Note: Since the adoption of the Australian ballot law, the courts have frequently been called upon to settle disputes as to the regularity of nominations made by political conventions. The adjudications show little divergence of judicial opinion. The varying practice in the several states results mainly from statutory differences. Where two conventions are held, each claiming to be the authorized exponent of the same political party, the courts from an unwillingness to undertake the settlement of purely political controversies have generally required the nominees of each to be printed on the official ballot. Shields v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 164, 50 N. W. 105, 13 L. R. A. 760; Stephenson v. Board of Election Com'rs, 118 Mich. 396, 76 N. W. 914, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 42 L. R. A. 214; Sims v. Daniels, 57 Kan. 552, 46 P. 952, 35 L. R. A. 146; People v. District Court [Colo.] 31 P. 339; Phelps v. Piper, 48 Neb. 724, 67 N. W. 755, 33 L. R. A. 53; State v. Allen, 43 Neb. 651, 62 N. W. 35; State v. Piper, 50 Neb. 25, 69 N. W. 378. Where the statute forbids the printing of more than one set of nominees of the same party, and makes no provision for deciding which should be accepted as regular, when more than one are presented, the courts assume jurisdiction to determine the matter from necessity, there being no other way of settling the question. State v. Falley [N. D.] 83 N. W. 860; Williams v. Lewis [Idaho] 54 P. 619; McCoach v. Whipple [Colo.] 51 P. 164; In re Fairchild [N. Y.] 45 N. E. 943. But where the statute provides for the settlement of all such disputes by reference to some special tribunal, its decisions are held to be final. Chapman v. Miller, 52 Ohio St. 166, 39 N. E. 24; Cain v. Page [Ky.] 42 S. W. 336; Moody v. Trimble, 22 Ky. L. R. 692, 58 S. W. 504, 50 L. R. A. 810; People v. Baird [Ill.] 45 N. E. 1081; Burke v. Foster [La.] 36 So. 32; People v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. [Colo.] 74 P. 896; Miller v. Clark, 62 Kan. 278, 62 P. 664.

64. It is competent for the legislature in authorizing an official ballot, and granting to party nominees a right to have their names placed thereon under the party designation, to subject that right, in case of controversy between two or more sets of nominees, each claiming such designation, to a decision of a party tribunal. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964; Allen v. Burrow [Kan.] 77 P. 555.

65. People v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. [Colo.] 74 P. 896. See 1 Curr. L. 983, n. 36. The decision of such tribunal is final when its action is characterized by good faith, and is free from fraud, corruption and oppression. Allen v. Burrow [Kan.] 77 P. 555. Bias, prejudice, partisanship and unfairness, imputed to the members of the tri-

Certificates and declinations and vacancies.[66]—The certificate must be in substantial compliance with the statute,[67] and filed at the proper time and place.[68]

§ 4. Official ballot.[69]—The official ballot must be in substantial compliance with the form prescribed by the statute.[70] Equity has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction to restrain a city clerk from putting on the official ballot names of persons mentioned in certificates of nomination.[71] In Indiana, where by reason of unexpected conditions arising when ballots are to be printed, it is impossible to have the work done for the amount appropriated therefor, statutory authority exists for an additional allowance by the county council.[72]

Use of party name.[73]—A party by unlawfully adopting a generic word at an election cannot acquire any exclusive right to such word as a party designation.[74] In New York, a body of voters acting independently may not incorporate in their party designation the name or any portion of the name of any political party then organized.[75]

§ 5. Primary elections[76] are not within a constitutional provision disqualifying an officer who has committed bribery to secure his election;[77] nor does an assessment laid on candidates to pay the cost of a primary,[78] nor failure on the part of the committee to take the oath previous to acting, in the absence of fraud, wrongful act or intent, render it void.[79] That a call for a primary states that persons coming of age in time to vote at the election may vote at the primary will not invalidate the primary in the absence of a showing that any such voted.[80] Party enrollment books for use at primaries are provided for in New York.[81] Under the New York primary election law, void ballots must be rejected, but protested ballots must be marked and counted;[82] and the board of elections can only canvass the statements of result filed with it by the board of primary inspectors.[83] The county executive committee of a party in declaring one nominated for an office necessarily finds that the votes cast for him were legal.[84]

67. A statement signed by the officers of the convention, followed by the jurat of the officer administering the oath that it was sworn to is such compliance. Allen v. Burrow [Kan.] 77 P. 555. The certificate of an independent nomination, under the New York statutes, must not include the name of any organized political party. A certificate designating an independent party as "Independent Republican Party" is a violation of such statute. In re Smith, 85 N. Y. S. 14. So, also, the name "Independent Democrat Party." In re Carr, 94 App. Div. 493, 88 N. Y. S. 107.

68. A requirement that certificates of nomination for city offices shall be filed a certain length of time before the election will not be assumed merely because this is required in case of nominations for county offices. City of Annapolis v. Gadd, 97 Md. 734, 57 A. 941. Under the provisions of the Utah statutes, the clerk, in the absence of objection, must place the candidate's name on the official ballot, though the certificate of nomination was not filed in the required time. Control by party committees.[85]—Primary elections are usually under the control of the party governing committee, subject to the law,[86] and members of a committee whose duty it is to call a primary election cannot delegate that duty, i. e., act by proxy, unless expressly provided by statute.[87]

Ballots for primaries.[88] Review and contest of primary.[89]—The decision of the party tribunal in some states is final,[90] but it is competent for the legislature to provide a summary remedy to review the action or neglect of inspectors and boards.[91] Contestants must follow the statutory procedure.[92]

§ 6. Officers of election.[93]—The Illinois act of June 19, 1885,[94] providing for the selection of judges and clerks of elections, their confirmation and imposing liability for contempt for misbehavior in office is constitutional. In New Jersey, the fees of election officers in the submission of constitutional amendments are regulated by the statute authorizing the submission of the amendments and not by the general election law.[95]

§ 7. Polling the vote.[96]—The votes of innocent electors are not to be rendered invalid by mere irregularities on the part of election officials, which do not affect or change the result of the election.[97] The voter must appear in person at the

them. In re Rush, 42 Misc. 70, 85 N. Y. S. 581.

91. The inclusion and return by inspectors of a large number of ballots not voted at all but corruptly stuffed in the box and the ejection of watchers and others interested in the success of the opposition from the polling place, is such "action or neglect" as will confer jurisdiction. Rabbitt v. Garand, 89 App. Div. 119, 85 N. Y. S. 473.

92. A notice within the prescribed time of a contest at the next term of court is sufficient, though such next term be but an adjourned term. Montgomery v. Dormer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 913. Under a provision that the county executive committee of a party shall promptly receive evidence and correct wrongs in a primary election, a defeated candidate for nomination, who having knowledge of facts which he claims made the other candidate ineligible failed to present them to the committee at its first meeting, cannot afterwards compel it to reconvene and pass thereon. Defects held not fatal: Failure of inspector to be sworn before assuming duties. Montgomery v. Chelf [Ky.] 82 S. W. 388. The failure of voter to exhibit his poll-tax receipt when he presents himself to vote. Stinson v. Gardner [Tex.] 78 S. W. 492. To avoid the result of an election because of irregularities in conducting it, it must be shown that some mandatory statute was violated, or that the election was conducted in such an illegal manner that the true sentiment of the electors was not expressed by it (O'Laughlin v. City of Kirkwood [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 512), or that the election was conducted in such an illegal manner that the true sentiment of the electors was not expressed by it, or that such a number of legal voters were denied the privilege of voting as would have materially changed the result (Ex parte Wood [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 529). Where it is alleged that certain persons were erroneously permitted to vote, it not being shown that their votes changed the result the allowance of the votes will not invalidate the election. Hoover v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 859. But the exclusion solely on account of color of persons qualified and offering to vote, there being a sufficient number excluded to have altered the result, rendered the election void. Howell v. Pate, 119 Ga. 537, 46 S. E. 667. Failure to open polls on time because of temporary absence of election officers does not vitiate election, unless on a contest it be shown that voters were thereby deprived of their votes in number and amount sufficient to change the result of the election. Endom v. Monroe, 112 La. 779, 36 So. 681; Hoover v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 859.

voting place and present his ballot to the managers of the election.[98] In Texas, it is not necessary that he exhibit his poll-tax receipt, or in lieu thereof make affidavit that it is lost.[99]

§ 8. Irregularity and ambiguity in ballot.[1]—Defects in the ballots not interfering with the determination of the voter's choice will not vitiate a ballot, whether due to the election officers or the voter.[2] Under a statute forbidding the counting of a ballot where the names of two condidates for the same office remain thereon, a ballot having a line drawn underneath the name of one candidate leaving the name untouched should not be counted.[3]

The marks.[4]—The intent of the voter cannot be shown other than by what appears upon the face of the ballot.[5] In West Virginia, defacing marks to cancel the ticket not voted must be within the ticket column or its heading.[6] Though defacing lines do not pass entirely through a ticket or its heading, yet, if it is manifest that the voter did not intend to vote that ticket, the defacement is sufficient.[7]

The writing in of names.[8]—Though a candidate's name is written in the space above the office on a ballot, it will be held a vote for him for the office below his name, where the printed name for that office is erased, and that above the written name is not erased.[9]

§ 9. Distinguishing marks on ballot.[10]—An illegal mark upon a ballot, or a legal mark illegally placed, which may serve as a distinguishing mark, will invalidate the ballot, and necessitate its exclusion from the count,[11] but marks will not be held distinguishing unless it is apparent that they were placed upon the ballot for that purpose.[12] That a name is written in the ballot will not be regarded

Marks regarded as distinguishing: Crosses entirely without and beyond the square or circle. Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240. One of the lines of a cross paralleled by a third distinct line. Wheeler v. Caldwell [Kan.] 75 P. 1031. An erasure clearly apparent. Langley v. Head, 142 Cal. 368, 75 P. 1088. Placing a cross in the square opposite the words "No nomination" appearing under the designation of certain offices on the ticket constitutes a distinguishing mark. Maddux v. Walthall, 141 Cal. 412, 74 P. 1026; Merkley v. Trainor, 142 Cal. 265, 75 P. 656; Kincaid v. Reid, 142 Cal. 88, 75 P. 657. And the fact that a number of ballots are so marked and by reason thereof such mark does not identify any particular ballot does not validate the ballots so marked. McMenomy v. Ruch, 142 Cal. 77, 75 P. 661.

12. If it appears from the face of the ballot that marks or writings were placed thereon as the result of an honest effort on the part of the voter to indicate his choice of candidates and that he did not thereby intend or attempt to indicate who voted the ballot, it should not be rejected. Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240. Where a voter in putting a cross in front of each candidate's name unwittingly votes for one, which cross he apparently attempts to erase and places a cross opposite and in an adjoining column, such erasure is not a distinguishing mark. Id. The mere fact that one of the lines of a cross mark on a ballot is shorter than the other one does not warrant the rejection of the ballot, where the shorter line actually crosses the longer one. Wheeler v. Caldwell [Kan.] 75 P. 1031. Compare Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240.

Not distinguishing: Pencil marks so minute and light as not to be readily observable. Langley v. Head, 142 Cal. 368, 75 P.

as a distinguishing mark unless clearly so intended.[13] Where there is no evidence to explain how or when certain ballots were torn, they should be counted on the assumption that they were torn after the voters delivered them to the election officers.[14] Where subsequent to an election, provisions of law as to what constituted distinguishing marks were changed by the legislature, the test is whether the ballots were legal ballots on election day rather than on the day of trial.[15]

§ 10. Count, canvass and return.[16]—The duty of determining the voter's choice in the first instance is imposed upon the officer or officers whose duty it is to count the ballots.[17] But election inspectors have no power to determine the eligibility of a candidate, and having reached the determination that he is ineligible, disregard the vote for him and declare another elected.[18] Votes for O. H. Christian cannot be counted for Christian Ott.[19] Mandamus will lie to compel the count and canvass of votes.[20] The dismissal of a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent the canvass of the votes cast at a congressional election cannot be reviewed in the Federal supreme court after the canvass has been made and certificates of election have been issued and the House of Representatives has admitted the parties holding the certificates to seats in that body.[21] Voters absenting themselves and those who, being present, abstain from voting, are considered as acquiescing in the result declared by a majority of those actually voting, even

Hannah v. Green, 143 Cal. 19, 76 P. 708. Placing the cross on the word yes or no. Tout v. Hawkins, 143 Cal. 104, 76 P. 897.

13. Where ballots bore two dotted lines above one of which was printed the words "For justice of the peace" and above the other "For constable," the writing in of names of the persons voted for did not constitute a distinguishing mark, though no such officers were to be voted for. The dotted lines with the printed words above them would be understood by voters to indicate those offices were to be filled, and regarded as an invitation to write in the names of the persons of their choice. Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240.

20. Moderator reopening ballots and counting as a legal ballot one that had been marked defective. Corbett v. Naylor [R. I.] 57 A. 303. Where it appears that boards of election inspectors failed in the performance of duties in the canvass of ballots, mandamus will not lie to compel the lower court to summarily proceed to determine the validity of the ballots. The court should first require the inspectors to perform their duties. In re Perry, 84 N. Y. S. 406. See 1 Curr. L. 988, n. 97. Where mandamus is asked for the protection or in aid of a private right of the relator, he must show a legal interest in himself in the result of the election. State v. Chatterton [Wyo.] 73 P. 961. Mandamus does not lie against the mayor and councilmen of a city to compel them to reconvene as a canvassing board and recanvass an election, their terms having expired when the writ is asked. Holdermann v. Schane [W. Va.] 48 S. E. 512. Mandamus awarded against certain officers by name to compel them to recanvass an election cannot be used for such relief against their successors in office. Id. Where election officers in canvassing a vote have failed to follow the method prescribed by statute, and the proof is not reasonably clear that the count was honest and correct, it is within the discretion of the court to issue a mandamus requiring the election officers to recanvass the vote. People v. Way, 92 App. Div. 82, 86 N. Y. S. 892.

though in point of fact, but a minority of those entitled to vote really do vote.[22] Decisions relative to boards of convassers and their duties are discussed below.[23]

Return.[24]—On an election contest, the court may gather the true result of the election by looking behind a defective return.[25] Refusal of precinct officers to certify the poll-books or the returns does not authorize rejection of the vote of the precinct, there being no question of the integrity of the poll-books or the honesty of the election.[26]

§ 11. Review by court.[27]—Under the New Jersey statutes, the "incumbent" against whom proceedings to contest an election before the circuit court are required to be taken is the person who is originally declared elected.[28] Consolidation of contests for the same office is allowable.[29]

Rights and remedies.[30]—The right to contest an election is not designed exclusively for the benefit of rival candidates,[31] but may be conferred upon any elector, acting in his private capacity.[32] Quo warranto instead of contest proceedings is not necessary where one has been merely declared elected.[33] It is not necessary that one who has been declared elected by the canvassing board qualify to confer jurisdiction upon the court to hear contest proceedings, nor can the court be divested of jurisdiction because of failure to do so.[34]

Jurisdiction.[35]—Appellate courts will exercise original jurisdiction where because of the exigencies of time there is no other adequate remedy.[36] Equity will not interfere in any matter growing out of an election which may be determined by contest proceedings prescribed by statute.[37] The jurisdiction of particular courts is discussed in the note.[38]

22. The rule applies whether those entitled to vote constitute a definite or an indefinite number. Rule applied to appointment of officer by common council. Murdoch v. Strange [Md.] 57 A. 628. A blank ballot cannot be considered in summing up a total vote, a majority of which a candidate must receive to be elected. Id. The words "a majority vote of the legal voters," in a statute requiring the submission of a question to popular vote, will be construed as meaning a majority of those voting, unless it clearly and unmistakably appears that such was not the intention of the legislature. Me. Special Act Feb. 26, 1903, incorporating water district. It will be presumed that those not voting assent in advance to the action of those who do. Foy v. Gardiner Water Dist., 98 Me. 82, 56 A. 201.

23. A town board of canvassers has no authority under the New York statute to reconvene and recount the votes in an election district on a charge by one of its members of violations of the statute after the ballot box has been locked and secured and given over to the proper custodian [Laws 1896, p. 893. c. 909]. People v. Way [N. Y.] 71 N. E. 756. The provision of the old Denver city charter making the city council a canvassing board is inapplicable to the newly created City and County of Denver. Hence, in the election for the choice of a charter commission, the clerk of Arapahoe county and two justices were the proper canvassing board. McMurray v. Wright [Colo. App.] 73 P. 257. 31. As far as they are concerned, their interest is exclusively a personal and pecuniary one. Paramount to their claims is the deep public concern involved as to who are entitled to hold office for which the suffrages of the electors have been cast. Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 558, 75 P. 182.

32. When so invoked, the contest is regarded as of a public nature. Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 558, 75 P. 182. It is entirely competent for the legislature to authorize that proceedings to contest an election may be instituted by an elector in his private capacity. Maddux v. Walthall, 141 Cal. 412. 74 P. 1026. Where defeated candidates could not have gained anything by contesting an election, it is their right in their capacity as citizens and taxpayers to institute quo warranto proceedings. Howell v. Pate, 119 Ga. 537, 46 S. E. 667. A male inhabitant of the state, over the age of 21, may sue to contest the constitutionality of a statute apportioning senators and representatives, though the wrong complained of does not exist in his own senatorial or representative district. Brooks v. State, 162 Ind. 568, 70 N. E. 980.

36. By suit in equity. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964. Elections by writ of

Pleadings and issues.[39]—The contestant must file a properly verified[40] petition or statement that definitely apprises the contestee of the charges relied on, so that he may be prepared to meet them with appropriate proof.[41] Misnomers and other insufficiencies should be taken advantage of by demurrer.[42] Amendments are to be construed by the rules applicable to an amendment to a complaint.[43] The reply may be so amended as to set up new matter without first showing reasons why it was not sooner urged.[44] A contestee who holds a certificate to the office, regularly issued to him by the canvassing board, and who asks no affirmative relief, his answer going only to defeat the allegations made by the contestor, is not required to plead that he is an elector of the county.[45] The scope of inquiry in election contests, as in every other action, is limited by the pleadings.[46]

Dismissal.[47]—Consolidation of several contests will not prevent dismissal by some of the contestants.[48] Where two persons were found on an election contest to have received an equal and the highest number of votes, the contest was properly dismissed.[49]

Preservation and production of ballots.[50]—Provisions for secrecy do not protect the ballot of an illegal voter, and officers of election may testify for whom such illegal voters voted, that the votes may be withdrawn from the candidate receiving them.[51] Where the result of an election for membership in the state legislature has been ascertained and the ballots so counted have been sealed up and delivered to the proper custodian, they are then beyond control of the canvassing officer and subject only to the action of the General Assembly.[52]

38. In Idaho, jurisdiction to contest the election of officers for the irrigation district is lodged in the district courts of the state. Hertle v. Ball [Idaho] 72 P. 953. The provision of the Kentucky statute conferring jurisdiction upon the county judge and two justices of the peace to try election contests was not repealed. Shindler v. Floyd [Ky.] 81 S. W. 668. In New Jersey, the circuit court is without jurisdiction where the proceeding is initiated by the person originally declared elected, although his certificate of election has been subsequently revoked by a justice of the supreme court upon a recount. Darling v. Murphy [N. J. Law] 57 A. 263. An election contest, jurisdiction of which under the Illinois statutes is given to circuit courts, is not a civil case within the statute of that state, giving city courts concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in all civil cases [Laws 1901, p. 136]. Brueggemann v. Young, 208 Ill. 181, 70 N. E. 292. The fact that a statute provides that the board of council of a city shall judge of the eligibility and election returns of its members does not deprive the court of jurisdiction of an election contest under a code provision that the commonwealth may prevent the usurpation of an office by an action. Stack v. Com. [Ky.] 81 S. W. 917.

41. Murphy v. Levengood [Mont.] 77 P. 311; Abbott v. Hartley [Cal.] 77 P. 410. Since the state board of canvassers can act only on the returns made to it, a petition which fails to allege the returns of the votes cast for petitioner were sent to the secretary of state is defective. State v. Chatterton [Wyo.] 73 P. 961. A petition alleging that certain persons desirous of defeating prohibitions in a county paid the poll-tax due by 500 voters of said county for the sole purpose of qualifying such persons to vote against prohibition, but which did not allege that the 500 voters, or any of them, voted against prohibition states no ground of protest. Stinson v. Gardner [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 354; Stinson v. Gardner [Tex.] 78 S. W. 492. The fact that a statement of contest contains a separate allegation of malconduct as to each of 76 precincts will not warrant the granting of a motion to strike out such allegations, though the subject-matter thereof might have been more concisely stated. Merkley v. Trainor, 142 Cal. 265, 75 P. 656.

Evidence.[53]—A contestant in order to succeed must show title in himself.[54] The burden of proving lack of qualifications in a voter,[55] or an alteration or spoliation of ballots, is on the person who asserts it.[56] Where the ballots are preserved in strict accordance with the statutory requirements, they are admissible in evidence without further proof.[57] Noncompliance with the statutory requirements does not of itself, however, render the ballots inadmissible,[58] the burden in such case being cast upon the party offering them to show that they are the identical ballots cast at the election and that there is no reasonable probability that they have been disturbed or tampered with.[59] The question of the preservation of the ballots in their integrity is one largely within the discretion of the trial court, and its decision will not be disturbed if fairly supported by the evidence.[60] Where the original ballots are not available to a party, he may introduce the best secondary evidence available,[61] and copies of ballots instead of the originals may be inserted in the appeal record, there being neither an order of court nor agreement of counsel to the contrary.[62]

Recount of ballots.[63]—Questions relative to the propriety of counting or rejecting particular ballots are discussed in the note.[64]

52. Petition of Knowles [R. I.] 57 A. 303.

53. In an election contest, it was claimed that a certain person intimidated voters by stating that his tenants must move unless they voted for a certain person; one person voted contrary to his convictions, but testified that he was not intimidated. 57. When so admitted, they furnish the primary and controlling evidence of the number of votes cast for the respective candidates, and are sufficient to overthrow the returns of the canvassing officers. Averyt v. Williams [Ariz.] 76 P. 463.

58. Ballots used in a city election are not to be rejected on appeal to the courts because returned to the city clerk instead of the county clerk, and kept in his custody. The provisions of the statutes in this respect are not mandatory but directory. Averyt v. Williams [Ariz.] 76 P. 463. Failure to forward tally list and list attached thereto to the board of supervisors, the election being in other respects regular, will not preclude consideration of ballots on contest. Trafton v. Quinn [Cal.] 77 P. 164; Davis v. Grunig, 143 Cal. 336, 76 P. 1102.

59. The fact that they might possibly have been tampered with does not warrant their rejection. Averyt v. Williams [Ariz.] 76 P. 463. Where it appears that the ballots have been changed, or so exposed as to afford opportunity to be tampered with, or left in the custody of an officer or other person so personally interested in the result of the election as to be subjected to the temptation or inducement to alter them, the presumption of their integrity is lost, and they are not to be accepted in evidence. Hamilton v. Young [Ky.] 81 S. W. 682. So, where it appears that ballots were delivered to the contestant, who was the present incumbent of the office, and that a number of packages were unsealed, and were deliberately placed and kept in an unlocked telephone room in the clerk's office, which was unlocked and to which unauthorized persons had unrestricted access, the ballots were inadmissible. Farrell v. Larsen, 26 Utah, 283, 73 P. 227. Where at the time plaintiff filed his petition to contest defendant's election, the court was in session, and before defendant answered the court, by request of the parties, opened and counted the ballots, and made the result a matter of record, but it was expressly stated in the order that "the court was not asked to and did not pass on the legality of any ballot," there was no estoppel created. Hamilton v. Young [Ky.] 81 S. W. 682.

64. Party affiliations raise the presumption that the voter cast his ballot for the nominees of the party of which he is a member, and where a ballot is to be deducted because illegally cast, it should be deducted from the party of which the voter was a member. Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240. In the absence of statutory authority therefor, a ballot legal in form cannot be rejected merely because there is one more ballot in the ballot box than there are names written on the poll-books. Wheeler v. Caldwell [Cal.] 75 P. 1031. Where a board consisting of several members is elected on a blanket ballot and contest is made as to a part only of those declared elected, they are entitled to have all ballots for whomsoever cast counted, in order to show if possible that they were among those receiving the highest number of votes. Coghlan v. Alpers, 140 Cal. 648, 74 P. 145. Where a contestee rests his case on the question whether he or the contestant received the highest number of votes, he cannot require the counting of votes not cast for either on the theory that they would show a third person to have received more votes than the contestant. Id.

Decision and review thereof.[65]—The trial judge on a contest should so far as possible observe uniformity in his rulings, and reject or admit all of a class.[66] Where the court is required to order a new election in case of a tie, that one of the candidates is declared elected by a majority of but one vote will not justify a new election.[67] Findings of the trial court on questions of fact are conclusive on appeal,[68] except where the case on appeal is triable de novo.[69] The court, on certiorari to review the action of a city council in an election contest, cannot consider whether the evidence before the council justified its action, but is confined to the sole question of jurisdiction of the council of the subject-matter of the contest and of the parties thereto.[70] Error in refusing to allow contestee to prove certain distinguishing marks was harmless where more of excluded ballots were for contestant than for contestee.[71]

Security.[72]—Under the provisions of the Iowa Code,[73] an unsuccessful election contestant is liable for costs.

§ 12. Offenses against election laws.[74]—The offense of bribery in elections involves moral turpitude and falls within the class of crimes deemed infamous under a statutory provision excluding from the right of suffrage persons convicted of infamous crimes.[75] A bet made after an election has been held and the result finally ascertained and announced is not in violation of a statute punishing the betting on an election.[76] Mandamus will not lie to compel inspection of poll-books deposited in a public office at the suit of a private individual for the sole purpose of procuring evidence on which to base a prosecution.[77]

The indictment[78] must allege everything material constituting the offense with certainty and clearness.[79] Where an indictment, drawn under a statute punishing assaults on election officers, but since repealed, was sufficient to charge a general assault, a demurrer thereto should have been overruled.[80]

Questions for jury.[81]—In a proceeding for the illegal sale of liquor on an election day, the question whether the defendant assented to the taking of the liquor by the persons implicated is for the jury.[82]

§ 1. The general doctrine. Definitions, elements and distinctions.[83]—An election is the choice between two or more causes of action or rights by one who cannot enjoy the benefit of both,[84] and in order to compel an election, the party must be in court.[85] Unlike equitable estoppel, election does not depend upon detriment to the opposite party.[86]

§ 2. Occasions for election. A. Of remedies.[87]—Election goes not to the form, but to the essence of the remedy,[88] and a party having different remedies may select the form of action which will give him the relief he seeks,[89] but in order to require election, the remedies must be coexistent[90] and inconsistent.[91] An action being based upon facts inconsistent with those set up in a former action is inconsistent therewith.[92] The doctrine of election of remedies has also been applied to proceedings to secure a review.[93]

(§ 2) B. Of rights and estates.[95]—The doctrine of election as applied to rights and estates rests upon the same fundamental principle, i. e., that one must elect between inconsistent, coexistent things;[96] thus a devisee or legatee cannot claim both under a will and against it.[97] A surviving spouse cannot claim his or her statutory rights and also those devised him or her in lieu thereof;[98] the taking under a will does not, however, bar other rights not inconsistent.[99] If a remedy be given to one of several beneficiaries, or, if that one fails to sue within a stated time, then to others, the first one's election to sue cuts off the others, though the wrong person be sued.[1]

§ 4. Acts and indicia of election and waiver.—The election must be unequivocal[5] and must be made by the party or some one having power to bind him,[6] though the right being statutory, it can, as a general rule, only be exercised by those upon whom the right is expressly conferred by statute.[7] One being required to elect to take or reject particular property, failure to elect to take within a reasonable time will be deemed an election to reject.[8] In general, acts done with full knowledge of the facts, being inconsistent with a claim under one of the rights,

98. In order to put a widow to her election as to dower, the will must contain a provision clearly intended to be in lieu of dower. Sperry v. Swiger, 54 W. Va. 283, 46 S. E. 125; In re Purcell [R. I.] 57 A. 377. Where a testator devised to his wife and children all the real estate of which he might die seised, to hold share and share alike, the widow must elect between the provision of the will and dower. Id. A grantor conveying with covenants of warranty, his widow claiming dower against the grantee and being in possession of an estate from her husband worth more than the dower claim, the latter will be rejected to avoid circuity of action. Saunders v. Hamilton [Ky.] 82 S. W. 630.

show an intent to reject such right;[9] mere notice of an intent to do one or the other is not, however, sufficient,[10] and the acts being consistent with an assertion of either right, no election is shown.[11] One making a conditional sale of goods does not by subsequently accepting a mortgage on them and other goods elect to claim under the mortgage to the exclusion of his rights under the sale.[12] A subsequent action in another state cannot operate as an election of remedies so as to oust a prior suit.[13]

In equity, the acceptance of benefits which are less than what the party is equitably entitled to does not amount to an election to ratify an act.[14] An acceptance of the benefits of a transaction must be voluntary in order to constitute a ratification.[15]

Acceptance and retention of goods until after the lapse of a reasonable time for inspection waives breach of contract[16] and warranty,[17] unless a promise to remedy the defect is made,[18] though the retention of a void instrument[19] or canceled note[20] does not operate as a waiver of any rights. By the acceptance of a part of a debt, one does not waive his right to the remainder.[21] Whether knowledge amounts to acquiescence or not is generally a question for the jury.[22]

§ 5. Consequences of an election or waiver.—A choice between inconsistent remedies being once made with full knowledge of all the facts, the right to follow the other is forever gone;[23] but a mistaken and unsuccessful attempt to enforce the

9. Plaintiffs, making a contract with one acting for an undisclosed principal, bringing two actions, after knowledge of the identity of the principal, against the agent on the contract, in each of which they procured attachments and garnished persons owing money to the agent, held an election to hold the agent. Barrell v. Newby [C. C. A.] 127 F. 656. A widow having claimed and enjoyed exclusive possession for 17 years of premises formerly occupied by her husband as a homestead, it is presumed that she has elected to take a life interest therein instead of a distributive share. Huit v. Huit, 122 Iowa, 338, 98 N. W. 123. A widow obtaining an order for the sale of a homestead and retaining one-third of the proceeds elects to take a distributive share as provided for by Code 1873, §§ 2008, 2440. Edinger v. Bain [Iowa] 98 N. W. 568.

10. Seller's notice to buyer, after buyer's notice of refusal to accept, that the seller would store or sell the goods for the buyer's account, held not to constitute such an election as precluded the seller from treating the contract at an end and recovering damages for breach thereof. Habeler v. Rogers [C. C. A.] 131 F. 43. The presentation of a claim against an estate, without prosecuting it to final determination or judgment, cannot determine the right of election to pursue that and no other remedy. Hunnicutt v. Higginbotham, 138 Ala. 472, 35 So. 469.

11. Acts of a husband, after his wife's death, in completing a sale of the homestead made by the wife, held not to preclude him from electing to take the proceeds as a homestead, and not under the wife's will. Milner v. Davis, 120 Iowa, 231, 94 N. W. 511.

20. Retention of note taken by a life insurance company to extend the time for payment of a past-due premium, after cancellation by the company as evidence of nonpayment, is not a waiver of its rights under the contract. Sharpe v. New York Life Ins. Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 66.

W. 831; Whipple v. Stephens [R. I.] 57 A. 375. One electing to sue in tort cannot recover in assumpsit. Bermel v. Harnischfeger, 89 N. Y. S. 1029. A member of the relief department of defendant road electing to accept the benefit of such department is bound thereby. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Olson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 831. A plaintiff cannot declare upon a special contract with a carrier, and then, by amendment, claim that he is not bound by such special contract, and add a new and distinct cause of action. Southern R. Co. v. Parramore, 119 Ga. 690, 46 S. E. 822. An action on a contract on the theory that it creclaim by an inappropriate action upon which recovery cannot be had will not bar the other suit.[24] This rule that election of one right waives the other applies to the election of rights and estates[25] as well as to remedies. One electing to take under an agreement must conform to all the terms thereof.[26] Acceptance of that portion of the goods sold which conforms to the contract does not preclude the buyer from claiming damages for the failure of the rest of the goods to conform thereto.[27]

§ 6. Pleading.—It is sufficient to show that plaintiff had the right of election and has exercised it.[28]

ELECTRICITY.

Electric franchises.[1]—The furnishing of electric light and energy to private consumers is not a public duty or function.[2] Anyone has the right to produce and sell electricity as a commercial product without legislative authority,[3] but the use of streets to transmit electricity over poles and wires is an additional servitude;[4] and the right to so use them is a franchise which must be granted by the state or the municipal government acting under legislative authority.[5] Franchises are limated a partnership binds plaintiff so that he cannot during the pendency of such action sue on the same contract on the theory that it is one of employment. Sacker v. Marcus, 43 Misc. 8, 86 N. Y. S. 83. Where plaintiff denied defendant's right to enforce a guaranty on a particular ground, he cannot thereafter claim the contract unenforceable by reason of an entirely different and inconsistent ground. McCall Co. v. Eagan, 89 App. Div. 330, 85 N. Y. S. 792. Defendant having the option to use facts as a defense or affirmative cause, by availing himself of them for one of these purposes, waives his right to use them for the other. Brown v. First Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 132 F. 450.

24. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Olson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 831; Lackmann v. Kearney, 142 Cal. 112, 75 P. 668. A counterclaim being overruled as premature, there is no election of remedies so as to preclude its being set up at the proper stage of the case. Tyler v. Bowen [Iowa] 100 N. W. 505. A mortgagee is not precluded from replevying mortgaged property by reason of a former suit on the note, which was signed by husband and wife as mortgagors, such suit being based on the erroneous theory that the husband merely acted as his wife's agent. First Nat. Bank of Independence v. Sweet [Mich.] 99 N. W. 861. Ratification of an assignment of patents procured by fraud cannot be urged as precluding suit to restore complainant to his rights in the absence of evidence that he had any knowledge of the fraud until it was developed during the trial. Felt v. Bell, 205 Ill. 213, 68 N. E. 794. Where a mortgagor, who was sued on the covenants of his mortgage, relied on a defense based on a construction thereof relieving him from liability, he cannot be held to have elected such position, to the loss of a right to assert a mutual mistake on which he sought a reformation on failing to establish his defense. Allis v. Hall, 76 Conn. 322, 56 A. 637. Election to disaffirm a contract induced by fraud, being rendered of doubtful advantage by act of the other party, will not bar an action based upon a subsequent affirmance of the contract. Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964. Ignorance of material facts is sufficient. Moss v. Marks [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1031; Lamb v. Rooney [Neb.] 100 N. W. 410. See 1 Curr. L. 994, n. 52, 53.

25. A widow renouncing her rights under her husband's will and receiving property as dower and homestead by decree of court, the rest of the land is free from those claims. Rice v. Bamberg [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1009.

NOTE. Street railway poles and wires not an additional servitude: The placing of poles and wires in the street for the purpose of using electricity for street car propulsion does not impose a new servitude on the land in the street and may be authorized by legislative or municipal authority without compensation to the abutting owner of the land. Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634; Halsey v. Rapid Transit, etc., R. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380; Potter v. Saginaw Union, etc., R. Co., 83 Mich. 285; Barber v. Saginaw Union, etc., R. Co., 83 Mich. 299; Taggart v. Newport St. R. Co., 16 R. I. 668; Williams v. City Elec. St. R. Co., 41 F. 556.—From note to Chesapeake, etc., Tel. Co. v. Mackenzie [Md.] 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 235. 5. Purnell v. McLane [Md.] 56 A. 830. One cannot compel the issuance of a permit, authorizing him to use conduits for the ited by their terms,[6] and by valid statutory provisions.[7] In most states, companies dealing in electricity have a limited right of eminent domain to enable them to place their poles and wires.[8]

Contracts.[9]—An electric company's contract rights being uncertain, they may be protected by a temporary injunction while being rendered certain.[10]

Degree of care.[11]—While one furnishing electricity is not an insurer, yet as to the public he is obliged to use the utmost human care, vigilance, and foresight, reasonably consistent with the practical operation of his plant, to provide against all reasonably probable contingencies,[12] the care required in any particular case being proportional to the danger.[13] This includes the use of the best mechanical con-placing of wires, under Baltimore City Ordinance 107, unless he has a franchise granted, allowing him to use the streets for such purpose. Id. Under P. L. 136 an electric light company may be incorporated in a township. Word "district" construed. Brown v. Radnor Tp. Electric Light Co., 208 Pa. 453, 57 A. 904. See 1 Curr. L. 996, n. 78.

6. City to have advantage of all improvements in the production of electricity means all improvements increasing the efficiency of the system then in use. Davenport Gas & Elec. Co. v. Davenport [Iowa] 98 N. W. 892. See 1 Curr. L. 996, n. 81.

7. The word "wires" as used in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, providing for the furnishing of light to all residents within 100 feet of the company's wires, means wires through which electricity is distributed to residences, not to those used for street lighting purposes. Moore v. Champlain Elec. Co., 88 App. Div. 289, 85 N. Y. S. 37. See 1 Curr. L. 996, n. 82-84.

St. 1898, §§ 925-8, in the absence of an order from the board of public works designating the places where poles should be put, an electric light company cannot place a pole in front of a man's property without his consent. Malone v. Waukesha Elec. Light Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 247.

9. Interpretation: Current to develop "warranted capacity" of a motor need be that much only, though motor is capable of using more. Wofford v. Buchel Power & Irrigation Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1078. The right of a purchaser of electric power to assign his contract, held not within clause in contract calling for submission of questions under the contract to arbitration. Hudson River Water Power Co. v. Glens Falls Gas & Elec. Light Co., 90 App. Div. 513, 85 N. Y. S. 577. One who had contracted to purchase electric power held entitled to assign his rights. Id. Plaintiff in an action for breach of contract to furnish electric power held not entitled to recover prospective profits. Hudson River Power Transmission Co. v. United Traction Co., 43 Misc. 205, 88 N. Y. S. 448. The sale of an electric lighting plant, doing public and private lighting under a public franchise, the obvious intention being to include the going business with the plant, impliedly includes the unfinished monthly contracts for lighting and the supplies on hand, as incidents of the plant. Illustrations.—Facts held to constitute negligence: Allowing the feed wire of another company to be fastened for a long time to the iron step of a pole, the insulation at the point of contact being worn and defective, is negligence in a case where a lineman was killed. Graves v. City & Suburban Tel. Ass'n, 132 F. 387. Failure to keep wire insulated whereby adjacent fallen wire became charged held negligence, the company being liable without regard to its actual knowledge of the fallen wire or diligence in discovering it. Parsons v. Charleston Consol. R. Gas & Elec. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 284. Negligent in allowing insulation to become defective, where employe painting pole was injured. Bernier v. St. Paul Gas Light Co. [Minn.] 99 N. W. 778. Allowing a guy wire to become charged, through imperfect insulation or otherwise, establishes a prima facie case of negligence. City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 680, 76 S. W. 191. A guard wire should be used where there is a likelihood of the wire being broken by the falling of a limb of a tree. Spires v. Middlesex & M. Elec. Light, Heat & Power Co. [N. J. Law] 57 A. 424. There being intersecting wires, insulation, guard wires or some other device should be used. Richmond & P. Elec. R. Co. v. Rubin [Va.] 47 S. E. 834. Failure to use device to guard wires under a sidewalk the latter being built so that boys could crawl under, held negligence. Commonwealth Elec. Co. v. Melville, 210 Ill. 70, 70 N. E. 1052. Cable being left 8 to 14 years under a sidewalk, the latter being built so that boys could crawl un-trivances and inventions in practical use,[14] perfect insulation at all places near which people have a right to go,[15] and it has been held, perfect insulation of all overhead wires strung through streets,[16] the consideration of climatic conditions,[17] and the maintenance of such a system of inspection as will insure reasonable promptness in the detection of defects.[18] This same degree of care is required of a municipality operating an electric light plant for public and commercial purposes,[19] and, whether the owner of the wire or not, if it constitutes an obstruction to traffic, the city is liable if it fails to have the same removed or repaired within a reasonable time, or to take proper precaution to notify travelers of the danger.[20] As to employes, however, only ordinary care is owed.[21] To be liable, a duty must be owed to the person injured.[22] This duty being incident to the operation and ownership of the plant,[23] it does not depend upon the ownership of the wire, negligence being shown,[24] though one furnishing electricity is not liable for injuries occasioned by defects in appliances in which it has no interest and over which it exercises no control;[25] the converse of this statement is also true.[26] Failure to exercise this duty cannot be excused by the existence of a custom,[27] nor can this duty be transferred.[28] Wires of der, is negligence, the insulation having become defective and the cable having been out of repair at the particular place several times. Id. Where wires were permitted to sag four feet between poles which were 100 feet apart, it is negligence to place defectively insulated primary and secondary current wires on the same cross arm 16 inches apart. Wires became crossed and death resulted to consumer. Gilbert v. Duluth General Elec. Co. [Minn.] 100 N. W. 653. Negligent in cutting and permitting charged wire to swing near the ground. Daltry v. Media Elec. Light, Heat & Power Co., 208 Pa. 403, 57 A. 833. A converter being placed by the side of a dwelling house near a balcony with a tin floor, and having a gutter and leaders therefrom to the ground, ordinary insulation held insufficient, and reasonable provision must be made, there being a possibility that some one might use the balcony. 17. The fact that insulation is less durable in higher altitudes must be taken into consideration by the company. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Lawrence, 31 Colo. 301, 73 P. 39. See 1 Curr. L. 997, n. 90. Need not insulate against lightning (Phoenix Light & Fuel Co. v. Bennett [Ariz.] 74 P. 48), though in the construction and maintenance of its plant it must anticipate ordinary storms (Wolpers v. New York & Q. Electric Light & Power Co., 91 App. Div. 424, 86 N. Y. A disturbed condition of an electrical system indicating that a wire may be down, it is the duty of the owner to ascertain if the wire constitutes a dangerous obstruction in a street (City of Emporia v. Burns, 67 Kan. 523, 73 P. 94), and notice of the disturbance will be notice of the obstruction of the street (Id.). See 1 Curr. L. 997, n. 89.

Daltry v. Media Elec. Light, Heat & Power Co., 208 Pa. 403, 57 A. 833. The wires of two companies being suspended on the same poles, one of the companies is bound to use ordinary care to prevent injury to the employes of the other while engaged in reconstructing wires of the latter. 27. Custom whereby contractors notified company when working on houses to which wires were attached does not excuse unnotified company from liability for injuries re-

two companies intersecting, it is immaterial to plaintiff's right to recover which company had the prior or superior right to erect their respective wires, it being the duty of both to exercise due care to see that their wires did not come in contact.[29] The negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury.[30] For injury resulting from an "act of God," the defendant is not liable,[31] unless negligent, and this negligence is one of the proximate causes of the injury.[32] The injured party must have been free from contributory negligence,[33] and to do this, he must have exercised the care of a reasonably prudent man,[34] though, in the absence of knowledge, one may assume that wires are insulated where they should be.[35] A consumer is not liable for a defective part[36] or intervening cause[37] over which he has no control, nor is he bound to anticipate that the company furnishing him the electricity will be negligent in any manner.[38] One wiring a building is bound only to the exercise of ordinary care and prudence as exercised by persons engaged in the same business, according to the state of the art and methods generally used at the time the work was done.[39]

30. Where deceased was removing one company's lines from the poles of another company, held negligence of latter company in not having its wires insulated proximate cause, not negligence of former company in not cutting off current. Standard Light & Power Co. v. Munsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 931. Nor is such failure to cut off said current such an intervening cause as to relieve the former company of liability. Id. 31. Break by reason of sleet adhering to wire held act of God. Colburn v. Wilmington [Del. Super.] 56 A. 605.

32. Uninsulated wire broken by fall of wire above, the latter being broken by force of storm, held defendant liable in damages. Hebert v. Lake Charles Ice, Light & Waterworks Co., 111 La. 522, 35 So. 731.

33. Taking hold of wire after being warned held to bar recovery. Cosgrove v. Kennebec Light & Heat Co., 98 Me. 473, 57 A. 841. Lineman of experience knew or with the exercise of ordinary care should have known that insulation was worn off; held, there could be no recovery. Columbus R. Co. v. Dorsey, 119 Ga. 363, 46 S. E. 635. That a painter when found dead held one of the wires tightly grasped in his hand is not conclusive of contributory negligence. Brooks v. Consolidated Gas Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 396. Where injured party was warned. Colburn v. Wilmington [Del. Super.] 56 A. 605. That plaintiff stood on a metal register when turning on the light is not contributory negligence. Denver Consol. Elec. Co. v. Lawrence, 31 Colo. 301, 73 P. 39. Where plaintiff's horse stopped, and he jumped out stepping on a live wire and was injured, held no contributory negligence, it being early in the morning and dark, though plaintiff grabbed the wire in his fall. Wolpers v. New York & Q. Elec. Light & Power Co., 91 App. Div. 424, 86 N. Y. S. 845. See 1 Curr. L. 997, n. 94.

34. Instruction on this point is not objectionable in that no charge was made that deceased's negligence must have contributed to the accident. Buckley v. Westchester Lighting Co., 93 App. Div. 436, 87 N. Y. S. 763. An instruction that if deceased became preoccupied and failed to remain as alert as a reasonably prudent man, there can be no recovery, is not erroneous. Id.

NOTE. Degree of care required of injured person: A person brought in contact with electric wires is not required to exercise more care to avoid injury than is usual under similar circumstances among careful and prudent persons of the class to which he belongs, unless especially informed of the danger. A common laborer is not required to use as much care and prudence as is exacted of a better educated person. Girandi v. Elec. Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114; Perham v. Portland Elec. Co., 33 Or. 451, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730, 754, note. —From note to Bessemer Land & Improvement Co. v. Campbell [Ala.] 77 Am. St. Rep. 17, 29.

Actions.[40]—Where different companies contribute to the injury, the liability is joint.[41]

Pleading.[42]—The general rules as to sufficiency of allegations apply.[43]

Evidence.[44]—Plaintiff need not prove the specific cause of the accident, but it is sufficient if he prove facts and circumstances from which the jury may fairly infer that there was either defective construction or negligent operation.[45] Artificial presumptions do not generally come into play where the evidence shows the condition under which the accident occurred.[46] The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in some cases.[47] The case involving electrical phenomena, it should be sent to the jury, though the facts testified to by plaintiff and his witnesses are incredible and scientifically impossible, it not being shown that such testimony is false.[48] The general rules as to the admissibility[49] or sufficiency[50] of the evidence, and as to presumptions,[51] are applied.

Questions for the jury.[52]—The questions of whether proper care has been exercised by the one furnishing the electricity,[53] and of contributory negligence,[54] are

A guest in a hotel being injured by coming in contact with an electric wire, in an action against one furnishing the electricity, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply in the absence of a showing that the accident was due to a dangerous current knowingly or negligently sent into the hotel by defendant. for the jury. It is only in exceptional cases, where the evidence is of such a conclusive character that only one reasonable inference can be drawn from it, that the question of negligence is one of law for the court.[55] Whether a storm is so extraordinary as to legally amount to an "act of God" is a question for the jury.[56]

EMBEZZLEMENT.

Elements.[57]—To constitute embezzlement, money or property must have been in the hands of defendant by virtue of an office[58] or employment,[59] and must have been converted[60] to the use of defendant or another than the owner,[61] with fraudulent intent;[62] but such intent need not be actually entertained, it is sufficient if the natural effect of defendant's acts was to defraud,[63] and it may be shown by circumstances.[64] The amount embezzled is immaterial unless the statute prescribes a minimum.[65] To constitute embezzlement by an employe of a national bank, there must be a breach of duty with respect to moneys of the bank lawfully in his custody as employe, and a wrongful appropriation of such moneys to his own use with intent to defraud.[66] Where defendant, being authorized to collect a check and loan the proceeds, embezzles such proceeds, he is properly convicted of embezzlement of the proceeds.[67] Embezzlement by a public administrator of funds of two estates constitutes two distinct offenses.[68]

Indictment[69] in the language of the statute is generally sufficient.[70] The indictment must show a fiduciary relation,[71] but the particulars thereof need not be alleged.[72] If embezzlement by an officer is charged, possession of an office known to

70. Indictment sufficient. State v. Cates [Me.] 58 A. 238. Indictment substantially following statute as to employment, receipt of funds and fraudulent conversion thereof held sufficient. Schlitzbaum v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 80 S. W. 784. An indictment charging that defendant "did embezzle and fraudulently convert" is sufficient. Bell v. State, 139 Ala. 124, 35 So. 1021.

71. Indictment showing employment of defendant by one corporation and embezzlement of funds of another held insufficient. Hinds v. Territory [Ariz.] 76 P. 469.

72. Averment that defendant was en-the law and involving possession of funds must be alleged.[73] Specific description of the money is not ordinarily required,[74] and in some states value need not be charged.[75] That the word "fraudulently" was misspelled does not vitiate the indictment.[76] Averment of property in one and proof that he held as guardian is no variance,[77] and an information charging embezzlement as agent is not a departure from an original complaint charging embezzlement as bailee.[78] A statute punishing "embezzling or secreting with intent to embezzle" defines but one crime, and an indictment charging that defendant secreted with intent to embezzle and did embezzle is not double.[79]

Evidence of other similar acts is admissible to show intent,[80] or when part of a system with that on trial.[81] Where embezzlement of a specific sum is charged, proof of a general shortage in defendant's accounts is inadmissible.[82] A compromise by a county treasurer after a defalcation is not admissible in mitigation.[83]

Sufficiency of evidence[84] is discussed in the cases collated in the note.[85] Where hired chattels are immediately taken to another county and disposed of, a finding of intent to convert formed in the county where the hiring took place is justified.[86]

A remark by the court on admitting a receipt given by defendant for the money that it was a high order of evidence is error.[87]

An instruction referring to evidence as "tending to show" embezzlement is on the weight of the evidence.[88] An instruction holding a county treasurer to payment in coin money is harmless where he made no effort to satisfy in any kind of money.[89]

Punishment being prescribed as that designated for larceny, the general offense and not special forms of larceny is intended.[90]

EMBLEMENTS AND NATURAL PRODUCTS.

Annual crops have been held to become personalty when matured,[91] and of trusted with property for a purpose stated held sufficient. People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 216, 75 P. 796. An averment that money "had come into" defendant's possession is sufficient. People v. Walker, 142 Cal. 90, 75 P. 658. An indictment charging defendant's possession as bailee is sufficient without alleging the facts constituting the bailment. McCracken v. People, 209 Ill. 215, 70 N. E. 749.

73. Indictment alleging embezzlement by "county physician" held bad. People v. Shearer, 143 Cal. 66, 76 P. 813.

course are personalty when severed from the soil.[92] Standing crops have been held, however, to pass under a mortgage foreclosure,[93] or by deed to the land unless reserved.[94] In Georgia, title to crops sold by a planter does not pass until paid for.[95] Rights as between landlord and tenant are determined by their contract construed according to the rules which govern the construction of contracts.[96] A lessee cultivating land for a share of the crop is not a mere laborer working for hire, but has an interest in the crop.[97] One who purchases a crop without notice that he is interfering with rights of the landlord is not liable for conversion.[98]

A trespasser who sows a crop acquires no right thereto.[99] A dowress has no interest in growing timber,[100] nor has a homestead entryman until final proof.[101]

Equity will entertain a bill for an accounting between tenants in common of a crop.[102]

92. One claiming a crop by virtue of a prior lease of an Indian allotment as against one in possession under a void lease. Wakefield v. Dyer [Okl.] 76 P. 151.

93. As against a chattel mortgagee whose mortgage was executed subsequent to the mortgage on the land, though prior to foreclosure. Penryn Fruit Co. v. Sherman-Worrell Fruit Co., 142 Cal. 643, 76 P. 484.

Note. As between a purchaser of land on foreclosure sale and the mortgagor's tenant, crops planted by the latter and mature when the sheriff's deed is executed do not pass. Hecht v. Dettman, 56 Iowa, 679, 41 Am. Rep. 131. And see Howell v. Schenck, 24 N. J. Law, 89; Shepard v. Philbrick, 2 Denio [N. Y.] 174; Jones v. Thomas, 8 Blackf. [Ind.] 428, when crops were not mature. But compare Lane v. King, 8 Wend. [N. Y.] 584, 24 Am. Dec. 105. In McLean v. Bover, 24 Wis. 295, 1 Am. Rep. 185, it was held that one who recovers in ejectment is entitled to a crop partly cut and partly uncut, which was planted after the action was commenced, citing Doe v. Wethericke, 3 Bing, 21; Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 Barn. & Ald. 88. See, also, Rankin v. Kinney, 7 Bradw. [Ill.] 215; Gillett v. Balcom, 6 Barb. [N. Y.] 370.—Note to Hecht v. Dettman [Iowa] 41 Am. Instruction to this effect was proper where only the landlord's share was in question. Abbott v. Abbott [Kan.] 75 P. 1040. A reservation of "all the hay" means future crops and not hay in the loft. Howe v. Collins, 98 Me. 445, 57 A. 587.

Note: A crop is considered as growing from seed time until it is harvested (Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435), and passes by a sale of the land unless reserved (Crews v. Pendleton, 1 Leigh [Va.] 297, 19 Am. Dec. 750; Turner v. Cool, 23 Ind. 56; Gibbons v. Dillingham, 10 Ark. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 233; Coman v. Thompson, 47 Mich. 22, 41 Am. Rep. 706; Wilkins v. Vashbinder, 7 Watts [Pa.] 378). And see Pitts v. Hendrix, 6 Ga. 452, where a growing crop laid by before maturity was held to have passed. In Backenstoss v. Staler, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592, it was held that growing crops were personalty but passed as an appurtenant unless reserved, citing Bear v. Bitzer, 16 Pa. 178, and a crop of grain was held not to pass in Smith v. Johnstone, 1 Pen. & W. [Pa.] 471, 21 Am. Dec. 404.—From note to Dickey v. Waldo [Mich.] 23 L. R. A. 449.

95. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3546, until such time he may recover the crop from a vendee of the purchaser. Butler, Stevens & Co. v. Georgia & A. R. Co. [Ga.] 47 S. E. 320. A planter is one engaged in the business of producing crops from the soil. Id.

Where a tenant executes a trust deed authorizing the trustee to obtain possession of his share after condition broken, the trustee could maintain replevin against the landlord. Alexander v. Zeigler [Miss.] 36 So. 536.

97. Under Code §§ 1754, 1755, his widow after the crop has been allotted to her as a portion of her year's support under the statute may maintain conversion on the lessor's refusal to deliver. Parker v. Brown [N. C.] 48 S. E. 657. Under a lease providing that the lessor should furnish seed and the lessee the labor, the crop to be divided where the lessee died after planting but before harvest, his personal representatives can recover his interest less damage caused by his death. Id. Instruction to this effect held proper. Id. After the landlord recognized the widow's right, on gathering the crop, he held a portion of it in trust for her. Id. Even though at the time demand therefor was made, the crop had not been harvested. Id.

98. One who buys a tenant's crop knowing it to have been grown on demised premises incurs a liability to the landlord under Rev. St. 1899, § 4123, but is not guilty of conversion unless he knew of the landlord's lien. Crane v. Murray [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 280.

property may be authorized by special act.[9] Authority to have lands "laid out" and appraised does not authorize taking by mere entry and seizure, but means by condemnation proceedings.[10] Failure of the act of congress to provide for the collection of assessments of benefits in street extension cases in the District of Columbia does not invalidate assessments of damages under the act.[11]

Who may exercise the power.[12]—Municipal corporations, such as cities,[13] and levee boards,[14] and those private corporations whose business is of a public nature, such as railroad,[15] street railroad,[16] irrigation,[17] telephone,[18] and gas[19] companies, and cemetery companies and associations, are generally authorized to exercise the power,[20] and while foreign corporations cannot exercise the power unless expressly authorized,[21] authority may be conferred upon them.[22]

lands and riparian rights for a system of waterworks,[27] and cities of the first class in Washington may condemn property for the maintenance of electric light plants.[28] Where a city is proceeding to acquire lands and riparian rights for waterworks, it is immaterial to a landowner whether provision has been made by tax for defraying the expense, or by pledging the tolls for supplying water.[29] The New York statute declaring Deer River a public highway for floating logs and timber and providing for the assessment of damages to riparian owners is not invalid, as limiting the use to condemnation petitioners.[30] A private corporation in Washington has no power to exercise the right of eminent domain to acquire the right to float logs in a stream by means of dams at times when it is not navigable for the purpose in its ordinary state.[31] Where an electric street railway runs through a country so sparsely settled that the traffic along the highway would not support it, the construction is not a public necessity and the power of eminent domain cannot be exercised by it.[32]

§ 3. Property liable to appropriation and estate therein which may be acquired.[33]—The question of the necessity, propriety, and expediency of appropriating a given property to a proposed public use and the extent to which it shall be taken rest wholly in legislative discretion, subject only to the restraint that just compensation shall be made.[34] A city cannot condemn railroad lands and so secure the removal of tracks, nor can a railroad company condemn its own lands.[35] Lands of the state cannot be condemned by a public agency of the state.[36] Where land is deeded to a railroad company for a right of way, reserving a ferry landing and right of way, the company can afterwards condemn the right of way and landing.[37] Where a statute authorizes a railroad company to condemn the right of crossing a canal in which the state is financially interested and which is in the custody of the court, it should be permitted to institute proceedings without interference from the trustees appointed by the court to manage the canal.[38] An electric street railroad cannot exercise the power as to the additional servitude of interurban traffic, though that is the only desired right it has to obtain.[39] Telephone companies have no right of eminent domain in Pennsylvania over the lands of private owners,[40] but in New York, a telephone company may condemn the

Compensation to a private individual for the loss incident to a railroad company's removal of a switch over its own lands, maintained by contract with such individual for his benefit, cannot be given by way of condemnation proceedings instituted by the city under arrangement with which the removal was made or by the company itself. right to maintain its poles and wires in a street, the fee of which is in the abutting owners.[41] Where a cemetery corporation is authorized to acquire land forming "one continuous tract," the fact that the additional tract it is proposed to condemn is separated from the original plot by a public highway is immaterial.[42] The right to fish in an inland lake cannot be taken because the supply of fish therein is so small as to be incapable of meeting a public demand, and the object of acquiring such a right is not use which implies utility, but mere sport or pastime.[43] A city in Washington may condemn property for an electric light plant outside the city limits.[44]

Property exempt by law.[45]—A railroad company in Pennsylvania cannot condemn a dwelling house for original right of way,[46] but may for widening a right of way already in existence.[47]

Property in actual and necessary use for a public purpose.[48]—It is a general rule that land acquired under the right of eminent domain for a public use cannot be appropriated to a different public use inconsistent with that to which it was first appropriated, unless the intention of the legislature to so appropriate is plainly expressed;[49] but where the new use is not inconsistent with the old, authority to take for the new use may be inferred from slight indications of intention,[50] and land in public use may be condemned for the same use where its present owner will not need it for a long time to come,[51] or where the original acquirement was only colorable to prevent its beneficial use for the same purpose by others.[52] Lands held by a railroad company for right of way may be condemned as any other for the purpose of crossing them with a sewer,[53] and a road can be laid out over land of a railroad company outside the line of its road and within a location acquired for railroad purposes.[54] A proceeding to condemn land of which the state is the owner is a mere nullity, since the state cannot be sued and in any event would not sue itself.[55] It is competent for the legislature to authorize the taking of a waterworks system by the right of eminent domain, notwithstanding existing contracts with the municipality for which allowance may be made in awarding damages.[56]

Statutory authority to petitioner to choose his own location.[57]—That another suggested location is better adapted to the purpose is unavailing, for except as specially restricted by the legislature, those invested with the power of eminent domain for a public purpose can make their own location according to their own views of what is best or expedient, and this discretion cannot be controlled by the courts unless clearly abused.[58] Whether a railroad company in Georgia will take a strip 200 feet wide or less for its right of way is left to its own discretion,[59] and the amount of land it will take for terminals, stations and the like is also primarily within its own discretion, subject to control by the courts in case of abuse.[60] A statute authorizing the use of the power of eminent domain by railroad companies for the purpose of widening their rights of way is not invalid because no limit of width is set.[61]

Use or estate which may be exercised.[62]—A telephone company seeking to condemn the right to erect poles and wires in a street in front of an owner's property should only be permitted to acquire an easement for that purpose.[63]

§ 4. What is a "taking" or "injuring" of property.[64]—Any substantial interference with private property which destroys or materially lessens its value, or by which the owner's right to its use and enjoyment is in any substantial degree abridged or destroyed, is a taking requiring compensation,[65] though the title and possession of the owner remain undisturbed.[66] Where a municipal corporation, in pursuance of proper legislative authority, grants a valid franchise, privilege, or right to use or occupy a public street, common, or levee, or navigable waters adjacent thereto for a public purpose, such as the construction and maintenance of wharves in aid of commerce, water tanks for use in sprinkling streets, telegraph and telephone poles, railway tracks and the like, and the grantee, in reliance on such grant, expends money in the prosecution of his enterprise, he thereby acquires a property interest or right which can only be taken away under the power of eminent domain and after proper compensation.[67] The purpose or use, however, for which the license is granted must be public, and where the use is clearly private, as vault privileges under the street in favor of an abutting owner, no easement arises and the license may be withdrawn by the municipality at any time.[68] The fixing of a maximum rate to be charged for a public utility may be a taking,[69]

but an assessment for a local improvement is not an invalid taking unless it is out of all proportion to the benefits conferred,[70] and a public nuisance may be abated, and the benefits of the abatement, if accruing to the owner of the land upon which it is situated, may be assessed against such owner, without making such abatement an exercise of the power of eminent domain.[71] Right of way over lands belonging to the public school fund of the state may be granted to railroads in Texas without payment,[72] and no exercise of the power of eminent domain is necessary where a railroad company desires to lay water conduits along its own right of way and across city streets, to supply its own buildings with water.[73] The extension by the legislature of the boundaries of a municipal corporation cannot be a taking.[74] A street railroad company may be compelled to extend its tracks along certain streets.[75] Where, relying on a contract and the lease of a city's water rights, a private owner has perfected a water system and installed distributing appliances at great expense, a decree holding the contract void and adjudging the property to be in the city takes the private owner's property without compensation.[76] Cases discussing particular injuries are collected in the note.[77]

Injury caused property by noise, smoke, cinders, and gas from engines on a railway near the property is such "damage" as to require compensation by the company. But it must be shown that the damage suffered is greater than that suffered by the public generally. Facts of this case did not show an estoppel to claim compensation. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Pollution of streams: The discharge of sewage into a stream is a taking of the lower riparian owner's right to have the stream flow by or over his land in the natural manner. City of Waterbury v. Mill dams, and flowage of land: The flowage of land by a mill dam is a taking within the power of eminent domain (Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 98 Me. 566, 57 A. 893), but the appropriation of the water of a stream for a mill, though interfering with the natural rights of an upper or lower riparian proprietor, is not (Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. [Mass.] 70 N. E. 1009). The enlargement of a bridge pier which deflects the course of a stream, causing it to overflow and erode plaintiff's land and undermine his house, is a taking. Barron v. Memphis [Tenn.] 80 S. W. 832. But damages to land by flooding as the result of revetments erected by the United States along the Mississippi to prevent erosion of the banks from natural causes are consequential only and do not amount to a taking. Bedford v. U. S., 192 U. S. 217, 48 Law. Ed. 414.

Building restrictions: A prohibition against placing buildings within a certain distance from the street must provide for compensation to be valid (People v. Calder, 89 App. Div. 503, 85 N. Y. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 58 A. 342).

Regulations of railways: Compelling a railroad company to establish stations at incorporated villages along its line is not a taking. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 193 U. S. 53, 48 Law. Establishment or vacation of streets.[78]—Land taken for the purpose of opening or widening a street or highway thereon must be paid for,[79] and damages caused thereby to land not taken are allowed.[80] A street cannot be closed without compensation to abutting owners.[81]

Establishment or change of street grade.[82]—A change of street grade resulting in a permanent injury to an abutting owner's premises must be compensated.[83]

Railroads or other ways or structures on city streets.[84]—An abutting owner on a street, irrespective of whether he owns the fee, has the right to be compensated for any additional servitude placed on his property by any use of the highway not incidental or necessary to its full enjoyment as such by the public.[85] An elevated railroad[86] or a common passenger and freight railroad cannot be constructed upon the streets of a city without permission of abutting lot owners first had and obtained, or condemnation and payment of damages,[87] but the construction of a subway beneath city streets[88] or the operation of a street railroad is not an additional servitude,[89] except where a line extends from one city through another to a point beyond, in which case the line is an additional servitude on the streets of the intermediate city.[90] An electric light company has no right to set a pole in front of an abutting owner's property so as to require the trimming of his shade trees without his consent,[91] and water mains cannot be built in streets by a private corporation without compensation to the owner of the soil.[92] The consent of property owners along the line of a proposed street railroad is required in New Jersey.[93]

93. Where the statute requires consent of abutting property owners before permission shall be granted to build a street railroad,

Use of rural highways for purposes other than general public travel.[94]—An electric railway is not an additional servitude on a highway, in Wisconsin or New Jersey.[95] Telephone poles are an additional servitude in New York,[96] but not in Kansas.[97]

Erection of public viaducts and bridges.[98]—In New York City, where new station houses for elevated railroads occupy more of the street than the original viaduct, and tend to deprive landowners of their easements of light, air and access, the landowners are entitled to damages.[99]

§ 5. Right of appropriation as dependent on compensation, payment, deposit, or offer to purchase.—Compensation is necessary,[1] and the legislature cannot authorize the taking of private property for public use without it.[2] Where a railroad terminal company is authorized to condemn lands below low water mark for a station and to extend certain streets, it cannot avoid paying the state for so much of the land as is opened for streets on the theory that the public rights of navigation and fishery are compensated by the new easement of way created by the extension of the streets.[3] A statute making a stream a public highway and providing for compensation to "riparian owners" cannot be declared invalid on the ground that it fails to compensate owners of the bed of the stream not "riparian," in the absence of proof that there are any such owners.[4] A railroad company in Tennessee acquires no rights by going upon land and commencing construction work without the owner's consent after filing petition for condemnation.[5]

Necessity of payment of compensation or deposit in court before taking property.[6]—Compensation must be paid or secured before taking, injury or destruction,[7] and injunction will lie to prevent taking or occupancy where no compensation has been made and no proceedings had to condemn,[8] but the improvement

the consent of an owner cannot bind his successors in title, and where an application to the town council is denied, the consents terminate and cannot be used on a future application without being regiven. of a street cannot be enjoined because mere consequential damages to abutting property have not been paid.[9]

Necessity of securing consent or offer to purchase.[10]—In order to establish the failure to agree required by the Ohio statute, it must appear that an explicit offer was made of a definite amount of money for a definite amount of land.[11]

Release or waiver of damages.[12]—Where a landowner expressly consents or clearly acquiesces in the taking of right of way over his land for a railroad without payment, his right to hold the land is gone and he has only a personal claim against the company for the debt;[13] mere passive acquiescence, however, will not waive right to compensation,[14] and the absence of any agreement as to the price to be paid or the manner of determining it negatives a claim that the company was to be given credit, and the owner's right can only be extinguished by appraisal and payment.[15] The sale of land to a city for streets does not bar a claim for so constructing the streets as to cut off access to the owner's remaining property therefrom.[16] A subsequent purchaser may sue for compensation for a railroad right of way which has not been paid for.[17]

§ 6. Measure and sufficiency of compensation.[18]—The fair cash market value of property taken,[19] and the difference between such value immediately before and after injury as to property not taken,[20] may be awarded; and to determine this value, the uses to which the property is put by the owner, or to which it is adapted, are to be considered,[21] but not unless such uses actually affect its present value.[22] A railroad company takes only an easement in the surface of the soil, leaving the legal title and beneficial ownership as to all else in the owner of the fee, and therefore where the value of land condemned for railroad right of way consists chiefly in the minerals found below its surface, it is error to instruct that the measure of damages is the fair market value of the land,[23] since the fee tenant still retains the right to remove all minerals not necessary to support the plaintiff's tracks. Remote,[24] fanciful or speculative damages cannot be allowed.[25] Where the part of a tract taken is of greater value as a part of the whole than standing alone, the measure of damages is its value as a part of the whole,[26] and any injury to the residue naturally resulting from the appropriation and the construction and operation of the work should be considered.[27] Failure of the applicant for condemnation to describe the whole of the tract cannot deprive the owner of his damages to the portion not described, where the whole is in fact a single property,[28] but where such undescribed portion is cut off from the rest by another railroad, and therefore less easy of access, that fact may be considered in estimating the damages.[29] Where plaintiff did not own the land at the time the road was built, he is entitled to nothing for incidental injury, his damages extending over to the value of the land taken.[30] The measure of damages where a telegraph company condemns an easement for its line along a railroad right of way is the value of the land actually taken and the extent to which the use of the right of way by the railroad company is diminished by its use by the railroad company.[31] Where a life tenant conveys a right of way to a railroad company, the remaindermen are entitled to recover for their contingent interest, the value of such interest at the time of taking with interest.[32] As in other cases, mere difficulty of proof of the amount of damages is no bar to their recovery.[33] Interest may not be recovered as damages eo nomine, but may be allowed as compensation, the jury being instructed to award such sum as will compensate for delay in paying the damages, not exceeding legal interest.[34] Cases involving the right to interest are discussed below.[35]

Benefits.[36]—The jury have a right to consider the benefits that will accrue to the owner's remaining land from the opening or improvement of a street, and if the benefits are greater than the damages, to refuse an award to him,[37] but the benefits to be considered must be confined to such as are direct and peculiar to the landowner, as distinguished from those benefits shared by him in common with other citizens,[38] and cannot include private improvements subsequently made by neighbors.[39] In New York City, benefits for more than one-half the value of the property cannot be assessed in street opening cases,[40] but in the District of Columbia, the fact that more benefits than damages are assessed to a particular owner is not necessarily wrong, since only a small portion of an owner's land may have been taken and a large amount benefitted.[41] In New York, no part of the interest on an award allowed a property owner as compensation where his land has been taken before payment can be assessed back upon him as benefits.[42] The Indiana statute governing proceedings by railroads provides that no deduction shall be made for any benefit that may be supposed to result from the contemplated work.[43] In Tennessee, the damages for property taken are assessed without deduction, but incidental damages and benefits may be set off.[44]

Particular elements of damage.[45]—Where land is taken, its value for a special purpose, while not the test, may be considered along with other evidence, on the question of its fair market value;[46] whence riparian rights appurtenant to the land taken[47] and the value of a salt water well on the premises should be considered.[48] Where there are buildings or other structures on the land, they must be paid for as a part of the realty,[49] and the cost of their removal should not be considered;[50] but the value of mere trade fixtures should not be allowed.[51] Incidental damages accruing from the improper construction of a railroad cannot be recovered, the damages extending only to proper construction.[52] Where injury to an established business results, damages may be allowed based on the ordinary rules applicable to such injuries.[53] The destruction of a valuable frontage on another railroad right of way may be considered.[54]

The proper cost of regrading plaintiff's lot made necessary by a change of street grade,[55] and the depreciation in value if any of the entire tract, after deducting special benefits, is a proper element of damage, where a highway divides a tract into two parts.[56] Where a street is opened over railway tracks, the expense of planking the crossing[57] and the cost of removal of a water crane necessitated by the widening of a street across railway tracks should be considered in estimating the damages to the railroad company.[58]

Obstruction of plaintiff's view and impairment of use of his windmill by a railroad embankment may be recovered for.[59]

As to streets, a city is not an adjoining owner within the familiar rule limiting the damages for removal of lateral support, and where the excavation for a sewer injures a building on abutting lands, all damages caused the owner are recoverable.[60]

For the operation of pumping plants and driven wells by a city, resulting in the lowering of the water level of surrounding lands, the measure of damages is the diminution of the rental value of the land and not the value of the crops which might otherwise be raised thereon.[61] Where his business carried on upon the land has been interrupted or destroyed, the owner may recover for that,[62] and he may recover the cost of deepening a well made necessary by the operations of the city.[63] A public water board taking one of two separate mill rights belonging to a corporation is not obliged to take the other also, the business conducted at the two plants being entirely separate.[64]

Accrual and period of damages.[65]—Where a telegraph company builds along a public road before condemning, its acts are a continual trespass, and on subsequent application for appraisal the damages for permanent occupancy should be assessed as of the time of the application.[66]

Taking rights in public ways.[67]—For a railway in a street, depreciation of value caused by smoke, noise, loss of light and air, increased risk of fire and material interference with ingress and egress are properly considered.[68]

Estate or interest appropriated.[69]—Where land has already been dedicated by its owner for street purposes, the damages to the abutting owner on acquisition of the fee by the city for similar purposes is not the value of the land taken, but the effect on the value of their property by the taking.[70]

Sufficiency of damages.[71]—Where a pent road is forced across the land of an owner to whom it is of no benefit, damages less than the sum it will cost him to fence it are insufficient.[72]

its poles and wires in a street without consent of the abutting owner and without acquiring the right to do so in a lawful way is not a bar to proceeding by the company to condemn.[77] The filing of a petition by a railroad company gives it no rights as against another company which has received a deed of right of way from the landowner.[78] An injunctive order in condemnation proceedings restraining the landowner from continuing any action against plaintiff in such proceedings has no reference to an action for trespass on the land which accrued prior to the commencement of the proceedings.[79] Where a city and abutting property owners in good faith agree upon the damages to be paid for a street improvement, there is no occasion for submitting the question to the statutory tribunal.[80]

Applications by landowners for assessment of damages must be timely made,[81] but entry by a railroad company on land for survey and location is not an entry for location within the statute requiring that petition for compensation be brought within twelve months.[82] Limitations on the right to apply for assessment of damages may apply as well to nonresident infants as to other landowners.[83] Where a life tenant conveyed to a railroad company a right of way, he only conveyed the interest he had and not the remaindermen's interest, so that the statute began to run against the remaindermen only at the death of the life tenant.[84]

Conditions precedent; discontinuance or abandonment.[85]—Proceedings by a city[86] or by the United States to condemn lands may be dismissed at any time before actual acceptance of the property and payment therefor, without liability for costs or damages,[87] and without prejudice to a future application.[88] The right to abandon is not lost by obtaining a reassessment by a jury,[89] nor surrendered by a stipulation agreeing on the value and for judgment for plaintiff and that no judgment on further proceedings be had before the decision in another suit.[90] The court cannot dismiss of its own motion without notice,[91] and proceedings by a railroad company cannot be dismissed in Wisconsin after filing the award.[92]

Parties; bond.[93]—In a suit to condemn the right to erect telephones in a street, the fee of which is in abutting owners, the city is not a necessary party.[94] Where suit is brought against several owners, some of whom suffer default, and subsequently the action against those who answered is dismissed and proceedings recommenced under another statute, only those against whom judgment was not taken in the first suit need be joined.[95] That the mayor instead of the city council proceeds is immaterial, he having been ordered to proceed by the council.[96]

§ 9. Jurisdiction.[97]—Condemnation proceedings may be removed to the Federal court, the requisite diversity of citizenship and amount in controversy appearing,[98] and upon such removal, further proceedings in the state court may be enjoined.[99]

§ 10. Applications; petitions; pleadings.[1]—A petition by a telephone company in proceedings to condemn land in a street for poles and wires should not be dismissed because it seeks to acquire a fee in the land instead of a mere easement for its poles and wires,[2] nor is it defective for failure to allege the municipality has consented to the erection.[3] A bill of particulars may be demanded.[4] Merely defective averments are waived by failure to demur.[5]

§ 12. Hearing and determination of right to condemn.[7]—Where the owner objects that the quantity of land sought to be expropriated exceeds that which is necessary, the question presented, like the question of value, must be submitted to the jury and is subject to appeal.[8]

§ 13. Commissioners or other tribunal to assess damages; trial by jury.[9]—In New Jersey, an order of appointment of commissioners that does not fix the date on or before which they must file their report is defective.[10] Where an alleged abutting owner claims damages under the statute of New York for statutory change of grade and macadamization of a highway, and his ownership and the change of grade are both denied by the town, an issue is raised which must be settled before commissioners can be appointed to assess the damages.[11] In Louisiana, the district court may not increase the amount allowed by the commissioners, though it has statutory authority to "modify." It may set the report aside and refer it back to the same or new commissioners. The supreme court on appeal is not so restricted.[12] A statute providing that on condemnation all past damages shall be assessed by the committee must be construed as permissive merely on consent of the owner, as otherwise the statute would be invalid as interfering with jury trial.[13] An objection by a landowner to the assessment of damages by a committee where he has a right of jury trial is good, whether taken by demurrer to the application or otherwise.[14]

The right to jury trial in condemnation proceedings is constitutional in many states,[15] but not in Maine.[16] The general jury act of Louisiana did not repeal the provisions for juries in the expropriation law.[17] A landowner not satisfied with the award of the jury of seven in the District of Columbia is entitled to have a rehearing before a jury of twelve, though he accepts the award as to damages and appeals only as to benefits.[18] Where exceptions to the award of damages goes only to the amount of damages, a jury trial is proper.[19] On appeal from the award of assessors, the jury in Georgia cannot pass upon the necessity and propriety of the taking; the only question open to them is the amount of compensation.[20] For irregularity in drawing jury, the remedy is by challenge to array, in the absence of which the objection is waived.[21] All the owners of undivided interests in the tract constitute "one party," within the rule giving them peremptory challenges to each party.[22]

§ 14. The trial, or inquest, and hearings on the question of damages.[23]—The jury may resort, in determining the damages, to the result of their examination of the premises.[24] Where the condemnor allows the owner to assume the burden of proof as to damages, that being the only question litigated, it cannot afterward successfully claim the right to close the argument.[25]

Admissibility of evidence.[26]—Evidence as to the cost to the railroad company of filling up and improving the land to make it suitable for its purposes,[27] or that the land was of greater area than the owner or his vendor supposed it to be when sold, is immaterial on the question of damages for taking it.[28] Sales of neighboring pieces may be shown, but not by recitals in the deeds,[29] but where a witness has testified to value and stated that he based his opinion in part upon sales in the neighborhood, evidence of the prices of particular sales cannot be shown unless accompanied by proof that they were in fact different from what the witness understood them to be.[30] An assessment return made by the owner to the taxing officer is not admissible on the question of value.[31] Evidence of the value of similar property at a distance from that in suit is inadmissible in the absence of a showing that the conditions surrounding the two properties were similar, making their value equal.[32] Where a railroad cuts off a triangular piece of a farm, evidence of how similar injuries had affected other farms or how much the railroad company had paid for other similar pieces is immaterial.[33] Opinions of witnesses as to the incidental damages and benefits to the property that do not attach to other property are admissible.[34] Evidence that certain construction causing incidental damages was improper is admissible in behalf of the railroad company,[35] and where an embankment confining the waters of a lake has been improperly cut during the building of a railroad to the damage of the owner's lower lands, evidence as to what it would cost the company to restore the embankment is improper, the company not being liable in the condemnation suit for such damages.[36] Admission of evidence as to benefits is harmless where no damage is found,[37] and the exclusion of competent evidence of value is harmless where other competent evidence as to the same value was received, was undisputed, and no issue thereon raised.[38]

Witnesses.[39]—A witness who knows the rental value of lands in the neighborhood may state it, though he does not know the market value,[40] and mechanical engineers without knowledge as to the general market value of land in the vicinity may be permitted to testify to the value of the parcel as a manufacturing site.[41]

Sufficiency of evidence.[42]—The amount for which sales of land in the neighborhood have been made is not the only factor in determining the weight of a witness' testimony, since he may take into consideration his own knowledge of the surroundings and the use and capabilities of the property.[43] Expert evidence as to whether a switch is an element of danger so as to require its removal on the opening of a street over the track at that point is not conclusive on the question so as to require that the expense of removal be allowed as an element of the damages.[44] A written instrument binding a landowner to convey a right of way to a railroad company on payment of a certain sum specified as liquidated damages, which is obtained by it with a view of constructing its road and under which it is allowed to enter upon and appropriate the land, is conclusive as to the amount of damages, though unilateral as not binding the company to do anything.[45]

Instructions.[46]—Argumentative instructions[47] and those not based upon the evidence,[48] or alluding to its weight, are properly refused.[49] A charge from which the inference that double damages are allowable is error.[50]

§ 15. View of appropriated premises.[51]

§ 16. Verdict, report or award; judgment thereon, and lien and enforcement of judgment.[52]—The report or award must be filed as provided by statute.[53] Where the owner expressly waives his right to compensation for the land taken, a finding that it had no value is proper.[54] A judgment of condemnation relates back to the time of commencement of proceedings, not to the time of passing the ordinance authorizing it.[55]

Sufficiency.[56]—Where the owner brings suit for damages for the appropriation of right of way, a judgment framed as in an ordinary action for damages for a trespass is improper.[57]

Validity.[58]—The verdict need not find the value of the land taken separately from the damages to the remainder of the tract.[59] The jury cannot allow damages for distinct items and reach the total amount by adding them together,[60] or by taking the average of the estimates of the witnesses.[61] Inconsistent special findings will be set aside.[62] The judgment is not subject to collateral attack for irregularity in filing the verdict.[63]

Effect or conclusiveness.[64]—In street opening proceedings in New York, the presentation of the report for confirmation by the corporation counsel is regarded as the furtherance of the proceedings by the usual procedure, and does not preclude his opposition, either at the hearing thereon or on appeal.[65]

§ 17. Costs and expenses.[66]—Where there are several owners of different parcels, the proceeding as to each is a separate suit in which separate judgments should be entered entitling the owners to costs as a matter of law.[67] An order requiring plaintiff to deposit a certain sum to apply on costs accrued and to accrue is unauthorized.[68]

§ 18. Review of condemnation proceedings.[69]—The bond should describe the land, but failure may be cured by express reference therein to the report of the commissioners.[70] Mandamus will not issue in Ohio to compel the probate judge to order a railroad company to deposit the amount of the award or pay it to the landowner, where the company has appealed from the award, filed the statutory bond and has not taken possession of the property.[71]

Right to appeal.[72]—No appeal lies in the absence of statutory or constitutional provision therefor,[73] and property owners who have accepted money paid into court on a judgment and executed receipt in full cannot appeal.[74] No appeal lies in Indiana from an order denying an application for appraisers in a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn land for right of way.[75] Prior to the amendment of 1903, where the applicant in New Jersey paid the amount awarded into court or to the landowner, its right of appeal was barred, and that amendment did not impair the right of the landowner to money previously paid.[76]

Decisions reviewable.[77]—An order determining the amount of damages but expressly declining to determine whether the claimant is the owner of the lands is not final or appealable,[78] and reversal by the common pleas of Ohio of the judgment of the probate court is not such a final judgment as is reviewable by the supreme court.[79]

on appeal.[82] By allowing the evidence to go to the jury without objection, plaintiff admits its sufficiency to warrant an assessment of damages.[83]

Bringing up the cause; record.[84]—Rulings based on questions of fact can be reviewed only when the facts are properly before the court by bill of exception or otherwise.[85] In Utah, where the bill of exceptions and motion for new trial do not specify the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, the supreme court cannot consider the excessiveness of the award.[86]

Scope of review.[87]—The verdict of the jury is entitled to great weight,[88] and where rendered on conflicting evidence will generally be affirmed,[89] especially where the jury view the premises.[90] The constitutionality of a provision allowing entry by the condemnor before decree cannot be contested by an owner as to whom the jury have found no damages,[91] and defendant in proceedings to condemn land for a drainage ditch, whose land is outside the drainage district, cannot raise the constitutionality of the statute under which the district is organized on any ground going only to the manner of assessing benefits.[92] In Ohio, where the court of common pleas reverses on error the judgment of the probate court, it proceeds to trial of the case as though it had original jurisdiction thereof.[93] In Louisiana, the jurisdiction of the supreme court on appeal extends to all matters of both law and fact.[94]

Trial or hearing.[95]

Decision and determination.[96]—Where the evidence fails to show the legal existence of plaintiff corporation, the case will be reversed and remanded for further proof.[97] Where, after payment of the award the condemnor appeals and procures reversal and after lapse of several years redockets the case and secures a smaller award, restitution of the difference cannot be awarded against the owner who has had no notice.[98]

1. Unreasonable flowage by defendant's dam. Gordon v. International Paper Co., 72 N. H. 346, 56 A. 757. Conversion of personal property abandoned in street. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co. v. New York, 88 N. Y. S. 912. Where the carrying out of plan adopted for improvement of a city street results in dam-

Carolina for a person whose lands are injured by the discharge of sewage into a stream is exclusive and the land owner cannot bring suit for a tort or to abate it as a nuisance.[2] Where, pending proceedings, the condemnor takes possession and builds its railroad and subsequently dismisses the proceedings, it becomes a trespasser ab initio and the owner may so treat it and is not confined to the statutory writ of ad quod damnum.[3] The vendor is not a necessary party where suit is not brought until after the whole purchase price has been paid and the deed delivered, though the injury occurred before delivery of the deed,[4] and where a widow holds title in trust for herself and her husband's heirs, they may maintain a single action for damages.[5]

Right of action.[6]—A landowner whose property has been taken for public use without compensation may maintain an action at law to recover damages for the trespass,[7] but suit must be timely brought,[8] and after a lapse of 20 years, it will be presumed that the damages have been paid and in equitable ejectment the burden is on plaintiffs to prove the contrary.[9]

Pleading, issues and proof.[10]—If plaintiff desires to restrict the width of defendant railroad company's right of way, he must allege that full width is not necessary,[11] and in the absence of such averments, it will be presumed that the proceedings were intended to vest a right of way of the width fixed by defendant's charter.[12] In an action for damages from a change of street grade, the defense of special benefits need not be pleaded and proved as a special defense.[13]

Burden of proof; questions of fact; witnesses.[14]—The cost of regrading plaintiff's lot is admissible on the question of his damages for a change of grade of a street, in connection with facts showing its necessity and reasonableness.[15]

View of premises; instructions.[16]

Verdict, judgment and allowance of damages.[17]—Where the defendant was a trespasser, the cost of restoring the land to its former condition is the proper measure of damages where such cost is less than the diminution in its market value by the trespass, but if such cost is more than the diminution of market value, the latter is the measure.[18]

gated in the proceeding itself. Injunction will lie to restrain the taking or use of private property where no compensation has been made or condemnation proceedings instituted,[23] provided it is sought before the public have acquired a prescriptive right to the land taken,[24] and is the proper remedy of an abutting owner for an additional servitude which the user has no power to condemn.[25] A railroad company in Ohio may enjoin the condemnation of land for streets across its right of way, where it shows that the opening of such streets will unreasonably interfere with its business.[26] Injunction will not issue against the vacation of streets by a city for the benefit of a railroad company, since, if the adjoining owner has any rights requiring compensation, his legal remedy is ample.[27]

Limitation and laches.[28]—Presumption of payment may arise from lapse of time,[29] and owners of land through which an irrigation canal is built cannot abate it by action nor destroy it where they have stood by and seen it built without protest and had a right to compensation, but made no move to obtain it.[30]

Parties.[31] Pleading and issues.[32]

Decree, judgment or order.[33]—Though the relief sought is abatement of the entire use of a street by a street railroad company, injunction may be granted to the extent to which complainant is entitled,[34] and where suit is brought to enjoin a continuing trespass and for damages for past injuries caused by a city's operation of wells and pumping stations, depriving plaintiff's land of its water supply, the judgment may properly award damages for the past injury and deny the injunction provided the city pays or tenders a sum awarded as damages for permanent injury to the fee.[35]

§ 20. Payment and distribution of sum awarded; title or interest requiring compensation.[36]—A purchaser on contract who has not made sufficient payments to entitle him to a deed is not an "owner" entitled to damages for a change of grade of a street dedicated by his vendor after his contract was made,[37] and a tenant at will who has been given reasonable notice on condemnation of the land cannot recover damages for injury to his property by destruction of the building,[38] but in an action for damages for change of street grade, it is no defense that plaintiff purchased with notice that the order for the change had already been made.[39] Where at the time a lease is executed, an elevated railroad is in full operation in front of the premises, of which fact the lessee is aware, he cannot recover on account of the operation of the road during that term, though the lease be merely a renewal of a prior one, during the term of which he can recover;[40] but the owner of a building built on land under a perpetual lease subject to readjustment of rental may recover for injury by an elevated railroad, built prior to his purchase of it and prior to the last readjustment of rent.[41] One who holds land by devise to himself in trust as executor to himself and others may maintain action,[42] and where, pending suit, a tax lien on the land is foreclosed, the lien holder becoming vested with absolute title to the premises, he is entitled to the damages awarded.[43]

Sufficiency of payment.[44]

Distribution.[45]—Where there is a contest over the ownership of the money paid into court on condemnation, the court can order a portion of it withheld to satisfy special tax bills standing against the land.[46] Heirs in fact entitled to a share in the land, though not so appearing, are entitled to their share of the award,[47] and where a lease provides for removal of the buildings at the end of the term, the lessee is entitled to that portion of the award allowed for buildings.[48]

Lien and enforcement.[49]—Execution cannot issue on the award of commissioners which has been set aside, the question of damages having been referred to a jury.[50]

§ 21. Ownership or interest acquired.[51]—The petitioner acquires no land or interest therein not specifically described in his petition,[52] but takes buildings on the land.[53] The quantity of interest which a railroad company takes is measured by the terms of the statute authorizing exercise of the power,[54] generally an easement in the surface, the landowner retaining title to the fee including the right to remove all minerals not needed for the support of the surface.[55] Where a railroad company acquires right of way across lands and a private road thereon belonging to the owner of the lands, it has the same title to its road crossing that it has to the other lands.[56] A telegraph company acquires only an easement in the right of way of a railroad company condemned for the purpose of constructing and operating a telegraph line thereon.[57]

§ 22. Transfer of possession and passing of title.[58]—Where the condemnor has tendered the amount of the award, the owner cannot prevent its taking possession by appeal and filing a supersedeas bond.[59] Occupation cannot be enjoined pending appeal, where a railroad seeking to cross another has paid the amount of the award into court, and the ground alleged is one that makes it voidable at most.[60]

This topic treats of the general rules of equity and of procedure in equity in those states where the adoption of a code has not changed equitable forms and procedure, and also of such matters of procedure as remain under the codes.[65] The jurisdiction of equity over particular subject-matters is retained, but the equitable jurisdiction of particular courts is elsewhere treated.[66] The question of the legal or equitable character of a controversy sometimes arises in determining the right to a jury,[67] or in determining upon what calendar the cause shall be placed for trial,[68] and in many other matters of procedure especially under the codes.[69]

§ 1. Nature of, and general principles controlling, equity.[70]—Equities are rights which are established and enforced in accordance with the principles of equity jurisprudence under some general principle or acknowledged rule governing courts of equity. Thus, while equity is based upon moral right and natural justice, it is not coextensive with them.[71]

§ 2. Equity jurisdiction and occasion for relief. A. In general.[72]—The jurisdiction of courts of equity is defined by principles, not by precedents; the former govern, the latter illustrate.[73] Whether a cause of action is equitable or legal in its nature depends upon the relief prayed for,[74] and which, under the facts, can be granted.[75] The cause being of either legal or equitable cognizance, a court of equity may acquire jurisdiction by the consent of the parties,[76] and once rightfully obtaining full jurisdiction, it will retain such jurisdiction to the end of the controversy,[77] and to the exclusion of the law court,[78] but equity will not intervene where the case has been determined by a law court having jurisdiction.[79] Courts of equity having concurrent jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the court first taking actual cognizance of the controversy, is exclusive in the absence of any peculiar equitable grounds to the contrary.[80]

A defendant is entitled to raise by plea the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and to demand in limine the judgment of the court whether he should answer the bill.[81] Such plea showing lack of jurisdiction over the defendant need not generally designate another tribunal in which he may be sued.[82] Lack of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the bill, the question must be raised by demurrer.[83]

The distinctions between the jurisdiction of courts of law and courts of chancery, as recognized and practiced in the Federal courts, are not mere distinctions in name or in form, but are fundamental differences of substance.[84] A statute of a state creating an equitable right, capable of enforcement by proceedings in conformity with the pleadings and practice in equity, the right will be enforced in the courts of the United States[85] if the latter have jurisdiction of the cause.[86]

The right to proceed at law or in equity.[87]—Though one of the parties be estopped to claim that the suit is legal in its nature, the court is not bound thereby.[88] A court of general equity jurisdiction on appeal from a court having no equitable jurisdiction cannot try the cause as one in equity.[89] Failure to set up the facts relied on, in a bill in equity, as an equitable defense to an action by defendant, does not bar plaintiff from obtaining relief in his suit.[90] Courts observing the distinction between legal and equitable rights, an equitable defense cannot be maintained in an action brought on the law side of the court;[91] this does not, however, seem to be the rule where the mixed system of jurisprudence prevails.[92]

Effect of code or statutory provisions.[93]—In states where the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished, the distinction between legal and equitable principles is still retained,[94] and one court has jurisdiction of both legal and equitable actions; in an action partly legal and partly equitable, both legal and equitable principles are applied.[95] In some states, equitable principles may be applied in certain law actions.[96]

(§ 2) B. Principles and maxims controlling application of equitable relief. General maxims.[97]—New principles of equity are not to be added by judicial policy, but old ones are subject to development to meet new conditions.[98]

He who comes into equity must come with clean hands,[99] but this maxim requires only that the plaintiff must not be guilty of reprehensible conduct with respect to the subject-matter of his suit.[1]

He who seeks equity must do equity.[2] This maxim applies only to a party asserting equitable rights or seeking equitable relief,[3] and a defendant can set up

Though an agreement between husband and wife to separate and live apart is void, equity will not give relief from a conveyance by him to her in consideration of such agreement, the conveyance being voluntary and not procured by fraud. Anderson v. Anderson [Wis.] 100 N. W. 829. Specific performance or an accounting will not be granted in order that complainants may avail themselves of the proceeds of an unlawful act. Illingworth v. Bloemecke [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 566. One who is himself obstructing a highway by means of a fence cannot maintain a suit in equity to enjoin another from maintaining a fence in the highway. Brutsche v. Bowers, 122 Iowa, 226, 97 N. W. 1076. A board of trade cannot invoke the aid of equity to protect its claimed property right in quotations. Christie Grain & Stock Co. v. Board of Trade of City of Chicago [C. C. A.] 125 F. 161. Contra: Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Kinsey Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 507. Plaintiff, by secret agreement obtaining commissions from vendor for sale of property, held, that he was not entitled to specific performance to collect commissions from vendee. York v. Searles, 90 N. Y. S. 37. That deeds were executed by complainant for a wrong purpose does not deprive equity of jurisdiction to cancel them where the defendants were guilty of a breach of trust whereby the deeds were recorded. Bunn v. Stewart [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1091. Where a champertous contract for attorneys' services was entered into between the attorneys and their client, the client is not debarred from relief in equity. Bowman [C. C. A.] 127 F. 257), hence where consideration was a preexisting indebtedness, it need not be returned (Jenkins v. Jonas Schwab Co., 138 Ala. 664, 35 So. 649). One claiming property must pay for improvements bona fide placed thereon, and with complainants' knowledge and acquiescence. Hunter v. McDevitt, 12 N. D. 505, 97 N. W. 869. One is not liable for entering a default judgment by mistake, the mistake being caused by the neglect of the judgment debtor. Clark v. Smith, 90 App. Div. 477, 86 N. Y. S. 472. An injunction will not be allowed on account of the mere failure of the taxing officers to fulfill the requirements of the statute in the levy and assessment, but it must appear that the tax itself was inequitable for the reason that the property was not taxable. Horton v. Driskell [Wyo.] 77 P. 354. A bill by stockholders to set aside an alleged fraudulent sale of property by the corporation to defendants, which alleges that they have sold a portion of the property to bona fide purchasers, prays an accounting by defendants, and offers to allow them credit for any sums expended which will inure to the benefit of the corporation, contains a sufficient offer to do equity. Kessler & Co. v. Ensley, 129 F. 397. Adverse equities growing out of or being closely connected with the subject-matter of the suit are protected by giving plaintiff his relief only on condition that he recognizes the equities of defendant. Lynch v. Burt [C. C. A.] 132 F. 417.

an equitable defense so far, and so far only, as equity on the whole transaction requires.[4]

Where equities are equal, the law prevails.[5] The equities of the United States appeal to a court of chancery with the same but with no greater force than those of an individual in like circumstances.[6]

Equity acts in personam and not in rem.[7]

Equity regards that as done which in good faith ought to be done.[8]

Existence of an adequate remedy at law.[9]—There being an adequate remedy at law, equity has no jurisdiction of the cause.[10] The mere fact that a legal remedy exists is insufficient to deprive equity of jurisdiction, unless the legal remedy is as practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity.[11] As to whether or not there is an adequate remedy

ILLUSTRATIONS. Cases in which the legal remedy is held to be adequate.

Accounting: See 1 Curr. L. 1053. The accounts being unilateral and no discovery being sought, equity will not entertain jurisdiction. Sprigg v. Com. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 206 Pa. 548, 56 A. 33; London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Doyle, 130 F. 719. Thus equity has no jurisdiction where the suit was to discover the exact amount paid by defendant to his employes during a period of one year. Id. Where the items for which plaintiff seeks to recover are simply items of charges for services rendered and expenses incurred and damages suffered, while the various counterclaims relate to specific claims by defendant against plaintiff for damages by way of tort or breach of contract. Mayo v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 529. So where a defendant sued for a balance due on account for goods sold and money loaned who pleads a set-off and asks for a judgment for the balance. Jones v. Baker [Ark.] 81 S. W. 607.

Contracts in general: See 1 Curr. L. 1053. Equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract for the sale to plaintiff of a number of cows at a stated price per head, where there is no evidence to show that the cows have any distinctive or peculiar value, which cannot be determined in an action at law for damages, or that defendant is insolvent. Kane v. Luckman, 131 F. 609. Agreement not to engage in certain business in a particular locality, where by the agreement a certain sum is stipulated as liquidated damages. Rucker v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 627. Right of a subcontractor to receive payment, he having waived his statutory lien. McCabe v. Rapid Transit Subway Const. Co., 127 F. 465. All cases involving the mere expenditure of money or the performance of services upon a parol agreement for an interest in land. McKinley v. Lloyd, 128 F. 519.

Damages: The mere fact that proof of damages is difficult does not give equity jurisdiction. Sawyer v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 100.

Estates of decedents: Under B. & C. Comp. § 385, an executor de son tort has an adequate remedy at law to recover payments made by him in the rightful course of administration. Slate v. Henkle [Or.] 78 P. 325.

Insurance: See 1 Curr. L. 1053, Contracts. Before loss under a policy of insurance, the company which issued it has no adequate remedy at law for fraud, false representations, or concealments which procured its issue. Riggs v. Union Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 207. After loss, the company has an adequate remedy at law. Id. The fact that the action at law on the policy will be brought in a state court does not render the remedy at law in the Federal court inadequate. Id. Nor does the fact that the license of the company to do business in the state in which the action at law is to be commenced will be revoked if the company removes that action to a Federal court. Id. That the insured died pending the suit does not deprive the court of equity of jurisdiction. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971.

Leases: See 1 Curr. L. 1053, Contracts. Bill by a lessee against his lessor and a subsequent lessee for relief from a forfeiture of the lease on the ground of nonpayment at law depends upon the character of the case as disclosed by the pleadings,[12] and of royalties due at a certain time, though alleging that complainant had paid all the royalties due. Howison v. Baird, 138 Ala. 129, 35 So. 62.

Mandamus will not issue in the absence of an allegation of insolvency or that the property is likely to be removed. Ohio v. Chambers, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 57.

Mortgages: See 1 Curr. L. 1054, Penalties. Will not cancel instrument, payment being alleged. Dorman v. McDonald [Fla.] 36 So. 52. The right of a mortgage creditor to sue and collect rents from a tenant held inadequate where the creditor is entitled to such rents until the payment of his entire debt, and the rents to accrue under the outstanding lease will be insufficient to extinguish his claim. De Berrera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 637. In a suit to enjoin the holder of chattel mortgages and judgments from enforcing them, defendant cannot, by cross bill, recover a sum paid for attorney's fees in connection with the assignment to him of one of the judgments. Miller v. De Yoe [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 179.

Pledges: Suit to redeem stock held by a bank as collateral security and sold for an inadequate price. Arbogast v. American Exch. Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 125 F. 518.

Political questions: The general rule is that equity will not interfere in any matter growing out of an election which may be determined by a contest prescribed in the statute providing for the election. Ogburn v. Elmore [Ga.] 48 S. E. 702. In a factional dispute in a political party, the time not having arrived when the secretary of state was required to make certification of nominations, held no adequate remedy at law to determine which person was entitled to such certification. State v. Houser [Wis.] 100 N. W. 964.

Releases: Suit to avoid a release on ground of fraud. Such v. Bank of State of New York, 127 F. 450.

Remedies against corporations, officers, or stockholders: See 1 Curr. L. 1054. Suit to hold a director personally liable for the debts of a corporation. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 180, § 21, providing that the remedy shall be an action on the case. Legg & Co. v. Dewing [R. I.] 57 A. 373. Rescission of a franchise will not be granted for noncompliance with conditions. Seymour Water Co. v. Seymour [Ind.] 70 N. E. 514. Minority, dissenting, nonparticipating stockholders cannot maintain a suit in equity to have a sale of corporation's property enjoined on the ground that it broke an implied contract between the stockholders and the corporation, in that the latter should be operated for the purposes for which it was incorporated. Tanner v. Lindell R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 155.

Right of property or possession: See 1 Curr. L. 1053. Suit to recover money held in trust. Downs v. Downs' Ex'r, 75 Vt. 383, 56 A. 9. Will not enjoin the wrongful removal of personal property where such property can be recovered at law and the tort feasor is not insolvent. Kistler v. Weaver, 135 N. C. 388, 47 S. E. 478.

Action of ejectment as an adequate remedy to try the legal title in a partition suit. Ellis v. Feist [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 369. Suit for an injunction, and reformation of a deed. Marshall v. Homler, 13 Okl. 264, 74 P. 368. Issues of adverse possession (Tudor Boiler Mfg. Co. v. Greenwald Co., 5 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 37), to determine the rights to royalties on gas and taken from the land (Zinn v. Zinn, 54 W. Va. 483, 46 S. E. 202), or abandonment (Tudor Boiler Mfg. Co. v. Greenwald Co., 5 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 37), even though equitable remedies are necessary. Where whole question was whether use of a passageway amounted to a dedication or was only permissive. Scanlin v. Conshohocken Borough [Pa.] 58 A. 122. Partial ouster of possession by a co-tenant. Brown v. Reed [Neb.] 100 N. W. 143.

Torts or criminal acts: See 1 Curr. L. 1053. Wrongful destruction of a building. Wilson v. Wilson [R. I.] 56 A. 773. Libel or slander. Edison v. Edison, Jr., Chemical Co., 128 F. 957. Nuisance. Dennis v. Mobile & M. R. Co., 137 Ala. 649, 35 So. 30. Will not compel a railroad company to restore a crossing over its track. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 25 Ky. L. R. 1459, 78 S. W. 160. Wrongful seizure of property to enforce the payment of taxes. City of Jacksonville v. Massey Business College [Fla.] 36 So. 432. Sale of nontransferable railroad tickets. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Reeves, 85 N. Y. S. 28.

Trespass: See 1 Curr. L. 1054. Continuing trespass. Christman v. Howe [Ind.] 70 N. E. 809.

Cases in which the legal remedy is held inadequate.

Accounting and bill of discovery: Equity has jurisdiction where the accounts are mutual, complicated, and a discovery is sought. Gulf Red Cedar Co. v. Crenshaw, 138 Ala. 134, 35 So. 50; Davis v. Wilson [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 704; Mayo v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 529; Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Bell Tel. Co. [C. C. A.] 125 F. 342. The cause being transferred to the equity docket as involving a complicated account, the fact that the cause is subsequently simplified by agreement will not oust the equity side of the court of jurisdiction, no motion to remand being made. Ellison v. Dunlap, 25 Ky. L. R. 1495, 78 S. W. 155. Revision 1898, § 118 does not deprive a court of chancery of its jurisdiction of a suit for an accounting. Evans v. Evans [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 872. Applied in: Partnership account. Schulsinger v. Blau, 84 App. Div. 390, 82 N. Y. S. 686. Where one held property in a fiduciary capacity. Slayback v. Raymond, 93 App. Div. 326, 87 N. Y. S. 931. Suit to recover share of profits from joint adventure. Weldon v. Brown, 89 App. Div. 586, 85 N. Y. S. 599. Accounting between cotenants. Gulf Red Cedar Co. v. Crenshaw, 138 Ala. 134, 35 So. 50.

Equity has jurisdiction of a bill of discovery. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 126 F. 998.

Discovery: Where consignee did not know who was liable for conversion of goods shipped. Mississippi Cotton Compress & Warehouse Co. v. M. Levy & Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 281.

