and character of the stream, and the nature of the region.[82] In the exercise of such right, the upper owner must not waste, needlessly diminish, or wholly consume the water, to the injury of other owners, nor so as to prevent reasonable use of it by them also.[83] In case the reasonable use of the water, consistent with a like use by other riparian owners, cannot be made, the injury to a riparian owner by reason of appropriation of water by an irrigation enterprise is nominal only.[84] A riparian proprietor's right, as such, to the use of water for irrigation purposes, applies to riparian lands only, and he cannot rightfully divert to nonriparian lands water which he has a right to use on riparian land, but does not so use.[85] Such rights are a part of the land.[86] The rights of the riparian owner to the use of the water attach at the time of his settlement upon the land for the purpose of holding the same as a homestead or pre-emption.[87] A riparian proprietor is entitled only to the ordinary and natural flow of the stream, and cannot claim as against an appropriator, the flow of the flood waters of the stream.[88] A right which is riparian is not necessarily made appurtenant by a partition which attaches a water right to nonriparian lands.[89]

Prior appropriation.—In many of the western states, the doctrine of prior appropriation has taken the place of or modified the common-law rule as to the use of water,[90] and congress has recognized such doctrine, but the recognition is not an unchangeable contract with the public.[91] Legislation cannot authorize appropriator's rights to retroact on riparian rights already vested.[92]

This rule is that the right to use the waters of a stream may be acquired

86. Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905. It is suggested that the extent of land to which riparian rights to the use of water for irrigation may be claimed cannot exceed the area acquired by a single entry or purchase of the government and that such area should be limited to 40 acres, but this was not decided finally. 89. Where a tract of land to which appertained riparian rights to water for irrigation purposes was partitioned, and the land was classified, each co-tenant receiving a proportionate share of each class, and the prior right to the use of the water was attached to the first class land, each owner receiving a share of water in proportion to his share of the land, the partition held not to have changed the water right from a riparian right to a right appurtenant, although some of the first class land did not abut on the stream, but merely to have cut off all land not first class from participation in the riparian rights formerly belonging to the whole tract. Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905. After such partition, no owner was entitled to the full flow of the stream through his land, but only to so much of the water as was reasonably necessary for his use. Id.

90. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781.

In Texas, it is held that in arid portions of the state the use of the waters of a stream for irrigation purposes is on an equal footing with its use for domestic purposes, while in non-arid portions its use for irrigation purposes is subordinate to the use for domestic purposes. Hall v. Carter [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 19. By arid portions of the state is meant those portions where the rainfall is insufficient for agricultural purposes, and irrigation is therefore necessary. Id.

91. One who diverts water from a flowing stream for a beneficial purpose may have the use of it so long as he conforms to the law regulating such matters. Mohl v. Lamar Canal Co., 128 Fed. 776. But he has no contract with or grant from the government, Federal or state, in respect to his privilege. Rev. St. U. S. § 2339 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437), providing for the recognition of local customs regarding the diversion of water, does not create rights, but is a recognition by Congress of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continuance. by appropriation, and actual diversion and application to a beneficial use.[93] The right to the water is merely usufructuary.[94] Appropriators of the water of a stream have priority of rights therein in their order of appropriation, the latter appropriator being limited to rights not interfering with those of the earlier appropriator.[95] He is entitled to divert and use a quantity of water sufficient properly to irrigate his tillable land, if the cultivation thereof has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence.[96] The prior appropriator of water is entitled to all of it if necessary to irrigate his land under cultivation, and the surplus, after a reasonable use by him, should be distributed to subsequent claimants in the order of their respective appropriations.[97] If the first appropriator only takes a part of the waters of the stream for a certain period of time, subsequent appropriators may acquire a right to the whole or a part of the residue and also to the quantity of water used by the first appropriator at such times as not needed or used by him.[98] Persons claiming priorities to the water of a ditch must show in detail

Great Plains Water Co. v. Lamar Canal Co., 31 Colo. 96, 71 Pac 1119. In Colorado, it is held that notwithstanding the "prorating statute" there in force, there may be circumstances where water consumers from the same ditch may not be compelled to prorate with each other, but they may have different priorities in the use of the water based on the time of their several appropriations. Sections 34, 35, 36, Session Laws of Utah 1903, p. 223, providing for the service of summons by publication in suits to determine water rights in certain cases, and for the payment of costs in such actions by counties, are unconstitutional. Bear Lake County v. Budge [Idaho] 75 Pac. 614. A lower riparian owner cannot enjoin an irrigation enterprise by an upper appropriator under the irrigation act of Nebraska, merely because his damages for injury to his riparian rights have not been paid. His remedy is to sue at law for such damages. McCook Irr. & W. P. Co. v. Crews [Neb.] 96 N. W. 996. A judgment restraining defendants from "taking or diverting any of the first five feet of water of plaintiff" flowing in a certain canal did not establish an exclusive ownership of such canal in plaintiff against defendants. State v. Ausherman [Wyo.] 72 Pac. 200. Where a power company is under an agreement with a city, permitted to devote water primarily appropriated by the city to a secondary use, the abrogation of the agreement by the city cannot divest rights which have become vested thereby, and thus invalidate the appropriation once complete. Salt Lake City v. Salt Lake City W. & E. P. Co., 25 Utah, 456, 71 Pac. 1069. A defendant whose rights are inferior and subsequent to plaintiffs cannot question the latter's use of the waters of a stream on the ground that others may have a right thereto superior to plaintiffs'. 2. Platte Valley Irr. Co. v. Cent. Trust Co. [Colo.] 75 Pac. 391. Such proceedings are res adjudicata as to the volume awarded to a certain ditch, so that the question of abandonment in subsequent proceedings is limited to acts subsequently done. Burden on plaintiff to show abandonment of priorities so awarded. Id. A decree giving plaintiffs the right to a perpetual flow of a certain amount of water in a stream and quieting their title thereto, giving interveners a similar right to a certain amount, and enjoining defendants from interfering in any way with such flow, but permitting them to have a modification of the decree whenever they could show that their proposed work will not interfere with the flow decreed, held just and sufficiently certain and definite. Sander v. Wilson [Wash.] 76 Pac. 280.

3. Stenger v. Tharp [S. D.] 94 N. W. 402. It is held in Colorado that the estimated capacity of a canal means the ability of the canal to supply or deliver water and that in determining this question there must be taken into consideration not only the physical capacity of the canal, but also the volume of its decreed priorities in connection with the probability of obtaining water from the stream supplying them under normal conditions during the season of irrigation. Blakely v. Ft. Lyon Canal Co., 31 Colo. 224, 73 Pac. 249. Evidence in a case for diversion of water held insufficient to sustain a decree, in that it did not show the amount of water necessary for the use of the several parties by an approved form of measurement. Lost Creek Irr. Co. v. Rex, 26 Utah, 485, 73 Pac. 660. Evidence insufficient to show an enlarged use of water from a ditch. Burden of proof on party seeking to show enlarged use to show it. Platte Valley Irr. Co. v. Cent. Trust Co. [Colo.] 75 Pac. 391. Where it is claimed that seepage returned to the river has been lessened because of the use of water upon lands other than those to which it was originally applied, no relief will be granted unless the difference in the amount of such seepage is shown with a reasonable degree of certainty. Id. Where the court found that plaintiff and defendant were each the owners of a specified fractional part of an irrigation ditch and water right, a decree to the effect that if the proportion of water rights are confined to his specific or particular needs.[4] A prior appropriator of water for irrigation purposes may maintain a joint suit against all junior appropriators of waters which would have otherwise reached the head of his ditch.[5]

An appropriation for irrigation purposes is effected when the water is actually applied to the land.[6] If a riparian owner diverts water above his own lands, it is a question of fact whether it is an appropriation or a riparian use.[7]

Under various statutes, an appropriation may be made by public application by one who intends to use water for irrigation and who fulfills the statutory conditions.[8] A survey and work done before obtaining a permit required by law does not tend to show an appropriation.[9] In Nebraska, one has no right to appropriate the waters of the state for irrigation purposes and to condemn a right of way therefor without a permit from the state board of irrigation to divert the water to specific lands described in his application.[10] Water may not be diverted from a natural stream in Colorado unless the right to its beneficial use has been acquired and at the time is so needed.[11]

Where the waters of a natural stream have been appropriated and put to a beneficial use, the rights thus acquired include an interest in the stream from the point where the waters are diverted to the source thereof,[12] and any interference with the stream by a party having no interest therein that materially deteriorates the water in quantity or quality is unlawful and actionable.[13]

In some states the doctrine of prior appropriation and the common-law rule as to riparian rights to the use of water are both enforced.[14] In such cases the found to belong to any defendant should at any time be in excess of what he reasonably required, such excess should belong to plaintiff, held to be inconsistent and erroneous. Arroyo D. & W. Co. v. Dorman, 137 Cal. 611, 70 Pac. 737.

7. A riparian owner may go upon the land of another farther up the stream, and with his permission, there divert water for use upon his land below without thereby necessarily exercising other than his riparian right, the question of whether or not such act is an attempt to make an independent appropriation of the water being one of circumstances. Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905.

8. In Oregon, it is held that to constitute a valid appropriation of water, there must be first, an intent to apply it to some beneficial use, existing at the time or contemplated in the future; second, a diversion thereof from a natural stream; and third, an application of it within a reasonable time to some useful industry. Beers v. Sharpe [Or.] 75 Pac. 717; Carter v. Wakeman, 42 Or. 147, 70 Pac. 393. Under the Arizona statutes, an appropriator of water for irrigation is one who makes an application of public water upon lands he owns or possesses. Gould v. Maricopa Canal Co. [Ariz.] 76 Pac. 598. A canal company organized for the purpose of the diversion and carriage of water for irrigation, not being the owner of arable and irrigable land, is not an appropriator of water. Id. In Wyoming, a water right is now initiated by filing application for a permit to appropriate water and not by construction of a ditch. Whalon v. North Platte C. & C. Co. [Wyo.] 71 Pac. 995.

9. Under Rev. St. §§ 917-929, a permit is prerequisite. Whalon v. North Platte C. & C. Co. [Wyo.] 71 Pac. 995. Even if admissible on question of possession, its exclusion was harmless, there being no dispute. Id.

10. 14. This is the case in Montana and Nebraska. Willey v. Decker [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 210; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781. In Nebraska, it is held that the common-law rule and the doctrine of appropriation are not inconsistent, and that both exist concurrently in that state, and that the time when either right accrues must determine the superiority of title as between conflicting claimants. Id. In Nebraska, it is held that the right of appropriation of water for irrigation purposes has existed since the early settlement of the state, in those portions where irrigation is necessary. Id. The irrigation laws of Nebraska (Comp. St. 1901, c. 93a) abrogated the common-law rule of rights as at common law of individual riparian owners are recognized and applied where such rights have been acquired anterior to an appropriation in conflict therewith.[15]

The method of diverting or carrying the water or of making such application is immaterial.[16]

Appropriations may be measured by the period or time of use, as well as by the quantity employed.[17]

Appropriators may change the place or mode of diversion so long as others are not injured thereby.[18] It is not essential that the appropriator shall apply the water to riparian land, but it may be any distance from the stream;[19] the only restriction as to location being the feasibility of the diversion in view of the intended use, and the securing of a right of way over the lands of others for the ditch and works.[20] The right to use a ditch for the benefit of one's land may exist, though he can enjoy the same only by procuring a right of way to carry the water over intervening lands,[21] nor need he be a riparian owner.[22]

What may be appropriated.—The taking by a party from a ditch of water which does not belong to him, is not an appropriation within the meaning of the law regulating water rights on the public domain,[23] but water carried by a public carrier of water is public property until actually used by the appropriators and is subject to appropriation to the same extent and in the same manner as when it flowed in the natural stream.[24] Known underground streams of water, flowing in well defined channels,[25] including the underflow of surface streams, are subject to appropriation, and the rights acquired therein cannot be diverted by the wrongful act of another.[26] In the arid regions it will be presumed that water flowing in a natural channel, which reaches the banks of a stream and there disappears in the sands of the bed, augments the flow in the main stream by percolation, and the burden of proof is on the party diverting such water to show that it does not.[27] riparian ownership of water in that state as to all rights accruing in the future, but did not affect rights already acquired. Id. 27. Howcroft v. Union & J. Irr. Co., 25 Utah, 311, 71 Pac. 487. In California, it is held that the doctrine of prior appropriation applies to percolating waters, since the common-law rule could not be equitably applied in that state on account of its peculiar physical conditions. Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766. In California, it is held that one owning land bordering upon or adjacent to a stream may not make an excavation therein in order to intercept and obtain percolating water, and apply such water to any use other than its reasonable use upon the land from which it is taken, if he thereby diminishes the stream and causes damage to parties having rights

The doctrine of prior appropriation applies as between two appropriators from the same interstate stream who reside in different states.[28]

A water right may be obtained by adverse user and prescription.[29]—In order to create a right by prescription, the claimant's use of the water must be uninterrupted, adverse, under claim of right, and with the knowledge of the owner.[30] Hence a lower riparian owner cannot acquire a prescriptive right to receive the waters of a stream as against an upper proprietor.[31] No use of water by a subsequent appropriator can be adverse to the right of a prior appropriator unless such use deprives the prior appropriator of it when he has actual need of it.[32] Occupancy of water by stockholders cannot be regarded as adverse either to the company or to fellow stockholders,[33] nor can silence of other stockholders be an acquiescence until their supply was impaired or ceased.[34] When so obtained, it is only a right to use the quantity of water used while acquiring it.[35] Such right is superior to that of all persons subsequently acquiring an interest either as appropriators or riparian proprietors.[36] therein. McClintock v. Hudson, 141 Cal. 275, 74 Pac. 849; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766. See, also, § 5, ante.

28. Willey v. Decker [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 210. Owners of land in Montana may, by prior appropriation, acquire a right to the use of the waters of a stream having its source in that state and flowing thence into Wyoming, by joining with Wyoming landowners in the construction of a ditch, and thereby diverting said waters at a point in Wyoming for the irrigation of lands. In both states, such right may be protected by the courts of Wyoming. Id. In Nebraska, it is held that the fact that plaintiff resides outside the state on a stream flowing through the state does not deprive him of any rights which the laws of Nebraska give to a lower riparian owner. Cline v. Stock [Neb.] 98 N. W. 454. One who has acquired a right to the waters of a stream flowing through the public lands by prior appropriation, in accordance with the laws of the state where the appropriation is made, is protected in such right against subsequent appropriators, although the latter withdraw the water in a different state [Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2339, 2340 (Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437)]. Morris v. Bean, 122 Fed. 618.

29. Talbott v. Butte City Water Co. [Mont.] 73 Pac. 1111; Meng v. Coffey [Neb.] 93 N. W. 713. Evidence held insufficient to establish plaintiff's prescriptive right to maintain an irrigation ditch, or to show that he had acquired, by adverse user, an easement of a designated quantity of water. Strong v. Baldwin, 137 Cal. 432, 70 Pac. 288.

30. Ennor v. Raine [Nev.] 74 Pac. 1. Must be invasion of rights such as would give cause of action. Britt v. Reed, 42 Or. 76, 70 Pac. 1029. The use of a water right under a deed is adverse to the grantor, but not necessarily so to third persons not in privity with him. Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905. The use of water by one of the tenants in common of a water right cannot be considered hostile to the rights of other owners, unless characterized by much greater manifestations of hostile intent and more serious detriment than would be necessary if he were not such tenant in common. Id. Evidence insufficient to show that a right to use the waters of a creek on certain lands had been acquired by prescription. Id. Evidence held to show a right to obstruct a ditch by a flume crossing it. Centerville & K. Irr. Ditch Co. v. Sanger Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 385, 73 Pac. 1079. Findings, in an action to restrain the obstruction of the flow of water from springs on defendant's land, that the springs were so situated and that he had used the water for domestic and irrigation purposes for 25 years, and a decree awarding him its use at all times for domestic purposes and during certain seasons for irrigation purposes, held sustained by the evidence. Town of Suisun City v. De Freitas, 142 Cal. 350, 75 Pac. 1092.

31. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781; Cline v. Stock [Neb.] 98 N. W. 454; Dunn v. Thomas [Neb.] 96 N. W. 142. In Oregon, it is held that a person entitled to the use of water cannot be deprived thereof by merely seeing another constructing a ditch and making no objection thereto until the diversion is completed. Bolter v. Garrett [Or.] 75 Pac. 142. Appropriation of considerable quantities of water, in seasons when that may be done without sensible injury to lower owners, does not give a prescriptive right to divert the whole stream in dry seasons. Meng v. Coffey [Neb.] 93 N. W. 713.

32. Talbott v. Butte City Water Co. [Mont.] 73 Pac. 1111. The use by a lower proprietor of water after it has passed the upper proprietor's boundary is not adverse to the upper proprietor, so as to lay the basis for a claim thereto by adverse user, since the former is not injured thereby. Beers v. Sharpe [Or.] 75 Pac. 717.

33. Prescriptive use as against other stockholders supplied from different ditches and points of diversion. Richey v. East Redlands Water Co., 141 Cal. 221, 74 Pac. 754.

34. Richey v. East Redlands Water Co., 141 Cal. 221, 74 Pac. 754.

35. Hall v. Carter [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 19. It is not error to adopt as a measure for determining the amount of water used in acquiring a prescriptive right the distance to which the water flowed on the lands of a lower proprietor during the period of obtaining the right. Id.

36. Britt v. Reed, 42 Or. 76, 70 Pac. 1029; McCall v. Porter, 42 Or. 49, 70 Pac. 820. It is held in Nebraska that the appropriation of

The right of appropriation can be lost only by abandonment or by adverse possession.[37]—An abandonment of a water right occurs when the party in possession deserts the property without an intention to reclaim it.[38] The abandonment of land for the irrigation of which water is appropriated is an abandonment of the appropriation.[39]

Ditch rights of way. Eminent domain.—United States statutes (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1535), granting rights of way across public lands for the construction of canals and ditches, give the grantee a mere easement across the land for the purpose of maintaining such ditch, and he has no right to use the land for any other purpose.[40] One who acquires such land subsequent to the building of such ditch takes it subject to the easement.[41] The use of water for irrigation is a public use, and a statute providing for the condemnation of lands for canal purposes is constitutional.[42] A city may not charge to the owners the cost of reconwater by "squatter's right" does not, by virtue of Rev. St. U. S. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437), give to a settler who has appropriated water in that way, in that state, for a less period than 10 years, an exclusive right as against other settlers on the same stream, but if such settler afterwards receives a patent from the government, he may count the time during which he appropriated the water as a squatter in making out the statutory period of prescription, as against other patentees from the government on the same stream. Meng v. Coffey [Neb.] 93 N. W. 713. Where one stands by and sees another preparing to appropriate the waters of a spring without making any claim thereto, he is estopped to subsequently claim the right to use such spring as a prior appropriator. Orient Min. Co. v. Freckleton [Utah] 74 Pac. 652.

37. Cannot be lost by signing a contract for the use of the water for a season, the contract stipulating that he thereby waived any and all rights to the use of water in the future, the canal company being a public carrier of water. Gould v. Maricopa Canal Co. [Ariz.] 76 Pac. 598. Nor is the right lost by abandoning the use of a ditch rendered useless as a carrier of water by reason of increased diversions from the stream. Id. The owner of land and of a water right privilege appurtenant thereto sold both, he later repurchased the land without the water right and obtained water from the canal by renting other water rights. Held an abandonment of the original water right. Brockman v. Grand Canal Co. [Ariz.] 76 Pac. 602.

38. Such intention is not shown by mere nonuser or failure to maintain. Butterfield v. O'Neill [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 807. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding that defendants had not abandoned priorities previously awarded them in adjudication proceedings. Platte Valley Irr. Co. v. Cent. Trust Co. [Colo.] 75 Pac. 891. Evidence held to show an abandonment of a water right. Goon v. Proctor, 27 Mont. 526, 71 Pac. 1003.

39. Rutherford v. Lucerne C. & P. Co. [Wyo.] 75 Pac. 445. The subsequent acquisition of other lands in the same vicinity will not restore such right in the absence of proof that such acquisition was contemplated at the time of the appropriation. Id.

40. Whitmore v. Pleasant Valley Coal Co [Utah] 75 Pac. 748. The owner of the land may remove from the right of way material placed thereon which is intended to be used in the erection of a saloon on such right of way. Id.

41. Whitmore v. Pleasant Valley Coal Co. [Utah] 75 Pac. 748. Under U. S. Statutes (Act July 26, 1866, c. 262 [14 Stat. 251, U. S. Comp St. 1901, p. 1437]), giving the prior appropriator a right of way for conveying the water along its natural channel, and through ditches constructed prior to the time that other rights attached to the land traversed by these watercourses, all subsequent appropriators hold subject to this easement, and the prior appropriator has the right to go upon their lands and remove dams, etc., by which his flow of water is obstructed and diverted. Ennor v. Raine [Nev.] 74 Pac. 1. Facts held insufficient to entitle plaintiff to an injunction forbidding the discharge of water used in operating a placer mine, into a ditch running through his farm. McCann v. Wallace, 117 Fed. 936.

42. Nash v. Clark [Utah] 75 Pac. 371. Under the constitution and laws of California (Const. § 1, art. 14, Laws 1895, c. 115), providing that "the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental or distribution" is a public use, the word appropriation includes all water, however acquired, which is devoted to public use and is not limited to water appropriated under the provisions of the civil code. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 Pac. 395. The construction and operation of irrigation enterprises are works of internal improvement, and private property, reasonably necessary therefor, can be taken under the power of eminent domain under the laws of Nebraska [Comp. St. 1901, c. 93a, art. 2]. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781. The Nebraska Irrigation Act of 1895 (Comp. St. 1901, c. 93a), construed and held constitutional. Id. The term "domestic purposes" as used in the Nebraska irrigation act (Stat. 1901, c. 93a, art. 2, § 43) does not refer to the diversion of large quantities of water in canals or pipe lines. Id. The statutes of Utah giving individuals and companies the right to condemn rights of way for irrigation ditches (Rev. St. Utah 1898, §§ 3588, 1277, 1278) are constitutional. Nash v. Clark [Utah] 75 Pac. 371.

A public use of water must be for the general public or some portion of it. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co. [Cal.] 70 Pac. 672. Where a number of persons owning land who are each entitled to take water from a common source for use on their land, either by virtue of an appropriation under the code, or by prescription, or as riparian owners, form a corporation, structing a flume across a street to conform to legal specifications unless so empowered.[43]

Remedies and procedure.—A riparian proprietor, including a lessee, is entitled to an injunction to restrain the unlawful diversion of waters of a stream adjoining his land, though the injury caused thereby is incapable of ascertainment or of being estimated in damages.[44] Persons who take under the diverter are not necessary parties.[45] A general allegation of irreparable injury by reason of the diversion of waters from an irrigation ditch is not sufficient to warrant the granting of a temporary injunction, but the facts upon which the allegation is based must be shown.[46] If it be alleged that a diversion was made by enlarging the head of a branch, the answer must controvert such effect.[47] In an action for damages for the destruction of a crop by defendant's failure to furnish water for irrigation purposes, the measure of damages is the value of the crop in the condition it was before it perished.[48] Evidence of the value of the crop at maturity, less the cost of the labor, care, and attention necessary to put it in condition for the nearest market, is admissible, in connection with other testimony, to enable the jury to ascertain the amount of damages sustained.[49] Landowners may recover damages for injuries to their property caused by the faulty construction of a canal,[50] or its mismanagement or negligent maintenance.[51] and delegate to it the work of diverting and distributing the water, reserving to themselves their rights therein, they do not thereby dedicate or appropriate to public use the water thus reserved and used by them. The water still remains the subject of individual ownership and private use. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 Pac. 395.

43. A city ordinance requiring water for irrigation purposes to be conveyed across the streets in covered flumes construed, and defendants held not to be liable for the cost of such flumes constructed by the city. Bountiful City v. Lee [Utah] 75 Pac. 368.

44. The fact that some of the waters of the river at times overflow its banks below the point of diversion does not justify such diversion. Cal. P. & A. Co. v. E. C. & L. Co., 127 Fed. 741. Where a canal unlawfully diverts a part of the waters of a stream, an injunction will not be refused because it also diverts flood waters which may be lawfully appropriated, and, in the absence of data on which to base a different order, the entire diversion will be enjoined. Id. A suit in equity will lie to determine the rights of a number of persons claiming the right to divert or use the waters of a stream and to enjoin the infringement of rights acquired under the Nebraska irrigation act. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781; McCook Irr. & W. P. Co. v. Crews [Neb.] 96 N. W. 996; Cline v. Stock [Neb.] 98 N. W. 454.

45. In a suit by a riparian owner on a main stream to enjoin enlargement of the head of a branch stream above him, and diversion of an undue amount of water for irrigation, persons using water from the branch are not necessary parties defendant. Sander v. Wilson [Wash.] 76 Pac. 280.

46. Morris v. Bean, 123 Fed. 613. Statutes of Colorado (Mills' Ann. St. §§ 2427-2429, 2432), relating to appeals in irrigation cases, construed. Needle Rock Ditch Co. v. Crawford-Clipper Ditch Co. [Colo.] 75 Pac. 424. Evidence sufficient to entitle plaintiff to damages for injuries to his land resulting from the construction of a canal. Bullock v. Lake Drummond C. & W. Co., 132 N. C. 179. A bill in equity which discloses a continuing trespass on the lands of complainant by a large number of defendants, and a constant and wrongful diversion of water from a stream thereon, which tends to depreciate the value of the land, is sufficient to entitle complainant to an injunction against such trespass. Miller v. Rickey, 127 Fed. 573. Where a canal company, in widening its canal, unlawfully deposited mud and sand on the land of another, and filled up his ditch so that water overflowed onto his land, it is liable for damages resulting therefrom. Pinnix v. Lake Drummond C. & W. Co., 132 N. C. 124.

47. In a suit to enjoin diversion of water from a stream by enlarging the head of a branch, an answer is demurrable which sets out that defendant does not claim a right to any water in excess of the natural flow, and that plaintiff claims only the natural flow in the main stream, since the issue is the effect of the intended enlargement on the flow. Sander v. Wilson [Wash.] 76 Pac. 280.

48, 49. Anderson v. Adams, 43 Or. 621, 74 Pac. 215.

50. For seepage due to faulty construction. Turpen v. Turlock Irr. Dist., 141 Cal. 1, 74 Pac. 295.

51. A corporation is liable for damage to a landowner caused by the act of its employe in charge of its irrigation canal in opening a waste gate and discharging surplus water on the land. Stuart v. Noble Ditch Co. [Idaho] 76 Pac. 255. A director of a water corporation who consents to the location, plan and method of construction cannot recover damage by seepage sustained by him when such damage might readily have been forseen (Id.), or until the company has had notice and a reasonable time to repair (Id.).

Such damages are not included in the damages awarded in proceedings to condemn land for the canal.[52] An action for damage to land caused by the negligent construction and maintenance of an irrigation canal, lawfully built, is not an action for "waste or trespass upon land," within the meaning of a limitation statute.[53]

For interfering with a water distributer appointed by the court in a joint ditch proceeding in Wyoming, a court commissioner or judge in vacation has no power to punish one as in contempt.[54]

§ 14. Irrigation districts and irrigation and power companies.—The manner in which irrigation districts may be created and the duties of their officers are fixed by statute, which legislation is within state and territorial power.[55] There is ordinarily a land owner's petition or election signifying a majority assent.[56] The district is a corporation in so far at least that it is not to be collaterally attacked save on the usual grounds,[57] and that laws respecting organization are subject to legislative change retroacting on existing districts.[58] So in actions by or against it, the property owners of a district are bound by judgment.[59] Bonds may be issued only for the purposes authorized.[60] Expenses are usually borne by the regions benefited;[61] but cannot be laid upon lands owned by the United States as part of the public domain.[62] In Washington, warrants

54. Under the Wyoming statutes, a commissioner has no power to punish one charged with interfering with a water distributor appointed by said commissioner, nor to punish him for contempt. The trial involving an issue of fact, it could not be heard by a judge in vacation. Mau v. Stoner [Wyo.] 76 Pac. 584.

55. The laws of the United States (Act July 26, 1866 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437]; Act of March 3, 1877 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1549]; Act March 3, 1891 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1570]) do not forbid territorial or state legislation with respect to the use of public waters. Gutierres v. Albuquerque L. & I. Co., 188 U. S. 545, 47 Law. Ed. 588. Nor is the law of New Mexico (Act Feb. 24, 1887), authorizing the incorporation of irrigation companies and empowering them to take and divert surplus public waters over and above the needs of prior appropriators, inconsistent with the said acts of congress. 56. In Washington, a petition for the organization of an irrigation district may be signed by less than 50 landowners, if they constitute a majority within the proposed district under 1 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4166. Rothchild Bros. v. Rollinger, 32 Wash. 307, 73 Pac. 367.

57. A decree confirming the organization of an irrigation district, being obtained by fraud, may be set aside by a court of equity. Obtained by false affidavits and bribery of attorney employed to contest petition for confirmation. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., 142 Cal. 601, 76 Pac. 381. Where the signatures of the requisite number of freeholders could not be obtained to a petition for the formation of an irrigation district, and the promoters thereof conveyed land to parties so as to make them freeholders, they to sign the petition and then reconvey to the grantors, held fraud; and decree confirming the organization of such district would be set aside in equity. 58. Act of California March 31, 1897 (Stat. 1897, c. 189), providing for the organization and government of irrigation districts, applies to existing districts organized under prior laws. Board of Sup'rs of Riverside County v. Thompson [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 860.

59. A judgment against an irrigation district held conclusive as to all questions which were or might have been litigated therein, against not only the parties then before the court, but also against the property owners of the district and all parties who might thereafter be called upon to enforce the judgment therein rendered. Board of Sup'rs of Riverside County v. Thompsor. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 860.

60. Under the laws of Cal. (Stat. 1887, p. 29, §§ 12, 16, 36, 37), authorizing the directors of irrigation districts to issue bonds for the construction and purchase of canals and waterworks, it is held that bonds issued in payment of water right certificates and of warrants drawn for salaries of officers of the district are void. Leeman v. Perris Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 540, 74 Pac. 24.

61. In Colorado (Mills' Ann. St. §§ 2440, 2442), it is held that a county lying within the watershed of a stream mentioned in the statute creating a water division is not embraced within such division, so as to make it liable for a part of the salary of the superintendent of irrigation, where no lands within the county are irrigated from the streams mentioned. Chew v. Board of Com'rs of Fremont County [Colo. App.] 76 Pac. 764.

62. Lands belonging to the U. S. and included within the boundaries of an irrigaissued are payable in full in order of issue, regardless of a shortage of funds to pay all,[63] and draw interest from date of presentation.[64] The organization of a district is not the same as a proceeding to confirm it.[65] Accordingly, a limitation on suits to attack the former does not apply to suits to annul confirmation,[66] and especially not when it is a short term and fraud is urged.[67] In Nebraska, nonirrigable lands cannot be included in a district, and the statute distinguishes such from irrigable lands which for some reason should be excluded from the district and the burdens incident to it. Hence, the remedy provided as to the latter class for the purpose of detaching them while exclusive can have no application to nonirrigable lands erroneously included; and to correct this, equity will afford relief.[68] It is sufficient to show their nonirrigable character to allege that they are low, wet and swampy.[69]

Irrigation and power companies.—A company diverting water from a stream for the purpose of supplying owners and possessors of arable and irrigable land is a quasi public servant.[70] A public carrier of water is required to continue the service so long as such service is required by appropriators for the necessary irrigation of their lands, and the water is available from the common source.[71] On applications to a water company exceeding its capacity, it is the duty of the company to limit the contracts to its capacity and to those appropriations possessing the older rights of appropriation.[72] A canal company not being itself an appropriator, its only warrant for its diversion of water is that it supplies appropriators.[73] Users of water from a ditch or canal acquire such a property right as they may transfer to other lands under such ditch or canal.[74] The purchaser may transfer the water to other lands under the canal so long as the change does not interfere with the rights of others.[75] Such companies have only the powers expressly granted them by statute or those necessarily implied therefrom, or incidental thereto.[76]

tion district organized under the laws of Cal. (St. 1887, p. 29, c. 34), without the consent of the U. S. or of a subsequent purchaser, are not liable under a judgment rendered against said district in an action on its bonds and are exempt from any assessment for the payment of the bonds. Nev. Nat. Bank v. Poso Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 344, 73 Pac. 1056.

63. Under Laws 1895, p. 145, § 7, it is held that warrants on ditch funds collected in accordance with that act are required to be paid in the order of their issue, though the earlier ones will exhaust the fund before all can be paid. State v. St. John, 30 Wash. 630, 71 Pac. 192.

64. Under Laws 1893, p. 76, such warrants issued under Laws 1889-90, p. 76, and the remedial act (Laws 1895, p. 145, § 7), curing the defects therein, draw interest from date of presentation and nonpayment thereof. State v. St. John, 30 Wash. 630, 71 Pac. 192.

65, 66, 67. The Irrigation District Act of California (St. 1887, p. 30, c. 34, as amended by St. 1891, p. 143, c. 127, § 3), declaring that the validity of the organization of irrigation districts shall not be attacked more than two years after the entry of the order of the board declaring the territory duly organized, does not apply to a suit to set aside a decree of confirmation. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., 142 Cal. 601, 76 Pac. 381.

§ 15. Water companies and water supply districts; municipal ownership. Private corporations and franchises.—The general law of corporations as applied to water companies[77] and other general matters[78] have been excluded. Water companies for public service are subject to legislative and municipal control, though in some respects private corporations.[79] If local consent be required for the formation of "a" company, a slight variance in name of the company as organized is immaterial.[80] They are quasi-public corporations and as such have only the powers expressly granted or necessarily implied for the purpose of carrying out the powers expressly granted.[81] If sources of supply are enumerated, they cannot resort to others.[82] As public servants, they may be empowered regardless of municipal consent to convey water through city streets.[83] The granting of franchises when delegated to municipalities must follow the statutory methods and conditions,[84] and lacking them cannot be cured by unconstitutional special legislation.[85] An excessive term if severable will be good in part.[86] Where a corporation is granted the right to furnish water and electric lights and power, the two rights are separate and distinct and it may forfeit one of them for nonuser without affecting the other.[87] An ordinance granting a franchise to a water com-flumes, ditches, etc., and for the connection therewith of other flumes, etc., construed, and held, that in a proceeding by a power company to condemn a right to connect its flume with the city canal, it is not necessary to show that the use to which the power company will apply it is a more necessary public use than that to which the city devotes it, the city owning a mere easement for the canal. Salt Lake City W. & E. P. Co. v. Salt Lake City, 25 Utah, 441, 71 Pac. 1067. It is held that the constitution of Utah (art. 11, § 6), prohibiting the alienation of water rights, waterworks or water supply owned by it, does not make illegal the acquisition by a power company of the right to connect its flume with the water canal of a city for the purpose of discharging water therein. 82. A water company authorized to take water from certain specified sources is confined to those sources for its supply. Smith v. Stoughton [Mass.] 70 N. E. 195.

83. Transportation corporations act of New York (Laws 1890, p. 1151, c. 556, § 82, subd. 2 as amended), granting water companies the right to use the streets of cities in certain cases, without their consent, construed. Rochester & L. O. Water Co. v. Rochester, 176 N. Y. 36, 68 N. E. 117. Under N. Y. Transportation Corporations Act (Laws 1890, c. 566, § 82, as amended), water companies have the right to lay pipes through the streets of a city between the source of supply and the town where the right to distribute the water has been obtained without the consent of such city and without being subject to regulation by its ordinances. Laws of Iowa (Code 1873, §§ 471, 489), relating to the right of municipalities to authorize the construction of waterworks by individuals or companies, and to the number of members of the council who must be present and vote on an ordinance authorizing such construction, and providing that ordinances passed for that purpose must contain only one subject, which must be expressed in the title, construed. Marion Water Co. v. Marion, 121 Iowa, 306, 96 N. W. 883.

85. Iowa Act of March 8, 1876, attempting to legalize a city ordinance granting a franchise to a water company for more than 25 years, contrary to § 473, Code 1873, held unconstitutional, as special legislation. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 234, 91 N. W. 1081.

86. Under the laws of Iowa (Code 1873, § 473), providing that the right to operate waterworks for a longer period than 25 years should not be granted to a water company, an ordinance granting an exclusive right for 25 years and an equal right with other companies for 25 years thereafter is invalid as to the latter 25 years. The ordinance is severable, and the grant for the first 25 years is valid. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 234, 91 N. W. 1081.

87. State v. Twin Village Water Co., 98 Me. 214. Where such a corporation is created under an act providing that some portion of its works must be in operation within a specified time, the completion of its water plant within that time vests it with the full chartered powers, and where the act fixes no time within which the remaining portion of the works must be put in operation, it must be done within a reasonable time. Id. The failure of such a corporation to furnish electricity, because the towns and cities which it served did not want and would not buy it, will not work a forfeiture of its charter. Id.

pany will be construed favorably to the city,[88] and a perpetual franchise has been held invalid.[89] Pursuant to reserved power, the city may thereafter construct a plant of its own.[90] Franchises and properties may be transferred if the statute or the terms under which they are held does not forbid.[91] Laws relating to water companies formed to supply water to cities and towns apply only to corporations and not to individuals.[92]

Condemnation of property by water companies.—The power to take certain kinds of water supply excludes other kinds.[93] Compensation may include depreciation of a spring flowing into a source of supply.[94] In such ways as are private, compensation must be made,[95] else a person interested may sue for removal of mains.[96] It has been refused for temporary interruption of business.[97]

Water boards and districts.—When public water service is administered by a board possessing corporate attributes, a public corporation is formed[98] which is a municipal and not a state agency if acting in respect to service for a limited district.[99] Laws governing such are subject to legislative change within constitutional limits.[1] General authority to provide a supply is liberally construed with respect to the source and method.[2]

89. A city has no power to grant a perpetual franchise in its streets to a water company in the absence of express statutory authority. A city ordinance giving a right to lay water pipes in the streets, which does not fix any term for the privilege, is a grant of license only, revocable at the will of the city. 98. The sewerage and water board of New Orleans is a corporation. State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838.

99. Boards whose functions relate exclusively to water and sewerage works are municipal and not state agencies. State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838.

1. An act of the legislature providing for a tax for sewer and waterworks and creating a special board to have charge of them is a public law relating to a public subject within the domain of the general legislative power of the state, and involving public rights and the public welfare of the entire community affected by it, and such act can therefore be amended or changed at any time by the legislature. State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838. Louisiana Act No. 111, 1892, creating a sewerage and water board for the city of New Orleans, construed and held unconstitutional in so far as it changes the membership of the board created by Act No. 6 of the Extra Session of 1899. Constitutional amendment ratifying tax for waterworks and sewers also construed. Id.

Public ownership.—The legislature may grant to any municipal corporation power to construct or to purchase and maintain a system of waterworks to furnish water for municipal purposes and for the use of its inhabitants and to raise the money therefor by taxation,[3] and the fact that the acquired property may involve the supplying of persons outside the corporation does not lead to illegal taxation.[4] But no power exists beyond that granted or implied,[5] which must be strictly in the prescribed method.[6] When the issuance of bonds is contemplated, the sanction of an election is often required[7] and limitations on bonded debt are met.[8] Such elections are usually initiated by ordinance or petition,[9] and are conducted in general like other elections unless otherwise provided.[10] When an election is to be had and several modes of providing a water system are proposed, they should be separately put on the ballot.[11]

This power includes the power to furnish water to inhabitants.[12] It may be exercised in abrogation of a franchise if therein reserved.[13] Incident to the power is that of incurring debts for the cost of construction,[14] such expense being "necessary."[15] The incumbrance on a plant taken over is not reckoned as the creation of a debt.[16]

2. The authority to use driven wells to obtain a water supply is included in the general authority to secure such a supply. Westphal v. New York, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 252.

3. Mayo v. Dover & F. V. Fire Co., 96 Me. 539. Mass. St. 1882, p. 107, c. 145, relating to the purchase of the rights of a certain water company by a town, construed. Gardner Water Co. v. Gardner [Mass.] 69 N. E. 1051.

4. The fact that the municipality may be obliged to furnish water to a few persons residing outside its limits will not make such taxation unequal within the meaning of the Maine constitutional provision forbidding unequal taxation. Mayo v. Dover & F. V. Fire Co., 96 Me. 539.

5. A village has no power to construct or purchase a waterworks system other than that expressly given it by statute. Laws N. Y. 1875, p. 157, c. 181, as amended, and Laws 1896, c. 769, relating to boards of water commissioners construed. In re Board of Water Com'rs of Village of White Plains, 176 N. Y. 239, 68 N. E. 348.

In Oklahoma, municipal corporations having a population of not less than 1,000 may call elections to issue bonds to construct a system of waterworks [Act Cong. March 4, 1898, c. 35, § 1]. Ter. v. Whitehall [Okl.] 76 Pac. 148. Where a school district comprises other territory besides the town, the school census required by the statute before action on bonds is complied with where a census of the entire district is taken and an assessor's census of the town shows a bona fide population of over 1,000. Id.

A stipulation in a suit to enjoin a city from constructing a waterworks, that the city intended to and would if not restrained construct said works and raise the funds therefor in the manner provided by law, eliminates any question as to the legality or regularity of the proceedings taken by the city to raise funds for the work. City of Helena v. Helena Waterworks Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 1.

6. The commissioner of water supply of Greater New York has no authority to purchase land for the purpose of increasing the water supply of Brooklyn without the approval of the New York board of aldermen, and until maps of the land to be acquired have been prepared and approved in accordance with the provisions of the city charter secs. 486, 488, 489. Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466), construed. Queens County Water Co. v. Monroe, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 105.

10. See Municipal Bonds, 2 Curr. Law, p. 931; Elections, 1 Curr. Law, p. 981.

11. Under Session Laws 1897, c. 82 and 1901, c. 107, authorizing cities of the first class to provide themselves with waterworks of their own, the purchase of an existing plant and the construction of a new one are distinct methods of executing such design, and a ballot submitting to the voter a proposition to issue bonds, "to purchase, procure, provide or contract for the construction of waterworks," is dual and for that reason illegal and an election carried thereby is void. City of Leavenworth v. Wilson [Kan.] 76 Pac. 400.

12. Under Burns' Rev. St. of Indiana 1901, § 3541, a city may construct works to obtain water for the use of its inhabitants. Scott v. La Porte [Ind.] 68 N. E. 278.

13. The grant of a franchise to a water company reserving to the municipality the right to construct "works or plants of a public nature" allows the city to construct a waterworks subject to statutory regulations. City of Helena v. Helena Waterworks Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 1.

14. It is held that under the laws of North Carolina (Code, §§ 3800, 3821), municipal corporations may contract debts for the purpose of building and maintaining waterworks. Fawcett v. Mt. Airy [N. C.] 45 S. E. 1029. See, also, Municipal Corporations, § 13, 2 Curr. Law, p. 978.

15. An expense incurred by a city for the purpose of building and maintaining a waterworks is held to be a necessary expense

The power to take properties for public ownership may be limited to companies formed under the act in which it is found, and in such case, the method of fixing the valuation cannot be changed by subsequent legislation.[17] A void statute cannot be construed as authorizing the acquisition of property by payment of a value as determined by the means it provided.[18] The owner of a system of waterworks maintained under a valid city ordinance granting a franchise therefor for 20 years may enjoin the city from taking the plant in an unlawful manner notwithstanding the expiration of the period.[19] A taxpayer may restrain a city from attempting to illegally vote away this right.[20] Where a water district is authorized to acquire, by eminent domain, the entire plant of a water company, it must take all the property of said company whether named in the act or not, including the plant, real estate not connected therewith, and the franchises, rights, and privileges held by it, exercised or capable of being exercised.[21] It takes the same rights and no greater;[22] and since the franchise passes, the subsequent acts of the company do not work a forfeiture.[23] Both the plant and the franchises are to be appraised at their present value, having in view their value as property in itself and as a source of income.[24] The vote of a town to purchase the plant within the meaning of art. 7, § 7, of the constitution of North Carolina, providing that debts may not be contracted by cities except for necessary expenses. Fawcett v. Mt. Airy [N. C.] 45 S. E. 1029.

16. State v. Topeka [Kan.] 74 Pac. 647. Laws 1901, ch. 73, does not authorize the acquirement by condemnation of any waterworks other than such as may have been constructed under a grant made under the provisions of such act. City of Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. [Kan.] 76 Pac. 451.

17. The company was to have a voice in selecting the appraisers. It was sought to be changed to a compulsory sale, the valuation to be fixed by a commission which it had no voice in selecting. City of Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. [Kan.] 76 Pac. 451.

18. Gen. St. 1901, sec. 664, intending to authorize cities to acquire waterworks by condemnation, and held void because of its defective title, cannot be construed as an attempt to require the sale of such property at a valuation to be fixed as therein provided. City of Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. [Kan.] 76 Pac. 451.

19. The method provided for fixing the valuation was by three appraisers, the method of selection of whom was fixed, which method was sought to be changed by a subsequent statute. City of Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. [Kan.] 76 Pac. 451.

20. An injunction granted to a taxpayer restraining the city council of Omaha from passing an ordinance postponing the accruing of the city's right to purchase the waterworks, such postponing being contrary to the provisions of the charter. Poppleton v. Moores [Neb.] 93 N. W. 747.

21. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185.

22. Where a municipal corporation purchases the franchises and rights of a water company, it acquires no greater rights than the corporation owned, and is limited to the same source of supply that the corporation was. Smith v. Stoughton [Mass.] 70 N. E. 195.

23. Where a town exercises its option to buy the plant of a water company by voting to purchase, the company's franchise passes to the town, and the company cannot thereafter forfeit it so as to deprive itself of the right of compensation therefor as part of the plant. Town of Bristol v. Bristol & W. Waterworks [R. I.] 55 Atl. 710.

24. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185. In fixing the value of the franchises it is proper to consider whether or not they are exclusive and irrevocable, their net earning power, present and prospective, developed and capable of development, at reasonable rates. The value to be assessed is that to the seller and not to the buyer. In considering prospective development of the use of a franchise, consideration must also be had of the fact that further investment may be necessary. Faithfulness or unfaithfulness in the duty to furnish pure water at reasonable rates shown in the past is not to be considered nor is the liability of the franchises to be forfeited on account of past acts of the company. In determining the present value of the company's plant, the actual construction cost thereof, with allowance for depreciation, may be considered; also the rates charged theretofore, and the actual earnings; the quality of water furnished, and the fitness of the plant and of the source of water supply to meet reasonable requirements in the present and the future; and the cost of reproducing the works. The cost of reproduction is evidence merely, and not conclusive. In fixing structure value appraisers should consider, among other things, the present efficiency of the system, the length of time necessary to construct the same de novo, the time necessary to develop a new system to the level of the present one in respect to business and income, and any added net income or profits which would accrue to a purchaser during the time required for such construction and development. Incidental damages to property having no relation with that taken except that of common ownership cannot be considered, nor can the impairment of the economy and efficiency of administration obtained by the combination of

of a water company creates an absolute contract from which the town cannot afterwards withdraw.[25] The public in possession pending ascertainment of the price is bound to reasonable care and not liable for natural deterioration.[26]

Title of the public.—The right to lay water pipes under a public highway is a mere license, and not an easement in the land.[27] In laying a water pipe under a public highway, a town acts in the same capacity as a nonmunicipal water company, and its rights are no greater.[28] A town has a beneficial interest in an easement of an aqueduct acquired by it for water pipes through private land, and is entitled to compensation when such land is condemned for another public use.[29]

Inalienability of public supply.—In Utah such rights are inalienable but this does not avoid a contract to allow diversion and return of water for power purposes,[30] and the city's attempted abrogation could destroy no vested rights therein.[31]

Contracts for public supply.—The general rules in regard to the contracts of municipal corporations apply to contracts made by them with water companies.[32] A municipal corporation has only such powers to contract with water companies as are granted to it by statute[33] or implied by reasonable necessity,[34] and as to some minor organizations it is not incident.[35] But ultra vires contracts many systems under one management. Outside property taken should be appraised at its fair market value. So far as the water system is practically exclusive, the element of good will should not be considered. Appraisers should consider the fact that the company is a going concern, with a profitable business and a permanent income assured and now being earned. Subject to these limitations, the owner is entitled to any appreciation due to natural causes. Id. The fact that franchises are to be taken does not impair their value for purposes of appraisal. The capitalization of income, even at reasonable rates, cannot be adopted as a sufficient or satisfactory test of present value, but present and probable future earnings may be considered in determining present value. If the company has received unreasonable rates in the past, the excess cannot be deducted from the amount to which the company would otherwise be entitled. Id.

26. Where a town has voted to purchase a waterworks, but the price to be paid has, by consent, been referred to a master, the company is bound to take such care of the property as a prudent man would take of his own, but not to provide against deterioration caused by time and natural wear, or to make improvements or additions thereto. 30. The Constitution of Utah (art. 11, sec. 6), prohibiting the direct or indirect alienation by a city of any water rights or water supply owned by it, does not forbid the acquisition by a power company of the right to connect its flume with the water canal of a city, for the purpose of discharging water therein. Salt Lake City W. & E. P. Co. v. Salt Lake City, 25 Utah, 441, 71 Pac. 1067.

31. The abrogation by a city of an agreement whereby a power company was permitted to divert and use the water of the city and then discharge it into the city canal, could not divest the company of any vested rights under such agreement. Salt Lake City W. & E. P. Co. v. Salt Lake City, 25 Utah, 456, 71 Pac. 1069.

32. General rule as to application of payments applied. Marion Water Co. v. Marion, 121 Iowa, 306, 96 N. W. 883. Having recognized an assignment, the city cannot defeat the assignee's right to collect rentals. Id.

33. Scott v. La Porte [Ind.] 68 N. E. 278. In the absence of express legislative authority, a contract of a city to annually levy taxes, and pay the proceeds to a water company for water, for all time to come, is ultra vires and void. Westminster Water Co. v. Westminster [Md.] 56 Atl. 990. Power of water commissioners. Holroyd v. Indian Lake, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 246.

34. Where a municipal corporation is given power to establish a water system of its own, it may contract with private individuals for the establishment of a water system and purchase water from them. Jack v. Grangeville [Idaho] 74 Pac. 969. A contract for water supply for a municipal corporation running 30 years is not unreasonable as a matter of law. Hurley Water Co. v. Vaughn, 115 Wis. 470, 91 N. W. 971.

35. Laws of Kentucky (2 Acts 1883-84, p. 1318, c. 1494, and 3 Acts 1887-88, p. 170, c. 1071), establishing certain civil districts construed, and held to give the trustees of such districts no authority to contract for water for fire protection. Such district is not liable for water furnished for that purpose. South Covington Dist. v. Kenton Water Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 420.

may be ratified,[36] and by ratifying a revised ordinance a contract made by the original is made valid.[37] A water district contracting for a supply must, in New York, provide for the whole area of the district.[38] A municipal corporation is not liable to pay for water furnished under an ultra vires contract,[39] nor answerable for breach.[40] But where a city, empowered to authorize the construction of a waterworks system, adopts an ordinance granting to a company the right to lay mains in the streets, agreeing to pay hydrant rentals, etc., it cannot defeat the recovery of such rentals on account of any irregularity occurring in connection with the execution or adoption of the contract.[41] An original contract against public policy may be purged by a new agreement with an assignee.[42] A municipality contracting with a company to supply it with water cannot thereafter violate such contract by erecting waterworks of its own[43] if such contract is exclusive.[44]

A contract for water is not as a rule one which need be let to the lowest bidder.[45] In Idaho, it may be with an individual.[46] A contract may be formed by 36. Laws of Maine (Sp. Laws 1863, c. 262; Sp. Laws 1887, c. 260), creating a certain village fire company and ratifying a contract made by it for a water supply, construed. Mayo v. Dover & F. Village Fire Co., 96 Me. 539. A contract by a city for waterworks, void because beyond the power of the city to make, may be validated by legislative enactment. City of Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. [Kan.] 76 Pac. 451.

37. Where a city council revises an ordinance relating to the establishment of a waterworks system and then re-enacts it, and the legislature, at the instance of the city, passes a curative act legalizing the revised ordinance, the contract created by the original ordinance and all that had been done in pursuance thereof is thereby completely ratified. 38. Laws of New York (Laws 1890, c. 566, § 81, as amended by Laws 1896, c. 678, § 1), providing for the establishment of water supply districts and authorizing them to contract for a water supply, construed, and held that the district to be supplied under the contract must equal in area the district as actually established. People v. Sisson, 173 N. Y. 606, 66 N. E. 1115.

39. People v. Sisson, 173 N. Y. 606, 66 N. E. 1115. A town cannot subject its taxpayers to a liability under a contract to take water from an unauthorized source. Smith v. Stoughton [Mass.] 70 N. E. 195.

40. A contract for the construction of waterworks in connection with a supply which a town had no legal authority to use is impossible of performance within limits legally permissible to the parties, and hence damages cannot be recovered for its breach. Smith v. Stoughton [Mass.] 70 N. E. 195. Where city officers connect the artesian well on the land of another with the city water mains and take water therefrom without the consent of the owner, the city is not liable for the water so appropriated. Wilson v. Mitchell [S. D.] 97 N. W. 741.

41. Marion Water Co. v. Marion, 121 Iowa, 306, 96 N. W. 883. A city having authority to contract for the construction and maintenance of a waterworks and to rent fire hydrants cannot avoid the payment of such rent on the ground that certain other provisions in the contract were beyond its authority to make and hence were void. City of Valparaiso v. Valparaiso City Water Co., 30 Ind. App. 316, 65 N. E. 1062.

Variance between contract and election: An ordinance embodying a contract with a water company is not rendered invalid because it differs in details from the one submitting the matter to a vote of the people under the Iowa Statute (McClain's Code, sec. 643), where there is no wide departure, and the changes do not appear to be detrimental to the interests of the city or indicate bad faith on the part of the council. City of Centerville v. Fidelity T. & G. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 332.

42. Where a municipal corporation sold its waterworks and the vendee thereafter assigned its rights and the assignee entered into a contract with the city to supply it with water during the life of the franchise, which contract referred to the original contract between the city and the vendee as to hydrant rentals, the two contracts were held to be distinct and a debt of the city for hydrant rentals under the latter contract was not void because the original contract created a monopoly. 45. Under the laws of Wisconsin (Laws 1883, c. 292; Laws 1879, c. 211, Rev. St. 1878, c. 40), a town has authority to contract with a waterworks company for a public supply of water and such contract need not be let to the lowest bidder. Hurley Water Co. v. Vaughn, 115 Wis. 470, 91 N. W. 971. The provisions of the Charter of the City of Oakland, providing for the letting of contracts to the lowest bidder, have no application to a contract for the furnishing of water to the municipality. attaching hydrants to mains and accepting service at legally adopted rates.[47] A plan of streets is not always essential.[48] An ordinance granting a franchise and making a contract for hydrant service has been held double in its subject;[49] hence, expressing simply the purpose of authorizing construction of works does not include service contracts.[50] A contract may be annulled for failure to supply pure water as agreed;[51] but if the supply is merely deficient it will not be annulled until opportunity to do better; but rentals may be scaled.[52] Impurity is not a defense to action for hydrant rentals for fire protection.[53]

In Iowa a statute authorizing contracts for hydrant service and rentals has been construed to support a contract at a rate greater than the special tax levy will meet,[54] but a Nebraska court refused to compel a further levy to meet a deficiency.[55] Hydrant rentals being "ordinary" expense fall within a restriction against creation of indebtedness for such purpose,[56] but being also "current" expense may be contracted for the future.[57] It is not allowable to guarantee that

Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 Pac. 189.

46. Under the laws of Idaho (Rev. St. 1887, §§ 2230, 2710; Sess. Laws 1893, pp. 97, 34), a city may contract with an individual for a water supply, and such contract may be for a period of 30 years. Jack v. Grangeville [Idaho] 74 Pac. 969.

47. Where a city attaches fire hydrants to the mains of a water company, and by ordinance regulates the charge therefor, which is collected by the company, a contractual relation relative to the furnishing of water for fire protection is established, in the absence of a statute requiring a formal written contract to bind the city. Town of Ukiah City v. Ukiah W. & I. Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773.

48. A city ordinance authorizing a contract with a water company for a water supply held not to be inconsistent in its terms and not to be invalid because of a failure to annex a plan of the streets in which it was proposed to lay the company's pipes. Kemble v. Millville, 69 N. J. Law, 637.

49, 50. Marion Water Co. v. Marion, 121 Iowa, 306, 96 N. W. 883.

51. A city ordinance granting to certain persons the privilege of constructing a system of waterworks in consideration of which the grantees agreed to furnish a certain amount of pure water, constitutes a contract, and an equitable action will lie on the part of the city to cancel the contract on the ground that the grantees have failed to furnish pure water. The right of the city is not limited to the express terms of forfeiture provided in the ordinance. City of St. Cloud v. Water, L. & P. Co., 88 Minn. 329, 92 N. W. 1112.

52. Where a water company fails, for a part of the time, to furnish pure water and sufficient pressure for fire protection as provided by the terms of a contract between it and the city, it is held that the city should only be held to pay a reasonable price for the water furnished, but that the company should have a reasonable time to comply with the terms of the contract before the same is annulled. Harrodsburg Water Co. v. Harrodsburg, 24 Ky. L. R. 2193, 73 S. W. 1032. A city, by accepting water from a water company in less quantities and at less pressure than is required by its contract, without attempting to terminate the contract or take possession of the works on that account, waives the right to insist that the contract was thereby abandoned by the company, but, in an action to recover on the contract, the city may offset the difference in value between the water actually furnished and that contracted for. Joplin Waterworks Co. v. Joplin, 177 Mo. 496, 76 S. W. 960.

53. In an action to recover hydrant rentals due under a city ordinance, an allegation that the water company furnished impure water, contrary to the terms of said ordinance, to the city's damage, is not good as a defense or counterclaim, in the absence of an allegation to the effect that the company did not furnish a proper supply for fire protection. Industrial Trust Co. v. St. Cloud, 88 Minn. 437, 93 N. W. 114.

54. Laws of Iowa (Code 1873, §§ 473, 475), relating to contracts for payment for hydrant rentals and providing for the levy of a special tax for the payment of water rents, construed. Marion Water Co. v. Marion, 121 Iowa, 306, 96 N. W. 883.

55. Statutes of Nebraska (Comp. St. 1887, c. 14, § 69, subd. 15), authorizing certain cities and villages to levy a tax of not to exceed seven mills for hydrant rentals, construed, and held a limitation on the taxing power to raise revenue for that purpose, and that the court will not compel an additional levy in excess of that amount to pay judgments on a contract for water furnished. State v. Royse [Neb.] 98 N. W. 459.

56. In Texas it is held that providing fire hydrants and water for the protection of the city, by renting the same at a stipulated price, is a matter of ordinary expenditure and the prima facie presumption is that the indebtedness incurred therefor was intended to be paid out of the current revenues, collected for current expenses, and that such indebtedness is legal although there is no compliance with the constitutional provisions (Const. art. 11, §§ 5, 7) regarding the creation of debts by cities. City of Tyler v. L. L. Jester & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 359.

57. A contract by a city to pay rentals for fire hydrants at stated times in the future is one of current expenditure, and does not create an indebtedness of the kind contemplated by the Iowa constitution limiting municipal indebtedness. City of Centerville v. Fidelity T. & G. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 332.

the taxes levied for such purpose shall always produce a stipulated sum.[58] Reasonable rates apply if none are fixed.[59] Obligations to pay rentals are not necessarily extinguished by public purchase of the plant.[60] Under the New York statute, an action for unliquidated damages arising from a breach of a contract made with the water commissioners of a town cannot be maintained against the town.[61]

Right to water service.—If a right exists, it may be protected by injunction[62] provided the user is ready to pay reasonable rates.[63] An individual can acquire no vested right as against the public in the continued service of a public utility.[64]

Injuries from deficient supply or equipment and negligence.—A water company contracting with a city to furnish water for general fire protection is bound to use ordinary care to supply a sufficiency thereof;[65] but the city and its citizens have no cause of action against it for municipal property destroyed by fire through the company's failure to supply sufficient water.[66] A city owning a waterworks system is not liable to citizens whose property is destroyed by fire for failure to provide an adequate supply of water;[67] nor is a city liable in such case where it contracts with a water company to furnish the water.[68] The owner of a building cannot recover from a water company for failure to furnish sufficient water to put out a fire therein, under a contract between the company and his tenant to keep the building supplied with sufficient water for fire purposes, and the absence of proof that such tenant acted as the agent of the owner in making such contract.[69] The business of selling water by a city to its inhabitants and to street

58. A contract of a city to pay to a water company for a water supply the proceeds of an annual tax of a certain per cent on all the assessed property in the city and guaranteeing that the amount to be paid in any year shall not be lower than that produced by the present valuation of assessment is ultra vires and void. Westminster Water Co. v. Westminster [Md.] 56 Atl. 990.

59. Under a contract between a city and a water company that the company shall furnish hydrants at a yearly rental of not more than $50 each, the company, in the absence of any agreement, is entitled to recover a reasonable rental therefor, and a subsequent resolution of the council providing that only $10 rental shall be paid does not affect this right. City of Valparaiso v. Valparaiso City Water Co., 30 Ind. App. 316, 65 N. E. 1063.

60. Where a city contracted to pay certain specified hydrant rentals at specified times for a specified period to a trustee under a mortgage to be given by the water company to raise money to build waterworks, such rental to be applied exclusively to the payment of the interest and principal of the company's bonds, the fact that the city afterwards purchases the works from the company does not relieve it from continuing to pay such rentals. City of Centerville v. Fidelity T. & G. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 332.

