16. The Connecticut rule requires merely that it be certain that the particular individuals in which an estate must be vested are definitely ascertainable within the period limited. They need not be so ascertainable at testator's death. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501. A perpetual trust for a school and home for children of deceased members of a secret society violates the rule. Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' O. H. & I. S. Ass'n, 66 Kan. 1, 71 Pac. 286. A bequest in trust for education of priests held void, under Minn. Stat. of Uses & Trusts, § 11, c. 43, because not certain, nor capable of being rendered certain as to beneficiaries. In re Shanahan's Estate, 88 Minn. 202, 92 N. W. 948. Bequest of fund to certain persons, the income to be used in aiding and maintaining a kindergarten in a city, providing that when the city should be authorized to receive and administer the trust it should be transferred to it, held valid as to definiteness of beneficiary to prevent application of the rule against perpetuities, where the statute was amended to include the purpose of the trust, and the city accepted it [Subd. 6, § 4284, Gen. St. 1894]. Owatonna v. Rosebrock, 88 Minn. 318, 92 N. W. 1122.

17. A devise of a life estate and then to widow and children of the life tenant is not a perpetuity, since the remainder must vest within 21 years after a life in being [Ky. St. § 2360]. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293. A direction by will that after conversion of the realty by the trustees it should be divided in certain parts, and each held in trust for a son, and on death of either son to go to his children, if any, otherwise to be divided between a sister and the trust for the other, vested the remotest remainder on the death of the survivor and there was no violation of the rule. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501. If the estate vested on death of the testator, possession only being postponed, no perpetuity was created; provision of will in trust to be paid over when children of a sister reach 25. Flanner v. Fellows, 206 Ill. 136, 68 N. E. 1057.

18. Where owners of land laid out lots, parks and streets, and conveyed the parks and streets to trustees, who were to make improvements and pay taxes, and provided for vacancies among the trustees, the conveyance was not void as a perpetuity, since there were always persons by whose concurrence the fee in the streets, etc., could be conveyed. Stevens v. Annex Realty Co., 173 Mo. 511, 73 S. W. 505. A bequest of a life estate in a farm to a daughter, remainder at her death to her three sons, providing that if any sons die without legal heirs the survivors should take, vested absolutely at the daughter's death before any sons had died, and the bequest did not illegally suspend the power of alienation. Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 693. Not where the beneficiaries are all in esse and can convey by joining. Holmes v. Walter, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380. It does not apply to a trust where the trustees have power to sell and convey the complete title. Danforth v. Oshkosh [Wis.] 97 N. W. 258.

19. Where a will provided that the residuary estate should be held in trust for children until advantageous sale could be made by the trustees, and created remainders, it was immaterial on the issue as to the vesting of the remainders, whether the

to the beneficial not the legal estate.[20] A mere power in trust,[21] or mere option to purchase,[22] is not invalid as a perpetuity. A perpetual condition as to use of property conveyed is not necessarily void,[23] and a condition for reversion will not offend the statute.[24] That a trust has no express termination will not make it void as a suspension of the power of alienation.[25]

Accumulations[26] except in favor of minors, to run only during minority,[27] are prohibited in New York.

§ 2. Computation of the period and remoteness of particular limitations.—The suspension of the power to sell must always depend on lives not years,[28] and not upon lives or years,[29] or a contingency or years,[30] in the alternative except in bequests in remainder from the residuary estate would only be determined by full accomplishment of the conversion, since the vesting of the estate is not prevented thereby. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501.

20. On the question whether an estate has vested under a will so as not to violate the rule, the vesting of the legal estate in the executors is immaterial, since the law follows the beneficial estate and applies to it. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501. Continuance of a trust is not limited by law to any period of time but the beneficial interest must vest in the beneficiaries within the period limited for vesting of legal estates. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167.

21. Direction of trust by will until the trustees could secure, in their judgment, most advantageous sale, then to be divided and a part given to a daughter and her heirs forever, vested in the latter at testator's decease. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501. A bequest of income of corporate stock to the wife and married daughter, and to the survivor of them, and if the son-in-law survived both, a life estate to him, and afterward providing beneficiaries for the remainders, is a mere power in trust and does not violate the law preventing suspension of the power of alienation of personalty for more than two lives in being [Laws 1897, c. 417, § 2]. In re Conger's Will, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 493. Proceedings for judicial settlement in accordance with the decree. In re Conger's Estate, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 157.

22. An agreement by stockholders of a private corporation that, on death of any one or more, remaining holders should have an option to purchase stock of the decedent at its value does not improperly restrain the power of alienation. Fitzsimmons v. Lindsay, 205 Pa. 79.

23. A condition in a deed to land in a village that no grain should ever be handled on the land or building erected for that purpose is not void. Wakefield v. Van Tassell, 202 Ill. 41, 66 N. E. 830.

24. When land was devised to trustees to be conveyed to a city for a public library under the Oshkosh charter, authorizing the city to build and maintain a library thereon, the city took the fee, and a further provision that conveyance by the trustees should contain a condition for reversion to heirs if the land ceased to be used for such purposes did not unlawfully suspend the power of limitation [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2038, 2039]. Danforth v. Oshkosh [Wis.] 97 N. W. 258.

25. Holmes v. Walter, 118 Wis. 409, 95 N. W. 380; Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742.

26. Accumulation of income on a legacy to an infant until he is 25. Tobin v. Graf, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 412. A limitation providing that income of certain realty should create a sinking fund to extinguish mortgages on the property violates statutes as to accumulations. Dodsworth v. Dam, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 684. A devise to a daughter if her husband die before testatrix, otherwise to trustees to accumulate profits and pay to the daughter at her husband's death, and to pass to a grandson if the daughter die before her husband was void if the husband was not living at testatrix's death, if he was living it created a valid active trust not rendered invalid by the void provision for accumulation [Real Prop. Law, § 51]. Tobin v. Graf, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 412. A devise to executors as trustees in four parcels, to receive rents and pay debts and a mortgage, then to pay residue of rent of each of the parcels to one of four surviving daughters for life, remainder in fee to their children, was void. Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358. In so far as a will directs addition of surplus profits of shares of children after age and before 25, to the estate, it is an accumulation not for minor children and void. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405.

27. Real Prop. Law, § 51 (Laws 1896, c. 547). McGuire v. McGuire, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 63; Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358; Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405.

28. Suspension of the power of alienation for three years is void [Real Prop. Law, § 2, Laws 1897, c. 417]. McGuire v. McGuire, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 63. A devise to executors to invest the income until two years after testator's death, then to turn over to certain persons to found an asylum, was void as suspending the power of alienation [Laws 1896, c. 547]. Smith v. Chesebrough, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 578. In Michigan, suspension of the power of alienation in a trust deed for a particular period, not based on lives, is void and the power is suspended where there is no one in being who can convey an absolute fee in possession [Comp. Laws, § 8796, c. 237, § 14, and § 8797, c. 237, § 15]. Casgrain v. Hammond [Mich.] 96 N. W. 510. A trust for 26 years is void. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225. A trust to collect income and pay to one and on her death or at expiration of 15 years, whichever occurred last, to sell and divide between certain persons, is void as to the 15 year limitation. In re Murray, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 246.

29. A devise of all of an estate remaining after death of testator's wife, in perpetuity, to educate descendants of two persons named is void. Johnson v. De Pauw University, 25

Wisconsin, where the statute permits a term not exceeding 21 years.[31] In New York, the limit is two lives in being.[32] The period of limitation by will begins at the testator's death.[33] The lives as to which the limitation applies must be in being at time of the grant.[34] The validity of particular provisions is shown in the note.[35]

Ky. L. R. 950, 76 S. W. 851. Where a trust declared that it should continue until the grantor's death, but that if she should die before expiration of 14 years it should continue for that period, and after her death, before that time, there was no one in existence who could convey the fee, it was void. Casgrain v. Hammond [Mich.] 96 N. W. 510.

30. A provision by will that realty shall not be sold or incumbered for 40 years after the testator's death and then divided among the then heirs of testator's body is void, though the limitation is removed if the land is taken into the limits of a certain city [Ky. St. 1903, § 2360]. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Lloyd [Ky.] 78 S. W. 896. A provision in a trust clause of a will that if no request is made for termination of the trust at the end of thirty years after testator's death, it shall cease, and the estate shall be held by the several beneficiaries, their heirs and assigns, is void. Loomer v. Loomer [Conn.] 57 Atl. 167.

31. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2038, 2039. Danforth v. Oshkosh [Wis.] 97 N. W. 258.

32. Where disposition of a residuary estate is postponed by the will for 26 years, the trust inseparable therefrom is void as being measured by more than two lives in being. Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75, 69 N. E. 225. A bequest of realty and personalty to nephews and nieces to be held in trust by executors until each becomes 25, with further provision, in case of death of any before 25, the share should go to the survivors arriving at that age, is void as to the latter provision as suspending the power of alienation for more than two lives in being at death of testatrix. Mendel v. Levis, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 271. A codicil providing that if a daughter, not one of the youngest children, should marry a certain person she should receive a certain annuity and at her death a certain sum should be divided among her children required the trustees to retain title to the portion necessary to pay her income in event of marriage, and on her death to pay the amount to her children, and was void as suspending alienation for more than two lives in being. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283.

33. Matteson v. Palser, 173 N. Y. 404, 66 N. E. 110.

34. A trust for use of one and his children is invalid unless the context shows that only children in esse at death of the testator are intended to share. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427.

35. Provisions held valid: A bequest in trust for masses for testator's soul is not void as a private trust against perpetuities. Coleman v. O'Leary's Ex'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1148, 70 S. W. 1068. Gift for benefit of children and grandchildren of testator's son and daughter living at his death as not unlawfully suspending the power of alienation. Denison v. Denison, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 295. A testamentary trust for possession and control of property during lives of the beneficiaries does not violate the rule against perpetuities. Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742. A provision by will that land devised shall not be sold or conveyed by the devisees until they have been in possession for 20 years will be enforced. Call v. Shewmaker, 24 Ky. L. R. 686, 69 S. W. 749. A provision by will against alienation of trust property except for reinvestment does not illegally restrain alienation. Dulin v. Moore, 96 Tex. 135, 70 S. W. 742. A provision in a gift by will, to be divided among children, that each shall have use and possession of his share on becoming 18, but no power to sell or incumber until 35, and no sale or incumbrance to be made by the daughters changing the character of their estate, but their property to be separate and sold only under the will, is valid. Smith v. Isaacs [Ky.] 78 S. W. 434. A devise in trust to pay income to testator's children for life, the share of principal of a child dying with descendants to be paid to them, otherwise to lapse into the estate for division among descendants of other children dying, does not violate the rule against perpetuities. Loyd v. Loyd's Ex'r [Va.] 46 S. E. 687. A deed of settlement excluding a husband from any interest in the estate conveyed, and providing that the wife shall not have power to "alienate, transfer or incumber," is a valid equitable life estate in her and not void as a restraint of alienation. Married Woman's Act 1869 (R. S. D. C. §§ 727-729). Fields v. Gwynn, 19 App. D. C. 99. A devise to executors to invest the income for two years after testator's death, then to turn over to certain persons to found an asylum is not void as creating a trust in perpetuity, though void as suspending the power of alienation for a term of years. Smith v. Chesebrough, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 578. Where the will directed a trust of the estate to support testator's children and maintain "any family" which either of them might have, until, under terms of the will, division may be had, the provision applies to education of the grandchildren during minority, and the trust is not void since it cannot endure beyond 21 years and 9 months from death of the survivor of the children. Bates v. Spooner, 75 Conn. 501. A provision by will that in case of death of testator's adopted son and residuary devisee without issue, and after death of testator's wife, to whom the estate was devised for life, the property should be liquidated, the proceeds to be divided, was not void for remoteness since the phrase "without leaving issue" means without leaving issue at time of the death of the devisee. Metzen v. Schopp, 202 Ill. 275, 67 N. E. 36. Where it does not appear that any of the beneficiaries were under 30 at the death of testatrix, a provision that her property should be divided equally among children of a dead sister, the executors to manage the estate and pay the income to the children until the youngest survivor became 30, when division was to be made among the survivors, is not invalid because the ownership

§ 3. Operation and effect, complete and partial invalidity.[36]—A trust of realty, by will, when void as a perpetuity, may be disposed of as intestate estate.[37] Where a trust is invalid as to directions for accumulations, it may still be maintained by giving the income to persons entitled presumptively to the next eventual estate.[38]

From the general rule that limitations may be sustained if severable from those which are too remote, it follows that a prior estate may stand,[39] or a remainder may accelerate,[40] or a gift take effect, freed from limitations,[41] or a provision of personalty and the power of alienation might be suspended for five lives. Matteson v. Palser, 173 N. Y. 404, 66 N. E. 110.

Provisions held invalid: A devise to a son's wife for life, and if the son survives the wife, to the son for life, remainder to the son's heirs at law, is void as to the remainder, being a perpetuity. Buck v. Lincoln [Conn.] 56 Atl. 522. Testator devised property in trust for his four daughters, A, B, C, & D, during their lives, and on the death of A or C their portion to be paid to the survivors, and on the death of B or D their share to be paid to the children, the issue of said children taking the share of any deceased parent, for the lives of all the children of A and D, and on the death of all of said children, to the grandchildren of A and D or their issue or legal representatives, according to the law of descent and distribution. Held, the gift over to the grandchildren was void as a perpetuity, and upon the death of B the trust ceased and the property must be distributed as upon an intestacy. White v. Allen [Conn.] 56 Atl. 519. A gift to lineal descendants of testator's grandchildren, in case a daughter should die leaving issue, is void. Stone v. Bradlee, 183 Mass. 165, 66 N. E. 708. Bequests in trust to bishops and successors for the education of priests are held void under the Minn. statute of uses and trusts, § 11, c. 43, because not certain, nor capable of being rendered certain, as to beneficiaries and unlimited as to time. In re Shanahan's Estate, 88 Minn. 202, 92 N. W. 948. Where it appears from the will and a codicil that the testator intended that a provision for his daughter under the codicil should not be alienable during her life, the rule that annuities do not suspend the power of alienation does not apply. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283. An instrument purporting to convey lands to trustees and successors in perpetual trust for a school and home for children of deceased members of a secret society violates the rule against perpetuities. Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' O. H. & I. S. Ass'n, 66 Kan. 1, 71 Pac. 286. A direction by will setting apart a certain permanent fund, the income to be used in keeping testator's burial lot in good condition is void [Const. art. 20, § 9]. In re Gay's Estate, 138 Cal. 552, 71 Pac. 707. A trust to pay proceeds of realty on debts and a mortgage on the property, then to children, the principal on their death to go to their children, suspends the power of alienation beyond the lives in being. Dresser v. Travis, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 358. A bequest of a life estate, income of the remainder to go to children of the life tenant until the youngest is 25, when the estate was to be divided, is void as to the remainder. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson [Ky.] 79 S. W. 293. A trust created by a clause of a will providing for payment "of the interest, deducting expenses," to one and his children, "so long as they shall live," cannot be separated and might vest too remotely to be valid. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427. A trust during lives of the youngest two of testator's children at his death, with a codicil giving one daughter an annuity on condition, and at her death a certain amount to her children or issue of such children dead, is void as to the codicil as restraining power of alienation. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 177 N. Y. 86, 69 N. E. 283. A bequest of personalty to executors, the income to be paid to a daughter for life and at her death to her issue until the youngest became 21, when the whole estate was to be divided among such issue, with the further limitation that if any never became 21, the estate should be divided among certain named persons, is void as to both limitations [Laws 1897, c. 417, § 2]. Schlereth v. Schlereth, 173 N. Y. 444, 66 N. E. 130.

Accumulations: A provision by will that on death of one of the beneficiaries, the executors in one year shall divide the part of the principal held in trust for him among his heirs equally, with accrued profits thereon, is not an illegal accumulation of rents and profits. Nichols v. Nichols, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 381.

36. Effect of provisions void as against perpetuities on other provisions of deed or will, see Deeds; Wills.

Construction of statute effecting devise of property by void wills: Laws 1894, p. 842, c. 182, releasing title of the state by escheat to property of an alien, and confirming title in his testamentary trustees, is valid, though the will violates the general rule as to suspension of the power of alienation. Richardson v. Amsdon, 85 N. Y. Supp. 342.

37. Casgrain v. Hammond [Mich.] 96 N. W. 510.

38. So by Real Prop. Law, § 51 (Laws 1896, p. 568, c. 547) and Pers. Prop. Law, § 4 (Laws 1897, p. 508, c. 417). U. S. Trust Co. v. Soher, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 506.

39. Where a provision in a will was invalid as unlawfully suspending the power of alienation, but it was not essential to the testator's purpose in creating prior estates, it will not avoid them. Denison v. Denison, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 295.

40. Where three life estates in a fund are created, contrary to statute, the last will be abrogated and the remainder allowed to vest in the remaindermen [Laws 1897, c. 417, § 2]. In re Conger's Will, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 493. Proceedings for judicial settlement in accordance with the decree. In re Conger's Estate, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 157.

41. Where a gift by will of a remainder in fee is accompanied by a charge on the for accumulation may be upheld for the period allowed by law and distribution be then made.[42]

PIPE LINES AND SUBWAYS.

Authority from the city is prerequisite to the right to run electric wires in conduits under the streets.[43] Where an electric company occupies ducts in a subway under a lease, it is entitled to a temporary injunction against interference with its occupancy but not to a mandatory injunction pendente lite compelling the allowance of additional ducts.[44] Where a landowner granted a license for the maintenance of a pipe line, an extension thereof will not be enjoined at his suit if no additional burdens are imposed,[45] and the violation of a statute in the operation of the pipe line gives no right to injunction if complainant is not injured thereby.[46]

PLEADING.[47]

The name given a pleading is immaterial.[48] An affidavit of defense[49] or mo-remainder of a trust, invalid under the rule against perpetuities, the donee takes the remainder in fee. Towle v. Doe, 97 Me. 427.

42. Where an accumulation of income until children arrive at 25 was valid to the time of their majority only, a present distribution of the income subsequently accruing should be made at that time. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 405. A provision for accumulation of income on a legacy to an infant until he is 25 is valid until he becomes of age, when he is entitled to the income. Tobin v. Graf, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 412. A provision by will that part of the estate shall be allowed to accumulate for benefit of grandchildren, and equally divided among them when a certain grandchild, two years old at testator's death, should reach 35, does not violate the rule against perpetuities, though the accumulation cannot be enforced beyond 21 years after testator's death, when it will be distributed. 54. Complaint in action on lease as indefinite as to manner of execution of the lease entitling defendant to have it made more definite. Rockey v. Haslett, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 181. The point where allegations of a petition become inherently too vague and indefinite to admit of proof is variable and not subject to definite rule. In re Sprowl's Will, 109 La. 352. An allegation in a complaint for servant's injuries stating only that defendant had a certain employe at a certain place is properly ordered to be made definite and certain [Code Civ. Proc. § 546]. Donovan v. Cunard S. S. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 1113. An averment in a declaration that plaintiff's injuries were caused solely by defendant's negligence is insufficient as to certainty. Minnuci v. Phila. & R. R. Co., 68 N. J. Law, 432. Where the allegations of a complaint are jumbled and without relation to each other or to one cause of action it cannot be upheld by picking out independent allegations without relation to each other. Phillips v. Sonora Copper Co., 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 140. Counts of a complaint alleging merely possible or probable profits as damages, incapable of proof to any degree of certainty, are demurrable. Nichols v. Rasch [Ala.] 35 So. 409. A complaint for personal injuries must aver with certainty and definiteness to a common intent what the injuries were; that they were "serious" and that plaintiff suffered "both in body and mind" is insufficient. City Delivery Co. v. Henry [Ala.] 34 So. 389. Answer alleging that injuries were caused by carelessness, negligence, and fault of the deceased, may be required to be made more definite. McInerney v. 58. A denial by answer, on information and belief, of allegations in the complaint clearly within defendant's knowledge or which are matters of public record within his reach, is an evasion. Peacock v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 583.

59. An answer controverting no material allegation of the complaint and setting up no defense is frivolous. Soper v. St. Regis Paper Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 409. Submission of ten pages of brief in support of an order to strike an answer from the files as frivolous shows argument within the rule preventing the striking of a frivolous answer. Zimmerman v. Meyerowitz, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329, 12 Ann. Cas. 271. An allegation in defense of an action to recover money paid by mutual mistake that the payment was voluntary and not under duress is frivolous. Jaeger v. New York, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 543. Where a complaint on a note alleged protest and notice to defendants, an answer denying knowledge sufficient for belief except such allegations is not frivolous since it does not admit delivery to plaintiff nor more than the reasonable import of allegations in the complaint. Maccarone v. Hayes, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 41.

prolixity,[61] must be avoided, and mere epithets will be stricken out.[62] Facts not conclusions must be alleged.[63] A pleading otherwise sufficient is not bad for plead-

60. Averments in an answer of oral conversations of parties to a contract before execution thereof, the contract being alleged in the answer, are properly stricken out as redundant and immaterial, the conversations being merged in the written contract. Jordan v. Coulter, 30 Wash. 298, 70 Pac. 257. An answer setting up ignorance of the law, and failure to read papers signed, is immaterial and impertinent. Peacock v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 583.

61. A law preventing a prolix method of pleading is not unconstitutional because applied to actions of one kind only [Acts 1896, p. 89, No. 121]. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 95. Parts of a complaint for negligence, in 53 paragraphs on 35 closely printed pages, consisting of extracts from public statutes and private contracts and matters merely evidence, should be stricken out as prolix. Parsons v. McDonald, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 552.

62. Words in a complaint to set aside a default stating that complainant's counsel acted "cunningly and designedly and with a view to take undue advantage of complainant on account of the absence of her attorney," are mere epithets. Harlow v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Ind. App. 160, 65 N. E. 603.

63. Cochise County v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 946. Facts not general terms must be pleaded. McCullough v. Colfax County [Neb.] 95 N. W. 29. Facts constituting the bar of limitations must be set out in pleading the bar. Satterlund v. Beal [N. D.] 95 N. W. 518. Affidavit of defense in assumpsit. Reynolds v. Fahey [Del.] 55 Atl. 221. Specifications objecting to discharge of a bankrupt must allege particular acts of the bankrupt. In re Peck, 120 Fed. 972. Complaint alleging negligent and unlawful acts must state facts showing the acts to be unlawful. Payne v. Moore, 31 Ind. App. 368, 67 N. E. 1005. Facts constituting invalidity of instruments alleged to be clouds on a title must be alleged. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795. A petition merely stating plaintiff's "information and belief" and not the facts is insufficient where attacked on that ground. Robinson v. Ferguson, 119 Iowa, 325, 93 N. W. 350. Facts constituting fraud as ground of an action must be alleged so that their character as fraudulent may be determined by the court. Knowles v. New York, 176 N. Y. 430, 68 N. E. 860.

72. An answer alleging fraud in an action by an inventor against a manufacturer for royalties shows a defense so that the court could not resort to a previous answer alleging a test of the machine in order to strike out the present answer as a sham. Zimmerman v. Meyerowitz, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329. A defense will not be struck out as frivolous if it requires argument and careful examination to answer it. Dominion Nat. Bank v. Olympia Cotton Mills, 128 Fed. 181.

73. An answer denying knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to material allegations of the complaint cannot be stricken out as sham, nor can the court say it is untrue because the party presumably had sufficient knowledge to deny the allegations if untrue. Surplusage in pleading does not vitiate.[76] Clerical errors,[77] and errors and defects not affecting any substantial rights of the parties,[78] will be disregarded. Recitals in an instrument incorporated into a pleading are not averments and tender no issue.[79] A party is not precluded from a claim because inconsistent with a claim previously asserted but not successfully maintained.[80] In an action by a corporate manager on a contract for benefit of the corporation, the pleadings need not describe him as "manager."[81]

Captions, addresses, and conclusions.—A plea setting up new matter should conclude with a verification and not to the country.[82]

Signing, verifying, and indorsing.—An unverified answer confesses the petition.[83] Verification of a pleading need not follow exactly the statute but only in substance.[84] An answer may be verified by one co-defendant.[85] Where plaintiff supports the declaration with an affidavit of claim, defendant's plea must be supported by an affidavit of meritorious defense.[86] Specification of objections to discharge of a bankrupt is not a pleading requiring verification.[87] A petition in mandamus on relation of a public officer may be verified by him in his individual capacity.[88] Defendant in quo warranto desiring to contest allegations of fact on which the petition is based must make a positive denial under oath.[89] An affidavit to a plea stating that there is a good defense on the merits is not an affidavit that the plea of nonassumpsit is true.[90] "Instrument" as used in a pleading imports a writing, so that a verification by an attorney in an action on an instrument need not state expressly that it is in writing.[91] A mere allegation of agency in presenting a contract to plaintiffs does not require a denial under oath when signing by defendants is not alleged.[92] An affidavit verifying defendant's plea should deny execution of instruments sued on or state that the plea on nonassumpsit is not true in order to require plaintiff to prove execution.[93] Verification of a complaint to the effect that the allegations are true except as to matters alleged on information and belief which are believed to be true is equivalent to an unqualified verification that the allegations are true where all the allegations are positive.[94] An unverified answer in an action by an indorsee against the maker of a note puts in issue the allegation of the complaint of the transfer by the payee to the indorsee.[95] An affidavit of verification of a petition by an attorney showing that he is more familiar with the facts than petitioner and that they are almost wholly in his knowledge shows verification not to have been made by petitioner.[96] Where suit was brought in the county court on an open account properly sworn to by plaintiff, an unverified plea of payment should have been stricken out on plaintiff's motion.[97] The sufficiency of verifications on information and belief is treated in the note.[98]

Interpretation and construction in general.—Pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader,[99] but the rule applies only when they are attacked by motion or demurrer.[1] After judgment[2] and on appeal[3] they will be liberally construed, and whatever is necessarily implied in, or is reasonably to be inferred from, an allegation, is to be taken as if directly averred.[4] In the nisi prius courts and courts of similar jurisdiction they are liberally construed because often oral.[5] As between two constructions, one lawful in import the other unlawful, the former will be given.[6] General averments are always controlled by the specific allegations of fact in a pleading.[7] Separate pleas as to interests of several persons for whose benefit an action of debt was brought instead of one plea combining all defenses will be construed together.[8] In testing matters of defense in one of several paragraphs of an answer, the facts alleged therein are to be considered in the light of allegations in other paragraphs relating to the same defense.[9]

Technical phraseology.—"Understanding and agreement" in a pleading imports an oral agreement.[10]

§ 2. The declaration, count, complaint, or petition. Title, venue, and commencement.—Entitling a declaration as for the wrong action will make it defective after verdict;[11] but in Missouri it has been held generally that the title given a pleading is immaterial.[12] Entitling a petition "In the district court" instead of the county court is an amendable defect.[13] Statements as to plaintiff's capacity in the caption may be aided by the body of the complaint.[14]

Statement of the cause of action.—The complaint must allege every fact essential to plaintiff's cause of action.[15] Negligence relied on must be alleged.[16] If sufficient facts are given, failure to allege mere circumstantial details is not fatal.[17] Causes of an action not alleged are not thereby abandoned.[18] The allegations must connect defendant with the cause of action,[19] and must be connected by proper averments with the cause of action.[20] A complaint insufficient as to one of two plaintiffs is bad as to both.[21] Allegations may be made in alternative form,[22] but allegations in nature of one cause of action cannot be treated as if in nature of another.[23] Allegations of damage need not be broader than the basis of the action.[24] Allegations of a declaration containing only one count, repugnant to and inconsistent with each other, neutralize each other.[25] Material matter of each separate cause of suit stated in a pleading must be complete in itself,[26] but different items of the same cause of action need not be alleged separately.[27] The action may be stated in different counts to conform the pleadings to every possible state of proof.[28] Counts must not be inconsistent with each other.[29] Separate paragraphs of a complaint are not bad, as independent pleadings, because the same things are alleged therein.[30]

18. A litigant need not include all money demands against his debtor under pain of having abandoned those not included [Code Prac. art. 156]. In re Dimmick's Estate [La.] 35 So. 801.

19. A complaint for damages to live stock in transit is insufficient where it fails to show that the injuries resulted from the acts of defendant. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Beery, 31 Ind. App. 556, 68 N. E. 702.

20. Minnuci v. Phila. & R. Co., 68 N. J. Law, 432.

21. Frankel v. Garrard, 160 Ind. 209, 66 N. E. 687.

22. In an action for injuries received in a sawmill, a complaint alleging negligence in alternative form, either in failure to remedy a defect in the appliances or the timber used, is proper. Covington Sawmill & Mfg. Co. v. Clark, 25 Ky. L. R. 569, 76 S. W. 348. An averment in the complaint, in the alternative, that an assignment was wrongfully obtained without consideration or was made as security for a loan, did not make the complaint bad. Hasberg v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 199.

23. A complaint alleging injury from defendant's negligence cannot be treated as for assault and battery on proof of intentional injury. Greathouse v. Croan [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 273.

24. In an action for damages to one piece of clothing special damage to the whole suit need not be alleged. Harsburg v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 539.

25. Fla. Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Ashmore, 43 Fla. 272.

26. Moore v. Halliday, 43 Or. 243, 72 Pac. 801. Plaintiff suing for negligent injury to person and property must state separately and number the facts constituting the cause of action for injury to each [Code Civ. Proc. § 483]. Powers v. Sherin, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 37.

27. In an action on an official bond to recover money due the county, each item need not be alleged in a separate paragraph of the complaint. Nowlin v. State, 30 Ind. App. 277, 66 N. E. 54.

28. Hess v. Gansz, 90 Mo. App. 439.

29. A count alleging indebtedness on a fire insurance policy and occurrence of a loss and another alleging a promise to pay if a loss occurred and that no loss occurred are inconsistent and liable to general demurrer. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co., 75 Vt. 441.

30. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland [Ind.] 69 N. E. 138.

A count in assumpsit is not good at common law as a general count.[31] Succeeding counts may refer to previous counts for necessary allegations,[32] but independent counts will not aid each other.[33] Whenever an entire verdict is to be given on several counts in the declaration, a defective count is immaterial where one or more counts are sufficient.[34] Where a declaration contains two counts, one based on affirmance of a contract, the other on its disaffirmance, plaintiff after relying on both through the trial may strike out the first and rely on the second at close of the evidence.[35]

Specific terms need not be used if the facts are sufficiently pleaded.[36] Generally defenses are not to be anticipated;[37] however, there are exceptions to the rule.[38] That a complaint otherwise good sets out the defense will not make it bad if it gives sufficient matter in avoidance.[39] Matters of law need not be alleged,[40] though foreign statutes relied on may be pleaded as to substance and effect.[41] A petition sufficiently stating a statutory cause of action need not mention the statute.[42] Estoppel,[43] and special damages, must be specially pleaded,[44] but not punitive damages.[45] Performance of conditions precedent must be alleged[46] specifically,[47] un-

31. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co., 75 Vt. 441.

32. Introductory matter in a complaint of more than one count need not be repeated after the first count; such as partnership capacity of parties. Hefferlin v. Karlman [Mont.] 74 Pac. 201. A count in conversion is not defective for failure to describe the goods where it referred to a previous count sufficiently describing them. Wilson v. Hoffman, 123 Fed. 984. Each count of a declaration is distinct and must be independent except that later counts may incorporate allegations of prior counts by express reference. Bryant v. Southern R. Co., 137 Ala. 488.

33. An independent count is not aided by statements in a prior count that plaintiff sued in a representative capacity for wrongful death of another where the independent count does not show who the decedent was. Bryant v. Southern R. Co., 137 Ala. 488.

34. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 103 Ill. App. 438.

35. Brown v. Woodbury, 183 Mass. 279, 67 N. E. 327.

36. A duty need not be charged in specific terms in an action for injuries to a servant, the facts out of which the duty springs being sufficient. Illinois Steel Co. v. McNulty, 105 Ill. App. 594.

37. Plaintiff seeking to enforce a vendor's lien need not negative existence of facts amounting to a waiver of the lien. Mulky v. Karsell, 31 Ind. App. 595, 68 N. E. 689. Warranties or conditions subsequent need not be alleged in declaring on an insurance policy there being matters of defense which plaintiff need not anticipate. Ellis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171.

38. A count for work and labor must allege nonpayment though payment is an affirmative defense. Bacon v. Chapman, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 309. In an action on a promissory note in Pennsylvania, plaintiff may anticipate the defense by alleging that a former judgment recovered was on one of a series of similar notes. Amshel v. Hosenfeld, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 376.

39. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland [Ind.] 69 N. E. 133.

40. A petition for a nuisance need not allege that the acts complained of were unlawfully done. Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick & Tile Mfg. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 646.

41. Plaintiff suing in Arkansas for wrongful death occurring in Louisiana may plead merely the substance and effect of the Louisiana statute. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Haist [Ark.] 72 S. W. 893.

42. Bair v. Heibel [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1017.

43. Union State Bank v. Hutton [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1061.

44. Injury to kidneys from confinement because of broken leg. Kircher v. Larchwood, 120 Iowa, 578, 95 N. W. 184.

45. In an action for negligence and willful tort, plaintiff need not allege punitive damages claimed but only the willfulness and the damages from the negligence and the willful tort [Act 1898, 22 Stat. p. 693]. Stembridge v. Southern Ry. Co., 65 S. C. 440. See, also, Damages, 1 Curr. Law, p. 833.

46. The complaint in an action against a village for injuries must allege that the statutory period had elapsed since filing the claim [Laws 1897, p. 453, c. 414, § 322]. Thrall v. Cuba, 84 N. Y. Supp. 661. A complaint for injuries to a servant should allege notice of the accident to the master [Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600]. Johnson v. Roach, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351. Allegations of complaint as to performance of conditions precedent as against general demurrer. Gummer v. Mairs, 140 Cal. 535, 74 Pac. 26. Allegations of performance of conditions by plaintiff in complaint on benefit insurance certificate under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 373. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 31 Ind. App. 107, 67 N. E. 272.

47. By facts and not in general terms. Action against county to recover for sheep killed by dogs under Comp. St. 1901, § 18, art. 1, c. 4. Imposition of the proper tax by the county board must be alleged. McCullough v. Colfax County [Neb.] 95 N. W. 29. Performance of conditions cannot be pleaded generally where it extends to matters under contracts of indemnity constituting the very loss for which the insurer is liable. Taylor v. New Jersey Title, G. & T. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 152.

less waived,[48] or unless it depends on unperformed acts of defendant.[49] The meaning of technical terms of trade should be explained if their technical meaning is essential to the cause of action.[50]

A technical defect will not render a petition insufficient to interrupt the running of limitations.[51] Unnecessary allegations amount to a defect[52] but that a complaint states more than is necessary will not render defective where only one cause of action is stated and that sufficiently.[53] Misnomer of defendant is fatal where limitations have run before amendment,[54] or in an action against a corporation.[55] Impertinent allegations in a complaint so interwoven with pertinent allegations that to strike them out would weaken the force of facts sought to be stated will not be stricken where defendant is sufficiently apprised as to the action.[56] Defects in a complaint or petition cannot be supplied by an answer of specific denials[57] or admissions.[58] A prayer for some relief is essential.[59]

The prayer of a petition is no part of it.[60] A prayer for general relief coupled with one for special relief cannot be extended so as to warrant relief not comprehended by allegations of fact in the petition.[61] Where only actual or punitive damages are sued for, nominal damages cannot be had though the party would be entitled to them.[62] A prayer for general relief in a bill in equity will sustain a personal judgment.[63] The sufficiency of the prayer in particular pleadings is treated in the note.[64]

48. Plaintiff may assume that conditions precedent which have been waived will not be relied on so that allegations of such waiver are not inconsistent with the requirement that performance of such conditions must be pleaded in an action on contract. Insurance policy [Code Civ. Proc. § 128]. German Ins. Co. v. Shader [Neb.] 93 N. W. 972.

49. Performance of a building contract by an owner suing a contractor. Ramlose v. Dollman, 100 Mo. App. 347, 73 S. W. 917.

50. A petition alleging a sale of goods "f. o. b. cars in St. Louis" is not fatally defective for failure to allege the meaning of the phrase. Vivion Mfg. Co. v. Robertson [Mo.] 75 S. W. 644. Where a petition on a contract for sale of cotton alleges that two kinds of bales were sold and that the parties agreed verbally as to the price, and fails to allege the trade meaning of the bales as to weight or the price, it affirmatively appears that the contract is partly parol and the petition is insufficient. Beacham v. Kea, 118 Ga. 406.

51. Wolf & Sons v. New Orleans Tailor-Made Pants Co., 110 La. 427.

52. Unnecessary allegations as to negligence in action for injuries to brakeman as denunciatory and inflammatory rendering petition liable to demurrer. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Appeal [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 635.

53. Blakemore v. Roberts [N. D.] 96 N. W. 1029. A special count in a declaration for interest on the amount claimed as principal is not an improper pleading liable to demurrer though not necessary. Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 228.

54. A petition misnaming defendant will not arrest limitations, without service of citation or entry of appearance, so as to allow an amended petition after the statute had run. Martinez v. Dragna [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 425.

55. Use of "the" in a declaration before the title of defendant corporation is a misnomer so that plea in abatement will lie where the corporate title contains no such word. Lapham v. Phila., B. & W. R. Co. [Del.] 56 Atl. 366.

56. Gowans v. Jobbins, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 429.

57. An answer of merely specific denials will not aid a materially defective complaint. Nye v. Bill Nye Mill. Co., 42 Or. 560, 71 Pac. 1043.

58. Where a petition is defective as pleading a breach of contract without pleading the contract, allegations of a contract in the answer admitted by the replication do not supply the defect where such contract could not have been broken as alleged in the petition. Currell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 93, 71 S. W. 113. Failure of a complaint in partition to allege possession is not cured by an answer alleging that the lands were part of the lands involved in a former suit between the parties where the reply denied this and plaintiff offered evidence in support of the denial. Sterling v. Sterling, 43 Or. 200, 72 Pac. 741.

59. Not enough to ask for declaration of rights. Southern R. Co. v. State, 116 Ga. 276.

60. Relief may follow the facts stated regardless of the prayer. Smith v. Smith, 67 Kan. 841, 73 Pac. 56.

61. Vila v. Grand Island E. L., I. & C. S. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 613; Mann v. German-American Inv. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 600.

62. Civ. Code 1895, § 3801, construing pleading most strongly against the pleader. Haber. B., B. Hat Co. v. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 696.

63. American T. & S. Co. v. Gottstein [Iowa] 98 N. W. 770.

64. An allegation in a petition that plaintiff is "endamaged to the amount of one thousand dollars" is sufficient to support inquiry as to actual damages when the cause

After three petitions held insufficient, final judgment is properly entered for defendant.[65] A statutory motion by a receiver of a corporation for a judgment for money is a compliance with a direction "to institute suits at law."[66]

Not all instruments or records sued on need be made a part of the pleading,[67] but contracts constituting the basis of the action must be pleaded[68] in their proper character.[69] Statement of the legal effect only is necessary.[70]

What are necessary allegations,[71] and sufficiency of allegations,[72] in particular pleadings, are assembled in the notes.

of action is admitted by demurrer. Disosway v. Edwards [N. C.] 46 S. E. 501.

65. Rev. St. 1899, § 623. Tapana v. Shaffray, 97 Mo. App. 337, 71 S. W. 119.

66. Notice thereof takes the place of writ and declaration. Reed v. Gold [Va.] 45 S. E. 868.

67. A judgment sued on is not a written instrument which must be made a part of the complaint. Kelley v. Houts, 30 Ind. App. 474, 66 N. E. 408. A certificate of stock in a loan association pledged to it by a borrowing member need not be set out in an action to foreclose the mortgage or exhibited with it, it not being the basis of the cause of action. Coppes v. Union N. S. & L. Ass'n [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 1022.

68. Under the Indiana statute requiring that when a pleading is founded on a written instrument, the writing, or a copy thereof, must be filed with the pleading, a copy in the body of the pleading is sufficient. Miller v. Wayne International B. & L. Ass'n [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 180. Where an instrument sued on is copied in the pleading, the legal effect of the instrument need not also be set out. Miller v. Wayne International B. & L. Ass'n [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 180. A petition which pleads failure of defendant to do a certain thing as a breach of contract without pleading or setting out the contract is insufficient. Currell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 93, 71 S. W. 113. One suing on a contract ambiguous when applied to the subject of litigation must point out the uncertainty and aver a definite construction. Johnson v. Kindred State Bank [N. D.] 96 N. W. 588.

69. An allegation in a complaint setting out an instrument as of a different character from that which it plainly appears to be, is insufficient though not denied. Saling v. Bolander [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 701. Under Practice Act, cls. 7 and 8, a count on an account annexed, includes by intendment, with respect to the item stated in the account, all the allegations contained in the common counts. Mass. M. L. Ins. Co. v. Green [Mass.] 70 N. E. 202.

70. A written instrument sued on need not be set out in haec verba, nor need a copy be attached, but it is sufficient if the complaint states its legal effect. Bank of Timmonsville v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 120 Fed. 315.

71. Sufficiency of petition as against general demurrer. Horne v. Mullis [Ga.] 46 S. E. 663.

Jurisdiction: In pleading a federal judgment in bankruptcy, facts showing jurisdiction need not be alleged. Bailey v. Gleason [Vt.] 56 Atl. 537. Facts on which jurisdiction is based need not be alleged in pleading the judgment of a county court. Com'rs of Highways v. Big Four Drainage Dist., 207 Ill. 17, 69 N. E. 576. A complaint in the county court in New York to recover on the bond of a city officer must show on its face that the surety is a resident of the county. Perlman v. Gunn, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 166. Plaintiff's claim or right of jurisdiction in a particular court must be shown and allegations that defendant intends to assert a defense cognizable only in such court is insufficient. Joy v. St. Louis, 122 Fed. 524.

Fraud: A petition alleging that defendant secured signatures to a note falsely representing that they were those of certain persons, thereby inducing plaintiff to advance him money is good on general demurrer though it does not allege that defendant knew the representations were false. Commercial Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 239. A petition on the ground of fraud is demurrable which shows that the action was not commenced within four years, and fails to show when the fraud was discovered. Newman Grove State Bank v. Linderholm [Neb.] 94 N. W. 616. Knowledge of fraud by a grantee in a deed need not be alleged or proved where the conveyance was voluntary and prima facie fraudulent as to creditors. Spear v. Spear, 97 Me. 498.

Demand or payment: Complaint on injunction bond must allege failure to pay damages. Van Horn v. Holt [Mont.] 75 Pac. 680. A complaint alleging an agreement in writing to pay plaintiff a certain sum each year and its breach, and the amount due, is sufficient without alleging a demand [Rev. St. §§ 2646, 2668, 2675]. Gall v. Gall [Wis.] 97 N. W. 938. A complaint on a municipal order setting it out and alleging refusal of payment need not allege a demand. Rochford v. School Dist. No. 11 [S. D.] 97 N. W. 747.

Title or right in property: Insufficiency of complaint for injury to party wall in that it failed to allege existence of an easement for support in the adjoining lot. Payne v. Moore, 31 Ind. App. 360, 66 N. E. 483. An averment that one owns certain described property is permissible and the manner of acquiring ownership need not be alleged. George Adams & F. Co. v. South Omaha Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 641. In suing for damages to crops plaintiff need not allege an assignment to him where he held an interest before the injury. Hovey v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 398.

Personal injuries: A petition in an action for injuries to a passenger from defects in appliances is liable to demurrer where it does not specify the particular appliances causing the injury and how it was received. Newton v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 55 Atl. 2. A complaint for personal injuries to a servant must allege that he had no knowledge of recklessness and incompetency of a negligent fellow-servant. Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman [Ind.] 69 N. E. 669. Exemplary damages cannot be recovered where the complaint does not allege willfulness. Harmon v. W. U. Tel. Co., 65 S. C. 490. The declaration for injuries against a master need not state that his employes, whose negligence caused the accident, were not fellow-servants of plaintiff. Mott v. Chicago & M. El. R. Co., 102 Ill. App. 412.

Other particular matters: A complaint good at common law or under the code must state clearly all facts necessary for plaintiff to prove in the first instance on an answer of general denial. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland [Ind.] 69 N. E. 138. A petition in an action on an appeal bond must allege that supersedeas was issued by the clerk after execution of the bond. Hoskins v. Southern Nat. Bank, 24 Ky. L. R. 2250, 73 S. W. 786. Complaint in an action on a fidelity bond; necessity of alleging several items of loss and evidence in support thereof. Bank of Timmonsville v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 120 Fed. 315. Particular words and acts need not be alleged in the complaint in an action for alienation of affections, the alienation and the intent being alleged. Jenkins v. Chism, 25 Ky. L. R. 736, 76 S. W. 405. A petition in an action for damages against a telegraph company for failure to deliver a message, stating that but for the delay plaintiff would have reached his son 12 hours before his death is not defective for not stating the hour of his death [Civ. Code, § 134]. Howard v. W. U. Tel. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 828, 76 S. W. 387. Where a complaint on a lease void unless in writing does not state whether it is in writing, defendant is entitled to have it made more definite in that regard. Rockey v. Haslett, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 181. Where plaintiff alleged that he was deprived of money through conspiracy of defendants through officers, agents, and servants, defendants were entitled to a restatement of the allegation so as to show the identity of those engaged in the conspiracy. Riker v. Erlanger, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 137.

72. Walling v. Bown [Idaho] 72 Pac. 960. A declaration setting out the cause of action with sufficient definiteness to enable defendant to understand its nature and to plead is sufficient. Sun Life Assur. Co. v. Bailey [Va.] 44 S. E. 692. Complaint in action to set aside a default. Harlow v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Ind. App. 160, 65 N. E. 603. An allegation, in an action for damages to land from water flowing from a sewer, that defendant owed plaintiff the duty of preventing flowage upon the land, is insufficient, no facts being stated. Neinaber v. Weehawken [N. J. Law] 57 Atl. 267.

Declaration in case. Niles v. Brown [R. I.] 56 Atl. 1030. Petition as showing bar of limitations on its face. Merrill v. Suing [Neb.] 92 N. W. 618. Complaint to have defendant adjudged trustee of part of a mining claim as stating a cause of action. Canfield v. Jeannotte [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1062. Complaint in foreclosure under Code Civ. Proc. § 1629, as stating whether any other action has been brought to recover any part of the debt. Schieck v. Donohue, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 321. Petition by chattel mortgagee to recover proceeds of sale of mortgaged property after conversion. George Adams & F. Co. v. South Omaha Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 641. An averment in a petition to recover land as an heir, that defendant knew before purchasing that plaintiff was an heir is insufficient as an allegation of heirship. Craig v. Welch-Hackley Coal & Oil Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 232, 74 S. W. 1097. A mere allegation of ownership of a cause of action, as heir of another, is insufficient; statement of proceedings vesting title being necessary. Buttles v. De Baun, 116 Wis. 323, 93 N. W. 5. An averment in a declaration that one purchased at a tax sale and ever afterward lawfully held land against plaintiff is not legally equivalent to a statement that plaintiff was evicted by the sale. Taylor v. N. J. Title, G. & T. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 152. Petition by executor against heirs at law of testator and all parties interested though involving individual transactions of plaintiff [Civ. Code § 4000]. Gaines v. Gaines, 116 Ga. 476.

Quo warranto: Application by Attorney General in quo warranto to determine whether a corporate combination exists, for attendance of witnesses desired under Rev. St. 1899, § 8984. State v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 737.

74. Bill of particulars with counterclaim or cross complaint, see post, § 6.

75. American Hide & Leather Co. v. Chalkley & Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 705.

76. Defendant cannot object that plaintiff filed no bill of particulars, where defendant sought no order requiring it. Kearns v. N. Y. & Q. C. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 179.

77. American Hide & Leather Co. v. Chalkley & Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 705.

78. Action by common counts: Where an action is commenced by common counts, default cannot be entered or judgment rendered, until plaintiff has filed a bill of particulars. Price v. Takash, 75 Conn. 616.

Actions on contract: Where a complaint alleges a contract for commission on all sales made by plaintiff, and alleges large sales to many persons, defendant is entitled to a bill of particulars giving the names of customers to whom goods were sold. Zeigler v. Garvin, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 281. Where a complaint alleged that defendant owed plaintiff for money paid out and loaned, and on dein the knowledge of defendant which plaintiff alleges he cannot state in detail,[79] unless plaintiff is allowed to obtain the necessary information on defendant's consent.[80] One of several defendants may move for a bill.[81] Where plaintiff allows an order for a bill to be made by default, he must comply, though merely required to repeat information in the complaint.[82] Where, in an action sounding in tort, but on contract alleging an account, defendant demanded a bill of particulars, a motion by plaintiff to strike the demand was properly decided within ten days, there being some doubt as to the propriety of the demand.[83] A bill of an account is not a part of the complaint,[84] and cannot supply necessary allegations.[85] A bill furnished before answer is not a part of the complaint to which defendant must specifically plead.[86] A bill annexed to a declaration or delivered pursuant to demand, limits the generality of the pleading for purposes of trial.[87] Recovery is restricted to mand defendant furnished plaintiff's receipt, showing a balance due to plaintiff, the latter was properly directed to furnish a bill of particulars [Code Civ. Proc. § 531]. Beirne v. Sanderson, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 62. Where defendant in an action to recover a balance on collections made by him for plaintiff, admitted that he collected money and deducted his compensation, but denied collecting the amount claimed and failure to pay the amount due, plaintiff could not be required to serve a bill of particulars. Heidenreich v. Hirsh, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 319. In a suit on contract for services in selling mines and organizing a corporation for development, a bill of particulars may be required to show whether the agreements were oral, their date, and whether made by agent of defendant. Treadwell v. Greene, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 289.

Actions on account: Sufficiency of statement of account in action thereon under Code Civ. Proc. § 531, so as not to require a further account and bill of particulars. Seed v. Fairchild, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 629.

Recovery of property: Allegations in complaint for conversion of corporate stock, held to defendant's advantage rather than prejudice, by limiting plaintiff's proof and rendering bill of particulars unnecessary. Rockwell v. Day, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 437.

Designation of agents: Where it was alleged that fraud was effected through defendant or his duly authorized agent or agents, a bill of particulars could be required setting out the name or names of such agent or agents. Riker v. Erlanger, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 137.

Actions for tort in general: A law requiring a bill of particulars as to items in several accounts does not apply to a complaint setting up separate causes of action in tort [Cut. Comp. Laws Nev. § 3151]. Eisele v. Oddie, 120 Fed. 695.

Action for personal injuries: Plaintiff required on motion of defendant to furnish bill of particulars under New York statute, where he had previously obtained extensions of time to serve such bill. McFarland v. Consolidated Gas Co., 125 Fed. 260. A tenant suing for injuries from a defective stairway may be required to furnish a bill of particulars as to the defects, where the landlord states by affidavit, that he is ignorant of the defects and could not learn as to them by diligent inquiry. Robinson v. Stewart, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 594. Requiring bill of particulars in action for injuries on a railroad track where many trains ran daily. Bogard v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 624, 76 S. W. 170. Where, in an action for personal injuries plaintiff alleges that she believes the injuries to be permanent, a bill of particulars may be required as to the length of time she was confined at home. O'Neill v. Interurban St. R. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 556.

Criminal conversation: Plaintiff alleging various acts of criminal conversation may may be required, in the discretion of the court, to furnish a bill of particulars giving place, time, and date of each act she intends to prove. Gary v. Eaton Circuit Judge [Mich.] 92 N. W. 774.

79. Gowans v. Jobbins, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 429. A widow suing her husband's administrator for money collected for her use by deceased will not be required to give a further bill of particulars, where no reply is made to her affidavit that deceased kept all the accounts, and that defendant's attorneys have the books without which she cannot give a further bill. Wait v. Dauchy, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 646.

80. Where a complaint for wrongful death contains only general and indefinite charges of negligence, and on demand for a bill of particulars, plaintiff asserts that she has no actual information, that being in the personal knowledge of defendant, plaintiff may be required to obtain the information on defendant's consent, and then make the complaint more specific or file a bill of particulars [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 870, et seq.]. Rosney v. Erie R. Co., 124 Fed. 90.

81. Where a complaint against several defendants for attorney's services merely alleges that all were owing plaintiff for services rendered, one appearing separately and entering denial may require a bill of particulars. Dempsey v. Gazzam, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 633.

82. Quinn v. Fitzgerald, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 539.

83. Code Civ. Proc. § 531. Main v. Pender, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 237.

84. Saxton v. Musselman [S. D.] 95 N. W. 291.

85. When the complaint failed to allege that the claim sued upon was assigned to plaintiff, on application to join the assignor as co-plaintiff, the bill of particulars filed before such count and stating the assignment was properly stricken from the files. Kelsey v. Punderford [Conn.] 56 Atl. 579.

86. Chamberlain v. Loewenthal, 138 Cal. 47, 70 Pac. 932.

87. Prac. Act, §§ 236, 237 (Gen. St. p. 2572).

damages specified in the bill.[88] Where a bill of particulars was not served in the required time, but was served over a month before trial, and was not objected to as defective, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to exclude the evidence.[89] An order allowing service of a further bill of particulars by plaintiff, as required by a former order, is allowable, though plaintiff has been guilty of great laches, where he claimed negotiations for a settlement as his excuse, and defendant had made no determined effort to bring the cause to trial.[90] Sufficiency of signature to a bill,[91] and sufficiency of particular bills is treated in the note.[92] Where a declaration counted on a foreign judgment, and afterward plaintiff filed without leave, an amended declaration like the original, except that it was accompanied by notice of certain notes, and on the same day a bill of particulars was filed setting up the judgment and notes as a cause of action, it was proper to allow use of the amended declaration to complete the bill of particulars, though an objection to it was valid.[93]

An exhibit will not supply necessary allegations,[94] especially if no reference is made to it,[95] though defects as to description of parties in the complaint will be cured, in Kentucky, by the exhibit.[96] Exhibits referred to as filed with a pleading, or writing sued on, will not aid it unless so filed.[97] The exhibit and the allegations relating thereto must agree.[98] If they differ the exhibit controls.[99] Where allegations of a pleading cover all material facts shown in exhibits annexed they may be stricken out.[1] Sufficiency of particular exhibits will be found in the note.[2]

90. Romer v. Kensico Cemetery, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 100.

91. Where defendant had moved for a bill of particulars but no order therefor was entered, a bill produced by defendant as voluntarily supplied by plaintiff's attorneys and signed by them should be admitted in evidence, though one attorney whose signature appeared had no recollection of the signing, considerable time having elapsed. American C., B. & L. Works v. Galland-Burke Brew. & Malt. Co., 30 Wash. 178, 70 Pac. 236.

92. Sufficiency of bill of particulars by defendant asking set-off in action on account. Boody v. Pratt, 68 N. J. Law, 295. Sufficiency of bill of particulars in action against railroad company for damages by burning of trees. MacDonald v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 25 R. I. 40. Sufficiency of particular statements as to personal injuries in compliance with an order for bill of particulars by plaintiff in an action for such injuries. Quinn v. Fitzgerald, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 539.

93. Ontario Powder Works v. Powell [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1075.

94. A complaint alleging that certain defendants claimed to own all nonexempt property of a debtor defendant, without alleging a transfer to them or describing the property, except by reference to an exhibit, does not charge a fraudulent conveyance; the exhibit can not be considered. Smith v. Tate, 30 Ind. 367, 66 N. E. 88. An exhibit filed with and referred to in a petition is insufficient to supply omission of a material fact. Altemus v. Asher, 24 Ky. L. R. 2401, 2416, 74 S. W. 245.

95. A writing annexed to a pleading but not referred to therein cannot enlarge or limit its averments [Prac. Act, § 123, 2 Gen. St. p. 2554]. Shelmerdine v. Lippincott [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 237.

96. A deed attached to a petition in breach of covenant as an exhibit, correctly describing the defendant railroad company, cures any defect in that regard in the petition. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Wilson, 25 Ky. 525, 76 S. W. 138.

97. A complaint on a note will not support a default judgment where it alleges that a copy of the note is filed with the complaint, but it is not filed. Erhardt v. Pfeiffer, 29 Ind. App. 570, 64 N. E. 885. Failure to append to his statement of claim a copy of the writing sued on may defeat judgment for want of sufficient affidavit, and may subject plaintiff to rule for more specific statement or demurrer. Athens Car & Coach Co. v. Elsbree, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 618. An exhibit referred to in a reply but not annexed is a part thereof, though no copy was furnished defendant before trial by a justice. New Idea Pattern Co. v. Whelan, 75 Conn. 455.

98. Where an exhibit attached to a petition on account and for damages showed checks which no allegation of the petition shows that defendants had cashed or accepted, more specific allegations may be required on special exception. Malin v. McCutcheon [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 586.

99. Johnson v. Kindred State Bank [N. D.] 96 N. W. 588.

1. Noah v. German-American Bldg. Ass'n, 31 Ind. App. 504, 68 N. E. 615.

2. An exhibit in a complaint for goods sold showing the parties, and the date of the transaction, and the amount, kind and price of goods, is sufficient to authorize admission of evidence. Brierre v. Cereal Sugar Co., 103

Joinder, splitting and severance.—Misjoinder of counts in the same declaration is a mispleading.[3] Where there is doubt whether a complaint sets up one or several causes of action, plaintiff cannot be required on motion to state separately, and number the causes.[4] Causes of complaint though similar in tendency and result should be pleaded separately unless they appear to be the same or are founded on a joint right.[5] Tort should not be counted on jointly and also severally in one pleading.[6] Disconnected counts in tort and in contract cannot be joined in the same pleading,[7] nor causes in tort with causes for recovery of property.[8] The rule applies to distinct torts.[9] Causes growing out of the same subject of action may be joined in many states,[10] though legal and equitable,[11] or tortious and based on contract,[12] the rule applying to causes arising out of tort,[13]

Mo. App. 622, 77 S. W. 111. Deeds or other papers referred to in the petition by allegations of inducement, and as to which no relief is asked need not be exhibited to the petition [Civ. Code § 4963]. Horne v. Mullis [Ga.] 46 S. E. 663.

6. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 198 Ill. 462, 64 N. E. 1011. A complaint alleging in a single count unlawful detention of realty, destruction and unlawful detention of personalty, assault and injury to the person, and threatened expulsion from a town, and praying damages in a lump sum is demurrable [Cut, Comp. Laws Nev. § 3159]. Eisele v. Oddie, 120 Fed. 695.

7. A declaration alleging a cause of action ex contractu in the first count, and a cause ex delicto in the second count, misjoins causes of action. Hazlehurst v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 951.

8. An action for unlawful maintenance of a fence constituting a nuisance, and an action for recovery of realty and to quiet title cannot be joined. Giller v. West [Ind.] 69 N. E. 548.

9. An action against a corporation for injuries from negligence of employes cannot be joined with one against the corporation and its president for libel. Brooks v. Galveston City R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 330.

10. The causes must all arise out of the same transaction, or transactions, and be connected with the same subject of action. Harrod v. Farrar [Kan.] 74 Pac. 624. A complaint may unite a cause of action against decedent's administrators for breach of his contract with a cause against the heirs. Hall v. Gilman, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 458. Express contract of employment and contract of guaranty may be joined. Dudley v. Duval, 29 Wash. 528, 70 Pac. 68. An action by members of a firm, after dissolution, on a firm note given by one could be united with an action by the firm, in the name of such person, on a note given to him which he had pledged as security for the first note [Code Prac. § 83]. Crews v. Yowell, 25 Ky. L. R. 598, 76 S. W. 127. A cause of action to recover the reasonable value of personalty sold defendant may be joined with another to recover on a contract for the sale of the same property to be paid for in stock of a certain corporation [Rev. St. 1898, § 2647]. Badger Tel. Co. v. Wolf River Tel. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 907.

11. Causes of action arising out of the same transaction, or transactions, connected with the subject of the action may be united in one petition, though legal and equitable. Tootle v. Kent [Okl.] 73 Pac. 310. An action against the widow of a surviving partner to recover life insurance received by her on his life, from policies secured by firm funds as security for debts, may be joined with an action to foreclose liens of the same debts, on firm property and stock of such partner. First Nat. Bank v. Valenta [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 1087. A complaint by a stockholder for appointment of a receiver for the corporation, and an accounting between it and another corporation it had agreed to finance is not demurrable for misjoinder of causes. Case v. Hudson Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 51. An equitable action to dissolve a partnership, have a receiver appointed, and for an accounting, may be joined in a petition with a legal cause for damages for depreciation in value of property, loss of profits, and destruction and impairment of business and credit, resulting from fraud and malice. Tootle v. Kent [Okl.] 73 Pac. 310. In one action, in Missouri, plaintiff may seek to abate a nuisance, pray injunction, and recover damages from the nuisance. Baker v. McDaniel [Mo.] 77 S. W. 531. Election is not required between counts of a petition seeking an accounting as to partnership matters and a sale of the partnership property to pay debts. Goff v. Young, 25 Ky. L. R. 786, 76 S. W. 383. An alleged heir may unite a cause of action to set aside deeds from her foster father to her foster mother, for undue influence and incapacity, with an action against a purchaser, with notice, from the mother, of land similarly conveyed by the mother. Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820.

12. Foreclosure of a chattel mortgage may be joined with an action for conversion of the mortgaged property. Cassidy v. Willis [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 40. Vendor sued in one action for breach of covenant of seisin and misrepresentations. Koepke v. Winterfield, 116 Wis. 44, 92 N. W. 437. Breach of contract and conversion of materials furnished under it may be joined in one complaint [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4992]. McCorkle v. Mallory, 30 Wash. 632, 71 Pac. 186.

13. A widow's cause of action to set aside and to equitable causes,[14] but generally the separate causes should be separately stated and numbered.[15] Legal and equitable causes cannot be joined in the federal courts, nor either with a cause in admiralty.[16] Where the causes of action affect different plaintiffs,[17] or different defendants, there can be no joinder.[18] A count against two defendants should not be joined with separate counts against each.[19] A petition for divorce cannot join an action to settle property rights not arising from the marriage relation.[20] A complaint to recover a penalty for sale of vinegar cannot by implication allege an indefinite number of sales in one count, a fraudulent judgment in an action for negligent death of her husband, is properly joined with her action for his negligent death. De Garcia v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 275. Several negligent acts resulting in a single injury, do not constitute separate causes of action, so as to require separate statement and numbering. (Negligent dentistry, resulting in disease. Brown v. Cady, 86 N. Y. Supp. 959. An action against a railroad company for diversion or obstruction of a stream may be joined with an action for damages from fire set by an engine along the right of way. Jackson v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 724. Plaintiff suing in one court on an undertaking in attachment for damages in suing out the writ, and another for damages for malicious prosecution in procuring its issuance cannot be required to elect [Mills' Ann. Code, § 49]. Rucker v. Omaha & G. Smelting & Refining Co. [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 682. Injuries to a house from removal of an adjoining house, by a railroad company, to make room for its tracks, and from noise, smoke, and other results of operation of the road may be joined in one declaration. Fisher v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [Va.] 46 S. E. 381. Personal injuries and injuries to a vehicle are joinable under Code Civ. Proc. § 484, subd. 9, as so arising though not joinable as actions for "personal" injuries or for injuries "to property." Eagan v. N. Y. Transp. Co., 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 111. Where plaintiff charges both willful and negligent acts defendant cannot require a separate statement or an election [Code Civ. Proc. § 186a]. Schumpert v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 332.

14. A cause of action for infringement of a trade mark and labels, and for unlawful competition, may be joined in a suit in equity. Jewish Colonization Ass'n v. Solomon, 125 Fed. 994. Joinder of suits for accounting as proper under Code Civ. Proc. § 484, subd. 9, and § 1815. Rogers v. Wheeler, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 435. An action to set aside deeds of realty as in fraud of creditors may be united with one to have a certain transaction, whereby a debtor alters his statutory homestead, declared fraudulent as to creditors and subject the land to a judgment lien. Hunt v. Dean [Minn.] 97 N. W. 574. Proceedings to set aside a former decree relating to the same matter and a suit to foreclose a mortgage may be brought in one action. Cushing v. Schoeneman [Neb.] 96 N. W. 346. A pleading is multifarious which asserts two inconsistent rights of action as two distinct and inconsistent rights to a preferential lien set up. State Trust Co. v. Kan. City, P. & G. R. Co., 128 Fed. 129. Where a bill is multifarious, the court requires the complainant to elect between the two claims, and dismiss the bill as to the other. State Trust Co. v. Kan. City, P. & G. R. Co., 128 Fed. 129.

15. A cause of action for ejectment and damages for withholding possession cannot be jointly stated in a complaint with one for damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment and eviction, it being necessary to state and number them separately [Code Civ. Proc. § 483]. Rockey v. Haslett, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 181. Two causes of action should not be joined in a single count. Murphy v. St. Louis Transit Co., 96 Mo. App. 272, 70 S. W. 159. Declaration in action for wrongful death as misjoining causes of action. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 207 Ill. 478, 69 N. E. 882. Substantial compliance with the rule that the petition should "set forth the cause of action in orderly and distinct paragraphs numbered consecutively" will prevent a dismissal of the petition [Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 4961]. Separate paragraph for each distinct act of negligence suggested. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Smith [Ga.] 46 S. E. 853.

16. Bruce v. Murray [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 366.

17. Harrod v. Farrar [Kan.] 74 Pac. 624. Where the allegations of a complaint joining several causes of action show relief as to only one plaintiff in one cause of action, demurrer will lie [Code, § 83]. New v. Smith [Kan.] 74 Pac. 610.

18. Harrod v. Farrar [Kan.] 74 Pac. 624. Misjoinder of causes of action in complaint against three defendants. Racine Wagon & Carriage Co. v. Legeois [Wis.] 98 N. W. 218. A cause of action against an association which does not affect any of its officers cannot be joined with a cause against one of its directors, which does not affect the association or any other of its officers. Case v. N. Y. Mut. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 538. A cause of action against directors of a corporation, for deceit, cannot be joined with a cause against other directors, who were not such when the acts alleged to constitute the deceit were done and were not connected therewith [Code Civ. Proc. § 484]. Warner v. James, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 567. A complaint in an action to quiet title and to cancel instruments affecting title is bad for misjoinder of causes when the first cause stated shows no interest in one joint plaintiff, and the second shows interest in both plaintiffs, and it cannot be made good by considering the allegations of the latter cause to show interest of both in the first cause [Code Civ. Proc. § 144]. First Nat. Bank v. Johnson Land Mortg. Co. [S. D.] 97 N. W. 748.

19. A count against two defendants cannot be joined with counts against each of them separately. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 198 Ill. 462, 64 N. E. 1011.

20. Reed v. Reed [Neb.] 98 N. W. 73; Id., 76.

for any one of which an action lies,[21] but an action for a penalty may cover a sale of several objects jointly.[22] An action for three several penalties incurred by defendant to owners of three several lots of goods cannot be consolidated, though plaintiff is the authorized agent of the several owners.[23] Where individual and partnership causes of action are joined in the complaint, after demurrer sustained to the latter, the complaint is good as to the other.[24] Particular cases as to misjoinder are assembled in the note.[25]

A single and entire cause of action cannot be divided and pleaded in separate actions.[26] Where plaintiff sued on two causes of action, and defendant denied the first while admitting the second, and plaintiff accepted an offer of judgment generally in the amount of the second claim with costs, he thereby settled the action and could not have a severance.[27]

Election.—Plaintiff may be required to elect as between inconsistent theories of action;[28] hence he need not where a single cause is split into two counts,[29] nor where each states the same cause.[30]

21. People v. Sheriff, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 46.

22. Sale of several cans of impure milk at one time and place should be alleged as one cause of action in a complaint to recover a penalty [Agricultural Law, §§ 22, 23]. People v. Buell, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 141.

23. Bell v. Keppler [N. J. Law] 57 Atl. 257.

24. Hatzel v. Moore, 120 Fed. 1015.

25. Causes not misjoined: A complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien alleging that plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy, had filed a lien for materials furnished by the bankrupts, and that the latter had filed a lien which they had assigned to plaintiff, shows but one cause of action. Davis v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 518. A complaint on an attachment bond does not improperly join actions ex contractu and ex delicto by asking damages for goods not returned, together with expenses in dissolving the attachment, loss of time, and attorney's fees in the action on the bond. Voss v. Bender, 32 Wash. 566, 73 Pac. 697. Petition for malicious use of bail process in trover as not setting forth distinct causes of action. Woodley v. Coker [Ga.] 46 S. E. 89. In an action by a servant because of sickness caused by negligence of her employer to repair the house, an allegation to excuse her failure to leave the employment is not a second cause of action in the count. Collins v. Harrison [R. I.] 56 Atl. 678. Petition on bond given by gas company to city as containing a single cause of action. Omaha Gas Co. v. Omaha [Neb.] 98 N. W. 437. An equitable action to prevent payment of fraudulent county orders by the treasurer, joining the county board, the holders of the orders, and a former county treasurer, is not misjoinder [Rev. St. 1898, § 2647]. Carpenter v. Christianson [Wis.] 98 N. W. 517.

Misjoinder: Misjoinder of causes of action in complaint for allowance of illegal claims by county officers. Wallace v. Jones, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 152. A joint tenant or tenant in common out of possession cannot sue for partition against his co-tenants holding adversely, without joining a cause of action for possession. Moorehead v. Robinson [Kan.] 75 Pac. 503.

26. Tootle v. Kent [Okl.] 73 Pac. 310. A wrongful levy of execution on several chattels constitutes one cause of action only and cannot be split so as to bring the value of the property within jurisdiction of an inferior court. Hesser v. Johnson [Okl.] 74 Pac. 320. Separate suits cannot be maintained by filing a mechanic's lien for the contract price only, and then suing for extras furnished at request of the owner, the contract for building being indivisible. Mallory v. Dawson Cotton Oil Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 953.

27. Code Civ. Proc. § 511. Walsh v. Empire Brick & Supply Co., 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 498.

28. In a suit for sale of goods and on notes given therefor, plaintiff cannot be required to elect whether he will sue on the contract or the notes. Strickland v. Parlin, 118 Ga. 213. Allegations of a willful holding over under a lease and of repudiation by accepting a lease from another are not so inconsistent in a complaint as to require election in unlawful detainer. Gossett v. Devorss, 98 Mo. App. 641, 73 S. W. 731. Election cannot be required between counts for malicious prosecution in securing issuance of an attachment and another for damages sustained from its wrongful suing out. Mills' Ann. Code, § 49. Rucker v. Omaha & G. Smelting & Refining Co. [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 682. A count alleging only partial account by defendant on the contract and false statements by defendant and asking an accounting is not inconsistent with one alleging misrepresentation by defendant as to his ability to fill the contract and failure to account and asking cancellation, so as to require election by plaintiff. Gowans v. Jobbins, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 429.

29. Where a complaint is defective in separating into two causes what under the statute is one cause of action, plaintiff cannot be required to elect on pain of dismissal where as a whole the pleading is sufficient under the statute [2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 5500, 5508]. Brown v. Calloway [Wash.] 75 Pac. 630.

30. He is not required to elect between two counts of a petition stating the same cause of action; counts in action for injury while trying to board street car as stating same cause of action. Maguire v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 838.

§ 3. The plea or answer. General principles.—It is immaterial whether the answer is good or bad where the complaint is bad or plaintiff fails to make out a case.[31] Omission to make defenses at the proper time will waive them.[32] A plea which neither traverses, nor confesses and avoids the declaration, but seeks by indirection and inference to avoid the cause of action is demurrable.[33] Where one defendant refuses to plead further after a demurrer to his plea in abatement is sustained, an offer of the other defendants to file a general denial to an amended complaint on his behalf is properly refused.[34] A party cannot claim that an answer was filed without his knowledge or consent as ground for repudiating it after several hearings where no affidavit or evidence was offered in support of his claim.[35] On transfer of foreclosure proceedings in Connecticut to the superior court by appeal of part of defendants, a defense pleaded by only a part of defendants and substantially admitted by the answer inured for benefit of all.[36] Where a stranger to an action, cited at instance of defendant, entered a plea of personal privilege and, further in reply to defendant's answer, denied under oath her submission to the jurisdiction, the reply supplied any defect in the plea in not making such denial.[37] If any material facts of a petition are not admitted but denied either directly or argumentatively, plaintiff has the right to open and close; a denial in affirmative form will not give it to defendant.[38]

Cases determining sufficiency of particular pleas, answers, or pleadings of defense, are assembled in the notes.[39]

Formal parts and frame work of plea or answer.—A demurrer to the petition 31. Alexander v. Spaulding, 160 Ind. 176, 66 N. E. 694.

32. If defendant sued on a contract purposely omits to make the defense of fraud, he cannot raise it in an action to set aside the judgment against him. Cannon v. Castleman [Ind.] 69 N. E. 455. Filing a plea in abatement attacking the jurisdiction is an abandonment of any defense of the merits in the discretion of the court; and where interposed after the same question had been determined on motion to quash service, for delay only, the court will not relieve defendant. Audenried v. East Coast Mill. Co., 124 Fed. 697.

33. Engelke & Feiner Mill. Co. v. Grunthal [Fla.] 35 So. 17.

34. Diamond Flint Glass Co. v. Boyd, 30 Ind. App. 485, 66 N. E. 479.

38. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 94 N. W. 540.

39. A plea to the jurisdiction of the court need not designate another court which would have jurisdiction. Hill v. Nelson [N. J. Law] 57 Atl. 411. Answer as against demurrer. Omaha Sav. Bank v. Rosewater [Neb.] 96 N. W. 68. Answer in action on accident policy. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Brown [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 915. Answer in action to quiet title. Butterfield v. Graves, 138 Cal. 155, 71 Pac. 510. Answer in action on note. Berry v. Barton [Okl.] 71 Pac. 1074; Harnett v. Holdrege [Neb.] 97 N. W. 443. Affidavit of defense in suit on note. Brown v. Ohio Nat. Bank, 18 App. D. C. 598. Affidavit of defense by a corporation in an action on a note. Andrews v. Blue Ridge Packing Co., 206 Pa. 370. Answer pleading commencement and dismissal of foreclosure suit as defense by indorser on a note secured by the mortgage. Pekin Plow Co. v. Wilson [Neb.] 92 N. W. 176. Plea of res judicata. Fenn v. Roach [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 361. Answer in action against sureties on a constable's bond. Moore v. Rooks [Ark.] 76 S. W. 548. Answer in action to recover street assessment as alleging fraud in acceptance of the work by the council; allegations therein as constituting a collateral attack on proceedings of the council instead of a defense; sufficiency of allegations in general, admissions, and liability to demurrer. Lux & T. Stone Co. v. Donaldson [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1014. Answer under oath in scire facias on bail bond, as against demurrer, under various statutes applying to Indian Territory. Simon v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 280. Plea of limitations in action for services. Bacon v. Chapman, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 309. Answer in suit to set aside conveyances as fraudulent as sufficient in absence of demurrer. Walker v. Harold [Or.] 74 Pac. 705. Allegations in separate paragraph of answer alleging new matter in an action for balance due on contract. Eells v. Dumary, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 105. Answer stating defense of breach of warranty to authorize introduction of evidence. Maugh v. Hornbeck, 98 Mo. App. 389, 72 S. W. 153. An answer containing a separate defense and a counterclaim is insufficient where both begin with a reiteration of previous admissions and denials in the answer since such reiterated denials are irrelevant and redundant. Blaut v. Blaut, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 572. Where matter alleged by defendant in his answer both as a defense and a counterclaim was neither, judgment for plaintiff is properly rendered on the pleadings. Rensberger v. Britton [Colo.] 71 Pac. 379.

is not a proper part of the answer, in Nebraska.[40] A paragraph of an answer may be stricken out where the remaining paragraphs fully cover the same defense.[41] A defense which does not contain new matter is insufficient in law on its face.[42] A denial must not be mingled with a defense,[43] but must be stated before and separate from affirmative allegations of the answer.[44] Separate and distinct defenses should be separately stated.[45] Allegations of a defense in an answer cannot be treated as a denial, however inconsistent they may be with those of the complaint.[46] That certain allegations in his second defense to the first cause of action were stricken out on motion as irrelevant and immaterial will not prevent defendant from inserting, in the other defenses mentioned, the allegations thus stricken out.[47] Matters of defense and counterclaim cannot be combined.[48] More than one defense may be made by the answer but generally joint defenses must be consistent;[49] in Montana, however, defendant may plead and rely upon as many defenses by answer as he may wish though inconsistent with each other.[50] Facts supporting objections to sufficiency of an amended complaint and the grounds of each must be specified.[51] An affidavit stating that every plea is true, and all of plaintiff's claim is disputed, is sufficient though it does not state the amount due or that plaintiff can give evidence as to the part disputed.[52] Plaintiff cannot have the answer stricken at the trial term for failure to answer each paragraph of each count of the petition where it follows the petition and adopts its numbering.[53] Where a joint plea is filed in an action on an unconditional contract in writing, but is verified by one defendant only and no effort is made by the other to amend, judgment must be given against him though plaintiff did not object to the plea at the return term.[54]

47. Edison v. Press Pub. Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 376.

48. Gen. St. § 612. New Idea Pattern Co. v. Whelan, 75 Conn. 455. Allegations of a paragraph in an answer, constituting merely evidence of other facts alleged, or which, if intended as a counterclaim, do not state facts for its allowance to defendant, will be stricken out, it being improper to plead a counterclaim in the same paragraph with the defense. Bennett v. Lutz, 119 Iowa, 215, 93 N. W. 288.

49. General denial and plea of contributory negligence are not inconsistent. Leavenworth Light & Heating Co. v. Waller, 65 Kan. 514, 70 Pac. 365. Pleas of general denial and release in bankruptcy are not inconsistent. Ruff v. Milner, 92 Mo. App. 620. Defenses in an action on a note that the signatures were not genuine and that, if they were, they were procured by fraud, are not inconsistent. Bank of Glencoe v. Cain [Minn.] 95 N. W. 308. An answer denying execution of a note and pleading payment does not state inconsistent pleas. Bay v. Trusdell, 92 Mo. App. 377. Defendant in an action on a note cannot be required to elect whether he will rely on failure of consideration or breach of warranty. Mallory Commission Co. v. Elwood, 120 Iowa, 632, 95 N. W. 176. Defenses that land was acquired by accession or as relicted land and that it was acquired as dry land within boundaries of an original purchase are conflicting and cannot be made together. Hall v. Bossier Levee Dist. Com'rs [La.] 35 So. 976. In an action for the price of goods sold, defendant may plead that he did not buy and rescission of the contract [Code, § 3620]. Cole v. Laird [Iowa] 96 N. W. 744. In an action against a trustee for a balance remaining after execution of a trust to sell realty and pay debts, a plea that plaintiff had notice of defendant's sales to others for a period longer than that of the limitations is not defective as inconsistent with a denial of the trust and a claim of absolute ownership as plaintiff's vendee. Irwin v. Holbrook, 32 Wash. 349, 73 Pac. 360. A general denial is not in conflict with the special defense that the contract sued on was ultra vires and against public policy. Morgan City v. Dalton [La.] 36 So. 208.

53. Green v. Hambrick, 118 Ga. 569.

54. Riley v. Southern Female College, 118 Ga. 849.

Bill of particulars.—Where defendant sets up an affirmative defense or a counterclaim he may be required to furnish a bill of particulars.[55] An affidavit by plaintiff's attorney in support of a motion for a bill of particulars, on information and belief, and failing to show that he had any personal knowledge of the facts alleged therein is insufficient.[56]

Denials and traverses.—A plea purporting to answer three assignments of breach of contract in a count of a declaration but failing to answer one is liable to demurrer.[57] A plea of non est factum is proper to deny execution of an instrument under seal, and a plea that defendant did not covenant as alleged is inapplicable and may be stricken on motion.[58] The answer of one defendant to a bill charging a new promise by such defendant made for himself and the other defendants as agent operates as a denial by the other defendants without their appearance.[59] An answer in the New York municipal court that defendant has no knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to any of the allegations in the complaint is a denial.[60] An affidavit of defense in assumpsit must state the facts on which the denial of debt is based.[61] Denials as specific as the allegations they are intended to meet, or which oppose the spirit and substance of the complaint, or literally deny parts of it, suffice to raise issues.[62] The sufficiency of particular denials in particular actions are treated in the note.[63]

55. Requiring defendant in action to set aside transfer of an interest in an estate to furnish bill of particulars. Toomey v. Whitney, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 441. Answer in action for breach of a contract of employment rendering unnecessary a bill of particulars. Spitz v. Heinze, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 317. Where defendant in an action for damages for discharge of a bookkeeper alleged failure to account, errors, omissions, erasures, and falsifications in defendant's books, plaintiff was entitled to a bill of particulars of the various items thus changed, and an alternative order directing the bill, or the placing of the books at plaintiff's inspection was insufficient. Clemons v. Wortman, 85 N. Y. Supp. 444. Where defendant alleges a counterclaim for breach of a contract, setting up the payment for services and materials, plaintiff is entitled to a bill of particulars. Engineer Co. v. Senn, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1115. The court may require a set-off to be accompanied by a bill of particulars. Knight v. Dunn [Fla.] 36 So. 62.

63. Sufficiency of particular denials: Denials in answer in an action to foreclose a tax lien. Leavitt v. Bartholomew [Neb.] 93 N. W. 856. Mere denial that plaintiffs, or either of them, can sue raises no issue of fact. Chamberlain Banking House v. Noyes [Neb.] 92 N. W. 175. An answer is insufficient which merely groups the allegations of the petition and denies them as a whole. Stephens v. Wilson, 24 Ky. L. R. 1832, 72 S. W. 336. A sufficient denial of an allegation of the complaint is not objectionable because it ends with the words "other than as hereinafter set forth" and the pleader does not afterward refer to it. Anderson v. War Eagle Consol. Min. Co. [Idaho.] 72 Pac. 671. An answer merely stating that defendant was informed and believed that the allegations of the complaint were not true and denying them will not raise an issue, a direct denial being necessary. Code § 243 (1). Avery v. Stewart [N. C.] 46 S. E. 519. An answer denying "each and every other allegation in said petition not specifically admitted" is neither a general nor special denial and is of no value. Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 176 Mo. 253, 75 S. W. 1102. An answer that defendant "states and alleges that he denies each and every allegation" of the petition is a good general denial though in bad form. Reiss v. Agrubright [Neb.] 92 N. W. 988. An allegation in an answer that defendant has no knowledge or information of the matter in the petition is not a denial under the Nebraska Code. Wilson v. Neu [Neb.] 95 N. W. 502. An answer denying knowledge and information sufficient to form a belief as to allegations in specified paragraphs of the complaint which are all the essential paragraphs is sufficient as a denial [Code Civ. Proc. § 500.] Hidden v. Godfrey, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 496. An answer setting up several affirmative defenses and concluding with the statement that, "further answering, defendant denies each and every allegation, matter, fact, and thing in the petition alleged not herein expressly admitted," is indefinite and uncertain and motion will lie on that ground [Rev. St. 1899, § 604]. Ritchey v. Home Ins. Co., 98 Mo. App. 115, 72 S. W. 44. A denial in an answer that defendant is a nonresident on whom substituted service may be made is immaterial since answering waives insufficiency of service. Guenther v. American Steel Hoop Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 795, 76 S. W. 419. A general denial of each charge and allegation in the complaint except as afterward specifically admitted, explained or qualified, was not a

Admissions by answer.—Allegations of the complaint, petition, or declaration not denied by the answer, are admitted.[64] The plea of the general issue admits the capacity in which defendant is sued.[65] The character of answers in particular actions as admitting allegations by plaintiff and the extent of such admissions are treated in the note.[66] Where admissions by answer are qualified by further statedenial of an allegation in a complaint by an heir to recover lands as to the death of the person under whom she claimed [Mansf. Dig. § 5033; Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 3238]. Ricknor v. Clabber [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 271. In an action of unlawful detainer and restitution an oral plea of not guilty is sufficient to prevent the case from being tried as on default [Gen. St. 1894, c. 84]. Berryhill v. Healey, 89 Minn. 444, 95 N. W. 314. A general denial of a paragraph in a complaint by an assignee averring ownership by bona fide assignment, while it admitted execution and delivery of the assignment, puts in issue plaintiff's right to sue. Uncas Paper Co. v. Corbin, 75 Conn. 675, 55 Atl. 165. Where a complaint alleges that defendants were and still are doing business under a certain name, an answer three weeks later denying the allegation is bad. Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 71 Pac. 440. Denials by answer of material allegations of the complaint under words, "For a second, (or third or fourth) further, separate and distinct defense," are sufficient so long as not misleading. Hopkins v. Meyer, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 365. Where the opening paragraph of an answer states it to be an answer to the petition, a subsequent paragraph denying "each allegation not herein admitted" refers sufficiently to the petition. Warren v. Wales [Neb.] 95 N. W. 610. Denial in action for ejection from train. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Lynch [Tex.] 75 S. W. 486. An answer alleging that injuries causing death arose from carelessness, negligence and fault of the deceased may be required to be made more definite. McInerney v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 118 Fed. 653. A plea of non est factum failing to deny execution of notes sued on, but averring that the amount shown by the notes was placed there by mistake without consideration is inconsistent as to the issue of execution. Bitzer v. Utica Lime Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 479, 76 S. W. 20. A denial by answers of "the third allegation of the complaint" on a bond, that the condition of the bond has not been complied with, and that the amount alleged is due plaintiffs from defendants, is sufficient to prevent judgment on the pleadings. Rosenberg v. Hyman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 171. A denial on information and belief that defendant purchased goods of plaintiff is insufficient. Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden, 139 Cal. 488, 73 Pac. 238. Denial of signature to a note in an affidavit to a plea, in an action thereon under the Baltimore charter, suffices to require proof of execution though no denial appears in the plea. Horner v. Plumley, 97 Md. 271. A denial in an action for goods sold that defendant agreed or promised to pay therefor is no defense where allegations of delivery at defendant's request set out in the petition are not denied. Guenther v. American Steel Hoop Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 795, 76 S. W. 419. Denials of answer and amended answer in action on insurance policy as waiver of proofs of loss. Pa. Fire Ins. Co. v. Young, 25 Ky. Costigan, 138 Cal. 564, 72 Pac. 178; Young v. Beckham, 24 Ky. L. R. 2135, 72 S. W. 1092; Triska v. Miller [Neb.] 91 N. W. 870. An answer not denying existence of a contract pleaded by the petition but averring that defendant has no knowledge thereof admits the contract. Howard v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1051, 70 S. W. 631. Allegation in complaint as to delivery of goods in an action for the contract price is admitted where not controverted by defendant [Mills' Ann. Code, § 71]. Oil Creek Gold Min. Co. v. Fairbanks [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 543. Where a petition is founded on a writing charged to have been executed by the other party, failure to file a plea of non est factum confesses execution so that proof thereof is unnecessary. Love v. Central Life Ins. Co., 92 Mo. App. 192. A defective allegation of partnership in the complaint is cured by an answer admitting the relation though denying all other allegations. Hefferlin v. Karlman [Mont.] 74 Pac. 201.

65. Stewart v. Smith, 98 Me. 104. Where an insurance company changed its name after issuance of the policy sued on, a plea of general issue admitted the capacity in which defendant was sued, together with the change of name and assumption of liability alleged in the declaration. Ill. Life Ass'n v. Wells, 200 Ill. 445, 65 N. E. 1072.

66. Admissions by answer of bankrupt alleging new matter. Brinkley v. Smithwick, 126 Fed. 686. Admissions by answer as to tools used in action by servant for negligent injuries of master. Hackett v. Masterson, 84 N. Y. Supp. 751. Answer in action on note against a corporation as pregnant with an admission that defendant used the money. Agle v. Standard Drug Co. [Mont.] 74 Pac. 135. An admission of partial liability by answer and evidence will not support a verdict for plaintiff generally. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 65 S. C. 197. Answer in action to recover money in possession of defendant as admitting possession alleged in the complaint. Yank v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 74 Pac. 77. Failure to deny under oath an allegation that a certain act was done by agent is not an admission that it was done by the principal. Leavenworth Light & Heating Co. v. Waller, 65 Kan. 514, 70 Pac. 365. Answer by plaintiff to defendant's motion to set aside an execution, admitting issuance and levy of the execution relieving defendant from proof thereof. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Bybee [Mo.] 78 S. W. 579. An answer alleging that a paragraph of the complaint was so uncertain and confused as to false and true statements that they could not be distinguished and denying all allegations not admitted does not admit any facts in the paragraph ments, plaintiff cannot take advantage of them by separating them from the accompanying qualifying statements, especially where they are detrimental to plaintiff's claim.[67] An admission by answer becomes an admitted fact in evidence and can be given to the jury by reading the pleadings or in argument.[68]

Defenses in general.[69]—Affidavits of defense need only allege facts indicating, with reasonable distinctness and precision, a substantial legal defense, and show defendant's good faith.[70] Facts pleaded in the answer, tending to negative falsity of so characterized. Turner v. Turner [Wash.] 74 Pac. 55. Admission by answer as preventing defendant from proving that the amount of goods furnished was less than the amount charged in the complaint. Epstein v. Hankinson, 84 N. Y. Supp. 583. Where, after insured had attempted to change the beneficiary in a life policy, the company interpleaded the beneficiary and paid the amount of the policy into court, it thereby admitted the validity of the policy and that the person interpleaded was the proper beneficiary. Sanguinitto v. Goldey, 84 N. Y. Supp. 989. An answer reciting that defendant admitted the contract set forth in the complaint to have been the one made between the parties does not admit anything beyond the written contract, where an additional verbal modification was alleged in the complaint. American C., B. & I. Works v. Galland-Burke Brew. & Malt. Co., 30 Wash. 178, 70 Pac. 236. An answer alleging that a claim sued on grew out of membership in a certain benevolent association and not otherwise admitting the claimant's allegation that he was a creditor of the association. Lackmann v. Supreme Council [Cal.] 75 Pac. 583. Admission by answer merely that a contract was "executed" includes acknowledgment where necessary to a valid contract, though it is otherwise if the term is limited by the contest. Solt v. Anderson [Neb.] 93 N. W. 205. Where an answer to an action for damages to goods shipped pleaded the contract of carriage and there was no reply, the execution of the contract was admitted but not the legal effect claimed by defendant. Bowring v. Wabash R. Co., 90 Mo. App. 324. Where a complaint alleged assault on plaintiff by defendant's conductor, and the answer denied generally, and defendant pleaded specially that plaintiff refused to pay his fare and the conductor removed him gently from the car, there was no admission in the answer which plaintiff could urge as showing assault where he failed to prove the assault. De Waltoff v. Third Ave. R. Co., 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351. An answer in an action for death of a pedestrian killed by a train denying that the engineer by exercise of care could have seen decedent's perilous position and avoided killing him does not admit that decedent could not see the train or was unaware of its approach. Pharr v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 1021. Where defendants are fully advised of the exact nature of a claim by plaintiff's bill of particulars and admit the receipt of the money sought to be recovered in their answer, but allege that it was properly paid out, that the money was not recoverable by plaintiff as alleged will not prevent recovery the defense of payment not being sustained. U. S. v. Fidelity Trust Co., 121 Fed. 766. A general denial in an answer in criminal conversation followed by an allegation of knowledge and consent of plaintiff concerning whatever relations were had with plaintiff's wife is not an admission of fact for the trial, but only for purpose of pleading. Rudd v. Dewey [Iowa] 96 N. W. 973. An answer admitting defendant to be the owner of certain premises and then, on information and belief denying "each, all and every the other allegations in said complaint contained," held to admit ownership at time alleged in complaint. Keating v. Mott, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1041.

W. 629. Allegations of defense in action for services. Kraus v. Agnew, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 1. Action for personal injuries. Uggla v. Brokaw, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 310. Allegations of defense in action to recover damages for false representations in sale of mining property. Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 126 Fed. 968. Sufficiency of answer as setting up defense in action on note. Farkas v. Monk [Ga.] 46 S. E. 670. Pleading defense of debts or other obstacles to administration, in action against administrator. Scott v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 118 S. C. 463. A plea against a holder of a negotiable note, alleging fraud in procuring the signature, must allege notice to the holder before he acquired the note. Tower v. Whip, 53 W. Va. 158. A demurrer to pleas alleging alteration of a contract after execution, without knowledge of sureties, may be sustained where that issue is made on other pleadings, so that the surety is entitled to all evidence he could present under the former pleas. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Dampskibsaktieselskabet Habil [Ala.] 35 So. 344. An answer pleading discharge in bankruptcy as a defense to an action on contract must show in what federal court the petition was filed, and allege facts showing jurisdiction of such court, in order to admit proof of the discharge. Bailey v. Kraus, 81 N. Y. Supp. 492. Sufficiency of answer pleading limitations jointly and severally for each of defendants, so as to allow them to prove limitations separately as to the particular portions of the entire tract sued for in trespass to try title. Henning v. Wren [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 905.

70. Rule 73 of the lower court. Brown v. Ohio Nat. Bank, 18 App. D. C. 598.

representations as charged in the complaint, are proper matters of defense.[71] That a paragraph of the answer purports to be only a partial answer does not make it insufficient as to such part, if sufficient facts are alleged to constitute a defense.[72] A demurrer must be sustained to a defense, in an answer containing a general denial and matter pleaded as a defense, where the only issue raised is that made by the denial.[73] A state court must take notice of a discharge in bankruptcy where properly pleaded as a defense.[74] An order will not lie making absolute a rule for judgment for want of sufficient affidavit of defense, where defendant sets up fraud, and want of consideration and general denial, though the affidavit is wanting in definiteness.[75] Where plaintiff sought damages for transfer to him of a spurious note and mortgage, defendants could allege facts, occurring after commencement of the action, tending to validate the instruments, as a partial defense in reduction of damages.[76] An administrator's answer pleading limitations to a demand against the estate goes to the defense of both real and personal assets.[77] A plea, puis darrein continuance, setting up a release of the interest of one of several for whose benefit a suit in debt was brought is a substantial defense as to his interest.[78] In an action for knowingly keeping a vicious dog which bit plaintiff, allegation by answer that plaintiff was trespassing on defendant's premises when bitten is not an affirmative defense.[79] A defense in an action for use of a horse, that defendant was to keep it for its use, whether made by general denial, or specially, in confession and avoidance, is the affirmation of a new fact.[80] In an action by the assignee of a chose in action, defendant can only make such defenses as existed against the assignor before notice of the assignment.[81] Where one count in a complaint for injuries was in case, for negligence, and the others in trespass, for wantonness, a demurrer will lie to pleas of contributory negligence directed to the whole complaint, they being bad as to the latter counts.[82] Defenses to a petition for distribution under a will, alleging that cross petitioner was omitted from the will by mistake, and that provision is made for her in the third clause, are inconsistent, and the county court may require an election.[83]

Matter of abatement.[84]—A law authorizing brief statement of special matter in defense does not supersede pleas in abatement for setting up dilatory defenses.[85] Every plea in bar to the whole action must be sufficient in averments, if true, to defeat the whole action.[86] One pleading in abatement must usually stand on the judgment and cannot plead to the merits without waiving objections to the jurisdiction.[87] A plea of res judicata in bar must set up enough of the pleadings or proceedings in the former suit to show that the same point was in issue,[88] but is not required to set forth the pleadings and judgment in the other case, and where the action is on contract, it need not plead that the contract is indivisible,[89] and need not show affirmatively that no appeal was taken from the judgment.[90] A defense, in assumpsit, that defendant is not executor, the capacity in which he is sued, is waived, unless pleaded in abatement.[91] A promise set up in a plea in bar in an action of contract must be averred to be in writing, if a writing is required.[92] A highly penal statute set up as a bar to an action on contract must be applied by precise averment of facts to bring the case within it.[93] A plea of personal privilege, alleging residence in a different county, need not state affirmatively that the pleader has not submitted to the jurisdiction.[94] An averment that the cause of action arose in another county, where plaintiff could have sued, complied with the rule requiring a plea in abatement to give plaintiff a better writ.[95] Where a stranger asked leave to intervene and afterward withdrew her motion, on leave, without filing a plea of intervention, and defendant filed no plea against her until after the term, her right to plead personal privilege on ground of residence in another county remained on her citation into court at instance of defendant.[96] In an action for goods sold and retained, defendant cannot plead in bar the contract and its breach.[97] An averment by answer that "more than three years have elapsed since the date of the alleged promise before this action was brought" sufficiently pleads the bar of limitations.[98] An exception, pleading limitations, is sufficient for dismissal of a petition, where the amount of the claim not barred is insufficient to give jurisdiction.[99] Where defendant answered in abatement for misnomer alleging its true name, judgment cannot be entered on the merits against defendant, but plaintiff should amend or the action should be abated.[1] A plea in abatement for failure of service on a corporation, because the process was served on one who could not receive it, must allege that he was not a proper person at time of service instead of at the time of filing.[2] An answer seeking to set up another pending action as a bar is liable to demurrer, where it does not plead that the other action was brought without leave of court.[3]

Matters which must be specially pleaded.—Special pleas of matter provable under the general issue are properly stricken out,[4] or demurrer sustained to the

pleas.[5] Sustaining a demurrer to answer alleging matter constituting a defense, but which might have been proved under a general denial is not prejudicial,[6] though such special defense is allowable in Colorado.[7] Exclusion of pleas averring facts as to which issue is raised by other pleas is proper.[8] Illegality of a contract,[9] where it does not appear on the face of the instrument pleaded,[10] invalidity of an ordinance,[11] payment,[12] accord and satisfaction,[13] estoppel,[14] the statute of frauds,[15] except in an action before a justice in Missouri,[16] or in Iowa, where demurrer will lie,[17] the bar of limitations,[18] discharge in bankruptcy,[19] the ultra vires character of acts of associations,[20] and contributory negligence,[21] as defenses, must be specially pleaded. New matter in avoidance of terms of a contract, execution of which is admitted by defendant, and happening after execution, must be specially pleaded by answer.[22] If plaintiff pleads part payment to avoid limitations, defendant need not specially plead the statute, but a general denial puts the burden on plaintiff.[23] Where defendant intends to rely on a fact not included in the allegations necessary to the declaration, he must allege it precisely in the answer.[24] A plea alleging failure of consideration must allege the facts showing failure.[25] An answer pleading a former judgment in bar must allege that it is in full force and effect.[26] A plea of fraud in representations must show that they were false.[27] A plea of rescission of contract in a suit thereon must allege facts constituting a rescission good at law.[28] A plea averring that a contractor employed to do work in a certain time was delayed by acts of the employer, must state the extent of the delay, or that it equalled the delay in completing the work after the period.[29]

nothing and making only hypothetical admissions is insufficient.[31] Failure to aver, in a plea of payment to another than plaintiff, that proofs of loss had been filed with an insurance company, as required in a policy, is immaterial since the company could waive the conditions.[32] Where after a denial an answer confesses and avoids, the latter plea will be taken as true, and plaintiff will be entitled to judgment for the amount determined by the pleading.[33] An answer to a petition declaring on a judgment, which admits the jurisdiction of the court that rendered the judgment, and its rendition, and pleads limitations, stating that the judgment accrued more than 10 years before the action was commenced, confesses the judgment as pleaded.[34]

§ 4. Replication or reply and subsequent pleadings. Pleadings after plea and occasion for them.—The proper method to object to a plea of set-off as improper, under the statute, is by replication.[35] New matter alleged in the answer must be taken as true in absence of a replication,[36] or reply,[37] unless it states no defense or might have been raised under the general denial.[38] When defendant does not appear and no one appears for him at trial, it cannot proceed with a plea unanswered.[39] One replication only can be filed to a plea.[40] A similiter may be added even after verdict.[41] After general denial by defendant, plaintiff cannot take advantage of an admission in a special plea as if made generally.[42] A general allegation of title by defendant in partition gives him the right to prove any facts showing such title so that plaintiff may assail it on any ground without special plea in avoidance.[43] A denial in a reply, on information and belief, of affirmative matter in the answer suffices to prevent judgment on the pleadings for want of a reply.[44]

Requisites and sufficiency of such pleadings.[45]—A reply cannot be entitled as

37. Matter calling for reply: Answer as stating new matter under Code Civ. Proc. § 516, requiring a reply. Burr v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 545. Where defendant answered a complaint to recover possession of realty, alleging that plaintiff was a minor and that his equity of redemption had been cut off by foreclosure sale at which defendant purchased, plaintiff was required to reply to prevent surprise to defendant. Timble v. Russell, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 577. A claim that defendants are estopped from defending on the ground of fraud or recovering their counterclaim alleged must be pleaded or it is not available. Pratt v. Hawes, 118 Wis. 603, 95 N. W. 965.

Matter not requiring reply: A defense to a complaint in the ordinary form for recovery of possession of realty, that the only title of plaintiffs was from tax sales void because the taxes were invalid, is not new matter requiring a reply. Cuenin v. Halbouer [Colo.] 74 Pac. 885. Where part of an answer is insufficient within itself or by reference to other parts to constitute a separate defense, but is merely a repetition of other parts, no specific denial is needed. Boucher v. Powers [Mont.] 74 Pac. 942. Where defendant in partition alleged title in a certain grantor at a certain time, such allegations were denied though plaintiff did not reply [Rev. 45. Sufficiency of particular pleadings: Replications in action on fire insurance policy. Cassimus v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 135 Ala. 256. Replication in action for breach of contract demurrable as neither denial nor confession and avoidance of the plea. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 135 Ala. 232. A general denial, to an answer pleading res judicata, setting out with particularity the pleadings, issues, and judgment, alleging that parties and issues are not identical, does not put in issue the plea of res judicata as it does not deny all of the allegations set forth in the answers. Small v. Reeves, 25 Ky. L. R. 729, 76 S. W. 395. A replication to defendant's plea alleging a verdict in a prior suit on the claim made by plaintiff, which merely alleged that plaintiff's plea of recoupment in the former suit was directed only to special counts in the complaint which were not submitted to a defense.[46] It should show specifically the allegations of the answer it denies.[47] It must not amount to a departure from the complaint.[48] New matter can be pleaded in reply only when the answer contains new matter.[49] Denials separately paragraphed may be joined in the same reply with matters of avoidance.[50] A reply to a defense in the answer cannot be divided into two separate pleadings and one be denominated a "second defense."[51] Plaintiff replying to a double plea must reply to each distinct material matter.[52] Plaintiff, in one pleading entitled "Reply and demurrer," may raise issues of law as to part of the defense in the answer and issues of fact as to the remainder.[53] A denial in a reply that plaintiff "alleges that he denies, all and singular, the allegations in said answer which set up a counterclaim," is sufficient.[54] A reply denying each and every allegation of the answer inconsistent with statements in the petition is insufficient on motion to make more specific.[55]

All well pleaded facts in a reply are taken as true in absence of a rejoinder, and in absence of evidence all allegations of the answer denied by the reply are the jury and failing to show that the plea was withdrawn or disallowed or deny a finding for plaintiff extinguishing the claim against defendant, was insufficient on demurrer. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Robertson, 136 Ala. 379. Where the complaint alleged an amended application for life insurance and the answer denied this setting up affirmatively the whole transaction and the reply did not put in issue such affirmative matter but alleged an estoppel to plead it, the signing of the amended application was not in issue after demurrer sustained to the reply. Pleadings held departure: Reply in suit for cancellation of bonds as departure from complaint. Union St. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank [Or.] 72 Pac. 586. A reply, in quieting title, alleging that plaintiff joined in a deed from defendant's grantor the premises by express agreement to be held in trust for plaintiff, states a new cause of action where the petition alleges legal title in plaintiff. Elder v. Webber [Neb.] 92 N. W. 126. Reply in action for breach of contract as setting up a different contract from the one alleged in the complaint. McCorkle v. Mallory, 30 Wash. 632, 71 Pac. 186.

Pleadings held not departure: Allegations of replication in action on quantum meruit as merely explaining plaintiff's denial of the answer not as stating a new cause of action entitling defendant to judgment on the pleadings. Cook v. Gallatin R. Co. [Mont.] 73 Pac. 131. A replication alleging a waiver of condition subsequent in an insurance policy or a forfeiture on a breach of the policy is not a departure though the declaration did not plead the condition that being a matter of defense. Tillis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171. Where plaintiff recites that defendant is a fraternal beneficiary association under a name by which it issued a policy, it is nevertheless no departure to deny that it is such an association pleading the statutes of its organization where defendant answers that such is its character. Baltzell v. Modern Woodmen, 98 Mo. App. 153, 71 S. W. 1071. Where a petition alleged that deceased was a member of a beneficial association in good standing at his death, and the answer alleged suspension for nonpayment of dues, allegations in the reply that he was unconscious when the last dues were payable, that the association had written notice of his sickness, and that it was its duty to pay the dues, is not a departure requiring the reply to be stricken out. Smith v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen [Mo.] 77 S. W. 862. Where defendant had pleaded a counterclaim and asked affirmative relief and plaintiff's amended petition was stricken because it changed the cause of action in the original petition, plaintiff, after dismissing the original petition, could file a replication to defendant's answer denying defendant's counterclaim and pleading the cause of action in the amended petition as a counterclaim to defendant's counterclaim; he was not barred from relief under the rule that no recovery can be had on a cause of action first alleged in the reply not within the general scope of the petition [Rev. St. 1899, § 4499]. Morrison Mfg. Co. v. Roach [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 644.

49. Sexten v. Shriver [Neb.] 95 N. W. 594; Snyder v. Johnson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 692. New matter cannot be pleaded in a reply to set out a new cause of action not charged in the petition or to aid its averments. Kliment v. Torpin Grain Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 587. New matter in the reply may be stricken out though it might be a valid counterclaim against the counterclaim in the answer if pleaded as an original cause of action. Snyder v. Johnson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 692. Where an answer is only a traverse a reply should not set out new matter. McKay v. Henderson, 24 Ky. L. R. 1484, 71 S. W. 625.

taken as untrue.[56] Where a general denial and a special answer stating facts barring recovery were filed to a complaint and a reply of confession and avoidance was filed to the answer, judgment was properly given for defendant on the pleadings because plaintiff refused to plead further after a demurrer was sustained to the reply.[57]

§ 5. Demurrers.[58] Nature and kinds and grounds for each.—The causes for demurrer fixed by statute are exclusive.[59] Demurrer will lie only for a defect apparent on the face of a pleading,[60] and cannot be aided by facts appearing in other parts of the record.[61] If any cause of action or defense appears the remedy will not lie,[62] or where the pleading shows sufficiently what the adverse party is required to answer.[63] General demurrer will not reach a defect in form.[64] Ambiguity and argumentativeness are formal defects at common law and ground for special demurrer, but such demurrers are abolished in Florida.[65] Whether the amount given in a complaint as necessary to redemption by a junior incumbrancer includes improper sums cannot be raised by demurrer.[66] A demurrer to a complaint, against a city for services rendered, on the ground that defendant had no authority to employ plaintiff except by resolution or ordinance, will not lie, the defense being presentable on trial.[67]

Demurrer will lie to a declaration containing repugnant allegations in the same count.[68] General demurrer will not lie to a petition, declaration, or com-

Defense of res judicata may be made by demurrer where facts in support appear from the bill of complaint. Keen v. Brown [Fla.] 35 So. 401. An objection to the jurisdiction in an action on contract on the ground that it was to be performed in another county cannot be raised by demurrer where the petition does not disclose that fact. Currie Fertilizer Co. v. Krish, 24 Ky. L. R. 2471, 74 S. W. 268. A demurrer to a petition in divorce on the ground that it shows condonation will not lie unless the statements of the petition plainly show acts amounting to condonation. Diedrich v. Diedrich [Neb.] 94 N. W. 536. Demurrer will lie to a complaint alleging acts which defendant had the right to do and alleging no negligence in the performance. Fisher v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. [Va.] 46 S. E. 381.

61. Brooks v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 168. Demurrer will not lie to a complaint because of matter not appearing therein but in a note to which it refers and which plaintiff offers to produce. Davison v. Gregory, 132 N. C. 389.

If a complaint for wrongful death states a cause of action on any theory, demurrer will not lie. Chicago. I. & L. R. Co. v. Barnes [Ind.] 68 N. E. 166. A demurrer to an answer is sufficient only when the answer in fact contains no defense. The rule applies to pleadings in mandamus. Finley v. Ter. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 273. If a complaint states a cause of action in any amount demurrer will not lie though it does not warrant the full amount claimed. Ingham v. Ryan [Colo.] 71 Pac. 899. If a petition is so defective that recovery cannot be had, an oral motion to dismiss in the nature of a general demurrer will lie at any time. Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872. A complaint to set aside conveyances is not demurrable because it cannot be determined therefrom what ground plaintiff will rely upon. Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820. Where a complaint states a cause of action on a note, it cannot be objected by demurrer that plaintiff is not entitled to recover costs and attorney's fees. Bessemer Sav. Bank v. Rosenbaum Grocery Co., 137 Ala. 530. While an averment in a complaint by a member of a corporation that he was possessed of title in common with other members to its property was a conclusion of law, it will not render the complaint demurrable where it avers sufficient facts to entitle plaintiff to prove his cause. plaint containing one good count or paragraph.[69] Matters of defense cannot be raised by general demurrer.[70] Exceptions to an amended answer in equity, because it does not set up any defense, are in the nature of a special demurrer.[71] Pleading conclusions not facts will be cause for demurrer,[72] but otherwise as to too broad a prayer,[73] or as to too broad allegations of damage where no recovery is sought thereunder.[74] A demurrer may be sustained to certain paragraphs of a pleading where any evidence admissible thereunder is admissible under other issues in the case.[75]

Pleading specially matter provable under the general issue pleaded is ground for demurrer,[76] except in Mississippi.[77] Demurrer will not be sustained to a defective answer where the complaint is insufficient.[78] A complaint stating a cause of action against one of several defendants is good against a joint demurrer.[79] Separate demurrer of one co-defendant challenges the complaint as to him as though he were sole defendant.[80] Demurrer by one of several defendants to a complaint for failure to state a cause of action, and improper joinder of causes of action, cannot be sustained where the complaint is sufficient as to him, however de-

Where a complaint separately states two causes of action, if either statement contains facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the complaint is good as against a general demurrer directed to it as a whole. Hindle v. Holcomb [Wash.] 75 Pac. 873. A demurrer to a complaint setting up two causes of action will be overruled where one cause is sufficient, and the other cause will be stricken. Crosby v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 128 Fed. 193. A demurrer to the whole petition is properly overruled when only one paragraph is defective. Albin Co. v. Kuttner, 25 Ky. L. R. 1100, 77 S. W. 181. A demurrer to the whole complaint will be overruled if one paragraph states a cause of action. Bagley v. Weaver [Ark.] 77 S. W. 903. A demurrer to the second count of a complaint is not improperly overruled where each count embraces the same cause of action and the first one is sufficient. Rawlinson v. Christian Press Ass'n Pub. Co., 139 Cal. 620, 73 Pac. 468. Where one of three counts of a petition is voluntarily stricken by plaintiff, a demurrer to the whole petition will not lie if either remaining count sets up a good cause of action. Hay v. Collins, 118 Ga. 243. Too general averments in one count in a complaint are not reached by demurrer to it and another count sufficiently specific. Southern R. Co. v. Wilson [Ala.] 35 So. 561. Where a petition states a good cause of action for debt and foreclosure of a lien that attorney's fees asked cannot be recovered will not make it so defective that general demurrer to the whole petition will lie. 74. That a count in a declaration sets up elements not entering into the measure of damages is not ground for demurrer where it does not allege a cause of action for damages proper to be recovered thereunder. Cline v. Tampa Waterworks Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 8, 9.

75. Noah v. German-American Bldg. Ass'n, 31 Ind. App. 504, 68 N. E. 615. Demurrer will lie to a paragraph of an answer where the facts pleaded may be shown under another paragraph. Field v. Campbell [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 1040.

76. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Dampskibsaktieselskabet Habil [Ala.] 35 So. 344. Demurrer will lie to a pleaded defense when issue should have been taken by denial. George v. New York, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 270. Demurrers to special answers are properly sustained where the matter pleaded is admissible under the general denial. Maris v. Masters, 31 Ind. App. 235, 67 N. E. 699; Nowlin v. State, 30 Ind. App. 277, 66 N. E. 54; Hedrick v. Robbins, 30 Ind. App. 595, 66 N. E. 704; Goode v. Elwood Lodge No. 166 K. P., 160 Ind. 251, 66 N. E. 742; Payne v. Moore, 31 Ind. App. 360, 66 N. E. 483. A demurrer will lie to a paragraph of an answer in an action for alienation of affections, alleging that separation was due to plaintiff's fault since that can be shown under the general denial if competent. fective as to the other defendants.[81] A demurrer for defect of facts will lie unless the complaint states a cause of action in favor of all plaintiffs.[82] The rule applies to cross complaints.[83] That averments in a petition are in the alternative will not be ground for special demurrer.[84] A counterclaim may be tested by demurrer,[85] but an objection that it is insufficient in law on its face is not ground for demurrer.[86]

Demurrer will not lie to a motion to strike an affidavit for interpleader.[87] Demurrer to a return to an alternative writ of mandamus is treated as a demurrer in other actions at law in Florida.[88]

Misjoinder of parties is not generally ground for demurrer,[89] but nonjoinder of parties is a demurrable "defect" in South Dakota[90] and Colorado.[91] And defect of parties plaintiff, apparent on the face of a petition, may be ground of demurrer.[92] Misjoinder of causes of action in a pleading, count, or paragraph, is ground for demurrer,[93] in which all defendants may join,[94] special demurrer being the remedy in Illinois for joinder of two causes in a single count.[95] Failure of the complaint to show jurisdiction of the parties will not warrant demurrer in New York,[96] except in the municipal court.[97] It will lie to a petition where the only amount recoverable under its allegations is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction.[98] The absence of right to sue a municipality or municipal officers may be raised by demurrer.[99] The defense of usury cannot be raised by demurrer to a bill or complaint to foreclose a mortgage for both principal and interest where it affects only the interest.[1] Departure in pleading is a matter of substance and general demurrer is the remedy,[2] but that a party is surprised or placed at disadvantage by an amendment to a petition is not ground for demurrer in Georgia.[3] Special demurrer will not lie to a petition for failure to exhibit deeds and other papers where the allegations therein referring to them were mere matters of inducement and the cause of action was not based on them nor any relief asked entirely as to them.[4]

2. Tillis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171. That a reply to a traverse sets up new matter is ground for demurrer. McKay v. Henderson, 24 Ky. L. R. 1484, 71

Form, requisites, and sufficiency.[5]—A demurrer on the ground that the petition shows no personal liability of defendants is too general,[6] but one "for the reason that said complaint does not state a cause of action" is sufficient in form.[7] A demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action in the language of the statute is insufficient.[8] Where two replications are filed to a plea, a demurrer failing to state to which replication it is directed is insufficient.[9] The defects in a pleading specially demurred to should be pointed out specifically.[10] Demurrer will lie to a plea of contributory negligence, addressed to a complaint in three counts, two of which were in trespass.[11] General demurrer setting up the plea of limitations goes to the entire petition and will be sustained, if the facts alleged show the bar, though special exceptions to particular allegations are not well taken.[12] A demurrer to four paragraphs of a reply, for failure to state facts sufficient for a defense or reply to the answer, and a demurrer to another paragraph for failure to constitute a reply to the answer, are not in proper statutory form.[13] Where paragraphs of a reply were addressed separately to paragraphs of the answer, a demurrer will not lie, on the ground that neither of the paragraphs sufficed to avoid "both" paragraphs of the answer.[14] An oral motion to be permitted to demur at the trial term without stating grounds of the demurrer is properly overruled.[15] Refusal to permit defendants to demur to a complaint after the jury is sworn is proper, where they state no ground, and offer no written demurrer, and the complaint seems sufficient.[16]

Issues made by demurrer.—A demurrer searches the record,[17] unless excep-

A demurrer to plaintiff's reply is properly carried back

tion is not taken after overruling a demurrer to a complaint, when the court may properly refuse to carry a demurrer to the answer back, and sustain it as a demurrer to the complaint.[18] It admits all material facts well pleaded in the pleading to which it is addressed,[19] but not conclusions of law,[20] nor facts not well pleaded.[21] It admits the truth of allegations attacked only for the purpose of determining their legal effect.[22] Whether a complaint contains irrelevant or redundant matter will not be considered on demurrer for failure to state a cause of action.[23] A demurrer for defect of parties plaintiff raises only the question whether other persons should be brought in as plaintiffs, and does not affect the right of the plaintiff in court.[24] A demurrer for want of legal capacity to sue reaches only personal disability, or want of title to the character in which plaintiff sues, but does deal with sufficiency of the complaint as stating a cause of action.[25] Where an answer consisted of two parts, a general denial, and matter pleaded as a defense, a demurrer "to the defense set up in the answer" is not made to the denial, but to the defense.[26] A demurrer to a complaint on contract, for indefiniteness and uncertainty of the contract, goes to plaintiff's right of action, and the propriety of the specific claim for damages cannot be considered.[27] A demurrer for want of sufficient facts will not reach misjoinder of causes.[28]

Hearing and decision on demurrer.[29]—A demurrer should be disposed of before a decree on the main issues.[30] Refusal to consider a demurrer in effect overrules it.[31] After demurrer sustained there is no cause pending on which a finding to the first paragraph of defendant's answer, and sustained as to it, if insufficient. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Riddle's Adm'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 1687, 72 S. W. 22.

19. Demurrer admits the truth of all facts stated in the complaint. Budd v. Howard Thomas Co., 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 52. On demurrer to the complaint for failure to state a cause of action all facts alleged therein and all to be inferred by reasonable intendment are admitted. Hall v. Gilman, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 458. Defenses set up by answer will be taken as true on demurrer, though they deny insufficiently the allegations of the complaint. Saleeby v. Cent. R. of N. J., 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 269. On demurrer to part of an answer alleging new matter as defense, allegations of the complaint, not denied in such defense, will be treated as admitted. Eells v. Dumary, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 105. A demurrer to a plea alleging an agreement by plaintiff's attorney with defendant's attorney for a settlement admits the authority of the former to make the agreement. Strattner v. Wilmington City Elec. Co., 3 Pen. [Del.] 453. An allegation in a complaint, that defendant railroad company owed a certain duty as to carriage of live stock, is admitted by demurrer. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Beery, 31 Ind. App. 556, 68 N. E. 702. Where a complaint alleged injuries from negligence of another, describing the fire causing the injury, and stating that the person injured tried to put out the fire as was her duty, a demurrer admitted the duty as stated, so that contributory negligence could not be charged. can be made.[32] Overruling a demurrer to the petition will not prevent a finding of no cause of action after the evidence.[33] Dismissal may follow after a demurrer is sustained to the petition, unless plaintiff asks leave to amend.[34] A law allowing pleading over after demurrer overruled, merely allows the attack, in other ways, on the pleading, during trial and not on appeal.[35] After overruling a demurrer to a statement in assumpsit, judgment may be entered against defendant without allowing him to file an affidavit of defense.[36] A general demurrer by defendant, unnecessarily assigning grounds therefor, may be sustained, though for a ground not assigned.[37] If a rejoinder to a replication only raises an issue already made plaintiff is not prejudiced by overruling a demurrer to it.[38] Where pleas of contributory negligence in an action for personal injuries were eliminated on demurrer, no charge on that ground can be given.[39] A case may be decided on the pleadings, after sustaining a demurrer to the answer, without allowing plaintiff to introduce the answer as his own evidence.[40] Parts of an amendment to an answer based on an untenable theory may be stricken on demurrer, though the demurrer did not raise that precise objection.[41] A paragraph of an answer consisting of allegations of new matter must be considered on demurrer apart from preceding admissions and denials.[42] Where a complaint fails to state a cause of action, a demurrer to the answer as pleading a defense, when denial was the way to take issue, will be overruled.[43] Where the contract, in a suit thereon, shows no cause of action, on demurrer to the petition the exhibit will be considered.[44] A complaint demurred to ore tenus at trial cannot be added by the answer, but must be liberally construed.[45] Without specific allegations of damage suffered and no proof of damage taken, judgment cannot be rendered on overruling a demurrer to the complaint, for the full amount of the bond sued on.[46] Where defendant filed a cross complaint, after an order had been entered sustaining a demurrer to the complaint by a co-defendant, but before judgment on the demurrer, and plaintiff answered the cross complaint before entry of judgment on the demurrer, the latter judgment could be entered before disposing of issues on the cross complaint.[47] Overruling a demurrer to a complaint on an indemnity contract, because it alleged expenses paid by plaintiff to the sheriff, in caring for property which should not have been joined, is not prejudicial to defendant, since the claim may be taxed as costs, to be paid by the losing party.[48] Judgment on demurrer unreversed concludes the parties as to all questions necessarily raised by the demurrer,[49] and is conclusive of facts admitted thereby, where defendant elects to abide by the demurrer.[50]

§ 6. Cross complaints and answers.[51]—Defendants cannot recoup damages where they gave no notice of the defense.[52] Allegations purely defensive in character will not sustain a counterclaim.[53] The items of damages claimed by way of recoupment or set-off must be averred.[54] All facts necessary to show the right must be pleaded as in a complaint or petition.[55] A joint cross complaint must state a cause of action in favor of both cross complainants.[56] A judgment cannot be set off under a plea of payment for use and benefit.[57] A set-off cannot be granted where defendant asks no affirmative relief.[58] An answer setting up a counterclaim is substantially a petition and a reply to it is likewise an answer to a petition; both claims being established, judgment must go for the excess shown.[59]

Until plaintiff has served his reply, he cannot require a bill of particulars as to a counterclaim to prepare for trial, it not being needed to prepare the reply;[60] but defendant filing a counterclaim may be required to file a bill of particulars,[61] unless the necessary information is in possession of plaintiff and he refuses to give it.[62] A stock certificate pledged by plaintiffs to defendant for a loan is not the foundation of a cross complaint asking foreclosure of a mortgage for balance due in an action against a building and loan association to compel satisfaction of the mortgage, and need not be made an exhibit.[63]

The particular subjects of cross complaint, counterclaim or set off, are treated in a particular topic,[64] but some of the cases have been collected here as illustrating the character of, and manner of, urging the right.[65] A cross petition may only be

An amendment striking the words "suing for the use" of another from a declaration in tort is properly allowed it being only a matter of form. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 198 Ill. 462, 64 N. E. 1011. A clerical error in the declaration which could not have misled defendant may be amended at the close of plaintiff's case. McTiver v. Grant Tp. [Mich.] 91 N. W. 736. A demurrer to a complaint using the wrong christian name of a testator may be amended as to the name. Blum v. Dabritz, 78 N. Y. Supp. 207. After issues joined in an action for injuries from a defective sidewalk, on objection that the petition did not show where the injury occurred, plaintiff may amend his petition by adding the name of the city and county, where the petition shows the action to be against such city and sufficiently locates the place of accident by streets. Guthrie v. Finch [Okl.] 75 Pac. 288. Where, during trial, plaintiff objects to evidence for defendant for formal defect in the answer, defendant should be allowed to amend as to such defect. Ward v. Davis [Neb.] 97 N. W. 437. Where plaintiff declared on the common counts according to the state practice but failed to allege an assignment to him of the claim sued upon, he may be allowed afterward to file a count alleging assignment [Pub. Acts 1899, p. 1062, c. 139 and Prac. Act, original rule 2, § 1, as changed by Gen. St. 1902, § 639]. Kelsey v. Punderford [Conn.] 56 Atl. 579. Defendant pleading usury alleging the transaction as of a certain date may amend the answer to conform to proof of a different date. Kleimer v. Covington Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 24 Ky. L. R. 735, 70 S. W. 41. A complaint by an administrator for death of justice,[70] should be allowed. In the latter instance, the court may even order an amendment of its own motion.[71] An amendment to a petition embracing only matter set out in another amendment previously allowed should be allowed.[72] A defective plea filed before bar of a claim by limitation will prevent the bar since the plea may be amended.[73]

The federal courts are not governed by state laws or practice in allowing amendments to pleadings.[74]

Great liberality will be allowed in amendments.[75] Good faith must appear in presenting the cause in the first instance,[76] and the amendment must not be asked for purpose of delay.[77] An amendment to a pleading is properly refused when it is not presented and there is no means of determining its propriety.[78] Notice of an application to amend the summons and complaint to remedy misnomer is to be construed as notice of intention to apply for such amendment wherever the misnomer appears in the pleadings.[79] An order directing a supplemental complaint to allege bankruptcy of defendants and appointment of a trustee, "and other proper and necessary allegations" gives leave to serve such complaint in addition to, not in place of, the original complaint.[80] Where the plaintiff has been ordered to amend the complaint to make it more definite and defendant moves further amendment in compliance with the order, and the court finds the complaint sufficient except as to one particular which was specified, an order for amendment in that particular is proper whether or not the original order was right.[81] A party against whom a demurrer has been sustained may amend or plead over as a matter of course at any time before the opposing party moves for judgment.[82]

Discretion of court.—Amendments not of course are generally discretionary.[83]

intestate may be amended to correct the name of intestate, as it is not substitution of a new party or a departure. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Logan, 136 Ala. 173. Where a defendant corporation incorrectly named in summons and complaint answers to the merits and also files a plea of misnomer, jurisdiction is acquired so that the correct name may be inserted by amendment. Sentell v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 155. A declaration making a tender of more goods than is alleged to have been sold may be amended at bar. American Hide & Leather Co. v. Chalkley & Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 705.

70. Amendment of answer on new trial after appeal. Jones v. Western Mfg. Co., 32 Wash. 375, 73 Pac. 359. The pleadings may always be amended before final judgment to show a complete defense to the action. Randolph v. Hudson [Okl.] 74 Pac. 946. An amendment to the pleadings in furtherance of justice must be allowed though it involves a new cause of action or a new defense [Code, § 2944, applied by Laws 1882, p. 348, c. 410, § 1347, to municipal courts before or during trial]. Morton v. Lederer, 84 N. Y. Supp. 132. The municipal court must allow an answer to be amended to set up the defense of usury [Laws 1902, p. 1542, c. 580, § 166]. Steinhardt v. Eisen, 84 N. Y. Supp. 232.

71. Where the court has jurisdiction of defendant it may order correction of a misnomer in the pleadings of its own motion in furtherance of justice. Sentell v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 155.

75. Rev. St. 1887, §§ 4228, 4229. Kroetch v. Empire Mill Co. [Idaho] 74 Pac. 868.

76. An amendment to a second petition for personal injuries in an action brought within six months of the first action in other respects good is not demurrable because apparent lack of good faith in alleging defendant's negligence in the first action without knowledge of its existence. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Pollard, 116 Ga. 297.

77. On the question whether an amended answer was filed in good faith and not for delay, facts relating to a proposition for compromise containing a threat by defendant to use dilatory tactics may be considered though inadmissible on trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 542]. Naylor v. Loomis, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 21.

78. Dilcher v. Schorik, 207 Ill. 528, 69 N. E. 807.

Answer. Westinghouse v. Remington Salt Co., 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 126. Leave to file an amended rejoinder. Guthrie v. Guthrie, 25

Leave to amend specifications objecting to discharge of a bankrupt can only be granted by the judge.[84] An amendment to a pleading allowed by the court cannot be stricken by an auditor on reference.[85] In cases tried by the court, the duty of deciding the propriety of amendments when asked is the same as in jury cases, the parties having a right to know the state of the pleadings at all times.[86] Where plaintiff's counsel failed to appear to argue motions for judgment by defendant and for leave to amend by plaintiff, the amendment was properly refused in the discretion of the court, it appearing that allowance would work injustice.[87]

Terms for amendment.—The terms for amendment to a petition are discretionary.[88] A motion that the amending party be taxed all costs prior to amendment is too broad.[89] A pleading cannot be amended to increase the prayer for recovery to conform to the verdict without setting aside the latter and granting a new trial on payment of costs.[90] Amendment at trial entitles the adverse party to a postponement only not a continuance.[91] An amendment of a defense should always be allowed on terms so as to admit proof thereof where there is no claim of surprise.[92] Leave to amend "without prejudice to proceedings already had" cannot be granted so as to permit testimony taken in support of the action as first tried to stand.[93] Particular terms for amendment and manner of allowance are treated in the notes.[94]

Ky. L. R. 1701, 78 S. W. 474. Amendment of the answer which states an insufficient denial. Avery v. Stewart [N. C.] 46 S. E. 519. Allowance of amendment of special matter in defense is proper unless abuse of the court's discretion appears [V. S. 1148]. Chase v. Watson [Vt.] 56 Atl. 10. Where evidence is inadmissible under a plea because it is not verified, the court in its discretion may allow verification and hear the evidence. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227. That affidavits supporting a motion for leave to amend a complaint merely referred to the proposed amended complaint for facts on which it was based and such facts were there stated on information and belief without stating the source of the information will not affect the discretion to allow amendment. Meeks v. Meeks, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 49.

During trial: Amendments at any time during trial. Neb. Land & Feeding Co. v. Trauerman [Neb.] 98 N. W. 37. Amendments after the issues are made up. Abuse of discretion. Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Fries [Neb.] 96 N. W. 71. Allowing an amendment to pleadings near the close of the case. Brady v. Pinal County [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 910. Allowance of amendments to plaintiff after he has rested and defendant has moved to dismiss. Jaroszewski v. Allen, 117 Iowa, 632, 91 N. W. 941. Amendment of pleadings at close of the evidence to conform to the proof. Mont. Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., 27 Mont. 288, 70 Pac. 1114. Allowance of an amendment to the petition after the testimony is closed. Lewis v. Hoeldtke [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 309. Amendments to the complaint, not changing the cause of action, after evidence taken and submission of the cause. Hancock v. Board of Education of Santa Barbara, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 44. Amendment of a petition pending trial to increase the claim for damages. Smith v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81. Allowing an amendment at trial merely to add an item of damages to the complaint. Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 72 Pac. 406.

After trial: Amendments on retrial after reversal. Parke v. Boulware [Idaho] 73 Pac. 19. Amendment of answer in action appealed from a justice to the district court. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Warbritton, 66 Kan. 93, 71 Pac. 278. Amendment of complaint to conform to the findings two or three months after judgment is discretionary [Rev. St. §§ 2830, 2832]. Hansen v. Allen, 117 Wis. 61, 93 N. W. 805. The allowance of amendments to an answer is not an abuse of discretion even though the answer has been demurred to for lack of the supplied allegation and the demurrer overruled, and objection has been made to the evidence, where there is evidence to support the amendments and the other party has been permitted to introduced additional proof without objection. Time for amendment.—Pleadings may be amended as to formal defects during trial,[95] or to conform to the evidence,[96] or to show absence of defendant from the county after proper service,[97] or in the district court of New Jersey, as to parties,[98] or even to change the cause of action, in Wisconsin, if the form of action be not changed.[99] But material amendments are not generally allowable after introduction of evidence,[1] unless to plead defenses shown by the evidence,[2] nor after submission of the cause to the jury.[3] Prejudice may be obviated by giving the adverse party option of a continuance.[4] Generally amendments are not allowable after judgment,[5] unless in furtherance of justice,[6] or merely to insure jurisdiction on ap-

Code Civ. Proc. § 723. Lindblad v. Lynde, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 603.

94. Payment of costs: On leave to amend, a plaintiff who cannot recover on his complaint as it stands should be taxed with all costs and disbursements after service of the complaint. Lindblad v. Lynde, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 603. Where a complaint in the supreme court stated a cause of action for accounting against an executor properly cognizable by the surrogate, an amendment alleging fraud to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the supreme court will be allowed on payment of accrued costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 723]. Meeks v. Meeks, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 49. Where on plaintiff's application, a juror was withdrawn and he was allowed to amend the complaint within a certain time on payment of costs, defendants to have judgment of dismissal and costs on his failure to pay costs and serve the amended complaint within the period, such judgment was properly entered on his default. Morris v. Thomas, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 47. That defendant did not object to the introduction of evidence will not show his intention to waive inadmissibility where his objection to prior evidence similar in character was overruled, and on amendment of the complaint so as to allow such evidence on a second trial, plaintiff should be required to stipulate for deduction of costs of the appeal from any recovery by him. Page v. Del. & H. Canal Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 638. $50 costs allowed on amendment to the complaint not materially changing the cause of action held sufficient. Perry v. Levenson, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 94. A complaint may be amended as to material facts after answer to the merits by defendant familiar with the facts on payment of costs of the motion and $10 [Code Civ. Proc. § 723]. Mooney v. Valentine, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 41.

Payment of costs and additional time to answer amendment: Where an original complaint is found defective on trial, an amendment stating in effect a new cause of action should only be allowed on granting defendant a trial fee in addition to costs, and 20 days to answer and the case should take its regular place on the calendar. Diebold v. Walter, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 254.

Allowance of jury trial: A complaint should not be amended to change the issue from a fictitious one in contract to one in tort without allowing defendant a jury trial if he waived the right by not demanding it when the first issue was joined [Code Civ. Proc. § 2994]. Reese v. Baum, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 550.

95. A formal amendment not prejudicial to a party objecting, may be allowed during trial. Donovan v. Hibbler [Neb.] 92 N. W. 637. A claim for damages less than the amount shown by allegations of goods delivered in the complaint may be amended during trial. Prince v. Takash, 75 Conn. 616. After the jury had been impaneled, the court allowed the reply to be amended by adding a general denial of matter already, in effect, specifically denied in the reply. Held, defendant not prejudiced. Bergman v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co. [Wash.] 75 Pac. 989. Refusal of the court to permit an amendment after trial had progressed several days was not an abuse of discretion. Altgeld v. Alamo Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 582. An amendment to an answer may be permitted, even on the eve of the trial, in the discretion of the court. McClurg v. Brenton [Iowa] 98 N. W. 881.

96. Plaintiff may be permitted during trial to amend his complaint to conform to the evidence. Vinson v. Palmer [Fla.] 34 So. 276.

97. If the summons is duly issued and served, and defendant is found absent from the county, the complaint may be amended at trial to show the absence. Berryhill v. Healey, 89 Minn. 444, 95 N. W. 314.

98. Pleadings in the district court may be amended at trial by striking out, on plaintiff's motion, one of two defendants sued jointly. Lambeck v. Stiefel [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 132.

99. A complaint may be amended on trial, or at any time before final judgment, though the cause of action be changed, if the form from tort to contract, or law to equity, or vice versa, be not changed [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2669, 2670, 2830, 2829, as to amendments]. Gates v. Paul, 117 Wis. 170, 94 N. W. 55.

1. Where a petition by an administratrix for death of her intestate alleged that he was a resident of the county in which the suit was brought, at time of his death, an application at trial to amend the answer to deny the residence is too late, after introduction of evidence raising a doubt on that issue. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Riddle's Adm'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 1687, 72 S. W. 22.

2. Where defendant in an action on a note pleaded the ownership of a note made by plaintiffs by way of counterclaim, plaintiffs may be allowed to amend their reply to plead limitations, after introduction of the note, surprise to defendant not being shown. Thomas v. Price [Wash.] 74 Pac. 563.

3. Hall v. Greene, 24 R. I. 286.

4. A surety's plea may be amended at trial to show that he signed on condition, plaintiff having option of a continuance and electing to proceed. People v. Sharp [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1074.

5. Application to amend the petition after entry of final judgment of dismissal is too late. Stanbury v. Storer [Neb.] 97 N. W. 805. After judgment the bill of particulars peal.[7] However, they are sometimes allowed to conform to the findings on proper terms,[8] and where a defect in a complaint is such that an amendment might have been made at the trial as of course, the amendment will, on appeal, be regarded as made.[9] The right to amend may be lost by delay unexplained;[10] especially to introduce new issues,[11] or where the defect has been previously brought to the party's notice.[12] Failure to amend before the issues are made up may waive the right.[13]

Matter of amendment.—Pleadings showing no cause of action are not amendable.[14] Where a complaint fails to state separately and number two separate causes cannot be amended to introduce a new issue and secure reversal of the judgment. Kent v. Phenix Art Metal Co. [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 256. Where the answer was not amended nor a motion to amend made on trial, defendant cannot claim the matter of amendment on appeal. McPherson v. Julius [S. D.] 95 N. W. 428. An amendment to the complaint presenting issues which, if proper, should have been presented with other issues in the case is too late, after judgment fixing the rights of the parties. Bohannon v. Clark [Ky.] 78 S. W. 479. Failure to move for amendment of answers, or to take any steps to allege a defense of laches, until after reversal of judgment in favor of defendants will warrant denial of their application to amend. Guttentag v. Whitney, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 145. Where a judgment sustaining a demurrer and dismissing a petition has been affirmed on appeal, the trial court has no power to permit an amendment to the petition. Craig v. Welsh-Hackley C. & O. Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 1122. Leave to amend will not be granted after a judgment sustaining a general demurrer is affirmed on appeal. But such allowance is discretionary with the court. Atlanta Trust & Banking Co. v. Nelms [Ga.] 46 S. E. 851.