Contracts: An action for damages for the breach of a stipulation that an action at law which has passed to judgment shall abide the final decision of another action is such defense to be available must be pleaded[13] unless the case is one not cognizable in equity.[14] The adequacy of the legal remedy depending upon a pure question of law, the court may determine such question either in its equitable or legal capacity.[15] An objection that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law is jurisdictional,[16] and the court may, either on objection or of its own motion, dismiss the bill at any stage of the cause.[17] In New York, transferring the cause to the not as practical and efficient to attain the ends of justice as a suit in equity for specific performance of the contract, where the final decision of the other action requires a reversal of the judgment. Brown v. Arnold [C. C. A.] 131 F. 723.

Cancellation, rescission or reformation of contracts: See 1 Curr. L. 1055. Suit to have contract under which property was delivered to another in trust rescinded. Slayback v. Raymond, 93 App. Div. 326, 87 N. Y. S. 931.

Enforcement of contracts: See 1 Curr. L. 1055. Specific performance will be decreed to enforce a family agreement. Clawson v. Brewer [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 598. A suit to enforce an annuity contract issued as payment for an insurance policy held cognizable in equity, as under the contract, the deceased's children had at that time no present right of action. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971.

Enforcement of claims in bankruptcy: See 1 Curr. L. 1056. A trustee in bankruptcy may recover an alleged preferential payment made by the bankrupt. Pond v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 124 F. 992. See Bankruptcy, 3 Curr. L. 434.

Mandomus: The fact that a writ of mandamus might be appropriate to the facts alleged in a bill will not oust the court of equity of jurisdiction. Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., 130 F. 246.

Matters relating to corporations: See 1 Curr. L. 1056. Where members of a membership corporation were illegally expelled. Stein v. Marks, 44 Misc. 140, 89 N. Y. S. 921. Where a shareholder in a national bank sues as such and as a cestui que trust, for the appointment of a receiver. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, 76 Conn. 252, 56 A. 574.

Mortgages: Will redeem property from a mortgage after default in the payment of the mortgage debt. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Wright [C. C. A.] 126 F. 82. Sequestration held an inadequate remedy to collect rents for mortgage creditor. De Berrera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 637. That plaintiffs, in an action to set aside a mortgage procured by fraudulent representations, have an adequate remedy by way of defense to an action to foreclose the mortgage, will not defeat the plaintiff's equitable remedy. Hill v. Gettys, 135 N. C. 373, 47 S. E. 449.

Multiplicity of suits: See 1 Curr. L. 1055. A multiplicity of actions being necessary, the remedy at law is inadequate. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971; Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., 130 F. 246. Suit by property owners to enjoin the laying of street car tracks in the street. Holst v. Savannah Elec. Co., 131 F. 931. An action for rents against tenant held insufficient as involving a multiplicity of suits. De Berrera v. Frost [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 637.

Pledges: Equity has jurisdiction to enforce pledges and other liens securing obligations. Ingersoll v. Coram, 127 F. 418. Suit to redeem stock unfairly sold by the pledgor. Hagan v. Continental Nat. Bank [Mo.] 81 S. W. 171.

Trespass and other injuries to real property, or the possession or enjoyment thereof or rights therein: See 1 Curr. L. 1055. Continuous interference with plaintiff's right of passage over a certain street. Driscoll v. Smith, 184 Mass. 221, 68 N. E. 210. A bill by a railroad company against a number of defendants, alleging that as owners of lands through which its road runs they are interfering with its right of way, denying its right to the same, threatening suits and preventing it from keeping its roadbed in repair. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith [C. C. A.] 128 F. 1. Will enjoin interference with easements or their disturbance or destruction, actual or threatened. Id. A remainderman may, during the existence of the particular estate, maintain a suit in equity to have a cloud removed from his title. Keyes v. Ketrick [R. I.] 56 A. 770.

Will compel a railroad company to replace a farm crossing to which the owner of the land is entitled. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks, 25 Ky. L. R. 1307, 77 S. W. 693. Where a railroad company, under an agreement with a cotton compress company, delivered to a consignee cotton compress tickets calling, not for specific bales, but for an equal number of similar bales and there was a shortage in a shipment. Mississippi Cotton Compress & Warehouse Co. v. M. Levy & Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 281. Village has no adequate remedy at law for the construction of a railroad over its main street at grade without approval of the railroad commissioners, when one-fourth of the expense of a subsequent change of the route would fall on it. Village of Bolivar v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 88 App. Div. 387, 84 N. Y. S. 678. Where injury is irreparable. Palatka Waterworks v. City of Palatka, 127 F. 161.

Other Torts: See 1 Curr. L. 1055, Trespass, etc. Will restrain brokers from dealing in nontransferable railroad tickets. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Caffrey, 128 F. 770.

jury trial calendar is the proper procedure.[18] No objection being made, the court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, retain the cause.[19]

In order to sue in equity one must have diligently pursued[20] and exhausted[21] his legal remedies.

Doing complete justice.[22]—A court of equity having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, it will retain the case to do complete justice and grant complete relief.[23] This power is plenary,[24] but its exercise is limited by the scope of the allegations of the bill or other pleadings;[25] and to authorize legal relief some special and substantial ground of equitable jurisdiction must be alleged and proved.[26]

Multiplicity of suits.[27]—Equity has jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits.[28] This doctrine rests upon the inadequacy of the legal remedy.[29] There is no hard and fast rule by which jurisdiction in equity on the ground of the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits may be determined,[30] but generally where a number of suits arise out of the same transaction and the decision in each depends upon the same principles of law, equity has jurisdiction of the combined suit.[31] A court of equity will not intervene, however, unless a probability of a multiplicity of suits is shown,[32] and in the case of questions triable by a jury, it is an appeal to the grace of the court.[33]

(§ 2) C. Occasions for, and subjects of, equitable relief.[34]—Fraud[35] and misrepresentation[36] save where a judgment for damages affords adequate relief,[37] mistake,[38] trusts,[39] impending irreparable injuries,[40] protection of the rights of members of a corporation,[41] reasonableness of salaries paid corporate officers,[42] winding up the affairs of an insolvent corporation,[43] the protection of minors, incompetents, and lunatics,[44] removing clouds from title,[45] and determining the use of conflicting easements,[46] are subjects of equitable jurisdiction. Equity has no jurisdiction to prevent impending injuries unless it be shown that the wrong which is feared will probably result from the wrongful acts of the parties before the court, without the intervention of persons to the court unknown.[47]

Equity is conversant only with matters of property and the maintenance of civil rights,[48] and has no criminal jurisdiction.[49]

Laches is a matter of defense, the burden of proving which is upon defendant,[68] and in some states should be raised by answer.[69]

Excusable delay.[70]—Lack of knowledge, the circumstances not demanding inquiry, excuses delay.[71]

Application of analogous statutes of limitation.[72]—Under ordinary circumstances, a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches before, and will be stayed after, the time fixed by the analogous limitation at law,[73] though this rule may be changed by circumstances rendering the application of the rule inequitable.[74] The suit being brought within the time fixed by the analogous statute, the burden is on the defendant to show, either from the face of the bill or by his answer, that extraordinary circumstances exist which require the application of the doctrine of laches;[75] suit being brought after the statutory time, the burden is on the complainant to show in his bill that it would be inequitable to apply it to his case.[76] A legal demand sued on in equity is subject to the statute of limitations, and not laches.[77]

§ 4. Practice and procedure in general.[78]—Rules of procedure in chancery should be liberally construed.[79] Jurisdiction must attach,[80] and a defendant appearing conditionally and contesting the question of jurisdiction must confine himself, in his pleadings, strictly to this issue. If he pleads to the merits, he submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court.[81] No jurisdictional error in regard to the subject-matter can be committed so long as there is no prejudicial departure from established practice.[82] The right to consolidate several equitable actions, which might have been brought as one, into one exists independent of statutory authority.[83] A chancery suit can only be begun by filing a bill.[84] The original

NOTE. Consolidation of causes: There is considerable confusion concerning the bill being lost or destroyed, a copy may be filed, the suit being begun as of the date of filing the first bill.[85] Illegal service of a subpoena will not be set aside on motion.[86] In Georgia, the first term of an equity case may, by consent of the parties, become the trial term.[87]

§ 5. Parties.[88]—A suit in equity cannot be in the name of the nominal for use of the real party in interest,[89] and all persons legally or beneficially interested in the subject-matter must be joined.[90] The application right of courts of equity to consolidate causes pending therein, without the consent of the parties, or certain of the parties, to such causes. In some jurisdictions, it is held that the question is purely one of practice, and that courts of equity have inherent power, in their discretion, to consolidate causes pending therein for the purpose of avoiding multiplicity of suits and trials, where the consolidation can work no injury to any party, and that the power is essential to the proper administration of justice, and does not depend upon any statute for its exercise. By other cases it is held that because the books of equity practice were entirely silent on the subject, it may be fairly inferred that no such practice existed, and consequently it is said that a court of chancery has no power to consolidate independent suits, contrary to the wishes of the parties. ILLUSTRATIONS. Assignments: An assignment being absolute and unconditional, leaving no equitable interest whatever in the assignor, and the intent and validity of the assignment not being doubted or denied, and there being no remaining liability in the assignor to be affected by the decree, it is not necessary to make the latter a party. O'Shaugnessy v. Humes, 129 F. 953. Heirs at law of a decedent who assigned an undivided interest in their shares of his estate to another, who agreed, in consideration thereof, to employ and pay counsel to contest the will, and do all things proper to that end, it being expressly stipulated that the assignors should not be subjected to further liability, are neither necessary nor proper parties to a suit to establish a lien upon their shares for services rendered by counsel under employment by the assignee. Ingersoll v. Coram, 127 F. 418.

Leases: A person having a leasehold interest in real estate which he has assigned to another is not a necessary party to a suit to foreclose a trust deed given by the assignee, though he may be liable for the rent on the original lease. Unity Co. v. Equitable Trust Co., 204 Ill. 595, 68 N. E. 654.

Matters concerning corporate interests: In a shareholders' suit to enforce a corporate right in protection of their equitable interest in the corporate assets, the corporation is a necessary party (Kidd v. New Hampshire Traction Co., 72 N. H. 273, 56 A. 465), but stockholders in a foreign corporation may maintain a suit for the property of the corporation within the court's jurisdiction though the corporation neither appears nor is served with process within the jurisdiction (Id.).

Mortgages: In an action by a mortgagor's vendee to enforce a trust against the mortgagee, the widow of the mortgagor, under an agreement, having an interest in the equity of redemption is a proper party. Phillips v. Hardenburg [Mo.] 80 S. W. 891. Suit by mortgagee to restrain interference by third persons with mortgaged property held mortgagor not a necessary party. Ex parte Haggerty, 124 F. 441. Where one is attempting to foreclose a mortgage against the holder of the legal title, with knowledge that another was the equitable owner of the premises and that complainant had acquired the property by breach of the purpose for which it was created, held a court of equity would stay the proceedings at any stage of their progress short of the actual intervention of a bona fide purchaser. Consolidation Nat. Bank v. Larkins [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 727.

NOTE. Distinction between parties at law and in equity: The doctrine as to parties constitutes one of the most striking differences between the proceedings in courts of law and the proceedings in courts of equity.

of this rule generally rests in the discretion of the court,[91] and if the joinder of an interested party would oust the court of jurisdiction, he need not be made a party providing a final decree, consistent with equity and good conscience, can be made between the parties before the court,[92] or the court lacking jurisdiction over certain parties, it may proceed without them as far as justice dictates,[93] and new parties may be joined even after reversal of final judgment on appeal, the cause being remanded.[94] A bill is not defective for want of parties if in any one state of facts charged the parties would not be necessary.[95] A motion to dismiss a bill for want of a necessary party cannot be granted unless the defect is so radical that the court of its own motion would hold the suit until the defect could be remedied, or if irremediable, would dismiss the suit.[96] In order to make one a party to the suit, the bill must contain some allegation showing his interest or claim to interest in the subject-matter in controversy.[97] The cause of action being several as well as joint, the absence of one joint obligor will not prevent the interference of the court.[98] In most states a suit in chancery survives the death of any of the parties if the right survives,[99] but the subsequent proceedings must be conducted against those in privity with the deceased.[1]

Bringing in new parties; intervention.[2]—One having an interest in the subject-matter of the suit may intervene and become a party to the suit.[3]

§ 6. Pleading. A. General rules.[4]—A pleading is construed most strongly against the pleader.[5] Where a plea in bar is filed to a suit in equity before answer and its averments are in conflict with those in the bill, the averment in the bill will control though the plea is verified.[6] The federal conformity act by its terms does not apply to equity causes, in which the federal courts are governed by the rules of equity pleading, regardless of the local practice.[7] Equity rule 94 that the bill of a stockholder, founded on rights of the corporation, shall be verified by oath, is only applicable to a bill originally filed in a federal court.[8]

(§ 6) B. Original bill, petition, or complaint.[9]—An original bill to set aside

Courts of law usually require no more than the parties directly and immediately interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and whose interests are of a strictly legal nature, shall be parties to it. At law, a disputed issue alone is contested. The immediate disputants alone are bound by the decision, and they alone are proper parties to the action. All other persons who have merely an equitable or remote interest are not only not required to be parties, but are excluded from being parties, and, if any are improperly joined, the fault may be fatal to the suit. Story, Eq. Pl. § 76. In equity, however, a decree is asked, and not a decision only; and it is therefore requisite that all persons should be before the court whose interests may be affected by the proposed decree, or whose concurrence is necessary to a complete arrangement. Story, Eq. Pl. § 76a; Meek v. Spracher, 87 Va. 162, 12 S. E. 397; Foster Eq. Pr. (3rd Ed.) § 42. Thus, for example, at law, the executor and the heir cannot join or be joined in an action, although each may have an interest in the controversy, but in equity they may both join and be joined, and both are often necessary and proper parties. Story Eq. Pl. § 76; Knight v. Knight, 3 P. Wms. 333.—From Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. 34, § 18.

a decree cannot be maintained on the ground of irregularities and errors which might have been corrected on appeal or by a bill of review.[10] The adequacy of a complaint as a bill of discovery is destroyed by waiving answer under oath.[11]

Sufficiency of allegations.[12]—Prolixity and verbosity do not warrant striking the bill from the files, when the redundant matter can to a large extent be eliminated on exceptions.[13] Impertinent allegations will be stricken out.[14] Complainant must allege, clearly and definitely, in his bill, every fact that is necessary to relief;[15] such allegations must not be mere pretexts,[16] though it is unnecessary that the cause of action or the evidence of it be specifically set out.[17] The question of whether a petition states a cause of action, or discloses grounds of equitable relief, may be raised at any stage of the proceedings in the appellate court, up to and including the filing of a motion for a rehearing,[18] though, in the absence of a demurrer or motion, unless there is a total omission to allege some essential fact, the petition will be held good upon an objection to the introduction of any evidence.[19] The bill must show that some ground for equitable intervention exists,[20] and that complainant has exhausted his legal remedies.[21] The allegations must not be inconsistent with the relief sought.[22] There being a delay in bringing the action, the complaint must show reasonable diligence.[23] If any one ground alleged is sufficient, the cause will be retained.[24] An allegation of a demand that suit be instituted for the recovery of personal property will include the taking of the necessary steps as conditions precedent to the bringing of the suit.[25]

Multifariousness.[26]—Several causes of action arising from a common cause may be joined in a bill directed against several defendants, though their several interests have no connection, and are not co-extensive with the interests of the others. Bills held multifarious: See 1 Curr. L. 1070. Where a bill brought against a trustee for an alleged breach of trust for an accounting, and to restrain the transfer of trust property, an action against members of an executive committee, appointed to manage such trust property, charging conspiracy with the trustee to effect the alleged transfer, cannot be joined therewith. Moody v. Flagg, 125 F. 819. A bill of intervention filed in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on an interstate railway asserting two distinct and inconsistent rights to a preferential lien by the intervener. State Trust Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 128 F. 129. A bill joining the questions of the right of ownership, and relief which depends on such ownership. Inman v. New York Interurban Water Co., 131 F. 997. A bill by a beneficiary of a trust fund for an accounting seeking to enforce the complainant's rights against a surviving trustee and the administrator of a deceased trustee who had failed to account to the surviving trustee. Evans v. Evans [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 904. A bill for an accounting, for the removal of a trustee appointed in a suit for divorce, and seeking to review a consent decree for alimony and for the adjustment of certain partnership matters between the parties. Bonney v. Lamb, 210 Ill. 95, 71 N. E. 375. A claim by a creditor against defendant as an officer and stockholder of a corporation cannot be joined with one against him as a director. Legg & Co. v. Dewing [R. I.] 57 A. 373. A complaint in a suit by a railroad company to restrain some 60 ticket brokers from selling return round trip excursion tickets, such persons having no connection with each other. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Reeves, 85 N. Y. S. 28. Contra, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Caffrey, 128 F. 770.

Bills held not multifarious: See 1 Curr. L. 1071. A person holding a fiduciary and also a personal interest in the subject-matter may, as plaintiff, join such claims in his bills. Cresap v. Cresap, 54 W. Va. 581, 46 S. E. 582. Suit by owner of destroyed property against several insurance companies. Redner v. New York Fire Ins. Co. [Minn.] 99 N. W. 886. A bill alleging that defendant telephone company and defendant village were conspiring together to drive complainant out of the telephone business in said village. Village of London Mills v. White, 208 Ill. 289, 70 N. E. 313. A bill in which several property owners seek relief against the same injury upon the same grounds. Baumgartner v. Bradt, 207 Ill. 345, 69 N. E. 912. A bill to require an accounting from defendant as an agent is not multifarious because different and separate transactions are set out, all growing out of the agency, and a discovery and accounting demanded as to each, nor because as to some of such transactions, if stated alone, complainant would have a sufficient remedy at law. United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Wright, 132 F. 195. Where the right of each of several depositors of an insolvent national bank to recover against several of the bank's directors, made parties to the bill, was based on the same theory. Boyd v. Schneider [C. C. A.] 131 F. 223. A bill to establish a lien, and also seeking to establish the personal liability of the persons whose indebtedness the lien secures. Ingersoll v. Coram, 127 F. 418. Bill in which defendant was sued for breaches of trust while acting as trustee and as manager of the business of an association operating the trust property. Moody v. Flagg, 125 F. 819. A bill to restrain defendants from utilizing a trade secret alleging that one of the defendants had, by the help of all the other defendants, erected a plant for the utilization of such secret, it is proper to unite all such defendants in the bill. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 290. In a suit by a beneficiary for an accounting against a surviving trustee and the administratrix of a deceased trustee, an allegation that the complainant has been appointed substituted administrator for his brother, who was also a beneficiary, does not render the bill multifarious. Evans v. Evans [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 872. A bill by several parties to enjoin a telephone company for charging them higher rates than a city ordinance permits, though it alleges a contract by each of them with the company. Charles Simon's Sons Co. v. Maryland Tel. & T. Co. [Md.] 57 A. 193. A bill against two defendants to enjoin the continuance of a nuisance by each on a common alley. Reese v. Wright [Md.] 56 A. 976. A bill to set aside, as fraudulent as to creditors several deeds of land conveyed by the judgment debtor to distinct grantees, it not appearing how many of such deeds are to be set aside, or in what order. Warwick v. Perrine [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 A. 738. Where defendants, in cutting timber on land in which they were tenants in common with plaintiff unintentionally trespassed on and cut timber from adjacent land owned by plaintiff alone, and he sues for an accounting as to all the cutting, which was substantially one transaction. Gulf Red Cedar Co. v. Crenshaw, 138 Ala. 134, 35 So. 50.

the same parties is multifarious,[29] but a bill uniting a purely legal demand with an equitable demand is not multifarious.[30] An objection to a bill as multifarious must be made by special demurrer,[31] though the court may on final hearing require the complainant to elect between the two claims, and dismiss the bill as to the other.[32]

(§ 6) C. Amended and supplemental bills, complaints, or petition.[33]—The right to amend rests in the discretion of the court,[34] but the discretion is liberally exercised,[35] amendments being allowed at almost any stage of the proceeding if the complainant has proved a case by which he is entitled to equitable relief.[36] Greater caution is exercised in regard to amendments to verified bills,[37] and to answers.[38]

Where a railroad company under an agreement with a cotton compress company would deliver, to a consignee of cotton, compress tickets calling for an equal number of similar bales, not the specific bales, there is such privity between the railroad and compress company as to entitle the consignee to equitable relief against both companies for the loss of cotton shipped. Mississippi Cotton Compress & Warehouse Co. v. Levy & Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 281. A bill by a beneficiary under a will against the executor and other beneficiaries to have the suit removed from the probate to the chancery court, to have an accounting and the trusts administered. Noble v. Tait [Ala.] 37 So. 278. Power to sell land devised in trust becoming absolute, a bill by an heir against the other heirs and their purchasers praying for the removal of the administration to the chancery court and for the sale of the land held not multifarious. Pratt Land & Imp. Co. v. Robertson [Ala.] 37 So. 419. Petition to enforce a trust against a mortgagee, and asserting the right of the mortgagor's widow to dower in the premises. Phillips v. Hardenburg [Mo.] 80 S. W. 891. Different landowners may be joined as defendants in a single suit by a railroad company to enjoin interference with its use of its right of way and with the maintenance of its track, where the right asserted is the same against each defendant. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith [C. C. A.] 128 F. 1. Promoters of a combine entering into a secret arrangement with certain vendors of property to such combine, a bill by other vendors for an accounting, joining the corporation, the promoters, and all vendors with whom the secret agreement was made, is not multifarious. Shutts v. United Box, Board & Paper Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 1075. One may join in the same suit causes of action for infringement of a trade-mark and for unlawful competition. Jewish Colonization Ass'n v. Solomon, 125 F. 994. Suit to restrain brokers from dealing in nontransferable railroad tickets. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Caffrey, 128 Fed. 770. Contra, New York, etc., R. Where several depositors of an insolvent national bank filed a bill against its directors for a breach of their implied contract to see that the bank's assets were used according to law, but the bill failed to allege the time when complainants' deposits were made, complainants were entitled to leave to amend in that respect. Boyd v. Schneider [C. C. A.] 131 F. 223. Where complainants in a proceeding in chancery claim part of the assets of a corporation as stockholders, bring proceedings at law on their claims as creditors, they are entitled to file an amended and supplemental bill setting up the proceedings in law. Edwards v. National Window Glass Jobbers' Ass'n [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 527. Amendment relating to germane matters held properly allowed. Ray v. Pitman, 119 Ga. 678, 46 S. E. 849. An amendment to a bill of review, so as to cause it to appear that one of the plaintiffs sued as trustee, held properly allowed. Ferguson v. Morrison [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1240.

In Michigan, a bill may be amended without leave after the time limited for appearance has expired and a decree pro confesso has been entered. Bowers v. Chippewa Circuit Judge [Mich.] 99 N. W. 394. In Florida, no replication having been filed, the complainant may, on motion or petition, without notice, obtain leave from the court to amend his bill before the next succeeding rule day, upon payment or nonpayment of costs as the court may direct. Long v. Anderson [Fla.] 37 So. 216.

37. Fowler v. Fowler, 204 Ill. 82, 68 N. E. 414. The court may in Illinois permit a sworn bill to be amended, the amendments merely enlarging and amplifying the statements of the bill, alter the prayer, and omit certain words descriptive of the parties, without an affidavit showing valid excuse for failure to incorporate in the original bill the matter introduced by the amendments. Village of London Mills v. White, 208 Ill. 289, 70 N. E. 313.

The facts set up by the amendment must not be inconsistent with those already pleaded,[39] must not establish new rights or a new case,[40] and must not render the bill multifarious.[41] Amendments to a verified bill need not be sworn to when they merely amplify a statement in the bill.[42] An amendment in the form of a substituted bill is a permissible practice.[43] Laches may bar the right to serve a supplemental pleading.[44] The failure of a defendant to answer an amendment does not authorize the court or the jury to treat the allegations in the amendment as being admitted,[45] but an amendment not setting up any fact affecting the cause of action, but relating to that which transpired in the presence of the court, or to a disposition by consent of the res in the hands of the court, or to a change in the condition of the property involved in the litigation, when such amendment is not traversed, may be treated as true by the court.[46]

(§ 6) D. Cross bill or petition.[47]—The office of a cross bill is to enable defendant to obtain affirmative relief,[48] except where the maxim "He who seeks the aid of equity must do equity" applies, the general rule being that it is the only way in which such relief can be granted.[49] The relief asked must be upon the case as stated in the bill;[50] it can only be filed between the parties to the original suit,[51] and the matters set up therein must be germane to the subject involved in the original bill.[52] Defendant may set up any defense, legal or equitable, which he may have,[53] and the grounds upon which he relies must be stated with the same strictness as is required of plaintiff in the original bill.[54] The defendant in a law action, having a defense requiring the interposition of a court of equity, may, upon filing his answer, also as plaintiff file a cross bill, which shall stay the proceedings at law until the issues presented by the cross bill are disposed of,[55] and it is no objection to such cross bill that defendant set up a defense in his answer, unless such defense is as adequate as the one obtainable in equity.[56] The answer and cross bill in equity should be separate pleadings, although they may be filed under one cover,[57] except in those states where the cross bill has been abolished.[58] A verified cross bill may be amended, the verification not being required by law.[59] A cross bill may be filed against a co-defendant, and, in such a case, the doctrine of laches has no application to a statutory right to amend the cross bill before such co-defendant answers.[60] A cross bill not being objected to by complainant, but treated as a proper pleading by answering it, is properly made the basis of a decree.[61] The bill being dismissed, the cross bill, in certain cases, must also be dismissed,[62] but the dismissal of the cross bill being caused by the entry of a default judgment before the process was served on the original complainant, the cross bill will be reinstated and amendments allowed upon the setting aside of the default decree.[63]

(§ 6) E. Demurrer. Grounds.[64]—A demurrer will only lie for defects apparent on the face of the pleadings;[65] hence a speaking demurrer, or one setting up facts extrinsic to the bill, cannot be sustained.[66] A general demurrer will be overruled if the bill contains any ground of equitable relief.[67] A special demurrer is indispensable when the objection is to the defects of the bill in point of form.[68] The defense of laches cannot generally be made by demurrer.[69] Fraud being alleged in the bill, a general demurrer will not be allowed, unless it is accompanied by an answer which denies fraud.[70] A demurrer cannot be sustained because the bill

Id. contains a superfluous prayer.[71] To a complaint which is purely equitable in its nature, and in which only equitable relief can be afforded, a defense that the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law is insufficient, and its insufficiency can be raised by demurrer.[72]

Form.—In the Federal courts, a demurrer not supported by a certificate and affidavit is fatally defective.[73]

Effect of, and procedure on, demurrer.[74]—A demurrer admits the truth of the facts narrated in the bill,[75] or a consistent prior amendment thereto;[76] but not the truth of mere conclusions of the pleader,[77] such as fraud.[78] By demurring to an amended bill, respondent is estopped from claiming that certain letters attached as exhibits were not a part of the bill.[79] A decree, disposing of the main issue of the cause, making no mention of the demurrer, the demurrer will be regarded as overruled.[80] Defendant by allowing his general answer to stand after the overruling of his demurrer thereby waives his right to assign error to such overruling, unless on the whole case complainant is not entitled to the relief sought.[81] A demurrer, incorporated in the answer to an amended bill, not being brought forward for hearing, will be treated as waived.[82] Defendant demurring to a bill, his failure to be present at each stage of the subsequent proceedings to see and insist that the issue presented by the demurrer was disposed of does not constitute a waiver thereof.[83] When a petition has been dismissed on demurrer, the plaintiff may, during the same term, move to reinstate the case.[84] A court will not on demurrer construe an instrument set up in the pleading demurred to, and determine the rights of the parties thereunder, when it is obscure and ambiguous in its language, and so uncertain in meaning that it cannot be fairly interpreted without a knowledge of the surrounding facts and circumstances.[85] It is within the sound discretion of a circuit court of the United States sitting in equity, when promotive of justice, to decline to decide a suit on demurrer to a bill and to overrule the demurrer and require an answer, reserving to the defendant the right to claim and take by answer whatever advantage might otherwise have been secured by the demurrer.[86]

(§ 6) F. Plea.[87]—The proper office of a plea in equity is to set forth new matter not apparent in the bill.[88] The plea must be responsive to the bill,[89] and must not be argumentative.[90] Greater strictness is required in framing pleas in bar than is exacted in declarations,[91] and in the Federal courts such a plea must be supported by an answer.[92] The sufficiency of a plea to a bill without equity is not determinable.[93] In equity, there is no demurrer to a plea; if the plea wants form the plaintiff must move to set it aside, or take it off the files. He cannot make the objection on argument. A demurrer to a plea may, however, be treated as a motion to set it aside.[94] By setting the pleas down for argument, the complainant admits the facts, but not the conclusions pleaded therein,[95] and upon the argument, every fact stated in the bill and not denied by the answer, in support of the plea, must be taken to be true;[96] and the answer must be full and clear, or the court will intend the matter against the pleader.[97]

(§ 6) G. Answer.[98]—The defect not being apparent on the face of the bill, it should be pointed out by plea or answer.[99] In strictness, defendant cannot avail himself of any matter of defense not stated in his answer, even though it appear in his proofs.[1] Exceptions to an answer being sustained the court will not permit defendant to file a supplemental answer which does not contain a new, valid ground for defense.[2]

Verification and sufficiency.[3]—The answer must be a full reply to all the allegations and charges in the bill, and all of the interrogatories incident to and founded upon them,[4] and this rule is not changed, in the Federal courts, by waiver of verification,[5] though the answer is only insufficient when a portion of the bill to which the complainant is entitled to an answer has not been answered.[6] A general denial may take the place of a specific response to an allegation of the bill.[7] The chancellor, in his discretion, may permit an answer in chancery, not properly sworn to or signed, to be sworn to or signed, no decree pro confesso having been entered,[8] and leave being granted to a party to swear to his answer, the mere omission of the clerk to place the file mark on such affidavit does not require the court to strike such answer or affidavit on motion of the complainant.[9]

can only be overcome by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and corroborating circumstances.[12] If there is no replication to an answer, it is taken as true for all its material allegations.[13] An answer to an original bill being filed subsequent to the filing of an amended and supplemental bill, without any notice thereof, will not be regarded as an answer to such amended and supplemental bill, nor as a waiver of the right to demur thereto.[14]

(§ 6) H. Replications, exceptions, and motions.[15]—When a replication is filed to an answer, it thereby puts in issue all the matters alleged in the bill and not admitted in the answer, as well as those matters contained in the answer which are not responsive to the bill.[16] In states where special replications can only be filed by leave of court, or the judge thereof, for cause shown, a special replication filed without such leave may be treated as a general replication.[17] Generally replications to answers in chancery need not be filed under oath.[18] In states where replications are abolished, facts which could have been so pleaded may be set up in the original bill or in an amendment, when made necessary to a defense set up in the answer.[19] Exceptions to an amended answer on the ground that defendant does not set up any matter constituting a defense are in the nature of a special demurrer.[20] Where exceptions to a part of an answer are sustained, and the defendant does not ask leave to amend his answer, it is not error to proceed to hear the case on the bill, and so much of the answer as is not excepted to.[21]

(§ 6) I. Issues, proof, and variance.[22]—The only issues to be passed upon in a suit in equity are those raised by the pleadings.[23] The proof need only substantially conform to the allegations.[24] Where equities are equal, the defendant prevails.[25] Defendant must prove the nonresponsive parts of his answer by a preponderance of testimony.[26]

(§ 6) J. Objections and waiver thereof.[27]—By answering, defendant waives an objection of multifariousness in the bill,[28] and by going to trial on the merits, without objection, defendant waives all objections to the sufficiency of plaintiff's pleadings,[29] also objections that complainant has an adequate remedy at law.[30] In equity one must stand upon his motion to dismiss if he would reap advantage from it.[31] Defendant by answering a bill of chancery after the overruling of his demurrer thereto, waives the demurrer, except so far as he may have the same advantage on final hearing, and he cannot assign for error the ruling upon the demurrer.[32]

§ 7. Taking bill as confessed or on default.[34]—A decree pro confesso cannot be taken until answer day has passed,[35] nor while a demurrer is pending.[36] An answer not putting in issue any material facts, a decree pro confesso may be allowed.[37] A bill being confessed, matters alleged with certainty are taken as true, all others must be proven.[38] A complainant, after the entry of a decree pro confesso, is entitled only to such final decree as is authorized by the allegations of his bill.[39] A court will open, much as a matter of course, mere orders pro confesso, the defendant showing surprise and a meritorious defense.[40] A statute requiring "reasonable notice to the opposite party" of a motion to reverse a decree upon a bill taken for confessed, demands such notice to any party who has an interest in the maintenance of the decree, whether plaintiff or defendant.[41]

§ 8. Trial by jury of special issues.[42]—A federal court of equity will not, on remand, after the joining of issues by the pleadings, but before the evidence has been taken in accordance with the usual practice in equity, frame issues to be submitted to a jury, it not being known at that stage of the case that such issues will be decisive or even material.[43]

NOTE. Nature and effect of orders pro confesso: There is a difference between orders that bills be taken pro confesso and actual decrees pro confesso. The latter are considered, when compared with the former, more sacred. and to be disturbed only for weighty reasons. Robertson v. Miller, 3 N. J. Eq. 451; Knight v. Young, 2 Ves. & B. 184. The only effect of an order pro confesso is to enable a case to be proceeded with ex parte against the defendant as to whom it is taken. When such an order is entered, the cause must be brought to a hearing, as well as in other cases. 1 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 369; Rose v. Woodruff, 4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 547; Lockhart v. Horn, 3 Woods, 542, Fed. Cas. No. 8,446. It is said that an order for a bill to be taken pro confesso is interlocutory, and intended to prepare the case for the final decree. Its effect is similar to that of a default in an action at common law, by which defendant is dec[illegible]d to have admitted all that is well pleaded in the declaration. The defendant has lost his standing in court, but the matters set forth in the bill do not pass in rem judicatum until the final decree. The bill is still to be read, that the court may then determine whether there is cause. upon the allegations. to decree for the complainant, and it by no means follows that such will be the decree. Rose v. Woodruff, 4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 547, 1 N. Y. Ch. Rep. (Law. Ed.) 932, note: Russell v. Lathrop, 122 Mass. 300; Forbes v. Tuckerman, 115 Mass. 115. Under the English chancery practice, it was necessary that an order taking a bill for confessed be entered before a decree pro confesso could be rendered. Shields' Heirs v. Bryant, 3 Bibb [Ky.] 525; Grace v. Field, 13 Ga. 29; 1 Daniell Ch. Pl. & Pr. (4th Ed.) 518. See Albright v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 8 N. M. 422, 46 P. 448. In some jurisdictions it is held that the omission to enter a formal order that the bill be taken pro confesso against the defendants will not affect the regularity of the final decree. or make it any the less absolute. Linder v. Lewis, 1 F. 378; Savage v. Berry, 2 Scam. [Ill.] 545; Bank of United States v. White, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 262. It would seem to be the better practice to enter such an order prior to the rendition of the final decree. Linder v. Lewis, 1 F. 381; Bank of St. Marys v. St. John, 25 Ala. 566; Long v. Long, 9 Md. 348; Stephenson v. Parkins, 2 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 218; Thomson v. Wooster. 114 U. S. 104.—From Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. 192, § 150.

of the chancellor,[46] and should never be granted unless essential to the speedy determination of the case or the proper administration of justice.[47] In states where but one form of action is provided, it is generally held that issues of fact raised by pleadings in actions for the enforcement of equitable rights must be tried by jury unless waived.[48]

§ 9. Hearing or trial; rehearing. A. In general.[49]—There being a misjoinder of causes of action, complainant will not be allowed to proceed at the final hearing in both aspects of the case, though no objection is made by defendant.[50] The suit covering numerous accounts the court should not proceed to a final hearing until an account has been stated by a master in chancery, and objections thereto settled by him.[51]

(§ 9) B. Dismissal.[52]—A court of equity has the power, in a proper case, to dismiss a complaint or proceeding in equity on motion of the defendant.[53] A motion to dismiss does not, however, reach amendable defects,[54] and should be granted where the complaint fails to show any ground for equitable relief.[55] While a complainant in an equity suit may dismiss his bill at any time before the hearing, he cannot do so without an order of the court.[56] This practice implies a certain discretion on the part of the court to refuse such order, if a dismissal would be prejudicial to the rights of defendant.[57] The dismissal of an amended and supplemental bill amounts to the dismissal of the original bill,[58] and of a cross bill containing substantially the same averments, and praying for the same relief as the dismissed bill.[59] A court entering an order unconditionally dismissing the cause loses jurisdiction over the cause and the parties, and it cannot resume jurisdiction, at or after the adjournment of a subsequent term, by mere motion.[60]

Revival of action.—In the Federal courts to revive a suit in equity one must file a bill of revivor or a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor.[61] The failure to revive a suit which has abated by the death of plaintiff is not ground for a motion by defendant to dismiss for want of prosecution, but he may, on proper notice, obtain an order requiring the suit to be revived within a time fixed or be dismissed.[62]

Verdict or findings and effect thereof.[63]—The verdict or findings of the jury is advisory only,[64] and may be adopted, or amended and adopted, as the findings of the court, or the court may make its findings independent thereof;[65] hence, the conduct of counsel and jury,[66] and the charge of the court are not subject to review on appeal.[67] Nor is it error to refuse to instruct on general principles of law applicable to the case but inapplicable to the determination of the questions submitted.[68]

(§ 9) C. Evidence and its introduction.[69]—The court will not permit the testimony of a witness given at a former trial of the issues to be read, where such testimony is irrelevant,[70] or where the witness is fully examined on both trials.[71] It is not competent, on the hearing of the cause, for the court to hear or consider evidence that was not before the master.[72] The equity rule prevailing in some states that depositions alone shall be used in the trial of suits does not apply to cases tried by a jury.[73] In some states, in order that the witnesses may be examined in open court, a written agreement to that effect must be entered into, or a notice to that effect filed in the cause,[74] and having given such notice, he cannot subsequently withdraw it and demand a continuance, the opposite party having refrained from the taking of depositions in reliance on such notice.[75] The extension of time for the taking of testimony rests in the discretion of the court,[76] and where, owing to the absence of the master, defendant is unable to take the testimony within such extended time, a further extension should be granted.[77] An objection to the sufficiency of the evidence being overruled, any error in such ruling is cured if the party making the objection introduces evidence in his own behalf.[78] The practice of hearing evidence subject to objection, reserving the ruling until the decision of the case, is erroneous, and is ground for reversal if the evidence is material and exception is preserved,[79] and, even when exception is not taken, if the evidence is incompetent and is of such a character as is justly calculated to influence the mind, the fact that it was received and retained while the cause was held under advisement is a fact to be weighed by the appellate court.[80] The plaintiff need only prove enough of the facts alleged to constitute a cause of action,[81] but the proof must correspond to the allegations,[82] and the defense must stand on the issues made by the pleadings.[83] Positive testimony must be met by testimony of the same character.[84] In the absence of a demurrer or motion, an introduction to the objection of evidence should be overruled if the court can find from all the pleadings that plaintiff has a cause of action.[85] The successful party will only be allowed as costs the fees and costs of examination of such a number of witnesses as the court deems reasonable.[86]

Verdicts and findings and effect thereof.[87]—Findings not within the issues made by the pleadings will not support a decree.[88]

§ 10. Decree, judgment or order. A. In general; requisites and sufficiency.[89]—The form of the judgment in all actions of an equitable nature is governed by established principles of equity jurisprudence, where no statutes are applicable.[90] Plaintiff must establish his right to equitable relief in order to obtain a judgment.[91] The bill containing both a legal and equitable remedy, the decree of a court of equity dismissing the bill after a full hearing must save to plaintiff his legal rights.[92]

plainant with the enforcement of a claim or equity held by a defendant, which the latter could not enforce in any other way.[1] It may assess the damages to be recovered,[2] or the chancellor may decree and enforce equitable relief and at the same time transfer the question of damages to the law side of the court.[3] Under a prayer for general relief, one can get relief not specifically asked for, provided the facts alleged in the bill and the nature of the case warrant it.[4] A prayer for general relief will sustain a personal judgment.[5] But the subject-matter and purpose and nature of a suit not being such as to warrant a given decree, the decree is void.[6] A court of equity has jurisdiction to compel a defendant, by means of an injunction specially worded, to do a substantive act.[7]

(§ 10) D. Modification and amendment; vacation and setting aside; collateral attack.[8]—After a final decree at one term, giving the full relief warranted by the facts stated in the bill, the court has no further jurisdiction of the subject-matter or parties, and all orders and decrees at a later term are null and void.[9] In New Jersey, the chancellor will, in all ordinary cases, decline to review the decision of a vice chancellor, thus leaving the objecting party to obtain relief by appeal.[10] The chancery court has authority to amend the record of its decrees, at a subsequent term, so as to make it speak the truth; but it cannot do so without notice being first given to the party against whom it is made.[11] A consent decree cannot be set aside or revoked except by consent.[12] A decree being procured by fraud which is not discovered until after the decree is entered on the record, and after the adjournment of the term at which it was entered, it can only be set aside by an original bill in a new suit.[13] A motion to set aside a judgment may in certain cases be treated as a motion for a new trial.[14]

Satisfaction, lien and enforcement.[15]—On an interlocutory decree of sale of defendant's property, the report of sale showing a balance due complainant after application of the proceeds, the court has jurisdiction to render a personal judgment therefor.[16]

ties to the original bill,[18] and must set forth the interests of each.[19] While inadvertent errors in a decree may be corrected, the general rule is that a bill of review will not lie against a consent decree.[20]

Time for bill and laches.[21]—The fact that an appeal is pending does not prevent a bill of review in the lower court on matters not theretofore in the record and which do not involve the same matter involved in the appeal.[22] A bill of review must be filed within the time allowed for an appeal from the decree sought to be reviewed.[23] Minors may file a bill of review at any time before the attainment of majority, or afterwards within the time within which they could successfully prosecute a writ of error to reverse a decree.[24]

Grounds.[25]—A bill of review which contains no claim of newly discovered evidence can only be maintained for errors of law appearing on the record.[26] Newly discovered evidence, contradictory or cumulative in its nature, to be sufficient to sustain a bill of review must be so indisputable as to be decisive of the case,[27] and plaintiff must show that such evidence could not have been discovered by due diligence.[28]

Application and proceedings.[29]—A favorable decree on the bill of review should first grant leave to reopen and review the former decree, and then, by proper orders, indicate to what extent, if any, the rights and interests of the parties should be affected by such review.[30] Where a bill of review by minors averred that no process had been served on them, it is error, in sustaining a demurrer for defects in parties, to dismiss the bill, though leave to amend was not asked.[31]

attempt at that crime[34] but not the crime itself.[35] "Information" essential in such a crime means such as will aid and facilitate an escape.[36]

Rescue or "jail delivery" may be committed from a public place of confinement, privately owned[37] and outside the corporate limits.[38]

ESCHEAT.

Escheat is the reversion of land[39] to the state by reason of failure of heirs or of the owners' incapacity to hold.[40] The refusal to allow a husband who murders his wife to take the proceeds of a life insurance policy belonging to her does not operate to escheat the property to the state.[41]

In some states, aliens who have not declared their intention of becoming citizens are not entitled to hold realty and any which they may acquire escheats to the state.[42] The state does not take escheated property by succession.[43] In every case an action is necessary to vest title in the state.[44] It is generally made the duty of the attorney general to institute investigation for the discovery of such property and to institute suit to escheat it.[45] In California, a person not a party or privy to proceedings for escheat may within twenty years after the judgment therein file a petition in the superior court showing his claim to the property or its proceeds.[46] Until then an alien has good title as against everyone.[47] If he becomes 34, 35, 36. Pen. Code, § 87, declares it a felony to send information to prisoners convicted of a felony, with intent to effect or facilitate their escape, whether or not the escape is effected or attempted. A letter containing a cipher code by which information was to be imparted to facilitate an escape by fellow prisoners of the recipient constituted only an attempt to send information. People v. Buckley, 91 App. Div. 586, 87 N. Y. S. 191.

The sending of the letter was an overt act sufficient to sustain conviction for an attempt, but not for the crime charged. People v. Buckley, 91 App. Div. 586, 87 N. Y. S. 191.

Note: The sending of tools fitted for a prison breach was held to be the statutory crime of conveying tools designed to aid an escape; but not to be an attempt at rescue. Patrick v. People, 132 Ill. 539.—4 Ill. Cyc. Dig. 229.

It is the duty of an executor, administrator, assignee, sheriff or receiver to pay any such balance into the state treasury within one year after final settlement, upon order of the court in which such settlement was made, the money so received to be credited to a fund known as escheats [Rev. a citizen or otherwise becomes qualified to hold the land, before a forfeiture is declared, his title becomes perfect even as against the state or government.[48] Where an alien cannot take title to land by purchase, the heirs of a resident citizen who conveys by warranty deed to an alien are estopped, in an action by the state to escheat the land, from claiming the land conveyed or the proceeds of the sale.[49] In an action by the state to escheat the land, the rights of claimants thereto may be determined as against the state, though in a former action, to which the state was not a party, relief has been denied to them as among themselves.[50]

ESCROWS.

A deed deposited in escrow does not become operative until the performance of the conditions,[51] and consent to a prior delivery must be by all the grantors.[52] Where time is not of the essence, the performance of the conditions for payment at any time and a delivery out of escrow passes title[53] beyond power of revocation.[54] If the grantee consents to a cancellation and substitution, he cannot claim title.[55] The burden of proof is on a grantor who asserts nonperformance of the conditions and nondelivery and seeks relief from the deed.[56]

Note: There is authority in conflict with the rule here broadly laid down. Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. Eq. 455. The question as to burden of proof is properly dependent upon the pleadings and substantive law in the particular case. See Thayer, Prel. Treat. Ev. 371. The rule, as usually stated, is to the effect that he has the burden who has the affirmative of an issue to maintain. Central Bridge Co. v. Butler, 2 Gray [Mass.] 130. To apply this test it is necessary to determine in every instance the essential allegations in each party's case and pleading. The case under discussion being practically a statutory modification of a bill to quiet title, the plaintiff makes all essential allegations when he avers his own title and the defendant's adverse claim; it is then for the defendant to plead and prove his title. See Ely v. New Mexico, etc., R. Co., 129 U. S. 292. And as a deed in escrow delivered without performance of conditions is null, the defendant should prove performance. Possession by the grantee is, however, prima facie evidence of such performance, and the case may be supported upon the theory that the plaintiff's evidence did not rebut this presumption. See Hare v.

§ 1. Necessity or occasion for administration and kinds thereof.[57]—Administration being the management of the estate of a decedent[58] is called for when action is necessary for the collection of assets belonging to the estate,[59] for the estate cannot be a party to an action except by representative.[60] The death of decedent is a necessary and jurisdictional fact.[61] The succession to and distribution of the estate of an intestate is governed by the law of the domicile.[62] The will must be adjudicated upon before a representative of the estate can legally act in collecting and distributing the assets.[63] In Louisiana, successions accepted under benefit of inventory must be administered when creditors or heirs of age demand it,[64] but an administrator will not be appointed where the largest claim against the estate is made by an heir, all the heirs are majors, and one of the heirs offers to give bond to pay the other debts, which are insignificant.[65] In some states the granting of administration on the estate of one dead more than a specified number of years is a matter within the discretion of the court.[66]

The sole distributee of a decedent's estate may appropriate it without administration when there are no debts.[67] Administration is not necessary to enable one heir to litigate his rights which are in no way dependent on the decedent's rights as co-heir,[68] nor is it necessary where decedent's only property is a life estate with power of disposition to pay living expenses.[69] No administration is needed to transmute property which the law devolves directly, e. g., community rights,[70] or to perform functions relating to property devised which are included in the estate given.[71] The fact that there was no administration authorizes the presumption that decedent left no property subject thereto.[72]

"Independent" or nonjudicial administration.—By statutes in some states the will may provide that no other action shall be had in the probate court in relation to the settlement of the estate than the probating and recording of the will and the return of an inventory, appraisement and list of claims against the estate.[73] The representative, in such case, is known as an independent executor.[74]

An administrator de bonis non[80] may be appointed after the discharge, resignation or removal of the original representative where new assets are discovered,[81] or there are debts of the estate remaining unpaid.[82]

An executor de son tort is one who wrongfully intermeddles with the goods of the deceased, or, unauthorized, does any other act characteristic of the office.[83] What facts will constitute one an executor de son tort is a question of law for the court,[84] but the determination of the facts, if in controversy, is for the jury.[85]

§ 2. Jurisdictions and courts controlling administration.[86]—The jurisdiction and powers of courts in administering upon the estates of decedents are fixed by the statutes of the various states. The courts of probate are in most states courts of record and possessed of special, superior, and original jurisdiction to administer any relief pertinent to probate and administration, including appropriate equitable powers.[87] In consequence of this there is a concurrence of jurisdiction in respect of some matters and exclusiveness as to some.[88] The general rules controlling precedence and conflict in jurisdiction are reserved to another title.[89]

Where the executors were directed to sell the estate and hold the proceeds under a spendthrift trust for the benefit of testator's sons and their survivors, with a void remainder over, an attaching creditor of one of the sons has no right to a fieri facias on his judgment and to sell the undetermined interest accruing to one of the sons by reason of the failure of the remainder, but must pursue his remedy in the orphans' court. Id. The orphans' court also has concurrent jurisdiction with the court of common pleas of all actions for the recovery of legacies [Act Feb. 24, 1834, § 47; P. L. 82]. Wilson v. Smith [C. C. A.] 126 F. 916.

In South Carolina the probate court which first takes cognizance of the settlement of the estate of a decedent has jurisdiction thereof to the exclusion of all other probate courts [2 Code Civ. Proc. § 48] (Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry [C. C. A.] 131 F. 175), and the first grant of letters of administration cannot be collaterally attacked, even when made by a court not having jurisdiction of the particular estate. Can be attacked on such ground in the federal courts (Id.).

In Texas the county court has exclusive jurisdiction of estates in course of administration, and the control and management of the estate by the administrator cannot be interfered with by any other court. One suing to foreclose mortgage on live-stock belonging to estate in course of administration cannot, in such suit, secure an injunction restraining use of animals by administrator. Dunovant's Estate v. Stafford & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 101. When its jurisdiction has once attached to a particular estate, it becomes exclusive. Tiboldi v. Palms [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 726.

In Washington the several superior courts have jurisdiction of all matters of probate [Const. art. 4, § 6]. McLean v. Roller, 33 Wash. 166, 73 P. 1123.

In Wyoming jurisdiction over probate matters is given to the district court, which is a court of superior and general jurisdiction. It is a court of record exercising original jurisdiction at law and in equity [Const. art. 5, § 10. Rev. St. 1899, § 4531]. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682.

89. See Jurisdiction, 2 Curr. L. 604.

90. Jurisdictional facts stated in petition required under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 6087, 6141. Affidavit stating names of heirs and that deceased did not leave a will, required by Id. § 6142, not jurisdictional. McLean v. Roller, 33 Wash. 166, 73 P. 1123.

91. Cunnius v. Reading School Dist., 206 Pa. 469, 56 A. 16. A jurisdictional fact. Appeal of Beach, 76 Conn. 118, 55 A. 596. County court has no jurisdiction to grant letters on estate of one not a resident of the county. Appointment a nullity. Slate v. Henkle [Or.] 78 P. 325. An administration upon the estate of a living person is void. Sale of headright certificate thereunder held void. Buster v. Warren [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1063. A finding by the board of land commissioners of the death of the grantee in an original conditional headright certificate, in passing on the application of his administrator for the issuance of an unconditional certificate, is not conclusive on his heirs in an action to recover the land. Id.

92. North Dakota statute providing for the appointment of a special administrator for the estate of one who is shown to have disappeared under circumstances affording reasonable ground to believe that he is dead, or has been secreted, confined, or otherwise unlawfully done away with [Rev. Codes 1899, § 6325, subd. 2], is invalid when applied to the property of a living person as depriving him of his property and its possession without notice and due process of law, though such administrator is given no power to administer the estate generally. Clapp v. Houg, 12 N. D. 600, 98 N. W. 710. The fact that notice of the application for the appointment of a general administrator is given and that the appointment of a special administrator follows on failure to sufficiently prove death, without additional notice, is not sufficient notice to validate the proceedings. Id.

Pennsylvania statute authorizing the appointment of administrators for the estates of persons presumed to be dead by reason of long absence is constitutional. Pa. Act June 24, 1885 (P. L. 155). Does not deprive the situs of the property fix the jurisdiction of the probate courts of particular counties,[93] and the existence of assets within the state is generally held to be a necessary prerequisite to administration on the estates of nonresidents.[94] Service of process must be made in the manner provided by statute.[95] The court appointing the ancillary administrator has no jurisdiction of the domiciliary administrator and cannot determine his official responsibilities or duties.[96]

As a general rule, probate courts have no jurisdiction to try and determine the title to real estate,[97] or to determine decedent's right or title to property claimed by the representative as against third persons.[98] persons of their property without due process of law. Cunnius v. Reading School Dist., 206 Pa. 469, 56 A. 16. Appointment of such administrator is valid until revoked by the direct proceedings therein provided for. Id.

93. In Rhode Island the municipal court of the city of Providence has no authority to appoint an administrator of an estate unless decedent left property in such city. Williams v. Ripley [R. I.] 56 A. 777.

In Alabama administration begun in the probate court of one county cannot be removed to a court of equity in another county. If matter can be removed to equity at all, must be to a court in same county. Patton v. Monroe, 139 Ala. 482, 36 So. 512. It is the policy of the law to require administration to be taken in the county where deceased lived, died, and owned property. Id.

In Connecticut deceased must have owned property within the probate district. A claim by a creditor of a nonresident decedent that property in Connecticut purchased by decedent's son was bought with money belonging to the father held not property in Connecticut belonging to deceased, justifying the appointment of an administrator in that state, nor did the mere purchase of such land, in the absence of proof that the father had any interest therein, authorize such appointment. Appeal of Beach, 76 Conn. 118, 55 A. 596.

In New York the surrogate of the county in which deceased died has jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for his estate. Tanas v. Municipal Gas Co., 88 App. Div. 251, 84 N. Y. S. 1053.

94. Connecticut [Gen. St. (Rev. 1902) § 3181]. Appeal of Beach, 76 Conn. 118, 55 A. 596.

In Nebraska administration proceedings cannot be instituted upon the estate of a deceased nonresident of that state for the purpose of collecting a tax levied on a partnership, of which deceased was a member, in a county other than that in which such proceedings were begun. Remedy provided for collection of taxes exclusive. Board of Com'rs of Dawes County v. Furay [Neb.] 99 N. W. 271.

In New York it is held that the claim of an administrator residing in Rhode Island against an estate being administered in New York, the validity of which was being determined in the surrogate's court of the latter state at the time of his death, is assets of the administrator's estate so as to give the courts of such state jurisdiction of such estate. In re Flynn, 92 App. Div. 379, 87 N. Y. S. 18.

95. The Nebraska statute in regard to service of process in the probate court [Comp. St. 1903, c. 20, § 22] does not authorize such court to order personal service on nonresident minors in proceedings to vacate a judgment or order thereof in probate proceedings, in the absence of an affidavit that service cannot be made in that state. Personal service outside state under Code Civ. Proc. § 81 is a nullity in absence of affidavit for publication. Boden v. Mier [Neb.] 98 N. W. 701. See general law of process. Process, 2 Curr. L. 1259.

In Arkansas cannot entertain suit by widow to recover homestead of deceased from his heirs who hold it adversely to her claim. James v. James [Ark.] 80 S. W. 148.

In Connecticut cannot pass upon questions of title except in so far as may be necessary to enable it to exercise its jurisdiction in appointing an administrator. Sufficient that intestate was apparent owner. Determination not binding beyond necessities of the purpose for which it is made. Appeal of Beach, 76 Conn. 118, 55 A. 596.

Georgia: Mulherin v. Kennedy [Ga.] 48 S. E. 437.

In Massachusetts the probate court has concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court to partition lands of a decedent whose estate has been settled or is in course of settlement therein. Pub. St. 1882, c. 178, §§ 45, 48. On petition of any interested party. McCarty v. Patterson [Mass.] 71 N. E. 112. The court in which such proceedings are lawfully commenced retains jurisdiction. Pub. St. 1882, c. 178, § 64. When petition is dismissed in probate court at request of petitioners and without prejudice and no appeal is taken, they may then apply to superior court. McCarty v. Patterson [Mass.] 71 N. E. 112.

Nebraska [Const. art. 6, § 16]. Tyson v. Tyson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1076. This provision does preclude county court from construing a will in proper case and determining the effect and meaning of a devise of land so far as is necessary to give proper directions to the executor. Such directions, however, cannot be used as the basis of or to defeat a recovery of the property by anyone. Youngson v. Bond [Neb.] 95 N. W. 700.

In New Mexico probate courts have no jurisdiction to hear and determine contested claims of title to mining leases between an estate and a stranger. Caron v. Old Reliable Gold Min. Co. [N. M.] 78 P. 63.

In New York the surrogate's court has no jurisdiction over realty or its avails unless by virtue of the will or a statute giving it authority for a particular purpose. Pending partition action is proper place for adjustment of rents and expenses of management

Federal courts have no original jurisdiction in respect to the administration and general settlement of decedents' estates.[99] A debt against a decedent may be established in such court, but it must then take its place among the claims against the estate and be administered by local law.[1] A bill in equity by a creditor of decedent, filed in the federal court, to compel an accounting by the executor is not maintainable where a suit in equity, to which complainant was not made a party, has already been begun in the state court under a state statute for a similar purpose.[2] The federal courts cannot enjoin proceedings in a court of probate.[3] A suit founded on a claim against the estate of a decedent and which was originally filed in the probate court comes within the removal act.[4]

Equity will not ordinarily take upon itself the settlement of estates of deceased persons, but may do so in proper cases.[5] of realty. If made in surrogate's court allowance for such expenses must be from personalty. In re Ogden's Estate, 41 Misc. 158, 83 N. Y. S. 977.

99. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 130 F. 55.

1. Hall v. Bridgeport Trust Co., 123 F. 739; Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 130 F. 55. Federal courts, in enforcing claims against executors and administrators of a decedent's estate, are administering the laws of the domicile, and are governed by the same rules that govern the local tribunals. Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 126 F. 968. An unsecured creditor of decedent, having a mere legal demand which has not been reduced to judgment, is not a cestui que trust in such sense as to be entitled, in the absence of fraud, gross wrong, or unreasonable delay, to maintain a bill in equity for an accounting in a federal court against the officer of the probate court having the estate in course of administration. Debtors entitled to jury trial. Creditor must first establish his claim at law. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 130 F. 55.

2. Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 130 F. 55.

3. Will not entertain suit for specific performance of contract by which intestate decedent agreed to make complainant his sole heir, while insolvent estate is in process of administration in state probate court [Rev. St. U. S. § 720 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 581)]. Hall v. Bridgeport Trust Co., 123 F. 739. A federal court will not, in a suit to establish and enforce a lien on the interest of defendants in funds belonging to the estate of a decedent in the hands of an ancillary administrator, enjoin the local probate court from directing that the funds within its control be remitted to the court of probate jurisdiction at the place of domicile. Ingersoll v. Coram, 132 F. 168. In such cases the federal court can only act in subordination to whatever proceedings the local probate court may take in the exercise of its proper jurisdiction. Id. It may, however, enjoin the persons whose interest is sought to be reached from receiving any portion under a decree of distribution by either probate court, pending the determination of such suit. Id.

4. An heir who contests a claim in a state probate court and goes to trial on the merits cannot thereafter remove the cause from the appellate court to which he has taken it. Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 F. 638. Where a claim presented by an administrator is contested by an heir, who appeals from an order of the probate court allowing it, the question of diverse citizenship necessary to authorize a removal to a federal court is to be determined upon the citizenship of such heir and not upon that of an administrator pro tem. appointed to defend for the estate. Appointed under Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1899, c. 3, § 72. Id.

5. Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 68 N. E. 81. Bill to have administration removed from probate to chancery court and to have estate and special testamentary trusts administered, and to compel accounting by surviving partner, held to present case for court of equity, and not to be demurrable for multifariousness. Noble v. Tait [Ala.] 37 So. 278. A court of equity may, in a suit by the widow for the assignment of dower, to which all persons interested in the estate are parties, adjust all claims and matters in difference between the parties relative thereto, and determine their interest therein, where the whole estate consists of realty and the widow is the only creditor. May adjust rents received by widow and improvements. Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 68 N. E. 81. Where a decree correcting a trust deed and foreclosing it was rendered in a suit affecting lands belonging to the estate of a decedent, whose administrator was a party thereto, by a court obtaining jurisdiction of the cause as a case in equity, a contention that the judgment was void because the proceedings were not brought in the probate court was untenable. Court had all powers of court of equity to do complete justice and render decree it did. Rodney v. Gibbs [Mo.] 82 S. W. 187. As a general rule equity will not require an executor to give bond for the faithful management of the estate, or, upon refusal, enjoin him from administering and appoint a receiver, in the absence of an unequivocal allegation of his insolvency, notwithstanding the fact that there are general allegations of mismanagement. Petition alleging mismanagement in general terms and threats to misappropriate funds, but not showing any specific acts of mismanagement, or any indebtedness to the estate on account thereof, and not praying for discovery, should be dismissed on de-

§ 3. The persons who administer and their letters. A. Selection and nomination.[6]—The first judicial act of the probate court in the administration of a decedent's estate is the grant of letters of administration.[7] Naming one as executor in a will does not make him such on testator's death, but merely gives him a right to the appointment on compliance with the statutory provisions relating thereto.[8] The court may, in its discretion, reject the nomination where circumstances make it for the best interests of the estate to do so.[9]

Statutes providing who shall be entitled to letters are generally held to be mandatory,[10] and letters issued in contravention thereof may be revoked on application of the persons therein named.[11] They will not, however, be construed as requiring the appointment of one personally unfit for the position.[12] In such case all presumptions are in favor of the claimant, and letters should not be refused unless the testimony produces a strong and abiding conviction that such grant would defeat rather than promote the ends of administration.[13]

Persons convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude are generally disqualified.[14] Minors cannot serve, but their guardians may as their representatives.[15] One otherwise entitled to administer is not necessarily disqualified by the fact that he has an adverse claim to property claimed by the estate.[16] Males will be preferred to females.[17]

In many states the administration will be first granted to the surviving husband or wife.[18] One who is not a relative of, and is a stranger in blood to, de-murrer. Gould v. Glass, 120 Ga. 50, 47 S. E. 505.

7. It is taking cognizance of the settlement of the estate within meaning of the South Carolina statute in regard to jurisdiction [2 Code Civ. Proc. § 48]. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry [C. C. A.] 131 F. 175.

8. In re Van Vleck's Estate, 123 Iowa, 89, 98 N. W. 557. Iowa Code, § 3290, providing that if one nominated as executor refuses to accept or neglects to appear within ten days after his appointment, the office shall be vacant does not apply to the right to appointment of one named in the will, who has never actually been appointed. Id.

9. Where, after testator's death, conditions have so changed that, had he anticipated them, he would, in all reasonable probability, as a prudent person have selected another as executor. Executor who puts himself in position antagonistic to will and those for whose benefit it was made, in effect renounces executorship. Id.

10. Disobedience thereof is error, reviewable by the appellate court. Wis. Rev. St. 1898, § 3807. Court has no right to appoint public administrator on petition of creditors over seasonable application of sole heir. Welsh v. Manwaring [Wis.] 98 N. W. 214.

11. In California where letters of administration have been issued to another than the husband or wife or next of kin who are entitled thereto by statute any one of the persons so entitled may obtain their revocation on petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1383]. In re Gordon's Estate, 142 Cal. 125, 75 P. 672. Petition must allege that the petitioner is a bona fide resident of the state and is of age, but it need not allege that he has not been convicted of an infamous crime or that he is not improvident or wanting in capacity, etc. [Code Civ. Proc. § 1369] there being a presumption in favor of petitioner in regard to them. Objector must set up such facts. Id. Letters issued to creditor will be revoked on application of nonresident brother of deceased who had no notice of proceedings leading to his appointment. In re Tyers' Estate, 84 N. Y. S. 934.

12. Shannon's Code Tenn. § 3939, providing that next of kin shall be appointed if he applies and if not the largest creditor not mandatory in that sense. Fitzgerald v. Smith [Tenn.] 78 S. W. 1050. One who cannot support his family and continually borrows money should not be appointed [Code Civ. Proc. § 2661]. In re Ferguson, 84 N. Y. S. 1102. Widow entitled under Civ. Code S. C. § 2512. Ex parte Small [S. C.] 48 S. E. 40. Where widow and sons of decedent by former marriage are antagonistic and cannot agree, a disinterested third person should be appointed. In re Warner's Estate, 207 Pa. 580, 57 A. 35.

16. In re Brundage's Estate, 141 Cal. 538, 75 P. 175. In Louisiana it is held that an heir in adverse possession of property belonging to the community should not be given preference in the appointment of an administrator of the wife's estate over his co-heirs. Miguez v. Delcambre [La.] 36 So. 888.

17. Son preferred to trust company which was assignee of a daughter's interest [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1366]. In re Brundage's Estate, 141 Cal. 538, 75 P. 175.

18. In Washington administration will first be granted to the surviving husband or ceased,[19] or a relative who will not succeed to any of his personalty is not entitled to letters as a matter of right.[20] One acquiring a legatee's or devisee's right by assignment is in no better position in regard to the right to administer than his assignor.[21] In many states trust companies may be appointed.[22]

Legatees will be given preference in the granting of letters of administration with the will annexed,[23] and the executor of a sole legatee has a prior right to letters cum testamento annexo on the estate of the original testator.[24] The right of nonresidents[25] and aliens to act or to nominate others depends upon the statutes of the various states.[26] Failure to make application within the time limited by law is a waiver of the right to appointment.[27] wife or to such person as he or she may request to have appointed, in case application therefor is made within a specified time [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6141]. McLean v. Roller, 33 Wash. 166, 73 P. 1123. The fact that the survivor is himself disqualified does not deprive him of his right to nominate an appointee. Convicted felon. Id. In case such application is not made the court may then appoint any suitable and competent person [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6141]. Id.

In Rhode Island the husband has the right to administer on his wife's estate [Gen. Laws 1896, c. 212, § 9]. Providence Co. Sav. Bank v. Vadnais [R. I.] 58 A. 454.

In Pennsylvania other things being equal, the widow will be preferred as administratrix of her husband's estate. In re Warner's Estate, 207 Pa. 580, 57 A. 35.

In Louisiana the surviving husband or wife is entitled to administration in preference to all natural relations of decedent save those of the descending line. Where application of widow in community is opposed by one alleging that decedent was his brother, there being no children, the opponent must prove lawful filiation. In re Nereaux's Estate, 112 La. 572, 36 So. 594. The beneficiary heir, of age, present or represented in the state, is preferred to the surviving husband or wife [La. Civ. Code, arts. 1042, 1121]. Succession of Bulliard, 111 La. 186, 35 So. 508; Miguez v. Delcambre [La.] 36 So. 888.

20. Son who has conveyed his interest in mother's estate before her death not entitled to administer as against daughter. Fact that he might come into some portion of estate as heir of his deceased father to whom he had conveyed immaterial [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1365]. In re Edson's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 451. The New York statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2643) providing that when there is no executor qualified to act and the residuary, principal, or specified legatee entitled to letters c. t. a. does not exist or will not act, letters should issue to the next of kin, should be limited to next of kin entitled to share in the unbequeathed assets and who are interested therein. In re Goggin's Estate, 43 Misc. 233, 88 N. Y. S. 557.

21. In re Brundage's Estate, 141 Cal. 538, 75 P. 175.

22. Ga. Acts 1898, p. 78, constitutional. Mulherin v. Kennedy [Ga.] 48 S. E. 437. Cannot act in Ohio. Rev. St. §§ 3821c, 3821f. Attempting to give them authority to do so in certain counties is unconstitutional, it being of a general nature, and not of uniform operation throughout the state. Schumacher v. McCallip, 69 Ohio St. 500, 69 N. E. 986.

23. A beneficiary of a trust is not a legatee within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 2643. In re Ferguson, 84 N. Y. S. 1102.

24. Code Civ. Proc. § 2660, subd. 9, should be read into § 2643 as affecting right to letters c. t. a. and not applying to granting of letters in case of intestacy. In re Goggin's Estate, 43 Misc. 233, 88 N. Y. S. 557.

25. In Georgia a nonresident cannot be appointed administrator of the estate of a nonresident who dies leaving property in that state. Jones v. Smith [Ga.] 48 S. E. 134.

In New York nonresidence does not bar the right of a claimant to letters, provided he is by law otherwise entitled thereto. In re Tyers' Estate, 84 N. Y. S. 934.

In Illinois a nonresident next of kin has a right to nominate to the probate court a competent person to act as administrator, notwithstanding the fact that he is himself incapable of serving by reason of such nonresidence [4 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1902, c. 3, par. 6]. Strong v. Dignan, 207 Ill. 385, 69 N E. 909.

In California one who is himself not entitled to letters of administration as a nonresident executor of a foreign will or nonresident heirs, legatees and devisees, are not entitled to nominate an administrator with the will annexed. Can only be granted on written request of person entitled [Code Civ. Proc. § 1379]. In re Brundage's Estate, 141 Cal. 538, 75 P. 175.

26. In Georgia only citizens of the United States who are residents of that state may be appointed administrators [Ga. Civ. Code 1895, § 3365]. Jones v. Smith [Ga.] 48 S. E. 134. Nonresident having interest in estate of deceased resident may be appointed under certain conditions [Ga. Civ. Code 1895, § 3366]. Id.

In New York a nonresident alien cannot obtain letters of administration for himself or for another upon a petition filed by him for that purpose. Code Civ. Proc. 2661, expressly prohibits him from obtaining them for himself and not a person contingently entitled thereto under § 2662 so as to authorize petition by him. In re Ferrigan's Estate, 92 App. Div. 376, 87 N. Y. S. 16; In re Flynn, 92 App. Div. 379, 87 N. Y. S. 18. But the fact that one otherwise qualified is an alien does not render him incapable of acting as administrator, where he is a resident of the state [Code Civ. Proc. § 2661].

Where there are several persons equally entitled, letters may be granted to one or more of them,[28] and a co-administrator may be appointed to act with the administrator with the latter's consent.[29] The selection of an administrator pendente lite is a matter within the discretion of the court.[30]

Ancillary letters can only be issued to the person named in the foreign letters, or otherwise entitled to the possession of decedent's personalty, or to one authorized by him to receive them,[31] and they should not be issued where applicant and deceased are both nonresidents, and there are no resident creditors and no personalty within the state, and the estate is solvent.[32]

Statutes in some states provide for a public administrator whose duty it is to take charge of the estates of persons dying intestate and without known heirs.[33]

(§ 3) B. Procedure to obtain administration and grant of letters.[34]—There can be no valid appointment of an administrator except under an order of court.[35] Anyone absolutely or contingently entitled by law to letters may petition the court for the appointment of himself or such other person as has a prior right thereto,[36] and any interested person may appear and object.[37]

27. Husband or wife. McLean v. Roller, 33 Wash. 166, 73 P. 1123.

28. Letters may be granted to the guardian of a minor brother to the exclusion of an adult brother [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1367]. In re Turner's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 144.

29. Fact that he is called "special administrator" does not vitiate his appointment. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682.

30. Cannot be reviewed on appeal. In re Davenport [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 295.

31. Attempted appointment of any one else is void and may be collaterally attacked [Code Civ. Proc. § 2697]. Baldwin v. Rice, 44 Misc. 64, 89 N. Y. S. 738.

In New York the surrogate has authority to issue them only upon the petition of the person to whom letters have issued in another state or upon that of a resident creditor [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2643, 2695]. In re Gennert's Estate, 96 App. Div. 8, 89 N. Y. S. 37.

In California in case of a foreign will, the nonresident executor is primarily entitled to letters testamentary [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1322-1324]. In case he does not apply letters of administration with the will annexed will be granted as in case of intestacy [Code Civ. Proc. § 1350]. In re Brundage's Estate, 141 Cal. 538, 75 P. 175.

32. Purpose of ancillary letters, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2698, 2699, 2701, is to protect resident creditors. In re Gennert's Estate, 96 App. Div. 8, 89 N. Y. S. 37.

In Wisconsin it is held that the statute providing for the appointment and granting of letters to the public administrator in certain cases until administration shall be granted to some person entitled thereto (Rev. The Illinois statute [4 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1902, c. 3, p. 6], providing for the granting of letters to the public administrator in certain cases and in counties having a certain population is unconstitutional as special legislation. Strong v. Dignan, 207 Ill. 385, 69 N. E. 909.

In Georgia before letters can be granted to the county administrator as such, the estate must not only be unrepresented, but it must appear that it is not likely that any one else will apply for administration [Civ. Code, § 3381] (Bailey v. McAlpin [Ga.] 48 S. E. 699), which fact must appear after publication of the citation required by statute. An order for the publication and the publication of the application are essential prerequisites of an order of appointment.[38] In California, a jury trial may be allowed on proper demand therefor.[39]

Where a citation is issued on petition for letters, the probate court may appoint another than the petitioner without a second citation.[40] Unless good cause is shown, the acts of a clerk of court in vacation in granting letters testamentary should be ratified.[41]

An executor derives his authority from the will, and confirmation thereof by the court, followed by the filing of the proper bond is equivalent to taking out letters.[42]

(§ 3) C. Security or bond.[43]—The giving of a bond is a necessary prerequisite to the right of the representative to act as such.[44] An objection to the sufficiency of the administrator's bond does not raise a jurisdictional question,[45] and if the judgment appointing him is valid, no one not interested in the assets of the estate can question the legality or sufficiency of the security on his bond which has been accepted by the court.[46] In some states, where the value of the estate is so great that the court deems it inexpedient to require security for the full amount thereof, he may direct that any of the securities shall be deposited with a trust company, and need not consider the value of securities so deposited in fixing the amount of the bond.[47]

The right to accept foreign surety companies as sureties depends upon statute.[48]

The security to be required of an administrator pendente lite is a matter within the discretion of the court.[49]

petition for revocation of letters[53] or the removal of the representative.[54] The reversal of an order appointing an administrator necessarily carries with it a revocation of the letters.[55]

An executor or administrator who fails to manage the estate in the manner in which a prudent man would conduct his own affairs,[56] or who is guilty of misconduct in relation thereto, will be removed.[57] The fact that the estate has suffered no loss is immaterial.[58] The fact that an executor gives an invalid bond is no ground for his removal.[59] An administrator will not be dismissed after he has filed his final account when such action could in no way benefit creditors or heirs.[60] So long as the petition for removal contains sufficient allegations upon which to base the finding, it will be presumed that the petition was for the reasons presented.[61]

§ 4. *The authority, title, interest and relationship of personal representatives. A. The powers of a special administrator are limited to those necessary to collect and preserve the estate for the executor or administrator to be regularly appointed.[68]

A secondary administrator takes the place of the original representative,[69] and may do only such things as are necessary to complete the administration.[70] A judgment against an administrator in the state of domicile is a bar to an action by ancillary representatives in the state of their appointment against the same defendant on the same cause of action.[71]

A complaint alleging that an executor had managed an estate as such until his death and had never separated or set apart the income from the body of the estate sufficiently shows that he had not so far executed his trust that the money and securities had ceased to belong to the estate and that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against persons wrongfully converting such property. Weaver v. Meyer, 32 Ind. App. 587, 70 N. E. 409. In an action by an administrator de bonis non to recover property belonging to the estate which the widow had wrongfully conveyed to defendants, the record of a suit in which her deceased son had secured a divorce and in which the legitimacy of his child had been determined was admissible for the purpose of explaining the widow's action, as an attempt to prevent such child from inheriting from testator. Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that son was carrying on business on his own account with consent of executrix and not as her agent. Question whether she was estopped by her conduct to deny that he was her agent held for jury. American Tube Works v. Tucker, 185 Mass. 236, 70 N. E. 59.

73. Rice v. Conwill [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 393. An independent executor cannot delegate to an agent a discretion as to the terms of sale of realty (Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227), or give him authority to agree at his discretion with a subagent as to the commission the latter shall receive. As against special exception, petition held not to show that agent had authority to make agreement with subagent as to latter's commission. Executrix could authorize agent to sign agreement for amount fixed by her or ratify agreement after he had made it (Id.).

An administrator cannot ratify acts of an agent which he himself had no authority to do.[74]

Admissions of administrators in regard to the estate made while performing their duties as such are admissible against the estate, though not conclusive on it.[75] The same rule applies to their acts in omitting property from the inventory.[76]

Where the will provides for the administration of a trust fund without specifying who shall act as trustee, the executor becomes the trustee.[77] If the will gives him the powers and duties appropriate to the office, he will be regarded as a trustee in executing them and not as an executor.[78] In such case he occupies a double capacity and his powers in relation to each are distinct.[79] His duties as executor are primary to those as trustee, and if he exercises the latter inopportunely, he is liable for losses to creditors resulting therefrom.[80]

The reversal of a decree admitting a will to probate operates to destroy the authority of executors acting under letters testamentary, unless by express order of the court.[81]

The personal representative of a deceased administrator does not take and administer his trust, but proceeds at once to settle his account, and pay over the balance in his hands to his successor.[82]

(§ 4) B. Contracts, conveyances, charges and investments.[83]—Ordinarily executors and administrators cannot bind the estate by their executory contracts based upon a new and independent consideration, even though made in the interest and for the benefit of the estate,[84] but this rule does not prevent the recovery from them as such of funds received by them in their official capacity, in pursuance of a contract which they did not perform, and of which the estate had the benefit.[85]

Executor of estate, the principal assets of which are notes payable to decedent's widow, on which he is personally liable, for the purpose of protecting him may pay his own money to his surety and stipulate with him for its repayment to the executor upon death of decedent's widow. Brown's Ex'r v. Dunn's Estate, 75 Vt. 264, 55 A. 364. If contract was with reference to notes being assets of estate and executor's liability to account, as such, for them, the question whether they belonged to estate or widow and whether money paid to third person was assets of estate before its payment to him was immaterial for purpose of determining surety's liability to estate. 85. Liable for money paid them as part of purchase price of realty under contract

Liabilities contracted by them for services or otherwise are their personal liabilities and not claims against the estate,[86] and the persons contracting with them must look to them alone for their compensation.[87] But where the representative is a nonresident, the person rendering the services may proceed in equity against the property of decedent in the state without first exhausting his legal remedies against the executor.[88] Disbursements made by reason thereof, when reasonable in amount and for necessary services, will constitute a charge in favor of the representative against the estate,[89] but the probate court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate between the personal representative and the claimant.[90] An administrator is not personally liable on a mortgage and notes secured thereby, executed by him in his representative capacity on the realty of decedent, under order of the court and for the purpose of paying decedent's debts.[91]

A special administrator has no authority to make contracts which will interfere with or prejudice the duties or powers of the general administrator, to be thereafter appointed, or incumber the rights and privileges of the heirs or beneficiaries.[92]

92. Appointed under Minn. Gen. St. 1904, § 4484. Cannot enter into contract with third party to protect property from trespassers or to sell land, to continue for a number of years beyond probable duration of his authority. Appeal of McAlpine [Minn.] 100 N. W. 233.

93. Defendant's right to collect rent for pianos held not taken away by fact that complainant's intestate had right to commission on amount collected. Ivins v. Jacob [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 941.

An executor or administrator, in the absence of authority therefor, is not permitted to use any part of the estate in trade or manufacturing, or in stock speculation, or other business venture whereby the trust fund is put at hazard.[94] His doing so is a breach of trust rendering him personally liable for resulting losses, while incapable of sharing in accruing gains.[95] It is his duty to settle speculative accounts of deceased within a reasonable time.[96]

In the absence of a statute[97] or a provision in the will directing him to do so, he has no authority to continue a business in which decedent was engaged at the time of his death.[98] Ancillary administrators, within the state in which they are appointed, have the same rights in this regard as a regular representative would have.[99] Beneficiaries cannot prevent the execution of a direction to continue a business on the ground that such action may put the fund to the hazard incident to any trade venture.[1] A minor heir is not bound by the action of an administrator in continuing a commercial business with no other authority than the consent of the other heirs.[2]

Conveyances.—The deed of an executor who is not authorized to make a sale, either by will or by the probate court, passes no title.[3] It is no valid objection to an administrator's deed that the land was not included in the original inventory of the estate.[4] The deed should recite the authority of the representative.[5] A deed from one only of two executors, when both have qualified and are acting, is void.[6] Parties taking a mortgage made by an executor on realty belonging to the

96. Administrators held not to have settled speculative accounts with stock brokers within a reasonable time. Matthews v. Sheehan, 76 Conn. 654, 57 A. 694.

97. Statutes authorizing him to continue the business do not give him authority to continue a partnership of which decedent was a member [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1984]. Altgelt v. Sullivan & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 333. Independent executor may carry on business when will says nothing in regard to the matter. Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 582. This section embraces a mercantile business. Persons furnishing money for carrying on such business may establish their claims therefor against the estate. It is not incumbent on them to see that money is used for that purpose or to inquire whether business was being conducted at a loss. Id. An independent executor having authority to carry on such business has power to do everything necessary for that purpose. May borrow money and execute notes bearing interest and providing for attorney's fees in case they are not paid, and issue renewal notes therefor. Id. Where the executor has power to incur debts in respect to the assets of the estate, the fact that some one may have a remote claim of title in or to the property cannot defeat debts which he sees fit to contract in the course of his administration. Id.

98. Guaranty required by will before testator's son should be allowed to carry on certain business bequeathed to him held to be for benefit of beneficiaries and not to give one dealing with him right of action against executrix for permitting him to take charge of such business before giving guaranty. American Tube Works v. Tucker, 185 Mass. 236, 70 N. E. 59. Where decedent's attorney in fact, who was also one of his executors, continued the business under a power from the other executors, though not authorized to do so by will, the executors were personally liable for money borrowed by him in goor faith and used to pay debts incurred in such business. Howe v. Richardson [Mass.] 71 N. E. 543.

99. An ancillary administrator has all the powers with respect to a partnership of which decedent was a member which are devolved on the representatives of deceased by the articles of co-partnership. Where he has right to purchase interest of surviving partner, he has a right to an accounting of the business from the date of the last account rendered by the survivor to the heirs and approved by them. 4. Presumption is that supplemental inventory was filed. Jamison v. Dooley [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 91.

5. A deed to land reciting authority to transfer "securities" is void on its face. Pratt v. Worrell [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 450. Executor's deed held sufficient as execution of power of sale given him by will, he having no individual interest in the property. Carpenter v. Webb [Del. Super.] 55 A. 1011.

6. Limitations begin to run against ac-estate, with knowledge that the executor is acting wrongfully and does not intend that the estate shall in any way benefit by the transaction, cannot enforce it against the estate.[7] An administrator cannot subject the estate in his charge to a judgment for damages suffered through any false representations which he may have made while acting in his behalf.[8] In such case the remedy is against him personally.[9]

Investments.—There can be no change in an investment directed by the will except with the consent of all parties interested.[10] Statutes in some states provide the class of securities in which the funds of the estate should be invested.[11] In such cases, the representative should, within a reasonable time, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the will, sell securities and reinvest the proceeds in those designated.[12]

An executor who is directed by the will to invest a fund for the benefit of the estate is not relieved from liability by a return of the principal thereof without accounting for his failure to realize a profit on the investment.[13] The retention of funds by an administrator for his own use will not be treated as an investment of them under the terms of the will, so as to relieve him from liability therefor as administrator, without a specific order of the court to that effect.[14]

In some states, the court has power to order a sale of securities in danger of depreciation and a reinvestment of the proceeds.[15]

(§ 4) C. Title, interest or right in decedent's property.[16]—An executor or administrator has only such interest in property under his control as decedent had.[17]

The legal title to personalty goes to the executor or administrator.[18] He may sell the same or mortgage or pledge it to raise money or secure debts,[19] and a trans-tion by executors to recover possession at once. Brown v. Doherty, 93 App. Div. 190, 87 N. Y. S. 563.

Heir has no right to collect or dispose of choses in action. Bishop v. Matney, 25 Ky. L. R. 1777, 78 S. W. 356.

19. McCreery v. First Nat. Bank [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 890. The California Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1524), giving executors and administrators power to sell interests in personal property pledged in certain cases, merely gives them a right to sell it subject to the interest of the pledgee, and does not affect the right of the latter to sell it upon demand and notice. Bell v. Mills [C. C. A.] 123 F. 24.

fer from him in due course of law is necessary to pass the title to another.[20] A bona fide purchaser for value and without notice acquires a good title, though the representative intends to and actually does convert the proceeds to his own use.[21] The representative's title is not absolute, however, but he holds merely as trustee for the creditors and distributees, and after the payment of debts, the residue descends to the heirs at law.[22] The presumption is that representatives have acted legally and in good faith,[23] and that sales of personalty made by them were ordered and approved by the proper court.[24] Trust powers for minors do not pass to the minor or his guardian.[25]

§ 5. The property; its collection, management, and disposal by personal representatives. A. Assets.[26]—Ordinarily realty passes to the heirs or devisees, subject only to the right of the probate court to order a sale thereof for the purposes fixed by statute, and the representative has no interest therein.[27] By stat-

20. Heir seeking to recover personalty must show such transfer. Maxim "All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done until the contrary is shown" does not apply. McKenney v. Minahan, 119 Wis. 651, 97 N. W. 489. Failure to plead such transfer is a defect going to the cause of action and can be raised at any time. Cannot be reached by demurrer for want of legal capacity to sue or defect of parties plaintiff. Id.

21. Certificates of bank stock reissued in name of executor and pledged as collateral for notes made by him in due course of administration cannot be recovered by the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. McCreery v. First Nat. Bank [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 890.

22. Byers v. Weeks [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 485. Newly discovered assets of the estate are a trust fund in the hand of an administrator for the payment of the debts and costs of administration and do not descend to the heirs until such payment has been made. Heirs cannot prosecute action to recover them in their individual capacity until such claims have been paid, where estate is insolvent. Sharp v. Citizens' Bank of Stanton [Neb.] 98 N. W. 50. Hence the heirs at law of a deceased partner may in their own names compel an accounting by the surviving partner who has failed to administer the partnership estate, where decedent's administrator has received his final discharge without doing so and there is no authority for the appointment of an administrator de bonis non. Byers v. Weeks [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 485.

23. Persons dealing with them may assume so. McCreery v. First Nat. Bank [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 890.

24. Presumption on appeal from an order allowing the final account of a special administrator, and in the absence of a showing to the contrary. In re Ford's Estate [Mont.] 74 P. 735. Complaint in action on notes assigned to plaintiff by an executor need not allege that he was authorized by probate court to make such assignment. An allegation that it was made imports its validity. Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Chapman [Wis.] 99 N. W. 341. If he holds proceeds must be considered as doing so as agent of the heirs, and this will be construed as their having received same within meaning of statute making them liable for decedent's debts. Jones v. Comer, 25 Ky. L. R. 773, 76 S. W. 392. Rents accruing under lease by administrator made by order of court to raise money to pay debts go to the heirs, though land could be sold to pay debts. Vance v. Vance's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 741, 76 S. W. 370. Cannot recover treasure trove buried in land belonging to testator and discovered and removed by lessees. It goes to devisees. Burdick v. Chesebrough, 94 App. Div. 532, 88 N. Y. S. 13. The administrator represents only the personal estate and cannot, by any action of his, prejudice the rights of the heirs in the realty. Action by administratrix against person in whose name property stood alleging fraud on ground that he was in fact trustee for decedent and praying that if he failed to convey to the heirs she be adjudged a lien thereon for the purchase money held not a bar to an action by the heirs in which they alleged same facts and prayed that they be adjudged the owners of the land. Row v. Johnston, 25 Ky. L. R. 799, 78 S. W. 906. A probate court has nothing to do with the real estate of deceased, or its rents, until the proper legal steps have been taken to place such property in the hands of the executor or administrator for the necessary purpose of settling the estate. Not until personalty has been exhausted in payment of debts and legacies, except as otherwise directed by will. Jones v. Probate Court [R. I.] 55 A. 881. The functions of a substituted administrator, under the statutes of New Jersey (Laws 1901, p. 303), are confined to the personal estate of the decedent. Hoagland v. Cooper [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 705. Naked power of sale given executor by will does not vest title in him. Indiana R. Co. v. Morgan, 162 Ind. 331, 70 N. E. 368.

In New York a temporary administrator

ute in some states it is made assets in the hands of the executor or administrator for the payment of debts.[28] In others he has a right to the possession of the realty, and may collect the rents thereof until the debts are paid, and the estate is finally settled.[29] Where it is the duty of the administrator to administer realty as well as personalty, a judgment in a suit brought by him in regard to the realty binds the heirs.[30]

At common law an executor or administrator could not redeem realty mortgaged by his intestate,[31] but this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[32] Where he is permitted to do so it is not necessary for him to take out a license to sell realty,[33] but where no license to sell realty for the payment may be authorized by the surrogate to do any acts with respect to the realty which may, in his opinion, be necessary to carry out the provisions of the will or to preserve the property, except to sell it or lease for a longer period than a year. Code Civ. Proc. § 2675. Supreme court will not, in action for partition, appoint a receiver pendente lite where surrogate has appointed temporary administrator. Weiher v. Simon, 41 Misc. 202, 83 N. Y. S. 927.

28. In Alabama lands are made assets of the estate for the payment of debts, and the representative's right to their possession dominates that of the heir [Ala. Code 1896, §§ 66, 155-158]. Griffith v. Rudisill [Ala.] 37 So. 83. The heir cannot resist his claim if made within one year after the estate is committed to administration. Id. If made after that time, the representative has only a prima facie right to possession. Id.

In Arkansas same rule prevails. Hopson v. Oxford [Ark.] 79 S. W. 1051. Representative is entitled to possession until the debts are paid and the administration is closed, and may maintain and defend ejectment to enforce such right. Heirs may not maintain ejectment before that time against one in possession by consent of administrator, who is paying rent which is treated by administrator as assets for payment of debts. Id.

29. Nebraska Comp. St. 1901, c. 23, § 202. Jackson v. O'Rorke [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1068. Has no authority to lease the lands of intestate after the payment of the debts and the final settlement of the estate. Heirs may proceed against him as against any other trespasser. Id. The interest of the administrator c. t. a. extends only to possession of the land and the disposition of the rents and profits in settlement of the estate. Youngson v. Bond [Neb.] 95 N. W. 700.

In Iowa an administrator, as such, is not responsible to the heirs for rents collected by him (In re Pennock's Estate, 120 Iowa, 622, 98 N. W. 480), and in no event is he liable to a widow for rents until her distributive share is set aside (Id.).

In Minnesota the administrator is entitled to recover realty in the possession of the heir or devisee, pending the settlement of the estate in the probate court. Until he does so right of possession is in heir [Gen. St. 1894, § 4496]. Kern v. Cooper, 91 Minn. 121, 97 N. W. 648. He need not show that such recovery is necessary for the purpose of administration, but the burden is on the heir to show the contrary. Id.

In Missouri the executor or administrator may take possession of and lease lands belonging to the devisees or heirs when ordered to do so by the probate court for the purpose of paying debts. Rev. St. 1899, § 130. Executrix who has not done so cannot without the devisees' consent, collect rents which the tenant has agreed to pay them. Brent v. Chipley [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 270.

In California the executor is entitled to possession of the realty until the estate is settled or delivered over to the heirs or devisees by order of the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1452. Entitled to possession after death of life tenant to whom decree had given possession. Bank of Ukiah v. Rice, 143 Cal. 265, 76 P. 1020.

In Florida realty is not assets but descends to heir or devisee and remains in his possession until representative takes possession or sells the same under order of court for the payment of debts [Fla. Rev. St. 1892, § 1917]. Scott v. Jenkins [Fla.] 35 So. 101. Order must be pleaded even if it alone were sufficient to render heirs unnecessary parties to suit to foreclose mortgage. Id. Heirs at law and devisees necessary parties to suit to cancel conveyances of realty to decedent where will does not vest the title in the executor and no order has been made by a competent court directing him to take possession of it. Decree against executor alone will be reversed. Steere v. Tention [Fla.] 35 So. 106.

32. Heirs and widow not thereby deprived of their right to redeem. Statute covers case of absolute deed intended as mortgage [Rev. Laws, c. 187, § 33]. Clark v. Seagraves [Mass.] 71 N. E. 813. A bill may be maintained against one as administratrix to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage and to redeem therefrom without a previous trial in the probate court of the question whether the deed belonged to her individually or in her representative capacity, she being made defendant in both capacities. May be determined in suit. Id. Where the conveyances and assignments from which a redemption is sought were made to an administrator individually, but were for the benefit of the estate, she must account for rents and profits accruing after the death of the intestate. Id.

In Alabama the executor may redeem for purposes of administration. Griffith v. Rudisill [Ala.] 37 So. 83.

33. Clark v. Seagraves [Mass.] 71 N. E. 813.

of debts is granted, the result of such redemption inures exclusively to the benefit of the widow and heirs.[34] The heirs at law of a deceased mortgagor are necessary parties to an action to foreclose a mortgage on realty.[35] In Texas a sale made by a trustee after the death of the maker of the trust deed and pending the administration of his estate, or if there is no administration, during the time within which administration might have been had, is void.[36] In the latter case the power of the trustee to sell revives after the expiration of such period.[37]

Since the legal title to and the right to possession of the personalty is in the representative,[38] suits for its recovery must be brought by him[39] unless there is no administrator and no necessity therefor,[40] or the representative fails or refuses to act,[41] or the estate has been finally administered and all the debts have been paid, in which case they may be brought by the next of kin.[42]

It must appear that decedent actually had title to the property at the time of his death.[43] An executor or administrator taking possession of property which

The fact that personalty of deceased was sold by his widow under a mutual mistake of law by herself and the buyer does not affect the right of the administrator to recover the same, he not having been a party to the transaction. Snyder v. Jack, 140 Cal. 584, 74 P. 139. Next of kin cannot maintain action for conversion of personalty, there being no proof that deceased did not leave a widow, that there are not other next of kin equally entitled to the property, that there are no creditors, or that defendants have admitted that plaintiff had possession or a right thereto. Bank account held to belong to daughter of deceased personally and not to be assets of the estate for which she was bound to account as administratrix. In re Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387, 69 N. E. 732. Certificates of deposit given away by deceased during his lifetime does not pass to his representative as assets. Burge v. Burge's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 979, 76 S. W. 873. The mere fact that a note, not payable to bearer and not indorsed, is found among the effects of decedent who was not the payee raises no presumption that he owned it. Evidence insufficient to show ownership. Hair v. Edwards [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1089. The fact that stock stands on the books of the corporation in decedent's name is not conclusive evidence does not belong to the estate is liable therefor to the owner in his individual capacity.[44] Property pledged by a decedent,[45] or given to his executors in trust is not assets of the estate in the hands of the representative.[46] Life insurance cannot be relinquished to the estate by an instrument lacking a consideration.[47]

Deposits in banks,[48] the excess received on mortgage foreclosure sale,[49] and a cropper's prospective rights to his share of the crop,[50] have been held to be assets in the hands of the representatives. The subject of a gift causa mortis is an apparent asset in the hands of the administrator and a reference may be had under a statute authorizing references to determine disputed claims, though there is no other property.[51] An executor takes securities discovered in decedent's strong box in his representative capacity, and not as "finder."[52]

(§ 5) B. Collection and reduction to possession.[53]—An administrator who has been appointed and has properly qualified in the state of the domicile may receive payment of debts owing the intestate and take possession of the assets wherever the debtors may be.[54] An ancillary administrator is entitled to the assets of the estate in the state where he is appointed, and to collect debts there owing deceased,[55] but a voluntary payment to a foreign administrator, made in good faith, and without knowledge of the appointment of an ancillary administrator, is valid, there being no creditors in the state.[56]

It is the duty of an administrator to convert the assets of the estate into money as soon as he can reasonably do so, for the purpose of paying the debts and making a distribution of the balance.[57] In so doing he is bound to exercise the diligence and prudence which a prudent man of intelligence and discretion in such matters ordinarily employs in his own like affairs.[58] that it belongs to his estate. Evidence held to show that he held it as collateral. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 54 W. Va. 621, 46 S. E. 589. The fact that a mortgage is assets of an estate is sufficient consideration to support its transfer to the estate. Ambrose v. Drew, 139 Cal. 665, 73 P. 543.

44. Hunnicutt v. Higginbotham, 138 Ala. 472, 35 So. 469. The mere fact that the owner presents a claim therefor to the executor does not amount to an election on his part to rely on it as a claim against the estate and not against defendant individually. Claim against estate not insisted on or prosecuted. Money given to decedent to keep which was in her possession on her death. Id. The surrogate has no jurisdiction, upon a summary application, to compel the administrator to deliver to a claimant property taken possession of by him as assets of the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 2472, subds. 3, 4, do not give him authority to direct return of securities or money deposited with decedent. Case v. Spencer, 86 App. Div. 454, 83 N. Y. S. 697.

45. Not entitled to possession since pledgee's power of sale continues. Bell v. Mills [C. C. A.] 123 F. 24.

46. Where the income of a sum was to be paid to testator's son and on his death the principal was to be paid to the son's executors and administrators and go to his heirs, the principal did not constitute assets of the son's estate in the hands of his executors, but was held by them in trust for his heirs. Thayer v. Fairchild [R. I.] 56 A. 773.

47. Saling v. Bolander [C. C. A.] 125 F. 701.

48. Bank held to notice of revocation by death of power of attorney to withdraw deposits. Hoffman v. Union Dime Sav. Inst., 85 N. Y. S. 16.

49. Where administratrix bids in property for amount in excess of mortgage debt and costs she is entitled to conveyance on payment of latter amount. Burroughs v. Howell County [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 682.

55. Maas v. German Sav. Bank, 176 N. Y. 377, 68 N. E. 658.

56. Ancillary administrator cannot enforce another payment where he remains silent and permits administrator of domicile to collect deposit of deceased in bank, and does not notify bank of his appointment or make demand on it. Maas v. German Sav. Bank, 176 N. Y. 377, 68 N. E. 658. The fact that such appointment is a matter of record in the surrogate's office is not constructive notice of such appointment to debtors of the estate. Id.

57. Reasonable time depends upon circumstances. Administrator not controlled by directions of one of next of kin as to time for making such conversion, even to extent of her share. In re Thompson, 84 N. Y. S. 1111.

In some states the husband has the right to administer upon the wife's intestate estate and to take to himself the surplus after the payment of her debts.[59] But until he has reduced her choses in action to possession by a suit as administrator, there is no surplus belonging to him so as to be subject to attachment in a suit against him.[60]

The representative has a general and in many respects an absolute power over debts and claims in favor of the estate.[61] He may, in the absence of fraud or collusion, release, compromise, or discharge them subject only to his liability for any loss resulting from his mismanagement.[62] He may recover bonds put up as collateral by paying the claim secured thereby prior to its allowance.[63] He should not take realty in payment of debts if its proceeds may be had instead.[64] The administrator of a surety may and should pay the debt of the prinicpal when the latter becomes insolvent.[65]

Statutes in some states provide that the court may direct that any securities for the payment of money belonging to the estate may be deposited with a trust company.[66] In such case the representative has no further control over them.[67]

The personal representatives of a deceased partner have an equitable right to have the assets of the partnership applied to the payment of firm debts, and to the distribution of any surplus.[68] On a proper showing, they may compel an accounting by him, but cannot enforce claims or maintain actions to reduce to possession the assets of the partnership.[69]

58. Not liable for decline in value of stocks within 50 days after their appointment, it not having occurred by their fault. In re Thompson, 84 N. Y. S. 1111. Account will be surcharged with amount of claim for services which he could have collected but against which he allowed limitations to run. In re Northrup's Will, 92 App. Div. 5, 87 N. Y. S. 318.

62. Independent of statutes, has authority to compromise and adjust claims either against or in favor of the estate. Personally liable only in case action is not approved by the court. In re Gilman's Estate, 92 App. Div. 462, 87 N. Y. S. 128. His release of a judgment which is a lien on realty is valid when supported by a consideration and in the absence of a showing of fraud, collusion, or the wasting of assets. McCleary v. Chipman, 32 Ind. App. 489, 68 N. E. 320. Claim for alleged wrongful death of intestate. Logan v. Central Iron & Coal Co., 139 Ala. 548, 36 So. 729. He may fully protect himself by obtaining authority therefor from the probate court. Ala. Code 1896, § 138. This statute does not prohibit settlement without order of court. Id. In New York the surrogate has power to authorize the compromise and settlement of a claim against the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 2719. Claim held properly compromised. In re Gilman's Estate, 92 App. Div. 462, 87 N. Y. S. 128. Legatees are not estopped to contest the validity of the discharge of a debtor by an agreement amounting to a pretermission of the claim in the absence of a showing of prejudice to the alleged debtor. 64. In re Northup's Will, 92 App. Div. 5, 87 N. Y. S. 318. Executors held justified in making settlement with testator's son giving him certain income out of the estate in consideration of his refraining from insisting on right to become member of firm to which deceased belonged. Testator endeavored to make him partner and his insistence would have resulted in dissolution of firm and consequent loss of profits to estate. In re Meyer, 88 N. Y. S. 798.

65. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 54 W. Va. 621, 46 S. E. 589.

66. Where value of estate so great that surrogate deems it inexpedient to require security for the full amount thereof [N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2595]. Ditmas v. McKane, 92 App. Div. 344, 86 N. Y. S. 1083.

67. Ditmas v. McKane, 92 App. Div. 344, 86 N. Y. S. 1083. The administrator has no right to possession of or control over a note so deposited or to receive a payment thereon, or to sue or enforce a judgment for the amount thereof without the consent of the surrogate. Such judgment cannot be a basis for a creditor's suit by him. Judgment not validated by fact that on distribution of estate the note was assigned to him individually. Id.

68. Cannot maintain action to recover fund belonging to firm in hands of third persons having no right to it as against the surviving partner, it not appearing that the firm debts have been paid and that there is a surplus in the survivor's hands. Secor v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 92 App. Div. 294, 87 N. Y. S. 181.

Statutes in some states provide for proceedings for the discovery of assets alleged to have been concealed or embezzled.[70] In Mississippi in proceedings in chancery to compel a third person to turn over to the administrator property belonging to the estate, oral evidence is inadmissible in the absence of an agreement for its admission or a notice that it will be presented.[71]

As a general rule the representative cannot assail for fraud the conveyance of his decedent.[72] But in case of a contest between general creditors and one asserting a particular claim, the executor or administrator represents the former,[73] and hence may maintain an action to avoid a conveyance made by decedent in fraud of his creditors, where a recovery of the property is necessary to pay his debts.[74] In Louisiana he may maintain an action to set aside a tax sale of realty belonging to the succession where the estate owes debts and a sale of the property in dispute is necessary to pay them.[75]

In the absence of a statute to the contrary an administrator de bonis non succeeds only to such assets as have not been administered by his predecessor, or are capable of identification as decedent's property, and such debts due decedent as remain unpaid.[76] He may maintain an action against his predecessor and his bondsmen for assets of the estate received by him.[77]

Pending an appeal from a decree granting letters of administration, the appointee has the custody of the property of the estate, and debts may be collected by, and notices of claims filed with, him.[78] The statutory right of an administrator to sue for tortious killing of his intestate is not strictly administrative and is treated elsewhere.[79]

Such proceeding is "a suit pending" within the statutes providing for the taking of depositions (Rev. St. 1899, § 2877) even though embezzlement is charged. Id. Where there are no children, the husband, being entitled to half his deceased wife's estate (Rev. St. 1899, § 2938), is a person interested. Id. The decision of the probate court that the husband is interested so as to be entitled to file such affidavit is not open to review on habeas corpus to release a witness refusing to answer questions in such proceeding. (§ 5) C. Inventory and appraisal.[80]—Statutes in some states require an administrator to file an inventory of the estate within a certain time after his appointment and qualification,[81] and provide that he shall forfeit, to any one suing therefor, a penalty for each month's delay, unless before suit is brought he shall make excuse therefor acceptable to the court.[82]

It is the duty of the executor to charge himself in the inventory with all property which is part of the assets of the estate, including any that he may have delivered to legatees.[83] Omission to inventory the property does not affect the legal rights of the usufructuary,[84] and the fact that land was not included in the original inventory will not invalidate a subsequent conveyance thereof by the administrator.[85] Recitals in the inventory as to the ownership of property are binding on the executor or administrator.[86]

The appraisement of realty is only prima facie evidence of its value.[87] In the absence of statutory authority, a special administrator cannot have appraisers appointed.[88]

(§ 5) D. Property allowed widow or children.[89]—In some states, the widow is entitled to retain possession of the dwelling house in which her husband most usually dwelt next before his death, free from molestation or rent until her dower is assigned to her.[90] The widow's right of quarantine is assignable.[91]

The widow and children have an extended estate of homestead in land occupied by decedent as homestead, free from liability for debts, except such as he charged thereon.[92] In some states, the probate court has power to set apart premises as a homestead for the use of the surviving wife during the period of administration and until the final distribution of the estate.[93]

82. Under Conn. Gen. St. 1888, § 579, providing for monthly penalty, each month's neglect is an offense in itself. All more than a year old when suit commenced are barred by Gen. St. 1902, § 1120, and all for which a recovery may be had may be included in one count in a complaint. Atwood v. Lockwood, 76 Conn. 555, 57 A. 279. The excuse contemplated must be made to and accepted by the court, and entered in its records, and can be proved only by such records. An oral excuse made to and accepted by probate judge insufficient. Id.