61. Laws 1900, c. 451. Such right may be questioned by demurrer. Holroyd v. Indian Lake, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 246.

62. A water company will be enjoined from cutting the connection between its main and the private pipe of a consumer entitled to use the water under a contract with said company. Edwards v. Milledgeville Water Co., 116 Ga. 201.

63. This case was that of a private purveyor under contract. Mulrooney v. Obear, 171 Mo. 613, 71 S. W. 1019.

64. Asher v. Hutchinson Water, L. & P. Co., 66 Kan. 496, 71 Pac. 813. Injunction will not lie at the suit of a private consumer of water to restrain the removal of water mains, where the city council has determined that such removal will be for the best interest of the public, even though such removal will greatly decrease the value of his property. 66. Town of Ukiah City v. Ukiah W. & I. Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773. A water company occupying the streets of a city under an ordinance requiring it to maintain a certain number of fire hydrants to be paid for by the city is not liable for failure to furnish sufficient water for fire protection, resulting in the burning of a building. Nichol v. Huntington Water Co., 53 W. Va. 348. A taxpayer has no right of action for damages by fire on a contract of a water company with a town to pay all damage resulting from its negligence in constructing, operating, or repairing its works. Smith v. Great South Bay Water Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 427.

67. Power is legislative and governmental. Town of Ukiah City v. Ukiah W. & I. Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773. In providing protection against fire to its inhabitants, the municipality exercises a power conferred solely for the public good, and from the exercise of which the municipality, as a property owner, derives the same incidental benefit that every other property owner does. Id.

68. Town of Ukiah City v. Ukiah W. & I. Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773. The contract is not for the protection of any particular property, but for the general protection of sprinkling contractors is not an exercise of the police power.[70] A water company is liable for damages resulting from the leaking of one of its meters.[71]

Water rates.—Water companies are entitled to charge just and reasonable rates for their services,[72] which they may themselves fix or change within the limits prescribed, if any.[73]

The legislature has a general power, however, to provide for the regulation of water rates,[74] and may require water companies to supply their customers at reasonable rates, to be fixed by the legislature or by municipal authorities.[75] And it may commit such power to local authorities.[76] Having empowered local authorities to regulate rates to a certain minimum, it still retains power to make further reasonable reductions.[77] This power is superior to private contracts as to rates.[78] It has been held that a reduction of a contract rate in the exercise of such a power, if reasonable, is not offensive to the constitutional guaranties.[79]

70. The city is not exempt from liability for negligence in maintaining such system, where it is used both for fire protection and for supplying the inhabitants with water on the ground that it is exercising a governmental function. City of Chicago v. Selz, Schwab & Co., 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386. A city is liable for damages caused by its failure to exercise proper care in maintaining the pipes of its water system in a safe condition, even though they are rendered unsafe by the wrongful or negligent acts of others. Dunston v. New York, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 355.

72. Spring Valley Water-Works v. City & County of San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185.

73. Under an ordinance authorizing a water company to charge such rate to consumers as it may from time to time establish, the company may fix any reasonable rate for service to consumers not embraced in those classes for which a maximum rate is prescribed by the ordinance. Wilson v. Tallahassee Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 36 So. 63. And the temporary and experimental adoption of one rate does not debar the company from a right to increase it to another which is reasonable. Id.

74. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185.

75. City of Tampa v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 34 So. 631. Such companies are performing services of a public nature and their business is affected with a public interest so as to subject them to regulation by requiring them to charge reasonable rates, and such regulation does not violate the "due process" clause of the federal constitution. Id.; Wilson v. Tallahassee Water Works Co. [Fla.] 36 So. 63.

76. Under the Constitution of California (Const. 1849, art. 4, § 31), reserving to the legislature the right to alter and repeal the corporation laws, an act (Cal. Stat. 1885, p. 95, § 5), authorizing supervisors to reduce water rates below those fixed by former statutes, was not beyond the power of the legislature, provided such rates were not reduced to an unreasonable degree. Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. R. C. & I. Co., 192 U. S. 201. City charter of La Crosse, Wis. (Laws 1887, c. 162), relating to the right of the city council to fix water rates and to compel consumers to furnish water meters, construed. State v. Gosnell, 116 Wis. 606, 93 N. W. 542. The power to regulate water rates is included in the authority conferred on cities of the third class by the laws of Kentucky (Ky. Stat. 1899, § 3290), to provide for water service by contract or by works of their own, and to make regulations for the management thereof, and to fix the rates to consumers, and this power is not affected by the provisions of a prior municipal ordinance granting the right to construct water works, and giving the grantee power to make all needful rules and regulations for the use of water by consumers, not inconsistent with the law. City of Owensboro v. Owensboro Waterworks Co., 191 U. S. 358.

77. Cal. Statutes 1853, p. 87, as amended by Cal. St. 1862, p. 540, providing that water companies should have power to fix rates, subject to regulation by the appropriate board of supervisors, but that such board should not reduce such rates so as to yield to the stockholders less than 1½ per cent per month on the capital invested, did not create a contract between the state and the companies to the effect that the state could not thereafter reduce rates below that amount. Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. R. C. & I. Co., 192 U. S. 201.

78. Contracts between a water company and consumers are subject to whatever power the city possesses to modify rates. Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 189 U. S. 434, 47 Law. Ed. 887.

79. Under the laws of Florida (Acts 1901, c. 5070, p. 240), a city has the power to reduce water rates from a price fixed in a contract between it and a water company, to a less, but reasonable rate. City of Tampa v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 34 So. 631. The obligations of a contract between a city and a water company, providing that the company shall supply water to consumers at a specified rate, are not impaired by an ordinance reducing such rates, where the company was organized under a statute expressly giving power to the city to regulate such rates. Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 189 U. S. 434, 47 Law. Ed. 887.

But it cannot prescribe rates, which, if enforced, would amount to a confiscation of the property of the company.[80]

In determining what is a reasonable rate, the circumstances in each particular case must be taken into consideration.[81] The basis by which the reasonableness of rates is to be determined is the present value of the property of the company and the value of the services rendered;[82] a rate not being regarded as unreasonable unless it is so inadequate as to virtually depreciate property, without just compensation.[83] In order that it may have just compensation, a company is entitled to demand a fair return upon the reasonable value of the property at the time it is being used for the public.[84] The reasonableness of rates may be affected, for a time, by the degree of hazard to which the original enterprise was naturally subjected, that is such hazard as may have been justly contemplated by those who made the original investment, but not unforeseen or emergency risks.[85]

In an action to have water rates declared unreasonable, the body fixing the rates is the proper party defendant, and the default of the parties who set the original proceeding in motion is immaterial, so long as it defends the case.[86]

Water rates are not taxes which must be uniform.[87]

Sometimes special rates are required for the benefit of public institutions.[88] As a condition of the franchise, water companies are in Idaho[89] required to furnish water for certain public uses free.

It is usual to grade rates according to classes of users,[90] and a minimum charge per annum may be laid on small consumers under meter service.[91]

80. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574. Rates unreasonably low. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Tampa, 124 Fed. 932; Palatka Waterworks v. Palatka, 127 Fed. 161. Rates not unreasonably low. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 117 Iowa, 250, 91 N. W. 1081.

81. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 117 Iowa, 250, 91 N. W. 1081.

82. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574. In fixing what is a just rate, the court ought to take into consideration the cost of the plant and of its annual operation, its depreciation, and a fair profit to the company above its charges for its services, and give such weight to them as, under all the circumstances, will be just to the company and the public. Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. R. C. & I. Co., 192 U. S. 201; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185. The cost of the plant, the price which it brought at foreclosure sale, and its valuation for purposes of taxation, together with its depreciation in value and in the value of services rendered by it to consumers, due to a diminution in water supply on account of a long continued drought, may be considered in determining the reasonableness of rates. San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 47 Law. Ed. 892. Not necessarily unreasonable because they will only yield a full return on the total value of the plant when the water company shall serve the entire area which its system will supply. Id. A reduction of water rates under Cal. St. 1885, p. 95, § 5, so as to give an annual income of 6 per cent. on the then value of the property held not unreasonable. Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. R. C. & I. Co., 192 U. S. 201.

83. Courts will not declare water rates fixed by a board of supervisors unreasonable unless it appears that there has been such a flagrant attack on the rights of property under the guise of regulations as to compel the court to say that the rates prescribed will necessarily have the effect to deny just compensation for private property taken for the public use. San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 47 Law. Ed. 892.

84. San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 47 Law. Ed. 892; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. R. C. & I. Co., 192 U. S. 201.

85. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185.

86. San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 47 Law. Ed. 892. Under the constitution of Idaho (art. 15, § 6), it is the duty of the legislature to provide the manner in which reasonable maximum water rates may be established, and until it does so a contract between an owner and user in regard to such rates will govern. Jack v. Grangeville [Idaho] 74 Pac. 969.

87. Water rates charged consumers by a municipality are not taxes within the meaning of those constitutional provisions which require a uniformity of taxation. Powell v Duluth [Minn.] 97 N. W. 450.

88. Mass. Acts 1898, c. 564, relating to rates to be paid to a town for water used by public institutions, construed. Selectmen of Danvers v. Com., 184 Mass. 502, 69 N. E. 320.

89. Under Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 2711, water companies are required to furnish water for street sprinkling, etc., free of charge. It is immaterial whether such companies obtain water from public streams or from private wells. Boise City Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boise City [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 332.

90. The words "domestic rates," as used in a water contract, mean rates allowed to

For nonpayment of charges, the service may be cut off, but the user must have had notice or a demand for such charges,[92] and they must be legal[93] and not in dispute;[94] but to impose a charge for so doing is a penalty and can be recovered and fixed only by due process of law and not arbitrarily.[95]

Rules and regulations of service pipes, meters and consumption.—Water companies and municipalities undertaking to furnish water to the inhabitants of a city may adopt reasonable rules for the conduct of the business and the operation of their plants.[96] Thus they may provide for tests,[97] approvals, and installations[98] of meters, require separate service pipes and meters,[99] may compel a user to abide by meter service once he has procured it,[1] and in time of drouth may scale down and pro-rate the consumption.[2] Such rules, in so far as they affect consumers, are binding on them, and may be enforced even to the extent of denying water to those who refuse to comply therewith.[3] be charged for domestic purposes, and include the reasonable use of water in water-closets and bath tubs of a dwelling house, and otherwise for the comfort and convenience of those residing therein. Birmingham Water Works Co. v. Truss, 135 Ala. 530. Where a waterworks company, by contract with the city, agreed to furnish water at fixed yearly rates to dwellings, and to charge for water furnished to others by measurement, the fact that the owner of a house used and occupied it both as a dwelling and boarding house did not destroy its character as a dwelling or require the owner to pay measured service rates. Id. An ordinance fixing meter rates construed and held that the maximum meter rate therein prescribed applied only to consumers of the class designated therein. Wilson v. Tallahassee Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 36 So. 63.

91. A minimum annual charge by a water company for meter service to small consumers, in excess of the ordinary price of the quantity of water consumed by them, is not in itself unreasonable. Wilson v. Tallahassee Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 36 So. 63.

92. Extra charge because more persons were in the family than the original rate allowed. City of Van Alstyne v. Morrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 655. An ordinance prohibiting city officials from furnishing water to consumers until all their indebtedness for water previously supplied shall have been discharged is reasonable and valid. Jones v. Nashville, 109 Tenn. 550, 72 S. W. 985.

93. Failure to pay illegal water bill held to give the city no right to shut off plaintiff's water. Healy v. New York, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 27.

94. Under New York City Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466, §§ 473, 475), the city is not authorized to shut off the water of a consumer to enforce collection for the difference between the amount of water actually used and the amount indicated by the meter. Healy v. New York, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 170.

95. Supply cut off for nonpayment. Greater New York Charter (Laws N. Y. 1901, c. 466, § 478), in regard to rules for use of Croton water, construed. People v. Monroe, 41 Misc [N. Y.] 198.

96. Jones v. Nashville, 109 Tenn. 550, 72 S. W. 985.

97. As to duty of commissioner of water supply of Greater New York to test water meters under the city charter (Laws N. Y. 1897, p. 165, c. 378), see People v. Monroe, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 241.

98. The commissioner of water supply of Greater New York cannot be compelled to allow a water meter, shown by tests of his experts to be inherently defective, to be placed in a building, though such meter is of a type approved by the board of aldermen. City Charter of Greater New York, § 475 (Laws 1897, c. 378, § 475, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 466), construed. People v. Monroe, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 369. And as to authority to install meters see Foster v. Monroe, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 449.

99. A rule requiring a separate pipe and meter for each house furnished with water is reasonable. Specht v. Louisville Water Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 142.

1. A rule providing that water meters might be installed at the pleasure of the water board or of a consumer and that after they had once been installed the consumer could not thereafter return to the flat rate, is reasonable and may be enforced, where the meter rates are reasonable and no discrimination between consumers is shown. Powell v. Duluth [Minn.] 97 N. W. 450.

2. A provision in a contract between a water company and a consumer to the effect that the company should furnish a certain amount of water, subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as the company might make gave the company a right to make a pro rata distribution of water to consumers when it was, by reason of drought, unable to furnish them with the full amount called for by their contracts. Contract construed. Souther v. San Diego Flume Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 347.

3. Jones v. Nashville, 109 Tenn. 550, 72 S. W. 985. City held not to have been justified in shutting off a citizen's water supply by the fact that he drained his waste water into the street, thereby causing a nuisance, or because he failed to pay an extra charge for using water for a bath tub, where no notice of such extra charge had been given him, or on the ground that the rate he was paying was for a family of five instead of six. City of Van Alstyne v. Morrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 655.

When acted on a verbal agreement will be protected.[6] A deed of the dominant estate carries all appurtenant water rights,[7] and in California, the grant of irrigated lands may carry with it a water right.[8] A riparian owner may, in a grant of riparian land, reserve a right to use riparian water.[9] A dam passes with a grant of the bed of a stream or the banks thereof if the contrary intention be not apparent.[10] The usual rule against adverse user by one of co-tenants applies,[11] and the water right appurtenant to the estate is apportioned according to their interests.[12] A right to enter on another's premises to repair an irrigation ditch does not give a right to do anything to the ditch which will impair the use of it by others entitled thereto.[13] Rights may be gained by prescription[14] equal to the use made.[15] One who is entitled as a lessee forfeits his rights by hostile claim.[16] A license to construct an artificial ditch over the land of another may be revoked after the construction of the ditch.[17] A parol license to use water may be converted into an easement where the licensee takes possession thereunder and makes valuable improvements, relying on such license.[18] The ordinary rules of construction apply to grants and leases of, and contracts in relation to, water rights.[19] Illustrative cases are cited.[20] Where water is for a stated purpose, there is an implied war-

A conveyance of a water right is not a conveyance of land within the meaning of the United States Homestead laws (Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2290, 2291, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1389, 1390), forbidding any alienation by an entryman. Under Cal. Civ. Code (§§ 658-660, 662), a water right is not land. Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 140 Cal. 183, 73 Pac. 826.

5. The right of a mining company to pump water from the estate of another held to be an easement appurtenant to the mine, which by its terms terminated on the abandonment of the mine. G. W. Featherston Min. Co. v. Young, 118 Ga. 564.

6. Where plaintiffs enlarged an irrigation ditch, under a verbal agreement with the owners that they are to have an interest in the water and reduce their land to cultivation, the owners may not thereafter revoke such agreement. Rights of parties owning fractional interests in canal determined. McPhee v. Kelsey [Or.] 74 Pac. 401.

7. An easement for the maintenance of an irrigation ditch held to have passed as an appurtenance to the dominant estate without specific mention in the deed conveying such estate. American Nat. Bank v. Hoeffer [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 156. A conveyance of a lot, "with all rights, privileges, immunities and appurtenances," held not to convey water pipes in the street in front of the same, and belonging to the grantor, but only the right to obtain water through such pipes at reasonable rates. Mulrooney v. Obear, 171 Mo. 613, 71 S. W. 1019.

8. The transfer of real property on which a water right has been in part habitually used carries with it, under the laws of Cal. (Civ. Code, § 1104), to the grantee a right to use the water to the same extent as it was formerly used by the grantor. Pendola v. Ramm, 138 Cal. 517, 71 Pac. 624.

9. Walker v. Lillingston, 137 Cal. 401, 70 Pac. 282.

10. A dam will pass as part of the bed of a stream under a grant of the land on the bank. Roberts v. Decker [Wis.] 97 N. W. 519, construing a deed. Such a construction is not repelled by a grant of a specified flow of water for power actually exceeding half the natural flow; nor by an agreement to pay half the cost of maintenance. Id.

12. A cotenant cannot transfer any greater interest in an appropriation of water for irrigation purposes appurtenant to the estate than is commensurate with his own interest. Beers v. Sharpe [Or.] 75 Pac. 717.

13. Blankenship v. Whaley, 142 Cal. 566, 76 Pac. 235.

14. The right to maintain a ditch may be acquired by prescription. Baumgartner v. Bradt, 207 Ill. 345, 69 N. E. 912. In order to acquire an easement for the maintenance of a ditch over the lands of another by adverse user, it must be maintained without material change of location for the full statutory period. Dunn v. Thomas [Neb.] 96 N. W. 142.

15. The extent of a presumed grant to swell water upon the land of an adjoining owner is measured by the land actually flooded and not by the height of the dam by which the swelling is occasioned. Lynch v. Troxell, 207 Pa. 162.

16. Tenant held to have renounced right to take water as a lessee by claiming adversely. White v. Brash [Ariz.] 73 Pac. 445.

17. Spink v. Corning, 172 N. Y. 626, 65 N. E. 1122. A parol license to a private corporation to lay water mains through land, without compensation, is revoked by a subsequent deed containing no reservation of such right. Jayne v. Cortland Waterworks Co., 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 263.

18. Moore v. Neubert, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 144. The right of certain citizens to take water from a water main held to be a mere license which no lapse of time could convert into an easement. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dickey, 24 Ky. L. R. 1710, 72 S. W. 332.

ranty of fitness.[21] In a grant or reservation of a water right, reference to an existing use will be considered as a measure of quantity, merely, unless a contrary intention is apparent from the language used or the surrounding circumstances.[22] A grant of what the grantor owned only will be implied.[23] A grant of a pond and lands adjoining thereto includes the land under water;[24] but where owners of a pond have conveyed it and the lands thereunder, the riparian rights become severed from the adjacent land and they cannot be subsequently revived by a deed calling for the pond as a boundary.[25] Persons who organize a corporation to take over their rights may thereby become entitled to water only under rules of the company.[26] It has been held that a similar transaction gave proportionate shares in all waters held by their corporations.[27] Where a canal is granted to a

A contract relating to the use of certain pipe for furnishing a water supply, construed, and delay in performance held waived. Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 671, 70 Pac. 784.

Contract for the joint use of water in an irrigation canal construed and evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiff was deprived of the water to which he was entitled by the wrongful act of defendant. Stoner v. Mau [Wyo.] 72 Pac. 193; Id., 73 Pac. 548.

Other water supply: A contract between a railroad company and a land company in relation to a private waterworks, construed and held that the railroad company had a right to abrogate it at any time. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dickey, 24 Ky. L. R. 1710, 72 S. W. 332. A reservation in a deed to riparian land of so much water as is necessary to work a No. 5 hydraulic ram is not void for uncertainty as to the quantity of water reserved. Walker v. Lillingston, 137 Cal. 401, 70 Pac. 282.

Water power contracts: A purchaser of water power from a private power canal is entitled only to the amount of power which he buys. Powers v. Perkins [Mich.] 92 N. W. 790. The grant of the right to build a dam abutting on the grantor's farm, reserving to him all water rights and the right to use power from the dam, does not give the grantor the right to compel the grantee to construct gates and sluiceways therein for the use of the grantor. Harris v. Ft. Miller P. & Paper Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 225. See, also, section 15, ante. Lease of water power, construed. Channel v. Merrifield, 206 Ill. 278, 69 N. E. 32.

Logging rights: A right to maintain a log boom in a river held not to have been granted by a deed granting the use of the banks of the river for the purpose of tying logs and rafts to the trees thereon. Bowman v. Dillion, 24 Ky. L. R. 2382, 74 S. W. 240.

21. Where one contracts to deliver water to another for a particular purpose, the law implies a warranty on his part that it shall not be unfit for the purpose on account of his own conduct. Gold Ridge Min. Co. v. Tallmadge [Or.] 74 Pac. 325. One who contracts to deliver "second water" for mining purposes must remove the debris, such as soil and tailings therefrom. Id.

22. Hartford Woolen Co. v. Bugbee [Vt.] 56 Atl. 344; Walker v. Lillingston, 137 Cal. 401, 70 Pac. 282. A deed conveying a tract of land with the mill thereon, with the right to use a certain reservoir, held, to only convey rights in the reservoir as then existing and to give to the grantee only such rights in a new reservoir, built to take its place, as would be equivalent to his rights in the old. Horne v. Hutchins [N. H.] 55 Atl. 361.

23. When land on one side is granted with an undivided share of "power," the share of the grantor's half and not the share of all is meant. He had previously granted the other side and then granted one-third and one-sixth shares of the power and the land on the hither side. Roberts v. Decker [Wis.] 97 N. W. 519.

24. Gibbs v. Sweet, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 275. A dam passes under a grant conveying the bed of the stream. Roberts v. Decker [Wis.] 97 N. W. 519.

26. Appropriators of water in common who organized a corporation and conveyed to it their rights held to have thereby surrendered to it the control and regulation of the supply, and such a corporator, who by license of the company takes water from its ditch, thereby waives any previous right to so appropriate the water, and consents to the regulations imposed by the company. Fuller v. Azusa Irrigating Co., 138 Cal. 204, 71 Pac. 98.

27. Certificates of stock in a colonization company issued in return for water certificates in two water companies, held to entitle the holder of each share to a proportionate share of all the water of the company. Richey v. East Redlands Water Co., 141 Cal. 221, 74 Pac. 754.

company, it does not necessarily take the water rights therein.[28] Cases wherein the sufficiency of the evidence to establish such rights has been examined are also collected.[29] Where great injury is threatened by the assertion of doubtful rights, injunctive relief to afford protection pending decision will be given.[30] The measure of damages for breach of a contract to furnish water for irrigation purposes, resulting in damage to a crop, is the difference between the amount actually realized from the crop and the amount which would probably have been realized if the water had been furnished, less the cost of raising, harvesting and marketing the same.[31]

§ 17. Torts relating to waters.—The measure of damages for flooding the land of another is the injury actually occasioned to the date of the suit.[32] Where the flooding of land results in permanent injuries to lands, the measure of damages is the depreciation in their market value.[33] If the reasonable cost of repairing the injuries is less than the diminution in the market value, it is the cost of repairing.[34] Where an action is for successive overflows of land, the measure of damages is the sum of the differences between the market value of the land immediately before and after the several flows.[35] In an action for damages to land

28. Deeds of water rights provided that when the estimated capacity of the canal was disposed of, the title to the canal should pass to the purchasers. Held, in a suit brought by a company organized to take the canal for the benefit of the purchasers, for the cancellation of water rights issued by the vendor, after the estimated capacity of the canal had been disposed of, that the company did not stand in the place of the vendor as regards such excess rights, but merely represented the purchasers of the rights up to the estimated capacity of the canal, and owed no obligation to purchasers of excess rights. Blakely v. Ft. Lyon Canal Co., 31 Colo. 224, 73 Pac. 249.

29. Irrigation and other supply: Evidence held insufficient to show a breach by defendant of a contract to furnish water for irrigation purposes. Ford v. Calcasieu River Irr. Co., 110 La. 981. Evidence held not to show any unreasonable use of or interference with the water running through certain pipes by defendant. Howard v. Howard, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 175. Evidence held to show that a ditch was constructed under an agreement that plaintiff was to have a perpetual right to use the water for irrigation purposes, jointly with others. Blankenship v. Whaley, 142 Cal. 566, 76 Pac. 235. Evidence in a suit to enforce an irrigation contract held to show that such contract was made with a prior owner of the land and that a subsequent purchaser had notice of the contract under which the ditch was constructed. Id.

30. Evidence held sufficient to entitle plaintiff to an injunction restraining defendant from destroying his head gates and ditches. One who is the first to buy and the first to use the water of an irrigation company, under a contract by which it sells him, for all time, water sufficient to irrigate 160 acres may not be subject to the same rules of distribution as those who subsequently purchase rights. Hargrave v. Hall [Ariz.] 73 Pac. 400. An injunction granted restraining the discharge of water into a tail race in such quantities as will be dangerous to plaint f's land, until the right of defendant so t do has been determined. 32. Flood by embankment. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Higdon [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 895. The measure of damages for temporarily obstructing a waterway to the injury of an upper estate is the loss of crops thereby occasioned. Jones v. Kramer & Bros. Co., 133 N. C. 446. Where a person is damaged by the wrongful discharge of surface water on his land, the measure of damages is the actual damage caused thereby up to the beginning of the action, without reference to the total depreciation of the value of the inheritance. Ready v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 467, 72 S. W. 142.

The measure of damages for the destruction of crops by the overflow of an irrigation ditch is the value of the crop destroyed, measured by the amount of crop produced on like and similar lands in the neighborhood, taking into consideration all elements as to the probable yield of the land in question. Market value, together with the cost of seeding, caring for, harvesting and marketing the crop should be considered. Catlin Consol. Canal Co. v. Euster [Colo. App.] 73 Pac. 846.

The measure of damages in trespass for injuries caused by the construction of a dam is, in addition to the value of the property actually destroyed, the cost of restoring the property to its original condition, unless such cost should equal or exceed its value, in which case the value would be the measure of damages, and in addition thereto the actual loss sustained by the owner by being deprived of the full use of the property from the time the injury was committed up to the institution of the suit. Lynch v. Troxell, 207 Pa. 162.

from the diversion of water, testimony as to the difference in its value before and after the injury is admissible.[36]

In an action for damages for failure to properly maintain a ditch, resulting in the overflowing of plaintiff's land, held that if plaintiff, by himself cleaning out the ditch could have avoided the damage, he is entitled to recover only the reasonable cost of doing so.[37] Punitive damages will not be awarded unless the injuries were committed wantonly or maliciously.[38]

§ 18. Crimes and offenses relating to waters.—Under the laws of Iowa, the pollution of a river may be a public nuisance and may be punished as a crime.[39] An indictment under the Colorado statute for failure to furnish water for irrigation purposes is defective unless it designates the land for which the water was demanded and that the complainant was entitled to receive water from the ditch.[40] Where a city ordinance provides a penalty against the owner of occupied premises for failure to provide a sufficient water supply, the offense is committed at the premises in question.[41]

WEAPONS.

§ 1. The crime of carrying or pointing weapons.—The right of possessing and carrying such weapons as are ordinarily used in warfare or for defense is guaranteed by the constitution of the United States and doubtless all of the states,[42] though the legislature has an undoubted right under its police power to prohibit the carrying of them concealed,[43] or unconcealed at public assemblages or similar places, where their presence would be conducive to disorder.[44] Acting upon this right, most of the states have prohibited, with certain exceptions, the carrying of deadly weapons concealed. Under such statutes a razor,[45] an ordinary pen knife, when from the manner of its use it is likely to produce death,[46] a pistol not cocked,[47] and a pistol of which the mainspring is broken, but which can be fired by striking the hammer, are deadly weapons.[48]

Certain persons are excepted from the operation of the statutes, such as travelers,[49] police,[50] and other civil officers,[51] and all persons are exempted under

49. One who deviates from his route to quarrel with one to whom he owes a grudge loses his right as a traveler. Cruz v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 435. A railway train porter is a traveler while on the road, within the exemption of travelers from prosecution for carrying weapons. Williams v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 380. The statute exempts travelers, but in the absence of evidence that defendant had a home, or that he was going from or returning to it, evidence that he had gone a short distance from one county to another would not certain circumstances. For instance, in many states exception is made in favor of one who is at his own place of business,[52] or dwelling house,[53] who has purchased a pistol and is carrying it home,[54] who is returning a borrowed pistol,[55] who is carrying one to the shop for repairs,[56] who has been threatened and the threats communicated to him,[57] and in Texas, where defendant has reasonable grounds for fearing an unlawful attack upon his person and the danger is so imminent and threatening as not to admit of the arrest of the person about to make such attack on legal process, he can arm himself to protect against the danger.[58] But the mere fact that he has had a difficulty with another does not justify him in carrying a pistol when he is in no imminent danger of attack,[59] and though a party may have a right to carry a pistol home after purchasing it,[60] or to return a borrowed pistol, or to carry it while traveling, he has no right to deviate from his way for the purpose of raising a difficulty with one with whom he had had trouble.[61]

Intoxication[62] or that defendant did not intend to carry the pistol concealed is no defense.[63] Nor is it a defense that accused thought he had a right to carry it, and would have had, had the statute attempting to authorize him been constitutional.[64]

A conviction of shooting at random on the public highway bars a subsequent prosecution for flourishing a deadly weapon during the same quarrel.[65] Coming into possession of a pistol at a place of public worship is not carrying a pistol to a place of public worship.[66]

It is unlawful in Wisconsin by statute for any one to intentionally point a gun or pistol at another.[67]

Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 23.

51. A person carrying the United States mail under contract, though bonded and sworn, is not a civil officer of the United States within the exception of the statute punishing the carrying of concealed weapons [N. C. Code 1883, § 1005]. State v. Boone, 132 N. C. 1107. And if he were, the statute exempting such officers while in the discharge of their official duties would not exempt him while on his way home after delivery of the mail. Id.

ute in Wisconsin for a minor to be armed with a dangerous weapon,[68] for any dealer or other person to sell, loan or give any pistol or revolver to a minor,[69] and for any person to use or have in possession any toy pistol, toy revolver or toy firearm.[70]

The exception of the statute punishing the discharge of firearms on or near a public highway, that they may be discharged on defendant's own premises, does not include the premises of another where defendant shot by permission.[71]

Reasonable[72] regulations or licenses on dealers in pistols and pistol cartridges will be upheld. Where a pawnbroker sells only such pistols as come to him as pledges and are unredeemed, his license as such will protect him from prosecution for selling pistols without a license.[73]

§ 3. Indictment and prosecution.—The indictment need not allege that the pistol carried was a deadly weapon,[74] nor negative exceptions in the statute contained in separate clauses from that defining the offense, such as that the place was not about the defendant's dwelling, nor that he was not carrying the weapon from the place of purchase to his dwelling house, nor that he was carrying it from his dwelling to a place where repairing was done, to have it repaired, nor that the defendant was not an officer,[75] and in order to convict of carrying concealed deadly weapons, it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the carrying was unlawful as the burden is on the defendant to prove that it was lawful;[76] but where the exception is a part of the offense itself, it is necessary to allege and prove that the case is not within the exception.[77] Evidence of the conversation and acts of third persons previous to the discovery that defendant had a pistol is immaterial,[78] but evidence that defendant took one from another and on attempting to put it in his pocket discovered his own to the bystanders is admissible as a part of the transaction.[79] Instructions should avoid comment on the evidence.[80]

§ 4. Civil liability.—A cause of action exists in favor of one injured by a firearm unlawfully in the hands of another, though the shooting was accidental and there was no intent on his part to injure;[81] but a father is not liable for an injury negligently inflicted by a firearm in the hands of his minor son, where his possession of it was not unlawful, and the father was not negligent in allowing him to take it.[82]

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Standardization is almost entirely statutory, and in the absence of an agreed standard of weight, the standard of the place where the commodity is purchased governs.[83] Penal regulations of weights and measures are presumed to be reasonable,[84] but are construed strictly.[85] An ordinance aimed at the use of a defective

84. An ordinance providing a penalty for any one using an incorrect or defective weight or measure is presumed to be reasonable. City of New York v. Hewitt, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 445.

85. Under an ordinance imposing a penalty for use of false and defective weights weight does not involve the question of intentional alteration.[86] Where an ordinance does not require proof of intent or of guilty knowledge, such proof is not essential in an action to recover the penalty,[87] and in such case a court cannot as a matter of benignity suspend the operation of a statute.[88] Upon proof of defendant's violation of statute, the burden is upon him to explain it.[89]

WHARVES.

Right to erect and maintain wharves and ownership therein.—The right to construct wharves depends on the extent and character of the riparian ownership,[90] subject to public regulation by the state or its municipal delegate.[91] Under a city charter authorizing the council to establish and maintain wharves and lease land for same, the city may lease the land and authorize lessee to build wharf.[92] An act creating a harbor line commission for a city and according to littoral proprietors the right to wharf out across the shore lot, as a right appurtenant to ownership of abutting uplands, does not give the owner of the upland any rights in the way of ownership to the shore lands, though it might have a bearing on the question of their right to wharf out across the shore lot.[93] It has been held that the owner of a pier may by prescription obtain title to maintain it on public lands under water.[94] A city may be concluded by exercise of right of location under a reservation.[95]

A municipality has power to make temporary leases of public wharves in the interest of commerce.[96] When the lessee has enjoyed the benefit of such leases, he has no standing to plead that the premises were locus publicus and that the contract was ultra vires.[97] The city of New York may purchase the interest of a person in a wharf, the city being authorized to acquire title to dock property.[98]

Greater New York charter allows the city to proceed to condemnation of wharf property without attempting to agree with the owners as to the price.[99]

A pier may be in common as to some uses and in severalty as to others.[1]

Wharves are public[2] and private, public ones being open to the public use[3] without discrimination.[4] The fact that it extends beyond low water into the sea does not make it public.[5] A wharf may become public by such use like a street.[6]

Access to wharves.—Owners of abutting lands, erecting and maintaining public docks in a navigable river pursuant to a grant from the state, must allow the public the incidental right of passage over their abutting lands as far as necessary to go to and from the docks.[7] Since public wharves must be accessible, a wharf built under public grant at the end of a street is subject to the street which by operation of law is extended over it to the water,[8] but for such uses only as are compatible with wharf purposes.[9]

The right to collect wharfage is incident to ownership.[10] Where wharf extends to harbor line in navigable waters, the owner has no exclusive right to occupation of berth at all times in front of wharf and the owner may make no claim for wharfage against a vessel because while discharging at an adjoining wharf she partially overlaps his wharf at a time when he had no actual use for the space.[11] Where plaintiff under a municipal grant acquired right to wharfage from an exterior street at the time of construction, the city was held to account to plaintiff for wharfage collected by it from a bulkhead platform or pay value of plaintiff's rights on retaining bulkhead platform for its own use.[12]

Uses of public wharves.—A use inconsistent with wharfage purposes cannot be imposed by such authority.[13]

§ 1. Right of disposal, and contracts relating to it.—A competent person acting freely may by will dispose of his property to whom he chooses whether wisely or the reverse, and though contrary to natural justice.[20] At common law a child may be disinherited without being mentioned in a will, unless it appeared that the omission of his name occurred through inadvertence or mistake;[21] but this rule has generally been changed by statute so as to give the omitted child a distributive share in his parent's estate unless it appears that the omission was intentional.[22] At common law, a wife's testamentary power was subject to her husband's marital rights in her property to dispose of which his consent was required,[23] but the Married Women's Acts have generally made both her real and personal estates her separate property, and thus given her the power to dispose of them by will, without his consent.[24] Neither can, save by an election,[25] defeat dower, curtesy, or other legal rights of a surviving spouse,[26] or homestead belonging to children.[27] These rules do not prevent devises from wife to husband.[28] Where the consent is necessary, a general assent to the making of a will is not sufficient, but consent to the particular will in question must be proved,[29] though it need not precede such making.[30] At common law, an estate per autre vie could

One has sufficient mental capacity to make a will when he knows the value and extent of his property, the number and names of those who are the natural objects of his bounty and their deserts with reference to their treatment of him, and has memory sufficient to carry these things in mind long enough time of test.[38] If there is unconsciousness,[39] physical weakness,[40] or unsoundness on any fact such as to impair this ability, capacity is lacking, whether it be from suggestion[41] or delusion.[42] It must be shown to have operated to cause the production of the will.[43]

An insane delusion is a persistent belief in supposed facts which have no real or believable existence, accompanied by conduct based thereon.[44] No belief that has any evidence, however slight, for its basis is in law such a delusion.[45]

Mere prejudice,[46] or the unequal division of the property between the children,[47] or the fact that one is disinherited, or that the will may be contrary to natural justice, is not sufficient to vitiate it, though such facts may be considered in determining the issue of testamentary capacity.[48]

48. The fact that testatrix bequeathed the bulk of her property to a public library to the exclusion of brothers and sisters is not evidence of lack of testamentary capacity; particularly where all lived in separate states and where there had been litigation which tended to embitter them. Instructions construed. Spencer v. Terry's Estate [Mich.] 94 N. W. 372. Where the only conclusion from direct testimony is that testator was mentally sound, the fact that he had devised his entire estate to a negro who had been his business and household companion to the exclusion of cousins does not warrant the submission of his mental soundness to a

The mere fact that the testator was eccentric, miserly, and irrational on some subjects,[49] or that he was incapable of controlling or conducting his ordinary business affairs,[50] that he made mistakes in multiplying figures,[51] or that he was enfeebled mentally and physically with the usual infirmities of old age,[52] or from excessive use of intoxicants,[53] or tobacco,[54] does not necessarily show lack of testamentary capacity.

Insanity, once established, is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown,[55] unless the disorder is of such character as to indicate that it is probably of temporary duration.[56] An adjudication of insanity, while it remains in force, is prima facie evidence of incapacity.[57]

49. Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 599. Evidence that testator rambled in his sleep, went to sleep in the rain behind a stump, went fishing without results, could not at all time count his money correctly, whipped his son in bed, and thought his wife was crazy, is insufficient to show testamentary incapacity. Scarborough v. Baskin, 65 S. C. 558.

50. Crossan v. Crossan, 169 Mo. 631, 70 S. W. 136; Stewart v. Lyons [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 442; England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526; Waugh v. Moan, 200 Ill. 298, 65 N. E. 713. The question is not whether the testator had sufficient mental capacity to comprehend and transact ordinary business, but did he have such mind and memory as enabled him to understand the particular business in which he was engaged. England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526.

If a testator has capacity to transact ordinary business, he is capable of making a will (Hess v. Killebrew [Ill.] 70 N. E. 675), though he may be lacking in contractual capacity, and the capacity to undertake the transaction of the ordinary business of life (West v. Knoppenberger, 4 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 305). Capacity to attend to small business affairs is not convincing against testimony of insane periods. Hess v. Killebrew [Ill.] 70 N. E. 675.

Evidence held to show testamentary capacity. Williams v. Williams, 204 Ill. 44, 68 N. E. 449. Evidence insufficient to show more than that testator was enfeebled with usual infirmities of old age. Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410. Evidence insufficient to show lack of capacity. Elliott v. Elliott [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1006. Fact that his memory was imperfect, that he asked idle questions, and required a repetition of questions, immaterial. Southworth v. Southworth, 173 Mo. 59, 73 S. W. 139. Evidence of mania for young women, forgetfulness, etc., held not to show incapacity. Hamon v. Hamon [Mo.] 79 S. W. 422.

53. Evidence that testator a year and a half prior to the execution of the will failed to recognize his brother is insufficient. Haughian v. Conlan, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 290. Where it appears that testator though of intemperate habits was sober at the time of the execution of the will and knew what he was doing, an issue of devisavit vel non on question of testamentary capacity was properly denied. In re Tasker's Estate, 205 Pa. 455.

54. Evidence that testator was given to excessive smoking, that there was a physical weakening and that he made a possible mistake as to a sum of money borrowed many years ago held not sufficient to show lack of capacity. Borry v. Safe Deposit & T. Co., 96 Md. 45.

his mind respecting testamentary capacity,[60] whether prior or subsequent to execution, are relevant to show such condition, but not to show the truth of facts uttered.[61] Lack of testamentary capacity to execute a will at a particular time may be established by the testator's mental condition before and after the time of execution of the will, if that prior or subsequent condition may be presumed to exist at the time the will was made.[62] If there has been evidence of his insanity, facts corroborating or disproving it are admissible,[63] such as that the draughtsman was of character and capacity;[64] and in rebuttal a witness may be asked whether testator had business capacity.[65]

Opinions on the ultimate fact of testamentary capacity are rejected.[67] It is generally held that nonexpert witnesses may express an opinion as to testator's testamentary capacity if they first testify as to the facts on which such opinion is based,[68] and if it is the result of their own observations.[69] In some states such witnesses are confined to facts.[70]

62. Spencer v. Terry's Estate [Mich.] 94 N. W. 372. As to how far subsequently to the execution of the will a party may testify as to observations as to testator's appearance, conduct, and apparent condition, rests in the court's discretion. And where the testimony was limited to about one and a half years after execution, it was not error to refuse to permit physician to testify as to cause of death which occurred nearly three and a half years after execution. McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 576, 69 N. E. 358. Declarations of a person, four months after the making of a will, that testator was then not mentally competent to do any business, not admissible on the question of testamentary capacity. Naul v. Naul, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 293. Where under the evidence, testator's capacity was such as he always naturally possessed since attaining majority, evidence tending to show his mental condition within a reasonable time before reaching majority has a tendency to show capacity at the time of execution of the will. In re Wheelock's Will [Vt.] 56 Atl. 1013. The record of proceedings to appoint a guardian over testator two years after execution of his will was not admissible. Junkin v. Harvey [Iowa] 94 N. W. 559. Testimony that testatrix said certain property was hers is not admissible to show that she claimed other person's property, the issue being testamentary capacity, and there being no evidence that she was of unsound mind until three years later. Crossan v. Crossan, 169 Mo. 631, 70 S. W. 136. Evidence of facts tending to show imbecility of mind at a date prior to the execution of the will are important only as bearing on testator's mental condition at the time it was made. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227.

63. Insanity of other members of his family is not admissible without direct proof of testator's insanity. Berry v. Safe Deposit & T. Co., 96 Md. 45.

Threats of the executor that if the will was sustained he would take away from the caveators their bequests are not admissible to impeach him, being too remote. Berry v. Safe Deposit & T. Co., 96 Md. 45.

65. Where some witnesses testified that the testator was crazy, asking witnesses for the proponent as to whether or not the testator was capable of transacting business, which was answered in the negative, is not requiring too high a test. Hess v. Killebrew [Ill.] 70 N. E. 675.

66. Junkin v. Harvey [Iowa] 94 N. W. 559.

67. In Michigan it is held that such a witness may say that the testator had not sufficient intelligence to comprehend a given instrument, that he had not memory sufficient to remember the natural objects of his bounty, or his desires regarding the disposition of his property, and that he was without the mental power to carry out his intentions, but not that he was competent or incompetent to make a will, or a particular will. Held error to take opinion of commissioner of claims who saw testatrix but once. Page v. Beach [Mich.] 95 N. W. 981. In Illinois it is held to be improper to ask a nonexpert witness whether the testator had sufficient mind and memory to understand the will in question, to carry in his mind the nature and character of his property, and to understandingly execute a will. Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410.

A person who had seen and observed testator at various times during the period of the alleged insanity may testify as to whether decedent was of sound mind, after stating facts on which the opinion is based. Kirsh-

The testimony of medical experts as to testator's mental condition is entitled to relatively little weight,[71] unless based on their personal knowledge and observations.[72] The weight of opinions of nonexperts depends upon the facts upon which it is predicated, and the intelligence and character of the witness.[73] And, in general, evidence of facts tending to show soundness of mind at or near the time of execution of the will is entitled to greater weight than opinions based on erratic conduct and eccentricities.[74] The testimony of the physician who attended testator,[75] and of the scrivener who drew the will,[76] are entitled to great weight. The testimony of attesting witnesses is ordinarily entitled to great weight,[77] but at-

69. In re Van Alstine's Estate, 26 Utah, 193, 72 Pac. 942. Persons acquainted with the testator and who had associated with him on many occasions are competent to testify as to his mental condition at or about the time the will was made. Higgins v. Nethery, 30 Wash. 239, 70 Pac. 489. One who had known testator for thirty years, had frequently talked and transacted business with him, is competent to testify to his mental capacity. Scarborough v. Baskin, 65 S. C. 558. If a witness had testified that he lived in the same house with deceased and had seen him nearly every day and had had frequent conversations with him for a year prior to his death it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to permit him to give his opinion of testator's mental soundness. In re Keegan's Estate, 139 Cal. 123, 72 Pac. 828. The observations of the wife of testator after divorce as to his habits and condition and the effect of drugs to which testator was addicted are admissible. Not excluded under Rev. 70. In Massachusetts nonexpert witnesses cannot testify as to their opinion in regard to mental condition on issue of insanity. Question from these facts, "what do you infer as to testator's mental capacity," properly excluded. McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358. May testify as to whether they had noticed any failure of memory or anything to indicate whether testator was of unsound mind, but the testimony must be confined to facts. Id.

71. The value of answers to hypothetical questions bearing on the capacity of the testator must be based solely upon the truth of the facts upon which they are based. Kirsher v. Kirsher, 120 Iowa, 337, 94 N. W. 846. Of no value where he had no personal acquaintance with the testator and the hypothetical case put to him is based on disputed facts. Evidence held insufficient to establish incapacity. In re Richmond's Estate, 206 Pa. 219. The mere opinions of expert witnesses as to mental capacity, based upon an erroneous hypothesis, cannot prevail as against facts testified to by a number of competent observers. Philips v. Philips, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 113. Testimony of experts in answer to hypothetical questions that testator did not have testamentary capacity is not alone sufficient to show lack of capacity at the time of execution of the will. Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 599. The question of sanity not being involved but merely whether testator was legally capable and there being positive evidence of capacity and nothing in the evidence from which an inference of incapacity could be drawn, it was not error to refuse to permit medical experts to answer hypothetical questions as to testator's mental condition based on facts in evidence. Berry v. Safe Deposit & T. Co., 96 Md. 45. Except under special circumstances, expert testimony is entitled to only such weight as the jury may deem it to have when viewed in connection with other evidence. It is error to instruct that it is entitled to great weight. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. If against the sanity of testator, their testimony will be viewed with suspicion. Instruction that such testimony is entitled to peculiar weight, held error. Id.

72. If the experts have also personal knowledge of testator, their testimony is entitled to greater weight than the testimony of nonprofessional persons. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. The testimony of experts based on observations of testator's mental weaknesses and lack of memory will not overcome evidence that at the time of making the will testator knew the nature and amount of his property, the disposition he wanted to make of it and was transacting a hotel business in his own name at the time. 74. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. Mere opinions of witnesses unaccompanied by testimony showing any particular act or fact evidencing incompetency do not make out a case of incompetency, when the evidence shows that the testator knew what he was doing, and to whom he was giving his property. Evidence insufficient to show lack of capacity. Southworth v. Southworth, 173 Mo. 59, 73 S. W. 129.

75. Evidence held to show incapacity. Richardson v. Moore, 30 Wash. 406, 71 Pac. 18.

76. The testimony of the scrivener and the physician who attended testator at the time of the making of the will is of far greater weight than that of experts based on hypothetical questions. Evidence insufficient to show incapacity. In re Kane's Estate, 206 Pa. 201.

Entitled to no greater weight than that of any other witness who had the same opportunities for observation. King v. Rowan [Miss.] 34 So. 325.

testation is testimony as to sanity, and testimony of attesting witnesses that the testator was incompetent will be viewed with suspicion, though admissible.[78]

Testamentary capacity must be determined from the facts of each particular case;[79] hence the jury may not be told that debility of age is progressive or permanent.[80] It is not necessarily error to submit to the jury whether testator was "sane"[81] or what the witnesses "believed."[82] If there is any substantial evidence of incompetency or undue influence, the case should be submitted to the jury, otherwise the court should direct a verdict for proponents.[83]

Insanity need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[84] but by preponderance only.[85] Knowledge of contents of a will is proven by the fact that it is a re-execution of one well known to testator.[86]

(§ 2) B. Constituents of fraud and undue influence.—The fraud, force, or undue influence that will suffice to set aside a will, must be such as to overcome the free volition or conscious judgment of the testator, and to substitute the purposes of another instead, and must be the efficient cause, without which the will would not have been made.[87] The testator's free agency must have been destroyed and another's will substituted for his own.[88] The influence must have

95. Instruction approved. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400.

96. An instruction which in effect tells the jury in a contest on ground of undue influence that if testator made a will only for the purpose of keeping peace in the family, the verdict should be for contestants is prejudicial error. Davidson v. Davidson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 409.

97. Father and son. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 201 Ill. 191, 66 N. E. 371. Motives of natural affection and gratitude, even when accompanied by solicitations or arguments which appeal to such motives, do not constitute undue influence. Gavitt v. Moulton, 119 Wis. 35, 96 N. W. 395. A wife may influence her husband to make a will for her benefit or that of another, so long as she does not act fraudulently or extort benefits from him when he is not in condition to act as a free agent. In re Donovan's Estate, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081. That will is in harmony with request of testator's wife raises no presumption against it. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1108.

98. England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526. Evidence held not to show undue influence. Yorty v. Webster, 205 Ill. 630, 68 N. E. 1068. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 201 Ill. 191, 66 N. E. 371. Where a testator left all his estate to a foster child with whom he lived prior to his death. Some time before reasonable,[1] or that the testator has distributed his property in an unnatural manner,[2] while not in themselves sufficient to avoid the will or to raise a presumption against its validity, may be considered in determining whether or not the testator was unduly influenced, or mentally incapacitated. The mere fact that knowledge of the will was confined to the subscribing witnesses is no evidence that it was procured by undue influence.[3] Mere opportunity to exert undue influence,[4] or the suspicion that it was exercised,[5] or the existence of confidential relations between the testator and beneficiary,[6] are not, in themselves, sufficient to invalidate the will. But a presumption of undue influence may arise from such relations where the testator is old and feeble and makes an unnatural disposition of his property,[7] or where the beneficiary has a controlling agency in procuring its execution.[8] There is no presumption of undue influence arising from the his death he had been under guardianship because he was drinking excessively and wasting his property, but had been restored to capacity and four days later made the will which is contested. Evidence held insufficient to show that its execution was procured by fraud or undue influence. In re Casey's Will [Minn.] 99 N. W. 863.

99. England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526. Weakened mental and physical condition may be considered. Gavitt v. Moulton, 119 Wis. 35, 96 N. W. 395. Neither testator's age or character, nor the extent of his property, is evidence of undue influence. Instruction disapproved. In re Wiltsey's Will [Iowa] 98 N. W. 294.

1. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1108. In determining reasonableness of the will, the amount which testatrix was to receive as residuary legatee under her husband's will may be shown. Davenport v. Johnson, 182 Mass. 269, 65 N. E. 392. An instruction that in determining whether undue influence had been exercised, the jury might take into consideration "the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the will," without qualification or limitation, is reversible error. King v. Rowan [Miss.] 34 So. 325.

2. In re Holman's Will, 42 Or. 345, 70 Pac. 908; King v. Rowan [Miss.] 34 So. 325. That no provision is made for testator's minor children and all of his property is given to a married woman with whom testator lived is not affirmative evidence of undue influence. In re Eddy's Will, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 283. All property left to last family insufficient to show undue influence. Elliott v. Elliott [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1006. The fact that the will is foolish, unnatural, or unjust, does not show that it was made under undue influence. In re Donovan's Estate, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081. Where a testator left all his estate to strangers who had cared for him and his invalid wife for several years, evidence held insufficient to show undue influence. In re Laugen's Will [Wis.] 99 N. W. 437.

3. Gavitt v. Moulton, 119 Wis. 35, 96 N. W. 395; Vance v. Davis, 118 Wis. 548, 95 N. W. 939.

4. Zelozoskei v. Mason, 64 N. J. Eq. 327. Mere opportunity together with an expressed intention made some time before to make a different disposition of the property are insufficient to show undue influence. Barry v. Graciette [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 309. Mere proof that a daughter residing with the mother acquiesced in her view without proof that she knew or had reason to know that mother's prejudice was unwarranted does not establish undue influence by false statements or suggestions. Zelozoskei v. Mason, 64 N. J. Eq. 327. Evidence that proponents were the favored children and that they were more attentive to testatrix in her old age is insufficient to establish undue influence. In re Hook's Estate, 207 Pa. 203. That testatrix at the time of the execution of her will executed a deed to be delivered to her son after her death is not sufficient to show undue influence by such son. Id.

5. A mere suspicion that undue influence or pressure was brought to bear is not sufficient. In re Keegan's Estate, 139 Cal. 123, 72 Pac. 828. That the person might have unduly influenced testator and that he was named executor and his wife was a beneficiary do not raise presumption of undue influence. Refusal to so instruct held proper. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196. Evidence tending to show only a possibility of undue influence is insufficient. Stewart v. Lyons [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 442.

6. Fact that beneficiary was testator's brother and that they had lived together and been partners for forty years does not warrant the inference of undue influence. In re Kane's Estate, 206 Pa. 204. Does not render the will invalid, where the mental capacity and volition of the testator is apparent. In re Wickes' Estate, 139 Cal. 195, 72 Pac. 902. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence. In re Brugh's Will, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 263. Merely because the son who benefited largely by the will of testatrix acted as her attorney in her lifetime, will not shift the burden of proving absence of undue influence on him, there being no evidence that her mental faculties were impaired. In re Hook's Estate, 207 Pa. 203.

7. But there is a presumption of undue influence where the testator from bodily infirmity or age is of comparatively weak mind and the beneficiary stands in confidential relations. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. That the testator made an unnatural disposition of his property and the beneficiary had confidential relationship with testator with slight evidence that he abused it is sufficient to invalidate the will. In re Holman's Will, 42 Or. 345, 70 Pac. 908. That the provisions of a will, made while testator was in a feeble condition, are manifestly unjust and unfair in discriminating in favor of certain members of the family to the exclusion of others, raises a presumption of undue influence. In re Elster's Will, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 63.

8. The active agency of the beneficiary in relation of husband and wife,[9] or from the fact that the person who drew the will is a beneficiary,[10] or from the existence of meretricious relations between the parties.[11] A mistake of fact on the part of testator, in order to justify the setting aside of the will, must be shown to be a clear mistake on his part, which misled him, and not a conclusion reached by his own judgment, though different from that which the court or jury might reach on the same information.[12]

Evidence.—On trial of an issue of undue influence, it is permissible to show the relations existing between the testator and the beneficiary,[13] and the mental[14] and physical condition of testator at the time of making the will,[15] and that the beneficiary refused relatives access to testatrix.[16] Declarations of the testator, made either before or after the execution of the will, are not proof of the facts stated therein,[17] but are generally admitted for the purpose of showing his personal feelings and mental condition.[18] The conduct and declarations of those procuring procuring the will to be made in the absence of those who have an equal claim on testator's bounty, and where the testator is enfeebled by old age and disease is a circumstance which indicates the probable exercise of undue influence. Evidence held sufficient to warrant submission to jury. England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526. Where the party to be benefited by the will has a controlling agency in procuring its execution, it is universally regarded as a very suspicious circumstance, and one requiring the fullest explanation. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. Where the party preparing or procuring a will takes a large beneficial interest thereunder, stricter proof than usual is necessary to show knowledge on the part of testator of the contents of the will. But held not to apply where the interest was an appointment as executor without bonds and a provision for the payment of a debt the evidence of which such party already held, it also not appearing that he suggested or instigated the making of the will. Woodson v. Holmes, 117 Ga. 19.

9. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence on part of wife. Succession of Jacobs, 109 La. 1012.

10. As where he received a legacy of $11,200, the estate being valued at $225,000. Haughian v. Conlan, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 290.

11. In re Eddy's Will, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 283. There is no presumption of undue influence on the part of one not a beneficiary from the fact that he and testatrix held meretricious relations. In re Jones' Will, 85 N. Y. Supp. 294. The fact that one to whom testatrix devised her property was at the time unlawfully cohabiting with her will not invalidate the will nor afford a presumption of undue influence. The fact of unlawful sexual intercourse was merely hinted at. Stewart v. Lyons [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 442.

12. In re Alexander's Estate, 206 Pa. 47.

13. Page v. Beach [Mich.] 95 N. W. 981.

14. Evidence of weakness of mind in the care of testator's estate and the transaction of business admissible to show susceptibility to undue influence. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. A petition filed by proponent stating that testator was mentally incompetent is admissible on an issue of undue influence. Zibble v. Zibble, 131 Mich. 655, 92 N. W. 348.

15. Lingle v. Lingle, 121 Iowa, 133, 96 N. W. 708.

16. Davenport v. Johnson, 182 Mass. 269, 65 N. E. 392.

17. Declarations of the testator made before or after the execution of the will are not proof of the truth of the fact stated therein. Davidson v. Davidson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 409. Prior declarations not evidence of undue influence. In re Wiltsey's Will [Iowa] 98 N. W. 294; In re Jones' Will, 85 N. Y. Supp. 294; Davidson v. Davidson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 409. The admission in evidence of statements made after execution of a will, to show undue influence, is error. Rapp v. Becker, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 139. In California, it is held that where a will is disputed on the ground of fraud, duress, imposition, or other like cause, not drawing into question the testator's mental capacity at the time of its execution, neither his prior nor subsequent declarations are competent evidence. In re Donovan's Estate, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081.

18. In re Jones' Will, 85 N. Y. Supp. 294. If there is independent proof of coercion they are admissible to show the state of the testator's mind, and to show that he was influenced by such coercion. Davidson v. Davidson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 409. The refusal of the court to charge that the declarations of the deceased could not be considered in determining the question of undue influence in view of the testimony and instructions held erroneous. Zibble v. Zibble, 131 Mich. 655, 92 N. W. 348; Wall v. Dimmitt, 24 Ky. L. R. 1749, 72 S. W. 300; In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1108; Zibble v. Zibble, 131 Mich. 655, 92 N. W. 348. Admissible only to show his mental condition at the time of execution and his susceptibility to influences. Wall v. Dimmitt, 24 Ky. L. R. 1749, 72 S. W. 300; Crowson v. Crowson, 172 Mo. 691, 72 S. W. 1065; Davidson v. Davidson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 409; In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1108. Statements of testator that he had made a will "and had left his sons * * * out and that he had to do it to keep down hell at home" are admissible. Powers v. Powers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1468, 78 S. W. 152. On contest on ground of undue influence of the wife, statements made by testator before marriage showing his feelings towards her and her relatives are too remote to be admissible. Pattee v. Whitcomb [N. H.] 56 Atl. 459. Evidence of declarations of testator and of conversations between testator, the beneficiary and contestant held properly excluded no proper foundation having been laid. Yorty v. Webster, 205 Ill. 630, 68 N. E. 1068. Inadmissible to controvert a will by unlawful means, tending to show their purpose, are evidence[19] unless other innocent devisees would be injured thereby. Independent declarations of a legatee as to the testamentary capacity of the testator are not admissible.[20] There is a conflict of authority as to whether or not a witness may give his opinion as to the susceptibility or nonsusceptibility of testator's mind to the influence of others.[21] In New Hampshire, such opinions are admissible if the witness is qualified by acquaintance with the testator to give them. Qualification is a question for the court.[22]

Weight and insufficiency.—Undue influence may be shown by all the facts and circumstances surrounding the execution of the will,[23] but such evidence must go to the extent of showing that the testator was dominated beyond his control and deprived of his free agency.[24] Evidence to establish undue influence over a sound, strong, and healthy mind, must be direct, clear, and positive,[25] and the feebler the mind of the testator, from whatever cause, the less evidence will be required to invalidate the will.[26] Failure of proponent to offer any testimony adds nothing to the probative force of contestant's testimony.[27] Where the will the facts of the execution of the will or to show that it was the outcome of duress or fraud not involving her mental condition. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. Statements by the testator that he had been influenced admissible. Powers v. Powers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1468, 78 S. W. 152. Letters written by testator prior to the execution of will relating to the disposition of his property are competent both to disprove the issue of undue influence and as tending to show the mental capacity of the testator. And if the substance of letters written 15 years before was repeated in those of the later date, they are also admissible. Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410.

19. Declarations of beneficiary tending to show confidential relations between himself and testator. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. Statements of the wife to whom a greater part of the estate was left tending to show ill will towards two sons, disinherited, and to the effect that she would see to it that they should get no part of testator's estate, are admissible. Powers v. Powers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1468, 78 S. W. 152. Statements of the husband of the testatrix that he would see to it that contestants would receive nothing are admissible (Wall v. Dimmitt, 24 Ky. L. R. 1749, 72 S. W. 300), and because he would have received the same estate under the statute will not change the rule that admissions and declarations of a legatee or devisee are admissible against himself and his co-legatees and devisees (Id.).

20. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. It is error to admit declarations of some of the devisees made after execution of the will tending to show undue influence, since it is impossible to limit the effect thereof. Dennis v. Neal [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 387.

21. In Illinois they are not admissible. Evidence held insufficient to show, prima facie, undue influence so as to shift the burden of proof. Michael v. Marshall, 201 Ill. 70, 66 N. E. 273.

22. The susceptibility of the testator to his wife's influence is admissible on issue of undue influence exercised by her. The adverse party, however, being the administrator, who had elected not to testify, the testimony under Pub. St. 1901, c. 224, § 6, would be incompetent since facts occurring in the lifetime of the testator would be involved in giving the opinion. Pattee v. Whitcomb [N. H.] 56 Atl. 459.

