affirmance may result.[37] The brief should refer to the portion of the record where error lies.[38]

Dismissal will be granted for failure to properly bring up the case,[39] or where it is a second appeal on the same matters,[40] or where appellant dies,[41] or escapes,[42] pending the appeal. A pro forma affirmance may be rendered for failure to prosecute an appeal.[43] The writ of error will not be dismissed because some of the questions are prematurely brought up.[44]

Rehearing may be allowed at discretion during term, though not expressly authorized by statute,[45] but not for matters already fully gone into.[46] Inadvertent failure to present an error has been held ground sufficient.[47] Technical formality of the application will not be exacted.[48] The absence of a judgment on which the supreme court would be authorized to act may be called to its attention for the first time by a motion for a rehearing;[49] but under the Texas practice, matters entirely new will not be examined.[50]

Interlocutory and provisional proceedings.—Relief by the trial court will not be ordered after jurisdiction is passed from it.[51] The North Carolina practice does not allow a motion in the supreme court for a new trial for newly-discovered evidence.[52]

(§ 17) H. Scope of review.[53]—Review is confined to matters made of record[54] and properly assigned and argued,[55] and which have been preserved by necessary and proper objection and exception,[56] but some statutes have relaxed the requirements by requiring a review of apparent error.[57] Where no bill of exceptions is filed, nothing will be reviewed except the record proper.[58] A writ of error runs only to the judgment, and insufficiency of the commitment cannot be reviewed thereon.[59]

37. Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1253, a judgment of conviction can be affirmed only where the accused failed to file a brief, made no appearance, and "submitted on the record" the appeal without argument. People v. Gehrig [Cal.] 72 Pac. 717.

Overruling a demurrer to the indictment may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment.[60] Gratuitous questions will not be decided nor general rules laid down.[61] Thus, where the indictment is in any event insufficient, the constitutionality of the statute on which it is brought will not be decided.[62]

Rulings on matters within the discretion of the trial court will be reversed only in case of manifest abuse of that discretion,[63] and on questions of fact, the verdict will be sustained,[64] as where it is based on conflicting evidence[65] or depends on the credibility of witnesses,[66] even against a preponderance,[67] unless it so preponderates in favor of defendant as to raise grave doubt of his guilt.[68] Where circumstantial evidence does not exclude a reasonable hypothesis of innocence, a new trial should be granted.[69] A conviction will be reversed where the corpus delicti is not shown.[70] By like rules the decisions of the court on facts will be upheld.[71]

(§ 17) I. Decision and judgment of the reviewing court.[72]—Though opinion is ordinarily given, a reversal of refusal to admit to bail in a murder case should be without discussion.[73] Where the court is evenly divided in opinion, there must be an affirmance.[74]

Remand for a new trial is not necessary if the error is one that requires no retrial of the facts. Thus the judgment may be conformed to the verdict,[75] or erroneous insertion of a sentence of infamy in the judgment,[76] or an excessive sentence.[77] A statutory provision that the appellate court may reduce the sentence is valid.[78] If there has been no judgment below, the cause will be remanded therefor.[79] Accused should be discharged if the case is reversed without a new trial,[80] or if the information is so defective that there was no jurisdiction.[81]

(§ 17) J. Proceedings after reversal and remand.—Though there is no authority for filing the mandate before the term of the court below, the case will stand for trial at the next term after the filing if defendant has reasonable time for preparation.[82] A judgment on exceptions by the prosecuting attorney does not affect the judgment below, but only settles the law.[83] If the verdict still stands below after reversal of an erroneous judgment, there may be a new judgment without a new trial.[84]

84. Where judgment of acquittal is entered on a verdict of guilty because a plea of former conviction was sustained, on reversal of the decision on such plea judgment

Questions of law determined on a former appeal become the law of the case and are conclusive in subsequent proceedings,[85] but an erroneous ruling of the trial court does not establish the law of the case.[86] If a showing be held sufficient in law, a new one is needless.[87] On a reversal and remand of a conviction for a lesser degree of a crime charged in an indictment, the accused may again be tried for the highest degree or any lesser degree charged.[88]

§ 18. Summary prosecutions and review thereof.—There is no limitation on prosecutions in police court.[89] Summary prosecutions are ordinarily founded on a complaint less formal than an indictment.[90] It must be verified unless made on affidavit,[91] and certification must precede the trial.[92] A jury trial is ordinarily unnecessary.[93] The evidence must be clear that the offense was committed after the passage of the ordinance under which the prosecution was had.[94] A mayor's court may during the same term modify its sentence.[95] Motion for new trial is not necessary to have error in impaneling jury or admitting testimony reviewed in circuit court.[96] Cost bills must be regularly certified.[97]

The record must show the accusation,[98] the grounds of a demurrer to it,[99] but need not show a warrant where defendant appeared and pleaded.[100]

Review.—One pleading guilty may appeal.[101] The amount of the bond must comply with the statute,[102] and it must be properly executed at the time of perfecting the appeal.[103] A justice must designate the place of sitting to which the appeal shall go if no election is given to accused.[104] In Ohio, defendant is entitled to ten days to prepare a bill of exceptions where the justice's decision is final on the facts.[105] The of conviction may be entered on the verdict. State v. Taylor [N. C.] 46 S. E. 5.

INFANTS.

§ 1. Domicile and status.—The domicile of an infant is that of its father, and on the latter's death, follows that of the mother, unless emancipated. It is not changed by the mother's removal to another state, unless such removal is made animo manendi.[1] A child cannot change its own domicile, not being sui juris.[2]

§ 2. Custody, protection, support, and earnings.—The custody of a child is a matter of discretion with the court;[3] but a parent's claim to custody is ordinarily superior to that of any other person.[4] In the case of an infant of tender years, especially if a daughter, the court will generally award the custody to the mother.[5] The obligation to support, maintain and educate the infant rests upon the father when he is of sufficient ability. When the parents are not living, this duty devolves upon the general guardian.[6] The father is entitled to the earnings of his minor children, unless he consents to their using them;[7] but he may relinquish the right to such earnings and that he has done so may be inferred from his conduct.[8] A parent or one in loco parentis is liable for immoderately correcting a child.[9]

A suit in the infant's name by the father as next friend for recovery of the infant's earnings is a relinquishment by the father of the right to collect them in his own name. Chicago Screw Co. v. Weiss [Ill.] 68 N. E. 54. Where an infant 20 years of age sued by next friend for personal injuries and the pleadings raised no question as to his right to recover for his loss of earning capacity, and the pleadings did not show he had a father or mother, and there was evidence that he was working for himself, a request for an instruction allowing him nothing for loss of earning capacity was proper-

§ 3. Statutes for protection of infants.—All the elements of a statutory offense must be set out and proved[10] according to the statute existing at the time of indictment.[11] Upon an indictment under a statute punishing the failure to furnish medical attendance to a minor child, the question is what would an ordinarily prudent person, solicitous for the welfare of his child, and anxious to promote his recovery, do under the circumstances.[12] Medicine is not sustenance within such a statute.[13]

§ 4. Property and conveyances.—The superintendence over infants and their property is a branch of the general chancery jurisdiction, and the protection of the rights of infants is one of the duties of such courts.[14] Such a court has power to authorize the compromise of a suit to which a minor is a party.[15] The power to decree the sale of the land of an infant is statutory, and can be exercised only in the manner pointed out by the statute.[16] An infant's causes of action are not at the disposal of his next friend,[17] nor his property at the guardian's disposal,[18] nor can a guardian gain an adverse interest.[19] An infant's conveyance of land cannot be disaffirmed because of nonage until his majority,[20] when his executing a deed inconsistent with the former one has that effect.[21] Disaffirmance may become barred by limitations.[22] An infant's acts after reaching his

21. Blair v. Whitaker [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 182. A quitclaim deed is not a disaffirmance of a mortgage given during infancy, nor is a guardian's deed during minority a disaffirmance of such mortgage. Shreeves v. Caldwell [Mich.] 97 N. W. 764. Where an infant takes a deed of land from his father, and afterwards conveys it back, and upon reaching his majority renounces the deed to his father and conveys to a third person, the latter is allowed to hold. Estep v. Estep, 24 Ky. L. R. 2198, 73 S. W. 777. Where a father trades land and money for land of his infant daughter, and she disaffirms on reaching her majority, he cannot compel her to disaffirm a conveyance to a third person of the land which she obtained from him, as a condition of disaffirming the sale to him. Ison v. Cornett, 25 Ky. L. R. 366, 75 S. W. 204.

22. Must be exercised before limitation majority may amount to an affirmance of a conveyance.[23] A sale by the state to a minor has been held absolutely void.[24]

The compensation of the guardian of a minor is in the discretion of the court.[25]

§ 5. Contracts.—An infant's contracts are voidable, not void,[26] except contracts for necessaries,[27] and he may disaffirm them at his option.[28] But necessaries furnished to an infant upon the credit of the parent, or under contract with the parent or guardian, create no liability in the infant, even though he may have a separate estate.[29] On the rescinding of a contract made with an infant, the latter may recover back the consideration paid.[30] Affirmance of a contract by an infant must go to the whole contract.[31] The appointment by an infant of an agent to contract for him is void,[32] but an agent may act in making a disaffirmance.[33]

§ 6. Torts.—A minor is liable generally for his torts.[34]

23. Reacknowledging a deed made during minority is an affirmance. Blair v. Whitaker [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 182. An infant grantee of land, who acquiesces in the conveyance for three or four years after reaching his majority, will be deemed to have accepted the conveyance, especially after his creditors have intervened by attachment. Locknane v. Hoskins, 24 Ky. L. R. 639, 69 S. W. 719. Where an infant daughter conveyed real estate to her father and upon reaching her majority acquiesced in expenditures made by him on the premises and allowed him to occupy them during his life, without claiming them, it was held that these circumstances did not constitute a ratification, and that it was a question for the jury. Eagan v. Scully, 173 N. Y. 581.

29. Murphy v. Holmes, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 366. To charge an infant for necessaries the plaintiff must show that the obligation to support and maintain has not been discharged by the person on whom the duty devolved. Id. The reasonableness and prudence of an infant's contract are material only in contracts which as a matter of law are binding on the infant. Drude v. Curtis, 183 Mass. 317. Where an infant makes a note, and upon his majority directs his debtor to pay the debt to the holder of the note, thinking that the holder had agreed to look to the debtor for payment, such direction and a payment by the debtor to the holder do not constitute a ratification by part payment. Snyder v. Gericke [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 377.

30. Vanatter v. Marquardt [Mich.] 95 N. W. 977; Johnson v. Shreveport W. W. Co., 109 La. 268. In Mass. an infant, in order to avoid a contract, need not put the other party in statu quo. Simpson v. Prudential Ins. Co. [Mass.] 68 N. E. 673. An infant, on avoiding a policy of insurance, may recover the premium paid, with no deduction for the cost of keeping the policy in force. Id. Where an infant plaintiff bought goods of an infant defendant and afterwards sought to avoid the contract and recover the money paid, it was held that the defendant relying on his infancy as a defense and having spent the money, was not liable either in contract or tort. Drude v. Curtis, 183 Mass. 317.

31. Employment contract debts due the employer from the infant deducted from the amount due the infant in accordance with the terms of the contract and it was held immaterial whether the infant's debt was for necessaries or not. Pecararo v. Pecararo, 84 N. Y. Supp. 581. Ratification by "disposal" of property construed to mean alienation, as by sale or gift, and not to exercise control over. Koerner v. Wilkinson, 96 Mo. App. 510. Using property for 9 months after majority and promising to pay a note given in payment therefor held a ratification. Luce v. Jestrab [N. D.] 97 N. W. 848.

32. The infant appointed the defendant his agent to make an exchange of horses. The defendant exchanged the infant's horse for two others, paying $15 besides. He delivered one of them to the infant, who tendered him $15 and demanded the other. Held the infant had no cause of action. Poston v. Williams, 99 Mo. App. 513.

33. An infant may rescind by notice and demand by attorney, the appointment of the attorney being at the most voidable. Simpson v. Prudential Ins. Co. [Mass.] 68 N. E. 673.

34. Plaintiff a minor was injured by the accidental discharge of a revolver with which he and the defendant another minor were playing. The defendant was violating the statutes prohibiting the carrying of dangerous weapons or pointing a gun or pistol at another person. Horton v. Wylie, 116 Wis. 505.

§ 7. Crimes.—An infant between the ages of 7 and 12 is presumed to be incapable of crime. This presumption can be removed only by affirmative proof that he had the capacity to understand the act complained of and to know its wrongfulness.[35] The disability to contract for other than necessaries does not disable an infant to commit false pretense except as to such.[36] He cannot be a vagrant unless his parents are unable to support him.[37] Reform School Acts and Juvenile Court Acts, for the benefit of neglected and delinquent children, have been generally upheld by the courts.[38]

§ 8. Actions by and against.—Infants' suits are ordinarily by next friend and their appearance and defense by guardian ad litem.[39] Courts have power to appoint a guardian ad litem for an infant, even though there is a general guardian.[40] Suggestion of minority should precede judgment.[41] The acts of the guardian or next friend are binding on the infant, unless against his interest and the facts are not disclosed to the court.[42] An infant plaintiff who fails in a suit must pay costs.[43] He may sue as a poor person, though his guardian have means;[44] hence he should not be dismissed for want of security.[45] In an action by an infant for personal injuries from negligence, the negligence of the parent in allowing the infant to be at large will not defeat a recovery, if the child in fact exer-

A statute providing that a minor under 16 convicted of a misdemeanor may be committed to a reformatory held constitutional. People v. N. Y. Catholic Protectory, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 660. A statute authorizing the commitment of a minor to one of certain reformatories gives no authority to commit to any other, though similar in name and purpose. People v. N. Y. Magdalen Benev. Soc., 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 588.

39. The latter term is often used in both senses. [Editor.] Infants may sue by guardian or next friend in contract or for damages to their person or property from the tortious act of another. Clasen v. Pruhs [Neb.] 95 N. W. 640. An infant may, on petition, prosecute an action by his next friend, after the commencement of the action. Howell v. American Bridge Co. [Del.] 53 Atl. 53. Where an infant brings suit by a foreign guardian, an amendment substituting someone as next friend is proper. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Haist [Ark.] 72 S. W. 893. Where an infant sues by guardian ad litem he must appeal by guardian ad litem. An appeal by the infant in his own name is matter for special demurrer. Ramsey v. Keith's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1302, 77 S. W. 693. It has even been held, an infant defendant cannot appear in a suit by next friend, but should appear by his guardian or guardian ad litem. Mitchell v. Spaulding, 206 Pa. 220. A guardian ad litem who is appointed in the lower court, should bring his petition for allowance of services in that court. Williams v. Williams, 24 Ky. L. R. 1753, 72 S. W. 271. Day v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 426.

43. The guardian ad litem is responsible for costs in some jurisdictions by statute. Burbach v. Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co. [Wis.] 96 N. W. 829. When the answer of an infant defendant raises an issue, the resulting inquiry is a trial for the purpose of costs to the infant, though the witnesses were not cross-examined in the infant's behalf. Wandell v. Hirschfeld, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 527.

44. In New York an infant may sue as a poor person even though he has a responsible guardian, if such guardian is not the parent. Muller v. Bammann, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 212. The same has been decided, even though the father, who is guardian ad litem, is responsible. Gallagher v. Geneva, W., S. F. & C. L. T. Co., 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 637. Where the father is appointed guardian ad litem for an infant, and his circumstances have changed so that he is not worth $250 so as to give security for costs, the infant may, in the discretion of the court be allowed to sue as a poor person. Perlmutter v. Stern, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 160.

45. It is error to dismiss for want of security for costs a suit of a minor suing by next friend who is unable to furnish security. Northup v. Peacedale Mfg. Co. [R. I.] 56 Atl. 685.

cises a degree of care such as would permit a recovery by an adult, even though the child is not sui juris.[46] Where a statute gives an infant a right of action upon reaching his majority, such action is barred if the infant has sued by a guardian during his infancy for the same cause of action.[47] The statute of limitations does not run against an infant,[48] except as to such rights as are in the protection of a legal representative who can sue;[49] nor is an infant bound by his admissions.[50] A judgment rendered against an infant is not binding unless a guardian ad litem has been appointed,[51] and it may be vacated in a direct proceeding for that purpose, irrespective of the merits.[52] Service must be had on the infant or the guardian or parent for him.[53] A minor's consent is of no effect in legal proceedings.[54] The fact of infancy as a defense is for the jury.[55]

46. But contributory negligence will bar a recovery by an infant who is sui juris. In such case the question of contributory negligence must be determined with reference to his age and the degree of care expected to be exercised by one of his years. Lafferty v. Third Ave. R. Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 592. An infant is not a necessary party within the meaning of a statute giving the widow or next of kin a right of action. Jones v. Kan. City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. [Mo.] 77 S. W. 890.

In some jurisdictions such judgment is voidable not void. Rook v. Dickinson, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 690, 11 Ann. Cas. 454.

53. A decree against an infant is void unless process has been served upon the father, mother or guardian. Gibson v. Currier [Miss.] 35 So. 315.

If service upon the infant is irregular but a guardian ad litem is appointed and appears in the suit, such irregularity will not go to the jurisdiction (O'Donoghue v. Smith, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 324); such irregularity may be cured (Pearsall v. Rosebrook, 85 N. Y. Supp. 526). Where a statute requires service upon the parent or guardian of an infant defendant under the age of 14, the want of such service is cured by the subsequent appearance of the parent or guardian in the suit. Bell v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. R. 1328, 71 S. W. 433. Code 1899, c. 125, § 13. No service need be made on an infant, the appointment of a guardian ad litem taking its place. Ferrell v. Ferrell, 53 W. Va. 515.

54. Consenting to the deduction of a legacy by a minor legatee. Clasen v. Pruhs [Neb.] 95 N. W. 640. On a bill for partition it appeared that the adult heirs had bought out the widow and sought to be reimbursed from the estate of the minor heirs for their share. Held, that although this could be done by consent, no one could consent for the minors, yet as it was advantageous for them, the plaintiffs should have an equitable charge on the infants' land. Case v. Case, 103 Ill. App. 177. An agreement by an infant legatee to accept a deduction of a legacy by the amount of a note which he owed to the testator does not bind him. In re Cummings' Estate [Iowa] 94 N. W. 1117. In an action against an infant it is error to render a consent decree without an examination of the merits, to determine whether the decree is for the infant's benefit. Rankin v. Schofield [Ark.] 70 S. W. 306.

55. And it is error to dismiss an action on the uncorroborated testimony of an infant as to his nonage. Waterman v. Waterman, 85 N. Y. Supp. 377.

INJUNCTION.

§ 1. Nature of remedy and grounds therefor.—The right to the remedy must be clear.[56] It would not lie where it would be futile,[57] nor where complainant acquiesced in the acts sought to be restrained or so acted as to estop his objection,[58] nor where he was guilty of laches,[59] or of acts similar to those complained of,[60, 61]

56. Hallenborg v. Cobre Grande Copper Co. [Ariz.] 74 Pac. 1052; Richmond v. Bennett, 205 Pa. 470; Munyon v. Filmore [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 257; Lownsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co., 117 Fed. 983; Tomasini v. Taylor, 42 Or. 576, 72 Pac. 324; Merchants' Coal Co. v. Billmeyer, [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 121; Mitchell v. Colorado F. & I. Co., 117 Fed. 723; Everett v. Tabor [Ga.] 46 S. E. 72; Schmidt v. Bitzer, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 563; School Dist. No. 112 v. Goodpasture [Okl.] 74 Pac. 501. Infringement of patent. Armat Moving Picture Co. v. Edison Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 939; Newhall v. McCabe Hanger Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 919. Taking property without compensation. Hey v. Springfield Water Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 265. Imitation of trade labels and packages. Schenker v. Auerbach, 85 N. Y. Supp. 129. Substantial doubt as to validity of unadjudicated patent will prevent restraint of infringement. Bradley v. Eccles, 120 Fed. 947. Operation of mine alleged to be nuisance. Amelia Mill. Co. v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co., 123 Fed. 811. Restraining interference with mining property. Maloney v. King, 27 Mont. 428, 71 Pac. 469. Unfair competition will not be restrained where the evidence is conflicting. C. O. Burns Co. v. W. F. Burns Co., 118 Fed. 944. Cutting timber on land as to which plaintiff does not show good title. Wiggins v. Middleton, 117 Ga. 162. Entry of premises by claimant will not be prevented where both possession and right of possession are in doubt. Stone v. Snell [Neb.] 94 N. W. 525. The remedy will not lie when sought merely for effect it will have on contract relations between complainant and third persons. National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 117 Fed. 624. Re-entry by railroad company of part of right of way occupied by telegraph company will not be restrained where the title of the latter is in question. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 120 Fed. 862.

57. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468; Daugherty v. Curtis [Iowa] 97 N. W. 67. To prevent acts already committed. Hienl v. Terre Haute [Ind.] 66 N. E. 450. Preliminary injunction against infringing expired patent. Huntington Dry Pulverizer Co. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 121 Fed. 136.

58. Obstruction over alley. St. Louis S. D. & Sav. Bank v. Kennett Estate [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 474. Building over alley to which complainant consented. Dobleman v. Gately & Hurley Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 223. Use of street by city. Bigelow v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 75 Pac. 111. Sale of property to enforce assessment for street improvements. Cummings v. Kearney [Cal.] 75 Pac. 759. The remedy will not issue where all conditions complained of existed when complainant gave defendant a license to use the property and no additional danger or inconvenience is threatened. Chicago, I. & E. R. Co. v. Indiana Nat. Gas & Oil Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1008.

59. Conduct amounting to laches: Delay during 24 years. Mantle v. Speculator Min. Co., 27 Mont. 473, 71 Pac. 665. Remaining silent with full knowledge of rights to defendant's great injury. Holt v. Parsons [Ga.] 45 S. E. 690. Allowing the other party to make great expenditures may constitute laches. Holt v. Parsons [Ga.] 45 S. E. 690. Suit to restrain sale of stock advertised for 50 days, brought 5 days before sale. Edwards v. Mercantile Trust Co., 121 Fed. 203. Construction of pipe line over railroad right of way nearly completed at time of suit. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. American Plate Glass Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1020. Long delay in seeking restraint of diversion of water from canal where defendant's acts were of benefit to the canal. Stewart Wire Co. v. Lehigh Coal & N. Co., 203 Pa. 479. Unfair competition in trade will not be restrained where complainant with knowledge delayed over a year. C. O. Burns Co. v. W. F. Burns Co., 118 Fed. 944. Bill filed by stockholder to prevent payment of dividend 25 days after public notice for payment is too late. Schoenfeld v. American Can Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1044. Delay of three months by abutting owners to restrain damage by railroad company in streets during which time the company had expended large amounts. Keeling v. Pittsburg, V. & C. R. Co., 205 Pa. 31. A bill filed five months after appointment of a committee by a city council to nor where public benefit resulting from the acts will outweigh private inconvenience[62] and the value of the right is trifling,[63] nor where injury to defendant from the injunction would be far greater than would result to complainant from its refusal,[64] nor where there is an adequate remedy at law,[65] unless the remedy by injunction is more purchase land for a city building on the ground that the council could not delegate its authority, was barred by laches where the only objection was as to the mode of procedure. Parker v. Concord, 71 N. H. 468.

A mere threat to take legal proceedings will not prevent the effect of laches. Holt v. Parsons [Ga.] 45 S. E. 690.

Conduct not amounting to laches: Mere delay is insufficient where defendant is not thereby damaged. St. Louis S. D. & Sav. Bank v. Kennett Estate [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 474. Six years' delay, with knowledge of facts, will not prevent injunction where the right is clear, though recovery of past damages may be prevented. Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. Bissell Plow Co., 121 Fed. 357. Delay by landowner during encroachment on public highway will not prevent relief if not long enough to raise presumption of a grant. Ackerman v. True, 175 N. Y. 353. Where a steam railway company built a track in a street without authority from an adjoining landowner and without compensating him for injury, that he delayed for a few months after its construction before suing, to enjoin its use will not amount to laches where the track was not used as a main track by the company for two months after suit begun. Rock Island & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 204 Ill. 488. Where complainants did nothing to induce construction of a sewer complained of as polluting a stream, that they did not seek relief until some time after the sewer was constructed will not bar relief for laches, some time being necessary to determine that the water was unfit for use. West Arlington Imp. Co. v. Mount Hope Retreat [Md.] 54 Atl. 982.

If one entitled to compensation for construction of a street railroad is guilty of laches in permitting such construction without compensation so that he cannot restrain the continuance of the road, he may still have an injunction as an alternative remedy should the company fail to pay the compensation fixed by the court. Lothrop v. Duffield [Mich.] 96 N. W. 577.

67. Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 206. One in possession of land under a claim of title not merely colorable may sue for an injunction to protect such possession until a superior title is established in an appropriate mination of property rights of the parties at law, complainant will be left to his legal remedy,[69] unless the evidence is such that a court of law would establish the legal right.[70] Where enforcement of a decree already rendered will give relief, the remedy will not be applied.[71]

There must be a showing of irreparable injury,[72] of which the danger is imminent,[73] or of danger of a multiplicity of suits.[74] Cessation of the act com-action. Pittsburg, S. & W. R. Co. v. Fiske [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 760.

68. Kyle v. Richardson [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 399. Failure to present claim for damages to city council will not prevent landowner from restraining pollution of stream by city sewage. Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346.

69. Entry of premises will not be prevented where both possession and right of possession are in doubt (Stone v. Snell [Neb.] 94 N. W. 525) nor trespass where it is not determined whether the locus in quo is a public highway (Tomasini v. Taylor, 42 Or. 576, 72 Pac. 324). Trespass will not be restrained where defendants are in possession under color of title and plaintiff's right to possession is disputed (Munyos v. Filmore [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 257) nor where the rights are founded on unsettled questions of law and the allegations of damage are fully denied (Merchants' Coal Co. v. Billmeyer [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 121). Interference with mining property will not be restrained where complainant's rights are still undetermined on appeal from a suit in which defendants were adjudged owners of the property. Maloney v. King, 27 Mont. 428, 71 Pac. 469. Mandatory injunction will not issue pending settlement of disputed legal rights. Budd v. Camden H. R. Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 804. General creditor must reduce his claim to judgment before restraining transfer of property by debtor. Adams v. Miller [Neb.] 94 N. W. 711. Boom company will not be prevented from operating in a navigable stream where it claims under a franchise and complainant's title is disputed. Lownsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co., 117 Fed. 983. Sale of personalty title to which is in dispute. Crossland v. Crossland, 53 W. Va. 108. Where it is doubtful whether a structure or its use constitutes a nuisance its character must first be established as a nuisance at law. Flood v. Consumers' Co., 105 Ill. App. 559. A judgment in an action between the city and an owner of a tenement for civil penalties for violation of the tenement house act, is a final adjudication of issues afterward raised in a suit to enjoin maintenance of a nuisance by the owner so that an order of injunction may issue. Tenement House Department v. Moeschen, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 446. Removal of an existing nuisance and restraint of continuance will not be decreed until infringement of rights and existence of the nuisance have been established at law, unless because of irreparable injury, multiplicity of suits or other equitable reason the legal remedy is inadequate. Sterling v. Littlefield, 97 Me. 479.

70. On a bill to restrain obstruction of an easement, relief will be granted though title has not been determined at law where evidence of plaintiff's title is such that a judge at law would direct a verdict for him. Richmond v. Bennett, 205 Pa. 470.

71. Where a decree had given the owner of a mining claim certain rights and prevented trespasses by adjoining owners, his remedy thereafter for such trespasses was to enforce the decree and not to secure a temporary injunction. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. C. & S. Min. Co., 27 Mont. 410, 71 Pac. 403.

72. Acts constituting irreparable injury: Nuisance. Reese v. Wright [Md.] 56 Atl. 976. Cutting timber. Cotten v. Christen, 110 La. 444; Chicago, I. & E. R. Co. v. Ind. Nat. G. & O. Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1008. To preserve status quo. Leigh v. Nat. Hollow Brake Beam Co., 104 Ill. App. 438. Cutting of timber. Wiggins v. Middleton, 117 Ga. 162. Discharge of sewage by city. Vickers v. Durham, 132 N. C. 880. Injury to irrigation works by third persons irreparable. Hayois v. Salt River Valley Canal Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 944. Injury from trespass on mining lands as irreparable. Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 468. Continued and threatened trespasses irreparable. Lynch v. Egan [Neb.] 93 N. W. 775. Continued trespasses preventing entry of rightful owner of premises are irreparable though trespasser is solvent. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248. Diversion of stream to overflow adjoining lands by solvent owner will be restrained [Rev. St. 1895, art. 2089]. Sullivan v. Dooley [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 82. Destruction of telegraph line on right of way by railroad company will be restrained pending condemnation by the telegraph company. W. U. Tel. Co. v. Pa. R. Co., 120 Fed. 981.

Acts not constituting irreparable injury: General injury to cultivation of farm. Merriner v. Merriner [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 118. Restraint of mere trespass. Rogers v. Brand [Ga.] 45 S. E. 305. Enforcement of invalid ordinance. Orange City v. Thayer [Fla.] 34 So. 573. Strike or boycott. Atkins v. W. & A. Fletcher Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1074. Trespass insufficient. Moore v. Halliday [Or.] 72 Pac. 801. Trespass on mining claim insufficient. Harley v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 27 Mont. 388, 71 Pac. 407. Sinking mine shaft on forty acre tract used only for brick making not irreparable. King v. Mullins, 27 Mont. 364, 71 Pac. 155. Breach of contract for sale of goods shows no irreparable injury. New Hartford Canning Co. v. Bullfant, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 6. Construction of dam in stream not damaging complainant. Union L. & P. Co. v. Lichty, 42 Or. 563, 71 Pac. 1044. Survey of lands by federal land department as public lands will not be restrained at suit of claimant where no damage will result. Kirwan v. Murphy, 189 U. S. 35.

73. Vickers v. Durham, 132 N. C. 880. Merely a possible contingent danger is insufficient; drilling of gas well on adjoining land near another well because of danger of ignition of gas by fires used in drilling. Pope v. Bridgewater Gas Co., 52 W. Va. 252. Wrongful use of private alley as presenting plained of will not always prevent injunction,[75] but generally, the remedy will not lie when the acts complained of have ceased before commencement of suit and resumption is not intended.[76] Completion of the act will not prevent the remedy where the effect is continuing.[77]

While complainant must be free from inequitable conduct, unconscious fault will not prevent relief where he is willing to do equity.[78] Similar acts by other persons is no cause to deny the remedy,[79] nor are improper motives material, where the right to relief is based on invasion of equitable property rights;[80] nor the fact that complainant has acted unlawfully.[81] Defects in defendant's title are immaterial where complainant has no equity.[82] A stipulation between the parties for injunction will not influence the court.[83] A restraining order, the essential nature of which is to prevent certain acts, may be granted, though dedanger of defendant's acquiring easement. Hart v. Hildebrandt, 30 Ind. App. 415. Remote danger of breaking telephone wires by placing one line above another. Chicago Tel. Co. v. Northwestern Tel. Co., 199 Ill. 324.

74. Diversion of waters of nonnavigable stream. Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Cavender's Creek Gold Min. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 267. Nuisance. Reese v. Wright [Md.] 56 Atl. 976. Enforcement of ordinance which will result in many prosecutions may be restrained. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. v. Superior [Wis.] 93 N. W. 1120. Many garnishment suits against exempt wages of employes. Siever v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 943. Erection of structures on land by railroad company and threatened use of land without authority will cause multiplicity of suits (Providence, F. R. & N. S. Co. v. Fall River [Mass.] 67 N. E. 647); likewise continuing pollution of watercourse by city (Sammons v. Gloversville, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 332). Though an action for rent will not be restrained because of invalidity of the lease, the remedy being by defense to the action, further actions for installments of rent will be prevented. Slater v. Schwegler [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 937.

It will be refused where complainant can control the number of suits brought. Attorney General v. Board of Education [Mich.] 95 N. W. 746. Collection of illegal taxes presents no danger of multiplicity of suits. Ind. Mfg. Co. v. Koehne, 188 U. S. 681. Many suits for injury to realty will not be restrained for discovery where it lies at law [Shannon's Code, § 5684]. Ducktown S. C. & I. Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56. Survey of lands claimed by complainant by Federal land department as public lands will not be restrained where parties are few and assert separate and independent claims. Kirwan v. Murphy, 189 U. S. 35. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1162, giving injunction in certain cases cannot be construed to allow it where no multiplicity of suits or other equitable ground appears. Wabash R. Co. v. Engleman, 160 Ind. 329. Judgment of dispossession against tenant will not be restrained merely because former monthly suits by the lessor had been restrained as vexatious litigation pending appeal by the tenant from the judgment in an action for back rent. Featherston v. Carr [N. C.] 46 S. E. 15. A bill alleging that 21 owners of realty adjoining plaintiff's factory had made champertous agreements with attorneys to prosecute separate suits for injuries to their land, on the ground that the factory was a nuisance, shows no such community of interest in the subject matter, right or title as will authorize injunction to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Ducktown S. C. & I. Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56.

75. Infringement of patent. Edison Gen. Elec. Co. v. New England Elec. Mfg. Co., 121 Fed. 125.

76. General Elec. Co. v. New England Elec. Mfg. Co., 123 Fed. 310. An injunction against maintenance of a liquor nuisance by a druggist because of his failure to make statutory returns of sales to the auditor, will be denied where it appears that at time of trial he had sold his business and was not then engaged, and did not intend to engage in the future, in such business in the county. Redley v. Greiner, 117 Iowa, 679. Past acts in building a dam were not injurious and no threatened acts are shown. Union L. & P. Co. v. Lichty, 42 Or. 563, 71 Pac. 1044. Use of patterns by manufacturer will not be restrained where no further use is intended. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468.

77. Completion of an obstruction by a landlord before service of an injunction by tenant will not avail the former. Stevens v. Salomon, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 159.

78. One seeking to restrain pollution of a water course will not be refused relief because pollution had flowed from his land into the same stream where he was ignorant of such condition before suit and expressed an intention to remove the cause immediately. West Arlington Imp. Co. v. Mt. Hope Retreat [Md.] 54 Atl. 982.

79. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Crothersville, 159 Ind. 330. That others than defendant contributed to the pollution of a stream is no defense to injunction. West Arlington Imp. Co. v. Mt. Hope Retreat [Md.] 54 Atl. 982.

80. Hodge v. U. S. Steel Corp., 64 N. J. Eq. 111.

81. That he is a member of an unlawful trust combination will not prevent his restraining infringement of his patent. General Elec. Co. v. Wise, 119 Fed. 922. Misconduct of complainant will not prevent relief unless it relates to the subject matter of his suit. Kinner v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. [Ohio] 69 N. E. 614.

82. Dobleman v. Gately, 64 N. J. Eq. 223.

83. Nat. Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 117 Fed. 624.

fendant may thereby incidentally be compelled to perform some act, and though a mandatory injunction cannot be granted.[84] Rights under invalid contracts will not be protected.[85]

Grant or refusal of the application rests in the sound discretion of the court,[86] and a second application after refusal of the first must be made on newly discovered grounds which could not have been ascertained by diligence.[87] A second injunction based on one previously granted will not be allowed on petition of one who claims succession to complainant's rights.[88]

§ 2. Who and what may be enjoined. A. In general.[89]—Injunction will not lie to enforce a forfeiture.[90] All persons connected with the act complained of are properly included in the injunction.[91] A mandatory injunction will issue to remove an obstruction from a public highway or street.[92] An injunction will not lie against maintenance of a dram shop, where the grounds for relief are of record before the excise commissioner, and may be reviewed on certiorari and are such that his finding prevents further review.[93] A preliminary injunction will lie at the suit of the United States to restrain pasturage of sheep on a forest reservation in violation of regulations prescribed by the interior department, where pasturage will result in irreparable injury.[94]

(§ 2) B. Actions or proceedings.—Where one court has properly acquired jurisdiction, proceedings in another court interfering with such jurisdiction may be restrained.[95] An executory order of a federal court cannot be enforced by any

94. By destruction of undergrowth, timber, grass and water supply. Dastervignes v. United States [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 30.

95. Federal and state courts: A federal court may enjoin proceedings in a state court to protect its own previously acquired jurisdiction [Rev. St. U. S. § 720]. Stewart v. Wis. Cent. R. Co., 117 Fed. 782; Union L. Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 123 Fed. 312. A court of bankruptcy may enjoin sale of part of bankrupt's estate, conveyed to another creditor under a deed amounting in equity to a mortgage, pending an adjudication of the question whether such transfer is usurious [Code Ga. § 2878]. In re Miller, 118 Fed. 360. Pending bankruptcy proceedings, the bankruptcy court may restrain sale of merchandise under a mortgage by the bankrupt more than four months before bankruptcy, where its value exceeds greatly the amount of the mortgages and where their effect, though valid, as to covering old and new goods may be questioned. In re Ball, 118 Fed. 672. Sufficiency of evidence to entitle creditors in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings to restrain the attaching creditor, the sheriff and the purchaser from selling or disposing of attached property pending the bankruptcy proceeding. In re Goldberg, 117 Fed. 692. Where an injunction restraining plaintiff in a suit in the federal courts for infringement of a patent from assigning or releasing his claim, was secured in a state court by a party to the suit, a counter injunction asked by plaintiff in the federal court will be refused because of comity between the courts and confusion from conflicting decrees. Green v. Porter, 123 Fed. 351.

Equity and law courts: Where equity ap-other court by restraining its violation.[96] Prejudice or bias of the tribunal before which an action or proceeding is pending is insufficient.[97] A justice will not be restrained from doing a certain thing as to which he has jurisdiction.[98]

An action or proceeding will not be restrained where an adequate remedy is afforded by appeal or writ of error,[99] or by defense in the action or proceeding,[1] pears in the petition and equity has taken jurisdiction, the trial of a case at law between the same parties relating to the same realty will be restrained so that the whole matter may be tried in one proceeding in equity. Goodwynne v. Bellerby, 116 Ga. 901.

Courts of different states: Where it appears that a suit brought in one state was probably for the purpose of depriving plaintiff of the use of certain evidence in a prior suit against him by the same person in another state and that such act would injure his rights, injunction will issue in the state of the first suit to restrain prosecution of the latter suit pending determination in the first suit, especially where plaintiff is required to give a bond to pay any judgment recovered in the first suit. Locomobile Co. v. American Bridge Co., 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 44.

96. Order by federal district court in condemnation of right of way for government canal across a highway is executory, until the bridge has been constructed under plans and specifications given. Woods v. Root [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 402.

97. Injunction will not lie to restrain prosecution of plaintiff's employes for an alleged trespass, on allegations charging defendant, a justice, with conspiring to unlawfully issue warrants of arrest. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barrall [Ky.] 77 S. W. 1117. Summary proceedings against a tenant will not be restrained on allegations that defendants have elected justices friendly to themselves and have summoned jurors of the same sort, so that complainant believes he cannot have a fair trial. Denny v. Fronheiser [Pa.] 56 Atl. 406.

98. Klinesmith v. Van Bramer, 104 Ill. App. 384.

99. Conclusions of the court after obtaining jurisdiction, however erroneous, will not authorize an injunction restraining a proceeding under the order for creation of a drainage district, there being a remedy by appeal. Stone v. Little Yellow Drainage Dist. [Wis.] 95 N. W. 405. There being a remedy by appeal from an order of the probate court approving an appointment of a guardian will not be restrained. White v. Strong, 75 Conn. 308. An injunction at suit of certain defendants in a justice's judgment, and certain sureties on an appeal bond, on the ground that plaintiff by written agreement outside the record had covenanted not to levy execution against them if they would not defend in the action, should not be denied because they had an adequate remedy by defense on appeal. Crook v. Lipscomb, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 567. Collection of a default judgment will not be restrained because the pleadings show the action to have been barred by limitations, since such objection may be raised on appeal or writ of error. Patterson v. Yancey, 97 Mo. App. 681. An injunction will not lie on the ground that damages have been established from an improper basis. Jager v. New York, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 258. The enforcement of an order restraining maintenance of a nuisance by a house owner under the tenement house act, will be stayed pending the hearing of an appeal taken from the determination of the constitutionality of the act [Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334]. Tenement House Department v. Moeschen, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 446.

1. Summary proceedings before a justice to dispossess a tenant on the ground that his permit had expired, will not be restrained because the tenant denies such expiration and claims a renewal of the lease, since he may raise such question on the trial. Weber v. Rogers, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 662. An action for rent will not be restrained because of invalidity of the lease in that the property is used for gambling purposes though the lease is under seal, the remedy being by defense to the action. Slater v. Schwegler [N. J. Eq.] 54 Atl. 937. Where an action at law was brought against attorneys in a prior suit to recover moneys retained by them as fees, they were not entitled to restrain the suit and have their fees ascertained in equity, since there was an adequate remedy at law in the action sought to be enjoined. German v. Browne, 137 Ala. 429. Where a controversy between the parties concerning rates of common carriers is pending before the interstate commerce commission and no danger of irreparable injury appears, the enforcement of the rates will not be restrained in advance of the action of the commission. Tift v. Southern R. Co., 123 Fed. 789. A railroad company will not be restrained from prosecuting proceedings to condemn land for a right of way. Holly Shelter R. Co. v. Newton, 133 N. C. 132, 136. That a tenant relied upon the landlord's promise to extend the lease and had not given the written notice required by it and that the landlord had broken his promise, will not warrant an injunction against summary proceedings to eject the tenant under act March 21, 1772. Denny v. Fronheiser [Pa.] 56 Atl. 406. An injunction will not issue to restrain a corporation from building on land which it is proceeding to condemn since its right to exercise the power of eminent domain must be determined in the condemnation proceedings. Boyd v. Logansport R. & N. T. Co. [Ind.] 69 N. E. 398. Where a grantee of a homestead from a husband after he had left his wife, by a deed in which the wife did not join, brought ejectment the wife cannot restrain the action because of insanity of husband when the deed was made, since she may make that defense in the ejectment. Larson v. Larson [Miss.] 33 So. 717. The supreme court cannot grant an injunction before entry of final order in summary proceedings for dispossession by a landlord staying the proceedings pending a suit in that court for an accounting of rents where the denial of rent due because of payments of interest and water rent liens on the property as authorized by the lease were properly pleaded as a deor by another action or proceeding,[2] or where complainant already has adequate relief.[3] Failure of complainant to avail himself of his proper legal remedy by appeal or defense will prevent relief,[4] unless such failure is excused by proper circumstances.[5] It must clearly appear that the action or proceeding has been, or will be, brought.[6] fense in the proceedings and the tenant asked an accounting [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2244, 2265]. Natkins v. Wetterer, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 93.

2. Execution issued on a void judgment will not be restrained. Howlett v. Turner, 93 Mo. App. 20. Execution sale of land will not be restrained where there is an adequate legal remedy to protect title. Hahn v. Willis [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1084. Injunction will not lie to restrain an execution sale to enforce a pending assessment, there being a complete statutory remedy by an affidavit of illegality. Rice v. Macon, 117 Ga. 401. Where discovery is allowed by statute in suits at law prosecution of several actions for injury to realty will not be restrained because defendant will require discovery as to the title and interest of each complainant [Shannon's Code, § 5684]. Ducktown S., C. & I. Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56. If ordinary condemnation proceedings and payment of damages in advance will not sufficiently compensate an owner for property taken for public use, he will be left to his remedy at law and cannot restrain the proceedings unless insolvency or some other special circumstance appears. Bronson v. Albion Tel. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 201, 60 L. R. A. 426. Where defendant in a suit alleges no facts other than a demand for money judgment, so as to entitle him to an injunction and the motion papers impute no act which if done pending the action would affect his judgment, the injunction is improperly granted though he is entitled to such a remedy in civil action for purpose of a counter-claim. Forman v. Healey, 11 N. D. 563. An injunction will not lie to restrain the sale of lands under execution against an agent of plaintiffs, where the alleged title by limitations founded on his possession, which if adverse to them would have invested him with title, and such allegations are contradicted by other allegations of the petitioner showing that they were minors until less than four years before beginning the suit, their remedy being trespass to try title against the purchaser. Brown v. Ikard [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 967. Where it is alleged in a bill for injunction that many plaintiffs in as many original suits unlawfully combined under an agreement to institute such suits which were begun at about the same time for the purpose of harassing complainant, agreeing with attorneys for contingent fees, the particular terms of such agreements being unknown to complainant so that it could not prove them except by discovery of the defendants founded on the right to relieve on discovery and not the unlawful combination so that the bill was insufficient, there being a legal remedy for discovery. Ducktown S., C. & I. Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56. Service of a writ of ouster of ejectment will not be restrained when it appears from the face of the petition for injunction, that petitioners as defendants in the ejectment are claiming under condemnation proceedings, brought after the final ejectment judgment, which were void under the statute for failure of notice to the land owner. Board of Education v. Aldredge [Okl.] 73 Pac. 1104.

3. Where suits which stock holders are seeking to enjoin a corporation from dismissing, are either dismissed at the time or are enjoined by the court in which they are pending from being dismissed, or have been decided favorably to plaintiffs, and officers sought to be removed have resigned, the injunction is properly refused. Hallenborg v. Cobre Grande Copper Co. [Ariz.] 74 Pac. 1052.

4. Execution of a judgment of dispossession of a tenant will not be restrained where the latter has not appealed. Featherston v. Carr [N. C.] 46 S. E. 15. Collection of a judgment will not be restrained because of a defense which might have been made at the trial, unless complainant shows that he was prevented from making such defense by threat or accident and could not accomplish it by reasonable care or diligence. Klinesmith v. Van Bramer, 104 Ill. App. 384. Inability of a party and his attorney to be present at trial to make defense, because of the prevalence of smallpox, and refusal of the other party with knowledge thereof to postpone, will not entitle the first to an injunction against the judgment, since another attorney should have been procured to attend and ask for a continuance, if the testimony of the absent party was necessary, and on failure thereof to request a new trial and this being refused to take an appeal. Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Higbee [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 955.

5. Where a judgment defendant first learns of the defense to the action after trial, collection of the judgment will be restrained. Polarek v. Gordon, 102 Ill. App. 356. Where a judgment was rendered by a justice against a non-resident plaintiff who had neither an office nor agent in the state, without service of process other than statutory notice to a non-resident defendant, it may be restrained at suit of plaintiff without his showing a valid defense to the action. August Kern Barber Supply Co. v. Freeze [Tex.] 74 S. W. 303. Where defendant was absent from home when summons was served upon him by leaving a copy at his usual place of residence and did not return for more than a month after such service and fails to find the copy of the writ and has no notice of the pendency of the action or that judgment has been rendered against him until too late to make a defense, he is not guilty of laches so as to prevent an injunction against the judgment. Strowbridge v. Miller [Neb.] 94 N. W. 825.

6. Equitable owners of title to land whose trustees stand ready to convey and threaten no breach of trust, cannot restrain the sale of the trust property under an execution against a stranger to the paper title though their title rests in parol. Brown v. Ikard [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 967. An agreement by the holder of a note that he will

Complainant must show such equitable rights or legal title as will warrant protection.[7] Peculiar equitable grounds, such as irreparable injury,[8] multiplicity of suits,[9] fraud,[10] or insolvency of the other party,[11] or inadequacy of the allow-release certain parties from liability thereon or on a judgment rendered against them, and that no execution shall issue against their property, will not warrant injunction against the judgment and execution until levy is actually made on the property. Crook v. Lipscomb, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 567.

7. That the judgment debtor was not served with summons will not be ground for restraining execution where he fails to allege or prove a defense or other equity. Foust v. Warren [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 404. A mere threat to take legal proceedings, is not sufficient to prevent application of the rule that laches will deprive complainant of his right to an injunction. Holt v. Parsons [Ga.] 45 S. E. 690. Foreclosure of a mortgage by sureties will be restrained on an allegation that time of payment was extended without their consent thereby discharging them until the question of such extension is determined. Smith v. Parker, 131 N. C. 470. An action by the payee of a note will not be restrained at instance of the maker, because the payee on being tendered the amount of the note with condition that the maker should deliver a bond for title in which the note was described, failed to execute and deliver such conveyance as was called for in the bond. Morris v. Continental Ins. Co., 116 Ga. 53. An injunction sought by an administrator against interference of another in a sale of personalty, will not be granted on a prayer asking that the sale be allowed to proceed and protection be given to the officers of the sale and the bidders in taking the property bought, where it appears from the bill itself that the title of the property is in question. Crossland v. Crossland, 53 W. Va. 108. A petition by a tenant to enjoin execution of a warrant of dispossession, will not lie where it alleges merely that plaintiff was unable to give the bond and security required by the statute, and that she was not a tenant but the owner of the premises, where uncontradicted evidence shows a contract of tenancy. Johnson v. Thrower, 117 Ga. 1007. Where an order appointing a receiver and directing him to take possession of the property of a corporation at once was affirmed on appeal, his authority being suspended only until final determination of such appeal, the appellate court will not restrain him from taking possession pending appeal by the corporation from judgment in the main action, it not being essential to the appeal [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1295]. Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Kenney [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 20.

8. Where a criminal prosecution is threatened to prevent the exercise of civil rights conferred by law, injunction will lie to prevent injury to property or business endangered. Ga. R. & B. Co. v. Atlanta [Ga.] 45 S. E. 256. Summary proceedings before a justice to dispossess a tenant on the ground that his permit had expired, will be restrained where the tenant claims a renewal of the lease and it appears by the complaint and affidavits that his life would be endangered by removal from the premises. Weber v. Rogers, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 662. An injunction will lie to restrain execution of a removal warrant against a lessee where jurisdiction was not acquired because of defective pleadings and it appeared that the term had not expired and that irreparable injury would result to the lessee [Code Civ. Proc. § 2265]. Kazis v. Loft, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 636. A party to a contract to buy securities on margin, who has reasonable cause to believe that the other party has no intention to perform by actual receipt of securities and payment, may have jurisdiction to restrain foreclosure of a mortgage given and compel surrender of note given as incidental to his remedy by action to recover payments made or value delivered [Sts. 1890, c. 437, § 2]. Rice v. Winslow, 182 Mass. 273.

9. Wright v. Superior Ct. of Santa Clara County, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145. A judgment creditor will be restrained from bringing a multiplicity of garnishment proceedings against the wages of laborers, mechanics and clerks absolutely exempt by law from process. Siever v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 943. Where plaintiffs had recovered judgment before a justice for possession of leased premises and for rents, and on appeal to the superior court it clearly appears from the record that all matters in dispute can be settled in the pending action, an injunction is properly granted restraining plaintiffs from prosecuting monthly suits for rent where plaintiff will not be injured by such injunction, defendants having given a bond securing rents and damages. Featherstone v. Carr, 132 N. C. 800. An injunction to restrain execution on a judgment in an action by a lessor, a married woman, to recover the premises from an assignee of the lessee at the end of a two-year term, though privilege of renewal to five years was given, on ground of invalidity of the lease for failure of the husband to execute as required by statute, will not lie within the rule of a former injunction secured by the assignee to restrain her monthly suits for rent pending his appeal in an action by her for back rent as vexatious litigation where he had given sufficient statutory bond for her protection on the appeal. Featherston v. Carr [N. C.] 46 S. E. 15.

10. An order of the probate court directing sale of realty obtained by fraud and without notice to the aggrieved party, will be restrained in execution. Demaris v. Barker [Wash.] 74 Pac. 362.

11. Collection of judgment will be restrained in order to enforce set-off where judgment creditor is insolvent (Commercial State Bank v. Ketchum [Neb.] 96 N. W. 614) or to establish a counterclaim (Norton v. Wochler [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 1025). Where a bank was hopelessly insolvent when it received drafts as a collecting agent, an action by the receiver of the bank to restrain the prosecution of an action in the court of another state whereby the collection of assets of the bank which passed to him as receiver is prevented or interfered with, is well founded. Davis v. Butters Lumber Co., 132 N. C. 233.

able legal remedy,[12] are sufficient. Plaintiff's failure to pay costs on voluntary nonsuit will not give the right to restrain his subsequent suit.[13] Proceedings to reach property exempt by law,[14] or in another state to reach property or credits exempt by laws of the debtor's domicile, will be restrained.[15] Enforcement of expired liens will be prevented.[16] Application of the principles to certain particular cases will be found in the footnotes.[17]

Persons not parties to an action cannot restrain it,[18] nor will injunction issue

12. Where a receiver seeks an injunction to prevent a resident creditor from suing the corporation, for which the receiver had been appointed in a foreign state, there is no adequate remedy at law. Davis v. Butters Lumber Co., 132 N. C. 233. A suit having been commenced to cancel complainant's stock subscription and to recover the amount paid thereon, an action at law in another federal court subsequently brought on a subscription, where a full and adequate remedy to complainant cannot be afforded, will be restrained, though a third suit is pending in the state court to wind up the corporate affairs. Monumental Sav. Ass'n v. Fentress, 125 Fed. 812. The collection of a liquor tax may be restrained, where no adequate remedy at law exists in favor of the tax payer and he is compelled under the laws of a certain state to submit to the decision of a special tribunal from which there is no appeal and can only recover back his taxes after payment under protest by separate actions against the municipalities among whom it has been distributed and as to the state is entirely without remedy. Pyle v. Brenneman [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 787. Where it appears in an equitable proceeding that the sheriff is about to sell land of great value in bulk under a mortgage and general execution in favor of the same plaintiff, and that it will not bring its full value, thus leaving unsecured creditors without means of realizing on their claims, and that it might be sold separately without damage to plaintiff and to the benefit of such creditors, an injunction may be issued at their suit to restrain the sale. Reynolds, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Kingsberry [Ga.] 45 S. E. 235. Since scire facias on forfeited recognizance is to be regarded as original process in a special proceeding, the validity of the proceedings for forfeiture of bail of a non-resident of one state indicted for conspiracy in the federal district court of another state, is sufficiently doubtful, where the scire facias issuing on the bail bond was never personally served on the debtor to justify the federal circuit court in another state from restraining, pendente lite, its marshal from enforcing execution on the bail against property located within the district. Kirk v. U. S., 124 Fed. 324.

13. Where a non-suit was taken by plaintiff, costs being given to defendant, and afterward plaintiff commenced another action for the same purpose in another county, the court in which the latter action was pending could stay further proceedings until the costs in the first action were paid by plaintiff so that injunction would not lie in the court of the first action to restrain the second action without the payment of such costs. Wabash R. Co. v. Sweet [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 123.

14. Foreclosure of a chattel crop mortgage executed by the husband alone on the property belonging to him and exempt from execution will be restrained. Kindall v. Lincoln H. & I. Co. [Idaho] 70 Pac. 1056.

15. A creditor living in the same state with his debtor will be restrained from prosecuting an action in another state to evade exemption laws of the first state. Biggs v. Colby [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 910; Margarum v. Moon, 63 N. J. Eq. 586. An employe may restrain his creditor who has assigned his claim to a non-resident to enable attachment of wages in a foreign jurisdiction from prosecution of suit in such jurisdiction. Galbraith v. Rutter, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 554.

16. Sale under a decree foreclosing a mechanic's lien, may be restrained at the suit of mortgagees of the property who were not made parties to the action to enforce the lien, where the statutory period for enforcement has expired. Martin v. Berry, 159 Ind. 566.

17. Enforcement of a common law judgment may be enjoined (Brooks v. Twitchell, 182 Mass. 443) and summary proceedings to eject a lessee—Act March 21, 1772 (Denny v. Fronheiser [Pa.] 56 Atl. 406). An injunction will not lie to restrain an action against a corporation where the court had no authority to appoint a receiver for the corporation. Zeltner v. Henry Zeltner Brew. Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 136. In an action for rescission of an executed contract for the sale of certain goods, plaintiff cannot, by admitting in his complaint liability for other goods, restrain an independent action by defendant to recover for the latter. Kerngood v. Pond, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 227. An execution of a warrant of dispossession in summary proceedings by a landlord will be restrained where before issuance he refused the tender of rent and costs made according to statute by the tenant. Asbyll v. Haims, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 578. Advertisement and preparation for sale under a power in a security deed is not a pending proceeding which may be restrained by the superior court of the county where the land is and the sale is to be made where the grantee resides in another county [Civ. Code 1895, § 4950]. Meeks v. Roan, 117 Ga. 865. Where attorneys claiming fees from non-resident clients omitted to demand them by bill of items or otherwise before bringing a foreign attachment against the clients and to notify the clients of such attachment in which they made no defense, the clients are entitled to restrain sale or other proceedings under attachment judgment until opportunity is given to defend on the merits. Truitt v. Darnell [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 692.

18. Complainants not parties to a suit to recover possession of land which they had sold to defendants in the suit, were not entitled to restrain plaintiff in such suit from against persons whose interest in the proceeding sought to be restrained has ceased.[19] A bill to restrain a judgment will not be viewed so strictly where defendant is an administrator, without personal knowledge of the matter in litigation.[20]

(§ 2) C. Acts of public or municipal bodies or officers.—Acts merely ministerial in character will not be enjoined.[21] An individual cannot ask restraint to protect public rights unless he shows special injury to himself.[22] Protection of public rights regardless of personal motive is sufficient ground for restraint of corporate acts by a taxpayer.[23] A railroad company may restrain enforcement of a proposed tariff schedule where it appears that the returns thereof would result in taking company property without due process of law.[24]

Organization or alteration of municipalities.—Organization of a drainage district will not be prevented where complainant could have defended in the proceedings,[25] but otherwise as to arbitrary attempts to alter a school district by county superintendent.[26] It must appear, in such a case, that restraint is necessary to preserve rights.[27]

Exercise of police power; acts of police officers.—Enforcement by a city under a void revocation of a permit to remove a building within fire limits,[28] or wrongful interference by city officers with repair of a building originally lawfully constructed and damaged by fire, will be prevented.[29] Where the removal of water mains and fire hydrants by a city was determined to be for the public welfare, one private consumer will not be entitled to injunction, though his property is prosecuting or enforcing a judgment for his possession. Hooper v. Birchfield [Ala.] 35 So. 351.

19. An injunction will not issue in favor of the debtor to restrain his creditor residing in the same state from attaching credits due in another by the laws of the state where they live, where it appears that the creditor had assigned the claim to the plaintiff in the foreign proceedings, since the creditor thereby lost control of such proceedings. Margarum v. Moon, 63 N. J. Eq. 586.

20. Polarek v. Gordon, 102 Ill. App. 356.

21. Selection of newspaper to publish result of local option election. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766. Publication by secretary of state of proposed constitutional amendments. People v. Mills, 30 Colo. 262, 70 Pac. 322. Act of county commissioner's court in declaring and publishing result of election is ministerial and cannot be restrained by federal court [U. S. Rev. St. § 720]. August Busch & Co. v. Webb, 122 Fed. 655. Letting contracts. Tanner v. Nelson, 25 Utah, 226, 70 Pac. 984.

22. Attempt to restrain persons from acting as common council until right to so act is determined. Landes v. Walls, 160 Ind. 216. Allowance of municipal contracts. Rand, etc., Co. v. Hartranft, 29 Wash. 591, 70 Pac. 77; Wilkins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 1026. Use of public auditorium. Amusement Syndicate Co. v. Topeka [Kan.] 74 Pac. 606. A bill to restrain city authorities from changing the use of a building from an English German school to a colored high school, filed by complainants as tax payers and alleging injury to all property in the city by the change, but failing to allege that complainant's property was in the immediate vicinity of the building or would suffer special injury by the change shows no such special interest distinct from that of the general public. Davidson v. City Council of Baltimore, 96 Md. 509.

23. Rev. St. § 1778. Raynolds v. Cleveland, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 215.

24. Reduction of earnings below amount of operating expenses. Wallace v. Ark. Cent. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 422. A railroad company whose rates are reasonable and not discriminative, is entitled to a preliminary injunction against enforcement of a reduction of rates on a prima facie showing that for many years it has earned much less than the legal rate of interest in the locality where its road is situated and has given a bond to indemnify all persons injured by the issuance of the injunction. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brown, 123 Fed. 946.

25. Where property owners had notice of a proceeding for establishment and opportunity to appear to try the questions involved therein, there was due process of law. Stone v. Little Yellow Drainage Dist. [Wis.] 95 N. W. 405.

26. School Dist. No. 44 v. Turner [Okl.] 73 Pac. 952.

27. A tax payer and resident of the part of a certain school district which was afterward excluded from the district by subsequent statute, cannot enjoin the old board of education from transferring school property of such part to the new board, and the new board from performing their duties as to such property, because of the unconstitutionality of the later law, where no irreparable injury appears and the injunction is not necessary to preserve the status of the parties [Laws 1863, c. 360, modified by Laws 1902, c. 494]. Johnson v. Kingston Board of Education, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 593.

28. Lerch v. Duluth, 88 Minn. 295.

29. Roanoke v. Bolling [Va.] 43 S. E. 343.

thereby rendered practically valueless.[30] The police department will not be restrained from exhibiting or publishing the photograph of a person supposed to have committed a crime on the ground that a trespass was committed against him in compelling him to sit for the photograph; nor will a mandatory injunction issue to compel destruction or surrender of the negative and records of his Bertillon measurements.[31]

Exercise of eminent domain.—The taking of private property for public purposes without compensation,[32] grant or proper proceedings,[33] or interference in property rights,[34] will be restrained, but not if complainant had or has proper redress at law,[35] or has acquiesced in the use.[36] The owner of superior rights to waters of a stream in Nebraska, as against one appropriating them, cannot restrain diversion of storm or flood waters for a use decreed beneficial by statute, no injury being shown.[37]

Issuance of municipal bonds.—Issuance and collection of taxes for payment of municipal bonds may be restrained because they exceed the statutory limit of indebtedness,[38] but issuance will not be prevented because of irregular appointment of bond trustees.[39] Where all municipal bonds issued under statutes must be executed and sealed in a certain manner, an innocent holder may restrain a

32. Though there is a controversy as to the title or boundary of the land. Foley v. Doddridge County Ct. [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 246. One in exclusive possession of land under a contract to purchase who has paid a considerable portion of the price may restrain a city and its contractor from taking such land for a public street until proper proceedings are had and damages paid or tendered. Olson v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 687, 71 Pac. 201. Where several years after conveyance of streets and alleys in a certain addition by the county to a city for public use, which included land occupied adversely by plaintiff's predecessors in title, the city requested an owner to recognize its right to the land and he refused asserting title in himself and erected valuable buildings on the land, the city making no claim until years later the opening of an alley by the city requiring the destruction of such building, is properly enjoined. Crigler v. New Mexico [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 384. An estate by curtesy will entitle plaintiff to restrain opening of streets through lands. Schooling v. Harrisburg, 42 Or. 494, 71 Pac. 605.

33. A city may be restrained from taking a strip of land belonging to a private owner of a public street without prescription, dedication, or condemnation. Baya v. Lake City [Fla.] 33 So. 400. That equity will not interfere with the enforcement of criminal laws and neither aid nor obstruct criminal courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction, will not deprive it of power to restrain a continuing injury to property or business by taking property for public use without dedication or other grant or compensation. Ga. R. & B. Co. v. Atlanta [Ga.] 45 S. E. 256.

34. An owner of property abutting on a space designated in a plat duly recorded as "public space," may have an injunction against interference with his interest in such space, though he is not entitled to a title in fee. Lunkenheimer Co. v. Cincinnati, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 617.

35. Injunction will not lie to restrain dock commissioners of Greater New York from unauthorized use of land taken for a street, until after construction of the street is begun, where they had unreasonably delayed such construction, the remedy for such neglect being mandamus to compel the laying out. Coleman v. New York, 173 N. Y. 612. Where a grantor or his assigns may recover at law the value of any rights of property or otherwise because of the taking of possession of a pier by a city for public use, injunction will not lie. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. New York, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 530. The city will not be prevented from acquiring an easement in a creek, where the complainant was a party to the appraisal in condemnation proceedings to acquire such easement and made no objection to jurisdiction or the rights of the city as to the easement, or as to legality of laws or ordinances under which it proceeded [Code Civ. Proc. § 1357 and Rochester City Charter]. Hooker v. Rochester, 172 N. Y. 665.

36. An injunction will not issue to restrain a city from using a street until passage of an ordinance vacating an alley which is alleged to be part of the consideration for permission to take plaintiff's land for the street, where the judgment condemning the land for the street became final with his consent, and after commencement of the suit and for eight years before trial the street had been opened and used and plaintiff made no effort to prevent such use but paid improvement assessments thereon. Bigelow v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 75 Pac. 111.

37. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway [Neb.] 93 N. W. 781.

38. By county commissioners to pay for construction of the highway in a township, their action not being judicial in character [Acts 1899, p. 26]. Owen County Com'rs v. Spangler, 159 Ind. 575.

39. Givens v. Hillsborough County [Fla.] 35 So. 88.

city issuing bonds as to which a mistake was made by officers in the use of the corporate seal, from setting up absence of its corporate seal as defense to an action on the bonds.[40]

Allowance of municipal claims or awards.[41]—A taxpayer may restrain payment of illegal municipal claims without a showing of special injury.[42] A school superintendent is not authorized by statute in Indiana to restrain township trustees from paying a teacher for services from school revenue.[43] A complaint by a taxpayer to restrain payment of an award by the county board against the county on certain conditions was not insufficient for failure to state a cause of action against the claimant in that she would reject the award.[44]

Granting licenses or franchises.—Invalidity of a privilege or franchise by a municipality, amounting to a contract, cannot be ground to restrain the grantee from acting because of lack of power in the municipality or forfeiture by the grantee by noncompliance with conditions,[45] but the holders of a franchise may restrain interference by the city with their rights thereunder.[46] Certiorari, not injunction, is the proper method to test validity of a dram-shop license, where the facts necessary to such determination appear of record, unless there is fraud.[47] Mandatory injunction will not issue to compel a board of pharmacy to reject the application of one seeking registration as a pharmacist.[48] A promise by an applicant for a liquor license to plaintiff, to withdraw the license, will not entitle plaintiff to restrain the excise commissioners in granting the license, where plaintiff was not led thereby to neglect to take any proceedings against its allowance.[49]

Assessment or collection of taxes.—Proceedings for assessment or collection of taxes will not generally be restrained at suit of a taxpayer in absence of fraud or spoliation,[50] or of jurisdiction of the taxing authorities,[51] or excess of statu-

41. Sufficiency of facts to show fraudulent collusion on the part of municipal officers in allowing invalid claims against the municipality to be prosecuted to judgment to justify taxpayers in seeking restraint of collection of the judgment. Balch v. Beach [Wis.] 95 N. W. 132.

42. Misappropriation of public funds or abuse of corporate powers by a municipality. Inge v. Public Works of Mobile, 135 Ala. 187. Payment of alleged illegal claims by a county. Rogers v. Westchester County Sup'rs, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 501. Any taxpayer of a school district may seek restraint of payment under a void contract by the board of school trustees. Nuckols v. Lyle [Idaho] 70 Pac. 401. Payment of an illegal award by a county board may be restrained at suit of a taxpayer, since after payment he would have no remedy by suit against the grantor and county treasurer. Kircher v. Pederson [Wis.] 93 N. W. 813. Where public officers by fraudulent collusion neglect their duties respecting taking of a judgment against the municipality for invalid claims, tax-payers acting seasonably may restrain collection of the judgment. Balch v. Beach [Wis.] 95 N. W. 132.

43. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 5903, 2911. McGregor v. State [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 315.

44. The action was not against her but the county officers. Kircher v. Pederson [Wis.] 93 N. W. 813.

45. Contract with city for garbage cremation. Cal. Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 29.

46. Where a city, after granting a telephone franchise for the use of the streets and construction and operation of the plant had begun, attempted to compel the removal of the poles and wires without lawful authority and during the life of the franchise, by an ordinance prohibiting extension or maintenance unless a franchise should be obtained by the company under penalty of a fine and by resolution requiring removal of the poles and wires and directing removal by the marshal after a certain day, the trustees in the trust deed from the company covering all the property and franchise may sue to protect the property by restraining unlawful interference by the city, they being entitled to assume that the directions of the city would be carried out. Old Colony Trust Co. v. Wichita, 123 Fed. 762.

47. Injunction against maintenance of dram shop. Cooper v. Hunt [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 483.

48. The duties imposed on the board by Acts 1902, p. 276, c. 179, § 8, are discretionary and no fraud appeared. Henkel v. Millard [Md.] 54 Atl. 657.

49. Cooper v. Hunt [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 483.

50. Because of excessiveness. Covington v. Shinkle, 25 Ky. L. R. 73, 74 S. W. 652. Where a board of equalization exercised discretion and judgment in the assessment of taxes though the judgment is erroneous. Cochise County v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 946.

51. Special assessment by village board. Bemis v. McCloud [Neb.] 97 N. W. 828;

tory limit,[52] or overvaluation of property,[53] or exemption of property taxed.[54] Generally there is a remedy by objection or review in the proceedings,[55] or by payment and action for recovery,[56] or other proceeding.[57] Acquiescence in the proceedings will prevent relief.[58] One is estopped by the conduct of a predecessor in title which would result in a fraud if disregarded.[59] Collection of a tax will not be enjoined if all taxes sought to be enjoined are not invalid,[60] unless the valid portions are separable.[61] It must appear that the officer is threatening or seeking to levy.[62] A remedy given by the Ohio statute to enjoin illegal levy of tax assessment or collection may be enforced by the federal courts on their equity side.[63] Collection of taxes on national bank stock will not be restrained because no notice was given of assessment or because of over-assessment, before payment or at least tender of taxes due under complainant's own theory;[64] nor because of its assessment at actual value while realty is assessed at less value, though no other remedy exists.[65]

Matters pertaining to municipal contracts.[66]—Generally a private person must show special injury to prevent letting or execution of municipal contracts,[67] but

Wright v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 1007. The federal government has no efficient remedy at law such as will prevent the restraint of unlawful taxation by a state of permanent improvements and personal property used in the cultivation of Indian lands. U. S. v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 47 Law. Ed. 532.

52. Where county commissioners exceed the statutory limit of taxes by assessment for road construction, a person injured has no appeal under law giving a right of appeal from the commissioners' decisions where they are judicial in their nature since such decision is a matter of ministerial character [Acts 1899, p. 26, construed with Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 7859]. Owen County Com'rs v. Spangler, 159 Ind. 575.

53. Arbitrary and oppressive over-valuation of property by board of equalization. Cochise County v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 946. A complaint asking restraint of extension of taxes is not demurrable for failing to state that relief had been sought from the county board of review where the question was primary valuation of property which was not within the statutory powers of the board [Acts 1891, p. 199 and Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 8532]. Stephens v. Smith, 30 Ind. App. 120.

54. Levy of a tax on property donated and used solely for educational purposes. Linton v. Lucy Cobb Inst., 117 Ga. 678.

55. Where there is a remedy under statutes for review of tax assessment and for its recovery after payment, there is no danger of a multiplicity of suits. Ind. Mfg. Co. v. Koehne, 188 U. S. 681, 47 Law. Ed. 651. Collection of excess of taxes assessed against land for a public road which resulted from a mistake of the officers as to its extent, will not be restrained, the remedy being by correction of the mistake on certiorari. Lanning v. Chosen Freeholders of Mercer County, 64 N. J. Eq. 161. Transmission of a special assessment for a sewer to the county auditor, where the owner has ample remedy at law, if the assessment is illegal, by filing objections and trial at law in proceedings to collect the assessment [Gen. Laws 1901, c. 167, and Gen. St. 1894, § 1584]. Fajder v. Aitkin, 87 Minn. 445.

56. Fraud is insufficient to warrant injunction against collection of a personal property tax by a town. Nye v. Washburn, 125 Fed. 817.

57. A property owner cannot restrain village authorities from transmitting to the County Auditor a statement of the amount of a special assessment for sewer construction where he has an adequate remedy at law, if the assessment is equal in proceeds to enforce the improvements which have already been begun [Gen. Laws 1901, c. 167 construed with Gen. St. 1894, § 1584]. Kerr v. Waseca, 88 Minn. 191. Mere errors or excess in the valuation of property for taxation, or statutory injustice is capable of remedy at law. Cochise County v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 946.

58. A lot owner cannot restrain sale of her property for the amount due on a bond for street improvements where it appears that the property belonged to her husband during preliminary proceedings regarding the improvement and issuance of the bond, that the improvements were made at his request, that he made no appeal to the city council and did not object at any step of the proceedings but requested that certain of them be taken. 66. Injunction protecting rights under contract for construction of Manhattan subway. McCabe v. Hunt, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 466.

67. Property owners who have no property abutting on a street about to be closed under a contract with the city, have no such peculiar interest as will authorize them to restrain execution of the contract on the ground that it is not properly limited as to taxpayers may restrain the making or completion of such contracts for irregularity which will result in misapplication of public funds,[68] especially where the ground is protection of such funds,[69] but complainant must act seasonably,[70] and the acts must not be judicial in character,[71] and a showing of regularity will prevent restraint.[72] A contract will not be restrained where a popular vote is necessary to its validity.[73]

Matters pertaining to office and elections.—Injunction will not lie to prevent holding a public election authorized by law,[74] or the declaring and publishing of time. Wilkins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 1026.

Publishing contracts: An injunction will not lie to restrain a county board from rejecting books adopted by the state board under contract with a certain publisher, in certain grades of schools, where it is not shown that the failure to use such books resulted in damage to the publisher. Rand, McNally & Co. v. Hartranft, 29 Wash. 591, 70 Pac. 77. A publisher is not entitled to restrain breach of a contract with the board of education by substitution of another text book, there being an adequate remedy at law. Attorney General v. Board of Education [Mich.] 95 N. W. 746.

68. Improper award of contract: Award of printing contract to newspaper whose bid was larger than that of another resulting from arbitrary will of the city council [Charter City of Seattle, § 31]. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Printing Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 802. Sufficiency of evidence to show favoritism in award of a municipal contract for sewers to warrant restricting levy and collection of special tax therefor. Grunewald v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 222. Signing and delivering of a contract for street lighting may be restrained at suit of a tax payer because the proper course provided by charter has not been followed in awarding the contract, without waiting for performance in material respects. Schiffman v. St. Paul, 88 Minn. 43. Where work has begun under a contract awarded to one other than the lowest bidder when suit is commenced, injunction against further proceeding in the work is the only remedy, so that the contract may be set aside and referred back to the officials for proper proceedings [Rev. St. § 794]. Akron v. France, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 63.

Irregularities in performance: Where a municipal improvement is not being constructed according to the ordinance providing for it. Wells v. People, 201 Ill. 435. Performance of an illegal contract for a public improvement by a city may be restrained by a tax payer. Inge v. Board of Public Works, 135 Ala. 187. A tax payer may restrain the use of worthless materials by a contractor who had agreed with the board of supervisors to use certain materials in macadamizing a road, since its right to sue for damages on his bond was inadequate. Miller v. Bowers, 30 Ind. App. 116. Where an ordinance authorizing a corporation to furnish water to a city and its inhabitants is invalid because pledging the tax payer to sustain a private enterprise, the city may be restrained from receiving water and making payment from its revenues. Scott v. La Porte [Ind.] 68 N. E. 278. Unwarranted departures from a paving contract by which a city will be defrauded, will authorize issuance of injunction at suit of tax payers though the city is not bound to accept the work unless in accordance with the specifications, regardless of the fact that no objection was made by the city inspector. Central Bitulithic Pav. Co. v. Manistee Cir. Judge [Mich.] 92 N. W. 938. Since any substantial and material departure from specifications in a contract entered into with the lowest bidder will render it void, though it appears that only one bid was presented, the municipal authorities may be restrained by tax-payers from entering a contract so proposed to be modified without showing or alleging fraud or collusion or a prevention of bidding because of the terms in the specifications or the destruction of fair competition. Le Tourneau v. Hugo [Minn.] 97 N. W. 115.

69. A suit to prevent contractors from using worthless materials in constructing a road, where the contract called for a certain grade of material, and to prevent the supervisors from paying for such work improperly done, was for the purpose of preventing violation of the law and protecting public funds, rather than enforcement of a contract. Miller v. Bowers, 30 Ind. App. 116.

70. Where a contract between a city and a railroad company authorized by ordinance for the construction of elevated tracks, retaining walls, and bridges, and for the vacation of streets, to accommodate the railroad, was made and work begun thereunder, nearly three months before a suit was brought by abutting owners to restrain damage, because of the invalidity of the ordinance, there was such laches as to prevent relief, the railroad having bought land on the faith of the contract and incurred great expense in the construction of the improvements. Keeling v. Pittsburg, B. & C. R. Co., 205 Pa. 31.

71. A convention of school officers for the purpose of adopting text books for the state for a certain period, and the letting of contracts for furnishing such books, is not judicial in character; hence a person injured by its acts is entitled to restrain execution thereof and is not relegated to certiorari [Rev. St. §§ 1854, 1855, 1859]. Tanner v. Nelson, 25 Utah, 226, 70 Pac. 984.

72. A tax payer cannot restrain a park board from awarding a pavement contract on the ground that it was prohibited by law, where a resolution of the board of estimate set forth competition between different kinds of pavement, fixed the specifications as to each and authorized the park board to advertise for proposals under the same general conditions for all bidders. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Willcox, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 574.

73. Contract by a city for street lighting where an election to ratify such contract is necessary to its validity. Tampa Gas Co. v. Tampa [Fla.] 33 So. 465.

74. Morgan v. County Court, 53 W. Va.

the result,[75] or to restrain ballot commissioners from putting on ballots to be used at a general election, the question of relocation of the county seat.[76] Inspectors will not be restrained at suit of a private person from acting in precincts irregularly established if the irregularities will not render the election absolutely void.[77] The supreme court cannot enjoin the secretary of state from publishing proposed constitutional amendments before they are voted upon, though they would be invalid if adopted.[78] Unconstitutionality of the statute under which a local option election was held, and that enforcement would destroy the lawful business of liquor selling of complainant to his irreparable injury, and render him liable to prosecution and arrest, is sufficient cause for injunction.[79]

Exercise of official duties by de facto officers,[80] impeachment or removal of an officer,[81] or appointment by a city council of a committee to buy lands for city buildings,[82] will not be enjoined. A city official cannot restrain private persons, nominated as members of the board of public works but who had not taken up their duties, from threats to remove him when they assume their duties.[83] Laws providing that a taxpayer may be sued to prevent waste of municipal property or its unlawful appropriation by payment of salary will not authorize restraint of such payment by a taxpayer as to public officers holding appointments in the civil service, because the appointments valid in form are invalid in effect.[84]

Location, construction and regulation of municipal buildings and works.— Mere technical informalities in proceedings to locate and construct a public building,[85] or public works,[86] or failure to obtain private rights, where greater 372. Holding of a primary election where called according to statute. Meacham v. Young, 24 Ky. L. R. 2141, 72 S. W. 1094.

75. The action of the county commissioners' court in Texas in declaring and publishing the result of an election, is ministerial and not judicial so that it may be restrained by a federal court [U. S. Rev. St. § 720]. August Busch & Co. v. Webb, 122 Fed. 655. Selection of a newspaper for publication of an order declaring result of a local option election for the last issue of the required publication, is a ministerial and not a legislative act which may be restrained. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766. A petition by liquor dealers to restrain publication of an order declaring the result of a local option election, is insufficient where it does not allege that they were lawfully engaged in the liquor business though it alleged that they were threatened with arrest and prosecution, and that their right to continue in the business had a certain value. Eppstein v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 337.

76. The county court had made an order submitting the question to vote. Morgan v. County Court, 53 W. Va. 372.

77. State v. Wilcox, 11 N. D. 329.

78. In voting a legislative function is exercised. People v. Mills, 30 Colo. 262, 70 Pac. 322.

79. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766.

80. Pending trial of title to the office. State v. Rice [S. C.] 45 S. E. 153. Quo warranto is the remedy (Deemar v. Boyne, 103 Ill. App. 464; Little v. Bessemer [Ala.] 35 So. 64), and not injunction to restrain payment of the salary (Greene v. Knox, 175 N. Y. 432).

81. Though the removal is unjustly made. Marshall v. Board of Managers, 201 Ill. 9. Impeachment and removal of a mayor by the board of aldermen and city council; there is adequate remedy at law by vindication of his title to the office. Riggins v. Thompson, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 242. Proceedings to remove the superintendent of a penitentiary under an unconstitutional statute cannot be restrained, he being a statutory officer who can be removed only for cause. It will not be presumed that the commission would act beyond their statutory powers in reducing his salary under statutory authority so as to amount to a virtual expulsion before expiration of his term. Corscadden v. Haswell, 84 N. Y. Supp. 597. Action of mayor and city council in removing city attorney for misconduct will not be reviewed by injunction nor will they be restrained from recognizing his elected successor. Howe v. Dunlap [Okl.] 72 Pac. 365.

82. Quo warranto is remedy to try right of council to delegate authority. Parker v. Concord, 71 N. H. 468.

83. Though no injury could result to defendants. Parsons v. Weller, 24 Ky. L. R. 1770, 72 S. W. 273.

84. Code Civ. Proc. § 1925; Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301 and Laws 1899, p. 812, c. 370, § 27. Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance [Ohio] 67 N. E. 1052.

85. Members of a board of education will not be restrained from buying a site and building a school building merely because technical legal formalities had not been strictly followed, no bad faith or public injury being shown. Lawson v. Lincoln, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 217.

86. Where one seeking to restrain a city from discharging sewerage on premises, did not question that the city had power to take realty to establish a sewerage plant, and objected merely as to the method of assessing damages as illegal and unconstitutional, injury will result to the public than to complainant,[87] will not give the right to restrain the public authorities; but public expenditures at unauthorized places or for unauthorized purposes,[88] or outside the exercise of eminent domain,[89] or construction of public works in streets,[90] unless the fee is in the public,[91] or of public wharves and docks,[92] or diversion of waters from streams,[93] resulting in injury to private owners, will be prevented; likewise regulation of public works, whereby a citizen without fault will suffer injury.[94] A private citizen cannot restrain city officers from permitting use of the city auditorium for entertainments for private profit, even though wrongful.[95]

there was no ground for restraining the city from constructing a plant on the land; a remedy to determine damages was given. Vickers v. Durham, 132 N. C. 880. A bill to restrain drain commissioners from laying out or constructing a drain on lands, failing to allege any act of trespass or that the commissioners had done more than to examine the proposed improvement and make a preliminary order, is insufficient, since there is an adequate remedy by statute to determine all questions of jurisdiction and regularity [Comp. Laws, §§ 4320, 4323, 4325, 4345, 4346]. Strack v. Miller [Mich.] 96 N. W. 452. Where a tax-payer sued for an injunction to prevent the rapid transit commissioners of New York from constructing a tunnel by departure from the routes and general plan of construction adopted by them as required by statute, pending a suit against them, the injunction will be denied where it appears from the condition of the work that it will cost no more for the city to complete the tunnel than to fill it up on abandonment of the work, and that abandonment would necessitate construction of another, causing enormous loss to the taxpayers. Barney v. Rapid Transit R. Com'rs, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 549.

87. A temporary injunction against work on the rapid transit tunnel in New York, will not issue for failure to obtain consent of abutting owners to a change in its location, where such relief was not asked until nearly all the work was completed at great cost, and the delay will be of no advantage to the land owners while of injury to public interests. The abutting owner will be given a bond indemnifying him against all possible loss. Barney v. New York, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 719.

88. By district court sitting in equity. Board of Education v. Ter. [Okl.] 70 Pac. 792. Repairs of a road over sewer will be restrained where bad faith appears, in that they were made to serve private and personal ends and special injury will result to certain land owners. Shanks v. Pearson, 66 Kan. 168, 71 Pac. 252. Injunction is the proper remedy for a tax payer to prevent a school district from contracting for or constructing school houses at unauthorized places and contracting district liabilities therefor. Kellogg v. School Dist. No. 10 [Okl.] 74 Pac. 110.

89. County may be enjoined from building a levee or dam across a stream to the injury of complainants, unless the construction is in exercise of the right of eminent domain. Leflore County Sup'rs v. Cannon [Miss.] 33 So. 81.

90. In a suit by an abutting property owner against a city to restrain erection of a viaduct in the street in front of his property, whether a law will effectually compensate him therefor is immaterial. Sauer v. New York, 85 N. Y. Supp. 636.

91. Construction of a viaduct in a street to facilitate public travel, under statutory authority by a city, will not be restrained at suit of an abutting property owner where the fee of the street is in the city in trust for public highway purposes. Sauer v. New York, 85 N. Y. Supp. 636.

92. Where the owner of lands abutting on the Mobile river was authorized by the commission of that river to build docks and wharves in the river opposite his land, he may restrain a city from recovering the shores occupied by such works, where the city had acquiesced in the occupation for a number of years. Sullivan Timber Co. v. Mobile, 124 Fed. 644.

93. Where the state by means of under current conduits tapped a creek for the purposes of a penitentiary and pumped water into its cistern, where under terms of a deed from a landowner through whose premises the creek ran, it was entitled only to divert a much smaller amount of water than was taken, the landowner's only remedy was an injunction against the taking of more than the amount to which the state was entitled, since he could not in any manner inspect the appliances or determine the amount of water taken. Salem Mills Co. v. Lord, 42 Or. 82, 69 Pac. 1033, 70 Pac. 832.

94. Regulation of city water supply: To prevent unauthorized action by municipal authorities, under color of office, whereby the interests of a tax payer and user of city water are injured, for which there is no direct remedy at law. Poppleton v. Moores [Neb.] 93 N. W. 747. To restrain a city from invading premises to replace a water meter taken out for repair and from cutting off the water supply for failure of the customer to reinstate the meter. Powell v. Duluth [Minn.] 97 N. W. 450. Removal of a water meter by a city will be restrained at suit of the lessee, where it was in perfect condition when installed and had been inspected repeatedly before discovery of a defect, whereby it registered less water than had been actually used and there is no evidence that plaintiff ever tampered with the meter. Healy v. New York, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 27.

95. His damage is not special though he owns an opera house and his profits are thereby lessened. Amusement Syndicate Co. v. Topeka [Kan.] 74 Pac. 606.

96. Sufficiency of evidence in a suit to restrain a city from discharging sewerage on prevented by a landowner if his injury will be real and irreparable and the danger is imminent.[98] If pollution can only be prevented by abatement of the flowage, a temporary injunction will not issue against a city at suit of a board of health.[99] A city which had afterward directed its sewage to tile laid across land by a manufacturing company, with the owner's consent, cannot defend in a suit by the owner to restrain passage of such sewage on the statutory ground that it has a right, as a person interested, to connect with the drain as established by adjoining landowners for mutual benefit.[1]

Federal authorities or officers.—A survey by the federal land department of public lands, claimed by a citizen, will not be restrained at his suit.[2] The unauthorized determination of the postmaster general that mail addressed to a certain corporation should be refused delivery is not so conclusive on the federal courts as to preclude an injunction by the corporation to prevent such action.[3] An army officer acting under orders of the secretary of war and under an act of congress providing for an army post will not be restrained by a federal court, at suit of a lower proprietor, from constructing a sewer on lands which the government has acquired, because of pollution, whether the act amounts to the taking of the land for public use or to a tort only.[4] Though the interior department before passage of a certain law had power to remove any white man from Indian territory where he did not pay the tax imposed on his business by the Indian nation where he located, a threat by officers and agents of such department and of the nation, that if a tax was not paid by certain plaintiffs by a certain time that their places of business would be closed and steps would be taken before the department for their removal if they attempted to reopen, will be ground for an injunction, since they amount to a threat of unlawful interference with plaintiff's rights.[5]

(§ 2) D. Enforcement of statutes or ordinances.—Passage or enforcement of alleged invalid city orders or ordinances,[6] or statutes,[7] will be prevented only when irreparable damage is threatened, or a multiplicity of suits will result.[8] premises, to show a probability that nuisance will result. Vickers v. Durham, 132 N. C. 880.

97. Into running stream so as to pollute the waters and endanger health of those living on the banks. Todd v. York [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1040. Into canal by city, where there is substantially no interference with city plans for drainage, and great public mischief results. Warren v. Gloversville, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 291. Where it is found to constitute a nuisance to plaintiff, which is continually increasing and will be permanent unless restrained, and will result in a multiplicity of suits. Sammons v. Gloversville. 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 332. Pollution of a stream will be restrained without compelling the owner to bring an action at law; that other sources than that of the city contributed to the pollution is no defense. A judgment in trespass on the case against a city for polluting the stream or the owner's oral consent to the placing of a tile across his land to carry such sewage which afterwards became inadequate (Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402), or his failure to present his claim to the common council according to the provisions of the city charter, will not prevent the injunction (Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346).

98. Vickers v. Durham, 132 N. C. 880.

99. Where Act March 24, 1897, §§ 1, 2, 7, P. L. p. 99, provides that sewage from certain structures shall not be discharged into certain parts of a certain stream and that no such structures shall be maintained within a certain distance of the stream so as to render drainage into it liable and provides that boards of health may enjoin any violation of its provisions in a suit by the board of health under such law. Paterson Board of Health v. Summit [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 125.

1. Act July 1, 1889 (Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 42, §§ 228-231). Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402.

2. There is no danger of multiplicity of suits or irreparable injury, as ground to restrain a survey by federal land department, of lands as to which complainants assert title and which are claimed as public lands of the United States, where persons directly interested are not made parties, are not numerous, and have separate and independent claims and the survey can be made without injury to soil or timber. Kirwan v. Murphy, 189 U. S. 35, 47 Law. Ed. 698.

3. American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94.

4. Sheriff v. Turner, 119 Fed. 782.

5. Buster v. Wright [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 882.

6. Orders or ordinances restrained: Enforcement of a void order of the city coun-

(§ 2) E. Acts of quasi public corporations or their officers.—One corporation may restrain interference by another corporation with its property properly acquired.[9] Rights under a lease by such a corporation will be protected, but extension of such rights will not be compelled.[10] One corporation may restrain interference with its occupancy of land of another at termination of a lease pending condemnation proceedings to take the land for its purposes.[11] Use of cil vacating part of the city at suit of adjacent property owners will be prevented. Lowe v. Lawrenceburg Roller Mills Co. [Ind.] 69 N. E. 148. Enforcement of an illegal ordinance imposing a license tax will be restrained where it appears that complainant will be compelled to defend many criminal prosecutions and will suffer irreparable injury in business. Hutchinson v. Beckhan [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 399. Enforcement of an ordinance will be restrained, where it is alleged that violation by plaintiff's employes will result in many threatened prosecutions, large fines and the destruction of plaintiff's business, though none of the threatened prosecutions have been commenced. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Superior [Wis.] 93 N. W. 1120. An injunction will lie to restrain the enforcement of a city ordinance establishing maximum water rates pending a suit where the bill and affidavits of plaintiff corporation show that the rates fixed were so low that it would be barely able to pay operating expenses under them. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. City of Tampa, 124 Fed. 932.

Orders or ordinances not restrained: Passage of an ordinance fixing an assessment for a local improvement will not be restrained though void because of failure to comply with charter provisions. Kadderly v. City of Portland [Or.] 74 Pac. 710. Passage and approval of an ordinance cannot be restrained merely on the ground that it would not conserve best public interest. Wright v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 869. In a suit to restrain enforcement of an ordinance concerning additions to the city, it cannot be assumed that discretion thereby vested in the council will be abused. Hillman v. Seattle [Wash.] 73 Pac. 791. Enforcement of ordinance for impounding cattle running at large will not be restrained, unless irreparable injury or other equitable ground appears, since complainant has an adequate remedy at law to test its validity. Orange City v. Thayer [Fla.] 34 So. 573. Where a sub-contractor who has contracted to build gas works on premises, alleges that municipal ordinances prohibiting erection or maintenance of structures within certain limits, infringe the obligation of the contract of the landowner with the municipality under prior ordinances, an injunction will not lie to prevent enforcement thereof by criminal proceedings against his employes, his remedy being by action against the sub-contractor, who is presumed to be able to respond in damages for all injuries suffered by him from interruption of his contract. Davis & F. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 189 U. S. 207, 47 Law. Ed. 778. Enforcement of a municipal ordinance which will result in a mere trespass for which adequate remedy exists at law will not be restrained, though the ordinance is void. Orange City v. Thayer [Fla.] 34 So. 573. The only questions which can be considered in a suit in a federal court by a non-resident of a state, to restrain enforcement of an ordinance in a local option district of the state against the sale of liquors except for certain purposes, are those which affect complainant's rights against the federal constitution and laws, he having no legal interest in the validity or effect of the law or the regularity of the election except as such rights are affected. Busch v. Webb, 122 Fed. 655.

7. Enforcement of a state or local law may be restrained on the ground that thereby complainant will be deprived of his rights under the federal constitution and laws. Busch v. Webb, 122 Fed. 655. Either a state or federal equity court may restrain enforcement of an invalid law which would result in irreparable injury by loss and hardship to complainant. Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 125 Fed. 121.

8. Where an ordinance affects many people, one may bring an injunction to prevent enforcement. Boyd v. Board of Councilmen, 25 Ky. L. R. 1311, 77 S. W. 669.

9. Where a railroad company built a line on land as to which it had title, partly by deed and partly by condemnation, and was in actual or constructive possession of all of the land for railroad purposes, it may restrain another company afterward chartered, which attempts to eject it by force, claiming title under a deed from the grantor of the first company. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ohio River J. R. Co., 204 Pa. 356.

10. A temporary injunction will issue to restrain an electric company from interfering with the occupancy by another electric company of ducts in a sub-way, which has continued for several years under a paid rental from the defendant until the trial; and to prevent the latter from interfering with connection of additional customers with the system already located, though an effort is being made to terminate the lease; but a mandatory injunction will not issue pending the suit at instance of the occupying company to compel the other to assign additional space to it. West Side Elec. Co. v. Consolidated Tel. & Elec. Subway Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 1052.

11. A railroad company in occupation of a railroad under a lease may restrain the lessors for a reasonable time, from dispossessing it in order that it may bring proper proceedings to condemn the land for its purposes. Winslow v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 188 U. S. 646, 47 L. Ed. 635. Where a telegraph company acting under Act July 24, 1866 (14 Stat. 221) and Rev. St. § 3964 (23 Stat. 3), which allowed it to build and operate its lines over military and post roads of the United States, had built and maintained a line for many years along a railroad, under a contract with the road, and had been directed by the company to remove the line in accordance with such contract, the telegraph company may have an injunction to prevent interference or destruction of the a railroad terminal way will not be restrained unless there is evidence sufficiently clear to enable the court to specify acts as unnecessary or unlawful.[12] Construction of bridges for a turnpike road across a bay, with approval of the federal authorities, will not be restrained because it will delay movements of high tide to a certain extent, unless such delay will damage property on or underneath the bay.[13] Extortionate charges and unjust discriminations by common carriers will be restrained, jurisdiction depending upon the fact that the subject-matter is a right asserted under the act of congress,[14] but prior to the act of congress, Feb. 19, 1903, the United States could not sue at request of the interstate commerce commission.[15] A gas company cannot be compelled to furnish gas to a prospective customer.[16]

There must be a showing of damage,[17] and a clear showing of title,[18] and complainant must act promptly,[19] and the acts must be shown to be those of the corporation.[20]

Exercise of power of eminent domain in general.—Unauthorized taking of private property,[21] by a corporation which has no such power,[22] will be prevented; but a temporary injunction will not issue to restrain the taking of land on the ground that no right to condemn exists, since such order would amount to a practical disposition of the case without a hearing on the merits.[23] That an land by the railroad company during pendency of condemnation proceedings by the telegraph company to take a right of way along the railroad, where the retention of the line would not cause material damage to the railroad company, and destruction thereof would result in irreparable damage to the telegraph company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 120 Fed. 981.

12. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64.

13. Carvalho v. Brooklyn & J. B. Turnpike Co., 173 N. Y. 586.

14. Tift v. Southern R. Co., 123 Fed. 789.

15. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 275.

16. Mandamus is the proper remedy. Johnson v. Atlantic City Gas & Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 550.

17. A cross-complaint in an action to compel a railroad company to allow a natural gas company to lay a pipe line under its right of way, sought to restrain the laying alleging that the gas company was using artificial means to increase the flow of gas through its pipes in violation of statute will not entitle defendant to injunction where it failed to show that any damage to it resulted from such acts. Chicago, I. & E. R. Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1008.

18. A preliminary injunction will not be granted to restrain a railroad company from re-entering and taking possession of a part of its right of way occupied by a telegraph company under a lease which had expired because absolute title to such right of way was vested in the telegraph company by a contract prior to the lease, where it appears by the bill that the railroad company has been in open possession of the right of way through its tenant for a longer term than necessary by law to give it title by adverse possession under the rule that where the right to an injunction depends on title, it must be clearly shown. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 120 Fed. 362.

19. Construction of a pipe line within the limits of the right of way of a railroad, over land leased to another giving it the exclusive right to draw gas from the tract will not be restrained when too large an amount had been spent in constructing the line and it was nearly completed when the suit was brought and the damage to the lessee was small since there would be an adequate remedy to recover the damages at law. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. American Plate Glass Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1020.

20. An injunction will not issue to restrain a railroad company from constructing a fence on certain land claimed by plaintiff, where the complaint therefor alleged that the company's employes were ready to build the fence but did not allege that they were acting under the company's instructions. Wabash R. Co. v. Engleman, 160 Ind. 329.

21. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 276. Entry of lands by a suburban electric railway company without an attempt to exercise the power of eminent domain. Freud v. Detroit & P. R. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 559. One railroad company will be restrained from crossing the tracks of another railroad company without acquiring the right. Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Seaboard Air-Line R. Co., 116 Ga. 413. Taking of private property by railroad company not covered by its condemnation proceedings. Shipley v. Western Md. Tidewater R. Co. [Md.] 56 Atl. 968. Where a railroad company built and maintained certain structures on the land of another without statutory authority in their work of abolishing grade crossings and were threatening to use his property without authority, he was entitled to an injunction restraining trespass since his only other remedy was by a multiplicity of suits, the expenses of which would be greater than the damages. Providence, F. R. & N. Steamboat Co. v. Fall River [Mass.] 67 N. E. 647.

22. Sufficiency of legal remedy to prevent injunction. Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Cavenders Creek Gold Min. Co. [Ga.] 46 S. E. 422.

23. By railroad company. Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 149.

erroneous rule is made in condemnation proceedings will not entitle defendant to an injunction, the remedy being appeal.[24] On a prima facie showing by plaintiffs to restrain condemnation of land, the injunction should issue until the right to bring the proceedings under the statute can be determined.[25]

Occupation of public ways.—The unauthorized occupation of public ways will be prevented at suit of a property owner who suffers injury differing from that sustained by the general public,[26] unless the owner has acquiesced in the occupation,[27] or unless there is an appropriate remedy at law.[28] Consent of the proper 24. Condemnation by railroad company. Boyd v. Logansport R. & N. Traction Co. [Ind.] 69 N. E. 398.

25. Taking land for union station. Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 149.

26. Occupation restrained: Property owners along a street must show a nuisance in fact or that they will suffer special injury, different from that of the general public, to restrain construction of an electric railway. Baker v. Selma St. & S. R. Co., 135 Ala. 552. Operation of a railroad across a public street resulting in nuisance to a property owner and damage to the property, the road being built without express legislative authority or assent of the city council. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Bull, 116 Ga. 776. If a railroad track in a street will interfere with the easement of an abutting owner, injunction will lie to prevent construction until his rights of property have been obtained. Cleveland Burial Case Co. v. Erie R. Co., 24 Ohio Circ. R. 107. An abutting owner holding fee to the center of a street may restrain the building or operation of a railroad therein where the company has not acquired his property rights. Paige v. Schenectady R. Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 571. That the company has expended considerable means in building its track in a street will not prevent restraint. Id. Trespass by a railroad company building switches and sidings in a highway without condemnation, or permission of abutting owners, under authority only to maintain a single track therein. Stephens v. New York, O. & W. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 72. An injunction will issue to prevent a railroad company from laying a siding on the grade of a street different from the established grade where it appears that the access to plaintiff's property would be seriously interfered with, that surface water would be thrown on his land and that the construction was proceeding without municipal authority. Zook v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 206 Pa. 603. An abutting owner may have an injunction to protect his land to the middle of the street from occupation by a street railway, though his opposite neighbors have consented to such occupation. North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co., 205 Pa. 579. Where a railroad track is about to be laid across a street and sidewalk without legal authority and in such a way as to make a public and private nuisance, a private citizen suffering special damage may restrain the construction independently of, as well as under a law for the abatement of nuisances [Rev. St. 1898, § 3506]. Cereghino v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Utah] 73 Pac. 634. Unauthorized operation of street cars so close to the curb in front of premises that vehicles must stand on the track, while halting, is an actual and peculiar damage to the premises for which an injunction will lie at suit of the abutting owner though the apparent occupying of the street without authority is also a trespass constituting a public nuisance. Henning v. Hudson Valley R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 1111. Under laws prior to Laws 1901, p. 686, c. 465, a street railway had no right to condemn land in streets of a city so that the remedy of abutting owners to prevent unlawful operation of a street railway was injunction and not by the institution of condemnation proceedings. Younkin v. Milwaukee Light, H. & T. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 215. Where a railroad company lays a second track in a street without compensating or providing for compensating an abutting owner who owns the fee in the street, he may restrain the use of the second track until the right is acquired by grant or condemnation. Rock Island & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 204 Ill. 488. If a property owner entitled to compensation for construction of a street railroad is guilty of laches in permitting such construction without compensation, so that he cannot restrain the continuance of the road, he may still have an injunction as an alternative remedy should the company fail to pay the compensation fixed by the court but the commencement of such a suit in the federal court will not give exclusive jurisdiction to authorize that court to restrain proceedings afterwards commenced in a state court by the company to condemn the easement under the state power of eminent domain, since thereby the court is not deprived of the power to award past damages. Benjamin v. Brooklyn Union El. R. Co., 120 Fed. 428.

27. One who cut down a telephone pole after it had stood twelve years, during five years of which he held title to the adjoining lot, was not entitled to an injunction pendente lite to prevent the replacing of the pole on the ground that he was seeking the status quo, since he himself had destroyed it. Post v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 621. Where plaintiffs sought to compel restoration of a crossing over railroad tracks by injunction, without alleging or proving irreparable injury, and admitted that during the process of double tracking the road they interviewed the representatives of the company and acquiesced in the plans for doing away with the crossing, upon which acquiescence the company acted and destroyed the crossing, and it appears that the danger of accidents would be very great were the crossing restored, plaintiffs are estopped to ask a mandatory injunction. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 Ky. L. R. 1459, 78 S. W. 160.

28. Injunction will not lie to compel a railroad company to restore a crossing over its tracks, there being an adequate remedy authorities will prevent the remedy.[29] A city may restrain unauthorized occupation of a street by a railroad company.[30] One corporation cannot prevent another from use of a public way without a showing of injury to its rights or franchises.[31]

(§ 2) F. Acts of private corporations or associations.—Injunction will lie to prevent a corporation from including in its name the surname of an inventor already adopted and used by another corporation.[32] That two corporations are in different communities will not prevent restraint of use by one of the other's corporate name, where their business and markets are the same.[33]

Corporate management and dealings.[34]—Injunction will not lie to prevent payment of a dividend,[35] or sale of a franchise by the corporation,[36] or of corporate stock,[37] or consummation of an agreement for substitution of stock,[38] where no at law for any damage sustained by reason of an injury complained of. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 Ky. L. R. 1459, 78 S. W. 160. Abutting owners cannot restrain the construction of an electric railway in a street, because of threatened danger to access to other lines or of obstruction of the street or of noise, dust or vibration, since they have a remedy at law. Baker v. Selma St. & S. R. Co., 135 Ala. 552.

29. Where a street railway company obtains consent of a turnpike company and of township authorities and of abutting owners on one side of a turnpike to use it, an owner on the other side who did not consent and whose property was not touched could not restrain construction. North Pa. R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co., 205 Pa. 579. Operation of a trolley railway track laid in accordance with a special ordinance will not be restrained because of injury and inconvenience to abutting owners, their remedy being at law for unreasonable appropriation of the highway by the municipality. Budd v. Camden H. R. Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 804.

30. No adequate remedy at law lies to prevent construction of a railroad over the main street of a village at grade without approval of the railroad commissioners, to prevent the city from having an injunction, where a fourth of the expense of changing the road would fall on the city when it applied to the commissioners for such change. Bolivar v. Pittsburg, S. & N. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 678.

31. The placing of telephone wires in streets under direction of a city, will not be restrained at suit of a prior occupying company, unless complainant is oppressed by abuse of the power of the city; the danger of wires breaking after being placed above the wires of complainant is too remote. Chicago Tel. Co. v. Northwestern Tel. Co., 199 Ill. 324. Construction of street railway on a public road crossing a railroad track and on which land owned by the railroad company abuts cannot be restrained by the railroad company if none of its rights or franchises are injured [Act June 19, 1871 P. L. 1360]. North Pa. R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co., 205 Pa. 579. A railroad company whose tracks are crossed with an overhead bridge cannot restrain the construction of a street railway where the street railway company offers to rebuild the bridge strong enough for the passage of its cars, though the land on which the foundations rest belongs to the railroad company. Id. A street railway company asking restraint of another company from using a certain street cannot object to the latter's defense that because of the first company's failure to procure consent of the village authorities it is not entitled to use such street on the ground that the defense can only be urged by the public authorities. Rochester & E. R. R. Co. v. Monroe County Elec. Belt Line Co., 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 33.

Interest or danger sufficient: A street railroad company will not be restrained from building across a public road at suit of a railroad company which had located but not constructed a road across the way pending settlement of crossing rights. Ohio River J. R. Co. v. Freedom & C. E. St. R. Co., 204 Pa. 127. An injunction will issue to prevent interference with erection of poles in a street by a telephone company under a proper permit, by the action of another company in changing its own poles as soon as the new company had located poles of a certain height to correspond with such height, in order to prevent the new company from proceeding. Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Louisville Home Tel. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1676, 72 S. W. 4.

32. It will not be refused because no wrong appears to have been done or no danger of complainant's injury, since he must act promptly before the rights of innocent stockholders in the defendant corporation have become involved. Edison Storage Battery Co. v. Edison Automobile Co. [N. J. Ch.] 56 Atl. 861.

33. Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. Bissell Plow Co., 121 Fed. 357.

34. Where a sale of stock was advertised for fifty days before the day of sale, an injunction will be refused because of laches, where sought only five days before the sale, no excuse for delay being shown. Edwards v. Mercantile Trust Co., 121 Fed. 203.

35. On preferred stock because it had not been earned, where the directors are not shown to be insolvent, there being a statutory remedy for an enforcement of their liability. Under P. L. 1896, p. 287, § 3 where public notice of the payment was given 25 days before a bill was filed by a stockholder to restrain such payment, the bill was too late. Schoenfeld v. American Can Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1044.

36. An allegation by a stockholder that he has good reason to fear and does fear that the directors will sell a franchise, will not warrant a temporary injunction, where no threats to sell are alleged. Quin v. Havenor [Wis.] 94 N. W. 642.

37. A temporary injunction will not issue danger of injury is shown. The purchaser of stock not fully paid up may compel issuance of the stock after payment of the balance.[39] A stockholder cannot restrain payment for benefits received by the corporation under contracts increasing corporate debts beyond the amount of capital stock.[40] A plaintiff who shows a prima facie right to five per cent. of the corporate dividends may restrain payment of more than 95 per cent. of earnings and surplus set aside for dividends.[41] Mere noncompliance with a statutory regulation will not warrant restraint of a corporate election.[42] Holders of corporate certificates, based on the assets, and secured by pledge of stock and securities, may sue to restrain fraudulent exercise of the corporate franchise.[43] A suit to restrain private persons from selling railroad stock is not ancillary to foreclosure against company property to which stockholders are not parties.[44] Title to corporate office will not be determined by injunction, though the purpose of the application is to require a claimant in possession to deliver property belonging to the office to the president.[45] The directors of a board of trade will not be interfered with in investigation of charges by a member according to by-laws, unless it is alleged that the proceeding is irregular.[46] A stockholder may restrain the issue of stock to be given as a bonus on sale of corporate bonds for par value, though the capital stock is impaired and the par value of the bonds is all that they, together with the stock as a bonus, are worth.[47]

Acts of associations.[48]—A proceeding by a Masonic order to try a member will not be restrained on the ground that it will take from him property without due process of law.[49] A lodge and its treasurer will not be restrained from allowing and paying a bill, unless all remedies afforded by the constitution and by-laws or by parliamentary procedure have been exhausted.[50] A labor union will be temporarily to restrain the sale of two shares of corporate stock by one entitled to seven and one-half shares where it appears that there are fifteen unsold shares. Quin v. Havenor [Wis.] 94 N. W. 642.

38. A non-assenting holder of preferred stock given for a temporary injunction restraining the corporation from carrying out an agreement with another for substitution of non-accumulative for accumulative dividend paying preferred stock, and the refund of all dividends in arrears, providing also that the corporation should issue to each assenting holder of preferred stock, a funding certificate for arrears, carrying interest at a certain rate payable exclusively out of net profits for the year in priority to any dividends on the capital stock, since no irreparable injury will result to such holder, and if when the agreement is accomplished an attempt is made to pay dividends to assenting holders in preference to him he may assert his rights by a proceeding in court; the plan works for the benefit of the parties to the agreement in that it accelerates their chances of participation in dividends. Willcox v. Trenton Potteries Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 173.

41. Dupignac v. Bernstrom, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 625.

42. A preliminary injunction at suit of certain stockholders will not be allowed to restrain a corporation from making a decision except in accordance with a majority vote of stockholders as shown by a list of such holders certified by a certain trust company as transfer agents and by a certain other trust company as registrar on the ground that the corporation had failed to keep a book required by statute containing the names of stockholders and the number of shares held by each [Mills' Ann. St. § 481; Act April 14, 1893]. Mitchell v. Colo. F. & I. Co., 117 Fed. 723.

43. Where a corporation has pledged its stocks and securities to a trust company to secure issuance of certificates based on its assets, agreeing to pay a certain sum every six months to the trust company for distribution among the certificate holders, such holders are creditors of the corporation entitled to an injunction against the exercise of its franchises to prevent fraud [Insolvent Incorporation Act 1829]. restrained from refusing full membership, and a union card to a member expelled contrary to rules for being a member of the national guard, unless such member had never received full membership nor any other than an apprentice's card.[51] The right of a voluntary association to engage in support of a strike or to freedom in the labor market, by which it employs pickets or other agents to carry on its measures, cannot be invaded.[52] An incorporated association of master mechanics may restrain a voluntary association of journeymen from acts of violence, either in its corporate capacity or by its individual members against members of the plaintiff association or their employes, or by interference with its property.[53] Members of an incorporated labor union may seek protection from threats of members of an unincorporated union to compel them to join its ranks, by injunction.[54] Where, thirty years after location of a college in a certain borough, certain citizens sued for removal to another town because they, with others, had donated funds with which land was bought and given to the trustees for building purposes, and the trustees had permanently located the college in the borough, removal will be restrained until final hearing.[55] Under a law providing that a domestic corporation shall forfeit its franchise and a foreign corporation shall lose its right to do business within the state if terms of the law are violated as to sale of its certificates, and that an injunction may issue on application of the commissioner of corporations, the attorney general is not authorized to restrain, on information in equity, individuals who act as co-partners in the sale of such obligations.[56]

(§ 2) G. Transfer of property.—A general creditor cannot restrain a transfer of his property by a debtor without reducing his claim to judgment.[57] A law making sales of merchandise in bulk, fraudulent as to the seller's creditors, will not give a right to an injunction against a fraudulent transferee in an action at common law against the debtor for money only.[58] A court or judge cannot transfer possession of realty from one party to another by provisional or preliminary injunction.[59]

(§ 2) H. Breach or enforcement of contract.—An ordinary breach of contract, for which an action for damages will lie, will not be restrained;[60] nor will breach be restrained to avoid a multiplicity of suits, where complainant has entire control of the number of suits which may be brought,[61] or where he acquiesced in the violation.[62] It is otherwise if complainant cannot have redress at law,[63] or

60. To prevent a discharge from employment, the remedy being at law for breach of contract. Boyer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 Fed. 246. A party to a contract for sale of goods will not be restrained from selling to other persons, there being an adequate remedy at law for breach. Mundy v. Brooks, 204 Pa. 232. One who agreed to sell and deliver goods cannot be restrained from selling to another where there is conflict as to the amount required by the contract to be delivered, though the purchaser alleges irreparable injury, no facts appearing to show damage which cannot be measured at law. New Hartford Canning Co. v. Bullfant, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 6. Where a complaint alleged that plaintiffs and defendants were in the butcher business and had agreed not to give premiums, trading-stamps or vegetables as inducements to draw trade from each other, but that defendants did do so to the irreparable injury of plaintiffs asking an injunction, it will not lie where it is not alleged that defendants were giving stamps to draw trade or to persons trading with the parties or that defendants were insolvent or that the damages could not be measured. Schmidt v. Bitzer, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 563.

61. Attorney General v. Board of Education [Mich.] 95 N. W. 746.

62. He acquiesced in violation of a covenant in a deed restricting building of hotels rights are in danger pending settlement at law,[64] but mere uncertainty of the measure of damages at law is insufficient.[65] The contract must be valid,[66] and unambiguous.[67] The real party in interest must be in contractual relations with defendant.[68] The adequacy of the consideration will not be considered if a legal consideration appears.[69] A conspiracy to prevent fulfillment of contracts in order to compel payment of a royalty where no such right existed will be prevented where defendants are insolvent.[70] Where land was conveyed under a restriction that a house of certain specifications only shall be built in a certain locality, that other land in the same tract was conveyed without restriction, will not prevent restraint of violation of the restriction, where the grantees of the latter land observed the restriction, thus maintaining the general scheme.[71] Third persons will be restrained from inducing a party to a contract to break it, where no adequate relief can be afforded the other party at law,[72] especially where the act is offensive to on lands, and allowed the expenditure of money. Hemsley v. Marlborough Hotel Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 804.

63. American Law Book Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 396. Injunction is the proper remedy to prevent breach of a contract restraining the practice of medicine conforming to Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 819-821. Hulen v. Earel [Okl.] 73 Pac. 927. Where a contract between adjoining property owners for maintenance of a private alley, precluded one of the parties from maintaining projections on buildings into the alley which would cause continual damage to the other party not capable of measurement in money, he could restrain maintenance of such obstructions as a continuing breach of his contract rights. St. Louis S. D. & S. Bank v. Kennett Estate [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 474. Where a mutual benefit society issued a certificate to pay the wife of the holder a sum not exceeding a certain amount at his death on condition that he comply with the regulations of the association, an amended by-law subsequently passed limiting the highest amount payable on the certificates to $2000, will not deprive the holder of vested rights so that there was no breach of contract in the company's refusal to receive assessments and advertise on the old basis or to recognize his contract as originally made, so as to entitle him to sue for damages, and equity will intervene to compel performance of the contract by the society. Langan v. Supreme Council, A. L. of H., 174 N. Y. 266.

64. Where the lessee of premises for banking purposes after carrying on business for a time without the lessor's consent, sublet to a restaurant keeper in another building and cut arches through the intervening wall to connect the two buildings, an injunction will lie to prevent further cutting of the walls and use of the premises as a restaurant until the rights of the parties can be determined on trial, where the lessor claims a breach of the covenant in the lease and the lessee defended on the ground that the clause was merely a restriction creating only a condition which had been dispensed with by the lessor. Orvis v. Nat. Commercial Bank, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 631. Where one of two partners sells his interest to the other under an agreement that the latter may use the partnership name on condition that he will not make any new liabilities thereunder, and afterwards the purchasing partner buys large bills of goods in the name of the old firm and is insolvent, the selling partner may restrain him from altering the condition of the assets of the business until the same can be disposed of under the orders of the court. 65. Attorney General v. Board of Education [Mich.] 95 N. W. 746.

66. Kinner v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 294. A contract by a physician not to practice medicine in a certain territory on legal consideration is valid and enforceable if the limits are reasonable. Ryan v. Hamilton, 205 Ill. 191. Where the exclusive licensees for sale of phonographs, blanks and records covered by patents belonging to the licensor, required purchasers, whether wholesale or retail dealers, to agree not to sell the instruments at less than list prices furnished, an injunction will not lie to restrain a purchaser from breaking such contract. Nat. Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 117 Fed. 624.

67. Sufficiency of evidence to warrant injunction to restrain rescission of a contract for manufacture of machines providing a royalty or commission of net profits. Bates Mach. Co. v. Cookson, 202 Ill. 248. Enforcement of an ambiguous contract will not be restrained unless the instrument is first reformed under appropriate pleadings. Perkins Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 117 Ga. 394.

68. Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Southern Pine Co., 116 Ga. 224.