84. Thomas v. Blair, 111 La. 678, 35 So. 811. The presumption of consideration for a note and mortgage arising from their execution and positive testimony that they were given from money borrowed from the estate is not overcome by the fact that neither they nor the money were mentioned in the inventory of the administrator, which was filed before such note and mortgage were transferred to him by the attorney to whom they were originally given. Ambrose v. Drew, 139 Cal. 665, 73 P. 543.

91. Under N. J. Statute (Gen. St. p. 1276), giving the widow the right to hold her husband's mansion house and the plantation thereto belonging until dower is assigned her and without liability for rent, a grantee of the dower rights, who is also a mortgagee in possession, need not account for rent on foreclosing the mortgage before dower is assigned. Moffett v. Trent [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 1035.

92. Also entitled to excess received on mortgage foreclosure sale. Where she bids in property for more than mortgage debt and costs, she is entitled to conveyance from sheriff on payment of the latter amount. Fact that she is also administratrix does not deprive her of right to bid in property [Mo. Rev. St. 1879, § 2693; Rev. St. 1899, §§ 5439, 3620]. Burroughs v. Howell County [Mo.] 79 S. W. 682. See title Homesteads, § 7, 2 Curr. L. 220.

93. In California: Must be suitable and proper for residence purposes, and property which could have been selected as a homestead during decedent's lifetime [Homestead defined by Cal. Civ. Code, § 1237]. In re Levy's Estate, 141 Cal. 646, 75 P. 301. There

The surviving husband or wife is also generally entitled to certain of decedent's personalty free from liability for his or her debts,[94] or a money equivalent in lieu thereof.[95] The setting apart of exempt property is to the widow alone and vests complete title in her[96] immediately on the death of her husband.[97] This right may be waived.[98]

By statute in many states, the widow is given a certain allowance for her support and that of her family.[99] Such allowance vests in her[1] or in her and the

is no specified limitation of value, the rights of creditors, heirs, devisees and legatees being subordinate to the right of the family. Id. The court may, on motion, set aside and vacate an order setting apart certain premises to petitioner as a homestead, it appeaing that the same was unjust and that it was obtained through the inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of the executors and heirs [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 473]. Levy v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 139 Cal. 590, 73 P. 417.

In Nebraska, a county court has jurisdiction to set aside a homestead to a widow by virtue of its general jurisdiction in matters of probate and settlement of estates. Tyson v. Tyson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1076.

94. In New York a proceeding for an accounting and to require an executor to set apart exempt property is barred if not brought within 6 years after expiration of 18 months from issuance of letters. Code Civ. Proc. § 2724, providing for setting off exempt property on judicial settlement of account is for benefit of surviving husband or wife or child and executor of deceased husband cannot claim that it is an equitable action so that 10 year statute of limitations applies. In re Campbell's Estate, 96 App. Div. 561, 89 N. Y. S. 569. The widow is not entitled to avoid a gift inter vivos made by decedent to his son on the ground that she is prejudiced thereby because there is no other property out of which her exemptions may be assigned, where there are no allegations that the gift was made to defraud her or that it had that effect. Burge v. Burge's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 979, 76 S. W. 873.

95. In Texas, minor children by a former wife are entitled to share in an allowance made to the widow, who was decedent's second wife, in lieu of exemptions [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2037-2041, 2046-2051]. Wilson v. Brinker [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 213.

In New York, the surrogate courts are in conflict as to whether a money equivalent will be allowed in such cases under Code Civ. Proc. § 2713, subd. 3. Allowed. In re Hulse, 84 N. Y. S. 220. Contra, In re Keough's Estate, 42 Misc. 387, 86 N. Y. S. 807.

Proc. § 2713, subd. 5, vests in the widow and passes to her administrator on her death before they are transferred to her. In re Hulse, 84 N. Y. S. 220.

97. Appraisal not necessary to fix her rights, where only assets exclusive of judgment in favor of deceased are insufficient to make up such exemptions and to pay preferred claims, and the balance necessary to do so will exhaust such judgment, the judgment debtor can not set off a judgment against decedent purchased by him prior to filing of appraisal in which allowance to widow was set out. Thompson v. Thompson, 25 Ky. L. R. 1626, 78 S. W. 418.

98. Where husband does so by refusing tender thereof, his executor cannot thereafter claim them. In re Campbell's Estate, 96 App. Div. 561, 89 N. Y. S. 569. Widow's right to an allowance is not waived by returning as administratrix, an inventory containing no claim therefor. In re Hulse, 84 N. Y. S. 220.

99. In California, a temporary order for family allowance made before the return of the inventory ceases to be operative when such return is made. Fact that allowance is directed to be paid until further order of the court, immaterial. In re Bell's Estate, 142 Cal. 97, 75 P. 679. Creditors not prevented from contesting payments after return by the fact that court impliedly recognized the continuance of the order and the court, the executors and certain other creditors acted under the mistaken belief that it was still effective. Id.

In Georgia, the widow and minor children are entitled to a year's support for each year the estate is to be kept together. Civ. Code 1895, § 3466. The mere fact that litigation is pending over the widow's right to dower will not alone authorize the granting of a second year's support. Smith v. Foster, 119 Ga. 376, 46 S. E. 425. It is an expense of administration and a first charge upon the estate. It may be waived. Ehrlich v. Silverstein [Ga.] 48 S. E. 703. Where decedent's sole estate consists of property which has been set apart as a homestead for the benefit of himself and his family, and his widow lives upon the property for several months until her death without applying for a year's support or indicating an intention to do so, she will be held to have elected to take the homestead rather than the year's support, and her administrator cannot have the property set apart to the estate as a year's support. Id. A creditor may object to the report of appraisers appointed to set it apart. On the ground that allowance is excessive and that condition of estate as to solvency was not considered. Mulherin v. Kennedy [Ga.] 48 S. E. 437. An appeal to the superior court from a judgment of the ordinary, approving such report and setting apart the property, suspends the judgment, and the widow has no vested right to the property in fee until the appeal is determined. Only effect of judgment is to prevent alienation of the property [Ga. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5340, 5352]. Id. Where subsequently to such appeal, the administrator files an equitable petition to marshal the assets of the estate, praying that the creditors claiming portions of the land set apart and the widow be interplead-children absolutely on the death of her husband.[2] The order setting it apart should describe the property allowed with reasonable certainty,[3] and the allowance will be presumed to be in addition to, and not in substitution for, a provision for that purpose in the will.[4] The widow's right to her statutory allowances is not barred by an antenuptial contract giving her nothing in lieu thereof,[5] and such a contract cannot affect the rights of the children.[6] The fact that she had separated from her husband and was living apart from him at the time of his death does not affect her right.[7]

Where the widow elects to take a child's part in lieu of dower, her interest is subordinate to the debts and expenses of administration.[8]

Equity will, in certain cases, set out the portion of the widow who has elected to take a statutory share in the estate.[9]

(§ 5) E. Management, custody, control, and disposition of estate.[10]—The management and disposal of property under testamentary trusts, though the same persons act as executors and trustees, is treated in the article on trusts.[11]

ed, a decree finding that the title to such property was in the creditors at the husband's death is binding on the administrator and the heirs of the deceased widow, though widow, who died pending the litigation, was dismissed from the bill before decree. Id.

In Illinois, the widow has a right to have the realty belonging to the estate, other than the homestead, sold to pay the amount of her award. Reinhardt v. Scaman, 208 Ill. 448, 69 N. E. 847. She may bid at the sale. Dower becomes merged in fee thus acquired. Id. The statute of Illinois (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.], p. 313, c. 3, par. 77), providing that, when deceased is at the time of his death a housekeeper and the head of a family and leaves no widow, there shall be allowed to the children then residing with him, including all males under 18 years of age and all females, the same amount of property as that allowed to the widow by statute, applies to all female children, irrespective of age, and whether dependent or not. Daughter held to be member of family and allowance made to her held reasonable. Gillett v. Gillett, 207 Ill. 136, 69 N. E. 942.

In Texas, it is held that a landlord's statutory lien on the crop of the tenant for supplies and advances during the year in which the crop was raised is superior to a claim for an allowance of a year's support to the widow and minor children of the deceased tenant. Walker v. Patterson's Estate [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 437. Widow having no knowledge of proceedings to sell land held not to have waived her right to allowance for year's support and to be entitled to recover from the administrator the amount realized therefrom, where it did not equal the amount of such allowance and there was no other property out of which it could be paid. Clark v. English [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 325.

In Utah, the widow has an absolute right to a family allowance during the administration of the estate of her deceased husband, notwithstanding the fact that her share of the realty has been set apart to her [Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 3846]. In re Pugsley's Estate, 27 Utah, 489, 76 P. 560. The amount to be allowed is in the discretion of the court. Id. The age, social position, and health of the survivors, the education of the children, the value of the estate, and its solvency or insolvency should be considered. Id.

It is the duty of executors and administrators to manage estates in a manner such as would be adopted by a prudent man in the conduct of his own affairs.[12] They must assume the responsibility and exercise the discretion of their office, and must also, within reasonable limits, perform the actual manual labor required by the due execution of their trust.[13] They are not bound by the directions of the next of kin as to the management of the estate,[14] but the latter may compel the administrator with the will annexed to execute a trust created by the will.[15] Where the heirs have not accepted a succession, an administrator may stand in judgment for the purposes of a suit pending against the de cujus at the date of his death for the recovery of realty.[16] The administrator of a guardian may recover money belonging to the wards from an agent who has embezzled the same, where the state has been compelled to account to the wards therefor.[17] An administratrix, in erecting a monument over the grave of deceased under an order of the probate court, does not act as such administratrix in a way to preclude the heirs from having any title thereto, or rights or equities therein.[18] The fact that the survivor of the community is administratrix neither adds to nor abridges her power to administer community property as between it and community creditors.[19] The representative may keep property belonging to the estate outside the state.[20] Executorial acts should be so done as to designate the estate represented.[21]

An executor has no authority to pay out of the general property of the estate a mortgage on property given by testator to his wife before his death,[22] or to sell a note, the income of which has been bequeathed by testator.[23]

The representative may keep the buildings belonging to the estate in tenantable repair, extraordinary casualties excepted.[24] Statutes in some states authorize him to carry on decedent's plantation,[25] and, in certain cases, to improve property held by him in trust.[26]

26. Under a statute authorizing executors or trustees holding land in trust for any person or persons for life, or until the happening of some event, to improve the same and erect buildings thereon in certain cases (N. J. Laws 1897, p. 190), an executrix is not entitled to use trust funds of the estate to erect buildings on land subject under the will to a legal life estate, with remainder to

An executor has such authority in relation to the management of the estate as is given him by the will.[27] A naked power to sell realty to pay legacies or make distribution given to the executor by the will does not vest the title in him, but it remains in the heir, who is entitled to the rents and profits until such power is exercised.[28] Where the power of sale is discretionary, the court cannot order its exercise in the first instance, but it may, on an accounting, charge the executor with any loss to the estate resulting from his negligence or bad faith in relation thereto.[29] A creditor may sue in equity to compel an executor to exercise a testamentary power of sale for the purpose of paying debts, when there is not sufficient personalty for that purpose.[30] If a will directs property to be sold but appoints no one to make the sale, it can only be sold by application to a court of equity.[31] A sale by an executor passes only such interest in and title to the property as the decedent had at the time of his death.[32] An administrator de bonis non may execute a power to sell in order to bring the land into a course of administration, but not to execute a trust for a collateral purpose.[33]

An independent executor is entirely a creation of statute and his powers and duties are fixed and limited thereby.[34] He may do without the order of the court every act which an ordinary executor could do under such order.[35]

Sales made by an executor under a power in a will must in some states be confirmed by the probate court.[36] With this exception the purchaser deals with the executor in the same manner as he would with any other vendor.[37] The fact that the sum realized will not be sufficient to pay all the legacies cannot be raised by an unsuccessful bidder on appeal from an order confirming the sale, it not being a legatee, and none of the legatees having appealed.[38] It is no ground of objection to the confirmation of the sale that it is not for the best interests of a particular heir,[39] or of the estate,[40] or that others have an interest in the property.[41] A curative act cannot validate an executor's sale which is not authorized either by the will or by an order of court.[42] The sale of lands is not ordinarily a part of the duties of the administrator.[43]

The probate court has no authority to order the administrator to borrow money to complete an unfinished building commenced by decedent, for the construction of which no contract existed at the time of his death.[44] The person lending the money in such case can only be subrogated to the rights of the contractors, and has no lien therefor on the land.[45] In some states realty may be sold to pay legacies and to raise a fund to pay annuities charged on the estate, where there is not sufficient personalty for that purpose.[46]

One paying the debts of the estate,[47] or loaning money to an executor to pay them is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of creditors so paid.[48] Administrators paying a claim against an estate with their notes are entitled to a corresponding credit as of the date thereof.[49] Land held by decedent with a power to sell for support is assets of which the executor holds possession until outstanding debts for support are paid.[50] It is the duty of executors to discharge liens on property worth more than the amount secured thereby, where they were given to secure the personal and primary obligations of the testator.[51]

The executor or administrator may apply to a court of equity for instructions when the affairs of the deceased are so involved that he cannot otherwise safely administer the estate.[52] The court will also lend its aid where circumstances are such that injustice to the representative or injury to the estate will otherwise result.[53] Equity has jurisdiction to establish a right under a will and to compel performance of their duties by executors as incident thereto.[54] In proper cases equity will instruct a trustee[55] and incident to this power it will construe a will.[56] In some states the probate court also has authority to construe the will for the purpose of instructing the representative.[57] The executor can not be interfered with in the administration of the estate by the appointment of a receiver in a suit to contest the will.[58]

Any one of several executors may settle an account with a person accountable to the estate.[59]

§ 6. Debts and liabilities of estate; their establishment and satisfaction. A. Claims provable.[60]—As a general rule when a debtor dies, creditors must enforce their claims in the probate court and cannot, within the time allowed by law for the issuance of letters of administration, maintain an action against the heirs or devisees.[61] But this rule does not apply where it is shown that there are no other debts and there is no necessity for an administration.[62] The only claims provable against the estate in the probate court are such as were existing demands against decedent during his lifetime.[63]

Fact that pleading by mortgagee alleges probate proceedings and appointment of administrator who did not qualify insufficient to rebut presumption of validity, since pleading may have been amended to show that administration was not necessary. In re Currier's Estate [Colo. App.] 74 P. 340. A claim for funeral expenses is a charge against the estate rather than a debt due from decedent and hence cannot be made the subject of a reference as a claim against him under Code Civ. Proc. § 2718, though administratrix assents thereto. Ge-

A contingent claim is one that cannot be proved or allowed as a debt because the liability is dependent upon some uncertain future event, and therefore cannot be determined within the time allowed by law for proving claims.[64] It does not become absolute within the meaning of statutes in regard to filing claims until it is in shape to be presented to the probate court for final adjudication against the estate.[65] The mere fact that the time of payment is uncertain does not make the claim contingent where it is sure to arrive.[66] By statute in some states demands payable at a future day may be allowed at their present value, and payment may thereafter be made according to the terms and at the time specified in the contract.[67]

One is a creditor, within the meaning of statutes providing for the filing of claims and bringing actions thereon, who has a cause of action against the deceased which by law survives.[68]

Tortwise liabilities may be enforced if they survive.[69] A claim for damages for obstructing a right of way which survives the death of the party causing the obstruction should be presented to the administrator before suit is brought thereon.[70]

A claim against deceased as a surety on a note may be proved against his estate though the remedy against the principal is barred by limitations.[71] In states where partnership debts are regarded as joint and several partnership creditors may enforce full payment of their demands against the estate of a deceased partner, without waiting until the firm affairs are wound up.[72] Prior to a settlement of the partnership affairs, the surviving partner cannot, in the probate court, recover from the administrator of a deceased partner a balance alleged to be due him from the firm.[73] A contention by parties jointly liable on a claim filed against an estate that such estate should pay the whole debt and that their liability to it should not exceed half such amount is not a claim which must be filed and proven against the estate.[74]

A debt secured by a mortgage executed after a will devising the land is a debt

In latter case, it is regarded as action at law in so far as Illinois practice act is concerned, and appellate court is the final court of appeal as to controverted questions of fact [Hurd's Rev. Maryland: Where, in a suit for the sale of land and a division of the proceeds among the heirs, it was agreed that a decree of sale might be entered and that afterwards a claim of one of the heirs for services rendered deceased might be submitted to the auditor and passed upon by him in the distribution of the proceeds, upon such testimony as might then be produced, the proceeding was to that extent converted into a creditor's bill and the court had jurisdiction, after the sale, to order the auditor to take testimony in regard to the claim. Duckworth v. Duckworth [Md.] 56 A. 490.

In New York, the surrogate has no power to determine the validity or decree the payment of a disputed claim except with the written consent of the parties. Must dismiss without prejudice and creditor may then bring action [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1882, 2722]. Holly v. Gibbons, 176 N. Y. 520, 68 N. E. 889. Only upon the judicial settlement of the accounts of the executor or administrator and upon the written consent of the parties [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2743, 1822, as amended in 1895]. Clark v. Hyland's Estate, 88 App. Div. 392, 84 N. Y. S. 640. May try an issue as to whether the executrix received and accepted a written statement of claim, but not the issue raised merely by the claim and its rejection. In re Reinach's Estate, 41 Misc. 78, 83 N. Y. S. 651. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2606, he may require the executor of a deceased administrator to account to a creditor for moneys received by the decedent in his representative capacity. In re Hull, 97 App. Div. 258, 89 N. Y. S. 939.

In Oregon, county courts have jurisdiction to hear and determine claims without the formality of technical pleadings [B. & C. Comp. § 1161]. In re Morgan's Estate [Or.] 77 P. 608. The pecuniary limitation imposed on the jurisdiction of such courts by Const. art. 7, § 12, does not apply. Id.

In Pennsylvania, the orphans' court has no jurisdiction to settle complicated accounts growing out of numerous transactions between a claimant and decedent, involving mutual obligations and requiring an accounting. Miller v. Fulton, 206 Pa. 595, 56 A. 74.

jurisdiction cannot ordinarily enforce a claim against the estate by attachment proceedings during the course of its administration in the probate court.[83]

Limitations do not run against decedent's creditors during the time administration on his estate is delayed,[84] but the death of a creditor does not operate to prevent the running of limitations against his heirs on a claim maturing before his death, notwithstanding administration is not had on his estate.[85] Where a debt becomes due at the death of the debtor and administration is not taken out by the next of kin, it is the duty of the debtor to have letters issued within a reasonable time.[86] Limitations cannot be tolled by mere failure to present a claim.[87] Where the statute forbids suit against the executor or administrator during a certain period after his appointment, limitations will not run during such time.[88] An executor may prevent the running of the statute by making payments on the claim,[89] but the fact that he repeatedly promises to pay a claim will not have such effect where it was not barred at the time of decedent's death and the creditor takes no steps to have the estate properly administered, even though no notice to creditors to present claims is published.[90] The fact that no execution can issue on a judgment because of lapse of time does not prevent its enforcement against the estate of the judgment debtor at any time before limitations have run against it.[91]

In some states, no suit can be commenced against the representative to recover a debt owed by decedent until the expiration of a certain time after his qualification.[92] In Washington, if a person against whom an action could have been brought dies before the time limited for its commencement and the action

85. Heirs cannot prolong limitations in their own favor by delaying to take out letters. Stanton v. Gibbins [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 95. Where the orphans' court assumes, without jurisdiction, to adjudicate certain items of a claim which was the proper subject of an accounting, such claim does not thereby become seated on the fund so as to toll limitations. Miller v. Fulton, 206 Pa. 595, 56 A. 74. A provision requiring claims to be presented within one year after publication of a notice to that effect does not operate to extend the general statute of limitations. Fact that no notice was published as required by 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. §§ 6226, 6228, immaterial. Bank of Montreal v. Buchanan, 32 Wash. 480, 73 P. 482. The Virginia statute providing that the time during which a party is out of the state shall not be computed in determining whether the statute of limitations has run (Code 1887, § 2933, as amended by Laws 1897-98, p. 441, c. 404) does not apply to deceased persons or their estates, so as to prevent limitations running against claim against nonresident decedent which did not accrue until after his death. Templeman's Adm'r v. Pugh [Va.] 46 S. E. 474. Notes given by independent executor in renewal of others given by him for money borrowed for purpose of carrying on business of decedent are not barred by limitations when presented to the administrator de bonis non for allowance, and on their rejection, suit is brought to establish them as a claim against the estate within four years after they become due. 90. Bank of Montreal v. Buchanan, 32 Wash. 480, 73 P. 482.

91. In South Carolina may be enforced at any time within 20 years after its rendition. Ex parte Goldsmith [S. C.] 47 S. E. 984.

92. In Georgia, twelve months. Such provision is for benefit of representative. Claimant of property on which judgment recovered during such time is sought to be enforced cannot question its validity on that ground. Hill v. Julian, 119 Ga. 607, 46 S. E. 834. In Texas in suit for money not required to plead until expiration of 12 months from probate of will. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1996. Applies only to suits on claims instituted against estate and not to suits pending at testator's death. Altgelt v. D. Sullivan & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 333. A voluntary appearance waives this right. Id. Right is in nature of a personal privilege, and fact that judgment is entered within a year does not render it void. Ross v. Drouilhet [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 241.

survives, it may be brought against his representatives after the expiration of such time and within one year after the issuance of letters to them.[93] Statutes limiting the time within which actions may be brought against executors and administrators are imperative and cannot be waived by them.[94]

Presentation of claims.[95]—All claims must be filed or presented to the executor or administrator[96] within the time fixed by statute, or they will be barred.[97] Where no time is fixed, they must be presented within a reasonable time.[98]

93. Confirmation of executor's authority by court and filing bond equivalent to taking out letters [2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4810]. Bank of Montreal v. Buchanan, 32 Wash. 480, 73 P. 482. Frew v. Clark, 34 Wash. 561, 76 P. 85. Such section keeps alive claim on note so that it may be enforced against personalty where letters of administration were not taken out for 20 years, though it is barred against realty [§§ 4798, 4642]. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 P. 533. Presentation to administrator of notes not barred at time of testator's death within year after his appointment is commencement of action within meaning of this section and claim not barred, though would otherwise have been under general statute of limitations. Frew v. Clark, 34 Wash. 561, 76 P. 85. Section 4810 does not extend general statute of limitations as to foreclosure of a mortgage on decedent's realty [Id. §§ 4798, 4642]. Gleason v. Hawkins, 32 Wash. 464, 73 P. 533.

94. Failure to bring suit on claim within time extinguishes it, though administrator allowed and promised to pay it when it was presented to him. Thompson v. Hoxsie [R. I.] 55 A. 930. A judgment against an executrix, obtained in an action commenced more than five years after the death of decedent, is not a lien on the realty of the estate and is not entitled to participate in a fund arising out of sale thereof on the foreclosure of a mortgage given by deceased during his lifetime. Bowman v. Knorr, 206 Pa. 270, 272, 55 A. 976. The administration of an administrator de bonis non is a continuation of that of the executor and the statute limiting the time within which suits may be brought against executors and administrators begins to run from the appointment and qualification of such executor [R. I. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 218, § 14]. Suit must be commenced against administrator de bonis non within three years (Pub. St. 1882, c. 189, § 8) after appointment and qualification of executor. Thompson v. Hoxsie [R. I.] 55 A. 930.

95. Claims provable, § 6A, ante.

96. Cannot otherwise be made basis of suit. One who presents a claim for a definite sum for services rendered decedent during a definite period cannot sue for a greater sum, or for services rendered outside such period [R. I. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 215, § 2]. Anderson v. Williams [R. I.] 58 A. 251. Where a note, which testator signed as joint maker, was not presented as a claim against his estate, though his liability was capable of being ascertained during its settlement and there was sufficient personalty to pay all claims, a bill in equity to which the executor was not made a party, could not be maintained by the other signers against testator's heirs and devisees for the purpose of relieving them from liability thereon. Tinker v. Babcock, 204 Ill. 571, 68 N. E. 445.

In Missouri this is done by serving written notice stating amount and nature of claim with a copy of writing, instrument or account on which it is founded. Rev. St. 1899, § 188. Exhibition not containing copy of note held insufficient. Woltemahr v. Doye [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 1053. Should be sufficiently explicit to appraise representatives of facts on which claim is based so they can be prepared to protect interests of estate. May be amended under Id. § 4079, when not so barren as to be a nullity. Statement of claim founded on receipts held insufficient. Corson v. Waller [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 656. If claim is not exhibited or suit is not brought thereon within two years, it is barred. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 184, 185. If suit is brought either in circuit or probate court and administrator is properly served or appears, no exhibition is necessary. Woltemahr v. Doye [Mo. App.] 76 S. W. 1053. Evidence held to sustain finding that notice of claim was insufficient, and hence claim properly placed in sixth class. Mason v. Gaither's Estate [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 277.

In Kentucky, interest will not be allowed on claims which have not been verified and demanded of the administrator within one year after his appointment [Ky. St. 1903, § 3884]. Cox v. Higginbotham's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1057, 76 S. W. 1079. The question whether this has been done cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, where the record simply fails to show affirmatively, without plea calling it out, that the demand was so made. Lyon's Ex'x v. Logan Co. Bank's Assignee, 25 Ky. L. R. 1668, 78 S. W. 454. Demand may be waived by the representative either before or after suit by the creditor, if he is the only person to be affected thereby. Waived by telling creditors that there would be no assets unless he recovered on insurance policy and that they need not present their claims until he notified them to do so. Officers of corporation competent to prove waiver of demand by deceased administrator. Cox v. Higginbotham's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1057, 76 S. W. 1079; Lyon's Ex'x v. Logan Co. Bank's Assignee, 25 Ky. L. R. 1668, 78 S. W. 454.

97. An action cannot be maintained against an executor or administrator in the Federal court on a claim against the estate of a decedent, after the expiration of the time allowed by the state statute for the presentation of such claims to the probate court for allowance, where it was not so presented, and no excuse for the failure is alleged. Schurmeier v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 124 F. 865.

A claim arising from an assessment of stock must be presented for allowance in administration of the shareholders' estate,

The proceeding is in rem and, the statutory requirements as to notice having been complied with, is binding on all the world.[99] Generally the statutory period for filing claims does not begin to run until after the administrator gives notice of his appointment.[1] Want of actual notice on the part of a creditor will not prevent the running of limitations where statutory notice by publication was given.[2] The failure of the administrator to publish such notice in no way affects the validity or conclusiveness of the orders of the probate court made in course of administration,[3] but merely renders him liable to creditors for any losses resulting to them therefrom.[4] A special administrator has no authority to pay debts, and hence cannot limit the time for the presentation of claims.[5]

Statutes in some states provide that no action shall be brought on a claim against the estate until a demand has been made on the personal representatives.[6] In others, notice must be given him before issuing execution on a judgment against his decedent.[7] and where it becomes absolute and is not filed before the closing of the estate, the heirs are not liable [Gen. St. 1894, §§ 5918 et seq. 4511, 4514]. Hunt v. Burns, 90 Minn. 172, 95 N. W. 1110. Presentation of a claim to an administrator de bonis non after expiration of the time allowed by law for presentation of claims gives the claimant no standing to enforce it by action. Thompson v. Hoxsie [R. I.] 55 A. 930.

California Code Civ. Proc. § 1493. MacGowan v. Jones, 142 Cal. 593, 76 P. 503.

Connecticut: Facts showing merely that at an unknown time and in an unknown manner, and either with or without purpose, knowledge of the existence of a claim under a note passed from plaintiff to the executor, held insufficient to support finding that claim was exhibited. Dime Sav. Bank v. McAlenney, 76 Conn. 141, 55 A. 1019. Payments of interest on a mortgage note, made by the executor after the expiration of the time allowed for presentation of claims, do not amount to a seasonable exhibition of a claim based on such note. Id.

In Missouri (Rev. St. 1899, § 185) must be exhibited within two years from the granting of letters. Cause of action against deceased as surety accruing within such two years must be exhibited before expiration of such period. State v. Browning, 102 Mo. App. 455, 76 S. W. 719.

In Oregon, no action can be commenced against an executor or administrator on a claim against the estate until the same has been presented and disallowed [B. & C. Comp. § 388]. Goltra v. Penland [Or.] 77 P. 129; In re Morgan's Estate [Or.] 77 P. 608. A claim which the administrator neither allows nor rejects within a reasonable time will be deemed disallowed. Immaterial whether failure to act is due to affirmative refusal or not. Goltra v. Penland [Or.] 77 P. 129. The question as to what is a reasonable time is for the court where the length of time is undisputed and no excuse is offered for the delay. Deemed disallowed after six months. Instructions disapproved. Id.

98. Claim for deficiency judgment on mortgage, foreclosure represented in final account of independent executrix, held presented to her successor within a reasonable time. Bell's Estate v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 798.

1. Iowa Code, § 3304. Ellyson v. Loró [Iowa] 99 N. W. 582. A plea that a claim was not presented to the executors, or filed in the office of the probate clerk, within six months from the date of the first advertisement of notice of their qualification (R. I Gen. Laws 1896, c. 215, § 2) and that the action was not commenced within two years from such date (Gen. Laws 1896, c. 218, § 9), is defective if it fails to allege that any such notice was published. Municipal Court v. Whaley [R. I.] 57 A. 1061. Such defect may be cured by amendment and is not raised by a substantial demurrer. Id. On demurrer to such pleas, plaintiff cannot argue that he did not know of the breach of the bond on which the claim was founded until after decedent's death, and after limitations had run, where they do not state such fact. Id. The publication of the notice to creditors and of the petition for final settlement and not the filing of proof thereof are the jurisdictional facts. Statutes requiring filing directory [B. & C. Comp. § 1159]. In re Conant's Estate, 43 Or. 530, 73 P. 1018.

2. Claimant a resident of the state. Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Lisker, 122 Iowa, 341, 98 N. W. 127. The fact that claimant directed its traveling collector to look after this with other claims, and that he reported on the others but not on this, does not show such diligence on plaintiff's part as to entitle it to equitable relief. Id.

3. All interested parties required to take notice of administration proceedings regularly begun. Tiboldi v. Palms [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 726.

4. Tiboldi v. Palms [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 726.

5. Not entitled to allowance for expenses incurred in publishing notice to creditors. In re Ford's Estate [Mont.] 74 P. 735.

6. Applies only to actions against representatives and not to a suit by surety who has paid deceased principal's debt to enforce mortgage given to secure debt and protect the surety [Ky. St. 1903, § 3872]. Cook v. Landrum [Ky.] 82 S. W. 585.

Creditors who fail to file their claims after the giving of the notice required by statute and within the time allowed by law have no claim against the representative who has paid out and distributed the assets,[8] nor can they compel contribution from creditors who have participated in the distribution.[9] A notice of the expiration of the time for filing claims published prior to the making of the order fixing such time is a nullity.[10]

Statutes in some states provide that equitable relief may be granted to persons who fail to file their claims within the time allowed by law, where they are entitled thereto on account of peculiar circumstances,[11] but such relief will not be granted where the failure is due to claimant's negligence.[12] In other states, the probate court may extend the time on a proper showing.[13] Statutes generally provide for the relief of creditors who, by reason of absence from the state during the period of publication of notice to creditors, had no notice of the proceedings.[14] Statutes in relation to the filing of claims do not apply where the estate is administered by an independent executor without bond.[15]

Claims should be stated in detail,[16] and must be properly proven.[17] In some states, they must be supported by an affidavit of the claimant that they are justly

7. Notice must be personal. Evidence held to show notice [Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, pp. 1048-1053]. Kinkade v. Gibson, 209 Ill. 246, 70 N. E. 683. See, also, Executions, 1 Curr. L. 1178.

8. Where representative gives statutory notice, he is conclusively presumed to have notified all creditors. Hill v. Mayes, 25 Ky. L. R. 2023, 79 S. W. 276. Representative is not chargeable with any assets he may have theretofore paid on lawful claims. Code Civ. Proc. § 2718. This does not apply where executrix has distributed the funds in her hands to creditors before the expiration of such period. In re Gill, 42 Misc. 457, 87 N. Y. S. 252.

9. Their only remedy is against heirs or distributees, notwithstanding they did not have actual notice [Ky. Civ. Code Prac. §§ 428, 430, 432-434]. Hill v. Mayes, 25 Ky. L. R. 2023, 79 S. W. 276.

10. Does not affect right to file claims thereafter. Ribble v. Furmin [Neb.] 98 N. W. 420.

11. Iowa Code, § 3349. Bentley v. Starr, 123 Iowa, 657, 99 N. W. 555. Under the statute of New Hampshire (Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 27), providing that one having a claim against a decedent, which has not been prosecuted within the time limited by law, may present it to the supreme court at a trial term by petition, and that the court may give him judgment for the amount due if satisfied that he is not chargeable with culpable neglect, and that justice and equity require it, held that where the questions of neglect and justice have been settled in the superior court, they are not subject to review in the supreme court. Libby v. Hutchinson, 72 N. H. 190, 55 A. 547. Such statute applies to contingent claims on which suit could not have been brought, and to claims coming into existence after the expiration of the time limit. Id.

12. Facts held to show such negligence as to prevent equitable relief. Bentley v. Starr, 123 Iowa, 657, 99 N. W. 555. Fact that claim had been filed with decedent's guardian prior to his death, he being insane, held not to excuse delay in filing claim with administrator, though same party held both positions. Id.

13. The discretionary power to do so should not be arbitrarily exercised, but time must be extended as the circumstances may require, when proper and timely application and showing are made. Neb. Comp. St. 1901, c. 23, § 218. Evidence held to show sufficient excuse for not filing claim and to entitle claimant to an order allowing her claim to be filed and directing a hearing thereon. Ribble v. Furmin [Neb.] 98 N. W. 420.

14. One who knew of decedent's death was in state during first two publications, and returned and had actual notice of publication for more than a month prior to expiration for time of filing claims, not entitled to relief under this statute [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1493]. MacGowan v. Jones, 142 Cal. 593, 76 P. 503.

15. Claim for deficiency judgment on foreclosure of mortgage not filed within statutory period held not postponed to others so filed (Mo. Rev. St. 1895, §§ 2068, 2078, 2091), where estate was being administered by independent executrix when it accrued, who represented it in her report on her resignation, and it was thereafter presented to her successor within a reasonable time. Bell's Estate v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 798. Where there is a nonintervention will and the estate is settled outside the probate court, a notice to creditors will not operate to bar claims not presented within the time limited [Ball. Ann Codes & St. Wash. § 6228 does not apply where estate settled under § 6196]. In re Smith's Estate, 43 Or. 595, 75 P. 133. The administration on his resignation is in the nature of an administration de bonis non. Bell's Estate v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 798. The court is bound to take notice of proceedings already had by the executor and shown in his report. Id.

16. N. M. Comp. Laws 1897, § 1967. Gutierrez v. Scholle [N. M.] 78 P. 50.

In Indiana, the statement is sufficient if it apprises defendant of the nature of the claim and the amount demanded, and con-

due and that no payments have been made thereon and that there are no offsets thereto.[18] It may be made by an agent or other person on claimant's behalf.[19] A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient,[20] and it does not apply when the creditor pleads his claim by way of set-off in a suit brought by the administrator against him.[21]

In some states, a notice to the administrator or executor of plaintiff's intention to present the claim to the probate court for allowance is necessary,[22] unless the same is waived.[23]

Statutes in some states provide that where the will empowers executors as to the payment of debts its provisions in regard thereto shall be followed,[24] and in such cases, where the will creates an express trust for the payment of debts, the executors are justified in paying unprobated claims.[25]

Contests on claims.—It is the duty of the executor to make a proper defense under penalty of being charged with any loss resulting from his negligence or failure to do so.[26] Only those having an interest in the estate may contest the allowance.[27] Where the presentment is by filing in court, no petition or other formal pleading is usually necessary,[28] and strict conformity of proof is not required.[29] The law interposes a general denial to all claims filed.[30] tains enough substantial matter to bar another action for the same demand. Statement by surety of claim for money paid on notes held sufficient. Christian v. Highlands, 32 Ind. App. 104, 69 N. E. 266.

In Mississippi, where a claim is not based on an itemized account, it is sufficient if a statement of the claim in writing is presented. Miss. Code 1892, § 1932, construed. Statement of claim for legal services held sufficient. Foster v. Shaffer [Miss.] 36 So. 243.

In New Mexico, the claim must be verified. Comp. Laws 1897, § 1967. Failure to verify is not jurisdictional, but merely appealable error. Gutierrez v. Scholle [N. M.] 78 P. 50.

19. Must set forth the reason why it is so made [Code Civ. Proc. § 2604]. Empire State Min. Co. v. Mitchell [Mont.] 74 P. 81. The claim of a bank may be verified by its cashier, who is its managing agent and familiar with its books and accounts, where the president is the administrator of the estate. Cox v. Higginbotham's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1057, 76 S. W. 1079. Where affidavits have been lost, it will be presumed, on appeal, that they sustained the claim. Id.

In Missouri (Rev. St. 1899, § 196) may be made by agent but is defective if it does not state that fact. Such defect may be cured by amendment. Not defective for failure to state that agent had management of business out of which claim grew, or had means of knowing the verified facts. Dawson v. Wombles [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 823.

20. Affidavit by attorney stating that claimant is a corporation and that none of its officers except its attorneys reside in the county held sufficient. Empire State Min. Co. v. Mitchell [Mont.] 74 P. 81.

21. Del. Rev. Code, p. 677, c. 89, § 29. Jester v. Knotts [Del. Super.] 57 A. 1094. Statutes in some states require satisfactory evidence other than that of the claimant to establish a claim against decedent's estate which has been disallowed by the executor or administrator.[31] Claims which are withheld during the lifetime of an alleged debtor and sought to be enforced after his death should be carefully scrutinized, and only admitted upon satisfactory proof.[32] A credit given for a payment in a statement of claim filed in probate court is no evidence of payment by deceased as against his representatives.[33] In an action on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by deceased, proof of his signature, the due presentation of the note as a claim against the estate, its rejection, and the introduction of the note in evidence, make out a prima facie case against the administratrix.[34] The fact that the representative does not defend upon all the grounds he has does not entitle claimant to judgment in the absence of satisfactory proof.[35] The competency of witnesses to testify in regard to the transactions on which the claim is based is treated elsewhere.[36]

Where, in assumpsit by an administrator, defendant pleads notes as a set-off, a replication to the plea to the effect that there are no assets in the hands of the administrator and that there are prior claims against the estate will be stricken out. Jester v. Knotts [Del. Super.] 57 A. 1094. An action may be maintained by the owner of a judgment against an intestate to set off the same against a judgment recovered against such owner in an action instituted by intestate and continued in the name of the administrator, where the court, in its dis-

A formal entry of judgment on the allowance or disallowance of a claim is not absolutely necessary.[38] The approved allowance of a claim by an administrator is attended with the same presumptions as a judgment and cannot be attacked by exceptions to his final report.[39] Claims properly allowed in the probate court are in the nature of audited and adjudged demands, which are a lien on the assets of the estate in the hands of the executor or administrator.[40] It is only where the court has allowed claims against the estate, made a finding that there are assets in the hands of the administrator for the purpose of paying them, and has made an order directing a distribution of such assets, that the order of distribution creates a personal liability against the administrator and has the effect of a judgment.[41] Hence the mere allowance of a claim against an insolvent estate does not operate as a judgment which will be barred by the statute of limitations as against newly discovered assets.[42] A judgment rendered against the representative upon a claim for money against the deceased operates only to place it among the allowed claims,[43] and it may thereafter be contested on the settlement of his accounts in the same manner as though allowed in the probate court.[44] In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed on appeal that all proceedings to have a claim allowed were regular.[45]

(§ 6) C. Classification, preferences and priorities.[46]—Classification of claims depends upon statute.[47] It does not affect the issue of priority as between claims of the same class.[48] Ex parte orders approving and classifying claims of administrators for expenses of administration have not the effect of final judgments, but are subject to rejection and revision as long as the administration remains open.[49] Taxes[50] and funeral expenses are generally made preferred claims.[51] The representative has no right to prefer claims.[52]

Scott v. People, 210 Ill. 594, 71 N. E. 582.

51. See post, § 9D. The lien of a mortgage upon personalty is superior to funeral

(§ 6) D. Funds, assets, and securities for payment.[53]—The personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of debts unless the will shows a contrary intention.[54] Therefore the widow may call on it for the exoneration of her dower.[55] Devisees must contribute ratably to the payment of debts where there is not sufficient undevised property for that purpose.[56] In most states, in the absence of a special provision in the will, undisposed of personalty and then undisposed of realty must be used to pay the debts of the testator before taking property specifically bequeathed.[57]

A charge of a legacy[58] or of debts on the realty constitutes an equitable lien on the lands in the hands of the devisees.[59] The devisee of land encumbered by a mortgage cannot, after the general residuary fund has been exhausted, compel either the general or specific legatees to contribute to its satisfaction.[60] The right of a mortgagee to enforce his lien on the realty is not affected by the death of the mortgagor.[61]

By reason of the doctrine of marshaling assets, a secured creditor who has partially realized can prove as a general creditor for the unpaid balance only.[62]

58. In Kentucky, when land is devised subject to the payment by the devisee to another of a sum of money, the latter person has a lien on the legacy therefor. Where will provided that land was to be sold and after payment of debts remainder of proceeds was to go to children, creditors have, on recording of will, a lien of record on the land for amount of their claims [Ky. St. 1899, § 2066]. Hurst v. Davidson, 25 Ky. L. R. 555, 76 S. W. 37.

59. Such lien is not barred by limitations until the debt is barred. Smith v. Moore [Va.] 46 S. E. 326. The proceeds of a policy of life insurance are not subject to the payment of debts.[63]

(§ 6) E. Payment and satisfaction.[65]—The representative is not bound to pay allowed claims until directed to do so by the probate court.[66] He should not pay claims against the estate until they are established in some appropriate legal manner,[67] but may do so for the purpose of obtaining bonds put up as collateral security therefor.[68] Payment must be made to the party actually entitled thereto.[69] If he pays creditors in full before the expiration of the time for presenting claims, he is liable to other creditors for their pro rata share of the assets.[70] A life tenant, who is also executrix under the will, may anticipate and discharge a pecuniary obligation of the estate to a remainderman, payable after her death.[71]

§ 7. Subjection of realty to payment of debts under order of court. A. Right to resort to realty.[72]—All of decedent's property is liable for his debts.[73] Realty may be sold under order of court for the payment of debts and expenses of administration where the personalty is insufficient for that purpose,[74] but no sale can be had until the personalty is exhausted,[75] and then only so much of it can be sold as is necessary to pay the balance of the indebtedness.[76]

so far as the personalty is insufficient for that purpose.[79] Creditors who, knowing that there is a deficiency of assets, do not compel a sale and permit the final settlement of the estate and the discharge of the administrator without objection cannot thereafter obtain the appointment of an administrator de bonis non for that purpose.[80]

Delay in procuring letters will bar the right to sell realty where such right would have been forfeited by a like delay in making an application to do so after letters had been granted.[81] The question as to what amounts to laches in such cases depends upon circumstances.[82] The right will generally be held to be barred where the realty is so changed as to ownership or physical conditions as tó render it inequitable to the owner to grant the relief,[83] or by analogy, where the statute of limitations has run so as to bar the right to present the claim or recover the realty.[84]

In some states no sale may be had unless letters testamentary or of administration are taken out within a specified period after decedent's death.[85] This of course does not affect the right of a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage given by testator at any time before the general statute of limitations has run against it.[86] In other states claims cease to be a lien on the realty unless suit is brought thereon,[87] or a petition for its sale is filed within a specified time.[88]

Fact that surviving husband who elects to occupy homestead for life in lieu of dower (under section 2985) attempted to plat a homestead including a part of the original homestead and a part of his own land adjacent thereto did not affect the descent of the original homestead to the heirs of the wife free from her debts. Porter v. Perkins [Iowa] 99 N. W. 160. In Nebraska, cannot be sold at an administrator's sale either for the discharge of incumbrances thereon or for payment of decedent's debts. License issued by district court authorizing such sale is absolutely right of dower[91] unless she consents to the sale of her interest,[92] and it does not cut off estates subsequently vesting in parties by a different right.[93]

Equity will enjoin the sale because of fraud in obtaining the order, or for accident, surprise, or other adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the petitioner.[94]

The advisability of the sale[95] and whether the property should be mortgaged or sold are questions largely within the discretion of the court.[96] Beneficiaries whose rights are not affected thereby cannot question the validity of a mortgage given to secure a loan for the payment of debts.[97]

The doctrine of marshaling assets applies.[98] The sale of property to pay debts under a decree of court cannot be construed as a sale under the power contained in the will.[99]

void. Administrator has no interest in or duty to perform with respect to homestead. Tindall v. Peterson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 688. See Homesteads, 2 Curr. L. 210. The inchoate rights of a deceased homestead claimant, who dies before the issuance of, or before he has acquired a right to, a patent, vest in his heirs and cannot be sold by the administrator for the payment of his debts under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2290, 2291 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1389, 1390). Towner v. Rodegeb, 33 Wash. 153, 74 P. 50. See Public Lands, § 4A. 2 Curr. L. 1316.

In Indiana it is the duty of the administrator first to apply all the personalty in his hands to the payment of liens on the land, even to the exclusion of all general creditors, and also the proceeds of the sale of two-thirds of the realty, under 2 Rev. St. Ind. c. 10, § 89, p. 269 and 1 Rev. St. 1852, c. 27, § 17, pp. 250, 251. If the fund so raised is insufficient for the purpose, he may then, upon proper application, sell the widow's interest also. Fry v. Lawson, 32 Ind. App. 364, 69 N. E. 1038.

92. Judgment deprives the widow, who is made a party to the proceedings and consents thereto, of all interest in the land and in the proceeds of the sale. Widow also estopped, under the circumstances, to claim interest in proceeds. In re Pennock's Estate, 122 Iowa, 622, 98 N. W. 480. See Dower, 1 Curr. L. 956.

93. Decree barring widow's estate and estate inherited by her from devisee. Rice v. Bamberg [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1009.

94. Complaint held sufficient on demurrer. Demaris v. Barker, 33 Wash. 200, 74 P. 362.

95. Owing to pendency of suit involving portion of land. In re Newlove's Estate, 142 Cal. 377, 75 P. 1083.

96. None of interested parties had means. Income from estate would not be sufficient to pay interest. Held correct to order sale. In re Newlove's Estate, 142 Cal. 377, 75 P. 1083. An heir who contests the application of the administrator to mortgage property for the payment of debts, and thereafter assents to the approval of his final account and accepts the partition of the estate giving her the mortgaged property subject to the mortgage, is thereby estopped from questioning the regularity of the proceedings by which the mortgage was authorized in an action to foreclose it. Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Chapman [Wis.] 99 N. W. 341.

97. Where the principal legatee, having an interest prior to all the others and whose interest is greater than the part of the estate mortgaged by the executor to secure a loan to pay debts, joins in such mortgage, the rights of the other beneficiaries are not affected and it is immaterial as to them whether such mortgage was authorized or not. Taliaferro v. Thornton's Ex'rs [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1097.

98. The burden of paying debts will fall upon those who, according to their several rights, should discharge it. Grantees and incumbrancers of deceased held entitled to have assets marshaled for payment of his debts and those of his testatrix. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Colo.] 76 P. 799.

3. The county court in Colorado has authority to entertain proceedings to sell realty for the payment of debts. 2 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 4751, 4758, 4760, 4761. Limitation in Const. art. 6, § 23, does not apply. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Colo.] 76 P. 799. Its authority extends to the adjudication of all questions involving the rights of those before the court, interested in such realty, except that no defendant may there contest decedent's title [2 Mills' Ann. St. § 4758]. Id. It may determine the rights of incumbrancers and grantees claiming under decedent, who are proper parties defendant. Equities between parties interested must be recognized and enforced. Id.

therefor is generally required.[5] It must substantially comply with the statutory requirements.[6]

All persons interested in the estate must be made parties,[7] guardians ad litem being appointed for minor heirs who have no general guardians.[8] One acquiring a lien from a devisee after the commencement of the proceedings is bound by the decree therein, though not a party thereto, he not having intervened or filed a claim, and being chargeable with knowledge of the proceedings.[9]

A hearing must be had[10] and the evidence must show the lands to be such as are subject to sale.[11] payment of debts. Powell v. Harrison, 88 App. Div. 228, 85 N. Y. S. 452.

5. In order to authorize sale of all realty, including widow's interest for payment of purchase money, under 2 Rev. St. Ind. 1852, c. 10, § 89, p. 269, must show what amount was due thereon, and that administrator had received insufficient assets to pay same. Fry v. Lawson, 32 Ind. App. 364, 69 N. E. 1038.

6. Petition held to sufficiently state value and condition of property under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1537. In re Levy's Estate, 141 Cal. 639, 75 P. 317. Where sale was not for purpose of paying family allowance failure to state amount due thereon does not render petition defective on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1537). Id. Failure to state that parties named were only heirs (Code Civ. Proc. § 1537) does not render order of sale, which so states, fatally defective. Id. Defects of form or uncertainty can only be taken advantage of by special demurrer in the trial court. Id.

7. The petition should contain the names of creditors, the heirs and devisees and all persons claiming under them or either of them. Code Civ. Proc. § 2752. A chose in action or indebtedness against a devisee, which has not yet ripened into a lien, does not entitle the creditor to be made a party. Richmond v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 86 App. Div. 152, 83 N. Y. S. 632. In New York the surrogate may make inquiry as to matters not within knowledge of petitioners [Code Civ. Proc. § 2753], and must then issue a citation to necessary parties who have been omitted [section 2754]. Interested persons who have been omitted may intervene [section 2755]. Id. The widow is not a necessary party to an appeal from an order directing a sale for the payment of a note signed by decedent and his wife. Not necessary party to proceeding. In re Smith's Estate, 43 Or. 379, 73 P. 336. The interests of minor heirs not made parties are not affected by the sale. Rice v. Bamberg [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1009. Service of notice of petition to sell realty on minor heirs by leaving copy with widow who was real complainant held insufficient, the proceedings being fraudulent and collusive (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. Ill. 1896, p. 326, c. 3, par. 103), and the decree of sale held void as to them. Heppe v. Szezepanski, 209 Ill. 88, 70 N. E. 737. The New York statute requiring service of citation in matters before the surrogate at least eight days before the hearing (Code Civ. Proc. § 2520) does not apply to service by publication. Petition for sale of realty for payment of debts. In re Denton, 86 App. Div. 359, 83 N. Y. S. 778.

8. For intestate's minor children. Rice v. Bolton [Iowa] 100 N. W. 634. A failure to appoint and serve notice on a guardian ad litem for minor heirs in accordance with the provisions of Wash. Code 1881, § 1497, renders the sale void. Ball v. Clothier, 34 Wash. 299, 75 P. 1099. The curative act in regard to administrator's sales (2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6474) relates only to irregularities and does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, and consequently does not validate such sale. Id. Heirs not precluded from impeaching sale by joining in petition for discharge of administrator de bonis non and distribution of estate after reaching majority, where he was not required to and did not include such sale in his final account, and the account of the administrator making the sale was settled during their minority. Id. Were not estopped to contest by accepting a part of the estate on reaching majority, not knowing of their rights. Id.

9. Inquiry as to persons interested to be made by surrogate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2753, 2754] precedes issuance of citation and cannot avail one acquiring lien thereafter. Might have made himself a party [Id. § 2755]. Richmond v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 86 App. Div. 152, 83 N. Y. S. 632.

10. In New York the surrogate may appoint a referee to take and report the evidence with his opinion thereon. Code Civ. Proc. § 2546. Referee has same power to pass upon admissibility of evidence as one appointed by supreme court to try an issue of fact. In re Walker's Estate, 43 Misc. 475, 89 N. Y. S. 459.

11. Evidence held sufficient to show prior lien of execution land sought to be sold. Wilson v. Brown, 134 N. C. 400, 46 S. E. 762. Finding that lands were liable for payment of debts cannot be construed as finding that they are liable for payment of purchase money. Fry v. Lawson, 32 Ind. App. 364, 69 N. E. 1038.

13. Though after a sale the county court was without jurisdiction to correct the orders, notice, and deeds, the original proceeding remains in full force and effect as to lands properly described. Sale would not be set aside at suit of heirs after many years on account of irregularities or cor-

Though a sale of a part only will provide sufficient funds, the court may order a sale of the whole tract where it cannot be otherwise partitioned, or where it appears to be for the best interests of the estate.[14] The principal duty of the court is to conserve the estate, and its orders and judgments to that end will not be disturbed unless they appear to have been mistakenly made or disclose an abuse of discretion unjustly injurious to a party in interest.[15]

(§ 7) D. The sale.[16]—Only lands described in the order may be sold.[17] Misdescription of the property in an advertisement of the sale[18] or misrepresentations in regard to the property, though innocently made, release the purchaser.[19] The sale is rendered invalid by the act of the purchaser in deterring others from bidding on the property.[20]

The purchaser ordinarily only acquires such title as the administrator was authorized to convey,[21] and the rule of caveat emptor applies.[22]

The sale must be reported to[23] and confirmed by the court before the representative can convey title.[24] All objections thereto are open to consideration, and it will be set aside if it is not in all respects fair and proper.[25] Inadequacy of price alone does not authorize the court to set aside the sale.[26] But in case of great inadequacy of price where the interests of infants are involved, the chancelor will consider any evidence showing irregularities in addition thereto.[27] Confirmation operates to cure previous irregularities.[28]

rupt practices, even though no statute of limitations has run, except where equity requires it. Mason v. Odum, 210 Ill. 471, 71 N. E. 386. In a suit to set aside an administrator's sale, the description of the lands in the order of sale will be presumed to have exemplified exactly what was intended in the absence of an allegation to the contrary. Rice v. Bolton [Iowa] 100 N. W. 634.

14. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1542, prior to amendment of 1893, where part of testator's land was sold to pay debts, the entire tract should be sold when to the interest of the interested parties. In re Newlove's Estate, 142 Cal. 377, 75 P. 1083. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1542, prior to the amendment of 1893, a finding and evidence that the residue of a decedent's real estate could not be partitioned after the sale of a part was sufficient to sustain an order to sell the whole, without aid from a finding that a sale of a part would injure the residue. 17. A right of action on behalf of intestate's heirs to recover the reversionary interest in lands assigned to the widow as dower, which had been wrongfully sold by the administratrix does not accrue until the termination of the widow's life estate. Action commenced within two years thereafter not barred. Ousler v. Robinson [Ark.] 80 S. W. 227. Description of property sold by administrator under order of court held sufficient to pass title. Boslet v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 115.

18. Statement that ground rent is on "Calverton stockyards" when it is not. Fact that lot is correctly described by metes and bounds is immaterial where sale takes place at a distance from the premises. Doyle v. Whitridge, 97 Md. 711, 55 A. 459.

19. That certain responsible party was tenant, where leasehold had been sold without landlord's knowledge. Doyle v. Whitridge, 97 Md. 711, 55 A. 459.

20. Evidence insufficient to sustain allegation that purchaser deterred persons from bidding at sale. Sicard v. Schwab, 112 La. 475, 36 So. 500.

21. The receipt, by children of decedent's first wife, of money derived from an unwarranted sale of realty does not estop them from claiming one-third of such land on the death of the second wife (they being entitled to her share under 1 Rev. St. 1852, c. 27, § 24, p. 251), they having no estate when the sale was made and not being in a position to object thereto. Fry v. Lawson, 32 Ind. App. 364, 69 N. E. 1038. Takes only such interest as deceased had. Sicard v. Schwab, 112 La. 475, 36 So. 500.

22. Towner v. Rodegeb, 33 Wash. 153, 74 P. 50.

23. An administrator's report on the sale of realty reciting that he had received cash for the same was not rendered fraudulent by the fact that he only received a receipt from the widow acknowledging the payment to her of the amount of her award. Reinhardt v. Seaman, 208 Ill. 448, 69 N. E. 847.

24. For confirmation of sales made under authority in will, see ante, § 5E. Condition precedent to the right of the executor or administrator to convey title. Conveyance otherwise passes no title. Joyner v. Futrell [N. C.] 48 S. E. 649.

25. Doyle v. Whitridge, 97 Md. 711, 55 A. 459.

26. Auxier v. Clarke [Ky.] 82 S. W. 605.

27. Personalty disregarded in fixing amount to be sold. Auxier v. Clarke [Ky.] 82 S. W. 605.

28. Clark v. Rossier [Idaho] 78 P. 358.

Statutes generally limit the time within which sales may be attacked for informalities.[29] They bar only irregularities and illegalities which do not reach matters of substance and do not affect the substantial rights of interested parties or defeat the object of the sale.[30] A sale for less than the appraised value or the required proportion thereof will be regarded as a mere informality, where neither fraud nor injury is shown, and it does not appear that the price obtained was less than could have been reasonably expected at a forced sale.[31] The same is true of a failure to appraise.[32] But where the price is less than the actual value under all the circumstances, the opposite is true.[33]

The sale may be valid despite informalities in the approval of the statutory bond.[34] Where many years elapse after the sale and possession taken under the same, there is a presumption that the court had jurisdiction of the person of defendant and that it acted within its jurisdiction and proceeded according to law.[35]

Sales are not generally open to collateral attack except for want of jurisdiction,[36] but in an action for partition by the purchaser of an undivided interest in realty at a sale to pay decedent's debts, defendants may inquire into the validity of the sale.[37] Where an administrator's sale is set aside for want of jurisdiction, purchasers in good faith will be allowed the purchase price, and will have a lien on the land for taxes paid by them,[38] but will not be allowed for permanent improvements.[39]

32. Required by La. Civ. Code arts. 1101, 1106. Thibodeaux v. Thibodeaux, 112 La. 906, 36 So. 800.

33. Sale for less than one-tenth of actual value. Thibodeaux v. Thibodeaux, 112 La. 906, 36 So. 800. Amount received on sale of land for payment of debts held not so inadequate as to furnish ground for avoiding the sale. Reinhardt v. Scaman, 208 Ill. 448, 69 N. E. 847. Right to attack sale for informalities held barred by statute of limitations. Sicard v. Schwab, 112 La. 475, 36 So. 500.

34. Sale held not invalidated by the fact that the sale bond given pursuant to Neb. Comp. St. 1903, c. 23, § 75, was approved by the clerk of the district court instead of by the judge. Melcher v. Schluter [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1082.

35. Mason v. Odum, 210 Ill. 471, 71 N. E. 386. Heirs held barred by delay of 32 years from maintaining suit to set aside sale for payment of debts. Griffin v. Caldwell [Ark.] 81 S. W. 611.

36. See post, § 15. The fact that no orders were made by the court in regard to the administration of an estate will not avail, on collateral attack, to defeat a subsequent sale of realty under order of court to pay expenses of administration, it not appearing that the administration had been closed. Not affirmatively shown how much time had elapsed or that all orders were before the court. Boslet v. Thomas [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 115. Possession under an administrator's deed is full protection to an action of ejectment brought by an heir in which the validity of the sale by the administrator is contested, in the absence of any of the irregularities specified in Mich. Comp. Laws, § 9129. Upton v. Gerber [Mich.] 98 N. W. 854. Heirs can only attack private sale in direct proceeding after accounting and discharge of administrator. Lyles v. Knoll. 112 La. 169, 36 So. 311. After the final account and the entry of a judgment homologating the administrator's accounts and discharging him, the heirs can only attack a private sale in a direct proceeding. Id.

41. Creditors of decedent have preferred claim over those of devisee. Richmond v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 86 App. Div. 152, 83 N. Y. S. 632. Creditors may recover money deposited as bail by party having use of whole estate for life, where county had no right to receive it. Sutherland v. St. Lawrence Co., 42 Misc. 38, 85 N. Y. S. 696. Heirs take subject to debts. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Colo.] 76 P. 799. Including of the property received by them.[42] Realty in their hands may be subjected by creditors to the payment of their claims,[43] after the personalty has been exhausted.[44] A voluntary conveyance by the devisee is no bar to such right.[45]

Ordinarily all should be made parties,[46] but each is liable up to the amount land which he and his wife lived on but in regard to which they filed no declaration of homestead. Declaration of homestead filed by widow after husband's death a nullity [Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5246]. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 34 Wash. 84, 74 P. 1061. Estate descending from wife to husband through child is subject to wife's debts in hands of purchaser from husband. Hammers v. Sanders [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 16. Contract by his heirs to convey by "a good deed free from all incumbrance" imposes on them duty to exonerate land from payment of claims allowed against decedent's estate. Forthman v. Deters, 206 Ill. 159, 69 N. E. 97; Dearing v. Moran, 25 Ky. L. R. 1545, 78 S. W. 217. The interest of the widow as heir of her husband, where there are no issue, in so far as it exceeds her dower interest, is subject to all claims against the estate, including decedent's debts, the expenses of administration, and the widow's allowance. Interest given under Iowa Code, § 3379, subject to expenses of sale of realty. Dower interest is not. Wild v. Toms, 123 Iowa, 747, 99 N. W. 700.

42. Claimant held not guilty of inexcusable delay in enforcing his claim. Smith v. Moore [Va.] 46 S. E. 326. Liable to non-appearing creditor under Ky. Civ. Code Prac. § 434. Hill v. Mayes, 25 Ky. L. R. 2033, 79 S. W. 276. A husband taking under the will cannot claim a homestead in land devised to him by his wife as against her creditors. Dearing v. Moran, 25 Ky. L. R. 1545, 78 S. W. 217. An administrator who, after distribution, is compelled to pay a debt against the estate of which he had no notice, may, in the absence of fraud, sue in equity to compel the legatees or distributees to refund the sum so paid with the costs and expenses incurred by him in contesting the claim. Notwithstanding fact that he has taken no refunding bond. Same rule applies to ancillary administrator who has turned property over to principal administrator, who has made complete or partial distribution. McClung v. Sieg, 54 W. Va. 467, 46 S. E. 210. A widow and executrix is liable for the debts of her husband to the extent of his separate property coming into her hands. Flannery v. Chidgey [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1034.

43. Kentucky [St. 1899, § 2088]. Shillito Co. v. Keith, 25 Ky. L. R. 770, 76 S. W. 371. Under this statute a suit against the administrator and heirs of a decedent on a contract made by him cannot be dismissed though no demand was made on the administrator because it was claimed that his appointment was unauthorized. It is not material that it should appear that the representative has no assets. Proceeds of realty held by him regarded as distributed. Jones v. Comer, 25 Ky. L. R. 773, 76 S. W. 392. The heir has the same right to interpose the plea of limitations as decedent would have had (claim against deceased surety on guardian's bond). Bybee's Ex'r v. Poynter, 25 Ky. L. R. 1251, 77 S. W. 698. A creditor who sued to set aside a fraudulent conveyance may amend after the grantor's death to meet the new facts resulting from a devise from grantor to grantee and may seek judgment against the grantee as devisee. Shillito Co. v. Keith, 25 Ky. L. R. 770, 76 S. W. 371.

In New York heirs of a decedent are respectively liable for his debts to the extent of any interest in realty descending to them from him [Code Civ. Proc. § 1843]. Should be made parties to suit to foreclose mortgage given by decedent in order to render them liable for deficiency judgment [Id. § 1627]. Rowley v. Nellis, 84 N. Y. S. 841. Where only administrator was joined and mortgagee led heirs to believe that no deficiency judgment would be entered against them, and the property was sold for much less than its value, the mortgagee's executrix could not, without leave of court, maintain a new action to enforce deficiency judgment against heirs, especially where mortgagor left no personalty and had other debts and heirs had in good faith conveyed much of the property that had descended to them. Id.

In South Carolina the right of action against the heirs ordinarily accrues when a return of nulla bona has been made on an execution against the executor or administrator (Williams v. Weeks [S. C.] 48 S. E. 619), but such return is not necessary where the record in a suit in which the land was partitioned among them shows that he had no assets (Id.). The lands of a deceased surety on an official bond, in possession of his heirs after partition, may be sold to satisfy his liability thereon where there are no assets in the hands of his administrator. Id.

In Arkansas equity will decree satisfaction of the liability of a deceased surety on an administrator's bond out of his realty, in possession of his heirs after his estate has been finally closed. Cause of action accrued after discharge of administrator. Hall v. Cole, 71 Ark. 601, 76 S. W. 1076.

In Virginia where the estate has been distributed and there are no assets in the hands of the personal representatives out of which a debt against it may be satisfied, it is proper to decree against each of distributees or devisees for his proportion thereof. Smith v. Moore [Va.] 46 S. E. 326.

In Kentucky land in the hands of bona fide purchasers for value from devisees is not liable unless suit is instituted within six months after decedent's death. Ky. St. 1899, § 2087. Mere partition of land by devisees does not render them bona fide purchasers. Statute does not apply where land devised to pay debts and distribute balance. Hurst v. Davidson, 25 Ky. L. R. 555, 76 S. W. 37.

The liability does not extend to one taking as creditor[50] or purchaser,[51] or as a legatee for value.[52]

A general creditor of deceased has no right to intervene in an action to partition land among his heirs, and claim the land, where he has no lien thereon.[53]

§ 9. Rights and liabilities between representative and estate. A. Management of, and dealings with, estate.[54]—The estate is not chargeable with the illegal acts of the representative.[55]

Prima facie the executor or administrator is chargeable with and must account for all the assets of the estate,[56] including rents and other funds collected by him after filing his final account.[57] He is responsible for losses resulting from his want of reasonable dilligence,[58] or his unauthorized acts or omissions;[59] as nonresident who claims a life estate in lands located in that state by virtue of a will which has never been probated in such state is not a necessary party. Coulson v. Saltsman [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1055.

50. Ky. Civ. Code Prac. § 434, does not apply to children who take as creditors of father's estate and not as heirs. Hill v. Mayes, 25 Ky. L. R. 2033, 79 S. W. 276. Evidence sufficient to support finding that legatee did not elect to take as creditor instead of under the will. In re Thayer's Estate, 142 Cal. 453, 76 P. 41.

51. Purchaser of land on foreclosure of mortgage given by testator, for sum not exceeding the mortgage debt. Byrne v. Condon [N. J. Law] 53 A. 385.

52. Widow who accepts bequest in lieu of dower cannot be called on by devisee of mortgaged property to contribute to payment of mortgage, particularly when she would thereby lose both her dower and all she received under the will. Wiggins v. Wiggins [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 148.

56. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 54 W. Va. 621, 46 S. E. 589. An administrator is liable to account, as such, for funds which it was his duty to preserve for the payment of annuities under the will. Ellyson v. Lord [Iowa] 99 N. W. 582. Final account of administrator held properly surcharged with amount of note and mortgage belonging to deceased and transferred to her surviving husband. In re Ryan's Estate [Minn.] 100 N. W. 380. Where a husband and wife made a loan of $600, of which he advanced $500 and she the balance, and she received a payment of $200 thereon during her lifetime, he, as administrator of her estate, should not be charged with further payments made to him after her death. Jones v. Probate Court [R. I.] 55 A. 881. Nor should he be charged with money found in the wife's shoe after her death, when there was evidence to support a finding by the jury that it belonged to him. Id. Evidence held to show that administrator received certain sums belonging to the estate for which he failed to account. Thomas v. Hawpe [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 129. Burden on him to account for failure to collect notes. Walworth's Estate v. Bartholomew's Estate [Vt.] 56 A. 101. The presumption of negligence arising from the fact that three notes in the hands of the administrator were barred by the statute of limitations is rebutted by proof that the mortgage by which they and other notes were secured was foreclosed, and the property, which was worth the amount of all the notes, was taken possession of and disposed of for the benefit of the estate, though such notes were not included in the foreclosure. Id. Accountable for assets. Brown's Ex'r v. Dunn's Estate, 75 Vt. 264, 55 A. 364.

57. Succession of Conery, 111 La. 113, 35 So. 479. Executors who, after accounting but before a decree settling their accounts is entered, sell property for double its inventoried value and pay over to themselves as trustees only the inventoried value as shown by the decree, must account for the balance as executors. In re Mitchell, 85 N. Y. S. 288.

58. Executor held wanting in diligence in management of estate and his account surcharged with losses resulting therefrom. Cheever v. Ellis [Mich.] 96 N. W. 1067. Not relieved from liability by employment of agent to manage estate though testator imposed great confidence in him. Id. Account will be surcharged with loss resulting from defect in title to realty taken in payment of debt, particularly where he could have collected claim in cash. In re Northrup's Will, 92 App. Div. 5, 87 N. Y. S. 318.

59. Calnan v. Savidge [Kan.] 75 P. 1010. Will be charged with value of timber which will gave him no authority to cut. Finley's Ex'rs v. Pearson, 25 Ky. L. R. 766, 76 S. W. 374.

for the value of assets which he negligently fails to collect,[60] and for failure to collect rents from persons occupying premises belonging to the estate.[61] He is not entitled to credit for the amount paid on illegal claims,[62] claims not properly proven,[63] or claims barred by the statute,[64] or for payments of income made to persons not entitled thereto.[65] The fact that valid claims against the estate were not filed as required by law is not in itself sufficient ground for refusing him credit for sums paid thereon.[66] He is chargeable with the whole amount of losses resulting from unwarranted investments of the funds of the estate,[67] but not with losses resulting from investments in regard to which the will gives him a discretionary power, in the absence of a showing of bad faith, dishonesty, or culpable negligence.[68] He may also be charged with costs incurred by reason of his failure to perform a duty required of him.[69]

The representative is not chargeable, in his account as such, with rents of realty which he holds as trustee for the beneficiaries under the will.[70] An actual appropriation or transfer to a trustee by an executor of funds which are to be a part of the trust fund, with a rendering of a probate account containing a statement of such fact, and the final allowance of that account in court, works a discharge of the executor's liability as such,[71] but the fact that executors transfer securities in which they have invested funds of the estate to a testamentary trustee,

60. Executors held guilty of gross negligence in failing to collect note given by wife of one of them. Hallway v. Eckler [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 46.

61. Grandchildren of the de cujus who are not called to the inheritance of their grandfather's succession, their father being alive. Succession of Conery, 111 La. 113, 35 So. 479. Evidence insufficient to show negligence of executors in failing to rent property so as to render them liable for reasonable rentals. Owens v. Owens' Estate [Miss.] 37 So. 149. Liable for loss resulting from negligence in failing to collect notes which could have been collected by exercise of reasonable diligence. Brown's Ex'r v. Dunn's Estate, 75 Vt. 264, 55 A. 364.

62. See ante, § 6A.

63. See ante, § 6B. An administrator of his wife's estate should not be credited with a claim alleged to be due him under an agreement between them, when all testimony in regard to such agreement consisted of communications between them, which were inadmissible in evidence. Jones v. Probate Court of East Greenwich [R. I.] 55 A. 881.

64. See ante, § 6A.

65. For payments made to a legatee after notice that he has assigned income to secure advances made to him, where it is insufficient to satisfy the debt so secured. Stewart v. Fallon [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 96.

66. Notes which were conceded to be valid claims against estate. In re Pennock's Estate, 122 Iowa, 622, 98 N. W. 480.

67. Expenditure of $80,000, in advancing money to purchasers of lots costing $11,000, for purpose of enabling them to build houses thereon, the advances being secured by mortgages, resulting in loss of over half such sum, held unwarranted. Brigham v. Morgan, 185 Mass. 27, 69 N. E. 418. Entitled to credit for the value of the property actually turned over by him to the trustee. Id. Investment in land company on promise that the company would issue bond for the money, without taking a mortgage or other security therefor, held unwarranted. Id. Evidence that they were such investments as men of prudence and intelligence were making at the time, inadmissible. Id. Investments not justified by evidence that testator had told one executor that such investments were to be made and that the other executor understood the scheme, in view of the provisions of the will. Id. Executors held guilty of maladministration and bad faith in making false reports as to investments. Id. Chargeable only with the loss actually sustained. In re Rowe, 42 Misc. 172, 86 N. Y. S. 253. An executor and testamentary trustee is not liable for more than the actual interest received for a loan of the trust funds to a corporation of which he was a stockholder, it appearing that he acted honestly and in good faith and that the transaction was beneficial to the estate. Id. The act of an executor in collecting bonds and mortgages and reinvesting the proceeds when the will gives him no authority to do so but bequeathes them to testamentary trustees, amounts in law to a conversion thereof, and renders him liable to account for the value of the original assets to the trustees in cash. Where he has acted in good faith and has taken new securities in name of testatrix, the decree should require trustees to vest title thereto in him. In re Ryer, 94 App. Div. 449, 88 N. Y. S. 52.

68. In re Hunt's Estate, 41 Misc. 72, 83 N. Y. S. 652.

69. Trial court may adjudge costs against administrator in action by heirs to compel him to account, but not costs which may accrue in future in appellate courts in anticipation of appeal. Order assessing costs against heirs held final [Batt's Ann. Civ. St. art. 2251]. Thomas v. Hawpe [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 129.

70. Rents collected before sale of land directed by will to be sold and proceeds divided. Jones v. Probate Court [R. I.] 55 A. 881.

71. Accounts reopened held not to have such effect. Brigham v. Morgan, 185 Mass. 27, 69 N. E. 418.

who agreed when the investment was made to receive them at the value of the investment and gave his receipt at such value, does not relieve them from liability for losses resulting from such investment, it appearing that both they and he acted in bad faith.[72] This rule applies where the same person acts in both capacities.[73]

He is not chargeable with losses which he could not have prevented by the exercise of due diligence and vigilance,[74] as those resulting from the depreciation of securities or other assets,[75] nor with the value of uncollectible assets,[76] nor with expenditures which the will directs him to make.[77] Where the same persons are both executors and trustees it is sufficient for them, in an action for the settlement of the estate, to show that they applied the estate as directed by the will, though some of their acts in so doing may not have been executorial.[78] The representative is entitled to credit for the amount expended by him in payment of a mortgage under order of court, and in accordance with the terms of the will.[79] He is not liable for money expended by him in good faith in the purchase of necessaries for the support of decedent's helpless minor children, where they have no guardian and the expenditures are such as a guardian would have made.[80] An executor is not entitled to credit for sums paid by him to defray the expenses of his wife, who is residuary legatee, incurred on a trip,[81] nor for taxes paid on her land.[82] Taxes should ordinarily be allowed in the probate court.[83]

Personal dealings by an executor or administrator with the property of the estate are prohibited.[84] The rule applies to a surviving partner who is also administrator of the estate of a deceased partner,[85] but does not forbid him from dealing individually with an ancillary administrator appointed in another state.[86] An executor or administrator cannot purchase property at his own sale either personally or through third parties.[87] Such sale is voidable at the option of the

72. Brigham v. Morgan, 185 Mass. 27, 69 N. E. 418. Where the executor is guilty of maladministration by investing the funds of the estate in improper securities, and such securities are improperly received from him by the testamentary trustee and unwarrantably placed in the trust fund both the executor and the trustee are answerable for losses resulting therefrom. Trustee received mortgages not worth amount invested in them, in pursuance of understanding with executors, and inventoried them at face value and carried them through several accounts at such value. 75. Due to panic. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 54 W. Va. 621, 46 S. E. 589. Should not be charged with the difference between the face value of a mortgage, at which it was inventoried, and the amount actually realized therefrom. Horton v. Howell [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 702.

76. Must make reasonable showing that they are uncollectible. Hallway v. Eckler [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 46.

77. Where the will expressed testator's desire that a comfortable dwelling house be provided for his family and authorized the executors to sell a part of the realty for that and other purposes, and they did not sell it but used a part of the personalty, which was to go to the same persons as the realty, instead, testator's children could not require them to repay the amount so expended. Finley's Ex'rs v. Pearson, 25 Ky. L. R. 766, 76 S. W. 374. Where executors were directed to place the proceeds of testator's personalty at interest and use the proceeds for the education of his minor children, they should be credited on settlement of the estate with bills paid for the tuition of the children amounting to less than the interest charged to them on the personalty. heir,[88] who may either ratify it[89] or, within a reasonable time,[90] bring an equitable action to set it aside.[91] The fact that the representative acts honestly and without actual fraud is immaterial.[92] An executor may purchase from a legatee a specific legacy of stock given her by the will of his testator.[93] He is guilty of nc wrong in inducing a company to purchase a plant owned by a corporation in which the estate owned stock, though he personally took stock in the purchasing corporation, which he afterwards sold at a reasonable profit, the transaction being in good faith and for the best interests of the estate;[94] nor in purchasing a note due the estate when it was in need of money and the collateral securing it was of less value than the amount due thereon;[95] nor, with others, in purchasing stock in a corporation in which the estate was interested, and in giving a bond in which the corporation was principal and they were sureties, conditioned to save the seller harmless under the laws of the corporation's domicile.[96]

Annual accountings by the representative do not preclude inquiry into losses resulting from his negligence,[97] nor can the probate court relieve him from liability for funds of the estate by ex parte orders directing their disposition.[98]

The persons solely interested in the estate may release the representative from a liability to account or from any liability owed solely to themselves,[99] and may

Pratt, 41 Misc. 31, 83 N. Y. S. 636. An executor who forecloses a mortgage belonging to the estate and bids in the property for the amount of the debt takes title in his representative, and not in his individual, capacity. Evidence, independent of above rule, held to show that he actually purchased as executor. Aulbach's Ex'r v. Read, 25 Ky. L. R. 1130, 77 S. W. 204. Administrator furnished money to son who purchased property at less than its value, and then transferred it to his mother, who later transferred it to administrator. Miller v. Rich, 204 Ill. 444, 68 N. E. 488. Deed does not give color of title in good faith. Id. Will be regarded as a trustee, and as such is entitled to have an account stated in which he should be charged with the rents and profits received from the property, and credited with moneys paid out in discharge of valid debts against the estate and for taxes, and such improvements as have substantially benefited the estate. 89. Evidence held to show ratification by heir who received and retained her share of purchase price. Heir's husband could not testify as to whether she intended to ratify. Carey v. Moore, 119 Ga. 92, 45 S. E. 998. Where proceeds exceed reasonable value of the land, sale may be ratified by acquiescence. Rights of widow and heirs barred by statute of limitations. Mason v. Odum, 210 Ill. 471, 71 N. E. 386.

90. Should ordinarily be brought within seven years of date of sale unless heir under disability, and then within seven years from removal of disability. Election held not made within reasonable time and petition properly dismissed on demurrer. Griffin v. Stephens, 119 Ga. 418, 46 S. E. 66. If attacked within a reasonable time, it will be set aside upon proof that the executor has fraudulently used his position of trust and confidence to take undue advantage of the beneficiaries by securing the property at less than it was fairly worth. 99. Tillinghast v. Brown University [R. I.] 55 A. 758. An agreement whereby residuary legatees released the surviving executors from all liability to the estate except whatever claim there might be, if any, against them on account of any loss that might come on a claim against the estate of their deceased co-executor, who was largely indebted to the estate at his death, held to have discharged the surviving executors from liability for the deceased executor's defalcation, except for the balance remaining unpaid on final settlement of his estate, and hence no action could be maintained against them to recover such sum until such settlement. Id. The fact that the final account of an executor, which was accompanied by an affidavit signed by the sole legatee showing a complete settlement of the estate and reciting a discharge of the executor by the legatee, and was indorsed with a release by the legatee, was not filed, is immaterial.

contract with him in regard to his compensation and the manner in which the property shall be managed;[1] but an agreement by an executor with a beneficiary to resign for a consideration is contrary to public policy and void.[2]

As a general rule executors and administrators are amenable for their executorial acts only to the proper tribunals of the state in which they are appointed,[3] but an executor who has been appointed, qualified, and received assets in a foreign state which he brings into another state, may be sued and compelled to account in the latter state, though he has never qualified or received assets there.[4] The nature and extent of his rights in such case must be determined by the laws of the state in which he received his appointment.[5]

Prescription cannot run in favor of the executor against the estate he represents.[6]

Executors de son tort.—At common law an executor de son tort was liable to the extent of the assets which he had received,[7] and could be sued by the representative, creditors, legatees, or, if all the debts had been paid, by a distributee.[8] By statute in some states one who officiously intermeddles with the property of a decedent is responsible only to his legal representative for the value of all property taken or removed and for all injury caused by his interference therewith.[9]

He is subject to all the liabilities of an ordinary representative without being entitled to any of his privileges,[10] and is bound to exercise the same diligence in the collection of assets as if he were the regularly appointed administrator,[11] and to hold and account for the estate in the proportions fixed by statute.[12] The fact that he acts honestly and in good faith in attempting to distribute it in a different manner is immaterial.[13] He may prove, in mitigation of damages, payments made by him in the rightful course of administration.[14] By statute in some Littell v. Hackley [C. C. A.] 126 F. 309. Evidence held to show that an executor fully accounted for all the property of decedent which came into his hands. Id. The assent by beneficiaries to the allowance of the accounts of an executor does not relieve him from liability for loss resulting from unwarranted investments stated therein, when such assent is due to fraud and false representations. Representations that money had been received for sale of land and that interest on mortgages given to secure purchase money and advancements had been paid. Willfully untrue as to one executor and fraud in law as to other, he having stated in his report that facts were true of his own knowledge when he did not know that they were true. Brigham v. Morgan, 185 Mass. 27, 69 N. E. 418. Where an executor or administrator acts in good faith and with ordinary care and prudence for the benefit of the estate, beneficiaries, who consent thereto, cannot charge him with losses resulting from a deviation from the strict line of his duty. Is accountable for losses resulting to a beneficiary who did not consent to continuing speculative accounts. Matthews v. Sheehan, 76 Conn. 654, 57 A. 694.

1. Where the husband is the sole heir of his wife and there are no debts, a contract between him and the plaintiff that the latter should be appointed and act as administrator for a fixed compensation, but that his duties should be formal only and that he should not interfere with the management of the property, is valid. 14. Administrator appointed under void order who is interested in estate may set off states he is liable to the creditors, heirs, or legatees for double the value of the property taken or converted by him, where the estate has no legal representative.[15] He may be sued specifically as executor de son tort and judgment may be entered against him as such,[16] and it is not necessary to allege that there are no debts and no necessity for administration.[17] In some states an executor de son tort cannot be called to account in the probate court.[18]

(§ 9) B. Representative as creditor or debtor.[19]—The individual claim of an executor or administrator against the estate must be presented for allowance[20] and established by legal evidence in the same manner as those of other claimants.[21] He will be held to strict proof[22] and his claim will be carefully scrutinized.[23] The same is true in regard to the claim of his attorney.[24]

An executor is properly chargeable with any just debt which the testator had against him, and is liable for the same as so much money in his hands at the time the same becomes due.[25] It has been held, however, that this rule does not apply if he was at all times, from and after his qualification, insolvent.[26]

(§ 9) C. Interest on property or funds.[27]—An executor or administrator who is guilty of bad faith in making investments,[28] or is guilty of negligence in collecting[29] or accounting for funds of the estate, will be charged with interest thereon.[30] Where he mingles funds of the estate with his own, he will be charged with interest on such moneys remaining in his hands uninvested.[31]

The amount of interest to be charged a representative who borrows the money of the estate depends upon whether he acts in good or bad faith.[32] Where he acts in bad faith, the highest legal rate should be charged.[33] Otherwise it rests in the discretion of the court to charge a less rate when justice can be done thereby.[34]

Where a balance for any year appears against a representative who is in no sense at fault, the interest thereon stands over until final settlement, or until sufficient disbursements have been made to discharge it after having extinguished the balance of principal due.[35] But when the debts have been paid or there has been time to pay them, and he has only legacies and distributive shares to deal with, the representative is treated as settled with in respect to interest on the principles governing settlements between ordinary debtors and creditors, except that under peculiar circumstances he may become chargeable with compound interest.[36] The interest on a balance due the representative for any year is carried into the account for subsequent years except when by so doing he would be allowed interest on interest.[37]

In Louisiana, the statute imposes a penalty of twenty per cent. on administrators who withdraw the funds of the estate from deposit without an order of the court,[38] or who fail to deposit funds received by them in a chartered bank of that state allowing interest on deposits.[39] The statute is mandatory and the penalty will be enforced whether loss results to the estate therefrom or not.[40] It can be computed only on funds actually received,[41] and may be waived by the parties in interest.[42] The sum accruing therefrom must, on distribution of the estate, go to the heirs on whose share it has accrued.[43] The penalty cannot be barred by

amount of the fee to be paid directly to the attorney.[53] In determining what is a reasonable attorney's fee, the court should take into consideration the amount of the estate, the character of the services rendered, and the amount of work done.[54] He will not be allowed attorney's fees for services which he should have performed personally,[55] for services rendered to the heirs, creditors, devisees[56] or adverse parties,[57] nor for services in relation to realty in regard to which he had no duties to perform,[58] nor in some states, for services in procuring letters of administration.[59] An administrator appointed under a void order will not be reimbursed for attorney's fees paid by him unless the services were rendered in preserving the estate.[60]

Attorney's fees for services of benefit to two estates should be divided between them.[61] A temporary administrator is not entitled to an allowance for the fees of an attorney representing him on appeal of the heirs from an order fixing his compensation.[62] The attorney may maintain an action against the administrator personally, as for money had and received, for a sum allowed him by the county court as fees, in accordance with a request contained in the final account.[63]

In so far as the services and expenses of one's administrators in settling his accounts as administrator of another estate are made necessary by his misconduct, the loss falls on his estate; in so far as they are not, they will be charged against the other estate.[64]

Costs and expenses incurred by one appointed administrator of the estate of a living person are not a charge against the latter or his estate.[65]

pended by him in procuring a revenue stamp for his bond,[66] or for expenses incurred by him in doing acts beyond his authority.[67]

The administrator or executor has the burden of proving the justice and necessity of disbursements made by him to cover the expenses of administration,[68] and persons interested may show that the services for which an allowance is claimed have been so negligently performed as to cause damage to the estate.[69]

An administrator appointed under a void order cannot recover the amount paid by him to a surety company for becoming surety on his bond,[70] nor for appraisers' fees, or fees paid justices for taking acknowledgments.[71]

Matters relating to expenses of testamentary trustees are treated elsewhere.[72]

Funeral expenses are generally considered a part of the expenses of administration,[73] but the administrator is not liable when it appears that the credit therefor was extended to a third person on the latter's express promise to pay the bill.[74] Where their allowance is made discretionary with the court, it is not proper to submit the question of their allowance to a jury.[75] There is a conflict of authority as to whether the funeral expenses of a married woman are a debt of her estate.[76]

not liable for assets which come into the hands of the other, nor for the laches, waste, devastavit or mismanagement of the other, unless he consents to or joins in an act resulting in loss to the estate.[82] An indebtedness to the estate of a decedent from one of two administrators will be considered as having come into the joint possession of both, and as between themselves and the surety on their joint bond, they are both principals.[83] It is proper for one of two joint executors to allow the other to collect and pay out income.[84] A contract not under seal, purporting to be executed by two executors but signed by only one of them, is binding on both where the one not signing authorized and directed the other to act for him.[85]

A surviving administrator may be compelled to account as such by a surety on the bond of his deceased co-administrator.[86] One executor, who is also a legatee, may sue the other and the sureties on their joint and several bond.[87] The rights of executors and trustees and their sureties as between themselves will not be determined in proceedings to settle their respective accounts.[88] On the resignation of one of several representatives, it is his duty to account to the others for all assets of the estate in his hands.[89]

Commissions will not be allowed on the transfer of realty to an heir,[93] or on the value of realty not actually sold;[94] but will be allowed on the proceeds of property bequeathed which it is necessary to sell in order to make the required division.[95]

Ordinarily, the representative is only entitled to the statutory fees,[96] but further compensation may be allowed for necessary and extraordinary expenses and services upon good reasons clearly shown to the court.[97] Where the fees are not fixed by statute, he will be allowed a reasonable amount.[98] The compensation of temporary administrators is in the discretion of the court.[99]

A trust company which has acted as an administrator is entitled to compensation therefor, notwithstanding the invalidity of the act under which the appointment was made,[1] and the measure of such compensation is the amount allowed by statute to legally appointed executors and administrators.[2] Executors, as such, are not entitled to commissions for services imposed on them as trustees,[3] nor are they entitled to be twice compensated for the same services where they act in both capacities.[4] A bequest to an executor and testamentary trustee of a certain sum in full of all commissions, disbursements, and charges relating to the settlement of the estate precludes him from accepting commissions either as executor or trustee;[5] but he will be allowed compensation, though the will provides that he shall receive none, where it appears that such provision was inserted because of an advantage given him in the division of the estate which he is prevented from receiving.[6]

accounting involved the final estate, and it appeared that the principal services were rendered by two executors but the executrix had rendered some services, held, that the accounting was complete and that the executors should receive full commissions and the executrix a half commission. tion as such,[7] but may be allowed for services in preserving or caring for the property of the estate and resulting in a benefit thereto.[8]

Matters relating to the compensation of testamentary trustees are treated elsewhere.[9]

An agreement on the part of the representative not to charge commissions,[10] or limiting the amount to be charged, is valid and enforceable against him,[11] and a sole legatee, who has agreed to the allowance of extra compensation to the executor for extraordinary services, cannot object thereto after the allowance of his final account.[12] Where an executor refuses to accept commissions and returns them to the estate, they should be divided equally among all the beneficiaries.[13] When the estate consists of income producing property and the circumstances are such that its settlement covers a number of years, it is within the discretion of the probate court to credit the services of the administrator for each year at the end of the year, even where no accounts have been rendered until the final settlement.[14] An executor has no power to pay or reserve commissions to himself until they have been allowed in the manner provided by statute.[15]

Fraud or misconduct on the part of the executor or administrator,[16] or a failure to account for funds received by him, may justify the court in refusing to allow him compensation for his services;[17] but the omission by an executor to seek a construction of the will is not a ground for withholding commissions otherwise earned.[18] Where one of two joint executors defaults and the accounts of the innocent ones are surcharged with the amount of the loss, the latter will nevertheless be allowed commissions and costs of preparing the account to be paid from the estate.[19]

account for and pay over the money in his hands,[22] and such order or decree is generally held to be conclusive as to the rights and liabilities of the sureties in the absence of fraud or collusion.[23] In Louisiana, however, a contrary rule prevails, and the judgment is not conclusive on the surety either as to the fact or the extent of the breach,[24] though both it[25] and the record of the succession are admissible in evidence against him.[26]

In some states, an action will lie on an administrator's bond at any time after breach, although there has been no settlement of the administrator's account or decree of distribution in the probate court.[27] In others, no cause of action accrues against the sureties until there is a final order by the probate court directing a distribution of the funds and a violation of such order by the representative.[28] In Louisiana, an heir must make a judgment with an unsatisfied writ of execution against the administrator the basis of an action against his sureties.[29] The liability of the surety does not constitute a debt until after there has been a breach of the bond.[30] The sureties on the bond of a county administrator are not responsible for his acts and defaults under an appointment as temporary administrator.[31] A surety is not discharged, with respect to a prior breach of the bond, by an ex parte judgment, or one rendered in a controversy with the administrator alone.[32]

Sureties undertake only that the representative will diligently and honestly do what can be done in collecting the assets of the estate.[33] A stipulation in an administrator's bond that he will administer according to law all the personal estate of deceased that may come into his hands implies that he shall pay debts if he has assets.[34] But there is no violation of this stipulation as to any debt until it has been reduced to a judgment which the administrator has refused to pay on demand.[35] The fact that the assets have been used according to law is a good defense to an action on the bond.[36] An executor charged with the investment of a fund for a particular purpose does not relieve himself and his sureties from liability therefor until such investment is actually made.[37]

The bond of an executor or administrator is security for the final accounting by him for all funds coming into his hands during the administration,[38] and it is immaterial whether the funds for which he fails to account come into his hands before or after its execution.[39] Sureties on an additional bond of an administrator with the will annexed are liable for funds already misappropriated and not finally accounted for.[40]

The sureties on the bond of an executor or administrator who is indebted to the estate are chargeable with the amount of the debt.[41] In some states, it is held that this rule does not apply where the representative was at all times insolvent.[42] The sureties on the general bond of the administrator are liable for the proceeds of the sale of realty after they have become a part of the assets of the estate, where the special sale bond provided for by statute is not given.[43]

Sureties of joint administrators are liable for their joint acts and for the individual defaults of each.[44] One executor, who is also a legatee, may sue the

Sureties could not take advantage of the fact that the order appointing him and his letters described him as administrator instead of administrator with the will annexed, where they were chargeable with notice of the fact that deceased died testate, and the bond so recited. Id. Sureties on additional bond given after sale of realty cannot defend on ground that assets in hands of administrator were largely proceeds of sale which court had improperly sanctioned, where the records of the probate proceedings disclosed all the facts, and they were chargeable with knowledge of the receipt of such funds and the purpose for which they were held. Id. Sureties cannot defend on the ground that the funds misappropriated were proceeds of an unauthorized sale of realty, where court had approved such sale and administrator had admitted receipt of proceeds. Id. Administrator cannot defend on ground that there are no debts and hence his is bound only to account to annuitants and heirs under the will, where no notice of the appointment of an administrator was ever given, and hence the statutory period for filing claims has not expired [Iowa Code, § 3304]. 44. Palmer v. Ward, 91 App. Div. 449, 86 N. Y. S. 990. May become liable for the joint administration of an estate by two administrators under an arrangement that one of them should do no more than sign all papers presented by the other, and if they do so, they cannot hold such administrator in other and the sureties on their joint and several bond.[45] Two heirs in whose favor a judgment has been rendered against an administrator may join in an action thereon against his sureties.[46]

Sureties of administrators may maintain a suit against them and their successor to compel them to account and to have a judgment for the amount found due the estate by reason of the default of one of their number entered against defendants in the first instance, and the sureties decreed to be secondarily liable, and to enjoin their successor from prosecuting the bond.[47] A surety on the bond of a deceased administrator may compel the surviving administrator to account as such.[48] In Pennsylvania, an administrator de bonis non may maintain an action against a surety on the bond of his predecessor to recover money due and belonging to the estate of decedent.[49] In an action on the bond of a deceased administrator by the representatives of a distributee, the estate need not be represented by an administrator, where it appears that all the debts have been paid;[50] neither is a distributee who has been paid in full a necessary party;[51] but if the administrator was also a distributee, the rule is otherwise.[52]

An executor, who is also residuary legatee, who gives a bond to pay debts and legacies, is responsible to legatees for the amount of their legacies, notwithstanding the fact that he was mistaken as to the amount of assets, and that the clerk of court did not inform him that he was assuming any personal liability to the legatees.[53] An order of the probate court, settling and allowing an administrator's account and distributing the estate which requires repayment by distributees who have received their share prior to such accounting on giving bond for repayment, does not operate as a judgment against the sureties on such bonds.[54] They can only be rendered liable on a direct proceeding by the executor or administrator.[55]

An action may be brought on an administrator's bond from which the penalty has been omitted without reformation.[56]

Where the sum due exceeds the penalty of the bond, plaintiff is entitled to interest on the penal sum from the date of the writ.[57]

§ 10. Actions by and against representatives and costs therein.[58]—Executors or administrators cannot ordinarily sue or be sued prior to their qualification as such,[59] or in a state other than that of their appointment.[60] The latter rule has been changed by statute in some states.[61] Statutes in some states provide that a nonresident qualifying therein as executor or administrator of a person dying or leaving assets in such state shall be treated as a citizen thereof for the purpose of suing or being sued.[62]

A suit against the estate must be carried on in the name of the representative as such.[63] In order to charge the estate in an action against the representative, facts showing his appointment and that he is acting in that capacity must be alleged.[64] The complaint must also clearly show whether defendant is charged individually or as representative.[65] The defense that one is not executor must be raised by a plea in abatement.[66] The plea of ne unques executor or administrator is a plea in bar, which requires no verification.[67] A properly appointed administrator has legal capacity to sue, though he may not be entitled to maintain the action for other reasons.[68] It is not necessary to plead the existence of assets.[69] Where a cause of action accrues to an executor or administrator after the death of decedent, he may sue thereon either in his representative or individual character, and the complaint is sufficient if it states a cause of action in either capacity.[70] If the representative brings an action which he has no authority to maintain, the court may order the heirs, who are parties to the proceeding, to be substituted as plaintiffs.[71]

a contract or other claim due decedent, or to recover property belonging to the estate in order that he may do so it must appear that the beneficiaries cannot give bond for costs,[73] but in case the suit is for death of decedent by wrongful act, the rule is otherwise.[74]

Causes of action in favor of[75] or against[76] an executor or administrator personally and in his representative capacity may be joined provided they arise out of transactions connected with the same subject-matter and do not require different modes of trial. In such case he may appear in each capacity by a different attorney.[77] A person suing in his individual capacity cannot amend his complaint so as to maintain the suit as executor.[78] There is a conflict of authority as to whether a judgment can be rendered against him personally in a suit brought against him as representative.[79] One instituting a suit as administrator cannot complain of the fact that judgment is rendered against him as such.[80] An administrator who, in the trial court in an action to settle decedent's estate, sets up no individual claim to realty involved cannot make such claim for the first time on appeal.[81]

An administrator, in the trial of his case, must regard the rules of law regulating the practice in court.[82] The question of the competency of the administrator and the heirs or beneficiaries as witnesses is treated elsewhere.[83]

Helffrich v. Greenberg, 206 Pa. 516, 56 A. 45.

83. See Witnesses, § 4, 2 Curr. L. 2169.

Failure to serve one of two independent executors at most renders a judgment recovered against the estate voidable.[84] The fact that an officer of a corporation who confesses judgment against it in favor of an executor is a legatee under the will does not render the judgment invalid.[85] Statutes in some states authorize suits and executions against the estates of decedents in the hands of independent executors.[86] In New York, municipal courts have jurisdiction of contract actions against representatives when the amount in controversy does not exceed a specified amount.[87]

No judgment can legally be entered against a deceased defendant until his representative has been substituted as a party.[88]

The death of a party to a judgment renders it dormant.[89] Its revivor in the name of the representative restores it to full force and affords a new starting point for the running of the statute of limitations as to dormancy.[90] Where the representative is appointed in a foreign state he must, in some states, give bond that he will dispose according to law of any property he may receive thereunder before execution will issue to him.[91] Bills to construe[92] and suits to contest[93] or set aside wills are treated of elsewhere.[94]

Costs.[95]—An administrator bringing suit to assert some right which belonged to his intestate, or to redress some wrong done to him, during his lifetime, is not personally liable for costs if unsuccessful.[96] He will be where the action is for an alleged injury to the administrator in the conduct of the business incident to the settlement of the estate,[97] or on an obligation running against him,[98] or where he unreasonably defends.[99]

In an action on a claim against the estate, the executor is exempt from the payment of costs unless the demand of the plaintiff was property presented and payment thereof was unreasonably resisted or neglected, or in New York unless

An action against an executor by a husband for expenses incurred in the sepulture of his wife arises ex lege and hence municipal courts have no jurisdiction over it. 88. May be substituted on motion [Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 385]. De Leonis v. Walsh, 140 Cal. 175, 73 P. 813. A court may, when such action is necessary to justice, direct that its findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon be filed as of a date anterior to the death of a party defendant against whom judgment is thereby ordered (Id.), but such action cannot operate to deprive the representatives and successors of the decedent of the right to appeal, or to shorten the time within which such appeal may be taken (Id.). Where a promissory note was transferred by the payee after suit had been commenced thereon, and such suit was continued in the name of the original payee, his administrator could not be substituted for him on his death, since the note was not assets of the estate. Transferee and not administrator should be substituted under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. Daneri v. Gazzola, 139 Cal. 416, 73 P. 179. the executor did not consent to a reference according to law.[1] It is largely discretionary whether to charge him personally.[2]

An executor is entitled to costs on final judgment in his favor in an action brought against him by a legatee to recover a general legacy, in which he demands a money judgment only,[3] and will be charged therewith where he is not justified in resisting the claim of the legatee.[4] He will also be charged with costs incurred by reason of his failure to perform a duty required of him,[5] or by reason of his wrongful acts,[6] and with the costs of a suit brought by him as administrator in which it is determined that he has no capacity to sue as such.[7]

Costs will be awarded a representative who successfully resists a claim that he is personally liable on mortgage notes given under order of the court to raise money to pay debts.[8]

In an action by or against an administrator the court may, in its discretion, require the plaintiff to give security for costs,[9] and in some states where he has done so may certify his good faith and diligence.[10]

The question of costs in suits to construe,[11] or to prove, contest, or set aside the will, is treated elsewhere.[12]

will be imposed whether loss results to the estate or not.[17] It will not, however, be imposed on opposition to the final account long after the failure occurred.[18] The proper remedy upon failure to file an annual account is by application to the court for an order compelling the representative to do so, and on failure, to demand his removal.[19]

An ancillary administrator should finally account to the domiciliary administrator.[20]

A testator may fix a time for the settlement of his estate different from that provided by statute so as to bind his devisees.[21]

Administrators will only be compelled to file supplemental accounts for matters occurring after the settlement of their final accounts.[22] In Louisiana the setting aside of a judgment discharging the representative is a condition precedent to a demand for a further accounting.[23]

(§ 11) B. Who may require.[24]—A substituted administrator under some statutes,[25] or anyone interested in the estate may require an accounting by the representatives of a deceased executor or administrator.[26]

All persons interested in the estate should be made parties.[27] If not cited they may voluntarily appear and make themselves parties.[28] An assignee of a legatee of a specific chattel cannot compel an accounting when there are no debts.[29] Lapse of time is no bar to the right of the heirs to compel an accounting where the administration has not been closed.[30]

(§ 11) C. Scope and contents of account.[31]—The representative need not account for the realty,[32] and the probate court has no jurisdiction to pass upon his accounts in regard to money belonging to another which has wrongfully come into his hands.[33]

Hoagland v. Cooper [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 705. The executors of a deceased executrix will not be required to account to a substituted administrator, where it appears that an interest in the personal estate of testator vested in a deceased daughter, no representative of whom is a party to the suit, and it further appears that such daughter's interest vested on her death, in said executrix. The second account should commence with the balance due on the first.[35] Decedent's share in a partnership is not a proper subject of inquiry on an accounting by his executor, who is also one of the surviving partners.[36]

(§ 11) D. Procedure.[37]—A court of chancery has jurisdiction over the settlement of the accounts of executors,[38] but equity will not entertain an action against representatives when complete relief can be had in the probate court.[39]

The representatives, creditors and all persons having an interest in decedent's property must be made parties to an action for the settlement of his estate.[40]

The court in adjusting the accounts of executors or administrators is governed by the broad principle of equity, and the representative may at all times show the fairness of his dealings and the real nature of his transactions, and restrict his liability to that which equity demands.[41] In New York on the final judicial settlement of accounts, the surrogate can exercise all powers given him by statute and necessary incidental powers.[42] Having all interested parties before him, he may settle and determine all questions concerning any claim, debt, legacy, bequest, or distributive share, to whom the same shall be payable, and the amount to be paid to each person.[43]

The court may, in his discretion, permit the filing of exceptions to an executor's report raising objections passed upon in considering former exceptions where they are filed before the final approval of the report and bring to the attention of the court provisions of the will not previously considered.[44] The fact that exceptions are filed one day too late may be disregarded by the court.[45] An administrator, against whom the next of kin has instituted proceedings for an accounting, alleging that he was indebted to intestate at the time of her death in a trust capacity, may set up the statute of limitations at any time before the close of the evidence on the hearing before the referee.[46] Exceptions to supplemental accounts should be confined to matters contained therein.[47] It is the duty of the court to reject improper items on its own motion.[48] Parties who elect to try the right of the administrator to an allowance for certain items in the probate court cannot thereafter require issues for the determination thereof to be sent to a court of law.[49]

A reference[50] may be ordered on accounting, and an auditor may be appointed on final accounting, though accounts previously filed have been approved.[51] A referee's findings will be presumed to have been based on all the evidence.[52] His report is not final, but is subject to confirmation, modification or rejection by the court.[53]

Depositions of witnesses may be taken and used as in other actions.[54] An ex parte affidavit of the executor made out of court is insufficient evidence to support a judgment homologating his account.[55] The objector must prove allegations of new and affirmative matter in his exceptions.[56] The representative may be asked whether he has ever received any money or property not embraced in his account.[57]

In Georgia on hearing of a citation for settlement against a representative neither the ordinary, nor the superior court on appeal, can allow him credit for items accruing after the last return and not specially pleaded in the answer.[59]

(§ 11) E. The decree or order.[60]—Judgment should not be rendered in favor of parties making no opposition to the allowance of the account.[61] The findings on the hearing of the account should state what items the court allows and what items he rejects.[62] In a suit against them for the settlement of the estate, where their removal is not sought and no grounds therefor are stated, executors and testamentary trustees should be required to pay over to the master commissioner only such sums as the adult children are entitled to under the will.[63] Where, in an insolvent succession, the executor's account shows a specific sum for distribution the amounts to be allowed the distributees must necessarily be fixed and the amount made definite.[64]

Credits for payments made by executors under the terms of the will are not to be given him on settlement of his accounts but will be considered only on the distribution of the estate.[65] The same is true in regard to the determination of the rights of parties claiming an interest in the estate.[66]

The court may in his discretion charge the executor personally with all costs and expenses of proceedings on objections to his account,[67] or of proceedings to compel him to account.[68]

The statute of limitations governing suits on implied contracts applies to actions for the recovery of unaccounted-for moneys charged against the representative individually.[69]

§ 12. Distribution and disposal of funds.[70]—The administration of an estate is never complete until all the assets have been turned over to those rightfully entitled to them.[71] The rights of devisees and legatees are fixed by the decree of distribution and not by the will.[72] The decree creates no new title, but merely declares the one accruing under the law or the will.[73] Orders and judgments of the probate court directing a distribution of the estate are provisional only, and do not authorize the administrator to make such distribution before the expiration of the time allowed for an appeal therefrom.[74] In North Carolina, any person interested may bring an action against the representative for the settlement of the estate at any time after two years from his qualification[75] and within ten years after the right of action accrues.[76]

Legacies should be paid from the personalty, unless the testator indicates a different fund,[77] or a statute makes them a charge on land.[78] In paying legacies, some of which are charged and others not, the fund charged should be resorted to in order to avoid a deficiency.[79] General legacies abate in equal proportions to make up a deficiency of assets.[80] The share of a pretermitted child should first be taken from the estate not disposed of by will.[81] If that is not sufficient, so much as may be necessary must then be taken from all the devisees and legatees in proportion to the value of the shares they respectively receive under the will, unless the obvious intention of the testator in relation to some specific provision would thereby be defeated.[82]

Interest will be allowed on legacies from time when they become due.[83] It is allowed as incident to the principal demand, and is not imposed upon the executor for his neglect.[84] The representative is personally chargeable with interest on legacies or distributive shares which he refuses or neglects to pay over to those entitled thereto[85] and for damages resulting from his delay or refusal.[86]

The indebtedness of a legatee or distributee to the estate may be deducted from his legacy or distributive share.[87] There is a conflict of authority as to whether this rule applies to debts barred by the statute of limitations.[88] The transfer tax may also be deducted.[89] In equity, a debt due to an administrator individually from a distributee may be allowed as a payment on such distributee's share of the estate,[90] but it cannot be brought into the administration as a credit upon the shares of the other distributees.[91] The ademption of legacies and the satisfaction of debts by legacies being questions of intention are treated elsewhere.[92]

The rights of all the heirs should be preserved,[93] and the decree should dispose of the property and the whole title thereto and estate therein.[94] Estates will be equitably distributed so as to procure equality of shares.[95] Where the widow elects to take a child's part, the estate should be equally divided between her and the children after the payment of the debts and the expenses of administration up to and including the distribution.[96] Such share is superior to legacies.[97] On an issue as to whether a distributee has received his share of the estate, a full showing of what he and the other heirs have received is proper.[98] Statutes in some states authorize proceedings to determine the interest of all persons in an estate in process of administration.[99] In others on the filing of the final account and notice

Surplus moneys received on foreclosure of a mortgage should be distributed by the probate court on notice to all parties,[2] and commissions which an executor refuses to accept and returns to the estate should be divided among all the beneficiaries.[3] The allowance for the value of the widow's dower deducted from the share of an after-born child, for whom no provision was made in the will, should be held by the representatives for the benefit of all the devisees in proportion to their respective shares.[4] Any surplus remaining after a sale of lands to pay debts should be distributed as realty.[5]

Ordinarily the only questions on distribution are as to who are the heirs, legatees and devisees and what property they are entitled to as such.[6] In the absence of statute,[7] the probate court has no jurisdiction to determine controversies between heirs or devisees and third parties claiming under them.[8] A provision authorizing distribution to the assignees of such persons does not apply to conveyances made by an heir apparent before the death of decedent.[9]

Upon the hearing for distribution, the court can adjust all matters between the legatees or distributees and the executors, and credit to the latter all advances made by them to the former under the terms of the will.[10] Contracts between the heirs,[11] and between the heirs and the representatives in regard to the distribution of the country in which he resides, instead of citing him and making payment to him directly.[25]

The attachment of a legacy by a creditor of the legatee gives him the same rights in relation thereto as the legatee had.[16] The representative may be made a garnishee in a suit in attachment where it appears on filing his final account that the legacy or a part thereof will probably be paid.[17]

A life tenant or usufructuary may be required to give bond unless the will provides otherwise.[26]

The court may order,[27] or the next of kin may agree to, a distribution of assets in kind for the purpose of avoiding loss.[28] On the settlement of the executor's account, a sufficient sum should be set apart to pay annuities and legacies not yet due.[29] Where an accumulation for the benefit of children is for a longer period than that allowed by law, distribution should be made to each upon his arrival at majority.[30] The doctrine of acceleration of estates is founded upon the desire of courts of equity to give effect to the manifest intention of the testator, and it will be denied when such intention would be frustrated by allowing it.[31]

Statutes in some states allow distribution before final settlement on the execution of bonds for repayment, if required.[32] In Pennsylvania, where distribution is made under an order of court, the administrator has no right to demand a refunding bond from the legatees or distributees, and is not liable for a failure to do so.[33] On application for a partial distribution, the court should direct the retention of a sufficient sum to pay commissions, attorney's fees and the expenses of closing up the estate.[34] In California, an order for the payment of a dividend on an accounting by an administrator may be made without notice or application therefor,[35] but it cannot be made until after the account is settled.[36] It is not, strictly speaking, a part of the proceeding for the settlement of the account, or of the adjudication respecting the claims reported therein.[37] An appeal from the order settling the account suspends the order for a dividend, and prevents its enforcement against the will of the administrator.[38]

A legatee may follow the assets of the estate to recover the amount of his legacy.[39] In some states, legatees[40] and distributees may maintain actions against

30. Until children reached age of 25 years. Thorn v. Thorn, 86 App. Div. 405, 83 N. Y. S. 849.

31. Distribution could not be accelerated by release of widow's life interest, where children took vested interests under the will, defeasible as to any one of them on his death during life of widow, in which event his share would go to his children, and the will fixed the time for division at the death of the widow, since it would be impossible before that time to ascertain who would be entitled to take the remainder on the happening of that event. 34. Evidence sufficient to sustain order for partial distribution. Amount left held sufficient. In re Straus' Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 1122. Objection on petition for partial distribution that court had no jurisdiction over controversy between executor and petitioner in regard to profits of partnership business held untenable, there being no such controversy. 37. Parties to whom dividends are payable do not thereby become parties to accounting. In re McDougald's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 443.