6. An answer may be amended on new trial after appeal. Jones v. Western Mfg. Co. [Wash.] 73 Pac. 359. It is not error to permit an amendment to a pleading after trial when necessary to a proper determination of the cause. Brown v. Brown [Neb.] 98 N. W. 718. Where the merits of the case are tried, an amendment permitted to be made before verdict, but not in fact made and allowed until after verdict, will be treated as made when permission was given therefor. Cronan v. Woburn [Mass.] 70 N. E. 38.

7. An amendment to the complaint to insure jurisdiction and not changing the cause of action may be made in the supreme court [Code Civ. Proc. § 723]. Meeks v. Meeks, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 49.

8. The complaint may be amended in the discretion of the court, to conform to the findings two or three months after judgment, on payment of costs [Rev. St. §§ 2830, 2832]. Hansen v. Allen, 117 Wis. 61, 93 N. W. 805.

9. Gallamore v. Olympia [Wash.] 75 Pac. 978.

10. Amendment of the petition is properly refused after the issues, having been made up for a year, during which time defendant had died and his administrator was managing the case. Marks v. Hardy's Adm'r [Ky.] 78 S. W. 864. Permission to amend an answer in an action appealed from a justice to the district court may be refused, when more than seven months passed after appeal, and the application was made on trial without excusing delay. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Warbritton, 66 Kan. 93, 71 Pac. 278. Defendant after answer and shortly before trial asked leave to amend to set up a new counterclaim which was denied for laches, and then sued plaintiff on his counterclaims, including the one omitted from the answer, but the case was never tried. He was not entitled after reversal of judgment against him to discontinue his action and amend by setting up the omitted counterclaim and defenses waived on the first trial. Henry v. Talcott, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 76.

Excuse for delay in moving to amend complaint to show defendant to be a joint stock company, and not a corporation, and to amend summons. Blackburn v. American News Co., 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 82. Right to file amended answer before reply under Ky. St. 1899, § 2524 and Civ. Code, §§ 39, 132, 134. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 24 Ky. L. R. 2487, 74 S. W. 280. In an action by the assignee of a contract, made while the assignor and defendant sustained the relation of attorney and client, where the case was on the calendar several times and postponed by defendant, his right to amend at a time after the date for which the case had been peremptorily set was not lost by laches. Goldberg v. Goldstein, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 516.

11. Plaintiff cannot file an amendment to a demurrer to defendant's plea at the trial term setting out new and distinct grounds of objection [Code 1895, §§ 5045, 5047]. Farkas v. Monk [Ga.] 46 S. E. 670.

12. Where a defect in a complaint is specifically pointed out on trial and the court was not asked to amend, the right to amend is waived. Page v. Del. & H. Canal Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 160, 12 Ann. Cas. 18.

13. A plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that the allegations of the petition were fraudulently made cannot be made first by exceptions in the second amended answer, and filed after answer to the merits. Price v. Garvin [Tex. Civ. App.] 69 S. W. 985. Amendment to answer in action for injuries to servant as too late. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 772, 69 S. W. 1108.

14. An answer to an action on notes and a contract cannot be amended by filing a plea, non est factum, which does not deny, but admits execution of the contract. National Comp. Scale Co. v. Eaves, 116 Ga. 511. In an action on a void contract the court properly refused to allow amendment of a petition since no cause of action could be made. Troy Buggy Works Co. v. Fife [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 956. A petition setting forth no cause of action cannot be amended by an altogether different statement of facts. Shepherd v. Southern Pine Co., 118 Ga. 292.

of action, an order for an amended complaint may be made.[15] The cause of action or defense stated in a pleading cannot be changed by amendment.[16] Amend-

16. Amendments constituting departure: Petition. Cobb v. Everett Clark Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 305; Atwater v. Hannah, 116 Ga. 745. Amendment to complaint in action for personal injuries as stating new cause of action. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096. Held, in this case, the proposed amendment did not state a new cause of action and should have been allowed. Coyle v. Davidson, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1089; Brackin v. Bainbridge [Ga.] 46 S. E. 828. One test for determining whether a proposed amendment states a new cause of action is whether a recovery, under the original complaint, would bar any further recovery under the proposed amendment. Coyle v. Davidson, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1089. An amended complaint pleading part performance of a contract, and excuse for nonperformance of the remainder, does not change the cause of action, where the original complaint alleged full performance. Barnum v. Williams, 86 N. Y. Supp. 821. Amendments merely amplifying the original petition and not introducing a new cause of action are allowed. Woodward v. Miller [Ga.] 46 S. E. 847; Coleman v. Himmelberger, etc., L. & L. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 981. Amendment not allowed. Southern R. Co. v. Parramore [Ga.] 46 S. E. 822; Moyer v. Ramsay-Brisbane Stone Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 844. Amendment of petition on new trial in action on a contract as stating a different cause of action. Simpson v. Carr, 25 Ky. L. R. 849, 76 S. W. 346. Amended petition in an action on account as stating a new cause of action, so as to be barred by limitation. Burton-Lingo Co. v. Beyer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 248. A petition for breach of contract cannot be amended to abandon the contract and set up another and different one. Lamar v. Lamar, etc., Drug Co., 118 Ga. 850. Amendment to petition in action to recover real property. Venable v. Burton, 118 Ga. 156. Plaintiff suing for negligence resulting in injury cannot amend his complaint on trial so as to recover for a nuisance. Moniot v. Jackson, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 197. Petition in an election contest filed in time, but stating no grounds of contest, cannot be amended after time, since any amendment sufficient to give jurisdiction would make a new and different petition. Dilcher v. Schorik, 207 Ill. 528, 69 N. E. 807. An amendment to a suit for goods sold and delivered, seeking to recover for failure to deliver goods bought by plaintiff from defendant, is not allowable. Chapman v. Americus Oil Co., 117 Ga. 881. Amendment to a suit to recover damages for, and restrain trespass, adding a new party alleged to be the principal of the original defendant. Roberts v. Atlantic Real Estate Co., 118 Ga. 502. Amendment of complaint for trespass on mining property as presenting new issues. Mont. Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. C. & S. Min. Co., 27 Mont. 288, 70 Pac. 1114. Amendment to second petition for personal injuries in action brought within six months after dismissal of the first action. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Pollard, 116 Ga. 297. Plaintiff cannot amend his petition after verdict so as to set up facts and present issues not submitted to the jury nor referred to in the court's charge. Huron Dock Co. v. Swart, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 504. A complaint cannot be amended by allegations showing liability of a defendant against whom the original complaint showed no liability, and its allegations are directly contrary. Coker v. Monaghan Mills, 119 Fed. 706. Where defendant pleaded only the general issue in an action for work and labor, and asked leave, after close of plaintiff's evidence, to plead payment as to an item not previously claimed as payment, the amendment will be refused. Leek v. Flint [Miss.] 33 So. 494. An amended petition changing the cause of action cannot be allowed, though the cause of action stated therein does not differ from that stated in a prior amended petition, not objected to as stating a new cause of action, but as to which a demurrer was sustained. Purdy v. Pfaff [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 824. Where in an action on contract, defendant set up a breach of a particular clause and trial was had after stipulation that facts stated in the answer were true, and the case was submitted without application by plaintiff to amend the complaint, or withdraw a juror, he could not have judgment directed for defendant set aside, and amend the complaint to set up a different cause of action. Elec. Boat Co. v. Howey, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 522. A complaint alleging willful tort cannot be amended to allege also a cause of action based on mere negligence: Rule not changed by Act 1898, § 2 (22 Stat. p. 693). Proctor v. Southern R., 64 S. C. 491. That contractors and owners of improvement warrants were made parties to a suit to restrain reassessment of property for street improvements will not authorize plaintiff to change the theory of the suit to one by taxpayers to cancel illegal warrants. Kadderly v. Portland [Or.] 75 Pac. 222. Where defendant unqualifiedly admits execution of a contract sued upon, and pleads a general denial or special defense, in no way questioning the validity of the contract, or the identity of the other party, an amended answer alleging that the contract was induced by fraud, and that defendant thought he was contracting with another, will not make evidence thereof admissible over proper objections. Jamison v. Cullom & Co., 110 La. 781. Substitution of allegations of waiver for general denial with respect to a defense of breach of conditions precedent does not change plaintiff's cause of action. German Ins. Co. v. Shader [Neb.] 93 N. W. 972. Right to file an amended reply may be refused in the district court, where it changes issues made up in the county court, where the case was first tried, and where the new matter alleged is barred by limitations. Johnston v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 479. An amendment to the answer offered after close of the trial which would present a new issue may be refused in the court's discretion. Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 69 Pac. 491, 72 Pac. 406. In an action for death of an employe on a construction train against the railroad company and the contractor, the answer could not be amended during trial to give facts showing ments changing the form of action cannot be made.[17] An amendment must not that the contractor defendant was not operating or controlling the train. Pierce v. Brennan, 88 Minn. 50, 92 N. W. 507.

Amendments not departure: Amendment to petition. Gosnell v. Webster [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1060. Petition in action for injuries to servant. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 772, 69 S. W. 1108. Amendment of complaint on contract between parents of illegitimate child for support thereof, amplifying the allegations as to consideration as not changing cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 723. Rosseau v. Rouss, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 230. Amendment alleging an express in lieu of an implied contract. Gunther Bros. & Co. v. Aylor, 92 Mo. App. 161. An amended complaint constituting a mere repetition of the primary cause of action, and enlarging on the facts is not a departure. Hasler v. Ozark L. & L. Co., 101 Mo. App. 136, 74 S. W. 465. Amendment to petition for divorce as not uniting different and distinct causes of action. Wells v. Wells, 118 Ga. 812. An amendment to the complaint after denial of a motion for nonsuit on plaintiff's evidence and before judgment, changing no issue and working no hardship to defendant may be allowed. Merrill v. Miller, 28 Mont. 134, 72 Pac. 423. An amendment correcting defects in the statement of the cause of action in the declaration is not a change of the cause of action, and is not amenable to limitations. Mott v. Chicago & M. El. R. Co., 102 Ill. App. 412. An amended petition is not a departure from the original, where the same evidence supports both, and the same judgment is to be rendered as to both. Boeker v. Crescent B. & P. Co., 101 Mo. App. 429, 74 S. W. 385. An amendment to a complaint to foreclose a mechanic's lien to set out specifically the alterations made, under the terms of the contract under which work on a building was done, did not embody a new cause of action and was allowable [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 723, 1018]. Perry v. Levenson, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 94. Amendment of a petition in an action for damages to add the name of a party plaintiff. Hucklebridge v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 66 Kan. 443, 71 Pac. 814. An amended petition for personal injuries asking for greater damages and adding to the allegations of negligence and causation. Gulf, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. O'Neill [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 960. An amendment to an equitable petition to trace trust funds, striking a prayer for recovery of land and substituting a prayer for accounting and money judgment, with a special lien on the land, does not set up a new and distinct cause of action. Jordan v. Downs, 118 Ga. 544. An amendment averring presentment of coupons to the commissioners' court and refusal of payment does not state a new cause of action, in an action on county bonds alleging a demand for payment. Martin County v. Gillespie County, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 307, 71 S. W. 421. Where a petition to recover possession of land alleged ownership in plaintiff under written evidence of title, an amendment alleging equitable ownership and right to possession at commencement of the action did not allege a new and distinct cause of action. McCandless v. Inland Acid Co., 115 Ga. 968. An amendment to a complaint for injuries received while employed in a mine, alleging defects in the condition of the ways, works, and machinery used in the mine, and incompetency of the superintendent, did not change the cause of action, where the complaint alleged defective construction of the works and appliances, and negligent operation. Tanner v. Harper [Colo.] 75 Pac. 404. Where the original complaint in an action for damages from fire set by a railroad engine alleges that the fire was caused by negligence of the railroad employes or defects in the engines, an amendment alleging that defendant carelessly allowed fire to burn material permitted to accumulate along its right of way, and negligently failed to supply its engines with spark arresters, does not state a new cause of action. Simpson v. Enfield Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 95. An amendment to a complaint for reassignment of stock, so as to allege fraud and mutual mistake, and ask reformation and cancellation of the original assignment, does not plead a new cause of action, so as to require defendant to pay all costs before amendment. Miller v. Carpenter, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 130, 12 Ann. Cas. 367. Where a complaint alleged that plaintiff was appointed as special prosecutor or prosecuting attorney in a criminal case, an amendment inserting "to assist the district attorney" instead of "as special prosecutor" is not a departure. Board of Com'rs of Hinsdale County v. Crump [Colo.] 70 Pac. 159. Amendment of a complaint on a written contract, so as to state a cause of action on quantum meruit is properly refused, after both parties have rested, and a motion for a directed verdict has been argued, the claim not being embraced in the action and being such as may require defendant to bring evidence from a distance. Jacobson v. Tallard, 116 Wis. 662, 93 N. W. 841. Where a claim in the county court for money paid and expended for defendants is met by general denial, and an allegation of payment by plaintiff, as guarantor of a note signed by defendants, and altered without their knowledge, and paid without request, an amendment in the district court alleging that one defendant was surety only, the money being paid for the other defendant, raises no new issue. Ball v. Beaumont [Neb.] 92 N. W. 170. A complaint for breach of contract in failing to pay an instalment due, no other obligations being due, may be amended to ask damages for breach of the whole contract, the amendment showing the contract to have been executory, and alleging that it was repudiated by defendant before suit. Northrop v. Mercantile T. & D. Co., 119 Fed. 969. Where an answer in an action on contract alleges that the contract was oral and invalid for that reason, and plaintiff fails to show a written contract as required by statute, the answer may be amended to change the admission of the contract into a denial [Contract of agency to sell realty invalid under Civ. Code § 1624, subd. 6]. Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 109, 74 Pac. 695.

17. Slater v. Fehlberg, 24 R. I. 574. A count for a tort cannot be added by amendment to a declaration on the common counts. Doyle v. Pelton [Mich.] 96 N. W. 483.

surprise the adverse party.[18] An amendment is allowable where it merely amplifies the original petition by giving additional facts explanatory of the cause of action.[19]

Causes of action arising after commencement of the action, and out of the same transaction, may be brought in by amendment,[20] even though new parties are brought in,[21] but otherwise where they are independent causes of action.[22] Allegations shown necessary by the proof,[23] or other parties necessary to determination of the cause,[24] may be brought in by amendment, or to conform the pleading to the judgment.[25] Amendments cannot be made against the evidence already given.[26] A complaint may be amended to conform to jurisdiction as shown by the summons.[27] The prayer for recovery may be increased after proof.[28] That limitations have run will not prevent an amendment to a complaint amounting substantially to a restatement of the same cause of action, though in different form.[29] Plaintiff cannot be required to amend as to matters of defense.[30] Co-defendants in default cannot be

18. An amendment to the complaint after answer and general denial is not misleading and surprising to defendants, where it alleges a waiver of tender of balance due on a note, defendants having interposed a demurrer ore tenus, raising a failure of complainants to make the tender. Martin v. Bank of Fayetteville, 131 N. C. 121.

19. Woodley v. Coker [Ga.] 46 S. E. 89.

20. A petition to recover fire insurance may be amended to recover for additional injury to the same property by a subsequent fire [Civ. Code § 134]. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Strain, 24 Ky. L. R. 958, 70 S. W. 274. On death of plaintiff's wife, pending his action for her injuries, an amendment to the petition alleging a cause of action for her death is proper. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Boykin [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 93.

21. In a suit by husband and wife for her personal injuries, where she died pending suit, an amendment alleging a cause of action for her death, joining minor children, is not improper for misjoinder of parties. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Boykin [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 93.

22. A complaint for breach of contract cannot be amended to allege a second breach occurring after commencement of the action and ask damages. Northrop v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 119 Fed. 969.

23. A complaint alleging a resulting trust may be amended to conform to proof tending to show an express trust. Kilham v. Western Bank & Safe Deposit Co., 30 Colo. 365, 70 Pac. 409. An allegation in a divorce complaint that plaintiff was a bona fide resident of the state is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, so that after verdict the complaint may be amended to conform to proof of residence in the county [Civ. Code §§ 75, 78]. Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Colo. 402, 70 Pac. 692. Where a complaint sought recovery on a five-year contract and the proof showed employment from year to year, the complaint may be considered amended to conform to the proof [Code Civ. Proc. § 723]. Brightson v. Claflin Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 557. Plaintiff may be permitted to amend his complaint by inserting other allegations material to the cause [Code, § 273]. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Jordan [N. C.] 46 S. E. 496. Where both parties to a contract introduced evidence on the question of agency of defendant for a third person, he may amend his answer to plead his agency. Cole v. Laird [Iowa] 96 N. W. 744. Petition and affidavit in replevin alleging special ownership of the property may be amended to allege general ownership. Suckstorf v. Butterfield [Neb.] 96 N. W. 654. A complaint against a city for personal injuries may be amended on trial to show that the statutory notice of intention to sue was given the corporation counsel [Laws 1886, p. 801, c. 572]. Shaw v. New York, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 212.

24. Another party plaintiff may be joined before answer on plaintiff's request [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 397, 399]. Frankel v. Garrard, 160 Ind. 209, 66 N. E. 687. Where a suit is brought by a guardian not qualified for an infant, another person may be substituted as next friend by amendment. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Robertson [Ark.] 72 S. W. 893.

25. After a judgment awarding restitution of premises to plaintiff with reasonable rent while defendant was in possession, plaintiff may amend his petition to recover such rent. Fisher v. Musick's Ex'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1913, 72 S. W. 787.

26. Where evidence in an action against a county for physician's services to the poor showed a contract with the board of trustees, services for the time claimed, and no bad faith appears, the answer cannot be amended to show that the trustees had not properly certified the account. Bay v. Monroe County [Iowa] 96 N. W. 854. Permission to amend a complaint by adding another count is properly refused where plaintiff's evidence shows no right to recover. Nash v. Southern R. Co., 136 Ala. 177.

27. Where the summons in a case of which the superior court has jurisdiction is returnable at chambers, but the complaint shows a cause necessary to be heard at term, it may be amended to bring the case within jurisdiction at chambers [Code §§ 623, 256, and 255 as amended by Laws 1887, p. 518, c. 276]. Ewbank v. Turner [N. C.] 46 S. E. 508.

28. After conclusion of the testimony in a personal injury case the complaint may be amended to increase the claim for damages. Clark v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 478, 12 Ann. Cas. 333. Amendment of complaint enlarging cause of action allowed after interlocutory order adjudging that plaintiff was entitled to recover in action to compel delivery of shares of capital stock. Wilson v. Standard Asphalt Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 102.

29. Stoner v. Erisman, 206 Pa. 600.

30. Where plaintiff demanded less dam-brought in by amendment by defendant who appeared.[31] Insufficient denials in the answer may be amended.[32] Where the last of three paragraphs in a complaint for services merely claimed a balance due and prayed judgment, the answer need not be amended so as to deny it.[33] A petition stating a cause of action against defendants is sufficient to support amendment.[34]

The character of particular amendments is treated in the note.[35]

Statement and verification.[36]—Amendments should be made by rewriting the pleading, omitting and inserting allegations as may be necessary to make it a complete instrument.[37] An amendment to a count in assumpsit to supply the contract for items of account annexed is too faulty to be allowed where no promise by defendants is directly and positively asserted.[38] That an additional pleading filed under leave to amend the answer was called an "additional answer" will not prevent it from being regarded as an amendment to the answer filed.[39] An amended petition filed after demurrer is sustained to the petition may be stricken where it contains substantially the same averments as the original.[40] Leave to amend a pleading is not in itself an amendment,[41] nor discontinuance at trial of a count for mesne ages than the amount of goods alleged to have been delivered defendant, as shown by the bill of particulars, he cannot be required to amend showing whether part payment had been made. Prince v. Takash, 75 Conn. 616.

31. Where one of several defendants files a plea in his own name he cannot thereafter amend to join his co-defendants in default. Burch v. Swift, 116 Ga. 595.

32. An answer, insufficient as a denial, because merely alleging that defendant was informed and believed that the allegations of the complaint were not true, and denying them, may be amended in the discretion of the court on proper application. Avery v. Stewart [N. C.] 46 S. E. 519.

33. Fogil v. Boody [Conn.] 56 Atl. 526.

34. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Nisbet [Ga.] 46 S. E. 444.

Amendment of equitable action under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 663, 666. Cohn v. Souders, 175 Mo. 455, 75 S. W. 413. Amendment of answers merely that defendants may obtain the right to open and close. Bannon v. Ins. Co. of North America, 115 Wis. 250, 91 N. W. 666. Amendments to complaint by stockholders against receivers of a corporation to enforce a cause of action vested in the corporation and effect of orders relating to amendments. Craig v. James, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 16. Defendant in an action of quantum meruit for physician's services may amend an answer by adding a counterclaim based on allegations of misrepresentations by plaintiff that the services were necessary [Rev. St. 1898, § 2656]. Ladd v. Witte, 116 Wis. 35, 92 N. W. 365. Amendment of petition, filed without leave of court, in action against partnership, concerning realty, to show amounts of money furnished the firm to buy the land, and asking personal judgment against the members of the firm. Moorman v. Schmidt [Ohio.] 69 N. E. 617. A petition for abatement of a liquor nuisance on relation of a city superintendent of police may be amended by substituting the state solicitor, and denominating the proceeding an information for violation of the liquor law [Pub. St. c. 222, §§ 7, 8, 11]. State v. Lynch [N. H.] 55 Atl. 653. A petition by a town for annexation of territory may be amended, on appeal to the circuit court, to omit part of the lands originally included. McCoy v. Board of Trustees of Cloverdale, 31 Ind. App. 331, 67 N. E. 1007. Where in an action against a physician the complaint charged unskillful treatment in one paragraph, together with allegations of unnecessary exposure and improper liberties with plaintiff's person, plaintiff was properly permitted to file a second paragraph setting up an assault. Thomas v. Dabblemont, 31 Ind. App. 146, 67 N. E. 463. That a petition for personal injuries against a railroad company affirmatively alleges defendant's negligence, will not estop plaintiff from amending a second petition, in renewal of the action, within six months after dismissal, so as to allege that plaintiff did not know of the existence of negligence until after the first action was brought, and on account of such ignorance had been fraudulently induced by an agent of the company to make a settlement with it. Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Pollard, 116 Ga. 297. In an action to recover for misrepresentations as to the amount of land conveyed by defendants to plaintiff, a trial amendment, after close of the evidence, alleging that if defendants' representations were not fraudulent both parties were honestly mistaken and plaintiff was entitled to an abatement of the price, was properly allowed in discretion where the court gave defendants an opportunity to give additional testimony and they did not request leave to withdraw their announcement of ready for trial. Lewis v. Hoeldtke [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 309.

profits in a declaration of ejectment.[42] Merely granting leave to amend is not amendment. If the pleading is not redrawn the amendment is deemed abandoned.[43]

The affidavit of an attorney cannot be accepted in lieu of that of his client on application for leave to amend an answer for matters of defense unknown to defendant at the filing unless it is shown that the motion must be made before the client's affidavit can be secured.[44] The affidavit of the attorney who had no personal knowledge of the facts could not be taken instead of that of the party on an application to amend the answer because of a defense unknown to defendant when the answer was filed.[45] That an affidavit filed with a motion for leave to amend a complaint was made by the managing clerk of plaintiff's attorney instead of plaintiff is no ground for objection where there is no laches of plaintiff to be excused under the nature of the amendment.[46] Where defendant is present at the trial, a plea setting up new facts cannot be permitted without requiring an affidavit that the omission was not made from the original plea for delay and that the amendment was not offered for delay.[47]

Effect of amendment.—Amendment of a pleading allowed relates back to the original,[48] and supersedes it,[49] operating as an abandonment or withdrawal of it,[50] unless it changes the cause of action;[51] but it does not change the trial term.[52] An amendment to a declaration stating a different cause of action is amenable to the statute of limitations.[53] A claim first made in an amended petition, filed after time to sue thereon has expired, is barred.[54] A complaint cannot be objected to because it alleges a release given before the injury occurred where an amendment

An amendment to a petition for damages adding the name of a party plaintiff more than two years after the cause accrued relates back to the commencement of the action. Hucklebridge v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 66 Kan. 443, 71 Pac. 814. Amendment by leave of court of a petition not signed when filed will relate back to the date of filing where defendants appeared and answered at the succeeding term waiving issuance and service of citation. Vitkovitch v. Kleinecke [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 544.

49. Filing an amended complaint carries the original and rulings thereon out of the record. Hershberger v. Kerr, 159 Ind. 357, 65 N. E. 4. An amended complaint becomes the only complaint in the case and is as effectual as though filed at the commencement of action. Meeks v. Meeks, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 99. An amended complaint, complete in itself, and not referring to or adopting the original complaint as a part of it, supersedes the other. U. S. v. Gentry [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 70. Where an amended statement in an action, filed by leave of court, gives facts sufficient to remove the bar of limitations shown by the original, the amended statement is the only one before the court and a demurrer will not lie because it is inconsistent with the original. Barclay v. Barclay, 206 Pa. 307. An original declaration, to which an amended declaration has been filed, remains a part of the record. Abbott v. Bowers [Md.] 57 Atl. 538.

50. Where defendant under leave to amend files a new plea of the same number as the original, the latter is considered withdrawn. Medairy v. McAllister [Md.] 55 Atl. 461. On death of plaintiff's wife pending his action for her injuries, an amendment to the petition alleging a cause of action for her death operates as an abandonment of the first action. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Boykin [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 93.

51. An amendment amounting merely to a restatement of the original cause of action relates back to the filing of the original complaint; it is otherwise as to one stating a new cause of action. Shroyer v. Pittenger, 31 Ind. App. 158, 67 N. E. 475.

changing the date of the release was allowed.[55] Where there is no answer to an amended complaint which states a good cause of action, judgment cannot be rendered for defendants.[56] An answer may be ordered to be made more definite as to allegations admitted and denied, and the order will not prevent defendant from setting up additional defenses in his amended answer.[57] A petition in action for price of goods brought in the county of the seller's residence, failing to allege that the contract was made in writing in the county where the action was brought, the buyer residing elsewhere, is cured by an amendment that after settlement of the balance due he contracted in writing to pay the money sued for at the county seat of the county where the action was brought.[58]

§ 8. Supplemental pleadings. Propriety and allowance.—Supplemental answer may be allowed as well after as before judgment.[59] Permission to file a supplemental answer,[60] or an additional plea,[61] is discretionary. Where a supplemental petition was stricken for failure to serve notice on defendant, leave may be given immediately thereafter to file the petition.[62] A supplemental answer setting out new matter arising after the cause is on the calendar and ready for trial must only be allowed on full indemnity to plaintiff.[63]

Matter of supplement and mode of pleading.[64]—Where a defense set up by affidavit is presumably good though insufficiently stated, a supplemental affidavit may be allowed.[65] A supplemental complaint cannot set up a different and subsequent cause of action to that in the original complaint.[66] Where the insured dies pending an action to reform a policy, the assignee of the interest thereunder may file a supplemental complaint after his substitution asking reformation and recovery on the policy.[67] If it does not clearly appear that a judgment set up by supplemental answer would not amount to a defense, the court at special term should not refuse leave to serve the answer but should remit to the trial court the questions involved in determining the effect of the plea.[68] Where an underwriter sued by a manager of Lloyd's set up as defense a judgment against him in excess of his liability to Lloyd's, a modification of the judgment on subsequent appeal before answer filed may be set up in the answer as a partial defense, a supplemental answer being unnecessary.[69]

§ 9. Motions upon the pleadings.—A motion to strike out all or part of a bill of complaint is in the nature of a demurrer.[70] Allowance of motions on the pleadings is generally discretionary.[71] Where a claim against an estate is tried in the probate court, refusal of a motion to make the petition more definite and certain after appeal to the district court is not prejudicial.[72]

Time of motion.—Motions to strike an answer for defect in form must be made before the trial term.[73] If a petition is so defective that recovery cannot be had, a motion to dismiss in nature of a general demurrer may be made at any time before verdict.[74] A motion before trial to exclude evidence as to items in the bill of particulars because not in the complaint will be refused.[75] A motion to conform the pleadings to the proof cannot be made after close of the evidence where the evidence when offered was objected to because it did not support the pleading.[76] Where plaintiff declares in separate counts on two instruments making inconsistent allegations as to the relations of the parties to the instruments, a motion to compel plaintiff to elect comes too late after pleading to the declaration.[77]

Grounds of motion.—A motion for judgment on the pleadings will not lie where an issue is framed.[78] A motion to strike out applies to evasive, ambiguous, or uncertain parts of a pleading.[79] A motion to strike irrelevant matter from a pleading will not lie when, under any possible circumstances, evidence of the facts pleaded therein can have any bearing on the subject-matter of litigation.[80] Traverse of an officer's return of service may be stricken where he is not made a party and has no notice of the filing of the traverse.[81] Where a party believes that answers to interrogations warrant a larger verdict for him than is given by the general verdict, he may move for judgment non obstante veredicto.[82] The various grounds assigned in the cases for motions addressed to the petition, complaint or declaration,[83] the answer,[84] the plea,[85] or the reply,[86] are assembled in the notes.

Merely pleading evidence will not warrant striking an allegation from a complaint on motion. Vogt v. Vogt, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 437. A motion to strike a contract exhibited to the summons will not lie when it is a part of each of the notes sued upon. Nat. Computing Scale Co. v. Eaves, 116 Ga. 511. Motions to strike out allegations from the complaint will never lie unless they prejudice the moving party. Rockwell v. Day, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 437. A motion to strike a paragraph for impertinence or irrelevancy fails if any portion is relevant or responsive. Thompson v. Williamson [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 453. A motion to make a petition more specific in certain particulars is overruled without error where plaintiff's proof did not prove or vary in proof from the allegations in those particulars. Brown v. Chillicothe [Iowa] 98 N. W. 502. One defendant cannot move to strike allegations from the complaint not essential as to him but material against the other defendants [Code Civ. Proc. § 545]. Brown v. Fish, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329. While a decision on demurrer to the petition sustaining the latter is unreversed, defendant cannot question the sufficiency of the petition by oral motion to dismiss. Ga. Northern R. Co. v. Hutchins [Ga.] 46 S. E. 659. A motion to strike allegations from a complaint is properly refused where the effect would be to change the cause of action. Klipstein v. Raschein, 117 Wis. 248, 94 N. W. 63. A motion to strike out an amended supplemental petition aimed at it as a whole is a general exception so that if any part presents a valid replication to any part of the answer it is properly overruled. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Bryant, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 437, 70 S. W. 1015. Where plaintiff on his own motion files a first and second amended petition and corrects clerical errors in the amendments, a motion to strike out his petition will not lie. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138. Where plaintiff again inserts the objectionable matter in his petition after a Sufficiency of motion.—A motion to strike a paragraph from a complaint as irrelevant and redundant must show prejudice.[87] A motion for direction of verdict for variance must show specifically in what the variance consists.[88] On motion to require a petition to be made more specific, defendant should show that he does not possess the desired knowledge, by affidavit or otherwise.[89] A notice of a motion by a receiver of a corporation for judgment against stockholders is sufficient though it does not state that they reside in the county.[90]

Decision on motion.—A motion to make a complaint more specific does not present an issue of law to be determined before issues of fact.[91] Where objection that the complaint does not state a cause of action is not taken until the trial, greater latitude of presumption is allowed than on demurrer.[92] Motion for judgment on the pleadings not only admits the truth of allegations of his adversary but also the untruth of his own allegations denied by the adversary.[93] Judgment for defendant may be entered after overruling plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings where plaintiff did not proceed on the merits but stood on his motion.[94] Where facts specially pleaded in defense were repeated by way of counterclaim which did not warrant affirmative relief, a finding to that effect obviates any error in refusing to strike out the counterclaim.[95]

§ 10. Mode of asserting defenses and objections whether by demurrer, motion, etc. Matters of substance.—The remedies for defects in pleading in North Dakota are distinct and must be applied exclusively; if one is used when the other applies the latter should not be granted.[96] Preliminary objections, such as denial of the right to sue, or want of capacity in either party, must be urged before the demurrer has been sustained for misjoinder of causes of action, a motion will lie to strike such allegations from the pleadings. Reed v. Reed [Neb.] 98 N. W. 73. Where two separate and well pleaded causes of action are united in one petition and a general denial filed together with a good plea of former adjudication as to one cause, a motion for judgment on the pleadings as to both causes cannot be sustained. Fouts v. Pettigrew [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1107. In an action based on a township warrant for goods sold, a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain will not lie because the complaint did not state that the goods were necessary and suitable, and their probable value, where it showed the organization of the county board as auditors of the warrants and every step required in the audit of the warrant sued on. Mitchelltree School Tp. v. Hall [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 919.

84. Where the answer is frivolous plaintiff may move for judgment on the pleadings though he has filed a reply. Soper v. St. Regis Paper Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 409. Where a motion to make an answer more definite and certain only affected the part of the answer containing a denial, the affirmative defenses remained intact and plaintiff should have replied thereto. Ritchey v. Home Ins. Co., 98 Mo. App. 115, 72 S. W. 44. A motion to strike out a matter of defense in an answer in the district court because not in issue in the county court on first trial will not lie where such matter was pleaded below and only set out more fully in the district court. Martens v. Pittock [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1038. In an action against an owner of a building for injuries received because of part of the structure blowing from the roof into the street in a wind storm, an allegation in the answer that the cause was solely plaintiff's negligence is not ground for motion to strike [Code Civ. Proc. § 545]. Uggla v. Brokaw, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 316.

85. That a plea was similar to another plea in the defense will not be ground for a motion to strike, where its object is recoupment and the other plea is only in defense, and additional facts are set up. Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter [Ala.] 36 So. 12.

86. A motion to strike matter from a reply is properly overruled where it includes matter both proper and improper for reply. German Ins. Co. v. Stiner [Neb.] 96 N. W. 122. Where a reply sets up new matter in avoidance of the defense in the answer, amounting fairly to a departure from the petition, a motion to strike out such matter will lie. Merrill v. merits are reached.[97] Objection to a plea of set off as improper under the statute should be made by replication.[98] If counts in a declaration are bad, defendant must demur or move in arrest of judgment.[99] Objection that no cause of action appears by the petition may be made at any stage of the action,[1] but if the petition is first attacked after answer by objection to introduction of evidence instead of by demurrer, it will be liberally construed.[2] If plaintiff is not limited by an order regulating the form of his complaint, the special term in New York cannot strike out a whole cause on motion; whether there is a cause of action can only be determined on trial after filing of demurrer or answer.[3] After default an objection that the complaint does not state a cause of action may be made by motion to set aside but not by oral demurrer.[4] An order to strike out allegations of a pleading should be made only when they are clearly immaterial or irrelevant and cannot justify admission of evidence; if any doubt exists, the remedy is demurrer or other objection at the proper time.[5] Pleas neither frivolous, irrelevant, nor prolix cannot be stricken on motion but demurrer must be filed.[6] Where an answer contains allegations amounting to both a defense and a counterclaim; whether it sets forth both defenses, and the right to assert a counterclaim if properly alleged, may be raised by demurrer instead of motion to strike out.[7] Failure of a complaint for injuries against a village to allege that the statutory period had elapsed since filing the claim may be raised by demurrer, the complaint not stating a cause of action.[8] The remedy for allegation in a complaint of damages barred by limitation, and also damages which must have arisen after commencement of suit, is by motion to strike out and not demurrer.[9] Where plaintiff's statement of cause of action shows that he cannot avoid the bar of limitations, it may be raised by demurrer in Connecticut.[10] Where the complaint shows that an action is brought prematurely, demurrer will lie; if the defect does not so appear it must be raised by answer in abatement.[11] If a petition on contract does not show the contract illegal, an objection to introduction of evidence cannot be made on that ground.[12] Motion for judgment on the pleadings will not lie to settle important questions of law or dispose of the merits, demurrer being the remedy.[13] A motion ne recipiatur if regarded as one not to receive pleas, or to strike out, will not lie to pleas already received and filed, the proper motion being to rescind the order of leave to file and to strike out.[14] An exhibit referred to in a reply but not annexed thereto, no copy being furnished defendant until trial before a justice, is a part of the reply so that defendant's remedy for inspection was by motion.[15] Where each of several defenses in an answer denies material allegations of the complaint, and the denials might have been stricken on motion, a demurrer will not lie while they remain though other matter pleaded does not amount to a defense.[16] A general demurrer will not lie against a declaration stating separable demands, some good and some bad, the remedy, since abolition of special demurrers, being by motion to strike out.[17] A general objection to evidence under the complaint because it fails to state a cause of action without specifying wherein the pleading is insufficient will not be entertained.[18]

Uncertainty or indefiniteness in particular allegations as to the cause of action or defense must generally be raised by motion to make definite and certain, or to make more specific,[19] or by motion for bill of particulars;[20] but not by motion to strike out,[21] except in New Jersey,[22] nor on trial by a request for direction of verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence.[23] The lack of necessary allegations cannot be raised by motion to make more definite.[24] Failure of a complaint to determine an adverse claim to a mining location to allege that suit was brought within the statutory period is not a jurisdictional defect and can be raised only by demurrer.[25] Insufficiency of a plea is ground for demurrer not motion to strike.[26] Objections to sufficiency of an amended complaint taken by answer are subject to demurrer.[27] Objection to inconsistent defenses must be by motion to strike and cannot be raised by a requested instruction.[28] The sufficiency of new matter in a pleading filed in

Defective statement of a material fact in a complaint is ground for motion to make more specific, not for demurrer. Mulky v. Karsell, 31 Ind. App. 595, 68 N. E. 689. If allegations of a complaint are indefinite and uncertain the remedy is by motion to make definite and certain [Code Civ. Proc. § 546]. People v. Buell, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 141. If allegations in the complaint in the alternative render it uncertain, the remedy is by motion to make definite and certain and not by demurrer. Hasberg v. Moses, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 199. Where facts in one paragraph of the complaint taken with other facts therein make a cause of action, greater particularity can be secured by motion to make definite and certain and not by general demurrer. Weiser v. Holzman [Wash.] 73 Pac. 797. Motion to make more definite and not demurrer is the remedy where the complaint states that acts were done both willfully and negligently. Schumpert v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 332. Where a complaint for possession of land fails to state the nature of plaintiff's title the remedy is by motion to make more definite. Livingston v. Ruff, 65 S. C. 284. Where a pleading is too indefinite to enable the other party to understand the precise nature of its allegations, the remedy is by motion to make more definite. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Main, 132 N. C. 445. Defects in an answer which as a whole sets up a good defense should be corrected by motion to make more definite and certain. Moore & Co. v. Rooks [Ark.] 76 S. W. 548. place of one to which a demurrer has been sustained cannot be tested by a motion to strike.[29]

A defect of parties not appearing on the face of the petition must be raised by answer not demurrer.[30] Generally misjoinder of parties cannot be raised by demurrer,[31] except in Missouri[32] and Georgia; in the latter state special demurrer will lie.[33] Notice of misjoinder is the remedy in New Jersey.[34] Misjoinder of parties defendant not being new matter cannot be raised by answer in New York.[35] Misjoinder of causes of action must be raised by demurrer.[36] The statute of limitations is waived if not pleaded by answer.[37] The defense of statute of frauds must be raised by demurrer, not answer, in Iowa;[38] it may be made by answer in Arkansas[39] or in New York.[40]

Matters of form.—Failure to verify an answer is not ground for demurrer though it may be stricken on motion.[41] Objections to formal defects in a pleading must be raised by motion to make more specific and definite and not by demurrer.[42] Where more than one cause of action is stated in one paragraph of a complaint, the remedy is by motion to separate or by demurrer for misjoinder.[43] Demurrer will not lie to a defense containing a general denial though other matter pleaded is no defense, but such other matter will be stricken out on motion.[44] Where a denial in an answer does not comply with the statute, motion may be made, or the allegation may be treated as not tendering an issue.[45] A motion to strike out not demurrer is the remedy where matter alleged as a separate defense could be proved under the general denial.[46] Allegations in an action for fire insurance that plaintiff refused to be examined concerning the loss as required in the policy cannot be pleaded in abatement but must be set up by answer.[47] Misjoinder either of actions or parties must be raised by plea in abatement, or, where it appears on the face of the petition, by special exception in the nature of such plea.[48] Duplicity is ground for

The rule holds whether filing the amended pleading be considered a pleading over or not. Watkins v. Iowa Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 910. If no exception is made to the form or style of a pleading, it is sufficient for consideration. Baker v. Hamblen [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 362. A plea in abatement instead of in bar admits plaintiff's capacity to sue. Romy v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 998. Going to trial on the merits under pleas in bar filed with pleas in abatement without asking trial on the latter waives them. Maupin v. Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557. Proceeding to trial without objection that replies were not filed to special pleas waives failure to reply. Ill. Life Ass'n v. Wells, 200 Ill. 445, 65 N. E. 1072. Sufficiency of an affidavit to a plea denying agency is beyond objection after judgment. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227.

Objections to the jurisdiction: By appearing and filing a demurrer defendant waives objections to the jurisdiction of the person. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Christenson Engineering Co., 126 Fed. 764. Appearance and joinder in motion for a new trial on other grounds waives objections to jurisdiction for defects of service on nonresident defendants. Clark v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, 99 Mo. App. 687, 74 S. W. 412. General appearance and answer to the merits, after motion to vacate order for summons overruled, waives questions of jurisdiction. San Diego Sav. Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299. A motion to require plaintiff to paragraph his petition before raising the question of jurisdiction is an appearance by defendant. Royer Wheel Co. v. Dunbar, 25 Ky. L. R. 746, 76 S. W. 366. Where a plea of privilege by two defendants did not deny allegations of the petition that they acted with other defendants in converting goods, they thereby consented to join issue on the merits, in the court where the suit was brought, and submitted to the jurisdiction. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. North Tex. Grain Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 567.

Objections to petition or other pleading of cause of action: In an action by a servant for injuries, failure to demur or to move to make the complaint more definite because of a failure to directly allege employment waives the objection, and it cannot be made on introduction to the evidence. Brower v. Timreck, 66 Kan. 770, 71 Pac. 581. Objections to pleadings not made before judgment are waived. Turner v. Turner [Wash.] 74 Pac. 55; Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Robson, 204 Ill. 254, 68 N. E. 468. Omission to plead venue cured by answer. Evans v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1258, 77 S. W. 708. Objection to verification of a petition cannot be made after judgment. In re Mahoney's Estate, 84 N. Y. Supp. 329. A defect in a petition to recover for lumber, in failing to show that defendant agreed to pay for it, or that it was delivered at her request, is cured by answer putting these matters in issue. Ware v. Long, 24 Ky. L. R. 696, 69 S. W. 797. General allegations of negligence of a master causing injuries to a servant are sufficient, no objection being taken before trial or on admission of evidence. Gayle v. Mo. C. & F. Co., 177 Mo. 427, 76 S. W. 987. Failure of the petition in an action for services to allege a promise to pay is cured by answer and reply raising the direct issue of the services as a gratuity. Dearing v. Moran, 25 Ky. L. R. 1545, 78 S. W. 217. Traversing a petition without moving to make it more definite waives defects in the statement of losses incurred by plaintiff. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 25 Ky. L. R. 1429, 77 S. W. 1096. Defects in a declaration because joining two causes of action in one count are waived unless raised by special demurrer. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 207 Ill. 478, 69 N. E. 882. An objection that a suit was brought in plaintiff's initials, instead of his full christian name, is too late after judgment. Fisk v. Gulliford [Neb.] 95 N. W. 494. Going to trial in ejectment without objection that plaintiff should have been required to amend his abstract of title to correspond with his claim of presumption of a grant waives the objection. Jenkins v. McMichael, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 161. After filing a general denial defendant cannot object that there is no evidence of the demand alleged in the petition. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138. An objection that an allegation is omitted from the petition will not lie at trial if the petition can fairly be construed as implying what should have been expressly averred. Broyhill v. Norton, 175 Mo. 190, 74 S. W. 1024. By procuring from plaintiff's attorney a stipulation extending the time to answer, without reserving right to object to the complaint for scandalous matter, redundancy, and failure to state separately and number the causes of action, defendant waives the objections. Sherman v. McCarthy, 90 App.

as to the objection of failure to state a cause of action,[52] or want of jurisdiction of Div. [N. Y.] 542. An objection that a complaint does not specify the court is waived by failure to raise before appeal [Horner's Rev. St. 1901, §§ 338, 398]. Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Shepherd, 30 Ind. App. 193, 65 N. E. 765. A complaint failing to allege jurisdictional facts necessary to rendition of the judgment and to sustain an attachment in the original suit is sufficient in absence of a plea denying jurisdiction since it will be presumed. Kilham v. Western Bank & S. D. Co., 30 Colo. 365, 70 Pac. 409. Failure to demur and pleading to the merits waives the right to demur for or raise defects in the complaint. Romaine v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 569. A party accepting all issues tendered by the petition and going to trial thereon waives any inconsistency in theories of the case presented by the petition. Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh [Kan.] 75 Pac. 498. An allegation in a petition for injuries in the alternative, that the person injured was pushed from a train by railroad employes or by sleeping car employes, said employes working for different masters, cannot be objected to after answer [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86]. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kimbrough, 24 Ky. L. R. 2409, 74 S. W. 229. After answer and issues joined no objection can be made to the petition or amendments thereto on mere technical grounds. Guthrie v. Finch [Okl.] 75 Pac. 288. Failure to allege in a complaint in an action for nondelivery of cotton, plaintiff having accepted an option for sale, that he was ready and able to pay is merely a defective statement of a good cause of action, and is waived by failure to demur or answer [Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 242]. Blalock & Co. v. Clark & Bro. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 642. Ambiguity in a petition which fails to show whether the cause is in contract or tort will not avail a defendant properly served who fails to plead in time, where the cause is treated as in tort, and the pleadings together show plaintiff's intention to sue in tort for damages from a breach of contract. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. v. Earle, 118 Ga. 506. Failure to demur waives improper joinder of parties plaintiff, if the defect will not prevent judgment, and objection by answer in a motion for a new trial will not remove the waiver. Jones v. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 77 S. W. 890. Waiver of objections to petition by answering and failing to object to introduction of evidence. Albin Co. v. Kuttner, 25 Ky. L. R. 1100, 77 S. W. 181. Defendant by pleading to the merits waives objections to the petition. Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156. Objection to a complaint for want of verification cannot be made after judgment [Sand. & H. Dig. § 5776]. Randall v. Sanders [Ark.] 77 S. W. 56. Failure to raise misjoinder of causes by motion to strike waives the objection. Campbell v. Spears, 120 Iowa, 670, 94 N. W. 1126. Statement of facts in a petition on information and belief are sufficient if no motion is made attacking the petition on that ground. Robinson v. Ferguson, 119 Iowa, 325, 93 N. W. 350. Objection that the declaration was filed too late cannot first be made after verdict. Piche v. Robbins, 24 R. I. 325. Filing an answer denying matters alleged in "complaint and bill of particulars" waives any objections to the bill, no motion being made to correct or make more specific. Brown v. Woodward, 75 Conn. 254. Where no demurrer was filed to the declaration for insufficiency in allegations denied by the answer, objection cannot be made after judgment on the merits, the allegations not being so uncertain as to amount to no statement of fact. Whitlock v. Uhle, 75 Conn. 423. After issue joined and trial without objection to the petition, it will be construed liberally. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 94 N. W. 540; Lampman v. Bruning, 120 Iowa, 167, 94 N. W. 562. Where a general allegation of waiver of suspension in an action on an insurance policy is not objected to, its insufficiency is waived though it is a mere legal conclusion. Barrett v. Des Moines M. H. & C. Ins. Ass'n, 120 Iowa, 184, 94 N. W. 473. After answer to the merits, defendant in ejectment cannot question the sufficiency of the complaint as to the designation of the land. Davis v. Shepherd [Colo.] 72 Pac. 57. Pleading to the merits without raising misjoinder or defect of parties waives the defect [Ann. Code 1901, § 96]. Edney v. Baum [Neb.] 97 N. W. 252. Defendants by jointly answering waived misjoinder of causes of action; demurrer was the remedy. Teague v. Collins [N. C.] 45 S. E. 1035. Omission to allege in a complaint for trespass by county officers that the entry was unlawful or wrongful, or that any injury occurred, is waived by defendant's failure to move for more specific statements or to demur for the defects. Hitch v. Edgecombe County Com'rs, 132 N. C. 573. A defective statement of ouster in a declaration for breach of covenant of warranty in a deed is waived where defendant does not demur or take any special exception. Ravenel v. Ingram, 131 N. C. 549. Failure to demur waives failure of a complaint in libel to allege special damages where the publication is not libelous per se. Harrison v. Garrett, 132 N. C. 172. Failure to move to strike out inappropriate allegations in the complaint waives defendant's right to object to their consideration. Burns v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 229. Failure to object that a complaint contains three distinct causes of action that should be alleged separately will waive the defect after judgment. Smith v. Jones [S. D.] 92 N. W. 1084. Failure to object to a formal and amendable defect in a state of demand, in the district court of New Jersey, waives the objection. Ellis Co. v. Eyth [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 54. Pleading the general issue or not guilty admits the sufficiency of the counts in the declaration. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 103 Ill. App. 438. Where evidence showing jurisdiction in divorce, by residence of plaintiff in the state at time of defendant's adultery, is given mostly on cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses and no objection is made, failure of the complaint to allege such fact is waived. Harris v. Harris, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 123. Failure to demur or object otherwise before trial waives failure of a complaint, for injuries to a servant, to aver notice of the accident to the master [Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600]. Johnson v. Roach, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 351. Failure to demur waives misjoinder of causes [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 499, 488]. Shaw v. New York, 83 App.

Div. [N. Y.] 212. Going to trial on answer putting in issue the merits of the complaint waives failure to offer in the complaint to deliver up a mortgage, in an action in the nature of rescission of contract. Brown v. Gillett [Wash.] 74 Pac. 386. Defects, in a complaint stating a cause of action, which are ground for motion or demurrer are waived on appeal. Hefferlin v. Karlman [Mont.] 74 Pac. 201. A general denial waives an objection to a defect of parties defendant which does not appear on the face of the petition. Dunnaway v. O'Reilly [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1004.

Objections to plea or answer: A defect in a plea of res judicata in failing to allege that the judgment pleaded was final, unreversed, and unmodified, is waived by a reply alleging a pending appeal from the judgment by plaintiff. Small v. Reeves, 25 Ky. L. R. 729, 76 S. W. 395. Where, after exclusion of evidence controverting the cause of action because a plea of discharge in bankruptcy puis darrein continuance was filed, plaintiff withdrew his objection and offered to admit the evidence, but defendant refused to give it, he waived any error in the ruling. Crawford v. Burke, 201 Ill. 581, 66 N. E. 833. Defects in the answer are waived by agreement of plaintiff that the judge shall find the facts and render judgment. Early v. Early [N. C.] 46 S. E. 503. If an answer would be sufficient after verdict, failure to demur for its failure to state a defense waives the objection, so that it will not be ground for objection to introduction of the evidence. Maugh v. Hornbeck, 98 Mo. App. 389, 72 S. W. 153. Failure to plead an estoppel may be waived by plaintiff by proceeding with the trial without objection as if it had been pleaded. McDonnell v. De Soto S. & B. Ass'n, 175 Mo. 250, 75 S. W. 438. Going to trial on answer will waive objections to the sufficiency of the answer after judgment. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Enoch [Ark.] 77 S. W. 899. An objection to an answer in that it claims damages for a breach of contract, and also attempts to plead a rescission, is waived unless a motion is made to require defendant to elect. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt [Neb.] 95 N. W. 627. By joining issues on defendant's pleas and going to trial plaintiff waived a motion for judgment for want of a proper plea. Farmers' & M. Bank v. Hunter, 97 Md. 148. Where plaintiff, by failing to demur, had waived objection to an answer pleading res judicata, and only objected generally to evidence given thereunder, the court could not reject the evidence after final submission, and determine the cause without such defense, because insufficiently pleaded. Abilene v. Cornell University [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 379. By taking issue on pleas of set-off, limitations, and accord and satisfaction, in an action by scire facias, plaintiff waives the right to move to strike out the pleas. Star Loan Ass'n v. Moore [Del.] 55 Atl. 946. An objection to a denial in an answer in the words, "Denies each and every other material allegation of the said second cause of action," was too late after plaintiff had ceased its evidence in chief. Appelman v. Broadway Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 451. Failure to demur waives defects in an answer containing new matter which on its face does not constitute a defense [Code, § 248]. Queen City Printing & Paper Co. v. McAden, 131 N. C. 178. Failure to make certain allegations is cured by an answer making such allegations. Wilhoit v. Musselman, 24 Ky. L. R. 2011, 72 S. W. 1112. Where in an action to recover a legacy the will is not made a part of the complaint by exhibit or otherwise, the objection is waived by failure to demur. Coulter v. Bradley, 30 Ind. App. 421, 66 N. E. 184. Objection to an affidavit filed with a petition against an administrator and heirs on a note of decedent that it did not state that no set-off existed as required by statute is waived if not made before submission. Tichenor v. Wood, 24 Ky. L. R. 1109, 70 S. W. 837.

Objections to reply or replication: A defendant who goes to trial and submits the cause to a jury without objection to pleadings or evidence, thereby accepts the issues and waives departure of the reply from the petition. Consol. Kan. City S. & R. Co. v. Osborne, 66 Kan. 393, 71 Pac. 838. Objection that a new cause of action is stated in the reply is waived where the parties and the court treat the issue as regularly formed. Elder v. Webber [Neb.] 92 N. W. 126. Failure to raise defects in a reply by motion to make more specific will waive its insufficiency on going to trial. Gross v. Scheel [Neb.] 93 N. W. 418. Where defendant did not move for judgment for want of a replication to his plea of set-off until both parties had given evidence to the jury, and plaintiff had moved to exclude defendant's evidence, failure to file a replication was waived. Slaydon v. McDonald [Miss.] 34 So. 357.

Objections to cross-petition, set-off, or counterclaim: Filing an answer thereto waives objection to maintenance of a cross-petition. Stuart v. Harmon, 24 Ky. L. R. 1829, 72 S. W. 365; Id., 24 Ky. L. R. 439, 75 S. W. 257. By joining issue on a plea of set-off in a claim against an intestate, the administrator waived an objection that the set-off was improper, that being ground for replication. Hall v. Greene, 24 R. I. 286. An objection that a counterclaim was improper under the statute is waived if not raised by demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 495]. Hudson River W. P. Co. v. Glens Falls G. & E. L. Co., 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 577. Failure to object on trial by demurrer or otherwise that facts alleged in the answer did not constitute a proper counterclaim waives the objection. Ennor v. Raine [Nev.] 74 Pac. 1.

Objections to amendments: Error in allowing amendment of the petition is waived by defendant's failure to show surprise. Royer Wheel Co. v. Dunbar, 25 Ky. L. R. 746, 76 S. W. 366. Error in allowing an amendment is waived by failure to object to the amendment. Perry v. Cobb [Ind. Ter.] 76 S. W. 289. Where plaintiff was allowed to amend and give evidence after he had rested and defendant moved to dismiss, but defendant did not avail himself of the option of taking a continuance at plaintiff's cost, he waived any objection to the ruling. Jarozewski v. Allen, 117 Iowa, 632, 91 N. W. 941. An allegation, in an amended complaint for specific performance of demand for a deed was made, failing to state that demand was made before commence-ties, where the petition is insufficient for judgment.[55] Voluntary going to trial with a plea unanswered waives the answer.[56] Variance between writ and declaration may be raised at any time and filing a plea is not a waiver.[57] Error in requiring a plaintiff to elect, who was entitled to proceed on two separate causes of action, ment of the suit is at most an inadequate averment, cured by failure to object. Kirkham v. Moore, 30 Ind. App. 549, 65 N. E. 1042. Failure to except to amendment of a petition pending suit waives any error therein. Lowery v. Idelson, 117 Ga. 778. Where defendant appeared and answered without objecting to the filing of an amended complaint, and the cause went to issue as upon complaint and supplemental complaint, it cannot be objected that the judgment includes claims not due when the original action was brought. Pitzele v. Reuping [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 603. One claiming surprise by an amendment to a pleading cannot object afterward, where he asked no continuance to meet the amendment. Bennett's Estate v. Taylor [Neb.] 96 N. W. 669. Where a defendant was present when an order allowing amendment of the complaint was granted, and the trial proceeded without objection for failure to file or serve the amended complaint or a motion for continuance, the requirement was waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 432]. Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 671, 70 Pac. 784. Irregularity in bringing in new parties in tort by amendment is waived by failure to object. Farrand v. Kavanaugh [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1083. Filing an answer to an amended declaration filed without leave waives the objection that it was so filed. Harte v. Fraser, 104 Ill. App. 201. Waiver of amendment to complaint by written statement of fact between the parties. Butte County v. Merrill, 141 Cal. 396, 74 Pac. 1036. Proceeding to trial on an amended complaint waives any departure from the original. Boeker v. Crescent B. & P. Co., 101 Mo. App. 429, 74 S. W. 385.

Objections to motions: A purchaser of goods from defendant pending sequestration proceedings, who filed an answer to plaintiff's motion for execution against him, cannot afterward complain that the motion was irregular. Crawford v. Southern R. I. Plow Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 280.

Objections to proof as variance: Failure to object to a variance, and requesting instructions based on the evidence introduced, waives the variance. Ill. Life Ass'n v. Wells, 200 Ill. 445, 65 N. E. 1072. Evidence introduced without objection may be considered though not authorized by the pleadings. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Walden, 25 Ky. L. R. 1, 74 S. W. 694. Objection for variance is waived unless made, except where the adverse party has been misled to his prejudice [Rev. St. 1899, § 655]. Hayes v. Continental Casualty Co., 98 Mo. App. 410, 72 S. W. 135. Defendant cannot object to evidence given by plaintiff as variance when he gave evidence on the same issue. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Griffith [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 438. Where evidence of negligence in other particulars was received without objection under an allegation of negligence in operation of a switch engine, defendant could not afterward object that there was a variance. Albin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 153. Defendant failing to plead surprise on introduction of evidence at variance with the claim waives the variance after verdict. Kirchner v. Smith [Pa.] 56 Atl. 947. One who fails to avail himself of a statutory provision for amendment on variance waives it [Rev. St. 1899, § 655]. Kan. City v. Ferd Heim Brew. Co., 98 Mo. App. 590, 73 S. W. 302. Objection to evidence for failure of the petition to allege certain material facts is waived unless made at time of introduction. Baden v. Bertenshaw [Kan.] 74 Pac. 639. All the pleadings in a cause will be considered on objection to the evidence, where no motion or demurrer has tested their sufficiency, and if a cause of action can be found the objection will be overruled. Marshall v. Homier [Okl.] 74 Pac. 368.

52. Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156. Ann. Code 1901, § 96. Edney v. Baum [Neb.] 97 N. W. 252; Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Robson, 204 Ill. 254, 68 N. E. 468; Fla. Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Ashmore, 43 Fla. 272. Insufficiency of the petition as stating a cause of action may be raised after trial, though no demurrer is filed. Welch v. Mastin, 98 Mo. App. 273, 71 S. W. 1090. Failure to demur to a complaint which does not state a cause of action will not waive the defect [B. & C. Comp. § 72]. Moore v. Halliday, 43 Or. 243, 72 Pac. 801. Failure of the complaint to state facts constituting a cause of action is not waived by failure to demur [Code Civ. Proc. § 434]. Buckman v. Hatch, 139 Cal. 53, 72 Pac. 445. Failure to demur does not confess the action either in law or fact. Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872. Failure to demur will not waive substantial defects in the declaration making it insufficient to sustain a judgment. Sherwood v. Rieck, 104 Ill. App. 368. Nothing can waive failure of the declaration to state a cause of action. Western Wheel Works v. Stachnick, 102 Ill. App. 420. Answers may be withdrawn and a general demurrer filed, if the petition fails to state a cause of action, though the case had four trials, where no objection has previously been made to the complaint. Edney v. Baum [Neb.] 97 N. W. 252. Where defendant passes over a fatally defective petition without demurring, he may still make an oral motion to dismiss at any time before verdict, or after verdict, by motion in arrest, writ of error, or motion to set aside. Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872.

53. Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156; Turner v. Turner [Wash.] 74 Pac. 55. Ann. Code 1901, § 96. Edney v. Baum [Neb.] 97 N. W. 252.

54. Where plaintiffs have no authority to sue on an official bond, failure to demur to the complaint is not a waiver of the objection. Ulysses v. Ingersoll, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 304.

55. Jones v. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 77 S. W. 890. Joinder of an improper or unnecessary party plaintiff cannot be waived, where the petition is insufficient to support a judgment. Id.

56. Moreland v. Bebber, 102 Ill. App. 572.

57. Slater v. Fehlberg, 24 R. I. 574.

is not waived by going to trial.[58] Failure to object to a complaint by demurrer on the ground that it shows the action to have been brought prematurely is not a waiver of the objection.[59] Failure to demur specially waives objection to the manner of stating facts in the complaint, but not relating to omission of any material fact.[60] Submitting to assignment of a cause for trial without an amendment by the opposite party, which on a previous appeal, was held necessary by the Supreme Court, is not a waiver of the amendment.[61] A plea, puis darrein continuance, setting up a release as to one of several for whose benefit the suit was brought waived all previous pleas as to his interest.[62] Exception to a refusal of nonsuit at close of plaintiff's evidence is waived by introduction of evidence.[63] Where no demurrer is filed to the declaration it must be construed most favorably to plaintiff after trial.[64]

Pleading over after demurrer overruled waives objections raised thereby,[65] except the objection that the complaint, or other pleading, does not state a cause of action,[66] and except, in Kentucky, where the court was not advised that the party elected to stand on the demurrer.[67] It also waives objections raised by motion to

63. Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425.

64. Stern v. Knowlton, 184 Mass. 29, 67 N. E. 869. A petition assailed after judgment will be liberally construed. Brown v. Heisley [Neb.] 96 N. W. 187; Marsh v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 520. The objection to introduction of evidence, because the complaint fails to state a cause of action, will not lie unless the complaint cannot be sustained after every reasonable intendment is drawn in its favor. Prescott v. Puget Sound B. & D. Co., 31 Wash. 177, 71 Pac. 772.

65. Error in sustaining a demurrer to a petition is waived by filing an amended and substituted petition. Redhead v. Iowa Nat. Bank [Iowa] 98 N. W. 806. Demurrer to the petition. Nystuen v. Hanson [Iowa] 91 N. W. 1071. Filing an answer waives all former objections raised by demurrer to the petition. Rogers v. Western H. T. M. F. Ins. Co., 93 Mo. App. 24. Answering over and going to trial waives misjoinder of causes. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138. Filing an amended complaint waives error in sustaining a demurrer to the original. Prescott v. Puget Sound B. & D. Co., 31 Wash. 177, 71 Pac. 772. Leave to amend after a demurrer is sustained to a pleading waives any error in sustaining the demurrer. Berry v. Barton [Okl.] 71 Pac. 1074. Where, after a demurrer was sustained to a plea, plaintiff filed a replication to the plea, and a demurrer to the replication was overruled, plaintiff waived his demurrer. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 135 Ala. 232. Answer over after demurrer for failure of the petition to state a cause of action overruled waives the objection. Failure of petition for breach of marriage promise to allege that plaintiff requested defendant to perform. Broyhill v. Norton, 175 Mo. 190, 74 S. W. 1024. Pleading to the merits after demurrer overruled waives improper joinder of parties plaintiff, if the defect will not prevent judgment, and objection by answer in a motion for a new trial will not remove the waiver. Jones v. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 77 S. W. 890. Answer to the merits after demurrer for misjoinder of parties overruled is a withdrawal of the demurrer [Rev. St. 1899, § 602]. Strauss v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 644, 77 S. W. 156. Answering after demurrer to bill overruled waives error in overruling the demurrer. Kesner v. Miesch, 204 Ill. 320, 68 N. E. 405. After election to plead over, plaintiff cannot urge error in sustaining a demurrer to his petition; the waiver attaches to an amended petition filed after demurrer, which contains no matter different from the original. First Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & M. Bank [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1062. Error in overruling a demurrer to an answer is waived by subsequent reply. Emery v. Hanna [Neb.] 94 N. W. 973. Filing an amended answer after demurrer sustained to the original answer waives any error in sustaining the demurrer. Burke v. Wright [Conn.] 55 Atl. 14. Trial on the merits will waive any error in overruling a demurrer for misjoinder of plaintiffs, where no substantial right of a defendant has been invaded. Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 671, 70 Pac. 784. Filing an amended petition waives any error in sustaining a demurrer to the petition. Morrill v. Casper [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1102. Where defendant goes to trial on the issue made by petition and answer, without insisting on a ruling on his special demurrer filed, he waives any rights under the demurrer. Americus Grocery Co. v. Brackett & Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 657.

66. Pleading over does not waive an objection made by demurrer that the complaint does not state a cause of action. Van Horn v. Holt [Mont.] 75 Pac. 680. By going to trial on an issue of fact after demurrer to the declaration for a defect of substance not cured by verdict, overruled, defendant does not waive error in overruling the demurrer. Middleby v. Effler [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 261.

67. Going to trial on issues framed by other pleadings after demurrers are sustained to his pleading will not waive error in overruling the demurrer, though the party did not ask leave to amend, or to plead over, where he did not advise the court in strike out, which was overruled.[68] Filing an amended answer waives error in striking matter from the answer,[69] or in a motion to make more specific.[70] A motion for nonsuit is waived by introduction of evidence after it is overruled.[71] Filing an amended complaint will not waive error in sustaining a demurrer, in Idaho,[72] Indiana,[73] and Iowa,[74] but it is otherwise in Washington.[75] Filing an amended answer waives error in sustaining a motion to strike matter from the answer.[76] Filing an answer to an amended petition and going to trial waives error in the ruling on a motion to dismiss, made after allowance of the amendment.[77] Where defendant moved to strike affirmative defenses from the answer, and elected to stand on the motion after denial, without proving allegations of the complaint covered by a general denial, such denial will be taken as true.[78]

Cure by other pleadings or proof.[79]—If a plea on which issue is joined is proved, the issue must be determined for defendant, whether the plea is good or bad.[80] An omission in the complaint may be supplied in the answer,[81] but failure to state a cause of action in the petition cannot be cured by averments in the reply.[82] Error in overruling a demurrer to defendant's plea in abatement, and a motion to strike, was cured by overruling the plea and denying the motion.[83]

Aider by verdict.—All defects in a complaint or other pleading stating a cause of action are cured by verdict,[84] except failure to state a cause of action.[85] The

69. Walker v. Evans, 98 Mo. App. 301, 71 S. W. 1086. Error in permitting an amended petition is waived by pleading over after the motion to strike out is overruled. Cohn v. Souders, 175 Mo. 455, 75 S. W. 413. Reply, after motion to strike out new matter in an answer as both defense and counterclaim is overruled, waives the objection. Dwyer v. Rohan, 99 Mo. App. 120, 73 S. W. 384.

70. A stipulation between the parties, that defendant's motion to make the complaint more specific should be overruled, works a waiver of the motion, where defendant afterward answers. Cerussite Min. Co. v. Anderson [Colo. App.] 75 Pac. 158. Error in denying a motion to make the petition more specific is waived by answer. Ida County Sav. Bank v. Seidensticker [Iowa] 92 N. W. 862. Where an amended petition is filed after a motion to the petition is overruled and exception taken, answer by defendant without renewing his motion waives any error in overruling the motion. Hunter v. Lang [Neb.] 98 N. W. 690.

73. Where a demurrer to a complaint of one paragraph is sustained, a pleading filed by plaintiff, purporting to be "his amended second paragraph of complaint" filed under leave to file such a pleading, will be treated as a complete amended complaint superseding the original, and a waiver of error in sustaining the demurrer [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 345, 662]. Worl v. Republic I. & S. Co., 31 Ind. App. 16, 66 N. E. 1021.

74. An election to amend the petition after demurrer sustained waives error in sustaining the demurrer. Davis v. Boyer [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1002. Filing an amended and substituted petition on leave, after demurrer to the petition is sustained, waives any error in the ruling. McKee v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 97 N. W. 69.

Contra, plaintiff's taking leave to amend after a demurrer was sustained to the petition did not waive error in the ruling on the demurrer, and he may be allowed to withdraw the leave and stand on the petition, where the leave to amend was withdrawn by the court and election entered to stand on the petition. Farmers' & M. State Bank v. School Tp., 118 Iowa, 540, 92 N. W. 676.

75. Obtaining leave to file and filing an amended complaint waives error in sustaining demurrer to the original complaint. Reed v. Parker [Wash.] 74 Pac. 61.

76. Taking leave to file and filing a further amended answer waives any error in striking matter from the amended answer. Ott v. Elmore, 67 Kan. 853, 73 Pac. 898. Filing an amended answer waives any error in striking paragraphs from the answer. Rawlings v. Casey [Colo. App.] 73 Pac. 1090.

pleading will be liberally construed to maintain it.[86] Failure to file a contract or copy thereof with the cross complaint thereon is cured by verdict for cross complainant.[87] Failure of a complaint against executors to compel payment of a legacy to allege that there is realty charged with its payment, or that there is sufficient personalty to pay it, is not cured by findings and judgment for plaintiff.[88] After verdict an answer to which no demurrer was filed is good.[89] If an insufficient reply is not assailed by motion, it is good after verdict.[90] Plaintiff's failure

A petition on an insurance policy liable to demurrer for failure to state value and ownership of the property is cured by verdict. Gustin v. Concordia F. Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 373. Formal defects but not absence of necessary allegations in a complaint will be cured by findings of the court; they are a verdict under B. & C. Comp. § 159. Ferguson v. Reiger, 43 Or. 505, 73 Pac. 1040. Joinder in issue on title and judgment cures any defect in a petition as to title by adverse possession. Hall v. Roberts, 24 Ky. L. R. 2362, 74 S. W. 199. Failure to allege in a complaint for money lent, a promise in direct terms to repay, or a breach thereof, is cured by a verdict for plaintiff. Kitchen v. Holmes, 42 Or. 252, 70 Pac. 830. Meager averments in a petition as to the cause of injury proven on trial are cured by verdict. Covington S. & Mfg. Co. v. Clark, 25 Ky. L. R. 694, 76 S. W. 348. Defects in a petition against a city for injuries from a defective street, in failing to aver notice of the defect to the city, are cured by a verdict for plaintiff where the question was given to the jury. Louisville v. Brewer's Adm'r, 24 Ky. L. R. 1671, 72 S. W. 9. An allegation that a city negligently permitted defects to remain in a sidewalk is sufficient, after verdict, as an allegation of knowledge of the defect for sufficient time, reasonable for its repair. McLean v. Kan. City [Mo. App.] 75 S. W. 173. A complaint of an incompetent by guardian alleging an order of appointment and qualification is sufficient, after verdict, though it fails to plead issuance of letters of guardianship. Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. 634, 70 Pac. 861. Lack of essential averments in a declaration in assumpsit is cured by the verdict, if the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, and no objection was made that there was a variance. Nashua Sav. Bank v. Anglo-American L., M. & A. Co., 189 U. S. 221, 47 Law. Ed. 782. Where a petition alleges that plaintiff is the mother of the person injured, that he is a minor, and that his father was dead at time of the injury, and that she has lost, and will lose his services and earnings, the verdict cures any defect in stating the relation of master and servant between herself and son. Scamell v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1021. An objection that a complaint did not allege a fact is not available after verdict, evidence of the fact having been received without objection. Gallamore v. Olympia [Wash.] 75 Pac. 978; Yazoo & M. to reply, thereby failing to completely make up the issues, cannot be raised after verdict.[91] A judgment by the judge of a city court, in Georgia, without a jury, has all the force of a verdict as amending defects in pleadings.[92]

§ 12. Time and order of pleadings. General rules.[93]—A petition for removal of a cause should be filed before defendant is required to file an affidavit of defense.[94] Failure to plead or demur to an amended declaration within ten days places the cause at issue.[95] Pleas in abatement and bar may be filed simultaneously; the plea in abatement to be first tried.[96] Defendant must put in or file his plea and the record must show the filing and the character of the plea on which issue is joined before jury trial can be had in a common law action.[97] Pleas in abatement or exceptions to the petition in the nature of such a plea must be filed before answer to the merits whether the answer raises issues of law or of fact.[98] Allowance of the statutory period to defendant to file pleas to a count added to the declaration is discretionary where no new cause of action is added.[99] If plaintiff fails to file an affidavit with his declaration in assumpsit, he cannot file such affidavit after defendant has appeared and filed a plea of nonassumpsit, and have defendant's plea stricken because not accompanied by affidavit.[1] Before Acts 1902, p. 117, failure to file a defense in the city court of Atlanta on or before the first day of the term to which the suit was returnable prevented any defense even by leave of court.[2] Generally all demurrers to petitions must be filed at the first term.[3] Special demurrers not filed at the appearance term cannot be considered.[4] If the petition is so defective that recovery cannot be had, an oral motion to dismiss in the nature of a general demurrer may be made at any time before verdict.[5] A motion to strike a cause from the short cause calendar must be made in apt time.[6] A motion to quash service of a citation showing on its face that it was filed subject to defendant's plea of privilege is not in due order of pleading.[7]

Pleading out of time and leave to so plead.[8]—Extension of time to answer,[9] or to file plea,[10] or to present an amended affidavit of merits, is discretionary;[11]

likewise grant or refusal to rescind an order allowing pleas to be filed.[12] Defendant, against whom judgment cannot be rendered until issues are determined between plaintiff and other defendants, is properly permitted to answer after expiration of the time to answer.[13] A rule extending defendant's time to plead may be revoked for good cause shown but only on notice unless necessity demands otherwise.[14] On vacation of a rule extending his time to plead, defendant has the rest of the day to file a plea.[15] An answer filed after time without leave is properly stricken out though it was error to refuse leave to file it.[16] Appearance by defendant, thirty days after service, for purpose of dismissing the suit, is insufficient, without plaintiff's consent, to give him an extension of the statutory period, to appear and plead in the action.[17] That amended pleas, orally ordered by the court on trial to be filed as necessary to raise the issues, were not filed, under a rule entered nunc pro tunc, until after judgment on the verdict, will not avoid the judgment.[18] Where defendant postponed filing a plea of accord and satisfaction until the second trial was called and then interposed it for delay or to place plaintiff at a disadvantage, it was properly stricken on motion.[19] In a suit in a county court an ex parte order from a supreme court justice extending time to answer 20 days is valid.[20] Leave to file a plea of limitations during trial may be refused though a plea in writing is presented where it is not supported by an affidavit or other showing of excuse for not filing earlier.[21] Delay of nearly a year before demurring to an answer filed warrants refusal of the application, the right to demur having expired.[22] The sufficiency of excuses for default in pleading is shown in the note.[23] An agreement between parties for extension of the time to plead is enforceable,[24] but, if without consideration, is revocable at will.[25]

§ 13. Filing, service, and withdrawal. Filing.—Failure of the clerk to mark exhibits "Filed" as was his duty will not prejudice the filing party.[26] A paper filed by lodging it with the clerk is filed though the clerk's indorsement is not given where the clerk and court have treated it as filed.[27] Giving an answer to the adverse party is equivalent to filing where he afterward uses it.[28] Filing of a complaint stating facts sufficient to authorize judgment for plaintiff will give jurisdiction though there is no prayer for money judgment.[29] Incorporation of the agreement constituting the cause of action into the body of declaration filed at commencement of the suit is a filing of it.[30]

Service.[31]—An order striking out parts of an answer so that it is materially reformed should direct service of the amended answer.[32] Where, before an additional defendant was brought in, the complaint had been amended, an order for publication directing service of the amended and supplemental summons and of the amended complaint on such defendant is proper.[33] Where defendant in New York served his answer by mail, he may serve an amended answer in less than 40 days thereafter,[34] and plaintiff has 40 days in which to serve an amended complaint.[35] Where defendants failed to appear in the statutory time or demand a copy of the complaint until after twenty days from service of summons, they were not entitled to an order compelling service of the complaint, their remedy being to open their default.[36] Service of a reply to an amended answer should not be directed when the order granting leave to serve the amended answer ordered that the trial should not be delayed thereby and most of the facts and defenses in the answer, as well as plaintiff's contentions concerning them were presented in a former proceeding.[37] A want of fulness as to nature of plaintiff's demand in a citation is not prejudicial to defendant where a copy of the petition was attached and made a part thereof.[38] Where one is made defendant and duly served, he is charged with notice of answer by his co-defendants if it is filed within the legal period.[39]

Withdrawal.—Pleadings may be withdrawn in proper cases to allow other pleadings, on terms prescribed by the court.[40] Withdrawal of an admission in a pleading is sufficiently shown for later proceedings by entry on the judge's calendar; withdrawal before trial nullifies its conclusiveness though it does not destroy its force as evidence.[41] An order allowing withdrawal of an answer and filing of another merely eliminated the first as a pleading. It cannot be taken from the

40. Leave to withdraw demurrer and to answer on payment of costs. Cowen v. Rouss, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 641. Uses for whom a suit was brought by another may enter a restraxit and withdraw from the case if nothing appears in the answer preventing such action. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Nisbet [Ga.] 46 S. E. 444. Where an application by defendant to withdraw his demurrer and answer that he may object to technical irregularity of service, will only delay the trial, it will be refused. Barnes v. W. U. Tel. Co., 120 Fed. 550. Withdrawal of a plea to the merits is properly refused for the purpose of interposing a plea insisting on the statutory privilege of being sued in another county. Little Bros. F. & P. Co. v. Wilmott [Fla.] 32 So. 808. Where a defendant's motion granted to strike out allegations of the complaint was reversed for failure to join her co-defendants, she should be allowed to withdraw her answer to the complaint as it stood after the motion was granted and be given a reasonable time to answer the complaint as reinstated, requiring defendant to give information concerning her co-defendants so that they may be brought into court. Brown v. Fish, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 573.

files but may be shown against defendants as to admissions contained therein.[42] Sustaining a demurrer to a count in a declaration containing three assignments of breach of contract because of failure to answer one is not affected by later withdrawal of such assignment.[43] Where no action is taken on a plea in abatement, it will be considered abandoned.[44] Abandoned pleadings containing admissions against interest are admissible against the pleader though neither signed nor verified.[45]

§ 14. Issues made, proof, and variance. Completion of issues.[46]—Where the petition does not fully cover issues submitted but the answer specifically covers them and is denied by plaintiff, the issues are properly made.[47] A cause may be submitted without waiting for issues to be formally completed where the action had long been pending, the parties had ample time to prepare and no one was prejudiced.[48]

The general issue and general denials.—Any evidence tending directly to contradict averments of the pleading to which it is opposed may be admitted under a general denial.[49] Where plaintiff's counsel allowed a certain issue to be litigated, it is immaterial that the issue was not set out in the notice attached to the plea of general issue.[50] Matters provable under the general issue or denial in particular causes have been collected in the notes.[51]

50. Sommers v. Myers [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 812.

51. Matters provable: Set-off must be pleaded or interposed under notice but recoupment may be had under the general issue. Lloyd & Co. v. Manufacturers' & M. W. Co., 102 Ill. App. 551. In an action for wrongful death, the plea of "not guilty" puts in issue all the essential averments of the declaration. This plea held not to admit defendant's negligence in construction or maintenance of wires. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Floyd [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 795. All evidence tending to show no cause of action, including a release, may be given under the general issue in actions ex delicto. Mattoon G. L. & C. Co. v. Dolan, 105 Ill. App. 1. Invalidity of a contract because of the statute of frauds may be shown under the general denial. Ind. Trust Co. v. Finitzer, 160 Ind. 647, 67 N. E. 520. In an action for injuries received while accompanying live stock on a train, a provision in the contract of carriage requiring plaintiff to ride in the caboose, if a defense, may be shown under the general denial. Bolton v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 172 Mo. 92, 72 S. W. 530. In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover alleged preferential payments, defendant may show that the payments were made by his wife out of her separate estate, under a general denial. Goode v. Elwood Lodge No. 166, 160 Ind. 251, 66 N. E. 742. Where a lessor alleged an oral lease for a year and the lessee pleaded a general denial and an indefinite hiring, the general denial put in issue the question whether the rent was due under a yearly lease. Anhalt v. Lightstone, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 822. Evidence that the signature is a forgery may be shown under the general issue in an action on a note. Farmers' & M. Bank v. Hunter, 97 Md. 148. A special reply to an answer of adverse possession in foreclosure that a new promise had been made preventing the limitation is demurrable since such matter could be proved under plaintiff's denial in the reply. Northrop v. Chase [Conn.] 56 Atl. 518. Where the general issue was pleaded in assumpsit before adoption of rule 7, evidence of a release before commencement of the action is admissible. Cir. Ct. Rule 7, providing that release must be set forth by notice attached to defendant's plea. Cleveland v. Rothschild [Mich.] 94 N. W. 184. Invalidity of a contract sued upon under the statute of frauds may be shown under a general denial. Riif v. Riibe [Neb.] 94 N. W. 517. The defense of the fellow-servant rule can be made without a special plea. Vinson v. Morning News, 118 Ga. 655. Defendant may urge the invalidity of the contract sued upon as appearing from plaintiff's evidence though he pleaded only the general denial. McClure v. Ullman, 102 Mo. App. 697, 77 S. W. 325. Evidence that plaintiff received rents and profits of decedent's land to which the latter was entitled may be shown under the general denial in an action against his estate for money received. Dunton v. Dawley [Iowa] 98 N. W. 307.

Matters not provable: The issue of failure of consideration is not raised under a general denial. Nunn v. Jordan, 31 Wash. 506, 72 Pac. 124. An offer in evidence of an

Special issues and special denials.—Special damages resulting from an injury may be shown where alleged in the petition.[52] Estoppel in pais not being pleaded, an agreement to make no claim on which defendant relied is inadmissible.[53] Testimony competent to sustain either of two causes of action in the petition is admissible.[54] Testimony responsive to an allegation of a pleading may be admitted though the allegation was improperly allowed to remain in the pleading.[55] Particular issues and their proof are shown in the notes.[56] The rule that allegations of the complaint not admitted, denied, or explained are to be taken as true does not apply to amendments to the complaint during the trial.[57]

Allegations requiring proof.[58]—Items of damages unproved cannot be recovered abandoned count declaring on a contract of defendant to insure goods stored is properly excluded as immaterial where the issue was on a count for goods sold and a general denial. Brierre v. Cereal Sugar Co., 102 Mo. App. 622, 77 S. W. 111. A defense in trespass de bonis asportatis of settlement with defendant's co-trespasser cannot be shown under the general issue. Sunlin v. Skutt [Mich.] 94 N. W. 733.

52. Injury to kidneys resulting from confinement because of a broken leg. Kircher v. Larchwood, 120 Iowa, 578, 95 N. W. 184. In an action for personal injuries, evidence of nurse hire is admissible under an allegation in the petition, that plaintiff was compelled to hire nurses though damages were claimed in a lump sum only. Moore v. S. W. Mo. Elec. R. Co., 100 Mo. App. 665, 75 S. W. 176. Under a complaint for personal injuries alleging certain injuries to an arm and a foot and that plaintiff received other dangerous and permanent injury, evidence of injury to his nerves is admissible. Kappus v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 13. Proof of rheumatic neurosis resulting from concussion, or the shock, or from fright is admissible under a complaint for personal injuries alleging bruises to the limbs, wrenching and spraining of the back, and a severe contusion of the muscles and nerves. Maynard v. Or. R. Co., 43 Or. 63, 72 Pac. 590. Where plaintiff in an action for injuries alleges internal injuries about his head and other pains, he may show that his eye has been affected since the action. Stembridge v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 440.

56. Evidence admissible in action for damages from fire by railroad company under issue as to cause of fire. MacDonald v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co. [R. I.] 54 Atl. 795. Complaint in action for damage to live stock in carriage as setting out delays by defendant causing injury with such particularity as to prevent proof by plaintiff of other delays. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Griffith [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 438. That a lease not alleged in the complaint is alleged in the replication as a part of the same transaction does not make it admissible without proof of execution. Thompson F. & M. Co. v. Glass, 136 Ala. 648. Allegations in a petition that both plaintiffs entered into the contract sued on will prevent their denial thereof. Cousins v. Bowling, 100 Mo. App. 452, 74 S. W. 168. Where a petition for injuries inflicted by a street railway alleges unlawful and excessive speed in violation of an ordinance, the ordinance is admissible. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Bryant, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 437, 70 S. W. 1015. A verified plea denying execution of a written instrument is not necessary to render admissible a contemporaneous letter explaining the contract; Prac. Act, § 34 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, p. 1341, c. 110) dispensing with proof of execution of an instrument declared on unless execution is denied by a verified plea. Gould v. Magnolia Metal Co., 207 Ill. 172, 69 N. E. 896. Where defendant denies execution of a promissory note sued on, expert evidence may be given as to the signature and the signatures on defendant's pleadings. Tower v. Whip, 53 W. Va. 158. Where verbal negotiations between parties are afterward reduced to writing and are pleaded in a reply as defense to an answer, evidence of fraud or mistake will be received without further pleading. Martens v. Pittock [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1038. Where the issue tendered by the answer and made by the pleadings was that decedent's direct employer was an employe of defendants, in an action for death, who operated the train, and therefore deceased was a fellow-servant of the train men, evidence could be given to show that the contractor defendant was not operating the train. Pierce v. Brennan, 88 Minn. 50, 92 N. W. 507. A petition for injuries from a defective sidewalk, charging that the city allowed it to become out of repair and to remain so is sufficient on general denial to admit proof either of actual notice of the defect by the city or of such length of time as to impute notice. Guthrie v. Finch [Okl.] 75 Pac. 288. Where an answer in an action to recover property sold on execution against a bankrupt admitted its value in a certain amount, plaintiff may show that it brought less than that amount on the execution sale. Gabriel v. Tonner, 138 Cal. 63, 70 Pac. 1021. Where in action for rent, defendant pleaded payment to a third person, plaintiff replied specially ignoring the plea, and defendant without demurring joined issue on the replication, the plea of payment was no longer in issue so that evidence thereunder could be excluded. Linam v. Jones, 134 Ala. 570.

57. Hudson v. Hudson [Ga.] 46 S. E. 874.

58. Particular allegations requiring proof: Sufficiency of evidence to show defendant to be a street railway company under allegations of petition. Johnson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 275. Illegality of a contract (Horton v. Rohlff [Neb.] 95 N. W. 36; Hillsboro Oil Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 336), or payment as a defense must be proved.

though alleged.[59] An averment laid under a videlicet need not be proved precisely as laid.[60] An answer in avoidance of tort puts defendants to the burden of proof.[61] Where an answer denies all allegations of a complaint except those specifically admitted therein, plaintiff must prove an allegation not admitted.[62] Where three of six counts of a declaration for personal injuries charged general negligence that other counts charged special negligence which was not proved is immaterial.[63] An allegation unnecessary to plaintiff's action will not be ground for direction of verdict for defendant because not sustained by proof since it may be rejected as surplusage.[64] To entitle a party to a verdict or finding on a plea tendering an immaterial issue, every fact alleged in such plea must be proved as alleged.[65]

Variance.—The proof must substantially conform to the averments made.[66] Plaintiff need not prove all facts pleaded in the petition but only enough to constitute a cause of action.[67] Plaintiff stating a good cause of action in his declaration and sustaining it by evidence cannot be nonsuited.[68] Where evidence showing assumption of risk in an action for injuries to a servant was given by plaintiff and admitted without objection, defendant may avail himself of it without pleading it.[69] Failure of the petition to allege a necessary fact will not prevent proof thereof where the objection was waived by answering over after demurrer overruled.[70] A variance amounts to failure of proof only when the allegation is unproved in its entire scope and meaning.[71] There is a complete variance where the allegations to which plaintiff's proof is directed are unproved in their entire scope and meaning.[72] A variance between pleadings and proof is not shown merely because proof of essential averments is not extended to unnecessary averments made in connection with them.[73] Surprise as ground of nonsuit cannot be urged as to evidence following allegations of the answer.[74] Where defendant did not show by affidavit how he was misled by variance between the petition and the proof, it was immaterial.[75] Where a variance does not amount to a failure of proof and no objection is made at the trial, the variance is waived.[76] An objection as to variance between the declaration and the proof will be overruled where it fails to point out the variance.[77] Particular instances of variance are collected in the notes.[78]

PLEDGES.

§ 1. Definition and nature.—A pledge is a delivery of personal property as security for a debt or engagement. Unlike a lien, a pledge gives the right not out in cashing time checks for defendant and such evidence cannot be admitted. Hefferlin v. Karlman [Mont.] 74 Pac. 201. Testimony of a different contract than the one pleaded in the answer is properly disregarded in directing verdict for plaintiff where defendant did not request an amendment to conform to the proof. Winchester v. Joslyn [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1079. Plaintiff cannot, over objections, prove an unconditional promise to pay an entire debt with interest under an allegation that defendant offered to pay the debt without interest. Civ. Code, art. 1805. Martin Davie & Co. v. Carville, 110 La. 862. Proof that defendant was to give something in addition to property and received in consideration other property in addition to plaintiff's premises is a variance when the count of the declaration relies on an exchange of property between the parties. Cassem v. Williams, 104 Ill. App. 504. Mere proof that a broker secured a customer able and willing to purchase will not support an action on a contract for commissions for sale of land. McDonnell v. Stephenson [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 766. Proof of a shipment under a special contract will not sustain a complaint for breach of the common-law duty of a carrier in carriage of live stock. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland [Ind.] 69 N. E. 138. In a suit for damages ex contractu accrued at time of suit, evidence of subsequent damages cannot be shown unless an amendment to the pleadings has been allowed. Jamison v. Charles F. Cullom & Co., 110 La. 781. Proof that conveyances were made before debts were incurred will not sustain a decree on a petition alleging that they were in fraud of existing creditors. Ayers v. Wolcott [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1036. Where defendants in assumpsit against several as partners filed no plea denying the partnership alleged, error in admitting evidence denying the partnership was not cured by the statute of jeofails. Stony Creek Lumber Co. v. Fields [Va.] 45 S. E. 797.

Proof held not variant or immaterial: Allegation of redemption and proof of purchase of the certificate of sale not material variance. Whittern v. Krick, 31 Ind. App. 577, 68 N. E. 694. In pleading a judgment it is no variance to omit portions vacated on appeal. State v. Clinton County Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295. Proof that plaintiff was injured by a lurch in an elevated train while stepping from the car to the platform supports a declaration that the train was suddenly started whereby plaintiff was thrown to the platform. Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Shaw, 203 Ill. 39, 67 N. E. 374. Where a complaint for money lent alleged a loan in 1898, proof showing a loan in 1896 is an immaterial variance where the fact of the loan was admitted ownership only of the fund being in controversy. Kitchen v. Holmes, 42 Or. 252, 70 Pac. 830. Where a complaint was on a quantum meruit, proof that labor and materials were furnished under an express contract is not ground for dismissal, defendant's counsel disclaiming misleading prejudice [Code Civ. Proc. § 2943]. Lundine v. Callaghan, 82 App. Div.]N. Y.] 621. Variance between the terms of a contract sued on as given in the complaint and as shown by a copy attached is only an ambiguity which is removed by a finding that the contract was as set out in the copy. Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 692, 75 Pac. 564. Where plaintiff alleged total destruction of his property by poisonous fumes from a smelter, he may recover for partial destruction without variance [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4949]. Sterrett v. Northport M. & S. Co., 30 Wash. 164, 70 Pac. 266. Variance between petition and deeds in breach of covenant by stating the name of a railroad company as G. R. Railroad company instead of G. R. Branch Railroad company in the deeds held immaterial [Code, §§ 129, 130]. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Wilson, 25 Ky. L. R. 525, 76 S. W. 138. Where a declaration states that plaintiff sues for his own benefit as trustee and the action is on a written contract between the parties, there is no variance since the statement as to benefit of plaintiff as trustee was surplusage. Consumers' Ice Co. v. Jennings, 100 Va. 719. A complaint on a fire insurance policy describing the property as a certain lot in M's addition, while the policy described it as "on" a lot of the same number on M's fifth addition, is good though the variance may be ground for objection to introduction of the policy. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist, 31 Ind. App. 390, 68 N. E. 188. Under a declaration for personal injuries alleging that plaintiff was a carpenter and contractor, evidence of his general earning capacity before the accident may be shown. Chicago City R. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087. Where a petition misrecites a contract and the answer recites it truly, the trial proceeding on the latter re-only to retain the property but also to sell it upon default.[79] It differs from a chattel mortgage in that it merely gives a special property in the nature of a lien on the thing pledged while the title remains in the pledgor.[80] A contract in writing is not necessary for its creation; and there must be a delivery and continued possession of the subject-matter.[81]

§ 2. Right to make.—A pledge may be made not only by the owner of the property, but by a third person with his consent,[82] or without the owner's assent if he has given the pledgor the indicia of title and apparent authority to pledge,[83] or if he afterwards ratifies the unauthorized pledge.[84] One having a partial interest may pledge that interest if he is in a position to make a proper delivery of the thing pledged,[85] and a pledgee, having an interest in the property pledged to the extent of the debt thereby secured, may pledge his interest subject to the pledgor's right to redeem.[86] But while the pledgor need not have the absolute ownership, he must have possession of the property in order to create a valid pledge.[87] Even where a pledge is invalid through a lack of title or want of authority in the pledgor, the attempted pledge may, under certain circumstances, establish a lien in favor of the pledgee.[88]

cital with plaintiff's acceptance so that defendant is not misled, variance between the petition and proof is immaterial [Code, § 138]. Chicago House Wrecking Co. v. Stewart Lumber Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1009. Negotiations between the parties for delay in performance of a contract proved by defendant in an action on the contract do not so modify it as to prevent recovery by defendant on his counterclaim for failure of defendant to perform part of the contract as agreed. 82. Springfield Co. v. Ely [Fla.] 32 So. 892. A wife may pledge her property to secure her husband's debt, but a mere statement of a husband that he is authorized to pledge his wife's stock is insufficient to prove his authority to do so. Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200. The fact that a party authorized to pledge another's certificate of stock for payment of a specific debt due by him also pledges the same for other debts due by him to the pledgee does not affect the validity of the pledge for the authorized debt. Springfield Co. v. Ely [Fla.] 32 So. 892. A trustee under a testamentary trust which provides that the trustee shall, as far as practicable, allow the cestui to have the management and possession of the personal property, has authority to entrust shares of stock to the cestui with power to pledge them for a loan for the benefit of the estate. Freeman v. Bristol Sav. Bank [Conn.] 56 Atl. 527.

83. The owner of a note who by written assignment and actual transfer has clothed the bailee with apparent ownership for the purpose of suing thereon is estopped to question the validity of such bailee's pledge of the note. May v. Martin [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 840. Where the assignor of a chose in action delivers the same to another for the purpose of securing a loan for the assignor's benefit, he has clothed the person to whom he has entrusted the chose in action with authority to agree upon the terms and conditions of the pledge and he is bound thereby. In re Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 531. Where the owner of a certificate of stock signed a transfer in blank thereon and delivered it to another so that he might pledge it for a loan, such unrestricted endorsement and delivery without any attempt for a long period of time to regain possession or assert control amounted to an agreement that it might be continually held by the person to whom it was given for such use as he might make of it in a renewal or increase of the loan or otherwise. Cox v. Dowd, 133 N. C. 537.

A pledge of stock held on margin by a broker in order to raise the money to carry out the contract of purchase he has made on behalf of his customer is not a conversion of the stock, though the broker pledged the stock for more than its owner owed to redeem it. Tompkins v. Morton Trust Co., 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 274.

87. Commercial Bank v. Flowers, 116 Ga. 219. Collateral notes which are not in the possession of either pledgor or pledgee and are owned by a third person cannot be pledged to secure an existing debt, since possession is the essence of a pledge. Storts v. Mills, 93 Mo. App. 201.

88. Where a loan was made in good faith for the benefit of an estate on the security of a pledge of stocks, the pledgee cannot be held liable for conversion of the stocks, without repayment of the loan, though the pledge was not valid. § 3. Property subject to be pledged.—Every kind of personal property in existence and capable of delivery may be pledged. A pledge may therefore be made not only of ordinary goods and chattels, but of unsecured promissory notes,[89] mortgage notes,[90] shares of stock,[91] corporate bonds,[92] an insurance policy,[93] a contract of indemnity,[94] or a chose in action.[95]

§ 4. The contract and its requisites.—A pledge is created by a delivery of property as security for a debt. No writing is necessary, as, in the absence of an express written contract, the law will imply a contract.[96] In case of any ambiguity in the contract, the nature of the transaction and the intention of the parties shall determine whether or not it shall be construed as a pledge.[97] Though the property is conveyed by a written assignment absolute on its face, it is competent to show by parol evidence that the instrument was in fact intended as a pledge.[98] But where an unambiguous written instrument shows that the transaction was a pledge, parol evidence that the property was sold absolutely will not be admitted.[99] A pledge to secure a loan bearing a usurious rate of interest is valid to the extent of the debtor's lawful indebtedness, but otherwise will be treated as a nullity.[1] The validity of the contract of pledge must be determined

97. The relation between a broker and a customer who buys stock on margin is that of pledgor and pledgee. Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233. Where a guarantor guaranteed to a bank the face of all drafts for certain goods drawn by a certain shipper with bill of lading attached, it was for the jury to determine from all the facts of the case whether the contract of guaranty meant that all bills of lading accompanying the drafts should be transferred to the bank as a pledge of the goods against which the drafts were drawn. First Nat. Bank v. Bowers, 141 Cal. 253, 74 Pac. 856. On the issues whether there was an indebtedness and whether the delivery of certain mortgage notes was by way of pledge to secure the said indebtedness or merely an accommodation lending, a contemporaneous written promise to deliver the notes as collateral is very strong corroborative evidence of the existence of a debt and of a delivery by way of pledge. Meyer v. Moss, 110 La. 132. A deposit of money to be drawn against by the depositor, with an agreement for a return of the unexpended balance or for the application of the same as part payment of the purchase price of certain property in case the same should be bought by the depositor from the depositary of the fund, was intended merely as security for the payment of the purchase price, and not as an additional sum to be paid in excess of the purchase price. Leupold v. Weeks, 96 Md. 280. In case of dispute it is for the jury to determine whether a voucher in possession of a bank was held as collateral for a note. Bank of Staten Island v. Silvie, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 465. Where a bank advanced money to a dealer for the purchase of certain property which was afterwards consigned to a broker for sale, the bank, as against the dealer and all persons having notice, was entitled to the net proceeds of the sale as security for its advances. First State Bank v. Thuet, 88 Minn. 364, 93 N. W. 1. Where a bank agreed to pay checks drawn by a purchaser of cotton for the purchase price upon receipt of the bill of lading therefor it had a lien on the cotton as pledgee for the sum advanced and was entitled to the extent of such lien to receive the proceeds of the sale of the cotton. First Nat. Bank v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex.] 77 S. W. 410.

An instrument reciting the sale and delivery of certain promissory notes with a provision for their return to the vendor after a certain sum has been collected thereon is evidence that the transaction was a pledge of the notes and not an absolute sale. Johnson v. Zweigart, 24 Ky. L. R. 1323, 71 S. W. 445.

by the laws of the state where the pledged property is situated,[2] and an action for the performance or enforcement of the contract must also be brought in that state.[3] A delivery of the pledged property and its possession by the pledgee is essential to the validity of a contract of pledge.[4] In the case of heavy cumbersome property, setting apart or symbolical delivery is sufficient.[5] Where a third person agrees to hold possession of the property as agent for the pledgee, there is a sufficient delivery to create a pledge,[6] though such agent is an employee of the pledgor, and though the goods remain on the premises of the pledgor, if they are under the agent's control.[7] A constructive delivery, which will be as effectual as an actual manual delivery of the goods, may be made by the delivery of a document of title which puts the pledgee in possession of the goods, such as a bill of lading[8] or a warehouse receipt.[9] Incorporeal property such as negotiable instruments, stocks in corporations, and choses in action generally, being incapable of actual manual delivery can not generally be pledged without a written transfer of title.[10] Unless a transfer of stock is required on the books of the corporation,[11]

2. Where a corporation of one state with its principal place of business therein issues, as contracts of pledge, warehouse receipts for certain grain in its own elevators in another state, the laws of such other state where the grain is situated must determine whether a pledge of grain by the issuance of a warehouse receipt by a warehouseman for his own grain to secure his own debt is valid. In re St. Paul & K. C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N. W. 218.

3. In re St. Paul & K. C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N. W. 218. An action to set aside a pledge of mortgage notes may be brought in the court within whose jurisdiction the pledgor and the mortgaged property are found, though the pledgee resides in another state and retains the notes in his keeping. Meyer v. Moss, 110 La. 132. But it has been held that the sale of pledged railroad stocks need not be made in the county where the railroad is situated, especially if the note secured by the stocks is dated and made payable in another county, where also the maker resides. Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115. A pledgee seeking in equity to recover a debt due him from one party by the sale of property of another pledged for its payment is not obliged to make the debtor a party defendant where he is beyond the jurisdiction of the court and no relief is prayed against him. Springfield Co. v. Ely [Fla.] 32 So. 892.

5. Where the intention to transfer is also evidenced by a bill of sale, and if the signs are removed without the pledgee's knowledge and subsequently replaced, and if no rights of third parties have intervened, the pledgee's lien is not lost. First Nat. Bank v. Pa. Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 968. But a mere agreement to transfer property by way of pledge where the property remains on the premises of the debtor, and no steps are taken by the attachment of placards or otherwise, to apprise the community of any change in the title is ineffectual to constitute a pledge. Chitwood v. Lanyon Zinc Co., 93 Mo. App. 225. An attempted pledge of certain property, which is ineffective through a lack of proper delivery does not invalidate the title of a subsequent vendee taking with notice of the prior transaction. Id. Delivery of warehouse receipt to pledgee sufficient. Proctor v. Shotwell [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 728.

Promissory notes deposited with the cashier of a bank as collateral for the benefit of certain creditors. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Peabody [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 611. Where the pledgor desires to secure several creditors and delivers the property to one of the number to hold the same as security for his own claim and those of the other creditors, the pledgeholder takes the property as the agent of all such creditors, and the pledge is valid as to all. Hoffman House v. Foote, 172 N. Y. 348, 65 N. E. 169.

But such a receipt conveys to the intended pledgee no interest in the property when the same is not in possession of the warehouseman or the party who undertakes to pledge it. Commercial Bank v. Flowers, 116 Ga. 219. In some states it is provided by statute that the warehouse receipt must be given by a public warehouseman other than the pledgor, in order to constitute a proper delivery by way of pledge. Kentucky Furnace Co.'s Trustee v. City Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 28, 75 S. W. 848. Construing statutes of other states. In re St. Paul & K. C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N. W. 218. But in other states a warehouseman's delivery of receipts for his own property stored in his warehouse as collateral for his own debts constitutes a valid pledge. Millhiser Mfg. Co. v. Gallego Mills Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 760; In re St. Paul & K. C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N. W. 218.

10. And in an action by the pledgee such written transfer must be proved, when it is neither admitted nor denied in the defendant's pleadings. Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115.

11. And even where such a statute exists, the corporation alone can take advantage of it, and the lien of a pledgee of stock transferred to him by endorsement and delivery is a pledge of stock by a delivery of the certificate with a power of attorney to make a transfer upon the books of the corporation, or with an endorsement of the certificate, will be valid.[12] And a pledge of stock by mere delivery of the certificate without endorsement or other written assignment, though ineffectual as against the intervening rights of third parties, is valid as against the pledgor.[13] After delivery, possession must be retained by the pledgee, but the pledgee does not, as against the pledgor, lose possession of the property by making a subpledge of it,[14] or by employing the pledgor as his agent to sell the goods held in pledge.[15]

§ 5. Rights, duties, and liabilities of pledgor.—The pledgor retains the general property in the thing pledged, and if it is unlawfully sold he can avoid the sale and resume title.[16] The right to vote pledged shares of stock remains in the pledgor until foreclosure.[17] The pledgor upon payment or tender of the debt, or satisfaction of the engagement secured by the pledge, is entitled to the return of the property.[18] And when the pledgee has wrongfully applied the property to the discharge of another creditor's claim, the pledgor is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose indebtedness has been paid from the proceeds of the pledgor's property.[19] A bill to redeem the property must be brought within a reasonable time, as the pledgor's rights will be barred by laches.[20]

16. Where certain notes payable to the husband of a married woman were deposited as additional collateral for a debt due by her, and where such notes were afterwards seized in the hands of the pledgee and sold by a creditor of the husband, it was competent for the wife to prove by a fair preponderance of evidence that the notes though payable to the husband really belonged to her, and thereby to render the sale void and resume her title to the notes. Sallinger v. Perry [N. C.] 45 S. E. 360.

17. And where the pledgee appears as the owner of the stock on the books of the corporation, a court of equity may enjoin the pledgee from voting the shares pledged in prejudice of the rights of the pledgor. Haskell v. Read [Neb.] 93 N. W. 997.

18. Nor is the validity of the pledge affected by the fact that the pledgee's agent fails to give any receipt to the pledgor. Dunn v. Train [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 221. The pledgor is not entitled to a reconveyance from the original or sub grantee of the property pledged until payment in full of the debt thereby secured. Cumming v. McDade, 118 Ga. 612. The relation between the broker and a customer who buys stock on margin is that of pledgor and pledgee, and the customer is entitled to immediate delivery of the stock on payment of all advances by the broker. Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233. Where bonds are deposited as collateral for notes in which no provision is made for a pro tanto release of the collateral upon partial payment, the pledgor is not entitled to the return of any portion of the collateral until the whole debt is paid. Goepper & Co. v. Phoenix Brew. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 84, 74 S. W. 726. Where a sum is deposited by one as a pledge of good faith in the making of a lease, he is entitled to recover it when, upon inspection, he refuses to execute the lease. Aquelina v. Provident Realty Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 1014. Where the pledgee of certain bonds agreed to cancel the debt and return the bonds in consideration of services rendered and to be rendered by the pledgor, a demand for the return of the bonds was essential to make the pledgee's retention thereof a conversion. Scrivner v. Woodward, 139 Cal. 314, 73 Pac. 863. The pledgor in order to recover in an action of replevin must tender the full amount of his debt and keep the tender good. Wilkins v. Redding [Neb.] 97 N. W. 238. Where the pledgee refused to deliver the property pledged except upon payment of certain debts not thereby secured, and the pledgor was able and willing to pay the debts secured by the pledge, a tender of the amount due on the debts so secured was waived. Memphis City Bank v. Smith, 110 Tenn. 337, 75 S. W. 1065. When the sum due by the pledgor is not in dispute, a tender by him of that sum is not bad because coupled with a demand for the return of the property; but where the sum due is in dispute a tender of any sum less than that claimed by the pledgee, though equal to the amount actually due is not good if coupled with a condition for the return of the property. Wilkins v. Redding [Neb.] 97 N. W. 238. Where in an action to recover the proceeds of a policy pledged by plaintiff and her deceased husband to a firm, plaintiff averred that she had executed an assignment to E. & Co. to secure certain debts of her husband to the firm, it was not variance when the proof was of an assignment to E. one of the members of the firm to secure debts due the firm. Clarke v. Adam, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 69 S. W. 1016.

§ 6. Rights, duties, and liabilities of pledgee.—The pledgee is entitled, until the debt secured has been paid, to have possession of the property pledged,[21] but is bound to use ordinary care and diligence in the care and custody thereof,[22] and has the right to collect the interest, dividends and income accruing therefrom as trustee for the pledgor to whom he must account for the same upon the redemption of the pledge.[23] In the case of tangible property or non-negotiable securities, as the pledgee acquires only such interest therein as was possessed by the pledgor, the lien of the pledgee is subject to prior equities against the pledgor.[24] But a pledgee of negotiable instruments or quasi-negotiable instruments such as certificates of stock, taking the same before maturity,[25] and for value[26] without notice,[27] is a bona fide holder, and is not affected by the equities between the original parties.[28] A pledgee taking securities for a pre-existing debt, unless they are cashier of a bank, the insolvency of which was concealed from her, to be pledged as security for a note of the cashier, the proceeds of which were placed to the credit of such bank with the reserve bank. A portion of such proceeds was applied to the payment of an overdraft due the reserve bank, and the remainder stood to the credit of the insolvent bank and came into the hands of the receiver. Held, that plaintiff, having paid the note to release her securities, was entitled to recover the portion of the proceeds which came into the receiver's hands, and, as to the remainder, was entitled to be subrogated to the right to dividends of the reserve bank, whose indebtedness it paid. Hallett v. Fish, 123 Fed. 201.

20. A bill by the owner to redeem certain property pledged, on the ground that the debt has been paid, which is not brought until 26 years from the time the right of action accrued, cannot be sustained, though the delay was owing to the plaintiff's difficulty in establishing the title to the property as against a third person. Kase v. Burnham, 206 Pa. 330.

21. Commercial Sav. Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 16, 73 Pac. 625. Where property was pledged to a corporation to secure it and indemnify others who became the pledgor's sureties on the faith of the pledge, it could bring suit to reclaim the property pledged from the pledgor, who had appropriated it to his own use, if any of the obligations for which the pledge was made remained undischarged. Hoffman House v. Foote, 172 N. Y. 348, 65 N. E. 169. Where bills of lading were pledged to secure advances made to the purchaser of the goods, and on the bankruptcy of the purchaser a part of the goods covered by the bill of lading was in the possession of a carrier, its refusal to deliver the property to the pledgee except on surrender of the bill of lading was a conversion of the property. First Nat. Bank v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex.] 77 S. W. 410.

22. Where the pledgee of property conveys the same to a third person who by reason of an outstanding record title in himself is enabled to convey a title to an innocent purchaser, thereby defeating the pledgor's right to redeem, the pledgee in the absence of any knowledge of the subgrantee's intent to defraud is not responsible for the damage to the pledgor. Cumming v. McDade, 118 Ga. 612. Where a note is given as collateral security, failure to present it for payment and give notice of dishonor does not operate as a payment of the amount thereof on the principal debt, but is only ground for damages against the pledgee for negligence in losing the endorser's liability. Coleman v. Lewis, 183 Mass. 485, 67 N. E. 603. Where a pledgee of bank stock, relying on the advice of his attorney and acting in good faith, made no defense to an action of replevin for the pledged stock, he used the ordinary care and diligence of a prudent man in the care and custody of the thing pledged, and was not liable for its loss, even though the replevin action was barred by limitations. Loomis v. Reimers, 119 Iowa, 169, 93 N. W. 95.

23. McCrea v. Yule, 68 N. J. Law, 465.

24. Pledge of coupon bonds. Georgetown Water Co. v. Fidelity T. & S. V. Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 113. It has, however, been held that a statutory lien on the property of a corporation in favor of persons furnishing supplies to it does not apply to goods deposited in a warehouse by the corporation and pledged, by delivery of the warehouse receipt, as collateral security for a loan. Millhiser Mfg. Co. v. Gallego Mills Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 760.

25. Where the agent of the owner of a note on the date of its maturity extended it without authority and thereafter wrongfully pledged it for his personal debt, the pledgee took it after maturity and acquired no title as against the rightful owner. Merchant Loan & Trust Co. v. Welter, 205 Ill. 647, 68 N. E. 1082.

26. If a promissory note owned by a wife is pledged to secure a debt which is in part hers and in part that of her husband, it is a valid pledge as security for the part of the debt due by her, and the pledgee takes the note as a bona fide purchaser and may recover from the maker, on maturity, the full amount of the note. Johnston v. Gulledge, 115 Ga. 981. Where a pledgee of certain property to secure a loan then made and any other debts that might be subsequently contracted by the pledgor, upon receiving part payment of the original loan, made, in good faith, a new loan within four months prior to the pledgor's bankruptcy, the transaction was not a preference under the bankruptcy law, and the lien of the pledgee was good both for the subsequent debt and the unpaid balance of the original debt. First Nat. Bank v. Pa. Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 968.

27. A pledgee of stock subject to an option of which he has notice takes the stock subject to the rights of the option holder. Page v. Boggess, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 46.

28. Where an owner has clothed a bailee given for an extension of time,[29] does not take for value, and is not a bona fide purchaser.[30] Where pledged stock is transferred to the pledgee on the books of the corporation a notice to the corporation that he holds as pledgee will relieve him from liability for the debts of the corporation.[31] Where a promissory note is pledged, the pledgee may collect the same on its maturity, and hold the proceeds as security for his claim against the pledgor.[32] The pledgee has a lien on the property pledged,[33] or on its proceeds,[34] or on other property substituted for with apparent ownership and the bailee thereupon wrongfully pledges the property, the pledgee may sell such property in satisfaction of the debt due him by the bailee unless the rightful owner tenders to the pledgee the amount of the bailee's debt. May v. Martin [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 840. Where the articles of association of a bank give it a lien on the stock of persons indebted to the bank, and the cashier, being so indebted, pledges his stock with a stockholder of the bank as security for a debt, and there is nothing on the face of the stock certificate in regard to the provision for a lien and the pledgee has no knowledge of the facts, he is a bona fide holder with a lien superior to that of the bank. Lyman v. State Bank, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 367. Neither a by-law of a bank prohibiting a transfer of its stock by a stockholder indebted to the bank, nor an agreement by a stockholder that the bank should have a lien on his stock for his indebtedness to the bank could bind a bona fide pledgee for value of the stock without notice thereof. Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200. But where the pledgee of a note secured by a mortgage as collateral for a limited obligation by the pledgor fraudulently obtains written authority from the pledgor to dispose of the collateral for his own use, a subpledgee having no knowledge of such written instrument and taking the collateral as security for an advance to the pledgee is subject to the equities between the original parties and his lien covers the interest of the original pledgee only. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800.

29. An extension of time granted by a creditor in consideration of a pledge of stock by the debtor as security for the debt makes the creditor a bona fide holder for value of the stock. Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200.

30. A pledge by a debtor, who is clearly insolvent, of certain shares of stock as collateral for a pre-existing debt constitutes a preference under the bankruptcy law which must be given up before the debt secured thereby can be proved. In re Busby, 124 Fed. 469. A bona fide vendee of chattels which remain in the possession of the vendor has a right superior to that of a creditor who subsequently obtains them in pledge to secure a pre-existing debt. Dexter v. Citizens' Nat. Bank [Neb.] 94 N. W. 530.

31. But in the absence of such notice a record holder, though in fact a pledgee, will be liable. Hurlburt v. Arthur, 140 Cal. 103, 73 Pac. 734. Notice to the corporation of a pledge of stock by a stockholder is sufficient to protect the pledgee against subsequent claims against the stock in favor of the corporation, though he makes no demand for transfer of the stock on the books of the corporation. Just v. State Sav. Bank [Mich.] 94 N. W. 200.

32. Where a note made by a third party to the pledgor, is delivered as collateral security for a debt, the pledgee is not bound to sell the same and apply the proceeds to the debt but can sue and collect the note and use the name of the pledgor for that purpose. Crews v. Yowell, 25 Ky. L. R. 598, 76 S. W. 127. If the payee of a promissory note pledges the same, and the maker on demand from the pledgee bona fide pays it, he is entitled to the performance of the obligation which the pledgor undertook as the consideration for the note, and is not concerned with the proper application of the proceeds of the note by the pledgee. Johnston v. Gulledge, 115 Ga. 981.

33. Where a life policy was assigned to secure notes, the beneficiary under the policy was estopped to assert that it was released from the pledge by a renewal of such notes to which he assented. Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Comins [N. H.] 55 Atl. 191. A pledgee does not forfeit his lien by an unsuccessful contention that the equity of redemption has been extinguished by contract and that he has acquired the property outright. Wilkins v. Redding [Neb.] 97 N. W. 238. By subpledging and redeeming the subpledge, the pledgee does not acquire a new title to the pledged property but merely continues his original tenure. Meyer v. Moss, 110 La. 132. Under a statute providing that a lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which an action can be brought upon the principal obligation, a merger of the original debt in a judgment in favor of the pledgee before limitations had run against the debt will keep the lien alive and enforceable against the pledgor and the assignee of his equity. Commercial Sav. Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 16, 73 Pac. 625.

34. Where the cashier of a bank made an agreement within the apparent scope of his authority with the owner of certain notes deposited in the bank for collection that such notes should be held as collateral for the benefit of certain parties upon certain specified terms, the bank having collected the collateral and retained the proceeds was estopped to deny the authority of the cashier and was bound by the terms of his agreement. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Peabody [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 611. Where the pledgor of certain cotton, with the consent of the pledgee sold to a prior creditor a portion of the cotton pledged under an agreement of which the pledgee had no knowledge, that the creditor might deduct the amount of his claim from the purchase price, the fact that the pledgee, through a mistake in regard to the purchase price induced by the creditor, credited the latter with the amount of his claim against the pledgor does not estop the pledgee, upon discovery of the mistake, from cancelling such credit and holding the entire proceeds which were less than the amount of the pledgee's advances. First Nat.

the original pledge,[35] for the full amount of the debt secured, but not for other claims against the pledgor.[36] Upon default by the pledgor in payment of the secured debt at its maturity, unless the time of payment has been extended,[37] the pledgee, after demand,[38] may sell the property pledged,[39] after notice to the Bank v. Andrews & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 956. Where notes are deposited as collateral to secure the pledgee from any liability as surety on a bond, the pledgee is entitled to retain from the proceeds of the notes an amount sufficient to pay all possible liability he may incur on the bond but he is not entitled to hold the excess, as against a subsequent pledgee, until his liability on the bond has terminated. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Peabody [Colo. App.] 72 Pac. 611.

35. Where a husband with the written authority of his wife pledged certain certificates of stock belonging to her as security for a loan to him, and the wife after a divorce from her husband substituted, with the consent of the pledgee, other certificates in place of those originally pledged, the pledgee was entitled to subject the substituted certificates to payment of his debt. Springfield Co. v. Ely [Fla.] 32 So. 892.

36. On a hypothecation of certain goods as security for future advances by the pledgee, the latter could not tack on to his advances other advances made by his agent in his individual capacity so as to make them a lien upon the property. Backhaus v. Buells, 43 Or. 558, 72 Pac. 976, 73 Pac. 342. Where a pledgee asserted the right to hold the property pledged for debts for which it had not been pledged, and refused to deliver the property except on payment of such debts in addition to those secured, such refusal constituted a conversion of the property. Memphis City Bank v. Smith, 110 Tenn. 337, 75 S. W. 1065. A subsequent pledgee for an advance of money part of which is applied to the discharge of the claim of a prior pledgee cannot be subrogated to the rights of the prior pledgee if he has acted as a volunteer and not for the protection of any interest held by him in respect of the matter concerning which the advance is made. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800.

37. Where a note is secured by collateral, and upon maturity of the note the pledgee bank notified the pledgor that it would carry the loan as long as the pledgor paid the interest, failure to pay the interest and notice of such nonpayment to the pledgor terminated the extension, and the pledgee could then proceed to dispose of the collateral. Louisville Banking Co. v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 811, 69 S. W. 1078. If the pledgee notifies the pledgor that he wants to collect the note made by the pledgor within a short time, a reply by the pledgor that he is ready to pay whenever the pledgee wishes is insufficient evidence of an agreement to defer sale until further notice. Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115. The fact that a debtor pledged certain securities for advances to him does not extend the time of payment or suspend the pledgee's right of action where the securities were not taken in lieu of or in discharge of the debt. Bright v. Carter, 117 Wis. 631, 94 N. W. 645. Where a pledgee held property as security for an advance of money to the pledgor and also as protection from liability on account of his endorsement of certain notes of the pledor, he was not obliged to wait until the indorsed notes were paid by the makers or himself before he could realize on the security held by him for the money actually advanced by him, upon failure to pay the same by the pledgor. Meetz v. Mohr, 141 Cal. 667, 75 Pac. 298. A pledgee bank is not bound by an agreement made by its president to extend the time of payment by the pledgor or to refrain from selling the pledged property in liquidation of the debt, where the president had no express or implied authority to make such agreement and the same was never ratified by the bank. Arbogast v. American Exch. Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 518.

38. A statutory requirement for demand upon a pledgor, if he can be found, before sale of a pledge and for notice to him of such sale, is satisfied, in case of the death of the pledgor, by demand and notice to his executors. Bell v. Mills [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 24.

39. Under a statute providing that a stockholder may pledge his stock by endorsement and delivery and still represent and vote on the same at stockholders' meetings, the pledgee's remedy to subject the stock to the payment of the debt is by a bill in equity to foreclose or by a sale without any judicial proceedings after notice to the pledgor and a bill by the pledgee to compel a transfer of the stock on the books of the corporation will not be allowed. American B. & T. Co. v. Pac. B. & M. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 826. Where the power to sell a pledge is conferred by statute, and is a power coupled with an interest which may be exercised by the pledgee in his own name, it is not revoked by the death of the pledgor though the title to the property remains in the pledgor and his legal representatives. Bell v. Mills [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 24. Where a note is secured by a pledge, and the contract of pledge does not require the note to be sold at maturity, the pledgee, in the absence of any demand on him to sell the pledge, is not liable to the pledgor for the amount of depreciation in the value of the pledge between the dates of maturity of the note and institution of suit. Adoue & Lobit v. Hutches [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 41. Where the pledgee, upon nonpayment of the note, is authorized to sell the stocks pledged without giving any notice, the sale is valid though made without demand or notice and long after the maturity of the note if there has been no valid extension of the note. Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115. Where a written contract consisted of an executory agreement for the sale of hops and a hypothecation of the crop as security for the seller's performance of his contract, on a breach of the seller's contract, the buyer was not entitled to possession of the crop, as the damages for the breach were unliquidated and too vague, uncertain, and indefinite to constitute the basis of a mortgage lien enforceable by power of sale. Backhaus v. Buells, 43 Or. 558, 72 Pac. 976, 73 Pac. 342.

pledgor,[40] or bring a bill in equity for its foreclosure or the enforcement of his lien,[41] or collect it, if it is in the form of a promissory note or chose in action,[42] or may recover the amount of his debt from the pledgor by an independent suit without foreclosing the pledge.[43] As the pledgee, in the sale of the pledged property, is acting as a trustee for the pledgor, he is bound to get the highest price possible,[44] and after applying the proceeds to the satisfaction of his claim together with the necessary expenses of the sale or collection[45] must pay over the balance to the pledgor.[46] In case of an unauthorized sale by the pledgee, the pledgor, un-

40. Under a statutory requirement for the sale of pledged property in the manner and upon notice usual at the place of sale, it is not necessary that the notice of sale shall state that the property is pledged or the property of the pledgor, where that is not shown to be usual at the place of sale. Bell v. Mills [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 24.

41. American B. & T. Co. v. Pac. B. & M. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 826. Where an agreement pledging securities to a trustee for the payment of interest on certificates provided that in case of default, the trustee might institute such proceedings as might be advised by counsel, the trustee, upon default, was entitled to resort to a court of equity to enforce the agreement, though the agreement provided for a mode of enforcement without the intervention of the court. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Asphalt Co. of America, 121 Fed. 192. The holder of bonds as collateral security on default in their payment may, instead of selling them, collect them by a foreclosure of the mortgage securing them, the proceeds of the sale becoming a trust fund in lieu of the original security. Field v. Sibley, 174 N. Y. 514, 66 N. E. 1108. The owner of stock in a foreign corporation deposited it with a bank to hold the same subject to the option of a third party to receive certain shares by a certain date at a specified price, failing which the bank was to return such shares to the owner. The owner thereafter pledged all the stock as collateral for a debt. Upon default by the pledgor, the pledgee could maintain an action against the depository bank and the option holder to have his lien established subject to the rights of the option holder. Page v. Boggess, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 46. A bill by a trustee for the sale of securities pledged to secure a debt by the pledgor should not be dismissed because it may not be necessary to sell all the securities and because it asks for more relief than the court may, upon final hearing, adjudge the complainant entitled to. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Asphalt Co., 121 Fed. 192.

42. Crews v. Yowell, 25 Ky. L. R. 598, 76 S. W. 127; Dudley v. Minor's Ex'r, 100 Va. 728. Where a fire insurance policy pledged as collateral for a debt contained a provision that the insurance as to the interest of the pledgee should not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner, the pledgee was not bound by an agreement between the pledgor and the company as to the amount of the loss. Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co. v. Field [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 149. Where a contract of indemnity was pledged as security for a debt, a sale of such contract by the pledgee did not vest absolute title in the purchaser, but only the interest which the pledgee held as security for the debt, as the authority of a pledgee to sell tangible chattels does not extend to choses in action or commercial paper, other than stocks and bonds, which would generally be sold at a sacrifice. Jenckes v. Rice, 119 Iowa, 451, 93 N. W. 384.

43. Commercial Sav. Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 16, 73 Pac. 625. Action may be maintained on a demand note without a preliminary demand of payment, even though the note is secured by collateral, to be delivered to the debtor on payment of the note. Field v. Sibley, 174 N. Y. 514, 66 N. E. 1108. Where notes given for land were pledged as security and secured by a mortgage, the pledgee in a suit on certain of them was entitled to a decree for full payment and was not obliged to realize first from the sale of the land mortgaged. Dudley v. Minor's Ex'r, 100 Va. 728.

44. Even at an authorized private sale without notice. Schaaf v. Fries, 90 Mo. App. 111. In case of conflicting testimony as to the relations between the pledgee and the purchaser at the pledgee's sale it is for the jury to determine whether the purchase was in effect a purchase by the pledgee which would invalidate the sale. Cammann v. Huntington, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 99. An unauthorized sale by the pledgee for an amount much less than the value of the property was not justified on the ground that the amount bid was insufficient to pay the debt of the pledgor, as the pledgee still retained a claim against the pledgor for the unpaid balance. Memphis City Bank v. Smith, 110 Tenn. 337, 75 S. W. 1065.

45. The pledgor of collateral is liable to the pledgee for the necessary expenses of its collection. Bank of Staten Island v. Silvie, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 465. A holder of bonds as collateral security, entitled to charge the pledgor with the expense of collecting the collateral, is not guilty of conversion by agreeing that the bonds may be charged with their proportion of the expense of foreclosing a mortgage securing such bonds and other bonds. Field v. Sibley, 174 N. Y. 514, 66 N. E. 1108.

46. Where the depositor in an assigned bank, after the assignment, took certain notes belonging to the bank as collateral security for advances made by him and collected such notes so as to be owing the bank an excess, he could not offset his deposit in the bank against such excess, but must pay the same to the assignee and take his ratable portion of the assets. Storts v. Mills, 93 Mo. App. 201. Where the pledgee of certain notes sues the makers, if the sum due from the makers is not sufficient to satisfy the pledgee's claim, it is proper to enter a decree for the amount of the notes without directing an account of the sum due the pledgee. Dudley v. Minor's Ex'r, 100 Va. 728. The pledgee of a note in an action against the maker need not credit money received by less he elects to ratify the sale,[47] can recover damages for the injury actually incurred thereby but he cannot replevy the pledge or recover its value in an action for its conversion until he pays or tenders the full amount he owes to the pledgee.[48]

POISONS.[49]

Criminal poisoning.[50]—The statute of Texas[51] forbids the mixing of "any other noxious potion or substance with any drug, food, or medicine" with intent to kill or injure.[52] It is held that the phrase, "noxious potion or substance," means poison of some kind,[53] and that it is not necessary that a fatal dose should be administered.[54]

Evidence sufficient to show violation is stated in the note.[55] him from a person who was only secondarily liable on a guaranty of payment of the pledgor's debt. Brown v. Pegram [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 577. Where the pledgor of certain mortgage notes instructed the pledgee to foreclose the mortgage, to bid in the property for its value, and take judgment against the makers of the notes for the deficiency, and the pledgee bought in the property for the full amount of the notes, interest, and costs, which was more than its value, having bid more than he was authorized, he was bound to account to the pledgor to the extent of the purchase price. Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Mather, 85 N. Y. Supp. 510.

47. Winchester v. Joslyn [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1079. As against a pledgee selling pledged securities without notice and giving the pledgor credit therefor, the credit is binding until the pledgor objects to the sale. Colton v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 137 Cal. 376, 70 Pac. 225. Where the pledgee, after selling pledged security without notice and giving the pledgor credit for the proceeds, assigns all his claims against the pledgor, the construction given by the parties to the assignment, that it included only the claims remaining after the pledgor had been credited with the proceeds of the sale, should prevail as against the claim of a stranger that the assignment covered the whole sum originally owed by the pledgor. Id.

48. Schaaf v. Fries, 90 Mo. App. 111. The contract of pledge is not extinguished by a wrongful sale but merely broken, and the pledgee or his vendee may retain the pledge until the debt is satisfied or satisfaction offered, notwithstanding such breach. Id. When the collateral security for a debt is purchased by the pledgee at an unauthorized sale, the pledgor can elect to ratify or disaffirm the sale but cannot treat it as a conversion as the pledgee has not put it out of his power to restore the pledged property. Winchester v. Joslyn [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1079. An unlawful dealing with the pledge by the pledgee constitutes a breach of contract and the pledgor may bring an action of replevin for the recovery of the pledge or trover for its conversion. Schaaf v. Fries, 90 Mo. App. 111. Where the pledgee of stock wrongfully pledges it to a third party, and the pledgor subsequently pays the sum advanced to him by the pledgee, and files a claim against the pledgee's assignee in insolvency for the full value of the stock, the allowance of this claim and the payment of a dividend thereon estops the pledgor to deny that his title to the stock passed to the pledgee by conversion. Colton v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 137 Cal. 376, 70 Pac. 225. A holder of bonds as collateral security is not guilty of conversion by agreeing to a foreclosure of the mortgage securing the bonds, and that they might be applied in payment at the foreclosure sale, unless they are so applied. Field v. Sibley, 174 N. Y. 514, 66 N. E. 1108. Where the president of the pledgee bank agreed with the pledgor to sell the pledged property to him for the price bid therefor at a sale, and the bank refused to carry out the agreement of the president but kept the property which had been purchased for less than its value, the bank was liable for conversion of the property since it took the benefit of the agreement made by the president even if the latter was not authorized to make such agreement. Memphis City Bank v. Smith, 100 Tenn. 337, 75 S. W. 1065. A suit to redeem certain pledged stock which was alleged to have been sold by the pledgee bank at an inadequate price, where it appeared that the president of the bank but none of the other officers or directors engaged in a campaign to bear the stock, will not be allowed as the pledgor has an adequate remedy at law by an action for damages against the persons who depreciated the market value of the stock. Arbogast v. American Exch. Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 518. Where a pledgee holding certain stock endorsed in blank as collateral for a loan and certain other stock similarly endorsed as a depositary for safe keeping wrongfully pledged it all on his own account to a subpledgee, and the owner of the stock held as collateral did not redeem it from the original pledgee, or make any attempt to reclaim it until after its sale by the subpledgee, though the owner of the deposited stock prevented a sale of his stock by timely notice to the subpledgee, the owner of the collateral stock could not claim contribution from the owner of the deposited stock. Tompkins v. Morton Trust Co., 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 274.

55. Evidence sufficient to show that poison was mingled with syrup. Runnels v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 458. Evidence held to sustain conviction of a saloon keeper of Negligent sale.[56]—One knowingly selling poisoned articles of food,[57] or giving poison when a harmless drug is called for[58] is liable for resultant damages. One sending a bottle marked carbolic acid to have it filled with arnica is not contributorily negligent in not ascertaining the nature of the contents[59] nor is the negligent failure of plaintiff's physician to discover it imputable to plaintiff.[60] One buying grain knowing that it had been damaged by water but not that it had been impregnated with poison is not guilty of contributory negligence.[61] One taking morphine, knowing its character, without ascertaining the proper dose, is guilty of contributory negligence.[62]

POSSESSORY WARRANT.

The remedy lies against an agent to whom property was given for use, and who retains it after demand.[63] The warrant must so describe the property as to identify it.[64] Evidence bearing on identity of chattels or right to possession is not objectionable, as tending to show title.[65] The officer who has taken custody under such a warrant keeps it in his own way, but at his own peril, until final judgment.[66] Hence, for a mere misuse of it, a claimant has no relief in equity, unless he shows equitable grounds.[67] On certiorari to a justice, in such a case, it may be finally disposed of, at discretion of the reviewing court,[68] but where plaintiff's possession was lawfully derived from an apparent owner, and was forcibly or fraudulently overcome by defendant, judgment should be for plaintiff, and title should be relegated to another action.[69]

POSTAL LAWS.

§ 1. The Federal postal system and its administration. Postal officers and employes.—The official position of a post office clerk must be determined by the office roster, approved by the postmaster general.[70] A mail carrier on his route and returning home after delivering his mail is not a United States civil officer in the discharge of his official duty, within the exception of a law against carrying concealed weapons.[71]

A letter carrier is not entitled to extra pay for short intervals of exclusion from office, where not required to be in uniform, though subject to duty at any time.[72] The postmaster general cannot allow rent to some postmasters of the second and third class and refuse it to others.[73] mixing poison with liquor with intent to kill. Gables v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 377.

That the United States furnished the building and safe which he was required to use, will not relieve a postmaster from liability for post office funds lost through burglary.[74]

§ 2. Mails and mail matter. Carriage of mails.—A railroad company carrying mail is not liable for torts or negligence of its employes, if ordinary care was used in their selection.[75] A reasonable speed limit of trains, prescribed by a city, is not an interference with United States mail, though mail trains are affected.[76]

Use of mails and matter mailable.—The postmaster general cannot add to or take from the statutes determining the classification of mails, and a publisher may enforce admission of mails by mandamus.[77] A weekly publication by an incorporated business college conducted for private gain is not second class matter.[78] The mails cannot be used for lottery purposes.[79] Laws giving the postmaster general power, on evidence satisfactory to him, to prohibit delivery of mail to one conducting a lottery, are not unconstitutional as an invasion of personal rights.[80] The postmaster general cannot prohibit delivery of mail to a corporation assuming to heal through mental influence, and his determination may be reviewed by the courts.[81]

§ 3. Postal crimes and offenses.—Obscene letters, or mail matter, which it is a crime to mail are such as tend to excite impure thoughts or desires.[82] It must

75. The company is not a common carrier but a public agent performing a governmental function. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 434. Sufficiency of complaint. Id. The duty of a railroad company in carrying mails, whether arising under contract or created by statute, is to the government; it is not a bailee of mail matter, nor does the relation of master and servant exist between it and its employes so as to render it liable to an individual for their negligence in case of a switch resulting in the loss of mails; the liability, if at all, can only be based on neglect of the corporation itself. The interest of the addressee in a contract for carrying mail is too indirect to make him a privy so that he may sue thereon; the company is not a carrier but a public agent not liable to an individual for breach of official duty; Rev. St. §§ 4001, 4002, and 1 Supp. Rev. St. pp. 245, 250. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

St. § 3929, amended Sept. 19, 1890 (26 Stat. 466), and Rev. St. § 4041, approved by act Mch. 2, 1895, c. 191. (28 Stat. 963). Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 121 Fed. 927. American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 47 Law. Ed. 90.

82. Mailing a private sealed letter directed to and making indecent charges against the mother of the writer is not an offense; the tendency of a letter to corrupt the morals of the addressee so as to constitute an offense in sending depends on circumstances, the import, and presumed motive, and not upon its mere terms. (Under Rev. St. § 3893, as amended by 25 Stat. 496; a letter may violate the law when sent to one person and not if sent to another.) U. S. v. Wroblenski, 118 Fed. 495. be shown that such matter was in the mails and was delivered,[83] but there is no need of an averment that it was enclosed or wrapped.[84]

Use of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud others includes blackmailing schemes,[85] and is not limited but enlarged by the amendment designed to cover "green goods" transactions.[86] An intent to gain is not essential but only the intent to defraud,[87] and the letters need not be sent out.[88] The crime does not exist where full value is given for money received in a mail transaction,[89] but it makes no difference to whom, or by whom, the letters are mailed,[90] so long as they further the scheme.[91] Each letter mailed is a separate offense.[92] A postal car is a post office within the statute.[93] One may be a principal though not present at the mailing.[94]

The indictment[95] must charge that the letters were mailed in pursuance of a fraudulent scheme,[96] the pre-existence of the scheme,[97] a purpose to effect it by use of the mails.[98] The words "in conjunction with" will charge a participa-

86. The amendment of Rev. St. § 5480, against fraudulent use of the mails, by act March 2, 1889, § 5480, was to include schemes to sell counterfeit money but not to limit the statute to such acts. Milby v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 1.

87. Defendant's intention to obtain benefit of a fraud which he used the mails to accomplish, or to convert money obtained, is not an element of the offense. Kellogg v. U. S., 126 Fed. 323. The only issue in a prosecution for use of the mails to defraud is the intent to defraud by that means. Bass v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 232.