69. Contract by physician not to practice medicine in certain territory. Ryan v. Hamilton, 205 Ill. 191.

70. Kelly v. Churchill [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 817.

71. Frink v. Hughes [Mich.] 94 N. W. 601.

72. Ticket brokers will be restrained from inducing persons to buy non-transferable reduced rate tickets, issued by a passenger association of railway companies, where use of such tickets by others than original purchaser can only be accomplished by fraudulent representations. Kinner v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 294. An injunction will lie to prevent a competing publisher from inducing subscribers to the publications of another publisher to break their contracts in order to divert trade tc its own by misrepresentations as to the publications of the other publisher and by an agreement to indemnify subscribers against damages from breach of such contracts or equity and amounts to crime;[73] and whether the other parties were actually led by the misrepresentations of defendant to break their particular contracts is not material.[74]

Enforcement of usurious contracts will be restrained.[75] A contract permitting a gas company to use streets of a city to distribute gas to consumers may be enforced by the city.[76] Enforcement of an illegal boycott agreement will be restrained where it prevents a third person from completing his contracts.[77]

(§ 2) I. Interference with property, business or comfort of private persons. Protection of enjoyment or possession of property in general.—Enjoyment of an easement,[78] or lease,[79] or possession of premises,[80] or the separate property of a wife,[81] will be protected unless there is laches,[82] or the right is doubtful and trifling in value.[83] A lessor cannot restrain a lessee from enjoying his rights in the property.[84]

Erection or maintenance of structures interfering with enjoyment of premises will be prevented,[85] though made without knowledge of the owner's rights,[86] or litigation arising thereon, though defendant had discontinued the practice of offering indemnity agreements. American Law Book Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 396. A bill by a company engaged in selling products of coal mines to restrain violence and intimidation by miners or others at the mines to prevent their operation by the owners who were under contract with the corporation for the furnishing of coal, shows such an interest in plaintiff as will entitle it to maintain suit in its own right independently of the owners of the coal mines, where the latter were not liable for failure to furnish coal because of strikes under the contract though they might be made parties defendant, it being impossible to make them parties complainant, where their interests, while not adverse, are based on different rights and jurisdiction of the court might therefore be defeated. Carroll v. Chesapeake & O. C. A. Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 305.

77. Contract between plumbing association and dealers restricting sales. Walsh v. Association of Master Plumbers, 97 Mo. App. 280.

78. Anderson v. Southworth, 25 Ky. L. R. 776, 76 S. W. 391; Keplinger v. Woolsey [Neb.] 93 N. W. 1008.

79. An injunction will lie to prevent the lessor of a coal mine from interfering with construction of a switch track by the lessee reasonably necessary to the purposes of the mine, there being no adequate remedy at law. Ingle v. Bottoms, 160 Ind. 73. A lessee holding a lease giving it the exclusive right to draw gas from a certain tract over which a railroad had its right of way may restrain the sinking of gas wells on the right of way thereby diminishing the flow of gas from its own well, though it cannot enter the right of way to sink wells as long as the railroad is in possession. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. American Plate Glass Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1020.

80. The keeping of men on watch to prevent the entry of a rightful owner to premises, and their trespass on the premises from time to time, and the arrest of the owner's servants in charge, amounts to such continuous trespass as will warrant injunction though the trespasser is solvent [Rev. St. 1899, § 3649]. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248.

81. A husband will be restrained from interfering with the separate realty of the wife where he had for years contributed nothing to her support while living separately and had used the entire income for her separate realty for his own benefit without even paying taxes. Dority v. Dority [Tex.] 71 S. W. 950.

82. Where defendants went into possession of a mining claim owned by plaintiff and another, title being taken in the latter's name, who developed and improved the claim for 15 years, and for 9 years after the third person refused to convey to plaintiff his portion of the claim, an injunction will not lie by him to restrain their operation of the mine because of laches. Mantle v. Speculator Min. Co., 27 Mont. 473, 71 Pac. 665.

83. One of the claimants to realty will not be restrained from entering the premises where both possession and right of possession are involved in doubt, the remedy being at law. Stone v. Snell [Neb.] 94 N. W. 525. Where it clearly appears in an action to settle the ownership of ore beds on one side of a particular line that plaintiffs owned the surface of the claim on that side of the line, thereby making them prima facie owners of all ore within the claims of its boundaries, defendant cannot restrain them from working veins pending an appeal from a judgment in their favor, on proof that the amount of ore amounted to considerable in value which plaintiffs denied, showing that it was practically worthless, and that the only work was merely exploration necessary to prepare for trial of another case. Maloney v. King, 27 Mont. 423, 71 Pac. 469.

84. Lessor cannot restrain interference with the use of the leased property in hands of the lessee, where the latter has the duty of repair. Coney v. Brunswick & F. S. Co., 116 Ga. 222.

85. Continued maintenance of a structure projecting over adjoining lands may be restrained by owner of the latter. Norwalk though completed before service of the writ,[87] or though complainant claims title under conveyance from a trustee,[88] unless the act amounts merely to a trespass,[89] or complainant acquiesced in the act.[90] The amount of injury is immaterial except as affecting the right to the remedy.[91] Delay by complainant will not bar relief, where he was doubtful as to his rights and defendant suffered no damage.[92] That the line fence of an adjacent owner is partly on plaintiff's land will not entitle him to restrain its maintenance.[93]

Obstructions of access to property,[94] by easement,[95] or of public ways,[96] will be relieved as to a subsequent purchaser on a platted highway,[97] except, as to public ways, when the injury is not special to complainant,[98] and irreparable.[99] Delay, to prevent relief, must suffice to raise presumption of a grant.[1]

Heating & Lighting Co. v. Vernam, 75 Conn. 662. Removal of structures erected by a trespasser on a wall situated on property of another without claim of right will be compelled. Bright v. Allan, 203 Pa. 394. Opening of a ball park adjoining plaintiff's residence by fencing in an alley which is one of the boundaries of his lot and dedicated to public use. Alexander v. Tebeau, 24 Ky. L. R. 1305, 71 S. W. 427. Sufficiency of evidence to show that a building, the construction of which was sought to be restrained by a street railway company, did not encroach upon the public street so that the injunction should be denied. Savannah Elec. Co. v. Pedrick, 116 Ga. 320. Where a landlord builds an extension to a leased building cutting off light and air from the tenant's premises, during the extension of the lease a mandatory injunction will issue to compel him to remove as much of the extension as obstructs the windows of the tenant's premises. Stevens v. Salomon, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 159.

86. That an adjoining land owner built a structure extending over but not touching plaintiff's premises without knowledge of his rights and to bring about a determination of such rights at law, will not prevent plaintiff's right to restraint of continued maintenance. Norwalk Heating & Lighting Co. v. Vernam, 75 Conn. 662.

87. Where a tenant objected to obstruction of light and air by the landlord and gave notice of an intention to sue to prevent such obstruction, that the landlord completed the obstruction before the service of the injunction cannot avail him. Stevens v. Salomon, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 159.

88. It is immaterial in whom the legal title is. Fisk v. Ley [Conn.] 56 Atl. 559.

89. That an adjacent land owner was about to construct a fence across the end of plaintiff's lot will not entitle him to an injunction, the act merely amounting to a trespass. Giller v. West [Ind.] 69 N. E. 548.

90. A preliminary injunction to restrain a building over an alley will be denied, where complainant with knowledge of the intended structure signed a writing giving up all claim to the alley and waited several weeks while the building was being erected before repudiating the writing and filed the bill without disclosing the facts. Dobleman v. Gately, 64 N. J. Eq. 223.

91. That benefits to a lot owner who has an easement in a lawn and beach, from construction of a sea-wall on a line which will diminish the beach line is greater or less than his injury will not affect his right to have the beach and lawn remain unchanged except as to the influence it may have in determining his right to an injunction. Fisk v. Ley [Conn.] 56 Atl. 559.

92. Where one of the parties to a contract for maintenance of a private alley, proceeded to construct an obstruction extending over the alley between their lands, and on objection of the other examined the contract and concluded that they could proceed regardless of the objections, and the other party though not convinced of such right was not aware of his legal right to restrain the construction until some time afterward, and could not determine the injury which would result from it until after it was completed, he was not barred from restraining the maintenance of the obstruction either because of acquiescence or because the other party was misled by his acts. St. Louis Safe Deposit & Sav. Bank v. Kennett Estate [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 474

93. Giller v. West [Ind.] 69 N. E. 548.

94. Sufficiency of evidence to enjoin obstruction of an alley (Weed v. McKeg, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 218), or street (Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson [Ga.] 45 S. E. 725).

95. Where an owner of land and his purchasers in title have used a pass way across land of which it was formerly a part to a turnpike continuously for thirty years, injunction will issue to prevent interference with such use by the owner of the servient estate, though the land owner has permissive use of another way to the turnpike. Anderson v. Southworth, 25 Ky. L. R. 776, 76 S. W. 391.

96. Removal of an obstruction in a street at suit of abutting owner who is compelled thereby to go several blocks out of his way to reach his premises. Young v. Rothrock [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1105. Injunction will issue to prevent obstruction of a public street not only by suit of the county or municipality but by suit of an abutting owner whose lot is materially injured. Pence v. Bryant [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 275. Where there is substantial loss resulting to a land owner from encroachment on the public highway without statutory authority by an adjoining land owner he is entitled to relief by mandatory injunction. Ackerman v. True, 175 N. Y. 353.

97. Where a land owner divides his land into lots and dedicates part of it as a highway, a subsequent purchaser of a lot adjacent to the highway has such an interest in its unobstructed use that he may bring injunction. Bohne v. Blankenship, 25 Ky. L. R. 1645, 77 S. W. 919.

98. Guttery v. Glenn, 201 Ill. 275. Ob-

Obstruction or diversion of waters or watercourses,[2] or pollution of waters,[3] will be prevented—especially pending settlement of rights at law[4]—if the injury is sufficient and the right promptly asserted,[5] unless the legal title is disputed,[6] or there is a remedy at law.[7] struction of a highway found to be public and where the obstruction was not on the part adjoining plaintiff's land, his injury not being different from that of the general public. Robinson v. Brown, 182 Mass. 266. Mere inconvenience in going from a street in front of property to a particular part of the city will not constitute such special damage. Guttery v. Glenn, 201 Ill. 275.

99. Obstruction or occupation of a street cannot be enjoined by a private citizen unless injury to his private rights is probable which is irreparable. McWethy v. Aurora Elec. Light & Power Co., 202 Ill. 218.

1. Obstruction in highway by adjoining landowner. Ackerman v. True, 175 N. Y. 353.

2. Restraining waste of water from an artesian well as lessening the flow in well of adjoining owner. Huber v. Merkel [Wis.] 94 N. W. 354. Protection of rights of a riparian owner to enjoyment of the natural state of a stream. Webster v. Harris [Tenn.] 69 S. W. 782, 59 L. R. A. 324. Diversion of percolating waters injuring a stream and wasting its water. Stillwater Water Co. v. Farmer, 89 Minn. 58. Building of dam in a river at such a height as to throw water back on adjoining lands belonging to another owner. Brown v. Ontario Talc. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 273. An owner of land adjacent to a street, may be restrained from filling in low places on his land and building a levee, so as to cause the stream to overflow lands on the other side, though he is solvent. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2089, requiring the restraining of acts which are prejudicial to the applicant. Sullivan v. Dooley [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 82. Where a lower riparian owner secures a judgment at law determining that the abstraction of water from a stream from an upper owner was a nuisance, he is entitled, as of course, to an injunction restraining continuance of the nuisance where it works substantial and permanent injury to his property. Harper v. Mountain Water Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 297. Where a lower riparian owner files a petition for an interlocutory injunction against an upper owner who threatens to interfere with his rights by diverting part of the waters of a non-navigable stream flowing through his land, and it appears from the record that defendant a nonresident, admits the contemplated trespass and defends merely on the ground that no material damage will result to plaintiff, the injunction should not be denied since the diversion will constitute an injury to plaintiff's property rights, and the injunction will prevent a multiplicity of suits and will restrain acts which might in time become the foundation of an adverse claim. Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Cavenders Creek Gold Min. Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 267.

Sufficiency of evidence in action to restrain diversion of waters from stream as infringing water rights (Britt v. Reid, 42 Or. 76, 70 Pac. 1029); to restrain taking of water from wells to support a finding that plaintiff was not deprived of water which he had theretofore appropriated (Whitmore v. Utah Fuel Co. [Utah] 73 Pac. 764); to entitle a land owner to restrain discharge of water used in a placer mine into an artificial creek flowing through plaintiff's farm resulting in damage by soaking the soil and deposit of debris on the land (McCann v. Wallace, 117 Fed. 936); to show that the breaking of head gates in an irrigation canal by persons not stockholders or water right owners, or in contractual relation with the company, and possessing no right to the canal or its waters, in order to divert the property to their own use, as resulting in irreparable injury, entitling the company to injunction (Hayois v. Salt River Valley Canal Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 944).

3. Pollution of a stream used for hospital purposes by the sewer of an improvement company will be restrained where the hospital was a lower riparian owner and the stream was not navigable. West Arlington Imp. Co. v. Mount Hope Retreat [Md.] 54 Atl. 982. Where a company holding a water privilege on a stream contracted to supply water for a village to the extent of about one-fourth of one per cent of the supply of the stream for a year, lower riparian owners operating dams and water powers may restrain such unlawful diversion, though trifling in injury to them. Penrhyn Slate Co. v. Granville Electric Light & Power Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 92.

4. Where purely legal questions are concerned in a pending suit regarding the right to discharge water over land, injunction will lie to restrain the discharge of water sufficient to injure the premises until such questions are determined at law. Colonial Woolen Co. v. Trenton Water Power Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 993.

5. Diversion of canal waters will not be prevented after great delay where the injury was small if any and the improvement was beneficial to the canal. Stewart Wire Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 203 Pa. 479. Construction of a dam in a stream will not be restrained where plaintiff's needs for water were sufficiently supplied and there was no apparent probability that a recurrence of past injury would result. Union Light & Power Co. v. Lichty, 42 Or. 563, 71 Pac. 1044. A bill to restrain appropriation of the waters of a stream without compensation to riparian owners will be dismissed where it is not shown that such appropriation will be made or that it will be done without compensation and where a resolution of the directors shows that the company intends to proceed according to law. Hey v. Springfield Water Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 265.

6. A federal court cannot enjoin a boom company from obstructing a navigable stream by a log boom, and from continuing to occupy the boom site which plaintiff claims as appurtenant to his riparian lands, where defendant denies his title and that the site is an appurtenance and claims ownership through purchase of the bed of the stream from the state as public lands, and the right to maintain the boom, under a statutory

Nuisances will be abated where private property rights are invaded,[8] in the court's discretion,[9] unless the right is uncertain and greater injury would result from abatement than from the nuisance.[10] Similar acts by other persons cannot be shown either by way of proof or justification.[11] Injunction will not lie in Kansas to abate a nuisance in the sale of liquors,[12] but otherwise in Maine.[13]

Trespass,[14] or waste,[15] will not call for relief unless the legal remedy is in-franchise from the state. Lownsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co., 117 Fed. 983.

7. The blocking up of a natural depression into which water naturally drains, will not be restrained though the depression is on plaintiff's land there being a remedy at law for damages or a statutory remedy providing for drainage. Porter v. Armstrong, 132 N. C. 66.

8. Marrs v. Fiddler, 24 Ky. L. R. 722, 69 S. W. 953; Finkelstein v. Huner, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 424. As against a charitable institution even though it is not liable to a suit at law. Deaconess Home & Hospital v. Bontjes, 104 Ill. App. 484. Operation of a railroad across a public street amounting to a nuisance as to a property owner, built without legislative or municipal consent. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Bull, 116 Ga. 776. Where plaintiffs and defendants own adjoining lots and are entitled to the use in common of alleys between houses on the lots, plaintiffs may restrain a nuisance maintained by defendants in such alleys. Reese v. Wright [Md.] 56 Atl. 976. That the existence of a nuisance had been established at law and damages recovered from defendants, that they had been notified thereafter to abate the nuisance, but had refused, and that unless injunction issued for its abatement plaintiffs would be liable to a multiplicity of suits and would be deprived of the use and enjoyment of their property to their irreparable injury which could not be measured at law is sufficient ground for abatement. Id.

9. Mandatory injunction for removal and abatement of a nuisance is largely in discretion of the court. Shroyer v. Campbell [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 193.

10. Erection of a building by an owner on his own property will not be restrained unless it is clear that the business to be carried on will be a nuisance and cannot be conducted so as not to amount to a nuisance. Flood v. Consumers Co., 105 Ill. App. 559. A preliminary injunction will not issue to prevent the use by defendant of certain appliances alleged to be nuisances, where the result would be to stop the operation of iron mines in which large amounts of money have been invested, where the matter of right is uncertain and the injury resulting to defendant from the injunction would be far greater than that to plaintiff from the continuance of the work. Amelia Mill. Co. v. Tennessee C., I. & R. Co., 123 Fed. 811.

11. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Crothersville, 159 Ind. 330.

12. Gen. St. 1901, § 2463, providing for punishment of common nuisances under the prohibitory law was repealed by Gen. St. 1901, § 2493, so that an injunction will not lie. State v. Estep, 66 Kan. 416, 71 Pac. 857.

13. Under Pub. Laws 1891, c. 98, authorizing abatement of a liquor nuisance by injunction, a judgment at law need not first be obtained. Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 559.

14. Constitutionality of Rev. St. § 1469 conferring jurisdiction in chancery to restrain mere trespass on timber lands without color of right or authority. McMillan v. Wiley [Fla.] 33 So. 993.

Remedy at law adequate: To restrain one solvent from trespass on personal property or from mere oral assertion of title to it. Ganow v. Denney [Neb.] 94 N. W. 959. Where the bill does not show threatened irreparable injury, insolvency of defendants or other equitable grounds. Rogers v. Brand [Ga.] 45 S. E. 305. Sinking a mining shaft on forty acres of land used to manufacture brick and the throwing of dirt on the surface is not a trespass wasting the estate or amounting to irreparable injury. King v. Mullins, 27 Mont. 364, 71 Pac. 155. Trespass on realty will not be restrained where it appears that the locus in quo was a public highway acquired by prescription and the object of the suit was to determine whether it existed over the property. Tomasini v. Taylor, 42 Or. 576, 72 Pac. 324. Wrongful use of a private alley will not be restricted on the ground that if continued, defendant will acquire an easement, since the threatened injury is remote and contingent, and plaintiff has a remedy by serving statutory notice to prevent the injury; Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 5746, 5747, giving the right by service of notice to interrupt adverse possession. Hart v. Hildebrandt, 30 Ind. App. 415. Entry by a mining prospector on the property of another which is held under application for a patent as a mining claim and the beginning of mining operations will not require issuance of an injunction to restrict the trespass where the prospector is not shown to be insolvent and his operations do not materially injure the property. Harley v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 27 Mont. 388, 71 Pac. 407. Where plaintiff claimed title to land used by railroad company as a gravel pit under adverse possession, and the company proceeded to take possession so as to deprive him thereof, but no fence had been built upon the land or other trespass except acts of a surveyor in driving stakes, there was an adequate remedy at law for injury resulting from any threatened trespass. Wabash R. Co. v. Engleman, 160 Ind. 329. That defendant at various times opened plaintiff's premises and cut hay and grain and pastured cattle and horses thereon, under a claim of right, and threatened to continue such conduct, having resulted and being calculated to result in the destruction of crops and shrubbery, is not ground for injunction against further trespasses since it did not show irreparable injury to the estate. Moore v. Halliday [Or.] 72 Pac. 801.

Remedy at law inadequate: One without authority will be restrained from crossing an irrigation canal with a lateral to carry water to his land from another canal. Castle Rock Irr. C. & W. P. Co. v. Jurisch [Neb.] 93 N. W. 690. Threatened destruction of adequate, or legal rights should be protected pending settlement at law.[16] Insolvency of a trespasser will not alone warrant relief.[17] Continued or threatened repeated trespasses can generally be prevented only by injunction.[18] Complainant's title must be shown.[19] One out of possession cannot bring injunction for trespass to realty.[20] That a lot owner having an easement in a beach and lawn was the timber on land which has been conveyed to another with the exception of the timber. Sears v. Ackerman, 138 Cal. 583, 72 Pac. 171. A trespasser will be enjoined though solvent, where he enters forcibly on a claim of right, digs up the soil and builds a brick wall, thereby excluding the owner from possession. Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828. Where lands overflowed by the tide can be used only for the shooting of game, trespass day by day by hunters thereon will be restrained. Simpson v. Moorhead [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 887. To restrain the owner of an undivided half interest in timber lands from cutting the timber without the consent of his co-owner because of the danger of irreparable injury. Cotten v. Christen, 110 La. 444. The owner of a license for removal of ore from land for a certain period, which was revocable only for violation of its terms, may have an injunction against the trespasser since he has no remedy at law by an action for damages [Rev. St. 1899, § 3649]. Lytle v. James, 98 Mo. App. 337. Where an entry upon land containing a mine owned by complainants in possession was threatened by one claiming under a lease and complainants allege that the lease was forfeited and that irreparable injury would result from the threatened acts. Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 468. Where land was sold and bonds taken for the purchase secured by mortgage on the land and the grantee and his wife conveyed it to their daughter and afterward all three sold the timber thereon to a lumber company and pending action at law on the bonds, a large amount remaining unpaid, the timber, the principal value of the land, was being removed, an injunction will issue to restrain its removal, defendants being insolvent. Terry v. Robbins, 122 Fed. 725.

15. Wiggins v. Middleton, 117 Ga. 162. A mortgagee may restrain removal from a brewery of a refrigerating plant which will prevent its operation and damage the business. Schmaltz v. York Mfg. Co., 204 Pa. 1, 59 L. R. A. 907. Where defendant mortgaged a large tract of timber land and the timber on a smaller tract to plaintiff, and the principal value of the latter tract was the timber, and afterward defendant placed valuable improvements on the land to manufacture timber into lumber and commenced active operation, plaintiff could restrain further operation though ten years would be necessary to remove all the timber and not more than one-tenth of it would be removed when the debt had matured. Beaver F. & L. Co. v. Eccles [Or.] 73 Pac. 201.

16. Trespass. Entry upon land under a void lease and the drilling of oil wells and taking of oil therefrom and threats to continue in such operations, will warrant an injunction restraining further operations until the determination of all the matters at issue between the parties though plaintiff may have a remedy at law for the trespass. Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 206.

Waste: Where it appears in an action to determine conflicting claims to public land that the claims of both parties to the timber on the land were made in good faith and on colorable ground, and that one of the parties proposed to remove the timber, the removal may be restrained until a patent is issued by the United States, though because of the absence of such patent, the court is without jurisdiction to determine the adverse claims. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 124 Fed. 819. Where the title of land is in dispute and irreparable injury is threatened to the substance of the estate, an injunction will issue to prevent trespass and preserve the property pending settlement of the title at law though no action for that purpose has been brought if plaintiff intends to bring one immediately. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 59 L. R. A. 556. To prevent injury to growing crops where it appears that continuance of the injury during suit will produce great waste and that the damages can not be justly estimated [Rev. St. § 4288]. Wilson v. Eagleson [Idaho] 71 Pac. 613.

17. Moore v. Halliday [Or.] 72 Pac. 801; Pittsburg, S. & W. R. Co. v. Fiske [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 760.

18. Various petty trespasses on another's property. Fonda, J. & G. R. Co. v. Olmstead, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 127. Against a trespasser though he is solvent where he has destroyed a fence and threatens to destroy it as often as it may be replaced. Lynch v. Eagan [Neb.] 93 N. W. 775. Continuous trespasses by the cutting of timber and further threatened trespasses greatly reducing the value of land [Rev. St. 1899, § 3649]. Palmer v. Crisle, 92 Mo. App. 510. Where trespass has already been committed and it appears to be defendant's purpose to repeat the acts which can not be justly compensated by damages, or where such damage is merely nominal and if defendant is insolvent an additional reason for the injunction exists. Alden Coal Co. v. Challis, 103 Ill. App. 52.

19. Tomasini v. Taylor, 42 Or. 576, 72 Pac. 324. Repeated trespasses will be restrained where plaintiff has established his legal title to the premises. Thomas v. Robinson [Iowa] 92 N. W. 70. It will not lie where defendants are in possession under color of title and plaintiff's right to possession is disputed (Munyos v. Filmore [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 257), nor where the rights are founded on unsettled questions of law and fact and the allegations of irreparable damage in the bill are fully negatived (Merchants' Coal Co. v. Billmeyer [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 121). Cutting of timber on land will not be restrained where the abstract of title attached to the petition fails to show that plaintiff has a perfect paper title, capable of record. Wiggins v. Middleton, 117 Ga. 162. A grantor of land who brought an equitable suit to set aside a deed for fraud and failed, had no right to an injunction against the grantees to prevent trespassing on the property, since the question of title had been settled in the former suit. Tifel v. Jenkins, 95 Md. 665.

20. Gildersleeve v. Overstolz, 97 Mo. App.

only one interested who was dissatisfied with the change in the beach resulting from construction of a sea-wall will not prevent his right to restrain such construction.[21] The right to restrain trespass depending on statute must be strictly construed.[22]

Casting of a cloud on title causing danger of a multiplicity of suits will be enjoined.[23]

Privacy and comfort at home will be protected,[24] but one suspected of a crime cannot enjoin exhibition of his photograph by the police on the ground that his right of privacy is invaded.[25]

Liens or securities for debts will be protected where the debts are not due and there is no legal remedy,[26] but payment of money to other than the alleged creditor will not be prevented where his contract rights are not shown,[27] or no benefit would result from the writ.[28]

Protection of business or franchise in general.—The acts of injury threatened pending an action must be present and continuing or consist in threats of such conduct.[29] Infringement of licensed rights will be prevented.[30] Competing deal-

303. Sufficiency of evidence in suit for injunction to restrain trespass to show that plaintiff was in possession at time of the alleged trespass. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248.

21. Fisk v. Ley [Conn.] 56 Atl. 559.

22. Right to restrain trespass on realty given by Rev. Sts. 1892, § 1469, does not accrue to one claiming to own only turpentine in the trees on land with the privilege of collecting it (McDonald v. Padgett [Fla.] 35 So. 336); nor to an owner of timber on land; he is not an owner of timber lands within the meaning of that statute giving the right to an injunction to restrain the cutting of trees or removing of logs from timber lands, though the timber constitutes the chief value of land on which it stands (Doke v. Peek [Fla.] 34 So. 896).

23. Where it appears that one who had obtained leases on oil lands under a representation that former leases granted by the owners had been forfeited, and was attempting to obtain more of such leases, he was thereby casting a cloud on the title of leases formerly given so as to cause the owner thereof a multiplicity of suits, the grantors of the different leases being separate owners. Allen v. New Domain Oil & Gas Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2169, 73 S. W. 747.

24. Acts offensive to adjoining dwellers and destructive of their comfort will be restrained. Froelicher v. Oswald Iron Works [La.] 35 So. 821. Noise at Sunday ball games will be enjoined at the suit of individuals in the neighborhood, where it disturbs their rest and quiet. Gilbough v. West Side Amusement Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 27. See, also, supra, this section, "Nuisance."

25. Owen v. Partridge, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 415.

26. Where land had been sold on the crop payment plan and the vendor alleges default in turning over a share of the crops and in payment of taxes and that a certain sum is due him, he may restrain the occupant from seeding the premises and from interfering with his occupation thereof. Dickson v. Dows, 11 N. D. 404.

Absence of legal remedy: A landlord may restrain removal of goods by a tenant to the prejudice of his lien for rent, though the tenant was not insolvent, where he had no remedy at law because the rent was not due. Wallin v. Murphy, 117 Iowa, 640. Where a vendor had sold land on the crop payment plan a preliminary injunction will not issue to restrain the purchaser from seeding the premises and interfering with the occupation of the purchaser on a mere allegation of default in turning over a share of the crops and in payment of taxes. Dickson v. Dows, 11 N. D. 404. That rent was not due from his tenant, but that the tenant was insolvent and was removing crops and stock from the premises and mortgaging such products to others, so that sufficient property would not be left to satisfy the rent when due, is sufficient for an injunction restraining the tenant from selling or disposing of crops subject to the landlord's lien. Gray v. Bremer [Iowa] 97 N. W. 991.

27. No restraining order will be issued in a suit to reform a contract for the sale of land to prevent payment of any part of the price by the purchaser to the grantor's agent and to prevent the latter from receiving it, where before the trial the agency had ceased and the entire contract was changed to require payment to the grantor. Daugherty v. Curtis [Iowa] 97 N. W. 67.

28. Where a creditor residing in one state assigned his claim against his debtor in the same state to one in another state who attached a credit due the debtor there exempt from execution under the laws of the former state, injunction will not issue to restrain the creditor from receiving any of the money collected since its effect would be to leave the money in the hands of the assignee so that the debtor would receive no benefit therefrom. Margarum v. Moon, 63 N. J. Eq. 586.

29. An injunction will not be granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 604, authorizing one pendente lite to restrain the violation of rights during the pendency of an action, where plaintiff's affidavits merely showed attempts within three months previous by defendant to interfere and defendant's uncontradicted affidavit showed that a month thereafter the parties agreed not to interfere with each other's business. Sanford Dairy Co. v. Sanford, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 641.

ers will not be prevented from watching the business places of competitors.[31] A contract in restraint of trade will be restrained where it affects business rights of third persons.[32] Secrecy of stock or market quotations by a board of trade will not be protected where it does not appear that they were genuine or that the public had not discovered them,[33] or where they are being furnished from another source,[34] but use of genuine exchange quotations will be protected as against unfair use by patrons or others.[35] Complainant must move promptly,[36] and show sufficient injury.[37]

Infringement of patents,[38] and use of trade marks, names,[39] and devices,[40] by unauthorized persons, will be restrained. An adequate remedy at law for in-

31. Members of a wholesale druggist's association will not be prevented by injunction from watching the business place of wholesale dealers to determine what druggists furnished them with articles violating their contract with manufacturers. Park v. National Wholesale Druggists' Ass'n, 175 N. Y. 1.

32. An illegal agreement between a plumbers' association and dealers and manufacturers, the latter not to sell to others than members of the association, the former to refuse to buy from any dealer found selling to a non-member will be dissolved by injunction and its enforcement restrained as against one who was unable to complete his work because of its operation. Walsh v. Association of Master Plumbers' Ass'n, 97 Mo. App. 280.

33. Surreptitious procurement of continuous quotations. Board of Trade v. Consolidated Stock Exch., 121 Fed. 433. A preliminary injunction will not issue to restrain the use of board of trade quotations, where defendants deny such use and show that they obtained the same quotations from another source and issues can repeatedly be made by complainant so as to procure a speedy final hearing. Board of Trade v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319. Where it appeared that nearly all the transactions carried on at the pits of a board of trade were gambling transactions which the parties intended to settle by payment of differences in the subsequent price of the articles dealt in before maturity of the options, dissemination of quotations so obtained will not be restrained at suit of the board of trade since they were of no legitimate value as tending to promote the business of the county. Board of Trade v. Donovan Commission Co., 121 Fed. 1012. The Board of Trade of Chicago has no right to an injunction to protect its quotations of price, where it appears that about 95% of the contracts for sales made thereunder are for future delivery and are settled immediately after the transaction by payment of differences between the members under its rules and with its knowledge and consent. Board of Trade v. Kinsey, 125 Fed. 72; Christie Grain & Stock Co. v. Board of Trade [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 161.

34. A preliminary injunction will not issue on the ground that defendant receives quotations from an open board of trade, which are practically identical with those of complainant board of trade. Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill. v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319.

35. Use of exchange quotations by one without complying with reasonable regulations established by a board of trade as a condition of receipt and use by others may be restrained at suit of the board of trade. Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 116 Fed. 944.

36. A preliminary injunction against unfair competition will not be allowed on conflicting evidence where complainant knew of the acts of defendant for over a year before suit, during which time they were in active competition. C. O. Burns Co. v. W. F. Burns Co., 118 Fed. 944. Where it appears that plaintiff's business had been destroyed by certain combination, but he had long delayed in asserting his right, an injunction will not lie to restrain one having the right to use water of a certain canal, from diverting such water, where it appears that he made improvements very greatly increasing the capacity of the canal, but plaintiff will be left to his remedy at law. Stewart Wire Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 203 Pa. 479.

37. Stewart Wire Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 203 Pa. 479. A general allegation that defendant is interfering with the cultivation of a farm on which plaintiff resides, will not show such irreparable damage as will warrant an injunction. Merriner v. Merriner [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 118.

38. Discretion of court as to preliminary injunction against infringement of patent granted near close of lease for manufacture by patentee. Adam v. Folger [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 260. That complainant is a member of an unlawful trust combination will not give third person the right to infringe his patent nor prevent him from restraining such infringement. General Elec. Co. v. Wise, 119 Fed. 922. An employe who, as patentee, assigned a patent to his employer, may be enjoined also by a decree against his employer for infringement no damages being assessed against him. Regent Mfg. Co. v. Penn. E. & M. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 80. An injunction will issue at the suit of an exclusive licensee for sale of patented articles within a certain territory to restrain a third person from conspiring with the licensor with knowledge of the license to violate its rights by selling such articles within the territory. N. Y. Phonograph Co. v. Jones, 123 Fed. 197.

39. Sufficiency of evidence for temporary injunction against infringement of trade mark. General Elec. Co. v. Re-New Lamp Co., 121 Fed. 164. An intention to continue infringement must appear, else an action for damages is sufficient. Globe-Wernicke Co. v. Brown [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 90. Imitation of trade names, emblems and colors in design long applied to products of a certain manufacturer will be restrained whether they are trade marks or not. Id. A merchant who fills customers' orders with a different and inferior article in place of an article adver-

fringement will not always prevent injunction.[41] The patent must be adjudicated or sufficient interest shown otherwise.[42] Neither nonuse nor misuse of a patent will deprive the owner of right to enjoin infringement.[43] The right to exclusive use of a trade label or package must be clear.[44] Notice of claims to a patent sent in bad faith to alleged infringers will be restrained where the claimant does not intend to assert his rights.[45]

Disclosure of trade secrets,[46] by persons under contract to secrecy,[47] or in confidential relations,[48] or employes,[49] will be prevented if the information is of a character not easily obtainable,[50] and resulted from efforts of complainant.[51] Distised by the manufacturer and well known by its trade name may be restrained at suit of the manufacturer because of unfair trade. N. K. Fairbanks Co. v. Dunn, 126 Fed. 227. Where a person doing business under a certain name sold it and covenanted not to engage in that business for a certain time within a certain territory, but afterward made arrangements to do so, and when notified by the purchaser, desisted saying that he did not intend to begin business himself, but allowed his wife and her brother to take up the property and conduct the business in the same name in which it was formerly conducted, injunction will issue to restrain him from violating the covenant even though the wife declares that the name used was hers and that she had a right to use it. Fleckenstein v. Fleckenstein [N. J. Eq.] 53 Atl. 1043.

40. It need not be shown by specific proof that the purchasers have been actually deceived, where the imitation was established. Manitowoc Malting Co. v. Milwaukee Malting Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 389. An injunction may be granted against the use of a label where defendant delivers goods previously sold bearing the label after being informed of the counterfeit [Code, § 5050]. Beebe v. Tolerton, 117 Iowa, 593.

41. A permanent injunction against infringement of a patent will not be refused because defendant is able to respond in damages since the owner has a lawful right to exclusive use. General Elec. Co. v. Wise, 119 Fed. 922.

42. Sufficiency of interest to entitle the assignee of an unadjudicated patent to a preliminary injunction against infringement by the patentee. Continental Wire Fence Co. v. Pendergast, 126 Fed. 381. Substantial doubt as to validity of an unadjudicated patent and ability of defendant to respond in damages will prevent a preliminary injunction against infringement. Bradley v. Eccles, 120 Fed. 947. An injunction against infringement of a patent will not be allowed before final hearing, where defendant sets up a license and the evidence is contradictory as to the validity of the license. Armat Moving Picture Co. v. Edison Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 939. A preliminary injunction will not be granted against the infringement of a patent unadjudicated without proof of public acquiescence, where there appears a question as to the genuineness of the patent. Newhall v. McCabe Hanger Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 919.

43. Fuller v. Berger [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 274.

44. The denial of a temporary injunction pendente lite is not an abuse of discretion in a suit to restrain imitation of trade labels and packages, where the right to exclusive use is not clearly shown and the charges of bad faith and misleading of purchasers are denied. Schenker v. Awerbach, 85 N. Y. Supp. 129.

45. While the owner of a patent is entitled to notify infringers of his claim and to threaten them with litigation if they disregard such claim and to notify the customers of such persons in good faith that his claims are valid and to attempt to protect them from invasion, he will be restrained from issuing such notice in bad faith without intending to bring the threatened suits and merely to injure the business of the other party, such being a fraudulent invasion of property rights. Adriance v. Nat. Harrow Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 827.

46. Definition of trade secret as entitling one to injunction against its revelation by an employe. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468.

47. One under an express contract or contract implied from confidential relations not to disclose a trade secret, may be restrained from such disclosure. Stone v. Goss [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 736.

48. Outside of patent rights, one who discovers a medical preparation has a property right therein so that he may keep it a secret and may restrain those who gain possession of his secret through confidential relations with him from divulging it so as to make use of it to his injury. Stewart v. Hook [Ga.] 45 S. E. 369.

49. The use of patterns belonging to one manufacturer, will be restrained where they were secretly taken by an employee of the former in charge and carried to the latter while in his employ, if brought in time, but if no further use of the patterns is intended at time of suit the injunction will be useless. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468.

50. Though there is a certain individuality in the construction of patterns and casts in a tube mill, and some care is taken to preserve the knowledge of their construction from the public, if they are such as are in general use in such mills so that artisans in that line have full knowledge of the character of the machinery and patterns used, and can readily and approximately reproduce them, they are not trade secrets, the use of which by other than the originators will be restrained. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468.

51. One under a contract of employment with another will not be restrained from entering employment of a third person because of the danger to his first employer of divulgence of valuable trade secrets, where the employe shows that before entering the closure necessarily made to the court will not prevent complainants from restraining disclosure by others.[52] Persons inducing others to disclose such secrets will be prevented from using the information.[53]

Boycotts,[54] strikes and intimidation of employes,[55] resulting in damage to property or business, or violation of labor contracts,[56] will be restrained, especially where interstate traffic is prevented by such acts,[57] unless the employer has a sufficient remedy at law.[58] Mere counselling or ordering a strike,[59] or mere picketing first employment, he had learned the secrets in his possession and that the employes in such first employment were as familiar with such secrets as he, which statements his first employer did not disprove. Chain Belt Co. v. Von Spreckelsen [Wis.] 94 N. W. 78. Where an employer who has discovered a trade secret and is using it secretly, reveals it to an employe so that the latter may be better able to discharge his duties, such employe will not be entitled to sell the secret in the market nor to sell his services with the added value of the secret, but if the employe himself discovered the secret or brought his knowledge to his employer, the latter can claim only the product of the skill, industry and intelligence of the workman and not the property in the idea so as to restrain its revelation to another by the employe. Nat. Tube Co. v. Eastern Tube Co., 23 Ohio Circ. R. 468.

52. Stone v. Goss [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 736.

53. Persons who induce another under an express or implied contract not to disclose a trade secret, to disclose such secret knowing that it constitutes a violation of confidence, will be restrained from using such information, though they might have attained the same result by their own efforts. Stone v. Goss [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 736.

54. Where it amounts to an unlawful conspiracy. Gray v. Bldg. Trades Council [Minn.] 97 N. W. 663. Interference with trade or customers within a store, or obstruction of access to it by any physical means or threats, violence or intimidation, to prevent entry of intending customers on the part of sympathizers with labor unions, will be restrained by injunction. Foster v. Retail Clerks' I. P. Ass'n, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 48.

55. An injunction will issue to restrain workmen engaged in a strike from picketing establishments of their employer and gathering in the vicinity thereof, and calling his employes "scabs" and other bad names and threatening them with personal violence. Beaton v. Tarrant, 102 Ill. App. 124. Where third persons interfere with others willing to enter the employment of a manufacturer and coerce them into refraining, he may have an injunction to restrain their interference, it being an invasion of the right of employers that labor should flow freely to them. Jersey City Print. Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759. The action of pickets of a labor organization engaged in a strike in preventing by violent means other persons from entering the employ of their employer invades both his property rights and the personal rights of the workmen so that no adequate remedy at law will lie, and injunction will issue to prevent such action. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102. Where it appeared from affidavits in a suit to restrain strikers from intimidating employes that defendants and others assembled about complainant's factory and used vile language to such employes, threatened them and in some cases personally assaulted them, and defendants denied merely the acts of violence failing to deny that they were present when such acts were committed, a preliminary injunction will issue and will be continued until the case is heard on its merits. Gulf Bag Co. v. Suttner, 124 Fed. 467.

56. Where employes are induced by threats or persuasions to break their contract of service, the employer may restrain third persons from so interfering with his business. Jersey City Print. Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759. An injunction will lie to restrain continuance of acts by a labor organization whereby persons contracting with plaintiff were maliciously induced to violate such contracts and a strike of plaintiff's workmen was caused merely because he refused to recognize the union or the walking delegate and that acts of the same sort were threatened in the future. Beattie v. Callanan, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 7.

57. Interference with the transportation of property as a subject of interstate commerce by employes who have quit their employment by threats or intimidation against other employes or persons contemplating employment with their former employer will be restrained by the federal court. Knudsen v. Benn, 123 Fed. 636. A bill by a railroad company against labor union officers alleging malicious conspiracy on the part of the latter to interfere with the carriage of the mails by the former and to restrain interstate commerce by inducing and compelling the employes operating trains to strike in violation of their contracts, though without grievances and satisfied with their wages and work and to prevent the interchange of traffic with connecting carriers in order to compel complainant to recognize the labor unions and refuse to employ non-union men, is sufficient to authorize a temporary restraining order by a federal court preventing the ordering or causing of such strike or the interference with interstate traffic until hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction. Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 563.

58. Injunction will not lie in strike or boycott cases unless a substantial pecuniary loss as to property or business results to the complainant for which there is no adequate remedy at law or unless he shows that he has been deprived of his right to make a living. Atkins v. Fletcher [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1074.

59. The officers or committees of a labor organization cannot be restrained from counselling or ordering a strike by the members in exercise of the authority given them by laws sanctioned by a majority of the members. Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 563.

by strikers, is insufficient.[60] Temporary injunction will not issue if the danger of injury is not immediate.[61] All persons engaged in the unlawful acts may be affected by the writ.[62] A conspiracy by several persons to deprive another of the right to work because he does not join a particular labor union, by means of threats and strikes, will be restrained.[63]

(§ 2) J. Publications.—Publication of a libel,[64] or of constitutional amendments by the secretary of state to be voted upon,[65] or selection of a newspaper to publish the result of a local option election,[66] will not be restrained.

(§ 2) K. Crimes.—Injunction will not lie to suppress crime[67] in aid of criminal courts, unless public civil rights or public property is in danger,[68] or at suit of a

60. Proprietors of a store cannot restrain sympathizers with labor unions from picketing the store and circulating in the vicinity cards asking union men to keep away from the store and endeavoring to deprive the store of its patrons by mere persuasions and peaceable means. Foster v. Retail Clerks' I. P. Ass'n, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 48. Though injunction will lie to prevent the picketing of strikers to intimidate others seeking employment, if such means are used merely to obtain information or to persuade others by peaceable means from seeking employment and no existing contract is sought to be broken, injunction will not lie. Fletcher v. International Ass'n of Machinists [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1077. While a strike is in progress, a labor organization may properly picket the works of an employer if no violence, coercion or intimidation is used to prevent others from entering or remaining in his service, but where such conditions exist, that the acts are liable to punishment under the criminal laws will not prevent an injunction necessary to protect the employer's property and business from civil injury. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102.

61. Sufficiency of conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce or to prevent carrying of mails by complainant in violation of the federal laws or to show that defendants as officers of a labor union in ordering a strike of complainant's employes acted without due authority from the latter or beyond lawful purposes to enforce peaceable demands, as to wages and rules of work, so as to authorize a preliminary injunction. Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 563. Where the only showing of defendants on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue against picketing and illegal interference with plaintiff's employes by strikers and labor unions pending a suit for permanent relief, was a large number of affidavits on printed blank forms, the balance being filled with the names of particular defendants merely denying the allegations of the bill as that a strike was in progress or that there was any unlawful interference with complainant's business it did not appear that defendants would suffer by the granting of the injunction until final hearing. George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Blowers' Ass'n, 64 N. J. Eq. 640.

62. That a number of persons outside a labor organization co-operated in the picketing of a store and in dissuading the public from patronage of the same will not make their acts illegal. Foster v. Retail Clerks' I. P. Ass'n, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 48. Persons who were not in complainant's employ and are not shown to have aided or counseled unlawful acts by pickets of a labor organization during a strike will not be included in a decree of injunction against unlawful acts of the pickets, but while the suit as to them will be dismissed they will be held chargeable with knowledge of the injunction, and will be bound by its terms; and all members of a labor organization who participate in the establishment and maintenance of a picket around the work of a former employer which results in acts of violence and abusiveness toward his employes, thereby intimidating them from continuing in his employment, are chargeable with the results of the violence as well as those who personally participate therein, especially where officers and members of the organization know that such unlawful acts are committed and take no steps to punish the offenders or to suppress the violence, and such persons will be included in an injunction against the unlawful acts. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102.

63. Erdman v. Mitchell [Pa.] 56 Atl. 327.

64. The remedy at law is adequate. Owen v. Partridge, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 415.

65. The voting is a legislative act. People v. Mills, 30 Colo. 262, 70 Pac. 322.

66. It is a ministerial act. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766.

67. The Minnesota anti-trust law contains no provision for restraining or enjoining violation and a court of equity has no jurisdiction without statutory authority to enjoin an act constituting a criminal offense [Laws 1899, p. 487, c. 359]. Minn. v. Northern Securities Co., 123 Fed. 692.

68. Ga. R. & B. Co. v. Atlanta [Ga.] 45 S. E. 256. A law giving the supreme court jurisdiction to restrain a liquor nuisance on proper petition by injunction is constitutional. Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 559. The statutory abatement of a blind tiger as a public nuisance by injunction will lie though other complete adequate remedies exist [Act Dec. 19, 1899]. Legg v. Anderson, 116 Ga. 401. A public nuisance will not be restrained at the suit of a state attorney on the ground that the criminal laws as administered, will not afford a remedy, unless it is shown that injury results to public civil rights or public property. People v. Condon, 102 Ill. App. 449. A statute making it the duty of judges of courts, to suppress prize fights, will authorize a court of equity at suit of the commonwealth to restrain one from allowing a prize fight to be held on his premises as a public nuisance, though it cannot proceed against the parties or their associates because of sufficient regulations under the criminal laws. Com. v. McGovern, business competitor.[69] One who seeks to avail himself of a crime to deprive another of his property will be restrained, whether he or another committed the crime.[70] The presence of criminal laws providing punishment and abatement of a nuisance will not prevent the legislature from authorizing the state to proceed by injunction.[71] Violation of liquor laws may be restrained in Maine.[72]

§ 3. Suits or actions for injunction. Jurisdiction and courts.[73]—Generally, execution of a judgment can be restrained only in the court that rendered the judgment,[74] though under certain conditions the rule is relaxed.[75] A court which has rendered a default judgment on its law side may not only enjoin an action on the judgment on its equity side, but may decree vacation of the judgment allowing an answer to be filed, and order the action to proceed to trial.[76] Joint wrongdoers residing in different counties, who threaten to commit trespass and are insolvent, may be restrained in one petition brought in the county of the residence of one of them.[77]

Injury to property may be restrained in the jurisdiction where the property is situate.[78] A court of general jurisdiction at the place of domicile of the corpora-

25 Ky. L. R. 411, 75 S. W. 261. A federal court may extend to and against successors of the attorney general of a state, properly substituted provisions of an order restraining enforcement of an unconstitutional statute of the state fixing railroad fares by a board of which such an officer is a member, and is not prevented on the ground that such injunction seeks to restrain the enforcement of the state criminal laws. Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 47 Law. Ed. 584.

69. A mere desire to restrain competition of a business rival will not entitle a barber to an injunction against another barber to keep him from keeping his shop open on Sunday though a criminal law is violated thereby [Pen. Code, art. 196]. York v. Yzaguairre [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 563.

70. Bank of Montreal v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373; Alton Grain Co. v. Norton, 105 Ill. App. 385.

71. Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 559.

72. An injunction against a liquor nuisance under P. L. 1891, c. 98, is merely to prevent further continuance of an existing continuous nuisance. Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 559.

73. Conflict of laws: Where a citizen of Pennsylvania furnished a refrigerating plant to a New York brewery under an agreement that title was to remain in the seller until payment, but the agreement was not recorded in New York as required by its laws, and the plant was attached as a fixture, and afterward the brewery was mortgaged, the mortgage being assigned to a citizen of Pennsylvania, the court of the latter state had jurisdiction at suit of the assignee to restrain the seller from taking away the plant. Schmaltz v. York Mfg. Co., 204 Pa. 1, 59 L. R. A. 907.

74. A county court in one county cannot restrain execution of the judgment of the county court of another county. Aultman v. Higbee [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 955. An injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment or final order of a court will not be granted in an action, brought in another court from that which rendered the judgment, though defendant in the injunction appears and pleads. Hampton v. Mays [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 1115.

75. Federal courts may restrain plaintiff holding an unconscionable judgment rendered by a state court from using it to extort money from the judgment defendant without violating Rev. St. U. S. § 720. National Surety Co. v. State Bank [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 593. Where proceedings in the federal district court of one state on which execution was founded were void, the circuit court for the district of another state may restrain the marshal of its district from enforcing judgment against property of the debtor located therein. Kirk v. U. S., 124 Fed. 324.

State courts: The superior court of Washington has jurisdiction of an injunction suit to restrain execution sale for invalidity of a judgment rendered in another superior court. Noerdlinger v. Huff, 31 Wash. 360, 72 Pac. 73. A district court of one county in Colorado has jurisdiction to restrain the sheriff of another county from executing a deed to property within the county sold under special execution on a judgment of the district court of another county. Ohio Colo. Min. & Mill. Co. v. Wiley [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 1001. A justice court cannot issue a writ of injunction against a judgment even though the statute requires writs for such purpose to be made returnable to and triable by the court rendering the judgment. Foust v. Warren [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 404. A suit in the circuit court of Kentucky to restrain collection of the tax of a graded school district, is not in violation of a statute providing that a judgment can be restrained only in the court of its rendition as an attack on the judgment of the county court decreeing an election concerning the tax. Waring v. Bertram, 25 Ky. L. R. 307, 75 S. W. 222.

76. Brooks v. Twitchell, 182 Mass. 443.

77. Wall v. Mercer [Ga.] 46 S. E. 420.

78. The district court of Wyoming has jurisdiction to restrain diversion of water from a stream to the injury of prior appropriation for irrigation by means of a ditch constructed in Montana, carrying the water to land in Wyoming, since the place of injury is in that state where the ditch and lands of the owner are situated. Willey v. Decker [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 210.

tion is the proper tribunal for injunction against its directors to restrain disposal of corporate products and receipt of debts due the corporation, or the carrying on of its business.[79] A court with jurisdiction in personam may restrain the prosecution of a subsequent suit in another county, which will take from the court first obtaining jurisdiction part of the subject-matter of the suit.[80] A ruling of one district judge vacating a temporary injunction for failure of petition to state cause of action will not prevent another judge of the court subsequently on final hearing from giving a decree on the petition according to its prayer.[81] An adverse decision by the board of control which is affirmed by the district court on appeal will not prevent jurisdiction of that court of a suit by the losing party before the board of control to enjoin diversion of waters from a stream.[82] Jurisdiction of federal courts,[83] and of particular state courts has been passed on in cases cited.[84]

§ 4. Preliminary injunction. A. Issuance.—A statutory provisional injunction is allowable only within the terms of the law.[85] Preliminary or interlocutory injunction will lie when necessary to preserve the status quo,[86] but not as to one

83. Jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy to enjoin further proceedings under a judgment of the state court in judgment creditor's action commenced before passage of bankruptcy act. Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 47 Law. Ed. 122. Act of complainant in a suit by a judgment creditor in a state court to set aside a deed as fraudulent in proving up her judgment as a preferred debt, before a referee in bankruptcy, as consent to jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to restrain further proceedings in the state court. Pickens v. Roy, 187 U. S. 177, 47 Law. Ed. 128. A suit to restrain unfair trade competition sounds in tort and a federal court cannot entertain it, where it is based on acts done without the country though jurisdiction of the parties is obtained. Vacuum Oil Co. v. Eagle Oil Co., 122 Fed. 105. A federal court cannot restrain proceedings in a state court sought to be removed to it where such proceedings are removable, because regarded by the state court as merely supplemental and as a continuation of an action already prosecuted to judgment and in aid of execution thereunder. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 23 S. Ct. 707, 190 U. S. 147, 47 Law. Ed. 987. A suit to restrain federal officers engaged in the construction of a government canal from changing the location of a highway bridge over it in alleged violation of a district court decree in condemnation proceedings to take a right of way across the highway, may be removed to the federal court, since it is one arising under the federal laws. Woods v. Root [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 402.

84. County and court in which a suit for injunction must be brought. Gregory v. Howell, 118 Iowa, 26. Statutory power of courts regarding the issuance of an injunction by a court in aid of its own jurisdiction under Code 1899, c. 133, §§ 4, 6, 9. State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232. While the California Constitution gives superior courts jurisdiction in equity, their power as to injunctions may be regulated by the legislature. Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145. The circuit court of Michigan may restrain an order on the probate court in a proceeding without jurisdiction to allow attorney's fees against the ward's estate. Lothrop v. Duffield [Mich.] 96 N. W. 577. Where the main purpose of a suit to restrain a judgment of a police court under an ordinance alleged to be unconstitutional, is to attack the ordinance, the circuit court in Kentucky has jurisdiction. Boyd v. Board of Councilmen, 25 Ky. L. R. 1311, 77 S. W. 669. Where an action is pending in one superior court of California another superior court cannot entertain a bill to enjoin proceedings in the first action except to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145. Where land owners in Wyoming appropriated the right to irrigate their land from a certain stream by means of a dam and ditch located in the state, the district court of that state had jurisdiction not only to restrain another from diverting waters by a ditch within the state, but to determine their relative rights to use of the water. Willey v. Decker [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 210. Where the transcript of a justice's judgment in Iowa has been filed with the clerk of the district court in the county of its rendition, an action to restrain enforcement can only be brought there [Code, §§ 4364, 4538]. Brunk v. Moulton Bank [Iowa] 95 N. W. 238. That the judgment was unenforceable because of the discharge of the judgment debtor in bankruptcy after rendition will not make it possible to restrain its collection in another county. Id.

85. Defendant in a civil action cannot have a provisional injunction. The remedy is given only to plaintiff by the statute. Forman v. Healey, 11 N. D. 563.

Where the court finds that the status of the parties should be preserved by injunction, neither party will be allowed to change such status by giving a bond. Wells v. Rountree, 117 Ga. 839. Sufficiency of particular circumstances disclosed on hearing of motion for preliminary injunction to warrant its issuance to preserve the status quo without who has himself destroyed it,[87] or where it would be futile,[88] or allowance will work greater hardship than refusal,[89] or the injury can be measured in damages,[90] or issuance will settle the merits before trial,[91] or complainant can frame issues so as to procure a speedy final hearing.[92] It is allowable when abatement of a nuisance is the only relief.[93]

Its allowance is discretionary.[94] Final determination of the suit in favor of complainant must be reasonably probable.[95] Cessation of the act complained of expression of opinion or decision on the merits. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 124 Fed. 974. Though in an action to restrain defendant from selling a patent the answer denies the equities alleged in the complaint, a temporary injunction may be granted in the discretion of the court. Fuller v. Schultz, 88 Minn. 372. A denial by defendant of facts set up in a petition for an interlocutory injunction, or a mere conflict in the evidence, will not necessarily require a denial of the injunction. Everett v. Tabor [Ga.] 46 S. E. 72. An interlocutory injunction will issue only to preserve rights or to prevent irreparable injury, complainant being required to establish the existence of the fraud or fact on which such right is based. Id. Though the cause has been heard and submitted on the merits if the proof is clear, a temporary injunction may be granted against infringement of a patent. Cimiotti Unhairing Co. v. American Fur Refining Co., 117 Fed. 623. Whenever questions of law or fact to be determined are difficult and injury to the moving party will be certain, immediate and great, if denied, and loss or inconvenience to the other party will be comparatively small. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 156. Where the validity of a patent is undoubted and infringement clear, the patentee should not be deprived of his rights by refusal of preliminary injunction because the term of his patent will soon expire or because of defendant's offer to give a bond for damages. Electric Storage Battery Co. v. Buffalo Elec. Carriage Co., 117 Fed. 314. Where the evidence is conflicting and it appears that if the writ is granted it will not operate oppressively on defendant, but if denied complainant will be practically without remedy should he afterward establish his case, there is strong reason why the chancellor should preserve rights by granting an interlocutory injunction. Everett v. Tabor [Ga.] 46 S. E. 72. A temporary injunction to prevent cutting off plaintiff's connection with a sewer by a sewerage company, is special in its nature and may continue until the trial, where in the court's opinion it is reasonably necessary to protect plaintiff's rights. Solomon v. Wilmington Sewerage Co. [N. C.] 45 S. E. 536. A temporary injunction should be granted as a matter of right if the complaint shows a probability of recovery by plaintiff which will not afford him the full measure of redress which the suit should furnish unless defendant pending final determination is restrained from acts prejudicial to plaintiff's rights, and if without the restraint irreparable damage to plaintiff will result regardless of final results, which cannot be adequately prevented by the giving of a bond. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 116 Wis. 450.

89. A temporary injunction will not issue to compel removal of part of a building in the course of construction because encroaching on the street at the suit of the city, where defendant claims that it was built in conformity to the plans and approved by the city authorities and the building is partially completed. New York v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 17.

Graves [Neb.] 92 N. W. 144. In action to try the right to possession of land an interlocutory order on affidavit ejecting plaintiff and restraining his re-entry is void. Forman v. Healey, 11 N. D. 563.

92. Board of Trade v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319. Where directors of corporations are authorized to make by-laws necessary for management of the corporation if their certificate so provide and the directors of a certain corporation under such a certificate made a by-law appearing on its face as a provision merely for orderly conduct of the shareholders' meetings and a bill alleges that such by-law was made to pack a shareholders' meeting so as to enable small shareholders to out-vote complainants which allegations were denied, the by-law will not be declared void on a motion for a preliminary injunction. Mitchell v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 117 Fed. 723.

93. Board of Health v. Summit [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 125.

94. Fuller v. Schultz, 88 Minn. 372; Empire State-Idaho Min. & Developing Co. v. Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 973. Sufficiency of evidence to sustain an interlocutory order granting a preliminary injunction under the rule that the order will not be reversed, unless an abuse of discretion was shown. Rahley v. Columbia Phonograph Co. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 623. A motion for a preliminary or provisional injunction is addressed to the discretion of the court to be allowed only in clear cases without decision at such stage of the case to decide doubtful or difficult questions of law or disputed questions of fact. Mitchell v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 117 Fed. 723.

95. Mitchell v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 117 Fed. 723. Where proofs are conflicting and a full hearing is necessary to determine questions at issue, a preliminary injunction will not be granted against infringement of a patent comparatively recent and which will not always prevent injunction, but a preliminary injunction will not issue where defendant desisted in good faith before suit and intends not to resume.[96]

A new cause for temporary injunction cannot be urged after the original cause is denied.[97] Where the application depends on the nature of the action, the issues on the motion are limited to those raised by the complaint, the supporting affidavits and the answering affidavits.[98] Demurrers to a petition can be considered on the interlocutory hearing for injunction only, as showing cause why an interlocutory injunction should not be granted, and the demurrers cannot be overruled or sustained by the judge at chambers before appearance term.[99] Where a district court of the same federal circuit has refused an injunction against the use of board of trade quotations by bucket shops because the concerns are too nearly similar, a preliminary injunction for the same purpose will not be granted until the ruling has been reviewed by the circuit court of appeals.[1] Where a temporary injunction issues without bond, it is presumed that good cause was shown to the judge in absence of the contrary showing.[2] Where a petition for injunction is allowed by the county judge in the absence of a district or supreme court judge, and petition and order are immediately filed in the district court, the injunction is valid, though made before beginning the action under a law providing for issuance at commencement of action or at any time before judgment after commencement.[3] A decision denying a preliminary injunction is not res judicata as to sufficiency of the complaint on subsequent filing of demurrer.[4] Where, after injunction against condemnation proceedings, there is a discontinuance on notice and no further action is taken as to the injunction and no appeal, such injunction will not apply to a second condemnation commenced.[5] Defendant enjoined from building a photograph gallery on premises against restrictions of his deed is sufficiently protected by a decree which provides expressly for modification on application of either party when change of conditions require.[6] In Montana, allowance of "all costs" to defendant, on refusal of motion for an injunction pendente lite, is erroneous.[7]

(§ 4) B. Dissolution, modification or continuance; reinstatement. Dissolution.—A special master, on reference to inquire and report damages, if any, resulting to defendants from the issuance of a restraining order if improvidently issued, cannot determine such improvident issuance.[8]

Dissolution or vacation of a preliminary injunction is discretionary.[9] A show-

While a federal court will not dispose of the question of jurisdiction summarily on motion for a preliminary injunction complainant has the burden of showing thereon that there is reasonable probability of final success on that question as well as on the merits. Huntington v. New York, 118 Fed. 683. Where a suit is brought to restrain the use of a name by a corporation and is heard on order to show cause on bill, affidavits and exhibits, relief should not be denied until final hearing, where it appears highly probable that complainant will finally succeed. On return of an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted on a complaint alleging trespass plaintiff cannot set up a new cause of complaint, the original one being denied, by claiming that defendant's acts will destroy the easement over defendant's lot [Code Civ. 11. Null v. Elliott, 52 W. Va. 229. A temporary injunction against prosecution of a replevin suit will be dissolved and the bill for injunction dismissed where plaintiff with consent or acquiescence of defendant has parted with possession of the article and defendant is not proceeding with the prosecution, it being unreasonable to presume that the article will no longer be of use to him. Gibson v. Powell, 96 Mo. App. 681. A temporary restraining order granted on filing of a bill by the maker of a note, to enjoin execution against him by holders by indorsement from the payee, on the ground that it was procured from the payee by fraud, of which the holders had notice or knowledge, but stating no facts either on knowledge or information, showing such fraud, will be dissolved where defendants by answer denied any fraud on their part or knowledge of fraud. Magruder v. Schley, 18 App. D. C. 288. Where commissioners of the District of Columbia order a railroad company to remove a switch and appliances located by defendant at the intersection of certain streets without permission for such location and the company obtained a temporary injunction against the execution of such order on appeal from an order over-ruling a motion for dissolution of such temporary injunction it will be dissolved where it does not appear that the officers had exceeded their powers or abused their discretion on acting oppressively in ordering removal. Macfarland v. Wash. etc., R. Co., 18 App. D. C. 456.

12. Where a grantor of land who had failed in a suit to set aside his deed for fraud, sued to enjoin the grantees from trespassing on the property in his possession disclosing nothing in his bill as to the conveyance or prior suit, the injunction order is properly rescinded where the facts of such conveyance and suit come to the knowledge of the court. Tifel v. Jenkins, 95 Md. 665.

13. Sidney Land & Colony Co. v. Milner, C. & F. Lumber Co. [Ala.] 35 So. 48. Where the sworn answer of defendant sets up a right in himself to perform the acts complained of and denies the trespass or injury alleged in the bill and his own insolvency, a temporary injunction previously issued is properly dissolved. Simonson v. Cain [Ala.] 34 So. 1019.

15. Cotten v. Christen, 110 La. 444.

16. That an injunction bond is made payable to the clerk of court instead of defendant is an informality rather than a defect in the bond and where it appears that plaintiff would be immediately entitled to another order of injunction were the present one dissolved on this account, dissolution will not follow but an order for a new bond and new rights should be given. Cotten v. Christen, 110 La. 444.

17. Injunction granted on a verified complaint. Schmidt v. Bitzer, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 563. Though an order, making new parties complainant to a bill, requires that right to continuance of a temporary injunction shall depend on right of the original complainant, it will not be dissolved if the new parties would have had a right thereto if they had been made original parties, the original complainant's want of equity affecting the costs only. Warren v. Pim [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 66.

18. An injunction by an ad interim treasurer to prevent his successor from taking office because of irregularity in the election, will be dissolved on bond. State v. Ellis [La.] 35 So. 471. An injunction restraining the owner of an undivided half interest in timber land from cutting timber without the consent of his co-owner, cannot be dissolved on bond. Cotten v. Christen, 110 La. 444. Where the rights to certain timber lands can be determined only after a full hearing in equity but complainant shows a strong case and defendants have erected saw mills to cut the timber, an injunction against such cutting pending final hearing will not be dissolved without a sufficient bond to protect complainant's rights. Kilgore v. Norman, 119 Fed. 1006.

19. An injunctional order granted on a bill for injunction against interference with employes by former employes of plaintiff or with his prospective employes will not be set aside on a motion or ex parte affidavits, but will be continued until final hearing. Jersey City Print. Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759. Where it appears on motion to dissolve an injunction, before answer by an employe, by the real party in interest, that the damage resulting will not be compensated by the undertaking, the motion will be denied since he has a remedy for damages against his employer. Smith v. Alberta & B. C. Exploration or Reclamation Co. [Idaho] 74 Pac. 1071. A restraining order issued in foreclosure of a mortgage on a wife's land to secure her husband's debt, which was extended without her consent, should not be dissolved after answer alleging that the debt was the joint debt of the husband and wife and denying that she failed to consent to the extension. Harrington v. Rawls, 131 N. C. 39. A preliminary injunction restraining a union and its mem-

Suspension, modification, continuance or reinstatement.—Operation of the injunction may be suspended to allow defendant to proceed at law.[20] An associate justice of the supreme court may suspend operation of a restraining order pending appeal from it.[21] Modification cannot be had where complainant's rights would be invaded,[22] but will be allowed to decrease injury or inconvenience to one or more of the litigants if danger of loss or injury to their opponent is not thereby increased.[23] Allegations of irreparable injury are sufficient for continuance of the restraining order pending suit.[24] A temporary order against trespass on timber is properly continued until trial, under a law providing that no orders shall be made pending an action to determine title in such a case, preventing the cutting of timber except by consent until such title is determined.[25] That a switch and appliance built by a railroad company without municipal authority as required by law are located for use in emergency only, and no danger can result from a temporary injunction against its removal by its authorities, will not justify continuance of a temporary restraining order against such removal until proof is taken.[26] A temporary injunction, restraining the heirs of a deceased administrator from converting to their own use or removing from the state, assets in their possession which the administrator had converted before obtaining his discharge in any state through fraud on the probate court and the heirs at law, is properly continued until hearing of the cause, where the property had been brought within the state.[27] A general creditor bringing an action to recover money only on allegations that the debtor has fraudulently disposed of merchandise to delay his creditors, and that his co-defendant purchased with the same intent, and that the debtor left the state and cannot be found, cannot have continuance of a temporary injunction under a law allowing an injunction restraining the transferee of a debtor from disposing of property transferred.[28] On motion, a decree for temporary injunction, contingent on payment of a certain amount and costs by plaintiff in a certain action, should be made absolute, where it appeared that he had complied, except as to a small item which he neglected through oversight, but which he afterwards tendered.[29] An ex parte temporary restraining order issued by the clerk is not an injunction after dissolution by the court, so that it may be reinstated under a law allowing reinstatement of an injunction on motion after dissolution.[30]

bers from interfering with the business of an employer or keeping away employes or customers by threats and force, will not be vacated, where a strike was ordered against the employer merely because of a refusal to agree to employ only union men and not on the question of wages. Davis Mach. Co. v. Robinson, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 329.

20. At the same time when an injunction is granted at the suit of the lower riparian owners to prevent diversion of waters by a private corporation to supply a village, the court may in its discretion, suspend operation until the village by reasonable diligence could purchase or condemn the riparian rights from plaintiff. Penrhyn Slate Co. v. Granville Elec. L. & P. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 92. Time for application and notice.—Where a stipulation was voluntarily made by the parties that a restraining order should be continued until final determination, a motion to vacate is properly denied before that time.[31] After the validity of a patent has been determined several times and sustained by the circuit court of appeals, a motion to vacate a preliminary injunction against infringement founded on parts of the evidence taken by defendant will not be entertained until time for complainant to take proofs in rebuttal has expired.[32] An injunction cannot be dissolved on pleadings and testimony and findings of a master on the day of the filing of his report without notice of hearing on the application for dissolution and without an opportunity of the parties to except to the report.[33] On motion by the adverse party to dissolve a temporary injunction on papers on which it was granted, no notice is necessary to the party to whom it was granted, but if a counter-showing is made by the adverse party, notice of hearing must be given and the other party allowed to present counter-affidavits for consideration.[34]

Motion and other pleadings; issues.[35]—A motion to dissolve an injunction because of insufficiency of the bill admits no more than a demurrer to the bill.[36] Plaintiff on an application to dissolve, made on the complaint alone without affidavits, cannot file an affidavit in support of his pleading.[37] A law allowing complainant to support his bill and defendant to support his answer as to an injunction by affidavits filed, to be read in evidence on the hearing of the motion to dissolve, is not limited to cases where a sworn answer is filed.[38] Where the case has been submitted for a decree on motion to dissolve on a sworn answer denying the bill, a motion to strike the answer filed after submission cannot be treated as a part of the pleadings thereon.[39] Where amendments to a bill, filed after a sworn answer, set up no additional facts requiring answer, the denials of the answer are applicable to the amendments and available on motion to dissolve without further oath or verification.[40] A suit for injunction against an execution sale is properly dismissed on dissolution of a temporary restraining order, where the recitals of the motion are equivalent to a demurrer for want of equity and no request is made to amend the complaint.[41] Where, in an action to try title to timber lands there was a bona fide claim of evidence as to the location of the head of the river on which plaintiff's grant rested, and he showed a prima facie case, the issue should be submitted to a jury and could not be determined on motion to continue an order restraining cutting of the timber.[42] A prayer for injunction will support a preliminary injunction.[43]

35. Sufficiency of pleadings on which to grant an order refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction and continuing it until trial. Solomon v. Wilmington Sewerage Co., 133 N. C. 144.

A motion for dissolution of a temporary injunction stating that on defendant's answer and affidavit of another party and all papers, records and files of the court in the former proceedings referred to in the answer, defendant will move to dissolve the temporary injunction, sufficiently states the ground of the motion. It need not include a copy of such findings and orders, where they were made in proceedings in which the parties to the injunction were parties and were of record in the same county in custody of the clerk of the court in which injunction was asked. which the injunction issued carries with it dissolution of the injunction.[44] An order of dissolution for want of equity, apparent on the face of the bill which seeks injunction only, is an order finally disposing of the case, and the bill may be dismissed.[45] Dissolution by dismissal of the main action by plaintiffs, followed by judgment of dismissal, amounts to the final determination that the writ wrongfully issued.[46] The bill cannot be dismissed on motion to dissolve on bill, answer and affidavit submitted before expiration of the time to take testimony, unless the bill makes a case not proper for equitable relief, even though such injunction should be dissolved on the pleadings.[47] Where a bill to restrain unlawful detainer was entertained without requiring complainant to confess judgment in the action, the chancellor on dissolution could not dismiss the law action still pending.[48] Dismissal of the bill seeking injunction and dissolution of the injunction are conclusive as to its wrongful issuance.[49] A decision that the temporary injunction should be dissolved and the petition dismissed on the merits is a dissolution of the injunction without entry of formal decree.[50] Final decree makes a temporary order inoperative.[51]

(§ 4) C. Damages on dissolution.—Damages on dissolution must be limited to the amount of the bond in the absence of malice,[51a] and to expenses necessarily incurred in securing dissolution.[52] Where plaintiff acted in good faith and issues tendered by defendant were not sufficient to be the basis of a judgment holding plaintiff liable for damages, defendant cannot recover damages on dissolution.[53] Damages by injury from suspension of a business may be allowed, and profits for a reasonable period next preceding the time of injury may be taken as a basis of estimate.[54] The question of damages may be referred.[55]

Coguenhem [La.] 35 So. 385. Counsel fees for trial of a cause will not be allowed as damages for wrongful issuance where the injunction proceedings were ancillary to the main case. Barr's Estate v. Post [Neb.] 93 N. W. 144. Counsel fees necessarily incurred in procuring dissolution of an injunction may be allowed as damages but those resulting from defense of the suit to which the injunction is ancillary cannot be allowed. The agreed compensation of attorneys employed by defendant to secure the dissolution cannot be allowed as damages on the theory that they were employed for that purpose. Landis v. Wolf [Ill.] 69 N. E. 103. Where a preliminary injunction wrongfully issued and on filing of answer was modified and continued and on final hearing a permanent injunction was refused and decree entered for defendant but no motion was ever made for dissolution of the preliminary injunction, complainant was not liable for attorney's fees on account of the latter. Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Climie [Iowa] 92 N. W. 77. Where a suit was discontinued on defendant's motion for lack of prosecution after a temporary injunction had been granted with conditions with which plaintiff had failed to comply, defendant was entitled to recover expenses in getting rid of the injunction, since the dismissal was a final determination against plaintiff as to the right to an injunction. Madison v. Brower, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 116.

54. Landis v. Wolf [Ill.] 69 N. E. 103.

55. On dismissal of a complaint under which a temporary injunction issued. Lewis v. Jones, 65 S. C. 157. Where plaintiff was given leave over defendant's objection to discontinue a suit for injunction on its call for trial because determination of the merits was unnecessary. Perlman v. Bernstein, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 203.

Time of bringing action or suit.—Prompt action should be taken so as to avoid laches.[56] One week's delay after giving direct notice of violation of rights in the erection of a wall before bringing suit for injunction is not unreasonable.[57]

Original suit or petition or motion.—Where plaintiffs recovered judgment before a justice for possession of leased premises and rents, and defendants appealed to the superior court, a motion for injunction to restrain the prosecution of monthly suits for rent by plaintiffs was properly made by defendants in the case then pending in the superior court and not by a new action for that purpose.[58]

Conditions precedent; bond.—The proper practice where an action at law is sought to be restrained is for the chancellor to require complainant to confess judgment at law, the judgment to remain under control of the chancellor pending decision on the injunction.[59] A judgment in an action between the city and an owner of a tenement for civil penalties for violation of the tenement house act is a final adjudication of issues afterward raised in a suit to enjoin maintenance of a nuisance by the owner so that an order of injunction may issue.[60]

The necessity of a bond for injunction is a matter of discretion,[61] apart from statutes prescribing it.[62] The public may sue to suppress a public nuisance without a bond.[63] Where defendant objects on appeal from a decree refusing an injunction that no bond was first filed by complainant, the defect can be remedied on reversal of the decree before issuance of the injunction.[64] The bond is sufficient though the sureties do not justify that they are householders or freeholders of the county, the justification being no part of the undertaking.[65] That the bond was payable to the clerk instead of defendant is an informality rather than a fatal defect.[66]

Process and notice.—Notice of an application for injunction must be given unless it clearly appears that its issuance without notice is necessary.[67] It is a matter in the sound discretion of the court or judge in vacation.[68] An objection cannot be made that an injunction order was entered without notice where defendant had a hearing on the motion to dissolve.[69] Sufficiency of notice is treated in the note.[70]

Voigt, 103 Ill. App. 659. An order allowing the filing of an intervention and designating the intervenor as a defendant followed by judgment on a rule nisi ordering injunction to issue on a bond furnished by plaintiff in favor of the original defendant and the intervenor, is without authority as to the requirement of a bond in favor of the latter so that he has no right of action on the bond. An injunction against diversion of the waters of a stream to the injury of a prior appropriation for irrigation purposes, operates in personam, so that after service with process in the suit and submission to the jurisdiction by answer to the merits, the court had jurisdiction. Willey v. Decker [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 210. In a suit to enjoin prosecution of many garnishment proceedings to subject exempt wages of laborers to payment of a judgment in which their employers from whom the wages were due were made parties, summons afterwards issued to the sheriff of the county where the judgment creditor resides and properly served on him gives jurisdiction of all parties [Code Civ. 76. Suits against corporations: The seller of corporate stock may be made defendant with the company in injunction by the purchaser to restrain interference with its transfer and to compel the company to make such transfer. Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115. A stockholder must always be made a party to restrain the voting of his stock at the shareholders' meeting to elect directors. Representation by a corporation to its stockholders in defense of suits cannot be applied to such suit, though the holder is another corporation owning a majority of the stock and though the same persons are a majority of directors in both corporations. The court cannot grant or continue a temporary restraining order for the same purpose until complainant can implead the stockholder in a court having jurisdiction as to him. Taylor v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Fed. 147. Where a corporation in the business of selling coal had contracts with certain coal companies to take all their product at the mines, transport and sell it at prices fixed by the companies, at a certain price per ton for services, the coal companies not being liable for a failure to furnish coal resulting from strikes and the selling corporation had made contracts for sale of large amounts of coal and had provided means for transportation, the coal companies were proper parties defendant to a suit by the selling corporation to restrain wrongful and illegal acts of third persons in conducting a strike at the mines and preventing others from working therein by threats and intimidation, but though such coal companies might not be unfavorable to the relief asked the court is not authorized to make them defendants where jurisdiction would be defeated since the selling corporation does not sue in their right but in its own. Chesapeake & O. C. Agency Co. v. Fire Creek C. & C. Co., 119 Fed. 942.

Parties.—A bill to restrain proceedings at law must be filed in the name of the interested party.[71] A private individual injured by obstruction of the public road cannot sue on behalf of himself and of others similarly situated to restrain the obstruction as a public nuisance.[72] In a suit by one of the parties to a contract to restrain acts of third persons interfering with its performance by the other which would result in irreparable injury to plaintiff, the latter and not the other party to the contract is the real party in interest.[73] The United States by its law officers, at request of the interstate commerce commission, could not sue to restrain discrimination between localities by a common carrier, in violation of the act to regulate commerce, before the Act of Congress, Feb. 19, 1903, expressly authorizing such suits.[74] Where one entitled to sue for restraint of breach of a contract joins with him persons having no privity of contract with defendant regarding the subject-matter and no interest in the final result of the suit, there is a misjoinder of plaintiffs.[75] Necessary and proper parties in particular suits for injunction are treated in the footnote.[76]

Suits against municipalities or officers: A tax payer may restrain payment of an illegal warrant of a school district without making the holder a party. Kellogg v. School Dist. No. 10 [Okl.] 74 Pac. 110. A person or corporation with whom a contract is made by a city which will create a debt beyond the constitutional limit of the city, is not an indispensable defendant to a suit for injunction by a tax payer to prevent performance of the contract. City Water Supply Co. v. Ottumwa, 120 Fed. 309. One endeavoring to equip a state building with plumbing without filing the required papers with the superintendent of buildings and securing his approval, is a proper defendant in an action to enjoin construction. New York v. Burleson Hardware Co., 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 222. Where a county board awarded a claim against the county on condition that claimant's attorney should file agreement not to receive more than a certain sum for his services, the claimant but not the attorney was a necessary party to a suit by a tax payer to restrain payment of the money. Kircher v. Pederson [Wis.] 93 N. W. 813. Where a county clerk is sought to be restrained from changing the boundary of the school district and transferring the tax of a tax payer from one district to another and changing the enumeration of school children on the ground that the proceedings on which his actions are based are void, final injunction can not be granted without joining the school district directly interested. School Dist. No. 4 v. Smith, 90 Mo. App. 215.

Suits to protect private property or business: In an action to restrain enforcement of a judgment against land owned by the debtor at time of rendition, a subsequent transferee of such land is a proper party. Frankel v. Garrard, 160 Ind. 209. In an action by one judgment debtor to restrain the sale of land owned by him on execution, on the ground that it is not liable to execution, his co-judgment debtors are not necessary

Bill, petition or complaint.—The bill must be frank in its statement of facts,[77] and not multifarious.[78] The absence of an adequate remedy at law,[79] the danger of irreparable damage,[80] and the specific facts constituting it,[81] must be asserted. A demurrer will lie to a petition where it appears on its face that plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law, and failure to employ it is not excused.[82] All facts parties. McGill v. Sutton [Kan.] 72 Pac. 853. In a suit to restrain a judgment creditor from prosecuting a multiplicity of garnishment suits to subject exempt wages to the judgment, the employer of those to whom the wages are due and who is garnishee, is a proper and necessary party. Siever v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 943. A bill will lie to restrain a person who learned certain trade secrets while in the course of complainant's employment from divulging them to competitors without joining the latter. Sanitas Nut Food Co. v. Cemer [Mich.] 96 N. W. 454. Persons having an actual, though not an equal interest in the use of trade-marks and labels, are properly joined as plaintiffs in a suit to prevent infringement. Jewish Colonization Ass'n v. Solomon, 125 Fed. 994. In a suit by an exclusive licensee for the sale of patents in a certain territory to restrain a conspiracy between a third person with knowledge of the license and the licensor for the sale of such goods in the territory, neither the licensor nor the co-conspirator is a necessary party, the suit being based upon the tort and not the contract relation. N. Y. Phonograph Co. v. Jones, 123 Fed. 197. Conclusions of law concerning rights under a lease of oil lands between the lessor and the assignee of the lease on which an injunction was granted conditionally if certain acts were performed by the assignee are erroneous where the lessor was not a party. Chappell v. Jasper County O. & G. Co. [Ind. App.] 66 N. E. 515. In a suit by a mortgagee to restrain intimidation of employes of the mortgagor preventing it from transacting its business, so as to pay interest on bonds according to the contract and mortgage, the mortgagor was not a necessary party. Ex parte Haggerty, 124 Fed. 441. In a suit in the federal courts for injunction against strikers, a person interested in the subject need not be made a party where his joinder would oust jurisdiction, if a final decree consistent with equity and good conscience can be made against the parties before the court. Id. Where a bill to restrain trespass on mining land alleged that the company holding a lease under which defendants claimed was not real, and that defendants owned and controlled all its property and affairs and that its charter had expired by limitation and the company had never been re-organized, no objection could be made for failure to make such company a party defendant. Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 468.

77. The bill must make full and candid disclosure of all facts relied upon for relief. Moffat v. Calvert County Com'rs [Md.] 54 Atl. 960. A bill by an inventor and a corporation which used his name to enjoin the use of such name by another corporation alleging that its use had been enjoined by a foreign court in a suit by the inventor's son, is not open to the objection that the failure to allege that such injunction was dissolved was a suppression and a want of frankness, since such fact was alleged only to show that the son had revoked his authority to use the name and that the father was not a party to the suit and since the present suit did not call for restraint in the interim to which the rule of frankness peculiarly applies. Edison Storage Battery Co. v. Edison Automobile Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 861.

78. A complaint for an injunction against the sale of tickets by sixty brokers is multifarious where they have no connection with each other. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Reeves, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 490. A bill by the United States to restrain a number of defendants from pasturing sheep on a forest reservation, is not subject to the objection of misjoinder and multifariousness for alleging that two bands of sheep are pastured on the reservation, where it does not appear that there are any separate or distinct rights or interests between the several defendants. Dastervignes v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 30. A bill to restrain the passage of defendant over an oyster bed because of damage by pressing the oysters into the mud, asking alternative relief in that a way be marked out across the bed and defendant be restrained from passing without such way, is not liable to demurrer for multifariousness. Simonson v. Cain [Ala.] 34 So. 1019.

79. Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Kenney [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 20. An allegation in a suit to restrain collection of a personal property tax by a town that the board of review including the assessors wrongfully, fraudulently and unlawfully colluded and connived to injure plaintiff by placing his property on the assessment roll, is insufficient. Nye v. Washburn, 125 Fed. 817.

80. An allegation of great injury is insufficient if it does not state that it will be irreparable. Chappell v. Jasper County O. & G. Co. [Ind. App.] 66 N. E. 515. The complaint must allege that violation of plaintiff's rights will be threatened with substantial and serious damage. Hart v. Hildebrandt, 30 Ind. App. 415. A complaint for injunction is insufficient which fails to allege defendant's insolvency or his inability to respond in damages. Porter v. Armstrong, 132 N. C. 66. A bill for removal of an existing alleged nuisance and restraint of its continuance must allege that existence of a nuisance has been determined at law or that good equitable reason exists for relief without such determination. Sterling v. Littlefield, 97 Me. 479.

81. Orange City v. Thayer [Fla.] 34 So. 573; Wabash R. Co. v. Engleman, 160 Ind. 329; Porter v. Armstrong, 132 N. C. 66. Preliminary injunction to prevent diversion of waters from stream so as to deprive complainant of his irrigation rights, will not issue on a general allegation of irreparable injury. Morris v. Bean, 123 Fed. 618.

necessary must be alleged positively, not merely on information and belief.[83] Where a verified complaint instead of an affidavit is used on motion for an injunction, only the positive allegations and those on information and belief, where the sources of information and the grounds of belief are stated, can be taken as true.[84] Possession or ownership of property must be alleged,[85] unless a statute allows relief without possession.[86] Where a cause for injunction is submitted for final decision on demurrer to one paragraph of the bill, and another paragraph alleges material injury which is not denied, the writ will issue.[87] The bill must pray injunction in the prayer for process as well as in the prayer for relief.[88] A prayer for injunction is sufficient for issuance of a preliminary injunction.[89] An amended petition must not depart from the original petition.[90] The sufficiency of bills, complaints or petitions in particular suits or actions is treated in the cases cited.[91]

83. Infringement of trade mark. Gaines v. Sroufe, 117 Fed. 965.

84. Foster v. Retail Clerks' International Protective Ass'n, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 48.

85. One attempting to restrain the construction of a driveway by a city across a sidewalk in front of his lot on the ground of his ownership of the fee to the center of the street must allege such ownership. Kelley v. Marion [Ind.] 68 N. E. 594.

86. Where St. § 2361 allows an owner of land to restrain trespass though not in actual possession at the time of the commission, his petition need not allege such actual possession. Wiggins v. Jackson, 24 Ky. L. R. 2189, 73 S. W. 779.

90. Where a petition alleges ownership of timber lands and that defendants were wrongfully cutting such timber which constituted the principal value, that they were insolvent and if not restrained, plaintiff would have no adequate remedy at law, an amended petition alleging that timber of a certain value had been removed containing another paragraph alleging damage generally, without stating the sum, nor praying judgment, was not a departure from the original petition, so as to be subject to a motion to strike. Houck v. Patty [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 389.

91. Sufficiency of bill to enjoin an action on a judgment (Brooks v. Twitchell, 182 Mass. 443); for injunction against infringement of patent (Murjahn v. Hall, 119 Fed. 186); by one owning timber on lands to restrain its removal under Rev. St. 1892, § 1469 (Doke v. Peek [Fla.] 34 So. 896); to enjoin pollution of a stream by sewage of a city at the suit of a lower land proprietor (Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402); against collection of property taxes to show that no adequate remedy at law exists; construction of Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 7915, 7916 (Ind. Mfg. Co. v. Koehne, 188 U. S. 681, 47 Law. Ed. 651); to restrain payment on a paving contract because of the arbitrary award of the contract by the city as showing failure of the board of public works to comply with the statute (Inge v. Mobile Public Works, 135 Ala. 187); by members of labor union for injunction against unlawful combination by employers to destroy the union by preventing and intimidating persons from joining and securing the discharge of those belonging to the union (Boyer v. W. U. Tel. Co., 124 Fed. 246); to show such contract rights in plaintiff corporation to entitle it to an injunction to prevent wrong and illegal acts of defendants who were obstructing the work of the other parties to a contract with the corporation so as to prevent its fulfillment of such contract (Chesapeake & O. C. Agency Co. v. Fire Creek C. & C. Co., 119 Fed. 942). A bill for injunction against the use of secret processes and methods of manufacture by defendant in violation of a contract sufficiently shows their character, where it alleges that they were not generally known or understood by other manufacturers or the public and that defendant gained knowledge of them while an employe of plaintiff's establishment and that he agreed not to disclose such processes or methods to others. S. Jarvis Adams Co. v. Knapp [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 34. Sufficiency of description in application for injunction in bankruptcy, to show where the bankruptcy proceeding was pending. In re Goldberg, 117 Fed. 692.

Sufficiency of complaint in suit to restrain the sale of realty as the property of decedent for debts on demurrer (Demaris v. Barker [Wash.] 74 Pac. 362); to warrant the temporary injunction to protect plaintiff's right to the use of the bed of a creek which he had reclaimed for agricultural purposes (Campbell v. Flannery [Mont.] 74 Pac. 450); for injunction against the collection of a tax, alleging overvaluation by the county board, especially with regard to fraud on its part (Cochise County v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. [Ariz.] 71 Pac. 946); to entitle the receiver of a corporation to restrain foreclosure proceedings against the corporation as to certain mortgaged chattels under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5876 (Kidder v. Beavers [Wash.] 74 Pac. 819). A complaint for an injunction pendente lite must show a right to such relief and the prayer must ask it even though the application is under a law providing for injunction on affidavits after issue joined, showing that the acts threatened would render judgment ineffectual [Rev. Code, § 5344, sub-div. 23]. Forman v. Healey, 11 N. D. 563.

Allegations of conspiracy must state in what the conspiracy consists. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Reeves, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 490. A petition for injunction against a sale under a power in a mortgage, is insufficient if it does not show the character of trust in the instrument which is apparently unrecorded or the nature of the advertisement for

Answer and other pleadings.—The defense of an adequate legal remedy must be raised before hearing on the merits;[92] it must be raised by answer, if it does not appear on the face of the complaint.[93] An answer in a suit to restrain the cutting of timber, alleging that on a certain day plaintiffs conveyed to another all their interest in the timber described, will avail only to limit plaintiff's recovery as a partial defense.[94]

A supplemental answer will be allowed where it raises issues which may be settled on hearing.[95] Where defendant before serving of the original answer asked leave to plead facts existing and entirely changing the issues, by a supplemental answer, he can be permitted to serve the answer only on payment of costs to date and on condition that plaintiff may discontinue without costs if so advised.[96]

Acts of complainant in which defendant has acquiesced cannot be raised by cross complaint.[97] A cross bill cannot be filed to prevent complainant from exercising the rights he seeks to establish by the bill, where they must necessarily be determined in deciding the issues on bill and answer.[98]

Issues and proof.—Under special circumstances courts will settle the question of damages incidental to injunctive relief.[99] Petitioners must show clearly legal authority to prosecute the action and their right to relief when such is in issue.[1] The right, authority, or purpose of quasi-public corporations to construct improvements will not be determined.[2] Where it is alleged in a suit to restrain cutting of timber on land that deeds under which the defendant claimed were shams man-the sale or how such sale would affect plaintiff's title. Wilson v. Gray, 97 Mo. App. 632. A suit on petition of several individuals as "mayor and councilmen" to restrain the maintenance of a blind tiger is a suit of the individuals named and the descriptive words may be stricken out as surplusage. Legg v. Anderson, 116 Ga. 401. A petition in a suit to recover money received by plaintiff's attorneys which they claimed to hold for fees from proceeds of a prior action, filed to restrain plaintiff's action at law to recover such money which shows that a prior suit was not pending, but that a final decree had been rendered and funds distributed, is liable to demurrer, the court's jurisdiction over the former suit having terminated. German v. Browne, 137 Ala. 429.

92. Where defendant proceeds to hearing on the merits before a master without objection that there was an adequate remedy at law and that the bill did not state a cause for equitable relief, he has waived such objection in his answer. Driscoll v. Smith [Mass.] 68 N. E. 210.

93. Corscadden v. Haswell, 84 N. Y. Supp. 597.

94. Houck v. Patty [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 389.

95, 96. Where plaintiff sued a company and its employe to restrain the company from violating trade marks and to restrain the employe from continuing in the employ of the company because he had broken his contract not to work for a competitor of plaintiff within a certain time after discharge from plaintiff's employ and the company was not served but the employe answered and applied for leave to file a supplemental answer alleging that the trade marks sought to be protected contained false and fraudulent statements, an order allowing him to serve such answer will not be reversed, though the facts alleged could be no defense as against him, since the validity of the defense could be determined on the trial. Preservaline Mfg. Co. v. Selling, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 474.

97. Where a railroad company gave a license to a natural gas company to maintain certain pipe lines under and across its right of way, it can not urge by cross-complaint in an action by the gas company to compel it to allow the laying of another pipe line across the right of way that dangers and inconvenience had been increased by acts of the gas company so as to secure an injunction against such additional lines where all such danger and inconvenience existed when the license was granted. Chicago, I. & E. R. Co. v. Ind. N. G. & O. Co. [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1003.

2. Where a city has granted a franchise for a telephone plant to a company organized under the state laws and it has built its plant, the validity of the incorporation of the company cannot be questioned by the city in a suit to restrain interference by the city with the exercise of rights under the franchise. Old Colony Trust Co. v. Wichita, 123 Fed. 762. The question of municipal power to give permission to lay a railroad siding in a street on other than the established grade cannot be considered in a suit to restrain such siding by the railroad company. Zook v. Penn. R. Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 82. Where a railroad company is entitled to build its road through a borough, its purpose in building a telegraph line is immaterial in a suit by which to restrain interference by the borough with construction of the line. Penn. R. Co. v. Lilly Borough [Pa.] 56 Atl. 412.

ufactured to defeat criminal prosecutions for taking timber, facts invalidating the conveyance can be shown on trial.[3] The court is entitled to consider all the circumstances and is not bound by denial of an intention to violate the covenant, breach of which is to be enjoined.[4] Where a petition to restrain enforcement of a judgment by execution against the judgment debtor by a member of a firm, against which the debtor had suits pending, was for the purpose of obtaining an equitable set-off, he could show on petition for a permanent injunction that he expected to move for a new trial.[5]

Affidavit for bill.—An injunction cannot be founded on equities appearing in supporting affidavits, where the complaint fails to state a cause for equity.[6] An affidavit to a bill for injunction, on information and belief, is insufficient where it does not state the source of information or what knowledge affiant has relating to matters for relief.[7] That affidavits opposing an injunction against the use of a corporate name in violation of complainant's rights show no intention on the part of defendant to manufacture anything manufactured by complainants is immaterial, where defendant's charter gives it power to do so.[8]

Presumptions of burden of proof.—Official acts will be presumed to have been regularly done.[9] In a suit to restrain an upper proprietor from diverting water from a stream, defendant must show the amount returned to the stream, where he claims that such return is made.[10] Where the bill in a suit to restrain violation of a contract whereby a physician agrees not to practice medicine within a certain territory, unless forced to resume such practice by unforeseen circumstances, alleged that such circumstances had not arisen, plaintiff was not required to prove such allegation, it being negative in nature so that proof lay in the special knowledge of defendant.[11]

Evidence.—Proof of defendant's insolvency on hearing for injunction must be direct and positive and not on information and belief.[12] Evidence which is sufficient to authorize a preliminary injunction or its denial will not necessarily authorize a like decision at final trial on the merits.[13] Sufficiency and admissibility of evidence in particular cases will be found in the note.[14]

6. Landes v. Walls, 160 Ind. 216.

7. By one not a party. Moffat v. Calvert County Com'rs [Md.] 54 Atl. 960. Where it appears in a suit by a stockholder to restrain payment of a dividend on preferred stock that an affidavit was filed by plaintiff in support of a preliminary injunction and one by his counsel which failed to show the circumstances bringing him in relation with the injuries so that he could speak from personal knowledge and respecting admissions made by the president of the corporation only, the affidavits were insufficient to warrant a preliminary injunction. Schoenfeld v. American Can Co. [N. J. Eq.] 55 Atl. 1044.

8. Edison Storage Battery Co. v. Edison Automobile Co. [N. J. Eq.] 56 Atl. 861.

9. One seeking to enjoin payment of a city warrant drawn on a specific fund must prove allegations that no estimate of the cost or appropriation was made for its payment and must overcome the presumption of official regularity. Kelley v. Broadwell [Neb.] 92 N. W. 643. In proceedings to restrain the maintenance of a dram shop it must be presumed that the excise commissioner properly granted the license for such dram shop on a petition of eligible subscribers whether he made any investigation or not. Cooper v. Hunt [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 483.

14. Sufficiency of evidence to show adequate remedy at law which petitioner neglected to pursue in a suit to restrain collection of judgment (Hess v. Lell [Neb.] 94 N. W. 975]; of bad faith on the part of the holder of a patent in sending notice to alleged infringers and their customers notifying them of his claims and threatening suits, in a suit for injunction on the part of the alleged infringers to restrain such notice (Adriance v. Nat. Harrow Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 827); to establish an unlawful conspiracy on the part of members of a labor organization which is picketing the works of an employer during a strike and engaging in acts of violence to prevent others from entering the employment of the manufacturer so as to entitle him to an injunction against the institution and maintenance of such pickets

Hearing and determination; dismissal; trial by jury.[15]—On hearing of an order to show cause why injunction should not issue, defendant's evidence cannot be rejected and the injunction issued merely because he was in contempt for violating a restraining order.[16] A bill for injunction should not be dismissed on reversal of an order granting a preliminary injunction, where complainants had no opportunity before hearing below to inspect or rebut defendants' affidavits.[17] A jury is not a matter of right in a suit for injunction, though the court may order trial of issues by a jury for its information.[18]

Costs.—In proceedings to restrain a commission from removing an officer under unconstitutional laws, the members of the commission are personally chargeable with costs, since they acted of their own wrong, but the sheriff to whom the custody of the office was given is not liable for costs, he being given no authority under the law and having made no threats to act.[19]

§ 5. Decree, judgment or order for permanent injunction.—The decree or judgment must not be broader than is necessary to protect complainant's rights nor invade defendant's rights;[20] and must conform to the pleadings.[21] Less than the

and others who may be shown to have taken part in the violence or intimidation (Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102); to warrant issuance of a temporary injunction against boycott (Gray v. Bldg. Trades Council [Minn.] 97 N. W. 663).

Admissibility: In an action for injunction to restrain the city and the council from proceeding under an award of printing to a newspaper, evidence of the average price paid in the city for printing of that character showing the bid accepted to be reasonable, is immaterial where the ground was that the bid of the successful paper greatly exceeded that of another. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Printing Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 802. In a suit by one having an easement in a lawn and beach to restrain construction of a sea-wall which will diminish the beach, testimony that beneficiaries of the trustee holding title to the lots when platted and under whom plaintiff claimed, never knew or consented to a conveyance of the lots by the trustee to plaintiff, is not admissible unless it is shown that the terms of the trust required any such knowledge or consent. Testimony that beneficiaries of the trustee holding title to the lots when platted paid for the lots is properly excluded as not tending to show that such trustees could not convey an absolute title as far as defendants are concerned to plaintiff who holds the paper title. Testimony that the beneficiaries of a trustee did not consent to the bringing of the suit is properly excluded. But testimony of complainant in support of his claim under a deed was harmless if immaterial. So is the exclusion of testimony that a certain deed made to plaintiff by the trustees was without consent of the beneficiaries therein named where he sued as individual proprietor and not to enforce any rights as trustee. 20. Where it appears in an action to restrain the shutting off of waters from certain creek from plaintiff's premises, that a certain amount of water has been dedicated to public use, a decree in favor of plaintiff must limit his rights to use of the surface waters. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 Pac. 395. Where complainant in a suit to restrain a city from opening an alley through his property, was given relief on the ground that he had obtained title by adverse possession and had made valuable improvements, a decree was too broad which restrained the city forever from entering on the land. Crigler v. Mexico [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 384. An injunction forbidding a commission from acting in any way under a statute giving it power to reduce the salary of an officer or to remove him, is too broad, where the provisions of the statute as to the first power are valid but void as to the second. Corscadden v. Haswell, 84 N. Y. Supp. 597. If the use of a dam by retaining the water during the day and discharging it at night is the only cause which results in injury to owners of prior water rights, an injunction will not lie against the maintenance of the dam, restraint of the injurious practice being sufficient. Lone Tree Ditch Co. v. Rapid City E. & G. Co. [S. D.] 93 N. W. 650. Where plaintiff showed perfect title to land and his petition admitted a lease of timber to defendant, and the evidence showed that the latter was cutting much timber which did not come within the lease, which defendant denied, the injunction granted should not restrain him from cutting timber but merely from cutting timber not included in the lease [Civ. Code 1895, § 4927]. Simmons v. McPhaul, 117 Ga. 751. A decree restraining the infringement of a trade name and prohibiting defendant from "making use of the word" in any manner in connection with goods made for the same purpose as complainant's must relief asked by the prayer may be given.[22] Should defendant be prejudiced he should move for correction.[23] A judgment perpetually enjoining the commission of a certain act is sufficient without any further adjudication, where the findings of fact and conclusions of law are full and specific.[24] Generally, legal rights will not be settled,[25] but pecuniary damages may be awarded complainant where injunctive relief is denied, rather than remit him to an action at law.[26] Persons restrained from erecting a sea-wall on a different line from the place where it formerly stood cannot complain that the order restrained only a circumstantial change from the former line instead of any change; the exact line where such wall could be erected need not be defined.[27] Where trespass is restrained to prevent circuity of actions and a multiplicity of suits, all parties to such action should be enjoined.[28] Where suit was brought against certain defendants to construe a law under which

be construed with reference to the proceeding and its purpose and cannot prohibit the use of words on packages of goods in a statement that such product is not so named, but is better, purchasers not thereby being deceived. Enoch Morgan's Sons Co. v. Gibson [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 420. An injunction against breach of contract by an actress for a season of a play pending suit or until further order of court is too broad and should not be made to continue beyond the close of the season which commencing in May could in no event extend beyond June 1st of the following year. Shubert v. Angeles, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 625. Since a decree granting an injunction must be construed in connection with the matters complained of in the bill, one restraining a city from removing or interfering with the poles, wires or appliances of a telephone company is not open to objection as interfering with the police powers of the city to be exercised in cutting down poles or wires in case of fire or other public necessity where the prayer of the bill is based entirely on allegations as to unlawful interference by the city in order to obstruct the lawful operation of the telephone system. Duluth v. Abbott [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 137.

21. Where plaintiff is not entitled under the proof, to an injunction, a new trial will not be granted to enable him to recover damages where the issue as to damages is not raised by the pleadings. Bigelow v. Los Angeles [Cal.] 75 Pac. 111. A petition alleging that a judgment had been satisfied and asking that an injunction against its enforcement be perpetual and for general relief, will justify a decree restraining execution. Deleshaw v. Edelen [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 413. Where a cross-bill against the city and a company was filed in a suit by the city to enjoin a street railway company from laying tracks in streets for the purpose of restraining the laying of tracks by the second company, and on an adjournment of the hearing on the motion for preliminary injunctions on both bill and cross-bill, an order in two paragraphs was entered, the first continuing the restraining order entered on the original bill and the second restraining both defendants and complainant in the cross-bill from laying tracks until further orders and before further hearing the original bill was dismissed and the cross-bill dismissed by complainant as to the city, since the controversy on the cross-bill is between the two companies claiming conflicting rights—the second paragraph relates merely to such controversy and properly restrained any change in the status by either party and remained in force. Consolidated Traction Co. v. Crawfordsville, 125 Fed. 247.

22. Where an abutting owner sought to restrain operation of a street railway in a street and it appears that the operation of the road was legal except for casting an additional burden on the fee because of the operation of an interurban service, the plaintiffs were entitled to an abatement of the additional servitude by injunction, though they had asked for abatement of the entire road. Younkin v. Milwaukee L., H. & T. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 215.

23. Where evidence in an action for trespass showed that defendant trespassed upon only a part of the entire tract described in the complaint but the court through inadvertence included the whole tract in the injunction restraining further trespass, thus including places where defendant might have a lawful right to go, the prejudiced party should request a proper correction before demanding a reversal of the order denying a new trial. Arndt v. Thomas [Minn.] 96 N. W. 1125.

24. Walker v. McGinness [Idaho] 72 Pac. 885.

25. Damage for past acts as to which the right to recover is complete when the bill is filed and may be enforced by a single action at law, cannot be recovered in a suit to enjoin future acts. Stevenson v. Morgan, 64 N. J. Eq. 219. Where chancery before adoption of the constitution had jurisdiction in a case regardless of the statute but had no inherent jurisdiction to enjoin a mere trespass, though such power may be conferred by statute, the power to settle the damages of the trespass cannot at the same time be conferred. McMillan v. Wiley [Fla.] 33 So. 993.

Where a decree restraining collection of a judgment and allowing a set-off against it requires as a condition for the injunction that a sum more than sufficient to satisfy an attorney's lien on the judgment should be paid into court, the relative priorities of the set-off and the lien need not be considered. Commercial State Bank v. Ketchum [Neb.] 96 N. W. 614.

they claimed as legatees, and it was determined that some of them took no interest under the law, all the legatees will not be restrained from suing the executors to recover legacies.[29]

Effect and enforcement.—A formal order for injunction relates back to the date of the decision granting it.[30] An injunction by one court to stay proceedings of another affects the parties only and not the jurisdiction of the other court.[31] An order restraining defendant from using premises for other than a certain business "during the pendency of this action" is one pendente lite.[32] Mere refusal to render judgment on a petition, where the court offers to hear the case on the merits and plaintiffs dismiss the suit, is not a denial of the right to amend the petition.[33] An order to prevent defendants and their associates from congregating about plaintiff's premises to induce employes to quit work and from interfering with the employes on the premises or with those who wish to enter the employment, and to prevent interference with the employes while passing to and from their work, meant that defendants and all persons subject to the order were prevented from personal violence or intimidation, though such acts were not performed on the premises.[34] Where an instrument is not negotiable under the statute and is subject to the same defenses in the hands of a bona fide purchaser as in the hands of original buyer, a perpetual injunction after full hearing between the original parties restraining its collection is a complete defense to a suit brought by such purchaser before maturity and without notice.[35] Where an abutting landowner sought to restrain a railroad from using a street, and after recovery the railroad's lessor sued to condemn his rights, and the verdict in condemnation allowed interest on the award from date of filing of the petition, but was set aside, such award of interest will not estop the landowner from enforcing the first decree restraining the use of the street.[36] Where it was determined that title to a river front in a state was in individuals and not in the city, and the city was restrained from interfering with possession, use or enjoyment of the wharf property belonging to plaintiffs, one who was a stranger to the suit may enforce the injunction to prevent ejectment by the city for recovery of property on the river front, only when he shows that the property in question was the identical property in the former state and to which the injunction related, it not being sufficient to show that he obtained title from the original plaintiffs.[37]

§ 6. Violation and punishment.—One violating an injunction with knowledge of it is liable for contempt, though not a party to the suit, or if a party, where he is not served with process in it.[38] That defendant acted in good faith,[39] or that the

A writ of injunction need not be served upon one to make him guilty of contempt in its violation, if he knows actually of its existence. Ex parte Stone [Tex. Crim. App.] 72 S. W. 1000. Attorneys who deliberately advise a defendant in an injunction suit after an order restraining him from interfering with the use of, or access to a dock leased by plaintiff, to resist the plaintiff on the ground that it was the latter's duty to keep part of the dock in repair, though such duty was not included in the order which gave plaintiff the right to use the other half when necessary, were guilty of contempt where they were familiar with all the facts. Stolts v. Tuska, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 81. A person not a party to the suit, nor an agent or servant of a party, nor in privity with any party, may be guilty of contempt in wilfully doing an act which he knows to be prohibited by injunction, not by being technically guilty of a violation of the order but by disrespect to the court, disregarding its decree, and may be punished without reference to the judge who issued the injunction stated that defendant might obtain permission of the city council to act without violation of the injunction,[40] or that at time of violation he had filed a motion to modify it,[41] or that he acted on advice of counsel,[42] is no defense, though such facts may be shown in mitigation.[43] It may be shown in mitigation in proceedings for contempt that the judge stated that the injunction was dissolved, that no formal decree was necessary, and that defendants might proceed.[44] Disobedience of a void order is not contempt.[45] Defendant is not liable for violation by others.[46] There can be no violation by one ignorant of the injunction.[47] That disobedience of a statutory injunction is a criminal offense will not exempt defendant from punishment for contempt.[48] Acts amounting to violation of particular injunctions will be found in the footnote.[49]

Disobedience of an injunction against passage and approval of an ordinance merely on the ground that it will not conserve best public interests is not contempt, the injunction being void. Wright v. People [Colo.] 73 Pac. 869.

46. One restrained from causing or negligently permitting obstruction of a culvert. Corwin v. Erie R. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 555. One restrained from diverting water from a lake and ordered to fill up the ditch by which they were diverted is not liable for contempt because the dams he had built were removed by others without his knowledge. Stock v. Jefferson Tp. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 769. Damage to one party by acts of another alleged to have been in violation of an injunction, cannot be recovered by a proceeding for contempt. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Minn. Moline Plow Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 735, 736.

47. Defendant in a suit for infringement of a patent having given a bond to respond in damages on recovery by complainant is not liable criminally for contempt of court for offering to sell the infringed article after the issuance of a mandate from the appellate court directing a decree restraining such sale, where the decree has not been entered and defendant has no actual notice of its direction. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Minn. Moline Plow Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 735, 736. That one of several ticket brokers filed an answer in a suit against them to prevent their dealing in certain tickets, will not show his knowledge of the issuance of an injunction so as to render it binding upon him, making him liable to punishment for violation, where it appears that he had no knowledge of the suit and that attorneys were retained by other brokers who authorized them to represent all defendants. Sufficiency of evidence to show violation of an injunction against intimidation or interference with employes (Ex parte Richards, 117 Fed. 658); to show violation of an injunction against intimidation of plaintiff's employes and congregating for the purpose of intimidating persons seeking his employment (Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Blowers' Ass'n, 64 N. J. Eq. 644); to show defendants in contempt for violation of an injunction in that they acted as confederates and associates of defendants in the bill (Ex parte Richards, 117 Fed. 658).

Violation of order restraining building of railroad tracks. Consolidated Traction Co. v. Crawfordsville, 125 Fed. 247. One enjoined from manufacturing and using a machine invented by the employe of another cannot avoid the effect of the restraint by organizing a corporation for making and using machines which he controls. Westervelt v. Nat. Mfg. Co. [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 169. Where defendants were enjoined from obstructing in any manner, plaintiff's access to a dock or the use thereof, which he had leased, their act in afterward building a fence so as to prevent plaintiff's access was a clear violation of the order. Stolts v. Tuska, 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 81. An order restraining the sale of liquor under a void license will not restrain procurement of a license according to law and the sale of liquor under such license when issued will not violate the injunction. Wray v. Harrison, 116 Ga. 93. Entry on a mining claim to post notices of discovery of mineral lodes with the intention to locate, will not violate a restraining order against continuation of trespass by sinking shafts. Harley v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 27 Mont. 388, 71 Pac. 407. Workmen who threatened another workman with death if he went to work in a certain shop and took part in an assault on a second workman, are guilty of criminal contempt after issuance of a preliminary injunction prohibiting acts of violence. Stearns v. Marr, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 252. Defendants restrained from the use of a system of numbers devised by plaintiffs or similar numbers based thereon, may be punished for contempt for telling customers to order by a system the same as the old except for insertion of a figure in front of each of the old numbers. Brown v. Braunstein, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 499. Issuance of circulars by Asking a second injunction for a new cause will not bar the right to petition for punishment of violation of the first.[50] Application to the federal district court to restrain the state court from punishing a bankrupt for contempt in failing to appear before a referee for examination may be treated as an application for stay of the proceeding, where no fine has been imposed and it appears that no actual contempt was intended.[51] Whether a preliminary injunction applied to a particular contract is a question which the court will not determine on a motion to punish for contempt, but only after hearing on the merits.[52] An affidavit for warrant of arrest for contempt, in violation of the order against interference with work by intimidation, may be made by any one knowing the facts, though not a party to the suit.[53] Facts constituting contempt of an order must be shown by affidavit, but an affidavit will not authorize contempt proceedings against one as to an injunction restraining defendants and their agents and employes, where he does not appear one advertising for sale articles adjudged to be infringements of a patent, is not a breach of an injunction which has been ordered against the sale of such articles. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Minn. Moline Plow Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 735, 736. An injunction restraining operation of an ice chute in a street after a certain day and directing its removal, is violated by operation after such date, though the method of construction is so changed as not to interfere with public travel but not to obviate entirely dangers from its use. Young v. Rothrock [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1105. A corporation restrained from making or selling a patented article must take such precautions as will insure compliance of its employees with the injunction, and the officers will be liable to fine for contempt where the order is violated by the employees through their carelessness though without intention on their part. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Christensen Engineering Co., 121 Fed. 562. Where pending suit the supreme court restrained an owner and his contractor from tearing down the lease-hold of tenants, the fact that the owner afterwards recovered the property in the municipal court by dispossession proceedings will not authorize him to proceed with such work, and if he and the contractor do so, they are guilty of criminal contempt for disobedience of the injunction [Code Civ. Proc. § 8, subd. 3]. In re Granz, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 399. An order restraining interference with the conduct of persons is not violated by showing that defendants attacked complainant's employee, while returning from a place in the evening where he had gone after the close of business for defendants, where it also appears that they previously had a quarrel with such employee in complainant's store; nor by evidence that defendants boarded a train bringing employes to the works and by talking to them induced them not to go, even though by misrepresentations that complainant would not allow them to go outside the works. Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Ass'n, [N. J. Eq.] 53 Atl. 138. A decision filed in a suit by an abutting owner to restrain work by a town on a street, that the temporary injunction should be dissolved and the petition dismissed on the merits, is a dissolution of the injunction without entry of formal decree pursuant to the decision so that town officers working on the street after such decision filed but before entry of the formal decree, were not guilty of contempt for violating the injunction. Coffey v. Gamble, 117 Iowa, 545. Where an injunction was issued against the sale of certain property and thereafter dissolved but kept in force by the bond and within the time allowed for filing the bond defendants made the sale in contempt of the temporary injunction the sale accruing between parties to the suit and the property remaining in possession of the purchaser, a finding was unwarranted on final hearing that defendants were unable to comply with the decree and turned over the property to plaintiff. Commercial State Bank v. Ketcham [Neb.] 92 N. W. 998. Where attorneys for a judgment creditor of a bankrupt after entry of an order in the bankruptcy court restraining them and their client from proceeding further in supplemental proceedings to collect the judgment already instituted in a state court applied for and obtained an order from the state court adjudging the bankrupt in contempt for failure to obey an order made before the bankruptcy and requiring him to pay them a fine equal to judgment and costs, such application was a continuation of the supplemental proceedings plainly violating the injunction and they were guilty of contempt of the bankruptcy court. In re Fortunato, 123 Fed. 622.

50. Where an abutting owner brought suit to restrain threatened trespass in a street by a railroad company on the ground that he owned the fee, and before final decree the railroad took possession and laid tracks in the street, after which a city ordinance was passed requiring it to elevate its tracks, and the abutting owner sought to restrain such act, the suit being removed to the federal courts, and also a subsequent suit by the railroad's lessor to condemn his rights in the street, the filing of his second complaint to restrain the second trespass was not a waiver of his rights under the first decree so as to prevent his petition to punish the railroad officers for its violation. by the affidavit to be one of such persons.[54] Doubtful questions are not to be resolved against respondent.[55] Circumstantial evidence will not warrant a judgment of guilty of contempt involving imprisonment, though his denial is of such a character as to create a strong impression of violation.[56] Where evidence is given in an action for damages for violation of an injunction restraining manufacture and use of a machine, that plaintiff's business has suffered by diminished sales, testimony is admissible to show cost of manufacture of the article which the machine was intended to produce.[57] Where defendant was sufficiently informed of the misconduct charged against him in contempt proceedings for violation, a variance in the evidence admitted under the relator's affidavit is immaterial.[58] An error in the description of land in an opinion affirming an injunction, restraining his interference with waters of a creek, will not avail him in contempt proceedings for violation of such order.[59] Where the court took no notice of violation when it dissolved the injunction as improvidently granted without jurisdiction, such violation could not be raised in a subsequent collateral proceeding as a defense to an alleged violation of law.[60] Where an order is issued restraining interference with plaintiff's business, a reference may be ordered to take testimony as to an alleged violation.[61] Violation of a preliminary injunction cannot be punished by instructing that defendant's testimony in his own behalf is not to be considered,[62] nor can obedience be rewarded by instructing that he is entitled to a verdict.[63] One who violated an order against interference with access to a dock was guilty of a contempt of court calling for a fine and damages and expenses of plaintiff which may be proved, and imprisonment until he shows a willingness to comply fairly with the order.[64] Contempt in violating an injunction in a suit by an individual for the public is criminal, and the supreme court may review the punishment.[65] Operation of an order punishing defendant for contempt in violation of an injunction granted by an interlocutory decree will not be suspended until final hearing.[66]

§ 7. Liability on injunction bond.—Recovery cannot be had against the sureties on an injunction bond until they have had their day in court. A telephone company having no rights in streets, because of failure to obtain municipal consent before commencing to build its lines, was not injured by an injunction restraining construction, and could not recover damages on the injunction bond for illegal issuance.[67] Where plaintiff in an action on a bond made all the proceedings and record in the injunction suit a part of his petition, a demurrer thereto will be properly sustained where such petition conclusively shows the injunction to have been rightfully issued.[68] No recovery can be had on a bond given on issuance of a temporary injunction, where there are grounds for its issuance though stated for the first time in an amended petition and though the injunction is dissolved because of condemnation proceedings begun after the writ was granted.[69] Where an injunction is ancillary only to the principal relief, evidence as to the value of services on a motion to dissolve and on demurrer to the bill will not authorize a recovery for attorney's services on the injunction bond.[70] Where an injunction restrains a tenant from disposing of crops subject to the landlord's lien and the tenant admitted the petition, but denied that the rent was due and set up as a defense a breach of the lease and defendant after judgment filed a stay bond, whereupon the injunction was dissolved, the order of dissolution was not a determination that the injunction had been improvidently granted so as to sustain an action on the injunction bond.[71] Damages from the issuance of a restraining order must be limited to the amount of the bond required of the one who obtains the order, unless he acted maliciously.[72] Counsel fees and necessary expenses, in an unsuccessful effort to dissolve and in conducting the main action, may be recovered on final dissolution in a suit on the statutory bond on a preliminary injunction to restrain a certain action.[73]

§ 8. Liability for wrongful injunction.—That defendant, pending the injunction, sued out attachment against complainant and caused a levy on goods, will not bar a recovery of damages for wrongful issuance of the injunction, since such act is not in violation.[74]

INNS, RESTAURANTS, AND LODGING HOUSES.