38. Hence it is proper to defer order for dividend until time for appeal from order settling account has expired or appeal therefrom has been determined. In re McDougald's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 443.

39. Plaintiffs as legatees of testator may follow assets of his estate into hands of persons receiving them in distribution of intes-

the representative for their legacies or distributive shares.[41] A solicitor has no capacity to sue to recover for the benefit of the distributees money paid to the clerk of the superior court by decedent's administrator for the benefit of such distributees.[42] An action cannot be maintained to recover a distributive share of the estate under a decree annulled by the probate court.[43] In a suit in equity to establish the lien of a legacy on certain realty, the burden is on plaintiff to prove that the legacy is a subsisting lien and is unpaid.[44]

The statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of a personal representative against the distributees until a court having jurisdiction directs a distribution,[45] and against the right of an heir, devisee or legatee to recover his distributive share of the estate until the executor files his final account.[46]

One of two or more devisees may maintain an action for partition against the others and the executor at any time after the expiration of the time for filing claims, though the estate has not been settled and there has been no decree of distribution, provided the executor has on hand sufficient funds to pay the debts and expenses of administration.[47] A statute authorizing the sale of a decedent's realty freed from any contingent remainders or executory devises limited thereon, or any entailment thereof, without the consent of the interested parties, is constitutional.[48] A devisee may prosecute ejectment during the pendency of probate proceedings.[49]

Courts of general jurisdiction may partition property owned jointly by decedent and another,[50] or quiet title in an heir without regard to pending probate proceedings.[51]

Equity will not interfere with a decree of the probate court directing a distribution of the estate to beneficiaries in accordance with the conditions specified in the will.[52]

The pendency of proceedings for the revocation of probate does not preclude the making of an order directing the payment of a sum to a legatee who is also tate estate of his widow, who was also his executrix, both under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1837 and independent thereof. Trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church & Soc. v. Reeve, 79 App. Div. 65, 79 N. Y. S. 1102.

40. Complaint should state that there is property of testator applicable to its payment. Failure to do so cured by finding to that effect. Coulter v. Bradley [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 710.

In Pennsylvania, the statute authorizes suits by legatees against executors having in their hands sufficient funds to pay debts and legacies, to recover their legacies [Pa. Act Feb. 24, 1834, § 50 et seq. (P. L. 83)]. Wilson v. Smith [C. C. A.] 126 F. 916.

In New York, an assignee of a legatee of a specific chattel may maintain an action against the executor to recover the same [Code Civ. Proc. § 1819]. In re Egan's Estate, 89 App. Div. 565, 85 N. Y. S. 663.

a next of kin, for his support.[53] Where, upon the settlement of an administrator's accounts, the balance in his hands was ordered paid to the person entitled thereto, it will be presumed on appeal that all debts have been paid.[54]

The fee of a guardian ad litem, appointed to represent minor heirs in an equity suit involving the distribution of the estate, is properly charged against the estate as an expense of administration.[55] Legacies of property, which it is necessary to sell in order to make the required division, should bear their proportion of the commissions incurred in administering the whole estate.[56]

In some states, the court is given discretion to apportion between the parties the costs of proceedings to determine the rights of persons claiming as distributees of the estate of a decedent.[57]

Family settlements must be between parties in interest.[58] In Louisiana, if the decision of a family meeting advising a sale of property belonging to the estate be homologated, the tutor of the minor heirs has authority to provoke a sale.[59] The fact that only one of several lots directed by the meeting to be sold for purposes of distribution was sold does not release the purchaser.[60]

ment of his so-called final account.[66] Pending litigation is no ground for refusal to approve the final report of the executor and order his discharge, where the effectiveness of any decree in the action will not be impaired thereby.[67]

The formal discharge contained in the decree on final accounting applies only to the accounts of the parties up to that time.[68] The chancery court's jurisdiction to settle estates and determine the liability of executors, where questions arise beyond the competency of the probate court, includes power to discharge the executor.[69]

§ 15. Probate orders and decrees.[70]—Courts having charge of the administration of estates are generally held to be courts of general jurisdiction in regard to probate matters.[71] Hence their judgments and decrees are as binding on parties and their privies,[72] and, until vacated or reversed, set aside or modified on

Executors of a deceased trustee who have been formally discharged and have accounted for and distributed all the funds coming into their hands cannot be required to account further in their executorial capacity in respect to the trust funds or for the acts of deceased in relation thereto, it not appearing that they knew of such trust, or that any such funds came into their hands, or that any claims therefor were filed, or that they had funds out of which such claims could be paid. Rosen v. Ward, 96 App. Div. 262, 89 N. Y. S. 148. An administratrix, who had commenced action for death of her intestate, was thereafter discharged and her final account was approved by the county court, and she then had her action dismissed without prejudice. Thereafter she was appointed administratrix de bonis non, and the action was revived. Held that the only effect of such discharge was to approve her account up to that time, and that she continued to be administratrix notwithstanding. Order appointing administrator is in rem and a judgment therein is binding and conclusive upon all persons as to every matter necessarily involved. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 837. An administratrix, representing all the heirs as their guardian, who consents to the appointment of a special administrator cannot thereafter object to such appointment on the ground that she had never been removed, the rights of creditors not being involved. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682. In regard to matters involved in collateral litigation therein, between particular parties and not necessarily involved in a judgment of the character rendered, it is binding only on those who actually litigated such matters and their privies. In a proceeding for the distribution of the assets of an intestate one claiming as heir at law on the ground that he is the issue of a marriage between his mother and intestate held not concluded on the question of the marriage of his alleged parents by a finding in proceedings for appointment of administrator that they had never been married. Mother did not represent him in that proceeding. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 837. See, also, Id. [Neb.] 100 N. W. 930.

Decree settling accounts. Unless corrected in the probate court for fraud or want of notice, or reversed on appeal. Bassett v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 184 Mass. 210, 68 N. E. 205. Decree on accounting approving action of executor in keeping alive and transferring liens of certain mortgages paid by him held not binding on non resident parties having no notice thereof. Hetzel v. Easterly, 96 App. Div. 517, 89 N. Y. S. 154. Binding on representative and sureties. Smith v. Moore [Va.] 46 S. E. 326. The order of the probate court allowing the representative's first account is conclusive upon him, if not appealed from. Cannot reopen it after 12 years on ground that it is erroneous. Nowland v. Rice's Estate [Mich.] 101 N. W. 214.

Decree of distribution: Distribution by the orphans' court of a balance shown by the account of an executor or administrator is a quasi proceeding in rem, binding upon the whole world, and especially upon those who are actually parties thereto or who might have been but for their own laches. In re Piper's Estate, 208 Pa. 636, 57 A. 1118. Mortgagees cannot recover either from legatees or executors a deficiency resulting on foreclosure sale made after a decree of distribution, where interest was paid for more than thirty years after the mortgage became due and no claim was made on the mortgage bond at the audit of the executors' account and no notice thereof was ever given them. In re Piper's Estate, 208 Pa. 636, 57 A. 118; Snyder v. Murdock, 26 Utah, 233, 73 P. 22. Not binding on one claiming under appeal, as conclusive as to matters necessarily involved in their determination as those of any other court.[73] The existence of all facts necessary to give jurisdiction will be presumed until the contrary appears,[74] and such judgments cannot be devisee and not made a party. Coates v. Harris [Idaho] 75 P. 243. Distributees are parties to the administration proceedings and chargeable with notice of the judgment settling the estate and discharging the administrator, and reciting a settlement by him with the distributees. Minor distributee held to have been party to proceedings. Bridgens v. West [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 417. Code Civ. Proc. § 2743. Decree requiring assets in hands of executors to be thereafter held by them as trustees under the will is conclusive on adult duly cited as to propriety of investments made by them as executors. In re Halsted's Estate, 85 N. Y. S. 301. A decree by a probate court having jurisdiction, assigning the residue of the estate is in the nature of a judgment in rem, and is conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate. Chadbourne v. Hartz [Minn.] 101 N. W. 68.

Order appointing administrator. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 837; Tanas v. Municipal Gas Co., 88 App. Div. 251, 84 N. Y. S. 1053; Van Gaasbeek v. Staples, 85 App. Div. 154, 83 N. Y. S. 225. In an action by an administrator de bonis non to recover property which the widow had conveyed to defendants to conceal it, the record of the proceedings in which such administrator was appointed, the widow having appeared and objected thereto, was conclusive on defendants as to the facts there in issue. Weaver v. Meyer, 32 Ind. App. 587, 70 N. E. 409. Granting of letters of administration to an alleged widow is not conclusive as to the fact of her widowhood, and such question may be raised in a collateral proceeding by one taking no part in the proceedings resulting in her appointment, but it is conclusive as to her right to administer. Phillips v. Heraty [Mich.] 100 N. W. 186.

Judgment allowing award to widow is conclusive as to the question of her marriage arising in a proceeding for the assignment of dower and homestead to her, as against heirs who contested such question in the probate court. Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 68 N. E. 81.

Order setting aside homestead to minor heirs. Tiboldi v. Palms [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 726. An order setting aside premises occupied by the widow as her home and homestead during the administration of the estate and granting the widow a monthly allowance is not res adjudicata on the question of homestead so as to estop the administrator from selling it under an order of the probate court for the payment of debts. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 34 Wash. 84, 74 P. 1061. A decree of the surrogate setting apart a fund to provide an income to meet the expenses of maintaining the homestead, which the will directed were to be defrayed from the general estate, is, until vacated, final on the executors in so far as to require them to use the income and not the principal of such fund. Must restore any part of principal used from funds of general estate. In re Stewart, 88 App. Div. 23, 84 N. Y. S. 719.

Order allowing claims: Mason v. Gaither's Estate [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 277.

Decrees on accounting as to matters not litigated and questions not directly passed upon is not res adjudicata in subsequent proceedings of the same nature. Fact that it was erroneous as to such matters does not create binding precedent or require repetition of errors in subsequent accounting. In re Hunt's Estate, 41 Misc. 72, 83 N. Y. S. 652. Judgments in actions by executors for the adjudication of their accounts are not res adjudicata as to the validity of clauses in a will not passed upon and not necessarily involved therein. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. 405, 83 N. Y. S. 849. A judgment on the merits dismissing the petition in an action by a legatee in the orphans' court to compel a foreign executor, to whom ancillary letters had issued, to account for ancillary assets collected by him for the purpose of compelling payment of a legacy, is res adjudicata as to the possession of assets applicable to its payment, and precludes the maintenance of a subsequent action in the court of common pleas to recover the legacy. Have concurrent jurisdiction. Wilson v. Smith [C. C. A.] 126 F. 916.

An order for an accounting secured by an administrator de bonis non in independent proceedings against the executors of his predecessor, all parties being before the court, is conclusive of the right of such executors to revive an accounting of their testator, pending at his death, they having had a right to litigate the right to such revivor in such action. In re Treadwell's Estate, 85 App. Div. 570, 83 N. Y. S. 242.

Decree of distribution whereby interests of certain heirs distributed to one of their judgment creditors and from which no appeal was taken held binding on heirs and their assignee for creditors. Snyder v. Murdock, 26 Utah, 233, 73 P. 22. A decree directing an executor to pay over a certain sum is, until revoked, conclusive evidence that there are sufficient assets in his hands for that purpose. Money which he owed testator. In re David's Estate, 44 Misc. 337, 89 N. Y. S. 927. The California rule making the decree of distribution conclusive as to the construction of the will does not prevent the consideration on appeal of an item of the will, contained in such decree, for the purpose of arriving at testator's intention. In re Merchant's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 475.

74. See Jurisdiction, § 14, 2 Curr. L. 631. By statute in Wyoming facts essential to the jurisdiction of the district court need not be recited in its orders and decrees [Rev. St. 1899, § 4542]. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682. The granting of letters by the probate court must, in another proceeding, be presumed regular in all respects unless the defect appears affirmatively on the face of the record. Statute provides that jurisdiction, in so far as it depends on residence, shall not be attacked except on appeal unless defect appears in collaterally attacked[75] except for want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the record,[76] or fraud or collusion.[77] The rule applies to orders appointing an executor or administrator,[78] judgments on petition for his removal,[79] judgments and decrees allowing claims,[80] or allowing or disallowing the representative's accounts,[81] orders setting aside property to minor heirs as a homestead,[82] decrees directing the sale of realty,[83] and decrees of distribution.[84]

Ex parte orders approving the representative's annual accounts are prima facie correct only, and do not as a rule prevent a re-examination of items contained therein.[85] The same is true of ex parte final accounts filed with the clerk.[86] The record [S. C. Code Civ. Proc. § 49]. Also provides that in case deceased was nonresident, administration is to be granted in county where greater part of his estate is situated [Id. § 39]. Held that where record shows that deceased had property in county jurisdiction to appoint administrator cannot be attacked because record does not affirmatively show that greater part of his property was there. Will be presumed that evidence showed that fact. Dunlap v. Savings Bank of Rock Hill [S. C.] 48 S. E. 49.

In Georgia it is held that the court of ordinary is a court of general jurisdiction as to matters of administration and hence it is presumed, in favor of one of its judgments, that every fact necessary to make it valid and binding upon the parties thereto and their privies was before the court. Judgment to sell realty to pay debts need not set out facts upon which it was founded. Not ground to set it aside as void that estate owed no debts. Williams v. O'Neal, 119 Ga. 175, 46 S. E. 978; Jones v. Smith [Ga.] 48 S. E. 134. In Idaho probate court has general jurisdiction over probate matters and is court of record (Const. art. 5, § 21), and hence its judgments import verity. Clark v. Rossier [Idaho] 78 P. 358.

75. See Judgments, § 8, 2 Curr. L. 594. In Georgia judgments of court of ordinary cannot be collaterally attacked because the record is silent in regard to them. Jones v. Smith [Ga.] 48 S. E. 134.

In Wyoming decrees of a probate court cannot be collaterally attacked because of any error or irregularity. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682.

76. If want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record the judgment is void and may be collaterally attacked at any time by anyone whose rights are sought to be affected thereby. As in case of appointment of nonresident administrator on estate of nonresident. In such case where record is ambiguous as to residence of decedent he will, in a collateral proceeding, be presumed to have been a resident. Jones v. Smith [Ga.] 48 S. E. 134. Only for want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the proceedings. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682.

In New York decrees of surrogate may always be collaterally attacked for want of jurisdiction. Baldwin v. Rice, 44 Misc. 74, 89 N. Y. S. 738.

77. Where letters issued upon sufficient affidavit that deceased was resident of county at time of his death [Code Civ. Proc. § 2473]. Van Gaasbeek v. Staples, 85 App. Div. 271, 83 N. Y. S. 225.

Orders appointing a special administrator cannot be collaterally attacked for failure to show the removal, suspension, or resignation of the prior administrator. Lethbridge v. Lauder [Wyo.] 76 P. 682; Beresford v. American Coal Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 902. In Iowa where the appointment of an administrator is made by the clerk of the district court, his act and judgment stand as that of the court unless proper and timely exception is taken thereto in that tribunal [Iowa Code, §§ 250, 251]. A decree of the probate court accepting a commissioner's report allowing claims cannot be collaterally attacked for fraud on the part of such commissioner, but the proper remedy is by appeal. Pub. 81. Judgment against administrator on settlement cannot be collaterally attacked in action against sureties. Bonner v. Gorman, 71 Ark. 480, 77 S. W. 602. Order of the probate court allowing the representative's accounts is conclusive as to the validity of payments theretofore made by him and included therein. In re Bell's Estate, 142 Cal. 97, 75 P. 679. An administratrix who, in her final account, presents to the county court the question of how much she should pay her attorney, thereby waives any question of jurisdiction of her person, and the court may then render a judgment fixing such amount. Vaughn v. Walsh [Wis.] 100 N. W. 840. Such judgment is not open to collateral attack by the administratrix in an action brought against her by the attorney for such sum. Id.

82. Cannot be attacked by creditor. Tiboldi v. Palms [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 726.

83. Cannot be attacked for failure to set off homestead. Reinhardt v. Seaman, 208 Ill. 448, 69 N. E. 847. Cannot be collaterally attacked by action to declare trust and compel reconveyance of property where court had jurisdiction. Remedy in probate court or by appeal. Clark v. Rossier [Idaho] 78 P. 358.

allowance of a representative's final account is not a bar to further inquiry in regard to matters accidentally or fraudulently omitted.[87] Ex parte decrees sending legatees into possession are prima facie valid.[88] An order made upon the ex parte application of the executor authorizing him to pay taxes which had accrued subsequent to testator's death cannot be construed as an adjudication of the amount of taxes due, and is not binding upon him or the county.[89]

The right of the court to vacate or modify its former decrees depends upon the statutes of the various states.[90] The right to have defects of form in a decree corrected is waived by taking an appeal therefrom.[91]

the same in an action to compel an accounting. Account held not final. Thomas v. Hawpe [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 129.

In Georgia the returns of executors or administrators to the ordinary become, after approval by him, stated accounts. Tate v. Gairdner, 119 Ga. 133, 46 S. E. 73. The party rendering them is bound thereby in the absence of a showing that there has been a mistake in the account or that certain items have been omitted. Must be shown to same extent and with same degree of certainty as courts of equity require in order to correct mistakes. Id.

86. No bar to suit against him for accounting. Jones v. Sugg [N. C.] 48 S. E. 575. N. C. Code, §§ 1399, 1402. Not conclusive on representative or any one adversely interested but merely shifts burden of proof of correctness to one attacking it. Bean v. Bean, 135 N. C. 92, 47 S. E. 232.

87. Thomas v. Hawpe [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 129.

88. Thomas v. Blair, 111 La. 678, 35 So. 811.

89. In re Morgan's Estate [Iowa] 101 N. W. 127.

90. In California the court may, on a sufficient showing, relieve a beneficiary from the effects of a decree of distribution on the ground of inadvertence or excusable neglect. Petition, made within a month after entry of decree of distribution, asking that it be set aside on ground that a minor child of a deceased son of testator was not represented in the proceedings held sufficient to authorize such relief under Civ. Code, § 473. In re Ross' Estate, 140 Cal. 282, 73 P. 976. May amend a decree of settlement of account and final distribution so as to correct a mistake therein. Allowance made to broker rendering services to administrator instead of to administrator for him. Amendment not such a judicial error as could only be remedied by motion for new trial. In re Willard's Estate, 139 Cal. 501, 73 P. 240. May vacate an order setting apart a homestead [Code Civ. Proc. § 473]. Cahill v. Superior Court of San Francisco [Cal.] 78 P. 467.

In Illinois the probate court, in the exercise of its equitable powers, has authority to set aside and vacate, at a subsequent term, an order discharging an executor on account of mistake of widow in releasing her award. Heppe v. Szczepanski, 209 Ill. 88, 70 N. E. 737.

In Maine the court may at a later term and upon application of an interested party and notice to all concerned, annul and revoke a decree of distribution made at a former term, for manifest errors of fact in regard to matters not considered or determined, when such decree has not in any way been acted upon. Errors as to amount in administrator's hands and share to which distributees entitled. New petition for order of distribution held to have, by necessary implication, effect of petition for revocation of previous decree. In re Cote's Estate, 98 Me. 415, 57 A. 584.

In Maryland the orphans' court has authority to rescind an order ratifying an administrator's account allowing preferred claims not properly proven. Maynadier v. Armstrong [Md.] 56 A. 357.

In Missouri the statute provides for the vacating of orders allowing claims in certain cases and the trial of the matter anew [Rev. St. 1899, § 214]. Mason v. Gaither's Estate [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 277.

In New Jersey orphans' court may reopen any account, passed and allowed by it, for mistake. N. J. Laws 1898, p. 761, § 127. Proper to refuse to reopen because certain items with which executor should have been charged were omitted where it appeared that they were at least equaled by disbursements proved to have been omitted. In re Morris' Estate [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 161.

In New York a surrogate has power to do so in proper cases and without limitation as to time. Code Civ. Proc. § 2481, subd. 6. Limitation in Id. § 1290, does not apply to surrogate's court. Order assessing transfer tax. In re Mather's Estate, 84 N. Y. S. 1105.

In Rhode Island irregularities may be corrected by probate court [Gen. Laws, 1896, c. 209, § 13]. Fitts v. Probate Court [R. I.] 58 A. 801.

In Washington it is held that the superior court, being a court of general equity jurisdiction, has inherent power to review and set aside its judgments in probate matters for apparent error or fraud. Also has statutory authority under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5153. May vacate judgments of old probate court, to which it succeeded (Const. art. 27, § 10), for want of jurisdiction. Ball v. Clothier, 34 Wash. 299, 75 P. 1099.

In Oregon the county court cannot at a subsequent term set aside its final decree settling an estate and discharging the administrator where it had jurisdiction to make such decree. Can do so if had not. In re Conant's Estate, 43 Or. 530, 73 P. 1018. Evidence insufficient to justify setting aside final decree for fraud. Id.

In Washington a decree denying a petition to sell realty to pay debts can only be vacated in the manner prescribed for vacating judgments. In re Barker's Estate, 33 Wash. 79, 73 P. 796.

91. Removing executor. Fitts v. Probate Court of East Greenwich [R. I.] 58 A. 801.

A proceeding will lie in the supreme court for mandamus to compel a judge of the superior court to entertain and consider a motion to vacate an order in probate, where his refusal is based solely on the ground of want of jurisdiction as a matter of law and not upon the evidence or a question of fact and is not reviewable on appeal.[92]

The settlement of an administrator after confirmation may be surcharged and falsified in chancery,[93] and equity may set aside a decree procured by fraud.[94] It will not, however, set aside a decree from which no appeal was taken.[95]

§ 16. Appeals in probate proceedings.[96]—The jurisdiction of the appellate court is fixed by the statutes of the various states.[97]

Appeals are generally allowed from all final orders or decrees of the court having jurisdiction of probate matters,[98] and may be taken by anyone having an inter-

92. Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, relating to mandamus. Order setting apart homestead. Right to writ held not barred by laches. Cahill v. Superior Court [Cal.] 78 P. 467.

93. Bonner v. Gorman, 71 Ark. 480, 77 S. W. 602. Rule does not apply to the correction of alleged errors on the part of the probate court. Such errors, however gross, will be regarded as mere errors of judgment to be corrected by appeal or other direct proceedings. Bonner v. Gorman, 71 Ark. 480, 77 S. W. 602.

94. Decree settling final account. Not deprived of this right by B. & C. Comp. § 911, giving county court in first instance, exclusive jurisdiction to conduct and settle accounts of administrators (Froebrich v. Lane [Or.] 76 P. 351), nor by Id. § 103, providing for relief from such judgments by courts rendering them, where such remedy has not been invoked (Id.). Evidence held to show fraud in procuring decree in regard to compensation therein allowed administrator. Id. That suit was not commenced until more than eight months after entry of decree held not such laches as to bar plaintiff. Id. Where the decree approves and settles the account it is a final adjudication so as to give equity power to relieve against it, though distribution has not been made or the administrator discharged. Id.

95. Plaintiff not having appealed from the judgment in suit to recover distributive share in hands of executor cannot maintain suit in equity to set it aside. Such attack indirect. Judgment in suit to recover distributive share. Le Mesnager v. Variel [Cal.] 77 P. 988.

96. For matters relating to appeals from orders admitting or refusing to admit the will to probate or in actions to contest or set aside the will and the like, see Wills, § 4 H, 2 Curr. L. 2102.

97. In Kentucky, the court of appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment allowing a claim of less than $200. The fact that the judgment is for the settlement of the estate and involves claims aggregating more than that amount is immaterial. No distribution of funds ordered. Cox v. Higginbotham's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1057, 76 S. W. 1079.

In Louisiana, where it is made to appear that the dative executor will be called upon to settle a large succession, the amount carried on his final account from which an appeal is taken will not control in determining the jurisdiction of the appellate court. Such amount less than that required to give jurisdiction, but question as to validity of appointment of dative executor involved. Succession of Dauphin, 112 La. 103, 36 So. 941.

In Texas, the supreme court has jurisdiction of an appeal from the court of civil appeals in a contest over a claim against a decedent's estate, it being a probate matter [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 940, 946, subd. 1]. Charbonneau v. Bouvet [Tex.] 82 S. W. 460.

In Virginia, it is held that a decree against a distributee or devisee for his share of a claim is substantially a decree against the estate, and an appeal will lie therefrom if the aggregate amount exceeds the jurisdictional sum. Smith v. Moore [Va.] 46 S. E. 326.

98. Orders and decrees held appealable: Order appointing an administrator. Ex parte Small [S. C.] 48 S. E. 40. Order denying the right of administration to the next of kin on ground of unsuitableness. Schumacher v. McCallip, 69 Ohio St. 500, 69 N. E. 986. Order denying the right to file a claim [Neb. Comp. St. 1901, c. 20, § 42]. Ribble v. Furmin [Neb.] 98 N. W. 420. Order allowing or disallowing a claim [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2091]. Hardcastle's Estate v. Archer [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 368. Decree denying petition to sell realty to pay debts, entered after contest involving a construction of the will. In re Barker's Estate, 33 Wash. 79, 73 P. 796. Final judgment in proceedings to sell realty to pay debts is reviewable on error [Colo. Const. art. 6, § 23; Mills' Ann. St. § 1091]. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Colo.] 76 P. 799. Order awarding counsel fees to former representative and directing their payment out of the estate. In re Currier's Estate [Colo. App.] 74 P. 340. The allowance of attorney's fees is subject to review. Callender's Adm'r v. Callender [Ky.] 82 S. W. 372. Order, decision or decree allowing and settling a final account of an administrator. Nev. Comp. Laws 1900, § 3041. Document held to be such decision and decree. Notice of appeal held sufficient. Bowman v. Bowman [Nev.] 76 P. 634. The denial of a motion to refer in an action against an administrator for an accounting, on the ground that the answer was a sufficient plea in bar when in fact it was not. Involves a substantial right. Jones v. Sugg [N. C.] 48 S. E. 575. In New York, the surrogate's decision on referee's report in proceedings on accounting is the first binding decree and the only one from est in the estate,[99] who is aggrieved thereby.[1] One is not aggrieved by the decree unless he is thereby concluded from asserting his claims of personal or property rights in any proper court.[2] A person's representative has the same right to appeal as he himself would have had.[3] In Minnesota, the objection that a party appealing as a creditor from an order of the probate court allowing an administrator's account was not a creditor of the estate cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court.[4] The appeal need not be taken in the name of the executor or administrator.[5] A distributee consenting to the allowance of an account cannot thereafter appeal from its allowance because of alleged errors therein.[6] Where the probate court allows a portion and disallows the balance of a claim single in which an appeal may be taken. In re Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387, 69 N. E. 732. In Minnesota, an order of the probate court discharging an order directing the executrix to show cause why the testator's homestead should not be sold to pay debts can be reviewed by appeal only, and not upon certiorari. Is order refusing to direct sale of real estate within meaning of Gen. St. 1894, § 4665, subd. 3. In re Wilson's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 647.

99. Husband having no interest in wife's estate on account of antenuptial agreement cannot appeal from order allowing administrator's account. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850.

1. Conn. Gen. St. 1902, § 406. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850. Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 278, gives right to any heir, devisee, legatee, creditor or other person having an interest in the estate. Hammers v. Sanders [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 16. Me. Rev. St. c. 65, § 28. Appeal of Stilphen [Me.] 58 A. 916. [Advance sheets.] Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 936. In re Heaton's Estate, 139 Cal. xix, 73 P. 185. Hill's Ann. Laws Or. 1892, § 535. In re Smith's Estate, 43 Or. 595, 75 P. 133.

The sole heir of decedent, though a minor, is a person aggrieved by an order allowing an administrator's account. The law authorizing minors to appeal within 12 months after reaching majority does not prevent them from doing so by next friend or guardian before that time. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850.

The assignee of an heir's interest in the estate may appeal from an order of the probate court allowing a claim against the estate, where the personalty is less than the debts (Hammers v. Sanders [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 16), but not from decree ordering distribution of funds in the hands of the administrator (Id.). Distribution must be made to heirs as though no assignment existed. Appeal of Stilphen [Me.] 58 A. 916 [Advance sheets].

Devisees may appeal from order setting aside homestead for use of widow pending administration. In re Levy's Estate, 141 Cal. 646, 75 P. 301.

Distributees under husband's will, though not parties to the record, may appeal from a judgment of replevin in favor of an administrator of a widow against the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of her husband. Hinn v. Gersten [Wis.] 99 N. W. 338.

Persons claiming an interest in the property of decedent ordered sold for the payment of debts are parties aggrieved. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown [Colo.] 76 P. 799.

Representatives held to have a right to appeal: From order setting aside a homestead for the use of the widow pending administration. In re Levy's Estate, 141 Cal. 646, 75 P. 301. Special administrator from an order settling his accounts and directing him to pay over the balance in his hands to his successor. Is aggrieved if order erroneous, and hence a hearing on the merits is necessary to determine whether he is or not. Court will not decide whether judgment is erroneous on motion to dismiss. In re Heaton's Estate, 139 Cal. xix, 73 P. 185. From order denying him a license to sell realty to pay a claim which he has allowed. Represente creditors. In re Smith's Estate, 43 Or. 595, 75 P. 133. An administrator is a party aggrieved by proceedings prejudicial to the interests of the heirs of the deceased within the meaning of the appeal statutes [Wis. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 4031, 4035]. McKenney v. Minahan, 119 Wis. 651, 97 N. W. 489.

Representatives held not to have right to appeal: From a decree ordering a distribution of funds in his hands. Appeal of Stilphen [Me.] 58 A. 916 [Advance sheets]. Administratrix from an order denying her motion to set aside the whole estate to her as widow. Appeal dismissed in individual capacity for want of bond and in representative capacity because not aggrieved. Order of benefit to estate and so to her as administratrix. In re Wood's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 481. On account of creditors whose claims have been rejected in whole or in part. Order settling accounts binding on creditors who do not appeal. Succession of Henderson [La.] 36 So. 904. Under laws of Indian Territory (Mansf. Dig. § 1267; Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 769), giving right to appeal to either party, the executor may appeal from an order modifying his report and directing a distribution in a manner contended by him to be contrary to the will. In re Overton's Estate [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 766.

2. Appeal of Stilphen [Me.] 58 A. 916 [Advance sheets].

3. Heir's administrator. Hammers v. Sanders [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 16.

4. No objection in district court. Appeal of McAlpine [Minn.] 100 N. W. 233.

5. In Illinois, any person other than the administrator appealing from an order of the probate court may do so in his own name. Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 F. 638.

6. A distributee attaching to administrator's account a formal statement under seal declaring that he has examined it and praying that it be confirmed. In re Sherwood's Estate, 206 Pa. 465, 56 A. 20.

character, though consisting of several items, an appeal must be taken from the decision of the court on the claim as originally presented.[7] The statutes providing the manner in which an appeal shall be taken must be complied with.[8] The name of the representative of the estate must be set out in the assignment of errors.[9] An assignment of error, on an appeal from a decree on final accounting, complaining because the executor was held liable for the value of a bond, is immaterial where such bond was accounted for after the appeal was taken.[10] By statute in some states, executors and administrators are not required to give bond on appeals or writs of error taken by them in their fiduciary capacity.[11]

Neither the county court nor the judge thereof is a necessary or proper party to a proceeding to review its action in the matter of the settlement of the estate.[12] Notice of appeal from an order allowing an account need not be served on persons not appearing and taking part in the proceedings, though interested in the estate.[13] In Louisiana, interested creditors are necessary parties to an appeal from a judgment homologating the executor's accounts taken by petition and citation out of term time.[14] In that state in probate proceedings, the evidence must be taken down in writing and a list made of all documentary evidence offered for use on appeal.[15]

It is not competent for a party to enlarge or renew the statutory period for appeal from a decree of distribution by a petition for a bill of review on grounds that were available and should have been presented at the original hearing.[16]

It is not the province of a court of probate to decide whether an appeal ought to be taken from its own decrees,[17] or whether the circumstances of a particular case are such as to permit a minor to prosecute it by next friend instead of by guardian, nor whether such next friend was a suitable person to act, but such questions are for the consideration of the superior court to which the process of appeal is returnable.[18] The proper method of obtaining a review of an order of the probate court disallowing an appeal is by application for a writ of mandamus.[19]

In those states where an appeal lies to a court of general jurisdiction, the issues are usually tried de novo,[20] and final judgment entered in the latter court.[21]

7. Appeal from that part disallowing a portion is defective and does not confer jurisdiction on district court. In re Stellmacher's Estate [Minn.] 100 N. W. 473.

8. Appeal dismissed for failure to file appeal bond as required by Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, §§ 2609, 2610, relating to probate appeals. Appeal from judgment refusing to allow claim will not lie under general appeal statutes. Dallam v. Stockwell's Estate [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 911.

9. Assignment against estate of S. without naming representative, held insufficient under Indiana appellate court, rule 6 (27 N. E. iv). Dallam v. Stockwell's Estate (Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 911.

10. Owens v. Owens' Estate [Miss.] 37 So. 149.

11. Administrator's interest personal, and hence required to give bond on appeal from order of probate court dismissing proceedings for administration as void for want of jurisdiction, where there were no creditors [Tex. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2257, 1408]. Holman v. Klatt [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 1088.

12. Farrow v. Nevin, 44 Or. 496, 75 P. 711.

13. Though dividend ordered to be paid to them. In re McDougald's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 443; In re Scott's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 446.

14. Where they are not cited, appeal will be dismissed. Succession of Le Sage, 112 La. 857, 36 So. 757.

15. If such evidence is absent from the transcript on appeal and there was an agreement of counsel as to what should be included in the transcript, it will be presumed that it was in existence and was left out in pursuance to such agreement [Code Prac. art. 1042]. Succession of Wegmann, 110 La. 930, 34 So. 878.

16. In re Sherwood's Estate, 206 Pa. 465, 56 A. 20.

17. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850.

18. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850. The fact that a minor, who appeals by next friend, has a guardian, is only pleadable in abatement in the superior court and is not sufficient reason for refusing to allow such appeal. Id.

19. Allowance may be compelled if it appears that a party aggrieved has properly requested it within the statutory time and has given bond. Williams v. Cleaveland, 76 Conn. 426, 56 A. 850.

20. In Michigan, disputed questions of fact on appeal must, if either party so asks, be tried by a jury. Nowland v. Rice's Estate [Mich.] 101 N. W. 214.

In Tennessee, on appeal to circuit court is

In other states, an order or decree of the probate court is not vacated by an appeal, but is simply suspended, and upon its affirmance takes effect and operates as a decree of that court, and any intermediate action which has been taken thereunder is valid.[22] An order appointing a receiver to take charge of the estate on petition of the beneficiaries is not superseded by an appeal.[23]

In North Carolina, a referee's findings of fact, on the final accounting by an executor adopted by the court, are conclusive on appeal.[24] In New York, the appellate court may supply essential findings of fact omitted from the referee's report and the surrogate's decree based thereon.[25] In the latter state, a surrogate's decree will not be reversed for errors in the rejection of evidence unless it appears to the appellate court that the exceptant was necessarily prejudiced thereby.[26] In Louisiana, a devolutive and not a suspensive appeal lies from a judgment refusing to appoint an administrator.[27] The allowance of costs to a representative on appeal from an order of the probate court settling his accounts is a matter within the discretion of the superior court.[28]

§ 17. Rights and liabilities between beneficiaries of estate.[29] *A. action to set aside letters of administration. Fitzgerald v. Smith [Tenn.] 78 S. W. 1050.

In Rhode Island, on appeal to court of common pleas from order removing executor. Fitts v. Probate Court of East Greenwich [R. I.] 68 A. 801. The appellate court may ignore any want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the papers, if the lower court in fact had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and may enter such decree as justice may require. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 248, § 7. Should consider evidence as well as verdict. Where jury found that deceased left property in state, but the evidence established the fact that it was located in certain city, which was necessary to give lower court jurisdiction, the decree should so state, and the decree of the lower court denying jurisdiction should be reversed. Williams v. Ripley [R. I.] 56 A. 777.

In Missouri, an appeal from an order or judgment of the probate court directing a distribution is tried de novo in the circuit court without regard to any error or defect in the previous proceedings [Rev. St. 1899, § 285]. Coulter v. Lyda, 102 Mo. App. 401, 76 S. W. 720.

In Minnesota, a probate case on appeal is to be tried and determined on the same principles as would govern in the probate court itself. In re Pope's Estate [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1046.

In New Jersey, on an appeal from a decree of the orphans' court refusing to open an executor's accounts on the ground of mistake, the prerogative court should review both questions of law and of fact. In re Morris' Estate [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 161.

21. In Nebraska, the district court should finally settle all matters brought to it on appeal or error from the county court. Ribble v. Furmin [Neb.] 98 N. W. 420. On appeal from an order refusing to permit the filing of a claim, the district court acquires jurisdiction of the whole matter and should finally determine the validity of the claim in the same manner as though the order had been one disallowing the claim upon hearing before the county court.. Not proper to direct hearing in lower court. Id.

22. Massachusetts: Such intermediate action must, however, be such as is allowed by law at the time it is taken as action taken prior to the appeal. Sale could not be made under decree of probate court where exceptions were allowed to decision of single justice affirming it until expiration of time for filing exceptions or determination of question of law raised thereby. License to sell inoperative in meantime. Tyndale v. Stanwood [Mass.] 71 N. E. 83.

In Maine, an appeal from a decree of distribution stays it pending such appeal. Action cannot be maintained to recover distributive share thereunder until appeal is decided. Drew v. Provost, 98 Me. 422, 57 A. 587.

31. An heir who enters into an agreement with the other heirs in pursuance of

All sums received by an heir during the course of administration over and above the amount to which he was entitled should be treated as at interest against him,[34] and sums paid to legatees by the executor out of the funds of the estate before distribution bear interest from the date of payment until distribution.[35] As between the heirs insurance should be apportioned so that each shall pay the reasonable cost of protecting his insurable interest in the property.[36]

A widow occupying a flat as a homestead should account to the heirs for the rents of the rest of the building.[37]

In Louisiana heirs of decedent's first wife suing a representative and universal legatee after his discharge to recover property alleged to belong to them and to have been converted by him cannot, after the evidence has been closed, file a supplemental petition asking that the succession be reopened and that a dative temporary successor be appointed to whom defendant shall be compelled to account.[38]

38. Where certain heirs of decedent's first wife sue the universal legatee, ten years after she has been discharged as executrix and sent into possession, to recover for their own benefit certain property alleged to have belonged to the first community and to have been fraudulently abstracted by her and converted to her own use, on the theory that the matter can be litigated directly between them, they cannot, after the evidence has been closed, file a supplemental petition asking that the judgment in the succession proceedings be annulled and the succession reopened and a dative temporary successor be appointed to whom defendant shall be compelled to account. Would be ingrafting new suit on pending one. Nor can such new suit be ingrafted by intervention of alleged heirs of forced heir of deceased. Succession of Dauphin, 112 La. 103, 36 So. 287; Id. 40. Owsley v. Owsley, 25 Ky. L. R. 1194, 77 S. W. 394. It is proper to dismiss a bill claiming that defendant should be charged as an advancement with a house conveyed to his wife by decedent, it appearing that she had only a life estate therein and was dead. Justis v. Justis [Md.] 57 A. 23. An irrevocable gift by a parent to a child of the whole or a part of what it is supposed he will be entitled to on the death of the parent, who afterwards dies intestate. Conveyance of farm to son in consideration of his giving up his business and making his home therson held not an advancement. In re Allen's Estate, 207 Pa. 325, 56 A. 928. Son is not incompetent to testify as to matters occurring in father's lifetime in regard to such transaction. Id. An irrevocable gift by a parent in his lifetime to his child on account of such child's share of the estate after the parent is dead. Where daughter conveyed land to father upon his agreement on its sale by him to pay her a certain sum "as an advancement," held that she could recover the money as a debt and that the mere fact that he designated it an advancement did not make it such. Schweitzer v. Schweitzer [Ky.] 82 S. W. 625. An advantage gained by an heir by collusion with his father can be charged against him as an advancement only in the distribution of any surplus of his father's or mother's undevised estate. The fact that one of the tenants in remainder purchased the land at a judicial sale for $2,000 less than its real value, under a collusive agreement with one of the life tenants, did not authorize such sum to be charged against him as an advancement from the surplus of the undevised estate of the life tenant. Francis v. Million [Ky.] 80 S. W. 486. An heir using land of his father must account for the rental value thereof as an advancement. Garrott v. Rives, 26 Ky. L. R. 2166, 80 S. W. 519. Where writing executed by son acknowledged that he owed father a certain sum which might be collected by his father's representative after his death either by treating it as a loan or

Contracts whereby, for a sufficient consideration, an heir relinquishes any further share in his ancestor's estate to which he may be entitled are, if otherwise valid, enforceable in equity.[41] Strictly speaking, advancements are confined to cases of intestacy,[42] but they may exist, though subsequently a will is made by the parent.[43] In such case the will governs in determining whether they are to be so regarded.[44]

Whether a gift shall be regarded as an advancement or not depends upon the intention of the donor,[45] which may be ascertained by parol evidence of his declarations made at the time,[46] or of the donee's admissions afterwards,[47] or by proof of facts and circumstances from which the facts may be inferred.[48] The question is one of fact.[49] Gifts made as advancements or otherwise cannot thereafter be treated by the donor as debts or payments on his liabilities to the donees.[50]

Statutes in some states provide that no gift or grant shall be deemed an advancement, unless it is stated therein that it is so made, or unless it is charged in writing by the intestate as such, or acknowledged in writing as such by the party to whom it is made.[51] In some states advancements must be estimated according to the value of the property when given.[52]

They will be regarded as part of the assets of the estate for the purpose of adjusting the rights of devisees in relation thereto.[53] The heirs may waive the right to have one of their number charged with advancements.[54]

as an advancement to be deducted from his share of the estate, the son is liable for interest thereon only from the time when the representatives elect which remedy they will pursue. Cole v. Andrews, 176 N. Y. 374, 68 N. E. 641.

44. Money given children and evidenced by notes, though intended as advancements when paid, held not to be treated as such in view of terms of subsequent will. In re McKibbin's Estate, 201 Pa. 1, 56 A. 62. Where a deed to a child would operate to give him a greater share of the estate than that given by the grantor's will, executed previously, in which he gave all his children an equal share in the estate, the burden was on such child to show that the grantor wished such deed to operate in addition to the share given him by the will. Evidence insufficient to show such fact. Krause v. Krause [N. J. Eq.] 55 A. 1095. See Wills, § 5D, 4, 2 Curr. L. 2131.

In Wisconsin, under a similar statute (Rev. St. 1898, § 3959), it is held that the delivery of property must be given the character of an advancement when made, and that a declaration in a will that certain gifts previously made shall be deemed advancements is insufficient. Ludington v. Patton [Wis.] 99 N. W. 614.

Under the Illinois statute (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 39, § 7), items in an account book merely charging children with money paid them from time to time, and ordinary deed to property held not to show that the sums paid and land conveyed were advancements. No essential or material part of the proof can be by parol. Young v. Young, 204 Ill. 430, 68 N. E 532.

52. Intention does not control, the object of the statute being to secure equity in the distribution [Ky. St. 1903, § 1407]. Garrott v. Rives, 25 Ky. L. R. 2165, 80 S. W. 519.

53. Schick v. Whitcomb [Neb.] 94 N. W. 1023.

54. Instrument signed by other heirs of intestate in consideration of plaintiff joining in project for improvement of the property held waiver of their right on subsequent partition of the property. Hoerle v. Hoerle, 94 App. Div. 615, 87 N. Y. S. 1007.

The presumption is that a deed from husband to wife is a gift or advancement, when the consideration therefor is called in question.[55]

The district court may, in proper cases, adjust advancements in a suit for the partition of land.[56]

The doctrine of hotchpot is based upon the principle of doing equal justice to all the decedent's children.[57] There is a conflict of authority as to whether advancements should be brought into hotchpot notwithstanding the fact that some of those receiving them have executed releases of all interest in the inheritance.[58]

§ 18. Rights and liabilities between beneficiaries and third persons.[59]—Persons dealing with representatives about estate property,[60] or purchasers from them,[61] bear the same liability towards beneficiaries as in other trusts,[62] and are protected if bona fide and without notice.[63]

Heirs cannot treat as an absolute nullity a notarial act to which they were parties, and which on its face shows that they received the consideration for the sale of their interest in the succession to the purchaser named in the deed.[64] They cannot have the sale set aside without offering to return the same.[65]

One cannot, in right of a family settlement, recover specific property of a decedent without showing that it came to his share.[66]

Persons who without authority collect from an administrator the distributive share of an heir thereby become trustees of a resulting trust in his favor.[67] One who, after the death of the mortgagor, without authority, pays the balance due on the mortgage debt, cannot recover the sum so paid from his estate.[68] A mortgagee of a devisee's interest may satisfy his claim out of the proceeds of an unnecessary sale of the property, to pay a family allowance, made for the purpose of defrauding him.[69]

§ 1. General Principles (1327).
§ 2. Kinds of Estoppel (1327).
§ 3. By Deed (1328).
§ 4. In Pais (1329).
§ 5. Extent (1333).

Scope of title.—Many common applications of the doctrine of estoppel are so closely related to other subject-matters that it is deemed best to treat them elsewhere; the more important being estoppel to claim that a corporation acted ultra vires, or to aver want of authority in a corporate officer or agent,[72] to deny partnership,[73] to question the existence or scope of an agent's authority,[74] and the estoppel of a tenant to dispute his landlord's title.[75]

§ 1. General principles.—Estoppels are not favored by the law.[76] An estoppel operates against a person only in the capacity in which the act was committed.[77] One being estopped to deny a certain fact, he is estopped to urge anything which would negative such denial.[78] Estoppel against an estoppel sets the matter at large.[79] One cannot estop himself from claiming an exemption resting in public policy.[80]

§ 2. Kinds of estoppel. By record.[81]—Estoppel by judgment is treated elsewhere,[82] and the conclusiveness of judicial and official records, being more a question of evidence than of estoppel, is excluded.[83] One may become estopped by distributed until the youngest child reached his majority, and turned the proceeds over to the executrix for the support of the family. The mortgagee foreclosed and bid in the son's interest. Thereafter, by fraudulent representations that the money received by her had been insufficient to support the family and by concealing the facts as to such loan, and in pursuance of an intention on her part to defraud the mortgagee, the executrix procured an order for the sale of all decedent's property for the payment of a family allowance. Held that the mortgagee could reach the proceeds of such sale, and that limitations did not begin to run against him until such sale. Savings Bank of Santa Rosa v. Schell, 142 Cal. 505, 76 P. 250.

70. Where heirs agreed in writing to the appointment of two attorneys to carry on certain litigation for the estate, they to receive 25% of the amount recovered, and, upon one of them declining to act, a third, who did not know of the agreement, was employed, with the knowledge of the administrator, to take his place, held that the latter was entitled to half the fee. 78. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Ettenheimer [Neb.] 99 N. W. 652.

79. One who executes a bond under circumstances that would estop him to assert its invalidity for want of consideration cannot, in an action upon the bond, avoid liability on the ground that plaintiff is estopped to assert that there was any consideration for the bond. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Ettenheimer [Neb.] 99 N. W. 652. Purchasers of land retaining part of the purchase price on the assumption that the acreage stated in the deed might be incorrect are estopped to resist an action for balance due on the price because of an overplus of land. See v. Mallonee [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 557.

80. The fact that one as surety stated in the justification clause that his property was not exempt does not raise such an estoppel. King v. Warren, 42 Misc. 317, 86 N. Y. S. 609. See, however, Dowling & Allgood v. Wood [Iowa] 101 N. W. 113, where the opposite of this rule is announced.

allegations in his pleadings,[84] or by introducing records in evidence,[85] or by admissions in court,[86] to deny the facts thus shown to exist. One cannot generally be estopped by a void proceeding,[87] or by acts of others of which he had no notice,[88] or where no prejudice results.[89]

§ 3. By deed.[90]—The recital of a material fact in a deed[91] is binding and conclusive upon the parties and those claiming under them as privies in blood, in estate, or in law,[92] in all matters involving the property conveyed by such deed,[93] the person claiming the estoppel being a bona fide purchaser who has relied on such recital to his prejudice,[94] and the burden is on him to prove this fact.[95] General recitals, however, do not estop the parties from disputing the statements made in them,[96] nor does this doctrine of estoppel apply where the deed is incomplete.[97] Third persons are not estopped by recitals.[98] One conveying property with a warranty of title,[99] or attempting to convey a particular estate,[1] an after-acquired title

84. One pleading that a tract of land was his homstead is estopped to assert that such land was at the same time the homestead of another. Linn v. Ziegler [Kan.] 75 P. 489.

85. A defendant in a petitory action setting up, as a muniment of title, a government survey, he cannot deny the facts shown by the plat thereof. Hall v. Board of Com'rs of Bossier Levee Dist., 111 La. 913, 35 So. 976.

86. In an action for a balance alleged to be due for goods sold, a waiver by plaintiff of its claim for an amount which defendant claimed as a rebate was not an admission that such amount was due defendant, so as to preclude plaintiff on a subsequent trial from litigating the question. R. E. Dietz Co. v. Miller, Sears & Walling Co., 88 N. Y. S. 322.

87. Property owner held not estopped to question validity of assessment, no notice being given. Pennsylvania Co. v. Cole, 132 F. 668.

88. An owner of land procuring the same to be assessed for taxes, it not being shown that he had any knowledge of the description by which the clerk attempted to describe the land, or that he adopted such description, is not estopped from claiming that a tax deed containing the same description as that by which the land was assessed is void for uncertainty of description. Alleman v. Hammond, 209 Ill. 70, 70 N. E. 661.

89. A husband's statement, in his petition for letters of administration on his wife's estate, that she was the owner of an interest in certain land, does not estop him from thereafter claiming the land as community property. Bollinger v. Wright, 143 Cal. 292, 76 P. 1108.

Defendant held estopped by a deed to claim that a tract of land conveyed did not lie in a certain position with reference to other land as described in the deed. Board of Park Com'rs of Louisville v. Marrett, 25 Ky. L. R. 2081, 80 S. W. 166.

92. Van Winkle v. Van Winkle, 95 App. Div. 605, 89 N. Y. S. 26; Omaha Bridge & Terminal R. Co. v. Whitney [Neb.] 99 N. W. 525. Children of a deceased purchaser of land, not being parties to the grantor's deed to their mother, and not offering the deed in evidence, are not bound by a recital that it was conveyed to their mother at their request. Brown v. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. [Ark.] 81 S. W. 613. See 1 Curr. L. 1131, n. 54.

NOTE. Effect of estoppel by deed: A recital of a fact in a deed is, as against the grantee in such deed and all persons claiming under him through that deed, evidence of the facts recited therein, so as to save the necessity of further proof thereof by the grantor or those who claim under him. Demeyer v. Legg, 18 Barb. [N. Y.] 20; Champlain & St. L. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. [N. Y.] 488; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 40, 13 Am. Rep. 556; 50 Barb. [N. inures to the benefit of the grantee to the extent of the estate sought to be conveyed. But this rule does not apply where the title is taken in a different right[2] or the grantee will not be prejudiced thereby,[3] and, in some states, where the deed is that of a married woman.[4] With some exceptions, a grantee may deny his grantor's title.[5]

§ 4. In pais.[6]—A waiver of rights or an election between rights may of course be manifested by acts constituting an estoppel in pais. They may also be manifested, however, by acts lacking one or more of the elements of an estoppel.[7] Whence it has happened that the term "estoppel" has frequently been loosely applied to acts constituting a waiver or election but lacking in some element of a true estoppel. Election and waiver of rights and remedies is treated under an appropriate title,[8] but some instances of the misuse of the term "estoppel" are collated in the footnote.[9]

A debtor directing his creditors to garnishee his earnings is "estopped," upon their commencing such proceedings, from relying upon Code § 4011 exempting the earnings of a debtor

An equitable estoppel is as available at law as in equity.[10] A conveyance being required by statute, title cannot pass by an estoppel in pais.[11] A mistaken idea as to the law forms no basis for an estoppel in pais.[12] Whether one is estopped by his conduct is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence,[13] though the following elements are essential:

There must be a false representation or concealment of a material fact,[14] though for his personal services from garnishment. Dowling & Allgood v. Wood [Iowa] 101 N. W. 113. For a correct ruling on this question, see King v. Warren, 42 Misc. 317, 86 N. Y. S. 609. W. 329), but one participating in organization of corporation and elected an officer thereof, but severing his connection therewith before the completion of the enterprise, is not estopped from asserting that the corporation is not one de jure. Byronville Creamery Ass'n v. Ivers [Minn.] 100 N. W. 387. Services not being of value to a corporation, and it not accepting them it is ity to so act.[17] Grantor keeping possession of deed where it was accessible is not estopped, by his negligence in so keeping it, to deny delivery to grantee who took it without permission.[18]

The representation or concealment must have been with full knowledge.[19]

The representations must have been relied on. If the person claiming the estoppel had full knowledge of the facts,[20] or equal knowledge with the other party, of all the facts and circumstances leading up to the transaction,[21] there is no estoppel, though negligence may take the place of such knowledge.[22]

The representations must have been made with intent that they be acted on,[23] or with knowledge that they would be acted on,[24] though this is not necessary if the act, in the absence of an estoppel, would amount to constructive fraud.[25]

They must have been acted on to the prejudice of the party misled[26] from the denying that property purchased during his marriage belongs to his wife, yet his children are entirely relieved from such estoppel by Act No. 5, p. 12 of 1884. Westmore v. Harz [La.] 35 So. 578.

37. See 1 Curr. L. 1136.

38. The state can only be estopped from asserting her right to her own property by legislative enactment or resolution. State v. Paxson & Cannon, 119 Ga. 730, 46 S. E. 872. A city is not estopped, by failure to object to the construction of expensive works in a river by a riparian owner, to deny such owner's right to continue to occupy the same. City of Mobile v. Sullivan Timber Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 298. Held not to operate, no valuable improvements having been made. Markham v. City of Anamosa, 122 Iowa, 689, 98 N. W. 493.

39. City estopped to declare forfeiture of franchise of gas company, the latter having made large expenditures, the municipality acquiescing therein. Columbus v. Federal Gas Co., 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 277. See 1 Curr. L. 1136, n. 85.

40. Ex parte Heyman [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 349. Unlawfully leased highway to individual for private use. Lowery v. City of Pekin, 210 Ill. 575, 71 N. E. 626.

Nisbet, 119 Ga. 316, 46 S. E. 444; Continental Ins. Co. v. Clark [Iowa] 100 N. W. 524; Hilton v. Colvin, 25 Ky. L. R. 1808, 78 S. W. 890; Golden v. Tyer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 143; Thomas v. Blair, 111 La. 678, 35 So. 811. See 1 Curr. L. 1136, n. 89.

NOTE. Pleading an estoppel: The rule requiring an estoppel to be pleaded does not apply in cases where there has been no opportunity given to plead it. In such cases it is admissible in evidence with the same conclusive effect as if it had been pleaded. Clink v. Thurston, 47 Cal. 21; Campbell v. Goodall, 8 Ill. App. 276; Phillips v. Blair, 38 Iowa, 649; Towne v. Sparks, 23 Neb. 142; Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. [N. Y.] 9, 22 Am. Dec. 603; Guest v. Guest, 74 Tex. 664; Isaacs v. Clark, 12 Vt. 692, 36 Am. Dec. 372; Carroll County v. Collier, 22 Grat. [Va.] 302; Davis v. Thomas, 5 Leigh [Va.] 1; Gans v. St. Paul, F. & M. Ins. Co., 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535.

A plea of estoppel must have a formal commencement and conclusion, to mark its special character and quality, and to distinguish it from an ordinary plea in bar. City of E. St. Louis v. Flannigen, 34 Ill. App. 596; Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573; 2 Herman, Estoppel, § 1275.—From note to Tyler v. Hall [Mo.] 27 Am. St. Rep. 337, 344.

43. A contract being relied on, its terms should be fully set forth. Porter v. Armstrong, 134 N. C. 447, 46 S. E. 997. A judgment being relied on the suit in which it was rendered should be shown. Id. Where representations were not pleaded, evidence thereof held incompetent. Hilton v. Colvin, 25 Ky. L. R. 1808, 78 S. W. 890. One claiming an estoppel by reason of a recital in a deed must show that he is a bona fide purchaser and did some act in reliance on such recital. Grant v. McCarty, 117 Ga. 188, 43 S. E. 401. The question of estoppel to impeach a decree of distribution cannot arise on the face of the complaint where the proceedings are set out merely to show the source of defendant's claim, and the complaint does not allege that plaintiffs took under the decree, but alleges its invalidity, and that it was made without their knowledge or consent. Alcorn v. Brandeman [Cal.] 78 P. 343.

44. That it need not. Perry Bros. v. Farrimond [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 674. That it must. Is not available under a general denial. Webb v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 162 Ind. 616, 69 N. E. 1006.

45. Anderson v. New York Life Ins. Co., 34 Wash. 616, 76 P. 109. In equity after trial. Carlyle v. Sloan, 44 Or. 357, 75 P. 217. In such case question may be raised by demurrer. Stone v. Cook, 179 Mo. 534, 78 S. W. 801.

46. Right to amend rests in clerk. Porter v. Armstrong, 134 N. C. 447, 46 S. E. 997.

Scope of article.—This article treats specifically of the competency of evidence; the competency of witnesses and the rules governing their examination being entirely excluded,[1] and questions of relevancy and sufficiency of evidence, except so far as they illustrate some general rule, being excluded to titles dealing with the particular subject or issue to which the evidence is addressed. Evidence in criminal prosecutions is also treated elsewhere,[2] though occasional holdings of undoubted general application have been included.

§ 1. Necessity and duty of adducing evidence. A. Judicial notice.[3]—Courts take judicial notice of their own records,[4] so far as they appertain to the case in hand,[5] and of signatures to documents in such records, other than original process.[6] An appellate court will take judicial notice of the reversal, pending the appeal, of another judgment on which the decree of the lower court is based.[7] In general, an appellate court will notice judicially whatever the court of original jurisdiction is bound to notice judicially.[8]

Judicial notice is taken of the branches of the government,[9] of their rules and regulations,[10] and of the constitutional and statutory methods of their administration,[11] of public statutes, state[12] and Federal,[13] but not, generally, of special acts[14] or city ordinances.[15] Foreign laws cannot be judicially noticed,[16]

5. McNish v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 176; Pelz v. Bollinger [Mo.] 79 S. W. 146. But they will not take notice, in deciding one case, of the record of another and distinct case, unless the latter is made a part of the record of the case under consideration. McNish v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 176.

6. Genuineness of defendant's signature judicially noticed on notice of appeal, but not on original process by which he is brought into court. Tischner v. Rutledge [Wash.] 77 P. 388.

7. On plea of res judicata. Hennessy v. Tacoma Smelting & Refining Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 40.

10. Of the executive branch of the government; regulations regarding Indian affairs. Zevely v. Weimer [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 941.

11. Methods of raising revenue, but not of the amount raised and received. Stein v. Morrison [Idaho] 75 P. 246.

12. Statutory obligations. Cronan v. Woburn, 185 Mass. 91, 70 N. E. 38. Act 1904, c. 66, empowering a railway to construct bridges in which the state is interested, and authorizing the condemnation of land is so far a public act that the court should take judicial notice of it. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co. [Md.] 58 A. 34. Courts take judicial notice of statutes, though local in nature, such as an act preventing stock from running at large in a certain county. Davis v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 454. In an action involving the title to realty, the court took judicial notice of colonial and earlier laws bearing on the title. Townsend v. Trustees of Freeholders & Commonalty of Brookhaven, 97 App. Div. 316, 89 N. Y. S. 982. Courts cannot judicially know that a general law for working public roads has been put in operation by vote in a certain county. State v. Burkett [Miss.] 36 So. 689.

13. Metropolitan Stock Exch. v. Lydonville Nat. Bank [Vt.] 57 A. 101. Of the "Safety Appliance Act" of Congress. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Flippo, 138 Ala. 487, 35 So. 457; Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg [Ala.] 37 So. 395. Of statutes by which the common law doctrine of fellow servants is in force in Indian territory. Overton v. McCabe [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 861.

14. Railway charter. Jersey City v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 57 A. 445. Private statutes and city ordinances must be pleaded. Garlich v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 837.

Contra: The courts will take judicial notice of a special legislative act authorizing a railroad company to purchase a railroad and to assume the latter's liabilities. In-nor will the courts of one state judicially notice the laws of another state.[17] Federal courts take judicial notice of treaties and of their effect.[18]

State courts take judicial notice of the counties of the state and their boundaries[19] and location,[20] of the county in which a city of the state is located,[21] and of the streets of a city, their relation and direction.[22]

All courts take judicial notice of facts of common knowledge,[23] of matters of history,[24] and of coincidence of days of the week and of the month.[25]

ternational & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 82.

15. O'Brien v. Woburn, 184 Mass. 598, 69 N. E. 350; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 582. Nor of existing provisions of the New York health department (Department of Health of New York v. City Real Property Investing Co., 86 N. Y. S. 18), while state courts of general jurisdiction do not take judicial notice of city ordinances (Boston v. Abraham, 91 App. Div. 417, 86 N. Y. S. 863). Municipal courts, and circuit courts in trying cases de novo on appeal from the former, will take judicial notice of city ordinances, and such journals and records of a common council as affect their validity, meaning and construction, in like manner and for like purposes, as state courts judicially notice state public statutes and records of the state lawmaking body. City of Portland v. Yick, 44 Or. 439, 75 P. 706.

16. British admiralty law was not considered by the court because it was neither pleaded nor proven. The Matterhorn [C. C. A.] 128 F. 863. Probably judicial notice should be taken of the historical fact that the civil law is the basis of Mexican jurisprudence; but such notice should not include the details of the system. Banco De Sonora v. Banker's Mut. Casualty Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 532.

17. Equitable Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. King [Fla.] 37 So. 181; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 642. Laws of another state must be pleaded and proven. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sullivan's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 854, 76 S. W. 525.

18. Courts of the United States take judicial notice that under the treaty of Paris, signed December 10, 1898, the Philippine Islands became a part of our territory; that at that time the inhabitants were in a state of insurrection against our government; and that the insurrection had not ended in the island of Mindanao in 1902. La Rue v. Kansas Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Kan.] 75 P. 494.

19. As fixed by statute and the public surveys. Zimmerman v. Brooks, 25 Ky. L. R. 2284, 80 S. W. 443.

20. The district and supreme courts of Oklahoma will take judicial notice that a given county is not within the free-range district, under the cattle laws. Lewis v. Rasp [Okl.] 76 P. 142.

21. Baily v. Birkhofer, 123 Iowa, 59, 98 N. W. 594.

22. Stealy v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 400, 78 S. W. 599. But not of the names of streets or public places in towns or cities of the state (Baily v. Birkhofer, 123 Iowa, 59, 98 N. W. 594), nor that a street outside the city is within a certain distance of the city limits (Stealy v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 400, 78 S. W. 599).

23. The existence of a rule of carriers that persons without tickets, and who will not or cannot pay fare, must be ejected from trains. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Scott [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 642. That comparatively few travelers take advantage of special privileges allowed on unlimited and denied on limited tickets. Edson v. Southern Pac. R. Co. [Cal.] 77 P. 894. That no spark arrester can be so constructed that some sparks will not escape. White v. New York, etc., R. Co., 90 App. Div. 356, 85 N. Y. S. 497. That double, swinging storm doors of ordinary construction are not dangerous appliances when used with due care. Dolan v. Callender, McAuslan & Troup Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 655. That the manufacture of clothing in improperly ventilated, unsanitary and overcrowded apartments is likely to promote or engender disease. State v. Hyman [Md.] 57 A. 6. That the great grain fields of this country lie west of the Hudson river. Soper v. Tyler [Conn.] 58 A. 699. That the usual way of cancelling or erasing a written word is by drawing a line through it. Samberg v. American Exp. Co. [Mich.] 99 N. W. 879. That land is never assessed for taxation at its real cash market value. Wray v. Knoxville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 471. That there is no generally recognized way of determining whether oil exists under certain lands other than by putting down wells. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Littler, 162 Ind. 320, 70 N. E. 363. That gas no longer exists in a territory formerly controlled by a gas company in quantities sufficient to furnish fuel for heating purposes to inhabitants of Indianapolis. State v. Indianapolis Gas Co. [Ind.] 71 N. E. 139. Judicial notice is taken of a custom or usage so general and notorious as to be a matter of common and general information. State v. Metcalf [S. D.] 100 N. W. 923. The nature of "okolihoa" being so well known that the supreme court of Hawaii spoke of it as "a well known, spirituous liquor, of great strength, and very intoxicating," proof of the nature of the liquor was unnecessary. The Kawailani [C. C. A.] 128 F. 879.

24. The customs and usages governing the creation and existence of organized political parties in this country. State v. Metcalf [S. D.] 100 N. W. 923. The court will take judicial notice of the historical fact that on a certain day the governor of the state ordered out a military force to maintain order in a certain city and issued a proclamation ordering mobs to disperse. Bosworth v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 982. Courts know, as a matter of history, that the Indians embraced in the different tribes or nations, originally occupied the territory now included within the United States and territories. Zevely v. Weimer [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 941.

25. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Butler Pass. R. Co., 207 Pa. 406, 56 A. 959.

(§ 1) B. Presumptions and burden of proof.[26]—The only presumptions of fact recognized in law are immediate inferences from facts proved.[27] A party in whose favor a presumption arises is entitled to its benefit whether the facts upon which it depends were elicited by himself or the adverse party.[28] Among the inferences or logical deductions commonly recognized are the presumptions that a state of facts, or a condition, once shown to exist, will continue;[29] that suppressed evidence, if produced, would be unfavorable to the party withholding or suppressing it,[30] that a letter duly addressed, stamped and mailed, and not returned, has been received.[31]

Among the presumptions recognized by the courts on grounds of public policy are the presumption that judicial proceedings have been regular,[32] and that courts vested with judicial power by the constitution are courts of general jurisdiction;[33] that persons acting as public officers are properly and regularly in office;[34] that official acts and duties have been regularly and legally performed;[35]

26. See 1 Curr. L. 1138. The so-called conclusive presumptions, being mere rules of law, are not treated in this article; and only those rebuttable presumptions of general application are here illustrated.

27. A presumption of fact cannot be based upon other presumptions. Cunard S. S. Co. v. Kelley [C. C. A.] 126 F. 610. Hence the court cannot reasonably raise presumptions from the assumed existence of facts, proof of which it would not permit, such as similar occurrences at different times to show negligence of defendant. Nichols v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 170. The presumption of extension of time of payment of a note, arising from proof of payment of interest in advance, is one of fact, not of law. Guerguin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 630.

28. Nichols v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 170.

29. It may be rebutted by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Lloyd [Kan.] 75 P. 478. Baggage delivered to a carrier in perfect condition is presumed to continue in that condition. Strong v. Long Island R. Co., 91 App. Div. 442, 86 N. Y. S. 911. The rule that mental unsoundness, once shown, is presumed to continue, applies only when such unsoundness appears to be of a permanent character; it does not apply to mental unsoundness shown to be due to a transitory cause, such as sickness, injury, or intoxication. Branstrator v. Crow, 162 Ind. 362, 69 N. E. 668. Held a fair presumption that changes in the beach and shifting of inlets of Rockaway Beach, Long Island, shown to be going on at the present time, were going on in 1725. Sandiford v. Hempstead, 97 App. Div. 163, 90 N. Y. S. 76.

30. Westervelt v. National Mfg. Co. [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 169. Where a party is sworn but does not testify, all the presumptions must be taken most strongly against him. Anker v. Smith, 87 N. Y. S. 479. Where a party fails to produce the best evidence, or explain its absence, the presumption is that, if produced, it would be adverse to him. Galbraith v. Starks, 25 Ky. L. R. 2090, 79 S. W. 1191. An attempt to suppress evidence is not an admission that the party so doing is asserting an unjust or false claim; but only an admission that the evidence, if given would be unfavorable to the party attempting to suppress it. Harrison v. Harrison [Iowa] 100 N. W. 344.

But where the court refused to enforce an order to produce correspondence, and plaintiff was fully examined as to its contents, its nonproduction raised no such presumption. Roberts v. Francis [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1076.

31. Planters' Mut. Ins. Ass'n v. Green [Ark.] 80 S. W. 151. Mere evidence that a person wrote a letter to another does not authorize a presumption that the latter received it, without proof that such letter was duly addressed, stamped and mailed. National Bldg. Ass'n v. Quin, 120 Ga. 358, 47 S. E. 962. The presumption attending evidence that three notifications were sent a consignee of goods, being duly mailed and addressed, is not rebutted by testimony of plaintiff's bookkeeper that he never received them. Roth Clothing Co. v. Maine S. S. Co., 44 Misc. 237, 88 N. Y. S. 987. Where a letter containing a birth certificate is duly addressed and mailed to a board of health, evidence that the clerk in charge searched the records and failed to find said certificate is not evidence that it was not received. Department of Health of New York v. Owen, 42 Misc. 221, 85 N. Y. S. 397. Under Iowa laws, an affidavit that notice of forfeiture of a life insurance policy was duly addressed and mailed is presumptive evidence of such notice. Summit v. United States Life Ins. Co., 123 Iowa, 681, 99 N. W. 563. While the mailing of a notice creates no legal presumption that it was received by the addressee, the fact is proper evidence on the question. Bloom v. Wanner, 25 Ky. L. R. 1646, 77 S. W. 930.

32. This presumption applies to special statutory proceedings, as to establish heirship. In re Marchant's Estate [Wis.] 99 N. W. 320. It will be presumed that a justice court, as a committing court, had not adjourned at the time it approved a bond. Crumpecker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 564. Presumptively a term of a trial court ends on the day before the beginning of a new term. Doran v. Lose, 3 Ariz. 284, 73 P. 443.

33. Circuit courts of Ohio. Poll v. Hicks, 67 Kan. 191, 72 P. 847.

34. Regular appointment presumed. City of Monterey v. Jacks, 139 Cal. 542, 73 P. 436. That public officer has given proper bond.

that children are legitimate, the marriage relation being in existence;[36] that men are sane,[37] that their acts and dealings as private individuals are fair and legal,[38] and that they have exercised ordinary care;[39] that death resulted from natural causes and was not voluntary or illegal.[40]

In the absence of proof of a statute, the common law is presumed to prevail in a foreign state[41] once subject to the laws of England;[42] but this presumption does not obtain as to states or countries in which English laws and institutions have not been established.[43] The rule that the law of a foreign state will, in the absence of contrary proof, be presumed to be the same as that of the forum, is applied in many states, even though statutes have been enacted modifying the common law;[44] others hold that it will not be presumed that a foreign state has enacted statutes similar to those of the forum.[45]

35. Election commissioners are sworn officers of the law and must be presumed to have done their duty. Motley v. Wilson [Ky.] 82 S. W. 1023. Election judges. Rexroth v. Schein, 206 Ill. 80, 69 N. E. 240. Tax officials. City of New York v. Vanderveer, 91 App. Div. 303, 86 N. Y. S. 659. That the current revenue of a city for each year, if properly collected and applied, would have been sufficient to meet current expenses. City of Tyler v. Jester & Co. [Tex.] 78 S. W. 1058. That public officials will adopt the true construction of a statute. Jeffrey v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 494. That failure to file a remittitur was because the fee had not been paid or tendered, or for some other sufficient cause. Mabb v. Stewart [Cal.] 77 P. 402. That a clerk of court has made up a complete record and fully performed his duty in that regard. Gardner v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 704. This presumption obtains when officers seek to justify their acts under process in legal proceedings to which they are parties. McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985. But the presumption that public officers have done their duty will not supply proof of a substantive fact. Davis v. Moyles [Vt.] 56 A. 174.

36. Lewis v. Sizemore [Ky.] 78 S. W. 122. While the presumption is not conclusive, nothing short of a showing that paternity of the husband was impossible can overthrow it. Bunel v. O'Day, 125 F. 303. That brothers and sisters are brothers and sisters of the full blood and legitimate. Ossman v. Schmitz, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 502.

37. In re Knox's Will, 123 Iowa, 24, 98 N. W. 468. But insanity, once being shown, is presumed to continue, and the burden is then upon him who asserts a return to sanity. Id.

38. That actions are legal. Clifton v. Weston, 54 W. Va. 250, 46 S. E. 360. Contract presumed valid. Rooney v. Southern Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 119 Ga. 941, 47 S. E. 345. That a regular practicing physician has a license. Cather v. Damerell [Neb.] 99 N. W. 35. Fraud will not be presumed; the presumption is that dealings are fair. McNaughton v. Smith [Mich.] 99 N. W. 382. Fiduciaries are presumed not to have committed breaches of faith. McCreery v. First Nat. Bank [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 890. A court will take judicial notice of the fact that an electric lighting company could not maintain its fixtures and equipment in a city's streets without authority from the city. Nelson v. Narragansett Elec. Lighting Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 802.

39. That a traveler killed at a railway crossing was exercising due care. Reed v. Queen Anne's R. Co. [Del. Super.] 57 A. 529. Persons of mature years and ordinary intelligence and education are presumed to have read contracts executed by them or to have otherwise made themselves acquainted with their contents. David Bradley & Co. v. Basta [Neb.] 98 N. W. 697. Persons old enough to be safely trusted in the streets must be presumed to have sufficient intelligence and judgment to avoid obvious dangers. Dolan v. Callender, McAuslan & Troup Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 655. Many states have held that there is no presumption of contributory negligence in cases of injuries caused by collisions at railroad crossings. See authorities cited in Nichols v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 170. In jurisdictions where the plaintiff must affirmatively prove want of contributory negligence, the presumption is that he was guilty of contributory negligence; but where plaintiff does not have such burden of proof, there is no such presumption. The latter rule obtains in Indiana. Id. See Railroads, 2 Curr. L. 1382; Street Railways, 2 Curr. L. 1742.

40. Presumptions are against death by suicide. Ross-Lewin v. Germania Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 78 P. 305. When a person is found dead from unexplained causes, the presumption is that death was natural or accidental, and not voluntary. In an action on an insurance policy, the burden of proving suicide was on the insurance company. Chambers v. Modern Woodmen of America [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1107. Upon proof of death by a gunshot wound, the presumption is that the injury causing death was accidentally, not illegally inflicted, and defendant, alleging an intentional infliction by a third person, has the burden of proving it. Stevens v. Continental Casualty Co., 12 N. D. 463, 97 N. W. 862.

41. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Hollenbeck, 161 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 136; Nenno v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 24; Klenke v. Noonan [Ky.] 81 S. W. 241.

42. Columbian Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Rice [S. C.] 47 S. E. 63.

43. The presumption does not obtain as to Mexican law. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 532.

44. Marriage laws of Michigan presumed to be the same as statutory provisions in California. In re Harrington's Estate, 140 Cal. 244, 73 P. 1000. Laws of Arizona as to adults presumed same as those of Iowa. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty

The burden of proof[46] rests at all times upon him who affirms, and is not changed by presumptions of fact arising during the trial.[47]

§ 2. Relevancy and materiality.[48]—Evidence which, if true, tends within reasonable probabilities to establish a matter in dispute, is relevant.[49] Evidence

Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 532. Laws of Indiana presumed to be same as those of Iowa relative to transportation of property by railway and express companies. McMillan v. American Exp. Co., 123 Iowa, 236, 98 N. W. 629. Statute of Missouri relating to usury presumed to be similar to Kansas usury statute. Mutual Home & Sav. Ass'n v. Worz, 67 Kan. 506, 73 P. 116. Ohio statutes respecting the effect of an appeal presumed to be the same as those of Kansas on that subject. Poll v. Hicks, 67 Kan. 191, 72 P. 847. Montana law presumed same as that of South Dakota as to nonnegotiability of note by inclusion of "other costs." Baird v. Vines [S. D.] 99 N. W. 89. Pennsylvania law presumed same as Tennessee statute requiring notice by carriers to consignee of goods received. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Naive [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 124. Arkansas law presumed same as that of Texas requiring written evidence of trusts. Boyd v. Boyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 39. That law of Oklahoma in reference to community property is same as that of Texas. Ex parte Latham [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1046. Courts of Indian Territory will presume the statute of frauds of Oklahoma Territory to be the same as that of Indian Territory. Wilhite v. Skelton [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 932.

Note: In Wilhite v. Skelton [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 932, the case of Meuer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. [S. D.] 59 N. W. 945, 49 Am. St. Rep. 898, 25 L. R. A. 81, is cited, and a part of the opinion quoted as follows: "There is some conflict in the decisions of the different courts upon the question as to whether or not the court will presume that the law of another state is the same as the statute law of the state where the action is tried, but the weight of authority seems to support this view." Citing Palmer v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 101 Cal. 187, 35 P. 630, and other California cases, and Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kan. 107.

45. Nenno v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 24. The presumption that the law of a foreign state is the same as that of the forum does not apply to positive statutory law. Waters v. Spencer, 44 Misc. 15, 89 N. Y. S. 693.

46. See 1 Curr. L. 1140.

47. See in this opinion a good discussion of "presumptions," "burden" and "shifting" of proof. Gibbs v. Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, 123 Iowa, 736, 99 N. W. 703. In an action on contract, the burden of proof is not shifted from plaintiff by his making a prima facie case. Polstein v. Blauner, 86 N. Y. S. 794. The burden is upon a defendant to establish the averments of a plea to jurisdiction which raises an issue of fact. Pyron & Son v. Ruohs [Ga.] 48 S. E. 434. The burden is on defendant to sustain a set off pleaded. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Hollenbeck [Ark.] 80 S. W. 145. The rule (Civ. Code, § 526) that the burden of proof in the whole case lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were introduced, applied. Walling v. Eggers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1563, 78 S. W. 428. When a prima facie case has been made out is a question for the court. Henning v. Stevenson [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1135.

48. Only the most general holdings are here given, the relevancy of evidence to a particular issue being considered as peculiar to that subject-matter and treated under the appropriate title. See, also, 1 Curr. L. 1140.

49. The court, however, gives the above as the test of "competency." The question was whether evidence of the condition of a horse nine months previous was too remote. Kavanaugh v. Wausau [Wis.] 98 N. W. 550. To be relevant, evidence must bear some logical relation to a fact in issue. Heller v. Heine, 42 Misc. 188, 85 N. Y. S. 389. Evidence tending to establish material issues made by the pleadings. Stuart v. Noble Ditch Co. [Idaho] 76 P. 255. Evidence of any facts having probative force on an issue is relevant. Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exch., 72 N. H. 315, 56 A. 754. Evidence of a fact which is not in controversy is immaterial. Duggan v. Ryan, 211 Ill. 133, 71 N. E. 848.

ILLUSTRATIONS. Held relevant: Opinion of expert as to value of work admissible on probability of execution of a contract specifying a certain price therefor. Guglielino v. Cahill, 185 Mass. 375, 70 N. E. 435. Where an express contract for work was testified to but the parties differed as to the contract price, evidence of the actual cost of the work was admissible, as tending to show that the contract was for the price nearest the cost. Lewis v. Utah Const. Co. [Idaho] 77 P. 336. Evidence of a precipitate on the sidewalks of a city in which a smelter was located was admissible to prove that sulphur fumes from the smelter caused a scum on the irrigation water on plaintiff's farm a mile away. Rowe v. Northport Smelting & Refining Co., 35 Wash. 101, 76 P. 529. In an action for damages caused on plaintiff's farm by sulphur fumes from defendant's smelter, admission of evidence as to the effect of the fumes at other farms was proper, it having appeared that conditions were the same. Id. On an issue of negligence in furnishing an engineer an unsafe engine, evidence as to when the engine was built, the number of miles traveled, 500,000, and that it once collided with another engine, was admissible. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435. In showing the degree of care required of street car employes, evidence that a street at the place where an accident occurred was much traveled was admissible. Denison & S. R. Co. v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1054. In an action on a note past due, entries in defendant's books showing charges against and credits to plaintiff were relevant. Blackshear v. Dekle [Ga.] 48 S. E. 311. That a testatrix wore gowns that required a great deal of laundering admissible on issue of value of services of a domestic. Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 585, 58 A. 507. Testimony of a plaintiff that he "took chances in going along the passage way" where he was injured was admissible to show a knowledge of danger. Consumer's Cotton Oil Co. v.

of collateral facts which would furnish no legal inference as to facts in dispute, and which the adverse party is not bound to be prepared to meet, is excluded as too remote.[50]

Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847. Testimony of a lawyer that his firm usually did the legal work for a decedent and that they had not drawn up his will was admissible on the issue whether the will was forged. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. Evidence of the number and character of foals produced by a mare was admissible on the issue of the value of the mare. Campbell v. Iowa Cent. R. Co. [Iowa] 99 N. W. 1061. In a suit against a marshal for value of goods seized on attachment, the return to the writ showing seizure and sale of goods, and price received, is competent evidence tending to establish the value of the goods. Shoup v. Marks [C. C. A.] 128 F. 32. In an action for damages for killing cows, evidence of what plaintiff had been offered for the cows was relevant but not conclusive on the issue of their value. Taylor v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co., 32 Wash. 450, 73 P. 499. On an issue of the market value of potatoes, the price at which they were actually sold is admissible. Garlington v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 368. What plaintiff paid for ponies admissible on their value. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Anson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 785. In an action for malpractice, the treatment given by the physician succeeding defendant may be shown. Bower v. Self [Kan.] 75 P. 1021. It was proper for a physician to testify that when he was called by another physician to attend a patient, it was not the first time other physicians had called him, when an attempt was made to show a conspiracy between the testifying physicians. Denison & S. R. Co. v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1054. Statements and acts of defendant in suit for alienation of affections, after the wife had left her husband, admissible to show previous intimacy. Christensen v. Thompson, 123 Iowa, 717, 99 N. W. 591. Record of a suit against a corporation in which a receiver was appointed, admissible to show diligence in pursuing debtor, in subsequent suit against the corporation and guarantors of its debt. Fales & J. Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 545. Where defendant set up a counterclaim, evidence of a compromise between the parties was admissible to show that defendant had not presented his present claim at that time, as bearing on the nonexistence of such claim. Stock v. Crawford [Iowa] 101 N. W. 89.

Held irrelevant: How far subsequently a person may go for testimony to show a person's mental condition at a given time is largely discretionary with the trial court. McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358. An opinion as to defendant's sanity cannot be re-enforced by showing that witness had, a few days subsequent to the date in question, given defendant a power of attorney involving the care and disposition of witness' property. Allis v. Hall, 76 Conn. 322, 56 A. 637. Financial condition of devisees five years after making of the will properly excluded, when offered on the issue of testamentary capacity. Henning v. Stevenson [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1135. Assignment of an account after commencement of suit and on day of trial inadmissible, since the claim could not be used as set-off. Ewen v. Wilbor, 208 Ill. 492, 70 N. E. 575. Where an action is based on a contract, an undated assignment thereof, shown to have been in fact executed after commencement of the suit, was incompetent evidence. Liberty Wall Paper Co. v. Stoner Wall Paper Mfg. Co., 178 N. Y. 219, 70 N. E. 501. An offer of books of a firm properly excluded when no item therein was shown to have any bearing on the claim in issue or to contradict a ledger account already in evidence. Flagg v. Fisk, 93 App. Div. 169, 87 N. Y. S. 530. Proof tending to show boiler plans suitable for small boilers from 10 to 25 horse power, is irrelevant on the issue of their suitability for a 60 horse power boiler. Watson v. Bigelow Co. [Conn.] 58 A. 741. Evidence of the chastity of the wife before marriage and after birth of a child eleven months after marriage is irrelevant on an issue of the legitimacy of the child. Kennington v. Catoe [S. C.] 47 S. E. 719. Entries made by a decedent in a book of opinions on treatment of horses is irrelevant on an issue whether decedent promised to pay for plaintiff's services on his death. Roberge v. Bonner, 94 App. Div. 342, 88 N. Y. S. 91. Conversations and communications between plaintiff and executors as to a claim against the estate are irrelevant on an issue whether plaintiff made a contract with decedent. Id. Where a lease provided for payment of five per cent. of the cash value of the vacant ground, evidence of the cost of improvements and their rental value and the value of leaseholds in the vicinity was inadmissible. Springer v. Borden, 210 Ill. 518, 71 N. E. 345. On an issue whether work was done in a workmanlike manner, it appearing that a certain mechanic did most of the work, evidence that he got drunk and was put in jail did not tend to prove he was incompetent as a mechanic. Matthews v. Farrell [Ala.] 37 So. 325. That plaintiff paid a certain amount for the loss of certain goods in his possession is not evidence of the value of the goods. Peyser v. Lund, 89 App. Div. 195, 85 N. Y. S. 881. Evidence as to what plaintiff paid for property is not evidence as to its value at the time of its subsequent conversion. Carper v. Risdon [Colo. App.] 76 P. 744. Expert and opinion evidence as to the safer method of letting rails into a mine is inadmissible when the relative safety of different methods is not in issue. Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co. [Utah] 76 P. 1089. The fact that no objection to a claim was made cannot be established by negative proof. Weller v. Wagner [Mo.] 79 S. W. 941. Evidence of what stockholders were willing to take for certain property is inadmissible on issue of value of lease and option on the property. Conant v. Jones [Ga.] 48 S. E. 234.

50. Burnside v. Everett [Mass.] 71 N. E. 82; Watson v. Bigelow Co. [Conn.] 58 A. 741. Whether evidence is too remote to be competent is left to the discretion of the court. Kendall v. Flanders, 72 N. H. 11, 54 A. 285.

Thus, on the issue of negligence, evidence of other similar occurrences or accidents is usually excluded,[51] unless the conditions are shown to be similar.[52] But on the issue whether or not a certain act is negligent, it has often been held proper to show what is usually done under the same circumstances,[53] but the other paper physically similar to it. Cooper v. Nisbet, 119 Ga. 752, 47 S. E. 173. Evidence of the number of boxes of oranges witness could pack in a given time is inadmissible to show how many defendant could pack in that time. People v. Miller [Cal.] 78 P. 227. In an action to recover for medical services, evidence that the physician treated others at the same house during the period covered by the claim is irrelevant. Kwiecinski v. Newman's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 391. In an action by a physician to recover for services from a railway corporation, rendered at time of a wreck, evidence of what another physician received for his services was irrelevant. McKnight v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 772. In an action for damages for unlawful search of plaintiff's home, evidence regarding character and pedigree of blood hounds used in getting to the house was inadmissible as were photographs of the hounds. McClurg v. Brenton, 123 Iowa, 368, 98 N. W. 881. In an action for assault, declarations of defendant on other occasions, tending to show his intention to avoid trouble with plaintiff, were inadmissible. Evans v. Elwood, 123 Iowa, 92, 98 N. W. 584. Evidence that other boys had been seen playing on the crossing where a boy had been injured was inadmissible on the issue of contributory negligence. Williams v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 706. Fires in the vicinity of the one in controversy, set by duly equipped engines on other railroads, could not be shown. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs [Va.] 48 S. E. 521. Evidence of the speed of a train about two miles from the place where the locomotive is claimed to have caused a fire is irrelevant. Id. In an action based on killing of ponies by railroad train, evidence that witness reported the train as running too fast at a point two miles away, and that he had seen a train running at a high rate of speed, was inadmissible. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Anson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 785. That cogwheels in another mill were boxed was irrelevant, there being no attempt to show a general custom. Marks v. Harriet Cotton Mills, 135 N. C. 287, 47 S. E. 432. Putting four witnesses on the stand and asking each his age, in order to allow the jury to compare them with alleged minors to whom liquor had been sold, was improper. Poynor v. Holzgrat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 829. That defendant did not call on plaintiff after an accident for which plaintiff held defendant responsible could not be shown, since its only purpose could be to prejudice the jury. Austin v. Bartlett, 178 N. Y. 310, 70 N. E. 855.

51. Nichols v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 170. Evidence of previous accidents caused by an unguarded stairway in a store, and of warnings to defendant as to the danger. Potter v. Cave, 123 Iowa, 98, 98 N. W. 569. In an action for injuries caused by a municipality allowing a street to be obstructed, evidence that other streets were also allowed to be obstructed was inadmissible. Radichel v. Kendall [Wis.] 99 N. W. 348. In action for loss of timber fired by spark from engine, evidence that same engine caused a timber fire at another place a year later, inadmissible. Cheek v. Oak Grove Lumber Co., 134 N. C. 225, 46 S. E. 488. Where a certain railway engine had been identified as having caused a fire, evidence of other fires along defendant's right of way was inadmissible, without connecting them with this engine. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs [Va.] 48 S. E. 521. In an action for wrongful ejection from a train, evidence of the ticket agent tending to show he had made a mistake in issuing plaintiff's ticket, testimony that he had made similar mistakes before was irrelevant. Southern Ry. Co. v. Bunnell [Ala.] 36 So. 380. In an action for damages for overflow of a sewer system, evidence of a similar overflow two years before was too remote. Burnside v. Everett [Mass.] 71 N. E. 82.

Held admissible: In an action against the city for alleged wrongful death caused by an explosion of fireworks permitted by the city, evidence that other similar exhibitions had been given without accident should have been admitted. Landau v. New York, 90 App. Div. 50, 85 N. Y. S. 616.

52. In an action for damage to butter in storage, evidence that other butter of the same kind kept well in plaintiff's private storeroom, and that butter of the same kind belonging to others was damaged in defendant's storeroom at the same time as plaintiff's was admissible. Rudell v. Grand Rapids Cold-Storage Co. [Mich.] 99 N. W. 756. In an action for wrongful death caused by the bursting of a pulley, the fact of the previous bursting of two other pulleys, made the same way, was admissible to show knowledge by the company that the pulley was defective and unsafe. Wabash Screen Door Co. v. Black [C. C. A.] 126 F. 721. In action for wrongful death of a workman, evidence of a similar accident three or four weeks before was inadmissible without a showing that conditions were materially the same. Gustafson v. Young, 91 App. Div. 433, 86 N. Y. S. 851. In an action for damages for burning of mills alleged to have been caused by sparks from a railroad engine, evidence as to the burning of other mills, conditions not being shown to be the same, was inadmissible. Conner v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 145.

53. Stewart v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 979. Proof of custom is evidence, but not conclusive, as to whether an act is negligent. Anderson v. Fielding [Minn.] 99 N. W. 357. Evidence that some of defendant's trains ran "pretty fast" in the vicinity of the place of a collision admissible to show a custom of running at a high rate of speed at that point, on the issue of negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Anson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 785. In an action by a section foreman for injuries, testimony that it was customary for foremen to ride on the front of handcars, as plaintiff was riding, was proper. Galloway v. San Antonio & G.

occurrence of specific alleged acts of negligence cannot be proven by showing a custom,[54] nor is evidence of a person's habitual use of intoxicants proof of his condition as to sobriety on a particular occasion.[55] To prove an alleged defective or dangerous condition as the cause of injury, evidence of the existence of such condition before[56] or after[57] the accident in question is admissible, if it appears that there had been no change, but not otherwise.[58] Proof of subsequent re-

R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. In suit by fireman to recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence of the engineer, the general practice of firemen traveling with the engineer, as to the position of the fireman while taking coal on the engine, could be shown to establish notice by the engineer of the fireman's position. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Bergschicker, 162 Ind. 108, 69 N. E. 1000. Evidence of the number of men commonly used by a defendant in skidding logs, and the number necessary to do that work with safety, was admissible on issue of master's negligence. Dell v. McGrath [Minn.] 99 N. W. 629. The general custom of well regulated and prudently managed railroad companies, as to the time and manner of inspecting boilers, could be shown. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435. Proof of the common and general use of a particular appliance is competent on the question of its reasonable safety as between a master and servant. Anderson v. Fielding [Minn.] 99 N. W. 357. In action for damages for injury caused by a bridge breaking down with an engine, a general custom not to take such engines on the bridge was admissible on the issue of contributory negligence. Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788. In an action for injuries received while going through a passageway, evidence that other workmen used the passageway was admissible to show its customary use on the issue of contributory negligence. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847. Evidence that passengers had previously ridden on certain seats in a street car is admissible on an issue whether that seat was one for passengers and used with the knowledge and consent of employes. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 618. On an issue whether or not a car stopped for a passenger, in an action for injuries, a rule of the company adopted the day before, requiring cars to stop at the point in question, and evidence that cars did in fact stop there, was admissible. Nassau Elec. R. Co. v. Corliss [C. C. A.] 126 F. 355. Average or ordinary lateral play of drawbars could be shown, as tending to prove a coupler defective. Belt R. Co. v. Confrey, 209 Ill. 344, 70 N. E. 773. In an action for death of a brakeman caused by being crushed between two cars while coupling, evidence that another had made a coupling was admissible to show there was space enough between the cars to do it safely. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg [Ala.] 37 So. 395.

Held inadmissible: In action against a railway company, evidence that the engineer never ran by a flag station when signalled to stop was inadmissible, the nature of the action not being such as to put his character in issue, and he not being charged with willful misconduct. Reeves v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 543.

54. Customary manner of handling cars at a given point. Stewart v. Galveston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 979.

55. Bedenbaugh v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 53.

56. Where plaintiff was injured by the falling of a building in course of construction, its condition six weeks previous was not too remote to be admissible on its condition at the time. Nelson v. Young, 91 App. Div. 457, 87 N. Y. S. 69. Evidence, in an action for wrongful death, that the derrick which caused the accident was unsafe five years before, when an accident occurred, and that no repairs had since been made, was relevant. Dyas v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 P. 972. Evidence, extending over a period some three years before and some time after an accident, of a generally defective condition of a sidewalk, was competent on the question of notice of a particular defect, which caused an accident. Mere remoteness in time does not make such evidence inadmissible. Hallum v. Omro [Wis.] 99 N. W. 1051.

57. Testimony concerning the condition of a sidewalk after an accident by one who had examined it was admissible, there being other evidence that its condition was the same as at the time of the accident. Harrison v. Incorporated Town of Ayrshire, 123 Iowa, 528, 99 N. W. 132. Conditions existing several hours after an accident could be shown when there was no evidence of a change since the accident, the presumption being that conditions had remained unchanged. Meyers v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. [Utah] 77 P. 347. On an issue whether a sidewalk was built of suitable materials, and whether it had been washed out by surface water, evidence that rain had since washed another hole in the same walk, the conditions being the same, was relevant. City of Columbus v. Anglin [Ga.] 48 S. E. 318. Admission of evidence of the condition of a cattle guard the day after stock was killed was not error when it was subsequently proved that its condition was the same as on the previous days. Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 760. Subsequent condition of a railway track could be shown when such as to warrant an inference as to its condition at the time of an accident caused by an alleged defect. Jackson Lumber Co. v. Cunningham [Ala.] 37 So. 445. Evidence that changes had been made in a track was admissible in connection with evidence identifying certain decayed timbers as those in a track at the time of a derailment. Id.

58. Condition of a brakebeam a year after the accident in question could not be shown, it being admitted that the catch plate thereon was a different one. Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 396. Condition of a railroad track 13 months after wreck irrelevant. Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 349, 98 N. W. 884.

pairs[59] or other precautions[60] is usually excluded, sometimes on the ground of public policy.[61]

When the dealings of parties are matters of contract, custom[62] or transactions with other parties[63] cannot usually be shown, nor is proof of other similar transactions admissible,[64] unless to show fraud[65] or conspiracy;[66] but proof of the usual course of business is sometimes admitted.[67]

The value of realty may be proven by showing prices at which property in the vicinity has been selling;[68] but proof of independent sales is excluded,[69] and

59. See v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 443, 99 N. W. 106; La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 922. But evidence of a subsequent erection of a guard was admissible to show that a machine was of such a character that it could be guarded. Id. Evidence of subsequent changes when a railing was replaced on a bridge was held admissible, as rebuttal, when defendant had put in evidence that the railing had been replaced and that it was safe. McDonald v. Duluth [Minn.] 100 N. W. 1102.

60. The discharge of a co-servant the day after an accident was inadmissible to show the incompetency of the servant at that time. Winters v. Naughton, 91 App. Div. 80, 86 N. Y. S. 439. In an action by a brakeman for injury by collision with a toolhouse, evidence that after the accident the toolhouse was moved farther from the track was inadmissible. Russell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 96 App. Div. 151, 89 N. Y. S. 429. Evidence that a ditch had been braced up after a wall had caved in, injuring plaintiff, held inadmissible. Schermer v. McMahon [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 535.

61. Changes and repairs by a railroad company, after the overflow causing the damages sued for, held admissible; but it is said that evidence of subsequent repairs is held, usually, inadmissible on grounds of public policy, in such damage suits, because its admission would tend to deter the making of repairs in which the public is interested. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Longbottom [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 542.

62. Moss Tie Co. v. Huff, 32 Ind. App. 466, 70 N. E. 86. A custom in a shop whereby workmen signed certain rules could not be shown to prove plaintiff signed them, and that he had notice of them. Quinn v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 91 App. Div. 489, 86 N. Y. S. 883.

63. That defendant had made a particular contract with a third person does not tend to show he made a similar contract with plaintiff. Beakley v. Rainier [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 702. In action on contract, evidence of prices paid under other similar contracts, irrelevant. Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 506.

64. On an issue whether a landlord, by his agent, had waived a crop lien, evidence of waivers of liens on other crops was inadmissible. Wimp v. Early [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 343. In an action for goods sold and delivered, evidence that defendant had been "short" in his accounts at other times and with other persons was inadmissible. Fleck v. Neerenberg, 85 N. Y. S. 379. On an issue of breach of warranty of a machine, evidence that witness had set up many other machines of the same make and had never had complaints made was inadmissible. Haynie v. Plano Mfg. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 532. Evidence of other transactions inadmissible to prove that an order was given as security only. Held v. Caldwell-Easton Co., 97 App. Div. 301, 89 N. Y. S. 954.

Held admissible: Where a defense to a note was that defendant paid plaintiff's expenses on a European trip, evidence that on former occasions plaintiff had invited defendant to become his guest and paid all expenses was admissible to show plaintiff was an invited guest on the European trip. Zane v. De Onativia, 139 Cal. 328, 73 P. 850.

65. Where a transaction is assailed as fraudulent, evidence of other and contemporaneous transactions of a similar fraudulent nature is admissible to prove the fraudulent intent. Ettinger v. Weil, 94 App. Div. 297, 87 N. Y. S. 1049.

66. In a civil case based on a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff and steal his money, other similar transactions of the alleged conspirators may be shown, to establish a common enterprise and show the fraudulent nature of the act. Wright v. Stewart, 130 F. 905.