90, 91. Use of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud is an offense, without regard to whom letters are addressed, or by whom mailed, the gist of the offense is that the use of the mails is a material part of the fraudulent scheme; sending letters between different members of a conspiracy to defraud, merely for information to each other as to the progress of the scheme, is not an offense. (Rev. St. 5480, as amended by act March 2, 1889, c. 393, 25 Stat. 873.) U. S. v. Ryan, 123 Fed. 634.

The indictment is sufficient, though not entirely grammatical, if the offense is substantially charged and defendant is protected against a second prosecution. Hume v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 689.

Duplicity. An indictment for conspiracy to defraud may charge in the same count that defendant conspired to defraud "by dealing and pretending to deal" in "green articles" and "spurious treasury notes." Lehman v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 41. A.] 126 Fed. 323. Counts for using the mails to defraud (R. S. § 5480) and for conspiracy to commit the offense (R. S. § 5440) based on the same transaction may be joined in one indictment; unnecessary allegations relating to consummation of the scheme, may be rejected as surplusage. U. S. v. Clark, 125 Fed. 92.

Joinder of counts. An indictment cannot charge three offenses not committed within the same six months. Bass v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 232.

97. An indictment charging the mailing of fraudulent letters on a certain date, in pursuance of a scheme "theretofore fraudulently devised," charges that the scheme was formed before that date; the date given is only material as to the bar of limitation and to show that the offense was committed before presentation. Hume v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 689.

98. An indictment alleging that the scheme was to be effected by use of the tion.[99] The mode in which the fraud was to be wrought must be particularized.[1] The persons who were intended victims may be designated in a general way, when no particularization is possible.[2] The fraudulent scheme must be proved substantially as laid.[3] Where an indictment charges mailing of a fraudulent letter in Kansas, to an address in Missouri, without alleging that it was taken from the mails by the latter, or any defendant, if the court could assume that it was so taken, the offense was committed in Missouri.[4]

The ordinary rules of evidence[5] and instructions[6] apply.

If three indictments are consolidated one sentence follows,[7] but it may equal the full penalty for each.[8]

Abstracting letters.—That ownership which is essential to larceny does not enter into the offense of abstracting mail matter.[9] Wrongful intent in so doing is averred by alleging that defendant "stole."[10]

Annoying letters.—The effect and purpose of a letter, not the mental operations of the sender, determine whether the sending amounts to the statutory offense of sending a letter with "intent thereby to cause annoyance."[11]

Conspiracy.—A conspiracy to defraud an individual is not one to defraud, or commit an offense against, the United States, though the mails are used.[12] An indictment for conspiracy[13] must with certainty set forth the crime which was to have been committed.[14]

mails, is sufficient. Kellogg v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 323. The indictment must show that the scheme was to be effected through use of the mails; actual use must be charged and proved. U. S. v. Clark, 121 Fed. 190. An allegation in an indictment that the purpose was to defraud by inducing the addressee to put counterfeit money in circulation is sufficient as to intent to defraud, though the addressee could not have been defrauded. Milby v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 1.

Sufficiency to establish that use of the mails was contemplated in a scheme to defraud. Kellogg v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 323.

6. Instructions in prosecution for fraudulent use of the mails under Rev. St. 5480, as amended March 2, 1889, questioned as placing on defendant the burden of rebutting inferences arising from evidence of guilt. Melton v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 504. Where the evidence clearly shows a scheme to defraud, by sale of counterfeit money through the mails, an erroneous charge that the court had so determined in a former trial, is not prejudicial. Milby v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 1.

7. Where three indictments charging each a single offense, under a statute against use of the mails to defraud, are consolidated under Rev. St. § 1024, and conviction is had of three offenses committed within the same six months, the result is as if the charge was in one indictment, and a single sentence only can be imposed. Hanley v. U. 14. Indictment for conspiracy to retard mails must allege that conspiracy was to "knowingly and willfully" obstruct them (R. S. § 3995). Conrad v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 798. It does not supply this to aver a knowing and willful conspiracy or that "knowingly and willfully" one of them committed an overt act pursuant to the conspiracy. Id.

A provision for recovery of half of penalties by the informer does not entitle him to sue the government for part of a sum paid in compromise.[15]

POWERS.[16]

§ 1. Nature and kinds.—A power is the right to limit a use[17] or to designate the taker of a use.[18] In several states the statute has defined what shall be a power.[19] It is not essential to a naked power that the donee have a beneficial interest.[20] A devise of a life estate with power to sell, and a remainder limited on the unsold portion, confers a power in gross.[21]

§ 2. Creation, construction, validity, and effect.—A grant of a power of sale of the fee added to a life estate is not inconsistent with a remainder created by the same deed,[22] the power being construed to have effect according to the true import of the words creating it.[23]

In determining the scope of a power conferred by an unskillfully drawn instrument, that fact will be judicially considered.[24] How "much" may be disposed[25] and whether a power is limited to the donee's beneficial estate or extends to the fee[26] is to be read in the terms of the whole instrument creating it.

Where a power of sale is conferred, to be exercised if a necessity arises, the judgment of the donee as to the necessity is conclusive in absence of fraud.[27] The power of a life tenant to sell and dispose of the estate is not a general power but one upon trust where the proceeds are simply to take the place of the land.[28]

Where the power of appointment is unlimited and the donee is at liberty to appoint his executor to execute it, he may empower his executor to collect and distribute the fund according to the terms of his will.[29] Where, by the falling in of a legacy, the whole estate is cast to a donee, it is a fee of which he can dispose in any manner.[30]

Where a life tenant has power to divide among the heirs "in the manner in which she may decide" she may appoint nominal sums in her discretion but the heirs take a vested remainder subject to this discretion.[31]

§ 3. Execution of powers.—The law of the domicile of the donor of a power governs its execution.[32] If an estate of realty and personalty be at donee's "entire disposal" he may execute it by a will legal at the place of his domicile.[33] The intention to execute a power must be apparent and clear.[34] It is shown when the donee executes a conveyance of the fee,[35] even though it does not refer to the instrument creating the power.[36] Where unrestricted discretion is conferred on the donee, his appointments will not be molested.[37] In order that a court may interfere with the execution of a power, it must be shown that the donee is abusing it,[38] if this is shown the court will interfere.[39] A power of appointment whether acquired before or during coverture may be executed by a married woman without her husband joining in the conveyance.[40] The simple execution of a power will pass only the interest of the donor.[41]

A deed purporting to be executed under a power, but in reality in excess thereof will convey the grantor's interest. A warranty deed not referring to the will will effectively, though not technically, execute an absolute power.[42] Where a power has been executed in a manner void under the laws of the state where the power was conferred, equity will carry out the intention of donee of the power.[43] The doctrine of illusory appointment will not be adopted to invalidate the execution of a power of appointment under which merely nominal shares were given to several of the objects of the power, which left what each should take to the donee's discretion,[44] and it is no objection to the execution that no person was specifically required to pay the nominal sums appointed she having directed them to be paid out of the remainder.[45]

testants or because gloves are used,[47] or because no ring was marked off or it did not appear what rules were in vogue.[48] The statutes ordinarily punish aiders and abettors as well as principals.[49] An indictment alleging acts constituting a prize fight is sufficient without using the statutory phrase "Engage in a prize fight."[50]

A statute authorizing courts to "suppress and prevent" prize fights authorizes an injunction at the suit of the commonwealth.[51]

PROCESS.[52]

§ 1. Nature and kinds, form and requisites. In general.—Process in general is the means by which a court compels the defendant to appear before it, or to comply with its commands. Process for commencing an action may be of various kinds, though in their effect they are the same. The usual process for commencing a suit is a writ of summons, commanding the officer to summon the defendant to appear,[53] or citation,[54] though on a motion for a money judgment notice is the proper process.[55]

Where the statute prescribes a particular process by which an action shall be commenced, it cannot be commenced by any form of process.[56]

Designation of court and parties.—The process must designate the proper court in which the complaint will be filed, otherwise it acquires no jurisdiction.[57]

It must also, in general, properly describe all the parties to the suit or action,[58] but where it gives the full names of the parties, it is not necessary that it

Process to commence a suit in equity or action at law is a writ commanding the officer receiving it to summon defendant to answer the bill or action. Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Chewning, 52 W. Va. 523. Proc. Act 1887, authorizing the filing and service of the statement of the claim with the writ, or at any time thereafter, does not substitute the service of the statement of the claim for the summons. 56. An attempt by a justice of the peace to commence an action against nonresidents, by a notice instead of a citation, is ineffectual, under R. S. Tex. arts. 1602, 1647, 1230. Carpenter v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 291.

57. A summons reciting that the complaint will be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court does not give the circuit court jurisdiction; there being no district court. Under Ann. St. (S. D.) 1901, § 6095, requiring that if a copy of the complaint is not served with the summons, the latter must state where the complaint will be filed. Eggleston v. Wattawa, 117 Iowa, 676, 91 N. W. 1044.

58. Process issued on the president of the "Louisville Safety Vault & Trust Co." as the "L. S. V. & T. Co." is insufficient; especially should give a party's full name every time reference is made thereto.[59] Process against a defendant corporation need not state that the defendant is a corporation, if it sets forth the full corporate name.[60]

Signing and sealing.—Sealing a copy of the original process is not necessary, where the original is required to be sealed.[61]

It may be required that the summons shall be subscribed by the plaintiff, or his attorney or agent.[62] The subscription of a summons by one on behalf of another is presumed to be authorized.[63]

Indorsement.—A summons in a money action should be indorsed with the amount for which judgment will be rendered in case of default.[64] Without such indorsement, it gives the court jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, but a judgment thereon by default is voidable.[65]

Stating nature or cause of action.—The process should in some states contain a general statement of the nature of the plaintiff's cause of action.[66] This is sometimes required by statute, a failure to comply with which makes the process defective,[67] which defect is not cured by a reference therein to an accompanying petition,[68] though if the process makes a partial statement of the demand, it is not prejudicial, where there is such reference.[69]

In Nebraska, it is not necessary to state the nature of a cause of action in a summons from a county court, in cases above a justice's jurisdiction, nor is it necessary in a district court summons,[70] though in a summons from a justice's court, it is necessary to designate the plaintiff's cause of action in a general way.[71]

To whom directed.—If the sheriff is a party to the suit, the process should be directed to the coroner of the county and to the sheriffs of adjoining counties.[72] where the plaintiff asked judgment against the "F. T. S. & V. Co.," a different corporation. Patton v. Campbell's Trustee, 25 Ky. L. R. 275, 74 S. W. 1092. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. §§ 4870-72. Id. Subscribed "L., Agent for S.," with his place of residence within the state, is sufficient under act March 20 (Wash.) 1901, § 1 (Sess. 67. A citation should state the nature of the plaintiff's demand, as required by statute, and a statutory provision that a certified copy of the petition shall accompany the citation, where the defendant lives out of the county, does not change this requirement [Batts' Ann. Civ. St. Tex. art. 1215]. Del. Western Const. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 628.

68. A reference, in the citation, to an accompanying certified copy of the petition is not a sufficient statement of the plaintiff's demand, where the citation makes no statement whatever of the plaintiff's demand. Del. Western Const. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 628.

69. A citation not fully stating the plaintiff's demand is not prejudicial, where there is attached thereto a copy of the petition, which by reference is made a part of the citation. Scalfi & Co. v. State, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 671, 73 S. W. 441.

70. Summons "for $415.50, with interest thereon at 10 per cent. from the 19th day of February, 1897," held sufficient. Farmers' B. & L. Co. v. Mauck [Neb.] 97 N. W. 835.

72. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 4993. Hillyer v. Pearson, 118 Ga. 815.

If it is directed to the sheriff and his deputies, in such case, it, and the service, is void.[73]

Return day.—The time within which process should be made returnable is regulated by statute, and it must be made returnable within the prescribed time from the date of its service,[74] or from the date of its issue.[75]

Process returnable on a legal holiday is not void, but the return day will be the first day thereafter, in which the court may legally transact business.[76]

Parol evidence is admissible to show a mistake of the clerk in naming a wrong return term in the process issued by him.[77]

Supplemental process.—A supplemental summons to bring in a new defendant must be issued directed to him in the same form as the original, except that in the body thereof it must require the defendant to answer the original or the amended complaint, and the supplemental complaint, or either of them as the case requires.[78]

In Arkansas and Kentucky, provision is made for a warning order, warning the defendant to appear, where it is shown that summons cannot be served.[79]

§ 2. Issuance.—The word "issued" imports the idea of delivery, in reference to the issuance of process,[80] and issuance usually means the delivery by the clerk, of properly executed process, to the plaintiff's attorney.

Process may be issued by a de facto clerk, though no jurat is attached to his oath of office.[81]

New process may be issued by the court at any time, within the time the original process could have been served, although the clerk was precluded from issuing an alias.[82] The issuance of process, to be served by publication, is in sufficient time if it is issued before the publication is commenced.[83] The date of a writ to commence a suit or action is prima facie evidence of the time of its issuance.[84]

§ 3. Extraterritorial effect or validity.—It is provided by statute that where one of several real defendants resides in the county where the action is brought, and service is had therein upon him, process may be issued to, and served in another county, upon his codefendants.[85] But in such cases the defendant, who may be sued in the county where the action is brought, must be a necessary, and not a sham defendant, joined solely for the purpose of bringing in the defendants served in another county.[86] If the defendant against whom the action is brought in one county has no real or bona fide interest in the controversy, process against a real defendant cannot be issued to and served in another county in which he resides,[87] and a subsequent proper service on such nonresident on appeal does not cure the defect.[88]

82. A new summons may be issued by the court at any time, within three years, though the clerk could not issue an alias summons after a year from the commencement of the action under Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 408. Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Cochran, 141 Cal. 653, 75 Pac. 315.

But this rule is not confined in its operation to transitory actions, in which at least one of the defendants has been properly served with process in the county in which the action is brought, but where an action is rightfully brought in any county, a summons may be issued to and served in any other county, although there be but a single defendant.[89] Personal service outside the state, in cases where service by publication is permitted, is a nullity, in the absence of an affidavit for service by publication.[90]

§ 4. Actual service.[91] A. Personal. In general.—Service of process must be personal when practicable,[92] and when required by statute.[93] A service otherwise than as prescribed by statute is not invalid, if the process reaches the defendant.[94] Process commanding an arrest is not well served by copy.[95]

Dispensing with personal service, when such service is practicable and usual, in cases to quiet title or settle private adverse rights, is sometimes prohibited.[96]

Service procured by fraud is unlawful and may be disregarded by the defendant.[97] He need not appear specially and move to quash such service,[98] though he may have the service set aside on motion.[99]

Where there are several defendants process should be served on all of them, Service against the real defendant, in another county, gives the court no jurisdiction over him under Code Civ. Proc. Kan. § 36. New Blue Springs Milling Co. v. De Witt, 65 Kan. 665, 70 Pac. 647.

The true test is whether the defendant, served in the county where suit is brought, is a bona fide defendant to that action; whether his interest in the result of the action is in any manner adverse to that of the plaintiff, with respect to the cause of action against the other defendant and in equity actions may be added the inquiry as to whether or not plaintiff can obtain full, suitable, and satisfactory relief without joining such party, and binding him by the terms of the judgment or decree. and if only a portion of them are served, judgment cannot be entered against those that have not been served.[1]

Upon nonresidents or their agents.—Service of process upon nonresidents beyond the jurisdiction of the court whose process is to be served does not confer jurisdiction in personam.[2] In many jurisdictions, however, by statutory provisions, service may be had upon a nonresident by serving the process against him upon his duly appointed resident agent, attorney, or representative, and this service is considered the same as a personal service upon the defendant,[3] though in some jurisdictions it is held that such a statute is unconstitutional so far as it applies to actions in personam.[5]

Where the pleading is required to be served with the process, and an amended pleading is issued, service of the process and original pleading is sufficient.[6]

The term "resident" is generally synonymous with "inhabitant" in the law of process and service.[7] A state statute authorizing a cross action against a nonresident plaintiff who has brought suit in the state courts, and authorizing service of the writ in the cross action, on the attorney of the plaintiff in the original action, is valid,[8] and will be followed by the federal courts.[9]

Upon domestic corporations.[10]—Service of process upon corporations is regulated by statutes, which vary more or less in the different states.[11] According to these statutes, service on a domestic corporation may be made by delivering a copy

2. Service of summons on one of two nonresident codefendants in the county in which the plaintiff resides, the suit being brought in that county, the defendant residing in another county, and subsequently on the other defendant in his own county, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction over the defendants' persons under R. S. Mo. 1899, § 562, and a default judgment thereunder is void. Roberts v. Stone, 99 Mo. App. 425, 73 S. W. 388. Watkins v. Hopkins County [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 872. Notice of condemnation proceedings may be served on a resident agent of a nonresident landowner [Civ. Code Ga. § 4975]. Service of an ancillary petition in an equitable proceeding. Vizard v. Moody, 117 Ga. 67. Service may be made on the attorney representing him, but service of an attachment against a nonresident's property, by leaving a copy of the process and complaint with the property attached, for the defendant, and not for the person in possession, is void under R. S. Conn. 1902, § 828, providing for a service of an attachment against a nonresident, by leaving a copy of the process and complaint, together with a return describing the property attached, with a resident agent or attorney, or if there is none, with one in possession of the property. Munger v. Doolan [Conn.] 55 Atl. 169. The fact the person in possession of the defendant's property was the plaintiff in the attachment suit does not excuse service on the plaintiff as one in possession. Id.

5. A statute authorizing the service of summons against a nonresident doing business within the state, to be served on a manager or agent in charge of such business, is unconstitutional, so far as it applies to actions in personam. of the process to the cashier,[12] or to the state superintendent of insurance,[13] but process against the corporation cannot be served on one who has no interest in the corporation,[14] nor on an agent who is interested in the suit against the corporation,[15] nor on a former agent no longer in its employ,[16] nor on the secretary and president as individuals,[17] nor on the president or other officer after his resignation, though there is no successor,[18] except where by the by-laws his term of office continues until the election and qualification of a successor.[19]

Where a statute provides various classes on whom service of process against a corporation may be made, absence of the first mentioned class is necessary to validity of service on the second class.[20] Such alternative service may be made in case of absence from the county, though not from the state.[21]

The official capacity of a person as secretary and general manager of a corporation cannot be inferred for the purpose of supporting a service of process by the fact that he did not state that he did not possess such capacity at or after the time process was served.[22]

Upon foreign corporations.[23]—In many states the service of process upon a foreign corporation is regulated by statute. These statutes usually require, as a condition precedent to doing business within the state, the appointment of a resident agent upon whom service of process against the corporation may be made. Where a foreign corporation accepts the benefit of such a statute by allowing its agents to do business in a state, it impliedly agrees to its terms, and will be bound by service of process upon its agent in accordance with the statute.[24] Or the statutes may prescribe certain persons within the state upon whom such service may be made where the foreign corporation fails to appoint or designate an agent.[25]

Under these statutes, process against a foreign corporation may be served, within the state, upon its managing agent,[26] except where it has no property within the state,[27] upon its president and vice-president while within the state,[28] though present on private business,[29] an assistant secretary whose duties in fact make him a local secretary of the corporation,[30] an insurance commissioner,[31] the secretary of state,[32] the superintendent of a branch office of a commission company,[33] or on the agent of a foreign insurance company, who issued the policy sued on, though he was not in the company's employ at the time of the service.[34] But the service must be made on an officer authorized by statute.[35] An unauthorized service cannot be sustained by a showing that there was a representative of the company upon a given district, not an agent for the state [Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 1223]. Western Cottage P. & O. Co. v. Anderson [Tex.] 79 S. W. 516. A broker making sales may be regarded as an agent under Civ. Code Prac. Ky. § 51, subsec. 6, authorizing service on a manager or agent of a nonresident asociation or joint stock company. Nelson, Morris & Co. v. Rehkopf & Sons, 25 Ky. L. R. 352, 75 S. W. 203. The collection of a single renewal premium by the cashier of a local bank for a foreign insurance company does not make him an agent of the company within the state subject to service of process against it. Frawley v. Pa. Casualty Co., 124 Fed. 259.

The manager of an agency established by a foreign railroad company to solicit traffic in a state is a managing agent under a statute authorizing service of process against the company on such agents. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. N. Y., C. & St. L. R. Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 131, 59 L. R. A. 939. On a railroad station agent authorized to sell passenger tickets, receive and deliver freight and collect for freight shipments, under Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5252. Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [N. D.] 95 N. W. 153. But an agent to solicit advertisements for a foreign corporation is not a managing agent under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 432 (Fontana v. Post Print. & Pub. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233), nor one collecting premiums from a local branch and transmitting them to the central organization of a fraternal insurance company, under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 432, subd. 2 (Moore v. Monumental M. L. Ins. Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 209).

27. Under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 432, subd. 3, authorizing service on a managing agent within the state, if no person has been designated by the corporation to receive service or certain officers cannot be found within the state, and it has property within the state, or the cause of action arose therein. Fontana v. Post Print. & Pub. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233.

Service on the president and vice-president of a foreign corporation may be at the office of another corporation, of which they are members, and at which place they are settling up their affairs preparatory to cessation of business [Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 432]. American Locomotive Co. v. Dickson Mfg. Co., 117 Fed. 972.

31. Service on an insurance commissioner is good service on the company under Ky. St. 1899, § 631, though such commissioner had canceled the company's right to do business in the state, where the service is in an action which arose before such cancellation. Mut. R. F. Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 Law. Ed. 987. Where a foreign insurance company has not complied with the statute, by filing stipulations authorizing service of process on it, by serving the insurance commissioner or a designated agent, service on the insurance commissioner is sufficient to bind it. Old Wayne M. Life Ass'n v. Flynn [Ind. App.] 66 N. E. 57.

32. Subsequent process against a foreign insurance company may be served on the secretary of state, under Acts Tenn. 1875, c. 66, although repealed by Acts 1895, c. 160, § 49, and § 9, subd. 3, providing for such service on the state treasurer or insurance commissioner, where the company withdrew from the state before the latter act went into effect, it being sued on a liability arising before it withdrew. D'Arcy v. Conn. M. L. Ins. Co., 108 Tenn. 567, 69 S. W. 768.

33. Under Civ. Code Proc. Ky. § 51, subd. 6, where the superintendent maintained an office and took orders for trades, the money received being deposited to the corporation's credit, and the superintendent's share paid by the corporation's checks, the corporation maintaining a private wire to the superintendent's office. Boyd Commission Co. v. Coates, 24 Ky. L. R. 730, 69 S. W. 1090.

34. Under Code Miss. c. 65, §§ 2323, 2327, providing that on failure of such company to have an agent on whom process may be served in the state, the person who solicits insurance or transmits applications shall be its agent as to all duties and liabilities imposed by law. Pervangher v. Union C. & S. Co., 81 Miss. 32.

35. Service on the deputy insurance commissioner, though made at the commissioner's office, is not sufficient under a statute providing for service on the insurance commissioner. Old Wayne M. L. Ass'n v. Flynn [Ind. App.] 66 N. E. 57.

whom proper service could have been made, but was not.[36] Service on an agent of a first carrier is insufficient in an action against the last connecting carrier.[37]

It is essential that the corporation shall have been actually and substantially transacting business within the state, and the process must have been served on one who is truly representative of the corporation, transacting its business within the state.[38] But merely sending agents through a state to solicit advertisements is not doing business within the state so as to warrant service of process on such agent.[39]

Whether a foreign corporation has subjected itself to the laws of other states so as to be bound by service of process therein is a question to be determined on principles of general jurisprudence.[40]

Where the corporation has not appointed an agent for service, it is not entitled to protection of provisions for the service of nonresident defendants.[41] Where suit is brought against nonresidents as a corporation, and later changed to suit against them as partners, a judgment based on the amended petition, against defendants and a garnishee, could not be sustained without the appearance of defendants or service on them without the state.[42]

Upon infants and insane persons.—Service on an infant is not necessary.[43] The appointment of a guardian ad litem takes its place.[44]

Process against an insane person cannot be served on his physician, unless it appears from such physician's certificate, attested by the serving officer, that a personal service would be injurious to the one insane.[45]

Time of service.—Service must be made the number of days prescribed by statute, at least, before the return day.[46] An original summons may be served at any time within three years.[47] Service of a writ of garnishment on a legal holiday is void.[48]

Waiver of actual service.—Actual service of process may be waived by an ac-

Strowbridge v. Miller [Neb.] 94 N. W. 825. Notice on a motion for a money judgment must be served fifteen days before the day when the motion is to be made, under Code Va. 1887, § 3211. If served within less than that time before the first day or term, on which day the motion is to be made, it is insufficient, although the term does not actually begin until beyond that time. Tench v. Gray [Va.] 46 S. E. 287. Under the law requiring process to be served at least six days before the return day, there must be six days exclusive of the return of service [22 Del. ceptance or acknowledgment of service indorsed on the process.[49] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, an acknowledgment of due and legal service will be presumed to have been authorized.[50] But plaintiff cannot be compelled to accept service of notice of appearance and answer by one summoned as agent of defendant, but who denied that he was such agent.[51] Nor can acceptance of service be made by an agent or employe of a foreign corporation in the absence of a statutory provision or special authority to that effect.[52] In divorce cases, acceptance of service by the attorney for the defendant is bad practice.[53]

To question the authority of an attorney to indorse an acknowledgment for a defendant, the latter must do so by affirmative proof.[54]

Presumption of proper service.—In serving process, an officer will be presumed to have performed his duty, where the process is acted on by the court, as that he returned the process to the first day of the next term,[55] and in the absence of some showing to the contrary, that it was served upon the defendant named in the complaint.[56]

(§ 4) B. Substituted.—The manner of making a substituted service is prescribed by statute, which must be strictly observed and complied with.[57] These statutes usually provide that the service shall be made by leaving a copy of the process at the defendant's usual place of abode with some person of the family of a certain age or over, and informing such person of the contents thereof.[58] Leaving the process at the defendant's former place of residence is not sufficient, although it is immediately forwarded to him.[59] An application for substituted service on a defendant in divorce proceedings will not be granted unless service by publication cannot be made.[60]

Substituted service cannot be made on one who is only temporarily within the state.[61] There must be proof of residence within the state,[62] though for the purpose of process the presumption is that a permanent residence once acquired continues until it is shown that another has been acquired,[63] and for this purpose a defendant's place of abode cannot be changed by his mere statements that he was leaving with the intention of locating elsewhere.[64] A married man's house of usual abode for the purpose of service of process is where his wife and family reside.[65]

65. N. W. & P. H. Bank v. Ridpath, 29 Wash. 687, 70 Pac. 139.

By statute substituted service may be had on nonresident individuals doing business within a state, by service on their managers or agents within the state.[66] To sustain substituted service on a nonresident, it is not necessary to show that he was out of the state at the time of service, as nonresidents are presumed to be without the state.[67]

It is provided by statute in some states that leaving process at defendant's dwelling house in the presence of a member of his family over a certain age shall be taken and held to be personal service.[68] But this provision authorizes this mode of service in cases of service within the state only.[69]

(§ 4) C. The server and his qualifications.—As a rule process may be served by the sheriff or any other person not a party to the action.[70] But an officer who is also a party to the action is disqualified from making service of process in that action,[71] as is also his deputy.[72]

A constable or bailiff may make service of process directed to the coroner of the county and sheriffs of the adjoining counties where the sheriff is a party to the suit,[73] or he may serve process to which the sheriff is not a party, where the latter is sick and has no deputy.[74] The statute providing that whenever any party shall file an affidavit of prejudice against the sheriff, the clerk shall direct process to the coroner, is mandatory.[75]

§ 5. Constructive service. A. In general.—Constructive service is regulated by statute and one of the methods sometimes allowed is by posting a copy of the process in some conspicuous part of the defendant's last and usual place of abode. But this manner of constructive service will not be granted in divorce proceedings,[76] unless service by publication cannot be made.[77] Constructive service provided as to foreign corporations doing business within the state will not confer jurisdiction of one not doing business therein.[78]

Constructive service cannot be legally made unless some necessity therefor appears.[79] It can only be made when personal service is impracticable.[80]

Constructive service confers jurisdiction only for the purpose named in the bill.[81]

66. Civ. Code Ky. § 51, subd. 6, authorizing such service is not invalid as providing insufficient notice (Guenther v. American Steel Hoop Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 795, 76 S. W. 419) nor is such statute in violation of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2 (Id.).

(§ 5) B. By publication. When proper.—Another form of constructive service is service by publication. Statutes in many states provide for service by publication of the summons or other process in a newspaper of proper circulation for a certain length of time, where after due diligence the person on whom process is to be served cannot be found within the state.[82] Service of summons by publication is proper against a nonresident,[83] as a foreign corporation,[84] or a foreign mutual benefit association;[85] but publication is unnecessary for such of nonresident defendants as enter a general appearance,[86] nor can publication be ordered, on a nonresident defendant, where plaintiff is also a nonresident.[87] A supplemental summons and amended complaint to bring in a new defendant may be served by order of publication.[88]

By some statutes, this mode of service is authorized where the defendant has been absent for a certain length of time,[89] or where he is temporarily absent.[90]

Where an insane person is served by publication, a subsequently appointed committee, before the service is complete, will not be permitted to vacate the process on the ground that no leave had been obtained to sue it where the vacation would destroy an absolute right, but the committee should be made a defendant.[91]

Procedure to authorize.—To obtain service by order of publication, the statute in reference thereto must be strictly followed.[92] If this is done, the right to the order is absolute.[93]

As a condition precedent to the court's granting an order of publication, the complaint should be duly verified and filed;[94] and this with the plaintiff's affidavit should show to the satisfaction of the court that a proper cause of action exists for a service by publication, that the defendant after due diligence could not be found in the state, and stating the placing of the process in the hands of an officer and his inability to serve the same as evidenced by his return;[95] and in ac-

An affidavit stating that plaintiff is unable with due diligence to serve the summons on the defendant, and stating the placing of the summons in the hands of an officer and his inability to serve the same as evidenced by his return is not insufficient as a matter of law to support an order of publication under a statute requiring that it shall be made to appear that plaintiff is unable with due diligence to serve the summons on the defendant. Gallun v. Weil, 116

tions in rem that the defendant has property within the state.[96] The affidavit should also contain the venue, and disclose the official county of the officer taking it,[97] and, by statute, in some jurisdictions, must show the issuing of a warrant of attachment;[98] though in others the issuance of a writ of attachment or the seizure of property thereunder is not a requisite.[99] Publication for the purpose of substituted service made before the filing of an affidavit for publication is invalid,[1] but failure to file the affidavit and order for publication is immaterial.[2]

The affidavit may be executed by the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney.[3]

The insufficiency of the affidavit for an order of publication is immaterial if the defendant is afterwards personally served with an alias.[4]

A statute providing for publication without a supporting affidavit is unconstitutional.[5]

How made.—Service by publication is made by publishing the process in a newspaper of proper circulation for a certain length of time as prescribed by statute,[6] and when the name and post office address of the defendant is known, by mailing a copy of the summons and complaint to him.[7] Service by publication in a weekly newspaper issued on Sunday is good.[8]

Service by publication is not complete until the expiration of the time of publication,[9] which must be before the return day.[10]

Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4877, authorizing an order of publication on affidavit of plaintiff, his agent or attorney, that according to his belief defendant is not a resident of the state. Swanson v. 6. Two publications in each successive seven days, for four of such periods, from the date of the order of publication, is a sufficient publication, though there was but one publication in the last calendar week of such period, under Act Congress, June 8, 1898 (30 Stat. 434, c. 394, § 6), requiring such publication in District of Columbia at least twice a week for at least four weeks. Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 47 Law. Ed. 567.

7. Bear Lake County v. Budge [Idaho] 75 Pac. 614. Mailing a copy of a summons by order of court to the defendant's "last known address" without the state, as stated in the complainant's affidavit, is a sufficient service, under California Pol. Code, § 52 and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412, 413. San Diego Sav. Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299. The word "residence" as used in some of these statutes includes a temporary residence, and service may be made by an order of publication by mailing a copy of the summons and complaint to the defendant at the place of such residence, under B. & C. 10. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2524, does not

Sufficiency of order and publication.—The order and publication must show the names of the parties and the subject-matter of the litigation,[11] and must sufficiently specify a proper return day,[12] and must be of process which has been issued, unless issuance is waived.[13]

The court may deny plaintiff's motion to file proof of publication of summons nunc pro tunc.[14] The publication of a warning order in Arkansas is not a valid service, unless the clerk makes such order on the complaint.[15]

Personal service in lieu of publication.—In some jurisdictions it is expressly provided that personal service on the defendant without the state shall be equivalent to service by publication, in divorce and other proceedings.[16] But it is not required that copies of the affidavit and order should be served with the summons,[17] except in divorce cases, when the order of publication must be served therewith.[18]

An affidavit supporting such personal service must be in the form prescribed by statute; otherwise the service confers no jurisdiction over the defendant.[19] In some jurisdictions, the affidavit required in publication of process is not necessary;[20] though in other jurisdictions it is otherwise.[21]

§ 6. Return and proof. Official return. By unofficial persons.—An officer's return of process must affirmatively show everything necessary to constitute a valid service.[22] It must show a service of a true copy of the process on each of the defendants[23] by himself in person, and not by and through a private person.[24] require it to be complete more than eight days before. In re Denton, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 326. Section 2520, requiring a service eight days before, applies only to personal service. In re Denton, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 359.

11. Otherwise it gives no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. Donaldson v. Nealis, 108 Tenn. 638, 69 S. W. 732.

12. An order of publication for six consecutive weeks and requiring the defendant to appear and answer on or before the last day prescribed for publication sufficiently specifies the time to appear and answer. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 43 Or. 513, 73 Pac. 325, 74 Pac. 468. A service by publication requiring appearance sixty days after service is insufficient under Laws 1901, p. 384, c. 178, § 1, subd. 2, requiring appearance within sixty days after date of first publication, exclusive of such day. Smith v. White, 32 Wash. 414, 73 Pac. 480. Requiring appearance within sixty days from the date of the first publication does not give the court jurisdiction to enter judgment. Woodham v. Anderson, 32 Wash. 500, 73 Pac. 536. But where the summons is nearly complete before such statute goes into effect, it is not affected thereby and if such summons requires an appearance within sixty days after the date of first publication, instead of after completion of publication, it is insufficient, under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4878. Id.

13. An order for the publication of process, which has not been issued, or issuance waived, does not give the court jurisdiction; publication of notice of attachment and summons, which is merely filled out but not issued. Under Code N. C. §§ 199, 161, 348, 219, & 352. McClure v. Fellows, 131 N. C. 509.

Leaving the summons and complaint in attachment proceedings at defendant's dwelling house in another state, in the presence of a member of his family over fourteen years of age, is not a personal service out of the state equivalent to service by publication, under Comp. Laws N. D. 1887, § 4900, providing for such service. First Nat. Bank v. Holmes [N. D.] 94 N. W. 764.

17. Allen v. Richardson [S. D.] 92 N. W. 1075.

18. A statute requiring the order of publication to be served personally with the summons in divorce cases does not apply to other cases [Laws S. D. 1893, c. 75, § 1]. Allen v. Richardson [S. D.] 92 N. W. 1075.

19. Under R. S. Mo. 1899, §§ 582 and 575, an affidavit omitting the phrase "in the state" is void. Hedrix v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 495.

20. Under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. §§ 4877, 4879. Jennings v. Rocky Bar G. Min. Co., 29 Wash. 726, 70 Pac. 136.

21. Service on a nonresident under the provisions of Laws Minn. 1901, p. 68, c. 63, § 1, by sending the summons to the county in which the defendant resides is simply a substitute for service by publication, and must be predicated upon a strict compliance with the provisions of G. S. 1894, § 5204, in reference to publication. Spencer Co. v. Koell [Minn.] 97 N. W. 974.

22. An officer's return of service on a railroad company in garnishment proceedings must show service on the nearest station or freight agent. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138.

23. Showing delivery to C. R. and M. R.,

Where the service was on minors and guardians, a return showing such service but without designating the guardian as such, is sufficient.[25] In case of a substituted service, it should show that all the statutory requirements have been complied with, as that a copy of the petition was served with the summons,[26] or that in divorce proceedings a copy of the notice of an order to appear was mailed to the defendant "prepaid" and that the proper inquiries as to the defendant's residence were made;[27] but it need not state the name of the member of the family with whom the copy was left.[28]

The sheriff's return must be made within the time prescribed by statute.[29]

In case of service by unofficial persons, the return is by an affidavit showing the facts necessary to constitute the service.[30]

Though the acts of a sheriff in making service must be evidenced by his own return and not by testimony of third parties,[31] yet such testimony is admissible, to support the service, to show collateral facts independent of the sheriff's return, and not involving his actions.[32]

Return of service on corporations.—A proper return of service on a corporation should set out a service on a proper officer or agent at the office or place of business of the corporation in the county, or, if not so served, then the facts should be affirmatively returned which will bring the service within some of the methods prescribed by statute.[33] Where served upon a subordinate officer or agent, it must show that service upon a superior officer could not be had,[34] and must show in-the within defendants, is insufficient. Russell v. Butler [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 395.

24. A return showing service of a citation on a corporation by and through an officer thereof is insufficient to show proper service. Tex. H. M. F. Ins. Co. v. Bowlin [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 797.

25. Melcher v. Schluter [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1082.

26. Under R. S. Mo. 1899, § 570. Feurt v. Caster, 174 Mo. 289, 73 S. W. 576.

27. Under 1 Gen. St. N. J. p. 405, § 172, and chancery rule 59, if the affidavit as to service does not show prepayment of a copy of the notice of the order to appear, and only shows inquiry of the complainant's relatives as to the defendant's residence, and it does not appear from the papers that the defendant received notice in fact, the service is insufficient. Barker v. Barker, 63 N. J. Eq. 593.

28. Box v. Equitable Securities Co. [Ark.] 73 S. W. 100.

29. It is no defense for a failure to do so that he was under the impression that the process was returnable at a later date, and that he was trying to obtain service. Bell v. Wycoff, 131 N. C. 245.

30. Stating in an affidavit by one other than the sheriff serving the summons, that he had served it by leaving a copy of it and of the complaint at the defendant's usual place of abode in a certain city does not import that the defendant has any other residence, and raises no presumption that such verified service is not sufficient. N. W. & P. H. Bank v. Ridpath, 29 Wash. 687, 70 Pac. 139. And since the sheriff's return in such case, that he was unable to make personal service on the defendant because he could not be found in the county, and that on information he believed his residence to be in another state, raises no conclusive presumption of nonresidence, the affidavit will not be overthrown thereby. Id. Testimony of one making service that he left true copies of the summons and complaint at defendant's house, supplies omissions in this respect in his affidavit of the service. Id.

32. Citation. Baham v. Stewart Bros. & Co., 109 La. 999.

33. Park Bros. & Co. v. Oil City Boiler Works, 204 Pa. 453. A sheriff's return of service on a railroad company showing delivery of the process to a person in charge of a business office on the company's line, without stating that it was the defendant company's office, shows insufficient service. Vickery v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. Co., 93 Mo. App. 1. Reciting that he had served the defendant, a certain corporation, by serving its superintendent, naming him, is sufficient. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. v. Earle, 118 Ga. 506. A return showing service on the "vice-president and managing agent" of a corporation was sufficient, where the person served was the managing agent but was no longer vice-president. Coast Land Co. v. Or. Pac. Colonization Co. [Or.] 75 Pac. 884. Where service was required to be at the usual place of abode or principal office of the corporation, service at the dwelling of the president, "in the presence of a certain white adult person" and also on defendant president of the company in the same manner, was held sufficient. State v. Bay State Gas Co. [Del.] 57 Atl. 291.

34. Where the statutes provide that service may be had by leaving a copy with the person in charge of any business office of the corporation in case the president or chief officer cannot be found, but that the absence of such officer must be expressed in the return, such statement in the return is jurisdictional in case service is not on the chief officers [R. S. Mo. §§ 995, 996]. Rixke v. W. U. Tel. Co., 96 Mo. App. 406, 70 S. W. 265.

formation other than the mere statement of the person on whom it was served that he was the corporation's agent.[35]

A return of service against a foreign corporation must show the facts warranting the service and the manner in which it was served, as that the corporation, whose officer or agent is served, was at the time doing business in the state,[36] and that the officer upon whom the process was served is an inhabitant of the district or has become subject to the jurisdiction of the court.[37] But it need not show all the facts required by statute to authorize service of summons on any agent; they may be shown in the record.[38]

Amendment of return.—The insufficiency of a return of service is not ground for abatement since amendable.[39] The sheriff with aid of a written memorandum may be allowed to amend his return,[40] within any length of time,[41] upon proof of facts that he had made a wrong return and that the amended return should have been made in the first instance.[42] The right to amend may be established by matter in pais.[43]

The allowance of such amendment is a matter of judicial discretion.[44]

Impeachment or contradiction of return.—A sheriff's regular return in some jurisdictions is conclusive as to the facts therein stated as against parties to the action in which the process was served and cannot be overcome in collateral proceedings;[45] though in other jurisdictions it is considered merely as prima facie evidence of such facts, and may be rebutted.[46] But in a direct attack the return is considered as prima facie evidence only, and parol evidence is admissible to impeach it,[47] as in an action to restrain the collection of a default judgment,[48] or on a

A return that the secretary and general manager of a foreign corporation was served is not sufficient if it does not state that defendant is an inhabitant of the district or has become subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and such facts do not appear from the record. 44. The court may use its sound discretion in amending or refusing to amend a sheriff's return after judgment, under R. S. Mo. 1899, §§ 657, 660. Feurt v. Caster, 174 Mo. 289, 73 S. W. 576. It is not an abuse of such discretion for the court to refuse, after judgment, to amend the sheriff's return of a substituted service where he cannot remember with whom he left the process. Id.

45. A sheriff's return of constructive service is not overcome by an affidavit of the defendant and his wife, upon whom the service was made five years after, that such service was not made; especially where the defendant had previously made affidavits in the action stating that he was defendant therein. Ill. Steel Co. v. Dettlaff, 116 Wis. 319, 93 N. W. 14. A marshal's return of personal service cannot be controverted by an affidavit that such service was not made. Long Branch Pier Co. v. Crossley, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 249.

46. It is the settled law of Nebraska that a false return of service of process may be impeached by extrinsic evidence, and that where the attempted service fails to reach the party to be served in any way a judgment founded thereon is absolutely void and open to collateral attack. Baldwin v. Burt [Neb.] 96 N. W. 401.

motion to vacate a judgment for want of service.[49] An officer's return is conclusive in certiorari.[50]

Proof to overcome a sheriff's return must be clear and satisfactory.[51]

Parol evidence may be admitted to explain the return, where there are more than one person, in the community, of the name against which the process is directed.[52]

Traverse of return in Georgia.—In this state the statutes expressly provide that an official return may be contradicted by a traverse, to which proceeding the official making the return must be a party;[53] otherwise the defendant cannot testify to the untruth of the sheriff's return.[54] Plaintiff has no concern with, and cannot object to, the manner in which an officer whose return of service has been traversed, is made a party.[55]

Proof of service by publication.—Proof of service by publication should be made by affidavit of the printer of the newspaper in which the process is published, within the prescribed time,[56] and by a certificate of the clerk that he mailed, within the prescribed time, a copy of the order of publication to the defendant, where such mailing is required.[57]

§ 7. Defects, objections, and amendments. In general.—Jurisdiction may sometimes be conferred by a defective service,[58] but no jurisdiction can be conferred where there is no service.[59]

Defects in an officer's return must not be confused with defects in the process. Greater jurisdictional weight is attached to the latter than to the former, and consequently greater latitude is allowed in correcting defects in the return, than in the process itself.[60] The process itself is the important legal fact upon which the validity of a judgment rests, while the return is simply evidence in respect to that fact.[61]

Alterations—Amendments.—The change or alteration of a summons after it is issued renders it void.[62]

Where an original process is defective by an omission, the court may allow it to be amended.[63] If the amendment is filed within the time prescribed by statute,

53. The service of a copy of a traverse, to the sheriff's entry of service, on the sheriff by a private individual, does not make him a party thereto; where an affidavit of illegality is filed. Parker v. Medlock, 117 Ga. 813. Such a traverse may be stricken where the officer is not made a party nor given notice of its filing. O'Connell Bros. v. Friedman, K. & Co., 118 Ga. 831.

55. Branan v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 882.

56. Failure of a printer to make affidavit to the publication of process in his newspaper within the time prescribed by statute does not prevent the court from rendering judgment, if the affidavit is made before decree. B. & C. Comp. [Or.] § 788, requiring such affidavit within six months after publication is directory only. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 43 Or. 513, 73 Pac. 325, 74 Pac. 468.

57. A certificate of the clerk that he mailed copies of the order of publication to the address of the defendant is not sufficient proof of service upon either of two nonresident defendants, under R. S. Fla. § 1445; and § 1413, 2; Acts 1893, c. 4129. Wylly v. Sanford L. & T. Co. [Fla.] 33 So. 453.

the plaintiff is entitled to it as a matter of right,[64] but a void process is not amendable.[65]

An amendable process is of the same effect in reference to acts already done as if amended.[66]

When objections made.—Objection to the validity of process should be made before confirmation of a default.[67]

How objections made.—Objections to process for defects or irregularities may be made by a special appearance to object to the jurisdiction of the court.[68] For defects that do not appear on the face of the process or return, the proper form of objecting is by plea in abatement,[69] and not a motion to quash.[70] But for defects that are apparent on the face of the process or return, the proper remedy is a motion to set aside the process or judgment.[71] Irregular service of process on a corporation may be set aside on rule.[72] A defect in the service or sheriff's return is no ground for quashing process or abating the suit;[73] the motion should be to set aside the service.[74] But an objection to the form or sufficiency of the process cannot be taken by answer.[75]

Waiver of irregularities.—Since the only use of process is to bring the parties into court, an irregularity of service of process is waived by the defendant's voluntary appearance in court, and answering to the merits of the case,[76] and the court cannot make an ex parte order permitting the defendant to withdraw such appearance.[77] Illegality in service is waived only by a plea to the merits, without insisting upon the illegality.[78] As to what constitutes a general appearance sufficient to amount to a waiver see the footnote.[79]

But irregularity in service of process is not waived by a special appearance to object to jurisdiction acquired by such service,[80] nor where he thus specially appears by an answer to the merits, after a motion to set aside the service is denied,[81] nor by appealing from a decree entered by the court upon the merits, but withholding its judgment upon its jurisdiction;[82] nor does defendant waive such defects by pleading to the merits, in the same paper in which he excepts to the process.[83] The mere fact that the defendant makes, what he calls a special appearance, does not make it so, if matters are thereby brought into issue involving the merits of the case.[84]

§ 8. Privilege and exemptions from service.—A person brought into a state by extradition on a criminal charge is privileged from service of process in a civil suit against him in the jurisdiction in which he is tried.[85] But he may waive this privilege.[86]

As a rule members of state legislatures are exempt from service of process while going to, attending, and returning from the sessions. But in Nebraska, no distinction is made, as to the service of process, between members of the legislature and any other person.[87]

Parties to an action are generally exempt from service in the jurisdiction to which they go to attend the trial of the cause.[88] The same is true of a nonresident

But appearance is not established by a motion to quash service and strike out the suggestion of damages filed by the plaintiff, where it is clear that such was not the intention of defendant's attorney (Thomson v. McMorran Mill. Co. [Mich.] 94 N. W. 188), nor by the mere filing by a corporation of an affidavit made by a trustee where he had not been served with process (Taylor & Co. v. Southern Pac. attorney, in the state to represent his client, when they are actually in attendance in court in the due course of their employment as attorneys.[89]

A nonresident witness brought into a jurisdiction by a subpoena is generally exempt from service of process in another proceeding,[90] though not where he appears voluntarily.[91] But this rule does not apply where the process is served on the witness, merely as the agent of another.[92]

§ 9. Abuse of process.—An action for the malicious abuse of legal process will lie for the improper use of legal process, after it has been issued,[93] not for maliciously causing it to be issued,[94] nor for a regular and legitimate use of it, though with a bad motive.[95] Process is assumed to be regular and legal in form in an action for its abuse.[96]

An action for abuse of process may be barred by the statute of limitations, the statute beginning to run from the time the acts constituting the abuse were committed.[97]

Punitive damages may be recovered for the malicious abuse of civil process.[98]

Warrant of arrest. Foy v. Barry, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 291. PROHIBITION, WRIT OF.

§ 1. Nature, function and occasion of remedy.—The writ of prohibition is an extraordinary process to restrain illegal acts of inferior courts or the judges thereof.[1] It cannot be issued to bodies not exercising judicial or quasi-judicial power,[2] or contemplating any judgment or other judicial act.[3] The writ cannot be used in the place of a bill of equity to prevent a corporation from proceeding under a void city ordinance,[4] nor in place of quo warranto to prevent the unlawful exercise of an office.[5] Prohibition does not lie where adequate relief could have been obtained by appeal.[6] Where the object of the writ of prohibition becomes impossible of attainment pending the proceedings through petitioner's neglect, the writ is denied.[7] It does not lie where the harm, if any, has already been done.[8] Prohibition will not issue in limine where review by other methods may be adequate.[9] The writ is premature if respondent court has taken no steps by issuance of a citation to gain jurisdiction of the relator.[10]

§ 2. The right to the writ.—A writ of prohibition to restrain proceedings on an information will not lie at the instance of one not interested therein.[11] If

1. The writ has been used to restrain a justice of the peace from compelling the attendance of witnesses to investigate an illegal information (People v. Tuthill, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 24); to restrain court from punishing disobedience of void order (Koehler v. Snider, 177 Mo. 546, 76 S. W. 1032); from assuming jurisdiction of a matter already under consideration by another court in the same jurisdiction (Clark County Ct. v. Warner, 25 Ky. L. R. 857, 76 S. W. 828); from proceeding in a case where the service as appeared from the return was defective and where it was admitted that the proceeding was in the nature of an in rem proceeding, the res not being within the state (Pa. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450). It lies to prevent action by a judge disqualified by interest (State v. Fort [Mo.] 77 S. W. 741), even where his interest would also have been available after the termination of the suit as ground for writ of error (Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 238). Finding of no bias. Talbot v. Pirkey, 139 Cal. 326, 73 Pac. 858.

Neal, 30 Wash. 702, 71 Pac. 647; Sanford v. District Ct. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 906; Valentine v. Police Ct., 141 Cal. 615, 75 Pac. 336; Holly Shelter R. Co. v. Newton, 133 N. C. 132; State v. Superior Ct., 32 Wash. 498, 73 Pac. 479. Constitutional provisions. State v. Superior Ct., 31 Wash. 96, 71 Pac. 722.

The fact that an appeal is impossible because of the smallness of the amount involved will not be sufficient ground for prohibition (State v. Superior Ct., 30 Wash. 156, 70 Pac. 230), notwithstanding that the appellate procedure involves extra delay and expense and that the error is jurisdictional (State v. Superior Ct., 30 Wash. 700, 71 Pac. 648). But the facts that an appeal from a tribunal acting beyond its jurisdiction was not allowed as matter of right, and that such an appeal would have caused such delay as to prevent an effectual adjudication of the controversy, were held sufficient grounds for a writ of prohibition. People v. District Ct. [Colo.] 74 Pac. 896. But prohibition has been allowed in some cases where an appeal seems to have been possible. Lower court wrongfully attempted to retain possession of property by receiver. State v. Superior Ct., 31 Wash. 481, 71 Pac. 1095; Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 238. In this case the point that there was a remedy by appellate proceedings was not taken and the court denied the writ on the merits. State v. Evans, 176 Mo. 310, 75 S. W. 914. Appeal lies where the statutory procedure on arrest and binding over was not followed, but the trial court proceeded. State v. Third Judicial Dist. Ct. [Utah] 75 Pac. 739.

the petitioner for prohibition cannot be harmed by the illegal proceeding threatened, no writ of prohibition will issue.[12] If he is a stranger to the proceedings complained of, the granting of the writ is a matter discretionary with the trial judge.[13]

§ 3. Practice and procedure.—As a rule, objection to jurisdiction must be made in the court complained of before applying for prohibition.[14] The prescribed notice and proof thereof must be shown.[15] A body which institutes contempt proceedings before a court in assistance of its powers is not a necessary respondent to prohibition against the court from entertaining the contempt case.[16] The applicant for a writ of prohibition cannot by his affidavit controvert the return of the magistrate and the record.[17] Since prohibition does not reach mere errors, the decision of the lower court on the facts that it has jurisdiction defeats the writ.[18] Where the person whose official acts are complained of ceases pending the proceedings to hold office and the application is dismissed on that ground, no costs will be given.[19]

PROPERTY.[20]

Definition and nature.—Property is the right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels to the exclusion of others,[21] and the right of disposition is essential.[22] This is probably somewhat broadened by the constitutional[23] and statutory[24] uses of the term.

Realty or personalty.—If a right is to land, it is realty.[25] Immovability, in the legal sense, gives to property its character as real, rather than personal,[26] and whether it is immovable is tested by the intention found in all the facts and circumstances.[27] A chattel real so far partakes of realty that it is not capable of conversion.[28] Property which is real, because fixed to the land, cannot be made personal by mere agreement without severance.[29]

Formulae, processes, plans, information, literary, musical and dramatic productions.—Formulae, secret processes, and plans are property until published,[30] irrespective of patentability.[31] A disclosure necessary to protect such rights is not a publication,[32] but one necessary to use seems to be,[33] and if plans are made for a price such property is in the employer.[34] A formula may be sold,[35] but as against a subsequent purchaser, no right of action arises in favor of a prior one, unless out of fraud or breach of contract.[36] Literary property published by one holding a contract for concert rights and publication rights for all countries, but not acting rights,[37] is made free by publication of a complete copy and promiscuous sale thereof,[38] and a printed notice on the title page forbidding "production on the stage," has no effect to curtail the legal consequences of such a publication.[39] Such consequences are fixed by the law of the place of such sale, and not of its origin.[40] Information, though publicly accessible, becomes property by prompt collection and compilation, so that it has a commercial value,[41] and it does not become free by communication to subscribers, under an agreement to use it for their own business only, and not to divulge it.[42] Whether it is eligible to copyright makes no difference.[43]

Lost or abandoned property, or treasure trove, belongs to the finder rather than to his employer, or the land owner.[44]

The words "not otherwise" held rendered a statute granting a municipality the power to contract, imperative. Pac. Elec. Co. v. Los Angeles, 118 Fed. 746. Where authority exists at the time the contract was entered into, it is sufficient. Paving contract, advertised for bids for paving with brick, asphalt, or trap rock, trap rock bid the lowest, asphalt next. On the day contract was let petition of requisite number of property owners was on file asking for asphalt. Held, contract for asphalt was valid, though some petitioners changed later. Kronsbein v. Rochester, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 494.

50. Brokerage contract. Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51. The doctrine that only the state can challenge the right of a corporation to exercise power beyond the scope of its charter, has no application to municipal corporations. Schneider v. Menasha, 118 Wis. 298, 95 N. W. 94. The contract of a village, having no power to employ a supervising engineer for a definite time, being void, a city succeeding such village is not liable for a breach thereof. Mack v. New York, 87 Misc. [N. Y.] 371.

51. Entertainment of citizens and guests. Com. v. Gingrich, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 286.

52. Stifling competition. Pendleton v. Asbury [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 651. An agreement whereby one on behalf of a county undertakes to investigate and discover taxable property in such county, which through fraud or otherwise has been omitted from taxation, is not against public policy. Shinn v. Cunningham, 120 Iowa, 383, 94 N. W. 941. A contract for aid in the discovery of unlisted property being authorized and made, an independent and additional contract thereafter made, for making investigations, seeing delinquents, etc., being part of the work of discovery, is wholly unauthorized and void. Under Acts 28th Gen. Assem. p. 33, c. 50, the county board of supervisors may contract for assistance to its proper officers in the discovery of property not listed and assessed as required by law. Heath v. Albrook [Iowa] 98 N. W. 619.

53. The rule that an ultra vires contract is void and unenforceable at law or in equity, is, for obvious reasons, of more imperative application to acts of municipal, than to those of private, corporations. Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 117 Iowa, 250, 91 N. W. 1081.

54. Murphy v. Clinton, 182 Mass. 198, 65 N. E. 34; Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 117 Iowa, 250, 90 N. W. 746; Id., 118 Iowa, 234, 91 N. W. 1081; Peck-Williamson H. & V. Co. v. Steen School Tp., 30 Ind. App. 637, 66 N. E. 909; Wenk v. New York, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 584. There may be ratification, however, where there was power to contract, but the power was irregularly exercised. Boulton v. Kolkmeyer, 97 Mo. App. 530, 71 S. W. 539; Bartlett v. Boston, 182 Mass. 460, 65 N. E. 827; Saline County v. Gage County [Neb.] 97 N. W. 583. The acceptance and use of a sewer by a municipality, with knowledge that it is expected to pay the costs of its construction, is equivalent to original authorization in fixing its liability. Contoocook Fire Precinct v. Hopkinton, 71 N. H. 574; Akers v. Kolkmeyer, 97 Mo. App. 520, 71 S. W. 536. But where there is sufficient to show a contrary intention, a contract will not be foisted upon the municipality. Howell Elec. L. & P. Co. v. Howell [Mich.] 92 N. W. 940.

55. Appointment of architects before Laws 1896, p. 751, c. 626. Withers v. New York, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1105.

56. Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51; South Covington Dist. v. Kenton Water Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 420; Jewell Belting Co. v. Bertha [Minn.] 97 N. W. 424; Danville, D. R. & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Lincoln County Fiscal Court, 25 Ky. L. R. 1162, 77 S. W. 379; Moss v. Sugar Ridge Tp. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 896. Rule applied to a grantee in a deed from the city. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Forty-second St. & G. St. Ferry R. Co., 176 N. Y. 408, 68 N. E. 864. A contractor claimed that the city, by a course of dealing or custom, had held out an official as having certain powers of contract. Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841. While property owners may challenge the legality of municipal acts and contracts, on the ground that proper legal steps have not been taken, persons who enter into a contract with the city stand in a different position. Such a person cannot even make the defense of ultra vires or total lack of power on the part of the corporation to make the contract. Madison v. American Sanitary Engineering Co., 118 Wis. 480, 95 N. W. 1097. One who enters into a contract with a public

thorized contracts, though in case the contract is not expressly prohibited, one may obtain relief so far as his money or property shall have been used by the municipality for legitimate corporate purposes.[57] And a municipal corporation which has retained the benefits of a contract invalid, not because it was beyond the scope of its powers, but because in the making or performance of the agreement, the power of the municipality was illegally exercised, may be estopped from denying the validity of the contract, as against an innocent party who has changed his position in reliance upon the action of such municipality.[58] But no such estoppel can arise in favor of one who knowingly agrees to assist the municipality in the illegal exercise of its power,[59] or from a violation of duty on the part of public officials.[60] And while municipal corporations, like individuals, ought, upon principles of natural justice, to pay for what they receive,[61] they will not be compelled to do so when the claimants have expressly contracted that the municipality shall not be bound.[62]

It is the policy of the law to encourage the abandonment of illegal projects,[63] and a municipality having embarked upon an ultra vires undertaking may properly refuse to permit the contractor to proceed.[64] The contracts of a municipality must not increase its debt beyond the constitutional limit,[65] and previous provision for payment is sometimes required.[66] Authority to contract for work necessary to the public health is implied,[67] and a municipality has ordinarily power to contract for the lighting of its streets,[68] for fire hydrants,[69] and power to supply water, officer who undertakes to act for, and to bind a municipal corporation, or other body politic, is bound to ascertain the extent of the authority of the public officer with whom he deals. Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841.

57. Balch v. Beach [Wis.] 95 N. W. 132; Beaser v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 525. Even where the element of prohibition is present, it seems a recovery may be had, it appearing the contract was entered into in good faith. Clark v. Lancaster County [Neb.] 96 N. W. 593. Where a county has the right to enter into a contract for the creation of a public work and does so, but said contract is not made in a lawful manner, one who in good faith furnishes labor and material is entitled to recover their reasonable value. Cass County v. Sarpy County [Neb.] 97 N. W. 352.

58. Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51; Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883; Cass County v. Sarpy County [Neb.] 97 N. W. 352; Moss v. Sugar Ridge Tp. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 460; Ocorr & R. Co. v. Little Falls, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 592.

59. Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51.

60. Officer with no authority to so do had previously for 11 years entered into similar contracts which the municipality had recognized as binding. Held municipality not estopped to deny contract made by him. Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841.

61. Moss v. Sugar Ridge Tp. [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 460.

62. Park Ridge v. Robinson, 198 Ill. 571, 65 N. E. 104.

63. Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. North Bend [Neb.] 94 N. W. 537.

64. McKee v. Greensburg, 160 Ind. 378, 66 N. E. 1009. Where it appears that a municipality has made payments upon a contract, which payments were unauthorized and in direct violation of law, they may be recovered back. Heath v. Albrook [Iowa] 98 N. W. 619. The rule that money paid voluntarily cannot be recovered applies to a public corporation which has paid for publications in excess of the statutory allowance. Vindicator Print. Co. v. State, 68 Ohio St. 362, 67 N. E. 733.

65. Contract for sewer held not to increase municipal debt beyond constitutional limit. Redding v. Esplen Borough [Pa.] 56 Atl. 481.

66. Where a city contracts for a public utility for a period of years at an annual cost, this does not constitute a present indebtedness, within the meaning of statutory prohibitions against contracting indebtedness in excess of a given sum. Cain v. Wyoming, 104 Ill. App. 538. In Louisiana, contracts whereby municipal corporations undertake to make provision, in advance, for such prime necessities as light and water, and incur obligations therefor, to be met, from time to time, as those necessities are furnished, from current revenues, do not fall within the restrictive operation of the statute which prohibits such corporations from contracting debts, without providing in the ordinances by which they are contracted, for their payment. Blanks v. Monroe, 110 La. 944.

67. Independent of statutory provisions a municipality has power to construct sewers, so far as needed to put and keep highways in suitable condition for public travel. "This power is incident to the power granted to lay out, build, and repair highways." Contoocook Fire Precinct v. Hopkinton, 71 N. H. 574. So also to contract for the removal of garbage to protect its inhabitants from pestilence and disease. Kelley v. Broadwell [Neb.] 92 N. W. 648.

68. The power to provide lights for streets, necessarily implies the power to pur-light, and other facilities to its citizens,[70] and to lease wharves for the promotion of commerce has been granted.[71] Counsel may be employed when necessary.[72]

A common council cannot delegate to a member or committee thereof functions of a legislative or administrative character, or involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, and the contract of such committee is therefore void,[73] and a subordinate officer of a city has no power to change or modify a contract; the contract, having been made by vote of the common council, can only be altered or annulled by the same authority.[74]

The relation of members of a municipal council to the municipality is one involving trust and confidence, and its members, therefore, cannot make contracts with themselves relating to public affairs.[75]

chase it from others, and to enter into a contract for such services. Davenport G. & E. Co. v. Davenport [Iowa] 98 N. W. 892. A city being granted the power to contract for lights for 25 years, a contract for their supply for such period, is valid. Code 1873, § 473, as amended by Acts 22d Gen. Assem. c. 11, p. 16, gives a city such power. Id.

69. A contract by a city to pay rentals for fire hydrants, at stated times in the future, is one for a current expenditure. Hence does not create an indebtedness of the kind contemplated by the provision of the Iowa constitution limiting municipal indebtedness. Centerville v. Fidelity Trust & Guaranty Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 332.

70. A grant of power to acquire, own, and operate street railways, telephone and telegraph lines, gas, and other works for light and heat, and to permit the laying of tracks for street railways, in the public streets, carries with it power to contract for a supply of electricity to be used for any such purposes. Riverside & A. R. Co. v. Riverside, 118 Fed. 736. And where it has contracted for a supply of electricity to be used in any way it saw fit, a subcontract to furnish a portion of such supply to a company, for the operation of a street railway to be constructed by the company, is not on its face ultra vires. Id. A city may purchase a system of waterworks subject to an incumbrance payable in the future. A law that a city cannot mortgage or give a lien upon such property does not change the above rule. State v. Topeka [Kan.] 74 Pac. 647. In Iowa, in order that a town may enter into a contract for the construction of waterworks, there must be a vote taken by ayes and nays. In the absence of such a vote a contract entered into cannot be ratified. Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883.

71. Morgan City v. Dalton [La.] 36 So. 203.

72. The board of supervisors, under a statute of Mississippi, had power to employ special counsel, although at the time it had already in its employment counsel at an annual salary [Code 1892, c. 123]. Warren County v. Dabney, 81 Miss. 273. A county board has no power to employ counsel in a proceeding to which the county is not a party. Williams v. Broadwater County Com'rs, 28 Mont. 360, 72 Pac. 755.

73. Jewell Belting Co. v. Bertha [Minn.] 97 N. W. 424. A board of aldermen in procuring a public improvement and letting the contract therefor act not in a legislative but in an administrative or business capacity. Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925. However, where a city council in such a matter acts through a committee, a modification of the contract by only two members of the committee, the third having no notice of the meeting, is void. Burge v. Rockwell City, 120 Iowa, 495, 94 N. W. 1103. The rule that a city cannot exercise its governmental authority outside its limits does not apply to the exercise of a right of a purely business nature. A city bought adjacent land from which to obtain stone for manufacturing crushed rock for city purposes. Schneider v. Menasha, 118 Wis. 298, 95 N. W. 94. The St. Louis city charter provided that the assembly should have no power directly to contract for any public work, but that the board of public improvements should let out such contracts. An ordinance was passed placing power in the board of health to contract for the removal and disposal of city garbage. Held, that this was a public work, and a contract let by the latter board was a nullity. State v. Butler [Mo.] 77 S. W. 560.

74. Directions by a superintendent of streets as to the performance of a contract of grading. Becker v. New York, 176 N. Y. 441, 68 N. E. 855. Normile v. Ballard [Wash.] 74 Pac. 566. But it is otherwise, where the legislature in creating a board of public works has evinced a purpose to confer on such board the power to carry out in detail an improvement which the council has directed in general terms. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Gaar, 24 Ky. L. R. 2227, 73 S. W. 1106.

75. Suit by a taxpayer to recover money paid to a member of council on his contract to superintend the extension of a water plant. Stone v. Bevans, 88 Minn. 127, 92 N. W. 520. By statute in Texas, they may not contract for or become interested in any claim or demand against the municipality. Tex. Anchor Fence Co. v. San Antonio, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 561, 71 S. W. 301. Where a county contracts to pay one, not a county official, a certain percentage for the collection of a claim due to it, the mere fact that county officials performed part of the work and were paid out of the percentage for doing it will not render the contract void. Contra Costa County v. Soto, 138 Cal. 57, 70 Pac. 1019. A member of the legislative body of a city is a city officer, within the meaning of a statute making it a misdemeanor for a city officer to be interested in a contract with the city. State v. Kelley [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 996. Contra, People v. Mayer, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 368. A determination by a city council in a specific case based upon the finding

A municipality in the letting of contracts acts as the statutory attorney in fact of property holders, and is responsible for its acts as such, but its liability is not fixed until loss falls upon such property holders.[76]

In Kentucky, it is made the duty of the board of commissioners, and not the superintendent, to contract for insurance on the buildings and furniture of all charitable institutions.[77]

§ 2. How initiated. A. By the public; preliminary statutes or ordinances; advertisements; proposals; opening and examination of bids.—In every case of public contract, there must be a full compliance with charter or statutory provisions in order to charge corporate liability,[78] and the prescription by a statute, under which a municipality is organized or acting, of the manner in which it shall exercise one of its powers, limits the right to exercise it to that method, and its use in any other way is ultra vires of the corporation and void.[79]

Where a statute or ordinance requires the performance by public officers of a certain specified act, or that it shall be performed in a certain specified manner, there must be at least substantial compliance with these requirements to render their acts valid,[80] but such a statute or ordinance is not required to be literally performed in unessential particulars, and a substantial compliance is sufficient.[81] of that body in a matter in which a discretionary judgment was reposed in it, is so far judicial in character as to be voidable if any one of the quasi judges who participated was at the time disqualified by private interests, at variance with the impartial performance of his public duty. Member of the council also a stockholder in successful competitive bidder for public printing. Drake v. Elizabeth [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 248. Under § 51, art. 1, c. 18, Comp. St. 1903, prohibiting county officers from having any pecuniary interest in contracts of the county, an officer undertaking to perform extra official services cannot recover from the county upon a contract to pay for same. Wilson v. Otoe County [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1050.

76. A city, on the application of an accepted bidder, who had given a bond with solvent surety, released him. The bid accepted on a second advertisement, though the lowest then made, was higher than that of the released contractor. Affected property owners were permitted to recover over against the city the difference between the cost of the improvement, under the bid of the released contractor, and the increased cost under the subsequent bid. Louisville v. Ky. & L. Bridge Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1087, 70 S. W. 627.

77. Civ. Code, § 224. Furnish v. Satterwhite, 24 Ky. L. R. 1723, 72 S. W. 309.

78. Pass Christian v. Wash., 81 Miss. 470; Murphy v. Clinton, 182 Mass. 198, 65 N. E. 34; Moss v. Sugar Ridge Tp. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 896; Perry County v. Engle, 25 Ky. L. R. 813, 76 S. W. 382; Peck-Williamson H. & V. Co. v. Steen School Tp., 30 Ind. App. 637, 66 N. E. 909. Failure of city official to certify necessity of purchases. Keane v. New York, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 542. To approve bond for faithful performance. Camp v. McLin [Fla.] 32 So. 927. To observe requirements as to sealed bids and specifications of the work. Leflore County v. Cannon, 81 Miss. 334. A public corporation has power to limit its liability by contract to pay only out of a particular fund. Park Ridge v. Robinson, 198 Ill. 571, 65 N. E. 104. In the absence of such an express limitation, however, a general liability attaches. Louisville v. McNaughton, 24 Ky. L. R. 1153, 70 S. W. 841. Mode is the measure of power, and aside from the designated mode, there is no power. Where a statute provided that in case of the failure of the highest bidder to pay according to law, the franchise should be sold to the next highest bidder. Upon a failure by the highest bidder to so pay, a contract let to any but the next highest is void. Pac. Elec. Co. v. Los Angeles, 118 Fed. 746.

79. Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51; Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 587; De Soto v. Showman, 100 Mo. App. 323, 73 S. W. 257. Where a statute prescribes the terms upon which the state is to be bound by a contract, executed by a public officer in its behalf, and declares that a failure to comply with such terms will result in no contract, such statute is mandatory and constitutes a limitation upon the power of the officer to bind the state. Camp v. McLin [Fla.] 32 So. 927. Provision requiring writing, approval by city attorney and council, and signature of mayor, held mandatory. Times Pub. Co. v. Weatherby, 139 Cal. 618, 73 Pac. 465. A petition of persons representing more than one-half of the taxable property of a town meets the requirements of the statute and furnishes a proper basis for the purchase of a road machine. Siegel v. Liberty, 118 Wis. 599, 95 N. W. 402. Contracts by public bodies must be let according to the statute. Rev. St. 1898, § 432, provides that contracts of a school board must be voted on at a meeting. Held, evidence short of this with no explanation for failing to introduce this evidence failed to show a contract. Mendel v. School Dist. No. 6 [Wis.] 98 N. W. 932.

80. Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883.

81. People v. McDonough, 173 N. Y. 181, 65 N. E. 963. Where, by statute, the price of public printing is not to exceed a given price, this is to be taken as a maximum, and a council in designating an official newspa-

The passage of a valid ordinance authorizing a public improvement or contract[82] duly passed at a meeting of the legislative body of the municipality, and entered upon the minutes of such meeting,[83] is usually a charter prerequisite to a valid contract, and an ordinance creating contractual obligations must go through the same process in matter of its adoption as others.[84] A popular vote is sometimes required.[85]

Where a charter provides that a public improvement may be initiated either upon the petition of benefited property owners or when the common council shall deem it a public necessity, a determination by such council is final unless it is made to appear that its action is arbitrary or the result of fraud or mistake.[86]

As a rule a valid contract can be made by the municipality only after it has given notice or advertised for bids in some newspaper,[87] and then only with some per has power to contract for a less price. Wooster v. Mahaska County [Iowa] 98 N. W. 103. Delay of one day in opening bids held not fatal. McCord v. Lauterbach, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 315.

82. Paxton v. Bogardus, 201 Ill. 628, 66 N. E. 853; Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841. An order for widening a public way does not, without more, enable an officer of the town to enter into a contract on its behalf to have the street widened. Id. A city council has the power to advertise for bids and contract for paving a street before passing an ordinance ordering the work to be done if such steps were taken by proper resolution. Smith v. Westport [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 725.

83. Fayette County v. Krause, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 569, 73 S. W. 51. Code 1873, § 471, is complied with when four-fifths of a city council vote in favor of granting to an individual the right to establish a system of waterworks on the terms proposed by him. Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883. The approval of the majority of the committee authorized to order the improvement, no vote being taken, is insufficient. Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841.

84. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904. When a charter requires that a city shall by resolution declare the determination to make a public improvement, a resolution approving a proposed enabling bill to be presented to the legislature is a sufficient compliance. Kundinger v. Saginaw [Mich.] 93 N. W. 914. Where publication of a proposed ordinance must be made for five consecutive days, it is not fatal that the last day of publication was Sunday. Barber Asphalt Co. v. Muchenberger [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 280.

85. The city or town must by vote contract for the work, or authorize some one else to do so in its behalf. Wormstead v. Lynn, 184 Mass. 425, 68 N. E. 841. Where it is necessary that a contract be voted on before the council executes the same, such a contract is not invalidated by the fact that it differs from the one submitting the matter to a vote, where there are no wide departures and the changes do not indicate bad faith. Contract for erection of waterworks under § 639, McClain's Code. Centerville v. Fidelity T. & G. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 332.

86. Diamond v. Mankato, 89 Minn. 48, 93 N. W. 911.

87. A provision of a city charter that "all contracts for the erection and construction of public improvements shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder" has no application to the employment of an engineer to supervise the work of the contractor. Newport News v. Potter, 122 Fed. 321. A requirement that "notice shall be given thirty days before the work is finally let by advertisement in one or more newspapers" does not contemplate that the notice shall be published daily for the specified time. Id. A newspaper published daily except Sunday and legal holidays is nevertheless a daily newspaper. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Print. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 802. When the conditions imposed in the advertisement for bids are such that only the patentee of an article can supply it, there can be no fair competition, and a contract let under such circumstances would be void. Patented pavement. Diamond v. Mankato, 89 Minn. 48, 93 N. W. 911; Rose v. Low, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 461; Fineran v. Cent. Bitulithic Pav. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 876, 76 S. W. 415; Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Wilcox, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 245. But see Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925, where the fact that a contract called for Trinidad asphalt which was controlled by a single corporation was held insufficient to invalidate the contract. And this principle has been applied to a case where at the time of advertising for bids an ordinance existed requiring that all city printing bear the union label so-called. Marshall v. Nashville, 109 Tenn. 495, 71 S. W. 815. But it is otherwise where opportunity is given to bid as between a patented article and other classes of the same article. Pavement. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Willcox, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 574. Bridge. Kundinger v. Saginaw [Mich.] 93 N. W. 914. A charter requirement for the letting of contracts by advertisement is not complied with if the contract as advertised is on its face null and void. State v. King, 109 La. 799. But the mere fact that an advertisement calls for alternative bids on two different kinds of pavement does not invalidate the subsequent contract. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Gaar, 24 Ky. L. R. 2227, 73 S. W. 1106; Trowbridge v. Hudson, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 76; Trapp v. Newport, 25 Ky. L. R. 224, 74 S. W. 1109. A newspaper which gives prominence to legal news is within the meaning of a charter provision requiring city printing to be let to a newspaper of "general circulation" in the city. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Print. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 802. A fence is a building within the terms of a statute that all

person in accordance with the bid tendered by him in response to such advertisement;[88] and where a statute requires that drawings and specifications be adopted in advance of the letting of a contract, the advertisement and bids should be based upon such plans.[89] But designations upon a plan and made a part of the contract cannot overcome the plain language of the contract.[90] "Additional" work can be contracted for without advertising for new bids.[91] Irregularities in complying with provisions made for the benefit of a city may, to some extent at least, be waived by it when it is clearly for its benefit to do so, and when no damages will be inflicted upon or wrong done to others thereby.[92]

(§ 2) B. By the other party. Form and substance of offer.—To form the basis of a valid contract, the bid must conform to the proposal as advertised,[93] and substantially conform to the statutes and ordinances directing their submission. A substantial performance, however, is sufficient,[94] and a bidder may ignore buildings must be erected by contract let to the lowest bidder after notice. Swasey v. Shasta County, 141 Cal. 392, 74 Pac. 1031. Specifications in an advertisement for bids for erecting a bridge prescribing the character of the steel, and requiring that the bidder should have had a plant in operation for one year are proper. Meyers v. Pa. Steel Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 307. A city council which votes that it at once close a contract with an individual for a waterworks upon terms named does not authorize the mayor to enter into such a contract on behalf of the town. Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883.

89. Clark v. Lancaster County [Neb.] 96 N. W. 593. Where officers of a city prepared general plans for a bridge which were thereafter modified in detail only and regularly approved and the contract let, this constituted a valid letting. Sanborn v. Lindenthal, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 564. Where, in the proposed construction of a sewer, an advertisement stipulates that bidders must satisfy themselves by personal examination of the accuracy of an engineer's estimates, a contractor may not rely on a drawing as to the depth at which rock will be encountered. Kelly v. New York, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 299. A requirement that the bidder furnish with his bid a plan of the bridge he proposes to construct, instead of requiring him to bid upon a particular style of bridge, is proper, the charter not requiring a letting to the lowest bidder. Kundinger v. Saginaw [Mich.] 93 N. W. 914. So, also, provisions in specifications requiring a particular kind of material, and that the bidder should have had a plant in operation for a year. Knowles v. New York, 176 N. Y. 430, 68 N. E. 860; Meyers v. Pa. Steel Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 307. A provision in the specifications for paving a street that the contractor will keep it in repair without expense to the city for a period of eight years does not place the cost of repairing upon adjacent property holders, but is a guaranty as to the quality and character of the pavement. People v. Featherstonhaugh, 172 N. Y. 112, 64 N. E. 802.

90. Cunningham v. New York, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 197. Contractors sought to recover for pumping water out of sewer, the plans apparently showing a sewer which had it really existed would have carried off surplus water. Id.

91. See definition of "additional work" in 22 N. Y. Supp. 1020. Tenders and clusters of piles above and below the bridge are not necessary parts of the bridge and must be advertised for. Marion County v. Foxworth [Miss.] 36 So. 36.

92. The fact that the sureties offered in a bid by a contractor did not come up to the requirements of the law may be waived where the contractor is a responsible party and can furnish other sureties and the bid is for the benefit of the city. McCord v. Lauterbach, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 315.

93. Leflore County v. Cannon, 81 Miss. 334; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. North Bend [Neb.] 94 N. W. 537. The bid must correspond substantially to the terms and specifications upon which bids were invited. Le Tourneau v. Hugo [Minn.] 97 N. W. 115. If it contains a material change, and therefore a departure from the basis of the bidding, and becomes an element or consideration in the determination of who is the lowest bidder, it will invalidate the contract entered into (Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187); and where a bid, filed within the time fixed by the advertisement for receiving bids, is substantially changed and modified after such time, it is to be regarded as a new bid, received after other competitors had a right to presume that the contest was closed, and a contract based upon such a bid is void (Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. North Bend [Neb.] 94 N. W. 537). The statement in a proposal that the bidder if awarded the contract will cause the work to be done within the state and by union labor does not violate the principle that there must be free and open competition. Gillette v. Peabody [Colo. App.] 75 Pac. 18.

94. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187. Bids for "mason, steel and iron" deposited in a box marked "plumbing." McCord v. Lauterbach, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 315. A statute required a satisfactory guaranty by the bidder for proper performance. A bid which offered to "contract in compliance with said proposals and give the necessary security" is a sufficient compliance with the statute. People v. McDonough, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 257.

void legislation,[95] such as a requirement of the use of the union label,[96] the observance of the eight-hour law, alien labor law, and the like.[97]

As in private contracts, so also in public contracts, an offer made to a municipality is open to acceptance until withdrawn,[98] and where an official of a snow melting company, in pursuance of preliminary negotiations with the street commissioner of a city, submitted a written communication, offering to remove snow at a specified compensation, the city had a right to regard such communication as an offer, which, upon acceptance, constituted a valid contract.[99]

§ 3. How closed. Acceptance of bid or offer; approval or enabling law or ordinance; notification of bidder; bond and approval; execution and delivery of formal contract.—It is almost a universal provision, where statutes prescribe for a competitive bidding, that the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder.[1] A provision of this kind is mandatory, and unless the requirements imposed by the statute are complied with, the contract is void.[2] Responsibility of the bidder may be considered,[3] and the determination of who is the lowest bidder, with the qualification of responsibility, rests, not in the exercise of an arbitrary, unlimited discretion of the officer or board awarding the contract, but upon the exercise of a bona fide judgment, based upon facts tending reasonably to the support of such determination.[4] In deciding upon the responsibility of bidders, it is the duty of the board or officers, not only to take into consideration their pecuniary ability to perform the contract, but also to ascertain which ones, in point of skill, ability, and integrity, would be most likely to do faithful, conscientious work, and to fulfill the terms of the contract.[5] After determining who are responsible bidders and who are not, from among those bidding,[6] it becomes a matter of the amounts bid, and the law imposes the plain duty of selecting the bid lowest in amount.[7] A provision, however, that the contract shall be let upon

98. Defendant company offered to light plaintiff borough at a stated price, the offer to remain open a specified time. Meanwhile plaintiff advertised for bids for the same lighting, but rejected all of them. Held, by so doing, plaintiff did not lose its right to accept defendant's offer. Lansdowne v. Citizens' Elec. L. & P. Co., 206 Pa. 188.

99. Snow melting Co. v. New York, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 575.

1. The purpose of this requirement is of a twofold nature; to secure the lowest reasonable price by inviting competition and to prevent anything like favoritism on the part of the officers, and to secure fairness in the bidding. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187; Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. North Bend [Neb.] 94 N. W. 537. Awarding bodies have the power to reject all bids. Trapp v. Newport, 25 Ky. L. R. 224, 74 S. W. 1109. Where a charter requires that a contract be let to the lowest responsible bidder, the authorities cannot arbitrarily reject the lowest bidder and accept a higher one. Construing § 283 of the revised charter of the city of Buffalo. People v. Buffalo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 434.

2. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187; State v. King, 109 La. 799. It is unimportant whether an additional stipulation contained in the contract awarded to one who is not the lowest responsible bidder be in itself an advantage to the city or not. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187.

3. Not bound to make awards to the lowest bidders, but responsibility may be considered. Phila. v. Pemberton [Pa.] 57 Atl. 516. The "lowest bidder" is not necessarily the lowest in price (Trapp v. Newport, 25 Ky. L. R. 224, 74 S. W. 1109), nor the "lowest and best" bidder (Id.). A board of chosen freeholders is not obliged to award a contract to the lowest bidder. Middle Valley T. R. & M. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders [N. J. Law] 57 Atl. 258.

4. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187. The action of a printing board, in passing over an "unbalanced bid" which appears to be lowest, and accepting one which in reality is lowest, is proper and will not be set aside (People v. McDonough, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 162), but an arbitrary letting to one not the lowest bidder is subject to judicial review (Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Print. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 802).

5. Trapp v. Newport, 25 Ky. L. R. 224, 74 S. W. 1109; Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187. Other matters than the mere pecuniary responsibility of the bidder may be considered. Phila. v. Pemberton [Pa.] 57 Atl. 516.

"terms most advantageous to the state and public,"[8] or where bids in the alternative are called for, lodges in the awarding officials a discretion, and a bid which meets the requirements of the selection made may be accepted, though not the lowest in actual figures.[9]

Courts should proceed with great caution, when asked to interfere with the discretion conferred by law upon municipal officers, in regard to such matters,[10] and, in the absence of fraud or gross abuse, they will not interfere.[11] The authorization of the works, and the contract awarded, must receive the sanction of the public bodies whose approval is required.[12]

A charter which provides that the acceptance of a bid for a public utility by the common council, shall be by ordinance, resolution, or by-law, must be complied with, and acceptance by motion is fatal to the contract.[13]

Rights gained under an accepted bid may be transferred to another.[14] The fact that bids are not opened immediately after the time limited for their receipt, as required by the rules of the board, but were opened after an adjournment of one day, does not invalidate the contract.[15] The placing of bids for "mason, steel, iron," etc., in a box marked "plumbing," does not invalidate a contract let to one of the bidders.[16]

Where notice sent to contractor to commence work is not received by him until after the time appointed in the notice for the commencement, he must begin within a reasonable time thereafter.[17]

It is not necessary that the whole of a public improvement specified in a resolution of intention be awarded as one contract, especially if in widely separated districts, or if differing in character.[18] One who files his contract and bond within 10 days after publication of an ordinance accepting the bid and providing that it should be in force from and after approval by the mayor and publication, files the same within 10 days from the acceptance of his bid.[19]

In Georgia, where a bond was given at the time of the original construction of a bridge, the law did not require a bond for the repair of such bridge, when the cost of the repairs was less than $500.[20]

The absence of the corporate seal is not fatal to the valid execution of a contract,[21] and an agreement may be binding, though a formal contract has not been Rochester, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 494), and where bids were called for upon three kinds of pavement, one of which was brick, the particular kind of brick being specified, it was proper to accept a bid for the brick specified, although a bid was made for a different kind of brick at a less price (Sisson v. Buffalo, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 236).

executed,[22] but under a charter provision that "all contracts relating to city affairs shall be in writing, signed, and executed in the name of the city," no liability arises until a written contract is duly executed.[23]

§ 4. Essential provisions in, and conditions pertaining to, public contracts.—Statutes or ordinances which infringe upon the freedom of contract to which every citizen is entitled, or which tend to stifle competition by requiring that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor,[24] that no alien or convict labor shall be employed,[25] that all stone used shall be dressed within the territorial limits of the state,[26] and that all public printing shall bear the union label, so called,[27] are void, and while a valid statute regulating contracts is, by its own force, read into and made a part of such contracts, it is otherwise as to invalid statutes.[28] The provisions of such a statute or ordinance do not become obligatory, or of binding force upon the parties, because by them incorporated in the contract.[29] A taxpayer, however, cannot defeat the collection of a tax, because these or similar provisions are incorporated in a contract, without showing that such clauses affected the bidding or limited competition.[30] And the fact that such provisions were embodied in a contract will not preclude recovery by the contractor, even though it be shown that competition was influenced thereby, in the absence of a showing of fraud or bad faith.[31]

Assent on the part of a municipality is often made a condition to the construction of an improvement affecting the public,[32] and under the charter of a city which gives to an official control of the construction of subways by a contractor, and requires his permit therefor, he may, as a condition to such permit, stipulate that all reasonable expense of inspection be borne by such contractor.[33]

It is not fatal to a contract for building sidewalk, that it was let before the expiration of the time in which the owner had permission himself to build.[34]

A public contract is not invalidated because embodying a condition that the contractor's pay shall be deferred until collections have been made from the tax-

A statute, making it a criminal offense for a contractor on a public work to permit or require an employe to perform labor upon that work in excess of eight hours each day, does not violate the freedom of contract, guaranteed by the 14th amendment of the constitution of the United States. payers applicable to the particular purpose.[35] In the absence of fraud or collusion, a contract with a public body will not be held void, on the ground of excessive compensation.[36]

§ 5. Interpretation and effect of public contracts, and performance and discharge.—Agreements which tend to stifle or eliminate competition are against public policy and void.[37] But in public contracts, as in others, where the contract is severable and one part or provision is void or unenforceable, the void provision may be rejected and the contract enforced as to the remainder.[38]

Public contracts should be liberally construed in favor of the public,[39] and should be so construed that all parts may stand together, if they are capable of such an interpretation.[40] The rule of contemporaneous construction by officers charged with the enforcement of statutes is not always controlling,[41] and can have no application where the construction of a general statute, having uniform operation throughout the state, appears to have been construed only by the officers of one county.[42]

Where a contractor was obligated to begin operations within one week after written notice, and complete them within two months, a fulfillment within two months of the last day allotted by the notice for commencement is a sufficient compliance.[43] Where a notice to commence work is received after the time set therein, the contractor should commence work within a reasonable time.[44]

Where, under a contract to build a state road the contractor was to receive as compensation a given quantity of swamp land in a designated county, then valued at $1.25 per acre, and at the completion of the contract there was not in such county sufficient of the land contemplated, a subsequent appropriation of the requisite quantity in another county, valued at $8 per acre, was a sufficient compliance, the contractor not objecting.[45] A contractor having followed the specifications and directions, but the desired results not being obtained, on being ordered to reconstruct, and so doing, he is entitled to recover therefor,[46] but where a contractor relies on figures given by a city official who is not bound to give them, and the contractor might have obtained them elsewhere, the official is his agent, and the city is not liable.[47]

Under a charter provision that each selectman shall receive a certain fixed compensation and his "necessary expenses," a city is not liable to third persons for things furnished to such official, even though used in the performance of a public duty.[48] Delays caused by the city,[49] or waived by it,[50] do not constitute a breach. Enforcement of a provision in a contract of a municipal corporation, for the construction of a sewer, requiring that the laborers should not be required to work more than eight hours a day, does not entitle the contractor to recover damages for delay to the work caused thereby.[51] Recovery on a quantum meruit is sometimes allowed.[52]

It not infrequently happens that some municipal officer is made the arbiter of controverted matters. The decision of the official under such circumstances, in the absence of fraud or palpable error, is usually final and binding on all parties.[53] And a decision by such officials cannot be unreasonably withheld,[54] nor

It is not binding if it does not accord with the honest judgment of the engineer making it, and the burden to prove dishonesty is upon the party attacking the estimate. Lamson v. Marshall [Mich.] 95 N. W. 78. A clause in a contract referring the question of the fulfillment of the contract to the city engineer cannot, by implication, be enlarged so as to include the right to determine what shall be paid by way of damages for nonfulfillment. (Somerset Borough v. Ott [Pa.] 56 Atl. 1079), and a provision in a contract that the work in question should be presented at the times, and in the manner directed by the resident engineer, had reference to the manner of carrying on the work and did not contemplate or vest in the engineer authority to discontinue or abandon it (Baker v. State, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 528). Under Laws 1896, p. 751, c. 626, work done under the authority thereby given must be approved by the board of estimate and apportionment before recovery can be had therefor. Withers v. New York, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1105. Where the contract provides that the decision of a certain officer shall be final as to the sufficiency of all work done thereunder, and he has signed and approved an estimate of the work, the city comptroller has no authority to refuse to pay for it. Com. v. Pittsburg, 204 Pa. 219;

action indefinitely delayed without conferring a right of action.[55] The certificat of the city engineer in approval of the work will not release the surety on th bond, where the contract does not make the certificate conclusive as to the prope performance of the work.[56] Neither will acceptance and payment for the worl by the city, unless done with knowledge of the defective condition of the work.[5

"Extra" work is that which arises outside and entirely independent of the con tract, something not required in its performance, while "additional" work is some thing which is necessarily required in the performance of the contract and tha without which it could not be carried out.[58] As a general rule the governing bod of a municipal corporation has the power, if vested rights are not thereby inter fered with, and the rights of third parties have not intervened, to rescind actio previously taken.[59]

Id., 206 Pa. 379. Engineers and other city or county officers cannot unreasonably refuse to approve work of a contractor. Work was completed substantially according to terms of contract. Ross v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 611.

54. Refusal by engineer to certify performance of contract. Ross v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 611. Where the defective condition of a sewer is due solely to an improper method of construction lawfully ordered by an engineer in charge, the contractor is entitled to recover notwithstanding the engineer withholds the estimate. Lamson v. Marshall [Mich.] 95 N. W. 78. Where a contractor agrees to erect, on the land of a municipal corporation, a garbage furnace, according to plans and specifications, to be paid for when completed and tested according to the satisfaction of the committee of the town's council, and the contractor fully performs the contract, the committee cannot defeat the contractor's right of recovery by capriciously and unreasonably refusing to express its satisfaction of the work. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Greenville [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 55. It is a question for the jury whether or not a certificate of overtime was actuated by bad faith. Where a sum is withheld as damages for delay, and such delay, or a part thereof, arose through no fault of the contractor, but through matters allowed by the city, held, a question for the jury whether or not certificate of overtime was actuated by bad faith. Masterson v. New York, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 622. Where a building contract requires an architect's certificate as a condition precedent to payments thereon, the city having declared the contract forfeited and the performance of the work thereunder abandoned, and having taken possession of the building for the purpose of completing the same, it is not necessary for the builder to furnish the architect's certificate to maintain an action to recover for work done. An agreement that an engineer's estimate shall be final is binding if honestly made. Ocorr & R. Co. v. Little Falls, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 592.

Albany, 86 App. Div. [N Y.] 567. Where a sewer properly construc ted settles and is relaid, pursuant to the cit engineer's order, such work is within a con tract, requiring that if alterations increas the amount of the work, such increase shal be paid for according to the quantity actu ally done, and at the price fixed by the con tract. Allen v. Melrose, 184 Mass. 1, 67 N. E 1060. The fact that allowance is made fo delay does not prevent contractor from re covering for extra work. In construction o sewer contractor had to remove extra fill ing, placed upon the line of his work b preceding grading contractors. Thilemann v New York, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 136. Wher a contract provides that no claims shall b allowed for extra work in the absence of written instruction from the engineer, fail ure to obtain such written instruction pre cludes the contractor from recovering fo such extra work. Johnson v. Albany, 86 App Div. [N. Y.] 567. Removing filling placed i street by preceding grading contractors, b one engaged in constructing a sewer, is extr work. Thilemann v. New York, 82 App Div. [N. Y.] 136. Nonexistence of an allege adjoining sewer does not entitle a contracto constructing a sewer to recover for extr expense in pumping, where he had an oppor tunity, and did view the place, and coul have seen that no sewer existed. Id. Provi sions as to furnishing plans of details an that anything omitted in the specification and shown in the drawings or vice vers should be done without extra charge or ex pense does not authorize the architect t change the plans. Dwyer v. New York, 7 App. Div. [N. Y.] 224. Contractors sue fo value of extra work claiming by plans the could have drained the water in the ditche into a sewer shown on plans, but that as th sewer did not exist they had to pump i Held, from the facts, that they should hav known of its nonexistence and cannot re cover. Cunningham v. New York, 39 Mis [N. Y.] 197. § 6. Remedies and procedure. A. Of aggrieved bidders.—An unsuccessful bidder may institute proceedings, by certiorari, to have the action of the awarding body reviewed,[60] or he may apply for an injunction to restrain the officials from awarding the contract to another.[61] If, however, the work has already been begun, the only remedy is a decree enjoining the contractor from proceeding further with the work, setting aside the award, and referring the matter back to the officials,[62] and if the work is completed, there is but one remedy, and that is an action for damages.[63]

A bidder who has deposited a sum of money as a guaranty that he will enter into a contract, and whose bid is such that it cannot lawfully be accepted, may recover the deposit.[64] The decision of the board of awards in letting a contract to a bidder will be reviewed by the courts, where fraud is shown.[65] The ordinance under which bids are advertised for, providing that the council should have the power to reject any and all bids, a bidder cannot complain of its action in so doing.[66]

(§ 6) B. Against bidders.—A taxpayer may seek the aid of a court of equity and relief, by injunction, to enjoin the improper creation of a debt.[67]

(§ 6) C. On the contract proper.—Where the contract is that payment is to be made only out of special assessments, or a particular fund, when, and as the same shall be actually collected, the contractor taking the risk of their validity, no general liability on the part of the city arises,[68] unless the improvement is such that the city has no power to assess the cost against adjacent property,[69] or where there has been some wrongful act, negligence, or default on the part of the corporation which injuriously affects the rights of a claimant.[70]

The requirement by a city that a contractor abide by a contract provision restricting laborers to eight hours a day does not confer a right of action,[71] and in California, a recovery may not be had against the state, for services rendered a state board, in the absence of an appropriation by the legislature out of which the claim can be paid.[72]

An action on a public contract must be timely brought.[73] In Kentucky, an extra work, the board of commissioners, having ordered such work, was estopped from objecting that there was no written agreement. Dwyer v. New York, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 224.

59. Where town trustees have caused final estimate of the total cost of an improvement and the engineer's report to be made, as required by Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4293, it has power to rescind and set aside its action in causing the estimate and report to be made on the ground that the work has not been completed according to contract. Greenwood v. State, 159 Ind. 267, 64 N. E. 849. A contract let in the statutory mode can only be repealed or annulled in the same manner. Commissioner of public works has no authority to change or modify a paving contract. Becker v. New York, 176 N. Y. 441, 68 N. E. 855.

70. Pine Tree Lumber Co. v. Fargo [N. D.] 96 N. W. 357. Where in a contract for a sewer a city limits its liability to a particular fund, which it alone has power to create and secure, and through the negligence of one of its officials such fund fails, the city is liable to the contractor in damages for breach of contract. O'Hara v. Scranton, 205 Pa. 142. Diversion of fund raised by selling bonds. Sherman v. Connor [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 238.

73. A cause of action accrues, so that limitations commence to run, where a city failed to properly assess benefits, by reason of which plaintiffs were enjoined from completing their contract, at the time when, by the injunction, plaintiffs were informed of the city's failure in precedent performance. Ash v. Independence [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 104.

action to enforce payment of the contract price, the contract being in writing, will not be barred until after fifteen years.[74]

In the absence of statutory provisions it is a general rule that all actions brought by, or prosecuted in behalf of, a county must be by authority of the board of supervisors.[75]

Contract rights and obligations growing out of a franchise granted by a city to a water company may be adjudicated by the courts, in the same manner, and by the same proceedings, which obtain between litigants in general.[76]

In an action against a city, the declaration need not allege that the city had power to make the contract; this, as well as that such authority was properly exercised, will be presumed, the contract being valid on its face and within the scope of the general powers of the city,[77] but complainants who do not show that they sustain a special or peculiar relation to the matters in controversy cannot challenge the validity of a contract,[78] and where a method of procedure in entering into a contract is not exclusive, a complaint which fails to state that the other methods were not followed is defective.[79] Where a municipality brings suit to recover money alleged to be due under a contract which has been practically executed upon its part, a citizen and a taxpayer has no interest to defeat such recovery on the ground that the contract was unauthorized.[80]

A defendant who wishes to urge the illegality of a contract must plead such defense in his answer.[81]

In an action for the value of wood furnished to a town school district, the record of a vote of the annual town meeting to pay the claim is admissible in evidence.[82]

It is error to nonsuit a plaintiff in an action to recover for salary as an attorney for a county, where the evidence does not show that plaintiff was unable or incompetent to perform his contract.[83] The damages a city is entitled to recover on a breach of contract by a contractor is the difference, if any, between the contract price plus the value of extra materials furnished by the contractor, and the amount reasonably paid by it to complete the works plus the sum paid to the contractor, on account of the contract.[84]

79. Peckham v. Watsonville, 138 Cal. 242, 71 Pac. 169. In California a defect in a complaint to foreclose the lien of a street assessment, the allegations showing that the board of supervisors acquired jurisdiction to pass its resolution of intention, but that the resolution passed was void and insufficient to confer on the board jurisdiction to make its subsequent orders and award, is not cured by an allegation that the resolution of intention was "duly passed and made" under Code Civ. 84. Contract for erection of waterworks. Sherman v. Connor [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 238. Where there is no evidence that a city has sustained loss of profits by reason of the breach of a contract, the city is not entitled to recover damages, if the amount reasonably expended by the city to complete the contract did not exceed the contract price plus the value of the extra materials furnished by the contractor. Id.

cannot assert the failure to execute a given power in a statutory way in the letting of the contract,[85] and sureties cannot avoid liability on the ground of want of knowledge of the subletting of the contract, there being no condition in the contract against subletting,[86] nor will the payment by a city on work accepted by it, under an honest belief that it was done in the manner required by the contract, release the surety.[87]

(§ 6) E. Under lien laws.—In Illinois, where a lien for material or labor, upon proper notice, is given against the fund, the remedy on the bond of an official for his failure to retain money is not exclusive,[88] and in New York, a material man may foreclose a lien although a prior lien had been filed upon the same claim, and though the sureties in the undertaking given on a discharge of the lien, were not made parties.[89] A lienor who unsuccessfully contests the lien of other claimants is liable only for such costs as are incurred in litigating the claim.[90]

A bond conditioned for the payment of labor and material claims affords protection to day laborers,[91] but it does not include materials and articles not actually used in and as a part of the construction under contract, and which, though employed in doing the work in question, survive its performance,[92] and a surety cannot set up the violation of a provision, both of law and the contract, forbidding the employment of alien labor by the principal as a defense in an action on such a bond.[93]

PUBLIC LANDS.

This topic includes both state and Federal lands. For obvious reasons the treatment of each is separate from the other within each section; but many principles common to both may be found. Hence the reader is likely to profit by a careful examination of both.

But a bond for faithful performance does not inure to the benefit of laborers and materialmen, even though it contain a clause that the contractor shall pay the claims of such persons, and even though it appear that no special bond was given for their benefit. The bond is for the protection of the city, the additional stipulation as to the pay of laborers and materialmen being merely an incident. Lancaster v. Frescoln, 203 Pa. 640. A contract having stipulated among other things that the contractor should pay all labor and material claims, in a suit on the accompanying bond the unpaid labor and material men are proper parties. Rights in public lands or as against the public can only be acquired by virt of a statute.[97] An estoppel cannot arise,[98] and an avulsion will not change t boundary previously fixed between the states.[99] After incorporation of a town the state reserved lands in Maine, title to the lands and timber vests in the tow

Johanson v. Wash., 1 U. S. 179, 47 Law. Ed. 1008. The secretary the interior could not withdraw lands wit in indemnity limits of the grant to the Ca fornia and O. railroad, from operation the settlement laws on mere acceptance the map of definite location [Act July 1866, c. 242, (14 Stat. 239)]. Or. & C. R. C v. U. S., 189 U. S. 103, 47 Law. Ed. 726.

8. After cancellation or forfeiture the la again becomes subject to entry. McMichs v. Murphy [Okl.] 70 Pac. 189; Hodges Colcord [Okl.] 70 Pac. 383. The right entry given by Act of Congress (21 St 141) to a contestant who procures the ca cellation of a homestead entry inures to t benefit of one who induced the relinquis under the timber lands act, though after removal of the timber they will be arable.[9] Those open to occupancy and settlement, chiefly valuable for petroleum or other mineral oils, may be entered under the placer mining claim laws.[10] Lands obtained by treaty from the Comanches, Kiowas and Apaches in Oklahoma were classed as agricultural, but subject to Federal mineral laws.[11]

Reservations.—Lands in the public domain may be reserved therefrom by executive order for any lawful purpose.[12] "Public lands" available for forest reservation do not include existing Indian reservations.[13] A proclamation for a forest reservation from public lands need not be signed by the president, but when made by the secretary of the interior, will be presumed to have been directed by the president.[14]

Swamp land grants.—In the absence of fraud, a state cannot sell swamp lands patented by the United States before admission of the state.[15] School sections are not included in the swamp lands.[16]

Railroad grants.—A grant may include lands within city limits.[17] Lands embraced in other grants are within terms of reservation, exception and the like,[18] but if both grants are to the same company, this rule fails.[19]

Lands excluded from a grant cannot be taken as indemnity selections to make up such grant.[20] Bona fide prior settlers within limits of such grants will be protected,[21] thus where for lack of a survey no application could have been sooner ment of a homestead entry made by an alien, although a settlement was made between the homestead entry and the initiation of the contest. Hodges v. Colcord, 193 U. S. 192.

12. The president, by executive order in 1842 and 1849, could reserve part of the public domain on Amelia island as a military reservation. Fla. Town Imp. Co. v. Bigalsky [Fla.] 33 So. 450, citing many cases.

13. The fifteen townships in the Bitter Root valley, formerly occupied by the Flathead Indians, cannot be set apart by presidential proclamation for a forest reserve. Under Act June 5, 1872 (17 Stat. 226, c. 308) removing the Indians, they are not "public lands" in the sense of being a part of the public domain, and not subject to reserve under Act March 3, 1891, § 24 (26 Stat. 1103, c. 561). 17. United States statutes granting the U. C. Railroad Company a right of way over public lands between Ogden and Salt Lake City was not limited to a right of way to the city limits, but extended to land within the city. Moon v. Salt Lake County [Utah] 76 Pac. 222.

18. No lands within the 30 mile limit of the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific company by act July 27, 1866, passed to the Southern Pacific by grants made to that company by the joint resolution of June 28, 1870, or the the act of March 3, 1871 [14 Stat. 292; 16 Stat. 382; 16 Stat. 573]. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 544. Lands within the 20 mile limit of the Texas Pacific Railroad grant were excepted from the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad [Act March 3, 1871, c. 122, § 9 and § 23 (16 Stat. 573)]. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 447, 47 Law. Ed. 896.

19. No reservation of lands within a portion of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Company which was forfeited to the United States was effected by the transmission to the secretary of the interior of a map of the general line of the road which was not authorized by the company nor accepted by the government. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 193 U. S. 1.

20. The Southern Pacific cannot make indemnity selections within indemnity limits of its grant, but also in the forfeited place limits of the Texas Pacific grant [Act March 3, 1871, c. 122, §§ 3, 9 (16 Stat. 573)]. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 447, 47 Law. Ed. 896.

21. Bona fide homestead settlers could enter alternate odd-numbered sections within the exterior limits of the general route of the Northern Pacific Railroad before definite location of the road [North. 108, 47 Law. Ed. 406. Selection of lands within indemnity limits of the grant to the California and O. Railroad to supply deficiencies in place limits will not affect rights of a bona fide settler occupying previously within intention of acquiring title under the homestead laws on survey of the lands [Act July 25, 1866, c. 242]. The company could acquire no interest before actual and approved selection. Or. & C. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 103, 47 Law. Ed. 726.

22. A bona fide settler on an odd-numbered section within indemnity limits of the California & O. Railroad grant is prior in right to the company on its subsequent selection of such land to supply deficiencies in place limits, though it afterward appears that all such sections within the indemnity limits were necessary to supply such deficiencies; (Act July 25, 1866, c. 242). He has no notice of such fact until by filing a map of the line etc., such deficiency becomes legally known. Or. & C. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 103, 47 Law. Ed. 726.

23. Lands settled without the required residence or proof under the Oregon donation act and the amendatory act of Congress, Feb. 14, 1853, fifteen years before their selection as lieu lands by the Oregon C. railroad company within indemnity limits of its grant were not "reserved" from sale within meaning of the grant [9 Stat. 496, c. 76, and 10 Stat. 158, c. 69, construed with Oregon Central R. grant, July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239, c. 242)]. Or. & C. R. Co. v. U. S., 190 U. S. 186, 47 Law. Ed. 1012.

24. Lands solely or chiefly valuable for granite quarries are within an exception of "mineral lands" in the Northern Pac. R. grant, July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365, c. 217). Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U. S. 526, 47 Law. Ed. 575.

25. Forfeiture of unearned Federal lands granted to states to aid railroads reinvested the United States with the legal title so that they may be conveyed [Act Congress, Sept. 29, 1890 (26 Stat. 496-499, c. 1040)]. Doe v. Pugh [Ala.] 34 So. 377.

26. Forfeiture of lands in a railroad grant inures to the benefit of the United States and not to benefit of a grantee in a later grant; lands within indemnity limits of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad grant did not pass to the Southern Pacific railroad, though within place limits of the grant to the Texas and Pacific railroad, the rights to which vested in the Southern Pacific [Act July 27, 1866 (4 Stat. 292, c. 278), forfeiture act c July 6, 1886 (24 Stat. 123, c. 637), and Ac March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 573, c. 122)]. that they are in the tract opened for sale by statute.[33] Lands purchased by one who fails to reside thereon are not open to resale until there has been declared a forfeiture.[34] Hence a subsequent purchaser cannot show such forfeiture as against a certificate issued to the first settler.[35] It is against public policy to grant lands in the beds of navigable streams to private persons,[36] and a law for sale of "vacant" lands will not include a river bed which has emerged by an avulsion, unless it clearly means such lands.[37]

School lands in Texas cannot be bought until notice of classification and appraisement has reached the county clerk.[38] Such lands are "detached" and subject to sale when all adjoining lands have been sold but one section for which application is pending.[39] Leased public school lands in Texas cannot be purchased, though the lessee is ineligible as a purchaser,[40] or though there is a void sale to the assignee of the lessee.[41] The register and receiver of the Louisiana land office are judges of the fact whether land sought to be entered was subject to regular tidal overflow.[42]

(§ 2) C. Who may locate and acquire.—Officers, clerks and employes in the general land office of the United States cannot purchase public mineral lands.[43] A state corporation is a citizen within Federal laws regulating purchase of public lands excepted from railroad grants.[44]

Purchasers and occupants of other lands may buy additional school lands in Texas,[45] including minors who are actual settlers,[46] if they intend to make the lands their home;[47] but mere occupants are ineligible to purchase.[48] One not an actual settler on Texas school lands cannot purchase them.[49] If such lands are leased, they cannot be sold to other than the lessee without his consent,[50] except to an assignee of the lessee.[51] After the lease has terminated for sixty days, the lessee has a prior right of purchase for thirty days.[52] Transfer of the lease forfeits the lessee's preferential rights to purchase after expiration of the lease.[53] Where a lease is canceled for arrears of rent, and a new lease made to the lessee without payment of arrears, another may purchase regardless of the new lease.[54] The assignee of a lease of land in the absolute lease district cannot purchase during the continuance of the lease.[55] The statutory provision that leased lands be kept on sale for a certain period after expiration of the leases, where improvements to a certain amount are on the land, applies only to the one making the improvements,[56] and entitles him to apply to purchase but not to prevent sale by applying for a new lease.[57] Hence, if contemporaneous applications be made by a stranger to purchase and by the lessee to re-lease, the applicant to purchase is preferred.[58] One's right to purchase detached lands is not affected by the fact that he procured a purchase which caused them to be detached.[59]

§ 3. Mode of locating and acquiring title. A. Federal. By settlement, entry and claim.—Generally all the prescribed conditions respecting the mode of competing for, locating, and entering lands must be observed and the statutory mode followed. Only those awarded the right to homestead entry after Aug. 6, 1901, could occupy the lands acquired by treaty in Oklahoma from the Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches, to discover oils or make mineral locations before Oct. 5, 1901. 31 Stat. 680, 1093, and president's proclamation opening such lands to settlement. Bay v. Okla. S. G., O. & Min. Co. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 936. A placer mining claim, located on Aug. 8, 1901, on lands acquired by treaty with the Comanches, Kiowas and Apaches in Oklahoma, is in violation of law and ineffective as against a homestead entryman. Id.

61. The president's proclamation opening a 100 foot strip for occupancy by prospective settlers, on the land ceded by the Cherokee nation, before the opening of the tract for settlement referred to 100 feet within the exterior boundary of the Cherokee lands [Proc. Aug. 19, 1893; Act 1893 (27 Stat. 640, 643, c. 209)]. Winsbrenner v. Forney, 189 U. S. 148, 47 Law. Ed. 754. One who entered the Osage reservation before noon, Sept. 16, 1893, and ran for lands in the Cherokee outlet opened that day, is not disqualified from homestead entry therein. McClung v. Penny [Okl.] 70 Pac. 404. One without territory in Oklahoma opened for settlement by acts of March 1 and 2, 1889, and the proclamation of March 23, 1889, is not disqualified to compete for the land because within the prohibited period he was within the territory; it was not shown that he acquired any manifest advantage over competitors. Potter v. Hall, 189 U. S. 292, 47 Law. Ed. 817.

62. Bass v. Smith [Okl.] 71 Pac. 628. That a lumber company lent money without security to enable persons to enter and pay for land under the stone and timber act, expecting to buy the timber on title being given the entrymen, will not make entries notice of prior rights,[63] but a contract made after final proof will not defeat the entry.[64] An entry for a particular purpose is not efficient to acquire any rights not incident to it but open to claim of a different sort.[65] Only mineral lands or those on which minerals are "discovered" can be located as mining claims.[66]

The "actual occupation" by a homesteader means residence on the land,[67] at a time when it was not segregated from the public domain by some other entry.[68] It must be followed by a seasonable entry of the claim,[69] but delay due to the fact that no survey was made has been excused.[70] Transfer of possessory right to lands segregated from the public domain by an Indian citizen to a United States citizen is not abandonment rendering lands public domain open to possession by another Indian.[71]

Application for a soldier's additional homestead is not under homestead laws, but the grant is in nature of a bounty.[72] Local land officers cannot determine sufficiency of an application for vacant lands in lieu of lands relinquished in a forest reservation.[73] A notary public may take affidavits on application for a soldier's additional homestead.[74] It is within the power of the secretary of the interior to deny an application to make a homestead entry made by a person who has no equities in the land when injustice would be done to an allottee under an Indian allotment erroneously made.[75] A valid homestead entry of agricultural lands may be divested at any time before final proof, payment and receipt, by a showing that the land is more valuable for minerals than agriculture.[76]

Commutative rights.—The fourteen months before which a homestead can be commuted is reckoned from entry not from a settlement on which a conflicting void for fraud where there was no agreement for sale prior to the entries; nor are the entries void as made on "speculation," the entrymen intending to sell the timber for their own benefit. U. S. v. Detroit T. & L. Co., 124 Fed. 393.

70. Continuous occupation of public land, with bona fide intention to acquire it under homestead laws, as soon as surveyed, is a "claim" on the land within the Northern Pacific Land grant where begun before definite location of the road, and the occupier may perfect his title under the homestead laws as soon as the land is surveyed [Act Congress, July 2, 1864, c. 217, § 3 (13 Stat. 365); Act Congress, May 14, 1880, c. 89, § 3 (21 Stat. 140)]. entry was canceled,[77] hence, one whose time for entry after successful contest was not ripe will have only a preference.[78]

Sale of town lots.—Under the Federal law authorizing sale of townsite lots according to the laws of the state or territory to be prescribed, a judge proceeding to sell unsurveyed lands must strictly follow the mode found in the state statute.[79]

Under land grants.—Formal conveyance was unnecessary to title in lands granted in praesenti to the state,[80] but the lands must first have been legally determined to be of the class granted, e. g., swamp lands.[81] A determination so made is not rebuttable by parol.[82] Where the lands granted can be identified only by the line of a road, it must be definitely located before they will vest.[83] The selection of lands is governed by general law except in such cases as a special law covers.[84] A selection regularly made is effective despite the disapproval of land officers illegally made,[85] and an approval by an unauthorized officer is good when ratified by congress.[86] Selection of lands, under the Federal swamp land grants, by the state and approval by the Federal land department, will vest title in the levee board on

A purchaser of overflowed lands granted to Arkansas takes subject to confirmation by the secretary of the interior of the selection of such lands made by the state. Williamson & Bro. v. Baugh [Ark.] 76 S. W. 423. The swamp land acts of Congress, 1849 and 1850, were not intended to operate against the will of the state, and the state having failed to select and the secretary of the interior having failed to approve certain lands as falling within the terms of those statutes, and such lands having been certified to, and accepted by, the state under act of Congress (11 Stat. 18), granting lands in aid of railroads, the title acquired by the railroads cannot be defeated by an individual claiming to have purchased the lands as swamp lands and whose title has been annulled at the suit of the state. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Tibbs [La.] 36 So. 223.

82. The decision of the secretary of the interior as to character of land under the grant of swamp and overflowed land to a state cannot be defeated by parol evidence. Act Congress, Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84 (9 Stat. 519). Contest between claimant under the state and homestead claimant. Williamson & Bro. v. Baugh [Ark.] 76 S. W. 423.

83. The alternate odd numbered sections within the exterior limits of the general route of the Northern Pacific Railway were not vested in the company by filing a map of the general route and a withdrawal order thereon so as not to be open to bona fide homestead settlers before definite location of the road under Northern Pac. grant; Act July 2, 1864, c. 217 (13 Stat. 365) § 6 and § 3. Nelson v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 188 U. S. 108, 47 Law. Ed. 406.

84. Provisions by Federal statutes for selection of public land in lieu of school sections applied to Washington territory as to any other territory in cases not provided for by special provisions of Act March 2, 1853 [Act Feb. 26, 1859 (11 Stat. 385, c. 58), and Act March 2, 1853 (10 Stat. 179, c. 90, § 20), R. S. § 1947]. Johanson v. Wash., 190 U. S. 179, 47 Law. Ed. 1008.

85. Illegal action of the land officers in rejecting indemnity selections of a railroad company under its grant will not affect the rights to such lands where the company had done all required by law to perfect its title. Sjoli v. Dreschel [Minn.] 95 N. W. 763. Hence a prior settlement on which application was not timely filed avails nothing against such selection. Id.

86. Past approval, as well as future, of selection of public lands in lieu of school sections by the secretary of the interior was covered by the act of Dec. 18, 1902 (32 Stat. 756, c. 5), confirming title of state of Washington to lands thus selected. The secretary of the treasury was not designated as the officer to select public lands in lieu of school sections under the act of Feb. 26, 1859; his approval, however, of a selection by a territorial agent of Washington is conclusive on the transfer of title, unless some direction of congress manifestly has been violated (Act Feb. 26, 1859 and Act May 20, 1826 [4 Stat. 179, c. 83], construed with Act March 3, 1849 [9 Stat. 395, c. 108]); the provisions and the transfer of supervising power to him simply describe the general mode of procedure. Johanson v. Wash., 190 U. S. 179, 47 Law. Ed. 1008.

conveyance to it by the state.[87] Mere clerical misdescriptions in proceedings to select and acquire lands may be disregarded.[88] The grant of 1849 carried title to shallow lakes and overflowed swamps, though not surveyed.[89]

Patents or certificates.—When there is a grant in the terms of an act, no patent is necessary, but only such survey or description as will identify the land.[90] A patent to land is presumed to be valid and to pass the legal title,[91] hence mining locators after entry of a townsite and issuance of a patent cannot attack the patent collaterally.[92]

Defective titles and confirmation thereof.—A bona fide purchaser from a railroad grantee,[93] if without notice that the lands were excepted from its grant,[94] may claim a preferential right to purchase the land where the grantee is unable to make title, but not as against a location or claim prior to his purchase.[95] If an entry is relinquished because of contest, a stranger cannot enter and thus defeat the contestant's preference.[96]

Settlement must have been made at a time when land is public and open to settlement or it will not be cured.[97] An exception from a reservation of lands "settled" pursuant to law covers lands occupied and improved in good faith awaiting a survey when entry could be made[98] and an unauthorized or improper withdrawal from

87. Grants of 1849 (9 Stat. 352, c. 87) and 1850 (9 Stat. 519, c. 84). McDade v. Bossier Levee Board, 109 La. 625.

88. A statement in an adjustment list of a grant of lands in aid of a railroad, showing a grant to the "C. & T." company (shown not to be in existence) will be regarded as a clerical misstatement by which the "T. & C." railroad company was meant. Galloway v. Doe, 136 Ala. 315.

89. Beds of shallow lakes on state lands are lands under the Louisiana statute (Act No. 247 of 1855); permanently overflowed swamps or shallow lakes destined to become dry are land under and passed by the swamp land grants of 1849 to the states (9 Stat. 352, c. 87). Failure of a survey to traverse a water covered area in the tract or in computation of its acreage will not prevent the selection by the state or approval by the general government. McDade v. Bossier Levee Board, 109 La. 625. Act of Congress, 1849, c. 87 (9 Stat. 352) and Act 1850, c. 84 (9 Stat. 519), granting a subdivision of land to the state carried with it all land in the subdivision whether dry or overflowed. Hall v. Board of Com'rs, 111 La. 913.

90. Act of Congress, March 3, 1845, c. 48 (5 Stat. 742) is in the nature of a compact between the state and the United States and when, by survey, a sixteenth section is ascertained to exist in any township, the grant immediately attaches thereto, without a patent. State v. Jennings [Fla.] 35 So. 986. A survey and acts of the surveyor general showing the existence of fractional section 16 and its acreage were sufficient to cause a grant to attach to said fractional section as school land. Id.

91. On introduction by defendant, plaintiff must show its invalidity or that proceedings under which it issued were void. Hooper v. Young, 140 Cal. 274, 74 Pac. 140.

92. Rev. St. U. S. 2392, preventing acquisition of mines or valid mining claims under the townsite law. Board of Education v. Mansfield [S. D.] 95 N. W. 286.

93. Where land in a section granted to a railroad company and afterward excepted because of prior preemption, which was abandoned before the grant, was sold by the company to a bona fide purchaser, the latter acquired a prior right to purchase from the United States [Act Cong. March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 557) § 5]. Ramsay v. Tacoma Land Co., 31 Wash. 351, 71 Pac. 1024.

94. A person seeking to bring settlers on lands excepted from a railroad grant is entitled to preferential right of purchase given by statute to bona fide purchasers from the company, where he had a written agreement with the company giving him right to purchase indemnity lands of the company for himself and others when the company has acquired title, but the preference will not cover a subsequent settlement on such lands with knowledge that they were withdrawn from entry and reserved to supply deficiencies within place limits of the company [Act March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556, c. 376)]. Gertgens v. O'Connor, 191 U. S. 237.

95. Entry of public land and construction of a pipe line under claim of a water right will give vested ditch and water rights against later purchasers from a railroad company claiming right of purchase from the government given by act of Congress to purchasers of forfeited railway lands [Act July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. 251, c. 262), construed with Act March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556, c. 376)]. San Jose L. & W. Co. v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 47 Law. Ed. 765.

96. Where, after entry, a homesteader relinquishes his filing because of a contest by another, the preference right of the latter is not defeated by adverse settlement of a third person after entry of the homesteader. Hodges v. Colcord [Okl.] 70 Pac. 383.

97. Lands are not "public," the title to which is vested in the state for a railroad grant though the grant is afterwards forfeited under its terms [Act May 14, 1880, § 3 (21 Stat. 141)]. Edwards v. Begole [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 1.

98. Occupancy by a settler intending to make it his home and to enter it under preemption or homestead laws when sur-

entry will not defeat the right to perfect the claim.[99] The right may be lost by abandonment before residence is complete.[1] One entitled under the statute to confirmation of title, he having by mistake but without fraud proved too soon, does not lose it by subsequent fraud in supplemental proofs.[2] The fact that a provision is made to protect bona fide grantees of a patentee will not import a confirmation of an erroneous patent.[3] A curative act may prevent any inquiry into fraud in the original entry or proofs.[4]

Cancellations and forfeitures.—The United States may sue to cancel grants to states, the purpose having failed,[5] or patents to individuals for fraud,[6] if the fraud is sufficient,[7] or where issued to the wrong claimant,[8] unless rights of third persons will be affected,[9] or after great lapse of time.[10] The suit cannot be instituted for benefit of third persons.[11] Federal lands erroneously patented to a railroad company or their value may be recovered,[12] and subsequent grantees have no greater rights than the original one,[13] unless protected as a bona fide purchaser.[14] The veyed gives him a possessory claim, entitling to preference when the land is open for entry. Holmes v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 995.

99. Holmes v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 995.

1. The act of Congress, July 26, 1894, gave no right to perfect claims under the Oregon donation act, Sept. 27, 1850, as to lands abandoned before completion of requisite residence [28 Stat. 122, c. 163, construed with 9 Stat. 496, c. 76]. Or. & C. R. Co. v. U. S., 190 U. S. 186, 47 Law. Ed. 1012.

2. Act Cong. June 3, 1896, c. 312 (29 Stat. 197). The certificate must not have been canceled or the land re-entered. McCord v. Hill, 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65.

3. The law of March 2, 1896, amending prior acts respecting suits to recover lands erroneously patented under railroad grants, confirming title of bona fide purchasers from the grantee, but compelling payment by the purchaser or the company, does not confirm the title of the company or increase its rights. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 544.

4. Though local land officers in Wisconsin did not pass on an entry of public lands as to original proofs but refused the claim for fraud in supplemental proofs, which decision was never reversed, and afterward the entryman was declared entitled to a patent under a special act, the validity of the patent cannot be contested by another claimant for bad faith in the original proofs [Act Cong. June 3, 1896, c. 312 (29 Stat. 197)]. McCord v. Hill, 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65.

5. Where the special purpose for which a state granted lands was defeated, it may have the patents canceled and recover the land. Grant by Texas for school purposes defeated by decision of U. S. supreme court that the county receiving the land was a part of Oklahoma. Greer County v. State, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 223, 72 S. W. 104.

6. The United States may sue in equity to cancel a patent to public lands for fraud in representations or conduct of the patentee, in the substitution of another for the patentee, or in securing lands not subject to patent. Lynch v. U. S. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1095.

7. A mere suspicion of fraud of patentees will not suffice to set aside a patent of Federal lands. U. S. v. Clark, 125 Fed. 774.

8. Where a patent is issued to land to which an individual had a prior homestead right, the United States is entitled to sue to cancel the patent because of its obligation to convey to the rightful claimant, though the suit involves no public right or interest. U. S. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 116 Fed. 969.

9. The United States cannot sue to cancel a patent to public lands for fraud where the land has been platted as a townsite and is sold and occupied by many innocent holders whose rights will be materially affected. Lynch v. U. S. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1095.

10. Patents to government lands will not be canceled after great lapse of time and death of many patentees, except on clear and full proof of all facts regarding the preemptions. Evidence by witness, old and ignorant, and uncertain in memory, improvement of land by patentees. U. S. v. Stinson [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 907. Thirty years' delay is laches preventing suit to cancel a patent to United States lands. U. S. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 116 Fed. 969.

11. The United States cannot sue in equity to set aside a patent to lands for bribery or perjury, where no Federal injury or benefit appears, or solely for benefit of third persons. Lynch v. U. S. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1095.

12. The United States may sue in equity to set aside patents erroneously issued to a railroad company for lands under a grant and determine the rights of alleged bona fide purchasers, and require an accounting by the company for lands sold [Acts March 3, 1887; Feb. 12, 1896, and March 2, 1896 (24 Stat. 556; 29 Stat. 6; Id. 42)]. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 544. That an error in issuing patents to a railroad company was made by the land department is no legal or equitable defense to a suit by the United States to recover the lands or their value where sold, especially where the company obtained all lands it was granted. Id.

13. Mortgagees of the Southern Pacific railroad have no better rights than the company in land erroneously patented or certified under its grant. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 544.

14. The land department may hold one an innocent purchaser from a railroad company of land within its grant, though it failed to complete its grant, where no one was in possession when he purchased [Act Cong. March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556)]. Brett v. Meisterling, 117 Fed. 768.

government may fix the measure of recovery at the lowest regular price[15] and thereby waive recovery of the full amount received.[16] A suit under the statute to recover the minimum government price of land erroneously patented to a railroad company under a grant may be brought where the proof shows a basis for one, though the bona fide purchaser has not presented his claim to the department.[17] Every person interested in land included in a patent is an indispensable party to a suit to cancel it,[18] unless the rights of many are identical.[19] Cancellation of a timber entry certificate will not conclude a transferee without notice or hearing as to original validity of the entry.[20] A petition to annul a patent for fraud must be sufficient as a bill in equity.[21] One alleging fraud in a suit to cancel a patent to Federal lands must prove it.[22]

Laches and estoppel to claim rights.—Laches cannot be charged against a claimant to lands for delay during an attempt to obtain an adjustment by the land department.[23] A claimant to public land excepted generally from an order of the general land commissioner confirming a claim to another is guilty of laches for not moving for 30 years.[24] Where the unsuccessful claimant to public lands before the interior department, for a consideration, agreed in writing with the grantee of the successful entryman to make no further claim, he was estopped to claim title under a previous settlement because of bad faith and fraud in possession and proofs of the entryman.[25] Acquiescence in an adverse ruling by the land department and filing a new application to enter the land as public land because the prior entry was invalid is an abandonment of the original claim so that suit cannot be brought thereon.[26]

Contests and lis pendens.—Personal notice on parties known to be interested and publication have been held sufficient to affect a purchaser pending proceedings.[27]

Repayment of purchase price on cancellation.—A mortgagee who has foreclosed and bought in is an "assign" of the entryman and entitled to recover purchase price under the Federal statute.[28] In such a case surrender of the duplicate receipt will be presumed from land department findings importing a relinquishment of claim in regular form.[29]

Jurisdiction of land officers and courts.—The Federal land department or officers generally have power to determine rights in lands and their decisions are binding on state or Federal courts,[30] unless title has passed from the United States, 15, 16. A law requiring a railroad company receiving land under patents erroneously issued, and selling it to bona fide purchasers to pay the minimum government price if it has received as much, is valid and waives the right of the government to recover full price [Act March 2, 1896]. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 544.

29. Finding that the secretary of the interior ordered repayment and that claims to the land had been relinquished. U. S. v. Com. T. I. & T. Co., 193 U. S. 651.

30. The extent of investigation by the secretary of the interior, his knowledge of points involved and his methods of determination in contest proceedings, will not be reviewed. De Cambra v. Rogers, 189 U. S. 119, 47 Law. Ed. 734. Courts cannot determine controversies between claimants to public lands before patent issued. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 124 Fed. 819. The department has full jurisdiction of patent rights under act June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 36, c. 2), as to public lands in lieu of lands relinquished in when the courts take jurisdiction,[31] however, the authorities seem to differ as to review by the courts of questions of fact decided by the land department.[32] Decisions of the Federal land department may be reviewed in equity for fraud, mistake or other equitable grounds,[33] but should not be overruled unless clearly erroneous, even though not binding on the courts.[34] State courts may determine the right to possession before patent issued in so far as will not impinge on the question of title.[35] Pending contest or proceedings, courts may interfere to preserve the property by injunction.[36] The Federal circuit courts have full authority to determine all questions in a suit by a claimant to an allotment given by statute to persons of Indian blood.[37] Where, in a suit for realty, plaintiff's title depends on interpretation of an exception of mineral lands in a railroad grant by the United States, the Federal circuit court has jurisdiction regardless of citizenship.[38]

a forest reservation. Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co., 190 U. S. 301, 47 Law. Ed. 1064; Pac. L. & I. Co. v. Elwood Oil Co., 190 U. S. 316, 47 Law. Ed. 1073. A determination by the land department in a homestead contest as to the date of actual occupancy of one of the parties is of fact binding on the courts. Edwards v. Begole [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 1. The decision of the land department allowing an entry on homestead lands is conclusive on the courts and gives title to the land and all growing thereon, even as to crops sowed by another claimant. Reservation State Bank v. Holst [S. D.] 95 N. W. 931. Definition of limits of a railroad grant by the land department is final as between claimants of land within the limits. Brett v. Meisterling, 117 Fed. 768. A general exception in a confirmation of a claim for land by the commissioner of the general land office, construed with the statute, will not leave the claim open to contest in the courts [Act Cong. Sept. 26, 1850, c. 69 (9 Stat. 469), providing for settlement of land at Sault St. Marie]. Male v. Chapman [Mich.] 96 N. W. 582. The courts will not review decisions of the interior department as to validity of homestead residence. Small v. Rakestraw, 28 Mont. 413, 72 Pac. 746. State courts cannot compel conveyance of lands subject to homestead under Federal laws to one denied the right of such entry by the Federal land department. McDonald v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 440. Courts of Nebraska cannot determine validity of homestead entries allowed by officers of the Federal land department. Tiernan v. Miller [Neb.] 96 N. W. 661.

31. State courts may determine a contest for Federal lands after title has passed from the United States. Johnson v. Fluetsch, 176 Mo. 452, 75 S. W. 1005.

32. The decision of the Land department that one who was in Oklahoma territory during the prohibited period before opening for settlement had acquired no advantage over others competing for the land is one of fact not reviewable by the courts. Land opened by acts March 1 & 2, 1889, and President's proclamation of March 23, 1889. Potter v. Hall, 189 U. S. 292, 47 Law. Ed. 817. Findings of fact by the secretary of the interior in a land contest are conclusive on the courts in absence of the record or a copy showing the facts; where the court can say the findings are reasonably supported by evidence on the hearing and the facts uphold the conclusions of law, a resulting trust will not be declared in favor of the losing party. Forney v. Dow [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1101. Findings of fact by the Land department conclude the courts as the verdict of a jury, and the only question on review is as to the presence of any evidence to support the findings. Jordan v. Smith [Okl.] 73 Pac. 308. Findings of fact by the commissioner of the general land office, approved by the secretary of the interior, are mere conclusions of law subject to revision by the courts. Buffalo L. & E. Co. v. Strong [Minn.] 97 N. W. 575. Local land officers in Wisconsin may decide as to good faith of entry, length of residence, and proofs, in contest between claimants to Federal public lands, subject to appeal or other review. 34. Lavagnino v. Uhlig, 26 Utah, 1, 71 Pac. 1046.

35. The supreme court of Wyoming in a land contest between one claiming as entryman and a claimant under a Federal certificate of purchase may determine the right to possession, but not the title, no patent having issued from the U. S. land office [R. S. § 4104]. The land department cannot be controlled by the courts in issuance of patents. Laramie Nat. Bank v. Steinhoff [Wyo.] 71 Pac. 992.

36. The possession of parties of public land will be protected pending a contest of preemption entries before the land department. Reservation State Bank v. Holst [S. D.] 95 N. W. 931. Removal of timber from public lands will be restrained pending determination of conflicting claims before the land department, though the court cannot determine such claims, no patent having issued. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 124 Fed. 819. Until the character of public agricultural lands, alleged to be mineral as against homestead entry, is settled by the land department, the courts will protect possession by legal occupants by restraining continued trespass. Bay v. Okl. S. G., O. & Min. Co. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 936.

37. Act Aug. 15, 1894 (28 Stat. 305) amended by Act Feb. 6, 1901 (31 Stat. 760). Sloan v. U. S., 118 Fed. 283.

must be a survey[39] or its equivalent, made by the proper authority,[40] and approved, accepted or returned as the statute requires.[41] The want of a return may be cured by a resurvey,[42] which may also annul the original one if the patent follows the new one.[43] A regularly issued patent to Texas lands is valid, though the survey was made by a surveyor outside his regular district.[44]

Classification and appraisement.—A railroad is not an "improvement" under the Washington statute which necessitates an appraisement.[45] When lands are forfeited back into the state domain, the statutory procedure e. g. advertisement, must be had anew.[46] A new classification and appraisement are not within provisions for a "revised list" of lands.[47] There is no presumption from the fact of a sale or award that the requisite classification and appraisement were made.[48]

An actual settlement is essential to an applicant for Texas school lands not detached,[49] or to buy additional land[50] which settlement is good if the settler's wife makes it pending his arrival.[51] Settlement is of no avail if no survey has ever been

39. An applicant for Texas state lands is bound to see that the proper survey is made and filed as against third persons. Robles v. Cooksey [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 584.

40. The district surveyor of one county cannot survey state lands in another county attached to another land district. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. De Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 736. Locations of land certificates by the land surveyor of Jack and Hardeman counties appointed in 1871, and of Hardeman county appointed in 1872, are void for want of authority in the appointment [Act 1866, and Act May 25, 1871, construed]. Olcott v. Smith, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 350, 70 S. W. 343.

41. An entry on school lands by an applicant who had caused a survey to be made before approval of the notes or classification of the land by the commissioner is a trespass against a lessor from the commissioner of the general land office [Act 1900, as amended by Act April 15, 1901, § 6]. Adair v. Hays, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 446, 72 S. W. 256. A survey of the lands need not be marked "accepted" in Pennsylvania. Lehigh Val. Coal Co. v. Beaver Lumber Co., 203 Pa. 544. Survey of state lands made in 1846 under a bounty certificate, valid, though certificate was not actually filed in the surveyor's office [Pasch. Dig. art. 4573]. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. De Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 736.

42. Though no return was made of a survey under which commonwealth lands were warranted in Pennsylvania, the title remains good on a resurvey confirming the first survey, no rights of third parties having intervened. Reilly v. Mountain Coal Co., 204 Pa. 270.

43. Annuls title to land omitted from second survey, though such was not his intention. Montgomery County v. Angier [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 957.

47. Gen. Laws 1901, p. 292. Briggs v. Key, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 565, 71 S. W. 43.

48. That land officers sell school lands will not raise a presumption that they have been classified and appraised. Corrigan v. Fitzsimmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 68; Thompson v. Gallagher [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 567. That the commissioner awarded school land to an applicant raises no presumption of classification; the presumption of official regularity will not apply to sale of state lands by agents or officers. Anderson v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 1003. Evidence that school land was classified at one time does not show that such was true four months prior thereto. Id.

49. A virtual or constructive settlement will not support an award of public free school land in Texas. Lewis v. Scharbauer [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 225. The purchaser of land not detached must actually settle upon it [Gen. Laws 26 Leg. pp. 32, 33, and Gen. Laws 27 Leg. p. 254]. Witcher v. Wiles [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 889.