23. Mullen v. McKeon [R. I.] 55 Atl. 747. Allegations of mental incapacity and undue influence are not supported by proof of want of knowledge of the contents of the will. Swearingen v. Inman, 198 Ill. 255, 65 N. E. 80. Where an elderly woman of sound mind having no near relatives devised all her property to her pastor and his family with whom she was intimate, evidence held insufficient to show undue influence. Caughey v. Bridenbaugh, 208 Pa. 414. Evidence held sufficient to warrant submission of questions of undue influence and capacity to the jury. Gibson v. Sutton, 24 Ky. L. R. 868, 70 S. W. 188. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence. In re Calef's Estate, 139 Cal. 673, 73 Pac. 539; Rewell v. Warden, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 344. Evidence sufficient to sustain finding that testator was not unduly influenced. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820.

24. In re Donovan's Estate, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence. Id. Evidence that testator was old, feeble, and unable to read or write, and that the will was prepared and executed under the direction of a beneficiary, and that certain heirs were disinherited without apparent cause held sufficient to show undue influence. In re Elster's Will, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 63.

25. Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400. Strong and convincing evidence required in such case. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence of son. In re Alexander's Estate, 206 Pa. 47.

26. Evidence sufficient to authorize jury to pass on question of undue influence. England v. Fawbush, 204 Ill. 384, 68 N. E. 526. Evidence insufficient to show undue influence. Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410. In cases of weakness of mind arising from the near approach of death strong proof is required that the contents of the will were known to testator, and that it was his spontaneous act. Mullen v. McKeon [R. I.] 55 Atl. 747.

27. Does not require submission to jury where the evidence offered by contestants, if admitted to be true, does not require it. Somers v. McCready, 96 Md. 437.

is witnessed by persons not acquainted with the maker, the attending circumstances must be such as to preclude probability of fraud.[28]

§ 3. The testamentary instrument or act. A. Requisites, form, and validity. —A will is a disposition of property to take effect after death.[29] No formal words are necessary to its validity and any instrument, testamentary in character and executed in conformity to the statutes, should be admitted to probate.[30] If the instrument passes some present interest, although the right to possession and enjoyment may be postponed, it is not testamentary;[31] but if it passes no interest or right until the death of the maker,[32] and is revocable by him at any time,[33]

28. In re McAndrew's Estate, 206 Pa. 366.

29. In re Megary's Estate, 206 Pa. 260; Coulter v. Shelmadine, 204 Pa. 120. An instrument which provides only for payment of debts and the appointment of an executor may be a will though it makes no disposition of property. Leaving property to pass under statutes. Mulholland v. Gillan, 25 R. I. 87.

30. The form of the instrument is immaterial if its substance is testamentary. In re Megary's Estate, 206 Pa. 260. Writing held to show intention of deceased to thereby give his property to his brother after death and hence to constitute a will. Boatman v. Boatman's Estate, 105 Ill. App. 40. If the writing is a disposition of property to take effect after death and executed as a will it is testamentary in character though irregular in form. Particular paper held a will and entitled to admission to probate. In re Megary's Estate, 206 Pa. 260. A letter written by decedent to his wife, and not purporting on its face to be anything more than an expression of advice and recommendation, held not testamentary in character. Thurston's Adm'r v. Prather, 25 Ky. L. R. 1137, 77 S. W. 354.

31. Deed held to convey present interest. Durand v. Higgins, 67 Kan. 110, 72 Pac. 567. Trust deed held not testamentary in character. Cross v. Benson [Kan.] 75 Pac. 558. A deed of trust of personalty for distribution on death of the donor who was to retain possession during life with power to change the disposition of the property on notice to the trustee held not testamentary in character but to convey a present interest. Kelley v. Snow [Mass.] 70 N. E. 89. Deeds given to third persons to be delivered after maker's death held not testamentary. St. Clair v. Marquell, 161 Ind. 56, 67 N. E. 693; Bogan v. Swearingen, 199 Ill. 454, 65 N. E. 426. Reservation in a deed of the use of the land for life does not render it a will. Adair v. Craig, 135 Ala. 332. A deed, reserving the rents and profits of the land to the grantor for life, held to have taken effect on delivery and not to have been a testamentary disposition. Dozier v. Toalson [Mo.] 79 S. W. 420. A deed granting the property "for and during her natural life and after her death" to the grantor's heirs and on condition that grantor retain possession and control during his life, held to convey a present interest in the property and not to be testamentary in its character. Christ v. Kuehne, 172 Mo. 118, 72 S. W. 537. An instrument executed and attested as a deed and duly delivered which recites that the grantor has given the grantee certain land, "said land to belong to him at my death" held not testamentary, but to convey a present title with possession postponed until the grantor's death. Brice v. Sheffield, 118 Ga. 128. Instrument in form of and executed as a deed conveying land to be held by the grantee "after the expiration of the life estate herein reserved, in fee simple forever," held to convey an interest in praesenti, and not to be testamentary in character. Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 372. Contract for sale of realty held not testamentary in character. Cone v. Cone, 118 Iowa, 458, 92 N. W. 665. Deeds, containing no power of revocation and no reservation postponing the vesting of title until the grantor's death, which were delivered and recorded, held not testamentary in character. Evidence held not to show deeds a testamentary disposition. Phillips v. Phillips, 30 Colo. 516, 71 Pac. 363. A contract making the community property the separate property of the surviving spouse as allowed by 1 Ball. Ann. Code, & S. § 4492, is not a will, therefore such section did not repeal § 4601, Id., relating to the construction of wills. McKnight v. McDonald [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1060. A writing "For services rendered I • • • leave • • • the balance of my account in • • • which amounts to • • •" which with the bank book was delivered to the beneficiary in view of death held not a testamentary disposition of the fund. McCloskey v. Tierney, 141 Cal. 101, 74 Pac. 699.

32. Durand v. Higgins, 67 Kan. 110, 72 Pac. 567. An instrument which declares the present will of the maker as to disposal of property after his death, without attempting to declare or create any rights therein prior to such event, is testamentary in character. Instrument providing that certain notes held by maker should be void after his death held testamentary in character and revoked by subsequent will. Templeton v. Butler, 117 Wis. 455, 94 N. W. 306. Under the evidence, deeds held intended to operate as a testamentary disposition and not to pass a present interest. Wilenau v. Handlon, 207 Ill. 104, 69 N. E. 892. Deed from father to son reciting that it was on condition that the grantor should reside on the property and hold the deed in his possession until his death, when it was to be delivered to the grantee or his heirs held not to pass a present interest and to be testamentary in character. Griffin v. McIntosh, 176 Mo. 392, 75 S. W. 677. A conveyance in the form of a deed, to take effect after the death of the maker. Coulter v. Shelmadine, 204 Pa. 120. It is immaterial that the parties meant to make a deed instead of a will if the language used makes it testamentary in character. Id.

33. In re Megary's Estate, 206 Pa. 260. Delivery to beneficiary does not affect maker's right to revoke. Id.

it is testamentary in character. In order to operate as a will, however, it must be executed in accordance with the statutes relating to such instruments.[34] If the instrument is properly signed, attested, and subscribed, a formal attestation clause is not necessary.[35]

(§ 3) B. Execution of will. 1. Mode of execution.—The laws of the domicile of the testator govern as to the validity and effect of wills of personal property,[36] and those of the place where the land is situated as to wills of real estate.[37] It is generally held that a substantial compliance with the statutes governing the execution of wills is sufficient,[38] though some states require them to be followed literally.[39] The testator must know the contents of the will.[40] It must be signed by testator,[41] or for him by some other person in his presence or under his direction,[42] and must be signed or the signature acknowledged in the presence of the required number of witnesses[43] who must sign it at his request,[44]

34. If not, it cannot operate as a will, though such was the intention of the parties and though it is testamentary in charatcer. Johnson v. Johnson, 24 R. I. 571. A direction on making deposits in a savings institution that in the event of the death of the depositor payment should be made to his wife is testamentary in character and invalid unless executed as a will. Stevenson v. Earl [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 1091. Griffin v. McIntosh, 176 Mo. 392, 75 S. W. 677. To entitle a deed to be probated as a will it must be executed in the form of a warranty deed conveying the land described, with the intent that it shall take effect only after the maker's death, and such intent must be expressed therein. Evidence held sufficient to show lost deed was testamentary in its character. Instruction held sufficient. Lincoln v. Felt [Mich.] 92 N. W. 780.

35. Facts as to attestation may be proved by subscribing witnesses in absence of attestation clause. Williams v. Miles [Neb.] 94 N. W. 705. One not explicit may be disregarded. In re Cornell's Will, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 412. Okl. St. 1893, § 6173, does not require it. In its absence it can be shown by competent evidence that the will was properly attested. Ward v. Logan County Com'rs, 12 Okl. 267, 70 Pac. 378.

examination is not essential to the validity of a will by a married woman under a statute authorizing them to dispose of their property by will in as full and complete a manner as though unmarried.[57] Whether or not the formalities required at the execution of the will have been complied with is a question of fact for the jury.[58]

(§ 3B) 2. Nuncupative and holographic wills.—Nuncupative wills are not favored by the law, and in application for their probate it must appear that every requirement of the statute has been met.[59] It must appear that the person made use of words which would amount to a testamentary disposition, that he intended to make a will, and that he indicated in some way to a sufficient number of persons present that he had such an intention, and that he desired them to bear witness to the disposition he was about to make of his property.[60] Proof must be made within the time limited, and in the manner prescribed, by statute.[61] Holographic wills must be wholly written in all their essential parts[62] by the testator.

(§ 3) C. Revocation and alteration. Revocation in general.—If a will offered for probate has been revoked for any reason, it is not the will of the testator, and a judgment refusing probate must be rendered.[63] As a general rule, marriage of the testator revokes all former wills.[64] In some states the birth of a child, subsequent to the execution of the will and before testator's death, operates to revoke it.[65] In order to constitute an express revocation, there must be an intention to revoke,[66] which must be carried out in some of the forms generally required by statute.[67] The tearing, cutting, or other mutilation of a will found in the testator's possession, will be presumed to have been done by testator or under his direc-

64. At common law the marriage of a woman and the marriage of a man, and the birth of issue, revoked their former wills. Francis v. Marsh [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 573. Marriage operates as a revocation of a will made by a single woman (Burns' Ind. Rev. St. 1901, § 2732) but held not to apply where a married woman makes a will, is divorced, and remarries (Hibberd v. Trask, 160 Ind. 498, 67 N. E. 179), or may, though made in contemplation thereof and though provision for the wife is made therein (Id.). Code 1899, c. 77, §§ 6, 8, did not impair the right of disposal of property by will but merely prescribed a reasonable regulation for the exercise thereof. Francis v. Marsh [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 573. In Massachusetts, marriage revokes a will not made in contemplation thereof, except in so far as the will is an exercise of a power of appointment [Rev. Laws, c. 135, § 9]. In case the property, in default of appointment, goes to those who would have been entitled to it had it been the property of the donee of the power, the statute applies and the will is revoked. tion, with the intention of revoking it,[68] and proponent has the burden of showing that it was not.[69] If partial obliterations or cancellations are made with the intention of substituting other words therefor, and such intention is frustrated, they will not work a revocation, but the will will stand as originally written.[70] A written entry of revocation on the will to be effective must either be attested as in the manner of execution of wills, or so written as to obliterate or cancel some material portion.[71] Mere naked declarations of testator that he has revoked a will do not operate as a revocation, and are not admissible to establish such fact.[72]

By subsequent will or codicil.—A will[73] or a particular bequest or devise therein[74] may be revoked by a subsequent will or codicil, either expressly or by implication.[75] The fact that the new disposition is void will not prevent a revocation, unless an implied condition to the contrary appears from a construction of both instruments.[76] The mere fact that a subsequent will was made is not sufficient of itself, and without some proof of its contents, to show revocation of a former one.[77] Courts do not favor revocation by implication and incline to such construction as will give effect to both instruments;[78] hence, the later will revokes the former one only when the two are,[79] and only in so far as they are, thoroughly and radically contradictory of, or inconsistent with, each other.[80] In such cases, revocation is a question of intention to be determined from the instruments themselves and from all the circumstances.[81]

An agreement to make a particular will does not revoke an existing one.[82]

68. Stevens v. Stevens [N. H.] 56 Atl. 916. It must appear that the will was in testator's possession and found among his papers after his decease in the condition in which it was offered. A presumption of revocation by removal of the seal is not raised by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, who had not seen the will for 20 years that the seal was different when executed, the will produced being apparently perfect and with the seal attached. Id. The absence of any mutilation of the paper does not conclusively establish, and is not evidence that the removal of the seal was intentional. Id. Where the will produced had the testator's name erased, it will be presumed that it had been revoked without further proof of knowledge of testator of such mutilation. Cutler v. Cutler, 132 N. A subsequent will which has the effect of revoking a prior one may be shown for the purpose of defeating probate of the prior one, although by reason of its loss or destruction the dispositions made therein cannot be shown and are incapable of execution.[83] The burden of proof in such case is on the party alleging revocation,[84] and the evidence to that effect must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing.[85]

Presumption of revocation arising from failure to find will.—If a will, shown to have been made and left in testator's possession, can not be found after his death, he will be presumed to have destroyed it animo revocandi,[86] and the burden of showing the contrary is on the party seeking to establish it.[87] Declarations of the testator and other secondary evidence are admissible for the purpose of showing the probability or improbability of its destruction by him,[88] or whether the destruction was accidental or with intent to revoke.[89] The mere fact that contestant had an opportunity to destroy the will, will not of itself overcome this presumption, but it is generally held that it may be considered in connection with other proof.[90] Where the will is last seen in the hands of another than testator, no such presumption of revocation arises.[91]

Election by testator's widow to take under the statute does not revoke the will but it must be administered so far as may be.[92]

Alterations.—Interlineations or alterations made after the execution of the will, and without a re-execution thereof,[93] are inoperative, but do not affect the validity of the instrument as originally executed.[93] The same is true of words in-

(§ 3) *D. I do nominate and appoint W. as one of the executors of my will and do hereby revoke the appointment of J. to said will," revives the will therein referred to, which had been revoked by marriage of testator. Francis v. Marsh [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 573.

99. The mere refiling of the former will with the county judge will not revive it, though such may have been testator's intention [Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 2282]. In re Noon's Will, 115 Wis. 299, 91 N. W. 670.

1. And proof of the codicil establishes the will. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 198 Ill. 621, 64 N. E. 1038. A duly executed codicil operates as a new adoption of the original will so as to make it speak as of the date of the codicil. In re De Haven's Estate, 207 Pa. 152. The execution of a codicil within 30 days of decedent's death, said codicil reciting that it was executed and declared "together with the will set forth on the preceding pages to be her last will and testament," did not constitute a re-execution so as to invalidate charitable bequests. Construing Civ. Code, §§ 1313, 1287. In re McCauley's Estate, 138 Cal. 432, 71 Pac. 512.

2. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 194.

3. In re Douglas' Will, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 609.

4. In Wisconsin it does not. Revocation takes effect immediately and renders former will totally inoperative. In re Noon's Will, 115 Wis. 299, 91 N. W. 670.

In Illinois it works a revival. 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. (2d Ed.) pp. 4044, 4045, providing that a will cannot be revoked by any writing not testamentary in character. Stetson v. Stetson, 204 Ill. 601, 66 N. E. 262.

In Nebraska, it is held that such destruction does not of itself revive the former one, but that the intention of the testator governs, and that, if there is any presumption, it is against revivor. Evidence insufficient to show intention to revive. Williams v. Miles [Neb.] 94 N. W. 705.

5. In Connecticut, it is held that probate courts possess only such powers as are expressly or by necessary implication conferred on them by statute and are without jurisdiction to set aside their decree admitting and approving a will, even if obtained by fraud [Conn. Gen. St. 1902, § 194]. Except ex parte orders [Gen. St. 1902, § 203]. Delehanty v. Pitkin [Conn.] 56 Atl. 881.

In Illinois, the county court has jurisdiction to set aside the probate of a will procured by fraud. Wright v. Simpson, 200 Ill. 56, 65 N. E. 628. Heir's name designedly omitted from petition for probate and statutory notice not given him. Id. Petition may be filed at a subsequent term and concurrently with a petition in chancery to set aside the will. Id.

In Kansas a proceeding to set aside the will because of uncertainty of beneficiaries and to have the property turned over to applicant, as heir at law, held an action to contest the will within Gen. St. 1901, § 7957, of which the probate court had no jurisdiction. Dean v. Swayne, 67 Kan. 241, 72 Pac. 780.

In Massachusetts, the probate court can enter a compromise decree only when all parties agree thereto, and cannot determine whether or not there has been a compromise or its nature. Hence, a decree of the supreme court on compromise of a contest is not subject to collateral attack because a prior decree of the probate court void for want of jurisdiction had not been vacated or set aside [Rev. Laws, c. 148, § 15]. Bartlett v. Slater, 182 Mass. 208, 65 N. E. 73. And on presentation of the decree of the supreme court, it was the duty of the probate court

(§ 4) B. Parties in will cases and the right to contest.—Whoever has a right to offer a will in evidence or to make title under it may insist on having it proved.[6] Only parties having an interest in the estate, under the will or otherwise, may contest the will, either in the probate court, or by a subsequent proceeding.[7] Legatees under a will of personalty only cannot contest before the will is probated.[8]

The acceptance of a legacy, in the absence of fraud, estops the legatee from questioning the validity of the will,[9] unless the benefit received is thereafter paid to enter a decree revoking the former decree and re-establishing the will. Id.

In Michigan: Probate court may establish lost will [Comp. St. §§ 650, 651]. Ewing v. McIntyre [Mich.] 95 N. W. 540.

In Montana, it is held that the jurisdiction of the district court when exercising its probate powers is limited by the statute from which they are derived. It possesses powers expressly granted and all the powers incidentally necessary to their effective execution. May on consent of all parties interested enter a compromise decree on contest. In re Davis' Estate, 27 Mont. 490, 71 Pac. 757.

In Nebraska: The county court has exclusive original jurisdiction in the probate and contest of wills, and in their construction for the purpose of administration and settlement of estates [Neb. Comp. St. 1901, c. 23, § 140]. Can only come before district court on appeal or error. Anderson v. Anderson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 276. But its construction of the will in such case is for the benefit of the administrator only, in order to advise him what course to pursue. It will protect him, but does not affect the rights of adverse claimants under the will. Id. It also has power to grant equitable relief in proper cases, including the power to revoke probate. Such power is not expressly granted, but will be inferred from the statutory grant of full, complete and exclusive jurisdiction in probate matters. Genau v. Abbott [Neb.] 93 N. W. 942.

The district court has jurisdiction in equity of actions to construe wills in cases where a trust relation exists by reason of the terms of the instrument itself, and to determine the rights of the parties thereunder, but has no original jurisdiction in an action to contest a will or set aside the probate of the same. Anderson v. Anderson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 276. Where no trust is created, neither the executor, the heirs nor devisees, who claim only a legal title in the estate, will be permitted to come into a court of equity to obtain a construction of a will. Id.

In Pennsylvania, the register of wills has no power to revoke probate. In re McAndrew's Estate, 206 Pa. 366.

In Texas, the county courts having probate jurisdiction are without jurisdiction of an application to annul a will involving title to realty. Title held not involved. Allardyce v. Hambleton, 96 Tex. 30, 70 S. W. 76. A provision stating that the entire property was community except an undivided interest of a certain sum which was bequeathed in trust for a son, is prejudicial to the widow entitling her to sue to have such provision annulled and the county court has jurisdiction. Id.

6. Person claiming title by deed from devisee and her husband, though latter has tax deed. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. The executor may propound the will for probate. In so doing he acts for every one claiming under it. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227.

7. One who is not an heir or distributee of testator at the time of his death, and would not have been if those under whom he claims had died before testator, cannot contest probate or have probate in common form set aside for the purpose of a contest. Ligon v. Hawkes, 110 Tenn. 514, 75 S. W. 1072. Only those affected in pecuniary sense by settlement of the estate [Rev. Prob. Code, S. D. § 43]. Halde v. Schultz [S. D.] 97 N. W. 369. Claimant under alleged void clause may appeal from decree on bill to contest. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. A beneficiary under a prior will which was destroyed cannot contest a subsequent will. In re Rayner's Will, 93 App. Div. [N. Y.] 114. Legatees or heirs of heirs or their personal representatives may contest [Code, §§ 1663, 1664]. Waiver of widow or sale by heir of his expectancy do not estop them to contest. In re Wickersham's Estate, 138 Cal. 355, 70 Pac. 1076. Divorced husband, though he may have an interest contingent upon the death of a minor child, cannot contest. Particularly under Rev. Civ. Code, §§ 107-127, pertaining to custody and control of minors and their property where the custody had been given to testatrix. Halde v. Schultz [S. D.] 97 N. W. 369. In a Federal court in a suit to declare invalid certain provisions of the will, which if successful would cause a part of the estate to pass as intestate property, the legatees and distributees are indispensable parties unless special circumstances are shown to bring the case within some recognized exception to the general equity rule as to parties [Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, §§ 5858, 5859]. Stevens v. Smith [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 706.

A county owning a cemetery which is under the management of trustees has no financial interest in a will providing a cash legacy for building a receiving vault in the cemetery. De Witt County v. Leeper, 209 Ill. 133, 70 N. E. 760.

Only person interested or who would be benefited by setting aside the will can maintain a suit to test its validity. Code § 2653a. Niece held not entitled to maintain the action as next of kin, the estate appearing to consist only of personalty and where she alleged that testatrix left a husband surviving. Miller v. Maujer, 81 N. Y. S. 575.

8. In re Wiltsey's Will [Iowa] 98 N. W. 294. On death of contestant of a will relating to personalty only his representatives should be substituted [Code, § 3445]. Id.

9. Immaterial that acceptance was under protest or under a claim that legacy constituted only a part of what claimant was en-into court and no innocent persons will suffer by permitting him to do so.[10] The contesting of a will in the probate court precludes a party from thereafter instituting a suit to contest,[11] but mere participation in probate proceedings does not.[12] One opposing a caveat filed against a will is thereby estopped from contesting the will on the same grounds unless he can show that he has acquired further information which had been withheld from him by the parties complained of, and that he used reasonable diligence to acquaint himself with the facts.[13] A right to contest is not property, but is a mere right of action which cannot be assigned or inherited.[14]

(§ 4) C. Duty to produce will.—Statutes in some states require the person having the custody of a will to deliver it to the executor therein named or to the probate court within a specified time after knowledge of testator's death;[15] but independent thereof, action will lie for neglect or concealment.[16]

(§ 4) D. Probate and procedure in general.—A will must be established in court by proof before it has judicial recognition,[17] and in some states, before it is admissible in evidence.[18]

As a rule, the will may be admitted to probate in the state and county where the testator resided,[19] or where any part of his property is situated.[20] A will devising lands may be admitted to probate at any time after the death of the testator,[21] and the failure of the court to act on a petition for probate will not affect the right to file a subsequent petition.[22] titled to by law, outside the will. Stone v. Cook [Mo.] 78 S. W. 801.

10. Mere offer to pay in or to allow the amount to be deducted from party's share in the estate not sufficient. Not allowable where executors have paid special legacies, with his knowledge, out of residuum which would go to others if will declared invalid. Stone v. Cook [Mo.] 78 S. W. 801.

11. In Alabama, a person interested in a will may contest it by a bill in chancery, where he was not a contestant before the probate thereof [Ala. Code, § 4298]. Though he assisted the contestant in the probate court and paid part of the fees. Only barred when he files allegations in writing required by Code, § 4287. Breeding v. Grantland, 135 Ala. 497.

12. Heirs are not estopped to contest by the fact that they were parties to probate proceedings. Did not set up contention in probate court and not bound to do so. Gueydan v. Montagne, 109 La. 38.

13. Petitioner estopped. Reichard v. Izer, 96 Md. 495.

14. Ligon v. Hawkes, 110 Tenn. 514, 75 S. W. 1072.

15. In Vermont, any person having the custody of the will of a deceased person must under penalty deliver it to the executor or probate court within thirty days after knowledge of the death [Vt. St. §§ 2357-2359]. The statute is penal. Richardson v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 417; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 430.

16. An action on the case will lie under R. L. 2052 for neglect accruing before Vt. St. § 2359 took effect. R. L. § 295, not repealed by Vt. St. § 2359. Richardson v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 417. Allegations respecting Vt. St. § 2357 may be treated as surplusage as not being necessary to the offense charged. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 430. Allegation that the will was in the custody and control of defendant ever after it was executed, until a certain specified date, at which time, and never prior thereto, he presented it to the probate court which had jurisdiction, held sufficient. Richardson v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 417; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 430.

17. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 3788. In re Downing's Will, 118 Wis. 581, 95 N. W. 876. No court can give effect to a will not probated. In re Wiltsey's Will [Iowa] 98 N. W. 294. Rev. Civ. Code La. art. 1644. Sprowl v. Lockett, 109 La. 894.

18. Sand. & H. Dig. §§ 7410, 7411. Action for recovery of possession of land, plaintiff relying solely upon a lost will, not probated or proved as authorized by statute. Myar v. Mitchell [Ark.] 80 S. W. 750. The judgment admitting the will to probate is admissible to show the fact of probate. Action against trustee under a will for maladministration of the trust. Boyd v. McConnell, 209 Ill. 396, 70 N. E. 649.

19. Evidence on question of residence of testator in determining jurisdiction to probate the will. In re Golden's Will, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 544. The statements of residence in a holographic will are entitled to great weight, but are not controlling in a will prepared by an attorney. Id.

20. The will of a nonresident testator having property in the state may be admitted to probate. In re Barandon's Estate, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 380. Death of the testator within the county leaving property therein is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the probate court of such county to admit the will [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 6087]. Residence of the testator need not be averred. Petition sufficient. Higgins v. Nethery, 30 Wash. 239, 70 Pac. 489.

21. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. Right cannot be barred by limitation. Id.

22. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820.

A will is probated in solemn form when it is proved upon notice to all persons interested,[23] and in common form when no such notice is given.[24]

Ancillary relief by injunction to restrain proceedings in the probate court to probate subsequent wills,[25] and by the appointment of a receiver to protect the property, may be had.[26]

(§ 4) E. Burden of proof and evidence on the whole case.—Generally speaking, the law presumes testamentary capacity and that the will contains the unrestrained wishes of the testator. Hence, it is usually held that the burden is on the party attacking it on the ground of improper execution, lack of capacity, or undue influence, to prove the facts which he alleges.[27] In some states, however, the rule is that the burden is on proponent from first to last to show, by a fair preponderance of the evidence, the due execution of the will,[28] the competency of testator,[29] and that the will offered was not the result of fraud, deceit, or undue influence.[30] In others, proponents are first required to make out a prima facie

23. In re Hodnett's Will [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 75. Issue is will or no will. Sutton v. Hancock, 118 Ga. 436. In New Jersey the notice must be personal, and the decree is binding on all parties served. In re Hodnett's Will [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 75. Under Georgia Code may be probated in solemn form after due notice to all the heirs at law by the testimony of all the subscribing witnesses, or if they are dead, by proof of their signatures and that of the testator [Civ. Code, § 3282]. Sutton v. Hancock, 118 Ga. 436.

24. In re Hodnett's Will [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 75. Under Georgia Code will may be probated in common form upon the affidavit of a single subscribing witness and without notice to anyone [Civ. Code, § 3281]. Sutton v. Hancock, 118 Ga. 436. In New Jersey, probate in common form is allowed only when no caveat has been filed, but the executor may probate in solemn form whether a caveat has been filed or not [Laws 1898, p. 718]. In re Hodnett's Will [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 75. Chancellors sitting as ordinaries in the prerogative court of New Jersey have power to require an executor who has proved a will without notice to re-prove the same on notice to all parties concerned, whenever it appears that there is a fair ground for contesting it for lack of proper execution or for lack of testamentary capacity or on the ground of undue influence. Id. Facts sufficient. Petition of widow who was minor when will proved in common form. Id.

25. When testator executed three wills, the beneficiary in the first claiming that the other two were executed while testatrix was suffering from senile dementia could sue in the supreme court to enjoin probate of the will so as to have the rights of all determined in one suit. Le Brantz v. Conklin, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 715.

26. As in an action by the beneficiary to set aside subsequent wills and transfers by beneficiaries thereunder. Le Brantz v. Conklin, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 715.

27. In Nebraska, burden on contestants to show undue influence by establishing state of facts inconsistent with any other hypothesis. Evidence insufficient. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

In District of Columbia, burden on caveator to prove mental unsoundness. Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 47 Law. Ed. 567.

In Indiana, in action to contest plaintiffs must establish incapacity by a preponderance of all the evidence. Branstrator v. Crow [Ind.] 69 N. E. 668. Not done by proving insane delusion without proving that it affected the will. Wait v. Westfall, 161 Ind. 648, 68 N. E. 271.

In Iowa, burden of proving insanity on party alleging it. Kirsher v. Kirsher, 120 Iowa, 337, 94 N. W. 846.

In South Carolina, in proceedings to prove will, burden on contestants to show mental unsoundness. Evidence insufficient. Scarborough v. Baskin, 65 S. C. 558.

In Maryland: No evidence to weaken the legal presumption of sanity. Schwanteck v. Berner, 96 Md. 138.

In California, the contestant of a will has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence all the issues of fact raised by him. In re Latour's Estate, 140 Cal. 414, 73 Pac. 1070. Where a petition for probate and a contest are tried at the same time, the proponent should first present his preliminary proof in support of his petition, on which he has the burden of proof. If sustained, the contestant is then required to prove the facts which he alleges [Code, § 1312]. Contestants are considered plaintiffs and have the burden of proving the issues raised by them. Id. On contest before probate, the petition and contest are independent proceedings, which are not responsive to each other. Id.

28. In Oregon, in a proceeding to contest, the person seeking to maintain the validity of the will has the burden of proving every essential fact necessary to authorize probate in the county court. In re Mendenhall's Estate, 43 Or. 542, 73 Pac. 1033.

29. In Virginia, proponent has the burden of proving testamentary capacity by clear and convincing proof. Testimony of attending physicians and others that testator was mentally incapacitated not overcome by that of the subscribing witnesses to the contrary. Gray v. Rumrill, 101 Va. 507. In Massachusetts, by fair preponderance of evidence. Fulton v. Umbehend, 182 Mass. 487, 65 N. E. 829.

30. In Oregon, it is held that where a will is shown to have been duly executed the law presumes the competency of the testator and that it contains his unrestrained wishes in regard to the disposition of his property. But this presumption is a disputable one, and the burden rests on the pro-case as to the due execution of the will and testator's mental capacity, by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses or otherwise,[31] and the burden is then upon contestants to prove their allegations by a preponderance of all the evidence.[32] In secondary proceedings to contest the validity of a will,[33] or on appeal, the judgment or decree of the probate court admitting the will to probate is generally held to be prima facie evidence of its due execution and validity, and the burden of proof in such cases is therefore on contestants.[34] It is the duty of the proponent to procure and lay before the court such evidence as may be necessary and appropriate to establish the will.[35]

When a will is offered for probate, there must first be proof that testator was of sound mind when it was made,[36] and where the happening of a contingency is necessary to its validity, proponents must establish the happening of such contingency.[37]

The custody of the will, the relations of the testator and beneficiaries, truthfulness of the witnesses, and the inherent probability of the instrument itself, are ponent from first to last to show that the will was not superinduced by fraud, deceit or undue influence. Petition to revoke. In re Holman's Will, 42 Or. 345, 70 Pac. 908.

31. Evidence held to show prima facie that testatrix was of sound mind and memory. Ortt v. Leonhardt, 102 Mo. App. 38, 74 S. W. 423.

32. In Illinois, the will and testimony of subscribing witnesses given when the will was admitted to probate make out a prima facie case. Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410. The law presumes capacity, and hence it necessarily results that upon the whole case the burden of proof rests upon the contestants to prove incapacity. Id.; Swearingen v. Inman, 198 Ill. 255, 65 N. E. 80.

In Missouri, it is held that proof that the testator was of the requisite age and sane when the will was executed makes a prima facie case, and it then devolves on contestants to establish incompetency or undue influence. Suit to contest. Southworth v. Southworth, 173 Mo. 59, 73 S. W. 129. Absence of any presumptions from fact of confidential relations. Proceeding to contest. Instructions approved. Crossan v. Crossan, 169 Mo. 631, 70 S. W. 136. Statutory contest of will. Crowson v. Crowson, 172 Mo. 691, 72 S. W. 1065. In the Federal court, in an action to contest the validity of a probated will under the Missouri statute, it was held that the burden of establishing the will and its validity is upon the party relying upon it to the same extent as though it had never been probated. Sawyer v. White [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 223. [Mo. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4622, 4623.] Attacked on ground of lack of capacity and undue influence. Burden on defendant. Id.

In Montana, where grounds of opposition are filed in the probate court, contestants are plaintiffs and have the burden of proof and the right to open and close. Proponents must first make out a prima facie case, however, and it is held that the contest does not begin until this has been done [Code Civ. Proc. § 2340]. Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756.

33. In New York, before a will can be admitted to probate, it must appear that at the time of its execution the testator was in all respects competent to make it, and not under restraint (Code Civ. Proc. § 2623. In re Elster's Will, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 62); but the decree of the surrogate admitting the will to probate is prima facie evidence of its validity, and hence, in an action to test the validity of a will admitted to probate, the burden of proving lack of testamentary capacity is on the contestants [Code Civ. Proc. § 2653a] (Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 599; Mock v. Garson, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 65). There is also a presumption that the testator had testamentary capacity. Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 599.

Evidence of incapacity insufficient to take case to jury. Philips v. Philips, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 113. Mere evidence that testator was miserly, eccentric and on some subjects irrational, is insufficient to sustain the burden of proof or to warrant submission of testamentary capacity to the jury. Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 599.

In Washington, it is held that, in an action to contest, where the record of a proceeding admitting a will to probate shows that the court had jurisdiction, and all facts necessary to show prima facie a valid will, the burden is on the contestants to show that the will was invalid by reason of the facts alleged. Order admitting will not conclusive, but taken as true until contrary is shown. Higgins v. Nethery, 30 Wash. 389, 70 Pac. 489. After admission of a will to probate, the burden is on contestants to show its invalidity, such admission being prima facie evidence of its validity. Hunt v. Phillips [Wash.] 75 Pac. 970.

In Louisiana, it is held that proceedings leading to the probate in common form are open to attack by those not made parties on any grounds that would be sufficient to support an action to establish the nonexistence of the will. Cox v. Lea's Heirs, 110 La. 1030.

In Pennsylvania, probate is prima facie sufficient evidence of execution. In re Amberson's Estate, 204 Pa. 397.

34. The probate is prima facie evidence of due execution of the will in subsequent proceedings to test its validity. In re Amberson's Estate, 204 Pa. 397.

35. In re Scott's Will, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 369.

36. Higgins v. Nethery, 30 Wash. 389, 70 Pac. 489. See ante, § 2.

37. Will directing a disposition of prop-circumstances from which its genuineness must be considered.[38] Declarations of the custodian at the time of producing it are res gestae.[39]

Formal execution must be proved, though admitted.[40] Proof of execution must be made by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses if they are available.[41] If absent, other evidence may be admitted as to its proper execution.[42] They are subject to the same rules as to contradiction and impeachment as other witnesses.[43] In some states all the attesting witnesses must be called.[44]

Deposition of nonresident subscribing witness may be taken.[45] The failure

erty "in case I die on my route." Laufer v. Powell, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 604, 71 S. W. 549.

38. Evidence examined and held to show that the instrument was not the will of deceased, but that it had been executed by an impostor. In re McAndrew's Estate, 206 Pa. 366.

On the contest of a will as a forgery, evidence is admissible:—That the subscribing witness claiming to have had the will in his possession furnished no information of its existence to the appraisers of the estate, though present when inquiries were made by them as to the existence of such a document. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 30 S. W. 99. That the individual charged with promoting the fraud was associated with the beneficiaries. Id. That decedent's attorney was in the habit of attending to decedent's business and that neither he nor his partner wrote the will. Id. That decedent's feelings were hostile to the beneficiary under the alleged forged will. Id. Under an allegation that proponent had conspired with others to defraud contestants and had forged the will probated, evidence that before seeking probate proponent had procured an appointment as administratrix of the estate, falsely alleging that she was the only heir and had sold a large portion of the property to her husband is admissible. Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756. As are statements by proponent's husband to the clerk of court requesting him to write to one of the contestants to the effect that the estate had been settled and closed. Id.

39. The statement made by a subscribing witness, who had possession of the instrument, to a justice of the peace to whom he delivered it, is admissible as part of the res gestae concerning its first production, and also to corroborate witnesses. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 30 S. W. 99. But evidence that a subscribing witness had a few years after execution of the will brought it to witness and explained his possession of it is not admissible. Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756.

40. Either in the orphan's court or it should be submitted as one of the issues. Nat. Safe Deposit, S. & T. Co. v. Heiberger, 19 App. D. C. 506.

41. When a will is contested, the subscribing witnesses must be produced and examined if present in the county and of sound mind [Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 2343] (Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756), and they may then be cross-examined on the whole case (O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788).

42. Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756. Proof of the genuineness of the signatures of dead or absent witnesses is evidence that all the facts recited in the attestation clause actually took place as therein set forth [Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 2343]. Id.

An attorney who witnessed the will may testify that he was requested by testator and did so after reading it over several times to testator. (Not privileged.) Elliott v. Elliott [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1006.

The calling of the attorney who drew the will as a witness by the executor is a sufficient waiver of privilege to authorize admission of his testimony. In re Cornell's Will, 85 N. Y. S. 920.

A legatee may testify as to the execution of the will. Disqualified as interested party at common law. In re Wheelock's Will [Vt.] 56 Atl. 1013.

43. Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756. Statements of subscribing witnesses, who are out of the state, contradictory to the facts in the attestation clause, and evidence of their reputation is admissible. Id. Code, § 2343 makes attestation clause evidence on identification of signatures of absent or deceased witnesses. Id. But not his statements that he had been given money by another to leave the state and that the person who had advanced the money had contracted to purchase whatever interest contestants had in certain property of deceased, the absence of such witness having been already accounted for. Id.

Evidence of contradictory statements and of character are admissible as affecting the credibility of the subscribing witnesses. The record of conviction of a subscribing witness of an infamous crime is admissible as affecting his credibility as a witness testifying in a contest of the will. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788.

44. All must be called in Massachusetts. The court could in the exercise of his discretion require the calling of a subscribing witness in court, though the statutory number of witnesses had already testified, the will being attested by five witnesses. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788. Not necessary in Missouri. Law does not make the proof of the will dependent on their testimony alone, or render their testimony absolutely essential. Lorts v. Wash, 175 Mo. 487, 75 S. W. 95. Under Georgia Code, a will may be proved in common form on the affidavit of one subscribing witness, but if proved in solemn form all must be called, or if they are dead, their signatures and that of testator must be proved [Civ. Code, §§ 3281, 3282]. Sutton v. Hancock, 118 Ga. 436.

45. But it is error to require bond of indemnity as security for cost, etc., from legatee applicant as a condition for permitting the issuance, since it was the executor's duty to procure such testimony as proponent of subscribing witnesses to remember the circumstances attending the execution will not overcome the recitals in the attestation clause.[46] Where the testimony of subscribing witnesses is in conflict, that which goes to sustain the instrument will be accepted, unless there is evidence which corroborates the other view.[47] Proper subscription and attestation raises a strong presumption of due execution.[48] Proof that testator signed the will and that a sufficient number of persons signed the attestation clause raises a presumption that it was duly executed.[49]

Declarations or admissions by legatees of a want of legal capacity of the testator or of the existence of undue influence can only be shown when made by a sole legatee under the will or by one having power to bind others thereby.[50] Admissions of devisees against their interest are generally receivable.[51] The admission of one legatee or devisee, obviously against his interest, though not entitled to the effect of an admission by all concerned in a common interest under the will, may tend to a presumption against all of them that the thing may be true.[52]

Shifting the burden.—Mere proof of opportunity to exert undue influence is not sufficient to shift the burden or require explanation.[53] But the burden may be shifted by proof that the will is unnatural and in favor of one in a position to exercise improper influence over the testator,[54] or that the beneficiaries were of the codicil executed in a foreign country. In re Scott's Will, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 369. Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 148. That proponent's attorney was present when deposition was taken is not ground for striking it from the files. Chap. 51, Id., does not apply. In re Arrowsmith's Estate, 206 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 77.

46. It is not necessary to sustain the validity of a will that the subscribing witnesses testify explicitly in full measure to every detail where, owing to lapse of time, they fail to recollect them. Mock v. Garson, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 65; In re Gillmor's Will, 117 Wis. 302, 94 N. W. 32; In re Kohley's Estate, 200 Ill. 189, 65 N. E. 699. Testimony of one subscribing witness suggesting doubt or the want of recollection of the transaction will not justify refusal of probate if the other witness corroborates the accuracy of the attestation clause as to execution. 47. In re Jones' Will, 85 N. Y. Supp. 295. A finding that testator signed before the witnesses is sustained by explicit testimony of one of them and an attorney, who was present, to that effect, though the other witness testifies to the contrary, and then states that he is not sure about it. 48. Fact that witness could not remember circumstances insufficient. In re Gillmor's Will, 117 Wis. 302, 94 N. W. 32. Absence of memory insufficient. Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding of due execution. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. The testimony of the attesting witnesses together with proof of the handwriting of a deceased witness held sufficient proof of execution. In re Morrow's Estate, 204 Pa. 479. Where the subscribing witnesses testify positively to the execution and the signature compares with admitted genuine signatures, a devisavit will not issue, though the will is unreasonable and several witnesses testified that the signature was not genuine. In re Malunney's Estate, 208 Pa. 21, 56 Atl. 1128. Proof that the will was made three years before testator's death, that it was executed in the presence of two witnesses who also signed at his request, is sufficient to show due execution where it appears to be valid. In re Amberson's Estate, 204 Pa. 397. Recitals in attestation clause are ineffective against positive and convincing proof to the contrary. In re Mendenhall's Will, 43 Or. 542, 73 Pac. 1033.

active agents in procuring its execution, where the evidence suggests undue influence,[55] or that the will was prepared or written by or under the direction of a beneficiary,[56] or when proof of opportunity to exert influence is supplemented by proof of the existence of relations of a confidential character, justifying the inference that the testator relied on the advice and assistance of the other person in business matters, or by proof that such person exerted an actual control over the testator,[57] or by the fact that a testamentary disposition is made of which those interested in decedent's property have no knowledge until after his death.[58] In some states, proof of confidential relations between the testator and the beneficiary is sufficient to place the burden of proof on him,[59] but this rule is not universal.[60] If permanent insanity has been proved, proponents have the burden of proving execution during a lucid interval.[61] Proof that testator could not articulate and could communicate only by signs does not shift the burden of proving that he understood the will and had mental capacity.[62]

(§ 4) F. Establishment of lost will.—A probate court of general powers may admit a lost or destroyed will to probate.[63] A petition to establish a lost will must specifically allege that it was in existence when testator died, or that it was destroyed during her lifetime without her consent, or was otherwise fraudulently disposed of.[64] In Louisiana, succession proceedings need not be set aside before institution of proceedings to establish a lost will.[65] Establishment in the probate court is a condition precedent to assertion (action of revindication) by one claiming under the will against intestate successors.[66]

The will may be proved by secondary evidence,[67] but it must be direct, clear and convincing, and will be subjected to the closest scrutiny.[68] Declarations of the

55. Where the disposition of testator's estate is not just or reasonable, the beneficiaries are active agents in procuring its immediate execution, and the evidence in connection with the situation of the parties strongly suggests undue influence, and calls for close scrutiny, the burden is upon proponent to overcome any presumption of fact arising from such circumstances. (§ 4) G. Judgments and decrees.—The entry of a formal decree admitting or refusing to admit the will to probate is not necessary,[71] nor is a judgment in such case rendered invalid because not signed by the judge,[72] nor because all persons interested were not made parties to the proceeding.[73]

A presumption of probate arises from acts of the register that would be unlawful and unauthorized if the will had not been proved.[74]

The judgments of courts to which the proof of wills is confided, while unreversed, are generally held to be as conclusive and binding as those of any other courts, and not subject to collateral attack,[75] except for fraud or want of jurisdiction.[76] The decree does not conclude the legal effect of its provisions.[77]

A decree of a court of another state admitting a will to probate is conclusive on the issue of validity as against a collateral attack.[78]

In general, on appeal from the probate court, the parties are confined to the issues raised in the lower court, which are tried de novo.[82] In some states on an appeal from an order admitting a will to probate, the parties are confined to the testimony of the subscribing witnesses,[83] while, on an appeal from an order refusing to admit, they may introduce any competent evidence.[84] A jury trial lies in discretion,[85] unless given by statute,[86] and should ordinarily be claimed.[87] Appeals from suits to contest are subject to ordinary limitations of the scope of review.[88]

The right to have probate set aside may be barred by laches.[93]

(§ 4) J. Suits to contest.—The statutory action to contest the validity of a will can be brought only after probate.[94] Persons claiming under a prior will may contest a subsequent will without having had the prior one probated, and without proving facts sufficient to entitle it to probate.[95] The allegations of the petition must be broad and specific enough to call in question the validity of the will and the competency and sufficiency of the proof as to its execution.[96] The interest of a contestant should appear.[97] The court may, in the absence of objection, direct an issue devisavit vel non without proof of the interest of plaintiffs, unless want of interest appears on the record.[98] The only question to be decided is whether the alleged will, or any part thereof, is the will of the testator.[99] The state and condition of the instrument and all that transpired at the time of its execution may be shown by any competent witness, whether he be a subscribing witness or not,[1] and the will itself is competent evidence to be submitted to the jury.[2] A transcript of the testimony of the subscribing witnesses to the will, taken in the probate court, is admissible in a suit to contest,[3] and makes out a prima facie case.[4] The question of the jurisdiction of the probate court to admit Branstrator v. Crow [Ind.] 69 N. E. 668. The bill contesting the will setting out the statutes of the state whose law governs and averring with detail of fact that the bill was not signed or acknowledged by the deceased as required by the law of that state, and that the witnesses did not attest or witness as required by said laws, does not entitle the proponents to a judgment non obstante veredicto. Davis v. Upson, 209 Ill. 206, 70 N. E. 602.

97. Petition may be amended to conform to the proof showing interest; thus the case was opened and petitioner allowed to show that she was a beneficiary under a former will, the evidence being already on file and therefore without surprise to defendant. the will to probate does not generally arise,[5] and the order of the court admitting the will to probate is not admissible.[6]

Contestants having the burden of proof are entitled to open and close.[7]

The contestants may voluntarily dismiss the action without prejudice,[8] and either proponent or contestant may demur to the evidence.[9]

Statutes requiring a trial by jury in actions to contest are held not to require the submission of every such case to a jury.[10] The right to a jury trial may be waived.[11]

The court, in proceedings to contest a will after probate, must find on all issues raised by contestants not submitted to the jury, whether any evidence was submitted in regard to them or not.[12]

The will being declared invalid, the probate thereof is rendered nugatory.[13]

(§ 4) K. Suits to set aside.—It is not within the general jurisdiction of courts of equity (in the absence of enabling statutes), to entertain bills to set aside the probate of wills on the ground that the probate court did not have jurisdiction.[14] Hence a Federal court of equity will not entertain such a suit unless it could be maintained in the state court.[15] Such an enabling statute presupposes the actual existence of the will and that its dispositions are not in contravention of public policy or morals. It applies where the nullity on which the attack is based consists of defects of form or is founded in private interest, but not where it is alleged there was in fact no will, or fraud or forgery is relied on.[16]

It is not necessary in Iowa to bring an equitable action to set aside a will; but the parties are entitled to a jury trial if they desire it.[17] The suit must be brought within the time fixed by the statute of limitations.[18]

Proc. § 2653a, providing that the issue as to the validity of a will shall be tried by jury, does not require the submission of every such case to the jury, but whether the evidence is such as to warrant submission is a question for the court. Philips v. Philips, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 113; Haughian v. Conlan, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 290. Held, that under the facts of the case the order denying probate was sufficiently doubtful to require a jury trial of the questions of fact involved, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2588. In re Rayner's Will, 93 App. Div. [N. Y.] 114. In New York, the appellate court, when its reversal or modification of a decree on an appeal from a decree admitting a will or revoking probate is based on a question of fact, is imperatively required to order a trial by jury of the material questions of fact [Code, § 2588]. In re Hopkins' Will, 176 N. Y. 595, 68 N. E. 1113. In New York, it is held that a verdict cannot be directed in favor of one party, no matter how great the preponderance of evidence in his favor, if the evidence of the opposite party presents an issue of fact on which the jury could properly find a verdict. (§ 4) L. Costs.—Costs and counsel fees will not be allowed contestants unless they had reasonable cause for such contest,[19] and if proponent acted in good faith in proposing the will, he should not be charged with the costs of a successful contest.[20] The counsel fees in defending a contest should not be allowed against the estate where it is insolvent and the action was between the next of kin and the legatees.[21] The award of costs in dismissing a petition for probate is discretionary with the probate court.[22] In actions to determine the validity of wills, the court may grant extra allowances in the way of costs under the New York statute.[23] In Illinois, it is held that costs will be charged against an executor in his capacity as executor.[24] Whether they shall be charged to the estate must be determined when he presents his account.[25] Costs will be allowed only against parties actually joining in the contest.[26]

(§ 4) M. Recording foreign wills.—Foreign wills, when probated and recorded under the statute have the same force and effect as domestic wills.[27] In Nebraska, the proof and allowance of a foreign will, if duly authenticated, will be presumed to be in accordance with the laws of such foreign state.[29] In New York, it is held that a will made by an inhabitant of that state and executed therein, where it is in writing and in existence, cannot be probated unless produced.[28]

§ 5. Interpretation.[30] A. General rules.—No construction is necessary where the language is clear, unambiguous and not impossible of fulfillment, and courts party plaintiff after the time in which such action could be brought is permissible, the prosecution of the action not being affected by the statute of limitations after the filing of the original petition. Lyons v. Berlau, 67 Kan. 426, 73 Pac. 52.

St. 1899, §§ 4634, 4635, must be proof of probate in order to prove transfer of title thereby, and authenticated record is not sufficient. Fenderson v. Mo. Tie & T. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 819. Authenticated copies of the foreign will together with the probate must be recorded in Missouri. The authenticated record of a foreign will alone affords no presumption that it was proved [Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4634, 4635]. Fenderson v. Mo. Tie & T. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 819. The record in New York of an exemplified copy of the record and proof of a foreign will, in order to show title in a devisee through a valid will, must show either in the attestation clause or proofs, that the witnesses became such at testator's request. particular intent.[36] Construction should favor validity[37] and avoid repugnancy.[38] The presumption is that wills are executed in accordance with statutes and the decisions interpreting them.[39]

If there is such repugnancy between two clauses that one or the other must fall, the later clause will prevail,[40] but the clearly expressed intention of testator will not be overborne by subsequent modifying clauses that are ambiguous and equivocal, and may justify either of two opposite interpretations. In such case should be so construed that, while effect is given to every word and clause, all will harmonize, so as to reach the general plan or scope of the entire will. Bauernschmidt v. Bauernschmidt, 97 Md. 35. Provided an effect can be given it not inconsistent with the general intention as gathered from the entire instrument. In re Pope's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1046. A provision that real estate should be sold when the youngest child of testator's son should come of age, and that if a sale was made during the lifetime of the son, a sum should be set aside for his support, refers only to children in esse at the time of testator's death, otherwise the distribution could not be made during the son's life, and the second clause would be inoperative. Sale made on youngest child living at testator's death coming of age. Gehr v. McDowell, 206 Pa. 100. A devise to one "during her life, to use and dispose of the same as she may think proper, with remainder thereof on her decease" to others. Held, the word "same" refers to the property and not to the life estate, and that the word "dispose" includes a conveyance in fee, and that the word "remainder" is subordinate to the power of disposition. Hence, the life tenant may convey the fee in the premises and the remainder vests on testator's death, subject to be defeated on the exercise of such power. Woodbridge v. Jones, 183 Mass. 549, 67 N. E. 878.

36. Absolute devise not limited by subsequent clause as to disposition of "any left." Cox v. Anderson's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1081, 70 S. W. 839. The general purpose of testator must prevail over obscure and doubtful language in the will, which, standing alone, might be susceptible of some other meaning. Gift of third to wife for life, followed by trusts for children, then over, and gift of other parts to trustees to pay income to children during lives and life of longest liver, held to show purpose of devoting entire estate to support of family. Demeritt v. Young [N. H.] 55 Atl. 1047.

If a general scheme can be found to have been intended and provided for in the will, it is the duty of the court to carry it into effect if it can legally do so. Holmes v. Walter, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380.

37. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447. A devise containing a provision that the devisees shall not sell or incumber the property until they reach the age of 35 is not repugnant to a provision that if any of them die without issue his share shall revert to the others, since the reversion will be construed to expire as to each share when the devisee thereof reaches the age of 35. Smith v. Isaacs, 25 Ky. L. R. 1727, 78 S. W. 434.

38. Smith v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1964, 72 S. W. 766. All must be harmonized and given effect if possible. Gueydan v. Montague, 109 La. 38. Under one interpretation of a will, it contained a prohibited substitution (Succession of May, 109 La. 994), which will not contravene rule of law, as rule against perpetuities (Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427). There is nothing inconsistent or repugnant in the gift of a life estate with remainder to a life tenant, even though such remainder can never come into possession of the remainderman. Cushman v. Arnold [Mass.] 70 N. E. 43. If apparently contradictory clauses may be reconciled and accommodated by a reasonable construction so that both may stand, such construction should be adopted (In re Donner's Ex'rs [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 1104), as should a construction which will render them supplementary instead of contradictory (Id.). Specific legacies will be regarded as explanations of or exceptions to a general legacy of all testator's property, and both will stand, immaterial which comes first. A specific bequest of certain specific goods and chattels in the second clause of a will held not to be revoked by a general bequest of all of testator's property in the third clause. Id. That which will suspend power of alienation will not be sustained. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. Courts will endeavor to reconcile two inconsistent clauses rather than ignore them or declare both void and uncertain. After a specific devise of realty, a devise of all the estate to another for life will be construed to mean all the remainder. In re Willis' Will [R. I.] 55 Atl. 889. Provision giving daughter life estate in case she survives or is divorced from her husband, and provision giving her absolute title in case she outlives her husband, held not so repugnant as to abrogate the condition in the first clause on which she was to have a life estate, it appearing at the time the question arose, the contingency of the husband's death had not arisen. Ellis v. Birkhead, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 71 S. W. 31 Applies to testamentary trusts as well as to any other disposition. Holmes v. Walter, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380.

39. In relation to statute to prevent lapsing of legacies. Shumaker v. Pearson, 67 Ohio St. 330, 65 N. E. 1005.

40. Where there is an absolute devise followed by a devise in trust to another for a term of years, then to pay over to the first devisees, the later clause prevails. Harris v. Ferguy, 207 Ill. 534, 69 N. E. 844; In re Donner's Ex'rs [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 1104. Two clauses must refer to same subject-matter and be clearly inconsistent. In re Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 504. A discretionary power of sale for support of the devisee for life held not to control a subsequent direction to sell sufficient to pay mortgage. Dana v. Stafford [Vt.] 56 Atl. 88.

the later clause will be so construed as to support testator's distinctly announced main intention.[41] A will or a part thereof will only be declared void for uncertainty when, after the admission of all evidence allowed by law to be admitted, the court is unable from the face of the will and the consideration of such evidence, to determine testator's intention.[42] A devise giving the same interest as the devisee would have taken by descent is void.[43]

The law favors equality among children in the distribution of estates.[44] The heir is never to be disinherited except by plain words or necessary implication.[45] Where a bequest has been made to one towards whom testator had placed himself in loco parentis, that construction must be given it which is most favorable to the donee.[46] The fact that beneficiaries under a will are not relatives does not change the ordinary rules.[47]

The construction given to a will by the members of the testator's family is entitled to weight in arriving at the true interpretation of the will.[48]

As to time.—Intention relates to time of execution.[49] The law will be applied as of testator's death.[50]

Words will be given their natural and ordinary meaning,[51] as called for by the whole instrument,[52] having respect to the legal skill of the draughtsman[53] ap-

41. In re Donner's Ex'rs [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 1104. Subsequent expression, in order to limit clearly expressed intention, must be clear. In re Campbell's Estate [Utah] 75 Pac. 851.

42. Tobin v. Tobin [Ind.] 69 N. E. 440.

43. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 207 Ill. 611, 69 N. E. 804.

44. Ward v. Stanard, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 386. Presumption that no discrimination intended. Devise of all land above a certain line and on a certain branch held to include whole tract above such line in the vicinity of the branch, though some of it extended across a ridge onto other branches of the main stream. Hatfield v. Estep, 24 Ky. L. R. 2249, 73 S. W. 789.

45. Legacies will not be charged on the real estate in the absence of such words or implication where result would be to disinherit heir. In re Espy's Estate, 207 Pa. 459. Devise over in case of death refers to death during testator's lifetime. Kohtz v. Eldred, 208 Ill. 60, 69 N. E. 900. Interpretation preferred which approximates closest the legal order of distribution. A devise "of my three (3) unimproved lots lying next to the corner," it appearing that testatrix owned only two lots on the corner, the third being the home lot and separated from the two by an intervening lot, was under the evidence held not to include the home lot. Miller v. Hirsch, 110 La. 259. Unless court affirmatively convinced that devise intended. Young v. Quimby, 98 Me. 167. It must not only appear from the will that testator did not intend heir to take any portion of the estate, or that he intended him to take only a specified portion, but the will must also give the property to someone else. Meiners v. Meiners [Mo.] 78 S. W. 795. Estate by implication. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225. Law favors construction which will prevent disinheritance of the issue of a remainderman who may die during the existence of the precedent estate. Manhattan Real Estate & Bldg. Ass'n v. Cudlipp, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 532. Every presumption is against an intention to disinherit direct descendants. A testatrix devised property to any children that a 13 year old "might have." This is not construed to mean at the date of the will, but any time in the future. In re Maloney, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 539. And see In re Vilsack's Estate, 207 Pa. 611. Remainder not disposed of goes to heirs. Shaner v. Wilson, 207 Pa. 550.

46. In re Jacoby's Estate, 204 Pa. 188.

47. Such a will need not be construed with special reference to the rights of the heirs at law. Hunt v. Phillips [Wash.] 75 Pac. 970.

48. Not controlling. Smith v. Bartlett, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 174.

49. In re Warner's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 432. The fact that a contract, power of attorney and will were all executed at the same time and contained similar provisions did not require their construction as a single instrument. Spence v. Huckins, 208 Ill. 304, 70 N. E. 289. A will executed in 1895 directing payment of all direct and collateral inheritance taxes from corpus of estate, held not intended to include payment of internal revenue taxes on legacies under act Cong. June 13, 1898. In re Baker's Estate, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 536.

50. If consistent with law at time of his death. Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga. 893.

51. According to common intendment. Truesdell v. Darnall, 24 Ky. L. R. 2164, 73 S. W. 755. Popular rather than technical meaning. Jabine v. Sawyer, 25 Ky. L. R. 1436, 78 S. W. 140. Should not be given technical meaning where apparent that scrivener was not acquainted with legal forms. Smith v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1964, 72 S. W. 766. Natural and reasonable meaning. In re King's Estate, 205 Pa. 416. Not applicable to formalities of execution and certain words necessary to give effect to intention. Young v. Quimby, 98 Me. 167.

52. Are to be taken in sense indicated by whole instrument. Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 572, 73 S. W. 662; Underwood v. Cave, 176 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 451; Meiners v. Meiners [Mo.] 78 S. W. 795. In the light of the circumstances of each particular case. Canfield v. Canfield [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 1.

Words having naturally an unlimited parent on the face of the will.[54] Technical words will be taken in a technical sense,[55] unless a contrary intention is clear.[56] Words will be given the same meaning as elsewhere where used in the will.[57] Disinheriting clauses may be limited by the context.[58]

The ordinary rules of grammar will control,[59] unless a contrary intent appears.

Technical rules of construction may be disregarded to reach the intent,[60] and precedents may be ignored,[61] to which end "and" and "or" may be interchanged.[62] If necessary, punctuation may be disregarded or supplied,[63] words and clauses transposed,[64] and omitted words supplied,[65] or the several pages of the will read out meaning may be given a limited one, if from the whole instrument it reasonably appears that testator so used them. In re Donner's Ex'rs [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 1104.

Illustrations: Survivors not construed as meaning others. Wilson v. Bull, 97 Md. 128. The word "also" may mean "item." A gift to wife of "all my shares in railroad or other corporations, also all notes and other securities, also all my right in and to my pew in said * * * church and to the parsonage and shed during her life, and then to go to" others, conditioned on payment of two other bequests, passes an absolute estate in the personalty on payment of the bequests, the word "also" being equivalent to "item." Twiss v. Simpson, 183 Mass. 212, 66 N. E. 795.

52. Ward v. Stanard, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 386.

54. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447.

55. Intention must be carried into effect unless he uses terms which have a definite and settled meaning in the law. In such case such terms must be given such meaning. Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885. When words are used which have a settled legal meaning, full effect must be given them unless it is perfectly clear that testator did not so intend. "Heirs of the body" construed as words of limitation. Teal v. Richardson, 160 Ind. 119, 66 N. E. 435. Heirs same as issue. Harkeroad v. Bass [Miss.] 36 So. 537. Heirs. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427. "Heirs" construed as meaning those on whom law casts realty on death of ancestor, and "legal representatives" as next of kin. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180.

56. Immaterial whether used by lawyer or layman as scrivener. Graham v. Abbott, 208 Pa. 68; Brett v. Donagle's Guardian, 101 Va. 786; Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537.