67. The usual form of release of attachment could be shown to prove the signing of such a release. Hesser v. Rowley, 139 Cal. 410, 73 P. 156. A course of dealing by which debts evidenced by notes were charged as items of a book account could not be shown by a few entries, unexplained, remote in date from the debts in issue. Freehart v. Stanford [Vt.] 58 A. 790.

68. City of New Orleans v. Manfre, 111 La. 927, 35 So. 981. On the value of land, evidence of what contiguous land sold for, the conditions surrounding the land, and the added value by locating a depot on a portion of it is admissible. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Whipps, 25 Ky. L. R. 2312, 80 S. W. 507. Market value of lands in the vicinity may be shown on an issue of land values, though the other lands are not identical in location and quality with the land in question. Dady v. Condit, 209 Ill. 488, 70 N. E. 1088. Sales of land in vicinity and boom conditions increasing land value, may be shown; and such evidence, though rendered of less weight, is not made inadmissible by a showing that the boom collapsed, and sales were not in fact carried out. Id. An opinion as to the value of land may be based on recent sales of similar land in the neighborhood, and in addition, the uses and capabilities of the property, its situation, productiveness, etc. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Humiston, 208 Ill. 100, 69 N. E. 880. A showing that other lands in the vicinity were of the same kind and quality was a sufficient predicate for evidence of the prices at which those lands had been sold. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 433.

mere offers cannot be shown.[70] In condemnation proceedings,[71] the damages to, or the value of, other property can be shown only when conditions are shown to be similar. On issues of ownership, the acts and declarations of the parties, nature of their possession, and the relationship between the alleged owner and party in possession have been held admissible.[72]

Proof of reputation of a party is usually excluded in civil actions,[73] except in certain cases, such as assault, where defendant's disposition may be shown;[74] but proof of character or reputation has been held admissible on an issue as to the degree of care exercised on a given occasion,[75] or as to the value of services.[76] Evidence that a defendant is indemnified against loss is inadmissible to defeat a recovery or diminish a claim.[77] If evidence is relevant and material, it is ad-

Evidence that other coal land in the vicinity had been leased at a certain royalty per ton of coal held inadmissible; but evidence that, with the lease, was given an option to buy at a certain price, held admissible. Id. An assessment blank, proved by deputy assessor, containing valuation of a number of lots, including the one in question, inadmissible on value of land condemned. Wray v. Knoxville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 471. The amount for which land sold at execution sale is incompetent on the issue of the value of the land, if the surrounding circumstances show the price was too large. Rickards & Co. v. Bemis & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 239.

69. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Stanwood [Neb.] 98 N. W. 656.

70. Sharp v. U. S., 191 U. S. 341, 48 Law. Ed. 211. Offers to buy similar lands inadmissible. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 433.

71. See Eminent Domain, 1 Curr. L. 1002. In an action for damages to a lot by grading a street, the value of other abutting lots similarly affected may be shown (City of Columbus v. McDaniel, 117 Ga. 823, 45 S. E. 59); but the fact that the owner of the lot found a purchaser for it after the grading, having failed before, is not evidence on the issue whether the lot had been damaged or benefited (Id.). In condemnation proceedings, the value of water powers two miles distant from the one to be condemned is inadmissible on the value of the latter, without a showing that their values would be equal. City of Dallas v. Boise, 44 Or. 302, 75 P. 208. In an action to recover damages to a lot caused by construction of a railroad, the value of a lot across the street was inadmissible on the amount of damages, the lots not being shown to be substantially similar in the particulars affecting value. Newbold v. International, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 1079. On the issue of damages to farm land by the crossing of a railway, evidence of the effect on the value of other similar farms of railroads crossing them in a similar manner was properly excluded. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Freeman, 210 Ill. 270, 71 N. E. 444.

72. To prove ownership of land in a husband, and that it was put in wife's name to defraud creditors, a judgment against him, and a lease signed by him and wife, and receipts by him, were admissible. Burtiss v. Lanyon Zinc Co. [Kan.] 75 P. 1030; Wright v. Tanner [Minn.] 99 N. W. 422. To prove ownership, evidence that a party and his ancestors always claimed land as against the adverse party and listed and paid taxes thereon is admissible. Walling v. Eggers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1563, 78 S. W. 428. That one did not return land for taxes tended to show he did not claim to own it. Doe ex dem. Anniston City Land Co. v. Edmondson [Ala.] 37 So. 424. On an issue as to who was one of the parties to a boom contract, where plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show long use of the boom by defendants and collection by them of money for its use by others, defendant's evidence that sums so collected were accounted for to another company was relevant. Crane & Co. v. Fry [C. C. A.] 126 F. 278. Where several persons used steam for a boiler, the understanding of one of them as to ownership of coal used could be shown. Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 A. 384.

73. Evidence as to the former history of, and charges against, a party, inadmissible. Donaldson v. Dobbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1084. In an action for illegal sale of liquor to minors, evidence that one was and had the reputation of being a gambler was inadmissible. Poynor v. Holzgart [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 829.

74. In an action for assault, the defense being that it was only a friendly scuffle, evidence of a subsequent act was admissible as tending to show defendant's disposition. Lee v. Longwell [Mich.] 99 N. W. 379.

75. Where an engineer and fireman were both killed by the explosion of a boiler, evidence, in an action for wrongful death of the engineer, that he had the reputation of being a careful and competent engineer and sober man, was admissible, tending to show that he exercised ordinary care on the occasion under investigation. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435.

76. In an action for the value of services of a son, permanently injured, evidence that he was sober, obedient, industrious, and economical, and did not drink intoxicants or use tobacco was admissible; but not of his good morals. Cameron Mill & Elevator Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 971.

77. Blumberg v. Marks, 87 N. Y. S. 514. Evidence of mortuary benefits accruing from a collateral source, wholly independent of defendant, is inadmissible, on the amount of plaintiff's claim, in an action for wrongful death. Insurance from policies on husband's life. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435. But evidence that a constable was indemnified to make a levy and sale was admissible in an action against him, to show notice of a lien on the prop-missible, though its admission incidentally lets in other irrelevant matter.[78] The materiality of evidence is a question solely for the court.[79]

§ 3. Competency or kind of evidence in general.[80]—Evidence offered by one party, having been admitted over objection, similar evidence by the other party is admissible in rebuttal.[81] Telephone conversations are admissible if the parties talking are identified.[82]

§ 4. Best and secondary evidence.[83]—What is the best evidence in particular instances depends upon the nature of the case.[84] Until their nonproduction is in some way accounted for, original written documents[85] and records[86] are the erty sold. Burton v. Dangerfield [Ala.] 87 So. 350.

78. In showing a condition of a substructure for a derrick, the fact that repairs were being made, after an accident, was incidentally disclosed. Dyas v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 P. 972.

79. Nickey v. Zonker, 31 Ind. App. 88, 67 N. E. 277.

80. Includes only a few miscellaneous decisions as to competency not covered by the general rules treated in following sections. See 1 Curr. L. 1142.

81. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. White [Colo.] 75 P. 415. One who has been permitted to go behind a land patent and introduce parol evidence of the location of a mining claim cannot complain of oral evidence in rebuttal, showing the senior location of another mine. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Min. & Mill. Co. [Colo.] 75 P. 1070. Plaintiffs having introduced certain by-laws over objection, and claiming they were not legally adopted, defendants had the right to introduce the others. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill. Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194. Where a lease was admitted in an action for conversion as an admission of ownership, rebuttal evidence to explain why the lease was made should have been admitted. Eldridge v. Hoefer [Or.] 77 P. 874. When a return to a writ of execution is competent evidence, the clerk's docket is competent to prove issuance of the writ. Shoup v. Marks [C. C. A.] 128 F. 32. A portion of a conversation being admitted, the remainder is admissible. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Eastman [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 255. A physician having referred to medical authorities in his direct examination, a question regarding those authorities was proper in cross-examination. Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 349, 98 N. W. 884. Where part of a correspondence is put in evidence, the other party may introduce the entire correspondence relating to the same subject. Gosnell v. Webster [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1060. Where letters constituting part of a correspondence are introduced, the other party is entitled to introduce the entire correspondence relative to the issue. Buedingen Mfg. Co. v. Royal Trust Co., 90 App. Div. 267, 85 N. Y. S. 621. Part of a doctor's letter relating to an injury having been introduced, the entire letter was admissible. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Criswell [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 388. Where defendant gave evidence showing that a railing on a bridge had been replaced after an accident, and that it was safe, plaintiff could, in rebuttal, show that changes had been made when the railing was replaced; though generally evidence of subsequent repairs is inadmissible to show negligence. McDonald v. Duluth [Minn.] 100 N. W. 1102.

82. Where a witness testifies positively that a telephone conversation was with defendant and there was no cross-examination as to witness' means of identifying defendant, the submission to the jury of evidence of the conversation was proper. Lillie v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 316. When plaintiff testified that a certain telephone conversation was with defendant, what plaintiff said could be proven by a witness present in the room, though witness did not know with whom plaintiff was talking at the time. McCarthy v. Peach [Mass.] 70 N. E. 1029.

83. See 1 Curr. L. 1142.

84. Illustrations: Proof of a custom is not the best evidence if it is practicable to call all those affected by it. McGarrity v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 55 A. 718. A family record of a birth is not the best evidence when the one who made it is living and competent to testify. Loose v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 526. A mechanic's lien statement is not evidence of the contract on which the lien claim is based. Jose v. Hoyt [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 468. Original lien statement is best evidence of fact of making and filing such a statement. Wheelock v. Hull [Iowa] 100 N. W. 863. Ownership of a boat may be shown by parol; a bill of sale is not necessary. Leon v. Kerrison [Fla.] 36 So. 173. The constable's return on garnishment summons, and not his indorsement thereof on a writ of execution, is the original evidence of the service of the summons. Cooper v. Scyoc [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 751. A book containing rules governing conduct of workmen, prepared since the accident on which suit was based, inadmissible to prove rules contained in a book alleged to have been lost. Quinn v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 91 App. Div. 489, 86 N. Y. S. 883. Extraneous evidence inadmissible to show whether a paper was printed, written or typewritten, as the paper itself was the best evidence on the point. Rose v. Harllee [S. C.] 48 S. E. 541. The statement of a witness that a schedule of rates was on file with the interstate commerce commission is not the best evidence of the fact. Summers v. Wabash R. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 481. When a copy of a letter and not the original was the subject of a conversation between defendant and plaintiff's agent, the copy was properly admitted. Simonds v. Cash [Mich.] 99 N. W. 754. Assessment books are the best evidence of whether a person returned certain property for taxation, since the tax lists from which the books are made up are not required by law to be kept. Doe ex dem. Anniston City Land Co. v. Edmondson [Ala.] 37 So. 424.

best evidence of their contents; but since only the best evidence available is required to be produced, secondary evidence is admissible when a proper predicate has been laid therefor by showing loss or destruction of the original,[87] and that dili-

Alleged printed copy of a private contract not competent. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Moran, 210 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 38. Secondary evidence of a written contract inadmissible. Commonwealth v. Parlin & Orendorff Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 791. Oral and documentary evidence of the contents of a note and the character in which parties signed, inadmissible. Merrill v. Timbrell, 123 Iowa, 375, 98 N. W. 879. Secondary evidence of writ of execution excluded. Stephens v. Head, 138 Ala. 455, 35 So. 565. Where an agent acted under a written commission, testimony that her contract was on a blank like one shown her was incompetent. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson [Iowa] 100 N. W. 550. Copies of a telegram, furnished by agents at sending and receiving stations, inadmissible. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kapp [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 840. Secondary evidence of the contents of a telegram, received at its destination, inadmissible without proof of its authenticity and loss of the original. Yeiser v. Cathers [Neb.] 97 N. W. 840. Secondary evidence as to how a person voted inadmissible in absence of showing that ballot voted by him could not be identified. Lane v. Bailey [Mont.] 75 P. 191. A copy of a letter written by witness to defendant is inadmissible without proof of loss of the original, though witness has used the copy to refresh his memory in testifying. New England Mortg. Security Co. v. Anderson [Ga.] 48 S. E. 396. Testimony regarding an order sent by letter was improperly admitted when the letter was not produced or accounted for. Hart v. Godkin [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1057. Press copies of waybills held inadmissible in action between third parties, when originals were not accounted for, and the person who issued the waybills and made the copies was not shown to be dead. Haas v. Chubb, 67 Kan. 787, 74 P. 230.

86. County assessor's books. Hicks v. Pogue [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 786. Assessment rolls best evidence of increase in valuation. Carlisle v. Chehalis County, 32 Wash. 284, 73 P. 349. Record required by-law to be kept by distillers. Brown v. Harkins [C. C. A.] 131 F. 63. Proof of a judgment must be by the record of the court in which it was rendered, or a duly authenticated copy of such record. Northrop v. Chase, 76 Conn. 146, 56 A. 518. Record of court best evidence of a judgment (Nelson v. Brisbin [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1057), or order (Cummings v. Brown [Mo.] 81 S. W. 158). Record of proceedings in bankruptcy court is best evidence of appointment of receivers and reasons therefor. Blue Mountain Iron & Steel Co. v. Portner [C. C. A.] 131 F. 57. A judgment creditor cannot prove his claim by a transcript of the docket of the judgment; the judgment roll is necessary. Lauby v. Gill, 42 Misc. 334, 86 N. Y. S. 718. Original deedbooks in clerk of court's office were admissible, in place of certified copies. Davis v. Clinton, 25 Ky. L. R. 2021, 79 S. W. 259. Matters of which a record is required by law to be kept by a board of health cannot be established by parol, in the absence of a showing of the loss or destruction of the record. Cooke v. Custer County Com'rs, 13 Okl. 11, 73 P. 270. The record of school board meetings being the best evidence of its acts, the unsworn statement out of court of one of its members was incompetent to prove a contract awarded by the board, absence of the record not being explained. Mendel v. School Dist. No. 6 of Wauwatosa [Wis.] 98 N. W. 932. When a train dispatcher testified that he could not tell the number of cars ordered at different points without reference to his records, and the records were available, his testimony was properly excluded. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 614. A copy of the journal of the general assembly, as filed with the secretary of state, is not evidence for any purpose. Town of Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023.

87. If the original of an instrument is lost, a copy is admissible in evidence, not because it imports the agreement, but to make proof of an original which did. Wright v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 843. Release lost. Conant v. Jones [Ga.] 48 S. E. 234. Copy of memorandum of chattels sold. Brunnemer v. Cook, 89 App. Div. 406, 85 N. Y. S. 954. Under the statute, affidavits of the destruction of deeds and records admit copies of abstracts to show chain of title. Glos v. Patterson, 209 Ill. 448, 70 N. E. 911. After showing the loss of the original judgment and papers in a cause, a copy, testified to as a true one, is admissible. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. De Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 736. In an action on a judgment of a justice of the peace, the docket of the justice being lost, a certified copy of the judgment roll was admissible. Wise v. Keer Thread Co. [Miss.] 36 So. 244. Existence, genuineness and contents of lost deed proved by certified copy of the record, deed having been properly and legally probated for record. Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645. A copy properly certified as a "copy of the original copy" is admissible to the same extent as a copy of the original. McLanahan v. Blackwell, 119 Ga. 64, 45 S. E. 785. A certificate of entry having been lost, a certified copy of the record was the best evidence, and parol testimony of its contents was inadmissible. Martin v. Brand [Mo.] 81 S. W. 443. Where memoranda of sales, after being copied into a book, were destroyed, the book entries were competent as secondary evidence. Rathborne v. Hatch, 90 App. Div. 151, 85 N. Y. S. 768. A written contract with a corporation having been lost, secondary evidence of its contents was admissible without the production of the minutes showing acceptance of

gent but fruitless search has been made for it,[88] or that it is in the possession of the adverse party,[89] who has failed to produce it after notice to do so.[90] The question of the sufficiency of preliminary proof to admit secondary evidence rests largely in the discretion of the court.[91] A document, claimed to have been lost, must be shown to have been in existence before secondary evidence is admissible.[92]

the contract by the corporation. Ellison v. Dunlap, 25 Ky. L. R. 1495, 78 S. W. 155. When an order for the sale of realty by an administrator stated that all the requirements of law had been complied with, parol evidence was admissible to show the filing of a schedule of debts, that it had been lost, and of its contents. Rhodus v. Heffernan [Fla.] 36 So. 572. Contents of a lost or destroyed written order vacating a highway may be shown by parol evidence of the members of the town board of supervisors which passed it. Schroeder v. Klipp [Wis.] 97 N. W. 909. Where an inventory of insured goods was destroyed with the goods, by fire, parol evidence of the amount and value of the stock was admissible. Hanna & Co. v. Orient Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1115.

88. Letter. Kelley, Maus & Co. v. La Crosse Carriage Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 674. Note. Randolph v. Hudson, 12 Okl. 516, 74 P. 946.

89. Receipt of a letter having been shown, a copy is competent evidence for the sender. Dick v. Zimmerman, 207 Ill. 636, 69 N. E. 754; Supreme Council A. L. H. v. Champe [C. C. A.] 127 F. 541. Letterpress copy of letter inadmissible without notice to addressee to produce it, or other predicate laid for its introduction. King v. Cisco Compress Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 114. Where there is no reason to suppose a letter is in plaintiff's possession, it having been sent to and received by defendant, secondary evidence is admissible, its loss being shown, without notice to plaintiff to produce it. Kelley, Maus & Co. v. La Crosse Carriage Co. [Wis.] 97 N. W. 674.

90. Aaron v. Southern Ry. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 556. A predicate for the admission of copies of proofs of loss must be laid by showing notice to the insurer to produce the original. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Enoch [Ark.] 77 S. W. 899. Secondary evidence inadmissible to show an alleged assignment of a lease, without a showing that the instrument was ever in defendant's possession or that notice to produce the document had been served. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107. Where plaintiff would not be expected to have a certain lease in his possession, secondary evidence of its contents was admissible without notice to him to produce it. Cooley v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 979.

91. It is for the court to determine whether, in a given case, secondary evidence should be admitted. Cooley v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 979.

Proof of loss: Loss of instrument must be shown by best obtainable evidence. Liles v. Liles [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1101. Proof of loss, without proof of diligent search, insufficient. Avery v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. E. 519. Showing of loss and search for written assignment held sufficient. Everett v. Hart [Colo. App.] 77 P. 254. Sufficiency of evidence of loss or destruction of a deed so as to admit a certified copy from the registry of it, when the deed is not between parties litigant. Cox v. McDonald, 118 Ga. 414, 45 S. E. 401. Mere statement that book is lost insufficient to show that there are not other books that constitute the best evidence of the fact in issue. Galbraith v. Starks, 25 Ky. L. R. 2090, 79 S. W. 1191. In the case of writings not likely and not intended to be preserved, slight evidence of loss is sufficient to lay a foundation for the admission of secondary proof. Tags on ties with printed and written matter thereon. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Palmore [Kan.] 75 P. 509. Secondary evidence of the contents of railway tickets was admissible after a showing that they had been turned over to the superintendent of another road, that its accounting department could not find them, and that they were probably lost. Chiles v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 252. An affidavit of a party that a certain deed, not between the parties litigant, was not in affiant's possession, power or custody, and that affiant believed it had been lost or destroyed, was insufficient to admit a certified copy of the record of it. Cox v. McDonald, 118 Ga. 414, 45 S. E. 401.

Sufficiency of search: Secondary evidence to prove the contents of written contracts, alleged to be lost, will be admitted only on a showing that reasonable diligence has been exercised in an effort to find the lost papers, or to find a missing person to whose custody the missing papers have been traced (Koehler v. Schilling [N. J. Law] 57 A. 154), together with the fact that a bona fide and diligent search has been unsuccessfully made in the place where it is most likely to be found (Brown v. Harkins [C. C. A.] 131 F. 63; Prussing v. Jackson, 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771). In libel suit, secondary evidence of a letter was inadmissible, there being no proof of effort to produce the reporter who last had the letter. Prussing v. Jackson, 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771. Secondary evidence is inadmissible to prove a deed when the subscribing witnesses live in the state, though not in the county, and no effort has been made to obtain their testimony except a telegram, after objection to secondary proof. Johnson v. Franklin [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 611. A showing that search for a lost deed had been made in the place where it was last seen and inquiry made of the only other person having access to it is sufficient to admit secondary proof of its contents. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 P. 803. Held, reasonable efforts had been made to produce original letters, and letterpress copies had been sufficiently identified to admit the latter in evidence. Nelson Mfg. Co. v. Shreve [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 488.

An admission that a letter contained the

In the case of duplicates, each is original evidence, and the loss of one need not be shown, to render the other admissible.[93] A written contract relating to a merely collateral issue need not be produced; oral evidence of its contents is sufficient.[94] Statutes often provide for the admission of secondary evidence in specified instances.[95]

§ 5. Parol evidence to explain or vary writings.[96]—When a written contract imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement, it is presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material item and term,[97] and that all prior negotiations[98] and contemporaneous agreements[99] have been merged therein; hence the well settled rule that evidence of prior or contemporaneous oral agreements is inadmissible to vary or contradict the terms of a valid written instrument.[1] But if the contract is incomplete[2] or ambiguous or facts as published in an alleged libelous article is not sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the contents of the letter. Prussing v. Jackson, 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771.

92. Rice v. Bamberg [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1009. Proof of existence of a letter held sufficient to admit proof of its loss and of its contents by parol. State v. Leasia [Or.] 78 P. 328. An unauthenticated copy of a deed by the alleged grantor's son, who did not know grantor's handwriting, without proof of the execution and genuineness of the alleged original, was inadmissible. Carter v. Wood [Va.] 48 S. E. 553.

93. Wright v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 843. A certified copy of a railroad lease, a duplicate of which was required to be kept on file in the executive department, was primary evidence. Branan v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 119 Ga. 738, 46 S. E. 882. Duplicate original of bankruptcy schedule, prepared under bankruptcy act (Fales & Jenks Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 545), and a certified copy of bankruptcy record, are original evidence under bankruptcy law (Id.). Certified copies of papers in bankruptcy proceedings are admissible, whether certified by the clerk of the court or the referee in bankruptcy. McLanahan v. Blackwell, 119 Ga. 64, 45 S. E. 785.

94. Morgan v. Garretson-Greason Lumber Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 997.

95. A statute permitting copies of certain specified papers and records to be used as evidence does not apply to private contracts. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Moran, 210 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 38. Rule 42 of the superior courts of Georgia, permitting the registry copy of a deed to be introduced on the oath of a party that the original has been lost or destroyed, etc., applies only to deeds between parties litigant. Cox v. McDonald, 118 Ga. 414, 45 S. E. 401. A statute authorizing acts and proceedings of corporations to be proved by sworn copy does not authorize proving the contents of the corporation's books of account by affidavit of the secretary. Coppes v. Union Nat. Sav. Loan Ass'n [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 702. See post, Documentary Evidence, § 7C.

96. See 1 Curr. L. 1144.

97. Union Selling Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 128 F. 672; Holcombe v. Cable Co., 119 Ga. 466, 46 S. E. 671. Verdict cannot be based on understanding not expressed in written contract. Courier-Journal v. Howard, 119 Ga. 378, 46 S. E. 440. "In the absence of fraud or mistake, a complete written contract is a merger of all antecedent or simultaneous agreements between the parties, and affords conclusive evidence of knowledge and assent on the part of the parties to its contents, terms and conditions." Harrington v. Brockman Commission Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 629.

Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557, 45 S. E. 1003. Contemporaneous verbal statements, agreements and understandings cannot be shown to establish assent to additional insurance, prohibited by the terms of the policy. Calmenson v. Equitable Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Minn.] 100 N. W. 88. The terms of written lease cannot be contradicted by proving an oral contemporaneous agreement by the lessor to make certain repairs. Hallenbeck v. Chapman [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1096.

Contemporaneous written agreements are admissible, though they vary the writing in question, when all the writings are to be construed as one contract. Cobb v. Doggett, 142 Cal. 142, 75 P. 785; Gould v. Magnolia Metal Co., 207 Ill. 172, 69 N. E. 896.

A written contract can only be changed by writing or an executed oral agreement. Halsell v. Renfrow [Okl.] 78 P. 118. Under a statute (Rev. Codes 1899, § 3936), providing that a written contract may be altered by a contract in writing or an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise, a written contract for the sale of real estate cannot be modified by an unexecuted oral agreement, although the modification pertains only to the performance of the contract. Cughan v. Larson [N. D.] 100 N. W. 1088. The rule that a written contract cannot be varied by parol extends to the legal import or intendment of the contract, as well as the terms or words in which it is expressed. Union Selling Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 128 F. 672. While "there is much apparent and some real conflict in the numerous cases" applying this rule, it is certain that the testimony of a defendant alone cannot contradict the plain terms of a note. Fuller v. Law, 207 Pa. 101, 56 A. 333.

A clear, unambiguous, reasonable release cannot be varied by parol, even though the asserted oral agreement is claimed to have been the inducement to the execution of the release. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Vanordstrand, 67 Kan. 386, 73 P. 113. Undisclosed intention of one party to a contract cannot be shown. Camardella v. Holmes, 97 App. Div. 120, 89 N. Y. S. 616. Where an executory contract showed on its face that it was not to be delivered in escrow, parol evidence of such a delivery is inadmissible. Martin v. Witty [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 829. Parol evidence of the understanding of the parties held inadmissible to contradict a written agreement between the Delaware and Cherokee Indian Nations, made April 8, 1867. Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U. S. 127, 48 Law. Ed. 646. A certificate of the oath of witnesses taken for the purpose of proving a will showed the oath was taken after the will was admitted. Parol evidence was inadmissible to explain the discrepancy. Godfrey v. Phillips, 209 Ill. 584, 71 N. E. 19. Trainmen's interpretation of a dispatcher's orders are incompetent on the question of interpretation of those orders, or on the question whether or not they were ambiguous. Wallace v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 72 N. H. 504, 57 A. 913. A written unqualified order for goods cannot be varied by showing a verbal agreement whereby the vendee was to sell what he could and be liable only for such an amount. Grabfelder v. Vosburgh, 90 App. Div. 307, 85 N. Y. S. 633. A provision in a contract for the purchase of a soda fountain against countermanding cannot be contradicted by showing a verbal agreement that the vendee need not take it unless satisfied. Harris-Hearin Fountain Co. v. Pressler [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 664. A warranty cannot be imported into a written contract by parol. Neale v. American Elec. Vehicle Co. [Mass.] 71 N. E. 566. Parol inadmissible to show a sale contract absolute on its face was in fact conditional. Bass Dry Goods Co. v. Granite City Mfg. Co., 119 Ga. 124, 45 S. E. 980. A contemporaneous oral agreement that title was to pass cannot be received to contradict a written conditional sale contract. Forbes v. Taylor, 139 Ala. 286, 35 So. 865. Parol evidence inadmissible to show certain buildings were not intended to be included in a bill of sale, the validity of the instrument not being in issue [Civ. Code, § 4430; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3132, 3136]. Hogan v. Kelly [Mont.] 76 P. 81. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that at the time of a conveyance the grantee agreed to hold title in trust for the grantor, as this would contradict the deed. Richardson v. McConaughey [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 287. Verbal agreement to submit loss to arbitration could not be shown to contradict fire insurance policy. Rutter v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 138 Ala. 202, 35 So. 33. The effect of a clause in a written lease cannot be limited by a parol agreement. Woodward v. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 896. A written lease being unambiguous, and there being no averment or proof that certain provisions had been omitted therefrom by accident, fraud or mistake, it could not be varied by parol. In re Luckenbill, 127 F. 984. The accommodation maker of a note cannot set up, when sued on the note, a parol agreement by the bank that discounted it, to look solely to the one for whose accommodation the note was made, for payment. Earle v. Enos, 130 F. 467. Parol evidence was inadmissible to show that the place of payment of a note was a bank, though such place was insufficiently described in the note. Baily v. Birkhofer, 123 Iowa, 69, 98 N. W. 594. Parol testimony was inadmissible, in action by an indorsee of a note, to show that payment should be made only as the whisky for which it was given was delivered. Beattyville Bank v. Roberts, 25 Ky. L. R. 1796, 78 S. W. 901. Where a note shows one as an indorser, he cannot be proved a surety by parol. Barringer v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 533. Where a tax deed misdescribed the land, parol evidence was inadmissible to prove that the sheriff intended to describe the land involved in the suit. Talley v. Schlatitz [Mo.] 79 S. W. 162. It is not competent to show by parol that land was sold for taxes of a different year from the year stated in a tax deed. Bower v. Chess & Wymand Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 444.

In an action for damages for delay in shipment, based on the tort and not on the contract of shipment, evidence was admissible to prove a previous intention to ship by another road. International, etc., R. Co. v. McGehee [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 804. Oral testimony is admissible to show the terms of an alleged oral contract, when an issue in the case is whether the contract in suit was oral or written. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Halsell [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1241. Where defendant, in a suit to recover a certificate representing a seat in a stock exchange, claimed title through a written assignment, and also by virtue of an oral agreement of which the transfer of the certificate was the consummation, the oral agreement, executed, could be shown. Hamblen v. German, 93 App. Div. 464, 87 N. Y. S. 642.

2. Letters showed on their face that they did not constitute a completed contract. Courtney v. Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co., 97 Md. 499, 55 A. 614. The correspondence not containing all the terms of the agreement, parol evidence was admissible to supply the deficiency. Locke v. Wilson [Mich.] 98 N. W. 400. Written contract for sale of stone held complete, rendering inadmissible parol evidence as to freight charges. Minnesota Sandstone Co. v. Clark [Wash.] 77 P. 803. Parol evidence admitted to explain a written unsigned memorandum of a sale contract, since such memorandum was not an instrument within the rule excluding parol explanation. Messenger v. Woge [Colo. App.] 78 P. 314. A railroad passenger ticket does not express all the terms and conditions of the contract of carriage. Ames v. Southern Pac. Co., 141 Cal. 728, 75 P. 310.

Contra: When the contract of carriage was evidenced by a railroad ticket, its terms could not be added to by showing a verbal agreement to carry plaintiffs to their destination in the same car throughout the journey. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison [Tex.] 80 S. W. 1139.

Terms on which writing is silent: Where a written contract left it uncertain what services were to be performed thereunder, or what recovery was contemplated, or how payment was to be made, oral or written contemporaneous statements in reference thereto were admissible. Barcus v. Gates, 130 F. 364. Where an insurance policy was silent as to what mortality tables were used in calculating extended insurance, parol evidence is admissible on the point, it being presumed the parties contracted with reference to tables then in use. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Bailey, 25 Ky. L. R. 2251, 80 S. W. 452. Where several writings refer to the same indebtedness but contain no provision in regard to the order of payment, an oral agreement as to the application of payments may be shown. Grogan v. Valley Trading Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 211. Parol evidence is admissible to supply a description of leased property and its condition, and the purpose for which it was leased, when these matters were in issue, and the lease was silent in regard thereto. Landt v. Schneider [Mont.] 77 P. 307. Where a contract made in one state, to be performed in another, does not specify the law which is to govern, parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the parties in regard thereto. Davis v. Tandy [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 457. A written sale contract being silent on the question of payment of freight, an oral agreement in regard thereto may be shown. Robert Buist Co. v. Lancaster Mercantile Co. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 978. Where a contract is partly written and partly oral, parol evidence is admissible as to terms on which the writing is silent, so long as the written portion is not varied or contradicted. Sherman Oil & Cotton Co. v. Dallas Oil & Refining Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 961. A cablegram from the owner of property to an attorney in fact was admissible to explain a general power of attorney, when the written power was not thereby varied. Muir v. Westcott, 34 Wash. 463, 75 P. 1107. Where several owners of land make a joint gas and oil lease, the contract being silent as to the division of royalties among them, an agreement as to such division may be shown by parol. Rymer v. South Penn. Oil Co., 54 W. Va. 530, 46 S. E. 559.

Contra: Terms concerning which the contract is silent cannot be added by parol. Union Selling Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 128 F. 672. And it is held that the term or duration of a contract of employment cannot be shown by parol. Eichenauer v. Rentz Candy Co., 43 Misc. 151, 88 N. Y. S. 260. Teaching contract. Henry School Tp. v. Meredith, 32 Ind. App. 607, 70 N. E. 393. Contract of agency. Davis v. Fidelity Fire Ins. Co., 208 Ill. 375, 70 N. E. 359.

Writings other than the contract in suit: Written memorandum, not made a part of a contract and not signed by the parties, could be explained or varied by parol. Smith v. Williams, 90 App. Div. 507, 85 N. Y. S. 506. A letter written by one of the parties to an oral agreement, stating the writer's understanding of the contract, is not the contract, and may be contradicted by parol evidence of the other party. Huxford v. Meinhart, 119 Ga. 610, 46 S. E. 852. An incomplete memorandum to show a shipment and consignee and intended to be signed and returned as a receipt, but in fact not signed, while admissible to show the agreement between the parties, will not exclude parol evidence in regard to the agreement. Ronan v. 155,453 Feet of Lumber, 131 F. 345.

3. Held ambiguous: Clause in written contract providing for payment of a certain sum "as hereafter agreed." Morrison v. Dickey, 119 Ga. 698, 46 S. E. 863. A stipulation that a contract for sale of corn was "on Kansas City weights and grades." Fort Grain Co. v. Hubby [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 363. Where contracts were ambiguous and incomplete, the construction placed on them by the parties during preceding years could be shown. Consolidated Dental Mfg. Co. v. Holliday, 131 F. 384. Subsequent conversations of the parties showing contemporary construction placed on contract were admissible. New York House Wrecking Co. v. O'Rourke, 92 App. Div. 217, 86 N. Y. S. 1116. Surrounding facts and circumstances and construction placed on grant of right of way by parties could be shown. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 781. Parol evidence admissible to show "shares" referred to in written agreement meant "pool shares" on which certificates were not to be issued until after the expiration of five years. Williams v. Ashurst Oil, Land & Development Co. [Cal.] 78 P. 28. Where the description in a deed of partition is ambiguous, parol evidence is admissible to show the boundaries and extent of ownership of each tenant. Graves v. Broughton, 185 Mass. 174, 69 N. E. 1083. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain language in a writing ambiguous because of unexpressed terms. Hebb v. Welsh, 185 Mass. 335, 70 N. E. 440. Where after two retainers, differing in terms, had been executed, and the attorney then withdrew from the case, but was later reemployed on the "original terms," parol evidence was admissible to show which retainer contained such terms. McIlvaine v. Steinson, 90 App. Div. 77, 85 N. Y. S. 889. Where a testator's intention in executing a codicil to his will was obscure, a letter written to the residuary legatees three days before executing the codicil was admissible to show his intention. Ladies' Union Benev. Soc. v. Van Netta, 88 N. Y. S. 413. Where a memorandum of a contract for the sale of lands described the property as situated on a certain street between two other streets, parol evidence was admissible to show that at that time defendant owned only one lot so situated, which had been conveyed to her on a foreclosure sale, the deed being on record. Miller v. Tuck, 88 N. Y. S. 495. Where there were two persons bearing similar names in the neighborhood, a shipper could show by parol to which one he shipped and consigned goods, the ownership of the goods being in issue. Newberry v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 133 N. C. 45, 45 S. E. 356.

Held unambiguous: Pringle v. King [Ariz.] 78 P. 367; Neale v. American Elec. Vehicle Co. [Mass.] 71 N. E. 566. "Quality guaranteed." Union Selling Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 128 F. 672. Terms "f. o. b. cars." Vogt v. Shienebeck [Wis.] 100 N. W. 820. "Ready for occupancy," in written lease. Gerry v. Siebrecht, 88 N. Y. S. 1034. A charter party. Johnson v. Bibb Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 95, 73 P. 730. Clause in lease guaranteeing payment of rent for four months after ceasing to pay according to the stipulations of the lease. Rieger v. Royal Brewing Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 969. The term "legal representatives," used in a contract to limit the meaning of the term "assigns," is not ambiguous. Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 138 Ala. 650, 35 So. 694. Parol evidence inadmissible to extend contract to include other parties. Thompson v. Erie R. Co., 96 App. Div. 539, 89 N. Y. S. 92. Evidence of reputation as to the location of a lost ancient monument is inadmissible if the description in the deed is sufficient to show the location. Smith v. Trustees of Freeholders & Commonalty of Brookhaven, 89 App. Div. 475, 86 N. Y. S. 34. The lines and corners of grants, established by survey, cannot be changed by parol, when the field notes of the survey are unambiguous and can be applied to the ground. Jamison v. New York & T. Land Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 969. Where a grantor made several absolute conveyances of the same tract of land to different grantees, all deeds being unambiguous and containing good descriptions, letters of grantor to last grantee were inadmissible to explain his deed. McManus v. Chollar [C. C. A.] 128 F. 902. The statement of a borrowing member of a loan association, who was also a local agent of the association, was inadmissible on the meaning of the contract. Coppes v. Union Nat. Sav. Loan Ass'n [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 702. Written articles of adoption being clear and unambiguous, extraneous evidence of statements by parties and their feeling toward complainant was inadmissible. Bowins v. English [Mich.] 101 N. W. 204.

Custom and usage cannot be shown, ordinarily, if the contract is plain. Bill of lading. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 860. Proof of a general usage inadmissible. Kalamazoo Corset Co. v. Simon, 129 F. 144. Broker's custom. Chilberg v. Lyng [C. C. A.] 128 F. 899.

Evidence that it was customary and reasonably necessary to turn back hot water into a pond, in the operation of a steam plant, was inadmissible to contradict the terms of a lease of the pond. Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 185 Mass. 463, 70 N. E. 937. Proof of usage or custom is incompetent to impose a limitation of liability of a carrier, not included in the contract of shipment. McMillan v. American Exp. Co., 123 Iowa, 236, 98 N. W. 629. But proof of a general usage is admissible to explain a contract either in the absence of express stipulations or where the meaning of the parties is uncertain from language used and the usage affords an explanation. Kalamazoo Corset Co. v. Simon, 129 F. 144.

4. Testifying to the fact of execution of a deed to a person named is not testifying to the contents of the deed. Baltes Land, Stone & Oil Co. v. Sutton, 32 Ind. App. 14, 69 N. E. 179. The purchase of a railroad may be shown by parol. International, etc., R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 82.

5. Stickney v. Hughes [Wyo.] 75 P. 945; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co., 72 N. H. 402, 57 A. 97. To explain uncertain or ambiguous terms. Union Selling Co. v. Jones [C. C. A.] 128 F. 672.

6. Extrinsic evidence as to conditions and circumstances surrounding a testator at the time of making his will is admissible to show the true application of a devise to the subject-matter, designated as the "house and lot where I now reside." Crossen v. Carr [N. J. Law] 57 A. 158. Extrinsic evidence admissible to locate land received under a will. Price v. Price, 133 N. C. 494, 45 S. E. 855. Lease referred to indefinitely in an assignment may be identified by parol. Ascarete v. Pfaff [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 974. Conversations regarding boundary lines before execution of a deed are not inadmissible if not introduced to dispute the terms of the deed. Dubay v. Kelly [Mich.] 100 N. W. 677. Character of subject-matter of sale contract could be shown in order to determine what passed by the sale. Bagley v. Rose Hill Sugar Co., 111 La. 249, 35 So. 539. In an action to enforce a vendor's lien on nonpayment of a note for the purchase price,

Agreements collateral to the obligation imported by the written contract, and not inconsistent therewith,[8] and subsequent agreements,[9] may be shown by the facts surrounding the sale, and the identity of the land sold may be shown by parol. Cavin v. Wichita Valley Town Site Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 342.

Where a sufficient description of land is given in a written contract regarding it, parol evidence is admissible to fit the description to the land. Halsell v. Renfrow [Okl.] 78 P. 118. But where the description is wanting or insufficient, parol evidence cannot both supply the description and apply it to the land. Id.

7. The actual relations to a note of parties whose names appear thereon may be shown by parol. Helvie v. McKain, 32 Ind. App. 507, 70 N. E. 178. Parol evidence admissible to show one signing as a witness to a written agreement was the real party in interest. Curran v. Holland, 141 Cal. 437, 75 P. 46. That a contract made by a corporation agent was for the corporation's benefit, though the contract does not suggest such fact on its face. Escondido Oil & Development Co. v. Glaser [Cal.] 77 P. 1040. That a judgment rendered in favor of one person was by virtue of another's right, by agreement between them. Jones v. Robb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 395. Whether two joint grantees in a deed are husband and wife. McLaughlin v. Rice, 185 Mass. 212, 70 N. E. 52.

As to notes: When one not a payee indorses a note before delivery, his real relation to the instrument may be shown. Herrick v. Edwards [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 466. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the holder of a note indorsed in blank to be the trustee of an express trust. Graham v. Troth [Kan.] 77 P. 92. The time when, or the order in which, indorsements were placed on a note, may be proved by parol. Redden v. Lambert, 112 La. 740, 36 So. 668.

Partnership contracts: It is competent to show by parol that one partner signed letters, constituting a contract, on behalf of the firm. Huguenot Mills v. Jempson & Co. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 687. Or that notes jointly executed by partners are firm debts. In re Weisenberg & Co., 131 F. 517. As between partners, real estate purchased with partnership funds may be shown to be partnership property, though the deed is made to individuals as tenants in common (Cundey v. Hall, 208 Pa. 325, 57 A. 761); but such proof is inadmissible as against a third person (Id.). After proof by book accounts that transactions had been with a firm, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that one member only had been the real party thereto. State v. Elmore [S. C.] 46 S. E. 939.

8. An independent verbal contract relating to the same subject-matter, but not inconsistent with the written contract. Cook v. Littlefield, 98 Me. 299, 56 A. 899; Hamblen v. German, 93 App. Div. 464, 87 N. Y. S. 642. An agreement by a grantee to pay a mortgage on the land. Mowry v. Mowry [Mich.] 100 N. W. 388. The existence of a separate oral agreement relating to distinct subject-matter, on which the writing is silent, and which is not inconsistent with the writing. Stickney v. Hughes [Wyo.] 75 P. 945. Though a bill of sale is complete, a parol agreement that timber on the land should pass with the mill sold, may be shown. Welever v. Advance Shingle Co., 34 Wash. 331, 75 P. 863. A recital in a deed of a portion of mortgaged property that in case of foreclosure, the tract conveyed should be first sold, does not preclude showing an oral agreement that the grantor's title and possession of 80 acres retained by him should be protected. First Nat. Bank v. Bower [Neb.] 98 N. W. 834. Parol evidence as to a transfer of stock was admissible, though a deed of land was executed as a part of the same transaction and the consideration named therein covered also the other property transferred. Lathrop v. Humble [Wis.] 97 N. W. 905. A contract between the insured under a fire policy and the insurance broker who has advanced premiums, as to the disposition of unearned premiums to be returned in case of cancellation, does not vary the contract of insurance, and may be shown by parol. Miller v. Home Ins. Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 98. An agreement at the time of procuring a policy that plaintiff, though having no insurable interest in the life of the assured, should pay the premiums and take the proceeds, could be shown in an action on the policy. Hinton v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 135 N. C. 314, 47 S. E. 474. Parol proof of an agreement to apply a certain anticipated fund on a note does not vary or contradict the note, as the agreement is collateral to the promise to pay. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Smucker [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 278. A verbal agreement with a carrier's agent to have certain cars ready for a shipper at a certain time held not merged in a subsequent written contract of shipment, limiting the agent's power to make verbal contracts. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Combes [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1045. An assignment of a contract for sale of land being silent thereon, a parol agreement to apply part of the proceeds of the assignment to satisfaction of liens on the property may be shown, this being really a collateral agreement. Bell v. Wiltson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1049. Though a lease is assigned by a written instrument, parol evidence is admissible to show the assignment was as security only. Gross v. Heckert [Wis.] 97 N. W. 952. A bill of sale may be shown by parol proof to be a chattel mortgage. Rogers v. Nidiffer [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 673. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a mortgage was given to secure future advances as well as past debts recited therein. Kirby v. Raynes, 138 Ala. 194, 35 So. 118. A deed is not contradicted when it is shown that the grantee agreed to hold title in trust for a third person. Richardson v. McConaughey [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 287. A written instrument reciting the terms of a contract of sale, the receipt of earnest money, and that the money will be returned if title is not satisfactory, is not varied by testimony that the purchaser is ready, willing and able to purchase when the title is shown to be satisfactory. Wilson v. Clark [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 649. The cashier of a trust company agreed with the drawer of a draft to discount it for the drawee, and the drawee sent the draft to the cashier to be discounted according to such agreement. The conversation between parol, unless such proof is in conflict with the statute of frauds.[10] Since the purpose and meaning of a mere receipt may be shown by parol,[11] the recital, in a contract, of the receipt of a valuable consideration, is subject to parol modification to show the true consideration;[12] but if the recital of consideration is contractual, and not a mere receipt, it cannot be contradicted by parol.[13] Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that a writing, purporting to be a contract, never became effective as such,[14] or was void ab initio,[15] or was induced by fraud;[16] and where, the cashier and drawer was admissible. Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. v. Whitney, 88 N. Y. S. 578.

9. Rutter v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 138 Ala. 202, 35 So. 33; Cook v. Littlefield, 98 Me. 299, 56 A. 899; Putnam Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Canfield [R. I.] 56 A. 1033. An oral modification of a contract may be shown, if executed. Reeves & Co. v. Bruening [N. D.] 100 N. W. 241. A verbal agreement, subsequent to execution of contract, fixing time of payment, could be shown, the written contract being silent on that point. Putnam Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Canfield [R. I.] 56 A. 1033.

10. Putnam Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Canfield [R. I.] 56 A. 1033; Strahl v. Western Grocer Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 1043. See Frauds, Statute of, 2 Curr. L. 108.

11. Hennessy v. Kennedy Furniture Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 291.

12. Baltes Land, Stone & Oil Co. v. Sutton, 32 Ind. App. 14, 69 N. E. 179; Neville v. Hughes [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 735; Scudder & Co. v. Morris [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 217; Holmes v. Seaman [Neb.] 100 N. W. 417; McGary v. McDermott, 207 Pa. 620, 57 A. 46; Wilcox v. Priester [S. C.] 46 S. E. 553; Pickett v. Mercer [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 285. That there was no consideration. Stickney v. Hughes [Wyo.] 75 P. 945. Failure of consideration for a note, or a set-off against the same. Brown v. Smedley [Mich.] 98 N. W. 856. That other lands were part of the consideration, where the deed recited a consideration of "love and affection and one dollar." Edwards v. Latimer [Mo.] 82 S. W. 109. That consideration was not to be paid until title was perfected. Johnson v. Bean [Minn.] 99 N. W. 893. Acknowledgment of payment of consideration in a deed is a mere receipt which may be contradicted by parol. Fowlkes v. Lea [Miss.] 36 So. 1036. Consideration of a contract is always open to inquiry in suit for enforcement. Butler & Co. v. McCall, 119 Ga. 503, 46 S. E. 647. Parol evidence is admissible to show the real consideration of a conveyance, if consistent with the expressed consideration. Butt v. Smith [Wis.] 99 N. W. 328. Parol evidence is admissible to show a grantee assumed a mortgage, though the warranty deed makes no mention of it. Brosseau v. Lowy, 209 Ill. 405, 70 N. E. 901. Where the expressed consideration was one dollar and assumption of debts by the grantor, and it appeared there were no debts, parol evidence was admissible to show the real inducement leading to the conveyance. Medical College Laboratory v. New York University, 178 N. Y. 153, 70 N. E. 467. A recital in a bill of lading of a reduction in the usual freight rate is not conclusive on the issue of a consideration for a special contract of carriage, but the real transaction may be shown by parol. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland, 162 Ind. 406, 69 N. E. 138. Where consideration in a lease was recited as a certain amount to be worked out at one dollar a day, parol evidence was admissible to show the character of the work and when it was to be done. Ingram v. Dailey, 123 Iowa, 188, 98 N. W. 627. That the real consideration for a release was a promise of future employment may be shown by parol, though a small money consideration be expressed in the writing. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 788. Recital of number of acres conveyed by a deed yields to description by metes and bounds, and true acreage may be shown by parol. See v. Mallonee [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 557.

13. See v. Mallonee [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 557. As where the consideration is made a part of the contract itself. Neville v. Hughes [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 735. Terms of a written lease providing for payment of annual rent of $200 could not be changed by parol to call for $160. Merchants' State Bank v. Ruettell, 12 N. D. 519, 97 N. W. 853. Where a deed recited that it was in consideration of "the debt and trust hereinafter mentioned and created and the sum of one dollar," parol evidence was inadmissible to show no consideration. Wishart v. Gerhart [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1094. Parol evidence, offered to show the true consideration, but which in fact contradicts the writing, is inadmissible. Stickney v. Hughes [Wyo.] 75 P. 945. Where a written contract recites a pecuniary consideration, the true consideration may be shown by parol; an expressed consideration other than of a pecuniary nature is conclusive and cannot be changed by parol. Anderman v. Meier, 91 Minn. 413, 98 N. W. 327.

14. Real intention of parties in executing the writing may be shown. Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co., 12 Okl. 413, 75 P. 528. It may be shown by parol that deed by a widow to the tenant of her homestead was made under an agreement that she would sell to him if she had the legal right to do so. Moore v. Moore [Ky.] 78 S. W. 141. Where one party to a deed was ignorant and illiterate and reposed confidence in the other party, parol evidence was admissible to show an agreement that the deed was not to take effect until the grantor's death, and that grantee was to support grantor during her life. Wilson v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 839.

Conditions precedent and nonperformance thereof may be shown, as that a completed instrument was to have been delivered. Elastic Tip Co. v. Graham [Mass.] 71 N. E. 117. That neither of two written options was to be enforced unless the other was also carried out. Reynolds v. Hooker [Vt.] 56 A. 988. That a signature to what purports to be a completed instrument was to take effect only on its being signed by others, and through fraud[17] or mistake,[18] the writing does not embody the real agreement of the parties, the intended contract may be shown. The rule excluding parol evidence of writings may not be invoked by,[19] nor is it binding upon, a third person not a party to the contract.[20]

The rule applies with special force to contracts required by the statute of frauds to be in writing,[21] and to public records.[22]

that they have not signed. Elastic Tip Co. v. Graham [Mass.] 71 N. E. 117. A certificate being delivered with the understanding that there is to be a sale if another party, acting as agent, has not already sold it, such agreement may be shown. State v. Chamber of Commerce [Wis.] 98 N. W. 930. Parol evidence showing a condition expressed in a written instrument had been met by the person on whom it was imposed is admissible and does not vary or contradict the writing. Henry v. Herschey [Idaho] 75 P. 266. But when a written contract is to take effect from delivery, and is delivered, an agreement that it is to terminate on the happening of a condition subsequent cannot be shown by parol. State v. Chamber of Commerce [Wis.] 98 N. W. 930.

15. Stock gambling contract. Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exch., 72 N. H. 315, 56 A. 754. The true consideration for a note making it a "peddler's note" and hence void under the statute may be shown by parol evidence, even though the writing is contradicted. Burns v. Sparks [Ky.] 82 S. W. 425.

16. McCrary v. Pritchard, 119 Ga. 876, 47 S. E. 341; Wilcox v. Priester [S. C.] 46 S. E. 553; Hallwood Cash Register v. Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 857; Trinity Valley Trust Co. v. Stockwell [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 793; O'Connor v. Lighthizer; 34 Wash. 152. 75 P. 643. Fraudulent misrepresentations of material facts going to the consideration, on the faith of which a party entered into the contract. Atherholt v. Hughes [Pa.] 58 A. 269. A condition in an application for life insurance that no statement of the soliciting agent shall be binding on the company unless reduced to writing could not be contradicted by showing alleged false representations by parol. Blanks v. Moore, 139 Ala. 24, 36 So. 783. Parol evidence is admissible in behalf of one who has title to property by authentic act, to prevent its being taken from her on a charge of fraud. Cusachs v. Dugue [La.] 36 So. 960.

17. A parol agreement between the parties before and at the time of the execution of the written one, omitted from the latter by fraud, accident or mistake, the omission resulting in damage may be shown. Fry v. National Glass Co., 207 Pa. 505, 56 A. 1063. Parol evidence is admissible to show mistake, imperfection, illegality or fraud, in connection with the execution of a written contract. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2186, 3132. Sathre v. Rolfe [Mont.] 77 P. 431. Parol evidence admissible to show a beneficiary could not read, and the agent did not disclose statements contained in a written application for benefit insurance, and that beneficiary was ignorant of such statements until death of insured. Home Circle Soc. No. 1 v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 84.

18. Mutual mistake. Jones v. Warren, 134 N. C. 390, 46 S. E. 740. One party ignorant of what he was signing. Melle v. Candelora, 88 N. Y. S. 385. That name written as "Willis" as grantee in a deed was intended for "Willie." White v. Simonton [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 621. Field notes admissible to show a mistake in patent in relation to name of grantee. New York & T. Land Co. v. Dooley [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1030. An entry on land being shown to have been made, evidence as to having seen the certificate in a certain person's possession was admissible. tending to show the certificate and patent had been issued in the wrong name. Martin v. Brand [Mo.] 81 S. W. 443.

19. In an action against a railway to recover for buildings burned, the defendant could not object to testimony by the grantee in a deed that the buildings did not pass by the deed, but title remained in the grantor; the grantee thereby precluded herself from a recovery for their destruction. Olmstead v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 27 Utah, 515, 76 P. 557.

20. Wilson v. Mulloney, 185 Mass. 430, 70 N. E. 448; Carmack v. Drum [Wash.] 73 P. 377; Corbin v. Oriental Trading Co., 32 Wash. 668, 73 P. 781. The parol evidence rule is limited by statute in California (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856) to parties to the agreement, their representatives and successors in interest. Bickerdike v. State [Cal.] 78 P. 270. Where defendant agreed to pay certain of plaintiff's debts to a third person, and the written agreement between plaintiff and third person did not state fully plaintiff's obligations, parol evidence was admissible to show what debts defendant agreed to pay. Fosha v. Prosser [Wis.] 97 N. W. 924. Where estates of two tenants conflict, conversations of the lessor and one tenant are admissible to show the nature and extent of the tenancy at will, and this does not vary the other written lease. Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 185 Mass. 463, 70 N. E. 937.

21. Nesmith v. Martin [Colo.] 75 P. 590. Under Nebraska statute, an advancement cannot be proved by parol. Boden v. Mier [Neb.] 98 N. W. 701. A wife cannot make a binding oral contract with her husband for an equal share in the profits arising from land held by them in entirety, since such agreement would change the legal effect of the deed creating the tenancy. Morrill v. Morrill [Mich.] 101 N. W. 209.

Trusts required by the statute of frauds to be in writing cannot be established by parol. Hill v. Warsawski, 93 App. Div. 198, 87 N. Y. S. 551; Boyd v. Boyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 39. Trust deed could not be changed by parol to mortgage to secure other debts. Christian v. Highlands, 32 Ind. App. 104, 69 N. E. 266. A trust arising by operation of law may be proved by parol or inferred from circumstances. Lyons v. Berlau, 67 Kan. 426, 73 P. 52.

Where a deed contains the usual habendum clause of a fee simple deed, parol evidence is competent to show a trust in favor of third parties (Mee v. Mee [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 830);

§ 6. Hearsay. A. General rules.[23]—Unsworn statements, out of court, by persons not parties to the action, are inadmissible,[24] and testimony based on but if the deed contains provisions expressly authorizing the grantee to dispose of the property conveyed at the grantee's discretion, parol proof of a trust in favor of third persons is inconsistent with such terms, and incompetent (Id.)

Legal title cannot be proved by parol (Reynolds v. Clowdus [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 277), unless ownership of the land is merely a collateral and incidental issue (Garrison v. Glass, 139 Ala. 512, 36 So. 725). Parol evidence is inadmissible to establish the intended legal effect of a void deed. Boyd v. Boyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 39. A waiver of a condition precedent in a deed cannot be shown by parol, since any verbal agreement changing such condition would be void under the statute of frauds. Culy v. Upham [Mich.] 97 N. W. 405. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that property bought by a third person was in reality bought by complainant's debtor, since the effect would be to bring into the debtor's estate property that had not previously belonged to it. Hoffmann v. Ackermann, 110 La. 1070, 35 So. 293. An agreement that part of the land conveyed for park purposes was to be used as a street was incapable of parol proof, because it would contradict the granting clause and limit the estate conveyed. Pickett v. Mercer [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 285. Answers to interrogatories on facts and articles, relied on to establish simulation or agency in real estate transfer, cannot be contradicted by parol, nor can writings insufficient per se to establish title be eked out by the testimony of witnesses. Ackerman v. Peters [La.] 36 So. 923. When a deed, absolute in form, is given to secure a debt, a subsequent oral agreement and destruction of the note cannot pass legal title to the mortgagee by the original instrument. Keller v. Kirby [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 82. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that any other than the grantee named in a conveyance is bound by the obligations of the instrument. Moore v. Boyd [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 647.

A party to a written contract for the sale of land may waive his rights thereunder by parol, and the contract may be annulled, abandoned and extinguished by parol. Wadge v. Kittleson, 12 N. D. 452, 97 N. W. 856. The statute of frauds does not prevent proving an executed sale of personalty by parol. Lathrop v. Humble [Wis.] 97 N. W. 905.

22. Parol evidence is inadmissible to supply, extend or modify the records of judicial acts of boards of municipal officers or county commissioners. Parol evidence of a mayor to show authority to construct a sewer excluded, when the record did not show such authority. Kidson v. Bangor [Me.] 58 A. 900.

Journals of the general assembly cannot be contradicted (State v. Armour Packing Co., 135 N. C. 62, 47 S. E. 411), or varied or explained by extraneous evidence (Town of Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023). An ambiguity in the description of land in an assessment roll cannot be explained by parol. Leavenworth v. Greenville Wharf & Storage Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 138. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show a governor first approved and filed a bill, and then withdrew, vetoed, and refiled it, the records showing the bill was vetoed. People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602. The record showing adjournment of a common council to a certain day, parol evidence was inadmissible to show adjournment in fact to a different day. Chippewa Bridge Co. v. Durand [Wis.] 99 N. W. 603. Declaration of a judge who signed an order appointing receivers inadmissible to show grounds on which he entered the order. Blue Mountain Iron & Steel Co. v. Portner [C. C. A.] 131 F. 57. Oral evidence was admissible to show the vote by which an ordinance was passed, the record simply stating the passage, without recording the vote. Gove v. Tacoma, 34 Wash. 434, 76 P. 73.

Corporate records: Since the law does not required a record of the vote of the directors of an agricultural society, negotiating a loan, parol evidence is admissible to show such vote. Ismon v. Loder [Mich.] 97 N. W. 769. Where minutes of a meeting are silent as to a transaction claimed to have occurred, oral evidence is admissible to prove the transaction. Ehrlich v. Chevra Agudas Achin Aushi Wizna, 86 N. Y. S. 820. But oral evidence is inadmissible to prove an alleged transaction, unless an omission or error in the record be shown. Id.

Note: "Parol evidence may be received in some cases to supplement a record (Inhabitants of West Bath v. County Com'rs, 36 Me. 74; Smith v. County Com'rs, 42 Me. 395), and to show to what subject the action of a corporation applies (Baker v. Inhabitants of Windham, 13 Me. 74). It is also admissible in special proceedings, instituted for the purpose, to correct errors in a record (Willard v. Whitney, 49 Me. 235); or, if the record is destroyed or lost, to prove its purport (Gore v. Elwell, 22 Me. 442)." But the general rule is as stated in Kidson v. City of Bangor [Me.] 58 A. 900 (above) from which this excerpt is taken.

Illustrations—Excluded as hearsay: What plaintiff told her father and aunt she had heard defendant say. Ranck v. Brackbill [Pa.] 58 A. 884. Statements by a third person when delivering a deed to the grantee. Schaefer v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 857. Testimony that a grantor, since deceased, had told witness he had not paid a certain debt. McGowan v. Davenport, 134 N. C. 526, 47 S. E. 27. Evidence that testatrix said she intended to give a servant something more if she stayed during life of testatrix. Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 585, 58 A. 507. Conversations, not in plaintiff's presence, between other parties, and a private letter of which plaintiff had no notice. Bell v. Staacke, 141 Cal. 186, 74 P. 774. Evidence that acquaintances of injured person had hearsay, and not on the personal knowledge of the witness, is also excluded.[25] The hearsay rule, however, does not exclude so-called "traditionary evidence" of matters of public or general interest,[26] nor proof of age and pedigree by family never heard of her having hernia before an accident. Pelly v. Denison & S. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 542. Reports to a company's officer of prior similar accidents. Allen v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1142. The report of a grand jury on the unsafe condition of a theater. Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 313, 75 P. 899. Manufacturers' catalogue inadmissible to prove capacity of hot air plant. Stagg & Conrad v. St. Jean [Mont.] 74 P. 740. Recital of consideration in a deed is not conclusive, and as to a stranger to the deed, it is hearsay. Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515. The recitals of consideration in deeds of land are mere unsworn statements, and inadmissible as proof of the value of land in the vicinity where the land transferred is situated. City of New Orleans v. Manfre, 111 La. 927, 35 So. 981. A receipt acknowledging payment of money is generally inadmissible against a stranger to it as proof of payment, being hearsay only. But when admitted without proper objection, it is sufficient to support a finding based thereon. Beebe v. Redward [Wash.] 77 P. 1052. In an action against defendant for causing plaintiff's discharge by his employer, plaintiff's testimony that his boss had received a letter from defendant, seeking the discharge, and that his employer's superintendent told him the same thing, was hearsay. Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co., 135 N. C. 392, 47 S. E. 481. In libel action, testimony of one in the district attorney's office that he had investigated the alleged libellous charges and had reported against dismissal, and that in his opinion the case had been "fixed" (Carpenter v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 96 App. Div. 376, 89 N. Y. S. 263), and conversation between a reporter and an attorney as to certain alleged libellous charges was hearsay and inadmissible to show justification (Id.).

25. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Damskibsaktieselskabet Habil, 138 Ala. 348, 35 So. 344; Barclay v. Smith [Miss.] 36 So. 449. One who testified he did not know what certain lumber inspection rules were could not testify as to the grading of lumber thereunder. Bray v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., 132 N. C. 695, 44 S. E. 403. Recitals in preliminary proofs of death, based on hearsay, and necessarily conclusions, are not admissions so as to prevent a showing of the true facts on the trial. Stevens v. Continental Casualty Co., 12 N. D. 463, 97 N. W. 862. Mercantile agency reports are inadmissible to prove a partnership when not shown to be based on reports authorized by the person sought to be bound, or that knew of them. Marks v. Hardy's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1770, 78 S. W. 864. The report of a commercial agency is rendered admissible by testimony by the agent that the facts therein were told him by the merchant concerned. Courtney v. Wm. Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co., 97 Md. 499, 55 A. 614.

Held admissible: Witnesses having personal knowledge of transactions may testify in regard thereto though they refer at times to matters not entirely within their own knowledge. Bright v. Carter, 117 Wis. 631, 94 N. W. 645. Testimony as to the market price of lemons was not incompetent merely because the knowledge of witness was derived from information furnished by others. Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exch. [Cal.] 77 P. 993. In an action to recover commissions, evidence of conversations between plaintiff and owners of the property other than defendant, and a prospective purchaser of the property, though not binding on defendant, were held competent to show that plaintiff had carried out his contract. Good v. Smith, 44 Or. 578, 76 P. 354.

General reputation in a community is inadmissible to prove partnership. Marks v. Hardy's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1770, 78 S. W. 864. Or unchastity of a wife before and at the time of marriage. Kennington v. Catoe [S. C.] 47 S. E. 719. Or character of house of ill fame. Ramsey v. Smith, 138 Ala. 333, 35 So. 325. Or condition of insured's health when she became a member of a beneficial organization. Home Circle Soc. No. 1 v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 84. Or that plaintiff was a prostitute. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S W. 340.

But general reputation is sometimes competent evidence, thus: The fact of knowledge may be proved by circumstances and general reputation as to the fact, notice of which is sought to be shown. Continental Ins. Co. v. Cummings [Tex.] 81 S. W. 705. Evidence of a person's reputation for paying his debts is admissible on an issue of notice of his insolvency. Hooks v. Pafford [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 99 . Proof of the general reputation and belief in the existence of a fact is admissible to show knowledge thereof by one in the neighborhood. Wright v. Stewart, 130 F. 905. Evidence that cattle were generally recognized and spoken of in the community as belonging to a person held admissible on ownership issue. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503. On an issue of adverse possession, a general understanding in the neighborhood as to ownership may, it seems, be shown, to prove the notoriety of the adverse possession; but the exclusion of such evidence was held not prejudicial error in this case. Miller v. Shumway [Mich.] 98 N. W. 385. Evidence that a person was treated by a negro and mulatto woman, husband and wife, as their child, was competent on the issue whether he was a negro; as was the reputed race of his reputed parents. Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008.

26. When the public records covering the acquisition of certain land by Hartford, and a tender of it by the city to the state were before the court, "traditionary evidence," consisting of the discussion of citizens in a public meeting, and a newspaper article, at the time, was inadmissible to prove the general understanding as to the legal effect of the transactions. City of Hartford v. Maslen, 76 Conn. 599, 57 A. 740. Where two persons who signed a deed as trustees of the city of Monterey were dead and a third mentally and physically incapacitated, evidence of common repute was admissible to show they history and tradition;[27] nor statements introduced for a purpose other than to prove the facts stated.[28]

acted as trustees at the date of execution of the deed. City of Monterey v. Jacks, 139 Cal. 542, 73 P. 436.

Note: "The exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence, which permits, in certain cases, the reception of what is called 'traditionary evidence' concerning facts of public or general interest, affecting public or private rights, is limited to proof of declarations of deceased persons, or persons supposed to be dead, or who are not available as witnesses, as to ancient rights of which they are presumed or are shown to have had competent knowledge, and which rights are incapable of proof in the ordinary way by living witnesses; and this exception is not to be favored or extended." Hall, J., in City of Hartford v. Maslem [Conn.] 57 A. 740, citing 1 Greenleaf, Ev. (13th Ed.) §§ 128-130; Thayer's Cases on Evidence, pp. 409-428; Merwin v. Morris, 71 Conn. 555, 572, 42 A. 855; Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 505-507; Wooster v. Butler, 13 Conn. 308-315.

27. Members of a family are permitted to testify to matters pertaining to pedigree, such as descent and relationship, the facts of birth, marriage and death, and the times when they occurred. A wife who had lived twenty years with her husband was competent to testify to his age, though the original source of her information was hearsay. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Bartes [Neb.] 98 N. W. 715. Anyone who has arrived at an age making him competent as a witness may testify to his own age; that witness' knowledge is based on what is told him by his parents does not render it hearsay. Loose v. State [Wis.] 97 N. W. 526; McCollum v. State, 119 Ga. 308, 46 S. E. 413. A member of a family living therein is presumptively qualified as a witness to prove the age and pedigree of the others, unless a cross-examination shows that the knowledge is not derived from family tradition and repute, but from the statements of a stranger. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Bartes [Neb.] 96 N. W. 186. Statement of insured's father that insured had consumption when she became a member of a beneficial association was admissible. Home Circle Soc. No. 1 v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 84.

Declarations of a deceased person, related to the family in question, are competent evidence in matters of pedigree, providing declarant's relationship is first shown by evidence independent of the declarations. Davis v. Moyels [Vt.] 56 A. 174. Since they are admitted "upon the principle that they are the natural effusions of a party who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth" (Lord Eldon), it must appear that such declarations were ante litem motam. Id. To constitute lis mota, it is not essential that a suit be pending; the existence of a controversy, capable of being litigated, and of a nature likely to bias the mind of declarant, is sufficient. Id. A recital in a petition to a legislature was not evidence of heirship of one named therein as heir, when there was no evidence of the petitioner's relationship to the family. Id.

Public registers and reports, such as health boards and census reports, are competent evidence in matters of age and pedigree. Murray v. Supreme Hive Ladies of Maccabees of the World [Tenn.] 80 S. W. 827. But baptismal records required to be kept by a church, while they are evidence of the fact and date of baptism, are not evidence of the date of birth, because such entry must have been based on hearsay. Bailey v. Fly [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 675.

28. As for purpose of impeachment. Belt Ry. Co. v. Confrey, 209 Ill. 344, 70 N. E. 773. See Witnesses, 2 Curr. L. 2163. Or to fix a date in the mind of a witness. North Amherst Home Tel. Co. v. Jackson, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 386. Conversations between testator and witness on day of testator's death competent on issue of sanity. Pattee v. Whitcomb, 72 N. H. 249, 56 A. 459. Conversation between a lawyer and one since deceased at the time of drafting a contract was admissible on the issue of mental capacity to contract. Grimshaw v. Kent, 67 Kan. 463, 73 P. 92.

29. See 1 Curr. L. 1149.

30. Evidence of what occurred at the time of an accident, including the acts of a companion of deceased. Proper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. [Mich.] 99 N. W. 283. In an action by a wife for alienation of her husband's affections, the relations between defendant and the husband two years before. Linck v. Linck [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 478. Trainmen's interpretation of dispatcher's orders competent to show why they moved trains as they did. Wallace v. Boston & M. R. R., 72 N. H. 504, 57 A. 913. In an action for assault and battery by a conductor, evidence of profane language used by the parties. Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701. Question asked by eight year old boy of his mother while he was being taken from under a street car which had run over him. Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 57 A. 906. Statements of bystanders made during the transaction are admissible (Seawell v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 133 N. C. 515, 45 S. E. 850), and may be testified to by the person who made them (Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 133. Statement of ranch boss as he was driving off cattle, that if they were found in defendant's pasture again they would be scattered so that they could never be found. Waggoner v. Snody [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 355. Statement of street car conductor when fact was called to his attention that a passenger had fallen off the car and was lying in the street. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Riegler's Adm'r [Ky.] 82 S. W. 382. Statements of one in possession of property, claimed to have been converted by another, tending to explain such possession. McDonald v. Bayha [Minn.] 100 N. W. 679. Statements of one who had possession of a will, made when he produced it, explaining his possession and the reason for its production, held admissible, in a will contest, forgery of the will being alleged. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. Where father and son bore the same name, acts and declarations of the father, as a party to the transaction, were admissible to show which was the intended grantee in a deed. Matthews v. E. Eppstein & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 882. Declarations of a landowner showing an intent to keep a lane open as a private way were admissible in suit to enjoin obstruction of the way as a public road. Quick v. Cotman [Iowa] 99 N. W. 301. The declarations of a father when delivering a certificate of deposit to his daughter were admissible as a part of the res gestae to show whether he was acting in his own behalf or as agent of his wife. Johnson v. Cole, 178 N. Y. 364, 70 N. E. 873. Declarations of a debtor in possession of land, claimed by a creditor to have been fraudulently conveyed to another, are admissible as part of the fraud against the claimant and for the creditor. Banks v. McCandless, 119 Ga. 793, 47 S. E. 332. Where a workman was killed by being struck with a block of wood which a foreman had negligently thrown on a car, so that it fell into a shaft of a mine, the foreman's statement, when warned, while the block was falling, was admissible. Strode v. Conkey [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 678.

The declarations must be a part of the acts which they tend to explain. In suit against a husband for goods furnished the wife who was living apart from him, her declaration that she received the goods, not a part of the transaction, was inadmissible on the issue of delivery of the goods. Meyer v. Jewell, 88 N. Y. S. 972. A pauper's declarations regarding his intent as to his place of residence can be received in evidence only if a part of acts which they explain, and from which his intention may be inferred. Inhabitants of Knox v. Montville, 98 Me. 493, 57 A. 792. A person's intention can only be shown by his words and acts, but a mere expression of intent disconnected with any relevant circumstances would be too remote to be admissible in evidence. Id.

32. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 120 Ga. 453, 47 S. E. 959; Buce v. Eldon, 122 Iowa, 92, 97 N. W. 989; Potter v. Cave, 123 Iowa, 98, 98 N. W. 569; Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328; Gosa v. Southern R. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 810; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cain [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 571; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Burke [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 774. Plaintiff's words, "My back and hip hurts me," could be shown. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Carey [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 244. Expressions of pain or suffering, groans and inarticulate cries, indicating such a condition admissible without showing exact language used. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Schmidt [Ind.] 71 N. E. 201. Evidence that plaintiff cried all afternoon and complained of pain next morning admissible. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Shanks [Ala.] 37 So. 166. Statements or declarations of present, existing pain, and describing the location of such pain, are admissible, whether made at the time of or after the injury which caused the pain. Battis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 543. But the injured person's account of the injury cannot be given in connection with his expressions of pain. Southern Ind. R. Co. v. Davis, 32 Ind. App. 569, 69 N. E. 550. A statement of plaintiff, overheard by his wife, that he would commit suicide "if he didn't have children" was admissible as a verbal act, showing a mental condition, melancholia, claimed to have resulted from an accident. Cashin v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930. Complaints of present pain are, however, admissible only to show the injured person's condition at the time, and are inadmissible to show past similar pain. Id.

But expressions of present pain, to be admissible, must be the natural effusions of one who knows the truth and speaks on an occasion when there is no temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth. Hence it was held that a physician called to examine plaintiff with a view to having him testify could not state how plaintiff acted during the examination, tending to show pain. Comstock v. Georgetown Tp. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 788. Also that statements of a patient to his physician regarding subjective symptoms were not admissible when made both for purpose of treatment and to have physician testify as an expert. Kath v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. [Wis.] 99 N. W. 217. But it was held elsewhere that statements of a sick person made to a physician during or prior and with a view to treatment, or as a part of the res gestae, are competent even though suit has been instituted to recover damages for the injury. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28.

33. Declarations of an assured, after the assignment of the policy, and a short time before he was found dead, held inadmissible as res gestae, especially since they did not clearly indicate a suicidal intent. Ross-Lewin v. Germania Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 78 P. 305.

34. Statements of an injured servant, and his conversation with another, regarding the manner in which the accident happened, within five minutes after the occurrence, and three hours before he died, while suffering great pain, were admissible. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jones [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 852. Statements by injured person a few minutes after the accident admissible. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Willoughby]Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 829.

35. Statement of injured servant to physician as to how he got hurt. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 787. Declarations of a railway employe, after an injury to another person. Columbus R. Co. v. Peddy [Ga.] 48 S. E. 149. Declarations of conductor of train after collision. Nelson v. Georgia, C. & N. Ry. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 722. Statements of bystander after accident.

Gosa v. Southern R. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 810. Declarations of the driver of a wagon after a collision. Burns v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., 93 App. Div. 566, 87 N. Y. S. 883. Declarations of the person injured as to how the accident occurred, made to persons coming to his help immediately after the accident. Williams v. Southern R. [S. C.] 47 S. E. 706. Statements several minutes after street car accident and after car had left. Hot Springs St. R. Co. v. Hildreth [Ark.] 82 S. W. 245. Admissions by a street car conductor, after he had walked a block, after an accident. Boone v. Oakland Transit Co., 139 Cal. 490, 73 P. 243. Declaration of one who was injured by falling into a sewer excavation that there was no light there, made ten minutes after the accident. Guild v. Pringle, [C. C. A.] 130 F. 419. Statements several hours after the death of deceased that death resulted from an overdose of morphine. Goulding v. Phillips [Iowa] 100 N. W. 516. Declarations day after accident. Clancy v. Barker [Neb.] 98 N. W. 440. Conversations regarding the death of the person the day after the death occurred. Knott v. Peterson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 173. The statement of a street railway superintendent to a foreman of the car barns, the morning after an accident, that the motorman was incompetent. Havens v. Rhode Island Sub. R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 247. Statements as to incompetency of engineer, made by defendant's superintendent the day after the accident, while taking injured person to town to have wounds dressed. Cook v. Stimson Mill Co. [Wash.] 78 P. 39. Statement of a mine "bank boss" made some time after an accident causing a servant's death, regarding a previous act, tending to show notice of a dangerous condition. McFarland's Adm'r v. Harbison & Walker Co. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 430. Conversation between witness and motorman some time after the occurrence in which plaintiff was injured inadmissible as substantive evidence. Butler v. Detroit, etc., R. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 232. Declarations of a maker of a note two days after making, tending to show that an accommodation indorser, sued by a bona fide holder, indorsed a note for $200, while suit was on a note for $2,200. Union Trust Co. v. Leighton, 83 App. Div. 568, 82 N. Y. S. 7. Admissions of company's foreman that he neglected to inform servant of danger and instruct him, made several days after accident. Parker's Adm'r v. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1391, 77 S. W. 1109. Statements of plaintiff, who had injured her foot in a defective sidewalk, on her return home, and again six months later. Fallon v. Rapid City [S. D.] 97 N. W. 1009. Declarations of defendant's son, left in charge of a horse, which being left unhitched, ran away, injuring plaintiff, made shortly after the accident. Haywood v. Hamm [Conn.] 58 A. 695. Declarations by defendant's superintendent, after an accident, tending to show knowledge of a servant's intemperate habits before the accident, were incompetent as original evidence of notice of such incompetency, being mere narrations of past occurrences. White v. Lewiston & Y. F. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 4, 87 N. Y. S. 901.

36. Illustrations: Declarations of an alleged negro, since deceased, as to his race. Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008. Declarations as to source and character of title. Jones v. Robb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 395. In an action for false arrest and imprisonment against a U. S. marshal, evidence of a conversation between the marshal and a third person while plaintiff was in custody. Bailey v. Warner [C. C. A.] 118 F. 395. In an action for conversion of property by an officer making a levy, the officer's declarations tending to show knowledge by him of ownership of the property by a third person, at least that he was put on inquiry. McKnight v. United States [C. C. A.] 130 F. 659. In an action on a note, the consideration for which was a promise to convey land, an admission by the one holding legal title that he had verbally authorized plaintiff to sell. Northington v. Granade, 118 Ga. 584, 45 S. E. 447. In an action for purchase price of goods, declarations of defendant that he would pay for materials used in building a house. Myer-Neville Hardware Co. v. Spann [Miss.] 35 So. 177. A statement of a member of an alleged partnership that he wanted to settle a claim but would be liable to garnishment if he did so. Tapp v. Dibrell, 134 N. C. 546, 47 S. E. 51. Declarations of one struck by a train, a few hours after the accident, and a short time before he died, that he was asleep when struck. Smith v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 566. Statements of testator's wife showing illwill toward disinherited sons were admissible as admissions against interest on the issue of undue influence by her in will contest. Powers' Ex'r v. Powers, 25 Ky. L. R. 1468, 78 S. W. 152. Statements of a wife, acting as agent for her husband, that he was not the owner of property on which they lived, were admissible against her; not being inadmissible as privileged communications. Leyner v. Leyner, 123 Iowa, 185, 98 N. W. 628. Admissions in proofs of death, made in behalf of beneficiaries, are admissible against them, in an action on an insurance policy. Fey v. I. O. O. F. Mut. Life Ins. Soc. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 206. Where a parent takes a promissory note from his child, payable to himself, his declarations at the time, or subsequently, that the note was a mere receipt or memorandum of an advancement, are admissible as against declarant's interest. Strode v. Beall [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1019. Statements and admissions made during life to a stranger that deceased was liable for one-half an indebtedness evidenced by a certain note, are admissible in an action against his administrator to recover one-half the debt. Miller v. McDowell [Kan.] 77 P. 101. A verbal sale to plaintiff and declarations of a person that he had no title or interest, previous to a sale to defendant, such declarations being continued up to the time of declarant's death, are admissible to show an abandonment of an irrigation ditch. Griseza v. Terwilliger [Cal.] 77 P. 1034. Upon an issue of the existence of a partnership, declarations of one sought to be charged as partner to the effect that he was a member of the firm are admissible, whether made to the party seeking to charge him or to a third party, and whether communicated to the party seeking to hold him or not. Barwick

v. Alderman [Fla.] 35 So. 13. Where husband and wife are joint parties, the declarations of either, though inadmissible against the other spouse, are admissible against the declarant. Chaslavka v. Mechalek [Iowa] 99 N. W. 154.

Silence of a party may be construed as an admission of what is said in his presence, but it must appear that the fact admitted or inference to be drawn from his silence was material to the issue. Thayer v. Usher, 98 Me. 468, 57 A. 839. On the issue of forgery of a will, evidence that one of the subscribing witnesses, who was one of the parties charged with fraud, remained silent when inquiries were made as to decedent's papers, though he had the alleged will in his possession, and was present, was admissible. Dolon v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. Silence cannot be construed as an acquiescence in the truth of written statements, as where an indorsee did not answer letters relative to his promises to pay, written him by the holder of the note. State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe [Mich.] 98 N. W. 20.

Written admissions: A claim for damages for injuries to stock is admissible, in an action for damages, as an admission against interest as to the real damage suffered; but is not, of course, conclusive. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Combes [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1045. An affidavit of claims for damages to a shipment of stock, omitting certain items sued for, and containing others for which other roads had settled, was admissible. Pecos, etc., R. Co. v. Lovelady [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 867. Depositions of defendants, introduced as admissions, were not rendered incompetent because the witnesses afterwards testified to facts inconsistent with the depositions. Vollkommer v. Cody, 177 N. Y. 124, 69 N. E. 277. An oral admission by the maker of a payment on a note, and a memorandum in her book of the same, were admissible to take the note out of the statute of limitations. Fowles v. Joslyn [Mich.] 97 N. W. 790.

In pleadings: Where defendant's original plea containing admissions of plaintiff's allegations was withdrawn, and an amended plea denied the allegations, the original plea was admissible as admissions in court. Alabama Midland R. Co. v. Guilford, 119 Ga. 523, 46 S. E. 655. Abandoned pleadings containing admissions against interest are admissible, though such pleadings are not signed or sworn to by the party sought to be bound. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coggin [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1053. Where an abandoned pleading is introduced as an admission by plaintiff, he may show that the declaration in such pleading was not in fact his, but that of counsel. Galloway v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. A petition in another action containing an admission of liability held admissible, though prepared by counsel and unsigned by defendant; its weight as evidence was for the jury. L. Greif & Bro. v. Seligman [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 533. Complaint in another action inadmissible against plaintiff when the issues in that action were not material to the one on trial and would not bar the present plaintiff. Murtagh v. Dempsey, 85 App. Div. 204, 83 N. Y. S. 296. Whether an original declaration, which has been since amended, is admissible as an admission against plaintiff, is doubtful; but having been admitted, plaintiff could prove by a letter written to his counsel that it was not an admission. Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 396. See 1 Curr. L. 1150.

37. Admissions against interest are admissible only when made by a party to the suit, either on the record or otherwise, in complete control of the litigation. A mere contingent or collateral interest in the outcome is not sufficient. H. C. Judd v. New York & T. S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 7. An oral admission is admissible against the party making it, though it relates to the contents of a written paper. Cooley v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 979. An insurance company, which had made a provisional loan or payment on a loss of goods by alleged negligence of a carrier, to be repaid only in case an action against the carrier for recovery of the loss was successful, was not such a party to the suit that admissions by it would be competent to relieve defendant carrier from liability. Id. Statements of an attorney made to counsel for the adverse party, not in the presence of the party affected, are inadmissible. Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787. A plea of guilty by a defendant in a criminal action may be used as an admission against him in another action involving the same facts, but is not conclusive against him. Wesnieski v. Vanek [Neb.] 99 N. W. 258. The recitals on printed tags on ties are inadmissible as admissions of the tie company without showing knowledge of the recitals by the company. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Palmore [Kan.] 75 P. 509. Where two brothers acted jointly in a land deal, the admissions, by letter, of one were admissible against the other, the latter being the only nominal party to the contract. Maier v. Rebstock, 92 App. Div. 587, 87 N. Y. S. 85. Proof of death of the insured furnished an insurance company is inadmissible as an admission of one suing on the policy without a showing of the circumstances surrounding the making of such proof and the authorship thereof. Barnett v. Prudential Ins. Co., 91 App. Div. 435, 86 N. Y. S. 842.

38. Declarations and admissions of an agent, as well as his acts, may be proven as original evidence against the principal, when the existence of the agency has been otherwise proven (Fowler v. Iowa Land Co. [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1095; Axtell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Idaho] 74 P. 1075; Bay City Irr. Co. v. Sweeney [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 545), and the admissions are shown to have been made as a part of the transaction—a part of the res gestae—in which the agent was then acting for his principal, with authority (National Bldg. Ass'n v. Quin, 120 Ga. 358, 47 S. E. 962; Butters Salt & Lumber Co. v. Vogel [Mich.] 97 N. W. 757; King v. Atlantic City Gas & Water Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 345; Goltra v. Penland [Or.] 77 P. 129; Havens v. R. I. Sub. R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 247; Waggoner v. Snody [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 355; Continental Ins. Co. v. Cummings [Tex.] 81 S. W. 705).

Declarations of an alleged partner are inadmissible to prove existence of the part-the declarations of one in possession of property are admissible to limit his nership; but partnership having been otherwise proven, one partner's declarations are admissible to prove liability of the firm. Robinson v. First Nat. Bank [Tex.] 82 S. W. 505. See Partnership, 2 Curr. L. 1106; Agency, 1 Curr. L. 43.

Declarations against interest, made by one acting as agent, are admissible against declarant personally. Leyner v. Leyner, 123 Iowa, 185, 98 N. W. 628.

Illustrations.—Held admissible: Letter of general insurance agent admissible against company. Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 57, 73 P. 740. Letters purporting to have been written by freight claim agent admissible against the railway company. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. McIntyre [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 346. Local telephone manager held to have such authority that his declaration was admissible against the company. Texas & P. Telephone Co. v. Prince [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 327. Statements of a conductor and ticket agents to a passenger as to the route she was to take were admissible when her ticket contained no information as to the route and did not inform her of a rule that passengers must travel by the most direct route. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harper [Miss.] 35 So. 764. Statements of a general agent while attempting to repair machinery that it was old and worthless and not that ordered by plaintiff are admissible against the company. Standefer v. Aultman & Taylor Mach. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 552. Statement of defendant's foreman that the servant who caused the injury was a new man and had not been instructed as to giving warning signals, made a few minutes after the accident, and while the speaker was in charge of the servants, was admissible. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847. Statements of a village president subsequent to an accident, showing he had notice of the condition causing an injury, were admissible. Radichel v. Kendall [Wis.] 99 N. W. 348. Evidence that plaintiff asked a street car conductor to let her off at a certain street and that he said he would was competent in an action for injuries received in alighting from a street car. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28. Where a shipment contract did not state the time within which stock would be delivered, a statement of the carrier's agent as to when delivery would be made was competent as an admission to show the usual and reasonable time required. Southern R. Co. v. Railey Bros. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 786.

Held inadmissible: Declarations of an agent as to past events are not admissible to prove such events. Kamp v. Coxe Bros. & Co. [Wis.] 99 N. W. 366; Hogan v. Kelly [Mont.] 75 P. 81. The unsworn statements of an agent outside the scope of his agency are not proof of the matters indicated therein as regards his principal. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. The declaration of a bank cashier that a bond had not been filed there was inadmissible, not being in the usual course of business. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Howard [Ala.] 37 So. 106. One authorized to drive another's horse is not thereby authorized to make binding admissions as to the animal's habit of running away. Haywood v. Hamm [Conn.] 58 A. 695. A servant sent to repair a gas stove could not bind his master by a statement that something was wrong with it. King v. Atlantic City Gas & Water Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 345. Admissions of a hotel manager not binding and inadmissible against his employer. Clancy v. Barker [Neb.] 98 N. W. 440. Declarations of an agent in possession of realty for the mere purpose of managing it are not admissible to disparage the principal's title. Sweeney v. Sweeney, 119 Ga. 76, 46 S. E. 76. Declarations of a janitor as to the cause of disagreeable odors in a house were inadmissible without a showing of the janitor's authority to make them. Diehl v. Watson, 89 App. Div. 445, 85 N. Y. S. 851. Conductor, not shown to have authority, could not bind company by admissions of negligence in handling of cattle. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Carlisle [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 553. An admission of the vice-president of a corporation as to the ownership of a tugboat causing an injury could not be proven against the corporation when not a part of the res gestae, and the officer was not shown to have authority to so bind the corporation. Patterson v. White Star Towing Co., 85 N. Y. S. 359. Testimony of employes of a corporation on a former trial is inadmissible against the corporation on a subsequent trial, since an agent's declarations on the witness stand are not binding on the principal. Vohs v. A. E. Shorthill Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 495. A declaration of one on whose premises building materials had been delivered, defendant not being present, that a payment by him was on defendant's account, was inadmissible to show a sale to defendant. Copp v. Gabler, 88 N. Y. S. 440.

Relations other than agency: Debtor and garnishee: Admissions of the principal debtors are inadmissible against garnishee defendants, setting up a defense in their own interests. Seitz v. Starks [Mich.] 98 N. W. 852.

Principal and surety: Declarations of a principal are inadmissible against the surety unless a part of the res gestae, made during transaction of the business for which the surety is bound. Declarations of an alleged embezzler, subsequent to the embezzlement, were inadmissible against his surety. Wieder v. Union Surety & Guaranty Co., 42 Misc. 499, 86 N. Y. S. 105. Declarations of a principal are inadmissible against his surety, unless a part of the res gestae. Knott v. Peterson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 173.

Corporations and members: As a general rule, admissions of individuals, affecting the interests of a corporation of which they are members, cannot have the effect of an admission by the corporation. Starr Burying Ground Ass'n v. North Lane Cemetery Ass'n [Conn.] 58 A. 467. But declarations against interest of individuals are admissible against them to show their purpose in forming a corporation. Id.

Referee: One who refers another to a third person for information, as in regard to the sufficiency of a bond, is bound by the referee's admissions. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Cooley & Speers [S. C.] 48 S. E. 267.

Guardian and ward: Guardians cannot

make admissions binding on infant wards. Knights Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066. Admissions regarding death of insured not admissible against the minor beneficiaries under an accident policy. Stevens v. Continental Casualty Co., 12 N. D. 463, 97 N. W. 862. Where a policy of insurance provided that it became void if the insured committed suicide, a statement of the guardian of the infant beneficiaries that the immediate cause of death was suicide could not be treated as an admission of the infants. Knights Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066.

Co-conspirators: Declarations of a conspirator, in pursuance of the common purpose, are admissible against his co-conspirators. Lane v. Bailey [Mont.] 75 P. 191. The existence of a conspiracy having been shown, the acts and declarations of a conspirator made pursuant to and in furtherance of the conspiracy are admissible against all. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle [Ky.] 82 S. W. 271. A letter written in pursuance of a conspiracy, admitted to be genuine, was admissible, though its authorship was not proved. Ramsey v. Flowers [Ark.] 80 S. W. 147. Fraudulent representations of a co-conspirator are admissible against other conspirators, though not made in their presence. Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. Where there is a prior dishonest combination between parties to a conveyance declarations and admissions of the grantor, after execution of the deed, are admissible against the grantee to prove a fraudulent intent. Walker v. Harold, 44 Or. 205, 74 P. 705. In libel suit based on charges in a challenge against a minister to keep him out of a convention, declarations showing a purpose to challenge plaintiff's seat, but not showing that the alleged libellous matter was to be used, were inadmissible as declarations of a conspirator. Cranfill v. Hayden [Tex.] 80 S. W. 609. Evidence of defendant's illegal occupation, and of a statement by a co-conspirator that plaintiff was an objectionable man in the community, made before the conspiracy, is admissible in an action for malicious prosecution by a conspiracy, to show motive. Ramsey v. Flowers [Ark.] 80 S. W. 147. Acts and declarations of a conspirator after the completion of the purpose for which the conspiracy was formed are admissible only against declarant. Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle [Ky.] 82 S. W. 271. The declaration of a conspirator, not made in the prosecution of the enterprise, is inadmissible against co-conspirators. Seitz v. Starks [Mich.] 98 N. W. 852.

The old rule that a conspiracy must be established before evidence of declarations of co-conspirators, made in a defendant's absence, could be introduced against him, is not now in vogue; such evidence is now admissible in the first instance, the prosecution undertaking to show a conspiracy. If a conspiracy is shown, the evidence of such declarations becomes competent; if not, it will be excluded. Bowen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 520. If there is proof of the conspiracy, either in the first instance or in the course of the evidence, all acts or declarations of co-conspirators made during the pendency of and in furtherance of the conspiracy are admissible. Id.

39. The declarations of one in possession of realty that he is acting as agent. Murphy v. Dafoe [S. D.] 99 N. W. 86. Acts and declarations of one in possession of land admissible to show character and extent of possession. Woodlief v. Woodlief [N. C.] 48 S. E. 583. In an action involving the title to real estate, the declarations of a predecessor in title of either party, made while in possession, and against interest, and relating to matters which must be proved by parol, are admissible, as when such declarations relate to the nature, character and extent of declarant's possession, identity and location of boundaries and monuments called for in the deed, or the physical condition or use of the property. Phillips v. Laughlin [Me.] 58 A. 64. But such declarations of a predecessor in title as to the invalidity of a deed apparently sufficient and genuine, and duly recorded, are not admissible. Id.

Declarations of a landowner showing a lane over a neighbor's land to be a private way are admissible against a subsequent grantee, in a suit to enjoin obstruction of the road. Quick v. Cotman [Iowa] 99 N. W. 301. Letters of a trustee, before he and his wife conveyed property, that he had invested trust funds in the property, are admissible against a grantee, who is in privity of estate with the trustee. Lang v. Metzger, 206 Ill. 475, 69 N. E. 493. Declarations of one who had paid and subscribed for stock and who held it were admissible to show that he held as trustee. Johnson v. Amberson [Ala.] 37 So. 273.

Declarations of one in possession of personalty as to its ownership are not admissible unless a part of the res gestae. McKnight v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 659. Declarations of an Indian woman as to ownership of cattle issued to her by the government, which she had no power to dispose of, were inadmissible against the government in an action by it for conversion of the cattle. Id. Declarations of plaintiff's assignor, who had never been in possession of the property in question, were inadmissible. Newberry v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 133 N. C. 45, 45 S. E. 356.

Note: The court proceeds partly upon the ground that admissions by a privy in estate are not receivable in evidence to contradict a record title. That the weight of authority is in support of this proposition cannot be doubted. Gibney v. Marchay, 34 N. Y. 301. Nevertheless, the decision seems contrary to the general principles of the law of evidence. In favor of the decision, it is argued that the policy of our recording laws demands that bona fide purchasers should have a right to rely upon the record as showing the exact facts. See Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316, 330. On the other hand, it has been held repeatedly that where an innocent purchaser buys land from a grantee who has fraudulently procured a deed from one with whom it has been deposited in escrow and has placed the same on record, he acquires no title. Everts v. Agnes, 6 Wis. 453. So here it seems clear that if the deed to the defendant's grantor by him, are inadmissible as against any subsequent successor to the title.[40] Offers of compromise or settlement are usually excluded on grounds of public policy,[41] but admissions of distinct facts therein are admissible.[42] Self-serving declarations are inadmissible.[43] An admission, introduced in evidence, must be taken as an entirety.[44] was forged, the defendant never acquired title; and that any fact tending to prove such forgery was entirely relevant to the issue. The evidence offered did tend to prove such forgery, and regarded either as an admission or as a declaration against interest, came within the exceptions to the hearsay rule. Cf. Dickerson v. Chrisman, 28 Mo. 134; Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray [Mass.] 504, 77 Am. Dec. 343.—XVIII Harvard L. R. 65.

40. The admissions of one in possession of land are inadmissible against a bona fide purchaser from him. Banks v. McCandless, 119 Ga. 793, 47 S. E. 332. Declarations of grantor, after delivery of deed and in the absence of grantees, are inadmissible to affect title of grantees, by showing of fraud. Stam v. Smith [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1217. Statement of grantor to witness, not in presence of grantee, that a deed was without money consideration, was hearsay. Pierce v. Bemis [Ga.] 48 S. E. 128. Declarations of a grantor in a trust deed, subsequent to its execution, impugning the title of the land conveyed, are not evidence against the grantee. Lang v. Metzger, 206 Ill. 475, 69 N. E. 493. The declarations of a mother, after transfers of property to children, were inadmissible on the issue whether such transfers were absolute gifts or advancements. Johnson v. Cole, 178 N. Y. 364, 70 N. E. 873. Statements of a former owner of property, in disparagement of his title, made after sale of the property on mortgage foreclosure are incompetent except for the purpose of impeaching the witness. Severson v. Gremm [Iowa] 100 N. W. 862.

The declarations of a grantor of realty or donor or assignor of personalty, made after a deed, gift or sale, are incompetent to defeat the claim or title of the grantee, donee or assignee. Declarations of donor causa mortis, after the gift, held incompetent. Scheps v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 97 App. Div. 434, 90 N. Y. S. 26. The declarations of one who has parted with the title and possession of personal property are inadmissible to defeat the title of a subsequent vendee. Woods v. Faurot [Okl.] 77 P. 346. A declaration of an assignor of an insurance policy, subsequent to the assignment, is inadmissible against the assignee. Barnett v. Prudential Ins. Co., 91 App. Div. 435, 86 N. Y. S. 842. Admissions of an assignor after the assignment are not competent to prove that goods came into a party's hands as assignee. Finance Co. v. Josephson, 88 N. Y. S. 707. Declarations of a devisee are incompetent to prove nonpayment of a legacy in an action to establish the lien of a legacy as against the devisee's mortgagee. Conkling v. Weatherwax, 90 App. Div. 585, 86 N. Y. S. 139.

41. Teasley v. Bradley, 120 Ga. 313, 47 S. E. 925. Since compromises are favored in the law. Kroetch v. Empire Mill Co. [Idaho] 74 P. 868. Admission of evidence of defendant's offer to settle held error. Musselman Grocer Co. v. Casler [Mich.] 100 N. W. 997. Where, in an action on a debt, a written release was relied on in defense and denied, evidence tending to show the release not genuine was not objectionable because tending to show an offer of compromise. List's Ex'x v. List [Ky.] 82 S. W. 446.

42. Matthews v. Farrell [Ala.] 37 So. 325. If the evidence offered is an admission of liability, such admission is not rendered inadmissible by an offer to pay a sum less than that due. Teasley v. Bradley, 120 Ga. 373, 47 S. E. 925.

43. Austin v. Bartlett, 178 N. Y. 310, 70 N. E. 855; Griffin v. Train, 90 App. Div. 16, 85 N. Y. S. 686; Jamison v. Dooley [Tex.] 82 S. W. 780. Book entries made without the knowledge of the other party, and relating to property other than that in dispute. Linden v. Thieriot, 96 App. Div. 251, 89 N. Y. S. 273. Statements in a diary of decedent. Elliott v. Sheppard, 179 Mo. 382, 78 S. W. 627. For the reason that a party can never make evidence for himself, his own statements relative to the cause, extent or effect of an injury cannot be given either by the attending physician or a nonprofessional witness. Fallon v. Rapid City [S. D.] 97 N. W. 1009. Where the law does not require a presentation of a claim for damages before bringing a personal injury action against a city, a sworn statement of a claim, explained by attorneys, and submitted to a city council, is inadmissible for plaintiff. Id. A letter written by plaintiff confirming and containing terms of an oral contract made the day before, not replied to by defendant, was not inadmissible because a self-serving declaration of the plaintiff, especially since it did not differ from his oral testimony. Wilmoth v. Hamilton [C. C. A.] 127 F. 48. A declaration of a wife that property belonged to her, not being against interest, was inadmissible in an action by her husband against her administrator. Bollinger v. Wright, 143 Cal. 292, 76 P. 1108. In a suit on liquor dealer's bond for permitting minors in his saloon, declarations of the boys that they were 21 were inadmissible except to contradict their evidence on the subject. State v. Dittfurth [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 52. A statement made in a conversation by a defendant in a suit on a bond as to his understanding of the liability to be incurred thereunder was inadmissible because a self-serving declaration and also because not communicated to plaintiff. Graham v. Middleby, 185 Mass. 349, 70 N. E. 416. The wife intervened in an action in which property was attached as her husband's, claiming the property. Held, the husband's self-serving declaration on a former occasion that he owned it was inadmissible against the wife. Vermillion v. Parsons [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 916. Permitting husband of plaintiff to give his own declaration that "his wife was thrown off a car" was prejudicial error. Wimmer v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 App. Div. 258, 86 N. Y. S. 1052. A declaration by plaintiff as to the source of his alleged title to property, not being a claim of ownership, or res gestae, was inadmissible. Couch v. Couch [Ala.] 37 So. 405. Statements of a bank officer in his own interest and against the interest of the bank are inadmissible against the latter, even though a part of the res gestae. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World v. Port Huron Sav. Bank [Mich.] 100 N. W. 898. The self-serving declaration of a policy holder, after an unpaid premium had become payable, that he intended to keep up his insurance, was inadmissible. Brown v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1122. Plaintiff could not testify that after a controversy arose as to property, he claimed it as his own, such claim being post litem motam. Couch v. Couch [Ala.] 37 So. 405. A letter written by a party will not be received in evidence for him unless the circumstances clearly indicate that it was written voluntarily and spontaneously, so nearly in the presence of the transaction to which it relates as necessarily to exclude the idea of design or deliberation in order to create evidence for himself. Bowen v. White [R. I.] 58 A. 252.

44. The rule applies to statements of account introduced to secure the effect of admissions against interest contained therein. Each side of such account qualifies and limits the other. Simpson v. First Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 129 F. 257. Letter of defendant referred to in part in cross-examination should have been admitted. Lombard v. Chaplin, 98 Me. 309, 56 A. 903. Where plaintiff introduced evidence of defendant on a former trial as containing admissions, defendant was entitled to introduce other portions of the evidence, if explanatory of such admissions. Taft v. Little, 178 N. Y. 127, 70 N. E. 211. A conversation having been introduced in part, the other party may prove the entire conversation, to explain alleged admissions, even though an offer of settlement is thereby proved. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28. But only those portions of the conversation relating to the same subject may be brought out. Pettis v. Green River Asphalt Co. [Neb.] 99 N. W. 235.

46. Letter. Ward v. Cameron [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 240. Letters and release. Doyle v. Burns, 123 Iowa, 488, 99 N. W. 195. Letters denying liability on contract of insurance. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Devoe [Md.] 56 A. 809. Letter from defendant replying to one he had never seen, but whose contents had been told him. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co. v. Shreve [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 488. Letter written in reply to another relating to the terms of a contract between the parties. Sherman Oil & Cotton Co. v. Dallas Oil & Refining Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 961. A bill sent by broker for a commission admitted in suit for commission. Bradley v. Gorham [Conn.] 58 A. 698. Two letters being offered together to establish a modification of a contract, the fact that one alone would have been incompetent was immaterial. Washington Iron Works v. McNaught, 35 Wash. 10, 76 P. 301. Letters from a claimant to a defendant, before suit was brought, relating to the claim and amount demanded for injuries received were admissible as showing genuineness and extent of injuries. Snow v. New York, etc., R. Co., 185 Mass. 321, 70 N. E. 205.

47. Policy of insurance on which action is based is competent. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Devoe [Md.] 56 A. 809. That notes are merged in a judgment does not destroy their admissibility as evidence in a collateral proceeding. Brown v. Schintz, 203 Ill. 136, 67 N. E. 767. A promissory note, in the hands of a payee, even after maturity, is evidence of the existence of a debt. Goff v. Byers Bros. & Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 1037.

48. A court rule requiring the filing of an abstract of title in actions concerning title to realty, and excluding as evidence all documents or records not mentioned in the abstract held void because unreasonable and arbitrary. Pelz v. Bollinger [Mo.] 79 S. W. 146.

49. Letters incompetent when there is no showing as to who wrote or who received them. Donnelly v. Donnelly, 25 Ky. L. R. 1543, 78 S. W. 182. An autograph letter purporting to contain only the substance of portions of conversations were inadmissible, when witness could not swear positively as to the facts therein stated. Southern L. & T. Co. v. Benbow, 135 N. C. 303, 47 S. E. 435. Typewritten letters not signed by the author, not shown to have been correctly transcribed after dictation, nor positively identified, are incompetent. Id. A postal registry receipt for a letter written to an insurance company, bearing the name of the corporation, and under it the name of a person, held inadmissible, without proof that the person signing the corporation's name had authority to do so. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072. Defendant directed her daughter to write a letter in response to one received, but did not instruct her what to write nor learn what she wrote. The letter was received in evidence. Skidmore v. Johnson [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 450. A letter dictated by a general manager of a corporation, shown to have authority in the matter in question, written and signed by the stenographer the same as other letters, was admissible against the corporation. Henderson v. Raymond Syndicate, 183 Mass. 443, 67 N. E. 427. Letters held relevant, and sufficient foundation held to have been laid by introduction of other writings admitted to have been executed by defendant, so that jury could determine genuineness of signatures. Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348.

After a witness has denied the genuineness of a signature, his ability to identify his own handwriting is a proper subject of cross-examination. Brown v. Woodward, 75 Conn. 254, 53 A. 112. In testing a witness' ability to identify his signature on cross-examination, the witness must be given a fair opportunity to make a full examination of the signatures, but the manner of showing the documents to which the signatures having been shown. Ancient documents are admitted in evidence without preliminary proof of execution;[51] but the rule applies only to originals,[52] the execu-are attached rests largely in the discretion of the court. Id.