Who are innkeepers.—One holding himself out to the public as an innkeeper will be bound thereby.[1]

Public regulation and inspection.—The lessee, and not the lessor, has been held to be under the duty of constructing fire escapes.[2] A building is "enlarged" by raising its walls and flattening the roof so as to make a new story, though its height is not increased.[3]

Rights, duties and liabilities.—All losses of property of guests by fire at a public inn or hotel are prima facie due to negligence of proprietor, subject to rebuttal, by showing that the accident happened by irresistible force or unavoidable accident.[4]

A restaurant keeper has fulfilled his duties where he has placarded his place with warnings enjoining care, disclaimed on bills of fare, liability for goods not checked, employed a watchman to protect property, and provided a sufficient checking system.[5]

Saloon keepers are required to use reasonable care to protect guests from injury at the hands of persons permitted to frequent their places of business.[6]

is that of a gratuitous bailee,[7] and he is not guilty of negligence in delivering the property on a forged order to one who had dined with the guest and had been seen in his company a number of times.[8] The clerk may bind the proprietor by an agreement to forward packages addressed to departing guests and received after departure,[9] and the innkeeper failing therein is liable as an ordinary bailee.[10] The patronage of the guest is a sufficient consideration to support the agreement.[11]

Liens.—The laws of New York, giving innkeepers and lodging house keepers a lien on the property of guests,[12] cannot be invoked by a landlord against his tenant,[13] nor enforced against property, the title and right of possession of which is in another.[14]

Damages are recoverable by guest for wrongful exclusion from room to which he has been assigned,[15] and for sickness caused by eating impure food.[16] A lodging house keeper is not required to relet rooms she has let for a definite term on the roomer's departure before the expiration thereof, where he has requested that the rooms be reserved for him or some tenant he would procure.[17]

INQUEST OF DEATH.[18]

The verdict of a coroner's jury as to the cause of death is simply evidence not conclusive, to be considered with other evidence in a civil case.[19] The testimony and verdict received by him has no judicial character, so as to be admissible in an action to show the cause of death.[20]

On a prosecution for murder, questions as to evidence and witnesses at the inquest cannot be asked of the coroner as a witness,[21] except for purposes of impeachment.[22] In Louisiana, the inquest is admitted in a prosecution for murder.[23]

sanity, while sometimes deemed sufficient at common law to warrant taking custody of property, is now often made so by statute.[26] Such statutes are constitutional.[27] A probability that a person will in future act without discretion in his business affairs will not justify taking control of his property by guardianship,[28] nor does mere eccentricity,[29] nor feeble health.[30]

On an inquest of insanity under a statute providing for the reprieve of prisoners who become insane after sentence, the test is ability to distinguish right and wrong as in criminal cases.[31]

§ 2. Inquisitions.—The common law method of adjudicating insanity by an inquest of a jury is still most commonly followed.[32] An adjudication without notice to the alleged lunatic or giving him an opportunity to be heard should be allowed to be traversed, though the evidence justified a finding of incompetency.[33] Notice to relatives of an inquest of lunacy is not for their benefit but for that of the public. Hence it is jurisdictional and cannot be waived.[34] A false information of insanity in good faith is not actionable.[35] No appeal lies from a finding that a person is not of unsound mind.[36] The party aggrieved by the finding of the inquisition can have a remedy only by traverse,[37] though the proceedings may be reviewed as upon certiorari.[38] Where there was reasonable doubt of the propriety of the result of an inquisition, a traverse should be allowed if the alleged lunatic intelligently desires it.[39] The inquisition and finding of the sheriff's jury are admissible at the trial of the traverse as prima facie evidence only.[40] In collateral proceedings a decree upon inquisition of lunacy is conclusive evidence of the insanity of the party from the time when it is found[41] till revoked, even pending a traverse;[42] but it is only presumptive evidence of his incapacity during all the previous time referred to in the findings.[43]

§ 3. Guardianship and support.—The power to appoint a guardian generally in modern times depends upon the construction of statutes.[44] Such statutes must be strictly complied with to give jurisdiction.[45] A right of action is property for jurisdictional purposes.[46] Neither consent of the insane person[47] nor of his wife[48] can give jurisdiction. Proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of an insane person are in personam and not in rem.[49] The domicile of the incompetent is primarily the proper forum,[50] even when the same issue is pending in another jurisdiction.[51] Appeals from appointment will be dismissed if not perfected,[52] and the incompetent may dismiss when appeal is in his name.[53]

loan made without grounds of suspicion of insanity, a mortgage securing it will not be ordered canceled.[68] Acceptance of a gift inter vivos will be presumed where the donee is of unsound mind.[69] Until a committee is appointed, there is a legal presumption of sanity, and a purchaser for value without notice will be protected.[70] Lack of business capacity will not rebut it if it appears that the grantor had sufficient intellect to know he was parting with property.[71] Mere weakness of mind not amounting to practical imbecility will not invalidate a conveyance not tainted with fraud or undue influence,[72] but if mental deficiency is so marked that the party has not exercised deliberate judgment, a contract lacks the vital element of a meeting of minds.[73] After a judicial declaration of insanity and until it is superseded, there is a presumption of insanity, and all contracts are wholly void;[74] but a conveyance by a lunatic, after an inquisition in lunacy is shown by the record to have been set aside, is valid.[75]

Merely handing to an officer is not enough.[80]

The duty of a court to protect incompetent persons extends to all cases where the fact of incompetency exists.[83] There is a common law right of action for necessaries furnished an insane person.[84]

INSOLVENCY.[85]

§ 1. Effect of federal bankruptcy act on state insolvency laws.—The passage of the federal bankrupt act suspended the operation of the state insolvency laws,[86] except as to persons and cases not within the purview of that act,[87] and a state statute relating to insolvent mining corporations,[88] or permitting proceedings against a farmer, are not superseded.[89] Pending proceedings under the state laws were not barred by the passage of the federal act.[90] A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors is a pending proceeding.[91]

§ 2. Procedure and parties to adjudicate insolvency.—A foreign corporation is not entitled to the benefit of the act as a voluntary insolvent.[92] When an assignment is made to the court, the seal of the court or judge need not be affixed to it.[93] In all cases, the petition in voluntary insolvency must state the county of the residence of the insolvent and the term of residence.[94]

court appointing his committee without first obtaining permission to sue the committee. Carter v. Burrall, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 395.

83. Whether a committee had been appointed or not. Wurster v. Armfield, 175 N. Y. 256. A statute providing for the defense of a person judicially declared insane and that such declaration shall be conclusive of his insanity does not prevent a court from taking cognizance of the fact of insanity of one not declared insane. Judgment by default where insanity exists but does not appear on the record involves error within Code 1873, § 3154. Hawley v. Griffin [Iowa] 92 N. W. 113. A statute providing that a guardian of an insane person upon oath that he has no property of his ward out of which to pay expenses need give no security for costs applies to an appeal bond (Alexander v. Morris, 109 Tenn. 724); though Code Civ. Proc. § 3271 provides that in actions by the committee of an incompetent the court may require the plaintiff to give security for costs, it does not allow security to be required of a plaintiff in an action against such committee (Kelly v. Kelly, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 519).

§ 4. Administration of insolvent estate.—The assignee of the insolvent member of a firm is the proper party to avoid a preference made with individual fund, and not the assignee of the firm.[97] The burden of proving a case of preferential transfer within the statute is on the trustee.[98] The assignee affirms a mortgage as a valid incumbrance by the insolvent, by bringing an action to recover the value of the property on the theory that the mortgage constitutes a preference.[99]

A claim is seasonably presented if presented before the order for the final dividend.[1] Payments by a surety of the insolvent, after the petition filed, are provable claims.[2] A creditor of an insolvent firm may prove his debt for the full amount, though he holds partial security on the property of one of the partners.[3] Preference is given to claims for trust funds.[4] The services of the assignee and general expenses of his administration are to be passed upon by the court of insolvency.[5]

A referee cannot review the act of the court authorizing the assignee to compromise a claim,[6] nor can he determine the right of the assignee to purchase at his own sale.[7]

The insolvent cannot question a compromise of a claim by the assignee authorized by the court,[8] and his remedy to avoid a purchase by the assignee at his own sale is in equity.[9]

§ 5. Rights and liabilities affected by insolvency and discharge of insolvent.—Compliance with statutory conditions is essential to procure discharge.[10] Under the statute of California, a debt created in a fiduciary capacity is not affected by the insolvent's discharge.[11] An appeal lies from the denial of a motion for a new trial of the petition for a discharge.[12]

§ 3. Charging with respect to matters of fact, or commenting on weight of evidence.—In some jurisdictions it is allowed the court to charge as to the weight of evidence, but such charge must fully advise the jury that they are not bound thereby and must decide on the facts on their own responsibility.[36] In most states, the court may not comment on the evidence or express an opinion as to its weight,[37] and it is error to instruct that evidence is clear as to a certain issue.[38]

Percifull v. Coleman, 24 Ky. L. R. 1685, 72 S. W. 29.

Rule not violated: An instruction that if the verdict should be for plaintiff they could

The rule is not violated by an instruction that testimony in rebuttal is only to be considered on the question of credibility of a witness,[39] nor by an instruction construing the legal effect of an instrument in evidence.[40] It is not an expression of opinion for the court to state his recollection of the testimony.[41] An instruction may point out the legal consequence of certain facts of which there is evidence, if the jury find them to be established.[42]

§ 4. Form of instruction.—It is not required that each instruction should cover the entire case.[43] Where the instruction assumes to define the whole law of not exceed the amount of the demand in the declaration is not an expression of an opinion that plaintiff's injuries were such that his damages could be limited only by the prayer. Goldthorpe v. Clark-Nickerson Lumber Co., 31 Wash. 467, 71 Pac. 1091. An instruction allowing a recovery up to the amount sued for on a quantum meruit is not objectionable as indicating the existence of evidence justifying an allowance of any amount within the sum indicated while in fact there was no evidence to support any finding less than half that amount. Ladd v. Witte [Wis.] 92 N. W. 365. A mere statement by the court in response to a motion to strike out certain evidence in an action against a municipality for injuries on a sidewalk that a sidewalk did not generally become dilapidated in a day or two was not an expression of opinion as to the condition of the walk. Wissler v. Atlantic [Iowa] 98 N. W. 131. Where there was evidence of special aptitude of a boy for a certain line of work, an instruction that such fact did not establish that he would be able through such work to earn large sums was not an invasion of the province of the jury. Snyder v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. [Mich.] 91 N. W. 643. In an action on a policy by a wife where the policy was made out to the husband an instruction that if an agent by mistake insures the property in the wrong name the rightful party cannot sue without reformation of the contract "but I think you will not have any difficulty about going into a court of equity about reformation of the contract" is not a charge on the weight of the evidence. Montgomery v. Del. Ins. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 934. An instruction that a carrier giving a check for baggage took the burden of care in its transportation and delivery is not on the facts. Harzburg v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 539. An instruction is not open to the objection of an expression of opinion that plaintiff was entitled to recover which tells the jury if they find plaintiff entitled to recover, the amount was to be determined from the facts, the court stating that the jury could not of course fix the exact amount in dollars and cents, but to weigh the testimony without fear or favor and allow an amount that would reasonably compensate her. Bell v. Spokane, 30 Wash. 508, 71 Pac. 31. A statement that much evidence had been admitted concerning an old contract to enable the jury to understand the entire relations of the parties when the old contract was said to have been abrogated by the new does not comment on the evidence where the jury are cautioned that his reference to facts was not intended as an intimation of an opinion, but the jury were the sole judges of the facts. Anderson v. McDonald, 31 Wash. 274, 71 Pac. 1037. An instruction that the jury may not consider precautions of defendant after the injury is not objectionable as a charge on the facts. Gallinan v. Union Hardwood Mfg. Co., 65 S. C. 192. An instruction held not on weight of evidence by charging prima facie negligence in fires set out by locomotives unless defendant shows proper equipment of smokestack. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Florence [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 802. A charge that the failure to give signals required by statute is negligence is not on the weight of the evidence, the statute making the company liable for injuries caused by failure of signals. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Taff [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 89. Instruction not on weight of evidence as assuming that a failure to provide a stool to assist passengers in alighting would constitute negligence. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. v. Sherrill [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 429. An instruction that if prior to the accident, in which a conductor was injured, it was the custom of conductors to sleep in cabooses as plaintiff was doing when injured, and that such caboose was run into and plaintiff injured by defendant's negligence and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury and plaintiff was free from contributory negligence then the jury should find for plaintiff is not an instruction on the weight of the evidence. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McDowell [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 974. A charge that if the jury did not find negligence the proximate cause or if decedent was guilty of contributory negligence then verdict should be for defendant, was not on weight of evidence. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Karrer [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 328. An instruction that if the jury believed defendant's testimony they must find for him does not suggest that this is the only evidence tending to that result. Bruska v. Neugent [Wis.] 93 N. W. 454.

38. Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 891.

39. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Harris [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 335.

40. Tinsley v. McIlhenny, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 352.

41. Coombs v. Mason, 97 Me. 270. Instructions are not objectionable as commenting on the evidence because the court states the claim of the party as shown by the evidence and his response to a juryman as to his recollection of the evidence qualified by the statement that they should determine the matter from the evidence. Drumheller v. American Surety Co., 30 Wash. 530, 71 Pac. 25.

42. Schmuck v. Hill [Neb.] 96 N. W. 158.

43. Hedlum v. Holy Terror Min. Co. [S. D.] 92 N. W. 31; Johnson v. Gehbauer, 159 Ind. 271; Atlanta Consol. St. R. Co. v. Jones, 116 Ga. 369. An instruction in an action against the case and omits a material element from the definition, the case will be reversed.[44] The facts essential to recovery by plaintiff may be grouped in one instruction when not tending to mislead or indicate an opinion.[45] The court may not present the case of one of the parties fully and with great particularity and the case of the other party only in general terms.[46] The court is not bound to repeat its instructions.[47]

Verbal inelegancies and inaccuracies will not cause a reversal[48] unless prejudice results.[49] It is not an objection that a charge could have been separated into somewhat shorter and more compact paragraphs.[50] Where there is nothing prejudicial in the charge, it will not be condemned because not neatly phrased.[51] Several acts of negligence should not be charged conjunctively, where either would have permitted a recovery.[52] It is no objection that the instruction states negatively circumstances warranting verdict for defendant in action for negligence.[53]

a municipality for defect in street that the city is not liable unless certain things are proved is not erroneous for failure to state that the city would not be liable for failure to prove notice. South Omaha v. Conroad [Neb.] 97 N. W. 796. The court need not state defendant's claim in an instruction devoted to plaintiff's claim where such claim is covered by another instruction. Chase v. Ainsworth [Mich.] 97 N. W. 404. It is not necessary to restate in each instruction the elements of an adverse holding; matter fully covered in a preceding instruction. Williams v. Shepherdson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 827. Where the rules of evidence are correctly stated in one paragraph the rule need not be repeated, but may be referred to in apt terms in the following instructions. Jensen v. Steiber [Neb.] 93 N. W. 697. Defenses of assumption of risks and contributory negligence may be covered by succeeding paragraphs of the charge where the court instructs the jury in a previous paragraph to return a verdict for plaintiff if defendant was guilty of negligence. Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Oldridge [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 581. A correct charge is not to be characterized as incorrect simply because of an omission to also charge in the same connection an additional pertinent legal proposition. Holston v. Southern R. Co., 116 Ga. 656. Where the instruction covered the rule governing recovery for negligence causing injury to one alighting from a moving train it was not necessary to repeat the rule as to the finding in the instruction as to contributory negligence. Gordon v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 132 N. C. 565. An instruction bearing on one phase of the case and correctly stating the law applicable thereto, is not erroneous because not coupled with a correct statement, relating to a distinct though somewhat related phase of the same matter. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

44. South Omaha v. Hager [Neb.] 95 N. W. 13.

47. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227.

48. The use of the singular to describe numerous parties. Schumpert v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 332; Citizens' G. & O. Min. Co. v. Whipple [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 557.

49. An instruction that where a transaction will admit "either" of an honest or a dishonest construction it is the duty of the jury to accept the former being erroneous it is not important that the insertion of the word "either" for "equally" was a clerical error. Detroit Elec. L. & P. Co. v. Applebaum [Mich.] 94 N. W. 12.

50. Smith v. Sioux City [Iowa] 93 N. W. 81.

51. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

52. Crow v. Citizens' R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 13.

53. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Karrer [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 328.

54. Fleming v. Southern R. Co., 132 N. C. 714. Instruction in action for wrongful death held indefinite. Merchants' & Planters' Oil Co. v. Burns [Tex.] 74 S. W. 758. An instruction in assumpsit to which was pleaded settlement of account, that all items then due will be presumed to be included is misleading where there is evidence showing one item not to be due. Beebe v. Smith, 194 Ill. 634. An instruction that the jury might look to the size and shape of the evidence of injury on plaintiff's shoulder is confusing, evidence being measured by its weight and not by "size and shape." Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Mayo, 134 Ala. 641.

55. Confusing and misleading as allowing the construction that officers of town should have known of defect in bridge. Bredlau v. Town of York, 115 Wis. 554. An instruction does not tend to mislead which tells the jury to find for plaintiff if they find the facts to be as stated in a certain prayer given for plaintiff unless they find the additional facts stated in another prayer given for defendant. Sellman v. Wheeler, 95 Md. 751. In an action against a city by a father for injuries to son an instruction that the verdict should be for the city if the father or son failed in ordinary care, required that both should have used such care and was misleading. San Antonio v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 28. An instruction is not objectionable as confusing by telling the jury that "in considering any one instruction, you must construe it in the light of and in harmony with every other instruction given, and so considering and so construing apply the principles in it enunciated to all the evidence admitted upon the trial." Lampman v. Bruning an instruction will not cause a reversal unless the jury would have been misled thereby.[56]

Argumentative instructions should not be given.[57] An instruction is not rendered argumentative by the fact that it states that the genuineness of certain letters was not disputed.[58]

Illustrative charge.—The court may state a hypothetical case to illustrate gross negligence amounting to willfulness.[59]

The instructions should be consistent.[60]—The error in giving an erroneous instruction is not cured by giving a correct instruction, as it will be impossible to say which instruction the jury followed.[61] Instructions are not conflicting where the office of one is to make the other more definite and certain.[62] The giving of two correct rules as to measure of damages is erroneous unless they are carefully distinguished.[63]

The instruction should be predicated on belief from the evidence,[64] and [Iowa] 94 N. W. 562. Instruction objected to as misleading as requiring the jury to determine in which one of three ways an accident happened as a condition to a verdict for plaintiff. Saucier v. New Hampshire Spinning Mills [N. H.] 56 Atl. 545. A judgment will be reversed where the court gave three different rules on measure of damages and it was impossible to determine which was followed by the jury. Arnett v. Huggins [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 765. In an action where there are several defendants all defending on distinct and different grounds an instruction in general terms which can apply to the defense made by only one of them should be refused. Lydick v. Gill [Neb.] 94 N. W. 109. Example of ambiguous instruction as to the credibility of witness but error in giving same not reversible error. Black v. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. [Utah] 73 Pac. 514. Example in street railway collision where term "careless rate of speed" could refer to either driver or car. Holden v. Missouri R. Co. [Mo.] 76 S. W. 973. An instruction that a brakeman has no right to go to a place of obvious danger and when he does so he is himself to blame; that the position of plaintiff in sitting on the car with his legs hanging over the sides was voluntarily assumed and that but for sitting in such place of hazard he would not have been injured is argumentative. Southern R. Co. v. Howell [Ala.] 34 So. 6. In an action on a policy where the defense was suicide and the coroner's verdict in evidence an instruction that the coroner was a public officer acting under oath and that his inquisition was competent evidence of the cause of death to be considered with other evidence, although not conclusive, is misleading and argumentative. repetition of the admonition with each clause of the instructions is not required.[65] They are not erroneous for using the word "think" instead of "believe" or "find" with reference to the evidence.[66]

§ 5. Relation of instructions to pleadings and evidence.—Instructions should be predicated upon the pleadings and the evidence in the case,[67] and instructions stating abstract principles of the law inapplicable to the pleadings and evidence should not be given, and may properly be refused.[68] The fact that they are given will not generally work a reversal.[69] The instructions should be limited strictly to the issues made by the pleadings.[70] Issues about which there is no competent evidence should be withdrawn from the jury.[71]

They should be limited to and applicable to the evidence adduced.[72] Requests under the instruction is erroneous, they being bound to assess according to the evidence. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Smith [Miss.] 35 So. 168. An instruction that the jury might "find any fact to be proved which they think may be rightfully and reasonably inferred from the evidence" did not authorize illogical inferences. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Rodert, 203 Ill. 413. A jury should not be instructed that if they "believe from the evidence" certain facts certain consequences will follow, as a mere belief is not sufficient to support a verdict. Sossamon v. Evidence sufficient to authorize instruction on affected with the vice of inapplicability should be refused.[73] The instruction is supported by sufficient evidence where there is any evidence of the fact, however slight.[74] A court is not justified in refusing to submit an issue by the fact that the evidence relating thereto is misleading.[75] The instruction may not be given where there is an entire absence of evidence.[76] The court may not instruct where the evidence on the issue is stricken[77] or erroneously admitted.[78] Where evidence not admissible under the pleadings is received without objection, the court may instruct as to the legal effect of such evidence.[79]

There should be a concrete application of the law to the facts.[80] This does not authorize the court to group facts and circumstances in the case and instruct as to Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 Pac. 164.

80. The fact that an instruction required of plaintiff the exercise of ordinary care will not justify refusal of an instruction applying the principle to the facts in issue. Mallen v. Waldowski, 203 Ill. 87.

what they prove,[81] nor declare as a matter of law what would constitute a preponderance of evidence,[82] but simply to frame the instructions so as to indicate on whom the burden lies.[83] The court may read the sections of the statute applicable to the action,[84] and in charging different sections of the statutes should explain each and not read them without explanation.[85]

§ 6. Stating issues to jury.—It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the issues to be tried,[86] and the court may not shirk this duty by referring them to the pleadings.[87] Thus the court may not tell the jury that a party has the burden of proving the material allegations of his pleading, unless these material allegations are stated.[88] Such an instruction is harmless where other instructions inform them what facts must be proved to warrant recovery.[89] A party prejudiced by a reference of the pleadings to the jury should request more specific instructions.[90] The language of the pleadings may be followed,[91] but a summary and brief statement of the issues is the better practice.[92] A statement of a claim, the basis of an instruction and largely incorporated in it, may be sent out with the instructions.[93] Where one count of the declaration was withdrawn in the presence of the jury, an instruction as to the case as made by the declaration will not be held to have misled jury.[94]

§ 7. Ignoring material matters.—Instructions which ignore material evidence are erroneous.[95]

81. Ordinarily the question of negligence is for the jury to be determined from all the facts and circumstances shown in the evidence and it is error for the court to group certain facts in evidence together and instruct that they constitute negligence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl [Neb.] 91 N. W. 880, 59 L. R. A. 920. 89. Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Schmelling, 197 Ill. 619. A reference to the pleadings will not work a reversal where no question of law is thus submitted and the several counts in the declaration contain a sufficient statement of a cause of action. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kinnare, 208 Ill. 388. It is no objection to an instruction to charge that if the jury believe certain specific facts constituting negligence had been proved and that plaintiff was injured in the "manner charged in the declaration" then verdict should be for plaintiff. Malott v. Hood, 201 Ill. 202. An instruction is not objectionable as allowing the jury to determine the issues which charges that if defendant was guilty "as charged in the declaration" and the negligence was the proximate cause plaintiff should recover if free from contributory negligence. 95. Grafeman Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Dairy Co., 96 Mo. App. 495; Pa. Co. v. Reidy, 198 Ill. 9. Where there was some evidence of notice by municipal officers of a defect an instruction that there was no evidence of actual knowledge was erroneous. Clark v. Brookfield, 97 Mo. App. 16. An instruction covering only a portion of the evidence

Ignoring issues, theories and defenses.—Instructions must conform to theory on which case is tried,[96] and the court may not ignore or exclude from the jury any of the issues, theories or defenses presented by the pleadings and the evidence,[97] unless the omitted facts are not controlling circumstances.[98] Where a trial court in a charge undertakes to concisely sum up and formulate the law which is to govern the jury in its deliberation, it is its duty to cover every legal question involved.[99] A submission on the theory of the petition is not erroneous because it ignores a defense set up as a counterclaim.[1] An instruction in an action for assault is not erroneous as ignoring right of self defense claimed by answer, where other instructions covered that matter.[2] A defendant may not complain of the court's action in stating plaintiff's theory, where a correct statement of defendant's theory was given.[3] The jury having been correctly instructed, it may not be objected that the charge did not contain another appropriate principle.[4]

§ 8. Giving undue prominence to evidence, issues and theories.—Contentions of either party must not be emphasized.[5] The rule is violated by instructions calling attention to and unduly emphasizing portions of the evidence,[6] as where the count charges that certain testimony is "strong evidence" or "a circumstance of great weight" or "entitled to strong consideration."[7] If an instruction is proper in other respects, it is not vitiated by merely naming the witness to whose testimony it is applicable.[8] should not be given where the issue is to be determined on all the evidence. Lufkin v. Lufkin, 182 Mass. 476.

96. La Grande Inv. Co. v. Shaw [Or.] 72 Pac. 795. Where in the progress of a trial there has been an apparent waiver by counsel of the submission of certain propositions of law and a submission upon certain other propositions the court may submit the cause to the jury in accordance with the position of counsel unless it is manifest that the counsel acted through inadvertence or mistake. Ignoring fact of obedience to orders of superior in action of servant for injuries. Ill. Steel Co. v. Wierzbicky [Ill.] 68 N. E. 1101. Instruction omitting issue of deceit pleaded in an action for price of animals. Swink v. Anthony, 96 Mo. App. 420. An instruction that plaintiff cannot recover if defendant was free from negligence makes unnecessary an instruction that he cannot recover if the negligence causing the injury was that of a third person. Muller v. Hale, 138 Cal. 163, 71 Pac. 81. The failure of the court to submit to the jury a question of fact in issue by the pleadings and not abandoned is error and under the Minnesota code requests and exceptions for refusal are not required [Laws Minn. 1901, c. 113]. Robertson v. Burton, 88 Minn. 151. Defendant in personal injury suit is entitled to instruction fully presenting question of contributory negligence. Schwartz v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 795. While a party cannot complain of the failure of the court to give in the charge to the jury a request not in writing, he can complain, without any request having been made at all, of the fact that the court has not presented with reasonable fullness and clearness a material and substantial contention made by him. Singling out important facts and telling jury that they did not constitute abandonment of homestead. White v. Epperson [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 851. An instruction that the jury in determining the cause of an injury might look to the evidence thereof on plaintiff's shoulder unduly emphasizes one phase of the evidence in that regard. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Mayo, 134 Ala. 641. There is a difference between issue and evidence and the requirement that the judge shall instruct as to all the issues raised does not require him to single out particular portions of the evidence and charge thereon. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. v. Lattimore [Ga.] 45 S. E. 453. A court may not lay hold of some particular piece of evidence and point out its probative relation to a number of collateral circumstances and incidental questions not primarily in issue, but bearing only on the ultimate issues of fact. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

7. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

8. Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227. An instruction does not give undue prominence to the testimony of a witness testifying that his signature to an instrument was forged by telling the jury that such testimony was not conclusive but to be considered with all

Repetition of instructions on phases of the case may amount to undue emphasis,[9] but is not always prejudicial.[10] There is no undue repetition by a statement of a doctrine in one instruction and its application to the facts in another case.[11] Instructions should not single out certain issues and theories of a case to the exclusion of other aspects allowing a recovery.[12] Undue prominence is not given by compliance with the request of the jury for a new instruction on contributory negligence.[13]

Underscoring words "bona fide" is not prejudicial to one alleging fraud.[14]

§ 9. Definition of terms used.—Legal and technical terms should be explained.[15] It is not necessary that the explanation of terms should immediately follow their use; it is sufficient if their meaning is made plain in any part of the charge,[16] and if fully defined in one instruction, a term may thereafter be used in other instructions without further explanation.[17] Failure to define will not work reversal in the absence of a request for definition.[18]

§ 10. Rules of evidence; proof, credibility and conflicts.—They should be instructed as to the parties to which evidence is applicable, where incompetent as to some.[19]

A charge that plaintiff must make out his case by a preponderance does not require him to prove immaterial facts,[20] but it is not proper to require him to make out his case by a "clear" preponderance of the evidence.[21]

Undue emphasis but insufficient to work reversal that court at the end of instructions repeated instruction as to burden of proof. Lewis v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 132 N. C. 382. There can be no review of an objection that the manner of the court in giving the charge was prejudicial where the record merely shows a repetition of an instruction as to the preponderance of evidence. O. R. Co. v. Scott, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 496.

19. In an action for damages for unlawful combination if there is a lack of evidence against some of the defendants the court should be requested to instruct that the evidence can only be considered against those whose acts and declarations were proved. Cleland v. Anderson [Neb.] 92 N. W. 306. Where a deposition is not competent against one of the parties to the action the instruction should limit it to the party

The court may refuse to instruct as to inferences from failure to produce a witness[22] or instrument.[23]

Credibility of witnesses.—The matter of credibility of witnesses is for the jury,[24] and their province may not be invaded by instructions as to the relative weight to be attached to their testimony.[25, 26] It is not error to charge that positive testimony is rather to be believed than negative, with the qualification that "other things being equal, and the witnesses of equal credibility."[27]

The jury may be instructed that preponderance of evidence is not determined by the number of witnesses, but also by their knowledge and opportunity for knowledge and their interest.[28]

The court may charge as to the weight of testimony of impeached witnesses.[29]

Before an instruction as to "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" can be given, there must be a sufficient basis in the testimony therefor.[30] Mere difference and conflict in the testimony of witnesses is not sufficient.[31] The instruction should limit maxim to falsity in some material issue or matter in regard to which witness cannot be presumed liable to mistake,[32] and the testimony must have been given willfully and knowingly.[33] The instruction may be given where testimony of a party is contradictory of written evidence.[34] There is no error in failing to charge as to credibility, where there was no request for such charge.[35]

25. Winklebleck v. Winklebleck [Ind.] 67 N. E. 451. Court may not tell the jury that "evidence as to the genuineness of handwriting is generally regarded as of a weak and unsatisfactory character." Davis v. Lambert [Neb.] 95 N. W. 592. Where questions of negligence and contributory negligence under the evidence is for the jury the court may not charge as a matter of law that if the jury believed the testimony of a particular witness to a particular fact they should find for defendant. Wagner v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 591.

26. As where they are told that while the testimony of experts is proper evidence it is not of as high grade as the testimony of credible eyewitnesses. Nelson v. McLellan, 31 Wash. 208, 71 Pac. 747.

27. Southern R. Co. v. O'Bryan [Ga.] 45 S. E. 1000.

28. An instruction that the preponderance of evidence is not determined by the number of witnesses but the jury may take into consideration the opportunity of the witnesses for seeing and knowing the things about which they testify, their conduct and demeanor, interest or lack of interest, probability or improbability of their statements in view of all the other facts and circumstances, though unskilfully drawn and inaccurate is not so far calculated to mislead as to justify reversal. Illinois Steel Co. v. Wierzbicky [Ill.] 68 N. E. 1101. The jury may be instructed to consider the personal interest of any witness in the result of the suit and endeavor to reconcile conflicting evidence. Oliver v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co., 65 S. C. 1. It is not error to refuse an instruction that preponderance is determined by the number of witnesses testifying on each side. Fritzinger v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 1006. The court properly refused an instruction to the effect that the jury in passing upon the testimony of a party may take into consideration his situation and interest in the result of the verdict and all the circumstances surrounding him, and give to it only such weight as they may deem it fairly entitled to, when a witness against him is deeply interested in a moral sense, and no such direction as to his testimony is included. Tompkins v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 44 S. E. 439.

29. The court should not charge on the subject of impeachment of witnesses by proof of general bad character where there was no attempt made to so impeach. Southern R. Co. v. O'Bryan [Ga.] 45 S. E. 1000. Omission to charge on weight of testimony of impeached witness is not error where there was no request for explicit instruction. Halley v. Tichenor [Iowa] 94 N. W. 472.

32. Holdredge v. Watson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 67; Richardson v. Babcock [Wis.] 96 N. W. 554. An instruction that the jury are not bound to believe everything testified to by a witness whom they believe to have been mistaken or who has wilfully falsified is misleading in that it allows rejection of his testimony as to other matters. Id.

33. Perkins v. Knisely [Ill.] 68 N. E. 486; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Utah Nursery Co., 25 Utah. 187, 70 Pac. 859; Gehl v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 116 Wis. 263.

34. Hale Elevator Co. v. Hale, 201 Ill. 131.

35. Childs v. Ponder, 117 Ga. 553.

An instruction as to credibility being warranted, the court should tell the jury that it is their "duty" to consider such facts and not that they are "at liberty" to do so.[36]

Conflicts in testimony.—The jury should be allowed to harmonize conflicts in testimony.[37] In Texas, it is held that courts should not instruct juries that they must reconcile conflicts in testimony.[38] An instruction suggesting theories on which difference in the testimony may be accounted for on the ground of honest mistake invades the province of the jury.[39]

An instruction that if the jury were in doubt the verdict should be for defendant should not be given, the mere existence of a doubt not being sufficient to authorize a verdict for defendant.[40]

§ 11. Admonitory and cautionary instructions.—The jury should be instructed that it is their duty to follow instructions given by the court.[41] They may be told that they act as arbitrators to arbitrate the differences between the litigants,[42] and may be reminded of the special care required in the case.[43] Where an issue is withdrawn from the jury by an instruction, it is not necessary to state further that the evidence on the subject is also withdrawn.[44]

The jury may not be instructed to disregard the arguments of counsel,[45] unless such arguments tend to inflame their passions against a party to the suit.[46]

§ 12. Necessity of instructing in writing.—The Arkansas constitution requires trial judges to reduce instructions to writing when requested by either party and is mandatory.[47] Laws requiring written instructions without oral explanation are not violated by an oral answer to question asked by jury after their retirement, no prejudice having resulted, since laws are to be reasonably construed with reference to the purpose to be secured.[48] It is not important that some of the instructions are written and some typewritten.[49] Nor under the Iowa code that the judge failed to sign them.[50] A demand for a written charge is too late where made after the court has commenced to deliver charge orally.[51]

36. Stanley v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co., 119 Iowa, 526.

37. Beers v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 785. The court may instruct that "If there is a conflict in the testimony you must reconcile it if you can; if not you may believe or disbelieve any witness or witnesses, according as you may or may not think them entitled to credit" where there is an irreconcilable conflict. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 56. The court may instruct the jury that they should reconcile any and all apparently conflicting statements of the witnesses and if possible to adduce from the evidence any theory of the case which will harmonize the testimony of all the witnesses and that it would be their duty to adopt that theory rather than one which would require them to reject any of the testimony as intentionally false. 41. An instruction that it is the duty of the jury to determine the facts from the evidence and having done so to apply to such facts the law as given in the charge does not lead the jury to believe that they are independent of the instructions and need to consider them only after they have made their findings on the facts. 51. State v. Forbes [La.] 35 So. 710.

In Ohio, the jury may take the written instructions given at the request of the parties to the jury room.[52]

§ 13. Requests for instructions. Necessity of request as foundation for error.—If the instructions given correctly state the law, one may not complain of their insufficiency arising from omissions, failure to define terms, want of clearness, etc., unless he has called the attention of the court thereto by requests covering the alleged defects.[53]

Time of making request.—In federal courts, the practice of presenting requests after the charge has been given is condemned.[54] Under superior court rules in Massachusetts, requests must be made before closing arguments and will not be granted after instructions are given.[55]

Form and sufficiency of requests.—In most states the request should be in writing.[56] The rules governing the form and requisites of instructions are stated in other portions of this topic and apply to requested instructions. It may be stated in this connection that a request incorrectly stating the law should be refused,[57] and this is the case where it is erroneous only in part,[58] and where they mistake the facts as to other instructions,[59] or would encourage a disagreement,[60] or are wholly unnecessary.[61] It is not the duty of the court to put erroneous requests in correct form.[62] Where a contention is stated affirmatively, a party is entitled to a negative presentation and vice versa.[63] The request may not be refused solely because of a memorandum of authorities on the margin; if proper it should be given with the memorandum erased.[64] Requests, though not in all respects correct, if sufficient to call attention of the court to omissions in the main charge, require a submission of such issues in a proper charge.[65]

Disposition of requests.—Requests should be either given or specifically refused.[66]

The court may give the request in his own language,[67] and may modify the request tendered to conform to the issues,[68] but not so as to take away its effect.[69] It is the duty of the court to give instructions covering omissions in the main charge.[70] The failure to write the word "Given" on an instruction signed by the judge and read to the jury and delivered with the other instructions will not work a reversal.[71] It is not error to refuse instructions already covered by those given.[72]

give additional instructions.[79] After retirement of the jury, the court may answer their request as to whether he instructed in a certain manner, and he may refuse to give an instruction asked by counsel at such time, for the functions of the attorney with reference to instructions and when the jury retires.[80] Such instructions should be given in open court,[81] and in the presence of the parties or their attorneys.[82]

§ 16. Review.—It is not the purpose of this article to more than refer to some general questions of review applicable to instructions, leaving their adequate treatment to topics specially referring to appeal and review.[83]

Objections and exceptions below.—Specific objections and exceptions should be made in the lower court,[84] and should point out the error complained of,[85] and should be made before the case is given to the jury.[86] An exception attributing language to the judge not contained in instruction is bad.[87] The New York code expressly requires that exceptions to the charge should be taken before verdict is given.[88] Rights of counsel to except to instructions given in their absence is secured by court rules in Massachusetts.[89] Exceptions to the charge as a whole are ineffectual if any of the instructions are correct.[90] A party having excepted to the refusal to give a certain instruction need not repeat the exception where the contrary of the request was given in the general charge.[91] An objection that the court referred to a copy of an instrument as a "purported" copy is frivolous.[92] Refusal of requests not argued on appeal will be regarded as waived.[93] In the absence of a request to withdraw an issue, a party cannot complain of instructions submitting such issue.[94]

Record on appeal.—The case settled should state that the judge charged as recited in the exceptions.[95] Under laws making instructions part of the record when numbered and signed by the judge and so marked as to show which were given, refused or modified, the instructions not objected to will be considered on appeal without being embodied in the bill of exceptions.[96]

Assignment of errors and argument.—An assignment of error is sufficient which recites in substance that the court erred in giving certain instructions designated by number, including the one considered, because each of such instructions was either erroneous in law or not supported by the issues and the evidence.[97] A refusal to charge will not be reviewed unless the brief states or refers to the evidence presenting the issue referred to therein.[98]

Invited error.—One may not complain of error in instructions given at his request,[99] nor for error in instructions where his tendered instruction contained a similar error,[1] nor may he complain of an instruction expressly recognized by him as correct when given.[2]

Harmless error.—The error to work reversal must be prejudicial.[3] Under the rule, one may not complain of an error favorable to him.[4] There will be no reversal for giving requested instructions, where the instructions given for the other party neutralized the error if any.[5] Where the error is cured by another instruction, it will not be regarded as harmless, when the matter was prominently called to the court's attention in time and he refused to correct the erroneous instruction.[6] A failure to submit instructions when requested is prejudicial, unless it is shown that the failure was harmless.[7] Whenever a correct instruction is refused, the judgment will be reversed unless the appellate court can see from the record that even under the instruction a different verdict could not have been rightly found.[8]

§ 1. Regulation and governmental control.[1]—Laws regulating insurance apply to partnerships or individuals as well as corporations.[2]

Laws preventing insurance companies from entering into agreements as to the amount of commissions allowed agents, or as to the manner of transacting fire insurance business, are constitutional.[3] Both foreign and local companies may be required to specify the exact amount which will be paid on the happening of any contingency insured against.[4] Valued policy laws are applicable to mutual insurance companies.[5]

Taxation.[6]—Where a tax is imposed on the gross receipts, unearned premium returned on cancellation of the policy are not to be included,[7] though the tax is to be based on all premiums and not merely on first year premiums.[8] A tax on gross receipts is not in lieu of taxes on real estate or other property taxable.[9] An attempt to make it so violates a constitutional inhibition against relinquishment of power to tax corporate property.[10] A provision for the payment of an earnings tax by foreign insurance companies in lieu of all other taxes does not repeal an act authorizing cities to collect license taxes on certain occupations including insurance companies.[11] A foreign mutual life insurance company is subject to a general tax imposed on excess of premiums over ordinary expenses.[12]

Local taxes imposed on premiums within the state are not to be exacted where the applications are made, policies issued and premiums collected in the state of the corporation's domicile. But a voluntary payment of the tax cannot be recovered, though under protest and in fear of a heavy penalty imposed.[13]

An annual tax on the gross amount of premiums received in a calendar year imposed in return for the privilege of exercising a corporate franchise is to be regarded as a franchise and not a property tax, and a first tax payable under the statute is not for the entire preceding year.[14]

§ 2. Insurance companies. A. In general. Definitions.—The character of the contract and not its wording is controlling on whether it is a policy of insurance within the meaning of statutory regulations.[15] An employe's relief association maintained by a corporation is not an insurance company, nor does its operation cause the corporation to be regarded as transacting an insurance business.[16] Statutes in certain states define assessment insurance as that in which the benefit secured is in any manner or degree dependent on the collection of any assessment from any person holding a similar contract.[17]

Creation and conditions to doing business.—Payments for insurance to a specified extent may be exacted as a condition to incorporation.[18] Promoters of a mutual company cannot bind the subsequent corporation.[19]

By statute, the filing of a copy of the by-laws of a co-operative insurance company with the clerk of a county in which it purposes doing business may be required.[20]

15. A contract to furnish funds for the construction of a house, such funds to be re-paid by monthly installments which are to cease on the death or total disability of the borrower, is a contract of insurance within a definition that such a contract is an agreement to do some act of value to insured on the destruction or injury of something in which the insured has an interest [Insurance Act 1895 (Gen. Laws 1895, c. 175, § 3)]. State v. Beardsley, 88 Minn. 20.

18. Where it is required that a certain amount must have been paid a mutual insurance company for insurance before incorporation may be allowed, such requirement cannot be satisfied by the deposit of a note and mortgage for the amount with the state treasurer, the statutory provision being that the receipts shall have been invested in securities and deposited with the state treasurer in trust for the contract holders for the corporation [Act March 19, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 126, c. 116)]. Stevens v. Reeves, 138 Cal. 678, 72 Pac. 346.

19. Promoters of mutual companies though authorized and required to take applications for a certain amount of insurance before the company can be organized, have no power to bind the company before it is authorized to do business hence a policy signed by president and secretary of a corporation and delivered to an applicant for membership before the corporation came into existence, is not enforceable. A change of the corporate name of a mutual insurance company by statute has no legal effect, except such change.[21]

Officers of a mutual insurance company have no right to establish their own compensation unless authorized by the charter.[22]

Ultra vires.—Applicants for membership and members of mutual companies must take notice of the enabling statutes.[23] The policies of a mutual company are avoided by failure to observe the statutory requirements, and assessments cannot be made for losses thereunder.[24] Where the contract of an insurer is prohibited by statute, one contracting with the company is not estopped to assert its invalidity.[25] Any member may assert the ultra vires character of the business of a mutual insurance company, where all the policy holders are on the same footing, and none with equities superior to his associates growing out of the business done in defiance of the statutory requirements.[26]

In New Jersey, insurance companies cannot subscribe for new stock of other corporations.[27]

Management.—A plan by which the management of an insurance corporation is to be perpetually transferred to a trust company is ultra vires,[28] and injurious to minority stockholders.[29] Directors who are to be personally benefited by the scheme cannot finally adopt it,[30] the burden being on them to show that the scheme is advantageous,[31] and it may be enjoined, though not actually yet put in operation.[32]

Investments and loans.—The fact that a general incorporation act allows any corporation to purchase the stock, or evidences of debt of other corporations, does not repeal limitations on the power of insurance companies as to investments created by their charters and laws relating specifically to insurance companies.[33] The fact that by purchase of stock of another corporation an insurance company buys the controlling interest therein does not make the purchase unlawful if in good faith and as an investment.[34] A limitation of investments to stock in companies which have regularly paid dividends for five years preceding the time of purchase does not require stock issues to have been outstanding five years at the time of purchase.[35]

Directors are personally liable for a loan unauthorized by statute, though made on advice of counsel,[36] and a receiver on insolvency may bring an action in tort against any part or all of the directors therefor,[37] without tender of the security if worthless.[38]

Dividends declared from surplus earnings cannot be restricted to policies kept in force by payment of an ensuing premium.[39] Statutes providing that mutual life insurance companies or those in which the members are entitled to share in surplus funds may make distribution of accumulated surplus at certain designated periods do not apply to insurance companies operating on the tontine savings fund plan.[40]

Actions.—Statutory provisions as to the venue of actions against insurance companies are not restricted to actions for loss.[41]

Insolvency and dissolution.—Directors cannot escape personal liability where they have misrepresented the character of the corporation.[42] Assessments paid before insolvency cannot be offset against an assessment by a receiver under order of court.[43] An accounting by the receiver of a fire insurance company is governed by a statute enacted pending the receivership.[44]

(§ 2) B. Foreign companies.—In Illinois, a foreign insurance company doing business by comity under a general statute need not comply with provisions as to the establishment of a surplus or guaranty fund applicable to local corporations.[45]

Licenses.—A license fee, payable annually in a certain month and also made a condition precedent to doing business, may be paid and license issued at any time during the year.[46]

Under Code, § 3499, an indivisible contract involving the taking out of a policy of insurance on plaintiff's life and sale thereof by the defendant company on the one hand and the payment to the defendant company of certain shares of stock on the other may be sued on in the county where the contract was made. Cameron v. Mut. L. & T. Co. [Iowa] 96 N. W. 961.

42. Where the directors in charge of an insurance company represent that their subscriptions are in the nature of paid up capital stock or security stock and that they are doing business as a stock company and not on a mutual plan, they cannot avert their liability to persons relying on such misrepresentations by the fact that the subscriptions were taken under a provision for the incorporation of a mutual company. Dwinnell v. Minneapolis F. & M. M. Ins. Co. [Minn.] 97 N. W. 110.

43. The policy holder cannot set-off an amount which he paid under a former assessment by the officers of the company, nor can he show a settlement unless he establishes the authority of the person with whom the settlement was made or question the necessity for the assessment, as by showing that it included extravagant expenditures and debts not properly chargeable to his policy. Snader v. Bomberger, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 629.

must do business through resident agents, a contract made by a nonresident agent cannot be enforced.[49]

Agents for service of process.—An insurance company merely making investments within the state need not appoint an agent for service of process.[50]

Statutes providing that an insurance commissioner shall not be a director, officer or agent or directly or indirectly interested in any insurance company except the insured prevent a person holding such office from being the agent of a foreign insurance corporation for the receipt of service of process.[51]

Where no stipulation as to service of process is filed before transacting business, service may be on the insurance commissioner.[52]

Under a provision for service on the person soliciting insurance, such service is sufficient, though the person is no longer in the employ of the company.[53] One receiving payment of a premium for the convenience of insured is not an agent.[54] If the statute provides for service on the insurance commissioner, it cannot be made on the deputy at the commissioner's office.[55]

If the agent appointed absents himself from the state, the insurance commissioner may appoint a successor to him, and such power continues as long as there is any necessity of suits for breach of contract made within the state.[56]

Cancellation of the appointment of an agent designated as appointed for service of process and revocation of the authority of all agents will not withdraw a foreign corporation from the jurisdiction of a state as to suit by the holders of its policies;[57] but an appointment may be revoked as to one who has not parted with value on the strength thereof.[58]

§ 3. Agents. Licenses.[59]—An agent of a foreign insurance company who has already violated the insurance laws by soliciting insurance without license and offering to rebate premiums may be refused a license at the discretion of the superintendent of insurance.[60] A foreign corporation, issuing so called certificates

54. Where accident insurance is negotiated by a foreign company by correspondence, if the negotiation is regarded as doing of business within the state, the fact that the policies are held in the state and renewal premiums on one of them collected for the accommodation of a policy holder through a local bank does not constitute a continuation of the business, rendering the company subject to jurisdiction of the state courts and in such case, the officer of the local bank is not an agent of the company for service of process, especially where the holder of the policy induces the company to send the collection within the state in order to make the bank officer an agent [Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 2637, 1977]. Frawley v. Pa. Casualty Co., 124 Fed. 259.

of membership amounting to life insurance contracts without initiation of the insured, is not a fraternal association outside the operation of a statute requiring licenses of agents for foreign insurance companies.[61]

Under a power to impose a tax on insurance companies to a certain amount, a city has no power to impose an additional tax on agents representing companies which have already paid the full amount.[62]

Penalties.—State laws prescribing penalties upon agents acting for foreign insurance companies which have not complied with the laws of the state are not unconstitutional and in violation of the commerce clause of the Federal constitution or the 14th amendment.[63] Where an agent is acting without authority in soliciting insurance and also in negotiating it by delivering the contract shortly afterward, the two transactions being related, the state is not bound to elect as to which offense it will proceed on.[64]

Contracts of employment and commissions.[65]—If an agency is for a fixed term, the insurance company becomes liable for damages if by a transfer of its business to another company it terminates the employment.[66] A local agent has a cause of action for breach of an agreement that in case the company should retire from business, the agent might either reinsure the business or cancel the policies at pro rata rates.[67]

Under a contract to allow commissions during the continuance of the agency, the agent cannot, after resignation, recover premiums on insurance previously written.[68] A subagent claiming a share in the commissions of a co-subagent is not affected by rules of the company of which he has no knowledge;[69] but where two subagents have the same territory, one cannot recover against the general agent for commissions paid the other subagent without knowledge of plaintiff's claims.[70] Though an agent cannot act for a foreign company which has not complied with conditions precedent to doing business, failure of the agent to allege compliance by the company does not render his petition in a suit for services demurrable.[71] On failure of defendant to produce policies after notice, it is proper for an agent of plaintiff, suing to recover premiums advanced, to state their contents.[72]

Under a contract to obtain a good policy of fire insurance in a very good company, a policy from a company able and willing to pay in case of loss must be procured and where the measure of damages is the value of the property destroyed up to the amount for which it is agreed that insurance should be procured.[74] A contract by which an insurance broker is to procure not less than a certain amount of insurance obligates the acceptance of such insurance without regard to whether it is needed.[75] The damages from breach of such a contract are sufficiently certain to be recoverable.[76] Where damages are sought to be recovered against defendants on account of failure to allow plaintiff to insure their buildings and stock, plaintiff is entitled to at least nominal damages on failure to insure the use and occupancy, but that does not include profits of business or salaries of salesmen.[77] A counterclaim cannot be interposed for the difference in the amount of rebates at the contract rate and on the lowest rate paid by the broker and named in the policy.[78]

Existence and evidence of agency.—The agent cannot be such for both the insurer and the insured,[80] but the fact that an insurance agent is acting for the insurer and a mortgagee of the property does not avoid the policy as against insured.[81] The authority of an agent cannot be established by his own acts and declarations.[82] Newspaper advertisements are admissible.[83] Canvassers appointed by a general manager under his authority, and paid by him, are agents of the insurer.[84]

Agency for insurer or insured.[85]—The status of the agent as acting for insurer or insured is defined by statute in certain of the states.[86] Express contracts that the agent of the company shall be deemed the agent of the insured does not render a policy binding on the insured which differs from the application and which he has no opportunity to investigate.[87] The insurer is not bound by knowledge of the insured's agent.[88] A firm of insurance agents taking charge of the placing of insurance will not be regarded as special agents for the insured, where they place the insurance in companies represented by themselves and other companies, deducting their compensation for the latter services from the premiums paid by insured before turning the premiums over to the agents of the latter company.[89] During the negotiations for insurance, the agent of a mutual company is on the same basis as the agent of a stock company.[90]

Powers.—There is no presumption that insurance agents of foreign companies have greater powers than other agents.[91] Miscellaneous decisions as to extent of the agent's powers are grouped in the notes.[92]

Ratification.—After a contract has been made with an agent of the company, letters from the corporation's president, recognizing the agent's authority to act for the company, amount to a ratification of the contract.[93] A custom of agents to issue more than one policy to the same person for a single period is not sufficient to establish insurer's knowledge of such issuance and a ratification of the agent's acts.[94]

Liability for agent's negligence.—Where an accident policy authorizes an examination of insured with respect to the injury, the insurer is liable for any negligence or misconduct of its agent in making the examination, and though the insured consent to the examination in a particular manner, he does not thereby waive his claim for negligence.[95]

Personal liability.—Where a policy is not enforceable, the agent is responsible in damages, and the insurer need not be insolvent.[96] Independent of statute a conspiracy to defraud by procuring an insurance policy in a company unauthorized to do the business within the state renders the agent liable for actual and exemplary damages.[97]

Where personal liability on the contract is imposed on the agent negotiating insurance contracts for a foreign corporation which has not complied with state laws, an action to enforce such liability is not governed by a limitation as to the time of action contained in the policy.[98]

An insurance company which has been induced to issue a policy by fraud is not entitled to affirm the transaction by payment to the beneficiary and recover damages as against a wrongdoing agent.[99]

Bonds and undertakings.—Liability on agent's bonds is governed by the rules applicable to other fidelity undertakings; in the notes are cases illustrating the construction of such bonds,[1] defenses,[2] and pleading in actions thereon.[3]

§ 4. Formation and validity of contract.—A life insurance contract may rest in parol.[4] An agreement not to cancel a policy before new insurance is procured is not an oral contract of insurance.[5] A policy of temporary insurance is not affected by the invalidity of a policy with which it is agreed it shall be replaced.[6]

The by-laws and constitution of a mutual company, requiring the personal signature of the applicant, will not invalidate insurance issued on application of the insured's brother, the insured submitting to medical examination and ratifying the brother's action.[7]

The remainder of the contract may be sustained, though tontine provisions are void.[8]

Receipt of policy without opportunity for examination is not binding on insured.[9]

Contents of policy.—The name of the insured and terms of insurance need not appear on the face of the contract, where indorsed on the back and duly signed.[10] The policy of a mutual company, though omitting notice of the time and place of holding of an annual meeting as required by statute, may be validated

1. A bond conditioned upon faithful performance of a duty as agent, is broken when he fails to pay a loss occasioned the company through his failure to cancel a policy as directed. Limitations run from such time. Northern Assur. Co. v. Borgelt [Neb.] 93 N. W. 226. Liability may exist on a bond for premiums collected by sub-agents in the agent's name, though the bond does not bind the agent to perform duties or collect premiums but rather that if he did those things, he would do them faithfully. Norwich U. F. Ins. Ass'n v. Buchalter [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 484. A bond conditioned for the repayment of all advances made to the agent by the company or to special or sub-agents appointed by him, covers dealings with sub-agents appointed by him as district manager under a subsequent contract. Foster v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 91.

2. To avoid liability on his bond, an insurance agent cannot show that premiums arising from business connected with his agency were collected by agents resident in another state who were in fact transacting the business of the company in contravention of statute, and such statute does not invalidate a bond to a resident agent executed on the understanding that non-resident sub-agents should be employed. Norwich U. F. Ins. Ass'n v. Buchalter [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 484. It is no defense to an action on the bond of a sub-agent, that the agent appointing him is also responsible for funds embezzled or that the agent was appointed a district manager where it is not shown that any of the losses were occasioned through his position as such a manager, and where the bond is not executed until after the appointment as district manager, the sureties cannot escape liability on the ground of altered circumstances where there is no showing that they were misled. Foster v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 91.

3. Petition in an action on a bond of an insurance agent, held not to constitute a variance from the evidence in that it alleged the contract was that of a general agent and not of the insurance company. Foster v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 91. Where in defense to an action against the agent's sureties to recover embezzled funds, it is alleged that the funds came into the hands of the agent in transactions not within the scope of the bond, the excepted funds must be specified or there must be an allegation that such specification is not in the power of defendants. where the insured accepts it and does not show that he was in any manner affected by the absence of notice.[11]

Inception of risk.—The contract is complete on execution and delivery of the policy in accord with a written application.[12] A deposit of the policy in the post-office by the insurer, properly addressed to the applicant and postage prepaid, is a good delivery.[13] The application if accepted may constitute a contract of insurance until the issuance and acceptance of the certificate in its stead.[14]

On notification to insured that if he desires his policies again to be put in force, he shall send a check for the full amount by return mail, the reinsurance is effectual from the time the letter containing the check is posted.[15]

Acceptance of a risk is not to be implied from an unreasonable delay in acting on the application.[16]

Under statutory provisions that the membership of mutual fire insurance companies shall consist of every person insured who signs an application for insurance, the mere signature of an application is not sufficient.[17]

Open policies.—A floating policy of insurance, providing that it is not applicable to property covered by more specific insurance, does not apply to property so insured until by removal it loses the protection thereof.[18] An insurer against loss in the mails may exact notice of mailing of specific packages as a condition to liability.[19]

Termination of risk.—The liability of a mutual benefit fire company terminates on death of the member.[20]

An adjudication of bankruptcy of the insured does not release insurance on account of provisions as to proof of loss or impossibility of compliance therewith.[21]

Where insurance is to cease on fall of any part of the building, the fall must be of a material or substantial part thereof, but the distinctive character of the building need not be destroyed.[22] The falling of a substantial part of a building avoids insurance on the remaining portions thereof which are separately occupied and remain intact and capable of being used for business purposes, the policies by which such portions are insured providing that all insurance shall immediately cease on fall of the building or any part thereof.[23]

§ 5. Insurable interests. Property.—Under the married women's acts a husband has no insurable interest in his wife's property.[24] In Texas, a second husband has an insurable interest in the property of his wife and her children by the first marriage which is occupied as a homestead.[25]

A mortgagee has an insurable interest to the extent of his debt and may recover the insurance on the property covered by his mortgage, regardless of any other security he may hold.[26] After foreclosure and expiration of the period of redemption, the mortgagor has no insurable interest.[27]

An equitable title, such as that of a beneficiary of a trust,[28] or of vendees in possession, confers an insurable interest.[29]

An equitable assignee or the appointee of the right to receive a portion of the proceeds need not have an insurable interest.[30]

Human life.—Insurable interest in human life is based on benefit or advantage in the continuance of the life of insured; illustrations will be found in the notes.[31]

Consent of the husband is not necessary to allow the wife to insure his life for her benefit or that of herself and children.[32]

The insurer cannot set up want of insurable interest in the beneficiary, where the insurance is effected by the insured and the premiums paid by him, though the policy provides that all claims shall be subject to proof of interest.[33]

Assignees of life policies issued in good faith may be without insurable interest,[34] though it has been held also that a life policy cannot be assigned for collateral to an assignee without an insurable interest,[35] and that an assignee for security takes only to the extent of the debt.[36]

cies assigned to persons without insurable interests, save where as security for debt, do not apply to policies issued by foreign corporations.[37]

§ 6. The premium. Necessity of payment.—Payment of the premium is essential to the attaching of the risk,[38] though a promise to pay on delivery of a policy is a sufficient consideration to support a binding slip.[39] It is reasonable to require that the premium must be paid before loss,[40] or while the applicant is in good health.[41] Nonpayment may be excused where occasioned by the insurer's fault in neglecting to fix the requisite amount.[42] An agreement by an agent to advance a first premium, which is not complied with, will not cause a policy to be regarded as in force, the agent having no power to make such an agreement and the insured being charged with knowledge of such limitation on the agent's power.[43]

Amount of premium.—Where a loss occurs under a binding slip, a reasonable premium may be exacted.[44] Insured is not entitled to a customary rebate, where before he accepts a policy, he is informed that it will not be given.[45] By its contract a life company may be prevented from increasing premiums,[46] but if the insurer has a right to increase premiums, it is not estopped by failure through mistake to exercise such right promptly. Where there are to be adjustments of premiums at the end of five year periods, the insurer is not estopped from claiming an increased premium during a period, by the fact that by mistake it collects three bi-monthly premiums during the first of the period at the rate prevailing during the preceding five years.[47]

Assessments in mutual companies.—A reference to sections of statutes imposing liability on members of mutual companies, together with the by-laws in an insurance policy, is not sufficient to render the policy holder liable for his percentage of losses.[48] A member cannot be assessed for losses accruing before inception of membership.[49] Assessments for purposes other than payment of losses may be Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Howle [Ohio] 68 N. E. 4.

42. Where insured informs an agent that he will not pay a premium due until the cost of a tenancy permit is ascertained and will pay it all at one time, to which the agent assents, it will prevent the company from denying liability for non-payment where no notice of the amount of premium, or that the permit will not be issued until it is paid, is given before the loss. made.[50] If the secretary is authorized to make assessments, an assessment is valid though he acts on advice of the board of directors.[51] The order of assessment is prima facie evidence of its necessity.[52] Insured in a mutual company, who keeps the policy and receives the benefit of the insurance, is estopped from setting up fraudulent representations as to the character of the policy in defense of an action to recover additional premiums.[53] In the absence of statutes or contract provisions requiring notice of intention to levy an assessment on the policy holders of a mutual company, such notice is not necessary.[54] The form of notice need not be unvarying,[55] and it need not contain a detailed statement showing the necessity of the assessment,[56] though it must follow statutory provisions.[57] Where assessments are made payable in a certain time from the date of notice, the date is regarded as being that on which the insured should have received the notice in due and regular course of mail, and not the date of the paper in which the notice was printed or on which it was mailed,[58] and where notice of assessment states that an officer of the company will be at a certain place at a certain time to receive payment, the time of payment runs from the date of receipt of the notice.[59] A loss under a later policy cannot be set off against a delinquent assessment.[60]

Under a charter power to change the basis of assessments on policy holders, a mutual assessment life company may in the absence of fraud graduate its assessments according to the age of the policy holder when the assessment is made, instead of age when policy was issued, though the increased assessment occasioned thereby is prohibitive.[61]

What is payment.[62]—A note does not constitute an absolute payment,[63] unless that of a third person,[64] or negotiated,[65] nor is the mailing of a check where not accepted as such and not drawn against funds,[66] nor an order on wages to be earned;[67] but a good check is sufficient if the agent is authorized to accept it.[68] Payment to an unauthorized agent is sufficient if the company or a duly authorized agent afterward receive it.[69] The insurer is not liable on an agent's unauthorized acceptance of merchandise in payment of a premium.[70] The fact that a soliciting agent, without knowledge of the company, has moneys belonging to the insured from which he has agreed to pay the premium will not prevent cancellation.[71]

Right to forfeit.—Where the by-laws and policy provide for cancellation on non-payment of premiums or assessments, a mutual fire company may take such action,[72] and after notice of such cancellation and destruction of the risk, the company cannot be compelled to reinstate the policy.[73]

Forfeiture for non-payment may be provided for in the policy,[74] or in a premium note,[75] and forfeiture may be enforced for nonpayment of notes.[76] Incontestable clauses do not overcome a specific provision for forfeiture for nonpayment of premium.[77]

Delay in delivery of the policy until after its date does not excuse nonpayment of premiums on date specified therein.[78] A provision that payments shall be before noon on certain days is not altered to allow payments after noon by a provision that if the premiums are not paid on or before the days mentioned, the policy shall cease.[79] Where insured is misled by a provision in a policy that at the end of each term of five years dividends would be applied to reduce premiums,

Where a premium has not been paid, notice of cancellation is sufficient to terminate the risk and such notice may be unnecessary, where by the terms of the policy no liability is created, unless the premium is paid. O'Connell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 306.

75. A policy may be avoided by failure to pay a premium note at maturity where the note so stipulates though the policy makes no such provision. Ressler v. Fidelity M. L. Ins. Co. [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 735. Facts held to show a borrowing of money from insurer to pay a premium and pledging of right to a paid up policy as security therefor rather than a promise to pay the premium at a later date placing the right to insurance at the risk of loss in case the promise was not fulfilled on the day fixed. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Wright [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 82.

76. Liability is terminated by failure to pay any note given the company for a premium, whether as evidence of debt or payment, if the policy provides that failure to pay any premium or note, or interest when due, will terminate the insurance and calls for cash payments only. Behling v. N. W. Nat. L. Ins. Co. [Wis.] 93 N. W. 800. A provision that failure to pay any premium or note or interest shall terminate insurance includes a note given on exchange of policies to secure a portion of the cash payment of the reserve value, which it is agreed shall be a lien against the policy, until discharged or paid. Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 663. A provision that nonpayment of a note given to extend a premium shall forfeit the policy, is not invalidated by a statutory provision that all contracts as to insurance must be plainly expressed in the policy, since if applicable, the statute avoids the entire transaction including the extension of time. and bona fide believing that notices and payment of three premiums were evidence of such application, then a delay of less than three months in correspondence and asserting his rights is not unreasonable, and on tender of the intervening premiums and expressions of willingness to pay at that rate, the company has no right to cancel the policy.[80]

Notice.—Though the policy has been assigned with the assurer's consent, notice of maturity of a premium may be given the assured.[81] Mailing of notice to insured's last known address is a necessary condition to the right to forfeit for nonpayment of premiums, where the policy provides for notice by mail before the premiums are due.[82]

Under the New York statute, a notice of forfeiture for nonpayment of premium must state insured's right to surrender value or paid up policy.[83]

A statement that insured has decided to allow his policy to lapse, and a subsequent application for reinstatement, waives notice of maturity of premium.[84] Statutes requiring notice of the maturity of premiums will not prevent a forfeiture, though notice is not given, where for twelve years the insured neglects to pay any premiums.[85]

Waiver of initial premium may be inferred from delivery of the policy,[86] and an agreement to extend credit may waive provisions that the risk shall not attach until payment of the premium;[87] but a provision that the first premium payment must be made while applicant is in good health is not waived by an agreement that he shall have a specified length of time in which to pay the premium and take the policy.[88] The insured is charged with notice that without express authority an agent cannot waive a first premium, where the application states that insurance is not to be operative prior to its payment.[89]

Where the entire property is destroyed, receipt of a premium after the loss waives an exemption from liability during default,[90] and if it is desired to repudiate the act of an agent in accepting a premium after a loss, the money must be returned or tendered to the insured.[91]

86. If an insurer makes a policy complete in form and sends it out for delivery to the insured and after such delivery and before a loss by fire treats the policy as a valid and binding contract, from such facts, in the absence of contrary proof, payment of premium or a waiver may be inferred. to return it, where no attempt to collect it was made,[92] or collection after maturity.[93] The insured must prove that he was ready and willing to pay a premium note at the place where it was payable in order that he may take advantage of the fact that it was not there as a waiver of forfeiture on that ground.[94] Where a premium note stipulates for payment at the company's office, a waiver by the agent in an agreement to bring the note to insured is revoked by a notice from the company to pay at its office.[95]

If a note in payment of a premium is accepted on condition that the policy shall cease and determine in case it is not paid at maturity, an affirmative action is not necessary to forfeit the policy on nonpayment.[96]

Authority of an agent to waive forfeiture for nonpayment cannot be inferred from the fact that the note is sent to him for collection against a provision of the policy prohibiting waiver by agent.[97]

Waiver of assessments.[98]—Failure to claim a forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments, a notice of further assessments and acceptance of payment thereof, amount to a waiver.[99] The waiver may be after destruction of the property,[1] but it seems the entire property covered by the policy must be destroyed.[2] A custom to accept payment of assessments after due will not be extended to justify acceptance after destruction of property.[3]

Making of other mortuary calls is not a defense, where deceased died more than the specified time after the making of the call for which the policy is declared forfeited.[4]

Waiver of subsequent premiums.—Limitations on the authority of officers to agree to an extension of premiums does not prevent the company being bound by an extension made by an actually authorized agent,[5] and a stipulation against waiver or modification of terms, except in writing, does not prevent a waiver implied by law from conduct amounting to an estoppel.[6] A right to insist on for-

Act of sub-agent of a general agent in collecting a premium after its maturity and after a loss held to estop the insurer. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 937.

6. Such as acceptance of past due premiums or collateral security for notes securing same, waiving a stipulation for forfeiture on non-payment of premium notes at maturity. Bennett v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 203 Ill. 439. Where the company accepts over-due premiums, it cannot assert lack of authority on the part of an agent to extend time for payment. Though the policy stipulates against modifications except in formal manner. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Whetzel, 29 Ind. App. 658. Evidence held insuffi-feiture may be waived by acceptance of overdue premiums,[7] or by a custom to do so,[8] but a waiver of prompt payment of premiums in a particular year or years does not prevent the company from enforcing a forfeiture in subsequent years, when it gives due notice of its intention.[9] Provisions for forfeiture on nonpayment are not waived for an entire year by extension of a particular premium for a less period.[10] Such waiver need not be based on a new consideration or an estoppel, and is not such an alteration of the contract that it must be in writing.[11]

Denial of liability on other grounds may waive forfeiture for default in respect to premiums.[12]

Retention of note taken in extension of time of payment of premium does not waive the forfeiture, the note being canceled and retained as evidence of nonpayment at maturity,[13] nor does a demand for payment of such a note, where accompanied by a blank certificate of health for reinstatement thus showing claim of forfeiture.[14]

The acceptance of an order on a third person during the lifetime of insured waives a right to insist on a forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums after the insured's death.[15]

Effect of waiver.—Where there is a waiver of time of payment, the amount due need not be paid or tendered prior to the death of the insured,[16] and a certificate of good health cannot be required, since the policy does not lapse.[17]

Application of net value, surplus or reserve to prevent a forfeiture.—A surplus belonging to the insured must be applied, in order to prevent forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments.[18]

A fund styled a guaranty fund, consisting of the surplus of premiums after deduction of actual death losses, must be applied, to prevent forfeiture under the

cient to establish a contract for the extension of time of payment of premiums and waiver by receipt of payment, after notice of loss. Hooker v. Continental Ins. Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 663.

7. Ryer v. Prudential Ins. Co., 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 7. A provision for the lapse of policy during default in payment of an installment of premiums is waived by demand of payment of the full amount of installment long after it was due. Walls v. Home Ins. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1452, 71 S. W. 650.

8. Where there has been a custom to allow payments to run over, a promise by the agent to hold up a note for an installment of premiums may estop the company from insisting on a forfeiture. Continental Ins. Co. v. Browning, 24 Ky. L. R. 992, 70 S. W. 660. Forfeiture on the ground of failure to pay premium on the day when due, cannot be asserted where the course of dealing of the company has been such as to induce insured to believe that it will not be insisted on. Illinois Life Ass'n v. Wells, 102 Ill. App. 544. Provisions in the policy as to payment of premiums may be waived, where there has been a custom to collect premiums and an employe of the general agent collects after the injury a premium prior thereto. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 937. Evidence held to show waiver of provisions requiring payment of premiums on specified days in case of an insurance agent insured, installments of whose premiums had been paid from commissions due. Ill. Life Ass'n v. Wells, 200 Ill. 445.

A waiver of forfeiture is on sufficient consideration where induced by a transfer of an interest in a judgment to be collateral security for the notes securing premiums due and unmatured. Bennett v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 203 Ill. 439.

12. Where the agent states that a policy has lapsed and may be reinstated only on a medical certificate, the company waives nonpayment of a final premium which insured at the time of statement had a right to pay. Te Bow v. Washington Life Ins. Co., 172 N. Y. 623.

18. A corporation organized under Laws 1883, p. 104, rendering it similar in purpose to, if not absolutely, a fraternal insurance order, must apply a surplus to prevent forfeiture, though it has issued to the member a bond representing the member's share of such surplus bearing interest and applicable to the payment of assessments, and must make such application, though insured has not requested it, or surrendered the bond. Knights Templars & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Vail [Ill.] 68 N. E. 1103.

New York statute, requiring such application of the reserve on a policy. Such statute covers a policy for a single year, containing an agreement to reinsure at a stipulated rate, and the demand for application may be by the beneficiary after insured's death.[19]

The Missouri statute, requiring the application of the net value of the policy as a single premium to extend insurance on nonpayment of premium by the insured, does not apply to insurance on the assessment or natural premium plan, in which the policy has no accumulated or actual net value.[20]

Local statutes guarding against forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums are, in some states, made inapplicable to the policies of foreign companies doing business therein, where such policies contain contractual provisions of substantially similar import.[21]

Statutory provisions against forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums conferring rights on beneficiaries cannot be waived by the insured,[22] but condition in a note given for a premium payment, that on default the policy would be forfeited except as the right to a surrender value, covers a right to extended insurance.[23]

The period during which a policy will be kept in force after default in payment of premiums will be computed from the expiration of the period of grace provided for the payment of premiums.[24]

Where insured defaults, his rights and obligations are to be measured at the date of default and not a prior date.[25] Where a loan has been made equivalent to the value of the policy, there can be no extended insurance on

19. In the policy in issue, premiums were fixed with reference to estimated death losses and the guaranty fund was determined by the amount left after deducting actual losses, while in an ordinary policy both the reserve and premiums are calculated on estimated death losses, and the estimate is not corrected by the actual losses as they occur. Nielsen v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 139 Cal. 332, 73 Pac. 168.

20. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Roth [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 853. A contract requiring an assessment on the policy and not on the insured, to meet emergencies exceeding the reserve fund, is not an assessment contract in the meaning of a provision that assessment contracts shall be those in any manner or degree dependent on collection of assessments on persons holding similar contracts [Rev. St. 1889, §§ 5856-5859]. Folkens v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 98 Mo. App. 480.

21. Rev. St. 1889, § 5859, as amended by Act April 19, 1895, exempts from the application of sections 5856-5858, policies prescribing a surrender value or paid up or temporary insurance in case of default or a provision for an unconditional cash surrender value, equal to the net single premium which the preceding sections declare shall be applied to temporary insurance or a provision for the unconditional commutation of the policy for non-forfeitable, paid up insurance, "provided that in no instance shall a policy be forfeited for non-payment of premiums after the payment of three annual premiums thereon * * * but the holder shall be entitled to paid up insurance, the net value of which shall be equal to that provided for in section 5856." Under this statute insured may have an option as to which settlement he will accept. Nichols v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mo.] 75 S. W. 664. A New York policy with an agreement for temporary insurance is within the exception (Epperson v. New York Life Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 432) but a policy is not within such provision if it provide that indebtedness other than for loans advanced in payment of premiums may be deducted from the net value, though such value is computed on a percentage more favorable to the insured than that established by the statute. Application within three months, cannot be made a condition to payment of the surrender value or the application of the net reserve to the purchase of a non-participating paid up policy. Smith v. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co., 173 Mo. 329. The proviso contemplates insurance fully paid for life. Nichols v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mo.] 75 S. W. 664.

24. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Devoe [Md.] 56 Atl. 809.

25. Provisions of a ten payment life policy on which premiums were paid partially in cash and partially with notes, examined and held not to permit insured, who forfeits by non-payment of premiums at the end of ten years, to have dividends applied to his premium notes for the earlier period of the policy thus entitling him to paid up insurance for a portion of his policy. Madison v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Cal.] 75 Pac. 113.

forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums,[26] though insurer has consented to an assignment of the policy to a third person, where it is indorsed with the indebtedness of the insured, nor though the policy provides that loans by the insurer are to be accompanied by a satisfactory assignment to the insurer as collateral.[27] A loan is not rendered usurious by the fact that on forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of premiums and maturity of the loan, the entire cash surrender value is applied to it, thus removing a right to extended insurance, if the cash surrender value of a policy is not diminished by a loan.[28]

Time is not of the essence of an agreement to issue a paid-up policy on forfeiture of a life policy, but demand must be within a reasonable time.[29] The right may be barred by laches.[30] Bankruptcy is not an excuse.[31]

Though the general agent has no authority to issue policies, a demand of a paid-up policy may be made on him, where there is no particular provision in the original policy.[32] The demand should be definite.[33]

A denial of liability after death of insured is a waiver of any surrender of the policy necessary to the purpose of having a reserve applied to the continuation of the insurance or the purchase of a paid-up policy.[34] Necessity of surrender of the original policy may be obviated by its loss.[35] The insurer, after directing insured to continue his search for a lost policy, cannot assert unreasonable delay unless continued so long as to justify a conclusion of abandonment.[36]

Recovery back of premiums.—Where insured is by fraud induced to accept possession of a policy, different in its nature from that for which he bargained, he may return it within a reasonable time and recover premiums paid.[37] In

26. Statutory provisions as to the manner in which policies shall be valued on the question of the company's solvency, do not apply to a valuation as determining assured's rights, the rules for which are provided in the policy [Ky. St. 1899, § 653]. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 172, 74 S. W. 1066. Where it is provided that accumulated profits are to be applied to the extension of insurance to prevent forfeiture, the amount of a certificate of indebtedness given as part of the first payment must be deducted in determining the amount of accumulated profits applicable to the extension of the policy. Tate v. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co., 131 N. C. 389. A provision that on non-payment of premium, the policy is to be indorsed for such amount of paid up insurance as the excess of the reserve fund held by the company over such indebtedness will purchase, will not prevent a forfeiture, where at the time default is made in payment of a second premium, the amount which insured owes the company is less than the reserve fund. Five years from the day when insured might first have demanded its issuance is sufficient. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Warren Deposit Bank [Ky.] 75 S. W. 275. An applicant who accepts an ordinary policy to be in force until the issuance of an endowment policy is, on failure of the endowment policy to be issued within a reasonable time, entitled to a credit for the excess of premium paid by him.[40] If in pari delicto, insured cannot recover premiums on the ground of illegality of the policy,[41] nor can his administrator,[42] though innocent parties will be protected.[43] An infant may recover premiums paid by him, insurance not being regarded as a necessity.[44]

If the company chooses to validate a policy after knowledge of misstatements of a material fact in the application, premiums paid cannot be recovered.[45]

If the insurer wrongfully cancels a policy, premiums paid may be recovered,[46] or if an application for reinstatement is rejected in bad faith.[47] Where it appears that a request for the cancellation of a fire insurance policy was made together with a request for repayment of unearned premiums before new insurance is taken out, plaintiff is entitled to recover unearned premiums as to such policies.[48]

A provision for forfeiture of payments in case a life policy shall become void is not void as to unearned premiums on account of want of consideration, and where the policy is avoided before the expiration of insurance purchased by a quarterly payment, unearned premium cannot be recovered on the ground that only forfeiture of earned premiums was contemplated.[49]

surance company is inadmissible in an action against the company to recover premiums.[50]

Reinstatement.—A policy may be reinstated in equity where it has been forfeited after complainant had done all that he was justified in believing would be required of him by a prior course of dealing of the company.[51] The rules applicable to original applications are generally applicable to proceedings for reinstatement.[52] Keeping of a certificate of health for reinstatement of a policy six days before returning it cannot be objected to by the insured.[53]

§ 7. Interpretation and effect of contract.[54] Kind of insurance.—Where a policy states on its face that it is a mutual company and that insured is subject to pay an additional premium, the contract is not changed by the fact that it is represented to be a stock policy.[55] The amount recoverable on insurance against fire, on a vessel moored and used as a hospital, is not governed by the laws of marine insurance.[56] Where the insured has a valid obligation for a conveyance of the fee and has erected a substantial dwelling house on the land, his interest is not personalty but realty within the meaning of laws providing that in case of insurance of real property defendant cannot deny that the property was worth the amount of insurance.[57]

General rules of interpretation.—A contract of insurance will be liberally construed for the protection of the insured,[58] even in mutual companies,[59] but according to the plain meaning of the language employed[60] in its common popular sense.[61] Facts within the literal meaning of a provision will not warrant forfeiture unless within its reason.[62] Ambiguities must be construed against forfeitures,[63] but in order to avoid a forfeiture, the court cannot go beyond a fair construction of the language.[64] Attendant circumstances should be considered in determining intent.[65]

In other respects, rules applicable to construction of contracts generally are applicable.[66] For the meaning of particular descriptions, see the footnotes.[67]

Conflict of laws.—The situs of a contract of insurance is a question as to which there is a variance of authority.[68] By provision in the contract, it may be construed under the laws of the company's domicile,[69] though the contrary is held in some jurisdictions,[70] and where the contract is in fact a local contract, the public policy of the state where made cannot be avoided by provisions in the policy adopting a law of the corporation's domicile.[71] The courts of a state are not bound to construe the contracts of a foreign insurance company in the manner in which they are construed by the courts of the corporation's domicile or under the statutes of such state.[72]

A contract made by a foreign insurance company authorized to do business within the state and based on an application in writing to an agent within the state delivered within the state, and the first premium paid therein, is to be regarded in the absence of other facts, as a local contract. Albro v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 119 Fed. 629.

72. Though the statute of the corporation's domicile is copied into the policy, and provisions in the policy are stated therein to be in compliance with such statute, the contract and not the statute will control in case of variance. Wash. L. Ins. Co. v. Glover [Ky.] 78 S. W. 146.

73. In this case it was held that a boy seventeen years of age who took the money to the post office was not an adult, notwithstanding the policy was issued to a bank located in Mexico since the court would not take notice that under the law of Mexico a male infant becomes an adult at fourteen. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' M. Casualty Co. [Iowa] 95 N. W. 232.

application is made a part of the contract, agreements therein are binding on the beneficiaries.[76] A notice on the back of a premium receipt may become a part of the contract if referred to on the face.[77]

Provision for calling medical attendant.—A physician called by the insured, under a provision allowing him to do so, is called by him as agent of the insurer and may recover against the insurer without regard to the indemnity provided in other portions of the policy.[78]

Severability of contract.—Where a policy stipulates that it shall be entirely void on certain named conditions, it is not made a severable risk by distribution of the amount of insurance through different classes or articles of property.[79] Where the mortgagor and mortgagee are insured as their interests may appear, there is a several liability.[80]

§ 8. Modification and rescission of contract.—Mistake must be mutual to authorize the reformation of an insurance policy therefor.[81] The insured may have a policy reformed, though he has not read it after having an opportunity.[82] The time within which insured should discover that a policy delivered to him is not that which he bargained for begins with the receipt of the policy.[83]

Where, through a mistake of an agent, a policy insuring the deceased wife's property is issued in the name of the wife, neither the husband nor the heirs having knowledge of such fact, the policy may be reformed in equity and recovery had thereon in the same action.[84]

Where the policy provides that insured is to leave with his employers sufficient to pay monthly premiums, a claim on the funds in the hands of the employer is a rejection of an offer of rescission by insured, and the wife of insured is not estopped to collect the policy by the fact that she accepts her husband's wages, the insurance company having withdrawn its claim and it not appearing that she had any knowledge thereof.[85]

§ 9. Cancellation.—A policy of insurance can be canceled by one of the parties only by strict compliance with its terms, unless such terms are waived.[86] A cancellation may be asserted, though the insurer is estopped from contesting liability on the ground of nonpayment of premiums.[87] Mistake in surrendering for cancellation must be mutual to authorize a recovery thereafter.[88]

After the death of the insured, a previously unaccepted offer of cancella-

If a statute require that the exact sum payable on the happening of the contingency insured against, must be specified, a specification in the policy cannot be changed by by-laws not set out therein though made a part thereof by recital [Rev. tion cannot be accepted,[89] but an action to cancel on the ground of previously undiscovered fraud may be brought.[90]

An agent instructed to cancel cannot agree to a conditional cancellation.[91]

Authority of soliciting agent.—The company is not bound by the act of a soliciting agent in canceling policies where he is unauthorized to do so and no knowledge of his act is established.[92] Soliciting agents cannot receive notice of cancellation,[93] though brokers who have for several years obtained insurance for insured may do so as to a policy obtained by them through another agency from a company which they do not represent.[94]

Notice to the insured is essential,[95] unless waived.[96] In order that a notice of reduction of the amount of insurance be binding on insured, it must be shown that he acquiesced therein.[97] Notice to the trustee in a deed of trust is unnecessary, though the policy is pledged as collateral to the deed.[98] Sufficiency of notice of cancellation to a mortgagee is governed by the circumstances of the particular case.[99]

Return of premium.[1]—Where unearned premium is to be returned on surrender of the policy on cancellation, the company on canceling the policy need not return or tender the premium until the policy is surrendered.[2] Cancellation cannot be effected by a return of the unearned premium to a person unauthorized by the real beneficiary to consent to cancellation.[3]

Where accident policies stipulate that an insurance is limited to one ticket and that premiums paid for tickets in excess will be returned on demand, one of two policies issued to the same person at the same time for the same period is void, though the amount of premium paid on it has not been tendered insured.[4]

95. An insurance policy remains in force though cancelled on the books of the agent, it being his intention to substitute therefor a policy on another company, if the insured has no notice of the intended substitution, the first policy is retained by him and the second is not delivered. Kerr v. Milwaukee M. Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 442. A policy providing that it may be cancelled on five days' notice by the insurer, a telegram to insured's agent directing that the risk would not be carried and that the policy should be cancelled operates as a cancellation on the expiration of five days. Schwarzschild & S. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 52. The fact that a bookkeeper of insured takes the agents to a bank where the policy is deposited, does not justify the agents in believing that the bank had authority to surrender such policy or receive notice of cancellation without notice to the insured. Edwards v. Sun Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 886.

96. A settlement on the basis of the amount to which the insurer has claimed that it has reduced its risk, is a waiver of the right to object to such reduction of the risk in the absence of fraud. McLean v. American M. F. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 146.

sonalty may be subject of a gift inter vivos[6] by parol and without notice to the insurer.[7] A transfer by a husband to his wife of a policy payable to his executors, administrators or assigns is, in Louisiana, to be governed by the rules of law prescribed for donations.[8]

Sufficiency and validity.—The law governing the contract of insurance does not control the validity of an assignment which is governed by the law of the place where it is made.[9] A formal manner of transfer may be waived by the insurer.[10] Third persons cannot object.[11]

An assignment under seal reciting that it is for value is presumed to be on a good consideration.[12] Filing with the insurer amounts to a delivery to the assignee.[13] A promise to give an assignment such attention as it may deserve establishes notice to the insurer.[14] A recital in an assignment that it is subject to a claim which in fact does not exist is surplusage and does not affect the assignment of the entire sum.[15] An assignment may be in the form of an instrument changing the beneficiaries.[16]

Operation and effect.—A written assignment of a policy of insurance as collateral security amounts to a mortgage of it.[17] Earnings are properly paid the insured.[18] If it is specified that the interest of the pledgee shall not be invalidated by any act of the owner, the pledgee is not bound by agreements as to extent of losses between the owner and the company.[19]

An assignment of a life policy executed in accordance with its terms by insured and beneficiary leaves the entire legal interest in the assignee.[20]

Where the company has knowledge of transfers of the property and assents to the assignment of the policy, it is as effectual as if a new policy is written,[21] and after a valid gift of an insurance policy, the donee has a continuing right and may keep the policy in force by payment of premiums.[22]

Consent to an assignment of the policy and transfer of the property precludes the assertion of a breach of condition by the original holder as against the transferee on a subsequent loss,[23] but does not preclude the assertion as

14. A letter from the company in which it is stated that an assignment will be placed on file for such attention as it may deserve when the policy becomes a claim, is a sufficient indication of assent to the assignment. Tremblay v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 97 Me. 547.

against the assignee of fraud, of which the company had no notice at the time of consent.[24] Where the interests of successive assignees of a policy of life insurance have terminated by the death of the assignor whose interests were contingent on survival of insured, the company, if it has not had knowledge of the death of the assignor, is not estopped from denying the interest of the last assignee, by the fact that it makes an offer to such assignee of a certain sum for a legal surrender.[25]

A provision against assignment is not violated by deposit of the policy as collateral security to an assignment of the mortgage note, the policy containing a mortgage clause,[26] or by assignment after loss.[27]

Assignments by beneficiary.—A wife who is the beneficiary in a life policy on her husband's life does not, by an assignment to which the husband's consent is not shown, pass his right to a surrender value.[28] The husband's consent may be shown by the fact that he also assigns the policy in writing.[29] Under a policy payable to a named beneficiary if living, and if not, to her children, in case of her death before the insured after assignment of her interest, the children take as against the assignee.[30] In Wisconsin, a married woman who is the beneficiary of a policy on her husband's life cannot assign her interest nor can the person paying the premiums or her husband.[31] After the beneficiary's rights have become vested by death of the insured, a release must be based on consideration and an attempted release not completed at the time of insured's death becomes inoperative.[32]

§ 11. Reinsurance.—An insurance company which by taking over the entire assets of another insurance company has disabled it from complying with contracts made with its policy holders cannot thereafter say that it is not liable to such policy holders upon the ground that the absorbed company has not complied with its contracts with the reinsurer, and the insured may bring an action in his own name.[33]

Where a member of an association of underwriters continues to sell insurance after a fund measuring his limited liability is exhausted, he is regarded as bound to provide another fund on the conditions of his original contract, and payment of a previous liability is not a defense to the enforcement of a policy against him.[34]

An association issuing a Lloyd's policy may provide that action be brought against the general manager as attorney in fact, but if he has resigned and his place has not been filled, action on the policy may be brought against individual members.[35]

§ 12. Avoidance of policy by misrepresentations, breach of warranty or condition.[36] A. Warranties, representations and conditions. Definitions; distinctions and effect.—The contract may determine the status of representations and promises as warranties,[37] but the language must be exact and not misleading to insured.[38] Warranties usually cannot be predicated on a statement of opinion.[39] It is usually made essential by statute that statements in the application to be regarded as warranties must be incorporated in the policy, in which case an original application controls a copy attached to, but not referred to, in the body of the policy,[40] and where a correct copy is required, no portion of the application may be relied on if answers, even though not bearing on the ground of forfeiture, are omitted.[41]

Compliance with warranties.—As to representations, substantial compliance only is required, but warranties must be literally and exactly fulfilled,[42] and at common law, though as to immaterial matters,[43] and so under jurisprudence based on the civil law.[44] Good faith is not an excuse.[45] Truth only is involved.[46]

Statutory provisions.—Many states have now enacted statutes providing that whatever may be the technical effect of the statements and promises of insured, whether to be regarded as representations or affirmative or promissory warranties, untruth shall not be a defense to liability on the policy, unless with regard to a matter contributing to the loss,[47] or increasing the hazard.[48] The false statements are sometimes required to have been made willfully and with an intent to deceive, to be ground for avoidance,[49] though under the Misssouri statute, the intent may be fraudulent, if the misstatements are not as to matters causing the loss.[50] These statutes apply to accident companies,[51] and are extended to foreign companies operating within the states,[52] some states going so far as to make statutes applicable only to foreign companies.[53] They are not retroactive.[54] They cannot be avoided by the policy[55] or application.[56]

Representations.—There is in the absence of an express provision on that head, an implied condition in every contract of insurance of the truth of all material representations of the insured on the faith of which the contract is made, though they are oral and not set out in the policy.[57]

Mere misrepresentations must be material[58] which may be shown by the fact that specific questions are directed toward their subject-matter.[59] They must cause the issuance of the policy,[60] and insured must know their materiality as well as falsity.[61] An actual intent to deceive must be present,[62] which will not be presumed from mere falsity,[63] though intent to prejudice the insurer need not be shown.[64]

Incontestable provisions barring all defenses except actual fraud preclude the company from setting up constructive fraud or untruthful statements in the application,[65] but do not prevent a rescission for fraud within a reasonable time after discovery and on return of premiums,[66] or a correction of the amount of insurance to conform with the true age of the applicant, there having been a misstatement thereof.[67]

Effect of severability of policy.—Where the policy is severable, a breach of condition as to one portion of the risk may not be fatal as to the remainder.[68]

Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, 24 Sup. Ct. 247. Where a policy of insurance against loss on sales generally has attached to it a rider undertaking

Rights of beneficiary on misstatement by insured.—The vested interest of a beneficiary in a life policy will not prevent a forfeiture by reason of acts of the insured,[69] though the beneficiary is innocent of fraud.[70]

Rights of mortgagee on breach by insured.—Mortgage clauses, making loss, if any, payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, place the mortgagee at the risk of acts of the mortgagor, avoiding the insurance under the original policy.[71] The mortgagee's rights may be saved by provision in the policy against invalidation by act of the owner or insured.[72] The cases conflict as to whether such provision creates an independent contract.[73]

(§ 12) B. Operation of particular representations, warranties and conditions.[74] Other insurance.—As a general rule, statements by insured as to other insurance are regarded as material and, when false, will avoid the policy.[75] Applicant's knowledge of such insurance is conclusively presumed.[76] It need not be absolutely payable to the insured's estate.[77] Permission to renew authorizes a substitution of policies.[78]

Location of the risk must be correctly stated where affecting the hazard.[79]

Ownership and title.—Correct statement of insured's title may be demanded. Policies usually require any interest other than sole and unconditional ownership to insure against loss on sales to a particular firm to a specified amount, the latter is a different contract from that embodied in the original policy and not invalidated by representations as to the insured's gross sales and gross losses during previous years made in the application for the original policy. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 25. Where a house and its contents are insured, misrepresentation as to ownership of the house avoids insurance on the contents. Germier v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co., 109 La. 341. Machinery owned by a third party included in a policy, requiring sole and unconditional ownership, avoids the entire policy though the other property is insured for a stated amount. Elliott v. Teutonia Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 359.

70. On policy obtained by fraud of the insured. Somers v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 691.

71. Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 916. The mortgagee recovers in the right of the mortgagor and only when he may recover. Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. [Wis.] 94 N. W. 295. The mortgagee is not protected against a condition avoiding the policy on transfer by the owner without written notice. Jaskulski v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 98. Where the mortgagee does not require the insertion of the clause in the Standard Policy stating that his interest shall not be invalidated by the act of the mortgagor or owner. Rosenstein v. Traders' Ins. Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 481.

72. A mortgagee may recover though by an innocent mistake of himself or agent a wrong name is inserted in the body of the policy as the owner of the legal title and equity of redemption. The policy contained the usual clause against mis-statement of title or interest. Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Hinds [Kan.] 73 Pac. 893. The acts against which the mortgagee is protected are such acts of commission or omission on the part of the owner or mortgagor that may forfeit the policy. The mortgagee is protected against the failure of the mortgagor to furnish proofs of loss. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter [Fla.] 33 So. 473.

73. The effect of providing that a policy payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, shall not be invalidated as to the mortgagee's interest by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner, is to create two separable contracts relating to the same subject of indemnity but applying to different interests, and the mortgagee may recover though before issuance of the policy the mortgagor has transferred his interest to one who procures insurance in the mortgagor's name. Smith v. Union Ins. Co. [R. I.] 55 Atl. 715. While a clause making a policy payable to a mortgagee and providing that his interest may not be invalidated by any act of the mortgagor, does not create an independent contract in favor of the mortgagee, it gives him a separate contractual status so that he can recover where the mortgagor could not. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter [Fla.] 33 So. 473.

to be specifically stated.[80] Such stipulations relate to the time of issuance of the policy.[81] The agent is not bound to investigate insured's title.[82]

Incumbrance.—Of the same nature as the ownership clauses are clauses requiring existing or subsequent incumbrances to be stated;[83] but where a policy is issued without representations as to title, the insurer cannot object that the insured's interest was not correctly stated or existing incumbrances disclosed.[84]

Change of title or interest.—Policies usually incorporate a requirement that any change of title or interest must be reported to the insurer and his consent obtained. Such provisions are valid,[85] and for their interpretation, see the footnotes.[86] A reconveyance before loss may cure a forfeiture for change in title.[87]

80. Nature of title satisfying condition for sole ownership: Interest of a partner does not (McGrath v. Home Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. Supp. 374) nor an undivided interest with a mortgage on the residue, for more than the entire value (Palatine Ins. Co. v. Dickenson, 116 Ga. 794) nor title in trust for insured and others, to sell and distribute proceeds (Bradley v. German-American Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 369) nor interest of a vendor who has received a large portion of the purchase money from the vendee and allowed the vendee to enter into possession, though the legal title has not passed (Rosenstock v. Miss. Home Ins. Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 309) nor of a vendee who has executed an instrument amounting to a contract to re-sell (Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Hahn [Neb.] 96 N. W. 255).

Mortgagor before foreclosure has such interest. Wolf v. Theresa Village M. F. Ins. Co., 115 Wis. 402; Union Assur. Soc. v. Nalls [Va.] 44 S. E. 896.

Vendee of realty under a land contract is a sole and unconditional owner. Matthews v. Capital F. Ins. Co., 115 Wis. 272. Possession may be under an unconditional parol contract. Milwaukee M. Ins. Co. v. Rhea [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 9. There may be an agreement to pay a balance due, or sell or re-sell and reconvey to the seller (Stowell v. Clark, 171 N. Y. 673), or a contract authorizing the seller to take possession in case notes given for purchase price are not paid when due (Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co. v. Strain, 24 Ky. L. R. 958, 70 S. W. 274).

82. Pope v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 136 Ala. 670.

83. A provision against incumbrance is violated by the fact that a house insured is on land incumbered by a vendor's lien, though the lien existed before the house was built. Curlee v. Tex. Home F. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 831, 986. Omission of the fact that there is a mortgage on premises insured, is a material fact and prevents insurance being effective, though made without intent to deceive or defraud. Hayes v. U. S. F. Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 702. An agreement by a vendee that his vendor transfer land, which the vendee holds under a contract of sale to secure a debt owing by the vendee to a third person, is an incumbrance. 85. Jaskulski v. Citizens' M. F. Ins. Co. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 98.

86. Change of Title or Interest. There is no violation as long as the insured continues to be the sole and exclusive owner and possessor of the property insured. Stenzel v. Pa. F. Ins. Co., 110 La. 1019. A conveyance by joint owners to one owner is not a "sale, transfer or incumbrance." German M. F. Ins. Co. v. Fox [Neb.] 96 N. W. 652. A transfer by insured to a firm in which he is a silent partner will avoid a policy so conditioned as to property which passes from the insured to any other person otherwise than by due operation of law unless notice is given to the insurer. Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, 24 Sup. Ct. 247, 48 Law. Ed. ——. Conveyance to the wife of the insured must be assented to. Melcher v. Ins. Co. of Pa., 97 Me. 512.

A mortgage is not a change of interest, title or possession (Wolf v. Theresa Village M. F. Ins. Co., 115 Wis. 402), though in form of an absolute deed executed for security (Aetna Ins. Co. v. Jacobson, 105 Ill. App. 283). The execution of a deed which is not delivered and which is not to take effect except on the death of insured does not change unconditional or sole ownership. Frankin Ins. Co. v. Feist [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 188. A conveyance to secure another from a possible liability which never occurs, is not a change of title though absolute in form. Henton v. Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. [Neb.] 95 N. W. 670. Delivery, fraudulently procured, of a duly executed deed is not a change of ownership. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Warbritton, 66 Kan. 93, 71 Pac. 278. A recorded deed under which no consideration is paid and without change of possession executed to prevent enforcement of a judgment is a change in title. Rosenstein v. Traders' Ins. Co., 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 481. A contract to convey under which consideration is not paid and there is no change in possession or the right thereto, is not a change in interest or title. Home M. Ins. Co. v. Tompkies, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 404. A guardian's contract of sale, subject to approval by the court, is not a change of interest, title or possession. Tiemann v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 5. Purchase by a devisee of insured in partition, is a change of title. Dornblaser v. Sugar Valley M. F. Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 536. Execution of a bill of sale placed in the hands of a third person to be delivered on full payment of the consideration at which time title is to pass, a portion of the consideration having been paid is change of title or interest. Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Western Assur. Co. [Mich.] 98 N. W. 9. An adjudication of bankruptcy is not a sale or transfer of the property where the loss occurs before the estate vests in the trustee. Fuller v. N. Y. F. Ins. Co. [Mass.] 67 N. E. 879.

Notice of foreclosure or other legal proceedings instituted which may affect insured's title may be required.[88] On commencement of such proceedings, the policy may provide that the insurance terminate, in which case the insured should apply for cancellation of the policy and return of unearned premium.[89]

Where there is no provision that a policy shall be void on beginning of foreclosure proceedings by the mortgagee to whom loss is payable, such mortgagee may recover, though there is a condition that in case of foreclosure proceedings without notice to the company the policy should be void.[90]

Iron safe clauses.—For the purpose of avoiding fraud, clauses are inserted in the policy requiring insured to keep correct books and invoices in a fireproof safe. Such provisions are valid,[91] and compliance is a condition precedent to recovery.[92] The invoice to satisfy this provision must be sufficiently specific to show the condition of the stock,[93] and such invoices must be kept, though their production is not insisted on.[94] Inadvertent omission to place them in the safe will not aid insured,[95] but if while in the safe they are destroyed through its not being fireproof, the insured has complied if he believe that the safe fulfilled the requirements of the policy.[96] Books of third persons will not satisfy a provision for the production of books by insured, though showing the facts required to be shown by the insured's books.[97]

Increase of risk.—Notice of increased hazard must be given to the insurer when the policy so stipulates,[98] and the insured must avoid any change in the premises which will increase danger.[99] Use of a portable engine within a prescribed distance of buildings insured, in a permanent manner as is necessary to the filling of a silo, is a breach of warranty against such use.[1] A provision that the policy shall be void, if the hazard be increased by any means within the control of the insured, does not modify the effect of clauses referring to other specific means.[2]

99. Temporary displacement of a sprinkling system through freezing is not an increase of risk relieving the insurer from liability where extra care has been taken in watching the plant and immediate steps adopted to repair it and the repairs were not a change in the system discharging the insurer. Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Mfrs. Mut. Fire Ins. Corp., 173 N. Y. 633.

Guarding against extra hazard are conditions against vacancy,[3] inoperation of machinery,[4] and requiring permits for alterations and repairs.[5]

Keeping of gasoline or other explosives is generally authorized by special permit,[6] and violations of restrictions against such keeping are fatal, though by a tenant without insured's knowledge.[7] Gasoline and increase of hazard clauses are to be construed separately, hence the keeping of gasoline may avoid a policy without regard to increase of risk or resultant loss.[8]

Watchmen.—Temporary absence of a watchman will not avoid a policy if insured has acted with due diligence.[9]

Conditions against release of claims against persons causing loss must be complied with.[10]

Protection from further damage after the fire loss, where stipulated in the policy, is a condition precedent to recovery unless waived.[11] The appointment of a receiver in bankruptcy does not remove the insurer's right to have the property cared for by insured.[12]

Condition of health.—As a general rule, statements of the insured as to condition of health leading to the issuance of the policy are regarded as material and must be true.[13] Warranties as to absence of bodily or mental infirmities and as to sound mental and physical condition except as stated may be exacted.[14] Cases in which particular representations as to health have been considered are grouped

4. A provision that the policy shall be void if the property insured is not operated for more than a specified length of time, avoids the policy after expiration of a longer period during which the property has remained idle by permission of the company, though the time fixed in the policy has not expired after the termination of the permitted period. El Paso Reduction Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 121 Fed. 937.

5. A reasonable limitation as to the time in which mechanics may be employed in the insured building in alterations or repairs, is applicable, though the work done is reasonably necessary for the ordinary repair and preservation of the property. Fifteen days is a reasonable limitation. German Ins. Co. v. Hearne [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 289, 59 L. R. A. 492. A condition by which insured agrees not to enter into any special agreement releasing carriers from their common law or statutory liabilities, if broken, avoids the policy notwithstanding a loss of goods in transit was by a fire of incendiary origin for which the carrier was not liable. in the notes.[15] A change of health after issuance of the policy does not affect the contract.[16]

Attendance of physicians.[17]—Treatment for temporary indisposition need not be stated.[18] There is a conflict of authority as to whether insured must have summoned the physician.[19]

Miscellaneous statements.—The cases as to materiality and effect of other statements, concerning such matters as family history,[20] occupation,[21] habits and use of intoxicants,[22] and other applications for insurance,[23] or rejection thereof, are grouped in the notes.[24]

Notice of post mortem, though required, need not be given unless shown to be material.[25]

(§ 12) C. Waiver or estoppel as to misrepresentations, breaches of war-

15. Sound health means freedom from sensible disease and apparent derangement of functions by which health may be tested (Jeffrey v. United Order of Golden Cross, 97 Me. 176), or the absence of any vice in the constitution or disease of a serious nature having a direct tendency to shorten life in distinction to a temporary ailment or indisposition (Packard v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. [N. H.] 54 A. 287; Clemens v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 567). Bodily infirmity must be something amounting to an actual inroad on physical health. Black v. Travellers' Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 732. Evidence of receipt of sick benefits from benefit society and cessation of work under a doctor's advice, does not falsify a warranty of good health, where it appears that the insured was free from organic disease. Clemens v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 567. A warranty of physical soundness is not broken by the fact that the applicant's leg is slightly curved and on that account more susceptible to inflammation in case of accident. Md. Casualty Co. v. Gehrmann, 96 Md. 634. Where answers are warranties, insured must in case of doubt as to whether he has been an inmate of a hospital, give a complete statement of the facts or state that he does not know. The fact that insured has been sent by a physician to a hospital in order that he might get good bed and board indicates that he has been an "inmate." Farrell v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 684.

A warranty as to the name of the physician in attendance during a most recent illness, is not broken by giving the name of one of two physicians in attendance, the name given being that of the one in attendance during the latter and greater portion of the illness. 18. Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 17. Attendance during a slight bilious fever need not be mentioned. Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan [Ark.] 73 S. W. 102.

19. Statement of non-attendance of physician is falsified, though insured objected to the doctor being sent for and did not take his medicine, though she allowed him to examine and prescribe for her. Flippen v State Life Ins. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 362. A warranty that insured had been attended by a certain named physician is not broken by the fact that during a slight ailment, another physician had been called by insured's wife over his objection it not appearing that his medicine was taken or his course of treatment followed. Crosby v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 89.

20. Statement by applicant that sister died from kidney inflammation when in fact she died from chronic pneumonia, is not prima facie material. New Era Ass'n v. MacTavish [Mich.] 94 N. W. 599.

21. Abandonment of occupation is not shown by cessation therefrom after six months, there being no engagement in a different occupation. Falsifying a statement that applicant's occupation was labor in a rolling mill. Clemens v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 567.

22. To falsify a negative answer to a question of "Have you ever used spirits, wine or malt liquors to excess?" there must be more than a showing that insured had sometimes but not habitually drunk to excess. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Exchange Bank [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 360. Proof of occasional excess does not show a breach of warranty as to the use of intoxicants where the form of question indicates that the information sought was the applicant's habit or practice. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Liddell [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 87. Where the policy requires insured not to use intoxicating liquors to excess, an instruction is erroneous which leaves to insured the determination of what is an excessive use. Union Life Ins. Co. v. Jameson [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 199.

23. A prior application for insurance must be disclosed, though conditional and not to become operative as a request for insurance, unless insured afterward decided that he desired a policy, if he should be accepted as a risk. Webb v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 635.

24. Unfavorable reports by physicians in several instances and rejections concealed from the insured will avoid the policy. Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n [Mich.] 95 N. W. 573.

25. The insurer was immediately notified of the post mortem and an offer of another post mortem made and there was no showing that the first examination disclosed facts that would have been hidden on the second, and the first was held under circumstances rendering doubtful plaintiff's knowledge or consent. Loesch v. Union C. & S. Co., 176 Mo. 654.

ranty or condition subsequent.—There can be no waiver without knowledge.[26] The insurer is charged with knowledge of the facts disclosed in a prior application which is referred to.[27] The president of the company may waive a breach of warranty in the absence of a by-law showing that he does not possess the authority usual to his office.[28] In many states knowledge of the soliciting agent is deemed knowledge of the insurer, estopping it from setting up facts known to the agent at the time of issuance of the policy as a ground of forfeiture,[29] though the application states that only a general agent may make contracts relative to risks, and that waiver of conditions must be indorsed on the policy,[30] and the same doctrine is held to apply to facts coming to the knowledge of the soliciting agent after the issuance of the policy,[31] though not universally.[32]

Knowledge of a broker soliciting insurance and placing his orders with the insurer's agent will not work a waiver of a requirement of sole and unconditional

26. Evidence of waiver, see post, § 20 C. Where a fraudulent concealment by the agent in issuing a policy to himself is not known at the time negotiations for payment are entered into, such defense is not waived. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. McGreevy [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 415. Payment of a portion of the loss to a mortgagee does not waive change of ownership. Cottom v. National Fire Ins. Co., 65 Kan. 511, 70 Pac. 357. A provision against incumbrance by chattel mortgage is not waived by indorsement making the loss payable to the mortgagees as their interest might appear, where it is not shown that the insurer had knowledge of the fact that the persons to whom the indorsement was made were mortgagees. Co., 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 275. There is no fraud in a representation that insured is the owner of the land on which the property is situated, where the agent is informed that notes for the purchase money are not yet paid. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Palmer [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 603. Misrepresentation as to ownership does not cause a policy in a mutual insurance company to be void, where a building and personal property therein owned by a tenant are insured in a mutual company, the application being signed by a name indicating joint ownership by the husband of the tenant at the suggestion of the agent who knew the several interests in the property. ownership.[33] Mutual insurance companies may be bound by the acts of their agent in waiving conditions of the policy.[34]

Policies containing condition against waiver of their terms are variously construed. It has been held that such provision may be waived in the same manner as any other,[35] or may refer merely to alterations after the contract becomes binding;[36] but it has been held also that provisions requiring waiver of conditions to be indorsed on the policy are a binding limitation on local agents,[37] and that an attempt to show an oral waiver is an attempt to vary the terms of the contract.[38]

False statements by agent.—On the principle that the soliciting agent acts for the insurer and not the insured rests the rule that insured is not responsible for misstatements knowingly inserted in the application by the agent or medical examiner.[39] The rule will not apply to another insurer which issues a policy on the basis of the same application.[40] The insured is not liable for a mistake of the agent,[41] and is not bound to see that he acts in good faith.[42] If the application is signed by insured without knowledge of the fraud, the company cannot defend, though it provide that the statements of the insured therein shall be warranties.[43] Provisions in the policy that the solicitor is to be regarded as the insured's agent, while ineffectual to render him such, may place the duty on insured of seeing that the application is correct.[44] Under such a policy, untrue answers entered

A general agent may waive any stipulations in the policy, notwithstanding a clause in the policy forbidding it. Gwaltney v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 132 N. C. 925.

36. A provision in a policy of insurance that waiver of any of its provisions must be in writing, signed by chief officers of the company and attached to the policy does not refer to changes in the blank form of the policy before it becomes binding on the parties, and does not limit the authority of an agent to make a contract with a mortgage clause. State Ins. Co. v. Hale [Neb.] 95 N. W. 473. Persons dealing with an agent are not bound by hidden restrictions or restrictions in the policy subsequently issued as to acts concerning the application. A provision that if the subject of insurance is encumbered by chattel mortgage, the policy was to be void, is not open to construction. Hammell v. Insurance Co. of Pa., 24 Ohio Circ. R. 101. The insurer is not estopped from benefiting by a provision against the keeping of gasoline by the fact that the agent states that such right is conferred by a clause insuring such other merchandise as is usually kept in similar stocks, there being no allegation that plaintiff was ignorant, could not read or understand the policy or was deceived or misled. 44. A provision that the solicitor of insurance and medical examiner ought to be regarded as the agents of the insured and that any false, incorrect or untrue answer by the solicitor and by the medical examiner, if of the character made warranties by the contract, avoid the policy.[45]

Examiner's certificate.—Statutory provision that a certificate of health by a medical examiner or physician acting as such shall estop the insurer from setting up the defective health of insured at the time the policy went into effect, unless the certificate is procured by the fraud or deceit of the insured, is regarded as referring to the examiner's certificate and not to the approval of his report by the medical director who passes on his report.[46]

Delivery of the policy to insured, with knowledge of a right to forfeit, waives such right.[47] Delivery to the soliciting agent does not have such effect.[48]

Acceptance of premiums or assessments after knowledge works a waiver or estoppel.[49] But on acquiring knowledge, the insurer is not bound to return unearned premiums,[50] especially where the contract so provides.[51] By statute in some states, misrepresentations in the application cannot be made a defense unless the premiums accepted are deposited in court.[52]

Delay in asserting.—Forfeitures must be claimed within a reasonable time.[53]

Admission of liability or proceedings looking toward a settlement operate as a waiver of known grounds of forfeiture,[54] but investigation of loss and determination of amount of damages will not operate as a waiver of broken conditions, where insured before investigation makes an express agreement to the contrary.[55] or concealment of the facts shall render the policy void, will require the insured to take notice of the limitations of the company's agents. Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 291.

45. This holding is not disturbed by the common law of New York so far as answers written by insurance solicitors are concerned, they being such as the applicant himself was at liberty to insert. Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 Atl. 291.

Company is estopped in the absence of fraud to assert that the policy is void on account of non-payment of premium or ill health, where the policy itself provides that on approval of the application and issuance of the policy it is in force from the day of application. Grier v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 542. Where agent of an accident insurance company knowingly sells a crippled person a policy, the company cannot assert a provision against insurance of cripples. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Holloway, 24 Ky. L. R. 1856, 72 S. W. 796. If an agent accepts a risk with knowledge that the applicant is not yet eligible and the certificate is delivered on compliance with the condition as to eligibility the status at the time of application cannot be asserted as a defense. 51. In order to resort to a defense of suicide, the insurer need not tender back unearned premium, where the policy provides that in such event all payments shall be forfeited to the company; the defense then does not amount to a rescission of the contract. Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 200 Ill. 270.

52. Rev. St. 1899, § 7891. Lavin v. Empire Life Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 866.

53. Treating the policy as in force after knowledge of facts on which a forfeiture may be claimed is a waiver. Hunt v. State Ins. Co. [Neb.] 92 N. W. 921. Breach of a condition against the keeping of gasoline. Cassimus v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 135 Ala. 256. Additional insurance. Swedish American Ins. Co. v. Knutson [Kan.] 72 Pac. 526.

54. A disclosure in garnishment by creditors of the beneficiary in which the insurer states that it is not indebted to the beneficiary does not operate as a waiver of false warrants in the application though a later statement of the breaches of warranty relied on was filed on a showing that when the interrogatories were first answered a full answer could not be given because defendant was then engaged in investigation. Moore v. Mut. Reserve Fund Life Ass'n [Mich.] 95 N. W. 573. Iron safe clause. Tillis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171. Consent to a prior removal may be given by acts and conduct of an adjuster even after the loss. Montgomery v. Delaware Ins. Co. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 934.

55. Hayes v. U. S. Fire Ins. Co., 132 N. C. 702.

Such agreement is valid though made after loss.[56] A statement that the insurer will not pay the gross amount of policies separately insuring a building and a stock of merchandise does not waive a requirement for the keeping of an inventory of stock.[57]

Payment to mortgagee.—Where a policy provides for payment to a mortgagee, notwithstanding certain breaches of conditions by the owner and for subrogation of the insurance company to the rights of the mortgagee in case of any payment, a waiver of forfeiture does not arise from a payment to the mortgagee of the amount of the mortgage;[58] nor is such waiver to be predicated on a payment to the insured of a balance remaining after satisfying a foreclosure decree obtained by the mortgagee, if such payment is made on an express agreement that it should be without prejudice to the insurance company's right to enforce payment of the judgment of foreclosure which was assigned to it.[59]

Proofs of loss.—Requiring the insured to prepare proofs of loss after knowledge of breach of conditions amounts to a waiver,[60] in the absence of agreement or circumstance showing a contrary understanding,[61] and where insured is not misled.[62] Conditions precedent to the attaching of insurance under an open policy are not waived by the exaction of additional proofs of loss by the insurer on discovery of the facts relating to such conditions.[63]

Reliance on other defenses.—It is also held that an assertion of definite grounds of forfeiture is a waiver of other grounds.[64] Where the insured is not misled, a claim of absence of liability based on one particular violation of a policy does not prevent the insurer from relying on breaches of other conditions.[65]

§ 13. The risk assumed. Loss and causes of loss.[66]—The insurer may assert that the policy does not cover the cause of loss, though he cannot defend on account of falsity in the application.[67]

Life insurance.—Provisions that the policy shall be null and void in case of a suicide, whether sane or insane, are not against public policy,[68] and bar recovery

60. Concurrent insurance. Fidelity Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Murphy [Neb.] 95 N. W. 702. Where an adjuster with knowledge of noncompliance with an iron safe clause requires the insured to make affidavit of the loss without claiming the forfeiture there is a waiver. Couch v. Home Protection Fire Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1077.