57. Meaning of word "remainder" in one clause limited by another clause giving life estate. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 207 Ill. 611, 69 N. E. 804.

58. That one excludes his heirs, stating that they are already provided for, does not warrant construction of the will precluding such heirs from inheriting in any event. Will not warrant the changing of a bequest to individuals into a bequest to a class. In re Hittell's Estate, 141 Cal. 432, 75 Pac. 53.

59. Twiss v. Simpson, 183 Mass. 212, 66 N. E. 795.

Illustrations: Residuary clause held to be operative only in case testator's wife died before him. Schumacker v. Grammer, 200 Ill. 48, 65 N. E. 722. By first clause of will testator devised land to G. "and his heirs," providing that it should not be subject to sale or liable for devisee's debts, but to descend to his bodily heirs, and in case he had none, to his brothers and sisters. By the next clause, he devised land to H., "on the same principles" as that of G., "not being subject to sale, transfer," etc. Held, that the words "on the same principles" did not refer to the words "and his heirs" in the first clause, but to the words prohibiting the sale of the land and providing for their descent. Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464, 65 N. E. 445. Will giving a house and lot to widow, with household furniture, etc., also money that might be deposited to testator's account in bank "during the time of her natural life and after her death to be divided" among his heirs, construed and held that the limitation to widow's life applied only to bank accounts, and that she took a fee in the house and lot. Zimmerman v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 75 Conn. 645.

60. Bradbury v. Jackson, 97 Me. 449.

61. Each case must be decided on its own facts, looking at the language of the instrument and the surrounding circumstances. Emery v. Swasey, 97 Me. 136; In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Precedents of little value except where words have acquired definite meaning from long construction. May not be even then. Wiggins v. Wiggins [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 148.

Precedents of slight weight: A devise by codicil to grandchildren of the share the deceased father would have been entitled to held subject to trust created by the will. Lawrence v. Barber, 116 Wis. 294, 93 N. W. 30.

62. If G. "and" H. shall die without children, held to mean if either G. "or" H. shall die without children. Truesdell v. Darnall, 24 Ky. L. R. 2164, 73 S. W. 755. "Or" held not to mean "and." Taylor v. Taylor, 118 Iowa, 407, 92 N. W. 71. Will not be so construed as to prevent great grandchildren from sharing equally with grandchildren. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 65 S. C. 390.

63. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447; Hauser v. Craft [N. C.] 46 S. E. 756. Must be if in conflict with the scheme of testator as gleaned from the will or if it prevents ascribing to words employed their ordinary meaning. Lewisohn v. Henry, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 532. The position of a comma cannot be considered in determining intention. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 65 S. C. 390.

64. In re Donner's Ex'rs [N. J. Prerog.] 55 Atl. 1104. Words transposed. Flynn v Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447.

65. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447. If it appears from the face of

of the order as numbered.[66] Meaningless words will be dropped rather than to supply conjectural omissions.[67]

In case of ambiguity,[68] the circumstances surrounding testator when the will was made may be considered,[69] but not later conditions which could not have been foreseen.[70] Extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain latent ambiguities,[71] but the instrument that testator has not completely or accurately expressed his meaning, words which have clearly been omitted may be supplied, in order to carry out his evident intention. The words "without issue" inserted in a devise to one and in case of his death before arriving at a certain age then over. Dulaney v. Dulaney, 25 Ky. L. R. 1659, 79 S. W. 195; In re Pope's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1046.

66. A will is to be read in such order of pages or paragraphs as the testator manifestly intended and the coherence and adaptation of the facts clearly require. In re Morrow's Estate, 204 Pa. 479. Mere numbering of pages not conclusive as to order. In re Dake's Will, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 403.

67. Where testator devised his property to "such of his brothers and children" held the words "such of" will be dropped rather than supply the words "as survive my wife" or their equivalent. Child v. Child [Mass.] 70 N. E. 464.

68. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 65 S. C. 390; Harvey v. Kennedy, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261; In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Not unless some provision or clause is so ambiguous in the language used as to make the intention of the testator doubtful. Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 572, 73 S. W. 662. Environment may be considered where language not absolutely clear. Morris v. Hall, 102 Mo. App. 449, 76 S. W. 725. The court may resort to extrinsic evidence to learn the conditions under which the will was made to enable him to view the subject from testator's standpoint, but the testator's meaning must then be found from the will itself. Meiners v. Meiners [Mo.] 78 S. W. 795.

69. Roth v. Rauschenbusch, 173 Mo. 582, 73 S. W. 664; Underwood v. Cave, 176 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 451; Simmons v. Cabanne, 177 Mo. 336, 76 S. W. 618; Tobin v. Tobin [Ind.] 69 N. E. 440; Bauernschmidt v. Bauernschmidt, 97 Md. 35; Smith v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1964, 72 S. W. 766; Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447; Blinn v. Gillett, 208 Ill. 473, 70 N. E. 704. Including situation and condition of the estate, testator's relations to his family and beneficiaries, and their situation and condition. Fritsche v. Fritsche, 75 Conn. 285. The language used, the extent of the estate, the mode of life in which his family have been reared, and the means provided by him in his lifetime for their culture and happiness, are to be considered. Dana v. Dana [Mass.] 70 N. E. 49.

Illustrations: To show mistake in description of realty. Pate v. Bushong, 161 Ind. 533, 69 N. E. 291. Circumstances surrounding execution and connecting parties and property devised with the testator and the will itself. Bradbury v. Jackson, 97 Me. 449. Fact that testator had no children, that life tenant was his second wife, and that his property was not large, may be considered in determining whether she has power to convey fee in land devised. Woodbridge v. Jones, 183 Mass. 549, 67 N. E. 878. Pecuniary circumstances and family and social relations may be considered. Wiggins v. Wiggins [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 148. Disposition subsequently of property referred to is admissible and material for the purpose of applying the terms of the will. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318.

70. Where personalty was sufficient to pay legacies when will was made, fact that it was later converted into realty cannot operate to show implied intent to charge them on realty. Harvey v. Kennedy, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261.

71. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. Arising dehors the instrument. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225.

A demurrer to the complaint in an action to recover a legacy under an ambiguous will, addressed to the legal sufficiency of the will on its face and not to the absence of allegations tending to sustain the construction contended for by plaintiff should not be sustained, the determination of ambiguities being a matter for extrinsic evidence. Fritsche v. Fritsche, 75 Conn. 285.

To identify subject-matter of a bequest or devise. Stocks bequeathed. In re Frahm's Estate, 120 Iowa, 85, 94 N. W. 444. Where no such property exists or where that described does not belong to testator. In re Pope's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1046.

Descriptions of land: To show mistake in description of realty. Pate v. Bushong, 161 Ind. 533, 69 N. E. 291. Evidence to identify land "on which I now live," and the "balance of my real estate," admissible. Tobin v. Tobin [Ind.] 69 N. E. 440. By supplying number of township and range and name of state and county. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447. Will described the land as in section 21, particularly describing the boundaries, and there was no land so bounded in that section, but was in section 22, which land was owned and occupied by testator. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. Devise of "the lot adjoining with two storied frame house on it" held not to include a contiguous lot. Thomas v. Scott, 24 Ky. L. R. 2031, 72 S. W. 1129. Location of "Dickens land" and "Micajah Anderson" land to be determined by outside evidence—burden of proof. Harper v. Anderson, 132 N. C. 89. Where, in a devise of real property, the description did not cover land owned by the testator, the description was not subject to correction. In re Lynch's Estate, 142 Cal. 373, 75 Pac. 1086. A devise of "one-half the remainder of my farm including the house," is not too indefinite to be aided by parol evidence, to locate the land. Bell v. Couch, 132 N. C. 346. The question of the situation of land with reference to a dividing line mentioned in a will, in a suit to recover a devisee's share under a will, held to be for the jury. McLean v. Bullard, 131 N. C. 275.

To show whether a child was intentionally omitted: The burden of showing that omission by mistake is on the child under statute not to supply, contradict, enlarge, or vary the terms of the instrument.[72] Neither declarations of the testator,[73] nor a revoked former will, are admissible to show testator's intent,[74] but letters from testator to executors, explanatory of subsequent conditions, are proper.[75]

The will and codicils are to be construed as parts of the same instrument and the former should not be disturbed further than is necessary to give effect to the latter.[76] Codicils being later in time revoke inconsistent provisions in the will,[77] providing that when it appears that child was omitted by mistake, he shall have same share he would have had if testator had died intestate [Neb. Comp. St. 1903, c. 23, § 149; Cobley's Ann. St. 1903, § 5014]. Brown v. Brown [Neb.] 98 N. W. 718.

To identify the beneficiaries designated by a will. Jay v. Lee, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 13. Mistake of name, there being words of designation. Reformed Pres. Church of North America v. McMillan, 31 Wash. 643, 72 Pac. 502. Parol evidence that testator was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and had contributed to the support of the foreign missionary work carried on by that denomination is admissible to show that a bequest to the "Foreign Missionary Society" was intended for the "Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church," which is the corporate name of the society having such work in charge. In re Amberson's Estate, 204 Pa. 397. A claimant may show that while the name by which he is designated in the will is not his proper one, yet it is one by which he is known. Second United Pres. Church v. First United Pres. Church [Neb.] 99 N. W. 252. Two claimants exactly corresponding to a name used for one devisee, ambiguity may be removed by evidence of circumstances tending to show which of the two claimants the testator intended as the object of his bounty. Id.

Release of debts: To show that legacy "free from debts" intended to operate as a release of debt due testator. Sharp v. Wightman, 205 Pa. 285.

72. Extraneous facts cannot be injected for the purpose of placing a different construction thereon from that which is the plain meaning of the language used. McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105. Not permissible to prove by extrinsic evidence some supposed intention not expressed in the will nor fairly implied therefrom when construed in the light of all surrounding circumstances. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820. A court may not reform a will by changing the language or adding provisions not written therein. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 119 Wis. 352, 96 N. W. 820.

Not admissible to explain ambiguities apparent on the face of the will: Smith v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1964, 72 S. W. 766. Evidence held not admissible to show that a devise for life of the "farm on which I now live" the testator did not intend to include a part of the land on which a son lived pursuant to an agreement with testator to give the same to him. Gentry v. Gentry, 25 Ky. L. R. 1433, 77 S. W. 1115. Where words used convey a fee under rule in Shelley's case, extrinsic evidence not admissible to show that testator intended to convey a life estate only. Deemer v. Kessinger, 206 Ill. 57, 69 N. E. 28. Not admissible to show what kind of monument testator desired. Will provided for "suitable and proper" one. Expense should be limited to reasonable amount in view of his position in life and extent of property. In re Smith, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 339. Evidence that certain children were testator's favorites inadmissible. Wilson v. Bull, 97 Md. 129; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 65 S. C. 390. The special business methods or habits of the testator are not admissible to aid the construction of his will and to show intention in making bequests. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318; Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225.

74. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225.

75. A letter written by testator to devisees, reciting that an enclosed check was to be paid certain devisees in lieu of a ground rent devised to them which had been redeemed after the will was made, though not in testamentary form or enforceable as a gift, may be considered in determining testator's intention. Joynes v. Hamilton [Md.] 57 Atl. 25.

76. Bassett v. Nickerson, 184 Mass. 169, 68 N. E. 25; Cushman v. Arnold [Mass.] 70 N. E. 43; Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283; Cruikshank v. Cruikshank, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 401; Griggs v. Griggs, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 339; Ward v. Stanard, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 386. Will construed and held not to include the wife of a legatee as a residuary legatee from the fact that she was mentioned in a subsequent codicil to the will which disposed of part of the residuary estate. Kehan v. Graham, 135 Ala. 585.

77. Where a will gave all the testator's property to the wife for life, with full power to dispose of it, and any undisposed residue to one son, and a codicil directed such residue to be distributed equally among all the children, held, construing will and codicil together, the wife's power over the property was not revoked by the language of the codicil. Dexter v. Gordon [Mich.] 98 N. W. 1016. A codicil giving a daughter an annuity and her children, upon her death, a certain sum, held not to supersede a devise given by the will proper. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 549. A codicil giving the ground rent to devisees of land devised by the will operates as a revocation of the devise, and the devisees are not entitled to the part consideration paid on the making of the lease. Joynes v. Hamilton [Md.] 57 Atl. 25. Testator devised a lot in fee to his grandchildren and later, in consideration of $500, leased it subject to a ground rent. By a subsequent codicil, he revoked the previous devise and provided that the grandchildren were to have the ground rent on the lot. Held that they were not entitled to the $500. Id. A codicil whereby testatrix ratified or so far modify them that both may stand.[78] They may be construed as making additional gifts.[79] Conditions on gifts in the will are not applied to gifts in the codicil.[80]

(§ 5) B. Designations and descriptions of property or funds.—Words referring to a specific property carry what belongs to it.[81] A devise of all "real estate" will include land in possession of testator under sheriff's certificate of sale, under execution and before expiration of time of redemption.[82] A bequest of stock in a corporation will be construed as a bequest of the particular shares owned by testator,[83] and will include dividends declared after testator's death,[84] and includes that, the certificate of which remained undelivered.[85] The will speaks as of the date of testator's death in reference to property, and until that time the specific subject of the gift is unidentified.[86] Hence a general devise of all of the estate includes after-acquired property,[87] unless a contrary intent appears.[88] Gen-and confirmed her will "except as herein changed" left a legacy in an item of the will not mentioned in such codicil in force. Kelley v. Snow [Mass.] 70 N. E. 89. A codicil revoking the disposition of the residuary estate among persons named, omitting the name of one of the legatees under the will, controls, and such legatee is not entitled to share in the estate. In re Scott's Estate, 141 Cal. 485, 75 Pac. 44.

78. Where testator gave a legacy of a certain sum to his mother from the money "now in my safety deposit box," a codicil giving a small sum to another therefrom and "all money left in my safety box" to his wife, held not to show an intention to revoke the legacy given to the mother, but to give his wife what was left after the two legacies were paid. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 198 Ill. 621, 64 N. E. 1038.

79. Where testator devised to his wife one-third of his realty, and in a codicil gave her his rights in a particular house and lot the latter devise will be construed as being in addition to that in the will, and should also be included in the total used as a basis for calculating the wife's third. Such is the natural meaning of language used, the presumption of law and the evident intention of testator. Blakeslee v. Pardee [Conn.] 56 Atl. 503.

80. A restriction on sale of land devised by will held not to show an intent to restrict sale of different land given to same devise by codicil. Dougherty v. Wellinger, 207 Pa. 601.

81. A gift of "my farm" includes the homestead and outlying lots used in connection therewith by testator as a farm. Had referred to whole tract as "farm" when describing it to real estae agent for purposes of sale. Scoville v. Mason [Conn.] 57 Atl. 114.

82. Morgan v. Joslyn [Minn.] 97 N. W. 449.

83. Where testatrix at the time of making her will owned 20 shares of stock in a particular corporation giving the shares to each of two legatees and at her death owned but 10 shares, in the absence of evidence that she intended to give 20 shares whether she was the owner or not, the legatees will take five shares each. Drake v. True [N. H.] 56 Atl. 749.

84. Blinn v. Gillett [Ill.] 70 N. E. 704.

85. Stock held to pass under will, though certificate not delivered to testator before his death, it having been issued and appearing on the books, and having been left with the company under an agreement between testator and the company. Fact that the stock was convertible into bonds and that company had agreed to issue its promissory note therefor immaterial. In re Frahm's Estate, 120 Iowa, 85, 94 N. W. 444.

86. In re Warnes' Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 432. A gift of "all the property I possess, real and personal, movable and immovable," is a universal legacy and the legatee takes all the property owned by testatrix at her death. Thomas v. Blair, 111 La. 678. Unless contrary intent appears, legacies payable ten years after testator's death to children of a daughter at that time. Voorhees v. Otterson [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 428.

87. If it reasonably appears from the will that testator so intended. Carrel v. Carrel, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 416. Where the will shows an intention to dispose of all of the estate. "I * * * devise * * * all my real * * * estate, of whatsoever nature or kind soever, and wheresoever situated" held to pass all the testator's real estate, whether acquired before or after the making of the will. Clayton v. Hallett, 30 Colo. 231, 59 L. R. A. 407, 70 Pac. 429. Whenever the intention to so provide is clear and explicit [Iowa Code, § 3271]. Where the will referred only to specific tracts of land and contained no general devise or residuary clause, realty acquired after the execution of the will passed as intestate property. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447. Depends upon the intent of testator which must be clearly manifested and not rest upon conjecture. Act Congress Jan. 18, 1887. Crenshaw v. McCormick, 19 App. D. C. 494. Policy of life insurance acquired after execution of will held to pass under general devise of all of the estate, both real and personal. Laughlin v. Norcross, 97 Me. 33. Code, § 2141 declares that a will shall be construed to read as if executed immediately before death. Where a testator devised all land lying south of a specified line, and thereafter and two years before his death purchased other lands south of such line, such lands were included in the devise. Reference to the number of acres in the tract held immaterial, and also fact that it was described as "all that tract south of said line." Brown v. Hamilton [N. C.] 47 S. E. 128. Fact that an absolute devise is followed by a particular description does not change the rule. Durboraw v. Durboraw, 67 Kan. 139, 72 Pac. 566.

eral words preceding or following enumerated articles should be limited to things ejusdem generis, unless they occur in a general bequest in a residuary clause, or the will does not contain a residuary disposition.[89] A gift of specific articles preceding or following a general gift of all testator's personalty will be construed as an exception from the operation of the general gift.[90] Errors in the description of the property will not avoid the gift if, after rejecting such errors, enough remains to show what was intended,[91] or if it can be aided by extrinsic evidence.[92] The presumption is that testator intended to devise his own realty.[93] Particular words recently construed are collected.[94] "All my estate" may mean every sort of property,[95] but words descriptive of one kind will not include converted realty or personalty unless such an intent appears.[96]

88. A devise of "the home farm on which I now reside, known as the D. farm" does not pass land acquired after the execution of the will and added to such home farm. Contrary intent appears in such case. Pepper v. Pepper, 25 Ky. L. R. 155, 74 S. W. 253. A codicil ineffectual to pass realty held not to be resorted to to show that testator intended after-acquired property to pass by the residuary clause in the will. Crenshaw v. McCormick, 19 App. D. C. 474.

89. A bequest of "all my law business, lawbooks, papers, safe, bookcases, and office furniture and all property pertaining to my business," held not to include claims for legal services. In re Northup's Will, 87 N. Y. S. 318. A gift of a residence with all its contents, "furniture, bedding, silver, everything in and about the premises, all personal property wherever it may be," held to include tangible personalty only, such as is described, and not to include bank stocks and choses in action. Bond v. Martin's Adm'rs, 25 Ky. L. R. 719, 76 S. W. 326.

90. Flynn v. Holman, 119 Iowa, 731, 94 N. W. 447. Where by will certain described lands were devised to designated children and the testator's remaining land, which he described as being within certain bounds, was devised to his other children, held this last devise was in the nature of a residuary devise of all the remaining lands and did not limit the devise to the land lying within the designated boundary lines. Smith v. Bartlett, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 174.

91. False number of section rejected. Pate v. Bushong, 161 Ind. 533, 69 N. E. 291; Tobin v. Tobin [Ind.] 69 N. E. 440. A bequest of 20 shares of Carthage National Bank stock construed as 20 shares of Central National Bank stock, where the former stock had already been bequeathed and the testator made no other disposition of the latter stock owned by him. Waters v. Hatch [Mo.] 79 S. W. 916.

93. In re Pope's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1046; Pate v. Bushong, 161 Ind. 533, 69 N. E. 291.

94. A bequest of the income from all corporate stocks will not include income from railroad debenture certificates convertible into stocks at a future time and at the option of the holder. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. Gift of "all my moneys, bonds, notes and money in savings banks," held to include railroad stock and scrip, which was the product and avails of the bonds, such being testator's evident intent as gathered from the scheme of the will. Scoville v. Mason [Ga.] 57 Atl. 114. A bequest of "household furniture" includes silverware, but not garments and clothing. Id. A testator gave one a life estate in certain premises occupied by him, together with the use of the furniture therein. A portion of the premises was occupied by him as a residence and a portion by a bank paying a rental. Held, the housekeeper acquired a life estate in only that portion occupied as a residence. In re Handley's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 755. The words "and money received by her from banks which have gone into voluntary liquidation" read into a clause by which bank stock and money arising from the sale thereof were devised. Blinn v. Gillett [Ill.] 70 N. E. 704. A gift of the proceeds of the "sale" of property not otherwise disposed of will not include money on deposit in a bank. City of Huntsville v. Smith, 131 Ala. 382. A purchase-money note and mortgage will not ordinarily pass under a gift of all loans secured upon real estate. Not loan in strict sense of term. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. Where bank stock or the proceeds from the sale thereof are devised in one way and the residue of the testator's personal property other than bank stock is devised in another, held first clause included money received from banks which had gone into voluntary liquidation. Blinn v. Gillett [Ill.] 70 N. E. 704.

A will authorizing a sale of "building lots" for support of testatrix's husband does not authorize a sale of property whereon a building had been erected during her lifetime. Dana v. Stafford [Vt.] 56 Atl. 88. A devise of "the undivided west half of the northwest quarter of the southwest, and the south half of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter," held to pass the whole of the west half of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and the whole of the south half of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, the word "undivided" qualifying the words "west half," though meaningless. Wright v. Wright [Iowa] 98 N. W. 472. A devise of all lands on the west side of a stream to one devisee and all of the testator's remaining land to other devisees, held, the first named devisee's property extended only to the west bank of the river, the land under the river passing to the last mentioned devisees. Smith v. Bartlett, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 174.

95. Where the will gave all the property to testator's children, a codicil executed after death of a child giving grandchildren a certain share in "all my estate" held to

Intention to exercise power.[97]—A mere general disposal of all property does not alone include a power of appointment.[98] A reference to a power shows an intention to execute it.[99]

(§ 5) C. Designations or descriptions of persons, purposes, etc.—Particular words will be given such meaning as the intent shows.[1] Express purposes are limited to their common meaning.[2] A purpose wholly charitable is negatived by the exclusion of certain individuals.[3] Persons need not be named if they are ascertainable,[4] e. g., by reference to other parts of the will,[5] or to functions or characteristics.[6] A gift to a class to be ascertained is certain.[7] The words "heirs," "issue," "kindred," "children" and the like are so frequently words of limitation that the cases construing them have been collected elsewhere.[8]

Gifts to charities may be upheld in most states unless there is uncertainty in both the taker and the purpose.[9] As to the other group of states, a gift for a class include both household goods and homestead property. Lawrence v. Barber, 116 Wis. 294, 93 N. W. 30.

96. A bequest of one-half of the personalty absolutely and one-half for life held not intended to include a part of the proceeds of realty converted into personalty for payment of legacies, the legatee having been devised realty also. In re Woodbury's Estate, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 143.

97. See, also, post, § 5 D, 12, as to extent of power; 5 D, 2, as to whether power or some other interest was given.

98. Lane v. Lane [Del.] 64 L. R. A. 849.

Note: An exhaustive monographic note on exercise by will of powers of appointment, considering not only the intent, but also the validity and effect of appointments by will, is found in 64 L. R. A. 849.

99. Will held to execute power of appointment. Intention to do so expressed. McCook v. Mumby [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 406. Words "power," "appoint" refer to execution of a power of appointment given testatrix by her father's will. Heinemann v. De Wolf [R. I.] 55 Atl. 707.

1. Where there is a devise to an unmarried woman and on failure of children to attain the age of 21 years then over to her husband, the first person answering to husband is entitled to take. Jossey v. Brown [Ga.] 47 S. E. 350. Upon a limitation of blended property to heirs at law of the testator, the persons answering that description take the entire property. A widow of the testator whom he married subsequent to the making of the will was not permitted to share in this distribution. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537. A devise to "my adopted daughter," naming her, and giving her name before adoption, sufficiently identifies the devisee. Validity of adoption proceedings immaterial. Brack v. Boyd, 202 Ill. 440, 66 N. E. 1073. Where testator in his will described one as his nephew and not as son and his children as his "oldest daughter" and "second daughter," a devise to "our children" was held not to include the nephew, though he had lived with testator and been treated as an adopted son, but was never legally adopted. Hamlin v. Stevens, 177 N. Y. 39, 69 N. E. 118. A legacy "to all servants in my employ at the time of my death" includes servants of all classes, whether menials or not. Ginters' Ex'rs v. Shelton [Va.] 45 S. E. 892.

2. A bequest for the erection of a "monument" does not authorize the erection of a "memorial or memorial building." In re Ogden [R. I.] 55 Atl. 933.

3. Charitable "or other purposes" but not to "wife or children" intends a gift not wholly charitable. Hyde's Ex'rs v. Hyde, 64 N. J. Eq. 6.

4. To persons whom the testator had designated to the trustees in his lifetime, held sufficient. Jay v. Lee, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 13.

5. Gift of property to "said executrix" in last clause of will held to refer to the person appointed sole executrix in first clause. Gallison v. Quinn, 183 Mass. 241, 66 N. E. 961. Where will gave property to certain named trustees and after creating two trusts provided "and I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint my said trustees residuary legatees of my estate," held that the words "my said trustees" were equivalent to specifying by name residuary legatees the persons theretofore named as trustees, and refers to them as trustees of the previously declared trusts. Trunkey v. Van Sant, 176 N. Y. 535, 68 N. E. 946.

6. A gift to "the boards of the Presbyterian Church," to be used for certain specified purposes, is a gift to the particular boards having such work in charge. Harris v. Keasby [N. J. Eq.] 53 Atl. 555. If a legacy is given to an individual by reference to certain characteristics at some particular time, instead of by name or special designation, the person having the characteristics at that time is the person entitled to the legacy and it will then vest in him. Voorhees v. Otterson [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 428. Testator gave a sum of money to each employe who had been employed "as long as two years and less than five years," and a different sum to those who had been employed "for less than two years." Held, that one whose aggregate service was four years, but who had been employed continuously for a period of 16 months only, was in the first class. In re Becker, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 756.

7. See post, § 5 D 5, as to rule of vesting in such case.

8. For meaning of words "heirs," "children," "kindred," etc., see post, § 5 D 1.

9. See Charitable Gifts, 1 Curr. Law, p. 510. A communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church bequeathed $2,000.00 to be divided equally between "Indian and domestic missions of the United States." There was nothing to show who was to take the be-may be upheld where ascertainable and not including general public.[10] If one of two alternative purposes is valid, a gift for charity is certain.[11]

A misnomer or variation from the precise corporate name of the beneficiary will not render the gift void for uncertainty.[12] Characteristics may identify the one intended of two bearing the same name,[13] but will not effect a substitution of a succeeding corporation.[14]

(§ 5) D. Words creating, defining, limiting, conditioning and qualifying the estates and interests. 1. Particular words and forms of expression.—The words "heirs" and "heirs of the body" are prima facie words of limitation,[15] and "child" and "children" words of purchase.[16] The words "heirs,"[17] "heirs of the quest nor was there any society by that name. Held, the bequest void for indefiniteness. Bowman v. Domestic & Foreign Missionary Soc. of Protestant Episcopal Church, 87 N. Y. S. 621. The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church could not claim it. Id.

Held sufficiently certain: A will directing disposition of property for the aid of a Bible school, for support of missionary abroad, to aid in carrying on the cause of "Bible holiness," etc., and to aid in the support of destitute ministers, held to point out with reasonable certainty the purposes of testatrix and classes of beneficiaries under Ky. St. 1903, § 317. Leak's Heirs v. Leak's Ex'r [Ky.] 78 S. W. 471. To provide home for widows and orphans is definite. Gidley v. Lovenberg [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 831. A devise for the benefit of the unfortunate widows and orphans of a certain city is not void for failing to designate a definite class. Id. "Indigent Israelites" residing in a certain city is a sufficiently definite designation of a class to sustain a charitable devise. Id. Where executors were made "detainers" of the estate until a home for widows and orphans could be organized, a bequest for that purpose was not void for want of a trustee, or beneficiary capable of taking. Id.

10. Gift for persons suffering from "storms, floods, fires and other accidental and natural causes" is not general to the public but limited to a class. Kronshage v. Varrell [Wis.] 97 N. W. 928.

11. Where a city charter authorized the establishment of free public schools and the establishment of hospitals, a devise to the city to be used for white public schools or for a city hospital as the authorities should elect was not void for uncertainty. City of Huntsville v. Smith, 137 Ala. 382.

12. As a gift to "The city of Huntsville" instead of to "The mayor and aldermen of," City of Huntsville v. Smith, 137 Ala. 382. Evidence may be had. Second United Presbyterian Church v. First United Presbyterian Church [Neb.] 99 N. W. 252.

Intention the test: Testator devised a sum in trust to the board of directors of an alleged society; there was no society of that name or purpose in existence, but it being shown that the testator had taken a great interest in a society of a similar name which had started a fund for the purpose alleged to be the object of the society named in the will, held such society should take the devise. Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America, General Synod, v. McMillan, 31 Wash. 643, 72 Pac. 502.

13. The word "unincorporated" is sufficient to distinguish between an incorporated and an unincorporated association of the same name. Murray v. Miller, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 414.

14. A testatrix bequeathed property to a church corporation, which before her death consolidated with another. Held, the consolidated corporation was not identical with the original corporation so as to be entitled to take under the will. Gladding v. St. Matthew's Church [R. I.] 57 Atl. 860. The fact that she made a codicil after the consolidation, making no reference to this bequest, did not have the effect of substituting the consolidated corporation. Id. The fact that testatrix had been deeply interested and was a member of a church for deaf mutes to which she made a bequest does not entitle a new church formed by a consolidation of the legatee and another to take under the will. Id.

15. Halley v. Hengseter, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 504. So unless the will clearly shows an intention to designate a new class of beneficiaries, word "heirs" held not to mean children. Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 572, 73 S. W. 662. "Heirs of the body." Teal v. Richardson, 160 Ind. 119, 66 N. E. 435. A devise to one for life with remainder over "to the heir or heirs of her body in fee simple," there being nothing in the will clearly showing an intent that the words should have any other than their strict legal meaning, passes the fee to the devisee under the rule in Shelley's case, estates tail being resolved into estates in fee by statute (Burns' Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 3378; Rev. St. 1881, § 2958; Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 2958). Id. The words "nearest," "lawful," "legal," or similar expressions preceding the words "heirs" does not alone change it to a word of purchase. Deemer v. Kessinger, 206 Ill. 57, 69 N. E. 28.

16. Piper v. Locke, 205 Pa. 616. So unless different interpretation is necessary to effectuate testator's evident intent. A devise to the wife for life, with a provision that at her death the property should be divided equally among testator's children to be held by them as separate estate for their support and that of their children, and that at their death it should descend to their children, held to give children a contingent remainder for life with remainder in fee to their children, which estates become vested on the death of the wife. Jabine v. Sawyer [Ky.] 78 S. W. 140. Where a remainder is given to a devisee's children, the devisee takes a life estate only. Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53. But where a remainder limited on a life estate is to go to the general or lineal heirs as pointed out by law, they are synonymous with "heirs of the body," and, by analogy with the rule in Shelley's Case, the estate for life in the first taker is enlarged into a fee or an estate tail by implication. Pifer v. Locke, 205 Pa. 616. In a devise to a daughter for life only, with remainder over to her child or children in fee, where the daughter has no child at the time, the words "child" and "children" are not designatio personae, but comprehend a class and the daughter takes an estate tail. Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53. A devise for life and on death "to her children or issue in fee simple" creates an estate in fee tail general, which under the statute is resolved into a fee simple estate [P. L. 368]. Pifer v. Locke, 205 Pa. 616.

17. Where unexplained by the context, must be interpreted according to its technical import. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537. Where "heirs" is used to represent a class, includes those who would take under the statute of distributions. Lee v. Baird, 132 N. C. 755. The fact that an intermediate life estate is given to one of such heirs is not sufficient to change such meaning. In re Cowley's Will [Wis.] 97 N. W. 930. In a devise to wife for life, then to daughter for life, the portion then remaining to be divided among "my lawful heirs," held that lawful heirs meant those persons who at testator's death were entitled to inherit his intestate realty. Id. In a devise of real estate, does not include the widow. In re Raleigh's Estate, 206 Pa. 451.

May be treated as equivalent to "legatee" or "devisee"; such was clearly testator's intention. Thus where, among others, a specific bequest in trust was made to D., a grandson of testator's sister, and by the residuary clause the remainder of the estate was directed to be divided among testator's "heirs, the share of D. to be held in trust in the same manner as the specific bequest heretofore mentioned," but D. was not an heir of testator, though he might have been, he took nothing under the residuary clause. Taylor v. Perkins [N. H.] 56 Atl. 741.

May be used interchangeably with "children." Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53. In a devise to one but should he die "leaving no heirs" then the property to descend to brothers and sisters, the word "heirs" construed to mean "children," since no one can die without heirs in the strict sense of the term. Bradsby v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 239, 66 N. E. 1088.

Essentially different from the term "next of kin." May v. Lewis, 132 N. C. 115. It may include next of kin, where such was evidently the intent of the testator, as in case of gift of both realty and personalty to heirs. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393. In a bequest of personalty to one or in case of his death to his heirs, means next of kin. Trenton Trust & S. D. Co. v. Donnelly [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 92.

The words "heirs" and "children" may be interpreted to mean heirs of the body. In re Vilsack's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 32. Testator gave a life estate to his wife and after her death the income thereof to his sons and daughters during their natural lives, and after their death, to their "children" should they leave any, but should any of them leave no "heirs," their share was to be divided between all his grandchildren. Held, that the words "children" and "heirs" mean "heirs of the body," and the testator's children take an estate in fee tail, enlarged by statute into a fee simple. Id. In a gift to "heirs or legal representatives" will be construed as meaning those upon whom the law casts the real estate immediately upon the death of the ancestor. Presumed to have been used in technical sense. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180. The words "heirs" and "children" held to have been used in their strict legal sense, and grandchildren included in the former but not the latter, where testatrix made separate bequests to each class. Lee v. Baird, 132 N. C. 755. A will provided that realty devised to four sons equally should not be sold until the youngest attained majority. If any died without heirs of his own the survivors to take his portion. Held, "heirs of his own" meant lineal descendants and the mother, who had been liberally provided for, did not take the share of a deceased child. Nor does this will create a perpetuity. Coleman v. Coleman [Kan.] 76 Pac. 439. Under a devise for life with remainder over to heirs of testator, the heirs surviving at the death of testator take and not those in being at the termination of the life estate. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537. Where by a devise, the residuary estate of a testator is to be equally divided among his lawful heirs, share and share alike, the term "lawful heirs" includes all persons answering that description at the time of the testator's death. Mooney v. Purpus [Ohio] 70 N. E. 894.

18. The words "bodily heirs" mean heirs of the body. Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464, 65 N. E. 445. Where a will makes a gift to one for life and after his death to the "heirs of his body," the word "heirs" in a subsequent clause making a gift to him for life with remainder to his "heirs, if any he have" will be considered as referring to "heirs of his body." In re Tillinghast's Account [R. I.] 55 Atl. 879. Where the technical words to create an estate tail are used, to wit, "heirs of the body," and nothing appears to show that they were not used with that intent, they create an estate tail. In re Tillinghast's Account [R. I.] 55 Atl. 879.

19. "Issue" prima facie means heirs of the body. Graham v. Abbott [Pa.] 57 Atl. 178. If a devise be made to one in fee, and if he die without issue, or on failure of issue, or for want of issue, or without leaving issue, then over to another in fee, the estate of the first taker is a fee tail, which, if he has issue, passes to them ad infinitum by descent as tenants in tail. Id. When used as a word of purchase, means descendants, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention. Wilson v. Wilson, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 232. A repeated use of the word "children" after a devise to a son for life, with remainder over to his "male issue," is a strong indication that the words were used with the understanding that they have a different meaning. Id. Word held to be used as meaning descendants. Id.

20. Used to signify the relatives of a person, sometimes in the sense of nearest blood relatives, and at other times in the sense of relations entitled to take under the "representatives," or "legal representatives,"[23] will be given their ordinary legal meaning, unless a contrary intent appears. The word "family" may include an entire household, all descended from a common stock, their husbands and wives.[24] A will takes effect at the death of the testator,[25] hence a gift to "heirs" will be construed as referring to those who are such at the time of the ancestor's death.[26] The word "children" will generally be regarded as including only children still living at the time of the execution of the will,[27] but a gift for the benefit of "our chil-statute of distributions. "Next of kindred" held to include nephew and niece of beneficiary to the exclusion of grandnephews and grandnieces. Graham v. Whitridge [Md.] 57 Atl. 609. Kindred means blood relations. Does not include husband or wife of deceased. Tiffany v. Emmet, 24 R. I. 411.

21. "Descendants" means all persons coming from the stock or family referred to and includes all persons answering that description at the time fixed by the will for distribution. Levering v. Orrick [Md.] 54 Atl. 620.

22. Ordinarily means immediate descendants. Tiffany v. Emmet, 24 R. I. 411. In Kentucky, under a devise to one for life, and after her death to be equally divided "between my children then living," the issue of a child dying before testator are entitled to his share. Ky. St. §§ 2064, 4841, changes common-law rule of construction so as to make word "children" include grandchildren, unless a different meaning is given it by the will. Ruff v. Baumbach, 24 Ky. L. R. 1167, 70 S. W. 828. Means issue in the first degree unless a contrary intention appears on the face of the will. Brett v. Donaghe's Guardian, 101 Va. 786. A bequest to a second wife for life remainder to her children by the testator, and there was one born before he died, creates a vested remainder in such child. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537. Will gave real estate to four sons for life and the remainder in fee to their respective "sons." A codicil, executed after the death of one of the sons, revoked the devise to him and his "children," and gave his share to his three surviving sons and their children for the like estate and subject to the same conditions as those mentioned in the will, that is to say, "to each of my said last named sons the one-third part of my real estate for life, and to their respective children in fee simple at their decease, respectively." Held, that the codicil revoked the devise of the remainder to the grandsons and gave it to all the "children" of the surviving sons, including granddaughters of testator. In re Tibby's Estate, 207 Pa. 643. It will not be held to include grandchildren unless such a construction is necessary to give effect to the words of the will or the evident intent of the testator. Tiffany v. Emmet, 24 R. I. 411; Brown v. Brown [Neb.] 98 N. W. 718. May be used in the sense of heirs of the body or issue. Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53. The word "children" in a clause, giving an income to one and his children so long as they live, will not be construed as meaning only those in esse at the death of testator, unless such meaning is evident from the context. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427.

23. Words "legal representatives" mean "executors and administrators;" may be construed as meaning next of kin. Slight circumstances may control. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180. Words "legal representatives" in a gift to a son or "his heirs or legal representatives," after the expiration of a life estate, held to mean next of kin, since to construe them otherwise would make the personalty a part of the son's estate and liable for his debts, while the realty would not be, and it being improbable that testator intended to direct the disposition of one and not the other. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180. Where, in such case, the bequest is to take effect immediately, the words "personal representatives" will be generally construed as meaning executors or administrators, but where a particular estate intervenes they will be construed as meaning "next of kin." Id. May mean next of kin. Jones v. Hand, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 56. In a devise to two brothers, "who or whose representatives or assigns are to be entitled to possession and enjoyment thereof upon and after the decease of" testator's wife, held that the word "representatives" means next of kin, and that testator intended to make a substituted gift to the children of his brother or brothers, if one or both of them died before him. Fact that in previous devise to same persons he specifically devised share of one dying during testator's lifetime to his children does not show different intent. Id. The words "legal representatives," when used in connection with a devise of realty, are to be construed as equivalent to the word "heirs" and do not include the husband or wife of the testator. In re Lesieur's Estate, 205 Pa. 119. Under a devise in trust for one during her life, with power of appointment by will of the principal, "or in default of a will, to her legal representatives," the husband of the devisee takes no share of the estate on her death without exercising the power. Id.

24. Does not include a grandchild born and always residing in a distant state. Brett v. Donaghe's Guardian, 101 Va. 786.

25. The testator making a devise to his brothers and sisters surviving him at the time of his death, he does not include therein descendants of brothers and sisters dying before himself. Ruddell v. Wren [Ill.] 70 N. E. 751.

26. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393. Provision that if any child should die before reaching the age of twenty-five leaving no children, his share should go to his "heirs at law and next of kin according to law," means heirs living at death of child. Arnot v. Arnot, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 230.

27. Does not include children of a child belonging to a class named in the will, who had died before the will was executed. Tiffany v. Emmet, 24 R. I. 411. Under a will making a specific bequest to one living child, and bequeathing the residue to the other four, who were specifically named, and providing that the share of any child dying during testator's lifetime shall be paid to his descendants or heirs, the heirs of a child who died before the will was made are not dren" includes those born after the execution of the will.[28] "Children of deceased heirs" may include children of a child of testator who died before the will was made.[29] The word "survivors" may be construed to mean the "longest liver or longest livers" of the class referred to.[30] There is certainty when a class is referred to which will be determined by operation of law.[31]

Words which in a deed would create a condition may in a will be construed as a limitation.[32] Words of survivorship are generally construed as referring to the time of testator's death, unless a specific intent to the contrary appears.[33] The words "die without issue" mean an indefinite failure of issue, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intent,[34] but slight indications are sufficient to show that a definite failure was meant.[35] The contingency of death of a devisee without children is referred to the devisee's death before testator.[36] A gift over on death ordinarily means death before testator.[37] A contingency on birth after testator entitled to participate in the distribution of such residue. Bollinger v. Knox [Neb.] 92 N. W. 994.

28. Kidder's Ex'rs v. Kidder [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 154.

29. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393.

30. In a gift to three unmarried daughters or in case either died before marriage, her share to go to the survivors, the word "survivors" held to refer only to the class named and not to include children generally. Dodge v. Sherwood, 176 Mo. 33, 75 S. W. 417.

31. A gift over, after termination of the life estate, to heirs under the intestate laws, is not void for uncertainty as to the persons who are to take. Van Driele v. Kotvis [Mich.] 97 N. W. 700. Devise to children and issue after termination of trust held not void for uncertainty. Harris v. Fergay, 207 Ill. 534, 69 N. E. 844.

32. Jossey v. Brown [Ga.] 47 S. E. 350.

33. Kohtz v. Eldred, 208 Ill. 60, 69 N. E. 900. Where a devise is made to several as a class, with words of survivorship annexed, and the gift as to enjoyment is to take effect immediately upon testator's death, the words of survivorship will be referred to that event, and considered as intended to provide against the contingency of the death of the devisee during testator's lifetime. Jackman v. Jackman, 24 Ky. L. R. 2245, 73 S. W. 776. Under a devise to children or in case any child died leaving a child surviving, the share of the child so dying to go to the surviving grandchildren, grandchildren take an interest only in case their parents died during the life of testator. Katzenberger v. Weaver, 110 Tenn. 620, 75 S. W. 937. A devise to testator's child and over to her children, but in default then to testator's "surviving children," held to mean children surviving testator. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708.

34. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708. Devise to son with provision that, should he die without issue, then "the said real estate shall revert to my lawful heirs," imports an indefinite failure of issue, and the son takes an estate tail, enlarged by statute into a fee, and that other devises to children show an intent to devise subject to a definite failure of issue in the first takers, immaterial. Graham v. Abbott [Pa.] 57 Atl. 178.

35. Where realty is devised in terms denoting an intention that the primary devisee shall take a fee on testator's death, coupled with a devise over in case of his death without issue, the words refer to death during lifetime of testator, and the primary devisee surviving testator takes an absolute estate in fee. Kohtz v. Eldred, 208 Ill. 60, 69 N. E. 900. Slight indications to show that definite failure was meant, words "die without children or lineal descendants" held to contemplate a definite failure of issue at termination of the particular estate. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708. A provision in case of death of the devisee "without leaving issue" then over means without leaving issue at the time of the death of the devisee and not at the time of the death of the testator, and does not import an indefinite failure of issue. Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36.

36. A clause in a will directing what shall be done with the property in case the devisee shall die without children or other such contingency will be construed as referring to a death without children before the death of the testator, in the absence of anything in the will showing a contrary intent. Shields v. McAuley, 205 Pa. 45. A devise to certain persons, their children in the case of the death of either to have the share of the parent, is a devise in fee simple, the contingency referring to their death before that of the testator. Id. Testator devised realty to his three children in equal shares, providing that if either should die childless his share, after the death of the survivor, should descend to testator's heirs. Held, that the clause as to survivorship would be construed as contemplating a death before testator, and hence children surviving testator took an absolute estate. Jackman v. Jackman, 24 Ky. L. R. 2245, 73 S. W. 776.

37. Where there is a devise to one person in fee, and in case of his death to another, the contingency referred to is the death of the first named devisee during testator's lifetime, and if such devisee survives testator, he takes an absolute fee. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. A devise or bequest over in case "either of my children should die" will be interpreted to mean in case of death occurring during the lifetime of testator. McClellan v. Mackenzie [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 701. Under a will devising all the estate to the wife for life and "after the death of my wife I devise and bequeath my real estate to my children, and if any of my children should die before they would be entitled to shares may be referred to termination of a preceding estate.[38] A contingency does not relate to testator's death where a life estate intervenes, in which case the contingency should be referred to the death of the life tenant[39] or where a particular time for the vesting is fixed.[40] given them," then to the survivors, vests the remainder in the children on testator's death. Burke v. Barrett, 31 Ind. App. 635, 67 N. E. 552. The words "after the death of my wife" refer to the beginning of the enjoyment of the remainder and not its postponement, and the death of the children to death during testator's lifetime. Id.

The words "at their death" in a gift to several, will generally be regarded as being used distributively.[41]

38. A provision that on termination of the life estate the trustees pay legacies to such grandchildren "as may be living at my death or may be born thereafter" will be interpreted to mean such as may be born between the death of testator and the termination of the life estate. Beardsley v. Bridgeport Protestant Orphan Asylum [Conn.] 57 Atl. 165.

39. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. A devise in remainder to children and "in case of death of one or more of said children * * * their shares to be equally divided between all my living children" referred to the children dying before the life tenant and before the estate came into possession. Clements v. Reese, 25 Ky. L. R. 221, 74 S. W. 1047. Husband given a life estate, if he died without issue the property to go to other devisees, held contingency referred to was not the death of the husband during the life of the testatrix. In re Gordon's Will, 81 N. Y. S. 605. Under a devise to children, subject to a precedent life estate, with a provision that on the death of either of them without issue his share shall go to the survivors, each of such children takes a defeasible fee, subject to be defeated by his death without issue before his mother. Baxter v. Isaacs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1618, 71 S. W. 907. Under a devise for life with remainder over to children of the life tenant and in case of death of any to the survivors, the remainders vest absolutely on the death of the life tenant. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. A devise to one as a life tenant and at the latter's death to a class includes those members of the class in existence at the death of the life tenant. Thus a devise to the testator's wife and at her death to her child, not yet born, the child being born alive, though after the testator's death, takes the estate upon the death of the wife. Kesterson v. Bailey [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 97. A devise of a remainder to surviving children means children surviving at the death of the tenant of the particular estate. Wilson v. Bull [Md.] 54 Atl. 629. The words "surviving child or children" will not include children of a deceased child. Id. Testator devised ground rents to wife for life with remainder to his children in equal parts. Upon the death of a child, his share was to go to his children absolutely, to be equally divided between them, and any issue of a deceased grandchild, who should take per stirpes. In case any such grandchild died without issue, his share was to go to his surviving brothers or sisters or their heirs absolutely. In case any of testator's children died without leaving issue or descendants, his share should go to testator's surviving children or their heirs absolutely. Held, that on death of testator's son, his interest passed to his sole surviving sister, and the descendants of a deceased child had no interest therein. Id. Where money was bequeathed in trust to pay income to wife for life, and at her death part of the principal to testator's sister, or, if she should die before receiving her share, then to her heirs, and the remainder of the principal to the heirs of testator's deceased brother, the next of kin of the sister are to be ascertained as of the date of her death and those of the brother as of the date of testator's death. Trenton Trust & S. D. Co. v. Donnelly [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 92. Under Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 140, § 3, the husband or wife and the issue surviving the life tenant are the heirs, the former taking one-third and the latter two-thirds. International Trust Co. v. Williams, 183 Mass. 173, 66 N. E. 798. In a gift to heirs of a life tenant, the heirs are to be ascertained as of the date of such life tenant's death. Id. In a provision giving a legacy to remaindermen after the expiration of an estate for life, and providing that in case of the death of any of the legatees his share shall go to the others, the words "in case of death" will be construed to mean death during the continuance of the life estate. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180. A devise to the wife for life "and after her death to be divided equally among my children who may survive" shows an intention to postpone the vesting until termination of the life estate and in those who may then survive. In Moran's Will [Wis.] 96 N. W. 367. A provision for reversion to testator's legitimate living heirs will be construed in its literal sense and applied to all heirs living at his death and at the death of the devisees. Pepper v. Pepper, 25 Ky. L. R. 155, 74 S. W. 253.

40. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. Where final distribution is to be made among a class, the benefits of the will must be confined to those persons who come within the appropriate category at the date when the distribution is directed to be made [Laws 1896, c. 547, § 38]. Schlereth v. Schlereth, 173 N. Y. 444, 66 N. E. 130.

41. The words "at their decease" in a gift to several for life and at their death to others may be deemed to have been used distributively when there is an apparent intent that the subsequent interests shall pass separately to each class as succeeding to the share of the parent or cestui que trust whom they respectively represent. Gardiner v. Savage, 182 Mass. 521, 65 N. E. 851. Where the income of a single fund is bequeathed to two or more persons for life, with remainder over "after their death," these words will be construed to mean after their respective deaths, and a present division of the fund and a distribution of the part thereof not required to produce income for the life tenants will be decreed. Collins v. Wardell [N. J.] 54 Atl. 417. Where property is given to several for

The word "remainder" may be used in the sense of reversion.[42]

The word "vest" may be used in the sense of "payable" or "taking effect in possession."[43]

The word "or" interposed between the first legatee and the remaindermen is a word of substitution.[44]

(§ 5D) 2. Gifts by implication, gift of ownership or use, legal or equitable ownership, trust or power.—A devise may be held to exist by implication where the context requires it,[45] but the probability of such an intent must be so strong as to leave no hesitation in the mind of the court and permit of no other reasonable inference.[46] An expression of an intention to make a gift inter vivos cannot be construed as a bequest or devise.[47]

A devise of the interest, rents, and profits or the use and occupancy is a devise of the thing itself out of which they arise, unless there is a clear, manifest, and undisputed intention to the contrary.[48] Such a gift without limitation as to life, and then over at their decease, and such gift over is to the issue of the life tenant per stirpes, the words "at their decease" will be construed as being used distributively, and to mean that the stock of each life tenant takes on the death of its ancestor. Where per capita refers to death of survivor. Brown v. Farmer, 184 Mass. 136, 68 N. E. 32. Under a devise to two, share and share alike, and in case of their death without issue, over to brothers and sisters of testator, on the death of either his share passes to the latter, and not to the survivor of the devisees. Truesdell v. Darnall, 24 Ky. L. R. 2164, 73 S. W. 755.

42. Life estate granted wife before testator's death and reversion referred to as remainder. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 207 Ill. 411, 69 N. E. 804. Testator by contract with his wife made on the day of the execution of his will gave to her a life estate in certain realty and a life annuity in lieu of her statutory rights as widow. He referred to the contract in the will, provided that the annuity should be a charge on the realty, and devised all the "remainder" to his children in fee except that the daughters should hold their shares for life with remainder to their lawful children, held that the "remainder" includes testator's "reversion" in the property to which he had given a life estate to the wife, which could pass under the devise to the children. Id.

43. In re Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 504. Testator gave the income from his residuary estate to his sisters for life and upon their death the principal to his nephews and nieces, the issue of any of them who might be deceased to take his parent's share. By a subsequent clause, he provided that none of them could call the trustees under the will to account until their shares were payable and that their estates should not "vest" until such time. Held, that the word "vest" was used in the sense of "become payable," and that the estates vested in the nephews and nieces at the time of testator's death. Id.

44. Where property was given to one for life then to the testator's "children or their children, or their representatives," held, testator's children took no absolute or vesting estate during the life tenancy. Schaeffer's Adm'r v. Schaeffer's Adm'r [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 150. A devise for life and on death to testator's children "or" their heirs as the law directs does not create a vested but a contingent remainder. Words "or their heirs" are words of purchase, "or" used disjunctively and the heirs take under the will. Taylor v. Taylor, 118 Iowa, 407, 92 N. W. 71. The word "or," in a provision that an estate shall go to a party or his legal representatives, means in case of the party's death. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180.

45. Where one given full power to dispose of property not expressly devised to her. Hammond v. Croxton [Ind.] 69 N. E. 250. So where the court finds that testator intended his property to go to a certain person and attempted to declare such intent. Lawrence v. Barber, 116 Wis. 294, 93 N. W. 30. Codicil revoked gift to deceased child and failed to expressly name any one to whom it should go. Held, taking into consideration the scheme of the whole will, that there was an implied gift of deceased child's share to survivors. Id. A bequest in trust for a son until he attains majority failed to devise to him the fee, but a further clause provided that if he died before attaining majority, the property should go to another, held to be an implied devise in fee to the son when he attained majority. Culhane v. Fitzgibbons, 86 N. Y. Supp. 710.

46. Where the executors were directed to divide the residuum into four parts (the testator left four sons) and to deduct a certain sum which had been advanced from one part, which should then be the share of a named son, but no disposition was made of the three-fourths remaining, held not to create a devise to the remaining three sons by implication. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225.

47. "This has been my intention, if I lived and I desire it carried out in case of my death," before the happening of a certain contingency, held not a bequest, where testator lived until after the contingency happened. Lane v. Albertson, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 607.

48. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 194; Mayes v. Karn, 24 Ky. L. R. 2110, 72 S. W. 1111. Depends upon the context as evincing testator's intention with reference thereto. Where the total income of the entire estate was given for the support of the only child, payable annually, a life estate was created, though the title was conveyed in trust. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293. Under a gift of "all the use and income" of the entire estate to the widow for her life, continuance or limit as to time will be held to pass the fund itself, whether the gift be made directly or through the intervention of a trustee,[49] and if forever passes the fee.[50] Ownership is implied from an attempt to give the largest possible property.[51]

A devise or bequest to one person, accompanied by words expressing a wish, entreaty, or recommendation that he will apply it to the benefit of others, may create a trust in their favor, if the subject and object are sufficiently certain,[52] but in order to do so, it must appear that the words were intended to be imperative.[53] An expression may be imperative in its real meaning, though the language is not

she was entitled to possession and control of the entire estate, and the executor is not thereby made a trustee, there being nothing in the will to show such an intent. Michigan Trust Co. v. Hertzig [Mich.] 95 N. W. 531. But a bequest for life of the "interest or income as it accrues" of a sum to be set apart and invested in certain stocks, the principal to go to the legatee's legal issue after her death, gives such legatee a life interest in the income only, and does not entitle her to receive the legal title to the principal. Jewett v. Schmidt, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 502. A devise of the use and occupation of land passes an estate in the land, and in the absence of such an intent clearly appearing, is not confined to a personal use and occupation thereof. A devise that the wife "may, if she chooses, use and occupy the dwelling house," held to include the right to rent and apply the proceeds for her own use. Mayer v. Mayer [Ky.] 78 S. W. 883. No intent to vest absolute ownership of evidences of indebtedness in life tenant. In re Skinner, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 449.

49. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 194. Where the interest of a fund is bequeathed to a legatee or in trust to him without any limitation as to continuance, the principal will be regarded as bequeathed also. As where a bequest of a part of the income of one-fifth of the estate for life to a child, the balance to accumulate for the benefit of grandchildren without further disposition, the latter take the one-fifth with the accumulations. Hussey v. Sargent, 25 Ky. L. R. 315, 75 S. W. 211.

50. A gift of the proceeds or interest of an estate forever is equivalent to a gift of the fee: In re Vilsack's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 32. An absolute devise of the entire rents of a named property will carry the property also. Gidley v. Lovenberg [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 831. Devise of income, or rents and profits, or use and occupancy whether in fee or for life, depends upon testator's intention expressed or as gathered from the entire will. Simmons v. Morgan [R. I.] 55 Atl. 522. A devise in trust to pay the net income of land and moneys received from the sale of property to daughters "for and during the term of their natural lives," and after their death to their children "to hold to said children, their heirs and assigns, and one-third part to my said son, his heirs and assigns," etc., held to give to the daughters an estate for life in the entire property, and after their decease, an estate in fee in one-third of the estate to the son and in the balance to the daughters. Trust held valid. Id. A testator had devised property to his son absolutely. The son subsequently became indebted, and a codicil was added revoking such devise and giving the property to a trustee for the use of the son and his family for life, the son to will it to whom he chose. The trustee to hold the property free from the son's debts. Held, the entire estate vested in the son. Honacker Sons v. Duff, 101 Va. 675.

51. Where testator having limited power of disposal gives to a particular person in general terms all the law allows and then proceeds to give him the entire residue, held to evince an intention to give such person all that by the law he is permitted to give. Gueydan v. Montague, 109 La. 38.

52. Where property given absolutely a trust is not to be lightly imposed by mere words of trust and confidence. Russell v. United States Trust Co., 127 Fed. 445. Absolute devise accompanied by a statement that it is testator's "wish and expectation" that devisee shall "generously remember" certain persons, and "such others as she may choose," when she should make her will, held not to create a trust, the words being merely an expression of hope and confidence. Id.

53. Igo v. Irvine, 24 Ky. L. R. 1165, 70 S. W. 836. Expressions used by way of suggestion, counsel, or advice, with a view to influence but not to direct the discretion of the party not sufficient. Russell v. United States Trust Co., 127 Fed. 445; Thruston's Adm'r v. Prather, 25 Ky. L. R. 1137, 77 S. W. 354. After an absolute devise, a request that children dying without issue devise the property to testator's surviving children is insufficient. Igo v. Irvine, 24 Ky. L. R. 1165, 70 S. W. 836. Provision that in case the devisee die without issue "I earnestly request" that he give the land "or its value" to certain persons, insufficient. White v. Irvine, 24 Ky. L. R. 2458, 74 S. W. 247. It must appear from the words used that they were intended in an imperative sense, and the subject and object of the wish or recommendation must be certain. Words "I request that she shall assist any of my brothers or sisters, if they should be in need, and at her decease she should divide her property among them as she may think best," held not to create precatory trust. McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105. The word "desire" may be precatory and not imperative. Thus as to a desire that a monument provided for by the will be erected in a certain square. In re Ogden [R. I.] 55 Atl. 923. A will gave all the residuary estate to the wife "absolutely," but requested that at her death she should divide the property among testator's brothers and sisters "as she may think best." Held, the wife had an absolute estate, under the will, free from any trust in favor of testator's brothers and sisters. McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105.

imperative in form.[54] The test in such cases is whether the will shows upon its face that the purpose expressed was merely the motive for making the gift, or whether it was to be used for that purpose at all events, leaving the legatees no discretion in the matter. In the latter case the gifts are in trust for such purpose.[55]

Where the first taker has the absolute power of disposal or ownership, or where a clear discretion or choice to act or not is given, equity will not construe a trust from the language employed.[56]

A trusteeship cannot be predicated of one who holds for life only, and for his own sole use and benefit, where the will also gives the remainder to others in their own right, and no duty other than that growing out of their legal relation is imposed on the life tenant,[57] nor does it, where there is no gift over, import a trust for testator's heirs.[58]

In a gift to persons "and their heirs and assigns forever," the latter words will yield to a clear, positive and valid creation of a trust or limited estate, but when the language relied on to import such trust or estate is ambiguous or uncertain, they will be given great weight.[59] A provision in a devise that it be with the condition "that the daughters' share shall be protected as their separate estate" creates a separate use trust.[60] A devise in trust for benefit of testator's sons and "in case of the death of either leaving issue," his share, both income and principal, to be paid and distributed equally to and among his said issue, held to contemplate an absolute gift to the issue and not a gift in trust.[61]

If the same person is appointed both trustee and beneficiary, the trust fails and he takes the legal estate.[62] A devise over after the termination of a trust for the payment of incumbrances passes the equitable fee.[63] A restraint on alienation

54. Russell v. United States Trust Co., 127 Fed. 445. The meaning of the word "request," standing alone, is indeterminate and depends altogether upon the context. Id. Where testator "requests" a devisee to pay his mother such sums "as may be requisite for her every comfort," word "request" held imperative. Id. If the context justifies it, the word "wish" may be equivalent to "will" or "request" or "direct." Id.

55. A devise to a bishop or his successors to be used in the education of priests in his diocese is a gift in trust, and void under the Minnesota statutes (Gen. St. 1899, § 4274). In re Shanehan's Estate, 88 Minn. 202, 92 N. W. 948. A mere statement of the motive for the gift is not sufficient. Thus a gift to enable the legatee to confer bounty on others is not a trust, but a beneficial legacy to him. Baker v. Baker, 53 W. Va. 165. Where the will clearly shows that the use of property indicated is merely the motive which leads the testator to make the gift, and if the beneficiary is not limited in his discretion as to the use he is to make of it, the gift does not impose a trust. Bequest to a wife "for charitable purposes." Id. An absolute life estate is not changed to an estate in trust by a clause to the effect that the devise was for the support of the devisee and family, and that no part should ever become liable for the payment of his debts. Wood v. Ward, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 567.

56. No trust can be implied from words merely indicating the motive of the gift. McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105. Where a widow received, under a will, the testator's realty for life, with power to convey the fee, and the undisposed residue, if any, was given to the children, the widow received a life estate unaccompanied by any trust [Rev. St. 1898, § 2108]. Auer v. Brown [Wis.] 98 N. W. 966.