Evidence: Sufficiency of evidence to show that a purchaser of Texas school lands was an actual settler in good faith for purpose of a home under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218f. Mann v. Greer [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 34. Long continued use and retention of his existing home by an applicant for school lands is strong evidence, though not conclusive that he did not intend to make the latter his home. Anderson v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 1003. An offer by a settler to sell free public school land awarded to him, and his statements that he could not afford to live on it, that he had all the land in the county he wanted, and that he never intended to live there again, may be shown on the issue of his settlement in good faith. Lewis v. Scharbauer [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 225.

Instructions on conflicting evidence as to abandonment of settlement by one awarded free public school lands in Texas. Lewis v. Scharbauer [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 225.

50. To claim the right to buy additional lands, an actual settler on Texas school lands must intend to make it his home. Mahoney v. Tubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 822.

51. There was a settlement of surveyed school lands by both husband and wife where he sent her out with an outfit for settlement, though he remained behind to made to bring the lands on the market.[52] Possession begun by a trespass suffices if it continues and becomes rightful before application.[53] Actual settlement will not be prejudiced by the fact that the house occupied was in reality across the line,[54] or that the settler had no supply of provisions.[55] Under a Utah statute, giving a pre-emptive right to persons who had "occupied," actual residence was held not necessary.[56] Lease by one who had given a bond reciting sale of Texas school lands and binding the purchaser to make title after acceptance of three years' occupancy is not an abandonment of the land by him where he reserved use of the land and continued to reside thereon.[57]

Application cannot be made until the statutory classification, appraisement and notice have been made,[58] and the land is on the market,[59] but a premature application may be sustained where settlement was made before filing,[60] or where lands came into market before the application could be acted on.[61]

It is immaterial that the affidavit was made shortly before the land became open to purchase,[62] or that a mistake was made in the price.[63]

One may apply at either of two places where the land is subject to entry.[64]

Simultaneous delivery of numerous applications and the proper fees is a filing of all of them at that time, though the filing marks were not immediately added.[65] The filing will not be compelled as of a date when the application was delivered make and file his application, intending then to join her. Willingham v. Floyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 831.

Homestead applicant for Texas school lands claiming benefits of Laws 1899, p. 123, c. 81, and Laws 1900, p. 29, c. 11. Burkhead v. Bush [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 67.

53. Entry on a Texas home section before expiration of a lease by an applicant to purchase additional school lands, though amounting to trespass, will not avoid the sale where the lease had expired at time of application and he was in rightful possession. McGee v. Corbin, 96 Tex. 35, 70 S. W. 79.

54. Evidence conflicting as to the location of the house. Settler in good faith believed it on the land located. Prier v. Bates [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 608.

55. Entering on land with a quilt and an extra pair of pants but no provisions is an actual settlement. Price v. Bates [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 608.

56. Under Utah statute providing that settlers who had occupied land granted to the state for school purposes should have a preference right to purchase the same, it is not necessary that a person should actually reside on the land. Twiggs v. State Board of Land Com'rs [Utah] 75 Pac. 729. This statute was not repealed by a subsequent act of the legislature, nor did the subsequent act operate retroactively to the prejudice of parties who had filed on school lands. Id.

58. An application cannot be made until after notice of classification and appraisement has reached the county clerk. Corrigan v. Fitzsimmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 68. An application before notice is not prior to one after notice [R. S. 1895, arts. 4218f, 4218g]. Ford v. Brown, 96 Tex. 537, 74 S. W. 535.

59. A lease executed Aug. 26, 1899, for two years expires midnight, Aug. 25, 1901, at which time the land is on the market and the first applicant has priority. McChristy v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 569.

60. It is immaterial that an application to buy school land as an actual settler was made shortly before settlement, where he settled before the application was filed. Allen v. Frost, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 232, 71 S. W. 767.

61. Where a lease on the lands expired before the application reached the land office. Patterson v. Terrell, 96 Tex. 509, 74 S. W. 19. An applicant filing before expiration of a lease to another and receiving an award of the land after expiration of the lease is prior in right to applicants filing after the award. Smith v. Zesch, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 70 S. W. 775.

62. An application is not void because the accompanying affidavit was made an hour before expiration of a lease making the land open to sale. McGee v. Corbin, 96 Tex. 35, 70 S. W. 79.

63. Correction of the obligation for remainder of purchase money before award will suffice to validate the sale. Faucett v. Sheppard [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 538.

64. Where land located on the line of two counties was on the market, it could be sold on application in either county. Different parties had made application for the same land with the clerks of different counties. The one who failed to get the award controverted the award to the other on the ground that the land commissioner had not given notice of classification and value in both counties. Davis v. Burnett [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 105.

65. The first one only was indorsed on receipt where the others were indorsed later in the same manner. McGee v. Corbin, 96 Tex. 35, 70 S. W. 79.

without such fees.[66] The rejection for prematurity of an application by an actual settler does not let in an applicant for additional purchase not a settler.[67] In certain circumstances a preference is given certain persons regardless of priority.[68]

Certificate and award.—Where the right to a certificate is property, it may be valid, though issued after claimant's death[69] or to his transferee.[70] A transfer of a certificate must with certainty describe it.[71] A void award does not remove lands from sale.[72] Acceptance of an application and issuance of a certificate does not under Texas laws conclusively prove as against one asserting a hostile claim that there was a legal settlement,[73] but it has been so held as against application made after certificate.[74]

Sale and payment.—Officers may sell only when regularly exercising authority so to do.[75] When state lands have been granted to counties, the county officers have the power to sell.[76]

Payment of purchase money will be presumed from conveyance of town site lots platted on public lands in California.[77] If the description in the obligation for payment for such lands describes a different tract than the application, it is void, but a variance in the grantee's name is immaterial.[78] Payment of the first instalment by an original purchaser will inure to a substituted purchaser standing as equitable assignee.[79] The state may recover for value of the excess of land sold by description, but cannot resell the land.[80]

73. A certificate of occupancy from the general land office of Texas after accrual of another's rights therein and beginning of his action to recover is not conclusive against him where he claims under settlement and application to purchase. May v. Hollingsworth [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 592; Franklin v. Kerlin [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 592; White v. Watson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 237. Original acceptance of an application to buy additional school lands and proof of occupancy to the commissioner made after commencement of an action to try title by another will not prevent plaintiff from questioning actual settlement on the home section at time of application. Ford v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 893; Boswell v. Terrell [Tex.] 78 S. W. 4. Evidence tending to illustrate the character of the settlement and that it was never actual within the meaning of the law was wrongly excluded in an action of trespass to try title. Lewis v. Scharbauer [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 225. An applicant to purchase public lands, whose application is made before a prior applicant has made his proofs of occupancy and become entitled to a certificate showing that fact, may litigate the questions of such prior applicant's occupancy, notwithstanding the latter's proofs have been accepted by the land commissioner [Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218j.] Forester v. Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 591. An actual settler of school lands, complying with the statute in attempting to purchase, may show invalidity of a previous award within less than three years before his application and settlement for noncompliance with requirements of actual settlement at time of application, though a certificate of occupancy has been issued. Lamkin v. Matsler [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 970.

The office of the caveat is to determine which of two claimants is entitled to have a patent issued.[81]

Grants and patents.—If a legislative grant is not in presenti, it must be followed by a conveyance or equivalent.[82] The state cannot refuse to issue a patent to an assignee of the settler when the latter has stipulated of record that it may be done.[83] A grant is not void because of immaterial irregularities in registration of documents.[84] A patent and the record thereof will not be constructive notice if substantially deficient.[85] A deed by the commonwealth of Pennsylvania for land owned by it, in its name and under its great seal, before the act of Mar. 14, 1846, could be recorded without acknowledgment.[86]

A state patent[87] or a deed issued by the state[88] is analogous to a United States patent and is not subject to collateral attack, except for invalidity on the face of it,[89] or in the proceedings whereon it rests.[90] The state only can attack a purchase of Texas school lands as collusive where it is regular.[91] It is prima facie title when purporting to be regular,[92] and it is presumed that patentee was the same person as he of the same name who procured survey and award.[93] A patent possibly for too much has been sustained where the terms of a statute fixing the maximum acreage were doubtful.[94] A mistake in the patentee's name not producing uncertainty will not avoid the patent.[95]

94. Statutes limiting area of land to be purchased were published in different languages. English text read 160 acres. French

A second patent of state land is void,[96] but a patent is not void because prior grants excluded are not specifically described therein.[97]

Priority is determined by the issuance of the grant and not by the time of entry.[98] An entry followed by grant is senior to a hostile entry during the interim followed in its turn by grant posterior to that of the first enterer.[99] If there was any fraud in obtaining the first grant, the state and not the junior grantee must assail it.[1] Persons claiming under junior entries but senior grants to state lands issued before two hiatuses, during which the statutes made no provision for carrying entry into grant, are prior in right to claimants under special entry whose grant was not obtained until after intervention of the hiatuses.[2]

A patent from the state, uncertain in terms, will be construed strictly against the grantee.[3] Priority of conflicting patents issued on the same day may be shown by the dates of the surveys on which they were based.[4]

Curing defects in sale.—Sales invalid from the beginning cannot be validated by other sales or resale in a different manner,[5] nor can the facts making such invalidity be concluded in a claimant's favor by land office recitals not addressed to him and on which he had no right to rely.[6] There cannot be an innocent purchaser as against the state under an invalid patent.[7] Mistakes in the application may be corrected at any time before rights intervene.[8] An award below appraised value may be cured by reducing the appraisement.[9] Invalid sales of Texas lands have, in some instances, been made valid by statute,[10] and of Vermont lands by the constitution,[11] and in Missouri, a 30-years holding by bona fide purchasers of swamp lands cures defects.[12] A curative act passed pending appeal from a judicial attack on a sale is available.[13]

Rescissions, cancellations and forfeitures.—In Texas, a purchaser of additional school lands who sells before his occupancy is complete to one not an actual settler does not forfeit his rights, but the sale is void.[14] If he be a purchaser not of school lands and buys school lands additional to his purchase, his sale to one not an actual settler is good provided occupancy and ownership continue for the necessary time.[15] The state only, not an adverse claimant, can urge that a purchaser of Texas school lands acted in collusion with another.[16] Mistakes of land officers are not "fraud" in procuring a certificate wherefor it may be revoked.[17] The commissioner in Texas cannot cancel a sale of school lands for a mistake in classification.[18] Inadvertent sale of Texas lands not subject to sale may be rescinded by the commissioner making it, or his successor.[19] Where the commissioner inadvertently sold lands previously leased, while the lease was in force, he may cancel the sale.[20]

The state's petition to recover lands for fraud must affirmatively allege the fraud.[21] An allegation that the certificate holder did not improve is a negative pregnant that they may have been improved when he applied.[22] The remedy provided by settlement before Jan. 1, 1889, in good faith, save where the law required actual settlement of the original purchaser. Hence, an assignee's title to grazing land may be cured of a sale in the wrong county, though he was not an "actual settler in good faith," such settlement being required only of agricultural lands. Walraven v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 331, 74 S. W. 530. Fraud of the original purchaser in describing the land in his application held not within these statutes, and accordingly no obstacle to curing the assignee's title of the defective sale. Id.

12. The county is barred by laches in Missouri from claiming invalidity of a conveyance of swamp lands from the state after purchase by bona fide purchasers without notice of defects who exercised full ownership for over 30 years [Laws 1901, p. 202]. The statute did not impair the county's vested rights, but was a valid exercise of the state's power to validate sales made in good faith. The trust for the school funds relating to sale of Missouri school lands applies only to "net proceeds of sales" and not to the land so as to charge a bona fide purchaser with misapplication of proceeds by the county; and where record, proceedings and order of sale are regular on their face, he cannot be charged with defects for which the sale might have been set aside [Act March 27, 1868, § 6 (Laws 1868, p. 68) and Act March 10, 1869 (Sess. Laws 1869, p. 66)]. Simpson v. Stoddard County, 173 Mo. 421, 73 S. W. 700.

13. A statute curing defects in sales of Missouri swamp lands by county courts, passed pending appeal in an action to quiet title to such lands on such grounds, may be applied by the appellate court. Simpson v. Stoddard County, 173 Mo. 421, 73 S. W. 700.

Additional purchase of school lands by the owner of other than school lands will entitle him to sell to another not an actual settler before occupancy, where he continues to occupy and own the lands which were the basis of the purchase [Batts' Civ. State v. Hughes [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 608.

the Code of North Carolina (sec. 2786), authorizing a suit by any one aggrieved by the issuance of a patent by the state, in certain cases, is open only to the senior against a junior grantee,[23] since the junior patentee cannot be aggrieved.[24]

The acceptance of payment for lands waives previous forfeiture for nonpayment.[25] An unauthorized, inadvertent forfeiture by the commissioner for abandonment may be set aside.[26] The state can only be estopped from asserting her right to her own property by legislative enactment.[27] Neither mistake[28] nor fraud of officials will vest in a patentee title to land not patented to him.[29]

Adjudication of title by courts.[30]—Jurisdiction of courts to hear and determine claims as against the state is confined to the statute conferring it; hence a confirmation suit begun too late is not aided by a law extending time in those begun at a certain time.[31]

In trespass to try title to Texas school lands, a petition must allege facts showing complainant's right to lands,[32] and fraud must be pleaded in particular and not as a conclusion.[33] All of the facts necessary to make out complainant's right to the land must be proved,[34] and the burden of proving that defendant's title never ripened is on plaintiff.[35]

23, 24. Henry v. McCoy, 131 N. C. 586.

25. Where an applicant to purchase a tract of less than 640 acres under the act of 1870, for sale of Oregon swamp and overflowed lands, received a certificate on payment of 20 per cent. of the price without proof of reclamation in 1872, forfeiture incurred by failure of proof and payment was waived by payment and acceptance of the remainder by the commissioners ten years later [Laws 1870, p. 55, §§ 3, 4; Laws 1878, pp. 41, 46; Laws 1887, p. 10, § 2]. Miller v. Wattier [Or.] 75 Pac. 209.

26. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218l. Johnson v. Bibb [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 71.

27. State v. Paxson [Ga.] 46 S. E. 872. The state may bring an application for an injunction under Civ. Code, § 4927, by attaching to the petition, as an abstract of title, a statement setting forth that the land in controversy has never been granted. Id. The state may bring an equitable action in the nature of the common-law proceeding by information of intrusion for recovery of land title to which is in the state, and in aid of such action obtain an injunction to restrain a trespass. The petition in the present case can be construed as an action of that character (Per Cobb, J., dissenting). Id.

28. A mistake of the county surveyor in recording a survey could not operate to vest in the patentee title to land not patented to him. Bryant v. Kendall [Ky.] 79 S. W. 186.

29. Courses and distances set forth in a plat of an official survey and referred to in patents from the United States, which show the meander line of one lake as the boundary control, as against the actual boundary of the lake, where the survey was grossly fraudulent and the lake never existed within half a mile of the point indicated on the plat and where to fix the lake as the boundary would give the patentees an area of land vastly in excess of their patents and what they paid for. Security L. & E. Co. v. Burns, 193 U. S. 167.

30. Bills to charge trusts on patentees, see post, § 4.

31. Jurisdiction of district courts and validity of judgments as to land claims against the state under Act Feb. 11, 1860 (Gen. Laws 1860, p. 109, c. 78); Act April 4, 1881 (Gen. Laws 1881, p. 105, c. 92), and Act Aug. 15, 1870 (Gen. Laws 1870, p. 201, c. 83), amending the first act above. State v. O'Connor, 96 Tex. 484, 73 S. W. 1041.

32. A petition to recover Texas school lands must allege actual settlement on the land or that petitioner owns and is an actual settler on other lands within five miles radius. Sterling v. Self, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 70 S. W. 238. Pleadings sufficient to put in issue the fact of prior occupancy of school lands in trespass to try title. Corrigan v. Fitzsimmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 68.

Issues in suit by applicant to recover additional school lands awarded to another; whether the application was properly made and priority thereof are the only questions. Coody v. Harris, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 169, 71 S. W. 607. Issues in trespass to try title to school land by one claiming under an application to purchase as an actual settler [Sayles' Rev. St. art. 1331]. Allen v. Frost, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 232, 71 S. W. 767.

33. An allegation that a location on school lands and issuance of a patent were fraudulent is a legal conclusion not admitted by demurrer. Heil v. Martin [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 430.

34. It must be shown in trespass to try title to school lands that the lands were classified when the application to purchase was made. Anderson v. Walker [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 1003. In a suit to recover state school lands, plaintiff must show that the commissioners had no power to award the land to defendant, where his pleadings do not specifically show the award and rejection of plaintiff's application, though the evidence does disclose them. Landers v. Boliver [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1075. A purchaser of Texas school lands trying to recover in trespass to try title must prove classification and appraisement. Sufficiency of evidence. Corrigan v. Fitzsimmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 68. Prior possession will not support a judgment for plaintiff in trespass to try title to school lands, where title is admittedly in the state. Id.

A canceled state warrant does not alone prove erroneous location, nullity of patent, or that the warrant was returned to the locator, though the cancellation so states.[36]

A purchaser of leased school lands in Washington cannot recover possession as against purchasers from the state without showing payment of assessed value of lessee's improvements.[37]

Official acts and decisions are reviewable[38] when ministerial,[39] but not when discretionary[40] or final.[41] Ordinary rules of review[42] and of trial thereafter[43] apply.

§ 4. Interest and title of occupants, claimants and patentees. A. On Federal lands. Possessory rights.—The sufficiency of acts to give a right of possession to public lands depends upon peculiar conditions, such as character and locality of the land and the purpose of the occupation; but the acts must always show dominion and control of the claimant.[44] A mere occupant of public lands has a possessory right therein coeval with the continuance of his occupancy,[45] but one settling on Sufficiency of evidence in contest for Texas school lands to carry to the jury the question whether the land was appraised and was on sale when the second award was made to plaintiff by the commissioner prior to defendant's application. Bowerman v. Pope, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 79, 75 S. W. 1093.

Evidence as to time when public free school lands of Texas were placed on the market in trespass to try title. Binion v. Harris [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 580.

35. Where defendant, in an action to recover land alleged by plaintiff to have been public free school lands when he settled and applied for purchase, was an actual settler and had applied to purchase, plaintiff has the burden of proving his failure to complete the purchase or forfeiture of his rights before plaintiff's application; and where he failed to do so, admission in evidence of the commissioner's certificate that defendant was an actual settler and had been awarded the land on application to purchase was harmless. Boaz v. Powell, 96 Tex. 3, 69 S. W. 976.

36. Slattery v. Heilperin, 110 La. 86.

37. Brummett v. Campbell, 32 Wash. 358, 73 Pac. 403.

38, 39. Errors on appeal in suit to recover Texas school lands. Sterling v. Self, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 70 S. W. 238. The decision of the commissioner that sections of state school lands are isolated and subject to sale is a ministerial act and inconclusive [2 Batts' Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218y]. Burnam v. Terrell [Tex.] 78 S. W. 500.

40. Where boards of appraisers have discretionary power, their decision cannot be reviewed in mandamus. A statute read "that if the board shall be satisfied that the land on being resold would not sell for 25 per cent. more." Their decision was not interfered with at the suit of one who offered 25 per cent. more. State v. Bridges, 30 Wash. 268, 70 Pac. 506. The decision of the Oregon State Land Board is final as to application to purchase school land claimed to have been forfeited by another by his default in payment of the purchase price for which the board refused to issue the subsequent applicant a certificate of purchase. Robertson v. State Land Board, 42 Or. 183, 70 Pac. 614. Resale of Washington school lands is discretionary and cannot be controlled by the courts. State v. Bridges, 30 Wash. 268, 70 Pac. 506. The decision of the Oregon state land board as to forfeiture and resale of lands will not be reviewed by the courts. Robertson v. State Land Board, 42 Or. 183, 70 Pac. 614.

41. The granting of a certificate of purchase of swamp and overflowed land necessarily implies a finding by the state board of commissioners that the purchaser has the necessary statutory qualifications which is not subject to review by the courts. (Action between the certificate holder and a subsequent grantee from the commissioners [Laws 1870, p. 55, § 3]). Miller v. Wattier [Or.] 75 Pac. 209. Contests for purchase of state lands between alleged "actual settlers" and other claimants must be decided by the register of the land office, and his discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus; if he refuses to consider the contest because the lands are not open to purchase, an appeal will lie to the court. State v. Smith, 111 La. 319.

42. On appeals from the state board of land commissioners, documentary evidence not transmitted as a paper in the case or as evidence below may be excluded where no notice was given for its introduction [Rev. St. 1899, § 812]. Baker v. Brown [Wyo.] 74 Pac. 94.

43. A ruling of the supreme court of Wisconsin on demurrer to the complaint in a contest between claimants to Federal public lands, as to validity of the entry and residence, is binding on a subsequent appeal where the evidence is the same on another trial as that given the land officers. McCord v. Hill, 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65.

44. Sufficiency of acts giving mill owner right to possession of land on which he deposited ore tailings. Ritter v. Lynch, 123 Fed. 930.

45. Persons who, with their grantors, have occupied and used public lands adjacent to the Alaskan coast, since prior to Act May 17, 1884, including a small strip of tide lands used for drawing salmon seines will be protected as against others asserting a common right to fish thereon [Sec. 8 of the act (23 Stat. 24)]. Heckman v. Sutter [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 83. United States statutes establishing a civil government for Alaska protects possessory rights exercised over tide lands by occupants of adjoining uplands against those who assert a common right to fish thereon. Heckman v. Sutter [C. C. A.] 128 Fed. 393.

land covered by homestead entry of another acquires no rights.[46] An entryman's possession is exclusive,[47] whence he can maintain forcible entry and detainer against one whose claim has been canceled by the land department.[48] Proof of prior peaceable possession under a claim of right will support an action to recover land, the title to which was in the state, as against all but the true owner.[49] An unsuccessful contestant for a townsite lot, making valuable improvements in good faith during pendency of the contest, and in possession at end of the contest, cannot hold possession until such improvements are appraised and paid for under an occupying claimant's law.[50]

Adverse possession will not give title to possession as against the government,[51] though it may suffice as against grantees or patentees.[52]

A right of way granted by the United States has been held not subject to adverse possession.[53]

An interest in the lands vests when final certificate is made[54] and not before.[55] A mere claimant of lands claimed by the land department as unsurveyed cannot prevent a survey.[56] Instituting a contest against an Indian allotment does not of itself vest any right in the contestant.[57]

A contract after final proof to sell the lands is not an entry for another.[58] A contract to settle for another is against public policy.[59]

The provision that when father and mother are both dead leaving minor children, a homestead entry shall vest in the minor, applies for the exclusive benefit of the minor only when there are no other heirs.[60]

By reason of the statute requiring affidavit that he has not alienated his lands, a homestead entryman's sale[61] or lease[62] before final proof and patent issued is un-

46. He has no legal or equitable rights. McMichael v. Murphy [Okl.] 70 Pac. 189.

47. Reservation State Bank v. Holst [S. D.] 95 S. W. 931. An entryman on homestead lands is entitled to possession and cannot be enjoined by one exercising a prior possession without right. Tiernan v. Miller [Neb.] 96 N. W. 661. One entitled to preempt land or take up a timber claim, and allowed by the land officers to file on lands open to preemption, takes it and all permanent improvements with exclusive possession free from claims of all persons except the United States. Hill v. Pitt [Neb.] 96 N. W. 339.

48. Several parties made entry on the same land and the land office awarded the land to plaintiff. Hackney v. McKee [Okl.] 75 Pac. 535.

49. Proof of actual occupation and use to exclusion of others is sufficient, though no barriers sufficient to turn stock existed. Smith v. Hicks, 139 Cal. 217, 73 Pac. 144.

50. Cook v. McCord [Okl.] 75 Pac. 294.

51. No claim of adverse possession can be made as to the bed of a dried-up body of water owned by the Federal government. Carr v. Moore, 119 Iowa, 152, 93 N. W. 52.

52. Adverse possession, sufficient under a state statute, within the 10-mile limit of the Central Pacific grant carried title, though no patent was issued to the railroad company [Act Congress, July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489, c. 120) as amended by Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356, c. 216)]. Toltec Ranch Co. v. Cook, 191 U. S. 532. Title to lands forfeited from state grants to the United States will not vest in a purchaser until certificate has issued so that limitations will not run in favor of adverse possession before that time. Doe v. Pugh [Ala.] 34 So. 377.

53. McLucas v. St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 312.

54. Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 70 Pac. 1037, 59 L. R. A. 782.

55. Application was denied and the entry never made. Baldwin v. Keith [Okl.] 75 Pac. 1124.

56. Equity will not relieve a claimant against a survey of lands by the Federal land department claimed by it as unsurveyed public lands, where no material injury will result from the survey and the interested parties are few and assert separate rights; the courts will not interfere with executive administration of the department. Kirwan v. Murphy, 189 U. S. 35, 47 Law. Ed. 698.

57. Contest did not result in cancellation of allotment entry. Baldwin v. Keith [Okl.] 75 Pac. 1124.

58. A contract by an entryman on Federal lands after final proof to sell to another and obtain the patent for the latter, followed by giving possession, is not in violation of the prohibition of entry of lands for benefit of another. Doll v. Stewart, 30 Colo. 320, 70 Pac. 326.

59. Organic Act, § 24. Bass v. Smith [Okl.] 71 Pac. 628.

60. On the death of a homestead entryman before final proof his rights descend to his heirs. Deceased was mother of three bastard children. Her rights were divided equally between her husband and living children and child of a deceased child. Holloman v. Bullock [Miss.] 34 So. 355.

61. A contract for sale of a homestead enforceable. State courts will not disturb a lessee under an entryman.[62] Conveyance of a water right, by one afterward acquiring the land on which it was situated as a homestead, is not a conveyance of "land" within laws prohibiting conveyance by homestead entrymen.[64] An entryman's deed conveying part of the waters of a stream and a right of way over the land to obtain such water, not made in contemplation of the entry, is not prohibited by homestead laws forbidding entry for another.[65] A conveyance of timber on a homestead by the entryman before final proof is valid, except as against the United States.[66] Rights of a bona fide purchaser for value may accrue to a purchaser of timber before patent issued.[67]

A mortgage given as security on a homestead before patent issued is not a "debt before patent" within the Federal law.[68]

A contract by a tree claim entryman, of whom such affidavit as prescribed in case of homesteads is not required, to convey his claim as soon as a patent was issued is valid,[69] and title when perfected by patent will inure to the grantee.[70] Rights in a tree claim though partnership assets are not liable for debts before issue of final certificate[71] or subject to antecedent mortgage.[72]

A contract by a pre-emptor of Federal lands to pay another one-fourth the amount of a sale of the lands at proper value after title secured in consideration of one-fourth the expenses of final proof is valid.[73]

A certificate or warrant to a Mexican war officer may be assigned after issuance so that the assignee may locate in his own name; and if the assignee proceeds regularly, he is not affected by failure of the register to report his location to the general land office.[74]

A discoverer of mineral signs may assign the prospective discovery to one who may pursue it until entitled to a patent.[75]

Transferees pending contest[76] or with notice of a prior transfer[77] can have no better claim than their grantor.

No suit to assert a private title lies until the lands have vested in the adverse by an entryman before final proof and patent issued cannot be enforced [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1389, § 2290 and p. 1390, § 2291]. Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 83, 72 Pac. 698.

64. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2290, 2291; Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 658-660, 662. Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 140 Cal. 183, 73 Pac. 826.

65. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2290, 2291. Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 140 Cal. 183, 73 Pac. 826.

66. Conveyance of merchantable timber before final proof and another conveyance thereof after final proof. The first grantee had title by estoppel. Andrews v. Wilder [Miss.] 35 So. 875.

67. U. S. v. Clark, 125 Fed. 774.

68. Not within Rev. St. U. S. § 2296, forbidding liability of land for debts before patent. Klempp v. Northrop, 137 Cal. 414, 70 Pac. 284.

69. One who had made entry agreed to convey to the partnership of which he was a member as soon as patent issued. Adams v. Church, 193 U. S. 510.

70. Civ. Code, § 947, subd. 4. Bernardy v. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. [S. D.] 98 N. W. 166.

71. One who entered and perfected a tree culture claim and afterward agreed with a partner to convey to the firm as soon as he got title, held an undivided half interest therein not liable to firm or individual debts before final certificate, but where, after the partner's death, he refused to perform at suit of the partner's representatives the land was decreed firm property [20 Stat. 114, § 4] held constitutional. Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 70 Pac. 1037, 59 L. R. A. 782.

72. Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 70 Pac. 1037, 59 L. R. A. 782.

73. Preemption act [Rev. St. U. S. § 2262]. Gross v. Hafeman [Minn.] 97 N. W. 430.

74. Act Cong. Feb. 11, 1847 (9 Stat. 125, c. 8). Johnson v. Fluetsch, 176 Mo. 452, 75 S. W. 1005.

75. Bay v. Okl. S. G., O. & Min. Co. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 936. See Mines and Minerals, § 4, 2 Curr Law, p. 897.

76. Personal notice on parties known to be interested in a land claim and publication is sufficient in a contest under the act of 1850 to render the decision of the land officers binding on those purchasing after pendency of the proceedings [Act Cong. Sept. 26, 1850, c. 69 (9 Stat. 469)]. Male v. Chapman [Mich.] 96 N. W. 582.

77. Sufficiency of notice of rights of purchaser from entryman of Federal lands to prevent purchase thereafter from entryman by third person. Doll v. Stewart, 30 Colo. 320, 70 Pac. 326.

party,[78] hence, townsite trustees who merely convey the government title to town lot occupants are not suable by a homesteader.[79] Two years from the date of a patent is not an unreasonable delay in prosecuting suit against a patentee who through fraud had secured the right to purchase.[80] Payment of interest on the mortgage by the true owner of the occupant right will not estop him from contesting the validity of the mortgage.[81] A statute limiting the time for suits by the United States to annul or cancel patents does not apply to a partition suit by heirs of a homestead entryman.[82] Plaintiff must show his right to a patent and that defendant was not so entitled in order that the latter may be declared a trustee for plaintiff because of an erroneous ruling of the land department.[83] The holder of the duplicate final receipt of the receiver of the land office for a homestead may bring an action, in the nature of ejectment, for possession.[84]

Patentees or purchasers take the public title free from any charges save those binding on the public.[85] To entitle a party to relief against a patent of the government, he must show a better right to the land than the patentee.[86]

No title or equity can pass in a grant never earned[87] or in lands never selected nor approved,[88] nor under a fraudulent patentee.[89] Bona fide purchasers of forfeited railroad lands, not in possession and without attempt to exercise their statutory rights, cannot sue to quiet title against claimants of adverse interests.[90]

A grant for a particular purpose, e. g., schools,[91] cannot be diverted from that purpose, but a patent to a city may be absolutely alienated, though entered under law for a cemetery.[92] Grants for aid of state institutions need not be apportioned

78. An action to declare a resulting trust by an occupant of public land will not lie against a successful contestant until title has passed from the government to the latter. Demurrer to petition showing that no patent has issued properly sustained. Jordan v. Smith [Okl.] 73 Pac. 308. A complaint to hold a patentee of public land a trustee, alleged that application to purchase the land was made and applicant went into possession and improved it, but that another filed a forged relinquishment of his rights and a patent was issued to him. Held not to state a cause of action because not alleging that plaintiff did not make voluntary relinquishment by failure to prosecute work or make seasonable proof and payment. Gebo v. Clarke Fork Coal Min. Co. [Mont.] 75 Pac. 859.

79. A claimant under the Federal homestead laws cannot sue Oklahoma townsite trustees to divest them of title under the law for townsite occupants [Act May 14, 1890 (26 Stat. 109, c. 207)] until the land is conveyed to the occupant under the act, title remains in the United States. Bockfinger v. Foster, 190 U. S. 116, 47 Law. Ed. 975.

80. A lessee who had represented herself as the owner of the occupant right. Whitlock v. Cohn [Ark.] 80 S. W. 141.

81. Whitlock v. Cohn [Ark.] 80 S. W. 141.

82. Holloman v. Bullock [Miss.] 34 So. 255.

83. Homestead claim. Small v. Rakestraw, 28 Mont. 413, 72 Pac. 746.

84. St. 1893, § 4492. McClung v. Penny [Okl.] 70 Pac. 404.

85. Lands belonging to the United States and sold to another cannot be made liable to irrigation assessments where included in an irrigation district without assent of the government or the purchaser. Nev. Nat. Bank v. Poso Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 344, 73 Pac. 1056.

86. A petition in an action to declare a resulting trust in land patented to another did not state facts sufficient to show this. Baldwin v. Keith [Okl.] 75 Pac. 1124.

87. A lease of railroad grant lands which were given as bounty lands to a railroad which was never completed will not support ejectment whether real or a fiction. Act Cong. June 3, 1856 (11 Stat. 17), granting the land to the state for railroad aid, requires construction of the road before passing title. Galloway v. Doe, 136 Ala. 315.

88. A homesteader had settled on land which had been selected as indemnity, but the selection had not been approved. Sage v. Maxwell [Minn.] 99 N. W. 42.

89. A mortgage given by a patentee on land, the patent to which was secured by fraud, cannot be enforced against the land in the hands of the true owner. The owner of an occupant claim leased it. The lessee presented her claim to the commissioner as owner of the occupant right and was awarded the privilege of purchasing, which she did and received the patent. She then mortgaged. Whitlock v. Cohn [Ark.] 80 S. W. 141.

90. Act Cong. March 3, 1887, § 5 (24 Stat. 556, c. 376). San Jose L. & W. Co. v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 47 Law. Ed. 765.

91. A grant for school purposes vests title in the board of education subject to their exclusive control. Act of March 3, 1845, c. 48 (5 Stat. 742), granting school lands, passed the exclusive control and disposition thereof to the state board of education and a grant of such lands by the state to a railroad company or a patent thereof by the executive officers of the United States to a state as swamp lands is void. State v. Jennings [Fla.] 35 So. 986.

92. A patent conveying land to the "mayor in trust for said city and his successors," equally among them,[93] and the making of a special grant for one does not negative its right to share in a general grant.[94] When lands are granted simply to the state,[95] they do not pass into any particular fund except as the state laws declare.[96] A grant in trust on condition precedent to the beneficiary's title will prevent the ripening of any title against the trustee.[97]

Area acquired and boundaries.—A state survey under which a patent was issued will control as to the boundaries over a government grant by subdivision.[98] Where one purchased land according to the field notes of an original survey, his purchase includes all the lands described,[99] and the state may recover for the excess, but cannot resell it.[1] A patent excluding certain surveys from the grant will pass title to all the land not included in those surveys.[2] Boundaries cannot be extended beyond meander lines except by accretion.[3] Government lots bordering on a nonnavigable stream are bounded by the thread of the stream and not by the meander line on the bank.[4]

Mode of proving title.—Office copies of patents[5] and certified maps[6] may be received subject to the usual rules of documentary evidence.[7] A prima facie title may be made out by proof of acts from which in regular course a patent must have issued.[8] under an act authorizing the mayor of Denver to enter land for a cemetery, carries to the city an absolute alienable title [Act Cong. May 21, 1872, c. 187 (17 Stat. 140)]. Wright v. Morgan, 191 U. S. 55.

93. Under a law granting lands generally for state institutions, one institution may be given more than its appropriate share [Enabling Act, § 17 (Act Feb. 22, 1889, c. 180; 25 Stat. 681)]. State v. Callvert [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1018.

94. A special law granting certain lands to the state university of Washington does not preclude it from benefits [Enabling Act, § 14 (Act Feb. 22, 1889, c. 180 [25 Stat. 680]), and § 17]. State v. Callvert [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1018.

95, 96. Lands granted by the United States to Nebraska by the enabling act were not placed among educational lands by the state constitution giving "proceeds" of such lands or "other" lands to the school fund. The Board of Educational Lands and Funds has no control over saline lands of such grant [Enabling Act, § 11, and Const. 1875, art. 8, §§ 3, 4]. McMurtry v. Engelhardt [Neb.] 98 N. W. 40. Lands acquired under 9 Stat. 352, 519, were subject to be disposed of by the legislature, and shallow lakes, not navigable, could be disposed of only after their area had been ascertained by surveys recognized by the state. Hall v. Board of Com'rs, 111 La. 913. A party acquiring a tract bordering on a shallow lake could not acquire title to the bed of the lake by accretion. Id.

97. Where the Federal government granted land to a state as trustee for aid of railroads, to be conveyed to the companies after construction, limitations will not run against the state until title has vested in the railroad company. The road must be completed before the limitations would run [Act Cong. June 3, 1856 (11 Stat. 17), and Code Ala. § 2794]. Galloway v. Doe, 136 Ala. 315.

98. Inconsistency between state and Federal surveys as affecting boundaries of patented lands. Miller v. Grunsky, 141 Cal. 441, 75 Pac. 48.

99. A later survey showed that the tract contained 960 acres instead of 640. Willoughby v. Long, 96 Tex. 194, 71 S. W. 545.

1. Will entitle the state only to demand payment for the excess, and in default thereof, to a partition thereof; but one applying to purchase can acquire no rights against the purchaser [Act March 22, 1889]. Willoughby v. Long, 96 Tex. 194, 71 S. W. 545.

2. A description in a patent concluding with the words "Plotting out of the surveys all lands heretofore surveyed," older surveys were excluded from the grant, but the patent was valid as to all land embraced within it not theretofore surveyed. Bryant v. Kendall [Ky.] 79 S. W. 186.

3. The owners of patents to lands abutting on meandered waters cannot extend their rights beyond the meander line on drying up of the waters except by accretion or reliction. Meander of a body of water in the government survey which should not have been meandered fixes the boundary of land given by patent to abutting owners. Carr v. Moore, 119 Iowa, 152, 93 N. W. 52

4. U. S. Rev. St. §§ 2396, 2397. Kirby v. Potter, 133 Cal. 686, 72 Pac. 338. The local state law controls all courts in determining the limits of grants of government lands abutting on lakes, rivers or waters. In re Valley, 116 Fed. 983.

5. A land office copy of a Virginia patent is evidence of title in ejectment, though the lesser seal of the commonwealth was not shown to appear on the original. Va. C. & I. Co. v. Keystone C. & I. Co. [Va.] 45 S. E. 291.

6. Certified maps by the acting commissioner of the general land office of a Federal grant to a state in aid of railroads may be shown in ejectment to recover the land. The maps showed the limits of the grant, that the lands were vacant when granted, that they were subject to grant, and that lands within an adjustment list were within conflicting limits of grants to certain companies. Galloway v. Doe, 136 Ala. 315.

Mineral rights.—A townsite entry does not pass mineral rights even unknown at the time of entry.[9] A reservation of lodes or veins which intersect or penetrate has been held to cover only those which apex outside the tract.[10]

Water rights.—One who saw appropriation of spring waters from public lands without making a claim of prior appropriation is estopped to make such claim.[11]

Indian allotments.—Since Indians are subject to the laws of congress and have no several rights in tribal lands, allotment may be made to persons not previously regarded as members of the tribe.[12] A lease by an Indian of his land allotment, without approval of the secretary of the interior, is invalid.[13] Execution of two powers of attorney regarding Sioux half-breed scrip, one to locate and the other to convey when located, together or separately, are not an assignment or transfer of the scrip.[14]

(§ 4) B. State lands.—Possessory rights must rest on a physical dominion within definite limits.[15]

The state is not subject to adverse possession,[16] though claimants may be.[17]

Property rights before grant or patent.—Land which has been awarded, and the proofs of occupancy of which have been accepted or contract issued by the state is the subject of sale, seizure on execution and mortgage;[18] and the mortgagor is estopped to set up his after-acquired title from the state.[19] Adverse possession may run from the time title is earned.[20] The grantee of an occupant[21] or original purchaser acquires only the original purchaser's title.[22] Hence also a title bond by a section of school land on application to purchase it and other lands as additional, and award of all lands on application, makes a prima facie title. Walker v. Marchbanks [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 929.

10. A condition in a patent to agricultural land that it shall be subject to proprietary rights in a lode or vein if one should be found to "penetrate or intersect" means only a lode, the apex of which was without the land and in its course ran into the land. Surface mining rights are therefore not reserved. Paterson v. Ogden, 141 Cal. 43, 74 Pac. 443.

16. Slattery v. Heilperin, 110 La. 86. No claim of adverse possession can be made as to the bed of a dried-up body of water owned by the state government. Carr v. Moore, 119 Iowa, 152, 93 N. W. 52.

17. Sufficiency of evidence of adverse possession where two Kentucky state patents overlap. Hall v. Blanton, 25 Ky. L. R. 1400, 77 S. W. 1110. A judgment of adverse possession against heirs to whom a certificate of state lands was issued, showing their ancestor to be dead, gives a complete title in the holder and his successors to the certificate. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. De Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 736.

18. A mortgage executed before deed was received from the state. Logue v. Atkeson [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 137. A purchaser who made the first payment on South Dakota school lands and received a contract of sale from the commissioners had an interest therein subject to execution [Const. art. 8, §§ 5, 6, construed with Laws 1890, p. 296, c. 136, and Code Civ. Proc. 1903, § 336]. Brooke v. Eastman [S. D.] 96 N. W. 699.

20. Where an applicant's title to state lands accrued, if at all, at expiration of his three years' occupancy and another entered under a deed from a subsequent entryman recorded eleven years later, the latter's possession for seven years barred the applicant under the five years' limitation. Robles v. Cooksey [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 584.

21. A title under purchase from one who was awarded lands by the commissioner of the land office is worthless where the grantor was not a settler on the land at time of application and the commissioner did not issue the necessary certificate of occupancy. Nowlin v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 419.

prospective purchaser to "vacant" lands is void.[23] Since a pendente lite purchaser takes subject to the suit, one purchasing free school lands pending mandamus to compel award thereof to a prior claimant cannot intervene in the proceedings.[24]

An unlocated land certificate is a chattel which will pass by verbal sale and delivery followed by continued possession and control until witnesses of the supposed sale are dead,[25] hence a husband's sale of his wife's certificates passes her interest.[26] The holder of a certificate issued to one since deceased must in a regular way acquire rights of minor heirs or his patent will not cut them off.[27]

A duplicate land certificate issued instead of a lost one confers only the rights of the original.[28] A preemptive right founded on mere possession passes to the possessor's transferee.[29] A bounty land certificate to a Texas volunteer is not a gratuity but a grant based on consideration of service.[30] Location of confederate land scrip and survey of the land will merge the scrip in the land, though no patent has issued.[31] A single man's certificate to Texas lands vests a property right alienable when earned.[32] The grant of lands by Louisiana to the Bossier levee district did not become effective until formal conveyance to the levee board by the state auditor and register of the land office, and until then it could not collect rents from the land.[33]

Patents and grants.—The grant conveys only such title as the state has.[34] Recitals in a grant by statute do not conclude one claiming adversely to the chain of title derived from the grant.[35] A grant relates back to entry and will support ejectment commenced before the grant but after entry.[36] Registration of a grant is constructive notice thereof.[37] The statute of limitations against actions to test the validity of a grant begins to run on its registration.[38] In proper cases[39] a trust may be charged on the patentee. An action for public lands, by one claiming under the junior grantee, against claimants under the senior grantee, is barred where not brought within ten years after registration of the senior grant.[40] The rule that a settlement under a junior patent will not give possession as against an older patent where the settlement is without the lap has no application to strangers to the title, but is only for the benefit of the holders of the elder title.[41] One paying for lands to save his interest is subrogated to rights of the state to a lien against the nominal certificate holder.[42] Since 1895, mineral rights in Texas lands have been confirmed in patentees, notwithstanding reservations in the patent.[43]

Purchase money held subject to the purchaser's right to earn a return of it is a trust.[44]

Area and boundaries.—A patent by the state referring to a map made by the state designating blocks and streets carries title in fee to the center of the street, though it is not opened or used.[45] Where a state patent, in absence of marked lines or corners, embraced lands in adjoining states, and would include a town with public buildings and grounds, the location which will give about the quantity of land called for is properly adopted.[46] Title to lands embraced in patents under the swamp land act are not affected by a resurvey of land covered with water when the original survey was made, and patents under the resurvey to lands under the original water line.[47] Change of the Mississippi river channel by avulsion works no change in the boundary of lands of an adjoining owner, but title to the abandoned channel remains in the state of Tennessee.[48] The rule as to state patents that where the junior patentee settles within the lap before settlement by his senior, his possession is not confined to his close but extends to his patent boundaries, applies, though the junior patentee settled before he made his survey.[49]

Mode of proving title.—Certificates which are ancient are admissible.[50] If 43. A locator on state lands, receiving a patent under Laws 1887, c. 99, owns the minerals under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4041, though they were reserved at time of patent. Laws 1883, c. 97, reserving minerals in state lands to the state, if not impliedly repealed by Laws 1887, c. 99, was expressly repealed by Rev. St. 1895, expressly repealing all laws of general nature not included or continued in force. Laws 1887, c. 99, repealing all conflicting land laws and making no provision regarding minerals on state lands, impliedly repeals reservation of minerals in such lands so that a locator thereunder could claim them as against the state. Heil v. Martin [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 430.

44. Under statutes providing for the sale of swamp land and on reclamation thereof by the purchaser, the purchase price or moneys expended in reclamation to be refunded to him, the state holds the purchase money in trust so limitations do not begin to run until the trust is repudiated. An original transfer of a certificate issued in lieu of a headright which came from proper custody and under which the land had been claimed for years with no circumstances casting suspicion on it was properly admitted in evidence in an action of trespass to try title. Simmonds v. Simmonds [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 630. Transfer of a state land certificate in Texas with grantee's name left blank which was afterward inserted so that the procedure appeared from the instrument will not render it suspicious as an ancient instrument in evidence in trespass to try title. Ward v. Cameron [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 240.

land is "vacant," possession raises no inference of ownership.[51] Mistake in a patent is provable by field notes.[52] A certificate of payment will prove payment.[53]

§ 5. Leases of public lands and rights thereunder.—The statutes authorizing leases of public lands within which the powers of land officers must be found frequently repose a large discretion in them, e. g. as to the necessity of advertisement,[54] and as to the propriety of renewing or leasing to another.[55] Mandamus will lie to compel the land commissioner to recognize a lease and accept rent thereunder.[56] Adoption of rules and regulations by land officers is not a condition precedent under the Texas laws.[57] Conditions and terms prescribed cannot be varied.[58]

Application for a new lease before time for cancellation of the old will not prevent the commissioner from canceling and reletting at the proper time.[59] Evidence of a prior lease by an applicant to purchase is not conclusive that the lease is in force.[60]

The term of a lease of Texas school lands begins at midnight of the day of execution, no other intention appearing.[61] Acceptance of a lease by an applicant amounts to acquiescence in a ruling of the commissioner as to expiration of the lease, where the statute regulating leases does not imperatively require a different construction.[62] One attacking the validity of the commissioner's ruling as to time of expiration of a lease has the burden of proof.[63] A lessee who attempted to purchase, the sale being rescinded before expiration of the lease, is not a lessee from the time of sale, though his payments exceeded the rents.[64]

Rent.—A small deficiency in acreage should not abate a rent in gross for named sections.[65] Default in rent does not of itself work a forfeiture, hence payment at any time before cancellation is good.[66] A tender may be good without a description of the lands, that not being required by statute.[67]

Rights under the lease.—A state law giving the United States "use" of state tide lands does not include tide lands held under private lease from the state.[68] The lessee of Texas university lands cannot recover damages caused by sheep in grazing while being moved expeditiously through the lands.[69]

Texas state school lands under lease cannot be sublet without consent of the state,[70] nor sold during the term to other than the lessee,[71] unless the lessee waives his right to undisturbed possession, the provision being merely for his benefit.[72] The assignee of the lease may purchase during the lease,[73] unless the land is in the absolute lease district.[74] After expiration of a lease, the original lessee has 30 days' preference right to renewal after the land is open for sale 60 days.[75] The statute determining priority of right to purchase lands and fixing leasehold rights does not determine the interest under an undetermined lease.[76]

Forfeiture, cancellation and re-lease.—Laws for cancellation of public land leases must be strictly construed.[77] An oil lease requiring exploration may be forfeited for failure to prospect.[78] Default in payment does not work an ipso facto forfeiture.[79] The execution of a new lease before the expiration of the 60 days after the rent was due will not operate as a cancellation of an old lease of the same lands.[80] A law of Washington giving the United States the right to operate a ship canal over state lands is not an attempt to convey lands leased from the state, so as to annul the lease.[81] Certain leases invalid for want of record have been cured by statute in Texas.[82]

Where the right to cancel a lease exists, it may be canceled informally if all parties acquiesce,[83] otherwise forfeiture must be clearly shown.[84] Though it is not

84. The presumption that official acts are regular will not extend to acts concerning forfeiture of a lease of state school lands, and proof that rights have been granted another will not render proof of legal forfeiture of the former lease unnecessary; a shown that a lease has been canceled, it is presumed that the award by the commissioner of a patent to another during the time covered by the lease was regular.[85] Sale of leased lands by the commissioner to the assignee of the lease will not estop the state from denying cancellation of the lease by such sale.[86] The statement of the register of the board of land commissioners of Colorado, that an oil lease of state lands was not subject to forfeiture under the statutes, will not bind the commissioners.[87]

Subsequent tender of rent is not payment which will remove the disqualification of a lessee, whose lease was canceled for arrears in rent, to lease anew.[88]

§ 6. Spanish and other grants antedating Federal sovereignty.—Spanish and Mexican grants to be valid must be susceptible of identification,[89] and if identifiable may be confirmed,[90] and when legally confirmed, the title is valid.[91] A Spanish grant in Florida, whether perfect or not, must have been confirmed by commissioners appointed by congress to adjudicate such claims, or by the courts.[92] Lands of a perfect Spanish-Mexican grant may be taxed, though the grant has been submitted to the court of private land claims for confirmation and no patent has issued.[93] A valid grant of public lands by Mexican authorities in 1833, pursuant to a concession, vested title in the grantee in the absence of evidence that it was not accepted, or after acceptance was abandoned,[94] and a subsequent grant under the same concession was absolutely void.[95] A law authorizing issuance of certificates or scrip to holders of deferred land claims confirmed under treaty of cession of Louisiana, redeemable in land by the United States, applies to a grantee of land certificate from the commissioner that no prior lease exists is insufficient under Rev. St. art. 4218s. Irwin v. Mayes, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 73 S. W. 33. An existing lease cannot be disregarded and a new one awarded alone on the statutory certificate that none exists of record [Rev. St. art. 4218s must be strictly construed]. Id. That a lease can only be canceled by the commissioner will not prevent proof of cancellation by his certificate that pursuant to the lessee's release he had canceled the lease as to the land in question [Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47]. Trevey v. Lowrie [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 18. The record of the county clerk is evidence of cancellation of a lease [Acts 1901, pp. 294, 295, c. 125, §§ 4, 5]. Valentine v. Sweatt [Tex. Civ. 89. An alcalde grant is void where the description is insufficient to identify the property; a map of vara lots not referred to in the grant will not render it sufficient. Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 Pac. 851.

90. The report of the commissioner of public lands in favor of a claim under a Spanish land grant will not render applicable provisions of the treaty of 1819 with Spain, to confirm the grant, where no survey existed and the description was indefinite. The grant alleged gave the area in arpents and stated that it was on the Mobile river. Mobile Transp. Co. v. Mobile, 187 U. S. 479, 47 Law. Ed. 266.

91. The courts are concluded by an act of congress confirming a claim for land under a Mexican grant [Act June 21, 1860 (12 Stat. 71, c. 167)]. Catron v. Laughlin [N. M.] 72 Pac. 26. Declaration by the surveyor general of New Mexico that a Mexican land grant is valid, and confirmation by congress on his recommendation, amount to a declaration of valid title. The courts can go back to the original grant only to determine the scope of title intended by the confirmation, since that was an adjudication of perfect title where the grant gives complete title. previously located under such a claim as to which the location failed because of prior grant or location.[96] State officers cannot sell pueblo lands.[97] Under Mexican laws, pueblo lands were held in trust for municipal purposes subject to control of the Mexican government. California succeeded to the sovereignty of Mexico and had authority to authorize and confirm the sale of such lands.[98] Where the evidence shows trustees of Monterey to be at least de facto officers, it will be presumed in absence of other evidence, in an action to quiet title to Monterey pueblo lands sold by the city, that they were regularly appointed; it may be shown that the persons signing the deeds were commonly reported to be city trustees.[99] Where a city confirms an alcalde grant by ordinance, its conveyance should follow to make a record title.[1] A supposition, by a claimant alleging under a Spanish land grant, that the grant existed and was lost, is not evidence of an actual grant.[2] Abandonment of lands by descendants of grantees in a Spanish land grant nine years before the treaty of 1848 with Mexico, without renewal or attempt to assert possession fifty years thereafter, will prevent confirmation of the grant in the court of private land claims.[3] After confirmation of a claim under a Mexican land grant by congress, forfeiture must have taken place before the land became American territory as appearing by official action of the former government.[4]

§ 7. Regulations and policing, and offenses pertaining to public lands.—The United States may exclude the public from use of reservations or prescribe regulations for their use which cannot be interfered with by the courts as unreasonable or oppressive.[10] While congress may delegate power to the secretary of the interior to regulate such use, exercise of his power must rest on express or implied delegation by statute.[11] A rule of the secretary of the interior, prohibiting pasturage of sheep and goats on forest reservations except by special permit, is a proper exercise of his authority; since the sundry civil appropriations act, authorizing him to regulate and preserve forest reservations and prescribing a penalty for violation of such regulations, is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power to an administrative officer.[12] A preliminary injunction will issue to prevent pasturage of sheep on forest reservations on an allegation of irreparable injury to timber, undergrowth and water supply.[13]

Cutting timber on public lands.—Laws permitting removal of timber from Federal mineral lands for building, agricultural, mining and other domestic purposes authorizes removal from mining claims and from lands in close proximity to such claims having the general character of mineral lands.[14] Location of mineral claims on unsurveyed mineral lands will not prevent recovery by the United States for timber cut by other than the locators.[15] The secretary of the interior cannot enlarge or restrict the purposes for which timber may be taken for mining purposes from public mineral lands.[16] A homesteader may cut timber for his home before making entry[17] or during his residence,[18] or may contract with another to cut timber.[19] The right to take building material from "adjacent" lands does not extend to lands 20 miles distant.[20] One sued for value of timber cut from the

The United States cannot recover the value of timber cut by a homesteader during residence which continued until he was entitled to a patent, or where he obtained title by locating scrip thereon, relinquishing the homestead entry. U. S. v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 1016. Issue of a final certificate to a homestead entryman will estop the government from recovering from him or his grantee for removal of timber, or waste, during pendency of the entry; but after cancellation of the certificate for fraud, recovery may be had from the grantee or his vendees with notice of the fraud for logs or ore converted before cancellation. 19. Payment of the price for government lands vests the purchaser with the equitable title to the land as of the date of application, including timber cut after that date, so that one cutting timber after application under agreement with the applicant is not liable as a trespasser. Teller v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 577.

20. Lands 20 miles distant from the right of way are not "adjacent" within the meaning of 18 St. at L. 482, granting railroad companies the right to take materials for the construction of its road from adjacent public lands. U. S. v. St. Anthony R. Co., 192 U. S. 524.

public domain must show compliance with regulations for cutting.[21] Obtaining a written contract for sale and delivery of timber taken from the public domain is not a compliance with a regulation that one so taking timber from mineral lands must not sell without taking a contract from the purchaser requiring its use for the purposes prescribed by law for such removal.[22] Release by a government agent of ties cut by a trespasser, after seizure, on agreement of the trespasser to pay the appraised value, vests title in him.[23] The United States cannot sue when title has passed from the government.[24] Intent to purchase or custom in beginning cutting of timber before purchase is no defense.[25] Defendant must plead the defense of good faith if he desires to show it in mitigation of damages.[26] Proof of government ownership of lands, of the cutting, possession, and taking away by a railroad company, and of the value of the timber, is sufficient in trover by the United States, though under special laws the company may take timber from the public lands for certain purposes.[27] Where the only evidence as to the quantity of timber taken was testimony of scalers who made estimates from the land several years after removal of the timber, every presumption reasonable under the evidence may be indulged in favor of the United States.[28]

The measure of damages[29] is the value at the time and place where the cutting was done,[30] excluding the added value of timber due to labor and expense.[31] Exemplary damages may be recovered; but defendant may show under his plea of good faith that he acted on the advice of counsel.[32]

The right to cut timber on reserved state lands in Maine is terminated by incorporation of a town including such lands.[33] The trust title in the state has ceased and it cannot maintain trespass for the cutting.[34]

Offenses in applications by settlers.—Proof of forgery of transfer papers of additional homestead will not support an indictment for transmitting them to a land office.[35] A false application for a soldier's additional homestead, supported by proofs and affidavits taken before a notary, is the offense of presenting false evidence in support of a claim against the United States, if done willfully and fraudulently.[36]

PUBLIC WORKS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

§ 1. Definition and scope of title.—This topic includes public works and improvements of all kinds and assessments general and local therefor, and contracts therefor.[1] The taking of property for public use,[2] the construction and operation of particular public works,[3] and matters peculiar to the powers and fiscal affairs of particular public bodies,[4] are specifically treated elsewhere. A local improvement is a public improvement, which, by reason of its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of adjacent property, as distinguished from benefits diffused by it throughout the municipality.[5] Whether a sewer is public and taxable to the public generally, or district and taxable to the property benefited, does not depend upon the action of the council, but on the nature of the sewer itself. If it is open and available to the whole city, then it is public, otherwise not;[6] and where tax bills for a district sewer are assailed on the ground that the district sewer did not connect with any public or district sewer, the main sewer is sufficiently shown to be public by its acceptance and use as such by the city regardless of how it was originally established.[7]

§ 2. Power, duty and occasion to order or make improvements.[8]—The power of municipalities to order or make public improvements, either at the general public expense,[9] or at the expense of the owners of property supposed to be benefited thereby,[10] is purely statutory, and no improvements are authorized except such as are clearly within the terms of the statute,[11] or necessary to a full enjoyment of the power actually granted.[12]

10. There are two methods provided by the Indiana Statutes for the improvement of county line highways at the expense of the benefited property [Burns' 1901, §§ 6792 et seq., 6914 et seq]. Sefton v. Howard County Com'rs, 160 Ind. 357, 66 N. E. 891.

When the power is granted, however, the duty of determining the occasion or necessity of the improvement being legislative is usually conferred upon some local legislative body such as a city council, county board or board of public works, and its discretion in the matter is final and cannot be controlled by the courts in the absence of fraud,[12] unless the board has so abused its discretion in that regard that the ordinance authorizing it may be declared void,[14] and the determination of material for street paving is a matter of legislative discretion, lodged with the council, and cannot be usurped by a ministerial officer.[15] Similarly, improvement boards in Arkansas are not mere agents of the city council, but have an independent existence and the council cannot interfere with the build-

Statutes authorizing improvement of streets and assessment of benefits, held to authorize the opening of a proposed street to constitute an extension of another street [Act Mch. 24, 1899, p. 283, c. 135, as amended by Act Mch. 20, 1901, p. 145, c. 70, § 59]. Rowe v. Com'rs of Assessments of East Orange [N. J. Law], 55 Atl. 649. Authority to build sidewalks will not authorize the building as one improvement of a sidewalk and curb, the curb being at a distance from the walk and in no sense a part of it. Boals v. Bachmann, 201 Ill. 340, 66 N. E. 336. Under statutory authority to order streets "graded and paved," a city has no authority to order grading without paving. Taylor v. Patton, 160 Ind. 4, 66 N. E. 91. The charter of Yonkers does not empower it to improve private property as a private road by grading and laying stone steps therein for the use of the public and assess the cost thereof on a restricted assessment district. Culver v. Yonkers, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 309. After a park board in Illinois has taken control of and improved the side adjoining the park of a street running longitudinally along such park, it has, under the statute, full control over such street and the city authorities have no further right to improve it at the expense of the abutting owners. Chicago v. Carpenter, 201 Ill. 402, 66 N. E. 362. Under authority to levy a tax for the repair of a drain, the drainage commissioners cannot assess property owners of the district for deepening an existing ditch. People v. McDougal, 205 Ill. 636, 69 N. E. 95. Where a city has ordered a street paved without petition of the property owners, and thereby deprived itself of charging the cost on the abutting property, it may nevertheless order curbing put in and assess its cost on the property. Omaha v. Gsanter [Neb.] 93 N. W. 407. The gravel and macadamized road act of Indiana is valid [Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145]. Bowlin v. Cochran [Ind.] 69 N. E. 153. Boards of trustees of incorporated towns can exercise only the powers in respect to sidewalks and street improvements conferred by statute. Clay City v. Bryson, 30 Ind. App. 490, 66 N. E. 498. A statute giving a council power to cause "the whole width of the street to be graded and paved" does not give them power to "grade or pave" the street. Taylor v. Patton, 160 Ind. 4, 66 N. E. 91.

12. A town in New Hampshire under its general authority over highways has power to construct sewers so far as needed to put and keep its highways in suitable condition, and the fact that house drains are connected with a sewer does not show that it is not needed to render the highway suitable for public travel. Contoocook Fire Precinct v. Hopkinton, 71 N. H. 574. Though a city has no power to construct a sewer for general purposes under cover of a street improvement, it may construct a storm drain in connection with paving where the cost of it is but a small portion of the cost of the whole improvement, and is necessary for the benefit of the street. Gates v. Grand Rapids [Mich.] 95 N. W. 998. The drainage act of Indiana does not authorize the building of a levee where it is not a mere incident of the drain, but is rather the principal improvement. Royse v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., 160 Ind. 592, 67 N. E. 446. The uniting of two or more sewer districts with a joint district does not exhaust the power of the council of Kansas City in that respect, but several such joint districts may be united to form a larger joint district as often as the development of the city makes such course necessary. South Highland L. & I. Co. v. Kan. City, 172 Mo. 523, 72 S. W. 944.

R. 2263, 73 S. W. 1115; Haman v. Franklin, 99 Mo. App. 346, 73 S. W. 314. A determination by the public improvement commission to replace a blue stone curb with one of granite on the ground that the former becomes watersoaked and disintegrates from frost is the determination of a question of fact, not reviewable on certiorari. ing of an improvement ordered by the board on the ground that it is impracticable or that a majority of the property owners do not desire it.[16] It has been held, however, that the board of aldermen of a city in ordering street improvements and letting contracts therefor act not in a legislative but an administrative or business capacity, and their acts are reviewable on the ground of fraud or corruption.[17]

Where it appears that the work requested on a public highway as repairs would be in fact the making of a new road, and that public necessity and convenience do not require the improvement, the county commissioners may deny the application.[18]

The reasonableness of a proposed scheme or system of sewerage involves the consideration of the situation and condition of the whole of the territory to be reached by the sewers and cannot be determined alone in view of the situation of the property of certain objectors.[19] A sewer ordinance is not unreasonable in providing for two house slants for each corner lot, one on each street.[20]

The fact that a street has been before improved does not deprive the municipality of authority to require it to be improved again in a proper case at the expense of the abutting property owners,[21] but a reimprovement before a reasonable time has passed, and while the original improvement is in good repair is illegal as being unreasonable, and taxes levied therefor are uncollectible.[22]

Under power to build sidewalks and assess their cost on abutting owners, an ordinance may authorize the owners to build the walks themselves,[23] and where the law does not require the city to give the lot owner opportunity to build his own sidewalk, giving it to him will not invalidate the ordinance, nor can he complain that the opportunity given him was insufficient;[24] but the fact that the property owner has constructed a walk in front of his own property where not authorized so to do will not relieve him from paying his pro rata share of the expense of building the walks in the district.[25] It is within the police power of the state to authorize a city to abate a nuisance within its limits and assess the expense against the property benefited.[26]

After bonds have been voted for the expense of a highway improvement, the character of which has been previously determined, the town board may change the details of the plans, so long as the character of the work is not changed and the authorized limit of expenditure is not exceeded. can be exercised only when expressly granted,[28] and in favor of only such improvements as are authorized by statute.[29] But a liability on the part of a city to pay for public improvements actually constructed may arise in favor of the person doing the work, though the intention was that only the property benefited should be charged,[30] though, where a contractor agrees to take pay only out of special assessments made, or to be made, for the improvement, and to take the risk of their invalidity, he has no right of action against the city, in case of failure to collect the assessment,[31] except in cases where the city by its own act prevents the collection.[32] The city may also become liable to the property owner, where he has been compelled to pay a higher price than necessary for the work, by reason of the city's neglect.[33]

In those states where the practice is for the city to pay for the improvement primarily, and assess its cost against the benefited property, it is frequently provided that in case the special assessment cannot be collected, the city shall have an action against the property owners for the value of the improvement.[34] Such a provision, however, will not support an action for an improvement the city had no authority to make.[35] Where a property owner refuses to pay an assessment for a sidewalk, proper in amount, but void, and the municipality by its charter is charged with the care of public property, and empowered to lay sidewalks and levy assessments, it can remove the sidewalk,[36] but a municipality which imbeds flag stones, for a sidewalk, in the soil of the highway, thereby affixing them to the realty, cannot remove them on a successful resistance by the abutting owner of a special tax levied to pay for them.[37] The amount of special tax assessable to any

Where bonds, issued in Nebraska, to pay for local improvements contain no stipulation limiting the recourse of their holders to the special taxes levied for such improvements, they create a general liability of the city issuing them, enforceable by mandamus. Where, after letting a contract, the council repeals the ordinance authorizing the improvement, it is liable to the contractor for the price, though the contract provides that he will make no claim against the city except for the special taxes levied against the property benefited. Alton v. Job, 103 Ill. App. 378.

33. Louisville v. Ky. & I. Bridge Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1087, 70 S. W. 627.

34. An adjudication of the invalidity of special assessments is not conclusive as to the right of the city to recover of abutting owners, on a quantum meruit, for the improvement to their property by the paving [Iowa Code 1873, §§ 478, 479]. Davenport v. Allen, 120 Fed. 172. A city charter, making no provision other than reassessment for reimbursement of the city in case an assessment for local improvements is declared invalid, is not unconstitutional for failure to limit the amount of indebtedness the city may incur by local improvement. Kadderly v. Portland [Or.] 74 Pac. 710.

35. Where the statutory remonstrance of the owners of more than one-half the adjacent property has been filed and ignored, and the assessments for the work been vacated, the city cannot recover from the lot owners under the statute authorizing recovery, where an assessment is invalid or uncollectible. property in a given year is frequently limited to a certain percentage of the value of the property,[38] and where a municipality attempts to assess the whole cost of an improvement on abutting owners, with the result that a greater percentage of the value of the property is assessed to it than the law allows, its course is to reassess the amount allowed by law upon the abutting owners, and the deficit upon the property of the municipality generally.[39]

A direction, by the trustees of a village, to a property owner to construct a walk at his own expense does not amount to a consent by the village, so as to entitle him to recover from the village one half the cost thereof, under the Village Law of New York.[40]

The burden of mere repairs, as distinguished from original construction, of pavements, is generally placed by statute upon the general public,[41] and it is not infrequently provided that repavements shall not be at the expense of the abutting property, where it has once paid for pavement.[42]

§ 4. Proceedings to authorize making. A. By whom and how initiated. Petition and notice.—The power to make or order public improvements at the expense of property owners, being purely statutory, and being regarded as particularly burdensome to them, the statutory requirements must be strictly pursued,[43] and jurisdiction shown at every step.[44] Where noncompliance with the statute amounts to a mere irregularity, proceedings thereunder will not be invalidated by such irregularity.[45]

A petition of property owners in substantial compliance with the law is a necessary prerequisite in most states,[46] as well as notice to them by publication

41. Repavement held not repairs. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Muchenberger [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 280. Top dressing of old macadam road held an improvement such as may be assessed upon property owners and not a mere repair. Field v. Chicago, 198 Ill. 224, 64 N. E. 840.

42. Where the statute provides that repavement shall be at the expense of the public generally, a widening of the original paved roadway and a repavement of the whole, as widened, is clearly for the benefit of the public, no part of the cost of which is assessable to the property owner (Wreford v. Detroit [Mich.] 93 N. W. 876); but in Kentucky, a tearing up of an old pavement and the laying of another of different material is an original construction chargeable to the property owner and not a reconstruction chargeable to the public (Catlettsburg v. Self, 25 Ky. L. R. 161, 74 S. W. 1064). Repairs on an old turnpike road after it is taken into the corporate limits of a city are not an original construction so as to relieve property owners of the expense of paving it. Wymond v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1135, 77 S. W. 203. A statute relieving property owners who have once paid for pavement of the expense made necessary by any subsequent change of grade, does not relieve them of the expense of repaving, where a slight change of grade is made because of the use of a different kind of pavement. Auditor General v. Chase [Mich.] 94 N. W. 178.

43. Leflore County v. Cannon, 81 Miss. 334. Where the statute provides for the correction of errors by the council and courts in proceedings to enforce payment of special taxes, the rule of strict construction against the taxing power does not apply as to that statute. Lexington v. Woolfolk [Ky.] 78 S. W. 910.

44. The record in street improvement cases must show jurisdiction (Sedalia v. Scott [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 276), but need not specifically state that the street to be improved is within the corporate limits, as the city will be presumed to be acting within its charter powers (Kan. City v. Block, 175 Mo. 433, 74 S. W. 993). Under the Local Improvement Act of Illinois the recommendation of the local improvement board is prima facie evidence that all preliminary requirements of the law have been complied with. Departures from statute must be willful. McChesney v. Chicago, 205 Ill. 611, 69 N. E. 82. The record need not recite the facts relative to the giving of the statutory notice. In municipalities having a population of less than 10,000, a petition of the owners of at least one-half of the abutting property, and of a majority of the resident property owners affected by the proposed improvement, is essential to the jurisdiction of the improvement board, and the enactment of a valid ordinance. Vennum v. Milford, 202 Ill. 423, 66 N. E. 1040. Where an ordinance based on such a petition is held invalid on confirmation, it cannot be again used as a basis for action, as the ownership of the property may have materially changed since the petition was circulated. Vennum v. Milford, 202 Ill. 423, 66 N. E. 1040. The property owner cannot be charged with the expense of building a sidewalk, where he was not given the statutory notice to build it himself. Waukesha v. Randles [Wis.] 98 N. W. 237; Walden v. Relyea, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 241. Power to a city to provide for street improvements at the cost of abutting owners implies power to fix the character of the notice to be given them, and prescribe the manner of its service. Zalesky v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 714, 92 N. W. 657. An assessment including the cost of both sidewalks and curbs, ordered by separate resolutions of intention, creates no lien, where the owners of a majority of the frontage objected to the one, and were given no opportunity to be heard, though the other was not objected to. Gray v. Burr, 138 Cal. 109, 70 Pac. 1068. One owner cannot object that others did not have notice (Kan. City v. Block, 175 Mo. 433, 74 S. App.] 78 S. W. 314). One who is present and participates at an election, and votes on the question of the sum to be raised without protest, cannot question the regularity of the election on the ground that the statutory notice was not given. Brown v. Street Lighting Dist. No. 1 [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 1030. Where sufficient notice of the first meeting has been given the board may adjourn from time to time without further notice. McChesney v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 344, 66 N. E. 217. Six days' notice is sufficient, under a statute providing for reasonable notice. Field v. Chicago, 198 Ill. 224, 64 N. E. 840. So is five days. McChesney v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 344, 66 N. E. 217.

estimate of its cost,[50] is also generally provided for.[51] And in Illinois, the improvement must originate by resolution or recommendation of the improvement board.[52]

A remonstrance, by a sufficient number of property owners, generally deprives the board of further authority in the matter,[53] and the subsequent withdrawal of a portion of them will not reconfer it.[54]

Unless so provided by the statute, however, a public hearing on the necessity or propriety of the improvement is not necessary,[55] nor is the board limited to the precise improvement discussed thereat.[56]

determine therefrom the character and estimated cost of the improvement. Walker v. Chicago, 202 Ill. 531, 67 N. E. 369; Gage v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 56, 69 N. E. 588. The resolution of intention in California may include two or more distinct improvements. Bates v. Twist, 138 Cal. 52, 70 Pac. 1023. Before a city council can order a street paved it must pass a resolution declaring that it deems the improvement necessary, which resolution should state the kind of paving proposed to be used, and where the resolution also provides for bringing the street to grade at the expense of the property owners it must describe the work necessary. Kirksville v. Coleman [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 120. An ordinance providing for the construction of a sidewalk "in accordance with said ordinance" is a sufficient compliance with a statute providing that such work should "in all respects conform to the requirements of such ordinance." Storrs v. Chicago [Ill.] 70 N. E. 347. That a recommendation and estimate described only a cement walk, did not invalidate an ordinance based thereon, providing for a cinder, cement, concrete, torpedo, sand, and limestone walk. Id.

50. A statutory provision that the engineer's itemized written estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement shall be made a part of the record of the first resolution is for the information and protection of the property owners and must be complied with. Statement of amount in gross is not sufficient. Bickerdike v. Chicago, 203 Ill. 636, 68 N. E. 161. A mere reference is insufficient. Kilgallen v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 557, 69 N. E. 586; Becker v. Chicago [Ill.] 69 N. E. 748; Moss v. Fairbury [Neb.] 92 N. W. 721. Evidence held insufficient to show that estimate was filed. De Soto v. Showman, 100 Mo. App. 323, 73 S. W. 257. Estimate made after first resolution is not sufficient. Kirksville v. Coleman [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 120. A resolution appointing commissioners to estimate the cost of an improvement passed by way of amendment to the ordinance which omitted such appointment is invalid. Paxton v. Bogardus, 201 Ill. 628, 66 N. E. 853.

51. After an objection of owners to a street improvement has been allowed by the council, in a case where the allowance is discretionary, it cannot afterwards order the work done at their expense without a new resolution of intention (Pac. Pav. Co. v. Sullivan Estate Co., 137 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 86; City St. Imp. Co. v. Babcock, 139 Cal. 690, 73 Pac. 666), but the adoption of the report of a committee that an objection filed legally bars further proceedings, when in fact it has no such effect, does not oust the jurisdiction of the council to order the work done (City St. Imp. Co. v. Laird, 138 Cal. 27, 70 Pac. 916; City St. Imp. Co. v. Rontet, 140 Cal. 55, 73 Pac. 729).

52. The signing of a recommendation for a public improvement, in Illinois, by a majority of the members of the improvement board, is sufficient, the statute not requiring its signature by the president and secretary. Dodge v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 68, 66 N. E. 367. The improvement will be presumed to have originated with the improvement board, notwithstanding a resolution of the council ordering it to prepare an ordinance therefor, since such resolution should be treated by the board as a mere petition. An ordinance which has been held to be defective in matters of description may be the basis for a new one for a new assessment for the completed work. Chicago v. Hulbert, 205 Ill. 346, 68 N. E. 786. A special assessment ordinance, passed under the law as it existed prior to the Local Improvement Act of 1897, if subsequently held to be defective, may, under section 58 of such act, be corrected by passing a new ordinance and making a new assessment. Groton v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 534, 66 N. E. 541. A public hearing was had on a proposed scheme of improvement. A resolution was then adopted by the board of local improvements, changing the scheme in such a way as to reduce the cost, but estimated cost was not mentioned. There was no further public hearing. Held, a sufficient compliance with the statute. Chicago v. Kerfoot & Co. [Ill.] 70 N. E. 349.

(§ 4) B. The ordinance or public act of approval.—An ordinance providing for the particular work is the very foundation of the improvement, whether it is to be paid for by a special tax[57] or by the city at large, and if there be no ordinance providing for it, the city cannot be bound by a ratification of the work by the council after it has been done.[58]

If the ordinance fails to sufficiently specify the nature, character, locality and description of the improvement, it, as well as all subsequent proceedings, are invalid.[59] An ordinance providing that the roadway of streets shall be graded need not specifically state that the low places shall be filled and the high places cut down, as the word "grade" naturally includes such action.[60] An ordinance sufficiently specifies the width of roadways to be paved which declares that they shall extend a certain number of feet upon each side of the center line of the street,[61]

ing the board of local improvements, at a public hearing, to adopt a new resolution changing the former proposed scheme, without a further public hearing, provided the change does not increase the estimated cost to exceed 20 per cent, authorizes a change which decreases the cost [Laws 1901, p. 104, § 8]. Washburn v. Chicago, 198 Ill. 506, 64 N. E. 1064; McChesney v. Chicago, 205 Ill. 611, 69 N. E. 82. An ordinance predicated on a recommendation increasing the cost after public hearing, and without hearing as to the increase is void, and the court has no jurisdiction to confirm an assessment based thereon. Chicago v. Walsh, 203 Ill. 318, 67 N. E. 774.

An ordinance or resolution is necessary to the establishment or change of grade of a street or the improvement thereof in an incorporated town in Iowa. Eckert v. Walnut, 117 Iowa, 629, 91 N. W. 929; Zalesky v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 714, 92 N. W. 657. Work on a public improvement is begun before the final passage of the ordinance authorizing it, where it is begun before the passage of an amendment making a material change in the improvement. Paxton v. Bogardus, 201 Ill. 628, 66 N. E. 853. The final resolution for an improvement may be adopted by a majority of the board. McChesney v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 344, 66 N. E. 217. The lapse of more than a year between the date when an ordinance is introduced into the city council on the recommendation of the board of local improvements and the date of its passage will not invalidate it, the statute not providing any limitation in that respect. McLaughlin v. Chicago, 198 Ill. 518, 64 N. E. 1036. Deferring action on a recommendation does not preclude the council from passing a subsequent ordinance including the deferred improvement with other work, since the later recommendation superseded the prior one. Washburn v. Chicago, 202 Ill. 210, 66 N. E. 1033. Specifications as to sewer held sufficient. Walker v. Chicago, 202 Ill. 531, 67 N. E. 369. Cubic yards of back filling behind curbstone need not be specified. McChesney v. Chicago, 205 Ill. 611, 69 N. E. 82; Gage v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 56, 69 N. E. 583. Macadam paving held sufficiently described. Perry v. People, 206 Ill. 334, 69 N. E. 63. Length of house drains held not sufficiently specified. Wetmore v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 367, 69 N. E. 234. Variance between ordinance and notices as to description of paving at street intersections held immaterial. Gage v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 93, 66 N. E. 374. Specifications as to material to be used in pavement, held sufficiently certain. Id. An ordinance authorizing the construction of a sewer and providing for the insertion of slants therein at street intersections is not indefinite for failure to designate at which side of the intersecting street they are to be placed, as it will be presumed that the middle of the street was meant. Duane v. Chicago, 198 Ill. 471, 64 N. E. 1033. An ordinance providing for grading a street "full width to the curb grade" does not provide for grading the sidewalk, and hence is not invalid for failure to apportion the expense between sidewalk and street. Burghard v. Fitch, 24 Ky. L. R. 1983, 72 S. W. 778.

but if it is sufficient to challenge the attention of the court, the judgment of confirmation, however erroneous, is not void nor subject to collateral attack,[62] and a reference to another ordinance from which the specifications may be obtained is sufficient.[63]

A special tax for the construction of a sidewalk is invalid where the grade for such walk is not established by the ordinance,[64] but a paving ordinance requiring that the pavement when completed be at "the established grade" of the street is not void, and the judgment of confirmation cannot be attacked upon application for sale on the ground that a grade had not been established when the ordinance was passed, though such objection would have been fatal if urged at confirmation.[65]

§ 5. Proposals and contracts for work.[66]—The rule that the statutory requirements in matters relating to public improvements must be strictly pursued applies particularly to the proceedings for letting the contract. Statutes requiring that the work be done by contract are regarded as mandatory,[67] as are the directions therein as to what the contracts shall contain by way of description of the work.[68]

Advertisements for proposals must be published as the law directs,[69] and contain or refer to plans and specifications sufficient to enable the bidders to form an intelligent conception of the work,[70] and the proposals or bids must be submitted[71] and received conformably to the law,[72] and be bona fide competitive.[73]

67. Where the statute directs the work to be done by contract let to the lowest bidder, the town cannot do it by hiring day laborers and charge the cost on abutting property. Clay City v. Bryson, 30 Ind. App. 490, 66 N. E. 493. A statutory provision that all contracts for the making of any public improvement when the expense exceeds $500 must be let to the lowest responsible bidder prohibits the city from doing such work without contract by employing day laborers directly. Chicago v. Hanreddy, 102 Ill. App. 1. A contract for the rebuilding of a sidewalk which contemplates extensive grading to conform to a general improvement of the street constructed at the same time is not a mere repair, but a permanent improvement, entitling lot owners to insist that it be let with the other work on the street. Waukesha v. Randles [Wis.] 98 N. W. 237.

69. A charter provision for 30 days' notice by advertisement of the letting of a contract does not require publication every day, a single publication being sufficient. Newport News v. Potter [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 321. A charter provision for 30 days' notice by advertisement before letting does not invalidate a contract where only 29 days elapse between publication and opening bids, where the contract is not let for several weeks. Id.

La. v. Schaffner [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 287. Where there is no provision that the contract shall be let to the lowest bidder, an advertisement for proposals containing plans, specifications and prices is not objectionable. Kundinger v. Saginaw [Mich.] 93 N. W. 914. That the advertisement calls for alternative bids on two different kinds of pavement will not invalidate the contract. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Gaar, 24 Ky. L. R. 2227, 73 S. W. 1106.

71. A bid changed after the time limited for their receipt is in effect a new bid and can give rise to no liability on the part of either party. Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. North Bend [Neb.] 94 N. W. 537.

72. Proposals to do street work are "publicly declared" within the meaning of the statute when they are opened and read in open session of the council. City St. Imp. Co. v. Laird, 138 Cal. 27, 70 Pac. 916.

73. Where within the knowledge of the council there is but one bona fide bid, the requirement that the contract be let to the

The contract must not be let before the final passage of the ordinance authorizing it,[74] nor before the time authorized by law,[75] and no contract can be entered into at a price exceeding the estimate of the probable cost of the work.[76] The contract must be for the precise improvement contemplated by the ordinance,[77] embrace substantially the terms of the proposals,[78] and include no work other than that chargeable by law on the property owners, if it is intended to assess its cost upon them. A paving contract, however, requiring the contractor to keep the paving in repair for a stipulated period, is merely a guarantee of good work and is not obnoxious to the rule that requires the expense of maintenance of streets to be borne by the municipality by general taxation and limits the right of special assessment to the original cost of paving,[79] though if the contract can be properly construed to require the contractor to make repairs for a considerable term regardless of the cause making them necessary, it is objectionable[80] to the extent at least of the added expense to the property owner by reason of the obligation to repair.[81]

It is a material and important right of a property owner assessed for a local improvement that there shall be free competition in bidding, unrestricted by illegal conditions, the natural tendency of which is to increase the amount of the bids,[82] and the incorporation of such provisions as that the contractor make a guaranty deposit of money,[83] that he restrict his laborers to 8 hours work per day,[84] that the wages paid shall not be less than the prevailing rate,[85] that the workmen be paid in cash and not in store orders,[86] that preference of employment shall be given citizens of the state or United States,[87] that convicts shall not be employed,[88] and that materials used shall be produced or manufactured within the state,[89] is illegal, though required by express statute, and if shown to have influenced the letting by stifling or restraining competition in bidding, invalidates the contract.[90] In the absence of a showing of prejudice to the public, however, contracts are not invalidated by the inclusion of such clauses,[91] and a showing that such provisions, though included in the contract, were not a part of the specifications on which the bidding was based,[92] and a showing that such provisions of the statute having been declared unconstitutional clauses in the contracts founded thereon are invariably disregarded by contractors and the public authorities overcomes the presumption that they influenced the bids.[93] A contract containing such a clause is not void as against public policy, though the clause is a nullity,[94] and conversely, a contract failing to include such provisions is valid, the statute directing their inclusion being unconstitutional.[95]

That a paving contract called for a particular kind of paving wholly within the control of the contractor will not invalidate the contract in some states,[96] though it will in others,[97] and in New York City there is an express charter provision against the use of patented pavements, except under conditions permitting competition.[98]

Where there has been a substantial departure in completing a contract for a public improvement, the special tax bills or assessments levied therefor cannot be collected;[99] but when objected to for that reason as a ground of opposition to a judgment of sale, it must appear that the construction so deviated from the ordinance as to amount to another and different improvement than that provided for,[1] or if the objection be delay in completion, the delay must be such as to amount to a substantial noncompliance with the contract,[2] and an acceptance by the municipal authorities is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive that the work was performed in compliance with the contract.[3]

Where a departure from the ordinance or contract authorizing a public improvement is being made to the detriment of the taxpayers, such as the use of inferior material or defective work, the municipality may be restrained by injunction or compelled by mandamus to complete the improvement in compliance with the terms of the ordinance.[4]

Proceedings of a public improvement commission in awarding a contract for a public improvement are not judicial nor quasi judicial, and hence not subject to review by certiorari.[5] It has been held, however, that, since such boards act not in a legislative, but in an administrative or business capacity, their acts may be reviewed by the courts on the grounds of fraud and corruption.[6]

Where a city releases an accepted bidder and his solvent surety from the performance of the contract and on readvertisement accepts the lowest bid, higher than that of the bidder released, property owners on being compelled to pay the apportionment can recover over from the city the difference between the amount paid and the amount they would have had to pay on the original bid.[7]

Security to laborers and materialmen.—Since the mechanic's lien law does not apply to public property,[8] statutes in many states provide by way of security to laborers and materialmen either for a bond by the contractor for their benefit,[10] or

Lancaster v. Frescoln, 203 Pa. 640. A city is not obliged to take a bond for the protection of laborers or materialmen. This is so, even though such a bond is required of the contractor by an ordinance. Id. In an action upon a bond by a city to the use of the men employed on the work given under an ordinance requiring that a bond shall be given conditioned that the contractor will pay all persons supplying him with labor or materials, it is no defense that the use plaintiffs are day laborers [Ordinance of March 30, 1896 of the city of Phila.]. Phila. v. McLinden, 205 Pa. 172. It is no defense to an action on a municipal contractor's bond conditioned that the contractor will pay all persons supplying him with labor or material that there was a violation of the law and of the contract forbidding the employment of alien labor. Id. It is no defense to an action on a bond of a municipal contractor conditioned that the contractor will pay all persons supplying him with labor or material that the city paid the contractor after notice. Id. The mere filing with the financial officer of a city of a claim for materials furnished to a contractor for a city building creates no lien upon the money which may be due the contractor. Under the New Jersey statute such officer is not thereby justified in withholding payment of the same longer than the 90 days given the claimant within which to commence suit, and give notice thereof to the city. Third Nat. Bank v. Atlantic City, 126 Fed. 413. Where a subcontractor can take advantage of a bond for labor or materials furnished, his creditors for the said labor or materials may recover thereon. Hines v. Consol. C. & L. Co., 29 Ind. App. 563, 64 N. E. 886. The word "materials" as used in a bond binding the contractor and surety to pay for all "materials" used in the execution of the contract does not include tools, appliances, and articles with which to construct an improvement, which did not enter into it, but remained after its construction, such as shovels, wheelbarrows, manilla rope, hose, mattocks, sledge handles, belting, wrenches, steam pipes, chains, axes, rubber boots, etc. Beals v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 526. The beneficiary of a contract, though not a party or privy thereto, can maintain an action thereon. A clause in bond of contract for a public improvement to pay for all labor and material. Held, laborers and materialmen could sue thereon. Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 363. Where a statute gives one a cause of action on the bond of an official who pays the contractor for a public improvement after for a lien on the proceeds of the assessment,[11] and it has been held that a municipality may without statutory authority require such a bond.[12]

notice of a lien for materials furnished, such action is not exclusive, but, the statute failing to provide a remedy for the enforcement of the lien, the lien may be established in equity. Construing 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 2572, § 24. Nat. Bank of La Crosse v. Petterson, 200 Ill. 215, 65 N. E. 687. Where a contractor for a public improvement executes a bond conditioned on his paying for labor and materials furnished him, laborers and materialmen may sue on the bond as a contract made for their benefit. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Cullen & S. Mfg. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1024. A clause in such bond authorizing its assignment and stipulating that, if assigned, the bond shall inure to the benefit of all laborers and materialmen, does not preclude a single materialman, the sole creditor of the contractor, from suing thereon. Id. In Massachusetts, only those who would be entitled to a lien if the property was private can recover on such bond. Kennedy v. Com., 182 Mass. 480, 65 N. E. 828.

11. Hall Incorporated Co. v. Jersey City, 64 N. J. Eq. 766. Under Laws 1897, p. 520, c. 418, § 12 (which is not to be read with § 9, p. 518), does not require notice of liens on account of public improvements to be verified. Clapper v. Strong, 85 N. Y. Supp. 748. The complaint in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien for services performed for a contractor for a public improvement must allege that plaintiff's services were performed on a contract between the contractor and the municipality and that something is due from the municipality. Id. A statute which gives laborers and materialmen a lien on the money due a contractor for a public improvement is not void because the contractor has no lien for his labor and materials. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Western Granite Co., 200 Ill. 527, 66 N. E. 37. Where a statute gives a subcontractor a lien, equity will enforce it. Id. In New Jersey, the statutory lien for labor and materials furnished for a public improvement attaches from the time of filing the notice with the proper officer whether the whole work be then completed by the contractor or abandoned by him. Pierson v. Haddonfield [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 471. Such lien becomes a charge not only on what is due the contractor at the time of filing the lien but also on what may thereafter come to be due him under the contract. Id. The rights of lien claimants for labor and materials for a public improvement will not be divested by subrogating the surety of the contractor to the remedies against such contractor, which the municipality might have had under the contract. Id. Under Gen. St. 2078, being an act to secure the payment of mechanic's liens on public improvements, where a claimant asserts his own claim, and unsuccessfully contests that of any other claimant, he should bear the cost of that litigation but nothing more. Hall Incorporated Co. v. Jersey City, 64 N. J. Eq. 766. First contract, subcontractor waived statutory lien on money in hands of city for payment of work on a public improvement, and agreed to look to such moneys for payment as were in the hands of the construction company. By another contract, the subcontractor was entitled to payment only on a written certificate from chief engineer of construction company. Held, refusal of engineer to issue certificate did not avoid waiver of mechanic's lien. McCabe v. Rapid Transit Subway Const. Co., 127 Fed. 465. Where a subcontractor waives his lien on moneys due from the city for public improvements, he has no right of action against the city either at law or in equity. Id. A subcontractor may waive his statutory lien on money becoming due for public improvements. Express agreement. Id. A complaint under Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2523] is demurrable where it fails to set out that the contractor should promptly make payments to all persons supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of the work, and does not make the contract and bond part of the complaint. U. S. v. American Surety Co., 127 Fed. 490. Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2523] provides for a suit in the name of the United States only in cases where the person or persons for whose use and benefit the suit is brought has supplied the contractor "labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract." Id. The mere filing of an unverified notice will not give the claimant an unqualified right to the fund, nor justify the municipality in withholding it from the contractor longer than the statutory 90 days allowed the claimant to bring suit for it. Third Nat. Bank v. Atlantic City, 126 Fed. 413. Notice actually brought to the attention of the board charged with the duty is sufficient in Illinois (West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Western Granite Co., 200 Ill. 527, 66 N. E. 37); but in New York, it must be filed with the particular officer designated by the statute (Terwilliger v. Wheeler, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 460; Hawkins v. Mapes-Reeves Const. Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 72; Westgate v. Shirley, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 245), and a statement filed with the county clerk as in case of a private improvement will create no lien on the fund furnished to pay for a public improvement, as in such case the statute should be filed with the board having charge of the work (Terwilliger v. Wheeler, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 460). Failure of the public officer to withhold payment after notice subjects him to liability on his bond, but the remedy thus provided is not exclusive, and a lien on the improvement bonds may be enforced in equity. Nat. Bank of La Crosse v. Petterson, 102 Ill. App. 501; West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Western Granite Co., 200 Ill. 527, 66 N. E. 37. By express provision of the statute in New York, funds provided by the public to pay for public improvements are subject to a lien in most respects similar to that allowed against private buildings. Terwilliger v. Wheeler, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 460. Where, under an agreement between the contractor and a construction company, his assignee, of the money to become due and a subcontractor, the latter waived his statutory lien on money becoming due from the city and agreed to look to money in the hands of the construction company for payment, the subcontractor has an adequate remedy at law and cannot sue in equity. McCabe v.

§ 6. Injury to property and compensation to owners. A. In general.[11]—Injuries arising to adjoining owners from the exercise of the police powers of a city are damnum absque injuria,[14] the unauthorized erection of structures injurious to individuals may be enjoined, however,[15] and whenever the property of an individual is taken for public use,[16] or property not actually taken is injured by the construction of an improvement designed merely for public convenience, a cause of action in favor of the property owner arises,[17] entitling him to the recovery of such actual damages as are the direct and unavoidable consequences of the act of building, if in excess of the special benefits accruing to the owner or his land by reason of the existence of the improvement.[18] Ultra vires is not a defense to such an action,[19]

Rapid Transit Subway Const. Co., 127 Fed. 465.

12. With or without special statutory authority, a municipality can make provision by a bond for the security of those who, by their labor done or materials furnished by them, aided the contractors for a public improvement. Hines v. Consol. C. & T. Co., 29 Ind. App. 563, 64 N. E. 886.

13. Taking of property for public use, see Eminent Domain.

14. Such as the building of a police station, jail, or hospital. Chicago v. McShane, 102 Ill. App. 239. A city is not liable to abutting owners for requiring the elevation of railroad tracks by ordinance. Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 232.

15. Shanks v. Pearson, 66 Kan. 168, 71 Pac. 252. The unauthorized erection of a tower on a public square may be enjoined by an abutting lot owner. Fessler v. Union [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 272.

16. Omaha v. Clarke [Neb.] 92 N. W. 146. Where land is tortiously taken by a city for a street, the owner is not obliged to look solely to the special assessment subsequently levied against abutting property, for the payment of the judgment rendered in his favor. Omaha v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 979.

17. Permission to an individual to grade a street, and build a retaining wall therein, does not entitle him to damages on a subsequent removal of the wall by the city. South Highland L. & I. Co. v. Kan. City, 100 Mo. App. 518, 75 S. W. 383. No action will lie for the escape of the natural flow of surface water from a highway onto adjacent land, caused by the filling in of the highway (O'Donnell v. White, 24 R. I. 483), but where a change of grade results in an accumulation of water damaging an abutting owner, that may be considered one of the elements of damage to be assessed (Cooper v. Scranton City, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 17). Question for jury. Board of Councilmen v. Howard, 25 Ky. L. R. 111, 74 S. W. 703. And if a highway officer change the direction of the flow of water without legal authority, and for the benefit of his own adjoining land, he is liable. Daum v. Cooper, 103 Ill. App. 4. Likewise, if the proposed repair to a public road is not in fact made for the benefit of the public, but is made to subserve private ends and will operate as a special injury to an abutting owner, it will be enjoined. Shanks v. Pearson, 66 Kan. 168, 71 Pac. 252. A land owner is entitled to his damages arising from being cut off from access to a street while it is in process of relocation and improvement, such access being necessary to the enjoyment of his property, though it does not abut on the street. Munn v. Boston, 183 Mass. 421, 67 N. E. 312. A city is liable to the owner of adjacent property for damages caused by the closing of an alley, his damages being of a different kind, and imposing on him a burden different in kind from that imposed on the general public. Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 232. The owner of a well outside the prescribed boundaries of the district named in the metropolitan water board act, may have damages for its draining by the operations of the board. McNamara v. Com., 184 Mass. 304, 68 N. E. 332. Where public work is directed by commissioners appointed under authority of a statute, the expense being borne by the abutting property owners, the municipality, having no power over the improvement nor any duty with reference thereto, is not liable for any neglect or nonperformance on the part of the commissioners. Astoria Heights Land Co. v. New York, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 512.

18. See, also, post, § 7D. If, when an entire improvement is taken into consideration, a benefit rather than a loss has been the result, there can be no recovery in the absence of an actual taking of property, though a portion of the improvement, considered apart from the remainder, results in damage. Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 232; Chicago v. Anglum, 104 Ill. App. 188. In a street opening case the jury may take into consideration testimony that the market value of the land may be injuriously affected, by reason of the cost of street improvements that may be charged upon it, but cannot give a verdict for such improvements as a substantive item of damages. De Benneville v. Phila., 204 Pa. 51. Damages recoverable by an adjoining landowner from the construction of a sewer are such as are the direct, immediate, and necessary or unavoidable consequences of the act of eminent domain itself, irrespective of care or negligence. Deprivation of lateral support to house lot by digging in street. Fyfe v. Turtle Creek Borough, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 292. Where an abutting owner seeks damages arising from closing an alley by raising the tracks of a railway, the danger to plaintiff and his family, by reason of the passing of railway trains at grade, should be considered as an element of benefit from the improvement to be offset against his damages. Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 232.

19. Where a city damages property beyond its own borders by the construction of a sewer, it cannot defend an action for the injury by alleging its want of authority to build. Langley v. City Council of Augusta, 118 Ga. 590. A city in possession of, and using land for street purposes will not be nor is the landowner's right to damages dependent on his having filed a claim therefor,[20] but suit must be timely brought,[21] and the right of action may be waived.[22]

Where an abutting owner pays the assessment on his land, in a street opening case, under the belief that the municipality has acquired the right as to all abutters to open the street to its full length, on subsequently learning that it has not acquired such right, he is entitled to mandamus to require it to proceed as to the other owners.[23] Property owners in New York are not entitled to object to the report of commissioners appraising their damages prior to its confirmation, but after confirmation the owners of specific property may object, and have the confirmation set aside as to such property, or referred back to the commissioners for correction.[24]

(§ 6) B. Establishment or change of grade of street.[25]—An abutting owner is not entitled to compensation at the common law, nor generally by statute, for damages arising from the original establishment of the grade of a street,[26] even though his property may have been improved with reference to the natural lay of the land,[27] but for grading work done without an ordinance establishing or changing the grade,[28] and for a change of grade, operating oppressively on those who have improved their property with reference to the established grade, there is generally a statutory liability in their favor,[29] though the land injured lies beyond the territorial limits of the municipality,[30] and though the street may not have been all worked up to the established grade.[31] permitted to allege its own irregularities in procedure in defense of an action for damages for taking the land. Omaha v. Clarke [Neb.] 92 N. W. 146.

20. In Nebraska. Omaha v. Clarke [Neb.] 92 N. W. 146. Though it is in Georgia; but plaintiff need not set up notice in his complaint. Columbus v. McDaniel, 117 Ga. 823; Langley v. City Council of Augusta, 118 Ga. 590.

21. An action on an award of damages for taking land for street purposes is not barred before 5 years from the confirmation of the award. Omaha v. Clarke [Neb.] 92 N. W. 146. Limitations do not begin to run against the landowner's right to the appointment of a jury to assess his damages in a street opening case, until the notice provided by the ordinance has been properly served on him. In re Whitby Ave., 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 526.

22. A waiver of damages from the laying out of a highway is effectual, though the highway is not actually opened until after the territory has been annexed to an incorporated town. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Whiting [Ind.] 67 N. E. 933.

28. Wilber v. Ft. Dodge, 120 Iowa, 555, 95 N. W. 186. But the fact that the work of bringing the street to the established grade was begun or prosecuted without the adoption of a resolution directing it to be done will not create a cause of action where none otherwise existed (Id.), and a city is not liable for damages where the work was done by the street committee and street commissioner without authority (Clay v. Mexico, 92 Mo. App. 611; Gardner v. St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 657, 71 S. W. 63).

29. Chicago v. McShane, 102 Ill. App. 339; Barrington v. Meyer, 103 Ill. App. 124; Torge v. Salamanca, 176 N. Y. 324, 68 N. E. 626. Change of grade resulting in accumulation of water. Cooper v. Scranton, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 17; Wilber v. Ft. Dodge, 120 Iowa, 555, 95 N. W. 186. A statute, declaring that an injury to property by a change of the grade of a street is a taking thereof for public use to the extent of the injury, is within the legislative power [N. Y. Laws 1897, p. 420, c. 414, § 159]. In re Comesky, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 137. Under statutory authority to selectmen to recompense abutting owners for injuries, where there is a change of grade of over 3 feet, only that portion of the damages arising from the change in excess of three feet may be allowed [V. S. 3357, 3358]. Fairbanks v. Rockingham, 75 Vt. 221. A statute authorizing the recovery of damages, for change of grade, from a "city, borough, or town corporate" will not authorize their recovery from a village [Gen. St. p. 2820, § 71]. Bellis v. Flemington [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 300. A municipality which changes a street grade by authority of the statute cannot question the constitutionality of remedies given injured landowners thereby. In re Comesky, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 137.

30. Where the center of a road forms the boundary line between a borough and a township and the borough authorities, with the consent of the township, change the grade of the whole road, property owners of the township may recover from the borough any damages occassioned by the change. Rothwell v. Cal. Borough, 21 Pa. Super. Ct.

The liability exists, however, only in favor of private[32] owners[33] who are abutters,[34] and where the lot owner builds with notice of the intended change of grade there is no liability;[35] but that the plaintiff purchased the property with knowledge that the order establishing the grade had already been made,[36] or that the damages previously assessed for a corner lot on the grading of one of the intersecting streets, if properly expended in bringing the lot to grade, would have prevented further damage by the grading of the other street, is no defense.[37] In case of a change of grade the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the property affected before and after the change, taking into consideration the increased value of the whole improvement to the property itself,[38] not considering general benefits or injuries shared by the public in general,[39] and the fact that the improvement results in a net benefit to the property, all things being considered, is a defense to the action,[40] but in considering that question, benefits from paving which the owner has already paid for in special assessments should not be included, unless of greater amount than the amount assessed, and then only as to the excess.[41] The cost of regrading plaintiff's lot is a proper element of damages,[42] but depreciation of rental and market values from the diversion of customers, is not,[43] and the benefits that may be applied in reduction of damages are not private improvements subsequently made by plaintiff's neighbors, but only those local and peculiar benefits received by him by the change.[44] The right to damages may be waived,[45] and lost by laches,[46] or lapse of time.[47] References to New York cases arising under statutes peculiar to that state are collected in the note.[48]

St. Joseph, 102 Mo. App. 425, 76 S. W. 718. A grant of land for a street does not imply consent to cut it down and destroy the grantor's access to his abutting property, where such cut is not necessary to the proper improvement of the street, but is done by the city for its own convenience in building an economical bridge. Bartels v. Houston [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 326. By securing a modification of a proposed change of grade an abutting owner does not lose his right to such damages as accrue to him from the change actually made. Klaus v. Jersey City [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 220. But where after securing a stoppage of work because no provision is made for damages to abutting owners, plaintiff allows a resumption, on the agreement of the contractor to bring the grade of his lot to that of the street without expense to him, plaintiff cannot subsequently recover from the city, though the contractor failed to perform and is insolvent. 47. A statute limiting the time within which claims for damages from a change of grade of a street may be made is not invalid, since the property owner had no remedy at common law. People v. Stillings, 76 App.

§ 7. Local assessments. A. Equality and uniformity. General principles.— The right of a municipality to lay a burden on private property for a public improvement rests upon the theory that such property derives a benefit equal to the burden imposed,[49] but whether property is benefited by the construction of an improvement,[50] what estates receive special benefits and where the special benefits stop,[51] and whether or not the assessment was laid according to benefits, are questions of fact,[52] within the exclusive jurisdiction of the legislative branch of government which cannot be reviewed by the courts in the absence of fraud[53] or special circumstances disclosing a lack of proportion between benefit and assessment.

In some states, in order to sustain an assessment for benefits arising out of a street improvement, it must affirmatively appear that the assessment is not in excess of the benefits conferred upon the land,[54] but in others it is held that while such assessments rest upon the basis of benefits or presumed benefits to the property assessed, it is not essential to their validity that actual enhancement in value or other benefits to each owner be shown; the judgment of the city council being conclusive as to the propriety of the improvement,[55] but where owing to extraordinary facts the presumption on which the rule rests does not apply, as in a case where the property after the improvement is worth no more than the amount of the assess-

48. Where the grade of a village street is changed to comply with an order of the railroad commission to avoid a grade crossing, the abutting owner is entitled to compensation under the general law, notwithstanding the village law providing a similar remedy when the street is within the exclusive control of the village [Laws 1883, p. 100, c. 113; Laws 1897, c. 414, pp. 420, 456, §§ 159, 342]. Torge v. Salamanca, 176 N. Y. 324, 68 N. E. 626. The grade crossing commissioners of the city of Buffalo have no jurisdiction except to apply for the appointment of commissioners to appraise the damages to abutting owners, on the presentation of a prima facie case. They cannot fix the damages themselves, nor refuse to apply on the ground that the damages are trivial [Laws 1888, c. 345, as amended by Laws 1890, c. 255]. People v. Adams, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 620. Commissioners appointed to assess damages have no power, after dismissal of a claim, to vacate the dismissal though their action was erroneous. People v. Leonard, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 269. ment and to force the owner to pay for the improvement would be to confiscate his property without compensation, it is spoliation and will not be enforced.[56]

The selection of methods, however, for making special assessments is primarily a matter for the legislature, and it is only when its decision is plainly one that will be likely to result in taxation that is either disproportional or unreasonable that the courts can interfere.[57] The rule most frequently used for determining the amount chargeable to each piece of property fronting on the street improved is known as the "front-foot rule" and consists in assessing to each lot a certain amount for each foot of its frontage on the street. In those states where a just proportion between benefits and assessments is required to affirmatively appear, the front-foot rule cannot be applied unless the benefits are equal and uniform;[58] but in other states it is held that a statute or ordinance authorizing the assessment of the cost of a street improvement by the front-foot rule is not in violation either of the state or Federal constitution,[59] and generally, the use of the front-foot rule as a guiding basis will not invalidate an assessment where it is not applied arbitrarily and no showing is made but that the special benefits are fairly and justly apportioned thereby,[60] or that the assessment does not exceed the special benefit to the land,[61] and where it is formally and specifically found by the council that the land is benefited to an amount equal to the tax assessed, it is immaterial that the front-foot rule has been used in apportioning the tax.[62] An assessment made under an unconstitutional statute is void;[63] but where there is nothing in a statute that affords reason for the contention that the benefits resulting from an improvement shall not be substantially commensurate with the burdens imposed, it is not invalid,[64] and a statutory provision that a property owner shall be reimbursed for paving assessments by rebates out of subsequent general road taxes is not unconstitutional as

But when the legislature has contemplated a certain region and may be supposed to have acted in view of a specific scheme, there is no doubt that within reasonable limits it may determine that the cost of an improvement shall fall upon a designated district and may fix the principles upon which the cost shall be apportioned. It may deal with the whole improvement as a unit and charge those assessed with a share of the total expense. Smith v. Worcester, 182 Mass. 232, 65 N. E. 40, 59 L. R. A. 728.

lacking uniformity, but tends to promote it by refunding to the individual what he originally paid for the benefit of all.[65]

An assessment of property for local improvements is not within a constitutional provision requiring an equal rate of assessment and taxation,[66] and where the statute provides that before proceeding to assessment, it must be determined that benefits are equal to or exceed the cost of the work[67] and provides for a hearing by landowners before assessments become final, it does not deprive them of their property without due process of law, nor is there any excess of the taxing power,[68] nor denial of the equal protection of the law.[69]

Where an ordinance provides that the apportionment of the cost of an improvement shall be made as the statute directs, it means the statute then in force, and subsequent changes in the law prior to the making of the assessment do not affect it.[70]

No benefit can be assessed to a lot owner for a sewer built on private property in such a way as to furnish the lot owner no access to it without trespassing on private property,[71] and neither the expense of paving that portion of a public street which a street railway is under legal obligation to pave,[72] nor that portion of the cost of a street improvement necessitated by the transformation of the street into a subway under a railroad bridge, can be assessed to abutting owners.[73] A city cannot assess against property benefited the expense of abating a nuisance caused by its own negligence,[74] but it is no objection to a sewer assessment that property outside the drainage district and not entitled to the benefits of it was omitted.[75]

A special tax cannot be levied to pay for improvements already made.[76]

(§ 7) B. Assessing and levying officers.[77]—Village or town trustees are not disqualified to vote in confirmation of a special assessment, by reason of their owning land in the assessment district,[78] and neither a brother-in-law of an owner whose property was not assessed, nor one who has business transactions with an interested railroad company, nor one holding an official position, is incompetent on the ground of interest.[79]

(§ 7) C. Persons, property, and districts liable.—Generally speaking, all lands benefited by an improvement are subject to assessment for its cost, regardless of their character,[80] or by whom owned.[81] Thus, lands owned by private corporations, such as street railway[82] and railroad companies, are assessable the same as the property of natural persons.[83] Property of the city of New York held for municipal purposes is assessable.[84] And in Illinois, the property of a public school district is subject to special tax,[85] though an exception in favor of school property exists in some states.[86] Lands granted by the United States to the states for school purposes are held in trust by the state, and are not subject to local assessment,[87] nor are lands belonging to the public domain.[88]

Religious, charitable, and quasi public corporations and associations are frequently exempted by special act,[89] but a general exemption from taxation will not exempt from special assessments.[90]

Under authority to tax property "contiguous" to the street to be improved, only that abutting thereon can be taxed,[91] but in New Jersey, benefits may be assessed upon lands not on the line of the street improved,[92] and nonabutting property within the district permitted to drain into a sewer may be assessed for its con-

Under the New Jersey statute, authorizing the assessment of benefits against lands held by an officer of the state, in trust for the benefit of any person, the tax may be assessed, and is a lien against lands held in trust for the benefit of a certain beneficiary for life and after his death for the benefit of persons not determinable until that time [Act approved Apr. 1, 1898, P. struction, though future legislation will be necessary before it can be benefited.[93] The limits of special assessment districts should be so fixed that the property to be taxed should receive some benefit from the proposed improvement.[94]

Power to fix the extent of the assessment district is generally confided in the body given power to order the improvement, and spread the tax,[95] and a corner lot may be included in two assessment districts for improvements on the two streets on which it abuts.[96] Lots on both sides of a street should be assessed for a pavement lying entirely on one side of the center of the street.[97] The separate assessment of the two sides of a lot, owned by a railroad company, is not invalid, the sides being separated by the railroad.[98]

The lots in each quarter of a city square, in Kentucky, are chargeable with the cost of improving streets and alleys adjacent to, or within such quarters,[99] and where the property has not been divided into squares, the council may prescribe the depth on both sides of the street to be assessed for an improvement.[1]

(§ 7) D. Amount of individual assessment, and offsetting of benefits and damages.—As stated above, the rule or plan upon which assessments for benefits are to be levied is, within certain limits, one for the legislature to prescribe, and the apportionment of the benefits, so long as the statutory rule is followed is likewise a matter of legislative or administrative discretion,[2] and a street or alley assessment will not be disturbed, unless it affirmatively appears that under a proper method of assessment the defendant would be charged materially less.[3] The statute must be strictly complied with, however,[4] and the assessment itself must be reasonable,[5] be levied with reference to all circumstances properly affecting its

11. In assessing land for benefits from a drain, it is error not to consider the damages for the land taken for the drain, and to land not taken. Jurinall v. Jamesburg Drainage Dist., 204 Ill. 106, 68 N. E. 440. Under the statute in Illinois, in a street opening or widening case, where an abutting owner has previously dedicated all or a portion of the street, the value of the land so dedicated is to be allowed him as an offset to the benefits assessable to his remaining land [Local Improvement act of 1897, § 17]. Espert v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 264, 66 N. E. 212. That the lot owner's damages resulting from the paper or record grade, were assessed, under the statute, before any physical change in the street was made, does not bar the city from subsequently assessing him with his proper share of the actual expense of making the physical change. In re Greentree Ave., 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 177. Where in opening a street only part of an owner's land is condemned, the jury in assessing damages may consider the benefit to that which remained. The assessment roll or report must express the free judgment of the commissioners or board authorized to make it,[18] must describe the property assessed,[19] and the improvement,[20] and contain all necessary jurisdictional recitals.[21]

A street assessment against too much land is void.[22]

A judgment confirming a special assessment is in rem against the land itself, and the benefits assessed cannot be apportioned against the leasehold and the remainder in fee as separate estates and separate judgments entered as to each.[23]

A charter provision that ordinances must receive a two-thirds vote does not apply to a resolution fixing an assessment district for a street improvement and determining the taxes to be paid by the different owners.[24]

the cost of the walk in front of each lot is levied upon such lot independently of all others.[26]

It is error to include the cost of making and collecting a special assessment in the judgment of confirmation entered after the act of 1901, prohibiting such course, took effect;[27] but after reversal on that ground, the trial court may permit the roll to be recast, excluding that item without a new ordinance, estimate and proceeding.[28] Where a paving ordinance is void for the inclusion in the estimates of a part of the street which a railroad company is bound to maintain, the court cannot eliminate the cost of paving such space on application for confirmation, order the assessment recast and enter judgment of confirmation.[29]

A former judgment confirming an assessment for the same improvement under a previous ordinance afterwards repealed may be urged as a defense to the confirmation of an assessment under a second ordinance.[30]

A proceeding to levy a special assessment to pay a condemnation award is collateral to the condemnation suit, but the question of jurisdiction to enter the condemnation judgment may be determined therein.[31] Proceedings to confirm an assessment must conform to the statutory requirements,[32] but the burden is upon objectors to show grounds for nonconfirmance,[33] and evidence material only on the question of the necessity of the improvement is not admissible.[34] In New York, where written objections to an assessment are presented to the board of assessors, the objections, together with the proposed assessment, must be sent to the board of revision of assessments for final disposition.[35] Trial by jury in such cases is provided for by statute or constitution in some states,[36] in which the ordinary rules for the conduct of jury trials apply.[37] A judgment of confirmation once entered is a finality,[38] and subject to vacation only for fraud or want of jurisdiction.[39]

The provision of the Drainage Act of Illinois that when the court so orders the commissioners may assess damages and benefits in lieu of a jury violates the provision of the constitution requiring compensation for private property taken or damaged for public use to be ascertained by a jury [Const. art. 2, § 13]. Juvinall v. Jamesburg Drainage Dist., 204 Ill. 106, 68 N. E. 440. Unless the property owner in a drainage proceeding specifically objects to the denial of the right of trial by jury on the question of benefits and damages, the objection is waived and the judgment of confirmation is conclusive of that point. (§ 7) F. Equalization.—Notices of the meetings of boards of equalization must be given as the law directs,[40] and the board must be in session during the time stated in the notice,[41] but the board acts judicially upon matters within its jurisdiction, and its action is not open to collateral attack.[42]

(§ 7) G. Reassessment and additional assessments.—Provision is generally made whereby an assessment, invalid for some formal defect, may be remedied by a reassessment.[43] Such statutes are unobjectionable,[44] but power to reassess cannot be used to correct jurisdictional errors affecting the power to order the improvement,[45] nor to revive a lien lost by failure to observe a jurisdictional requisite to its preservation.[46] A statute providing for a reassessment, whenever a special assessment is invalid or questioned, is not limited in its operation to assessments, made before it was enacted,[47] nor to those made under the existing law.[48] A reassessment is authorized whenever an original assessment is declared void by the court,[49] though no judgment was ever entered on the decision so declaring,[50] and where a confirmation judgment is annulled on appeal, a new assessment should be made, whether the cause is remanded or not.[51] The fact that paving assessments, as originally laid, were defective or illegal, affords no ground of relief from entered, and authorizes the collection of the taxes thereon. McChesney v. People, 200 Ill. 146, 65 N. E. 626. The board of estimate and apportionment in New York cannot revise and reverse a determination of its own after the same has been made and announced. Richards v. Low, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 500. The board of estimate and apportionment of New York city has no authority to amend a resolution of its predecessor, the board of public improvements, in a street opening case by changing the proportion of the cost to be assessed to benefited property. In re Opening of Quarry Road, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 418.

Corliss v. Highland Park [Mich.] 93 N. W. 254.

44. A statute authorizing a reassessment of a special assessment invalid because of the work having been done "without authority of law" is not invalid as authorizing an illegal assessment, as the quoted phrase will be construed to have reference to mere defects in the original proceedings [Rev. St. 1898, § 1210d, as amended Laws 1901, p. 92, c. 9]. Schintgen v. La Crosse, 117 Wis. 158, 94 N. W. 84.

A certificate holder for a street improvement has no right of action against a city for failing to make a reassessment, where the original assessment was set aside for failure of the contractor to comply with the contract. Crawford v. Mason [Iowa] 98 N. W. 795. Under the statute permitting a council to correct an invalid special assessment, the council has no power to make a reassessment on a quantum meruit, where a contractor cannot recover on his original contract, and hence the original assessment has been set aside. their reassessment under statutory authority,[52] and a new assessment levied in pursuance of a mandamus from the supreme court, after a decision that the original assessment was invalid, cannot be objected to on the ground that the objectors were not parties to the mandamus suit.[53]

A reassessment, like an original, must be based on benefits,[54] but interest from the date of delinquency of the original assessment may be added.[55]

In making a new assessment for an improvement already completed, the city is not required to do unnecessary things, such as the appointing of commissioners to make an estimate of cost.[56]

Where a reassessment is made, the statute of limitations in force at the time of making applies, it having been changed during the existence of the original assessment, and the period begins to run at the confirmation of the reassessment.[57]

Where a supplemental or additional assessment is required, because the original assessment was for too small a sum, it is no objection that the original assessment has been adjudicated and collected, unless it appear that in the original case, upon proper issue made, it was specifically found that the property would be benefited no more than was originally assessed against it.[58] The petition need not contain a statement of the cost of the original improvement, the amount collected and expended under the original assessment, and the amount of the deficit, nor can the city be required to make an accounting with reference to the original assessment.[59] No notice to the property owners is required, because not beneficial to them.[60]

(§ 7) H. Maturity, obligation, and lien of assessments.—Special assessments do not become liens save as so made by statutory authority,[61] and no lien for street improvements can be enforced until an assessment is properly made against the property.[62] The failure of the city clerk to register tax bills will not defeat them;[63] but if suit is not commenced within the statutory period the lien expires.[64]

The lien of special assessments is superior to any other lien except the lien for general taxes,[65] but a purchaser of land on which a lien for a special assessment exists, but which is not recorded, takes his title free from the lien,[66] and a mortgage on the property and franchises of a street railway company takes precedence over the lien of special assessments of paving taxes, except such as were assessed for paving already done, or in contemplation, at the time it was recorded.[67] Authority to issue special tax bills in installments must be by ordinance.[68]

(§ 7) I. Payment and discharge.—The statute authorizing suit by a taxpayer to recover taxes illegally assessed upon him, and paid under protest, applies to special assessments.[69] The single circumstance that plaintiff has received benefit from an improvement cannot defeat his right to recover back a payment made under duress, but where he had full knowledge of the invalidity of the assessment, and made the payment under protest, there is no duress.[70]

(§ 7) J. Enforcement and collection.—A special assessment against real estate creates no personal liability[71] unless specially provided by statute;[72] but the legislature has power to grant to municipalities a remedy for collection of taxes against property by a personal action against the owner,[73] though the cases in which a special assessment for benefits peculiar to property resulting from a public improvement may be collected in a personal action against the owner are exceptional, and when a city resorts to this remedy, it must show that every requirement of the statute on which it relies has been complied with.[74]

Enforcement against property.—The well nigh universal procedure for the collection of these taxes is by enforcement of the lien given by the assessment against the land, and, as is the rule when the enforcement of tax liens generally is sought, the lien holder's right of recovery depends upon the regularity of the proceedings under which he claims.[75] No recovery can be had on a special tax bill without an assessment,[76] and the contractor cannot recover by showing an improvement other than his tax bill describes, though the improvement described was beyond the power of the city to make, and the improvement actually made was not.[77] Denial of recovery on the ground of premature action, the contract not having been performed, and also on the ground of irregularity of the proceedings, is not a bar to a subsequent action after performance.[78] But tax bills,[79] tax sale certificates and receipts for taxes and special assessments are prima facie evidence of the validity of the taxes they represent.[80]

79. Heman v. Larkin [Mo. App.] 70 S. W. 907; Heman v. Farish, 97 Mo. App. 393, 71 S. W. 382.

Defenses of a collateral nature not going to the jurisdiction[81] or that have been raised and overruled,[82] or could have been raised at confirmation, and do not go to the jurisdiction of the court to confirm the assessment,[83] cannot be urged, though where a defense is first available in the action to foreclose the lien, it may be there interposed,[84] and in an action by drainage commissioners against commissioners of highways to recover assessments made against an alleged public road, the highway officers are not estopped to deny that it was a public road because they did not raise the question in the assessment proceedings.[85]

Waiver and estoppel to urge defenses.—Under the local improvement act of Illinois,[86] the voluntary payment of any instalment of an assessment is deemed an assent to confirmation of the roll and waives objections to the application for judgment of sale and order of sale for the remaining instalments; but such it seems is not the rule in the absence of express statutory provision.[87] An abutting landowner who has full knowledge that an improvement is being made in reliance on the assumption that the proceedings authorizing it are valid, and stands by without objection until large sums of money are expended thereon, is estopped to deny the authority on which the improvement is made;[88] but the principle does not

81. A defense that the ordinance was invalid for want of a proper certificate of election of the trustees is not available to an action to collect an assessment authorized by the ordinance. Deane v. Ind. M. & C. Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 686. If there is not an entire failure to specify the nature of the improvement, the fact that the ordinance may be lacking in some particulars affecting the ability of the commissioners or bidders to make an intelligent estimate of the cost does not furnish ground for objection on application for judgment of sale. Shepard v. People, 200 Ill. 508, 65 N. E. 1068.

82. The provision of the Kansas City charter, cutting off all defenses to tax bills not raised by filing objections with the board of public works, applies as well to jurisdictional defenses as to mere irregularities. State v. Smith, 177 Mo. 69, 75 S. W. 625. One who has appealed to the city council from the decision of the superintendent of streets in approving work on which an assessment is based and been defeated cannot afterwards defend an action to foreclose the assessment on the ground that the contract was not properly performed. Lambert v. Bates, 137 Cal. 676, 70 Pac. 777. Where the property owner does not appeal in a condemnation suit to open a street, he cannot afterwards in a suit to enforce payment of the benefits assessed to him in that proceeding avail himself of the defense that no benefits were assessed therein against the public. St. Louis v. Annex Realty Co., 175 Mo. 63, 74 S. W. 961.

Sidewalk ordinance held not invalid. Chew v. People, 202 Ill. 380, 66 N. E. 1069. Objection of want of jurisdiction to enter condemnation judgment must be raised on confirmation. Bass v. People, 203 Ill. 206, 67 N. E. 806. Former judgment of confirmation for same improvement under prior ordinance being ground for objection to confirmation cannot be pleaded in bar of application for judgment of sale. People v. One who has been in sole possession of property for years and paid taxes thereon assessed to him as owner and appeared as owner before the council and sought to be relieved temporarily from the assessment cannot object that he is part owner only in the premises and not liable for the full tax. extend to cases where there has been no attempt to comply with the statute.[89] One taking property by deed subject to special assessment is not estopped to deny the validity of such assessments,[90] especially those of which he had no knowledge and which were not considered when he paid the consideration for the land.[91]

Counterclaim.—Defendant cannot counterclaim for damages arising from failure to perform the work according to contract.[92]

Accrual of cause of action.—Failure of the property owner to pay an instalment of an assessment when due matures the whole series and authorizes foreclosure of the lien, notwithstanding it was paid soon after due and before proceedings to foreclose were begun.[93]

The general limitation act does not apply to these proceedings in Illinois,[94] nor does the special act referring to them have a retrospective effect.[95]

Parties.—Suit on a tax bill is properly brought against a purchaser of the lot acquiring title under a tax deed after the special tax lien accrued,[96] and where a municipal lien for paving was filed against one who was neither owner nor registered owner, but the true owner and the registered owner were added as defendants at the trial, a verdict against them was sustained.[97] In Ohio, after a street improvement assessment has been certified to the county auditor and placed on the tax list, the right of action for the collection of it rests alone in the county treasurer.[98]

Notice to the owner of proceedings to enforce the lien is necessary,[99] and it must be reasonable,[1] but it may be by publication[2] where the statutory grounds for

94. An application for judgment of sale for a delinquent special assessment is not a "civil action not otherwise provided for" within the meaning of section 16 of the Limitation Act, requiring such actions to be begun within 5 years; nor is there any statute limiting the time for making such application. Shepard v. People, 200 Ill. 508, 65 N. E. 1068.

95. The limitation of five years in the Illinois Local Improvement Act of 1897 does not apply to special assessments confirmed before that act was passed, so as to bar, after five years, an application for judgment of sale thereon. 99. Where all proceedings resulting in the sale of lands to enforce collection of levee taxes were had during the lifetime of the owner, objections by his heirs based on want of notice to them are immaterial. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219.

1. The place of a nonresident owner's residence cannot affect the validity of a statutory provision as to notice. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219. A provision for four weeks' notice by publication in the case of nonresident owners is not so unreasonably short as to invalidate proceedings in rem against the land where it is expressly provided that no personal judgment can be taken. Id. There is no discrimination against nonresidents where the statute provides four weeks' notice by publication as to them and 20 days as to residents, nor because provision for longer notice to nonresidents is made in other cases, and they are granted two years in which to vacate the decree and make defense. Id.

2. Unless the statute requires the last publication to be a certain time before the hearing, it is sufficient that the first publication be the required time before the rendition of the decree or judgment. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219. Failure of the clerk to indorse an order for publication on the complaint and enter it on the records of the court is not jurisdictional where not so provided by the statute. Id. Two publications of the notice of application for judgment for street sprinkling assessments in St. Paul, Minn., are required. Hawes v. Fliegler, 87 Minn. 319, 92 N. W. 223.

service in that manner exist.[3] The notice must contain all necessary jurisdictional averments,[4] but a general appearance waives nonjurisdictional defects.[5]

The complaint must state a cause of action and show that the proceedings on which it is founded were regular;[6] but it need not set forth all the matters necessary to be stated in the resolutions and ordinances authorizing the improvement,[7] nor file copies of them as exhibits.[8] If plaintiff relies on an estoppel of the property owner, he must plead the facts constituting it fully and distinctly.[9]

Evidence.—The original ordinance under which a special tax was levied is admissible in evidence on identification of the city clerk.[10]

The judgment must be for a sum certain,[11] including the amount of the assessment,[12] and fees and costs accruing subsequent to advertisement may be included.[13]

Costs are allowable as in other cases,[14] and a statutory provision for the allowance of an attorney's fee is valid.[15]

Sale.—The lien is against the land itself and not against the owners, and the lienholder is entitled to a sale of the whole estate irrespective of the interests of life tenants and remaindermen.[16] Where, upon sale, the sheriff refuses to issue a certificate of purchase and the purchaser acquiesces, he acquires no title;[17] but grantees under deeds issued on tax sales based on ditch certificates are, on failure of their deeds, entitled to liens in the same manner as the holders of other void tax deeds.[18] On failure of the title of the purchaser, he is entitled in St. Paul to recover of the city the amount paid for the deed.[19] Provision for redemption is sometimes made.[20]

3. Where the sworn complaint avers that the owner is a nonresident, it is sufficient to authorize service by publication without a separate affidavit of nonresidence. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219.

4. Failure to give the owner's name in the advertised list, if known to the collector, renders the notice bad, and the fact that he gave the name correctly in the delinquent list is sufficient evidence that he knew it; but the fact that it appeared on the original assessment roll is not. Gage v. People, 205 Ill. 547, 69 N. E. 80. An advertisement which gives the number of each warrant and the date when certified for collection sufficiently states the date when the assessment is legally due, since it is due when the warrant is issued and not before. Gage v. People, 205 Ill. 547, 69 N. E. 80.

5. An objection that the collector's notice of application for judgment of sale was defective in failing to give the year in which the assessment was due is waived where the parties appear and make no objection upon that ground, nor to admission of the notice in evidence. Bass v. People, 203 Ill. 206, 67 N. E. 806.

6. Sufficiency of complaint in action to enforce lien for building sidewalk. Gaertner v. Louisville Artificial Stone Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 940, 70 S. W. 293. Where the complaint showed that the resolution of intention passed by the board of supervisors was void and insufficient to confer on the board jurisdiction to make the award, it is bad, notwithstanding a general allegation that all the proceedings were regular [Code Civ. Proc. § 456]. Buckman v. Hatch, 139 Cal. 53, 72 Pac. 445. A petition to enforce a contractor's lien for the construction of a drainage ditch, though defective for failure to fill blanks left in the statement of the amount certified by the surveyor, is sufficient if not objected to where it contains allegations sufficient to support a judgment for the amount claimed. 12. Upon application for judgment of sale the county court has no power to reduce the assessment against the lots of an objector on the ground that such reduction had been agreed upon by the parties in the assessment proceeding and an order to that effect prepared which the circuit court neglected to enter. (§ 7) K. Remedies by injunction or other collateral attack, and grounds for them.—Relief from the burden of local improvements is sometimes sought by attempting to restrain the levy of the assessment, and it is held in some states that the making of a special assessment may be enjoined,[21] on grounds going to the jurisdiction of the assessing body,[22] though not upon the ground of lack or insufficiency of benefits,[23] but injunction will not issue to restrain the passing of an ordinance fixing such assessments, though it is invalid for noncompliance with charter provisions.[24]

In other cases, relief is sought after the tax has been spread by action to set it aside,[25] and in New York, it is held that where the legality of an assessment can be proved only by extrinsic evidence, an objector is entitled to review it by a suit in equity and is not limited to certiorari.[26] It is, however, within the power of the legislature to limit or absolutely prohibit the maintenance of an action to set assessments aside,[27] and actions not timely brought are barred.[28]

Relief in other cases is sought by action to restrain collection of the tax, but such bills will not lie, in some states,[29] and in others, to warrant the interference of equity, there must be some peculiar ground of equity jurisdiction,[30] and relief is refused where the ground alleged is nonjurisdictional and one that could have been urged against the confirmation, or in direct review.[31] The lack or inadequacy cate of sale in St. Paul is not entitled to appear in the original proceedings and by motion have the judgment opened and vacated on the ground that it is void; as between him and the city such judgment and sale are deemed to be valid, and the amount of the purchase price can be refunded only when judgment is adjudged void in an action between the purchaser and the owner of the land. In re Grading Jessamine St. [Minn.] 97 N. W. 878.

20. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 3187, when a tax bill for street improvements is bid in by the city, the owner of the property has no right of redemption, though he would have in case the purchaser were one other than the city. Lexington v. Woolfolk [Ky.] 78 S. W. 910. Where such sale of tax bills is required to be advertised for and to take place on a certain day, the fact that the sale was not so advertised and made does not invalidate the purchase of such bills by the city. Id. Penalties and compound interest are not imposed for nonpayment of tax bills when due, where the city bids in the bills at the public sale. Id. In a suit by a city to enforce a lien for unpaid assessments, the petition referred to certain ordinances and recited that they were filed and made a part of the petition. Held, pleading sufficient, though copies of such ordinances were not in fact filed. Id.

21. Entire failure to give the notice of the proposed improvement to abutting owners is ground for injunction against the assessment. Joyce v. Barron, 67 Ohio St. 264, 65 N. E. 1001.

22. A bill to enjoin the making of a special assessment will lie only when on the face of the record some jurisdictional fact is wanting. Bemis v. McCloud [Neb.] 97 N. W. 828.

23. The determination of the assessing board as to the benefits accruing to the lands liable to assessment for an improvement, in the absence of fraud, is not open to collateral attack. Erickson v. Cass County, 11 N. D. 494, 92 N. W. 841; Turnquist v. Cass County Drain Com'rs, 11 N. D. 514, 92 N. W. 852.

24. Kadderly v. Portland [Or.] 74 Pac. 710.

25. Where a city wrongfully entered upon a private way, and in fitting it for public use destroyed an abutting owner's access to his premises therefrom, and assessed a portion of the cost to him, he can maintain suit in equity to set aside the assessment, to restore the way to its previous condition and for damages. Culver v. Yonkers, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 309.

26. Donovan v. Oswego, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 397.

27. Loomis v. Little Falls, 176 N. Y. 31, 68 N. E. 105.

28. In computing the 30 days within which an attack on the validity of assessments for sewers must be made, the day on which the assessment is ascertained and apportioned is to be included (Kan. City v. Gibson, 66 Kan. 501, 72 Pac. 222), and where a supplemental petition is filed after sustaining a demurrer to a premature one, the date of filing the supplemental petition is the beginning of suit (Holmquist v. Anderson, 67 Kan. 861, 74 Pac. 227).

29. Highway. Greenwood v. MacDonald, 183 Mass. 342, 67 N. E. 336. Special assessments for the construction of sewers being collected in the same manner as other taxes, in Minnesota, and the same remedies being applicable that are applicable in case of other taxes deemed illegal, an action in equity cannot be maintained in equity to restrain the collection of such a tax. Fajder v. Aitkin, 88 Minn. 445, 92 N. W. 332.

30. Lanning v. Chosen Freeholders, 64 N. J. Eq. 161.

31. Collection of a tax properly assessed to reimburse a city for the expense of abating a nuisance will not be enjoined, where it appears that the owner, after due notice, has failed to abate such nuisance. Patrick v. Omaha [Neb.] 95 N. W. 477. The overassessment of a tract of land for a macadam road, resulting from a mistake by the commissioners as to the number of acres in the tract, being an irregularity which may be corrected on certiorari, is not ground for an inof other remedy, and the exhaustion of such other remedies as were open to the property owner, must clearly appear,[32] and he must bring in all necessary parties,[33] and show grounds of both jurisdictional,[34] and equitable nature.[35]

Again, relief is frequently sought by bill to set aside the tax deed or assessment lien as a cloud on the property owner's title. A purchaser at a delinquent tax sale is bound to know, at his peril, that the property owner is in fact delinquent in the payment of a valid tax, legally assessed against the property,[36] and any defect affecting the legality of the tax itself is available in such a proceeding, notwithstanding the owner's failure to object to the entry of judgment of sale against the property,[37] and neither repayment to the purchaser of the amount paid by him at the tax sale, nor the amount paid by him on subsequent assessments, is a condition precedent to the owner's right to relief, where the tax was illegal and void.[38] Such a suit, however, is a collateral attack,[39] and non-jurisdictional defects cognizable on appeal, or other direct review of the earlier proceedings, such as the inclusion of too much or too little land in the description,[40] the inequity of the assessment as measured by the benefits,[41] and the regularity of the proceedings to enforce the lien of the tax, cannot be inquired into,[42] and a nonresident who did not junction to restrain collection of the excess. Lanning v. Chosen Freeholders, 64 N. J. Eq. 161.

32. Astoria Heights Land Co. v. New York, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 512. Property owners who neither appeared before the council at the assessment, nor appealed from its decision, cannot allege no benefit, as a ground to enjoin enforcement of collection. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lindquist, 119 Iowa, 144, 93 N. W. 103. A bill for an injunction on the ground that complainant had no notice of the confirmation of the assessment until after the expiration of the statutory period allowed for certiorari, should show that he has applied for certiorari, since the court has jurisdiction to disregard the limitation in particular cases. Lanning v. Chosen Freeholders, 64 N. Y. Eq. 161.

33. Property owners cannot, in a suit against the municipality alone, enjoin the collection of special tax certificates that have been sold, on the ground that the improvement for which they were levied has not been completed, their remedy being by action for damages. Astoria Heights Land Co. v. New York, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 512.

34. A finding that property is benefited "to the full amount in each case of said proposed levies" is not so defective in not finding the property assessed to be benefited proportionally to its frontage, as to warrant an injunction against collecting a tax levied on that basis. Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Omaha [Neb.] 93 N. W. 231; John v. Connell [Neb.] 98 N. W. 457.

35. Collection of a special assessment will not be enjoined on the ground of the invalidity of the statute under which it was made, where a similar statute had been previously upheld by the supreme court, though long afterwards the same court held similar legistion to be in violation of the constitution. Shoemaker v. Cincinnati [Ohio] 68 N. E. 1. Landowners who petition for an improvement and consent therein that the cost may be assessed upon their property are estopped to enjoin the collection of the assessments on the ground of lack of benefit. Hendrickson v. Toledo, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 256.

37. Failure of the owner of property to object to the entry of judgment of sale for a special tax, levied under an ordinance which the city had no power to pass does not preclude him from attacking the validity of the tax and judgment of sale collaterally. Boals v. Bachmann, 201 Ill. 340, 66 N. E. 336.

38. Langlois v. Cameron, 201 Ill. 301, 66 N. E. 332; Boals v. Bachmann, 201 Ill. 340, 66 N. E. 336.

39. A bill to remove cloud from title, consisting of deeds based on sales to enforce levee taxes, where the assessing board is not made a party, is a collateral attack, and not a direct proceeding to avoid the tax proceedings. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219.