61. Where the adjuster though denying liability on the ground of ownership advises the preparation of proofs of loss to prevent a forfeiture, such facts do not establish a waiver, though the proofs were received by the company. Matthie v. Globe Fire Ins. Co., 174 N. Y. 489. If the proofs of loss stipulate that their furnishing shall not be a waiver of any rights of the company, a breach of condition is not waived by having the insured prepare such proofs. Curlee v. Tex. Home Fire Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 831, 986. Furnishing of blank stating on its face that the company waived none of the conditions in the policy does not waive a condition forfeiting the policy in case a post-mortem was held without notice to the insurer. Loesch v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 176 Mo. 654. A waiver of forfeiture on the ground of sole and unconditional ownership is not shown by the fact that the insurer demanded additional proof of loss after knowledge of a lien on the property for unpaid purchase money. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Enoch [Ark.] 77 S. W. 899.

67. An exception in an accident policy against a liability for death resulting wholly or partly from infirmity or disease, may be raised as a defense notwithstanding statutory provisions against defenses on the ground of fraudulent application [Rev. St. §§ 3625, 3626]. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Dorney, 68 Ohio St. 151.

68. N. W. M. Ins. Co. v. Churchill, 105 Ill. App. 159, 164.

where insured takes his own life other than accidentally, without regard to his mental condition.[69] Such provisions are self-executing,[70] and bind the beneficiary.[71]

A statutory provision providing that suicide shall not be a defense, unless contemplated at the time of making application for the policy, covers self-destruction while insane.[72] Such a statute does not prevent accident companies from contracting that a smaller amount shall be payable in case of death by suicide than in case of death by accidental and involuntary causes.[73]

Where insured, though innocent, is legally executed for a crime, no liability arises on the policy.[74]

Accident insurance.—Definitions of accident should not eliminate the element of chance.[75] Death from disease, a natural though not necessary consequence of an accidental physical injury, is a death from accident,[76] and diseased condition of an organ rendering an accident more likely does not prevent the accident from being "independent of all other causes";[77] but under an exception against injuries received in consequence of being under the influence of or affected by or resulting directly or indirectly from diseases or bodily infirmity, recovery cannot be had for a fall from a window while delirious.[78] Specific exceptions do not limit a general exception of a different nature.[79] Accident policies frequently require that death or injury must result from "external, violent and accidental means." For the interpretation of this and similar phrases, see the footnotes;[80] so for requirements of external and visible marks of injury,[81] limitations against death or injury from poison or things taken internally,[82] death or injury from voluntary

79. Where there is a list of specified exceptions, such as intoxicants, anaesthetics, vertigo, etc., acts resulting from which are not insured against a subsequent exception of "any diseases or bodily infirmity" is not limited by the preceding specifically stated exceptions they not being of the same nature or kind. Carr v. Pac. M. L. Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 75 S. W. 180.

80. Death from septic peritonitis resulting from bicycle riding is excluded. Appel v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 83. Death through being struck by a car while crossing a railroad track creates liability (Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 342) or death from dilation of the heart resulting from a strain in lifting a weight, such as insured had been accustomed to lift without difficulty (Horsfall v. Pac. M. L. Ins. Co., 32 Wash. 132, 72 Pac. 1028). Policy held to render the insurer liable for death from accident, though the accident did not produce immediate total and continuous disability. Rorick v. Ry. O. & E. Acc. Ass'n [C. C. A.] 119 Fed. 63.

81. Visible marks of injury on the body are afforded by a redness of the brain tissue disclosed by the autopsy or by death of the body. Union C. & S. Co. v. Mondy [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 677. That after an accident deceased became deathly sick and pale, his hands and feet became cold and perspiration stood out on his face and hands, and that on the day after his skin which previously had been ruddy, became a bluish gray color and remained so until his death, furnishes visible, external marks. Horsfall v. Pac. M. L. Ins. Co., 32 Wash. 132, 72 Pac. 1028.

Covers death resulting from the eating of oysters, which whether poisonous or not, or taken accidentally or not, were consciously and voluntarily swallowed by insured. Md. Casualty Co. v. Hudgins [Tex.] 76 S. W. 745.

exposure to danger,[83] or while engaging in a more hazardous occupation,[84] or from causes intentionally or voluntarily encountered by insured.[85]

Health insurance.—If insured has two diseases, one of which is insured against, either of which is sufficient to disable him entirely from transacting his business, he may recover.[86]

Fire insurance.—Liability exists for all loss occasioned directly by the fire, though it happens during or after the extinguishment thereof.[87] Negligence of the insured or his agent contributing to the loss is not a defense.[88] Where a husband and wife join in an application for insurance on the wife's property, the wife's right to the proceeds is not affected by the wrongful acts of the husband in setting fire to the property without her knowledge.[89]

A rider allowing removal of goods, providing that during removal the property shall be insured in each location, does not insure the goods while in transit.[90]

A policy stipulating against liability for loss by explosion of any kind unless fire ensue imposes no liability for loss by concussion caused by an explosion in a neighboring building.[91]

83. Involuntary is not equivalent to undesigned or unintentional in describing movement causing rupture of blood vessel. Smouse v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 118 Iowa, 436. One rightfully crossing a railroad track at a point recognized as a thoroughfare, is not "walking or being on a railroad bridge, road-bed or location" violating the laws or rules of the corporation. Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 342. An exception against accident while walking on a railroad road bed, covers a portion of the track long used by the residents of the neighborhood as a common pathway without objection on the part of the railroad. Weinschenk v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 183 Mass. 312. An instruction that to bring a case within the exception of an accident policy it must appear that insured was walking or being on the road bed of a railroad voluntarily, is sufficient though plaintiff contends that insured was not voluntarily on the road bed at the time of the accident if he had fallen down and was unable by reason of inability to move to get out of the way quickly enough to escape injury. Id. Passing from one car to another of a vestibuled train will not be a forfeiture of an accident policy. Insured was thrown from an open door of the vestibule and it was not shown that he should have known that the door was open. Robinson v. U. S. Ben. Soc. [Mich.] 94 N. W. 211. Attempt by young, vigorous traveling man to board a train running from eight to ten miles an hour is voluntary or necessary exposure to danger or to obvious risk of injury. Small v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n [Ga.] 45 S. E. 706. Exception of injury in "entering or trying to enter a moving conveyance" covers a sudden starting of a car just as plaintiff had got on its steps. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Brookover [Ark.] 71 S. W. 246. Evidence held not to show voluntary exposure to danger in cleaning a gun. Union C. & S. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ky. L. R. 1035, 76 S. W. 832.

Injuries received while hunting do not include injuries received while helping make a fire on a hunting expedition (Wilkinson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 1016), or while cleaning a gun after a hunting trip (Union C. & S. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ky. L. R. 1035, 76 S. W. 832).

84. Where it is stipulated that riding a bicycle for pleasure is not an occupation, one injured while incidentally riding a bicycle, was not engaged in a more hazardous occupation or exposure. Comstock v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 116 Wis. 382. A classification of "cattle shipper and tender in transit" as more hazardous, does not include a "tender of horses in transit." Brock v. Brotherhood Acc. Co. [Vt.] 54 Atl. 176.

85. A provision that the insured shall not be liable for injury received from fighting or scuffling, etc., in the absence of any qualification, may be assumed to refer to altercations for which the insured is in some degree to blame and in which he is to some degree at least a voluntary participator. Dismissal of complaint on ground that such provision in a policy of accident insurance was shown by plaintiff's testimony to be violated, held error. Coles v. N. Y. Casualty Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 41. A stipulation as to injuries intentionally inflicted on himself by insured or by any other person covers injuries received by the insured through retaliation of a person on whom insured was making an unjustifiable assault. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 391. Injuries received from breaking a blood vessel in attempting to remove a night-shirt are deemed to be voluntary. Smouse v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 118 Iowa, 436.

Plate glass insurance.—Damages resulting from a gasoline vapor explosion are not from fire, though the gas is ignited by a match or light;[92] but a breaking from such an explosion is not covered by an exception against damages sustained by the "blowing up of the building."[93]

The fact that there is a hole in the glass at the time of the issuance of the policy does not show that a later break was in consequence of or connected therewith.[94]

Casualty insurance.—A limitation that the policy does not cover loss from assured's neglect to use all reasonable means to preserve the property does not exempt insurer from a loss on account of negligence of insured's servants, but refers to care to be used after the loss.[95] A provision against loss resulting from the willful act of assured does not free the insurer from liability from the act of a servant in placing fastenings of windows in such position as to break the pipe of an automatic sprinkler, where it is not alleged that he knew that the consequence might follow.[96]

Boiler insurance.—Insurance against boiler explosion covers loss occasioned by flooding from the discharge of an automatic sprinkler system by escaping steam from a burst pipe.[97]

Employer's and contractor's liability insurance.—Costs of successful defenses are not impliedly covered.[98] Insurance against accidental bodily injury covers accidentally contracted diseases.[99]

If a judgment against the firm is set aside as to one of the partners, there is no liability on an agreement to indemnify the partnership against any judgment that might be rendered against it.[1]

Where the policy excepts personal injuries caused by contractors' or subcontractors' workmen, plaintiff must prove that the injury resulted only from the negligence of himself or his employes, and must prove that it was not caused by a subcontractor or a subcontractor's workman.[2] The insurer is not prevented from denying liability by reason of its failure to defend an action on a bond given by insured for the purpose of releasing money held by the obligee in which the insured agreed to hold the obligee harmless on account of any judgment in behalf of any person injured, and discharge such judgment, whether groundless or otherwise.[3]

Title insurance.—Title insurance is designed to save insured harmless from any loss through defects, liens or encumbrances that may affect or burden his title when he takes it, and if insured gets a good title, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary the covenant of the insurer is fulfilled and there is no liability. Such a contract usually bears the date of the deed of the title which it purports to insure, and where there is a discrepancy between these dates, the circumstance states that defendant was not liable for any damages caused by the explosion, unless fire ensued and if there was an explosion and fire ensued thereafter, defendant was liable only for the actual damages caused by the fire and was not liable for any damages caused or resulting from the explosion. occasioning it should be noted in the contract.[4] A contract will not be divided into one of indemnity against loss and also of guaranty.[5]

Confirmation of a tax or assessment by a city is not a final judgment or decree on a lien within the meaning of a policy of title insurance.[6] No recovery can be had for negligence of the insurer in searching the title.[7]

§ 14. Extent of loss and liability therefor.[8] Accident insurance.—Where the policy provides in case of suicide for payment of a fractional part of the amount otherwise payable, such sum is to be computed on the benefit ordinarily payable, and not on the double amount stipulated in specified circumstances.[9]

If it appears that at the time of injury the insured was exposed to hazard peculiarly incident to an occupation classed as more hazardous than that named in the application as the occupation of the insured, his recovery should be limited to the amount of insurance the premium paid would purchase in the more hazardous class, the policy so providing.[10] Provisions for limited liability in case of injuries intentionally inflicted by a third person are binding, though a higher rate be paid for insurance as a member of a class specially exposed to the risk of such injury.[11]

A paymaster traveling on business of a railroad company from station to station and stopping to pay employes wherever they may be on the road is not a "passenger" on steam cars entitled to double indemnity under the policy.[12]

Time previous to employment of a physician cannot be included where disability is limited to such time as insured is in the care of a physician.[13] Prolongation of disability by a premature attempt to use an injured limb does not terminate a right to weekly indemnity.[14] A single act in the line of insured's profession will not bar him from claiming that he was immediately, continuously and wholly disabled by an accident, or the fact that disability is claimed only from the third day after the accident at which time he became confined to his bed.[15] The fact that a person is not too sick to go by street car to his doctor's office does not prevent him from being confined to the house or being totally disabled.[16]

Amputation of an arm a little below the elbow is "loss of an arm."[17]

Health insurance.—Recovery for total disability cannot be had where insured continues to direct his business.[18]

Fire insurance.—The market value is not necessarily the measure of loss, but the actual value, taking into consideration the cost of rebuilding and allowing for difference between new and old.[19] Increased cost of repair by reason of building laws may be considered.[20] But where the policy provides that the loss or damage shall not exceed what it would cost to repair or replace with material of like kind and quality, and that insurer shall not be liable beyond the actual value destroyed by fire for loss occasioned by ordinance or law regulating construction or repair of buildings, the rule is otherwise.[21] A provision in the policy for liability only to a specified portion of the actual cash value must be considered, though the value of the property destroyed equals the amount of the insurance.[22] If statutes provide that in case of total loss the insurer shall be liable for the value as fixed by the policy, the policy cannot provide that no more will be paid than what it will cost insured to replace the building, or that the actual cash value will be paid.[23] The fact that before a fire plaintiffs had entered into a contract of sale of the property which they thereafter consummated on the original terms will not prevent a recovery on the policy.[24]

Employer's liability.—On insurance indemnifying against liability for judicially determined claims for injuries, interest does not run until the loss or damage is finally settled by determination of the court of last resort to which an appeal is taken. If the insurer appeal without the wish of the insured, he is chargeable with the costs.[25]

Concurrent insurance.—Provisions in other policies of insurance are not to be considered in determining the liability of an insurer who has expressly stipulated the manner in which his liability shall be fixed in event of concurrent insurance.[26] In determining the amount of insurance for the purpose of apportioning the loss, the face of the policies is to be resorted to regardless of the cash value of the property or a duty imposed on the insurer by certain of the policies to obtain other insurance or become a co-insurer.[27] When two policies insure the same property, but one of them covers other property also, without specifying how much of the insurance applies to each property, a case of double insurance is not presented and the policies do not pro rate.[28] Liabilities between blanket and specific policies are to be apportioned by considering the full amount of the blanket insurance on the first item; on the second item, such amount less the liability on the first; and so on, the items being taken in the order of greatest loss.[29]

§ 15. *Notice and proof of loss. A. loss is provided in the policy, plaintiff should not be precluded if it appears that the purpose for which notice and proofs are required has been accomplished.[31] Proof of death as a condition precedent does not require proof of cause of death.[32]

Where a subsequent disability does not arise from the original accident but from a later accident to the old wound, the insured cannot recover without making new proofs of loss.[33]

Time.—Statutory provisions that contractual stipulations for notice precedent to right to sue for damages must be reasonable and not less than of a certain period avoid clauses in insurance policies requiring insured to give immediate notice of extent of injury.[34] Otherwise such stipulations in accident or employer's liability policies are reasonable.[35] Provisions requiring furnishing of proofs in specified times, being conditions subsequent, are fulfilled by furnishing of proof within a reasonable time under all circumstances.[36]

Immediate notice need not be given where insured is prevented from so doing by unconsciousness.[37]

Notice of injury to an employe given to a forewoman is not notice to the employer requiring notice to the insurer, where the knowledge of the forewoman was not derived within the scope of her duties in respondent's employ.[38]

A specified time for notice of the accident causing disability or death from accident does not begin to run until disability or death results.[39] or abated to such an extent that an inspection of the property damaged may be had.[40]

Form and contents.—Interests in the property are usually required to be stated,[41] though not such as arise after loss.[42] Failure of the proof of loss to set out other insurance is not material unless it is shown that there was other insurance.[43] Proof of cost price in claim of loss is not sufficient where articles have been used for sometime.[44]

Conclusiveness and effect.[45]—To render a misstatement in the proofs of loss fatal, it must be fraudulent.[46] Mistake in proofs may be shown.[47] Proof of loss is not to be regarded as tending to prove the ownership of the property, or the fact of loss, its amount, or material facts in issue.[48]

(§ 15) B. Waiver and estoppel to claim.—A local agent with authority to make contracts of insurance, collect premiums and sign policies, may waive proofs of loss,[49] or an adjuster who is held out by insurers as a proper person with whom insured is to negotiate.[50] Provisions that agents shall not have power to waive conditions or provisions of the policy are not applicable to such waivers.[51] Though see footnote.[52] The waiver need not be on consideration,[53] may be established by conduct subsequent to the breach,[54] and cannot be recalled.[55]

Furnishing of proofs of loss will not prevent an assertion that they have been waived,[56] though it has been held that where the plaintiff furnishes proofs of loss, the question of alleged waiver does not arise.[57] of the time stipulated in which they are to be furnished is not a waiver,[59] nor does the insurer by denying in an answer that its policy covers the loss waive a defense of want of notice which is expressly pleaded also.[60] Insured need not be misled.[61]

An agent unauthorized to adjust a loss or to accept proofs of loss may have authority to deny liability on a policy, and the insurer need not be shown to have knowledge of the denial.[62]

Acceptance and retention of defective proofs.—Strict compliance with provisions of an accident policy as to the furnishing of final proofs of extent and duration of injury will not be demanded where the beneficiary has not acted with laches or in bad faith, and the objections to the sufficiency of the proof could readily have been removed by the insurer.[63] Retention of proofs of loss furnished too late may be considered on the question of waiver,[64] and retention of proofs of loss without objection is an estoppel against assertion of alleged defects in form.[65]

Proceedings for settlement.[66]—Proofs of loss are waived by agreement to submit to arbitration and actions of the company's adjuster conceding the insurer's liability,[67] as where negotiations induce insured to believe that proofs of loss will not be required and refusal to pay is on other grounds.[68] The effect of such acts may be obviated where it is not yet too late for insured to comply with the policy.[69]

Failure to urge.—Objection that notice of an accident has not been given cannot be made after the company has filed an amended answer, though the pleadings are withdrawn for that purpose.[70]

Facts taking place of formal notice.—Where defendant's answer discloses that it had the same knowledge of the facts as plaintiff, and agrees with the facts stated in the petition, notice in due time will be conclusively presumed.[71] The fact that the attorneys of the insurer endeavored to settle for a small sum and received a written report of the accident will not be held as a waiver of a condition for immediate notice in a contractor's liability policy.[72]

Stipulations avoiding waiver.—Defense of an action is not a waiver of immediate notice of the commencement thereof required by the policy of an employer's liability company, where the defense was begun on an express agreement that it should not be a waiver.[73]

§ 16. Adjustment of loss. Arbitration.—A settlement between the insurer and insured is not rendered inconclusive by an agreement before adjustment that investigation of the loss should not waive the right of either party,[74] and if it be really a settlement, the insurer must release a mortgage of which he took an assignment, notwithstanding his stipulation that he paid only to avoid litigation and not under the policy.[75]

Necessity for arbitration.—An appraisement is authorized, although there is a total loss.[76]

Where an award is made a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action, it must be made where appraisal is tendered before suit,[77] though the award is made only prima facie evidence;[78] but failure of an appraisement through the conduct of the appraisers without fault of the insured will not forfeit his right to sue.[79] To necessitate arbitration, there must be an actual disagreement.[80]

Validity and construction of provisions for arbitration.—Provisions for arbitration as to the amount of loss are valid,[81] but cannot be used by the insurer oppressively or in bad faith.[82] Arbitration is dispensed with in case of total loss where the statute fixes a total loss at the face value of the policy.[83]

Misrepresentation as to the legal construction of a contract for submission to arbitration will not vitiate the contract to submit if the parties are under no relation of trust and confidence,[84] and a written agreement therefor cannot be varied by prior or contemporaneous verbal agreements.[85] If the terms are understood, a

Phoenix Ins. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 57. 85. An agreement held to demand appraisal of property totally destroyed as well promise to induce the making of the agreement will not support a charge of fraud.[86]

A provision for the submission of a disagreement in valuation to arbitration does not cover a controversy involving the validity of the claim.[87]

Waiver.—A denial of all liability abrogates the necessity of arbitration,[88] or the knowing selection by the insurer of one not a discreet, disinterested and impartial man as an appraiser,[89] or bad faith.[90] Failure for two months of the appraiser to act will not show a waiver by insurer of its rights to an appraisal.[91] By insisting on a void appraisement the insurer waives his right to another.[92] After refusal to comply with the contract calling for appraisement, the insurer cannot object to uncertainty arising as to the amount of the loss.[93]

Qualification and procedure of arbitrators.[94]—An award is not avoided by the fact that the appraisers are not sworn.[95] Where the arbitrators are men of experience, they need not take evidence.[96]

Formal notice to insured or meeting of appraisers is not generally requisite, though insured should have notice or knowledge.[97] The parties should have notice of time and place of hearing if evidence must be taken.[98] An award made by the company's appraiser and umpire in the absence of insured and his appraiser without notice does not bind insured.[99] Failure of insured to object to a proceeding without notice or to ask to be heard on a casual meeting with the appraisers is not a waiver.[1]

Report or award.[2]—The award must be complete.[3] Where the policy and submission require appraisers to find both the sound value and damage, a blank in the award as to the sound value will not be assumed to intend the finding of absence of such value or aided by a contention that finding was immaterial.[4]

Effect.—An arbitration entered into under the provisions of a policy is not to be regarded as a common-law arbitration, the pendency of which is not a bar to an action.[5]

In an action on a policy, evidence of the value of the property totally destroyed is admissible, though there has been an arbitration, if the award states the value of that partially destroyed only and a subsequent agreement between the parties has changed a contract for submission of both the total and partial loss to one of submission of partial loss only.[6] After an agreement for an appraisement and an award, parol evidence is not admissible in an action on the policy to show a prior agreement fixing the minimum sum which could be established by appraisers, unless there is a showing of fraud or mistake.[7]

Setting aside.—Though arbitration is specified in the policy, an action may be brought to set aside an award and to recover on the policy,[8] and objection to the award may be stated for the first time in the complaint.[9]

Where equity obtains jurisdiction for the purpose of setting aside an award on an insurance policy which has been pleaded as a bar to a pending suit at law on the policy, it may retain the case for the purpose of determining the loss or damage or in its discretion remit that subject to a court of law.[10] The questions of whether defendant is entitled to a new appraisement, whether a policy was nullified by the violation of a vacancy clause and the amount of damages are legal questions which will not be determined on a bill to set aside an appraisement.[11]

Harmful results need not arise from improper conduct of a party tending to affect a decision on an arbitration to authorize the setting aside of the award.[12]

The effect of an agreement by defendant that an award should be set aside, made at the trial of an action for such purpose, is to render the award of no further effect, though under the agreement, a rearbitration is to be had and defendant repudiates such agreement.[13]

§ 17. Right to proceeds.—Where property is insured without the owner's consent or knowledge, he may become entitled to the benefit of the insurance by adoption.[14] Where a policy insures the interests of a life tenant, remaindermen are not entitled to any portion of the proceeds.[15]

Employer's liability insurance.—Where the contract insurance is not a guaranty of liability for negligence to employes but of indemnity against loss by reason of liability, insured only can recover thereon.[16] It cannot be urged that the common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors operates as a payment by insured of the claim, where it does not appear that claimant became a party to such assignment.[17]

Interpretation of particular designations of beneficiaries.—Under a policy agreeing to pay to either an executor or administrator, husband or wife, relation by blood or lawful beneficiary, the company may at its option make payment to any of the persons named.[18] Legal representatives include all persons either natural or artificial who by operation of law stand in the place of and represent the interests of the insured.[19] A child, a member of insured's family, but not legally adopted, is not an "heir."[20] Where "children" are beneficiaries, after-born children are included,[21] or an after-adopted child.[22] "Wife and surviving children" includes both the children of the wife named and children by a former marriage.[23] A policy payable to wife or children, on death of the children before insured, confers no interest on a grandson.[24] A policy payable to a named beneficiary, and in the event of the death of the beneficiary before insured to insured's executors, administrators and assigns, becomes a portion of the insured's estate controlled by the terms of his will.[25]

The policy must be reformed in order to authorize a recovery on it by the heirs, where it has been issued in the name of a person deceased at the time.[26]

Vested rights of beneficiaries.—A policy of life insurance creates a vested interest in the beneficiary on issuance,[27] but not where the policy provides that insured may, without the beneficiary's consent, diminish the amount of the insurance or appoint another beneficiary.[28] His rights may be prejudiced by a waiver by the insured.[29] In Alabama, the wife's interest in a policy payable to herself and children, their executors, administrators or assigns, terminates with her death.[30] Statutes providing that policies for the benefit of a married woman shall be the sole property of such married woman and shall inure to her separate use and benefit and that of her children, confer a contingent vested interest on the beneficiary which cannot be divested by the insured by altering the beneficiary or disposing of the proceeds by will,[31] though there is a provision for another disposition in case the wife does not survive the insured.[32] The children take a contingent interest in policies taken out for the benefit of their mother, generally conditioned on the death of the mother before maturity of the policy, in which case they take free from the claims of creditors in the same manner as she would have.[33]

Where, without the wife's knowledge, a policy on the husband's life payable to her is surrendered, the wife may recover as though a paid-up policy was issued at the time of surrender in accordance with the terms of the surrendered policy.[34]

Change of beneficiaries.—An informal change of beneficiaries of which the company has no notice may be revoked by a subsequently executed will.[35] Conditions in the policy must be complied with,[36] though they may be waived by payment of the proceeds into court by the insurer.[37] A change in beneficiaries must be completed before the death of the insured in order to allow the new beneficiary to maintain an action on the policy, otherwise claim should be made against the insured's administrator on the agreement to transfer the proceeds.[38]

Assignees.[39]—If indorsements of fire policies do not amount to assignments but are mere appointments of a third person to receive a portion of the money, the insured is entitled to recover the entire amount under the policy.[40] Where a policy is assigned to one paying premiums and making advancements to the beneficiaries, it is regarded only as for security and the beneficiaries are entitled to any surplus of the proceeds after reimbursement of the assignee.[41] Under a provision for payment to executors, administrators or assigns, the administrators may claim as against an assignee who has in writing released the policy stating that the consideration of the assignment was fully paid.[42]

Mortgagees.—Where the mortgagees take out a policy, naming the owner as the insured in which the mortgagees are made payees as their interests may appear, the mortgagees are entitled to the proceeds, where the owner repudiates the taking out of the policy.[43] Under agreements by a mortgagor to effect insurance, a mortgagee has an equitable lien on the proceeds of the policies placed in force, though they run to the mortgagor alone, which passes to an assignee of the mortgage.[44]

Persons paying premiums.—Payment of premiums by a third person will not invalidate a payment of proceeds to the designated beneficiary, where the person making such payment does not secure the consent of the insured to his substitution as beneficiary, and he has no right to recover expenses incurred by him.[45] One of several beneficiaries who advances premiums acquires an equitable lien on the proceeds requiring the others to contribute for his reimbursement. tations against the enforcement of such right to contribution run from the death of the insured.[46]

Creditors.—The proceeds of a policy of life insurance for the benefit of a married woman become her separate property, and while free from claims arising prior to the maturity of the contract, are then subject to her obligations as other portions of her estate.[47] By statutes in certain states, policies for the benefit of a married woman are not subject to the claims of her creditors or of other persons while in the hands of the insurer,[48] but an accumulated surplus payable to insured, under a tontine policy, is not exempt from his creditors, though the wife is the person named as a beneficiary.[49]

A policy may be made payable to creditors despite an exemption of insurance.[50] An exemption from the debts of the certificate holder or beneficiary does not cut off creditors from a policy payable to the debtor's personal representatives.[51] Under a policy providing for payment to a beneficiary, his legal representatives or assigns, the widow, to whom the balance remaining on the policy is bequeathed, takes as executrix and not as beneficiary, and takes after payment of debts.[52] A life policy made payable to the executor of a husband does not become subject to the claims of his creditors by a will under which insured provides that after his debts are paid all of his property shall go to his wife, but does not specifically refer to the policy.[53] A policy in favor of a minor debtor on the life of a mother is not subject to the expenses of the mother's succession.[54]

A claim on a policy of insurance after loss is a subject of garnishment.[55]

Trustee in bankruptcy or assignee for creditors.—Assignable policies of insurance pass to the trustee in bankruptcy,[56] and the trustee may enforce the policy for a loss occurring between the adjudication of bankruptcy and his appointment as trustee.[57] A policy of life insurance having a cash surrender value payable to the debtor or on his death before the termination of an accumulation period to his wife does not pass to the insured's trustee in bankruptcy,[58] and if the wife assigns her interest to the debtor, a subsequent assignment by the debtor of such interest is not in fraud of creditors, since such assignment does not pass the debtor's right to take the proceeds if he survive the endowment period.[59] Though the assignment of the policy constitutes a preference on which bankruptcy proceedings are sustained, the trustee in bankruptcy cannot ignore the assignment, nor can he because the creditor surrenders the policy without a transfer in writing.[60]

An action by an assignee for the benefit of creditors on a policy issued his assignor cannot be sustained on evidence insufficient to establish a valid transfer or continuance of the policy in accordance with its requirements.[61] Such action

Interpleader. Deposit in court.—Where whatever hazard in payment there is results from the insurer's unjustified act in withholding payment from a claimant, it is not entitled to an interpleader.[63] Where a policy payable to a wife is sufficiently matured to demand a paid-up policy in case of default of payment of premium, no interpleader can be had between the wife seeking to recover as though a paid-up policy had been issued, and one to whom a new policy issued on the surrender of the original was assigned with insurer's consent.[64] In an action against an insurance company on a check given for the proceeds of a policy, the company cannot pay the money into court and by interpleader stating equities adverse to the beneficiary obtain a release from liability.[65] Where the policy is payable to the wife of insured or her children should she die before insured, payment by the company into the orphan's court, where administration of the insured's estate is pending, protects the company.[66] The filing of an interpleader is a waiver of the insurer's rights as against the claimants.[67]

§ 18. Settlements and policy loans.—Though an insurer has been in the habit of accepting surrenders of endowment policies at other than contract periods, it is not bound to continue the practice.[68] Under a tontine policy providing a specific tontine period, the liability for tontine dividend accumulations becomes absolute on the expiration thereof.[69]

Where a company takes its paid-up policy as collateral, it cannot insist on an agreement that on default in the payment of interest the policy shall be surrendered at the customary cash surrender value.[70]

§ 19. Payment and discharge.—Though the contract provides for payment to the beneficiary, it may be made to his guardian where he is an infant. Hence payment to the guardian of the lawful beneficiary is a sufficient plea to an action by the executrix.[71]

Where a policy is assigned to an assignee to collect the proceeds and apply the same to the payment of the assignor's indebtedness to the assignee, the assignor has no further claim against the insurance company after recovery by the assignee in his own name, and may only recover as against the assignee such amount as remained after satisfaction of the debt.[72] Payment under an instrument erroneously treated as an assignment is not a defense.[73]

tion to repair begins to run at the time of waiver of proofs of loss.[74] Under statutes providing that on partial loss the insurer shall pay a sum equal to the damage done to the property or repair to the extent of such damage at the option of the insured, the insured may demand cash payment of a sum equal to the damage, though the insurer offers to repair or pay a sum fixed.[75] Where a loss is made payable to a mortgagee, the insured is not authorized, after the company has elected to make payment in money, to bind the mortgagee by an agreement relieving the insurer from such obligation.[76]

Subrogation.—A statutory provision against the assignment of causes of action not arising from contract will not prevent an insurer from having a remedy over against the person causing a loss, where a subsequent statute provides that on payment of the loss the insurance company shall be subrogated to the rights of recovery in behalf of insured. Though the latter statute provides for an assignment of the insured's right of action, the insurer may maintain an action without an assignment.[77] An insurer against accidents is not subrogated to insured's right to recover against a third person for negligence occasioning the injury.[78] A payment by an insurance company to the mortgagee extinguishes the mortgage to such an extent preventing the company from recovering such sum on foreclosure of the mortgage of which it has taken an assignment.[79] Where the action is by insured for the use of the insurers, the measure of damages is the loss resulting from the fire, though not in excess of the amount paid by the insurers.[80]

Release.—A full acquittance signed by insured after the payment of the amount of indemnity on proofs of an accident prevents a further claim on account of the injury alleged.[81] A statement of all claims which one insured against accident had or might have will be held as against a beneficiary to refer only to then accrued claims for disability and not to a subsequent death from the same accident.[82]

Actions by insured against third persons.—If the value of property insured exceeds the insurance, the insured may bring an action for the full amount against one whose wrong is responsible for loss.[83] Where property is destroyed by negligence of a third person, a recovery against him extinguishes the insurer's liability.[84] The settlement of a claim for personal injuries is not a defense to an action on an accident policy.[85]

ceeding a certain sum realized from one disability assessment levied on each member, an action at law may be maintained, though a more appropriate remedy might be by a proceeding in equity to compel the levying of the assessment.[87]

A provision for examination of the insured under oath by a person named by the insurer does not establish a condition precedent to the action.[88] If payment of an award has been accepted, plaintiff must rescind and restore the amount, though paid to a mortgagee.[89]

Where it appears that only a small portion of the property alleged to have been destroyed ever belonged to plaintiff and that the action is an attempt to defraud, plaintiff is not entitled to any recovery.[90]

Tender by insurer of an amount specified as liability for partial disability fixes the liability of the insurer to such extent, though defenses are made against the policy.[91]

Venue.—By statute it may be provided that actions against foreign insurance companies are to be brought in the county where an agency is located or where it was located at the time the contract was made, or the cause of action accrues, and if no agency is maintained, in any county where the company may be found. If the company does not maintain an agency, it does not by appointing an agent for service of process, acquire a fixed residence in the county of his residence.[92]

When action may be brought.—A provision in the policy as to the time in which action must be brought is not to be enlarged by general statutory provisions.[93] Such provisions are binding unless waived.[94] Acts of the insurer may work a waiver or estoppel.[95]

A limitation as to the time in which actions shall be brought on the policy will be controlled by a provision that action must not be brought in less than a certain time after award by appraisers in case there is an appraisal.[96] As to compliance with such provisions, see citations.[97]

A limitation as to the time in which action shall be brought, contained in the policy may be avoided by lack of knowledge occasioned by the agent of the company. A first action on the policy had resulted in a non-suit through the policy having been made payable to a person deceased. The mistake was first discovered at the trial, the agent having obtained the policy and withheld it and information as to its terms from plaintiffs. Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. [Fla.] 32 So. 887. Action begun on the 19th of October following the death of a member of a mutual insurance company on June 5th, is not premature, where there was immediate proof of death and there is no denial of the sufficiency or receipt thereof and action cannot be brought until 90 days after their service. Thornburg v. Farmers' Life Ass'n [Iowa] 98 N. W. 105.

A usee's rights as to limitations will be governed as if his action was brought at the time in which it was brought by himself and the other as joint plaintiffs.[98]

An action begun must be prosecuted to judgment to toll a specification in the policy limiting the time of action.[99] Nor is the right of action extended by a statutory provision, but where an action is defeated for a matter of form, a new action may be begun within prescribed time.[1]

A limitation as to the time of action in the policy cannot be asserted where an action was brought in due time but dismissed on an agreement of defendant to submit to rearbitration, and a new action brought in five months is not unreasonably delayed.[2]

Under statutory provisions that action will lie in case payment is withheld for more than a specified period after claims are due, action may be brought at the termination of such period, after the insurer has received satisfactory proofs of loss.[3] Furnishing additional proof of death at the insurer's request does not extend the period within which, by the terms of the by-laws, action must not be brought on the contract.[4] An objection that the action is prematurely brought must be pleaded.[5]

Parties.—Without regard to whether a beneficiary assigns his rights in the manner required by the policy, he may make a contract entitling another to collect the policy.[6] Suit should be by the real party in interest,[7] or by the legal holder of the policy to his use.[8] The wife may bring an action on a policy issued by mistake in the name of the husband, on dismissal of the suit of the husband.[9] A vendor who after a contract to sell insures property without reference to the contract or to the vendee cannot, after settlement of a loss, sue for the use of the vendee.[10] Where the mortgagor and mortgagee have conflicting in-

Where the promise is made directly to the mortgagee and the owner pays the premium on account of the mortgagee and in fulfillment of his duty to do so the mortgagee may sue on the contract. Smith v. Union Ins. Co. [R. I.] 55 Atl. 715. A declaration alleging that the insured assigned and delivered the policy to an assignee with authority to collect the same and to appropriate the proceeds to the payment of the assignor's debt, is sufficient to show that the assignee is the real party in interest entitled to sue alone to recover on the policy [construing Rev. terests, they should be determined by making the one party defendant in a suit by the other on the policy.[11]

The person in possession of a policy of life insurance may sue thereon, though the insured was a nonresident and did not die within the state or leave property therein.[12] Cases as to rights under particular policies are grouped below.[13]

(§ 20) B. Pleading.—The general rules of pleading governing actions on contract are applicable.[14] Repugnant causes of action must not be alleged,[15] but allegations of bad faith in breach do not set up an additional cause of action in tort.[16] Jurisdiction must be shown.[17] The facts supporting the right of recovery must be set out, such as eviction in case of title insurance,[18] the nature of the injury,[19] or attendance of physician in accident insurance,[20] or the value of the property destroyed in fire insurance.[21] Where the contract calls for payment at a stated time after proof of loss, it need not be alleged that the company was notified to make an assessment and had refused, or that an assessment had been made and payment refused, or that there were assets from which payment could be made.[22]

Averring performance.—Under statutes providing that performance of conditions precedent may be pleaded generally, an allegation that plaintiff has fully performed all the obligations required is sufficient.[23]

11. The fact that a mortgage does not cover all the property insured does not require the mortgagor to be joined in a suit by the mortgagee whose interest is severally insured. Kent v. Aetna Ins. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 428.

12. Page v. Life Ins. Co., 131 N. C. 115.

13. The widow and children of insured may sue on a policy payable to executors, administrators or assigns. Sun Life Ins. Co. v. Phillips [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 603. A daughter's husband may sue in his own name on policy payable to wife and children of insured, where the wife and daughter, who was the only child, died before insured. D'Arcy v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Tenn. 567. Where a contract is to pay to a certain living beneficiary, the administrator of insured cannot sue, though there is an optional clause in the policy for payment to the administrator. Ruoff v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 447.

Petition on an oral contract of insurance held sufficient as against an objection that it showed that the contract was without consideration and had not taken effect before insured's death. Pac. M. Ins. Co. v. Shaffer, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 313.

15. A declaration one count of which alleges that defendant was already indebted by reason of a loss having occurred and another count alleges that in consideration thereof and of certain other things defendant undertook to pay a certain sum if a loss should occur, and that such loss has occurred is inconsistent as to substance and vulnerable to a general demurrer. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 95.

16. Where the action is brought at law for breach of an implied contract to levy an assessment, allegations as to bad faith, fraudulent purpose and unlawful action on the part of defendant in rejection of plaintiff's claim do not make the declaration one in tort or one having one count on contract and one in tort. Garcelon v. Commercial Travelers' E. A. Ass'n [Mass.] 67 N. E. 868.

17. Complaint in an action against a foreign insurance company held insufficient as to allegation of facts establishing jurisdiction. Equity Life Ass'n v. Gammon [Ga.] 44 S. E. 978.

18. It is not a sufficient averment of eviction under adverse title to plead that a person named purchased the land at a tax sale and ever since has lawfully held as against insured. Taylor v. N. J. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 152.

19. An allegation stating that insured did not die of any bodily injury sustained through any external, violent or accidental means is an averment of a conclusion. Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 176 Mo. 253.

20. Where the policy requires that benefits may be recovered only from the first to the last visit of a physician, a complaint sufficiently alleges such days where it states that insured was under the care of a physician from a certain day to another certain day. Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Nancarrow [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 423.

21. Where by statute the value of the property is conclusively fixed by the policy, an allegation of the amount for which insurance was effected, is all that is necessary [Rev. St. 1899, § 7969]. Bode v. Firemen's Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 116.

22. Brookshier v. Chillicothe Town M. F. Ins. Co., 91 Mo. App. 599.

23. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 373. Security A. & S. B. Ass'n v. Lee, 160 Ind. 249. Performance of promissory warranties or conditions subsequent need not be alleged, but there need be only a general averment of performance of conditions precedent [Rev. St. § 1045]. Tillis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171.

Where by statute general counts in assumpsit are made sufficient in declarations on insurance policies, the declaration need not set out the terms and conditions of the contract.[24] Such a statute requiring also a filing of a specification of the number of the policy, date of loss and items involved, with the writ, and further providing that a plea of non assumpsit shall put in issue only, the execution of the policy and the amount of damage is not invalid as requiring defendant to assume the burden of proof of matters rightfully resting on plaintiff, such as performance of conditions, interest, etc.[25] Nor is such a statute a denial of the equal protection of the laws.[26]

In a suit on a policy agreed to be issued, the plaintiff need not aver a compliance with its provisions.[27]

An allegation of performance of all conditions of the contract is sufficient, without averment that proof of loss was furnished at the proper time before suit,[28] but if a policy requiring as a condition precedent, the furnishing of proofs of loss is attached to and made a part of the petition, a failure to allege compliance is demurrable.[29]

Averring waiver of conditions.[30]—A waiver of stipulations in the policy must be pleaded and proved.[31] Plaintiff may in different counts aver a waiver of proofs of loss and compliance with provisions of policy as to proofs of loss and may rely on the count established by his evidence.[32] Though allegations creating a technical estoppel are not alleged, they may be sufficient to raise a question of waiver of proofs of loss.[33]

Averring ownership and interest.—The complaint must allege that plaintiff had an insurable interest at time of issuance of the policy and of the loss,[34] or aver ownership.[35] Where the allegations of the petition as to interest or title is defective, an answer that insured had a title less than fee simple cures the defect.[36]

24. Complaint held sufficient under acts 1896, p. 89, No. 121. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 95.

25, 26. Hersey v. Northern Assur. Co. [Vt.] 56 Atl. 95. Under such a statute the declaration need not allege that the specification has been filed [Acts 1896, p. 89, No. 121]. Id.

36. Bode v. Firemen's Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 116.

Negativing matters of defense.—As a general rule, the complaint need not deny matters of defense such as incumbrance,[37] or breach of condition for sole and unconditional ownership,[38] or that an assignment was a wagering contract.[39]

Where it is sought to recover an amount stipulated for an accident happening in a particular manner, negative conditions should be denied; but if such facts are established by the evidence, the complaint may be amended to conform to the proof.[40]

Plea or answer.—Where fraud is alleged generally and specifications of facts set out, the general allegation will be limited to the specifications.[41] If statutory provisions require misrepresentations to be material or fraudulent, the facts rendering them material must be pleaded.[42] It must be averred that the misrepresentation induced the issuance of the policy.[43]

Where the insurer pleads payment to another, it need not aver that such person has filed proofs of loss.[44]

A defense of suicide admits the performance of conditions precedent.[45] Breaches of conditions subsequent must be specifically pleaded.[46] Cases as to the sufficiency of particular pleas are collected in the notes.[47] After plaintiff has introduced his evidence, defendant cannot file a plea averring plaintiff's failure to exercise due diligence for his personal safety.[48]

General issue.—Non est factum is the proper plea in denial of the execution of a policy alleged to be under seal, and a plea that defendant did not covenant as alleged may be stricken on motion.[49]

An answer which admits the issuance of the policy, that it was in full force at the death of the insured, and then denies each and every allegation in the petition not thereinafter specifically admitted, is regarded neither as a general nor a special denial.[50]

Farmers' M. F. Ins. Co. v. Yetter, 30 Ind. App. 187. An allegation that a dispute existed between plaintiff and others as to ownership of the property destroyed, does not present a defense. Id.

Where there is a finding in favor of defendant on a defense sufficient to avoid his liability, failure to sustain exceptions to other defenses is not prejudicial. Joy v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 822.

49. Tillis v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 171.

50. Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 176 Mo. 253.

A defense of breach of condition may be made by the general issue and notice without a special plea alleging a violation of the contract.[51] Defendant cannot show fraud and false swearing in the proofs of loss under a general denial, though the evidence may be admissible for the purpose of showing the amount of loss,[52] nor can he take advantage of facts in evidence showing failure to exercise due diligence for personal safety.[53]

Replication or reply.[54]—In order to take advantage of statutory provisions that the company cannot deny the truth of an application unless a full and complete copy has been returned with the policy, the facts must be pleaded.[55] Where a waiver is pleaded in reply, the facts essential to its validity must be set out.[56]

Departure.—A reply setting up matter rendering a deed asserted in defense inefficacious to alter insured's sole and unconditional ownership is not a departure from a complaint averring title.[57] Though there is a general averment of conditions precedent, a replication alleging waiver of a pleaded forfeiture on the ground of breach of promissory warranties is not a departure.[58]

Variance.—Pleadings and proof must correspond.[59] Waiver of condition precedent cannot be taken advantage of, where compliance is pleaded.[60] Denial of information sufficient to form a belief as to ownership in plaintiff's intestate admits evidence that insured assigned the policy before intestate acquired any right therein.[61] Under a plea of a breach of an implied condition of truth of material representations of fact, misrepresentations may be shown.[62]

It is a sufficient averment of waiver of a pleaded ground of forfeiture for keeping of gasoline, to allege that the agent issuing the policy was at the time informed of the keeping of the gasoline and that such agent told insured that the keeping was rightful. The authority requisite to the waiver must be averred and it must be alleged that the gasoline was kept as part of the stock insured, if it is sought to show that it was "merchandise usually kept in similar stocks," which was property covered. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 188. A notice that liability was denied on the ground that the property was not in existence when the policy was delivered, does not prevent proof that a prior policy of another company covering the same property, which was to be replaced by defendant's policy, had not been cancelled when the property was burned. The defenses are consistent. Kerr v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 442. Amendments.—Injuries by a subsequent fire may be set up by amendment to the original petition.[63] If plaintiff has alleged performance of all conditions, an amendment allowing defendant to state that the proofs of loss were not received within the stipulated time, not being essential to defendant's case, is not prejudicial to plaintiff.[64] Under the Florida statute of amendments in a suit on a policy, a party may be changed from co-plaintiff to sole nominal plaintiff suing for use of his former co-plaintiff, and by subsequent amendment dropped from the case as nominal plaintiff and his usee substituted as the real and only plaintiff.[65]

(§ 20) C. Evidence. Presumptions and burden of proof.—A prima facie case results from proof of the policy and furnishing of proofs of death.[66] The insurer has the burden of establishing its lack of authority to transact business within the state,[67] or that it will not realize enough by an assessment to pay a loss,[68] or that a building fell before the fire broke out, thus terminating the insurance.[69] It need not show that an assignee is an actual person.[70] Insured must establish the facts essential to his recovery, such as ownership of the property[71] at the time of loss,[72] though not properly placed in issue,[73] and must show the value of the property destroyed.[74] He must show that risk was to begin at the time of signing the application.[75]

Delivery of policy is prima facie evidence of payment of the premium recited.[76] Failure to cancel supports the same inference.[77] Plaintiff establishes a prima facie case as against a claim of forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums by introducing a receipt for the premium in question executed by defendant's general agents,[78] but if defendant introduces evidence to rebut the receipt, the

Though the insurance company forwards renewal receipts to policy holders and gives credit for the premium in advance of receipt of payment, proof of such custom will not cast the burden on the representatives or beneficiaries of decedent to show that a premium for which the company has issued its formal receipt has been actually paid. O'Connell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 306.

burden of proving payment by a preponderance of the evidence does not shift from plaintiff.[79] The company, if it admit the execution and death before a renewal premium is due, has the burden of showing that the policy is not in force, has been procured by fraud, and no premium paid.[80]

The burden of proof is on the party alleging fraud,[81] or misrepresentation,[82] or breach of warranty,[83] or the materiality of the breach.[84] If, to prevent a judgment being a lien on the premises avoiding a policy, complainant asserts that the property is exempt from such lien, the burden of proof is on him.[85]

The fact that because defendant has burden of proving a breach of warranty it is given the opening and closing in the introduction of evidence does not affect the rule as to the burden of proving a waiver of the breach.[86]

The burden of proving that death was from an injury intentionally rather than accidentally inflicted by a third person is on defendant,[87] or of showing death from a cause other than alleged.[88] Where defendant seeks to reduce its liability under a proviso that only one-tenth of the policy shall be paid in case death results from an injury intentionally inflicted by a third person, the intent becomes an essential part of the proof and is not presumed from the injury.[89]

Suicide must be established by defendant,[90] but plaintiff has the burden of showing unsoundness of mind on the part of the insured.[91]

Where the defense is fraud, arson and perjury, statement of a fireman that partly burned matches were found in a rubbish box in the burning building and a hearsay statement of one of the arbitrators that the case was "loaded" are inadmissible. Goodwin v. Merchants' & B. Mut. Ins. Co., 118 Iowa, 601. There is no prejudicial error to allow witness to state that his field was damaged by the same storm that damaged plaintiff's. Condon v. Des Moines Mut. Hail Ass'n [Iowa] 94 N. W. 477.

Cause of death: It may be shown that at the time the policy was issued, insured questioned concerning the payment of losses on suicide as showing that suicide was in applicant's mind. Treat v. Merchants' Life Ass'n, 198 Ill. 431. A beneficiary may show that death resulted from accident, though insured did not disclose such accident to his physician. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Hunter, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 489. The opinion of a coroner taking an inquest, as to suicide, is not competent, nor is a copy of the coroner's inquest. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Kaiser, 24 Ky. L. R. 2454, 74 S. W. 203. Coroner's inquest proceedings with which plaintiff had nothing to do, are inadmissible. Louis v. Con. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 172 N. Y. 659.

Amount of loss: The amount for which a settlement was made with another insurer, is immaterial. Goodwin v. Merchants' & B. Mut. Ins. Co., 118 Iowa, 601. Value of goods at the time of fire may be shown by evidence of cost price and length of use. Cheever v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 328. As bearing on damages to a crop the yield of similar fields in the vicinity may be considered. Condon v. Des Moines Mut. Hail Ass'n [Iowa] 94 N. W. 477. On an issue of total loss things necessary to restore the building may be shown, but on such issue evidence of the cost of replacing the building is not admissible. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County Court, 24 Ky. L. R. 1850, 72 S. W. 739. If plaintiff's recollection of articles destroyed is the best evidence, lists made by her immediately after the fire, are admissible. Cheever v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 328. Where the verdict is for the full amount of the insurance, it is harmless error to have admitted evidence as to the proportion of the loss caused by fire. Friedman v. Atlas Assur. Co. [Mich.] 94 N. W. 757. If the value of articles conceded to have been covered by the policy is disputed, it is impossible to determine whether or not the admission of evidence as to articles not covered was prejudicial. Fiske v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. [Mo. App.] 75 S. W. 382.

Misrepresentations: As tending to show that insured was suffering with tuberculosis at time of application a physician can be asked whether or not a treatment administered prior to the date of the application was not a proper treatment for tuberculosis, and it may be shown that insured had consumption in the ensuing year and died in some 18 months of that disease. Murphy v. Prudential Ins. Co., 205 Pa. 444. A physician's certificate showing death by consumption the year after insurance, is admissible to show breach of a warranty against consumption. Ohmeyer v. Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle, 91 Mo. App. 189. The company's officers cannot testify that truthful statements of certain facts in the application would have caused applicant's rejection. New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish [Mich.] 94 N. W. 599. The physician examining the applicant cannot be asked as to whether had facts been disclosed to him, he would have passed him as a first-class risk, where the issue is the truthfulness of answers made warranties by the policy. Murphy v. Prudential Ins. Co., 205 Pa. 444. Custom among insurance companies as to acceptance of applications of persons who have attempted suicide, is not admissible and it cannot be shown that the fact that the applicant had made such an attempt would have been considered in passing on his application. Louis v. Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 172 N. Y. 659. Refusal to permit an expert to state his opinion as to the use of intoxicants as being a pernicious habit, is not error where the defense is that use of intoxicating liquors to excess contributed to insured's death. admissible against the insured is usually admissible as against his assignee,[94] though where a policy has properly been assigned to the vendee of property, previous negotiations between the vendor and insurance company are not admissible to show the property covered unless known by the vendee when he took the transfer.[95]

The policy pleaded is admissible,[96] and if execution and delivery is admitted by answer, identification or foundation is unnecessary.[97] Since the private papers of the company cannot be compelled to be surrendered, a certified copy of an original application may be attached to a deposition.[98]

The proofs of death are admissible and conclusive against the beneficiary, unless erroneous or made under mistake.[99] They are not relevant as substantive evidence as to the cause or manner of the insured's death.[1] A record of inquest proceedings furnished by plaintiff's counsel after the furnishing of proofs of death is not a part thereof so as to be admissible against plaintiff.[2] A copy of the proofs of loss is inadmissible, unless it is shown that the original is lost or destroyed or in possession of the opposite party who refuses to produce it on notice.[3] Notice before trial that proof of death is erroneous is not necessary to allow plaintiff to explain an erroneous statement therein.[4]

Declarations and acts of agents while acting on the insurer's business and within the scope of their employment are admissible.[5]

Where an agreement by an adjuster to pay is pleaded, evidence thereof is admissible.[6]

Sufficiency of evidence.—Cases in which the sufficiency of evidence to establish particular issues has been considered are grouped in the footnotes according to such issues.[7]

To overcome presumption against suicide. Rumbold v. Supreme Council Royal League, 103 Ill. App. 596. Suicide need be established only by a fair preponderance of the evidence. Kerr v. Modern Woodmen [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 593. To support plaintiff's explanation of the accident and reasons for not giving immediate notice. Hayes v. Continental Casualty Co., 98 Mo. App. 410. To show death from accident. Woodmen Acc. Ass'n v. Hamilton [Neb.] 96 N. W. 989; Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ky. L. R. 1035, 76 S. W. 832. Evidence held to support the inference of an accidental fall in the absence of showing that it was the result of design or insane impulse. Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Holbrook [Neb.] 94 N. W. 816. Evidence held to show that defendant was not injured while attempting to leave a train in motion. Lilly v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 8. To show fact and date of death. Rogers v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 138 Cal. 285, 71 Pac. 348.

Misrepresentation: To show that pistol shot wounds had not caused insured to be in other than good health before issuance of the policy. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Sinclair, 24 Ky. L. R. 1543, 71 S. W. 853. To show untruth of statements of good health and absence of any disorder or weakness tending to impair applicant's constitution. Jeffrey v. United Order of Golden Cross, 97 Me. 176. To prove conclusively false warranty as to age. Bowen v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 458. To justify submission to the jury of good faith in concealment of a hemorrhage in an application. Ley v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. [Iowa] 94 N. W. 568. To show that insured was not in sound health at the date of the policy, where it appeared that at the delivery of the policy he appeared to be suffering only from a temporary ailment, but died of heart disease and consumption in six months. Packard v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. [N. H.] 54 Atl. 287. To show misrepresentation as to temperance demanding a new trial after a contrary finding by the jury. Holtum v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 139 Cal. 645, 73 Pac. 591. To justify refusal of submission of defense of false ownership. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Strain, 24 Ky. L. R. 958, 70 S. W. 274. To establish that insurance was in force before delivery of the policy or payment of the premium. Blue Grass Ins. Co. v. Cobb, 24 Ky. L. R. 2132, 72 S. W. 1099. Non-suit held properly granted on the ground of untruthful statement of interest of insured. Alberts v. Insurance Co. of North America, 117 Ga. 854. A pension record is not conclusive as to the fact that insured was afflicted with a bodily infirmity. Black v. Travelers' Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 732.

Breach of condition: Additional insurance. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Eastman [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 431. Materiality of breach of warranty as to physical soundness and previous collection of insurance. Md. Casualty Co. v. Gehrmann, 96 Md. 634. Compliance with condition for the taking of invoices of stock. Pa. Fire Ins. Co. v. Young, 25 Ky. L. R. 1350, 78 S. W. 127. Evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of instalment of a sprinkler system before issuance of policies. Fuller v. N. Y. Fire Ins. Co. [Mass.] 67 N. E. 879. To warrant submission to jury of whether property was in the building described in the policy. Gustin v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 373. Undisputed evidence that greater premiums were charged under certain conditions, is not conclusive that there was an increased risk. Taylor v. Security Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 88 Minn. 231. Evidence held sufficient to justify finding that a deed by insured to his wife did not pass title avoiding a policy of insurance. Hogadone v. Grange Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1045.

Waiver of breach: Existence of tax liens. Martin v. Fidelity Ins. Co., 119 Iowa, 570. Incumbrance. German Ins. Co. v. Stiner [Neb.] 96 N. W. 122. Unconditional and sole ownership. Pope v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 136 Ala. 670. Change in ownership. Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. [Wis.] 94 N. W. 295. Iron safe clause. Couch v. Home Protection Fire Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1077. Additional insurance. Lutz v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 94 N. W. 274. Provision against insurance of cripples. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Holloway, 24 Ky. L. R. 1856, 72 S. W. 796. Evidence held sufficient to show waiver of a clearing of logs and brush from the neighborhood of a house, as a condition precedent to taking effect of risk. Duby v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 720. Evidence held sufficient to demand submission to the jury of the question of whether a soliciting agent is to be held the agent of the insurer within the meaning of a statute authorizing him to bind the com-terms of the insurance.[8] In an action to set aside an award and recover on the policy, plaintiff may recover if he established any of his alleged grounds to set aside the award.[9] An allegation that the assignor was the husband of insured must be sustained by proof, where placed in issue.[10]

Loss need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt.[11] Photographs as to condition of building after a fire are not conclusive.[12] Evidence of value of property when new and of the length of use is not sufficient to establish the value at time of destruction.[13] Plaintiff's evidence as to the highest value of the goods destroyed will control a higher statement by an insurance broker, the facts on which the broker's information is based not being stated.[14] The testimony of insured as to the acreage of his crop may be believed as against defendant's witness whose testimony is from estimates, as may his evidence as to the yield as against similar evidence.[15]

(§ 20) D. Questions for jury, instructions, findings. Questions of law and fact.—Conflicting evidence as to facts must be resolved by the jury,[16] so it must determine questions of substantial truth of representations,[17] whether there was voluntary exposure to danger,[18] whether a material or substantial part of a building fell,[19] whether insured's bookkeeper had authority to receive notice of cancellation,[20] or whether insured had mental capacity to agree to cancellation.[21]

It is ordinarily a question for the jury as to whether a misrepresentation is material,[22] but it may be a question of law.[23] Intent to deceive or defraud in pany by waiver, and of the question of whether there was collusion between the agent and insured to defraud the insurer thus preventing the company being bound though there were false statements known to the agent [Rev. St. 1898, § 1977]. Speiser v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 207.

Proof of loss: To show notice of accident under a contractor's liability policy. Rooney v. Md. Casualty Co. [Mass.] 67 N. E. 882. To establish a refusal to comply with provision for notice to the insurer of an autopsy. Legnard v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 320. Waiver of proofs of loss. McCarthy v. Mut. Reserve Fund Life Ass'n [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 921.

Miscellaneous matters: Question of whether a policy was in force at the time of insured's death. McCarthy v. Mut. Reserve Fund Life Ass'n [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 921. Waiver of limitation as to time of bringing action. Bowen v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 458. To support recovery on fire policy. Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Pitcher, 160 Ind. 392. To show that defendant was not intended as the beneficiary. Olmstead v. Olmstead, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 582. To justify submission of whether property was a homestead. Martin v. Fidelity Ins. Co., 119 Iowa, 570.

15. Condon v. Des Moines Mut. Hail Ass'n [Iowa] 94 N. W. 477.

16. Breach of the warranty of health. Black v. Travellers' Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 732. Increase of risk by alteration of building or adjacent structures, unless there is a certain inference from undisputed facts. Taylor v. Security M. F. Ins. Co., 88 Minn. 231. On conflict of evidence as to age, a verdict cannot be directed. Dolan v. Mut. R. F. Life Ass'n, 182 Mass. 413. Whether plaintiff's evidence or a physician's is more worthy of belief as to circumstances attending an accident preventing the giving of proper notice is for the jury. Hayes v. Continental Casualty Co., 98 Mo. App. 410. Where payment of premium is denied as a defense to an action on a policy, a verdict should not be directed for plaintiff, where a waiver is not pleaded and the evidence of payment is conflicting. Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Graff [Neb.] 96 N. W. 605. Where after the issuance of a renewal receipt, insured is sent a notice of cancellation based on failure to pay the same premium, the question of payment becomes one for the jury. O'Connell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 306.

17. Whether a representation is substantially true or substantially false, is for the jury. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 25.

18. Being on railroad track. Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 119 Iowa, 342.

22. Price v. Standard L. & Acc. Ins. Co. [Minn.] 95 N. W. 1113. Materiality of a false

a misrepresentation, or whether it increases the risk of loss, is for the jury.[24] The question of the sufficiency of proofs of loss is one of law, where there is no evidence of bad faith.[25]

Instructions must as in other actions conform to the pleadings,[26] and proof,[27] should consider all the issues,[28] be clear and unambiguous,[29] need not define phrases answer not a warranty is for the jury. Louis v. Conn. M. L. Ins. Co., 172 N. Y. 659. Where the evidence is conflicting as to the existence of a tumor, the question of whether a statement that such tumor did not exist is material, is for the jury. Proctor v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 523.

23. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. McGreevy [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 415. Though there is a statutory provision that though the application causes the truth of answers to be warranted, misrepresentations in good faith must be material to effect a forfeiture, the question need not be left to the jury, if the matter stated is manifestly material or absolutely and visibly false. Proctor v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 523.

24. Price v. Standard L. & Acc. Ins. Co. [Minn.] 95 N. W. 1118.

25. Where there is a requirement that notice of loss shall contain a statement of all incumbrances and insured leaves a blank unfilled provided for such statement, though his attention is called to it, his duty to furnish such information is not a question for the jury. Ulysses Elgin Butter Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 384.

26. The defendant cannot object to an instruction drawn in accord with its pleadings. Allegation that a certain statement in an employer's certificate was made with evil intent. Perpetual B. & L. Ass'n v. U. S. F. & G. Co., 118 Iowa, 729. Where the facts on which a fraud is predicated are not stated, there is no basis for an instruction submitting that issue. Summers v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 691. Where it is not claimed that the contract is ambiguous, it is not proper to inform the jury as to the manner in which it should be construed in resolving any doubt. Union L. Ins. Co. v. Jameson [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 199. Where the furnishing of proofs of injury is undisputed, the necessity of such proofs need not be referred to in the instructions. Modern Brotherhood v. Cummings [Neb.] 94 N. W. 144. It is proper to instruct that fraud is never presumed but must be clearly proved, where arson is alleged. Bannon v. Ins. Co. of N. A., 115 Wis. 250. Instructions as to recovery of interest should not vary from the contractual provision. White v. Farmers' M. F. Ins. Co., 97 Mo. App. 590.

27. Quoting a question as "Have you ever had any chronic and persistent hoarseness" instead of "chronic or persistent hoarseness" does not alter the meaning of the question, rendering the instruction error. Blumenthal v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 17. An instruction as to the effect of an agreement or custom in estopping the company from insisting on a forfeiture for non-payment of premiums, should be refused in the absence of evidence. Schmertz v. U. S. L. Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 250. Where a waiver of proofs of loss is asserted, such issue should not be omitted from an instruction purporting to cover the whole case. Roberts v. Ins. Co. of America, 94 Mo. App. 142. Evidence of the furnishing of notes to secure over due premiums held to justify an instruction on the question of waiver of time of payment by agreement to extend. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Sanford, 200 Ill. 126. An instruction on misrepresentation as to the name of the usual medical attendant, is not warranted by evidence that some time previously insured had been treated by a physician who had subsequently removed from the locality. Provident S. & L. Assur. Soc. v. Cannon, 201 Ill. 260.

28. Instruction held to sufficiently present adverse theories as to the occasion of the fall of a building being due to an explosion in an adjacent building or to overloading. Orient Ins. Co. v. Leonard [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 808. Where several grounds of forfeiture are alleged, the instruction should not be confined to one of them. Ormsby v. Laclede Farmers' M. F. & L. Ins. Co., 98 Mo. App. 371. Instructions held to properly present a defense on the ground that the death of insured did not result solely from the accident alleged. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Brown [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 915. Where there is a contention that a condition for payment on a specified day, was waived, an instruction is properly modified to take into consideration such contention. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Sanford, 200 Ill. 126. Instruction held to properly submit the question of a waiver, of a forfeiture on account of existence of an incumbrance. German Ins. Co. v. Stiner [Neb.] 96 N. W. 122. Where the jury's finding is necessarily based on the ground that the fall of a building was caused by fire and not explosion, failure to submit an issue as to whether the building fell as the result of an explosion is harmless. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co. [Mich.] 94 N. W. 757.

29. Instruction held erroneous and contradictory in attempting to describe excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors while submitting to the jury the question of whether indulgence was excessive. Union L. Ins. Co. v. Jameson [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 199. A definition that strict care means immediate care need not be given. Hayes v. Continental Casualty Co., 98 Mo. App. 410. An instruction as to proof of good health necessary on reinstatement held misleading where given in connection with evidence that proof of health was waived. Denver L. Ins. Co. v. Crane [Colo. App.] 73 Pac. 875. In an action on a policy of boiler insurance use of the word "tubes" rather than "flues" in an instruction, is immaterial where the pleadings, counsel and witnesses use the words tubes, flues, and pipes, interchangeably in speaking of the same thing. Hartford Steam Boiler Insp. & Ins. Co. v. Ashland Steel Plant, 25 Ky. L. R. 97, 74 S. W. 730. An instruction as to the manner in which facts on which fraud is charged must be proven is not confusing as not defining whether the facts referred to the pleadings in ordinary use,[30] and must not charge on the facts.[31] Error may be cured by other portions of the charge.[32]

Special findings must state that insured owned the property at the time of loss.[33]

(§ 20) E. Judgment and enforcement; attorney's fees.—Where an action is brought on separate policies against the same defendant, separate judgments need not be rendered on each policy.[34]

Where the amount of the policy is to be paid in instalments, judgment should be entered for each instalment as it matures, not for the whole amount with execution to issue on the instalments as they fall due,[35] or for the commuted value stipulated in the policy, where such value is only payable on consent of the insured, which consent has not been filed.[36]

A judgment in a cross action by defendant against a local agent issuing the policy based on his noncommunication of facts to the company may be refused, where it is not shown that such noncommunication controlled the issuance.[37] If the complaint seeks to set aside an award and recover on the policy, on a finding that the award is valid, judgment should be rendered for the amount thereof and not for dismissal.[38]

A verdict cannot be reduced on account of the existence of another policy which was properly taken notice of in the instructions.[39]

Assessments to meet liability.—A policy holder may after judgment compel by mandamus the assessment of the members of a mutual insurance company to secure funds for the payment of the judgment.[40] If the certificate stipulates for payment of a definite sum to be realized from an assessment, a money judgment can be rendered and it is not necessary to make simply an order to the insurer to make and pay over the proceeds of an assessment.[41] Though a by-law provides that the beneficiary shall be paid the amount of an assessment on all members in good standing, the levy of an assessment is not essential to the insurer's liability if there are other sources from which the benefits may be paid and there is a fixed amount more than which the insured is not bound to pay.[42] Such by-laws do not prevent the recovery of the amount of the certificate unless the insurer shows that an assessment levied in accordance with the by-laws would not have produced such sum.[43]

Interest.—Where the amount of loss would have been immediately ascertained or to the evidence. Ley v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 94 N. W. 568.

30. "Attached addition" used in describing property need not be defined in the instructions. Not a question of law. Conn. F. Ins. Co. v. Hilbrant [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 558.

31. The jury may be instructed that if property were destroyed or damaged by fire to an amount in excess of the entire insurance, plaintiff could recover the amount of his policy, does not remove from the jury the question of whether fire damage exceeded such insurance. Orient Ins. Co. v. Leonard [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 808.

32. Error in requiring the facts establishing fraud to be inconsistent with any other reasonable or probable theory is removed by an express charge in the same paragraph that the defense need be established only by a fair preponderance of the evidence. Ley v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. [Iowa] 94 N. W. 568.

33. A finding that plaintiff was at the time the policy was issued, the owner of buildings insured which were located on leased land, is not equal to a finding of ownership at time of loss. Milwaukee F. Ins. Co. v. Todd [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 697.

by an honest appraisement, interest may be recovered from the day of a demand made when the loss was payable.[44]

Attorney's fees.—Statutes authorizing the recovery of attorney's fees in actions on policies of life and fire insurance companies are not unconstitutional.[45] They are not necessarily also applicable to accident insurance companies.[46]

If policy is payable in ten annual instalments, the penalties and attorney's fees are to be computed on the instalments due at the institution of the suit.[47]

INTEREST.

§ 1. Right to interest and demands bearing interest.—An express written contract to pay a certain sum at a fixed time will carry interest from maturity.[1] Where a contract obligation does not expressly provide for interest, a demand is necessary to set interest running.[2] Commencement of suit is equivalent to demand.[3] Interest is not allowable on an unliquidated claim or an open account;[4] but where the sum due has been ascertained or is capable of being ascertained, interest will run from demand.[5] All the conditions of the contract must be complied with before interest will run.[6]

Commercial paper payable on demand,[7] or certificates of indebtedness,[8] bear

Banking Co., 42 Or. 213, 70 Pac. 711. Due bills for money loaned, with no mention of interest or of any specific time of payment. Ross v. Walker [Fla.] 32 So. 934. In case of the insolvency of a bank the presentation and allowance of a claim are equivalent to a demand. Baker v. Williams & E. Banking Co., 42 Or. 213, 70 Pac. 711. A demand for an excessive sum is not a compliance. Excelsior Terra Cotta Co. v. Harde, 85 N. Y. Supp. 732. But contra, interest will be allowed on the sum actually due even though there was an excessive demand and the account was bona fide in dispute. Loomis v. Gillett, 75 Conn. 298.

7. A mortgage note. And though by its terms payable on demand no demand is necinterest from date. Other paper from maturity,[8] unless the terms expressly or by implication fix the question.[10]

An executor or trustee who bona fide advances his personal funds for the benefit of the estate is entitled to interest;[11] but where he is guilty of bad faith relative to investments, he is chargeable with interest at the legal rate;[12] but where the officers or trustees of a public corporation wrongfully loan,[13] or receive money on an interest contract, interest will be disallowed.[14]

Interest is incidental to the debt, and cannot exist after the debt is discharged.[15] Interest will not stop on overdue bonds until actual notice of call for payment.[16]

Interest is allowed as damages for unreasonable delay in payment or detention of money. This is the settled rule and does not lie within the discretion of the court;[17] but where the retention has not been wrongful and there has been no misapplication of the money,[18] or when a tender is made of the amount due, interest will not be allowed.[19]

9. A note which provides for interest, but is silent as to the rate and as to when interest will begin to run, bears interest from its maturity. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Daily States Pub. Co., 109 La. 759 (semble).

10. Where a note contains a provision for interest at a certain rate "from ——— until paid," and the contract with which the note is identified refers to the note as bearing interest and stipulates for the payment of principal and interest of the note at maturity, interest will run from the date of the note, not from maturity. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Daily States Pub. Co., 109 La. 759.

11. A director who is appointed trustee of a corporation to settle certain claims and who buys in and adjusts such claims with his own money. Kroegher v. Calivada Colonization Co. [C. C. 19. Tender of balance on contract of sale.

§ 2. Rate and computation.—Interest will be computed upon the amount due at the contract rate, if not usurious, otherwise at the rate fixed by statute.[20] A money[21] judgment draws interest from its rendition at the statutory rate.[22] When the rate of interest is changed by statute, interest will be computed on the old rate up to the time of the change, and by the new rate thereafter;[23] but where a contract stipulates for the payment of legal interest, the rate in force when the contract was made will continue until payment, notwithstanding an intermediate change in the law.[24] To create an obligation to pay compound interest, there must be an agreement to pay interest upon interest.[25]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure to recover interest.—Interest may be allowed, though no demand for the same be made in the oral complaint or bill of particulars.[26] Where there is no agreement to pay interest on a loan, demand for the

20. On an accounting between a mortgagor and mortgagee interest on mortgagee's receipts should be calculated at same rate as his advances as they operate as a reduction pro tanto of the mortgage indebtedness. Moss v. Odell [Cal.] 74 Pac. 999. In an accounting interest should not be computed on the entire indebtedness of one party to a date after a part had been paid. Id. A statute providing that when a rate of interest is specified in a contract that rate shall continue until full payment is made, does not prevent the allowance of a greater rate of interest after maturity, where there is a provision to that effect in the contract. Promissory note. Holmes v. Dewey, 66 Kan. 441, 71 Pac. 836. Where a note provides for a rate of interest until maturity and a higher rate thereafter, interest will be allowed on the unpaid interest instalments at the higher rate. Klingenfeld v. Houghton [Neb.] 96 N. W. 76. Where a mortgage note provides that upon default in the payment of interest the principal shall become due at the option of the holder and bear interest at a higher rate after maturity, the holder is not entitled to the higher rate till he declares his option. 21. Alternative judgment in replevin is such. Martin County Bank v. Bird [Minn.] 96 N. W. 915.

22. Though the judgment is for an amount made up in part of interest [Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 177, § 8]. East Tennessee Land Co. v. Leeson [Mass.] 69 N. E. 351. Though entered on a usurious contract which operates as a forfeiture of interest [Idaho Rev. St. 1887, § 1266]. Finney v. Moore [Idaho] 74 Pac. 866. A judgment liquidating the damages in an action of tort bears interest from its date, and not from judicial demand. Ortolano v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co., 109 La. 902. Where, on an appeal, the amount of a judgment is reduced, interest will be calculated on the unremitted balance from the date of the original judgment. Rawlings v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1001. Interest on a judgment is not suspended by appeal, writ of error, or certiorari where the judgment of the lower court is affirmed. Columbia Sav. Bank v. Los Angeles County, 137 Cal. 467, 70 Pac. 308. Where a statute provides for the payment of a high rate of interest upon special assessments from the time of delinquency, a decree enforcing a tax lien arising thereon will draw interest at the same rate. Lincoln v. Lincoln St. R. Co. [Neb.] 93 N. W. 766.

23. If the rate is changed after the cause of action has accrued but before judgment. Graham v. Merchant [Or.] 72 Pac. 1088. Where the change is made during the pendency of a suit. Saling v. Bolander [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 701. Where the change is made after the entry of judgment but before payment. Stanford v. Coram [Mont.] 72 Pac. 655. A statute changing the rate of interest which a judgment shall bear after entry is not unconstitutional as impairing an obligation of contract since a judgment is in no sense a contract. Id. A statute provision fixing the legal rate of interest upon judgments and decrees is not repealed by a later statute providing that the "interest of money" shall be at a different rate. On the ground that interest of money on account and interest on money judgments are distinguished in the title of the later statute, and are treated in different sections of the prior statutes. Union Steamboat Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., 189 U. S. 363, 47 Law. Ed. 854.

24. So also in the case of a contract upon which the law provides for the payment of legal interest. Graham v. Merchant [Or.] 72 Pac. 1088 (semble). Where a demand note provides that the maker shall pay the conventional rate of interest until the note is paid, the payment of such rate after maturity of the note and after the rate has been reduced by statute does not constitute usury. Mastin v. Cochran's Ex'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 712, 76 S. W. 343.

25. Cullen v. Whitham [Wash.] 74 Pac. 581. A note providing for the annual payment of interest does not entitle the holder to interest on overdue interest, but is a simple interest bearing obligation. Id. Damages for a continuing trespass, in case of the diversion of water supply for municipal purposes, is not to be compounded annually. Lonsdale Co. v. Woonsocket [R. I.] 56 Atl. 448. Where a demand note provides for interest semi-annually, unpaid interest instalments draw interest from the date they are due. Mastin v. Cochran's Ex'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 712, 76 S. W. 343.

26. Agent's commission. Kohn v. Schuldenfrei, 84 N. Y. Supp. 870. A special count in a declaration for interest upon the amount claimed as principal while perhaps unnecessary is not an improper pleading and is amount due and the date of such demand must be alleged and proved in order to justify a judgment for interest.[27] In order to recover interest, the damages claimed in the pleadings must be laid in a sufficient amount to cover the loss at the time the cause of action accrued, together with interest to the time of trial.[28] A direction to enter judgment for a designated sum without mentioning interest is not a determination that interest shall not be allowed.[29] A statute denying the right of appeal from money judgments for less than a specified sum does not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction in regard to the allowance of interest upon the sum found to be due.[30]

The holder of a fund for which there are adverse claimants should pay the money into court or file a disclaimer and appear as a stakeholder only, otherwise he will be chargeable with interest.[31]

INTERNAL REVENUE.

§ 1. On spirituous liquors.—A common carrier, by accepting liquors for delivery to the consignee upon payment of the price, does not carry on the business of a retail liquor dealer at the place of the residence of the consignee, within the statute requiring a special license tax from such dealers.[32]

On the purchase of distilled spirits by the United States while in a bonded warehouse, they are withdrawn from the operation of the internal revenue laws.[33] The giving of a warehouse bond will not relieve the sureties on the distiller's bond for taxes on liquors distilled during the term of the bond,[34] nor will the failure of the proper officers to collect the revenues on removal preclude a recovery against the sureties on the bond.[35]

Where the officers promulgated a regulation permitting the addition of water to liquors, the government is estopped to declare a forfeiture by reason thereof,[36] but the addition of any coloring matter after the barrels or casks have been examined and stamped will subject them to forfeiture.[37]

The statute forbidding shipments of liquors under any other than the proper name does not forbid a shipment without any designation.[38]

A distiller of apple brandy may be indicted for an attempt to defraud the government of the tax due thereon.[39] The indictment for violating the revenue laws must describe the offense with particularity.[40]

The information for forfeiture of liquors shipped without the proper designation on the package must aver that the shipper was a distiller, dealer, etc.[41] Animals seized which were used in removing spirits with intent to defraud the government may be sold at auction by the deputy collector as provided by U. S. Rev. St. § 3460,[42] and the title to such animals relates back to the time of the commission of the offense.[43] The purchaser at a sale by the collector for internal revenues to support his title must show a compliance with the material requirements of the law.[44]

INTERNATIONAL LAW.[62]

The treaty of Paris did not make a native of Porto Rico a citizen of the United States.[63] While under its military governor, Cuba was not a part of the United States, but a foreign country.[64] The treaty in 1795 with Great Britain did not release France from obligations under the treaty of 1778.[65] After the treaty with France of Feb. 6, 1778, was abrogated by Act July 7, 1798, c. 67, the law of nations must govern in determining the international obligations of that country.[66] The French Government, suing for protection of rights in a trade-name for benefit of a private lessee of springs of the government, whose lease has long existed and still has thirty years to run, is not exempt from the rule of laches because of the treaty with France of June 11, 1887, art. 8, providing for protection of commercial names.[67] State courts have no jurisdiction in actions against a foreign sovereign state or any political division of it.[68] Judicial notice is taken of treaties and of their effect in transferring territorial dominion.[69]

NOTE.—Want of revenue stamp as affecting criminal prosecutions. Following the English cases, which begin with King v. Hawkeswood, 1 Leach, C. L. 257, 2 East, P. C. 955, it is generally held that the absence of a revenue stamp from an instrument the subject of crime is immaterial. Thus that an alleged forged instrument lacks the prescribed stamp is no defense. Thomas v. State [Tex.] 46 L. R. A. 454; State v. Mott, 16 Minn. 472; State v. Hill, 30 Wis. 416, overruling John v. State, 23 Wis. 504; People v. Tomlinson, 35 Cal. 507; State v. Haynes, 6 Coldw. 550; Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152; David v. State, 61 Md. 309; State v. Young, 47 N. H. 402. The cases put the doctrine not only on the ground that the federal statutes do not contemplate that an unstamped instrument is without legal efficacy, but on the contrary allow it to be subsequently stamped on certain proof; but also on the ground that it is incompetent for federal law to affect the essentials of a crime against the state, and thus modify the state statute defining the same.

The doctrine of the English cases seems to be that while an unstamped instrument may be the subject of crime such an instrument is not admissible in evidence on a collateral issue (Rex v. Smythe, 5 C. & P. 201). In the United States, however, it is affected by the respective provinces of state and federal legislation, and there seems to be no reason why the rule admitting unstamped instruments in state courts would not be equally applied in criminal cases.

INTERPLEADER.

§ 1. Right to.—The necessary elements of a bill of interpleader are that two or more persons have made a claim against the complaint for the same thing,[70] that the complainant has no beneficial interest in the thing claimed,[71] that the complainant cannot determine who is entitled thereto without hazard,[72] and that the complainant has filed an affidavit that there is no collusion between him and any of the claimants.[73] It will not lie where the complainant has a clear, adequate and unembarrassed remedy at law,[74] nor if the person seeking it has incurred an independent liability to either of the claimants,[75] nor if the stakeholder has already contested his liability to the claimants in an action at law, and judgment has been rendered against him,[76] nor where the plaintiff is a necessary party to the litigation to determine the amount which he should bring into court; and the objection may be raised by demurrer.[77] Ordinary judgment creditors cannot be compelled

A doubt of law justifies a bill of interpleader as well as a doubt of fact. Id. Under a statute giving a person in possession of property claimed by more than one person a right to bring a suit in the nature of a bill of interpleader against the claimants to determine their rights, the plaintiff need not allege that suit has been threatened or that he is in danger of incurring two judgments for the same property. 77. Complainant contracted with a firm for building a school house. Before completion the firm became bankrupt and the complainant completed the building and offered to pay into court the balance after deducting from the contract price the amount it had paid to complete the contract. The holders of orders for materials furnished for the building, the trustee in bankruptcy, and a third person who claimed to have furnished material on the order of the complainant all claimed the fund. Held a bill of interpleader would not lie against these claimants.

to interplead at the instance of a common debtor.[78] A person claiming property which has been attached may interplead.[79] A defendant is not entitled to interpleader if he has been guilty of laches.[80]

A code complaint of interpleader will usually lie upon the same grounds as those which sustain a bill of interpleader in chancery.[81]

The defendant in a bill of interpleader is not entitled to affirmative relief either by a cross bill or by way of counterclaim.[82]

§ 2. Procedure and relief.—The bill must state the nature of the claims, and upon what they are based.[83] An interpleader may be made by answer.[84] When an order of interpleader is made upon the application of the original defendant, permitting him to pay into court the amount sued for and directing that a third person who claims the amount be substituted as defendant, the proper practice is for the plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint alleging such additional facts as are necessary to show a right to recover against the substituted defendant.[85] Where the complainant in the interpleader has acted in good faith and has grounds on which to base his call for an interpleader, he is entitled to his costs out of the fund,[86] and the whole costs in the proceeding, including those allowed the complainant, will be charged to the claimant whose invalid claim caused the proceeding to be instituted.[87]

A person claiming a fund who is interpleaded in a suit has the burden of proof.[88]

tion of the traffic is wholly within the police power of the state,[89] and the traffic is not one of the privileges or immunities of citizenship guarantied by the constitution.[90] Nor is it within any of the various bills of rights. Hence, statutes prohibiting sales to particular persons, such as Indians,[91] minors,[92] and drunkards,[93] and statutes prohibiting the traffic in particular places,[94] especially on vote of the inhabitants thereof,[95] have been sustained; the latter against such objections as that they lack uniform operation,[96] or abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens, or deprive them of liberty or property without due process of law, or deny them the equal protection of the laws, or as being class legislation.[97] But a statute punishing physicians for giving prescriptions in local option territory is not within the constitutional power of the legislature to enact a law enabling the voters to determine whether the "sale" of intoxicating liquors within certain municipal divisions shall be prohibited,[98] and the Texas local option law which contravenes neither the State nor the Federal constitution, except as to the prohibition concerning physicians, is not by the invalidity of such provision wholly invalidated.[99]

1. A statute providing for the punishment of those selling without license where sales are permitted and those selling where sales are not permitted is not bad as embracing more than one subject of legislation [Fla. Acts 1901, p. 58, c. 4930]. Brass v. State [Fla.] 31 So. 307. The statute prohibiting sales without license and excepting therefrom native wine and cider manufactured in the state is invalid so far as the exception discriminates against the wines and cider of other states but such invalidity does not affect the validity of the rest of the statute. Commonwealth v. Petranich [Mass.] 66 N. E. 807.

the procedure on application and granting of licenses,[2] and the grounds and procedure on which they may be revoked, have been upheld.[3] If a license or regulative law, however, is in reality a revenue measure, it must conform to the general revenue policy of the state,[4] and no such regulation is valid which discriminates between the people of the several states, or violates the commerce clause of the Federal constitution.[5]

Statutes prohibiting unlawful sales, or the keeping of liquors or places for unlawful sales,[6] and declaring such places nuisances and subjecting them to abatement or injunction,[7] and providing for searches and the seizure and confiscation of property found therein,[8] are valid. The so-called dispensary laws, placing the traffic wholly in the hands of agents appointed by state authority, are generally upheld.[9]

Statutes regulative of the liquor traffic however must be framed with due regard to the constitutional provisions concerning the distribution of governmental

2. Moynihan's Appeal, 75 Conn. 358. The statute providing that a license shall not be granted if a majority of the voters remonstrate is valid and not an unlawful discrimination as all applicants are treated alike [Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 7283i]. Boonershine v. Uline, 159 Ind. 500.

3. A statute empowering city and other boards to revoke and discontinue licenses is not repugnant to the State or Federal constitution [Nev. Act Mar. 10, 1903, §§ 1, 3; Act Mar. 16, 1903, § 20, subd. 8]. Wallace v. Reno [Nev.] 73 Pac. 528. The provision of the New York liquor tax law amendment that unless the holder of the certificate files a verified answer to a petition for revocation denying the alleged violation, the certificate shall be revoked is void as taking property without due process of law and compelling the holder if guilty to confess by oath or by silence [Laws 1900, p. 862, c. 367, § 9]. In re Cullinan, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 423. Right to raise constitutional question held not waived (In re Cullinan, 82 App. Div. [N. The amendment of 1903 permitting an unverified answer and providing for a hearing on the evidence renders it constitutional [Laws 1903, p. 1125, c. 486, § 12]. In re Cullinan, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 392.

See, also, State v. Broeder, 90 Mo. App. 156. An ordinance or statute requiring all dealers to procure a license from the city or state applies to a nonresident manufacturer who maintains a depot in the city or state for the sale of his product, but does not for that reason unlawfully discriminate in favor of a manufacturer located in such city or state. Nor is such ordinance or statute an interference with interstate commerce in view of the Wilson act [Act Aug. 8, 1890, c. 428, 26 Stat. 313 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3177)]. Duluth B. & M. Co. v. 7. The statute of Maine conferring upon the supreme judicial court jurisdiction in equity upon petition of not less than 20 legal voters to enjoin the continuance of a liquor nuisance is constitutional [Pub. Laws 1891, c. 98]. Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 559.

8. That the right to trial by jury is not given by the statute authorizing proceedings for seizure and confiscation of liquors does not render it invalid. Sothman v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 303. The Kansas statute denouncing places where liquors are unlawfully kept as common nuisances and providing for the condemnation and destruction of property found therein is constitutional [Gen. St. 1901, § 2493]. State v. McManus, 65 Kan. 720, 70 Pac. 700.

9. The Alabama act establishing a dispensary at Camp Hill is invalid [Acts 1900, 1901, p. 295]. Harlan v. State, 136 Ala. 150. The dispensary law of South Carolina in providing that certain counties may or not as the majority decide, provide dispensaries is not an unconstitutional discrimination [Cr. Code, § 563]. Severance v. Murphy [S. C.] 46 S. E. 35. The act establishing a dispensary in the city of La Grange, Georgia, having been ratified by the people of the city, an amendment thereto is not invalid for want of like ratification, the act not so requiring [Act Dec. 3, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 506); Act Dec. 18, 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 487)]. Dallis v. Griffin, 117 Ga. 408. A local act prohibiting the sale of liquors otherwise than through the medium of a dispensary is a prohibitory law within the meaning of a general statute making it penal to sell liquors in any county where the sale is prohibited by law [Pen Code 1895, § 428]. Barker v. State [Ga.] 44 S. E. 874.

powers,[10] the right of trial by jury,[11] the prohibition of ex post facto laws,[12] and the right of one accused of crime to demand the nature and cause of the accusation.[13]

Cities generally under the powers granted by their charters to regulate the traffic may enact and enforce such ordinances regarding the hours of closing and general conduct of the traffic as the authorities deem expedient.[14] They may also prohibit illegal sales and keeping for illegal sale,[15] exact licenses, prohibit sales without license,[16] and confine the traffic to certain localities within the corporate limits.[17] An ordinance, however, making one in possession of premises on which liquor is disposed of by any pretense whatever, guilty without opportunity of defense, is violative of the bill of rights,[18] and a municipal corporation cannot establish a dispensary for the sale of liquors under its power to control and direct the sale of liquors, especially in a county which has adopted the local option law.[19]

§ 2. Local option laws.—Statutes providing that the inhabitants of the various municipal subdivisions of the state may by vote determine whether the sale of liquors shall be permitted within the subdivision are, as was seen above,[20] generally upheld; such statutes generally provide that on petition of a certain proportion of the qualified voters of the county or district,[21] an election shall be called by the proper authorities, submitting the question to the voters.[22] The general

In re Rogers, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 389.

22. The Texas local option law authorizes elections in cities and towns though not specifically naming them [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, tit. 69]. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766. An order calling an election at the same term at which the petition is filed is void. Com. v. McCarty [Ky.] 76 S. W. 173. Since the commissioner's court has power at any time to change precinct boundaries, an order calling a local option election which mistakes the established boundary of a precinct is nevertheless valid as the order establishes a new boundary.

rules of procedure in calling and conducting elections,[22] canvassing the vote and publishing the results,[24] and for contesting them, apply to elections under these statutes.[25] On determining the result in favor of the adoption of the law, an order is entered[26] which has the effect to prohibit the traffic in the designated territory,[27] notwithstanding prior special rights or charters granted to particular portions thereof;[28] but a municipal charter granted to a city within the county, providing that the city may regulate the traffic, repeals the local option law theretofore in force in that county so far as the city is concerned.[29]

The legislature by amending the local option law cannot affect the territory in which the law is already in force.[30] Nor can the commissioner's court by changing the boundaries of a precinct affect the application of the law to the territory contained in the old precinct.[31]

By reason of a saving clause, the repeal of the local option law in a precinct under the Texas law does not affect prosecutions for prior offenses.[32]

A defendant prosecuted under the local option law is bound by the decision in a contest of the election as to every question that could have been raised therein, whether it was in fact raised or not.[33]

That the minutes of the commissioner's court containing orders relating to the election are not signed does not invalidate the orders. Davidson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 808. Since the commissioner's court is authorized by statute to conduct business whenever a quorum is present, a local option election is valid though the county judge was not present at the opening day of the term at which it was ordered. Racer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 968. A local option election is not invalidated by failure of the court to record the orders at the time designated by the law; such acts being ministerial may be done at any subsequent term. The ballots used at a local option election in Ohio need not conform to the general election law. Stick v. State, 23 Ohio Circ. R. 392.

24. The declaration and publication of the result of an election is a ministerial act that may be enjoined. Sweeney v. Webb [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 766.

25. A canvass and return of a vote decided adversely to contestants by majorities which cannot be overcome by counting the votes as claimed by them will not be set aside. In re Bertrend, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 536. In a proceeding to set aside the canvass of the votes the town board is a proper party as a board and its members are proper parties as individuals since they are the canvassing board. Id. A contest in Texas can be maintained only for some irregularity in the conduct of the election itself (Norman v. Thompson [Tex.] 72 S. W. 62; Lowery v. Briggs [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1062) but the district court has jurisdiction to try a contest on a ground going to its validity, not specified in the statute [Rev. St. 1895, § 3397] (Oxford v. Frank, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 343).

27. A negative vote on the local option law suspends but does not destroy a privilege to traffic in intoxicating liquors and on reversal of the vote the dealer is again entitled to his certificate unless he has shown his intention to abandon the traffic. People v. Brush, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 56. An order of the commissioner's court prohibiting the sale of liquors is valid though it does not contain the statutory exceptions. Racer v. State [Tex. Cr. Alcohol is an intoxicating liquor within the local option law.[34]

It is no crime to give away liquor in territory under the Texas local option law,[35] unless the gift is a cloak for a sale.[36]

An indictment cannot be maintained for engaging in the occupation of selling in a local option county without a license; it should be for "selling."[37]

§ 3. Licenses and license taxes; application for and granting license.—Authority to grant licenses is generally vested in the county court or governing body of the county,[38] though, as the granting of a license is a judicial act,[39] there is no objection to its being vested in judicial officers as is done in many states. Town boards and the common councils of cities also are frequently authorized to license.[40] Such boards are empowered to act only as the statute directs,[41] whence in Missouri the excise commissioners have no jurisdiction to grant a license until the petition has been on file 10 days,[42] and the statutory bond has been approved.[43] In Kentucky, the denial of an application for a license is effective for a year and cannot be renewed at the subsequent term of court;[44] but in Iowa, where under the statute but one consent can be canvassed by the board of supervisors in any one year, the filing of a consent and its withdrawal before canvass does not preclude the subsequent canvass of another within the year.[45] Under the Iowa mulct law, the filing of the petition for the removal of the bar of prosecution operates ipso facto to remove it, and a finding by the district court that it is sufficient is an adjudication binding on all interested.[46]

Where a proper application for a license is made by one who complies with all the requirements of the law and there is no objection from residents, the court's duty to issue the license is plain[47] and can be enforced by mandamus.[48] The burden, however, of showing himself to be within the law and a proper person for a license is on the applicant.[49]

In New York licenses are grantable under certain conditions to hotel keepers only, and the question frequently arises whether or not the applicant's premises are a hotel.[50] Where a statute restricts the granting of a license to a "law abiding, is given of the charges in a remonstrance does not entitle the applicant to a license as of right,[68] the burden being on him to prove all facts entitling him to a license, including the fact that he has published his notice of application in the papers having the largest circulation in the county.[69]

In Kentucky, appeals from the county to the district court are heard on bills of exception on the same evidence heard below and not de novo,[70] and where the bill shows that the county court had no discretion, but should have granted the license, the case should be remanded with directions;[71] but a remand for a new trial is not prejudicial where the applicant was not in fact entitled to a license.[72] In Nebraska, however, on appeal the case is tried de novo and the court should not be influenced by the finding below.[73] A motion for a new trial is not necessary to obtain a review.[74] On appeal from an order of commissioners granting a license, the proof of lack of qualifications must be clear to warrant a revocation of the license.[75] The appellate court in Pennsylvania will not review the action of the court of quarter sessions in refusing a license, where the record shows it was refused "after hearing."[76]

Certiorari is the proper remedy to determine the validity of a license where the facts relied on are of record, such as whether the petition was on file for 10 days before granting the license and whether the petitioners withdrew their names and subscribed to the remonstrance;[77] but an appellate court will deny the writ where nothing is alleged why the application was not made to the court of general original jurisdiction.[78] Since an application for certiorari need not be verified, it is no objection that one of the relators therein administered the oath to his co-relators.[79]

An injunction will not be granted against the exercise of a liquor license alleged to be void on grounds that appear of record and are hence reviewable by certiorari.[80]

Mandamus to compel the issuance of a liquor license will be denied where the petition alleges a compliance with the wrong statute.[81]

vided by the statute the finding of sufficiency of the board of supervisors will be set aside. Fitzgibbon v. Macy, 118 Iowa, 440. liquor tax certificate on surrendering it and abandoning the business is entitled to a rebate of the unearned portion of the tax paid;[98] but one paying money in Florida to the tax collector, as a deposit on account of a liquor license, cannot recover it of him on suspending business, though the license was never issued because the entire tax was not paid.[99] In Kentucky, a liquor dealer's license is a mere personal privilege and cannot be treated as part of his assets in bankruptcy, though the statutes permit it to be transferred on his death or the sale of his business;[1] but in Massachusetts[2] and in Pennsylvania, it is a part of a bankrupt's assets and may be claimed by him as a part of his exemption.[3]

The certificate of payment of the liquor tax in New York is subject to revocation at the suit of the excise commissioner[4] against the holder[5] for any cause that would have prevented the granting of a certificate,[6] or its transfer,[7] and for any violation of the law.[8]

An application on information and belief, supported by affidavits setting up facts justifying cancellation, is sufficient,[9] and confers jurisdiction,[10] though the court cannot revoke the certificate without proof of the facts set up.[11]

An indictment for keeping "open a tippling house" on Sunday need not allege facts which show it to be a tippling house or that any liquors were sold there on that day,[26] and where the prosecution is for not keeping closed, no sale need be shown.[27] An indictment for a sale on a certain Sunday is supported by evidence of a sale on any Sunday within a year before the finding of the indictment.[28]

That defendant was in charge of a club house kept open on Sunday is sufficient to convict of keeping the house.[29]

Prohibition of sale in certain places.—It is customary to provide by statute or ordinance that the sales shall be confined to one room,[30] without partitions or stalls,[31] and regulations confining sales to particular localities in cities[32] and prohibiting sales within certain distances of churches and schools, are common.[33]

Prohibition of sale to certain persons.—Sales to irresponsible persons, such as Indians,[34] drunkards[35] and minors,[36] are generally prohibited; but one who acts as agent for a minor in buying liquor for him is not guilty of selling to him.[37] An order by a parent to authorize a sale to his minor son must be special both as to time and quantity.[38] The prohibition of the assembling of females in a saloon is a fair police regulation.[39]

Officers or boards charged with enforcement.—The governor and council in New Hampshire are not entitled to approve the appointment of the special agents of the license commissioners, their duty extending only to approval of their number and compensation.[40] its store is a sale,[56] and an illegal sale is not shorn of its illegality by a subsequent agreement to consider the transaction a loan instead of a sale on credit.[57]

Furnishing to the members of a club on tickets is "selling,"[60] and so is furnishing for cash or charging against a sum previously paid in by the member,[61] but where defendant assisted in making up a fund with which liquor was bought and drunk by defendant and the others, no sale by defendant or any of the others is shown.[62] Where a purse is made up by several to buy liquor of defendant, there may be a conviction for a sale to any person giving money to defendant.[63]

A sale made by a traveling agent is not complete until the principal has severed the quantity from his stock and delivered it to a carrier consigned to the buyer, whence the sale takes place at the seller's place of business and not at the buyer's.[64] A carrier is not liable for unlawful sale where he delivers shipments C. O. D.,[65] and an ordinance providing otherwise is void;[66] but an agent for a liquor house who procures buyers for packages originally sent C. O. D. and remaining unclaimed sells within the state and is liable.[67] Where the liquor was paid for in advance and sent into the prohibited territory, it cannot be said to be sent C. O. D.[68] Where liquor is sent into local option territory by an agent who is instructed not to deliver it without payment of the price, such delivery and payment constitute a sale,[69] and where a wholesale dealer residing in another county sells in a local option county and ships the goods there from his stock, he is liable.[70]

A bona fide sale for medicinal purposes is not within the statute,[71] and a medicinal compound of whisky and other ingredients is not rendered unlawful by the fact that on settling, the whisky may become separated from the remainder.[72] A physician's prescription is no defense to sale by one who is not a druggist,[73] and a prescription dated in October is no defense where the witness swears he has bought several times without a prescription and at least once in July.[74]

The assistant of a registered pharmacist, though not registered, may sell on a proper prescription under the supervision of his preceptor;[75] but the fact that defendant, prosecuted for an illegal sale, was barkeeper on a steamboat whose owners had complied with the laws of the United States and the state in which was situated her home port, is no defense.[76] of unlawful sale,[95] nor need an indictment for selling specify the particular kind of liquor,[96] and an information charging in the statutory form that defendant "unlawfully engaged in and carried on the business of a dealer in liquors" is not bad for omission of the word "intoxicating."[97] An indictment under the local option law must show that the law was in force in the jurisdiction.[98] An indictment charging that defendant "did unlawfully sell, give away or otherwise dispose of" intoxicating liquor,"[99] one that, after specifying various liquors, adds "and other drinks unknown,"[1] and one charging that defendant sold "intoxicating liquors to wit: whisky, brandy, ale, beer, and wine, a mixture thereof," are sufficiently certain.[2] An indictment charging defendant as "a liquor dealer or keeper of a barroom" is not in the alternative, since the terms "keeper" and "dealer" are synonymous.[3] An indictment alleging that defendant allowed "a certain shop" in a certain building to be used for an unlawful purpose is sufficient.[4]

The right of one accused to a bill of particulars rests in the discretion of the court.[5]

An indictment charging an unlawful sale need not negative the exceptions in a proviso in the statute permitting the use of liquor in certain cases,[6] and where a subsequent statute makes certain sales lawful, it need not be alleged that the sale complained of was not one of those.[7] Where intent or guilty knowledge is a necessary ingredient of the offense, it must be alleged,[8] but not otherwise.

The officer's jurat to a complaint for violating the local option law need not show that it was sworn to by a credible person,[9] and where all information is sworn to positively, the county attorney need not file with it the affidavits or oral evidence reduced to writing on which it is founded.[10]

liquors on Sunday is not double,[11] nor is one charging th spirituous, malt and intoxicating liquors;[12] but an informati the same count the maintenance of a nuisance in each of twc is bad.[13]

Where the evidence shows several sales on the same nig should be required to elect,[14] and where, on an indictment in an unlawful sale, one sale is proved, this constitutes an electi other sales is inadmissible.[15]

That an indictment alleges a sale to an Indian of a certa and the proof shows that he is within that class and another, no variance.[16] An indictment for selling "spirituous liquors, beer" is supported by proof of the sale of a pint of beer, since uous liquors" are surplusage.[17]

Judicial notice.—The court will take judicial notice th and alcohol[20] are intoxicants, that where the word "beer" is use common lager or bock beer is meant,[21] and that a glass of v cents is a quantity less than three gallons.[22]

Presumptions and burden of proof.—That defendant has ense is prima facie evidence that he is engaged in the busines defendant took money from another and shortly gave him the onus on him to show where he got it, failing which he is of selling;[24] but where the charge is for an unlawful sale, shown to have made the particular sale charged; proof that he business is not sufficient.[25] Where the keeper of a barroom in with selling on Sunday and the evidence sustains the charge, him to show that the sale was to a bona fide guest of the hotel cution for violation of the local option law, the burden is upo beyond a reasonable doubt that the election was held in conf ute.[27]

Admissibility of evidence.—Though in a prosecution for option law defendant cannot be convicted of any sale other th the indictment, other sales may be shown as to his system with sale was in accordance;[28] but where the facts testified to show certainly, such evidence is not admissible.[29] Evidence of sal charged to have been acting with defendant is admissible, if acting together.[30] In a prosecution for keeping with intent unlawful sales may be shown to prove intent.[31] That the prosecuting witness has the reputation of violating the local option law also is not admissible.[32]

In a trial for keeping a nuisance, evidence of the character of defendant's premises several years before the law under which he is prosecuted went into effect is inadmissible;[33] but evidence of the condition of the place five days after the date of the offense and three days after the filing of the complaint was inadmissible to prove that defendant kept the place,[34] and liquors and appliances used therewith, found on the premises and seized under the search warrant, may be introduced in evidence.[35]

The testimony of a non-expert, that the liquor he drank was alcohol, is admissible,[36] and another witness than prosecutor may state that he has drunk the kind of liquor described by prosecutor and that it is intoxicating.[37]

On the issue of whether the seller of liquor knew the buyer to be a minor, evidence that other minors drank with him is competent;[38] and where the only evidence of a boy's age is the testimony of his father, defendant should be allowed to show for the purpose of impeachment that the father told him the boy was over the statutory age.[39]

In a prosecution for selling by a druggist without the prescription of a practicing registered physician, the registration is material,[40] and the druggist's report of liquors sold is competent as an admission, irrespective of whether he could have been required to make the report or punished for not making it.[41]

In a prosecution for selling on election day, defendant should be permitted to show that the order calling the election was void for want of jurisdiction.[42]

Weight and sufficiency of evidence.—A purchaser is not the accomplice of the seller under the local option law, and his testimony does not need corroboration.[43]

One holding license to sell liquors may be convicted of keeping liquors for illegal sale on proof of a single illegal sale;[44] but proof of a single sale of three pints will not sustain a conviction of selling by small measure of less than a quart.[45] Proof of a sale by a druggist without a prescription, on any day within twelve months before finding the indictment, is sufficient.[46] Cases in which the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction has been considered will be found in the footnotes.[47]

Whenever the outer door of a hotel is open, a police officer has a right to go into every part of the building to search for violations of the liquor law, and one who resists him is guilty of obstructing an officer;[60] but resistance to a search warrant, void for want of authority in the court to issue it, cannot be punished as a contempt,[61] and defendant cannot be in contempt in resisting a search warrant of which he had no knowledge.[62]

An action may be maintained against a constable who has seized liquors under the dispensary law in good faith but in fact without legal grounds.[63]

§ 8. Abatement of traffic and injunction.—Though the illegal sale of liquor is a public nuisance which may be abated by process instituted in the name of the state,[64] the acts of an agent of a common carrier cannot be declared a common nuisance where he delivers liquors sent C. O. D., in the absence of any showing that his conduct of the business was offensive in manner;[65] but in Iowa, it is held that the building in which an express office is situated under such circumstances may be abated.[66]

That the state by statute or common law can proceed and has hitherto proceeded by criminal prosecution to punish for the maintenance of a liquor nuisance and for the abatement thereof does not prevent the legislature authorizing it to proceed in equity to restrain, enjoin or abate such nuisance by the use of the equity writ of injunction,[67] and the remedy so created is cumulative and may be used, though the ordinary remedies are complete and available.[68] A municipal corporation may enjoin the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors therein as a nuisance, though the voters have not determined against the sale of liquor.[69]

The implied repeal of that section of the Kansas act of 1887[70] creating and defining a liquor nuisance, by the act of 1901[71] on the same subject, destroyed the force of the section providing a remedy by injunction to abate a nuisance of the kind mentioned in the repealed section.[72]

A petition for an injunction against a permit holder under the Iowa Mulct law should state in what respect he has violated the law in order that he may join issue and make his defense;[73] but it need not allege that defendant intends to continue the illegal use.[74]

The proceedings are governed by the general rules of equity procedure, but are not subject in every respect to its strictures,[75] and on the withdrawal of the relator, the court may substitute the county solicitor and treat the complaint as one for a violation of the liquor law.[76]

§ 9. *Civil liabilities for injuries resulting from sale. Liquor sellers are liable for inducing habitual drunkenness for a consequent thriftless and dissipated career followed by hi ceased to furnish him; but they are not liable for such damages dealers before defendants engaged in the business.[85]

A statute providing that good faith as to a minor's age i action on a liquor dealer's bond for selling to him does not a for allowing him to enter and remain in a saloon,[86] but if th no longer than was necessary to get a drink given him in goo belief of his maturity, there is no liability, since there must b well as an entry.[87] Emancipation of a minor is no defense to a rent for allowing him to enter and remain in a saloon.[88] Neithe an action for selling that plaintiff did not object to others s though such acts might be admissible on the question of conse son said as to his father's consent is not admissible.[89]

Where the intoxicated person was killed in a gambling room near defendant's saloon, the admission of evidence that defendant's attention had been called to the gambling room is erroneous.[94] Other matters of evidence are noted below.[95]

Where an intoxicated person is killed by collision of his vehicle with a telephone pole, alleged by defendant to have been negligently placed, the question of proximate cause of death is for the jury.[96]

Instructions in those as in other cases should clearly state the issues,[97] and the giving of an instruction in the language of the statute creating the liability without stating what plaintiff must prove is error.[98]

Plaintiff, if entitled to recover at all, is entitled to costs where the claim for damages brings the case within the jurisdiction of courts of record.[99]

§ 10. Property rights in and contracts relating to intoxicants.—One cannot recover the price of intoxicating liquors illegally sold,[1] but the seller may recover the price of liquors purchased with intent to resell in violation of the law, if he had no knowledge of the buyer's unlawful intent,[2] and mere knowledge of the buyer's unlawful purpose will not bar his recovery.[3] In an action on a current account, defendant has the burden of proving that a part of it is for liquor illegally sold.[4] A note given by defendant for liquor sold by plaintiff on credit to defendant's son to be drunk on plaintiff's premises is one for the purchase price of liquor and is void.[5] The record holder of a liquor tax certificate is not liable for the price of goods sold to another who is conducting business under it.[6]

Where a licensee assumes to conduct a business under the license as the undisclosed agent of another, the contract of agency is unlawful and the principal cannot maintain an action thereon.[7] A note given in consideration of the execution of a written statement of consent to the establishment of a saloon under the Iowa Mulct law is void as against public policy.[8] A contract never to permit the sale of liquor on certain premises is not against public policy, and though not a covenant running with the land, may be enforced in equity against a purchaser with notice.[9]

Liquors which have been shipped to purchasers in another state and have arrived at their destination and been stored in the carrier's warehouse, waiting delivery to the consignee, have arrived in such state within the meaning of the Wilson law[10] and the carrier is not liable to the consignor for their loss by seizure under the laws of the state into which they are shipped.

§ 11. Drunkenness as an offense.—One is not drunk when his mental or physical faculties are not affected.[11] That defendant was drunk in a private house, made no disturbance and was not exposed to public view, is no defense.[12]

Where a shareholder is represented at a meeting by proxy, he is estopped to deny the legality of such meeting,[27] and a presumption of irregularity of the meeting of a board of managers is not raised by the mere fact that all the members of the board were not present.[28] Notice by mail of an annual meeting is sufficient.[29]

The rights, powers, and liabilities of the shareholders, as between themselves, are regulated by the law of partnerships.[30] A shareholder can dispose of his stock only according to the articles of association, where provision is made therein for that purpose.[31] He may bid for and purchase land of the company at a public sale, conducted fairly and openly,[32] or purchase claims against it where it has gone into liquidation.[33] But he cannot maintain an action for an accounting against a trustee of the company for the increased value of a share delivered to him for sale.[34] A member advancing money to pay incumbrances on company property is entitled to all the rights of the original incumbrancer.[35]

Powers.—A visiting judge legally called from a different judicial district has all the powers of the regular judge.[60] If a special justice, called in to try a case on account of affidavit of bias of the regular justice, does not finish the case before the expiration of his term, another special justice may be called in.[61] A special justice may finish a case pending before him after the return of the regular judge.[62] If a decree of a special justice holding a court is reversed by the higher court, he cannot be compelled by mandamus to rehear the case, the term of his special appointment having expired.[63]

§ 3. Powers, duties and liabilities.—The powers of judges as such are distinct from their powers as a court.[64] A single judge may, if properly authorized, exercise the power of the full court on a matter.[65]

Effect of change of judge or expiration of term.—The judge hearing the case must, if able, settle it for appeal;[66] but if his term of office ends with written statement of a case for appeal to be made, but with no time limit for making the "case," the appeal fails, though the judge succeeds himself.[67] He may after his term sign and file his conclusions of law and fact,[68] and a signing after the case had passed out of his district by redistricting has been upheld.[69] The statutory power of the successor of a deceased judge to sign in the latter's stead a bill of exceptions carries with it power to overrule a motion for a new trial.[70] If the judge before whom the motion for a new trial is made dies while it is pending, his successor may determine it.[71] Where one judge orders an inquisition as to sanity which comes up before another judge, the latter may deny the inquisition because of the insufficiency of an affidavit presented to the former.[72]

Territorial limitations on judge's power.[73]—A district judge cannot grant a temporary injunction when out of his district.[74] He may hear motions in ancillary proceedings anywhere in his district and not necessarily in the county within which the case is pending.[75] If a question of reference to a master is submitted to a judge at the trial in term time, he may make the order while holding court in another county.[76]

Powers of judges in vacation or at chambers.—Where the length of a term of court is prescribed by statute, all acts done by the court after the prescribed period has elapsed are coram non judice and void.[77] But if the court is authorized by statute to hold special sessions, a simple adjournment to a day beyond the pending term may be valid as the appointment of a special session.[78] Statutory power

Bias.—Bias or prejudice is no disqualification in the absence of statute.[99] Statutory proceedings for disqualifying a judge by affidavit must be availed of strictly in accordance with their provisions.[1] In some jurisdictions, allegations of bias in an affidavit, stating grounds for the same, cannot be controverted.[2] Such a statute has been held to allow but one change.[3] The facts in the cases collected in the note have been held not to constitute bias.[4] A judge is not disqualified to try the question whether he is biased.[5] A temporary disqualification of a judge, arising after the trial of a case but before argument, does not prevent him from deciding the case after the disqualification is removed.[6] If the party unfavorably affected by the disqualification of the judge does not make reasonable protest, he cannot avail himself of the objection.[7] When a judge is the sole person having jurisdiction and the law provides no method of getting another, he must determine as a matter of necessity.[8] A judge disqualified by interest may be restrained from proceeding by a writ of prohibition.[9] Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a judge under disqualification to provide for an impartial trial.[10] Upon certiorari to quash a conviction because of the judge's bias, evidence of bias should be presented upon a rule obtained from the court.[11]

The right to enter a default judgment may be barred by laches.[41] If it appeared on a trial that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, he cannot complain that the court refused to allow him a default judgment.[42]

Office judgments.—In scire facias upon a judgment the plaintiff may take an office judgment and file his affidavit of the amount due.[43] If no plea is filed, the office judgment becomes final on the last day of the term following the entry,[44] and the plaintiff may thereafter at any time demand judgment by filing the required affidavit or prove his case.[45] The affidavit for final judgment must state that the sum due remains unpaid.[46] The duty of the court to render judgment on the filing of an affidavit of the amount due after an office judgment, without an order of inquiry as to damages or plea by the defendant, is immaterial and may be enforced by mandamus.[47]

§ 4. Requisites. A. In general.—Where the trial of facts is by the court without a jury, a decision is an essential prerequisite to the judgment.[48] A finding alone is not a judgment.[49] The judgment or record should be signed,[50] which may be without notice on the day of rendition of the decision.[51] After decision and interlocutory judgment thereon, it is error to enter judgment upon the interlocutory judgment.[52] A judgment by confession need not recite that evidence was heard.[53] If a court of general jurisdiction in the exercise of a special or limited jurisdiction grants a default judgment, it must show the existence of the jurisdictional facts.[54]

(§ 4) B. Parties.—Judgment can be entered only against parties,[55] and it cannot therefore be entered against the surety for costs;[56] but if entered against the surety, it is invalid only as to him.[57]

If the liability is joint, the judgment should go against all the defendants, though the omission of one of the debtors is not necessarily fatal,[58] and judgment may in some jurisdictions be entered against those served.[59]

An order of dismissal for delay in serving the summons is effective for all purposes if entered on the court's minutes, though not in the judgment book.[81]

The entry may be nunc pro tunc,[82] but not where the decision did not order the clerk to enter judgment accordingly.[83] Where, pending determination, one of the parties dies, the court may enter its decision as of the term when the case was taken under advisement.[84]

Stay or suspension.—A judgment need not be entered until final disposition of the motion for a new trial or in arrest,[85] and the courts may stay entry until plaintiff remits an admitted credit which had not been called to the attention of the court or jury.[86]

The register of actions is not a part of the judgment roll.[87] The clerk in making up the judgment roll has no authority to recite in the postea of the record the right to a body execution.[88]

8. Page v. Shields,

A motion made during the judgment term stands continued to the subsequent term without a special order therefor.[9]

A judgment, void for want of jurisdiction, may be set aside on motion, though an appeal therefrom is pending.[10] After entry and payment, the court is without power on motion to modify the judgment.[11]

The right to have a judgment opened,[12] vacated,[13] amended,[14] corrected or modified, may be lost by laches.[15]

(§ 7) B. Amendment, correction and modification.—Merely because the judgment entered was erroneous does not justify its correction.[16] A judgment may be amended so as to conform to the judgment actually rendered.[17] Mere judicial errors[18] or clerical misprisions[19] as where by mistake it was greater than the amount claimed,[20] by an erroneous computation of interest,[21] or where the costs allowed were by mistake omitted by the clerk,[22] or where the name of a joint obligor was included by mistake in the default judgment,[23] may be corrected on motion, but errors of law,[24] or amendments which alter the decision on the merits, cannot so be made.[25] Amendments which do not change the effect of the judgment is not ground for objection.[26]

Uncertainty as to parts of the judgment may be cured by remittitur of rights thereunder.[27]

Where relief not prayed for was given by the judgment, the remedy is by motion to modify the judgment.[28] Correction nunc pro tunc can be made only where the records show that a different judgment than the one entered was rendered.[29] It is not only a right but a duty of the court to vacate its judgment during the term, sua sponte, on ascertaining that the court had not jurisdiction[30] or when based on erroneous rulings.[31]

The fraud to justify equitable relief must be extrinsic or collateral to the cause of action;[50] fraud in procuring the judgment[51] is such. Akin to it is the statutory ground of perjury.[52] When the fraud is that of an officer not imputable to the plaintiff, the remedy, if any, is at law.[53] It may be actual or constructive[54] and must be clearly shown.[55]

Defective jurisdiction appears on a premature entry of a default judgment,[56] or entry on the unauthorized appearance of attorney where no original process had been served[57] or without appointment of a guardian ad litem for infant defendants.[58] Want of service[59] may be shown despite the presumption favoring the record or recitals therein[60] and by parol.[61] From the record alone can invalidity on the face of the judgment be found.[62]

cause must be shown.[78] To entitle one to equitable relief against a default judgment, it must appear that he has a meritorious defense, that he has no adequate remedy at law, and that the default was not due to any neglect on his part.[79] Subsequent matters rendering enforcement inequitable will justify a vacation only when necessary for the protection of the adverse party.[80] Available means of averting the taking of judgment must have been pursued.[81] An invalid extension of time to answer is no protection.[82]

The discretion of the court ultimately controls.[83]

(§ 7) D. Parties applicant and opposed.—A legal successor of a party may apply,[84] or a third person defrauded by a collusive judgment.[85] A judgment void on its face may be vacated on application of a person irrespective of his interest;[86] if, however, the judgment is only in rem, a defendant who had parted with his interest cannot move to set it aside.[87]

All the parties to the original action should be made parties to the action to set aside the judgments,[88] including a subsequent transferee of the land attempted to be sold under the void judgment.[89]

(§ 7) E. Relief grantable.—Relief against fraud will be such as the facts and justice require.[90]

Conditions may be imposed,[91] but not where the judgment was procured by fraud,[92] or where the judgment, a default, should not have been granted.[93] Judgment may be retained and merely opened.[94] Defaults should be opened and not stricken off when relief is prayed on equitable grounds.[95] Relief in inferior courts must be confined to that which the statute authorizes.[96] Time to answer is incidental to vacation and leave to appear.[97]

97. Headdings v. Gavette, 86 App. Div. [N. Y.] 592.

Injunction or other relief from judgments.—Equity will enjoin an inequitable use of[98] or the enforcement of a common law judgment[99] where the court had not jurisdiction of an equitable defense[1] or for the purpose of set off, the judgment creditor being insolvent,[2] or to remove it as a cloud,[3] but not because it appeared on the face of the pleading that the action was barred by limitations.[4]

(§ 7) F. Modes of procedure.—Remedies against judgments not void on the face of the record originated in equity, but have been adapted by many statutes in proceedings by motion or action. The statutory remedy by motion, when applicable,[5] is generally to be pursued rather than an independent action or suit,[6] for while statutory and equitable remedies may concur and be cumulative,[7] the statutory remedy is a legal remedy which will, if adequate, defeat equitable relief.[8] Ignorance of new facts until the statutory remedy was barred will invoke equity.[9] Motion will reach judgments void on the face of the record.[10] In Georgia, it will reach only such.[11] A motion in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis will not lie to vacate a judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, where the question was not raised on the trial.[12] In Nebraska, a proceeding by petition is appropriate when the judgment is not void but voidable.[13]

A court may enjoin the use of a judgment of another court of concurrent jurisdiction[14] unless the statute otherwise provides.[15] A federal court sitting in equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a judgment as unconscionable against a nonresident defendant, though the statute of the state wherein the judgment was rendered provided a remedy at law.[16] Since a justice of the peace is without jurisdiction to set aside a judgment rendered before him,[17] the action may be brought in the court wherein the transcript of the judgment is recorded.[18]

The equitable remedy may be lost by laches or limitations.[19]

The vacation should be had only on notice[20] which may be in general terms.[21]

Everything necessary to support the opening should be shown,[22] hence, a copy of a proposed pleading[23] or its equivalent[24] should be annexed or set out. In an action to avoid a default judgment, for want of service of process, the petition must deny the existence of the facts recited in the sheriff's return.[25] The petition for equitable relief must show that equity can afford relief,[26] and it must appear that the judgment was prejudicial and oppressive.[27]

Verification[28] or an affidavit of merits, if necessary,[29] should be positive as to matters within applicant's knowledge.[30] Affidavit of merits is not necessary where the default should be set aside as a matter of right.[31]

Consent to open a decree should be in writing.[32]

The merits of the action cannot be determined on the application.[33] Only the papers on which the motion to vacate is based can be considered.[34]

A motion to open a default is not a bar to a motion based on new facts subsequently discovered.[35]

35. Sutherland v. Mead, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 103.

Proceedings by petition under a statute have been regarded as part of the main action and reviewable with it,[36] but defects in an affidavit must be assailed below.[37]

§ 8. Collateral attack. What is collateral.—A motion in the trial court[38] or an action to set aside a judgment on the ground of fraud is not a collateral attack thereon,[39] though brought while an action on the judgment was pending;[40] but to question the validity of the judgment in proceedings to revive,[41] or to impeach it in defense to an attempt to enforce it,[42] or to set aside a fraudulent transfer by the debtor,[43] or a suit to obtain another and independent judgment which will destroy the effect of a former judgment,[44] is a collateral attack against the latter.