57. Where the life tenant is given sole use of all the property with the remainder over in fee, a provision appointing the life tenant trustee may be treated as surplusage. Thompson v. Adams, 205 Ill. 552, 69 N. E. 1.

58. Devise to wife for life without a provision over as to the remainder. Dillenbeck v. Pinnell, 121 Iowa, 201, 96 N. W. 860.

59. Where trusts were to pay debts and to distribute unspecified portions to unnamed persons, and trustees made residuary legatees, residue on failure of one of the trusts goes to them. Trunkey v. Van Sant, 176 N. Y. 535, 68 N. E. 946. A devise of land "to her and her heirs forever," followed by a provision "to be kept for the benefit of her and her children forever," passes to the devisee the legal title impressed with a trust for the children. Deans v. Gay, 132 N. C. 227. A provision that the person named should be "trustee to receive and control the property" is not repugnant to a previous absolute devise of the fee to such person, but creates a trust with legal title to property in trustee. Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742.

62. A trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to the principal of the trust fund so created for a bankrupt. Tuck v. Knapp, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1001.

63. A devise in trust to use the net income of the land to pay all incumbrances thereon, a part of the land then to go to by means of a trust may give an equitable fee which will be executed when the purpose ceases.[64] So with a remainder "without limitation" after a life estate in trust.[65] Any trust which is merely passive[66] will be executed into a legal estate.[67] A reference to a trust previously given may be sufficient to make subsequent gifts in trust.[68]

Under a bequest to personal representatives, such persons do not generally take beneficially, but in their representative capacity.[69] The mere fact that the executor is directed to sell land for the purpose of investing the proceeds and dividing them among the beneficiaries at some future time does not give him the legal title thereto.[70]

A power may be given, though words of trust be used.[71] The words "then remaining" or the like, in a devise over, do not show an intention to give the first taker power to use or dispose of the corpus of the estate,[72] nor does the fact that there is no devise over after his death. Under a provision giving to testator's son the farm "on which I now live after the death of my wife, the title of said farm to be and remain in the hands of my executors," who are to take possession whenever the son lets the property or wastes the income, and pay the profits to the son, the son takes no legal title and no title which he can convey, notwithstanding the fact that there was no devise over after the son's death.[73] A devise to a married woman, the property "to be held and used by her free from the control of her husband, and as her separate estate," gives her a sole and separate use merely, without power of disposition.[74] A gift of personalty direct to two persons to use the income for life and in case of death to another for life, all of whom were appointed testator's son, passes to him an equitable fee, subject to the incumbrances. On foreclosure of a mortgage thereon and sale of the property, the surplus should go to the son, together with such of the net income of the entire property as has been collected and not applied to reduce incumbrances. Simmons v. Morgan [R. I.] 55 Atl. 522.

64. Will devising land in language sufficient to create a fee, but in trust for "the use and benefit" of the devisee, and without "power to dispose of the same by deed or otherwise," held in view of the whole will, to give the cestui que trust an equitable fee, and on her death the trust terminated and her heirs took the legal title under the statute of uses. Powers v. Rafferty, 184 Mass. 85, 67 N. E. 1028.

65. Where the remainder after termination of the life estate was devised to the executors to be invested for a brother's benefit during life and for the benefit of his wife and his issue after his death," without limitation as to time, the latter upon the death of the brother, took an absolute estate. Illensworth v. Illensworth, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 194.

68. Under a provision giving property to trustees for benefit of a son, a further provision giving them the share given a daughter for life in case she died without issue, "on trusts declared in this will for my said son," and a further provision that at the death of the daughters without children, their shares should go to the sons, the share of the son previously given to go to the trustees. Held, that the gifts to such first named son were on the trust. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708.

69. Strong presumption against their taking beneficially. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180. A devise to executors in trust for certain purposes, "the balance to said trustees," held the trustees were not entitled to such funds as individuals, but as trustees of a void undisclosed trust. Trunkey v. Van Sant, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 272.

70. A devise to grandchildren containing a provision desiring the executor to sell land and invest the proceeds and divide between beneficiaries, when they shall have reached a certain age, does not vest the title in the executor, and he could not exercise the power after his discharge from office (Boland v. Tiernay, 118 Iowa, 59, 91 N. W. 836), but the legal title vests in the devisees which will not be defeated by the executor's failure to exercise the power of sale (Id.).

71. A direction to hold "in trust" to pay over to the issue of deceased first takers held merely a power to distribute and not a trust. Denison v. Denison, 86 N. Y. Supp. 604.

72. A devise to A. for life, and on her death the property "then remaining" to be distributed, gives no power of sale to A., nor power to use the corpus of the estate. Thompson v. Adams, 205 Ill. 552, 69 N. E. 1. A gift to executors for the purposes "hereinafter mentioned, viz.: I desire that my wife shall have the full use, benefit, and enjoyment of all my property during her natural life," and "whatever remains" after her death to go to the children, held not to give the property outright to the wife, so as to entitle her to hold money which had belonged to him. executors, creates a power in trust and not a trust within the statute against perpetuities.[75]

(§ 5D) 3. Estates or interests created.—In the absence of a contrary intention appearing, a devise of land without limitation passes all the estate and interest which testator had power to dispose of.[76] Technical words of estate, as of inheritance or life tenancy, have their technical meaning if no contrary intent be apparent.[77] No technical words are necessary to give personal property absolutely.[78] The use of words in relation to it, which if applied to land would create an estate tail, makes the gift absolute in the first taker.[79] Words of inheritance are not necessary to devise a fee.[80] Any words suffice which carry that intent,[81] especially if they have the sense of sole or unqualified ownership.[82] Detached sentences may be related by the word "also" to fix the estate given.[83] While remain-

He devised this land to certain grandchildren. Held, they took the lien. Morrison v. Clarksburg Coal & Coke Co., 52 W. Va. 331.

77. "Owner in fee" gives fee simple estate. Bowen v. John, 201 Ill. 292, 66 N. E. 357. "Fee simple, to hold and possess during her natural life after having paid all my just debts. Also desire and hereby empower my wife to act in her own way in settling up all my business of any kind and desire no administration," the wife took a fee. Smith v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1964, 72 S. W. 766.

Words of inheritance: A gift to a son for life, with remainder to testator's heirs at law, will not be construed so as to prevent the son taking as an heir. Thomas v. Castle [Conn.] 56 Atl. 854. A devise to one and his heirs forever held to give him an estate in fee, and that his children did not take title with him. Hazelwood v. Webster [Ky.] 78 S. W. 123.

78. At common law or by statute in Illinois. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 1069. In cases of absolute bequests of personalty, the court cannot look to other parts of the will, as in case of devises of realty, to determine whether a less estate be limited by express words, construction or operation of law. Id.

80. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4646. Simmons v. Cabanne, 177 Mo. 336, 76 S. W. 618. Under Ky. St. 1899, § 2342. Jackman v. Jackman, 24 Ky. L. R. 2245, 73 S. W. 776. Under the Statutes of Illinois (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. [2d Ed.] p. 925), every estate devised is to be deemed a fee simple, whether the technical words are used or not, unless the will limits it either expressly, or by construction or operation of law. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 1069; Bowen v. John, 201 Ill. 292, 66 N. E. 357. Limited by words "to descend to his bodily heirs, and, in case of none, to his brothers and sisters." Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464, 65 N. E. 445. Under a devise to one without the use of the words "heirs and assigns," he will take a fee, unless the will reduces it to a less estate by express words or by construction or operation of law (Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. c. 30, § 13). Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36. "I wish to give all my property to my wife. My wife to have full charge of all my estate after my death, without any restrictions whatever." Held, to give fee. Becker v. Becker, 206 Ill. 53, 69 N. E. 49. In Massachusetts, the language shall be construed to convey all the estate which a testator could lawfully devise in the land mentioned, unless it clearly appears by the will that he intended to convey a less estate (Rev. St. 1836, c. 62, § 4; Gen. St. 1860, c. 92, § 5; Pub. St. 1882, c. 127, § 24; Rev. Laws, c. 135, § 22). Smith v. Rice, 183 Mass. 251, 66 N. E. 806. Devise of all residue, giving devisee full power to do with it as she might deem proper during her natural life. Bassett v. Nickerson, 184 Mass. 169, 68 N. E. 25. Words "bequeath absolutely" sufficient. Roth v. Rauschenbusch, 173 Mo. 582, 73 S. W. 664. 3 Gen. St. N. J. p. 3763. Devise to son by name without words of perpetuity or inheritance, held to pass fee in absence of devise over on his death or a contrary intent. Feit v. Richard, 64 N. J. Eq. 16. A devise to two "to be equally divided between them, and to their heirs at their death" conveys the fee to the devisees (Ohio Rev. St. § 5970). Halley v. Hengstler, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 504. A devise in trust for the benefit of the child or children of the devisee, he to have the income for life, passes a fee simple estate to the remaindermen, subject to the devisee's interest, unless they predecease the testator. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 2342, providing that a devise without words of inheritance passes the fee, or such estate as testator had. Dalmazzo v. Simmons [Ky.] 78 S. W. 179.

81. A devise to minor sons in trust for their support and education, the trustee to act also as guardian, and with power to disinherit under certain conditions, held to pass an equitable fee simple and not merely a life estate. Simmons v. Cabanne, 177 Mo. 336, 76 S. W. 618. Gift of proceeds forever is a fee. In re Vilsack's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 32.

82. Held to give fee. "Owner in fee." Bowen v. John, 201 Ill. 292, 66 N. E. 357. Devise of "all my estate." Smith v. Rice, 183 Mass. 251, 66 N. E. 806. All the rest and residue of the property to one for her sole use and benefit. Gallison v. Quinn, 183 Mass. 241, 66 N. E. 961.

83. Where land was devised to a granddaughter and in the same item though after several complete sentences had intervened the will read "Also" other land "which is to be hers for her natural life only" and ing in some states,[84] the rule in Shelley's case has been superseded in others,[85] or reduced to a rule of construction.[86] The same result is often reached by construction.[87] It does not apply if "heirs" means "children."[88] It is applicable to personalty by analogy if no contrary intent appears.[89] When the word "heirs" is used as a word of limitation, it conclusively expresses the intention of the testator to devise an estate in fee.[90] Under statutes abolishing fees tail, words creating such[91] may result in a life estate and remainder in fee to children or in a fee.[92] A devise should she die without children "then the property which I have given to her" to go to the rest of her heirs, held she took only a life estate in the land first devised. Hauser v. Craft [N. C.] 46 S. E. 756.

84. Testator devised lands absolutely to his son and thereafter executed a codicil "In regard to the former will in bequest to my son * * * I desire to change to read to wit: that he shall have use, benefit and control * * * during his lifetime only, and that at his death said lands shall go to his lawful heirs," held, that son took fee simple estate under rule in Shelley's case. Deemer v. Kessinger, 206 Ill. 57, 69 N. E. 28.

85. Rev. St. § 5968, abrogated the rule in Shelley's case as to wills. Halley v. Hengstler, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 504.

86. In Pennsylvania, the rule is still in existence as a rule of interpretation, but its original results as a rule of property are changed by the statute (P. L. 1855, p. 368), declaring that an estate in fee tail shall be construed as an estate in fee simple. Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53.

87. If the devise comes under the rule in Shelley's case, the words must be taken as they stand, in their strict legal signification, irrespective of testator's intent. Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53.

Any form of words sufficient to show that the remainder is to go to those whom the law points out as the general or lineal heirs of the first taker will enlarge the estate for life of the first taker to an estate in fee or estate tail by implication. Id.

Illustrations: Devise "The two houses is a lifetime lease, it cannot be taken from you nor you cannot spend it, but it is held to insure you something to live on during your lifetime, and at your decease if you have lawful heirs all will fall to them but if not, then the property to be sold," vests a fee in the devisee. McCann v. Barclay, 204 Pa. 214. Under a devise of a life estate, with remainder to the devisee's surviving sisters, and in case none survived, to his legal heirs, the devisee takes a life estate, subject to a contingent remainder in fee to the sisters, with a contingent remainder in fee, if they did not take, to his heirs, and hence on the decease of the sisters, was a fee simple, under the rule in Shelley's case. McNeal v. Sherwood [R. I.] 53 Atl. 43. A devise of all of testator's estate to his wife, with a devise of all the rest and residue of his estate to his son on condition that after the death of the wife the son should pay testator's debts and funeral charges, and erect gravestones, and providing that on the death of the son the property should go to his next of kin, gives him a life estate in the residue of the estate remaining after the wife's death, under the statute of Rhode Island, abolishing the rule in Shelley's case (Gen. Laws R. I. 1896, c. 201, § 6). In re Willis' Will [R. I.] 55 Atl. 889.

A will provided "I loan my entire interest in a tract of land to my son to be his for life and at his death to his heirs in fee, and if he die without heirs to revert back to his next of kin." The son takes a life estate only. May v. Lewis, 132 N. C. 115. Property was devised to be and inure to the use of the devisee "during his natural life, not subject to be sold or conveyed by him, but in case he should have legitimate children it should belong to them." Held, devisee had a life estate only. Millsaps v. Estes [N. C.] 46 S. E. 988.

88. A will devising a life estate to the testator's son, the land at his death to go to his heirs, if any, to be theirs in fee simple forever; and if he should die without heirs, said land to revert back to the next of kin, held, rule in Shelley's case did not apply and testator's son took only a life estate. May v. Lewis, 132 N. C. 115.

89. Where will gives an interest in personalty held in trust, which if it had been realty, would have been an estate in fee under the rule in Shelley's case, the beneficiary is entitled to the property without conveyance. Evans v. Weatherhead, 24 R. I. 502.

90. Teal v. Richardson, 160 Ind. 119, 66 N. E. 435.

91. A devise to one "not being subject to sale, transfer, or liability for debts, but to descend to his bodily heirs, and, in case of none, to his brothers and sisters." When first child of first taker is born, he takes a fee subject to the life estate, and subject to be opened to let in after-born children. Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464, 65 N. E. 445.

92. Testator devised his farm to his children "and shall stay so as it is divided at present, and in case R. shall not get married and shall die without any heirs, then his part of the farm shall fall on J., and F. shall get $200 out of it." R. never married and died without issue. Held, that R. took an estate in fee tail, enlarged by statute into an estate in fee simple. Affirmed by divided court. McCafferty v. Duerr, 207 Pa. 261. A devise to a daughter for life only, remainder after her death to her child or children in fee, but if the daughter at testator's decease has neither husband, child, nor children, then she may dispose of her share as she sees proper, and a further provision that if any devisee refused to take his devise, it should revert back to the estate and be divided among testator's other "said heirs equally," gives the daughter an estate in fee tail general, which is resolved into a fee simple under the Pennsylvania statute (P. L. 1855, p. 368). Simpson v. Reed, 205 Pa. 53. Under a will giving the estate to testatrix's children, and giving them the full and unrestricted beneficial use thereof, providing that one-half of the estate was to be entailed, the income to be used for the benefit of such children, and that if any child should die without issue he could dispose of

of "all my estate" to one, "his heirs, assigns, executors and administrators to his and their use and behoof forever," passes the estate in fee and not an estate tail.[93] A remainder in fee may be limited to the heirs at law of one to whom, by the same instrument, is given the precedent freehold.[94] It is the general policy of the courts to adopt such a construction as will give a fee to the first taker,[95] so as not to tie up property and suspend the power of alienation,[96] but unless it affirmatively appears that a greater estate was intended, a life estate only will pass, in Indiana.[97] If a fee be followed by a gift over in case of death without living issue, it will be construed to mean in case of death before testator, and the primary devisee surviving testator takes an absolute estate.[98] A specific bequest for life, of perishable chattels, may carry the absolute title,[99] but such chattels not being specified, only the use or income is devised.[1] A gift over may imply a life estate where the quantum is not expressed,[2] and this may be true even though the first gift was of a particular property and that over was of all.[3] A condition against alienation of a gift for support of wife and child may be construed as giving an estate for life to the wife with remainder to the children.[4] In case of personalty, a gift of income may imply a life estate[5] and a charge,[6] or a trust may do so if there is a gift half his share by will, the other half to go to testatrix's heirs, held, that the children took a fee in half the property and the use and enjoyment of the other half, with remainder to the heirs of testatrix's body, creating in them a fee tail, which was also converted into a fee simple in the first taker by the statute (Ky. St. 1903, § 2343), thus giving the children a fee simple title to the whole. Dulaney v. Dulaney [Ky.] 79 S. W. 195.

2. A devise of "the home farm" and a bequest of personalty followed by a provision that the devisee is to have all the property bequeathed to him "except the home farm shall go to my legitimate heirs should there be any at my decease, the other one-half of said farm * * * to be at his disposal to will to whom he may see fit," held to give the devisee a fee in half the farm and a life estate in the rest. Pepper v. Pepper, 25 Ky. L. R. 155, 74 S. W. 253. A devise of a house and lot, wherein he now lives, to a son, and in case he should die, to his wife "for and during her natural life and no longer," gives the son a life estate only. In re Willis' Will [R. I.] 55 Atl. 889. A gift of all the property to the wife "to sell or dispose of as shall to her seem fit and proper or to retain during her natural life for her own use, subject after her decease" to the following legacies, held to show an intention that she should take a life estate. In re Stuart's Will, 115 Wis. 294, 91 N. W. 688.

3. Clause devising all the estate, including the property described "after the decease of my wife to my children," held to create a life estate in the wife, and the fact that the one piece of property was specially designated did not make it a specific devise. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 408.

4. A devise of the income for the support of the widow and education of the child, with a prohibition against any disposition by the wife, creates a life estate in one-half in the wife and a fee to one-half in the child with remainder over to the latter. Mayes v. Karn, 24 Ky. L. R. 2110, 72 S. W. 1111.

5. Where testator gave half his property to trustees with directions to pay the income to his son, the property to go to his issue, if any, at his death, and if none, then to the residuary legatee, held, that the son took only a life estate in such income, such being the evident intent of testator. Bradbury v. Jackson, 97 Me. 449.

6. After a bequest for life, a provision "I hereby charge and request * * * at death to leave" remainder "to our two children" is a bequest over to the children, the life tenant simply having power to use the property. In re Stickney's Will, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 70.

over.[7] A remainder in heirs at law is implied from a devise of a life estate without disposal of the fee.[8] To create such a limitation by implication there must be a life estate in the first taker, with no provision for devolution after termination thereof.[9] Limitations over after the death of a cestui que trust to his issue, and in absence thereof to be disposed of as in intestacy, makes contingent alternate remainders in fee.[10] A devise of all the testator's property in fee, followed by one of designated property for life, gives the devisee a fee to all the property except as to that specially limited to a life estate.[11] A provision that in case of death of the devisee without issue, his wife should not take any interest, does not show an intent to create a life estate.[12] Where an estate is given to one generally or indefinitely,[13] or for life,[14] an added power unlimited raises a fee. In the absence of a residuary clause, a gift for life with power of disposal passes an absolute estate.[15] A power of disposition will not convert an estate into a fee simple, where it appears from the whole will that only a life estate was intended to be given.[16] Words of life tenancy may be enlarged if such an intent appears,[17] but the mere invalidity of limitations over will not do so.[18] The mere presence of conditions does not do so,[19] nor does a power necessarily do so.[20] Generally, a Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36.

14. Will gave wife life estate in all property, with power to "do and dispose of the same" as fully as testator might, and also gave expressly the right to give a warranty deed of the property. Residue after her death, if any, was to go to heirs. Held, wife received the fee and could dispose of it by will. Dills v. La Tour [Mich.] 98 N. W. 1004. If the first taker is given an estate in fee or for life, coupled with an unlimited power of disposition, the fee or absolute estate vests in him, and the limitation over is void. Under devise to husband "for and during his natural life," giving him "full and absolute and perfect possession and control thereof, with the right and authority to use, occupy, lease, sell and convey, or otherwise dispose of the same," with remainder to designated persons, the husband takes the fee. Hair v. Caldwell, 109 Tenn. 148, 70 S. W. 610.

15. Ward v. Stanard, 81 N. Y. Supp. 906.

16. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 1069; In re Hardaker's Estate, 204 Pa. 181, 53 Atl. 761.

17. Under a devise "to be held by them during their natural lives," and on their death to go to their children and in case of death without issue to the survivor and his children, and in case of death of both without children then over, the first takers have only a life estate. Call v. Shewmaker, 24 Ky. L. R. 686, 69 S. W. 749. Will devised realty to trustees, the land to descend to the beneficiary's children, his parents to have a home thereon for themselves and for their children during minority, or as long as any of their female children were unmarried. A part of the crops was to be appropriated for the use of the beneficiary and the rest for the use of the parents of the beneficiary and their other children. Should the beneficiary die without children, then the land was to belong to the other child of his mother, "who shall have the use of it during her life as directed in this will." Held, that the parents took a life estate subject to the appropriation of crops for the use of the beneficiary, after which the surviving parent took the whole income, and on her death the beneficiary would have a life estate with remainder to his children. Webster v. Brown, 24 Ky. L. R. 1987, 72 S. W. 774.

18. A will devising certain sums to named devisees for life, with remainder over to their descendants in fee, the remainders being void, the first named devisees take life estates only. Graham v. Whitridge [Md.] 57 Atl. 609.

19. Will gave all residue of profits of his estate to his wife for life on certain conditions, and in case of a breach thereof one-third of such profits were to go to her for life and the rest to testator's daughter for life, and after the death of the wife the residue of such profits was to go to the daughter for life. After the death of both the wife and daughter, the estate was to be equally divided among the heirs of himself and his wife. Held, that the wife and daughter and the survivor of them took a life interest only in the estate. Van Driele v. Kotvis [Mich.] 97 N. W. 700.

20. A devise "to be hers absolutely during her natural life to use and enjoy as she may see proper" gives a life estate with power to dispose of the land in fee. Underwood v. Cave, 176 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 451. After a devise for life, a provision that the devisee shall not "sell or incumber until he shall be twenty-five years of age" does not increase the es-devise for life with power of disposition by deed or will passes the fee, but with power of disposition by will passes only a life estate.[21] A full power of disposal as though the devise was in fee is consistent with a life estate.[22] References to portions not used or remaining after a life estate, sometimes[23] but not always[24] raise the interest to an absolute ownership. An absolute gift will not be cut down by a subsequent clause unless it clearly and decisively appears that such was testator's intention.[25] A limitation over after an absolute fee is void for repugnancy;[26]

tate to a fee. Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36. A devise to the wife "to dispose of as her own as long as she shall live" then over to the children, gives her a life estate with power to dispose of such part as may be necessary for support and maintenance. Martin v. Barnhill, 25 Ky. L. R. 1384, 77 S. W. 1097. A devise for life to the wife, she to have "full use, management, control and disposal" of it "for her use, comfort and support," with remainder over, creates a life estate with limited power of disposition. Rowe v. Rowe, 120 Iowa, 17, 94 N. W. 258. A power of disposal during life does not enlarge the life estate to a fee simple estate. Podaril v. Clark [Iowa] 91 N. W. 1091. A devise to one "for her own personal use and benefit during her life, and at her death all that may remain and be left," to go to others, gives the devisee a life estate with power of disposition and the use of the proceeds. Mitchell v. Van Allen, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 297.

Held to pass a fee: A provision that the income of certain property shall be paid to certain persons for life, with power to dispose of the property by will, gives the life tenants the fee in respect to the rights of creditors, purchasers and incumbrancers, subject to any future estates limited thereon in case the power of disposition is not executed, and the property is not sold for the satisfaction of debts (under N. Y. Laws 1896, c. 547, § 129). In re Sturgis' Estate, 205 Pa. 436. Devise to widow for life, with general power of disposition by will, and in default of such disposition, to testator's children living at the widow's death, with right of representation in their issue, if any, held, that the widow's power of appointment will carry the fee. Id.

23, 24. Applied to nonconsumable personalty: Where the will did not expressly devise to the widow, but gave her "full power to bargain, sell * * * and after her death and not until then, the heir, if living, is to have that part * * * that may be left. * * * But if my wife survive the heir * * * she is to dispose of the whole * * * as she sees fit," held to pass a life estate to the widow with power to sell and convey the reversion, and to the heir an estate in remainder in fee in case he survived the widow. Hammond v. Croxton [Ind.] 69 N. E. 250. "The use" of evidences of indebtedness for life, and bequest over of "all the rest and residue thereof then remaining." In re Skinner, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 449.

25. Curtis v. Waldron, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351. Doubts resolved in favor of absolute estate. McClellan v. MacKenzie [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 701; Kohts v. Eldred, 208 Ill. 60, 69 N. E. 900. Not cut down unless by certain or express terms. Hammond v. Croxton [Ind.] 69 N. E. 250; Bradbury v. Jackson, 97 Me. 449. Not to be cut down by dubious, vague and ambiguous expressions following. Testator after granting fee cannot take therefrom quality of inheritance or right to alienate. Bowen v. John, 201 Ill. 292, 66 N. E. 357; Davis v. Davis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 90; Roth v. Rauschenbusch, 173 Mo. 582, 73 S. W. 664. Codicil held to show intent to change amount of income a daughter was to receive in case she married a named person and to give her children a definite sum. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283. Must be as clear and decisive as language used in making gift. Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 572, 73 S. W. 662; Curtis v. Waldron, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351.

Where words heretofore necessary to transfer a fee are not used, the court can only inquire whether an estate less than a fee is limited by express words, or devised by construction or operation of law (Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. c. 30, § 13). Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36. A clause following an absolute devise without words of inheritance "to him and the heirs of his body forever" limits the devise to a life estate with remainder over to the heirs of his body. Id.

Clause expressing wish, desire, or direction for disposal after death of first taker not sufficient. Thus, devise of all testator's property to his wife, reciting that it was his intention to make her his sole residuary legatee and to provide for her for remainder of her life, but that the devise was conditioned that whatever part of the estate remained at her death was to go to their relatives, held to give the wife a fee, and that the conditional limitation after her death was void for repugnancy. Meyer v. Weller, 121 Iowa, 51, 95 N. W. 254. "Provided that when she is done with it I give it to," another, such clause being merely an expression of testator's desire. Cox v. Anderson's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 721, 69 S. W. 953.

Illustrations: Devise to three for life, and on the death of one without living issue, his share to go to the survivors, and on the death of two without issue, the whole to go to the survivor, "who shall then be sole owner in fee of all said premises and shall so continue to be the sole owner thereof during the remainder of the life of such sole survivor: provided, however, that such sole survivor may sell said premises, or any part thereof, if it should be absolutely and indispensably necessary to do so for the support of such sole survivor." Residuary clause in favor of said three devisees. Held that the survivor took the entire estate in fee. Bowen v. John, 201 Ill. 292, 66 N. E.

but an attempted limitation over after language which might otherwise be held to convey an absolute fee may show that such an estate was not intended,[27] or the fee may be a qualified one.[28] In doubtful cases the law leans in favor of an absolute rather than a defeasible estate.[29] A reverter back to next of kin in case of death of the devisee without heirs is a valid executory devise.[30]

A gift of income of a fund includes all that accrues therefrom after testator's death.[31] "Interest" and "income" may be used synonymously.[32] A devise of the "use, rents, and interest and income" gives the life tenant the entire benefit of the usufruct of the corpus of the estate.[33] "Net income" includes extraordinary cash dividends on stock, but not stock dividends or the right to sub-

357. The use of the words "assigns, executors and administrators," in addition to the word "heirs," does not operate to cut down the estate from a fee to a life estate in the first taker. Smith v. Rice, 183 Mass. 251, 66 N. E. 806. A will gave testator's lands to his wife absolutely. A subsequent clause provided that the property should "be hers absolutely during her natural life, to use and enjoy as she may think proper, and at her death, if there should be anything left," to go to others. Held, that the wife took a life estate with power to dispose of the fee the language modifying the absolute grant being as strong or stronger than that making it, and not ambiguous. Underwood v. Cave, 176 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 451. A devise in fee simple is not cut down to a trust by a codicil providing that the interest of the devisee should be free from the control of her husband and from any liability for his debts. Murray v. Lowrie [Pa.] 57 Atl. 44.

A devise to testator's wife, absolute in form, followed by a direction that after her death the property, "excepting such donations as my wife shall deem fit and proper to make," should go in equal shares to testator's brothers, gives the wife a life estate only. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632 64 N. E. 1069. A devise of an estate in fee cannot be lessened by words of request that the devisee convey to another. Kauffman v. Gries [Cal.] 74 Pac. 846.

26. Spencer v. Scovil [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1016. An absolute devise providing that the devisee should not alienate until she should have arrived at 33 years of age, and in case of death without issue then so much of the land as she had not alienated to go to certain named persons, passed the fee simple with power of alienation on arrival at said age, and the devise over is void for repugnancy. Id. A devise in fee held not limited by a codicil bequeathing a certain amount in trust, provided so much remained after the death of the original devisee. Bassett v. Nickerson, 184 Mass. 169, 68 N. E. 25.

27. Spencer v. Scovil [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1016. An attempted disposition over of any property not disposed of by the wife after a devise of all property to her "absolutely and forever" is ineffective, and the first devisee takes the fee [Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4646]. Roth v. Rauschenbusch, 173 Mo. 582, 73 S. W. 664. An absolute devise to the wife, provided that if she died without issue and without disposing of the property by will then over, passes a fee to the devisee, the directions as to the disposition of the property after her death being repugnant to the gift, and void. Channell v. Aldinger, 121 Iowa, 297, 96 N. W. 781. Testator devised his estate to wife and sister equally, they to pay a legacy out of their shares to another on his coming of age and if anything was left after both wife and sister died it was to go to such legatee. Held, as long as either wife or sister lived, the legatee was confined to the specified legacy, and that the provision as to the remainder would be rejected. Mersereau v. Camp, 86 N. Y. Supp. 568. A will providing "I give my brother and sister all I possess for their support, to be used in no other way" gives an absolute equitable estate, and a further provision if there was anything left it was to go to certain persons was void for repugnancy and uncertainty. Brown's Guardian v. Strother's Adm'r [Va.] 47 S. E. 236.

28. Subsequent provision that if the devisee marries again the estate was to be divided between the devisee and testator's brothers. Becker v. Becker [Ill.] 69 N. E. 19. Under a devise to one and her heirs forever, with the provision that if she died before her son, one-half of such property, "as it may then be," was to go to him and his heirs forever, the first taker has an absolute interest in all the estate, both real and personal, subject to a restriction against devising more than half of it away from her son. Bailey v. Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. [Pa.] 57 Atl. 58. A devise of the residue to have the use and control of the same, with a right to use so much as the devisee pleases, "and if there is anything left at her decease it is my request that she give" a parsonage to a certain church and one-half of the residue to testator's heirs, gives the devisee an estate in fee in the whole property, with the right to will the half of the residue left after making the bequests requested, to whomsoever she wishes. Brown v. Eastman [N. H.] 57 Atl. 96. An absolute devise of land "but the same to be a home for any of my children that may desire to live there" creates no estate or trust to the use of the children nor any limitation in the estate vested in the devisee. Le Sage v. Le Sage, 52 W. Va. 323.

Retroactive legislation.—Interests referred to a state of laws existing at testator's death are not changed by subsequent legislation.[36]

(§ 5D) 4. Legacies, annuities, support, release of debts.—"Legacy" means money or personal property bequeathed,[37] and "bequeath" is a term by which a gift of personalty is made.[38]

It has been said that all legacies other than the residuum are either specific or general.[39]

A general legacy is one which does not necessitate delivering any particular thing or paying money out of any particular portion of the estate.[40]

A specific legacy or devise is a gift of some definite or specific thing.[41] Gifts given out of and measured by a particular fund are demonstrative legacies.[42]

as carried on by the executors without authority. In re McCollum, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 362.

34. DeKoven v. DeKoven, 205 Ill. 309, 68 N. E. 930.

35. It appearing that testator knew that the income from certain lands would be from a sale of timber and coal rights, the proceeds therefrom were held included in a gift of rents and income of real estate until sold. In re Fahnestock's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 63.

36. Under a devise by a testator to his wife of such property as she would be entitled to under the statutes of a certain named state as the same might provide at the date of his death, the wife takes as the statutes provided at the date of the testator's death, though changed between that date and the date of the execution of the will. In re Johnson's Estate [Minn.] 99 N. W. 212.

37. In re Campbell's Estate [Utah] 75 Pac. 851. May refer to realty. In re Stuart's Will, 115 Wis. 294, 91 N. W. 688. Word "legacies" in a clause directing executors to pay inheritance taxes imposed on any legacies theretofore made, held to include bequests of a trust fund over which testator had power of appointment by will. Isham v. New York Ass'n for Improving Condition of Poor, 78 App Div. [N. Y.] 396. Provision for payment of mother's debts out of estate held a legacy. Ledger v. Canfield, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 596.

38. In re Campbell's Estate [Utah] 75 Pac. 851.

39. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. This definition seems to class demonstrative legacies as a species of general legacy.

40. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. A residuary bequest general, though particular articles are enumerated therein. Id. Gifts of stated sums of money without specifying any distinctive money in contradistinction of any other money of like amount. Id. A gift of one-third of the balance of a certain fund, where the particular fund is not in existence in a particular place and in a defined form, is not a specific legacy. In re Warner's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 432. A legacy of a number of shares of stock in a named corporation without any other specific description. In re Lyle, 85 N. Y. Supp. 290. Particularly when the number given is greater than the number owned by testator at the time of his death and at the time when the will was made. The residuary clause giving all the rest, residue and remainder of the estate, the executor could make up the deficit in stock by purchase. Slade v. Talbot, 182 Mass. 256, 65 N. E. 374. A legacy of shares of stock given generally and without any indication that testator intended to bequeath particular stock held by him at the date of making the will or existing as part of the estate, is general, and if the shares are not in testator's possession at the time of his death, the gift is considered a direction to purchase the securities for the legatee with his general estate. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318. If the legacies are general, but testator directs that the executor shall not purchase the stock if it is not in the estate at the time of his death, then he expressly prevents the legacy from operating as, or being equivalent to, a direction to purchase, or to a general legacy of the amount necessary to purchase. Id. A gift of the remainder of a particular fund after payment therefrom of specific legacies is not specific. In re Barrett's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 74.

41. May be income of specified piece of property. Uncertainty of amount is immaterial. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Is a gift of a specific part of testator's estate, identified and distinguished from all other things of the same kind, and which can only be satisfied by the delivery of the particular thing. A bequest "also all my bank stock and effects in the bank of * * * valued at $6,300" is a specific legacy, though contained in a residuary clause. Dauel v. Arnold, 201 Ill. 570, 66 N. E. 846. It is specific, though contained in the residuary clause, if the specific things are so enumerated as to distinguish them from the residue, as by the use of such words as "together with," "as well as," "and also," and the like. Id. Is something distinguished from the rest of the testator's estate; it is sufficient if it can be distinguished at the time of his death. In re Campbell's Estate [Utah] 75 Pac. 851. Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2802, a phrase "Property herein specifically bequeathed" did not apply to proceeds of a sale of a mine which testator sold before his death, but was not paid until afterward. Id. Gift of "any stock" in a certain bank held specific. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. A gift of 82 shares of stock in a named corporation "whereof fifty shares are now pledged as collateral security" is a specific legacy. In re Lyle, 85 N.

In deciding whether a legacy is general or special the whole will must be considered.[43] The law does not favor specific legacies.[44]

Advancements,[45] strictly speaking, are confined to cases of intestacy, but they may exist, though a will is subsequently made by the person making them, and in such case the manner in which such charges are to be considered depends upon the terms of the will. An agreement in regard to advancements may be considered in determining testator's intention in that particular.[46] If the will does not refer to advancements, the persons to whom they were made need not account for them.[47]

Y. Supp. 290. A legacy of promissory notes is specific, subject to reduction by payments made prior to the death of testatrix. Legatees receive them in condition in which they are when gift takes effect. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Where a will provides that the trustee shall sell the homestead and invest the proceeds for the benefit of testatrix's son, and after his death pay the principal to ulterior donees, the bequest is specific. Id. Also where trustee is to pay over income from a certain farm to son, or, in lieu thereof, allow him to live thereon. Id. A bequest of 60 shares of stock of a certain named bank, in a single clause of a will, standing alone, is specific. Waters v. Hatch [Mo.] 79 S. W. 916. After providing for certain legacies from proceeds of an insurance policy, a will gave a son the "balance, $100." The policy brought more than its face and there was an excess after all legacies were paid. Held, the son was not entitled to the excess, the legacy being specific. Id. If the securities specified are the things which are intended to be given, and are the only source for the payment of the legacy, then it is specific, and if the security is disposed of or extinguished, the rule of ademption applies and the legacy is gone. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318. Will bequeathed specified number of shares of stock in named corporations. When will was made testator owned enough of the shares described to satisfy the legacies, but at his death did not. The will provided that if testator should not have all the stocks mentioned, the trustee should not be required to supply them, but should only take such as he might leave. Held that the bequests were specific, and failed in so far as they could not be satisfied by stocks of the specified kind owned by testator when he died. Id. A bequest to a legatee of all claims held by the testator against his father and all his interest in the father's estate is specific. Rogers v. Rogers [S. C.] 45 S. E. 176.

42. Direction to erect a monument to be paid for out of "the four thousand dollars advance which I made from the sale of my property" to C., held demonstrative legacy. Fund upon which they are charged first applied to their extinguishment, and the balance classed with general legacies. In re Warner's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 432. In a bequest of bonds or securities, if it appears that they are intended merely as the primary source for the payment of a legacy of money, which is to be paid at all events, the legacy is demonstrative, and on failure of the primary source of payment, is payable out of the general estate. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318.

43. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318. Estimation by testator of the value of the securities in money for the purpose of fixing the amount of the legacy is considered as an indication that the legacy is specific. Id.

44. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Where stocks, bonds and other securities are disposed of by will, which does not designate them as composing a part of the estate, and the legacy may be satisfied by delivering any securities of the kind and value or amount specified, it will if no contrary intent appears, generally be construed as a general legacy, though testator owned securities of the kind specified and corresponding exactly to the number of shares or amount bequeathed. Legacy of 230 shares of stock in a certain company held specific, though not referred to as "my" stock. Id. Clear intention must appear to make legacy specific. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318.

45. See generally, Estates of Decedents, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1129. Testatrix made an advancement to her son, taking a note payable out of his interest in her estate. In her will she set out the amounts to be treated as advancements to her children without referring to the note, and providing explicitly for an equal distribution of her estate, "subject to the advancements heretofore mentioned." Held to show an intent to cancel the note as an advancement, and that the estate should be distributed in accordance with the terms of the will without regard to it. In re McKibbin's Estate, 207 Pa. 1; Appeal of Real Estate Trust Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 62. A will provided that no charge for advancements was made unless a memorandum to such effect was found. Held, a note taken by testator from son-in-law, and a memorandum charging it to maker's wife, was a receipt for an advancement, not an obligation. Strode v. Beall [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1019. A will provided that children's shares should not be subject to debts which they had contracted or might contract, and that the testator desired equality among the children. Two months after making the will, testator gave a legatee $4,100 and took notes therefor. Held, the sum was an advancement. In re Neel's Estate, 207 Pa. 443. Will providing that property should descend according to statutes of distribution and expressly revoking all former wills, in some of which question of advancements had been referred to, held not to require advancements to be deducted from shares of beneficiaries. Justis v. Justis [Md.] 57 Atl. 28. Words "sums of money," referring to advancements, held to include conveyances of property. Vreeland v. Vreeland [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 1089.

46. Vreeland v. Vreeland [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 1089. A will directed that sums of money which testator had theretofore advanced to his children should be considered

A legacy to a debtor does not operate as a release or extinguishment of the debt, unless it clearly appears that testator so intended.[48] A provision that a trustee should pay an obligation of testatrix's son, for which she had become liable as surety, provided that he received the stock held by the obligee as collateral held, under the circumstances, to show an intent that the estate was to be subrogated to the son's rights in the stock, and that the debt should be paid by sale of the stock.[49]

Cumulative.—Legacies given by different instruments will be regarded as cumulative, in the absence of anything signifying a different intention,[50] but where a person is mentioned in one instance as the recipient of a specific sum and also named as one of a class he takes both.[51] A like intent may be found from the varying nature and purposes of two gifts.[52]

The repetition of a clause charging an annuity on property will be disregarded where the whole will shows an intention to create one only.[53]

Annuities[54] to be paid out of funds to be reserved from the testator's personal estate during the life of the annuitants and on the death thereof to dispose of the principal fund as residuary estate are general annuities.[55]

An annuity which is a charge on the annual income of an estate is payable at the end of each year.[56] A testamentary provision requiring an annuity to be paid out of the rents and profits of a designated piece of land, after the payment of taxes, insurance and repairs, does not authorize any deficiency to be made up out of the balance of the estate or by the mortgage or sale of such property, unless a contrary intention appears from the whole will.[57] Annuities for a term[58] are not extended because of conditions differing from those contemplated by testator.

Support.—Where the beneficiary is given a right to use so much of the property as may be necessary for his comfort or support, he is sole judge as to the amount which may be necessary,[59] but he can use it only for the designated purposes.[60] A provision authorizing a sale "should circumstances or their necessities as advancements and deducted from their shares. Held, that the will was made with reference to agreements in regard to advancements, and that the share of each child should be charged with the value of the property received by him in pursuance of such agreements. Vreeland v. Vreeland [N. J. Eq.]. 56 Atl. 1089.

47. Failure to refer to them shows intent to ignore them. Vreeland v. Vreeland [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 1089.

48. Extrinsic evidence admissible to show intent. Sharp v. Wightman [Pa.] 54 Atl. 888.

49. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1.

50. Fact that language in codicil is copied from that of will may indicate intention to substitute legacies. Codicil held, under the circumstances, to have been intended as substitutional. Gould v. Chamberlain, 184 Mass. 115, 68 N. E. 39.

57. No express provision in will and no such intent can be gathered. Hopkins v. Remy, 64 N. J. Eq. 12.

58. A will provided for the payment of certain annuities "until such time, not exceeding five years from my decease, as the trustee shall deem it for the best interest of all to make final settlement," a subsequent will provided that final settlement should be made within five years. Owing to certain extraneous conditions the estate could not be closed within such time and it was extended by the probate court. Held, the annuities ceased at end of five years. Houghteling v. Stockbridge [Mich.] 99 N. W. 759.

59. Under a devise of use of property for life and any part of "the principal that may be needed for his comfort," the beneficiary is sole judge as to what amount of the principal is necessary for his support and comfort. In re Parsons, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 126. See also Poppy v. Walker [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 825.

60. A will provided that a wife should have the income and as much of the principal of testator's estate as she might deem proper for her support and that of her son, and that at her death the residue was to go to certain trustees to use the income and as much of the principal as they deemed necessary for the son's support, and that at his death the residue should go absolutely to the trustees. Held, the wife took only the

(§ 5D) 5. Vesting and perpetuities.[63]—The law favors the early vesting of estates.[64] Hence, the interest will, if possible, be deemed vested in the first instance,[65] and if not, then at the earliest possible moment,[66] unless the language of the will clearly shows a different intention,[67] and devises and bequests will be regarded as vested rather than lapsed, if possible.[68] A vesting will be favored in order to avoid a disinheritance.[69] If the event which is to work a substitution has taken place, the estate vests at testator's death.[70]

When there is a devise to one, remainder over direct to others, the presumption is that testator intended to create vested remainders, nothing appearing in the will to the contrary.[71] Where the persons or the class who are to take in re-

A devise of property to one upon the condition that it shall not be sold, assigned or transferred and upon the devisee's death the amount remaining to be paid to a designated person, held devisee entitled to use not only the income, but the principal. 65. The law favors the vesting of estates, and hence estates will be regarded as vested rather than contingent unless it is manifest that a contrary result was intended. Boatman v. Boatman, 198 Ill. 414, 65 N. E. 81. Testator will be presumed to have intended that the title to estates devised should vest at his death, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intent. Callison v. Morris [Iowa] 98 N. W. 780. Where a will provided for the payment of legacies, but contained no words of gift or devise, only a direction to pay on the sale of property after certain stated times, held, construing the whole will, that the legatees took a vested interest in their undistributed shares upon the testator's death. McLaughlin v. Penney, 65 Kan. 523, 70 Pac. 341. A devise in remainder to one, or in case of his death to his issue, or, in default thereof, to his heirs, vests an absolute title in the remainderman on the death of testator, subject only to the preceding life estate. Callison v. Morris [Iowa] 98 N. W. 780.

66. At earliest possible moment. Where property is devised to executors in trust until the first of two designated persons arrive at the age of 21 years, or failing to arrive at that age until the death of the survivor, when the property was to go to the testator's children, held, the children took a vested remainder subject to be divested by death during the minority of the survivor of two designated parties. Cook v. Straiton, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 206.

67. Does not apply where language clearly shows different intention, which can be legally carried into effect. In re Albiston's Estate, 117 Wis. 272, 94 N. W. 169. 69. And which will avoid the disinheritance of the remainderman who happens to die before the termination of the life estate. Devise to one to vest in fee upon the decease of a life tenant vests upon testator's death and goes to devisee's heirs on his death before life tenant's. Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 66 N. E. 975, 1101.

70. Under a devise of property for life with remainder to testator's lawful heirs, with a provision that children of deceased heirs should inherit the proportion that their parents would have had if living, the children of a child who died before the execution of the will take a vested interest by original gift, on testator's death. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393.

71. In re Moran's Will [Wis.] 96 N. W. 367. A party giving a life estate in all his property, with remainder to another person, the title vests absolutely in the remainderman at the death of the testator, subject of course to the life estate. Where, by the will, title was to vest in the person who at the life tenant's death was the treasurer of the association for the benefit of the latter, held vested in the one who was treasurer at the time of the testator's death. Murray v. Miller, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 414. The validity of such a remainder depends for one thing upon the power of the devisee to take at the date of the testator's death. Id. A residuary estate devised for life, with remainder to trustees, vests in the trustees on testator's death, subject to such life estate

Beardsley v. Bridgeport Protestant Orphan Asylum [Conn.] 57 Atl. 165. A devise in trust for four sons provided that on the death of any, one-fourth of the principal should within one year be divided among his heirs. Such heirs took vested remainders which vested in enjoyment within one year from the death of the life beneficiary and no contingent remainder was created. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. S. 719. A devise to two persons as trustees, the income of designated portions of the estate to be paid to designated persons until the death of both of the trustees, when each portion was to vest absolutely in the person who had received the income therefrom, held, each beneficiary took a vested interest in the principal upon the death of the testator. Ogden v. Ogden, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 473. A devise in trust, the income to be paid to three and on death of either to the survivors, and on death of two, the trust to cease and the estate to go to the survivor, creates a contingent remainder. Thall v. Dreyfus, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 569. A devise for life with remainder over to children, their heirs and assigns and in case of death of a child before termination of the life estate, to his heirs, gives such children a vested remainder in fee at testator's death. Kinkead v. Ryan [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 730.

72. As to certain described persons, as children or their descendants and not to children and their heirs generally. In re Melcher, 24 R. I. 575; Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 101 Va. 537. A devise to testator's wife for life and upon her decease "the property shall belong to my children, the descendants of any deceased child to take the share their parent would have taken if living, and if no descendants of mine shall survive, then the property shall belong and be delivered" to certain residuary legatees, gives the children contingent remainders only, which do not vest until the death of the life tenant. Child dying without issue before that time has no interest which he can convey. Estate was not to go to heirs, but to certain described persons whose existence at the death of the life tenant was uncertain. In re Melcher, 24 R. I. 575. Under a devise to one for life, and at his decease to his issue, should he leave issue, the children of the life tenant before his death take contingent interests only. Contingent on child surviving life tenant. Gardiner v. Savage, 182 Mass. 521, 65 N. E. 857. By will of a deceased partner, his executors were to divide the estate into three shares and pay the income of one share to the widow for life, the principal at her death to go to the children and heirs of deceased children. A deed by the heirs, widow and executors of partnership realty did not convey a fee because it could not dispose of future rights of issue of the children in whom interests might vest at the death of the widow after the death of the parent during her lifetime. Huber v. Case, 87 N. Y. S. 663. A will provided that after the death of all annuitants receiving annuities from the income of a fund, such fund should go to the youngest of the issue of one Adams, whose descent should be wholly in the male line and in default to certain others. Held, that a person answering the description, living at the death of testator, did not have a vested interest, as the fund would go to the person answering the description at the death of the last annuitant. Cronan v. Adams [Mass.] 70 N. E. 423. Under a devise of a life estate with remainder over to "her children then living and their descendants," only children or their descendants living at the time of the death of the life tenant would take in remainder. Nichols v. Guthrie, 109 Tenn. 535, 73 S. W. 107. In such case, the remainder vests in the children as a class on the death of testator, and in them individually only on death of the life tenant, and then on the contingency of their being in existence at the time. Id. A devise in remainder to a class and in case of death of any without leaving issue, his share to go to the survivors, vests and opens to let in after born. Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga. 893. A will provided that the surviving widow should have power to divide testator's property among the children, that if she died without having remarried, it was to be divided equally, and if any child to whom an advancement had been made died without issue, the property advanced should revert to the others. Held, this reverter must take place at time of death of wife, and where a son died without issue, after the death of the wife, there was no reverter. Lockhart v. Covington, 132 N. C. 469. Where a testatrix left a life estate to one son, remainder to be divided among her six sons which included him, he took a vested one-sixth interest in the remainder which he could devise. Robinson v. Mitchell [Md.] 57 Atl. 625. Testator devised land to each of his daughters, "for and during her natural life, and at her death the same to be divided among her children then living, in fee simple, to share equally." A subsequent clause provided that in case either of his daughters died leaving no children, the lands given her should go to the children of the surviving daughter or daughters. Held, that the will vests a life estate in each daughter and a fee in her children, if she has any at her death, and if not, the fee goes to the children of her sister or sisters. Thompson v. Jamison, 31 Ind. App. 396, 68 N. E. 176.

73. A provision that "if my wife and myself should perish at sea" makes a subsequent provision for the wife in case she survived contingent upon the happening of the event. Oetjen v. Oetjen, 115 Ga. 1004. A devise providing that if the life tenant die without children then the property to go to her heirs, held a contingent remainder and that the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. Hauser v. Craft [N. C.] 46 S. E. 756. Under a devise to the wife for life with a provision that at her death the property should be sold and the proceeds divided among testator's children, and that, under certain circumstances, the wife might disinherit any child, and that in case any child died his issue should stand in his place, held, that the issue of a child took a contingent remainder interest only, during the lifetime of his parent. Hermann v. Parsons [Ky.] 78 S. W. 125. A will gave the widow the sole use of the property during her life, unless she remarried, in which case it was to be divided between her and her children, or the survivors of them, their heirs and legal rep-

the shares which they shall have,[74] are uncertain, there is a contingency to which vesting is postponed. Words of contingency are so referred in time as to favor vesting[75] and may be so read that remainders will accelerate.[76] A provision giving one an income until the happening of a certain contingency gives him a vested interest therein until such event occurs.[77] The ordinary rules of real property do not apply if there is an equitable conversion.[78]

Such words of time as "after,"[79] "upon,"[80] or "at" the death of[81] and such resentatives, and on her death, unmarried, it was to be divided between the children or the survivors of them. Held, that the remainders were contingent. Thompson v. Adams, 205 Ill. 552, 69 N. E. 1. A devise for life should the devisee survive testator with remainder over is contingent on the survival of the devisee and both fail in case of nonsurvivor of the devisee. Life estate to a wife if she survived him, remainder to a nephew. Oetjen v. Diemmer, 115 Ga. 1005. A will provided that in case of sale of a life estate one-third of the proceeds was to go to a trust fund for another beneficiary. Held, the beneficiary's interest was contingent on the sale, and a mortgage was not a sale under the power. Spencer v. Kimball [Me.] 57 Atl. 793. The money loaned upon the mortgage was not the proceeds of a sale to which the terms of the will apply. Id. The trust did not attach to the real estate. Id. A devise to a son's wife of the use of certain property, the enjoyment of which was to be continued in the son for life, in case he survived her, and the residue after such uses terminated to the son's heirs at law, held, that the remainder to the son's heirs was not contingent on the son surviving his wife, but was an independent, absolute gift. Buck v. Lincoln [Conn.] 56 Atl. 522. A daughter devised to her mother certain property in case she [the mother] did not get enough from another source to supply her needs. What was left of such property, to go to her husband. Her mother never used it. Held, the contingency never having happened, the provision never took effect, and the property went to the husband. Gooch v. French, 52 W. Va. 30.

74. A devise to trustees to pay testator's debts and for the support of his wife and children, the heirs of any deceased child to receive his parent's share of such income, with a provision that at the wife's death the property should be divided into equal shares, and the children or the heirs of any deceased child, beginning with the youngest, should each choose one of them, held to give a child a contingent interest only. In re Raleigh's Estate, 206 Pa. 451.

75. When a devise or bequest over to a third person is made contingent upon the death of the first taker, the death referred to is generally held to be death in the lifetime of the testator. When devise is of a remainder, question enlarged by inquiry whether death during lifetime of testator is referred to or death before remainder falls in. Canfield v. Canfield, 55 C. C. A. 169. A will after giving a number of specific legacies provided that the residue should be converted into money and divided among such legatees in proportion to their legacies. A codicil gave one of the legatees the use of a house for life, "at her decease said house shall fall into the rest and residue of my estate and be disposed of as is by my said will provided for the disposal of said rest and residue." Held, that the remainder, after the life estate in the house vested at testator's death, so that the life tenant was one of the remaindermen. Cushman v. Arnold [Mass.] 70 N. E. 43.

76. Will devised a life estate to the wife so long as she remained his widow and at her death to go to his children. In case of her marriage, a sale was directed and a sum of money to be paid the widow, the balance to go to the children. Held, that children took a vested estate at testator's death under Wis. Rev. St. 1878, § 2037, providing for vesting where there is a person in being having immediate right to possession on termination of preceding estate. Smith v. Smith, 116 Wis. 570, 93 N. W. 452.

77. Testator gave his wife the net income of his estate until such time as the executor should pay her a certain sum. A subsequent clause directed the executor to rent testator's farm for five years, unless, during that period, he could sell it for a certain sum, and that the farm should then be sold and the bequests provided for paid. Held, that the wife took a vested interest in all the rents of the farm, which passed to her heirs on her death before receiving such sum. Morris v. Hall, 102 Mo. App. 449, 76 S. W. 725.

78. A gift for life and on termination the remainder to be divided into "two equal parts," one share to go to one set of beneficiaries and the other to another set, provides for a conversion of the realty, and hence Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2037, relating to future, vested, and contingent estates in realty does not apply. In re Albiston's Estate, 117 Wis. 272, 94 N. W. 169.

79. A gift to the wife for life, with remainder "after her decease" to a brother and sister, "who shall then be living, jointly," creates a remainder contingent on their surviving the life tenant. In re Walker's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 680. Under a bequest over "from and immediately after * * * decease" of the life tenant to children share and share alike and their descendants, the latter take the share of their ancestors by substitution as of the date of the life tenant's decease. Weymann v. Weymann, 81 N. Y. S. 959. In New Jersey, it is held that under a devise to the wife for her life and after her death to testator's children, each child takes a vested remainder in fee to his proportionate share, subject to be divested by his death before his mother's. Result not affected by provision that in case any child dies before his mother, his share is to go to his heirs on his mother's death. Can convey his interest. Kinkead v. Ryan [N. J. Eq.] 53 Atl. 1053.

80. In Rhode Island, it is held that the words "upon the decease" in a provision that the property shall go to children upon the decease of the life tenant postpones the vesting of the remainders until that time.

words as "if living,"[82] and "then," do or do not postpone vesting, according to the sense and connection in which they are used.[83]

Limitations over on death, failure of issue, etc., of the precedent tenant, are not usually construed to make his estate contingent.[84] Limitations on lives take effect after all the lives.[85] When the death of the first taker is coupled with circumstances which may or may not take place, such as death under age or without children, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect upon death under the circumstances indicated, whether before or after the death of the testator.[86]

Where the words of a gift are in praesenti and the time of enjoyment is only postponed, the legacy vests immediately on the death of the testator.[87] The ab-

"Upon" or "on" the death of, means at the time of and does not imply an estate before death. In re Melcher, 24 R. I. 575.

In New York, a devise "to vest in fee upon the decease of my said wife, to have and to hold forever," vests on the death of the testator subject to the life estate and upon death of the devisee before that of the life tenant passed to his heirs at law subject to the life estate. Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 66 N. E. 975, 1101.

81. In New York, a devise over "at" the death of the life tenant vests on the death of the testator, the word "at" merely designated the time of enjoyment. Manhattan Real Estate & Bldg. Ass'n v. Cudlipp, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 532.

82. In Rhode Island, it is held that the words "if living" in a provision that the descendants of children at the termination of a particular estate should take the share their parents, if living, would have taken, strongly implies that the parents were to take nothing unless living at the time specified, and hence that their interests are contingent. In re Melcher, 24 R. I. 575.

83. Where will directed that property should be held in trust until such time as trustees should deem it most expedient to sell it, and after such sale it should be divided and a certain share should then be given to a daughter and her heirs forever, her interest vested at testator's decease. Bates v. Spooner [Conn.] 54 Atl. 305. A will provided that legal title of lands devised should not vest until death of testatrix's husband who was to have the income for life, and it was then to be applied to the payment of legacies. Held, the devisees had no interest in the income until the legacies had been paid. Henry v. Henderson [Miss.] 33 So. 960. They were entitled to income from date of payment of the legacies. Id.

84. A devise to testator's wife and after her death to his children, providing that, in case any child died without issue, his share should be divided among the others, held to have given a child a vested interest and that, upon his death before his mother, leaving issue, his share, on the death of his mother, descended to his executor. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 189. A devise to one providing that in the event of his dying without issue, then the estate was to be divided among others vests the fee in the first taker, subject to be defeated in case of death at any time without issue. Smith v. Ballard, 25 Ky. L. R. 1290, 77 S. W. 714. Generally, a testator does not assume that legatees will not survive him, but intends, in case they do not, to make provision for the new state of affairs by a new will or codicil. Bradsby v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 239, 66 N. E. 1088. Under a devise for life with remainder over to his children, except that if any of the children die before the termination of the life estate, leaving issue, such issue to take the parent's share the children take a vested remainder with contingent remainder in the grandchildren. Rudd v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2141, 73 S. W. 759. A devise to a daughter for life, and upon her death to her issue, and in case there be no issue, her surviving, then to others, gives the child of the life tenant a vested remainder, subject however to be divested by the death of such child, leaving issue, during the life of the life tenant. Estate would then vest in issue of such child under New Jersey statutes (1 Gen. St. p. 1195, § 10). Lamprey v. Whitehead [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 803.

85. A devise of property to two persons and to the survivor of them for life, and after their death to another for life with remainder to other legatees, held, the half that went to the survivor of the first two legatees as such did not vest in the third life tenant, but after the death of the survivor of the first two vested in the remaindermen. In re Conger's Will, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 493.

86. According to the ordinary and general meaning of the words. Bradsby v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 239, 66 N. E. 1088. A devise to son, "but if he should die leaving no heirs, then the said devised property to descend to" others, was not intended to apply only to death of devisee before that of testator, but the son took a defeasible fee, and on his death without children, the fee vested in the others. Id.

87. Burroughs v. Jamieson, 62 N. J. Eq. 651. Testator gave two legacies, one to T. and one to S., payable after the death of his wife, with provision that if S. died before the widow, her legacy was to pass to T. and that if both should so die, then the legacy should become a part of the residue. Held, that the legacy to T. was not divested by his death before the widow, but could only be divested by the death of both S. and T. before the widow. Id. Devise in trust for use and benefit of testator's brother, the trustee to control and manage the property and to turn it over to the beneficiary when he became of age, should the trustee think best and if not, then to continue to manage it until such time as he should sence of such words may raise a contrary implication.[88] Where the intention in favor of a charity is absolute and the gift and constitution of the trust are immediate, the gift is vested and not contingent, notwithstanding the fact that the form of the charity or the manner of its administration is dependent upon a future uncertainty.[89] Where a division is to be made between members of a class after the expiration of the particular estate, the presumption of an intention that the estates shall vest on testator's death is displaced by a presumption that testator intended to create contingent remainders.[90] Where the only gift of a fund is contained in a direction to executors to pay and divide at a future time, the vesting is postponed until the time for payment shall have arrived.[91]

Contingencies affecting only the amount or value of the estate,[92] or the time of payment of income,[93] or the postponement of enjoyment merely for the purpose of letting in a particular estate,[94] or a provision that in case of a remainderman's death his share shall go to his heirs,[95] or the fact that the remainder is referred to as a "reversionary interest,"[96] or the fact that the tenants of the preceding particular estate are given a power of sale for purposes of reinvestment, do not postpone the vesting of the remainders.[97]

An interest may vest with a restraint on power to alienate,[98] or subject to be deem it prudent to put it under control of the beneficiary. No provision was made for the disposition of the property in case it was not turned over to the beneficiary. Held, to be testator's intention to vest estate in beneficiary, subject to right of trustee to postpone its enjoyment, and that property which had not been turned over to him vested in his heirs at his death and did not revert. Canfield v. Canfield, 55 C. C. A. 169.

88. Where a will provided for the payment of legacies, but contained no words of gift or devise, only a direction to pay on the sale of property after certain stated times, held, construing the whole will, that upon the testator's death the legatees acquired a vested interest in their undistributed shares. McLaughlin v. Penney, 65 Kan. 523, 70 Pac. 341.