An affidavit is not self proving and is inadmissible without proof of execution by the affiant. Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008. A writing purporting to have been made by a party, referred to in and filed with a pleading of the adverse party, may be read as genuine against him, unless its genuineness is denied by affidavit before trial [Civ. Code § 527]. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Bailey, 25 Ky. L. R. 2251, 80 S. W. 452. The constitution and by-laws of a benefit society, purporting to be published by the supreme council of the order, and furnished to the local order by the organizer, and used by the order, are admissible without direct proof of their adoption by the supreme council or local order. Home Circle Soc. No. 1 v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 84. Minutes of a meeting on separate sheets, pinned to the leaves of the record book are not sufficiently identified to be admissible in evidence. McConnell v. Combination Min. & Mill. Co. [Mont.] 76 P. 194.

Where witness testified he was familiar with the location of lands in question, was with the surveyor who made the survey and plat, and knew the plat was correct, the plat was not sufficiently authenticated to be admissible as original evidence, witness not being a surveyor. Smith v. Bunch, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 541, 73 S. W. 559.

Alterations: It is the civil law doctrine that erasures or interlineations in the substantial part of an instrument are presumed to be false or forged and must be satisfactorily accounted for to render the instrument admissible. Wheadon v. Turregano, 112 La. 931, 36 So. 808. The English rule, adopted in some states, seems to be different; but when circumstances are suspicious, the burdent of removing the suspicion is upon the party seeking to use the instrument. Id. A lease in which there were material interlineations and erasures held inadmissible without an explanation of the alterations. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107. It was error to exclude a contract on the ground of alteration when it was shown that the alteration, if made, was without authority. Forbes v. Taylor, 139 Ala. 286, 35 So. 855. A bond and two contracts were simultaneously executed and delivered. In the typewritten bond the letter "s" was added to the word "contract," making the bond applicable to both contracts. It was held that the bond was properly admitted in evidence without requiring an explanation of the alteration. Graham v. Middleby, 185 Mass. 349, 70 N. E. 416. Witness could identify an instrument, not yet in evidence, though it was mutilated and torn in three pieces. Baltes Land, Stone & Oil Co. v. Sutton, 32 Ind. App. 14, 69 N. E. 179.

50. Proof of execution of deed held sufficient. Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348. If proof of execution of a deed is sufficient, the fact that it is not under seal will not make it inadmissible in evidence. Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348. A deed is not admissible as a recorded instrument unless properly acknowledged. Johnson v. Franklin [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 611. A deed is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the certificate of acknowledgment is dated prior to the date of the deed, where the conflict in dates is shown to have been a mere clerical error. Mosier v. Momsen, 13 Okl. 41, 74 P. 905. A chattel mortgage is inadmissible against one not a party to it without proof of its execution as at common law. Becker v. Bowen [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 45. Even though registered. Peterson v. W. J. Martinez & Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 401. A note is admissible against one who does not deny execution of it, without proof of such execution; but execution must be proved if denied. Horner v. Plumley, 97 Md. 271, 54 A. 971. Under a statute (Code 1896, § 1797), providing for proof of execution of attested writings by the maker, without the witnesses, a chattel mortgage was properly proved by the mortgagor, without calling the attesting witnesses or accounting for their absence, and the mortgage so proved was admissible. Ballow v. Collins, 139 Ala. 543, 36 So. 712. A contract pleaded and not denied by the adverse party is admissible, though not signed by the parties at the end. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Clark [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 827.

51. Since the death of the attesting witnesses is presumed. O'Neal v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 275. A city plat pasted in an original deedbook in 1829, and in the office of the clerk of the county court ever since, was admissible as an ancient document. Davis v. Clinton, 25 Ky. L. R. 2021, 79 S. W. 259. A deed purporting to be 27 years old and regular on its face is prima facie true and valid. Elliott v. Sheppard, 179 Mo. 382, 78 S. W. 627. When an ancient deed (1776) was found in possession of an heir and the probate records showed possession and claim of title had been in conformity to the deed for a number of years, proof of its execution was unnecessary to render it admissible. In re Butrick, 185 Mass. 107, 69 N. E. 1044. After a lapse of thirty years, a deed, showing on its face that it was executed by a corporation, will be presumed to have been executed with authority, especially when its validity has been since recognized in litigation. Altschul v. Casey [Or.] 76 P. 1083. Transfers of land certificates held to have been shown to have come from the proper custody and to be admissible as ancient instruments. Ward v. Cameron [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 240. Original transfer of a certificate issued in lieu of a headright, coming from the proper custody, more than 30 years old, and no circumstances casting suspicion on it being shown, was admissible as an ancient document. Simmonds v. Simmonds [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 630. If an affidavit of forgery is filed, a certified copy of the record of a deed is not evidence of the genuineness of the original, even though 30 years old. Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645.

52. The presumption of genuineness of ancient documents does not apply to copies. Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645.

tion of which is prima facie sufficient and legal;[53] and there is no presumption that the recitals in such documents are true.[54] Ancient documents are admissible as such only when a part of the transaction to which they relate.[55]

Instruments made inadmissible in evidence in the Federal courts,[56] if not stamped according to the war revenue act of 1898,[57] were not rendered admissible by the repeal of the act.[58] A law dictionary is competent evidence on definitions of terms of foreign law.[59] Hospital records, not required by law to be kept, are incompetent.[60] Standard mortality tables are competent to show expectancy of life.[61]

(§ 7) B. Books of account.[62]—Original entries in books of account,[63] regu-

53. It does not apply to a deed signed by a grantor's mark only, and not witnessed or acknowledged as required by law. O'Neal v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 275.

54. Though the documents are presumed genuine. Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 P. 851.

55. Recitals in ancient petitions and legislative grants were not evidence of the facts recited, since they were mere narrations of a past transaction. Davis v. Mayles [Vt.] 56 A. 174.

56. The act does not apply to state courts. Frank v. Bauer [Colo. App.] 75 P. 930.

57. A contract or conveyance made during the period when stamps were required to be placed on such instruments, and bearing a stamp, is admissible, the presumption, in the absence of contrary evidence, being that it was stamped at the proper time, by the proper person, and in the proper sum. Glaser v. Glaser, 13 Okl. 389, 74 P. 944.

58. Unstamped certificate of acknowledgment. Sackett v. McCaffrey [C. C. A.] 131 F. 219. Decisions of state courts that the Federal act does not apply as to them have no bearing on the rule of evidence in the Federal courts, where the act must control. Id.

59. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 532.

60. Hospital records, not required by law to be kept, are inadmissible to show a patient's condition, unless supported by testimony of the person who made them, if such person can be produced. Cashin v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930. A hospital record showing that at a certain time a person, whose name and address corresponded with those of plaintiff's decedent, was brought to a hospital, and containing a statement of her injuries, made by the physician who brought her there, is incompetent in a personal injury action, the identity of such injured person being in issue. Kemp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 322, 88 N. Y. S. 1. A "hospital temperature chart" containing "bedside notes" inadmissible as evidence of the facts stated therein. Griebel v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 767.

61. In actions for death or permanent injury. Knott v. Peterson [Iowa] 101 N. W. 173; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1073; International & G. N. R. Co. v. McVey [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 991; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1038. The Northampton tables of mortality admissible as works of exact science. Quattlebaum v. State, 119 Ga. 433, 46 S. E. 677. Standard mortality tables are not rendered inadmissible by the fact that plaintiff was not an insurable subject in some of the companies on whose reports the tables were based. Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1038; Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 5. Evidence of mortality tables was not inadmissible in an action for injuries to a section hand, on the ground that the life expectancies therein given related to persons engaged in ordinary vocations and not to hazardous occupations. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 347. The Carlisle Tables are admissible to show expectation of life of a deceased, but not to show expectation of life of the plaintiff, suing for the wrongful death. Emery v. Philadelphia, 208 Pa. 492, 57 A. 977. A witness, familiar with American Mortality Tables, could testify as to plaintiff's life expectancy, and that the table introduced was a mortality table, that stated the life expectancy of men at different ages. Consumers Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847.

62. See 1 Curr. L. 1155.

63. Smythe's Estate v. Evans, 209 Ill. 376, 70 N. E. 906. Entries of weight of cattle, made from scale tickets, the tickets being given the buyers of cattle. Drumm-Flato Comm. Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503. Books of account need not be kept in any particular language or form, if they comply with the statutory requirements otherwise. Cather v. Damerell [Neb.] 99 N. W. 35. Book of account properly admitted where entries were consecutive and original, though accounts poorly kept. Anderson v. Kannon [Neb.] 99 N. W. 824. A sheriff's books, in which were entered memoranda of proceedings of himself and deputies, were admissible as books of original entries, as to facts not provable by writs and returns. Hesser v. Rowley, 139 Cal. 410, 73 P. 156. An entry in an agent's account books of a payment to him for the principal, made at the time and shown to be correct, is admissible to show such payment as against the payor. Hastie v. Burrage [Kan.] 77 P. 268. A broker made a memorandum of each sale of stock when made, gave it to a clerk, who telephoned it to another clerk, who entered it in a book. Both clerks afterwards compared such memoranda with the book entries and found them correct. Held, the book entries were competent evidence of the transactions. Rathborne v. Hatch, 90 App. Div. 151, 85 N. Y. S. 768. Time book kept by contractor and his agents was admissible to prove time of completion of contract. Cornell v. Standard Oil Co., 91 App. Div. 345, 86 N. Y. S. 633.

larly kept in the usual course of business,[64] and shown to be correct,[65] are competent evidence of the facts of the particular transactions to which they relate.[66] But such evidence is merely auxiliary to the testimony of witnesses,[67] and is inadmissible when witnesses are shown to have a distinct recollection of the facts.[68] Entries of cash transactions[69] and entries in private account books[70] and diaries[71] are inadmissible in favor of the party making them.

(7) C. Public and judicial records and documents.[72]—Public and judicial records[73] and properly certified[74] or duly authenticated private[75] copies thereof, are admissible in evidence.

64. Montgomery County v. Bean [Ky.] 82 S. W. 240. Daybooks and ledger admissible as evidence of nonpayment, the books being regularly kept, and showing no credits. H. L. Handy & Co. v. Smith [Conn.] 58 A. 694. Entries in book account, made when goods in question were delivered, admissible to show payment by delivery of goods, the book account being the only one kept by party. Id.

Entries foreign to the regular business in which the accounts are kept are inadmissible. Galbraith v. Starks, 25 Ky. L. R. 2090, 79 S. W. 1191. Items regarding notes in a book of account excluded as not proper subjects of a book charge. Freehart v. Stanford [Vt.] 58 A. 790. A book which is not one of the regular books of a firm, but contains entries of an account with only one person, and those entries not being contemporaneous with the work done, is inadmissible as a book of original entries. McKnight v. Newell, 207 Pa. 562, 57 A. 39. In action to recover for stock, entries made without the knowledge of the other party, and relating to stock other than that in dispute, are inadmissible. Linden v. Thieriot, 96 App. Div. 256, 89 N. Y. S. 273.

When an item in the books of an adverse party is introduced against him, the party offering it need not show the manner in which the books were kept, or a regular course of dealing. Fowles v. Joslyn [Mich.] 97 N. W. 790.

65. Bookkeeper testified he kept the books, that they were correct, and that entries of sales were made from memoranda made by the clerks who actually sold the goods. Entries admissible in connection with witness' testimony. Rogers v. O'Barr & Dinwiddie [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 750. A statement of an account is inadmissible unless authenticated in the manner prescribed by law for books of account. United States Paper Co. v. Gruhn, 86 N. Y. S. 730. Where plaintiff kept a bookkeeper, but no clerk, and entries in the books were based upon reports to him, and there was sufficient evidence that the books were correctly kept, and where other parties testified they had settled accounts made from the books and always found them correct, the books of account were admissible. Hurley v. Macey, 94 App. Div. 9, 87 N. Y. S. 924. In an action on the bond of an embezzling cashier, the books of the bank were competent evidence, certain false entries being shown to have been made by the cashier, and other entries made by others being shown correct. State Bank v. Brown, 96 App. Div. 441, 89 N. Y. S. 381.

66. Galbraith v. Starks, 25 Ky. L. R. 2090, 79 S. W. 1191.

67. Cullinan v. Moncrief, 90 App. Div. 538, 85 N. Y. S. 745. While books of account are the best evidence of their contents, they are not necessarily the best evidence of the income of a business; the bookkeeper or any other person with knowledge of such income may testify thereto independently of the books. Halverson v. Seattle Electric Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 1058. A physician is competent to prove the reasonableness of charges proved by his own account book. Kwiecinski v. Newman's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 391. When a witness has testified that he has no present recollection of a fact aside from knowledge gained from memoranda, and his testimony regarding the fact is admitted, the memoranda should also be admitted as a part of his evidence. Hart v. Godkin [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1057. See Examination of Witnesses, 1 Curr. L. 1165.

68. When a druggist said he distinctly remembered sales on certain days, slips from his cash register were inadmissible. Cullinan v. Moncrief, 90 App. Div. 538, 85 N. Y. S. 745. Where witness testified fully and positively as to the return of certain silk, a book memorandum of such transaction was inadmissible, even though an original entry. Rosenberg v. Klein, 43 Misc. 652, 88 N. Y. S. 134.

69. Brown v. Bronson, 93 App. Div. 312, 87 N. Y. S. 872. Slips from a cash register held not books of account, but only memoranda in the vendor's interest. Cullinan v. Moncrief, 90 App. Div. 538, 85 N. Y. S. 745.

70. Private account book entries were incompetent to prove payments for a decedent, as a set-off in action on a note payable to him. Proctor v. Proctor's Adm'r [Ky.] 81 S. W. 272. Plaintiff's account book inadmissible to show to whom he credited payments of rent. Cooley v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 979.

71. A diary of a decedent, not identified, and not shown to have been in decedent's possession on the day on which an entry therein, offered in evidence, purports to have been made, is inadmissible. Elliott v. Sheppard, 179 Mo. 382, 78 S. W. 627.

72. See 1 Curr. L. 1156.

73. Legislative: The journals of the general assembly, required by law to be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, or duly certified copies thereof, are the only evidence of the procedure followed in passing a law. State v. Armour Packing Co., 135 N. C. 62, 47 S. E. 411; Brown v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 357, 46 S. E. 741. Records, books, papers and rolls of the senate and house of the general assembly, on file in the office of the secretary of state, are evidence of the facts which they recite [Sand. & H. Dig. § 3171]. Rogers v. State [Ark.] 82 S. W. 169. The town record is the only competent evidence of the acts of the voters at a town meeting. Cincinnati, I. & W. R. Co. v. People, 205 Ill. 538, 69 N. E. 40. A pamphlet purporting to be a digest of city ordinances was inadmissible without proof that it was printed and published by authority of the city council. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 82. A book of township ordinances, required by law to be kept by the township clerk is prima facie proof of the existence and proper adoption of the ordinances. Ackerman v. Nutley [N. J. Law] 57 A. 150. Books containing session laws published by authority of the state are presumptive evidence of such laws [Code, § 4651]. Summitt v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 123 Iowa, 681, 99 N. W. 563.

Judicial: A transcript of a judgment is not inadmissible because it does not bear a revenue stamp. Tomlin v. Woods [Iowa] 101 N. W. 135. Court records are inadmissible without other proof of identification than the mere word of counsel that they are the originals. Azzara v. Waller, 88 N. Y. S. 1040; Levy v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 87 N. Y. S. 487. Where a judgment is in evidence, an execution is inadmissible which does not conform to the judgment. Kinkade v. Gibson, 209 Ill. 246, 70 N. E. 683. Judgment admissible though it did not recite service of summons, where summons, showing personal service, was also in evidence. Id. Where certain papers, attached together, were sufficient to constitute a judgment roll, and counsel for plaintiff so denominated it, and an execution and satisfaction of judgment are a part of such record, no further foundation need be laid to admit the judgment roll in evidence. Turner Tp. v. Williams [S. D.] 97 N. W. 842. Portions of record in probate proceedings admissible on issue of a claim against the estate. Smythe's Estate v. Evans, 209 Ill. 376, 70 N. E. 906. When a judgment of a court of a foreign state is valid, though not signed by the judge, a duly exemplified copy is entitled to credit as evidence the same as in such foreign state. Waters v. Spencer, 44 Misc. 15, 89 N. Y. S. 693. A transcript of a foreign judgment, properly certified as a copy of the record, will be presumed to be a full copy of the entire record. Shilling v. Seigle, 207 Pa. 381, 56 A. 957. Probate of a foreign will held properly authenticated so as to be admissible in evidence. Dusenberry v. Abbott, 1 Neb. Unoff. 101, 95 N. W. 466. A certificate of a transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace of California held properly attested under Iowa statutes so as to be admissible in evidence. Tomlin v. Woods [Iowa] 101 N. W. 135. Duly certified transcript of constable's bond, as recorded in office of judge of probate, admissible. Burton v. Dangerfield [Ala.] 37 So. 350.

Verdict of a coroner's jury is not competent original evidence on the issue of death by suicide of an assured in an action on the policy. Chambers v. Modern Woodmen of America [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1107. A letter, or copy, written by the assured before his death, to his wife, was inadmissible against the beneficiary under the policy, as a record in the case, or as evidence at the coroner's inquest. Id.

Contra: The verdict in a coroner's inquest is competent evidence in an action on the policy of insurance to show cause of death. Knights Templar & Masons' L. Indem. Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066. In Wisconsin, the admissibility of a verdict of a coroner's jury is said to be a matter of doubt. Fey v. I. O. O. F. Mut. L. Ins. Soc. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 206.

Executive and administrative: Police records are not evidence of the facts stated therein, but are admissible on the question of malice in publication of alleged libellous charges. Carpenter v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 96 App. Div. 376, 89 N. Y. S. 263. Reports of a city treasurer required by law are competent evidence in an action against sureties on his bond. City of Philipsburg v. Degenhart [Mont.] 76 P. 694. A plat, not offered as an official survey, is not open to the objection that it was not made in accordance with the statutory provisions. Garrison v. Glass, 139 Ala. 512, 36 So. 725. By Acts 1902, No. 44, p. 49, no public record of births, marriages or deaths, required by law to be kept, nor any certified copy thereof, is competent evidence of any fact stated therein, except the fact of birth, marriage or death. McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985. Hence a copy of a record of a certificate of death was inadmissible to show cause of death. Id.

Records of instruments: When it is shown that a deed, duly acknowledged and recorded, is not within the power of the party wishing to use it, the record thereof is admissible. Rev. St. 1899, § 933. Patton v. Fox, 179 Mo. 525, 78 S. W. 804. By statute in California (Code Civ. Proc. § 1951), original records of instruments [as release] affecting real estate are admissible without further proof. Adams v. Hopkins [Cal.] 77 P. 712. Sufficient predicate held to have been laid to admit in evidence the record of a deed, under Comp. Laws 1887, § 5308. Reeder v. Wilber [S. D.] 100 N. W. 1099. Record of assignment of patent and deed held admissible, though the instruments were not entitled to record because not properly acknowledged. Schultz v. Tonty Lumber Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 353. County clerk's record of the cancellation of leases of state lands is admissible to show such cancellation. Valentine v. Sweatt [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 385.

74. Copies of official records to be admissible in evidence must be certified according to law. City of New York v. Vanderveer, 91 App. Div. 303, 86 N. Y. S. 659. Certified copies of the minutes of any court of record are admissible. Rev. St. 1892, § 1109. Hoodless v. Jernigan [Fla.] 35 So. 656. A certified transcript of proceedings before a U. S. commissioner is evidence of the truth of matters therein recited. Ramsey v. Flowers [Ark.] 80 S. W. 147. Documents offered as copies of orders and proceedings of a Federal court in another state inadmissible when not certified according to act of Congress. A. Lehman & Co. v. Rivers, 110 La. 1079, 35 So. 296. Public records of sister states, other than court records, to be ad-evidence is competent and material,[78] and is in the possession or under the control of the adverse party.[79] A notice to produce papers must be definite as to the documents desired to be produced, and must not be unreasonably extensive.[80]

§ 8. Evidence adduced in former proceedings.[81]—Where a witness has since died, or for some other reason is not present in court,[82] his testimony, given at a former proceeding,[83] is admissible[84] in a subsequent action between the same missible in Washington, must be certified in accordance with Federal statutes; and a sealed certificate of the record of an instrument of adoption made by the keeper of the record in a foreign state was inadmissible to prove the instrument was recorded. James v. James [Wash.] 77 P. 1080.

Certified copy of a report to an insurance commissioner admissible. Ky. St. 1903, § 1627. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc. v. Bailey, 25 Ky. L. R. 2251, 80 S. W. 452. Statement of an account of a county treasurer, kept in the state treasurer's office and certified by him to be correct, is admissible. Harper v. Marion County [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1044. Certified copies of warrants and indorsements thereon, in the county comptroller's office, held admissible, though not proved correct, and though the certifying officer had no personal knowledge of the facts recited therein. Id. The fact that transfers of school lands had become part of the archives of the general land office was sufficient to make certified copies of the transfers admissible. Tolleson v. Wagner [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 846. Certificates of surveys, and plats of lands were inadmissible to show boundaries, when the purpose of the survey was not shown, and the identity and authenticity of the documents not established. Cowles v. Lovin, 135 N. C. 488, 47 S. E. 610. Corporate organization of plaintiff properly proven by copy of certificate of incorporation, certified by the secretary of state, the legal keeper of such records. Western Iron Works v. Montana Pulp & Paper Co. [Mont.] 77 P. 413.

A certified copy from the land office of an affidavit, made by a stranger years before that one claiming under a transfer of a headright certificate was the owner was admissible. Simmonds v. Simmonds [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 630. Under statutes making leases and all papers relating to leases of public lands records in the commissioner's office, a certified copy of a release of a lease was admissible. Trevey v. Lowrie [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 18. To render a certified copy of a recorded instrument admissible, it must be filed three days before commencement of the action, and an affidavit filed stating the original is lost or cannot be procured; the rule applies to all recorded instruments. Valentine v. Sweatt [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 385. Certified copies of papers relating to sales of lands, on record in the office of the commissioner of the general land office, are admissible in evidence, by statute. Trevey v. Lowrie [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 18.

75. Copy of a public record by a private person from personal examination, such person testifying that the copy was so made and is correct, is admissible. Smithers v. Lowrance [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1088. In the absence of a statute making certified copies the only method of proof of public records, such records are provable either by certified or examined copies. Texas statutes, however, do not change this common-law rule. Id.

76. See 1 Curr. L. 1157.

77. After statutory notice and filing of an affidavit for an order for the production of papers, a rule to show cause need not be issued, in Delaware. Netter v. Stoeckle [Del.] 56 A. 604.

78. A subpoena duces tecum will issue only on such showing. Dancel v. Goodyear Shoe Mach. Co., 128 F. 753. A mere general averment in an application for the production of a large mass of private books and papers, that such evidence was "material and necessary for" use is insufficient. Id.

79. The affidavit on which order is based must so state. Netter v. Stoeckle [Del.] 56 A. 604. It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to enforce an order for the production of correspondence, where the order was served on plaintiff's counsel, plaintiff being out of the state, and not learning of it until his examination at the trial, and counsel having made affidavit that he could not produce it; and where plaintiff was fully examined as to the contents of the correspondence. Roberts v. Francis [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1076.

82. A stenographer's notes of evidence taken in a circuit court is admissible in a subsequent case only when the witness is not present and his testimony cannot otherwise be procured. Beavers v. Rowen [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1165. Evidence of a witness at a former trial, preserved by bill of exceptions, may be read at a subsequent trial when the witness is beyond the jurisdiction, without showing an effort to procure his deposition. Ross-Lewin v. Germania Life Ins. Co. [Colo. App.] 78 P. 305. Under a statute providing that the shorthand notes of evidence on a former trial shall be admissible under the same rules as govern depositions, a transcript of such evidence could not be read when the witnesses who gave the evidence on the former trial were present in court. Lanza v. Le Grand Quarry Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 488. But a translation of evidence given on a former trial is admissible on a subsequent trial if the witnesses who gave it are not present in court. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 618.

83. Within the code rule allowing evidence of a deceased witness taken at a former trial to be introduced where the parties against whom the testimony was offered had the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, testimony of a witness before a referee is admissible in a second hearing before another referee, the witness and former referee both having died. Taft v. Little, 178 N. Y. 127, 70 N. E. 211.

Held not within the rule: Evidence taken at a coroner's inquest is generally exclud-

parties[85] and relating to the same matter.[86] A stenographic report of such testimony must be shown to be genuine and correct.[87]

§ 9. Expert and opinion evidence. A. Conclusions and nonexpert opinions.[88]—Mere conclusions of a witness,[89] or the opinions of nonexperts on issues

ed, even where the verdict of the coroner's jury is held admissible. Chambers v. Modern Woodmen of America [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1107. Depositions used in coroner's inquest are incompetent in subsequent action on life insurance policy to show cause of death; only admissible for contradiction. Knights Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066.

A stenographer's minutes of an examining trial before a magistrate are incompetent for any purpose. Cr. Code Prac. § 64. Beavers v. Bowen [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1165.

A statement of a witness made during the taking of a deposition, and immediately stricken out is inadmissible on the trial. Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643. Such a statement is not a part of witness' testimony; nor is it admissible as testimony of a deceased witness taken on a former trial. Id.

Evidence may not be elicited in one action for the sole purpose of using it in another. In re Shawmut Min. Co., 94 App. Div. 156, 87 N. Y. S. 1059.

84. When the party against whom it is offered had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness on the former trial.

Contra: Testimony at former trial of witness since deceased not admissible. Meekins v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 501; Willsen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 597.

85. A statement of a defendant since deceased in a former action is inadmissible against a defendant in a subsequent action, who was not a party to the first. Murphy v. Cuff, 177 N. Y. 314, 69 N. E. 607.

86. The testimony of a witness on a former trial is admissible only when the action was between the same parties and related to the same matter. Leggat v. Carroll [Mont.] 76 P. 805.

87. Barksdale v. Security Inv. Co., 120 Ga. 388, 47 S. E. 943.

NOTE. Preliminary showing necessary: To render admissible testimony given on a former trial, it must first appear that the evidence was regularly and judicially taken (Bryant v. Owen, 2 Stew. & P. 134); that the action was between the same parties and for the same cause of action (Neff v. Smith, 91 Iowa, 87, 58 N. W. 1072; Beals v. Guensey, 8 Johns. 446, 5 Am. Dec. 348); that the witness has died since the former trial (Rooker v. Parsley, 72 Ind. 497; Woolen v. Whiteacre, 91 Ind. 502; Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns. 17), or is unable to attend the trial (Edwards v. Edwards, 93 Iowa, 127, 61 N. W. 413). And the witness called to give the testimony of another at a former trial must be able to give at least the substance of his entire testimony, including the cross-examination (Harrison v. Charlton, 42 Iowa, 573). For exhaustive note on "Admissibility of Evidence given on former trial in civil cases," see 91 Am. St. Rep. 192.

88. See 1 Curr. L. 1157.

89. "The opinions of witnesses on the substance of an issue should never be resorted to, except when the subject is beyond the knowledge and experience of ordinary men." Numerous authorities cited in Meyers v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. [Utah] 77 P. 347; Gentry v. Singleton [C. C. A.] 128 F. 679; National Surety Co. v. Mabry, 139 Ala. 217, 35 So. 698; Matthews v. Farrell [Ala.] 37 So. 325; Riley v. Camden & T. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 445; Oakes v. Prather [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 557; Bath v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 993; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs [Va.] 48 S. E. 521. A witness may not testify as to a matter as to which he states that he is merely guessing. Reichert v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 1031.

Held mere conclusions: Whether trainmen knew their train was on the schedule time of another train. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Martin [Ala.] 36 So. 426. Husband's opinion as to wife's intention in a real estate transaction. Carey v. Moore, 119 Ga. 92, 45 S. E. 998. What a wagon wheel would do under certain circumstances. See v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 443, 99 N. W. 106. Whether defendant thought he could use certain wells or water therefrom. Dubois v. Williamson, 93 App. Div. 361, 87 N. Y. S. 645. That a man could not acquire knowledge of the handling of rails by working around railroad shops and yards. Bonn v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 808. Whether plaintiff "just assumed the risk and went under" the bale of cotton which caused his injury. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847. Plaintiff could not testify, in action for injuries sustained in getting off a train, that he could have alighted safely if the train had moved in the usual manner, because he thus would give an opinion on his own negligence. Texas Southern R. Co. v. Long [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 114. Opinion of witnesses that from their knowledge of a wife, her husband was in danger of bodily harm, and could not safely live with her. House v. House [Va.] 46 S. E. 299. Whether plaintiff did not know that if he had reported a defect in machinery an accident would not have occurred. Carson v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 525. A physician who has testified to the physical and mental condition of a person at a given time may not give an abstract opinion as to the person's ability to transfer property. Langenbeck v. Louis, 140 Cal. 406, 73 P. 1086. In a libel action, testimony of one in the district attorney's office, introduced to establish a justification for publication of the charges, that he had investigated the charges, and had reported against dismissal of the case was a mere opinion on the merits of the charge. Carpenter v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 96 App. Div. 376, 89 N. Y. S. 263.

Held statements of fact: That the defective condition of a cover of a sewer catch-basin could only be discovered by a personal inspection. Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Burke, 203 Ill. 250, 67 N. E. 818. Testimony regarding the condition of a sidewalk before and after an accident by witnesses who examined it. Harrison v. Incorporated Town of Ayrshire, 123 Iowa, 528, 99 N. W. 132. An estimate of the value of contents of a plumbing shop. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co. v. Shreve [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 488. That a noise sounded to plaintiff like a collision of two street cars. Binsbacher v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 546. What would have been the value of stock if it had reached its destination in "good condition." Texas & P. R. Co. v. White [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 641. That plaintiff was a hardworking woman. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 340. That a hole in a sidewalk was big enough to let in witness' foot. City of San Antonio v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 28. That papers, placed with a third person for safe keeping, were all subject to the owner's call and control. Gatt v. Shive [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 303. Statements of witnesses who saw a handhold after an accident that the screws had pulled out of the wood. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gready [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1061. That a train was making less noise than usual. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Villareal [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1063. Ownership of property is a fact to which a witness may always testify. Hunnicutt v. Higginbotham, 138 Ala. 472, 35 So. 469. A corporation's president may state, as a fact, whether the corporation received certain rents. Hendrickson v. Dwyer [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 420. A witness having given an incomplete description of a cattle guard, a question whether he noticed any other defect did not call for a conclusion. Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 760. A question whether sales were authorized to a certain person did not call for a conclusion, when understood as meaning whether there were any others to whom sales were directed to be made. Wendel v. Mallory Comm. Co., 122 Iowa, 712, 98 N. W. 612. Testimony of an engineer in a suit for damages for injuries that he was incapacitated from continuing his former occupation was a statement of fact; or if considered as an opinion, he was competent to give it, after stating the facts. Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1038. A letter of an attorney stating that he knew no reason why insurance policies should not be paid in full, held not to express a mere legal opinion; and otherwise competent. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fitze [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 370.

Witnesses may state the appearance of things or persons coming under their observation. That the speed of a car "looked fast" to witness. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Shanks [Ala.] 37 So. 166. That a person "appeared to be suffering." St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Burke [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 774. A nonmedical witness may state whether an injury appeared to be recent or not. Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328. Witness could state that an insured, when she became a member of a beneficial society could not speak above a whisper, and was weak and emaciated. Home Circle Soc. No. 1 v. Shelton [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 84. Testimony of witness, "I could not tell who he was looking at, but he looked to me like he was looking at M.," held admissible. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1109. One who has observed the acts, appearance and speech of a person may state an opinion of his condition as to intoxication; what constitutes a proper foundation for such an opinion rests in the discretion of the trial court. Clarke v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & Iron Co. [Minn.] 100 N. W. 231.

A statement of a "collective fact" is not objectionable as a conclusion. The court permitted witness to answer the question: "Was it not the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, at Hausman's office, that he would accept a prorate of what should be left after the houses were completed?" E. E. Shafer & Co. v. Hausman, 139 Ala. 237, 35 So. 691.

A positive statement of fact is admissible, though witness does not explain the source of his knowledge, when it does not appear that he did not know. Ellis v. Lewis [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1034. Giving reasons for positive statements does not make the latter inadmissible, if the statements and reasons therefor can be separated. Filden v. Gordon & Co., 34 Wash. 92, 74 P. 1016.

Intent, knowledge or understanding: A person may testify to his own mental state in a certain transaction and that he acted in good faith. Thompson v. Glover, 120 Ga. 440, 47 S. E. 935. Parties to a contract may testify to their intentions in executing it. Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exch., 72 N. H. 315, 56 A. 754. Plaintiff, pleading fraud in the execution of a release, could testify that he did not understand it. Galloway v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. Witness may testify that he relied on another's statement in taking a chattel mortgage, since his mental process was a fact as to which his direct testimony was admissible. Strasser v. Goldberg [Wis.] 98 N. W. 554. Plaintiff, in personal injury action, may testify that he relied on the foreman's statement that he was going to close down the mill while repairs were being made. Mathews v. Daly West Min. Co., 27 Utah, 193, 75 P. 722.

But undisclosed intentions or purposes are inadmissible. Party's unexpressed intentions in making a contract and writing a letter excluded. Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 506. Real estate broker cannot state for whom he was acting in negotiating a sale, this being a statement of his undisclosed purpose. Downing v. Buck [Mich.] 98 N. W. 388. That a loan was made to a firm and not to the partners jointly cannot be shown by the intention and understanding of the bank cashier, but only by the facts of the transaction. In re L. B. Weisenberg & Co., 131 F. 517. A question of a father whether he consented to his son's employment in a foundry called for a fact and not an "uncommunicated mental status." Dimmick Pipe Works v. Wood, 139 Ala. 282, 35 So. 885. A question, how much land a party claiming title by adverse possession in ejectment had been claiming called for a fact, not an undisclosed intention. Dorlan v. Westervitch [Ala.] 37 So. 382.

Computations: A witness may summarize testimony as to purchases from third parpert skill or knowledge,[92] are inadmissible; but the opinions of nonexperts are received in regard to matters knowledge of which does not require special skill or experience,[93] when the witness, in connection with such opinion, states the ties, where the calculations are intricate. Wilson v. Alcatraz Asphalt Co., 142 Cal. 182, 75 P. 787. Where books of a bank contain accounts so complicated and voluminous that they could not be conveniently examined in court, an accountant who had examined them could state the result of his computations, but not his inferences, therefrom. Mendel v. Boyd [Neb.] 99 N. W. 493. While a bookkeeper or accountant may show footings or mathematical calculations from books of account in evidence, he cannot estimate profits as a result of his examination of the books as that would be a mere conclusion. Smythe's Estate v. Evans, 209 Ill. 376, 70 N. E. 906. Where counsel for defendant did not demand the production of books and declined to examine when afforded the opportunity, because of the magnitude of the task, plaintiff was properly allowed to state the general result of his examination of all the books of a corporation, without producing them. Louisiana Purchase Expo. Co. v. Kuenzel [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1099. On an issue of the value of a stock of goods destroyed by fire, plaintiff was properly permitted to give an estimate of his total purchases since he had occupied the place, and the amount of his annual sales. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs [Va.] 48 S. E. 521.

90. Construction of writings. Granite Bldg. Corp. v. Greene [R. I.] 57 A. 649. Construction of contract. Sherman Oil & Cotton Co. v. Dallas Oil & Refining Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 961. Construction of contract of insurance. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Devoe [Md.] 56 A. 809. Testimony that witness had had a letter in his possession and that it "bore upon its face indications of being genuine." Gress Lumber Co. v. Georgia Pine Shingle Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 115. Testimony by an alleged assignee that a contract was "sold" or "transferred" to him was a mere conclusion, the validity of the transfer being a question of law. Mardowitz v. Goldberg, 87 N. Y. S. 234.

91. A. A. Cooper Wagon & Buggy Co. v. Barnt, 123 Iowa, 32, 98 N. W. 356.

Illustrations.—Held inadmissible: Whether an ordinarily prudent person could have seen a ditch. Huachuca Water Co. v. Swain [Ariz.] 77 P. 619. Whether a stick, exhibited to the jury, was a weapon likely to produce death. Moran v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 324. That witness did not think a gate in a right of way sufficient to keep cattle out. Collins v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 122 Iowa, 231, 97 N. W. 1103. Opinion of one from whom plaintiff bought supplies as to whether the clothing bought was a liberal provision for his children. McCloskey v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 723. That other people who dug ditches similar to the one in question always braced them. Schermer v. McMahon [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 535. That certain rules were necessary to workman's safety. Lane v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 93 App. Div. 40, 86 N. Y. S. 947. Whether or not a trench was a safe place to work. Winters v. Naughton, 91 App. Div. 80, 86 N. Y. S. 439. That cogwheels should have been boxed. Marks v. Harriet Cotton Mills, 135 N. C. 287, 47 S. E. 432. Witness cannot give an opinion on the merits of a case (Black v. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co., 26 Utah, 451, 73 P. 514), or which would require him to pass on credibility of witnesses (Davis v. Collins [S. C.] 48 S. E. 469). Where self-defense was set up in an action for assault, defendant could not testify that he acted in self-defense. Evans v. Elwood, 123 Iowa, 92, 98 N. W. 584. In an action by a servant to recover damages for personal injuries from the master, the sufficiency of light at the place where plaintiff was at work was not a proper subject for opinion evidence. Meyers v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. [Utah] 77 P. 347. Opinion evidence is inadmissible when the facts and circumstances on which the opinion is based are capable of being clearly shown to the jury. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Goodwin, 120 Ga. 83, 47 S. E. 641. Where all the surrounding circumstances could have been shown, a witness could not state whether it was necessary for him to pass over a pit into which he fell and was injured. Aetna Powder Co. v. Earlandson [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 185.

Damages: A witness may state facts from which the jury may estimate damages, but cannot give an opinion as to their amount. McCrary v. Pritchard, 119 Ga. 876, 47 S. E. 341; Tootle v. Kent, 12 Okl. 674, 73 P. 310; Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Murray [Or.] 76 P. 1079. Unless a statement of the amount follows as a mere mathematical deduction. Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Halsell [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 140. Permitting plaintiff to state his total loss held harmless error. Ingram v. Wishkah Boom Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 34.

92. Nonexpert witnesses cannot give opinions as to the mental condition of one whose sanity is called in question. McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358. Nonexperts cannot testify to the general health and physical condition of one before and after an injury. Fallon v. Rapid City [S. D.] 97 N. W. 1009. Admission of opinion evidence by nonexperts in regard to signatures to notes alleged to have been forged held to be reversible error. Wilmington Sav. Bank v. Waste [Vt.] 57 A. 241.

93. A nonexpert may give an opinion as to the speed of a street car at a given time. Omaha St. R. Co. v. Larson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 824; Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28; Aston v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 999. Or whether under certain circumstances he would have heard locomotive signals. Gosa v. Southern Ry. [S. C.] 45 S. E. 810. Whether or not one is sick or in a nervous condition may be proved by any one who knows it, and does not require expert evidence. Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28. The opinion of defendant's foreman that he regarded the servant who caused an injury to a fellow-servant as a reliable man was admissible. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Jonte [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 847.

Estimates of value: Value of farm labor. North Texas Const. Co. v. Bostick [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 109. Decrease in value of facts on which it is based.[94] The qualification of witnesses to give such nonexpert opinions is a question for the trial court.[95]

(§ 9) B. Subjects of expert testimony.[96]—Expert opinion is admissible in regard to matters, adequate knowledge of which presupposes special skill, experience or investigation;[97] it is inadmissible as to matters, knowledge of which does a horse caused by a cut in its side. Montgomery St. R. v. Hastings, 138 Ala. 432, 35 So. 412. Opinion evidence admissible on incidental benefits and damages to land, not attaching to other property, by the construction of a railroad, in condemnation proceedings. Wray v. Knoxville, L. F. & J. R. Co. [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 471. Neighbors and friends of an intestate and one who was claiming compensation for services, who professed to know the nature of the services rendered and their value were competent witnesses on the value of such services. Green's Ex'r v. Green [Ky.] 82 S. W. 1011.

94. Allowing nonexpert witnesses to state conclusions is not ground for reversal if the facts are also stated. Galloway v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. A witness may not testify that an easement has been abandoned without giving the facts. Gaston v. Gainesville & D. Electric R. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 188. Nonexpert witnesses could state whether cracks in broken stay bolts of an exploded boiler were old or new, in connection with their statement of the facts on which they based their conclusion. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435.

Mental capacity: Where a nonexpert testifies to facts showing a basis for his opinion as to a testator's sanity, and has had opportunity to observe his capacity, he should be permitted to state his opinion. Stutsman v. Sharpless [Iowa] 101 N. W. 105. Where it appeared that witnesses had testified as to facts and circumstances warranting the expression of an opinion as to testamentary capacity of testator, the admission of opinions was proper. Spencer v. Terry's Estate [Mich.] 94 N. W. 372; Roberts v. Bidwell [Mich.] 98 N. W. 1000. Plaintiff's wife and an intimate acquaintance held competent to give opinions as to his mental capacity to make a release, in connection with their statement of facts. Galloway v. San Antonio & G. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 32. Nonexpert witnesses, who by close relations with a person had opportunity to observe her conduct could give opinions as to her capacity to contract, at the time of execution of the contract. Grimshaw v. Kent, 67 Kan. 463, 73 P. 92. Intimate social acquaintances of a testatrix who had conversed with her before and after execution of her will could testify as to her mental capacity. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10. In re McKenna's Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 461. Nonexperts properly allowed to give opinions on genuineness of will when they qualified by testifying they had seen testatrix write and were familiar with her handwriting. Yelton v. Black [Ky.] 82 S. W. 634.

95. Pattee v. Whitcomb, 72 N. H. 249, 56 A. 459. A witness cannot state a conclusion, not being shown to be in a position to draw such conclusion. Hayden v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 76 Conn. 355, 56 A. 613. An assessor who can only give the amount land was taxed for cannot give an opinion as to the value of land, since an assessment of taxes is not of itself evidence of market value. Spink v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 499. When witness could only state his individual preference, and what others told him, as to value of land after a railway occupied a neighboring street, his opinion was incompetent. Eastern Texas R. Co. v. Scurlock [Tex.] 78 S. W. 490. Witnesses who simply described what they saw at the scene of a boiler explosion were not experts, and it was not necessary to qualify them as such. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Behrens, 208 Ill. 20, 69 N. E. 796.

96. See 1 Curr. L. 1159.

97. Any subject wherein a person may become specially learned or skilled is within the broad field of opinion evidence; such evidence is not confined to mere matters of professional or scientific knowledge. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1066. Expert opinion is admissible when the nature of the question at issue is such that men of ordinary experience and intelligence may be supposed incapable of drawing conclusions from the evidence without the assistance of some one who has special skill or knowledge in the premises. Conley v. Portland Gaslight Co. [Me.] 58 A. 61. Race distinctions. United States v. Hung Chang, 126 F. 400. Whether a signature was traced. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. Propensity of young stallions to jump fences. Kittredge v. City of Cincinnati, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 6. Condition of potatoes at time of delivery. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1066. The proper conduct of a log boom and what is practicable, and what not, to be done. C. Crane & Co. v. Fry [C. C. A.] 126 F. 278. The expense, risk and responsibility attending execution of a contract for the manufacture of whiskey in a distillery. Allen v. Field [C. C. A.] 130 F. 641. Whether a lead in a mine is such that a reasonably prudent person would be justified in following it, and expending time and money in so doing. Wilson v. Harnette [Colo.] 75 P. 395. Transportable condition of cattle, proper conditions of carriage, and the usual time required to make a shipment. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Carroll [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1020. Opinion evidence by farmers and stockmen, as to whether a mare was with foal. Boyer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 123 Iowa, 248, 98 N. W. 764. Analyses and comparisons of expert witnesses in a case of alleged infringement of copyrights are admissible. Encyclopaedia Britannica Co. v. American Newspaper Ass'n, 130 F. 460. Expert testimony that forcing a hard or frozen stick of dynamite into a drill hole in a rock with a stick is a dangerous operation, contrary to sound practice, was properly admitted. Currelli v. Jackson [Conn.] 58 A. 762. The opinion of one who had qualified as an expert was admissible on the sufficiency of a fence to keep out cattle of ordinary disposition with reference to breaking fences. Trammell v.

not require special qualification,[98] or on issues exclusively for the court[99] or jury.[1]

Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 325. One qualified by long experience could testify to a condition of cattle as showing they had been driven hard. Kennon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 518.

Machinery, construction, engineering: Whether a guard could have been placed over an emery belt so as to protect workmen from flying particles. La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 922. An experienced and practical machinist may testify to the danger attending the cutting of steel rails with chisels and the precautions taken by experienced men to avoid the danger. Vohs v. A. E. Shorthill Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 495. An expert machinist could testify that a joiner was not dangerous if operated with the safety board on. Vollman Buggy Body Co. v. Spry [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1092. When a machine is not easily described and the danger not readily understood, an expert may state whether its operation is attended with danger, and state his reasons. Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1029. Expert testimony admissible on custom of putting experienced men to work on certain machines used in a particular trade, and the term of an apprentice in the trade, is admissible. Id. Expert testimony was competent to show that the boilers of a plant running in the ordinary way could not have used up the amount of steam indicated by the meter, as showing the water meter incorrectly registered the amount of water passing through it. Underfeed Stoker Co. v. Detroit Salt Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 959.

The proper construction of a derrick. Dyas v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 P. 972. Usual manner of putting up hoisting apparatus. Parlett v. Dunn [Va.] 46 S. E. 467. Whether 27 feet was an unusually long span (in building construction). Nelson v. Young, 91 App. Div. 457, 87 N. Y. S. 69. Insulation of electric wires and how long before an accident insulation was worn off. Bernier v. St. Paul Gas Light Co. [Minn.] 99 N. W. 778. Whether an insulator in use at a certain point was a safe one. North Amherst Home Tel. Co. v. Jackson, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 386. Whether breakages in bicycle materials were not due to use of castings instead of forgings, and not to inherent defects in materials used. Frederick Mfg. Co. v. Devlin [C. C. A.] 127 F. 71. Whether a pulley made of certain materials combined in a certain way is safe or unsafe. Wabash Screen Door Co. v. Black [C. C. A.] 126 F. 721. Expert evidence is admissible in regard to the roadways and entries of a mine, their adaptability to the intended use and their condition as to safety. Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 211 Ill. 216, 71 N. E. 863.

Proper method of putting in a railway switch point. Buckalew v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 1176. What was indicated by the fact that an air-hose (part of air brake equipment) was jerked out of brakeman's hand when he uncoupled it. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 11. The condition of a cattle guard and whether it would keep out stock proper subject for expert opinion by railway roadmaster. Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 760. The efficiency of a spark arrester to prevent the escape of sparks sufficient to set fire to nearby property may be testified to by an experienced engineer. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. B. F. Blaker & Co. [Kan.] 75 P. 71. The necessity of constructing ditches along a railway right of way is a proper subject of expert inquiry. Guinn v. Iowa & St. L. R. Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 94.

Scientific and professional: Suitability of apparatus for removing dust from sandblast room. Skinner v. E. F. Kerwin Ornamental Glass Co., 103 Mo. App. 650, 77 S. W. 1011. When injuries are of such a character as to require skilled and professional men to determine their cause and extent, the question is one of science, and only expert testimony is proper. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174. Family physician could testify as an expert as to the permanent effects of a spinal injury. Walden v. Jamestown, 178 N. Y. 213, 70 N. E. 466. Physician testified as an expert that an internal injury to plaintiff would shorten her life expectancy one-half unless a dangerous operation was performed. Houston Electric Co. v. McDade [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 100.

98. The length of time required to assess a township and how much of the work could be done in a day. Board of Com'rs of Clay County v. Redifer, 32 Ind. App. 93, 69 N. E. 305. Whether a man could state that he was going to shut down a mill a given length of time for repairs. Mathews v. Daly West Min. Co., 27 Utah, 193, 75 P. 722.

1. Safety of a railing on a bridge at a certain time and in a certain condition, its construction not being complicated. McDonald v. Duluth [Minn.] 100 N. W. 1102. That a boy sixteen years old would not appreciate the danger of operating a machine without the safety appliance. Vollman Buggy Body Co. v. Spry [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1092. Whether a ditch should have been braced while being dug was for the jury, from facts and conditions shown. Schermer v. McMahon [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 535. Construction and plan of car having been shown, whether it was dangerous for plaintiff to ride standing on a footboard was not the subject of expert testimony. Allen v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1142. Testimony of physicians that an injury to plaintiff's foot was caused by coming in contact with two uneven surfaces was not expert testimony, but was direct testimony as to a fact to be found by the jury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith,

(§ 9) C. Qualification of experts.[2]—There is no well defined rule by which the qualifications of an expert may be measured, and the determination of the question must be left largely in the discretion of the court.[3] The usual tests applied are familiarity with the subject under investigation, experience, and professional skill and training.[4] Expert capacity is a matter wholly relative to the subject of a particular question.[5]

208 Ill. 608, 70 N. E. 528. Expert opinion is inadmissible on the question which of two or more causes produced an injury, when the circumstances are such that they can be placed before the jury so that the jury can understand them and form an intelligent opinion on the question. Meehan v. Great Northern R. Co. [N. D.] 101 N. W. 183.

2. See 1 Curr. L. 1161.

3. Halverson v. Seattle Electric Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 1058; La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 922. The court's decision is conclusive, unless erroneous in law. Muskeget Island Club v. Inhabitants of Nantucket, 185 Mass. 303, 70 N. E. 61. The court may exclude further inquiry, when satisfied, after inquiry to some extent, that the witness is incompetent. Brunnemer v. Cook & Bernheimer Co., 89 App. Div. 406, 85 N. Y. S. 954. The court need not pass on the capacity of a witness as an expert until the question calling for expert testimony has been put to the witness. Conley v. Portland Gaslight Co. [Me.] 58 A. 61. The ruling of the court on the capacity of one to testify as an expert is ipso facto a decision that witness is qualified on that subject and that the subject is one proper for expert testimony. Id.

4. Where parol evidence is admissible to prove the unwritten laws of a country, it must be given by persons familiar with such laws, or in a situation rendering knowledge thereof probable. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 532. On the question of fixing the salary of a judicial officer, only witnesses sufficiently acquainted with the duties of the office to testify understandingly should be permitted to testify as to their value. Daniel v. Bullitt County, 25 Ky. L. R. 159, 74 S. W. 1057. Members of the bar, masters in chancery, and others familiar with the matter, may testify as to the time required by a master in chancery to make a report. Fitchburg Steam Engine Co. v. Potter, 211 Ill. 138, 71 N. E. 933. An expert, otherwise qualified, is not disqualified by the fact that he is a party in interest. Standefer v. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 552.

Miscellaneous illustrations.—Held competent: Opinion of one who had bred and sold bloodhounds admissible on question of value of one killed, in the absence of better evidence. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Philpot [Ark.] 77 S. W. 901. One who had ridden frequently on trains, observing the speed and timing trains between stations, and had observed the speed of the train in question, being a passenger thereon, was competent to express an opinion as to its speed. Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Iowa, 349, 98 N. W. 884. One qualified to give expert testimony regarding oil controlling valves may testify as to valves in which crude oil was used, though he had never used crude oil himself, since the other party may show the inapplicability of such evidence, if it is not applicable. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 678. A shipper of cattle, familiar with the business, could state the usual time required to ship cattle from a Texas station to St. Louis. International & G. N. R. Co. v. McGehee [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 804. In an action for damages for injury to a shipment of bees, the plaintiff, knowing what he had sold them for, their condition before and after shipment, and being familiar with their market value, could testify as to the extent of his loss. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Aten [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 346. One who had had 13 years experience working on a machine similar to the one causing an injury was qualified to give an opinion as to whether it was dangerous for a minor to work on it. Punkowski v. New Castle Leather Co. [Del.] 57 A. 559. One who had been a farmer 30 years and had run threshers 17 years was a competent expert on the condition of a threshing outfit when delivered. Standefer v. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 552. Opinion of an expert with 25 years' experience with emery belts could be rebutted by testimony of witnesses who had used such belts and were familiar with and understood them. La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 922. A motorman of sixteen months' experience, familiar with the line in question, could testify as to the distance in which a car could be stopped. Heinzle v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 848. A witness who testified that he had been a motorman on a street car line for six or seven months, knew the character of the line, was familiar with the speed of cars, and that the car at the time of the accident in question was running seven or eight miles an hour, was competent to give an opinion as to the rate at which a car could be run into a certain curve in the line with safety to the passengers. Halverson v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 1058. A motorman with several years experience, who had run the car by which plaintiff was injured over the same line and under the same conditions could testify as to the running of the car and the distance in which it could be stopped. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Weber [Ky.] 82 S. W. 986.

Railway employes: Men employed number of years in track department of railway qualified as experts on proper manner of putting in switch point. Buckalew v. Quincy, etc., R. Co. [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 1176. An engineer with fourteen months experience could testify how far ahead on the track he could see objects while going at a certain rate. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jones [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 852. A head brakeman and practical railway man qualified, though not an engineer, to give an opinion as to whether a switch could have been placed in a safer location. Morisette v. Canadian Pac. R. Co. [Vt.] 56 A. 1102.

(§ 9) D. Basis of expert testimony and examination of experts.[6]—The opinion of an expert may be based directly on his personal knowledge of the

Held incompetent: One who acquired his knowledge of race distinctions from the reading of magazine articles, from association with alleged Chinese, and from three months' experience as government Chinese inspector was not qualified as an expert on an issue whether or not a person was a Chinese. U. S. v. Hung Chang, 126 F. 400. One whose only knowledge of a person's handwriting is based on letters which he has seen, purporting to come from such person, cannot testify as to such handwriting from his recollection of it, and by comparing his recollection with other proved writings. Gress Lumber Co. v. Georgia Pine Shingle Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 115. A witness, not shown to have made an investigation or to have any special knowledge, cannot testify as to the depth and size of a sewer system and capacity to carry sewage from a given district. Chicago & M. Elec. R. Co. v. Mawman, 206 Ill. 182, 69 N. E. 66. A day laborer who had only seen and heard explained apparatus for manufacture of water gas could not give expert testimony as to the nature of and danger incident to the manufacture of that gas. Conley v. Portland Gaslight Co. [Me.] 58 A. 61. A witness who testified to a knowledge of the general surroundings of a culvert, but did not appear to have any actual knowledge of its size and dimensions, could not testify as to the capacity of the culvert. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Huddleston [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 64. A witness who, called one day, stated he did not know as to the common use of a certain fuse, could not give an opinion thereon the next day, after stating that he had made inquiries. Richmond & P. Elec. R. Co. v. Rubin [Va.] 47 S. E. 834.

As to values: One who had resided in a town 60 years, had farmed 26 years, had bought and sold land in the vicinity, had acted as assessor, and had seen and knew the situation and general character of the land in question, was qualified as an expert on the value of the land. Muskeget Island Club v. Nantucket, 185 Mass. 303, 70 N. E. 61. A resident acquainted with lots and knowing their value can testify in an action for damages caused by grading. Robinson v. St. Joseph, 97 Mo. App. 503, 71 S. W. 465. A witness who knew that land was used for pasturage and what the rental value of land in the vicinity used for that purpose was, could testify to the rental value of the land in question. Cluck v. Houston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 80. On the question of value of mining property, evidence by members of a corporation of investigations by them and their opinion that the lands were not worth opening was admissible. Cooper v. Maggard [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 607. Witnesses residing in the vicinity and familiar with land and its productiveness could give opinions on the amount of cotton land would have produced if it had not been overflowed. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Longbottom [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 542. One engaged in buying and selling timber, and who knew current prices and market price at the time in question, was competent as an expert on timber values. A witness deriving his knowledge from market reports and newspapers may testify as to the market value of cattle at a certain place on a certain day. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Halsell [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1241.

Incompetent: Beaudry v. Duquette [Minn.] 99 N. W. 635. One who had never seen a horse before an accident in which it was injured could not testify to its value. Manning v. Interurban St. R. Co., 88 N. Y. S. 386. In suit for injuries to a farm and mill site by refuse deposited in a stream, one whose knowledge was limited to the value of farm lands in the vicinity could not testify as to the value of the property as a whole. Bachert v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 208 Pa. 362, 57 A. 765. Witnesses who state that they do not know the value of lands with peach orchards in the vicinity of the lands in question are incompetent to express an opinion on the value of the latter. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 247. Mere observation of a piece of real estate, though continued and attentive, is not sufficient to qualify one as an expert respecting its value. Riley v. Camden & T. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 445.

Physicians: A practicing physician is competent to testify that treatment of alleged magnetic healers was unskillful, though he does not claim to possess the powers claimed by such magnetic healers. Longan v. Weltmer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 655. A physician who had practiced chiefly as a surgeon six years and had performed 100 to 200 operations for appendicitis was qualified to testify that an injury could have caused appendicitis. Sullivan v. Boston Elev. R. Co. [Mass.] 71 N. E. 90. Opinion of a physician as to the cause of an injury to plaintiff's eye was competent, though his examination was long after the accident alleged to be the cause. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 209 Ill. 241, 70 N. E. 586. A surgeon of 35 years experience may testify as to what ligaments would have to be severed in removing a certain bone from the hand, without a preliminary question as to whether he could determine the question without an inspection of the hand, especially when the witness had examined the hand. Johnson v. Winston [Neb.] 94 N. W. 607. In an action for malpractice, a physician is entitled to have the question of his care and skill in surgical operations and medical treatment determined by opinions of physicians who are members of his own school (Henslin v. Wheaton, 91 Minn. 219, 97 N. W. 882); but this rule does not apply to care and skill of a physician in using the X-ray machine, the opinion of a scientific expert, a professor of physical sciences, being competent in such case (Id.).

5. A witness may be qualified as an expert for one question and wholly unqualified for the next. Conley v. Portland Gaslight Co. [Me.] 58 A. 61. A witness who had had 20 years experience in blasting with dynamite, but had had only one experience with frozen dynamite, was not qualified to give an expert opinion on dynamite in that condition. Currelli v. Jackson [Conn.] 58 facts,[7] or on the evidence adduced at the trial,[8] or on both;[9] or on a hypothetical question.[10] When a hypothetical question is asked, it must be so framed as to

A. 762. A physician who is not a nurse and has no personal knowledge of compensation paid them cannot testify as to the reasonable value of a nurse's services in a given city. Cameron Mill & Elev. Co. v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 971. A handwriting expert may testify as to whether a signature was traced without knowledge or familiarity with the signature to be examined. Dolan v. Meehan [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 99. The opinions and testimony of experts must be limited to the particular matters as to which they are qualified by experience. Allen v. Field [C. C. A.] 130 F. 641.

6. See 1 Curr. L. 1162.

7. Summerlin v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co., 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898. The opinions given by experts should be based upon facts within their actual knowledge and which they are prepared to state. Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515. A veterinary surgeon who examined a horse just after an accident and testified that he could determine the horse's condition before the accident from such examination, was competent to give an opinion on the condition and value of the horse, though he had not seen him before the accident. Perine v. Interurban St. R. Co., 43 Misc. 70, 86 N. Y. S. 479. A physician may give an opinion as to plaintiff's injuries based on the previous history of the patient's case as learned from the patient, and his own diagnosis and treatment. Holloway v. Kansas City [Mo.] 82 S. W. 89. An expert who had examined plaintiff and knew the history of her case, and her previous condition, allowed to testify that neurasthenia could be, and in his opinion, was caused by plaintiff's fall. Wood v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 152. A physician was competent to testify as to the condition of a leg which he amputated, when he saw the results of a dissection, though did not see the actual dissection. Steinacker v. Hills Bros. Co., 91 App. Div. 521, 87 N. Y. S. 33. A physician who has attended an injured person, and learned from her the circumstances attending the injury, after testifying to such facts and those he had himself learned in his treatment, may state his opinion as to the cause of the injury. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Criswell [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 388. A physician who had observed plaintiff walk could give an opinion as to the probable cause of her inability to control one of her limbs. Hallum v. Omro [Wis.] 99 N. W. 1051. An expert medical witness cannot state what he learns entirely from medical works, unsupported by practical experience of his own. Kath v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. [Wis.] 99 N. W. 217.

But an expert cannot state his own practice in putting up hoisting apparatus. Parlett v. Dunn [Va.] 46 S. E. 467.

8. Where there is no conflict. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Hall [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 571. Proper in action for wrongful death to show physical condition of woman before and after an injury alleged to have caused her death and to receive opinion evidence based on facts shown by the evidence as to her symptoms and condition. McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985. A standard of comparison must first be established before an expert may testify as to the genuineness of a signature by the use of other signatures. Wilmington Sav. Bank v. Waste [Vt.] 57 A. 241.

NOTE. Proof of handwriting: The editor of a note on "Comparison of Handwriting," appended to University of Illinois v. Spalding, 71 N. H. 163, in 62 L. R. A. 817, gives seven modes of proving the origin of disputed handwriting, as follows: First, proof of admission of the act. Second, proof by witnesses who saw the pen form the letters. Third, proof by witnesses who know the handwriting of the author from having seen him write. Fourth, proof by witnesses who know the handwriting from correspondence with the author, on which he has acted. Fifth, proof by witnesses who know the handwriting from familiarity with authentic documents. Sixth, comparison by witnesses in court with genuine specimens of the handwriting of the same person. Seventh, comparison by the court or jury with the same genuine specimens.

Standards of comparison. In jurisdictions where proof of handwriting by comparison with other specimens is permitted, whether the comparison is by the court, jury, or witnesses, there must be preliminary proof of the genuineness of the specimens or standards. At common law, the genuineness of the standard must be established, in civil cases, by a fair preponderance of the evidence; in criminal cases, beyond a reasonable doubt.

Competency of standards: Copies of genuine letters, made by a letter press or other mechanical process, are incompetent. Commonwealth v. Eastman, 1 Cush. [Mass.] 189, 48 Am. Dec. 596. Photographic copies are now usually held competent though there is a conflict, especially in the earlier cases. Such copies must of course be proved to have been correctly made. People v. Mooney, 132 Cal. 13, 63 P. 1070; United States v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 44 Law. Ed. 539. Traced copies, or copies otherwise made by hand, are inadmissible. Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 12 S. W. 525; White Sew. Mach. Co. v. Gordon, 124 Ind. 495, 24 N. E. 1053, 19 Am. St. Rep. 109. Writings made as exhibits in the case are inadmissible. Commonwealth v. Allen, 128 Mass. 46, 35 Am. Rep. 356. Nor is a signature to a paper in the record competent. Travers v. Snyder, 38 Ill. App. 379. But writings made post litem motam are admissible against the party making them. People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193. For further discussion of the topic, see note to Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, in 63 L. R. A. 427.

9. Holloway v. Kansas City [Mo.] 82 S. W. 89.

10. A purely hypothetical question to an expert is the better form, but other forms of questions are sometimes permitted, the include the essential facts relating to the matter on which the opinion is sought.[11] It should include all[12] or substantially all[13] the facts which the evidence tends to prove,[14] but should not assume facts not in evidence.[15] It should not call for conclusions of fact[16] or law,[17] or for a speculative opinion.[18] The extent of the matter being largely discretionary with the trial court. Burnside v. Everett [Mass.] 71 N. E. 82. Questions put to an expert on direct examination must be framed hypothetically, unless there is no conflict of evidence as to the facts, or the witness is personally acquainted with them. City of Chicago v. Lamb, 105 Ill. App. 204.

11. Gasink v. New Ulm [Minn.] 99 N. W. 624; Ruscher v. Stanley [Wis.] 98 N. W. 223; Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012. A hypothetical question should be so framed as to clearly express the actual facts on which the opinion is to be based. Shoemaker v. Elmer [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 940. A question based on the testimony of certain witnesses, without specifying particular facts testified to, is objectionable because it permits the witness to select the facts he considers material; and it affords no opportunity for objection, amendment or rejection. Id. Unless based on facts before the jury which are readily recognized and easily grasped, the question must state all the facts on which the opinion is based; an opinion cannot be based on undisclosed facts within the expert's own knowledge. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Morris, 67 Kan. 410, 73 P. 108. A question as to the mental capacity of a testator, which was based on hypothetical findings of fact from certain testimony, held proper, where there was a conflict in the evidence. In re Peterson's Will [N. C.] 48 S. E. 561. The error in omitting from a hypothetical question to an expert as to the space in which a car could be stopped, the element whether the car was empty or loaded is cured, where on cross-examination, the expert said it would make no difference whether the car was empty or loaded. Meeker v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 178 Mo. 173, 77 S. W. 58. An opinion of a qualified witness on the damage to stock is admissible if it appears to embrace only legitimate and recoverable elements of damage. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Waggoner Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1050.

12. All facts on which evidence has been admitted. Fowler v. Iowa Land Co. [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1095.

13. Substantially all the facts admitted or proved. Smith v. Minneapolis St. R. Co., 91 Minn. 239, 97 N. W. 881. "The essential" facts of the case. Heinzle v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 848. "A fair summary" of the facts which the evidence tends to prove held sufficient. Buce v. Eldon, 122 Iowa, 92, 97 N. W. 989. A hypothetical question addressed to an expert witness is not improper simply because it includes only a part of the facts in evidence, provided there is evidence tending to support the facts which are embodied in the question. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096.

14. Hypothetical questions may assume issuable facts if the evidence tends to prove such facts. International, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 11; City of Aledo v. Honeyman, 208 Ill. 415, 70 N. E. 338; Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28; Summerlin v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co., 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898. A hypothetical question to a physician regarding plaintiff's injuries was properly based on plaintiff's own testimony. Longan v. Weltmer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 655. The opinion of a professional medical expert may be based upon the physical conditions of a person which have been detailed in evidence. Gasink v. New Ulm [Minn.] 99 N. W. 624. An expert may be asked his opinion on a hypothetical case, though the facts assumed are the same as those shown by the evidence. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McClifford, 120 Ga. 90, 47 S. E. 590. A hypothetical question as to the effect of a puncture by a surgical instrument, not properly sterilized, was proper, though the only evidence that the instrument in question was in a septic condition was that it had not been dipped in boiling water. Bower v. Self [Kan.] 75 P. 1021.

15. Bennett v. Incorporated Town of Mt. Vernon [Iowa] 100 N. W. 349; Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 186, 76 P. 956; Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Rutherford [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 558; State v. Brown [Mo.] 79 S. W. 1111. Expert testimony must be based upon supposed facts of the existence of which there is evidence before the court. Goken v. Dallugge [Neb.] 99 N. W. 818. An expert cannot give the result of a test of borings for bicycle handles, to determine whether of steel or malleable iron, unless the materials used in the test are identified as those in controversy. Fredrick Mfg. Co. v. Devlin [C. C. A.] 127 F. 71. A hypothetical question whether locomotor ataxia could be caused by an electric shock such as plaintiff claimed he received was improper when there was no evidence that plaintiff was suffering from that disease. Harter v. Colfax Elec. Light & Power Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 508. Expert testimony as to latent defects in a brake which might have caused an accident was inadmissible, there being no evidence of the nature of the alleged actual defect. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Lindamood [Tenn.] 78 S. W. 99. An expert opinion must be rejected unless the facts stated hypothetically in the question are established by the evidence. Held error to instruct the jury that the weight to be given expert opinion depended on the extent to which the facts assumed, on which the opinion was based, were justified by the evidence. Stutsman v. Sharpless [Iowa] 101 N. W. 105. But it was elsewhere held that error in allowing a hypothetical question embracing facts not proven is cured by an instruction that the value of such testimony is limited by the facts proven and embraced in the question. Thomas v. Dabblemont, 31 Ind. App. 146, 67 N. E. 463.

16. Summerlin v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co., 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898. Hypothetical questions asking for a simple negative or direct[19] or cross-examination[20] of experts is largely discretionary with the court. On cross-examination, a wide range of inquiry is permitted,[21] covering the extent of the expert's knowledge and the elements of which his judgment is made up.[22] affirmative answer but really calling for conclusions of fact, some of which were not the subject of expert opinion, were improper. Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 P. 164. A question should not be so framed as to cover the very question submitted to the jury. In an action for damages for injuries to horses while being shipped, the evidence tending to show they had become timid and unmanageable, a veterinary surgeon could not give his opinion, based on the evidence, as to what was the matter with the horses. Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Co. v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 53. Physician could not state whether the shock of a certain collision caused a stated injury. Riser v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 47.

Contra: A hypothetical question is not objectionable, though it calls for deductions of facts which are to be made by the jury, if otherwise proper. International, etc., R. Co. v. Mills [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 11.

17. Physician could not testify that hernia was a contributing cause of an injury. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 119 Ga. 455, 46 S. E. 678.

18. A question to a medical expert whether certain injuries would be likely to produce a certain condition was improper as calling for speculative evidence of damages. Higgins v. United Traction Co., 96 App. Div. 69, 89 N. Y. S. 76.

Experts may properly testify to the probabilities of the case, as that injuries "were liable to be permanent." Hallum v. Omro [Wis.] 99 N. W. 1051. A medical expert may testify as to the probable result of a present physical condition. Rosenblatt v. Cohen House Wrecking Co., 91 App. Div. 413, 86 N. Y. S. 801. Opinion of physician that plaintiff's heart trouble might have been caused by the accident in question and might have come from other causes was sufficiently certain. Moritz v. Interurban St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. S. 162. An expert opinion that improvement in eyesight was not "likely" was not too indefinite and speculative. Graham v. Bauland Co., 97 App. Div. 141, 89 N. Y. S. 595. Expert medical witness could state whether he thought plaintiff's condition at the trial could have resulted from an injury. Id. A purely speculative question, not based on any evidence in the case, is incompetent. Happer v. Empire City Subway Co., 78 App. Div. 637, 79 N. Y. S. 904.

19. An expert having been thoroughly examined, it was proper for the court, in its discretion to end such examination. Stroh v. South Covington, etc., R. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1868, 78 S. W. 1120. In an action for malpractice, a medical expert may be asked the preliminary question whether there was any remedy for the necrosis except by removing the bone. Johnson v. Winston [Neb.] 94 N. W. 607. Where experts had testified as to the symptoms of a disease of the brain from which it was alleged a testatrix had suffered, and had given their opinion on her testamentary capacity, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to allow them to go over the will, pointing out the alleged defects which indicated that testatrix was afflicted with such disease. Henning v. Stevenson [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1135.

20. Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515.

21. Coman v. Wunderlich [Wis.] 99 N. W. 612. The compensation received by an expert and his relation to the party for whom he testifies may be shown. Chicago City R. Co. v. Handy, 208 Ill. 81, 69 N. E. 917; Brown v. Interurban St. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 374, 87 N. Y. S. 461. If a hypothetical question omits facts claimed to have been proven by the adverse party, such party may call the witness' attention to such omitted facts on cross-examination (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096), and ask a hypothetical question based on his view of the proven facts (Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28; City of Aledo v. Honeyman, 208 Ill. 415, 70 N. E. 338; Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012). When one party has examined a witness as an expert, the adverse party may properly ask an expert opinion of him in cross-examination. McGarrity v. New York, etc., R. Co. [R. I.] 55 A. 718.

22. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 678. An expert who has testified that if a boiler and pipes of a heating plant had been covered with asbestos, better results would have been obtained, may state on cross-examination, whether it was customary to use asbestos if not specified in the contract. Matthews v. Farrell [Ala.] 37 So. 325. Experts having testified to the competency of one claimed to have been insane were properly cross-examined as to her ability to care for herself and her property, unassisted. In re Daniels, 140 Cal. 335, 73 P. 1053. A witness who has given an estimate of the damage per acre to farm land by the crossing of a railway may be cross-examined as to his knowledge and the elements of his judgment, but may not be asked why he did not estimate the value in a different stated sum. Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Freeman, 210 Ill. 270, 71 N. E. 444. Where an expert has testified as to what danger he could see and appreciate in a cotton picking machine, it was proper to ask him on cross-examination if he had taken steps to learn what danger a man of less than ordinary intelligence, like plaintiff, could see and appreciate in the same machine. Kasjeta v. Nashua Mfg. Co. [N. H.] 58 A. 874. One who testified that goods received were brass and not gold as ordered could be asked to say whether a given article shown him was brass or gold. Coman v. Wunderlich [Wis.] 99 N. W. 612.

It is improper for the judge to ask of a witness who has testified as an expert such questions as to indicate an opinion that the testimony is improbable or erroneous. City of Columbus v. Anglin [Ga.] 48 S. E. 318.

Books of science: A medical work is inadmissible to contradict a medical expert. Mitchell v. Leech [S. C.] 48 S. E. 290. Books of science and art are inadmissible to prove the opinion of experts stated therein. Quattlebaum v. State, 119 Ga. 433, 46 S. E. 677.

§ 10. Real or demonstrative evidence.[23]—Real evidence is admissible[24] if relevant,[25] and exhibition of injuries to the jury is permitted in nearly all jurisdictions.[26] But a demonstration of the alleged effects of an inquiry, under the sole control of the witness, is improper.[27] Photographs and diagrams are admissible when shown to be correct,[28] unless the subject is entirely capable of verbal

Medical works are hearsay and inadmissible, as are recitals of their contents by witnesses. But specific works may be referred to on cross-examination of experts who base their testimony upon them. Baily v. Kreutzmann, 141 Cal. 519, 75 P. 104.

23. See 1 Curr. L. 1163.

24. Torn garment admissible on issue of manner in which death was caused in an accident. Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Mansell [Ala.] 36 So. 459. A brakebeam, introduced merely to show operation of the brake and not a defect therein, is admissible without a showing that it was in the same condition as at the time of the occurrence in question. Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 396.

25. In action for injury caused by a defective burner valve, another valve, not a burner valve, could not be exhibited to show wherein the burner valve was defective. Carr v. American Locomotive Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 678. Putting four witnesses on the stand and asking each his age, in order to allow the jury to compare them with alleged minors to whom liquor had been sold, was improper. Poynor v. Holzgrat [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 829.

26. Not error to permit plaintiff to exhibit his injured limb to the jury. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl [Neb.] 98 N. W. 44. It is proper for plaintiff, while testifying, to exhibit his injuries to the jury, when such examination is not such as to prejudice or unduly influence them. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Moody [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 856. It is improper to permit examination of a man's private parts by the jury. Garvik v. Burlington, etc., R. Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 498.

27. The allowing of a witness to exhibit himself to the jury in the act of writing his name and of taking a drink of water, for the purpose of showing a nervous affection alleged to be the result of the injuries complained of, is beyond the ordinary tests of examination, and unfair and improper. Being a matter of discretion, it is not reversible by N. Y. court of appeals. Clark v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 177 N. Y. 359, 69 N. E. 647.

28. Photographs of place where an injury occurred were admissible on a showing that they correctly represented the street at the time of the injury. City of Huntington v. Lusch [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 402. Photographs of decedent before and after the accident, in action for wrongful death. Davis v. Seaboard Air Line R. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 591. In prosecution for burning a building with intent to defraud the insurer, a photograph, properly verified, of the burned building, was admissible, though it contained other buildings, some partially burned in a previous fire, the court limiting the jury to inferences concerning the one building mentioned in the indictment. Commonwealth v. Fielding, 184 Mass. 484, 69 N. E. 216. Photographs of defective sidewalk taken two months after accident admissible when it was shown that its condition was unchanged. City of San Antonio v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 28. Photographs of repairs in a sidewalk some months after an accident were admissible, the fact of the repairs having been shown by defendant, to show the extent of the defect. Id. A photograph of plaintiff inadmissible because there was no proof of its correctness. Martin v. Moore [Md.] 57 A. 671. A diagram shown to be a correct representation of the thing to be described is admissible, though not prepared by the witness testifying. Koon v. Southern R. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 86.

Evidence showing photographs to be correct representations of a defective walk at the time of an accident was admissible. City of Antonio v. Talerico [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 28. A photograph of a place where an accident occurred may be shown to be correct by a witness familiar with the locality, though not present when the picture was taken. Hebbe v. Maple Creek [Wis.] 99 N. W. 442.

NOTE. Photographs as evidence: Judicial cognizance is taken of the fact that photography is the art of producing facsimiles or representations of objects by the action of light on a prepared surface (Luke v. Calhoun County, 52 Ala. 118), and that civilized communities rely upon photographic pictures (Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464). As to the character of photographs as evidence and the reasons why they are competent as such, see Franklin v. State, 69 Ga. 42, 47 Am. Rep. 748; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 90 Ala. 25, 24 Am. St. Rep. 753.

Photograhs are usually considered merely secondary evidence (Bliss v. Johnson, 76 Cal. 597), and a foundation must be laid for their admission by showing them to be correct (Reddin v. Gates, 52 Iowa, 210; Blair v. Pelham, 118 Mass. 421; Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586), and that the objects photographed are not, and cannot be, produced in court (Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214; Eborn v. Zimpelman, 47 Tex. 503, 26 Am. Rep. 319), or that a view by the jury of the premises photographed was impracticable (Omaha Southern R. Co. v. Beeson, 36 Neb. 361; Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 512).

Following are illustrative cases in which photographs have been admitted in evidence: First, of premises or places. Archer v. New York, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Y. 598; Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 512; Locke v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 46 Iowa, 109. Second, of persons. (a) To prove identity. United States v. A Lot of Jewelry, 59 F. 684. (b) To prove paternity. A photograph of the putative father, who was dead, was admitted, for the purpose of comparison with child in court in Shorten v. Judd, 56 Kan. 44, 54 Am. St. Rep. 587. But such evidence is said to be entitled to little weight in Re Jessup's Estate, 81 Cal. 408, 6 L. R. A. 594. (c) To show a physical injury. People v. Fish, 125

description.[29] Permission to perform experiments in the presence of the jury cannot be demanded as a right, but is discretionary with the court.[30] Such experiments are permissible only when such a similarity of conditions has been made to appear as will insure a reasonably just and accurate comparison.[31] Evidence of experiments or tests, not made in court, is admissible only after a showing that the experiments were fairly and honestly made,[32] and that the conditions surrounding such experiments were similar to those surrounding the occurrence in question.[33]

§ 11. Quantity required and probative effect.[34]—The probative tendency of evidence is for the court; its probative force for the jury.[35] A preponderance[36] of evidence is all that is required to maintain an issue of fact in a civil action,[37] though based on acts which constitute a crime.[38] A prima facie case will support a verdict, if uncontroverted,[39] and in the absence of evidence,[40] or where the evidence is evenly balanced,[41] the decision should be against the party having the burden of proof. Evidence may be sufficient to sustain a cause of action, though circumstantial.[42] A proposition is not proved until the evidence becomes incon-

31. Error to permit experiments, in action for damages to plaintiff's farm by sulphur fumes from defendant's smelter, in absence of proof that the elements which combined to produce the experimental results were the same as those which caused the alleged damage at plaintiff's farm. Rowe v. Northport Smelting & Refining Co., 35 Wash. 101, 76 P. 529.

32. Evidence of experiments in running street cars around a curve at high speed shown to have been made by experts, and fairly conducted, were admissible to sustain the experts' opinions. Cheetham v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 881. A foundation must be laid for evidence of an experiment by an onlooker, by showing it was made by a competent person, with suitable apparatus in proper condition, and that the experiment was honestly and fairly made. Stopping a street car. Omaha St. R. Co. v. Larson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 824.

33. Experiments in running street cars around a curve could not be testified to, when it appeared they were not made under the same conditions as those attending the accident in question. Halversen v. Seattle Elect. Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 1059. Conditions of experiments in running an engine round a curve in order to test the extent of vision of the track ahead, held sufficiently similar to those of the accident in question, to render evidence thereof admissible. Olivaras v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 981. Evidence of experiments held properly excluded when no attempt was made to show similarity of conditions. 36. The preponderance of the evidence which must be produced by the party having the burden of proof in civil cases is that superior weight of the evidence upon the issues involved which is sufficient to incline a reasonable or impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. 42. Wabash Screen Door Co. v. Black [C. C. A.] 126 F. 721. To entitle a jury to draw inferences of fact from circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be proved as facts and cannot be themselves presumed. Cunard S. S. Co. v. Kelley [C. C. A.] 126 F. 610.

sistent with the negative.[43] The quantity of proof required in particular cases may be fixed by statute.[44]

An expert opinion is not, of course, conclusive,[45] even though uncontradicted,[46] and cannot overcome positive, uncontradicted testimony to a fact.[47]

The rule that affirmative testimony is to be preferred to negative is not absolute and does not require the rejection of negative testimony, unless inconsistent with the affirmative.[48] The undisputed,[49] reasonable evidence of one witness, though a party interested, should control as to a question of fact.[50] Where the testimony of several witnesses relates to separate transactions, the entire proof is no stronger than the testimony of the strongest witness.[51] Irrelevant evidence, if admitted, is ineffective.[52]

Testimony, where received, in regard to transactions with a person since deceased,[53] mere casual admissions,[54] and statements of mere sense impressions or judgments as to time,[55] are said to be entitled to little weight.

Public records[56] and affidavits attached thereto as required by law[57] are conclusive. Maps of a coast line are entitled to little weight, when changes are shown to be constantly taking place.[58] Standard mortality tables are not con-

47. Western & A. R. Co. v. Robinson, 119 Ga. 331, 46 S. E. 425. Opinions of physicians as to testator's capacity, based on their observation, could not prevail against evidence of acts by him showing testamentary capacity. In re Klein's Estate, 207 Pa. 191, 56 A. 422. Two witnesses having testified to an inspection and test of a chain and to finding it sound, the opinions of two experts that there must have been a crack in the chain at the time of the inspection were insufficient to discredit the previous testimony and show negligence. Johnston v. Turnbull [C. C. A.] 130 F. 769.

48. The rule rests upon common experience and is applied as a means of determining the relative weight of conflicting testimony. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 130 F. 65. The situation of the witnesses testifying negatively and affirmatively may be such that their testimony may not be in conflict. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews [C. C. A.] 130 F. 65.

52. Its admission is not ordinarily cause for granting a new trial. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 119 Ga. 455, 46 S. E. 678.

53. Parol testimony as to transactions with one long since dead is the weakest species of evidence. Hannay v. New Orleans Cotton Exch., 112 La. 998, 36 So. 831. Testimony relating to conversations with persons since deceased must be received with caution. Grantham v. Gossett [Mo.] 81 S. W. 895. Contracts alleged to have been made with deceased persons, to be enforced after death, must be established by clear and convincing proof. Roberge v. Bonner, 94 App. Div. 342, 88 N. Y. S. 91.

54. Mere casual admissions are to be received with caution; sworn admissions are entitled to great weight, but are not conclusive. Anderson v. Davis [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 157. Casual verbal admissions, uncorroborated, after a great lapse of time should be given little probative force. Roberge v. Bonner, 94 App. Div. 342, 88 N. Y. S. 91.

The recitals in public legislative acts are evidence of the facts recited; recitals in private acts are not.[61]

One who introduces a pleading of the adverse party[62] or a deposition taken by him[63] makes the evidence his own.

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

§ 1. General Rules of Examination (1383). Refreshing Memory (1386). Responsiveness (1387).

§ 2. Cross-examination (1387). Limitation to Scope of Direct Examination (1388). Limitation to Issues (1390). Examination Going to Credibility of Witness (1391). As to Probability of Testimony (1393). Examination as to Documents (1394).

§ 3. Redirect Examination (1394).

§ 4. Recalling of Witness for Further Examination (1395).

§ 5. Privilege of Witness (1396).

§ 1. General rules of examination.[64]—It is within the sound discretion of the court to control the detailed examination of witnesses.[65] Questions asked with a purpose of leading the jury to infer something not admissible should be prohibited.[66] Questions should be definite,[67] and contain a single interrogatory.[68]

Proof of experiments to illustrate testimony,[69] and permission to perform them in the presence of the jury, is discretionary.[70]

The court may question a witness,[71] though his questions are in the nature and inlets of the beach. Sandiford v. Hempstead, 97 App. Div. 163, 90 N. Y. S. 76.

60. Other evidence relative to the subject-matter of an account is considered, and neither side is conclusive evidence of what it discloses. Simpson v. First Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 129 F. 257.

61. Since all persons are, in contemplation of law, privy to the making of public, but not of private, acts. Davis v. Moyels [Vt.] 56 A. 174. Petitions to the general assembly of Vermont and private acts passed pursuant to such petitions, granting certain lands, all reciting confiscation of the lands by the state, are not evidence of such confiscation so as to show title in the state, and through it in plaintiff, as against a stranger to the title by grant. Id.

62. A party introducing in evidence the pleadings of the adverse party is bound by the allegations therein. Yates v. People, 207 Ill. 316, 69 N. E. 775. A plaintiff who introduces in evidence a paragraph of defendant's answer is not bound by it in its entirety, but may rebut the parts unfavorable to him; and the jury may believe or disbelieve such parts. Christian v. Macon R. & Light Co., 120 Ga. 314, 47 S. E. 923.

63. A party introducing a deposition taken by his adversary makes it his own and the adverse party is not bound by it. Von Tobel v. Stetson & Post Mill Co., 32 Wash. 683, 73 P. 788.

64. See 1 Curr. L. 1165.

65. And unless an abuse of this judicial discretion is shown, it will not be controlled on appeal. Fields v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 185. The examination of a bankrupt's wife must be allowed a certain latitude, that it may be determined whether a business conducted by her is her husband's. In re Worrell, 125 F. 159. It is not an abuse of discretion to allow the stenographer to read three times, and in the presence of the jury, certain testimony of plaintiff, given in his own behalf, and to allow him to correct a statement therein while he is still upon the stand. Exclusion of questions so indefinite as to offer no means of determining their relevancy is not error. Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 186, 76 P. 956. A question that can be answered as well by illegal as by legal testimony is too general. Beall Bros. v. Johnstone [Ala.] 37 So. 297. An impeaching question whether witness' testimony is the same as on a former trial is too indefinite. Mitchell v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 76. See 1 Curr. L. 1165, n. 2. A question so indefinite that impertinent facts would be responsive to it is properly overruled. Ross v. State, 139 Ala. 144, 36 So. 718.

68. Question to expert answerable by yes or no but calling for his opinion on several propositions. Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 P. 164. See 1 Curr. L. 1165, n. 3.

of a cross-examination,[72] and the court may repeat a question to a witness and require an answer after he has been stood aside where he failed to answer when asked.[73]

Expert witnesses may be instructed by the court to make their answers as concise as possible,[74] and it is not prejudicial for the district attorney to state to the witness, "This is an important matter and you must be positive."[75]

Questions should not assume facts not proved[76] or controverted,[77] especially where the witness denies them, and proof is essential as a basis for further inquiry;[78] nor should questions call for conclusions,[79] especially as to the merits of the case,[80] or involving the credibility of other witnesses,[81] except as to matters provable only by expert testimony.[82]

In a proper case, the court may enter a rule excluding from the court room all witnesses except the one testifying.[83]

A witness refusing to answer proper questions may be committed for contempt.[84]

Where plaintiff's wife is called as a witness for defendant, plaintiff's counsel should not be permitted to converse with her before testifying,[85] but where a codefendant not on trial is called by defendant as a witness, he is properly allowed private conversation with his counsel before testifying, though counsel for defendant are properly refused a like privilege,[86] and the court in its discretion may refuse defendant permission to consult with his counsel during cross-examination.[87] A witness stating an inability to state the exact amount may be asked to estimate.[88] The sustaining of an objection to a question which has been answered does not take the answer away from the jury.[89]

Repetitions[90] of questions previously asked and allowed are properly disal-

lowed,[91] even on cross-examination,[92] though it is not error to allow the reiteration of a question on cross-examination where a witness is being probed as to previous contradictory statements.[93]

Leading questions[94] are those which suggest to the witness the answer desired.[95] Their allowance is discretionary,[96] and the rule against their use is frequently relaxed in favor of females asked embarrassing questions,[97] or where the witness testifies through an interpreter,[98] or has an imperfect command of the vernacular.[99] And a leading question may be proper on redirect, to call forth an explanation of matters brought out on cross,[1] or to direct attention to a previous statement,[2] or to probe a hostile or reluctant witness;[3] but a witness who is neither unwilling nor adverse should not be led by reference to his former testimony,[4] though where it fairly appears that the witness is evasive, he may be probed by leading questions, though he states that he is friendly to the questioner.[5] Leading questions may be asked of a grand juror as on cross-examination, where he is examined under the statute to contradict a witness who has appeared before the jury.[6] Questions addressed to experts are not objectionable as leading,[7] but a party testifying should not be led by his counsel.[8] The rejec-

Refreshing memory.[10]—A witness may refresh his memory from a memorandum which he has participated in making and of the accuracy of which he has knowledge,[11] though he has no independent recollection of all the facts therein stated.[12] Where the witness has a clear and independent recollection after refreshing his memory, it is immaterial that the instrument used was a copy made some time after the original,[13] or that the memorandum was not made by the party testifying.[14] But a newspaper article which witness had no part in preparing cannot be used on cross-examination.[15] A witness may refer to a transcript of his evidence at a former trial,[16] and where a party is surprised by the testimony of his own witness, he may interrogate him with reference to previous contradictory statements with a view to test his recollection and lead him if mistaken to review what he has said.[17] But where a witness fails to testify as expected, counsel cannot refresh his memory by reading from the transcript of his former testimony and then ask him if it is not true.[18] Defendant may read to plaintiff's witness from the stenographic report of his testimony at a former trial.[19] The memorandum used by the witness may be shown in evidence,[20] not as independent proof, but to supply the details of what the witness has sworn to generally,[21] and where papers are so used on direct examination, their production for the use of the cross-examiner should be compelled;[22] but a memorandum proper to be used to refresh witness' recollection but not in fact so used cannot be used as original evidence,[23] and where it is not shown that the memorandum was contemporaneously made and known to be correct, its introduction is error.[24] The court may control the mode of refreshing a witness by his previous testimony so as to prevent his being seemingly impeached.[25]

Interpreters[26] may be used when necessary,[27] and may be appointed by the court against the objection of the opposite party.[28]

Responsiveness.[29]—The objection of want of responsiveness is available only to the party propounding the question.[30] Immaterial and incompetent matter volunteered in reply to a proper question should be stricken out as unresponsive,[31] a motion for that purpose being the proper remedy, rather than objection to the question.[32] The remedy where testimony is volunteered without a question is also by motion to strike.[33] A mere prefatory statement by the witness, though neither pertinent nor responsive, will not justify reversal of a conviction.[34]

Character witnesses cannot be asked on direct what their relations with the person under investigation are,[35] nor whether they are acquainted with the general character of the person as a turbulent, violent and boisterous man.[36]

§ 2. Cross-examination.[37]—The limits within which cross-examination will be allowed rest very largely in the discretion of the trial judge, and his action will not be disturbed in the absence of a manifest abuse of such discretion.[38] A full and fair cross-examination of the witness, however, upon the subjects of the direct examination is a right, not a privilege,[39] and where it is not extended beyond its proper scope, the fact that it tends to establish a defense to the action is no ground for its refusal.[40] Where a witness has been fully cross-examined as to a matter, it is not error to refuse further cross-examination as to the same matter when the witness is called in rebuttal.[41]

The right of the party calling him to cross-examine an adverse witness in chief does not extend to immaterial matters,[42] and where a party calls his opponent under the statute for cross-examination, whether the witness may be further examined by his own attorney at that time and as a part of his case, is discretionary with the court.[43]

Browbeating and insinuating questions not tending to elicit any valuable facts are not allowable,[44] and the use of the privilege as a means of conveying inadmissible matter to the jury warrants reversal.[45]

A witness cannot be asked whether he wrote a letter referred to in a letter in evidence, unless the letter referred to is put in evidence.[46] A stipulation that plaintiff is competent to testify as to value will not preclude his cross-examination by defendant on the subject of value.[47] A party cannot object to evidence he himself elicits on cross-examination.[48] Where a witness on cross-examination refuses to answer pertinent questions relating to testimony given on direct examination his testimony in chief should be stricken out.[49]

Limitation to scope of direct examination.[50]—Ordinarily in this country, cross-examination can only relate to facts and circumstances connected with matters shown on direct examination,[51] and if a party wants to go into other mat-

A witness testifying to intoxication of insured may be asked on cross-examination as to complaints made by insured as to pains in his head and chest. Union Life Ins. Co. v. Jameson, 31 Ind. App. 28, 67 N. E. 199. Where defendant in malpractice testifies to plaintiff's condition and that he administered proper remedies, he ters, he must make the witness his own,[52] or does so by the mere fact of so pursuing the inquiry, and both deprives himself of the privilege of contradiction and empowers his adversary to develop the whole matter on redirect.[53] The rule, however, in England and some of our states is that a witness called to a particular fact may be cross-examined on all matters material to the issue,[54] and the general rule has its qualifications and will not be applied so strictly as to defeat the real object of cross-examination.[55] Thus cross-examination is proper, though it calls for facts not testified to in chief but relative to the same subject-matter and bearing upon the main fact toward which the examination in chief was directed, such facts as give to the direct testimony the effect of false testimony.[56]

Where a portion of a conversation or transaction is brought out on direct, the cross-examiner is entitled to the remainder of it,[57] and all the circumstances surrounding it, though the witness is the defendant in a criminal prosecution,[58] and the cross question tends to disclose another offense.[59] A party who avails himself of incompetent evidence cannot complain if his adversary is permitted to go into the same subject-matter on cross-examination,[60] and a cross-examiner who calls out immaterial matter not referred to in the examination in chief cannot complain of the court's failure to strike it out suo motu.[61]

Limitation to issues.[62]—Except for certain purposes and in certain circumstances, chiefly, in testing recollection and attacking credibility, cross questions as to immaterial matters are not allowed;[63] and when a witness is cross-examined on a matter collateral to the issue, he cannot, as to his answer, be subsequently contradicted by the party putting the question.[64] The test whether a fact in-

32. Accordingly, an execution is within Civ. Code, § 295, providing the remedy for assessing damages on dissolution of an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment. Mason, G. & H. Co. v. Mechanics' Lien & Trust Co. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 290.

§ 2. The right to have execution.[33]—There must be a valid judgment,[34] but the making of the judgment roll is not generally a prerequisite.[35] Mandamus generally takes the place of an execution to enforce judgments against a municipality.[36] Death of a judgment creditor after judgment for a cause which abates does not affect the right to collect it by execution.[37] In some states the judgment must be revived before the writ will issue,[38] and in some the right is suspended pending administration of a judgment debtor's estate,[39] or leave is necessary.[40]

§ 3. Stay and how procured.[41]—Execution may be stayed by agreement between the parties, but such agreement must have the elements of a contract.[42] Neither the motives of the judgment creditor nor the hardships of the debtor will be considered.[43] That the property sought to be sold is claimed by another,[44] or that the judgment debtor may in a certain contingency have a set-off against the judgment,[45] do not warrant a stay in execution. A surety on a forthcoming bond allowing his property to be sold under execution thereon, neither the bankrupt principal nor the other sureties can enjoin the sale.[46]

A petition for a stay should clearly and concisely set out the facts relied on,[47] and should be verified by an affidavit.[48] On presentation of the petition, the court should grant a rule to show cause and an answer should be filed by plaintiff, an issue being thus formed.[49] The petition stating a ground for a stay, defendant's rights should be determined before the sale.[50]

38. Vogt v. Daily [Neb.] 98 N. W. 31. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, pp. 1048 to 1053, on the death of a judgment debtor, execution can be issued and will become a lien, while the title remains in the heirs, at any time within 7 years after the entry or revivor of the judgment, not including the 12 months delay on account of the death of the judgment debtor. Kinkade v. Gibson, 209 Ill. 246, 70 N. E. 683.

NOTE. Necessity of revivor in case of sole judgment creditor: At common law, revival of the judgment by scire facias is necessary before execution can be issued, after a sole plaintiff's death, in order to bring in his legal representative, who may then issue the writ. Earl v. Brown, 1 Wils. 302; Mercer v. Lawrence, 26 Week. Rep. 506. See, also, note to Jefferson v. Morton, 2 Wm. Saund. 6. This rule has been adopted in some states in all its strictness. Stewart v. Nuckols, 15 Ala. 225, 50 Am. Dec. 127; Smith v. Alevander, 80 Ala. 251; Seeley v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 337, 59 P. 631, 78 Am. St. Rep. 314; Morgan v. Taylor, 38 N. J. Law, 317. See, also, Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 763. However most of the courts hold that revival by scire facias, or in any other manner is unnecessary. Armstrong v. McLaughlin, 49 Ind. 370; Mavity v. Eastridge, 67 Ind. 211; Rook v. Williams, 13 La. Ann. 374; Gaston v. White, 46 Mo. 486.

The same common-law rule obtains where the sole judgment debtor dies. Harwood v. Philips, O. Bridg. 473; Heapy v. Parris, 6 Term R. 368. This rule exists in some of the states. Cunningham v. Burk, 45 Ark. 267; Smith v. Reed, 52 Cal. 345; Boyle v. Maroney, 73 Iowa, 70, 35 N. W. 145, 5 Am. St. Rep. 657; Walden v. Craig, 14 Pet. [U. S.] 147, 10 L. Ed. 393 [Kentucky rule]. Some states hold that a sale without revivor is voidable only. Elliott v. Knott, 14 Md. 121, 74 Am. Dec. 519; Drake v. Collins, 5 How. [Miss.] 256. The subject is now generally regulated by statute.—From note to Hatcher v. Lord [Ga.] 61 L. R. A. 353.

If execution is void,[51] it may be enjoined.[52]

§ 4. Procedure to procure issuance of writ.[53]—The right to the writ may in some cases he enforced by mandamus.[54]

A proceeding for leave to issue execution is an "action" within the meaning of the statute of limitations.[55] In Illinois, the notice to an administrator before issuing execution on a judgment against the decedent must be personal.[56]

§ 5. Power and authority to issue or allow issuance of writ.[57]—A judgment validly rendered[58] by an inferior court may in some states be transcribed to a higher court on a return of nulla bona and execution issued thereon,[59] to do so statutory record in the upper court is prerequisite.[60] In Illinois, judgments for fines are not transcribable.[61]

§ 6. Form and contents of writ.[62]—An execution must conform to the judgment,[63] must describe the judgment debtor,[64] and if the execution be a special one against property, must describe the property to be levied on,[65] so that identification is possible.

In Alabama, an unitemized execution for costs is void.[66] The clerk's signature must be official.[67] The indorsement or backing must conform to statutory requirements.[68]

And, such court having the full record relating to the ruling on the plea before it, it will treat the proceeding as in effect one on a writ of error. Id. That there is a remedy by appeal will not prevent the issuance of a writ of mandamus against the trial court to compel issuance of execution. Holtum v. Greif [Cal.] 78 P. 11. But mandamus will not lie to compel the clerk to issue execution, though the right to a new trial has been denied by the trial court. Id.

§ 7. Quashal of writ.[69]—A motion to quash must allege the grounds.[70] In Kentucky, the county in which the judgment was rendered is the proper forum for quashing the execution issued to another county for failure to comply with the statute.[71]

§ 8. The levy. A. Leviable property and order of leviability.[72]—The property must belong to the execution debtor,[73] though the latter having only the apparent title, a creditor may in certain cases levy thereon.[74] One cannot levy on property in the custody of the law,[75] nor on exempt property.[76] Property of a municipal corporation used for public purposes or charged with a public use is not subject to execution sale,[77] but the private property of the municipality used for profit may be sold.[78] A vested remainder may be levied on.[79]

Equitable interests like that of a vendee under an executory contract of sale,[80] or of the holder of a bond for title,[81] the interest of a grantor of a fraudulent conveyance,[82] or a mortgagor's interest or other redemptive right,[83] are subject to levy or not depending upon the nature of the right according to the common law or statute of the state governing the controversy.[84] Under the laws of some states, one's income, not exempt[85] and presently belonging to him[86] is leviable.

A judgment debtor having the right of possession and the legal title during the existence of the right to redeem, his interest is subject to sale on execution [Construing Rev. Code N. Dak. 1899, §§ 5541, 5544, 5548, 5507]. Lynch v. Burt [C. C. A.] 132 F. 417.

Holding negative: Until redemption is made. Shumate v. McLendon [Ga.] 48 S. E. 10. The debtor or his subsequent judgment creditor may redeem. If the latter redeems, he can compel a reconveyance by the grantee so as to revest the legal title in the debtor and make the land subject to sale under the creditor's judgment. Id. The interest of the grantor is not affected by a transfer of the debt or of the title. He acquires no leviable interest until the debt is paid to the transferee. Id.