Grounds.—If regular on its face, a judgment cannot be attacked between the same parties,[45] but may be if void on its face,[46] as for defect,[47] or uncertainty of parties,[48] or want of sufficient service of process or publication in lieu thereof,[49] or want of record facts on which to support the judgment,[50] or if fraud entered into its procurement.[51] The fraud must be that of the adversary, not of the court or its officers.[52]

36. That the proceedings under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 5153, 5156, to vacate a judgment were docketed by the clerk as though a separate action will not make it such but they will be considered as though brought in the original action, and can be reviewed on appeal from the original judgment. 50. An amendment of the judgment roll by inserting additional findings after property had been sold under the original judgment is a jurisdictional defect. Muller v. Naumann, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 337.

Judgments cannot be collaterally attacked for mere irregularities of procedure which at most render them voidable,[52] or errors of law,[54] or because the jurisdictional facts are imperfectly set out,[55] nor can a recorded justice's judgment be attacked for insufficiency of the transcript.[56]

A default judgment is no more subject to collateral attack than any other judgment.[57]

A collateral attack on a foreign judgment does not deny full faith and credit.[58]

The rules against collateral attack apply to courts of limited jurisdiction if facts invoking it appear of record,[59] and to inferior jurisdictions which show requisite jurisdictional facts.[60]

Right to attack.—It is not necessary that objection should have been made to the service,[61] or relief sought against the judgment,[62] or a meritorious defense be shown.[63]

A third person summoned in supplementary proceedings may show that the judgment is void.[64]

Jurisdiction is presumed in favor of superior courts whether of limited[65] or general jurisdiction,[66] unless the record itself dispels it;[67] but not in favor of inferior[68] or special ones.[69] The same presumptions favor federal courts as are indulged in favor of the state courts of record.[70]

Thus, it will be presumed that proper service of process was had,[71] or that a person not a party to the record voluntarily appeared,[72] and that attorneys had authority to appear[73] and compromise,[74] that a continuance had been had where the record shows that the hearing was had at a later date than the day of return.[75] Even in favor of a justice's judgment, it is presumed that the excess above the jurisdictional amount was interest,[76] and that the server of process had authority.[77] This presumption prevails over an inference from the judge's minutes.[78] If the existence of jurisdictional facts was determined in the action, it cannot be raised collaterally.[79] It may be disproved where fraudulently made to appear[80] or if collateral to the merits and involving no retrial of them.[81] Recitals in a superior court's judgment may not be controverted as a general rule, nor those of inferior courts which involve a retrial of the merits.[82]

§ 9. Lien.—The judgment must be properly docketed and indexed.[83] The certificate of lien permitted to be filed in Connecticut need not accurately describe the debtor's precise interest in the realty sought to be affected,[84] and that it was insufficient as to some parcels of land will render it invalid as to other parcels.[85]

Statutes requiring the issuance of an execution to preserve the lien on realty apply to justices' judgments docketed in a court of record,[86] and the execution must have been delivered to the sheriff, the mere issuance being insufficient.[87] If not so issued, the lien is lost.[88]

The lien attaches immediately on loss of an exemption right.[89] The judgment lien relates back to the date of a statutory lien sued on.[90] Junior judgments are liens against the property in the hands of a subsequent purchaser of the debtor's equity of redemption from sale under a senior judgment.[91]

A leasehold estate is subject to a judgment lien,[92] as is a testamentary devise,[93] and fixed and definite rights under a testamentary trust.[94]

Priority of a judgment lien is not affected by action on the judgment and the recovery of a new judgment therein.[95]

The limitations on judgment lien begin to run from the time of the rendition of the final judgment on appeal,[96] or from the time of the loss of the homestead exemption.[97] The stay of execution on appeal will not suspend the operation of the statute,[96] but proceedings to enforce the lien against the realty of the deceased debtor, pending administration on his estate, arrests the statute.[99] After expiration of the statutory life, the lien cannot be revived,[1] nor will the issuance of an execution extend the life of the lien.[2]

The lien is suspended by an order of cancellation, though the order is appealed with a stay of proceedings.[3] The withdrawal of the certificate of a judgment from the clerk's office will not destroy the lien.[4] After the lapse of the statutory time for junior judgment lienors to redeem from a sale under a senior judgment, their liens are lost.[5]

A purchaser of the land may remove an invalid lien of a judgment as a cloud on his title,[6] and a correction nunc pro tunc so as to make it a lien constitutes a cloud on the title of an intervening purchaser.[7]

§ 10. Suspension and revival.—The statute of limitations of revivor of actions does not apply to proceedings to revive a judgment.[8] That suit on a judgment is barred by limitations will not affect the right to revive the judgment within the statutory time.[9] In Washington, the life of the judgment is coextensive with the life of the lien.[10] The limitations begin to run from the time of the rendition of the judgment.[11] An order directing the statement of account by the representatives of the deceased debtor before the judgment is dormant,[12] and the commencement of proceedings to revive on the last day tolls the statute,[13] as does a pending action on the judgment[14] or a stay of execution.[15] Where the issuance of an execution is essential to the life of the judgment,[16] if the execution is not properly docketed, the dormancy statute is not tolled.[17]

The judgment debtor is entitled to reasonable notice of the application to revive[19] or revivor may be had by agreement.[20]

Revival should be in the name of the legal holder,[21] and one who has no real interest cannot procure it to be done by the legal holder.[22] While all the judgment defendants should be made parties, yet the action will not abate because some of the parties could not be found so as to make service of the process on them.[23]

In proceedings brought by the representative of the judgment creditor and a subsequent assignee, a plea that the assignee acquired nothing by the assignment presents a good defense.[24]

Personal service of an order of revivor of a judgment, void for want of personal service on the defendant, will not validate it.[25]

§ 11. Assignment.—Generally, judgments are assignable,[26] but at common law the assignee takes only an equitable title.[27] A joint owner may assign his interest.[28] The giving of notice of the assignment to the debtor is not a condition precedent to the acquisition of a defeasible title or interest in the assignee,[29] nor will the failure to give notice render the assignment invalid as to creditors of the assignor.[30] As between the parties, an assignment before entry of the judgment is valid.[31] The assignment of a foreign judgment to a resident will not make it a domestic judgment in effect.[32]

The assignee acquires only the same[33] and no greater rights than the assignor had,[34] and subject to all the equities against him.[35]

The legal assignee is the proper party to sue on the judgment[36] or to revive it,[37] though he holds no formal assignment thereof,[38] and the assignor is not a necessary party.[39]

§ 12. Payment, discharge and satisfaction; interest.[40]—After expiration of the statutory life of a judgment, it is presumed to be satisfied.[41]

A payment[42] to a clerk of court, who has no right as such to receive money due on judgment, is not a satisfaction.[43] A contract may discharge it if so intended.[44] Only the matters adjudicated are satisfied.[45] Payment by one of the joint debtors operates as a satisfaction of the judgment irrespective of the intention of the parties to keep it alive.[46] A payment on a judgment should first be applied on the interest, and in case of surplus, then on the principal, and the balance bears interest from the day of such payment.[47]

If satisfaction is obtained by fraud it may be set aside,[48] or if after payment the creditor refuses to satisfy it of record, he may be held liable for the penalty.[49]

The exercise of an option to rescind a contract of sale operates to avoid a judgment for the purchase money.[50] Matters of discharge which have arisen since the rendition of the judgment may be availed of by motion,[51] and the objection that the proceedings were based on a supplemental petition is waived by pleading to the petition.[52] A motion as well as action will lie to satisfy or vacate of record a judgment satisfied by operation of law.[53]

Judgments draw interest from date of rendition.[54]

§ 13. Actions on judgment.—The law at the time of the recovery governs limitations[55] which begin to run at the time of rendition, and is not tolled by an appeal therefrom in the absence of a supersedeas bond,[56] and an action on a docketed justice's judgment is within the general statute limiting actions on judgments.[57] In pleading a judgment, portions thereof which have been vacated on appeal may properly be omitted.[58] The judgment need not be proved by record where the plaintiff pleads it and the defendant admits the recovery, but pleads merely the statute of limitations.[59]

JUDICIAL SALES.

The peculiarities of judicial sales in the various specific proceedings have a place elsewhere. This article deals rather with general rules.[60]

§ 1. Occasion for and nature of judicial sales.—A judicial sale is one which is made by a court of competent jurisdiction in a pending cause through its authorized agent.[61] Judicial sales may be ordered by a court of equity through its receiver without allowing redemption.[62] They may be private.[63] They are not considered voluntary sales by the owner and therefore are not champertous, though the interest conveyed is that of a disseisee.[64] The legislature may constitutionally provide by statute for the judicial sale of property in which there are contingent interests, the proceeds to be held subject to the same contingencies.[65]

§ 2. The order, writ or decree.—Where a judicial sale is ordered, it is, presumably, for cash,[66] and free from taxes.[67] An order of sale of land and deed thereunder must describe the land or they are void.[68]

§ 3. Levy, seizure or the like.—A provision of the statute that a sheriff shall levy upon personalty before realty is directory, merely, and does not render void a levy upon realty in which the sheriff does not return that he has searched without success for personalty.[69] The right of a sheriff to compel specific performance of a contract to buy land sold by him is conditional upon his having fully complied with the statutory requirements for a valid sale.[70]

§ 4. Notice and advertisement of sale.[71]—The notice of a sale need not state the amount due under the decree,[72] but should contain a description of the property to be sold so that bidders may be attracted.[73]

72. Foreclosure decree. Gallentine v. Cummings [Neb.] 96 N. W. 178.

§ 5. Sale and conduct of it. Who shall conduct sale.—The executor himself, if capable, is the proper person to make a statutory sale of decedent's real estate to pay his debts,[74] but a sheriff may conduct sales in part personally and in part by his deputy.[75]

Conditions precedent.—A commissioner to conduct judicial sale, if the statute require him to give a bond, must give a bond for a resale.[76] The immediate filing of an appraisal by the officer before making the sale has been held necessary to the validity of the sale.[77] In order that the sheriff may have authority to make a second appraisement of property to be sold, his return must show the statutory conditions to have been complied with.[78] Unsecured creditors of a corporation are not necessary parties to a proceeding to confirm judicial sale of its property.[79] Heirs are not entitled to notice of an administrator's petition to sell.[80] A court may reasonably require a deposit of fifty dollars from successful bidders at judicial sales.[81]

§ 6. Confirmation and setting aside sales.—The petition for cancellation of an order for a judicial sale is an equitable, not common law proceeding.[82] A judicial sale will not be set aside for inadequacy of price unless it be so gross as to shock the conscience.[83] But the court has a broad discretion, and may authorize a resale where the property will surely bring a larger sum.[84] The fact that the original suit was prosecuted against the defendant by the initials only of his Christian names with his surname is no objection to the confirmation of a judicial sale resulting from the suit.[85] If a court grants a writ of assistance to put a purchaser at a judicial sale into possession, such act is an implied confirmation of the sale.[86] If the purchaser at a judicial sale allows confirmation to be refused without opposition, he cannot raise the question by a motion for a new trial.[87]

§ 7. Completion of sale; deeds.—A purchaser at a judicial sale makes a contract with the court and can be relieved from it only by order of the court.[88] He will be relieved if the title is subject to reasonable doubt,[89] and his deposit will be returned,[90] but not because of litigation of which he knew at the time he bid.[91]

Where a purchaser at a judicial sale fails to complete his purchase, the court may, in its discretion, order an attachment for contempt to issue or direct a resale and hold the purchaser for any loss.[92]

§ 8. Title and rights under sales and under deed. A. Defects and collateral attack.—A judicial sale procured through fraud will be set aside,[93] but not against a bona fide purchaser for value.[94] Miscellaneous decisions concerning defects are collected in the note.[95]

Estoppel.—An estoppel to deny the validity of the sale arises when an heir receives his share of the proceeds of a void sale of land by the administrator,[96] and where a plaintiff having obtained a void judgment took the proceeds of a sale under his judgment.[97] It has also been held that a person buying at a judicial sale subject to taxes is estopped to deny the validity of the assessment of the taxes.[98] But one purchasing subject to a mortgage is not estopped to deny the validity of the mortgage.[99]

(§ 8) B. As against outstanding claims.—The rule of caveat emptor applies to all judicial sales.[1] An administrator's sale conveys no greater interest than deceased had.[2] Liens of those not parties to the proceeding are preserved,[3] but liens of parties are extinguished unless the decree of sale otherwise provides.[4]

(§ 8) C. Rights under sale.—Property sold at judicial sales becomes immediately at the risk of the purchaser.[5] When a judicial sale converts land into money for the payment of debts, the money belongs to the creditors in the order of their liens, and interest accruing before distribution goes with the principal upon which it accrues and does not go to subsequent unsatisfied lienholders.[6] A judicial sale of an interest in cutting stone carries also a right to reasonable use of the surface over the stone for the purpose of making the stone available.[7] To prove title under a sheriff's sale, not only the judgment, but also the record of the case resulting in the sheriff's sale, must be offered.[8] A purchaser of land, title to which runs through a sheriff's deed, is chargeable with notice of the court record in the case in which the judicial sale was ordered.[9] If by a decree of foreclosure one year is allowed by statute for redemption, a redemption of the mortgagor's interest by an attaching creditor does not extend the mortgagor's time for redemption beyond the first year.[10]

JURISDICTION.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.—Jurisdiction properly speaking is the power of a court to entertain and determine a cause, though the word is not always used in this narrow sense, courts frequently using it to express the idea more accurately expressed by the phrase "power to grant relief," as where a federal court dismissed a libel in admiralty for the reason that "jurisdiction" was not shown by it,[11] in that no maritime lien arose under the facts alleged, and it was held that this dismissal did not affect the power of the court to award costs against the libelant, the court having in fact "jurisdiction," though it had not power to grant relief in the particular case.[12] This title deals with the powers of courts to entertain causes of particular kinds, brought before them in particular manners, on particular grounds, but does not include a discussion of their powers to grant particular kinds of relief or the relief peculiar to certain courts.[13]

§ 2. Elements and constituents in general.—Jurisdiction does not depend upon the character of the decision or judgment, for when a suit is brought by a competent party, by legal process, in a court having power to entertain and determine causes of the kind in question, jurisdiction exists and no error of law committed in deciding the case will affect it.[14]

Primarily every court has the power to decide as to its own jurisdiction, and it is the province and duty of the court to determine whether jurisdictional facts exist, and act accordingly;[15] but a mere assertion of want of service on the defendant will not deprive the court of jurisdiction, and in such case the court has power to decide the question of fact upon proof sufficient for judicial cognizance.[16] which the court has jurisdiction,[19] and jurisdiction over the defendant,[20] by process and service,[21] by publication or otherwise, are necessary,[22] though process and service may be waived. Whence a general appearance, in person or by attorney, confers jurisdiction over the defendant;[23] but a waiver of issue and service of citation before commencement of proceedings will not.[24] A defective service may sometimes confer jurisdiction, but where there is no service, no jurisdiction is obtained.[25] Service obtained by a trick will not avail,[26] though an objection that service was so obtained may be waived.[27] Objection is not waived by failure to attack it in a court where one was decoyed by fraud,[28] nor can the culpable party object that he might if diligent have escaped being served.[29] A person of unsound mind cannot confer jurisdiction by consent.[30]

In Nebraska and Ohio, where a cross-bill is filed out of time, a summons to the plaintiff is necessary to give the court jurisdiction over the necessary parties to grant the affirmative relief prayed.[31]

No notice to the owner is necessary in condemnation proceedings at the suit of the state, where the question is on the appropriation merely as distinguished from the right to compensation, unless some constitutional or statutory provision requires it.[32]

Consent of parties cannot confer jurisdiction over the subject-matter,[33] nor over the defendant, where residence is a jurisdictional fact.[34] Nor can a want of such jurisdiction be waived,[35] and where service is necessary to give jurisdiction over the subject-matter, it cannot be waived.[36]

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by estoppel.[37]

If the court in which a case originates has no jurisdiction of its subject-matter, none can be gained by an appeal.[38]

§ 3. Legislative power respecting jurisdiction.—The legislature cannot confer legislative or executive power on a court nor create a court having such powers;[39] but the manner of invoking the jurisdiction of courts may be regulated.[40]

It is not however within the power of the legislature to curtail or enlarge the jurisdiction of a constitutional court unless that power is expressly conferred by the constitution.[41]

Conversely, the legislature may confer such jurisdiction on the courts as is within their general powers, or is permitted by the constitution,[42] and may deny them such as is not necessarily within the constitutional grant.[43] A statute extending the right of review to cases not theretofore reviewable cannot constitutionally apply to cases decided in the lower court before its enactment.[44]

§ 4. Federal jurisdiction. A. Generally.—The national courts, though not of inferior, are courts of limited jurisdiction. They are creatures of the statute and possess no powers except those conferred upon them either expressly or by necessary implication;[45] whence all doubtful questions should be resolved against the jurisdiction.[46]

The district courts have been, since the organization of the government, invested with the powers and original jurisdiction over captures and seizures as subjects of prize.[47] And the supreme court of the district of Columbia, sitting as a district court of the United States, has the same jurisdiction as a prize court as other district courts of the United States.[48]

The courts of the United States have no jurisdiction of suits against a state,[49] and a suit against the attorney general of a state to enjoin criminal prosecutions is a suit against the state forbidden by the federal constitution;[50] but a suit against individuals, for the purpose of preventing them as officers of a state from enforcing an unconstitutional enactment to the injury of the rights of the plaintiff, is not a suit against the state within the meaning of the eleventh amendment.[51]

The federal courts are prohibited by statute from staying proceedings of a state court or its officers,[52] except in bankruptcy cases,[53] but they may restrain collection of an unconscionable judgment rendered in a state court, because such an injunction acts in personam on the plaintiff and not on the court or its officer.[54]

The federal courts have no probate jurisdiction, as that term is generally employed,[55] and have no jurisdiction to exercise the function of parens patriae for the determination of the right to the custody of an insane person;[56] but where the state statutes provide for a contest of the validity of a will after probate, and the necessary diversity of citizenship exists and the amount in controversy is sufficient to meet the requirements of the judiciary act, the federal courts can take jurisdiction.[57] A federal court will not exercise its equitable jurisdiction in such a case, however, where an adequate remedy at law is provided by the state statute.[58] Especially where it was not availed of.[59]

When, by the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed or a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced and the right of action pursued in any court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties;[60] but a state statute cannot give the federal court jurisdiction of a suit in equity to quiet title to real estate in possession of defendant.[61]

A suit to collect additional duty for insufficient appraisal of imported goods, being penal in its nature, the district court and not the circuit court has jurisdiction.[62]

Statutes extending the jurisdiction of the court of claims will be strictly construed and the grants of jurisdiction therein contained must be shown clearly to cover the case.[63] Where there is no disputed question of fact, and the decision of the secretary of the interior turns exclusively upon the proper construction of an act of congress, his decision is not final, and if adverse to the claimant, the court of claims has jurisdiction.[64] The courts can exercise only such jurisdiction over the moral obligations of the government towards the Indians as congress may confer upon them;[65] but the court of claims has jurisdiction not only to pronounce judgment, but like other courts, to inquire into the question whether its judgment has been properly executed.[66]

The superior courts of general jurisdiction of the District of Columbia are courts of the United States as distinguished from mere territorial courts,[67] and the exercise of the powers and jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States by the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in special term constitutes that court to all intents and purposes a district court of the United States with the powers and jurisdictions of the district courts.[68]

(§ 4) B. As affected by diversity of citizenship.—The circuit courts of the United States have original jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature at law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000 and an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the state where it is brought and a citizen of another state.[69] It is the court's duty to see that this jurisdiction is not invoked collusively;[70] but the fact that a minority stockholder, suing to enjoin an alleged breach of corporate trust, is supported by other minority stockholders who are residents of the state, does not show collusion.[71]

Regard is always had to the real rather than to the nominal party,[72] and the court will not require the joinder of an unnecessary party where the effect of it would be to oust the court's jurisdiction;[73] but where it appears that indispensable parties have been omitted, they must be brought in, and if bringing them in deprives the court of jurisdiction, the plaintiff must abide the consequences.[74] Jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship having been once obtained, is not divested by the intervention of other parties who could not have maintained suit in the federal court.[75]

Jurisdiction is not conferred where citizens of the state where suit is brought are to be found on both sides of the controversy[76] and the arrangement of the parties in the bill for the purpose of showing jurisdiction is not controlling on the court, it being the court's duty, for jurisdictional purposes, to ascertain the necessary parties to the suit and align them upon the one side or the other according to their true interests and attitude, irrespective of their designations in the bill.[77] One of several trustees refusing to sue and made a defendant for that reason should not be regarded as a plaintiff, where so regarding him would oust the jurisdiction.[78]

Suit cannot be maintained in the Federal court by an assignee based on diversity of citizenship, unless his assignor might have maintained it;[79] but the assignee of choses in action, made by a corporation and payable to bearer, may sue upon them in the Federal court if diversity of citizenship exists, without reference to the citizenship of the assignor.[80]

National banks are citizens of the states in which they are located,[81] and a corporation incorporated in two or more states is a citizen of each;[82] but a foreign corporation, by complying with the state law authorizing it to do business in that state, which law provides that it shall thereupon become a domestic corporation, does not become a citizen of that state so as to affect jurisdiction.[83] Alien members of a limited partnership organized and doing business in New York may maintain suit in New York against citizens of New York.[84] Diversity of citizenship will not of itself confer jurisdiction of habeas corpus proceedings.[85]

(§ 4) C. As affected by the existence of a Federal question.[86]—The Federal courts have jurisdiction in cases where the United States are a party,[87] trade mark[88] and patent cases,[89] and suits at common law or in equity arising under the constitution or laws of the United States.[90] National banks, however, cannot invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts simply upon the ground that they were created by, and exercise their powers under, acts of congress,[91] though the Federal courts have jurisdiction of cases brought against a stockholder's agent winding up the affairs of a national bank, irrespective of citizenship.[92] The Federal courts have jurisdiction to enjoin unreasonable rates by interstate carriers under the Interstate Commerce Act, irrespective of the citizenship of the parties,[93] where jurisdiction

Miller [Mont.] 72 Pac. 423) and so is a suit for the price of a patent right, though the validity of the patent is called in question (Pratt v. Hawes [Wis.] 95 N. is invoked on the ground of impairment of obligation of contract or deprivation of privilege. It is not essential that there should really be a valid contract or that the impairment or deprivation complained of should really be effected through legislation or other action of the state; but it is sufficient if these grounds of suit are claimed in good faith and not frivolously;[94] but mere anticipated[95] or threatened action will not suffice.[96] The acts complained of, however, must be exercised by authority of the state, and mere trespasses by state agents beyond the authority of the statute under which they assume to act will not call in question the validity of the statute as tested by the constitution of the United States.[97] The power of the United States courts to intervene by habeas corpus in a case where a disregard of Federal law is charged is beyond doubt, but it is rarely exercised, as it involves a conflict of authority which is undesirable. The better practice is to allow the case to take its course through the state courts and appeal to the supreme court of the United States if necessary;[98] but where an officer of the army under orders of his superior does an act in violation of a void injunction granted by a state court, and is thrown into jail for contempt, he will not be left to his remedy by appeal, but in the exercise of the court's discretion will be discharged on habeas corpus.[99] The state courts have jurisdiction to try non-tribal Indians for crimes committed on reservations.[1] A proceeding in rem to enforce a lien for repairs on a boat navigating the Erie canal is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal courts.[2]

(§ 4) D. Averments and objections as to jurisdiction.—The facts essential to give a Federal court jurisdiction either on the ground of diversity of citizenship[3] or of the existence of a Federal question[4] must be distinctly alleged and not left to inference. Neither can the jurisdiction be invoked by anticipating a defense, such allegations being merely surplusage,[5] though one suing in his own right and as assignee of another may set up facts in his bill showing that his assignor had in fact no such interest as would make him a necessary party to the suit, and thereby deprive the Federal court of its jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship.[6] Where a stockholder sues to enforce rights properly asserted by the corporation, he must show that the corporation has refused to assert the right in order to make effective his own diversity of citizenship from that of the corporation and the defendant.[7] Though the question of jurisdiction will not be summarily disposed of on motion for a preliminary injunction, the burden is upon the complainant to satisfy the court that there is at least reasonable probability of ultimate success upon the question of jurisdiction as well as upon the merits.[8]

The question whether there is a real diversity of citizenship need be raised in no particular manner, except that notice must be given,[9] and the burden of disproving the diversity of citizenship alleged by plaintiff is on defendant.[10]

§ 5. Federal appellate jurisdiction. A. Appeals between Federal courts.— The fundamental question of jurisdiction, first, of the supreme court, and then of the court from which the record comes, presents itself on every writ of error and appeal in the supreme court, and must be answered by the court whether propounded by counsel or not.[11] The right of appeal from the district courts in matters of prize has always been direct to the supreme court.[12] Whence an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia in a case of prize lies not to the court of appeals of the District, but to the supreme court of the United States.[13] Where the jurisdiction of the circuit court rests solely on the ground that the cause of action arose under the constitution of the United States, an appeal lies directly to the supreme court,[14] and if an appeal is presented to the circuit court of appeals and then goes to decree, the supreme court will reverse it, not upon the merits, but by reason of want of jurisdiction in that court.[15] Where the order appealed from involves no question but that of jurisdiction, the appeal lies not to the circuit court of appeals but direct to the supreme court.[16] Where the circuit court decides the question of its jurisdiction and the alleged unconstitutionality of a state law in favor of the plaintiff, but decides against him on the merits, plaintiff cannot appeal directly to the supreme court for the purpose of a revision of the judgment on the merits.[17] The question whether a Federal court ought to take jurisdiction of a case after one has been begun in a state court involving the same subject-matter is not a question of Federal jurisdiction that may be certified by the circuit to the supreme court.[18] The supreme court has jurisdiction of a writ of error in contempt proceeding in the district court only when the jurisdiction of the district court is involved.[19] A judgment in a criminal case cannot be reviewed on writ of error from the Federal supreme court to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.[20] The supreme court may review on writ of error judgments of the district court of Porto Rico, in cases in which the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000.[21]

Where the bill is based not only on diversity of citizenship but also on the alleged unconstitutionality of the constitution, statutes or ordinances of a state, an appeal lies direct to the supreme court and the whole case is open for consideration,[22] and the circuit court cannot narrow the supreme court's authority by a certificate relating only to jurisdiction,[23] but where a question of jurisdiction alone is certified from the circuit or district court to the supreme court, the whole case is not open to the supreme court, but only the question of jurisdiction;[24] notwithstanding the circuit court, in dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction, also expressed its opinion on the merits.[25]

The supreme court has jurisdiction of an appeal from the circuit court of appeals in any case where one of the parties is a foreign state.[26] Where the jurisdiction of the Federal court is invoked on the ground of diverse citizenship alone, the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is final, and no appeal lies to the supreme court.[27] In patent cases,[28] and in cases where the jurisdiction of the circuit court is invoked on the ground of diversity of citizenship and a Federal question appears, and an appeal is taken to the circuit court of appeals, no appeal from that court will lie to the supreme court, irrespective of whether the question raised is one which could have been appealed to the supreme court in the first instance;[29] but in cases where the jurisdiction was not originally invoked entirely on the ground of diverse citizenship,[30] and in cases of infringement of trade marks used in foreign and Indian commerce the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is not final, and an appeal lies to the supreme court.[31] A suit does not arise under the constitution of the United States so as to give the supreme court jurisdiction of an appeal from the circuit court of appeals, unless it really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy as to the effect or construction of the constitution, upon the determination of which the result depends,[32] and which appears on the record by a statement in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading.[33]

The circuit court of appeals has no power to review questions of jurisdiction of the court below, but such question will be certified to the supreme court.[34] The circuit court of appeals has no authority to certify a "case" to the supreme court for decision, and has authority to certify a question of law only when the judges consider it doubtful.[35] In cases coming to the circuit court of appeals on writ of error, only questions of law are examined,[36] and its appellate jurisdiction is limited to the review of final decisions of the courts below.[37] An appeal in a case of claim against the United States which has been dismissed on the enactment of a statute withdrawing the jurisdiction is properly reinstated on the enactment of another law providing that pending cases shall not be affected by the prior act.[38]

(§ 5) B. Control over state courts.—The supreme court of the United States can review the decision of a state court as to the validity of a statute of the United States only when against the validity of the statute.[39] Where a claim of the benefit of the constitution of the United States is specially made in the trial court and is passed upon adversely to the claimant, a Federal question exists.[40] A claim that the Federal question presented to the state court was rightly decided there cannot deprive the supreme court of jurisdiction, since the power to decide whether the Federal issue was rightly disposed of involves the exercise of jurisdiction.[41]

When two propositions are presented in a record from a state court, one involving a Federal question, and the other not, the supreme court will not assume jurisdiction if the latter question is sufficient of itself, notwithstanding the Federal question, to sustain the judgment of the state court;[42] but if the judgment could not have been rendered without deciding the Federal question,[43] or if it is evident that the non-Federal question is used as the basis for a decision in fact denying the appellant a Federal right, the supreme court will take jurisdiction and decide the case,[44] though where an actual discrimination under a constitutional law is charged, such discrimination will not be presumed, but must be proved.[45] Where the case in a state court turns upon the construction rather than the validity of the statute of another state, full faith and credit thereto is not denied by such decision and a Federal question is not presented.[46]

A mere assertion of a Federal question will not give the supreme court jurisdiction to review the decision of a state court,[47] but it must appear on the record that some right, title, privilege or immunity was "specially set up or claimed" at the proper time in the proper way,[48] and a Federal question is not raised for review when the state supreme court refuses to pass upon it because not properly raised in the trial court.[49] An objection in the state court that an act of the state is unconstitutional and void relates only to the power of the state legislature under the state constitution.[50] Where the question asserted to be contained in the record is manifestly lacking all color of merit, the writ of error will be dismissed.[51]

50. Jacobi v. Ala, 187 U. S. 133, 47 Law.

The highest court of a state may administer the common law according to its understanding and interpretation of it, without raising any question of Federal law reviewable by the supreme court.[52]

Merely that an action is brought under a Federal statute does not give the right of appeal from a state court,[53] but where the contention is that title to ore taken from a mine depends upon which of two acts of congress the mine was patented under, and involves the effect of the want of parallelism of the end lines of the location, a Federal question is so presented that the supreme court has jurisdiction.[54]

Whether the denial by the courts of one state of the validity of a decree of divorce granted in another violates the full faith and credit clause of the constitution is a Federal question,[55] and where the complaint sets up a right to recover as the result of a judicial sale, made under decrees both of the courts of the United States and of a state other than that in which the suit is brought, a Federal question exists in the record.[56]

The supreme court has jurisdiction in a case involving a title to real estate founded on a Spanish grant claimed to have been perfected by the treaty between the United States and Spain;[57] but where the controversy in the state court does not involve a construction of the treaty with Mexico, but only the validity of certain land grants made prior to the treaty, no Federal question is involved.[58]

Upon writ of error to the supreme court of a state, the supreme court of the United States cannot review questions of the sufficiency of the evidence.[59]

§ 6. Territorial limitations.—In the absence of specific statutory enactment to that effect, it is undoubtedly the general rule of law that no court has authority or jurisdiction beyond the territorial limits of the district for which it has been established, notwithstanding that it may be only one of numerous similar courts of the same sovereignty.[60] Whence no court can by its writ impose a duty upon an officer outside its territorial limits,[61] and service of process of the Federal court outside the district for which it is holden is a nullity.[62] Service of process of a state court on a defendant beyond the boundaries of the state does not authorize a personal judgment against him.[63] The recorder's courts of the city of New Or-

Fleming, 191 U. S. 126. A decision of a state court rejecting the state's claim to lands founded on its sovereignty over the beds of lakes within its borders does not involve a federal question, since such sovereignty and ownership do not flow from the constitution or any treaty or statute of the United States but from the principles of the common law. leans, however, may send their process to and compel the attendance of witnesses from all parts of the city.[64]

§ 7. Limitations resting in situs of subject-matter or status of litigants.—Jurisdiction over persons and property in any state is confined to the persons and property within the territorial bounds of the state.[65] A cause of action between two foreign corporations will be presumed to have arisen without the jurisdiction in the absence of a showing to the contrary.[66] Equal protection of the laws entitles a nonresident to sue in any case where a resident might,[67] and a foreign corporation may if authorized.[68] In New York, the state courts take cognizance of actions by Seneca Indians.[69] In the absence of voluntary appearance or service within the state, no jurisdiction exists over nonresidents in respect to property without the state.[70] Jurisdiction of persons may bring in personal property which they hold, though rights therein owe their existence to laws of a foreign state and the property may be therein.[71] It cannot rest solely on residence of one defendant who is merely nominal.[72]

Property within a state belonging to a nonresident is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of that state and may be applied by proper proceedings to pay debts owing by its owner, though he be not served within the state,[73] but the inquiry in such a case can be carried only to the extent necessary to control the disposition of the property.[74]

There is no doubt that courts have jurisdiction of actions between nonresidents for torts committed without their territorial jurisdictions;[75] but such jurisdiction will be declined in New York in the absence of special reasons for entertaining it.[76] The rights arising from injury to a passenger by a carrier on the high seas on board a ship owned in New Jersey are determinable by the laws of New Jersey, notwithstanding she was registered in the port of New York.[77] Indebtedness may be enforced where the debtor is domiciled[78] on a liability derived from foreign laws,[79] or suit may be founded on a note brought into the state.[80]

Where the property sought to be subjected to the plaintiff's claim is a debt owing to the defendant by a third person, jurisdiction of it must be obtained by service on the third person, and when service is so made the question whether the debt itself was within the jurisdiction arises. In West Virginia, it is said that a debt owing by a nonresident to a nonresident cannot be impounded by garnishment unless payment thereof is enforceable at some particular place within the state.[81] Suit will not lie against a nonresident, though supported by garnishment against a resident of the state, it not appearing but that the garnishee's debt is payable at the residence of the nonresident creditor;[82] especially not when it does appear that the debt is a foreign judgment.[83] Payment of a judgment in garnishment of a foreign debt may, however, be pleaded as a defense by the debtor.[84]

Nonresidence of both parties to a local cause of action is a common statutory ground of jurisdiction;[85] but when the venue lies with another court, the suit will be refused.[86] An objection on that ground may be waived,[87] though if specified in the grant of jurisdiction, residence may go to jurisdiction as well as to venue.[88] Corporations are "resident" in the place of domicile or general office,[89] but by doing business a foreign corporation becomes amenable to suits in personam.[90]

In Kentucky a suit to quiet title as against mortgages executed by the plaintiff is transitory and must be brought in the county of defendant's residence and not where the land lies. Shouse v. Taylor, 24 Ky. L. R. 1842, 72 S. W. 324.

88. The county court of New York can take jurisdiction of an action to recover money only, only when the defendant is a resident of the county [Const. art. 6, § 14]. Perlman v. Gunn, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 166.

89. A railway company that only maintains a station and depot in a city is not a resident of such city so as to bring it within the exclusive jurisdiction of the city court thereof. Robinson v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. [Kan.] 72 Pac. 854.

90. The courts of Texas have jurisdiction of a suit by a non-resident against a foreign corporation doing business in the state though the proceeding is not in rem. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 433.

91. Service on state insurance commissioner. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 Law. Ed. 987. Service on a foreign executor's local agent appointed under the statute confers jurisdiction on the executor [Gen. Laws 1896, c. 212, § 45]. Gorman v. Stillman, 25 R. I. 55. Service on a resident agent of a foreign corporation is effective. Barnes v. Western Union Tel. Co., 120 Fed. 550.

and service on the agent of a foreign corporation appointed under the state law gives jurisdiction to the Federal court of a suit by a citizen of the state where it is brought on a transitory cause of action arising elsewhere;[92] but service on an agent not so appointed will not be effective unless the defendant is actually doing business within the state.[93]

Where a defendant objects to the jurisdiction on the ground of nonresidence, the question of residence is one of fact.[94]

Actions concerning real estate are generally triable where the land lies,[95] but where an action is brought to recover realty and for the value of timber cut therefrom and defendant disclaims title and possession, only a personal action is left in which defendant may object to the jurisdiction of his person for nonresidence.[96]

A suit brought in the Federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship if objected to can be maintained only in the district of the residence of one of the parties,[97] and the bankruptcy act requires that persons adjudged bankrupts must have resided six months in the district where the petition is filed;[98] but a defendant may waive his right to be sued in the district of his residence, by submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the court,[99] especially in patent cases, where the Federal courts have full jurisdiction.[1] A surety company signing contractors' bonds given under the Federal statutes may be sued in any district in which it gives bonds.[2]

Courts of equity have power to act in personam upon persons within their jurisdictions by restraining them from using the courts of another state[3] or another county of the same state to accomplish an inequitable purpose,[4] and to compel them to convey lands lying in another state.[5] A court has jurisdiction to enjoin another from diverting water from a stream by means of a ditch in an adjoining state and carrying it to his lands in the forum state, to the injury of other lands in the forum state.[6] In a suit for specific performance, the court may compel a resident grantee to convey, he having had notice, though the court has no jurisdiction over the nonresident vendor.[7] The Federal court of one district can enjoin the marshal of another district from enforcing a void judgment rendered in the latter district by seizure of property in the former,[8] and the district court of one county may restrain its sheriff from selling property in that county seized by virtue of an execution in another county,[9] especially if the ground alleged is the invalidity of the judgment.[10]

10. Noerdlinger v. Huff, 31 Wash. 360, 72 Pac. 73.

A nonresident cannot maintain suit for divorce,[11] and if residence in the county is jurisdictional it cannot be waived.[12]

Only the probate court of the county of his residence can appoint an administrator or executor or probate the will, where the decedent was a resident of the state;[13] but the court of any county in which deceased left property can appoint an administrator for the estate of a nonresident,[14] and in Utah, an administrator may be appointed for the estate of a nonresident decedent, though he left no property in the state.[15] Unless the statutes so require, and except in the case of nonresident decedents, the possession of an estate by the decedent is not a prerequisite to the jurisdiction for the appointment of an administrator;[16] but the municipal court of the city of Providence, R. I., has jurisdiction to appoint an administrator only when the deceased left assets within the city.[17]

The court of their domicile has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for minors, though they may not be within the state at the time, as against the court of a state in which they are sojourning merely,[18] and the court of a county in which an injured waif of unknown parentage is found has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for him.[19]

The court has jurisdiction of adoption proceedings in a case of a child born and resident in the state, though her father was a citizen of and resided in a foreign country.[20, 21]

§ 8. Limitations resting in amount or value in controversy.—To give the circuit court of the United States jurisdiction of a case on account of the existence of a Federal question or diversity of citizenship, the matter in dispute must exceed $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs.[22] Similiar provisions are to be found in the constitutions and statutes of the states defining the jurisdiction of their several courts.[23] The amount is not controlling if other jurisdictional facts or conditions concur to confer or divest jurisdiction.[24] If equity is involved, a justice of the peace loses jurisdiction whatever the amount.[25] Under such provisions it is held that the amount the plaintiff in good faith claims, irrespective of the amount of recovery,[26] and irrespective of amendments,[27] set-offs and counterclaims,[28] furnishes the test of jurisdiction; but the amount demanded by plaintiff will not be considered the amount in controversy, where it is shown by other averments in the declaration to be overstated.[29] Where the jurisdiction depends upon a particular sum, suits in which the damages cannot be calculated in money are not within it.[30] In Vermont, jurisdiction in replevin for beasts distrained, as between justice and county courts, depends upon the actual value of the beasts and not on the value as stated in the writ.[31]

The amount in controversy or matter in dispute as testing the jurisdiction of a court is the value of that which the complainant claims to recover or the value of that which the defendant will lose.[32] The value of the right affected, not merely the damage to it is considered by federal courts.[33] Applications of this test to particular actions are collected in the note.[34]

Herring v. Chesapeake & W. R. Co. [Va.] 45 S. E. 322. A note for $50 and attorney's fees at five per cent per month is beyond the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in Missouri, where the jurisdiction is limited to $50. Bay v. Trusdell, 92 Mo. App. 377.

24. The circuit court in Florida has jurisdiction of the statutory action to recover four times the amount of fees unjustly claimed by an officer in an action in that court though the amount involved is less than $100. State v. Reeves [Fla.] 32 So. 814.

25. Note for small amount but charging married woman's separate estate. Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352.

27. Where the statute provides that appellate jurisdiction shall exist only when the "original amount in controversy" is over $200, an amendment of the complaint before trial reducing the amount claimed below $200 will not deprive defendant of his right to appeal. Taylor v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co., 32 Wash. 450, 73 Pac. 499.

28. Payment of part of a claim after suit brought will not oust the jurisdiction though the amount in controversy is reduced thereby to less than the original jurisdiction of the court. Jackson v. Corley, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 417. Where the complaint demands an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, a plea of payment of part of it, leaving an amount unpaid less than jurisdictional amount, will not oust the jurisdiction. Prince v. Takash, 75 Conn. 616. Where suit is brought in the county court of New York on a claim within its jurisdiction, such jurisdiction is not lost by counterclaim of an amount beyond the jurisdiction. Howard Iron Works v. Buffalo El. Co., 176 N. Y. 1. Though it is otherwise as to the municipal court of Stillwater, Minnesota, by statute. Jourdain v. Luchsinger [Minn.] 97 N. W. 740.

29. U. S v. Sheridan, 119 Fed. 236. Where a note is for an amount great enough to give the superior court jurisdiction, but the sum actually due thereon is alleged to be less than the jurisdictional amount, the court has no jurisdiction. Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352.

33. Amelia Mill. Co. v. Tenn. C., I. & R. Co., 123 Fed. 811.

34. Taxes and licenses: In a suit by a taxpayer to enjoin the issue of municipal bonds, it is the amount of the bonds and not the amount of tax which might be illegally imposed on complainant thereby. Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co., 119 Fed. 315. In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a license tax it is not alone the amount of the tax but the value of complainant's right to conduct his business without being subject to the tax. Hutchinson v. Beckham [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 399. In a suit to set aside special tax bills it includes the bills against lots of which the plaintiff is the equitable owner as well as those which he owns in fee. Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 117 Fed. 925.

When a lien on land is sought to be enforced or avoided it is the amount of the lien and not the value of the land. Suit to enforce judgment lien. Matteson v. Matteson [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1079. Suit to set aside judgments. McDaniel v. Traylor, 123 Fed. 338. In a suit to enjoin a permanent injury to land, it is the value of the land and not the amount of the injury (In re Turner, 119 Fed. 231), and in a suit to recover land, it is its value to defendant as it is being used (King v. So. R. Co., 119 Fed. 1016).

Where a contract by a city to furnish electric power to a railway company is impaired, it is not the amount to be paid under the contract but the value of complainant's rights thereunder (Riverside & A. R. Co. v. Riverside, 118 Fed. 736), and in a suit to enjoin the violation of contract not to engage in certain business it is the value of the object to be gained by the suit and not the amount of complainant's damages arising

Several distinct demands by different persons cannot be joined to make up the jurisdictional amount,[35] but the assets of an insolvent corporation proceeded against and the joint claims of the creditors joining in the bill furnish the measure of the amount involved, regardless of whether any individual creditor is interested to the prescribed amount.[36]

The jurisdictional amount must be alleged to be involved either directly or by necessary inference.[37] It is immaterial that there is no express allegation that plaintiff's right is worth that much,[38] and where no specific amount is claimed, an amendment as to that matter may be allowed after the evidence is in.[39] Where several paragraphs of a complaint counting on the same cause of action each claim the same amount, that amount and not the sum of the several amounts claimed is the amount in controversy, and it is not augmented by the general prayer for other and further relief.[40] Where it appears from the complaint that the claim is beyond the court's jurisdiction and no part of it is waived, the demand for judgment for an amount within the jurisdiction will not confer it.[41] A demurrer is properly sustained to a petition under which the damages recoverable are less than the court's jurisdiction,[42] and where a demurrer is sustained to so much of a complaint that the amount remaining in controversy is less than the jurisdictional amount, the action is properly dismissed.[43] Where suit is brought in good faith for a sum large enough to confer jurisdiction, a subsequent striking out of part of the items, leaving a sum less than the court's jurisdiction, will not oust it.[44]

§ 9. Limitations resting in character of subject-matter or object of action.[45] —Justices of the peace,[46] county,[47] municipal[48] and other inferior courts,[49] are from the violation (American Fisheries Co. v. Lennen, 118 Fed. 869).

Where an injunction is sought to restrain the prosecution of a foreign attachment to apply a laborer's wages to the payment of a debt, the amount of wages garnished and not the amount of the debt, determines whether the court has jurisdiction. Marsarum v. Moon, 63 N. J. Eq. 586. In a suit by a taxpayer to enjoin the illegal use of a school building the value of the building and not the value of complainant's interest therein furnishes the test. Sugar v. Monroe, 108 La. 677, 59 L. R. A. 723.

In a suit against an officer and his bondsmen to recover fees unlawfully collected by him the amount of fees and not the penalty of the bond is the amount in controversy. McCall v. Zachary, 131 N. C. 466.

35. Consolidation of demands to confer jurisdiction [Conn. Gen. St. 1902, §§ 557, 558]. Brennan v. Berlin Iron Bridge Co., 75 Conn. 393. Several labor claimants cannot combine to make jurisdictional amount. Winrod v. Wolters [Cal.] 74 Pac. 1037. Actions on several insurance policies consolidated under statute. 37. A two story brick school house will be presumed to be worth more than $50, the amount necessary to give the chancery court jurisdiction. Quairoli v. Italian Ben. Soc., 64 N. J. Eq. 205. An allegation that the water right defendant interferes with is worth $2,000 and a claim for damages for prior division amounting to $2,500 sufficiently show that upwards of $2,000 is involved. 48. An action upon open account to recover a sum of money alleged to be due for a section in a city cemetery is not a suit in-generally denied jurisdiction of actions involving the title to land, though where the question of title arises only collaterally, jurisdiction is not ousted.[50] Neither have such courts any equitable jurisdiction.[51]

An action on a married woman's note binding her separate estate is equitable in its nature though for an amount within the ordinary jurisdiction of a justice.[52] An action will lie in the supreme court of New York to enforce a judgment of the Seneca Indians' peacemaker's court relating to lands.[53]

Actions ex delicto[54] are frequently withdrawn by statute from the jurisdiction of justices' and like courts, but damages for nondelivery under a contract sounds as a cause arising out of contract.[55]

Though the Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of contests over the validity of patents,[56] the jurisdiction of a state court in a case properly within its jurisdiction is not ousted merely because the validity of a patent is necessary to be decided therein.[57] The state courts have no jurisdiction to try and determine the validity of acts or decisions of the officers of the land department of the general government,[58] but after the title has passed from the government, the state courts may adjudicate the claims of rival claimants.[59] The United States court in the Indian Territory has jurisdiction of an action to foreclose a mortgage of lands executed by an Indian to a citizen of the United States,[60] and of cases brought by a tribe against persons holding lands as claimants to membership in the tribe, notwithstanding such claim has been decided adversely.[61]

§ 10. Limitations resting in character or capacity of parties litigant.—A sovereign state cannot be sued in its own courts[62] or in any other without its own consent,[63] but a justice has jurisdiction of a suit against a county in West Virginia.[64] A state court has no jurisdiction to inquire upon habeas corpus into the validity of enlistments into the naval or military service of the United States.[65] An action against the United States for injuries by a passenger in an elevator of a government building sounds in tort and cannot be maintained in any court.[66]

§ 11. Original jurisdiction. A. Exclusive, concurrent and conflicting.[67]—Jurisdiction will be declined when the amount is within the cognizance of a lower court and no other features of the proceeding invoke it.[68] In states which have probate courts, their jurisdiction over administration proceedings and other proceedings committed to them is generally exclusive.[69] Indiana has no separate probate court, the circuit courts of that state having exclusive jurisdiction of all matters relating to the settlement of decedent's estates.[70]

An adoption of the mode of procedure appropriate to a matter triable in a different court does not withdraw jurisdiction.[71]

The ordinary courts in Colorado are excluded from jurisdiction to determine which faction of a political party is entitled to representation within the party councils.[72]

Cases in which there are two or more courts to which resort may be had for relief are numerous,[73] e. g., between equity and courts of probate,[74] it being a familiar rule that when there exist two tribunals possessing concurrent and complete jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the jurisdiction becomes exclusive in the one before which proceedings are first instituted,[75] and that such court will be permitted to pursue its jurisdiction to the end to the exclusion of all others, and will not permit its jurisdiction to be impaired or perverted by a resort to some other tribunal;[76] on the same principle, where two suits are brought in the same court to accomplish the same result, the suit first instituted is entitled to priority.[77]

Where an estate is in process of administration in the probate court, the district court is not authorized to oust the jurisdiction of the probate court by entertaining a suit against the administrator on a

It is a settled rule that when a state court and a Federal court may each take jurisdiction of a matter, the tribunal whose jurisdiction first attaches holds it to the exclusion of the other, until its duty is fully performed, and the jurisdiction involved is exhausted.[78] While the rule is not limited to cases where property has actually been seized under judicial process before a second suit is instituted in another court, it is limited to actions which deal either actually or potentially with specific property or objects, and does not apply to actions strictly in personam.[79] Neither does it apply to actions brought to enforce an entirely distinct claim or right.[80] Where administration has been completed and the property has passed out of control of the probate court and beyond its jurisdiction, the Federal courts have power to subject the property in the hands of a distributee to the debts of the decedent.[81]

When a court once gets jurisdiction of a case, it retains it and proceeds to pass upon and determine all matters incident thereto,[82] especially if it be a court of

Where a claim for a personal injury against a railroad company was sued in the state court and presented to the receiver of the federal court, and on reference to the master rejected the same day that judgment for the plaintiff was rendered in the state court, it was held that the jurisdiction being concurrent, the federal court was bound by its own judgment, and a petition in intervention based on the judgment in the state court must be dismissed. Goodwin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 403. After suit has been brought on an insurance policy in a state court, the federal court has no jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship to entertain a suit to cancel the policy, on grounds that may be set up as a defense in the state court. equity, as it is well settled that once a court of equity has obtained jurisdiction upon any equitable ground, it will retain it to do complete justice between the parties, although in so doing it will become necessary to establish purely legal rights or to grant legal remedies.[83] Where jurisdiction attaches by virtue of averments made in good faith and prayer for relief founded thereon, it is not ousted by the fact that at the trial it appears that plaintiff is not entitled to the relief prayed for, but in such case the court will grant such relief as is within the issues, though not within its jurisdiction if prayed alone.[84]

No court has jurisdiction to enjoin the violation of an executory order of another court.[85] Neither can one court set aside, modify,[86] control,[87] or enjoin the decree of another of concurrent jurisdiction,[88] though it may restrain the enforcement of such decree by acting in personam on the parties, and may have to adjudge the decree invalid to justify such procedure,[89] and where a Federal court has obtained jurisdiction, it may protect that jurisdiction by injunction against bringing any other action in any other court involving the same subject-matter.[90]

(§ 11) B. Ancillary or assistant.—Since the Federal courts have jurisdiction of all suits and proceedings ancillary or assistant to suits of which it has jurisdiction, without regard to the tests of jurisdiction applied to original or independent suits,[91] receivers appointed by such courts may maintain suits therein to collect assets, or protect assets in their possession, regardless of either the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy;[92] but the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction over a controversy between trustees and an adverse claimant of property of the bankrupt.[93] A district court of one district has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction,[94] or an order to examine persons residing in the district in aid of bankruptcy proceedings in another state.[95] The court in which an indictment is pending has jurisdiction to forfeit a recognizance founded thereon in which a nonresident is surety.[96] Except in a few cases provided for by law, the circuit courts of the United States can issue writs of mandamus in aid of an existing jurisdiction only, and when such writs are issued by any circuit court to enforce its own judgment, the jurisdiction cannot be enlarged to cover the judgments of other courts.[97] An order to examine books, papers, etc., to enable plaintiff to frame his complaint, will not be granted in New York when there is no showing that the action to which it is ancillary can be brought in New York.[98]

(§ 11) C. Inferior and limited.—Statutes conferring jurisdiction upon inferior courts are strictly construed and will not by construction be aided or extended by inference or implication beyond their express terms.[99] Jurisdiction equal to a circuit court carries an equal equitable jurisdiction.[1] Cases applying the statutes are collected in the note.[2] All facts necessary to give such courts jurisdiction must affirmatively appear of record and no presumptions are indulged in their favor.[3] The probate courts,[4] and those county courts which exist in many states between the magistrates' or justices' courts and the courts of general jurisdiction often possess a civil jurisdiction subject to specified limits, usually excluding trial of title to land.[5] Where the probate courts have superior jurisdiction over matters within their cognizance, they exercise equitable powers so far as to make their jurisdiction efficient.[6] In other states, such courts possess only those powers conferred expressly or by implication, by constitution or statute,[7] but not otherwise,[8] among which equity powers are not enumerated.[9]

Laws conferring on superior and inferior courts a particular jurisdiction are construed as adopting these limitations.[10]

(§ 11) D. Original jurisdiction of courts of last resort.—The cases are few and exceptional in which the appellate courts will take original jurisdiction at the suit of a private person,[11] and in Colorado, the jurisdiction is exercised with great reluctance, even when the attorney general petitions, the proper practice in both cases being to begin proceedings in the district court.[12] In Nebraska, it is held that the designation in the constitution of cases in which the supreme court has original jurisdiction is a prohibition of it in other cases,[13] and the supreme court of Washington for similar reasons declines original jurisdiction of disbarment proceedings.[14] The supreme court of Texas can issue its writ of mandamus only against state officers.[15] In Colorado where the time before election is insufficient to give the cause the consideration it demands, original jurisdiction in an election case will be declined.[16]

The highest courts of the several states and lesser courts which are of last resort as to inferior jurisdictions[17] have general supervision and control of proceedings in the lower courts,[18] and in the exercise of that supervision have jurisdiction to issue the several original writs known to the common law, among them being prohibition,[19] mandamus,[20] and certiorari,[21] whenever necessary to restrain or compel action by the inferior tribunals within their jurisdictional bounds.

§ 12. Appellate jurisdiction.[22]—Generally speaking, appellate courts derive their jurisdiction over any case from the law, and the parties cannot confer it by consent.[23] On the expiration of courts of appeals by limitations, the supreme court will be reinvested ipso facto with the jurisdiction it previously possessed.[24] Where an action is appealable only on the ground of the validity of a statute, the jurisdiction of the court extends only as far as the validity of the statute and that part of the judgment necessarily dependent thereon is concerned.[25] The supreme court cannot take jurisdiction by transfer from the intermediate court if it could not do so direct.[26] The right of appeal is frequently limited to cases involving a certain amount[27] or presenting certain questions, such as the constitutionality of a statute or ordinance,[28] or the construction thereof,[29] or the title to real estate.[30]

Illinois Supreme Court, $1,000. Garden City Sand Co. v. American Refuse Crematory Co., 205 Ill. 42; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Cossar, 203 Ill. 608.

Indiana Supreme Court $6,000. Smith v. American Crystal Monument Co., 160 Ind. 141.

Kentucky. An allowance to a creditor of less than $200 is not appealable though the judgment settles an estate of over $200. Cox v. Higginbotham's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1057, 76 S. W. 1079.

Louisiana $2,000. Succession of Bothick, 110 La. 109; Tebault v. New Orleans, 108 La. 686. When the property involved in succession proceedings amounts to $2,000 the Supreme Court of Louisiana has jurisdiction. Succession of Bothick, 110 La. 109.

Virginia. The Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia has jurisdiction of an appeal by executors from a decree requiring them to pay out legacies amounting to more than $500 though no legacy amounts to so much. Ginter's Ex'rs v. Shelton [Va.] 45 S. E. 892. The provision of the constitution of Virginia that the supreme court of appeals shall not have jurisdiction except in certain cases where the matter in controversy is of less value than $300 does not proprio vigore confer that jurisdiction. Flanary v. Kane [Va.] 46 S. E. 312.

28. The Supreme Court of Colorado has jurisdiction of cases involving any provision of the state or federal constitution. Evidence showing fraudulent substitution of bill in legislature raises no question. Holmberg v. News-Times Pub. Co. [Colo.] 73 Pac. 865. Where a tax is legal or constitutional, and the assessment of it only is attacked, no constitutional question is presented and the Louisiana Supreme Court will have no jurisdiction unless the constitutional amount, $2,000 is involved. Tebault v. New Orleans, 108 La. 686. The Supreme Court of Louisiana has no jurisdiction of an appeal where the only question is the right of relator to pay $1 poll tax in a particular manner. State v. Sanders [La.] 35 So. 509.

29. The court of appeals of Kentucky has jurisdiction of an appeal from an order determining the right to recover interest though it would have none of the appeal from the judgment finding the amount due for want of the jurisdictional amount. Whitehead v. Brothers' Lodge, 24 Ky. L. R. 1633, 71 S. W. 933.

30. The Supreme Court of Colorado has no jurisdiction on appeal from a judgment of a county court in forcible entry and detainer for less than $2,500. Brennan Mercantile Co. v. Vickers [Colo.] 73 Pac. 45. Action for cutting timber, denial of title. Roach v. Moss Tie Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1222, 71 S. W. 2. Trespass quare clausum, plea liberum tenementum. Patterson v. Moss Tie Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 1571, 71 S. W. 930. In Kentucky where a lien is asserted on land the title is brought in controversy and the court of appeals has jurisdiction regardless of the amount involved. Bybee's Ex'r v. Poynter [Ky.] 77 S. W. 698. Mechanic's lien. Fowler v. Pompelly, 25 Ky. L. R. 615, 76 S. W. 173.

Jurisdiction as between courts of intermediate and last resort depends on statutory limitations resting in amount or value,[31] freehold, franchise, revenue or public questions.[32] The existence of such a controversy as will deprive the intermediate court of jurisdiction must appear upon the record to have been properly raised and decided in the court below, and where it does not so appear, the supreme court will not have nor the appellate court lack jurisdiction.[33]

The court of appeals of Colorado being created by statute has only such jurisdiction as is given it by the statute creating it.[34] Appeals lie to it from a final judgment of a court of record in a civil case, regardless of the amount of the judgment.[35] It has jurisdiction of appeals in forcible entry and detainer cases,[36]

31. In Colorado. An appeal from an order for the payment of $2,500 alimony lies not to the supreme court, but, if at all, to the court of appeals. Mitchell v. Mitchell [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1054.

Indiana. The supreme court has jurisdiction of appeals from the appellate court in certain cases only when the amount in controversy exceeds $6,000. (Applies only to money judgments—affidavits not receivable to show value of property in controversy). Smith v. American Crystal Monument Co., 160 Ind. 141; Burke v. Barrett [Ind.] 68 N. E. 896. As determining the jurisdiction of the Missouri court of appeals, the amount in dispute is the amount of a judgment rendered for plaintiff in an action for wrongful death, though the statute provides a greater recovery in the nature of stipulated damages. Marsh v. Kan. City So. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 284.

In Texas, interest allowed by the judgment on the amount recovered is considered as a part of the amount in controversy. W. U. Tel. Co. v. Noland [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1031.

No appeal lies in Indiana to the supreme or appellate court in any civil case within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Everette Piano Co. v. Bash [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 329.

32. Appeals lie direct to the Supreme Court of Illinois from the circuit in cases where a freehold, franchise, statute, or question of revenue is involved, or the state is interested. Wood v. Chicago, 205 Ill. 700. Question of freehold. Seidschlag v. Antioch, 198 Ill. 413; Harlem v. Suburban R. Co., 198 Ill. 337; Perry v. Bogarth, 198 Ill. 328; Helton v. Elledge, 199 Ill. 95; Kesner v. Miesch, 204 Ill. 320; Williams v. Spitzer, 203 Ill. 505; Biggins v. Lambert, 204 Ill. 142. Franchise. People v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 203 Ill. 551. Constitutionality of statute. Union Drainage Com'rs v. Commissioners of Highways, 199 Ill. 80; Foote v. Lake County, 198 Ill. 638; Sauter v. Anderson, 199 Ill. 319. Revenue. People v. Hendee, 199 Ill. 55; Reed v. Chatsworth, 201 Ill. 480; People v. Helt, 203 Ill. 111; Wilson v. Marion County, 205 Ill. 580. State interested. People v. Hendee, 199 Ill. 55. Writ of error to review an order dismissing a petition for mandamus to the state's attorney to compel him to bring quo warranto to try title to an office. People v. Deneen, 201 Ill. 452. Cases under the levee act. In re McCaleb, 105 Ill. App. 28.

An appeal lies direct to the Supreme Court in Indiana when a franchise (Ind. R. Co. v. Hoffman [Ind.] 69 N. E. 399) or the construction of a statute (State v. Wright, 159 Ind. 422; State v. Bagby, 29 Ind. App. 554) is involved, regardless of the amount in controversy. The supreme court of Missouri has jurisdiction of appeals in cases involving the title to real estate, but neither a suit to declare and enforce a lien on land (Klingelhoefer v. Smith, 171 Mo. 455) though the question of ownership was collaterally in issue (Bruner Granitoid Co. v. Klein, 170 Mo. 225) nor a proceeding to set aside a special tax bill as a cloud on title (Smith v. Westport [Mo.] 74 S. W. 610) nor a suit for the obstruction of a road reserved in a deed to railroad company (Porter v. Kan. City & N. C. R. Co. [Mo.] 74 S. W. 992) involve title, and where the allegations on which a prayer for a conveyance is based are not denied there is no question of title. Krepp v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 99 Mo. App. 24. But a decree confirming a party's title to land and charging it with a resulting trust (Hewitt v. Price [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 884) a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance (Balz v. Nelson, 171 Mo. 682; Reed v. Colp [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 422) involve title and surplus money arising from a foreclosure sale is treated as realty and a question as to its disposal involves title (Eubank v. Finnell [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 354). Dismissal of case for want of prosecution does not raise question. Harding v. Carthage, 171 Mo. 442. A decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri upon a constitutional question in a prior case does not remove such question from a subsequent case. Brown v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Mo.] 74 S. W. 973; State v. Smith [Mo.] 75 S. W. 625. An error in procedure in regard to costs does not involve the denial of due process of law so as to raise a constitutional question. Woody v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo.] 73 S. W. 475.

33. Validity or constitutionality of statute. Morgan Park v. Knopf, 199 Ill. 444; Kreyling v. O'Reilly, 97 Mo. App. 384; State v. Smith, 176 Mo. 44; Canton v. McDaniel, 91 Mo. App. 626; Dawson v. Waldheim, 91 Mo. App. 117. Taxing attorney's fee under unconstitutional statute. Brown v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Mo.] 74 S. W. 973. Indictment quashed for failure to charge an offense under statute involved. State v. Wright, 159 Ind. 422; State v. Barnett, 159 Ind. 432. Prosecution for violation of gas and oil well act. Given v. State, 160 Ind. 552.

34. Decree of county court in proceeding to connect outlying territory to city. Fletcher v. Smith [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 697.

35. Crebbin v. Shinn [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 795.

and to review a final judgment granting mandamus against the state board of canvassers;[37] but it has no jurisdiction of an appeal from an order retaxing costs.[38] The appellate court of Illinois has no jurisdiction of cases involving questions of freehold,[39] or franchise,[40] neither has it jurisdiction to determine the validity or constitutionality of a statute;[41] but where the construction only and not the constitutionality is involved, the appellate court has jurisdiction.[42] It has no jurisdiction of proceedings which relate to the revenue directly,[43] of cases in which the state is interested as a party or otherwise,[44] nor of appeals under the levee act.[45] The appellate court of Indiana has no jurisdiction of cases in which the construction of a statute is in question.[46] The court of appeals of Missouri has no jurisdiction of cases involving the title to land,[47] of cases against a county,[48] or of cases involving the construction of the state or Federal constitution,[49] and will not consider a constitutional question raised collaterally, but will accept the law assailed as valid.[50] The jurisdiction of the appellate term of the supreme court of New York over appeals from orders exists solely by statute.[51] Where the issue involved in a license suit in the first city court of New Orleans is exclusively one of fact, the state has a right to appeal to the court of appeals, the amount in dispute being appealable to that court.[52] The court of civil appeals of Texas has jurisdiction of an appeal from the district court in a suit brought before a justice for less than $100.[53] In Oklahoma, appeals from the probate court when acting within its probate jurisdiction lie only to the district court, notwithstanding only a question of law is involved.[54]

Cases appealed to the wrong court may be on motion or suo motu certified to the other court,[55] and in case of a wrongful refusal to do so, the supreme court will compel it by mandamus,[56] and redocketing in a new form so as to confer jurisdiction is authorized in some states.[57]

Further appeal.—Similar matters, e. g. the amount,[58] or a conflict of opinion or doubt,[59] may be ground for jurisdiction of a further appeal.

§ 13. Acquisition and divestiture.—A grant of a special jurisdiction by constitution requires legislation as to the mode of its exercise.[60] It is a general rule that provisions of a contract depriving the courts of jurisdiction of their subject-matter are void, or at least will not be enforced,[61] but a contract that makes the courts of the jurisdiction where the parties reside the forum for the adjudication of their differences is valid.[62] Proceedings commenced under state insolvency laws before the passage of the bankruptcy act are not affected by it,[63] but suits founded on claims which a discharge in bankruptcy will release are stayed.[64] It may be lost by delay or interruption of the proceedings,[65] or expiration of term,[66] or finality of the judgment.[67] The creation of a new district out of part of the Brennan Mercantile Co. v. Vickers [Colo.] 73 Pac. 45; McAllister v. Irwin's Estate [Colo.] 73 Pac. 47. The court of appeals of the Indian Territory has no jurisdiction of an appeal from an order taxing costs in citizenship proceedings. Chickasaw Nation v. Roff [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 101.

58. The supreme court has jurisdiction of appeals from the appellate court only in case the amount involved is $1,000 or more. Suit to enforce liability of stockholders. Garden City Sand Co. v. American Refuse Crematory Co., 205 Ill. 42. In actions ex contractu or ex delicto, if the damages sought to be recovered are speculative in character and not capable of direct proof, and the damages are $1,000 or more as shown by the judgment, an appeal lies from the judgment of the appellate court to the supreme court without a certificate of importance. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Cossar, 203 Ill. 608.

59. Where a minority of the court deems a decision contrary to the ruling of the supreme court, the cause should be certified to the supreme court (Hess v. Gansz, 90 Mo. App. 439), and thereupon the supreme court has jurisdiction to determine the entire appeal, notwithstanding no conflict exists (Clark v. Mo., K. & T. R. Co. [Mo.] 77 S. W. 882). But where the court unanimously feel that there is a conflict they should not certify but should decide in accordance with the ruling of the supreme court. Wilden v. McAllister [Mo.] 77 S. W. 730. Whenever either court of appeals considers its decision in a case to be in conflict with the decision of the other court in a similar case, the case is transferred to the supreme court. Morrow v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 98 Mo. App. 351.

Supp. 872. Failure in Ohio to determine a case within 90 days after final hearing as directed by statute does not [Bates' Ann. St. §§ 557-1, 557-2]. James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28.

66. The October term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia expires on December 31 and it is too late after that date to move for a prolongation of the term. Gordon v. Randle, 189 U. S. 417, 47 Law. Ed. 875.

territory of an old one and a transfer to the new court of all pending causes that would have been brought there had the court been in existence, divests the old court of all jurisdiction in regard to such causes.[68] Where the district court of a county is held alternately at two places, there is but one court, and jurisdiction is not lost by failure to try a case at the place where the suit was brought.[69] The act of congress of 1900 relative to the district courts of Alaska, did not deprive them of jurisdiction of a prosecution for murder pending at the time of its passage.[70] Where jurisdiction has been obtained by reason of the residence of one of several defendants, it is not lost by reason of the death of the resident defendant.[71] Jurisdiction of a court is not divested by appeal in a case of which the court appealed to has not jurisdiction.[72] A court cannot resume jurisdiction of a cause by setting aside its order changing the venue, after jurisdiction has attached in the other county.[73]

§ 14. Objections to jurisdiction and presumptions respecting it.—A court will take judicial notice of its want of jurisdiction.[74] A defendant has the right to raise the question of the jurisdiction of a court of equity, by plea, and to demand in limine the judgment of the court, whether he should answer the bill.[75]

A person appealing specially to object to the jurisdiction must point out specifically the defects on which he relies;[76] but in New Jersey, a plea to the jurisdiction need not designate another court which has jurisdiction, though it was otherwise in England,[77] and is otherwise in Texas.[78] A plea to the jurisdiction, alleging residence in another county, need not affirmatively state that the pleader has not submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court,[79] but where such a plea is pleaded by certain joint defendants and fails to deny the plaintiff's averments of their joint liability with the others, they will be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the court in those respects and to be in court for all purposes.[80] Where a complaint fails to show necessary jurisdictional facts, it is demurrable.[81] A requested instruction to find for defendant does not challenge jurisdiction when not given as a ground for the request.[82]

A plea to the merits does not waive the defect of jurisdiction of the subject-matter,[83] since such questions may be raised at any time, even on appeal;[84] but after a party has once appeared, generally he cannot object to jurisdiction of his person,[85] and an objection to jurisdiction of the person is waived by a plea of the general issue after a plea to the jurisdiction had been overruled.[86] Asking leave to intervene and subsequently withdrawing before intervening does not waive the right to object on the ground of nonresidence on being cited in at the instance of the defendant in the case.[87] By voluntarily submitting himself to the jurisdiction of a court having general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, defendant waives any question as to the propriety of the tribunal.[88] In a case where the district court has original jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the case comes into that court improperly by appeal, the defendant by appearing, answering and going to trial without objection waives his objection that the district court did not acquire jurisdiction by the appeal.[89] An appellant is not estopped to deny the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the court to which he appeals,[90] but one removing a cause into the Federal court is estopped to deny its jurisdiction, except on the ground that the state court had none.[91]

A court of general jurisdiction will be presumed to have acted within its jurisdiction,[92] but with reference to the proceedings of courts of limited or inferior jurisdiction, or of a court of general jurisdiction exercising special powers, facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction must affirmatively appear, and in the absence of such facts, jurisdiction will not be presumed, as in case of a court having general jurisdiction.[93] The probate court, though a court of limited jurisdiction, is not inferior, and as liberal intendments will be indulged in its favor while acting within the sphere of its jurisdiction as would be extended to the circuit courts,[94] a constitutional court of another state will be presumed to be one of general jurisdiction,[95] and to possess the powers which it appears to have exercised unless the contrary is made to appear, and it will be presumed that the modes of procedure pursued by it, although differing from the practice in a given state, are authorized by the state in which it acts,[96] but like the judgments of other courts of general jurisdiction, judgments of the probate court may be attacked even collaterally if, when tested by their own accompanying record it appears that the court had no jurisdiction.[97]

JURY.

§ 1. The necessity or occasion for jury trial. A. Under the constitution.—The common law right of trial by jury has been guaranteed by the Federal and the several state constitutions.[98] The Federal provisions in relation to trials by jury for crimes and criminal prosecutions apply to the territories of the United States.[99]

Unless it is otherwise provided, this guaranty is confined to those cases where at the time of the adoption of the constitution the law gave the right and not in those cases where the right and the remedy with it are thereafter created by statute.[1] This has been held to be the rule under constitutional enactments which declare that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate."[2] In some of the states the guarantee is expressly limited to cases where it had "heretofore" been enjoyed.[3] A statute which enables each party in a cause triable by jury to have determined by the jury every essential fact in the case,[4] or special facts,[5] does not abridge the right. Recent applications of this guaranty are collected in the note.[6]

Instructing verdict in a proper case is not a violation of this right.[7] Nor is the right violated by a statute providing for a new trial for insufficiency of evidence and excessive damages.[8] Nor does an appellate court by setting aside the verdict of the jury in the trial court violate the constitutional guaranty.[9] But an act authorizing the taking of private property without providing for the assessment by a jury of the owners, compensation has been held to be unconstitutional.[10]

A statute is invalid which requires minors who were previously entitled to a jury trial without demand when charged with a crime to make formal demand therefor in order to secure it.[11] A court may determine facts to fix punishment on a plea of guilty.[12]

State causes removed to Federal courts.—Where proceedings for the condemnation of land under the power of eminent domain delegated by a state have been removed from the state into the Federal court, and a state statute provides for the assessment of damages by commissioners, that method must be followed, and there is no right under the Federal constitution to an assessment by a jury.[13] In equitable actions the constitution does not guarantee the right.[14] It does not guarantee it where the cause was originally the subject of equity jurisdiction.[15] In a case purely cognizable in equity where no legal issue is presented, a party is not entitled as of right to a jury trial.[16] It is discretionary with the court in equitable

A suit before the District Court of Alaska sitting in probate to establish a claim against a decedent's estate is not a suit at common law within the meaning of the constitutional provision guarantying the right of trial by jury "in suits at common law." Esterly v. Rua, 122 Fed. 609. In an action to determine an adverse claim to real property, plaintiff being in possession, the answer contained a counterclaim in ejectment. It was held that the procedure was not changed by reason of this counterclaim, and that the defendant was not entitled to a trial by jury. Johnson v. Peterson [Minn.] 97 N. W. 384.

Causes held to be purely common law actions and therefore either party entitled to a jury trial. Kentucky Land & Immigration Co. v. Crabtree, 24 Ky. L. R. 743, 70 S. W. 31.

Case involving title to personal property held not to be solely cognizable in equity.

causes of action whether issues of fact shall be tried by the court or sent to a jury. If submitted to a jury, their verdict is simply advisory, and not binding upon the court.[17] Where a new class of cases is, by legislative action, directed to be tried as chancery causes, it must appear, in order to entitle the court to determine questions of fact arising therein without submitting them to a jury, that, when tested by general principles of equity, such cases are of an equitable character, and can be more properly tried in a court of equity than in a court of law.[18]

Cases of contempt of court were never triable by jury.[19]

Character of jury guaranteed.—A common law jury is meant; that is, a jury composed of 12 men—neither more nor less.[20] Unanimity of verdict is part of the right guaranteed until otherwise constitutionally provided.[21]

Mandamus to compel a jury trial will issue where the court refuses to grant a jury trial in a case where it is of right upon demand seasonably made.[22]

(§ 1) B. In cases not covered by constitution.—The constitutional right to trial by jury is in many jurisdictions re-enforced by statutory enactments. These statutes are usually more specific than are the constitutional provisions, as to the cases in which a jury may be demanded, and frequently enlarge the right. Usually, however, they give the right only in actions at law,[23] but sometimes authorize a jury trial of questions of fact arising in equitable actions, or make provision for trial by jury of equitable defenses in legal actions.[24] In a number of states there but either party entitled to a jury trial. Neff v. Manuel [Iowa] 97 N. W. 73.

Statutes held to deny a trial by jury in actions at law and, therefore, to be unconstitutional. Ahl v. Grissom [Okl.] 72 Pac. 372; McNulty v. Mt. Morris Elec. Light Co., 172 N. Y. 410. Statute conferring jurisdiction on a court of chancery to order an account to be taken of damages for a trespass on timbered land held to impair the constitutional right of trial by jury. McMillan v. Wiley [Fla.] 33 So. 993.

17. Kyle v. Shore [Colo. App.] 71 Pac. 895. But in North Carolina it has been held that issues of fact raised by pleadings in actions for the enforcement of equitable rights must be tried by jury unless waived. Boles v. Caudle [N. C.] 45 S. E. 835.

Effect of application for injunctive relief in an action at law: The fact that in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit application is made to the court to exercise its equity powers in granting injunctive relief is not sufficient to deprive either party of his rights to have the legal issues submitted to a jury. State v. Hart [Utah] 72 Pac. 938.

Assessment of damages in equity: In New Hampshire it has been held that the assessment of damages in equity, the court otherwise having jurisdiction, stands no different with regard to the constitutional right of trial by jury than any ordinary issue in equity; the question of assessment by a jury is within the discretion of the trial court. State v. Sunapee Dam Co. [N. H.] 55 Atl. 899. But in Nebraska it has been held that where in a suit in equity the plaintiff tenders an issue of damages the defendant upon raising such issue by answer is entitled to demand a trial thereof by a jury. Horton v. Simon [Neb.] 97 N. W. 604.

Statute authorizing lienor to recover judgment for sums due him: How the New York statute, Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 3412, authorizing a lienor who fails to establish a valid lien to recover judgment for such sums as are due him, may be given effect without a violation of the constitutional guarantee of trial by jury. A. 437 [with briefs of counsel] citing authorities very fully and exhaustively discussing the historical significance of the right of trial by jury.

21. Girdner v. Bryan, 94 Mo. App. 27. In Missouri a three-fourths verdict is authorized in civil cases. The Colorado statute (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 244, c. 111) authorizing a verdict in civil cases to be returned by three-fourths of the number of jurors sitting was invalid. Clough v. McKay [Colo.] 73 Pac. 30.

22. State v. Hart [Utah] 72 Pac. 938.

23. By the Missouri practice the criterion by which the right to a jury trial is determined is the character of the action—that is, the relief sought—not the distinction between legal and equitable properties. 24. Under the Indiana statute, Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 412, in an exclusively equitable action, a party cannot demand a jury trial, but the court may, in its discretion, for its information, cause any question of fact to be are statutes providing that actions to recover money or specific personal property shall be tried by a jury.[25]

An action in the nature of a creditor's bill is not such an action.[26] Neither is a case relating to the probate of a will.[27] In others the right is given in eminent domain proceedings.[28] Other provisions which have recently been interpreted by the courts are shown below.[29] The right to demur to evidence is not taken away by a statute giving the right to a trial by jury.[30]

(§ 1) C. Loss or waiver of right.—In civil actions[31] and prosecutions for misdemeanor[32] the right may be waived, but not in felony cases.[33]

What constitutes a waiver. In general.—The right to a trial by jury cannot be dispensed with except by the consent of the parties entitled to it.[34] Any unequivocal acts or conduct which clearly show a willingness or intention to forego the right, and are so treated by the trial court without objection will amount to a waiver.[35] The form and manner of waiver is in some jurisdictions regulated by tried by a jury. Shroyer v. Campbell [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 193. In an action for judgment on notes and foreclosure of a vendor's lien securing them, when an issue is joined as to the amount due, either party is entitled to a jury trial under the Oklahoma statutes [Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 4448-4450, 4458]. Sherman v. Randolph [Okl.] 74 Pac. 102. statute.[36] In Washington, the legislature is authorized by the constitution to make such regulations.[37] A denial of a demand for a trial by jury is not error where the demand is not made as required by law.[38]

Waiver by nonassertion of right.—Failure to seasonably demand jury may work a waiver of the right.[39] So may a voluntary submission of issues of fact to the court,[40] or failure to appear.[41] A party waives his right to trial by jury by a failure to take exception to the transference of the case to the equity docket.[42] A statute authorizing a case to be entered on the court docket, where a request is not made by a party within a certain time that it be entered on the jury docket, does not violate the constitutional guarantee.[43] A failure to enter a demand for a jury trial upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is a waiver of the right.[44]

Effect of failure to pay cost of jury.—In the absence of a statute so providing, a refusal by a party to pay in advance the costs of summoning and paying jurors does not constitute a waiver of the right of trial by jury.[45] But the right has been held barred where the plaintiff invoked the protection of a statute relieving from the necessity of giving security for costs.[46]

A waiver of a jury before a United States commissioner does not constitute a waiver of the parties' right to trial by jury upon an appeal.[47]

Estoppel of a party to claim a court trial does not bind court to try by jury.[48]

Renewal of demand; subsequent trials.—Where a party has at a proper time and in a proper manner made his demand for a jury, and the court has denied the same, to which ruling he duly excepts, he is not required to renew such demand upon going to trial at a subsequent term of court.[49] A waiver of a jury at the first trial of a cause does not operate to prevent either party from demanding a jury at the second trial of the same cause, after the judgment rendered at the first trial has been set aside.[50]

Waiver upon a fictitious issue.—A waiver by a defendant of the right to a jury trial upon a fictitious issue does not constitute a waiver of a right to a jury after plaintiff has been permitted to amend his complaint by setting up a new and entirely different cause of action.[51]

§ 2. Eligibility to and exception from jury service.—A jury is commonly required to be of "good and lawful men."[52] At common law, the fact that a juror had been convicted of a crime was a cause of challenge propter defectum, and this rule has, in most of the United States, received express statutory sanction;[53] but in the absence of an express statute, a juror who has been convicted in another state is competent,[54] and accepting a juror in a trial for murder who had been convicted of felony is not a denial of due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws to the person convicted.[55]

At common law, the fact that a juror is an alien disqualifies him.[56] Residence beyond the jurisdiction of the court renders one incompetent to serve as a juror.[57] In the absence of a statutory requirement, however, the particular place of residence of a juror is no test of his qualification so long as he lives within the jurisdiction of the court. It is, therefore, no valid objection to a venire that it was selected entirely from a single city.[58] Prior jury service within a specified time is in some states a statutory disqualification.[59] Such a statute does not disqualify one who had served in a former trial at the same term.[60]

By statute in North Carolina one who has a suit "pending and at issue" in the court is disqualified.[61]

Public officers may sit unless specially declared disqualified.[62] Under a statute providing that judicial officers "shall not be compelled to serve as jurors," such officers are not absolutely disqualified, but merely privileged to claim exemption.[63]

In Texas, the fact that one has not paid his poll tax is a ground of challenge for cause.[64] But this fact does not absolutely disqualify him to serve as a juror.[65] Members of the state militia are exempt from jury service in Alabama.[66]

The qualifications of a juror do not depend in any degree upon his knowledge or want of knowledge of the law of evidence as applicable to criminal trials.[67] It will be presumed until the contrary appears that persons summoned by the proper officer were duly qualified.[68]

right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors.—The right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors is an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to a trial by jury guaranteed by the constitution.[70]

Conscientious scruples against capital punishment.—A person is disqualified to serve as a juror in a capital case who has conscientious scruples against capital punishment.[71] In some jurisdictions prejudice against capital punishment is declared by statute to be a disqualification.[72]

Prejudice against a class of litigants or actions.—Prejudice of a juror against nonresident plaintiffs who might have brought actions in courts of their own state will disqualify him in a suit by a nonresident plaintiff.[73] So a prejudice against a certain class of actions will disqualify for service in such an action.[74]

Knowledge of issues involved.—One who in a criminal case is a material witness to controverted facts constituting the offense is disqualified to serve as a juror.[75] Jurors who served on the trial of one prosecuted for larceny are not qualified to serve as jurors on a prosecution for receiving the stolen property.[76] It is not a ground of challenge to a juror, on the trial of a prisoner under an indictment, that he had previously served as a juror on the trial of a plea in bar to the same indictment.[77] It is held no objection that a juror heard part of the evidence on application for bail, no opinion having been formed.[78] A juror may be challenged for actual bias.[79] The term "actual bias" has in some states been defined by statute.[80]

Opinion on issues involved.—An unqualified opinion on any material issue involved in a case will disqualify one to serve as a juror therein.[81] If a juror has formed an opinion from personal knowledge of the facts, or from information derived from witnesses, or from others professing to know the facts, he is incompetent,[82] and this notwithstanding his statement that he will render an im-

During the course of his examination a veniremen stated that he conversed with parties who had conversed with witnesses; that he accepted what they said as being the facts in the case; that the names of the witnesses were given him in those conver-

partial verdict.[83] As to the effect on the competency of a juror of an opinion formed from evidence given on a former trial of the case, the most recent cases are not entirely in harmony.[84] If the juror's opinion is founded upon mere rumor, although it may be fixed and require evidence to remove it, it does not disqualify if he says he can disregard it and render a verdict solely upon the law and evidence.[85] A juror is not disqualified because he has formed an impression or opinion from newspaper accounts as to the guilt of one charged with a crime, if he states that such impression will not influence him in arriving at a just verdict,[86] and this notwithstanding his statement that it will require testimony to remove the opinion he has formed.[87] So the fact that a juror states that he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, if he does not disclose the facts that influenced him in forming his opinion, does not disqualify him where he states that he can give the defendant a fair and impartial trial uninfluenced by his opinion.[88]

If it appears from the examination of a juror that he has no fixed opinion as to the merits of the controversy, and has no prejudice for or against any party to the controversy, a challenge for cause should be overruled.[89]

The fact that a juror expresses an unqualified opinion as to the guilt of the defendant of a crime other than that with which he is charged will not disqualify him, if at his examination it is not made to appear that if the defendant is guilty of the one crime he is necessarily guilty of the other.[90] sations; that he had an opinion well grounded and fixed, and that his opinion was unfavorable to the defendant, and it would require evidence to remove it. It was held that he was disqualified to serve as a juror. Turner v. State [Tenn.] 69 S. W. 774. In Indiana where a juror stated that his mind was not entirely free to try the cause, that he had formed an opinion that would require some evidence to change, and that his opinion was formed by talking with some persons whom he supposed knew all about the case, the question of sustaining a challenge to him for cause was held to be within the sound discretion of the trial court. Tipton L., H. & P. Co. v. Newcomer [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 548.

83. Turner v. State [Tenn.] 69 S. W. 774. Juror held, under all the circumstances of the case, to be disqualified on the ground of an opinion formed as to defendant's guilt, notwithstanding that upon a somewhat persistent cross-examination he expressed belief in his ability to render an impartial verdict. State v. Crofford [Iowa] 96 N. W. 889.

84. The fact that a juror states that from hearing the evidence in the former trial of the case he had formed and expressed an opinion in favor of one of the parties will not in North Carolina disqualify him if he further states that notwithstanding such expression of opinion he can try the case impartially according to the evidence and charge of the court. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 131 N. C. 446. But in a case in the federal courts it was held that if the opinion of a juror as to the guilt or innocence of one charged with crime has been formed or expressed upon the testimony of witnesses duly sworn in a court of justice bearing directly upon the issue to be tried, the court should always allow a challenge for bias, notwithstanding that such juror declares under oath that he can fairly and impartially try the case. Dolan v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 52.

Jurors who have heard part of the evidence on a former trial, are not for that reason disqualified if they state that they can decide the case solely on the evidence adduced without reference to the evidence on the former trial. State v. Prins, 117 Iowa, 505.

90. State v. John [Iowa] 93 N. W. 61.

Opinion as to killing but none upon question of self defense: In the trial of a homicide case, where defendant admits the killing and justifies on the ground of self defense, a juror who states that he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, is not for that reason alone disqualified, if, from his entire examination, it clearly appears such opinion is based upon the belief in the mind of the juror that defendant killed deceased, but that the juror has neither formed nor expressed any opinion as to whether the de-

The question of the disqualification of jurors because of opinions formed or expressed, is, in many of the states, regulated by statute. Some of these statutory provisions have recently been interpreted by the courts.[91]

Interest in a corporation party may disqualify one to sit in an action affecting it,[92] but a taxpayer in a municipality is not so disqualified.[93] The members of any association of men combining for the purpose of enforcing or withstanding the execution of a particular law, and binding themselves to contribute money for such purpose, are disqualified to sit as jurors in the trial of a cause in which the question is whether the defendant shall be found guilty of violating that law.[94]

One is not disqualified to serve as a juror in a prosecution for violating the local option law because he is a Prohibitionist.[95]

Relationship or acquaintance.—A juror who is related by affinity to a party to the suit is disqualified.[96] But affinity between a juror and counsel is not enough to disqualify.[97] A juror who stands in the relation of attorney and client to the adverse party is incompetent,[98] and in some states a partner or agent.[99] A fendant was justified in taking the life of deceased. State v. Morrison [Kan.] 72 Pac. 554.

91. Under the Ohio statute a juror is not disqualified merely because he has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of one charged with crime if he states that he believes he can render an impartial verdict uninfluenced by such opinion [Rev. St. § 7278, par. 2]. Carano v. State, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 93. So under the Mississippi statute a juror is not disqualified merely because he has an impression or opinion as to the guilt of one charged with crime, if he makes oath that he is impartial and it appears to the court that he is so [Code 1892, § 2355]. Fugitt v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 942. Under the South Carolina statute the trial judge may determine the competency of one to serve as a juror in a criminal case who has expressed an opinion upon the case, but who declares that he will, nevertheless, be governed by the law and the testimony. State v. Milam, 65 S. C. 321. In New York a juror who has formed an opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of a person charged with crime is disqualified, notwithstanding his statement that he believes he could render an impartial verdict, if no inquiry is made and he does not state whether such opinion would influence his verdict [Code Crim. Proc. § 376]. People v. Miller, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 255. Partial opinion as to guilt or innocence formed held not to disqualify under provisions of Michigan statute [Comp. Laws, § 11,947]. People v. Quimby [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1061.

A statute is not unconstitutional which provides that no person shall be disqualified as a juror by reason of having formed or expressed an opinion upon the matter or cause to be submitted to the jury, founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, provided it appear to the court that he can and will act impartially and fairly upon the matters submitted to him. State v. Mott [Mont.] 74 Pac. 728.

92. Any person connected with an indemnifying company as a stockholder or otherwise is disqualified to sit as a juror in a case the result of which might be of pecuniary interest to such company. Spoonick v. Backus-Brooks Co. [Minn.] 94 N. W. 1079.

94. Member of an organization liable to assessment for prosecution of persons violating the liquor laws. State v. Fullerton, 90 Mo. App. 411. But in Maryland it has been held that one is not disqualified to serve as a juror in a prosecution for violating the local option law because he belongs to a league the principal object of which is the enforcement of such law. In New York jurors are disqualified if related by consanguinity or affinity to a party within the sixth degree [Code Crim. Proc. § 1166]. Bradt v. Peck, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 295. A juror is not disqualified by reason of the fact that he is the brother of the wife of defendant's brother, who actively assisted in the defense of the law suit. Smith v. Smith [Ga.] 46 S. E. 106. It appeared that the daughter of one of the jurors married the half-nephew of the president of the defendant company, but that he died several years before the trial. It was held that this fact did not disqualify the juror. Miller v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 207, 74 S. W. 747.

97. Kelso v. Kuehl, 116 Wis. 495. The fact that a juror in a criminal case was an uncle by marriage of the district attorney and this was not known to the defendant or his counsel until after trial is no ground for a new trial under the California statute [Pen. Code, § 1181]. People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 72 Pac. 899.

98. An attorney of a party to an action is not an adverse party within the meaning of this provision. McCorkle v. Mallory, 30 Wash. 632, 71 Pac. 186. The fact that a juror is in the employ of an express company and that some of the attorneys for the defendant are also attorneys for the express company does not disqualify the juror. Miller v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., person is not disqualified to serve as a juror in a homicide case merely because he knew the deceased.[1]

Proof of disqualification.—Grounds of disqualification must be apparent.[2] Where there are affidavits charging jurors with having made disqualifying statements, the positive denials of the jurors to making such statements are entitled to much weight.[3] In determining whether a juror is disqualified in a criminal case by reason of opinions or impressions formed by him, his conduct, demeanor, and bearing in court may properly be accorded material weight in considering the facts disclosed by his answers.[4]

§ 4. Discretion of court to excuse juror.—The court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, excuse a juror from serving, and the exercise of such discretion is not error unless abused to the detriment of a party.[5] If the court is in doubt as to the qualification of a juror, it is not error to excuse him; and it is better to do so, to the end that a fair and free jury may be obtained, and the risk, trouble, and expense of a new trial avoided.[6] It is not error for the court to refuse to send for a juror who is engaged in the trial of another case.[7]

§ 5. The jury list and drawing the panel.—A party to an action, if he is entitled to a trial by jury, is also entitled, at the commencement of the trial, to a panel drawn in substantial conformity with statutory requirements. A failure to conform to such requirements is good ground for challenge to the array.[8] Of course statutes relating to the selection of the jury list and the drawing of the panel must conform to the constitution.[9] Certain provisions relating to the method of drawing jurors have been held to be merely directory.[10] The use of a drawer from which to draw the names of jurors is a substantial compliance with a statute prescribing a box.[11] Recent cases have interpreted constitutional provisions and statutes having relation to the place from which persons on the

§ 6. The venire and like process.—The method of summoning jurors is regulated by statute in the several states.[22] Where the provisions of a statute in relation to the summoning of a jury are not mandatory, but merely directory, mere irregularities will not be deemed prejudicial unless it is clearly shown that some injury has resulted therefrom.[23] No objection can be taken to any venire facias for a petit jury, except for fraud in drawing or summoning the jurors.[24] A defendant in a criminal case has no vested right in the number of jurors provided for in the venire to fill incomplete panels.[25]

§ 7. Empaneling trial jury.—The right to have a jury selected in the manner prescribed by law is a substantial right of which a party cannot be arbitrarily

13. Pennsylvania statute, Act of April 10, 1867, (P. L. 1867, 62) requiring jurors to be selected from "the whole qualified electors of the respective county at large" construed. Com. v. Zillafrow [Pa.] 56 Atl. 539.

14. A strict compliance with a statutory requirement that the assessor obtain from persons assessed information touching their qualifications for jury service is not essential to the securing of a legal jury list [Rev. St. 1899, §§ 3387, 3390]. State v. Bolin [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 1.

15. Omission from jury list by commissioners of persons competent to serve as jurors but known to be exempt from jury duty is not a ground for a challenge to the panel under the Montana statutes. State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3. Where it is required by statute that the jury list shall consist of the names on the assessment roll of all persons whom the jury commissioners believe to be competent and qualified to serve, an intentional omission by the commissioners of a number of names of those whom they know or believe to be qualified will vitiate the list [Rev. St. 1899, § 3346]. State v. Bolin [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 1.

19. A panel drawn by a commissioner, who is at least an officer de facto, is regular. People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333. Legal when drawn by de facto commissioner. State v. Scott, 110 La. 369. Authority of court to make a list of jurors to complete panel [Rev. St. §§ 3795, 3797]. State v. May, 172 Mo. 630.

20. Order of drawing panels under provisions of Pennsylvania statute, Act of April 14, 1834, § 120, where three panels are to be drawn at the same time. Com. v. Zillafrow [Pa.] 56 Atl. 539. Order in which grand, petit, criminal and traverse venires are to be drawn (P. L. 1834, 363) is directory only, and presumably harmless to one accused. Id.

21. If the panel from which the jury was selected was composed of qualified persons the defendant cannot object that the court rejected certain veniremen who were also qualified. State v. Reynolds, 171 Mo. 552.

22. In Georgia where a superior court is required to continue in session for more than one week, the court must summon a separate panel of jurors for each week, but this requirement does not apply to an adjourned or extra session [Pen. Code 1895, § 862]. Cribb v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 396; Buchanan v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 607.

deprived.[26] Therefore, where the mode of forming the trial jury from the panel is prescribed by statute, that mode should be followed in every essential particular.[27] It is not error for the court to require the defendant to proceed with the selection of a jury from a less number of jurors than were summoned, if the absent jurors are afterwards brought into court and passed on before the jury is completed.[28] Whenever objection is raised to the mode followed in selecting the jury, the necessity arises of making a minute of the objection and of the facts upon which it is founded.[29]

§ 8. Arraying and challenging. A. Challenge to the array.—A challenge to the array is a proper method of objecting to the mode of summoning jurors,[30] but it is not the proper method of raising the question of the disqualification of individual jurors.[31] A challenge to the array must be made before verdict.[32] The right to object to irregularities in the summoning of a special venire is waived if objection is not raised before verdict.[33]

(§ 8) B. Challenges for cause. Right to list of jurors.—By statute in many states a defendant in a criminal case is entitled to have a copy of the list of jurors summoned to try his case, so that he shall have every facility to make his challenges.[34]

The challenge.—It is not essential that a challenge for statutory cause should be made in the exact language of the statute. It is sufficient if the attention of the court is directed to the specific objection made.[35] The right to challenge a juror for cause may be waived,[36] as by a failure to object to or challenge the juror[37] before the verdict is rendered, where it does not appear that the fact of the juror's disqualification was unknown to the party or his counsel when the juror was accepted.[38] This rule is sanctioned by statute in some states.[39] In some

Where the name of a juror had been inadvertently left out of the box from which the drawings to make up the trial jury were made, and this not being discovered until all the other names had been drawn, it was held proper for the court to then have a slip containing this name put in the box and have it drawn from as the others had been drawn. jurisdictions a failure to challenge the juror before the jury is empaneled has been held to constitute a waiver of the right.[40]

(§ 8) C. Peremptory challenges and standing jurors aside. Peremptory challenges.—A party entitled to exercise the right of peremptory challenge need not give any reason for doing so.[41] Where a statute gives the right of peremptory challenge absolutely, prejudice will be conclusively presumed from a denial of the right.[42]

Number allowed.—Where there are two defendants in a civil suit whose interests are identical and who are represented by the same counsel, they constitute but one party, and are entitled only to the number of peremptory challenges allowed a party.[43] But under statutes which declare that each party to a civil suit shall be allowed a certain number of peremptory challenges, co-defendants who are at variance on the issue of fact as between themselves are each entitled to the full number of challenges allowed a party,[44] and in the absence of an express statutory prohibition, it is permissible for such defendants to consult and act together in exercising their challenges.[45]

The statutes in the several states prescribe the number of peremptory challenges allowable in criminal prosecutions, and sometimes make express provision as to the number permissible where two or more defendants are jointly prosecuted.[46] Under a statute which provides that "the people and the accused shall be entitled, no objection on that ground until after verdict. Pfeiffer v. Dubuque [Iowa] 94 N. W. 492. A verdict will not be set aside because of the disqualification of a juror by reason of his relationship to one of the parties, where upon a motion for a new trial it affirmatively appears that the fact of relationship was known to the losing party prior to the trial. Hadden v. Thompson [Ga.] 44 S. E. 1001.

39. Statute expressly providing that the verdict of the jury shall not be affected on account of the disqualification of a juror unless the juror was challenged for the specific cause before the finding of the verdict. State v. Lewis, 31 Wash. 75, 71 Pac. 778. But under the New York statute relating to the disqualification of a juror by reason of relationship to a party, though the party related to the juror must raise the objection before the case is opened, any other party to the issue may raise the objection within six months after the date of verdict. This provision is applicable to all courts [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1166, 3347, subd. 14]. Bradt v. Peck, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 295.

40. In criminal cases, even in prosecutions for murder, where the facts are known, an objection to the competency of a juror comes too late if it is made after the jury is empaneled. State v. Morrison [Kan.] 72 Pac. 554. The court may, in its discretion allow a juror to be challenged for cause at any time before the jury is empaneled. State v. Vick, 132 N. C. 995. In a criminal case the state may challenge for cause jurors who have been previously passed by both parties and who have taken their seats in the jury box but who have not been sworn, upon its being discovered that they are disqualified by reason of nonresidence. Monson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 570.

Challenge permitted "before the juror is actually sworn": Under a statute permitting a challenge for cause "at any time before the juror is actually sworn," it must be interposed before the commencement of the ceremony [Laws 1887, p. 132]. Leary v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 527.

But in Illinois under a statute providing that "in all civil actions each party shall be entitled to a challenge of three jurors," it was held that each side to the case has but three peremptory challenges, whether there be one or a number of persons plaintiff or defendant, and whether or not the interests of persons on the same side are conflicting [Rev. St. p. 781, c. 110, § 49]. Gordon v. Chicago, 201 Ill. 623. Under the peculiar provisions of the Kentucky statutes each side in a civil action is entitled to only three peremptory challenges, regardless of the number of plaintiffs or defendants, and whether or not there is a conflict of interests between persons on the same side [St. 1899, §§ 2258, 2267]. Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Ware's Adm'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 2519, 74 S. W. 289.

45. First Nat. Bank v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex.] 77 S. W. 410.

46. When two or more defendants are tried together each is entitled under the express provisions of an Alabama statute to five peremptory challenges and no more [Acts 1890-91, p. 561]. Hudson v. State, 137 Ala. 60. Under the express provisions of a New Jersey statute where two or more defendants are jointly indicted and tried, they together, and not severally, are entitled to 10 peremptory challenges [P. L. 1898, p. 896]. State v. MacQueen [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 1006; State v. Rachman, 68 N. J. Law, 120.

each[47] to a prescribed number of peremptory challenges, if two or more defendants are tried jointly, each is entitled to the full number of challenges allowed, as if he had been tried separately.[47]

Time for challenge.—In North Carolina, the right of peremptory challenge must be exercised before the twelve jurors have been accepted by both parties.[48] In Texas, it would seem that it is not permissible to challenge peremptorily a juror after he has been passed, even though the jury has not been completed.[49] In Florida, the right in a criminal case must be exercised before the jurors are sworn in chief.[50] Under the California statute, the right in a criminal case must be exercised before the juror is sworn to try the cause, but the court may, for cause permit it to be exercised after the juror is sworn and before the jury is completed.[51] Under the New Jersey statutes, the right in civil actions must be exercised as the names of the jurors are drawn from the box.[52]

Juror out of courtroom.—It is not error for the court, in a criminal case, to permit the state to peremptorily challenge a juror who is not at the time in the courtroom, if the court had at first held such juror disqualified, but had subsequently changed its opinion after the juror had left the courtroom.[53]

Order of challenges.—According to the best practice, peremptory challenges are exercised alternately, one by one, and after each challenge the panel refilled; but in the absence of statutory provision, the mode and order of challenge is left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and unless there has been manifest abuse of the discretion, the action of the court will not be disturbed.[54] In some jurisdictions alternate challenges are prescribed by statute.[55]

Even where the court has improperly overruled challenges for cause and the defendant has exhausted his peremptory challenges, it is not error for the court to refuse to permit the defendant to challenge peremptorily a juror who is unobjectionable.[56]

Waiver of right to challenge.—One entitled to peremptory challenges may waive the right.[57] The neglect to exercise the right at the proper time constitutes a waiver of it.[58] Under the common law method of impaneling a jury, by swearing each juror as he is passed for cause and not challenged peremptorily, there was no waiver of peremptory challenges, except that they could not be exercised as to the jurors already sworn,[59] and where the practice of alternate challenges exists, a failure by a party to challenge in turn does not constitute a waiver of the right of peremptory challenge as to one or more of the jurors subsequently called.[60] A waiver of a peremptory challenge does not amount to an acceptance of a juror already in the box.[61]

When erroneous permission to challenge amounts to prejudicial error.—It is prejudicial error for the court to allow a party to challenge a juror peremptorily after he has waived his right to do so by a neglect to exercise it at the proper time, if the other party had previously exhausted all his peremptory challenges.[62] Such action on the part of the court is not prejudicial error, however, where the other party had not exhausted his challenges.[63]

When jurors have been stood aside by the state and all the other veniremen have been exhausted without forming a jury, the court may order the names of the jurors who had been stood aside to be returned to the hat and drawn again.[64]

(§ 8) D. Examination of jurors and trial of challenges. The challenge should precede the examination.—Before challenge a party has no right to interrogate a juror to ascertain whether he is subject to challenge. But the court, in its discretion, may permit such interrogation, and, when allowed, it is not revisable.[65]

The scope of the examination of jurors is left largely to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it is only when an abuse of discretion is clearly shown, the appellate court is authorized to interfere.[66] Considerable latitude should be allowed to the end that all who have any bias or prejudice or are otherwise disqualified may be excluded from the panel,[67] and also to enable the party to intelligently determine his peremptory challenges.[68] While it is perhaps the better practice to allow a juror on his voir dire in a criminal case to be asked whether if selected as a juror in the case he will give the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence until he has heard all the evidence, and whether he will wait until he has heard all the evidence before making up his mind, yet it is not reversible error to exclude such questions.[69] It is not proper to ask a juror if he has a feeling of prejudice against a man who stands charged with a crime.[70] It is proper in murder cases to ask jurors if they have any conscientious scruples in regard to the infliction of the death penalty for crime in cases depending wholly on circumstantial evidence.[71] A juror's knowledge or ignorance concerning questions of law is not a proper subject of inquiry.[72]

Error, if it exists, in sustaining an objection to a question asked a juror, is cured where almost the identical question is subsequently asked and answered without objection.[73]

Absence of juror or counsel.—When a juror is absent when called, the court is not required to delay in proceeding with the trial until the juror can be found and brought into court for the purpose of examination.[74] Where a party has an attorney in court, he is not deprived of right to examine the jury by the refusal of the court to wait for an associate counsel.[75]

Further examination after jurors are passed discretionary with court.—After the jurors are passed by the parties, any further examination of them is not a matter of right, but of discretion in the court.[76] If on such examination, good challenge for cause is presented, the court may allow the juror to be challenged therefor.[77]

Tribunal for the trial of challenges.—The common law practice of appointing triors to try the fitness of a juror who has been challenged to the favor has in the United States become almost obsolete. Under the statutes of most of the states the court is the tribunal for the trial of challenges, whether they be for principal cause or to the favor.[78]

Challenge as part of the record.—When a challenge is in writing, was sworn to, served upon the prosecuting attorney and filed, and as appears from the journal entry was submitted to the court, it is a part of the record without bill of exceptions or a statement of facts.[79]

Mode of excepting to challenge.—The statutes in the several states usually make provision as to the mode of excepting to challenges.[80] If a party desires to avail himself of the objection that the other party in challenging a juror has not stated the ground of his challenge, he should expressly state that that is the ground of his objection. By simply denying the challenge he waives any formal objection to it.[81]

Review on appeal of findings of trial court.—In Washington, it has been held that the discretion of the trial court to determine partiality or impartiality in a jury is subject to review by the appellate court under the constitutional guaranty to the accused of a trial by an impartial jury.[82] But in some jurisdictions the finding of the trial court upon challenges is not subject to review, or is subject to review only in certain cases.[83] The finding of the trial court upon a challenge to a

83. In North Carolina the rulings of law by judges of the superior courts, on challenges for principal cause, are subject to review by the supreme court; but their findings of fact are conclusive. Upon challenges to the favor the findings of the judges of the superior courts are conclusive on appeal. State v. Vick, 132 N. C. 995. Under a statute which provides that "the decision of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause, shall not be subject to exception," errors in the manner in which the jury were selected or that a juror lacked the statutory juror on the ground that he has a fixed opinion that will bias his verdict will not be set aside on appeal unless error is manifest.[84] In passing on a motion for a new trial based upon the alleged incompetency of a juror, the trial court is called upon to exercise a sound legal discretion. In the absence of a clear showing of error in this regard, the appellate court will not interfere.[85]

When improperly overruling challenge is ground for setting aside verdict.—Where, in a criminal prosecution, a challenge for cause is improperly overruled, and the defendant's peremptory challenges are exhausted before the jury is obtained, the accused is prejudiced,[86] and the verdict will be set aside, even though it be not shown that any juror objectionable to him was allowed to serve;[87] but not if the juror was peremptorily challenged.[88] But refusal to sustain a challenge for cause is not reversible error where the jury is made up before the accused has exhausted his peremptory challenges.[89]

§ 9. Talesmen and additional panels. Authority to procure additional jurors.—There are in most states statutes providing for obtaining jurors where those on the regular panel are insufficient,[90] or where the regular panel has been discharged.[91] When the regular panel is exhausted, the court may order that persons be summoned from the body of the county to complete the jury, notwithstanding a statutory authorization to complete the jury by drawing names from the talesman box.[92] Generally, talesmen should not be summoned or a special venire resorted to until the regular panel has been exhausted.[93] Under a statute authorizing the qualifications will not be considered on appeal. Alderson v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 32, 74 S. W. 679.

84. If the court refuses to sustain the challenge its finding will not be set aside unless it affirmatively appears that on the answers of the juror, taken as a whole, he entertained a fixed opinion which would bias his verdict. Jarvis v. State [Ala.] 34 So. 1025. 89. State v. Champoux [Wash.] 74 Pac. 557; Peaden v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 204; State v. Tyler [Iowa] 97 N. W. 983. If the court in a criminal case erroneously overrules a challenge for cause, or erroneously refuses to allow a venireman to answer one of the questions propounded to him, or erroneously sustains objections interposed by the state to certain questions propounded to a veniremen, and thereafter the defendant excludes the obnoxious juror by a peremptory challenge, he cannot be injured by such ruling, unless it appears that before the jury was sworn his quiver of peremptory challenges was exhausted. Mathis v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 287. See, also, Indictment and Prosecution, § 15.

90. Right of court under the Kansas statute [Gen. St. 1901, § 3815], to order more jurors to be drawn after commencement of the term, where the number previously drawn is in his opinion insufficient. State v. Davis [Kan.] 73 Pac. 87. In Texas the proper method to complete the jury in a homicide case, after the original special venire list has been exhausted is to authorize the sheriff to summon a certain number of jurors to be selected by him as talesmen, but the defendant may waive his right to have talesmen thus selected by the sheriff. Newman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 951.

Where a jury is out considering a case when another case is called for trial and before a jury in the latter case is completed the remainder of the panel is exhausted, and the court in pursuance of statutory authority summons talesmen who are interrogated and qualified the court may in its discretion after the other jury have returned their verdict and are discharged complete the jury being impaneled either from the talesmen or from the jury just discharged. Tex. & N. O. R. Co. v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 760.