40. That the tax bill is invalid for covering only a part of the depth of the lot, or included more frontage than the defendant owned, should be availed of at the action on the tax bill, and is not ground to set aside the execution. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Kiene, 99 Mo. App. 528, 74 S. W. 872.

41. Whether the board adopted a wrong rule of assessment, and the land was benefited by the improvement, can only be inquired into on appeal from the assessment, and not in a proceeding to remove the lien of the assessment as a cloud on title. Peck v. Bridgeport, 75 Conn. 417.

42. Where the decree recites that notice by publication was duly given, the recital is conclusive against collateral attack. Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219. Allowance of excessive fees to master who made sale is not ground for collateral attack. Id. Whether the complaint in a tax case sets forth a cause of action is within the jurisdiction of the trial court to determine, and any error in that respect is reviewable only by direct proceedings, not by collateral attack. Id. That the record in tax sale proceedings fails to set forth all the jurisdictional facts does not subject the decree to collateral attack, where the proceedings conform to the regular course of chancery proceedings and the court is one of general equity jurisdiction. Id.

appear and protest after notice cannot afterwards defeat the tax bills, on the ground that the statute limiting the right of protest to resident owners is unconstitutional.[43]

(§ 7) L. Appeal and other direct review. Appeal.—An appeal from the confirmation of special assessments is generally provided for the landowner,[44] and sometimes for the public in case of a dismissal of the proceedings,[45] but provision for review is not always provided for either party,[46] nor is it necessary.[47]

Only those parties to the record who are injured by the error are privileged to allege it,[48] and errors may be waived,[49] and parties estopped to allege them as in other cases.[50]

An appeal lies only from a confirmation of the report of commissioners, and not from any intermediate order.[51]

Questions of law only are reviewable, and not questions of fact,[52] nor matters of discretion.[53] Where, in confirmation proceedings, the trial judge, by consent of the parties, views the street to be improved for the purpose of determining its necessity and reasonableness, his finding will not be reviewed in the absence of a showing of error.[54]

On appeal from an order of drainage commissioners classifying lands, jurisdiction is not lost because the summons is made returnable to the law term.[55]

Where there is no bill of exceptions stating what objections to confirmation were urged upon the county court, it will be presumed that all defects within the 43. Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925.

44. A landowner feeling aggrieved at the assessment made by commissioners, under the Farm Drainage Act of Illinois, may appeal to three supervisors, notwithstanding the amendment allowing an appeal to the county court. People v. Glassco, 203 Ill. 353, 67 N. E. 499.

45. The city may appeal, in Illinois, from a judgment dismissing its petition for confirmation. Chicago v. Singer, 202 Ill. 75, 66 N. E. 874; Chicago v. Hulbert, 205 Ill. 346, 68 N. E. 786.

46. No appeal lies to the circuit court, in Indiana, from a judgment of dismissal rendered by the court of county commissioners, upon a negative report of reviewers, in a proceeding to establish a ditch [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 5655]. Oathout v. Seabrooke, 159 Ind. 529, 65 N. E. 521. Where in a drainage proceeding the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, the judgment confirming the report of the commissioners is final and conclusive. Pleasant Tp. v. Cook, 160 Ind. 533, 67 N. E. 262.

47. Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310

48. A lessee is not entitled to appeal from a judgment confirming a special assessment against leased premises, where the judgment expressly excepts his leasehold interest, including improvements from liability, notwithstanding he has covenanted to pay all taxes or assessments levied on the premises. Weise v. Chicago, 200 Ill. 339, 65 N. E. 648. That the act under which assessments were made is unconstitutional as to certain persons of whom prosecutor is not one, is no ground on which he can urge the invalidity of his assessment. Zeliff v. Bog & F. Meadow Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 302.

49. Objections not made before the council cannot be reviewed on appeal. Young v Tacoma, 31 Wash. 153, 71 Pac. 742.

50. A prosecutor in certiorari seeking to be relieved of his assessment will not be heard to object that his own petition for the improvement was informal or lacking in due particularity. Rowe v. Com'rs of Assessments [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 649. The landowner who has stood by without objecting, until a street improvement in front of his land has been completed at public expense, will not be heard, upon certiorari afterwards brought to review an assessment for benefits, to question the validity of the ordinance and contract under which the improvement was made. Rosell v. Neptune City, 68 N. J. Law, 509.

51. Newark v. Weeks [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 118. An owner of abutting property is not entitled to appeal from the appointment of commissioners to assess benefits from the change of grade of the New York & Harlem Railroad, before any assessment has been imposed upon his property, but can appeal only from a confirmation of the commissioner's report. In re Park Ave. Viaduct Assessment, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 136.

52. Newark v. Weeks [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 118. The finding, by the confirming court, that assessments have been laid according to benefits, is the finding of a fact which will not be reviewed in the appellate court if the record shows any proof to sustain it. Dean v. Paterson, 68 N. J. Law, 664; Bassett v. New Haven [Conn.] 55 Atl. 579; Beck v. Holland [Mont.] 74 Pac. 410; Jones v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 374, 69 N. E. 64.

53. Where the council has acted in good faith in the exercise of the discretion conferred upon them by law to fix the district benefited by the opening and construction of a new street, it is quite clear that the courts possess no power to review such discretion, but where they have acted in bad faith the rule is otherwise. Harriman v. Yonkers, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 408.

54. Wells v. Chicago, 202 Ill. 448, 66 N. E. 1056.

55. Frahm v. Com'rs of Craig Drainage Dist., 200 Ill. 233, 65 N. E. 649.

general objection were relied on,[56] but on appeal from a judgment of confirmation, the supreme court will not search through the specifications to find support for general objections that the ordinance is defective in its description of the improvement.[57]

Where a judgment of confirmation is reversed for a formal error in its entry, the reversal is not res judicata as to the merits on a subsequent appeal.[58] On appeal from the confirmation of a new assessment for the completed work, made under a new ordinance, having for its basis an ordinance held to be defective in matters of description, no objections will be heard against the original ordinance which might have been urged against it on the first appeal.[59]

Under a statute providing that the appellant shall pay the costs in case an assessment is sustained, the costs cannot be taxed where the assessment is not sustained.[60]

Certiorari is the remedy afforded, in some states, for the review of special assessments, but it lies only from a confirmed assessment to correct an error in law, if an erroneous principle is adopted in laying the assessment,[61] and not to review the finding of facts.[62]

It must be timely brought,[63] but the court, in New Jersey, has power to relieve from the effect of the statute of limitations in certain instances.[64]

Where appeal is the statutory remedy for all errors affecting the amount of the award, certiorari will not lie, on the ground that irreparable injury will be inflicted by allowing the award to become a lien and exist during the several months before a decision can be reached on the appeal.[65]

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Scope of topic. This topic includes only the general rules as to the province of court and jury and some illustrative applications thereof, the propriety of taking a case from the jury being elsewhere treated.[66] Whether particular facts or issues are questions of law or fact is considered as germane to the particular subject involved, and is treated in the topic referring thereto, the treatment thereof in this topic being designed to be merely illustrative of the general rules, and no effort being made at exhaustiveness in respect to either subjects or citations.

Province of court and jury in general.—Generally speaking, all issues of fact are for the jury, and all questions of law for the court,[67] and neither can invade the province of the other.[68] When there is no jury, either the court or a master or referee[69] is also the trier of facts, the findings upon which are distinct from the findings of law and of somewhat the same force as a verdict.[70] By procuring the court to take the case from the jury, all questions of fact may be eliminated and the issue become solely one of law.[71] Conversely one is bound by procuring submission of a law question to the jury.[72] The interpretation of the pleadings and ascertainment of the issues is for the court.[73] If the evidence on one side of an issue[74] or respecting part of co-parties either fails[75] or is so slight that no reasonable mind could infer the fact,[76] or on the other hand is undisputed,[77] or if the facts are clearly established by the evidence,[78] a question of law is presented. Immaterial issues need not be submitted,[79] but material issues on conflicting evidence are questions of fact,[80] if any evidence tends to support the issue,[81] or where different inferences may fairly be drawn from the evidence.[82] More than a scintilla of evidence for plaintiff requires submission of the issue.[83] The weight of testimony,[84] or preponderance of evidence,[85] or credibility of witnesses or evidence, must be determined by the jury,[86] unless the evidence is such as to require the interpretation of the court.[87] Questions of fact depending on interpretation to be given disputed facts and inferences are for the jury.[88] Materiality of evidence is a question of law,[89] and when the competency of evidence depends on certain preliminary facts, such facts are for the court.[90]

68. Instructions must submit the facts to the jury but not determine what they prove. See Instructions, 2 Curr. Law, p. 461. So on the other hand the verdict may be vitiated if the jury has illegally included determina-

Particular facts or issues.—From the application of these rules it follows that the existence of a contract,[91] the character of a contract as conscionable,[92] the breach of a contract,[93] and its cancellation by mutual consent,[94] are questions of fact, unless determination of the breach involves interpretation of the contract, when it is a question of law.[95] Execution of an instrument on controverted facts is for the jury.[96] The legal effect of a writing or instrument,[97] its interpretation without extraneous evidence,[98] or latent ambiguity[99] is a question of law, but if the language is capable of more than one inference, and the inferences de-

Bunker Hill & S. M. & C. Co., 124 Fed. 675; Thomas v. Wheeling Elec. Co. [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 217. Negligence of master. Gandle v. Northern Lumber Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1009. Where ordinary minds could differ, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence are ones of fact for the jury. Question as to whether or not there was negligence in allowing, and contributory negligence in prematurely alighting from train. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jean [Md.] 57 Atl. 540. Negligence of a city as to care of its streets where evidence as to the cause of death of a traveler is conflicting. Behl v. Phila., 206 Pa. 329. The question whether or not a stump has remained in a street so long a time that the municipal authorities should have taken notice of its presence there is one of fact for the jury. Huntington v. Lusch [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 402. The question as to whether or not a stump in a street is such a thing as is liable to frighten a horse is a question of fact for the jury. Id. Whether ice was an obstruction on a street making it unsafe for travel so as to make the city liable for injuries is for the jury on evidence of ice formed thick on the sidewalk from water flowing from an eavespout on an adjoining house. Quinlan v. Kan. City [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 660. Collision on highway. Neal v. Randall, 98 Me. 69; Morgan v. Pleshek [Wis.] 97 N. W. 916. the relation of fellow-servants,[28] or the sufficiency of precautions by master against injury to servants under statutory requirements,[29] are questions of fact. The rule applies to negligence and contributory negligence in loss of goods.[30]

QUIETING TITLE.

§ 1. Chancery and statutory remedies and rights. Nature and office. Form or nature of proceedings.—The procedure to quiet title was originally a suit in equity to remove a cloud and this form of remedy is still preserved in many states, but it has generally been extended in its scope by statutes prescribing a remedy which is in effect the equivalent of the chancery proceeding, and in some states an entirely new form has been adopted in the nature of an action to determine conflicting claims. Besides these distinct forms, in proper cases a cloud may be removed or an adverse claim determined, as incidental to some other equitable or statutory proceeding.[31] Equity will in proper cases afford relief against what might become a cloud if allowed to proceed,[32] but such is not a proceeding to remove clouds. One in possession under writ of restitution is not a "tenant" against whom the remedy does not lie to procure an eviction.[33] In some jurisdictions, a special statutory remedy is given for the adjudication of conflicting claims to water rights.[34] Equitable relief against an invalid deed does not depend on fraud, accident or mistake.[35] The statutory remedies are usually cumulative.[36] An action for damages for obstruction of plaintiff's canal running through defendant's land is not one to quiet title.[37]

98 N. W. 502. But the burden being on plaintiff, a verdict may be directed where there is no substantial evidence. Cole v. German S. & L. Soc. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 113. Collision on highway. Neal v. Randall, 98 Me. 69.

27. Gaudie v. Northern Lumber Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1009.

28. The question of whether certain employes were fellow-servants is for the jury unless the evidence is undisputed, when the court may determine. Gayle v. Mo. C. & F. Co., 177 Mo. 427, 76 S. W. 987.

29. The sufficiency of couplings on a car used in interstate commerce under requirements of a Federal law [Act Cong. Mar. 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 St. 531]. Kan. City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Flippo [Ala.] 35 So. 457.

30. Loss of belongings by passenger on sleeping car. Morrow v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 98 Mo. App. 351, 73 S. W. 281. Whether an ordinance is unreasonable and oppressive under existing circumstances and contemporaneous conditions is for the court. Chicago v. Brown, 205 Ill. 568, 69 N. E. 65.

31. A cloud on the title may be removed in a suit to declare title because of destruction of records. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732. As incidental to creditor's bill to set aside fraudulent conveyance. Spear v. Spear, 97 Me. 498. In partition, the court, having statutory power to determine conflicting titles, is not limited to the chain of title of claimants, but may consider other claims of title derived from other sources alleged to be clouds on their title [Partition Act, § 39 (3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 2925)]. Glos v. Carlin, 207 Ill. 192, 69 N. E. 928. See, also, Partition, 2 Curr. Law, p. 1097.

32. See Injunction, 2 Curr. Law, p. 397; Cancellation of Instruments, 1 Curr. Law, p. 413; Reformation of Instruments; Taxes; Executions, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1178; Judgment, 2 Curr. Law, p. 581, and the like.

33. The issuance of a so-called writ of restitution does not render one in possession and against whom an action to quiet title and recover possession is brought a tenant within the exception of 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5500. Snyder v. Harding [Wash.] 75 Pac. 812.

34. See Waters and Water Supply; Bear Lake County v. Budge [Idaho] 75 Pac. 614.

35. Complainant had quit-claim deed and grantor had afterwards given warranty deed to defendant. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

36. The statutory remedy to quiet title in Pennsylvania is not exclusive but cumulative and either party may sue in equity or the vendee may sue in ejectment or for damages for breach of contract [Act June 10, 1893 (P. L. 415)]. Ullom v. Hughes, 204 Pa. 305. The statutory remedy for cancellation of a lis pendens in Washington is cumulative only and the owner of property against which it has been filed may also sue to remove it as a cloud on title [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4487, 5521]. King v. Branscheid, 32 Wash. 634, 73 Pac. 668.

37. Under Const. art. 6, § 5, requiring such actions to be commenced in the county

Who may sue.—Unless it be held that his possession or interest is not sufficient, suit to quiet title may be brought by an administrator or executor[38] or by a trustee.[39] A reversioner may sue in equity.[40] A city may sue to quiet title to streets.[41] All parties in interest may join.[42] An equitable action to quiet title may be maintained by any one in actual possession of the premises when the suit is instituted.[43] An administrator may sue to determine adverse claims,[44] but claimant under a void deed cannot sue in his own name.[45]

Possession is necessary to the suit in equity to quiet title,[46] but not where extrinsic evidence is necessary to establish invalidity of an adverse claim,[47] and an exception is sometimes made in the case of wild, unoccupied or unimproved land,[48] and the rule has been held not to apply where defendant unlawfully obtained possession after death of the owner.[49] The requirement may be waived.[50] Generally, statutes prescribing a remedy equivalent to the equitable suit to quiet title require possession,[51] but such statutory requirement may be dispensed with where the suit could be brought in equity by one not in possession.[52] In the statutory proceeding where the land is situated. Miller v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836.

38. Pending administration, an executor or administrator entitled to possession may sue to quiet title to lands of decedent. Blakemore v. Roberts [N. D.] 96 N. W. 1029.

39. Bryan v. McCann [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 143. That a deed to one in his own name is actually in trust for another will not prevent the grantee from suing to remove a cloud from the title. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

40. Having no right to possession, he has no legal remedy. Keyes v. Ketrick [R. I.] 56 Atl. 770.

41. Under a statute allowing cities to sue and be sued and to establish, lay out, etc., streets, a city may maintain an action to recover possession of and quiet title to land claimed as a public street [1 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 925, 938, subd. 4]. City of Port Townsend v. Lewis [Wash.] 75 Pac. 982.

42. Where a husband and wife own property as a community and the community owns it jointly with another, all may join to recover possession of and quiet title to land. Snyder v. Harding [Wash.] 75 Pac. 812.

43. Mitchell v. Einstein, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 358.

44. An administrator entitled to possession and control of realty and to receive rents and profits for administration may sue to determine adverse claims to the realty [B. & C. Comp. §§ 516, 1147]. Ladd v. Mills [Or.] 75 Pac. 141.

45. But the grantor may sue for the grantee's use. The deed was invalid under Rev. Code, § 7002; the grantor is the real party in interest under Rev. Codes, § 5221. Galbraith v. Paine [N. D.] 96 N. W. 258.

46. Cocke v. Copenhaver [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 145; Clem v. Meserole [Fla.] 32 So. 783; Sansom v. Blankership, 53 W. Va. 411; Ellis v. Feist [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 369. A bill of equity to quiet title or to remove a cloud therefrom is not generally maintainable by one having a legal title, but who has been ousted of possession. Cahill v. Cahill [Conn.] 57 Atl. 284. Bona fide purchasers of lands forfeited by a railroad company, not in possession or who have not asserted their rights, under the Federal statutes to purchase the lands, cannot sue to quiet title against adverse claimants. Right of purchase under Act March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556, c. 376). San Jose L. & W. Co. v. San Jose Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 47 Law. Ed. 765. A claimant out of possession, after conveying his title to the holder of the adverse title in possession, cannot sue the grantor of the adverse title in equity to remove the title as a cloud on the title he conveyed. Zinn v. Zinn [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 202. An execution purchaser out of possession cannot sue in equity as against one in possession to set aside a prior conveyance by the judgment debtor, fraudulent against creditors. Ropes v. Jenerson [Fla.] 34 So. 955. There is an adequate remedy at law. Neff v. Ryman, 100 Va. 521; Ellis v. Feist [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 369.

47. Casgrain v. Hammond [Mich.] 96 N. W. 510.

48. Clem v. Meserole [Fla.] 32 So. 783.

49. Letson v. Letson, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 556.

50. Stipulation by defendant for trial before a master waives the objection that plaintiff was not in possession. Sanders v. Riverside [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 720. Where defendant in an action to quiet title answered, setting up paramount title in himself and failed to sustain the claim on trial, he is estopped to deny plaintiff's right to sue for want of possession. Mosier v. Momsen [Okl.] 74 Pac. 905.

51. Meeker v. Warren [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 421. Statutory bill to determine claims to land and to quiet title [Code 1896, §§ 809-813]. Smith v. Gordon, 136 Ala. 495. An action to quiet title will not lie in New York unless plaintiff or his grantor is shown to have been in possession for a year before suit (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1638, 1639); nor can a suit to determine an adverse claim to land be sustained as a suit to remove a cloud without such possession where the title is all of record and extrinsic evidence is unnecessary. Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 66 N. E. 975, 1101.

52. Where plaintiff cannot show invalidity of a trust in land in which she was interested as heir of the grantor, except by evidence outside the record, she could sue to remove the trust as a cloud on her title, though not in actual possession. The statute to determine adverse claims, possession is not usually required.[53] A state statute cannot give a Federal court jurisdiction when defendant is in possession.[54]

Actual physical possession is not necessary,[55] but one must be rightfully in possession.[56]

Title in complainant is a prerequisite in both the suit in equity and the statutory equivalents thereof,[57] except as otherwise provided by statute,[58] and the same rule applies in action to determine adverse claims.[59] extends rather than limits the jurisdiction [Rev. St. 1878, § 3186]. Casgrain v. Hammond [Mich.] 96 N. W. 510.

53. Missouri. Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925.

New York, where plaintiff holds the legal title and sues to determine adverse claims [Code Civ. Proc. § 1638]. Whitman v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 468; Mitchell v. Einstein, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 358.

Connecticut. Gen. St. 1902, § 4053, providing for actions to determine adverse claims to real estate, does not authorize the maintenance of such an action while a suit in ejectment to obtain possession of the same property is pending in the same court between the same parties. Cahill v. Cahill [Conn.] 57 Atl. 284.

54. U. S. Rev. St. § 723, prevents jurisdiction on bill and answer, where the bill alleges possession which the answer denies and alleges possession in defendants. Giberson v. Cook, 124 Fed. 986. Averment of possession in complainant is necessary to a bill to quiet title in the Federal courts, though one not in possession may sue in the state court. Boston & M. Consol. C. & S. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 188 U. S. 632, 47 Law. Ed. 626; Id., 188 U. S. 645, 47 Law. Ed. 634; Same v. Chile Gold Min. Co., Id. But see Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925.

55. Plaintiff need not actually live on or be on the land. Maggs v. Morgan, 30 Wash. 604, 71 Pac. 188. One having a contract for sale and in possession to build on the property holds possession analogous to that of a tenant, so that the owner may sue [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & Sts. § 5521]. Bigelow v. Brewer, 29 Wash. 670, 70 Pac. 129.

56. Wrongful forcible possession is insufficient. Hughey v. Winborne [Fla.] 33 So. 249.

57. Cocke v. Copenhaver [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 145; South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732. Possession by defendant irrespective of title is sufficient defense in a suit to quiet title where plaintiff shows no title in himself. White v. McGilliard, 140 Cal. 654, 74 Pac. 298.

Sufficiency: One filing a homestead claim and in possession but without title cannot quiet the title as against one claiming an interest. Moore v. Halliday, 43 Or. 243, 72 Pac. 801. One entitled to redeem from a tax sale has sufficient title to sue to set aside the sale or deed on offer to pay tax, penalties and interest. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732. The wife may defend her statutory inchoate interest in her husband's realty in an action against both to quiet title. Interest under Gen. St. 1894, § 4471; this though she might not sue to recover such interest before the husband's death. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lund [Minn.] 97 N. W. 452. Title derived for purpose of bringing suit held sufficient. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491. Complainant need only show a title good as against the holder of the cloud. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732. Where defendant set up paramount title and the parties did not claim from a common source, plaintiff cannot recover without showing that he deraigned title from the government. Weeks v. Cranmer [S. D.] 95 N. W. 875.

Equitable title is sufficient. Assignee for creditors has the equitable title and may recover, though the acknowledgment of his deed bore no seal of the notary and was not certified [1 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4528, 5508]. Bloomingdale v. Weil, 29 Wash. 611, 70 Pac. 94. Interest as trustee is sufficient title. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

Sufficiency of evidence of plaintiff's title. White v. McGilliard, 140 Cal. 654, 74 Pac. 298; Garland v. Foster County State Bank, 11 N. D. 374, 92 N. W. 452. Evidence in action to quiet title to a spring on government land, to show plaintiff's prior appropriation. Orient Min. Co. v. Freckleton [Utah] 74 Pac. 652. To support findings that a deed on which the action was brought was without consideration, was, in fact, executed a day after it purported to be, and was not made in good faith as against a lis pendens. Bigelow v. Brewer, 29 Wash. 670, 70 Pac. 129. To show adverse possession by plaintiff and to entitle him to a decree. City of South Omaha v. Ford [Neb.] 98 N. W. 665; City of South Omaha v. Meehan [Neb.] 98 N. W. 691.

Adverse holding by plaintiff. Flanagan v. Mathieson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 287. Proof of a parol gift of land from father to son followed by immediate possession and of adverse possession based thereon will rebut a presumption that, because of the relation of the parties, possession was permissive. Malone v. Malone, 88 Minn. 418, 93 N. W. 605. Payment of purchase money for a townsite lot on public lands will be presumed from conveyance [St. 1867-68, p. 696, § 24]. Callahan v. James [Cal.] 71 Pac. 104. Complaint cannot be dismissed in a suit to quiet title to mortgaged premises where plaintiff had prima facie ownership in the note and mortgage because of partnership transactions, there was no objection by creditors or the administrator of the deceased partner to the failure to settle the partnership, and defendant claimed no interest in the note and mortgage. Grether v. Smith [S. D.] 96 N. W. 93. Evidence of performance of an oral family settlement held insufficient. Nordman v. Meyer, 118 Iowa, 508, 92 N. W. 693. A finding in an action to quiet title that a lost deed from a patentee to the plaintiff covered the land was proper where it was not produced but loss was shown, and it was proven that plaintiff and his grantor claimed title for nearly fifty years without objection from the pat-

Defenses.—Defendant may set up paramount title,[60] or that he is a bona fide owner.[61] Defendant is not guilty of laches where he defended his title as soon as assailed and made no delay which does not as well apply to plaintiff.[62]

§ 2. What is a cloud or conflicting claim.—A cloud has been defined to be "the semblance of a title, either legal or equitable, or a claim of an interest in lands appearing in some legal form, but which is in fact unfounded or which would be inequitable to enforce";[63] but a mere claim which might be asserted is not a cloud where it does not appear that there is anyone in being who might assert it.[64] Judgments which are apparently liens are clouds.[65] A title derived through judicial proceedings which are merely erroneous but not void is not a cloud, but is good as against one assailing it collaterally.[66] Void sheriff's deeds are clouds,[67] where the invalidity does not appear on the face.[68] Similar rules apply to tax deeds[69] or certificates.[70] Conveyances and incumbrances beyond the power of the maker to entee or his heirs. Combs v. Combs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1691, 72 S. W. 8. To show land was plaintiff's homestead. Best v. Grist [Neb.] 95 N. W. 836. A deed regular in form to plaintiff as administrator, purporting to be in lieu of a deed delivered to the testator in his lifetime, but lost before record, is sufficient evidence of title in an action to determine the adverse claim of one who does not claim a valid title. Ladd v. Mills [Or.] 75 Pac. 141.

58. A clear legal and equitable title is necessary to bring a suit in equity to remove a cloud on title unless the statute provides otherwise. Alleged necessity for accounting will not give jurisdiction. Bearden v. Benner, 120 Fed. 690.

59. One holding an executory contract to buy land cannot secure its construction by the court by a statutory action to determine adverse claims [Code Civ. Proc. § 738]. Cooper v. Birch, 137 Cal. 472, 70 Pac. 291.

Sufficiency: A deed from one out of possession or not shown to be the owner will not establish title in an action to determine adverse claims; reliance being placed on proof of proper title, the chain must be from the original patentee. Cartwright v. Hall, 88 Minn. 349, 93 N. W. 117. Sufficiency of powers of attorney, in action to determine adverse claims to constitute assignment or transfer of Sioux half-breed scrip. Buffalo L. & E. Co. v. Strong [Minn.] 97 N. W. 575. One claiming under void deed has not sufficient title. Galbraith v. Paine [N. D.] 96 N. W. 258.

60. Sufficiency of evidence. Collier v. Alexander [Ala.] 36 So. 367; Ward v. Tallman [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 225; Callahan v. James [Cal.] 71 Pac. 104. To sustain finding that defendant claimants were not heirs of deceased through whom plaintiffs claim title. Kosmerl v. Mueller [Minn.] 97 N. W. 660. Adverse possession. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732.

61. Sufficiency of evidence. Blair v. Whittaker, 31 Ind. App. 664, 69 N. E. 182; Beckfelt v. Donohue [Minn.] 97 N. W. 127; Scott v. Hay [Minn.] 97 N. W. 106.

Where the complaint shows that deeds executed by those under whom plaintiff claims were on nominal consideration, and that defendant buying afterward paid full value, the latter has the burden of showing want of notice or facts obviating notice. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

62. Equitable action to quiet title. Nordman v. Meyer, 118 Iowa, 508, 92 N. W. 693.

63. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 1069.

64. The apparent cloud was an agreement giving a mining right which had been entered into in 1810, was never asserted and the party to whom the right was given was believed to have been dead for over 50 years, his heirs or devisees if he had any being unknown. Hill v. Henry [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 554.

65. Where validity of the lien of a judgment depends on actual notice to a purchaser. Wicks v. Scull [Va.] 46 S. E. 297. Judgment amended nunc pro tunc to show the real name of defendant. Bernstein v. Schoenfeld, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 171. A bill to quiet possession will lie by a purchaser under a decree to prevent enforcement of a judgment against his tenant in unlawful entry and detainer as to which he was not a party, though the judgment holder would be entitled to possession on a proper action to determine the right. Cope v. Payne [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 820.

66. A decree in tax foreclosure by a county is not void, and, unappealed from, will divest title, though the sale by the county treasurer was irregular. Russell v. McCarthy [Neb.] 97 N. W. 644.

67. Hendon v. Delvichio, 137 Ala. 594. Under execution for criminal costs where no judgment was rendered for costs. Id. Advantage may be taken in an action to quiet title to land sold under execution on a void justice's judgment, of defects appearing on the face of the transcript, since in such case the sheriff's deed is a cloud. Purdy v. Law [Mich.] 94 N. W. 182.

68. But if the invalidity does appear from the deed or the evidence, the deed is not a cloud within the relief of equity. Simmons v. Carlton [Fla.] 33 So. 408.

69. A tax deed by the governor and secretary of state may be declared void in equity where the assessment was void because not made by the assessor and the land was returned in a fictitious name [Tax Laws, Acts 1891, cc. 4010, 4011]. Hughey v. Winborne [Fla.] 33 So. 249. Equity may declare a tax deed void as a cloud on title where its invalidity does not appear on its face, and will not appear necessarily from evidence which its holder must introduce to prove title thereunder. Id.

70. A tax certificate may be declared void execute[71] or by one who had no title to convey,[72] or fraudulent as to creditors,[73] or void under statutes or because against public policy,[74] constitute clouds, but not a deed invalid because of incompetency of parties.[75] An action to quiet title may be maintained against one claiming only a future or contingent interest in realty.[76] An unexercised option to purchase may be removed as a cloud.[77] A lis pendens in a suit to which plaintiff is not a party is a cloud.[78]

§ 3. Procedure. A. Quieting title and statutory equivalents. Jurisdiction, venue and place of trial.—Suit may be brought in the court of general equity jurisdiction.[79] The venue is determined by the fact that the nature of the relief sought or the statutory modifications have[80] or have not[81] localized the action. On a hearing by the master in a suit to remove a cloud from title, he may adjourn to the recorder's office where the deeds in plaintiff's claim of title are recorded.[82] in a suit against the holder to quiet title where a deed, issued on the certificate, would not suffice in a suit to recover possession because title was acquired by adverse possession after issuance of the certificate. Crocker v. Dougherty, 139 Cal. 521, 73 Pac. 429.

71. Contract to convey lands made on behalf of the owner by one without authority, not showing the lack of authority on its face. Kesner v. Miesch, 204 Ill. 320, 68 N. E. 405. An accommodation note and mortgage assigned to the state treasurer by an insurance company will be removed where the company never properly qualified to do business [Act March 19, 1891, St. 1891, p. 126, c. 116]. Stevens v. Reeves, 138 Cal. 678, 72 Pac. 346.

72. A conveyance to school trustees of land previously conveyed to them and also to the grantor, with condition for reversion on cessation of school use, is a cloud on the title of the trustees, which they may have removed, where they were not aware of their rights under the original deed. Murphy v. Metz, 25 Ky. L. R. 1124, 77 S. W. 191. A state patent void because land previously patented. Combs v. Combs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1691, 72 S. W. 8.

73. Spear v. Spear, 97 Me. 498.

74. Though a deed is void for an illegal or immoral consideration, if it is prima facie valid and grantee may recover prima facie by proof of possession in the grantor, it is a cloud on the title of one entitled to recover on prior possession. Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 375. A conveyance of land held adversely by another under color of title, by one not in possession or who has not received rents for a year prior, is void as to the adverse possessor. Schneller v. Plankinton [N. D.] 98 N. W. 77. Deeds by a grantor who was not in possession and did not take the rents and profits for a year preceding are void as against one in possession for two or three years before execution of the deeds, who claimed under tax deeds [Rev. Codes, § 7002]. Galbraith v. Paine [N. D.] 96 N. W. 258.

75. A deed invalid for insanity at time of execution is not a cloud on title within the meaning of equity. Boddie v. Bush, 136 Ala. 560.

76. Rev. St. 1899, § 650. Ball v. Woolfolk, 175 Mo. 278, 75 S. W. 410. Title of ownership under a will subject to the life estate of another is not a cloud on the latter's title. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 198 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 1069.

77. An owner who has given an option on his land which he claims has not been fully exercised may sue to quiet title [Act June 10, 1893, P. L. 415]. Ullom v. Hughes, 204 Pa. 305. Where the vendor in a contract for sale of land afterward conveys to a third person, and the first vendee refuses to carry out the latter contract, he is presumed to elect to pursue his remedy against his vendor, and the second vendee may sue to have the record of the first contract removed as a cloud on his title. Meyers v. Markham [Minn.] 96 N. W. 787.

78. And he need not await determination of the suit before proceeding to quiet his title [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5521]. King v. Branscheid, 32 Wash. 634, 73 Pac. 668.

79. One heir claiming to have acquired title of another at sheriff's sale may sue in the district court to quiet title while administration was pending where his claim was disputed. Such action does not infringe upon the jurisdiction of the probate court. Altgelt v. McManus, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 382, 70 S. W. 460. A county court in Colorado has jurisdiction of a suit to quiet title to land worth not more than $2,000 [Const. art. 6, § 23, and 1 Mills' Ann. St. p. 272, § 395; Const. art. 6, § 11, and 1 Mills' Ann. St. p. 265, § 383; 1 Mills' Ann. St. p. 834, § 1054]. Arnett v. Berg [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 636. A Federal court may take jurisdiction to determine validity of a state tax of railroad property and remove the lien as a cloud on title by injunction if the tax is illegal. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. King [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 614.

80. In California, the action is brought in the county in which the land is situated. The answer cannot be considered in determining whether the action is one to quiet title to land, within a constitutional provision requiring such actions to be brought in the county where the land is situated. Const. art. 6, § 5, refers only to the time of commencement of the action, and makes the question of jurisdiction depend upon the condition of the record at that time. Miller v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836.

81. In Kentucky, a suit to quiet title against mortgages executed by plaintiff, for fraud, is transitory and may be brought in the county of defendant's residence [Ky. St. § 11]. Shouse v. Taylor, 24 Ky. L. R. 1842, 72 S. W. 324.

82. Glos v. Woodard, 202 Ill. 480, 67 N. E. 3.

Service of process.—In New Jersey, the general statute providing for service by publication in chancery suits does not apply.[83]

Time of suit.—The statute of limitations does not commence to run until execution of the deed constituting the cloud.[84] Action begun within statutory time after discovery of cloud has been held sufficient.[85]

Parties.—The plaintiff must be the person or persons in whom is the cause of action.[86] All persons must be made defendant who assert or appear to have the beclouding claim.[87]

Sufficiency of bill, complaint or petition.[88]—The bill must contain all the averments required by the statute under which it is brought.[89] The title of the party suing must be alleged,[90] and his possession,[91] or that the land is wild, un-

83. Rev. 1902, P. L. p. 514, sec. 10, providing for publication against unascertained heirs, devisees or personal representatives in chancery suits, and a decree against them by their class designation only, does not apply to actions to quiet title [Gen. St. p. 3486]. Quaere whether such would be "due process of law" if statute did apply. Hill v. Henry [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 554.

84. Judgment was taken but did not become a lien as against plaintiff's homestead until execution of sheriff's deed thereon. Best v. Grist [Neb.] 95 N. W. 836. Limitations will not run against a suit to quiet title for fraud in execution of deeds until execution of the instruments actually tainted with fraud, though other conveyances are made in the transactions [2 Mills' Ann. St. p. 1641, § 2911]. Arnett v. Berg [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 636.

85. Complainant was ignorant and did not learn that a life estate only had been conveyed to her, for ten years after conveyance. Lampman v. Lampman, 118 Iowa, 140, 91 N. W. 1042.

86. See ante, § 1. Who may sue.

87. A claimant of an interest in property is entitled to be a party defendant in a suit by one claiming as owner in fee to remove a deed executed by the latter. Ackley v. Croucher, 203 Ill. 530, 68 N. E. 86. An owner of land who sold standing timber to plaintiff's vendor, and afterwards sold it to another is a proper defendant in an action to quiet title to the timber. Larson v. Allen [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1069. In an action by an owner of an undivided interest in land once a homestead to set aside a sheriff's deed of the interest of an heir of a former owner of the homestead, a stranger holding judgment against the former owner cannot be brought in by cross bill and compelled to collect judgment from other property. Dinsmoor v. Rowse, 200 Ill. 555, 65 N. E. 1079.

88. Andersen v. Andersen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 276; Curran v. Hagerman [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1003; Davies v. Cheadle, 31 Wash. 168, 71 Pac. 728. As to description of premises. Bynum v. Stinson, 81 Miss. 25. Bill by reversioner insufficient because of repugnancy. Keyes v. Ketrick [R. I.] 56 Atl. 770. Petition by members of city council suing jointly to quiet title, where one of them is one of the persons alleged to constitute the council. Tracey v. Grezaud [Neb.] 93 N. W. 214. Complaint with allegations that defendant held a fraudulent and forged deed, held to make fraud and forgery the only issues on trial. Halk v. Stoddard [S. C.] 45 S. E. 140.

89. A bill to compel one claiming an interest in complainant's lands to specify his title must allege disjunctively that respondent claimed or was reputed to claim a lien or incumbrance thereon. Otherwise a demurrer will lie [Act 1892 (Code 1896, §§ 809-813)] (Weaver v. Eaton [Ala.] 35 So. 647). And that no suit is pending to enforce or test the validity of such title, claim, or incumbrance. Under Code 1896, § 809, an allegation that no suit is pending between complainant and defendant is not sufficient. Moore v. Ala. Nat. Bank [Ala.] 35 So. 648.

90. Sufficiency of allegations of title: A complaint in a suit to remove a cloud alleging that plaintiff is absolute owner of the property "as shown by abstract of title attached, etc.," together with the abstract, is an allegation of title from the source shown in the abstract and is sufficient. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491. Allegations that plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of the lands described therein are sufficient allegations of ownership and not objectionable as conclusions under Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 3186. Mitchell I. & L. Co. v. Flambeau Land Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 530. A bill to confirm title claiming title by adverse possession, need only aver the possession and continuance thereof for the statutory period. Bynum v. Stinson, 81 Miss. 25. In an action by a municipality to recover possession of and quiet title to land claimed by it as a public street, allegations showing it to be a public street are sufficient, though there is no allegation in the complaint to the effect that the respondent is the owner of or entitled to the possession of the street in question. City of Port Townsend v. Lewis [Wash.] 75 Pac. 982. In a suit for a mining claim in the Federal courts it must be alleged that complainant's title has been successfully tried at law. Boston & M. Consol. C. & S. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 188 U. S. 632, 47 Law. Ed. 626; Id., 188 U. S. 645, 47 Law. Ed. 634; Same v. Chile Gold Min. Co., Id. A complaint which merely alleges that plaintiff's grantor deeded the land to her without any allegation of ownership on her part or on the part of such grantor, is insufficient on demurrer under Rev. St. 1898, § 3186, providing that plaintiff must have legal title, and at common law. Van Hessen v. Chippewa Valley Mercantile Co., 115 Wis. 443, 91 N. W. 1008. A complaint to cancel a lease, showing that the lease expired before action brought, and showing no title in plaintiff or adverse claim by defendant, is insufficient for quieting title. Ind. Natural G. & O. Co. v. Sexton, 31 Ind. App. 575, 68 N. E. 692. A complaint to quiet title alleging that occupied or unimproved,[92] and an adverse claim by defendant must be shown.[93] The bill may be amended to conform to the proof[94] or to supply statutory allegations,[95] but the cause of action cannot be changed.[96]

A bill giving a history of complainant's claim must be answered or demurred to as a whole.[97] Where complainant, claiming under a state patent, seeks to quiet title, defendant may attack the validity of the patent on demurrer without showing an interest in the land.[98]

Answer is sufficient which alleges legal title in defendants,[99] and must not be stricken out when it shows a claim to some extent adverse to plaintiff.[1] It need not be stated that defendant is entitled to possession.[2]

plaintiff owns the right to purchase the property of defendant, is insufficient as to facts, since the allegation is a conclusion of law and demurrer will lie. Cooper v. Birch, 137 Cal. 472, 70 Pac. 291.

91. Smith v. Gordon, 136 Ala. 495; Boddie v. Bush, 136 Ala. 560. When title is a legal one, otherwise demurrer will lie for want of equity. Clem v. Meserole [Fla.] 32 So. 783; Simmons v. Carlton [Fla.] 33 So. 408. Complaint as alleging plaintiff's actual possession. Maggs v. Morgan, 30 Wash. 604, 71 Pac. 188. To maintain a bill under the statute (Code Ala. 1896, §§ 809-813) to compel the determination of claims to land and to quiet title, possession, actual or constructive, is essential and must be definitely and unequivocally alleged. An averment which is the mere statement of a conclusion by the pleader is not sufficient, where the facts alleged do not show possession. Smith v. Gordon, 136 Ala. 495.

92. Clem v. Meserole [Fla.] 32 So. 783; Simmons v. Carlton [Fla.] 33 So. 408. An allegation sufficiently denies that defendant was acting as owner of the property by reciting that the lands were "unseated, unimproved, and unoccupied" [B. & C. Comp. § 326]. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

93. Ind. Natural G. & O. Co. v. Sexton, 31 Ind. App. 575, 68 N. E. 692. The complaint need not set out specifically the title or describe the character of the claim on which defendant relies. Schlageter v. Gude, 30 Colo. 310, 70 Pac. 428. Under rule requiring allegation of facts constituting invalidity of the instruments casting the cloud on the title. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491. An averment that a tax on the corporate stock and franchises of a corporation is a cloud upon title cannot be sustained in the absence of a showing that it owns real estate and that the tax is a lien thereon. Ind. Mfg. Co. v. Koehne, 188 U. S. 681, 47 Law. Ed. 651. Allegation that defendants make claims which are clouds is sufficient and not objectionable as conclusion, under Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 3186. Mitchell L. & L. Co. v. Flambeau Land Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 530. A complaint which alleges that certain tax deeds are a cloud on plaintiff's title, but does not allege that they are invalid, is demurrable. Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 1176, providing that a tax deed vests an absolute title in fee simple and is presumptive evidence of the regularity of prior proceedings. Id. A complaint alleging that certain intermediate grantors in plaintiff's chain of title were corporations need not allege that they were duly incorporated unless they are parties to the action [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3186, 3205]. Arpin Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Carmichael, 115 Wis. 441, 91 N. W. 965.

94. But such amendments operate to set aside previous defaults in answering. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732.

95. Where complainant's peaceable possession with claim of ownership is admitted and the issues are understood [Act March 2, 1870, 3 Gen. St. p. 3486]. Ward v. Tallman [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 225.

96. A bill presenting merely errors of law in issuance of a patent cannot be amended to include questions of estoppel and limitations. Complainant was in possession and could defend on such grounds in any action by defendant for possession. Brett v. Meisterling, 117 Fed. 768. Amending a bill from one to remove a cloud from title to mineral rights in land to one to determine claims and quiet title to the mineral rights is not a departure [Code 1896, §§ 809-813]. Smith v. Gordon, 136 Ala. 495.

97. As a whole, it either does or does not show title, and it is improper to demur to a part and answer a part. Catchot v. Ocean Springs [Miss.] 34 So. 145.

98. Lockhard v. Asher Lumber Co., 123 Fed. 480.

99. Though it alleges that they hold as trustees, without description of the trust, and that plaintiff is not connected with the trust. Butterfield v. Graves, 138 Cal. 155, 71 Pac. 510. The exact nature of his title need not be shown. McCroskey v. Mills [Colo.] 75 Pac. 910.

1. Colburn v. Dortic [Colo.] 70 Pac. 151.

2. In an action to quiet title under Mills' Ann. Code, c. 22, where both the defendant's answer and cross complaint state facts showing that his title is superior to plaintiff's, he need not allege that he is entitled to possession of the premises. Where facts are stated from which it appears that he is the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises, and that the plaintiffs wrongfully withhold such possession from him, there is a sufficient compliance with the Colorado code. McCroskey v. Mills [Colo.] 75 Pac. 910.

3. A cross bill will lie to foreclose defendant's mortgage on the property; and where the bill questions defendant's claim to the property, the cross bill is not a departure [Code 1896, §§ 809, 811]. Jenkins v. Jonas Schwab Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 649. In an action by the owner of an undivided interest in premises, once a homestead, to set aside a plaintiff did not have possession.[4] A cross petition which does not ask to have any cloud on the title removed, and which raises no new or different issues may be stricken from the files.[5]

Plaintiff may set up adverse possession as against defendant by replication after answer setting up title specifically.[6]

Dismissal and judgment on the pleadings.—A dismissal is improper, after answer, and determination that defendant's title was inferior.[7] Judgment on the pleadings cannot be given in plaintiff's favor, where defendants assert title.[8]

A jury trial cannot be had as of right.[9]

Burden of proof.—In a suit for the removal of a tax deed as a cloud on his title, the burden of proof is upon complainant, and he must show the invalidity of the deed.[10] Complainants in a statutory action, in peaceable possession, need not establish their title until defendant has shown prima facie his adverse title or interest.[11]

Evidence.—It may be shown that plaintiff authorized his attorney to try to buy defendant's interest.[12] A writing inadmissible as a contract may be admitted as a declaration.

Variance.—A plea of title is sustained by proof of prescriptive title.[13]

Findings.[14] Decree or judgment.—A decree in vacation is void.[15] The court sheriff's deed of an interest of an heir of a former owner of the homestead, the holder of the deed may seek partition and assignment of dower by cross bill. Dinsmoor v. Rowse, 200 Ill. 555, 65 N. E. 1079. A contract giving defendant no right or interest in land by way of lien or to a specific performance cannot be subject of cross complaint or of counterclaim. Cross complaint, Code Civ. Proc. § 442; Counterclaim, Code Civ. Proc. § 438. Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 74 Pac. 40. In an action to quiet his title, brought by a senior mortgagee, who had obtained a deed to and possession of the premises under a foreclosure suit in which a second mortgagee had not been joined as party, the answer of the second mortgagee, claiming the right to redeem, but disclosing the fact that his claim against the mortgagors had been barred by the statute of limitations, states neither a cause of action for redemption nor a bar to plaintiff's suit. Donald v. Stybr, 65 Kan. 578, 70 Pac. 650.

4. A cross bill alleging defendant's possession, and asking that his title be quieted, gives jurisdiction to determine title, though plaintiff's lack of possession would have prevented jurisdiction on the original bill. Sanders v. Riverside [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 720.

5. Burnt Records Act, § 13; Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 116, gives defendant the right to file a cross complaint only when he claims an ante fire title. South Chicago Brew. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732.

6. Code, § 255. Schlageter v. Gude, 30 Colo. 310, 70 Pac. 428.

7. A decree in an action to quiet title is based on the bill and the answer [Ala. Code 1896, § 811]. Hence a decree ordering a dismissal of the bill is improper. Collier v. Alexander [Ala.] 36 So. 367.

8. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Lund [Minn.] 97 N. W. 452. In an action to quiet title, held that the uncontroverted facts pleaded in the complaint did not estop defendants from asserting their interest in at least a part of the land in question, and hence judgment should not have been granted on the pleadings. Where, in an action to quiet title, the defenses pleaded by defendant constitute a complete defense to plaintiff's claim, the fact that his denials are insufficient does not entitle plaintiff to a judgment on the pleadings. McCroskey v. Mills [Colo.] 75 Pac. 910.

9. Defendant is not entitled to a jury trial [Const. art. 1, § 17, and B. & C. Comp. §§ 516, 326, 390]. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491. An action to quiet title to mining property under the code is equitable and neither party has a right to a jury trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 1310 and the Const.]. Mont. Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. C. & S. Min. Co., 27 Mont. 288, 70 Pac. 1114.

10. This rule applies to a bill for partition in which complainant seeks to have a cloud upon his title removed under 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 (2d Ed.) p. 2995. Glos v. Carlin, 207 Ill. 192, 69 N. E. 928.

11. 3 Gen. St. p. 3486. Ward v. Tallman [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 225.

12. Testimony to that effect should not be stricken out on the assumption that such was an attempt to make a compromise. Hughes v. Rowan, 27 Mont. 500, 71 Pac. 764. A writing signed by a deceased person showing a contract with plaintiff to devise a farm to her in consideration of care during life, though inadmissible as the contract, may be shown as a declaration of deceased concerning the oral contract to convey. Davies v. Cheadle, 31 Wash. 168, 71 Pac. 728.

13. Under Civ. Code, § 1007, one occupying for a time sufficient to bar an action gains a prescriptive title good against all. Harris v. Duarte [Cal.] 70 Pac. 298.

14. A finding that claimant under a tax deed had no right in the land is in effect a finding that the deed was a cloud on complainant's title. Glos v. Carlin, 207 Ill. 192, 69 N. E. 928. A finding that defendant's predecessor was never in possession of any part of the land is not a finding that he was not an occupant or that he could have received a conveyance [St. 1867-68, p. 696, § 15.]

should not undertake to settle the rights of persons not parties,[16] but where the parties are properly in court, their various rights should be adjudicated.[17] Plaintiff is entitled to decree for part found to be his,[18] but should not be granted further relief.[19] Decree may be refused where title was perfected in complainant before trial.[20] The decree should provide for reimbursement to the party divested of title,[21] unless no proof thereof was offered,[22] and a deposit to cover such reimbursement may be required,[23] but the losing party cannot be allowed for improvements made after suit was commenced.[24] Defendant is bound as to matters which he failed to bring up.[25]

Damages cannot be allowed unless clearly proven.[26] In an action for slander

Callahan v. James [Cal.] 71 Pac. 104. Omission to find that defendant's predecessor paid for a townsite lot is immaterial where it appears that another paid for him. Id.

15. Sufficiency of showing that decree was rendered in vacation. Biffle v. Jackson [Ark.] 72 S. W. 566.

16. Bryan v. McCann [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 143. Where plaintiff in a suit to quiet title claimed title to a tract of land, and defendant admitted that plaintiff owned the lower half thereof, plaintiff then amended by alleging that the claim that he owned the entire tract was a mistake, that he had sold the larger part thereof and then owned only a part of the half conceded to him by defendant, held that a decree adjudging to plaintiff that part and not attempting to settle the rights of defendant and plaintiff's grantee was proper. Hewitt v. Hensley [Ky.] 79 S. W. 254.

17. Having taken jurisdiction of a suit to remove an alleged cloud upon the title to property, the court should go farther, and ascertain the liens thereon, with the amounts thereof, provided the proper parties are before it upon sufficient pleadings for that purpose. Bryan v. McCann [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 143. In a suit to quiet title to land, where defendant claimed title by answer as authorized by statute, a decree that he had superior title was not objectionable, as granting him affirmative relief without a cross bill. Under Ala. Code 1896, § 811, authorizing bills in chancery to compel the determination of claims to land and to quiet titles. Collier v. Alexander [Ala.] 36 So. 367. Where buildings were sold under foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, deed being given, the court, in an action between the purchaser of the land and the owner of the buildings, cannot fix the amount due under the lien and authorize removal of the buildings merely on default in payment by the owner of the land within a stipulated time. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 650, giving the court power to define and adjudge the title, estate and interest of the parties severally in and to such real property, and § 4205 giving mechanic's liens preference over other incumbrances, and providing that buildings to which they attach may be sold and the purchaser may remove them within a reasonable time. Wilson v. Lubke, 176 Mo. 210. 75 S. W. 602. A mortgage set up by defendant in a suit to quiet title, invalid for defective acknowledgment should not be enforced [Code 1896, § 809]. Jenkins v. Jonas Schwab Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 649.

18. Where there was a finding for plaintiffs as to part of the property, the complaint cannot be dismissed on a finding for defendant as to the part particularly contested. Sweatman v. Bathrick [S. D.] 95 N. W. 422.

19. Plaintiff may be denied further relief where neither party shows right or title and title was quieted in plaintiff to part of the land. Smith v. Thomas, 120 Iowa, 12, 94 N. W. 259. Where a bill to set aside a tax deed alleges ownership of certain land and the proof shows ownership as to only a part thereof, the deed cannot be set aside as to the entire tract; nor can it be set aside as to other lands than such tract which it includes. Glos v. Adams, 204 Ill. 546, 68 N. E. 398.

20. A vendor suing his vendee to remove defects in title arising from irregular probate proceedings is not entitled to a decree for rescission of the conveyance, where the title is perfected before trial. Mock v. Chalstrom, 121 Iowa, 411, 96 N. W. 909.

21. A conveyance by defendant to complainant cannot be ordered, nor can tax deeds be set aside without requiring repayment of taxes, interest and costs, and giving execution therefor. Glos v. Woodard, 202 Ill. 480, 67 N. E. 3. On purchase of an interest in land, consisting of a right to conveyance on payment of the balance of purchase money, at judgment sale, and subsequent conveyance by the original vendors to one suggested by the vendor of such interest on receipt of the balance from the grantee, the latter will not be divested of title until he is reimbursed with interest. Nourse v. Collis, 119 Iowa, 38, 93 N. W. 85.

22. Where defendant in a suit to remove a tax deed made no proof as to taxes and disbursements, the court may declare the deed void without requiring plaintiff to reimburse defendant. Hughey v. Winborne [Fla.] 33 So. 249.

23. In an action to remove the cloud of void tax certificates, plaintiff may be required by the decree to deposit sufficient funds to repay the holders the amounts paid on the certificates, with interest [Mills' Ann. St. §§ 3904, 3905]. Pueblo Realty Trust Co. v. Tate [Colo.] 75 Pac. 402.

24. Biffle v. Jackson [Ark.] 72 S. W. 566.

25. In a suit in a Federal court to cancel deeds to a mining claim and to determine adverse claims, and asking a receiver and an injunction pendente lite, the court can determine the whole controversy and defendants must make their complete defense. Hanley v. Beatty [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 59. See, also, Former Adjudication, 2 Curr. Law, p. 60.

26. A finding, in an action to quiet plaintiff's title to a spring, assessing damages in plaintiff's favor, is erroneous where he proved that he had suffered loss by reason of deof title and for damages under the Louisiana practice, it is improper to award damages founded on a finding that defendant has no title and also to decree that he shall litigate his claim.[27]

Costs.—Plaintiff may be required to pay costs where he did not make a sufficient tender to defendants.[28] Where it is conceded plaintiff had a cause of action, he should not be taxed with necessary costs.[29] Costs cannot be awarded to either party where defendants had an equity requiring judgment for sale and a right to the surplus above plaintiff's claim.[30] Where a cross bill asks foreclosure of a mortgage which could be denied until plaintiff's title was perfected, foreclosure may be permitted without costs and attorney's fees.[31]

Rehearing and review.—Rehearing will not be allowed to permit defendant to introduce further evidence, the character of which is not shown and where there was negligence in production of testimony.[32] In Illinois, appeal lies to the appellate court, where a contract to convey is sought to be canceled as a cloud.[33] On appeal from a judgment quieting title to and awarding possession of land, the supreme court tries the case de novo in so far as the findings have been excepted to.[34] The judgment will not be reviewed where no objection thereto was made in the trial court.[35]

Enforcement of decree.—A mandatory injunction is the proper remedy to enforce a decree in equity quieting the title to real estate as against one in possession.[36]

(§ 3) B. Determination of conflicting claims to real property.—Persons who do not claim an interest need not be cited to appear.[37]

Pleading; sufficiency of complaint.[38]—A complaint based on a tax lien need not aver that the lien was based on a regular levy and assessment,[39] and does not state more than one cause of action by setting forth several tax liens.[40]

On complaint alleging possession, ownership in fee, and adverse claim by defendants, and answer alleging ownership of fee, the court has jurisdiction to determine the adverse claims of the parties.[41]

29. The record was confused and the pleadings voluminous. The plaintiff had mixed up his causes of action but no complaint was made thereof. Each party was compelled to pay his own copy and witness fees and all other costs down to time of entry of decree were assessed against a defendant who was sued on breach of warranty [Code, § 4226]. 35. A judgment quieting title in defendant in fee, where he asked that it be quieted subject to a life estate in plaintiff, is merely erroneous, not void; but it cannot be corrected in an action to review the judgment where no motion was made to modify it and no objection or exception in the trial court. St. 1902, § 4053, providing for actions to determine adverse claims in real estate, it is alleged in the complaint that certain persons have an apparent legal title to the property, but claim no right, title or interest therein, it is not error to deny a motion to cite such persons to appear in the action. Winchester v. Hoover, 42 Or. 310, 70 Pac. 1035.

Allegations of answer as to occupancy do not waive objections to allegation in complaint that land is unoccupied where the defendant does not ask for affirmative relief but merely seeks a dismissal.[42]

Dismissal and nonsuit.—In a statutory action against one claiming an adverse title to realty, plaintiff may take a voluntary nonsuit on defendant's request for dissolution of the injunction against his trespass being granted.[43]

Findings,[44] judgment or decree. The decree should conform to the statutory provisions.[45] Rights of persons not made parties cannot be determined.[46]

New trial as of right.—A party is entitled to a new trial as of right where a determination of the issues necessarily involves the title to the land, irrespective of the form of the action,[47] but not when the suit is an ordinary one to set aside a fraudulent conveyance.[48]

42. Defendant alleged ownership and possession of one lot in himself, and as to the other, in a third person, with a mortgage thereon to himself. Defendants did not ask, directly or indirectly, that their alleged interest in the property be determined. They demanded no affirmative relief, nor did they offer evidence as to the validity of their asserted rights, interest, or title. Mitchell v. McFarland, 47 Minn. 535, is relied upon by plaintiff's counsel in support of his contention that the answering defendants waived, by their answers, the necessity of proofs that the premises were vacant and unoccupied. But in that case the defendant not only set forth in his answer the source of his own title, but pointed out defects in plaintiff's alleged title. A trial was had upon the issues made by the pleadings and the merits, with a decision and judgment for defendants, not of dismissal, but a final determination on the merits. Said the court: "It must be assumed that, when defendant denies plaintiff's title, sets forth his own title, and what he supposes to be plaintiff's claim of title, and his objections thereto, he does it for the purpose of an adjudication upon the matters so set forth." Not so in the case at bar. The court was not asked, either in the answer or by means of proofs at the trial, to determine and dispose of defendant's title or interest in and to the lots in question. On the contrary, at the very first opportunity attention was called to the failure of proof, and the court was asked to dismiss the action, as authorized by Gen. St. 1894, § 5408, subd. 3. 44. Findings that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to possession, and that defendant is without claim or right to possession will support a judgment of title and possession to plaintiff. Chaffee-Miller Land Co. v. Barber [N. D.] 97 N. W. 850.

45. A decree in an action under the New York Code, §§ 1638-1650, in favor of plaintiffs should provide that defendant be forever barred from all claim to any estate in the property or to any interest or easement therein or lien or encumbrance thereon. Whitman v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 468.

46. In an action against the City of New York to determine its right to land on the East river, between the original high water mark and the harbor commissioners' line, which had been conveyed to it, it was improper to insert in the decree that the rights of plaintiffs to improve the property awarded to them were subject to the regulations of congress, when the United States government was not a party to the action. Whitman v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 468.

47. Krise v. Wilson, 31 Ind. App. 590, 68 N. E. 693. A complaint, which in the first paragraph alleges a cause of action in equity against the grantee of plaintiffs' ancestor to have the conveyances canceled because the grantor was of unsound mind, in the second alleges a cause of action in equity to have them canceled for want of delivery, and in the third avers that plaintiffs were the owners of an interest in the land as tenants in common and that defendants claimed some interest therein, which was without right and a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and asks that plaintiffs' title be quieted, involves the title to the land in each paragraph, since any relief plaintiff can secure must come by overthrowing defendants' title acquired by the deeds sought to be canceled, and defendants are entitled to a new trial as a matter of right. Id. The case made by the pleadings and tried by the parties determines the nature of the action irrespective of the form of the action or the prayer for relief. Id.

48. A suit by creditors to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, and to subject the land to the payment of a debt, is not a case where a new trial as of right is allowed by statute. But where the parties attacking the conveyance are not creditors, but heirs, of the grantor, who is deceased, who seek, by setting the deed aside, to recover the land, a new trial may be claimed as of right by either party. In the case at bar the suit is between heirs. Any relief appellants may secure must come through overthrowing the title of appellees acquired by the deeds. If the deeds are set aside, appellees' title through the deeds is devested. It must revest in some one. Under the facts pleaded, it would vest in appellants and appellees. It is manifest, we think, that the title to the land is involved in the litigation, and that a new trial as of right was properly granted. Krise v. Wilson, 31 Ind. App. 590, 68 N. E. 693.

QUO WARRANTO.

§ 1. Nature, function, and occasion of the remedy.—The ancient writ of quo warranto was a prerogative writ, intended for the use of the sovereign alone, but it has long since lost that character to a considerable extent,[1] and all the relief which could be obtained by the writ is now attainable by an information in the nature of quo warranto, or, in some states, by a civil action, which is brought, however, in the name of the state or of the attorney general.[2] Quo warranto is a legal proceeding to oust the defendants from an usurped office or franchise.[3] It issues only as against one in possession[4] of an office[5] or franchise to which he is not entitled.[6] It does not lie to compel official action,[7] to relieve against misconduct not working a forfeiture of office,[8] or to induct one into an office not adversely occupied,[9] though it will lie if the office is filled by one appointed pro tem.[10] Quo warranto generally will lie only where no other remedy would afford the required relief.[11] Conversely, where it does lie it is exclusive. It is the only

1. Lane v. Otis, 68 N. J. Law, 656.

2. Fordyce v. State, 115 Wis. 608, 92 N. W. 430; State v. McLean County, 11 N. D. 356, 92 N. W. 385.

3. State v. Toledo, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 327.

4. In order to justify the action, there must be something more, on the part of the defendant, than a mere claim. There must be some holding or exercising of the franchise or office. It seems that a formal acceptance of a franchise by a public service company is sufficient. State v. Milwaukee, B. & L. G. R. Co., 116 Wis. 142, 92 N. W. 546.

5. Quo warranto to test title to office does not lie to oust a person who is a mere employe. The respondent must be or claim to be a public officer. Quo warranto may be maintained to oust a school director alleged not to possess the statutory qualifications (State v. Fosse [Mo. App.] 71 S. W. 745), or the members of a board of trustees of a school appointed under an unconstitutional statute (Ellis v. Greaves [Miss.] 34 So. 81), or a judge who, at the expiration of his term, illegally holds over on the ground that his successor has not qualified (People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 11, 70 Pac. 918), or a police captain who did not, when appointed, possess the required qualifications (People v. Ogden, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 246), or, it seems, a physician at a state reformatory, appointed after an illegal removal of his predecessor (Marshall v. Board of Managers, 103 Ill. App. 65), or a county superintendent of schools who does not possess the statutory qualifications (Fordyce v. State, 115 Wis. 608, 92 N. W. 430). Under some statutes regulating political parties, the general committeemen of a party may be regarded as public officers. Rabbitt v. Garand, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 119. Under the law of Louisiana the writ does not issue to state officers, but a sewerage and water board created by statute, at the request of the inhabitants of a particular city, the mayor of which appoints the members, is a municipal and not a state agency. State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838. In the absence of statutory definition, no one should be considered such whose duties do not pertain to the exercise of sovereignty or governmental functions in some department. An engineer of a city hall is not such an officer, nor a street laborer, a bookkeeper, a janitor nor a watchman. State v. Gray, 91 Mo. App. 438.

6. Quo warranto is also the proper remedy to restrain an officer, validly elected for one locality, from acting in another place; accordingly a bill in equity to enjoin such acts cannot be maintained. Deemar v. Boyne, 103 Ill. App. 464.

7. It is never directed to an officer as such, nor does it ever command him to do anything. It is always directed to a person holding an office or franchise, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is rightfully entitled to it. State v. Broatch [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1016.

8. State v. Scott [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1021.

9. Where an official has been illegally removed from office and the vacancy has not been filled, quo warranto is inapplicable, and mandamus will be allowed to compel a reinstatement. People v. Ogden, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 246.

10. It seems that when an official, pending an investigation into his qualifications, with a view to his removal, is illegally suspended from his office, and another person exercises his functions temporarily, quo warranto may be maintained against such person to determine the validity of the suspension. Hartwig v. Manistee [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1067.

11. So also when there is a contest as to title to an elective office, based on alleged fraud committed by the election inspectors in counting ballots, and proceedings are begun before either party has gone into possession of the office, or received a certificate of election, it is not necessary, even if it is possible, to resort to quo warranto. Summary jurisdiction of justices, under New York statute, sustained. Rabbitt v. Garand, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 119. It has been held that, though mandamus will lie only when there is no adequate remedy at law, quo warranto will lie only when there is no ade-

proper proceeding where one person is in possession of an office under color of right, and another claims it, even where there is no serious doubt as to the title.[12] It is the proper proceeding to try the right of a corporation to exist as such.[13] It may also be resorted to for the purpose of restraining a corporation, the legal existence of which is not in question, from exercising a particular franchise to which it is not legally entitled.[14] It is held that a municipal corporation may be restrained by quo warranto from extending its governmental authority beyond its true boundaries.[15]

§ 2. Parties and the right to prosecute. Who may institute.—There is a fundamental distinction between information ex officio and those not ex officio, The former were originally brought by the sovereign through his attorney general, and are now filed by the latter in his sole discretion, and, according to some authorities, without securing leave of court in cases wherein public interests are involved, but he cannot maintain such an information where merely private rights are in question.[16] In the former case it is the duty of the attorney general to quate remedy at law or in equity. Information brought by the attorney general to restrain county surveyor from acting, as county engineer, under color of an unconstitutional statute, dismissed on the ground that relief could be had by injunction. State v. Scott [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1021. When a constitution declares that the legislature shall provide for the trial of contested elections, and the legislature has made no law applicable to township officers, the courts have jurisdiction to give relief by quo warranto. State v. Conser, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 270. But where a statutory procedure is provided for the regulation of a particular matter, as, for instance, the charges of railroads, and a commission is created to give redress in such cases, the common-law remedy by quo warranto is superseded. State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 176 Mo. 687, 75 S. W. 776.

12. Mandamus to compel superior authorities to reinstate police captain refused, where another person had taken up the duties of the office. People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 82. Taxpayers' suit to enjoin payment of salaries cannot be maintained under the New York statutes, where there is an actual dispute, depending upon extraneous proof, over a title to office which is regular on its face and presumptively valid. Greene v. Knox, 175 N. Y. 432, 67 N. E. 910. Bill in equity by physician removed from position at state reformatory dismissed. Marshall v. Board of Managers, 103 Ill. App. 65. Act of civil service commissioners, purporting to remove police captain, after an inquiry, held void, and reinstatement compelled by mandamus, since he could legally be removed only by quo warranto. People v. Ogden, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 246.

13. School district. School Dist. No. 4 v. Smith, 90 Mo. App. 215. Thus when there exists a corporation de facto by virtue of a bona fide attempt to organize under a statute, and a user of corporate powers, the legality of its organization may be ascertained by the state by quo warranto or scire facias, but cannot be attacked collaterally by private parties in a suit in equity. Business corporations. Lincoln Park Chapter 177 v. Swatek, 105 Ill. App. 604. And so also where it is contended that the organization of a municipal corporation is invalid because the proceedings for its formation were begun by persons not authorized to do so, quo warranto is the proper remedy, and not a proceeding against officials charged with duties in carrying out the organization. Velasquez v. Zimmerman, 30 Colo. 355, 70 Pac. 419.

14. State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 176 Mo. 687, 75 S. W. 776. Thus abutters may restrain the construction and operation of an elevated street railway, by a railroad company which has, without lawful authority, accepted a franchise granted by a city council. State v. Milwaukee B. & L. G. R. Co., 116 Wis. 142, 92 N. W. 546. It has likewise been held that when a statute, by virtue of which a company acquires a street railway franchise, contains a condition prohibiting the charging of fares above a certain rate, and it is alleged that this condition is being broken, quo warranto may be maintained by the state on the relation of the attorney general, and the court will so mould the relief as to require the company to desist from charging illegal fares. State v. Toledo R. & L. Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 603. But where there is no condition in the charter or statute to prevent the imposition of an illegal or unreasonable charge by a railroad for the performance of a certain extra service in a particular city, it is a private matter between the carrier and the persons affected, and quo warranto will not lie to prevent it. State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 176 Mo. 687, 75 S. W. 776. Quo warranto is not the proper remedy to restrain a mere excess of powers on the part of a corporation, the commission of ultra vires acts, or a breach of trust, unless the unauthorized acts go so far as to constitute encroachments on the powers of the sovereign. Maintenance by a city of a polytechnic school alleged to be beyond the scope of the trust on which the funds employed were held. Demurrer to petition sustained. State v. Toledo, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 327. Constitutionality of statute under which gas companies were consolidated may be tried. People v. People's G. & C. Co., 205 Ill. 482, 68 N. E. 950.

15. State v. McLean County, 11 N. D. 356, 92 N. W. 385. See, as to quo warranto to test the legal existence of a city, People v. South Park [Wash.] 75 Pac. 636.

file an information. Any other person attempting to represent the state will generally be regarded as an intermeddler.[17] Informations not ex officio are brought by private persons, acting only nominally in the sovereign's name. Accordingly, it has been held, in proceedings brought to test title to a municipal office, that the attorney general need not have consented to the proceedings, nor even have been notified.[18] A municipality is a proper relator in quo warranto to oust a city policeman.[19] Leave of court, however, to file an information not ex officio is generally necessary,[20] and grant thereof is discretionary.[21] The information may be resorted to by a private relator for the purpose of trying the title to an office or franchise which exists de jure or de facto, but not for the purpose of attacking the legal existence of the office or franchise. The latter question can be raised only in proceedings brought by the attorney general in his public capacity as the representative of the state. It may, however, be involved collaterally in proceedings properly brought by a private relator.[22] To test the title to a municipal office, the interest of a citizen and taxpayer is generally held to be sufficient.[23] In Wisconsin, by statute, quo warranto may be brought by any person in the name of the state when the attorney general refuses to act.[24] Where it is provided by statute that an information may be filed by a private person only when he claims an interest in the office or franchise, the interest must be special and not merely that possessed by the general public.[25] Where quo warranto is brought by a claimant of the office, he must show his interest therein, and an intrusion by the other party upon that office.[26] There appears to be some question as to how far a claimant, in order to qualify himself to maintain quo warranto, must fulfill the conditions ordinarily required before the exercise of the office can be assumed.[27]

687, 75 S. W. 776. Where the duty of bringing such proceedings is vested by statute in the prosecuting attorney, the attorney general is excluded. The lack of authority in the latter officer cannot be waived by the other party, and a proceeding brought by the former must be dismissed on the merits. State v. Seattle G. & E. Co., 28 Wash. 488, 70 Pac. 114.

17. Nevertheless, in rare cases, the court, in its discretion, may take jurisdiction at the instance of a private relator, even, it seems, against the objection of the attorney general. State v. McLean County, 11 N. D. 356, 92 N. W. 385.

21. State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838; Tillyer v. Mindermann [N. J. Law] 57 Atl. 329. This discretion was formerly exercised only in allowing the information to be filed. It is now exercised after a hearing on the merits. The courts have come to exercise it even in suits by the state on the relation of a state official. 24. State v. Milwaukee, B. & L. G. R. Co., 116 Wis. 142, 92 N. W. 546. The relator, unless he represents the interests of the state, must have some interest more than that of the rest of the community, but the interest of a taxpayer in the existence of an illegal municipal corporation is sufficient. State v. Leischer, 117 Wis. 474, 94 N. W. 299.

25. Information to try title of police commissioners filed by resident taxpayer on the ground that the statute constituting them was unconstitutional, dismissed on demurrer. State v. Reardon [Ind.] 68 N. E. 169. A statute provided that on the occurrence of a lynching, the office of the sheriff should be vacated, and his duties should be performed by the coroner until another sheriff should be elected or appointed. In the present case, a lynching had occurred, but the sheriff refused to relinquish his office. No successor having been appointed, the coroner brought quo warranto. Dismissed on demurrer. State v. Dudley [Ind.] 68 N. E. 899.

26. Thus one who has been validly elected one of the justices of the peace for a certain township and is in the exercise of the office cannot maintain quo warranto against another who claims to have been validly elected also, although the information alleges damages. State v. Tancey [Ind.] 69 N. E. 155. But see Deemar v. Boyne, 103 Ill. App. 464.

27. In consequence of an election contest, the proper authorities refused to issue election certificates, and the previous incumbents

Joinder of parties.—Where a sewerage and water board is legally constituted and afterwards additional members are added to it by a statute, the constitutionality of which is assailed, the title of the new members may be tried in a quo warranto proceeding against them alone. The other members of the board are neither necessary nor proper parties.[28] In quo warranto, to determine the legal existence of a corporation, some courts hold that the members or officers are the only proper parties. Others hold that the corporation must be joined.[29] Quo warranto, to test the legal existence of a city, should not be brought against the city in its corporate name,[30] nor should one whose title to office is questioned be sued as an officer.[31]

§ 3. The information or complaint.—An information in the nature of a quo warranto is governed by the same general rules of pleading as other civil proceedings.[32] When it is brought by a private person for the purpose of ousting the person in possession of an office and obtaining it himself, the claimant must allege in his complaint the facts essential to show his own title.[33] A general allegation in the complaint that an act of incorporation is inoperative owing to a contradiction between two sections named is too vague to require an answer.[34]

§ 4. Answers and other pleadings, and motions to quash or dismiss.—The defendant, if he answers, must either disclaim or justify.[35] If he justifies, he must state facts which, if true, will invest him with a good legal right.[36] If the allegations of the petition are denied, it must be positively and unequivocally and not on information and belief.[37] It is sufficient if the plea possesses such certainty that the substantial facts constituting the defense can be put in issue.[38] In averring title, it is necessary to allege the fulfillment of all conditions precedent.[39] A plea need not, however, negative facts which, if true, would cause a forfeiture of the office. This would be anticipating the pleadings, which is neither necessary nor proper.[40] A demurrer opens the whole record and is to be taken as a demurrer to that pleading which contained the first fatal defect in a matter of substance.[41] Matters of form can be reached only by a special demurrer.[42] The held over. Quo warranto was brought against the latter by one of the claimants, who had fulfilled the other requirements, and appeared to be elected on the face of the returns. Held, that he must first secure the issuance of election certificates by mandamus. Scales v. Faulkner, 118 Ga. 152. Where, in a city election, a mayor is elected but the previous holder of the office refuses to give it up on the ground that there is no legal authority for the election of a new mayor, the claimant may maintain quo warranto without first taking the oath of office, etc., since these acts would be useless before his right is determined. objection that the information was filed without leave of court may be raised at the proper time, by a motion to dismiss or otherwise, but not after appearing and pleading to the merits.[43]

§ 5. Trial and judgment.—It is proper practice on the filing of a petition for leave to institute quo warranto proceedings and the appearance of the respondent, to receive affidavits and counter-affidavits as to the facts relied on in seeking and opposing the application.[44] Where quo warranto is brought to test the validity of a consolidation of public service companies, and it is alleged in respondent's affidavits that the proceedings are taken merely in the interest of private parties, an affidavit by the state's attorney that he is satisfied that the statute under which the consolidation took place is unconstitutional, and that his action was taken merely in the public interest is sufficient, but it seems that the petition must show that the public would be benefited in some way by the judgment of ouster.[45] In quo warranto by the state to test title to an office, the burden of proof is on the defendant.[46] Issues of fact are tried by jury.[47] The defendant may invoke the doctrines of estoppel and laches not only against a private relator, but against the state, and even in cases in which the right to exercise extensive political powers is involved.[48] A decision that persons who claim an office for a specified term by appointment from one authority are not entitled to it as against persons holding appointments from another source is not res judicata in subsequent proceedings relating to a different term in the same office, though the rival claimants derive their title from the same appointing powers.[49] In quo warranto to test the title of additional members added, by a statute alleged to be unconstitutional to a public board, the decree must merely determine the right to membership and cannot deal with any question as to the organization or proceedings of the board.[50] In proceedings between a claimant and an incumbent of a public office, the court inquires into the title of both, and by its decree awards the office to the party entitled to it.[51]

Costs.—A private relator is liable for costs.[52]

§ 6. New trial and review.—Since quo warranto is a proceeding at law, final judgments therein are reviewable by writ of error.[53] Under the Florida practice, as under the doctrine recognized by the United States supreme court, a writ of error may, when the proper conditions are fulfilled, operate as a supersedeas. It will suspend further action under or relative to the judgment, and will relate to the status of the parties as existing at the time the writ becomes operative.[54] Since leave to file an information rests in the sound discretion of the court, its action thereon will not be reversed except in case of an abuse of its legal discretion.[55]

§ 1. Railroad companies.[60] Creation and existence.—The articles of association must comply with the statutes.[61] In case other remedies are provided, a failure to exercise powers will not terminate corporate existence.[62] Existence under a special charter continues until its repeal.[63] An unauthorized charter amendment may be ratified and validated by unanimous vote of the stockholders,[64] or a defective amendment by a subsequent statute.[65]

Certificate of public convenience.[66]—The action of a board of railroad commissioners in certifying that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a railroad is not subject to judicial revision.[67] The board has a very wide discretion as to the evidence which it will receive,[68] and may grant a certificate, though another road which has for some time possessed a legal right to build through the same territory opposes the application and shows ability and readiness to build.[69] On certiorari to review its decision, the board cannot be compelled to return statements made to it as to the financial character of promoters.[70] The board has no power to require the route to be over private land instead of over a highway.[71]

Public aid.—By statute, municipal corporations are in many states permitted to aid the construction of railroads;[72] such aid is not regarded as a mere gratuity,[73] but the road acts as a trustee in its expenditure.[74] The road may be simply a de

People v. Board of R. Com'rs, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 126.

General statutory permission for the issuance of aid bonds is applicable to a subsequently incorporated community. Gen. St. § 2771 applies to the Village of Red Lake Falls (Sp. Laws 1881, p. 253, c. 40). Schmitz v. Zeh [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1049. A statute providing the period in which railroad aid bonds may be redeemable does not repeal a former statute providing the time in which the principal shall be made payable. Laws 1887, c. 77, § 1, does not repeal Laws 1876, c. 107, § 13. Little River Tp. v. Board of Com'rs, 65 Kan. 9, 68 Pac. 1105.

73. The road and taxpayers are in a quasi contract relation. James v. Ark. Southern R. Co., 110 La. 145.

74. Where a county subscribes money "to be expended when found necessary on the work on said road in the county and not out of it in the right of way in grading and in the necessary masonry," the company acts as trustee and where it has done the acts provided for cannot be charged with a breach of trust in buying ties and rails necessary to put the road in operation. Marion County v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 437. The claim of a county for breach of trust in the application of a subscription cannot be enforced after the expiration of twenty years and after the road has passed into the hands of a new company without notice. facto corporation,[75] and may be required to be a domestic corporation.[76] Bonds issued by a municipality in excess of the amount authorized by statute are void only as to the excess.[77]

The character of the aid is controlled by the petition and notice of the election at which it is voted.[78] It may be a stock subscription, in which case the subscriber stands in the relation of other stockholders.[79] Such subscription may be made by a local officer.[80] Conditions are usually imposed on the aided road.[81]

Purchasers of bonds are bound by matters of public record.[82] They acquire no inviolable contract right through adjudications of the validity of enabling statutes.[83] A clerical error in the taxpayer's petition is not fatal.[84] The taxpay-

It cannot be urged that the companies named in the petition are not legally organized and existing where they were de facto corporations existing sufficiently to construct, equip and put into operation the road which the taxpayers desired to have made. 76. Evidence held insufficient to show that in the issuance of bonds a town was dealing with a corporation of the same name incorporated under the laws of a foreign state with which the local corporation was consolidated, though the application was signed by one as general manager who prior to the consolidation had been general manager of the foreign corporation. Municipal Trust Co. v. Johnson City [C. C. A.] 116 Fed. 458.

78. Where the petition for a special election specifies the aid as a donation or taking of stock, and the election notice states that the vote is to be taken on the question of aiding the road by donation, and the order of election and collection of tax designates it as an appropriation, the aid to be extended is regarded as a donation. State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295.

79. The county may be estopped from denying the right of a corporation to stop interest on its stock by the declaration of a stock dividend, by acquiescence in subsequent cash dividends on the basis that the interest was so stopped, and by representation by its sinking fund commissioners. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hart County, 25 Ky. L. R. 395, 75 S. W. 288. The presumption that county bonds delivered in payment of stock subscriptions were delivered on the day of their date may be overcome in part by evidence that other counties delivered their bonds after date in similar cases. Id. Where it is provided that the holders of stock issued to the holders of tax receipts for taxes to defray interest on county aid bonds shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of stockholders, such holder of the tax receipts is entitled to stock equal to its face together with all cash and stock dividends declared thereon [Acts 1851-52, p. 742, c. 429, § 15; 1 Acts 1855-56, p. 188, c. 20, § 4]. 80. The county court may direct the clerk to make the subscription to railroad stock on behalf of the county, and such being a direction to do merely a ministerial act is not an invalid delegation of the power. Green County v. Shortell, 25 Ky. L. R. 357, 75 S. W. 251.

81. The company does not forfeit its right to aid by buying an existing narrow gauge road traversing a small portion of its mileage and transforming it into a standard gauge road. Bradley Ramsey Lumber Co. v. Perkins, 109 La. 317. An agreement by a corporation to establish its repair shop and roundhouse at a particular place requires it to maintain but one such building, and the character of the buildings is governed by the necessities of the road. Agreement in consideration of grant of aid. Id. Construction of 4½ miles within a county by a successor of the aided corporation is not fulfillment of a condition for the construction through the county of a road to be built entirely across a state. Green County v. Shortell, 25 Ky. L. R. 357, 75 S. W. 251. Where the question as submitted at the election made the issuance of the bonds conditional on the exoneration of the county from a stock subscription to another road, such exoneration is a condition precedent after which the bonds could be issued subject to invalidation by the failure of the road to construct its line in accordance with another provision. Id. The police jury in respect to taxes authorized to be levied by them under special consent in Louisiana serve exclusively as an agency of the will of the taxpayers and cannot impose heavier conditions on the road which is aided than the taxpayers impose in their petition, and when the jury declares that the work shall be commenced and completed within a certain designated time, the petition having made no provision, the jury may waive such condition or penalty. James v. Ark. Southern R. Co., 110 La. 145.

82. Where railroad aid is authorized by a charter in exception to the general laws of the state, a purchaser of the bonds is bound by conditions appearing of record in the county court but not printed in the bonds. Green County v. Shortell, 25 Ky. L. R. 357, 75 S. W. 251.

83. Where an act of incorporation is held unconstitutional on the ground that its title does not express a provision for the transfer to the corporation of municipal subscriptions in aid of another railroad, a purchaser of the railroad aid bonds issued by a county has no contract rights which the Federal constitution will protect, though his purchase was on the faith of adjudications that municipal subscriptions to railroad stock need not be specifically mentioned in the title of the incorporating act. Zane v. Hamilton County, 189 U. S. 370, 47 Law. Ed. 858.

84. Error in the designation of the corporation which is immediately corrected cannot be made the basis of a collateral at-ers or municipality may be estopped to contest the validity of aid by acquiescence.[85] or by recitals in bonds issued.[86] In the absence of such recitals, bonds may be defended,[87] though interest has been paid for some years.[88]

Mandamus is a proper remedy to secure collection of an aid tax, its validity having been adjudicated.[89]

Private aid. Subscriptions.—The terms of a written subscription are conclusive in the absence of fraud or mistake.[90]

Powers.[91]—The power to hold property may be limited to that needed and used in operation of the road.[92] A portion of railroad property may be leased as a public warehouse.[93] An authority to build branches or extend into certain towns permits the purchase for a branch of a road already constructed.[94] The right to hold stock in other corporations must be specially granted.[95] An employe's relief association is not contrary to public policy or ultra vires.[96]

Execution of contracts and representation by officers.[97]—Statutory provisions tack, the identity of the corporation not being questioned. James v. Ark. Southern R. Co., 110 La. 145.

85. Where taxpayers have had ample opportunity to repudiate the acts of a police jury concerning an election for aid, they must not delay until the company has placed itself in a position rendering a placing in statu quo impossible. James v. Ark. Southern R. Co., 110 La. 145. Where a county accepts stock, taxes a railroad and pays interest on bonds issued in payment, it may be estopped as against a bona fide holder for value to deny facts precedent to a statutory power to issue such bonds, such as necessity of subscription or interest of the citizens of the county under Code N. C. 1883, § 1996. Board of Com'rs of Stanley County v. Coler [C. C. A.] 113 Fed. 705. Where there is not a total lack of power to issue railroad aid bonds, the taxpayers may be estopped to deny their validity in the hands of third persons holding in good faith and without notice of irregularities by long continued levy and payment of taxes to meet accruing interest. Schmitz v. Zeh [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1049.

86. A recital in the bonds of facts precedent to their issuance which county officers are to determine estops the county as against a bona fide holder. Wilkes County Com'rs v. Coler [C. C. A.] 113 Fed. 725.

87. Recitals as to the authority of officers issuing them or as to the performance of preliminaries requisite to their issue. Green County v. Shortell, 25 Ky. L. R. 357, 75 S. W. 251.

89. As where an order directing the board of county commissioners to order the enforcement of a tax levy is reversed as to the direction on account of a defect in parties, though the validity of the tax is affirmed, so also where a county board has made an order for the collection of an aid tax, and subsequently made an order suspending the original order, mandamus will lie to compel the entry of a new order and a person interested is not bound to proceed on the original order or appeal from the second order suspending it. State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295. The burden is on the board to show any later orders. Only the form of proceedings for the collection of the tax may be considered. One who is a taxpayer at the beginning of the proceeding may maintain it.

90. A subscription for the purpose of securing a railroad cannot be recovered on the ground that it was made with the intention of securing competition and that competition has ceased, where the contract is in writing and makes no mention of such consideration and at the time of subscription there was no road with which competition could have been had. Sims v. Greenfield & N. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 421.

The upper story of a depot, though separately leased as a public warehouse, is not within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring a corporation to dispose of its land within a certain time if not in use, according to the purpose of its charter. that branches in excess of a certain length must be authorized by a resolution of the stockholders do not apply to branches of less length.[98] A resolution by the board of directors to construct, conferring authority on the president and secretary to execute papers necessary to procure ordinances, is sufficient authority to the president and secretary to accept an ordinance fixing the route and affix the corporate seal.[99]

Bonus and earnings taxes.—A railroad created by special charter is not relieved from the obligations imposed by its charter through its acceptance of the general railroad law,[1] and conversely railroad companies specially authorized to increase their capitalization to a certain amount without payment of bonus are not affected by a subsequent general statute imposing such a condition,[2] nor are corporations formed by a merger of such companies.[3]

A charter obligation to turn earnings over a fixed per cent. to the state after the stockholders have realized a specified sum cannot be added to by subsequent legislation, though remedies may be provided for its enforcement.[4] Payment may be compelled though the legislature does not exercise its power to regulate charges after the earnings have reached the sum to be repaid shareholders.[5] Earnings cannot be capitalized as against the state to diminish the percentage of surplus.[6] The obligation is not removed by a subsequent special act relieving the company from constructing part of the contemplated road, and creating a new corporation to construct such portion.[7] An action to recover surplus earnings for the school fund under a charter obligation is not to be regarded as on a contract not in writing and as a simple claim of money barred by the corresponding statute of limitations.[8] It is not barred by laches on the part of state officers.[9] It may be referred to a master,[10] and if enough items sued for are sustained to equal the amount of plaintiff's recovery and the finding is general, the question of whether revenue taxes paid the national government were paid as an excise on the earnings and so a charge against the corporation, or as a tax on the dividends declared and so a charge against the stockholders, becomes immaterial.[11]

Foreign corporations.[12]—On compliance with statutory requirements, foreign corporations are usually permitted to become domestic so far as to exercise the right of eminent domain,[13] but compliance for such purpose does not render them citizens in the sense the term is used in fixing jurisdiction of the federal courts.[14]

A Pennsylvania corporation merged with a New York corporation prior to the enactment of a statute requiring a bonus on the increase of capital stock may increase its stock without payment of such bonus, the rights being held by the individual companies and transferred to the merger. 13. Act March 13, 1889; Acts 1889, p. 43, c.

Taxes required of foreign corporations as a condition to doing business may be collected from a road but partially constructed prior to their imposition, though not from corporations which have already built their lines of railroad into or through the state.[15]

Process.—Service of process on railroad corporations, whether domestic or foreign, is largely controlled by statute.[16] Variance between the summons and return in showing service on a "railway" in place of a "railroad" company is fatal on appeal in the absence of a showing of identity.[17]

Venue.[18]—A statement in the charter as to the location of the principal place of business is not controlling as to venue,[19] nor does the principal office fix the residence.[20] Venue may be confined to a particular county by statute[21] and may be governed by the statute applicable to local parties,[22] hence a statutory provision that an action may be brought in any county through which a railroad runs does not allow a plaintiff to elect in which county suit may be brought in contravention of general Code provisions.[23] An action for personal injuries is transitory.[24]

Control by railroad commissions.—Railroad commissions may inquire into matters concerning public comfort and convenience.[25] May assess a penalty for violation of its orders subject to final action of the court,[26] and may make their

15. The tax is to be based on the amount of capital employed in the construction of the portion of the line lying within the state less the amount constructed before the enactment of the statute [Rev. St. 1899, § 1025; Laws 1891, p. 75]. State v. Cook, 171 Mo. 348, 71 S. W. 329.

16. The sheriff's return must state that a copy of the summons was left with a person in charge of an office of defendant company. Vickery v. Omaha, K. C. & E. R. Co., 93 Mo. App. 1. In garnishment the return must show service on the nearest station or freight agent. Antonelli v. Basile, 93 Mo. App. 138. Where service may be on the managing agent of a foreign corporation, it is properly made on a station agent authorized to sell and collect for passenger tickets and to receive and deliver freight and to collect for freight shipments. Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [N. D.] 95 N. W. 153. Jurisdiction of a foreign railroad cannot be obtained by service on an advertising agent without power to sell tickets or contract. Not a doing of business within the meaning of Ball. Ann. Codes and St. § 4875. Rich v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1008. Provision for service on a passenger or freight agent found nearest the county seat of the county where action is brought does not authorize service on the agent of a first carrier in an action against the last of connecting carriers [Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsecs. 3, 4]. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Chestnut & Bro., 24 Ky. L. R. 1846, 72 S. W. 351.

In Kentucky, an action for malicious prosecution may be instituted against a railroad company in a county through which defendant was transported on defendant's railroad after his arrest [Civ. Code, §§ 72-74]. Evans v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 125, 77 S. W. 708.

20. A county in which a railroad operates its road and carries on a large part of its business, though its principal office is in another county, may be regarded as the county of its residence for the purpose of venue. Poland v. United Traction Co., 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 281.

24. May be brought in any county in Texas in which defendant is operating its road for an injury occurring in New Mexico where defendant was a foreign corporation. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Keller [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 801.

25. The authority and duty is not limited to matters concerning public safety or health. Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 109 La. 247. Complaints as to abuse of discretion by directors of a railroad company in the operation of trains may be made to the board of railroad commissioners. People v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 172 N. Y. 90, 64 N. E. 788.

26. Railroad Commission of La. v. Kan. City Southern R. Co., 111 La. 133. The supreme court in settling disputes between railroads and the railroad commission acts as a judicial body and not as an administrative board supervisory of the acts of the orders executory after reasonable notice to the parties concerned.[27] A board of railroad commissioners has not jurisdiction to allow the taking of the right of way of one company on an intersection by another so as to exclude the first from the territory taken.[28]

§ 2. Location of road, termini and stations.—In the absence of exact and definite location in the charter, discretion is vested in the company.[29] In the absence of statute, the line need not be located by the directors.[30]

Filing, location, profile, etc.—Attestation by the proper officer shows that a location was legally and properly made,[31] and immaterial or formal defects are not fatal.[32] In the absence of a definite description of the location in the map filed by the company or in a grant of a right of way by an abutter, rights are limited to the track established at the time of the grant.[33] A judgment declaring proceedings for an extension invalid for the want of proper consents to the original route by abutters leaves the description of the original as filed, unaffected.[34] There is no legal presumption that consents were given in reference to a defective map.[35]

Alteration and changes.—A statute permitting the altering or changing of a route does not authorize an extension past the original terminals.[36] A railroad chartered to run between two points will not after having located its station and terminal facilities be permitted to call another point its terminus because the location is technically within the meaning of the charter.[37]

Compulsory maintenance of stations, sidings, etc.[38]—A railroad commission has not in the absence of statute authority to require the location of a station and commission. Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 109 La. 247.

29. A road is not rendered a belt line not authorized by its charter by failure to select the most direct route between its termini, where its circuitous nature arises from physical features and typography. Tenn. Cent. R. Co. v. Campbell, 109 Tenn. 655, 73 S. W. 112. A charter provision locating a road "near" a certain village does not prevent the road from passing through such village. Hill v. Southern R. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 486.

30. Location by the president on suggestion or advice of the general manager and engineers is sufficient. Tenn. Cent. R Co. v. Campbell, 109 Tenn. 655, 73 S. W. 112.

31. Clerk of board of county commissioners. Nicholson v. Me. Cent. R. Co., 97 Me. 43.

32. Omission of date where approval by county commissioners shows its timeliness or variance between certificate of approval of location and date of communication from the president of the road with regard thereto where there can be no confusion or insufficient evidence as to the authority of a corporate officer to file where his act has been acquiesced in for nearly 30 years. Nicholson v. Me. Cent. R. Co., 97 Me. 43.

33. The company has no power without the property owner's consent or by condemnation proceedings to build additional tracks, switches or sidings. Stephens v. N. Y., O. & W. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 72, 67 N. E. 119. A map showing a proposed railroad by a single line without indication as to whether the line is the center or exterior line of the route or of its width, or of the amount of land to be taken, is an insufficient compliance with Gen. Railroad Act 1850 [Laws 1850, p. 211, c. 140] requiring a map and profile of the route adopted. Id.

34. The company may procure new consents and fresh ordinances authorizing construction of the route. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United N. J. R. & C. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 897.

35. A map showing the termini with the route between, but not indicating the termini of the various courses, is so insufficient that notwithstanding its filing the petitioner may begin proceedings de novo, and under Pub. Laws 1893, p. 206, § 6, consents of abutters may be validly executed before the description and map is filed in the office of the secretary of state. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United N. J. R. & C. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 897.

36. Greenwich & J. R. Co. v. Greenwich & S. Elec. R., 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 220. A change in terminus for the sole purpose of increasing the road's business is not authorized by statute authorizing a road to be located in a county adjoining any county named in the certificate of incorporation in case the directors believe that the line will be improved thereby [Laws 1890, c. 565]. Greenwich & J. R. Co. v. Greenwich & S. Elec. R., 172 N. Y. 462, 65 N. E. 278.

37. State v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 89 Minn. 363, 95 N. W. 297.

38. Maintenance of train service, see post, § 7A. Const. §§ 15, 22, against discriminations by railroads in transportation facilities and against monopolies is not self-executing, and a statutory provision to the same effect (Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4322), the erection of a depot at a particular point.[39] Where such authority is given, it must be exercised with regard to the rights of both the road and the public.[40] A railroad commission may be authorized to prevent the removal or abandonment of a spur track already established which is in use and in the use of which the public has an interest,[41] but maintenance should not be arbitrarily compelled.[42] Under statutes against discrimination, a road is not bound to permit sidetracks to be connected with its track unless it has permitted such connection by particular individuals, in which case it must accord similar provisions to all,[43] nor can it be compelled to extend its track to reach a warehouse over property not its own.[44]

§ 3. Interest in lands and right of way. Public grants and franchises.— Competitive bidding for a municipal franchise is sometimes but not invariably required.[45] A duty to permit concurrent public use may be imposed.[46] Grants may be for uses other than for tracks.[47] Property granted may have been dedicated to public use.[48] An enlargement of powers under a franchise does not in itself carry an extension of the franchise.[49] To retain a grant of terminal rights, must be regarded in determining what is a discrimination. N. W. Warehouse Co. v. Or. R. & N. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388. A railroad company is not deprived of its right to manage or control its property nor is its property taken without due process of law by a statute imposing on it the burden of proving in proceedings to compel it to provide a station at an incorporated village that the establishment of such station is unreasonable and unnecessary. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minn., 193 U. S. 53.

39. Under Code 1896, p. 974, c. 95, art. 2, §§ 3451-3453, the commissioners have no authority to require a railroad company to change its stations or to erect and maintain depot buildings for the storage of freight, nor is such power conferred by section 3490, which confers general supervisory powers on the commissioners with authority to recommend to the railroads the adoption of such measures as the commissioners may deem conducive to public safety and interests. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. State, 137 Ala. 439.

40. The extent to which the rights of the public will be affected may overcome questions of expense in the operation of the station or diminution of profit secured therefrom. Facts held sufficient to authorize an order of the railroad commission re-establishing a station at a point where it has been located for fifteen years. State v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Minn.] 96 N. W. 81. The station need not be remunerative at the spot where it is ordered, though the ability of the railroad in view of its entire business to establish and maintain it should be regarded and the situation at a special locality will not govern. Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 109 La. 247. Facts held sufficient to sustain an order directing the reopening and maintenance of a passenger and freight station as previously conducted. State v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 89 Minn. 363, 95 N. W. 297.

41. Under Const. art. 284, the commission may order that a spur or switch be not removed, subject to review by the court. Railroad Commission of La. v. Kan. City Southern R. Co., 111 La. 133.

42. Order of the railroad commission requiring the maintenance of a spur held erroneous where the spur was dangerous to operate and no longer of use. Railroad Commission of La. v. Kan. City Southern R. Co., 111 La. 133.

43. A demand for an extension of a line to a warehouse over property not belonging to the company, accompanied by an offer to accept a lease of a stated portion of the road's grounds contiguous to an existing sidetrack, is not a sufficient demand to compel the execution of a lease, even if the road was bound to execute it. N. W. Warehouse Co. v. Or. R. & N. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388.

44. N. W. Warehouse Co. v. Or. R. & N. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388.

45. A municipality under certain considerations and restrictions may grant a use to a railroad without first advertising it for sale to the highest bidder. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904. An electric road between two cities is to be regarded as a trunk railroad for the purpose of determining its rights to a franchise from a city under Const. § 164, providing that cities shall not grant franchises to street railways save to the highest and best bidder, but that such provisions shall not apply to a trunk railway. Diebold v. Ky. Traction Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1275, 77 S. W. 674.

46. A corporation granted the right to use designated tracks may be required to permit other roads to come on such tracks on the same terms and without discrimination, and such a grant is held not prejudicially perpetual or damaging to any substantial rights of the municipality and not a parting with the police power. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904.

47. Railroad stations. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904.

48. Capdevielle v. New Orleans & S. F. R. Co., 110 La. 904. A city may grant the right to build bridges across her basins to the extent that she is concerned. Id.

49. Where the original ordinance grants a company with limited powers permission to operate a dummy railroad, permission to a company with general railroad powers in the road need not as to all portions of its line have complied with a statute prescribing the amount of road to be completed each year.[50]

Grants in highways and streets.[51]—A constitutional provision that any association organized for that purpose may construct a road between any points within the state does not repeal a statute preventing the occupation of streets without municipal consent.[52] By statute, a joint consent to the use of a street or highway may be required where a city and a county or township are in joint control.[53] A public street cannot be granted for a private and permanent switch track.[54]

Abandonment of a highway to a railroad is a question of intent.[55] A mere grant by public authority of permission to a railroad company to use and occupy a portion of a public street or highway does not confer an exclusive right or deprive the public of the right to use the same in any way not inconsistent with its use by the railroad company.[56] The railroad by laying tracks in a street under such authority does not acquire a perpetual easement.[57] Acceptance of a grant to occupy a street may be evidenced by occupancy of a portion.[58] The use is limited to the grant.[59] Where a corporation is limited by its charter to one right of way and is required to give at least a week's notice of intention to make application to the city council therefor, the council has no power to make a grant by implication or acquiescence.[60]

A conditional grant of a right of way cannot be revoked by a city without notice.[61] Right to build under a grant is lost by nonuser.[62]

54. Cereghino v. Or. Short Line R. Co., 26 Utah, 467, 73 Pac. 634. A private citizen specially damaged may have an injunction. Id. A railroad company having lawfully laid its tracks in the streets of a town, an injunction will lie to prevent the tearing up and removing of the tracks by the town authorities. Belington & N. R. Co. v. Alston [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 612.

55. Turney v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 75 Pac. 144.

56. An order of the county court granting a right to use and occupy a portion of the county road will not be so construed, nor does a subsequent order defining more specifically the duty of the company with regard to the repair of the road indicate an intention to abandon any portion of such road or relinquish the county's control, nor does a still subsequent order intended to change the traveled way to the opposite side of the track. Turney v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 75 Pac. 144. 57. Chicago T. T. R. Co. v. Chicago, 203 Ill. 576, 68 N. E. 99. A resolution granting a railroad company permission to lay its tracks in a street on condition that the permission might be revoked at the pleasure of the city, and the railroad company laid its tracks by virtue of such permission, the city had a right thereafter to revoke the permission and remove the tracks. Del., L. & W. R. Co. v. Oswego, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1027.

58. Denison & S. R. Co. v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co., 96 Tex. 233, 72 S. W. 161.

59. A limitation as to the distance a road shall be located from the curb line of a street is not abrogated by the erection of a levee in the street and the granting of permission to the road to construct its tracks on top of the levee. City of Alexandria v. Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co., 109 La. 50. An ordinance granting permission to construct a single track in a street cannot by construction be enlarged to permit the construction of two. Klosterman v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1183, 71 S. W. 6. If a railroad having a right to construct one track wrongfully constructs an additional track, the cause of action to an adjoining owner for damages is barred by a limitation of five years save as to the damages sustained by reason of the construction of two tracks which would not have been sustained by the construction and prudent operation of one track. Id.

61. The power is judicial and the railroad company cannot be deprived of its vested rights by a forfeiture. City of Alex-

Consent of abutting owners to the location of a single track road does not bar recovery of damages from the construction of additional tracks.[63] Though the consent may release the interest in the soil of the street, the extent of use granted depends on the circumstances contemporaneous to the agreement.[64]

Rights in public lands.—A railroad's title to its right of way is superior to a mining claim located subsequently to the filing of articles of incorporation and proofs of organization, though its profile map has not been accepted because the lands are unsurveyed.[65] On abandonment of a mining claim, it becomes public land to which a railroad right of way may attach and a relocation is subject to the easement.[66]

Right of eminent domain.[67]—The power cannot be exercised to effectuate an illegal control of parallel lines.[68] The discretion of railroads in the condemnation of property will not be controlled where not clearly abused.[69] A right of way may be condemned to reach the property of an individual.[70] Land within the right of way which has formerly been purchased subject to a condition subsequent and of which the grantor has recovered possession on failure of performance may be condemned.[71] Payment of the award is a condition precedent to the divesting of title.[72] Under constitutional provisions that payment must be made before a right of way shall be appropriated, statutes cannot be enacted authorizing a railroad to enter into possession pending condemnation proceedings.[73] A judgment of ejectment against the railroad which will operate harshly may be suspended by a court of equity for a period sufficient to allow rights to be acquired by condemnation.[74]

68. Under Illinois statute giving a foreign corporation which has control of a railroad situated within the state power to exercise the right of eminent domain, but not permitting any railroad company to purchase competing lines, a company which purchased a parallel line on the opposite side of the Mississippi river in another state could not exercise the power of eminent domain (Ill. State Trust Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 208 Ill. 419, 70 N. it to construct its road on highways, the county may bring an action for any resulting damages.[75]

Private grants.[76]—An agreement to donate land for right of way is sufficiently supported by the enhanced value of land retained[77] or by the partial building of the road,[78] which may also work an estoppel.[79] Such an agreement is not a license revocable at will.[80] The grantor cannot thereafter establish streets across the right of way by dedication.[81] Rights under a dedication by a lessee terminate with the lease.[82]

Construction without objection from the owner gives a right of way by estoppel.[83]

Conditions and reservations in private grants.[84]—Maintenance of a station may be made a condition,[85] but a condition against such maintenance within a limited distance may be against public policy.[86] A reservation may be valid, though not mentioned in a guardian's order of sale.[87]

Covenants to fence, to provide crossings and switches run with the land.[88] A subsequent purchaser of the road's property is bound.[89] The grantor does not lose his right to enforce them by conveying all of his land except a narrow strip along the right of way.[90] The road must not obstruct its right of way so as to interfere with a right of way reserved by its grantor.[91] A duty not to alter the grade of the roadbed will not be implied,[92] unless plainly shown by the circum-

75. Appropriation under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4426. St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Grayson County [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 64. The measure of damages is the amount required to put the new road in as good condition as the old one appropriated. Id. Where the railroad has built a new road to take the place of a highway appropriated by it, evidence of the condition of the old road and of the new road at times remote from that of the taking should be excluded. Id. An instruction should be given excluding evidence of an excavation adjacent to a new road built by the company in place of the highway from the consideration of the jury on the question of damages. 76. A description of a right of way as a strip 40 feet in width from the center line of the road measured on the north side of said railroad, the grantor to have the privilege of fencing within 20 feet of the center line after completion, amounts to a reservation of a license to cultivate the outside 20 feet. 85. A condition for a reversion of a grant of a right of way in case of failure to maintain a depot at a certain point as a condition subsequent is not void as to public policy, causes the title and right of possession to revert on breach, and may be asserted by the grantors in ejectment either against the railroad or the public. Griswold v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. [N. D.] 97 N. W. 538. A condition for a depot is not complied with by the furnishing of a sidetrack on which trains are stopped. Ark. Cent. R. Co. v. Smith [Ark.] 71 S. W. 947.

86. A covenant not to build a depot within three miles of one established, especially where the railroad commission determines the necessity of a depot within such distance. Beasley v. Tex. & P. R. Co., 191 U. S. 492.

92. A duty to maintain a grade at the point established when abutting owners erect improvements will not be implied in the absence of express agreement, though it is possible the railroad might be responsible for arbitrarily changing its grade without due reference to public necessity. Liestances.[93] A mining right must be so exercised as not to undermine the surface support or let down the tracks unless such right is reserved by express words or by necessary implication.[94]

Enforcement of conditions.—The grantor is in most cases confined to an action for damages.[95] Demand of performance is unnecessary where the right is denied.[96] For the sufficiency of demand in a particular case, see the footnotes.[97]

In an action on a covenant in a right of way deed, the omission of the word "branch" from the name of the company as constituting a variance from the description in the covenant is immaterial.[98] In an action for the breach of an agreement to remove a track to permit mining, it is not necessary to allege the amount of mineral which plaintiffs were prevented from mining or the possibility of defendants complying with the notice alleged.[99]

The measure of damages for breach of an agreement to move tracks to permit mining is the value of the mineral that cannot be mined without injury to the surface of the right of way or lowering the tracks.[1] For breach of a contract to build a station on certain land, it is the difference in value with and without the station.[2]

Rights as against subsequent grantees.—A prior right of way grant is superior to a subsequent right of quarry, and the construction of the road cannot be enjoined by the quarry owner.[3] Occupancy affords notice to subsequent grantees,[4] though it has been held that an agreement to convey on request within a specified time does not give the company a right of possession as against a subsequent grantee, though it has constructed its road and maintained possession for several years.[5]

Disposal of or use of right of way by company.[6]—After construction of a road, a railroad may without intention to abandon, sell for similar purposes premises acquired by it for railroad purposes.[7] A conveyance of a right of way to a railroad does not authorize the maintenance of a telegraph line for general commercial purposes, nor can the road grant an easement in its right of way for such purpose, and an attempt to do so creates a license as against the company without affecting the owner of the land,[8] but where the road has the right to construct a telegraph line upon its right of way, the purpose for which it intends using such telegraph line cannot be considered in injunction by it to prevent interference with its erection.[9]

Abandonment of right of way.[10]—Only the state or city can insist on a forfeiture of a right of way by failure to complete a track.[11] An agreement to use the property for railroad purposes is usually implied.[12] If a deed to another company may be regarded as evidence of an intention to abandon a right of way, it may be taken advantage of only by the fee owner.[13] An injunction of a prior grantee against use by a subsequent grantee amounts to a decision that there has been no abandonment.[14]

Adverse possession by or against railroad.[15]—A right of way may be acquired by prescription,[16] but merely an easement, not the fee, is acquired.[17] Possession of a highway under permission is not adverse to the public.[18] The road may tack its possession to that of its grantor for the purpose of acquiring title by adverse possession.[19] A railroad making and using a cut continues in possession of all space occupied by the cut, but its possession does not widen with the enlargement of the excavation by the gradual washing in of the sides.[20]

By statute in some states, title to the right of way cannot be acquired against a railroad by adverse possession[21] or the right denied on the ground that the road is a public highway.[22] In others title may be a question for the jury on evidence of inconsistent adverse use[23] or a presumption of grant of a right of way of the statutory width may be overcome by adverse occupancy.[24]

Appropriation of right of way for other public use.[25]—Property taken for one public use cannot be taken for another without legislative authority clearly expressed or necessarily implied.[26] Land of a railroad not needed or used may be taken, but public exigency must demand the taking,[27] and the future needs of the railroad should be fully considered.[28] So a telegraph line may appropriate a portion of a right of way not occupied for railroad purposes,[29] unless the land is necessary to the operation of the railroad or other lines of telegraph already erected,[30] though the road is declared to be a post road of the United States,[31] and though the line could be erected on an adjacent highway.[32] Telephone lines have similar rights.[33] A railroad right of way, however, is not considered a highway as the term is used in a grant of the right of eminent domain to such companies.[34] One railroad may take the right of way of another on a showing that it is practical, necessary and reasonably safe,[35] and a statute permitting the appropriation of a longitudinal portion of a right of way in certain cases does not exclude appropriation in all other cases,[36] but a statute authorizing interurban street railroads to construct their line on any railroad which their route shall intersect does not authorize a longitudinal appropriation of a railroad right of way.[37] In Kansas, a railroad cannot condemn,

Assessment or compensation on public improvement.—A right of way is a lot within the meaning of a statute imposing liability to assessments for street improvements,[39] but cannot be assessed unless it is benefited as a right of way.[40]

The temporary employment of an overhead crossing erected off the line of the original public highway does not allow the railroad to base a claim for compensation on the ground of an interest in the fee on the compulsion of a crossing at the intersection of the previously established highway,[41] and though a railroad company is a landowner on each side of a turnpike where its road crosses, it is not an abutting owner having a right to complain of the imposition of an additional servitude by reason of the laying of a street railroad track on the turnpike.[42]

§ 4. Construction and maintenance.[43] Private and farm crossings.—Statutory regulations as to the right of passage between portions of intersected farms are not applicable to previously acquired and fenced rights of way.[44] They may become applicable when lands separately held on opposite sides of the right of way pass into single ownership.[45] The right terminates on a severance of ownership.[46] The statute may be broad enough to compel a crossing to allow access to a highway, though the road does not divide a farm.[47] Similar rights may arise from prescription[48] or conditions in the right of way grant;[49] but where, on an understanding that they are to have a new road, complainants have allowed a railroad to lower a crossing at great expense, they may be estopped from afterwards seeking its restoration.[50] Construction of a bridge may be required.[51] The damages paid on location of a right of way do not prevent a recovery for the obstruction of a right of way over the railroad right of way reserved to the landowner.[52] Procedure to enforce such rights is governed by statute, and the cases are treated in the footnotes.[53]

Public crossings.[54]—A railroad acquires its right of way subject to the right of the state to extend its public highways and streets across it.[55] A railroad company may be required to place a bridge over its road or to grade approaches thereto for a highway crossing it, though the railroad was in operation many years before the highway was laid out;[56] but it has been held that a charter requiring a railroad to preserve any street that it may cross will not be regarded as referring to any and all streets that may be established in the future by individuals or municipalities.[57] The public cannot acquire a right to cross by prescription.[58] The control of highway crossings is frequently vested completely in the board of railroad commissioners.[59]

A railroad in constructing a highway crossing must take all reasonable precautions to lessen the danger to the public.[60] Public use imposes the duty,[61] but after a railroad has laid out a crossing, it does not by acquiescence in the use of

61. Where a road is in public use, liability exists whether it is public or private if a railroad leaves approaches to its tracks in a condition dangerous for travel by teams managed with ordinary care. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Watson [Miss.] 33 So. 942.

another path assume the duty to keep it in repair.[62] Not only the portion of the highway occupied by the tracks must be kept in safe condition, but also approaches constructed by the road,[63] but it is not bound to remedy defects existing prior to the construction of the approach, where such construction does not render the highway more dangerous.[64] The charter of the road or contracts which it has entered into may have a direct bearing on the duties as to crossings.[65] Mandamus may be a proper remedy to enforce such duties.[66]

Damages from negligent construction.—It is a question for the jury whether a crossing and its approaches are so constructed as to be dangerous for those in the exercise of due care.[67] Want of knowledge of a defective crossing is prima facie negligence,[68] and proof of the accident makes a prima facie case.[69] Negligence should be alleged in the complaint.[70]

Establishment of crossings.—A state law requiring notice to the railroad of intention to lay out a street crossing controls a provision for proceedings without notice in a city charter.[71] Actual notice of proceedings to lay out a highway crossing need not be given.[72] Where, after constructive notice of proceedings to establish a highway, the road does not appear, it cannot, on mandamus to compel the placing of a crossing in repair, assert that expense will be entailed.[73] Where a petition is offered for the establishment of a railroad crossing, evidence as to a way by dedication or prescription not presented by the petition is inadmissible.[74]

Abolition and prevention of grade crossings.[75]—Under the New York statutes, the railroad commissioners must determine the impracticability of other crossings before a road can change its route so as to cross a village street at grade.[76] Injunction is the proper remedy where a right to cross at grade is wrongfully granted in case there is no adequate remedy at law.[77]

77. Village of Bolivar v. Pittsburg, S. & N. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 678. Under Massachusetts statutes providing for damages to be recovered for property injured by the abolition of certain grade crossings, the Statutory provisions regulating crossings should be rigidly enforced, and in determining the practicability of an overhead crossing, regard will not be paid to the expenses, damages or local sentiment,[78] although a general power to regulate must be exercised with regard to particular conditions.[79] A provision that grade crossings shall not in future be constructed prevents a grade crossing incidental to a relocation of an existing highway.[80] A provision for bridges at highways applies to a highway laid out after the building of the road,[81] and until legal discontinuance of operation of a track, a bridge may be ordered for its support.[82] The provisions of a charter may be such as to authorize a railroad to elevate a highway, in which case the local authorities cannot interfere on the ground that other crossings have been improperly constructed. Such crossings must be kept continuously in repair.[83] A general authority to change the location of highways to avoid or improve a railroad crossing does not permit a board of railroad commissioners to lay out a new highway,[84] but where a new road is laid to avoid a grade crossing under proper authority to the commissioners, it cannot be discontinued by town authorities under a power to discontinue highways except such as laid out by court or general assembly.[85] Courts cannot review the discretion as to the necessity for the removal of railroad tracks at a grade crossing.[86] The length of a highway constructed by the railroad commissioners for such purpose is within their reasonable discretion.[87]

Procedure for the elevation and depression of tracks is a matter of statutory regulation.[88] Grade crossing acts may provide that the general plan adopted shall not be amended, save in matters of detail or extended beyond the general plan, and that constructions made with companies may be changed only by an agreement between the contracting parties.[89] As to matters which may be included in the costs or made a basis of compensation, see the footnotes.[90]

Crossings with other railroads.—One road has no right to cross the tracks of another without compensation fixed either by contract or condemnation proceedings.[91] An agreement may be made after condemnation proceedings have been begun.[92]

In New York, proceedings to determine the compensation for the privilege of intersecting an old road are not regarded as under the condemnation law.[93] Provisions giving railroad commissioners authority to determine the manner of intersections do not oust the supreme court of authority to order a temporary crossing.[94] In general, the matter of crossing is a subject of judicial review.[95]

In re Selectmen of Westboro [Mass.] 68 N. E. 30. Duty to make transfer connections.[98]—Commissioners, in order to enforce an order compelling intersecting roads to make transfer connections, must allege the performance of every material condition precedent in the proceedings had before them, such proceedings being purely statutory.[99]

Bridges.—A contract by a municipality releasing a railroad from its duty to maintain a bridge is not unlawful, since it is merely an assumption of the exclusive and undisputed control over its highway.[1]

Cattle guards.[2]—To prevent damage to crops by cattle entering over the right of way, the company is bound to provide only such stock guards as are as well adapted for the purpose of turning stock as it is practicable to make them in connection with the safe occupation of the road.[3] Cattle guards need not be constructed where they will interfere with the safety of employes or the handling of trains[4] or where land is unenclosed.[5] Adjoining owners acquire no prescriptive

Statutory penalties for failing to provide sufficient guards for turning stock are in lieu of damages for crops destroyed.[8] Notice to construct guards is a requisite.[9]

Fences.[10]—A road need not be operated regularly and constantly to impose a duty to fence.[11] It is usually unnecessary to fence within city limits.[12] Where a highway parallels the track and is on the right of way, a fence on the outer edge of the right of way and of the highway is insufficient.[13] The road is not liable for injury from a lawfully constructed fence.[14] The landowner is sometimes allowed to recover the cost of fencing on failure of the company to do so,[15] but, to recover for such a fence it must be placed as near as practicable on the line.[16] In the absence of opportunity to guard against a defective fence, the owner cannot be charged with negligence.[17]

Damage and disposal of surface water.[18]—The right to cast surface water is as Statutory provisions requiring fencing and authorizing construction of fences by adjoining owners on failure of the railroad to do so on notice and collect the expense with the reasonable attorney's fees from the railroad are a proper exercise of the police power, and do not divest the railroad of property without due process of law [Burns' Rev. 15. The 30 day notice required to be given railroad companies before the owner of abutting lands may build a fence along the right of way, on failure of the company to do so, is not a proper exhibit in an action to recover the cost of such fence. Evansville & I. R. Co. v. Huffman [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 173. A complaint in an action to recover for the building of a fence along a railroad company's right of way, on its failure to do so, must allege that the fence was built on the side of the right of way or give some excuse for not so doing. Id. It must also allege the date on which entry on the right of way to build the fence was made and the day on which it was completed. Id.

17. It is not contributory negligence to fail to move cotton or make the pen in which it is stored stock proof where the evidence does not show that the owner had an opportunity to do so before the cattle entered through a breach in the right of way fence and destroyed it. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dugger [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1046.

18. A statute may provide for the removal of vegetation and undergrowth from the right of way and also for the proper disposition of surface water without containing more than one subject. Acts 1883, p. 51 does not violate Const. art. 4, § 28. Cox v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 174 Mo. 588, 74 S. W. 854.

that of a private owner,[19] and in the absence of statute, railroads are governed by the common-law rule as to surface water,[20] though a right to flow land with surface water from a railroad constitutes an easement entirely distinct from the grant of the right of way.[21] If the track is located in a street there is no liability for diverted surface water where there is no law requiring the track to be maintained at the established grade,[22] but the construction of a siding in a city street altering its grade and casting surface water on plaintiff's land as well as interfering with access thereto may be enjoined where done without authority of a city council and in violation of ordinance.[23]

A railroad is not bound to ditch as against water not injurious to contiguous lands or the public,[24] and provisions for summary proceedings for the draining of the right of way are unconstitutional where not providing for notice to the company.[25] Under statutes requiring the railroad to construct ditches to carry off surface water obstructed by its roadbed, overflow water which is surface water must be taken care of as well as water from rain falls and melting snow.[26] An action for damages may be maintained by any person injured by reason of failure.[27]

Obstruction of watercourses.—A railroad cannot acquire a prescriptive right to maintain a culvert where the culvert sinks from time to time, thus presenting a greater impediment to the flow of water.[28] Damages from overflow occasioned by the negligent construction of a bridge in a navigable stream may be recovered by riparian owners.[29]

Miscellaneous matters.—The road may elevate its tracks on its right of way without rendering itself liable in damages to adjacent owners.[30] An abutting owner cannot recover for annoyance consisting of noise, smoke, etc., unless the annoyance is the result of negligence in the operation of a railroad.[31]

29. Jones v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 188. A right of way grant from a riparian owner, though implying consent to the construction of a railroad bridge over a stream, does not excuse the road from the consequences of defective construction, and damages for an unprecedented flood may be recovered if such as would not have occurred save for the negligent construction of a bridge. Id. The defendant has the burden of proving that damages were from an unprecedented flood. Id.

30. City of Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 232. Evidence held to show that a change in grade was within the general authority conferred by law and that the consequences complained of were natural and unavoidable. The defendant's road was not on public property and plaintiff was not an abutting or adjoining owner, and was separated from the railroad by one-half the width of a street. Bennett v. Long Island R. Co., 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 379.

31. Fisher v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. [Va.] 46 S. E. 381. Where railroads are not operated negligently or improperly and injuries suffered were not other than those caused by the regular operation of the roads, the establishment of a railroad yard is not a

Where, in the construction of its road, a railroad unnecessarily and negligently obstructs access to leased premises, the lessee may recover damages, though he had knowledge that the road was to be built and though he could have terminated the lease at any time.[32] Where a road has been authorized to occupy a subway and has acquired such right as against abutting owners, it is not liable to such owners for damages resulting from a change of grade and the erection of a viaduct compelled by a subsequent statute.[33]

A cause of action for the negligent destruction of an adjoining tenement by a railroad may be joined to a cause of action for injuries from smoke and noise resulting from negligent operation[34] or a cause of action for pollution of a spring to an action for fire.[35] A railroad company cannot prevent obstruction of a private way in order to permit public access to a depot.[36]

Construction contracts.—A contract to build a road so as to be successfully operated when complete and to have it in operation within a stated time requires an equipment with sufficient engines and cars for successful operation.[37]

§ 5. Sales, leases, contracts and consolidation. Lease or joint use of privileges.[38]—Mutual traffic agreements for the joint use of terminals, yards and other facilities of benefit to the general public are valid.[39] Though statutes do not in terms authorize joint sidings or a lease of sidings for joint use, such acts are not illegal and are regarded as in furtherance of statutes requiring an interchange of business.[40] Where a railroad depot is constructed by one company for the joint use of itself and another, the builder may require the other company to remove from its use where it becomes insufficient for increasing business.[41]

Rent cannot be recovered for operation under a lease which is ultra vires and also against public policy.[42] Taxes paid by the lessee may be deducted from the rent where so agreed.[43] Failure to record a lease is sometimes made penal.[44]

St. §§ 791, 793]. Com. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1880, 72 S. W. 359.

Consolidation.—A penalty is frequently imposed against purchase of stock of a competing line.[45]

A shareholder is not bound to attend a meeting at which a merger is arranged to oppose a contract illegally depriving him of the value of his stock,[46] and where the new corporation fails to pursue a statutory remedy against dissenting shareholders, they cannot be accused of laches in not proceeding to secure the exchange of their stock until they have actual notice or knowledge of the merger.[47] They are not estopped, though the new corporation has assigned its unissued stock to another.[48]

An agreement for the sale of the roadbed, rolling stock and other property of a railroad must be in writing.[49] An option given by individual shareholders to transfer their stock is an independent transaction from such an agreement.[50]

Rights passing with sale.[51]—A purchaser of the franchises of a railroad at foreclosure sale acquires the right to use a city street, though the predecessor in title had not availed itself of such right in its entirety,[52] and though the charter of the purchasing company compels it to obtain the city's consent to the use of streets, it is not bound to surrender its right acquired by purchase and reacquire it under its charter.[53]

A limitation as to the jurisdiction of justice court over actions against a railroad does not pass as a part of the property and franchises of the company.[54]

Duties and liabilities after sale or lease.[55]—A railroad remains liable for the proper discharge of its duty towards the public even after a lawful sale or lease, and the purchaser or lessee is also liable where the liability arises from its acts of omission or commission.[56] The rule appears to be otherwise where the original owner is not a public railroad corporation.[57] Where there is an actual sale, the purchaser does not take charged with the existing liabilities of its grantor,[58] and

45. Act 1894 (21 Stat. p. 812), is not repealed by Const. 1895, art. 9, § 8, relating to the consolidation of railroad lines. Edwards v. Southern R., 66 S. C. 277. an agreement to pay current liabilities does not include a claim for previous personal injuries,[59] but on merger of railroads, the consolidated corporation is liable for debts of the absorbed companies to the extent at least of the value of the property received.[60] The new company is liable for the continuance of the nuisance.[61] The grantee has no greater duty to maintain a track than its grantor.[62]

An agreement by a railroad which has sold its property to another road that all claims against it should be discharged before the price should be paid is personal to the purchasing company and cannot be enforced for the benefit of the bondholders of the selling company.[63] An order discharging a receiver, stating that a new company had agreed to pay all claims against the receivership and directing the property to be turned over to it, does not make the transferee liable for claims which have not been presented to or allowed by the receiver.[64]

A lessor is liable for the wrongful or negligent acts of its lessee.[65] Both companies are equally liable.[66] The grantee company is regarded as the acting servant or agent of the owner.[67] Especially where the owner has reserved absolute control of the train and engine crews of the grantee while on its lines,[68] but a lessor cannot be charged with negligence of the lessee toward its employes.[69]

§ 6. Indebtedness, liens and securities. Mechanics' and materialmen's liens.[72] —Statutes conferring mechanics' liens are not retroactive.[73] There must be privity to support a lien.[74] A civil engineer is not entitled to a lien as a mechanic, laborer or operative.[75] A proceeding to enforce a laborer's lien is not barred until the expiration of the limited time after wages payable in the future become due.[76]

Mortgages.[77]—A trustee is liable to the bondholders for failure to carry out the provisions of the mortgage as to the issuance of bonds and payment of the proceeds.[78] After long acquiescence, it cannot be objected that construction bonds represent more than the actual cost of construction and should be scaled down.[79]

Possession of mortgaged personalty taken by receivers or the purchaser at foreclosure is as effectual to cure any defect in the record of the instrument as possession taken by the mortgagee.[80]

Property covered by mortgages.[81]—An after-acquired property clause covers land subsequently deeded to the mortgagor for a railroad right of way, railroad, stockyards and grounds[82] or an appropriate branch for the main line,[83] but not a road subsequently purchased and not connected at the time of its purchase with the mortgagor[84] or property not used in its business as a railroad.[85] A switch track constructed at private expense does not pass on foreclosure.[86]

Unless earnings and rents are included in the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot reach a fund earned while the property is in the possession of the mortgagor.[87]

have no superior lien thereon as against other bondholders of the same issue.[88] Where a railroad contractor accepts bonds in payment for construction and executes a chattel mortgage to cover after-acquired property, one who sells the contractor equipment and takes bonds in payment has a lien superior to the chattel mortgage.[89] A statutory authority to issue bonds secured by a mortgage on a bridge to be built, carrying with it certain conditions, is binding on mortgagees, being in fact a charter amendment,[90] and where the mortgagees have been made parties and it has been determined that the bridge mortgage is a first lien, a purchaser at foreclosure sale takes subject thereto.[91]

Priorities between mortgages and operating expenses.—Owing to the quasi-public character of a railroad, claims for labor and supplies necessary to keep it a going concern are entitled to precedence in payment from earnings in the hands of a receiver, and in some instances from the corpus of the property in the absence of earnings over the claims of mortgage creditors.[92] The services or supplies must have been necessary to preserve the mortgage security.[93] Earnings must have been diverted from current operating expenses.[94] An amount set aside from the earnings by receivers for operating expenses, but not actually expended, cannot be deducted in computing the net earnings.[95]

A transfer of the personalty to preferred creditors by a receiver in consideration of their procuring discharges of all preferred claims gives them no lien on earnings in the hands of the receiver for the difference between the amount bid for the personalty and the amount they paid for the discharges as against other preferred creditors, though the decree under which sale was had made the claims of the purchasers a lien on the net earnings to the extent of any deficit resulting from sale of the personalty.[96]

Foreclosure of mortgages.—Stock and bondholders may intervene on foreclosure.[97] General creditors as such, having no lien on the property, cannot intervene after foreclosure sale on the ground that receivers took possession of property not covered by the mortgage,[98] or on the ground that the purchaser being in fact a reorganization of the mortgagor corporation is liable for its debts,[99] or on the ground that at the time of appointment of receivers, no default had occurred allowing the trustees to take possession of the property.[1]

Sale.[2]—Opinions that a larger price may be obtained on a resale will not justify setting aside of the sale.[3] Bondholders who have opposed the confirmation of a sale and participated in further bidding are estopped to object that the property should have been readvertised and sold.[4]

Under statutory provisions that all holders of the same class of securities are entitled to have equal rights in purchases at judicial sale in which payment is affected by surrender of securities entitled to receive the purchase money, all holders of railroad bonds of the same class are entitled to membership in a pool formed to purchase the property, and bondholders wrongfully excluded from a pool are entitled to an accounting as to the profits realized.[5] Confirmation will not be refused for the reason that purchase was for the second bondholders rather than for a company formed pursuant to a reorganization agreement, where it is not shown that loss accrued to the stockholder objecting.[6]

Receivership.—On foreclosure, where insolvency is alleged and the existence of a large floating debt, a receiver may be placed in custody of the entire estate including unmortgaged assets.[7] A limitation as to where the trustees shall have the right to take possession does not prevent an earlier foreclosure and receivership.[8]

Receivers in charge of the business of a railroad company under order of court may contract for transportation beyond their line and assume liability for the entire distance over connecting lines.[9] Where the operating expenses are about equalling the income, a temporary receiver in sequestration proceedings cannot issue certificates to pay the interest on first mortgage bonds and prevent foreclosure where the trustee and majority bondholders object thereto.[10]

Operating expenses are properly paid.[11] A vendor's lien for material of which the receiver has taken possession cannot be enforced as against his certificates.[12]

A sum realized from the sale of property not covered by the mortgage over and above the expenses of the receivership not incident to the foreclosure should be distributed among general creditors, including the mortgagee.[13]

Effect of appointment for lessee road.—Where a mortgagee allows the receiver of a lessee of the road to continue its operation at a loss, paying expenses from other funds of the receivership, the mortgagee is not entitled to recover rents pending foreclosure from the receiver.[14] Where a road has been operated in connection with an insolvent road, first under a lease and afterward under an agreement for the benefit of the leased road, stockholders of the leased road are entitled to a dividend from a portion of the amount realized on sale set apart as belonging to the leased road only for such time as it was operated by the insolvent road prior to the abrogation of the lease.[15]

Enforcement of judgments.[16]—In Texas, all property of a railroad company of whatever nature or character is subject to execution sale.[17] Where a railroad company acquires its right of way with constructive notice of a lien, the lienholder may subject the detached portion of the road on which he has a lien to its payment by a sale thereof.[18] Such a sale is not against public policy.[19] A sale under a decree to satisfy a judgment has the effect of a sale on the judgment.[20] Where stock is exchanged for municipal aid bonds which are void, a contractor to whom the bonds are conveyed in lieu of the stock due him under his contract for construction is entitled to the stock and his right may be asserted by his assignees, and in an action to compel the issuance, brought by the assignees against the corporation, complainant cannot be required to bring into court interest paid on the void bonds, and their right to relief is not affected by notice of the void character of the bonds, there being no bad faith.[21]

Statutory methods for collection of judgments against railroad companies under the Indiana statute are regarded as so much in the nature of garnishment that until a writ has been issued, there is no res within the court's jurisdiction sustaining a judgment authorizing an agent to pay from funds coming into his hands.[22]

court to authorize the original system of running to be re-established.[25] A statute requiring railroads to stop all trains carrying passengers at a junction with other roads and prescribing a penalty of $25 a day for failure to comply therewith is penal, and will be strictly construed so as not to enlarge the liability imposed.[26]

The question of punitive damages in failing to stop at a flag station may be for the jury.[27]

Keeping stations open a specified time before departure of trains is made a duty by some states.[28] Failure in such a duty is negligence per se.[29]

Operation on Sunday is sometimes made penal.[30]

Equipment of cars engaged in interstate commerce has been a matter of Congressional legislation.[31] A statute requiring railroads to equip railroads with automatic couplers does not apply to electric cars or roads in process of construction and cars in use for that purpose.[32] Use in interstate commerce of cars not equipped in accordance with such legislation renders the company guilty of negligence per se.[33]

Railroads transferring cars under an agreement are both bound to exercise reasonable care to see that they are in proper repair, and an employe injured by a defect existing at the time of transfer may sue both companies.[34]

speed to a certain rate where crossing gates are constructed does not obviate the effect of a statute limiting speed to a lower rate in the absence of such gates.[37] The benefit of an ordinance requiring a reduction of speed within corporate limits may be claimed by any person within its protection and is not confined to those crossing the tracks.[38]

Precautions at highway crossings.[39]—A provision that a bell should be sounded for a certain length of time by an engine at a standstill before passing a crossing requires the ringing of a bell for such length of time before a train standing across a highway is moved.[40] Under provisions that a bell must be rung after reaching a certain distance from a public crossing, the bell must be continuously sounded during switching operations in which the engine never reaches a greater distance from such crossings.[41] A bell signal is not only for the benefit of those who are on or about to cross the track, but for those who are lawfully using teams near the track.[42]

An ordinance requiring the lowering of gates is designed to make the gates a warning as well as a visible obstruction, and where a person is between the tracks, it may be liable for misleading him through its failure to lower the gates.[43] The road is not liable for an unforeseen interference with gates by a stranger.[44]

The discharge of steam in the neighborhood of crossings may be prohibited.[45]

Obstruction of crossings.—The right to leave cars standing across a highway is limited to such short periods as are necessary in the reasonable conduct of business.[46] Obstructions are punishable by fine under appropriate statutes[47] and may also be made a basis of individual recovery for damages sustained.[48] All unnecessary obstruction by different trains within the period of limitations cannot be punished under one indictment.[49] The indictment should definitely describe the street or highway.[50]

Stops at railroad crossings.—Requirements as to stops at railroad crossings need not be observed in a switch yard, the tracks belonging to the same company.[51] A statute imposing a penalty on an engineer and also on the company for failing to stop at a grade railroad crossing is not unconstitutional as punishing one person for an offense committed by another.[52] Under such statute, liability does not exist for an unavoidable failure.[53]

(§ 7) B. Injuries to licensees and trespassers.—Since the place of injury is always an important if not a controlling factor in actions for injuries to either trespassers or licensees, frequently fixing their status as such as well as indicating the degree of care devolving on both parties, all questions germane to this subdivision have, after treatment of a few general rules, been grouped with reference thereto.

General rules.—There is little if any difference in the duty of a railroad toward a trespasser or a mere licensee; in either case it must merely refrain from active misconduct[54] or wanton and willful injury.[55] A railroad is not absolutely relieved from anticipating their presence and taking precautions against their injury.[56] Ordinary care must be exercised after the danger is discovered,[57] though they have been contributorily negligent;[58] but in absence of knowledge, there is no liability for even gross negligence.[59] Where trespassers are on the track at places not frequented by the public by right or permission, the company owes them no duty until their peril has been discovered,[60] nor can the principle of responsibility for negligence occurring subsequently to plaintiff's negligence be applied.[61]

A railroad owes a greater duty toward one on its premises by implied invitation in a matter in which it is interested than to a mere licensee.[62]

Liability may be imposed by maintenance of a dangerous place attractive to children. Allowing a pile of wood attractive to children to remain with knowledge of the character of the ground and jarring effect of the trains passing near it may render a railroad liable for an injury to a child shaken under its train without regard to the ownership of the ground on which the pile of wood was placed.[63]

Where a trespasser is injured without the fault of the company, the employes are under no legal duty to take charge and care for him, but it is otherwise where he is injured by the negligence of the employes.[64]

Persons carried as employes of independent contractor.—The position of one being carried to and from his work in the employ of an independent contractor with the company is analogous to that of a servant of the railroad.[65] A railway company owes a volunteer, riding on a train gratuitously, though with permission, only the duty of ordinary care not to injure him.[66] The railroad may by contract exempt itself from liability to an express messenger for injuries proximately caused by the ordinary negligence of the employes of the company,[67] or may take advantage of his contract with his employer.[68]

Persons at stations.—While the railroad is not held to the same degree of care toward licensees coming on its premises at stations as towards its passengers, it must exercise ordinary prudence toward them,[69] unless the time of their approach excludes the implication of invitation.[70] The company is not bound to make it im-

Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376.

65. An employe of an independent contractor for railroad construction who rides on a gravel train by permission of the employes in charge and with the acquiescence of the road-master, superintendent and general manager is not a trespasser. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lovett [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 570. He is contributorily negligent in riding on the footboard of an engine between it and the cars. Id. A sudden check of a gravel train necessary to avoid a collision is not negligence. Id. Evidence held to show that a person injured jumped from a train and was not thrown therefrom by a sudden jar. Id.

66. An employe of a contractor doing railway work rode on the gravel train to and from work and fell off the engine. Held, not a passenger or employe, and company owed him only ordinary care. Lovett v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex.] 79 S. W. 514.