(§ 8) B. Mode of making levy.[87]—Levy must be by a party disinterested in the action.[88] It should not be made until the writ is delivered to the officer,[89] who must take the goods with intent to levy.[90] Statutory provisions as to demanding payment must be strictly followed.[91] Statutory notice to a firm on taking a partner's interest must be served on some one of authority other than defendant.[92] In some states, the debtor failing to designate his homestead, the officer making the execution sale may do so.[93]

(§ 8) C. Duty to make levy. Indemnification of officer.[94]—The officer must execute the writ and may be compelled to do so, but not by mandamus where there is a plain and adequate ordinary remedy.[95] Delay being caused by the judgment creditor or his attorney, the sheriff is not liable for loss occasioned thereby.[96] Statutory provisions generally govern the execution of indemnity bonds, and a provision for them is to be regarded as concurrent with one for interpleader.[97]

(§ 8) D. Extent and adequacy of levy.[98]—No more than is necessary should be levied on,[99] and equity will grant relief from an unjust and oppressive levy.[1] An execution in rem against specific property may be levied on the entire property covered thereby, though the value of the property greatly exceed the amount of the execution, but where the property is susceptible of division only so much should be sold as is necessary to satisfy the execution.[2]

(§ 8) E. Conflicting levies and liens and priorities between them.[3]—Ordinarily a writ of execution is a lien upon the personal property of the judgment debtor from the time of its delivery to the officer;[4] but where, at the instance of the creditor or his attorney, it lies inactive in the officer's hands, its lien is subordinated to that of a creditor securing himself upon the property before the levy.[5] In California, a judgment not being a lien on a leasehold, a purchaser's rights under an execution not levied thereon dates from the time of sale or from the giving of notice thereof.[6] Appointment of a receiver for the judgment debtor before the attaching of the lien under the levy prevents such lien from coming into existence.[7] The execution lien is inferior to all prior valid liens,[8] and may in some cases lose priority over the lien of a subsequent bona fide lienor.[9]

(§ 8) F. Relinquishment and dissolution of levy.[10]—The levy remains until discharged by satisfaction or in some other legal manner.[11] In some states an order discharging a levy is not appealable.[12] Sureties are discharged by release of leviable property.[13]

of no protection to the officer.[24] The motive which actuates plaintiff to sue the sheriff is immaterial.[25] Claimant by being present at sale and not objecting may lose his right to sue the sheriff.[26] A tenant on shares has sufficient interest in a crop to enable him to maintain an action for damage thereto by reason of a wrongful levy thereon.[27] The property being sold, the measure of damages is the value of the property with interest from the date of levy.[28] The price obtained by an officer at forced sale under execution while not conclusive[29] is competent evidence of the value of the property,[30] and the issuance of the execution may be proven by the clerk's docket.[31] Proof that by reason of the wrongful levy, the property was destroyed, will support a verdict for actual as well as nominal damages.[32]

As against the execution creditor, a statutory levy on land does not authorize a recovery, in the absence of a showing of special damages therefrom.[33] Exemplary damages cannot be recovered, the levy being procured in good faith, though under a mistake of law,[34] nor are they recoverable in the absence of actual damages.[35]

§ 9. Claims of third persons.[36]—In most states, the officer levying execution is not liable to interposing claimants unless notice was served on him,[37] and if disputed, they must prove title.[38] The judgment lien once attaching, the property is subject to execution in whosesoever hands it later comes.[39] Execution lien levied upon an indeterminate estate is invalid as against a conveyance under a deed executed after the estate vested.[40] A person's property being levied on for the debt of another, the proper remedy in Georgia is the interposing of an ordinary claim.[41] A claimant may attack the execution on any ground which could have been urged by the defendant.[42] The proceeding is statutory and is so construed as to give sense to the statute.[43] The suit should be determinative as to all the property.[44] In Louisiana, a third opponent obtaining a money judgment for improvements against the purchaser, the latter has his recourse for reimbursement against defendant in execution.[45]

§ 10. Appraisement,[46] when essential, must be made by persons of qualified age for that purpose.[47]

§ 11. Execution sales. In general.[48]—Generally, an execution plaintiff cannot enforce his lien in a manner other than that provided by statute, but a court of equity acquiring jurisdiction of the parties, it may grant complete relief by enforcing the execution.[49] A judgment creditor will be enjoined from offering his debtor's property for sale on execution, and at the same time claiming that he will have title as against the purchaser.[50] The law presumes in favor of executions and sales that officials have done their duty,[51] and that property was such as to be salable in the manner adopted.[52]

Notice and advertisement.[53]—Notice of the sale must be given,[54] the length of time being governed by statutory provisions,[55] though in Montana, failure to give notice does not invalidate the sale, the remedy against the officer being exclusive.[56]

Bids and acceptance thereof.[57]—A surety may purchase his principal's property at sale.[58]

Proceeds.[59]—Failure of the officer to pay into court, as required by law, the amount realized from the sale does not avoid the latter,[60] though the sheriff is liable for such failure. The sheriff is not required to decide the question of conflicting claims to the proceeds, but may retain the money until the claims are judicially determined, and in so doing he is not liable to the statutory penalty for failing to pay over the same.[61] If he pay it to one claimant upon the execution of an indemnity bond, such claimant may contest the other's right to recover the penalty,[62] and in action the burden is generally on the plaintiff to show the invalidity of defendant's claim.[63]

§ 12. Return or certification of sale to court and confirmation. Return.[64]—The sheriff's return must identify the property levied on with reasonable certainty;[65] but this is qualified by the rule that that is certain which can be made certain.[66] It should show a full and explicit compliance with statutory provisions, any omission in this respect rendering the sale voidable.[67] The return being incorrect, the proper practice is to move to have the same amended,[68] though there is a conflict as to the power of the court to compel such amendment.[69] It would seem as though the return is not amendable after the death of the sheriff.[70] So long as it stands, the return is conclusive on the parties.[71] The return may be directly attacked,[72] but lapse of time may remedy the defects.[73]

Confirmation.[74]—A mortgagee must show that his security is endangered in order to prevent confirmation of a sale subject to the mortgage.[75]

§ 13. Redemption.[76]—Redemption is generally effected by paying to the purchaser, or officer making the sale, the amount of the purchase price and any taxes paid by the purchaser after the sale, with interest on both amounts, and in default of a redemption in accordance with law, the sheriff is required to immediately deliver a deed to the purchaser or his assignee.[77] The right is wholly statutory.[78] The legal remedy being wrongfully obstructed or inadequate, the right may be enforced by a bill in equity seasonably brought.[79] Where a court in confirming the sale, erroneously orders a deed to issue at once, without providing for any redemption, such error may be corrected at the same term on motion of any one substantially interested in the matter and on notice to the purchaser.[80] The purchaser at execution sale may redeem from a subsequent sale

People v. Finch [Colo. App.] 76 P. 1120. Nor, under Mills' Ann. St. § 2537, is it a defense to such an action that a sheriff of another county had sold the property under another writ of execution obtained by the same judgment creditor. Id. Under Mills' Ann. under a prior judgment,[81] nor is this right lost by the fact that a deed is issued to such purchaser at a time when he is only entitled to a certificate of sale.[82] A purchaser of the grantee after levy failing to redeem cannot attack the title of the one redeeming on the ground of the invalidity of the judgment.[83] A judgment creditor redeeming from a prior execution sale acquires simply the rights of the creditor from whom he redeems.[84]

§ 14. Deeds and title under sales.[85]—The deed must identify the land with reasonable certainty.[86] An incorrect description renders the purchaser's title an equitable one.[87] Trivial errors working no prejudice are immaterial.[88] A purchaser at the sale acquires only the title of the judgment debtor,[89] except where he acquires rights as a bona fide purchaser.[90] He takes no title to that portion of the property which is exempt.[91] By buying personalty with notice of another's title thereto, the purchaser is guilty of conversion.[92] A stranger to the action purchasing at the execution sale, his title will not be affected by a subsequent reversal;[93] the rule is otherwise where a party to the action purchases the property,[94] and the title of one purchasing from such "party" while the action is pending on appeal will be defeated by a reversal.[95] In New York, the person entitled

NOTE. Reversal of judgment: A judgment creditor purchasing at his own execution sale is chargeable with notice of all irregularities in the proceeding, and he is not such a bona fide purchaser for value as to be relieved of the effect of notice of irregularities. Smith v. Huntoon, 134 Ill. 24, 24 N. E. 971, 23 Am. St. Rep. 646; Boos v. Morgan, 130 Ind. 305, 30 N. E. 141, 30 Am. St. Rep. 237. His title is divested by the reversal, and his grantee, though not a party to the

to the deed dying before its delivery, the sheriff must deliver the same to such person's personal representative.[96] An heir's possibility of reverter, on breach of conditions subsequent, is not extinguished by an execution sale of the land.[97] Delay in issuing deed for a length of time sufficient to raise a presumption inconsistent with the validity thereof renders the deed void.[98] A purchaser of fixtures as personal property is not to be deemed in possession of the realty by merely placing a custodian in possession of the goods.[99] In Kentucky, a writ of possession can only be granted after conveyance has been made.[1] The sheriff's deed is prima facie evidence of the facts recited therein.[2]

§ 15. Remedies against defective levy or sale. Setting aside sale.[3]—The action to set aside a sheriff's deed must be brought within a reasonable time.[4] The purchase price being paid and the deed delivered, the sale can only be set aside on the ground of fraud,[5] except where the court has the power to set aside the judgment;[6] but the court cannot, even in this latter case, defeat the title of an innocent purchaser for value.[7] The sale being void, the execution debtor need not tender the amount paid at the sale.[8] The judgment debtor seeking to set aside a valid sale for inadequacy of price must return to the execution purchaser that part of the price paid by the latter which is proportionate to the debtor's interest in the property.[9] Either the execution defendant or any claimant may prove the judgment to be void or discharged,[10] but neither can go behind the judg-action, nor cognizant of the defect in title, is not a purchaser in good faith, and acquires no greater rights than the judgment plaintiff had. Singly v. Warren, 18 Wash. 434, 51 P. 1066, 63 Am. 10. Ansley v. O'Byrne [Ga.] 48 S. E. 228. An execution issued from a court of general jurisdiction is not void on its face for want of jurisdiction, but may be proven so by the record. Id.

ment for the purpose of showing that it ought never to have been rendered.[11] A voidable execution cannot be collaterally attacked.[12] A sale may be validated by legislation, no constitutional guaranty being infringed.[13]

Mere inadequacy of price, not attended by fraud, mistake or surprise tending to influence the result, does not invalidate the sale,[14] but the sheriff incorrectly stating the amount of the debt and selling for an inadequate price, the sale is void.[15] It is no defense in a suit to set aside the sale that the contract between complainant and his attorney is champertous.[16]

Invalidity of judgment must be pleaded as a fact, not a conclusion.[17]

Complainant questioning the propriety of being required to pay a certain sum as a condition precedent to the relief asked, and defendant denying complainant's right to relief in any case, the costs should be divided, unless complainant fails to comply with the decree.[18]

Injunction.[19]—Equity will not enjoin the sale of land under an execution, where there is an adequate remedy at law,[20] or the consummation of the sale is not actually threatened.[21] The judgment debtor cannot go behind the judgment to enjoin the sale.[22] An appellant not being permitted to give bond to stay execution, an injunction to stay the execution until the appeal can be heard is properly awarded.[23]

§ 16. Restitution on reversal of judgment.[24]—Defendant, on securing a reversal of a judgment under which his property was sold to plaintiff and pending the appeal was sold by plaintiff to a purchaser, does not need an order of restitution from the court to enable him to assert his right against such purchaser.[25] In Pennsylvania, the judgment being reversed after sale, the purchase money not the property should be restored.[26]

33. A person furnishing a home and providing for his mother, minor brothers and invalid sister is the head of a family. Jarboe v. Jarboe [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1162. One is the head of a family if there is a condition of dependence on the part of the other members and a moral obligation on his part to support them. Rolator v. King, 13 Okl. 37, 73 P. 291. One who has a widowed mother and two sisters dependent on him and with whom he resides is the head of a family within Okl. St. § 2844. Id. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4335, a married woman may claim all exemptions given to the head of a family, though her husband be such head. White v. Smith [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 51. Under § 5441, Rev. St., a widow not the owner of a homestead is not entitled to hold exempt from levy and sale in lieu thereof, $500 worth of real or personal property, unless she has in good faith the care and maintenance of a minor child. Her right under this section is the same as that of an unmarried female. Brown v. Parham, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 344.

34. Night watchman of private corporation with authority to make arrests is not a laborer. Tabb v. Mallette, 120 Ga. 97, 47 S. E. 587.

NOTE. Who are laborers: A farm overseer (Caraker v. Mathews, 25 Ga. 571; contra, Flourney v. Shelton, 43 Ark. 168; Whittaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340, 31 Am. Rep. 503); a mine foreman (Cullins v. Flagstaff Min. Co., 2 Utah, 219, 104 U. S. 176; McClaren v. Bearnes, 80 Mich. 275; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Costella, 33 Pa. 241), but not a factory boss (Kyle v. Montgomery, 73 Ga. 337), nor a superintendent and time keeper for a railroad company (Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 14 Kan. 564), nor a secretary for a manufacturing company (Coffin v. Reynolds, 37 N. Y. 640), nor its president (Englant v. Beatty Organ Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 470), nor the assistant general manager of a railroad company (State v. Rusk, 55 Wis. 465; but see Pendergast v. 38. The constitutional exemption of the homestead survives to the family of the owner after his death. Cross v. Benson [Kan.] 75 P. 558. A bankrupt is entitled to his homestead, though valued in excess of the limit of exemption upon paying such excess. In re Manning, 123 F. 180. Under the constitution and statutes of California, an insolvent debtor may use his funds to purchase a homestead or to discharge a lien thereon. In re Wilson [C. C. A.] 123 F. 20. An insolvent debtor may, as against his creditors, make a payment to relieve his homestead from an incumbrance. Such payment does not constitute a preference. Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 615, 74 P. 303. In Arkansas, one who six days before proceeds derived from the sale thereof;[39] personal property of a certain value,[40] if it has been paid for;[41] wages earned within a specified period,[42] except as against a judgment in an action for necessaries;[43] the library of a professional man;[44] the salary of public officers;[45] household furniture;[46] tools of trade;[47] wearing apparel;[48] live stock;[49] proceeds of life insurance policies,[50] if within the purview and in contemplation of bankruptcy moved from a rented house to a room in his store building thereby makes that building a homestead and renders it exempt. In re Irvin [C. C. A.] 120 F. 733. There is no provision of law allowing the exemption of cash or the investment of cash for the benefit of a family under § 2867, Civ. Code 1895, which provides for the "short homestead." Rosser v. Florence, 119 Ga. 250, 45 S. E. 975.

39. Where used to buy property nonexempt, taken jointly in the name of the wife and the husband, his share passes to his trustee after paying the ratable part of the unpaid purchase price. Bohannon v. Clark, 25 Ky. L. R. 1710, 78 S. W. 479.

40. A bankruptcy court has power in Georgia to allow a bankrupt who has taken his statutory exemption prior to bankruptcy, and which at the date of his bankruptcy was of little value to supplement the same from funds in the hands of the trustee. In re Reinhart, 129 F. 510. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 83, § 10, a judgment debtor is entitled to an exemption of $100.00 on a sale of an equity of redemption in two tracts covered by three mortgages. Fowler v. State [Md.] 58 A. 444. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3159, a judgment which was the only property the plaintiff in an action had was not subject to have set off against it a judgment against the plaintiff held by defendant. Caldwell v. Ryan [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 743.

41. A bankrupt in South Carolina is not entitled to a personal property exemption out of property or the proceeds of property for which he has not paid. Cannon v. Dexter Broom & Mattress Co. [C. C. A.] 120 F. 657.

42. Personal earnings of within three months past if less than $150.00, under Rev. St. §§ 6489, 6680-1, where one is the head of a family or has a widowed mother wholly dependent on him for support. Duffey v. Reardon [Ohio] 71 N. E. 712. Money due on a contract for work for a total sum for the job is exempt under a statute exempting wages, though others aided in doing the work. Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Chrouch [Mich.] 98 N. W. 739. Monthly wages of locomotive engineer not subject to garnishment. Smith v. Walker, 119 Ga. 615, 46 S. E. 831. Wages of a locomotive engineer who is paid according to the amount of work done and not according to the time he works. Johnson v. Hicks, 120 Ga. 1002, 48 S. E. 383. Moore v. Hendry, 111 Ga. 863, 36 S. E. 921, where a contractor's wages were held not exempt, reconciled. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 4732, daily, weekly and monthly wages of a railway brakeman are exempt from garnishment. Franklin v. Southern R. Co., 119 Ga. 855, 47 S. E. 344. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. (Wash.) §§ 5981-5983, persons working for a bankrupt within 60 days of the appointment of a receiver are entitled to wages earned within that period not to exceed $100. In re Holden, 127 F. 980. In Washington, under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5412, a bankrupt having a family dependent upon him may claim $100 for services rendered as exempt and under another section of the statutes, $250 in lieu of certain domestic animals. Wages earned before the amendment of § 5412 reducing this exemption are not affected by said amendment. Id.

43. Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 20, trustee process may be maintained against one indebted for wages to a judgment debtor in a sum less than $20.00. Garside v. Colby, 72 N. H. 544, 58 A. 50.

47. A dentist's chair is not exempt as a common tool of trade, nor as a household chair under Civ. Code 1895, § 2866. It may be exempt under § 2827. Burt v. Stocks Coal Co., 119 Ga. 629, 46 S. E. 828.

48. A sword and belt of Masonic regalia are not exempt under the laws of Vermont, but a hat belonging thereto is exempt as wearing apparel, nor are a watch and chain exempt as tools for the barber's trade where the bankrupt has a clock, though he has turned the latter over to his trustee. In re Everleth, 129 F. 620.

49. Unbroken colts are not work horses within the meaning of a homestead exemption. Durke v. Crane, 112 La. 156, 36 So. 306. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3159, exempting two work animals, a mare used as a work animal is exempt. White v. Wilson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 692. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2395, exempting two horses, such horses may be the separate property of either spouse or community property. McClelland v. Barnard [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 591. Where head of the family has four horses in his possession, two of which are community property and two the separate property of his wife, he may select any two as exempt under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2395. Id. Under Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5412, certain domestic animals or $250.00 in lieu thereof. In re Holden, 127 F. 980.

A claim for nursing decedent during his last illness is a debt within Rev. Code 1892, § 1965, exempting proceeds of life insurance policies from debts, but funeral expenses are not. Dobbs v. Chandler [Miss.] 36 So. 388.

of the statute,[51] but exemptions cannot be claimed from partnership property.[52] Proceedings for ascertaining exempt property may be maintained in equity.[53]

§ 4. Debts and liabilities inferior or superior to right of exemption.[54]—The nature of the claim for which judgment was entered may give it priority.[55] Exempt property is liable for funeral expenses.[56] Exempt wages are not liable to a judgment for alimony,[57] but are inferior to an attorney's lien.[58]

§ 5. Loss of exemption rights.[59]—The decisions are in conflict as to whether exemptions may be waived[60] or lost by estoppel.[61]

§ 6. Selling or transferring exempt property.[62]—The exemption which the law gives in lieu of homestead is an absolute exemption which may be sold.[63]

§ 7. How the right is claimed and enforced.[64]—The right is personal and must be claimed by the debtor or his privies.[65] Delay in making demand therefor is immaterial,[66] and in some cases demand is timely if made after sale of the property;[67] but bankrupts must make their selection of specific articles at the time of filing their schedules.[68]

51. A gratuity fund provision, providing for the division of a certain surplus among the widows of members dying during the year, in the organization of a chamber of commerce does not render such corporation an assessment insurance company within the meaning of the Wisconsin statute, and hence a member thereof is not entitled to hold his certificate of membership therein exempt. In re Neimann, 124 F. 738. The dividend accumulations of a tontine policy are not within Rev. St. 1898, § 2347, exempting a life policy payable to a married woman. Ellison v. Straw, 119 Wis. 502, 97 N. W. 168.

58. Money collected by an attorney was a claim for his client's wages and exempt as to third persons but not as against the attorney's lien for services. Halsell v. Turner [Miss.] 36 So. 531.

59. See 1 Curr. L. 1194.

60. A waiver of exemptions as to the homestead will constitute a waiver as to the proceeds of a sale thereof (Rosser v. Florence, 119 Ga. 250, 45 S. E. 975); but not where a debtor moves to dissolve an attachment without first making a claim for his exemptions (State v. Gardner, 32 Wash. 550, 73 P. 690). In Georgia, homestead exemptions cannot be waived. In re Reinhart, 129 F. 510.

61. A parol representation or its equivalent, a justification of bail reciting property nonexempt, cannot waive or bar land exemptions. King v. Warren, 42 Misc. 317, 86 N. Y. S. 609. An agreement by the debtor that a creditor may garnishee his exempt wages though invalid as an agreement may become effective as an estoppel where the creditor incurs expense in bringing suit in reliance thereon. Dowling v. Wood [Iowa] 101 N. W. 113.

66. See 1 Curr. L. 1195, n. 69. Code Gen. Pub. Laws, § 10, art. 83, allowing $100.00 from proceeds of sale of real estate. Fowler v. State [Md.] 58 A. 444. A claim of exemption asserted as soon as the levy is made and before sale is timely. White v. Wilson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 692. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4340, a wife whose husband dies pending a suit on a judgment for necessaries is not required to claim her exemptions in such suit on pain of losing her right. Id.

67. Where property is attached, the debtor may demand his exemptions when the warrant is levied or wait until final process is issued and the property is about to be appropriated by sale, or after it has been sold as perishable. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Sloan [N. C.] 48 S. E. 577.

68. Under Bankr. Act, July 1, 1898, the trustee has no power to pay the exemption to them out of the proceeds of the sale of bankrupt property. In re Prince, 131 F. 546.

How claimed.[69]—The manner of claiming is generally regulated by statute.[70] The question cannot be raised by motion to modify a judgment in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance,[71] nor is such question presented on the evidence where it is not assigned as a reason in the motion for a new trial.[72]

§ 8. Recovery for selling exempt property or evading exemption laws.[73]—Recovery may be had from a purchaser with notice of the character of the property.[74] Mandamus is the proper remedy to procure the release of exempt property unlawfully held under levy of execution.[75] Grounds of recovery relied on in the pleadings cannot be shifted at the trial.[76] In an action on a bond given to contest a claim of exemptions, the complaint must allege a failure to prosecute the contest and damages sustained.[77]

EXHIBITIONS AND SHOWS.

A license to run a theater at a place designated will not justify the conducting of such business in a manner offensive to decency and public morals.[78] It is within the police power of the state to make the right to temporarily sell provisions within a reasonable distance of a fair dependent upon the consent of the society conducting the same.[79]

St. 1899, §§ 3435, 3162, a creditor has no right to garnish a debtor's wages where he has notice that they are exempt, and he is liable for malicious abuse of process if he institutes successive garnishments. Cooper v. Scyoc [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 751.

75. Where a sheriff refuses after the expiration of a reasonable time after demand to surrender exempt property levied on. State v. Gardner, 32 Wash. 550, 73 P. 690. Under 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 5256, a sheriff holding property by virtue of levy of execution is required to release the property when the debtor has furnished him a list of property claimed as exempt and the creditor made no demand for an appraisement. Id. Release of exempt property from execution levied thereon may be procured by filing an affidavit in the original cause, claiming it to be exempt and asking an order on the creditor and sheriff to show cause why it should not be released. American Paper Co. v. Sullivan, 34 Wash. 391, 75 P. 991.

76. Where a debtor objects to his property being seized on execution because it is exempt, objects to its sale and brings action for its recovery on the same ground, he cannot at the trial assert the sale to be void on other grounds. Redinger v. Jones [Kan.] 75 P. 997.

79. Gen. St. 1902, § 1358, making the distance one mile, held valid. State v. Reynolds [Conn.] 58 A. 755. Such statute extends only to a sale while a fair is being held, and does not apply to the usual and ordinary business of any one. Id.

80. Removing rock from railroad right of way. Cary Bros. v. Morrison [C. C. A.] 129 F. 177.

Note: The defendants worked a stone quarry on their land in a city and by means of the concussion of earth and air, injured plaintiff's house, though using all care. Held, since defendants' use of their land for a quarry was an extraordinary use and the blasting extended over a long period of time, plaintiff may recover. Longtin v. Persells [Mont.] 76 P. 699. The preponderance of authority seems to be that for injuries caused by concussion where care is used the test is whether the defendant is making a reasonable use of his land. Where this is the case, there is no recovery (Booth v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 140 N. Y. 267, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552; Simon v. Henry [N. J. Law] 41 A. 692), while if the use is unreasonable, the defendant is liable (Cotton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 58 Am. Rep. 556). It has been held, apparently, that liability will attach regardless of reasonableness. The Fitz-

ity,[81] and it is the duty of such persons to heed such warning.[82] The degree of care required in handling and guarding explosives is such care as careful and prudent persons whose business requires the use of such explosives ordinarily exercise.[83] The care required in the use of dynamite is greater than that required in the use of less dangerous explosives.[84] The keeping of explosives contrary to law is a nuisance,[85] but unless it is a nuisance per se to keep explosives, one

Simmons & C. Co. v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390. It would seem that where such serious injury as the demolition of adjoining houses is caused, the question of reasonable use by defendant should not be considered. IV. Columbia Law Rev. 515. If a person be placed in danger through the negligence of another in exploding a blast, he need only make an effort to protect himself and if he errs in judgment in seeking safety, he is not guilty of negligence. 82. If they do not, it constitutes contributory negligence and is fatal to an action for damages for injuries sustained. Cary Bros. v. Morrison [C. C. A.] 129 F. 177. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury where one was killed by a rock. The blasting crew having given warning and decedent being familiar with the work being conducted. Id. Evidence of contributory negligence was for the jury where a city employe was killed by an explosion of gas naphtha while he was unloading the tank. Standard Oil Co. v. Wakefield's Adm'r, 102 Va. 824, 47 S. E. 830.

83. Lanza v. Le Grand Quarry Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 488.

Exploding a charge of dynamite within a foot of a water pipe is negligence (Wheeler v. Norton, 92 App. Div. 368, 86 N. Y. S. 1095), and is the proximate cause of damage caused by the escape of water, though the pipe was laid on rock in violation of the rules of the fire department (Wheeler v. Norton, 92 App. Div. 368, 86 N. Y. S. 1095). It is negligence to discharge a toy cannon into a public street in a populous part of the city, and one so doing is liable for injuries resulting, though he did not intend to shoot any one. Combs v. Thompson [Kan.] 74 P. 1127. A company shipping gas naphtha is liable for a death caused by the negligent manner in which it had closed the discharge pipe of the tank. Standard Oil Co. v. Wakefield's Adm'r, 102 Va. 824, 47 S. E. 830. Such negligence was the proximate cause of the death of a city employe which resulted from an explosion which occurred when an attempt was made to unload the tank. Id. That a vendor may be liable for an explosion of impure and adulterated oil, it must appear that he knew or ought to have known and have informed the vendee of the character of the oil. Wilkins v. Standard Oil Co. [N. H. Law] 57 A. 258. Nor can a recovery be had for deceit unless it be alleged that the vendor knew his representations as to the quality of the oil to be false. Id. The mere fact that a signal torpedo was found on a railroad track is not evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Obertoni v. Boston & M. R. Co. [Mass.] 71 N. E. 980. There being no evidence that the employe who left it there was at the time acting in the course of his employment. Id. It is not negligence for a master to give a servant a gasoline torch in good repair, to use while engaged at work inside a boiler where its use was proper. Purcell v. Hoffman House, 97 App. Div. 307, 89 N. Y. S. 975. Evidence that one maintained a gas well 50 feet from plaintiff's premises and that gas accumulated in plaintiff's cellar, causing an explosion and that gas was found in water wells within a radius of 200 feet from the gas well was insufficient to show that the gas came from defendant's well or that he was negligent. Maxwell v. Coffeyville Mining & Gas Co. [Kan.] 75 P. 1047. See Gas, 2 Curr. L. 139. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence in a gas company, no leaks in pipes being discovered, and gasoline being stored in the cellar where an explosion occurred. Lodge v. United Gas Imp. Co. [Pa.] 58 A. 925. A carrier is under no positive duty to examine a shipment of sulphuric acid to see that the tanks are in good condition. Evidence held not to show negligence of carrier. Means v. Southern California R. Co. [Cal.] 77 P. 1001.

Note: If the manufacture or care of explosives is such as to amount to a nuisance, one is liable for all damages occasioned thereby, even though he be not guilty of negligence and regardless of the care exercised. McAndrews v. Collerd, 42 N. J. Law, 189, 36 Am. Rep. 508; Laflin Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 19 Am. St. Rep. 34; Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146; Cheatam v. 84. Evidence held for the jury where a quarry employe was injured by an explosion of which he was not warned. Lanza v. Le Grande Quarry Co. [Iowa] 100 N. W. 488. Where one exploded a blast of dynamite by hammering on an adjacent rock, he is not chargeable with negligence in not having first examined the ledge of rock to see whether another blast which had exploded six feet away had not produced a fissure leading to the hole drilled for the unexploded blast, so as to make his hammering the possible occasion for the second explosion. Murphy v. Hallinan, 92 App. Div. 48, 86 N. Y. S. 927.

85. Both at common law and under New is not liable for damages caused by an explosion not the result of his negligence.[86] A city is not liable for an injury caused by the explosion of fireworks where such display is not licensed.[87] Where an explosion causes material to be thrown onto adjacent premises, it is a trespass irrespective of negligence.[88] The right to recover damages for injuries caused by an explosion of oil may be regulated by statute.[89]

EXTORTION.

The taking of illegal fees embraces the taking of fees for each of several official receipts, only one being requisite or proper,[90] and that it was done in good faith and honest mistake is no defense to a penal action under a statute omitting such an exception,[91] however it might be under a different statute making the "knowing" taking a misdemeanor.[92] A complaint for a penalty for exaction of illegal fees must allege all the facts made prerequisite under the statute.[93] The penal laws declaring the crime of extortion and the punishment do not exclude the remedy by statutory penal action.[94]

"Extortion" by threats of prosecution[95] does not embrace a "settlement" according to statutory authority[96] by a public officer who without corrupt or malicious intent[97] procures an offender to pay legal penalties by telling him he will be prosecuted if he does not pay.[98] The fact that authority rests in a superior is immaterial if no discretion is delegated.[99]

EXTRADITION.

§ 1. International (1414). § 2. Interstate (1414).

§ 1. International.[1]—The preliminary examination must be in the state where the arrest was made.[2] Extradition proceedings are directly reviewable in the supreme court, though the construction of statutes as well as treaties is involved.[3]

§ 2. Interstate.[4]—One who having committed a crime in one state is found in another is a "fugitive from justice."[5] The finding of an indictment in the

York City Charter (3 L. 1897, p. 265, c. 378), where a contractor kept in the populous part of a city dynamite in quantity in excess of its permit. Ricker v. McDonald, 89 App. Div. 300, 85 N. Y. S. 825. Laws 1891, p. 3, c. 4, relative to rapid transit railways, does not confer authority to store dynamite in the heart of the city contrary to ordinances. Ricker v. McDonald, 89 App. Div. 300, 85 N. Y. S. 825. It was a question for the jury whether the display of fireworks constituted a nuisance. Landau v. New York, 90 App. Div. 50, 85 N. Y. S. 616.

86. Where the owner of a building moved a box of dynamite from his tenant's shelf into a common hallway, where it was exploded, the tenant's act of having the dynamite was not the proximate cause of an injury resulting. Georgetown Tel. Co. v. McCullough's Adm'r [Ky.] 80 S. W. 782.

87. Ordinance relating to discharge of fireworks had been suspended during a political campaign. Landau v. New York, 90 App. Div. 50, 85 N. Y. S. 616. Resolution suspending such ordinance could not be construed as a license. Id. demanding state is not prerequisite.[6] Disputed facts cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus,[7] and evidence that defendant was not in the demanding state at the time charged raises only a question as to guilt and not as to flight.[8] Nor will the technical sufficiency of the indictment be considered.[9] It will be presumed that the acts charged constitute an offense against the laws of the demanding state.[10] Pendency of habeas corpus to review a commitment to await extradition made by a magistrate under a state statute does not bar an application to the governor for a requisition.[11] The Federal courts will not interfere except in plain cases.[12] One brought into a state by requisition is privileged from service of civil process until he has had a reasonable time after discharge to leave the state.[13]

FACTORS.[14]

The relation of factor to consignor.—A factor is an agent employed to sell or to purchase and sell goods intrusted to his possession, for commission.[15] It is not necessary that the goods should have been consigned directly to him,[16] but only that he shall be possessed of the property with authority to sell.[17] In Wisconsin, he is trustee of an express trust.[18] The rights and liabilities of factor and consignor must be found in the terms of their contract.[19] As a general rule,

NOTE. Defense of statute of limitations: The petitioner was held under an extradition warrant for a crime committed five years previously. In habeas corpus proceedings, it was proved that in the demanding state an indictment must be brought within two years of the commission of the offense, except in the case of persons fleeing from justice. The petitioner had not spent two years in that state since the crime. Held, that the prisoner may be extradited, irrespective of the motive with which he left the demanding state. In re Bruce, 132 F. 390.

The words "fleeing from justice" in extradition statutes do not require willful or conscious flight. In re White, 55 F. 54. There seems little reason for a different reading of similar phraseology in criminal statutes of limitation, since the important fact in either case is that the accused consciously puts himself outside the jurisdiction. Yet the consciousness of flight is generally considered in this case. United States v. O'Brian, 3 Dill. [U. S.] 381. See Streep v. U. S., 160 U. S. 128. But upon extradition proceedings, the inquiry is mainly whether the defendant is substantially charged with crime and is a fugitive from justice in the sense of the extradition statutes. Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80. He is substantially charged in the Federal court, although the indictment shows that the statute of limitation has run; for the statute constitutes a mere defense of fact for the jury. United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. [U. S.] 168. It follows that the accused may only show by this defense in extradition proceedings that he was within the demanding state for the statutory period, and hence did not leave it as a fugitive from justice, as that phrase is interpreted in the extradition laws.—XVIII. One is not shown to be a del credere factor by the fact that he does not disclose names of customers to his principal. Cushman v. Snow [Mass.] 71 N. E. 529.

he is bound to obey the orders of his principal,[20] but in cases of emergency, he may be justified in assuming extraordinary powers.[21] A factor must exercise reasonable care over goods consigned to him.[22] By common law principles, he has a special property in the goods and in the proceeds of a sale thereof,[23] but title remains in the principal,[24] and he may control litigation relative thereto, saving the rights of the factor; unless the latter's charges exceed the amount recoverable,[25] and where a factor refuses to redeliver on demand[26] or deals with them in an irregular manner, it amounts to a conversion.[27]

Lien.[28]—A factor's lien is a purely personal privilege and is not the proper subject of sale or assignment.[29] It does not attach until he acquires possession,[30] and does not extend beyond the amount due him for commissions or funds advanced.[31]

A purchasing factor may recover from his principal funds advanced to make purchases.[32]

22. If goods be returned damaged, the burden is on him to show that ordinary care has been exercised. Ives v. Freisinger [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 401. Where goods are damaged through the negligence of a factor, the consignor is entitled to recover the difference in value between the articles returned and their value undamaged. Id. If he mingles his own goods with goods of his principal, title of principal attaches to the whole until the value of his goods are accounted for or returned to him. Lance v. Butler, 135 N. C. 419, 47 S. E. 488. See Accession and Confusion of Property, 3 Curr. L. 15.

NOTE. Consignments: Generally title does not pass to a consignee when goods are consigned to be sold and accounted for at a given price, and the goods are not liable for the consignee's debts. 29. Where money was advanced to a firm with which to purchase goods to be consigned to the party making the advances, for sale, under an agreement that the latter was to have a lien for such advances and also for commissions, etc., such lien was an equitable one and passed to an assignee. § 1. What Constitutes, Persons Liable, and Justification (1417).
§ 2. The Action to Recover Damages (1418).

§ 1. What constitutes, persons liable, and justification.[36]—Every restraint on a person's liberty is an imprisonment, whatever be the manner in which it is effected,[37] and is actionable if unlawful.[38] All persons who aid or assist in an unlawful confinement are liable;[39] thus one who without authority signs a complaint on which a person is arrested,[40] or an officer who makes an arrest upon a process void on its face;[41] but if a warrant is sufficient to authorize the arrest, the officer executing it is not liable,[42] and an officer who arrests without a war-and disposes of the goods to the best advantage, he can recover from such indorsee the difference between the proceeds of sale and amount of the draft. Groos & Co. v. Brewster [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 359.

37. Where an officer told a person he would have to go with him before a magistrate, and followed him there, though he did not lay hands on him. Goodell v. Tower [Vt.] 58 A. 790. Where a merchant under the impression that a customer had taken goods which she had not paid for, followed her into the street, took hold of her shoulder and said "you will have to go back to the store." Dunlevy v. Wolferman [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1165. Complaint alleging that plaintiff was inveigled, kidnapped and carried away against his will, and sets forth as an item of damages, "detention and imprisonment, alleges false imprisonment." Bellezzire v. Camardella, 88 N. Y. S. 807.

NOTE: To constitute false imprisonment, no actual force is necessary (Smith v. State, 7 Humph. [Tenn.] 43; Johnson v. Tompkins, 1 Bald. [U. S.] 571-602; Comer v. Cowles, 17 Kan. 441) where a comprehensive definition is given. Words are sufficient (Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491), preventing one from going in any direction he desires (Harkins v. State, 6 Tex. Bonesteel, 28 Wis. 245), but there must be some sort of personal coercion (Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549; Greathouse v. Summerfield, 25 Ill. 296).—Note to Tryon v. Pingree [Mich.] 67 Am. Note: A justice who issues a warrant under an unconstitutional ordinance is not liable (Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576, 24 Am. St. Rep. 137), nor is a person who makes a complaint in such a case (Gifford v. Wiggins, 50 Minn. 401), nor is a town which enacts such an ordinance nor an officer who executed the warrant (Trammell v. Russellville, 35 Ark. 105). Cities are not liable for acts of their police officers in the enforcement of police regulations and ordinances, nor can they make themselves liable by ratification. Calwell v. rant is not liable unless he delays an unreasonable length of time in taking the prisoner before a magistrate.[43] The fact that an officer is justified does not excuse the person who procures him to make the arrest.[44] A judicial officer is not liable when the imprisonment is ordered, however erroneously, by a judgment in a proceeding in which he has jurisdiction,[45] but otherwise if he is without jurisdiction.[46] A master is not liable for the imprisonment of a person by his servant unless he directed him to make the arrest or ratified the act, or unless the servant was acting within the scope of his authority.[47]

Justification.—What amounts to probable cause in cases of malicious prosecution will amount to reasonable grounds to arrest on suspicion for felony.[48] It may be a question for the jury.[49]

Damages.[50]—The question as to the measure of damages is for the jury.[51] Compensation for loss of time and for mental suffering can be recovered, though not specially alleged.[52] To this end bad jail conditions may in some states be shown.[53] Unless malice is shown, exemplary damages cannot be had,[54] and malice not imputable to defendant has no effect.[55] Honest mistake[56] and admissions of guilt may be considered in mitigation.[57]

§ 2. The action to recover damages.[58]—The petition must set out facts showing that detention was unlawful,[59] but duration of imprisonment need not be alleged.[60] Where malice is alleged, it must be proved.[61]

FALSE PRETENSES AND CHEATS.[66]

Elements of offense.[67]—To constitute the crime of obtaining property of another by means of false pretenses, the representations[68] made must have been false,[69] to the knowledge of the party making them,[70] and made with the intent to defraud.[71] The false pretenses must have been believed and relied on by the party alleged to have been defrauded,[72] to his pecuniary damage,[73] and must have re-commitment of a witness for refusing to testify. Olmsted v. Edson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 415.

66. Includes false pretenses proper and also analogous statutory crimes like cheating and swindling, and confidence games, though denominated "larceny" by statute. See 1 Curr. L. 1204.

NOTE. False pretenses, larceny and embezzlement distinguished: Where, by means of fraud, conspiracy or artifice, the possession of property is obtained with a felonious intent, and the title as well as possession is parted with, the crime is that of obtaining property by false pretenses. See People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19, 36 P. 506; People v. De Graaf, 127 Cal. 676, 60 P. 429; Haley v. State, 49 Ark. 147, 4 S. W. 746; Pease v. State, 94 Ga. 615, 21 S. E. 588; Stewart v. People, 173 Ill. 464, 50 N. E. 1056, 64 Am. St. Rep. 133; People v. Lawrence, 137 N. Y. 517, 33 N. E. 547. If the owner does not part with title, the offense is larceny. Embezzlement is committed where one honestly receives goods upon trust and afterwards fraudulently converts them to his own use. See cases above cited, particularly People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19. —From note on "Larceny" in 88 Am. St. Rep. 572.

67. See 1 Curr. L. 1204.

68. Note: The false pretense may be in regard to one's credit. People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173. Or a false statement of agency [N. C. Code, § 1025]. State v. Dixon, 101 N. C. 741; Bobbitt v. State, 87 Ala. 91. The fraudulent pretense on sale of property may relate to quality, quantity, nature or other incident of property offered for sale, by which the purchaser, relying thereon, is defrauded. Jackson v. People, 126 Ill. 139. See State v. Matthews [Kan.] 10 L. R. A. 308.

69. One cannot be convicted of the offense of cheating and swindling by procuring credit through false representations as to ownership of cattle, unless such representations are proved to be false. Lee v. State, 120 Ga. 194, 47 S. E. 545. But it is enough if a material part of the pretense be false. A representation that there was "nothing against property to hurt," when part of the property was owned by, and the rest heavily mortgaged to, another, held sufficiently false. Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004.

70. Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730.

71. Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004. But an intent to defraud is not an element of the offense of swindling in Texas. Representations must be false, or fraudulently made, with intent to acquire property or money, for the purpose of appropriating the same, or of destroying or impairing the rights of the party entitled thereto; and such party must have relied on the representations. McPearson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 522.

72. State v. Bohle [Mo.] 81 S. W. 179. Pretenses must actually mislead. Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004. The question of reliance on false representations having been submitted to the jury, a special requested instruction that defendant would not be guilty unless the party defrauded, believed the representations and relied on them, though the jury found them false and fraudulent, was properly refused. McPearson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 522. Where mortgagees were induced to part with money by false representations that there were no other liens on the security, it was no defense that the advances were actually made some time after the mortgage was executed. Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004. A connection must be shown between the false pretenses and the obtaining of the property. Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730. An insured disappeared and the beneficiary made proof of loss and collected on the policy by a judgment, the insurance company denying insured's death. Insured was later found and prosecuted for false pretenses. Held, there could be no conviction, since the alleged false pretense of death was not shown to have been made to any one, and the company did not believe insured was dead. Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730.

73. The false pretenses alone do not conlated to a past or existing fact.[74] Where the loss was occasioned by a recovery of judgment by an innocent person, there is no causal connection between the fraud and the loss.[75] The pretenses or representations may be by acts or conduct as well as by words.[76]

Statutory cheats.—Among the offenses of this character created by statute are the making of a contract of service to procure advance wages and without intent to perform,[77] prohibiting confidence games,[78] or impersonating Federal officers,[79] the presentation of a false and fraudulent claim to a public officer,[80] or prohibiting the pretending to exercise the art of dealing with spirits.[81] Under the New York statute, many acts in the nature of cheats are denominated larceny.[82]

The place of the crime is the place where the false pretenses are made and the goods actually obtained.[83]

stitute the crime; the obtaining of chattels thereby is also necessary. Commonwealth v. Schmunk, 207 Pa. 544, 56 A. 1088. Pretenses must induce party alleged to be wronged to part with property. Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004; Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730. One cannot be convicted of cheating and swindling, under Pen. Code 1895, § 670, unless the person alleged to have been defrauded is shown to have sustained some pecuniary loss. Busby v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 314. The execution of a note and chattel mortgage in an assumed name for the goods was no defense. State v. Bohle [Mo.] 81 S. W. 179. The Nebraska act relating to false pretenses makes criminal the act of fraudulently obtaining signatures to written instruments conveying title to realty. Moline v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 810.

74. A false pretense is a false representation, relating to some existing or past fact. "A promise, not meant to be kept is not a false pretense." Wilkerson v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1004. Any representation, assurance or promise relating to a future transaction, however false and fraudulent, is not within the meaning of the statute. Cook v. State [Neb.] 98 N. W. 810.

75. As where an insurance company was sued on a policy and judgment rendered against it, though it denied the death of insured. Insured could not be convicted of swindling for falsely pretending death, since the insurance was collected by innocent beneficiary, through the court. Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730.

76. Hunter v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 730.

77. Statute (Acts Gen. Assem. 1903, p. 90), providing that a person who contracts for services with intent to procure money and not to preform the services shall be deemed a common cheat and swindler and be guilty of a misdemeanor, is not unconstitutional as providing imprisonment for debt; as the punishment is for the fraudulent intent with which money is procured and not for failure to comply with the obligation. Lamar v. State, 120 Ga. 312, 47 S. E. 958.

78. The phrase "three card monte" as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2216, making it a crime to play or practice the game, defined. State v. Edgen [Mo.] 80 S. W. 942. Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction for playing the three card monte game, though prosecutor lost no money. Id. One who induced prosecutor to bet on a three card monte game played by a confederate was punishable as an accessory before the fact. Id.

79. Where defendant falsely represented himself as a United States secret service officer, and, ten months later, as a traveling salesman, and presented a worthless check and obtained money thereon, it was held that defendant might be held on the common law offense of obtaining money by false pretenses, but could not be convicted under the Federal act prohibiting persons from pretending to be Federal officers and obtaining property as such. United States v. Farnham, 127 F. 478.

80. The chairman of a town board of supervisors caused two orders to be issued on the treasurer for unauthorized claims, which he negotiated at a bank and which were later paid by the treasurer. Held guilty of offense under Gen. St. 1894, § 6812. State v. Peebles [Minn.] 101 N. W. 306.

81. One pretending to exercise the art of dealing with spirits, in order to cure disease, is guilty of an infraction of the statute prohibiting any person from pretending to exercise the art of witchcraft, conjuration, fortune-telling, or dealing with spirits [Rev. Code 1852, amended in 1893, p. 961, c. 132, § 7]. State v. Durham [Del. Gen. Sess.] 58 A. 1024.

82. Where several parties combined to dispose of worthless stock by means of a false and fraudulent device, they were all guilty of grand larceny under Pen. Code, § 528. People v. Putnam, 90 App. Div. 125, 85 N. Y. S. 1056. An alleged false representation by a purchaser of materials to the effect that he had a large order for the goods when manufactured, from a responsible party, held not a representation as to the purchaser's means and ability to pay, but that the seller was to be assured by the bills payable of the prospective purchaser; hence such representation was not one required to be in writing and signed, under Pen. Code, § 544, but constituted a crime under Pen. Code, § 528, though oral. People v. Rothstein, 88 N. Y. S. 622. Reversing Id., 42 Misc. 123, 85 N. Y. S. 1076, on this point, a certificate of doubt having been issued, and affirming conviction.

83. False pretenses were written in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, and mailed there to New York, and goods were consigned, on the faith of the false pretenses, to defendant, who actually obtained them in Allegheny county. Held, the crime was

Defenses.—That defendant was at the time of the alleged offense suffering from serious physical injuries is a good defense to a prosecution for swindling based on failure to perform contract for services.[84] In Arizona, it was held that the fact that money was obtained from county officers by virtue of a custom which was not warranted by law was no defense.[85]

The indictment[86] is usually sufficient if it alleges the elements of the offense in the language of the statute defining it.[87] It must allege that the false pretenses were relied on, unless the fact of such reliance is necessarily implied,[88] and that the party alleged to be wronged parted with something of value.[89] Where a statute does not define the acts constituting the particular crime defined, the indictment must allege the facts relied on to constitute it.[90] If the alleged false tokens or instruments used are otherwise sufficiently described, they need not be set out in detail.[91]

An accusation under the Georgia statute relating to fraudulent contracts for services must state specifically what the advances obtained consisted of,[92] and must sufficiently allege the fraudulent intent.[93]

Evidence and proof.[94]—Evidence of other similar transactions is admissible,[95]

committed in that county. Commonwealth v. Schmunk, 207 Pa. 544, 56 A. 1088.

84. Under Acts 1903, p. 90. Hart v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 925.

85. One who, knowing of a custom whereby a county paid for services of interpreters in criminal cases before justices of the peace, presents a claim for such services and obtains payment, though he never rendered any services, is guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, though the custom of so paying interpreters is not warranted by law. Berreyesa v. Territory [Ariz.] 76 P. 472.

86. See 1 Curr. L. 1205.

87. An information stating the acts constituting the offense in the language used by the statute in defining the crime of obtaining money, etc., by false pretenses, is sufficient. State v. Ryan, 34 Wash. 597, 76 P. 90. An indictment which in substance charges defendants with willfully conspiring to cheat and defraud sufficiently names and describes the crime within Pen. Code, §§ 168, 276. People v. Rathbun, 44 Misc. 88, 89 N. Y. S. 746. An indictment charging that defendant unlawfully and feloniously played and practiced the confidence game or swindle known as "three card monte," and then and there feloniously attempted to obtain a large sum of money from a named person, is sufficient, following the language of Rev. St. 1899, § 2216. State v. Edgen [Mo.] 80 S. W. 942. An indictment charging that defendant by means of fraud and false pretenses obtained signatures to a certain warranty deed, held sufficient, and to charge but one offense. Moline v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 810. An indictment substantially charging defendants with conspiring to cheat and defraud a named company by drawing checks and drafts against it in favor of another company, for debts which did not exist, and appropriating the proceeds, held to sufficiently charge the unlawful agreement necessary to constitute a conspiracy. People v. Rathbun, 44 Misc. 88, 89 N. Y. S. 736. The indictment does not charge two crimes, conspiracy and grand larceny, by setting out the acts by which the fraud was accomplished. Id. The offense charged was conspiracy, and that offense was not merged in the grand larceny so as to prevent a prosecution for conspiracy. Id.

88. A specific averment that the false pretenses were relied on is unnecessary, if it be alleged that the property was obtained by means of the false pretenses, with intent to defraud the owner. State v. Ryan, 34 Wash. 597, 76 P. 90.

89. An allegation that "twenty dollars" was paid defendant is a sufficient averment that the informant parted with something of value. State v. Ryan, 34 Wash. 597, 76 P. 90. An indictment for cheating and swindling is fatally defective if it does not allege that the cheating caused pecuniary loss to the party defrauded. Busby v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 314.

90. An indictment for presenting a false or fraudulent claim to a county or city officer for allowance (under Pen. Code, § 72) must state the facts showing wherein the claim is fraudulent. People v. Mahony [Cal.] 78 P. 354.

91. Information held to sufficiently describe a worthless bank bill, the "false token" used, without setting it out in haec verba, or stating the particulars in which it was false and invalid. State v. Ryan, 34 Wash. 597, 76 P. 90. An indictment charging a conspiracy to cheat and defraud by drawing checks and drafts for debts which did not exist need not set out the checks and drafts. People v. Rathbun, 44 Misc. 88, 89 N. Y. S. 746.

92. Acts 1903, p. 90. Campbell v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 920.

93. An accusation charging that the acts were "with intent to procure said advances * * * and not comply with said contract" sufficiently charges the fraudulent intent, though the exact language of the statute is not followed. Campbell v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 920.

94. Conviction for presenting a false claim to county commissioners reversed because the evidence failed to connect defendant with the crime charged. State v. Adams [Idaho] 75 P. 258. Evidence that defendant request-usually to prove the fraudulent intent.[96] Admissions of a defendant are admissible against him, though not made in the presence of the party defrauded.[97] If a conspiracy to commit the offense is proven, declarations of a conspirator in furtherance of the common purpose are admissible against the co-conspirators.[98]

FENCES.

Laws compelling the maintenance of partition fences,[1] and delegating to an officer the fixing of their sufficiency,[2] are valid. Such a law is not void for uncertainty because it calls for recording in a record not denominated with technical accuracy.[3]

Railroad companies are not required in Ohio to fence against persons.[4] An agreement between adjoiners that one of them should build a line fence carries with it by implication the right to do such things as are necessary for the accomplishment of the undertaking.[5]

For injuries attributable to breach of one's duty to keep up a fence, he is liable.[6] A fence of unsightly proportions may be a violation of the rights of an ed delivery of goods to a certain address, and that he knew of their transfer to another place and told the officer where they were, was sufficient proof of delivery of the goods. State v. Bohle [Mo.] 81 S. W. 179 In California (Pen. Code, § 1110), where a false pretense is expressed in language, unaccompanied by a false token or writing, or some note or memorandum in writing subscribed by defendant, the pretense must be proved by two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances. Conviction reversed where representation as to ownership of stock and fixtures was proved by only one witness, and there was no writing. People v. Chrones, 141 Cal. xvili, 75 P. 180.

95. Evidence of similar representations to other persons, for similar purposes, admissible against defendant to prove his statement of account or representations as to his financial standing false. People v. Noblett, 96 App. Div. 293, 89 N. Y. S. 181. Where evidence as to a subsequent similar fraudulent transaction was first brought out on cross-examination, the transaction could be fully brought out on the redirect examination. Id.

96. Evidence of an exactly similar fraudulent transaction was admissible against defendant, though he was not a party thereto, where the others, combined with him in the offense charged, were parties to the other crime. People v. Putnam, 90 App. Div. 125, 85 N. Y. S. 1056.

97. Statements of defendant in regard to alleged false claims for personal injuries were admissible, though the party against whom the claim was made was not present. McPearson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 522.

98. In such case, the order of proof is immaterial; the existence of the conspiracy may be proven after the declarations have been admitted. People v. Putnam, 90 App. Div. 125, 85 N. Y. S. 1056.

1. Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 6564-6569, not a taking of property without due process. Tomlinson v. Bainaka [Ind.] 70 N. E. 155.

2. Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6565, a township trustee may limit the kinds of fence to be erected to those varieties most commonly used in the township. Tomlinson v. Bainaka [Ind.] 70 N. E. 155. Such statute is not unconstitutional because not providing for a tribunal to determine the sufficiency of a fence built by an adjoiner after notice, or the sufficiency of an existing fence. Id.

3. Provision in such law requiring contractor who builds the fence to record statement of township trustee in mechanics' lien record does not render such provision ineffective because there was not such record. It may be recorded where mechanics' liens are recorded. Tomlinson v. Bainaka [Ind.] 70 N. E. 155.

4. The fence required by section 3324, Rev. St. 1892 is one sufficient to turn stock. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Liidtke, 69 Ohio St. 384, 69 N. E. 653.

5. Cut branches from the trees. Newberry v. Bunda [Mich.] 100 N. W. 277. Whether it was necessary to cut branches in this case was for the jury. Id.

6. NOTE. Division fences: One is liable for injuries to an adjoining owner's stock proximately resulting from his failure to keep up a partition fence which it is his duty to maintain; hence where cattle passed through and over defendant's land onto a railroad track. Pitzner v. Shinnock, 41 Wis. 676. But where a colt strayed through and got down in a natural hollow on the defendant's land, he was held not liable (Fales v. Cole, 153 Mass. 322), and failure to keep a fence around a growing crop does not render the owner liable for injuries to cattle resulting from the eating thereof (Fennell v. Sequin St. R. Co., 70 Tex. 67). In contradistinction to Fales v. Cole, 153 Mass. 322, see Rooth v. Wilson, 1 Barn. & Ald. 59, where a recovery was allowed under about the same state of facts; see, also, Powell v. Salisbury, 2 Younge & J. 391, where a recovery was denied where a horse was killed by a haystack falling upon it. —From note to Wilder v. Stanley [Vt.] 20 L. R. A. 479.

Where cattle pass through defendant's portion of a fence, he is liable, though the plaintiff's portion is also defective. Osburn adjoining owner,[7] and one over the line is a trespass.[8] A railroad may be liable under fence laws for injury to animals coming from remote fields if it has made the injury possible by failure to keep up its fences.[9]

An action under the Indiana law by one adjoiner to foreclose a lien for the erection of a partition fence being equitable,[10] a jury may be denied.[11] The plaintiff must prove all facts necessary to give the township trustee authority to contract for the building of the fence.[12]

Crimes and penalties.—In Texas, destruction of fences is an injury to the possessory rights,[13] and that one has some title or claim to the land does not justify the destruction of a fence thereon.[14] One who destroys his own fence or fences enclosing premises of which he is in the actual possession cannot be convicted of unlawfully injuring the fence of another.[15] Ownership of a fence may be shown by evidence that one claiming it built it and has been in unmolested possession of the land for several years.[16]

FERRIES.

A state has the right to grant a privilege to ferry from its shores across a navigable river between two states,[17] and to regulate the fares to be charged,[18]

v. Adams, 70 Ill. 291. An owner who fails to keep up his division fence cannot recover for damages, caused by trespassing animals resulting therefrom. Webber v. Closson, 35 Me. 26; D'Arcy v. 9. NOTE. Railroads.—Liability for damage to animals; Fencing statutes: A statute required railroad companies to fence their rights of way and provided that failure to comply should render them liable in damages to the owners of injured cattle. The plaintiff's colt escaped from its owner, traveled several miles along a highway, broke through a fence into the field of a third party, and thence through the defendant railroad's defective fence to its track, where it was run over by the defendant's engine. Held, that the defendant is liable. Rinehart v. Kansas, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 80 S. W. 910. In interpreting statutes similar to the Missouri enactment, courts have differed, and even in Missouri the decisions are conflicting. See Ferris v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 30 Mo. App. 122. Certainly one object of such enactments is the protection of the traveling public. Dickson v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 124 Mo. 140, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429. As to the owners of animals, in England and some eastern states, only those whose animals were rightfully upon property adjoining the right of way, and were injured through the railroad's failure to fence, can recover. Eames v. Salem, etc., R. Co., 98 Mass. 560, 96 Am. Dec. 676. Many western jurisdictions, however, hold with the principal case that the railroad is liable even to owners of trespassing animals. McCall v. Chamberlain, 13 Wis. 637. In the former jurisdictions, the common law rule generally prevails, requiring the owner of animals to keep them in at his peril. In some western states, this rule is not in force, stock being allowed to graze at large. Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 396. This in part accounts for the conflict in interpretation, and makes it possible to support both lines of authority without violating the principle that to recover under a statute, the plaintiff must show that he is one of the class which the legislature intended to protect.—XVIII Harvard Law R. 69. See full discussion in Railroads, 2 Curr. L. 1382.

but the transportation of railroad trains across the Mississippi river at a point constituting one of the gateways between the east and the west, is not the maintenance of a ferry in the proper sense of that term, but interstate commerce.[19] Texas statutes providing that ferries shall be licensed applies to ferries on rivers wholly within the state.[20] And an interstate ferry cannot be assessed unless it appears that a license is required by the state on the opposite shore.[21] In Kentucky, a nonresident who acquires a ferry privilege is required by law to transfer it to a resident within one year, but failure to do so renders it voidable only at the instance of his grantor or in a direct proceeding instituted by the state.[22] Apart from the starboard hand rule, a ferry boat is entitled to space requisite for her proper manoeuvre in leaving and entering her slip.[23] Where a ferry boat is moored and the gates are open, assurance is given that it is safe to embark.[24] A ferryboat which affords its passengers a means of landing which had been employed by it and other ferries for years and had never been found dangerous or ineffective is not negligent.[25]

FINES.[26]

When a sentence for a fine recites that it is "inclusive of costs," the entire amount will be construed a fine.[27]

A common method of securing the satisfaction of a judgment for a fine for a misdemeanor is by imprisonment.[28] If a judgment provides for satisfaction in ferries shall charge for ferriage to the West Virginia shore. State v. Faudre, 54 W. Va. 122, 46 S. E. 269. A police jury has power to grant exclusive privilege of establishing a ferry within its limits (Rev. Laws. § 1501), but not an interstate ferry, and though an absolute privilege relative to the latter may be ultra vires, it is not absolutely void. Prince v. Police Jury of Concordia Parish, 112 La. 257, 36 So. 342.

18. West Virginia cannot punish one acting under an Ohio franchise for charging a passenger coming from the Ohio shore more than is allowed by the Virginia law for ferriage over that river. State v. Faudre, 54 W. Va. 122, 46 S. E. 269.

19. Rev. Laws Illinois 1874, c. 55, penalizing such carrying without a license, is unconstitutional, where such statute makes the granting of a license discretionary, citizens of Illinois preferred, and compels the licensee to conduct a general ferry business. St. Clair County v. Interstate Sand & Car Transfer Co., 192 U. S. 454, 48 Law. Ed. 518.

Note: A ferry franchise is a privilege to take tolls for transporting men, cattle and vehicles across a body of water; it differs in no essential from a bridge franchise. Hunter v. Moore, 44 Ark. 184, 51 Am. St. Rep. 589; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633. Ferry distinguished from a bridge. Parrott v. Lawrence, 2 Dill. 332, Fed. Cas. No. 10,772. But a boat equipped exclusively for the transportation of railroad cars and which carries no baggage, passengers or freight was held not a ferry (New York v. New England Transfer Co., 14 Blatchf. 159, Fed. Cas. No. 10,197), and a boat maintained by one for the accommodation of guests at a pleasure ground, though passengers were also conveyed for hire, is not a ferry (People v. Mayo, 69 Hun, 559, 23 N. Y. S. 938). —From note to Sistervilie Ferry Co. v. Russell [W. Va.] 59 L. R. A. 513, where cases on Definition, Establishment, Landings, Exclusiveness of Right, Regulation and Supervision, Transfers and Contracts, Rights and Duties of Ferryman, and Extinguishment of the Privilege, are gathered and discussed.

20. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1537, 4797, 4798, an interstate ferry cannot be licensed. Parsons v. Hunt [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 120.

27. The costs of a criminal prosecution always rest on the convicted defendant, and it is highly improper to include such costs in estimating the fine. Parish Board of Directors v. Hebert, 112 La. 467, 36 So. 497.

28. See Rev. St. § 7327. Smith v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 101. Under a judgment sentencing a defendant to pay a fine that manner and it is so satisfied, defendant's property is not liable to execution to satisfy it.[29] A capias pro fine may issue, though the verdict of the jury and the judgment pursuant thereto simply find defendant guilty and assess his fine, without expressly providing for his confinement in case the fine is not paid.[30]

A judgment for a fine for maintaining a liquor nuisance upon certain property is a lien on the property.[31]

A violation of a contract for services with a surety for a fine[32] is not punishable unless the court imposing the fine had authority to sentence to hard labor.[33] A statute permitting the hiring out of persons convicted of misdemeanors does not authorize the hiring out of persons convicted of a felony.[34]

In Tennessee, a defendant has the right, when a fine is assessed, to confess judgment for the fine and costs, with sureties.[35] He must tender more than one surety, and such tender may be to the court or clerk.[36] Attorneys are competent sureties.[37] Where a defendant under sentence of fine and imprisonment gives a bond pending appeal for the performance of such sentence, and the judgment is affirmed, his sureties are not relieved from paying the fine by his performance of the imprisonment.[38]

§ 1. Rights and duties respecting fires.[39]—The use of fire is lawful,[40] and

of $30, or to serve 15 days in the county jail, defendant will be entitled to a discharge when it appears that he has paid so much of his fine as is not satisfied by imprisonment at $2 a day. Ex parte Riley, 142 Cal. 124, 75 P. 665.

NOTE. Fines as debts: It is said to be almost universally held that fines and penalties imposed for violation of state laws are not debts within the meaning of constitutional provisions prohibiting imprisonment for debt, and that imprisonment for nonpayment of fines is therefore constitutional. Lee v. State, 75 Ala. 29, 30; United States v. Walsh, Deady, 281, 285, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66; In re Sanborn, 52 F. 583; Kennedy v. People, 122 Ill. 649, 652; Jackson v. Boyd, 53 Iowa, 536, 539; State v. Mace, 5 Md. 337, 350; State v. Cannady, 78 N. C. 539, 544. The same doctrine is held respecting fines imposed for violation of city ordinances. Brown v. Jerome, 102 Ill. 371; Hardenbrook v. Ligonier, 95 Ind. 70; Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. [U. S.] 71, 19 Law. Ed. 101.—From note on "Constitutionality of Imprisonment for Debt," in Carr v. State [Ala.] 34 L. R. A. 634, at page 651.

29. Where a judgment of a justice of the peace court recited that defendant was fined $100, and failing to pay it, was remanded to be confined in jail at the ratio of one day for every two dollars of the fine, such judgment was under § 2707 of the Penal Code, providing for satisfaction of the judgment by the imprisonment; and defendant, having been confined 50 days, discharged the fine, and his property could not be seized under execution to satisfy the judgment, under § 2227 of the Penal Code. Petelin v. Kennedy, 29 Mont. 466, 75 P. 82.

30. Farris v. Dozier [Ky.] 82 S. W. 615.

31. It is not essential to the validity of the lien that the indictment specifically describe the premises on which the nuisance is maintained. Jasper County v. Sparham [Iowa] 101 N. W. 134.

34. As of seduction; though punishment is imprisonment or a fine of $5,000. Ex parte Biela [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 739.

35. Shannon's Code, § 7214, providing that where a fine is assessed the court may allow defendant to confess judgment for the fine and costs, with good sureties, is mandatory; since the next section provides for imprisonment unless the fine and costs are paid, or judgment confessed, or defendant is otherwise discharged. Halfacre v. State [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 132.

36. Need not be to the clerk exclusively. Halfacre v. State [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 132.

37. The fact that attorneys are prohibited by statute from signing bonds or entering into recognizances as sureties for an appearance in a criminal case does not prevent them from becoming sureties for fines and costs of a defendant. Halfacre v. State [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 132. A town ordinance providing that a marshal may enter any public resort, if the keeper thereof refuse him admission, and imposing a fine upon any person resisting the entrance of the marshal, held constitutional. unless there is a failure to exercise ordinary care,[41] commensurate with the circumstances of each particular case,[42] no liability is incurred.[43] Failure to have a spark arrester on a stationary engine is not per se negligence,[44] but otherwise in the case of railway locomotives.[45] Mere ownership[46] or control of land does not render one liable for damages caused by a fire originating thereon.[47]

The measure of damages[48] is the value of the property destroyed,[49] and such measure cannot be enhanced by allowing salvage to go to waste,[50] nor diminished by the fact that a fire sufferer had been aided by popular subscription.[51] Where more than one method of ascertaining the damage is adopted, the measure must be determined by the jury from all the evidence.[52] Statutes allowing multifold damages are penal in nature and are strictly construed.[53] The jury have a dis-

Note: Many states have undertaken to regulate the use of fire and have prescribed conditions under which liability shall attach. A statute making one liable absolutely for setting fire to woods, marshes or prairies does not apply to other property (Emerson v. Gardiner, 8 Kan. 452), but the question of negligence is immaterial as regards the things enumerated. Conn v. May, 36 Iowa, 241. A statute relative to prairie or timber land does not apply to cultivated fields (Brunnell v. Hopkins, 42 Iowa, 429). If one sets a prairie fire at a time prohibited by statute, he is liable for injury resulting regardless of negligence (Burton v. McClellan, 3 Ill. 434), and though one is within the exception of the statute he must show justification (Johnson v. Barber, 10 Ill. 426, 50 Am. Dec. 416). If a back fire adds to the damage caused, one setting it is liable. Thoburn v. Campbell, 80 Iowa, 338.—From note to Brown v. Brooks [Wis.] 21 L. R. A. 261.

40. In clearing land unless negligence is shown, one is not liable for its spread. Hitchcock v. Riley, 44 Misc. 260, 89 N. Y. S. 890.

41. What is ordinary care is a question for the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort [Tenn.] 80 S. W. 429. Where a fire was started by sparks thrown from a hot box and there was evidence that the train crew had notice of the fire but paid no heed to it, evidence was held sufficient to warrant that it was negligently started and negligently allowed to spread. Clark v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 142 Cal. 614, 76 P. 507. The prima facie case made by showing that a fire was started by sparks from an engine is rebutted by showing that the engine was equipped with spark arresters which were properly operated. Olmstead v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 27 Utah, 515, 76 P. 557. Where proof showed that engine was equipped with proper spark arresters carefully operated, proof of other fires started by the same engine and that cinders escaped which would not pass through the netting unless it was out of repair was sufficient to take the case to the jury. cretionary power to allow interest.[54] Where the value of property destroyed exceeds the amount received from an insurance company, the insured may recover in his own name the full amount of the loss.[55]

§ 2. Remedies and procedure. Pleading.[56]—Allegations that defendant negligently set fire on its own premises and negligently allowed it to spread to plaintiff's premises states a cause of action at common law.[57] An allegation that a fire was caused by the negligent act of a principal includes an act of an employe or agent.[58] An amendment increasing the amount of damages demanded should be made before the case is submitted for decision.[59]

Evidence and burden of proof.[60]—The plaintiff must establish by a preponderance of evidence the negligence of the defendant,[61] and that it was the proximate cause of the fire.[62] Circumstantial evidence is sufficient.[63] Evidence of other fires caused by defendant's appliances is admissible,[64] if not too remote.[65] All evidence tending to show freedom from negligence is admissible under a general denial.[66]

Instructions[67] should conform to the evidence[68] and contributory negligence should not be assumed.[69]

Instruction held not objectionable as imposing upon plaintiff the burden of proving by more than a preponderance of evidence that the fire originated on the right of way from spark emitted from an engine. Jackson v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 724.

NOTE. Presumption as to negligence: The destruction of property by fire either upon the premises where it starts or is kindled, or on other property to which it is communicated, does not raise a presumption of negligence either as to kindling or management. Catron v. Nichols, 81 Mo. 80, 51 Am. Rep. 222; Lansing v. Stone, 37 Barb. [N. Y.] 15; Bryan v. Fowler, 70 N. C. 596. In all such cases the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the damage was caused by the negligence of the party kindling the fire. Sturgis v. Robbins, 62 Me. 289; Tourtelott v. Resebrook, 11 Metc. [Mass.] 460; McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 399, 80 Am. Dec. 584. Whether there was negligence is a question for the jury. Powers v. Craig, 22 Neb. 621; Jordan v. Lassiter, 6 Jones [N. § 2. Offenses; Penalties; Prosecutions (1430).

§ 3. Private Rights in Fish and Game (1431).

§ 1. Public control of fish and game.[72]—The control of fish and game of a state is vested in its lawmaking body,[73] which may impose such terms and conditions as to capture, use, and disposition, as it chooses, within constitutional limits.[74] This power to regulate the right to take fish and game is coextensive with the territorial limits of the state,[75] and may with propriety be specially ap-

72. NOTE. Theory of game laws: "The protection of wild animals suited for the purpose of food from indiscriminate slaughter by hunters has been the object of legislation from the most ancient times. The theory upon which the lawmaking power assumes to act is that all wild game belongs to the state in its sovereign capacity as a trustee for the whole of the public, and that consequently the state may, as a proper exercise of its police power, adopt such rules and regulations with reference to its preservation, and such penalties with reference to à violation of such regulations, as are necessary to accomplish the end desired, the preservation to the people of the state of the pleasure, sport and profit derived from the hunting, pursuit, and capture of the wild animals living therein." Extract from opinion in McConnell v. McKillip [Neb.] 99 N. W. 505.

Property in fish and game: Fish and game in their natural state are not the subject of private property. At common law, they were a part of the royal prerogative. 2 Bl. Comm. p. 410 et seq. and p. 14. In the American states, the general ownership of wild animals, including fish and game, so far as they are capable of ownership, is in the state, not, indeed, in ordinary proprietorship, but in its sovereign capacity, as the representative of and in trust for the benefit of its people in common. State v. Price [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1015. For historical discussion of the subject, see opinion of Mr. Justice White in Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 Law. Ed. 793. See, also, People v. Booth Co., 42 Miss. 321, 86 N. Y. S. 272; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 P. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; Hornbeke v. White [Colo. App.] 76 P. 926.

73. Regulation of fishing and hunting is a matter entirely within the discretion of the state. Brooks v. Tripp, 135 N. C. 159, 47 S. E. 401. A state legislature has power to forbid nonresidents from taking shellfish from any county in the state. Ownership of fish and game being in the state, license to hunt and fish is not an immunity or privilege of citizens of the state. Id. The state has "the right of control over fisheries, whether the fish be migratory, free swimming fish, or fish attached to or imbedded in the soil." State v. Price [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1015, quoting from Manchester v. Mass., 139 U. S., at p. 258.

74. People v. Booth & Co., 42 Misc. 321, 86 N. Y. S. 272.

Validity of laws: Game laws of Colorado prohibiting possession of game without permission as provided by law, held constitutional, because of the state's property in game, the legislature having vested the ownership of game in the state as proprietor; and as a valid exercise of the police power of the state [Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 187-209, c. 98]. Hornbeke v. White [Colo. App.] 76 P. 926. "An act to protect and promote the shellfish industry of Brunswick," providing for enforcement of laws protecting shellfish during the close season, held a valid exercise of the police power. Brooks v. Tripp, 135 N. C. 159, 47 S. E. 401. A game law prohibiting possession of game is unconstitutional so far it provides penalties for possession of game lawfully held by a person at the time the law went into effect, because it amounts to a confiscation of private property without compensation [Applied to Laws 1902, p. 1236, c. 517]. People v. Cohen, 86 N. Y. S. 475. Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 61, § 32, is unconstitutional so far as it authorizes persons to hunt without a license at the invitation of landowners, other than bona fide owners of farm lands; since only owners of farm lands have themselves the right to hunt without the resident license required by the law. Cummings v. People, 211 Ill. 392, 71 N. E. 1031.

75. State v. Price [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1015. Dominion of state for purpose of protecting fish in its waters extends to all waters within it, private as well as public, if such pri-plied to local areas therein.[76] It was first held in New York that fish and game laws had no application to fish or game taken outside the state,[77] and that legislation attempting to so extend such regulations was unconstitutional as an unlawful interference with liberty and property rights, and with interstate commerce.[78] But the court of appeals subsequently held that the legislature had power to make the possession of imported game unlawful,[79] and that since the "Lacey Act" of Congress, such legislation is not unconstitutional as interfering with interstate commerce.[80] A fish or game law is not rendered invalid by providing for a tax to defray the expense of its administration, though such tax be not laid by uniform rule.[81]

Fishery regulations. Maine.—In the absence of legislative authority, the inhabitants of a town have no power to adopt by-laws or regulations controlling the subject of seashore fisheries.[82] The policy of the laws of Maine regulating the canning industry is to protect the fishing industry by preventing the decimation of herring on the coast;[83] and statutes will be construed so as to carry out this policy.[84] Under statutes prohibiting possession of short lobsters, the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries has authority to settle offenses thereunder without suit or prosecution, and may even advise or urge settlement.[85] While a warden of the commissioner has no authority to make or advise settlement, he may be given such authority by his superior.[86]

vate waters are connected with the public by passageways used by the fish. People v. Miles [Cal.] 77 P. 666.

76. Statute regulating the taking and cultivating of oysters and clams under tidal waters of Ocean county, New Jersey, held not unconstitutional as special legislation. State v. Price [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1015.

77. Laws prohibiting the selling (Laws 1900, p. 30, c. 20, § 40) or transportation within the state (Laws 1900, p. 34, § 60) of trout, held not to apply to trout imported from Canada. People v. Booth & Co., 42 Misc. 321, 86 N. Y. S. 272. Game laws of 1900, c. 20, §§ 22, 23, 28, with amendments thereto, held to apply only to game unlawfully taken within the state; so that the sale or possession in the close season of birds taken in another state, the ownership of which has been acquired, and which has been lawfully imported into the state, is not a violation of such laws. People v. Bootman, 88 N. Y. S. 887. Affirmed, though on a different ground, in Id. [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 505.

78. Laws 1902, p. 487, c. 194, § 141, prohibiting possession, during New York closed season, of trout taken outside the state, is void. People v. Booth & Co., 42 Misc. 321, 86 N. Y. S. 272. See, also, Id., 88 N. Y. S. 887. Trout taken and shipped from Canada in violation of Canadian game laws, and imported into the United States, are none the less property, and when articles of interstate commerce, cannot be interfered with by state law. People v. Booth & Co., 42 Misc. 321, 86 N. Y. S. 272.

79. Laws 1902, p. 487, c. 194, amending previous acts, expressly provides that the prohibition of possession of game extends to that coming into the state from without. People v. Bootman [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 505.

80. Act May 25, 1900, c. 553 (31 Stat. 187) provides that foreign game coming into a state shall be subject to the state game laws, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of its importation in original packages. Consequently state game laws now apply equally to imported game. People v. Bootman [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 505.

81. Laws 1903, p. 723, c. 414, to protect the shellfish industry, not invalid, though it provided a tax on oysters and clams "shipped out of the county" by which the salaries of commissioner and assistants was to be paid, and the balance, if any, to be turned into state treasury. Brooks v. Tripp, 135 N. C. 159, 47 S. E. 401. Such tax held not unconstitutional as an export tax. Id.

82. Town regulations requiring nonresidents to obtain a license before taking clams within the town limits unauthorized. State v. Bunker, 98 Me. 387, 57 A. 95. There is no statute in Maine prohibiting the taking of clams within the limits of a town by a nonresident, or requiring nonresidents to obtain a license before taking clams from beds within the limits of a town. Pub. Laws 1901, c. 284, p. 300 repeals previously existing law and does not contain any such provisions. Id.

83. State v. Kaufman, 98 Me. 546, 57 A. 886.

84. Maine law prohibiting the packing of sardines of any description between certain dates applies to the canning of herring, though the fish used are more than eight inches in length and are sold as brook trout [Pub. Laws 1901, c. 240, held violated]. State v. Kaufman, 98 Me. 546, 57 A. 886.

85. Rev. St. c. 14, § 17. State v. Hanna [Me.] 58 A. 1061.

86. It was not extortion for a warden to demand payment of a penalty for the possession of short lobsters, stating as an alternative that the case would go to the grand jury, when the warden was acting under the commissioner's orders. State v. Hanna [Me.] 58 A. 1061.

On appeal from a decision of the shellfish commissioners of Rhode Island on application for the leasing of oyster fisheries, the judgment of the common pleas division of the supreme court, to which such appeal is taken is final and conclusive.[87]

New Jersey statutes require the culling of oysters taken within certain prescribed limits.[88]

In Washington, rights under contracts for the sale of oyster lands are forfeited on default of the purchaser.[89]

Game laws.—In Vermont, the law prohibits the killing of deer without horns at any season; and in the open season only deer with horns may be killed.[90] New York statutes prohibiting capture or possession at any time of birds for which there is no open season applies only to birds as to which the law expressly provides there shall be no open season.[91]

§ 2. Offenses; penalties; prosecutions.[92]—The intent to sell is an essential element of the crime of having wild game in one's possession with intent to sell.[93] Colorado laws provide for the seizure of game or any part thereof found in one's unlawful possession.[94] Game laws cannot provide for the summary forfeiture, without a hearing, of property, innocent in nature, which has been used to violate the law.[95] Statutes providing for cumulative sentences for violation of game laws, graduating the punishment according to the quantity of game, are not invalid as inflicting cruel and unusual punishments.[96] On prosecution for unlawful dredging of oysters, the state need not prove that the oyster bed in question had been marked, buoyed or staked by or under the supervision of the state oyster commission.[97]

87. Petition for new trial will not lie. Hopkins v. Commissioners of Shell Fisheries [R. I.] 57 A. 372.

88. Defendants held guilty of refusing or neglecting to cull oysters taken within certain prescribed limits, under P. L. 1901, p. 307. Test applied held proper. State v. Hand [N. J.] 58 A. 641.

89. A contract for sale of oyster lands by the state, providing for forfeiture if payment of principal and interest is not made as therein stated, is subject to summary cancellation after notice by the state land commissioner, without an action by the state, where the purchaser has been in default a year and nine months. Frazier v. Wilson [Wash.] 77 P. 1064. Where there was a contest between plaintiff, in default on contract for purchase of oyster lands, and another applicant for the same land, a decision by the land commissioners in favor of contestants and stamping "Canceled" on plaintiff's contract, held to constitute a forfeiture, without a formal declaration thereof. Frazier v. Wilson [Wash.] 77 p. 1064.

90. Construing Acts 1896, p. 74, No. 94, §§ 1, 2. State v. Jewett [Vt.] 58 A. 725.

91. Laws 1900, p. 28, c. 20, § 33, as amended in 1900, 1901 and 1902, does not apply to snow buntings. People v. Cohen, 86 N. Y. S. 475.

92. See 2 Curr. L. 7.

Penal statutes construed: No offense to place a seine in waters of Lee county, Arkansas, that county being exempted [Acts 1897, p. 112, No. 46] from the provisions of the statute prohibiting such acts [Sand. & H. Dig. § 3421]. Rennau v. State [Ark.] 81 S. W. 605. In prosecution for selling a "wild deer and part of a wild deer" contrary to Acts 1896, p. 74, the state must not only prove possession and sale of meat, but that it was part of a "wild" animal. Crosby v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 913. It is held under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 61, requiring residents to procure licenses to hunt, that lands owned by a domestic shooting club and used as a game reservation are not within the proviso in § 25, permitting owners of farm lands or their children or tenants to hunt on such lands without a license. Cummings v. People, 211 Ill. 392, 71 N. E. 1031. Nor is a stockholder in such incorporated club an owner of land within the proviso in § 25. Id.

93. Certain evidence held admissible and sufficient to establish such intent in the case of one defendant, but not in case of another. State v. Poole [Minn.] 100 N. W. 647.

94. Seizure of 300 deer hides by game warden held justifiable under Colorado game laws. Hornbeke v. White [Colo. App.] 76 P. 926.

95. Game warden seized three guns, used in hunting prairie chickens out of season. Comp. St. 1901, c. 31, art. 3, § 3. Held invalid so far as it provides for such forfeiture without due process of law. McConnell v. McKillip [Neb.] 99 N. W. 505.

96. So held where defendant had 2,000 wild ducks in his possession with intent to sell them, the statute (Laws 1903, c. 336, § 45, p. 606) providing a fine of $10 to $25 or imprisonment for 10 to 30 days for each duck. State v. Poole [Minn.] 100 N. W. 647.

97. Conviction sustained under P. L. 1901, p. 317. State v. Lee [N. J. Law] 57 A. 142.

§ 3. Private rights in fish[98] and game.—The owner of the soil has the exclusive privilege of hunting, including the unqualified right to control and protect the wild game thereon.[99] These rights are not surrendered to the public by the granting to it of an easement of way across the land.[1]

Fishery rights[2] must be so exercised as not to obstruct navigation.[3] Ownership of land bordering on the sea does not carry with it private or exclusive rights as to fishing or bedding oysters.[4] But such rights may be vested in individuals, apart from the ownership of the land, by the lawmaking power of the state.[5] A right to set apart one species of fish for the owner's sole use within certain metes and bounds, granted by a royal patent, and recognized as a vested property right in Hawaiian law, will be enforced, though not familiar to common law.[6]

Inland waters.—The right to fish in an inland lake in New Jersey cannot be separated from the private ownership thereof and taken under the power of eminent domain.[7] If a body of water, owned privately, is connected, even for a part of the year, with public waters, so as to permit migration of fish between the private and public waters, the public has the right to take fish from the privately owned waters,[8] and the owner of such waters has no greater rights than the public as to the manner of taking fish, but is bound by the statutes regulating the same.[9] The stocking with fish of private waters, by the state, with the owner's consent, results in a charge on the land, which is fixed when the consent is given and the waters stocked; and such charge cannot be extended to other lands near

98. Note: See note to State v. Shaw [Ohio] 60 L. R. A. 481, for exhaustive treatment of "Right to Fish," covering public and private rights of fishery and public regulation thereof.

99. Realty Co. v. Johnson [Minn.] 100 N. W. 94.

1. Hence the public does not acquire the right to pursue or kill game temporarily passing over a highway across the land, in which the public has only an easement, with the rights strictly incidental thereto. Realty Co. v. Johnson [Minn.] 100 N. W. 94.

2. See 2 Curr. L. 8.

3. Pound nets in navigable sound held public nuisance. Reyburn v. Sawyer, 135 N. C. 328, 47 S. E. 761.

4. The rights of use and control of the water front do not include such fishing rights. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott [Miss.] 37 So. 121. Lease and deed construed as to rights in oyster beds in waters bordering the lands in question. Id.

5. Legislature empowered county boards of supervisors to grant by ordinance exclusive right of bedding, planting and cultivating oysters, in waters within the territorial limits of the county. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott [Miss.] 37 So. 121.

6. A definite "fishing right in the adjoining sea," described in royal grant as "attached to this land," held to be included in the grant, though the habendum clause was to have and to hold "the above granted land," which, standing alone, did not include a fishing right. Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 48 Law. Ed. 916.

7. First, because the natural supply of fish therein is too small to meet a public demand; second, the object of acquiring the right is not use, which implies utility, but mere sport or pastime. The court further suggests that there is no criterion by which compensation for such a right could be determined. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Comm. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 398. Since that part of P. L. 1901, p. 333, which authorizes the acquisition of a common right to fish, in privately owned fresh-water lakes, by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, is unconstitutional, the entire statute is invalid. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Comm. [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 146.

Note: But a fishery right is capable of separate alienation by the owner of the upland, who has a right of fishery adjacent to his shore (Fitzgerald v. Faunce, 46 N. J. Law, 536), or by the owner of the soil beneath the water, who may convey his fishing privileges separate from the upland (Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. 594).—See Gratz v. Land & River Improvement Co. [U. S.] 40 L. R. A. 393, note.

8. People v. Horling [Mich.] 100 N. W. 691.

9. Owner of lake connected with Grand river, Mich., for a part of each year, convicted of fishing with nets on his own land, though he had himself stocked the waters with fish. People v. Horling [Mich.] 100 N. W. 691. The dominion of the state for the purpose of protecting the fish in its waters extends to all waters within the state, public or private, in which fish resort for spawning or other purposes, and through which they have freedom of passage to and from public fishing grounds of the state. Waters furnishing such passageways are deemed public for this purpose, though privately owned. People v. Miles [Cal.] 77 P. 666. The condition of the water, whether quiet or moving in a current, held immaterial, so far as the use of set nets therein, prohibited by statute, is concerned. Id.

those stocked with fish by the state, by reason of the fact that such lands are owned by the same person.[10]

FIXTURES.

§ 1. Definition (1432).
§ 2. Annexation and Intent (1432).
§ 3. Title of Third Persons (1433).

§ 1. Definition.[11]—A fixture is a chattel so annexed to the realty as to become a part thereof.[12] A right to the product of a fixture does not create a lien on the realty to which it is attached.[13]

§ 2. Annexation and intent.[14]—There must be either physical or constructive annexation.[15] The intent to annex is necessary.[16] It appears whenever chattels have been placed in or annexed to a building as part of the means by which to carry out the purposes for which the building was erected or to which it has been adapted, with the intention of permanently increasing its value for that purpose.[17] There can be no intent to annex when it is understood that the thing already attached to the soil is personalty.[18]

It is presumed that things annexed by a vendee in possession under a contract of purchase become a part of the realty,[19] and the same is true of an owner;[20] but otherwise if annexation is by a tenant.[21] Intent may lie in relinquishment of a right to remove, thus a tenant must remove fixtures during his term,[22]

10. Under New York statutes permitting the laying out of private parks under certain conditions, but providing that waters stocked with fish by the state shall not be so laid out, and that if the waters of any private park be stocked with fish by the state, with the owner's consent, the provisions of the private park act shall not apply thereto. Laws 1900, c. 20, § 200. Rockefeller v. Lamora, 96 App. Div. 91, 89 N. Y. S. 1.

12. Title to fixtures vests in the owner of the land. Lessee acquires no right thereto. Linden Oil Co. v. Jennings, 207 Pa. 524, 56 A. 1074.

13. Sale of fruit trees with agreement for payment out of crops. Butler v. Stark, 25 Ky. L. R. 1886, 79 S. W. 204.

14. See 2 Curr. L. 9.

15. Furniture used on a theater stage, chairs not fastened to its floor, a portable sectional dance floor stored when not in use. Security Trust Co. v. Temple Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 865. Held a question of fact whether planking nailed on stringers partly embedded in the earth but not fastened to a dock were fixtures or movable by the lessee of the dock for a year. Crerar v. Daniels, 209 Ill. 296, 70 N. E. 569.

19. Building and manufacturing machinery cannot be removed without the consent of the owner of the legal title. Seiberling v. Miller, 207 Ill. 443, 69 N. E. 800.

20. If a building be erected on land by the owner of an estate therein, it becomes a part of the realty. Chattel mortgagee acquired no rights. In re Rogers, 132 F. 560.

21. Donnelly v. Frick & Lindsay Co., 207 Pa. 597, 57 A. 60. Trade fixtures attached to leased property may be removed at any time during the term. Radey v. McCurdy [Pa.] 58 A. 558. Intention of making a gift of them to the landlord is to be imputed to the tenant only when he leaves, during the term, without removing them. Donnelly v. Frick & Lindsay Co., 207 Pa. 597, 57 A. 60.

22. Donnelly v. Frick & Lindsay Co., 207 Pa. 597, 57 A. 60. A building erected by one holding under a contract that he should have the use of the land so long as he used it for a certain purpose, ceasing which it should revert, becomes a fixture if not removed before the reverter occurs. Montgomery County v. Bean [Ky.] 82 S. W. 240.

or before he surrenders possession,[23] but the right to remove is not affected by his holding over, with permission of the landlord, though there be no formal renewal or extension of the lease,[24] or reservation of a right to remove in a renewal lease.[25]

By agreement[26] or estoppel,[27] the character of personalty may be impressed on annexed things.

The right to remove, if it exists by contract, can be exercised only by performance as a condition precedent.[28]

§ 3. Title of third persons.[29]—The fact that one who annexes chattels to the realty of another has no title to them will not prevent them from becoming fixtures,[30] but where a chattel to which the owner of the realty has no title is annexed by him, its character as personalty is not changed.[31] Persons taking liens on annexed chattels are charged with notice of vendor's rights,[32] but a grantee takes without notice of a chattel mortgage.[33] Notice to a purchaser that a fixture is not the property of the vendor preserves its character as personalty.[34]

FOOD.

Validity and construction of statutes.—Congress has power to impose a tax on artificially colored oleomargarine, and the fact that the enforcement of such tax will destroy or restrict the manufacture of that article does not render an act imposing the tax invalid.[35] It is not a denial of due process of law that artificially colored butter is free from any tax.[36]

Doubt as to whether certain articles are fixtures is resolved in favor of the landlord, where the articles are not removed within the term of the tenancy or within a reasonable period thereafter. Johnson v. Wooding, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 160.

NOTE. Annexation by abandonment: The plaintiff, a railroad company, having abandoned its right of way, sought to enjoin the servient tenant's vendee from removing the rails. Held, the injunction would not be granted, as the title to the rails, which were real property, rested in the owner of the fee upon the abandonment. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bradbury [Mo. App. 79 S. W. 966.

At common law, anything attached to the realty became a part thereof. Henry's Case, Y. B. 20 Hen. VII, 13 pl. 24; Richardson v. Copeland, 6 Gray [Mass.] 536, 66 Am. Dec. 424. This rule has been modified, however, to meet modern business demands, and "trade fixtures" may be removed by the tenant as personalty any time before the expiration of his term. Thresher v. Water Works Co., 2 Barn. & C. 608; Lowe v. Brown, 22 Ohio St. 463. Under the tests of permanency, intention to improve the land permanently for the use contemplated, together with the fact of abandonment, the result reached on the principal case would be justified. 35. Taxing power discussed and Federal act imposing tax on artificially colored oleomargarine construed. McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 49 Law. Ed. —. The motives of pur-

Laws prohibiting the production or sale of adulterated food products within a state are a valid exercise of the police power of the state to protect the people against fraud and deception, even though such laws incidentally affect interstate commerce.[37] Such statutes are not rendered inoperative as to articles imported through channels of foreign commerce by Federal statutes prohibiting the importation of adulterated food products.[38] Statutes prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine which is the color of butter are constitutional,[39] even when construed to include substances known as oleomargarine, which contain no ingredient, the sole function of which is coloration.[40] Oleomargarine which is colored by the use of artificially colored butter is not "free from artificial coloration" within the meaning of the proviso to the Federal act imposing a tax on oleomargarine so colored.[41]

The New York statute requiring the tagging of carcasses of veal applies to every shipment to or from any part of the state, or to a point in another state; whether or not the animal when slaughtered was within the age of four weeks;[42] it does not violate the interstate commerce provisions of the Federal constitution; nor is it an unreasonable interference with private rights and property.[43]

The statute prohibiting sale of renovated butter which is not plainly branded or labelled in the original form in which it is put up for sale is not violated by the sale of an unlabelled portion taken from a branded tub, when there was no attempt at deceit and the purchaser was not in fact deceived.[44] It is constitutional.

Tort liability.—An officer who connives at the sale of impure food in order to prosecute the purchaser for reselling may be liable in tort,[45] but not as for malicious prosecution.[46]

Offenses.[47]—Statutes making the sale of impure or adulterated foods a penal offense[48] are violated, regardless of the intent with which the sale is made.[49]

When this statute was involved, evidence that there was a demand in some parts of the country for adulterated coffee was irrelevant, because not tending to show that article a legitimate article of commerce, and therefore beyond the operation of state laws. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER.[50]

A. The Cause of Action (1435).
B. Procedure (1436). Parties (1436). Pleading (1437).
§ 2. Criminal Responsibility (1437).

§ 1. Civil rights and remedies. A. The cause of action.[51]—It is a forcible entry to dispossess one actually in possession under a claim of right.[52] Constructive possession is sufficient,[53] and it is not necessary that the land be enclosed.[54] Generally there must be such acts of violence used or threatened as to give those in possession reason to apprehend personal danger or tend directly to cause a breach of the peace;[55] but the injured party need not have resisted to the point of physical struggle.[56] It is generally provided that one unlawfully detaining premises is guilty;[57] but a lessee who has assigned his lease and surrendered possession cannot be.[58] In Georgia, one in possession claiming title in good faith cannot be evicted.[59]

Damages.—Some statutes provide for double damages.[60] Error committed by the jury in the assessment of damages, due to a misunderstanding of the law, may be treated as an informality and an opportunity afforded them to correct it.[61] Where the damage recoverable is the loss sustained by being kept out of possession, the measure is the rental value of the premises during the time possession was unlawfully withheld together with any other damage proximately resulting.[62]

Defenses.—Neither the title nor right to possession is in controversy,[63] therefore it is no defense that plaintiff has no title,[64] nor can the defendant justify by showing title or right of entry.[65] Where an unlawful entry is not asserted, ing made to conceal its real character. Williams v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 193.

a license to enter is no defense.[66] An equitable action in which temporary orders have been made relative to the rights of the parties in the premises, pending further orders of the court is a bar to an action of forcible entry and detainer for the same premises.[67] If a lessor's title has been declared void by law, his lessee is not estopped to deny it.[68]

(§ 1) B. Procedure.[69]—The proceeding is designed only to enable one to speedily recover possession.[70]

The action being legal in its nature,[71] it is not competent to interpose an equitable defense.[72] Questions of title cannot be litigated,[73] nor can the action be converted into one to try title by an answer putting the title in issue,[74] and if in order to determine the right of possession the court must determine which party has the paramount legal or equitable title, the rights of the parties cannot be litigated.[75] Where, however, it is provided that evidence of title to show right of possession is admissible, it is error to refuse it.[76] It is the proper remedy for a homestead entryman whose rights have been finally determined, as against one whose claim has been canceled by the land department.[77]

Jurisdiction[78] once acquired remains until final disposition of the case.[79]

Parties.[80]—The action must be brought by the person entitled to the possession.[81] The purchaser under a deed of trust may maintain the action after foreclosure.[82]

the day before filing the complaint is sufficient.[84] A justice's summons defective for insufficient description of the property may be amended on appeal to the circuit court when substantial justice will be thereby promoted.[85]

Pleading.[86]—The strict and technical rules of pleading are not applied,[87] but ordinarily a complaint in the language of the statute is sufficient.[88] Under a statute declaring that unlawful detainers shall be cognizable before any justice of the county in which they are committed, it is not necessary to allege that the property was in the city ward of the justice before whom it was filed.[89] Where a case is removed to the circuit court by certiorari, the complaint may be amended so as to increase the amount of damages demanded and the sum averred as to rent.[90] It is too late to object to the sufficiency of the allegation of interest after answer filed and jury drawn.[91]

The warrant[92] may be amended after traverse and appeal by addition of an allegation essential to its validity.[93]

Limitations run against the action only from the date the party seeking to enforce it acquired title.[94]

The judgment of the justice, however erroneous, is conclusive of the controversy,[95] but does not affect the title.[96] Judgments rendered in the court of general jurisdiction on appeal from a justice are further appealable unless the statute excepts them from its operation.[97]

§ 2. Criminal responsibility.[98]—Forcible entry is the violently taking possession of lands and tenements with menaces, force and arms and without authority of law.[99] There must be some show of violence,[100] but it is not necessary that the person in possession should offer such resistance that the entry was accomplished by actual violence.[101] As against a tenant at sufferance, the owner may forcibly enter if unnecessary force is not used.[102]

§ 1. Right to foreclose and remedies available therefor.—The right to foreclose accrues on condition broken, and this may be either by default in the principal sum[1] or in an instalment, if a right to thereupon declare tthe whole to be due is reserved;[2] but such right does not exist unless stipulated.[3] Several different modes of foreclosure are usually provided by statute,[4] and the mortgagee may elect which he will pursue.[5]

§ 2. Foreclosure by scire facias or executory process.[6]—In foreclosure by scire facias sur mortgage, one not summoned, though in possession, does not become a party by the posting of a copy of the writ upon the mortgaged premises.[7] The sheriff's return when defendant cannot be found therein should be not "non est invitus" but "nihil habet" to conform with the practice in serving writs of scire facias.[8]

In some states, foreclosure may be had under executory process where the debt is fixed.[9]

In Louisiana, in order to obtain a writ of seizure and sale, three days notice must be given to the debtor if he resides on the spot, adding a day for every twenty miles between the place of his residence and the residence of the judge to whom the petition has been presented.[10] The distance must be computed by the public road and not by railroad.[11] The statutory prescription of five years cures irregularities resulting from the issuance of the writ prematurely, or from a premature publication of the advertisement, provided the full time allowed by law intervenes between the seizure and the sale.[12] It also cures the failure of the sheriff to keep the property constantly in possession, provided no one else has gone into possession, and the purchaser goes into possession without objection.[13] Whether the purchase of the equity of redemption on foreclosure of the junior mortgage by one holding both it and the senior mortgage operates as a merger and a payment of the debt secured by the latter depends on the intention of the parties.[14]

§ 3. Sale by trustee in deed or under power. A. Right to sell.[15]—Where a mortgage is given to secure several debts, it may be foreclosed under a power therein contained before default on all.[16] Where by terms of the notes in case of default in one instalment, the whole may be declared due at the option of the mortgagee, there must be some declaration of intention to make all due,[17] in which event interest runs to the time of foreclosure and not to the date of maturity of the notes;[18] but the default on one does not make the whole debt due unless so provided.[19] Where the trustee applies to the mortgage debt the rents and profits which he receives to an amount equal thereto, it is discharged;[20] but after a default, foreclosure can be had, though some money which should be applied to the debt still remains in the hands of the trustee.[21] As between a chattel mortgagee of the crops and beneficiary of a trust deed, the latter has the right to the crops if the chattel mortgage was executed after the trust deed, though prior to the trustee's sale.[22] A substituted trustee, though appointed by parol, has a right to sell,[23] and an agent may exercise a power given to a corporation.[24] Generally the trustee has no power to extend the time of payment called for in the deed, but such extension is good where he is secretly the beneficiary thereof.[25] The right to foreclose by advertisement or under a power is unaffected by the power to sue on the indebtedness,[26] though it may be by estoppel or laches;[27] but in states where sale under a power is limited as to time by statute, where a sale is void, a new sale cannot be had when barred by statute,[28] and where the trustee will act, the effect of the statute of limitations is immaterial.[29]

(§ 3) B. Notice.[30]—The procedure in foreclosure under a power contained in a mortgage must strictly follow the terms of the statute or the instrument, both as to specifying in the notice the time of sale and the amount due,[31] and being signed by the party foreclosing,[32] and time for publication of notice of sale.[33]

(§ 3) C. Sale.[34]—The title conveyed by a foreclosure by advertisement is one on which the purchaser may maintain ejectment even against third parties not claiming under it.[35] To prevent the foreclosure by a trustee, the proper remedy is by an injunction, but this cannot be had unless it is accompanied by a tender of the amount due,[36] nor where the ground therefor is so insignificant as to be inequitable.[37] Where by terms of the deed the trustee need not sell the property in parcels, his failure to do so is not an abuse of his discretion,[38] but this may be required by statute.[39] The fact that the mortgagor must redeem from all the parcels,[40] or that the beneficiary of a trust did not wish the foreclosure, is no ground on which to set the sale aside.[41]

(§ 3) D. Costs and attorneys' fees.[42]—Where the note provides for an attorney's fee for collection, though such stipulation is absent from the mortgage, it becomes part of the debt for which the mortgage may be foreclosed;[43] but such allowance may not be had by the trustee when the attorneys employed are the firm of which he is a member,[44] though if another attorney is engaged with him a pro rata share can be recovered.[45, 46] Where the mortgagee has successfully made a defense of fraud,[47] or where the mortgage is foreclosed, not because of the default of the debtor, but because of the insolvency of the mortgagee corporation, it is entitled to no allowance for the stipulated attorney's fees.[48]

(§ 3) E. Defective foreclosures and rights under them.[49]—In Ohio, on execution of a deed by a trustee of a trust deed, the legal title passes at once to the purchaser, irrespective of appraisal or public sale, but it is a title subject to be set aside by decree of the courts.[50] Where a sale is void because of an insufficient notice, a court of equity cannot remedy it;[51] but where, however, the vendee is in possession, he cannot be ousted till the debt is paid.[52] Though the sale by a substituted trustee appointed by parol is good, he has no authority to convey by deed.[53] After a resale is completed after default of the original purchaser at sale by trustee, he is not liable to suit by the beneficiary.[54] The purchaser may refuse to accept the premises when they are erroneously described in the notice of sale.[55] Where the beneficiary of a trust deed owns other liens on the deeded premises with which he fails to acquaint the purchaser at the time of foreclosure, he is estopped from later asserting them.[56]

§ 4. Remedy by entry and possession, and strict foreclosure.[57]—In Maine, where foreclosure may be had by entry and possession, a peaceable entry by the mortgagee in the absence of the mortgagor is sufficient, and the according the latter thereafter permission to cut grass and commit waste does not give him the right to pay the debt.[58]

A decree determining the amount due creditors who are beneficiaries under a trust deed authorizes them to call upon the trustee to bring ejectment for the possession of the land.[59] The fact that an appeal has been taken therefrom does not affect the right.[60] Such decree is res adjudicata as to the amount due.[61] Where the amount due is unliquidated, an accounting is necessary,[62] and, since a court of equity is the forum in which it should be had, such court will enjoin an ejectment until such amount is ascertained.[63, 64]

Strict foreclosure, being an extraordinary and harsh remedy will only be granted by courts in special instances.[65] The defendant must have a reasonable time to make the necessary payments,[66] and no payments not yet matured can be required.[67] The ordinary statutory provisions as to redemption do not apply to a decree for strict foreclosure.[68]

§ 5. Foreclosure by action and sale. A. Right of action. Title of mortgagor necessary to suit.[69]—That the title of the parties to the mortgaged premises is doubtful and even in litigation, is no bar to an action for foreclosure,[70] and a provision mortgaging after-acquired property gives a good right to foreclose the same,[71] and so an unrecorded mortgage to secure future advances is good except as against a junior incumbrancer, though after mortgage but before advances,[72] and so where mortgage is to secure indorsee on long outstanding notes.[73] Where the mortgagor has granted the rights to timber and then conveyed to the mortgagee, the latter can only foreclose on the interest of the grantee.[74] The mortgagee cannot by buying in the outstanding tax deeds cut out the rights of the mortgagor.[75]

Foreclosure.—Where a mortgage was satisfied by mistake, an action to foreclose may be begun without a decree setting aside the instrument of satisfaction.[76] Recovery may be had on the agreement in the mortgage to pay the debt,[77] and that the mortgage was executed to secure the debt of another seems to be no defense.[78] Where the mortgagee has bought in the taxes from time to time and it is the duty of the mortgagor to pay the same, he may add them to the mortgage debt.[79] A bill, premature because of an extension wherein accrued interest was treated as part of a new principal, cannot be supported as on a default of interest.[80]

Defenses.[81]—The defense of usury can always be set up in an action to foreclose,[82] and that the note sued on is a renewal of a usurious note is sufficient to taint it with usury.[83] Duress[84] and fraud[85] are good defenses,[86] as is tender[87] or payment of the amount due,[88] or a release or discharge of the debt,[89] or an extension of the time of payment.[90] The personal liability cannot be denied by one who assumes a mortgage lien,[91] or purchasing subject to it, makes no effort to have it set aside.[92] Neglect to record an extension agreement is no defense to an action thereon,[93] but a purchaser of incumbered real estate cannot set up an unrecorded deed to contest a foreclosure by a bona fide holder of the unpaid secured notes,[94] or where deed and defeasance clause are separate the defense that one's grantee of the holder of the deed depends on his good faith.[95] Laches, however, may be a defense.[96] Where the execution and delivery of the notes evidencing the mortgage debt are denied, the unexplained possession of them is not sufficient.[97] The burden is on the plaintiff to prove execution, delivery[98] and ownership[99] of the notes. Paying interest pending suit does not estop defendant from denying the rights of the mortgagee.[1] The acceptance of a partial payment by the mortgagee does not preclude him, upon failure to pay the balance, from enforcing his mortgage to collect the same at any time thereafter until barred by limitations.[2]

Other suits or action pending.[3]—Foreclosure will not be decreed where it appears a writ of sequestration has been issued for the collection of the mortgage debt, unless it is made clear what was done under that writ;[4] but presentation to probate court is not sufficient to operate as a bar.[5] A void judgment of foreclosure is not a bar to a new action to foreclose.[6]

Bar by limitation.[7]—The statute of limitations does not prevent the foreclosure of a mortgage, but only the collection of the mortgage debt unless a sufficient period has elapsed to give rise to a presumption of payment;[8] and payments on account of interest or principal will rebut this presumption and toll the statute,[9] but not to the detriment of a judgment creditor without his consent.[10] In some states, where the debt is barred by statute, foreclosure is barred.[11] Under these statutes, however, when by payment the debt is taken from out the statute, the mortgage is taken out as well.[12]

Jurisdiction.[13]—Courts of equity alone have jurisdiction of actions to enforce liens.[14] Where a party stipulates for a stay in an action, it constitutes an appearance.[15] A Federal court has jurisdiction over foreclosure proceedings where the mortgagor and mortgagee are residents of different states, though by subsequent addition of parties defendant some residents of state of mortgagee are added.[16]

The bankruptcy of the mortgagor is no defense to foreclosure in the state court.[17]

(§ 5) B. Parties and process. Who may sue.[18]—Where a trustee of a trust deed refuses to act, any beneficiary may commence foreclosure proceedings after default for the common benefit.[19] A mortgagee who has resorted to his legal remedy of ejectment under a security deed may, if he finds he cannot discharge the debt out of rents and profits, thereafter sue in equity to sell the land to pay the balance due after accounting for rents and profits.[20] Where a mortgage was executed in favor of a third person as trustee or representative of certain creditors of the mortgagor, the creditors may maintain an action to foreclose the mortgage, in case he fails to do so, and to have adjudicated the amount of their various claims and the amount of the compensation and expenses of the trustee, and to distribute the proceeds.[21] Presumably the right to enforce the mortgage security passes to the assignee of the mortgage debt.[22]

Mortgagors cannot come in and contest foreclosure after everything has been done but to confirm sale,[23] nor can other claimants, not being original parties, intervene at that time to adjudicate rights against strangers which would not be concluded by the decree.[24]

Necessary parties.—The holder of the principal note to which he has no title is a necessary party to a foreclosure suit on the mortgage secured thereby.[25] When the payees of a note bring an action to foreclose, the former mortgagee is a necessary party.[26] Generally the beneficiary is not a necessary party by a suit to foreclose brought by his trustee.[27] Both the trustee and the beneficiaries of a trust deed, which is a subsequent lien on the property, must be made parties unless the latter are so numerous as to render such a course impracticable;[28] but it is held that a trustee for the investment of funds of minors must bring in the guardians of the minors.[29] Joinder of the heirs of deceased devisees of a deceased mortgagor is necessary;[30] but in the absence of debts, the administrator of the deceased mortgagor need not be joined.[31] A mortgagor who has conveyed away all his interest is not a proper party.[32]

Where, after commencement of the action, it is known that the mortgagor has disposed of his interest in the property, his grantee is not a necessary party but is bound by the appearance of the mortgagor.[33] The administrator of the deceased husband of a mortgagor, though her separate property alone is involved, is a necessary party to foreclosure;[34] but a widow having no interest in premises covered by a purchase-money mortgage is neither a necessary nor proper party to a suit to foreclose the same,[35] and so the conditional vendees of trade fixtures were not proper parties to the suit.[36] The holder of a tax title adverse to the mortgage is not a proper party to a foreclosure suit, since he cannot be compelled to litigate his rights in that action.[37] An assignee alone can object to his being joined in an action of foreclosure of mortgages in which he no longer has an interest.[38] Where proper parties defendant join as plaintiffs, there is no defect in parties.[39] The lower court may bring in additional parties to give complete justice in the distribution of the surplus after sale,[40] and the appellate court

send suit back for amendment to bring in necessary parties.[41] A creditor of the defendant mortgagor cannot become a party to a foreclosure proceeding.[42]