91. Authority of court under the Missouri statute to order the sheriff to summon a jury from bystanders, when the regular panel has been discharged [Rev. St. 1899, §§ 3769, 3770]. State v. Stuckey, 98 Mo. App. 664. Jury selected from special panel after regular panel has been discharged [Code Civ. Proc. § 664]. Lamb v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1050. 93. The defendant in a criminal case has the right to demand that all the jurors summoned upon the original venire, and not then engaged on other jury duty, shall be submitted to his acceptance or rejection before talesmen are resorted to for the formation. State v. Riggs, 110 La. 509. What contingencies will warrant requiring a party to take a jury from a special venire, under the provision of the Texas statute [Rev. St. 1895, art. 3150]. Tex. & N. O. court to fill vacancies on a jury when they occur after the jury box has been exhausted, it will be presumed, in the absence of an averment to the contrary, that the designation by the court of a juror to fill a vacancy was made after the jury box was exhausted.[94]

Method of selecting talesmen.—The court may, within its discretion, order jurors summoned as tales de circumstantibus to be called one at a time.[95] It is not a valid objection to a special venire that it had been drawn by the jury commissioners for another term of the court, the term having been changed by the legislature after the commissioners were appointed.[96] The mere fact that commissioners appointed to select a special panel for the trial of a negro charged with crime did not draw any negroes on the list is not ground for quashing the indictment.[97] Irregularity in ordering talesmen to be summoned in connection with a special venire is not ground for quashing the venire.[98]

Method of objecting to discrimination in summoning talesmen.—One charged with crime, in order to avail himself of a discrimination against him in summoning talesmen, must, when the list of talesmen is first brought in, move to quash the same.[99]

Time for objecting to special venire.—It is too late to object that an accessory cannot be tried on a special venire after the jury has been passed upon and each juror accepted, and without exhausting the peremptory challenges. It is conclusively presumed in such case that the jury is unobjectionable.[1]

§ 10. Special and struck juries and juries of less than twelve.—Special juries were allowed by the common law.[2] In most of the United States there are statutes making provision as to when a special or struck jury may be had, the mode and time of making application therefor, and the method of selecting and summoning the jurors. Some of these statutory provisions have recently been interpreted by the courts.[3] The constitutionality of some of the statutes relating to special juries has been upheld.[4] It would seem that in the absence of statutory direction, the method and order of drawing jurors from the special venire is a matter which is largely within the discretion of the court.[5] In a murder case the court is not required to have a regular panel in attendance while a jury is being selected from a special panel which has been drawn in accordance with the provisions of the statute.[6] There is no waiver if the defendant objects to being tried by any other than a special venire at any time prior to his agreeing to be tried by the regular jury.[7]

By the common law, the number of jurors required for petit juries, except in special cases, is twelve, and in states where the common law is in force, this is the number required in the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary.[8] In some jurisdictions, however, provision is made for juries, in certain cases, composed of a smaller number than twelve.[9]

§ 11. Swearing.—The better practice is to postpone the swearing in chief of the jurors until the full panel is obtained, so as to allow the longest possible time for the peremptory challenges, but in the absence of statutory provision, the rule is that the time and manner of swearing jurors in chief, after they have been examined on voir dire and an opportunity given for challenge, are within the sound judicial discretion of the court, the exercise of which will not be disturbed by an appellate court unless clearly abused.[10]

§ 12. Compensation, sustenance and comfort of jurors.—The compensation of jurors is a matter of statutory regulation. The courts have recently passed upon the constitutionality of certain statutes having relation to this matter,[11] and have interpreted some of the provisions of such statutes.[12] Under statutes which provide that the fees of "jurors" shall be a certain sum "for each day's attendance," a juror is entitled to his per diem for each day his attendance is required in court whether sworn to try any case or not.[13]

The jury should be made comfortable for the night after they have been locked up, whether before or after they find their verdict; but it would seem that a failure to look after the comfort of the jury is not a ground for reversing the verdict, especially if the finding was arrived at after the alleged discomfort had been endured.[14]

12. The legal fiction that a term of court is but one day held not to affect the con-

officers under constitution reciting the courts in which judicial powers are reposed.[15] They are precinct and not city officers, though city and precinct boundaries are the same.[16]

A constitutional provision limiting terms of office to four years and allowing justices in cities to be elected for terms prescribed by law authorizes the legislature to make the terms of the first elected city justices four years and nine months, the succeeding terms to be four years.[17] The legislature of Utah may create municipal courts,[18] and by the creation thereof the office of justice of the peace was abolished.[19] One elected as city justice under such act is not exempt from the provision requiring surrender of files, papers, etc., because he had been a precinct justice.[20] The office of city justice being abolished in certain jurisdictions, an incumbent may not hold after the term for which he was elected.[21] In Kentucky, the governor may fill vacancies by appointment.[22]

A justice holding over on the claim that his successor had not qualified, and it being a debatable question depending on whether the nearest person elected and failing to qualify was to be his successor, and he having custody of the records and acting as justice, is a de facto officer.[23]

Justices in Kentucky are members of the fiscal court.[24]

An information in quo warranto to oust a justice must show that the office which defendant claims and the duties which he performs is the office to which relator is entitled.[25]

§ 2. Compensation, duties and liabilities.—The compensation of justices is ordinarily by fees taxed against litigants as part of the costs.[26]

A justice is not liable on his bond for refusal to accept appeal bonds not complying with statutory requirements,[27] nor for issuance of execution where he has no official notice of supersedeas.[28] He is not liable for false imprisonment where he has jurisdiction,[29] but is liable for false imprisonment of a person disobeying a subpoena issued after he lost jurisdiction of the case.[30]

§ 3. Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction of justices is purely statutory, and statutes conferring it are to be strictly construed.[31] It may not be affected by special or struction of a statute, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 565, relating to the allowance of mileage compensation to jurors. In re Grand Jurors' Mileage, 120 Fed. 307. Duty of county auditor to issue warrants for the fees of jurors [Pen. Code, § 1143]. Jackson v. Baehr, 138 Cal. 266, 71 Pac. 167.

A justice has jurisdiction of claim proceedings on a levy made under execution from a justice court.[37]

A justice having full jurisdiction of a demand will not lose jurisdiction as to such demand by the fact that it is coupled with another matter of which he has no jurisdiction.[38]

Amount.[39]—Jurisdiction is determined by the amount demanded and not by the amount of the debt.[40] In replevin it is the allegation of value of the property replevied.[41] The amount in excess of the jurisdiction must be waived.[42] In some jurisdictions this may not be done by amendment.[43] The fact that the judgment by inclusion of interest exceeds jurisdictional amount will not take case out of justice's jurisdiction,[44] but the justice may not allow interest antedating a judgment, where its effect would be to exceed the jurisdictional amount.[45] A statute requiring the consolidation of all demands of a nature to be consolidated and which do not exceed the jurisdictional amount when consolidated does not apply to distinct claims, the aggregate of which when consolidated exceeds that amount.[46] Laws giving justices jurisdiction where the balance due on a contract does not exceed a certain amount do not require that the balance should be agreed upon.[47]

Within the statutory limitations as to amount, he has jurisdiction of an action for damages for breach of contract for sale of personalty,[48] against a county court for the recovery of money due on a contract in West Virginia,[49] to recover penalties,[50] actions quasi ex contractu in Pennsylvania.[51]

64. Justices in Idaho have jurisdiction of the violation of gambling laws (In re Rowland [Idaho] 70 Pac. 610), and in North Carolina they have concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court of a violation of the anti-dueling law (State v. Fritz [N. C.] 45 S. E 957). In Kentucky justices of the peace have jurisdiction to try offense of wilfully obstructing public roads [Ky. St. §§ 1093, 1141] Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Baughman, 25 Ky. L. R. 705, 76 S. W. 351.

diction to commit a boy to the reform school.[66] A justice's jurisdiction, being strictly limited, is lost by disregard of statutes regulating procedure as by proceeding after an affidavit for change of venue is filed,[67] or continuance for longer than the statute allows.[68]

Objection to jurisdiction.—Objection to disqualification may be raised on appeal.[69] An objection to jurisdiction on the ground that the parties did not live in the justice's town is waived by going to trial without raising the objection.[70] It is an open question in New Jersey whether question of jurisdiction is waived by failure to object until after a jury has been demanded, impaneled and sworn.[71]

Acts in excess of jurisdiction may be restrained.[72]

§ 4. Procedure in justices' courts. In general.—A justice's court in Connecticut is a court of record.[73]

A suit in a justice's court is commenced by the delivery of the writ to the constable.[74] Error in commencing an action on Sunday may be waived by filing pleas of reconvention.[75]

A party may waive a tort and sue as on a contract.[76]

The docket of a justice is evidence of matters required by law to be stated therein and of other proceedings had before him in the cause which he may recite therein.[77]

Change of venue.—The affidavit for change of venue on the ground of bias should state reasons why affiant believes he could not obtain a fair trial.[78] The affidavit cannot be amended at the hearing,[79] and is not invalidated by failure of the notary to state the date of the expiration of his commission.[80] The entry of a judgment after a sufficient affidavit for change of venue is filed is a nullity.[81] The error in wrongfully denying the change is not waived by participation in the trial.[82] Where defendant, granted a change of venue, refuses to pay accrued costs as required by law, the justice may proceed with the trial.[83]

Contempt.—Where the alleged contempt was committed out of court, proceedings thereon must be based on complaint, information or affidavits, and the justice's record must show same.[84] Under laws allowing punishment by fine and imprisonment for contempt, a justice may sentence to imprisonment without imposing a fine.[85]

show the commission of an offense.[88] In Missouri, a justice cannot issue a warrant for an accused until the prosecuting attorney has filed an information, unless there is danger of escape or he is without a known place of abode and may not issue the warrant on the mere affidavit of the complaining party.[89] In Nebraska, a justice may not accept money in lieu of bail.[90]

Attachment and garnishment.—In Missouri, attachment will lie only where the property is in the justice's township or in the defendant's township or an adjoining township.[91] Attachment for rent will not be defeated on the ground that justice attached jurat as a notary public.[92] The Idaho act for the prorating of proceeds of attached property does not apply to justice's courts.[93] In Illinois, the trial of the right of property attached is had before the justice issuing the writ if he resides in the county, or if unable to attend then before some other justice in the county or before a justice of the county of the levy if the writ was issued from another county.[94]

The affidavit in garnishment must show the judgment on which the proceedings are based, the amount thereof and execution issued thereon and returned unsatisfied.[95] A mortgagee obtaining the release of an attachment levied on mortgaged property in the hands of a third person who is summoned in garnishment cannot object to an order requiring garnishee to pay a sum of money into court for the benefit of plaintiff.[96]

Process and appearance.—The summons in an action by a partnership need not recite that fact.[97] A copy of the cause of action is made a part of the summons in some states.[98] Jurisdiction of a corporation is not acquired by summons against the officers thereof as individuals.[99] In Nebraska, a summons must be served at least three days before the return day;[1] in New York, not less than six nor more than twelve days before the return day.[2] A summons is not rendered invalid by being made returnable on a holiday. The party may appear the first day thereafter.[3] An intervening holiday is not to be excluded.[4] The docket should show when the summons was issued,[5] and contain the officer's return.[6] Prior to return, the justice is without jurisdiction of the person of defendant.[7] A party may show that the summons was not served on him and that the return is incorrect.[8] In Texas, actions may not be commenced in justice courts against nonresidents by notice.[9] A provision governing entry of judgment where one of the defendants is a nonresident does not apply to a nonresident corporation whose secretary was served in another county, the corporation not having appointed an agent in the state on whom service could be made.[10]

Appearance confers jurisdiction.[11] The fact of appearance must be noted in the docket; it cannot be shown by parol evidence.[12] The appearance waives defects in process.[13] There is such appearance where the party asks a continuance.[14]

Pleadings and issues.—Formal pleadings are not required. A plain statement of the demand is sufficient.[15] Rights depend on what is proved and not what is pleaded.[16] A complaint may be filed, though the statute does not require formal pleadings.[17] The justice's summons may be a substitute for the complaint, where no other complaint is filed.[18] The account sued on must in some states be filed with the justice.[19] The title of a bill of particulars is a part of the pleading,[20] and merely formal defects therein will be disregarded.[21] A statement in the bill of particulars that the plaintiff is a partnership formed for the purpose of trade and doing business in the state suffices to sustain an action in the firm name.[22] No pleading is required on the part of an endorser as a basis for judgment against principal debtor.[23] The general issue is raised by appearance of defendant.[24] A failure of consideration for notes may be shown; it is not necessary to set up defense by way of counterclaim.[25] Under laws dispensing with formal pleadings in justices' courts, the contract of shipment is admissible on behalf of the carrier in an action for delay, though not pleaded.[26] A code provision as to the mode of proof and defense on an open account does not apply to actions for loss or destruction of goods by carrier.[27]

Set-off and counterclaim.—Set-off or counterclaim must be filed before trial.[28] The Wisconsin code allows a justice to dismiss a counterclaim for lack of supporting evidence after the jury is impaneled.[29]

Continuance and postponement.—A justice may grant continuances only where authorized by statute, as the court is one of limited jurisdiction,[30] and an unauthorized continuance will oust the court of jurisdiction.[31] A United States commissioner in Indian Territory having once obtained jurisdiction of subject-matter by filing complaint does not lose it by continuance of the action.[32] A general objection to a postponement will not raise the question of the sufficiency of the affidavit. The insufficiency must be pointed out specifically.[33] A justice's docket giving the reason for the adjournment is conclusive on that question.[34]

Dismissal.—A practice act against dismissal of suits by plaintiff, where set-off is set up, does not apply to the dismissal of appeals from justice courts.[35] A case dismissed for failure to comply with an order for costs may be commenced anew and the case will then stand as if originally commenced on the new complaint.[36]

Juries.—A jury trial is allowed in Alabama only on appeal to a jury from the judgment of a justice.[37] The right of trial by jury cannot be waived by failure of defendant to pay the jury fee.[38]

Trial and new trial.—Jurisdiction is lost by absence of the justice on the day to which the case is regularly adjourned,[39] and nonappearance of plaintiff on the return day of the summons will have the same effect in Michigan.[40] A new trial will not be granted on account of the justice reading his minutes of the evidence to the jury without requesting an absent party to return.[41] A Code provision allowing a new trial for absence of defendant at trial on a showing of injustice and excuse for absence does not apply where the party actually participated in the trial.[42]

Verdicts and judgments.—A finding by a jury that "we the jury find for the plaintiff and render judgment for a specified sum" is a verdict and not a judgment.[43] A justice in Nebraska may set aside a verdict for fraud, partiality or undue means.[44]

Judgments.—Formality is not required; the judgment is sufficient if the docket recites that the court rendered judgment for a certain amount and for designated sum as costs,[45] and may be aided by marginal notes, files and record.[46] Parties may in some states consent that case be taken under advisement, though the statute requires immediate entry of judgment.[47] In proceedings for trial of right of property in Nebraska, the only judgment the justice may render is for costs, the order for restoration not being a judgment, but merely the means of apprising the officer of the result of the proceeding.[48] On a summons returnable forthwith, a judgment by default is properly entered on the day of return.[49] A law requiring rendition of judgment within four days allows rendition on the fifth day, where the fourth day was Sunday.[50]

In some jurisdictions, a justice has power to set aside a judgment rendered by him.[51] Where the judgment is invalid, a direct suit will lie to set same aside,[52] but such suit may not be had before the justice, as he is without equity jurisdiction.[53] The existence of a meritorious defense must be shown,[54] and this rule applies equally where the action is to restrain enforcement.[55] Bar by limitations is such a defense.[56] A justice's judgment will not be enjoined where party has another adequate legal remedy.[57]

Where the justice has jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, the judgment is not subject to collateral attack,[58] and this is the case where the judgment is regular on its face.[59]

51. Upon the hearing of a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent a justice of the peace from setting aside a judgment rendered by him it is competent to prove by the parol testimony of the magistrate that the judgment which was apparently valid was in reality void as having been rendered at a time when no judgment could lawfully be rendered in his court. Bacon v. Jones, 117 Ga. 497. In Missouri a justice is without power to set aside a judgment at the instance of plaintiff, the statute allowing the justice power to set aside a judgment only giving that relief to defendant [Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 3969]. Crooker Shoe Co. v. Fry [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 313.

52. Where the defects invalidating a justice's judgment appear on the face of the transcript advantage thereof may be taken in an action to quiet title to land sold on an execution thereunder. Purdy v. Law [Mich.] 94 N. W. 182. An action to set aside a justice's judgment all parties in interest being made defendants is a direct and not a collateral attack and proof outside the record as to service of process on which the judgment is based is admissible. A justice's judgment duly transcripted has the same effect as if rendered by a court of record.[60] A suit on a justice's judgment is barred after five years in Missouri, and may be revived by scire facias at any time within five years.[61] The Mississippi circuit courts have jurisdiction of foreign justices' judgments where the amount of the judgment plus costs paid by plaintiff therein exceed $200.[62]

The judgment of a justice is not such a record as entitles it to be introduced without proof of the handwriting of the justice who rendered it.[63]

Executions.—The justice's docket must separately state the items for which execution is issued.[64] The execution may be amended,[65] and is not invalid for failure to fill unnecessary blanks.[66] Where the constable made two returns, one on the execution which showed a valid garnishment and another on the notice to the garnishee, insufficient for failure to make the declaration to the garnishee as required by law, the return on the execution will control.[67] Several executions in favor of different persons cannot when levied on the same property be met by a single claim of property by a third person.[68] Rights acquired by a bona fide purchaser on an execution on a justice's judgment fair on its face will be protected, though the judgment be invalid.[69] A justice may not quash an execution.[70]

Costs.—Requirement of security for costs in suits by nonresidents is waived by appearance and request for postponement.[71] In Louisiana, defendant in a peace bond proceeding cannot be required to pay costs.[72]

§ 5. Appeal and error.—Errors of the justice in matters of which he had jurisdiction will be reviewed only by appeal and not by writ of review,[73] nor by prohibition,[74] nor by injunction.[75] The right of appeal in particular actions,[76]

or by one of several defendants,[77] or by a garnishee,[78] being dependent on statute, is sometimes restricted. The appeal lies only from a final judgment,[79] and in most states is given only where a stated amount is involved.[80]

An appeal from a justice's judgment in an ordinary action amounts to a general appearance in the case,[81] and waives irregularity in the service of process.[82] It vacates the judgment until appeal is disposed of, but on dismissal of appeal the justice's judgment becomes final.[83] While the error proceeding from an order discharging an attachment is pending, the justice may try the action, but has no jurisdiction to tax the costs to either party.[84]

Some states require a showing of good faith.[85]

Appellate jurisdiction.—An appeal will lie to the supreme court of Indiana where the proper construction of a statute is in question.[86] The court to which the appeal is taken is limited by the jurisdiction of the justice,[87] and where the Severance v. Elliott [Vt.] 56 Atl. 85.

80. A county court has no jurisdiction of an appeal by defendant where sum demanded in reconvention is less than $20. He may not on appeal increase the sum above that originally demanded. Barnes v. Feagon [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 329. Where an execution issues from a justice court for less than $50 and is levied on property worth more than $50 either party to a claim case growing out of such levy may appeal to the superior court. justice had no jurisdiction, the higher court has none;[88] hence, the appellate court may not enter a judgment in excess of the justice's jurisdiction.[89] The amount in controversy at the time of rendition of judgment by the justice controls and fixes the status as to jurisdiction on appeal.[90] A court to which an appeal is taken by one filing a plea of reconvention in the lower court in excess of the justice's jurisdiction is not ousted of jurisdiction by defendant's abandonment of his appeal, this not amounting to an abandonment of the plea.[91] When the justice determines that the action involves title to real estate, the appellate court takes original jurisdiction without regard to whether his determination is right.[92] In Alabama, no plea in abatement having been filed for want of jurisdiction in that the amount demanded exceeded the jurisdiction on appeal, the case will be treated as though it originated in the appellate court and the recovery may exceed the amount of the justice's jurisdiction.[93] In Virginia, the appeal in the first instance is to the county or corporation court of the county, except in cases involving constitutionality of ordinances and by-laws, when the appeal is to the circuit having jurisdiction over the county or corporation.[94]

Time for taking appeal.—In New York, the time allowed one not personally served and not appearing runs from time of service of notice of judgment.[95] An appeal from a justice's judgment in an unlawful detainer action is returnable to the circuit court in Missouri within six days after its rendition, if rendered during term of circuit court to which appeal is taken.[96] That appeal was taken within the statutory three days is shown where the traverse was filed and bond executed the second day after the trial as shown by the record.[97] The appeal will be allowed on a showing of ignorance of rendition of judgment within the statutory time, where defendant is a nonresident and action is commenced on attachment and the party has used diligence.[98]

Notice of appeal.—Notice of appeal may be served either on the adverse party or his attorney.[99] In unlawful detainer in Missouri, it must be given ten days before the first day of the term at which the cause is to be determined.[1] Under the Iowa practice, a failure to give notice of an appeal ten days before the next term after rendition continues the case over such term, unless there is a waiver or voluntary appearance.[2] The notice is not defective for failure to state the date of the judgment; the style of the cause and the name of the justice rendering the judgment being given.[3]

Bonds.—An undertaking must be given.[4] In Texas, it is not necessary for appellant to give bond where judgment against him is for costs only.[5] It is gen-

4. An act allowing the prosecution of suit by a poor person without furnishing security for costs does not extend the privilege so as erally sufficient where there is a substantial compliance with statutory requirements.[6] In Nebraska, an appeal bond approved by the justice is sufficient, though signed only by the judgment debtors.[7] The bond must be approved.[8] In Minnesota, the sureties may justify before the court commissioner of the proper county.[9] Provisions as to the time of filing appeal bonds are strictly construed.[10] Insufficiency of bond on appeal is waived where the objecting party interposes a counterclaim and participates in a trial of all the issues.[11] One filing a defective appeal undertaking should be allowed to file a new undertaking.[12] A surety on appeal bond is liable on the judgment, though appeal never formally entered in appellate court. The "affirmance" on which the bond is conditioned may be had by the act of the party in failing to enter appeal.[13]

Transcripts and records.—It is the duty of the justice to transmit transcript and he may not delegate the duty to an attorney of one of the parties.[14] The transcript must be complete[15] and certified.[16] A justice amending a transcript in obedience to a rule may not amend as to matters required by such rule.[17] In Wisconsin, the law allows compulsion of justice's return, even after expiration of term of office, and in case of death of justice, to ascertain facts as to trial below by witnesses.[18] A transcript of a justice is not evidence of anything transpiring out of court or not in the regular progress of a cause.[19]

Dismissal.—The appeal will be dismissed for failure to prosecute same with diligence,[20] unreasonable delay in making return,[21] neglect to pay filing fee,[22] failure to give undertaking.[23] It may be dismissed on motion by an appellee

where appellant has failed to perfect his appeal by filing his transcript, the appellee not seeking to avail himself of his right to produce a transcript and have judgment of affirmance entered.[24] An appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file the transcript within the statutory time, where appellant was blameless,[25] nor because the transcript is not complete,[26] nor because title to realty is involved, before hearing proof of that fact,[27] nor for failure of defendant to appear where he has answered and raised a material issue,[28] nor for failure to send up certificate as to the payment of costs accruing in the trial of the cause, as this is a matter between the magistrate and the party liable,[29] nor for failure to docket for the proper term where the error was that of the clerk.[30] A motion to dismiss an appeal taken on questions of law only is properly overruled where irregularities alleged do not affect jurisdiction of court over appeal.[31] An order of a county court dismissing an appeal from a justice for lack of jurisdiction is not a final order from which appeal may be taken.[32] An appellate court may reinstate a case improperly dismissed.[33]

Trial term.—In North Carolina, an appeal is to be docketed on the trial docket for the next term, though it is a criminal term.[34] In Delaware, the appeal shall be tried at the first term after the appeal unless continued for cause.[35]

Pleadings and issues.—A plea for the first time in the appellate court is governed by rules of such appellate court.[36] The insufficiency of an affidavit is waived if no motion to dismiss the appeal for defects therein is made.[37] Amendments not changing the issues are allowable[38] within the court's discretion.[39] An amendment in excess of the statutory amount ousts the court of jurisdiction.[40] Necessary affidavits not filed in the justice court may be filed in the appellate court. Counterclaims and set-offs not pleaded in the justice court may not be set up on appeal.[41] A plea of general issue in the appellate court admits the filing of a declaration so as to allow an amendment.[42] A plea to jurisdiction on the ground of nonresidence is waived by plea of general issue in the appellate court.[43] Issues

43. Ovid Tp. v. Haire [Mich.] 94 N. W. 1060. Though on the trial of an action against partners in a justice court defend-on appeal are those tried by the justice.[44] Extrinsic evidence to show the nature of a case tried before a justice on a motion directed against an alleged change of issues on appeal should be clear, convincing and satisfactory.[45] On appeal, a party may not avail himself of the fact that no undertaking for costs on a postponement was required where the attention of the justice was not called to the omission.[46] On the trial of an appeal regularly taken, the court may not pass upon the legality of the procedure below.[47]

Trial and judgment.—A case stands for trial de novo where the appeal is on questions of both law and fact.[48] On appeal from an order of a justice denying a motion to open a default judgment, the court may disregard the justice's findings and try the case anew.[49] Where case is tried de novo, the trial is to be without regard to defects in proceedings before the justice.[50] Jury may be claimed on the trial of appeal, though waived before the justice.[51] The superior court in which an appeal to be tried de novo is pending may not vacate the judgment on mere motion.[52] The offer to confess judgment on appeal to save costs must be served on the party representing the party in appellate court.[53] Under laws allowing appellee an affirmance on the payment of a docket fee on failure of appellant to perfect the appeal within the statutory time, the docketing by the clerk without payment by the party will not entitle him to affirmance.[54]

Review.—The court in error proceedings will not review questions raised for the first time in an appeal.[55]

Judicial notice and presumptions.—Courts will take judicial notice of the justice's district.[56]

Nothing can be presumed in favor of jurisdiction; such jurisdiction must appear affirmatively on the face of the proceedings.[57] Appellate courts presume that the justice heard proofs before rendering a default judgment,[58] and that damages assessed were properly ascertained, though that fact does not appear in the judgment.[59] There is a presumption that the debt declared on was within the justice's jurisdiction where the judgment was within the amount and the docket showed plaintiff's appearance and the filing of a written complaint and proof of debt.[60] Under a requirement that justices enter the time of the appearance of the parties, there is no presumption of plaintiff's appearance on the return day where the docket makes no mention of such appearance.[61] County courts in New York may reverse judgments where against the weight of evidence.[62]

Determination.—In an error proceeding from an order discharging an attachment, the only judgment the appellate court may render is the judgment affirming or reversing the order of the justice and taxing the costs.[63] Where the justice's judgment was erroneous and the only error in a default judgment of reversal on appeal was in the taxation of costs, which excess was trifling, an order vacating the judgment of reversal was erroneous.[64] A judgment for restitution "for damages, interest and costs" on reversal of a justice's judgment which has been collected is erroneous under laws declaring that the appellate court shall order the amount collected restored with interest.[65] In some jurisdictions, it is proper to retain the case for trial on reversal.[66] Where the only question on appeal was as to the propriety of the justice's ruling on a jurisdictional question, the fact of a meritorious defense is not material on a motion to set aside a default judgment of reversal.[67] Where the order discharging the attachment is reversed, the justice is reinvested with complete jurisdiction of ancillary proceedings, and may then tax the attachment costs against the unsuccessful party.[68]

§ 6. Certiorari. Nature and propriety of remedy.—Certiorari may not be resorted to where the party has a remedy by appeal.[69] It will not lie to set aside a verdict or judgment which is absolutely void.[70] Judgments are reviewable by certiorari where no appeal is provided by statute,[71] and where the justice has proceeded after losing jurisdiction.[72]

[N. Y.] 101. A county court in New York may reverse a judgment on appeal as against the weight of evidence and order a new trial before the same justice or before another justice to be designated [Laws 1900, c. 553, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 3063]. Hartmann v. Hoffman, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 449, 12 Ann. Cas. 124. Westover v. Van Dorn Iron Works Co. [Neb.] 97 N. W. 598. The effect of a reversal of justice's judgment dismissing an action is to reopen the case for trial in the appellate court [Rev. Code N. D. 1899, § 6771a]. Olson v. Shirley [N. D.] 96 N. W. 297. A code provision that when the justice's judgment is reversed the appellate court shall retain the case for trial refers only to cases which have been entirely disposed of by final order will not cover reversal of order discharging attachment merely. Rhodes v. Samuels [Neb.] 93 N. W. 148. justice in a case pending until after the final determination of the case, even though the decision amounts to a final determination of the case.[73] The time within which writ will be granted is governed by statute.[74] Mandamus will lie to compel its dismissal where granted after the expiration of the statutory time.[75] Where a summons in a suit for unlawful detainer and writ of certiorari removing the case were served the same day, there is a presumption that the clerk did not issue certiorari until after service of summons.[76] The justice is the sole respondent and it is improper to make a party to the cause a party respondent.[77]

Proceedings for writ.—A writ of certiorari to a justice may be served by a private person.[78] The testimony should be set out in the answer,[79] and the answer should be authenticated.[80] The testimony need not be set out in the return where the conviction is not summary.[81]

Bond must be given,[82] which may be amended where filed within such time as shall not delay other party.[83]

Hearing and questions which may be raised.—At the hearing of a certiorari in the superior court under the Georgia practice, nothing can be considered by the judge but the petition and the answer, unless the parties consent to wider scope of inquiry and this though the judge has private knowledge of facts not disclosed in the record.[84] Where the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment, the certiorari is properly overruled.[85] Where verdict is not demanded under law or evidence, new trial should be granted.[86] Certiorari should be sustained where

80. Where the magistrate's answer to the writ did not verify the statement in plaintiff's petition that a verdict and judgment were rendered against him nor disclose what disposition if any was made of the case the superior court has no jurisdiction to sustain the certiorari. Garrett v. McIntosh, 116 Ga. 911. The certificate by the justice that "true copies of all the proceedings in said cause are herewith sent up" is not a verification of the correctness of the statements contained in the petition for certiorari. Southern R. Co. v. Leggett, 117 Ga. 31. Where the evidence is not properly authenticated by the justice and no exceptions to the answer have been filed as required by law the superior court may on its own motion dismiss the certiorari for ambiguity. Id. A certificate that "the foregoing brief of testimony is true in substance and in form, as far as I can recollect," signed before the petition for certiorari had been presented to the judge of the superior court, is not a substitute for the authentication of the evidence in the answer required by law. illegal testimony of a prejudicial character was admitted.[87] There is a presumption of jurisdiction where the petition to review judgment does not deny jurisdiction,[88] and that a case was heard while the court was in lawful session.[89] A certiorari in Georgia may be dismissed on the ground that a question of fact was involved, no appeal to the jury having been entered, the case involving less than $50.[90] It may not be objected that a justice was without jurisdiction because of a district court having cognizance of the action in the city, where there is no proof that the justice resided in the city.[91]

Judgment.—Under the Georgia practice, the court may render final judgment where the error complained of is an error of law,[92] and in cases where certiorari is overruled.[93] Judgment on certiorari setting aside a judgment is improper where the record shows its satisfaction and discharge before the justice made his return thereon.[94]

hold is created if the occupancy may continue during life.[99] One holding premises under contract to purchase cannot be summarily dispossessed as a tenant.[1]

§ 2. Creation of the relation. Leases. Parties.—The lessor's estate must be sufficient to support possession.[2] The lease may be made by an agent,[3] and his authority may be implied,[4] or an unauthorized lease may be ratified.[5] Joint agents or trustees must concur.[6] Lessees may hold in common.[7] Leases by public[8] or private corporations[9] may be made within their powers.

11. A formal lease was contemplated. St. Louis Brew. Ass'n v. Niederluecke [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 645. "Agreement to lease" held not to have created a tenancy where tenant rescinded before taking possession and while landlord was still looking up tenant's references. Foster v. Clifford, 86 N. Y. Supp. 28.

Whether a writing is a lease or a mere lease, does not create the relation,[12] yet a person entering as a prospective lessee may actually be a tenant.[13] Acceptance and entry into possession are essential.[14] The lease should purport to be the act of the person charged or entitled.[15] An expired lease may prove tenancy and disprove a purchase.[16] A materially altered lease will be rejected.[17]

A lease of premises for immoral purposes is void, conferring no rights on lessee.[18]

The relation reaches to all who obtain possession through the tenant,[19] though for certain purposes not to a subtenant,[20] there being no privity of contract with a subtenant.[21] However, by the assumption of all terms and obligations of the lease by an assignee thereof, a contract may be established between such assignee and the landlord.[22] This the original lessee has no power to annul.[23] Where the tenant surrendered but the landlord procured him to collect rent from a subtenant and conceal the fact of surrender, he thereby accepted such subtenant as a tenant.[24]

Actionable use and occupation.—A landlord may waive trespass and accept the trespasser as a tenant,[25] and recover for use and occupation if the premises were apparently private.[26]

The statute of frauds requires leases for longer than a specified term to be written,[27] but a tenancy may arise from entry and possession and payment of rent

27. See Frauds, Statute of, 2 Curr. Law, 108. A parol lease until landlord could obtain a new tenant, the tenant being in fact secured within a year, held not within the statute of frauds. Drew v. Billings-Drew Co. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 774. One agreeing to lease concurrently with agreement of landlord to make improvements cannot claim agreement void under statute of frauds because making of improvements not stated as part of con-

under a void lease,[28] and the statute is no defense to liability for use and occupation.[29] A parol lease for such term, to begin in futuro, is void.[30] Taking possession and payment of rent will take a parol lease out of the statute.[31] A lease wanting the signature of the lessee may be valid by estoppel.[32]

Breach of agreement to make lease.—A tenant's refusal to execute a lease as agreed makes no cause of action where he attorned by consent.[33] Earnest money may be recovered back where the prospective tenant refuses in good faith to make a lease.[34]

Construction of leases, and proof of the terms of tenancy.—The wording, read in connection with the surrounding circumstances, the subject-matter and the situation of the parties, must enable the land leased to be located.[35] A word may be construed according to the sense required.[36] The lease may contain collateral contracts.[37] Where complete in itself other instruments will be disregarded.[38] The ordinary rule as to parol explanations of writings prevails.[39] A void lease may be evidence of amount of rent only.[40] An occupant during a term who is not by assignment or otherwise a party to the lease is not presumed to be in under it.[41] A hold over is presumed to be on the same terms.[42] A provision onerous to the

tenant will be presumed to run with the land, even after expiration of the lease.[43] A tenant cannot recover against his landlord for failure to fulfill covenants alleged to have been made by parol prior to execution of the lease.[44]

Reformation will be ordered where it is evident a lease has omitted material covenants through inadvertence of draftsman.[45]

§ 3. The different kinds of tenancies and their incidents.[46] Tenancy for a term or from year to year or term to term.—One who enters[47] under a lease for a year, void because parol and to begin in futuro,[48] or a tenant for a year holding over,[49] becomes a tenant from year to year. By holding over where tenancy was for one month only, a month to month tenancy is established.[50] Such a tenancy results from accepting a month's rent under a void lease.[51] An oral lease of city property has been held to operate as a lease from month to month.[52]

Tenancy at will.—A tenant at will is one whose estate, commenced under agreement with the landlord, is determinable at the will of either party.[53] Tenancy at will may be established in a variety of ways. Thus the relation may be established by entry into possession with the consent of the landlord pending negotiations for a formal lease;[54] by holding over by consent of landlord until personal property can be removed;[55] by the payment and acceptance of a month's rent under no agreement whatsoever;[56] by entry into possession under an agreement with the landlord, void under the statute of frauds.[57] The owner must consent, mere knowledge does not suffice.[58] The payment of rent in fixed periods may change it to a tenancy from year to year.[59] A tenant at will enjoys control of the premises the same as a tenant for a specified period.[60] He is entitled to grass grown on the premises, and may recover for destruction thereof while it is still standing.[61] who held over did so on a new agreement. Bon v. Fenlon, 84 N. Y. Supp. 858.

43. Special provision in a lease for a year adverse to lessee, there being neither actual payment of rent nor removal, will be held to run with the land after the expiration of the term, there being continued possession. Kennedy v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 119 Iowa, 29.

58. Agreement to pay for prior occupancy if owner would let him remain does not show it, nor does the bringing of ejectment before time for such payment. Center Creek Min. Co. v. Frankenstein [Mo.] 78 S. W. 785.

59. In South Carolina, one holding over after the termination of a parol lease for a year, is a tenant at will. This may be changed to a tenancy from year to year, where, the entry having been under a void parol lease, the tenant pays the rent that accrues after the year from the time he first entered. Matthews v. Hipp, 66 S. C. 162. In West Virginia, a party entering under an unsealed lease for a term in excess of five years is a tenant at will. Where, however, the rental is paid periodically, he becomes a tenant from year to year. An abandonment of the premises in the latter case will not annul the relation of landlord and tenant. A notice of intention to vacate is necessary. Arbenz v. Exley, 52 W. Va. 476.

61. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hall [Ark.] 74 S. W. 293.

holds over after the termination of his lease.[62] By statute, a tenant at sufferance may be made liable for rent.[63] Legally speaking, a tenant at sufferance is a wrongdoer. He is not, therefore, entitled to notice to vacate.[64]

§ 4. Rights and interests remaining in the landlord. A. Reversion.—The landlord is entitled to the residue of the estate left after the termination of the leasehold period.[65] By reason of this interest, a landlord may sue for injury to the freehold by a third party, even though the tenant be in possession.[66] The duty of the tenant to return the premises in good condition is elsewhere treated.[67]

(§ 4) B. Right of re-entry and control.—In the absence of express agreement,[68] a landlord may not re-enter and assume control for mere breach of covenant; otherwise, for breach of a condition on which the lease depends.[69] The right of re-entry must be peaceably exercised.[70] A provision for forfeiture for breach of covenant is not exclusive of other remedies.[71]

(§ 4) C. Estoppel of tenant to deny title.—A tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title.[72] Based on this doctrine, a declaration in trespass and ejectment

65. Sittel v. Wright [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 434. That the lease was illegal in no way affects landlord's reversionary right. Id. The "Curtis Act," as applied to the Indian Territory, does not affect the obligation of a white man as lessee to restore premises to Indian lessor at termination of period. Fraer v. Washington [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 280. A telegraph company as tenant on a railroad's right of way, under agreement by which rent was paid and telegraph company placed under obligation to vacate at end of term acquires no equities thereby assisting it in condemning the demised premises and preventing reversion. 68. Where the lease makes provision for re-entry for breach of covenant, upon breach the re-entry may be without notice. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248. In Vincent v. Crane [Mich.] 97 N. W. 34, sale of produce held violation of covenant warranting re-entry where, under agreement, sale was to be only upon mutual consent. Where, however, the lease contains no such provision, ejectment cannot be maintained, the remedy in such case being an action for damages. Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Ass'n v. Sanders, 68 N. J. Law, 631. A mortgagee of a leasehold interest subsequently assigned subject to his mortgage may pay rent and taxes left unpaid by the assignee, and thereby prevent re-entry by lessor under a lease providing for such re-entry in case of default in payment of taxes. Dunlop v. James, 174 N. Y. 411. Damages suffered by lessor for breach of covenant that upon lessee's bankruptcy lessor might re-enter and recover loss sustained by lack of a tenant, held not provable against bankrupt's estate. In re Shaffer, 124 Fed. 111. In Washington, under code, default by tenant where lease gives right of re-entry therefor, right of forcible entry and eviction not open to landlord. Spencer v. Commercial Co., 30 Wash. 520, 71 Pac. 53.

69. Spencer v. Commercial Co., 30 Wash. 520, 71 Pac. 53, where subletting without authority held no ground for re-entry. California Civ. Code, § 791, gives a right of re-entry on default during term. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073. In Illinois, upon default not more than ten days' notice of termination of tenancy need be given. And although by the lease right of re-entry for default is not given, the right exists by law. Drew v. Mosbarger, 104 Ill. App. 635.

70. In California that a landlord has the right to retake premises does not necessarily justify him in making forcible entry thereon. Kerr v. O'Keefe, 138 Cal. 415, 71 Pac. 447. Allegation that defendant "unlawfully entered on the land and then and there turned this plaintiff out of possession thereof * * * and ever since * * * said defendants have held and still hold possession thereof" does not allege unlawful entry and forcible detainer in one count. Id. The term "liquidated damages" used in a lease is not conclusive as to actual damages suffered. Caesar v. Rubinson, 174 N. Y. 492.

71. Though a lease provides that lessor may declare forfeiture for breach of covenant, the lessor may waive forfeiture and proceed by any other remedy open. Springer v. Chicago Real Estate, L. & T. Co., 202 Ill. 17.

72. A tenant cannot show that his landlord has failed to make improvements necessary to the validity of his title (Ellis v. Fitzpatrick [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 430), or that, no previous notice having been given, he himself has acquired title by adverse possession (Sittel v. Wright [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 434), or that he has attorned to another claiming a paramount title (Wilson v. Lyons [Neb.] 94 N. W. 636). Compare Piper v. Cashell [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 614. See for further illustration Ikard v. Minter [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 852; Turner v. Gilleland [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 253; Swift v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 42; Allen v. Hall [Neb.] 92 N. W. 171; Adams v. Shirk [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 801; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pa. R. Co., 120 Fed. 363; Jones v. Reilly, 174 N. Y. 97. In Montana, the statutory provision that when the relation of landlord and ten-which states the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant is sufficient.[73] He does not hold adversely so as to obtain title by limitations[74] until he repudiates the tenancy.[75] This rule obtains even though at the time of the execution of the lease the tenant was in possession claiming title in himself,[76] unless he was induced to make the lease by fraud.[77] A tenant cannot deny the landlord's title by assailing the lease for want of authority in tenant's agent to negotiate it.[78] The estoppel of a tenant extends to his assignees.[79]

§ 5. Mutual rights and liabilities in demised premises. A. Occupation and enjoyment.[80]—A covenant for quiet enjoyment may be implied from a demise,[81] and either refusal to put the tenant into possession,[82] or a wrongful eviction,[83] is a breach thereof. The extent of the landlord's right of re-entry and how it must ant has existed, the tenant's possession is deemed that of the landlord until the expiration of five years from termination of tenancy applies only when tenant is holding possession obtained under the lease. Talbott v. Butte City Water Co. [Mont.] 73 Pac. 1111. It has been held that as a defense to an action for rent, the tenant may show that the landlord has parted with the title to the premises, including right to rent after the transfer. Allen v. Hall [Neb.] 92 N. W. 171. One holding a tax certificate prior to his tenancy may, upon becoming a tenant, notify his landlord that he will acquire a tax deed if landlord fails to redeem. Although he obtains such deed, however, the presumption that he is not denying his landlord's title renders it unnecessary that he be made a party defendant to an action to foreclose a mortgage on the premises. Brown v. Atlanta Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [Fla.] 35 So. 403. A tenant may buy the title of his landlord at foreclosure sale. The fact of purchase and of lease from purchaser may, in such case, be shown by subtenant as defense to action of unlawful detainer. Moston v. Stow, 91 Mo. App. 554. The rule obtains, also, as between white men, citizens of the United States, in the Indian Territory. Ellis v. Fitzpatrick [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 430.

73. Ayotte v. Johnson [R. I.] 56 Atl. 110.

74. A tenant cannot acquire title to land by limitation as against one to whom he pays for the use thereof. Slattery v. Slattery [Iowa] 95 N. W. 201.

75. The statute of limitations begins to run upon repudiation by tenant of his tenancy. New York & Tex. Land Co. v. Dooley [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1030. While it is the general rule that this estoppel continues until the tenant delivers possession (Sittel v. Wright [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 434), it has been held that where a tenant has brought home to his landlord the fact of his definite and continued denial of his landlord's title, his possession may be deemed adverse without surrender of premises (Neff v. Ryman, 100 Va. 521).

82. That another tenant held under full right, barring delivery to lessee, does not relieve lessor. Bernhard v. Curtis, 75 Conn. 476. Rendering premises unfit for occupation by remodelling of same constitutes eviction entitling tenant to damages. That the contractors violated landlord's instructions, where their conduct was within apparent scope of authority and tenant had no notice of excess thereof, did not lessen landlord's liability. Wusthoff v. Schwartz, 32 Wash. 337, 73 Pac. 407, the court holding, also, that payment of rent in advance did not constitute constructive acquiescence in acts of the landlord.

83. A contract to lease will not be deemed to have been broken from evidence of breach from which no rational mind can infer the fact to be established. Vogeler v. Devries [Md.] 56 Atl. 782. A lessee from one having no title suffers no harm until he be evicted or required to pay rent a second time by the true owner. Sherman v. Spalding [Mich.] 93 N. W. 613. It is a breach of the lease for the lessor to enter and exclude the lessees though it is professedly done to protect him from injury to the premises. Waller v. Cockfield, 111 La. ----, 35 So. 778. In Texas, a distress warrant must be alleged to have been sued out "unjustly" as well as "illegally" in order to enable tenant to recover. Hurst v. Benson [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 417. For eviction in accordance with law, action for damages by tenant against landlord will not lie. Juergen v. Allegheny County, 204 Pa. 501. The term "eviction" is now applied to any form of expulsion. Griesheimer v. Bothman, 105 Ill. App. 585. In North Dakota, for recovery of treble damages for forcible ejectment, the entry must be with force, though not necessarily applied. Wegner v. Lubenow [N. be exercised is elsewhere treated.[84] Only eviction will breach the covenant for quiet enjoyment.[85] Payment of rent is not necessarily prerequisite to the right to quiet enjoyment.[86] A tenant may treat an eviction from a portion of the premises as an eviction from the whole.[87] Acts of the landlord substantially impairing the enjoyment of the premises and causing the tenant to remove therefrom amount to a constructive eviction.[88] The general measure of damages for eviction or failure to give possession is the difference between the value of the term and the stipulated rental,[89] but special damages may be awarded[90] if pleaded.[91] If the eviction be partial, damages therefrom may be set off against rent.[92] A lease of part of a building impliedly covers right to use whatever is reasonably necessary to

89. The measure of damages for failure to give possession is the difference between the reserved rent and the rental value. Evidence of rent paid by lessees for other premises is incompetent. Rosenblum v. Riley, 84 N. Y. Supp. 884. Tenant not put into possession may recover difference between rental value and rent reserved and also special damages which are natural but not necessary consequences of breach. Williamson v. Stevens, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 518. The lease having been for "telephone call booths" it is not provable on the special damages alleged that a very high profit would have accrued from the patronage of curb brokers of which patronage the lessor had not been informed. Williamson v. Stevens, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 518. A distress warrant made part of landlord's pleadings need not be introduced in evidence by tenant in counterclaim for damages for its service. Hurst v. Benson [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 417. Lessees of a cotton gin may recover what they would have earned during the remainder of the term (Waller v. Cockfield, 111 La. ——, 35 So. 778), and where the eviction is tortious exemplary damages have been given (Id.). A lessor failing to deliver premises after payment of first installment of rent is properly chargeable with costs in suit by lessee to recover money paid. Deluise v. Long Island R. Co., 174 N. Y. 516. In ascertaining damages resulting from dispossession, net income of business prior thereto may be shown. Gildersleeve v. Overstolz, 90 Mo. App. 518. Value of services in breaking land and mowing weeds prior to breach, and of services in removing corn thereafter made necessary by the breach, not recoverable. Rogers v. McGuffey [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 817. For breach by landlord of lease providing for delivery of one-half of crops as rental, measure of damages held to be reasonable market value of one half crop less amount tenant earned or could reasonably have earned after breach. Rogers v. McGuffey [Tex.] 74 S. W. 753; Id. [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 817. In tenant's counterclaim for damages for service of distress warrant, tenant may not show landlord's reputation for honesty and fair dealing to be bad. Hurst v. Benson [Tex. Civ. App.] 71 S. W. 417.

91. In order that special damages may be recovered, they must be alleged. Drischman v. McManemin, 68 N. J. Law, 337. In order that the damage so suffered may be awarded or deducted from rent otherwise due, the amount of the damage must be definitely pleaded and proven. Riggs v. Gray [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. the enjoyment thereof.[93] Since the maintenance of a nuisance is against public policy, an agreement of a landlord to insure quiet enjoyment, though the tenant maintain a nuisance on the premises, is void as against public policy.[94]

(§ 5) B. Assignment and subletting.—In the absence of provision in regard thereto, the right of tenant to sublet is implied. Where, however, the lease prohibits subletting except upon express consent of lessor, burden to establish such consent rests on lessee,[95] and is liable in damages if he sublet without it.[96] A covenant against assignment of lease without lessor's consent is inapplicable to a case in which assignee takes by operation of law.[97] The sublessee is entitled to possession,[98] and his right cannot be impaired by surrender by the lessee[99] or re-entry by lessor,[1] but where the lessor's consent was on condition, the sublessee takes subject thereto.[2] An assignee is liable to the lessor.[3] A definite contract of subletting should be shown; thus, the grant of privilege to an employe to use a house on the premises,[4] or the entry into contract by the tenant to pay another a salary and to allow him in addition a portion of the profits for managing the estate,[5] does not constitute a subletting.[6] So, also, an assignment of a lease absolute on its face may be shown by parol to be in effect a transfer as collateral security only.[7] A sale at foreclosure is not an assignment.[8] The presumption that one in possession of leased premises, occupying after lessee without knowledge of lessor, has taken an assignment of the lease, may be overcome by a showing that occupant is a subtenant or licensee of lessee.[9] Though a sublease be voidable either as executed without authority or for failure to comply with the statute of frauds, it may be validated by estoppel.[10] The lessor's assignee may be held liable for charges previously incurred by the tenant.[11] A purchaser from the landlord assumes the latter's status toward the tenant.[12] The effect of assignment on rights and liabilities as to rent is elsewhere treated.[13] Between a lessor and sublessee there exists neither privity of contract nor estate.[14] Privity of contract may be established, however, by attornment of sublessee to lessor.[15]

(§ 5) C. Repairs and improvements.—No implied contract exists on part of landlord to make repairs,[16] and accordingly he cannot be charged with repairs[17] or betterments made by the tenant.[18] But statutes in some states require the lessor to keep the premises in habitable repair,[19] and if in such case, lessor refuses to make repairs reasonably necessary, they may be made by lessee and charged to lessor,[20] but such failure does not terminate the lease.[21] A lessor may, of course, bind himself to make repairs,[22] and if he fails to comply with his covenant, the tenant may

21. A covenant to repair in case of injury or destruction is independent, and failure to comply therewith does not release tenant from rent. Tenant may in such case either sue directly for damages, or recoup himself therefor when action for rent is instituted. Arbenz v. Exley, 52 W. Va. 476.

22. Promise of landlord to repair made to tenant after execution of lease and occupation by tenant is void for want of consideration. Gavan v. Norcross, 117 Ga. 356; Whitehead v. Comstock [R. I.] 56 Atl. 446. In itself alone, the striking out of the words "and external" from a clause in a lease providing that tenant "should make any and all repairs, internal and external" does not cre-recoup loss therefrom.[23] The lessee cannot recover, however, where the lessor has acted with reasonable promptness upon discovering the defect.[24] Though a landlord is under obligation to repair, he need not make good patent defects existing at time of leasing and of which both parties were cognizant.[25] An obligation to repair cannot be construed as an obligation to rebuild in case of destruction,[26] nor will an agreement that rent shall cease upon the destruction of a building leased obligate lessor to rebuild.[27] A landlord may, of course, bind himself to rebuild in case premises are destroyed.[28] A tenant may, also, bind himself to make repairs and prevent deterioration. In such case, the cause rendering performance necessary is immaterial. And if he fails to perform, the landlord may have the repairs made and charged to tenant.[29]

(§ 5) D. Insurance and taxes.—A lessee does not impliedly contract to keep premises insured nor to pay for insurance placed thereon.[30] Permitting insurance to lapse does not constitute breach of a covenant in a lease to have insurance written.[31]

A lessee does not impliedly contract to pay taxes.[32] Where the lease contains a covenant that lessee shall pay taxes, the same will be deemed assumed as part of the rent.[33] An ordinary covenant to pay taxes does not obligate lessee to pay the taxes levied on the rental which he himself pays to the lessor.[34] A covenant ate a covenant on part of landlord to make external repairs. Castagnette v. Nicchia, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 371. The word "exterior" as applied to a hotel and used in a lease in specifying by whom repairs are to be made, covers a partly covered wooden platform or sidewalk from the exterior wall to a railroad platform, used as means of ingress, and for a refreshment pavilion. May v. Ennis, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 552. Where agreement is made that the expense of repairs shall be borne equally by landlord and tenant, a further provision that repairs desired by either shall be submitted to the other may be waived by tenant, either directly or by acts indicative of such intent. to pay taxes promptly when due is broken by failure to pay until some time after due. That payment is made before imposition of penalty does not alter the rule.[35]

(§ 5) E. Injuries from defects and dangerous condition. To tenant or his servant.—The relation between landlord and tenant is purely contractual. In the absence of express provision otherwise, the tenant takes the premises as he finds them, and if by reason of defects then existing or subsequently arising, the tenant suffers loss, he cannot hold the landlord liable therefor.[36] That the defects were known to the landlord and could not be known to the tenant by the exercise of ordinary diligence does not alter the rule.[37] If the landlord is by statute or covenant bound to make repairs,[38] he is liable for damages resulting from his failure to do so.[39] It is to be carefully observed that the want of implied obligation of the landlord to make repairs applies only to that part of the premises over which the tenant assumes control. For damage occasioned by defects in a portion of the building over which the landlord retains control, as a hallway used by all tenants in common, the landlord may be held.[40] Though the landlord is under obligation to repair, however, for injury caused by wanton exposure of his property, the tenant cannot recover,[41] and notice from the tenant of the defects is some-

A lessor is not rendered liable for injuries to employe of lessee under an allegation that lessor knew or by exercise of reasonable care could have known of defect causing injury at the time of the leasing. King v. Creekmore [Ky.] 77 S. W. 689. The employe of a tenant having full possession and covenanting to repair cannot recover against the landlord for personal injuries from defects. Leaux v. New York, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 398.

38. See ante, § 5 C.

39. The neglect of a landlord in failing to remedy occurring defects will be measured from the time such defects began, not from the time they reached the danger point. Hoag v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 306. An agreement by a landlord to supply the dwelling with water does not render him liable for damage suffered by tenant through escape of water and formation of ice, due to defect in the pipes. Whitehead v. Comstock & Co. [R. I.] 56 Atl. 446. Liability of landlord for injury to health caused by misrepresentations of agent as to plumbing, see Clogston v. Martin, 182 Mass. 469. A tenant suffering damage by reason of defect in premises, landlord being under obligation to keep in repair, must show damage received after contract of leasing made with landlord under whom he is now holding. Aikin v. Perry [Ga.] 46 S. E. 93. Recovery by a tenant for injury suffered by reason of failure of landlord to make repairs as covenanted requires allegation of personal neglect by landlord. Allegation of neglect merely incident to breach of contract is insufficient. Frank v. Mandel, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 413. Failure of landlord to comply with a statute requiring certain precautions against injury to tenants is competent, though not conclusive, evidence of negligence. Ziegler v. Brennan, 75 App. Div. [N. times required.[42] The issue of negligence is determined on the same considerations as obtain in other actions for damages.[43]

To stranger.—For injury to a stranger occasioned by defects arising after the leasing and complete relinquishment of control by the landlord, the tenant, and the tenant only, can be held,[44] and the same rule makes a subtenant alone answerable for injuries resulting during his possession,[45] but for injury by a defect existing and known to the landlord at the time of leasing, he is liable,[46] and he is liable also for injury from defects in any portion of the building over which he retains control.[47] This liability of the landlord to a stranger has been limited, however, to those cases in which the defect amounts to a public nuisance.[48]

(§ 5) F. Emblements and fixtures.—A tenant has ordinarily the right to remove emblements,[49] except in case of a leasing on shares by which the title to the crops is in the landlord.[50] A mere trespasser cannot claim a tenant's right to harvest a crop he has planted.[51]

42. The tenant is not entitled to recover damages if he did not give the written notice of defects required by the lease. Sternberg v. Burke, 84 N. Y. Supp. 862.

43. Report to landlord of leakage, inspection by him, and appearance of pipe showing defect of considerable duration held to sustain finding of negligence. Levine v. Baldwin, 87 App. Div. [N. Defense to an action against a landlord by a stranger for recovery of damages suffered by an object flying from landlord's building that premises had been leased for term of years, landlord having no control thereover, that building had been constructed by competent architects and artisans, and defendant relied wholly upon them, that the accident was due to negligence of plaintiff and was caused by a vis major, in that a hurricane caused unseating of object, held not demurrable. 47. May v. Ennis, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 552. One having leased a portion of premises, he occupying the remainder, placing gas pipes in the building solely for his own benefit, must use ordinary and reasonable care to see that the portion leased is not injured by the escape of gas from such pipes. The tenant in such case does not assume the risk of escape of gas. Indianapolis Abattoir Co. v. Temperly, 159 Ind. 651. Repair of a defective portion of a building, after injury to tenant by reason thereof, by an agent of landlord, is not admission of control of the defective portion unless agent acted under landlord's instructions, nor is voluntary repair an admission of liability for defect. Kearines v. Cullen, 183 Mass. 298. A landlord warranting security of fence is not entitled to notice of defect therein as condition precedent to his liability for damages which tenant is required to pay a third party by his cattle escaping by reason of such defect. Manure made in the ordinary course of husbandry belongs to the landlord, but that from cattle kept for purposes other than agriculture and fed with purchased food belongs to the tenant.[52]

Fixtures of a movable character or as to which a right of removal is reserved may be removed by the tenant,[53] during the tenancy.[54] By failure to make provision in regard thereto at the time of renewal of a lease, a tenant is barred from removing fixtures placed by him during the original term.[55] A grantee without notice takes free of an oral agreement for removal of an improvement.[56] The landlord may recover for unlawful removal of fixtures in unlawful detainer as for waste.[57] The courts do not favor forfeitures, however, and will show leniency toward tenant.[58] By acceptance of premises while subtenant is in possession, landlord is affected with notice of right of subtenant to remove fixtures stipulated for by sublease.[59] A tenant is entitled to a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease to remove his personal property not in the nature of fixtures.[60]

§ 6. Rent and the payment thereof.—Rent is a sum of money or other consideration issuing out of the property and payable periodically.[61] An agreement to pay rent may be invalidated by fraud of the lessor,[62] but occupation by the tenant waives the fraud.[63] It is not incumbent on landlord to demand rent before due.[64] A deposit subject to forfeiture as liquidated damages, for breach may be required;[65] and the lessee cannot have it applied to arrears of rent.[66] A lease fixing the rent at a stated sum "for the first three years, from" a stated date to one three years thence, cannot be varied by parol proof that the rent was to be at the rate of said sum per year.[67] Advance payment of rent for the last two months of the term cannot be recovered back where the tenant was dispossessed for nonpayment of rent for preceding months.[68] Right to rent ordinarily passes with the title to the property. In conveying title, rent for a certain future period may however be reserved.[69] So, also, rent not due may be assigned, though the title to

65. The retention of a deposit of $5,000.00, designated in the lease as subject to forfeiture as liquidated damages for default, is not unconscionable. Adler v. Kramer, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 642. In New York, the provisions in a lease that a deposit by lessee to secure lessor, and to be applied as payment of rent for the last two months, and that for failure of lessee to observe covenants of the lease, the deposit may be retained as liquidated damages and to cover costs, are not in violation of Code provisions. the property be reserved.[70] Whether a tenant exercising an option to purchase is liable for the current instalment of rent depends on the terms of the contract.[71] An agent to procure tenants but not to lease has no authority to receive rent.[72] On renewal[73] or holding over the terms of the original lease are impliedly adopted. Where, however, after certain holding over, tenant is notified that beginning with a specified future date rent will be increased to specific sum, by holding over thereafter, tenant becomes liable therefor.[74] The landlord's damages for refusal to execute a lease and abandonment is the difference in rentals.[75]

Defenses, set-offs and reductions.—Eviction,[76] or, of course, a surrender and acceptance,[77] is a defense to a claim for subsequent rent, and where, on destruction of premises, lessor notifies lessee that he will not rebuild, liability of tenant for rent at once terminates, the lease having been of buildings, not of land.[78] Breach of covenant to repair on part of landlord may be ground for counterclaim in an action for rent.[79] By assignment of a lease, the assignor does not escape liability for rent for the term. That the lease permitted the assignment does not alter this rule.[80] The landlord cannot, however, recover from both the tenant and

In Texas, rents derived from the separate estate of a married woman are community property. Where assigned by husband and wife, therefore, for debt of husband, extension of time of payment made to husband does not discharge the assignment. De Berrera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 637. An assignment of all "right, title and interest in and to" a lease under seal passes all interest both in the premises and all rent accruing, even though the instrument of assignment itself is not sealed. Keeley Brew. Co. v. Mason, 102 Ill. App. 381. An assignment of rents to secure a claim is valid as against a receiver of the property appointed under order of the court. Brownson v. Roy [Mich.] 95 N. 74. Moore v. Harter, 67 Ohio St. 250. A hold-over tenant, who after expiration of term arbitrarily prevents arbitration agreed on to fix the value of improvements, becomes liable for use and occupation regardless of the rent reserved with interest, prior to such refusal only for the rent reserved and without interest. Conger v. Ensler, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 564. Under Georgia laws a tenant at sufferance cannot be held for double rent, until after notice to vacate. Willis v. Harrell [Ga.] 45 S. E. 794.

Supp. 373. A provision for termination of the tenancy and refund of rent in case of a sale does not avail a tenant who though a sale was made, was allowed to stay out his term. Childs v. Skillin, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 825. In an action for rent, the fact of retention of premises negatives a claim of constructive eviction. Hirsch v. Olmesdahl, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 757; Greenwood v. Wetterau, 84 N. Y. Supp. 287. Where tenant suffers a partial eviction due to the wilful fault of the landlord, the latter can neither recover for rent as on an express contract for letting, nor on an implied contract for use and occupation, nor for benefits received. Moore v. Mansfield, 182 Mass. 302. If the tenant elects to treat an eviction as partial he may set off damages against rent. Herpolsheimer v. Funke [Neb.] 95 N. W. 688; Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philbin [Neb.] 96 N. W. 487. That a lease provides that a tenant shall make no claim against a landlord for any "latent defect or change of condition" does not warrant a demand for rent during an eviction in the form of the making of repairs in such manner as to render premises untenantable. Hall v. Irvin, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 107.

78. Snook & A. Furniture Co. v. Steiner, 117 Ga. 363. Where landlord agrees to rebuild in case of fire, and tenant agrees to pay rent during period of repair, right to recover rent is dependent upon the performance of agreement to repair. Lincoln Trust Co. v. Nathan, 175 Mo. 32. In West Virginia, a lease of land carries payment of rent for the entire term, even though a building on the land is burned through no fault of the tenant. Where there is a special provision in the lease to the contrary, or where the lease is of a room or a building as opposed to a lease of land, the rule is otherwise. Arbenz v. Exley, 52 W. Va. 476.

79. Hirsch v. Olmesdahl, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 757. Under a lease exempting tenant from payment of rent in case premises suffer injury until premises are again rendered fit for tenancy, a landlord cannot recover rent for a hold-over period between injury to premises and their repair. American Bicycle Co. v. Hoyt [Wis.] 95 N. W. 92.

80. Rector v. Hartford Deposit Co., 102 Ill. App. 554. Held, however, there being no restraint by the terms of the lease, an assignee thereof may reassign and thereby his assignee for the same period.[81] Failure to perform agreement to sign a consent required by law for use for saloon cannot be predicated on refusal, where lessee's husband and not lessee was the applicant.[82] Upon abandonment of premises during term, landlord may relet for benefit of lessee and charge lessee with the deficiency.[83] It is readily apparent that the full deficiency cannot be recovered in an action at law until the full term has expired.[84] Where the acreage is less than is specified, the tenant is entitled to an abatement of rent.[85] Where property as a whole is subject to certain ground rent, the owners in common may, as between themselves, make partition and relieve a part from burden of the rent, placing the burden on the remainder left undivided.[86] An oral agreement that the tenant might occupy rent free is inadmissible to vary a sealed lease,[87] but an oral agreement may allow a tenant reimbursement for betterments as an off-set.[88] Agreement to reduce and acceptance of instalments of reduced rental may be shown in an action to secure payment. Where lease is in writing, agreement to reduce cannot, however, be shown by parol.[89] Rent cannot be recovered on a lease to a city providing that none should be paid unless an appropriation therefor should be made by the city council. That it was understood that such an appropriation would be made is immaterial.[90] Where a lease is subject to rules of a city department, it is no defense to action for rent that the action of such department seriously impairs the value of the lease.[91]

§ 7. Rental on shares.—Cropper's contracts are treated in the title Agriculture. The right of a tenant on shares to harvest and remove growing crops after the term is treated in section 5 of this topic. A tenant agreeing to deliver part of crop as rental must cultivate farm in husbandlike manner.[92] The landlord is entitled to his share of shock fodder as well as of corn.[93] The money value of the landlord's share is to be estimated as of the time when it should have been delivered.[94]

That a lessor has accepted portions of rent from the assignee of a lease, giving personal receipts therefor but running to his original tenant, does not estop lessor from holding his original tenant liable. § 8. The term, termination of tenancy, renewals, holding over.[95] The term.—Leases silent as to term are interpreted by custom or implied intention,[96] or by statutes fixing the term in such cases.[97] In its bearing on the statute of frauds, a lease for one year with option to renew for a similar or greater period, upon specified notice, is a lease for more than one year.[98] In Maryland, the policy is against perpetual or irredeemable leases.[99]

Termination of tenancy.—The right to terminate a tenancy for cause, and upon termination and unlawful detention, to take proper action to acquire possession, is enjoyed in full by either a grantee or an assignee of the landlord.[1]

By agreement.—A lease may be terminated prior to the expiration of the term by agreement,[2] or pursuant to a reservation in the lease of such right,[3] but a breach of covenant calling such a stipulation into force may be waived.[4] An option in the tenant to buy must be claimed in writing to change the possession.[5] An original lease may be deemed to have terminated ipso facto by the formation of a new lease.[6]

A lease may be rescinded for mistake,[7] fraud[8] or duress,[9] or for failure of consideration.[10] Such rescission must be prompt.[11] The right of a tenant or licensee

96. A provision in a lease for surrender of the premises by tenant in case of sale thereof by landlord within a specified time, tenant to be given specified notice and to have specified proportion of rent, constitutes a limitation of the term rather than a condition of the lease. Upon sale and performance by landlord, therefore, the term terminates ipso facto. Ronginsky v. Grantz, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 347. A provision in a lease that lessee shall retain possession until the value of a building placed on the premises by lessee shall be paid by lessor is binding even after expiration of the period otherwise provided by the lease. 98. Donovan v. Schoenhofen Brewing Co., 92 Mo. App. 341. A lease for one year, with option of renewal for one, two, three or four years is within terms of an agreement for lease with option of renewal for one, two, three, four or five years. Donovan v. Schoenhofen Brewing Co. [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 715. A term "not exceeding two years" does not embrace a term for one year with option of renewing the lease from year to year for five years. Jones v. Hamm [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 150. But contra it seems is Jones & Oglebay v. Kansas City Board of Trade [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 843.

3. Either party may terminate a lease by paying the other $50 under an agreement that if either party shall see fit to terminate this lease before it expires he shall pay the other $50. Small v. Clark, 97 Me. 304. Provision may be made in a lease for the termination of the tenancy upon the happening of a specified contingency. Snook & A. Furniture Co. v. Steiner, 117 Ga. 363. On default where lease so provides. Cochran v. Philadelphia M. & T. Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1051.

4. A provision in a lease that the lease shall become void upon breach of a covenant by lessee, may be waived by lessor. A lease does not become ipso facto void upon a breach of covenant, therefore, and a tenant cannot terminate a lease by breach against the wish of his landlord. English v. Yates, 205 Pa. 106. Under a lease providing that for failure of lessor to comply with certain covenants, lessee should have option to declare lease forfeited upon giving 30 days' notice, lessee gave to lessor the privilege of making the covenants good during the 30 days. On his failure so to do, the lessee had reasonable time to remove his effects. Channel v. Merrifield [Ill.] 69 N. E. 32.

5. Provision in a lease that at any time during term lessee may buy, rent paid to be applied on purchase price, requires more than mere verbal statement of intent to buy to permit lessee to continue to occupy as owner. Hill v. Allen [Mass.] 69 N. E. 333.

6. Drew v. Billings-Drew Co. [Mich.] 92 N. W. 774; Bowman v. Wright [Neb.] 92 N. W. 580.

7. Where lessor and lessee believe that certain changes can be made in the building, without which the lessee would not enter into the contract, the lease may be rescinded when the making of the changes is found impossible. Barker v. Fitzgerald [Ill.] 68 N. E. 430, the court holding that the fact that the lessor could not be placed in statu quo did not affect the question, since money damages could be allowed to secure an equitable settlement.

8. For false representations of lessor relative to the rentals which the premises were then yielding, relied upon by lessee, a lease may be rescinded. In such case the damages suffered, together with a deposit made as security, may be recovered by lessee. Prince v. Jacobs, 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 243.

9. Threats held insufficient to show sublease induced by duress. Piper v. Cashell [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 614.

in land may be terminated by disseisin of the lessor and adverse claim.[12] By denial of landlord's title and assertion of title in himself, an assignee's rights under a lease become terminated.[13] A lease is not terminated by adjudication of bankruptcy against the lessor.[14]

Surrender, abandonment and eviction.—At the expiration of the term, the lessee must surrender possession if he would terminate the tenancy.[15] A surrender and the intention so to terminate must be actually or constructively brought to the lessor's notice,[16] must be complete[17] and timely,[18] and if to an agent, his authority must appear.[19] It must appear that the lessee had the right to surrender.[20] Acceptance of a surrender is shown by a reletting.[21] Assent to an abandonment[22] or a vacation by the lessee when so requested[24] has the same effect. Upon either complete or partial eviction, tenant may abandon the premises and deem the tenancy terminated.[25]

Destruction of premises.—While the interest of a lessee of a mere apartment in a building terminates upon the destruction of the premises, and he cannot successfully demand that he be given similar room in a building erected on the same land,[26] yet a lease of land is not terminated at common law by the destruction of a building placed thereon and forming its main value.[27]

A.] 119 Fed. 139, where the court points out that by reason of principle stated a sublessee cannot secure damages against bankrupt estate on allegation of forfeiture of his sub-lease by the bankruptcy. Bankruptcy does not terminate lease. Witthaus v. Zimmerman, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 202.

15. That a lessor has waived a covenant prohibiting subletting, does not relieve lessee from necessity of surrendering possession at expiration of the term. And where he is unable so to do by reason of the refusal of the sublessee to vacate, the lessor may deem the lease renewed. Sullivan v. Ringler, 171 N. Y. 693.

19. Morris v. Dayton, 86 N. Y. Supp. 172.

20. Where lessee has entered under a written lease for one year, with privilege of five years, rental in cash annually, evidence that after continuing in possession three years, lessee then stated he did not want premises, and surrendered same, did not tend to prove lease had expired. Faseler v. Kothman [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 321.

21. The tenant must show that a reletting was within such time as to constitute an acceptance of surrender. Isaacson v. Wolfensohn, 84 N. Y. Supp. 555. Where the janitor accepted the keys and the landlord leased to another there was an acceptance of surrender. Krumdieck v. Ebbs, 84 N. Y. Supp. 525.

22. A mere taking charge of premises upon abandonment by tenant, though coupled with a leasing for tenant's benefit, does not express assent to abandonment; otherwise where landlord leases for his own benefit. Hayes v. Goldman [Ark.] 72 S. W. 563. It is for the jury to decide whether acts of landlord constitute assent to tenant's abandonment. Id. Abandonment of a mining lease may be deduced from a long period of nonuser. Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 468.

24. Action of lessor's agent in telling lessee to move, and posting notice "to let" on premises prior to termination of lease period, may terminate the lease even though a provision existed therein that lessor might lease for benefit of lessee if premises became vacant, and might post notice as he did prior to expiration of term. See, also, Snook & A. Furniture Co. v. Steiner, 117 Ga. 363. Under provision in a lease that in the event of destruction of the premises the landlord shall at once rebuild, and that until the rebuilding is concluded tenant shall pay no rent, the rela-

Forfeiture.—Forfeiture is a loss of tenancy for breach of covenant. The law does not look with favor thereon, and unless the applicant has scrupulously complied with the covenants by him to be performed, the application will be denied.[28] Where the lease clearly confers the right, however, and the landlord is free from blame, the courts will not interfere.[29] And although forfeiture may result from breach of covenant by tenant, a landlord may not summarily decide that breach has occurred and thereupon eject tenant without hearing or opportunity to defend.[30] The right to enforce forfeiture, where it exists, is in the then owner of the premises.[31] Forfeiture of a mining lease may be decreed where equity requires.[32]

Notice to vacate and demand of possession.—A notice appropriate to the character of the tenancy[33] conformable to the statute,[34] or a demand of rent on the due day unless dispensed with,[35] is necessary to forfeit a lease. Demand for rent previous to forfeiture is essential where right of forfeiture is dependent upon default in payment thereof.[36] A periodical tenancy requires notice to vacate at the end of the month or year current.[37] No notice need be given if the lease dispenses with it,[38] nor where one holds under lease definitely determining the rental period. Otherwise, where tenant has held over by consent of landlord, express or implied.[39] A grantee demanding possession need not exhibit his title deeds.[40] A tender of the value of improvements may be necessary.[41] Waiver of tion of the parties is suspended during the rebuilding, and is immediately re-established upon the completion thereof. Id. That workmen are in the leased premises making repairs does not of necessity show that premises were at the time untenantable. Field v. Surpless, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 268.

App.] 75 S. W. 74, 317. Action for detainer lies for failure of lessee to pay rent or vacate upon written demand under a lease for one month and from month to month thereafter, terminable at the option of either party. Ellis v. Fitzpatrick [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 430. A lessor cannot complain for failure of tenant to perform a covenant which he himself has rendered impossible. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248.

An action for injunction to restrain trespass by tenant is not an action to declare forfeiture. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248.

Bringing unlawful detainer is a sufficient notice in a tenancy at will. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073. Notice of raise in rent delivered one day before the month was out is not sufficient to oust tenant from month to month either as notice to quit or for nonpayment. Miller v. Lowe, 86 N. Y. Supp. 16.

36. Under the California code, permitting tenant to perform within three days after notice has been served, the fact that tenant could not perform, and demand of performance was therefore unnecessary, did not obviate necessity for demand for possession. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449.

37. A landlord's notice to a tenant from month to month, requiring tenant to vacate, is not vitiated by stating the time of required vacation as of one day after the expiration of the month. Searle v. Powell [Minn.] 94 N. W. 868. In New Jersey, a monthly tenancy is terminated by a notice to vacate on one of the recurring periods of the tenancy, served on the same day of the preceding month. Baker v. Kenney [N. J. Law] 54 Atl. 526.

39. Mastin v. Metzinger [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 431; Morris v. Healy Lumber Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 662. Notice to vacate need not be given to one who, although entering under a lease void under the statute of frauds, holds to the end of the term. Butts v. Fox, 96 Mo. App. 437.

40. In Missouri, it is not necessary, in ac-notice may be proved by acts of parties.[42] A valid notice to vacate may be withdrawn only by mutual consent.[43] Although an irregularity exists, a lessee may be estopped by his acts from denying sufficiency of notice to vacate, where his acts are such as to mislead the lessor to his prejudice.[44] On the other hand, however, acceptance of rent after serving notice to vacate does not necessarily operate as a withdrawal of such notice.[45] Where the tenant has broken other covenants, his payment of rent for the purpose of obtaining restitution does not rehabilitate his tenancy.[46] In an action for possession for nonpayment of rent, a tender of same with costs for the first time on appeal is ineffective.[47] A notice to vacate need be in no specific form,[48] but must be unconditional.[49] It will not be ineffective by reason of an inadvertent transposition of pronouns not misleading in fact,[50] and in the signature to the notice, the name of the agent, followed by the words "agent for" the landlord is as effectual as the name of the landlord followed by the word "by" the agent.[51] Where the length of notice to vacate is arranged by agreement, notice by mail is sufficient, if actually received.[52] See the note as to service held sufficient.[53]

Renewal under express agreement.—The lease may by its terms fix the right to renew[54] in favor of either party.[55] Such a covenant for renewal may be void for uncertainty.[56] The conditions precedent thereto must be fully performed,[57]

tions of unlawful detainer, that at time of making demand for possession by grantee of lessor the grantor's deed shall be exhibited. Tucker v. McClenny [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 151.

55. Agreement that if lessor cannot give or "refuses to give" an extension agreed on he shall purchase improvements made by lessee does not give latter an option for renewal but gives it to lessor. Neiderstein v. Cusick, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 36.

56. Howe v. Larkin, 119 Fed. 1005. Provision in a lease for one year that tenant may have "privilege of longer" is too indefinite to justify retention beyond the year. Nor can parol evidence, in such case, be introduced to show meaning of parties. Howard v. Tomicich, 81 Miss. 703.

57. Notice by lessee of intention to renew. Pittsburgh Mfg. Co. v. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 436. No performance of conditions precedent to renewal being shown, evidence that tenant expected renewal under agreement therefor, held, inadmissible. Swift v. Occidental Min. & Petroleum Co. [Cal.] 74 Pac. 700. Renewal of lease dependent upon faithful performance of covenants may be refused even though landlord has previously waived right of forfeiture for other breaches of covenant. Id. Express provision for renewal of lease, with further provision that new agreement must be made at renewal as to part of premises, renders renewal of any part dependent on consummation of new agreement as to part specified. Cammack v. Rogers [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 945. In an oil and gas lease for five years and as much longer "as oil and gas was found in paying quantities," there is an implied condition for development of the property in good faith in order to the continuance after five years. Barnsdall v. Boley, 119 Fed. 191. Under a lease for a stated period "and as much longer as oil and gas are found in paying quantities" lessee may continue after stated period where the land contains a well producing 1,000,000 feet but performance may be at any time within the time agreed.[58] A lease containing right to renew as one of its covenants does not, however, carry right to second renewal as one of such covenants.[59] A lease may, also, contain the simple provision that lessee enjoys option to renew. In such case the option will be deemed exercised by expression of intention to renew both before and after termination of the lease and the making of improvements by landlord, not required by lease, in reliance on tenant's statements.[60] The tenant will be deemed to have exercised such option by remaining in possession after termination of original period.[61] Such an option is waived by surrender of possession.[62] Provision that lessee shall give specified notice of intention to renew is for the benefit of lessor. He may therefore waive failure to give such notice.[63] The grantor of an option to renew cannot take advantage of his own act preventing renewal within the specified time.[64] A bonus to an assignor in case of "renewal" is earned, though the renewal be in piecemeal, but not if the rent is increased.[65]

Holding over without agreement.—There is no contractual right to hold over against terms of the lease and the notice.[66] Mere failure to turn over keys and remove certain useless furnishings at the termination of the lease period does not necessarily operate as a renewal.[67] Failure of tenant to move at termination of term during negotiations with landlord's agent as to rate of rent does not constitute a holding over by consent of landlord.[68] In Nebraska, it has been held that one becomes a hold-over tenant rather than a tenant under express agreement where landlord has taken insufficient action to terminate tenancy, and tenant has neither paid nor tendered rent due.[69] has the right to collect rents may also procure a receivership.[72] The action for use and occupation is ex contractu, resting on the relation of a tenancy.[73] Rent may be proved against an insolvent's estate[74] and may be enforced ratably against various funds of an insolvent.[75] The law courts will redress a mistake affecting the amount.[76] The tenant may set off damages for fraud in procuring the lease[77] or counterclaim on a breach of covenant to repair,[78] but the right to allowances must be claimed before judgment.[79] The amount due[80] and the making and existence of the lease if declared on[81] must be well pleaded; and proved substantially as laid.[82] When so pleaded, an error in miscalling the action one for "use and occupation,"[83] or for "rent" instead of damages,[84] may be ignored. Matters of defense such as misrepresentation[85] must be pleaded, and denials must be direct.[86] The landlord must prove rent due[87] if not admitted.[88] If qualified, he may state his opinion as to the value of use and occupation of the premises.[89]

A stipulated right to relet and apply the proceeds must be exercised by the landlord in interest.[90] If action for deficiency be begun before expiration of the term, recovery will be limited to that accrued.[91]

Distress.—The remedy where it still exists is usually much circumscribed by statutes.[92] Distress will not lie for breach of a covenant to pay water rent.[93]

92. Texas: A party in applying for a distress warrant must show one of the statutory grounds. Jackson v. Corley, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 417. Removal of cotton to have same baled, with subsequent return there-

The right to pursue the remedy passes to lessor's assignee,[94] and may be good as against subtenant.[95] A landlord may waive his right to distrain for rent by permitting sale of tenant's property without objection.[96] Notice and demand are not necessary if the rent is due.[97] If no damage results, the tenant cannot complain that the landlord entitled to distress exercised it in an unlawful way.[98] A wrongful seizure of goods may be a conversion by the landlord.[99] The practice under the statutes of the several states is shown in the note.[1] Property taken by law under distress is in custody of the law and is not subject to conflicting levy.[2] The quashing of a distress warrant releases the "replevy" bond given for the goods.[3]

Attachment or judicial seizure is authorized in some jurisdictions in favor of a landlord whose security is endangered.[4] If a portion be disposed of, the remainder may in Kansas be attached before maturity of the rent.[5]

Liens and securities for payment of rent. Lien.—A crop mortgage covers crops of a sublessee.[6] An unrecorded provision for a future crop mortgage is ineffective against creditors.[7] A landlord's lien on goods of the tenant put in store without any surrender of his rights by the landlord is superior to the warehouseman.[8] In Texas, a statutory lien exists on goods in a leased storehouse for rent to accrue during the contract year.[9] Statutory liens in favor of a landlord must rest in substantial conformity to the statute, else their priority may be lost.[10]

2. A mortgage execution cannot be levied on such property. Camp v. Williams [Ga.] 46 S. E. 66. In an action against a sheriff for not having sold property under a mortgage execution, he is entitled to have a prior distress warrant indicate what articles were taken. Id. It is not for the sheriff to inquire whether the levy of a distress warrant is excessive. Id. It is for a mortgagee, and not the sheriff holding the foreclosure execution, to resist an invalid distress warrant. Similarly, it is for the mortgagee or the members of the firm, not for the sheriff, to resist a distress warrant under which the property of a firm is held, the party to be distrained being a member thereof. It is conversion to defeat the lien by disposal of crops.[11] An implied promise to pay landlord's lien on crop arises as against one inducing landlord to allow him to receive, or, where he has already received, to allow him to dispose of the crop, by holding out to landlord that his rent is safe and will be paid.[12] One who acquires crops subject to lien is liable as on an implied contract.[13] A purchaser of crops who is liable may be sued after the lien has expired,[14] and after he has been garnished by the landlord may be liable for any deficiency.[15] The landlord must prove the amount due him.[16] The purchaser may discharge the lien and look to the tenant.[17]

By consent to a transfer[18] or a substitution of other security[19] or delay in asserting the lien,[20] it may be waived in favor of third persons, as well as the tenant.[21] A crop lien may be waived by parol.[22] Whether agency to lease land either actually or apparently includes authority to waive a crop lien is for the jury.[23] A subletting will not release the tenant.[24] Innocent purchasers[25] are protected against such liens as are not absolute.

The lien may be protected by injunction against disposal of crops[26] or of a merchandise stock.[27] Under a lease creating a lien on crops, a court of equity will decline to retain a greater portion thereof than necessary to liquidate the debt.[28] And where a lien is attempted to be enforced, all defenses open to a lessee are open to his assignee.[29] Foreclosure should be against all the goods covered,[30] and may in Texas be joined with an action against the purchaser.[31]

The right to retain a deposit made to secure lessor against loss of rent is deemed waived by re-entry for failure to pay rent.[32]

§ 10. Landlord's remedies for recovery of premises.—The plaintiff must prove right of possession or ownership,[33] but the right to dispossess a tenant may be reserved by a grantor.[34] Generally speaking, whatever remedy to secure possession is open to lessor is open equally to his grantee.[35]

Appropriate remedies.—Ejectment will lie where there is a right of re-entry.[36] Injunction will lie to prevent irreparable injury from use of the premises after forfeiture.[37]

Unlawful detainer will lie against a tenant who holds over without right[38] or whose term has become forfeited by default,[39] and under certain statutes for wrongfully using the premises.[40] The assignor is not guilty after he has assigned the lease,[41] nor is the assignee after reassignment.[42] A grantee is not affected by his grantor's acquiescence in nonpayment of rent.[43]

Summary dispossession will be denied where lessor has, in bad faith, refused tender of rent and costs.[44] The relation of landlord and tenant must subsist.[45] It may be maintained, though forcible detainer is subsequently begun.[46] A stranger to summary proceedings cannot intervene and defend.[47]

Procedure.—In New York and Georgia, the necessary affidavit or verification may be made by an agent.[48] The statutory notice must be given.[49] Objection to lack of sufficiency of notice to terminate is waived by failure to plead not guilty and by pleading extension of the term.[50]

The relation of tenancy (in certain of the statutory proceedings available to "landlords"),[51] possession by the tenant,[52] facts showing an unlawful detainer,[53] and plaintiff's title to possession,[54] must be pleaded, and amendments may be allowed according to the usual rules.[55] Defenses must be pleaded,[56] and matters of counterclaim are not so pleadable.[57] The character of the tenancy proved must not vary from that to which the notice given applies.[58]

Only tenancy and default can be tried in unlawful detainer, and paramount title in lessee,[59] or that defendant holds an invalid title to the property,[60] or that defendant corporation has begun condemnation proceedings,[61] or that lessee has sublet without authority, and sublessees are not made parties,[62] constitutes no defense. On the other hand, as a valid defense to the action, proof may be made deemed abated by subsequent action of forcible detainer. Walter Commission Co. v. Gilleland, 98 Mo. App. 584.

47. Code Civ. Proc. § 2244, allowing persons claiming possession to intervene applies only to the persons enumerated in sections 2231, 2232 and 2237. Heuser v. Antonius, 84 N. Y. Supp. 580.

48. In Georgia, the affidavit necessary to dispossess a tenant holding over or in default on rent may be made by landlord's agent. Johnson v. Thrower, 117 Ga. 1007. In New York, the agent of a domestic corporation may verify a petition in summary proceedings to dispossess a tenant. It is not essential that the verification be by a corporate officer. Stuyvesant Real Estate Co. v. Sherman, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 205.

49. When an action for rent and possession is supplemented by attachment for rent the giving of 10 days' notice required for the attachment confers jurisdiction though the main action requires but five days' notice. State v. Rainey, 99 Mo. App. 218. In New York a notice in summary proceedings must be in the alternative—for payment of rent or possession. McMahon v. Howe, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 546.

50. Snyder v. Porter [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1009.

51. A statement that one party has attorned to another and paid him rent may be equivalent to stating that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. State v. Rainey, 99 Mo. App. 218.

52. Statement of leasing for specified time, occupation by defendant, demand for possession within specified time after termination of period, refusal of defendant to surrender, held, sufficient allegation of possession by defendant. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073.

53. In Missouri, in unlawful detainer by grantee of lessor, allegation that plaintiff, on a specified date was and ever since has been entitled to possession, and that defendant willfully and without force held over after termination of his term, is in compliance with statute. Tucker v. McClenny [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 151. As to sufficiency of allegations in unlawful detainer, see further Armstrong v. Mayer [Neb.] 95 N. W. 483.

54. Jurisdiction to oust a tenant is not conferred on the court by a petition which fails to allege petitioner to be owner, landlord, agent or otherwise entitled to possession. Cram v. Dietrich, 38 Misc. [N. Y.] 790. An averment in a petition in summary proceedings that petitioner is "lessee and as such is landlord" does not sufficiently aver his interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 2235]. Loft v. Kaziz, 84 N. Y. Supp. 228. Summary proceedings must set out the landlord's interest and not merely that he was landlord else there is failure of jurisdiction warranting injunction in tenant's favor. Kazis v. Loft, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 636. Allegation that petitioner is agent for named person alleged to be owner sets forth title. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Schum, 40 Misc. [N. Y.] 657.

55. In case of mutual mistake continuing to a certain point in the trial as to the time of termination of the period, motion to amend will be permitted even pending a motion to dismiss for the variance. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073. Technical imperfections in answer may be amended where defect was not misleading. Van Deventer v. Foster, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 62.

56. In municipal court, city of New York, to recover possession for default in payment of rent, defense of res adjudicata can be raised only by answer, not by motion. By motion, questions of jurisdiction, sufficiency of petition, notice and other cognate matters may be raised. Fritztuskie v. Wauroski, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 150.

57. Breach of covenant to repair while pleadable in a summary proceeding must be pleaded by way of counterclaim and not as defense [Laws 1893, p. 1750, c. 705]. Jefferson Real Estate Co. v. Hiller, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 784.

58. Allegation of monthly hiring (requiring five days' notice) is not supported by proof of a month to month tenancy and 30-days notice. Bent v. Renken, 86 N. Y. Supp. 110.

59. Hill v. Watkins [Ind. T.] 69 S. W. 837.

60. Turner v. Gilliland [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 253.

61. Morris v. Healy Lumber Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 662.

62. Tucker v. McClenny [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 151.

that the landlord's title has terminated either by operation of law, by judgment, or act of the landlord,[63] or that the deed from tenant to landlord and the lease from landlord to tenant were procured by fraud,[64] or that the action is based upon the failure of tenant to pay rent by reason of difference of view as to the amount of rent payable.[65] Collateral issues of title do not oust jurisdiction in summary proceedings.[66]

In some states, rent may be recovered in the same action,[67] or damages,[68] or a penalty for detention,[69] or restitution be given to a tenant who pays the rent due.[70]

Where averment in summary proceedings that rent is due is denied, such averment must be proved.[71] Service of notice to pay rent or surrender must be alleged and proved.[72] The giving of notice to pay rent or surrender is not a notice in a special proceeding, service of which may be proved by affidavit when denied.[73] A statute authorizing the action for use of premises for the maintenance of a statutory common nuisance is in its nature penal and requires strict proof.[74]

Acts authorizing restitution on filing bond before judgment are valid.[75] A retention bond has been held not to run in favor of a grantee.[76] The writ[77] is valid despite irregularities in procedure.[78]

Accrued rent is not discharged by terminating the lease by possessory proceedings.[79] The costs are regulated by statute.[80]

Injunction against proceedings will not issue when the defense may be made 66. Van Deventer v. Foster, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 62.

67. In California, the court may determine rent due and render judgment therefor under a complaint demanding a month's rent, where the alleged unlawful detainer is after default in rent. Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 71 Pac. 440. A complaint in unlawful detainer may include demand for rents which became due prior to institution of the action. Ellis v. Fitzpatrick [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 430.

68. In Missouri, damages for unlawful detainer may be predicated as from date of demand only, not from date of entry into possession. Moston v. Stow, 91 Mo. App. 554. In New York, damages may be recovered for the wrongful withholding of property both prior and subsequent to the commencement of the action. Willis v. McKinnon, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 249.

69. In California, where unlawful detainer is after default in rent, judgment may be given for three times the amount of rent due at date of trial. Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 71 Pac. 440. In Missouri, twice the value of the monthly rents may be recovered in unlawful detainer proceedings. This may be true despite a stipulation of parties limiting damages for detention to a less amount. Hadley v. Bernero, 97 Mo. App. 314.

70. In California, the code permitting payment into court of rent found due and restoration to estate thereupon, where proceeding is for unlawful detainer upon default in rent, does not give right of re-entry where there were other breaches of covenant in addition to default in rent. Bateman v. Superior Ct., 139 Cal. 140, 72 Pac. 922.

71. Brill v. Norkett, 84 N. Y. Supp. 142.

72. Lacrabere v. Wise [Cal.] 75 Pac. 185. In California, the bringing of an action in unlawful detainer may render notice of termination of tenancy at will unnecessary. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073.

74. Eveleth v. Gill, 97 Me. 315. Where a mere allegation that the "estate in the premises has terminated" was held insufficient.

75. Not unconstitutional as depriving tenant of property without process of law. Morris v. Healy Lumber Co. [Wash.] 74 Pac. 662.

76. In Arkansas, sureties on a retention bond in unlawful detainer are relieved from liability for a holding-over of principal, where, during the term of the lease, the landlord has conveyed the premises to another. Brooks v. Buie [Ark.] 70 S. W. 464.

77. Evidence as to whether officer removed property from part of premises not covered by dispossess warrant held for the jury. Moriarity v. Wagner, 84 N. Y. Supp. 864.

78. That the anterior proceedings were irregular does not justify sheriff in refusing to execute writ to collect rent and place plaintiff in possession, the writ being in all respects regular. State v. Rainey, 99 Mo. App. 218.

79. In New York a lease is cancelled by the issue of a warrant in summary proceedings. The recovery of rent up to the time of the issuance of the warrant is not, however, barred thereby. Adler v. Kramer, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 642.

80. In New York, a landlord prevailing in a summary proceeding, in which forcible entry and detainer is not involved, may be allowed as costs ten dollars, but no more. Lauria v. Capobianco, 39 Misc. [N. Y.] 441.

or the injury averted in the dispossessory proceeding,[81] unless irreparable injury would result,[82] but it may issue to enable the lessee to institute legal proceedings for his protection.[83]

Matters relating to practice on new trial[84] or review[85] in the various jurisdictions are decided in cases cited. Constructive eviction and surrender are questions of fact which will not be reviewed on conflicting evidence.[86] After a new trial is ordered in dispossess proceedings, a jury may be demanded, though it was waived on the first trial.[87] Defenses must be made below.[88]

§ 11. Liability of third persons to landlord or tenant.—For injury to the leasehold estate, third persons are liable to the lessee. The lessor cannot maintain action therefor.[89] A tenant in possession may sue for recovery of damages occasioned to his leasehold interest by a nuisance. That his occupation began while the nuisance existed does not alter the rule.[90] Where lessees have privilege of removing building at expiration of term, in estimating damages caused by the falling upon it of an adjoining building, consideration may be had to the probability of securing a renewal of lease, rental value for remainder of term and cost of removing the collapsed structure as ordered by city authorities.[91] A lessee cannot recover a fire loss occasioned by negligence of lessor, where policy provides that it shall become void where insured releases any party from liability for causing loss, and insured lessee has so released lessor.[92] The lessee, in bringing suit, need not join the lessor as a party.[93] For injury to the reversionary interest,

81. Equity will not restrain the execution of a warrant to dispossess a tenant, where the relation of landlord and tenant clearly exists. The tenant has his remedy at law by filing a counter affidavit. Johnson v. Thrower, 117 Ga. 1007. Under the Pennsylvania bill to restrain summary proceedings against tenants, allegation that complainant believes he cannot receive a fair trial because justice and jury is friendly to landlord, is insufficient. Neither is it sufficient to allege that tenant placed reliance on landlord's promise to extend the lease, had not given the notice required by the lease, and the landlord had failed to redeem his promise. Denny v. Fronheiser [Pa.] 56 Atl. 406.

82. Summary proceedings may be enjoined if there is a claim of right and eviction would endanger life, but not solely because of a claim of right triable in such proceedings. Weber v. Rogers, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 662.

83. Where a lessee railroad has rightfully constructed its road on the premises, the lessor cannot dispossess the lessee until time is given to start condemnation, where lessee is willing to pay for use of land, amount to be determined in condemnation proceedings. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Winslow, 18 App. D. C. 438. See, also, Winslow v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 188 U. S. 646, 47 Law. Ed. 635.

84. Motion by defendant to be relieved of judgment in unlawful detainer does not estop him, if motion is denied, from moving for new trial on the ground of lack of sufficiency of evidence. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449.

85. In Missouri, a justice may decree possession, but cannot enter judgment for rent in excess of his jurisdiction. Upon trial de novo on appeal to circuit court, the landlord may elect to have decree of possession, but cannot have judgment for rent in excess of the justice's jurisdiction. Walter Commission Co. v. Gilleland, 98 Mo. App. 584. In Missouri, an appeal in unlawful entry and detainer from judgment of justice is returnable to circuit court within six days after judgment is rendered, where judgment rendered during circuit court term. Hadley v. Bernero, 97 Mo. App. 314. In Mississippi, where a tenant appeals in proceedings to dispossess him, he may file in the circuit court, for the first time, an affidavit denying the facts on which the summons was issued. Harvey v. Clark, 81 Miss. 166. In New York, a justice may determine whether or not all rent due under a lease has been paid. If guilty of error in his decision, an appeal lies from the final order awarding possession. If possession be awarded to landlord and, from decision of justice the amount of rent unpaid cannot be ascertained, tenant may apply to equity for relief. Natkins v. Wetterer, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 93.

right of action is in the lessor. Where the leasehold interest is not affected, the lessee cannot maintain action.[94] The tenant on shares has a title to sue for a wrongful levy on crops.[95] As to intervening rights, the renewal lease does not date back.[96] Property put on the premises by an intruder is either personalty or fixtures and in neither case belongs to the tenant.[97]

§ 12. Crimes and penalties.—If the removal of crops be made criminal, the intent is immaterial.[98] The tenant may enforce a penalty for obstructing a way of which he has the use.[99]

LARCENY.

§ 1. Common law larceny.—Larceny is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another with intent to deprive the owner of his property therein, and to appropriate the same to the use of the taker.[1] An asportation,[2] non-consent of the owner,[3] and a felonious intent to thereby convert the stolen property to defendant's own use,[4] are necessary elements of larceny. Where possession is taken under circumstances showing a want of felonious intent, such as a bona fide claim of right,[5] a claim of ownership in one's self,[6] family,[7] or employer,[8] for a joke,[9] in the regular discharge of one's duty,[10] or for any purpose

2. Defendant surprised in attempt. State v. Knolle, 90 Mo. App. 238. Mere pointing out cattle in a field and selling them to a third person is not larceny. Long v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 870. Frustrated attempt to unscrew diamond stud not theft from person. Rodriquez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 596. Inserting hand in another's pocket not securing money therein is not theft from the person. Tarrango v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 597. Trespass no longer enters into larceny. People v. Mills, 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 331.

3. State v. Littrell, 170 Mo. 13; State v. Waller, 174 Mo. 518. Instigation of detective employed by owner amounts to consent (State v. Waghalter [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1028), but mere suspicion of defendant's intent and neglect in protecting property does not (Lowe v. State [Fla.] 32 So. 956).

10. Employe removing goods from one room to another. State v. Foy, 131 N. C. 804.

excluding the presumption of intent to deprive the owner of his property,[11] there is no larceny. Merely that the taking was open, unconcealed and in the presence of others is, however, not conclusive of good faith.[12] A bailee who has lawful possession,[13] as one who has been loaned an article,[14] or an agent managing a store for the owner,[15] cannot commit larceny. Merely that possession was obtained, however, by colorable consent of the owner, as by a trick or device,[16] is no defense; but false representations inducing one to sell property unconditionally do not constitute larceny.[17] If defendant came into possession in good faith with the owner's consent, a subsequent conversion of it will not amount to larceny, but if he had the intent at the time of taking possession of converting it to his own use, it is larceny, and whether or not he had such intent is for the jury.[18] Where one is seeking to have a dollar changed and another takes it, saying he will go and get it changed, and the owner demands the money back and seizes him and he breaks away and runs with intent to steal the dollar, there is a case of simple larceny.[19]

The finder of lost property is not guilty of larceny unless he appropriates it with knowledge or the means of knowledge of the true owner,[20] and where personal property is taken and retained by a person incapable of committing a crime, the custody is that of the owner, and one taking it from such irresponsible agent, with intent to convert it, is guilty of larceny, as in the case of finding lost property.[21]

A dog,[22] money won at gaming,[23] and a county warrant, may be the subject of larceny.[24] Where animals or other creatures are not domestic, but are ferae naturae, larceny may notwithstanding be committed of them if they are fit for food of man and dead, reclaimed, or confined so that they may be taken at any time by the owner.[25]

Where a purse secured by a steel chain wrapped around the owner's finger is suddenly snatched by one intending to steal it with force sufficient to break the chain and injure the owner's finger, the offense is robbery, not larceny from the person.[26]

A conspiracy to steal and sell live stock is pending until the sale has been made and the proceeds divided.[27]

A purchase of the animal subsequent to taking it from the range is no defense to a prosecution for horse theft.[28] Kleptomania is not a defense except as tested by the "right and wrong" theory; a mere irresistible impulse to steal being no defense.[29]

11. Taking horse to ride to next town is not larceny. Leland v. State [Miss.] 33 So. 842; Hartley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 603; Windom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 193.

One who being present, actually or constructively,[30] at the time larceny is committed, abets and counsels therein, is guilty of the crime,[31] though he takes no active part in it,[32] as is one who, being absent, counsels and advises its commission, and receives and secretes the stolen property;[33] but the crime of receiving stolen goods is distinct from larceny.[34]

§ 2. Statutory larceny, theft, etc.—Under the Penal Code of New York,[35] larceny may be committed, by misrepresentations leading to the sale of a worthless article,[36] or, by holding out the inducement of a profitable investment and subsequent misapplication of the funds thereby obtained;[37] but the ordinary relation that exists between broker and customer will not support an indictment for larceny as agent, bailee, or trustee.[38] For a physician to procure medicine from the city ostensibly for a poor person and then charge such person for it, he being in fact not a poor person, is an appropriation to his own use of public property in his control.[39]

Asportation is not an element of larceny from the person in California.[40]

In Texas, in order to constitute theft as a bailee, a fraudulent intent in converting the property is necessary.[41]

Cutting and removing timber from the land of another is not larceny in Washington.[42]

A warehouseman was held properly prosecuted for larceny as bailee and not as warehouseman, in Oregon.[43]

A receipted voucher in Minnesota[44] and files in public custody in New York[45] may be the subject of larceny. Whether or not the bringing into one district or state property stolen in another is punishable in the jurisdiction to which the property is brought, there can be no conviction in the absence of proof that defendant brought the property into the jurisdiction, and an instruction that puts the burden upon him to show a disposition of it before coming into the jurisdiction is error.[46]

Value is not an element in the theft of particular classes of property like cattle[47] or horses.[48]

47. Value of cattle feloniously converted need not be alleged or proved [Mills' Ann. St. § 1256 and Laws 1891, p. 430, § 1]. Quinn v. People [Colo.] 75 Pac. 396.

48. Horse stolen in another jurisdiction. The statute denounces such theft when the property is brought into the state, "as if com-

Though used in indictments for larceny time out of mind, the omission of the words "then and there being found"[50] and "feloniously" is not fatal to an indictment which charges that defendant unlawfully stole,[51] and an indictment charging that defendant after entering a house "did privately steal therefrom" is good against the objection that it does not charge an asportation, wrongful taking, or taking with intent to steal.[52]

The intent to deprive the owner of his property need not be specifically alleged, if the language used otherwise imports such intent;[53] but an unnecessary averment of intent to feloniously convert will not render an information double.[54] An averred "intent to deprive the owner of the possession" does not satisfy a statute defining the intent as one "to deprive another of his property."[55]

An indictment for statutory larceny must allege all the statutory elements[56] and contain allegations that will clearly apprise the defendant under which statute he is prosecuted.[57] To charge the bringing of stolen property into the state, the criminality of the original taking must be stated.[58] No asportation need be alleged in larceny from the person in California.[59] In Texas, the consent of the owner must be negatived; but an indictment for theft from a partnership need not specifically negative the consent of each of the partners.[60]

The property alleged to have been stolen must be described with sufficient particularity to apprise defendant of what he is accused and to furnish him immunity from subsequent prosecution for the same offense,[61] whence property taken cannot be described by what it is enclosed within, because that gives no idea of the extent of the goods taken;[62] but an indictment for attempted larceny need not describe the property nor allege that it had any value.[63]

At the common law, it was necessary in describing money to state the kinds and value of the pieces,[64] but this is no longer necessary in most jurisdictions, it being sufficient to state that it was "current money;"[65] there must be an averment of monetary currency however, "five dollars of the goods and chattels of A" not being sufficient.[66] An averment that the money stolen was money "of the United States" is material, and though unnecessary, must be proved.[67]

An indictment for the larceny of money orders is supported by evidence of the theft of "pay checks" in fact orders drawn for the payment of money by one officer of a corporation on another.[68]

The value of each article should be stated,[69] but it need not be alleged that that value is in the lawful money of the United States,[70] and there need be no allegation of value where the offense does not depend upon value.[71] The value need not be proved exactly as laid.[72]

The property must be alleged to be that of some owner,[73] known or unknown,[74] and may be laid in an estate,[75] a bailee,[76] the apparent or ostensible owner,[77] the servant of the owner, he being in actual possession,[78] or one who had custody, care and control of the property.[79] Ownership of lost money is properly laid in the owner, though he had not custody of it at the time of the theft, he being in constructive possession.[80]

The corporate capacity of a corporation alleged to be the owner of the property need not be set out,[81] and an indictment charging property in certain persons as trustees of a certain church is not objectionable in not laying it in the church, where there is no averment that the church was ever incorporated.[82]

Possession[83] and ownership are material and must be proved as laid.[84]

In an indictment for larceny by a bailee, it is necessary to allege the name of the bailor, and in concise terms the purpose or use for which the property was intrusted to the defendant.[85]

Counts for theft and embezzlement are properly joined.[86]

An indictment for simple larceny is supported by proof of stealing from a house,[87] and a conviction on a charge of larceny from the house is supported by proof of burglary;[88] but an indictment for larceny will not support a verdict of guilty of driving off the animal of another without felonious intent.[89] Where one intrusted with money by another fraudulently converts it to his own use, he is properly convicted of larceny after trust, though he may have fraudulently induced the delegation of the trust with intent to so convert the money.[90]

A conviction for receiving cannot be had under an indictment for larceny,[91] neither will evidence of the receiving of stolen goods support a conviction of larceny.[92]

(§ 3) B. Admissibility of evidence.—Declarations by accused,[93] his conduct during a search,[94] other thefts,[95] and all the facts connected with such thefts,[96] when part of the res gestae, are admissible; but the theft of other articles merely is not.[97] Facts which identify accused with a person in possession of the property,[98] declarations in his presence concerning the property,[99] or matters concerning those connected with accused,[1] or his suspicious conduct[2] may be shown. Friendship for a suspect may prove a motive in stealing indictments.[3]

The market value, where the goods are shown to have one, is the correct basis of estimate.[4] The denial of defendant that he gave out any of his employer's goods to a confederate is admissible to show that his acts in giving them out were not innocent.[5] In a prosecution for theft by obtaining property by giving worthless checks, defendant should be allowed to show that he had money in a bank of slightly different name from the one drawn on.[6]

The parol evidence rule has no application to a case where prosecutor was by fraudulent misrepresentations induced to pay money and enter into a contract fair on its face.[7]

An unrecorded brand may be used in a prosecution for theft of cattle to prove identity but not ownership.[8] Testimony that the owner desired a third person to take his mule to a certain place has no tendency to prove that he consented that defendant should take it.[9] In a prosecution for stealing money from the person of an intoxicated man, defendant is entitled to show that prosecutor was accustomed to lose money while drunk and unjustly accuse people of taking it.[10]

(§ 3) C. Effect of possession of stolen property.—Possession of stolen property without explanation is evidence of guilt,[11] but it should be recent[12] and exclusive in defendant[13] or his confederates,[14] and the presumption of guilt raised thereby may be overcome by proof of any facts inconsistent with the theory of guilt.[15] One having possession of stolen property may explain the circumstances under which he got possession, showing that his possession is an innocent one,[16] and his explanation when made is proper for the jury to consider.[17] This rule, however, does not apply where the circumstances under which defendant acquired possession are all in evidence.[18] An explanation which contains elements contradictory is not satisfactory to rebut this presumption.[19]

A valueless unsigned money order from a stolen book is admissible, having been traced to defendant, as tending to prove larceny of the package that contained it.[20] The corpus delicti must be independently proved to call in force this presumption,[21] and the goods in possession must be identified as those stolen.[22]

Contrary to the common law rule, possession of a range animal puts the burden on defendant of explaining it, in Washington,[23] and in Texas, proof of possession and false statements of defendant's right sufficiently prove the corpus delicti of horse theft, the animal being taken from the range.[24] Various cases in which the effect of recent possession is discussed are mentioned in the note.[25]

(§ 3) D. Sufficiency of evidence.—In larceny as in other crimes, it is indispensable that the fact that the crime has been committed be shown by competent evidence,[26] and merely that some one not present at the trial accused defendant of stealing his clothes will not support a conviction.[27] A stranger's unauthorized presence in a dwelling house, ransacking drawers during the occupant's temporary absence, justifies his conviction of an attempt to steal.[28]

The asportation[29] as well as want of consent of the owner may be shown by circumstances,[30] and nonconsent is sufficiently shown by the testimony of one of several owners, where the circumstances and issues rebut consent.[31] That the deceased owner of cattle attended several terms of court for the purpose of testifying against defendant for stealing them is admissible to show want of consent.[32]

The felonious intent of defendant must be proved,[33] but it may be inferred from the circumstances surrounding the taking.[34]

The value,[35] description[36] and ownership of the property stolen must be proved;[37] but proof of the ownership of the brand on stock is not proof of ownership of the stock.[38]

Cases turning on the sufficiency of the evidence of defendant's participation in the crime,[39] and to support a verdict of guilty, are collected in the note.[40]

36. That the stolen horse was a "range animal" held sufficiently shown. State v. Eubank [Wash.] 74 Pac. 378.

37. Cotton theft—exclusive right of possession in alleged owner held not shown. Tyler v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 750.

38. State v. De Wolfe [Mont.] 74 Pac. 1084.

39. Theft from the person, conviction supported notwithstanding prosecution's failure to positively identify defendant. Burns v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 965. Defendant's participation as accessory after the fact to larceny from the person held shown. State v. King, 88 Minn. 175. Hog stealing—defendant's guilt held satisfactorily shown. Jackson v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 604.

40. Verdict of guilty supported. State v. Blain, 118 Iowa, 466; Weigrefe v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 161. Larceny of live stock—conviction held supported. Lamb v. State [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1050; O'Brien v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 649. Conviction of larceny of horses supported. Younger v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 551. Larceny after trust held shown. Walker v. State, 117 Ga. 260. Larceny from guest at hotel. Verdict on conflicting evidence sustained. Wardlow v. State [Ga.] 45 S. E. 971. Larceny of book of checks of railroad company sufficiently shown. McCray v. State [Fla.] 34 So. 5. Possession obtained in game, evidence held insufficient to convict. Randle v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 958. Theft of money—accomplice held sufficiently corroborated. Ezell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 283. Theft of ring—conviction supported by evidence. Chessley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 548. Theft of bicycle—evidence sufficient to support conviction. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W.

A voluntary return of the stolen property is not proved by defendant's disclosure of its whereabouts after arrest.[41]

(§ 3) E. Instructions.—The instructions in larceny cases as in all prosecutions should give a proper definition of the offense,[42] should set forth all the issues raised by the evidence,[43] such as included offenses of lesser degree,[44] and avoid reference to phases of the law of larceny not properly within the issues as presented by the evidence.[45] An instruction correctly stating the probative effect of possession of stolen property will not require a reversal, notwithstanding the constitutional mandate against instructions on matters of fact,[46] and an instruction that possession of stolen property casts on one the burden of explaining such possession is not objectionable as casting on him the burden of establishing his innocence.[47] Various instructions considered with reference to the issues of the particular case are mentioned in the notes.[48]

561. Theft of pistol, conviction not sustained on circumstantial evidence. Gillam v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 923. Horse theft—conviction sustained by evidence. Bynum v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 844; Hartley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 603; Jackson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 749. Larceny from the person held shown. Martin v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 161. Conviction of warehouseman for larceny as bailee sustained. State v. Humphreys [Or.] 70 Pac. 824. Larceny of city property left in street by employes held sufficiently shown. State v. Nolle, 96 Mo. App. 524.

41. Cattle theft. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 35.

42. An instruction defining theft from the person giving all the statutory elements is sufficient (Chitwood v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 973) and an instruction defining theft as bailee and failing to include the element of fraudulent intent is erroneous. Sale of horse under claim of permission of owner. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 434. Likewise an instruction purporting to state the elements of larceny and omitting nonconsent of the owner (State v. Waller, 174 Mo. 518; State v. Littrell, 170 Mo. 13) and the intent to convert the property to defendant's own use is erroneous (State v. Littrell, 170 Mo. 13). An erroneous instruction as to what constitutes asportation is harmless where it was uncontradicted and sufficiently proved, and the defense was a taking under claim of right. Williams v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 335. Omission of words "belonging to another without his consent" is error. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 348.

43. Where the defense is "kleptomania" an instruction to apply the "right and wrong" test is sufficient. Lowe v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 206. Instruction on effect of recent possession of stolen property held demanded by evidence. Owen v. State [Ga.] 46 S. E. 433; Davis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 544.

44. On indictment for felonious horse stealing a charge as to included misdemeanor should be given (Cr. Code, § 264) especially if felonious intent is doubtful (Cr. Code, § 1256). Cox v. Com. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 423. Where several articles of less value than $50 are found at defendant's house, and none over, all of them stolen from his employer, and there is no evidence that he took them more than one at a time, an instruction on misdemeanor is called for. White v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 185.

45. An instruction on prosecutor's consent is properly refused when the question is not raised by the evidence. Burns v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 965; Stokes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 95. A charge on circumstantial evidence is not required where defendant admits the taking and justifies it by claim of right. Roberts v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 423; Landreth v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 758. Where an accomplice denied that defendant stole money and claimed that his former contrary statement was false an instruction on corroboration is error. Lott v. State [Ark.] 75 S. W. 850. That defendant claimed to have been hired to drive cattle did not make an instruction on recent possession inapplicable (Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 35), but where no explanation is offered by defendant of his recent possession of the stolen property, no instruction on that phase of the evidence is proper (Stewart v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 791).

46. People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288.

47. State v. King [Iowa] 96 N. W. 712. Instruction on effect of possession of stolen horse held not to put upon defendant burden of explaining beyond a reasonable doubt. Landreth v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 70 S. W. 758.

48. Horse theft—Instructions held proper. Ellison v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 188; Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29. Defense of taking to ride and return. Windom v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 193; Hartley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 603. Instruction held not to put burden on defendant of proving owner's consent beyond reasonable doubt. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 434. Possession, principals, and recent possession of stolen property. Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29.

Attempt to escape or avoid arrest. State v. Williams, 118 Iowa, 494; State v. Connor, 118 Iowa, 490. Original taking by consent of owner. State v. Meldrum, 41 Or. 380, 70 Pac. 526.

Principals and accomplices. McAlister v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 760; Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29. Good faith of defendant helping brother kill hog. Newberry v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 774.

(§ 3) F. Trial, sentence and review.—defendant's intent in getting possession of prosecutor's property by a device is a question of fact for the jury.[49]

Since the grade of the offense and the resulting punishment depend upon whether the property stolen was of a certain value or over, it is generally necessary that the verdict find the value,[50] but where the value is not material, the failure of the jury to fix it as directed by the statute will not warrant a reversal.[51] It is not necessary that the verdict fix the value of money.[52]

When the punishment is specially prescribed for a species of theft, general laws do not apply.[53] In Iowa, sentences are imposed by the jury and are reviewable by the supreme court.[54] New trials are grantable for insufficiency of the evidence as in other cases.[55] A foreign law is a fact which must be preserved as such for review.[56]

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.—Statutory definitions differ in some minor particulars.[57]

The difference between a libel and a slander is in general the difference between writing or printing and spoken words, but in New York it has been held that Taking live stock in belief of ownership. State v. Sally, 41 Or. 366, 70 Pac. 396.

Requested charge on receipt of property from third person held covered by charge as given. Chessley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 548.

Recent possession of stolen property.—Instructions held proper. State v. Rose [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1003; Wingo v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 29; State v. Eubank [Wash.] 74 Pac. 378; Porter v. People [Colo.] 74 Pac. 879; Younger v. State [Wyo.] 73 Pac. 551.

Improper. Roberts v. State [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 803.

49. Verberg v. State, 137 Ala. 73.

50. Value held sufficiently stated. State v. Williams, 118 Iowa, 494. "Guilty of larceny" does not include a finding that accused stole the particular amount alleged. State v. Robertson [La.] 35 So. 916.

51. Kellar v. Davis [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1028.

52. Reed v. State [Neb.] 92 N. W. 321.

53. Punishment of theft (Pen. Code 1895, art. 858) does not apply to horse theft (punishable under article 881 as amended Acts 1897, p. 83, c. 67). Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 348.

54. Larceny from person. 10 years not excessive statute allowing 15. State v. Williams, 118 Iowa, 494; State v. Connor, 118 Iowa, 490.

55. In the absence of satisfactory evidence of the corpus delicti and that defendant was the perpetrator, a new trial should be granted. Aaron v. State, 116 Ga. 582.

56. Statement of facts must contain foreign laws to admit of examination into criminality of theft in foreign state. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 348.

57. A libel under the statute of Illinois comprehends a malicious defamation expressed in printing or the like, tending to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue or reputation of one living and thereby expose him or her to public hatred, contempt, ridicule or financial injury [Rev. St. c. 38, § 177]. Spolek Denni Hlasatel v. Hoffman, 105 Ill. App. 170. Under the statutes of Texas any publication tending to injure the reputation of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to either public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury, is a libel [Laws 27th Leg. p. 30]. Walker v. San Antonio Light Pub. Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 165.

defamatory words, spoken in the presence of reporters and representatives of newspapers, the speaker knowing the words will be published in the newspapers, constitute a cause of action for libel.[58]

§ 2. Actionable words. A. In general.—Language cannot be regarded as libelous merely because it is inelegant[59] or imputes to one merely selfish motives.[60]

The publication of one's photograph, whether accompanied by his own or another's name, or by no name, in connection with an article libelous per se, is actionable.[61]

In determining whether a publication is libelous, the language must be taken in its ordinary signification,[62] viewed in the light of all the circumstances surrounding its publication.[63]

59. Hanna v. Singer, 97 Me. 128.

60. Charge of having endeavored to procure legislation to be relieved of sewer assessments. Foot v. Pitt, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 76.

61. De Sando v. N. Y. Herald Co., 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 492; Morrison v. Smith, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 206.

62. Herringer v. Ingberg [Minn.] 97 N. W. 460; Dawson v. Baxter, 131 N. C. 65.

63. Holmes v. Clisby [Ga.] 45 S. E. 684. Where words are capable of two constructions, one actionable and the other not, that construction will be adopted which the circumstances show the words naturally bore. Berea College v. Powell [Ky.] 77 S. W. 381. It is not proper to separate words or phrases from the context. All parts of the paper should be read in connection to collect their true meaning. Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16.

NOTE.