67. He is not a passenger for hire. Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 96 N. W. 532.

68. Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 96 N. W. 532.

69. Smoak v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co., 65 S. C. 299. A railroad is bound to the exercise of ordinary care toward one near its depot in good faith to meet for a business consultation one whom he had reason to believe was to take a train. Klugherz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [Minn.] 95 N. W. 586. Where one properly at the station was injured by the breaking of a cable in the process of unloading a gravel train, evidence of the manner of starting the engine and as to the character of the rope in issue is admissible. Id.

Defective platform: Where it has been a custom to permit the public to pass through a train shed for access to defendant's terminal dock, persons so passing are to be regarded as licensees and may recover for negligent maintenance of the shed. Fitzgerald v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 59. Evidence held sufficient to demand submission to the jury of whether a skid over which plaintiff stumbled was left in its position by defendant's employes. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 200 Ill. 122, 65 N. E. 656. Evidence of use of steps of a platform is admissible in an action for injury to a licensee to show their adoption as a part of defendant's accommodation for the public. Smoak v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co., 65 S. C. 299. In order to show notice of a condition of a station platform, statements of a member of a railroad commission to officials of the company are admissible. Id.

Negligent handling of mail bags: A railroad company is responsible in permitting a mail agent to pursue a course of conduct with reference to the throwing off of mail bags at stations which is dangerous to bystanders, where it has been continued for a sufficient length of time so that the railway company is presumed to have had knowledge. There is no distinction between passengers and other persons rightfully on the platform at a railway station. Carver v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 120 Iowa, 346, 94 N. W. 862. A bag need never have been thrown off at the exact point on the platform where the injury occurred. Id. Plaintiff is not bound to assume that such negligent conduct will be continued, and is not held to assume the risk of being struck by a mail bag thrown from the train by the mere existence of a custom so to throw them unless he has appreciated the danger involved. Facts held insufficient to show such assumption. Id.

70. Such time should be considered. Klugherz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [Minn.] 95 N. W. 586. One going to the station to meet her husband who she presumed was there on business with the com-possible for one to injure himself.[71] The question of whether one by the advice of the conductor, using a trestle to reach a train, is a trespasser, is one of fact.[72]

Persons having relation to passenger, who accompany them on trains or to stations, are entitled to nearly as high a degree of care.[73] They are entitled to an opportunity to alight,[74] where their presence is known,[75] and their intention to alight.[76] It has been held that one who accompanies his wife to a station without an intention of becoming a passenger himself, being a mere licensee, cannot recover for the acts of a disorderly person allowed to remain in the station.[77]

Persons loading and unloading cars are entitled to the exercise of reasonable care and skill on the part of the railroad.[78]

Cars received from through companies must be inspected to ascertain whether they are reasonably safe for those about them.[79] It is for the jury to determine whether a proper inspection of a car would be feasible without breaking the seal.[80]

pany goes on the station platform at her peril where the station is closed and there is no invitation to the public to approach. Sullivan v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. [Minn.] 97 N. W. 114.

71. Evidence held to show contributory negligence on the part of one falling from a railroad platform at night through failure to take a lantern. Sweet v. Union Pac. R. Co., 65 Kan. 812, 70 Pac. 883. One sitting on a station platform at a point where liable to be struck by a train is contributorily negligent in going to sleep or becoming oblivious to his surroundings. Zumault v. Kan. City S. B. R. Co., 175 Mo. 288, 74 S. W. 1015. Wanton and willful disregard of human life is not shown where the engineer applies the brakes immediately on discovering the danger, though he failed to see plaintiff until within 10 or 15 feet, and there was nothing to obstruct his view except that plaintiff was in the shade of a station platform. Id.

72. Chicago T. T. R. Co. v. Kotoski, 199 Ill. 383, 65 N. E. 350.

73. One getting on a train to assist his wife and small children in getting properly seated, having notified the conductor of his purpose, is properly on the train. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Funderburk, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 22, 68 S. W. 1006.

74. Where plaintiff with knowledge of the conductor entered the train to assist his wife to a seat and is injured by a sudden jolt of the car while attempting to get off, the train having stopped but a very short time, his negligence is for the jury. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Funderburk, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 22, 68 S. W. 1006. One who boards a freight caboose to make inquiries of the conductor as to the presence of his wife on the train may recover where, the train having started, the conductor demanded that he pay his fare or get off, refuses to stop the train and locks him on the platform, whence he is thrown by the lurching of the car. Great Northern R. Co. v. Bruyere [C. C. A.] 114 Fed. 540. Where the evidence is that an injury was caused by the sudden jerk of the train, the jury should be instructed that the starting before plaintiff alighted was not the proximate cause of the injury. Saxton v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 494, 72 S. W. 717.

75. Where plaintiff was injured while attempting to leave the train on which he had gone to seat his family, other witnesses may testify that they had boarded the train for similar purposes in order to show a custom and knowledge of the trainmen. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Crockett, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 463, 66 S. W. 114.

76. The carrier is not liable to one accompanying passengers on the train who attempts to get off after it begins to move, the employes not having knowledge that he was not going on the train. The train had made a sufficient stop at the station. Oxsher v. Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co., 29 Tex. Civ. App. 420, 67 S. W. 550. Evidence held to show that person jumping from a moving train after having boarded it while stopping for the purpose of seeking his child was not negligent. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Crockett, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 463, 66 S. W. 114. Instruction as to notice to a brakeman that one having accompanied his family upon a train was intending to alight, held improper, as giving undue prominence to a portion of the facts. Saxton v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 98 Mo. App. 494, 72 S. W. 717.

77. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Phillio, 96 Tex. 18, 69 S. W. 994.

78. When a person enters on the car or train of a railroad company to deliver his property for transportation, with the knowledge and assent of the company and according to a custom so to do, or where he enters with the company's knowledge, assent, acquiescence and approval and according to said custom, or where he enters on the invitation and at the request of the railroad company to deliver his property for shipment, the railroad company is bound to the exercise of prudence, reasonable care and skill to see that he is not injured. State v. Western Md. R. Co. [Md.] 56 Atl. 394. Where plaintiff was loading a car at the time it was derailed, an instruction under Civ. Code, § 2321, as to the liability of a railroad for all damages done by the running of its locomotives and trains should be given. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 505.

79. Inspection reasonably well calculated to discover defects. Tateman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 448, 70 S. W. 514. The fall of a door while an attempt is being made to open it is evidence of a defective condition. Id. Though a road receiving a sealed car from another is not liable for its defective condition occasioning an injury to one unloading it, where it has no control over it or right to open it to ascertain its condition and no knowledge of its condition, Ordinary care in switching cars towards persons engaged in work in or about cars on sidings is not sufficient.[81] Failure to notify persons unloading cars of an intention to strike such cars with others is negligence,[82] but there is no duty upon switch crews to avoid striking standing freight cars or to see that men at work in such cars and aware of the approach of moving cars should get off before the cars come in contact.[83] Where one is rightfully working in the car of a railroad company, ignorance of the railroad's servants will not relieve it from liability for their negligence,[84] and they are not relieved by a notice to his employer to have him leave the train at a certain time.[85]

The owner of an elevator and his employes are mere licensees of the railroad right of way, and in loading cars are subject to the rights of the company to handle its trains and use the track for switching purposes in the ordinary and usual way.[86] Particular cases on the question of negligence are cited in the notes,[87] as are illustrations of contributory negligence.[88]

Where the cars are billed out and the train is being made up, an employe of the shipper continuing work is a mere licensee,[89] and where his duty has terminated, a trespasser.[90]

Children on tracks.—Though the trespasser is a child of tender years, no duty is owed until his presence is actually discovered;[91] but thereafter exercise of due

White v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 25 R. I. 19. Allegation held to be equivalent to one of knowledge or means of knowledge of defective condition of a car door. Tateman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 448, 70 S. W. 514.

80. Tateman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 448, 70 S. W. 514.

82. Copley v. Union Pac. R. Co., 26 Utah, 361, 73 Pac. 517. Making a flying switch without warning. Kan. City Southern R. Co. v. Moles [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 351. Ringing of a locomotive bell is not notice of intention to back onto a siding. Copley v. Union Pac. R. Co., 26 Utah, 361, 73 Pac. 517.

83. Rock Island & P. R. Co. v. Dormady, 103 Ill. App. 127.

84, 85. Cent. of Ga. R. Co. v. Duffy, 116 Ga. 346.

86. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Giffen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1014.

87. Kicking cars on the sidetrack so as to injure an elevator employe engaged in moving a partly filled car with a pinch bar. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Giffen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1014. Moving a car without allowing sufficient time to disconnect a chute employed in unloading. Hartford v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 184 Mass. 365, 68 N. E. 835. A person was moving freight from a car in a railroad yard when the car was moved and he was injured by a radiator falling on him. Held, that the railroad company was guilty of negligence, though the moving of the car was due to failing of a car which was being moved to follow the switch track and it was derailed and drawn against the car in which plaintiff was at work. Fisher v. N. Y. Dock Co., 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 526. Backing into a car on a sidetrack. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 505. Making a gravity switch. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Logsdon, 24 Ky. L. R. 1566, 71 S. W. 905. Evidence held insufficient to support an instruction that if the conductor warned persons engaged in unloading a freight car of the approach of moving cars, and that such act amounted to the exercise of ordinary care for their safety, the finding should be for defendant. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 69 S. W. 1010.

88. One attempting to pass between standing cars which he was employed in loading is not negligent per se. Copley v. Union Pac. R. Co., 26 Utah, 361, 73 Pac. 517. Or to get between them to move them. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Giffen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1014. One engaged in cleaning a freight car acts within his rights in going to the door when the car is moved without his knowledge of the reason, though there is danger attending his so doing, but he must not unnecessarily place himself in peril. Instructions held to properly submit the questions of negligence to the jury. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Vaught [Ky.] 78 S. W. 859. Men working on freight cars in the yards are bound to protect themselves from jolts if they see that switching is being done. Rock Island & P. R. Co. v. Dormady, 103 Ill. App. 127. One knowing that it was about time for a switch engine to couple to cars which he is crossing is contributorily negligent in walking across them on a narrow plank standing perfectly erect and with his hands occupied. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Broughton [Ky.] 78 S. W. 876. Acts done in attempting to avoid injury may, by the circumstances, be relieved from negligence, such as jumping from a car which he was loading after it was derailed by being run into by a freight train. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 505.

89. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Martin, 31 Ind. App. 308, 65 N. E. 591.

90. Where one engaged about cars after the termination of his duty attempts to climb on them for his own convenience, he is a trespasser and the duty of the company is limited to refraining from injuring him after his danger is discovered. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Broughton [Ky.] 78 S. W. 876.

91. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Priest, 117 Ga. 767. A railroad may assume that no care is not sufficient,[92] and to discover his presence on or near the track the railroad must use ordinary care by keeping reasonable lookout.[93] It cannot be assumed that it will remain in or seek a place of safety.[94] A rule as to the nonliability of the railroad for the sudden impulse of a person running on the track under the influence of fright is not applicable.[95]

A failure to fence against stock cannot be shown as evidencing negligence, especially where not the proximate cause of injury to a child.[96] The question of whether an unlawful rate of speed was the proximate cause of the injury and death of a child is for the jury.[97] Where the only negligence complained of is in not having a watchman on the rear of cars which are being backed to make a coupling, it must be shown that such watchman if present could have averted the accident with ordinary care.[98]

children are playing about or under its cars, and unless it knows or has reasonable grounds to anticipate their presence, it is not bound to look out for them. Wagner v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 141. Failure to comply with statutory requirements as to giving signals and checking the speed of the train in approaching a public crossing held not relative to a child not on a crossing an act of negligence. Combs v. Ga. R. & B. Co., 115 Ga. 1020.

92. Child of 3½ years. Livingston v. Wabash R. Co., 170 Mo. 452, 71 S. W. 136. Where a child is of such tender years that a presumption does not arise that she will leave the track before the train reaches her, the train must be stopped if it can be done by the exercise of the highest degree of care. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Hammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 708. An abstract instruction as to the duty to stop on discovering a child on the track is not misleading where the law is properly stated in another instruction applying it to the facts. Id. Railroad held not liable where a child was directed to and did sit down by the side of the track on the approach of the train, but starts across it when the train is very near. Southern R. Co. v. Eubanks, 117 Ga. 217.

93. Failure to keep such a look out is negligence per se. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Hammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 708. Failure to stop an engine until after the accident, though the position of decedent was seen, authorizes the submission of failure to exercise proper care. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Ball [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 420. Liability is imposed where the engineer sees or could have seen by the exercise of ordinary care in time to avoid the accident, a child running across a depot platform so as to indicate to a person of ordinary prudence that it would run onto the track. Livingston v. Wabash R. Co., 170 Mo. 452, 71 S. W. 136. An instruction that the degree of care to discover children would vary with the known possibility of danger along different portions of the road is not injurious as conveying the idea that the care to be used is other than ordinary care. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Hammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 708. If children are in the habit of playing in a switch yard with knowledge and acquiescence of the company and its employes, ordinary care must be used to avoid injury toward them and to discover their presence. Ollis v. Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 80. Evidence held sufficient to require submission of discovery of danger of a minor on the track in time to avoid striking him. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Yarbrough [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 844. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence in failing to discover the presence of an 11 year old child picking up coal in a cut 7 or 8 feet in depth and 230 yards from a private crossing. Goodman's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1086, 77 S. W. 174.

94. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Hammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 708; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vanarsdell's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1432, 77 S. W. 1103. Where a child of 3½ is seen running across a depot platform, it cannot be assumed that he will stop before crossing it. Livingston v. Wabash R. Co., 170 Mo. 452, 71 S. W. 136.

95. Child ran 50 feet diagonally across a depot platform in a way showing that it was trying to reach a platform on the other side. Livingston v. Wabash R. Co., 170 Mo. 452, 71 S. W. 136.

96. Rev. St. 1892, § 3324. Opening in a fence held not the proximate cause of injury to a boy six years of age attempting to catch hold of a passing car. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Liidtke, 69 Ohio St. 384, 69 N. E. 653.

97. O'Brien v. Wis. Cent. R. Co. [Wis.] 96 N. W. 424. Evidence held to authorize an instruction as to the effect of discovery of a boy in imminent peril in time to have avoided injuring him had not the engine been running at an unreasonable and dangerous speed. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Ball [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 420.

98. Mo. Pac. R. Co. v. Jaffi, 67 Kan. 81, 72 Pac. 535.

99. Question of contributory negligence of child held for the jury where he was injured in climbing out of a ditch after being caught under a train without defendant's fault. Anna v. Mo. P. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 542, 70 S. W. 398. A boy trespasser, 10 years old, of average intelligence, fair hearing and good eyesight, familiar with the locality; the approaching train being in view for several hundred feet; is guilty of contributory negligence. Le Duc v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 107. A boy of 14, familiar with the dangers of the sur-

Adults walking on tracks.—Habitual or occasional use of the track by pedestrians is not sufficient to cause them to become more than mere licensees if not trespassers.[3] An invitation to the public is not shown by the fact that tracks are so ballasted as to prevent injury to employes,[4] and where a path is provided, the road may assume that the public will confine itself thereto.[5] Some jurisdictions hold that where the presence of persons on the track is to be anticipated, diligence after discovery of peril will not discharge the railroad's duty.[6] Towards a trespasser there is no duty except to use reasonable care after discovering their peril,[7] though roads are by statute made public highways.[8] As to what is such care, see footnotes.[9] This rule may be modified by antecedent negligence, such as excessive roundings, who, without looking about him, is struck by a train on another track while he is looking under a standing train in search of a companion, is contributorily negligent. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., v. Gahan, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 277. A boy 7 years of age, intelligent, resident in the neighborhood of the railroad and acquainted with the movement of trains, may be capable of contributory negligence. Givens v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1796, 72 S. W. 320. A boy of 11 may by reason of undeveloped judgment not sufficiently appreciate the imprudence of attempting to cross in front of an engine so as to be contributorily negligent, though he knows the danger of the condition. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Ball [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 420. The question held for the jury where the train was being run without warning and in violation of a speed ordinance. Id.

1. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence imputable to the father of a child killed. Corbett v. Or. S. L. R. Co., 25 Utah, 449, 71 Pac. 1065. Evidence held sufficient to present a question for the jury as to the contributory negligence of a father of a child twenty-five months old in permitting it to get on a railroad track. O'Brien v. Wis. Cent. R. Co. [Wis.] 96 N. W. 424.

2. Where a minor was struck while crossing the tracks, evidence as to his connection with brass stolen from a school building is inadmissible; or his mother's declaration that she was capable of taking care of her minor child, that she did not think that he had been on defendant's right of way, and that the police had no business to monkey with him, as are statements of his parents to one who warned the minor from jumping on trains. One who made measurements after the accident may testify that he was shown the place by persons who were present, and such persons may testify that they have shown the place to different parties. Over v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 535.

3. Use to reach dwellings. Griswold v. Boston & M. R. R., 183 Mass. 434, 67 N. E. 354. Occasional use of a deep cut reached by passing an iron cattle guard is trespass. Goodman's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1086, 77 S. W. 174. A person walking on a railroad track outside the limits of a town or city, there being no roadway for the use of the public, is a trespasser. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. See's Adm'x [Ky.] 79 S. W. 252. Mere acquiescence of the company in such use of its tracks does not amount to a license to so use them. Id. Where, with the company's knowledge, a right of way had been used as a passway for many years, though there was a sign warning people off, one using the right of way for such purpose is not a trespasser. Murrell v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 505.

4. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376.

5. A child under the cars or between the rails is to be regarded as a trespasser. Wagner v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 141.

6. Where the track is unfenced and there are dwellings on each side so that it is quite generally used as a highway, the railroad is bound to reasonable diligence to prevent injury. Corbett v. Or. S. L. R. Co., 25 Utah, 449, 71 Pac. 1065.

7. Such a person cannot allege that it was negligence to fail to give signals on approach to either a public or a private crossing. Davis' Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 342, 75 S. W. 275; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. See's Adm'x [Ky.] 79 S. W. 252. Where a railroad company had left its fences down on each side of a not extensively used path across its tracks, held not to show a license so as to impose on the company the duty of using reasonable care in running its trains so as to protect persons using the path. Le Duc v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 107. A person using such path is a trespasser. Id.; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gahan, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 277.

8. Const. art. 272, providing that railways are public highways does not impose a duty to use due care and diligence to discover a person on the track and refrain from injuring him when such person except for the provision would have been a trespasser [Const. art. 272]. Evidence held to require the exercise of ordinary care to discover an intoxicated trespasser and to justify a recovery, though plaintiff was contributorily negligent. McClanahan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 111 La. 781.

9. Failure of an engineer of a train on a sidetrack to warn a person walking on a parallel track, in the absence of a showing that the engineer knew of the approach of another train, or of plaintiff's purpose, was not negligence on the engineer's part. Gregory v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 238. Evidence held not to show that an engineer was negligent in failing to sound a whistle after discovering plaintiff's intestate instead of reversing the engine, applying the sand and air-brakes, he being unable to do both. Humphreys' Adm'x v. Valley R. Co., 100 Va. 749.

speed[10] or failure to keep a lookout.[11] The engineer or train crew may presume until the contrary appears that one on the track will take ordinary precautions for his own safety.[12]

Contributory negligence prevents recovery,[13] save in states which have adopted what is termed the "last clear chance" doctrine.[14] See the footnotes for illustrations of contributory negligence,[15] burden of proof,[16] presumptions,[17] admissibility

10. A mere licensee cannot recover, though speed is in excess of a city ordinance. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376. Failure to obey a city ordinance limiting the rate of speed is negligence. Murrell v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 505. When running through the country, at places where there are no houses, roads or crossings, the rate of speed or lack of signals cannot be negligence as to trespassers on the track, whose presence is unknown. Gregory v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 238.

11. Use of every reasonable means to prevent injury after discovery of a pedestrian on the tracks is not an excuse for negligence in running the train at an unlawful speed or in failing to keep a proper lookout. Where the pedestrian is not a trespasser or guilty of contributory negligence. Kroeger v. Tex. & P. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 69 S. W. 809. The issue of the company's negligence in failing to keep a proper lookout should not be rejected by the instructions. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Hammer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 708.

12. Humphreys' Adm'x v. Valley R. Co., 100 Va. 749; Shetter v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 536, 71 S. W. 31; Givens v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1796, 72 S. W. 320; Carrier v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 175 Mo. 470, 74 S. W. 1002. The fact that persons on the track remain does not charge one operating a handcar with notice that they cannot or do not intend to leave the track. Wright v. Southern R. Co., 132 N. C. 327. Where a licensee stepped on the track within a hundred feet of an approaching train, willful or wanton injury is not shown, the engineer's view being obstructed by the engine. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376.

13. In Nebraska, the doctrine that the railroad is liable to a person negligently walking on its tracks without ability to save himself from injury, if those in charge of the train could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered the peril in time to avoid the injury, is not followed. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lilley [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1012. Nor is recovery permitted if the railroad employes were negligent, notwithstanding there was concurrent contributory negligence of the person injured. Id. Where plaintiff walked on the track when he might have walked between tracks or on the highway, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Gregory v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 238. The defense of contributory negligence is not precluded by the fact that a railroad did not comply with statutory regulations. Dunworth v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 307. Where the facts disclose contributory negligence as a matter of law, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict. A street car conductor went on the railroad track to see if it was clear. He saw a train approaching on one track and stepped over onto another track without looking and stood waiting for the train to pass when he was struck by a train coming from the opposite direction and which he could have seen had he looked. He was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Id. A licensee is charged with the duty of exercising ordinary care. On a wharf belonging to a railroad company and used for switching. Nichols v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 192. Where a licensee in railroad yards saw a train backing down and endeavored to pass between it and some cars standing on the track, but was caught and killed, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Id.

14. Texas: Liability exists toward a negligent pedestrian guilty of contributory negligence, unless the railroad servants after discovery of the danger use every reasonable means consistent with the safety of the trains to prevent injury. Kroeger v. Tex. & P. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 69 S. W. 809. One walking on the tracks need not prove absence of contributory negligence by the preponderance of the evidence. Id. Instruction held erroneous as in effect stating that a pedestrian walking over a portion of the roadbed with the consent of the company was guilty of contributory negligence. Id. Contributory negligence will not bar a recovery when the injured party's peril was seen by the company's servants, or might have been seen with ordinary care. Murrell v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 505. To overcome the defense of contributory negligence, it must be shown that by exercise of ordinary care the railroad company might have avoided the consequences of decedent's negligence. Dunworth v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 307.

15. Held negligent: Trespasser who had he looked behind him could have seen an approaching train for 400 yards. Carrier v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 175 Mo. 470, 74 S. W. 1002. Attempting to walk along a track without looking behind him. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Miller, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 122, 70 S. W. 25. Person on tracks to pick up coal. Chinn's Adm'x v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2350, 74 S. W. 215. Walking on track while encumbered with a heavy load obstructing his sight and hearing. Carlson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 66 Kan. 768, 71 Pac. 587. Being on a track for the purpose of soliciting trade and failing to look and listen, though familiar with the surroundings. Hill v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 98, 67 N. E. 276. Walking on track by one subject to epilepsy. Marks v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 133 N. C. 89. Walking on track with knowledge of a train approaching from rear while a companion stepped off and was not injured. Bessent v. Southern R. Co., 132 N. C. 934. A deaf man walking on a track at the time a train is due, though the track was constantly used by the of evidence,[18] sufficiency of evidence,[19] to require a charge on discovered negligence,[20] pleading[21] and instructions.[22]

Persons along or between tracks.—The railroad is not bound to anticipate the presence of a person on a path along its tracks, or to use ordinary care to discover his presence, unless it knows of the public use of the track or the facts necessarily charge it with knowledge.[23] Such use will not raise a license in the absence of express or implied consent.[24] The railroad is not bound to maintain a path in a public as a pathway. Roach v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 963. Failing to look and listen before leaving a safe position between the tracks and stepping on a track. Pharr v. Southern R. Co., 133 N. C. 610. Walking up a track on the cross-ties when train might have been seen over a mile away, though the person is on the track to attend switch lights, his employer having a contract with the railroad company for such purpose. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Jones [Miss.] 35 So. 193.

16. Plaintiff has the burden of showing that a stop might have been made after discovery of his peril. Thornton v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 854, 70 S. W. 53.

17. The fact that a person was killed by defendant's train raises no presumption of negligence, and it is not sufficient to show that defendant's intestate was seen going in the direction of the railroad track in the nighttime intoxicated and a short time before the passage of a train. Clegg v. Southern R. Co., 133 N. C. 303.

18. Held admissible: Evidence of use of track by pedestrians is admissible if alleged. Jones v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 65 S. C. 410. Speed ordinance under an allegation of violation. Id. As bearing on negligence at a point other than at crossing, failure to observe ordinance as to speed across streets. Id. Presence of other means not used to stop the train. Carver v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co., 104 Ill. App. 644.

Not admissible: Evidence that a locomotive of a kind used years previously could be stopped at a certain distance when running at a certain speed. Id.

19. Held sufficient: Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Jernigan, 198 Ill. 297, 65 N. E. 88. To show that by the exercise of due care and prudence defendant could have avoided injuring one in an epileptic fit on its track. Marks v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 133 N. C. 89. To show that deceased was seen in time to permit stopping of train. Purcell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 117 Iowa, 667, 91 N. W. 933. To demand submission of the issue of discovered peril. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Meeks [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 329. Wanton negligence may be found from allowing detached cars to run at a speed from three to fifteen miles an hour, the brakes being out of order, over a portion of a track within town limits where it was known that many persons were accustomed to pass on foot. Fixing liability towards a trespasser. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Guest, 136 Ala. 348.

Held insufficient: Non-suit demanded where there was no testimony as to the manner of killing and all inference had to be drawn from the fact that decedent was found lying by the side of a track with bruises from which it might be inferred that he had been knocked from the track by defendant's engine. Clegg v. Southern R. Co., 132 N. C. 292. To show negligence of the company where plaintiff's intestate was last seen on the track, a train some 150 yards behind him, the circumstances being such that he could have been plainly seen and the train stopped within 40 or 50 yards. Southern R. Co. v. Hall's Adm'r [Va.] 45 S. E. 867. To show that the defendant's servants discovered plaintiff's danger in time to have avoided his injury by the use of the means at their command. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Miller, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 122, 70 S. W. 25. To show wanton negligence toward a trespasser on the right of way, though he was in view for 400 yards and no signals were given. Carrier v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 175 Mo. 470, 74 S. W. 1002. To impose liability on the ground of conduct recklessly disregarding the safety of others and showing willingness to inflict injury in the case of a person on the track under an implied license at a time when persons were likely so to be during a rain with a raised umbrella, one of the windows on the engine being obstructed and no warning signal being given, but where the speed was no greater than usual and it did not appear that the person injured was seen. Manlove v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 29 Ind. App. 694, 65 N. E. 212. To show unreasonable delay in releasing plaintiff from a position under a tender. Griswold v. Boston & M. R. R., 183 Mass. 434, 67 N. E. 354.

20. Shetter v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 536, 71 S. W. 31.

21. In an allegation of wanton injury, an averment that a great many people passed on foot as was well known to defendant's agents and servants is improperly stricken. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Guest, 136 Ala. 348. An action for damages to a trespasser, the specific allegations of which negative a general allegation of negligent, careless and wanton killing, is demurrable. Seaboard A. L. R. v. Shigg, 117 Ga. 454. A denial that the engineer could have seen the perilous position of the decedent does not amount to an admission that decedent could not see the engineer or the approaching train. Pharr v. Southern R. Co., 133 N. C. 610.

22. Where a charge as to the care necessary towards persons on the track is applicable to either trespassers or licensees, a charge stating the distinction between such classes of persons need not be given. Smith v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 556. An instruction as to the duty required of plaintiff held erroneous as argumentative. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Owens [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 579. The ownership and operation of a train by defendant may be assumed in the instruction, where there is no issue raised in the evidence. Id.

23. Reichert v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 1031.

24. A provision of walks rebuts a pre-safe condition, though generally used by the public with its knowledge and acquiescence,[25] unless such use has been sufficient to establish a right by prescription.[26] As to persons on a public way located entirely on its right of way, the railroad is bound to exercise the care required toward licensees only.[27] Walking between the tracks is contributory negligence, though they are located in a public street, if there is room to walk outside them and in a place of safety.[28]

Trainmen are not bound to assume that a person not on the track will get on it when it will be dangerous to do so.[29]

For questions of pleading,[30] instructions[31] and sufficiency of evidence, see cases cited in the notes.[32]

Persons standing, sitting or lying on track.[33]—A license to use a track for sleeping or sitting purposes cannot be inferred from a license to use it as a highway.[34] As to persons so situated the sole duty of the company is to use all means in its power to keep from injuring them after they are discovered.[35] sumption of assent to the use of a space between the tracks for public travel. Wagner v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 141.

25. De La Pena v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 58.

26. On acquiescence in the use of its track by foot passengers for a long time, those using it are licensees, and the company is liable to one injured by reason of a defect in the path of which he has no notice. Matthews v. Seaboard A. L. R. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 335. Where one road makes an excavation of the tracks of two others, all three are jointly liable towards a person injured through a defect thus occasioned in the path between the two latter. Id.

29. Evidence held insufficient to impose liability on a person starting to cross a track over which a train was switching at a point other than a regular crossing. Shetter v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 536, 71 S. W. 31. May presume that a boy sitting on a tie will get off and the company is not liable for injuries if the boy stumbles and falls when it is too late to stop the train. Givens v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1796, 72 S. W. 320. There must be negligence shown to allow recovery for injury of a person lying by a railroad. Lloyd v. East La. R. Co., 109 La. 446.

30. A complaint must show that there was a duty toward plaintiff's intestate, since otherwise it will be presumed that he was a trespasser. Action for failure to keep track in repair, permitting a car to fall upon plaintiff's intestate. White v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 108 Tenn. 739, 70 S. W. 1030. Where the ultimate fact pleaded is the striking of plaintiff by a stick of wood from its train, the complaint need not be made definite as to whether the stick fell or was thrown from the train. Turney v. Southern Pac. Co. [Or.] 75 Pac. 144. Where the person injured was standing between tracks, the failure of the petition to allege the sufficiency of the space does not establish contributory negligence. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Keller [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 801.

31. Instruction that there was no evidence as to the engineer's knowledge that deceased was unable to leave a perilous position by the side of the track held properly refused. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 135 Ala. 343. Instruction as to the duty of the railroad toward a person seated on the ties and as to the effect of an attempt to jump on or off a train in motion, held not prejudicial to plaintiff, though inaptly expressed. Givens v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1796, 72 S. W. 320.

32. Held sufficient to authorize submission of issue of willful or wanton negligence as to a person by the track, apparently asleep. Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 135 Ala. 343. To show that an accident was due to intestate's negligence, he being deaf and walking beside the track, the engine having whistled loudly to scare cattle off the track, and the train running into the cattle before striking intestate, thus causing the engineer not to see intestate's danger in time to avoid striking him. Turner v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 283. To render contributory negligence of persons standing between the tracks, a question for the jury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Keller [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 801.

Held insufficient to show negligence toward one beside the track struck by a projecting timber on a train. Reichert v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 1031.

33. Lying on a railroad track is contributory negligence per se. Evidence held sufficient to show that decedent was lying on the railroad track when struck. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 413. One standing on a track with his back to stationary freight cars some 50 feet distant is contributorily negligent, though he was waiting for a train to pass on another track. Zirkle v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 67 Kan. 77, 72 Pac. 539. The question of contributory negligence in bending over a track to tie a shoe is for the jury. Over v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 535.

34. Smith v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 556.

35. Smith v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 556. An intoxicated person injured after falling on the track has the burden of showing that defendant's employes discovered his danger in time to avoid his injury. Luna v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1061.

Persons on bridges and trestles.—A custom of the public to use a bridge, of which the railroad has notice, may create a license without positive consent.[36] Though notices forbidding passage are sufficient to remove a duty to give highway signals.[37] A lookout need not be kept to discover trespassers,[38] and failure of an engineer to see them does not amount to negligence.[39] Persons in charge of a handcar are not held to the same diligence as those in charge of a locomotive.[40] An engineer must not presume that a child will leave a bridge and therefore neglect precautions to avoid injuring it.[41] The question of whether a person is a trespasser is for the jury,[42] as may be that of whether there was willfulness or wantonness.[43]

The going on a railroad bridge while not negligence per se is evidence of contributory negligence.[44] As to sufficiency of evidence[45] and instructions, see cases cited in the notes.[46]

Persons near crossings.—One on a highway crossing is not a trespasser,[47] but becomes so on leaving it and loitering on the tracks,[48] or passing along tracks to reach it.[49] Statutory signals may be relied on by one not precisely on the crossing.[50]

36. Jones v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 65 S. C. 410.

37. A bridge marked with notices to keep off and on which no plank has been laid to accommodate foot passengers is not a traveled place at which signals must be given, though persons have been accustomed to pass over it for 20 years. Ringstaff v. Lancaster & C. R. Co., 64 S. C. 546.

38. Instruction as to the duty to keep a lookout toward persons on a bridge held not to be on the weight of the evidence. McCowen v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 46.

39. Purcell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 117 Iowa, 667, 91 N. W. 933. As toward an intoxicated man asleep on a trestle over a highway, the same care is not required as if he were upon the highway, and the servants of the railroad company cannot be expected to discover his position in the nighttime so as to avoid injuring him. Dugan's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1754, 72 S. W. 291.

42. Where a large number of passengers on an excursion train, including plaintiff, had walked across a railroad bridge and returned thereon. Chicago T. T. R. Co. v. Gruss, 200 Ill. 195, 65 N. E. 693.

43. Where a brakeman on a rear car of a backing train warns passengers on a trestle, but makes no effort to stop the train. Chicago T. T. R. Co. v. Gruss, 200 Ill. 195, 65 N. E. 693. Evidence held sufficient to show a failure to use the appliances at hand to stop immediately on discovering decedent's danger on a railroad bridge. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 794.

44. It is proper to instruct the jury that decedent's failure to do what an ordinarily prudent and skillful person would have done under the circumstances should be considered. Harris v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 132 N. C. 160. The railroad is not liable to a person who jumps from a trestle, believing that he will be run down, where the train stops before the person jumps and does not go on the trestle until afterward. Weeks v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 131 S. C. 78.

45. Evidence held sufficient. Harris v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 132 N. C. 160. Evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff in an action for an injury received on a combination railroad and wagon bridge maintained by defendant company, where plaintiff drove on the approach with notice because of the position of the gate, that the bridge was open and safe for travel, and was injured by a train being drawn out of the bridge backward. Sutliff v. Pa. R. Co., 206 Pa. 267.

46. An instruction that the train was only 75 yards distant when plaintiff went on the bridge, and that it could have been seen had she been at all careful, held properly refused as not based on the evidence. Harris v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 132 N. C. 160. Where there is a finding that an injury resulted from defendant's negligence and that decedent was not contributorily negligent, the issue of the last clear chance need not be submitted. Id. Instruction held to restrict the jury to the issue of discovered peril. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 794. Error in allowing a verdict for defendant, though a trespasser was discovered before he was knocked off a bridge and no effort was made to prevent the injury, is not cured by a subsequent correct charge. 50. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Taff [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 89. Failure to give a signal for a crossing as required by statute does not impose liability for striking a person several hundred feet past the crossing while attempting to cross the railroad tracks on the company's private grounds, where there was a custom to cross. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Harris, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 400.

An allegation that plaintiff's intestate was killed at or near a private crossing should be construed that she was killed at a place on the track other than the crossing.[51]

Persons crossing tracks away from established crossings.—Where both the railroad company and the person injured are on the premises of another by invitation, the person injured is bound to exercise ordinary care in passing over the tracks.[52] At a place where the public are permitted to cross by permission, their rights are subordinate to those of the railroad company.[53] The company must acquaint its employes with the fact that a path over its tracks is customarily used.[54] A custom to use a path across the track with notice to the company may create a license without express consent.[55] The rule that precautions must be taken where persons are accustomed to cross is especially applicable where the crossing is in a populous locality within city limits.[56] One otherwise a licensee does not become a trespasser because a fight was the occasion of his coming to the place.[57] The railroad must refrain from wanton injury.[58] Away from established crossings, failure to signal is not negligence per se.[59] Contributory negligence prevents liability.[60] Instructions must conform to the pleadings and proof.[61]

Persons in switch yards.—A railroad company is entitled to the undisturbed use of its private switch yards and is not bound to take special precautions to avoid injury to any unauthorized person who goes therein for his own convenience until the presence of such person in a position of danger has been discovered.[62] Where the railroad has provided a safe way of approach to its yards, it is not liable to a licensee injured through his adoption of another means of approach.[63] A boy

55. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Ball [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 420. A custom of numerous persons to use a private passage across tracks without disapproval of the company may bind the employes in charge of trains to anticipate the presence of persons on the tracks at that place and take precautions. Bullard v. Southern R. Co., 116 Ga. 644. Complaint held sufficient in an action for death while crossing tracks at a point where persons were accustomed to cross with knowledge of the company. Id.

57. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Ball [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 420.

58. Speed of 50 miles an hour in the outskirts of a city is not of itself evidence of wantonness. Peters v. Southern R. Co., 135 Ala. 533. Evidence held insufficient to show wantonness in the absence of evidence that the engineer knew of plaintiff's presence or of the existence of a path used over the railroad tracks. Id.

59. A charge is erroneous which removes from the jury the question of whether a failure to ring a bell or blow a whistle is negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Eitel [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 205.

60. Instructions as to the duty of the company toward licensee held erroneous as ignoring contributory negligence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Eitel [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 205. The duty to look and listen while not applying in all strictness as to persons customarily engaged about the tracks is applicable when they are not engaged in work demanding their attention. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Selvers [Ind.] 67 N. E. 680. Evidence held to show contributory negligence per se where a driver was injured in attempting to cross several tracks at a place where the right to cross was permissive on the part of the railroad company, he not having stopped and looked. Garrett v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 126 Fed. 406. Liability cannot be imposed on the ground that though plaintiff was contributorily negligent his injuries could have been prevented, in a case where there was no reason for thinking plaintiff would attempt to cross in front of an approaching train and the employes acted promptly and efficiently. Id. Evidence held insufficient to show contributory negligence per se of one crossing a track who had looked but a short time before and was injured because of unlawful speed and failure to ring bell and keep lookout. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Owens [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 579.

61. Where the only negligence alleged is in failing to have lights on a train, negligence in failing to have lights or signals of danger at the place of injury should not be submitted. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Eitel [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 205. Proof tending to show the existence of a street at the place of injury should not be ignored in the instruction. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Jernigan, 198 Ill. 297, 65 N. E. 88.

62. Chinn's Adm'x v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2350, 74 S. W. 215.

63. Persons about to unload horses at crossing a freight yard after having been engaged in gathering coal along the tracks is a trespasser.[64] Negligence in allowing cars to float over a path which the public used by custom and acquiescence in railroad yards is for the jury.[65] Contributory negligence bars recovery.[66]

Persons under cars.—An implied license to cross a track is revoked by occupancy of the track by cars.[67] There is no liability toward one going under a car to escape the rain unless his danger is discovered in time to prevent the injury.[68]

Persons stealing rides.—A trespasser stealing a ride on a train assumes the risk, and the duty of the company is confined to refraining from willfully, wantonly or intentionally injuring him.[69] Children fall within this rule, apparently without regard to whether they are of sufficient discretion to be contributorily negligent.[70] Failure to remonstrate against prior trespasses does not amount to an invitation.[71] But where children have been in the habit of riding on engines, the employes of the railroad owe them a duty to prevent injury and should ascertain whether or not they are on the train.[72]

One who intrudes himself on a freight train against the will and without the consent of employes, the rules prohibiting carriage of passengers on such trains, is a trespasser. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mayfield [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 365. One who pays a brakeman to allow him to ride on a train and follows the brakeman's directions to keep away from the conductor is a trespasser, and the carrier is not liable for his injuries received in alighting. Sands v. Southern R. Co., 108 Tenn. 1, 64 S. W. 478. Recklessness and wantonness is not to be inferred from the mere use of language intended to influence a trespasser's voluntary action in getting off a moving train. Bjornquist v. Boston & A. R. Co. Co. v. Hickey [Va.] 46 S. E. 392. Liability does not exist towards a child of six who, after an engine has passed him at a crossing, attempts to climb on the attached freight cars and is killed, where his danger could not have been discovered in time to have prevented his death, though the child could not be charged with contributory negligence. Green's Adm'r v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co [Ky.] 78 S. W. 439. A boy 9 years old living near a railroad track, familiar with trains, was injured in jumping off a slowly moving train at the order of the brakeman, "Get off, or I'll break your neck." Held, this language did not show a wanton and reckless disregard for harmful consequences. Bjornquist v. Boston & A. R. Co. [Mass.] 70 N. E. 53. Liability toward a trespassing boy of weak mind injured by a fall of freight in a freight car does not arise from negligent construction of the track causing the freight to fall or from the fact that the boy's mother asked defendant's agent not to let him ride. Elkins v. S. C. & G. R. Co., 64 S. C. 553. A boy 12 years old may be guilty of contributory negligence in getting off and on a moving train. Wilson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. A railroad may stop a train and eject trespassers with the exercise of such force in a reasonable way under the circumstances as is necessary to accomplish that object.[73] It is liable for an unreasonable method adopted by an employe in the ejection of a trespasser calculated to increase his danger and the proximate cause of injury.[74] Such acts are usually held within the scope of the employe's authority.[75] Liability toward a boy who alights from a train in motion, on the instruction of employes, exists where he has been on the train at their invitation, unless an ordinarily prudent person of his age would not have incurred the risk.[76] The burden is on the trespasser to show wanton and reckless misconduct.[77] For cases as to admissibility[78] and sufficiency of evidence, see the footnotes.[79]

Held insufficient to show possibility of stopping train, it being confined to testimony that the speed was from 12 to 15 miles on an up grade.[80]

Persons using handcars or railroad tricycles are trespassers, unless it is shown that the use is authorized.[81] Scheduled time of trains must be noted.[82]

81. One who borrows a handcar for use on the road from an employe without either actual or apparent authority to lend it is a trespasser and not a licensee. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wade [Fla.] 35 So. 863. In an action for the killing of intestate while riding a railroad tricycle, evidence of permission of defendant's railroad superintendent to intestate to use the tricycle is inadmissible, where the authority of the superintendent to permit such use or license to so use the track is not pleaded. Dilas' Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1347, 71 S. W. 492.

82. It is contributory negligence to ride in a fog before daybreak on a railroad tricycle, preventing recovery for a collision with a passenger on schedule. Dilas' Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1347, 71 S. W. 492.

the absence of statute or agreement.[83] Each will be held to have knowledge of the time trains on the other are due.[84]

Though a road is negligent in occupying a crossing at the time the trains of another are due, the negligence of the second is the proximate cause of the injury, where its servants saw or might have seen the danger by the exercise of ordinary care in time to avoid the accident.[85]

A rule requiring the placing of torpedoes and the sending back of a flagman when a train is stopped at an unusual place is not applicable to a train in the yards.[86] For specific instances of negligence,[87] evidence[88] and instructions, see the footnotes.[89]

(§ 7) D. Accidents at crossings. 1. Care required on part of company. General rules.—Travelers on a highway and the railroads crossing it are bound to the same degree of care,[90] and if in the exercise of due care otherwise, a railroad commits no wrong by running its trains across a highway in front of teams.[91] The railroad's negligence must be the proximate cause of the accident to impose liability.[92] Hence, where a person is rendered insane by a crossing accident, his subsequent willful and voluntary act of suicide is a new cause, he knowing the purpose and physical effect of his act.[93]

An engineer is bound to exercise ordinary care to ascertain if the track is about to be crossed by a person lawfully entitled to cross the same, and if he could have discovered the proximity of the person, should be charged with knowledge.[94]

94. McGrew v. St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 816. Where a man is seen on a crossing 75 ft. distant.

The fact that crossing travelers will use due care to ascertain the approach of the train may be assumed,[95] but where danger of a person at a crossing is discovered, due care must be exercised.[96] Special precautions must be taken toward particularly dangerous crossings.[97] The fact that a train is being run out of its schedule time is not of itself negligence.[98]

Towards whom care must be exercised.—The fact that one is walking diagonally over a crossing does not make him a trespasser,[99] and a trespasser passing along the right of way may cease to be a trespasser while using a highway crossing the right of way as an exit from the grounds.[1]

Duty to signal.—Failure to give statutory signals for a crossing is negligence,[2] imposing a liability in the absence of gross contributory negligence.[3] It is not excused, though an accident could not be averted by the stopping of the train[4] or though there is no collision.[5] Usual and customary signals of approach to street crossings must be given.[6]

In the absence of statutes, failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle on approaching a public crossing is at least evidence of negligence,[7] and statutory warnings do not dispense with all others if special circumstances arise.[8] A handcar need not signal.[9]

A failure to slacken the speed of a train or to give signals at the approach to private crossings is not negligence.[10] But one crossing may rely on the proper signals being given for an adjacent public crossing.[11]

The question of whether failure to give signals is a proximate cause of injury is for the jury,[12] as where there is evidence that the approach of the train was known.[13]

The charge should not impose a stricter duty as to signals than fixed by statute.[14]

Cases in which the evidence of failure to signal is considered are grouped in the notes.[15]

Speed.—With regard to the rate of speed, the safety of persons traveling on the highway across the tracks in the exercise of ordinary care must be considered, though high speed is not negligence per se,[16] unless in violation of ordinance or statute,[17] or accompanied by failure to signal,[18] fog,[19] or peculiar conditions rendering crossings dangerous to travelers.[20] An ordinance prohibiting any person from running an engine or car at greater than certain speed is binding on the railroads as well as the persons operating the trains.[21] After violation of a speed ordinance, the relation of the excessive speed to the injury and the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence must not be ignored.[22]

Gates.—Where a railroad has placed gates across a highway and stationed a watchman there to protect travelers, it may run its trains at high speed, though the point be within municipal limits or in a populous district.[23] There is negligence in failing to lower gates as required by ordinance, though the gateman sees no one approaching the tracks.[24] Statutes sometimes require gates at dangerous crossings.[25]

Flagmen.—Failure to place a flagman at a crossing is not negligence per se, though it may be considered.[26] A statute requiring consent to construction of grade crossings removes the necessity of stationing a flagman at an unauthorized crossing, though imposed as to other crossings.[27] Where the duty of protecting a crossing by a flagman is assumed, it must be performed with reasonable care without regard to the existence of the duty.[28] A flagman at a point where the company is not compelled to maintain one need not warn persons crossing outside the limits of the street.[29]

Headlights.—Failure to have a headlight burning at the time of a collision is not negligence where it would have been of no avail on account of fog.[30] and in plain view, the switchman, though seeing an approaching traveler, may assume that he will guard against the danger and need not suspend operations until he crosses.[32] It is not wantonness and reckless disregard of life to move a switch train toward a crossing at the rate of four miles an hour.[33] Warning must be given before trains are backed[34] or the track seen to be clear.[35] As a general rule, the making of a flying switch is negligence,[36] especially where in violation of ordinance.[37]

(§ 7D) 2. Contributory negligence. General rules.—One intending to cross at a highway crossing must make reasonable use of his senses.[38] The care required of him is proportionate to the dangers of the crossing.[39] The same care is required of bicycle riders as of pedestrians.[40] The duty is not removed by a statutory provision as to the burden of proof of contributory negligence.[41] The traveler cannot be held responsible for the failure of what he does to accomplish its purpose.[42] His negligence must be contributory.[43] The doctrine of assumed risk does not

Where plaintiff has been contributorily negligent, he cannot recover, though the railroad has also been negligent,[46] unless the injury is willful or wanton,[47] though certain states do not follow this rule, unless the negligence of the company is subsequent in order of causation,[48] though the company was willfully and wantonly negligent in running a train at an excessive speed over the crossing.[49] As to what is sufficient to show wanton injury, see the footnotes.[50]

Who may be charged.—Contributory negligence is not excused by the fact that the person is in the relation of a passenger to the railroad company.[51] Plaintiff need not have control over the vehicle in which he is riding,[52] but his precautions in such case need not be so great.[53] The question of implied negligence as between a driver and passengers of a vehicle is immaterial where the railroad is free from negligence.[54] It has been said that there is no question for the jury as to the contributory negligence of a minor when his safety could be secured by means plain to the immature judgment.[55] As to capacity of children of various ages, see cases cited in the notes.[56]

Right to rely on crossing signals, stops, gates, flagmen, etc.—An individual approaching a crossing cannot rely exclusively on the railroad company doing its duty as to giving signals.[75] One using a private crossing in the vicinity of a public look until his horse was on the track, but immediately qualifies it by saying that he had looked before, but did not see the train until he got on the crossing. Reis v. Long Island R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 881.

64. Raymond v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 182 Mass. 337, 65 N. E. 399. Where contributory negligence is pleaded, the defendant is entitled to an instruction that deceased was bound to use such precaution to learn of the approach of trains before attempting to cross the track as a man of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances, the facts being that when deceased turned to cross the track he was in a position to see the approaching engine. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Huber [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 547.

65. Blumenthal v. Boston & M. R. R., 97 Me. 255. Where the evidence is that if plaintiff had looked intelligently he would have seen the train, though he testifies that he looked but did not see. Swart v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 402. The person injured could have seen but did not see until his horses were on the track. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. McMahon, 97 Md. 483. Whistle was sounded, there was an unobstructed view of the track and the train was within a hundred yards from the crossing when the horse went on the track. Martin's Adm'r v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 695. The track was open for a long distance and the evidence that plaintiff looked out for trains was either untrue or showed that the observations were perfunctory or careless. Beeg v. N. Y., S. & W. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 169. Plain from the evidence that if plaintiff had looked he could have seen the approaching danger while still in a place of safety. Diele v. Erie R. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 156.

67. Where the driver cannot see down the track, he should stop, look and listen, and if necessary get out of his wagon and lead his horses. Kinter v. Pa. R. Co., 204 Pa. 497. In determining the question of whether a person was negligent in not alighting and going forward, the fact that he was not driving may be considered. Kan. City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Weeks, 135 Ala. 614.

68. The jury should not be instructed that in case of a fog so dense as to prevent a train from being seen or heard in time to avoid injury from the driver's seat, he must get off and go in advance of the team or otherwise there can be no recovery. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Turner [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 484.

69. Where plaintiff stopped within five feet of the tracks to ascertain whether a train was approaching and a storm prevented his seeing more than 50 or 100 feet, and made his progress more difficult, the question of whether he exercised proper care under the circumstances is for the jury. Kuntz v. N. Y., C. & St. L. R. Co., 206 Pa. 162.

70. Facts held to prevent recovery where plaintiff drove onto the track at full speed in an enclosed buggy. Keesey v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 104 Ill. App. 619.

71. Where the plaintiff stopped, looked and listened, though unable to see on account of obstructions, but heard nothing, the question of his contributory negligence may be for the jury if there is additional evidence that no signals were given for the crossing. Cowen v. Grabow [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 258.

Question of whether plaintiff was negligent in failing to wait until smoke cleared held for the jury. Dalton v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 184 Mass. 344, 68 N. E. 830.

73. Sulder v. Pa. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 124.

74. A person standing on the track of a passenger train with knowledge that it is due, awaiting a freight train to pass on another track, is guilty of contributory negligence where his sight is obscured by smoke from the freight train and his hearing prevented by its noise. Meinrenken v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 132. Evidence held to support a finding that decedent looked and listened before going on a crossing and had knowledge of a freight train approaching on the first track which he crossed, and that he was not negligent in failing to take precautions against an engine running backward on a second track in the same direction as the freight and obscured by it. Brown v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 83 N. Y. Supp. 1028.

crossing may rely on the giving of proper signals by defendant at the public crossing.[76]

Where a flagman has been stationed at a public crossing, the public have the right to rely on him to a reasonable extent to give proper notice and warning of danger,[77] and so instructions as to the duty to stop, look and listen should not ignore an implied assurance of safety from open gates.[78] Where, with the knowledge of one attempting to cross, gates are usually kept down at night without regard to passing trains, contributory negligence cannot be attributed to a person injured from the mere fact that the gates are down.[79]

A custom to sidetrack a train at a station does not impose liability toward one struck at a crossing beyond the station, where there has been a failure to sidetrack, though the custom was known to the person injured.[80]

Where a duty is imposed by statute that a street car be stopped a certain distance from a crossing, a street car conductor may assume that trains will be stopped at the same distance unless circumstances indicate the contrary.[81]

Duties as to standing, switching and backing trains.[82]—Travelers may assume that city ordinances will be obeyed.[83] Cutting a train in two at a crossing on a sidetrack does not authorize a dispensing with ordinary precautions,[84] but where an injury results from detached freight cars being shoved on a crossing by an engine suddenly backing against them, a mere failure to look toward the engine before crossing the track cannot be held negligence per se.[85] It is not necessarily contributory negligence to attempt to pass between box cars of a train standing over a crossing.[86] an allegation of failure to give warning signals at a crossing. Cent. of Ga. R. Co. v. Freeman, 134 Ala. 354. Where the headlight was in plain view and less than two hundred feet distant, one going on the track is contributorily negligent, though the train did not give the customary signals. McAuliffe v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 607. Failure to look and listen is not excused by the failure of defendant to sidetrack a train according to its custom or a failure to sound signals. Rich v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 10, 66 N. E. 1028. Where cattle drivers rely on their sense of hearing and knowledge of the train's schedule, instead of looking, their contributory negligence must be submitted. Brunick v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 433.

76. Question of negligence held for jury. Defrieze v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 94 N. W. 505.

77. Rule adhered to under the facts of a particular case but not announced generally. Mitchell v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 110 La. 630. Boy of 12 held not contributorily negligent in attempting to cross the track after an engine had passed over it without looking to see approaching detached cars, the engine being engaged in making a flying switch and a flagman being stationed at the crossing. Id.

78. Evidence held to show absence of contributory negligence in failing to stop before crossing tracks at a point where safety gates were maintained and which were not closed. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stumpf, 97 Md. 78. Where a railroad has been negligent in leaving its gates open and in backing a train over the crossing without signals, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence must be left to the jury. Jenkins v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [Md.] 56 Atl. 966. The failure to look may be for the jury where plaintiff was watching the gateman who had signaled him to go on. Gray v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 1. One who stops on the track without looking is contributorily negligent, though the gate was not lowered and the bell was not rung. Boutell v. Mich. Cent. R. Co. 86. A complaint alleging injury in such

Intoxication actually contributing to an injury at a crossing prevents recovery.[87]

Racing with train in an attempt to cross is an indication of negligence[88] or an attempt to cross in disobedience to a warning of the flagman.[89]

Acts after realization of danger.—Where plaintiff has not been negligent in placing himself in danger, he is not negligent in the exercise of bad judgment in the means taken to extricate himself,[90] but where his perilous situation is the result of his own negligence, he cannot recover, though after discovering it he exercises ordinary care under that set of circumstances.[91]

(§ 7D) 3. Procedure. Pleading.[92]—Under general allegations of negligence, negligence in any form may be proved.[93] In some states the complaint need not negative contributory negligence,[94] but though it is provided by statute that plaintiff shall not allege or prove freedom from contributory negligence, the complaint must not disclose such negligence.[95] Where a plaintiff cannot be required to give the number of the train causing the injury, or the names of the employes, he may, in the discretion of the court, be required to furnish a bill of particulars as to the Complaint construed to state a cause of action at common law and not for failure to give statutory signals at a crossing. Cooper v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 65 S. C. 214. A petition alleging negligence in failure to give a statutory signal and also in failure to signal in reasonable time to give the necessary warning of a train's approach is sufficient to authorize a recovery on the common-law duty to signal approach of trains at a reasonable distance Kinyon v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 349, 92 N. W. 40. An averment that a public crossing was near a private one is not sufficient to permit the inference that signals given on approach to the public crossing could have been heard at the private crossing. time and place of the accident and whether inflicted by a freight or passenger train.[96] A replication to the effect that after the peril of plaintiff's intestate was discovered, the proper efforts to stop the train were not used, is not a departure as imputing that the injury was inflicted wantonly or intentionally.[97]

Burden of proof.—A rule as to the burden of proof of contributory negligence, applicable to all jurisdictions, cannot be laid down.[98] Statutes making contributory negligence matter of defense are applicable to actions commenced after their passage on causes accruing before.[99] Facts requiring a signal in addition to the statutory one must be established by plaintiff.[1]

Admissibility of evidence is controlled by the customary rules as to competency, materiality, etc. In the footnotes some peculiar decisions are noted,[2] as well as a few cases bearing on opinion evidence.[3] If it is admitted that decedent stopped

As contrary to the statute as to whistling for crossings and removing from the jury the question of whether a repetition of the signal would have alarmed plaintiff. Profit v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 91 Mo. App. 369. Where there was evidence that plaintiff had previously looked along the track, an instruction giving undue prominence to a failure to look during the actual crossing. Caraway v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 71 S. W. 769.

9. Where a flagman at a street crossing was injured, an instruction which may be construed that it was plaintiff's duty to disregard trains under his control at the time of the accident in order to care for his own safety is properly refused where the jury is properly instructed as to the measure of care required of plaintiff. Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 43. Instruction as to the duty to maintain gates at a grade crossing under an ordinance held not erroneous as omitting the theory of contributory negligence or the causal connection between the violation of the ordinance and the accident. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stumpf, 97 Md. 78. Use of both "signals" and "warnings" in an instruction as to the care required does not impose too great a degree of care or mislead the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Price's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1033, 76 S. W. 836.

Contributory negligence: Instruction held not erroneous as confining question of plaintiff's care to the precise moment of the accident. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Corson, 198 Ill. 98, 64 N. E. 739. Instruction approved. Riley v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 20.

Directing verdict.[12]—If the evidence establishes plaintiff's contributory negligence as a matter of law, such issue need not be submitted to the jury.[13] In the Federal court, a verdict will not be directed where there is evidence from which it may be found that defendant in a crossing accident was at fault in case there is a statute providing that contributory negligence shall go in mitigation of damages and not in bar of recovery.[14]

Special findings.[15]—Interrogations as to evidentiary and inconclusive facts may be refused.[16] A special finding that plaintiff was not guilty of negligence is no stronger than a general verdict in favor of plaintiff.[17] In general, the special findings control.[18]

(§ 7) E. Injuries to persons on highway or private premises near tracks.—Where a railroad track is laid upon a street, the road must give full warning of the approach of trains to teams progressing in a parallel direction, and one using the track in front of an approaching train while bound to give way and not obstruct its progress is entitled to reasonable warning and reasonable time to get out of the way, and the employes are bound to keep the train under proper control and have no right to run into plaintiff either on the track or while in the act of leaving it.[19]

Accidents from derailed trains.—Where a train leaves a track at a point where the danger of its doing so and the presence of an injury to persons in nearby premises should be anticipated, the company is liable for an injury occasioned.[20] The fact that a car leaves a right of way evidences negligence without proof of antecedent negligence.[21] See footnotes for admissibility of evidence.[22]

Injuries from frightened horses.—The railroad is not liable for injuries resulting from frightening of horses by the ordinary operation of a train[23] or handcars,[24] though it may be liable for the result of unnecessary noises[25] or the erection of startling objects,[26] or the negligence of flagmen and gatemen.[27] Though the road has never been legally established as a public road, reasonable care must be taken to avoid fright from freight cars in unusual positions,[28] and though the traveler might have reached his destination by traveling over a legally established public road.[29] The fact that cars are so left as to obstruct the view of a crossing does not impose liability, but fixes a greater degree of care on both the railroad and the crossers.[30] Where one driving parallel with a track without intention to cross it is injured through his horses being frightened, liability is not imposed by the fact that the company did not make statutory crossing signals,[31] nor can negligence be alleged for failure to give signals at the place of accident.[32] The negligence of the road must be shown to be the proximate cause of injury.[33]

Where the road crosses a highway on a trestle, there is no common-law duty to signal unless danger is known or reasonably to be apprehended,[34] and the conduct of an engineer in sounding a whistle while a horse is under a bridge may be grossly culpable.[35]

The fact that a horse runs away is not sufficient to show contributory negligence of the driver,[36] or the fact that the best means of escape from imminent danger is not adopted.[37] It is not negligent to hold horses by the bridles[38] or to attempt so to seize them after they are frightened.[39]

Where plaintiff was injured in trying to hold his frightened team, it cannot be said his failure to have tied the team before beginning the work of loading his wagon is contributory negligence per se,[40] and a city ordinance against the leaving of a team in a street without its being securely fastened or guarded does not prevent the leaving of a team at a stand while the driver is working around the wagon in unloading it.[41] The railroad is not responsible for acts done by plaintiff in an attempt to save his property.[42]

falling into a ditch, does not show willful wantonness or lack of reasonable care.[51] The status of a dog as falling within this rule depends on the respect with which he is regarded in the various states.[52]

A fence law requiring owners to restrain stock does not relieve the road from ordinary care and diligence in looking out for and anticipating the presence of stock on its right of way.[53]

How far liability extends.—The bailee of an animal may bring an action for its injury.[54]

Where one whose land adjoins the right of way permits the use of such land by a contiguous owner, there being no fence between the parcels, the contiguous owner may enforce the railroad's duty to maintain a lawful fence.[55]

Under the generality of statutes, liability exists, though stock do not come on the right of way over the land of the owner.[56] Where it is provided that the railroad may compensate the owner for the expense of necessary fencing, such defense may be urged only against the compensated landowner and the railroad is not relieved from the duty of fencing as to others. Such statutes are a valid exercise of the police power, and the railroad cannot defend on the ground that the stock was trespassing.[57]

Where a statutory action is given as to animals injured on a line passing through or along the property of the owner, a right vests in the lessee.[58]

Though the statute requires that the animals shall have been frightened or run into the place of injury by a passing locomotive or a train of cars, recovery may be had if an animal died from injuries received, either by collision with the cars or by being scared into a trestle.[59]

track and not that where it is killed that fixes the liability of the road.[61] Where it enters at a place where the statute does not impose a duty to fence or maintain cattle guards, damages cannot be recovered.[62]

Duty to maintain fences.—Failure to fence as required by statute creates a liability for cattle injured, though the statute does not impose such liability,[63] and a statute imposing liability for failure to erect a fence includes a failure to maintain it through neglect of duty.[64] Laws requiring stock to be restrained from running at large do not alter such obligations.[65] A notice required in order to impose a penalty for default in the erection of a fence is not necessary to fix the liability in case of injury to cattle.[66] Where the company proceeds to construct a fence without statutory notice, such notice is regarded as waived and liability exists for allowing the fence to get out of repair.[67] Where by construction of two fences the road forms a lane along its right of way, the one nearer the track is to be regarded as a railroad fence, the end of the lane having been left open to a highway.[68]

The sufficiency of a fence is a question of fact unless otherwise provided by statute.[69] To relieve the road from liability, it is not sufficient that the landowner should voluntarily erect a fence unless it is shown to have been sufficient and in a fair state of repair.[70]

The company is entitled to reasonable time to discover that fences are out of repair and a reasonable time after discovery to make repairs.[71]

Where an animal is killed where the company is not required by law to fence, there must be proof of negligence in addition to that of the killing.[72] Failure to fence within an unincorporated town where the fencing would seriously discommode

the public and greatly interfere with the operation of the road is not negligence,[73] or within switch limits or station grounds.[74]

Gates.[75]—The company cannot be excused for an entire failure to provide fastenings for gates that lead from a public highway over a farm crossing, though the owner may not require strict compliance with the statute.[76]

Cattle guards.[77]—The question of whether absence or defect of guards is a proximate cause of injury is for the jury. By reason of affording an additional inducement for the colts killed to follow horses which had passed, a defective guard is a question for the jury,[78] as is the question of the feasibility of placing guards at railroad crossings without endangering the lives and safety of the employes.[79] Permitting a cattle guard to be filled with snow and ice so that stock can readily pass over it is a failure to maintain a proper and sufficient guard within the meaning of a statute.[80] Where cattle guards are allowed to remain out of repair for over two months, there is negligence as a matter of law.[81] Recovery cannot be had by reason of failure to maintain a guard where cattle pass over a part which was not defective.[82]

Contributory negligence of owner.—The negligence of the owner in turning cattle loose when he knows that fences are defective is a defense,[83] or in leaving a gate open,[84] it is immaterial that the gate was not shut for the reason that the adjacent fence was out of repair,[85] but where a horse escaped from a field inclosed by a safe and sufficient fence and got on the right of way through an open gate, the owner was held not contributorily negligent in having failed to close the gate

75. Where there is evidence that a gate has been opened for 10 or 15 days prior to the injury to stock and that on account of the accumulation of snow it could not be closed, such evidence warrants an instruction as to the duty of defendant in case the gate had been open for a sufficient length of time to enable defendant with the exercise of ordinary care to have discovered such fact. Bumpas v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 115. The question of whether a section foreman is negligent in failing to close a gate in a right of way fence when he sees it open and people working in the adjoining field who to his knowledge had been accustomed to leave the gate open on their departure is for the jury. 79. The opinion of the railroad company is not controlling. Gilpin v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 118. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that guards could have been erected without endangering the lives of employes in performing their necessary duties. Id.

83. Perrault v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 117 Wis. 520, 94 N. W. 348. A plaintiff who turns his cattle out in defiance of a law prohibiting them being at large into a place of known danger with knowledge of their habit of going on to the track is contributorily negligent. Wright v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. [N. D.] 96 N. W. 324.

when he took his horse to the field from which it escaped, the gate having been closed several times during the interval.[86] So negligence is a question for the jury, where one in charge of a horse turns it loose with knowledge of the approach of a train and that the horse would probably cross the track,[87] or where a horse is allowed to stand unhitched within a few feet of a track, and with no way of escape except along or across it.[88]

Pleading.[89]—A general averment of negligence in running a train covers negligence for failure to keep a proper lookout for live stock.[90]

Burden of proof.—Plaintiff has the burden of proof throughout where the accident occurred, where a right of way was unfenced,[91] but it is also held that the railroad has the burden of showing due care.[92] By statute, the establishment of the ownership of cattle, their value and the fact that they were killed by defendant's train, may make a prima facie case.[93] A prima facie case of negligence cannot be made out without showing that the animal was injured by the running of defendant's trains,[94] but a verdict for plaintiff cannot be supported merely by the presumption arising from the killing of stock if it is rebutted by uncontradicted evidence.[95]

The burden of proof is on the company that in getting on its right of way stock came through a gate in a fence separating its right of way from an adjoining field.[96]

The fact that an adjoining owner maintains a fence does not raise an inference that the landowner has agreed to erect the right of way fence or keep it in repair.[97]

A statutory provision that proof of an injury inflicted by the running of a locomotive or cars shall be prima facie evidence of want of reasonable skill and care does not apply to a case in which a horse becomes frightened and runs parallel with the track until it jumps into a ditch breaking its neck [Ann. Code, § 1801]. Lowe v. Ala. & V. R. Co., 81 Miss. 9. Evidence of killing and that the action is commenced within the time prescribed by statute renders the question for the jury, though defendant introduces evidence tending to show that it was not negligent [Code 1883, § 2326]. Baker v. Roanoke & T. R. R. Co., 133 N. C. 31. An action of the trial court in overruling a motion for new trial on the general ground will not be reversed, where it is admitted that live stock was killed by defendant's train, the presumption being against defendant. 97. Craig v. Wabash R. Co., 121 Iowa, 471, 96 N. W. 965.

Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.—Preliminary to evidence as to condition of a fence or cattle guard after the accident, there must be evidence that there has been no change in conditions.[98] General holdings as to the admissibility[99] and sufficiency of evidence are collected in the notes.[1]

Instructions should conform to the evidence[2] and issues,[3] and should not invade the province of the jury.[4] An instruction omitting reference to the place where the horses got on the track is erroneous.[5]

Special findings.—Where, under the evidence, a horse was struck at one of two places, a special finding that he was not struck at one place is a finding that he was struck at the other.[6]

Double damages and attorney's fees.[7]—Where a notice and affidavit of a stock loss is served for the purpose of recovering double damages, they are to be construed together, and the notice cannot be ignored on account of a slight inaccuracy in the designation of the company[8] or immaterial defects in the jurat.[9] An ad-

In an action for killing a horse, evidence that tracks were found on a right of way and indicated the walking, running, or jumping motion of the horse is admissible. Craig v. Wabash R. Co., 121 Iowa, 471, 96 N. W. 965. Where it was important as to the distance of the horse when struck from a cattle guard, a witness may testify that plaintiff pointed out certain depressions scooped out in the track from which he measured. Evidence held insufficient to warrant submission to the jury of the question of whether an animal was injured by reason of the obstacle presented by fences to her escape. Colo. & S. R. Co. v. Beeson [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 345.

2. An issue of the negligent frightening of a horse causing him to run on a railroad bridge should not be submitted in the absence of evidence. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Kennedy [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 943.

3. Where negligence in failing to give the statutory signals at a crossing is alleged to have been the cause of frightening a horse, an instruction should not be so worded as to intimate that the horse was frightened by the failure to give signals, the question being whether the failure to signal led plaintiff into a more dangerous position that she would otherwise have occupied. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Boback [Ark.] 75 S. W. 473. Charge held not objectionable as allowing recovery for mere failure to maintain a fence in view of evidence and statements of the court rendering it necessary that the jury knew that the horse must have reached the track because of such failure. Morrison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 117 Iowa, 587, 91 N. W. 793.

4. Instruction held not to state that defendant had not done its full duty in providing a cattle guard approved by the commissioner of railroads, unless the guard was in fact sufficient to prevent cattle passing on the track. Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 760. Instruction in an action for killing cattle held not misleading as withdrawing from the jury evidence of what the engineer actually saw or evidence bearing on the collision. Paul v. mission of the value of stock killed is sufficient to fix the value for the purpose of determining double damages.[10]

Attorney's fees in action for stock killed are recoverable only by statute.[11]

(§ 7) G. Fires.[12]—Operators of private logging roads are held to the same liability for fire as public railroad companies,[13] and a railroad company is liable for the defective equipment of a logging company's engine allowed on the railroad's tracks.[14]

Statutes imposing liability for fire communicated from a right of way are constitutional,[15] and covers fires originating in depot buildings.[16] A speed ordinance is not designed for protection against fires.[17] The words "right of way" in such statutes do not refer to the title of the company.[18] A railroad is not liable for a fire communicated from land owned by it but not used for railroad purposes, which is being used by a city as public dumping grounds.[19]

Where the railroad is not negligent, it is not liable,[20] otherwise, however, under the Missouri statute.[21] Its negligence must be the proximate cause.[22] Failure to use coal least apt to throw out sparks is not in itself negligence.[23] A train crew is not negligent in failing to leave its engine to extinguish a grass fire set by the locomotive.[24]

Duty as to equipment and operation of engines.—Liability exists for operation of a defective engine or negligent operation of a properly equipped engine.[25] The care demanded in seeking appliances to prevent escape of fire and in their maintenance varies slightly in the various states. The decisions will be found in the footnotes.[26] The court will take judicial notice that no engine can be so constructed

26. Alabama: Liability does not exist where the engine is furnished with a spark arrester and other appliances of approved character to prevent the throwing of sparks that some sparks will not escape.[27] A mere failure to equip an engine with a spark arrester does not impose liability unless the engine is shown to have set a fire.[28]

Contractual exemptions from liability.—A condition in a contract under which a railroad builds a sidetrack that the shipper will indemnify the road from liability for loss by fire, though caused by the road's negligence, is not against public policy.[29] The construction of such a contract is for the court, and the jury cannot be left to determine whether a loss comes within it.[30] Such a contract exempts the company from liability for fire communicated by sparks from an engine entering on other tracks for the purpose of using the sidetracks in the business of the adjoining owner.[31] One not in privity with the lessee of railroad property and without knowledge of stipulations against liability for fire is not bound,[32] and the fact that by contract the road is exempt from liability for fire as to buildings erected on a leased portion of its right of way does not exempt it from liability when such buildings communicate fire to other premises.[33]

Contributory negligence.—A property owner may assume that a railroad company will not be guilty of negligence and may use his property in the ordinary and usual way without contributory negligence.[34] He is not required to keep it in such condition as to guard against negligence of the railroad in firing it,[35] or bound to use unusual care.[36] The placing of buildings on the right of way is not contribu-

Texas: The duty of the company is to seek the best appliances to prevent the escape of fire and to use ordinary care to secure such appliances and keep the same in proper repair. It is not an absolute duty to have engines equipped with the most approved appliances. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Goodnight [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 583. "Best" approved appliances not required. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 607. "Latest and best" not required. Id. An instruction requiring the company to take all reasonable care and caution to keep the fire apparatus in good repair imposes a too great burden on the company. Id.

Mann v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 721. 34. May use his property in a manner or maintain it in the condition that he would had there been no railroad in the vicinity. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tate, 104 Ill. App. 615.

35. Instruction held erroneous as imposing such duty. Ind. Clay Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 258, 67 N. E. 704. A mere failure to comply with an ordinance as to the sweeping of a sidewalk and allowing inflammable matter to accumulate thereon is not in itself contributory negligence in the absence of knowledge of defendant's negligence in permitting its engines to emit sparks. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327.

36. Held error to refuse an instruction that he was not bound to provide waterworks for the extinguishment of fire. Ind. Clay Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 258, 67 N. E. 704.

tory negligence,[37] or the storing of inflammable property thereon or in the vicinity where usual and with customary precautions.[38] The owner is bound to exercise reasonable diligence to extinguish the fire or protect his property after the fire is started and cannot recover for damages he would otherwise have escaped,[39] but one seeing indications of a fire on right of way is not bound to leave his own employment without regard to how engrossing or important it may be at the time, to extinguish the fire at the risk of being barred from recovery in case such fire spreads to and destroys his own property.[40]

Pleading.[41]—The facts constituting negligence need not be stated in detail.[42] A complaint for property destroyed on defendant's platform need not allege that it was there with defendant's consent or otherwise account for its presence there.[43] It is sufficient to allege that the fire originated in consequence of the act of defendant instead of in consequence of the act of any of the defendant's authorized agents or employes.[44] The complaint need not follow the exact language of the statute.[45] It is not necessary to aver that the company negligently permitted the fire to escape from each successive tract of land after it left the right of way until it reached the land of the party complaining.[46]

An amendment stating that a fire was caused by a negligent failure to provide spark arresters does not state a new cause of action when the original complaint alleged that the fire was caused by reason of the defective construction of defendant's engines.[47]

Burden of proof and presumptions.—The burden is on plaintiff to establish the fact that the fire originated from defendant's negligence.[48] Under the statutes in 47. Simpson v. Enfield Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 95.

48. Creighton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 527.

most states the communication of fire is prima facie evidence of negligence.[49] Some states make the setting of the fire evidence and not merely a presumption of negligence, and as such it must be met and overcome.[50] But in Texas, a showing that a fire was communicated by the sparks from a locomotive does not make out a prima facie case of negligence, shifting the whole burden of proof to defendant.[51]

In New York, plaintiff must establish not only the setting of the fire but negligence in equipment causing the sparks to be emitted.[52]

After establishment of a prima facie case, the burden is on the defendant to show proper equipment and management.[53] Proof of proper equipment is not sufficient.[54]

Where the prima facie case is rebutted, plaintiff must prove by the preponderance of the evidence that defendant has been guilty of negligence.[55]

It is presumed that an engine being operated over the tracks of a railroad company belongs to and is being operated by the company.[56] Evidence that sparks and cinders escaped in unusual quantities may warrant the assumption that an arrester was out of order or improperly adjusted.[57] It is a legitimate conclusion that a heavily loaded freight train laboring up a grade will throw out sparks.[58]

Admissibility of evidence.—That fire was the result of negligent operation may be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence or both.[59] Where there is no direct proof of the starting of the fire, it may be shown that the locomotive started other fires at or about that time,[60] or emitted sparks,[61] or similar conduct of other

49. An instruction that it must appear from a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was guilty of negligence in permitting sparks to escape is in contravention of such statutes. Franey v. Ill. 55. Proof that the only two engines which could be responsible for the fire were equipped with the most highly approved spark arresters and operated in a skillful manner overcomes the prima facie case. Smith v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 22. The prima facie case is rebutted by proof of equipment with the most approved spark arrester in general use that the arrester was in good repair and the engine was being handled with ordinary care. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 607. It is a question for the jury where the prima facie case arising from a fire is overthrown by evidence that the engine was equipped with the latest appliances in good repair which were carefully managed. Evidence that witnesses saw the engine charged to have set the fire throwing sparks and igniting grass in the neighborhood and on the same day. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Scottish Union N. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1088. Witnesses may testify that at or about the time of the fire complained of, engines where the engine charged with the fire is not identified[62] or in rebuttal,[63] or where all the engines are shown to have been in substantially the same condition.[64] Opinion evidence is admissible as to efficacy of precautions.[65]

Under an allegation that fire was communicated without statement of the manner, evidence may be admitted to show that the heating apparatus in the station was defective.[66] Evidence that the right of way was covered with brush and rubbish is not admissible where negligence in such respect is not alleged.[67] It may be shown that some of defendant's own land had been burned over.[68] For miscellaneous decisions as to admissibility, see the footnotes.[69]

Sufficiency of evidence.—Where the evidence as to the cause of a fire is entirely circumstantial, expert evidence tending to show that cinders emitted by a locomotive would reach the property burned while so hot as to ignite it must be introduced.[70] The fact that a fire starts soon after the passing of an engine may be sufficient to show that it was caused by the railroad without showing the emission of live cinders,[71] but almost similar evidence has been held insufficient.[72] Circum-and at about the time of the passing of the locomotive charged with setting the fire, other fires were observed at points not far removed from the place. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287.

W. 29.

63. Evidence as to other fires caused by sparks from the engine in controversy and recently after the fire complained of in connection with evidence that other engines passed and repassed the same place without setting out fires is relevant and competent in rebuttal of evidence as to the condition of the spark arrester and other parts of the engine after the fire. Carolina Midland R. Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 283.

Evidence admissible for the purpose of a claim of damage before the action was instituted is not objectionable for the reason that in the absence of sufficient evidence to show that defendant's engine started the fire, it might be taken as an admission that it started the fire. stantial evidence will not overcome direct,[73] and where the inferences for and against the theory that a fire was set by an engine are equally balanced, plaintiff cannot recover.[74] The fact that a slight wind was blowing away from the property destroyed does not prove that the sparks were not the cause of the fire.[75] Evidence that there was no train ordered is not conclusive that no train went out.[76] Cases in which the sufficiency of evidence has been reviewed are grouped in the notes.[77]

Instructions.—Instructions should be confined to the issues,[78] conform to the evidence,[79] not invade the province of the jury,[80] and be clear and not misleading.[81] Instructions embodied in those already given may be refused.[82]

73. Evidence of other engines not identified with the one in question having been seen emitting sparks is not sufficient as against other evidence given by disinterested witnesses as to not seeing sparks thrown by the engine in question. White v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 497.

Watson, 190 U. S. 287. Where the contested issue is as to whether the fire originated from an engine at all, an instruction as to the burden of showing freedom from negligence being on defendant is properly refused. Duckworth v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 913.

79. Instruction as to liability for fire originated from sparks falling in the grass on the right of way held not authorized by the evidence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327. It is not proper to instruct the jury to find for plaintiff if they found that a properly constructed and operated engine could not throw burning sparks a specified distance, when there was no evidence that an engine so constructed and operated would not throw sparks that distance, nor should such an instruction ignore evidence of a strong wind blowing at the time. Id.

80. Should not assume the negligence of defendant. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Gentry [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 607. It is not error to charge that the setting of a fire creates a prima facie case though an issue of contributory negligence is also present. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Scottish Union N. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1088. An instruction held not to allow a recovery without regard to negligence in respect to the character of a spark arrester, the repair and use thereof or as placing the burden of proof of the entire case on defendant, or as on the weight of the evidence. Mo., K. &

Special findings.—A general finding for plaintiff is not contradicted by special findings of a sufficient spark arrester and also of negligence in the operation of a locomotive.[83]

Damages.[84]—Statutes imposing a penalty and liability in damages for failure to clear combustible matter from the right of way are not regarded as taking private property for private use or without due process of law. They allow a person aggrieved to recover both the penalty and damages, but a failure in compliance is not regarded as an offense permitting the state to sue to recover the penalty in its own name.[85]

§ 8. Offenses against railroads and state.—The offense of obstructing a railroad track is evidenced by the placing of iron thereon of sufficient size and weight to derail a passenger car.[86] An indictment for the obstruction of a railroad must allege that the railroad was the road of a chartered company,[87] and ownership of a track must be proved as alleged.[88] Certain states have enacted statutes making the stealing of rides penal;[89] it is immaterial whether the ride stolen is a subject-matter of larceny.[90]

T. R. Co. v. Florence [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 802.

81. Held erroneous as leading the jury to believe that it could be inferred from the fact that a fire occurred that sparks were emitted in dangerous quantities. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan Timber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 327. Instruction as to the burden of proof of the manner of starting the fire held argumentative. Id. Held not defective in failing to require failure to clear a right of way to be the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. McFarland v. Miss. River & B. T. R. Co., 175 Mo. 423, 75 S. W. 152. Requiring a fire to begin "on and in the vicinity of said road" requires the jury to find that the fire began on the right of way and thence escaped to plaintiff's property. Id. An instruction held erroneous as making proof of the origin of the fire depend on the question of negligence in its emission from the locomotive. Ind. Clay Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 258, 67 N. E. 704. Erroneous as requiring proof, both of the defective condition of an engine and of negligent use. Id. Not objectionable as instructing the jury to base their damages on the evidence regardless of their opinion as to its credibility. Hutchins v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 548, 71 S. W. 473. Misleading as to contributory negligence in the covering of a building. Ind. Clay Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 258, 67 N. E. 704. Not erroneous as imposing on plaintiff the duty of proving by more than a preponderance of the evidence that a fire originated in combustible matter in the right of way from sparks from the engine, which fire communicated to plaintiff's land. Jackson v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 724.

82. A charge that by placing property near railroad tracks the owner assumes all risks arising from a properly equipped and properly operated locomotive may be refused where the jury are expressly told to find for defendant if the locomotive was properly equipped and operated. Tex. & P. R. Co. v. Scottish Union N. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1088. An instruction that plaintiff assumed risks which were to be anticipated from engines properly equipped need not be given where the jury is told that there can be no recovery if defendant was not negligent in the operation and equipment of its engines. 84. All general questions of evidence and measure of damages are treated in the article Damages, 1 Curr. Law, p. 833.

Measure of damages for burning a meadow is the cost of reseeding and the reasonable rental value for the time necessary to restore the meadow less the reasonable value of the use which may be had without interfering with the restoration. Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 984. Instruction that the measure of damages is the value of the grass burned and the amount to which it was injured by the fact of the fire on the turf is not erroneous as failing to state that the measure of damages as to the injury to the turf was the difference between the value of the land immediately before and after the burning. Tex. Midland R. R. v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 942. For burning grass is the difference of the market value of the land before and after. Jackson v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 724. Fruit trees, either their value as a distinct part of the land or the difference in the value of the land before and after their destruction. Where evidence of both kinds is admitted, the amount of damage is for the jury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Geiser [Kan.] 75 Pac. 68.

RAPE.

Matters of criminal law[92] and procedure[93] common to other crimes, and civil liability for ravishment are elsewhere treated.[94]

§ 1. Nature and elements. A. In general.—Rape at the common law is the unlawful carnal knowledge by a man of a woman, forcibly and against her will.[95] Force is a necessary ingredient of the offense, and where the female is possessed of her faculties she must resist to the uttermost, and any failure on her part to so resist robs the act of its criminality.[96] The force, however, need not be actual, but may be constructive or implied, and acquiescence obtained through duress or personal violence is constructive force.[97]

The words of the definition "against her will" means "without her consent" and where, by reason of mental incapacity, the woman is incapable of giving consent, there is rape though there is no resistance on her part.[98] So also where the woman is insensible through the administration of a drug.[99]

Whether at common law the use of deception, artifice, or fraud to obtain consent will supply the place of the force required to render the act criminal in ordinary cases, is not definitely settled, but the statutes of many states expressly provide that carnal knowledge obtained by fraud is rape.[1] And consent obtained by a sham marriage,[2] or by the administration of a drug causing an unnatural sexual desire,[3] is obtained by fraud.

a train for the purpose of avoiding payment of fare is guilty of attempting to steal a ride where he is removed before the journey begins, and of actually stealing a ride if he remains until the journey commences. Accusation held sufficient under general demurrer. Mack v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 437. Such statute is not unconstitutional, and a conviction is demanded by evidence of accused that he had concealed himself on a train for the purpose of the nonpayment of fare. Pressley v. State, 118 Ga. 315.

95. State v. Marsh, 132 N. C. 1000. In South Dakota, rape committed upon a female under the age of 10 years, or one incapable, through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind, of giving legal consent, or accomplished by means of force overcoming her resistance, constitutes rape in the first degree [Comp. Laws 1887, § 6523]. State v. Hayes [S. D.] 95 N. W. 296. In all other cases, including intercourse with females under the age of 16 and over 10, it constitutes rape in the second degree. Id. The statute of Washington provides that any person is guilty of rape who (1) shall by force and against her will ravish and carnally know any female of the age of eighteen years or more, (2) shall by deceit, deception, imposition or fraud induce a female to submit to sexual intercourse, (3) shall carnally know any female under the age of 18 years. 2. Under a statute defining rape as the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, and defining fraud as consisting in some strategem by which the woman is induced to believe the offender is her husband, the crime may be committed by means of a sham marriage on a single woman. Lee v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 1005.

The intercourse must be unlawful, but where defendant obtained consent by means of a sham marriage, and never had any intention or purpose of consummating it and subsequently married another woman, there was no common-law marriage, and the intercourse was criminal.[4]

Complete penetration is not essential.[5]

A boy under 14 cannot be convicted of rape or an assault with intent to commit rape,[6] but the state is not required to show that defendant is over 14.[7] And physical capacity of an adult to commit the crime will be presumed.[8]

(§ 1) B. Female under age of consent.—Under the statutes of probably all of the states, and perhaps under the common law, it is a crime to carnally know a female child of tender years, either with or without her consent, the law presuming that children of less than the statutory age are incapable of consenting. The earlier statutes fixed the age at which consent by the female would be a defense at ten years.[9] This arbitrary age has been termed the "age of consent" and by recent statutes has been increased in many states.[10]

In some states the crime thus defined is denominated rape, and is subject to all the rules applicable to that crime, except such as are changed to accommodate the presumption of want of consent raised by proof of nonage.[11] Thus, consent being immaterial, it is also immaterial whether prosecutrix resisted,[12] or force was used,[13] whether defendant supplied her with or she asked him for money,[14] or whether she was previously chaste, unchastity in rape being material only on the question of consent.[15] Neither is it material that the prosecutrix is married, she being the wife of another than defendant.[16]

In other states the carnal act is denominated a felony and as such is subject to its own rules. Thus in Utah, it is felony to carnally know a female between the ages of 13 and 18,[17] and in Missouri it is a felony for a man of 16 or over to carnally know a woman of previously chaste character over 14 and under 18.[18] Under such a statute, of course the prior unchastity of prosecutrix is material, because a complete defense, but consent being immaterial, force or violence is not an ingredient of the offense, and an assault need not be alleged.[19]

It is no defense that defendant believed prosecutrix to be over the statutory age.[20] Neither is it a defense or mitigation of the crime that defendant intended to procure a divorce and marry the prosecutrix.[21]

In some states the statute raising the age of consent also raises the age of responsibility, thus, in Ohio punishment is provided where a man of over 18 violates a woman of under 16,[22] and in Missouri it is declared to be a felony where a person over the age of 16 has carnal knowledge of a female of previously chaste character between the ages of 14 and 18,[23] while in Illinois it is rape for a man over 16 to copulate with a woman under 14,[24] and in Nebraska the crime exists where a man of 18 cohabits with a woman of 18.[25]

Analogous to the statutes punishing cohabitation with female children are those punishing indecent liberties with females of tender age,[26] and abuse of them in the attempt to have carnal knowledge.[27]

Under the statute of most states the defilement of a child under the age of consent, without force, is a crime regardless of whether she is or is not related to the accused.[28]

(§ 1) C. Attempts and assault with intent to commit rape.—To constitute an assault with intent to rape, the specific intent of accused to accomplish his purpose at all hazards and regardless of any resistance his intended victim may make must exist,[29] but if at any time during the assault he has the specific intent he is guilty, irrespective of what causes him to abandon his purpose.[30] To constitute an assault with intent to rape a girl under the age of consent, there must be a taking hold of her in such a manner as to indicate the specific intent to have carnal knowledge of her; the mere fact that the accused may have produced in her mind a sense of shame, or other disagreeable emotion or constraint, is not sufficient,[31] and an intent to procure sexual intercourse with her,[32] but the acts need not have been done against her will; as whether she consented or resisted is immaterial.[33]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution. A. Indictment or information.—An indictment alleging all the legal elements of the crime, is sufficient,[34] but certain words peculiarly descriptive of this offense are necessary, unless their use has been dispensed with by statute, thus the word "ravish" is necessary at common law, though not in South Dakota,[35] and the ravishment must be alleged to have been done "forcibly" and "against her will,"[36] and an allegation that the crime was "feloniously" committed is necessary in Kentucky,[37] though in Nebraska, where the charge is statutory, the omission of that word is not fatal.[38]

Under the rule that where guilty knowledge is not an essential ingredient of the offense, or where a statement of the act itself necessarily includes a knowledge of the illegality of the act, no averment of knowledge is necessary, an indictment for rape while the woman was insensible from the administration of a drug need not charge that defendant knew her condition.[39]

Since violence is not an ingredient of the offense of having carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent no assault need be alleged,[40] and allegations as to force may be treated as surplusage.[41] An averment that the woman was of the age of 16 years, the age of consent being 18 years, is sufficient after verdict,[42] but an indictment in Alabama not stating whether prosecutrix under 14 was over or under 10 is bad for failure to show on what statute the prosecution was based.[43]

Neither an indictment for an attempt to carnally know a female under the age of consent,[44] nor an indictment for assault with intent to rape, need allege the manner and details of the assault or attempt,[45] nor allege that the assault was committed with malice aforethought.[46]

An indictment charging that defendant assisted another to commit rape, but failing to allege that the person assisted actually committed a rape is bad.[47]

An indictment charging the commission of a rape by several different modes or means in the alternative is not duplicitous,[48] and an information charging that defendant feloniously assaulted, and feloniously ravished and carnally knew and abused, a female under the age of consent does not charge two offenses though force is not a necessary element of the offense where the female is under age.[49] Counts charging the offense in its different statutory forms are properly joined.[50]

Where several acts of intercourse with a female under the age of consent are shown, the prosecution may be required to elect on which one it will rely for a conviction,[51] but proof of previous attempts merely does not require an election, though the conviction was for assault with intent to ravish,[52] and where in different counts, rape in its various statutory forms is charged, no election is required.[53]

Under the statute providing that a conviction of any lesser degree of the offense, or of an attempt to commit the offense, may be had on an indictment charging the completed offense, a conviction of assault with intent to rape, assault and battery, or simple assault, may be had on an indictment for rape where the proof justifies it;[54] and this rule applies to a charge of statutory rape.[55] It has even been held that a conviction of assault with intent to rape may be sustained in a case where prosecutrix and defendant both testify to complete penetration and the only issue is consent vel non.[56] The true rule, however, is believed to be, that the statute should not be considered as authorizing a conviction of an assault where the evidence does not show it, and that both the state and the defendant have an interest in obtaining a verdict responsive to the issue on trial.[57] Where, on indictment for assault with intent to rape, there is no evidence of an attempt to inflict punishment generally on prosecutrix, there might be a conviction of an assault, on failure of proof of the intent to ravish, but not of assault and battery,[58] hence it is frequently held that where there is no evidence on which to base a verdict of less than rape, an instruction on an included offense is not required,[59] and in several states it is expressly provided that such convictions shall not be sustained where the evidence, if credited, shows the complete crime to have been committed.[60] The name of prosecutrix must be proved as laid.[61]

(§ 2) B. Evidence. 1. Admissibility.—Evidence, to be material, must have some tendency to prove an essential ingredient of the issue on trial,[62] and all matters having such tendency are provable[63] if testified to by competent witnesses.[64]

The testimony of medical men that after the date of the alleged offense they examined prosecutrix, a child, and found evidence that she had been violated, is admissible if not too remote.[65] And in Delaware, where a police surgeon has testified to such a state of facts, the court will, on the prisoner's request, have her examined by a competent physician, under such circumstances as will insure entire fairness.[66] The state is entitled to show that the prosecutrix made complaint, the time of making it, and to whom it was made,[67] but is not entitled to show the details of her complaint,[68] as that she stated defendant was her assailant,[69] unless so closely following the assault, and under such circumstances as to amount to res gestae, when under a familiar rule they are admissible in detail,[70] and the remoteness of her complaint is not a bar to the prosecution, nor does it tend to rebut the hypothesis of guilt,[71] nor render her testimony incompetent, but merely affects its credibility.[72] Declarations not within this rule are not admissible as original evidence.[73] The rule regarding the evidentiary effect of failure or delay to make disclosure, however, does not apply where the female is under the age of consent, the law supplying the element of nonconsent in such cases,[74] nor does it apply to the failure of the person to whom disclosure is made to make timely complaint to others or to the officers of the law.[75] But a mere casual statement by prosecutrix, as a matter of gossip, is not admissible, though she is under the age of consent.[76] The defendant should be allowed to bring out the details of her complaint on cross examination.[77]

The chastity of a female under the age of consent is immaterial,[78] likewise the character of her mother's house,[79] but where, in a prosecution for rape on a female under the age of consent, consent vel non not being in issue, prosecutrix has shown her pregnancy and attributed it to defendant and denied ever having intercourse with another, defendant may show that she has had intercourse with another under such circumstances that he might have been the father of her child,[80] and where proof of defendant's guilt is predicated largely on their both having a venereal disease, he may show that she had intercourse with other men who might have inoculated her.[81] Prosecutrix's reputation for chastity cannot be supported by asking her as to her relations with other men, where defendant has not assailed it.[82]

Declarations of living third persons as to prosecutrix's age are not admissible,[83] but prosecutrix is a competent witness as to her own age, and her testimony may be based on information derived from her parents, though they are in the court room,[84] and the opinion of a witness as to her age based on his observation of her may be given.[85] A physician's record may be used after his death, to prove her age,[86] and so may the family record of her parents,[87] but a fly leaf torn from a book on which the prosecutrix's father has written the date of her birth is not admissible as original evidence, he being present in court,[88] though a parent may testify as to her age basing his testimony in part on a memorandum not produced in court.[89] In a prosecution for rape previous attempts to ravish the same female[90] and subsequent friendly intimate relations may be shown,[91] but not prior offenses,[92] nor subsequent ones, though committed on the same person.[93] In some states, however, it is held that where the female is an idiot or imbecile or under the age of consent, and consented, proof of prior and subsequent acts between the parties is Evidence of subsequent acts of intercourse between the parties is not admissible, except as it becomes pertinent to some issue raised by defendant or tends to show the offense charged. That a physician had testified to a pregnancy of prosecutrix which could not have resulted from the intercourse charged does not make such proof admissible. Henard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 810.

admissible, as showing their intimacy and the likelihood of the offense having been committed,[94] defendant's adulterous disposition,[95] and as corroboration of the female's testimony.[96] And where on a prosecution for rape the conviction is for an assault with intent to rape, the prior familiar relations and conduct of the parties is material on the question of intent.[97] Testimony of subsequent pregnancy is admissible.[98]

(§ 2B) 2. Weight and sufficiency.—A conviction of rape may be had on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix at the common law in Texas, Montana, Washington,[99] Arizona,[1] and California,[2] but not in New York,[3] Colorado,[4] or Iowa,[5] and in a prosecution for rape by carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent, the female though consenting is not an accomplice, and the rule as to conviction on the testimony of accomplices does not apply.[6] Where corroboration is required, if there is some corroborative proof, its sufficiency is for the jury.[7]

To sustain a conviction of assault with intent to commit rape, the proof must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused intended to accomplish his purpose at all hazards, and regardless of any resistance his intended victim might make.[8]

Decisions in which the sufficiency of the evidence to support conviction is considered are mentioned in the note.[9]

(§ 2B) 3. Instructions.—Instructions, as in all cases, should fairly state the law applicable to the particular facts,[10] but charges on the weight of the evidence should be avoided.[11] Instructions presenting all the issues of the case as made by the pleadings and the evidence must be given.[12] Where defendant denies the intercourse testified to by prosecutrix but does not deny the assault, it is error not to instruct on the included offenses,[13] but issues not so raised should be avoided,[14] and instructions applicable to phases of the crime which might be in issue in similar cases, though not in the one on trial, should not be given, though requested.[15] An instruction purporting to define the crime should state all the elements of that particular phase of the offense under inquiry, but where there is cumstantial evidence. Richards v. State [Neb.] 91 N. W. 878. Corroborating circumstances with female's testimony. People v. Randall [Mich.] 95 N. W. 551; State v. Trimble v. Ter. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 932, 934. W. 673. But a charge properly stating the effect of prompt complaint is proper. Instructions held not objectionable. People v. Keith, 141 Cal. 686, 75 Pac. 304.

11. Instructions that the jury should consider the reputation and condition in life of the prosecutrix and defendant in the light of mitigating the punishment, and that they should consider the failure of the prosecutrix to make outcry as affecting her credibility, are properly refused as on the weight of the evidence. Where the testimony is not inconsistent with the possibility that limitations have run against the crime it is error not to instruct as to that point. State v. Kunhi, 119 Iowa, 461, 93 N. W. 342. Where it appears that prosecutrix weighed 145 pounds and appeared to be past majority, instructions stating that if she was under the age of consent, consent was no defense, and that it was immaterial what defendant believed as to her age are proper. An instruction as to the effect of complaints of prosecutrix should be given without request. State v. Parker [N. C.] 46 S. E. 511.

14. Where the only evidence is that of prosecutrix, and she denies penetration, instructions authorizing a conviction of rape are error. Ashford v. State, 81 Miss. 414. Instruction as to assault if defendant was frightened away before accomplishing purpose, error where there was no evidence to that effect. Suggs v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 307.

15. An instruction that the assault must be made with the specific intent to rape is not applicable where the issue is rape. Thomas v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 93. Especially where the prosecutrix was under the age of consent. Smitt v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 401. Where there is no pretence that the crime was committed by threats or fraud no instruction on that phase of the law is required. Reyna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 25. And where the evidence and circumstances show that prosecutrix resisted to the uttermost no charge on feigned resistance is required. Leach v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 220. Where actual penetration was shown beyond doubt and defendant denies any character of injury on prosecutrix, a charge on aggravated assault is not required. Hill v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 808; Welborn v. State, 116 Ga. 522. And where prosecutrix was under age and consented, the only issue was rape vel non, not assault or assault and battery. State v. King, 117 Iowa, 484, 91 N. W. 768. Where prosecutrix testified to facts constituting rape or assault with intent to no question as to the existence of an element, particular attention need not be called to it.[16]

(§ 2B) 4. Trial and punishment.—Where there are two degrees of rape and the information contained no averments showing the higher degree, the verdict need not find the degree.[17]

A judgment of guilty of "statutory rape" is invalid on a conviction of carnally knowing a female under 18 years of age intrusted to defendant's care.[18]

The highest penalty for rape in Texas is death,[19] but the penalty cannot be imposed on one under 17 years of age.[20]

In Illinois the punishment may be any term of imprisonment from one year to life. The parole act merely suspended the operation of the prior law, and on the subsequent withdrawal of the crime of rape from the parole law, the prior law again became effective.[21]

REAL PROPERTY.

§ 1. Nature and definition.—Land includes the soil of the earth and everything attached thereto, whether by the course of nature or the hand of man,[22] but not every structure in the soil is attached.[23] Ownership therein is not confined to its surface, but extends indefinitely upward and downward.[24] A house, or the upper stories of a house, may be either realty or personalty, its character in this regard being determined by the circumstances of the case and the intention of the parties.[25]

§ 2. Estates and interests.—Franchises relating to land or necessarily involving its use,[26] and the right to shoot and fish on certain land are an interest in rape, and defendant denied an assault of any kind, there was no occasion for a charge on assault and battery or simple assault. State v. Bailey, 31 Wash. 89, 71 Pac. 715. Id. The first story of a brick building was constructed by the owner of the land and the second by an opera house association. The owner of the land later conveyed to the association, by a deed without reservation or limitation, all his interest in the second story. NOTE. Incorporeal rights which are real property. Franchises:

A franchise is in England defined as "a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject" (2 Bl. Comm. 37); and in this country as "a special privilege conferred by the government upon an individual or corporation, which does not belong to citizens of the country generally by common right" (Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [U. S.] 519, 595).

Franchises, then, are neither land, nor, except perhaps in exceptional cases, rights as to the use or profits of another's land, since rights of this character cannot be created by governmental act, as franchises are created. They are, however, said by Blackstone to be incorporeal hereditaments of a "real" nature, and such seems to be the law in England at the present day (Reg. v. Cambrian Ry. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 427), and they have been quite frequently so regarded in this country (3 Kent, Comm. 457; Alexandria Canal, etc., Co. v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey [D. C.] 376; Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147; Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co., 11 Leigh [Va.] 42, 76; Sellers v. Union Lumbering Co., 39 Wis. 527; Phalen v. Commonwealth, 1 Rob. [Va.] 713; and see post, note 30).

The question, then, naturally arises, why rights of this character, which are not land nor rights therein, should be associated with land in the quality of heritability involved in the word "hereditament," or should be regarded as things real, and not as things personal. The reason for this assimilation of franchises to land seems to lie in the fact that whatever may be the nature of franchises at the present day, in former times in England they were always exercisable within the limits of lands held by their owners, or at least were exercisable at a particular place, or within certain territorial limits, and accordingly, with other things of an incorporeal nature, were regarded as in the nature of land.

The franchises which were of the greatest importance in mediaeval times possessed this element of locality to a decided extent, being generally rights granted to the great feudal landholders to exercise judicial or governmental powers within the limits of the land held by them of the crown, or similar rights granted to the members of a particular borough community (see 1 Pollock & Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law, 574, 642); or quite frequently they involved the right of hunting in a particular district (see 2 Bl. Comm. 37 et seq.; 3 Cruise, Dig. tit. 27, §§ 1-31). "The principal franchises are (1) liberties to hold courts; (2) grants of Jura Regalia and Counties Palatine; (3) grants of forest courts; (4) liberty to make a park; (5) the right of freewarren; (6) to have the goods of felons, etc.; (7) to have waifs and strays; (8) to hold a fair or market; (9) to keep a ferry." Elphinstone, Interpretation of Deeds, 581.

The same local quality attaches to franchises to maintain a ferry at a particular point, and charge tolls for the use thereof, which have been in this country, as well as in England, regarded as real hereditaments (Dundy v. Chambers, 23 Ill. 369; Gunterman v. People, 138 Ill. 518; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740; Reg. v. Cambrian Ry. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 422). In this country, the statute quite frequently provides that a ferry franchise shall be granted only to a riparian proprietor, and in such cases it is an incorporeal hereditament, which will descend with or pass with a devise or deed of the land of such proprietor (Haynes v. Wells, 26 Ark. 464; Trustees of Maysville v. Boon, 2 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 224; Lewis v. Town of Gainesville, 7 Ala. 85), unless the riparian proprietor grants this right of maintaining the ferry to another, which it has been decided he may do (Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740. But see Haynes v. Wells, 26 Ark. 464).

In like manner, locality may be said to attach to a franchise to maintain a toll bridge. Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford & New Haven R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 60.

The most usual franchise at the present time is the right to exist as or form a corporation; a character of right which is sometimes spoken of as vested in the corporation itself, and sometimes as vested in the individuals composing the corporation (see 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 923 et seq.; Fietsan v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293; Memphis & Little Rock R. Co. v. Railroad Commissioners, 112 U. S. 609; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 507; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. St. 107). Such franchises have been stated to be hereditaments (2 Bl. Comm. 37; Price v. Price's Heirs, 6 Dana [Ky.] 107; Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co., 11 Leigh [Va.] 42, 76), but there seems to be some impropriety in so classifying them, since, as remarked by Chancellor Kent, "they have no inheritable quality, inasmuch as a corporation, in cases where there is no express limitation to its continuance by charter, is supposed never to die, but to be clothed with a kind of legal immortality" (3 Kent, Comm. 459; and see State v. Georgia Medical Soc., 38 Ga. 608, 626, to the effect that such a franchise is not a hereditament). Furthermore, it may be said of franchises of this character, as of others, that, when granted only for a limited number of years, as is the custom in this country at the present day, they cannot be regarded as hereditaments, or "real" things in any way, they lacking the element of perpetuity necessary for this purpose. (So it was held that a ferry franchise granted for a definite number of years passed to the personal representatives of the grantee. Lippencott v. Allander, 27 Iowa, 460.)

Annuities: It is well settled in England, that if, by the terms of its creation, an annuity is granted to one "and his heirs," it will pass on the grantee's death, like real property, to his heirs, and not to his executors (Co. Litt. 2a; Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. Sr. 170; Turner v. Turner, Amb. 776). An annuity so limited is known as a "personal hereditament." See Challis, Real Prop. 40; Am. Law Mag. 68. If not limited to the heirs, it passes to the executor, as other personal property does. Taylor v. Martindale, 12 Sim. 158; Parsons v. Parsons, L. R. 8 Eq. 260.

For other purposes it is regarded as is an interest in the land.[28] Such estates, however, are generally levied upon as personalty, but statutes in some states provide that they are to be treated as realty for such purposes.[29] A ground rent is an estate of inheritance in the rent of lands and a freehold estate.[30] A right of entry for condition broken is an estate in expectancy which is transferable.[31] The interest of an Indian, possessing lands of an Indian nation, is an interest in or concerning lands within the meaning of the statute of frauds, whether the interest is real estate or a chattel real.[32] A conveyance of a water right by an entryman is not a conveyance of land within the prohibition of the United States homestead laws.[33] Estates in fee tail general are by statute, in some states, resolved into estates in fee simple.[34] The rule in Shelley's case applies whenever the limitation over is to persons intended to take as heirs.[35] When the technical words to create an estate tail in land are used, to wit, "heirs of the body," and nothing appears to show that they were not used with that intent, they create an estate tail.[36] When a lesser estate comes into the holder of a greater one, merger takes place,[37] but merger will not carry with the land that which by agreement is a movable attached to the lesser estate.[38]

§ 3. Acquisition and loss of property in land.—Land is acquired and divested either by "descent," which is the devolution of title on an intestacy,[39] or by "purchase,"[40] which includes every transmutation of title by will,[41] gift,[42] adverse possession or prescription,[43] as well as by actual purchase.

personal property. Aubin v. Daly, 4 Barn. & Ald. 59, 1 Gray's Cas. 2; Radburn v. Jarvis, 3 Beav. 450.

Corporate stock: In some early cases in England, as well as in this country, it was held that each stockholder in a corporation had an estate in the corporate property, and that consequently, if that property was real, his share was also realty. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. Jr. 652; Price v. Price's Heirs, 6 Dana [Ky.] 107; Welles v. Cowles, 2 Conn. 567. In other and later cases the stockholder has rightly been regarded as having only a right of action for his share of the profits as dividends, and it may now be considered as settled that corporate stock is personal, and not real, property. Johns v. Johns, 1 Ohio St. 350, Finch's Cas. 14; Russell v. Temple, 3 Dane's Abr. 108; Saup v. Morgan, 108 Ill. 326; Blight v. Brent, 2 Younge & C. 268, 294; Bradley v. Holdsworth, 3 Mees. & W. 422; Lindley, Companies [5th Ed.] 451; Cook, Corporations [4th Ed.] § 12.

Summary of conclusions: Summarizing, then, the results of our inquiry into the nature of incorporeal things real, we find that the only things of this nature recognized in this country are rights as to the use or profits of another's land, and franchises, or certain classes of franchises, and consequently these, together with land and things annexed thereto (corporeal things real), are alone the subjects of real property.

RECEIVERS.

§ 1. Nature, grounds, and subjects of receivership.[44]—Receivership being purely an ancillary remedy, the suit cannot be maintained solely for that purpose,[45] and intervention merely for the purpose of obtaining the appointment of a receiver in a suit which does not seek such appointment will not be allowed.[46] The appointment may be made under petition in a suit in aid of the pending suit to recover the property.[47] Right to an injunction will not justify the appointment.[48] A receiver will not be appointed where ordinary legal remedies are effective, insolvency of defendant being generally prerequisite.[49] Right to collect rents and profits is not sufficient to prevent appointment,[50] nor is sequestration proceedings an adequate remedy,[51] nor will one be appointed where the appointment will not prevent the injury complained of.[52] Where an injunction will remedy the evil a receiver will not be appointed.[53] Where the complainant has been guilty of laches he cannot maintain a suit in equity for a receiver.[54] Insolvency.[55]

App.] 79 S. W. 370. Creditors must have exhausted their legal remedies. Executions might have been levied but were not. Barnesville Mfg. Co. v. Schofield's Sons Co., 118 Ga. 664.

50. Of a receiver to collect and apply the same and keep the property in repair, it appearing that the rents accruing under an outstanding lease are insufficient for this purpose. De Benera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 637. Invalidity of lease, in that it is not binding on the lessee, does not bar the right of a mortgage creditor to have a receiver appointed to collect and apply to his debts the rents and profits thereof. where there is no one to collect the assets and apply them to the payment of the creditors. Officers had attempted to sell and empower others as officers, had been ousted by quo warranto, receiver had been appointed and removed but held the assets as a temporary trustee. Youree v. Home Town M. Ins. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 175. In a suit for the appointment of a receiver of an insolvent corporation and a full and final administration of its assets, the amount of the matter in dispute is determined by the value of the property to the administrator. So determining the amount involved in the controversy as a jurisdictional fact. Jones v. Mut. Fidelity Co., 123 Fed. 506. Insolvency, coupled with gross mismanagement of a corporation's affairs by its board of directors whose positive misconduct amounts to a breech of trust, is sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver by a court of equity independent of any statutory authority. U. S. Shipbuilding Co. v. Conklin [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 132. In the absence of statutory regulations unsecured creditors at law, who have not reduced their claims to judgment cannot, solely on the ground of insolvency, successfully maintain a suit for the appointment of a receiver [Construing 19 Laws Del. c. 181]. Jones v. Mut. Fidelity Co., 123 Fed. 506. A creditor is entitled to have a receiver appointed for an insolvent corporation before he has reduced his claim to judgment and procured a return of nulla bona, where the assets will probably be lost or fraudulently disposed of by improvident or corrupt officials, and the creditor has no adequate remedy at law. 61. Vizard v. Moody, 117 Ga. 67. Holding land without right and collecting rents and profits will justify appointment pending ejectment. Whyte v. Spransy, 19 App. D. C. 450.

62. Allegations in a complaint by a creditor of a telephone company that the latter has discontinued business and left its wires, poles, instruments, etc., to go to ruin, and that no effort was being made to care for its property or attend to its business, and that no provision was being made to pay either the interest or principal of plaintiff's mortgage, and that the board of trustees could not hold a legal meeting nor agree upon the management of its affairs. Held, sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver. Fernald v. Spokane & B. C. Tel. & T. Co., 31 Wash. 672, 72 Pac. 462. Appointment to care for property in suit between heirs to set aside conveyances by ancestor, held improperly made where there was no allegation that the property was being wasted or improperly dealt with. Johnston v. Lippert, 96 Md. 584. Where threatened destruction is denied with evidence of equal weight the appointment is unauthorized. Alleged threats by out-going tenant to destroy crop denied by him, held appointment unauthorized. Horn v. Bohn, 96 Md. 8. Allegations insufficient under code §§ 2716, 2721, to justify appointment at instance of unsecured creditors. Reynolds & H. Estate Mortg. Co. v. Kingsbery, 118 Ga. 254.

63. That debtor is about to do away with creditor's security is sufficient to justify the appointment. Troughber v. Akin, 109 Tenn. 451, 73 S. W. 118. Under Civ. Code Proc. § 298, giving a father having a lien on land the right to have a receiver appointed, where the property is in danger of being materially injured, appointment to restrain cutting on timber land and excluding land in cultivation held proper. Dupoyster v. Ft. Jefferson Imp. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1782, 72 S. W. 268.

64. The fact that the board of directors exceeded their authority in making a lease, no other violation of duty or mismanagement of the property being shown, is not sufficient to obtain the appointment of a receiver. New Albany Waterworks v. Louisville Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 776. That directors hold over without an election, vote themselves salaries and compensation to others for services that were to be rendered free, does not justify the appointment of a receiver. Ala. C. & Coke Co. v. Shackleford, 137 Ala. 224. A complaint by a stockholder of a corporation asking for a receiver, alleging that the secretary and treasurer had concealed and refused ceiver will not be appointed to redeem property from a tax sale,[66] nor does liquidation of corporation constitute ground.[67] That a corporation is not as prosperous as expected is no ground for the appointment of a receiver.[68] If the mortgage pledges the rents and profits, a receiver pendente lite is proper without a showing of inadequacy of the security,[69] otherwise where the mortgagee is not entitled to the rents, and the mortgagor is not insolvent, nor the security inadequate.[70]

Under proper facts the appointment may be made in partition,[71] and where a co-tenant's interest is disputed, a receiver of his share of the profits may be appointed when necessary for the protection of all the parties.[72]

While homestead property is not generally subject to receivership,[73] if it is divisible the appointment may be made for the non-exempt part.[74]

In the absence of express statute, a receiver of corporate property cannot be appointed on grounds which would not be sufficient were the owner a natural person.[75]

Appointment is generally discretionary,[76] and will be reviewed only in case of gross abuse of discretion.[77]

The extension of receivership to cover other property is within the court's discretion.[78] In order to obtain the appointment of a receiver a party must have an interest in the property.[79] In the absence of statutory authority, a receiver cannot be appointed for corporate bodies on the application of private parties.[80] And it must be reasonably necessary to protect such party's rights,[81] but a receiver cannot be appointed at the instance of a mere mortgagee for property not covered by the plaintiff, the president, access to the books, etc., not alleging fraud or mismanagement by any other officers or of the directors, or that the directors had been requested to institute any proceeding for the relief of the corporation, does not state a cause of action. mortgage,[82] nor where the creditor applying is protected.[83] On an interlocutory judgment for an accounting of a party's share in a transaction, it is not necessary to appoint a receiver to protect his rights.[84] Where an action is brought against a company, and a second company is formed to take the place of the first, and does in fact do so, it is unnecessary to bring a new action against the second company in order to appoint a receiver therefor,[85] and equity may, in lieu of appointment, accept a bond from defendant conditioned for the full performance of the final decree, and render judgment thereon for the amount of the recovery,[86] and if the appointment would occasion loss to both parties the discretion is properly exercised.[87] Order appointing receiver will not be reversed where it would result in further litigation.[88] A temporary receiver may be appointed on the death of the original appointee.[89] A temporary receivership will be continued until final hearing, where the facts are strongly in favor of plaintiff's equity.[90]

94. And the order is not validated by an oral understanding between counsel and judge that it shall not take effect until after commencement of the action. Popp v. Daisy Gold Min. Co. [Utah] 74 Pac. 426. A court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver on a mere petition not demanding a money judgment, nor any other legal or equitable remedy, when presented without the filing of a complaint or the issuance of a summons or any other process. Winona, W. E. & S. B. Traction Co. v. Collins [Ind.] 69 N. E. 998. An ex parte appointment before the filing of the petition is irregular. But no motion to vacate having been made, and the property having been subjected, the court refused to reverse. Scott v. Cox, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 190, 70 S. W. 802.

97. Nor can it be sustained as an exten-

rious circumstances,[99] as where service of the notice is impracticable.[1] Notice given under the original complaint is sufficient though an amended and supplemental complain was filed,[2] and though the amendment was not verified in the absence of objection.[3] The pendency of a demurrer to the complaint which asked the appointment will not prevent the appointment.[4] A receiver may be appointed though no prayer therefor was made in the pleadings.[5] Before service of the process notice of application must be given, and also after service, when the appointment is sought in vacation, but not in term time when made by decree on the merits.[6] The notice of application in a pending action should be served on the attorneys,[7] though the notice may be waived by the parties entitled thereto or by their attorneys.[8] Appearance waives the objection of want of notice,[9] or any irregularity in the notice.[10]

The appointing order is not void though the determination of the sufficiency of the bill was erroneous.[11] That the order did not require a bond is not fatal in the absence of objection, a bond being actually given.[12] In collateral proceedings or actions the order can be attacked only for want of jurisdiction,[13] and not for any irregularities in the appointment,[14] or that the facts did not justify the appointment.[15]

An order appointing a receiver is appealable,[16] though made ex parte,[17] but an appeal does not supersede the order.[18] On certiorari, only the question of jurisdiction can be considered.[19]

(§ 2) B. Who may be appointed.—The party agreed upon is not generally binding on the court, since its discretion ultimately controls,[20] though the court will usually give favorable consideration to such party,[21] and an agreement by a creditor to serve if appointed without compensation is not void as against public policy.[22] Trustees may be appointed.[23] The mere fact that one had been an officer of the corporation will not disqualify him to act as its receiver.[24] A nonresident of the state may be appointed a receiver when he has an interest in the property, and a resident is appointed as co-receiver.[25]

(§ 2) C. Tenure of receiver.—A removal is justified where the receiver failed to act as a prudent man would have acted in the management of his own business.[26] A receiver should be removed only on direct application therefor, and he should be given an opportunity to answer the charges.[27]

The order of appointment will not be set aside after the objects of the receivership have been fully accomplished and his duties are terminated.[28] The appointment of trustees in the place of trustees deceased operates to vacate a prior order appointing a temporary receiver.[29] Where defendant offers in writing to do everything that was endeavored to be procured by the appointment of a receiver, the receiver should be discharged.[30] A receiver should not be discharged on the filing of a bond by third parties assuming all liabilities, except on the acceptance of the bond by creditors whose claims have been allowed.[31]

After final determination of the cause and the settlement of accounts, the receivership is at an end,[32] and the filing of a supersedeas bond on appeal from the order of discharge does not reinstate the receiver.[33] Though the receivership terminated on the sale of the property, an action to establish a claim may be maintained against him where the decree of sale provided that the purchaser assume all liabilities remaining unpaid.[34]

§ 3. Title and rights in and possession of the property. A. Title in general.—The appointment of receivers has for its primary object the care and custody of the property which is the subject of the receivership pending the determination of the questions involved in the litigation,[35] and divests the debtor of all authority over the property,[36] and the title passes to the receiver by operation of law[37] at the time of filing the order appointing him.[38] The funds are held by the receiver as an officer of the court,[39] and he takes only a qualified title to all the property within the court's jurisdiction,[40] and he takes subject to the debtor's exemption rights,[41] and subject to whatever rights existed against the debtor;[42] therefore, any right of setoff which existed against the debtor is available against the receiver,[43] and if an unrecorded chattel mortgage is void as to creditors, it is void as to the receiver of the mortgagor.[44] In supplementary proceedings, the receiver takes only a right of possession to realty of the debtor.[45]

(§ 3) B. Rights as between receivers, claimants or lienors. Receivers.—Where different actions are started in the state and Federal courts for the appointment of a receiver for the same property, the receiver first obtaining possession of the property has the right to retain it.[46] The court making the first appointment alone has jurisdiction of an action by the second receiver to determine the right to the assets.[47] A court of the United States will not dispossess the receiver of a state court by any summary order or process or otherwise than by formal proceedings taken by its own receiver or trustee for that purpose.[48] Where a receiver in bankruptcy[49] is appointed within four months of the appointment of a receiver by the state court, the latter court, upon an application by the receiver in bankruptcy for the funds of the bankrupt, in compliance with an order of the bankrupt court, will order its receiver to pay over to him such fund,[50] and the state receiver must apply to the bankruptcy court for the allowance of his commissions and expenses.[51] But the state court may upon transfer of all assets in possession to the bankruptcy court close his account, cancel his bond, and discharge him and his sureties from liability.[52]

Claimants or lienors.—An attachment on a foreign corporation's property within a state creates a right superior to the claim of a receiver of the corporation appointed in the home jurisdiction, even though such receivership is prior in point of time to the levy of the attachment, if it be levied prior to the appointment of a receiver in the state where the property is located.[53] A prior assignee of rents is entitled thereto as against a receiver of the property, irrespective of notice to him of the assignment.[54] Property subject to a chattel mortgage after conditions broken belongs to the mortgagee and not the mortgagors' receiver thereafter appointed.[55] A mortgagee cannot collect rental from the receiver of the lessee under a void lease when he does not apply for a receiver in the suit to foreclose his mortgage.[56] He is entitled to possession of funds belonging to the estate as against a depositary claiming an interest therein.[57] A receiver can be garnished by leave of the court which appointed him.[58] A receiver lawfully taking possession of the property of a corporation cannot be sued by one whose private property was by mistake turned over with the corporation's until such person obtains leave of the court or applies thereto for relief from his mistake.[59]

(§ 3) C. Possession and restitution.—So far as a receiver's powers are derived from a statute, or from a lawful decree of court, and the powers do not involve rights which, at the time of his appointment, were vested in the owners, he is not merely their representative but the agent of the court appointing him,[60] but as to such rights as are vested in the owners at the time of their appointment, he is simply their agent.[61] Receivers having complete control of the property are not agents of a corporation purchasing the same so as to render the latter liable for their negligence.[62] Pending appeal with stay from the appointing order, the receiver is not entitled to possession.[63] If the order directing payment to a receiver does not specify the time for payment, demand is a condition precedent to commitment.[64]

Since property in the receiver's possession is in custodia legis, process cannot then be issued against it,[65] and he may enjoin the prosecution of suits against the debtor which tended to delay his collection of the assets.[66] A chattel mortgagee may, however, foreclose as against the owner or his receiver, where neither had ever had actual or constructive possession and the mortgagee was not a party to the receivership proceedings.[67]

§ 4. Administration and management of the property. A. Authority and powers in general.[68]—A court cannot confer upon a receiver power outside of the territory over which it has jurisdiction.[69] Receivers of a corporation acting within the scope of their authority are clothed with substantially the same powers, and are subject to substantially the same liabilities as such receivers as those applicable to the corporation,[70] and a receiver may be authorized to sue to recover assets at any time prior to his discharge.[71] A receiver pendente lite, in a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, can act only according to the rights and remedies given to ordinary receivers.[72] A receiver is not liable for authorized expenditures,[73] but he is liable for his unauthorized acts[74] paying out funds in disobedience of an order.[75] Authorization to complete works in the course of construction does not include authority to undertake new work.[76] After making the contract, the court can revoke the order authorizing it only under the same conditions that individuals may rescind contracts,[77] and the adjustment of debts created without leave of court will be made on an equitable basis,[78] and if no advantage accrues therefrom, the receiver will not be allowed therefor;[79] but if no loss or injury results to the estate, the receiver will not be charged therewith.[80] Unauthorized payments may be ratified by the court.[81]

The receiver represents all persons interested in the estate,[82] including the creditors,[83] and in the absence of restrictive statutes, may enforce the rights of creditors as well as those of the debtor.[84]

In case of joint receivership, each receiver has equal authority in the management.[85]

The receiver may carry on the business to complete unfulfilled contracts,[86] but if the estate is insufficient to pay debts, he can with the court's approval abandon a contract to purchase made by the insolvent.[87] He is not justified in continuing at a loss,[88] and if he does so without authority, he will be personally liable for resulting losses.[89] Power to sell the property should be given a temporary receiver only under the most cogent circumstances.[90] A receiver of a railroad corporation can manage and operate the property, and maintain its integrity as a road and as a going business.[91] A contract by the receiver's agent is binding on the receiver,[92] and the allowances for expenses in carrying on the business are properly made to the receiver and not to the persons furnishing the supplies.[93]

The receiver does not by virtue of his appointment become the assignee of a leasehold interest but is entitled to a reasonable time to elect to surrender or retain possession, and is liable only for rent during the time of retention,[94] and the fact that the lease has a long time to run will not justify a continuance of possession.[95] A creditor who requests a receiver to sue is liable for the costs of the action.[96] Receiver's liens or certificates may be issued only when absolutely necessary for the preservation of the property pending litigation.[97]

In the management of the estate, the receiver should use such care, skill and prudence as an ordinary man would use in the conduct of his own business,[98] and for losses resulting from the negligent conduct of the estate will be personally charged,[99] as where he failed to collect claims which he could by the exercise of due diligence have collected.[1] A contract of a receiver being a contract of the court is assignable.[2] Allowance of counsel fees.[3] pointed.[8] A chattel mortgage is entitled to priority over claims for wages,[9] but the mortgagee is not entitled to funds received by the receivers under a private settlement of damages for injuries to the insolvent's property.[10] Creditors cannot obtain a superior lien against the property in the receiver's hands by filing a creditor's bill.[11] Priority cannot be obtained by a contract with the receiver.[12] The right to enforce prior liens, however, may be lost by participation in the subsequent receivership proceedings.[13] An order allowing a claim cannot be attacked because of invalidity of the receiver's appointment,[14] and a judgment of the allowance of a claim does not become a lien on the assets.[15]

Debts created by receiver and expenses of administration.—A debt created by the receiver may be ordered paid without waiting for final settlement.[16] And this power is inherent in the court appointing the receiver,[17] and the debts may be satisfied out of any of the assets,[18] but application should be made for leave to enforce a judgment against the receiver on such debts,[19] but in case of insufficiency of assets,[20] or if the appointment was not warranted, the party procuring it will be charged with the expenses,[21] except when made on consent of the parties,[22] or where the defendant acquiesced in the appointment and the receiver was efficient in disposing of the property and procured a better price than the defendant could have obtained.[23] In case of improper appointment the receiver's charges are not as of course taxable against the party procuring the appointment, but he is entitled to be heard on a motion therefor,[24] and in such case the defendant is not entitled to interest on the funds while in the receiver's hands.[25] Allowances for supplies are properly made to the receiver himself and not to those who furnished the supplies.[26]

Counsel fees.—Necessary attorney's fees will be allowed and taxed as costs,[27] but the receiver will not be allowed for counsel services on accounts rendered necessary because of his misconduct in the management of the estate.[28] Fees cannot be allowed for counsel for employes of a receiver.[29]

Fees of counsel employed to resist appointment may properly be allowed.[30] Unsuccessful efforts of counsel in defending his own bill cannot be made the basis of a charge against the receiver.[31] The allowance of counsel fees is to the receiver and not to the counsel.[32] to the suit which are not accepted or reserved by the terms of the decree,[48] except in the case of a pre-existing judgment.[49] If on resale the mortgagee again purchased for the amount of the bid on the first sale which was less than the mortgage debt, the deposit of the increase guaranteed on procuring the resale is properly paid to the bidder, less a part of the expenses.[50]

(§ 4) D. Actions by and against receivers.[51]—While the appointment does not prevent suits against the debtor,[52] yet the receiver has the right to bring and defend actions concerning the trust estate.[53] He may sue the directors for a discovery and accounting for their wrongful acts,[54] and this may be a single suit against all the directors, though all are not equally involved nor equally liable, and damages may be recovered,[55] and he may continue prosecuting actions pending at the time of his appointment;[56] he may move to vacate a void judgment against the debtor,[57] but he cannot appeal from a decree in an action against the insolvent which merely determined the extent of a lien of the plaintiff creditor.[58]

The receiver should generally first obtain leave to sue,[59] and a decree authorizing suit is not suspended by the filing of a petition for a rehearing thereof.[60]

Authorization to sue the receiver is necessary,[61] therefore a receiver appointed by a federal court cannot be sued in a state court without leave granted by the former,[62] though failure to obtain leave is not a jurisdictional defect where the action was brought in the appointing court.[63]

63. Ratcliff v. Baer & Co. [Ark.] 72 S. W. 896.

To actions on contracts by receivers the debtors are not necessary parties.[64]

The receiver should aver sufficient facts to show legal appointment,[65] and in case of denial by answer, the plaintiff receiver must prove his appointment and qualification.[66] The party alleging invalidity in the appointment of receivers must prove it.[67] Proceedings with reference to the removal of a receiver, had long after the appointment, are inadmissible on the question of collusion in the appointment.[68] Where the receiver of an insolvent corporation has no assets to prosecute a disputed claim whose validity is not asserted by the stockholders, he will be authorized to order an assessment upon the stockholders before bringing suit on the claim.[69] Receivers of an insolvent corporation will not be required to bring suit to ascertain and enforce the liability of the promoters, officers, and directors of the corporation for the benefit of creditors until its visible assets have been liquidated and the fact and amount of deficiency is ascertained.[70]

A judgment in favor of a receiver in his proprietary capacity cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings.[71]

§ 5. Accounting by receivers.—The taking of an inventory and filing a statement of liabilities are proper preliminary acts and should be done within a reasonable time after the receiver takes charge,[72] and any person interested may require the making and filing.[73] Where, in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage, a receiver is appointed, funds realized by him from a sale of property not covered by the mortgage should be distributed among the general creditors.[74] A judgment obtained against a railroad company, after its property has been placed in the hands of receivers in a suit to foreclose a mortgage thereon for a claim arising prior to the receivership, is not entitled to a preference over the mortgage on the earnings of the receivership.[75] On insolvency of a loan association, money paid as dues by a member cannot be credited as a loan to a member, but must await the final distribution by the receiver.[76] Dividends on secured claims will be computed only on the amount actually due when the dividend is made.[77] Where a national bank is placed in the hands of a receiver, the Federal law immediately becomes the law of

§ 6. Compensation of receivers.[85]—In the absence of statute fixing the receiver's compensation, its allowance is within the court's discretion,[86] and after ex parte allowance, may reduce the amount.[87] In fixing compensation, consideration may be given only as to the value of the services to the business,[88] and in the absence of an appraisement, the sale price will be taken as the value of the property.[89] The court may grant extra allowances for extraordinary services.[90] A receiver is entitled to reasonable compensation,[91] to be recompensed for expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties,[92] prior to the time when he ought to have been discharged, but is entitled to nothing after that date.[93] The receiver may waive his right to compensation.[94] Orders not allowing compensation except upon certain conditions will be construed strictly,[95] and insuffi-

§ 7. Liabilities and actions on receivership bonds.—The discharge of receivers by the court under whose appointment they acted relieves them from personal liability for injuries sustained by reason of their negligent managing of the property.[1] The statutory requirements to fix the surety's liability must be followed.[2]

§ 8. Foreign and ancillary receivers.—A foreign receiver is not entitled to control domestic property of the insolvent as against domestic creditors,[3] and the latter are entitled to payment by the ancillary appointee before surrender to the foreign appointee.[4]

A receiver is permitted to sue in foreign jurisdictions only as a matter of comity, and where his rights will not conflict with domestic creditors;[5] but if he is not vested with any title, he cannot sue at law without the state of appointment,[6] nor in his own name.[7] The receiver of a national bank has a sufficient title to maintain action in the state courts in his own name.[8] A receiver appointed by a Federal circuit court may sue to recover assets regardless of the citizenship of the defendants or that the property was in another district.[9]

In the Federal courts ancillary jurisdiction will be exercised to assist in carrying out the purposes of the court of the domicile,[10] but such court will not make an ex parte ancillary appointment.[11]

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

§ 1. Nature and elements; other crimes distinguished.—To constitute this offense, four elements must exist. The property must be received;[12] it must at the time be stolen property;[13] the receiver must know that it is stolen property;[14] and his intent in receiving it must be fraudulent.[15]

A receiver is not indictable as an accessory after the fact as he received the goods, not the thief, and to render one an accessory after the fact the aid must be rendered to the thief personally.[16]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution.—The indictment must correctly describe the property received,[17] and its ownership,[18] but need not state from whom it was received,[19] though where it does state the name of the person from whom received, it is material and must be proved.[20] An indictment charging the receiving of stolen property on the 22nd of the month is supported by evidence that it was received on the 19th.[21]

In order to convict of receiving stolen goods, it is necessary to prove that the property was stolen as laid in the indictment,[22] that it is the property of the person named in the indictment as owner,[23] that defendant knew at the time he received it that it was stolen,[24] and that he received it with fraudulent intent.[25] Knowledge that the property was stolen may be inferred from circumstances,[26] but the mere possession of the property is not sufficient to establish such knowledge though it may be considered with the other evidence,[27] and a conviction is not supported by a showing that defendant received the property not knowing its character, and on being informed of the larceny, secreted it.[28]

No presumption of fraudulent intent arises from the receipt of stolen goods with knowledge of their being stolen.[29]

Acts and declarations of the thief made at the time of, and in connection with, and tending to prove, the larceny are admissible,[30] and testimony tending to prove a conspiracy by which it was planned that another should steal the property and defendant receive it is admissible where the testimony tends to show that the particular property charged in the indictment was received by defendant in pursuance of the plan.[31]

Evidence of other receivings closely related in time from one of the parties connected with the delivery in the offence charged may be received for the purpose of proving the scienter,[32] notwithstanding the offer of direct evidence also to prove knowledge.[33]

33. Goldsberry v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 906.

A bill of sale of live stock claimed to have been sold and purchased will be received in evidence to explain defendant's possession, though not properly witnessed and acknowledged.[34]

A conviction is not supported by evidence that defendant's wife received the property in his absence, there being no showing that he authorized her.[35] A verdict of guilty must either find guilt "as charged" or must state all the elements of the offense.[36]

RECORDS.

§ 1. What are records.—Record, in its broadest sense, is a memorial, public or private, of what has been done. It is ordinarily applied to public records only, in which sense it is a written memorial made by a public officer, judicial, legislative, or executive, authorized by law to perform that function and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said or done.[37] Papers become of record when they are filed.[38] A record may be valid, though on detached pages.[39] The report of unauthorized proceedings cannot be a record.[40] The correction of judgment records has been treated in an earlier article.[41]

§ 2. Keeping and custody.—A public official is the custodian of the records of his office, and is entitled to possession of them.[42] In bankruptcy, the custody of all papers after reference is in the referee.[43] The mayor of a city is in a sense custodian of its records.[44] Extra-official searches are not a public service, hence fees thereby earned are not public moneys.[45]

A rule against erasures has been limited to material ones.[46]

§ 3. Publicity and access.—A taxpaying citizen is entitled to examine the public records,[47] and cannot be denied this right for insufficient reasons[48] or be-

37. Photographs and measurements of a criminal made and recorded as provided by statute constitute public records and remain so even though he may be subsequently acquitted. Hence, they cannot be surrendered to the one accused. In re Molineux, 177 N. Y. 395, 69 N. E. 727.
38. Defendant handed requests to charge to the court which were refused. The court then asked plaintiff's attorney if he desired to read them, which was objected to by defendant, who handed the requests to the court who gave them to the clerk to file. Held, that when filed they became records subject to plaintiff's inspection. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 712.
39. A survey recorded on two separate pages shown to be connected together as the recorded survey made by the surveyor held admissible in evidence under a statute providing for the record of surveys. Sherrard v. Cudney [Mich.] 96 N. W. 15.
40. The report of commissioners appointed by an inferior court to determine a county line is not admissible as evidence where there was no authority to make it and it was not under oath. Daniel v. Bailey, 118 Ga. 408.
41. See Judgments, 2 Curr. Law, p. 586.
42. The appointee of common council of a city to the office of chamberlain is entitled to the custody of records of the office as against present incumbent holding under an unconstitutional law. In re Haase, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 114.
43. McLanahan v. Blackwell [Ga.] 45 S. E. 785.
44. The mayor of a city is custodian of its records to a sufficient extent to make it proper that a writ of mandamus to enforce a taxpayer's right to examine the books be directed to him. State v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 948.
45. Searching the public records for and on account of third parties is not an official duty of the register of deeds, and he is not required to account to the county for money received for such services. State v. Holm [Neb.] 97 N. W. 821.
46. A rule which provides that no erasures are to be made on any of the records of the police department, but red ink is to be used, relates only to material matters entered and not mere incidental errors in making the original record (an erasure of an entry made on the wrong line). People v. Greene, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 296.
47. May do so to learn facts about expenditure of municipal funds. State v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 948.
48. That a person is politically hostile to the administration is no excuse for refusing him access to the public records of a mu-cause they are officially inspected.[49] Discretion conferred by the legislature as to publication of reports of decisions cannot be judicially controlled.[50]

§ 4. Proof of records.—Records of another court cannot be judicially noticed.[51] The records themselves are the best evidence, but when they cannot be had, they should be proved by their legal custodian,[52] and he is the proper officer to certify to the genuineness of a court paper[53] or transcript,[54] where, by virtue of a statute a transcript is admissible.[55] A record cannot be proved by a transcript not authenticated as required by law.[56] An established copy of a lost record has all the force of the original.[57]

Journals of the legislature when competent as evidence import absolute verity and cannot be explained or altered by parol.[58]

§ 5. Crimes relating to records.—The stealing of records is made larceny in New York.[59] It is so, though bribery also be employed.[60] Such also constitutes unlawfully removing files.[61] nicipality. State v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 948.