89. Bequest in trust to transfer to corporation not to be created for twenty-five years. Brigham v. Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, 126 Fed. 796.

90. In re Moran's Will [Wis.] 96 N. W. 367. Testator devised property in trust to pay income and an annuity to a nephew for life, remainder to his children with share of deceased child if no issue to the survivors. Held, the distribution was to a class which could not be determined until the death of the nephew. In re Gibson's Estate, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1077. The nephew could not terminate the trust by procuring conveyances from his children. Id. A devise in remainder to several and in case of death of any without issue, to the survivors of the class, creates no estate in the issue of one dying before the life tenant. Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga 893. A devise to children and grandchildren and to the survivors, coupled with a direction that the realty be kept together until the youngest grandchild shall have arrived at majority, when the whole should be divided, unless the executor should think proper to make earlier distribution, does not vest an estate in fee in the heirs prior to grandchild's arrival at majority. Garman v. Hawley [Mich.] 93 N. W. 871.

91. Does not apply if postponement to let in an intermediate estate. Kundhardt v. Bradish, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 103. Provision that in case of death of any remainderman "the share which would have gone" to him shall be equally divided between his children shows an intent on the part of the testator that the estate in remainder was not to vest until termination of the life estate. In re Albiston's Estate, 117 Wis. 272, 94 N. W. 169.

92. The vesting of estates is not to be deferred by contingencies which affect only the amount or value. Bates v. Spooner [Conn.] 54 Atl. 305.

93. A gift of the income for life is not rendered inalienable by a provision that the executors pay "at such times and in such sums" as they might deem judicious. Endicott v. University of Virginia, 182 Mass. 156, 65 N. E. 37.

94. Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180; Kundhardt v. Bradish, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 103.

95. A provision that in case of a remainderman's death his share shall go to his heirs does not operate to postpone the vesting of his interest. Kinkead v. Ryan [N. J. Eq.] 53 Atl. 1053.

96. A devise of realty for life with "reversionary interest" to be divided equally between daughters gives the latter a vested remainder with enjoyment postponed. Burton v. Provost [Vt.] 54 Atl. 189.

97. A devise in trust for life with remainder over vests in the remaindermen on testator's death, though the trustees are given power of sale for reinvestment purposes. Will construed and held that grandson took only life interest with remainder over to testator's children. Cruikshank v. Cruikshank, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 401.

98. A will providing that the realty should not be sold until the youngest child is 21 years of age and the title not to vest until that time, and then two-thirds in fee to the children, one-third to the wife for life with remainder to the children, held to vest the fee in the children at testator's death and to merely suspend power of alienation until divested,[99] or subject to a trust,[1] or subject to a preceding power.[2] Legal title vests immediately in the heirs where the life tenant takes only an equity, and the remainder thereafter is void.[3] youngest child reaches 21 years of age. Halstead v. Coen, 31 Ind. App. 302, 67 N. E. 957.

99. A devise to the testator's children to be held in trust by their guardian until the youngest child should arrive at the age of 21 years, held, the property vested in the children a fee simple upon the youngest arriving at the designated age, and this estate is not limited by a subsequent clause providing for the distribution of the estate in case all the children died without issue. Kephart v. Hieatt [Ky.] 78 S. W. 425. Will construed and title held to have vested in nephews and nieces at death of testator, subject to life estate of widow, the title of each subject to be divested by his death without issue before that of the life tenant, in which case it went to the survivors. Curtis v. Waldron, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351. Under a devise for life with remainder over to life tenant's child or children, if any, and if not, then to brothers and sisters, the brothers and sisters take a vested remainder if the life tenant is childless on testator's death, subject to be divested by the birth of a child to said life tenant, who should survive him. Boatman v. Boatman, 198 Ill. 414, 65 N. E. 81. A devise in trust to be conveyed to a corporation for the purpose of maintaining a public library, with reversion when the land should no longer be used for such purposes, vests fee in the corporation and no trust is created. Danforth v. Oshkosh, 119 Wis. 262, 97 N. W. 258. Testatrix devised one-half of her estate to one adopted grandchild, the other half was to go to the children of a 13 year-old grandchild, should she have any, and if not, this half was also to go to the first mentioned. Held, the first mentioned took one-half absolutely and the other half subject to be divested by the other having a child. In re Maloney, 85 N. Y. Supp. 77.

1. As a bequest to one "when he shall arrive at the age of 26 years * * * to be loaned * * * and interest accruing to be paid" to the legatee. Harris v. Cook, 98 Mo. App. 38, 71 S. W. 1126. A bequest of the income of certain property until the legatee's son reaches the age of twenty-one years, the principal then to go to the son, does not terminate on the death of the legatee before the expiration of the term, but the son takes a vested interest in remainder to take effect at the expiration of such particular estate for years. Given income until son reaches 21. Frazer v. Frazer, 24 Ky. L. R. 2517, 74 S. W. 259. A devise of income in trust for life with principal and surplus over in equal shares to others creates a vested interest in the latter at the time of the death of the testator. Kunhardt v. Bradish, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 103. Under a bequest in trust for life with remainder over to testator's next of kin at the time of distribution, held the estate vested in the latter on death of the life tenant and not at the time of actual distribution. In re Lee's Will, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 295. A testator bequeathed to a certain person a sum of money in trust, she to have the interest and at her death the principal to be divided among her children. Held to vest a life interest in the legacy in the trustee and a right to the legacy itself in the children at her death, the children's interest being vested subject to open and let in after-born children. In re Vreeland's Estate [N. J. Prerog.] 57 Atl. 903. Testator gave his property to trustees, directing them to pay the income in stated portions to his six children. He provided that at a certain time the trust should terminate and that the trustee should convey the principal of the estate to those entitled to income, "and in such conveyance give and bequeath said trust estate so held to said several parties, their heirs and assigns forever." Held, that the children took equitable remainders or cross remainders in fee of specified undivided portions of the property, which vested immediately on his decease, and upon termination of the trust would forthwith become entitled to the legal estate. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167. Will construed to determine the interest of children in a trust estate and the time when certain interests vested absolutely in beneficiaries. Lewisohn v. Henry, 87 N. Y. Supp. 325.

2. In re Weeter's Estate, 21 Pa. Super Ct. 241; Dana v. Dana [Mass.] 70 N. E. 49. Where a power enlarges a life estate, gifts over are contingent on nonexercise. In re Sturgis' Estate, 205 Pa. 436. Will giving remainder of estate of which testator might die seized to his wife for life, and providing that any property which he might thereafter acquire should also go to wife with absolute power of disposition, held to give absolute estate in all such property to wife at time of testator's death. In re Hardaker's Estate, 204 Pa. 181. A devise to the wife and on her death one-half of the property to be divided between her heirs and one-half between his heirs "in the manner in which she may decide" gives to the heirs of each a vested remainder subject to the exercise of a power of appointment by the widow as to the portion each would take. Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885.

3. If the will does not devise the realty or appoint any one to sell, but provides for a sale and the proceeds to be placed at interest for the wife's support for life, the wife does not take a life estate in the realty, but merely an equitable interest, and the remainder being void, the legal title vests immediately in testator's heirs at law, subject to be divested by a properly authorized sale. Baumeister v. Silver [Md.] 56 Atl. 825.

4. See Perpetuities, 2 Curr. Law, p. 1173.

5. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427. Provision not contrary to rule against perpetuities. Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742

A postponement or a suspension of the power of alienation for a definite period not dependent on life is void,[6] but a provision that the division is to be made within a certain time is not.[7] In New York and some other states, a provision directing accumulation of rents and profits of realty for the benefit of adults,[8] or for the payment of incumbrances, is void.[9] The fact that the use of the property is given for a fixed period does not violate the rule where the fee vests at once.[10] Where it is apparent that testator intended that a provision for his daughter in a codicil should be inalienable during her life, the rule that annuities do not suspend the power of alienation is inapplicable.[11] Provisions recently construed to determine remoteness of the time of vesting or of a period of suspension are collected below.[12] A prohibition of alienation of trust property except

Where a testator directs the carrying on of his business and after paying certain sums to his wife and children for support directs an accumulation of the surplus, he then gives his wife certain personal property and the homestead in lieu of dower, and directed that at the death of his wife and a certain daughter the business should be closed,—held, that on the death of the wife, the property given her descended to the children, and did not become a part of the working capital of the testator's estate. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405. The giving of an annuity to a daughter over and above other provisions of the will, and upon her death the sum of $300,000 to be divided among her children, held not a continuance of a trust provided for in the will, and hence not void as against the statute of perpetuities. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 519.

But see: In determining the validity of testamentary dispositions the will is to be construed without reference to the rule against perpetuities, and having thus arrived at the true construction of the will, the rule against perpetuities should then be applied to the ascertained objects of the testator's bounty. Graham v. Whitridge [Md.] 57 Atl. 609.

6. Devising property to executors in trust until the legatees, thirteen in number, should reach the age of 25 and if any died before that age, the deceased's share to be divided among the survivors, last provision held void as a suspension of alienation (Mendel v. Lewis, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 271); but a provision that the property shall not be divided until the youngest child shall arrive at twenty-five years of age creates a perpetuity. Ky. St. 1903, § 2360 (Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293). Provision that if no request for a termination of a trust be made at the end of 30 years from testator's decease, the trust shall be at an end, is void under the statute against perpetuities. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167. A devise of realty to trustees, whereby the power of alienation is suspended arbitrarily for three years is void under the statute of perpetuities, since it may extend beyond two lives. McGuire v. McGuire, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 63. So also as to personalty, under Laws 1897, c. 417. Id.

7. A provision that on the death of one of the beneficiaries, the executors within one year therefrom should divide the portion of the principal held for him among his heirs with accrued interest did not provide for an illegal accumulation. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. Supp. 719.

8. Laws 1896, c. 547, permits accumulations for minors only. McGuire v. McGuire, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 63.

9. A provision that the income of the trust estate be accumulated for the payment of mortgages thereon and the debts of testators during minority, and is void (1 N. Y. accumulation except for the benefit of minors during minority, and is void. (1 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 726, §§ 37, 38; Real Property Law [Laws 1896, c. 547] §§ 51, 76). Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358. A provision that trustees and executors should hold the property devised until they had extinguished all incumbrances thereon violates the rule against perpetuities. Dodsworth v. Dam, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 684. A limitation in a will providing that rents and profits of certain realty should create a sinking fund to extinguish mortgages thereon is void under New York statute relating to accumulations. Id. A trust to apply the income for the payment of mortgage liens on the trust property and the payment of testator's debts is void under the rule against perpetuities. Not limited by lives in being. Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358.

10. A devise of the use of certain land for a certain period, the land then to pass to the testator's son, held not to suspend power of alienation. Shaw v. English, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 169.

11. Herzog v. Title Guaranty & T. Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283.

12. Held too remote: Where the devise gave the property in trust to pay annuities for two lives, a codicil providing that the income of a certain sum be given a daughter, in case she, one of the annuitants, contracted a certain marriage, for her life, the principal to be divided between her children at her death, held to show an intent to create a future inalienable estate during the life of such daughter, and the vesting would not take place or the future executory limitation take effect until her death. Hence it is void. Herzog v. Title Guaranty & T. Co. [N. Y.] 69 N. E. 283. By a provision that the devisees shall not sell until they have been in possession 20 years. Call v. Shewmaker, 24 Ky. L. R. 686, 69 S. W. 749. A devise over to the heirs at law of a person then in being is void under the statute against perpetuities, since they cannot be ascertained until the death of such person, and might be other than his children. In Connecticut, 1877, by statute a devise to descendants of persons unborn at testa-for reinvestment purposes,[13] or a trust to keep possession and control of the property for the lives of the beneficiaries,[14] does not operate as an illegal restraint of alienation.

(§ 5D) 6. Possession and enjoyment accompany a present vested estate.[15] A devise made "payable" at a time in the future vests in possession then.[16] Where a vested legacy, not charged upon land, is given a minor, to be paid to him at his majority, and interest is payable thereon in the meantime, his personal representatives, if he die under age, are entitled to the immediate possession thereof,[17] but if no interest is payable thereon, they are not entitled to possession until such time as the child would have become of age had he lived.[18] The beneficiary takes possession if income for life means ownership.[19] A life tenant of money with power to impair principal is entitled to possession.[20]

tor's death was invalid. Buck v. Lincoln [Conn.] 56 Atl. 522. A trust fund created by will providing for payment of the interest to one "and his children so long as they live" is void under the rule against perpetuities, it not appearing that only children in esse at the time of testator's death were intended to share therein. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427. A devise for life then over to the life tenant's widow and children is not a perpetuity. Under Ky. St. § 2360. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293.

13, 14. Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742. A devise of land to trustees to be conveyed to the city for the purpose of building a public library thereon, with the provision that the conveyance should contain a limitation to the title that the same should cease and revert to the heirs of testatrix when the premises should no longer be used for library purposes, does not suspend the power of alienation longer than is allowed by statute, because if the limitation is void for repugnancy, the city takes the fee, and if a fee upon condition subsequent is vested in the city, either a reversion or remainder is created, which vests immediately in the heirs of testatrix. Danforth v. Oshkosh, 119 Wis. 262, 97 N. W. 258. A bequest in trust for the benefit of children and grandchildren of a testator's brother and sister, living at his death, does not unlawfully suspend the power of alienation. Denison v. Denison, 86 N. Y. Supp. 604. A direction that the estate should be divided into certain parts, a certain number of which should be held in trust for each of two sons during their lives, on the death of either his share to go to his children or their legal representatives, if any, and if not then one-half to go absolutely to a sister and the other to become a part of the trust in favor of the other brother, if living, and if dead, to go absolutely to his heirs, only postpones the vesting of the remotest of the remainders until the death of the surviving brother, and hence does not violate the rule against perpetuities. Bates v. Spooner [Conn.] 54 Atl. 305. A provision that the property be held in trust for the support of testator's children and the maintenance of any family which either of them might have until such time as the estate should be divided and distributed under the terms of the will does not create a trust which violates the rule against perpetuities, since the provision as to families of children naturally refers to the education during minority, and could not endure longer than 21 years and 9 months after the death of the survivor of the children. Id. A devise of part of one's property in trust to pay the income to testator's children for life, the share of the principal of a child dying without descendants to lapse into the testator's estate to be divided according to the will, held, such principal did not become immediately divisible among the surviving children, but remained part of the trust fund. And such trust fund does not violate the statute of perpetities. Loyd v. Loyd's Ex'r [Va.] 46 S. E. 687. Where a will gave property in trust to collect the rents and profits to pay them to a person during his life and on his death, or at expiration of 15 years, whichever occurred last, to sell the property and divide the proceeds, it was held that the limitation of 15 years was invalid as suspending the power of alienation, and hence was to be disregarded, thus sustaining the balance of the will. In re Murray, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 246. A bequest in trust for life, payable over to issue surviving the beneficiary until her youngest child shall have attained 21 years, the corpus then to be divided among such issue in equal shares, manifests an intention to provide for all surviving children of the beneficiary, and to make a future and not a present gift, and the estate will not vest until the time fixed for the trustees to divide the property. Hence both limitations are void as suspending power of alienation. N. Y. Laws 1897, c. 417, § 2, relating to suspension of ownership of personal property, applies, since there is an equitable conversion. Schlereth v. Schlereth, 173 N. Y. 444, 66 N. E. 130.

15. A will devising to a niece certain realty for life, fee to her issue, or if she died without issue other provision was made, vested in the niece and her heirs title to the property, subject to the conditions of the will, immediately on testator's death. The executor had no right to hold these premises, and doing so were liable to the niece for rents. Rooney v. Bodkin, 87 N. Y. Supp. 800.

16. A devise to certain persons "payable at the age of 25 years" held payable immediately to each devisee upon his arriving at the age of 25 years. Mendel v. Lewis, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 271.

17, 18. Savin v. Webb, 96 Md. 504.

19. Michigan Trust Co. v. Hertzig [Mich.] 95 N. W. 531. Not where income is given

(§ 5D) 7. Individual rights in gifts to two or more.—A devise to two or more, in the absence of an express declaration to the contrary, will be construed as creating a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy, unless it clearly and explicitly appears from the language employed that the testator understood the nature and incidents of the different estates, and intended to create a joint tenancy.[21]

Under a devise to several, they will, in the absence of words defining their proportionate shares, share alike.[22] The use of words of equality may control a repetition of one of the names.[23] The absence of any other disposal indicates that a "third" to three means to each of them.[24]

A bequest is not a gift to a class where, at the time of making it, the number of the donees is certain, and the share each is to receive is also certain, and in no way dependent for its amount upon the members who shall survive.[25] Where, in a devise, the individuals and the class are both named, in the absence of a contrary intention appearing from the will, the persons named take as individuals, not as a class.[26] A devise over "between" several will be interpreted to mean "among,"[27] and the word "between" following the verb "divide" denotes the individuals of the class subsequently named rather than the class itself.[28] A specification of the number of individuals negatives a gift to them as a class.[29]

as it accrues. Jewett v. Schmidt, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 502.

20. A devise directing that the proceeds of certain property be paid to a devisee she to have the use of the income and such of the principal as necessary for her support, the proceeds should be paid to such devisee unconditionally. Poppy v. Walker [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 825.

21. Under Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 1350, 686. In re Hittell's Estate, 141 Cal. 432, 75 Pac. 53. And on death of one his share passes to his heirs [Rev. St. Ky. 1899, § 4600] Lemmons v. Reynolds, 170 Mo. 227, 71 S. W. 135. Under N. Y. real property law, § 56 (Laws 1896, c. 547), no intention to make joint tenancy shown. Jones v. Hand, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 56. Under a devise over to the "children" of the life tenant, they take distributively as tenants in common, and not as a class. N. Y. Laws 1896, c. 547, § 156, makes such devisees tenants in common unless expressly declared to be joint tenants. Manhattan Real Estate & B. Ass'n v. Cudlipp, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 532.

Word "jointly" does not show an intent to create other than a tenancy in common. Under 1 Starr & C. St. 1896, p. 916, c. 30, par. 5, providing that such estates shall be deemed tenancies in common unless expressly declared to be joint tenancies. Mustain v. Gardner, 203 Ill. 284, 67 N. E. 779. Under a devise of the residue of the estate to three persons, the property to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, held that the devisees took distributively and not collectively, and that a share lapsing by reason of the death of one of the devisees before testator descended as intestate property, and did not go to the survivors. (Tenancy in common under 1 N. Y. R. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, p. 727 sec. 44). Langley v. Westchester Trust Co. 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 735. A provision that a remainder shall belong to a class "and their children" creates a tenancy in common. Children of a daughter living at death of the life tenant took an estate in common with their mother. Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga. 893. A will bequeathed one-fifth of certain stock to two grandsons of testatrix, to be held in trust for them by a trustee named, and provided that on the death of one before her death, the survivor should have the entire one-fifth. Held, under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 8136, providing that joint tenants of personalty should have the same rights of survivorship as tenants in common, unless the instrument expressly provided otherwise, the will did not create the right of survivorship in the grandsons, on the death of one of them occurring after the death of testatrix. Thieme v. Union Trust Co. [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 276.

22. Harris v. Keasby [N. J. Eq.] 53 A. 555.

23. A devise to several designated corporations, "as tenants in common, share and share alike," held to give an equal share to each, notwithstanding the fact that one of them was mentioned twice under different names. Six names and five corporations. Sisters of Mercy in City of Baltimore v. Benzinger, 95 Md. 684.

24. A devise of an "undivided one third of all my real estate" to three sons, without any other disposition of the realty, held to pass to each an undivided one third. Meiners v. Meiners [Mo. Sup.] 78 S. W. 795.

25. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283.

26. A bequest to two persons (naming them) "with whom I live and whom I regard and treat as my adopted daughters," held not a bequest to a class. In re Hittell's Estate, 141 Cal. 432, 75 Pac. 53.

27. As a joint will providing that in case the survivor remarries the property to be divided between the survivor and the children, and the survivor does not take one-half. Edwards v. Kelley [Miss.] 35 So. 418.

28. In re Morrison's Estate, 138 Cal. 401, 71 Pac. 453.

29. A testatrix devised a life estate to her son remainder to her "six children" which number would include him, though

Words of equality import a division per capita.[30] An intention to divide per capita may be inferred from the fact that the testator had previously devised, in the same will, equal legacies to each.[31] If the gift is to heirs[32] or issue of a first taker,[33] it is usually per capita. Difference in degree of relationship indicates a taking per stirpes.[34] It is per capita if differing degrees of relationship are brought into one class,[35] or if children of different persons are in equal relationship to testator.[36] Heirs or children of deceased members of a class taking by substitution take per stirpes.[37] In a bequest to descendants equally, or to all the dehe must be dead at the time of the division, held not to justify a court in changing the will so as to exclude him. Robinson v. Mitchell [Md.] 57 Atl. 625.

30. Where a gift is to be "equally divided," the beneficiaries take per capita, unless a contrary intention is discoverable in the will. In re Walker's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 680. Under a devise to be equally divided among testator's lawful heirs, share and share alike, such heirs take per capita and not per stirpes. Mooney v. Purpus [Ohio] 70 N. E. 894.

31. In re Morrison's Estate, 138 Cal. 401, 71 Pac. 453.

32. Under a donation "in equal shares to my own heirs at law" distribution should be made per stirpes and not per capita. MacLean v. Williams, 116 Ga. 257. Under a devise to heirs jointly "and to pay such as had received no advancements, a sum sufficient to make them all equal, and children of deceased heirs to take the share of the parent," the heirs take per stirpes. Children only had received advancements. Lee v. Baird, 132 N. C. 755. But children of a daughter who had received an advancement but who had died before the making of the will, take their share without such advancement being deducted. Id.

Not if "heirs" designates a single class. Testator having sisters and children of deceased sister surviving him left his estate to his "lawful heirs, to be divided equally among them." Held the term "lawful heirs" constituted a single class, so the distribution must be per capita and not per stirpes. In re Griswold, 86 N. Y. Supp. 250.

33. Under a provision that the income of an estate be paid to a son and daughter for life, and on their decease, should they leave issue, the estate to descend in fee to such issue, on the death of the daughter leaving issue the trust as to her terminated, and that half descended to her issue per stirpes. Gardiner v. Savage, 182 Mass. 521, 65 N. E. 851.

34. In a gift of income from an estate in trust, to several "and their heirs," the latter words will be construed as meaning that, in the event of the death of any beneficiary, his heirs should take his share in his stead, there being no provision for survivorship, and it being contrary to testator's general plan. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167.

35. A devise for life with reverter "to his children and their children that may be living" passed to the devisee a life estate with remainder per capita to children and grandchildren of the life tenant in being at the time of his death. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 65 S. C. 390. Unless a contrary intention appears the legatees under a bequest to several and to children of another will take per capita. Children and grandchildren held to share equally in payment of certain specific bequests. Collins v. Feather, 52 W. Va. 107.

36. In case of a gift to the children of several persons as standing in a certain relation to the testator, the objects of the gifts take per capita. As a gift to be divided equally "between my Brothers Edwin and Charles' children" though testator had previously referred to them as his nieces and nephews. Silk v. Merry, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 218.

37. Testator bequeathed a certain sum to trustees to pay the income therefrom to his three children annually "during the term of their natural life and to divide after their decease the rest and residue of the trust premises aforesaid under their charge equally among my children then living, and the issue of any deceased child or children, giving to the issue of any deceased child the share to which the parent, if living, would have been entitled." Held, that each child was entitled to a third of the income for life, and on the death of each his share of the principal was to be divided among testator's children then living, and the issue of deceased children, including the issue of the life tenant whose share was being distributed, such issue taking per stirpes. Brown v. Farmer, 184 Mass. 136, 68 N. E. 32. Where testator devised his residuary estate to his wife for life, then to his brother and sister, and after their death to the children of the brother, or the survivors of them, and the children of the sister or the survivors of them, held that the children of the sister took half of the estate as representatives of the mother, and the children of the brother took the other half. In re Walker's Estate, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 680. Under a provision that land should be held in trust for D. and on his death should be sold and proceeds paid to testatrix's children, "share and share alike," provided that in case any child died before D. the share which he would be entitled to if living should be paid to his heirs at law in equal parts to each, held that an equal part of the fund went to each child living at D.'s death, and one share to the heirs of any deceased child. McWilliams v. Gough, 116 Wis. 576, 93 N. W. 550. Under a devise, "in case of the decease of either of three sons before the decease of their mother, leaving lawful issue, the issue to take by representation the share the parent was to receive and in default of issue then to the survivors equally," held, that the issue of a son dying before his mother occupies the position his father would have occupied as to the share of a son who predeceased his mother leaving no issue. Intention was not to deal with sons as a class, but to bestow on the scendants of any person, or to descendants simply, all take per capita, unless a contrary intent appears.[38] Where property is left to the "issue" of the survivors of a class, the division is per capita unless the will as a whole discloses a contrary intention.[39]

(§ 5D) 8. Conditions.[40]—Conditions will not be implied without an intent to support it.[41] No precise words are required to constitute a condition precedent or subsequent, but the character thereof is to be governed by the intention of testator.[42] If the act must be performed or the event occur before the estate can vest, the condition is precedent.[43] If not, it is subsequent.[44] A devise to one and in case of his death without heirs of his body to his brothers, passes a fee simple estate to the devisee defeasible on condition only that he die without heirs of his body.[45] An interest should be construed as absolute, if possible, and in any event the operation of conditions rendering it defeasible should be confined to the shortest possible time.[46] Divesting conditions are not easily implied.[47] issue of a deceased son all the rights of the father. Hendricks v. Hendricks, 177 N. Y. 402, 69 N. E. 736.

38. Levering v. Orrick [Md.] 54 A. 620. Under a bequest of the residue of an estate in trust to apply the income to testator's daughters for life, providing that on the death of a daughter her share should pass to her issue, children, or descendants, forever, or if she died without living issue then to her surviving sisters and their descendants, it being testator's declared intention that the estate should vest in the descendants of his daughters, distribution to be made per capita and not per stirpes, and such descendants to be considered as purchasers and entitled to the property from the time their rights vested; held that, upon the death of the last surviving daughter without descendants, her share should be divided per capita among all the descendants of the other two daughters living at the time of distribution. Levering v. Orrick [Md.] 54 A. 620.

39. Jay v. Lee, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 13.

40. See ante § 5 D, 5, contingencies on vesting.

Particular conditions construed. The words "interest" and "shares" held not to include specific legacies which were free from restraints on alienation. Russell v. Hillin, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 178. Conditions working substitution. A will containing several recapitulations and subsequent clauses held to show that it was the testator's intention that if he survived his wife a certain person should have his farm, if not it was to go to another. Hopkins v. Graff, 101 Va. 377. The intent of the testator expressed in his will, or clearly deducible therefrom, must prevail if consistent with the rules of law. Intention of testatrix being that, failing husband or son surviving, her estate to go to a designated charity, it was held to take, where both testatrix and son survived the husband but both perished in a common disaster with nothing to show order of death. Young Women's Christian Home v. French, 23 S. Ct. 184, 187 U. S. 401, 47 L. Ed. 233. Under a bequest to a daughter to her separate use with power of disposition but in case she should die before testatrix to pass to legatee's husband, the legacy in remainder took effect only in case the daughter predeceased the testatrix Louisville City Nat. Bank v. Wooldridge, 25 Ky. L. R. 869, 76 S. W. 542.

41. Others may add to fund provided for erection of monument, the will not requiring the statement that it was erected by testator, and there being nothing to show that he intended the contrary. In re Ogden [R. I.] 55 Atl. 933. A bequest for the erection of a building for the keeping of a town public library held not to show an intention that the building should be located in the part of town where an existing library, which could not be moved by the terms of the gift under which it was established, was situated. Adams v. Town of Derry, 71 N. H. 544.

42, 43. Lane v. Albertson, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 607. Will provided that if testator died before consummation of an agreement for the disposal of the business of testator's firm, his executors should carry it out. It further provided that on the consummation thereof a part of his share therein mentioned was to go to his brother, and further stated, "This has been my intention if I lived, and I desire it carried out in case of my death previous to the consummation of said agreement." Held that the bequest was conditional on the death of testator before the consummation, and on condition precedent. Id. A gift to one in case a named person should predecease testator is rendered inoperative by such person surviving testator. Residuary clause held to be operative only in case testator's wife died before him. Schumaker v. Grammer, 200 Ill. 48, 65 N. E. 722.

44. Lane v. Albertson, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 607. A bequest to a church on condition that the officers or a committee of the church annually visit the grave of deceased and give it such attention "as I would give under like circumstances," is a bequest upon a condition subsequent. Congregational Church of Chester v. Cutler [Vt.] 57 Atl. 387. A gift to one with the condition that if testator's son should return, the property should go to him, passes a defeasible fee. Return of son is condition subsequent. Commonwealth v. Pollitt, 25 Ky. L. R. 790, 76 S. W. 412.

45. Code § 2180. Whitfield v. Carriss, 131 N. C. 148. See also ante, § 5D, 5, that an estate may vest subject to defeasance.

46. A devise to a son but directing executors to control and rent until testator's

A bequest on condition that the devisee return within a certain time is valid.[48] Conditions against creditors will be void if made subsequent to a fee.[49] Conditions whereby legacies are defeated by contesting the validity of the will are valid, but are not favored, and are strictly construed.[50]

If there is no provision for forfeiture in case of nonperformance, a breach of the condition will not affect the devisee's interest in the property.[51] When divesting contingencies are conjoined, all must befall.[52] The like is true of precedent conditions.[53]

(§ 5D) 9. Intent to require election.—There is such an intent when the property that is disposed of belongs to the beneficiary.[54] Unless changed by statute,[55] the widow is put to an election only when the will expressly states that the provision made for her therein is in lieu of dower,[56] or when a claim of dower would be clearly inconsistent with the will.[57] The mere gift of an annuity to the widow, debts were paid, with a provision that the issue of deceased children should receive their parents' share, passed to the son a defeasible fee, contingent on his dying without issue before the debts were paid. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 2342, providing that devise without words of inheritance shall be regarded as passing fee, or as great an estate as testator had. McAdams & Morford v. Norton's Assignee [Ky.] 78 S. W. 880. See In re Albiston's Estate, 117 Wis. 272, 94 N. W. 169.

47. A direction to the trustees to hold certain property "as a residence and home for my said grand nephew until he shall have attained the age of twenty-one years" he then to have the election to retain it as a permanent home, without any condition that he should actually occupy the house, vests the fee in him immediately on his election, in good faith, to take the house, though he subsequently abandons it as a home. In re King's Estate, 205 Pa. 416. Such condition against liability for debts. Fact that testator intended property not to be liable for devisee's debts not sufficient to prevent its being liable unless he used proper means to accomplish purpose. Mere declaration to that effect without creation of trust insufficient. Wood v. Ward, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 567.

48. A devise to one, with a provision that if he is not heard from in ten years the estate is to go to others, is valid, and upon the expiration of that period without the devisee having been heard from the title to the lands vests in such others. Provision is valid condition subsequent with conditional limitation over. Connor v. Sheridan, 116 Wis. 666, 93 N. W. 835.

49. Davis v. Davis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 90.

50. In re Barandon's Estate, 84 N. Y. Supp. 937.

51. As a devise to a daughter on condition that she provide for a son and on failure the executors were to set aside the profits of a part of the land for the support of the son. Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 572, 73 S. W. 662.

52. Testator bequeathed $1,000 to insane daughter to be paid on her recovery, and if she did not recover, or died, the amount was to be divided equally among her three daughters. Held, children cannot recover the amount by action until their mother dies, before recovery. Mingo v. Huntington [Minn.] 99 N. W. 45.

53. A legacy to one, to be paid after the death of a life tenant, unless the beneficiary shall have died without issue before that time, does not lapse on the death of the beneficiary during the continuation of the life estate, leaving issue. Under a bequest of the income to the wife and after death $6,000 to A and "if on administration of my estate said A be deceased leaving no issue" then the bequest over to be void, such legatee took a vested estate expectant on termination of the life estate, subject to be divested on death without issue during the life of the life tenant. Buswell v. Newcomb, 183 Mass. 111, 66 N. E. 592.

54. Will held to require that the amount which testator's wife was entitled to receive under an antenuptial contract should be estimated as a part of the share given her by the will. Dowell v. Workman [Ky.] 78 S. W. 857. Where testator devised his property equally between his wife and children, with the exception of one son, whose share had been advanced, held, where the son's advancement was in excess of the son's pro rata share of one-half of the community property, but much less than his share of the whole community property and no intention to discriminate against this son being shown, that it was not the testator's intention to dispose of all the community property. In re Wickersham's Estate, 138 Cal. 355, 70 Pac. 1076.

55. It has been done in many states [Editor].

56. In re Gordon, 172 N. Y. 25, 64 N. E. 753; Horstmann v. Flege, 172 N. Y. 381, 65 N. E. 202. In a will disposing of the testator's entire estate, a bequest to his wife in lieu of dower does not give her, in case she rejects the will, the right to a legacy equal to her distributive share of his personalty if he had died intestate, in addition to dower. In re Spear's Will, 86 N. Y. Supp. 448.

57. Question always is whether the will contains any provision inconsistent with the assertion of a right to demand it. Widow held not entitled to dower in addition to the provision in the will. In re Gordon, 172 N. Y. 25, 64 N. E. 753; Horstmann v. Flege, 172 N. Y. 381, 68 N. E. 202. Takes both where reasonable doubt. Id. A clause in a will gave a farm to the wife and daughter so long as they wished to manage it and provided for its sale and division of the proceeds equally between the wife and two daughters when they no longer wished to though charged on all the testator's property, will not.[58] The words "those taking" do not show an intent to give an option to accept or reject a devise.[59]

(§ 5D) 10. Charges, exonerations, funds for payment.—In order to charge a legacy or gift of support on realty, there must be a manifest intent on part of testator to do so.[60] Express direction is not essential, but in the absence thereof the intent must be clear and manifest, and fairly inferred,[61] which may be found manage it, adding "the part given the wife to be in lieu of dower." Held, the quoted clause applied only to the conditional sale, and since the land was never sold, this was not operative, and the provisions of the will were not inconsistent with the right of dower. Kiefer v. Gillett, 120 Iowa, 107, 94 N. W. 270. A testator devised to his wife and six children all his real estate, "share and share alike." Held, the widow must elect between the provision of the will (giving her one-seventh) and dower. In re Purcell [R. I.] 57 Atl. 377. A provision in a husband's will not signed by his wife, reciting that in case she predeceased him it was her express will that testator should be her sole heir, and the fact that the wife accepted the will on testator's death in so far as it devised property to her, did not constitute an agreement on her part to comply with other provisions therein which were repugnant to the devise to her. Meyer v. Weiler, 121 Iowa, 51, 95 N. W. 254. Where a testator provides for the payment of his debts and bequeaths his wife a sum in lieu of dower, she is entitled to the payment of any debt due her in addition to the legacy. In re Spear's Will, 86 N. Y. Supp. 448. A valid trust covering all of testator's property will be construed as requiring an election. Vesting of title in trustees with absolute power to sell and reinvest, with special directions as to management and control, with directions to pay over the income to the widow and children during the continuation of the trust, held inconsistent with intention to allow dower. In re Gordon, 172 N. Y. 25, 64 N. E. 753.

58. Where the will charged a portion devised with an annuity to be paid the widow for life without any other provision for the wife, it did not show an intent to require an election by the widow. Horstmann v. Flege, 172 N. Y. 381, 65 N. E. 202.

59. In a devise in fee providing that "those taking however at the settlement of my estate * * * to account to other distributees for such lands at the rate of five dollars per acre." In re McKibbin's Estate, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 578.

60. Lediger v. Canfield, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 596. There is a presumption of intent that legacies should be paid from the personalty. Clark v. Worrall [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 699. Act Md. 1895, c. 438 changed this rule but the act did not apply to wills made before it went into effect. Ewell v. McGregor, 96 Md. 357.

61. Lediger v. Canfield, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 596; Daue v. Arnold, 201 Ill. 570, 66 N. E. 846. Intention not implied where there is personalty. Clark v. Worrall [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 699.

Must be shown by the will or in certain cases by proof of extrinsic facts, such as the condition of testator's estate at the time he made the will. Lediger v. Canfield, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 596. The legatee has the burden of showing that testator's intention was that the personalty should not be subject to the payment of his debts. Wiggins v. Wiggins [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 148.

Illustrations: A will devised realty to children subject to specified portions of a mortgage indebtedness thereon, testator supposing that he had sufficient funds to meet his other debts and give each child a specified sum. His realty and personalty were given specifically. Held, that both should abate ratably for the payment of other debts. Daue v. Arnold, 201 Ill. 570, 66 N. E. 846.

Where will directed executor to sell realty and "after the payment of" certain legacies, to pay the proceeds to others, held that the legacies should be paid out of the proceeds of such sale and the balance only divided, though testator left personalty. Clark v. Worrall [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 699. A will after devising certain lands to parents provided for the payment of a legacy of $20.00 to be paid to the grandchildren, the money to come out of his landed estate and to be paid them by their parents. Held to carry a legacy to each child living at testator's death and to be a charge on the land devised to each parent, but did not restrict the power of sale only in event of an attempted breach of trust. Waddell v. Waddell [S. C.] 47 S. E. 375. A provision for the payment of debts of another out of "my estate" does not necessarily show an intent to charge the realty. It not appearing that testator thought his personalty insufficient and not having so charged his own debts or the legacies. Lediger v. Canfield, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 596. A devise of real estate to two persons, with a provision that, whenever a part of it shall be sold, one of them shall receive a certain specified sum "out of the proceeds of the sale" and that he shall be paid and receive it "from my estate or my said executors," held to create a trust or charge on the real estate in favor of the devisee. Both devisees named as executors, but the one entitled to the legacy not appointed. Hall v. Cogswell, 183 Mass. 521, 67 N. E. 644. Will construed and held not to specifically charge the realty with the payment of debts. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. Testator left his entire estate to his widow. The next clause of the will was to the effect that he had made provisions for the care, support and education of his grandson until he reached the age of 21, leaving the entire charge and disposition of that matter, however, in the good judgment and discretion of his wife. He had made no other provision for said grandson. Held, that the property given to the widow was charged with his care, support and education. Ellis v. Ellis, 64 N. J. Eq. 375. Under a devise of realty to three sons, providing that if they "shall accept * * * it shall be on condition that they shall pay annually an equal portion to their mother of six per cent. interest on $2,000, and if in a complete disposal of all personalty, leaving only realty,[62] or the complete disposal of the estate as a blended property.[63]

If the devisee is charged with the duty of paying a legacy[64] or the devise is subject thereto,[65] or if there was a direction to pay certain legacies from particular land, it makes the legacies a lien thereon.[66]

The fact that testator had no personal estate,[67] or that he knew when he made the will that his personalty was insufficient to pay legacies, may be regarded as showing an intention to charge the realty with their payment,[68] but the fact that testator did not dispose of his realty, or that he merely gave a life estate therein without disposing of the remainder, does not show such intention,[69] nor does the mere existence of a power of sale.[70]

Legacies and gifts for support may be charged on a homestead,[71] but debts will not be unless the intention is very clear.[72]

needed for her support, also the principal," shows an intention to charge the realty with the payment. In re Gumaer's Estate, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 621. Where a will charged the estate with the support of a son during his natural life, and provided that if he survived his mother and remained unmarried, as he did, he was to have all the remaining estate for life for his support, and such property was to go equally to other heirs at his death, it was held that the son had an absolute right to support out of the estate, and one who had supported him might recover for such support from the estate. Warburton v. Williams, 116 Wis. 557, 93 N. W. 438.

62. In case of insufficiency of personalty, the residuary realty is chargeable with the payment of legacies; the residuary clause devising "all the rest and residue of my estate both real and personal." Horton v. Howell [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 702. Where the will gave the husband what he would have been entitled to under the intestate laws, that is the personalty and a life use of the realty, legacies to others, were held intended to be paid from the realty. In re Hershey's Estate, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 651.

63. If the testator obliterated all distinction between realty and personalty, devising the entire estate to one except an annuity to another, such annuity will be held a charge on the realty. Perkins v. First Nat. Bank [Miss.] 33 So. 18. Blending of realty and personalty in the residuary clause does not charge legacies on the realty, where the main object of testator's bounty was therein provided for. Harvey v. Kennedy, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261. Legacy held a charge on the residuary estate, such appearing to be testator's intent. Austin v. Buckman, 118 Wis. 169, 95 N. W. 128.

64. Ewell v. McGregor, 96 Md. 357.

65. A direction that an annuity be paid out of certain realty devised "subject" thereto, and giving the annuitant power to enforce the annuity, makes it a charge on the realty and not on the rents and profits. The land may be sold to pay arrearages. Gee v. Gee, 204 Ill. 588, 68 N. E. 515.

66. Legacies payable "out of my said farm by my executor" and devise of land after payment "of above named legacies," held to create lien on land. Conkling v. Weatherwax, 173 N. Y. 43, 65 N. E. 855.

Not where it was to be paid from the "share" of one, no sale of land being directed. Held that the pecuniary legacy was not a charge on the land set off to the child out of whose share it was to be paid. Ewell v. McGregor, 96 Md. 357.

67. In re Espy's Estate, 207 Pa. 459, 56 Atl. 1005.

68. McManus v. McManus, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 240. Annuities payable out of personal property are not a charge upon the testator's realty, the personalty being insufficient in the absence of proof that the testator had reason to believe his personal estate insufficient at the date of the execution of the will. Turner v. Mather, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 172.

69. Realty will not be sold to pay legacies where testator left personalty supposed to be sufficient to pay them, though he did not refer to realty in the will except to give a life estate in a part of it, and though the will contained no residuary clause. In re Espy's Estate, 207 Pa. 459, 56 Atl. 1005.

70. At the time of the execution of the will, the testator was possessed of ample personal property to satisfy them. All real estate was specifically devised. At time of testator's death because of investments and expenditures, there was not sufficient personalty. Schmidt v. Limmer, 86 N. Y. S. 657. A charge of legacies on realty is not to be inferred from the fact that the residuary clause directs a sale to create a fund in trust. Under the condition of the estate at the time of execution of the will, the testator did not intend to so charge the realty. Harvey v. Kennedy, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261. Where executors are authorized to sell realty to pay debts and legacies, the power being to aid the personalty, not to exonerate it, general legatees are not entitled to have other real estate charged with the payment of their legacies to the extent that the personalty was used in payment of debts. Turner v. Mather, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 172.

71. A devise of the homestead "subject, however, to the obligation to furnish a comfortable home and maintenance for my sister," creates a charge upon the land, which follows the property into the hands of every life tenant who accepts the devise, such being the evident intent of the testator. Emery v. Swasey, 97 Me. 136. Legacies given children held to be charge on homestead after wife's death, but legacies given wife for purpose of building houses for them held not charge on homestead. In re Paddock, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 268.

Aside from express provision,[72] debts and expenses will be charged to personalty.[74] A charge of debts may lie in a direction to pay them.[75] Particular expense may be charged on a particular fund despite a general charge of debts.[76]

A direction that all taxes on bequests shall be paid refers to present taxes only.[78] Where the direction is to pay over the net income, inheritance and transfer taxes should be paid out of the income and not out of the corpus of the estate.[79] A direction to pay legacies without any rebate or reduction will not exclude a deduction of inheritance tax, where the will was made before the statute levying such tax was enacted.[80]

Funds for payment.—A legacy in immediate juxtaposition before and after, with legacies payable out of the proceeds of a particular estate, and connected with them by the word "also," will be regarded as payable out of said estate only.[81] A bequest of specified property in trust, the income to be used for certain purposes, does not authorize the use of other funds of the estate to make up the amount necessary to carry out such purposes, the income of the property set apart being insufficient therefor.[82] A fund will not necessarily be enlarged because the amount to be produced is stated.[83]

Deductions.—Debts in favor of the estate follow a legacy or devise into the hands of one taking by substitution or succession.[84] Interest on debts to be de-

72. To charge homestead property with the payment of debts, the language employed must be unequivocal and imperative. Cross v. Benson [Kan.] 75 Pac. 558. A general devise of all testator's property "which shall remain after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses" does not charge the homestead with the payment of such debts, but does charge the rest of the realty devised. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 2983, 3862, exempts homesteads. Pym v. Pym, 118 Wis. 662, 96 N. W. 429.

73. A bequest of a specific sum of money "less expenses of administration" does not authorize commissions of representatives and transfer taxes to be deducted therefrom. In re Pray, 49 Misc. [N. Y.] 516.

74. See Estates of Decedents, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1109. A gift of all personalty of which testator should die possessed will be construed to mean less debts and administration expenses. Blakeslee v. Pardee [Conn.] 56 Atl. 503.

75. A will directing payment of debts creates a trust against the property and charges it with payment of them. Kiesewetter v. Kress, 24 Ky. L. R. 1239, 70 S. W. 1065.

76. Where it is plainly the testator's intention that the realty should be charged with the expense of converting it into personalty, equity will carry out such intention, even though there is a general provision for the payment of all debts from the personalty. Matthews v. Tyree, 53 W. Va. 298.

77. Where property devised to a daughter was after the execution of the will and before the testatrix's death, deeded to said devisee by a deed of gift, held daughter took property subject to a mortgage thereon, though no mention of the mortgage was made in either the will or deed. In re Porter, 138 Cal. 618, 72 Pac. 173.

78. Such as inheritance and succession taxes, and does not require the setting aside of a fund for the payment of future general taxes. In re Magee's Estate, 205 Pa. 37.

79. Where a will devised the body of an estate to executors in trust to collect the income, pay "all necessary expenses" and divide the "net income" among certain legatees, the inheritance, transfer, and federal war taxes were to be paid out of the gross income and not out of the principal. In re Brown's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 360.

80. Jackson v. Tailer, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 36.

81. Bequest to church held payable out of proceeds of sale of certain lot only. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683, 55 Atl. 171.

82. Testatrix bequeathed 75 shares of stock in trust, the income to be used for certain purposes. The company was subsequently merged in another, and she received 75 shares of stock in the new company in exchange therefor, which she intended to substitute for that disposed of by will. Later she sold 25 shares and after her death the income on the balance was insufficient to pay the charges on the fund. Held, that the value of the stocks sold could not be taken from the residuary estate, but that the remaining 50 shares only could be used to carry out the purposes of the trust. Gardner v. Gardner [N. H.] 56 Atl. 316.

83. A bequest of a sum, which when invested at 6%, "will produce" certain annuities, means the sum which would produce the annuities at 6%, not the sum required at the prevailing lower interest rate. In re Sproule's Estate, 87 N. Y. Supp. 432.

84. Where testator by his will directed that all legacies should be subject to any debts owing him from the legatees, and by codicil, made after the death of his son, who was a legatee, directed that his grandson should have the share given his father in the original will, the share of the grandson was subject to the deduction of his father's debts

ducted from legacies should be reckoned only up to the date of testator's death.[85] Debt charges on legatees will fall in by extinguishment of the debt.[86]

(§ 5D) 11. Trust estates and interests.[87]—The fact that no time is fixed for the duration of the trust,[88] that the trustee is given discretion to hold and dispose of the trust estate as he may think best,[89] or that there is no devise over of the corpus of the property, does not render it invalid.[90] A mere provision that legacies shall be a lien on land devised does not make the devisee a trustee of an express trust.[91]

A provision giving executors and trustees the power to manage or sell the estate, invest the proceeds and divide the income, constitutes an express trust.[92] Whether a title vests in the trustee and if so the quantum thereof depends on the duties imposed as showing the intent.[93] If a trust is single,[94] it endures till the death of all beneficiaries.

owing to testator. In re De Haven's Estate, 207 Pa. 147. Where the devisee predeceases the testator, his issue take under the statute, subject to any debt which may have existed against their deceased parent in favor of the estate. Ohio Rev. St. 1892, § 5971, providing that issue shall take in same manner as devisee would have done had he survived testator. Baker v. Carpenter [Ohio St.] 68 N. E. 577.

85. Where a will provided that a debt due testator from the husband of one of his children should be deducted from her share, interest thereon should be reckoned only until testator's death, and the amount of the notes given therefor should be reckoned in ascertaining the whole amount to be distributed. Howe v. Howe, 184 Mass. 34, 67 N. E. 639.

86. Howe v. Howe [Mass.] 67 N. E. 639. Will provided that if the daughter's husband was indebted to testatrix, the debt should be paid before the daughter received her share of the estate. At the time of testatrix's death the husband was indebted to her on a joint note made by him and his wife, which was turned over to the daughter, with other notes, in settlement of her share of the estate. Held, that the will showed no intention to benefit the husband, but contemplated payment by him of any indebtedness to the estate, and that the transaction by which the daughter received the note operated as a payment of the debt by her, which gave her a right to enforce it against him. In re Nickerson, 116 Fed. 1003.

87. As to whether a gift is in trust or otherwise or is a trust or a power, see ante, § 5D 2.

88. A provision "I give, devise, and bequeath to my wife Mary, in trust for herself and my children, all of my estates, both real and personal, with full power to continue my business if for the best interest of my estate," held to create a valid trust. Fact that no time for its duration is fixed is immaterial. Holmes v. Walter, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380. Where the testator does not specifically fix the time for termination of the trust, his intent will govern as gathered from the entire will, and that the fee is given to the trustee does not show an intention that trust continue where the evident purpose of the trust is accomplished. When the residue was given to executors in trust to be divided equally between children, and they were directed to manage the property and sell, the trust terminates on reduction to possession, payment of debts and legacies and distribution of the remainder. Kohtz v. Eldred, 208 Ill. 60, 69 N. E. 900.

89. A bequest of personalty to the wife of the testator "to hold and dispose of as she may think best for the welfare of herself and our children" creates a trust in favor of the children and is not an absolute gift to the wife. The discretion given does not destroy the trust. Kidder's Ex'rs v. Kidder [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 154.

90. Gift to trustees of estate with directions to pay over entire net income to son, providing that they should pay taxes and for repairs, and that the property should not be liable for the present or future debts of the son, creates a valid spendthrift trust, though there was no devise over of the corpus of the estate after the son's death, which should not be defeated by handing over such corpus to the son's control. In re Minnich's Estate, 206 Pa. 405.

91. Devisee not executor. Under Wis. Rev. St. 1878, § 2081. Merton v. O'Brien, 117 Wis. 437, 94 N. W. 340.

92. Laws 1896, c. 547, § 76. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. Supp. 719. A devise to an executor, giving him the management of the estate with power to sell and convey it constitutes an express trust. In re Chase's Estate, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 616.

93. A gift to the executors to hold until a certain time and then to distribute does not vest in them a beneficial estate, but merely creates a trust, and vests the title in the trustee for purposes of distribution. McGuire v. McGuire, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 63. A provision directing the executor to collect rents and hold the property to a certain time, then to convert it into cash and distribute it during the lives of certain persons, with remainder over is not a mere power of distribution, but continued absolute title in the trustee. Id. A gift of the income of a deposit to a son for life, with a provision that "the principal of his deposit shall be paid to his executor or administrator and go to his heirs," is a gift to the heirs of the son, the executor receiving it only for convenience of distribution, and holding it in trust. Thayer v. Fairchild [R. I.] 56 Atl. 773. A devise to executors to use the income for the support of a son for life with power "to use and apply the real property" for the purposes of the trust vests the title in the executors and creates a valid

An active trust is created where the trustees are given some active duties to perform in regard to the property.[95] Where the same person is made trustee and cestui que trust, the trust is generally passive.[96] But where a testator's intent to accomplish that result is clear, a cestui que trust may be invested with the powers of a trustee.[97]

(§ 5D) 12. Powers of appointment and beneficial powers of sale.—A power may be found in authority to use and dispose of property.[98] The extent of the power is governed by the testator's intent.[99] A power is ordinarily limited by the trust. Potter v. Hodgman, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233. Under a writing reciting that "I * * * give and turn my property over to G. S. Gibson to sell and dispose of as he sees fit, to pay my indebtedness and take my two children to Kentucky and look after them and raise them," Gibson took the property as trustee of an express trust and not as an executor de son tort. Gibson v. Draffin, 25 Ky. L. R. 1332, 77 S. W. 928. A gift to executors, providing that in case testator's children should be minors, to invest their shares and apply the income, creates an express trust and not a power in trust only. Under N. Y. St. of Uses & Trusts (1 Rev. St. [Edmond's Ed.] pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2), §§ 55, 58, 59, 60, as to realty, and Laws 1897, c. 417, § 2, as to personalty. Robinson v. Adams, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 20. Since a direction to trustees to sell operates as a conversion of realty into personalty, a devise in trust to pay income to the beneficiary for life, then to sell and divide the proceeds, does not pass any title to the remaindermen, but merely gives them a right to share in the distribution, the title vesting in the executors and trustees. Statute of uses and trusts does not apply in such case. McWilliams v. Gough, 116 Wis. 576, 93 N. W. 550. A will giving one-half the estate to husband for life, with powers of ownership in fee, and the other half to children, with certain powers in husband, construed as giving husband, as trustee for the children, legal title to property given them with power to alienate at discretion. Wiess v. Goodhue [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 873. Devise of all testator's property in trust for his son, he to have the use, rents and profits thereof during his life, and giving trustees power to use the principal if necessary for son's support or to pay his funeral expenses, and providing that after the son's death the property should "belong absolutely" to one of two classes, creates a trust estate for the son's life only. Thomas v. Castle [Conn.] 56 Atl. 854.

94. Will construed and held to create a single trust for the benefit of testator's two children and not a trust of one-half of the estate for the benefit of each, the trust as to one-half of the property to terminate on the death of either child. United States Trust Co. v. Soher, 85 N. Y. Supp. 266. Where property was devised to the executors in trust for the testatrix's children until such time as such children should determine that the whole should be sold or divided, held, the trust could only be terminated by the consent of all of the children or their survivors. Harris v. Harris, 205 Pa. 460.

95. A devise to hold, manage, control, lease, care for and invest and reinvest from time to time for a period of years, then to pay over, creates an active trust. Harris v. Ferguy, 207 Ill. 534, 69 N. E. 844. A devise in trust for life and after death to his lawful children until 21 years of age, to be then paid to them, and in case there are no children then the property to go to sisters or their children, creates an active trust, and the beneficiary is not entitled to possession of the personalty on giving security as life tenant. In re Mooney's Estate, 205 Pa. 418.

96. Testator devised all his estate to his two daughters, who were his only heirs, with powers of investment, and to pay over to themselves all the income thereof and to dispose of the principal by will or otherwise after their death. Held, not to create a spendthrift trust, but a mere passive one, which would be terminated at the suit of the beneficiaries. Tilton v. Davidson, 98 Me. 55.

97. A will giving a certain person a sum of money in trust, she to receive the interest during her life and at her death the principal to be divided among her children, held to create a trust in her, though she was also cestui que trust, and entitle her to possession of the fund. In re Vreeland's Estate [N. J. Prerog.] 57 Atl. 903.

98. A gift of "all my estate to my wife * * * to be used and disposed of as seemeth the best to her during her natural life * * *" and after death to the children of testator, gave the wife power of disposal and a conveyance by the widow passed the fee. Simpkins v. Bales [Iowa] 98 N. W. 580. Under a devise to the wife of the testator during life or while she shall remain unmarried, for her support and the support of minor children, the property then to descend to children, the widow takes a life estate without power of sale. Intention governs. Winchester v. Hoover, 42 Or. 310, 70 Pac. 1035. A devise of a life estate in all the property, to "use and expend what may be necessary" for maintenance, gave power to dispose of the estate when necessary for support and maintenance. Barker v. Clark [N. H.] 56 Atl. 747.

99. Determining whether devisees took only life interest with full or limited power of disposal. Dana v. Dana [Mass.] 70 N. E. 49.

Particular provisions construed: Will construed as conferring an absolute power on the wife, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 2112. Auer v. Brown [Wis.] 98 N. W. 966. A will giving a life estate with power to sell, and providing for sale and distribution at her death, confers a power in gross. Young v. Sheldon [Ala.] 36 So. 27. A devise of one-third of testator's estate for life, after the death of the devisee one-third thereof to go to his children and two-thirds to hers, with full power in the devise to sell and dispose of any part of the estate, and a further devise of the re-estate which the donee has in the land.[1] A power conditional on death of a devisee will not be extended to a devise in fee in an earlier part of the will.[2] Words defining the extent of power are not cut down by other clauses unless such was the intent.[3] Under a discretionary power to divide an estate by will in such manner as the donee thinks proper, the quantity and quality of the estate to be devised are matters entirely within his discretion.[4] Restrictions as to appointees under a general power must be found in the will.[5] A power to dispose of property for a certain purpose as the devisee shall see fit leaves it to the judgment of the devisee to determine the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of the will.[6] A power may be imperative from the fact that it will benefit designated persons.[7] A will may confer a naked power of disposition exclusive of any beneficial interest in the donee.[8] An execution of a power under a will which is contrary to a limitation contained therein is void.[9] Execution of a discretionary power is not rendered invalid because payment of a legacy is postponed,[10] nor because a legacy to one of the beneficiaries is made a charge upon the land of the others.[11] maining two-thirds of the estate to testator's children, share and share alike, held to create a power of sale accompanied with a trust and not a general power of sale, and that the children took vested remainders. Weinstein v. Weber [N. Y.] 70 N. E. 115.

1. A gift of an estate for life, with a power of disposition annexed, and with remainder over, will be construed as giving power to dispose of the life interest only, and not of the reversion, though such power is absolute in its terms. Life tenant given full power to mortgage, sell, lease, transfer and convey and to use and dispose of property in same manner as testator could have done. Bauernschmidt v. Bauernschmidt [Md.] 54 Atl. 637; Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36; Mansfield v. Mansfield, 203 Ill. 92, 67 N. E. 497. The fact that after the death of the life tenant the property "then being" was given to trustees who were to pay her debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of administration of the trust, and to divide the property "then remaining," does not show a contrary intent, those words referring to the property remaining after such debts and expenses were paid. Power of disposal referred to life estate. Bauernschmidt v. Bauernschmidt [Md.] 54 Atl. 637.

2. Provision that in case testator's daughter should die leaving children or a child and issue of a deceased child, her surviving, she was empowered to divide among them in such portions as she should see fit that part of testator's estate that would come to them. Heinemann v. De Wolf [R. I.] 55 Atl. 707.

3. A will created a trust fund for the benefit of a son, to whom a life interest therein was given, and empowered the trustees to pay over to him during his lifetime any sum not exceeding $100,000, and further empowered the son to dispose of $150,000 of such fund by will to any person he might see fit. Held, that the son's power of disposition was not diminished by the amount advanced to him by the trustees, but extended to the whole amount of the fund remaining in the trust at the time of his death, not exceeding $150,000. McCook v. Mumby [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 406.

4. Allder v. Jones [Md.] 56 Atl. 487. Under a devise for life with power "to will to my children as she thinks proper at my death," the donee may make an unequal distribution. Id. No appointment will be defeated, however unjust or unreasonable, or however nominal or illusory the portion received by some of the beneficiaries may be, provided that some portion of the estate passes to each of the objects of the power. Doctrine of illusory appointment not adopted in Illinois. Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885. The fact that no person was specifically required to pay nominal sums appointed to some of the remaindermen is not sufficient to render invalid the execution of a power of appointment, where testatrix directed that they should be paid out of the share which she had power to appoint to her heirs. Id.

5. "At her pleasure" and "without accountability" enabled donee to appoint to charity. Dana v. Dana [Mass.] 70 N. E. 49.

6. Devise of residuary estate to wife for life "with the right to use and dispose of so much of the principal thereof during her lifetime as she should see fit," held, her power of disposition was limited to what was in her judgment reasonably necessary for her use during life. Terry v. St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 527.

7. A direction to the life tenant to sell sufficient property to pay mortgages on real estate owned either by testatrix or her husband may be treated as discretionary, in so far as it relates to incumbrances on his own property, but is mandatory as to those on hers, and creates an interest in the final beneficiaries of which the donee of the power could not deprive them. Dana v. Stafford [Vt.] 56 Atl. 88.

8. Hammond v. Croxton [Ind.] 70 N. E. 368.

9. Where a widow, executrix, disregarded a provision in her deceased husband's will providing that each child should receive a certain amount. Ketchin v. Rion [S. C.] 47 S. E. 376.

10. Charge on land payable in one, two, three and four years, valid execution. Allder v. Jones [Md.] 56 Atl. 487.

11. Devise to two children and creating charge thereon in favor of another held valid execution. Allder v. Jones [Md.] 56 Atl. 487.

(§ 5D) 13. Lapse, failure and forfeiture.—An intention that a legacy shall lapse will not be presumed.[12]

A legacy or devise, bestowed by testator as a mere gift or bounty, will lapse and become void in case the testator survives the legatee or devisee,[13] but this rule does not apply where the legacy has vested,[14] nor where the bequest or devise was made to discharge a duty or obligation resting upon testator,[15] nor by statute in some states, where the beneficiary is a descendant of the testator.[16] Testator may prevent a lapse by express provisions in his will or by a clear implication of intent to that effect.[17] Forfeiture for breach of condition will not be implied,[18] nor will conditions be implied so as to work forfeiture.[19]

12. In re Phillips [R. I.] 55 Atl. 696. A will provided in the residuary clause that in case any beneficiaries died before testatrix the bequest to him should determine, and further provided that if the persons named in the will did not survive and could not take in person, their heirs should not take by substitution. Held, that these provisions applied to residuary legatees, and that on the death of one of them before testatrix, his share vested in the remaining residuary legatees and did not pass as intestate estate. In re Phillips [R. I.] 55 Atl. 696. That the legacy to the wife exceeds her legitime is ground for reduction, not for nullity. Succession of May, 109 La. 994.

13. Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505. Act March 29, 1887, providing in such case the property should descend to devisee's heirs does not apply where devisee died prior to its enactment. Reichle v. Steitz, 64 N. J. Eq. 789; Dorsey v. Dodson, 203 Ill. 32, 67 N. E. 395. As a legacy to one "as a reparation" for injury done her "by a scandalous charge falsely and maliciously" made. In re Sutro's Estate, 139 Cal. 87, 72 Pac. 827. Under a will providing for sale of property and distribution of proceeds, the legacy to one who died after testator, but before sale and distribution, did not lapse. Dorsey v. Dodson, 203 Ill. 32, 67 N. E. 395.

14. Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505. Where testator bequeathed the income of his estate to his wife for life, and on her death a specific legacy to A, providing that, "if, on the administration of my estate, said A be deceased, leaving no issue, then this article of my will is to be inoperative and void," the legacy vested at testator's death and did not lapse on A's death, leaving issue, before the death of testator's wife. Buswell v. Newcomb, 183 Mass. 111, 66 N. E. 592.

15. Where testator intended to devise land to C., but agreed to devise it to A. in consideration of his agreeing to pay C. a certain sum, and A. executed his notes therefor, and testator then executed his will as agreed, the devise to A. did not lapse by his death before that of testator. Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505.

16. This rule has been modified by statute in some states so as to prevent the lapse, and allow the heirs to take, in case the devisee is a descendant of testator (Brown's Rev. St. Ind. 1894, § 2741). Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505. Under the laws of Ohio (Rev. St. § 5971), where devisees are dead at the time of making the will or die thereafter, leaving issue, such issue take in the same manner as the devisee would have taken had he survived testator. This statute applies to a devise over to children as a class, whether their parent, the first taker, died before or after the will was made. Shumaker v. Pearson, 67 Ohio St. 330, 65 N. E. 1005. Statutes for the prevention of lapses apply where the legacy is given to a class. Illinois statute (2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 1433, par. 11), providing that whenever a devisee or legatee who is a child or grandchild of testator, dies before him, and no provision is made for such a contingency, his issue shall take, applies where the devise is "to my beloved children as their absolute property in fee simple, to be equally divided between them." Rudolph v. Rudolph, 207 Ill. 266, 69 N. E. 834. Will be presumed that testator made his will in view of the statute, and the burden is on plaintiff to show the contrary. Burden is not lifted by proof that legacies were prompted by personal regard, as where they were given to "my beloved children." Id. Under the California statutes, a legacy to a son who was dead at the time of the execution of the will, though believed by the testator to be alive, does not preclude the child of such son from claiming and obtaining the share of the estate to which he would have been entitled if the testator had died intestate. In re Ross' Estate, 140 Cal. 282, 73 Pac. 976.

17. Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 505. A provision to hold a share for the taker's issue in event of the former's death held to mean simply that it should not lapse by death. Denison v. Denison, 86 N. Y. Supp. 604. Will devised estate equally to children and provided that, if child died during minority and without descendants, its share should pass to the surviving children and the descendants of those who had died leaving descendants. Held that, upon the death of a child, his share vested absolutely in the other two, and was not subject to any further devolution under the will, they taking directly from testatrix, and hence, on the death of one of the other two during minority, his share descended to his heirs under the statute. In re Clark, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 617. A devise to children, and if any are dead then "I give the share such deceased child would have taken to the uses of his or her will" and if such child has died intestate "I give the said share to the persons and for the estates they would have taken in the same had such child been living." Held, that the expressions "to the uses of his will" and "had such child died the owner of that share" have the same meaning, viz.: that the share of such deceased child should pass in the manner in which it would have passed had he been the owner of it at his death. This not affected by a further provision that if any of the devisees therein before named died during testator's life, "I give so much of his or her share as does not vest in his or her issue or husband or wife by the provisions of this will, to the persons and for the estates to whom and for which the residue of my estate is devised." The will referred to therein is that of testator. In re Sturgis' Estate, 205 Pa. 435.

Valid portions of the will will be allowed to stand and the invalid provisions alone cut off, where the two are distinct and separable, and injustice will not be done, nor testator's intentions subverted thereby;[20] but every estate dependent on a provision which fails, fails with it.[21]

18. A provision that the realty devised to one of several shall not be sold without the consent of the others, without a devise over or a declaration of forfeiture in case of sale without such consent, does not affect the fee title which passed by the devise. Felt v. Richard, 64 N. J. Eq. 16.

19. Executors were to found a widows' and orphans' home from certain income after the death of life tenants. Executors died before the life tenants. Held, the devise to the home was not contingent on its organization before the executors' death, and hence did not fail. Gidley v. Lovenberg [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 834.

20. Loyd v. Loyd's Ex'r [Va.] 46 S. E. 687. Void bequest cut off. Van Driele v. Kotvis [Mich.] 97 N. W. 700. A trust to pay an annuity out of all the testator's estate, real and personal, and at the death of the annuitant to convey the estate to others, being void in California as to the real estate, is separable and the trust as to the personalty is valid and enforceable. In re Pichoir's Estate, 139 Cal. 694, 73 Pac. 604. Devise in trust to pay income to four sisters, on the death of either of two of them their share to go to the others, and on the death of either of the other two, her share to go to her children, "the issue of such children taking the part of any deceased parent" for life, and on the death of all such children, the principal to go to the grandchildren of such sisters, or their issue or legal representatives according to the laws of descent in fee. Held, that the gift of income to the grandchildren was void under the rule against perpetuities, there being a possibility that persons not the immediate issue or descendants of persons in being at the time of making the will would take, nor can it be supported on the ground that they take by inheritance and not purchase, since they have life estates only. The gift over of the trust fund is dependent upon the precedent provisions, and hence void also. The provisions relating to the time antecedent to the death of one of the last two sisters are valid. White v. Allen [Conn.] 56 Atl. 519. Where title vested in remaindermen but possession was postponed, and power of alienation was suspended for a longer period than allowed by law, the latter provision was segregated and the balance of the will enforced. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293. Where trust in its provision for termination on certain contingency was void as a perpetuity, held, that void portion could be severed and effect given to testator's intention until death of one of the beneficiaries, when it would terminate, and the property be divided among those entitled under the will to receive it. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167. Though a gift to descendants of testator's grandchildren, in case his daughter should die leaving issue, is void under the rule against perpetuities, a gift to testator's other children in case the daughter died without leaving children, not being dependent thereon, is valid. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708. Where testator devised property in trust for his daughter for life, with limitations over after her death which were void, the estate of the daughter was not affected by the invalidity, and she, being sole heir at law and next of kin, took the absolute ownership of all the property, subject to the trust for her life. Schlereth v. Schlereth, 173 N. Y. 444, 66 N. E. 130. Where the only effect of taking out of a codicil an invalid provision suspending the power of alienation beyond the time allowed by law will be to accelerate the possession of the remainder so as to take effect upon testator's death instead of two years later, such invalid provision will be expunged, and the balance of the will allowed to stand. Smith v. Cheseborough, 176 N. Y. 317, 68 N. E. 625. Where one of two trusts created by a will is void for indefiniteness, the residue of the estate, after the valid trust has been carried out, goes to the residuary legatees. Trunkey v. Van Sant, 176 N. Y. 535, 68 N. E. 946. Where the devise was in trust to pay annuities during the lives of the two youngest children, a codicil which was void because it suspended power of alienation for the life of one of the elder children did not render the original trust void. Herzog v. Title Guaranty & T. Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283. Not where it will result in one child taking both under the will and under the statute. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225. Where a trust is part of a single scheme, the principal object of which cannot be carried out, the whole scheme falls, and no effect can be given to any part of it. Where trust for preservation of residuary estate and payment of income to named beneficiaries was void as suspending power of alienation, and testator provided only for disposition of one-fourth of the estate after the termination of the estate, the whole trust and scheme for the disposition of such residuary estate will be held invalid. Id. Where provision for trust for payment of mortgage on a share of the realty is void, and the enforcement of the balance of such trust without such payment would result in inequality of distribution, thus destroying testator's primary intent, the whole trust will fall. Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358. If the primary provision is valid, invalid provisions will not invalidate the entire will. Mendel v. Levis, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 271. Under Laws 1896, c. 547, where a testator directed an invalid accumulation of rents and profits, but declared that on the death of one of the sons leaving children, one-half of the estate would vest in them, and on default to the other son, the invalidity of the accumulation did not invalidate the trust. United States Trust Co. v. Soher, 85 N. Y. Supp. 266. Provision creating a specified trust unlawfully suspending the power of alienation. Denison v. Denison, 86 N. Y. Supp. 604. An invalid fidei commissum does not invalidate the donation. After declaring that he had brought $6,500 in marriage and that he had neither ascendants nor descendants, the testator made his wife universal legatee of all his property. He declared it to be his desire that at her death what remained should be divided between his and her natural heirs equally, first deducting the above sum to be paid his natural heirs; held, that the legatee is not charged to preserve for and return a thing to third persons. Dufour v. Deresheid, 110 La. 344.

Death of the life tenant before testator will not invalidate the gift over,[22] and a subsequent execution of a codicil without revoking the gift shows an intent that it should stand.[23]

(§ 5D) 14. Residuary clauses, substitutions and property not effectually disposed of.—It will not be presumed that testator intended partial intestacy, unless the language used compels such construction,[24] though if the question of testacy does not alter the disposition, it need not be determined.[25] To avoid partial intestacy, a residuary clause will not be restricted by needless implications,[26] but whatever may have been his intention, property not disposed of by the will passes

Though the will shows an intention that each of the devisees should share equally in testator's estate, it will not be held invalid merely because testator attempted to devise property in which he was only tenant by curtesy. Beetson v. Stoops, 86 N. Y. Supp. 332.

21. Clauses in a will providing for the disposition of a trust fund and legacies intended to be paid only from it are inoperative where the attempted revocation of the trust by the will is void. Kelley v. Snow [Mass.] 70 N. E. 89.

22, 23. Bequest to one for life with principal to others after her death valid, though first taker died before testator. Blakeslee v. Pardee [Conn.] 56 Atl. 503.

24. Burns' Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 2737 provides that every devise in terms denoting testator's intention to devise his entire interest in all his real and personal property shall be construed to pass all of his estate in such property. Thompson v. Jamison, 31 Ind. App. 376, 68 N. E. 176. Presumption that testator intended to dispose of his entire property. Pate v. Bushong, 161 Ind 533, 69 N. E. 291; Buck v. Lincoln [Conn.] 56 Atl. 522; Mayes v. Karn, 24 Ky. L. R. 2110, 72 S. W. 1111. Presumption is one of fact only. Young v. Quimby, 98 Me. 167, 56 Atl. 656; Simmons v. Cabanne, 177 Mo. 336, 76 S. W. 618. A testator's family consisted of a wife and invalid daughter with no expectancy of issue. His will gave his wife a life estate in certain stocks and created an annuity out of real estate in her favor. A residuary clause gave the wife all property not otherwise disposed of which was less than $1,000.00 while the estate was valued at $16,000.00. Held, the wife took an absolute rather than a life estate. Oakes v. Massey, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1118; In re Espy's Estate, 207 Pa. 459; Shaner v. Wilson, 207 Pa. 550; Canfield v. Canfield, 118 Fed. 1; Lawrence v. Barber, 116 Wis. 294, 93 N. W. 30.

The will must be construed so as to prevent intestacy with reference to any portion of the decedent's estate, if that can be reasonably done. Durboraw v. Durboraw, 67 Kan. 139, 72 Pac. 566. Devise of "undivided one-third" to several held devise of one-third to each. Meiners v. Meiners [Mo.] 78 S. W. 795; Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 66 N. E. 975, 1101; Jones v. Hand, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 56. Under a devise of property to a son for life, and upon his death to his children in fee, a grandchild of the son, being the only "child" surviving him, takes the property. Shaw v. English, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 37; Ward v. Stanard, 81 N. Y. Supp. 906. Where testator left four children and divided his property into four equal parts, devising one less a certain sum to one child, and leaving the other parts undisposed of, held, such parts should go to his other three children, undiminished by the special provision applicable to the one. Brown v. Brown, 81 N. Y. Supp. 918. A power to sell "my said real estate not hereinbefore mentioned" construed, and "said," since testator had not mentioned any real estate but had made bequests of certain legacies, treated as superfluity. In re Levy, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 68; In re Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 504; In re Vilsack's Estate [Pa.] 57 Atl. 32; Young Women's Christian Home v. French, 187 U. S. 401, 47 Law. Ed. 233. Devise in form a life estate, with remainder over, held to be really a fee in remaindermen, hence a substitution on death of one passed a fee direct. Newton v. Odom [S. C.] 45 S. E. 105.

25. Will created a trust for life of son and provided that at his death, any balance of the property remaining should belong absolutely to the son's issue, should any survive him, and if not, it should be disposed of according to the intestate laws. The son was testator's sole heir, and died without issue. Held that, treating the concluding clause as a declaration of intestacy, the property would pass to the son's estate; construed as a gift under the will, it was void. Under the statute against perpetuities, the same result would follow, and interpreted as a gift to the general heirs at law of testator at the time of his death, the result would also be the same, there being nothing to exclude the son from taking as an heir. Thomas v. Castle [Conn.] 56 Atl. 854.

26. A gift "of all the rest, residue and remainder" is not controlled by a subsequent clause stating that the property devised and bequeathed "is my separate prop-

as intestate property.[27] A remainder after a life estate being void, the title to the property vests in the testator's heirs at law, subject to the life estate.[28] Heirs may take to let in after-born devisees.[29]

An invalid devise passes under the residuary clause if there be one, and if not, as intestate property.[30]

In a will of personal property, the general residuary clause carries whatever is not otherwise legally disposed of,[31] but this does not apply where the bequest is of a residue, and the first disposition fails.[32]

Upon the lapse of a legacy charged upon a devise, it inures to the benefit of the devisee.[33] Not so, however, where the legacy is excepted from the devise.[34]

erty and was the community property of my first wife and myself," so as to make other property pass as intestate. Granniss v. Center, 142 Cal. 1, 75 Pac. 324.

27. After-acquired property. Franck v. Franck, 24 Ky. L. R. 1790, 72 S. W. 275. The mere fact that a residuary clause is omitted does not justify the giving of the residue to some specific legatee on a forced construction. Should be distributed under intestate laws. Omission of residuary clause disposing of realty does not show intention to make pecuniary legacies a charge thereon. In re Espy's Estate, 207 Pa. 459. By statute undisposed of accumulations under a valid provision are sometimes given to the persons entitled to the next eventual estate. Under Laws 1896, c. 547, they go to daughter when personalty is given in trust, income to accumulate till death of her husband. Tobin v. Graf, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

28. Murray v. Miller, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 414. Where the remainder over was void under the rule against perpetuities the devises for life were sustained and the remainder held to pass after death of life tenant as intestate property. Buck v. Lincoln [Conn.] 56 Atl. 522.

29. Where land is devised to the testator's daughter-in-law for life, remainder to her grandchildren, in default of grandchildren in esse at the time of the execution of the will or at the death of the testator, the fee vests in the testator's heirs at law for the use of any grandchildren that might be thereafter born. Holton v. Jones, 133 N. C. 399, 45 S. E. 765.

30. Applied to invalid trust. Holmes v. Waller, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380. A will bequeathed and devised to the executors in trust $100,000 of the residue, to give and distribute five years after his death "for such religious, charitable, or educational or other purposes as they may deem advisable," provided that no part of that sum should go to his wife or children. Held, this language shows an intention to have the money distributed for other than charitable uses, if executors see fit, and hence the gift is void, and the sum will go to the widow and children according to the laws of distribution, under another clause providing for the residue. Hyde's Ex'rs v. Hyde, 64 N. J. Eq. 6.

A residuary clause held not to include property previously devised. Holton v. Jones, 133 N. C. 399. A legacy which does not vest in the lifetime of the legatee lapses into the estate out of which it was to be paid, or passes over to some other named legatee or devisee. McLaughlin v. Penney, 65 Kan. 523, 70 Pac. 341.

31. In re Wooley, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 224.

Lapsed legacies pass under residuary clause. Dorsey v. Dodson, 203 Ill. 32, 67 N. E. 395.

A claim against the government for property used passes under the residuary clause in the absence of a provision governing its distribution. Does not descend to the heirs at law under the statute of distributions as a mere gratuity. Camp v. Vaughan, 119 Ga. 131.

A remainder after the expiration of a life estate in personalty, which is undisposed of, goes into the residuum of the estate, and if there is no residuary clause, descends under the laws governing intestacy. Where will gave to widow the income of the estate during her life and made no disposition of the residue or remainder thereof, such remainder is intestate property, and the widow is entitled to her statutory share thereof absolutely. Torrey v. Peabody, 97 Me. 104; Manning v. Lindsley [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1043. The fact that the residuary legatee is also the tenant for life does not change this rule. Id. If the bequest for life is in such terms as to show an intent that the life tenant should have no interest in the corpus of the estate, or anything but the interest, the residuary legacy will be held to give him authority to dispose of the corpus by will. Id.

32. That part of the residue of which the disposition fails will not accrue in augmentation of the remaining parts as a residue of a residue, but will descend as intestate property. In re Wooley, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 224. Under a direction to executors to sell the property, and, after paying certain legacies, "to divide all the rest, residue and remainder of said property" among certain persons, lapsed legacies should not be divided among such residuary legatees, but go to next of kin. Id. Legacy lapsed by death of beneficiary before testator, and there was no provision for happening of such contingency and nothing to show contrary intent. Dorsey v. Dodson, 203 Ill. 32, 67 N. E. 395. Where will directs property to be sold and the proceeds to be divided among several beneficiaries, and the legacy to one of them lapses, his portion of the proceeds of the sale will go to the heirs. Id.

33. A devise of property to a son, "at his death I leave to his daughter $5,000, the balance of his portion of my estate at his own entire disposal," daughter died before father, held, legacy a charge upon estate devised to legatee's father. Ward v. Stanard, 81 N. Y. Supp. 906.

34. Ward v. Stanard, 81 N. Y. Supp. 906.

The words "rest, residue and remainder" of the property are sufficiently broad to include all property not otherwise disposed of,[35] but do not always do so.[36]

The word "balance" operates as a residuary clause.[37]

Specific legacies distinct from the residuary estate do not follow the disposition of the latter.[38]

A direction for falling of unexpended balances into a residuum after payment of legacies and annuities does not mean that the legatees take an estate in the residuum, but that it comprises what is left.[39] A residuum in specific property follows it.[40]

Substitutions.—"Instead of" shows an intent to substitute one provision for another.[41] When a testator declares that property is to go from one beneficiary to another and on certain terms, thence still to others, he has indicated that each of those named is preferred over his heirs or the other objects of his bounty.[42] A substitution of persons who take specifically and as general residuary legatees takes over both shares.[43]

Gifts freed from void limitations.—Where the remainder is sought to be charged with a void trust, the remainderman takes the fee,[44] and if the life tenant's heirs be remaindermen, the fee may fall on the life tenant.[45] Where a void accumulation is provided for, the property goes to those presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate.[46] Where a power of distribution created in a will is void

35. Kelley v. Snow [Mass.] 70 N. E. 89. After a devise of the residuary estate to named persons in trust for life and appointing the trustees, a subsequent clause giving to the same persons "all the rest" etc. to be divided equally between them, held not intended as a substitute of the prior clause. McKinlay v. Van Dusen, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 200.

36. Where the testator owned 15 acres of land on east side of Bennock Road and devised the eastern 5 acres to his wife for life with no disposition over, and then devised to his son "the residue of my land lying on the east side of the Bennock Road," held to mean the remaining 10 acres and on death of the wife, the 5 acres descended intestate. Young v. Quimby, 98 Me. 167.

37. Where a will gives pecuniary legacies, indicating no other fund for their payment, and there is no other personalty for their payment, and then directs a farm to be sold and "after paying all my debts, the balance to go to" a daughter except certain after-named legacies, the daughter takes as residuary legatee and all legacies are payable out of proceeds of farm. Lynch v. Spicer, 53 W. Va. 426.

38. Russell v. Hilton, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 178.

39. Brigham v. Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, 126 Fed. 796. "Unexpended balances" used in connection with legacies held to be residuary words and not to import a precedent gift and limitation over. Id.

40. Where a testator gave a specified part of specific property to a legatee for life and then gave the rest of the said specific property to other legatees absolutely, held, upon the death of the life tenant, his part of the said specified property passed to the other legatees of the rest of that specific property and not under a residuary clause. Musgrave v. Pope's Ex'rs [Va.] 45 S. E. 809.

41. Provision in codicil giving legatees income "instead of" principal, held to give them life estate only. Cruikshank v. Cruikshank, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 401. Will provided for trust to pay income to daughter during her life and after her death for support of her children, the principal to be paid to them at maturity, and if no issue reached maturity, then the principal was to go equally to testator's remaining children. Codicil provided "This bequest I hereby amend, by giving to said issue the income of said fund, instead of the principal." Held, that a son of the daughter took only a life estate in the principal and testator's remaining children took the remainder. Id.

42. Jossey v. Brown [Ga.] 47 S. E. 350.

43. A testator devised his property to his wife for life, at her death certain designated property to go to certain designated nephews and nieces, then by another clause, he devised the residue of his estate to the said nephews and nieces, and by the next paragraph provided that if any of the said nephews or nieces should die before his wife, without children, the others should take the deceased's share or shares; held, this clause applied to the separate devises as well as to the residuary clause. Curtis v. Waldron, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351.

44. Where by will a gift is made of a remainder in fee, and in the same will there follows language showing a clear intent to charge such remainder with a trust invalid under the rule against perpetuities, the donee takes such remainder in fee. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427.

45. In case of invalidity of an attempted trust to which an estate for life, with absolute power of appointment and in default thereof with remainder to the life tenant's heirs, is subject, the life tenant takes the fee. Dodsworth v. Dam, 88 Misc. [N. Y.] 684.

46. A bequest to legatees, the income up to a certain sum to be paid them and the surplus to be paid on their death to per-because executed contrary to provision contained in the will creating it, the property passes under the first will.[47]

(§ 5) E. Provisions respecting administration, management, control, disposal.—Any language adopted in a will which expressly or by fair implication clothes a given party with the authority and duties of an executor will be held equivalent to an appointment.[48] The power to appoint substitute executors is not necessarily exhausted by the first exercise.[49]

Unless the will otherwise provides, the usual rules as to the payment of debts, taxes, repairs and expenses, and the part of the estate primarily liable therefor, apply.[50]

A direction to pay legacies as soon as practicable justifies a postponement when necessary for the best interests of the estate.[51] The estate should, if possible, be administered so as to carry out testator's purposes.[52] A power of sale will be implied when necessary to carry out the provisions of the will,[53] as will other necessary powers.[54] sons named, held, this latter being a void accumulation, goes to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate. Reeves v. Snook, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 303.

47. In the original will and codicil, it was provided if the wife made no will the children were to be equalized and a grandchild was to receive one-half of one share Ketchin v. Rion [S. C.] 47 S. E. 376.

48. Powers granted to one held not to show intent to constitute him executor. In re Hill's Estate, 102 Mo. App. 617, 77 S. W. 110; Strode v. Bierman, 102 Mo. App. 617, 77 S. W. 110.

49. A power "in case the trustees die or refuse the trust to appoint a successor or successors" is not exhausted by a single appointment. Burghard v. Barrett's Trustee, 24 Ky. L. R. 1313, 71 S. W. 500.

50. See Estates of Decedents, § 6, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1101, et seq. A will providing that the testator's children should be supported and educated from the surplus income of his estate until they arrived at a certain age, up to which time the executors should advance to such children such sums of money as would benefit or promote their happiness or comfort, such advances to be charged against them, held, only the amount advanced for happiness and comfort should be treated as advances. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405. Under a clause allowing the executors to set aside a fund for the use of the testator's wife and son and pay them such sums out of it as the executors deem fit, the setting aside of such sum and designation of the wife as sole beneficiary thereof does not entitle her to the whole fund. Russell v. Hilton, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 778.

A devise in trust "to pay such proportions * * * to such persons as the trustees may ascertain and a majority shall agree" to have been the testatrix's expressed wish, or as she might hereafter formally designate, is void for uncertainty. Trunkey v. Van Sant, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 272.

51. An executor was directed to pay legacies out of the income of land "as soon as practicable." If the legacies had all been paid out of the first year's crop, money would have to be borrowed to operate the lands the following year. Held, the executor was justified in postponing payment of the legacies. Henry v. Henderson [Miss.] 33 So. 960. Refers to the exigencies of the settlement of the estate, and does not confer on them arbitrary power to delay payment. Savin v. Webb, 96 Md. 504.

52. The estate should be administered so as to carry out the purposes of the testator, if consistent with the law, as they appear from the will, interpreted as a whole and in the light of the circumstances in which it was made. In a direction that the "trustee" pay a certain claim, the word "trustee" held inadvertently used for "executor," the same person being executor and trustee. In re Martin, 25 R. I. 1. A will provided "First, after all my debts are paid, I give and bequeath to my son all my real estate; second, I give to my wife all my personal property of any and all kinds of which I may die seized." Held, that testator's intention was that the debts, of which the principal one was a mortgage, held by the son on the lands devised to him, should be paid by the son. Wiggins v. Wiggins [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 148.

53. Where a will gave property to executors to invest until the legatees each arrived at the age of 25 years, when it was to be paid them, held, the executors had a power of sale. Mendel v. Lewis, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 271. Will construed and executor held to have power of sale where a subsequent clause provided that on a request of a majority of the sons the executors should sell any portion, the only effect of such was that if the executors disagreed as to sale, a majority of the sons might compel them to act. Nichols v. Nichols, 86 N. Y. Supp. 719.

54. Where a will devised unequal annuities to two sons, and a legacy to be paid each when he attained majority, the trustees should deduct from each year's income an amount which with interest would produce the legacy at the appointed time. United States Trust Co. v. Soher, 85 N. Y. Supp. 266.

A power of sale given to executors for purpose of distribution among the remaindermen after termination of the life estate does not empower a sale before the death of the life tenant. Ryan v. Dodds [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 131. Testatrix gave her husband an estate for life in all her property and at his death directed it to be sold and the

Whether powers conferred on trustees are discretionary and therefore personal or whether they are attached to the office is a question of intention, to be ascertained from a fair construction of the whole will and the nature and objects of the trust.[55]

Power to manage the estate includes power to make necessary improvements.[56] Provisions in regard to appraisement and the order in which the property is to be sold must be followed.[57] A direction in the will of a testator that his trade should be continued is valid, and the duty being imposed upon the executors, they become trustees.[58]

Where a testator directs property to be sold without expressly vesting the power in any one, and the proceeds of the sale are made a trust fund or are to be distributed by the executors, the power to sell is vested by implication in the executors.[59]

Authority to sell rented property upon certain notice to the tenant does not prohibit a sale to him.[60] Discretion as to administration and government of a charity left to the executors is binding on it.[61]

An ademption by acts of the testator occurs only when he gives in his lifetime to a legatee what he had left him by will,[63] or where, before his death, he so deals proceeds divided. She further gave the executor "full power to do all that is needed to the full execution thereof, to sell and convey, by deed or otherwise, real and personal property; to make all payments, divisions and dispositions herein provided." Held, that the power of sale was given merely for the purpose of distribution after the husband's death and did not authorize a sale before that time. Id.

A provision authorizing trustees "to sell and convey" property does not give them authority to mortgage (Potter v. Hodgman, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233), or exchange it under a power to sell either for cash or part on bond and mortgage (Huber v. Case, 87 N. Y. Supp. 663).

55. Where testator devised property which he owned separately to trustees to invest and manage as though it were their own, and that which he owned jointly with his son to him as trustee with the same powers, the share of testator's estate in the proceeds of any sale of the joint property to go to the first named trustees, the power conferred on the son was held not a personal one, but one attached to the office of trustee. Kennard v. Bernard [Md.] 56 Atl. 793.

56. Where a will gave an executor power to manage the residuary estate for benefit of nephews until the youngest became of age, he was justified in building a gin house out of one year's crop without order of the court. Henry v. Henderson [Miss.] 33 So. 960.

57. Testator authorized executors, who were testator's sons, to sell a coal vein underlying a certain farm, and provided that when the coal was sold, the farm should be appraised, and that the executors might then take the farm if they desired, upon paying the other children their proportional shares, which were charged upon the land. Upon failure to take the farm they were authorized to sell it and distribute the proceeds. Held, that they had no authority to sell to a railroad a right of way through the farm before a sale of the coal and an appraisement as provided for. McClane v. McClane, 207 Pa. 465.

58. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405. Beneficiaries have no power to object to the continuance of the business and require an immediate division of the trust fund. Id.

59. Will construed to contemplate a sale of realty, if necessary, in 20 years, with implied power of sale in executors. Bedford v. Bedford, 110 Tenn. 204, 75 S. W. 1017. Where the will directs a sale of real estate as a part of the settlement of the estate, the implication is that testator intended the executor to make the sale. Lawrence v. Barber, 116 Wis. 294, 93 N. W. 30.

60. A will gave the executor authority to sell rented property and to settle her estate as soon as convenient, and directed that three months' notice should be given the tenant. Held, this did not prohibit a sale to the tenant. Hanbest v. Grayson, 206 Pa. 59.

61. A devise for the establishment of a college, the executors of the will "to devise and promulgate such rules and regulations as they shall deem proper for the government of the institution, and which shall be carried out and be obligatory" as though set out in the will, held, rules and regulations so drawn are binding upon the trustees of the college. Clayton v. Hallett, 30 Colo. 231, 70 Pac. 429. Where a will provided for the establishment of the college under the executors' direction within ten years of the testator's death, it to be for the benefit of a city, held it was the intention of the testator that the city should not be called upon to accept or execute the trust until after the establishment of the college by the executors. Id.

63. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. Where a parent gives a legacy with the subject of the bequest as to render it impossible to effect the transfer or payment which the will directs.[64] A mere change of form will not work an ademption.[65]

Parol evidence is admissible to show whether or not testator intended a subsequent gift as an ademption of the legacy,[66] but not to show that the testator intended that a benefit accruing to him by the ademption should pass to the legatees in lieu of the claims adeemed.[67]

Abatement.—General legacies abate before specific ones.[68]

A legacy given in consideration of the relinquishment by the legatee of some subsisting right or interest is entitled to priority over general legacies, which are mere bounties, though the value of the legacy greatly exceeds the value of the rights relinquished.[69] to a child without stating any particular object for which it is given, it will be regarded as a portion and any settlement by way of a portion, or any advancement thereafter made to such child by testator during his lifetime will be regarded as an ademption of the legacy either pro tanto or in full as the case may be. Legacies to be paid by trustees to a son on his going into business and to daughters on their marriages held adeemed by gifts made to them by testator during her lifetime at such times. In re Weiss, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 71. It is only where the testator stands in loco parentis that a subsequent gift will operate as an ademption. A subsequent gift to a nephew legatee of a sum equal to the legacy is not an ademption of the legacy. Wilson v. Smith, 117 Fed. 707. Indorsement of a note to a legatee, without delivery, the note being left among testator's papers, does not constitute ademption of a bequest of the note. Waters v. Hatch [Mo.] 79 S. W. 916. The giving of a security deed acts only as a partial ademption. Carr v. Berry, 116 Ga. 372.

64. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. When lost, disposed of, or so substantially changed or altered as not to exist in specie when the will takes effect. A legacy of all claims of testator against his father and all interest in his father's estate is adeemed by testator's collection of the same during his lifetime by taking a bond and mortgage on land sold by order of court to pay the father's debts. Rogers v. Rogers [S. C.] 45 S. E. 176. A devise of land to a church on condition that it build a church and parsonage thereon within a certain time is revoked by a conveyance of the land by testatrix before her death, since the performance of the conditions is thereby rendered impossible. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. Ky. St. § 2068, providing that the conversion of money or property devised to one of testator's heirs into other property or thing, with or without testator's consent shall not be an ademption unless a contrary intention appears from the will, or by parol or other evidence, applies only when devisee is an heir of testator. Franck v. Franck, 24 Ky. L. R. 1790, 72 S. W. 275. A deed executed on the day of the execution of the will renders inoperative a devise of the same land to the grantee subject to a charge for the payment of a legacy. Marshall v. Hartzfelt [Mo. App.] 71 S. W. 1061.

65. Sale of property and taking note and mortgage as security for purchase price does not adeem legacies to be paid out of the proceeds of its sale, where a part of such purchase price is still unpaid at testator's death. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683. An exchange by testatrix of certain bank stock bequeathed by her for stock in another bank formed by the reorganization and consolidation of four banks, of which the bank issuing the original stock was one, does not work an ademption of the legacy. Transaction an exchange and not a sale, and a small additional cash payment, made to equalize values, did not change its character. In re Pierce, 25 R. I. 34. Where, after the devise, the testator executed a lease of the land with redeemable ground rent and by subsequent codicil bequeathed the ground rent to the devisees, a redemption of the ground rent during testator's life did not operate as an ademption of the legacy where a check for the redemption money was enclosed in a letter by testator directing payment to the legatees. Joynes v. Hamilton, 57 Atl. 25. Exchange of bonds for others in same company does not work ademption. Identity required is substantial identity only. Blair v. Scribner [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 318. A bequest of stocks and bonds of a particular corporation held not adeemed by a contract for its conversion into a note of the company, the conversion not yet having taken place, and the time when it should take place not having been fixed. Intention controls. In re Frahm's Estate, 120 Iowa, 85, 94 N. W. 444, Roodewig v. Steffen, 120 Iowa, 85, 94 N. W. 444.

66. Smith v. Smith, 117 Fed. 707.

67. Rogers v. Rogers [S. C.] 45 S. E. 176.

68. In California, a devise of specific property is not exempt from paying its proportionate share of the amount to which omitted issue are entitled. In re Ross' Estate, 140 Cal. 282, 73 Pac. 976. A legacy of the amount due on a bond and mortgage was given an adopted son by a widow, who gave cash in bank to certain others. Held, legacy to adopted son exempt from abatement, debts to be paid out of cash in bank. In re Brown, 87 N. Y. Supp. 247.

69. Legacy given in lieu of dower. In re Woodbury's Estate, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 143. A bequest because of affection "and also in full satisfaction of any and all claims," such bequest being more than sufficient to settle the claim, is subject to the payment of debts of the estate. In re Thayer's Estate [Cal.] 76 Pac. 41.

Where realty and personalty are specifically given, both should abate ratably for the payment of debts, unless the debts were expressly or impliedly charged on the realty.[70]

Satisfaction of debts by legacies.—Where one being indebted to a legatee gives him by will a sum as great or greater than the debt, it will be construed as a satisfaction, though nothing is said in the will in regard to the matter.[71] Where it is agreed that an existing indebtedness shall be paid by some benefit bestowed in the debtor's will, a testamentary disposition subsequently made in favor of the creditor will be deemed to be intended as a satisfaction.[72] Deficiency of assets may also require a legacy to be construed as a satisfaction.[73] A charge may be extinguished and a legacy pass free from it analogous to an ademption.[74]

(§ 5) G. Bills for construction.—The special and equitable jurisdiction to construe wills is simply an incident of the general jurisdiction over trusts.[75] Hence, a court of equity will never entertain a suit brought solely for the purpose of interpreting the provisions of a will, unless some equitable relief is sought,[76] and will never interpret a will which deals wholly with and disposes of purely legal estates and interests, and makes no attempt to create any trust relations with respect to the property donated.[77] Questions concerning the rights of persons in case of the happening of certain prospective events will not be considered,[78] nor will clauses having no bearing on the case before the court,[79] nor can such suits be

72. Creditor may then have election, but cannot take legacy and then enforce his claim. Alerding v. Allison, 31 Ind. App. 397, 68 N. E. 185.

73. Legacy held to have been intended as a satisfaction of a claim under an oral contract to pay for services by will, though amount was less than claimed, where it appeared that assets were insufficient to pay the sum claimed and the legacies. Alerding v. Allison, 31 Ind. App. 397, 68 N. E. 185.

74. After a liquidation of the partnership by testator, whereby he assumed part of the partnership debt, held, there was nothing due him from the firm which could be deducted from a legacy charged with whatever was due testator from the firm. Howe v. Howe, 184 Mass. 34, 67 N. E. 639.

75, 76. Hughes v. Hughes, 30 Ind. App. 591, 66 N. E. 763. Will not construe for sole purpose of giving counsel and advice to parties, but only for purpose of giving directions to trustees, etc., under the will. Hoagland v. Cooper [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 705. In a suit against legatees to construe a will, in which it was held that some of defendants took no interest thereunder, an injunction restraining defendants from bringing suits against the executors for their legacies denied. Parties entitled to legacies may sue and improbable that others will. Tiffany v. Emmett, 24 R. I. 411.

77. Hughes v. Hughes, 30 Ind. App. 591, 66 N. E. 763. Has no jurisdiction to entertain a bill filed by a beneficiary for the purpose of determining whether or not he has a right to sell the property devised to him. Complainant cannot vest court with jurisdiction by himself creating necessity for construction. Mansfield v. Mansfield, 203 Ill. 92, 67 N. E. 497. Where no trust is created, neither the executor nor the heirs or devisees, who claim only a legal title in the estate, will be permitted to come into equity to obtain a judicial construction of the provisions of a will, but will be referred to their remedies at law. Anderson v. Anderson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 276. Bill cannot be maintained by a beneficiary named in two clauses of the will for the sole purpose of having the court declare that the first clause is abrogated by the second, the means of forming a correct legal judgment being patent on the instrument. McKinlay v. Van Dusen, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 200. A will devised to a niece premises for life, fee to her issue or if she died without issue, it was further limited. Executors authorized to take charge of property not directly devised took charge of this. The niece sued them in equity. Held, equity had jurisdiction, for if the executors were usurping the duties of testamentary trustees under an erroneous construction of the will, the construction was purely a question of law and could be determined by the court in its equitable capacity. Rooney v. Bodkin, 87 N. Y. Supp. 800.

78. Hall v. Cogswell, 183 Mass. 521, 67 N. E. 644. It is only when the executor is under a present necessity of acting, or where he has reason to believe that he will soon be called upon to act under a doubtful provision, that he is entitled to instructions. Complaint alleging that defendants claim that a duty and trust is imposed on complainant as executrix to sell property and to keep buildings insured and in good repair, and that she is unable to determine her duties as executrix, held sufficient to show present duty and grounds for construction. Hughes v. Hughes, 30 Ind. App. 591, 66 N. E. 763.

79. Davis v. Davis, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 401. On a bill by executors for a construction of the will, the court will not direct any disposition of the realty where the executors are not charged with any trust or maintained by any person, executor or otherwise, unless the construction may affect his rights in person or in property or his duties under the will as executor, trustee or otherwise.[80] If the court has acquired jurisdiction to construe a will creating a trust, it will retain the case for the purpose of construing other provisions of the same will.[81]

Costs in such cases are generally payable out of the estate when the suit is beneficial to it,[82] and in some states include attorney's fees.[83]

On a bill to construe a will, legatees and distributees directly interested in the provisions to be construed are necessary parties,[84] and a decree that remainder over to grandchildren is contingent is binding both on grandchildren made parties and those subsequently born.[85]

The power of the various courts to entertain bills for the construction of wills is fixed by statute and varies in the different states,[86] as does the mode of contesting the validity of a bequest,[87] and the right to appeal,[88] and the procedure thereon.[89] power in relation thereto. Kidder's Ex'rs v. Kidder [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 154.

80. Under Me. Rev. St. c. 77, § 6. Executor held not to be entitled to construction. Burgess v. Shepherd, 97 Me. 522. Clause devising land not construed on bill for construction by administrator, in absence of showing that he will be unable to settle estate without resorting to realty. Drake v. True [N. H.] 56 Atl. 749. An executor of an executor cannot maintain an action for the construction of the will of the first testator, unless such construction is necessary to enable him to discharge the duties of his office. Has legal capacity to sue. Leggett v. Stevens, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 612. The representatives of a deceased legatee may maintain an action for a construction of the will of decedent's ancestor to determine conflicting claims to the unexpended balance of the legacy. Leggett v. Stevens, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 612. An action for the construction of a will may be maintained by one both in his individual and representative capacity, though his individual interest calls for a construction which as a representative he must resist. Complaint sufficient. Hughes v. Hughes, 30 Ind. App. 591, 66 N. E. 763.

81. Orr v. Yates [Ill.] 70 N. E. 731.

Sufficiency of complaint: A notice of application for interpretation of a particular provision relating to realty is sufficient, though describing land not mentioned in the will, but actually owned by testator, the description in the will being of property not owned by him. Woodard v. Norris [Iowa] 91 N. W. 1064. Complaint in action to construe held to state a cause of action. Hallock v. Hallock, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 508.

82. In suit instituted by executor and beneficial to estate. Tiffany v. Emmet, 24 R. I. 411. In Wisconsin, for costs of appeal by legatee from judgment construing will. In re Stuart's Will, 115 Wis. 294, 91 N. W. 688. When executors would inevitably have had to resort to the court for aid in construing a will, the estate should bear the costs of litigation between claimants in which that construction is ascertained. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 110 Va. 537, 44 S. E. 904. A statute allowing payment of attorney's fees out of the estate incurred in construing the will does not allow them for litigation concerning the identity of the legatees. Code, § 3415, authorizing payment out of the estate of attorney's fees incurred in construing a will, where a will left property to the testator's nieces, an unsuccessful contest by the heir of a deceased niece to have the will construed as including him does not authorize the payment to him of attorney's fees incurred. In re Nicholson's Will [Iowa] 99 N. W. 300.

84. Under Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, §§ 6198, 6202, 5963. Stevens v. Smith [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 706. Where, in an action to construe a will, the issue of validity was presented and involved the rights of grandchildren of the testator, such grandchildren were necessary parties. Gaddess v. Norris' Ex'rs [Va.] 46 S. E. 905.

85. Made parties represent the class. Thompson v. Adams, 205 Ill. 552, 69 N. E. 1.

86. In Nebraska, the county court has jurisdiction to construe wills for purpose of administration and for the benefit of the executor alone; such construction will not affect rights of adverse claimants under will. Andersen v. Andersen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 276. Has exclusive jurisdiction of an action by the representative for a construction of the will to enable him to administer the estate properly. Const. art. 6, § 16, does not prohibit construction for such purpose, nor does such suit adjudicate any rights between adverse claimants under a devise or persons claiming adversely to the estate. Youngson v. Bond [Neb.] 95 N. W. 700.

In New York, where the action is to charge the payment of the debts of the widow against the husband's estate, which involves a construction of the will, the supreme court has jurisdiction. Hallock v. Hallock, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 508.

In Washington, the superior court has inherent power to construe wills to determine identity of legatee, though raised on settlement of the final accounts of the executor. Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America, General Synod v. McMillan, 31 Wash. 643, 72 Pac. 502.

87. In West Virginia, the mode of contesting the validity of a bequest is by bill to construe and expound the will. Cannot be raised by bill to contest validity of the § 6. Validity, operation and effect in general.—There is a conflict of authority as to whether the law in force when the will was executed,[90] or that in force at the time of testator's death, controls.[91]

The law of the testator's domicile governs the construction and validity of a disposition of personalty,[92] and that of the situs a disposition of realty.[93]

Conditions in a will manifestly intended to bring about a separation between husband and wife, or a divorce, are void as against public policy,[94] but provisions for the wife in case of the happening of such contingencies are not.[95] Conditions attempting to incite murder are also void.[96]

A will is not conditional which merely states the motive for making it, unless it shows an intent that it shall become operative only on the happening of a certain contingency.[97]

Future limitations may be made by way of executory devise.[98] will. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. The mode of contesting the validity of a bequest is by a bill to construe and expound the will, and not by a bill to contest its validity. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227.

88. In New York, executors as such cannot appeal from a judgment of the appellate division construing a will in a controversy submitted by them and all parties interested. Isham v. New York Ass'n for Improving Condition of Poor, 177 N. Y. 218, 69 N. E. 367.

In North Carolina, in a suit to construe a will, a refusal to order a reference for an account of advancements before construing the will is appealable. Lee v. Baird, 134 N. C. 410.

89. Where the court found facts in a suit to construe a will as stated in a deposition, and no issue was made as to facts on appeal, the court, on appeal, properly considered the evidence in the deposition in construing the will. Lee v. Baird, 134 N. C. 410.

90. The law in force at the time of the making of the will controls. R. I. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 203, giving children and issue of children the right to share, where omitted by accident or mistake, does not apply to a will executed prior to Feb. 1, 1896. Roach v. Roach [R. I.] 56 Atl. 684. Under a will made in 1848, words of desire, recommendation and confidence were held to reduce the estate to life with power of appointment. In re Lisle's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 262.

91. The statute in force at the time of testator's death governs the validity of the will. As to creation of trusts, etc. Coleman v. O'Leary's Ex'rs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1248, 70 S. W. 1068.

92. As to accumulations of income. Hussey v. Sargent, 25 Ky. L. R. 315, 75 S. W. 211. Applied where testator disposed of personalty by will under power. Ward v. Stanard, 81 N. Y. Supp. 906.

94, 95. Ellis v. Birkhead, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 71 S. W. 31. A devise in trust to terminate "in the event my daughter be divorced from her * * * husband" is not void as against public policy, as tending to incite divorce, the will reciting that testator's intention was to secure a sustenance to the daughter against business vicissitudes and the improvidence of her husband. Extrinsic evidence to show that testator was opposed to the marriage for the purpose of showing an intent to incite divorce is not admissible. Id.

Note: As to the validity of the devise, the court cited Wright v. Mayer, 62 N. Y. S. 610; In re Haight's Will, 64 N. Y. S. 1029; O'Brien v. Barkley, 28 N. Y. S. 1049; Hawke v. Euyart [Neb.] 46 N. W. 442, 27 Am. St. R. 391; Thayer v. Spear, 58 Vt. 327; Ransdell v. Boston, 50 N. E. 111, and Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452, 22 Pac. 169.

96. A will giving a wife the income of a trust estate, the corpus of the estate to go to her on the death of her husband, if she survives him, is not void as against public policy in that it attempts to incite murder. Ellis v. Birkhead, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 71 S. W. 31.

97. A will made in contemplation of a journey and beginning, "Realizing the uncertainty of life at all times and the dangers incident to travel," and then disposing of the property, is a valid testamentary disposition, though testator did not die until after return. In re Redhead's Estate [Miss.] 35 So. 761. "I am going on a journey and may not ever return, and if I do not this is my last request," is a condition precedent to the operation of the writing as a will. On proof that the writer died after return from the "journey" the writing was properly rejected. Eaton v. Brown, 20 App. D. C. 453. A holographic will beginning, "I am going on a journey and may not ever return. And if I do not, this is my last request," and ending, "All I have is my own hard earnings and I propose to leave it to whom I please," is not conditional. Eaton v. Brown, 24 Sup. Ct. 487.

98. Illustrations: A limitation in a will providing that if the devisee should die without heirs the estate should revert back to the next of kin is a valid executory devise. May v. Lewis, 132 N. C. 115. In a devise for life with remainder to children share and share alike, the children of a deceased child to take the share of the parent, all the children take by way of executory devise. Rutledge v. Fishburne, 66 S. C. 155. A gift for life with remainder over to children of the life tenant, and in the absence of children to brothers and sisters, creates an executory devise in the event of the tenant's death without children, to his brothers and sisters in fee. Springs v. Scott, 132 N. C. 548

WITNESSES.

§ 1. Attendance and fees. The subpoena.—Whether a subpoena will issue in a given case rests in the discretion of the court.[1] United States commissioners must conform to state practice in the issuance of subpoenas.[2] Notaries cannot issue subpoenas.[3]

A witness duly served with subpoena refusing to attend or give testimony is punishable as for contempt.[4] A court cannot compel the attendance of a nonresident of the state by attachment where served with a subpoena while temporarily within the state.[5]

Subpoena duces tecum will issue on the proper showing,[6] and in a proper case.[7] An attorney may be required to produce documents of his client which the client could have been required to produce.[8]

1. The court, in the midst of a trial, may refuse to issue a subpoena for a distant witness. If his testimony is important, a postponement should be asked until the witness can be brought in. Godwin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 804. It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to direct issue of subpoenas to witnesses to testify on motion for change of venue. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557. In Louisiana, the summons of a witness from another parish is not a matter of right, but is within the discretion of the court on a showing as to what is to be proved by the witness. State v. Nix, 111 La. 812. Where parties were put under the rule and a list of witnesses for each side furnished opposing counsel, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow a witness subpoenaed on the second day to testify to facts fully testified to where the evidence was nearly all in and no good reason given for omission from lists. Crenshaw v. Gardner, 25 Ky. L. R. 506, 76 S. W. 26.

2. United States commissioners in New York have no power to compel the attendance of a witness by a subpoena issued by him at the instance of a defendant and served outside of the county where the hearing takes place, unless an order therefor is obtained from a Federal court or judge in conformity to the state practice. United States v. Beavers, 125 Fed. 778. The bankrupt act allows courts having charge of the administration of the bankrupt's estate to require examination of witnesses in other districts before commissioners who may compel attendance by proper process as in other cases. In re Williams, 123 Fed. 321.

3. Burns v. Superior Court of City & County of San Francisco, 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597. A notary authorized to take depositions has no power to issue a subpoena duces tecum. Dancel v. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co., 128 Fed. 753. See, also, Depositions, 1 Curr. Law, p. 917.

4. Burns v. Superior Court of City & County of San Francisco, 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597.

5. State v. Kennan [Wash.] 74 Pac. 381.

6. Bentley v. People, 104 Ill. App. 353. A Federal court has power to issue a subpoena duces tecum. Dancel v. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co., 128 Fed. 753. A subpoena duces tecum will not be issued by the clerk as of course, but only by the court on proper showing. Id. The mere allegation, in an application for a subpoena duces tecum, that the evidence "is material and necessary for use in said suit," is not sufficient to warrant the issue. Id.

7. It will not issue to require correspondence of seller of goods with third persons after their rejection by buyer. Peterson Bros. v. Mineral King Fruit Co., 140 Cal. 624, 74 Pac. 162. An order for the delivery to commissioners of books of a concern carrying on business is improper where they are to be used by a witness in giving his testimony and not intended for inspection or examination. In re Randall, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 245. A defendant in an action in another state cannot have a subpoena set aside on the ground that no notice was given other defendants. In re Shawmut Min. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 1059. See, also, Discovery and Inspection, 1 Curr. Law, p. 930; Evidence, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1136.

8. Jones v. Reilly, 174 N. Y. 97, 66 N. E. 649.

The laws of Oregon allow the transmission of a subpoena by telegraph.[9]

A court is without power to order a corporation to produce an officer beyond the jurisdiction as a witness, the corporation itself having no power and being under no legal duty to produce him.[10]

Fees and mileage.—The witness is not required to obey a subpoena unless mileage and one day's attendance are paid, if not waived.[11] A witness should be allowed fees for each case in which he testifies,[12] but is not entitled to mileage for going and returning to and from his home each day during the time the case is on call.[13] To entitle the witness to fees, he must be properly served[14] with a legal subpoena,[15] or appear by request.[16] Witnesses cannot appeal from an order disallowing fees.[17]

§ 2. Capacity and competency of witnesses in general.—A witness is not to be impeached by his intelligence or for the lack of it,[18] if he understands the nature of an oath,[19] nor, in most states, by disbelief in a Supreme Being or a future state of rewards and punishments.[20]

The right to examine a witness as to his competency may be waived.[21]

Children.—The competency of a child as a witness is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge.[22] Intelligence, ability to comprehend the meaning of an oath and the moral obligation to tell the truth, and not age, are the tests by which the competency of a child is determined.[23] Children may be ren-

9. B. & C. Comp. St. § 4762. Egan v. Finney, 42 Or. 599, 72 Pac. 133. It is apparent that a subpoena transmitted by telegraph had not been properly served where the copy had no return endorsed thereon and the sheriff's bill was for fewer words than those contained in the subpoena. Id.

10. Central Grain & Stock Exch. v. Board of Trade of Chicago [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 463.

11. A witness in a patent contest case is not punishable for contempt for failure to obey subpoena unless traveling expenses and witness fee for one day are tendered at the time of service, unless expressly waived. Failure to object that no tender was made not an implied waiver. In re Boeshore, 125 Fed. 651. A witness is not subject to attachment for failure to appear before a referee unless mileage and one day's attendance are paid or tendered. In re Kerber, 125 Fed. 653.

12. Where three cases are tried together and each witness who testifies is sworn in each case, he is properly allowed three witnesses' fees. L. E. Waterman Co. v. Lockwood, 128 Fed. 174.

13. Chicago City R. Co. v. Burke, 102 Ill. App. 661.

14. Double mileage and per diem to a witness attending from a distance, as authorized by a statute, is not allowable unless the witness is properly served with subpoena [B. & C. Comp. St. Or. § 807]. Egan v. Finney, 42 Or. 599, 72 Pac. 133.

15. There may be no allowance of fees for attendance of witnesses subpoenaed on a subpoena in which their names had been illegally inserted by the sheriff. Manuel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 30.

16. Witnesses appearing by request are entitled to mileage. Egan v. Finney, 42 Or. 599, 72 Pac. 133. Witnesses attending Federal court at the request of a party to the action and sworn are entitled to mileage, though not subpoenaed; but where they reside in another district, the mileage must be limited to 100 miles each way. Griggsby Const. Co. v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co., 123 Fed. 751.

17. Witnesses in a criminal proceeding have no right of appeal from an order disallowing their fees as certified by the clerk, because they are not "parties" to the proceedings. State v. Fair [Wash.] 76 Pac. 731.

18. Chicago City R. Co. v. Biederman, 102 Ill. App. 617.

19. One entirely ignorant of the meaning of the ceremony of administering an oath is not a competent witness. Lee v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 67 Kan. 402, 73 Pac. 110. But see State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 983, where it was held that a witness stating that he did not know the meaning of an oath was qualified where he stated that he knew the meaning of perjury and his testimony at great length was intelligently given.

20. State v. Williams, 111 La. 179. Witness may not be interrogated as to belief in the existence of a Supreme Being. Brink v. Stratton, 176 N. Y. 150, 68 N. E. 148.

21. The right to examine a witness on his voir dire is waived where objection is made after examination by the state and the witness has commenced to give his testimony. Henderson v. State, 135 Ala. 43.

22. Ham v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 929; People v. Wilmot, 139 Cal. 103, 72 Pac. 838. Under statutes declaring children under a certain age incompetent witnesses "when they are incapable of receiving or relating just impressions of fact," the question of their competency lies in the discretion of the court. Testimony of child under 14 in prosecution for a felony committed upon her. People v. Stouter, 142 Cal. 146, 75 Pac. 780.

23. Shannon v. Swanson, 208 Ill. 52, 69 N. E. 869. It is material that the meaning and obligation of an oath be appreciated and comprehended. State v. King, 117 Iowa, 484, 91 N. W. 768. Extent of appreciation of Christian precepts not decisive. Id.

Held competent: A child nine years old, who testified on voir dire that God made dered competent by instruction either before or during the progress of the trial.[24] But the mere fact that instruction as to the nature and obligation of an oath was given will not alone render a child competent.[25]

A deaf person consciously sworn is qualified, though he did not actually hear the oath administered to him along with other witnesses.[26]

Husband and wife are generally disqualified to testify for or against each other without the other's consent.[27] There is no disqualification where the spouse is not a party,[28] or if a party, not a necessary one,[29] or the action is by or against one of them in a representative capacity.[30] In some states, where husband and wife are joined as parties plaintiff or defendant they are competent witnesses for or against each other.[31] Where a wife does not offer herself as a witness in an action instituted by her, the husband may testify to any matter that she might have testified to.[32] The statutes of many states provide that either spouse her, that it was wrong to tell a story, that she would be punished if she did, would be put in jail and would go to the "bad place" when she died, is a competent witness. Eatman v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 16. A boy of ten knew it was wrong to tell a falsehood, and that those who told them go to "hell," and that here they would go to the "pen," and evinced intelligence, though he did not fully comprehend the meaning of the words "hell" and "penitentiary." North Tex. Const. Co. v. Bostick [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 109. A child a little over five. Trim v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 718. A child of seven. Reyna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 25; Shannon v. Swanson, 208 Ill. 52, 69 N. E. 869. A child of 8 years. Castleberry v. State, 135 Ala. 24. A boy 11 years. Howard v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 950, 70 S. W. 295. A boy of 12. White v. State, 136 Ala. 58.

Held incompetent: A child under 3 or 4 years of age should not be sworn unless it is shown that it has a due sense of the obligation of an oath. State v. Wilson, 109 La. 74. A boy under 12 not knowing his age, with no moral training and with imperfect knowledge as to the place of the crime about which he was to testify, was incompetent. White v. State, 136 Ala. 58.

24. State v. King, 117 Iowa, 484, 91 N. W. 768. The competency of a child as a witness is not affected by the fact that the attorney instructed him as to the nature and obligation of an oath. North Tex. Const. Co. v. Bostick [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 109.

25. After instruction by attorney, the child said she did not know the meaning of being sworn or of "evidence" or "obligation," and was held incompetent. State v. King, 117 Iowa, 484, 91 N. W. 768.

26. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reid [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 99.

27. Statute permitting examination of parties by adverse party does not qualify the statute making husband and wife incompetent witnesses for or against each other. Lloyd v. Simons, 90 Minn. 237, 95 N. W. 903. Wife incompetent in suit against husband to set aside a conveyance to her. Multz v. Price, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 339. Wife incompetent in divorce proceedings brought by her. Boreing v. Boreing, 24 Ky. L. R. 1288, 71 S. W. 431. Evidence of wife in supplementary proceedings against husband incompetent and cannot be used to impeach her as witness in a subsequent action by her. Aldous v. Olverson [S. D.] 95 N. W. 917. A wife is not a proper witness for her husband in a replevin suit against him. Ginsburg v. Morrall, 105 Ill. App. 213. A husband is not a competent witness to prove mental incapacity of testator whose will his wife was contesting. Williams v. Williams, 24 Ky. L. R. 1326, 71 S. W. 505. In a suit by a married man against his wife to declare a trust in his favor in real estate of which she is in possession and to which she holds the legal title and to quiet the title thereto in himself, the husband is not a competent witness. Reed v. Reed [Neb.] 98 N. W. 76. The laws of Missouri enlarging the rights of a married woman does not make her a competent witness in husband's behalf where she is not a party to the suit against her husband and her interest in the subject of the action is merely collateral. Layson v. Cooper, 174 Mo. 211, 73 S. W. 472.

28. One named as executor who neglects to accept for the statutory time cannot thereafter act as executor and not being a party to proceedings on appeal from probate, his wife was not incompetent as a witness on such appeal. In re Hathaway's Will, 75 Vt. 137. The husband may prove marriage and incriminating circumstances against one prosecuted for adultery with the wife. State v. West, 118 Wis. 469, 95 N. W. 521.

29. Evans v. Staalle, 88 Minn. 253, 92 N. W. 951.

30. A husband is not disqualified on the ground of relation where his wife is sued as administratrix. Gordon v. Sullivan, 116 Wis. 543, 93 N. W. 457. Testimony of a husband as administrator on the hearing of a motion for a continuance is not testimony on the trial of the action for the negligent death of his infant daughter so as to render his wife incompetent as a witness. Board of Internal Improvement v. Moore's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 15, 74 S. W. 683.

31. Under Vermont statutes permitting husband and wife to testify when properly joined as plaintiffs or defendants in the suit, the wife was a competent witness in her own behalf, though husband was interested, both being joined as proponents of a will. In re Hathaway's Will, 75 Vt. 137. Where husband and wife are joined as plaintiffs enforcing separate interests, they may be witnesses for or against each other. Schoppel v. Daly [La.] 36 So. 322.

is a competent witness for the other in regard to transactions by one acting as agent for the other,[33] but such testimony must be confined to matters connected with the agency.[34] The husband may testify for the wife where the suit is connected with business had with the husband,[35] or where the litigation concerns her separate property.[36]

Neither spouse is competent to testify as to confidential communications between them while husband and wife,[37] but there is no disqualification as to communications which are not confidential,[38] as where shared by a third person.[39] But in Massachusetts, neither a wife nor a husband is incompetent to testify as to private conversations with each other except as to abusive language addressed to a wife.[40] Communications between husband and wife are inadmissible after death of either[41] unless they refer to nonconfidential matters.[42] But it has been

33. One spouse may prove his or her own agency for the other. Orchard v. Collier, 171 Mo. 390, 71 S. W. 677. Sand. & H. Dig. § 2916, subd. 4. But where the husband failed to transact the business which he was to transact as his wife's agent, he could not testify for her in an action brought on by his failure. Miss. River, H. & W. R. Co. v. Ford, 71 Ark. 192, 71 S. W. 947. Under laws allowing husband or wife to testify where either is acting as agent of the other where part of the facts connected with the agency are within the knowledge of one and part within the knowledge of the other exclusively each may testify to facts within his or her knowledge but both may not testify to the same facts [Ky. Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subd. 1]. Logsden v. Stern [Ky.] 77 S. W. 927. A wife writing letters at her husband's dictation and keeping his accounts is not his agent within laws allowing spouse acting as agent to testify [Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4656, cl. 3]. First Nat. Bank v. Wright [Mo. App.] 78 S W. 686. Statements of a wife as agent for her husband are admissible against her. Leyner v. Leyner [Iowa] 98 N. W. 628.