Construction of words—(A) In general: It was at one time thought that, in construing words relied upon to sustain an action for libel or slander, they should be given an innocent construction, if possible, or be construed, as it was expressed, in mitiori sensu; but this doctrine is no longer recognized, and has not been generally recognized for more than a century. The established rule now is, that words are to be construed according to their natural and ordinary meaning, and as they would naturally be understood by persons hearing or reading them, unless it affirmatively appears that they were used and understood in some other sense. Peake v. Oldham, Cowp. 275, Bigelow's Cas. 122, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 73; Simmons v. Mitchell, 6 App. Cas. 156; Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 358, Burdick's Cas. 218; Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb [Ky.] 593, 4 Am. Dec. 659; Chase v. Whitlock, 3 Hill [N. Y.] 139, Chase's Cas. 113; More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472, Erwin's Cas. 349; Watson v. McCarthy, 2 Ga. 57, 46 Am. Dec. 380; Little v. Barlow, 26 Ga. 423, 71 Am. Dec. 219; Hamilton v. Dent, 1 Hayw. [N. C.] 117, 1 Am. Dec. 552; Rue v. Mitchell, 2 Dall. [Pa.] 58, 1 Am. Dec. 258; Walton v. Singleton, 7 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 451, 10 Am. Dec. 472; Beers v. Strong, Kirby [Conn.] 12, 1 Am. Dec. 10; Sawyer v. Elfert, 2 Nott & McC. [S. C.] 511, 10 Am. Dec. 633; Stallings v. Newman, 26 Ala. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 723; Harrison v. Findley, 23 Ind. 265, 85 Am. Dec. 456; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Grat. [Va.] 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; Hess v. Sparks, 44 Kan. 465, 24 Pac. 979, 21 Am. St. Rep. 300; Edwards v. San Jose P. & P. Soc., 99 Cal. 431, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737; Furr v. Speed, 74 Miss. 423; Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marv. [Del.] 408.

"Words are to be taken neither in the milder, nor in the more grievous sense, but in that sense in which they would be understood by those who heard them; the judge ought not to torture them into a charge of guilt, nor explain them into innocence, contrary to their obvious import." McGowan v. Manifee, 7 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 314, 18 Am. Dec. 178. The early rule was to construe words in mitiori sensu, as it was said, which was in effect to construe them, if possible, so as to hold them not actionable, "but this rule has long since been exploded, and has given way to one which accords more with reason and the common sense of mankind. It is now settled that words are to be taken in that sense in which they would be understood by those who hear or read them." Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb [Ky.] 593, 4 Am. Dec. 659 (decided in 1809).

An alleged libel is to be construed as a whole. Although one part of a statement taken alone may be injurious to another's character, if the effect of that part is removed by another part of the statement, it is not a libel. Chalmers v. Payne, 5 Tyrw. 766, 2 Cromp., M. & R. 156, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 113.

When so construed, the words may be defamatory on their face, in which case, as we shall see, the action may be maintained, unless the defendant can and does allege and prove that under the circumstances they were fairly capable of being understood in a special sense rendering them not defamatory, and that they were so understood. Or they may not be defamatory on their face, in which case, as we shall see, the action cannot be maintained unless the plaintiff can and does show that they were, under the particular circumstances, fairly capable of a special meaning rendering them defamatory, and that they were so understood. See the cases hereafter cited.

(b) Province of the court and jury: Whether words are defamatory and actionable on their face, or when given a particular meaning ascribed to them by the plaintiff or defendant, is a question of law to be determined by the court. Capital & C. Bank v. Henty, 7 App. Cas. 741; Mulligan v. Cole, L. R. 10 Q. B. 549; Trebby v. Transcript Pub. Co., 74 Minn. 84, 73 Am. St. Rep. 330; Dexter v. Taber, 12

Johns. [N. Y.] 239; Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126; Hume v. Arrasmith, 1 Bibb [Ky.] 165, 4 Am. Dec. 626; Barrows v. Bell, 7 Gray [Mass.] 301, 66 Am. Dec. 479; Harrison v. Findley, 23 Ind. 265, 85 Am. Dec. 456; Negley v. Farpow, 60 Md. 158, 45 Am. Rep. 715; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425, 6 Am. St. Rep. 320; Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526, 80 Am. St. Rep. 527; Cotulla v. Kerr, 74 Tex. 89, 15 Am. St. Rep. 819; Collins v. Dispatch Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636; Scullin v. Harper [C. C. A.] 78 Fed. 460; Williams v. McKee, 98 Tenn. 139; De Fronsac v. News Co. [R. I.] 35 Atl. 1046; Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16. And the same is true of the questions whether words which are defamatory on their face are capable of a particular special meaning rendering them not defamatory, as claimed by the defendant, or whether words not defamatory on their face are capable of a special meaning rendering them defamatory, as claimed by the plaintiff. Harrison v. Findley, 23 Ind. 265, 85 Am. Dec. 456; Stewart v. Minn. Tribune Co., 40 Minn. 101, 12 Am. St. Rep. 696; Wofford v. Meeks, 129 Ala. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 66; Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16; and cases supra.

But whether ambiguous words, or words decided by the court to be capable of a special meaning ascribed to them, different from their ordinary meaning, rendering them defamatory or not defamatory, as the case may be, were in fact used and understood in such special sense, or whether they were used and understood as applying to the plaintiff, who was not named, is a question of fact for the jury to determine, taking into consideration all the circumstances under which they were uttered or published. Chalmers v. Payne, 5 Tyrw. 766, 2 Cromp. M. & R. 156, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 113; Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471, 90 Am. Dec. 249; Call v. Hayes, 169 Mass. 586; Dedway v. Powell, 4 Bush [Ky.] 77, 96 Am. Dec. 283; Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 211, 4 Am. Dec. 339; McKinly v. Rob, 20 Johns. [N. Y.] 351, 356, Erwin's Cas. 352; Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 347, Burdick's Cas. 218; Garby v. Bennett, 40 App. Div. [N. Y.] 163; Tiepke v. Times Pub. Co., 20 R. I. 200; Hayes v. Press Co., 127 Pa. 642, 14 Am. St. Rep. 874; Price v. Conway, 134 Pa. 340, 19 Am. St. Rep. 704; Haines v. Campbell, 74 Md. 158, 28 Am. St. Rep. 240; Sharpe v. Larson, 67 Minn. 428; Knapp v. Fuller, 55 Vt. 311, 45 Am. Rep. 618; Rodgers v. Kline, 56 Miss. 808, 31 Am. Rep. 389; Cotulla v. Kerr, 74 Tex. 89, 15 Am. St. Rep. 819; Alcorn v. Bass, 17 Ind. App. 500.

(c) Words defamatory on their face: If the words, when construed according to their natural and ordinary meaning, are defamatory on their face, which, as we have seen, is a question of law for the court, the action may be maintained unless the defendant, and the burden is on him, can and does show that they were capable of a special meaning rendering them not defamatory, and that they were so understood. Peake v. Oldham, Cowp. 275, Bigelow's Cas. 122, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 73. An innuendo stating the meaning of words, is never necessary when the meaning of the words set out in the declaration or complaint is clear, and they are defamatory on their face, and if used in such a case, it may be rejected as surplusage. Perkins v. Mitchell, 31 Barb. [N. Y.] 461, Erwin's Cas. 361; More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472, Erwin's Cas. 349; Pfitzinger v. Dubs [C. C. A.] 64 Fed. 696, Erwin's Cas. 334; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425, 6 Am. St. Rep. 320; Callahan v. Ingram, 122 Mo. 355, 43 Am. St. Rep. 583; Hayes v. Press Co., 127 Pa. 642, 14 Am. St. Rep. 874; Collins v. Dispatch Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636

The mere fact that the words might possibly have been used in a special sense rendering them not defamatory, is no ground for so construing them, so as to exempt the plaintiff from liability, instead of giving them their natural meaning, unless it is shown that they were in fact used and understood in such special sense. Thus where a declaration alleged that the defendant said of the plaintiff, "You are guilty of" the death of a certain person (not merely the cause of his death), Lord Mansfield held that the words naturally imputed a charge of murder because of the use of the word "guilty," and refused to give them an innocent construction on the defendant's contention that they might have meant that the death was caused in some other way. Peake v. Oldham, Cowp. 275, 277, Bigelow's Cas. 122, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 73. In this case the defendant had further said, "and rather than you should go without a hangman, I will hang you," which of course put the construction beyond a doubt; but Lord Mansfield was of opinion that the words quoted in the text were alone sufficient to impute such charge. See, also, Jarnigan v. Fleming, 43 Miss. 710, 5 Am. Rep. 514; More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472, Erwin's Cas. 349. Whether words were capable of such a special meaning is, as we have seen, a question of law for the court, and whether, taking into consideration the circumstances under which they were published, they were used and understood in such sense, is a question of fact for the jury.

But in order that the defendant may show that words defamatory on their face were used in a special sense rendering them not defamatory, the words must be fairly capable of such meaning, for it is the effect of his words, not his intention, which determines his liability. "The actionable or innocent character of words depends, not on the intention with which they were published, but on their actual meaning and tendency when published. A man is bound to know the natural effect of the language he uses." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 314. If a man, therefore, publishes words which in their natural and ordinary sense are defamatory, and they are so understood by his hearers or readers, he cannot escape liability by saying that he did not intend them in that sense. Roe v. Chitwood, 36 Ark. 215; Jarnigan v. Fleming, 43 Miss. 710, 5 Am. Rep. 514; Williams v. McKee, 98 Tenn. 139; Nicholson v. Rust, 21 Ky. L. R. 645, 52 S. W. 933. "Words are to be understood in their plain and natural import, according to the ideas they are calculated to convey to those to whom they are addressed. In ascertaining the meaning of the speaker, reference must be had to the words used and the circumstances under which they were uttered, and the author is presumed to have used them in the sense which their use is [was] calculated to convey to the minds of his hearers." Roe v. Chitwood, 36 Ark. 215.

Although the words complained of are not only capable of the defamatory meaning ascribed to them, but ordinarily and naturally have such meaning, they are not actionable, where the defendant proves the circumstances under which they were used, and these circumstances show that the words were not only used but understood by the hearers in a sense which does not render them actionable. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 313; Lord Cromwell's Case, 4 Coke, 13; Van Rensselaer v. Dole, 1 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 279, Chase's Cas. 115; Dedway v. Powell, 4 Bush [Ky.] 77, 96 Am. Dec. 283; Trabue v. Mays, 3 Dana [Ky.] 138, 28 Am. Dec. 61; Shecut v. McDowell, 3 Brev. [S. C.] 38, 5 Am. Dec. 536; Fawsett v. Clark, 48 Md. 494, 30 Am. Rep. 481; Egan v. Semrad, 113 Wis. 84. Thus, as we have seen, it is not actionable to call a man a "murderer," where the word is shown to have been used and understood with reference to his killing game by engines or traps (Lord Cromwell's Case, 4 Coke, 13), or to call men "highwaymen, robbers, and murderers," where the words are shown to have been used and understood with reference to transactions known not to amount to the charge the words import. Van Rensselaer v. Dole, 1 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 279.

Slanderous words may be retracted or so qualified or explained as not to convey a slanderous meaning, and where such retraction, qualification or explanation is made at the time of speaking the words or before separation of the persons who have heard them, the words are not actionable. Trabue v. Mays, 3 Dana [Ky.] 138, 28 Am. Dec. 61; Simons v. Lewis, 51 La. Ann. 327. And explanation of such words made by another person present at the time, if adopted by the speaker, and so understood to be by all present, will prevent the words from being actionable. Trabue v. Mays, supra.

(d) Words not defamatory on their face—Innuendo and colloquium.—If words are not defamatory on their face, the plaintiff may show, to support his action, that they were, under the circumstances attending their publication, capable of a special meaning rendering them defamatory, and that they were used and understood in such special sense (Bornman v. Boyer, 3 Bin. [Pa.] 515, 5 Am. Dec. 380; Thompson v. Lusk, 2 Watts [Pa.] 17, 26 Am. Dec. 91; Hayes v. Press Co., 127 Pa. 642, 14 Am. St. Rep. 874; Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 48, 91 Am. Dec. 672; Haines v. Campbell, 74 Md. 158, 28 Am. St. Rep. 240; Knapp v. Fuller, 55 Vt. 311, 45 Am. Rep. 618; Price v. Conway, 134 Pa. 340, 19 Am. St. Rep. 704; Hinesley v. Sheets, 18 Ind. App. 612, 63 Am. St. Rep. 356); the question whether they were used and understood in such special sense being ordinarily, as we have seen, a question of fact for the jury to determine. Thus the words, "I have made the charge against him, and I will go on with it," will support an action, if the pleading of the plaintiff is in proper form, and it is made to appear thereby that the words were used with reference to plaintiff's testimony in an action, and meant that he had committed perjury. Thompson v. Lusk, 2 Watts [Pa.] 17, 26 Am. Dec. 91. And so of the words "He swore to a lie." Commons v. Walters, 1 Port. [Ala.] 377, 27 Am. Dec. 635. See, also, McClaughry v. Wetmore, 6 Johns. [N. Y.] 82, 5 Am. Dec. 194.

But when the plaintiff seeks to put an actionable meaning on words by which it is not naturally and obviously conveyed, he must show that the words are fairly capable of such meaning, and whether they are so or not is a question of law for the court. Capital & C. Bank v. Henty, 7 App. Cas. 741; Mulligan v. Cole, L. R. 10 Q. B. 549. "Words are not deemed capable of a particular meaning merely because it might by possibility be attached to them; there must be something in either the context or the circumstances that would suggest the alleged meaning to a reasonable mind. In scholastic language, it is not enough that the terms should be 'patent' of the injurious construction; they must not only suffer it, but be fairly capable of it." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 314, 315.

When the words published are not defamatory in their natural and ordinary meaning, but could be and were used with a special meaning rendering them so, the plaintiff has the burden of showing this fact; and, in order to do so, he must allege such special meaning in his pleading, as by alleging that the defendant published certain words concerning plaintiff, setting them out verbatim or in substance, and averring that the defendant thereby meant, etc. Such an averment is called an innuendo. It is always essential, in code pleading as well as at common law, unless declared unnecessary by statute, where the words set out in the declaration or complaint are not defamatory on their face, but were used in a special sense rendering them so; and if it is omitted in such a case the pleading is demurrable as not stating a cause of action, and cannot be aided at the trial by proof of the special meaning. Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 347, Burdick's Cas. 218; Thompson v. Lusk, 2 Watts [Pa.] 17, 26 Am. Dec. 91; Pittsburgh, A. & M. P. R. Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 554, 60 Am. Rep. 363; Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 421, Erwin's Cas. 355; Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 48, 91 Am. Dec. 672; Harrison v. Manship, 120 Ind. 43.

The averment of the words used, and the innuendo alleging the special sense in which they were used and understood, do not always show that the words are actionable. In such a case it is necessary to allege by way of inducement and colloquium the facts showing the application of the words so as to warrant the explanatory meaning given them by the innuendo, for "an innuendo cannot extend the sense of the words beyond their natural meaning, unless something is put upon the record by way of introducing matter, with which they can be connected." Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 421, Erwin's Cas. 355. And see Snell v. Snow, 13 Metc. [Mass.] 278, 46 Am. Dec. 730; Brettun v. Anthony, 103 Mass. 37, Chase's Cas. 147; Sheely v. Briggs, 2 Har. & J. [Md.] 363, 3 Am. Dec. 552; Peterson v. Sentman, 37 Md. 140, 11 Am. Rep. 534; Patterson v. Wilkinson, 55 Me. 42, 92 Am. Dec. 568; Pelton v. Ward, 3 Caines [N. Y.] 73, 2 Am. Dec. 251; Little v. Barlow, 26 Ga. 423, 71 Am. Dec. 219; Miles v. Vanhorn, 17 Ind. 245, 79 Am. Dec. 477; McFadin v. David, 78 Ind. 445, 41 Am. Rep. 587; Harrison v. Manship, 120 Ind. 43; K——— v. H———, 20 Wis. 239, 91 Am. Dec. 397; Clute v. Clute, 101 Wis. 137; Legg v. Dunleavy, 80 Mo. 558, 50 Am. Rep. 512; Shaffer v. Kintzer, 1 Bin. [Pa.] 537, 2 Am. Dec. 488; Pittsburgh, A. & M. P. R. Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 554, 60 Am. Rep. 363; Posnett v. Marble, 62 Vt. 481, 22

Am. St. Rep. 126; Richmond v. Post, 69 Minn. 457; Tiepke v. Times Pub. Co., 20 R. I. 200; Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16.

For a good illustration of colloquium and innuendo, see Thompson v. Lusk, 2 Watts [Pa.] 17, 26 Am. Dec. 91. Words merely charging that a person administered morphine to another on the day the latter made a will, and that if it had not been for that, such person's daughters would not have gotten what they did, cannot be extended by an innuendo to mean that such person unlawfully administered poison causing death. McFadin v. David, 78 Ind. 445, 41 Am. Rep. 587. A publication by a street railroad company that a conductor was discharged for "failing to ring up all fares collected," was held not to be libellous, in the absence of a showing that it was meant to impute a crime or dishonesty. Pittsburgh, A. & M. P. R. Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 554, 60 Am. Rep. 363. In an action for spoken words, which are claimed to be actionable per se because spoken of plaintiff in relation to his office, profession, or business, averments are necessary by way of inducement and colloquium to show that the plaintiff held the particular office, or was engaged at the time in the particular business or profession, and to connect the words complained of therewith. Ayre v. Craven, 2 Adol. & E. 2.

(e) Application of the words to the plaintiff: The fact that the name of the plaintiff was not mentioned in the libel or slander complained of is immaterial, if he shows by proper averments in his complaint (which is necessary), and proves at the trial, that the libel or slander was intended and understood to refer to him, the question in such a case being ordinarily one for the jury. Wakley v. Healey, 7 C. B. 591; Le Fanu v. Malcomson, 1 H. L. Cas. 637; Russell v. Kelly, 44 Cal. 641, 13 Am. Rep. 169; Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 211, 4 Am. Dec. 339; Smart v. Blanchard, 42 N. H. 137; Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 262; Goodrich v. Davis, 11 Metc. [Mass.] 484; Miller v. Butler, 6 Cush. [Mass.] 71; Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479; Colvard v. Black, 110 Ga. 642; Wofford v. Meeks, 129 Ala. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 66; State v. Mason, 26 Or. 273, 38 Pac. 130, 46 Am. St. Rep. 629; Boehmer v. Detroit Free Press Co., 94 Mich. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 318; Davis v. Marxhausen, 103 Mich. 315, Paige's Cas. 383.

(f) Defamation by irony or insinuation; interrogation; opinion; hearsay; silence: It is not necessary to a slander or libel that the defamatory charge or imputation shall be made in direct and positive terms, or that it shall be made as of the knowledge of the person making it; but it may be made by irony or insinuation, interrogation, expression of opinion, or hearsay, etc. Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 347, Burdick's Cas. 218; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Grat. [Va.] 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; Haines v. Campbell, 74 Md. 158, 28 Am. St. Rep. 240; Wofford v. Meeks, 129 Ala. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 66; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737; Hanchett v. Chiatovich [C. C. A.] 101 Fed. 742; Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marv. [Del.] 408; Nord v. Gray, 80 Minn. 143; and other cases in the notes following. "The publisher of a libel cannot escape liability by veiling a calumny under artful or ambiguous phrases, or by indirectly charging that which would be slanderous if imputed in direct and undisguised language." Andrews, J., in Sanderson v. Caldwell, 45 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105.

Words may be given a defamatory meaning, even directly contrary to their natural meaning, by being uttered in a tone of irony or insinuation,—as where a man ironically says of another, "A. will not play the fool or the hypocrite," meaning that he will and does. Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, 205, citing 1 Hawk. P. C. 543.

An action may be maintained for speaking words imputing a crime, although not in direct and positive terms, but by way of interrogation only, if, according to the natural and fair construction of the language used, in connection with the circumstances, the hearers had a right to believe that the defendant intended to charge the plaintiff with the commission of a crime. And the same is true, of course, of other defamatory words. Gorham v. Ives, 2 Wend. [N. Y.] 534, Chase's Cas. 114; Sawyer v. Eifert, 2 Nott & McC. [S. C.] 511, 10 Am. Dec. 633; Waters v. Jones, 3 Port. [Ala.] 442, 29 Am. Dec. 261.

Expressing a suspicion or an opinion that one has been guilty of a crime may be actionable slander or libel. Thus it is actionable to say of another, "I believe," or "I have reason to believe," that he has committed a certain felony. Waters v. Jones, 3 Port. [Ala.] 442, 29 Am. Dec. 261; McGowan v. Manifee, 7 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 314, 18 Am. Dec. 178; Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb [Ky.] 593, 4 Am. Dec. 659; Hart v. Reed, 1 B. Mon. [Ky.] 166, 35 Am. Dec. 179; Miller v. Miller, 8 Johns. [N. Y.] 58; Alcorn v. Bass, 17 Ind. App. 500. Words calculated to cause the hearers to suspect that the person of whom they are spoken has committed a crime are actionable, although they do not directly charge the crime. Proctor v. Owens, 18 Ind. 21, 81 Am. Dec. 341; Dickey v. Andros, 32 Vt. 55; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737; Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marv. [Del.] 408; Haynes v. Clinton Printing Co., 169 Mass. 512.

It is actionable slander to charge a crime on hearsay, as by saying of a person that it is the general opinion of the people in the neighborhood, or that "it is reported," etc., that he committed the crime. Waters v. Jones, 3 Port. [Ala.] 442, 29 Am. Dec. 261; Schenck v. Schenck, 20 N. J. Law, 208; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737; Haynes v. Clinton Print. Co., 169 Mass. 512.

Mere silence cannot amount to slander. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Schaffer, 65 Ohio St. 414, 87 Am. St. Rep. 629, where a railroad company refused to give a discharged employe a "clearance card." and thereby prevented his obtaining other employment.

What constitutes actionable libel in general: A libel, as distinguished from a slander, is the publication of defamatory matter in writing or its equivalent, as by printing, pictures, signs, etc. "There is no doubt that drawing, printing, engraving, and every other use of permanent visible symbols to convey a distinct idea, are in the same case with writing." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 287.

In determining whether particular words are actionable per se, the same rules do not apply to libel as to slander. What would not be actionable without alleging and proving special damage, if merely spoken, may be actionable per se if written or printed or otherwise published in a libel. Any words which would be actionable, if spoken, will certainly be actionable if published in writing or its equivalent. "Written words are libellous in all cases where, if spoken, they would be actionable" (Andrews, J., in Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126), as words falsely imputing to another the commission of a crime, which would be actionable slander if spoken (Johnson v. St. Louis Dispatch Co., 65 Mo. 539, 27 Am. Rep. 293; McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 76 Mich. 338, 15 Am. St. Rep. 318; Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560, 16 Am. St. Rep. 544; Belo v. Fuller, 84 Tex. 450, 31 Am. St. Rep. 75; Upton v. Hume, 24 Or. 420, 33 Pac. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737) or words which falsely impute to another a loathsome contagious disease which would tend to exclude him from society; or words falsely conveying a charge of unfitness, dishonesty, or incompetence in an office, profession, trade, or calling (Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317; Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126; Sanderson v. Caldwell, 46 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105; Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228; Watson v. Trask, 6 Ohio, 531, 27 Am. Dec. 271; Holt v. Parsons, 23 Tex. 9, 76 Am. Dec. 49; St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502; Wofford v. Meeks, 129 Ala. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 66; Mosnat v. Snyder, 105 Iowa, 500).

The law of libel, however, goes much further than this, and gives a cause of action, without the necessity for alleging and proving any special damage as in the case of slander, for any words which are false, and not justified or privileged, and which are either injurious to the character or credit, domestic, public, or professional, of the person concerning whom they are published, or in any way tend to cause men to shun his society, or bring him into hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 290; Villers v. Monstey, 2 Wils. 403; Thorley v. Kerry, 4 Taunt. 355, Bigelow's Cas. 135, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 90, Erwin's Cas. 312; Pfitzinger v. Dubs, 64 Fed. 696, Erwin's Cas. 334; Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50, Chase's Cas. 124; Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 347, Burdick's Cas. 218; King v. Root, 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 113, 21 Am. Dec. 102; Morey v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 123 N. Y. 207, 20 Am. St. Rep. 730; Buckstaff v. Viall, 84 Wis. 129; Bradley v. Cramer, 59 Wis. 309, 48 Am. Rep. 511; Street v. Johnson, 80 Wis. 455, 27 Am. St. Rep. 42; Giles v. Clarke, 69 N. H. 92; McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Bin. [Pa.] 340, 6 Am. Dec. 420; Pittock v. O'Niell, 63 Pa. 253, 3 Am. Rep. 544; Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 385, 30 Am. Rep. 367; Collins v. Dispatch Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636; Wood v. Boyle, 177 Pa. 620, 55 Am. St. Rep. 747; Colby v. Reynolds, 6 Vt. 489, 27 Am. Dec. 574; Fonville v. McNease, Dudley L. [S. C.] 303, 31 Am. Dec. 556; Obaugh v. Finn, 4 Ark. 110, 37 Am. Dec. 773; Riley v. Lee, 88 Ky. 603, 21 Am. St. Rep. 358; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Grat. [Va.] 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; Stewart v. Swift Specific Co., 76 Ga. 280, 2 Am. St. Rep. 40.

"Much which, if only spoken, might be passed as idle blackguardism, doing no discredit save to him who utters it, when invested with the dignity and malignity of print is capable, by reason of its permanent character and wide dissemination, of inflicting serious injury." Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50. "Scandalous matter," said Lord Holt, "is not necessary to make a libel. It is enough if the defendant induce an ill-opinion to be had of the plaintiff, or to make him contemptible and ridiculous." Cropp v. Tilney, 3 Salk. 225. To maintain an action for such a publication it is not necessary, as in an action for slander, to show any special damage. Sanderson v. Caldwell, 45 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105; and other cases above cited.

Illustrations: Thus it has been held libellous per se to write or print of a man that he is a "rogue," a "swindler," a "cheat," or to otherwise impute dishonesty, fraud, or corruption, or any moral turpitude, although to speak such words is not an imputation of crime, and would not be actionable slander unless spoken with reference to his office, profession, trade or business. Austin v. Culpeper, Skin. 123; Bell v. Stone, 1 Bos. & P. 331; J'Anson v. Stuart, 1 Term R. 748; Obaugh v. Finn, 4 Ark. 110, 37 Am. Dec. 773; Wofford v. Meeks, 129 Ala. 349, 87 Am. St. Rep. 66; Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50, Chase's Cas. 124; Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479; Wood v. Boyle, 177 Pa. 620.

It is libellous per se to say or insinuate that a person has set fire to his own building to obtain the insurance thereon. World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 43 Neb. 126, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737. Compare Reid v. Providence Journal Co., 20 R. I. 120 (where it was held that the article in question made no such imputation).

It was held not actionable per se, however, to publish of the plaintiff that he was supervising architect of a building, and promised and gave defendants work on it for a commission paid to him by them, no facts being alleged to show that it was a violation of his duty to take such commission. Legg v. Dunleavy, 80 Mo. 558, 50 Am. Rep. 512. And although in most jurisdictions it is not actionable per se to speak words falsely imputing want of chastity to a girl or woman, or fornication or adultery to a man, where fornication and adultery are not punished as a crime, it is actionable libel to make such a charge in writing or print. Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228; More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472, Erwin's Cas. 349. It was held libellous per se to publish of a woman that she was "a dashing blonde, twenty years old, and is said to have been a concert-hall singer and dancer at Coney Island"—it being alleged and proved that "a concert hall at Coney Island" was a place of evil-repute, and a resort for disorderly persons, and that female singers and dancers there were generally depraved women. Gates v. New York Recorder Co., 155 N. Y. 228.

It has also been held libellous and actionable per se to publish of another that he adds to his other vices ingratitude (Cox v. Lee, L. R. 4 Exch. 284); that he is a "liar," or has uttered a falsehood (Monson v. Lathrop, 96 Wis. 386, 65 Am. St. Rep. 54; Hake v. Brames, 95 Ind. 161; Riley v. Lee, 88 Ky. 603, 21 Am. St. Rep. 358; Colvard v. Black, 110 Ga. 642); that he is the author of a false and malicious report respecting another (Colby v. Reynolds, 6 Vt. 489, 27 Am. Dec. 574); that he has been excluded from his church or its ordinances "by reason of his infamous, groundless assertions" (McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Bin. [Pa.] 340, 6 Am. Dec. 420); that he is an infidel and has opposed the religious institutions of his country (Stow v. Converse, 3 Conn. 325, 8 Am. Dec. 189); that, under the cloak of religious and spiritual reform, he hypocritically, and with the grossest impunity, deals out his malice, uncharitableness and falsehoods (Thorley v. Kerry, 4 Taunt. 355, Bigelow's Cas. 135, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 90, Erwin's Cas. 312). To say of a person that he is a drunkard (Sanderson v. Caldwell, 45 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105); a "swine" (Solverson v. Peterson, 64 Wis. 198, 54 Am. Rep. 607, Paige's Cas. 380); a "frozen snake" (Hoare v. Silverlock, 12 Q. B. 624), a "black sheep" (McGregor v. Gregory, 11 Mees. & W. 287), an "itchy old toad" (Villers v. Monsley, 2 Wils. 403), a "villain" (Bell v. Stone, 1 Bos. & P. 331; Obaugh v. Finn, 4 Ark. 110, 37 Am. Dec. 773). To say that a person does not pay his debts, or to convey such impression by sending through the mail a letter on the envelope of which is the name of an association with a statement that it is an association for the collection of bad debts. McDermott v. Union Credit Co., 76 Minn. 84; Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 20 Am. St. Rep. 115; State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361.

The false protest of a draft or note, if published, may be a libel. May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 30 Am. St. Rep. 154; Hirshfield v. Fort Nat. Bank, 83 Tex. 452, 29 Am. St. Rep. 660. It is libellous per se to say of a man that he has absconded without paying his debts, and swindled the writer out of money advanced for work to be done (Obaugh v. Finn, 4 Ark. 110, 37 Am. Dec. 773); to say of a person that he is responsible for alleged corruptions, intimidation, and fraud in a public election (Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50, Chase's Cas. 124); or that he has "charge of the sack" for an election about to be held (Edwards v. San Jose Print. & Pub. Soc., 99 Cal. 431, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70); to charge a wife with deserting her husband in his sickness (Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445, 16 Am. St. Rep. 594); to falsely publish that a man has committed suicide (Cady v. Brooklyn Union Pub. Co., 23 Misc. [N. Y.] 409); to charge, in publishing the suicide of a man, that it was induced by the exactions of his wife, and by her fraudulent conduct in taking wages for her son which he had not earned (Bradley v. Cramer, 59 Wis. 309, 48 Am. Rep. 511); to falsely say that another is or was insane (Morgan v. Lingen, 8 Law T. [N. S.] 800; Perkins v. Mitchell, 31 Barb. [N. Y.] 465, Erwin's Cas. 361; Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126).

Contra. Mayrant v. Richardson, 1 Nott & McC. [S. C.] 347, 9 Am. Dec. 707. It is libellous to publish of another that he is "insane, and a fit person to be sent to the lunatic asylum," or that "he is so disordered in his senses as to endanger the persons of other people, if left unrestrained," etc. (Perkins v. Mitchell, 31 Barb. [N. Y.] 465, Erwin's Cas. 361); to publish a notice of the death of a living person calculated to subject her to ridicule (McBride v. Ellis, 9 Rich. Law [S. C.] 313, 67 Am. Dec. 553); to say that a person is threatened with a breach of promise suit, that he and his friends are moving to effect a reconciliation, but the young lady insists on his marrying her (Morey v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 123 N. Y. 207, 20 Am. St. Rep. 730); to call one a disreputable person and charge him with having maliciously published a report tending to injure the city in which he lives (Trebby v. Transcript Pub. Co., 74 Minn. 84, 73 Am. St. Rep. 330).

Any false defamatory words published concerning another in writing or print, and which have a tendency to injure or prejudice him in his profession, trade, business, or employment, are actionable per se, and without alleging or proving special damage, whether or not they have reference to his professional or business character, so that they would be actionable per se, if merely spoken. Hetherington v. Sterry, 28 Kan. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 169; Price v. Conway, 134 Pa. 340, 19 Am. St. Rep. 704; Williams v. Davenport, 42 Minn. 393, 18 Am. St. Rep. 519; Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479; Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317; Ivey v. Pioneer S. & L. Co., 113 Ala. 349; Tonini v. Cevasco, 114 Cal. 266, 46 Pac. 103. This is true of words published concerning a lawyer (Sanderson v. Caldwell, 46 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105; Hetherington v. Sterry, 28 Kan. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 169; Mosnat v. Snyder, 105 Iowa, 500); or an engineer (Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479); or minister (Johnson v. Synett, 157 N. Y. 684; Potter v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 68 App. Div. [N. Y.] 95; Jones v. Roberts, 73 Vt. 201. Compare Porter v. Post Pub. Co., 20 R. I. 88, holding a particular publication not to be a libel on a clergyman) or of a merchant or tradesman or other business man (Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; Brown v. Vannaman, 85 Wis. 451, 39 Am. St. Rep. 860; Robinson v. Eau Claire Book & Stationery Co., 110 Wis. 369; Hayes v. Press Co., 127 Pa. 642, 14 Am. St. Rep. 874; Meas v. Johnson, 185 Pa. 12; Hanchett v. Chiatovich [C. C. A.] 101 Fed. 742; American Book Co. v. Gates, 85 Fed. 729; Davey v. Davey, 36 App. Div. [N. Y.] 640; Brown v. Holton, 109 Ga. 431; Dun v. Weintraub, 111 Ga. 416; Bee Pub. Co. v. World Pub. Co., 59 Neb. 713); or of an employe (Call v. Hayes, 169 Mass. 586; Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126; Norfolk & W. Steamboat Co. v. Davis, 12 App. D. C. 306); or a school teacher, etc., (Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228; Bray v. Callihan, 155 Mo. 43; Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292). It is a libel to charge that the business of the proprietor of a patent medicine is swindling. Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Wernich, 95 Wis. 164.

It is libellous per se to publish of an attorney that he is a drunkard and makes extortionate charges for his services (Sanderson v. Caldwell, 46 N. Y. 398, 6 Am. Rep. 105); or that he abandoned his client's cause in the midst of litigation brought on by his advice, to the client's detriment (Hetherington v. Sperry, 28 Kan. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 169).

It is libellous per se to publish of a physician that he is a blockhead and fool, that he hates persons of a certain nationality so much that he would not help them if he could, and to appeal to persons of that nationality not to intrust themselves to his care (Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317); or of an engineer that he conspired to defraud his employer (Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479); or of an actor that he has been guilty of ungentlemanly and discourteous conduct (Williams v. Davenport, 42 Minn. 393, 18 Am. St. Rep. 519).

A letter written by one of two dealers advising a shipper to look out for the other dealer "that you are shipping milk or cream to, unless you have surety for your goods, as he does not pay any of his shippers anything, and he sells the milk and cream for about what it costs him, and the shippers are the losers."—is libellous per se. Brown v. Vannaman, 85 Wis. 451, 39 Am. St. Rep. 860.

It is libellous per se to falsely publish of a merchant or business man that he is insolvent (Hayes v. Press Co., 127 Pa. 642, 14 Am. St. Rep. 874; Brown v. Holton, 109 Ga. 431); or that he has made an assignment (Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592); or that he has infringed another's patent or trade-mark (Watson v. Trask, 6 Ohio, 531, 27 Am. Dec. 271).

It is libellous per se to publish false defamatory words concerning a person conducting a school or other educational institution, which tend to injure his business. Price v. Conway, 134 Pa. 340, 19 Am. St. Rep. 704; St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502; Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292. Thus it is libellous to charge a person maintaining a school or other institution of learning with maintaining an "immoral school," a "dancing school," harmful "to the moral and religious interests of the community," and calling upon friends of religion and good morals not to patronize it. St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502.

It has been held not libellous per se to publish of a merchant or tradesman merely that he has executed a chattel mortgage. Dunn v. Weintrab, 111 Ga. 416; Newbold v. Bradstreet, 57 Md. 38, 40 Am. Rep. 426.

It is libellous to say that a bank-teller became mentally deranged by reason of overwork, and while in that condition made injurious statements regarding the affairs of the bank. Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, Chase's Cas. 126.

In like manner, it is libellous per se to publish of a public officer false defamatory matter which tends to diminish public confidence in his ability, fitness, or integrity, and thus injure him in his office, whether the words are published in relation to his office or not. King v. Root, 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 113, 21 Am. Dec. 102; Lansing v. Carpenter, 9 Wis. 540, 76 Am. Dec. 281; Nehrling v. Herald Co., 112 Wis. 558; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425, 6 Am. St. Rep. 320; Cotulla v. Kerr, 74 Tex. 89, 15 Am. St. Rep. 819; Boehmer v. Detroit Free Press Co., 94 Mich. 7, 34 Am. St. Rep. 318; Bailey v. Holland, 7 App. D. C. 184; Martin v. Paine, 69 Minn. 482; Sharpe v. Larson, 67 Minn. 428; Tiepke v. Times Pub. Co., 20 R. I. 200; McIntyre v. Journal Co., 5 App. Div. [N. Y.] 609. It is libellous to falsely represent that a public officer (the president of the senate, for example) was in a beastly state of intoxication while in the discharge of his duties, and an object of loathing and disgust. King v. Root, 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 113, 21 Am. Dec. 102.

A publication which charges a judge with being destitute of the capacity and attainments necessary for his station or that he openly abandoned the common principles of truth, or that he sold, directly or indirectly, the appointment of clerk, is libellous. Robbins v. Treadway, 2 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 540, 19 Am. Dec. 152. But to charge a judge with improprieties, which would not be cause for impeachment or removal, is no more actionable than the same charge against a private citizen would be. Id. It is not libellous to charge a judge with erring in judgment, or with disregarding public sentiment. Id. And the same is true of officers of private corporations or associations. It is libellous to say of the treasurer of a church that he obstinately retained in his hands without just cause, funds of the church after every effort had been exhausted to induce him to turn them over. Holt v. Parsons, 23 Tex. 9, 76 Am. Dec. 49. It is libellous to impute to a person, after he has ceased to hold a public office, dishonesty or misconduct therein, although the charge may not impute a crime and would not be actionable if merely spoken. Russell v. Anthony, 21 Kan. 450, 30 Am. Rep. 436; Sharpe v. Larsen, 67 Minn. 428.

To render written or printed words actionable per se as a libel, they must at least tend to disgrace a man or bring him into hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to injure him in his business or calling. Mere general abuse or scurrility, however ill-natured and vexatious, if it does not have such a tendency, will not support an action. Rice v. Simmons, 2 Har. [Del.] 417, 31 Am. Dec. 766. See Reid v. Providence Journal Co., 20 R. I. 120.

And it is not libellous to publish of a person merely that he did something which he had a legal right to do, without anything more, as to say that a saloon-keeper, to get rid of a just claim in court, set up as a defense a prohibitory liquor law under which no action could be maintained for the price of liquors sold in violation thereof (Homer v. Engelhardt, 117 Mass. 539, Chase's Cas. 128); or to say of a person (the words not being spoken in reference to his trade or business) that he had for some years owed for medical attendance, and when sued therefor, having no other defense, he cowardly slunk behind the statute of limitations (Hollenbeck v. Hall, 103 Iowa, 214, 64 Am. St. Rep. 175; Bennett v. Williamson, 4 Sandf. [N. Y.] 60. Contra, where special damage—discharge from and loss of employment—was alleged and proved. Hollenbeck v. Ristine, 105 Iowa, 488, 67 Am. St. Rep. 306); or to say of a professional man that he has moved his office up to his house "to save expense" (Stewart v. Minn. Tribune Co., 40 Minn. 101, 12 Am. St. Rep. 696).

Words actionable on proof of special damage only: When words are actionable per se, as in the cases above referred to, it is not necessary to allege or prove any special damage from their utterance. "In such cases, that some damage has been sustained is an implication of law." Newbit v. Statuck, 35 Me. 315, 58 Am. Dec. 706, and other cases above cited. When words are not actionable per se within the rules above stated, but are defamatory, an action will lie if special damage has been sustained as a natural consequence. Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, Burdick's Cas. 199, Erwin's Cas. 315; Olmsted v. Miller, 1 Wend. [N. Y.] 506; Bradt v. Tousley, 13 Wend. [N. Y.] 253, Paige's Cas. 377; Canning v. Owen [R. I.] 52 Atl. 1027; Linney v. Maton, 13 Tex. 449; McQueen v. Fulgham, 27 Tex. 463. But in order that an action may be maintained the plaintiff must both allege and prove the special damage. Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, Burdick's Cas. 199, Erwin's Cas.

315; Lodge v. O'Toole, 20 R. I. 405; Buys v. Gillespie, 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 115, 3 Am. Dec. 404; Knight v. Blackford, 3 Mackey [D. C.] 177, 51 Am. Rep. 772; Hollingsworth v. Shaw, 19 Ohio St. 430, 2 Am. Rep. 411; Tobias v. Harland, 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 537; Hirshfield v. Fort Nat. Bank, 83 Tex. 452, 29 Am. St. Rep. 660; Morasse v. Brochu, 151 Mass. 567, 21 Am. St. Rep. 474. No action lies without proof of special damage, for calling a man opprobrious names, such as liar, cheat, rogue, rascal, swindler, black-leg, and the like, where the words, as in the cases enumerated, do not amount to an imputation of crime, and are not spoken of him in relation to his office, profession, trade, or business. Van Tassel v. Capron, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 250, 43 Am. Dec. 667; Oakley v. Farrington, 1 Johns. Cas. 129, 1 Am. Dec. 107; Chase v. Whitlock, 3 Hill [N. Y.] 139, Chase's Cas. 113.

In such cases, the special damage is the ground of action, and to support the action, it must be the intended or the natural and probable result of the words complained of. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 290, 291; Pollard v. Lyons, 91 U. S. 225, Burdick's Cas. 199, Erwin's Cas. 315; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420, Chase's Cas. 121, Erwin's Cas. 328; Anonymous, 60 N. Y. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 174.

If a person speaks defamatory words of another which are not actionable per se, and by reason thereof the latter is dismissed from an office or employment by a third person,—as where defamatory words concerning an employe or servant, which are not actionable per se, cause his dismissal by his employer or master,—the special damage sustained by reason of the dismissal is the natural and probable consequence of the defamation, and will support an action. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 291; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577.

Special damage, however, resulting, not directly from the speaking of defamatory words by another, but from their voluntary repetition by a third person who heard them, is generally too remote to support an action against the original speaker, unless the latter authorized the repetition, or the person repeating them was under a legal or moral duty to do so. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 292; Parkins v. Scott, 1 Hurl. & C. 153; Hastings v. Stetson, 126 Mass. 329, 30 Am. Rep. 683; Shurtleff v. Parker, 130 Mass. 293, 39 Am. Rep. 454; Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, Burdick's Cas. 213; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420, Chase's Cas. 121, Erwin's Cas. 328; Schoepflin v. Coffey, 162 N. Y. 12. Compare Zier v. Hoffiin, 33 Minn. 66, 53 Am. Rep. 9. In the latter cases,—where the repetition was in pursuance of a legal or moral duty, or was authorized by the original speaker,—an action will lie. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 292; Ward v. Weeks, 7 Bing. 211; Keenholts v. Becker, 3 Denio [N. Y.] 346; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420, Chase's Cas. 121, Erwin's Cas. 328.

In order that special damage may support an action for words not actionable per se, there must be a definite temporal loss,—"a loss of some material advantage must be shown." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 293. It has been held therefore that the action will not lie where the only special damage is the loss by the plaintiff of the good opinion of his neighbors,—consortium vicinorum. (Pollock, Torts [Webb's Ed.] 293. See Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, Burdick's Cas. 199, Erwin's Cas. 315; Beach v. Ranney, 2 Hill [N. Y.] 309); as where the only damage is exclusion from membership in a religious society, which is not shown to carry with it as of right any definite temporal advantage. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 293; Roberts v. Roberts, 5 Best & S. 384. But there is a sufficient temporal loss to support an action, in case of loss of the consortium as between husband and wife (Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577. See Bigaouette v. Paulet, 134 Mass. 123, 45 Am. Rep. 307); loss of voluntary hospitality of one's relatives or friends (Davies v. Solomon, L. R. 7 Q. B. 112; Williams v. Hill, 19 Wend. [N. Y.] 305); loss of fuel, clothing, etc., with which another has been in the habit of providing the plaintiff gratuitously (Beach v. Ranney, 2 Hill [N. Y.] 309).

But a complaint for slander in calling plaintiff a drummer for a whore-house, which alleged that in consequence thereof the plaintiff had been socially ostracized, was held good as showing special damage, in Mudd v. Rogers, 19 Ky. L. R. 1329, 43 S. W. 255.

The withholding by a father from his minor daughter of a promised dress and a course of music lessons was held not to be such special damage as would sustain an action for slander in imputing self-pollution to the girl, where the father testified that he did not believe the charge (Anon., 60 N. Y. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 174); loss of entertainment at an inn or other public house (Olmsted v. Miller, 1 Wend. [N. Y.] 506); breaking off of a marriage engagement (Moody v. Baker, 5 Cow. [N. Y.] 351; Linney v. Matson, 13 Tex. 449); or loss of actual membership in a social club, but not the loss of the mere chance of being elected to membership (Chamberlain v. Boyd, 11 Q. B. Div. 407).

Mere mental trouble or distress resulting from defamatory words not actionable per se is not sufficient special damage to sustain an action. Allsop v. Allsop, 5 Hurl. & N. 534; Woodbury v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 194; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420, Chase's Cas. 121, Erwin's Cas. 328; Hirshfield v. Ft. Worth Nat. Bank, 83 Tex. 452, 29 Am. St. Rep. 660.

If the words are actionable per se, mental suffering is an element of damages. Cahill v. Murphy, 94 Cal. 29, 30 Pac. 195, 28 Am. St. Rep. 88. And by the weight of authority, even illness and the expenses thereof, and inability to work and consequent pecuniary loss, caused merely by the effect on one's mind of defamatory words are not such special damages as will support an action. Allsop v. Allsop, 2 Law T. (N. S.) 290; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420, Chase's Cas. 121, Erwin's Cas. 328 (disapproving, and in effect overruling on this point, Bradt v. Towsley, 13 Wend. [N. Y.] 253, Paige's Cas. 377, and other earlier New York cases); Shafer v. Ahalt, 48 Md. 171, 30 Am. Rep. 456. Contra, Underhill v. Welton, 32 Vt. 40; McQueen v. Fulgham, 27 Tex. 463. "It cannot be said that sickness is the natural consequence of defamatory or slanderous words. Such might or might not be the result, depending in a great measure upon the sensibilities and temperament of the person." Shafer v. Aholt, 48 Md. 171, 30 Am. Rep. 456.

(§ 2) B. Words imputing crime or want of chastity.—An unprivileged publication, in writing, in print, or by spoken words, of a false charge that another is guilty of a crime, is actionable per se.[64] Some crime, defined and punished by law, however, must be charged,[65] but it is not necessary that the accusation be expressed in unequivocal language.[66] Though it is not as a general rule actionable to say that a person "would commit" an offense, yet where the whole conversation shows an intent to charge that plaintiff is accustomed to commit that offense, the words are actionable.[67]

At the common law it is actionable to speak or write of a female words imputing to her a want of chastity,[68] but the charge must be direct.[69] By the statute in Illinois, it is actionable to falsely utter words of any person amounting to a charge of having been guilty of adultery or fornication.[70]

64. Donahoe v. Star Pub. Co. [Del.] 55 Atl. 337; Cooke v. O'Malley, 109 La. 382. A charge that plaintiff is a blackmailer, has brought blackmailing suits and procured the publication of libels against himself in order to found suits upon them. Palmer v. Mahin, 120 Fed. 737. That plaintiff is a blackmailer and gambler. Weston v. Weston, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 520. "You get out of here. You came in here to see what you could find to steal." Laury v. Evans, 87 Minn. 396. "You are stealing my corn." McMinemee v. Smith [Iowa] 93 N. W. 75. "You broke in there and stole some goods." Hinchman v. Knight [Mich.] 94 Mo. 1. That certain persons, naming them, were on their way to the county seat to testify in the case of plaintiff and another "for burning" a schoolhouse. Berea College v. Powell, 25 Ky. L. R. 1235, 77 S. W. 381. An oral charge of forgery is slanderous per se. Ruble v. Bunting, 31 Ind. App. 654. So also to say of one that he is the greatest rumseller in town. Davis v. Starrett [Me.] 55 Atl. 516. And so is a statement that plaintiffs, a husband and wife, "used something that they get no children" if it is intended thereby to charge them with the crime of abortion. Hitzfelder v. Kopplemann [Tex. Civ. App.] 70 S. W. 353.

65. Foot v. Pitt, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 76. A statement that plaintiff had written anonymous letters, that they were scurrilous, and that it was a state's prison offense, charges no crime under the laws of the United States. Middleby v. Effler [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 261. In Massachusetts it is not actionable to charge a man with selling his vote, it not being a crime in that state for one to receive money for his vote. Doyle v. Kirby [Mass.] 68 N. E. 843. Where the charge is "You stole my land. You stole my money!" the latter charge is in no way qualified by the former though there was a controversy between the parties over land. Hamlin v. Fautl [Wis.] 95 N. W. 955. A statement that plaintiff is without "mental rectitude" followed by a statement of the circumstances on which it is founded is not libelous per se. Shepherd v. Baer, 96 Md. 152. Where it was published of plaintiff that insurance companies considered his property "peculiarly susceptible to fire" but there was no innuendo in the declaration defendant need not show as a justification that he burned his own property. Conner v. Standard Pub. Co., 183 Mass. 474.

66. Expression of belief sufficient. Covington v. Roberson [La.] 35 So. 586.

67. Words which imply that plaintiff, a married woman, is an adulteress. Iles v. Swank, 105 Ill. App. 9. And a statement that plaintiff would steal certain property if he got a chance has been held criminally libelous. Browing v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 482, 76 S. W. 19.

68. Words imputing a want of chastity to a female are actionable as well when spoken of a married as an unmarried woman. Cushing v. Hederman, 117 Iowa, 637. Imputation of venereal disease is libelous per se. McDonald v. Nugent [Iowa] 98 N. W. 506.

69. To say of a woman that she is a "dirty bitch" is not actionable. Jacobs v. Cater, 87 Minn. 448. Contra, the allegation being a "damned bitch" (Stoner v. Erisman [Pa.] 56 Atl. 77); but a statement that plaintiff, a married woman, "sought elsewhere a substitute" for her husband, and that her husband "saw her begin to make love" to another man who is subsequently called "the seducer" is actionable (Spolek Denni Hlasatel v. Hoffman, 105 Ill. App. 170; Hlasatel v. Hoffman [Ill.] 68 N. E. 400).

70. 1 Starr & C. c. 126, § 1. Iles v. Swank, 105 Ill. App. 9.

NOTE.

Words imputing crime: Although the words must impute what amounts to a crime in law, the offense need not be specified with legal precision; the implication may be by general words. "It is enough if the charge * * *, in its natural and obvious sense, and as it would reasonably be understood by persons hearing it, conveys the meaning attached to it by the plaintiff." Buckley v. O'Niel, 113 Mass. 193, 18 Am. Rep. 466; Thompson v. Lewiston Daily Sun Pub. Co., 91 Me. 203; Furr v. Speed, 74 Miss. 423. Thus it is clearly actionable per se, as imputing larceny, to call another a "thief," or to say that he "stole" or has "stolen" property, if there is nothing to show that the words were used in any other than their ordinary meaning. Nye v. Otis, 8 Mass. 121, 5 Am. Dec. 79; Van Ankin v. Westfall, 14 Johns. [N. Y.] 233, Chase's Cas. 113; Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239; Shipp v. McCraw, 3 Murph. [N. C.] 463, 9 Am. Dec. 611; Frolich v. McKiernan, 84 Cal. 177, 24 Pac. 114; Berdeaux v. Davis, 58 Ala. 611; Quigley v. McKee, 12 Or. 22, 5 Pac. 347, 53 Am. Rep. 320; Bacon v. Mich. Cent. R. Co., 55 Mich. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 372; Youngs v. Adams, 113 Mich. 199; Savoie v. Scanlan, 43 La. Ann. 967, 26 Am. St. Rep. 200; Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292.

To say of a person that he is "a thieving puppy" is actionable. Little v. Barlow, 26

(§ 2) C. Words exposing to contempt or ridicule.—Any false and malicious writing published of another is libelous per se when its tendency is to render him

Ga. 423, 71 Am. Dec. 219. To say of another "He has been accused of horse-stealing; he sued his accusers, and the defendants had a verdict," imputes the crime of larceny. Johnson v. St. Louis Dispatch Co., 65 Mo. 539, 27 Am. Rep. 293. And it is actionable per se, subject to the same qualification, to say of a person that he is "perjured," or has committed "perjury" (Hopkins v. Beedle, 1 Caines [N. Y.] 347, 2 Am. Dec. 191; Commons v. Walters, 1 Port. [Ala.] 377, 27 Am. Dec. 635) or that he has "murdered" another (Stallings v. Newman, 26 Ala. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 723), or "poisoned" another (Furr v. Speed, 74 Miss. 423). To say of another, "He makes his money easy; he keeps a gambling place," or "a gambling hell," is equivalent to saying that he keeps a place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, which is made a criminal offense by statute. Buckley v. O'Niel, 113 Mass. 193, 18 Am. Rep. 466.

In some of the cases it is held that it is not slander per se to say of another that he has taken a false oath in court or in a certain court, on the ground that the words do not necessarily impute that the false oath was taken corruptly, and in a court having jurisdiction to administer an oath, which are essential to perjury. Ward v. Clark, 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 10, 3 Am. Dec. 383, Bigelow's Cas. 128, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 81. See, also, Hopkins v. Beedle, 1 Caines [N. Y.] 347, 2 Am. Dec. 191; Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340.

But in these jurisdictions to say that one is "perjured," or committed "perjury," is actionable. Hopkins v. Beedle, supra. And it has been held actionable to say, "You swore to a lie, for which you now stand indicted" (Pelton v. Ward, 3 Caines [N. Y.] 73, 2 Am. Dec. 251), or, "He has sworn falsely, and I will attend to the grand jury respecting it" (Gilman v. Lowell, 8 Wend. [N. Y.] 573, 24 Am. Dec. 96), or to say, "That is false," to a witness while testifying in a cause in court to a point material to the issue (McClaughry v. Wetmore, 6 Johns. [N. Y.] 82, 5 Am. Dec. 194). But other cases hold otherwise on the ground that such words in their common meaning import a charge of perjury. Hamilton v. Dent, 1 Hayw. [N. C.] 117, 1 Am. Dec. 552; Rue v. Mitchell, 2 Dall. [Pa.] 58, 1 Am. Dec. 258; McGaw v. Hamilton, 184 Pa. 108, 63 Am. St. Rep. 786; Beers v. Strong, Kirby [Conn.] 12, 1 Am. Dec. 10.

In some cases, also, it has been held not actionable to say of another, "He burnt my barn," etc., as the burning may have been innocently done, so as not to constitute arson (Barham v. Nethersal, 4 Coke, 20); while other cases hold that such words are actionable on the ground that they would naturally and ordinarily be understood as a charge of arson (Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb [Ky.] 593, 4 Am. Dec. 659. And see Waters v. Jones, 3 Port. [Ala.] 442, 29 Am. Dec. 261; Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marv. [Del.] 408; Davis v. Carey, 141 Pa. 314).

While words are actionable when they impute a crime in general terms, without giving the particulars, yet, if the particulars are given in charging another with an offense, they must not be inconsistent with the offense alleged to have been charged. Thus to say that a person "stole" property is not actionable, where the particulars are given and they are such that the act could not have been larceny. This is illustrated by the case above referred to, in which it was held not to be actionable to say of a person that he stole the parish bell-ropes when he was church-warden, since, as the title was in him ex officio, the act could not amount to larceny (Jackson v. Adams, 2 Bing. N. C. 402), and by many other cases. Thus where the words proved were "He is a thief, for he has stolen my beer," but it appeared that they were spoken by a brewer concerning his servant and in reference to transactions which could not constitute larceny, but were a mere breach of trust, it was held that the words were not actionable. Cristie v. Cowell, Peake, 4. See, also, Shecut v. McDowell, 3 Brev. [S. C.] 38, 5 Am. Dec. 536; Egan v. Semrad, 113 Wis. 84.

It is not actionable to say of a person that his charges for services were so excessive as to be "simply petit larceny," as the context shows that no charge of crime was intended. Ivey v. Pioneer S. & L. Co., 113 Ala. 349. To charge a man with stealing is actionable, but not to charge him with stealing something which is not the subject of larceny; as real property, for example. Ogden v. Riley, 14 N. J. Law, 186, 25 Am. Dec. 513.

To say of a man, "You are a thief, for you stole my tree" was held not to be actionable, as it showed that the act charged was not a felony (trees not being the subject of larceny), but a trespass (Minors v. Leeford, Cro. Jac. 114), or doors to a house (Blackburn v. Clark, 19 Ky. L. R. 659, 41 S. W. 430). There was a like decision where it was said that a person "stole windows from B's house" (Wing v. Wing, 66 Me. 62, 22 Am. Rep. 548); and where it was said that a person had "stolen" corn out of another's field, it appearing that the words had reference to standing corn (Stitzell v. Reynolds, 67 Pa. 54, 5 Am. Rep. 396).

To charge one with stealing the key to a door is a charge of larceny. Hoskins v. Tarrence, 5 Blackf. [Ind.] 417, 35 Am. Dec. 129. To charge one with stealing a dog is actionable where a dog is regarded as the subject of larceny, but not otherwise. Findlay v. Bear, 8 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 571; Harrington v. Miles, 11 Kan. 480, 15 Am. Rep. 355. And see 2 Clark & M., Crimes, 668. To steal clothing from a dead body cast ashore from a wreck is larceny, and therefore words falsely imputing such an act to another is actionable slander. Wonson v. Sayward, 13 Pick. [Mass.] 402, 23 Am. Dec. 691, Paige's Cas. 364. In like manner, saying of a person that he is a "murderer" is not actionable where it is made to appear that the words were not used in their ordinary sense, but with reference to the killing of game by the plaintiff by means of engines. Lord Cromwell's Case, 4 Coke, 13. To say that certain persons are "highwaymen, robbers, and murderers," is not actionable, if the defendant shows that they were spoken and understood in reference to transactions which were known not to amount to the contemptible or ridiculous in public estimation, or expose him to public hatred or contempt, or deprive him of the companionship of respectable people.[71] charge they naturally import. Van Rensselaer v. Dole, 1 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 279, Chase's Cas. 115.

An action will not lie for merely saying that another will commit a crime, or intends to do so, as for saying that one "will steal" (Bays v. Hunt, 60 Iowa, 251. See, also, Seaton v. Cordray, Wright [Ohio] 101; Cornelius v. Van Slyck, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 70, 71), or is going to start and maintain a house of illfame (Fanning v. Chace, 17 R. I. 388, 33 Am. St. Rep. 878). To say that a married woman solicited a man not her husband to have intercourse with her is not actionable, although adultery may be punishable as a crime. K——— v. H———, 20 Wis. 239, 91 Am. Dec. 397.

Words imputing to another the commission of a crime are held to be actionable, not because they may subject the person charged to a criminal prosecution and punishment, but because of the injury to his reputation from such a charge. An action will lie, therefore, without allegation of special damage, for falsely saying or imputing that another has been convicted and served a sentence for a crime. To say that a person was a returned convict was held actionable per se in an English case, since it imputed an offense punishable by transportation; and it was held immaterial that the words imported that the punishment had already been suffered, since the obliquy remained. Fowler v. Dowdney, 2 Moody & R. 119, Chase's Cas. 114. See, also, Gainford v. Tuke, Cro. Jac. 536; Smith v. Stewart, 5 Pa. 372; Shipp v. McCraw, 3 Murph. [N. C.] 463, 9 Am. Dec. 611. It is actionable per se to say of a person that he has been in the penitentiary (Michael v. Matheis, 77 Mo. App. 556), or for falsely saying that he has been tried or arraigned for a crime and would have been convicted if it had not been for certain influence, etc. (Carpenter v. Tarrant, Lee t. Hardw. 339; Halley v. Stanton, Cro. Car. 268). Although a man may have been convicted of a felony, it seems that it is actionable to call him a felon after he has undergone his sentence, for he is then no longer a felon in law. Brett and Cotton, L. J., in Leyman v. Latimer, 3 Exch. Div. 352.

Words imputing unchastity or immoral conduct: At common law it was not regarded as actionable per se to charge a woman with unchastity or adultery, or to charge a man with fornication or adultery, as these offenses were not indictable at common law, but were cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts only. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 298. And the rule still applies in most jurisdictions unless it is changed by statute, or unless such conduct is punished by statute. Charging a woman with adultery or fornication (Buys v. Gillespie, 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 115, 3 Am. Dec. 404; Bradt v. Towsley, 13 Wend. [N. Y.] 253, Paige's Cas. 377; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, Burdick's Cas. 199, Erwin's Cas. 315; Elliott v. Ailsberry, 2 Bibb [Ky.] 473, 5 Am. Dec. 631; Underhill v. Welton, 32 Vt. 40; Berry v. Carter, 4 Stew. & P. [Ala.] 387, 24 Am. Dec. 762; Linney v. Maton, 13 Tex. 449; Shafer v. Ahalt, 48 Md. 171, 30 Am. Rep. 456); charging a woman with being a common prostitute (Brooker v. Coffin, 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 188, 4 Am. Dec. 337, Bigelow's Cas. 126, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 77).

To charge a girl with self-pollution is not actionable per se. Anon., 60 N. Y. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 174. To say that a person is a "drummer for a whore-house" is not actionable per se. Mudd v. Rogers, 19 Ky. L. R. 1329, 43 S. W. 255.

In some jurisdictions to verbally charge a woman with unchastity is held actionable per se because of the injury to her reputation, whether it is a crime or not. Smith v. Silence, 4 Iowa, 321, 66 Am. Dec. 137; Haynes v. Ritchey, 30 Iowa, 76, 6 Am. Rep. 642; Barnett v. Ward, 36 Ohio St. 107, 38 Am. Rep. 561. But by a statute in England it is now expressly provided that words imputing unchastity or adultery to any woman or girl shall be actionable without proof of special damage. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 51. And there are somewhat similar statutes in some of the states in this country. See Gray v. Elzroth, 10 Ind. App. 587, 53 Am. St. Rep. 400; Nicholson v. Dunn, 21 Ky. L. R. 643, 52 S. W. 935; Stewart v. Major, 17 Wash. 238, 49 Pac. 503.

Even in the absence of such a statute, the common law rule does not apply where by statute, as in most jurisdictions, fornication and adultery are punished as offenses. To charge a woman or man with the commission of fornication or adultery, or to say of a woman that she is a "whore," or otherwise impute unchastity, is actionable per se as imputing a crime, where adultery, fornication, being a common prostitute, etc., as the case may be, is punished by statute in such a way (it must be by indictment in some jurisdictions), as to come within the rule in the particular jurisdiction as to words imputing crime. Noyes v. Hall, 62 N. H. 594; Smalley v. Anderson, 2 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 56, 15 Am. Dec. 121; Linney v. Maton, 13 Tex. 449; Underhill v. Welton, 32 Vt. 40; Walton v. Singleton, 7 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 451, 10 Am. Dec. 472; Klewin v. Bauman, 53 Wis. 244; Patterson v. Wilkinson, 55 Me. 42, 92 Am. Dec. 568; Kelley v. Flaherty, 16 R. I. 234, 27 Am. St. Rep. 739; Mooney v. Bennett, 44 App. Div. [N. Y.] 423; Browning v. Powers [Mo.] 38 S. W. 943. It is a charge of unchastity or adultery to say that a woman has slept with a man not her husband, or was in bed with him. Barnett v. Ward, 36 Ohio St. 107, 38 Am. Rep. 561.

It is actionable per se (where fornication and adultery are crimes) to say of another man, "You got to bed with Sarah M.;" or to say, "He is such a whoring fellow that it is with difficulty he can keep a girl about the house, being continually riding them;" or to say, "He has committed fornication," although he is a married man. Walton v. Singleton, 7 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 451, 10 Am. Dec. 472. See, also, as to whether particular words impute unchastity or adultery to a woman, or fornication or adultery to a man (Radke v. Kolbe, 79 Minn. 440; Mooney v. Bennett, 44 App. Div. [N. Y.] 423; Lovejoy v. Whitcomb, 174 Mass. 586), and to say of an unmarried girl that she "has been to swear off a young one," is an imputation of fornication (Patterson v. Wilkinson, 55 Me. 42, 92 Am. Dec. 568). But to call a woman a "bitch" or "slut" does not impute adultery or prostitution, and is not actionable per se. K——— v. H———, 20 Wis. 239, 91 Am. Dec. 397; Robertson v. Edelstein, 104 Wis. 440; Roby v. Murphy, 27 Ill. App. 394.

(§ 2) D. Words injuring in business or occupation.—Defamatory words falsely spoken or written of one, which prejudice him in his business, are actionable per se;[72] so also of words reflecting on the character or qualifications of a professional man,[73] and this applies to words aspersing a public officer in the conduct of his office.[74]

It is not actionable as imputing unchastity to say of a woman "She is a damned slut, she is a damned bitch, she is a damned sow, and those who know her know that she is no account." Peters v. Garth, 20 Ky. L. R. 1934, 50 S. W. 682. See, also, Craig v. Pyles, 18 Ky. L. R. 1043, 39 S. W. 33. But it has been held that unchastity is imputed by speaking of a woman as a certain man's "old slut." Kennenberg v. Neff, 74 Conn. 62. Nor is it actionable to impute to a woman desire for or solicitation of sexual intercourse with a man not her husband. To charge a married woman with seating herself on the lap of a man not her husband, and insisting upon his having intercourse with her, are not actionable, as they merely show her desire to commit adultery. K——— v. H———, 20 Wis. 239, 91 Am. Dec. 397.

It is not actionable to impute to a person the commission of sodomy or bestiality, when such an act is not punishable as a crime. Coburn v. Harwood, Minor [Ala.] 93, 12 Am. Dec. 37; Davis v. Brown, 27 Ohio St. 326; Melvin v. Weiant, 36 Ohio St. 184, 38 Am. Rep. 572.

But in Iowa, where it is held actionable per se to charge a woman with unchastity, whether unchastity is a crime or not, a charge of sodomy or bestiality against a woman is held a charge of unchastity within the rule. Haynes v. Ritchey, 30 Iowa, 76, 6 Am. Rep. 642; Cleveland v. Detweiler, 18 Iowa, 299. The same would perhaps be held in Ohio.

Words imputing disease: It is well settled that it is actionable per se to falsely and maliciously utter words imputing to another a contagious disease of so loathsome a character that it would cause him to be excluded from society,—such as leprosy, the plague, and venereal diseases. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 299; Carslake v. Mapledoram, 2 Term R. 473, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 84; Bloodworth v. Gray, 7 Man. & G. 334; "Joannes" v. Burt, 6 Allen [Mass.] 236, 83 Am. Dec. 625; Golderman v. Stearns, 7 Gray [Mass.] 181, Chase's Cas. 116; Watson v. McCarthy, 2 Ga. 57, 46 Am. Dec. 380; Kaucher v. Blinn, 29 Ohio St. 62, 23 Am. Rep. 727, Paige's Cas. 366. This rule applies, however, to such contagious diseases only as are of a loathsome character, like those above enumerated. It does not apply to smallpox, scarlet fever, diphtheria, and the like, or to insanity. "Joannes" v. Burt, 6 Allen [Mass.] 236, 83 Am. Dec. 625.

The words must impute that the person has the disease, not merely that he had it at some time in the past. "Charging another with having had a contagious disorder is not actionable; for unless the words impute a continuance of the disorder at the time of speaking them, the gist of the action fails; for such a charge cannot produce the effect which makes it the subject of an action, namely, his being avoided by society." Carslake v. Mapledoram, 2 Term R. 473, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 84. And see Pike v. Van Wormer, 5 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 171.

71. Williams v. Fuller [Neb.] 94 N. W. 118. An article ridiculing the published literary opinions of a college professor is not libelous per se. Triggs v. Sun P. & P. Co., 91 App. Div. [N. Y.] 259.

72. Plaintiff, a contractor, was charged with not paying his bills and that he would put in inferior grades of material. Cooley v. Galyon, 109 Tenn. 1, 60 L. R. A. 139. Defendant said of plaintiff, a miller, that "He just beat me out of $1100 in three months." Fred v. Traylor, 24 Ky. L. R. 1906, 72 S. W. 768. Merchants charged with neglecting and refusing to pay debts when due. Salomon v. Armour & Co., 123 Fed. 342. A written communication charging a merchant with "cutting" prices, nothing appearing that he is bound, by contract or otherwise, not to do so, is not libelous per se. Willis v. Eclipse Mfg. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 591. An order published by a railroad company in language temperate and decorous that an employe, without naming him, has been dismissed from its service, in the absence of extrinsic evidence of malice, is not actionable. Brown v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 100 Va. 619, 60 L. R. A. 472. To publish of a business firm that "the opinion is expressed that a local bank has been secured" imputes a want of credit or responsibility, which necessarily and presumptively causes pecuniary loss, and is therefore actionable per se (Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444), but a publication which has the effect merely of disparaging a tradesman's goods is not actionable without an allegation of special damage (Holmes v. Clisby, 118 Ga. 820; McLoughlin v. American Circular Loom Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 203). Railroad clearance card "Cause for leaving service, unsatisfactory service. Conduct good" is not libelous per se. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Ely [Miss.] 35 So. 873.

73. To say of a physician that he is "a jackass in the guise of a doctor" and a savage unworthy to retain his diploma is actionable. Bornmann v. Star Co., 174 N. Y. 212. So also to say that he is a "quack." Elmergreen v. Horn, 115 Wis. 385. To publish of magnetic healers that they are "miserable charlatans" is not actionable, the plaintiffs failing to show the rationale of the business of magnetic healing. Weltmer v. Bishop, 171 Mo. 110. Statements embodied in a written challenge to a minister's right to sit at a general conference, that he "has rendered himself unworthy of membership in the convention" and that he "is unworthy of a seat in this convention on moral grounds" are libelous per se (Cranfill v. Hayden [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 573), but the law of libel is not designed to shield one in the practice of an illegal business. Magnetic healing. Weltmer v. Bishop, 171 Mo. 110.

74. Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16; Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 339, 70 Pac. 216; Herringer v. Ingberg [Minn.] 97 N. W. 460. Words imputing a want of integrity in any one holding an office of confidence or trust, whether an office of profit or not, are actionable per se (Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 339, 70 Pac. 216), but as against a public officer they must impute to him some incapacity or lack of due qualification to fill the position or some positive past misconduct which will injuriously affect him in it. Prosecuting attorney declining to prosecute for death of baby denounced as "outrage" (Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 96 Md. 16), and where the neglect imputed is in relation to a matter wholly outside his duties as such officer. Announcement by prosecuting attorney that he would refuse to recommend payment for an autopsy (Id.; Dawson v. Baxter, 131 N. C. 65), or where there is no allegation that plaintiff held an office at the time of publication, or that the language referred to him in his official capacity, it can only be considered as a publication concerning a private individual (Hanna v. Singer, 97 Me. 128).

NOTE.

Words prejudicing another in his office, business or calling: Defamatory words are actionable per se if they convey a charge of unfitness, dishonesty, or incompetence in an office, profession, or trade; or "in short, where they manifestly tend to prejudice a man in his calling." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 288; Lumby v. Allday, 1 Tyrw. 217, Bigelow's Cas. 131, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 84; Seaman v. Bigg, Cro. Car. 480; Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177, 186; Gribble v. Pioneer Press Co., 34 Minn. 342; Mains v. Whiting, 87 Mich. 172, Paige's Cas. 368; McMillan v. Birch, 1 Bin. [Pa.] 178; Wilson v. Cottman, 65 Md. 190; Burtch v. Nickerson, 17 Johns [N. Y.] 217, 8 Am. Dec. 390; Cruikshank v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 178; Camp v. Martin, 23 Conn. 86; Knight v. Blackford, 3 Mackey [D. C.] 177, 51 Am. Rep. 772; Hayner v. Cowden, 27 Ohio St. 292, 22 Am. Rep. 303; Spiering v. Andrae, 45 Wis. 330, 30 Am. Rep. 744; Morasse v. Brochu, 151 Mass. 567, 21 Am. St. Rep. 474; Lovejoy v. Whitcomb, 174 Mass. 586; Swan v. Thompson, 124 Cal. 193, 56 Pac. 878; Ivey v. Pioneer S. & L. Co., 113 Ala. 349. In the application of this rule, it makes no difference what the nature of the employment is, provided it is lawful, or whether the conduct imputed is such as in itself the law will blame or not, provided it is inconsistent with the due fulfillment of what the party, in virtue of his employment or office, has undertaken. Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 303.

An action will lie, it seems, for defamatory words spoken concerning another in his office or profession, where the office or profession is in point of law wholly or to some extent honorary, as well as where it carries with it the legal right to temporal profit (Pollock, Torts [Webb's Ed.] 303; Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177; Aston v. Blagrave, 1 Strange, 617); but with this qualification, namely, that where there is no profit in fact, an oral charge of unfitness is not actionable per se unless, if true, it would be a ground for removal (Pollock, Torts [Webb's Ed.] 303; Alexander v. Jenkins [1892] 1 Q. B. 797).

Illustrations: It has been held actionable per se to say of a lawyer that he is a cheat (Rush v. Cavenaugh, 2 Pa. 187), or a shyster (Gribble v. Pioneer Press Co., 34 Minn. 342); that he is "the dirty sewer through which all the slums of this embezzlement have flowed" (Mains v. Whiting, 87 Mich. 172, Paige's Cas. 368), or to impute to him dishonesty, or disloyalty to his clients, or general incompetency in his profession (Peard v. Jones, Cro. Car. 382; Chipman v. Cook, 2 Tyler [Vt.] 456; Garr v. Selden, 6 Barb. [N. Y.] 416).

It has been held not to be actionable, without showing special damage, to impute to a lawyer ignorance or want of skill in a particular case only, and not in general. Foot v. Brown, 8 Johns. [N. Y.] 50. But this view is not sound. Secor v. Harris, 18 Barb. [N. Y.] 425, Chase's Cas. 119. And it is actionable per se to say of a physician or surgeon that he is a quack (White v. Carroll, 42 N. Y. 161, 1 Am. Rep. 503); that "he is no good, only a butcher; I would not have him for a dog" (Cruikshank v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 178); or that he has killed patients, or otherwise charge him with ignorance, misconduct, negligence, or any unfitness in the practice of his profession (Martyn v. Burlings, Cro. Eliz. 589; Tutty v. Alewin, 11 Mod. 221; Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376; Secor v. Harris, 18 Barb. [N. Y.] 425, Chase's Cas. 119; Carroll v. White, 33 Barb. [N. Y.] 615; White v. Carroll, 42 N. Y. 161, 1 Am. Rep. 503; Sumner v. Utley, 7 Conn. 257; Morasse v. Brochu, 151 Mass. 567, 21 Am. St. Rep. 474; Crane v. Darling, 71 Vt. 295). And see Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317. Some courts have held that it is not actionable per se to charge a physician with ignorance or malpractice in a particular case only, and not generally. Rodgers v. Kline, 56 Miss. 808, 31 Am. Rep. 389. And see Camp v. Martin, 23 Conn. 86. But the better opinion is to the contrary. Secor v. Harris, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 425, Chase's Cas. 119; Sumner v. Utley, 7 Conn. 257; Johnson v. Robertson, 8 Port. (Ala.) 486; Tutty v. Alewin, 11 Mod. 221. Thus it is actionable per se to say of a physician in regard to his treatment of children not over three years of age. "He killed my children: he gave them tea-spoonful doses of calomel; and it killed them; they died the same day" (Secor v. Harris, supra. And see Johnson v. Robertson, supra); to say of a minister, or priest in connection with his office or calling, that he is a drunkard, or of immoral habits, or to otherwise impute to him misconduct or unfitness in his calling (Gallwey v. Marshall, 9 Exch. 294; McMillan v. Birch, 1 Bin. [Pa.] 178, 2 Am. Dec. 426; Hayner v. Cowden, 27 Ohio St. 292, 22 Am. Rep. 303; Chaddock v. Briggs, 13 Mass. 248, 7 Am. Dec. 137; Hellstern v. Katzer, 103 Wis. 391; to say such words of a school teacher (Bray v. Callihan, 155 Mo. 43; Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292; Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228); to impute to cashiers, clerks, bookkeepers, and the like, incompetency, unfitness, or dishonesty in relation to their employment (Fowles v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 20; Wilson v. Cottman, 65 Md. 190); to charge a domestic servant as such with immoral conduct, or dishonesty, etc. (Pollock on Torts [Webb's Ed.] 302; Seaman v. Bigg, Cro. Car. 480); to say of a game keeper that he traps game, etc. (Foulger v. Newcomb, L. R. 2 Exch. 327).

that wherever he has previously exercised ministerial functions, he has had trouble with women, and that in one instance the trouble was such that his wife threatened to leave him (Ritchie v. Widdemer, 59 N. J. Law, 290.

It is actionable per se to say of a trader or mechanic who sells goods or does work on credit, that he keeps false books, or to otherwise impute to him dishonesty or fraud in his business. Burtch v. Nickerson, 17 Johns. [N. Y.] 217, 8 Am. Dec. 390; Fowles v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 20; Hoyle v. Young, 1 Wash. [Va.] 150, 1 Am. Dec. 446. And it is actionable per se to say of a merchant or tradesman who purchases on credit, that he is a bankrupt, and unable to pay his debts, or that he does not pay his debts, or to in anyway charge him with insolvency, or with dishonesty or other misconduct in connection with his business. Read v. Hudson, Raym. 610; Lewis v. Hawley, 2 Day [Conn.] 495, 2 Am. Dec. 121; Freisinger v. Moore, 65 N. J. Law, 286; Sewall v. Catlin, 3 Wend. [N. Y.] 391; Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292; Davis v. Ruff, Cheves [S. C.] 17, 34 Am. Dec. 584; McIntyre v. Weinert, 195 Pa. 52.

It is actionable per se to say of a farmer, that he is not able to pay his debts, that he owes more than he is worth, and that those whom he owes had better push him or they will lose. Phillips v. Hoefer, 1 Pa. 62, 44 Am. Dec. 111; Dobson v. Thornistone, 3 Mod. 112.

To say of a drover, whose business it is to buy cattle, drive them to market, and sell them, that he is bankrupt, is actionable per se. Lewis v. Hawley, 2 Day [Conn.] 495, 2 Am. Dec. 121.

And it is actionable per se to say of an innkeeper "Deal not with S., for he is broke, and there is neither entertainment for man or horse." Southam v. Allen, 3 Salk. 326.

But merely to say of a merchant that he has executed a chattel mortgage is not actionable per se. Newbold v. Bradstreet, 57 Md. 38, 40 Am. Rep. 426. And see Dun v. Weintraub, 111 Ga. 416. "As regards the reputation of traders the law has taken a broader view than elsewhere. To impute insolvency to a tradesman, in any form whatever, is actionable." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 303. And it is actionable to speak defamatory words concerning a person engaged in conducting a school or other educational institution, which tend to prejudice him in his business. It is actionable per se to impute to one engaged in keeping and teaching boys, intemperance and failure to keep boys from stealing. Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292. See, also, St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502; Price v. Conway, 134 Pa. 340, 19 Am. St. Rep. 704.

It is actionable per se to speak concerning a person holding a public office, and in relation to his office, false and defamatory words which convey a charge of unfitness, dishonesty, or incompetence therein. "It may be laid down as the settled rule, that slanderous words spoken of a person in an office of profit, and relating to him in such office, importing a charge of unfitness, either in respect of morals or capacity, for the duties of such office, or a want of integrity, or corruption therein, are actionable per se." Gove v. Blethen, 21 Minn. 80, 18 Am. Rep. 380; Heller v. Duff, 62 N. J. Law, 101; O'Brien v. Times Pub. Co., 21 R. I. 256. Thus it is actionable per se to call a justice of the peace "a damned fool of a justice" (Spiering v. Andrae, 45 Wis. 330, 30 Am. Rep. 744); or to say of a justice of the peace who has decided a case tried before him, "He perjured himself in deciding the suit against me, contrary to all law and evidence; it is the damnedest erroneous decision I ever saw any justice give; it was a damned outrage, and was done for spite (Gove v. Blethen, 21 Minn. 80, 18 Am. Rep. 380). The rule applies, of course, to executive and legislative, as well as judicial officers. It is actionable per se to say of a sheriff that he has used his official position to protect a disorderly house. Heller v. Duff, 62 N. J. Law, 101.

It is actionable per se to falsely charge a policeman with being drunk at roll-call or on duty. O'Brien v. Times Pub. Co., 21 R. I. 256.

Limitations of this rule: To render words spoken of a man actionable per se on this ground, "they must be spoken of him in relation to or in the way of a position which he holds, or a business he carries on, at the time of speaking." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 301, 302. See Forward v. Adams, 7 Wend. [N. Y.] 204, Chase's Cas. 116. Unless they relate to his business, or office, they are not actionable without proof of special damage, unless on the ground that they impute a crime. Doyley v. Roberts, 3 Bing. N. C. 835; Miller v. David, L. R. 9 C. P. 118; Brayne v. Cooper, 5 Mees. & W. 249; Ayre v. Craven, 2 Adol. & E. 2; Van Tassel v. Capron, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 250, 43 Am. Dec. 667; Forward v. Adams, 7 Wend. [N. Y.] 204, Chase's Cas. 116; Ireland v. McGarvish, 1 Sandf. [N. Y.] 155, Chase's Cas. 118; Divens v. Meredith, 147 Ind. 693; Buck v. Hersey, 31 Me. 558; Redway v. Gray, 31 Vt. 292. Thus while it is actionable per se to charge a lawyer with cheating his clients, or with being a shyster, or with general incompetency in his profession, it is not actionable per se to charge him with cheating other persons than clients on occasions unconnected with his business, where the charge does not amount to an imputation of a crime, as to say of an attorney that he has defrauded his creditors, and has been whipped off a race-course (Doyley v. Roberts, 3 Bing. N. C. 835). And it is not actionable to impute incontinence or other misconduct to a physician, unless in connection with his profession, where the charge does not impute a crime. Ayre v. Craven, 2 Adol. & E. 2; Divens v. Meredith, 147 Ind. 693 (where it was held not to be actionable per se to call a physician a "white capper"). To say of the keeper of a house of public entertainment, "He is a dangerous man"; "He is a desperate man"; "I am afraid to go in his house alone"; "I am afraid of my life,"—was held not to be actionable per se as affecting his business, on the ground that the words did not relate to his business, or charge any delinquency therein. Ireland v. McGarvish, 1 Sandf. [N. Y.] 155, Chase's Cas. 118.

Words spoken of a public officer, but not having any relation to his office, and not amounting to a charge of crime, are not actionable per se, but are on the some footing as words spoken of any private citizen. Van Tassel v. Capron, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 250, 43 Am. Dec. 667.

In Sillars v. Collier, 151 Mass. 50, it was held not to be actionable per se to say of a member of the legislature, after referring

(§ 2) E. Disparagement of property or title.—A bona fide claim of title to plaintiff's property is not actionable.[75]

§ 3. Malice.—Malice, express or implied, is an essential ingredient of libel;[76] but where words imputing a crime and actionable in themselves are published or spoken, the law presumes malice and implies that the plaintiff has received some damage. In such cases express malice need not be shown.[77] The defendant, however, may show that the circumstances attending the utterance were such that malice is not to be implied therefrom and that they were not spoken with malice.[78] Malice arises as well from reckless publications as from those inspired by personal ill will,[79] and if there is a reasonable and natural inference that plaintiff was referred to by the actionable words, then the defendant is liable.[80] Express malice, entitling plaintiff to exemplary damages, must be proved; it is never implied; but it may be proved directly or indirectly,[81] and is rebutted by facts to a change of position, "Sometimes the change of heart comes from the pocket." Thus it has been held not to be actionable, in the absence of an allegation of special damages, to call a magistrate a "damned blackleg," or "damned rogue," etc., and charge him with being in a "combined company to cheat strangers," where no official misconduct or neglect of duty is imputed to him. Van Tassel v. Capron, 1 Denio [N. Y.] 250, 43 Am. Dec. 667; Oakley v. Farrington, 1 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 129, 1 Am. Dec. 107.

Speaking of a magistrate as "Squire," in using opprobrious words concerning him, is mere descriptio personae, and does not import that the words were spoken of him in respect of his office. Van Tassel v. Capron, supra.

It follows from what has been said above that words spoken of a person in relation to a profession or business which he has ceased to practice or carry on at the time the words are spoken, or of a person in relation to an office which he has ceased to hold, since they are not spoken of him in relation to his office, profession or business, are not within the rule allowing an action without proof of special damage. Bellamy v. Burch, 16 Mees. & W. 590; Forward v. Adams, 7 Wend. [N. Y.] 204, Chase's Cas. 116. "The ground of action in these cases is that the party is disgraced or injured in his profession or trade, or exposed to the hazard of losing his office, in consequence of the slanderous words, not that his general reputation and standing in the community are affected by them. It will be recollected that the words spoken in this class of cases are not actionable of themselves, but that they become so in consequence of the special character of the party of whom they are spoken. The fact of his sustaining that special character, therefore, lies at the very foundation of the action." Forward v. Adams, supra.

It is also necessary that the words shall "either amount to a direct charge of incompetence or unfitness, or impute something so inconsistent with competence or fitness that, if believed, it would tend to the loss of the party's employment or business." Pollock, Torts (Webb's Ed.) 302; Lumby v. Allday, 1 Tyrw. 217, Bigelow's Cas. 131, Bigelow's Lead. Cas. 87.

The rule rendering actionable per se defamatory words concerning a person in his trade or business does not apply to words relating merely to the quality of articles made, produced, or furnished by a person. These he impliedly submits to criticism. Dooling v. Budget Pub. Co., 144 Mass. 258, 59 Am. Rep. 83.

Words tending to disinherit: There is an old case in which it was held actionable per se to call a prospective heir a bastard, because the charge if true would disinherit him (Humphreys v. Strutfield, 1 Rolle Abr. 39, pl. 5, Cro. Cas. 469); but it is doubtful if this was the law even in England. See Nelson v. Staff, Cro. Jac. 422, 1 Vin. 396, pl. 18, 2 Vent. 26, 28. It is not so in this country. Hoar v. Ward, 47 Vt. 657.

75. Patent right. Squires v. Wason Mfg. Co., 182 Mass. 137. It is error to mulct a defendant in damages for having placed of record a title which he had acquired to certain property, even though it may thereafter in a proper proceeding be determined that plaintiff's title is paramount. Calling plaintiff a blackmailer. Palmer v. Mahin, 120 Fed. 737. Calling plaintiff a thief. Hamlin v. Fauti [Wis.] 95 N. W. 955; Schofield v. Baldwin, 102 Ill. App. 560. The Pa. act of Apr. 11, 1901 (P. L. 74) did not change the common law rule that if an article is libelous per se and is false as to plaintiff, malice arises. Clark v. North American Co., 203 Pa. 346.

78. Schofield v. Baldwin, 102 Ill. App. 560. Source of information may be shown. Conner v. Standard Pub. Co., 183 Mass. 474.

tending to show the truth of the statement published and defendant's belief therein.[82]

§ 4. Privilege and privileged communications.—Privileged communications are classified as either absolute or qualified. In the former is embraced any matter which is pertinent to the issues in a judicial proceeding,[83] even though it be concerning a stranger to the record or proceeding in question,[84] and whether the alleged defamatory matter is pertinent is a question of law for the court to determine.[85]

In the latter class are embraced all official communications made by an officer in the discharge of a public duty.[86] Likewise any communication, made bona fide and in an honest belief, about a matter in which (1) the speaker or writer has an interest or duty; (2) the hearer or addressee has a corresponding interest or duty; and (3) which is made in the protection of that interest or in the performance of that duty.[87] It is not necessary that the duty which affords the privilege be a legal duty or one of perfect obligation. It is sufficient if the words were spoken in the performance of a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation if defendant honestly believed that he owed it to plaintiff.[88] rett [Me.] 55 Atl. 516. Where defendant had plaintiff black-listed by the Plumbers' Association as for "unjustly failing to meet his obligations" when the difference between them was whether plaintiff legally owed a certain account, it was held that express malice might be inferred. Trapp v. Du Bois, 76 App. Div. [N. Y.] 314. An instruction that if the jury believed that the article in question was libelous and false and untrue the law inferred malice to sustain the action was held to be a correct statement of legal malice. Fish v. St. Louis County Print. & Pub. Co. [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 641.

82. Donahoe v. Star Pub. Co. [Del.] 55 Atl. 337; Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444; Cranfill v. Hayden [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 573.

83. Contents of a pleading. Crockett v. McLanahan, 109 Tenn. 517. References to plaintiff in an application to perpetuate testimony held to be immaterial and irrelevant to the issues and therefore without the pale of privilege. King v. McKissick, 126 Fed. 215. Answers by a witness. When asked if plaintiff was a "reliable" contractor witness replied that he did not pay his bills and would put in a grade of material inferior to that called for in specifications. Held responsive to question of counsel. Cooley v. Galyon, 109 Tenn. 1, 60 L. R. A. 139. On the appearance of plaintiff after arrest for false pretenses, defendant, an attorney for the complaining witness, told him he would have to settle or "go up the road." The conversation was held outside the justice office near the front thereof. Held privileged. Craig v. Burris [Del.] 55 Atl. 353. Letters written to an attorney by one seeking to set himself right in a business transaction and to avoid anticipated litigation. Coffee v. Smith, 109 La. 440.

84. Cooley v. Galyon, 109 Tenn. 1, 60 L. R. A. 139; Crockett v. McLanahan, 109 Tenn. 517.

85. Crockett v. McLanahan, 109 Tenn. 517.

86. The report of a committee of aldermen, appointed to investigate a dramshop, on the complaint of citizens, is in the discharge of official duty, and therefore privileged. Weber v. Lane, 99 Mo. App. 69. A finding by a board of health is not privileged where it goes beyond their official duty. Charging negligence on the part of other physicians. Mauk v. Brundage, 68 Ohio St. 89.

87. Harrison v. Garrett, 132 N. C. 172. Cases of privileged communications to or by members of a family in view of the proposed marriage of a member thereof. McBride v. Ledoux [La.] 35 So. 615; Leonard v. Whetstone [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 197. An answer by a husband to a question addressed to his wife, if it do not go beyond the question or occasion. Middleby v. Effler [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 261. The publication by a railroad company of an order that an employe had been dismissed from its service "for intimating that an officer of the company had cast reflections upon the ancestry of another officer." Brown v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 100 Va. 619, 60 L. R. A. 472. So also an order by a railroad company to its conductors that a discharged employe failed to surrender certain tickets. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Sheftall, 118 Ga. 865. Where defendant in answer to a letter from a third person concerning an article patented by plaintiff, answered that it owned the right to manufacture and sell the article and there was reasonable ground for its officers to believe they did so own said rights the statement was privileged so that no action would lie for preventing a sale. Squires v. Wason Mfg. Co., 182 Mass. 137. Whether a publication disparaging a tradesman's goods was made by a rival with the sole purpose of protecting himself is a question of intention, and this question is for the jury. Holmes v. Clisby, 118 Ga. 820. A letter written by defendant railroad company to a newspaper and by it published, stating that plaintiff represented himself as an advertising agent of the company, whereas he had no connection whatever with the company, is not privileged. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McArthur [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 76. The doctrine of privilege does not afford shelter to one who makes slanderous statements to others as well as public officers, it appearing the statements were made to the officers at a casual meeting. Bigner v. Hodges [Miss.] 33 So. 980.

Newspaper reports of proceedings in court are conditionally privileged, as are fair criticisms thereof, if proceeding from good motives and founded on fair statements of fact.[89] Another instance of qualified privilege is the right to answer libel by libel. This is analogous to the right of self defense. The resistance may be carried to a successful termination, but the means used must be reasonable and without malice.[90] While the conduct of public officials and candidates for public office is open to criticism, no privilege attaches to the unjust imputation of criminal offenses or of bad motives for public conduct on their part.[91]

Whether or not a communication falls within the class denominated "qualifiedly or conditionally privileged" depends on whether it was made without express malice and in good faith.[92]

Where defamatory matter is libelous per se, privilege is a defense to be pleaded and proved, and upon the defense rests the burden of showing that the publication was privileged.[93]

§ 5. Publication.—To repeat or publish a slanderous statement is to indorse it as genuine;[94] but the mere sending of a letter through the mail is not a publication,[95] though publication may be made by dictating it to a stenographer,[96] and

88. Hudnell v. Eureka Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 169.

89. Conner v. Standard Pub. Co., 183 Mass. 474. But this does not permit the publisher to prejudge a case, or misstate it, or hold up to scorn or ridicule a party pursuing his legal remedies in court. Brown v. Providence Telegram Pub. Co. [R. I.] 54 Atl. 1061; Moore v. Dispatch Print. Co., 87 Minn. 450. Nor does it include a publication which is not confined to the contents of a divorce petition naming plaintiff as co-respondent, but the greater part of which consists of sensational gossip (Stuart v. Press Pub. Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 467, and where a publication purports to be a report of court proceedings and is as to most of its facts true, but contains comments, inferences and insinuations directly tending to excite ridicule and depreciation of plaintiff's character and its whole tone shows that it was intended primarily to injure him it is libelous (Brown v. Providence Telegram Pub. Co. [R. I.] 54 Atl. 1061). A statement that a prosecution was nolle prossed is not unfair though the fact was that the grand jury found no bill. Conner v. Standard Pub. Co., 183 Mass. 474. The privilege attaching to a proper criticism of a public officer by a newspaper may be lost by the manner of the publication; the evidence of malice may be intrinsic, from the style and tone of the article. Com. v. Scouton, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 503. Whether the privilege afforded by the N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1907, 1908, to newspaper reports of judicial proceedings extends as well to pleadings or papers filed in a proceeding as to the actual proceedings in open court discussed. Stuart v. Press Pub. Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 467.

90. Fish v. St. Louis County Print. & Pub. Co. [Mo. App.] 74 S. W. 641; Shepherd v. Baer, 96 Md. 152. But mere irritating publications by plaintiff are no justification, and it is no defense to the publisher of a newspaper to show that the article complained of was prepared by another person in answer to an attack on him by plaintiff. Hess v. Gansz, 90 Mo. App. 439. Where there is a mutual exchange of opprobrious epithets, or vituperation and abuse on both sides, an action in damages for slander will not lie. Bloom v. Crescioni, 109 La. 667.

91. Bee Pub. Co. v. Shields [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1029. Publications of falsehoods concerning officers, and candidates for office are never privileged. Donahoe v. Star Pub. Co. [Del.] 55 Atl. 837; Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 339, 70 Pac. 216. A distinction is taken between publications relating to public and private persons as to whether they are libelous. A citizen has the right to comment fairly and with an honest purpose on the conduct of public officers. Herringer v. Ingberg [Minn.] 97 N. W. 460.

92. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McArthur [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 76; Brown v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 100 Va. 619, 60 L. R. A. 472; Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444. A libelous statement made on an occasion not absolutely privileged is presumed by law to be false and to have been made maliciously. In such case the burden is on the publisher to show the truth of the statement and upon his failure to do so the presumption becomes conclusive. Cranfill v. Hayden [Tex Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 573. Where however the occasion is such as to impose upon the publisher an apparent duty to speak, the presumption of malice is removed, and it will be assumed the publication was prompted by a sense of duty and not malice. In such case the burden is on the plaintiff to show malice. Id.; Brown v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 100 Va. 619, 60 L. R. A. 472; Harrison v. Garrett, 132 N. C. 172. A communication warning against the intent of plaintiff to steal defendant's property can only be justified by circumstances which would induce a reasonable man to believe his property in danger. Browning v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 19.

93. Newspaper articles. Stuart v. Press Pub. Co., 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 467. So also where a railroad company, having charged that one who represented himself an advertising agent of the company was a swindler, claimed the publication was privileged. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McArthur [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 76.

94. Bee Pub. Co. v. Shields [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1029.

where the sender so addresses a libelous letter that in ordinary course it will reach a third person and as a natural result of the manner in which it is sent or addressed the letter does reach and its contents become known to such third person, there is sufficient publication.[97] Where one in the course of an interview sought by newspaper reporters makes defamatory statements of another, knowing they will be published, it is for the jury to say whether or not he was the instigator of, and responsible for, their publication.[98]

The publication of a libel will not be restrained by the writ of injunction.[99]

§ 6. Justification.—The substantial truth of the charge is a complete defense,[1, 2] but that the information in the libel was obtained from another whose name was stated in the article is no justification.[3]

Justification must be specially pleaded by the defendant, and upon this issue the burden is on him to show the truth of the libelous statement.[4]

§ 7. Damages, and the aggravation and mitigation thereof. A. Actual or compensatory damages.—Upon proof of publication of words libelous per se and their application to plaintiff, he is entitled to such compensatory damages as are attributable to the publication[5] without proof of special damage,[6] and in such case a plea of not guilty entitles plaintiff to a verdict for nominal damages and such compensatory damages as the evidence shows him entitled to.[7]

(§ 7) B. Punitive or exemplary damages can be awarded only where there is clear proof of express malice;[8] but where the publication was inspired by ill will or by a willful intent to injure, or was made in reckless disregard of the rights of the person defamed, the right to their recovery is unquestioned,[9] and a news-

9. To publish a statement that the person defamed denies the previously published matter is not a retraction. Palmer v. Mahin [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 737. Punitive damages may be founded on the personal ill will of a reporter for defendant newspaper. Clifford v. Press Pub. Co., 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 79. Punitive damages may be given for a libel recklessly or carelessly published as well as one induced by personal ill will. Crane v. Bennett, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 102; Brandt v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 183. Where it appeared in evidence that the libel after being written was submitted to at least two of defendant's officers before publication it must be considered their deliberate utterance and the expression of their well considered temper and attitude towards him, making the case one which forbids the paper publisher may be liable for exemplary damages, though he had no knowledge of the publication and it was made in his absence and contrary to a general order.[10]

(§ 7) C. Aggravation of damages.—Repetitions of the slander or libel even after suit begun are admissible,[11] but language which is not actionable per se and which does not contain the same imputation as that counted on is not admissible for the purpose of enhancing damages by showing malice.[12] The social standing of the parties[13] and the circulation of defendant's newspaper are material,[14] but the standing of a defendant corporation is not.[15] Though in the absence of a plea of justification plaintiff may recover without proof of the falsity of the charge, he may prove its falsity, as in no other way can the difference between a mere technical misstatement and a cruel and irremedial falsehood be shown, and the proper measure of damages applied.[16] Where the libel complained of charged plaintiff with being a blackmailer, his business, reputation and standing before the publication, and the effect of the publication on his business, reputation and feelings, and his acts when he learned of the publication may be shown.[17]

(§ 7) D. Mitigation of damages.—As affecting the amount of exemplary damages, the truth of the charge or defendant's belief in it may be offered in mitigation.[18] The publisher cannot testify that he believed he was justified and made the publication for the public good,[19] and a general rumor of the truth may also be shown.[20] But where compensatory damages only are claimed, evidence of lack of ill will or malice are inadmissible for that purpose.[21] Irritating conduct by plaintiff[22] and his general bad character may be shown,[23] but as in other cases it cannot be shown by specific acts.[24] assessment of merely nominal damages. Brown v. Providence Telegram Pub. Co. [R. I.] 54 Atl. 1061. To publish of plaintiff that he is party to a conspiracy to defraud insurance companies by obtaining insurance on the lives of aged people and if desirable hasten their deaths, and that many have been poisoned and the lives of others attempted entitles him to exemplary damages. Duke v. Morning Journal Ass'n [C. C. A.] 120 Fed. 860. So, also, to say of him that he is a thief. Schofield v. Baldwin, 102 Ill. App. 560. The refusal or neglect of defendant to publish a retraction after having had his attention called to it is in itself a basis for punitive damages; the tone and wording of the libel as indicative of a desire to make a sensation and injure others regardless of the effect on plaintiff are also material. Where the charge is that plaintiff is an open and persistent law breaker, indictments against him that were defective are not admissible to prove the truth of the charge or in mitigation of damages. Davis v. Hamilton, 88 Minn. 64. Where defendant files no plea of justification under the statute, but pleads not guilty, the utmost effect of evidence that he had probable cause to believe that the charge was true and that it was published for the public good, is to negative express malice, and thus defeat the claim for exemplary damages [11 Del. (§ 7) E. Inadequate and excessive damages.[25]—An appellate court will not interfere with the award of a jury unless the amount awarded is so grossly inadequate or excessive as to shock the moral sense and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury was actuated by passion or prejudice.[26]

§ 8. Persons liable.—A master is liable for the libelous letter of his servant written in course of his employment,[27] and by a parity of reasoning a corporation is responsible for the publication of a libel by or through its agents;[28] but a partnership is not liable to respond in damages to a person aggrieved by reason of slanderous reports concerning him, circulated by one only of its members without the knowledge and sanction of his co-partners.[29] An insane person is not liable for slander, but to defeat a recovery upon the ground of insanity it should satisfactorily appear that at the time of speaking the defamatory words the person uttering them was either totally deranged or laboring under an insane delusion on the subject to which the words related.[30] That recovery had also been had against defendant's wife for speaking the same words independently of him is not bar to the action.[31]

§ 9. Conditions precedent.—A precedent demand for retraction is required in some states.[32]

§ 10. Pleading. A. Declaration, complaint, or petition.—A declaration or complaint for libel must set out the particular words used,[33] and allege that they were published of and concerning the plaintiff,[34] and where the matter complained of is not libelous per se must allege special damage, specifically setting forth the facts;[35] but an averment that defendant used language of plaintiff imputing a want of chastity is sufficient without alleging that she is a married woman.[36]

Each publication of matter libelous per se is a separate cause of action; but all can be joined in one petition or complaint,[37] and in Kentucky, two separate slanders made to different parties and at different times may be sued for in the same petition against the same party.[38] Where the publication contains several libelous statements, plaintiff is not required in his declaration to select and rely on any one, but may rely upon all or any of them.[39] Though a libel may affect plaintiff as an individual, as a professional man, and as an officer, it only constitutes one libel consisting of different items, and such items cannot be made distinct causes of action by declaring on each in separate counts.[40]

In Kentucky, a petition in an action for libel must be verified.[41] Statutory demand for retraction must be alleged.[42]

Colloquium and innuendo.—Where the publication fails to identify plaintiff, the declaration must by words of inducement, colloquium and innuendo connect him with it;[43] but where the publication is set out in the declaration and is clearly libelous and actionable per se, no innuendoes assigning any specific libelous meaning to the words are necessary,[44] and in such case innuendoes not justified by the language of the article will be treated as surplusage;[45] where, however, a particular meaning is ascribed to language, which standing alone might be regarded as libelous per se, the plaintiff to succeed must support the meaning he himself has ascribed to the publication,[46] and, failing in this, he cannot fall back on the general meaning of the words.[47] Words not actionable in themselves may be made so by a colloquium and proper averments,[48] and it is competent to explain in this way an ambiguous publication, to point out the intention of the author, and to show wherein the effect of the language was to injure him;[49] but where there is no colloquium to support it, the innuendo can never be taken to expand or enlarge the meaning of the words used and give them a particular meaning different from that which they would ordinarily convey in their more innocent signification.[50]

(§ 10) B. Plea or answer.—Under the code in New York a general denial is not a defense, and should not be pleaded as such.[51]

A special plea must not include matters that are admissible under the general issue.[52]

A justification must be as broad as, and co-extensive with, the libelous matter as explained by the innuendoes,[53] and a plea alleging the truth of the publication must set up the facts upon which the allegation is based; to state that it is "substantially true" is insufficient. It must also admit the publication; to refer to it as the "supposed libel" does not do this;[54] but a plea of justification is good without alleging that the defamatory words were spoken with good motives or for justifiable ends.[55]

An answer setting up new matter both in justification and mitigation should not be overruled where it is conceded that the matter alleged is admissible in mitigation.[56]

(§ 10) C. Demurrer.—Where the language declared on is ambiguous,[57] or if the words are fairly susceptible of a defamatory meaning, it is error to sustain a demurrer to a declaration good in form on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action.[58] Whether the publication is privileged cannot be reached by demurrer.[59] A demurrer admits that the article declared on was published, but does not admit that it was libelous, where there is no allegation that its statements were false,[60] nor does it admit that matter set out in a pleading in another case was not pertinent to the issues in that case, such question being one of law and not of fact.[61]

(§ 10) D. Bill of particulars.—Defendant is entitled to a bill of particulars, stating who the auditors of the words were, where he denies speaking them,[62] but he is not entitled to a bill specifying what parts of the publication are libelous, in what respect it is false, and what portions are admitted to be true where he expressly declares the bill is not necessary to enable him to answer.[63]

(§ 10) E. Issues, proof and variance.—That the matter complained of was of common report and published without malice,[64] and that the publication was child was not her husband's held insufficiently connected with her by colloquium. Stutsman v. Stutsman, 30 Ind. App. 645. Where plaintiff is charged with "cutting" prices there being no allegation that he was under contract not to do so. Willis v. Eclipse Mfg. Co., 81 App. Div. [N. Y.] 591. Alleged defamatory words cannot be made broader, nor their natural meaning extended, enlarged or restricted, by innuendo, alone. Herringer v. Ingberg [Minn.] 97 N. W. 460; Naulty v. Bulletin Co., 206 Pa. 128. A declaration reciting that defendant uttered of plaintiff, a public officer, that "He is short $6,000 in his accounts, and if he had his just dues he would be behind the bars" counts upon a single indivisible slander; and an answer justifying only as to the latter portion of the language is not broad enough and demurrable. privileged, may be shown under the general issue,[65] but in the fact that the matter complained of was published properly for public information and without malice must be specially pleaded.[66] There is no variance where the fund from which money was taken is described in the declaration as a "special postal fund" and in the proof as a "deposit made there as a cash bond."[67]

§ 11. Evidence.—The truth of the published statement,[68] unless excluded by the plea or answer,[69] and the meaning of the language where ambiguous or not generally known,[70] are always in issue. The truth, however, not being a defense in Massachusetts if actual malice is shown,[71] the author of a libel may show the source of his information to rebut malice; but accounts of the same transaction in other papers are immaterial.[72]

Where all the counts charge slanderous words, actionable per se, it is sufficient for plaintiff to prove substantially any set of words in some one or more of the statements of slanderous words contained in the declaration or the different counts.[73]

In an action for imputing a want of chastity to a female, it is not necessary to show that she is unmarried further than to show she is not married to the person with whom she is alleged to have committed the unchaste acts.[74]

Where the cross-examination of plaintiff is such as to amount to an attack on his character, he should be permitted to show that it is good.[75]

Where defendant absolutely denied using the words alleged and he was corroborated by another witness who was present, a verdict for defendant was not contrary to evidence.[76]

66. Donahoe v. Star Pub. Co., 3 Pen. [Del.] 545.

67. Leghorn v. Review Pub. Co., 31 Wash. 627, 72 Pac. 485.

68. Declarations and statements of plaintiff tending to prove the truth of the charge are admissible (Davis v. Hamilton, 88 Minn. 64), but defendant cannot testify to the conclusion that the article was true (Id.); and evidence that plaintiff did not bring suit for prior libels of the same nature is not admissible (Id.). Where it was published of plaintiff that he had been arrested and held to bail evidence that his brother was wanted by the police was immaterial. Clark v. North American Co., 203 Pa. 346. So also where it was published of plaintiff that she was in jail for contempt, evidence that in another proceeding, based on the same alleged wrongdoing, plaintiff obtained a reversal, is improper, and its admission reversible error. Archibald v. Press Pub. Co., 82 App. Div. [N. Y.] 513.

69. An answer having denied that the allegel libelous article was published of and concerning the plaintiff and averred its truth it is not error to exclude evidence that the libelous charges were true of the plaintiff. Williams v. Fuller [Neb.] 97 N. W. 246. It is reversible error to admit in evidence an affidavit made more than a year after the publication of the libel by a third person which shows that plaintiff was innocent of the crime charged, the only question in the case being one of damages. Cudlip v. N. Y. Evening Journal Pub. Co., 174 N. Y. 158. Where plaintiff was charged with putting his wife in an insane asylum, and the only issue was the wife's sanity, it was error to admit a letter from her brother to plaintiff setting out reasons why he, the brother, had caused her incarceration in a like asylum. Kuster v. Press Pub. Co., 80 App. Div. [N. Y.] 615.

70. A local meaning of the words cannot be shown; it must be a general meaning. Stating of plaintiff that he must settle or "go up the road." Craig v. Burris [Del.] 55 Atl. 353. Where the publication is actionable per se evidence that defendant did not intend to charge plaintiff with a crime or impute to him that which the language of the article fairly implies is inadmissible. Davis v. Hamilton, 88 Minn. 64. Where only a part of the auditors understood the circumstances referred to by a charge of thieving and that it amounted technically only to a trespass, evidence of such circumstances is inadmissible. 75. Clark v. North American Co., 203 Pa. 346.

76. Kelso v. Kuehl, 116 Wis. 495.

On proper affidavit of materiality, a subpoena duces tecum will be issued to bring in defendant's shipping, mailing and subscription lists.[77] Secondary evidence of an alleged libelous letter cannot be given without showing loss or destruction of the original.[78]

§ 12. Trial and review.—Whether the publication is libelous per se,[79] whether it was privileged,[80] and whether an innuendo is fairly warranted by the language declared on, are questions of law;[81] but whether the language fairly construed amounts to a charge of crime,[82] and whether defendant was without any malicious intent, and therefore not justly amenable to substantial damages, are questions for the jury.[83] If the publication is libelous per se, plaintiff is entitled to go to the jury, though he has by innuendo attached a meaning thereto which the language will not sustain.[84] In Louisiana, the duty of fixing damages for a newspaper libel is imposed upon the court, not upon the jury.[85]

Instructions as in other cases should be confined to the issues in the case,[86] and where the court undertakes to state a case upon which the plaintiff may or should recover, it must state a complete case, and embrace all the elements necessary to support a verdict.[87] Failure to caution the jury against allowing punitive damages is not error where they are told to allow such damages as will compensate, and the verdict is not too large.[88] Defendant cannot complain that the court limited certain testimony to the mitigation of damages when counsel expressly stated on offering it that it was not to show justification.[89]

Where there are several defendants, all of whom are guilty, though some only were actuated by express malice, it is proper to render a verdict as to all for compensatory damages and against such as were guilty of express malice for exemplary damages.[90]

The action of a trial court in granting a new trial where the verdict was so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice on the part of the jury will not be set aside or reversed unless it is manifest that there was an abuse of the judicial discretion.[91]

After verdict, the court will usually construe the language in that sense which will support the verdict.[92]

86. Circulation of slanderous reports—instructions held not prejudicial to plaintiff. Sonka v. Sonka [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 325. Where the record is silent as to an apology at the hands of a newspaper being asked for or declined, and there is not a syllable to be found in the evidence respecting an apology, it is error for the court to instruct the jury that they may take into consideration the absence of one. Friedman v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 340. For instructions where action was for words actionable or not depending on whether the hearers understood the circumstances, see Hinchman v. or lead to any act which when done is indictable, and statutes in some states extend this definition.[93]

(§ 13) B. Indictment and prosecution.—Where the matter published is libelous per se, it is not necessary to aver that it tended to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue or reputation of the complaining witness;[94] but where the language is not defamatory in itself, the omission of an allegation that it tends to expose one to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, or deprives one of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse, is fatal.[95] Where a lengthy newspaper article contains matter that is libelous with much that is not, the libelous matter should be singled out and the prosecution based thereon. An information failing in this is defective.[96]

The substance of the language used must be set out and proved as laid.[97]

Where the matter charged in the indictment refers to the person named therein as libeled, and the publication is admitted, a prima facie case is made out.[98] Evidence of the reputation of the prosecutrix must be confined to the time of the alleged slander.[99] A prosecutrix will not be compelled to submit to a physical examination in support of defendant's claim that alleged slander was true.[1]

LICENSES.

§ 1. Power to require and validity of statutes.—Occupation taxes are in the nature of licenses and are not a taxation of personalty for revenue purposes,[2] and may be required in addition to the revenue tax;[3] but if a license law lack regulative features, it must be sustained if at all as a revenue measure.[4]

The right to require license taxes, being an exercise of the police power,[5]

93. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. R. 1902, 72 S. W. 754. A statement that plaintiff would steal certain property if he got a chance is libelous per se. Browning v. Com. [Ky.] 76 S. W. 19.

94. People v. Seeley, 139 Cal. 118, 72 Pac. 834.

95. State v. Clark [Kan.] 74 Pac. 232. In North Carolina under a code provision making it a misdemeanor to destroy the reputation of an innocent woman an allegation that certain words amounted to a charge of incontinency, was insufficient [Code, § 1113]. State v. Mitchell, 132 N. C. 1033.

99. Bowers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 299; Gipson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 216.

1. Charge of unchastity. Bowers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 75 S. W. 299.

2. Kansas City v. Richardson, 90 Mo. App. 450. A license tax is distinguished from an occupation tax to sustain a vehicle license law, the state imposing no occupation tax on vehicles and the constitution limiting occupation taxes of cities to half the amount imposed by the state. Brown v. Galveston [Tex.] 75 S. W. 488. The Montana food inspection law imposing a license fee on vendors of milk to be collected by the inspector does not make the fee a tax by reason of requiring its payment into the treasury. State v. McKinney [Mont.] 74 Pac. 1095.

3. Troy v. Harris [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 662; Hogan v. Indianapolis, 159 Ind. 523; Levy v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 172. Under an act allowing cities to "license, regulate, tax or suppress brokers" a city may impose an occupation tax. Hot Springs v. Rector [Ark.] 76 S. W. 1056. Cities in Virginia may levy license taxes on machine shops. Norfolk v. Griffith-Powell Co. [Va.] 45 S. E. 889.

4. Ex parte Braun [Cal.] 74 Pac. 780. Where the taxation of an occupation is merely for regulation, it is an exercise of police power; if its object is revenue it must be referred to the taxing power. Lamar v. Adams, 90 Mo. App. 35. California cities may license occupations as a revenue measure, that being a "municipal affair" within an exception in the constitution. Ex parte Braun [Cal.] 74 Pac. 780. An ordinance imposing a license on street cars being a revenue measure is invalid where applied to a company operating under a charter requiring a payment of a certain percentage of its receipts to the city. New York v. Twenty-Third St. R. Co., 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 373. A city may not require a license tax as a condition to practice of the legal profession by one duly licensed by the state and the tax can be sustained if at all only as a revenue measure. Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674.

5. The power to tax occupations is not forbidden either by state or federal consti-the ordinary principles governing taxation for revenue, such as equality and uniformity, do not apply,[6] and such regulations do not infringe other constitutional provisions unless the license charge is excessive,[7] or the classification is unreasonable or discriminating.[8] A constitutional provision against restraint of trade is not infringed.[9] Occupation taxes cannot be so imposed as to regulate interstate commerce,[10] and the fact that they are police regulations does not of course exempt them from constitutional provisions as to plurality of subjects[11] or as to tutions. In re Lipschitz [N. D.] 95 N. W. 157. Laws regulating license of barbers are a valid exercise of the state's police power. State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 71 Pac. 737. Requirement of license to stand or drive hack in public streets sustained. People v. Sewer, W. & S. Commission, 90 App. Div. [N. Y.] 555.

6. Kansas City v. Richardson, 90 Mo. App. 450; Strater Bros. Tobacco Co. v. Com. [Ky.] 78 S. W. 871; State v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 La. 180; In re Lipschitz [N. D.] 95 N. W. 157. It is no objection to a vehicle license ordinance that it omits to tax street cars, automobiles and vehicles of non-residents. Kersey v. Terre Haute [Ind.] 68 N. E. 1027. A law imposing a tax on cigarette dealers is not unconstitutional for lack of uniformity for exempting jobbers doing an interstate business with customers without the state. Cook v. Marshall County [Iowa] 93 N. W. 372.

7. One attacking a license law as being so unreasonable as to amount to a tax on the business within the inhibition of a constitutional provision must show wherein it exceeds the actual costs or reasonable charges for enforcing the regulations. Seattle v. Barto, 31 Wash. 141, 71 Pac. 735. An ordinance imposing a license tax of $50.00 a day on transient and bankrupt sale merchants is unreasonable. Springfield v. Jacobs [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 1097. An ordinance imposing a license fee on telegraph poles of companies engaged in interstate business is not a valid exercise of police power where no inspection had been made and the amount was several times in excess of what could reasonably be exacted for any such purpose. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Taylor, 192 U. S. 64.