49. A provision of a city charter that the custodian of records shall when requested submit his books to certain officials for inspection is not exclusive so as to preclude an inspection by a person not designated in the charter. State v. Williams, 110 Tenn. 549, 75 S. W. 948. The right of a grand jury to examine books of a municipality is not exclusive so as to prevent their examination by a private individual. Id.

NOTE. Right of access to records.—At common law every person or his agent may inspect public records whether executive, legislative, or judicial. He must however have a litigable interest to which the record and the information therein may be pertinent and this interest need not be wholly private but may be one which he is entitled to assert in right of the public. Re Caswell [R. I.] 27 L. R. A. 82, with extensive note.

By reason of statutes regulating examination of public records, this rule is no longer of universal application. See Re Chambers, 44 F. 786; State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 372; Hudson v. Eichstaedt, 60 Wis. 538; Lum v. McCarty, 39 N. J. L. 287; Newton v. Fisher, 98 N. C. 20. In Re Caswell, 27 L. R. A. 82, the court advising the clerk directed that access to the record of a divorce proceeding be denied to a newspaper which asked it for the purpose "of publication or otherwise." The reason was the public policy against dissemination of scandalous or corrupting publications.

50. The discretion vested in the commission relative to the publication of supreme court reports is not subject to control by the courts. Gillette v. Peabody [Colo. App.] 75 Pac. 18.

51. A circuit court in chancery will not take judicial notice of an old record of judgment in a probate court in determining whether an action on an administrator's bond is barred by the statute of limitations. Hall v. Cole [Ark] 76 S. W. 1076.

52. Records, where available, are the only competent evidence of their contents and when not available their contents should be proved by the legal custodian. Sykes v. Beck [N. D.] 96 N. W. 844. The absence from the county office of records or the absence from the records of material entries should be proved by the testimony of the official in charge, and not by a witness not connected with the office. Fisher v. Betts [N. D.] 96 N. W. 132.

53. McLanahan v. Blackwell [Ga.] 45 S. E. 785. Records in bankruptcy may be certified by the clerk of referee. Id.

54. In Florida, copies of records are admissible in all cases in that state when authenticated by the custodian and the seal of the court annexed. Hoodless v. Jernigan [Fla.] 35 So. 656.

55. Court records from another state not authenticated according to law are not admissible in evidence. A. Lehmann & Co. v. Rivers, 110 La. 1079. Where certified copies of records are admissible, certified copies of parts of the record are admissible. Brummer v. Galveston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 239. A certified copy of a certified copy of record held admissible where a statute provided that a certified copy would be admissible. Trevey v. Lowrie [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 18. In Texas, when it is shown by affidavit that certain records are lost, a certified copy is admissible (Williamson v. Work [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 266); but they must be proved by certified copy or substantial copies and not by testimony of the county clerk (Strohmeyer v. Wing [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 977).

56. The clerk of court and presiding justice did not certify the copies as required by statute. They were held inadmissible as evidence. Taylor v. McKee, 118 Ga. 874.

57. McLanahan v. Blackwell [Ga.] 45 S. E. 785.

58. Town of Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616. The public record of a private law is evidence of its terms and the journal of the legislature can be resorted to for no other purpose than to ascertain if it was constitutionally enacted. Town of Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616.

59. Attempting to steal public records is an attempt to commit larceny. People v. Mills, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 195.

60. Under a statute making it larceny to unlawfully obtain public records, one who obtains possession of them by bribery is guilty of the crime. People v. Mills, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 331.

61. Bribing a representative of the district attorney's office to secure possession of indictments violates the statute prohibiting the unlawful removal of a paper filed in a public office by authority of law. People v. Mills, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 331.

REFERENCE.[62]

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions, master and referee, referee and umpire or arbitrator.—The ordinary designation in actions at law is that of referee or auditor, while in proceedings in equity it is that of master.[63]

§ 2. Occasion for reference.—The appointment of a receiver and of special masters is a matter within the discretion of the court.[64]

Statutory reference as under Codes.—The ordering of a reference is often authorized by statute when the examination of a long[65] or "mutual"[66] account is necessary,[67] or where the issues are numerous and complex,[68] or where a claim against a decedent's estate is involved.[69]

A requested reference should not be allowed where the question involved is not of supreme importance to the parties, and the court is not much in doubt,[70] but collateral or provisional issues may be referred.[71] Whether or not a case may be

63. It is of little practical consequence whether the official designation be that of commissioner, examiner, referee, auditor, accountant, or assessor. Fenno v. Primrose [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 801, 804. Commissioners appointed to determine amount of compensation to be paid by commonwealth for water supplied to a public building, are referees and not masters in chancery. Selectmen of Danvers v. Com., 184 Mass. 502, 69 N. E. 320.

64. Such appointment will not be reviewed unless there is a gross abuse of discretion. Briggs v. Neal [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 224.

65. The court has the power to order a compulsory reference where the case involves the examination of a long account. Sartorius v. Gottlieb, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 112. A long account is one where so many separate and distinct items of account are to be litigated on trial, that a jury cannot keep the evidence in mind in regard to each of the items and give it the proper weight and application when they retire to deliberate on their verdict. Id. Examination of the books and by-laws of an association, held, not the examination of a long account. Kelly v. Oksall [S. D.] 95 N. W. 913. An account having 34 items on the debit side, and 12 material items on the credit side, held, not a long account. Sartorius v. Gottlieb, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 112. Where the only facts in the account that were disputed were whether or not 21 checks were forged. Held, not a long account. Kenneth Inv. Co. v. Nat. Bank of Republic, 96 Mo. App. 125, 70 S. W. 173. A suit by stockbrokers on an account stated, in which defendant pleaded fraud in the account and a counterclaim for moneys advanced for margins, and prayed an accounting and judgment for what might be found due him. Held, a long account. Ames v. French, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 452. Suit for attorney's services and disbursements, account contained 45 items of disbursements, 40 items for services, and credit for sums paid at 4 different times. Held, a long account. Lewis v. Snooks, 84 N. Y. Supp. 634.

66. An account may be "mutual" within a statute though it is claimed that one part is settled. Smith v. Scully, 66 Kan. 139, 71 Pac. 249.

67. To authorize a compulsory reference because a long account is involved, it must appear that an examination thereof is necessary. Necessity appeared on trial. Malone v. Sts. Peter & Paul's Church, 172 N. Y. 269, 64 N. E. 961. See, also, Jury, 2 Curr. Law, p. 633. Motion on pleadings to refer. Ewart v. Kass [S. D.] 95 N. W. 915.

68. A circuit court of the United States has this inherent power. Fenno v. Primrose [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 801. Conflicting affidavits, reference improper. Weiss v. Schleimer, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 611.

69. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2718, authorizing a reference to determine disputed claims against a decedent's estate, includes the case of an alleged gift causa mortis, even though there is no other property. Dickinson v. Hoes, 84 N. Y. Supp. 152.

70. Question of residence, change of venue. Bischoff v. Bischoff, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 126.

71. It is proper to order a reference to take testimony as to an alleged violation of an injunction (People v. Marr, 84 N. Y. Supp. 965) and also to determine the compensation referred, over the objections of one or both of the parties to a suit, must be determined in each case by the pleadings and the issues raised by the parties themselves.[72] A counterclaim cannot operate to make a case referable by compulsion which otherwise would not be thus referable.[73]

§ 3. Time and stage of proceedings.—Where statutes fix the time or stage of proceedings at which a reference should be ordered they of course govern.[74]

Facts or independent issues upon which the request for a reference is based should first be proved, then, if necessary, a reference will be ordered.[75] A referee should not be appointed to take and state accounts, over the objection of one of the parties, until the party objecting has had an opportunity to accept the other parties' statement of accounts.[76]

§ 4. Motion and order for reference, and stipulations or consents on voluntary reference.—A reference may be ordered by a judge in court or at chambers.[77]

The court, upon a practice motion, has no power to order a reference to hear and determine, but can only direct a referee to take testimony and report, with his opinion thereon.[78] An objection to a reference should be specific.[79]

A consent to an order of reference includes a consent to the proper exercise of all the powers possessed by the referee.[80]

§ 5. Selection and qualifications of the referee; his oath and induction into office. Removals and substitutions.—Public policy requires, on the part of referees, the avoidance of even the appearance of such relations as might bias the judgment consciously or unconsciously or swerve in the slightest degree their action.[81]

§ 6. General scope of reference and powers of referees or masters.[82]—A referee can do no more than the order of reference prescribes.[83] If he does the court of attorneys (Kane v. Rose, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 101; Cohn v. Polstein, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 431).

73. Complaint set out a cause of action on contract, this was put in issue by answer, which also set up a counterclaim requiring the examination of a long account. Held, error to order a reference of all the issues upon the motion of the plaintiff against the objection of the defendant. Kennedy v. Horikoshi, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 415.

74. Under Clark's Code N. C. § 421, fixing the time at which reference may be ordered, a reference cannot be ordered after ruling on demurrer before further pleadings are filed, as the cause must first be at issue. Penn Lumber Co. v. McPherson, 133 N. C. 287. Under Ohio Rev. St. §§ 5222, 6186, 6407, upon an appeal being taken to the court of common pleas, that court can refer the testimony taken and report given by a special commissioner under the authority of the probate court to a new commissioner appointed by the court for that purpose, and this reference in this state is held according to the Code of Civil Procedure. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156.

75. Issues raised by pleading should first be tried by jury, then, if accounting becomes necessary, a reference will be ordered. Malone v. Sts. Peter & Paul's Church, 172 N. Y. 269, 64 N. E. 961. In a suit under an alleged contract, by which plaintiff was to receive 1-3 of the profits for his services, held, contract should first be established in court, then court should either take the accounting or appoint a referee to do so. Weldon v. Brown, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 482.

76. Dissolution of partnership. Diehl v. Dreyer, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 247.

77. Reference ordered at chambers, case involved examination of long account. Montague v. Best, 65 S. C. 455.

78. A reference to ascertain an attorney's lien upon a motion for substitution of attorney in a pending action is not a reference to hear and determine the same, but to take evidence therein and report to the court; and hence the findings of the referee are not binding on the court. Frost v. Reinach, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

79. When an equitable counterclaim is pleaded to a purely legal action it is not error to overrule a general objection to a reference. Brown v. Keith [Neb.] 96 N. W. 59.

80. Power of amendment of pleadings. Perry v. Levenson, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 94.

81. Referee before report was made was appointed referee in cause in which defendant's attorneys were represented and by the advice of defendant's attorneys. Held, report would be set aside, even in absence of any evidence of influence, etc. Cronon v. Avery, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 1.

82. Under the Constitution of Wis. art. 7, § 23, court commissioners may be vested with "such judicial powers" as are "prescribed by law" not exceeding the powers "of a judge of a circuit court at chambers," by § 2815, Rev. St. 1898, such power is given, but his orders are subject however to review by the court. Longstaff v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 900.

83. Order prescribed that the referee "take may disregard this part and proceed with the part ordered as a basis.[84] A referee is not bound to follow findings of fact by the court.[85]

§ 7. Appearance before referee, hearing and adjournments, trial and practice thereon.—Where a reference is ordered on the pleadings, the first day for hearing the reference is to be regarded as the beginning of the trial.[86]

A referee has full authority to make such amendments as may be necessary to make the record exhibit the facts,[87] but the amendment must not substantially change the cause of action or embrace a new one.[88] He cannot strike out an amendment to pleadings allowed by the court before the cause was referred.[89]

On the trial before a referee, who is only an aid to the court, the rules of evidence are not adhered to as strictly as in a common-law action tried by a jury.[90]

Where a referee is empowered to hear, try and determine the whole action, it is not error for such referee to proceed with an accounting required without entering an interlocutory judgment on trial of the issues.[91]

Where it is necessary to continue a pending reference a notation should be made on the trial docket.[92]

§ 8. The report, its form, requisites, and contents, and return and filing.—The report of the referees must show that all qualifying acted, or it will be remanded for amendment.[93] The findings of a referee are limited by the terms of the order of appointment.[94] It must be based on the evidence,[95] and must state all the testimony and state the account between the parties." Held, did not authorize him to determine any part of the issue. Parcher v. Dunbar, 118 Wis. 401, 95 N. W. 370. The order directed the referee to take proof and report the unpaid and outstanding debts and liabilities and obligations of the firm, and the value of certain certificates. Held, the referee did not err in refusing to consider the accounts of the partners and the drawings of money from the firm by the partners. Sternbach v. Friedman, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 418. The referee on a reference to ascertain the amount of an attorney's lien cannot pass on the competency of the evidence, but must take what is offered, leaving its competency to the court. Frost v. Reinach, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

84. Parcher v. Dunbar, 118 Wis. 401, 95 N. W. 370.

85. Suit for the construction of a will, reference for an account of advancements. Lee v. Baird [N. C.] 46 S. E. 955.

86. Motion for amendment of complaint and the amendment is made at the trial though the motion is not decided till another day of the hearing, where the trial is to go on from day to day. Barnum v. Williams, 86 N. Y. Supp. 821.

87. An amendment of sheriff's return so as to show that the defendant therein did not reside in the county. Camp v. First Nat. Bank [Fla.] 38 So. 241.

88. Perry v. Levenson, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 94.

89. Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 722.

90. A referee appointed in certiorari to take testimony as to the valuation of certain assessed property is only an aid to the court. People v. Rushford, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 298.

It is within the discretion of an auditor to allow leading questions to be propounded to a witness whenever the ends of justice may thus be subserved. Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 722.

In a second trial, on a hearing before a referee, a party is entitled to introduce the record of the original trial, showing the other parties' testimony as to credits claimed and allowed. Sternbach v. Friedman, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 418. Where an accounting of a partnership engaged in the distilling of whisky was referred to a commissioner, the latter was entitled to accept an agreement of counsel that the cost of manufacturing whisky by the partnership was a certain price per gallon. McBrayer v. Hanks' Ex'rs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1699, 72 S. W. 2.

The right to reopen the case on motion after all the evidence has been closed, and to receive evidence in chief, is a matter for the discretion of the referee. Ocorr & R. Co. v. Little Falls, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 592.

Additional testimony ought not to be taken when the report of the special referee is before the court to be heard upon exceptions thereto. The proper way is to recommit the report to the referee for further testimony. Halk v. Stoddard [S. C.] 45 S. E. 140.

91. Young v. Valentine, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 633.

92. If the continuance is ordered but, through inadvertence, no notation is made on the trial docket, an order may be entered nunc pro tunc. Creedon v. Patrick [Neb.] 91 N. W. 872.

93. Three qualified, two signed, remanded for amendment. Hawkins v. Hall [Del.] 55 Atl. 4.

94. Where a disputed claim against decedent's estate is referred, the surrogate has no authority to render against the claimant an affirmative judgment on a counterclaim in favor of the estate. In re Wilmont's Estate. 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 686. The referee on a reference to ascertain an attorney's lien cannot award costs to the attorney against his client. Frost v. Reinach, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

Where referees are appointed to make an findings of fact, not conclusions of law,[96] as to all facts necessary to sustain a judgment.[97] Filing report out of time is an irregularity only.[98] After a referee's report has been taken up and filed, the referee has no further jurisdiction for the purpose of deciding any issue involved in the action,[99] but though findings exceed the scope of the reference it may be valid if no objection be made.[1] award a full statement in the award of the principles of law on which the referees proceeded is insufficient to submit to the court the correctness of these propositions, unless it can be held as a matter of law that the correctness of such propositions have been submitted by the referees to the court. Selectmen of Danvers v. Com., 184 Mass. 502, 69 N. E. 320.

Where a referee is appointed to determine the issues in an accounting, he can state the account between the parties without an interlocutory judgment that an account is necessary. Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643. Where it is ordered that plaintiff recover the damages which it had sustained owing to the use of certain presses by defendant over the profits which defendant could have made on other presses, held, the referee should determine what profits could have been made by defendant on any other machine. N. Y. Bank Note Co. v. Hamilton Bank Note E. & P. Co., 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 427.

95. Action of conversion, referee's report stated that findings as to damages were based partly on the referee's "knowledge and experience and partly on the entire record." Held, reversible error. Radway v. Duffy, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 116.

96. Master and servant. Master's right to discharge for breach of duty. Auditor's finding that certain matters for which discipline marks were applied were not waived under Vermont Laws, and that, until the use of the marks, master, by continuing to employ the servant with knowledge of his delinquencies, waived the same, are mere conclusions of law. Daniels v. Boston & M. R. Co., 184 Mass. 337, 68 N. E. 337.

A finding in divorce that plaintiff had been guilty of willful desertion is a conclusion of law. Fink v. Fink, 137 Cal. 559, 70 Pac. 628. A finding by a referee where the evidence is undisputed, though expressed as a finding of fact, is in effect a conclusion of law. Mt. Sinai Hospital v. Hyman, 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 276.

Under the laws of North Carolina declaring it to be to the interest of wards that their lands should be rented publicly, a finding by a referee that the guardian rented the land of his wards privately, and that "the best interests of his wards did not require a public rental of their lands," held bad as a conclusion of law, the finding should have been as to whether such renting had resulted in injury to the wards, there being some evidence to that effect. Duffy v. Williams, 133 N. C. 195.

97. Issues under a complaint, counterclaim, and reply, were tried before a referee, his report containing no findings concerning or reference to the counterclaim, was held insufficient to sustain a judgment. La Grange v. Merritt, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1092.

It is competent for a referee, in ascertaining the facts of any case, to find what facts are proved to be true and to draw such conclusions from these facts as a jury might have drawn in discharging the same function. Action for rent, the case turning upon possession, the referee found as a fact from sufficient evidence that the defendant was in the constructive possession of the property. Held, referee's finding will not be disturbed. Feil v. John F. Betz & Son, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 418.

Where an action was referred to commissioners to take an account between the parties, the commissioners properly allowed such claims as were undisputed, and rejected such claims as were disputed, with regard to which the pleader had the burden, and which were unsupported by proof. McBrayer v. Hanks' Ex'rs, 24 Ky. L. R. 1699, 72 S. W. 2.

98. However, the testimony must have been taken, and a decision reached on the questions submitted before the time expired. Creedon v. Patrick [Neb.] 91 N. W. 872. 90 Ohio Laws, p. 192, requiring reports of masters to be made within 90 days is directory only and retention after that period does not oust the jurisdiction. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156.

Objection to the filing of a report after the time designated in the order of appointment must be taken before, or at the time of filing a motion for a new trial, and before judgment is rendered on said report. Bradford v. Cline [Okl.] 72 Pac. 369.

A referee need not give notice of the filing of his report to a creditor of a corporation in process of dissolution, who has not appeared before said referee who has been appointed to state the account of the receiver. People v. American L. & T. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 139. "When a case involving an inquiry into accounts is referred to an auditor as an ordinary step preliminary to the trial, on the filing of the auditor's report it is discretionary with the court to hear and settle the case either with or without the aid of a jury." Petition to enforce mechanic's lien, auditor allowed six notes on the claim, court referred to jury question as to whether or not notes were received and accepted in payment of claim, jury answered no. Court then refused to determine whether petitioners had not received benefit of notes and hence they should be allowed. Held error. Moore v. Jacobs, 182 Mass. 482, 65 N. E. 847.

99. Report directed sale of certain real estate, but said nothing as to manner or terms of sale. Held, referee had no power after filing report to include in the judgment a provision directing the property to be sold on certain credit terms. Shrady v. Van Kirk, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261.

1. A report by an assessor of ultimate facts, where there has been no request to state evidence, to make rulings of law, or to find specific facts, and no exceptions to his report have been filed, said report will be confirmed. Action on guardian's bond, assessment of amount for which execution should issue. McKim v. Titus, 182 Mass. 393, 65 N. E. 806.

Where the decision of the referee is in

§ 9. Revision of report before the court. Objections and exceptions.—Exceptions to be of any avail should be taken before the referee,[2] though the court may, in its discretion, permit the filing of exceptions to the report at any time before judgment,[3] and in some jurisdictions motion for new trial will reach it.[4] A referee's report which has not been excepted to is conclusive, and cannot be contradicted on trial.[5] If, upon proper exceptions, it reasonably appears that the referee's report is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is against the evidence, it becomes the duty of the court to set aside such report. In general the findings do not become binding until they have received the approval of the court.[6] No exception need be taken in order to be heard in regard to a matter outside of the terms of the order of appointment, nor where the reference is simply to aid the conscience of the court.[7]

Exceptions must be clear and intelligible as to the ground of exception, or they will be referred back to the referee,[8] and should contain all facts and rulings short form it is to be treated as a general verdict. Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643.

Where the report of a referee directs the sale of certain real estate, but is silent as to the methods or terms of sale, it will be presumed that only a cash sale was ordered. Shrady v. Van Kirk, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261.

2. Auditor simply to report facts, no request to report evidence, report filed without evidence, two days later exceptions were taken. Held of no avail. Keith v. Marcus, 182 Mass. 320, 65 N. E. 421. Where a statute provides exceptions to the report of a referee within four term days, held, that where the report was filed on the day of adjournment, and defendant was given 30 days to file exceptions, and he filed them within 30 days, and before the first day of the next term, they were in time. Gibson v. Jenkins, 97 Mo. App. 27, 70 S. W. 1076.

An exception to the report of an auditor in an action for a partnership accounting, embodied in a pleading entitled "plaintiff's first amended supplemental petition," was not waived by the filing of another amended supplemental petition which did not include any exceptions to the auditor's report. Gresham v. Harcourt [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 808.

3. Kerr v. Hicks, 131 N. C. 90. Former accounts of an administrator having been settled, final account filed and exceptions taken, and referred to a special commissioner, persons claiming to be creditors may, with consent of court, file exceptions to former accounts, and the court may refer such accounts and exceptions, together with the fact of there being creditors, to the special commissioner. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156.

4. Under Laws 1891, p. 232, c. 100, § 10, the remedy of a party dissatisfied with the referee's decision is a motion for a new trial. Neeley v. Roberts [S. D.] 95 N. W. 921.

5. Auditor's report attempted to be contradicted by county treasurer's report, no exceptions having been taken, auditor's report held conclusive. Harper v. Marion County [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1044; Weitnaur v. Weitnaur, 117 Iowa, 578, 91 N. W. 815; People v. American L. & T. Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 139. Under N. Y. Gen. Pract. Rule 30, report of referee to assess damages can only be reviewed by exceptions taken, and if the exceptions are overruled then a case may be served. Bates v. Holbrook, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 129. Sayles' Civ. St. Tex. art. 1496, provides that the report of an auditor shall be admitted in evidence, but may be contradicted by evidence, where exceptions have been filed before the trial. Held, in an action by a principal to set aside settlements made with her agent and for an accounting, that evidence of items in the principal's favor was admissible under exceptions to the auditor's report, wherein she had pleaded such items, though her petition contained no such charge; the exceptions to the auditor's report becoming part of the pleadings in the case. Lumpkin v. Jaquess, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 10, 71 S. W. 618.

6. State Bank v. Showers, 65 Kan. 431, 70 Pac. 332. On the trial of exceptions before a jury it is not error to give a charge which in effect instructs the jury that, if there is not sufficient evidence to support a particular finding, their verdict should reverse that finding. Dickenson v. Moore, 117 Ga. 887. Where the evidence consists of depositions, which have been taken by the commissioner or in his presence, and is conflicting, the court will always review and weigh the evidence, and, if not satisfied with the findings, will overrule them. Tatum v. Tatum's Adm'r [Va.] 43 S. E. 184.

7. Where certain issues in a suit for the settlement of an estate were referred by the circuit court, it was authorized to hear a party interested in the distribution of a fund in court without answer or exceptions to the master's report, the equities of such party not having been one of the subjects referred. Butler v. Butler [S. C.] 45 S. E. 184. Where a reference in aid of the conscience of the court has been ordered, to take testimony and report concerning facts in dispute upon a motion pending before the court, it is not necessary to present exceptions to the report in order to contest the accuracy of the referee's findings, nor to make a formal motion to confirm the report. Frost v. Reinach, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

8. State Bank v. Showers, 65 Kan. 431, 70 Pac. 332; Hudson v. Hudson [Ga.] 46 S. E. 874.

necessary to show error.[9] Motion and not exception is the remedy for failure of the referee to qualify.[10]

A written remonstrance, filed in the trial court, to the acceptance of a committee's report is the proper way of reaching alleged errors in rulings on offers of evidence by the committee on hearing before it.[11] Assignments of error based on the ground that an auditor improperly overruled objections urged against the admission of evidence cannot be considered, unless the evidence objected to be set forth, either literally or in substance, in the exceptions filed to his report.[12] A party objecting to the finding of a referee must except to the court's action overruling his exceptions to the report, and call attention to the alleged error in his motion for a new trial, in order to make the objection available on appeal.[13] If no valid exceptions are filed a final decree will be entered without the intervention of a jury.[14]

§ 10. Decree or judgment on the report (confirmation or overruling, recommittal or additional findings, modification, conformity of judgment with report.) —A report has no judicial force until confirmed by the court.[15] Upon a question of fact it is entitled to the same consideration as the verdict of a jury, and is not to be set aside unless it is clearly and palpably against the weight of the evidence.[16] Where the report is merely tentative, however, the court is not bound by its findings,[17] and this is so although no exceptions are filed.[18] A referee's conclusions of law on the facts found will be overruled if inconsistent with the facts.[19] Motion to reject and set aside the findings and conclusions of a referee should state the reasons assigned for such action.[20] The court may modify the report,[21] or correct

9. Hudson v. Hudson [Ga.] 46 S. E. 874.

10. That an auditor was not sworn according to law does not constitute a ground for an exception of fact to his report. The proper remedy in such a case is a motion in due time, to recommit the case to the auditor. Harrison v. Harrison, 115 Ga. 999.

11. Plaintiff complains, not of rulings, but only of manner in which rulings were stated in report. Held, rulings cannot be reviewed on appeal. Geary v. New Haven [Conn.] 55 Atl. 584.

12. Trentham v. Blumenthal, 118 Ga. 530; Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 722.

13. Ark. Land Co. v. Ladd [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 322.

14. Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 722.

15. Court confirms part and sets aside part of report. Citizens' Bank v. Stockslager [Neb.] 96 N. W. 591. Under Rule 25 of the common law rules of the superior court of Mass. an action is not ripe for judgment until the assessor's report has been confirmed. McKim v. Titus, 182 Mass. 393, 65 N. E. 806.

Where the judge who ordered a reference to ascertain the amount of attorney's fees went out of office before the return of the testimony and report, a motion for a confirmation of the report is the proper practice in order to bring the matter again before the court. Frost v. Reinach, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 412.

16. Helb v. Hake, 203 Pa. 626; State v. Davis [Neb.] 92 N. W. 740. Pedigrees of various claimants to an estate. In re May's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 77; Camp v. First Nat. Bank [Fla.] 33 So. 241. Claim for services to decedent for a period of over 9 years, unsupported by written evidence. Held, even if evidence justified a doubt as to referee's findings, the advantage possessed by the referee in seeing and hearing the witness would, under the circumstances, require that his conclusions should be sustained. Hart v. Tuite, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 323. Under W. Va. Code 1891, § 10, c. 129, a report of account by a commissioner in an action at law, whether excepted to or not, is prima facie in its findings, but not conclusive, and may be repelled by evidence at the trial. State v. Barnes, 52 W. Va. 85. Under S. Dak. Laws 1891, p. 232, c. 100, §§ 9, 10, the circuit court has no power to modify the report of a referee, or to change his findings or his conclusions of law. Geddis v. Folliett [S. D.] 94 N. W. 431. A court has no power to set aside a referee's findings of fact on its own motion without the application of either of the parties. Neeley v. Roberts [S. D.] 95 N. W. 921.

The whole report cannot be set aside because the master did not respond therein to all the issues. Under the old chancery practice a review should be taken. In Ohio, under § 5222 Rev. St., the court may modify the report, hear testimony itself or recommit the case to the master. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156. Where there is evidence to support an auditor's findings exceptions thereto will be overruled. Weed v. Gainesville, J. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 885.

17. Parties entitled to a jury trial. Fenno v. Primrose [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 801. Compulsory reference. Gibson v. Jenkins, 97 Mo. App. 27, 70 S. W. 1076.

18. Question of damages in an action at law. Terry v. Naylor, 125 Fed. 804.

19. Weitnaur v. Weitnaur, 117 Iowa, 578, 91 N. W. 815.

20. Neeley v. Roberts [S. D.] 95 N. W. 921. An order setting aside the report of a referee is an intermediate order which in-clerical errors,[22] or recommit it for further testimony.[23] In actions at law the constitutional right to a trial by jury requires that exceptions of fact to an auditor's report shall be submitted to a jury,[24] the rule is otherwise in equity cases.[25] Motion for judgment on the report of the referee should be sustained where the report is regular in all respects, and no reason is assigned in the notice of motion of either party why it should not be accepted.[26] Where a judgment of the court is at material variance with the report of the referee, the proper method of correction is by motion in such court.[27]

§ 11. Appellate review.—In a suit for the construction of a will refusal to order a reference for an account of advancements before construing the will can be appealed from.[28]

If a party appears before a referee and submits his evidence he cannot on appeal deny the right of the referee to try the cause.[29] Where the order of a court setting aside a referee's report affirmatively shows the reasons of the court, an appeal from the order presents a legal question, and the discretion of the lower court is not involved.[30] In order to be reviewed on appeal an exception must have been filed to the report of the referee.[31] The finding of the referee stands upon the same volves the merits and necessarily affects the judgment within the meaning of S. D. Comp. Laws 1887, § 5237, which allows a review of such an order. Id.

21. The court has no power to add to or take away from the judgment of a referee in a material respect, and any attempt to do so is an irregularity. Shrady v. Van Kirk, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261. An application to add facts to findings in the report will be denied where the facts are of a mere evidential character, and not necessary to aid the proper presentation to the court of question of law arising on the committee's report. Geary v. New Haven [Conn.] 55 Atl. 584.

22. N. Y. Bank Note Co. v. Hamilton Bank Note E. & P. Co., 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 427.

23. The taking of additional testimony lies in the discretion of the court. Halk v. Stoddard [S. C.] 45 S. E. 140.

Where a question is not raised on a trial before commissioners acting as referees, it cannot be taken advantage of as a ground to have the case recommitted. Selectmen of Danvers v. Com., 184 Mass. 502, 69 N. E. 320.

Material facts not found by the master are presumed not to exist, but may be supplied by the court on hearing further testimony. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156.

Where facts arise which were not proved before the master, who has already reported and of the existence of which he had no notice, an order of reference will be advised to the same master to specially inquire and report as to those facts. Statute of N. J. provides that no divorce shall be granted if both parties have been guilty of adultery. Facts as to petitioner's guilt of said crime offered after report. Referred back. Knott v. Knott [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 559.

Under Civ. Code of Ga. 1895, §§ 4587, 4593, it is not incumbent on trial judge of his own motion to recommit the report to the auditor when it discloses with due certainty what rulings he made with regard to the admissibility of evidence, what his findings of law and fact were. Trentham v. Blumenthal, 118 Ga. 530.

24, 25. Weed v. Gainesville, J. & S. R. Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 885.

26. Neeley v. Roberts [S. D.] 95 N. W. 921. The court at special term is not authorized to deny judgment in divorce cases because of errors committed by the referee in the reception and exclusion of evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1229, providing "that in actions of divorce judgment cannot be taken of course upon a referee's report * * * Where a reference is made in such an action the testimony and other proceedings must be certified to the court by the referee with his report; and judgment must be rendered by the court." Goldie v. Goldie, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 389.

27. Shrady v. Van Kirk, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 261. An affidavit of defendant's attorney that the referee had stated that he had decided the case on its merits, and that it was by an inadvertence his report did not state that the complaint was dismissed on its merits, no affidavit by the referee himself being filed, will not warrant an order directing the amendment of his report so as to show a direction for judgment on the merits. Deagan v. King, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 428.

Where a case is referred to a committee to find the facts, and the court hears no evidence, it is error for it to base its judgment on a fact the contrary of which was found by the committee. Deed by non compos mentis held by lower court to be a fraud, committee expressly found contrary, true. Coburn v. Raymond [Conn.] 57 Atl. 116.

28. Lee v. Baird [N. C.] 46 S. E. 955.

29. Blanton v. Howard, 25 Ky. L. R. 929, 76 S. W. 511. Right to have issue submitted to jury waived. Montague v. Best, 65 S. C. 455. Where by stipulation a referee is appointed to give his opinion on costs, etc., to be allowed, and later by another stipulation he is given power to "hear and determine" the cause, and the first reference is merged in the second, held, defeated party is estopped to claim that referee had no authority to determine issues in first reference. Valentine v. Stevens, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 481.

footing, in respect to the evidence, as the verdict of a jury; and if supported by substantial evidence, it cannot be disturbed by an appellate court.[32] If the evidence is conflicting,[33] and the findings are approved by the trial court they will not be disturbed upon appeal.[34] In general the case will not be reversed on appeal for errors which do not prejudice the parties nor affect the merits of the cause.[35] Where the judgment of a referee is reversed by the appellate court, he has no further jurisdiction of the case after such reversal, unless it should be again referred to him by consent of parties.[36]

§ 12. Compensation, fees, and costs.[37]—In the absence of a statute the court has the authority and power to provide for the expense of an investigation before a referee,[38] and the discretion of the court in fixing compensation will not be reviewed.[39] Where referee's services are not paid by the parties to a suit, he is entitled to maintain an action therefor.[40] Per diem fees are reckoned in disregard of the fact that but a small part of a day may have been occupied.[41] Where the referee fixes allowances in proceedings before him or on an audit, the question of correctness of awards granted by him depends upon the facts of each case.[42] In order to take advantage of an error committed by a referee in fixing the amount of an award, such error must be specifically pointed out in the exceptions filed to the report.[43]

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

§ 1. The remedy. A. Nature and office.—Reformation is an ancient head of equity jurisdiction, founded upon the administration of a protective or preventive justice,[44] and is appropriate when on reducing an agreement or transaction to writing either through mistake common to both parties,[45] or through the mistake of one party accompanied by the fraud or inequitable conduct of the other[46] the written instrument fails to express the real agreement or transaction. In such case, the instrument may be corrected or reformed so as to truly represent the agreement or transaction actually made or entered upon,[47] the object sought not being to make a new agreement but to establish and perpetuate the one already determined upon.[48] In granting relief under this remedy, the court exercises a very high and delicate jurisdiction,[49] and should proceed with great caution.[50]

(§ 1) B. Right to remedy.—In general, a mistake of law, pure and simple, is not adequate ground for relief by way of reformation of a written instrument,[51] and if an agreement expresses the thought and intention which the parties had at the time and in the act of concluding it, no relief, affirmative or defensive, will be granted with respect to it;[52] but where the parties, in reducing an agreement to writing, fail by mistake to embody their intention in the instrument, either because they do not understand the meaning of the words used or their legal effect,[53] or where through a mistake of the parties or the draftsman, there is a failure to express the actual contract contemplated by the parties, owing to the use of inapt words,[54] a court of equity will grant relief by reforming the instrument, even though the language be precisely that agreed upon.[55]

Under proper circumstances, equity will always reform an instrument for mistake of fact.[56] It is not enough, however, to show that one of the parties made a mistake;[57] no fraud being alleged or proven, it must be made to appear that there was a mutual mistake and that the contract as written does not express the agreement as actually intended by the parties,[58] and, where there is mistake of fact on both sides, but as to one fact by the one party and another and different fact by the other party, there is a failure of meeting of minds, and the proper remedy is not reformation but rescission.[59]

It is essential that the mistake be material,[60] and it must result without the fault or negligence of the party seeking relief,[61] for equity will not relieve against the result of complainant's own negligence, as where he signed the contract without reading it, or having it read to him, there being no extenuating circumstances,[62] though if the defendant's conduct was fraudulent,[63] or he bore a relation of confidence or trust to complainant,[64] or complainant relied on a confidential agent,[65] or the agent of defendant,[66] or the scrivener made a mistake,[67] the contract may be reformed, though complainant failed to read it before signing.

Adequate remedy at law, as usual in equity, bars relief.[68]

Suit must be timely brought and equity will not decree reformation where complainant, after knowledge, neglects for a long period to take the necessary steps,[69]

Thomas v. Conrad, 24 Ky. L. R. 1630, 71 S. W. 903. Where parties through ignorance, inadvertence, or lack of appreciation of their acts, have made a contract different from what was intended, a court of equity will reform the instrument, evidencing it so as to conform to the agreement as made. especially where the rights of third persons will be prejudiced,[70] though laches will not be imputed to complainant before discovery of the mistake or before the time when by the exercise of due diligence he should have discovered it,[71] nor, where there is dispute as to the construction of an instrument and complainant postpones asking reformation, on the advice of counsel, until an adverse decision by a competent court,[72] nor where complainant delays in the hope and belief of the success of overtures for an amicable adjustment of the controversy, which are not definitely rejected until just before the filing of the bill,[73] and where it does not appear that equal or superior rights of third persons have intervened because of delay in bringing the action, nor that the delay has worked any disadvantage or prejudice to the defendant, there is not such laches as will preclude the granting of relief.[74]

(§ 1) C. Instruments reformable.—Almost all written instruments may be reformed when the proper occasion is furnished;[75] thus, under proper circumstances, equity will reform an account stated,[76] a bill of lading,[77] a contract to convey land,[78] a judgment,[79] a lease,[80] a mortgage,[81] partnership articles,[82] a policy of life[83] or fire insurance,[84] promissory notes,[85] a receipt,[86] a supersedeas or other judicial bond;[87] but it is in respect of deeds of conveyance that the remedy is most often invoked.[88] Thus a warranty deed conveying land in excess of that actually sold,[89] or which describes less land than actually sold,[90] or one describing an entirely different parcel of land, are proper subjects of reformation.[91]

70. Where, though the consideration is furnished by the husband, a deed is taken in the wife's name, and the husband learning of this soon after permits the wife to deal with the property as her own until her death eleven years thereafter, equity will not decree reformation by substituting the husband's name in the conveyance. A void instrument will not be reformed,[92] and where reformation is sought of a deed, a valuable, as distinguished from a good, consideration must be shown.[93]

§ 2. Procedure. A. Jurisdiction and form of proceeding.—In those jurisdictions where the distinction between law and equity is maintained, the remedy by reformation cannot be had, in an action at law; it must be by suit in equity;[94] but in Texas an ambiguity in a description may be explained or removed, in an action to establish a boundary line, without the aid of a court of equity,[95] and in New York an action will lie on an administrator's bond from which the amount of the penalty was omitted, without reformation.[96]

Where equity has once acquired jurisdiction to reform an instrument it may retain it and grant such other relief as the circumstances may warrant,[97] and where an action at law has been begun on a policy of insurance equity will entertain a bill asking that the action at law be stayed until a reformation of the policy can be obtained, and that after reformation, judgment be entered for the amount found to be due on the policy.[98]

Equity will not, in a collateral proceeding, grant relief by reformation.[99]

When reformation is the only relief sought a previous demand is essential,[1] but where in addition to the reformation a recovery or other relief is demanded,[2] or where a request to rectify would have been vain and useless, no prior demand is necessary.[3]

Where the object sought by a bill is achieved before trial by the execution of a new contract, there is no longer occasion for the interposition of the court.[4]

(§ 2) B. Parties.—In all cases of mistake in written instruments equity will interfere as between the original parties,[5] or those claiming under them, such as personal representatives,[6] assignees,[7] voluntary grantees.[8] Reformation will be decreed as against a grantee and his grantees to the last one,[9] or purchasers from them with notice.[10] A purchaser from the grantor may maintain a bill to reform the grantor's prior deed to another,[11] and after death of the assured, the assignee of the beneficiaries may be substituted in a suit to reform a life insurance policy and recover its surrender value.[12] Likewise a mortgagee, or, if dead, his personal representatives are proper and necessary parties with the other beneficiaries in a suit to reform a fire insurance policy made payable under condition to the mortgagee.[13] A bill may be maintained against the assignee of one of the parties.[14]

(§ 2) C. Pleading and evidence.[15]—In an action to reform a written instrument it is necessary to set forth the terms of the original agreement, and also the agreement as reduced to writing, and point out with clearness wherein there was a mistake.[16] It is also necessary to aver and show that the mistake was mutual, where there is no fraud;[17] it is sufficient to plead the ultimate facts, however,[18] since the evidence should not be pleaded,[19] and it is not necessary to allege when complainant discovered the mistake,[20] nor to aver a prior demand or request to correct, if such request would have been vain and useless.[21]

In many jurisdictions reformation may be sought by way of a defense to an action on the contract,[22] and in Indiana evidence of mistake is admissible under the general denial.[23]

In New York the defense of the statute of limitations must be pleaded in strict compliance with the terms of the statute. An answer which alleges that a cause of action is outlawed is defective, inasmuch as it may not have been when action was commenced.[24]

The law presumes that a written instrument embodies the agreement in which the minds of the parties met,[25] unless the presumption is rebutted in a proceeding brought to reform the instrument;[26] and upon him who seeks to correct it rests the burden of establishing the mistake.[27]

In the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, in the execution and delivery of a deed or other written contract, no evidence can be heard of prior or contemporaneous agreements,[28] and in general parol evidence is not admissible to vary a written instrument,[29] but it is admissible to establish the fact of a mistake, in what it consists, and to show how the writing should be corrected in order to conform to the agreement actually made.[30] Testimony of one of the parties is admissible to show the intention of the parties in making a deed,[31] and where it is sought to reform a deed absolute in form into a mortgage, evidence of the relation of the parties to each other is proper.[32]

The contract must be proven, either by being introduced or in other customary ways,[33] and the proof must relate to the time when the instrument was executed.[34]

To justify reformation the mistake must be established by proof so clear, convincing, and satisfactory, as to leave no room for doubt.[35] A mere preponderance of evidence is not sufficient,[36] though a clear preponderance is.[37] If the testimony is conflicting or of such undecisive character as to raise a substantial doubt in the minds of the court the instrument as written must stand,[38] but the fact that there is a conflict of testimony or evidence will not operate to deprive one of relief if the mistake be clearly established.[39]

(§ 2) D. Trial and judgment.—As in other cases, instructions should respond to the issues,[40] and submit the facts as the evidence presents them.[41] The decree should be responsive to the issue presented, should be full and specific as to the correction or reformation made,[42] and, the court having jurisdiction of the subject, and all parties interested in the question being before it, is conclusive of the question.[43]

RELEASES.

This topic will treat of formal releases relegating settlements and the effect of the release as an accord and satisfaction to other appropriate topics.[44]

§ 1. Nature, form and requisites.—A writing in form a receipt may be a good release.[45] A receipt for money and a release of all claims may be joined in the same instrument.[46]

A release must be supported by a consideration.[47] If it fails, the releasor may recover on the original debt.[48] A written release imports a consideration.[49] Ac-

45. A receipt acknowledging payment in full for loss of time and medical bill incurred on account of injuries, and disclaiming liability to him on any other account is a good release in the absence of proof of fraud or other error superinducing the settlement. Kelly v. Homer Compress Co., 110 La. 983.

46. A writing acknowledging receipt of money and releasing an employer from all contracts previously entered into. Cammarata v. Pa. Coal Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 787.

47. Voluntary release of debt just before creditor's assignment and bankruptcy. Muschel v. Austern, 84 N. Y. Supp. 956. Promise to the maker by a bona fide indorsee that the indorsee would not look to him for payment but would hold the payee. Muller v. Swanton, 140 Cal. 249, 73 Pac. 994. Release of retiring partner by creditor of firm. Bronx Metal Bed Co. v. Wallerstein, 84 N. Y. Supp. 924.

Payment of a liquidated sum unconditionally due is not sufficient consideration. Harrison v. Murray Iron Works Co., 96 Mo. App. 348, 70 S. W. 261. In this case all claims including other unliquidated ones were released.

Sufficiency of particular considerations: One dollar on an agreement to employ for a definite time held a sufficient consideration. Quebe v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 442. Payment of a liquidated and undisputed claim is no consideration for a release of other liquidated claims. Woodall v. Pac. M. L. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1090. Giving employment for one month under a release, the consideration of which was "employment for such time only as may be satisfactory to said company," held sufficient. Carroll v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 69 S. W. 1004. Surrender by a bondsman of a right to compel settlement of accounts held a sufficient consideration for release of liability on the bond. German-American Bank v. Schwinger, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 393.

48. One who received cotton from his debtor and applied the proceeds thereof to the debt and gave a receipt, but was afterwards forced to pay such proceeds to one holding a landlord's lien on the cotton, might, notwithstanding the receipt, enforce repayment from his debtor. Ball, B. & Co. v. Sledge [Miss.] 35 So. 447.

49. Payment of their proportion of a debt after maturity by two of three joint obligors ceptance of part of a sum due and parol release of the balance based on no other consideration is void.[50]

§ 2. Parties to release.—The parties to be bound must all join in the release.[51] It is not necessary that the administrator release a cause of action accruing to next of kin, where there is only one. That one may release.[52]

§ 3. Interpretation, construction and effect.—Where the evidence as to a release is uncontradicted, its construction is for the court.[53]

A release takes effect from the date of execution[54] and delivery.[55] A distinct right, especially if it subsequently matures, is not release,[56] nor is a subsequent cause of action arising out of defective performance of an agreement in the release.[57] A release of the entire cause of action against one joint obligor will release all;[58] but a release to one not liable will not release the one who is liable,[59] nor does it release a distinct claim or liability arising out of the same transaction.[60] The release must be a technical one under seal to have this effect.[61] At common law, the discharge of all joint debtors is commensurate with that of any, and mere payment of part of it is not sufficient consideration for a release of the whole.[62] It has been held that unless the entire cause of action be released to one, the others remain liable.[63] A covenant not to sue one of several joint obligors is no release as to the others.[64]

The release of one joint tort feasor releases all, even though it be stipulated is not sufficient consideration for an oral release, though a statute would give the release effect if in writing. Miller v. Fox [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 893.

50. Where one of several guarantors was released on payment of his proportionate share. Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. McCormick, 97 Md. 703.

51. The dissolution of a partnership does not release any member from partnership debts unless there is a contract to that effect with the creditors. Bronx Metal Bed Co. v. Wallerstein, 84 N. Y. Supp. 924.

52. For unlawful death, the widow who was sole beneficiary accepted a sum of money and gave a release. Mattoon G. L. & C. Co. v. Dolan, 105 Ill. App. 1.

53. A release of all claims, when the injured party knew that his throat and breast had been hurt, held to be a release for injury to eyesight, though it was not known to exist when the release was executed. Quebe v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 442.

54. A release executed on a date subsequent to the time of trial is not admissible as evidence to affect the matters in controversy. Rosenthal v. Rudnick, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 611.

55. Where a release in which defendant agreed to employ plaintiff so long as he saw fit was not delivered until after plaintiff went to work on defendant's oral agreement to employ him for life. Boggs v. Pac. Steam Laundry Co., 171 Mo. 282, 70 S. W. 818.

56. A release of claims from son to father held not to be a release of the son's equitable claim to land held in trust. Suit v. Suit, 97 Md. 539.

57. Release of damage caused by excavation held not to be a release for damages caused subsequently because of insufficiency of a retaining wall built under the agreement of release. Rector, etc., of Church of Holy Communion v. Paterson Extension R. Co., 68 N. J. Law, 399.

58. Plaintiff released all claim of damages for injuries caused by the joint negligence of an express company and a street car company, to the express company. Hubbard v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 173 Mo. 249, 72 S. W. 1073. Plaintiff accepted money from one of several dealers who had entered into an agreement not to sell to him and done other acts to the injury of his business and gave him a release for injuries so caused. Dulaney v. Buffum, 173 Mo. 1, 73 S. W. 125. A sheriff and defendant executing a writ in an unlawful manner committed a trespass for which plaintiff compromised with the sheriff and released him. Burns v. Womble, 131 N. C. 173.

59. Where a passenger on a railroad train is hit by a bullet negligently fired from a shooting gallery. Dufur v. Boston & M. R. R., 75 Vt. 165.

60. Release of a railroad company from liability for delivering cars of grain without requiring the bills of lading does not release the party who took and converted the grain. Iddings v. Citizens' State Bank [Neb.] 92 N. W. 578.

61. Parol release of one of several joint and several makers of a promissory note consisting in an unsigned release of one joint maker indorsed on the note. Valley Sav. Bank v. Mercer, 97 Md. 458.

62. Where a creditor released one partner on payment of his proportionate share of a debt. Hatzel v. Moore, 120 Fed. 1015.

63. Where one injured by the joint act of several accepted a sum as part satisfaction and gave a release to the one making payment. Louisville & E. Mail Co. v. Barnes' Adm'r [Ky.] 79 S. W. 261.

64. A bank accepted their proportionate share from some of several guarantors and covenanted not to sue them for the balance. Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. McCormick, 97 Md. 703.

in such release that the others are not to be discharged.[65] Such a stipulation may defeat the release of any,[66] or may reduce the release to a mere covenant not to sue the promisee and thus give effect to it.[67] In some jurisdictions, such a reservation is legal.[68] Where a surety on appeal for one joint tort feasor pays the judgment and is subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor, his release of one tort feasor will not be a release of the others,[69] especially where he has reserved a right to enforce the judgment against them.[70] Release of a partner individually does not release firm debts.[71]

§ 4. Defenses to or avoidance of release.—A release procured by fraud,[72] as by misreading it, is void,[73] unless the party was negligent[74] and need not be rescinded before bringing action.[75] Gross inadequacy of consideration imports fraud.[76] A misrepresentation as to the legal effect of a release will not avoid it.[77] Money received in consideration of a release fraudulently obtained need not be tendered back before bringing action,[78] but it has been otherwise held as to one

65. Where two of several joint tort feasors secured a release pendente lite. McBride v. Scott [Mich.] 93 N. W. 243. Where a suit was compromised with some of several joint tort feasors and a release executed on their settlement of part of the claim. Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 66 N. E. 133. Directors of the selling and those of the buying corporation are not joint tort feasors in a sale of corporate property. Id.

66. A release of one joint tort feasor on his paying his share of a judgment obtained in an action for fraud "so far as the same can be done without releasing the others" does not discharge the latter. Barnum v. Cochrane, 139 Cal. 494, 73 Pac. 242.

67. Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 66 N. E. 133, reviewing American and English cases and adopting this as the solution of the conflict as to whether such reservations are legal.

68. In Louisiana, a release of one codebtor releases all unless the creditor expressly reserves his rights as against the others. Moore v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67. In New York, the discharge of one joint debtor does not discharge the others unless such an intent affirmatively appears. Booth Bros. & H. I. Granite Co. v. Baird, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 495. A release to one member of a dissolved partnership on payment of his proportionate share held not to be a release of the others. Siefke v. Minden, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 631.

69, 70. Kolb v. Nat. Surety Co., 176 N. Y. 233, 68 N. E. 247.

71. Evidence held to show that a release given by a partner was only a release of individual claims and not a release of partnership claims. Smith v. Williams, 85 N. Y. Supp. 506.

72. Release procured by representations that it was a receipt for money paid for sick expenses. Clayton v. Consol. Traction Co., 204 Pa. 536. A release procured from one lying sick in bed on representations that it did not amount to anything, but simply stated that plaintiff did not bear any ill will against defendant, whereupon plaintiff signed without reading, it was held void. Western R. v. Arnett, 137 Ala. 414. Where plaintiff executed a release on statements made by defendant's physicians that injuries sustained by his wife were slight when they knew she was seriously hurt, it was held that fraud was shown. Jones v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1082.

73. Where a receipt in full for all damages had been misread to plaintiff and he signed it without reading it. New Omaha, etc., Elec. L. Co. v. Rombold [Neb.] 93 N. W. 966.

74. Where plaintiff, after he had recovered from an injury caused by defendants' negligence, went to their office and signed a release without reading it, though he was able to read. Osborne v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 685. Being "somewhat hurried" is not a good excuse for signing a release without reading it (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vanordstrand, 67 Kan. 386, 73 Pac. 113), but where the signature was procured by fraud, negligence in signing does not prevent the defrauded party from avoiding the release (Western R. v. Arnett, 137 Ala. 414).

75. Where plaintiff failed to return the amount received under a void release before bringing an action for damages for personal injuries sustained. Ind., D. & W. R. Co. v. Fowler, 201 Ill. 152, 66 N. E. 394; Jones v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1082.

76. $125.00 as a consideration for a release from liability for the wrongful death of a miner forty years old held so inadequate that the release would be set aside. Russell v. Dayton C. & I. Co., 109 Tenn. 43, 70 S. W. 1. Release obtained from illiterate, weakminded or distressed party under circumstances indicating artifice, undue importunity, inadequate consideration or other inequitable circumstance, may be avoided. Release obtained by misrepresentations of value of estate by one representing the interests of parties adversely interested. Mullaney v. Mullaney [N. J. Err. & App.] 54 Atl. 1086.

77. One joint tort feasor procures a release by representations that it will not affect the liabilities of the others. Jackson v. Pa. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 532.

78. Release obtained by employer's protective association's agent by making false representations. Hedlun v. Holy Terror Min. Co. [S. D.] 92 N. W. 31. Where an agent turned in an account falsely representing that he had expended certain moneys held in his possession and received receipts in full, it was not necessary for the principal to return the property received in such accounting before bringing action for another obtained by duress.[79] One is not estopped to set up fraud in procuring a release by the mere fact that he accepted employment from the party released.[80] A joint obligor cannot in equity avoid his express promise to pay a sum and be released on the ground that it effects a contribution between tort feasors.[81]

§ 5. Pleading, proof and practice.—Release as a defense must be pleaded.[82] In an action of debt on an executor's bond, a release pleaded puis darrein continuance, held a waiver of all previous pleas as to this person's interest.[83] Delivery of a release[84] or whether fraud was used in procuring it is a question for the jury.[85] Evidence of fraud in procuring a release must be such as would satisfy a reasonably fair mind.[86] Validity of a release may be tried as part of the whole case in Missouri.[87] A mere admission has been held insufficient to prove a release.[88] Instructions as to effect of release are grouped in the note.[89] A release may be ad-accounting. Price v. Stout, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 334. A motion for nonsuit cannot be granted on the ground that money paid for a release for personal injuries has not been repaid or tendered. Austin v. Piedmont Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 135. Where plaintiff alleges that the sum paid was a gift to him, he need not return it. Western R. v. Arnett, 137 Ala. 414.

86. Where plaintiff, an illiterate man, testified that before he signed the release the defendant read it to him incorrectly and made false representations as to its effect, the jury found fraud. Dorsett v. Clement-Ross Mfg. Co., 131 N. C. 254. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of fraud in obtaining a release of claims for money paid as margins on a stock gambling contract. Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exch. [N. H.] 56 Atl. 754. Evidence held sufficient to show that release of claim from son to father was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation: $2,000.00, employment at $12.00 per week and chance of succeeding to father's business, for release of over $5,000.00. Hearn v. Hearn, 24 R. I. 328. Evidence held to show that a release by a widow of her interest in her husband's estate was procured by fraudulent representations as to its value by one who had been her agent, but the evidence was sufficient to show he was acting at the time in the interest of persons adversely interested. Mullaney v. Mullaney [N. J. Err. & App.] 54 Atl. 1086. In an action for injuries, evidence held to authorize the submission of an issue to the jury whether a release had been procured by fraud and false representations by the railway company's agents that the plaintiff's attorneys were not prosecuting her case and she would not get anything unless she accepted what they offered. Hidden v. Exeter, H. & A. St. R. [N. H.] 57 Atl. 333. Where releasor's testimony was not in all respects consistent, where it was alleged the release had been procured by fraud, this fact went to the weight of the testimony and did not authorize the court to withdraw the question of fraud from the jury. Id. Parol allusions to future employment made at the time of executing a release cannot be incorporated into it, nor are they sufficient to establish fraud. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vanordstrand, 67 Kan. 386, 73 Pac. 113.

Admissibility of evidence: Statements made by defendant's agent after a release was signed held admissible in an action to avoid a release obtained by fraud as having a bearing upon plaintiff's good faith in pressing her claim of fraud. Keefe v. Norfolk Suburban St. R. Co. [Mass.] 70 N. E. 46.

An instruction that a release of a claim for damages was binding on plaintiff, unless when he executed it he did not understand its contents, is not erroneous in requiring a finding that he did not understand them. Galloway v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. An instruction that a release is binding unless defendant concealed its true import and falsely represented that it was only a receipt is not erroneous in requiring a finding of that particular misrepresentation where it is the only one charged. missible in a collateral proceeding,[90] but a void release is not admissible for any purpose.[91]

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

§ 1. Organization as a corporation, and status of society.—In order to constitute a society, there must be a membership of persons associated together which collectively constitute the society, with such officers as are required, or at least a definite collective body acting as a society.[92] While for certain purposes a church congregation remains in legal contemplation, the same body though its membership has changed, yet it cannot sue and be sued, contract and be liable the same as a person natural or artificial.[93] An organization for religious and social purposes, but having no business for common benefit and profit, is not a partnership.[94] The general rules of corporation law apply to a religious society when incorporated.[95] An association formed to extend aid to sick members and defray burial expenses is not a religious society.[96]

§ 2. Membership.—A church has the right to expel one of its members,[97] and when regularly expelled he has no longer the rights of a member.[98]

§ 3. Ministers.—Religious organizations have the right to try and remove ministers in accordance with the laws and ordinances of the order.[99] The power to appoint to an office includes the power to remove the incumbent so appointed, unless the power of removal is expressly lodged in some other body.[1] An appointment of a minister being silent as to length of time is an appointment at will, which may be ended on reasonable notice.[2] But, in the absence of any provision therefor, a minister employed at will is not entitled to notice that the question of

91. Where a release not delivered nor under seal, nor executed by the corporation purported to be released, was offered as evidence against the corporation reserved from its provisions. Leeds v. N. Y. Tel. Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 121.

92. A mission started by a church, at which persons attend religious services, and children attend Sunday school, but at which no society for the purpose of religious worship has been formed, the enterprise being supported by the church, does not constitute such an entity as is capable of becoming the beneficiary in a resulting trust. Statutes which provide that members of congregation shall have power to elect a number of persons, who shall constitute a body corporate on being registered as provided, make the persons so elected, not the congregation, the corporation. Acts 1802, c. 111, which provide as above stated, so construed. Stubbs v. Vestry of St. John's Church, 96 Md. 267. A church organization made a corporation by Laws of 1797, p. 474, c. 51, did not lose its character as a corporation by an abortive attempt to incorporate under a later act. 1. Under a deed of incorporation, providing that the vestry of a church shall have power to appoint the rector, there being no provision as to removal, though the congregation are expressly authorized to remove all other members of the vestry, the vestry, which is the corporation, has the power to remove the rector. terminating his relation as minister will be considered.[3] Quo warranto is the proper remedy against persons usurping offices in a chartered church.[4]

§ 4. Powers and liabilities of society in general.—A religious society cannot legislate for its divisions of territorial area,[5] and this is true even though they are recognized by law as corporate or political entities.[6] Where an amount is due from an unincorporated church, the real debtors are the members of the church at the time the debt was contracted, who can be shown to have in some way sanctioned or acquiesced in its creation.[7] And though the members of a voluntary association contracting on its behalf become jointly liable, yet if the person contracting with them knows that the expenses of the association are raised by assessment on and voluntary contribution by the entire membership, the members are not liable in solido.[8] The property liable for the debt of an unincorporated church is that controlled by or held in trust for the use of the congregation at the time the debt was contracted.[9] Funds subsequently accumulated cannot be subjected to the payment of the debt.[10] A religious corporation created for temporal purposes and having no power to expel a member from the church is not liable in damages to a member expelled by the congregation.[11] The chief officer of a religious organization, which is neither a corporation nor a partnership, has no implied authority to bind the other members by a note given in pursuance of his promises.[12] Payment on such notes by such officer from the funds of the organization does not amount to ratification.[13]

§ 5. Property and funds.—Where a congregation voluntarily places itself under the power of an ecclesiastical organization, its property must be taken and held according to the laws of that organization,[14] and the members of such congregation may be enjoined from using such property contrary to the determination of the Morris Street Baptist Church v. Dart [S. C.] 45 S. E. 753. Under the form of government of the Presbyterian Church, giving the presbytery power to visit particular churches and to order whatever pertains to their spiritual welfare, the presbytery, on its own motion, can direct an elder to cease to act, without citing him to appear and to be heard in his own behalf. 11. Reinke v. German Evangelical L. T. Church [S. D.] 96 N. W. 90.

12, 13. The chief officer of a religious organization, where the members put in their property, lived as one family and had everything in common, agreed with plaintiff when she joined that she might withdraw and have her money returned whenever she wished. Held, that on withdrawal the officers had no authority to bind the other members to pay her by a note given by them. Teed v. Parsons, 202 Ill. 455, 66 N. E. 1044.

14. Where a congregation worships according to the forms and rites of the Roman Catholic Church, but is not connected with the ecclesiastical body known as such church, and has never placed itself under the power of the head diocese and where it is alleged that the archbishop of the diocese refused to permit the congregation to purchase property for a church, and, in opposition to its refusal, it bought the property and paid for it, and employed a pastor without any knowledge that he had been assigned by the archbishop, and paid him the salary he demanded, and acted independently of the authority of the Roman Catholic Church in every respect, the court is without authority to decree that a trustee holding title to the church property for the use of the congregation shall convey it to the archbishop of the diocese. Dochkus v. Lithuanian Ben. Soc., 206 Pa. 25.

A charter creating a "Sisters of Charity" corporation, which empowered it to acquire real estate in fee simple, is a sufficient legislative sanction to its acquisition of real estate conveyed by deed, within the Declaration of Rights, art. 38, declaring void every gift, sale or devise of land to any religious sect, order or denomination without prior or subsequent legislative sanction, as to render said conveyance valid. Rogers v. Sisters of Charity, 97 Md. 550.

governing authorities of the organization.[15] In order to convey the society's property, the persons so doing must be properly authorized.[16]

The fact that a majority of a religious society secedes from a church and organizes a new church of a different denomination does not entitle them to share in the benefits of the fund or property held in trust for the original society.[17] In an independent religious society having a congregational form of government, and owing no fealty or obligation to a higher authority, the will of the numerical majority of its members will control as to all questions of church government and as to the use of the church property.[18] Where a party has no legal right to vote, he must be challenged at the proper time.[19] A decision reached by voting cannot be set aside on the ground that a member was not allowed to vote, when, though the member was challenged, the vote was not in fact rejected.[20]

§ 6. Jurisdiction of courts.—Liability to an indictment and conviction in the temporal court, for the offense charged in the ecclesiastical proceeding, forms no bar in the ecclesiastical court.[21]

In order to have its decision binding upon the secular courts, the ecclesiastical court must be organized according to the constitution of the church.[22] The proceedings of ecclesiastical courts on matters within their jurisdiction will not be

15. Bonacum v. Harrington [Neb.] 91 N. W. 886. Under the rules of the Presbyterian Church, the legal title to church property is vested in the trustees of the congregation, and the session controls the spiritual welfare of the churches, but has no control over the property thereof. Held that, in the maintenance of public worship, trustees of the congregation must respect the wishes of the session as to the use of the house of worship. Dayton v. Carter, 206 Pa. 491.

16. Where the records of a church showed that a resolution authorizing the consolidation of the church with another church was adopted by a vote of five to six at a meeting held after due notice, in accordance with the rules of the church, and the resolution directed the trustees to make the conveyance of the church property, and such conveyance was also authorized by the quarterly conference of the church, a contention that the deed was executed by the trustees without authority is not well taken. Jones v. Sacramento Ave. M. E. Church, 198 Ill. 626, 64 N. E. 1018.

Under the constitution and by-laws of the Baptist Church, the trustees have no right to make any contracts affecting the real property of the church, hence an agreement by them for the sale of the church property without the consent of the congregation is invalid. Calvary Baptist Church v. Dart [S. C.] 47 S. E. 66.

17. Certain church society had the right under a deed of trust, to use a church building, and, while doing so, a majority of the society seceded and formed another church of a different denomination. Held, that the majority will be enjoined from excluding the minority from the building. Cape v. Plymouth Cong. Church, 117 Wis. 150, 93 N. W. 449; Dochkus v. Lithuanian Ben. Soc., 206 Pa. 25.

This case must be distinguished from those where the action of the majority pertain merely to the temporalities of the church. Cape v. Plymouth Cong. Church, 117 Wis. 150, 93 N. W. 449.

18. Gipson v. Morris, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 645, 73 S. W. 85.

19. Where members of a parent church had for several years permitted the members of certain chapels organized and conducted by the church to vote concerning questions relating to dispositions of current funds to which such members had contributed, and members of such chapels were permitted to vote without challenge on a resolution increasing the salaries of the pastors of such chapels, a member of the parent church was estopped to maintain a suit in equity to enjoin the carrying out of the resolution adopted by the vote of such members on the ground that they had no legal right to vote. Davie v. Heal, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 517.

21. Satterlee v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 393.

The general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church had the right to make and has the power to enforce, through the proper diocesan court, Canon 2, of tit. 2, of the general convention, providing that every minister of the church shall be liable to presentment and trial for certain offenses, including that of crime or immorality, there being nothing in the provisions of the canon violative of or in conflict with the personal civil rights of those liable to be tried thereunder. Id.

22. Hatfield v. De Long, 31 Ind. App. 210, 67 N. E. 551. Under the constitution of a church providing that no one who participated in the trial by which a local society expelled a member shall sit as a member of the appellate tribunal, a member of the local society who attended throughout the trial, but abstained from voting because she did not want to vote, and a member who was present at the meeting, though not at the commencement thereof, but merely held up his hand in response to a request by the expelled member for all persons who did not vote to indicate it, are ineligible for the appellate tribunal. Id.

reviewed by the civil courts,[23] but they may inquire whether the judgment was the act of the church or of persons who were not of the church, and who consequently had no power to render it,[24] and it makes no difference whether the decision is by one man or several so long as the mode of procedure is in accordance with the laws of the order.[25] Where an appeal has been taken to a higher ecclesiastical tribunal, the civil courts have jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of a sentence pronounced against the accused until the appellate ecclesiastical tribunal has disposed of the appeal.[26] The civil courts will interfere with churches or religious organizations when the rights of property or the civil personal rights of individuals are involved.[27] Where rules and regulations are made by the proper church functionaries, and such rules are authorized by the laws of the order, they will be enforced by the courts when not in conflict with some law bearing upon the subject contained in the rules.[28]

§ 7. Actions by or against society or members.—The general rules of law as to nature and grounds of action,[29] parties, pleading,[30] and evidence,[31] govern in actions by or against the society or its members.

23. Irvine v. Elliott, 206 Pa. 152; Satterlee v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 393; Bonacum v. Harrington [Neb.] 91 N. W. 886. Civil courts have no power to revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline, or of exclusion from membership. Bonacum v. Murphy [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1030. Irregularity under the canons of the church in the organization of a diocesan court of the Protestant Episcopal Church; refusal of such a court to entertain a challenge taken by a clergyman on trial before it to one of the members of the court; supposed insufficiency of the evidence upon which the accused could be convicted, under the provisions of a certain canon, are questions of procedure, where they involve construction of the canons of the church, and depend upon the judgment of the ecclesiastical court, over which the civil courts can exercise no power of revision or control. Satterlee v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 393.

24. Resolution of expulsion. Bonacum v. Murphy [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1030.

27. Satterlee v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 393; Morris Street Baptist Church v. Dart [S. C.] 45 S. E. 753. There is no vested property right in a clergyman to exercise the functions of his office to the end that he may earn and have a salary. Satterlee v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 393.

Where the right of property in the civil courts is dependent on the question of doctrine, discipline, ecclesiastical law, rule or custom, or church government, and that has been decided by the highest tribunal within the organization to which it has been carried, the civil courts will accept that decision as conclusive, and be governed by it in its application to the case before it. 28. Alexander v. Bowers [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 342.

29. An action will not lie by a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church against the bishop of his diocese and a member of his congregation for trespass for malicious conspiracy, or evidence that the defendants united to charge the priest with violation of church law and forgery, and testified to the same in an ecclesiastical court, which barred plaintiff from the ministry, though the acts of defendants might to some extent have been influenced by vindictiveness. Irvine v. Elliott, 206 Pa. 152.

30. An allegation, in a pastor's suit for salary, that defendants were members "of a religious society," is not an allegation of incorporation. Riffe v. Proctor, 99 Mo. App. 601, 74 S. W. 409.

31. In an action by persons claiming to be the trustees of a church, seeking an injunction to prevent defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in the control of the church property, it being admitted that in January, 1901, a judgment was duly rendered to the effect that defendants were the legally elected trustees of the church, the burden was on plaintiffs to show that at an election regularly held since that time, they had been elected to succeed defendants. African Baptist Church v. White, 24 Ky. L. R. 646, 69 S. W. 757. In an action on a note alleged to have been executed to plaintiff's assignor for services rendered by him as pastor of defendant church the petition averred that the church, in regular meeting, authorized its directors (trustees) to execute the note. The answer alleged that the execution of the note was unauthorized and was procured by the pastor fraudulently representing that the congregation had authorized it. The reply set out in haec verba a resolution adopted by the congregation authorizing execution of note, etc. Rejoinder put all this matter in issue. Held proper to admit evidence of the adoption of the resolution, and showing the steps taken at that meeting and those previously held in regard to the settlement of the church's indebtedness to the pastor. REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

§ 1. Right to remove from state to Federal court.—The primary test is that the cause must be within the original jurisdiction of the Federal court, as defined by Act of Congress,[32] both at the time of its commencement and of its removal.[33]

§ 2. What is a "suit" or "action" so removable.—A condemnation proceeding,[34] an appeal from an assessment therein, though required originally to be brought in a state court,[35] and a claim against a decedent,[36] are removable suits or actions; but a proceeding to open a default judgment is not removable.[37]

§ 3. Nature of controversy or subject-matter and existence of Federal question.—Controversies as to shipment of diseased cattle into a state,[38] rights of a homestead settler,[39] and bridges over government canals,[40] do, and controversies as to the ownership of land,[41] the collection of state taxes,[42] or penalties,[43] do not involve Federal questions, and consequently are, or are not removable. The complaint, unaided by judicial inference and notice,[44] or by the plea,[45] must clearly show[46] that the question was directly involved.[47]

32. Hyde v. Victoria Land Co., 125 Fed. 970. Where state had changed county lines and a county was in two districts, the suit might be removed to either district without regard to the location of the county seat. The boundaries of district not affected by state legislation. Id.

33. Huntington v. Pinney, 126 Fed. 237.

34. A proceeding under a Missouri statute by a railroad to condemn a right of way is a suit removable by a nonresident defendant, although the railroad could not originally have brought it in the Federal court, owing to the state statute. Union Terminal R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 119 Fed. 209.

35. The appeal of either party from the assessment in condemnation proceedings for a railroad under Iowa Code, § 2009, is to be tried as an ordinary action, and so is a removable suit, though the action must be begun in a state court. Myers v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 312, 91 N. W. 1076.

36. A suit may be removed though founded on a claim originally presented to a probate court against the estate of a decedent. Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 Fed. 638.

37. Where a citizen of another state against whom a judgment had been obtained on a service by publication, applied under Iowa Code, § 3706, for a retrial, he cannot remove case as the Federal court has no power to modify or reverse a state judgment. Davis v. Harris, 124 Fed. 713.

38. An action against a carrier for shipment of diseased cattle into a state in violation of United States and state law is removable. Mastin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 123 Fed. 827.

39. Suit by a daughter of deceased homestead settler to recover an interest in land which after his death was patented to his widow involves Federal question of the construction of homestead law. McCune v. Essig, 118 Fed. 273.

40. A suit against U. S. officers for changing the location of a bridge over a canal they were constructing. Woods v. Root [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 402.

41. Complaint alleging ownership of land and wrongful ouster by defendant, but not showing that it concerned a quarry on school lands granted by congress. Wash. v. Island Lime Co., 117 Fed. 777.

42. Back taxes. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 81 Miss. 90. An action by a state in a state court to collect a tax is not removable as involving a Federal question, though the petition might be demurred to as showing a tax on interstate commerce. Com. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co., 123 Fed. 457.

43. An action to subject a foreign corporation to penalties imposed by state statute against monopolies, and not mentioning constitution or law of the United States. South Carolina v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 117 Fed. 727.

44. Wash. v. Island Lime Co., 117 Fed. 777.

45. An action by a state official against a railroad to collect back taxes does not involve a Federal question, as it is the complaint and not defendant's plea which decides the matter. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 81 Miss. 90.

46. In a quo warranto proceeding to determine the right of defendant to be a public corporation under laws of state, an allegation that its proceedings were in violation of the U. S. constitution is too general. People v. Brown's Valley Irr. Dist., 119 Fed. 535. Where bill does not assert a right based upon any law or the constitution of the United States, or ground of relief derived

§ 4. Diversity of citizenship and alienage of party.—Where the parties on one side are all citizens of states or foreign countries,[48] different from those of which any party on the other side is a citizen, or from that where suit is brought,[49] the suit is removable, unless no one resides in the district, but this last requirement may be waived.[50] Citizenship of natural persons is a question of fact,[51] to be properly alleged,[52] but in the case of corporations, the citizenship of the stockholders is regarded, and is now conclusively presumed to be that of the state where it is incorporated, and reincorporation,[53] or consolidation in another state,[54] does not affect the matter. from either, the case was remanded; wherever jurisdiction is doubtful such is the duty of the court. City of Wichita v. Mo. & K. Tel. Co., 122 Fed. 100.

47. It must appear that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding the Federal question to justify a removal. South Carolina v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 117 Fed. 727. A case cannot be removed from a state to a Federal court as one arising under the constitution or laws of the United States, unless plaintiff's complaint, bill, or declaration shows it to be a case of that character. Minn. v. Northern Securities Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 598, 48 Law. Ed. —. The "full faith and credit" clause of the constitution has nothing to do with the conduct of individuals or corporations. Held, invoking the rule in this case did not make a case arising under the constitution or laws of the United States. Id.

48. An action by a citizen of state where action is brought against a corporation organized in another state, and against a corporation organized in a foreign country, may be removed by joint petition, as either defendant if sued alone could have removed. Roberts v. Pac. & A. R. & Nav. Co., 121 Fed. 785. An alien defendant cannot remove a suit where he is a resident of the state in which the suit was brought [25 U. S. Stat. 434, § 2]. Eddy v. Casas, 118 Fed. 363.

49. Where a citizen of Tennessee sued a Mississippi railroad and an Illinois palace car company in Mississippi, alleging that he was injured in a car controlled by both jointly, the Illinois car company cannot remove the cause, as the railroad was a citizen of state where action was brought and the controversy was not reparable. Dougherty v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 122 Fed. 205.

50. Where neither plaintiff nor defendant is a resident of the state where the suit is brought, it is not removable under judiciary act of 1887-88, but if both parties waive their objections to the jurisdiction, as by consenting to an order relating to matters in controversy, the cause will not be remanded. Foulk v. Gray, 120 Fed. 156. The defendant may remove a cause though neither party lives in district, and Federal court would not originally have had jurisdiction, as defendant may waive that provision. Duff v. Hildreth, 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356.

51. Where plaintiff, unmarried, resided in Missouri, but made a number of trips to, and proved up homestead in Oklahoma, held the facts did not establish a change of domicile so as to defeat defendant's right of removal. Corel v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 123 Fed. 452.

52. Allegation of residence without allegation of citizenship not sufficient. Dinet v. Delavan. 117 Fed. 978.

53. A foreign railroad corporation may remove an action for local prejudice though it has complied with N. C. Laws 1899, c. 62, making a corporation a domestic one on filing its charter, as its citizenship cannot be changed so as to affect the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Southern R. Co. v. Allison, 190 U. S. 326, 47 Law. Ed. 1078. A foreign railway company does not, because of a compliance with statutes providing that no foreign railway company shall operate its road in the state until it becomes a citizen thereof, become a domestic corporation so as to prevent it securing the removal of a cause against it to the Federal court. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Hibbs [Ky.] 78 S. W. 1116. A fortiori, where the company had not complied with the statute. Id.

Contra, a foreign railroad corporation which has filed its charter and acceptance under N. C. Laws 1899, c. 62, has become domesticated and cannot remove its cause to the Federal court on the ground of local prejudice. Beach v. Southern R. Co., 131 N. C. 399.

54. A railroad corporation formed in Ohio by consolidation of a Missouri railroad corporation, and railway corporations of three other states is under Mo. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1059, 1060, still a citizen of each of the four states and not entitled to remove an action from a Missouri state court. Winn v. Wabash R. Co., 118 Fed. 55.

55. Where an administrator pro tem. was appointed to contest the claim of the administratrix, but the claim was actually contested by the heir, who took the appeal, the latter was the real party in interest and his citizenship determined the right to removal. Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 Fed. 638. Where Iowa Code, § 2009, provided that on appeal from an assessment in condemnation proceedings the landowner shall be plaintiff and the railroad defendant, contention that the railroad cannot remove because it is really plaintiff, is groundless. Myers v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 312, 91 N. W. 1076. An interpleader suit may be removed where the two defendants are citizens of different states, though one is a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, but the court will transpose the parties, so that they will be on opposite sides. First Nat. Bank v. Bridgeport Trust Co., 117 Fed. 969.

56. In an action against an unincorporated association consisting of several thousand members, under Ky. Civ. Code of Prac. § 25, permitting one party to sue or defend on behalf of many, the treasurer may appear, and being a citizen of another state he may remove cause. Boatner v. American Exp. Co., 122 Fed. 714.

57. Where in an action against a nonresident to set aside certain land contracts, inal,[58] or unnecessary[59] parties are to be considered. A plaintiff may join a citizen of the same state, with a citizen of another state, as defendants, if he has in fact a joint cause of action against them, even though his purpose is to thereby prevent a removal to the Federal court.[60]

Where a controversy is separable, as where a different state of facts must be proved as to each defendant,[61] or the negligence alleged is not joint,[62] or one is liable at law and another in equity,[63] a defendant may remove, though joined to a defendant who is a citizen of the state of which plaintiff is a citizen. The question of separability must be determined from the complaint,[64] unaided by the petition for removal.[65] Suits against a corporation and its stockholders to prevent the register of deeds was joined for the purpose of preventing their being recorded, he was a mere formal party, and did not defeat the nonresident's right to a removal. Hyde v. Victoria Land Co., 125 Fed. 970.

58. Where a railroad seeking to condemn a right of way over another railroad, joined as defendants the latter railroad, the lessor railroad (99 years' lease) and the original owners of the land, it was held that all of the latter were merely nominal parties and did not defeat the right of the lessee railroad to remove. Seaboard A. L. Ry. v. N. C. R. Co., 123 Fed. 629. Where relief prayed was cancellation of deed under which defendant claimed, the joinder of other nominal parties will not defeat his right to remove. Wirgman v. Persons [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 449. In an action to foreclose against the original mortgagor and its receiver and against the present holder of the equity of redemption, the former are not nominal parties, though the petition for removal showed that they had been released from all liability by a valid contract with plaintiff, as the defense was personal, nor was the controversy severable. United States Mortg. Co. v. McClure, 42 Or. 190, 70 Pac. 543.

59. Where in an ejectment suit against a foreign corporation, the resident agent, who has merely served notice on plaintiff that he will be held liable for trespass, is joined as defendant, it will not prevent a removal as he is not a proper party. Carothers v. McKinley M. & S. Co., 122 Fed. 805.

60. Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 128 Fed. 85; Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 122 Fed. 286; Union Terminal R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 119 Fed. 209; Ross v. Erie R. Co., 120 Fed. 703; Free v. Western Union Tel. Co., 122 Fed. 309; Boatner v. American Exp. Co., 122 Fed. 714; Kan. City S. B. R. Co. v. Herman, 187 U. S. 63, 47 Law. Ed. 76. In a suit for the death of an employe against a lessee railroad, the joining of the lessor railroad held not to be solely for defeating the right to removal where the question of the lessor's liability was still an open one in that state. Person v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 118 Fed. 342.

61. Where an action against a railroad and its employe is based solely on the alleged negligence of the employe, it presents a separable controversy, and the railroad may remove it. Helms v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 120 Fed. 389. A suit to quiet title against a number of defendants, where the bill does not aver that they claim through a common source, is severable, and a defendant of a different state may remove the cause as against him. Carothers v. McKinley M. & S. Co., 116 Fed. 947. A suit to set aside a conveyance between two corporations for fraud, where the directors of the grantor corporation were joined with the two corporations as defendants, presents a separable controversy as to the two corporations, and may be removed by them. Geer v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 428, 47 Law. Ed. 1122. In an action against a lessee and a lessor railroad for injuries, where by Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 1060, the latter is declared to remain liable, there is a separable controversy which may be removed by lessee. Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 122 Fed. 286. Where an employe sues a railroad for injury due to the negligence of a fellow employe, and joins the lessor railroad, there is a separable controversy and the lessee railroad may remove the case. Willard v. Spartanburg, U. & C. R. Co., 124 Fed. 796.

Contra, an action against a lessor and a lessee railroad for death of employe of latter does not involve a separable controversy entitling the lessee to remove. Person v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 118 Fed. 342.

62. An action against a railroad and an engineer for concurrent negligence, where there was an allegation that the railroad was negligent in not providing a careful engineer, is separable and removable as to that particular matter, and effect is to remove entire case. Southern R. Co. v. Edwards, 115 Ga. 1022. In an action against a railroad for the death of a person caused by willful and reckless acts of its servants, in which the servants were joined as defendants, but there was no allegation that the company participated in these acts, the railroad may remove as there is a separable controversy. Davenport v. Southern R. Co., 124 Fed. 983.

63. Where a remainderman sued a life tenant and an insurance company with whom the latter had insured, and then compromised a claim to recover the full amount of insurance and to hold the life tenant as trustee, there was a separable controversy as regards the insurance company. Harley v. Home Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 792.

64. Harley v. Home Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 792. Where a passenger sued engineer and conductor, citizens of the same state as himself, and a foreign railroad for injuries received from the derailment of a train, and there was only a general allegation of negligence against the former, held under S. C. Code Civ. Proc. § 163, requiring a concise statement of facts constituting cause of action, that the complaint was insufficient against the former and that the railroad could remove the case. Bryce v. Southern R. Co., 122 Fed. 709.

65. Fogarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 123 Fed. 973.

a disposition of its property,[66] or against a railroad and its servants,[67] or receivers,[68] or a connecting railroad,[69] for concurrent acts of negligence,[70] though they are dismissed as to some defendants,[71] are not separable where all parties are served with process.[72]

§ 5. Prejudice and local influence and denial of civil rights.—Where prejudice or local influence is shown, any defendant who is a citizen of a different state from that of which plaintiff is a citizen, may remove a case, though some of the defendants are citizens of the same state as plaintiff,[73] or of the state where suit is brought,[74] and though there is no separable controversy.[75] That a suit involves a large loss to taxpayers,[76] unless it is transferable to another county,[77] or a prosecution against Federal officers,[78] may show local prejudice, and the fact that it is to be tried by a judge,[79] or that the prejudice is natural,[80] is immaterial.

§ 6. Amount in controversy.—In suits on land contracts,[81] or to enjoin injury

66. In a suit by stockholders against a corporation and its directors, and against a majority stockholder who was not an officer, to enjoin the disposing of its property, the latter cannot remove the suit as there is no separable controversy between him and complainants. Hanover Nat. Bank v. Credits Commutation Co., 118 Fed. 110. Where a stockholder of a domestic corporation sues that corporation and a foreign corporation to prevent the latter from securing control of the former, the latter cannot remove the suit, though incidental relief may be sought against it only, as the controversy is not severable, nor can the domestic corporation be aligned with complainant as it is not a party in the same interest. MacGinniss v. Boston & M. C. C. & S. Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 96. In a suit by stockholders against a foreign corporation and its resident officers to prevent the former from conveying its property to another corporation, the controversy is not separable. Campbell v. Milliken, 119 Fed. 981. But as to a suit to set aside a conveyance compare Geer v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 428, 47 Law. Ed. 1122.

67. Where an employe sues railroad for injury from defective condition of cars, and other defendants for negligent operation of cars, there is no separable controversy entitling railroad to a removal. Fogarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 123 Fed. 973.

68. An action against a railroad and its receivers where both charged with negligence, does not present a separable controversy entitling the receivers to remove it. Rupp v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co., 121 Fed. 825.

69. Where an employe sued the railroad he worked for and the connecting railroad (a corporation organized in another state) for injuries received on a defective car received from the latter, the latter cannot remove as there is no separable controversy. Hoye v. Great Northern R. Co., 120 Fed. 712.

70. In a suit against a railroad and another person where complaint alleges concurrent acts of negligence, there is no separable controversy. Weaver v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 125 Fed. 155. Where railroad is charged with negligence in accepting an insane passenger, and the conductor with negligence in not protecting the other passengers, concurrent negligence is charged and the controversy is not severable as to the railroad. Dougherty v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 126 Fed. 239.

71. Where a railroad and its division superintendent and train dispatcher were sued, and at the close of the testimony the case was dismissed as to the two latter against plaintiff's objection, the railroad could not then remove the case, as the right was not dependent on the aspect the case developed at trial. Howe v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 30 Wash. 569, 70 Pac. 1100.

72. Where two defendants were sued on a joint and several liability, and only the nonresident one was served with process, and plaintiff elected to proceed to trial, the nonresident defendant may remove the cause, as the election operated as a severance of the controversy. Berry v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 118 Fed. 911.

73. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 116 Fed. 985; Barlett v. Gates, 117 Fed. 362.

75. Holmes v. Southern R. Co., 125 Fed. 301.

Contra, where a necessary defendant is a resident and a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, and there is no separable controversy, the cause cannot be removed for local prejudice by another nonresident defendant. Campbell v. Milliken, 119 Fed. 982.

76. Suit by a county against its treasurer and the surety company on his bond for a large default which involved large loss to taxpayers tending to create prejudice and local influence as prominent citizens involved. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 116 Fed. 985.

77. Local prejudice not shown by mere fact that municipal corporation was plaintiff where state judge had power to transfer to another county. Board of Water Com'rs v. Robbins, 125 Fed. 656.

78. A criminal prosecution for assault where defendant was at time making an arrest as a deputy marshal is removable under U. S. Rev. St. § 643. Com. v. De Hart, 119 Fed. 626.

79. Case may be removed for prejudice or local influence though to be tried by a judge, as his fitness cannot be inquired into. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 116 Fed. 985.

80. Though moral justification for widespread sentiment in favor of one party may be very great, yet such sentiment is ground for removal. Bartlett v. Gates, 117 Fed. 362.

81. Where land contracts sought to be set aside were alleged in complaint to be of greater value than $2,000, case was re-to land,[82] the value of the land is the amount in controversy, but in suits as to mortgages,[83] or liens, it is the value of these last.[84] To make an amount exceeding $2,000 different paragraphs of complaint cannot be tacked together,[85] but the complaint may be amended,[86] and where it has not been filed,[87] or is silent, the averments of the petition will control.[88]

§ 7. Transfers between courts of the same jurisdiction.—Under an act providing that all causes pending in a court in one town should be transferred to the same court in another town, a cause originally tried in the former town, which, when the act took effect, was awaiting determination on appeal, is, when the appeal is dismissed, within the jurisdiction of the court at the latter town.[89] Except for the purpose of determining if the case is a transferable one,[90] or where the transfer is not in due form,[91] and seasonably[92] demanded, the original court loses jurisdiction entirely,[93] and the only remedy is by appeal.[94] Irregularities in the transfer may be disregarded,[95] or waived by the parties,[96] if not objected to movable. Hyde v. Victoria Land Co., 125 Fed. 970.

82. A suit to enjoin permanent injury to land may be removed where the value of the land exceeds $2,000, and other jurisdictional facts appear. Sheriff v. Turner, 119 Fed. 231. An action for $1,000 damages and to enjoin defendant from maintaining a nuisance is removable though there is affidavit that cost of removal will not exceed $500 as the amount involved is not measured by that solely. Amelia Milling Co. v. Tenn. C., I. & R. Co., 123 Fed. 811.

83. In a suit by owner of 1-325 of real property to cancel mortgages thereon for $475,000, the value in dispute is not the amount of the mortgages, but 1-325 thereof, but Thayer J. concurs in remanding case because there was alternative prayer for judgment for $1,509. Cowell v. City Water Supply Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 53.

84. In a suit to foreclose a judgment lien for $827 on certain lands, $827 is the amount in dispute, not the value of the lands. Wakeman v. Throckmorton, 124 Fed. 1010.

85. In an action for death of decedent where there were two paragraphs in complaint, each demanding $2,000, the sum in controversy was not $4,000, nor where the Illinois statute limited damages to $5,000 was that the sum in controversy, nor did the prayer for other and proper relief affect the matter here. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 Ind. App. 597, 68 N. E. 923.

86. After an action for $2,250 had been removed, plaintiff filed a supplemental pleading alleging that there was an error and the amount sued for should be reduced $448 and made a motion to remand, which was granted with costs to defendant. W. T. Hughes & Co. v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co., 126 Fed. 687.

87. Where action for personal injuries begun by service of summons was removed before complaint was served, and the complaint since served only asked for $2,000 damages, the court refused to remand because of previous decision of which it expressed disapproval. Coffin v. Phila., W. & B. R. Co., 118 Fed. 688.

88. In an action to prevent defendant from interfering with plaintiffs' business, the petition for removal, averring that more than $2,000 was in controversy, is controlling, where the bill does not show the contrary. Duff v. Hildreth, 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356.

89. Sperling v. Stubblefield [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1172.

90. Where a counterclaim was interposed exceeding the jurisdiction of the municipal court, the latter had authority to determine if it was a proper one, requiring the transfer of the case. Jourdain v. Luchsinger [Minn.] 97 N. W. 740.

91. Under N. Y. Laws 1902, c. 580, § 25, subd. 4, action may be tried in municipal court where brought, though not the proper one, unless it is transferred on demand of defendant before issue is joined. A demand to transfer to "some other district" is insufficient. Fischer v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 254.

92. Under Greater N. Y. Charter, § 1366, providing cause could be removed from municipal court after issue joined and before an adjournment was granted on defendant's application, the right was not lost where all the adjournments were on court's own motion or on plaintiff's application. Solis v. Balbas, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 658. Defendant does not waive his right to removal from municipal court by an adjournment before issue is joined, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3216. Duke v. Caluwaert, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 623. Where defendant at the call and time of filing answer moved to remove the case from the municipal court to the county court and the sureties were sworn, the former court had no authority to grant a continuance before passing on the removal. Meisen v. Rothfeld, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 447.

93. Act Cong. March 11, 1902, § 7, transferring all pending causes to new Southern district of Texas over which it would originally have had jurisdiction, deprives the other districts of jurisdiction to make any orders. Stillman v. Hart [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 359. But a plea filed with district court after the case has been certified to the common pleas division, where it is turned over with the other papers, is properly filed. Wildes v. Draper, 24 R. I. 262.

94. Duty of municipal court to transfer case on motion of defendant where none of parties resided in district, and on its refusal defendant's remedy is an appeal from the judgment. Goldman v. Jacobs, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 781.

95. Where a cause has been transferred from one circuit to another in same state because of the disqualification of the judge, the transmission of the original order of before trial.[97] In Rhode Island, where a cause is transferred from the district court to the common pleas for jury trial, pleas left with the clerk of the district court and by him sent over to the common pleas with the papers in the case are properly filed, though the clerk of the common pleas omitted to mark them filed.[98]

§ 8. Procedure to obtain and effect the removal.—Under 25 U. S. Stat. 435, the petition for removal must be filed before defendant is required to plead or answer in the state court,[99] and accordingly a petition filed after a judgment nisi,[1] or an appeal from probate court,[2] or a plea in abatement,[3] or an affidavit of defense,[4] is too late, even though plaintiff failed to file his complaint;[5] but defendant does not waive his right by taking action in state court under excusable misconceptions,[6] or where the state court has denied his petition.[7] A special appearance in a state court for the purpose of removal does not constitute a submission to the jurisdiction of the state court for any other purpose.[8] The petition, without notice,[9] where there is no separable controversy, must be made by all[10] of the original,[11] or real[12] defendants, averring clearly the jurisdictional facts.[13] transfer, instead of a certified copy is a mere irregularity, and on collateral attack jurisdiction will be presumed. Finley v. Chamberlin [Fla.] 35 So. 1.

96. Where plaintiff after removal to city court served a reply entitled in that court, the case will not be remanded. Duke v. Caluwaert, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 623. Where parties agreed to transfer a case from justice to circuit court, the latter had jurisdiction as under S. D. Comp. Laws 1887, § 4904, a voluntary appearance is equivalent to personal service of summons. Ramsdell v. Duxberry [S. D.] 96 N. W. 132.

97. Here error in date of filing order of transfer from district court to county court waived. Scrivener v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 214.

98. Wildes v. Draper, 24 R. I. 262.

99. Where Missouri practice act § 597 (as amended Laws 1901, pp. 85, 86) declares defendant shall demur or answer on or before the third day of the term, the defendant may file petition for removal not later than that day. Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 122 Fed. 286. Nonresident defendant may file petition of removal at time he moves for vacating a default judgment. Cady v. Associated Colonies, 119 Fed. 420. Stipulation of counsel extending the time of filing affidavit of defense extends time of removal. Muir v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338.

1. Under Va. Code 1887, §§ 3260, 3284, providing that plea in abatement must be filed before demurrer or answer or judgment nisi has been entered. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Hubbard, 117 Fed. 949.

2. Where claim was contested in probate court in Illinois, which was a court of record, it cannot be removed from the circuit court where it was taken on appeal, though there was to be a trial de novo. Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 Fed. 638.

3. A plea in abatement is an answer within meaning of abatement statute, and filing an amended complaint does not extend the time of removal unless the action only then became removable. Pa. Co. v. Leeman, 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48.

4. Petition for removal must be filed before the time to file an affidavit of defense expires, though the latter is not a pleading in Pennsylvania, but its sole use is to prevent a judgment by default. Muir v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338.

5. Defendant not entitled to extension of time to remove because plaintiff failed to file complaint, but should have moved to dismiss the action. Lewis v. Clyde S. S. Co., 131 N. C. 652.

6. Where an action against a citizen of the state and a railroad organized in another state was dismissed as to the citizen of the state, and the railroad in ignorance thereof requested a change of date of trial, it did not thereby waive its right to removal; and a petition for removal filed within 19 days of dismissal held to be filed within a reasonable time. Fogarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Fed. 941. Where petition and bond for removal were filed on the last day allowed for filing answer, and the court, over objection, postponed the hearing on the application for the order, the request of counsel, in order to sustain his right of removal, of an extension of time to plead was not an appearance sufficient to confer jurisdiction. Waters v. Cent. Trust Co. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 469.

7. Where state court denies motion for removal defendant does not waive right by defending himself in the state court. Pa. Co. v. Leeman, 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48.

8. Paul v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 1024.

9. No notice necessary of application to remove. Muir v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338.

10. Where there is no separable controversy, and one of defendants has lost his right to remove by failure to exercise it in time, the cause cannot be removed by the joint petition of all the defendants. Abel v. Book, 120 Fed. 47. All defendants should join in petition for removal because of diversity of citizenship, and failure to join cannot be obviated by a rearrangement where citizenship of some not shown. Huntington v. Pinney, 126 Fed. 237.

11. Intervenors have no right to removal, not being defendants to suit, where the original defendant lost right to remove by filing an answer. Kidder v. Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co., 117 Fed. 997.

The petition for removal must aver the state where,[14] and the time when, and during which, an alleged foreign company was incorporated.[15] Where there has been a fraudulent joinder of resident parties to prevent the exercise of the right of removal,[16] it is to be averred,[17] and where denied, to be proved as a question of fact.[18] When the jurisdiction of the Federal court over a case removed into it from state court depends upon a question of fact, such jurisdictional fact must be well pleaded in the petition for removal;[19] and if issue is joined on such allegation, the burden is on the party removing to establish the existence of such jurisdictional fact.[20] Amendments may be allowed to correct minor errors[21] or omissions,[22] but never when the record fails to show a removable cause.[23] The order

12. Failure of husband to join in petition for removal of interpleader suit immaterial. First Nat. Bank v. Bridgeport Trust Co., 117 Fed. 969.

13. Facts to entitle party to removal, as that suit was instituted in state court, and that parties were citizens of different states, must appear affirmatively and not inferentially. Wilson v. Giberson, 124 Fed. 701. Petition for removal on ground of a separable controversy need not be verified. Harley v. Home Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 792.

14. Averment in petition that defendant corporation was a citizen and resident of another state not equivalent to averment that it was created and existed under the laws of that state, and is insufficient. Dalton v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 118 Fed. 876. An allegation by a corporation that it was a citizen of another state but not stating where it was incorporated is insufficient. Lewis v. Clyde S. S. Co., 131 N. C. 652.

15. Averment that defendant "is a corporation" organized under laws of New York, "and is a citizen and resident of said state * * * and never has been or is a citizen or resident of the state of Iowa" is not sufficient to show defendant was a New York corporation when suit was brought. Dalton v. Germania Ins. Co., 118 Fed. 936.

Contra, allegation that at time of filing defendant was a corporation organized under laws of British Columbia, sufficiently shows citizenship of parties at the beginning of the action. Roberts v. Pac. & A. R. & N. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 785.

16. In an action against a nonresident express company to recover on a contract of carriage, the joinder of local agents held manifestly fraudulent and for purpose of preventing removal. Boatner v. American Exp. Co., 122 Fed. 714.

17. A second application for removal made after verdict was directed for one of defendants over plaintiff's objection properly denied, as defendant on record failed to make out a fraudulent joinder. Kan. City S. B. R. Co. v. Herman, 187 U. S. 63, 47 Law. Ed. 76. Where petition avers that a defendant was joined solely to prevent removal, and is supported by affidavits, it tenders an issue of fact for trial by Federal court, and if not denied it stands admitted. Federal courts should be astute to protect right to removal. Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 122 Fed. 286.

18. A resident and a nonresident were made defendants in condemnation proceedings, and a removal was secured on the latter's petition alleging that the former was improperly joined to prevent removal, and on proof that plaintiff knew that the former had conveyed all of its interest in the property to the latter. Union Terminal R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 119 Fed. 209. The nonresident of two defendants sued as employers may remove on verified petition alleging that the other defendant was fraudulently joined and never employed deceased, accompanied by affidavit of the other defendant, and where plaintiff did not traverse or offer evidence in denial. Ross v. Erie R. Co., 120 Fed. 703. Where a foreign telegraph company was sued for failure to deliver message to plaintiff, and two resident operators were joined as defendants, removal was allowed on verified petition that neither of operators had anything to do with message, supported by affidavits of operators. Free v. Western Union Tel. Co., 122 Fed. 309. Where a petition for removal alleges a joinder of defendants to be for the sole and fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal, it puts in issue the truth of allegations in the complaint intended to show a joint cause of action, which issue may be inquired into and determined on a motion to remand. Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 128 Fed. 55. Where allegations of a complaint, intended to show a joint cause of action against two defendants, are found to be untrue, and that this fact was or could have been known to the pleader, the court may conclude as a matter of law, that the purpose was to prevent the exercise of the right of removal by the nonresident defendant. This practice of attorneys to prevent removal of causes commented upon. Id.

19, 20. Woodson County Com'rs v. Toronto Bank, 128 Fed. 157.

21. Court may allow amendment to petition for removal for diversity of citizenship, for the purpose of correcting allegation as to plaintiff's own citizenship, to conform to plaintiff's plea in abatement. Kerr v. Modern Woodmen of America [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 593. Where petition incorrectly designated the division of district to which removal was prayed but designated correctly the city where court was to be held, the defect was disregarded; and where the bond designated the district to which the county had formerly belonged, the court allowed amendment though the time for removal had expired, as it was not jurisdictional. Hodge v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 121 Fed. 48.

22. Circuit court may allow amendment to petition which was defective in not stating citizenship of plaintiff, where it might be fairly presumed from complaint; and nothing had been done to prejudice rights of plaintiff, and there had been no action on the merits. Kinney v. Columbia S. & L. Ass'n, 191 U. S. 78.

23. Dinet v. Delavan, 117 Fed. 978; Dalton may be made ex parte,[24] and after time for answer has expired,[25] in state[26] or Federal court.[27]

§ 9. Transfer of jurisdiction and other consequences of removal.—On proper application for removal the state court loses jurisdiction,[28] and any judgment it may render is appealable on that ground.[29] The Federal court acquires complete jurisdiction,[30] and the case stands in the same condition as it did in the state court as regards proceedings already had.[31]

§ 10. Practice and procedure after removal; remand or dismissal.—A cause will be remanded where the court is without jurisdiction,[32] and costs allowed,[33] if the petition is sufficiently[34] and promptly[35] traversed,[36] and evidence is adduced in support of the traverse.[37] The petition for removal is conclusive in the Federal court on the question of its jurisdiction, only in cases where that jurisdiction depends on the legal construction of plaintiff's petition as to the joint liability of the defendants, or other matters of law.[38] Where a case is removed to a Federal court, which denied a motion to remand and assumed jurisdiction, no proceedings could be taken in such action in the state court while it was pending in the Federal court.[39] Further proceedings must be in accordance with the practice of

24. Order for removal for prejudice or local influence may be made ex parte, though plaintiff may afterwards traverse the petition, and be heard thereon as a matter of right. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 116 Fed. 985.

25. Where petition and bond were filed before the time to plead had expired, it was immaterial that the order of removal was made after, as the state courts have only power to examine petition and record to see if the statutory requirements have been complied with subject to the final determination of the Federal courts. Vermeule v. Vermeule, 67 N. J. Law, 219.

26. Where petition and bond filed in state court October 14, and the transcript not filed before the 1st day of November term, the order for removal not having been made in state court until December 5, held, right was not lost, as it was respectful to await action of state court. Kelly v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 122 Fed. 286.

27. Certified copy of order of removal should be filed in state court as a matter of respect, though law does not require it. Bartlett v. Gates, 117 Fed. 362.

28. Pa. Co. v. Leeman, 160 Ind. 16, 66 N. E. 48. Duty of state court to accept petition and bond and proceed no further, if right to remove appears on record. Duff v. Hildreth, 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356.

29. Where defendant proceeded with cause in Federal court after erroneous denial of application to remove in state court, he is not estopped from appealing from judgment in latter court because of want of jurisdiction. Myers v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 118 Iowa, 312, 91 N. W. 1076.

30. Federal court may vacate a default judgment after removal where a state court could. Cady v. Associated Colonies, 119 Fed. 420.

31. Where defendant files in state court notice of intention to suffer a default and to move for a hearing in damages, and then removes the case, he need not file notices again. Johnson v. Bridgeport D. B. & M. Co., 125 Fed. 631. The order of a state court setting aside an attachment will not be reviewed in Federal court after removal, unless mistake or new facts are disclosed. Denison v. Shawmut Min. Co., 124 Fed. 860; Stevenson's Adm'r v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 767; DeWitt v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 275; Tex. Cotton Products Co. v. Starnes, 128 Fed. 183.

32. Where action was rightfully removed, but afterwards the alias summons was quashed, the action was remanded under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, § 5, as the action did not involve a dispute or controversy within the jurisdiction of the court. Stowe v. Santa Fe Pac. R. Co., 117 Fed. 368.

33. Order remanding is in the nature of a final judgment and so under U. S. Rev. St. § 824, costs may be taxed and docket fee allowed as for a judgment rendered without a jury. Riser v. Southern R. Co., 116 Fed. 1014.

34. Where petition for removal filed Feb. 13, stated time for answer under rules of court did not expire till Feb. 14, a motion to remand alleging time to answer had expired under rules, without setting up the rules, or referring to petition, was dismissed as right to removal was supported by allegations of the petition. Randall v. New England Order of Protection, 118 Fed. 782.

35. Where a case was removed and both parties appeared, the case will not be remanded after a year though neither party was a citizen of state where suit was brought. Phila. & B. Face Brick Co. v. Warford, 123 Fed. 843.

36. Where a plaintiff merely files affidavit denying statements in petition for removal, but files no plea, the cause will not be remanded. Weaver v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 125 Fed. 155.

37. Motion to remand by removing defendant because the evidence shows a citizen of same state as plaintiff was an indispensable party, will not be considered on appeal where the evidence is not in the record. Wirgman v. Persons [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 449.

38. Woodson County Com'rs v. Toronto Bank, 128 Fed. 157.

39. Action against a railroad company and its receivers to compel them to remove ob-the Federal court,[40] and the cause assigned to its law or equity side.[41] Where there is a dismissal,[42] or a nonsuit,[43] the removal is no bar to a new suit on the same subject-matter.

REPLEVIN.

§ 1. Nature and form of action—distinctions.—Replevin is an action in personam[44] to determine the right of possession[45] of personal property.[46] It does not lie where the controversy depends upon the right to hold an office and should be litigated by a writ of quo warranto.[47] An interpleader in attachment is substantially and in effect an action of replevin for the recovery of the specific property levied on under the attachment writ.[48] In order to maintain replevin against a party, he must have either constructive or actual possession at the time of the commencement of the action.[49]

§ 2. Right of action and defenses.—Plaintiff in replevin must recover, if at all, on strength of his own title.[50] A right to immediate possession is sufficient.[51] An executory contract of sale cannot be ground of plaintiff's title in structions from the street. They filed a cross bill claiming title to the street and removed the cause to the Federal court which denied a motion to remand. City of Ashland v. Whitcomb [Wis.] 98 N. W. 531.

40. Failure to demand jury in state court does not affect right in Federal court. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 116 Fed. 985. Deposition inadmissible where commission issued before defendant had filed record after removal and no reason for haste shown. North American Transp. & T. Co. v. Howells, 121 Fed. 694.

41. Equitable defense is not good in an action at law though transferred from a state court. Pettus v. Smith, 117 Fed. 967. Where action from a state which abolishes forms of action is removed, it must be assigned to the law or equity side of the court, and the pleadings reframed if necessary, and if plaintiff declines to bring his case in the proper side, he is bound by his election and a dismissal is proper. Fletcher v. Burt [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 619.

Y.] 452. But it has been stated that this principle does not apply where there was no pretense of title in any third person. First Nat. Bank v. Ragsdale, 171 Mo. 168, 71 S. W. 178.

51. Possession or an immediate right to possession is necessary to maintain equitable replevin. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Holt [Mass.] 69 N. E. 1056. Where a bailee answers the subject of the bailment, as he does in the case of an absolute sale and a transfer of the whole property, the bailment is ended and the general owner has the immediate right to possession. Id. Replevin cannot be maintained without showing a general or special, an absolute or a qualified, property in the plaintiff at the beginning of the action, together with the right of immediate possession. Hence, it is not the appropriate remedy for enforcing the forfeiture provided by Rev. St. § 4965, as amended in 1895 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3414), relating to the infringement of copyrighted maps, prints, etc. Gustin v. Record Pub. Co., 127 Fed. 603. Where an officer properly holds property by virtue of legal process he may obtain its return when taken from him by replevin, although the owner is not party to the replevin suit. Vickborn v. Pollock [Mich.] 95 N. W. 576; Gruber v. Janns, 84 N. Y. Supp. 882. If the process is merely valid on its face. Bruce v. Squires [Kan.] 74 Pac. 1102.

Presumption of legality attaches to the possession of an officer acting under process of the court. Finnell v. Million, 99 Mo. App. 552, 74 S. W. 419.

Officer's omission of appraisal no ground for replevin by a mortgagee. Johnson v. Spaulding [Neb.] 95 N. W. 808. A note secured by fraud, deceit, etc., may be recovered replevin.[52] He cannot recover upon a title acquired after bringing the action.[53] Though the property sought to be replevied is already in custodia legis and not levied upon by the officer, yet if the court goes ahead under statute and gives a judgment for damages, the judgment is not void.[54] Conditions precedent to the vesting of the right of immediate possession must be complied with. Tender of the amount of a lien rightly claimed must be made. Either the taking or the detention must be unlawful,[55] and one innocently in possession of property is not liable in replevin until after demand,[56] but no demand is necessary where the defendant wrongfully took the property,[57] where he had reason to suspect a defect in the title,[58] or where he contests the case upon its merits.[59] A demand when necessary is not sufficient unless made to the person having custody or control of the property.[60] Replevin can be maintained only against the person in actual possession of the property.[61] The right of possession is the sole issue, and though equitable issues may in some jurisdictions be raised and determined in a replevin suit,[62] defendant cannot invoke the equitable jurisdiction of the court to make a decree not affecting the property in suit,[63] or institute proceedings of interpleader when the plaintiff has secured possession of the property.[64] In most jurisdic-

It has been held that property sold under a decree of court fraudulently obtained cannot be replevied, but the remedy, if any, is in equity. Penton v. Hansen [Okl.] 73 Pac. 843. A vendor who rescinds for fraud (Hochberger v. Baum, 85 N. Y. Supp. 385; Bobilya v. Priddy, 68 Ohio St. 373, 67 N. E. 736), or one setting aside a fraudulent conveyance, cannot replevy against a purchaser for value without notice (Lowry v. Clark, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 357).

64. State v. District Ct., 28 Mont. 445, 72 Pac. 867.

Party to proceeding resulting in judicial sale cannot upset the sale by bringing replevin. Sieffert v. Campbell, 24 Ky. L. R. 1050, 70 S. W. 630.

By Georgia Civ. Code, § 4799, certain modes of defendant's obtaining possession are prescribed as a prerequisite to maintenance of a possessory warrant before a justice's court and plaintiff must at the trial prove that pos-tions defendant cannot set up set-off or recoupment,[65] but in Missouri, it is otherwise held.[66]

§ 3. Jurisdiction and venue.—A judgment for the return of property should not be given where the suit, because of the small amount involved, is not within court's jurisdiction.[67]

§ 4. The affidavit.—A preliminary affidavit is universally required to obtain the writ.[68]

§ 5. Plaintiff's bond.—Where, by statute, the defendant in replevin is allowed twenty-four hours from the time the bond is given to object to the sureties thereon, this does not give him the whole of the following day.[69]

§ 6. The writ and its execution.[70]—The officer has no right without permission to keep the goods replevied upon defendant's premises against his will until the goods are appraised, but must within a reasonable time remove them.[71] If the defendant, the owner's bailee, gives the officer a receipt for the goods, thereby becoming the officer's bailee, it is a valid levy, the goods become in custodia legis, and the bailee is thereby excused from delivering the goods to the owner.[72] Likewise, a levy will be valid when the officer replevying ponderous articles leaves them on the premises of the defendant in charge of the defendant's employe even if this employe allows the defendant to use them.[73] If joint owners bring replevin and obtain judgment, the officer satisfies the judgment by delivering the property described in the writ to one of the joint owners, even though he delivers it to him as a keeper.[74]

§ 7. The pleadings.—The complaint in replevin must contain allegations showing that the plaintiff at the time of commencing the action had a general or special property in the goods claimed, with the right to their immediate and exclusive possession.[75] A general denial in code pleading admits any general or special matter constituting a defense,[76] and therefore cannot be attacked by general demurrer.[77] Under a general denial, a judgment for the return of the property to the defendant may be entered without any motion on his part.[78] If property held in joint possession is sued for in replevin against one of the possessors, he waives the defect of parties by answering to the merits.[79] Estoppel to deny title must be pleaded.[80]

§ 8. Trial.—The plaintiff after obtaining the property cannot dismiss the session was obtained in one of these modes. Allen v. Printup, 118 Ga. 630.

Where the averments are of facts with reference to who is agent of a plaintiff corporation, the affidavit is fatally defective and will not support the action. Armour & Co. v. Arres [Neb.] 98 N. W. 843. When such affidavit is so defective that it cannot be amended, a judgment for plaintiff thereon will be reversed and the action dismissed, when the insufficiency of such affidavit is urged by defendant. suit,[81] nor can he then bring in other parties defendant against their will.[82] A partner or joint owner cannot maintain replevin to recover his undivided interest, but all joint owners may join in an action against a stranger.[83] A tenant in common having acquiesced in the unauthorized division of the property by the other tenant may bring replevin for his share.[84] Petitions in replevin proceedings come under the general statutory acts for amendment of pleadings.[85] If plaintiff pays no personal property tax, it is evidence that he was not the owner,[86] but the appraisal of property replevied made for the purpose of fixing the amount of the bond is not admissible evidence at the trial to prove the value of the property.[87] An alternative judgment for defendant for $60 as the value of the property replevied is erroneous, where the only evidence of such value is that that sum was what the defendant paid for the property.[88]

Verdicts.—Where the defendant in replevin both denies plaintiff's property and sets up property in a third party, a verdict that property is in plaintiff, not specifically denying the other allegation, is sufficient to allow plaintiff to recover, where no objection was taken at the trial.[89] A verdict in replevin is sufficient as to identity where there was a more particular description of the property in the pleadings to which the verdict will be referred.[90] The value of the property should be found where an alternative judgment is authorized,[91] and where different articles of property are claimed, the verdict should state the value of each article,[92] unless no question has arisen concerning such value.[93] If, however, the value is not stated the party giving up the property has no cause for complaint.[94] When a replevin suit is tried before a single judge, the findings of the court are entitled to

Under § 1193, however, the judgment in such an action must be in the alternative. Hynes v. Barnes [Mont.] 75 Pac. 523. A verdict which fixes the right of plaintiff to have the property, or its value, if he could not find it, and the right of the defendant to deliver the property rather than pay its value, if he chose to do so, held a full compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 77. Bossard v. Vaughn [S. C.] 46 S. E. 523.

Where in replevin for some horses the verdict was for defendant, and the value of the horses $200, and that plaintiff was indebted to defendant for $189.10. Held, the form of the verdict was sufficient to sustain a judgment for the return of the horses to defendant to be held by him as security for $189.10, or at defendant's election that he recover such sum of plaintiff and his sureties. the same consideration as the verdict of a jury, and will not be set aside unless clearly wrong.[95]

§ 9. Judgment.—In an action of replevin for various articles the plaintiff may recover judgment as to so many as he owns.[96] Judgment for possession may properly be granted him even though he has taken the property back as defendant's bailee and leased it from defendant's grantee.[97] When the jury find a verdict for damages only, judgment cannot properly be entered for possession also.[98] Judgment for damages not in the alternative has been given in a case in which the plaintiff without obtaining the property, prosecuted the suit as an action for damages,[99] and upon the election of the plaintiff where he was a seller upon conditional sale and the defendant, the buyer, wrongfully refused upon demand to give up the property.[1] Under statutes requiring an alternative judgment in replevin cases, a judgment is valid, though not in that form, where the omitted alternative would be unavailable.[2]

Damages.—When, before trial, plaintiff receives his property, he is entitled to nominal damages only,[3] and the value of the property should not enter into the damages awarded,[4] but when the defendant procures a redelivery, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time plaintiff became entitled to its possession by seizure under the writ of replevin.[5] Where property is not returned and is usable, the damages for the taking are its usable value plus the value of its use up to the date of judgment.[6] If judgment is for the defendant (an officer claiming goods under a levy), any money judgment will be based upon the value, not of the goods but of the lien acquired by the levy.[7] Detention of property in custodia legis at the wrongful request of one falsely setting up a claim thereto is ground for damages,[8] but a successful defendant who under a statute elects to have the value of the property at the time it was taken from him instead of the property is not entitled to damages for detention of property,[9] nor for depreciation in the value of the property subsequent to his re-bonding it.[10] A defendant prevailing, but not claiming all the damages recoverable, cannot afterwards recover the damage not claimed, in a suit upon the replevin bond,[11] but has been allowed to do so in a suit against the sheriff to recover for taking the property.[12]

§ 10. Costs.—If property is returned after suit brought, plaintiff will recover his costs.[13] The omission of a demand has been held merely to cause plaintiff to lose his costs.[14] Dismissal for lack of jurisdiction will be with costs.[15]

§ 11. Review.—It is too late after judgment, upon plea of general denial, to object for the first time that the petition does not contain any allegation of a demand.[16] In an action of replevin a finding by the trial court that defendant never held the property under order of the court is conclusive on the supreme court.[17]

§ 12. Liability on bonds and of receiptors, etc.—A party giving a bond to secure property in replevin does not thereby acquire a right to elect to keep the property and leave the other party to an action on the bond.[18] On the contrary, he cannot convey good title to the property if it afterwards appears that the property was the plaintiff's,[19] and will be enjoined from selling the same.[20] Replevin bonds have been held to bind the plaintiff to return the property without any depreciation, though due to reasonable wear and tear,[21] but not to pay as damages stenographer's and attorney's fees.[22] Redelivery bonds are commonly held to cover costs.[23] In suits on redelivery bonds to recover the value of property obtained by defendant, the value at the time of trial is the measure of damages.[24] A verdict settling the value of property, subject of replevin suit, is conclusive against sureties upon the parties' replevin bonds.[25] The sureties on a replevin bond are not liable for any damages found for defendant on his counterclaim.[26]

Breaches.—Where the plaintiff obtains his property but suffers the action to abate, it is a breach of his bond.[27] A judgment against a defendant forfeits any counterbond he may have given.[28]

Defenses.—The sureties on a replevin bond are not bound if judgment is given against two persons jointly, and the bond is conditioned to pay judgment against one alone,[29] or on a redelivery bond, if before the bond was given the property had already been redelivered.[30] But the surety on a replevin bond cannot compel a successful defendant to recover costs by first proceeding upon a subsequently given appeal bond.[31] Such a surety is, after delivery of the property, estopped to set up as a defense to the bond that there was no action pending.[32] Demand is not a condition precedent to action upon a bond.[33] Where a re-replevin bond was conditioned for the return of the property and the payment of costs and damages, the return of the property does not prevent judgment for the full penal sum of the bond for breach of one of the other conditions.[34] Under a statutory right to set up title in the plaintiff in replevin, where there was no decision upon the merits in a replevin suit, a surety upon a replevin bond who has been defaulted, without pleading that plaintiff had title, cannot set up that title except in mitigation of damages.[35]

RESTORING INSTRUMENTS AND RECORDS.

§ 1. Evidence and proof of loss and of contents.—The burden of proof to establish a lost instrument is on him who asserts a claim under it.[36]

Contents of a lost instrument must be proved by secondary evidence.[37] Proof to a reasonable certainty is all that is necessary,[38] and evidence which cannot be produced will not be required,[39] but sufficient evidence to fairly establish the loss must be introduced.[40] The manner and degree of proof is, in some states, regulated by statute.[41] A person cannot prove the contents of instruments which he has himself voluntarily destroyed,[42] nor will evidence of loss be admissible where it is not relevant and material to the cause,[43] but where it is material an established copy has the same force as the original.[44]

Reasonable search and good faith is all that is necessary to raise presumption of loss, in order to admit proof by secondary evidence.[45]

Where it is shown by public records that an official bond has been given by a public officer, but search for it is unavailing, it is presumed that it was regular and such as the law required.[46]

—Lost papers pertaining to a legal proceeding can only be established by the court which entertained that proceeding.[47] In some states the jurisdiction to establish lost papers has been conferred by statute.[48]

§ 3. Procedure in equity or under burnt records act to restore records.—Proceedings under the burnt records act forecloses the rights of only those who were parties.[49]

REWARDS.

§ 1. Nature and definition.—A reward is an offer of recompense by the government or by a private person, to whoever will perform some special act. The rule as to payment of an offered reward is based on the principles applicable to contracts,[50] and the doing of a thing for which a reward is offered creates a contract;[51] but a mere offer not complied with does not.[52]

§ 2. The offer.—An offer of a reward is revocable at any time before the conditions are complied with. It is not open to those who, by complying with it, would take advantage of their own wrong[53] or would promote an unlawful act.[54] When made by government officials, it must be within the scope of their power,[55] but will not bind them personally if it is not.[56]

§ 3. Earning reward.—As a general rule, compliance with the terms of an offer of reward is all that is necessary in order to claim it;[57] but it has been held that the party offering a reward must be notified by the one doing the act that it was performed because of the offer.[58] The offer must be complied with according

54. A person who pays another for a promise not to vote cannot collect a reward provided by statute for furnishing testimony securing a conviction of one agreeing for a consideration to refrain from voting. Board of Com'rs of Jay County v. Bliss [Ind.] 69 N. E. 1003.

55. The offer of a reward by county commissioners for the finding and identification of a missing man is in excess of their authority and can never ripen into a contract. Scheiber v. Von Arx, 87 Minn. 298, 92 N. W. 3. The police jury of a parish have power to offer a reward to prevent violation of tavern and grog shop regulations. Carnes v. Police Jury of Parish of Red River, 110 La. 1011. An offer to pay the reward to a person named as trustee for whoever earned it is valid. Cummings v. Clinton County [Mo.] 79 S. W. 1127. A reward for the "apprehension" of a criminal is pursuant to authority to offer a reward for "apprehension and arrest." Id. An offer of a reward is a county contract and must be in writing. Id. Where two judges are authorized to make the offer, an offer by one approved by the other by telephone is valid. Id.

56. Where public officials, acting in good faith, exceed their authority by offering a reward and it is accepted, they will not be personally bound. Scheiber v. Von Arx, 87 Minn. 298, 92 N. W. 3.

57. A complaint in an action to recover a reward offered by statute need not allege that the services were rendered with knowledge of the reward or with an intention to recover the same. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County v. Davis [Ind.] 69 N. E. 680. Evidence that plaintiff met a boy, for whom a reward had been offered, going in the wrong direction; that the boy asked questions showing he did not know where he was and that plaintiff kept him until delivered to his friends, held sufficient to show plaintiff entitled to the reward. to its terms,[59] and all who participate in such compliance are entitled to a share.[60] One who merely gives information and intentionally evades participation in the arrest is not entitled to share in the reward,[61] nor is one who attempts to take possession of a prisoner from those who have captured him,[62] nor a sheriff who makes an arrest at the instance of the person who really apprehended a criminal,[63] nor is one who is hired by another to make the arrest.[64] A public officer who complies with the offer of a reward in the course of his official duties is not entitled to recover it,[65] but if he performs an act for which a reward is offered outside the limit of his official duty, he may lawfully claim it.[66]

RIOT.

Though the agency of several persons is essential to the crime of riot,[67] it need not be shown that all named in the indictment participated, if it be charged that other persons unknown, sufficient to constitute the required number, took part.[68] Persons who by the use of arms, and by threats and curses drive others from their home, are guilty of the offense of riot, whether the act is done under claim of title to the premises or not.[69]

state holds the fee of all tide lands in trust for all its inhabitants, and not as a private proprietor.[72] A riparian proprietor of land bounded by a river takes to the center of the stream, absolutely if the river is non-navigable, and subject to the rights of the general public, if it is navigable.[73]

§ 2. Rights attendant on change in bed of stream or in shore line.—If a stream slowly and imperceptibly changes its course, the accretion belongs to the proprietor on that side, and erosion ceases to belong to the former owner.[74] In Minnesota, rights of reliction are determined by extending the side lines of each tract from the meander line to the center of the lake.[75]

§ 3. Rights incidental to riparian ownership.—Every riparian owner on a navigable stream has the right to have free access to the stream over his own lands, and the undisturbed use of these lands,[76] and, whether navigable or not, to every reasonable kind of use of the water as it passes by, having a proper regard for the rights of other proprietors on the stream below.[77] Riparian rights are property.[78] They are parcel of the land, and not rights appurtenant.[79] A riparian owner may go on land of another, further up the stream, and, with his consent, there divert water for use on his riparian land without thereby necessarily exercising any other than his riparian right.[80] Particular riparian rights may be acquired by custom and user.[81]

72. The public is entitled to use all of such land as is not occupied or obstructed. R. I. Motor Co. v. Providence [R. I.] 55 Atl. 696. The riparian owner is entitled to fill out the shore to the high-water level. Id. In New York, the state's right to tide lands in the city of New York is by statute ceded to the city. But where a navigable river is the boundary between two states and the dividing line is the center of the main channel of such stream, a riparian proprietor takes only to such boundary line. Id. The title of a riparian owner upon a navigable stream goes to the center thereof not by virtue of his patent or chain of title but by the mere favor or concession of the state. Id. A riparian proprietor on a river owns all islands opposite the same so far as his riparian rights extend. Id. A stream wholly within the state of South Carolina, which has no public terminus except at its outlet, is not navigable under the constitution and statutes of that state. Manigault v. Ward & Co., 123 Fed. 707. In order to make a stream wholly within a state a navigable water of the United States it must be a public highway. To be a public highway a stream must have a terminus at which the public can enter it and a terminus at which they can leave it. Mere floatability is not sufficient. Id. Pollution: Statutes of Mass. 1878, p. 133, c. 183; Rev. Laws, c. 75, § 124, in so far as they prevent the discharge into streams of polluting matter of such kind and amount as will corrupt or impair the quality of the water, are reasonable regulation of the exercise of private rights of property in reference to the common good, and are not an interference with property that calls for compensation to the owners. Sprague v. Dorr [Mass.] 69 N. E. 344. Pollution of stream held reasonable. Fahnestock v. Feldner [Md.] 56 Atl. 785.

78. Discharge of sewerage into a stream by a city is a taking of property requiring compensation to riparian owners damaged thereby. City of Waterbury v. Platt Bros. & Co. [Conn.] 56 Atl. 856; Cline v. Stock [Neb.] 98 N. W. 454; Doremus v. Paterson [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 548.

79. Description of riparian land in the complaint in a partition suit includes the water, although not mentioned or described. Rose v. Mesmer [Cal.] 75 Pac. 905.

80. Rose v. Mesmer [Cal.] 75 Pac. 905.

81. Right to build wharves and booms. Sullivan Timber Co. v. Mobile, 124 Fed. 644.

§ 4. Subjection to public easements.—The right of a riparian owner on a navigable stream to have free access to the stream over his own lands and to the undisturbed use of these lands is subject to the right of the state to improve and develop navigation.[82]

§ 5. Actions for protection of riparian rights.—A court of equity has power to determine, as between parties having admitted legal rights in bodies of water, the extent of their respective rights and the proper mode of exercising and enjoying them.[83]

ROBBERY.

§ 1. Nature and elements.—Robbery is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, from his person or in his presence, by violence or by putting him in fear.[84] Robbery includes larceny, and all the elements that are necessary to constitute larceny are necessary to constitute robbery.[85] Therefore, the thing taken must be the subject of larceny,[86] there must be both a taking and a carrying away of the property, and the taking must be with felonious intent, that is with intent to deprive the owner of his property without any honest claim thereto.[87] The aggravating circumstances necessary to constitute robbery, as distinguished from simple larceny, are that the taking must be from the person[88] of the owner,[89] and must not only be without the owner's consent, but it must also be accomplished either by violence or putting him in fear.[90] It is robbery, not larceny, where defendant first took prosecutor's trousers containing his money by stealth, but after their recovery by prosecutor in a scuffle retook them by force and putting in fear.[91] Stealthily filching from the person is not robbery,[92] nor is a violent effort to escape on detection,[93] nor a resistance by violence of the efforts of the prosecutor to regain his property.[94]

82. Jones v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 188. A riparian proprietor on a navigable stream owns to the center of the stream, but such ownership is subject and subservient to the rights of the general public in such stream. Franzini v. Layland [Wis.] 97 N. W. 499. The title of the city of New York in the tideway and submerged lands of the Hudson River is not absolute and unqualified, but is held subject to the right of the public to the use of the river as a water highway. Where streets of the city of New York and navigable waters meet, the general public has a right of passage, and a highway is, by operation of law, extended over a wharf or bulkhead built at the end of a street. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Forty-second St., etc., Ferry R. Co., 176 N. Y. 408, 68 N. E. 864. In Michigan, it is held that a wharf at the termination of a city street is not a part of the public highway. Kemp v. Stradley [Mich.] 97 N. W. 41. Public entitled to access to docks built by riparian owner under public authority. Thousand Island Steamboat Co. v. Visger, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 126.

83. State v. Sunapee Dam Co. [N. H.] 55 Atl. 899. Injunction against abstraction or diversion of water by upper riparian proprietor granted. Lonsdale Co. v. Woonsocket [R. I.] 56 Atl. 448; Harper, etc., Co. v. Mountain Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 297; Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Cavenders Creek Gold Min. Co., 118 Ga. 255. Against obstruction. Fahnestock v. 93. Colby v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 189.

94. Jones v. Com., 24 Ky. L. R. 2481, 74 S. W. 263; Dawson v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 5, 74 S. W. 701.

To constitute an assault with intent to rob the specific intent to rob must exist.[95]

A statute providing that any person who attempts to commit any crime but fails, or is prevented, or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable, where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempts, creates the crime of attempt to rob.[96]

§ 2. Indictment and prosecution. A. Indictment.—An indictment for robbery should contain all the allegations essential in simple larceny, and, in addition, the matter that makes larceny robbery,[97] hence it should describe the property,[98] state its value,[99] and ownership,[1] allege a taking or asportation,[3] and that the taking was from the person by violence or putting in fear.[4]

An indictment for assault with intent to rob should allege the assault and aver that it was with the intent to commit robbery, describing it,[5] but the property intended to be taken need not be described.[6]

The indictment may charge the offense in all its forms, as robbery by assault, by violence, and by putting in fear, and proof of any clause will sustain a conviction,[7] but where the indictment charges an assault with intent to rob only by means of menaces, a conviction cannot be sustained in the absence of proof of menaces, though the commission of the crime by other means is shown.[8] An indictment which states the essential facts of the crime of robbery, without stating the circumstances of aggravation, is sufficient to warrant the imposition of the penalty prescribed for the aggravated offense,[9] and ownership of the property.[10]

95. State v. Atkins [Iowa] 97 N. W. 996; People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 159, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270; Coles v. State, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 313.

96. Pen. Code, § 664. People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 159, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270.

97. Owen v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 466, 76 S. W. 3. Indictment for robbery in language of statute held sufficient. State v. Curtin, 111 La. 129.

98. A description of the property as seven dollars and fifty cents current money of the United States of America is sufficient. Parrent v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 474. The indictment may be amended with reference to the description of the property. Gold or silver watch. Meehan v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 173. The objection that an indictment for robbery did not describe the property taken with sufficient certainty is not ground for quashing the indictment. McKevitt v. People, 208 Ill. 460, 70 N. E. 693.

99. An allegation that the property taken was "lawful money of the United States" sufficiently shows that it had value. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62. An indictment charging the property taken to have been "seventeen dollars in money, each of the value of one dollar" is good. Fay v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 744.

1. The indictment must correctly aver the ownership of the property. Money in possession of infant. Dorsey v. State, 134 Ala. 553. Merely to allege that it was taken from a certain person is not sufficient. State v. Morgan, 31 Wash. 226, 71 Pac. 723. An averment that property was taken from the person of A is sufficient without stating that it was his property. Owen v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 466, 76 S. W. 3.

3. An information charging the taking of a purse containing a sum of money, sufficiently charges the taking of the money as well as the purse. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62.

4. Smith v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 178. Under Utah statutes, an indictment for robbery which fails to state that the property taken from the person of another was taken "by means of force or fear" is insufficient [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 4175, 4355, 4359, subd. 2]. State v. Davis [Utah] 76 Pac. 705.

5. Information for assault with intent to rob held sufficient. State v. Fenton, 30 Wash. 325, 70 Pac. 741.

6. An information for assault with intent to rob need not allege that the person assaulted had money or property in his possession. State v. Roberts, 67 Kan. 631, 73 Pac. 905.

7. Burns v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 24.

8. Erwin v. State, 117 Ga. 296.

9. Code, § 4753, describes the offense of robbery, while § 4754, prescribes a penalty when aggravating circumstances attend it. Indictment good under § 4753, warrants sentence under § 4754. State v. Poe [Iowa] 98 N. W. 587. An indictment charged robbery, that defendant was armed with intent to kill, and that confederates were present. The jury found him guilty of robbery "as charged in the indictment, and he was sentenced for the crime of robbery, etc." Held, that "etc." was meaningless and verdict and sentence were for robbery merely. McKevitt v. People, 208 Ill. 460, 70 N. E. 693.

10. 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 6944, provides that in the prosecution of any offense committed in stealing personal property it shall not be deemed a variance if it be proved that the actual or constructive possession, or general or special property, in the whole or a part of the personalty, was in the person alleged in the indictment to be the owner. Held, under this statute, that

The proof must support the allegations with respect to the description,[11] but the value of the property being immaterial, an allegation thereof may be disregarded.[12]

A conviction of any included offense such as assault with intent to rob,[13] or larceny from the person may be had on an indictment for robbery,[14] but where the evidence shows that defendant either is or is not guilty of the offense charged, it is not error to omit to charge as to lower grades of the crime.[15] Under an indictment for assault with intent to rob, under the statute in Washington, defendant may be convicted of assault and battery or simple assault, but not of an attempt to rob, eliminating the assault.[16]

(§ 2) B. Evidence.—The admissibility of the evidence is governed by the familiar rules of criminal evidence, such as proof of matters material as res gestae,[17] declarations of accused,[18] his possession of the stolen property,[19] and the like. The nature and extent of the prosecutor's injuries may be material,[20] but the commission of other distinct offenses by accused should not be shown.[21] Cases in which the sufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction are discussed are collected in the note.[22]

(§ 2) C. Instructions.—Instructions should correctly state the rules of law applicable to the particular case,[23] and present all the issues raised by the plead-under an indictment alleging ownership to be in one partner, where the proof showed the property to belong to the partnership, there was no variance. State v. Fair [Wash.] 76 Pac. 731.

11. An indictment alleging the taking of a gold watch is supported by proof that the watch was gold filled. State v. Alexander, 66 Kan. 726, 72 Pac. 227.

12. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62.

13. State v. Atkins [Iowa] 97 N. W. 996; Burns v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 24. Though evidence show the prisoner to be guilty of robbery he still could be convicted of assault with intent to rob. People v. Blanchard [Mich.] 98 N. W. 983.

14. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321.

15. State v. Atkins [Iowa] 97 N. W. 996.

16. State v. Fenton, 30 Wash. 325, 70 Pac. 741.

17. Statements made by the person robbed immediately on recovering consciousness are admissible as res gestae. State v. Ripley, 32 Wash. 182, 72 Pac. 1036. Circumstances leading up to the transaction, and inseparable from it are properly shown, though occurring several hours before. People v. Linares [Cal.] 75 Pac. 308.

18. Prior statements of accused as to how the robbery might be committed are admissible. Keating v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 980.

19. Where on the arrest of the proprietor of a saloon it was locked by him and kept locked until an officer searched it, evidence that the stolen property was found therein is properly admitted, though the search was several weeks after the robbery. State v. Hyatt [Mo.] 78 S. W. 601.

20. Where the evidence of the corpus delicti is circumstantial, the extent of the injuries of the person robbed may be shown for the purpose of showing that force and violence were used in the commission of the robbery. State v. Alexander, 66 Kan. 726, 72 Pac. 227.

21. The testimony of a witness as to another robbery committed on witness by defendant within a short time at a place several blocks away is admissible only for the purpose of showing defendant's presence in the locality, and not as corroboration, or as showing intent. State v. Spray, 174 Mo. 569, 74 S. W. 846.

22. Conviction held supported. Circumstantial evidence of corpus delicti and participation by accused. State v. Alexander, 66 Kan. 726, 72 Pac. 227. Evidence in corroboration of accomplice held insufficient. People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719, 73 Pac. 609. Conviction of robbery by means of knock out drops in saloon held supported. Kincaid v. Com. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 433. Evidence that the property stolen was a $20 gold piece and some other coins sufficiently shows value. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62.

Whether crime was robbery: Circumstances held to show intent to rob. Burns v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 24. Circumstances proved held to amount to assault with intent to rob and not completed robbery. State v. Roberts, 67 Kan. 631, 73 Pac. 905. Circumstances proved held to raise question for jury as to whether the act amounted to robbery. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 960. Circumstances held to make case for jury as to whether the taking was by such violence and putting in fear as to amount to robbery. King v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 713, 76 S. W. 341.

Identification of defendant held sufficient to support conviction against defense of alibi. State v. Blanchard, 88 Minn. 82, 92 N. W. 504; State v. Brafford, 121 Iowa, 115, 96 N. W. 710; Keating v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 980.

Defendant's participation held shown notwithstanding prosecutor's statement that defendant had nothing to do with the robbery. State v. Rowland, 174 Mo. 373, 74 S. W. 622. Evidence of defendant's participation held question for jury. State v. Hyatt [Mo.] 78 S. W. 601. Defendant's voluntary participation in crime committed by another held shown. Thomas v. State, 134 Ala. 126.