34. Miss. River, H. & W. R. Co. v. Ford, 71 Ark. 192, 71 S. W. 947. Mo. Rev. St. 1889, § 8922. Orchard v. Collier, 171 Mo. 390, 71 S. W. 677.

35. Where duress is alleged by the wife as inducing execution of a mortgage on her land to secure her husband's debt, the husband is a competent witness under laws allowing the husband to testify where suit is connected with any business had with the husband [Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4856]. Turner v. Overall, 172 Mo. 271, 72 S. W. 644.

36. 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. (2d Ed.) p. 1837. Cassem v. Heustis, 201 Ill. 208, 66 N. E. 283. In an action concerning the wife's separate property, in which she, if unmarried, would be defendant, her husband, though a nominal co-defendant, is a competent witness under exceptions in 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 51, par. 5. Booker v. Booker, 208 Ill. 529, 70 N. E. 709.

37. Reed v. Reed, 101 Mo. App. 176, 70 S. W. 505.

38. Statements by a wife not made to her husband nor in his presence are not privileged communications. Leyner v. Leyner [Iowa] 98 N. W. 628. Divorced wife not disqualified from testifying in a will contest case as to former husband's condition when under influence of liquor, this information being based on observation. In re Van Alstine's Estate, 26 Utah, 193, 72 Pac. 942. In an action by a woman to set aside a conveyance made by her, a deposition by her former husband, divorced from her at time of trial, and covering transactions between himself and the grantee, was admissible. Turner's Trustee v. Washburn [Ky.] 80 S. W. 460. A letter written by the wife to another is not a confidential communication and she may be contradicted by same in an action against addressee for alienation of affections, she testifying contradictorily in defendant's behalf. Weston v. Weston, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 159. The rule disqualifying a husband to testify to confidential communications will not prevent a husband, marrying a second time and conveying to the second wife community property of the first marriage, from testifying that before the conveyance he told his wife about the existence and interest of children of first marriage. Eddy v. Bosley [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 565. Wife competent to testify as to what occurred when an officer took her acknowledgment of a deed from her and her husband, her husband not being present, and her testimony not relating to communications or transactions between husband and wife. Dillon v. Dillon, 24 Ky. L. R. 781, 69 S. W. 1099.

40. Rev. Laws, c. 175, § 20, cl. 1. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill defended on the ground of insanity caused by epilepsy, testimony of the wife that defendant two days before the assault on coming out of an attack of the disease declared that he would drown himself is inadmissible. Com. v. Cronin [Mass.] 69 N. E. 1065.

41. Sutcliffe v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 220, 93 N. W. 90. Wife competent to testify for an insurance company that her husband was suffering from consumption at time of issuance of policy, the information not having been acquired as a confidence. Hood v. Prudential Ins. Co., 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 244. Under provisions disqualifying husband or wife as to communications during the existence of the relation, a husband may not testify that his wife had agreed to reimburse him for money which he had paid for certain land conveyed to her, or to convey part of the land to him [Ky. Code Civ. Prac. § 606]. Clay v. Clay's Guardian, 24 Ky. L. R. 2016, 72 S. W. 810. Under laws providing that neither husband nor wife shall testify, even after termination of marriage, concerning communications between them while the marriage tie existed, a widow of insured is disqualified [Ky. Civ. Code Prac. § 606]. N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1867, 72 S. W. 762. After husband's death wife could not testify in her own behalf as to transactions between them. Dillon v. Dillon, 24 Ky. L. R. 781, 69 S. W. 1099.

held that a wife is competent to testify to her husband's dying declaration, in a prosecution for the homicide.[43]

In criminal prosecutions against one spouse, the other is not a competent witness,[44] though they are divorced at the time of trial.[45] But as to transactions subsequent to their divorce,[46] a woman is competent to testify as against her former husband. In Massachusetts, the spouse may testify but cannot be compelled to.[47] The wife of one jointly indicted with others is a competent witness for defendants other than her husband.[48] Where the wife is the person injured by the crime, and the facts are peculiarly within her knowledge, she may testify.[49] In some states, the statutes disqualify as a witness a party to an action instituted in consequence of adultery.[50] But under the New York Code, a husband is a com-

A husband not a competent witness against wife on a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses. Baker v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 566. Where a married woman is jointly indicted with another and there is a joint trial, the husband is incompetent as a witness for or against her. Rivers v. State, 118 Ga. 42. In a prosecution for bigamy, the lawful wife is incompetent against defendant and thus incompetency cannot be waived. Barber v. People, 203 Ill. 543, 68 N. E. 93. An act making the wife a competent witness in case of seduction where there is an indictment and marriage for the purpose of suspending prosecution does not apply where the party was under arrest but not indicted. Barnett v. State, 117 Ga. 298. Violence before marriage is not within the exception of a statute providing that except in cases of criminal violence neither husband nor wife is a competent witness against each other in a criminal prosecution [Cal. Pen. Code, § 1322]. People v. Curiale, 137 Cal. 534, 70 Pac. 468, 59 L. R. A. 586. A wife may not testify in favor of her husband in a criminal prosecution against him for assault on another, there having been no offer to show that she had acted as his agent in any respect. Kraimer v. State, 117 Wis. 350, 93 N. W. 1097. The laws of South Dakota do not authorize a wife to testify against her husband over his objection in prosecution for incest [Comp. Laws Dak. § 5260]. State v. Burt [S. D.] 94 N. W. 409. A wife may not on trial of her husband for homicide testify as to his request that she testify to certain facts. Spivey v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 444. A wife cannot be a witness against her husband in a prosecution for rape committed before their marriage. State v. McKay [Iowa] 98 N. W. 510. Wife was incompetent to contradict her husband's testimony by identifying a letter from him under the Kentucky statute barring evidence of communications between husband and wife, made during marriage relation, and evidence of one against or for the other. Howard v. Com. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 211.

Not within the rule: The wife may testify against her husband on his prosecution for procuring one without authority to solemnize his marriage though the wife did not know of this want of authority. Barclay v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 463, 76 S. W. 4. One may not object to testimony as that of his wife where he had a wife living at the time of marriage to such witness. Crow v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 392. In a prosecution for perjury, defendant's mother was a competent witness against him though her husband had previously been convicted of the same offense. Stanley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 320.

47. Under Rev. Laws, c. 175, § 20, subd. 2, a husband or wife cannot be compelled to testify in a criminal proceeding against the other but may if they are willing to do so. Com. v. Barker [Mass.] 70 N. E. 203.

48. State v. Smith [Del.] 57 Atl. 368. Ky. Code Prac. §§ 605, 606; Ky. St. 1899, § 12. Dovey v. Lam, 25 Ky. L. R. 1157, 77 S. W. 383. The wife of one jointly indicted with defendant, but who pleaded guilty before trial, is a competent witness. Graff v. People, 208 Ill. 312, 70 N. E. 299. Where a woman's husband is jointly indicted and tried with another, while she is not a competent witness for her husband, she is for the other defendant, and her testimony must be admitted and the jury instructed as to its exclusion as to her husband. Smartt v. State [Tenn.] 80 S. W. 586.

49. A wife is a competent witness against her husband in a prosecution for abandonment and may make affidavit in support of information. State v. Bean [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 640.

50. The plaintiff in an action for alienating the affections of his wife and inducing her to commit adultery is incompetent. Graves v. Harris, 117 Ga. 817. Under a provision disqualifying a wife to testify against the husband on the trial of any action

petent witness "to disprove the allegation of adultery" and he may deny the same specifically.[51] In an action for alienation of affections, the husband is competent to testify as to the value of the wife's services.[52]

A convict is not generally disqualified as a witness.[53] In Texas one convicted of a felony is incompetent[54] even after release from prison,[55] and the sentence of the court need not be produced to disqualify the witness.[56] But this disability may be removed by pardon.[57] A defendant may testify against a co-defendant.[58]

Persons acting in official capacity at trial.—A juror is not, by reason of his position, incompetent to testify in the trial in which he sits.[59] A former judge may testify in regard to a trial before him.[60] Where court is held by a single judge, he may not be called as a witness.[61] It was held in Oregon that the trial judge, clerk of the court and the bailiff were competent witnesses to testify to alleged inconsistencies between the testimony of a witness on the retrial of a case and that given by him on the first trial.[62] The provisions of the constitutions and statutes of the various states forbidding election judges from disclosing how any voter shall have voted does not prevent such officers from testifying, in an election contest, for whom illegal voters voted.[63] The prosecuting attorney is a competent witness for the state.[64] The right to object to the competency of a witness may be waived[65] and proper and timely objection must be made.[66]

§ 3. Disqualification on ground of interest.—Disqualification on sole ground of interest no longer exists.[67]

§ 4. Disqualification on death or incompetency of party to communication or transaction. General rule.[68]—A party to an action, interested in the event thereof, is incompetent to testify to personal transactions or conversations with a person, since deceased, relating to the subject of the action.[69] Insanity of a party has the same effect as death.[70] In Michigan, one cannot in his own behalf testify as to facts which if true were equally within the knowledge of a deceased, through whom the other party claims.[71] The design of statutes creating this disqualification is to prevent a living witness interested in the event of the action from taking advantage of the death of a person who cannot contradict a conversation or transaction had with him in his lifetime.[72] The rule is frequently applied in actions by or against a representative of a deceased person, a party interested in the event of such action being incompetent to testify as to personal

68. The rule is commonly a statutory exception to the modern rule that a party is not disqualified as a witness by reason of his interest in the event of the action. Thus the Washington statute reads (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5991): "No person offered as a witness shall be excluded from giving testimony by reason of his interest in the event of the action or otherwise, but such interest may be shown to affect his credibility: Provided, however, that in an action or proceeding where the adverse party sues or defends as executor, administrator or legal representative of any deceased person, or as deriving right or title by, through or from any deceased person * * * then a party in interest or to the record shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf as to any transaction had by him with or any statement made to him by any such deceased person." Kline v. Stein, 30 Wash. 189, 70 Pac. 235.

69. United Loan & Deposit Bank v. Bitzer [Ky.] 78 S. W. 183; Boyd v. Daily, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 581. A defendant cannot testify for himself as to any transaction between himself and a person who is dead at the time of trial. Board of Park Com'rs of Louisville v. Marrett [Ky.] 80 S. W. 166. Neither the plaintiff nor a surety on the prosecution bond in an action to foreclose a trust deed is entitled to testify that the debt of decedent to plaintiff was not paid under § 590 of the Code, providing that no person interested in the event of an action shall testify as to transactions with deceased parties. McGowan v. Davenport [N. C.] 47 S. E. 27. A son of decedent, sued for money alleged to have been advanced by decedent, could not be asked whether he had ever given his father any written obligation, as that called for a transaction with one deceased. Garretson v. Kinkead, 118 Iowa, 383, 92 N. W. 55. Defendant, widow of testator, could not testify as to his declarations in his own interest, she having succeeded to his estate. Pym v. Pym, 118 Wis. 662, 96 N. W. 429. A contestant of a will cannot testify as to conversation with the deceased, in his presence, unless he did not participate therein and the conversation was not affected by his presence. transactions or conversations with deceased,[73] and in actions by or against heirs, devisees or legatees,[74] and where party sues or defends as guardian.[75] The disqualification does not apply where the action is between the parties as individuals,[76] or where the recovery in the action by the executor is for the exclusive benefit of the widow and children or next of kin.[77]

Parties to contracts.—One party to a contract is incompetent to testify in regard thereto, in his own behalf, when the other party is dead.[78] A husband is

73. Reed v. Morgan, 100 Mo. App. 713, 73 S. W. 381. Under statutes providing that no person "having a direct legal interest in the result of a civil action when the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person" can testify as to any transaction or conversation with the deceased except in certain specified cases (Code Civ. Proc. § 329) in a proceeding for the distribution of an estate of an intestate, the administrator is an "adverse party." Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 837. An executor in a proceeding in which he is acting as an individual and against the interest of the estate is within the prohibition against a party testifying to transaction in the lifetime of deceased. Bean v. Bean, 71 N. H. 538. Testimony of a party adverse to an administrator as to testator's susceptibility to influence is inadmissible under laws relating to evidence of facts during testator's life. Pattee v. Whitcomb [N. H.] 56 Atl. 459. Plaintiff in ejectment could not testify as to buying land of defendant's testate [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5991]. Kline v. Stein, 30 Wash. 189, 70 Pac. 235.

74. Laws disqualifying party adverse to executors, heirs, legatees or devisees prevent the complainant in a will contest from testifying against the executor and legatee, though the contest is between heirs of testatrix. Waugh v. Moan, 200 Ill. 298, 65 N. E. 713. Under laws providing that in actions against the heirs of a decedent neither party shall be allowed to testify as to any transaction with decedent in trespass to try title by the heirs of one who had given a title bond against those claiming under the bond, declarations made by the obligor to one of plaintiffs were properly excluded [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2302]. Tenzler v. Tyrrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 57. Maker in an action by legatee incompetent to show that it was given in settlement of a gambling contract. McAyeal v. Gullett, 202 Ill. 214, 66 N. E. 1048. A witness, though not a party to the record, is incompetent to testify that by a contract between himself, the maker and the deceased payee, the note was made payable to decedent, but was in fact the property of the witness and represented a debt due him. Cleveland v. Coulson, 99 Mo. App. 468, 73 S. W. 1105. In Maryland, under Laws 1902, c. 495, parties payee in a note are competent witnesses in a suit to collect the note against the estate of the maker. Trustees St. Marks Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Miller [Md.] 57 Atl. 644.

Parties to mortgages: Under acts disqualifying parties adverse to executor a husband and wife in a suit by an executor of a deceased mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage given by a married woman to secure her husband's debt may not testify that the property was acquired as a gift; rendering the mortgage void under laws prohibiting a married woman from mortgaging separate property acquired by gift for husband's debt [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, c. 506]. Goodwin v. Bentley, 30 Ind. App. 477, 66 N. E. 496. Under laws denying a party a right to testify in his own behalf when sued by an administrator unless the contract in issue was made by a living person, and competent to testify, defendant in foreclosure may not testify as to declarations of deceased mortgagee in a suit for foreclosure by his administrator [V. S. 1238]. Dwinell v. Holt [Vt.] 56 Atl. 99. Mortgagor was incompetent to prove agreement that he was to pay interest during lifetime of his father, the mortgagee, and mortgage was to be canceled on the father's death. Sauer v. Nehls, 121 Iowa, 184, 96 N. W. 759. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4652, providing that where one party to a contract is dead, the others are incompetent to testify to said contract in their own favor, a mortgagee in a chattel mortgage is incompetent after the mortgagor's death, and such disqualification is not removed by the fact that such mortgagee had been appointed in the mortgage as one of the persons to identify the mortgage. Ladd v. Williams [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 511.

A provision that a party to an action shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf against a deriver from a deceased person, except where such person is examined in his own behalf, prevents admission where deriver's testimony has been improperly admitted [N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 829]. Griffin v. Train, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 16. The opposite party to the grantee of a deed from a deceased person is incompetent to testify in his own behalf to transaction with deceased, and this disqualification extends to the agent [Ga. Civ. Code, § 5269, par. 1]. Hendrick v. Daniel, 119 Ga. 358. Where plaintiff claims under unrecorded agreements and defendant claims title as an innocent purchaser without notice from plaintiff's vendor, plaintiff is incompetent to testify that defendant knew of the articles and had read them, his grantor being dead. Rudolph v. Rudolph, 207 Pa. 339.

83. One party to a contract, made with the agent of the other party, is disqualified to testify as to the making of the contract, in an action thereon, by the death of the agent. Crosno v. J. W. Bowser Mill. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 275. An insured who was a party to an action to compel issuance of a paid up policy could not testify as to a conversation with an agent, since deceased. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. O'Neil, 25 Ky. L. R. 983, 76 S. W. 839. A party may not testify as to conversations with the subsequently deceased agent of the adverse party, unless such conversations were had or made in the presence of surviving agents of such adverse party. Rothstein v. Siegel, Cooper & Co., 102 Ill. App. 600. Where the wife who was the agent of her husband in a transaction agent is the issue.[84] The disqualification applies where transaction was with decedent as a member of a firm, none of the other members being present.[85] But in an action on a note in which a surviving partner and the personal representatives of the deceased partner are joined as defendants, plaintiff may testify as to transactions with the deceased partner so far as necessary to show the firm liability.[86] No recovery being sought against the deceased partner's estate, the rule is different.[87]

The disqualifying interest and parties excluded.—The disqualifying interest must be certain and direct so that the judgment will charge the witness with a liability or exempt him from one.[88]

The general rule as to incompetency does not apply to a witness not interested in the event of the action,[89] or where, if interested, the interest is remote and un-is dead, the other party to the suit is not a competent witness against the husband as to what was said or done, between himself and the wife as the husband's agent in respect to the transaction. Wilden v. McAllister, 91 Mo. App. 446.

Burtenshaw's Estate, 131 Mich. 326, 91 N. W. 647. The law disqualifying a party suing representative of decedent does not prevent an agent of plaintiff, in a suit to enforce specific performance of a deceased party's oral contract to convey land, from testifying there is a statutory disqualification of agents unless called by heirs or representative of decedent.[2] The California statute does not include one who is neither party nor person in whose behalf an action is prosecuted though he has an interest in the outcome.[3]

Transactions and communications.—The disqualification extends only to evidence of personal transactions with deceased.[4] The word "transaction" embraces every variety of affairs the subject of negotiations, actions, or contracts between the parties,[5] includes written communications,[6] and must refer to the issue on trial.[7] The statute does not prevent introduction of original books of account of either party nor the necessary suppletory oath.[8]

There is no disqualification as to facts occurring after death of decedent.[9]

Personal transactions or communications not ordinarily being involved in testimony as to the mental condition,[10] or health[11] of the deceased, there is no disqualification as to such testimony. So an interested party may also testify as to the fact of execution of a will,[12] unfriendly relations between testator and members of family,[13] the genuineness of a signature,[14] the fact that suit had not been as to the making of the contract as against defendant who was a mediate grantee of deceased. Grafton Dolomite Stone Co. v. St. Louis, C. & St. P. R. Co., 199 Ill. 458, 65 N. E. 424. 4. Burdick v. Burdick, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 383. Testimony as to consideration of notes purchased by decedent is admissible, decedent not being present at the time of their execution. Crampton v. Newton's Estate [Mich.] 93 N. W. 250. Evidence by plaintiff in an action to establish a note signed by his father and step-mother as a claim against the latter estate, that he gave the father an order to obtain the note from the party in whose custody it was and that he afterwards saw it in his father's possession and evidence of the father to the same effect did not constitute "personal transactions" with deceased. Curd v. Wissler, 120 Iowa, 743, 95 N. W. 266. Answers of decedent's daughter as to what she did with her personal earnings during her father's life are not objectionable, not referring to personal transactions with him. Kirsher v. Kirsher, 120 Iowa, 337, 94 N. W. 846. A third person who entered credits on a note presented for allowance against decedent's estate at claimant's instance is competent to testify thereto, these endorsements being clerical performances not amounting to transactions. Woltemahr v. Doye [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 1053.

5. Harte v. Reichenberg [Neb.] 92 N. W. 987; Chapin v. Mitchell [Fla.] 32 So. 875. The surviving party to an action or one interested in the event thereof is prohibited from giving conversations either directly carried on with a deceased party or from giving the results or inferences that might be derived from such conversation. In re Sawyer's Estate, 88 Minn. 218, 92 N. W. 962. On the question of delivery of a deed, a son is not competent to testify that he placed the deed where it was found after his father's death after it had been delivered to him. Parker v. Parsons, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 310.

6. The contents of letters and telegrams which pass between the parties in the course of a business transaction, not otherwise identified than by a witness who has a direct legal interest in the result of the suit are not competent evidence as against the personal representative of a deceased person. Harte v. Reichenberg [Nev.] 92 N. W. 987.

Farmers' L. & T. Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 367. An officer of a corporation is not prevented from testifying as to conversation overheard between the president of the corporation and one subsequently deceased, he taking no part in the conversation. Paul E. Wolff Shirt Co v. Frankenthal, 96 Mo. App. 307, 70 S. W. 378. The statute does not disqualify a person to testify as to a conversation he heard between intestate and a party's agent, though he accompanied the agent at his request and afterwards became an attorney of the party to the litigation. Alexander v. Ransom [S. D.] 92 N. W. 418. In an action against an executor, evidence as to conversations of testatrix with her husband, in the presence of a third party, and of her conduct, is admissible to show the improbability of an express promise by testatrix. Rev. Laws, c. 176, § 67. Cogswell v. Hall [Mass.] 70 N. E. 461.

19. Under the statute disqualifying a party as a witness as to transactions and conversations with the since-deceased agent of the adverse party, such party may be examined in regard thereto where the adverse party has been examined, or has examined other witnesses in his behalf, as to such transactions or conversations [Rev. St. 1898, § 4070]. Moore v. May, 117 Wis. 192, 94 N. W. 45.

Rice's Adm'x [Ky.] 78 S. W. 458. Where administrator took deposition of others as to transactions, defendant could then testify to circumstances attending execution of deed. Kuhn's Adm'r v. Kuhn, 24 Ky. L. R. 787, 69 S. W. 1077. The bar of the statute is not removed by putting in evidence a letter written by defendant to intestate, so that defendant may testify as to matters referred to therein. Ross v. Kirkwold [Iowa] 99 N. W. 562. That persons were permitted to testify in behalf of an administrator does not entitle the adverse party, as a matter of right, to testify in rebuttal, under a statute excluding certain evidence unless the administrator elects so to testify [Pub. St. N. H. 1901, c. 224, § 16]. Pattee v. Whitcomb [N. H.] 56 Atl. 459.

Statutes in some states allow evidence of an interested party against the representative of a deceased person as to transactions with the deceased "in regard to the facts testified to" by the other parties' witness, but no "further" [Code Civ. Proc. § 329]. Under such a statute the representative of the deceased having introduced evidence of payments made to other party, the interested,[23] nor by testimony of executor drawn out on cross-examination.[24] The bar is not removed by assignment of the disqualifying interest.[25] The admission is not reversible error where the same facts were testified to by other parties.[26]

Against interest.—An interested party may testify where evidence is against his interest.[27]

Objections to the testimony must be made, otherwise the bar is waived.[28] In Indiana, the objection must go to the competency of the witness.[29] One asserting statutory incompetency has burden of proof of that fact.[30] The rule does not require striking of testimony already given where other party dies after testimony has been taken.[31]

§ 5. Disqualification on account of privileged nature of communication. A. Attorney and client.—An attorney may not be required to testify as to confidential communications of his client, in the course of his professional employment, without the client's consent.[32] Statutes in regard to such privileged communications are merely declaratory of the common law and do not affect the common-law exceptions thereto.[33] To bring communications within the rule, the relation of attorney and client must exist.[34] Where the attorney is consulted con-latter may show to what applied but not an agreement that the items to which applied should constitute a lien prior to a mortgage. Dickenson v. Columbus State Bank [Neb.] 98 N. W. 813. Where a party incompetent because of the death of the other party is called for cross-examination by the adverse party and examined as to matters occurring in the lifetime of decedent, he is then a competent witness for himself on all relevant matters. (§ 5) B. Physician and patient.—A physician may not reveal information acquired from a patient while acting in a professional capacity.[52] The rule ordinarily renders the certificate of death inadmissible,[53] or if admitted, the signing physician cannot testify in support of it.[54] The act does not apply to druggists.[55] It is necessary that the relation of physician and patient exist between the parties,[56] or that the injured person regarded the attending physician as his physician.[57] The privilege extends to cases where physician professionally attends a patient who does not voluntarily require his services.[58] To be privileged, the communication must be connected with his professional duties.[59] A physician may not testify as to the sanity of a patient after the patient's death.[60] The privilege covers information inferred from silence.[61] There is a presumption in the absence of a contrary showing that conversations by a physician with a patient were necessary to enable him to prescribe.[62] The physician may testify as to the condition and state of health of his patient, as well as the treatment prescribed,[63] and the fact, place and length of time of treatment.[64] The statute as to privileged

64. Deutschmann v. Third Ave. R. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 503. A physician may be called upon to testify to the simple fact that communications does not prevent answer of physician based on hypothetical question as to cause of injury.[66]

The waiver of the physician's privilege cannot be made by the widow in New York, the statute giving that right only to the personal representative of deceased.[67] The calling of a physician does not waive the privilege as to an ambulance surgeon by whom party was taken to hospital.[67] Privilege is waived where patient takes the stand and testifies to what his physician found and said.[68] Fact of testimony as to injuries by the plaintiff and other physicians attending her does not waive privilege as to another physician.[69] A waiver of physician's privilege is binding on the party in a subsequent suit for same cause.[70]

A general objection is insufficient to raise question of violation of privileged communication.[71]

(§ 5) C. Miscellaneous relations.—Internal revenue officers cannot be compelled by state courts to disclose facts concerning the sale of intoxicants, learned while in the discharge of their duties,[72] nor may a collector of internal revenue be required to disclose names of persons in whose places of business special tax stamps are posted.[73] A postmaster may not be compelled to disclose information regarding a registered letter.[74] A witness may not be compelled to disclose contents of documents which are a part of the archives of a foreign consulate.[75] Transactions between a banker and a depositor are not privileged or confidential in a legal sense.[76]

§ 6. Credibility, impeachment, and corroboration of witnesses.[77] A. Credibility in general.—In determining the weight to be given to the testimony of each witness, the jury may take into consideration the reasonableness of the testimony and where they believe a witness has willfully sworn falsely to any material matter, they may disregard the whole testimony of the witness if they believe it untrue.[78] The maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus holds only when the false testimony has been given willfully[79] and relates to a material matter[80] of fact.[81] Such testimony

If the guilt of defendant depends upon the testimony of a certain witness and the jury believe from the evidence that the testimony of said witness was willfully and maliciously false as to any material part thereof, they may disregard all of the testimony of the witness and find defendant not guilty. Jackson v. State, 136 Ala. 22. Where a witness willfully gives false testimony in regard to a material matter, the jury may—but is not bound to—reject all the testimony of such witness which is uncorroborated. Suckow v. State [Wis.] 99 N. W. 440.

79. State v. Burns [Nev.] 74 Pac. 988; Beedle v. People, 204 Ill. 197, 68 N. E. 434. Applies only where a witness has knowingly and willfully testified falsely as to matters of may not be withdrawn from the jury, as they are the judges of the credibility of witnesses.[82]

A witness may be disbelieved though uncontradicted, the credibility being affected by circumstances of improbability or apparent lack of memory, accuracy, intelligence, or truthfulness of the witness.[83] So impairment of memory may be shown, as affecting credibility.[84] Evidence of financial circumstances is inadmissible as affecting the credibility of a witness.[85] A physician appointed by the court and testifying for one of the parties is not entitled to increased credibility by reason of his appointment by the court.[86] A witness may not be discredited by proof of impulsiveness when excited and the use of profane language under such circumstances.[87] A party having a legal right to refuse to submit to a physical examination may not be prejudiced by proof of that fact allowing inferences against credibility.[88]

Credibility of witnesses is a question for the jury,[89] and because the general character of a witness for veracity may have been impeached, it does not follow that the jury are required to disregard the witness' testimony, where impressed with its truth.[90]

The court should instruct as to effect of impeaching testimony,[91] but such instruction should not be applied, usually, to a particular witness.[92]

Whenever there is a direct conflict in the testimony of witnesses relevant to the issue, evidence is admissible of collateral facts which have a direct tendency to fact. Nielsen v. Cedar County [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1090.

Before a witness is impeached in the sense that his evidence may be disregarded except where corroborated, the contradiction must go to the extent that the jury may believe that the impeached witness has willfully sworn falsely upon a material matter. Beedle v. People, 204 Ill. 197, 68 N. E. 434.

show that the testimony of the witnesses on one side of the issue is more reasonable than that for the other.[92]

Impeaching and discrediting in general.—The extent of cross-examination of a witness for the purpose of testing his credibility or showing bias rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.[93]

A witness may be discredited by the inherent improbability of his testimony,[94] or the fact that it is incorrect in part.[95]

One may not impeach his own witness[97] except in cases of surprise,[98] or as to defensive matter drawn out on cross-examination,[99] or in some instances where adverse.[1] The state may show hostility of a witness whom the law requires it to call, on the question of credibility.[2] The rule that one may not impeach his own

Metropolitan St. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 1052. One may not refute the testimony of his own witness offered to impeach character of his opponent's witness by proof of a collateral matter. Lankaster v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 888. State's witness denied making imputed statement, stating nothing adverse to the state. Held, state should not have been permitted to prove that she did make the statement. Hanna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 544. While a party will not be permitted to impeach the general reputation of his own witness for truth, or to impugn their credibility by general evidence tending to show them unworthy of belief, yet he may prove the truth of any particular fact by any other competent testimony in direct contradiction to what the witness may have testified. Pitman v. Holmes [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 961. The state cannot impeach its own witness for his mere denial or failure to testify to a certain fact. Error in this regard is not cured by an instruction that the jury should consider the contradictory testimony only on the issue of the witness' credibility. Owens v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. 98. Com. v. Wickett, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 350. Where a witness has misled the prosecutor by denying statements which induced the prosecutor to offer him as a witness, the state may impeach him. The evidence must be limited to the purposes for which it was introduced. Sapp v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 456. Where defendant introduced plaintiff's witness and induced her to change evidence given by deposition, plaintiff was not open to the charge of attempting to impeach his own witness in introducing evidence of notary that the answers were correctly transcribed. Hord v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 227. As a matter of explanation to show why witness was called, defendant could show that one of his witnesses had, before going on the stand, made a statement different from his testimony. People v. Payne, 131 Wash. 474, 91 N. W. 739. One may not impeach his witness as to a point on which he fails to testify; to authorize his impeachment the witness must testify to something injurious to the party calling him. Smith v. State [Tex. Where the witness gives affirmative testimony injurious to the state's case, and which testimony is a surprise to the state, it can impeach him. Owens v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 575. A party may contradict his own witness when he testifies to a fact prejudicial to him. Com. v. Bavarian Brewing Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 772. But he cannot be contradicted by the introduction of testimony given on a former trial, if he merely failed to testify as he was expected to. Id.

2. People v. Elco, 131 Mich. 519, 94 N. W. 1069. A prosecutor is not required to call a witness whose name is indorsed where he doubts his veracity. Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494, 66 N. E. 32.

witness does not prevent inquiry as to previous contradictory statements for the purpose of refreshing the witness' memory,[3] nor will it prevent calling other witnesses to testify contradictorily to a prior witness, a party not being concluded by statements of a witness he has called.[4]

A witness may not be impeached as to irrelevant or collateral matters drawn out on cross-examination,[5] and hence may not be recalled for cross-examination on a collateral issue for the sole purpose of impeachment.[6]

(§ 6) B. Character and conduct of witnesses. 1. In general.—A witness cannot be impeached by proof of his general bad character, but the proof must be limited to his bad character for truth and veracity.[7] Thus it has been held that it cannot be shown, as affecting credibility, that a witness was a confirmed opium user,[8] that the character of the witness for chastity was bad,[9] or that witness was related to or associated with evil or notorious persons,[10] or had been disbarred as an attorney.[11] Evidence as to the occupation of the witness is sometimes admitted,[12] if it is shown that the occupation was vicious.[13] The occupation must have been followed recently.[14] Questions tending to show an abandoned life or want of moral sense are proper.[15] Questions propounded to a witness on cross-examination as to whether he had borne alias names, or had tried to induce a witness in the case to swear falsely are competent as affecting his credibility.[16] In impeaching the credit of a witness, the examination must be confined to his general reputation for truth and veracity and not be permitted as to particular facts.[17] The general reputation of a witness may not be shown, though an offer is made to show also the bad reputation for truth and veracity of the witness.[18] It is improper to ask a witness himself if he has ever been impeached, as this should be proved by other evidence.[19] The reputation of a prosecuting witness for truth cannot be questioned where he did not testify.[20] In Missouri, it is held that the general character or reputation of a witness may be shown,[21] and in Georgia, evidence of general bad character is admissible on the issue of credibility, and the statute prescribes the manner of so impeaching the witness.[22] A mere conflict of evidence does not warrant the putting of a witness' character in issue.[23] When a defendant takes the stand as a witness, he puts in issue his character for truth and veracity and is subject to cross-examination the same as other witnesses in regard thereto.[24]

12. Evidence that the witness owned a saloon and half interest in a gambling house, but that he never tended bar in the saloon is admissible to show character and credibility. Terry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 319. Exclusion of evidence that prosecutrix was employed as bar maid in her father's saloon and associated with immoral characters assembled there was not reversible error in a prosecution for rape, her father having a right to command her services. Carter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 437. In a prosecution for perjury, there was no error in allowing a witness, a gambler, to be asked what his occupation was. McLeod v. State [Tex. Cr. Witness may be asked as to conviction and sentence to penitentiary for a similar offense. Morgan v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2117, 72 S. W. 1093. For purposes of impeachment, it may be shown that a witness had been convicted in one county for complicity and that the case in another county had been dismissed. Kipper v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 611. In prosecution for homicide, the state could impeach defendant by showing that he had served a term in the penitentiary of another state. Elmore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 520. Former conviction of felony admissible by statute in Washington [2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5992]. State v. Ripley, 32 Wash. 182, 72 Pac. 1036; State v. Champoux, 33 Wash. 339, 74 Pac. 557. In Massachusetts, the conviction of a witness of a crime may be shown to affect his credibility (O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788); but this does not apply to attesting witnesses to a will (Id.), and the statute is construed as leaving to the common law the competency of attesting witnesses and to the statutes the competency of such witnesses when placed on the stand [Rev. Laws, c. 175, § 23] (Id.). Where a proponent of a will had testified as a subscribing witness and had also given other testimony, the record of his conviction for being accessory to bribery was properly admitted. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788. Under a provision allowing interrogation of witness as to previous conviction of felony, a witness may be asked as to whether he had been convicted of obtaining a signature to a note by false pretenses, that being a felony [Code Iowa, § 4613]. State v. Carter, 121 Iowa, 135, 96 N. W. 710. Fact of conviction being admissible, it was not prejudicial error to admit fact of his arrest on the charge for which he was convicted. Thornton v. State, 117 Wis. 338, 93 N. W. 1107. In California, records of former convictions of misdemeanors cannot be introduced or used for the purpose of impeachment. People v. White, 142 Cal. 292, 75 Pac. 828. Parol evidence that a witness had been convicted of petit larceny is not competent to impeach witness. Peoples v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 289.

26. Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4680. Chouteau L. & Lumber Co. v. Chrisman, 172 Mo. 610, 72 S. W. 1062. Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 4680. State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530, 71 S. W. 1027. Under laws allowing proof of a commission of criminal offense to affect credibility, it may be proven in Missouri that the witness had been convicted of gambling, that offense being a misdemeanor. State v. Thornhill, 174 Mo. 364, 74 S. W. 832. In prosecution for burglary, a previous conviction for petit larceny is admissible to affect defendant's credibility. State v. Chappell [Mo.] 78 S. W. 535. But even though conviction of a misdemeanor may be shown, questions of a witness whether she had been arrested and tried in police court for whipping a person, and whether she had been fined in a police court, were properly excluded as not affecting the credibility of the witness. O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 304.

27. A witness cannot be impeached by introducing a record of his conviction for misdemeanor, it not appearing that the offense was one involving moral turpitude. Andrews v. State, 118 Ga. 1. A statute allowing proof of conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude to affect credibility does not prevent asking a witness as to conviction of an offense, though such offense does not involve moral turpitude. (Selling intoxicating liquors.) McGovern v. Smith, 75 Vt. 104.

28. Reed v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 321. A witness denying a conviction may be impeached by a record of his conviction. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788; Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 232. In impeaching a witness by proof of conviction, it is not necessary to produce the jail book, as that is not a record. Id. Impeachment by parol proof of conviction is harmless, where the record is afterwards introduced. Id.

29. McDonald v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 383. The credibility of a witness may be impeached by his own admission of conviction, on cross-examination. State v. Knowles [Me.] 57 Atl. 588. A witness may be asked as to confinement in the penitentiary, and if he answers that he has been, the record of the conviction is not necessary. State v. Hill, 52 W. Va. 296.

The conviction must not have been so remote as not to affect the present credibility of the witness.[34] That the witness has been arrested[35] or indicted[36] may be shown, but not that an indictment is pending.[37] A record of indictment on which the witness had not been tried was held properly excluded.[38]

(§ 6B) 3. Competency of evidence as to reputation for veracity.—Reputation for truth and veracity can only be proved by persons acquainted with such reputation.[39] Whether testimony as to the character of a witness for truth and veracity is or is not too remote to be competent evidence is to be determined by the trial judge in the exercise of reasonable discretion.[40] In some cases, evidence of the reputation of a witness for truth and veracity at a time remote from the time of trial will be admitted.[41] Reputation in vicinity of prior residence may be shown, though a subsequent residence and provable reputation there may be shown.[42] Though one witness is not sufficient to impeach another, yet his testimony may be received, leaving the question of credibility with the jury.[43]

33. Code, § 1795. Castleberry v. State, 135 Ala. 24. The question, "Were you ever convicted of a crime?" is good as against a general objection, though it might elicit an answer of a conviction of an offense which would not go to credibility. Id. Under provision that conviction of infamous crime may be shown on question of credibility, a witness may be asked as to his conviction for arson [Ala. Code, § 1795]. Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52. A judgment convicting defendant of an infamous crime from which an appeal had been taken is admissible on question of credibility. Viberg v. State, 138 Ala. 100.

34. Evidence of a crime committed some 17 years before not admissible as affecting credibility. Bowers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 234. Evidence of a conviction of assault with intent to murder 20 years before too remote. Dyer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 456. Indictment for violation of local option law nine years before too remote. Marks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 512. Conviction of crime nine years before and subsequent indictment for another offense not too remote. Scoville v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 792.

35. Defendant testifying for himself may be asked as to the number of times he had been arrested and what for. Williams v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 871. On cross-examination of defendant in prosecution for homicide, the state could show arrest for abduction of child to affect credibility. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 962. A witness may be asked as affecting credibility if he had not been brought back to the state to answer a criminal charge based on the same transaction as that in issue. Livingston v. Heck [Iowa] 94 N. W. 1098.

36. He may be examined as to indictment for perjury, without production of record. State v. Williamson, 65 S. C. 242. During a trial for murder, defendant may be asked on cross-examination, whether he had been indicted for assault with intent to commit murder. Powell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 218. Where state's witness admitted confinement in jail on criminal charges, but refused answer as to the nature of the charges, the indictment against him is admissible to attack his credibility. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 407.

37. A witness cannot be impeached by showing pendency of indictments for perjury against him except on cross-examination. Casey-Swasey Co. v. Va. State Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 911.

38. Where a prisoner in a county jail testified as to conversations between defendant and third party, the record of indictment on which he had not been tried was properly excluded. State v. Ronk [Minn.] 98 N. W. 334.

39. Lamb v. Littman, 132 N. C. 978. An impeaching witness must testify from his own knowledge of witness' reputation and not from hearsay. Vickers v. People, 31 Colo. 491, 73 Pac. 845. A witness cannot testify to the bad reputation of another for truth and veracity when he has never heard that reputation called in question. This rule does not prevail in regard to the good repute of another. Tyler v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 553.

40. Alford v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 436.

41. Where a witness had nomadic habits, evidence as to his character by witnesses who had lived in neighborhoods where he had lived, and who had a reasonable acquaintance with his reputation there, some years before and up to the time of trial, was admissible. Alford v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 436. Evidence of reputation for truth and veracity nearly two years before is not too remote. State v. Knight, 118 Wis. 473, 95 N. W. 390. Evidence of the general reputation of a witness borne by him three years and two months before the trial is admissible when the witness has not during that time resided in any one place long enough to acquire a reputation. Douglass v. Agne [Iowa] 99 N. W. 550.

42. State v. Knight, 118 Wis. 473, 95 N. W. 390. That witness' reputation for truth and veracity in the community in which he lived up to within two months of the trial was bad, may be shown. State v. Pucca [Del.] 55 Atl. 831.

(§ 6B) 4. Examination of impeaching witness.—Evidence that one hired a person to go to a neighboring town and examine into the credibility of a witness is admissible to show the credibility of testimony given.[45] The knowledge of the impeaching witness may be tested on cross-examination,[46] and the answers given on such cross-examination cannot be taken from the jury.[47]

(§ 6) C. Interest and bias of witness.—On the question of credibility of a witness his interest or bias is always a legitimate subject of inquiry[48] where not too remote,[49] and such impeachment is not objectionable as on a collateral issue.[50] The hostility of impeaching witnesses may be shown.[51] It is not essential that a predicate should be laid before testimony as to the bias, hostility, interest, or motives of a witness may be introduced.[52] The witness may be asked as to former troubles[53] and lawsuits with the opposite party,[54] improper relations with party to suit,[55] contribution to fund for litigation,[56] interest as taxpayer,[57] offer of re-

46. Impeaching witness testifying as to having heard that the witness had been indicted may be asked in what court the indictment was. Bohlman v. State, 135 Ala. 45. Where a witness testifies to reputation and that it is good, he may be asked to test his credibility, as to having heard of specific acts of bad conduct on the part of defendant, but cannot be asked as to his knowledge of those acts. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. A question to an impeaching witness whether another witness used certain language out of court, "or words of like meaning," is proper. Wysocki v. Wis. Lakes L. & C. Co. [Wis.] 93 N. W. 950.

47. Answers given by impeaching witnesses that defendant has been accused of moral delinquencies and unneighborly conduct cannot be taken from the jury. Barnes v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 1143, 70 S. W. 827.

48. Enmity, bias, or hostility. Mackmasters v. State, 81 Miss. 374; Rarden v. Cunningham, 136 Ala. 263; Houston Biscuit Co. v. Dial, 135 Ala. 168; Purdee v. State, 118 Ga. 795. Partiality of witnesses may be shown by showing that defendant's president had tried to get statements from them. Houston Biscuit Co. v. Dial, 135 Ala. 168. Range of examination may be limited by trial judge. H. E. Taylor & Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 282. Where the witness testified to an unfriendly feeling for defendant, it was within the discretion of the trial judge to sustain an objection to a question as to whether witness desired defendant's conviction. State v. May, 172 Mo. 630, 72 S. W. 918. The amount of a recovery by a witness may not be shown on the question of bias in an action by another injured in the same accident. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Constans, 25 Ky. L. R. 158, 74 S. W. 705. Defendants in a criminal case may show by cross-examination the relations and animus of a witness for the state. State v. Broadbent, 27 Mont. 342, 71 Pac. 1. On trial for rape, witness could be asked if she had not been trying to get girl away from accused. Shepherd v. State, 135 Ala. 9. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 5289, the state of a witness' feelings toward a party may always be shown for the consideration of the jury. Brown v. State, 119 Ga. 572. On cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses, it was shown that he interested himself in behalf of defendant, endeavored to get prosecuting witness to drop the matter, and though an officer, and present at the time of the assault did not arrest defendant stating he had no warrant. Held, no error. Pace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 531.

49. On question of hostility of witness, it may be shown that the party against whom he testified had sued him, but evidence of suits against other members of his family is too remote. Collins v. McGuire, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 443. In a prosecution for embezzlement, question asked of witness of ill feeling because of a proposed sale of land by witness' father to accused for a principal is too remote. Jackson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 760. Bias may not be shown by proof that a witness for the state is the washerwoman of the deceased. Hall v. State, 127 Ala. 44.

50. The impeachment of a witness as to friendly relations between the parties to a homicide is not objectionable as on a collateral issue. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512. Bias, prejudice, interest, etc., of a witness, may be shown by proof of collateral matter; but where the witness admits such state, then proof of collateral matter to show such state is immaterial. 62. Fact of employment may be shown on question of bias. Dina v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 289. A witness may be asked the rule of company discharging negligent employes and whether they were required to do their best as witnesses or leave employment. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 72 S. W. 418. For the purposes of impeachment, it is proper to ask a physician participating in a release from liability for injuries if he had not witnessed other releases for the same defendant. Dorsett v. Clement-Ross Mfg. Co., 131 N. C. 254. Bias of witness, a physician, may be shown by fact that he made an examination of plaintiff as defendant's representative. Tex. & N. O. R. Co. v. Scott, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 71 S. W. 26. A physician testifying in an action for injuries, as to a release admitting that he had been sent by defendant but denying that he is its physician may be asked if he had not as representative of the defendant frequently visited and examined persons hurt on defendant's line. Guckavan v. Lehigh Traction Co., 203 Pa. 521. As bearing on the credibility of a witness, it may be shown that a physician who testified for defendant as to plaintiff's condition was paid to make the examination to qualify as a witness. Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Burke, 203 Ill. 250, 67 N. E. 818. It was proper to ask physicians, introduced by defendant, sued for injuries, by whom they were sent to examine plaintiff and by whom they were paid. Chicago City R. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087.

63. Interference with witnesses. Sapp v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 456. Solicited persons not to go on defendant's bond. People v. Row [Mich.] 98 N. W. 13. It is proper, as indicating interest and affecting credibility, to ask a witness whether he contributed to the absence of witnesses who had previously testified for the state. Seaborn v. Com., 25 Ky. Hughes v. Rowan, 27 Mont. 500, 71 Pac. 764. Where a witness in an action for injuries caused by an alleged defect in the highway testified that he had driven slowly and carefully, it was proper to admit evidence that he had stated to others that he was driving fast. Guertin v. Hudson, 71 N. H. 505. Declarations of the maker of a note tending to support the defense of accommodation indorser are admissible to contradict the maker as a witness. Union Trust Co. v. Leighton, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 568. A witness stating on his direct examination that he had not sued for money lost in gambling could be asked if he had not stated to another person that he had been advised to wait for six months and then sue in plaintiff's name, as showing his interest and allowing contradiction if answered in the negative. Kizer v. Walden, 198 Ill. 274, 65 N. E. 116. On prosecution for sale of intoxicants to minor, the testimony of the father as to the age of his son may be impeached by showing that he had told others that his age was different from that testified to. People v. Werner, 174 N. Y. 132, 66 N. E. 667. A father testifying that his son accused of homicide was insane may be contradicted by evidence of statements to the mother of deceased at time of homicide that his son was a bad, unruly boy. Cox v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 680, 69 S. W. 799. As a contradiction of the engineer's evidence that he thought deceased was not on bridge, it may be proved that the next day after the accident he stated that he saw deceased in the perilous position, but thought he would get out of the way. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 794.

On failure of a witness to testify as expected, the party calling him may not prove by third persons that witness had told them that he would testify to such facts. Howe v. Skidmore, 24 Ky. L. R. 2043, 72 S. W. 792. Where a witness called by a party has simply failed to testify to all that the party expected, but has given no testimony against him, it is not permissible for the party calling him to prove that such witness had previously made statements which if sworn to at the trial would tend to make out his case. Documentary evidence as to the age of prosecutrix given in another proceeding, though not under oath, is admissible on a trial for rape on rebuttal for purposes of impeachment. Fosha v. Prosser [Wis.] 97 N. W. 924. A prosecutrix could be asked why she had previously given admittedly false testimony. People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474, 91 N. W. 739. That a purchaser, in a suit for goods alleged to have been bought by his agent, denies the agency which he admitted on a former trial, will not warrant a peremptory instruction against him, but affects only his credibility. Pacific Biscuit Co. v. Dugger, 42 Or. 513, 70 Pac. 523. Where testimony is offered tending to show that the statements of a witness on the preliminary examination[74] or before the grand jury[75] or coroner,[76] and statements made as a part of a confession[77] or in affidavits.[78] The fact that he formerly claimed privilege and now testifies fully does not admit the former testimony.[79] The contradiction must relate to a relevant matter,[80] and must be a substantial contradiction.[81] A party may not be impeached as to a statement made by his witness in his absence.[82] One partner cannot be contradicted by a statement of another.[83]

A witness may be asked as to contradictory statements without specification as to time, place and person, this being required only where a foundation for impeachment is being laid.[84]

the retrial of a case were inconsistent with those made on first trial, testimony of other witnesses that there was no inconsistency is admissible. Court reporter testified as to inconsistency, bailiff and judge in rebuttal. State v. Houghton [Or.] 75 Pac. 887.

74. People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662; Angling v. State, 137 Ala. 17. It may be shown that a witness testifying that defendant did the killing stated on the examining trial that he did not know who did the killing. Cecil v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 197. A witness may be examined as to discrepancies between testimony on trial and that given on preliminary examination without regard to the validity of the preliminary examination. People v. Leung Ock, 141 Cal. 223, 74 Pac. 936. For the purpose of impeaching a witness, his testimony on the commitment trial of one accused of a felony may be proved as well by a person who heard it, as by the notes or memoranda of the evidence taken by the court. McKinney v. Carmack, 119 Ga. 467.

75. Gibson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 813; People v. Salisbury [Mich.] 96 N. W. 936. Where the prosecuting witness admitted that she had testified differently before the grand jury, the state was entitled to introduce her testimony before that body. Barnard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 957. Under Cr. Code, § 113, a member of the grand jury may testify as to the testimony of a witness before that body for the purpose of contradicting testimony given on trial. Held proper after obtaining a denial by witness of the statement alleged to have been made before the grand jury. Dean v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1876, 78 S. W. 1112.

76. Coroner's report of the substance of the testimony delivered before him at an inquest. McKinney v. Carmack, 119 Ga. 467. Where one jointly indicted testifies for defendant in a prosecution for homicide, it is proper to admit his testimony before the coroner. State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo. 354, 70 S. W. 885. The statements of witnesses at a coroner's inquest are admissible for purposes of contradiction, though the coroner was not legally authorized to hold the inquest. State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808.

77. In a prosecution for homicide, the state may cross-examine defendant as to statements made by him as to shooting at another as part of his confession of his killing deceased and to contradict him for the purpose of affecting his credibility. Horn v. State [Wyo] 73 Pac. 705. Where defendant takes stand in his own behalf, he may be asked as to statements made by him, though the statement referred to is a confession not voluntarily made. Smith v. State, 137 Ala. 22.

78. Affidavit made by a party's attorney. In re Townsend's Estate [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1103. As testing credibility of a witness in bankruptcy proceedings, affidavits made by the party a short time before a preference are admissible. Benedict v. Deshel, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 276, 13 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 240. An affidavit made by plaintiff in another action, containing statements tending to contradict the testimony given by her on the trial of the case, are admissible. Yoki v. First State Bank, 87 Minn. 295, 91 N. W. 1101.

79. Where, in a former action, defendant refused to answer questions in a deposition on the ground that it might incriminate him, but on the trial of a later action testified fully and there was nothing in his evidence which would incriminate him in the slightest degree, the deposition was held inadmissible for the purposes of impeachment. Lurie v. Levy, 86 N. Y. Supp. 174.

81. State v. Gallehugh, 89 Minn. 212, 94 N. W. 723. That a witness stated that he was not "armed" with a pocket knife does not warrant impeachment by asking him as to an alleged remark made after an assault that if he had been armed with a gun instead of a knife he would have acted differently, as having a pocket knife in one's possession is not equivalent to being "armed" therewith. State v. McCann, 43 Or. 155, 72 Pac. 137. Where it is claimed that an affidavit made by a witness contained statements contradictory to his testimony, but such affidavit contains other statements by other witnesses and about which they are not examined, the affidavit is inadmissible. be laid before testimony can be introduced impeaching a witness by showing previous contradictory or inconsistent statements,[85] unless the matter to be contradicted is contained in the affidavit of an absent witness.[86] The witness on cross-examination may be asked as to contradictory statements for the purpose of laying the foundation for introduction of the person whom the statement was made,[87] and may be recalled therefor.[88] The witness must have his attention particularly directed to the circumstances in such a way as to give him a full opportunity for explanation[89] by asking him whether he has not said or done what it is proposed to prove, specifying the particulars of time, place and person,[90] and he must be given an opportunity to explain.[91] This rule applies to witness whose testimony is taken by deposition.[92] Where a witness denied making statements in an alleged affidavit sworn to by him, the affidavit was not admissible without further proof that he made the statement.[93] Perfect precision as to the circumstances attending the former contradictory statement is not required.[94] The question must be calculated to elicit a clear contradiction.[95] In Pennsylvania[96] and

91. Failure to testify as on a former trial. Merrell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 979. A witness may be permitted to explain former contradictory statements, where the explanation does not involve a personal transaction with a decedent. Stirling v. Kelley, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 621. Where an affidavit concerning the falsity of his testimony is produced on cross-examination, the witness may explain the circumstances under which the affidavit was made. State v. Howard, 43 Or. 166, 72 Pac. 880. A witness confronted with a contradictory statement may on redirect testify that the statement was untrue. People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 74 Pac. 745. Predicate sufficient where a witness in a prosecution having testified as to friendly relations between the parties was asked on cross-examination if she did not have a conversation with a named person, in which she stated that threats were made by accused, and answered "No." Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 512.

95. McCoy v. Munro, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 435. Predicate insufficient where physician, asked as to an injury, stated that he could not state positively that a certain injury amounted to a fracture because he did not make a thorough examination, so as to allow proof of a statement of opinion at about the time of the examination. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Criswell [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 388.

Massachusetts, the practice allows evidence to contradict the testimony of a witness called by the adverse party as to a conversation without first calling the attention of the former to the conversation.[97] A party is not deprived of the right to impeach by reason of equivocal answers to questions,[98] or because the witness stated that there were more persons present than designated in the question,[99] or by slight difference as to date,[1] or by failure to recollect a statement.[2] In the latter case the question put to the witness to show such statement should be identical or at least substantially identical with the original question.[3] A witness may testify as to a contradictory conversation, though he did not hear all of the conversation.[4]

Where it is sought to prove testimony on former trial, witness may be asked if he has not on a previous trial of the same case made a particular statement as a witness contradictory to his present testimony.[5] The transcript of evidence on former trial introduced to contradict witness is not admissible where not certified to contain all the shorthand notes of the evidence of such witness as required by statute.[6] Statements of accused taken under oath contrary to statute may not be referred to by prosecutor on trial to impeach his testimony.[7] An affidavit made by a witness after testifying at a preliminary examination that material parts of his testimony were false is inadmissible to impeach his deposition taken at such preliminary examination.[8] The state may not read an affidavit for continuance to impeach one of affiant's witnesses.[9]

The rule requiring that the attention of the witness should be specially called to the inconsistent statement does not apply to written statements.[10] A sufficient foundation is laid by showing contradictory paper to witness allowing him to inspect it and proving by himself or others the genuineness of the signature.[11] The writing may be offered in evidence with other testimony in the same behalf.[12] Statement may be introduced entire, the offerer not being required to select the pertinent portions.[13]

The declarations of a party to the action against interest may be shown without calling his attention to the time and place of such declarations or the party to whom they were supposed to be made.[14]

The objection to impeaching testimony must be specific; general objections will not suffice,[15] and must be made at time of offer.[16]

(§ 6) E. Corroboration and sustentation of witness.—Where witness' reputation for truth had been attacked, testimony supporting his character[17] and corroborative of his evidence is admissible,[18] but not before.[19] Mere contradiction is insufficient to authorize admission of corroborative testimony.[20] Declarations of a witness out of court are not generally admissible to corroborate his testimony,[21]

14. Dunafon v. Barber [Neb.] 93 N. W. 198. When a party to the suit testifies as a witness, it is competent to ask him on cross-examination if he has not on a specified previous occasion made a particular contradictory statement or admission against his own interest. After cross-examination as to a former statement, the party calling witness may re-examine him as to the matter and introduce rebuttal evidence to support him. Martin's Adm'r v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co., 101 Va. 406. Where a white man, prosecuted for killing a negro, testified that he went into the game which resulted in the homicide at decedent's request, it was competent to show that he had a reputation in the community as a man that gambled with negroes, as corroborating his testimony. Rogers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 18. Evidence that maker was without financial standing is admissible to corroborate testimony of pledgee of note that he asked pledgor as to maker's residence and was told that he did not know and that he intended to take up the note. Coleman v. Lewis, 183 Mass. 435, 67 N. E. 603.

21. State v. Levy, 90 Mo. App. 643. Where evidence of contradictory statements is offered to impeach a witness, it is not competent to offer in reply evidence that the witness has on other occasions made statements similar to what he testified in the cause. State v. McDaniel [S. C.] 47 S. E. 334. The testimony of a witness that he did a certain thing cannot be corroborated by the testimony of another to whom he previously declared his intention of doing it. Lincoln Nat. Bank v. Fischer-Hansen, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1093. It is not competent, for the purpose of sustaining a witness and showing that he was present and saw an occurrence, to prove that he afterwards told different persons that he was present and witnessed the occurrence. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Strickland, 116 Ga. 439. Where witness made prior statements contradictory to those given on the trial, he could not be corroborated by evidence of harmonious statements thereafter while negotiating for release in consideration of turning state's evidence. Legere v. State [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 1059.

But see following: Where a witness is contradicted, it is proper to show that he made similar statements recently after the transaction in order to corroborate her evidence. Homicide, statements made three days after killing were shown in order to corroborate testimony given on trial. Lounder v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 552. Testimony of a witness that he had made statements to others of the same matters testified to by him on the trial were competent to corroborate him. Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425. In probate proceedings, where a subscribing witness testified that executor, after executing the will, had given it to him with instructions to deliver it to the executrix, and other witnesses having testified that the witness had made previous statements that he knew nothing of a will, and particularly where made long after the occurrence.[22] Memoranda made by a witness may be introduced to corroborate witness' testimony.[23] Permitting the deposition of a witness to be read in evidence after such witness has testified on the trial is left very largely to the discretion of the trial court.[24] Evidence of counsel is admissible to corroborate client cross-examined as to failure to include an important allegation in original petition to rebut presumption of fabrication of evidence.[25] Where witnesses for defendant have testified that witnesses for the state had made contradictory statements after indictment and before that, the county attorney may testify that there was no variance between their testimony at the trial and that given before the grand jury.[26] An accomplice is sufficiently corroborated if the corroboration goes to the main fact, though he may be contradicted as to some details.[27] Where evidence corroborative of the testimony of accomplices is necessarily circumstantial, such evidence should be allowed to take as wide a range as is consistent with justice and the well recognized rules.[28] Evidence taken at the inquest cannot be used by defendant to corroborate his witnesses.[29]

§ 7. Privileges of witnesses.—The privilege of a witness to refuse to answer questions tending to incriminate him is secured by the fifth amendment to the Federal constitution, which provides that no one shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself. Though the provision in the Federal constitution applies only to the Federal courts,[30] the same provision has been embodied in many of the state constitutions.[31] This privilege, guaranteed by the constitution is one which the legislature cannot invade or set aside.[32] The privilege is not invaded, however, by statutes compelling witnesses to answer such questions, where complete protection against prosecution for the crime in regard to which the testimony is given is afforded.[33] The Illinois anti-trust law, granting the testimony of a justice to whom the subscribing witness had given the will before proceedings were instituted thereon, as to such fact and as to statements made to him at the time, were admissible to corroborate the subscribing witness. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99.

Construing act of Feb. 4, 1887, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3154. Interstate Commerce Com. v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 Law Ed. —. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 3228, providing that in creditors' suits against a corporation, the officers thereof may be compelled to testify, creates a rule of evidence to the end that a party guilty of fraud on creditors of the insolvent corporation may, when called to testify, be incapable of shielding himself by pleading the ordinary priviimmunity to witnesses testifying truthfully as to transactions, is not unconstitutional because not covering prosecution by another state nor because not granting immunity from prosecution under Federal laws.[34] A legislature has power to grant a pardon to one compelled by statute to testify against himself.[35] But any statutory protection short of absolute immunity from prosecution is insufficient.[36] One cannot claim the constitutional privilege until he has been sworn as a witness.[37] But whenever a party is under arrest for a violation of the law or is held by the authorities investigating a charge against him, the constitutional inhibition is operative.[38] The witness may usually himself be the judge as to the incriminating effect of evidence called for,[39] but where it is clear to the court that such evidence cannot possibly injure him, the witness will not be permitted to claim the privilege.[40] The refusal to testify must be on the ground that the evidence will tend to incriminate, to amount to a claim of the privilege, and the claim that the information sought may lead to the establishment of any facts in a proceeding against him is insufficient.[41] Good practice requires that a witness be instructed as to his right to decline to answer a question tending to incriminate him.[42] The privilege is available to all witnesses, and is not limited to parties.[43] It is a privilege personal to the witness,[44] and may by him be waived.[45] So, the accused waives the privilege by voluntarily taking the stand in his own behalf,[46] and he thus becomes subject to the rules of law regarding cross-examination, the same as other witnesses.[47] Such cross-examination is proper, even though the answers to questions tend to prove defendant guilty of a crime other than that for which he is on trial.[48] The constitutional guaranty not only protects one from being compelled to give direct evidence, but also from giving any circumstance or link in the chain of evidence which may tend to convict him of a crime.[49] The constitutional guaranty is violated by compelling one to be a witness against himself before the grand jury,[50] or by compelling him to produce books or records in a bankruptcy proceeding,[51] but not by the introduction of private papers seized under a search warrant,[52] or by the use of property of the accused to identify him.[53] Evidence given by a witness before a grand jury, in an investigation not based on a formal complaint or accusation, is not used against him in violation of law, though he be subsequently indicted.[54] The proper method of claiming protection from prosecution on testimony given in a case is by motion to quash the indictment.[55] A witness may refuse to answer questions tending to degrade or disgrace, unless they relate to relevant or material matters.[56] The privilege is personal to the witness and cannot be used by a party.[57] If the witness does not refuse to give an answer which will degrade him, it is in the discretion of the court to allow or refuse to allow him to answer.[58]