8. Peddlers' act sustained. In re Watson [S. D.] 97 N. W. 463. A law taxing attorneys lending money without taxing other money lenders is violative of the uniformity clause. Beckett v. Savannah, 118 Ga. 58. An ordinance imposing a license tax on dealers in oil and exempting from its provisions dealers handling oils on which the license has been paid is invalid for lack of uniformity, the classification being unreasonable. Standard Oil Co. v. Spartanburg, 66 S. C. 37. License laws may not make arbitrary discriminations based on the value of the stock and the taxes paid thereon. State v. Mitchell, 97 Me. 66. There is no discriminating classification in placing persons loaning money on chattel security in a class different from banks. Cowart v. City Council of Greenville [S. C.] 45 S. E. 122. An allegation that a certain amount fixed as a license tax is unequal, unjust and disproportionate to that on other occupations without recital of facts to support it is a mere conclusion of law. Covington v. Herzog [Ky.] 76 S. W. 538. Discrimination against magnetic healers in act licensing medical practitioners sustained. Parks v. State, 159 Ind. 211. The Indiana act taxing transient merchants did not take property without due compensation and is not a special law because of the incidental provision as to payment of fees into school fund. It is not void for exempting sheriffs, assignees and public officers as authorizing inequality of taxation and does not violate the provisions of the state constitution guaranteeing life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. Levy v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 172. A peddlers' license law applicable solely to non residents violates the privileges and immunities clause of the constitution. In re Jarvis, 66 Kan. 329, 71 Pac. 576. An act applicable to all transient merchants does not grant special privileges and immunities. Levy v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 172. The Indiana act imposing license tax on transient merchants did not violate the equal protection of the laws clause of the constitution of the United States. Id.

9. Ordinances establishing public markets and requiring vendors elsewhere to take out licenses do not restrain trade within the constitutional sense. Buffalo v. Hill, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 402.

10. Kehrer v. Stewart [Ga.] 44 S. E. 854. The North Dakota act imposing licenses on hawkers and peddlers does not authorize a tax on interstate commerce. In re Lipschitz [N. D.] 95 N. W. 157. The commerce clause is violated by requiring a license fee from the agent of a non resident firm delivering goods sold on orders. Caldwell v. State, 187 U. S. 622, 47 Law. Ed. 336. A village may impose an occupation tax on telegraph companies doing business therein where it imposes no restriction on interstate business or business of the government. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wakefield [Neb.] 95 N. W. 659. The North Carolina laws imposing a license tax on all persons engaged in the business of selling sewing machines violates the commerce clause when applied to a machine shipped into the state by a non resident on a written order of a customer under an ordinary C. O. D. consignment. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441. A vehicle license ordinance is not operative on a merchant, a non resident of the state, delivering his merchandise to customers in the state and at railroad station for shipment. Dooley v. Bristol [Va.] 46 S. E. 296. A license tax imposed on peddlers by municipalities does not burden trade relations of a merchant in another state with a person who is required to pay for goods purchased before they are delivered to him in such state. In re Pringle [Kan.] 72 Pac. 864. A law taxing telephones does not contravene the commerce clause where it is applicable solely to instruments used solely in domestic business. State v. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co., 27 Mont. 394, 71 Pac. 311. Act requiring licensing of persons soliciting orders for goods held void. In re Kinyon [Idaho] 75 Pac. 268.

11. The Indiana law taxing transient mer-special legislation.[12] A license tax on the business of a buyer of cotton for export is a duty on exports, within the meaning of the constitution.[13] An ordinance licensing milk vendors and providing for an inspection fee to be paid to the inspector as his compensation does not violate a law against taxing persons selling farm products in cities without the regular market houses.[14] A city imposing a license must act within its charter power.[15] They have no retrospective effect.[16]

There is a presumption that levy of license tax was for purposes allowed by law.[17] The decisions of state courts sustaining constitutionality of license ordinances are binding on Federal courts.[18]

§ 2. Interpretation of statutes and ordinances and persons subject.[19]—A statute imposing a license tax will in case of doubt be construed most strongly against the government and in favor of the citizen.[20] Under the laws of Missouri, a brewer delivering beer to his customers must take out a vehicle license.[21] Laws imposing a license tax on a particular business intend that the person shall hold himself out as such and be actually engaged therein.[22] The New York charter requiring certification of engineers has no application to a nonresident engineer temporarily employed on river scows in the removal of obstructions under contract with the government.[23] Where different kinds of business subject to license are combined, they must pay license on each business.[24] The Missouri act chants did not violate the provision against plurality of subjects. Levy v. State [Ind.] 68 N. E. 172. An ordinance does not violate rules as to plurality by the enumeration of the trades and occupations liable to license taxation. Seattle v. Barto, 31 Wash. 141, 71 Pac. 735. An ordinance levying license tax on real estate agents so defined as to include "real estate agents and brokers, house agents, rental agents, loan and brokerage companies" is not unconstitutional though the several classes are grouped under one head. Covington v. Herzog [Ky.] 76 S. W. 538.

13. State v. Allgeyer, 110 La. 839.

14. Norfolk v. Flynn [Va.] 44 S. E. 717.

15. A city may impose a license tax on "magnetic, psychic and other healers" in Kansas. Steiner v. Liggett [Kan.] 72 Pac. 577. The city of New York may impose on licensed hackmen an additional fee for hacks allowed to stand at other than public hack stands. New York v. Reesing, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 417. The laws of Oregon authorize the imposition of a license tax on attorneys. Lent v. Portland [Or.] 71 Pac. 645.

An ordinance for licensing business for purposes of "regulation and revenue" is repealed by an act giving municipalities power to impose such taxes solely for purposes of regulation. Santa Monica v. Guidinger, 137 Cal. 658, 70 Pac. 732. A provision of an ordinance creating the remedy for the enforcement of a license tax is repealed by repeal of an ordinance imposing the tax. Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674.

16. An act requiring a license fee of corporations increasing their capital stock has application to corporations created thereafter and those incorporated before but authorized thereafter to increase their capital stock and not companies created prior to the act and then given the right to increase the capital stock. Com. v. Buffalo & S. R. Co. [Pa.] 56 Atl. 409. A statute repealing a license requirement has no retrospective effect. Flanigan v. Sierra County [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 24.

17. Brown v. Galveston [Tex.] 75 S. W. 488.

18. Flanigan v. Sierra County, 122 Fed. 24.

19. See Auctions and Auctioneers, Attorneys and Counsellors, Common Schools, Intoxicating Liquors, Medicine and Surgery for licenses applicable to the particular business or profession.

20. Washington Elec. Vehicle Transp. Co. v. D. C., 19 App. D. C. 462. An automobile is not covered by an ordinance imposing a vehicle tax on proprietors of "hacks, cabs, omnibuses, and other vehicles for the transportation of passengers for hire," this type of vehicle not being in use at the time of the passage of the ordinance. Id. A law allowing cities to license itinerant doctors and itinerant physicians and surgeons gave no power to require a license from a "dental surgeon." Cherokee v. Perkins, 118 Iowa, 405.

21. A brewer delivering beer to his customers must take out a license. Kansas City v. Smith, 93 Mo. App. 217.

22. A manufacturer is a merchant if he keeps goods manufactured by him at a store kept by him for the sale of such goods in the ordinary course of trade but not if he only manufactures goods to fill orders from his customers. Kansas City v. Ferd Heim Brewing Co., 98 Mo. App. 590. One is engaged in the business of a dealer in pistols in Alabama who has a place for their sale and who holds himself out for business though only one sale may be shown. Act does not apply to sales of pledged pistols by licensed pawnbrokers. Morningstar v. State, 135 Ala. 66. An occasional purchaser of a note without seeking the transaction does not make the party subject to the privilege tax for shaving notes. Trentham v. Moore [Tenn.] 76 S. W. 904.

23. People v. Prillen, 173 N. Y. 67.

imposing license taxes on local insurance agencies does not authorize the imposition of an additional license tax on the individual insurance agents.[25] A privilege tax on cotton seed oil mills of a certain capital does not have reference to the capital stock.[26] In Massachusetts, a nonresident purchasing from manufacturers bits of unavailable iron and reselling them is not a junk dealer,[27] otherwise, persons engaged in the business of buying old gold and silver articles to be sold for dental or minting purposes.[28] A person selling ranges by sample, taking orders for future delivery to be paid for only on such delivery, is not a peddler.[29] A nonresident architect paying occasional visits to a town to inspect buildings in course of construction and to see that his plans and specifications are carried out is liable to a license tax on architects required by such city.[30]

A lessee of a street railroad is not liable for fees due from the lessor prior to the lease, though the lessee took the property "subject to all the debts and liabilities of the first company.[31]

A city may require applicants for brokers' licenses to execute a sworn statement that all their orders were executed on the respective exchanges.[32] One illegally conducting a stock exchange is to be pursued criminally and not as a tax defaulter failing to pay occupation tax imposed on dealers in "futures" lawfully engaged in the business.[33]

Exemptions.—In Georgia, disabled Confederate soldiers are exempt from the payment of business tax.[34] A sugar refiner is a manufacturer, and as such exempt from license taxation under the constitution of Louisiana.[35]

§ 3. Collection and payment of license fees.—A company accepting an ordinance granting a right to maintain poles and wires on condition of payment of a stipulated yearly license fee may not thereafter question the reasonableness of the charges.[36]

A right to collect a license tax prior to repeal of act imposing the tax ceases with the repeal.[37] A law requiring no license fee does not authorize recovery back of a proportional part of a fee paid by one under the former law.[38] Under the Atlantic City ordinance for licensing auctioneers, etc., passed July 14, 1902, no license fee becomes payable until June 1, 1903.[39]

That one paid a license tax one year without protest will not estop him to deny the validity of an ordinance increasing the amount for subsequent years.[40]

A license may be revoked without notice to the licensee where there is reason to believe that the business is a nuisance, a menace to public health, or detrimental to peace or morals.[41]

A complaint to enjoin the enforcement of vehicle license ordinance should allege use of streets by plaintiff's vehicles and his ownership of the vehicles.[42] A complaint for practicing medicine without a license need not specify the particular acts or means of practice.[43]

An information under an act imposing a license tax on peddlers of cooking stoves or ranges must show that the stoves sold were cooking stoves or ranges.[44] An information under an act imposing a license on peddlers of specified articles and providing that a merchant paying an occupation tax shall be exempt from such tax for selling the articles in his store must negative the fact that defendant was such merchant.[45] In a prosecution for violation of laws requiring licenses from junk dealers, evidence is inadmissible to show the interpretation put on the law by officials.[46]

§ 4. Effect of obtaining or failure to obtain license.—Generally, the effect of failure to obtain license is to invalidate contracts so that there may be no recovery thereunder.[47] A contract for sale of property by an unlicensed broker is not absolutely void.[48]

LICENSES TO ENTER ON LAND.

§ 1. Nature, creation and indicia of a license and distinction from easements and other estates.—A license is an authority or permission to do some one act or a series of acts on the land of another.[49] A license may be either an express authority, conferred in writing[50] or by parol agreement,[51] or an implied authority inferred from the relationship of the parties.[52] A license may be granted for a consideration,[53] but is valid, though gratuitous.[54] A license, in so far as the licensor has right and authority to grant the same,[55] authorizes the performance of the acts specified or those necessary for the enjoyment of the license, but cannot be extended or varied.[56] A license to enter land and do certain acts thereon does not create the relation of landlord and tenant,[57] nor does it amount to an easement, for it confers no right or interest in the land.[58] But a grant in proper form of a perpetual right of user, though described as a license, gives the grantee an easement or other interest in the land.[59] Possession or user under a license is not adverse, and will not create an easement by prescription.[60]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities of licensees. A. Bare licensees.—In the law of torts, where the term is usually employed, a bare licensee is one who enters on the premises of another, with his consent, but without any invitation, express or implied. He can recover only for wanton or willful injury to him by the licensor.[61] This branch of the subject is more specifically treated elsewhere.[62] The term bare licensee may be used also in a wider sense to mean one who is given a bare license, as distinguished from a license coupled with an interest. The distinction is mainly one of degree and the cases are not uniform, but generally one who acts under a gratuitous license without incurring any substantial expense in reliance on the license is a bare licensee.[63] A license without consideration is terminated by failure to act on it within a reasonable time,[64] by a conveyance of the property of the licensor,[65] or by a mere notice from the licensor that the license is revoked.[66]

55. A license to quarry stone on certain land is subordinate to a prior grant by deed of a right of way over the same. Coyne v. Warrior Southern R. Co. [Ala.] 34 So. 1004. A written license to cut all the timber upon the lands described therein to which the licensor had any right, title or interest, conferred no consent or authority on the licensee to cut timber on land which, though included in the parcel of land described in the license, belonged to a third party. Caughie v. Brown, 88 Minn. 469.

56. Where a railroad company for a consideration allows a telegraph company to erect its poles on a right of way which the railroad company has acquired for the construction of its road, this gives the telegraph company a license as against the railroad company but does not bar a claim for damages by the owner of the land for the additional burden. Hodges v. Western Union Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 225. The proprietor of a grain elevator built by permission on the right of way of a railroad company is a licensee on the premises and must operate his elevator subject to the right of the company to use the track for its trains and for switching purposes in the ordinary and usual way. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Giffen [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1014.

58. A bill of sale of standing timber, while insufficient to convey any interest in the realty is admissible as evidence to prove a license to enter upon the premises for the purpose of cutting and removing lumber. Price v. Madison [S. D.] 95 N. W. 933. See, also, Easements.

59. An indenture between a property owner and park commissioners whereby the former grants to the latter perpetual leave and license to occupy a portion of his land for park purposes transferred a permanent interest in the property so long as it should be used for the specified purpose, and such license is not revoked by a subsequent conveyance by the grantor. Barney v. Lincoln Park Com'rs, 203 Ill. 397.

60. Continuance for twenty years of a wall erected under a license does not necessarily give a right by adverse possession. Percival v. Chase, 182 Mass. 371. The user of a private way under a naked license and without an assertion of adverse right, will not establish an easement by prescription against the owner of the land. Kibbey v. Richards, 30 Ind. App. 101. Possession by a licensee is the possession of the licensor and does not prevent the latter giving possession to another. Percival v. Chase, 182 Mass. 371. But where the owners of land traversed by a natural water course unite in widening it for better drainage, the continued and unobstructed use thereof for 40 years will raise a presumption that the widening was done, not under a license, but under a claim of right which has become good by prescription. Spink v. Corning, 172 N. Y. 626.

61. Fall of weight from a structure in process of building. Chesley v. Rocheford [Neb.] 96 N. W. 241. One doing business with the employees of the licensor, though expressly directed by him to use the elevator which caused the injury. Muench v. Heinemann [Wis.] 96 N. W. 800.

65. Jayne v. Cortland Waterworks Co., 42 Misc. [N. Y.] 263. An oral license to use a right of way is not binding upon the licensor's vendee when no mention of the right of way is made in the deed. Worthen v. Garno, 182 Mass. 243. A license to enter on land and cut timber, though granted for a consideration, is terminated by the sale of the land, but the licensee has the right to remove any timber he has cut prior to such sale. Price v. Madison [S. D.] 95 N. W. 933; Polk v. Carney [S. D.] 97 N. W. 360.

66. A license to use a private way, where no consideration is paid therefor, or any value parted with on the faith that the license is perpetual, is revocable at the will of the owner. Kibbey v. Richards, 30 Ind. App. 101. A landowner's verbal consent that another person may put a sewer through his land is a mere revocable license, which may be terminated by reasonable notice. Fonda, J. & G. R. Co. v. Olmstead, 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 127. Permission by a railroad company for the use of its poles on which to erect a telephone line, in return for certain privileges in the use of such line, no time being specified, is a license only and may be revoked after reasonable notice. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carver [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 55. A city ordinance giving a company the right to lay water pipes in the streets without specifying any term is a license only, revocable at the will of the city. In the absence of statutory authority a city has no power to grant a perpetual franchise. Boise City Artesian H. & C. Water Co. v. Boise City [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 232. A parol license for the erection of structures on land is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and though acted on does not raise an estoppel in pais against the licensor. Erection of wharves on shore lands. Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 73. Where the public are for some years allowed to use a roadway, the erection of obstructions at either end of such roadway by the owner and maintaining the same in place for a reasonable time is sufficient notice that the license to use the road has been withdrawn. In this case the maintenance of an obstruction for four months was held sufficient. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Waldrop, 24 Ky. L. R. 2127, 72 S. W. 1116.

License to cut timber, no time limit being fixed, is not revoked by failure to exercise it within a reasonable time. Watson v. Adams [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 696. A license coupled with an interest cannot be revoked by a lessee of the licensor who takes with knowledge so long as the license is not abused. Darlington v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 99 Mo. App. 1. Where a licensee, relying on the license, takes possession and makes improvements, the license may become irrevocable by equitable estoppel. License to lay water pipes to a spring. Moore v. Neubert, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 144. Where a railroad company puts in a switch track on private land, partly at its own expense and partly at the expense of the owner of the land, and for their mutual advantage, the company had a license coupled with an interest in the switch, and such license could not be arbitrarily or suddenly revoked. Darlington v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 99 Mo. App. 1. Where, by an oral agreement between their owners, adjoining buildings were erected with a stairway wholly on the land of one for the joint use of himself and the other owner who provided no other means of access to the upper stories, a revocation of the license was enjoined in a court of equity on the ground that it would cause great injury to the licensee. Dodge v. Johnson [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 560. Where a licensee sues a licensor for damages for the revocation of an oral license, and recovers the whole sum he has expended on the faith of the license, he no longer has any right to enforce the license, but the latter must be treated as revoked. Oster v. Broe [Ind.] 64 N. E. 918.

§ 1. Common law, equitable and statutory liens. A. Common law liens.—A common law lien is the mere right of retaining possession of certain personal property on which work and labor has been performed until the claim for such services has been satisfied.[70] It is dependent upon possession, actual or constructive,[71] which must be obtained in a lawful manner, and with the owner's consent.[72]

(§ 1) B. Equitable liens.[73]—An equitable lien arises by express contract, showing an intention to charge certain property therein described with a certain obligation or debt,[74] as by an order,[75] note,[76] check,[77] or assignment;[78] but the assignment must be of some obligation owing to the assignor.[79] The contract must show an intention to charge the property with a certain obligation or debt,[80] and must describe the property sufficiently for identification.[81] A mere promise to pay from a particular fund is not sufficient; there must be some positive act of appropriation on the part of the debtor whereby he ceases to control the fund.[82] An equitable lien is not dependent upon possession,[83] and can be created only by the owner or his authorized agent.[84]

An equitable lien may also arise, in the absence of an express agreement, upon equitable principles where the rights of the parties cannot otherwise be secured.[85]

74. Evidence held insufficient to show that a son agreed to pledge stock with his mother as security for money advanced to buy the stock so as to create an equitable lien on the stock in favor of the mother's estate. Duvall v. Hambleton [Md.] 55 Atl. 431.

75. An order given, for a valuable consideration, for the payment of money out of a specific fund creates an equitable lien upon such fund. Third Nat. Bank v. Atlantic City, 126 Fed. 413.

76. A note executed in consideration of a devise, creates an equitable lien upon the estate in favor of the devisee. Ballard v. Camplin [Ind.] 67 N. E. 505.

77. Checks drawn on a special fund create an equitable lien thereon for the amount of such checks. Fortier v. Delgado [C. C. A.] 122 Fed. 604.

78. An assignment of part of an indebtedness secured by a mortgage creates a lien pro tanto on such mortgage. Miller v. Campbell Commission Co. [Okl.] 74 Pac. 507.

79. The assignment by one of apportionment warrants drawn in his own favor against his own property, creates an equitable lien in favor of the assignee, as the warrants created no obligation in the assignor's favor. United Loan & Deposit Bank v. Bitzer [Ky.] 78 S. W. 183.

80. Duvall v. Hambleton [Md.] 55 Atl. 431; Elmore v. Symonds, 183 Mass. 321. A contract to dig a well payment for which is to be made in land at a certain price, or in cash (Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 74 Pac. 40); or to look exclusively to trust property in the hands of a trustee for a debt or charge (Industrial Lumber Co. v. Texas Pine Land Ass'n [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 875), does not show sufficient intention to charge the property.

81. Franklin v. Browning [C. C. A.] 117 Fed. 226.

82. An agreement to pay over rents of certain specified property as they accrue does not create an equitable lien, unless there is an express stipulation to that effect, or language from which such an intention clearly appears, as in payment of a debt representing money used to increase the value of the property on which the lien is claimed. Elmore v. Symonds, 183 Mass. 321.

83. A factor, in pursuance of an agreement, may have an equitable lien for advances on all goods for which invoices are sent him, whether actually shipped or remaining in the hands of the consignor. In re Olzendam Co., 117 Fed. 179. See, also, Howard v. Delgado [C. C. A.] 121 Fed. 26.

84. One having legal title to land cannot by contract create an equitable lien for another having an equitable interest therein without the latter's authority or consent. Atlantic Trust & Banking Co. v. Nelms, 116 Ga. 915.

85. One of two or more beneficiaries of a life insurance policy, who pays premiums to keep it alive is entitled to an equitable lien on the proceeds for his reimbursement. Stockwell v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 198, 73 Pac. 833. In Washington an owner of land who pays overdue taxes in good faith, in ignorance of a sale, is entitled to a judgment against the tax purchaser for the

The doctrine applicable to a quasi-public corporation that persons furnishing material or labor to keep it in operation are entitled to a preferential payment out of its assets, amounting to an equitable lien, does not apply to gas companies,[86] nor to services rendered to a railroad company in furthering business other than railroad business.[87]

(§ 1) C. Statutory liens.[88]—A statutory lien is one that is declared to be such by statute, and embraces in modified form some of the common law liens;[89] but in order that one may avail himself of such lien, he must comply with all the requirements of the statute,[90] as by filing a statement of his claim,[91] or by delivery and notice.[92] One will not acquire a statutory lien if he has no valid and enforceable claim for services,[93] or if he has not performed services required by the statute,[94] or if, where the lien is dependent upon possession, he obtains possession unlawfully.[95] A statutory lien, in the absence of express legislation, does not attach to public property;[96] nor to such property in the hands of a private person, who obtained title thereto after the claim to a lien arose.[97] A party to whom a certain sum is payable by a devisee under the terms of a devise by another has a lien upon the legacy for such sum.[98] A laborer, within the meaning of statutes giving him a lien for services, is one who performs manual labor only.[99] amount so paid, and to have it declared a lien on the property. Rothchild Bros. v. Rollinger, 32 Wash. 307, 73 Pac. 367.

86. Allegations in bill held too vague to support this doctrine even though the case had been one within it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Memphis Gaslight Co. [C. C. A.] 125 Fed. 97.

87. As in a logging venture. Security Sav. & Trust Co. v. Goble R. Co. [Ore.] 74 Pac. 919.

88. For specific statutory liens see titles Mechanics' Liens; Attachment; Execution; Inns, Restaurants, and Lodging Houses; Taxes; Crop Liens (see Agriculture and Landlord and Tenant); Agister's Liens (see Animals); Logging Liens (see Forestry and Timber); Warehousing and Deposits.

89. But a statutory lien for labor does not arise under a statute providing that in cases of attachment, etc., one having a claim for labor against the defendant may give notice thereof and be paid out of the proceeds unless his claim is disputed [Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1206]. Winrod v. Wolton [Cal.] 74 Pac. 1037.

90. Moher v. Rasmusson [N. D.] 95 N. W. 152. Notice presented by an employe, under Iowa Code, §§ 4019, 4020, requiring the presentation of a notice of claim before sale to effect a labor lien, does not create a lien on the fund derived from a foreclosure sale, such sections not applying to a foreclosure by notice and sale. Wells v. Kelley [Iowa] 96 N. W. 1104. Lien of drainage ditch contractor under Ky. St. § 2400 is effective only from giving of certificate of amount due by county surveyor. Dixon v. Labry [Ky.] 78 S. W. 430.

91. A thresher, claiming a lien under R. S. 1899, § 4824, must file a statement in the office of the register of deeds showing "the amount and quantity of grain threshed." Moher v. Rasmusson [N. D.] 95 N. W. 152.

92. A public cartman claiming a lien on property under the ordinances of New York City must convey and deliver the property to the property clerk of the police department, or to a convenient storage warehouse, and give notice, in writing, with a brief statement of particulars, to the bureau of licenses; and not keep the property in his own possession. Browning v. Belford, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 144; Taylor v. Smith, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 78.

93. A public cartman is not entitled to a lien, under a city ordinance, for his charges for transportation, where injury to the goods in transit was in excess of such charges. Browning v. Belford, 83 App. Div. [N. Y.] 144.

94. Although he has performed some services, other than those provided for, in respect to the property. Taylor v. Smith, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 78.

95. A warehouseman cannot claim a lien, as against a mortgagee, under a statute giving warehousemen a lien on goods stored for services rendered, on property stored with him in violation of a condition that the mortgagor should not remove the property without the mortgagee's written consent [Laws N. Y. 1897, p. 533, c. 418, art. 6, § 73]. Allen v. Becket, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1007.

96. A logging lien does not attach to property of the United States government [G. L. Minn. 1899, c. 342, p. 432]. Rowley v. Conklin, 89 Minn. 172.

97. Rowley v. Conklin, 89 Minn. 172.

98. Under Ky. St. 1899, §§ 2066 and 467, creditors of a testator have a lien of record for their debts on land which he has directed by his will to be sold and from the proceeds to pay his debts. Hurst v. Davidson [Ky.] 76 S. W. 37.

99. Independent contractors, clerks, secretaries, or agents, are not workmen or laborers having a special privilege on property for their wages under the laws of Louisiana. Fortier v. Delgado, 122 Fed. 604. Maine—Rev. St. c. 91, § 38, as amended by c. 183, p. 172, P. L. 1889, giving a logging lien protects laborers only; "whoever labors" means "laborer," and in the statutory sense is one who performs manual labor under direction of his employer, and not an independent contractor. Littlefield v. Morrill, 97 Me. 505.

Construction.—The provisions of lien laws must be liberally construed, with a view to effect their objects and promote justice;[1] but the operation, extent, and character of the lien is to be ascertained only from the terms of the statute; and courts cannot extend it to cover cases for which the statute does not provide.[2] A statute making a purchaser personally liable for the full amount of a lien, if the property is so charged that the lien cannot be enforced against it after proper proceedings, is unconstitutional, as depriving the purchaser of his property without due process of law.[3]

§ 2. Priorities between liens.[4]—As between equitable liens, priority depends upon which one has the better equity,[5] as between an equitable and a common law particular lien, it depends upon notice of the latter lien.[6] As between statutory liens, priority depends upon the express statutory provisions and compliance therewith, in the absence of which it would depend upon priority in time and notice.[7] As between an equitable and a statutory lien, in the absence of statute fixing priority, it depends upon which lien is prior in time.[8]

1. Phillips v. Salmon River M. & D. Co. [Idaho] 72 Pac. 886.

2. Moher v. Rasmusson [N. D.] 95 N. W. 152. A lien law providing that "all conditions and reservations in a contract for the sale of goods and chattels, accompanied by immediate delivery" and providing that title shall remain in the seller until paid for, shall be void, unless filed, does not require the filing of a conditional contract for the sale of chattels to be manufactured by the seller. Duntz v. Granger Brew. Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 177, construing Lien law N. Y. § 112 (Laws 1897, c. 418, p. 540).

3. Rogers-Ruger Co. v. Murray, 115 Wis. 267, 59 L. R. A. 737, construing R. S. Wis. 1898, § 3336.

4. It is not within the scope of this article to discuss priorities depending on the defectiveness of one or the other of the two hostile liens. Thus if an attachment levy be asserted as superior to a chattel mortgage because it is alleged that the latter was unrecorded or not filed the point involved is one concerning the Recordation of Chattel Mortgages which title and others like it see to ascertain what acts are efficient to claim and preserve a lien.

5. As between equitable liens upon a specific fund priority depends upon date of notice to the debtor, holding such fund; presentation of an order creating such lien to the debtor constitutes sufficient notice for this purpose. Third Nat. Bank v. Atlantic City, 126 Fed. 413. A junior mortgagee of specific property who furnished money to buy it has an equity superior to a general mortgagee who claims in the specific property only by virtue of an "after-acquired property" clause. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 46. A vendor's lien retained in a deed is superior to a subsequent mortgage on the same property, although the mortgagee, through fraud of the mortgagor, had no notice of the deed which was unrecorded. Hall's Adm'r v. Hall's Adm'x, 24 Ky. L. R. 2317, 73 S. W. 1120. A mortgage lien is superior to a prior vendor's lien of which the mortgagee had no notice. Hubbell v. Henrickson, 175 N. Y. 175. An unrecorded contract of conditional sale is superior to a subsequent chattel mortgage, though the debt secured by the mortgage was contracted before the sale. First Nat. Bank v. Reid [Iowa] 98 N. W. 107. A mortgage lien on real estate and chattels as fixtures is subsequent to a vendor's lien on the chattels purchased under an agreement that the title thereto was to remain in the seller until paid for. Duntz v. Granger Brew. Co., 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 177. A judgment lien is superior to a prior mortgage lien where the mortgagor is absent from the state until after the time allowed by the statute of limitations has elapsed. Though the mortgagor's absence suspends the running of the statute of limitations as against the mortgagee's right of foreclosure, it does not suspend the statute so as to prevent other liens from attaching. Brandenstein v. Johnson, 140 Cal. 29, 73 Pac. 744.

6. A judgment lien is superior to an attorney's particular lien, where the judgment creditor had no notice of the attorney's intention to claim a lien at the time he filed his transcript of the judgment. Teller v. Hill [Colo.] 72 Pac. 811.

7. Under the statute in Montana a lien for services rendered within sixty days is preferred to attaching creditors, if within ten days after notice to the attaching officer, suit is brought to establish his claim; but such lien is waived if he fails to sue within such time. Shea v. Regan [Mont.] 74 Pac. 737.

8. An attachment of land, of a mortgagor, subject to a recorded mortgage, creates a lien only on the equity of redemption. London & S. F. Bank v. Dexter Horton & Co. [C. C. A.] 126 Fed. 593. The lien of a beneficiary of the estate of a trustee for reimbursement for the trustee's defalcation, is inferior to a prior lien secured by an attaching creditor of such trustee. Wales v. Sammis, 120 Iowa, 293. A vendor's lien on property covers permanent improvements to such property, in the absence of an intention of the parties to treat them as personalty, and is superior to a mechanic's lien for the improvements. Watson v. Markham [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 660. A chattel mortgage is superior to a prior lien of a judgment creditor by delivery of writ of execution to the sheriff, where by act of counsel the levy is not made until after the chattel mortgage was recorded. Ankele v. Elder [Colo. App.] 75 Pac. 29. A warehouseman's lien under Laws 1902, p. 1775, c. 608, is not superior to

§ 3. Transfer and substitution of liens.—Though as a general rule a common law lien is nonassignable, if a person accepts an assignment of such a lien and possession of the property, securing it, according to an agreement therefor, and having induced the lienor to make such assignment, he is estopped to assert the validity of the transfer.[9] As to whether there was an assignment or transfer of a lien, a finding that the lien was "transferred and delivered" is sufficient.[10] A contract lien in favor of a corporation advancing money to purchase goods is equitable and passes to its successor.[11]

§ 4. Extinguishment and discharge.—A common law lien may be waived by the lienor converting the property subject to it,[12] and it will be discharged by payment of the debt for which it is security.[13]

An equitable lien against a bankrupt's property is not extinguished by his discharge in bankruptcy.[14] So an equitable lien created by a devise does not lapse by the death of the devisee before the testator,[15] nor can it be defeated by the devisee's wife, who enters on the lands devised, on the testator's death,[16] nor by the fact that a note executed in consideration of the devise was made to a third person instead of the testator.[17]

A statutory right of lien may be waived by the lienor failing to sue within a limited time to establish his claim;[18] or by obtaining a personal judgment without enforcing the lien.[19]

§ 5. Enforcement and protection of liens.—In most cases of statutory liens, the statute expressly provides a mode for its enforcement, as by sale.[20]

Statutory proceedings to enforce or foreclose.—A junior lienor cannot complain that the superior lienor has adopted a means for satisfying his lien other than that provided by statute, if such means do not injure his interests.[21] One liens of mortgagees and sellers on conditional sale. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Becket, 85 N. Y. Supp. 391.

A statute providing that when a corporation's property shall be put into the hands of a trustee, laborer's debts not exceeding $100 and performed within six months before the transfer of property shall be first paid, does not give such laborers claims superior to mortgage liens, under R. S. 1899, § 3167. Cunningham v. Elm Grove Z. & L. Co. [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 487. But in Georgia, a laborer's lien is superior to a mortgage to secure purchase money, and to all other liens not expressly declared superior or provided for by statute [Civ. Code Ga. §§ 2792, 2793] Bradley v. Cassels, 117 Ga. 517.

A landlord's statutory lien for rent is superior to a mortgage executed by the tenant upon property subject to the lien, where the mortgage is not forthwith filed for record, as required by statute (Liquid Carbonic Acid Mfg. Co. v. Lewis [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 47), and if the property is sent by the tenant to the mortgagee, the latter cannot defeat the landlord's lien by claiming to hold the property as that of the tenant, till the lien has ceased (Mensing v. Cardwell [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 347). Where one enters under a contract of purchase, and on default, under the terms of such contract, becomes a tenant, the owner's crop lien relates back to the time of entry, so as to be superior to a chattel mortgage given before default. claiming a statutory lien for labor cannot sue in a court of equity to dismiss an attachment suit and enforce his claim, as he has an adequate remedy at law.[22]

Equitable remedies and procedure.—An equitable lien can be enforced in a court of equity only, as by a suit to foreclose,[23] the usual mode of which is by a decree for a sale of the property to which the lien attaches, and application of the proceeds to the debt; or by a decree restraining the owner from disposing of it.[24] Such lien may be enforced against the property in the hands of the original owner,[25] his receivers,[26] trustee in bankruptcy,[27] purchasers with notice,[28] or voluntary assignees;[29] but not against a bona fide purchaser for value,[30] or an attaching creditor.[31] An equitable lien may be enforced by a Federal court, though the state statutes recognize only mortgages and contractual "privileges."[32]

Intervention.—In a suit to foreclose a lien, a lienor may intervene and assert his lien upon the same property, and have its status as to priority determined.[33]

Common law remedies and procedure.—A common law lien, being merely a right to possession, cannot be actively enforced, as by a sale of the property.[34] The remedies to determine or sustain this lien must be found in a court of law.[35] If the lienor is wrongfully deprived of his possession, he may maintain detinue for the goods or trover and conversion for their value.[36]

LIFE ESTATES, REVERSIONS AND REMAINDERS.

This article is limited in scope. The principles common to all life and reversionary estates have been collected here and those applicable to particular freeholds are excluded to other titles conducive to an easier and more familiar search.[37] Matters pertaining to the instruments by which these estates are created belong to the titles treating of such instruments.[38]

§ 1. Nature and definitions.—Generally speaking, a life estate is a freehold which may or must endure for life,[39] being then determined.[40] If the estate has

39. Words construed to give a life estate: A contract between a divorced husband and wife by which land was granted by the husband to the wife provided that the estate should close on the wife's marriage and that the husband should have the right to sell, and upon exercising that right she should surrender possession on the husband's securing to her the monthly rental value of the premises gives the wife a life estate until she marries subject to the condition of surrending possession in case of sale. Budlong v. Budlong, 31 Wash. 228, 71 Pac. 751. A

any inheritable character, it is a fee.[41] A devise of the income or rents and profits of land is a devise of the land itself, and whether the estate is for life or in fee must be determined by the limitations in the devise or the expressed intention of the testator.[42] That portion of an estate for another's life which remains after the tenant's death while the cestui que vie lives is real estate.[43]

There must be a particular legal estate to support a remainder,[44] and the conveyance must also give or grant the estate in remainder.[45] A delivery of a deed to a life tenant is a delivery to all who may take in remainder.[46] The particular tenant not the remainderman has the seisin.[47] But a remainderman is seised in law so as to become a stock of descent while the particular freehold is yet outstanding.[48]

Where there is a person in being, specifically designated, who would have a right to possession upon the determination of the preceding estate, the remainder is vested.[49] A remainder is contingent when limited to an uncertain person, or upon deed by A. to B. of property, and the words "it is understood that the above conveyance is to be good" during her life and on her death to revert to the heirs of B. and A. (her husband) gives a life estate to A. Beedy v. Finney, 118 Iowa, 276. Testator devised the residue of his estate to his wife for life, if she remained his widow, and if not one-third for her life and two-thirds to his daughter for her life, and on the death of the wife to the daughter for life, and on the death of the daughter and wife, in fee to those who would take from the wife and the testator as on an intestacy. The wife and daughter take a life interest. Van Driele v. Kotvis [Mich.] 97 N. W. 700. Funds were given in trust for A for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, if living at her death, and if not, to the testator's heirs. The trustee invested in land, part of the purchase money being paid by A's husband. A deed was made to A for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, if living at her death, and if not to the testator's heirs to the amount of the purchase money paid by the trustees. Held A took a life estate in all the land and not merely in that proportioned to the amount paid by the trustees. Clay v. Clay's Guardian, 24 Ky. L. R. 2016, 72 S. W. 810. A deed to A in trust for B (a married woman) for life and on her death to such children as she may have at her death begotten of the grantor with power to B to empower A to sell and reinvest, gives a legal life estate to B, as the trust became executed, under the Married Woman's Act, on delivery of the deed. Tillman v. Banks, 116 Ga. 250. Deed construed to grant life estate with power and remainder subject to the power. Dickey v. Barnstable [Iowa] 98 N. W. 368. Usufructuary under the Civil Law.—Maguire v. Maguire, 110 La. 279.

40. A devise to the testator's son, and if he should die, to his wife for life gives the son a life estate. In re Willis' Will [R. I.] 55 Atl. 889.

41. A deed to A to have and to hold to his heirs and assigns forever, and on his death to his children by his first wife gives A a fee simple. Humphrey v. Potter, 24 Ky. L. R. 1264, 70 S. W. 1062. A devise to the wife for life, subject to certain provisions for the children, remainder to the children, but during the wife's life the children to have the portion set apart to them during the testator's life gives the children a fee in the land so set apart. Newton v. Odom [S. C.] 45 S. E. 105.

A deed to A and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten during their lives and should he and his heirs become extinct then the estate to revert to grantor's heirs gives A a fee conditional. Mattison v. Mattison, 65 S. C. 345. Upon a devise to one for life with remainder to his heirs the Rule in Shelley's Case applies. A devise of the use, benefit and control of lands to A during his life and on his death to his lawful heirs gives A a fee. Deemer v. Kessinger, 206 Ill. 57. Where however the word "heirs" is construed as "children" the rule does not apply. Deed to A for life, and on her death to such heirs as she may hereafter have, but if she leaves no lawful issue, over to B, gives A a life estate. Duckett v. Butler [S. C.] 45 S. E. 137. See, also, Deeds, 1, p. 908; Real Property; Wills.

44. Deed by husband to his wife to have and to hold after the death of the husband for her life and on her death to the husband's heirs forever is valid. Christ v. Kuehne, 172 Mo. 118. The interest of a wife during coverture in lands wherein a life estate has been deeded to her by her husband is a sufficient particular estate to support a remainder. Id.

45. A deed to A for life with power to sell or mortgage for her support, remainder to the grantor's children equally to their use gives a life estate to A with power to sell or mortgage, the children of the grantor getting nothing, there being no operative words of conveyance to support their estate. Holland v. Keyes [R. I.] 52 Atl. 1094.

the happening of an uncertain event, that is, when limited to a person not in esse, or not ascertained, or limited to take effect upon an event which may never happen or which may not happen until after the preceding estate is determined.[50] By reason of the rule against perpetuities, a future estate must vest within a certain time, usually measured by "lives in being and twenty-one years and a fraction thereafter."[51] Under the law of wills, a remainder failing falls into the residue.[52] Un-

Gwynn, 19 App. D. C. 99. A devise to the testator's brother A in trust for his child or children, but A to have the rents and profits for his life, gives A a life estate with a vested remainder in fee to his children, except in case they die before the testator. Dalmazzo v. Simmons [Ky.] 78 S. W. 179. A devise to A for life and on his death to his next of kin, gives A a life estate and a remainder in fee to his heirs. In re Willis' Will [R. I.] 55 Atl. 889. A deed to A and her husband and her children forever gives life estate to A and her husband with vested remainder to children living at the date of the deed, the remainder opening up to admit after-born children. Blackburn v. Blackburn, 109 Tenn. 674. A deed to a married woman and her bodily heirs and assigns gives her a life estate with a remainder in fee to her heirs (under a statute changing a fee tail into a life estate and remainder in fee). Chew v. Kellar, 171 Mo. 215. A deed to A to have and to hold to her and her bodily heirs and assigns gives a life estate to A with remainder in fee to the heirs of her body even where by statute a conveyance passes all the grantor's interest unless a different intent is expressed or implied. Utter v. Sidman, 170 Mo. 284. A deed to A for life and on her death to such child or children or representatives of child or children that she may bring forth by the grantor and leave in life, gives a vested remainder to those children in esse at the delivery of the deed and the class is opened to take in children afterwards born, the remainder to the unborn children being contingent until born, under Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3100, 3103. Fields v. Lewis, 118 Ga. 573. A deed to A, B and C in fee reserving a life estate in the grantor and upon his death to be equally divided among A, B and C and if either should die without leaving child or children surviving, the survivor or survivors and their children to take the whole gives a vested remainder in A, B and C in fee, defeasible upon any remainderman dying without child surviving him which would vest the whole estate in the survivors and their children—a shifting use. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Bunckley, 81 Miss. 599. A devise to A for life and on her death to those of the testator's children who may survive "also my sister Julia to have an equal share * * * with my children if she survives" A, gives vested remainders to those children in esse at A's death, and contingent remainders to those not in esse at that time. In re Moran's Will [Wis.] 96 N. W. 367. Testator devised property to "A my son, and to his heirs," not to be liable for his debts but to descend to his bodily heirs at his death. To B he devised property "on the same principles as" that of A, not being liable for his debts but to descend to his bodily heirs, and in case of none, to his brothers and sisters. Held the words "on the same principles" referred to liability for debts and not to the word "heirs" and that B took a life estate with remainder in fee to the heirs of his body. Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464. A deed to A and the heirs of her body and if she dies without issue to three persons named and in esse at the delivery of the deed, gives the three a vested remainder. It is not a fee upon a fee but an alternative limitation of two fees upon the life estate. Chapin v. Nott, 203 Ill. 341. A deed to A for life and on his death to B, C and D in fee, but if either of the last three die in the lifetime of A without issue at his death, his share to vest in the survivors. Held a valid conditional limitation, and on the death of B a fee simple vested in C and D. Gray v. Hawkins, 133 N. C. 1. Where personal property is bequeathed to the wife with the charge and the request that at her death she leave all that portion not used to the children or their descendants, it gives a life estate to the wife, and a remainder to the children. In re Stickney, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 70.

50. Fields v. Gwynn, 19 App. D. C. 99.

Contingent remainders: A devise to A for life and on his death "to his children or their heirs as the law directs" gives a life estate to A, with a contingent remainder, the words "or their heirs" being construed as words of purchase. Taylor v. Taylor, 118 Iowa, 407. A deed to A for life, remainder to the children "living at the death of" A, and if there is no such child, over, is a contingent remainder. Howbert v. Cauthorn, 100 Va. 649. A devise to A for life, but if she marries again after testator's decease, to be divided equally among A and the two daughters of the testator, and upon the death of A unmarried to the two daughters gives a contingent remainder to the daughters. Thompson v. Adams, 205 Ill. 552. Deed of property to A for life and on his death to such of his children as he by will appoints. Until A's death the interest of his children is a contingent remainder. Taylor v. Adams, 93 Mo. App. 277. A devise to A for life and at her death to be equally divided among her children living at her death gives a vested remainder to the class, but the interest of the members is contingent on their being alive at A's death. Nichols v. Guthrie, 109 Tenn. 535. On a devise to A and her offspring for life, remainder to her grandchildren, if there are no grandchildren in esse at the date of the will or at the testator's death, the fee vests in the testator's heirs, to the use of such grandchildren as may thereafter be born. Holton v. Jones, 133 N. C. 399. On a bequest to testator's three daughters free from control of their husbands and with power to dispose of it by will, but if any daughter die before her husband to vest in him, the remainder takes effect only when the first taker dies in the lifetime of the testator. Louisville City Nat. Bank v. Wooldridge [Ky.] 76 S. W. 542.

51. See Perpetuities.

52. See Wills. Upon a devise to A for life remainder to her grandchildren, in default of grandchildren, the testator's heirs will take, der a deed it becomes a reversion. There is no reversion where a trust fails, if the deed creating it recites a pecuniary consideration.[53]

In personalty.—Life estates and future estates may be created in personalty by the same language as in the case of land.[54]

§ 2. Mutual and relative rights and remedies of life tenants and future tenants and their privies. The life tenant's rights.—While a life tenant cannot open new mineral workings, he may take the profits of those existing[55] and those are deemed within this rule which are opened after the life estate accrues, but pursuant to a grant from the tenant's grantor.[56] Otherwise he has only the interest on the proceeds from mines or wells.[57] Where a tenant for life pays off an incumbrance upon the estate, he is presumed to do so for his own benefit and may enforce the lien for reimbursement above the proportion of the debt which he is bound to contribute.[58] A life tenant under a will may discharge or anticipate an obligation to a remainderman, and acceptance by the latter will be implied.[59] Cash dividends are to be treated as income and go to the life tenant; but stock dividends are capital and go to the remainderman.[60] While a power in the life tenant to sell and reinvest will not be controlled at the instance of the remainderman,[61] equity will protect the remainderman whom a life tenant conspires to defraud by exercising a power to dispose of the fee.

The remainderman's rights.—The doctrine of the acceleration of estates is founded upon the desire of courts of equity to give effect to the intention of the testator, and when such intention would be frustrated by allowing it, it will be denied.[62] Where a remainderman pays off an encumbrance on the estate, he is entitled to acquire the rights of an equitable holder of the encumbrance against his co-remaindermen.[63] A contingent remainderman has no action for waste,[64] but the estate of the life tenant is liable to the remainderman for a conversion of the property in his lifetime.[65] The trustee having the legal estate is the proper party plaintiff in a suit for dividends due the estate, and such suit is not abated by the death of the cestui que trust who has the income for life.[66] The life tenant must pay the current charges for taxes and ordinary repairs.[67] Where the life tenant is executor and was indebted to the testator at the latter's death, he may be compelled by the remainderman to pay the debt or give security therefor.[68] The death of the life tenant terminates a lease made by him.[69]

There can be no partition between a life tenant and a remainderman,[70] but they may join in a conveyance and divide the proceeds,[71] and in some states it is provided that the property may be sold in a proceeding for that purpose.[72] Where a petition is brought for sale of land and there are contingent interests, it is not necessary to make persons defendants who by remote contingency may become interested in the premises.[73]

It is fraud for the life tenant to bring a suit against the remainderman claiming absolute title to the property.[74]

The possession of the life tenant cannot be adverse to that of the remainderman, hence the statute of limitations does not run in favor of a purchaser of the life estate against the remainderman[75] until the life tenant's death,[76] unless the remainderman has been given a right by statute.[77] A life tenant may purchase at a sale made under a power, even though his consent is necessary for the exercise of the power.[78]

§ 3. Rights and remedies between third persons and life tenants, remaindermen or reversioners.—A life tenant can convey no greater estate than he has,[79] but if he attempts to convey the fee and afterwards acquires it, it will enure to the benefit of his grantee by way of estoppel.[80] A contingent remainder cannot be with directions to his executors to pay the taxes, cost of repairs and insurance, and the residue to trustees to pay one-half the income to her. Held the taxes, repairs and insurance must come out of the income of the fund and not out of the principal of the residuary estate. In re Tracy, 87 App. Div. [N. Y.] 215. Taxes. Downey v. Strouse [Va.] 43 S. E. 348. Where a person has a homestead in real estate the rents of which are not sufficient to make repairs and he is unable to make them the court may order timber to be sold to defray the expenses thereof. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

This title is designed to treat only of limitations applicable to actions. Limitations of other proceedings are treated in the titles pertaining thereto.[85]

§ 1. Statutes of limitation, validity, interpretation and law governing.—The essential attribute of a statute of limitations is that it accords and limits a reasonable time within which a suit may be brought upon causes of actions sought to be affected.[86] Such statutes are ordinarily valid, though applicable only to particular classes of persons,[87] and are not open to the objection that they deprive one of property without due process of law;[88] but limitations of actions on foreign judgments must not deny full faith and credit thereto.[89] They operate prospectively only,[90] unless a contrary intent is clear,[91] though it is held that amendments may be retroactive.[92] In cases of conflict between general and special statutes, the latter governs,[93] and the longer period is allowed where several sections are applicable.[94] The law in force at the time of the maturity of the obligation generally governs.[95] The lex loci governs as to limitations.[96] The Federal courts in actions at law in applying limitations follow the rules which obtain in the courts of the state within which the action is tried,[97] and the law of the state wherein the action was brought controls on removal to a Federal court.[98]

§ 2. Period of limitation.—The particular periods of limitation are so dependent on the terms of the statutes as to be incapable of general statement. The statutes ordinarily prescribe different periods for actions involving realty,[99] actions on contracts and specialties,[1] actions in tort,[2] actions for penalties,[3] actions

Virginia: Creditor's suit based on actual fraud is not barred by Code, § 2929, prescribing a five years' limitation to actions to set aside conveyances, etc. Flook v. Armentrout's Adm'r, 100 Va. 638.

3. The action under the federal anti-trust act to recover for injuries to business is not an action to recover penalties within the statute fixing the time to sue to recover the latter. Act July 2, 1890, c. 647 not governed as to limitation by U. S. Rev. St. § 1047. Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works [C. C. A.] 127 Fed. 23. Action for an injury to personalty within the Tennessee statute. Shan. Code, § 4470, but governed by § 4473, and barred in ten years. Id.

4. The obligation of a municipality which is the successor to another municipality is neither "statutory" not "implied" within the statute of limitations. Van Auken v. Garfield Tp., 66 Kan. 594, 72 Pac. 211.

5. If the right of subrogation results ipso facto in an equitable assignment of the mortgage it is enforceable during the life of the mortgage. Boevink v. Christiaanse [Neb.] 95 N. W. 652.

6. Sale under power is not governed by the statute limiting the time in which foreclosure may be brought. Miller v. Coxe, 133 N. C. 578; Cone v. Hyatt, 132 N. C. 810; Menzel v. Hinton, 132 N. C. 660.

7. Suit held one to declare the equitable estate which arose out of a payment of the purchase money for land purchased by a husband and that the statute did not begin to run against the children as heirs until after the termination of the husband's curtesy give effect to the statute.[8] The general statute applies to special proceedings, such as mandamus.[9]

§ 3. Disabilities and exceptions. A. In general.—Where the statute has begun to run against a negotiable instrument, it will continue to run against a subsequent holder whether under disability or not,[10] and a statute limiting time to redeem from tax sales has been held to apply to persons under disabilities as well as those sui juris.[11] Where the limitation is a condition precedent to the right of action, the term is not suspended by causes which suspend ordinary limitations.[12] Since the cause of action for partition between co-tenants is a continuing one, it cannot be affected by the statute of limitations.[13]

(§ 3) B. Obstructing suit, concealment of cause of action.—Any obstruction causing the creditor to delay suing,[14] as a concealment of the cause of action,[15] suspends the statute until discovery.

(§ 3) C. Pendency of action or proceeding affecting right to sue.—The general rule is that the pendency of a suit operates to suspend the statute as to the parties thereto, so far as the subject-matter is concerned, but the suspension exists only as to the particular suit and not to the cause of action therein involved.[16] In case of an election between two remedies, the statute does not cease to run against the other. Therefore limitations against an action on mortgage notes is not suspended by the pendency of an action to foreclose the mortgage,[17] except where a personal judgment is sought.[18] The running of limitations against applications for deficiency judgment is suspended by an appeal from the decree confirming the sale on foreclosure.[19] right. Condit v. Bigalow, 64 N. J. Eq. 504; Mantle v. Speculator Min. Co., 27 Mont. 473, 71 Pac. 665; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. O'Brien County, 118 Iowa, 582. The time to file a bill of review by analogy is the same as the time in which to petition for a new trial. Williams v. Starkweather 24 R. I. 512, 25 R. I. 77. Statutes regulating time in which actions shall be commenced anew after nonsuit, are regarded as applicable to suits in equity [2 Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 2642, c. 83, par. 25]. Lamson v. Hutchings [C. C. A.] 118 Fed. 321. Action affecting realty conveyed by deed intended as a mortgage held not one of specific performance but of trespass to try title, though by a cotemporaneous writing the grantee agreed to reconvey upon certain conditions. Turner v. Cochran, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 558.

8. As a claim for compensation for deficiency in quantity of land conveyed by deed. Maxwell v. Wilson [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 349; Sibley v. Stacey, 53 W. Va. 292.

16. The pendency of a suit to enforce an express trust in mining land does not suspend the operation of the statute against an accounting for ores extracted and to restrain operation. Mantle v. Speculator Min. Co., 27 Mont. 473, 71 Pac. 665. A bill not a general creditor's bill does not suspend the running of limitations against other judgments. Gunnell's Adm'rs v. Dixon's Adm'r [Va.] 43 S. E. 340. Pendency of suits to prevent the collection of taxes prevents the running of limitations against tax privileges. State v. Recorder of Mortgages [La.] 35 So. 534.

17. Hinchman v. Anderson, 32 Wash. 198, 72 Pac. 1018.

18. Carstens v. Eller [Neb.] 97 N. W. 631.

(§ 3) D. Trusts.—Trusts which are exempted from the operation of the statute are express trusts, technical or continuing trusts, cognizable only in a court of equity,[20] and not implied[21] or constructive trusts,[22] and in case of continuing trusts, limitations begin to run at the time of repudiation.[23] In case of constructive trusts, the statute will not begin to run until the cestui knew or could have known of the repudiation,[24] and if the constructive trust is in land, a repudiation occurs by a conveyance thereof.[25]

(§ 3) E. Insolvency.—The statute is tolled during the pendency of insolvency,[26] or bankruptcy proceedings against the debtor.[27]

(§ 3) F. Insanity and death.—The insanity which will toll the statute must have existed at the time of the accrual of the cause of action.[28] Death of the creditor[29] or debtor does not suspend the statute,[30] but a presentment of the claim to the personal representative will.[31] A failure to appoint a representative, however, will not operate to extend the statute.[32]

19. Brand v. Garneau [Neb.] 93 N. W. 219.

20. A devisee of realty upon which was imposed by the will a money charge in favor of a third person held not a trustee of an express trust. Merton v. O'Brien, 117 Wis. 437. Appropriation by congress not paid to but covered into the treasury in the credit of the beneficiary is an express trust and a repeal of the appropriation is a repudiation of the trust. Russell v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cl. 113. As between a vendor under bond for title there exists an express trust and the statute will not run against the purchase money notes until there is a termination of the trust relation. Williams v. Young [Ark.] 71 S. W. 669. The ten year statute bars an action for breach of the provisions of an express trust created by a written instrument. Newton v. Rebenack, 90 Mo. App. 650.

21. As against one receiving trust funds in payment of a personal obligation of the trustee. Beecher v. Foster, 51 W. Va. 605.

22. In cases of constructive trusts as where the officers of a corporation wrongfully conveyed away corporate property the three and six year statutes are not applicable. N. W. Land Ass'n v. Grady, 137 Ala. 219. Money collected by an attorney is not such a trust as would be exempted from the operation of the statute. Sheaf v. Dodge [Ind.] 68 N. E. 292. 28. This, though the insanity followed immediately after the accrual of the action or was the result of the injury sued for. Roelefsen v. Pella [Iowa] 96 N. W. 738.

29. Stanton v. Gibbins [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 95.

30. Va. Code 1887, § 2933 amended act Feb. 19, 1898, applies only where the right to prosecute is obstructed by persons. Templeman's Adm'r v. Pugh [Va.] 46 S. E. 474. Does not suspend the statute fixing time in which to foreclose a real mortgage since it is not a debt which must be presented to his representative. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 Pac. 533.

31. In case of a personal claim by the representative a proceeding instituted by him to sell land to pay the claim tolls the statute. Code 1883, § 164. Harris v. Davenport, 132 N. C. 697. The objector has the burden to prove notice on the part of the representative to sue as provided by Code, § 2817. Nicholas v. Sands, 136 Ala. 267. Ball. Ann. Codes, § 4810 prescribing time for enforcement of debts against a decedent does not apply to actions to foreclose mortgages on realty since such action may be brought against the heirs. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 Pac. 533. The presentment of a claim to the administrator and his inclusion of it in his accounts stop the running of the statute. Succession of Willis, 109 La. 281. The mere neglect of the representative of the deceased debtor to perform his duties will not toll the statute limiting time to enforce against deceased debtors. The creditor could have en-

(§ 3) G. Infancy and coverture.—Limitations do not run against infants[33] or married women during coverture.[34] In Missouri, if an equitable cause of action in favor of the wife against the husband accrues during coverture, the statute runs against her from that time.[35]

(§ 3) H. Absence and nonresidence.—Nonresidence tolls the statute.[36] If the cause of action accrues while defendant is out of the state, the statute does not begin to run until his return,[37] or if he departs from the state after the accrual, the time of absence will be deducted,[38] and the continuity of absence is not destroyed by casual visits to the state.[39] Absence or nonresidence will not however affect the running of the statute against actions concerning realty.[40]

§ 4. Accrual of cause of action. A. In general.—Since statutes of limitations affect only the remedy, they begin to run when the right to enforce the remedy exists.[41] If the right of action depends upon some affirmative act on the part of the claimant, he must act with reasonable diligence.[42] If the statute began to run

I. c. 234, § 8 fixing time to sue representatives to one year after death of the debtor is barred though presented pursuant to Gen. Laws, c. 215, §§ 2-4. MacNeill v. Gallagher, 24 R. I. 490.

32. After the lapse of six years without administration on the estate of a deceased mortgagor the mortgage could not be foreclosed. 2 Ball. Codes & St. §§ 4798, 4642 so provides. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 Pac. 533. Though limitations do not run in favor of a deceased debtor where administration is delayed the heirs cannot extend limitations by delaying administration. Stanton v. Gibbins [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 95. Though the mortgage security was barred the debt which matured after the death of the debtor is provable where the administration was not had until 20 years after the death of the debtor. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 Pac. 533.

33. Gibson v. Draffin [Ky.] 77 S. W. 928; George v. Delaney [La.] 35 So. 894; Albers v. Kozeluh [Neb.] 97 N. W. 646. A proceeding in behalf of a minor legatee under Code Civ. 42. As where the right of a creditor to set against an undisclosed agent or trustee, it began at the same time to run against the principal or cestui.[43]

Suits for partnership accounting accrue on the termination of the partnership,[44] and on fidelity bonds on the day of the violation thereof,[45] and on a stay bond on the day of decision by the appellate court.[46] Recovery of back taxes accrues at the time when the property could have been assessed.[47] The right of action for wrongful garnishment process accrues at the time of the levy,[48] and for contribution between attaching creditors on the determination of the invalidity of the attachment.[49] The right to maintain a creditor's bill accrues at the time of the recovery of the judgment[50] and return of the execution.[51]

The action to recover money paid accrues at the time of the payment,[52] and for money had and received at the time of receipt.[53]

The action against the residuary legatee for a debt of the ancestor does not accrue until the bond as legatee is filed,[54] and to recover distributive shares accrues at the time of the final settlement of the representative's accounts,[55] and order of distribution,[56] and to recover dower at the time of the husband's death.[57] Rights of action by remaindermen do not accrue until termination of the life estate,[58] though the life tenant had conveyed by deed purporting to convey absolute title.[59]

A cause of action to recover land against a purchaser in possession under contract to purchase accrues at the time of the default of the payment of the consideration note.[60] The cause of action to recover the damages awarded in eminent domain accrues at the time of the award.[61] The action by a subsequent grantee of public land accrues at the time of the registration of the previous grant.[62]

61. Spalding v. Omaha [Neb.] 94 N. W. 714.

Right to foreclose a real mortgage does not necessarily accrue at the time of the death of the mortgagor.[63] Limitations against an action for cutting timber on another's land against the original trespasser and subsequent purchaser under the statute begins to run from the time of the original trespass.[64]

Mistake.—The statute runs from the time of the discovery of the mistake,[65] or where by the exercise of diligence it could have been discovered.[66]

Fraud.—Limitations do not begin to run against a cause of action based on fraud until the discovery thereof,[67] or from such time as by the exercise of ordinary care plaintiff might have discovered it,[68] since a party by his own negligence cannot defer the running of the statute.[69] It is generally presumed that any fraud connected with the transfer of land was discovered at the time of recordation of the conveyance.[70] The defendant has the burden of proving knowledge of the fraud,[71] and whether due diligence to discover the fraud had been exercised is a question for the jury.[72]

(§ 4) B. Action on contract.—If the contract is void ab initio, the right to restrain its performance accrues at the time the contract was made.[73]

deemed to have been commenced until the complaint is filed.[4] Where both parties are nonresidents, the levy of an attachment on property fraudulently conveyed stops the running of the statute.[5]

To suspend the statute as against a claim set off, it must be such a one as can be set off in the action,[6] and though the reconvention plea was defective but susceptible of amendment, it will stay the statute.[7]

An erroneous assumption of jurisdiction by the court will not toll the statute.[8] The issuance of process which cannot bring the defendant before the court is not a commencement of the action,[9] as where the process is not signed.[10]

(§ 5) B. Amendment of pleading.—When an amendment to a pleading introduces a new cause of action, the statute runs until the making of the amendment,[11] but merely correcting a defect in the original declaration,[12] or supplying omissions and stating the cause of action with more certainty,[13] or the correction of the name of defendant[14] or the bringing in of new parties, is not setting up a new cause of action.[15] If there is a misnomer of the defendant, the original pleading filed will not arrest the statute in the absence of any excuse for the mistake,[16] and an amendment of a claim as assignee, setting up the claim as surety who had paid, the obligation states a new cause of action.[17]

(§ 5) C. After nonsuit or dismissal.—The statute is suspended by bringing an action, though it is dismissed but not on the merits,[18] as a dismissal by reason of defective service of process.[19] Bringing a second suit pending a suit for the same cause of action, and then taking a nonsuit, is not within a statute permitting the bringing of a second action after dismissal of the first.[20] After reversal, a new action of any kind having for result the same relief as was obtained in the original action may, under the code, be brought within one year.[21] The time within which to bring the second action begins to run from the time of nonsuit of the first.[22] To save the second action after nonsuit, the plaintiff must be the same or there must be an identity of right or privity of interest,[23] and the petition therein must aver that the dismissal was not caused by reason of any negligence on the part of the plaintiff.[24] An action to recover a penalty is not a continuation of a criminal proceeding for the same offense previously dismissed.[25]

A new promise to pay revives a barred contractual obligation,[27] and a promise to pay by will is a sufficient revivor.[28] The acknowledgment to revive the debt must be direct, unequivocal and without qualification, and amount to a direct admission of a present existing liability,[29] it must plainly specify the demand,[30] and promise to pay it.[31] The acknowledgment must recognize the debt as existing, and there must be a promise to pay,[32] or such facts from which a promise

Zurflieh, 203 Pa. 440. Evidence that deceased declared that he would make provision in his will for plaintiff is not evidence of an agreement or promise to pay for the services rendered him. Gill v. Staylor [Md.] 55 Atl. 398. Declarations to third persons are not of themselves sufficient to constitute a promise to pay or an acknowledgment of the debt. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 302 provides that the new promise must be in writing. They may, however, be admitted to show intention of the debtor at the time of making the partial payments. McBride v. Ulmer, 30 Ind. App. 154. Rule is applicable to all forms of writings. Thornton v. Nichols [Ga.] 45 S. E. 785. A mere acknowledgment of the debt is not alone sufficient. Hahn v. Gates, 102 Ill. App. 385. The duplication and substitution of the original obligation by the maker because the original was worn and old is not an acknowledgment nor a promise to pay. Goodrich v. Case, 68 Ohio St. 187. A written statement showing the amount paid for another purpose is not sufficient. Davis v. Davis [Me.] 56 Atl. 588.

can be implied;[33] but it need not expressly admit that debt is unpaid.[34] A conditional promise to pay is insufficient, though accompanied by a partial payment, without proof that the condition has been fulfilled.[35] An offer to buy the note is not an acknowledgment of the debt.[36]

The part payment to remove the bar must be made on the obligation sued on and under such circumstances as to amount to an acknowledgment of an existing liability,[37] and a part payment in the absence of rebutting evidence raises a presumption of an acknowledgment and new promise.[38] If the payment is made to apply to an indebtedness consisting of many items, all will be saved,[39] though the decisions are conflicting on the question whether in the absence of specific directions payments on account can be applied to the earliest charges.[40]

The new promise, acknowledgment or part payment must be made by the debtor or some one authorized by him;[41] therefore, payment by one obligor does not toll the statute as to the co-obligor if made without the authority or assent of the latter.[42]

40. Where there is a claim consisting of several separate causes of action a payment to "charge on my account," in absence of specific directions cannot be applied on claims barred. Shafer v. Pratt, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 447. In case of accounts in the absence of specific directions it will be presumed that the debtor intended payments made to be applied to the earliest transactions. Sleet v. Sleet, 109 La. 302. In the absence of specific directions payments on running accounts may be applied in extinguishing the earlier items. Marion Water Co. v. Marion [Iowa] 96 N. W. 883. The entry of money collected by an attorney as credited on an account without authority will not suspend the operation of the statute as to portions previously barred. In re Sawyer's Estate, 88 Minn. 218.

41. A written promise by the agent of the debtor is insufficient. Gen. St. p. 1976, § 10, requires an acknowledgment to be in writing by the party charged. De Raismes v. De Raismes [N. J. Law] 56 Atl. 170. An indorsement on the obligation to suspend the bar must be in the debtor's handwriting or shown to have been made with his privity. In re Salisbury's Estate, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 274. Indorsements on the obligation not in the handwriting of the debtor or shown to have been made with his authority are not evidence of an acknowledgment. Civ. Code art. 2278 applied where the widow had unconditionally accepted the community and the action was to enforce against her the note of the deceased husband. Weil v. Jacob's Estate [La.] 35 So. 599. Admissibility of evidence to show endorsements of payments by agent were authorized. Bond v. Wilson, 131 N. C. 505. An indorsement not written by the payor whether made before or after the statute has run is admissible in evidence. McDowell v. McDowell's Estate [Vt.] 56 Atl. 98. Indorsements on notes held to have been made with assent of the maker and to prevent the running of the statute. Fletcher v. Brainerd [Vt.] 55 Atl. 608. Evidence of indorsements on notes held admissible. Ward v. Hoag, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 510. The arbitrary indorsement of a credit of which the defendant had no knowledge or did not assent thereto will not suspend the statute. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Atchison Grain Co. [Kan.] 70 Pac. 933. The partial payment must be made by some authorized person. Cone v. Hyatt, 132 N. C. 810. A credit to an account of a third person not shown to have been authorized by the creditor or to have been acquiesced in by him will not suspend the statute. Kirkpatrick v. Goldsmith, 81 App. Div. [N. Y.]

Municipal officers in the absence of express authorization cannot revive a barred claim,[43] nor can an assignee for the benefit of creditors,[44] and in states where the statute is an absolute bar, the schedule of a barred claim by the bankrupt will not make it provable.[45] In New York[46] and New Jersey, the representative of a deceased debtor may remove the bar by a new promise,[47] but not in Georgia[48] or West Virginia.[49]

Agreements extending time for payment of the debt extends the statute as to the obligation and mortgage security.[50]

§ 7. Operation and effect of bar. A. In general.—A claim barred is not available as a set-off.[51] The statutes may be pleaded against a part of the cause of action.[52] If the obligation is barred, interest accruing thereon is also barred.[53] If the deed of trust for the benefit of creditors gave the trustee discretionary power as to time of sale, the power may be exercised, though the debts are barred.[54] That the action for damages for flooding land is barred will affect the right to abate the nuisance.[55] That an action on the guaranty of payment of the mortgage note by the assignor mortgagee was barred will not affect the assignees' lien on the insurance under covenant to insure.[56] Where the right to foreclose a deed absolute on its face is barred, the right to redeem is also barred.[57] Though the remedy by foreclosure is barred, the mortgagee may proceed by ejectment.[58]

(§ 7) B. Bar of debt as affecting security.—The surety's liability[59] for contribution is not affected because action against the principal is barred.[60] If the debt is barred, the mortgage security is also barred,[61] though this rule does not prevail in Connecticut,[62] Nebraska,[63] North Carolina,[64] South Dakota,[65] and North

Dakota.[66] And in Oregon, while the mortgage can be foreclosed, a personal judgment cannot be entered against the mortgagor.[67] That the debt is barred will not affect the right to execute the power of sale in the mortgage security.[68] The pledgee in possession may enforce the pledge, though the debt is barred.[69]

(§ 7) C. Against whom available.—State statutes do not operate against claims by the United States,[70] nor against claims by the state,[71] nor against lands owned by the state,[72] or held by municipal corporations.[73] In the discharge of a public duty, the statute will not run against municipal corporations.[74]

(§ 7) D. To whom available.—Generally, the defense is personal,[75] yet in bankruptcy any creditor of the debtor may interpose the defense,[76] or a cestui,[77] or an heir liable for the debts of the ancestor,[78] or which would, if enforced, affect the realty descended, may plead the statute against such debts.[79] The purchaser of the equity may plead the statute against the mortgage,[80] and a subsequent lienor can plead the statute against a prior lien,[81] as may his assignee against an action to set aside a discharge of a senior mortgage.[82] The grantee assuming a mortgage debt may plead the statute as to it.[83] It is the duty of the officers of a municipal corporation to plead the statute when it can.[84] A foreign corporation may plead the statute provided it had, all the time the statute ran, an agent within the state.[85]

§ 8. Pleading and evidence.—To be available, the defense must be pleaded by answer,[86] though it may be raised by demurrer when it is apparent on the face of the pleading that the action is barred,[87] and where it fails to aver any suspension of the statute;[88] but the defense cannot be raised by motion to strike out the pleading.[89] There is an exception, however, in favor of the representative of the deceased debtor.[90]

It is within the court's discretion to allow an amendment setting up the defense.[91]

The facts constituting the bar must be set out in the plea,[92] and the statute must be specifically pleaded[93] by setting up the section relied on,[94] though the language of the statute need not be followed, but the gist of it must be averred.[95] If the defendant pleads the fact, he need not plead the conclusion that therefore the action was barred.[96]

As against a defense, the statute may be pleaded by a reply.[97]

Any exception from the operation of the statute, as coverture,[98] or a new promise, to be available, must be pleaded.[99] The plaintiff need not declare the new promise, but may so reply to the defense of the statute,[1] and matter showing that defendant was estopped to set up the defense is proper by way of reply.[2]

While the defendant has the burden of proving the defense,[3] yet if the plaintiff's testimony shows that the action is barred, the defendant need not introduce any evidence.[4] The plaintiff has the burden of showing facts which will exempt his claim from the bar.[5]

LIS PENDENS.

General rule.—As a general rule, lis pendens is in law notice of any fact averred in the pleadings pertinent to the matter in issue or the relief sought, and of the contents of exhibits filed and made a part of the pleadings.[6] It is immaterial whether the person acquiring an interest knew of the suit.[7] But a purchaser is only bound to take notice of an action pending at the time of his purchase,[8] and the rule has no application to a third person whose interest existed before the suit was commenced.[9]

The party asserting lis pendens must prosecute his suit with reasonable diligence.[10]

The purpose of the rule is to prevent third persons, during the pendency of litigation, from acquiring interests in the property which would preclude the court from granting the relief sought.[11] But while no advantage can be acquired by a transfer pendente lite, it is not void for that reason alone.[12]

Essential elements.—It is essential to the rule of lis pendens that the property be of a character subject to the rule, that the court has jurisdiction at the time of the transfer both of the property and the person from whom it is acquired, and that the property be sufficiently described in the pleadings to put the public on notice.[13] The purchaser must acquire title to property then in litigation,[14] and from a party to the suit.[15]

In such case defendant need not specially plead the statute. Good v. Ehrlich [Kan.] 72 Pac. 545. Since under Pub. St. 1891, c. 191, § 10, it is a condition precedent to right to sue to recover for wrongful death that the action be brought within the time limited. The plaintiff has the burden of proving that the action was brought within the statutory time. Poff v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. [N. H.] 55 Atl. 891.

14. Where a judgment is obtained against a principal and his sureties and suit is brought by the plaintiff's lien creditors against the property of the sureties, but not against that of the principal, one acquiring the principal's property during such suit is not a purchaser pendente lite. Woods v. Douglass, 52 W. Va. 517.

15. Code Civ. Proc. Neb. § 85, providing that "no interest can be acquired by third

Commencement of action.—The time of commencing an action so as to make lis pendens effectual is the time of serving the summons on the defendant,[16] or entry in the cause of his voluntary appearance,[17] or when a petition is filed.[18]

Property within the rule.—There are authorities which deny the application of the doctrine of lis pendens to personal property, but the weight of authority is that it applies to all personal property except negotiable paper purchased before due, and articles of ordinary commerce sold in the usual way.[19]

Statutory lis pendens.—In some states, statutes regulate the commencement of lis pendens in certain cases, as by requiring the filing of a notice of the pendency of the action,[20] or of a petition,[21] and providing that the lis pendens shall be constructive notice from the time of filing.[22] But a failure to comply with such statutes does not affect a judgment rendered as notice to persons subsequently dealing with the property.[23]

The statutory notice applies only to the actions named in the statute.[24]

The function of statutory lis pendens is to give notice to all the world of the pendency of an action.[25] And lis pendens filed before the commencement of a proper action has no effect as notice until the action is actually pending.[26]

Continuity of lis pendens.—Lis pendens continues until the litigation is finally adjudicated[27] and during the term at which judgment is rendered.[28]

persons in the subject-matter thereof as against the plaintiff's title" does not apply to independent rights or interests not acquired from or through a party to the suit. Merrill v. Wright [Neb.] 91 N. W. 697.

16. The action must be commenced by service of summons upon the defendant as prescribed by statute under Gen. St. Minn. § 5866. Spencer Co. v. Koell [Minn.] 97 N. W. 974. But the court in this case did not wish to be understood as intimating in case of service upon a nonresident by publication the action is not commenced, within the meaning of the above statute until the full period for publication has expired. 19. Powell v. Nat. Bank of Commerce [Colo. App.] 74 Pac. 536. While the doctrine of lis pendens has been relaxed in Colorado by Mills' Ann. Code, § 36, as to personal property it remains as at common law. Id. It applies to some kinds of personal property under certain actions concerning the same. Davis v. Miller Signal Co., 105 Ill. App. 657. It does not apply to shares of stock sold during the pendency of a suit concerning the same (Id.), or assigned by the defendant (American Press Ass'n v. Brantingham, 75 App. Div. [N. Y.] 435).

20. At the time of filing the complaint [Code N. C. 1883, § 229]. Morgan v. Bostic, 132 N. C. 743. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 5866, providing for the filing of such notice in any action in which the title to, or lien upon, or interest in any land is involved. Joslyn v. Schwend, 89 Minn. 71. Where such notice is filed a purchaser after judgment takes the chances incident to an appeal, since an appeal is not a new action. Farmers' Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Ind. App. 520. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4887, requiring lis pendens to be filed in order to give notice of the suit, a judgment foreclosing a mortgage is effective against a subsequent purchaser, although a lis pendens is not filed. the court,[29] and can be discharged only in the manner prescribed by the statute,[30] unless it is filed in an action not named in the statute, or is an insufficient notice of a proper action,[31] or unless such discretion and control is given to the court by statute.[32]

Removal of lis pendens as cloud on title.—By statutes in certain states, an action may be maintained by one not a party to the original suit to set aside lis pendens as a cloud on his title, even though the suit in which it is filed has not been terminated.[33]

LOTTERIES.[34]

What constitutes.—To constitute a lottery, there must be a prize offered, and the payment of a consideration for a chance to obtain it.[35] The consideration need not be great; it may be in money or any other thing of value,[36] as may also the prize.[37] In some states, a raffle as distinguishable from a lottery is not punishable.[38] All persons assisting in conducting a lottery are liable as principals.[39]

29. A statutory lis pendens filed in a proper action, cannot be canceled by order of court, so long as the action is pending and undetermined. Joslyn v. Schwend, 89 Minn. 71.

32. Upon application of any person aggrieved, at any time after the action is settled, discontinued or abated, under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4487, in actions for title to real estate. King v. Branscheid, 32 Wash. 634, 73 Pac. 668.

33. Under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 5521, providing that any person in possession of real property may maintain a civil action against any person claiming an interest in said property, or any part thereof, or any right thereto, adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such claim. King v. Branscheid, 32 Wash. 634, 73 Pac. 668. His remedy under this statute is cumulative to the remedy under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4487, giving the court power, in actions for title to real estate where lis pendens is filed, at its discretion to order the lis pendens canceled of record at any time after the action is settled, discontinued or abated, on application of a person aggrieved. Schemes not lotteries: The giving of trading stamps [within Crim. Code Ala. § 4808]. State v. Shugart [Ala.] 35 So. 28. The distribution of lots of land among subscribers thereto, by a plan agreed upon between the subscribers themselves, as by drawing the number of a lot from one box and the name of a subscriber from another box. McCleary v. Chipman [Ind. App.] 68 N. E. 320. A contract to furnish piano to be given to the person having secured the greatest number of votes at the close of a contest, there being no element of chance in the award of the piano. Quatsoe v. Eggleston, 42 Or. 315, 71 Pac. 66. If a number of persons are entitled to a certain sum in any event though the sum to all may not be the same, it is legal, though they cannot all be paid at the same time, and which shall be paid at a certain time is determined by lot. It is a lottery only where the sum to be paid is determined wholly or partially by chance. Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599.

38. A raffle is not a lottery so as to subject the owner of the property to an indictment for the latter offense. The owner of a horse and buggy selling all the tickets for it is not indictable for conducting a lottery where the purchasers of the tickets shake dice among themselves to see who is to take the property. Risien v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 974. The difference between a lottery and raffle is that in a lottery a prize is awarded to a winner only, whereas in a raffle the prize is distributed to all the pur-

In some states, lotteries are prohibited by constitutional provisions,[40] and are made crimes by statutory provision.[41] Some statutes prohibit the giving of premiums or gifts as inducements to purchasers.[42] The carriage of lottery tickets from one state to another may be prohibited by an act of congress under its power to regulate interstate commerce.[43] Acts of congress giving the postmaster general certain powers as to mail matter in reference to lotteries are not unconstitutional as invading personal rights.[44]

Indictment.—An indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient;[45] but one not charging all the elements of the crime is not.[46] It must not be too general.[47]

Evidence.—The admissibility[48] and sufficiency[49] of evidence in particular cases is discussed in the footnote.

St. 1901, p. 3178)]. Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 121 Fed. 927.

45. An indictment following the words of the statute, and setting forth further facts constituting a lottery. State v. Wilkerson, 170 Mo. 184. Under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2219, providing a punishment for unlawfully aiding and assisting in making or establishing a policy as a business in the state.

46. Charging the accused of unlawfully exposing property to be by lot and chance disposed of and distributed to and among the purchasers of tickets therein does not charge him of lottery. Risien v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 71 S. W. 974.

47. As a count charging the accused "with being concerned in interest in lottery policy writing generally." State v. Walls [Del.] 56 Atl. 111.

48. A license issued by a probate judge to maintain a lottery is inadmissible as evidence in a prosecution for maintaining a lottery, where the legislature is unauthorized to license a lottery. Johnson v. State, 137 Ala. 101.

49. Circumstantial evidence together with admissions of the accused will be sufficient to convict one of the statutory offense of aiding and assisting in making and establishing a policy, under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2219. State v. Wilkerson, 170 Mo. 184. Evidence showing that the accused furnished, for a consideration, a policy slip with particular numbers thereon, which upon the happening of a contingency in the nature of a lottery would entitle the holder to receive money is sufficient to convict him of lottery policy writing independent of any express promise to pay. State v. Walls [Del.] 56 Atl. 111. Proof that one kept or maintained a lottery is sufficient to convict under an indictment for keeping, maintaining and operating the same. Proof of a drawing is not necessary. Thomas v. State, 118 Ga. 774. Although it is necessary for the state to prove, in an indictment for lottery policy writing that the policy slips contained certain particular numbers, it is unnecessary to prove what those numbers were. State v. Walls [Del.] 56 Atl. 111.

50. R. C. Del. 1852, amended 1893, p. 924, c. 127, §§ 8, 9, prescribing it as maliciously, with or without lying in wait, depriving a

The allegation in an indictment for statutory maiming should be in the language of the statute;[53] though an allegation setting forth the acts constituting the offense sufficiently describes it.[54] But a bad allegation may be regarded as surplusage, so as to make the remainder of the indictment or information charging mayhem good.[55]

In a prosecution for mayhem, the court cannot charge an included offense of which a conviction cannot be had under the testimony;[56] nor should the instruction be broader than the sufficient allegations of the indictment.[57]

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

The crime of malicious mischief is regulated by statute, and generally consists of the malicious or willful injury to or destruction of property.[58] General malice is sufficient.[59] An indictment charging the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient.[60] person of his genital organs, or putting out an eye, etc. State v. Holmes [Del.] 55 Atl. 343. Under such statute the offense is sufficiently charged although not alleged to have been committed either with or without lying in wait. Under Sess. Laws Colo. 1895, p. 156, c. 69, mayhem consists in unlawfully depriving a human being of a member of his or her body, or disfiguring or rendering it useless, etc., provided that no person shall be found guilty of mayhem, where the fact occurred during a fight had by consent, nor unless it appear that the person accused shall have been the assailant, or that the party maimed had in good faith endeavored to decline further combat. Carpenter v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1072. R. S. Mo. 1899, § 1846, provides that every person who shall, on purpose and of malice aforethought, put out an eye, or slit, cut, or bite off the nose or lip of another, with intent to kill, maim, or disfigure such person, shall be adjudged guilty of mayhem. State v. Kyle [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1014.

51. Making it a felony if accomplished by lying in wait (R. C. Del. 1852, amended 1893, p. 924, c. 127, § 8) or a misdemeanor if without lying in wait (§ 9). State v. Holmes [Del.] 55 Atl. 343. Making it a high misdemeanor and fixing the punishment where the fact shall occur in actual fight, the party accused being thereof duly convicted [Sess. Laws Colo. 1895, p. 156, c. 69]. Carpenter v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1072.

52. Under Sess. Laws Colo. 1895, p. 156, c. 69. Carpenter v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1072.

53. An allegation charging that defendant did slit the eye, etc., of another is bad under a statute providing punishment for putting out an eye, etc. State v. Kyle [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1014.

54. Under R. C. Del. 1852, amended 1893, p. 924, c. 127, § 9, providing that one shall be guilty of a misdemeanor if he maliciously maims another an allegation that the defendant maliciously threw a certain acid into the eyes of another by reason of which they were destroyed is sufficient. State v. Holmes [Del.] 55 Atl. 343.

55. State v. Kyle [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1014.

56. Where the issue was whether the defendant had unlawfully deprived the prosecuting witness of an ear, and it was conceded that the latter had lost an ear during an encounter with the defendant, assault and battery cannot be charged. Carpenter v. People [Colo.] 72 Pac. 1072.

57. An instruction that if defendant cut the nose and "put out the eye," etc., under an indictment alleging that the defendant slit the eye and nose of another. State v. Kyle [Mo.] 76 S. W. 1014.

58. Hiding pieces of iron belonging to a threshing machine is malicious destruction of property under R. S. Mo. 1899, § 1959, for which an information will lie. State v. McLain, 92 Mo. App. 456. Shooting a dog. Atchison v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 998. But the act of pulling down or breaking the inclosures of another under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 1784 is a trespass and not malicious mischief. State v. Culbreath [Ark.] 71 S. W. 254. A malicious prosecution for burning song books is unwarranted under Penal Code Tex. 1895, § 791, as such offense is provided for in § 777, and § 791 applies only to injuries not denounced by other provisions of the Code. Stanton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 771. Wantonly running into a horse and injuring it is "malicious trespass on property for which no other penalty is provided" though defendant was also guilty of a punishable violation of the law of the road. Porter v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 218. It is not necessary to the offense of injuring a public jail (Penal Code, § 606) that defendant should be confined therein; though such fact is admissible to show motive. People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 72 Pac. 899.

59. State v. Boles [Kan.] 74 Pac. 630. The offense of malicious injury to property defined in Code, § 1022, requires specific malice and general recklessness is insufficient. Porter v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 218.

60. Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 1784, and omitting the words "contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided" does not vitiate the indictment. State v. Culbreath [Ark.] 71 S. W. 254. Injury to public jail under Pen. Code, § 606. People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 72 Pac. 899.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

§ 1. Nature and elements of the wrong.—The necessary elements of an action for malicious prosecution have been defined as (1) a prosecution commenced against the plaintiff; (2) instituted or instigated by the defendant; (3) without probable cause; (4) maliciously; (5) legally and finally terminated in the plaintiff's favor.[62] No action lies for malicious prosecution of a civil suit unless accompanied by arrest of the person or seizure of property.[64] Otherwise the elements are the same as in an action for malicious criminal prosecution.[65]

§ 2. The prosecution.—If the defendant voluntarily made the complaint on which the warrant was issued and was otherwise active in the criminal proceedings, he is the prosecutor.[66] One who directs officers to make an arrest is liable therefor.[67] A principal may be liable for his agent's prosecution.[68] A partner is not liable for a malicious prosecution instituted by his co-partner.[69]

§ 3. Want of probable cause.—Probable cause for prosecution for crime is the existence of a state of facts sufficient to cause an ordinarily careful and prudent man to believe the accused guilty,[70] or to cause him to entertain an honest suspicion of guilt.[71] Circumstances of mental perturbation likely to confuse the judgment or disarm the caution of an ordinarily prudent man may be consid-

61. But it is no defense to shooting a dog that he did it in self defense where the dog was some distance from him inside the owner's fence (Atchison v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 998); nor is evidence of the dog's viciousness admissible where it is not shown that the defendant was in any danger from him; nor evidence that others had threatened to shoot the dog, where there was no evidence tending to connect anyone else with the shooting (Id.). See, also, title Animals, 1, pp. 81, 84.

62. In a prosecution for maliciously shooting a dog, after having pleaded an alibi, the defendant cannot set up either actual or apparent danger from the dog or his vicious habits. Atchison v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 72 S. W. 998.

If defendant was present counseling and advising the prosecution he is liable though he did not sign the complaint. Eggett v. Allen [Wis.] 96 N. W. 803. Where the plaintiff merely proved that defendant had given his name to the grand jury in a list of physicians alleged to be practicing medicine illegally but there was no evidence of any indictment or prosecution set in motion by the defendant, a nonsuit was properly granted. Bryan v. Baird, 117 Ga. 177. Evidence that defendant was prosecutor held insufficient. Lehman v. Oschmann, 85 N. Y. Supp. 864.

ered.[72] The actual guilt or innocence of the accused is immaterial.[73] Credible information from reliable sources is sufficient,[74] and neglect to make reasonable inquiry charges the prosecutor with notice of facts that would have been disclosed;[75] but with this exception only facts known to the prosecutor at the time he instituted proceedings are to be considered.[76] A finding for the prosecutor in the original action is conclusive that there was probable cause,[77] unless obtained by undue means;[78] but want of probable cause is not necessarily to be inferred from a finding for the defendant.[79] It is prima facie evidence however.[80] Holding for trial by an examining magistrate is not conclusive evidence of want of probable cause.[81] Discharge by an examining magistrate is at least to be considered as bearing on want of probable cause.[82] Mere failure of prosecution, however, does not establish want of probable cause.[83] Waiver of preliminary examination is only prima facie evidence of probable cause.[84]

Admissibility of evidence as to want of probable cause is treated in the note.[85]

MANDAMUS.

§ 1. Nature and office of remedy in general. Purpose of writ.—Mandamus lies to compel the performance of a duty imposed by law upon the person to whom, or the tribunal to which, it is directed.[18] Its only purpose is to compel the exercise of a power already possessed or the performance of a duty already existing, and no new power or duty can be created thereby.[19]

The issuance of the writ is discretionary with the court to which the application is made,[20] and it will not be issued except in the furtherance of justice and hence will be refused where it is apparent that the relator is animated entirely by the desire to gratify a spite against the respondent,[21] or that the acts, the performance of which is sought to be enforced, will be useless,[22] or beyond the power of the respondent to perform,[23] or will be a violation of a law,[24] or will subject the respondent to an action for damages.[25]

Only purely ministerial duties are enforceable by mandamus. The writ issues only to compel action, and never to control judgment or discretion,[26] except in case of gross abuse.[27] The test is not whether the person to whom the writ is directed is a ministerial or judicial officer, but whether the act is purely ministerial or involves the exercise of judgment or discretion.[28]

The remedy by mandamus rests upon legal duties on the part of the respondent, and legal rights on the part of the relator, and hence cannot rest solely upon equities existing between the parties.[29] The respondent's duty to perform the act demanded by the relator must be clear and imperative,[30] and the relator's right to demand the performance must be free from doubt.[31] The writ will not issue where the relator's right depends upon a debatable question of law,[32] or upon conflicting and uncertain facts;[33] but the mere fact that the relator's right is not disputed by the respondent is insufficient to sustain the writ.[34]

Conditions precedent.—From the rule just stated, that the respondent's duty must be clear and positive and the relator's right must be free from doubt, it follows that where anything remains to be done as a condition precedent to the positiveness of the respondent's duty, or to the accrual of the relator's right, mandamus will not lie.[35] Applying this rule, it has been held that a previous demand upon the

respondent for performance is a condition precedent,[36] especially where the duty sought to be enforced affects the relator in a private capacity, and does not affect the public at large.[37] It has even been held that mandamus is the relator's last resort, and will not issue until all other remedies have failed.[38] On the other hand, it has been held that where the duty is positively and unconditionally imposed by law, no previous demand is necessary.[39] It has also been held that a previous application to a court to compel one of its ministerial officers to perform a duty positively imposed by law is not a condition precedent to the right to maintain mandamus to compel performance.[40]

Acquiescence, laches and limitations.—Where the respondent's duty and the relator's right have once co-existed, but the relator has, by his acquiescence, lost his right to demand performance by the respondent, mandamus will not lie.[41] The relator may likewise lose his right by unexcused delay,[42] or by the intervention of the statute of limitations.[43]

Other adequate remedy.—Mandamus never lies where there is any other adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.[44] The mere fact, however, that there

Mandamus to compel reinstatement of an appeal in the court of appeals from a judgment against a city, is not barred by laches where the order of dismissal is made only a few days before the adjournment of a term of the supreme court, and the relator, after having tried in vain to procure a reinstatement in the circuit court, applies for mandamus at the next term of the supreme court, though the plaintiff in the original action has, in the meantime, applied to the trial court for mandamus to compel payment of his judgment, such application being still pending when the application for the writ from the supreme court is made, and no rights of third parties having intervened. Waiver: Intervention and defending does not constitute a waiver on the part of the intervener of the right to insist that the relator has another adequate remedy. People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 450.

Remedy in equity: Where a specific remedy in equity is provided by statute for the is another remedy is not sufficient to preclude the remedy by mandamus, where such other remedy is inadequate to meet the peculiar exigencies of the case,[45] nor will the mere fact that there is no other remedy authorize the issuance of the writ, where the case is not otherwise a proper one for mandamus.[46]

§ 2. Duties and rights enforceable by mandamus. A. Judicial procedure and process. Duties relating to jurisdiction.—Where a court refuses to take jurisdiction of a cause of which it has jurisdiction, mandamus lies to compel it to take jurisdiction;[47] likewise where an appellate court wrongfully dismisses an appeal on jurisdictional grounds, mandamus lies to compel a reinstatement.[48] Mandamus also lies to compel the dismissal of an appeal, where the appellate court has no jurisdiction.[49] It lies to compel the vacation of orders in excess of jurisdiction,[50] except where there is another adequate remedy.[51]

Ministerial duties.—Where it is the positive duty of a court, either by virtue of a statute or of an order from a superior court, to do a specific act, mandamus lies to compel performance of such act.[52]

Matters involving judgment or discretion.—Mandamus does not lie to compel a court to decide any question in any particular way, where it has power to make any decision at all,[53] or to review such decision when made,[54] even though there be no other way of reviewing such decision.[55] Nor will mandamus lie in any case where the court or judge has any discretion as to whether the act demanded shall or shall not be done.[56]

Where there are other remedies.—Where an appeal lies from the act or decision of a court or judge, it is usually held to be an adequate remedy, precluding the right to mandamus.[57] Likewise, where it appears that relator cannot be injured by waiting for the trial of the case wherein the order complained of was made, mandamus will not lie to compel the vacation of the order.[58] Where, however, the remedy by appeal is inadequate, mandamus will lie.[59]

(§ 2) B. Administrative and legislative functions of public officers. In general.—Mandamus lies to compel administrative officers to perform duties specifically and positively imposed upon them by law,[60] but not to compel the per-

Peebles, 100 Va. 585. Change of venue on account of judge having counsel for one of the parties, see Comp. Laws Nev. § 2545. Gamble v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. [Nev.] 74 Pac. 530. Discretion of judge, under Code Proc. La. art. 1016, relating to application by an undercurator to commence action for removal of the curator, is confined to the sufficiency of the ground set forth in the application, and where there is no doubt as to the sufficiency of such grounds, the judge's action upon such an application may be controlled by mandamus. State v. St. Paul, 110 La. 995. Jury trial in action at law. State v. Hart, 26 Utah, 229, 72 Pac. 938. Compliance with mandate of appellate court on reversal. State v. Thompson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 47; State v. Dist. Ct. [Minn.] 97 N. W. 581. Mandamus lies to compel the allowance of an appeal. Williams v. Cleaveland [Conn.] 56 Atl. 850.

Condition precedent: Under Cuttinger's Comp. Laws Nev., providing that no judge shall try a case in which he has been counsel for one of the parties, a previous motion for a change of venue on account of the statutory disability of the judge, is not a condition precedent to the right to maintain mandamus to compel such change. Gamble v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. [Nev.] 74 Pac. 530. A judge may be compelled to commit a witness for refusal to give deposition. Crocker v. Conrey, 140 Cal. 213, 73 Pac. 1006.

When the circuit court enjoins the county court from entering judgment upon an order reversing a judgment of the county court which was affirmed by the circuit court, the ground of such injunction being matter arising or discovered since the reversal and remand by the supreme court, mandamus does not lie to compel the county court to enter such judgment. See, also, supra, § 1.

Where the law gives an officer power to do a certain act for the benefit of the public or of individuals, it is the officer's duty to do the act specified whenever the conditions and exigencies contemplated by the law as calling for the performance of such act arise, and in such case performance may be enforced by mandamus. U. S. v. Saunders [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 124.

The fact that relator does not need performance of the act demanded does not bar his right to mandamus. State v. Ledwidge, 27 Mont. 197, 70 Pac. 511.

Mandamus not barred by private contract: Where a court stenographer employed an assistant to assist him in transcribing his notes taken in a case in which the state was a party, and promised such assistant not to deliver the transcript to the attorney general without receiving payment, it was held that, the attorney general being entitled by statute to receive the transcript without payment, the stenographer's private agreement was no defense in mandamus to compel him to furnish the attorney general with the transcript. State v. Ledwidge, 27 Mont. 197, 70 Pac. 511. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel an officer to report on fees received as required by law. Finley v. Ter. [Okl.] 73 Pac. 273.

County supervisors empowered to repair county bridges (Code Iowa, § 422) having decided that a bridge did not need repair, mandamus did not lie. Leonard v. Wakeman, 120 Iowa, 140. Board of county commissioners cannot be compelled to approve or reject claims. State v. Morris [S. C.] 45 S. E. 178. Even where there has been an abuse of discretion. In re Croker, 78 App. Div. [N. Incomplete performance is equivalent to no performance, and officers cannot shield themselves behind their discretion in a matter unless they have really exercised such discretion. People v. Mole, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 335, holding that when town auditors rejected a claim, without passing upon it, because the claimant refused to furnish any evidence other than the affidavit provided for by Laws N. Y. 1890, p. 1235, c. 569, § 167, such rejection amounted to a refusal to audit. People v. Board of Sup'rs, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 152, holding that where county supervisors rejected a sheriff's bill on the ground that it was not chargeable to the county, mandamus would lie to compel the audit of such bill, it being by law chargeable to the county. See, also, Holt v. People, 102 Ill. App. 276. Removal of a militia colonel is not a ministerial act. State v. Jelks [Ala.] 35 So. 60.

62. Laws N. Y. 1897, p. 188, c. 378, § 537, providing that when a member of the street cleaning force is dismissed by the commissioner, he may have "certiorari or other appropriate remedy for the purpose of reviewing the action of the commissioner," does not include mandamus. People v. Woodbury, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 593.

63. Duty of oyster inspector, under Code Va. § 2153, to remove stakes from natural oyster beds, the limits of which are defined by Act Feb. 29, 1892; Acts 1893-94, p. 605, § 2. Lewis v. 64. Land office commissioner not authorized to determine whether a previous purchaser of land was an infant when he purchased, and hence it was not such officer's duty to sell to a subsequent applicant. Boozer v. Terrell, 96 Tex. 635.

65. County canvassing board not authorized to determine constitutionality of law under which votes were cast and returned. Sharpless v. Buckles, 65 Kan. 838, 70 Pac. 886.

66. County treasurer paid a voidable school warrant, though he had notice from

De facto officers are amenable to mandamus proceedings.[68]

Court officers may be compelled by mandamus to perform the duties imposed upon them by law.[69]

Duties relating to use and enjoyment of public offices.—Mandamus lies to compel admission to the use and enjoyment of a public office to which the relator has been duly elected or appointed;[70] but not where the right to the office is contested by another claimant, and the respective rights of the parties depend upon a debatable question of law.[71] Where an officer is illegally discharged, mandamus lies to compel his reinstatement, provided his right to the office be clear.[72] It also the trustees not to pay it. Mandamus would not issue to compel him to refund. State v. Bowman, 66 S. C. 140. Where tax was levied and paid to county treasurer, to be applied by him to the payment of a judgment, and he applied it to some other purpose, it was held that mandamus would lie to compel another levy. People v. Board of Sup'rs, 173 N. Y. 297.

67. N. W. Warehouse Co. v. Or. R. & Nav. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388. Mandamus will compel the performance of an official act where before the time when it is required the officer has announced his intention not to perform it. State v. Kineval [Neb.] 97 N. W. 798.

68. Stenographer employed by one litigant compelled to furnish other party copy of proceedings. Mockett v. State [Neb.] 97 N. W. 588.

69. Under Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 5555, the supreme court and the superior court have concurrent jurisdiction to compel, by mandamus, the performance of any duty of the officers of the superior court which may be necessary to perfect a bill of exceptions (Cooper v. Nisbet, 118 Ga. 872); holding that where the bill of exceptions has reached the office of the clerk of the supreme court, the application for mandamus may be made to the supreme court, or an application may be made to such court to have the bill sent back to the superior court for correction there, and that when the defect in the bill cannot be remedied in the supreme court, the application for mandamus in the supreme court will be dismissed, and the bill of exceptions sent back to the superior court. Mandamus lies to compel the clerk of court to deliver a transcript. State v. Wells [La.] 35 So. 641.

70. Mandamus to compel civil service commissioners to certify relator's promotion, and to compel police commissioner to certify his name on pay-roll. People v. Ogden, 41 Misc. [N. Y.] 246. Admission as member of board of county supervisors. State v. Kersten [Wis.] 95 N. W. 120. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1085. Maxwell v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 139 Cal. 229, 72 Pac. 996.

Civil service classifications involve quasi-judicial functions, and hence are not controllable by mandamus. People v. Collier, 175 N. Y. 196.

A discretionary power of appointment is not controllable by mandamus. People v. Swanstrom, 79 App. Div. [N. Y.] 94, construing City Charter of Greater New York, § 383; Hogan v. Collins, 183 Mass. 43. Certification of eligible list by civil service commission not enforceable until appointing officer has asked for such list, see New York City Charter, § 1543; Laws 1901, c. 466. Morrison v. Cantor, 173 N. Y. 646.

Who are officers: Secretary of board of fire commissioners under Freeholders charter of city and county of San Francisco, held not the clerk provided for by St. Cal. 1877-78, p. 685, c. 446, and hence could not maintain mandamus for admission to office of clerk. Maxwell v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 139 Cal. 229, 72 Pac. 996. Whether a newly created position is similar to an abolished one so as to entitle the previous incumbent to reappointment rests in the judgment of the civil service commissioners. People v. Cantor, 89 App. Div. [N. Y.] 50.

71. State v. Tillyer [N. J. Law] 55 Atl. 690.

72. Marshall v. Board of Managers, 103 Ill. App. 65; People v. Scannell, 172 N. Y. 316. Detective sergeant removed under manifestly incorrect interpretation of statutes. Sugden v. Partridge, 174 N. Y. 87. Member of board of school commissioners removed without authority by his associates. Akerman v. Board of School Com'rs, 118 Ga. 334. But see People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 450, expressly leaving undecided the question of the propriety of mandamus to compel reinstatement.

When the title to the office is in dispute and is not clear, mandamus to reinstate will not lie. People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 450.

The question in issue on mandamus to reinstate in office is not the motives of the officer or authority causing the discharge, but his power to do the act complained of. In re Croker, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 184.

Reinstatement before expiration of leave of absence, such leave having been granted upon relator's voluntary application, was refused by fire commissioner, and it was held that mandamus did not lie to compel reinstatement. In re Croker, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 184.

What amounts to a discharge. Laying off a bridge tender because his bridge has been taken down, and there is no place for him to fill, without removing other employees, is not a discharge within Laws N. Y. 1899, c. 370, § 21, and the municipal civil service law. People v. Lindenthal, 173 N. Y. 524.

When the moving authority has judicial discretion in the matter of removals for cause, mandamus does not lie to control such discretion, or to review acts done in the exercise thereof. Laws N. Y. 1897, p. 188, c. 378, § 537, providing that where a member of the street cleaning force is dismissed by the commissioner, he may have "certiorari or other appropriate remedy for the purpose of reviewing the action of the commissioner" does not include mandamus. People v. Woodbury, 88 App. Div. [N. Y.] 593.

lies to compel retirement upon a proper basis.[73] Where an officer's salary is clearly and definitely fixed by law, mandamus lies to enforce the payment thereof.[74]

Duties relating to allowance and payment of claims against municipalities.— Mandamus lies to compel a county board to allow a claim against the county arising under a statute,[75] but not to approve or reject claims which they are required to credit.[76] It lies to compel the treasurer of a school district to register and pay orders properly drawn upon him.[77] It likewise lies to compel town or county authorities to audit claims and accounts.[78] It lies also to enforce a judgment against a municipality,[79] either by compelling the proper officers to issue a warrant for the amount of the judgment,[80] or by compelling the levy and collection of a tax to be applied thereto.[81]

73. Failure to act upon an application for retirement in a certain grade is tantamount to a refusal to act, and action may be compelled by mandamus. Fay v. Partridge, 78 App. Div. [N. Y.] 204.

74. School superintendent compelled to draw requisition for relator's salary as school teacher. Williams v. Bagnelle, 138 Cal. 699, 72 Pac. 408. County clerk compelled to sign orders directed to be issued by county board for probate register's salary. Roberts v. Erickson, 117 Wis. 324. Board of regents of state university compelled to issue certificates for salaries of university professors. Von Forel v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 648, distinguishing State v. Mortensen [Neb.] 95 N. W. 831, which held that mandamus will not lie to compel specific performance of contracts made by the state. See infra, Duties relating to public contracts.

The reason for allowing mandamus to enforce the payment of officers' salaries is that the salary is considered as a mere incident to the office, the holding of the office and the lapse of time being considered as giving the officer an absolute right to his accrued salary; but where no fiscal salary attaches to the office this reason cannot apply, and therefore mandamus will not lie in such case. Moores v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 986. See, also, Roberts v. Erickson, 117 Wis. 324; Williams v. Bagnelle [Cal.] 70 Pac. 1058.

Where an officer is suspended, and then removed from office by a competent authority, on mandamus to compel payment of his salary accruing between suspension and removal, the regularity of the removal proceedings cannot be raised. Hartwig v. Manistee [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1067.

Where the right to the salary is disputed mandamus will not lie until the dispute is settled in the ordinary course of law, provided it can be thus settled; for so long as the right to the salary is in issue, the officer has not a clear right thereto, and he also has another remedy at law. Where, however, the respondent in such a case answers on the merits the court may consider the question as to the relator's right to the salary claimed by him. Moores v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 986.

Evidence held to show relator's incumbency in office with sufficient certainty to entitle him to mandamus to compel payment of his salary. Moores v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 986.

Adequacy of other remedies: The remedy provided by Pol. Code Cal. § 1699, where school teachers' salaries are withheld, applies only where such salaries are withheld by the school trustees, and hence is not an adequate remedy which will prevent the issue of mandamus to compel a county superintendent of schools to draw a requisition for a teacher's salary. Williams v. Bagnelle, 138 Cal. 699, 72 Pac. 408. Where an action at law lies for the recovery of the salary, this is an adequate remedy, and mandamus will not issue. People v. Lindenthal, 77 App. Div. [N. Y.] 515. Where the relator has been removed from office, and his claim for back salary is disputed on the ground that he had no right to the office, his remedy is by quo warranto proceedings against his successor, provided one be appointed before the trial of the mandamus proceedings. Hartwig v. Manistee [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1067.

75. Claim of agricultural society arising under Comp. St. Neb. c. 2, § 2. State v. Coufal [Neb.] 95 N. W. 362, holding that the remedy by action was inadequate.

76. State v. Morris [S. C.] 45 S. E. 178.

77. Order drawn by director and countersigned by moderator of district. Leonard v. State [Neb.] 93 N. W. 988.

78. Duty of county commissioners of Charleston county to audit accounts of the Charleston sanitary and drainage committee. State v. Morris [S. C.] 45 S. E. 178. But not where no appropriation has been made for the payment of the claim. See Mills' Ann. Code Colo. §§ 4447-4449. Board of Trustees v. Endner [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 152.

A claim for damages to property by reason of the closing of a highway, may be enforced adequately by an action at law and hence mandamus will not lie to compel the municipal authorities to audit it. Jones v. Fonda, 85 App. Div. [N. Y.] 265.

79. The writ of mandamus to enforce the collection of judgments of the national courts against municipalities is the legal substitute for a writ of execution to enforce judgments against private parties, and the rights of their judgment creditors to their respective writs are equally inviolable. U. S. v. Saunders [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 124; Kinney v. Eastern Trust & Banking Co. [C. C. A.] 123 Fed. 297.

80. Notwithstanding the remedy by attachment provided by Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5677. Chapin v. Port Angeles, 31 Wash. 535, 72 Pac. 117.

81. Notwithstanding that a tax had already been levied and collected, and paid to the county treasurer, who had applied it to some other purpose. People v. Board of Sup'rs, 173 N. Y. 297.

No previous demand upon the officers is necessary as a condition precedent to man-

Election officers may be compelled by mandamus to perform the duties imposed upon them by law.[82] The members of the governing committee or body of a political party are officers within this rule.[83]

Duties relating to public contracts.—Mandamus does not lie to compel officers of municipal or public corporations to perform the ordinary business contracts of such corporations;[84] but it will lie to enforce compliance with the requirements of the law in regard to the awarding of public contracts.[85]

Duties relating to taxation.—Whenever it is the duty of public officers to levy a tax, mandamus lies to compel the levy.[86] A taxpayer may, by mandamus, enforce damus to compel the levy, where a statute makes it their positive duty to make such levy, or where such a demand would be useless. U. S. v. Saunders [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 124.

Construction of statutes: Statutes conferring powers and imposing duties upon municipal officers to levy taxes to pay judgments against municipalities, supersede statutes, and their limitations, conferring less extensive powers and duties upon such officers to levy taxes to pay municipal bonds, when the bonds have become merged in a final judgment. Thenceforth the statutes authorizing the levy of taxes to pay judgments become the measure of the officers' authority. Id.

82. Duty of officer to include in the notice of election the name of party entitled to be included therein. People v. Knopf, 198 Ill. 340. Duty of village officers, under Rev. St. Ill. c. 24, § 57, to "examine and canvass" returns, they having undertaken to canvass the ballots instead of the returns. Holt v. People, 102 Ill. App. 276. Duty of registrars of voters to reject illegal votes, the illegality of the votes being apparent on the face of the record, see Rev. Laws Mass. c. 11, § 267. Flanders v. Roberts, 182 Mass. 524. Duty of mayor of a town to certify returns of a town election. Bourgeois v. Fairchild, 81 Miss. 708. Duty of county clerk to place candidate's name on party ticket instead of name of another person who was not duly nominated. State v. Weston, 27 Mont. 185, 70 Pac. 519, 1134. Duty of secretary of state to enter name of candidate for office duly nominated. Rose v. Bennett [R. I.] 56 Atl. 185.

Questions considered: On mandamus to compel the secretary of state to file a certificate of nomination, the court, in passing upon the respondent's duty in the premises will not consider whether the present incumbent's term expires on a certain day, such question being disputed and doubtful. State v. Chatterton [Wyo.] 70 Pac. 466.

The court, in the exercise of its discretion will refuse to compel the secretary of state to file a certificate of nomination, where it appears that an election as to the office in question at the time designated would be unfair and would mislead the voters. Id.

83. Duty to place candidate's name on official ballot before primary election. Young v. Beckham, 24 Ky. L. R. 2135, 72 S. W. 1092. Duty of board of canvassers to issue certificate of nomination. Cannon v. Board of Canvassers, 24 R. I. 473.

The ascertainment of the fact of nomination will not be controlled by mandamus. Id.

84. Especially where the suit would be, in effect, a suit against the state. State v. Mortensen [Neb.] 95 N. W. 831.

85. Under Comp. St. Neb. c. 68, § 2, requiring public work to be let to the "lowest and best bidder," mandamus lies to compel the state printing board to let a printing contract to one who was in fact the lowest and best bidder. Marsh v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 520. But see State v. Lincoln [Neb.] 94 N. W. 719, wherein it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel a city council to award a contract to supply the city waterworks with coal, to one claiming to be the lowest and best bidder; the reason being that the determination of who was the lowest and best bidder involved the exercise of judicial discretion.

Where the contract has already been awarded to another, mandamus may nevertheless issue if the relator be entitled to it under the law. Marsh v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 520.

86. Duty of county commissioners to levy tax to pay interest on bonds, and duty of county clerk to keep the proceeds of such tax as a special fund, see Mills' Ann. St. Colo. § 941. Board of Com'rs v. Sims [Colo.] 74 Pac. 457; State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 173 N. Y. 297; U. S. v. Saunders [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 124.

The tax must be for a lawful purpose: otherwise mandamus will not issue. It will not issue to compel the levy of a tax for the benefit of an adjunct school district which was not lawfully created. State v. Board of Com'rs [Neb.] 95 N. W. 6.

When duty to levy becomes positive: Where a resolution of a county board to levy a tax for a special purpose is affirmed by the courts, the duty of the board to make the levy thereupon becomes positive, and may be enforced by mandamus. State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295.

No demand is necessary where the duty to make the levy is plainly imposed by statute. U. S. v. Saunders [C. C. A.] 124 Fed. 124. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel levy of a tax where an assessment has been confirmed. Com'rs of Highways v. Big Four Drainage Dist. [Ill.] 69 N. E. 576. Mandamus is the proper remedy to review the omission of items by a board of equalization. Appeal will not lie. People v. Priest, 85 N. Y. Supp. 481. A judgment confirming a drainage assessment is sufficient to authorize mandamus against a town to compel levy, the town having had an opportunity to be heard at the confirmation. Com'rs of Highways v. Big Four Drainage Dist. [Ill.] 69 N. E. 576.

his right to examine the books of a municipal corporation of which he is a citizen.[87] It likewise lies to compel the cancellation of an illegal resolution for a levy.[88] But it does not lie to compel the collecting officer to accept, in satisfaction of a tax, an amount less than that shown by the tax books, though the amount thus shown be incorrect, and the tax be void.[89] Whether mandamus will issue in aid of redemption of property sold for taxes depends upon the construction of the various statutes relating to redemption.[90]

Duties relating to the issue of certificates and licenses.—Officers charged with the duty of issuing certificates and licenses may be compelled by mandamus to perform such duties.[91]

Duties relating to executions.—Where an officer holding a writ of execution which it is his duty to execute, refuses to execute it, he may be compelled to do so by mandamus.[92]

Duties relating to streets and highways.—Mandamus lies to compel municipal officers to keep the streets and highways in proper condition for ordinary use and travel.[93]

Duties arising under municipal ordinances.—Mandamus lies to compel the enforcement of municipal ordinances; but the court, in its discretion, should not issue the writ for this purpose except in extreme cases.[94]

Duties relating to conduct of public schools.—Mandamus lies to compel public

87. Proposed increase of taxation and additional expenditure of city funds, is such an exigency as will authorize the issuance of mandamus to compel the city officers to allow a tax-payer to examine the city records. State v. Williams [Tenn.] 75 S. W. 948.

Adequate remedy: Where a board of county commissioners, pursuant to a decision of court declaring a suspended tax valid, made an order for the collection of such tax, but subsequently made another order declaring the first order void, which last order operated to prevent the auditor from putting the tax on the duplicate, it was held that mandamus would issue to compel the making of a new order, and that the relators would not be required either to appeal from the second order, on the assumption that the board had jurisdiction to make it, or, upon the assumption to the contrary, to disregard such second order and to rely on the first as still existing. State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295.

88. State v. Board of Com'rs [Ind.] 68 N. E. 295.

89. Property assessed in wrong district, thus causing excessive tax; but the collector had no power to change the books. Relator's remedy was by resistance against collection, or by recovery of property if sold. State v. Brown, 172 Mo. 374.

90. Under Comp. Laws Mich. §§ 3959, 3960, mandamus will not issue to compel the state auditor to accept taxes and issue certificate of redemption as to land bought in by the state and resold by it, unless the tax be void or the resale be unauthorized. Kennedy v. Auditor General [Mich.] 96 N. W. 928. Under Code Colo. § 307, a county treasurer cannot issue a certificate of redemption for less than the full amount charged against the property; and hence where land is sold for taxes thereon and also for taxes on the owner's personalty, one holding a mortgage on the land cannot by mandamus compel the treasurer to accept in redemption that portion only of the full amount which was chargeable to the land. Statton v. People [Colo. App.] 70 Pac. 157.

91. Duty of secretary of state, under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 1299 relating to private banking, to issue certificate showing compliance with the law. State v. Cook, 174 Mo. 100. Duty of board of county examiners to give a teacher a certificate showing the result of his grading by such board. Northington v. Sublette, 24 Ky. L. R. 835, 69 S. W. 1076.

Licenses to practice medicine may or may not, under St. Ill. 1887, entitled "Medicine and Surgery," be issued by the state board of health, accordingly as such board may or may not find that the applicant's diploma is from a legally chartered medical institution "in good standing." Ill. State Board of Health v. People, 102 Ill. App. 614.

When relator has not paid the license fees required by an ordinance as a condition precedent to the issuance of the license, mandamus to compel the city clerk to issue the license will not issue. Eidson v. Flounlacker, 24 Ky. L. R. 2441, 74 S. W. 198.

Hearing on protest against granting liquor license may be obtained by mandamus, see Comp. St. Neb. c. 50, § 3. Moores v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 225. school authorities to perform their duties relating to appointment, promotion and grading of teachers;[95] or their duties relating to the books to be used;[96] or to compel admittance to the school of children entitled to admittance.[97]

Federal officers are subject to control by mandamus to the same extent as state officers, where their duties are purely ministerial, and do not involve the exercise of judgment or discretion; mandamus lies to compel the performance thereof;[98] but not where the duties involve the exercise of judgment or discretion in the performance of the act demanded.[99]

Legislative and governmental duties are not subject to control by mandamus;[1] but an executive officer may be compelled by mandamus to perform a purely ministerial duty.[2]

(§ 2) C. Private duties; natural persons; corporations.—Rights based on private contract are not enforceable by mandamus.[3]

Corporations may be compelled by mandamus to perform the duties and obligations imposed upon them by their charters,[4] or by statute.[5] It does not lie to compel a street railroad to give transfers, where the law provides a penalty for such refusal, which is recoverable by the party injured, and is sufficient to cover the damages sustained.[6] Nor does it lie to compel a street railroad company to comply with an ordinance relating to the location and construction of the road, where a specific remedy in equity is provided by statute, which is adequate and effectual.[7] The right of a stockholder to inspect the books of his corporation may, under some circumstances, be enforced by mandamus.[8] So also may a stockholder's