23. Where the statutory definition of robbery includes taking from the immediate presence of the owner, an instruction limiting it to a taking from the person is properly ings and evidence, but matters not within the issues should not be treated,[24] and matters of fact in dispute should not be assumed.[25]

(§ 2) D. Punishment.[26]—Under a statute fixing the penalty at not less than 10 nor more than 20 years, 17 years' imprisonment is not an excessive sentence for robbery in a public street by presenting a pistol and threatening to kill.[27]

SALES.

§ 1. Definition; distinction from other transactions.—The nature of the transaction, not the name given it by the parties, determines its character as a sale.[28] The distinction between an agency and a sale depends on the power of the party receiving to take title to himself.[29] The presence or absence of an refused. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62. An instruction purporting to define the crime is bad if it omit any essential element thereof. Intent to deprive the owner of his property. State v. Smith, 174 Mo. 586, 74 S. W. 624. An instruction correctly defining the necessary fraudulent intent need not state that the taking must have been with "felonious" intent. State v. Spray, 174 Mo. 569, 74 S. W. 846. Where the instructions in a prosecution for assault with intent to rob give the definition of the offense in substantially the terms of the statute, no particular definition of assault, for further description of robbery, is necessary. State v. Atkins [Iowa] 97 N. W. 996.

24. Where prosecutor's evidence shows unmistakable robbery, and defendant denies all guilt, errors in the instructions relating to larceny are immaterial. People v. Stevens, 141 Cal. 488, 75 Pac. 62.

25. Instructions must not assume the ownership of the property and the owner's nonconsent where not proved, but only when under the evidence there can be no controversy on those questions. Bradshaw v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 215.

26. Punishment for attempt to rob. People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 159, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270.

27. State v. Brafford, 121 Iowa, 115, 96 N. W. 710.

28. Buffum v. Descher [Neb.] 96 N. W. 352. Where a father, whose son was engaged with others in working a mine, agreed to back his son for his share of price and expenses, his sending provisions to his son was not a sale to the others. Snow v. Mastic, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 165. Conditional sale, see post, § 14.

29. If the transferee, on delivery, acquires absolute dominion, with right of disposal and becomes bound for payment, it is a sale and title passes. Buffum v. Descher [Neb.] 96 N.

obligation to return the identical article received[30] or of an agreement to buy or merely to do work on a chattel[31] determines it to be a sale or a bailment. Bailment may exist though the bailee may be entitled to a share of the proceeds.[32] A consignment for sale by the party receiving may amount to a mere bailment.[33] A so-called lease, merely to give the seller a lien for the price, will not change the contract from a sale.[34] On a sale the general property in the article must be transferred.[35] The transferee as collateral of a bill of lading is not a party to the sale.[36] To constitute a bill of sale, absolute on its face, a mortgage, the intention in execution, must have been the giving of security.[37]

W. 352. Contract for sale of goods with secret agreement that title shall not pass until payment, held sale absolute and not agency. In re Carpenter, 125 Fed. 831. An agreement by a manufacturer to furnish engines at certain terms for a certain period and to refer all inquiries for engines from a certain territory to the other party was not a contract of agency, but gave the latter the right to purchase at the terms within such territory. Russell & Co. v. McSwegan, 84 N. Y. Supp. 614. Where wagons were ordered on conditional sale and the seller changed its terms to consignment on commission and shipped the wagons with a bill of sale showing a sale to the purchaser and reciting discounts, though stating that it was a commission contract, there was an absolute sale. A. A. Cooper Wagon & Buggy Co. v. Bailey & G. Estate, 98 Mo. App. 648, 73 S. W. 724. Construction of particular contract as absolute sale and not for delivery to sell on commission. Sutton v. Baker [Minn.] 97 N. W. 420.

30. Particular contract as bailment with right to purchase and not a sale. Donnelly v. Mitchell, 119 Iowa, 432, 93 N. W. 369. If the identical article is to be restored in the same or altered form, the contract is a bailment; if there is no obligation for such return and the receiver may return another article of equal value or the money value, it is a sale. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Ellington, 103 Ill. App. 517; Scott M. & S. Co. v. Shultz, 67 Kan. 605, 73 Pac. 903. Where a contract in partido in New Mexico provided that double the number of cattle should be returned at the end of five years, title to the cattle received, passed; in this case the contract necessarily excluded return of the identical cattle. Genobia Aragon De Jaramillo v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cl. 208, 243. An instrument reading "Rec'd of S. 408 bu. of wheat, to be paid for at market price on demand," will be construed as a sale not a bailment. Hagey v. Schroeder, 30 Ind. App. 151, 65 N. E. 598. Where it was agreed that mining personalty should be returned in kind or value according to an invoice made, the contract was, in nature, a sale and title passed. Scott M. & S. Co. v. Shultz, 67 Kan. 605, 73 Pac. 903. Delivery of a piano under a written agreement for a definite term at a fixed rental, payable in instalments on days certain, terminable at any time by the party delivering, with provisions that after full payment to a certain amount title should pass to the holder, that he should give up the piano on demand, and that payments should be for rent and not for purchase, is a bailment, not a conditional sale. Painter v. Snyder, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 603.

31. Sufficiency of evidence to show a contract relating to street curbing to be one of employment only and not a sale. Ulmer v. McDonnell, 11 N. D. 391, 92 N. W. 482.

32. An agreement by which one was to cut ties from timber of another, profits to be divided on sale by the latter, gave the first no title to the ties, so that he could not sell the ties, and by delivery of the bill of lading convey title to an innocent purchaser as against the other. Padgett v. Ford, 117 Ga. 508.

33. If the person receiving goods is to sell them and account to the sender, title does not pass and the transaction is a mere bailment. Furst Bros. v. Commercial Bank, 117 Ga. 472. An agreement to receive goods and handle them on account of the owner settling at certain intervals is not a sale, but a mere consignment for sale, though the settlements were not made according to the agreement. Fleet v. Hertz, 201 Ill. 594, 66 N. E. 858. If after the time limit for delivery of lumber, the buyers receive part of it under an agreement to hold and sell to best advantage for the owner, to be paid for when sold, they are not liable for the price unless it is shown to have been sold. Heidelbaugh v. Cranston [Del.] 56 Atl. 367.

Held a sale: A debtor delivered to his surety a field of beans to be used in payment of the debt. Evidence that the creditor said he would take the beans in payment of his debt, and if there was a balance turn it over to the surety, held to show a sale. Cunningham v. O'Connor [Mich.] 99 N. W. 25.

34. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Ellington, 103 Ill. App. 517.

35. Mere transfer of possession of a chattel or a contract for that purpose is not a sale. Still v. Cannon [Okl.] 75 Pac. 284. A contract for possession of sheep for a certain term at a certain yearly rental, the party receiving them to keep the old stock good, is a lease, not a sale. Turnbow v Beckstead, 25 Utah, 468, 71 Pac. 1062. Where a certain amount per month was paid for use of a wagon under an agreement with the owner that he would sell after a certain amount was paid, the lessee cannot recover instalments paid as purchase money, such payments being rent. Stearns v. Drake, 24 R. I. 272.

36. Where the seller consigned goods to the buyer, drew a draft for the amount due, and negotiated it with the bill of lading attached to a bank, which delivered the goods and the bill and collected from the buyer, the bank was not substituted for the buyer as a party to the sale, so that it might sue for breach of warranty. German-American Sav. Bank v. Craig [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1023.

37. Long v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 870. A bill of sale provided that, on payment of the vendor's debts from the income or sale

§ 2. Contract requisites of a sale.—Sales are subject to the general rules for formation of contracts respecting parties,[38] fraud,[39] and sales by or to agents.[40] There must be mutuality of assent or as sometimes put an offer and acceptance,[41] whence an offer may be recalled before acceptance,[42] even though it stipulates the contrary.[43] An option must be supported by a consideration.[44] Delay is of the property, title to the remainder would revest in the vendor. Held, a mortgage. Haynes v. Hobbs [Mich.] 98 N. W. 978.

38. Competency of parties. Warner v. Warner, 30 Ind. App. 578, 66 N. E. 760.

Who are parties: That a receipt for part payment was given to the buyer's agent or that it was signed by the seller's agent will not constitute such agents the contracting parties; the parties proposing and accepting are the contracting parties. Jones v. Wattles [Neb.] 92 N. W. 765. Purchase of a horse by several persons, each to pay a certain part of the price for a share in ownership, in good faith, is valid and binds each purchaser to the amount of his subscription. Valade v. Masson [Mich.] 97 N. W. 59.

Where mortgaged cordwood was purchased and notes made directly to the mortgagee, it was held a question for the jury to determine who was the seller in order to set-off. First Nat. Bank v. Stringer [Mich.] 95 N. W. 712.

39. Warner v. Warner, 30 Ind. App. 578, 66 N. E. 760. Fraud as a defense in an action for the price of optical goods cannot be based on statements that the goods had qualities known to be contrary to natural laws. H. Hirschberg Optical Co. v. Michaelson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 461. That a horse was ill at the time of, or after, delivery and giving of a check for its value, is insufficient to show fraud. Citizens' State Bank v. Cowles, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 281. In absence of inquiry, omission to mention a debt of the corporation is not fraudulent concealment of facts in selling stock, so as to constitute a defense in an action for the price. Furber v. Fogler, 97 Me. 585. The seller of bank stock is not liable in deceit for failure to disclose the insolvent condition of the bank where he had no connection therewith and no actual knowledge of it. Kirtley's Adm'x v. Shinkle, 24 Ky. L. R. 608, 69 S. W. 723. Fraudulent statements of the seller as to latent defects and concealment, made to divert the buyer's attention and to defraud him, are fraudulent misrepresentations for which the buyer may have relief. Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 575, 92 N. W. 678. Evidence held not to show that a purchaser of a stock of goods was persuaded by the seller to become intoxicated and then purchase at an exorbitant price. Fletcher v. Whitlow, Lake & Co. [Ark.] 79 S. W. 773.

That the buyer is insolvent and unable to pay for goods does not conclusively show that he never intended to pay so as to avoid the sale for fraud. Stein v. Hill [Mo. App.] 71 S. W. 1107. False statements to one selling personalty on credit to a corporation as to its solvency avoid the sale, though the person making them believed the debt would be paid. Fitchard v. Doheny, 86 N. Y. Supp. 964; Pier Bros. v. Doheny, 86 N. Y. Supp. 971. The purchaser is not bound to inform the seller of his insolvency, no inquiry being made, so as to avoid fraud as vitiating the sale. Stein v. Hill [Mo. App.] 71 S. W. 1107. That the vendor made an investigation, on his own account, into solvency of the purchaser will not prevent his recovery for fraud of the purchaser inducing credit. Light v. Jacobs, 183 Mass. 206, 66 N. E. 799. A contention that defendant committed a fraud in purchasing goods cannot be sustained, it appearing that the goods were purchased with the object of compelling plaintiff to credit the amount on defendant's claim of damages for breach of contract. To show fraud of purchaser in not intending to pay for them. Royal R. & E. Co. v. Gregory Grocer Co., 90 Mo. App. 53.

Mere expressions of opinion by the seller as to condition of goods sold cannot be urged as fraud in an action for the price, especially where the purchaser had opportunity to inspect the goods and offered to purchase without regard to defects, which offer the seller accepted. Vodrey Pottery Co. v. H. E. Horne Co., 117 Wis. 1, 93 N. W. 823.

40. Authority of agent in making sales, see Agency, 1 Curr. Law, p. 43.

A seller may recover for subsequent sales to an agent where he had authority to make prior sales and no notice was given of termination of such authority; but one never an agent of another cannot bind him. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Jackson Junior Zinc Co., 98 Mo. App. 324, 73 S. W. 272.

A sale signed "B. & Co., Sales Agents" and "N. Co. by T.," and partly performed by the latter, is made by such company. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. New River Mineral Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329.

Personal liability of agent failing to disclose agency, see Agency, 1 Curr. Law, p. 43.

41. Necessity: Consent of both parties is necessary, though as to either it may be inferred from facts and circumstances. Curtiss v. McCune [Neb.] 94 N. W. 984. Acceptance is necessary to an executory sale made on order. Wilson v. Belles, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 477.

That the seller of goods is liable to his agent for commissions whether the sale is accepted or not does not make him liable to the buyer before acceptance in absence of a showing of his knowledge to that effect. Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569.

42. Cancellation of an order for future delivery before acceptance by the manufacturer prevents any contract of sale. E. Bement & Sons v. Rockwell, 86 N. Y. Supp. 876. A mere promise to buy is unilateral and may be withdrawn before it is acted upon. Alderman v. New Departure Bell Co., 75 Conn. 519. An order for a machine, subject to acceptance of the manufacturer, may be countermanded by the giver before acceptance. Durkee v. Schultz [Iowa] 98 N. W. 149.

43. A contract for an instalment purchase of books, providing against countermand, is a mere order revocable at any time before acceptance, being unilateral and without consideration and not enforceable after revocation. Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569. Where an order for goods was countermanded be-none.[45] The acceptance must be without condition,[46] within the time limited,[47] or extensions thereof,[48] on the terms offered,[49] and by authority if done through an agent.[50] If it vary them, it in turn becomes an offer,[51] and a different contract if any results.[52] But acceptance need not exclude the parties from supplemental contracts.[53] The minds must have met as to all the terms of the contract free from mistake[54] or uncertainty.[55] There must be mutual obligations to sell[56] and to fore acceptance, a provision in the order against countermand is without consideration. Hallwood Cash Register Co. v. Finnegan, 84 N. Y. Supp. 154; Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569.

If on a consideration and showing equity an option may be specifically enforced. Tidball v. Challburg [Neb.] 93 N. W. 679.

44. Tidball v. Challburg [Neb.] 93 N. W. 679.

45. Baltimore & L. R. Co. v. Steel Rail Supply Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 655.

46. Sufficiency of unconditional acceptance of offer to sell cotton so as to complete contract and support action by the seller for breach. China & J. Trading Co. v. Davis [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 688. Statement in an order for goods that the first payment may be made to the agent securing the order does not amount to acceptance of the order where no payment was made and the identity of the agent to receive payment does not appear. Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569.

47. An option to close on a certain day includes that day. U. B. Blalock & Co. v. Clark & Bro. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 642. Construction of contract to furnish piling to railroad company as giving the company an option to purchase at any time during the year. Reed v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 389, 75 S. W. 200. If, under a contract to deliver 200 or 300 tons of pig iron, the purchaser may require the larger amount within a certain time, his right is lost if not so exercised. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. New River Mineral Co., 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 404.

48. An option to buy a larger amount than was furnished, limited to a certain time, is not extended by delay of the seller in the first delivery. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. New River Mineral Co., 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 404.

49. Addition of terms to an offer of sale materially modifies the offer, operates as a rejection, and amounts to a new proposal to be accepted before completion of a contract. Stock v. Towle, 97 Me. 408. Where owners of ice accept an offer of another to sell as their agent, his subsequent acceptance of their offer to sell as a purchaser in his own right is not responsive, and no contract is made. Rogers v. French [Iowa] 96 N. W. 767. An offer to sell ice not specifying time of payment is presumed to be for cash on delivery so that an acceptance fixing later time for payment is not unconditional and will not effect a contract. Id.

50. Signature of a salesman to a contract of purchase is not acceptance by his principal where he makes a reduction in price and his authority so to do is not shown. Cary v. Appo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 569. Unconditional acceptance by telegraph of an offer for sale of goods at a certain price binds the sender, though the telegraph company makes a mistake as to the price. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Akron Cereal Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 516.

51. An offer to sell imposes no obligation without an acceptance, and an acceptance varying the terms of the offer is insufficient amounting to a new offer which must be accepted before liability results. Kileen v. Kennedy [Minn.] 97 N. W. 126. Where an offer of purchase was rejected by the seller and the latter's counter offer was accepted by the buyer with directions to deliver, with which the seller never complied, there was no contract of sale. Johnson v. Corbett, 95 Md. 746.

52. An offer of modification or condition to a proposal for sale is a rejection, and acceptance of the modification concludes the contract making the modification a part of the contract. Sloan v. Wolf Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 196.

53. Where a written proposition of offer by a contracter detailed alternate provisions for machinery in a city water plant and was incorporated in a contract with the city, there was an acceptance of the offer by the city, though supplemental contracts were made which did not affect the subject-matter of the original. City of Rockford v. Mead, 207 Ill. 423, 69 N. E. 756.

54. Mistake in the consignee will prevent the sale. Newberry v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 133 N. C. 45. Mistake as to the amount of goods is fatal. Singer v. Grand Rapids Match Co., 117 Ga. 86. That the purchaser of goods by order signed the wrong order by mistake, where he afterward without regard to the mistake receives and accepts the goods, will not relieve him for liability for the price. Strickland v. Parlin & O. Co., 118 Ga. 213. That the purchaser is mistaken in the kind of root for drug purposes when samples are submitted by the seller will not prevent recovery of the price where no fraud was practiced. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Puckett [Ala.] 35 So. 1019.

55. Certainty of terms as to time of delivery of goods to show that the minds of the parties met as to such terms. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen [Vt.] 56 Atl. 87. Construction of negotiations for sale as showing that minds of parties did not meet as to terms for sale of canned corn. Rider v. Wood [Ala.] 35 So. 46. Where a purchaser directed entry of his order for goods "specifications to follow," but never sent specifications, there was no contract. A conversation between agents of the parties in which the buyer's agent said specifications would be sent or settle for failure to do so will not supplement the alleged contract, but is merely evidence of a breach. Wheeling S. & I. Co. v. Evans, 97 Md. 305. An offer and acceptance by mail is not ineffectual to create a contract because no time for delivery was specified, where the seller stated the time when he would be ready to deliver and the buyer stated when he was willing to receive. Nelson v. Hirsch & Sons' I. & R. Co., 102 Mo. App. 498, 77 S. W. 590.

56. A clause providing that "on delivery and acceptance" of goods payment would be made, did not give the purchaser the ar-buy[57] on terms capable of ascertainment,[58] and respecting a definable property and quantity of it,[59] but not necessarily to buy or sell a fixed predetermined quantity.[60] The sale must not be wagering[61] or offensive to public policy,[62] or statutory regulations concerning sales of the particular commodity.[63]

That custom may enter the terms of a sale it must be general, uniform and notorious,[64] and the parties must know of it.[65] It cannot change plain terms of the sale.[66]

The vendor must have title to the subject-matter.[67]

A bill of sale need not be recorded.[68]

The sale must comply with the statute of frauds,[69] which has been discursively bitrary right to refuse goods of the required quality so as to make the contract void for want of mutuality. Lehman v. Salzgeber, 124 Fed. 479.

57. A writing signed by the seller agreeing to sell certain goods to the buyer at a certain place and price imports no consideration or promise to buy and is a mere promise which may be withdrawn before it is acted upon. Alderman v. New Departure Bell Co., 75 Conn. 519.

58. Indefiniteness and uncertainty of instrument of sale as preventing enforcement. Howie v. Kasnowitz, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 295. There is no contract for sale of goods where no definite agreement is made as to quality, quantity or price. Losse v. Peoria Cordage Co., 116 Wis. 129, 92 N. W. 559.

59. A contract for sale of second hand rails which had not been taken up, estimating the quantity of each grade and providing that all rails taken up in rebuilding the street railways in a city should be sold to the purchaser at a certain price for each grade, is not void for indefiniteness as to the subject-matter. Nelson v. Hirsch & Sons' I. & R. Co., 102 Mo. App. 498, 77 S. W. 590.

60. A contract of sale is void for want of consideration and mutuality, if the amount of goods is conditioned on the will, wish or want of one party. City of Ft. Scott v. Eads Brokerage Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 51. A contract to furnish an article necessary to business of the second party in such quantities as shall be consumed during a specified time is mutual and valid. A. Klipstein & Co. v. Allen, 123 Fed. 992. A contract made by one with an established business, the character and extent of which is known to the other party, to take as much of certain goods as he used in a year is not lacking in mutuality. Excelsior Wrapper Co. v. Messinger, 116 Wis. 549, 93 N. W. 459.

61. Sale of cotton for future delivery under Code S. C. 1902, §§ 2310, 2311. James H. Parker & Co. v. Moore, 125 Fed. 807. See further, Gambling Contracts. An agreement stipulating sale of all oranges produced by the seller's trees in certain years is not an aleatory contract. Losecco v. Gregory, 108 La. 648.

62. A contract to buy goods on condition that similar goods should not be sold to another dealer in the same town is not, it seems, against public policy. Arons v. Kopf, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 123. A misrepresentation whereby a purchaser bought a preparation of zinc for white lead does not make the sale absolutely void as against public policy, since performance cannot be said to tend to injure the public. Pike's Peak Paint Co. v. Masury & Son [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 796.

63. Compliance with law regulating sale of fertilizer requiring labels on bags, to enable seller to recover purchase price. B. F. Beard & Co. v. Goodman, 25 Ky. L. R. 1566, 78 S. W. 191.

64. Johnston v. Parrott, 92 Mo. App. 199. A contract being silent as to the place of weighing goods, a uniform trade custom in this regard may be shown. Gehl v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 116 Wis. 263, 93 N. W. 26.

65. Consumers' Ice Co. v. Jennings, 100 Va. 719. Where the purchaser accepted linseed oil for a period of 15 years and paid for it at a certain measurement, with knowledge of a custom among manufacturers to sell at that measure, he cannot recover for overpayment because of short weight or have the remainder to be furnished under the contract delivered at larger measure. Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Nat. Linseed Oil Co., 197 Ill. 632, 64 N. E. 732.

66. Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co., 97 Md. 1.

67. Mensinger v. Steiner-Medinger Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 633.

68. Stuart v. Mitchum, 135 Ala. 546. See post, § 14.

69. Under the statute of frauds, a delivery and receipt of goods must show intention of the parties to vest possession in the vendee discharged of all lien for the price, and acceptance must be as of the goods purchased, assent of the parties to the agreement being insufficient [Gen. St. 1902, § 1090]. Devine v. Warner [Conn.] 56 Atl. 562.

Sales which must be in writing: Agreement for purchase of standing timber. Kileen v. Kennedy [Minn.] 97 N. W. 126. Oral agreement for sale of corporate stock by brokers for future delivery, without note, memorandum, part payment, or delivery actual or constructive. Nichols v. Clark, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 107. Purchase of an undivided half interest in a machine for more than $50, possession remaining in the owner of the remainder [Rev. St. 1898, § 2308]. Gerndt v. Conradt, 117 Wis. 15, 93 N. W. 804. A verbal contract to buy a claim against a third person for $845 on condition that it be reduced to judgment to be assigned by the seller is within 2 Gen. St. p. 1603, providing that sales of goods, etc., of $30 or more must be in writing. French v. Schoonmaker [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 225. Oral contract for sale of goods above $50 in value, the goods remaining in possession and control of the vendor pending determination of price [Civ. Code, § 2693, par. 7]. Brunswick Grocery Co. v. Lamar, 116 Ga. 1.

Sales not within statute: The oral promise of a third person to complete payment of goods sold on instalments on consideration of transfer to him is not within the statute treated in a previous article.[70] To be valid under the statute, a sale need not be expressed in a single instrument,[71] but the several writings relied on must be so connected by mutual reference as to make the contract clear without aid of extrinsic evidence of connection.[72] Past performance[73] by delivery[74] or part payment[75] serves in lieu of a writing. Delivery to satisfy the statute implies a corresponding receipt.[76] It is not necessary to validity if there is a writing.[77] No actual change of custody is required,[78] except to avoid the inference of a fraudulent conveyance.[79]

The sufficiency of evidence as to formation of the contract depends upon the peculiar circumstances.[80] A bill of sale, executed, acknowledged and recorded, is of frauds, whether title is in the buyer or seller. Berg v. Spitz, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 602. Where the consideration for personalty is paid, the sale is not within the statute. Lathrop v. Humble [Wis.] 97 N. W. 905. Contract which may be performed within a year and it does not appear that it is not to be performed and fully completed within that time. Neal v. Parker [Md.] 57 Atl. 213. Where duplicate orders for goods are executed and one retained by each party it is not necessary, to satisfy the statute of frauds, that both duplicates should show all the terms of sale. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen [Vt.] 56 Atl. 87. An oral agreement on sufficient consideration for sale of an invention pending application for a patent is valid [Rev. St. U. S. § 4898]. Cook v. Sterling Elec. Co., 118 Fed. 45. Written contract for sale of a growing crop certain in terms and on which earnest money is paid. Glass v. Blazer, 91 Mo. App. 564. Promise to pay for goods furnished a third person is an original promise on sufficient consideration. Kesler v. Cheadle [Okl.] 72 Pac. 367. A contract for purchase of matting to be manufactured and delivered to the buyer is a contract for work, labor and services, not within the statute. Gross v. Heckert [Wis.] 97 N. W. 952. Sale of an appliance which when attached to a boiler would become a part of the fixtures already on the premises. Underfeet Stoker Co. v. Detroit Salt Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 959. That a bill was rendered for a mill, sold by a purchaser of railroad ties under a previous contract to the seller of the ties, will not estop the purchaser of the ties from claiming that it was in part payment on the ties, thus taking that contract out of the statute of frauds. Dallavo v. Richardson [Mich.] 96 N. W. 20. Oral acceptance of a written agreement to sell, signed by the seller, is sufficient. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67.

70. Frauds, Statute of, 2 Curr. Law, p. 108.

71. The terms may be derived from letters to third persons connected with the transaction. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67.

72. Devine v. Warner [Conn.] 56 Atl. 562.

73. Part performance of contract for purchase of feed for cattle as taking contract out of statute of frauds. Jones v. Nat. Cotton Oil Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 420, 72 S. W. 248. Mere notice by both parties of the sale to third persons doing business with them and orders to vendors of the seller for transmission to the buyer does not show sufficient part performance to take the sale out of the statute. Brunswick Grocery Co. v. Lamar, 116 Ga. 1.

74. Miss. Cotton Oil Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 33 So. 443. Where personalty is delivered to the purchaser, and he appropriated it to his own use. Badger Tel. Co. v. Wolf River Tel. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 907. Whether delivery of a mill to one of the parties to a prior contract was a part payment taking the sale out of the statute of frauds is a question for the jury in an action of replevin by the purchaser on evidence of the negotiations. Dallavo v. Richardson [Mich.] 96 N. W. 20. Partial delivery of goods for examination, followed by acceptance of all including those received, is "acceptance and receipt" sufficient under the statute of frauds. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67. Sale of a chose in action assigned and delivered pursuant to the contract, though it was not in writing [Laws 1897, p. 507, c. 417]. Greenberg v. Davidson, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 796.

75. Part payment to an agent expressly authorized to sell is sufficient, especially where it is not shown that the seller was prejudiced. Jones v. Wattles [Neb.] 92 N. W. 765. Part payment on a sale of goods need not be made when the contract is made to take the contract out of the statute of frauds [Comp. Laws 1897, § 9516]. Dallavo v. Richardson [Mich.] 96 N. W. 20.

76. Not where the subject-matter was brought to the place of delivery but no one was there to receive it. Shelton v. Thompson, 96 Mo. App. 327, 70 S. W. 256.

77. Warner v. Warner, 30 Ind. App. 578, 66 N. E. 760.

78. While there may be acceptance and receipt of goods complying with the statute of frauds without actual change of custody, proof must be clear and must show an actual change of relations of the parties [Gen. St. 1902, § 1090]. Devine v. Warner [Conn.] 56 Atl. 562.

79. A sale of personalty without delivery is presumptively void only as against bona fide purchasers, in Indiana [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6636]. Warner v. Warner, 30 Ind. App. 578, 66 N. E. 760.

80. Sufficiency of evidence to show sale. Oliver v. Love [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 335. To show a sale of wheat. Potter v. Mt. Vernon Roller Mill Co., 101 Mo. App. 581, 73 S. W. 1005. Of negotiations, and offer and acceptance, to show contract by correspondence for purchase of 5,000 cords of wood. Scully v. Detroit Iron Furnace Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 885. Of evidence to show an agreement by one hiring a vehicle to purchase it in case he damaged it while using it. Brown v. Cuozzo, 85 N. Y. Supp. 759. In action by the purchaser for breach to show the contract of sale. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67. To show absolute sale and not one depending on option of purchaser as to evidence of delivery to, and acceptance by, the purchaser, conclusive if unexplained;[81] where it passes from debtor to creditor, it is valid between them, though not acknowledged or recorded, possession having changed.[82] A writing contemporaneous with an order for goods, providing for their return if unsatisfactory, executed by the seller's agent in his behalf, as shown by its face, may be admitted as evidence of the contract, though somewhat in conflict with the order.[83]

Parol evidence is inadmissible to change a written sale complete in its terms,[84] but otherwise where the contract is incomplete,[85] or is alleged not to have been goods he would keep. Ampel v. Seifert, 84 N. Y. Supp. 122. Introduction of a bill of sale describing property referred to in a bill of items attached and made a part thereof carries the attached inventory into the evidence and binds the purchaser who has signed it. Knoche v. Perry, 90 Mo. App. 483.

81. Knoche v. Perry, 90 Mo. App. 483.

82. Heisch v. Bell [N. M.] 70 Pac. 572.

83. Eastern Mfg. Co. v. Brenk [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 538.

84. Atwater v. Orford Copper Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 426; Succession of Welsh, 171 La. 801; Oil Creek G. Min. Co. v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 543; Withers v. Moore [Cal.] 71 Pac. 697; McCall Co. v. Jennings, 26 Utah, 459, 73 Pac. 639; Consumers' Ice Co. v. Jennings, 100 Va. 719; Bullard v. Brewer, 118 Ga. 918; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Eich [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1106. Where contract must be in writing under statute of frauds [Rev. St. 1898, § 2308]. Saveland v. Western Wis. R. Co., 118 Wis. 267, 95 N. W. 130. Inadmissible to vary contract as to rescission and return of chattel. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Mackey, 100 Mo. App. 400, 74 S. W. 388. Of warranties by agent of seller outside written contract inadmissible. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Allison, 116 Ga. 445. Evidence of a custom to give reduction of duty on foreign coal to purchaser inadmissible to vary written sale. Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 159. Written contract for sale of tomatoes giving full terms as to liability for damages for failure to furnish them. Newell v. New Holstein Canning Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 487. Express or implied warranties cannot be imported into a written sale by proof of prior oral conversation. Telluride Power Transmission Co. v. Crane Co., 103 Ill. App. 647. A statement in a memorandum of a sale that money given the seller was a payment is binding and it cannot be shown that it was a forfeit. Cousins v. Bowling, 100 Mo. App. 452, 74 S. W. 168. Where an unqualified written order for goods is given, evidence of a verbal agreement that the purchaser should be liable for only the amount resold varies the written instrument. Grabfelder v. Vosburgh, 85 N. Y. Supp. 633. Where the written sale provides that shipment should be made at the seller's earliest convenience and that no agreement outside the writing should bind the parties, parol evidence that the order was conditional on delivery at a certain time cannot be heard. Hess v. Liebmann, 84 N. Y. Supp. 178. In an action for price of goods bought for use of another than the purchaser, the latter cannot show that payment was to depend on acceptance of the third person, where the written offer and acceptance show no such condition. Wheeler C. & E. Co. v. R. G. Packard Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 288. Parol evidence of a contemporaneous agreement that title should pass inadmissible in an action to recover chattel sold at conditional sale. Forbes v. Taylor [Ala.] 35 So. 855. Where a contract of sale is made in writing by an agent of the vendor duly authorized, evidence of prior conversations are inadmissible to show that the sale absolute on its face was, in fact, conditional. Bass Dry Goods Co. v. Granite City Mfg. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 980. Evidence as to custom of receiving and mailing notices of acceptances of contracts for purchase of machinery is inadmissible in an action for the price of machinery on a written contract. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Watson [Minn.] 95 N. W. 884.

Notwithstanding a stipulation against modifications by agents, it may be shown that the agent made a later and wholly distinct parol agreement. Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Yost, 90 Minn. 47, 95 N. W. 584.

85. Where an order in writing for an engine does not purport to contain the contract of sale, warranty may be shown by parol. Puget Sound I. & S. Works v. Clemmons, 32 Wash. 36, 72 Pac. 465. Where letters between parties to an alleged contract show on their face that they did not constitute a contract, oral evidence is admissible to show a sale. Courtney v. Wm. Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co., 97 Md. 499. It may be shown in explaining a written contract in an action for goods sold and delivered that a certain trade custom exists among dealers in such goods in that locality. Rastetter v. Reynolds, 160 Ind. 133, 66 N. E. 612. Sufficiency of evidence to show that written agreement for sale of engine did not contain the whole contract between the parties. Huber Mfg. Co. v. Hunter, 99 Mo. App. 46, 72 S. W. 484. Where a written memorandum was not made part of a conditional sale and not signed by the parties, parol evidence may be given to explain or contradict it. Smith v. Williams, 85 N. Y. Supp. 506. Contract for sale of old iron in which the seller stipulated "to keep whatever I want of the iron." N. Y. House Wrecking Co. v. O'Rourke, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1116. An oral agreement for sale of machinery was not prohibited by a provision in a written contract against oral modification where such written contract was never accepted. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Watson [Minn.] 95 N. W. 884. Where a note for conditional sale of a horse does not describe the horse, the conditional sale and the identity of the animal may be shown, in replevin, by other evidence. Young v. Salley [Miss.] 35 So. 571. Where written sale of oil is silent as to the capacity of cars in which it was to be delivered, parol evidence may be given to show an oral agreement as to such cars; letters between the parties dealing with the issue are admissible. Sherman O. & C. Co. v.

embodied in the writing,[86] or the writing lost,[87] or where it tends to show that a sale was never made.[88] Thus a bill of sale of personalty, absolute on its face, may be shown by parol to be a chattel mortgage.[89]

§ 3. Modification and mutual rescission.[90]—By mutual[91] agreement[92] a sale may be modified or rescinded but an agreement between several purchasers does not modify the sale.[93] A buyer's assignment of a sale of materials to be furnished is a surrender of its buying rights, which cannot be restored by reassignment after the seller has refused to consent to the assignment.[94] If after a breach the parties agree on new terms the original contract is supplanted,[95] but an agreement de-

Dallas O. & R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 961. Where a deed for realty which had been sold with personalty expressed the whole consideration as applying to the land, in an action of replevin for the personalty, the buyer may show that the consideration was so expressed by parol evidence, where the seller admitted that the personalty went with the land. Lathrop v. Humble [Wis.] 97 N. W. 905. Where a contract of sale was indefinite as to the manner in which goods sold should be loaded on cars, parol evidence may be given to show the manner intended as illustrated by former loadings. Oliver v. Or. Sugar Co., 42 Or. 276, 70 Pac. 902. Oral testimony is admissible to show that there was no acceptance on the terms proposed and no delivery of the goods ordered on a general denial of the petition alleging acceptance and delivery in an action for the price, as showing that the contract was wholly different from that alleged in the petition. Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co. [Okl.] 75 Pac. 528. Where a written sale of fruit provided for payment by sight draft with bill of lading attached, parol evidence may be given of a later agreement that the draft was to be drawn on a bank at a certain place. Town v. Jepson [Mich.] 95 N. W. 742.

86. Where the defense in an action for the price of a machine was that it was sold under an independent oral contract by local agents who claimed to own it, the provision in the written order sent plaintiff that its terms should not be varied by agents, has no force, oral evidence being admissible to show the contract as pleaded. Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Yost [Minn.] 95 N. W. 534.

87. Where a letter relating to rescission of an order for goods is lost, parol evidence of its contents is admissible. Conkling v. Nicholas [Mich.] 95 N. W. 745.

88. An instrument signed by two parties, reciting that one sold property to the other, is not conclusive evidence of a sale, where extrinsic evidence shows title at the time to have been in the alleged purchaser. Mensinger v. Steiner-Medinger Co. [Neb.] 94 N. W. 633. In an action on a contract for sale of a machine, which contract was delivered to the seller's agent, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was to be held by the agent, and not to be delivered to the seller until further orders, as it shows merely that the contract never became in force. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Morlan, 121 Iowa, 451, 96 N. W. 976. In a suit for the price of goods purchased by the buyer's alleged agent, where the seller introduced a bill of sale made by the agent to the alleged purchaser in which the agency was recited, though the action was at law, the purchaser could prove by parol that the bill of sale was intended as a mortgage, because it was introduced only for a collateral purpose and the controversy was not between the parties to it. Pac. Biscuit Co. v. Dugger, 42 Or. 513, 70 Pac. 523.

89. Miller v. Campbell Commission Co. [Okl.] 74 Pac. 507.

90. Rescission by either party on his own account, see post, §§ 10A, 11A.

91. Failure to reply to a proposal for cancellation of a contract of sale for five weeks is not an acceptance. Baltimore & L. R. Co. v. Steel Rail Supply Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 655. A sale of goods in esse for future delivery is not cancelled by notice of cancellation by the purchaser to which the seller did not accede, the goods to be delivered being in esse. J. P. Gentry Co. v. Margolius & Co., 110 Tenn. 669, 75 S. W. 959.

92. Sufficiency of evidence to show modification of sale of fruit so as to allow storage. J. K. Armsby Co. v. Blum, 137 Cal. 552, 70 Pac. 669. Six months' time provided in an option clause of a sale was held extended by the purchaser's asking the buyer to add the time during which the purchaser's plant was closed, to which the seller assented. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. New River Mineral Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329.

Sufficiency of evidence in action for price of goods to show rescission of the sale by mutual agreement. H. Hirschberg Optical Co. v. Michaelson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 461. A compromise agreement for sale of machinery requiring payments in cash and by note and the furnishing of new parts by the seller, and settlement of all accounts between the parties, is based on a sufficient consideration. New Haven Mfg. Co. v. New Haven P. & B. Co. [Conn.] 55 Atl. 604.

Mere notice, without cause or default of the other party, will not rescind an executory sale absolute, the terms of which are valid and complete. Backes v. Black [Neb.] 97 N. W. 321. Neither a countermand of an order for shipment nor notice by the purchaser that he will not receive the goods will amount to rescission of a written sale of goods. Okl. Vinegar Co. v. Carter, 116 Ga. 140, 59 L. R. A. 122.

93. Where purchaser of an animal merely created a tenancy in common in the purchasers, a later partnership for its management did not change the character of the contract or their liability thereon. Valade v. Masson [Mich.] 97 N. W. 59.

94. Gardiner Campbell Co. v. Iroquois Iron Co. [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 648.

95. Where on receipt of goods bought, the purchaser notified the seller of defects and offered to take the goods at a less price without regard to defects, which offer the seller accepted, the original contract was displaced by one without warranty. Vodrey signed merely to protect perishable goods reserving all rights has no such effect.[96] Immaterial alterations,[97] or alteration by a third person[98] will not affect the sale.

§ 4. General rules of interpretation and construction.—The same general rules apply as in other contracts,[99] hence no attempt has been made in this section to present an exhaustive collection of cases. The peculiar applications of these rules will be found in subsequent sections.

A written sale relied on by both parties will be binding on them in all its terms.[1] Written will prevail over printed words.[2] A construction by parties will be adopted by the court.[3] A contract of sale sent to the purchaser in another state and there signed by him is consummated thereby and is governed by the laws of that state.[4] If no price is fixed on goods the market price prevailing at time and place of delivery controls; if no market price exists at such place, then such price at the nearest place having a market price plus or minus the difference in cost of delivery.[5]

§ 5. Property sold. Amount, kind, nonexistence and failure of consideration.—A thing not mature[6] or one to exist in future[7] may be sold. There is not a failure of consideration where the buyer has merely mistaken the value or suffered depreciation,[8] or has obtained or keeps something of substantial value.[9]

Destruction of the particular property sold will discharge the seller,[10] or impossibility[11] of supplying it, especially when so stipulated.

Where the seller is unable to deliver the identical goods, delivery of others equally good is sufficient,[12] but delivery of inferior goods is not compliance.[13] An

Pottery Co. v. Horne Co., 117 Wis. 1, 93 N. W. 823.

96. Where perishable goods were rejected an agreement that the purchaser should sell for the best price obtainable, waiving rights of neither party, was not a novation. Tilden v. Gordon & Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 1016.

97. An alteration in an order for a machine so as to make it require security for the price was not material where the purchaser had already accepted the machine and given the security, regardless of the changed order. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ebbighausen, 11 N. D. 466, 92 N. W. 826.

98. Wrongful alteration of terms of an order for goods by the agent of the seller is an act of a stranger which will not render the contract invalid as between the parties. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen [Vt.] 56 Atl. 87.

99. Contracts, 1 Curr. Law, p. 626.

1. Sale stipulating that rescission shall be in "full settlement" excludes other recovery for breach of warranty. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brown [Neb.] 98 N. W. 697.

2. Eager v. Mathewson [Nev.] 74 Pac. 404. A printed statement on an order as to claims for defects in a machine cannot change the requirement of "entire satisfaction" in the written contract of sale. Weeks v. Robert A. Johnston Co., 116 Wis. 105, 92 N. W. 794.

3. Where the parties construe a contract for sale of coal to be delivered as "required" to mean as "needed," the court will adopt the construction. Purcell Co. v. Sage, 200 Ill. 342, 65 N. E. 723.

4. Emerson Co. v. Proctor, 97 Me. 360.

5. South Gardiner Lumber Co. v. Bradstreet, 97 Me. 165.

6. Growing crop. Glass v. Blazer, 91 Mo. App. 564.

7. Losecco v. Gregory, 108 La. 648. Sale of contract for sale of crop of oranges for two years on assumption of risks by purchaser. Id. After delivery the purchaser is estopped to assert that the sale was invalid because the subject-matter was not in esse. Logs to be cut. Ketchum v. Stetson & P. Mill Co., 33 Wash. 92, 73 Pac. 1127.

8. That the property is not worth what the buyer supposed it to be constitutes no defense. Furber v. Fogler, 97 Me. 585.

9. Cannot urge want of consideration because machine is valueless where defendant has not returned or offered to return it. Massillon E. & T. Co. v. Schirmer [Iowa] 93 N. W. 599.

That a purchaser of goods and the right to sell them in certain territory made several sales will not estop him from showing their worthlessness. Live Stock Remedy Co. v. White, 90 Mo. App. 498.

10. Destruction of a mill terminates a contract for sale of its output for a year with privilege of renewal by the purchaser, though the seller rebuilds. The contract cannot be extended to a new mill erected on the site of the old or to its output. Blodgett v. Johnson [N. H.] 54 Atl. 1021.

11. Where it was agreed that delivery might be made and damaged tobacco separated afterwards, but no disposition was made of the damaged tobacco separated from the lot, nor any further agreement about it, the seller could not recover for it in an action on the contract. Jacobson v. Tallard, 116 Wis. 662, 93 N. W. 841.

12. Walker v. Taylor [Del.] 53 Atl. 357.

13. A sale of brick of two kinds in specific proportions will not require the buyer to take other proportions, and if more of the cheaper kind is furnished, he is entitled to an abatement of the price. J. Shute & Sons v. Dickson Cotton Mills, 132 N. C. 271.

approximation of specifications has been held good where the contract contemplated a variation.[14] If it be specified that there be no limit on certain kinds the limit applies to all others.[15] The buyer is not liable for excess,[16] and an agreement as to how it shall be disposed does not make him a purchaser as to it.[17] On a sale of not less than a minimum nor more than a maximum the seller has the right to deliver the maximum if acceptance be wrongly refused.[18] It may be shown how much there was when sale was made of the quantity as of a certain time.[19] Recent cases construing particular words relating to quantity or amount,[20] kind or quality,[21] and identity of property,[22] or interest therein,[23] are collected in the note.

§ 6. Transition of title.[24] Meaning and effect of contract.—In order to determine whether title has passed, it is necessary to find whether the sale as made was executed or executory or on condition precedent.[25] On sale of stock by a broker to a customer on margin, the legal title is in the latter, the broker being

14. Where a continuing contract recognizes that there might be some variance in the weight of paper sold, and provides that the purchaser should have the benefit thereof, the seller was bound only to good faith and to furnish paper of approximately the specified weight. Pulitzer Pub. Co. v. Rumford Falls Paper Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 519.

15. Under a contract for sale of railroad ties of white, post, and chestnut oak, providing "no limit in size of post oak and chestnut oak" the limitation of size applied only to white oak. Leonard v. Holland [Ky.] 79 S. W. 227.

16. Where the seller by mistake furnishes more goods than the contract calls for, though warned by the purchaser not to exceed the contract, the latter is not liable for the excess. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. McDonald, 182 Mass. 593, 66 N. E. 415.

17. An agreement that vessel was to proceed, the seller to do what was right and to stand any loss, did not amount to a sale of the excess, under the terms of the sale for the regular cargo. Williamson v. North Pac. Lumber Co., 42 Or. 153, 70 Pac. 387.

18. The buyer being required to give three weeks' notice for the extra amount if required, after receiving the lesser amount, refused more on the claim that the materials furnished did not comply with the contract. Ready v. Fulton Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 202.

19. Where a bill of sale covers half of ore in certain bins at a certain time it may be shown that additional ore was afterward placed in such bins to defeat the holder's claim to half the ore found in the bins. Yank v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 74 Pac. 77.

20. Construction of contract for sale of cattle as to number to be delivered. Eager v. Mathewson [Nev.] 74 Pac. 404.

The phrase "to be taken as ordered," used in a contract to furnish paper at a certain price, was an undertaking by the purchaser to take the quantity specified at the stated price. Excelsior Wrapper Co. v. Messinger, 116 Wis. 549, 93 N. W. 459.

A contract for sale of oil to be placed in the buyer's tanks to contain about a certain amount, bound the seller to delivery of that amount not exceeding capacity of cars furnished, and the word "about" would not excuse him from filling the tanks to their capacity. Sherman O. & C. Co. v. Dallas O. & R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 961. Evidence held to show that stone was sold according to measurement on the wagon and not as being measured after being laid in a wall. Martin, M. & Co. v. Petty [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 878.

21. Koch v. Bamford Bros. Silk Mfg. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 271. Kind and quantity of goods included in contract. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Kerlin Bros. Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 414. Contract for sale of oil barrels as entitling purchaser to call on seller to furnish new instead of second hand barrels. H. D. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Scofield [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 916. Certain telegrams exchanged and evidence held to show that a sale of wheat by a reference to same was a sale of smutty off grade wheat, and not a sale of No. 2 wheat. Butterfield v. Butterfield [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 639.

Where a contract for the construction of a chattel did not require it to be like any other, but of a particular design, a finding was proper that plaintiff was not bound to furnish one similar to another pointed out to him. Braun v. Hothan, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 611.

22. Sale of lumber as showing prima facie a sale of specific lumber and not a defined quantity of lumber out of a larger mass. State v. Wharton, 117 Wis. 558, 94 N. W. 359.

23. Sale of corporate stock passes not only the paper scrip, but the interest in corporate property represented by it. Oliver v. Oliver, 118 Ga. 362.

A contract by several to buy a horse, each to pay a certain sum for a share in the animal, created a tenancy in common, each owner being entitled to an undivided interest to the extent of his subscription. Valade v. Masson [Mich.] 97 N. W. 59.

Construction of sale of oranges from orchards for two years as sale of the hope of the crops and not the crops themselves. Losecco v. Gregory, 108 La. 648.

24. Distinctions between sale and other contracts, see ante, § 1.

25. Contract in writing construed as mere executory sale and not as passing title in praesenti. In re Schujahn [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 938. A written contract for sale of a growing crop, certain in terms and part payment thereon, passes title in praesenti. Glass v. Blazer, 91 Mo. App. 564. In a sale on condition precedent the title does not pass until the contingency happens. The owner of a membership certificate in a corporation had authorized an agent to sell it. The owner sold and delivered to another on condition that if the agent had executed his power it was to be returned. His vendee pledgee for repayment of advances made by him in the transaction.[26] Performance of labor required as to the subject-matter or in payment may be necessary to pass title.[27]

Separation and designation of the goods is generally necessary to pass title,[28] unless they are fully identified.[29] Measurement[30] and inspection,[31] if required by terms of the contract, must be performed, unless the seller has fully performed and the buyer fails to exercise his right of inspection.[32] A separation of a part of what was sold may pass title to that.[33]

Payment[34] is necessary to pass title on a cash sale,[35] even though delivery be made as directed by the buyer,[36] unless a waiver of cash payment is shown.[37]

sold to another. Prior to the sale the agent had executed his power. Held the owner's vendee acquired no title. State v. Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee [Wis.] 98 N. W. 930.

26. Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233.

27. On a sale of a growing crop, to be cared for and harvested by the seller, title does not pass until such labor has been performed. La Vie v. Tooze, 43 Or. 590, 74 Pac. 210.

28. A sale of shingles, title to pass when the shingles are made, sorted, piled and counted, will be strictly construed as to passing of title. Haynes v. Quay [Mich.] 95 N. W. 1082. If the goods sold are not specific, title does not pass until appropriation of specific goods by consent of both parties. American H. & L. Co. v. Chalkley & Co. [Va.] 44 S. E. 705. Where a sale of hops required segregation by the seller from a larger amount, title does not pass until such act is performed (La Vie v. Crosby, 43 Or. 612, 74 Pac. 220), if no other intention was shown by the contract (Backhaus v. Buells, 43 Or. 558, 73 Pac. 342). Where the seller had 3,500 bushels of corn standing in the field, sold 600 bushels for future delivery by written instrument without designating any part thereof, and received part payment in advance, there was but an agreement to sell and no title passed, the corn not having been separated and delivered. Augustine v. McDowell, 120 Iowa, 401, 94 N. W. 918. Where it appears in an action for the price of rails that a larger number than was required by the contract was piled ready for delivery, but that the buyer's portion was not segregated, there was no performance. Lum v. Hale [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 359. Sale of a certain number of tons of coal will not pass title until it is loaded ready for shipment. Taylor v. Fall River Ironworks, 124 Fed. 826. In a contract for the purchase of all lumber to be manufactured from certain standing timber it was held that title did not pass until it was loaded on the cars. Vendees not liable for taxes in township where it was piled before loaded. Grand Rapids Bark & Lumber Co. v. Inland Tp. [Mich.] 98 N. W. 980.

29. A contract of sale of specified personalty fully identified between the parties passes title, though the writing does not show the manner of identification. State v. Wharton, 117 Wis. 558, 94 N. W. 359. A sale of a lot of hay in a barn by the ton, on credit, with privilege of allowing it to remain a while, passes title so that the purchaser is liable for the price, to be determined by the best evidence, though it was burned by accident after it might have been removed and though it was to be weighed to determine its amount. Allen v. Elmore, 121 Iowa, 241, 96 N. W. 769.

30. Construction of contract for sale of trees for railroad ties as requiring measurement of white oak trees at the stump. Leonard v. Holland [Ky.] 79 S. W. 227.

31. Where lumber sold under an executory contract was to be inspected and paid for at prices fixed according to grades, title did not pass until inspection was made. Deutsch v. Dunham [Ark.] 78 S. W. 767.

32. Where the seller of railroad ties had complied with the contract in delivering, marking and piling the ties, title passed to the buyers, though inspection was not made after request by the sellers. Potter v. Holmes, 87 Minn. 477, 92 N. W. 411.

33. Where the seller pays for a certain amount of corn and a lesser amount is measured out by the parties and arrangements made for delivery, title passes thereto, nothing being left to complete the sale. Augustine v. McDowell, 120 Iowa, 401, 94 N. W. 918.

34. Payment and tender as terms of the sale in general, see post, § 9.

35. Johnston v. Parrott, 92 Mo. App. 199. Where iron bought was not to be moved after being loaded until paid for and the railroad company was warned not to give the buyer a bill of lading until payment, title never passed. Hart v. Boston & M. R. R. [N. H.] 56 Atl. 920. Where a sale was made and partial delivery made on part payment, and on failure in payment of the remainder on completion of delivery, it was agreed to give credit for an increased price, notes and chattel mortgages, the sale was for cash and title did not pass until execution of the notes and mortgages. Austin v. Welch, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 526, 72 S. W. 881. Where goods were sold for cash on delivery and earnest money paid, payment was necessary to pass title. Drake v. Scott, 136 Ala. 261.

Where payment and delivery are to be concurrent acts payment in full is necessary before the title passes. Pate v. Wyly & Co., 118 Ga. 262.

36. Delivery to carrier. Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 134, 70 Pac. 1080.

37. Paulson v. Lyon, 26 Utah, 438, 73 Pac. 510. Where the seller notified the buyer that delivery would be made c. o. d. only, but delivery was made without payment, in absence of other evidence, the buyer had a good title. Leavitt v. Rosenthal, 84 N. Y. Supp. 530. No title vests by delivery without payment unless made so as to show a waiver of payment. Hirsch v. C. W. Leatherbee Lumber Co. [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 645.

Waiver is negatived by circumstances showing a continued demand for immediate payment.[38] The usual custom of collecting for goods sold at a distance by draft will not affect provisions of the contract where it clearly fixes the mode of payment.[39] Particular provisions for payment are construed in the notes.[40]

Delivery and acceptance.—If the intention to pass title at once is shown, delivery is unnecessary,[41] but it does not pass title where the receiptor is to resell and account to the sender[42] or if the parties by their contract intend delivery and payment to be concurrent acts.[43] No additional act is required where a licensee sells goods to his licensor which are already on the land,[44] but in case of a sale of a chattel which may possibly be a fixture as between seller and buyer, the buyer's possession as a tenant is not enough.[45] A condition for return will not prevent the passing of title where acceptance is otherwise complete.[46] Mere transfer of possession will not pass title[47] under a cash sale,[48] but delivery passes title if the transferee then acquires absolute dominion with right of disposal and is bound for payment.[49] Delivery to a carrier may be sufficient,[50] especially where the bill

38. Where the seller demanded payment on delivery and repeatedly thereafter, finally after a month commencing replevin to recover the goods, and defendant testified that his acceptance was temporary, there was no waiver of a condition for payment on delivery so as to pass title. Paulson v. Lyon, 26 Utah, 438, 73 Pac. 510.

39. Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co., 97 Md. 1.

40. A sale of wheat, giving full terms as to delivery and stating "65½ cents Galveston," passed title on delivery to the carrier, the reference to place being one of price only. Chas. F. Orthwein's Sons v. Wichita M. & E. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 364. Evidence that coal was shipped on promise of the consignee's agent that it would pay for it if the consignee did not pay within a reasonable time shows sufficiently that the sale was not for cash, but that title passed to the consignee before payment. Frazier v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 679. Where sale of certain coffee was "not contingent on any other" sale, and to be settled between the parties "without reference to gradings or otherwise to any other contract," there was no presumption that title was not to pass before payment. Bayne v. Hard, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 254.

41. An intention of parties to a sale that title should pass immediately applies, though the seller retains possession. Barber v. Thomas, 66 Kan. 463, 71 Pac. 845. Where a note was given for goods with the understanding that they were to remain in the seller's warehouse until demanded by the purchaser, title passed. Midland Nat. Bank v. Strickland [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 588. Where sale of a certain number of bags of coffee was made, to be shipped at a certain time and the invoice to date from time the coffee was "in store" and credit allowed, title passed when it was in store and "graded" under the contract. Bayne v. Hard, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 251. In a bargain and sale title passes to the buyer on completion of the contract regardless of delivery. Warner v. Warner, 30 Ind. App. 578, 66 N. E. 760. Where a bill of sale of a stock of goods was executed and delivered, part payment made, and charge taken by the vendee's agent, actual delivery and possession was not necessary to pass title, the question being rather one of intention of the parties. Clark v. Shannon & M. Co., 117 Iowa, 645, 91 N. W. 923.

42. Furst Bros. v. Commercial Bank, 117 Ga. 472.

43. Sale of cotton. Flannery v. Harley, 117 Ga. 483.

44. Where timber was already on the buyer's land, a sale to him to pay his claim for stumpage required no delivery as against an unregistered chattel mortgagee. McArthur v. Mathis, 133 N. C. 142.

45. Webster Lumber Co. v. Keystone L. & M. Co., 51 W. Va. 545.

46. Where an auditor in an action for the price of an elevator found that defendant accepted it before its destruction by fire and that he agreed to waive its failure to meet the specifications if plaintiff would repair another elevator, which was done, it is no defense that title had not passed when the elevator was destroyed because of a condition in the contract for removal by plaintiff if it was not paid for. Plunger Elevator Co. v. Day, 184 Mass. 130, 68 N. E. 16.

47. Still v. Cannon [Okl.] 75 Pac. 284.

48. Johnston v. Parrott, 92 Mo. App. 199. Delivery under a contract providing that title and right of possession should remain in the seller until full payment in cash, to be made when the machine proved satisfactory, did not divest title of the seller. In re George M. Hill Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 407.

49. Buffum v. Descher [Neb.] 96 N. W. 352. Where title remains in the vendor until payment of price down and notes are given for remainder and the consideration for the notes was delivery of the goods with right to take title by payment, it cannot be urged in an action on the notes that the property was destroyed before title passed. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Vaughn [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 54.

50. Williams v. Coleman, 117 Ga. 393. Delivery to an express company c. o. d. for the buyer passes title to liquor, though he cannot obtain possession before payment. Munsell v. Carthage, 105 Ill. App. 119; City of Carthage v. Duvall, Id. 123. Under a sale "Delivered, less New York rates freight; terms net, thirty days from shipment," title passed to the vendee on delivery to the carrier. Althouse v. McMillan [Mich.] 92 N. W. 941.

of lading is simultaneously delivered,[51] and if so, the carrier's liability is to the buyer.[52] There is no such delivery, however, until the goods are loaded for shipment.[53] Indorsement or delivery of a bill of lading will not pass title to property except as the result of the contract between the parties.[54] Mistake as to the consignee will prevent the passing of title.[55]

How proved.—The testimony of a vendor that title passed at a certain point in the delivery is incompetent, it being only his conclusion.[56] If a purchaser of an article on trial continues to use it after the period, such use is evidence of acceptance in absence of explanation of such use, except as to such use on the day after the period when he notified the seller in writing of his rejection.[57]

§ 7. Delivery under terms of contract. A. Construction and operation of contract. Necessity, time, place, etc.—Apart from that delivery which passes the title,[58] the sale itself may in terms call for delivery as part of the contract. Delivery may be made at any time within a period allowed by the contract,[59] and ordinarily not thereafter,[60] especially not when time is of the essence of the sale.[61] It may be within a reasonable time if no time is fixed;[62] the seller is only required to exercise diligence and good faith in order to excuse delay,[63] and un-

51. Delivery to a carrier of wheat sold orally and delivery of the bill of lading to the purchaser passes title. Chas. F. Orthwein's Sons v. Wichita M. & E. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 364.

Delivery without indorsement of a bill of lading for goods in hands of a carrier suffices to pass title. American Zinc, L. & S. Co. v. Markle Leadworks, 102 Mo. App. 158, 76 S. W. 668.

52. That a seller quotes prices at points on delivery does not make the carrier his agent, but the carrier remains liable to the purchaser for injuries in transit. Louis Werner Saw Mill Co. v. Ferree, 201 Pa. 405.

53. A contract made by cable for purchase of a certain number of tons of coal to be shipped by the sellers is not an absolute sale so as to pass title at once, but is executory and title will not pass until the coal is loaded for shipment. Taylor v. Fall River Iron Works, 124 Fed. 826.

54. Walker v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Or. 102, 72 Pac. 635. Hence, not where transferred with draft to which it was attached. German-Am. Sav. Bk. v. Craig [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1023.

55. Where the seller by mistake shipped goods to one notoriously insolvent, thinking that the consignee was another by a similar name and possessed of means, title did not pass. Newberry v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 133 N. C. 45.

56. Althouse v. McMillan [Mich.] 92 N. W. 941.

59. Where sale of cotton seed hulls by a hulling plant was for delivery "during the running season" of a certain year, the sellers could deliver as they saw fit both as to time and quantity. Hume v. S. Netter, A. Geismar & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 865. Notice from the seller that he will not deliver is no breach until the time for delivery is past; anticipated injury is not the subject of damages. South Gardiner Lumber Co. v. Bradstreet, 97 Me. 165. An order for goods with a request to ship at a certain time and a reply promising, on account of heavy business, that the seller would do the best he could, shows that delivery at a certain time was not required. Danziger v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 204 Ill. 145, 68 N. E. 534.

60. Where time for delivery was settled, the buyer need not accept a later delivery not within the time, or within an extension of time agreed upon by the parties. Heidelbaugh v. Cranston [Del.] 56 Atl. 367.

61. Where the purchaser informed the seller that he wanted the goods for immediate use, and the latter must have understood terms used as requiring delivery as soon as practicable, time was of the essence and a condition precedent to the rights and obligations of the parties. "Transit car" construed as meaning car already loaded and on its way to the buyer. Stock v. Towle, 97 Me. 408. When an agreement for sale of brick provided for a beginning of delivery "about October 10, 1900," time was not of the essence of the contract. O'Brien v. Higley [Ind.] 70 N. E. 242.

62. In a time reasonable under the nature of the subject-matter, the usual course of the particular business and other relevant circumstances. Walker v. Taylor [Del.] 53 Atl. 357.

63. Where a contract for sale of steel rails required delivery "f. o. b. cars" at a certain point, the seller was not bound to furnish cars nor was he responsible for delay caused by inability to get cars when he did all in his power to obtain them promptly. Baltimore & L. R. Co. v. Steel Rail Supply Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 655.

Before a person should be held liable for an alleged failure to exercise reasonable diligence it should be clear, from the evidence, that there has been such a want of diligence that reasonable minds will not reasonably differ as to the fact. The contractor was unable to procure steel ordinarily procurable, obtained permission to use a different kind, and finished work, held not to show lack of diligence. Paul Hopkins & Son v. Seattle Scandinavian Fish Co., 32 Wash. 513, 73 Pac. 495.

reasonableness of delay is a question of fact.[64] An agreement to deliver fruit f. o. b. cars at a certain place, inspection and acceptance to be made at time of delivery, means that inspection and acceptance should precede delivery and authorized delivery following acceptance.[65] Contract terms as to place of delivery will govern,[66] though in consequence a right of inspection can only be exercised after shipment.[67] If shipments are to be made as ordered within a time specified,[68] delivery must be made on order before that time[69] and orders need not be at a uniform rate unless so provided.[70] Delivery at a place directed by the buyer is good.[71]

(§ 7) B. Sufficiency of delivery; actual, constructive, symbolical.—The duty to deliver is not fulfilled by partial delivery under an entire contract,[72] or by an offer to deliver other than the property set apart.[73] In the absence of other terms, delivery to a carrier is delivery to the consignee[74] if sufficient to amount to delivery were it made to the purchaser himself,[75] but express terms of the sale may provide otherwise.[76] If the seller has an option as to amount, delivery of the smallest amount under the option is sufficient.[77] Where the buyer of machinery removes part of it from land of a third person leaving the remainder because he wanted it there, delivery is complete.[78]

Constructive delivery will suffice where manual delivery cannot conveniently be made, or the goods are not in personal custody of the seller.[79]

64. Whether delay of a week, claimed to be due to wet weather, after accepting an option for sale of cotton, before going after it and tendering payment, is unreasonable, is for the jury. U. B. Blalock & Co. v. Clark & Bro. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 642.

66. Contract for manufacture and sale of puzzles as requiring shipment to a certain point as condition precedent to recovery of the price. Buedingen Mfg. Co. v. Royal Trust Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 621. Delivery at any time during month to steamship agent at St. Louis is not delivery at seaboard during that month. James v. Crown Cereal Co., 90 Mo. App. 227.

67. That the buyer had the right to inspect the goods before acceptance would not change the provision or postpone payment until delivery at buyer's residence. Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co., 97 Md. 1.

68. Where a contract provided for delivery of goods on order in twelve car lots, "two cars per month," and "three months' additional time" for acceptance if twelve cars have not been taken at the end of six months, eight carloads undelivered at the end of that time could be ordered by the purchaser at any time within nine months from date of the contract. Branower v. Independent Match Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 370.

69, 70. A contract for sale of goods, shipments to be made as ordered, but all to be shipped by a certain date, requires orders so that they may be filled before expiration of the contract, but the shipments need not be ordered at a uniform rate during the contract period. Wells v. Hartford Manilla Co. [Conn.] 55 Atl. 599.

71. Under a sale of fruit for delivery f. o. b. cars at a certain place, loading it on cars at such place after acceptance and sending them to a certain warehouse, is a sufficient delivery where the purchaser directed delivery at such warehouse. J. K. Armsby Co. v. Blum, 137 Cal. 552, 70 Pac. 669.

72. Heidelbaugh v. Cranston [Del.] 56 Atl. 867. A purchaser of a certain amount of goods under an entire contract cannot be required to accept part of them under the condition that the whole amount will not be delivered. Newell v. New Holstein Canning Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 487.

73. Trotter v. Tousey, 131 Mich. 624, 92 N. W. 544. But where the buyer of second hand rails contended that the contract was for first class "relayers," that the seller informed him that he had none of that grade, and that he hesitated to ship without inspection by the buyer, did not show the seller's repudiation of the contract. Nelson v. Hirsch & Sons' Iron & Rail Co., 102 Mo. App. 498, 77 S. W. 590.

74. Goods consigned to a distant place. McCullough Bros. v. Armstrong, 118 Ga. 424. Term "forwarding agent" in contract for sale of hominy to be shipped to England. James v. Crown Cereal Co., 90 Mo. App. 227.

75. A written contract providing "Goods delivered to purchaser when delivered to transportation company" does not make that a good delivery which would not have been so when made to the buyer personally. Price v. Engelke, 68 N. J. Law, 567. Goods shipped should be proper in character when delivered to the carrier. Collins, etc., Co. v. Camors, etc., Co., 118 Ga. 646. The carrier cannot render the consignee liable to the sender for misdelivery, where he did not really buy. Williams v. Coleman, 117 Ga. 393.

76. Where a conditional sale provided for shipment "via best route" and for safe delivery on cars at the buyer's place of business, delivery to a carrier in another state is not delivery to the buyer. Herring, etc., Co. v. Smith, 43 Or. 315, 72 Pac. 704, 73 Pac. 340.

77. Delivery of 200 tons is sufficient compliance with a contract to deliver 200 or 300 tons of pig iron, though the seller is bound to deliver the larger amount in the period at the seller's option. A. B. Farquhar Co. v. New River Mineral Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 329.

78, 79. Avery Mfg. Co. v. Emsweller, 31 Ind. App. 291, 67 N. E. 916.

On failure of the seller to make full delivery, he may recover the reasonable value of that delivered if accepted and used subject to a set-off for damages to the purchaser from failure to complete the contract.[80]

(§ 7) C. Acceptance; necessity; time; what is.—If the contract is complete on delivery, the buyer must accept[81] within the time provided by the sale,[82] and a refusal to do so[83] or a countermand[84] is a breach of sale. That title passed before inspection will not necessitate acceptance.[85] He is not bound to accept partial delivery under an entire contract,[86] or if the goods are not of the character ordered,[87] or if they are delivered after time for delivery,[88] or an extension of such time,[89] or if shipped in a manner contrary to agreement.[90]

A reasonable time is allowed for inspection after delivery of goods sold on trial or by sample,[91] and acceptance of previous shipments of goods so sold will not prevent rejection of later shipments for failure of quality.[92] Rejection for defects cannot be made after the buyer has sold to one who accepted.[93] The buyer must accept delivery at a time fixed by his order.[94] Acceptance will not waive latent defects.[95]

81. A buyer under a duly executed written contract showing terms of the sale cannot refuse the goods on arrival because the invoice sent with them failed to state terms of sale. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen [Vt.] 56 Atl. 87.

82. Where a certain term of credit is given after delivery, examination to determine compliance of the goods with an accompanying warranty should be exercised before expiration of the term. Grabfelder v. Vosburgh, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 307.

83. Under a continuing contract of sale for a definite term. Parker v. McKannon Bros. & Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 536. Where a sale is complete as to terms and acceptance, and the vendee gives notice that he will not receive the goods, the vendor may proceed with the agreement and deliver the goods or tender delivery, and a breach will occur when the vendee refuses to receive them. Backes v. Black [Neb.] 97 N. W. 321.

84. Countermand of an order or notice by the purchaser that he will not receive the goods. Okl. Vinegar Co. v. Carter, 116 Ga. 140, 59 L. R. A. 122.

85. Though title passed on delivery to the carrier under a contract fixing prices f. o. b., the right to inspection and count to be made at the destination gave the right of rejection for noncompliance with the contract. Weil v. Stone [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 698.

86. Under a condition that all goods will not be delivered. Newell v. New Holstein Canning Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 487; Price v. Engelke, 68 N. J. Law, 567. Where goods are sold in an entire lot, the amount being specified, the buyer is not bound to receive a delivery deficient in material portions. Heidelbaugh v. Cranston [Del.] 56 Atl. 367.

87. Collins, etc., Co. v. Camors, etc., Co., 118 Ga. 646. Where goods delivered with other goods ordered separately were not according to sample, they may be rejected. Hardt v. Western Elec. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249.

88. White, etc., Hat Co. v. Carson & Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1230, 77 S. W. 366.

89. Under a contract providing for delivery at the buyer's option on or before a certain date, where the time was extended after an offer to deliver, the buyer was not in default unless a new offer of delivery was made at close of the extended time. Gehl v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 116 Wis. 263, 93 N. W. 26.

90. Failure of a shipper to comply with terms of a contract as to the charter party to be used was a violation of the contract releasing the consignee from the duty of acceptance. Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 159.

91, 92. Hardt v. Western Elec. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249.

A purchaser of an article on trial for a specific period has the full period for trial, and in absence of further stipulation, a reasonable time thereafter to signify his election. Springfield Engine Stop Co. v. Sharp [Mass.] 68 N. E. 224. Sale of a machine on four months' trial after which the buyer may return it if unsatisfactory, gives him a reasonable time after the four months for such return. Dickey v. Winston Cigarette Mach. Co., 117 Ga. 131.

But he is not required to continue a test for the full term unless necessary to a fair and reasonable test. Haney-Campbell Co. v. Preston Creamery Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 188, 93 N. W. 297.

93. Baylis v. Weibezahl, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 178.

94. Where a contract required part delivery on a certain date and the remainder at the buyer's option after a certain later date, and the buyer directed delivery of the remainder on a certain date within the limit, his failure to receive the remainder on that day was a breach for which the seller could recover. Faddis v. Mason [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 410.

95. Acceptance of goods will not prevent a counterclaim for defects in an action for the price where such defects could not be ascertained until the goods were used in the regular course of business. Wallace v. Knoxville Woolen Mills, 25 Ky. L. R. 1445, 78 S. W. 192.

96. Where the purchaser of a cash register retained it 12 days after the period for return or exchange and on refusal of the seller to receive it used it for six months, he ratified the sale by failure to return. Watts v. Nat. Cash. Register Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1347, tests shows an acceptance,[97] but use under protest[98] or during a series of unsuccessful experiments and trials,[99] or a mere opening of packages for examination,[1] does not. Acceptance of goods sent on approval is ineffective when conditional.[2] Notice to the seller or his agent[3] of a rejection or return of the goods[4] is ordinarily necessary, but notice alone suffices,[5] and a retention of them because of the seller's refusal to reimburse the buyer for loss resulting from breach of warranty is compatible with a rejection.[6] Whether delay of the purchaser in giving notice of rejection to the seller was reasonable is a question for the jury.[7] Cases discussing sufficiency of it are cited below.[8]

78 S. W. 118. In an action for price of goods, evidence by the purchaser that after delivery he inspected and used the goods as a whole shows acceptance and waiver of defects. Hazen v. Wilhelmie [Neb.] 93 N. W. 920.

The effect of an acceptance cannot be avoided by disavowing the seller's title, and telling him that the goods are accepted as those of another person. It will not relieve the vendee from liability to the vendor for price or value of the latter's property received. Central Coal & Coke Co. v. George S. Good & Co. [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 793.

97. Where a quantity of vanilla was sold to candy manufacturers under provision for a test which could be made with a small amount, use of a larger amount daily for several weeks will prevent the purchasers from rejecting it. Zipp Mfg. Co. v. Pastorino [Wis.] 97 N. W. 904.

98. Where a machine was installed under direction of the seller, under a guaranty to run satisfactorily, and the old machine removed and sold for old iron by the seller, but the purchaser refused all the time to pay for the machine, insisting that it was insufficient in size, there was no acceptance under the contract. In re George M. Hill Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 866.

99. Ice plant to give satisfaction and subject to trial before acceptance was not accepted by use while seller's agent tried to make it work nor by modification of terms of sale made to induce such trial. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v. Benton County Creamery Co., 120 Iowa, 584, 95 N. W. 188.

1. Merely opening boxes of goods on receipt after the time specified for their delivery, to ascertain their condition, is not an acceptance where done by the purchaser's salesman and the purchaser returned them as soon as he knew of their arrival. White, etc., Hat Co. v. Carson & Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1230, 77 S. W. 366.

2. Where a steel die was manufactured subject to approval of the purchaser, and the latter on receipt of the bill offered to approve it if the price, which had not been fixed, was reduced, acceptance was conditional on such reduction. Parr v. Northern Elec. Mfg. Co., 117 Wis. 278, 93 N. W. 1099.

3. Notice of nonacceptance by the purchaser sent to an agent. Weeks v. Robert A. Johnston Co., 116 Wis. 105, 92 N. W. 794.

4. Where the purchaser's agent, delegated to buy a machine, tested it and gave a check in payment, but the purchaser afterward stopped payment on the check, claiming the machine to be defective, but did not tender a return of the machine, the seller could recover on the check, there being no evidence of warranty. Goldstein v. Hochberg, 86 N. Y. Supp. 11.

5. Where the seller delivers goods not complying with the contract, manual return or offer to return by the buyer is unnecessary to rejection, so long as the buyer clearly signifies his nonacceptance. Rheinstrom v. Steiner, 69 Ohio St. 452, 69 N. E. 745.

6. Retention by the purchaser of a machine warranted to work satisfactorily after trial and notice to the seller, because the latter had not paid for materials spoiled in attempting to use it and for a duplicate part ordered at the seller's request, is not an acceptance. Weeks v. Robert A. Johnston Co., 116 Wis. 105, 92 N. W. 794.

7. Particular circumstances surrounding order for whisky. Grabfelder v. Vosburgh, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 307.

8. Where goods sold by sample were shipped direct from the manufacturer to the buyer on the seller's order, there was sufficient rejection by the buyer where he tested them on receipt and finding them unsatisfactory notified the sellers that they were held subject to their order and requested disposition of them. Hardt v. Western Elec. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249. Notice by the purchaser to the seller of perishable goods within a few days after receipt, that he will hold the seller for loss due to defective quality, is sufficient notice that the goods are not accepted as complying with the warranty. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 117 Wis. 624, 94 N. W. 785.

9. Where the purchaser did not insist on the terms of the sale as to time when the seller notified him of a delay, but allowed the seller to continue performance, the delay did not terminate the contract. H. Krantz Mfg. Co. v. Gould Storage Battery Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 133. Where goods are shipped after the time stipulated and the seller stops them in transit refusing to deliver unless paid in cash and the purchaser assents and receives the goods without reserving his right to damages, performance of the new contract waives the right to sue for breach of the former. Poland Paper Co. v. Foote & Davies Co., 118 Ga. 458. Where the seller agreed to furnish machinery in a certain time but failed, and the buyer accepted it on subsequent tender and paid the full price, on the seller's refusal to make a reduction, with knowledge that a third person might demand damages for delay, he could not set up such damages by way of counterclaim in an action by the seller for other machinery subsequently sold. Medart Patent waive damages for delay.[11] A requirement for written notice of acceptance may be waived.[12] Acceptance of part delivery will bind the purchaser for value received less damages for delay.[13] The sufficiency of waiver of the right to reject[14] or of excuses for failure to deliver[15] depend on the peculiar circumstances of each case, the inability of the seller to deliver from his own stock,[16] or due to his own act,[17] being generally not an excuse; while the buyer's acts preventing delivery[18] or a wrongful refusal to accept or to make payment,[19] make delivery or tender unnecessary.

§ 8. Warranties and conditions. A. In general. What are warranties and what conditions. Descriptions and representations. Representations of existing[20] material facts,[21] not mere words of commendation,[22] at or before the bargain,[23]

Pulley Co. v. Dubuque T. & R. Mill Co., 121 Iowa, 244, 96 N. W. 770. Unconditional receipt and acceptance of part of goods delivered and use thereof as their own is a waiver by the buyers of the time limit and of defects in quantity as called for by the contract making them liable for reasonable value of goods received when delivered in absence of special contract. Heidelbaugh v. Cranston [Del.] 56 Atl. 867.

10. Delivery within reasonable time after period given by contract because of delay made by changes in contract. H. Krantz Mfg. Co. v. Gould Storage Battery Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 133.

11. Poland Paper Co. v. Foote & D. Co., 118 Ga. 458. Acceptance by the purchaser on tender after the period for delivery will not, of itself, waive damages for the delay, but the purchaser may insist on a reduction of the price by such damages. Medart Patent Pulley Co. v. Dubuque T. & R. Mill Co., 121 Iowa, 244, 96 N. W. 770.

12. Where the seller gave an option on coal to be delivered on written notice of acceptance, refusal of the seller to receive the written notice on information that it would be served waived further notice. Jones v. Sowers, 204 Pa. 329.

13. Where delivery of part of logs sold was made impossible until after the time for delivery, but the purchaser accepted them later and delivery of the remainder was mutually abandoned, the purchaser was bound to pay for those delivered within a reasonable time, less damages for delay. Sutton v. Clarke, 42 Or. 525, 71 Pac. 794. A seller delivering part of a designated quantity of goods under a contract, which are accepted, may recover the value thereof less damages from his failure to complete the contract. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Kerlin Bros. Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 414.

14. Where goods were sold with the right to reject on disapproval, that the seller offered inducements to the buyer to be allowed to make changes to warrant acceptance, will not show waiver of the right to reject either by the buyer or his representative who was without authority to waive the right to reject. Hall v. Pierce, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 312.

15. Where the purchaser of cord wood wrote the seller, on his failure to deliver, giving the latter an opportunity to deliver a larger quantity at a later time which was not done, the offer cannot be shown as a waiver in an action for damages for breach of the contract. Scully v. Detroit Iron Furnace Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 885.

16. Provisions in a contract for sale of canned tomatoes for exemption from liability for failure to furnish them due to certain other causes does not include destruction of the seller's crop by frost, where the contract does not show that the tomatoes were to be furnished from his crop alone. Newell v. New Holstein Canning Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 487. Where a seller could not complete his contract for sale of canned tomatoes from his own crop due to frost, his efforts to replace the tomatoes at two markets only, both distant from his cannery, are not sufficient to relieve him of liability for failure to complete the contract. Id.

17. That persons to whom a broker has pledged stock, sold it on suspension of business by the broker will not relieve him from his obligation to deliver it to one who bought it from him on margin. Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 233.

18. Proof that plaintiff, in an action for breach of a sale of corporate stock, before he became entitled to it under the contract, procured an action to be brought against himself by a creditor and that all the stock, except a small amount was attached to pay his own debt, showed a good defense for failure to deliver. Kelly v. Fahrney [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 280.

19. Statement of the vendee, on delivery of part of the goods sold under an entire contract, that he will not accept the remainder unless equal to the original sample, waives tender of the balance. Weil v. Unique Elec. Device Co., 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 527. Refusal to accept chattels because not delivered before the date set for delivery will release the seller from delivery or tender thereof. Cousins v. Bowling, 100 Mo. App. 452, 74 S. W. 168. Where no time is mentioned for delivery and the buyers rescinded before arrival of the goods for alleged delay, and the jury find delivery to have been made in a reasonable time, the sellers need not tender the goods before suing for the breach. McHenry v. Bullfant, 207 Pa. 15.

A purchaser who was given credit is not in default until the price is due, hence in refusing to anticipate payment he does not forfeit the right to recover for nondelivery. F. W. Kavanaugh Mfg. Co. v. Rosen [Mich.] 92 N. W. 788.

20. Express warranty of second hand machinery is not found in a statement that it worked when last used. Norris v. Reinstedler, 90 Mo. App. 626. Statement that cows sold were coming in in February or March next held to be a warranty that the cows and on which the buyer relied,[24] may constitute warranty. Merely descriptive terms will not.[25] The seller may rely, as to future sales, on a statement at time of a sale made by the purchaser to obtain credit.[26] Warranty may be found in words of quality from the fact that no inspection was to be given.[27]

(§ 8) B. Express and implied warranties and fulfillment or breach thereof.—The rule caveat emptor applies if the purchaser has an opportunity for inspection,[28] and relies on his own judgment,[29] or if defects are patent,[30] or discoverable in the exercise of ordinary prudence,[31] or if the property is open to inspection and no representations are made.[32] On express warranty the buyer is not required to inspect the chattel,[33] and it covers discoverable defects.[34] Express warranty of title is good though the purchaser knew that the title was not perfect.[35] Fraud by the seller prevents application of the rule of caveat emptor,[36]

21. Representations of fact as to property of an oil corporation, its productiveness, and other conditions as to value and safety of its stock as an investment are proper elements of warranty in a sale of stock. Phillips v. Crosby [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 814. A fraudulent misrepresentation will not be ground for rescission by the purchaser, unless it is a misrepresentation of a present continuing fact, a mere prediction of speculative results being insufficient. A representation that a patent device could be made at a certain price that would be as good as a sample held sufficient. Lederer v. Yule [N. J. Eq.] 57 Atl. 309.

22. A statement that an engine is "as good as new in every particular" is a representation of a physical fact, and not mere words of commendation. Milwaukee Rice Mach. Co. v. Hamacek, 115 Wis. 422, 91 N. W. 1010.

23. A statement before or at time of sale of a cow that she was sound, on which the buyer relied, is an express warranty. Cummins v. Ennis [Del.] 56 Atl. 377.

24. Where the seller knew the quality of the goods which were stored at a distance in his warehouse and represented them to be of a certain quality, on which representation the purchaser was compelled to rely, it amounted to a warranty. Egbert v. Hanford Produce Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 1118.

25. A statement by the seller that mares were "thoroughbred" is descriptive and not an implied warranty. Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 575, 92 N. W. 678. A statement in a written offer to sell roses that they were "very fine stock" is not an express warranty of quality. Stumpp v. Lynher, 84 N. Y. Supp. 912. A sale of personalty by description showing grade or quality is not a warranty for breach of which the vendee can recover or recoup damages after acceptance. Neff v. McNeeley [Neb.] 96 N. W. 150.

26. Goldsmith v. Stern, 84 N. Y. Supp. 869.

27. Where an entire crop of cane was to be delivered, "sound, ripe, and merchantable," and no opportunity was given for inspection by the buyer, there was an express warranty as to the condition of the cane. Ellis v. Riddick [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 719.

28. In executed sales no warranty exists except that of title, nor any in cases where the buyer inspects the goods. Wilson v. Belles, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 477. Existence of latent defects in a second hand machine not made by the seller is no defense to an action for the price, where the purchaser had an opportunity for inspection. Joy v. Nat. Exch. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 325. Where logs sold were delivered and the purchaser's agent inspected them, no implied warranty existed as against damages to the purchaser's mill from iron imbedded in the logs. Ketchum v. Stetson & P. Mill Co. [Wash.] 73 Pac. 1127. In an action for the purchase price of paving brick, one who had accepted them without inspection, could not counterclaim the expense of removing, resetting, or hauling away defective brick. O'Brien v. Higley [Ind.] 70 N. E. 242.

29. No concealment or representations respecting quality were made. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 208 Ill. 218, 70 N. E. 319. Where a dealer bought grass seed in reliance on his own judgment and experience, there was no implied warranty that the seed would germinate or was fit for the purchaser's purpose. Gardner v. Winter, 25 Ky. L. R. 1472, 78 S. W. 143.

30. Where a defect in a warranted horse could easily have been discovered by looking at him, and it appears that he saw the defect, the seller is not liable for breach of a warranty made against such defect. McAfee v. Meadows [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 813.

31. Cook v. Finch, 117 Ga. 541.

32. In sale of an existing chattel, in absence of fraud there is no implied warranty of quality or condition, but as to articles sold by description there is an implied warranty that they are of such description. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 103 Ill. App. 547. There is no implied warranty of a mare bought for breeding purposes, where the buyer had opportunity for inspection, and the seller did not know the purpose of the purchase. Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 575, 92 N. W. 678. The rule of caveat emptor applies to sale of an insurance expiration register, where no representations were made as to its character, as to privacy of record, or exclusiveness of information. Kinkel v. Winne, 67 Kan. 100, 72 Pac. 548.

33. The buyer may accept an article on express warranty without inspection and offset damages for breach of warranty against the contract price. Barnum Wire & Iron Works v. Seley [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 827.

34. Cook v. Finch, 117 Ga. 541.

35. Seller's title to newspaper plant dependent on the continued publication of the paper. Neville v. Hughes [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 735.

36. Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 575, 92 N. W. 678.

and fraudulent concealment entitles the buyer to rely on statements respecting defects.[37] An agent cannot warrant in opposition to a stipulation that no other warranties than those in the written contract shall be binding.[38] All preliminary negotiations are merged in the written contract,[39] hence a warranty cannot be supplied by parol evidence.[40] The warranty may be modified after the contract.[41] An oral warranty made after the written one and to induce sale is good.[42]

Express warranty excludes implied warranty;[43] but the express warranty must have come into force.[44] A warranty of fitness is not negatived by the exclusion of the particular goods from an express warranty in a written sale.[45] And an express written warranty may concur with one found in a circular sent by the seller.[46] There can be no warranty implied against that of which one is warned.[47] In the sale of an existing chattel there is no implied warranty of quality or condition,[48] or one that existing conditions shall continue,[49] but the seller impliedly warrants the subject-matter to be suitable and fit, when he knows the purpose of its purchase,[50] unless it is purchased by sample and complies there-

37. A representation as inducement to a written sale cannot be shown by the buyer in an action for the price, unless he shows that the seller by some fraud prevented him from discovering a defect which the seller knew to exist. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 103 Ill. App. 647.

38. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Allison, 116 Ga. 445.

39. No warranty of quality was expressed in the final contract, though in previous negotiations it was said the pipe was of a certain quality and would withstand a certain pressure. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 208 Ill. 218, 70 N. E. 319.

40. Nothing was said as to quality in the written contract. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 208 Ill. 218, 70 N. E. 319. Correspondence relative to certain pipe held to constitute a sale without warranty. Id.

41. Correspondence between parties to sale of machine held not to modify warranty that it should give "entire satisfaction." Weeks v. Johnston Co., 116 Wis. 105, 92 N. W. 794.

42. First warranty of a machine was signed by the buyer merely as an order to secure it for trial, and the real sale occurred after delivery. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Arnold, 25 Ky. L. R. 663, 76 S. W. 323.

43. An express statement by the seller that animals were not warranted negatives an implied warranty. Burnett v. Hensley, 118 Iowa, 575, 92 N. W. 678. If a contract of sale is complete and certain, and contains an express warranty of certain qualities in the chattel sold, implied warranty of other qualities is excluded. Holcombe v. Cable Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 671.

44. Where sale of a machine provided for payment before delivery in order to vitalize an express warranty, acquiescence of the seller in a trial before payment was a waiver of the express warranty, so that the buyer could rely on an implied warranty that it would reasonably perform the service intended. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Mallinger [Iowa] 98 N. W. 580.

45. That a printed warranty in a written sale of second-hand machinery declared that it should not apply to such machinery will not preclude an implied warranty of suitableness, where the seller knew that it was bought for a specific purpose. New Birdsall Co. v. Keys, 99 Mo. App. 458, 74 S. W. 12.

46. Where the purchasers of a gasoline engine told the manufacturers they would confirm an order for it on a guaranty that it was to be of a certain capacity and to work satisfactorily in every respect, and the offer was accepted, the acceptance being accompanied by the guaranty as to capacity and circulars stating that the engine was safe, the specific guaranty as to capacity did not prevent acceptance from constituting a guaranty of safety as expressed in the circulars. Charter Gas-Engine Co. v. Kellam, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 231.

47. Bad habit in a horse. Knoepker v. Ahman, 99 Mo. App. 30, 72 S. W. 483.

48. Iron pipe for conducting water. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 208 Ill. 218, 70 N. E. 319. It was not shown that seller undertook to sell fish otherwise than in the condition in which they were, good or bad. Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter [Ala.] 36 So. 12.

49. The vendor of the hope of future crops of oranges does not warrant the existence of the trees. Losecco v. Gregory, 108 La. 648.

50. A warranty may exist without express stipulation, as where goods are supplied for a special purpose, their fitness is warranted. Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter [Ala.] 36 So. 12.

Illustrations: If oats sold for seed are not expressly warranted the law will imply a warranty that they are free from mustard seed. Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 42. Where the seller of feed for cattle knows that it is to be used for that purpose, he impliedly warrants it fit and wholesome for feed, though nothing is said in the written contract. Houston Cotton Oil Co. v. Trammell [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 244.

Knowledge of the seller that apparatus ordered was for a certain purpose raises an implied warranty of suitableness. Especially where the purchaser relied on the seller's judgment. Skinner v. Kerwin Ornamental Glass Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1011. A seller of a machine for a certain purpose which fails to fill it cannot recover therefor, nor for materials afterward furnished to complete it. Piel v. Nat. Cooperage Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 613. Where a machine is inwith,[51] or it complies with a description, kind, and quality specified in the order.[52] On breach of warranty of soundness of an animal, plaintiff must prove express warranty either before or at time of sale.[53] On successive sales of goods of a kind previously bought, there is an implied warranty that the quality of previous sales will be maintained.[54] Sale by sample,[55] or by a particular description, imports a warranty of compliance therewith.[56] Whether a sale is a sale by sample is a question for the jury.[57] In executory sales a warranty exists that the article will be merchantable and of the kind ordered.[58] There is no warranty of quality implied generally in a sale of second hand machinery,[59] but fitness for a known purpose may be specially implied, even though express warranties in other respects are disavowed.[60]

A warranty will be limited to the matters imported by its terms,[61] or their tended for a particular purpose and is adaptable to no other, an implied warranty exists that it will reasonably fill that purpose. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Mallinger [Iowa] 98 N. W. 580. On sale of machinery for a special use of which the seller has notice, there is an implied warranty of its reasonable suitability, whether it was taken from his stock or specially manufactured. Southern Brass & Iron Co. v. Exeter Mach. Works, 109 Tenn. 67, 70 S. W. 614. Proof that appliances were worthless for any purpose whatever and that the purchaser was ignorant of the kind needed and relied on the seller's judgment is admissible on the question of implied warranty. Skinner v. Kerwin Ornamental Glass Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1011. Implied warranty of clay pots sold by manufacturer with full knowledge that they were to be used for a certain purpose. Queen City Glass Co v. Pittsburg Clay Pot Co., 97 Md. 429.

A manufacturer of an article for a specific purpose impliedly warrants quality of material and good workmanship. Murray Iron Works Co. v. Dekalb E. Co., 103 Ill. App. 78. If an article is made to order there is an implied warranty that it is reasonably fit for the purpose for which it is ordinarily intended, or for the special purpose of the buyer if that is known to the seller. Telluride Power T. Co. v. Crane Co., 103 Ill. 647. Implied warranty that the quality of linseed oil was the same as that furnished previously, and fit for the purpose for which the seller knew it was to be used. Cleveland Linseed Oil Co. v. Buchanan & Sons [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 906. In a suit for breach of warranty an instruction that an implied warranty exists in ordinary sales that the article is merchantable and suitable for the use intended is not error [Civ. Code 1895, § 3555]. Objection was that the sale was made in Wisconsin but the question as to the law governing this point was not raised. Wells v. Gress, 118 Ga. 566.

51. Because the buyer may have told the seller that he was purchasing the materials for a certain purpose will not raise a warranty for such purpose where the articles were true to sample. Chicago House Wrecking Co. v. Durand, 105 Ill. App. 175. Where a contract for manufacture and sale of appliances required them to be fit for a certain purpose and equal in quality to certain appliances named, and the seller knew the purpose for which they were intended, there was an implied warranty that they were merchantable which included both patent and latent defects resulting from process of manufacture or the materials used. Baylis v. Weibezahl, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 178. Where yarn is sold by sample, the seller refusing to guaranty its strength, there is no warranty as to its quality where the purchaser selects the sample. Hardt v. Western Elec. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249.

52. Where a known article, definitely described, is ordered from and actually furnished by a manufacturer, no implied warranty exists that it will suit the buyer's purpose. Oil Creek Gold Min. Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 543. Where the seller delivers a machine of the kind and character agreed upon, no implied warranty exists as to its suitability for the buyer's purpose. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113. Where machinery delivered is of the kind and quality required by the contract, the price is due, though it fails to answer the purpose for which it was bought, especially where the failure is due to a part bought under a separate contract. Dreyfus v. Mrs. William Lourd & Co. [La.] 35 So. 369.

53. No particular words are necessary. Cummins v. Ennis [Del.] 56 Atl. 377.

54. Empire State Bag Co. v. McDermott, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 234.

55. Sufficiency of evidence to show sale by sample and implied warranty that goods should comply as to size and quality. Tex. Fruit Co. v. Lane, 101 Mo. App. 712, 74 S. W. 400. Contract to manufacture and deliver wrenches equal to a model submitted, held not to be a sale by sample for which the vendee could recover damages because of the inferior quality of articles delivered. Ideal Wrench Co. v. Garvin Mach. Co., 92 App. Div. [N. Y.] 187.

56. Americus Grocery Co. v. Brackett & Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 657. The sale of a chattel of a particular description imports a warranty that the article sold is of the kind specified. Id.

57. Evidence conflicting as to whether a brick exhibited at time of sale was used as a sample or not. N. Y. Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Cunn, 87 N. Y. Supp. 168.

58. Wilson v. Belles, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 477.

59. Norris v. Reinstedler, 90 Mo. App. 626.

60. That a contract for sale of second hand machinery provided against modification by the seller's agent will not prevent an implied warranty of suitableness. New Birdsall Co. v. Keys, 99 Mo. App. 458, 74 S. W. 12.

61. Where a sale of wool required it to be customary meaning,[62] and to the stipulated time, or to a reasonable time if none be fixed.[63] The seller's knowledge is not necessary to breach of a strict warranty.[64] General warranty as to quality or satisfactoriness includes all the subject-matter,[65] and all causes of reasonable objection,[66] but only reasonable objections,[67] and not defects obvious to the senses and known to the warrantee,[68] or owing to mismanagement of the buyer.[69]

Substantial compliance with terms of a warranty suffices.[70] Defects sufficient to the buyer personally will warrant his rejection,[71] but arbitrary rejection cannot be made.[72] It is not incumbent on the buyer to discover why a machine does not work satisfactorily.[73]

free from certain objectionable qualities, on inspection the purchaser could reject it for such qualities but not for other conditions as to quality. Davis & Son v. Allen, 25 Ky. L. R. 1424, 77 S. W. 1125. An agreement to furnish "castings to be made of steel," warrants only the character of metal to be used and not that it shall be of the best grade or suitable for the purpose intended. Fredrick Mfg. Co. v. Devlin [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 71. Where a contract for sale of a piano distinctly relieves the seller from responsibility for tuning, he is not liable for a defect of that character. Holcombe v. Cable Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 671. A guaranty that oats for seeding purposes were "in good condition, choice stock, and well cleaned," does not warrant them free from mustard seed. Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 42. A guaranty by a seller of a filter that the filtrate would be clear and bright, and render condensed water suitable for boilers, did not mean merely that suspended matter in the water would be removed, but that the water would be made clear and bright. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Kirk, 200 Ill. 382, 65 N. E. 698. An agreement by the seller of a machine to furnish new parts for those proving defective in material or workmanship for a year did not bind him to make good natural wear and tear. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113. Sufficiency of terms of sale of a horse to amount to an express warranty of soundness. Bullard v. Brewer, 118 Ga. 918.

62. Where dust collectors bought were to be shipped in "manufactured state," failure to rivet joints of pipes before shipping was not a breach, where it appeared that the seller usually shipped in that way. Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit R. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 562.

63. That an ice plant would produce a certain amount of ice every 24 hours. It worked all right the first year but failed the following two years. Held sufficient performance. Danville Coal & Ice Co. v. Vilter Mfg. Co. [Ky.] 79 S. W. 225.

64. Scienter of the seller need not be proven. Becker v. Atchason [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 172; Wood v. Anthony & Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 111. That a cow when sold had tuberculosis is a breach of warranty of soundness, whether the seller knew of the disease or not. Cummins v. Ennis [Del.] 56 Atl. 877.

65. Where several lots of eggs from as many different localities are sold on a warranty as to quality, the buyer may rely on the warranty as to all. Egbert v. Hanford Produce Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 1118. The purchaser of an entire crop of molasses, to be of good quality, is not bound to receive a part made from frozen cane. Barrow v. Penick, 110 La. 572.

66. An agreement to remove a machine from the buyer's premises if it proves unsatisfactory for any other cause than those stated in the contract includes any other reasonable cause of dissatisfaction. Union League Club v. Blymyer Ice Mach. Co., 104 Ill. App. 106. Warranty of a gasoline engine that it is safe, reliable, and can be run without danger, is broken by explosion from an unknown cause. Charter Gas-Engine Co. v. Kellam, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 231.

67. Warranty to work satisfactorily requires only reasonable compliance. Lockwood Mfg. Co. v. Mason Regulator Co., 183 Mass. 25, 66 N. E. 420. That goods of small cost and not intended to be skilfully or artistically made were defective in part, is not a breach where the maker was willing to replace defective ones at all times. Buedingen Mfg. Co. v. Royal Trust Co., 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 267.

68. Jewell Filter Co. v. Kirk, 102 Ill. App. 246.

69. Breach of warranty of a machine cannot be said to exist where failure of the machine to work was due to mismanagement. Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit R. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 562.

70. Breach of warranty of engravings sold. Colo. Dry Goods Co. v. Dunn Co. [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 887.

71. On sale of a machine to be accepted if it worked satisfactorily, the buyer need exercise only the judgment and capacity he possessed, and may reject it, though a person of ordinary skill might have made it work satisfactorily. Haney-Campbell Co. v. Preston Creamery Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 188, 93 N. W. 297. Where a steel die was sold on condition that it work satisfactorily, the buyer was not bound to accept if he believed in good faith that it did not so work, though the seller could show that it did good work. Parr v. Northern Elec. Mfg. Co., 117 Wis. 278, 93 N. W. 1099.

72. Sale of a machine under guaranty and provision for removal by the seller if it proved unsatisfactory for any other reason did not warrant arbitrary rejection. Union League Club v. Blymyer Ice-Mach. Co., 204 Ill. 117, 68 N. E. 409.

73. On sale of a machine under condition that it shall work satisfactorily and a period is given for test, the seller, on objection, and not the buyer must discover particular defects. Haney-Campbell Co. v. Preston Creamery Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 188, 93 N, W. 297.

(§ 8) C. Conditions and fulfillment or breach.—Whether a promise or understanding is a condition depends on whether it is a part of the contract or not.[74] Conditions being part of the sale cannot be engrafted on a written sale by parol,[75] thus where notes describe an absolute sale, parol evidence cannot be given to show a conditional sale.[76] A condition may affect the entire sale though written only on one of the purchase notes.[77] Printed conditions accompanying the thing sold must be fairly brought home to the buyer.[78] A provision in a sale of a machine that a man should be sent to remedy defects discovered is a condition precedent to the right to payment.[79] There is an implied condition that a buyer given credit and taking possession[80] is and will be solvent.

Conditions must be fulfilled in every essential,[81] but not strictly or technically, so as to work hardship,[82] or in a manner not within the import of the terms used.[83] A condition is not broken which can be fully performed in that part of the sale which remains executory.[84] Interpretations given to particular words of conditions will be found in cited cases.[85] In order to enforce it the seller

74. A writing given by the seller's agent to the purchaser of a cash register allowing a certain time for trial and return or exchange of the register if it proved unsatisfactory was a part of the contract of sale. Watts v. Nat. Cash Register Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1347, 78 S. W. 118. Contract for sale of stock medicines as giving the purchaser the exclusive agency for sale thereof in a certain township. Sutton v. Baker [Minn.] 97 N. W. 420.

75. Sought to show that sale of newspaper plant was conditioned upon the purchaser's publishing the paper for a year. Neville v. Hughes [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 735. When written contract was complete of itself and seller warranted the title, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that as part of the consideration the purchaser had agreed to publish the paper for a certain time which he had not done. Id.; State v. Chamber of Commerce [Wis.] 98 N. W. 930. Sought to be shown that salesman had power to bind the principal and the stipulation relative to approval was mere formality. Succession of Welsh, 111 La. 802.

76. Finnigan v. Shaw, 184 Mass. 112, 68 N. E. 35.

77. Where a warranty was indorsed as a memorandum on each of two notes given on a sale, a condition on the first note only, that breach of the warranty will avoid the note is not limited to avoidance of that note alone. Snyder v. Johnson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 692.

78. A purchaser of seed oats cannot be said to be bound to read a card found in the sacks on delivery, containing conditions of sale in small type, and to know that they were intended as terms of sale. Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 42.

79. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Mackey, 100 Mo. App. 400, 74 S. W. 388.

80. Pratt v. S. Freeman & Sons Mfg. Co., 115 Wis. 648, 92 N. W. 368.

81. Substantial performance by the seller of a sale of flour with privilege of inspection is shown by evidence of shipment to order of seller with notice attached to the bill of lading and subsequent order allowing examination. Brooke v. Hill, 65 S. C. 142. Tender of goods not in transit at date of the contract but shipped three days later is not a compliance with a condition of sale by "transit car," so that refusal to receive was not a breach by the buyer. Stock v. Towle, 97 Me. 408. Provisions in sale of threshing machine for test and remedy of defects by seller. Zimmerman v. Robinson, 118 Iowa, 117, 91 N. W. 918.

Unexplained dishonor of drafts on the place agreed is a breach. Town v. Jepson [Mich.] 95 N. W. 742. In such a case the seller need not draw on another place and were the contrary true the seller is not bound by notice given by the buyer to the bank to return the drafts to the seller who should forward them to another place for acceptance and payment. Id.

82. Warranty that pumps would work satisfactorily only obliged the seller to furnish pumps complying reasonably with the warranty, and did not require approval by a particular engineer, though he knew the purchaser bought to deliver under a contract requiring acceptance by one appointed by such engineer. Lockwood Mfg. Co. v. Mason R. Co., 183 Mass. 25, 66 N. E. 420.

83. A condition in a contract to furnish goods that the buyer might renew so long as he did not "advance, loan or aid" any competitor of the seller in the business is not broken by purchasing goods from competitors, on the ground that it "aided" them, so that the seller might rescind. Underhill v. Buckman Fruit Co., 97 Md. 229.

84. An agreement by the seller of a set of books to publish a sketch and portrait of the purchaser will not prevent recovery for a part delivered without compliance, as the condition can be complied with in the remaining book. White & Co. v. Corbin, 86 N. Y. Supp. 216.

85. Where goods are sold with privilege of exchange for other goods "within 15 days from date of invoice," such date is the day of shipment, though a prior date is written on the face of the invoice. Merchants' Exch. Co. v. Weisman [Mich.] 93 N. W. 869. An executory contract to buy railroad ties for a certain period, providing for delivery of all ties purchased and handled by the seller on the railroad line, according to specifications, and to be piled and marked by the seller, for which the buyer agreed to pay a certain price within a certain time after inspection and acceptance by the railroad company, was an agreement by the buyer to need not know of a breach of condition by the buyer.[86] Breach of condition by the buyer will defeat his right to enforce the contract.[87]

(§ 8) D. Conditions on a warranty must be fulfilled[88] in all essential particulars[89] or it cannot be enforced, unless the conditions or strict performance of them be waived;[90] but a condition related to one warranty is not prerequisite to enforcement of a distinct one,[91] thus where one part of a warranty is absolute purchase for himself, not dependent on a sale to the company, the only object of inspection being to determine that the ties met the requirements. Potter v. Holmes, 87 Minn. 477, 92 N. W. 411. A phrase in a contract of sale that it is "to be settled without reference to any other contract" does not limit assignment of the sale or the right of the buyer to resell before payment or delivery, but means that the sale is independent. Bayne v. Hard, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 251. Contract as requiring payment by the seller of enumerated charges and giving the purchaser no advantage of intermediate reduction of customs duties where coal was shipped from New South Wales to San Francisco. Withers v. Moore [Cal.] 71 Pac. 697. "Transit car" in a contract for delivery of goods by railroad held to mean a car already loaded and on its way to the purchaser, hence it is a breach if no car was in transit. Stock v. Towle, 97 Me. 408. Stipulation that seller of oil should be released if oil supply in the vicinity became exhausted or the seller's lessor should revoke oil leases, held to mean that only in case of revocation and exhaustion of other wells should he be released. Wilson v. Alcatraz Asphalt Co. [Cal.] 75 Pac. 787. A condition, that if a machine sold is unsatisfactory after the seller's attempts to remedy defects, a second test is to be made with another machine under the same circumstances, requires such test only on disagreement as to the quality of work done by the first machine. Zimmerman v. Robinson, 118 Iowa, 117, 91 N. W. 918. A provision "for renewal," by the buyer of a contract to furnish goods for a year, for another year if he did not aid the competitors of the seller, extended only to the renewal year and was not of unlimited duration. Underhill v. Buckman Fruit Co., 97 Md. 229.

A contract for sale of hay to the United States providing that the quantity received may be increased or decreased at option of the government within certain limits, designating daily rate of delivery "or in such quantities and at such times as ordered" is not broken by suspension of orders to receive for a certain period in compliance with such terms, though the price of hay has greatly increased in the meantime. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. U. S., 24 Sup. Ct. 47. That a buyer of machinery was to have time to determine whether it was satisfactory before a note for the price became due does not render its payment at maturity conditional so that breach of a collateral agreement was a defence in an action on the note. New Haven Mfg. Co. v. New Haven Pulp & B. Co. [Conn.] 55 Atl. 604.

Repugnancy: Absolute right of rejection if not satisfactory is not defeated by a further provision for notice of defects after trial and opportunity to the seller to put it in order. McCormick v. Finch, 100 Mo. App. 641, 75 S. W. 373.

86. A condition in a sale of materials that the buyer should use them exclusively in his own trade is broken by his sale to third persons, whether done with or without the seller's knowledge. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt R. Co. [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 134.

87. Where a buyer was bound to use materials bought exclusively in its trade, it could not recover damages for failure of the seller to fill orders intended for third persons, whether the seller knew of the buyer's contracts with such persons or not. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt R. Co. [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 134. Where a seller rescinded the contract for failure of the purchaser to pay for previous shipments as required by the contract, and refused to consider the contract in a letter acknowledging receipt of a check for part of the sum after rescission, retention of the check was not a waiver of the breach. Eastern Forge Co. v. Corbin, 182 Mass. 590, 66 N. E. 419. Where a sale was for cash and the buyer refused to pay after part of the goods were sent, the seller is not liable for failure to send the remainder. Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Co. v. Burns, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 639.

88. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Arnold, 25 Ky. L. R. 663, 76 S. W. 323. Payment to be made before delivery in order that express warranty should become effective. The buyer refused to settle until after trial of the machine. Held, the benefit of the warranty was waived. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Mallinger [Iowa] 98 N. W. 580. Where a machine is sold upon trial, title in the meantime remaining in the seller, and if not according to warranty, to be returned, retention and agreeing to pay for the same renders the sale absolute and waives any previous breach of warranty. Vanderbeek v. Francis, 75 Conn. 467.

89. Where fire hose sold was warranted to pass inspection by the fire department, that the department could not approve the hose after a test will discharge liability of the purchaser, though it had not been officially rejected. Eureka Fire Hose Co. v. Reynolds, 86 N. Y. Supp. 753. A contract for sale of patterns with a condition for return and exchange of discarded ones for new ones and a guaranty against loss at the end of a time certain held not to require return of all patterns on hand as precedent to put the guaranty in force. McCall Co. v. Eagan, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 330.

90. See post, § 8E.

91. Covenant by seller warranting title and covenant by purchaser to continue the publication for a year held separate and distinct obligations, and former may be enforced, although the latter is not performed. Neville v. Hughes [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 735.

and the other conditional.[92] A warranty dependent on condition precedent[93] is not binding until the condition be performed. Conditions in a printed warranty furnished by a vendor will be construed most strongly against the vendor.[94] Notice[95] of the kind[96] and to the persons[97] stipulated as a condition must be given. If return of an unsatisfactory thing is stipulated, notice that it is held for the seller will not suffice.[98] If a return is required, it must be made in a reasonable time.[99] Time for return as indicated by the words "at once" is not of the essence of the contract.[1]

(§ 8) E. Waiver of warranties and conditions; excuse for breach.—A warranty may be waived by a sufficient agreement[2] or matter amounting to an estoppel.[3] A new contract superseding the one with the warranty annuls it.[4] Acceptance with knowledge of imperfections does not prevent an express warranty taking effect,[5] and the giving of purchase-money notes[6] or a chattel mortgage[7]

92. Machine was warranted to be of good material, etc., and if upon trial it should not work well, notice should be immediately given and if not fixed it should be returned. Held warranty as to good materials was absolute and did not depend upon the giving of notice. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Fields [Minn.] 95 N. W. 886. Warranty was as to the soundness and capacity of a horse, monthly reports to be rendered so as to determine whether or not guaranty as to capacity was broken, held, failure to submit such reports did not preclude action on warranty of soundness. Montgomery v. Hanson [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1081.

93. Purchaser to return all goods on hand at expiration of certain period as condition precedent. McCall Co. v. Eagan, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 330.

94. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Gadeke [Neb.] 95 N. W. 850.

95. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Lyons, 24 Ky. L. R. 1862, 72 S. W. 356. Where notice of defects is required, it must be given. Sloan v. Wolf Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 196. Where notice is required it must be given in order to return the machine or resist payment of the purchase price because of a defect. Frick v. Morgan, 24 Ky. L. R. 836, 69 S. W. 1072. Notice required, also that continuous use for six days should be conclusive evidence of fulfillment of warranty, held, by failure to give notice and use of machine for three seasons buyer could not recover for breach of notice. Massillon E. & T. Co. v. Schirmer [Iowa] 93 N. W. 599. Under an agreement to install an evaporating apparatus the purchaser agreed to pay a certain amount in one month unless it notified the seller that the apparatus did not come up to the guaranty. The fact that the buyer expressed dissatisfaction and efforts were made to improve the apparatus did not constitute the notice required by the contract. Pa. I. W. Co. v. Hygeian I. & C. S. Co. [Mass.] 70 N. E. 427.

96. Notice must be given according to the terms of the guaranty. Northern Elec. Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin Coal Co., 116 Wis. 130, 92 N. W. 553. A notice that a machine "did not perform the work it was bought to do" is not a compliance with a contract requiring notice of its failure to comply with the warranty "stating wherein the machine was faulty." Id. Notice of defects in a machine, obtained by the seller's agent in setting it up, is not notice within a warranty expressly providing such notice to be insufficient. Heagney v. Case Threshing Mach. Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 175.

97. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ebbighausen, 11 N. D. 466, 92 N. W. 826. Where a written sale of machinery requires notice of defects to the seller and his agent, notice to the agent alone will not entitle the purchaser to rely on a breach of warranty. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Lyons, 24 Ky. L. R. 1862, 72 S. W. 356.

98. Mere notice to the seller that a machine is held subject to his order is not compliance with a stipulation for its return if unsatisfactory. Dickey v. Winston Cigarette Mach. Co., 117 Ga. 131. Where written sale of a machine provides for notices of defects and opportunity for the seller to perfect it, on failure of which it shall be returned and payment refunded, and that failure to return shall amount to acceptance, notice by the purchaser that the machine did not work and was held subject to the seller's order was not a compliance with the contract, where neither the seller nor his agent ever took possession. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Allison, 116 Ga. 445.

99. 2½ months held unreasonable. Northern Elec. Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin Coal Co., 116 Wis. 130, 92 N. W. 553.

1. Under the contract of sale of a machine, the machine to be returned "at once" if not satisfactory, held, the fair interpretation was with reasonable promptness. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Machmuller [Neb.] 95 N. W. 507.

2. Extensions of time for payment on a warranted machine are sufficient consideration for waiver of warranty by the purchaser. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113.

3. Extending time for payment will not necessarily estop him from defending on the ground of breach of warranty in an action for the price. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113.

4. Vodrey Pottery Co. v. Horne Co., 117 Wis. 1, 93 N. W. 823.

5. Did not waive right to damages by retaining engine and executing notes for purchase price after knowledge of imperfections. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113. Acceptance before inspection or opportunity will not prevent its enforcement. A collateral warranty survives acceptance of the article under the main contract.[8] Promises to pay after receiving the machine will not waive a breach of warranty unless made with that intention,[9] nor will retention and payments after discovery of defects waive the warranty where the seller induced the retention by a promise to remedy the defects, which promise was not fulfilled.[10] A warranty is not waived by the adoption and use of the purchaser's plans,[11] but the buyer himself may impair his warranty by giving directions.[12]

An implied warranty is not waived by acceptance where the defects are latent,[13] otherwise if patent.[14] Where the defects are patent, such warranty is not waived in an executory contract by mere receipt of the goods,[15] but is waived by acceptance after reasonable opportunity to inspect[16] and test it.[17] Acceptance of part governs defects in that part only.[18]

Waiver of a condition reserving title until payment is a question of intention and hence one of fact for the trial court.[19]

Such acts as will not waive the warranty may waive the right to rescind[20] for fraudulent warranty or to enforce a warranty so called, which rests on conditions respecting dissent or disapproval,[21] or to recover back payments made after discovering breach of warranty,[22] unless made upon the express promise to remedy the same.[23] to inspect will not waive the right to return goods for breach of warranty, especially as to latent defects. Implied and express warranty. Punteney-Mitchell Mfg. Co. v. Northwall Co. [Neb.] 91 N. W. 863. A warranty of castings against defects and as suitable for a certain use survives acceptance and payment for a reasonable time for discovery of latent defects which only use can reveal. White Mfg. Co. v. De La Vergne R. Mach. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 192.

6. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113.

7. Title was to remain in seller until payment. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113.

8. Contract to build and deliver a steamship, warranty as to speed when loaded to a certain draft held to survive acceptance. Bull v. Bath Iron Works, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 380.

9. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113.

10. As a defense to a purchase-money note. Huck v. Bischoff, 84 N. Y. Supp. 173.

11. A breach of warranty of an ice plant is not excused by failure of the purchaser to provide a sufficient foundation where the seller furnished no plans as required, and, by his agent, accepted the foundation provided; nor by the fact that the purchaser prevented construction of a false ceiling where its construction was not contemplated in the contract. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v. Benton County C. Co., 120 Iowa, 584, 95 N. W. 188.

12. An assignee of a sale of tobacco to be "prized" in a specified way was held bound by his assignor's previous directions as to how the prizing should be done; hence for that already prized he had no recovery despite an additional guaranty made by the opposite party when consenting to the transfer. Thompson v. Melton & Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2461, 74 S. W. 192.

13. Implied warranty of yarn. Wallace v. Knoxville Woolen Mills, 25 Ky. L. R. 1445, 78 S. W. 192; Punteney-Mitchell Mfg. Co. v. Northwall Co. [Neb.] 91 N. W. 863. That a purchaser of seed oats, impliedly warranted free from mustard seed, sowed nearly all of them before discovering foreign seed among them, though he examined them carefully, will not show an acceptance waiving the warranty. Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 42.

14. An implied warranty against defects plainly visible does not survive acceptance. Poor workmanship, bad colors and bad assortment of sweaters. Lifshitz v. McConnell, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 289.

15. Merely taking potatoes from a car will not waive a warranty of quality even as to defects shown by external appearance, the purchaser having a reasonabe time for inspection. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 117 Wis. 624, 94 N. W. 785.

16. Baylis v. Weibezahl, 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 178; Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 117 Wis. 624, 94 N. W. 785.

17. Von Dohren v. John Deere Plow Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 830.

18. Defects in part accepted: Acceptance and payment of part of goods without complaint, or rescission, and offer to return at time of delivery, waives objections as to quality, and makes the purchaser liable for the balance if equal in quality to those furnished. Weil v. Unique Elec. Device Co., 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 527.

Defect in part not accepted: That a buyer accepts the part of goods delivered which conform to the contract will not prevent his claim for damages for failure of the remainder to comply with the contract. Gilbert v. Alton, 84 N. Y. Supp. 682.

19. Albert v. Lewis Steiner Mfg. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 162.

20. See post, §§ 10A, 11B.

21. See ante, § 8D.

22. Nat. Computing Scale Co. v. Eaves, 116 Ga. 511. Accepting and retaining goods

A strike is not an impossibility of performance excusing a breach of a warranty.[24]

Conditions.—Conditions may be waived by acts evincing such an intention[25] or performance in time excused by acts of the opposite party.[26] A condition subsequent must be asserted within a reasonable time after opportunity given or it is waived.[27] An agent may do so if he has authority.[28] To constitute a waiver of a condition for payment on delivery, there must be a delivery and an intent not to insist on immediate payment as a condition for passing title.[29] Breach by the seller will render the buyer's compliance with conditions unnecessary.[30] When one breach of condition is waived, the defaulting party may thereafter enforce other conditions against the waiving party.[31]

(§ 8) F. Remedies on the warranty and on breach of condition have been reserved for other parts of this title,[32] together with damages for breach[33] and rights of assignees and subsequent purchasers.[34]

§ 9. Payment, tender, and price as terms of the contract.[35]—A sale for cash on delivery is not complete until payment,[36] or effective tender[37] of the full after knowledge of breach of warranty waives the breach so as to preclude recovery of purchase price paid. Hazen v. Wilhelmie [Neb.] 93 N. W. 920.

23. Nat. Computing Scale Co. v. Eaves, 116 Ga. 511.

24. Puget Sound I. & S. Works v. Clemmons, 32 Wash. 36, 72 Pac. 465.

25. Notice after goods were destroyed not to advertise them per condition waived it. De Witt & Co. v. Culpepper, 66 S. C. 467. Condition for return of machine, held, not waived. Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co., 118 Iowa, 117, 91 N. W. 918. That the seller acted on oral notice of defects will waive a requirement for written notice. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Gadeke [Neb.] 95 N. W. 850.

26. Delay in delivery was caused by buyer, shipments were accepted without objection and complaint was made of too frequent shipments, held, buyer could not object that delivery was not made in time. O'Brien v. Higley [Ind.] 70 N. E. 242. Provision for return of machine within a certain time waived by promise to repair and held, such waiver carried with it the provision that continued possession for a certain time should be conclusive evidence of fulfillment of the warranty. Massillon E. & T. Co. v. Shirmer [Iowa] 98 N. W. 504. Where the vendee is induced to keep a defective machine by promises to perfect it, the seller extends the time for trial. Parsons B. C. & S. F. Co. v. Gadeke [Neb.] 95 N. W. 850.

27. Condition for inspection of railroad ties. Potter v. Holmes, 87 Minn. 477, 92 N. W. 411.

28. Where the purchaser signed a written contract of sale plainly reciting "no goods on consignment," giving the terms for time and cash and providing that alteration cannot be made by the seller's agent, he cannot plead in defense an agreement written on the back of the order, by the agent, to receive back or sell goods not sold within a certain time. Flower City Plant Food Co. v. Roberts, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249.

29. Paulson v. Lyon, 26 Utah, 438, 73 Pac. 510.

Waiver by agent of condition to return in conditional warranty. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Dodkins, 24 Ky. L. R. 2306, 73 S. W. 1129. General agent of threshing machine company is without authority to waive conditions in a conditional warranty. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ebbighausen, 11 N. D. 466, 92 N. W. 826. Workman of the seller sent to remedy defects cannot release purchaser from a condition in a conditional warranty. Massillon E. & T. Co. v. Schirmer [Iowa] 93 N. W. 599. Request by the seller's agent that buyer should store machine for the seller complied with, waived the buyer's obligation to return the machine under a conditional warranty. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Dodkins, 24 Ky. L. R. 2306, 73 S. W. 1129.

30. Notice of defects or return of an engine within a reasonable time is unnecessary to recovery for fraud where the contract contemplated delivery of a new engine and by fraud an old one was imposed on the buyer. Huber Mfg. Co. v. Hunter, 99 Mo. App. 46, 72 S. W. 484.

31. The waiver of a seller's breach enables him to insist on payment before delivery to a buyer on credit since become insolvent. Pratt v. Freeman & Sons Mfg. Co., 115 Wis. 648, 92 N. W. 368.

35. Payment as necessary to pass title, see ante, § 6c. Conditional sales, see post, § 14. Criminal liability for fraudulent purchase of goods on credit, see False Pretenses and Cheats, 1 Curr. Law, p. 1204.

The market price or a reasonable price is meant when none is specified. See ante, § 4.

36. Johnston v. Parrott, 92 Mo. App. 199. Where payment was a condition of transfer on sale of fruit, the buyer's unexplained refusal to pay for a part on delivery amounts to an abandonment. Town v. Jepson [Mich.] 95 N. W. 742.

37. Sufficiency of tender by purchaser of corporate stock to seller under terms of sale [Code 3061]. Hamilton v. Finnegan, 117 Iowa, 623, 91 N. W. 1039. Where the pur-agreed price.[38] Where the sale requires payment before delivery, the purchaser need not tender payment until the seller offers to deliver.[39] An offer by the purchaser under a credit sale to accept the goods and pay a less amount is a refusal to make payment.[40]

A sale without terms as to payment is presumed to be for cash,[41] on delivery[42] at the place of shipment.[43] Under an order for goods for future delivery on credit, the term of credit begins with delivery.[44] An unconditional promise to pay cannot be suspended by the state of the promisor's contract with others.[45] The effect of particular terms for payment is matter for construction.[46] When time has been extended, but default is made, the original agreement as to time of payment may be enforced.[47]

Payment in other goods,[48] or by way of releasing,[49] or assigning[50] a debt, or a new contract for sale of the same article, fully executed,[51] is a discharge.[52] Giving a draft or check in payment is not payment until the draft is paid,[53] unless there is undue delay in presenting it, wherefrom prejudice resulted.[54] An agreement to fix prices according to a standard,[55] or according to a varying condition, is binding, though less than cost prices are thus made,[56] or it enables the chaser made no demand for performance or tender of purchase money until after the term of an executory sale, it was not completed and he could not recover the value of the goods. Robinson v. Thoma, 30 Wash. 129, 70 Pac. 240. Deposit of the balance due on a sale by the purchaser in a bank to the credit of the seller does not show a tender of the price. Id.

38. Where an Australian shipper drew a draft for less than the agreed price, under existing custom duties, for coal shipped to San Francisco, and advised the purchaser to that effect, leaving him to remit any reduction in duty, the draft was not in settlement for the cargo. Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 159.

39. Bussard v. Hibler, 42 Or. 500, 71 Pac. 642.

42. Where the contract is silent as to time of payment, it will be presumed that it was to be made on delivery so that whether title had passed at delivery, in an action for the price, was immaterial. Armsby Co. v. Blum, 137 Cal. 552, 70 Pac. 669.

43. Where a contract for cash sale provides for shipping instructions by buyer "when requested by seller—F. O. B." a certain place, payment is due on delivery on board cars at such place, though the residence of the buyer is stated to be elsewhere. Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocer Co., 97 Md. 1.

44. Grabfelder v. Vosburgh, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 307.

45. Where an owner agreed to pay for materials for a house before delivery to the contractor, the materialmen could recover therefor on account for goods sold and delivered regardless of the owner's contract with the contractor. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51.

46. Illustrations: Sale for cash. Beacon Falls Rubber Shoe Co. v. Burns, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 639. A contract for sale of goods, "Terms cash, less" a certain per cent. is an agreement for a cash sale at a certain price and not for a credit sale subject to discount for cash. Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocer Co., 97 Md. 1. Purchase of fruit trees to be paid for by their produce, time when interest begins to run. Stark v. Anderson [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 340. Payment out of daily "receipts" as meaning gross receipts. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v. Benton County C. Co., 120 Iowa, 584, 95 N. W. 188. A condition that goods bought for resale are "to be fully settled for within ten days" does not necessarily mean paid for, so that evidence of statements to the seller that goods sold by the purchaser would be paid for and the remainder accounted for was inadmissible. Toombs v. Stockwell, 131 Mich. 633, 92 N. W. 288. Under an agreement to sell an evaporating apparatus, held, that the purchaser was required to pay for it in one month unless he notified the seller that it did not accomplish the results guarantied. 56. That the price fixed by the competitive company was less than cost of manuseller to profit by working up materials on hand and selling at an advance.[57] When the mode of determining a varying price is fixed no notice of variations is required.[58] Prices to be fixed by those of competitors will be such as they quote at the time of sale or payment.[59] The amount paid and that payable on several orders may be adjusted to equalize the price.[60]

§ 10. Remedies of seller.[61] A. Rescission and retaking of goods or action for conversion. Rescission.[62]—Failure of the purchaser to pay for goods,[63] or fraudulent statements as to his solvency,[64] though the buyer did not know them to be facture is no defense to a demand for a reduction of the price on account of rebates made by such company. Matthews Glass Co. v. Burk [Ind.] 70 N. E. 371.

57. Vivion Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 176 Mo. 219, 75 S. W. 644.

58. On sale of manufactured goods providing for increase or decrease in price according to price of materials from which they were made, and settlement once a year, the seller need not notify the buyer of an increase in price under such terms. Vivion Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 176 Mo. 219, 75 S. W. 644.

59. Contract to sell output of glass at a discount five per cent lower than the lowest price made by a competitor. Payment to be made on receipt of glass. Held, the price was determined by the prices of the competitive company at time of receipt. Matthews Glass Co. v. Burk [Ind.] 70 N. E. 371.

Evidence: Circular letters by the competitive company to its customers informing them of its prices are admissible to show the price. Id.

60. An offer of an entire quantity at a price was held to inure to one who bought all in two orders; hence his price was equalized by a rebate on price paid for the previous lot he had bought. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 67.

63. Where under a continuing contract for a year, shipments and payments to be made at stipulated intervals, the purchaser failed to pay for shipments as required, the seller could rescind the contract. Eastern Forge Co. v. Corbin, 182 Mass. 590, 66 N. E. 419. Where nearly all the goods were delivered and the buyer had complied with a custom as to payment on such sales, subsequent violation by him as to such custom will entitle the seller to rescind as to the balance and recover for goods delivered. Minaker v. Cal. Canneries Co., 138 Cal. 239, 71 Pac. 110. Repeated failure of the purchaser to make advance payments at regular intervals as required by the contract, where such payments are necessary to enable the seller to perform a continuing contract to furnish materials, entitles the latter to rescind. St. Regis Paper Co. v. Santa Clara Lumber Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 1034. Where a buyer left the state without notice to the seller and without leaving funds at a bank where drafts in payment were payable under the contract, the seller could treat the sale as rescinded without notice; nor was he required to allow the drafts to remain in bank three days for acceptance before treating the contract as rescinded by the buyer. Town v. Jepson [Mich.] 95 N. W. 742. If a purchaser fails to pay the agreed price for part of coal bought, which was delivered, the seller may rescind and sue for the contract price of that delivered. Purcell Co. v. Sage, 200 Ill. 342, 65 N. E. 723. A promise by an insolvent purchaser to pay cash on delivery and a breach of such promise does not entitle the seller to rescind; there must be conduct reasonably involving a false representation. In re Lewis, 125 Fed. 143.

64. Fraudulent statements of buyer as ground of rescission by seller, the parties being in confidential relations. Sullivan v. Pierce, 125 Fed. 104. Where a sale was induced by fraudulent representations as to the buyer's solvency, the seller, on learning the fraud, may rescind and retake any goods he may find in the buyer's possession and sue for the value of those not found; but he cannot sue for all the goods under the contract and at the same time file a claim for a return of a part of the goods by the bankrupt buyer's trustee. In re Hildebrant, 120 Fed. 992. Failure to answer a question as to debts owing "to relations," in a financial statement as a basis for credit, was a concealment equivalent to a fraudulent representation, and the creditor could reclaim the goods. In re Patterson & Co., 125 Fed. 562. The confidential relation existing between partners may be presumed to continue after they have formed a corporation which took over the firm property, so as to induce one partner who sold his stock to the other to rely on statements of the other as to its value in absence of other evidence. Sullivan v. Pierce, 125 Fed. 104. Shipment of goods three months after the buyer made a financial statement misrepresenting his solvency, without further inquiries or notice of change, is not negligence debarring the seller from rescission. In re Patterson & Co., 125 Fed. 562. Whether the lapse of time since statements as to solvency of a buyer were made to a commercial agency is such that they should not be relied upon depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. George D. Mashburn & Co. v. Dannenberg Co., 117 Ga. 567.

Admissibility of evidence under pleadings in replevin by seller because of false statements of purchaser as to his solvency. Kuh, Nathan & Fisher Co. v. Glucklick, 120 Iowa, 504, 94 N. W. 1105. In a suit to rescind a sale for fraudulent statement as to credit, tax returns of the vendee during the period covered by the representations may be shown in evidence. George D. Mashburn Co. v.

false,[65] if relied upon by the seller[66] will warrant his rescission of the contract; but fraud must be clearly shown,[67] and must relate to material matters inducing credit.[68] That the purchaser is insolvent at time of sale will not alone warrant rescission by the seller,[69] nor does receipt of an unfavorable report of the purchaser's standing from a commercial agency.[70] Refusal to receive the goods will not warrant rescission until the time for delivery is past, unless the refusal is absolute,[71] and failure of the purchaser to allow true weight of goods already delivered is not a repudiation of the contract entitling the seller to rescind.[72] Insistence by the buyer on demands variant from the contract justifies rescission by the seller.[73]

The seller cannot rescind as to part of an indivisible sale,[74] even as to goods included by mistake of the seller but accepted by the buyer without knowledge of the mistake.[75] Conversely an entire lot of goods cannot be rejected because a separable part falls below the warranted condition.[76]

Dannenberg Co., 117 Ga. 567. Where the seller sues in replevin because of fraudulent statements of the purchaser as to his solvency, the latter's petition in bankruptcy with schedules attached is admissible against the trustee who has been substituted as defendant, though the purchaser was not in possession of the property when the declarations were made. The purchaser's cash book is admissible. Proof of the fraudulent representations is a part of plaintiff's case in chief. Kuh, Nathan & Fisher Co. v. Glucklick, 120 Iowa, 504, 94 N. W. 1105. A representative of a commercial agency may testify to statements made to him by a buyer as to his solvency, in replevin by one who sold him goods, to recover them because of false representations as to solvency; judgment of record against him at time of the contract may be proven. Cowen v. Bloomberg [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 36. In replevin of goods claimed to have been bought by fraud, the seller may show a general scheme by the purchaser to buy goods on credit without intention to pay for them. Johnson v. Groff, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 85. Evidence of admissions by the purchaser as hearsay in replevin by the seller for alleged fraudulent statements of the purchaser as to his solvency. Bentley v. Woolson Spice Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 803.

66. Sullivan v. Pierce [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 104.

67. Sufficiency of evidence: Where the seller on a sale represented that he would deliver only C. O. D. and testifies that he had limited the buyer to a certain credit, the claim of fraudulent representations in replevin to recover the goods is not sustained. Leavitt v. Rosenthal, 84 N. Y. Supp. 530. In action to recover property sold on credit under false representations as to the purchaser's solvency given a commercial agency, to show that the agency had no knowledge of unsatisfied judgments against the purchaser when the representations were made. Pier Bros. v. Doheny, 86 N. Y. Supp. 971.

Evidence in replevin of goods attached by the buyer's creditor as requiring submission to the jury of the question whether the purchaser, who was insolvent, never intended to pay for the goods. Stein v. Hill [Mo. App.] 71 S. W. 1107. That the purchaser failed in business more than three months after making a statement to a commercial agency showing solvency does not show falsity of the statement, or fraud in making it, so as to warrant rescission by the seller and recovery of goods in replevin. Bentley v. Woolson Spice Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 803.

68. To rescind a sale for fraud the seller must show that he relied on the fraudulent statements of the vendee and that those on which he did rely were of such a character as could be acted upon. George D. Mashburn & Co. v. Dannenberg Co., 117 Ga. 567. The vendor cannot rescind and recover possession for fraud, unless on proof of fraudulent representations respecting matters material to the contract and on which he relied in selling and extending credit. Moyer v. Richardson Drug Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 244.

70. Actual insolvency is necessary. Kavanaugh Mfg. Co. v. Rosen [Mich.] 92 N. W. 788.

71. Where the time for final delivery had not arrived, the fact that the purchaser had merely directed that no deliveries be made while intimating that within the period the goods would be received, was no anticipatory breach warranting rescission and suit for damages. Wells v. Hartford Manilla Co. [Conn.] 55 Atl. 599.

72. Hartnett v. Baker [Del.] 56 Atl. 672.

73. Sufficiency of evidence as to such demands and threats. Cooney v. McKinney, 25 Utah, 329, 71 Pac. 485. Refusal of a buyer to proceed under a contract unless the seller gave a guaranty against a repetition of alleged breaches which had not in fact occurred justifies rescission by the seller. Vivion Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 176 Mo. 219, 75 S. W. 644.

74. Where the seller, suing in replevin because of the buyer's fraud, rescinded but a part of the sale, and evidence as to the separable character of the sale was conflicting, an instruction for defendants if the sale was found indivisible was proper. Hochberger v. Baum, 85 N. Y. Supp. 385.

If the purchaser fails to comply with an alteration extending time for payment the seller may rely on the original contract.[77]

Where both parties show no intention to insist on strict performance as to time neither can rescind without notice to the other, and reasonable chance to perform.[78]

An estoppel to assert a rescission arises against one who allows the other to perform after negotiations to reopen a rescinded sale.[79]

Recovery of chattel; replevin.—Where title never passed,[80] because payment was not made according to the contract,[81] or in case of fraud,[82] the seller may replevy the goods. Where the seller does not seek to rescind, but relies on a condition for return of the property on default in payments stipulated, he may bring claim and delivery without offering to return payments made.[83] Alteration in the purchase-money note is no defense to an action to recover a chattel, where made without knowledge or consent of the seller.[84]

(§ 10) B. Stoppage in transit.—On sale of property for cash the seller may stop it in transit before delivery, to secure the price.[85] The right of stoppage in transit ceases when the goods have reached their destination, been delivered to the vendee, and freight charges paid, regardless of the undisclosed mental intentions or reservations of the vendee in receiving them.[86]

(§ 10) C. Lien.—Retention of possession is essential to a vendor's lien.[87] A vendor has no lien against the bona fide purchaser of the vendee.[88] Reservation of title in a chattel sold as security for the price is a chattel mortgage and does not give a vendor's lien.[89] On a sale of trees to be paid for out of the fruits produced no lien attaches to the land.[90]

A vendor's privilege (recognized in Louisiana) on a movable need not be recorded.[91] It is extinguished by incorporation of the movable into immovable property.[92] It does not apply where an order for goods is taken in one state and approved and filled by segregation and shipment in another which does not recognize it,[93] but does when the sale is consummated by segregation from a stock within the same state.[94]

Conflict of laws: Where an order for goods is taken by a salesman in Louisiana

(§ 10) D. Resale.—The right to resell is not lost by refusal to allow inspection where the purchaser is standing on his refusal to accept and pay for the goods.[95] Where the vendee refuses to accept and the vendor sells them on the former's account, he cannot buy additional goods, without authority, to induce sales of those on hand and charge the vendee with loss on the whole.[96] Tender of the full price at the proper place only, will prevent resale after default in acceptance and payment.[97] The seller should give notice of his intention to resell and hold the buyer for his loss.[98] Resale may be made at auction or in any manner chosen to produce full market value; the purchaser need not be given notice of the time and place of sale though he should be given notice of the intention to sell.[99] It must be for cash, hence a larger offer on credit may be rejected by the seller without affecting validity of the sale,[1] but he may be chargeable if he rejects a cash offer.[2] The seller must be reasonably diligent in reselling.[3]

The statutory sale of a chattel given over to the buyer while sale remains conditional is pertinent to a later section of this article.[4]

(§ 10) E. Action for price or on quantum valebat.[5] Right of action and conditions precedent.—A right of action accrues when the price becomes due,[6] or when the purchaser refuses to pay after a reasonable time,[7] or refuses an inspection necessary to complete a sale,[8] or a measurement to fix the price,[9] and is renewed by a part payment though claimed to be in full.[10]

A cause of action to recover the reasonable value of personalty may be joined with an action to recover on a sale of the same property, to be paid for in capital stock of the purchaser corporation.[11] Where goods are sold at an agreed price, subject to his employer's approval without the state, filling and shipment of the order makes the sale one of the vendor's domicile so that no vendor's privilege exists as to the goods unless by the law of the latter state; otherwise where the order is filled with goods from a stock within Louisiana.