(§ 5) C. Pleading, trial and evidence. Bill, complaint or petition.[43]—The complaint in an action to foreclose should set forth the conditions of the mortgage and the breach thereof by mortgagor;[44] but the estate of the several defendants must be set out with an allegation that they are subordinate to that of the plaintiff.[45] Where the mortgagor is a party, an averment that the note and mortgage were assigned to plaintiff is sufficient.[46] The court may grant a deficiency judgment on a prayer for general relief contained in the complaint,[47] but will not allow the appointment of a receiver unless asked.[48] Complainant need not allege that there has been no waiver of the conditions contained in the mortgage.[49]

Answer.—The defense of fraud may be raised by a judgment creditor to an action to foreclose,[50] but not the statute of limitations.[51] Usury must be pleaded specifically.[52]

In a proceeding to foreclose a trust deed, a cross bill by some of the defendants for the purpose of determining who has the equity of redemption in the mortgaged promises is germane to the original bill.[53] A defendant filing a cross complaint to foreclose another mortgage on the same property will be treated, as to the mortgagors, as though he had brought an independent and separate action for that purpose.[54]

Issues, proof, etc.[55]—Where the pleadings set forth that one of the defendants agreed to assume the mortgage debt, objection to a decree taken pro confesso cannot be had at time of motion for a deficiency judgment.[56] Where the Civ. Code requires issues of fact and law to have a certain form of trial, they cannot be disposed of by a peremptory order of dismissal.[57] Unless substantial rights be impaired, what would be fatal defects in pleading must be objected to at the time of trial.[58]

Complainant must establish by proof that the notes held by him are the ones described in and secured by the instrument sought to be foreclosed.[59] The burden is on defendant to prove the illegality of the mortgage.[60]

inferior to the mortgage, it is his duty to set up his interest by way of answer and establish it by proof.[61]

Where a bill for the foreclosure of trust deeds involves the adjustment of many different accounts covering transactions with a number of different parties for several years, the court should not proceed to a hearing until an account has been stated by the master and objections thereto settled by him.[62] The chancellor may on his own motion set aside the report of the register to whom the cause has been referred to ascertain the amount due the mortgagee, and either order another reference or himself ascertain the amount of the debt.[63]

(§ 5) D. Decree or judgment.[64]—An interlocutory judgment giving time for the payment of the money found due is not required, but final judgment may be entered in the first instance.[65] A decree in a suit to foreclose a mortgage is a judgment,[66] and an order of sale or special execution issued by the plaintiff in the decree to enforce the same will prevent a money judgment in favor of one defendant against another from becoming dormant, if the fact of its recovery and the amount thereof is recited or referred to in the order of sale.[67] A decree directing that the land be sold in accordance with the provisions of the law sufficiently directs the manner and mode of the sale.[68] The decree should designate some one to make the sale,[69] and should provide for the disposition of any surplus.[70] In case this is not done, the officer making the sale should report the existence of any surplus to the court, who may then order its payment to defendant.[71] A decree foreclosing trust realty under a mortgage for a debt of the cestuis que trustent cannot as against the trustee adjudicate more than liability of the land.[72] An order for seizure and sale in an action to foreclose a mortgage is not a judgment for all purposes, since it is but a decree in aid of execution which by law is given the effect of a judgment.[73] The foreclosure sale will not be set aside because court refused in its discretion to issue a stay. The mortgagor has no right unless he files a supersedeas bond.[74] Clerical errors in the decree may be corrected either before or after appeal.[75]

An appeal from a judgment in foreclosure does not invalidate the sale.[76] When the time of redemption expires, pending appeal, the lien still continues.[77] On an appeal from a judgment of foreclosure, questions not raised before the court below will not be considered.[78] Appeal from an order overruling objections

A decree partitioning the property and foreclosing the mortgage cannot be collaterally attacked by the mortgagor or the purchaser at the sale in so far as it provides the order in which the property shall be sold.[81]

(§ 5) E. Sale. Order of sale.[82]—A sale will not be set aside because the mortgaged premises are sold in one rather than several parcels, where it injures no one, though a separate sale is ordered in the decree;[83] but where each parcel is worth more than the amount adjudged due, a court will order a new sale, notwithstanding that the mortgagor was negligently absent at the time of the sale.[84] Where two tracts are subject to the same mortgage and the purchaser of one has agreed to pay the same, the mortgagor may demand that the one so conveyed be sold first,[85] and on the same theory, where two tracts of land have been mortgaged to secure the purchase price of one of them, the mortgagor is entitled to have the one on behalf of which the debt was incurred first sold.[86] The judgment creditors cannot, however, object to the order of sale in separate parcels when a sale in one tract is ordered.[87] Where the interest of the deceased mortgagor's wife has been severed and vested in her, the court may order that the remaining portion be first sold.[88] So also where the mortgagor has been divested of his interest in a part of the land, the balance may be sold first.[89]

A copy of the decree need not be attached to the order for sale, nor does the absence of the signature of the presiding judge give grounds for setting the sale aside.[90]

Notice.[91]—The published notice of the sale need not state the amount decreed to be due on the mortgaged debt.[92] Objections to appraisement must be made before sale.[93] The appraisers need not be upon the lands at the time they make the appraisement, provided they are familiar with the premises.[94] The sale must be made in accordance with the terms of the decree.[95]

States when so provided in the judgment does not affect the validity of the mortgage sale.[97]

Where, owing to default of former purchaser, it is necessary to resell the premises, the sale is at his expense, but he cannot complain if at second sale it was not sold in separate tracts;[98] but where the setting aside the sale and the resale is at the application of the mortgagee, the purchaser cannot be held for any deficiency in price on the second sale.[99]

Confirmation and setting aside sale.[1]—In jurisdictions where a tender of the purchase price is a condition precedent to a suit setting aside sale, such tender is unnecessary where sale is made on credit.[2] The sale may be avoided or set aside in an action instituted for that purpose on account of the misconduct of the officer, or irregularities in making it, where the rights of the complainant were prejudiced thereby,[3] but it will not be set aside for mere irregularities not affecting the rights of the parties;[4] but where, however, there is a conspiracy to defraud and mislead the purchaser by having irresponsible persons bid in the tracts first offered for sale, it will be set aside.[5]

Inadequacy of price is not a valid ground for setting aside sale.[6]—Every presumption is in favor of the validity of an order confirming sale,[7] and mere technical objections to the order will be disregarded,[8] nor at the time of confirmation may the objector raise any questions than those as to the legality of the sale itself.[9] While as a rule objections to sale should be raised at the time of confirmation, yet a complaint in an action to set it aside, filed three days after hearing, is not of necessity barred by laches.[10] In New York, the failure of the court to confirm the sale does not invalidate it after the referee has issued the deed and received the consideration.[11]

ceiver may be appointed where the security is inadequate to apply the profits to the mortgaged debt.[14] The execution of a deed to a purchaser pursuant to a final judgment in foreclosure vests in him the legal title to the property if no redemption is made under the equity of redemption;[15] but prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, his rights are those of a lienor only.[16] Generally, the purchaser on foreclosure sale is held to receive "a good merchantable title,"[17] though where partnership property is foreclosed and the value of the interest conveyed depends on parol evidence, he may be relieved from his bid.[18] The purchaser at a foreclosure sale acquires all rights of the mortgagor at the time of the execution of the mortgage,[19] but often in railroad foreclosures by terms of sale,[20] or otherwise title is taken subject to liabilities of the mortgagor.[21]

Possession and restitution.[22]—After obtaining the title, the purchaser may maintain action for possession of the foreclosed property any time within the statutory period.[23] Where the sale is set aside and the purchaser is in possession, he has the estate of a mortgagee in possession,[24] and tender of the amount due is a condition precedent to possession,[25] and after possession for forty years, he cannot be compelled to restore the premises to the mortgagee.[26] A mortgagee in possession of property is entitled to credit for that portion of the gross rental he expends in permanent betterments, for taxes paid and interest thereon, but not for taxes paid by its supposed vendee; in the absence of willful or gross negligence, he is not chargeable for inadequacy in the amount of rents received.[27] He is not entitled to compensation for his care of the property,[28] but may have to account for the cutting of trees as waste,[29] and where the mortgagee in possession is the assignee of one having the right of possession, no accounting can be had.[30] A writ of possession is not exhausted by one execution.[31]

Only for balance remaining due after sale has failed to produce full amount found either conditionally at the time the decree of foreclosure and sale is entered, or after the sale and ascertainment of the balance due.[34] A statute abolishing the right to deficiency judgments does not apply to mortgages executed prior to its passage.[35]

Persons liable.[36]—There is no personal liability on a mortgage executed by an administrator under order of the court,[37] or a trustee,[38] and a decree against them can be for the sale alone.[39] Where the assumption of the mortgage debt is part of the consideration, the grantee is liable for any deficiency.[40]

Defenses.[41]—Where the mortgagee covenated with his assignee that there would be no deficiency, he is liable if one arises irrespective of whether his assignee neglected to force the mortgagor to keep the premises insured against fire.[42] It is a good defense to an action for deficiency that the principal debt is barred by the statute of limitations,[43] or that the judgment was obtained on service by publication.[44] Where the time for presentation of claims against estates of deceased persons is limited by statute, a deficiency judgment is barred;[45] but where the time for taking a deficiency judgment after foreclosure is limited by statute, does not apply where mortgage is void.[46] A deficiency judgment in another state is final as to the liability of the mortgagor and cannot be resisted on the ground that there is a valid defense to it in the state where it is sought to be enforced.[47] The order for a deficiency judgment, however, is appealable,[48] and is bad if granted against a defendant who has mortgaged his property to secure the debt of another;[49] but where a deficiency judgment is asked for in the complaint, the defendant who fails to answer cannot object at the time of motion for granting such deficiency.[50] A prayer for general relief justifies the rendering of a deficiency judgment.[51]

(§ 5) G. Receivership in foreclosure.[52]—A stipulation in the mortgage giving the mortgagee a lien on the rents and profits of the mortgaged land authorizes the appointment of a receiver in the discretion of the court without regard to the solvency of the mortgagor.[53] In the absence of such a stipulation, a receiver will not be appointed unless it is made to appear that the mortgaged premises are insufficient security for the debt and the person liable for the debt is insolvent or at least of very questionable responsibility.[54] A receiver should not be appointed without notice to defendants.[55] In California, the appointment must be asked for in the complaint and it will be set aside even where a provision for such appointment is inserted in the mortgage.[56]

The rents and profits of mortgaged property collected by the receiver are not to be applied to the debt unless so adjudicated,[57] and the mortgagee still has the right in most jurisdictions to the net returns from the property.[58] Where the appointment of a receiver is improperly denied, the mortgagor is none the less entitled to the rents and profits pending redemption.[59]

(§ 5) H. Distribution of proceeds and surplus.[60]—The surplus above the amount due the mortgagee with costs received at the foreclosure sale belongs to the mortgagor or his assignee,[61] and the court brings in all necessary parties to enable it to make a proper distribution of the proceeds.[62] The surplus on foreclosure of a mortgage after the death of the mortgagor will be treated as realty.[63] A provision in a mortgage executed by a husband and wife, directing the surplus to be paid to them, means only that payment shall be made to them as their several interests may appear, and is not a conveyance of any interest by one mortgagor to the other.[64]

If the wife's land is mortgaged to secure the husband's debt, on sale thereof after her death the entire value of the husband's curtesy interest therein should be applied to its payment in exoneration of the wife's interest.[65] If the debt was that of both jointly, then only half of it should be paid out of the husband's interest.[66]

Where the junior mortgagee redeems and thereafter makes a sale pursuant thereto and bids the amount previously deposited by him with the master, and such additional amount as in his opinion the value of the property justifies, and pays the costs in cash, and there is no excess over the amount due him under his decree, nothing remains for distribution.[67]

(§ 5) I. Effect of proceedings.[68]—On the foreclosure sale, the equity of redemption is terminated and there exists then only the statutory right to redeem.[69] The lien of the judgment, however, relates back to the date of execution of the mortgage;[70] but a purchaser under a questionable sale must show he took in good faith to claim statutory right to have the lien kept alive till judgment of foreclosure set aside.[71] When the mortgage is set aside as void, the judgment in no way prevents recovery on the notes.[72]

Persons not joined as parties.[73]—The title and rights of persons holding interests in mortgaged premises is not affected where they are not parties to the suit.[74]

Where, in such case, the mortgagee purchases at the sale, the proceedings amount to no more than an entry for condition broken, so far as the rights of parties not joined are concerned.[75] If the purchaser is a stranger, he will, as to them, take an equitable assignment of the mortgage.[76] Where the plaintiff as trustee forecloses a mortgage on property on which he holds a junior lien, he is bound whether he is a party or not.[77] A purchaser of a mortgage subject to a prior lien takes subject thereto, and only such estate as is covered by the mortgage.[78] The purchaser at an execution sale of the interest of a mortgagor where a judgment for foreclosure was entered became merely the assignee of the mortgagor,[79] and if there were subsequent judgment liens, the effect of the sale was to cut out the others.[80]

(§ 5) J. Costs.[81]—Where an administrator successfully defends an action against him for personal liability, he may recover costs.[82] As a general rule, interest is not allowed on costs.[83] Where the mortgage provides for the allowance of a reasonable solicitor's fee, the court should allow a reasonable amount for that purpose.[84]

§ 6. Redemption. Nature of the right.[85]—Irrespective of statute, there exists a right on part of the mortgagor to redeem from a mortgage; on sale under foreclosure, this right is terminated and there exists in its place only the statutory right to redeem.[86] The statutory redemption is from the sale and not from the mortgage,[87] and may be made on payment of the amount bid by the purchaser, with interest.[88] An equitable redemption by action is from the mortgage and not from the sale.[89] In such case, the party redeeming must do equity by paying the amount due under the mortgage.[90] The right to redeem is assignable,[91] but the right of redemption and the right of possession are separate rights and the sale of one does not carry with it by necessity the right to the other,[92] and the purchaser generally has no right to possession.[93]

Time.[94]—The right to foreclose and the right to redeem are reciprocal, and an action to redeem may be brought at any time before the statutory bar is complete.[95] A judgment creditor purchasing the rights of the mortgagor after foreclosure has the time allowed to him as junior lienor as well as in which to redeem,[96] and so the owner of a junior lien foreclosing the same still has the same period in which to redeem that he would if he had retained his lien in its original form.[97] Subsequent lienors should be given a reasoinable time in which to redeem.[98] Where an appeal is taken pending final judgment, the mortgagor may redeem.[99] A parol agreement extending time to redeem will be enforced;[1] but not if the proofs of such agreement are doubtful or conflicting.[2] After his time for redemption expires, a subsequent lienor cannot complain that one junior to him has redeemed.[3]

Amount.[4]—To redeem, the whole amount due must be tendered,[5] and if the purchaser of the certificate of sale takes wrongful possession of the property, the rents and profits may be deducted from the amount necessary to redeem.[6] Junior mortgagees not made parties to the foreclosure proceedings are only bound to pay the purchaser the amount due on the mortgage under which he purchased, and not the costs of such foreclosure.[7]

Where each of several conveyances was a separate transaction, each may be redeemed separately on paying the amount it was given to secure.[8]

Interest must be paid from the time the security is given, where the bar of limitations against the debt has been waived.[9]

Who may redeem.—A judgment lienor[10] or junior mortgagee may redeem.[11] The rights of subsequent lienors to redeem are not affected by a foreclosure under a prior mortgage to which they were not made parties.[12]

The grantee of the mortgagor's interest in the standing timber on an estate has a right to redeem from the mortgage,[13] but the purchaser at a foreclosure sale who fails to record his certificate has no right to redeem from a creditor who has redeemed from the mortgage.[14] A creditor secured by a trust deed who agrees to bid in a portion of the property and hold it subject to the debtor's right to redeem cannot avoid the contract on the ground that the debtor intended thereby to defraud other creditors where the latter retained sufficient property to satisfy the other claims.[15]

The owner of an undivided interest may redeem,[16] but must redeem the land sold as an entirety.[17]

The right to redeem from a deed absolute in form survives,[18] and the equity of redemption is an estate in land which descends to the heir.[19] At common law, the administrator could not redeem, but he has by statute in many states been given the right to do so.[20] In such case, he need not take out a license to sell realty, but if he does not do so, the result inures exclusively to the benefit of the widow and heirs.[21]

One purchasing land at a foreclosure sale under an agreement with the owner whereby he is to reconvey it to the latter on his refunding the purchase price will be deemed a trustee for his benefit, the deed being treated merely as security for the loan, and the contract will be specifically enforced.[22] A provision for forfeiture, in case of nonpayment, in a contract to reconvey which is in fact a defeasance in a transaction amounting to a mortgage, does not deprive the instruments of their mortgage character, or cut off the right to redeem.[23]

Mode.[24]—The redemption must be made to the persons to whom the interest and principal are due and not to one alone.[25] Where the statute provides that the redemption money may be paid to the clerk of the court, alleged evasion by the purchasers is no ground for extending time of redemption.[26] A tender of the required amount would seem good.[27] Land sold separately may be redeemed separately.[28]

Action to redeem.[29]—A bill to redeem from a deed absolute in form is one for relief against fraud, and not one dealing with the title to an estate in land.[30] Hence it may be entertained, though the land is outside the state, particularly where the deed was made within the state and both parties were citizens thereof.[31]

A purchaser at a foreclosure sale is not entitled to improvements made after the action to redeem commenced,[32] and if defeated, he is not entitled to interest pending the decree.[33]

The register's conclusions of fact as to the value of the use of the premises are presumed to be correct and will not be disturbed when based on conflicting evidence where there is evidence supporting them from which different persons might draw different inferences.[34]

Effect.[35]—On redemption by the mortgagor, the effect is as if the sale had never been made,[36] and on redemption, what was before a secondary lien now becomes a first lien,[37] and this is true where the redemptioner is the purchaser of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor.[38] A junior mortgagee who redeems from the senior mortgage or pays it off thereby becomes subrogated to all the rights of the holder of the prior incumbrance.[39] In such case, the person discharging the superior lien will be treated as its purchaser or assignee, unless the facts show that it was intended as an absolute payment.[40]

The redemption by one of several mortgagors inures to the benefit of all;[41] but this rule does not hold where the right of redemption was expressly given by judicial decree.[42]

By the acceptance of the redemption money, the purchaser is estopped from objecting to the redemption,[43] and so where the redemption is premature and the purchaser accepts the amount due, the redemptioner becomes the equitable assignee of the purchaser's rights which will in due course ripen into title.[44]

Note: It is the general rule that corporations formed under the laws of one state may carry on business in another. Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [U. S.] 519. This rule includes corporations which, though authorized to act in the states where they are chartered, transact the greater part of their

A corporation created by Federal laws is a domestic corporation of each state where it is engaged in business.[51] Two corporations, incorporated in different states, but conducting a business as one, remain dual in character; and neither one of the states nor the corporations themselves can make them one and a citizen of the other state, for jurisdictional purposes.[52] Compliance with statutory conditions by a foreign corporation does not make it a domestic corporation.[53]

Statutory regulations.[54]—Except as to matters of interstate commerce,[55] statutory requirements prescribed by law as conditions on which foreign corporations may do business in the state are discretionary with the state,[56] and statutes prescribing such conditions are valid[57] and do not conflict with the power of congress to regulate interstate commerce,[58] even though applied to corporations engaged solely in interstate commerce;[59] and a foreign corporation cannot be heard to question their constitutionality.[60]

tions have failed to appoint an agent for that purpose as required by law operate until debts of the corporation to citizens are paid, even though the corporation may have ceased to do business in the state.[63]

The question whether a foreign corporation is doing business in the state, within the meaning of regulatory statutes, must be decided by reference to the facts of each particular case[64] and to the particular statute involved. Illustrative holdings are given in the notes.[65] The question is one of general law.[66]

940. They do not prevent enforcement of contracts made prior to their enactment. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Lenz, 86 App. Div. 451, 83 N. Y. S. 841. Act May 8, 1901, (P. L. 150), requiring payment of bonus of ⅓ of one per cent. on capital of foreign corporations actually employed in Pennsylvania, has prospective operation only. Commonwealth v. Danville Bessemer Co., 207 Pa. 302, 56 A. 871.

63. Applied to Pub. Laws 1901, p. 66, § 5. Fisher v. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 667.

64. Whether a foreign corporation is doing business in the state must be proven by showing what was done, not by the conclusion of an agent of the corporation. Huey Co. v. Rothfeld, 84 N. Y. S. 883. The question of fact, whether a corporation was doing business in a state at a given time, is for the jury. Audenried v. East Coast Mill. Co., 124 F. 697.

65. Held within the statute: Keeping goods in another state to be sold there by a factor. United States Rubber Co. v. Butler Bros. Shoe Co., 132 F. 398. Proof that a foreign corporation was doing business in the state through agents who had an established place of business therein, and not through drummers, is sufficient to sustain a prosecution for the penalty prescribed for doing business in the state without filing the statement required by Ky. St. 1903, § 571. Commonwealth v. Parlin & Orendorff Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 791. A New Jersey corporation, having its principal office in New York city, engaged in buying and selling stocks and bonds, held to employ capital in New York and to be liable to a license tax thereon. People v. Mills, 90 App. Div. 560, 86 N. Y. S. 386. Maintaining resident agents who solicit orders and to whom goods are shipped for delivery. John Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland [Kan.] 76 P. 863.

Held not within the statute: Merely making a contract with a resident company for the sale by it of cement made by a foreign corporation, no sales being made. Commercial Wood & Cement Co. v. Northampton Portland Cement Co., 87 App. Div. 633, 84 N. Y. S. 38. Making of contract and bond by foreign book corporation with State Text-Book Commission held not a doing of business prohibited by Kansas statutes. The text-book law invites foreign corporations to bid for such contracts. State v. American Book Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 411. The mere taking of a note in Pennsylvania by a North Carolina corporation which had not complied with Pennsylvania statutes, while an act of business, was held not a transaction prohibited and declared void in Pennsylvania so as to be unenforceable in New Jersey. Alleghany Co. v. Allen, 69 N. J. Law, 270, 55 A. 724. The fact that a corporation engaged exclusively in selling goods in foreign countries maintained headquarters in New York did not change the nature of the business from one essentially foreign to one transacted in the state, so as to make it liable to a license tax on its capital, there being actually no capital employed in New York. People v. Miller, 90 App. Div. 545, 85 N. Y. S. 849. See Licenses, 2 Curr. L. 730; Taxes, 2 Curr. L. 1786. An agent of a foreign corporation had an office in New York, but did not have exclusive control of its business, kept no accounts, and made no sales, simply reporting business to the home office in Philadelphia. A carload of coal, first sold to a nonresident and refused, was then sold to a resident. Held, the corporation was not doing business in the state, and could recover for the coal, though it had not complied with statutory conditions. Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 93 App. Div. 303, 87 N. Y. S. 869. A corporation chartered in New Jersey to transport and mine coal is not "doing business" in Pennsylvania, within the latter's statutes, by making a loan in that state; and it may foreclose a mortgage therein without performing the statutory conditions for doing business in the state. New York & S. Const. Co. v. Winton, 208 Pa. 467, 57 A. 955. Purchase of note or mortgage is not doing business in the state so that failure to file copy of articles and appoint agent for service of process would bar suit thereon under Laws 1899, p. 100, c. 58. Keene Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Lawrence, 32 Wash. 572, 73 P. 680. Passively continuing to hold liens or titles acquired previous to the enactment of a regulating statute held not prohibited thereby [Rev. St. 1898, § 1770B]. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Bashford [Wis.] 97 N. W. 940. Nor prosecuting suit to enforce such liens. Id. Where rights were vested previous to prohibitory statutes, the mere succession thereto by a corporation formed by the consolidation of two others was no violation of such statutes. Id.

Note: In the case of John Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland [Kan.] 76 P. 863, the court takes an extreme position in construing the statute as applying to corporations engaged wholly in interstate commerce. By the great weight of authority "doing business in the state," within the meaning of the state statutes regarding foreign corporations, does not include the transaction of the business of interstate commerce. Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727. However, the court maintains that the restriction of the statute is laid not upon the doing of business, but upon the use of the local courts. That a state can lawfully make such restrictions upon foreign corporations not engaged in interstate commerce is not to be denied. To the contrary, foreign corporations cannot be excluded from suing in the state courts upon transactions of interstate

Isolated, independent transactions, incidentally necessary to the business of a foreign corporation as conducted at its domicile,[67] or single acts of business,[68] are held not to bring a corporation within the terms of such statutes; but a single transaction may constitute a doing of business in the state if it is of such a nature as to indicate a purpose to engage in business and make the state a part of the field of its corporate operations.[69]

The general law regulating foreign corporations does not apply to special kinds of corporations regulated by special statutes.[70]

Noncompliance; effect.[71]—Statutory disabilities for noncompliance with conditions can be enforced only by the state; but individuals may plead them in bar of actions brought against them.[72]

Contracts by foreign corporations who have not complied with statutory requirements are void[73] only if the statute so expressly provides;[74] but they are unenforceable in the state whose laws have been disregarded,[75] though they may be elsewhere enforced.[76] Compliance subsequent to the making of a contract may be sufficient to enable the corporation to perform it.[77] Noncompliance will not relieve the corporation from liability on a contract made by it.[78]

S. 611, it was held that a similar statute as applied to the facts in that case, did not interfere unlawfully with interstate commerce. But the decision rested upon the fact that the contract called for carrying on of business in Wisconsin, and it was left to chance whether the commerce should go outside of the state.—3 Mich. L. The fact that a corporation paid a license tax and received a certificate from the state after the time prescribed by the law could not be set up by a third party to defeat an action by the corporation. Only the state could object to the action on that ground. Dunbarton Flax Spinning Co. v. Greenwich & J. R. Co., 87 App. Div. 21, 13 Ann. Cas. 370, 83 N. Y. S. 1054.

Brewing company incorporated in Pennsylvania could not maintain action on sales in New Jersey prior to filing copy of charter, etc., with secretary of state, as required by P. Law] 56 A. 172.

76. The laws of one state declaring that its courts will not enforce contracts there made, of a foreign corporation, which has not complied with its statutes, but not expressly declaring such contracts void, do not prevent enforcement by courts of another state. Contract made in New York by North Carolina corporation which had not complied with New York statutes enforced in

Though failure to comply with statutory conditions may deprive a corporation, under the statute, from maintaining an action on contract, it does not otherwise deprive it of the protection of the law.[79]

After a foreign corporation has complied with a judgment of a state court, excluding it from doing business in the state until it had performed the statutory conditions, the Federal supreme court will not review the judgment on a writ of error.[80]

RIGHT TO TRANSACT BUSINESS; COMITY.[81]

[SPECIAL ARTICLE.]

Although a corporation may have the power or capacity to act in another state or country than that by which it was created, it does not follow that it has the right to do so whether the other state or country consents or not. On the contrary, it is thoroughly well settled that a corporation created by one state or country cannot act in another state or country without the latter's consent, express or implied. If no constitutional provision is violated, a state may exclude a foreign corporation altogether, and refuse to recognize it at all, or it may impose any terms or conditions it may see fit on allowing it to do business within its limits.[82] In some of the cases it has been contended that it is contrary to public policy for one state to recognize a corporation created by the laws of another state, and to allow it to make contracts within its limits and to maintain actions in its courts, but the contrary is well settled. By the law of comity among nations, which prevails also as between the states, a corporation created by the laws of one state or country is permitted to do business and make contracts in another state or country, and to sue in its courts, unless there is some express statutory prohibition or unless the recognition of the corporation by such other state or country is contrary to its public policy, as established by the general course of its legislation or the adjudications of its courts. This law of comity is not a vague idea only, which the courts may regard or disregard as they may see fit, but is a part of the common law, and is obligatory to the courts. They are as much bound to give it effect as they are to give effect to any other rule of the common law.[83] In accordance with this doctrine, a corporation may go into another state, if not prohibited by its constitution or statutes, and make any contract or acquire any property which is within the powers conferred upon it by its charter, and which a similar domestic corporation might make or acquire, and may, to the same extent as a domestic corporation, maintain actions to enforce its rights. And it is entitled, unless excluded by statute, to the benefit of all general laws of the state giving liens and providing remedies. Thus, a foreign corporation is entitled to the benefit of a statute giving any person a mechanic's lien, unless there is something to show an intention to exclude them.[84] The law of comity between states, however, does not require a state to allow a foreign corporation to do business or hold property within its limits, or require the courts to enforce its contracts made within the state, or otherwise recognize it, when to do so would either violate any express provision of the constitution or laws of the state, or be contrary to the principles of its common law, or contrary to its public policy as established or shown by the general course of its legislation or by the adjudications of its courts.[85] It has been held, therefore, that a foreign corporation will not be allowed to come into a state and exercise powers which, although conferred upon it by its charter, are denied by the laws or public policy of the state to its own corporations, and, if it attempts to do so, the courts must refuse to recognize it, or to enforce its contracts.[86] Nor will a foreign corporation be allowed to do business in a state where its law prohibits the formation of corporations of such a character or for such purposes.[87] An intention to exclude a foreign corporation, however, or to prohibit it from doing business and making contracts in a state, is not to be implied from the mere fact that the laws of the state do not provide for the formation of similar corporations, or from the fact that it permits corporations to be formed only under general laws.[88] The fact that the statutes of a foreign state authorize a building and loan association organized thereunder to have a larger capitalization than is permitted domestic associations does not make it contrary to public policy to admit the foreign association.[89] The law of comity does not allow one state to create and send forth corporations into other states to do business there, when the state creating them will not allow them to do business within its own boundaries. Where a corporation, therefore, was created by the laws of Pennsylvania, and its charter provided that it might do business anywhere "except in the state of Pennsylvania," it was held by the Kansas court that it could not do business in that state.[90] A comity between states does not require the courts of a state to recognize as valid a corporation formed by its citizens in another state, either in evasion or fraud of its own laws, or in fraud of the laws of the other state.[91] Whether such a step is a fraud upon the laws of either state depends upon the circumstances. According to the better opinion, the mere fact that the citizens of a state go into another state and form a corporation under its laws for the purpose of doing business as a foreign corporation in the state in which they reside, instead of incorporating under the laws of the latter state, does not of itself render the incorporation a fraud upon or evasion of the laws of either state, and is no ground for refusal to recognize the corporation and allow it to do business, like any other foreign corporation, in the state in which the corporators reside.[92] The question whether a corporation was formed in fraud or evasion of the laws of the state in which it was organized or of another state in which it seeks to do business, is a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact to be submitted to a jury.[93]

§ 2. Powers.[94]—Subject to the limitation that foreign corporations cannot do acts forbidden by law to citizens of the state engaged in similar business,[95] the powers of a foreign corporation are to be determined by the law of the state under which it was organized,[96] and which conferred its charter.[97] Statutes authorizing domestic corporations to exercise certain rights,[98] or providing for the dissolution of domestic corporations,[99] do not apply to foreign corporations.

City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co., 185 Mass. 500, 70 N. E. 1022. Whether a foreign corporation has been legally dissolv-

While the authority of a corporation to do certain acts can as a rule be questioned only by the state, yet where a foreign corporation seeks to divest title of an individual to property, the individual may deny corporate capacity to hold the property as a defense.[1]

The validity of a contract of a foreign corporation is determined by the law of the place where it was made,[2] not by its charter.[3]

§ 3. Actions by and against; jurisdiction of courts[4]—Right to sue.—A corporation, not exercising its corporate franchise in a foreign state, may sue in its courts, by virtue of comity,[5] without complying with statutory conditions imposed on foreign corporations engaged in business in the state.[6] But a foreign corporation which has subjected itself to the laws of a state by engaging in business therein must comply with such laws before it can maintain an action in the courts of the state.[7] For this purpose, compliance at any time before commencement of the action,[8] or before trial[9] is usually, though not everywhere,[10] held sufficient.

In New York, compliance with statutory conditions must be alleged in the complaint;[11] in Kansas, this is held to be matter of defense,[12] and defendant, asserting noncompliance, has the burden of proof on that issue.[13]

Liability to be sued.[14]—In New York, if jurisdiction is secured in the man-

ed must be determined by reference to the laws of the state where the dissolution was decreed and the jurisdiction of the court rendering the decree. Id.

1. Capacity of Kansas corporation, organized to deal in Oklahoma lands, to hold lands in Oklahoma may be there questioned by one whose title the corporation seeks to divest. Myatt v. Ponca City Land & Improvement Co. [Okl.] 78 P. 185.

2. Release of stock subscription to West Virginia corporation held valid under Kentucky laws, the corporation being engaged in business in the latter state. Scottish Security Co.'s Receiver v. Starks, 25 Ky. L. R. 1722, 78 S. W. 455.

5. New Jersey corporation permitted to foreclose a mortgage in Pennsylvania. New York & S. Const. Co. v. Winton, 208 Pa. 467, 57 A. 955.

6. The bringing of an action on a negotiable instrument is not doing business in the state so as to require a compliance with statutory conditions, and such action may be maintained by a foreign corporation, just as by a domestic concern [Code Civ. Proc. § 1779]. Citizens' State Bank v. Cowles, 89 App. Div. 281, 86 N. Y. S. 38. Foreign corporation may sue to foreclose mortgage in Nebraska, though it has not filed copy of charter in accordance with Comp. St. 1901, p. 433, c. 16, § 215. Holt v. Rust-Owen Lumber Co., 2 Neb. Unoff. 170, 96 N. W. 613. A foreign corporation may sue to enforce claims against citizens of Minnesota without complying with Laws 1899, p. 68, c. 69, which apply only to corporations doing, or intending to do business in the state. National Life & Trust Co. v. Gifford, 90 Minn. 358, 96 N. W. 919.

7. See ante, § 1. "Noncompliance; effect." An action by a foreign corporation will not be dismissed because of technical insufficiency of compliance, when an honest effort to comply with law has been made. Jordon v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 396.

8. Chattel mortgage enforced when foreign corporation had complied with Laws 1901, p. 233, c. 125 before bringing action. Hamilton v. Reeves & Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 418. Suit may be maintained by a foreign corporation on a contract made before act of Feb. 16, 1899, providing that contracts previously made shall be valid on complying with its provisions within ninety days, where the statutory requirements were met before suit was brought, but not within ninety days after passage of the act. Sutherland-Innes Co. v. Chaney [Ark.] 80 S. W. 152. Foreign corporation permitted to recover for goods sold by agent before filing of certificate, such certificate being filed before the order was sent in or the goods delivered. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Palmer, 84 N. Y. S. 141.

9. Obtaining required certificate from secretary of state before trial, but after commencement of the suit, was sufficient compliance with statute to permit maintenance of suit. Creelman Lumber Co. v. De Lisle [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 205.

10. Compliance before commencement of suit unavailing. South Amboy Terra Cotta Co. v. Poerschke, 90 N. Y. S. 333.

11. Complaint in action on sales in the state demurrable, the procuring of a certificate from secretary of state not being alleged [Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1364, c. 558]. Welsbach Co. v. Norwich Gas & Elec. Co., 96 App. Div. 52, 89 N. Y. S. 284.

12. Petition showed plaintiff to be a foreign corporation. Jordon v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 396.

13. Must prove that foreign corporation has not filed with secretary of state papers required by Gen. St. 1901, § 1283. Osborne & Co. v. Shilling [Kan.] 74 P. 609.

14. Note: Statutes in general terms authorizing suits against, or service of process upon, corporations, have in some instances

ner prescribed by statute, an action against a foreign corporation may be maintained by a resident on any cause of action,[15] and by a nonresident if the cause of action arose in the state.[16] A nonresident may sue a foreign corporation, in Texas, if the corporation is engaged in business in the state;[17] in North Carolina, if the cause of action arose in the state.[18]

Jurisdiction of courts over subject matter.[19]—Courts have no jurisdiction to compel, by mandamus, an inspection of the books and records of a foreign corporation, on application of a stockholder.[20] The courts of a state have jurisdiction over the property of a foreign corporation situated therein,[21] and, upon the necessary showing, may appoint a receiver for such property;[22] but a court will not appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation whose domicile and property are both without the jurisdiction.[23] Though a court has obtained jurisdiction, by appearance, of a corporation having no property in the state and transacting no business therein, it will not enter a decree which it cannot enforce against it.[24]

The liability of directors of a foreign corporation doing business in New York may be enforced in the courts of that state.[25]

been construed as applying to domestic corporations only. People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 24 Mich. 38. The decided weight of authority now declares otherwise, and maintains that such general statutes apply not only to domestic corporations but also to foreign corporations doing business within the state, and having officers or agents therein, upon whom service may be made. Eagle L. Ass'n v. Redden, 121 Ala. 346, 25 So. 779; Sill v. Bank of U. S., 5 Conn. 102; Gross v. Nichols, 72 Iowa, 239, 33 N. W. 653; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552, 37 N. W. 462; Societe Fonciere, etc., v. Milliken, 135 U. S. 304, 10 S. Ct. 823.—From extended note on "Jurisdiction of Foreign Corporations," in Abbeville, Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Western Electrical Supply Co. [S. C.] 85 Am. St. Rep. 905.

15. If on a cause of action arising outside the state, papers on which order for publication is sought must show that plaintiff is a resident [Code Civ. Proc. § 1780]. Haight v. Le Foncier De France et Des Colonies, 84 N. Y. S. 135.

16. Attachment against foreign corporation invalid because moving papers did not show plaintiff a resident, or that cause arose in state. Coolidge v. American Realty Co., 91 App. Div. 14, 86 N. Y. S. 318. Jurisdiction can only be secured in the manner prescribed by statute. Id. A foreign corporation held its meetings in New York, and defendant held certain stock as trustee for plaintiff. Held, plaintiff may maintain suit in New York to enjoin defendant from voting or transferring the stock, until plaintiff's claim as to ownership of the stock could be litigated. Harper v. Smith, 93 App. Div. 608, 87 N. Y. S. 516. Foreign corporation, holding meetings in New York cannot, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1780, be enjoined at instance of a nonresident from receiving or recognizing a vote of stock of a certain third person. Id.

17. Action in personam. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 433. Resident of Indian Territory injured in the territory, may sue railway doing business in Texas in the courts of that state. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 340. See, also, Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Keller [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 801.

20. A New Jersey corporation, doing business and having its records in Texas, can be compelled to produce them only by courts of New Jersey. Mitchell v. Northern Security Oil & Transportation Co., 44 Misc. 514, 90 N. Y. S. 60.

21. Their determination of rights relating to such property is binding on the corporation, thought there has been no service of process on it in the jurisdiction, if the statutory notice (Pub. St. 1901, c. 219, § 9) has been given. Suit by stockholders. Kidd v. New Hampshire Traction Co., 72 N. H. 273, 56 A. 465. Stocks and bonds fraudulently transferred by a foreign to a domestic corporation, and the right of action of a foreign against a domestic corporation, held property of the foreign corporation within the jurisdiction of the state. Id.

22. New York courts will, under certain circumstances, appoint a receiver of the property of a foreign corporation when necessary to protect creditors or stockholders; but misconduct of directors or officers is not a ground for such action. Phillips v. Sonora Copper Co., 90 App. Div. 140, 86 N. Y. S. 200.

23. As to domestic lands, complainants had an adequate remedy at law and so were not entitled to the appointment of a receiver. American Tribune New Colony Co. v. Schuler [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 370.

24. Court refused to continue an injunction against New Jersey and Louisiana corporations, restraining them from in any manner recognizing a cancellation of a lease; especially since plaintiff had commenced another action for a receiver in the Federal court. Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 44 Misc. 409, 89 N. Y. S. 1000.

25. A director of a foreign corporation may, in the state in which such corporation has its principal office and is engaged in business, maintain an action for an accounting against other directors or officers of the corporation. New York statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1782) providing for such actions, ap-

Service of process.[26]—Service of process on foreign corporations must be in the manner provided by statute.[27] If two methods are prescribed service by either is sufficient.[28] Service of process on an agent is service on the foreign corporation only when the latter has an office or property in the state,[29] and is engaged in business therein,[30] and the agent served has authority in law to receive process,[31] and ply alike to domestic and foreign corporations. Miller v. Quincy [N. Y.] 72 N. E. 116. New Jersey statutes making directors liable to the corporation for dividends unlawfully paid out of the capital stock cannot be enforced in New York, where the New Jersey corporation is engaged in business, since the liability is not contractual, and does not grow out of common law principles. Hutchinson v. Stadler, 85 App. Div. 424, 83 N. Y. S. 509. But such a liability may be enforced under similar New York laws, by virtue of the New York statute providing that a foreign corporation, engaged in business in that state, may enforce such liability against its directors to the same extent as it could be enforced against directors of a domestic corporation. Id.

26. See 2 Curr. L. 49.

27. Summons not served in accordance with P. L. 1903, p. 255, § 17; no jurisdiction acquired. Roake v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Law] 57 A. 160. Where petition described defendant as a New York corporation, and the sheriff undertook to serve the writ as upon a foreign corporation, his return need not describe defendant as a foreign corporation. Newcomb v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1069. Where service of process is by a trick, the court does not acquire jurisdiction. Frawley v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 124 F. 259.

28. Service of process on a foreign fraternal beneficial association may be either on a local agent under general laws regulating service on foreign corporations, or the insurance commissioner, under Laws 1899, p. 195, c. 115. Bankers' Union of the World v. Nabors [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 91. Under Pub. Laws 1901, p. 66, c. 5, providing for service on the secretary of the corporation commission, when a foreign corporation doing business in the state has no agent therein for service of process, and acts 1899, p. 175, c. 54, § 64, relating to foreign insurance companies, service on a foreign insurance company may be by service on the secretary of the corporation commission or on the insurance commissioner. Fisher v. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co. [N. C.] 48 S. E. 667.

29. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 432, subd. 3, service upon an officer or managing agent is authorized only when the corporation has property in the state. Fontana v. Post Print. & Pub. Co., 87 App. Div. 233, 84 N. Y. S. 308.

30. Central Grain & Stock Exch. of Hammond v. Board of Trade of Chicago [C. C. A.] 125 F. 463. Service on the president of an Illinois corporation, who was temporarily in Iowa attempting to settle the difference, was not valid service on the corporation, when it had no property, office or agency in Iowa, and did no business there. Louden Machinery Co. v. American Malleable Iron Co., 127 F. 1008. Service on assistant secretary, resident in Pennsylvania, of a Virginia railway corporation, was not service on the latter so as to give Federal court for Pennsylvania jurisdiction; it being held that such corporation was not doing business in Pennsylvania. Earle v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 127 F. 235. Pennsylvania casualty company negotiated, by mail, four policies in Wisconsin, the business connected therewith being all done at home office. Held, not a sufficient transaction of business in Wisconsin. Frawley v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 124 F. 259. Jurisdiction of a foreign corporation cannot be acquired by service of process on agents or officers in a state in which the corporation has no office and transacts no business. Martin v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., 130 F. 394. Where a corporation had made a number of sales in Connecticut, besides the contract in issue, it was held to be doing business in that state, though it had no permanent office or agent there, so that service on an authorized agent in the state on business of the corporation gave the court jurisdiction. New Haven Pulp & Board Co. v. Downingtown Mfg. Co., 130 F. 605. Railway corporation was not doing business in the state by maintaining an agent there to advertise the advantages of the road. Rich v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 34 Wash. 14, 74 P. 1008. Service of subpoena on vice president of foreign corporation, casually in the state on private business, ineffective to give jurisdiction; being harmless, motion to set service aside denied. Puster v. Parker Mercantile Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 599, 55 A. 817. An agent having only such powers as the statute requires to be conferred on him by a foreign corporation, as a condition upon which it may do business in the state, cannot accept service for the corporation in any action not concerning its property in the state, or business or transactions therein. Thus foreign corporation could not be brought to Washington, by such service, to respond to personal injury action. Olson v. Buffalo Hump Min. Co., 130 F. 1017.

31. Central Grain & Stock Exch. v. Board of Trade of Chicago [C. C. A.] 125 F. 463. A plea in abatement to quash service on ground that person served had no authority must allege lack of such authority at the time of service. Scott v. Stockholders' Oil Co., 129 F. 615. Where service on a foreign corporation was on an alleged resident agent, a plea in abatement, by the person served, alleging the corporation had no resident agent on which service could be made, was insufficient, since it showed on its face that it was made without authority. Id.

Service on agent held sufficient: Service on qualified agent, temporarily in the state on business of the corporation. New Haven Pulp & Board Co. v. Downingtown Mfg. Co., 130 F. 605. New York mining corporation, maintaining its principal office in Washington, deemed to have consented to be bound by Washington statute requiring foreign corporations to have resident agents on service is at the corporation's place of business.[32] A corporation cannot defeat service upon it by service on a state auditor, as provided by statute, by removing its agents and business from the state.[33] A foreign corporation may, by laches and acquiescence in service, be barred from setting up its invalidity.[34]

Venue.[35]—A foreign corporation which has rendered itself subject to the jurisdiction of the court by appearing may plead its privilege of being sued in the proper county.[36] In Florida, suit against a foreign corporation may be instituted in any county where it maintains an agent or representative.[37]

Removal of causes.[38]—Compliance with statutory requirements by a foreign corporation does not make it a domestic corporation so as to deprive it of the right to remove a suit against it to the Federal courts.[39]

Limitations.—The right to avail of limitations is admitted by some and denied by some states.[40] Where a corporation sets up limitations, it must affirma-whom service of process may be made; and service on secretary at such office conferred jurisdiction in Washington to enforce liability for negligence in Idaho. Smith v. Empire State-Idaho Min. & Development Co., 127 F. 462. Massachusetts statute (Rev. Laws Mass. c. 170, §§ 2, 3), authorizing service of writ in a cross action, on the attorney of a nonresident appearing in the state to prosecute the original action, is applicable to the case of a foreign corporation appearing to prosecute an action in the Federal court. Arkwright Mills v. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co., 128 F. 195. Where a foreign corporation does business in the state through another corporation, the latter may be served with process as the agent of the foreign corporation. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 570. Newcomb v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1069. President of local lodge of fraternal association held "local agent" of the association within the meaning of a statute permitting service of process on local agents of foreign corporations. Bankers' Union of the World v. Nabors [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 91. Return showing service on "vice-president and managing agent" of foreign corporation sufficient under B. & C. Comp. § 55, when person served was in fact resident managing agent. Coast Land Co. v. Oregon Pac. Colonization Co., 44 Or. 483, 75 P. 884.

Held insufficient: A traveling agent, in the state soliciting advertisements for McClure's magazine is not transacting the business of the McClure Co. so that service upon him is service on the corporation, under Minnesota statutes. Boardman v. McClure Co., 123 F. 614. Bank cashier collecting one renewal premium for Pennsylvania Casualty Co. was not authorized. Wisconsin agent to receive process, notwithstanding Rev. St. Wis. 1898, §§ 2637, 1977. Frawley v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 124 F. 259. A traveling salesman and solicitor for a certain territory in Missouri of a foreign portrait concern held not an agent to receive process for the corporation under Missouri statutes. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 F. 831. An agent authorized to solicit advertising for a foreign publisher was not a managing agent authorized to receive process, within Code Civ. Proc. § 432. Fontana v. Post Print. & Pub. Co., 87 App. Div. 233, 84 N. Y. S. 308. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1223, providing for service of process on officers, general manager, or "any local agent," service on "an agent for the state" was not valid. Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Anderson [Tex.] 79 S. W. 516. A mere advertising agent for a foreign railway corporation with no power to sell tickets, make rates, or otherwise obligate the company, could not receive process for it. Rich v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 34 Wash. 14, 74 P. 1008.

32. A return showing service on an agent not at the place of business held insufficient. Newcomb v. New York, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1069.

33. Arkansas statute (Acts 1901, p. 52, § 1), providing for service of process against foreign corporations by service on the state auditor, is constitutional as to causes of action accruing while the corporation was doing business in the state after the passage of the act. Davis v. Kansas & Tex. Coal Co., 129 F. 149.

34. Where corporation knew of service and thereafter attempted to arrange differences with plaintiff, and moved to vacate the decree for invalidity of service four months thereafter, it was held barred by laches. Coast Land Co. v. Oregon Pac. Colonization Co., 44 Or. 483, 75 P. 884.

35. See 2 Curr. L. 47.

36. Where a foreign and a domestic railway corporation were co-defendants, they could not, against objection, be sued in a county in which neither had a line of railroad. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Forbis [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1074.

37. Rev. St. 1892, § 1001. Hocker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Fla.] 34 So. 901.

40. Admitted in Nebraska and Iowa. Taylor v. Union Pac. R. Co., 123 F. 155. Denied in Kansas. Williams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Kan.] 74 P. 600. If the right be claimed in respect of a cause of action of foreign origin, but transitory nature, the limitation of the forum applies, and where the law of the forum attaches the same limitation to foreign causes of action as that tively plead and prove that during the period it maintained an agent in the state on whom process could be served.[41] The New York statute providing that actions to enforce common law or statutory liabilities of directors or stockholders of a moneyed corporation must be brought within three years applies to actions of that character brought in the state against directors or stockholders of foreign corporations.[42]

FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.[43]

§ 1. Recognition and Mode of Proving (1466).
§ 2. Matters Adjudicated and Concluded by Foreign Judgments (1467).
§ 3. Actions on Foreign Judgments (1467).

§ 1. Recognition and mode of proving.[44]—The full faith and credit clause of the constitution and Federal statutes in pursuance thereof[45] establish a rule of evidence rather than one of jurisdiction.[46] In this sense, foreign judgments are entitled to the same faith and credit given them in the state where rendered,[47] and the presumptions indulged in support of judgments of courts of record are applicable to foreign as well as domestic judgments.[48] So when proper copies of the of the place of origin, it will be so applied in favor of the foreign corporation provided the foreign state is one which permits foreign corporations to plead the bar. Accident occurred in Iowa (2 years bar) was sued on in Nebraska (4 years bar) and law of Iowa was applied in favor of foreign corporation defendant. Taylor v. Union Pac. R. Co., 123 F. 155.

41. Taylor v. Union Pac. R. Co., 123 F. 155.

42. Held, also, that a Kansas trust company was a "moneyed corporation" within the meaning of the statute [N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 394]. Platt v. Wilmot, 193 U. S. 602, 48 Law. Ed. 809. Held, further that the double liability of a stockholder of a corporation, while contractual in nature, is a common law or statutory liability within the meaning of this statute; and the action to enforce it is therefor controlled by § 394, and not by § 382. Id.

NOTE. Conclusiveness of judgment rendered in foreign country: It is held in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 Law. Ed. 95 (opinion by Mr. Justice Gray) that an executory judgment rendered in a foreign country—France—in favor of a citizen or resident thereof against a foreigner is not in all cases conclusive against the latter in an action brought in his own country to enforce the judgment. The rule of reciprocity, as a part of international law, is adopted with respect to foreign judgments: that the same effect only should be given them as the courts of the foreign country allow to judgments of the country where the judgment in question is sought to be executed. Hence the case holds that a judgment rendered in France against a citizen of this country is only prima facie evidence of the justice of plaintiff's claim, in the absence of any statute or treaty on the subject, when suit is brought in this country, since by the laws of France, judgments of other countries are reviewable on the merits. The authorities are reviewed in an elaborate opinion. See, also, notes on the subject in Dunstan v. Higgins [N. Y.] 20 L. R. A. 668, and Brown v. Fielding [Conn.] 32 L. R. A. 236.

45. Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1, and Rev. St. § 905 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 677].

Note: See Monograph on "full faith, and credit" clause in IV. Colum. L. R. 470.

46. Note: While they make the record of a judgment rendered after due notice in one state conclusive evidence in the courts of another state or the United States of the matter adjudged, they do not affect the jurisdiction. A judgment rendered in one state does not carry with it, in another state, the efficacy of a judgment upon property or person, to be enforced by execution. To give it the force of a judgment in another state, it must be made a judgment there, and can only be executed in the latter as its law may permit. The essential nature and real foundation of a cause of action are not changed by recovering judgment upon it, and the technical rules, which regard the original claim as merged in the judgment, and the judgment as implying a promise by the defendant to pay it, do not preclude a court, to which a judgment is presented for affirmative action (while it cannot go behind the judgment for the purpose of examining into the validity of the claim), from ascertaining whether the claim is really one of such a nature that the court is authorized to enforce it. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 32 Law. Ed. 239. Thus the court will determine whether the claim is of a civil or criminal nature, since a judgment for a penalty is not enforced extraterritorially. Israel v. Israel, 130 F. 237.

47. A duly exemplified copy of an unsigned judgment rendered in Illinois held competent evidence in New York. Waters v. Spencer, 44 Misc. 15, 89 N. Y. S. 693.

48. Collins v. Maude [Cal.] 77 P. 945. The doctrine that the presumptions are that a court of general jurisdiction had jurisdiction in a given case, when the record does not disclose a lack thereof, and that a judgment in such case cannot be collaterally attacked, applies to foreign judgments. "Full faith and credit" clause of constitution, and Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1963, subd. 16, applied.

judgment records are produced, it is presumed that the foreign court, if one of general jurisdiction, had jurisdiction of the defendant.[49]

While the "full faith and credit" clause of the constitution does not require one state to enforce penal laws or police regulations of another state,[50] yet a judgment for a sum of money for a penalty prescribed by such laws is entitled to full faith and credit in a sister state,[51] though it is said that it cannot be made the basis of a claim in the Federal courts, not being a controversy of a civil nature.[52]

§ 2. Matters adjudicated and concluded by foreign judgments.[53]—Questions of fact or law determined by a foreign judgment cannot be re-examined in an action thereon,[54] but the defendant may show that the court rendering the judgment did not have jurisdiction of his person.[55] That the action in which a judgment was recovered was barred by the statute of limitations is no defense in an action on the judgment in another state.[56]

§ 3. Actions on foreign judgments.[57]—The lex fori governs as to procedure,[58] and the action may be barred by the limitation statute of the forum.[59] The existence of the judgment sued on must be established by a properly certified transcript.[60] Such a transcript is admissible in evidence, though it does not bear a revenue stamp.[61]

Whether a state court had jurisdiction of a foreign corporation in rendering a judgment against it is a Federal question, and in actions on such judgments in another state, the decisions of the United States supreme court, and not of the state court, must be followed.[62]

An action in debt may be maintained in one state to recover judgment on a decree for alimony rendered in a sister state,[63] though the sum adjudged is an accruing allowance.[64] So much of a claim for alimony as has been reduced to judg-

FORESTRY AND TIMBER.

§ 1. Protection and Regulation of Forests and Trees (1468).
§ 2. Logs and Lumbering; Booms and Flotage (1468). Liens (1471).

§ 1. Protection and regulation of forests and trees.[68]—Statutes in some states provide for the protection and preservation of ornamental and shade trees in highways,[69] but such trees being private property, their preservation cannot be compelled except on compensation to the owner.[70]

Cutting timber growing on another's land is in some states prohibited under penalty.[71] Plaintiff's ownership and lack of consent,[72] defendant's complicity,[73] and either willfulness or recklessness[74] must be shown.

§ 2. Logs and lumbering; booms and flotage.[75]—Standing timber is a part of the realty.[76] Hence contracts conveying it must be executed with the same formalities required in the conveyance of real estate.[77] An attempted sale by parol amounts to a license,[78] and as such is revocable except in so far as it has been acted on.[79] The right to go on the land to fell trees and the payment of the purchase price do not operate as part performance of a parol contract for the sale of timber so as to take it out of the statute of frauds.[80]

Stumpage contracts, therefore are executory contracts for the sale of the timber after cutting, as personal property, coupled with a license to enter and cut.[81] A provision in such a permit that the grantor shall retain full and complete ownership and control of all the timber until a settlement shall be had and the agreed stump-age be paid amounts to a warranty of title on his part,[82] and one who represents to another that he owns standing timber and gives him a license to cut it is estopped to deny that he has title after the timber is cut.[83] One having a tax deed fair on its face of land from which timber is cut, and possession of lumber made therefrom, has sufficient title to maintain replevin therefor against a mere trespasser who takes possession of it.[84] In such case, the fact that the land was in possession of a stranger is immaterial.[85]

The timber must be cut and removed within the time fixed by contract,[86] but equity may relieve from a failure to do so on a proper showing, as where such action was prevented by the other party.[87] A conveyance of all the timber on a certain tract of land of and above a certain size when cut, which gives the purchaser a certain time in which to cut and remove the same, includes all timber attaining the specified size within such time.[88] In the absence of a local or general custom to the contrary, a contract for the sale of timber of and above a certain number of inches in diameter requires a measurement from outside to outside, including the bark,[89] and a standing tree must be measured at the stump.[90] An agreement that timber sold shall be measured by a certain rule will be enforced without regard to customary deviations therefrom.[91] Under a contract giving the purchaser a specified time in which to cut and remove the timber, the cutting need not be continuous.[92]

Under a contract for the sale of trees of specified sizes on a tract of land, those included to be ascertained by subsequent tests, the vendee takes title to no particular trees.[93]

On a sale of growing timber, if the purchase is per acre, a deficiency in the number of acres may be apportioned in the price, even though both parties have an equal opportunity to judge of the acreage and act in good faith.[94] If in such case a part of the purchase price is paid in advance and, on a survey in accordance with the terms of the contract, it appears that the price of the actual number of acres contained in the tract is less than the sum so paid, the vendee may recover the difference.[95]

82. Is assertion of title and as effectual to create warranty as actual possession. Pierce v. Banton, 98 Me. 553, 57 A. 889. In case the grantor has not good title and the logs are replevied by the true owner, the measure of damages is their value at the time when and the place where they were replevied, together with all costs to which the grantee was subjected in the replevin suit, less the stumpage price, with interest on the balance from the date of the taking. While severed timber becomes personalty, the title still remains in the owner of the land,[96] who may maintain replevin therefor or for lumber manufactured therefrom,[97] even though it cannot be identified because it has been intermingled with other lumber of the same kind and value.[98]

The ordinary rules in regard to interpretation,[99] rescission,[1] abandonment,[2] and modification of contracts, apply to those for the sale of timber.[3]

The determination of what is dead and down timber within the meaning of a contract for the cutting of logs on an Indian reservation involves the exercise of judgment and discretion,[4] and when such discretion has been honestly exercised by the agents to whom the supervision of the cutting has been intrusted, their action is binding on the government.[5] A provision that the contract shall be forfeited in case the vendee fails or refuses to pay all of the purchase money within a specified time is a reservation for the vendor's benefit and may be waived by him.[6]

Two suits to recover different instalments on a timber contract are properly consolidated.[7] Since a deed to land constitutes prima facie evidence of title thereto and to the logs cut therefrom in the grantee, the burden of showing the contrary is on the one alleging it.[8]

The ordinary rules as to the admissibility of evidence[9] and as to the sufficiency and effect of the verdict and findings apply. Particular illustrations will be found in the notes.[10]

The measure of damages for breach of a contract to furnish sufficient logs to supply a sawmill is the loss of profits which the owner of the mill would have realized had the contract been carried out.[11]

Raftage and boomage are charges incident and necessary to the delivery of logs, which must be paid before possession can be obtained.[12] "Raftage" is the expense of floating and running logs.[13] "Boomage" is a fixed charge on logs payable at the place of delivery.[14]

Liens.[15]—Statutes giving laborers engaged in the manufacture of lumber a lien thereon for their wages will be liberally interpreted.[16] Receipts by laborers merely acknowledging receipt in full for all services performed on certain logs do not amount to a release of their lien on the lumber manufactured during the period of their service.[17] Slabs are not included within the terms of a statute giving a lien on lumber and timber.[18]

A sawmill man's lien can be enforced only when the evidence establishes that the party claiming it has substantially complied with the terms of his contract.[19] In the trial of a proceeding to foreclose such a lien, the issue is lien or no lien,[20] and plaintiff cannot recover unless he produces evidence which will authorize the jury to find that he is entitled to a lien.[21] A finding in favor of one claiming a sawmill man's lien for a given sum is equivalent to a finding in favor of the lien set up, especially when such sum is the full amount demanded.[22] The better practice, however, is for the verdict to contain a distinct finding in favor of the lien as well as a finding of the amount due.[23]

One taking possession of lumber belonging to another has no possessory lien for expenses incurred by him in logging and sawing the same.[24] Possession is essential to such lien.[25]

In some states, parties furnishing supplies for use in a sawmill are given a lien on the mill and timber there manufactured for the purchase price.[26] It of course only attaches to timber manufactured at the mill for the use of which the supplies were furnished.[27]

FORGERY.

Elements of offense.[28]—To constitute forgery, there must be such a false making, with fraudulent intent,[29] as to make the instrument purport to be the act of another.[30] A forged writing need not be the counterpart of the genuine one,[31] nor such as, if genuine, would be legally valid.[32] If it is calculated to deceive, and is intended to be used for a fraudulent purpose, it is enough;[33] but an instrument invalid on its face cannot be the subject of forgery.[34] It is not necessary

NOTE. What instruments are subject to forgery: An instrument to be a subject of forgery must be such that if it were genuine it would have some apparent legal efficacy. Abbott v. Rose, 62 Me. 194, 16 Am. Rep. 427; Dixon v. State, 81 Ala. 61; Shannon v. State, 109 Ind. 407; Reg. v. Boult, 2 Car. & K. 604. By legal efficacy is meant that it may possibly injure another. People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 509; Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 33; Com. v. Linton, 2 Va. Cas. 476. It is not necessary that an instrument have actual legal efficacy in order to be a subject of forgery; it is sufficient that if genuine it might apparently have such efficacy, or serve as the foundation of a legal liability. State v. Johnson, 26 Iowa, 407, 96 Am. Dec. 158; Rudicel v. State, 111 Ind. 595. The writing being unintelligible and imperfect without reference to extrinsic facts, the latter must be averred, and the averment must show that the instrument has the capacity of effecting fraud. Hobbs v. State, 75 Ala. 1; People v. Farrington, 14 Johns. [N. Y.] 348; Abbott v. State, 59 Ind. 70; Dixon v. State, 81 Ala. 61. It is not, however, necessary that the instrument be perfect in order to be a forgery; it is sufficient if it bears such a resemblance to the document it is intended to represent as is calculated to deceive. State v. Ferguson, 35 La. Ann. 1042; Garmire v. Indiana, 104 Ind. 444; Com. v. Linton, 2 Va. Cas. 476; State v. Dousden, 13 N. C. 443; Peete v. State, 2 Lea [Tenn.] 53; Hess v. State, 5 Ohio, 5, 22 Am. Dec. 767; Com. v. Stephenson, 11 Cush. [Mass.] 81, 59 Am. Dec. 154. An instrument to be the subject of forgery need not be one upon which, if genuine, an action might be maintained. It is sufficient if it is one which could be used as proof either against the person whose act it purports to be or against any other person. State v. Boasso, 38 La. Ann. 202; State v. Johnson, 26 Iowa, 407, 96 Am. Dec. 158; Downing v. Brown, 3 Colo. 571.—From note to People v. Munroe [Cal.] 24 L. R. A. 33.

34. Written consent of parent to marriage that the instrument be full and complete on its face; it is sufficient if the known and accustomed dealings between the parties renders it complete.[35]

An order[36] or request[37] for money or other property, even though conditional,[38] is subject to forgery. In Texas, a will is not subject to forgery during the lifetime of the purported testator,[39] nor can there be any illegal uttering of the will during such time.[40] Statutory provisions must be consulted.[41] Forging and uttering are in some states separate offenses.[42]

To constitute the offense of uttering a forged instrument, the latter must be passed as genuine,[43] but the mere tender of a check is a representation that it is genuine.[44]

Defenses.[45]—That forger hoped for ratification is no defense,[46] nor is agency, the act being beyond the agent's authority.[47] Being assisted in the forgery does relieve accused from liability as a principal if he utters the instrument as true.[48]

The indictment.[49]—Intent[50] or facts from which it may be inferred[51] must be alleged, though the indictment is sufficient without naming the person to be defrauded.[52] Forgery of the entire instrument being charged, it is not necessary to aver that the signatures were forged.[53] The indictment must set out[54] or describe[55] the instrument. The latter being set out in full, it is immaterial what

47. Where the defense was agency, evidence as to certain efforts which defendant had put forth to sell lands of such makers about the time the note was negotiated did not tend to show authority to sign or dispose of the note. State v. Rivers [Iowa] 98 N. W. 785. See 2 Curr. L. 68, n. 16. Authorizing agent to procure money at a certain bank does not authorize him to execute a note to himself, sign his principal's name thereto, and raise money thereon by indorsing it to the bank, unless it was understood and contemplated by the parties that the money should be procured in that manner. 53. Giving instructions relating to forgery of such signatures is not erroneous. People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 P. 600.

54. Indictment setting out "raised" check and check before "raised" held sufficient. Franklin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 934. See 2 Curr. L. 68, n. 16.

55. An indictment charging the forgery of it is called.[56] Parts of the instrument constituting no part of the forgery need not be alleged.[57] The indictment must show that the act purported to be that of one other than defendant.[58] The indictment setting out a banking institution as payee on the forged note, it need not allege whether such payee is a corporation, partnership, or joint stock company.[59] The instrument not showing on its face that it is the subject of forgery, but such fact being capable of proof by extrinsic evidence, the extrinsic or explanatory facts must be alleged.[60] Forgery and the uttering of the instrument may be charged in the same[61] or separate counts.[62] Objection that there is a variance between the instrument proved and that copied in the indictment cannot be considered on appeal, the former not being set out in the record.[63]

Presumptions.[64]—Burden of showing intent[65] or want of authority[66] is upon the state.

Admissibility of evidence.[67]—A written admission is admissible.[68] Bad faith of prosecuting witness may be shown.[69] Evidence of other forgeries, while not admissible to show defendant's guilt of the crime charged,[70] is competent as tending to show defendant's intent or motive as to the forgery charged,[71] or to show a system.[72] This rule does not apply where the forgery is confessed.[73] Accused becoming a witness, isolated facts of falsifying are not admissible to prove his credibility.[74]

Writings of defendant and of the person whose signature is forged, when proven genuine, are admissible for the purpose of comparison by experts.[75] Under the common law rule, the only papers admissible for the purpose of proving by a comparison of handwriting that the alleged forgery was committed by defendant are such as are in evidence in the case for some other relevant purpose, and an indorsement on a school warrant issued by the school board of the parish, for a certain sum of money, payable to a certain person, sufficiently described the forged instrument. It is not essential to charge that the warrant was payable to order. State v. Woods, 112 La. 617, 36 So. 626. Indictment setting out forged voucher held insufficient in the absence of explanatory statements. Joiner v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 531.

which are admitted or proved to be in the handwriting or to bear the signature of the defendant,[76] or such as form a part of the record in the case of the genuineness of which the court may take judicial notice.[77] Where a comparison is permissible, it may be made by the court or jury, with or without the aid of expert witnesses.[78] Writings being admissible, enlarged photographs thereof are admissible.[79] In general, all material or relevant facts[80] tending to prove the commission of the act,[81] guilty intent or knowledge,[82] or the weakness of any defense, as authority,[83] are admissible. Letters pertaining to the case and directly traceable to defendant are admissible.[84] Wrongful exclusion of evidence is not reversible error in the absence of prejudice.[85]

Sufficiency of evidence[86] to show want of authority, see note.[87]

Trial.—The court may submit the alleged forged instrument to the jury to be passed on subject to the instructions.[88]

Instructions.[89]—The instruction must not be misleading.[90] An instruction substantially conforming to the language of the statute is good.[91] Defendant's con-

80. The forgery and uttering of the instrument being complete long before payment, the fact of payment is not admissible in evidence. Jonier v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 531. Proof of payment is not necessary to show inability to produce the instrument because of its loss or for other reason. Id. On trial for forgery, testimony as to transactions relating to certain debts of defendant to secure which notes were given, and as to dealings between defendant and her husband, requiring the execution of the note, was inadmissible. People v. Weaver, 177 N. Y. 434, 69 N. E. 1094. Where the defense was agency, testimony as to the amount of time which defendant had given to the business of such purported makers was incompetent and immaterial. State v. Rivers [Iowa] 98 N. W. 785. Testimony of witness as to what he knew concerning the alleged employment of defendant as agent is properly excluded, there being nothing to indicate that what witness did know was competent and material. Id. Testimony of prosecuting witness as to whether or not defendant called him by his first name, held irrelevant. Wright v. State, 138 Ala. 69, 34 So. 1009.

81. Evidence that the purported signer did not sign nor authorize the signature is admissible. People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 P. 600.

82. Forgery of an indorsement on a pension check, vouchers and postal card received at Pension Office held admissible. Withaup v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 127 F. 530. Forgery of a convict bond, the state may prove that, at the time the bond was received by the judge, defendant was indebted to the county on a judgment of conviction in a certain cause, which judgment the judge intended to describe in the bond. Crayton v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 839. Evidence that defendant had worked for the drawer held competent as explaining how he same to have the check, and being a part of what he said about it in response to the questions of the person to whom he passed it held admissible. People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 153, 73 P. 831.

83. The defense being authorization, it may be shown that defendant had committed other forgeries in the same person's name. Usher v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 309.

84. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 933.

86. See 2 Curr. L. 59.

87. The signature of one J. S. being forged to a demand on a city for work done, proof that a J. S. once lived at the address given, but could not be found, and that he had never worked for the city, and the testimony of one J. S. who worked for the city that he did not sign such demand, held sufficient to prove that J. S. did not authorize the signature. People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 P. 600.

88. State v. Hauser, 112 La. 313, 36 So. 396.

89. See 2 Curr. L. 60.

90. Where the necessity of proof beyond a reasonable doubt was emphasized in different paragraphs of the charge, the inadvertant use of the phrase "preponderance of evidence" in another paragraph while inappropriate, could not have misled the jury. State v. Rivers [Iowa] 98 N. W. 785. The evidence showing that the defendant represented in passing the check that the name of the drawer was signed by the latter's son, an instruction that, if the jury found that defendant stated to the person to whom he passed the check, that the drawer did not sign the check, then they should find defendant not guilty, was misleading, and properly refused. People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 153, 73 P. 831.

91. An instruction "that a malicious and guilty intent, from the deliberate commis-nection with the forgery being merely circumstantial, defendant is entitled to an instruction on circumstantial evidence;[92] but not where the commission of the offense is admitted.[93] Defendant being found guilty of forgery, failure of the court to instruct with reference to uttering is immaterial.[94] Erroneous but non-prejudicial instructions are not grounds for reversal.[95]

Punishment.[96]—A sentence erroneously imposed under the Michigan indeterminate sentence law for a term which the court was entitled to impose is valid, as against a writ of habeas corpus, to the extent of the minimum term imposed.[97] In California, on reversal of a conviction for uttering a forged check for insufficiency in the indictment, the defendant being in custody is entitled to a discharge.[98]

FORMER ADJUDICATION.

§ 1. The Doctrine in General (1476).
§ 2. Adjudication as Bar of Causes of Action or Defenses (1479). Scope of Adjudication (1482).
§ 3. Adjudication as Estoppel of Facts Litigated (1484). Matters concluded (1487).
§ 4. Pleading and Proof (1488).

To be distinguished from former adjudication are the doctrines that a decision of an appellate court is binding in all subsequent proceedings in the same case,[1] and that decisions on questions of law will be observed as precedents.[2]

§ 1. The doctrine in general.—The doctrine of former adjudication is that whatever matters have been finally determined[3] on the merits,[4] in any action or

sion of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another, is a conclusive presumption, under our law," is a substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1. People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 P. 600.

Interlocutory rulings not final: A ruling on an interlocutory motion or petition, e. g. for temporary alimony, if based partly on discretion or facts and not wholly on law is not adjudicative of facts involved. Sumner v. Sumner [Ga.] 48 S. E. 727.

Order overruling motion to quash attachment. Simmons v. Simmons [W. Va.] 48 S. E. 833. Orders in partition proceedings and decree of sale held not final. Reed v. Reed, 25 Ky. L. R. 2324, 80 S. Determination of matter by trial court on new trial does not render the question res judicata. Lusk v. Chicago, 211 Ill. 183, 71 N. E. 878.

The parties are not concluded as to questions which are left open by the appellate opinion, though passed on by the court below. Russell v. Russell, 129 F. 434. Where appellate court tries the case de novo. Gentry v. Pacific Live Stock Co. [Or.] 77 P. 115; Trotter v. Stayton [Or.] 77 P. 395.

Effect of suit or proceeding to correct proceeding[5] in a court having jurisdiction,[6] or before an officer or board exercising judgment: A suit to correct a mutual mistake in an instrument upon which judgment has been rendered prevents finality as to matters involved. Silliman v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 80. S. W. 651. Statutory right to new trial as to rights of title and possession does not prevent finality as to other issues. Gray Cloud Land Co. v. Security Trust Co. [Minn.] 101 N. W. 605.

A void judgment is no bar: Ludwig v. Murphy [Cal.] 77 P. 150.

Error does not prevent binding effect: In re Elting, 93 App. Div. 516, 87 N. Y. S. 833; Rankin v. Hooks [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1005; Lamb v. Wahlenmaier [Cal.] 77 P. 765; Clevenger v. Failure to appoint guardian: That the one against whom the judgment was rendered was an incompetent does not prevent the application of the doctrine of res judicata, even though no guardian or committee had been appointed. Sterling v. Sterling, 90 N. Y. S. 306.

Judgment of another jurisdiction. A Federal judgment is binding in state courts, though the latter would have otherwise decided the question involved. Rew v. Independent School Dist. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 802.

NOTE. As to binding effect of conclusions of law of another court: "The claim that a mere conclusion of law announced by one court with reference to a matter before it is not binding in a subsequent suit between the same parties involving the same matter is plausible only under a superficial conception of the principle of res judicata. It is not the findings of facts which constitute an adjudication, but it is the conclusion of the court as to the effect of those facts determined as a matter of law. It is the determination of the issues presented which constitutes the adjudication. That determination may consist principally of findings of fact which lead to the result reached or rules of law which are not disputed between the parties, or it may consist of conclusions as to disputed questions of law as applied to facts about which there is no controversy leading to the result announced. Every judgment necessarily involves the application of principles of law to the facts of the case. The dispute as between the parties may be as to the facts, or as to the law, or as to both, but the judgment is conclusive as to the entire matter involved; that is, as to the case presented, and not simply as to the particular question in regard to which the parties are in controversy. * * * Bissel v. 4. Judgment must be on the merits: Weidner v. Lund, 105 Ill. App. 454; State v. Hartford St. R. Co., 76 Conn. 174, 56 A. 506. Before the rights of the public can be concluded by any citizen acting as a champion of public rights, there must be a reasonably fair presentation of the case to a court of competent jurisdiction, and a consideration and determination of the matter by the court. Lindsay v. Allen [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 171. See 2 Curr. L. 62, n. 72. Decision that police officer's discharge was illegal, held not to be res judicata of subsequent action for salary. Aucoin v. Police Board of New Orleans, 111 La. 745, 35 So. 888. Reversal of judgment on one assignment without considering the other assignments is not res judicata as to the latter. Gage v. People, 207 Ill. 61, 69 N. E. 635. Two separate appeals being taken from the decree, the fact that the appellate court in disposing of one determines the other is not an adjudication of the latter. Probate Court of Westerly v. Potter [R. I.] 58 A. 661.

Dismissal, discontinuance or nonsuit not on merits: Nonsuit. Guthiel v. Gilmer, 27 Utah, 496, 76 P. 628; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 210 Ill. 342, 71 N. E. 371; Packard v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. [Mo.] 80 S. W. 951. Involuntary nonsuit if before cause is finally submitted. Hudson-Kimberly Pub. Co. v. Young, 90 Mo. App. 505. See 2 Curr. L. 62, n. 73. Dismissal. Maeder v. Wexler, 90 N. Y. S. 598. Dismissal on pleadings. State v. McEldowney, 54 W. Va. 695, 47 S. E. 650. Dismissal because petitioner for establishment of road failed to sign petition. Kirkhart v. Roberts, 123 Iowa, 137, 98 N. W. 562. Dismissal of application to open decree based on defects in answer tendered. Oakes v. Ziemer [Neb.] 98 N. W. 443. Voluntary dismissal on part of complainant. Lindsay v. Allen [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 171. Plaintiff announced in open court that it would no longer prosecute the suit. Logan v. Stephens County [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 109. Dismissal by consent. Lindsay v. Allen [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 171. Plaintiff's action dismissed for want of evidence. Hood v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 622, 47 S. E. 607; Goldman v. Tobias, 88 N. Y. S. 991. Dismissal of action because barred by lapse of time. Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund, Life Ass'n [Conn.] 58 A. 963. Action dismissed as prematurely brought. Lauer v. Smith, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 47. Suit by stockholders for benefit of corporation. The Telegraph v. Lee [Iowa] 98 N. W. 364. See 2 Curr. L. 63, n. 74-81. Dismissal of proceeding as brought under the wrong act. Lusk v. Chicago, 211 Ill. 183, 71 N. E. 878. Discontinuance before trial. Cook v. Lee, 72 N. H. 569, 58 A. 511.

Dismissal is res judicata on the questions actually determined: Dismissal of complaint, filed by trustee in bankruptcy to determine ownership of insurance policies alleged to have been preferentially transferred by the bankrupt, on the ground that the allegations were not true nor sustained by the evidence, an affirmative judgment being entered, bars subsequent action by trustee to recover fund. Engel v. Union Square Bank, 94 App. Div. 244, 87 N. Y. S. 1070. On an issue as to whether promoter had been paid for certain lots, dismissal of former suit, the answer in which showed that the value of these lots was included in the estimate be presented as a basis on which he was paid, held conclusive. Seacoast R. Co. v. Wood [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 337. Appellate court dismissing suit without an adjudication on the merits, the decision of the trial court on the merits is not res judicata thereof. The Telegraph v. Lee [Iowa] 98 N. W. 364. A case being dismissed, the record must affirmatively show that the merits were not considered. Dismissal of application to reopen decree. Oakes v. Ziemer [Neb.] 98 N. W. 443.

Judgment on plea in abatement is not: Because plaintiff had not paid the costs of a previous suit. Sweeney v. Sweeney, 119 Ga. 76, 46 S. E. 76. Demurrer to counterclaim as prematurely set up being conceded correct by defendant. Tyler v. Bowen [Iowa] 100 N. W. 505.

Denial of motion or application is not: Denial of mandamus. Hoffman v. Silverthorn [Mich.] 100 N. W. 183.

Decision of motion for leave to file a petition in the nature of intervention. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. American Loan & Trust Co. [Neb.] 100 N. W. 202. Motion to set aside order discharging receiver denied because not the proper remedy. Williams v. Des Moines Loan & Trust Co. [Iowa] 101 N. W. 277. See 2 Curr. L. 63, n. 82.

Summary refusal to allow petition exhibited and attached to motion to intervene to be filed. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. American Loan & Trust Co. [Neb.] 100 N. W. 202. Summary overruling of objections to discharge of receiver in prior action. Id. Denial of application for compulsory reference. Hart v. Godkin [Wis.] 100 N. W. 1057. Denial of motion of executor to compel his attorney to pay money into court. Reilly v. Provost, 90 N. Y. S. 591. Order to show cause in mandamus proceeding why money should not be returned. State v. Horton [Neb.] 99 N. W. 501.

Judgment on demurrer is not on merits (Probate Court of Westerly v. Potter [R. I.] 58 A. 661); but judgment on failure to plead over is (Lockhart v. Leeds [N. M.] 76 P. 312). See 2 Curr. L. 64, n. 85.

A judgment on demurrer, until reversed, concludes the parties upon all questions necessarily involved in the decision of the points raised in the demurrer. Georgia Northern R. Co. v. Hutchins, 119 Ga. 504, 46 S. E. 659. Is also conclusive of whether petition states a cause of action. Id.

Judgment on default is on merits: Third Nat. Bank v. Atlantic City [C. C. A.] 130 F. 751. Failure of a bankrupt to apply for a discharge from provable debts in proceedings under a petition in bankruptcy renders the question res judicata in proceedings under a subsequent petition. Kuntz v. Young [C. C. A.] 131 F. 719. Where a lease provided for the execution of a deed to the lessee upon its completion, held lessee being a party to a suit in ejectment, is bound by a decree pro confesso entered against him therein holding that he was only entitled to the property for a designated time, and is res judicata in a subsequent suit for specific performance. Hartman v. Pickering [Miss.] 36 So. 529. Defendant answering though not appearing, the court may render judgment on the merits concluding him on a counterclaim set up. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. Clark Pressed Brick Co., 126 F. 552.

NOTE: As to effect of consent judgments, see Jenkins v. Robertson, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 117, 122. See Kelly v. Town of Milan, 21 F. 842, 863; Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 113 U. S. 261; Hoover v. Garnishment: As to ownership of fund garnished. City of Wichita v. Rock Island Lumber & Mfg. Co. [Kan.] 75 P. 463.

Partition: Binds as to quantity of interest. Carter v. White, 134 N. C. 466, 46 S. E. 983. See 2 Curr. L. 62, n. 64.

Proceedings to open decree: Oakes v. Ziemer [Neb.] 98 N. W. 443.

Proceedings to adjust priorities in water: Held res judicata of volume awarded to a certain ditch. Platte Valley Irr. Co. v. Central Trust Co. [Colo.] 75 P. 391.

Supplementary proceedings: Order of justice to one, who on examination in proceedings in aid of execution, admits indebtedness to judgment debtor to pay the same to judgment creditor, renders the question of the indebtedness res judicata in subsequent action by judgment creditor to enforce such order. Carlin v. Hower, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 153.

6. Rodney v. Gibbs [Mo.] 82 S. W. 187; Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 132 F. 444. Though mandamus did not show that relator did not have an adequate remedy at law, held judgment of title by supreme court was res judicata in subsequent suit of trespass to try title. Tolleson v. Wagner [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 846. General judgment was rendered against town for work done on a public improvement instead of a judgment payable out of a special fund. Town of Cicero v. People, 105 Ill. App. 406. See 2 Curr. L. 61, n. 55.

Probate courts: Chadbourne v. Hartz [Minn.] 101 N. W. 68. Final accounting of a testamentary trustee. In re Elting, 93 App. Div. 516, 87 N. Y. S. 833. Decree of surrogate as to distribution of trust fund and discharge of executors held not res judicata of antenuptial contract over which the surrogate had no jurisdiction. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 44 Misc. 57, 89 N. Y. S. 699. The division of a testamentary trust estate into five separate trusts, disclosed in an accounting by the trustee and passed upon and approved by the surrogate over gated between the same parties. That service was legally made by publication does not affect the conclusiveness of the judgment as to questions actually decided.[8] The doctrine does not apply in a suit to set aside and reopen the judgment claimed as a bar.[9]

§ 2. Adjudication as bar of causes of action or defenses.[10]—As a general proposition, it is stated that to constitute a prior adjudication a complete bar to a cause of action or defense, there must concur, identity of parties;[11] identity of objection, is res judicata. Id. Proceedings brought by electric railway company to appropriate a right of way over tracks of steam railway. Dayton & Union R. Co. v. Dayton & M. T. Co., 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 329.

Distribution of a balance shown by the account of an executor, in orphans' court. In re Piper's Estate, 208 Pa. 636, 57 A. 1118.

See, also, critical note on decrees of distribution as res judicata, post, p. 1489.

As between courts of law and equity: Courts of law and equity having concurrent jurisdiction over a question, and such question is decided at law, equity will not re-examine it (Hofmann v. Burris, 210 Ill. 587, 71 N. E. 584); but the adjudication of a court of law does not bar the use of purely equitable defenses in a court of equity to enjoin collection of law judgment (Headley v. Leavitt [N. J. Err. & App.] 55 A. 731). Such defendant is not first required to test the correctness of the law court's decision by writ of error. Id. Judgment in law action based on the ground that plaintiff would be entitled to relief only in equity does not bar equitable suit. Johnson v. Amberson [Ala.] 37 So. 273. Judgment in suit to enforce a mechanic's lien showing on its face that plaintiff's right to recover for breach of contract and for work and materials, for which he was not entitled to a lien, had not been passed on. Koeppel v. Macbeth, 96 App. Div. 299, 89 N. Y. S. 969.

As between courts of different jurisdictions: The doctrine applies to an adjudication by the court of another jurisdiction than that wherein the second suit is brought. Hudson-Kimberly Pub. Co. v. Young, 90 Mo. App. 505. Judgment of Federal court held res judicata in subsequent suit in state court. Baldwin v. Rice, 44 Misc. 64, 89 N. Y. S. 738. Vice versa. Eau Claire Nat. Bank v. Benson [C. C. A.] 128 F. 277. See 2 Curr. L. 62, n. 60-62. A Federal court will not, however, treat the decision of a state court as res judicata where it would not so operate under the rule of the highest court of the state. First Nat. Bank v. Covington, 129 F. 792.

7. Patent officials: Decisions of the officials of the patent office as to the sufficiency of the disclosure in an original application to support the invention, defined in the counts of the issue of an interference, will be accepted as conclusive by the court considering the question of priority of invention (Stone v. Pupin, 19 App. D. C. 396), and also that the claims constituted a part of the invention intended to be covered by the original patent (Austin v. Johnson, 18 App. D. C. 83).

NOTE. Distinction between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel: "There is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand, and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action. In the former case the judgment, if rendered on the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action. It is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, concluding parties and those in privity with them, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose. * * * If such defenses were not presented in the action and established by competent evidence, the subsequent allegation of their existence is of no legal consequence. The judgment is as conclusive, so far as future proceedings at law are concerned, as though the defense never existed. The language therefore, which is so often used, that a judgment estops not only as to every ground of recovery or defense actually presented in the action, but also as to every ground which might have been presented, is strictly accurate, when applied to the demand or claim in controversy. Such demand or claim, having passed into judgment, cannot again be brought into litigation between the parties in proceedings at law upon any ground whatever. But where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined." See the leading case of Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, 24 Law. Ed. 195.

Failure to set up defense of adultery in divorce action does not bar action against third person for alienation of wife's affections. Knickerbocker v. Worthing [Mich.] 101 N. W. 540. Suit against one railroad for wrongful death does not bar suit against another railroad not a party thereto. Packard v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. [Mo.] 80 S. W. 951. One filing a motion to be made a party defendant but withdrawing it before trial is not bound by the judgment rendered in the case. Rieschick v. Klingelhoefer, 91 Mo. App. 430. Wife entering into defense of action of ejectment against her husband held bound by decree therein. Carpenter v. Carpenter [Mich.] 99 N. W. 395. Verdict of jury in attachment held not res judicata of a suit in equity by a third party who had an attachment suit pending against the same parties for the same cause at the time verdict was rendered. Ortiz v. First Nat. Bank [N. M.] 78 P. 529. See 2 Curr. L. 64, n. 87.

12. Rights under contracts: Settlement of accounts and discharge of guardian held not to bar surety on bond from enforcing a claim under indemnifying mortgage. Howe v. White, 162 Ind. 74, 69 N. E. 684. Judgment in favor of seller in action against buyer as to kind and quality of goods ordered does not bar subsequent action by buyer for the wrongful detention of goods. Minkoff v. Lipschuetz, 88 N. Y. S. 139. Judgment of foreclosure against plaintiff on notes given for purchase price of machinery does not bar plaintiff's right of action for breach of warranty. Standefer v. Aultman & Taylor Machinery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 552.

Rights affecting property: Judgment that telephone company had no right to erect poles and wires in street without consent of abutting property owner does not bar condemnation proceedings. New Union Telephone Co. v. Marsh, 96 App. Div. 122, 89 N. Y. S. 79. Mortgagee by taking judgment against the original mortgagors for the amount of the mortgage debt is not precluded from insisting upon foreclosure of mortgage. Civil Code 1897, § 848, as amended, did not apply to this case. Heintz v. Klebba [Neb.] 98 N. W. 431. Reversal of judgment against property owner as winner held not res judicata in an action to make the judgment against his lessees a lien on the property. Trout v. Marvin, 24 Ohio Circ. R. 333. Judgments that vendor of right to take ice from pond had right to draw off water from pond, and that vendee could not interfere with flood gates held not to bar action by vendee to restrain vendor from obstructing ditch by which water flowed into pond. McCollum v. Williamson, 96 App. Div. 638, 89 N. Y. S. 119.

Rights affecting stockholders: Creditor's suit to enforce stockholder's liability and suit by stockholders to have receiver appointed. Hamilton Nat. Bank v. American Loan & Trust Co. [Neb.] 100 N. W. 202. An order restraining the consolidation of corporations on the ground that the plan contemplated an excessive issue of stock is not res judicata against a consolidation under a plan eliminating such excessive issue. Pierce v. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelt. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 319.

Decisions on the pleadings: Dismissal of petition not showing that interests of tutrix conflicted with those of the minor, held not res judicata of a petition showing such conflict. Alba v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 112 La. 550, 36 So. 587.

13. Importers' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. Lyons [Pa.] 58 A. 148; State v. McEldowney, 54 W. Va. 695, 47 S. E. 650. See 2 Curr. L. 64, n. 91.

Rights affecting real property: Judgment in partition does not bar subsequent suit between the two parties concerning title to land not shown to be identical with the land which was in controversy in the partition suit. In re Simon's Estate, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 450. Ouster proceedings by landlord at instance of lessee against the latter's sublessee held not res judicata of the sublessee's action against the original lessee. Calvert v. Hobbs [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 681. Judgment against parties to contract holding it invalid held res judicata of right to recover rent under it. Cook v. Des Moines [Iowa] 101 N. W. 434. Suit for damages for maintenance of dam, held to bar similar suit for damages for maintenance of dam replacing the dam considered in the former suit. Stults v. Huntington Waterworks Co. [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 172.

Rights affecting personal property: Suit against nonresident sheriff for conversion of goods wrongfully seized and kept without the state does not bar replevin suit for such of the goods as are found within the state. Levy v. Solomon, 207 Pa. 478, 56 A. 1007. Judgment against railroad and shipper for destruction of storehouse does not bar action by railroad against shipper for loss of cars, both losses resulting from the same negligent act. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 A. 688. Where in an action for the price of goods the purchaser admits owing the seller a certain amount, judgment for the purchaser is a bar to the seller's recovering that amount and erroneous. Flower City Plant Food Co. v. Roberts, 81 App. Div. 249, 80 N. Y. S. 1060.

14. Is conclusive where same cause of action as for judgment in replevin (Ginsburg v. Morrall, 105 Ill. App. 213), or for an injunction (Maloney v. King [Mont.] 76 P. 939; Atlanta Trust & Banking Co. v. Nelms, 119 Ga. 630, 46 S. E. 851), is stated in second action as was set out in the former. Also dismissal of petition on general demurrer bars subsequent suit on similar petition stating same cause of action. Gunn v. James [Ga.] 48 S. E. 148. Judgment in suit to have mine location held void, held to bar suit to have property held in trust for plain-

Identity of parties[15] does not require that they stand in the same relation as plaintiff and defendant as in the former action,[16] nor that they be parties to the record;[17] but requires that they sue or be sued in the same capacity.[18]

Privies of a party are equally bound with him.[19]

The identity of cause of action[20] need only be substantial; thus one is not tiff, the same agreement and averments of fraud being the basis of both actions. Lockhart v. Leeds [N. M.] 76 P. 312.

15. See 2 Curr. L. 64, n. 90.

16. Owner setting up payment of mechanics' liens as a counterclaim to suit by building contractor held judgment for plaintiff was a bar to subsequent action by owner against surety on contractor's bond. Lamb v. Wahlenmaier [Cal.] 77 P. 765.

17. Rieschick v. Klingelhoefer, 91 Mo. App. 430.

18. Judgment against one as executor does not bind him when sued individually, Lauby v. Gill, 42 Misc. 334, 86 N. Y. S. 718. Action against one as maker of a note held not to bar subsequent action against him as a guarantor. Hill v. Combs, 92 Mo. App. 242. Judgment dismissing a bill by the United States to avoid, by way of forfeiture, certain patents of land issued in pursuance of the wagon road grant, is a bar to a subsequent suit by the United States against the same defendant to avoid the patents on the ground that the lands were within an Indian reservation. United States v. California & O. Land Co., 192 U. S. 355, 48 Law. Ed. 476. See 2 Curr. L. 64, n. 89.

19. Administrators: Administrator is in privity with his intestate. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank [C. C. A.] 132 F. 444. Judgment in suit by administrator concerning property of the estate binds the heirs as well as the administrator. Gunn v. James [Ga.] 48 S. E. 148.

Attorney and client: That one's legal adviser appears as amicus curiae in a suit does not make such person a party thereto. McWilliams v. Gulf States Land & Imp. Co. [La.] 35 So. 514.

Creditors and trustee in bankruptcy: A finding on a creditor's petition that a transfer by an alleged bankrupt was not a preference does not bind a trustee in bankruptcy subsequently appointed in another court, in a suit brought by him against the alleged preferred creditor to recover the property. In re Sears, Humbert & Co. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 275.

Grantees and judgment debtors: A voluntary grantee, with notice of the facts, is in privity with judgment debtor. Johnson v. Stebbins-Thompson Realty Co., 177 Mo. 581, 76 S. W. 1021. Grantees of a judgment debtor not parties to the action in which the judgment was rendered are not concluded thereby. Thompson v. Williamson [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 602.

Husband and wife: A judgment in favor of defendant in an action by a wife against a carrier for injuries does not bar an action by the husband for loss of her services. Brierly v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 58 A. 451. Judgment in favor of married woman for personal injuries is not conclusive of defendant's negligence in favor of husband in action by latter for loss of wife's services. Berg v. Third Ave. R. Co., 89 N. Y. S. 433.

Lienors: Judgment in action to quiet title is not binding on a judgment lienor not a party to the action. Jasper County v. Sparham [Iowa] 101 N. W. 134.

Manufacturer and user: Suit for infringement of patent by user of article, held not barred by an adverse decision in a suit against manufacturer. Eldred v. Breitwieser, 132 F. 261.

ject is regulated by statute,[54] or where the judgment constitutes a link in a chain of title,[55] or where the proceeding is in rem;[56] but this does not include judgments quasi in rem.[57] The person sought to be bound need not have been a necessary party to the former adjudication.[58] One voluntarily becoming a party to the litigation is bound thereby.[59] One protesting, by counsel, against a proceeding but not intervening therein, is not a party thereto so as to be bound thereby.[60] Appellant by dismissing his appeal does not in any way affect an intervener whose rights have been concluded by the judgment.[61] The parties must claim in the same right,[62] and it is immaterial what views the parties championed in the first suit.[63] One being dismissed from the action before final judgment, the latter is not binding on him,[64] and if dismissed by the final judgment, decisions in ancillary proceedings are not res judicata as to him.[65] Both parties must be bound by the former judgment,[66] and must have been and continue to be adverse,[67] though they need not occupy the same relation as plaintiff or defendant.[68]

71. Finding in suit to have deed canceled as fraudulent that it had never been delivered, held not conclusive in subsequent par-

but an issue being presented by the pleadings and urged by counsel, the decision of the court is conclusive, though it was not necessary to the decision.[72] The estoppel extends only to the facts as they were at the time judgment was rendered.[73] That the judgment might have been based upon a different ground does not affect its conclusiveness,[74] and being based upon two grounds, it is conclusive as to the existence of both or either.[75] The judgment, either expressly[76] or as a necessary implication,[77] leaving the matter open, the question is not thereby rendered res judicata. Provision in judgment in law court that it should be without prejudice to other remedies of plaintiff does not affect the conclusiveness, as an estoppel, of a former judgment in equity.[78]

§ 4. Pleading and proof.[79]—Former adjudication to be available must be pleaded,[80] though if not, the judgment is still admissible in evidence, but is not a conclusive bar to the action.[81] The former adjudication fully appearing in the complaint[82] or answer,[83] a party is not generally required to again plead the same. In such a case the question of res judicata may be raised by demurrer;[84] in all others it should be raised by plea.[85] Plaintiff cannot set up res judicata in his reply when to do so would render the latter inconsistent with the complaint.[86] The plea should refer to the particular suit relied on with such particularity that an issue can be drawn;[87] it must show the identities between the two actions;[88] and that there was a final judgment on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction.[89] Though failing in this regard, it may be amended providing that a new cause of action is not thereby set out.[90]

determining the scope of the former adjudication, the record controls,[92] but the record not showing this, it may be supplied by extrinsic evidence.[93] The decree being ambiguous or failing to show upon which of several issues it is founded, the opinion may be examined to determine what point was actually decided.[94] In order to sustain the contention of res judicata, the complete record of the former suit, including the judgment therein, should be produced.[95] Oral testimony of the trial judge six years after rendering of decree is inadmissible to show what was decided.[96] The effect of a former adjudication as conclusive evidence is not impaired by the fact that plaintiff offered other unnecessary evidence on the issue determined by the judgment, and did not offer the judgment until after he had rested.[97]

Defense being a former adjudication, it seems that the court should direct a verdict instead of refusing to proceed with the trial.[98] A question being res judicata, the remedy, in case of newly discovered evidence, is a motion for a new trial.[99] One cannot collaterally attack a judgment in order to prove that though the court had jurisdiction, there was in fact no trial upon the merits.[100] The institution of a former partition proceeding, no partition resulting, does not raise the presumption that the right to partition was then waived or decided adversely to the right.[101]

NOTE. What evidence is admissible to show the issues in the former suit: Upon this subject the decisions are exceedingly meager. The judgment record is clearly admissible, and if it speaks clearly it is conclusive. There are also other writings which, though they have not the verity of a judgment record are also admissible. Among these are the report of the judge who tried the former action, stating the proceedings there taken before him. Eastman v. Cooper, 15 Pick. [Mass.] 276, 26 Am. Dec. 600; Duren v. Kee, 41 S. 101. Miller v. Lanning, 211 Ill. 620, 71 N. E. 1115.

States and their being generally courts of record,[1] it follows that by their decrees made in the exercise of a proper jurisdiction, all matters necessarily involved are concluded as to every person on whom the decree operates just as judgments of courts of general jurisdiction are conclusive.[2] Because of the limited scope of the adjudication on partial distribution,[3] there can seldom be any adjudication of title.

The question of conclusiveness in its application to final decrees of distribution depends on a variety of circumstances. Among these are the character and kind of property on which the administration is had, and the kind and character of the things which distribution is to accomplish. In a number of the states, the personal representative has a statutory right to the possession and control of the real estate, and takes the rents and profits for purposes of administration;[4] but the title goes direct to the heir or devisee subject to this provision.[5] The personalty on the other hand is in the legal ownership of the representative and the legal title can pass to the heirs only by decree of distribution and transfer pursuant thereto.[6] Because of these facts, the jurisdiction of courts of administration is not generally extended to adjudication of real property titles, and it exists if at all usually by virtue of express statute.[7] But in those states which give the personal representative possession of the realty for purposes of administration, there are usually statutes directing the probate court to decree the persons entitled to the realty and order surrender of possession to them.[8]

While the decree of distribution declaring title to personalty is broadly speaking conclusive as to all parties interested as to everything involved therein,[9] great uncertainty exists as to the effect of findings of title in decrees for the delivery of possession of land to the persons "entitled."[10] There are cases which seem to hold that not only the right to possession from the representative and the question of heirship or deviseeship, but also the kind, quality and quantum of estate acquired are determined by such a decree and concluded as against all persons claiming under the decedent's estate.[11] In some states, the proceeding is by statute made a settlement of titles inherited.[12] Some of the courts call the distribution a proceeding in rem,[13] or in the nature of one in rem, whence they argue conclusiveness on all Questions of title cannot be passed on by orphan's court. Liddell v. McVicker, 11 N. J. Law, 44, 19 Am. Dec. 369. The decree admitting to or refusing probate is generally held to be prima facie and not conclusive as to real estate. Statutes in many states give it such conclusiveness after a stated time. See note to Sly v. Hunt [Mass.] 21 L. R. A. 683. Start, C. J., in Kurtz v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 61 Minn. 18, points out the fact that the courts of probate of Massachusetts, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota are courts of superior jurisdiction to sell land for debts by reason of a statute originated in Massachusetts and adopted in turn by the others; and by reason of the laws declaring such courts to be of superior jurisdiction respecting administration matters.

parties;[14] but unless the title as well as the possession has come into the representative or the court of probate for purposes of administration, it would appear demonstrable that the res is only the possessory right and not the title, and that the only question of title involved is that which must be decided before the representative can justifiably surrender possession.[15] The California cases are of doubtful if any value in other states as precedents on the present question, for there the statute is construed as authorizing an adjudication of titles which it declares to be conclusive, and the court of probate in that state is a division of the court of general jurisdiction.[16] Among the other states an extreme position seems to have been taken by Minnesota, but the cases in that state do not seem entirely consistent. The leading case in that state[17] declares that the decree is conclusive on real as well as personal property titles, but the opinion explains that the power to declare in assigning the residue, the persons entitled to the estate and the part belonging to each was given

In Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457, the court assumes that the decree would have become conclusive without an appeal saying "It is within the province of [our] court to define the rights of all who have * * * any interest * * * in the estate whether * * * present * * * or contingent." In Utah, the statute (Rev. St. 1898, § 3961) authorizes adjudication of titles between heirs and their grantees, hence an heir's assignee for creditors is concluded. Snyder v. 16. In Goad v. Montgomery [Cal.] 63 Am. St. Rep. 145, the court said: "Section 1665 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires the court, in making distribution of the estate, to distribute the residue of the estate in the hands of the executor 'among the persons who by law are entitled thereto,' and the provision in section 1666 that the court must name in the decree 'the persons and the proportions or parts to which each shall be entitled' requires the court in making such decree to give a construction to the terms of the will. The further provision in the same section that 'such order or decree is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal,' precludes all right to impeach the decree except upon an appeal, and causes the decree to supersede the will and to prevail over any provision therein which may be thought inconsistent with the decree. The decree is conclusive, not only as to the persons who have any rights in the estate, but also as to the extent and limitation of their rights. Whether the distribution is to individuals in their own right, or to hold for others under specified trusts, the rights of all parties interested in the estate are determined by the decree, and thereafter it becomes immaterial to consider whether the will has received a proper construction. The court may incorporate the provisions of the will in its decree, either in express terms or by reference thereto, as was the case in Goldtree v. Thompson, 79 Cal. 613, where the decree distributed the property to the trustees to hold in the manner named and set forth in the will, 'and to which reference is hereby particularly made as a guide to the trustees in the discharge of their trust.' In such a case, the terms of the will become the language of the decree, but it is still the decree, and not the will, by which the rights of the parties are determined. If the plaintiffs herein had felt that the decree of distribution was erroneous or defective, in not giving to them the powers which, in their opinion, the terms of the will authorized to be conferred upon them, they could have appealed therefrom and had the decree corrected, but by their failure to appeal the decree has become conclusive upon them, and they can no longer contend for a different construction than such as its terms import:" Citing Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277; Daly v. Pennie, 86 Cal. 552, 21 Am. St. Rep. 61; William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359.

Followed in Estate v. Trescony, 119 Cal. 568. Accord. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 131; Goldtree v. Allison, 119 Cal. 344. The latest case in California (In re Merchants' Estate [Cal.] 77 P. 475) holds that though the decree is conclusive, yet such parts of the will as are in the decree may be examined to find what was testator's intent; and that this does not conflict with Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145.

17. A trustee who was as such awarded the property was as against the beneficiaries concluded by the decree to say that the trust being invalid, he took a legal fee. Greenwood v. Murray, 26 Minn. 259.

in view of the possible derangement of inheritable rights by a charge or a sale for debts. Hence, says the court, this proceeding enables the court to equalize the interests so impaired. In two later cases[18] the same judge limits the broad dictum of the earlier decision and denies the power to settle titles as between heirs or devisees and their transferees. The most extreme position taken in that state is that the decree assigning the residue is a conclusive adjudication of titles by succession to decedent's land, whether of estates in possession or in expectancy, or vested or contingent, on all persons interested, whether in being or not.[19] The reasons given in that case will not bear close analysis,[20] and the doctrine leads to highly mischievous results.[21] The later decisions in Minnesota trend back from this extreme position of Ladd v. Weiskopf and recognize numerous limitations of the conclusiveness of such decrees.[22]

In the absence of statutes like those in California, the correct rule seems to be that the decree is conclusive of all questions of title necessarily decided in divesting the possession of the personal representative and determining to whom it belongs, and what "parts" each shall receive.[23] Jurisdiction to allot or assign does not include

18. Farnham v. Thompson, 34 Minn. 330. The court determines who are the heirs and what is the part after administration to be assigned to each. Id. Followed by Dobberstein v. Murphy, 44 Minn. 526, holding that a decree assigning the widow her statutory third was not conclusive that a prior deed by her to her co-heirs had or had not validity.

19. The decree found certain real estate in the hands of the personal representative, found that the will gave a life estate to the widow and a vested remainder in the named children and assigned a life estate and remainders respectively. It was urged that the decree was not a conclusive construction of the will on the question whether the remainder was vested or contingent. The opinion runs—whether the decree of distribution was a correct construction or not "it is conclusive and binding on all parties * * * whether in being or not." If the remainder were contingent, says the court, "there could be no assignment of the property until the death of the [life tenant] for until then it could not be determined who a single one of the remaindermen would be. When the jurisdiction of the [probate] court was invoked * * * it became his duty to construe the will, determine its legal effect and assign the property" accordingly. Ladd v. Weiskopf, 62 Minn. 29.

20. If the decree of distribution is only to close the administration and deliver over the possession of the land, it may be asked why project the adjudication into the future and determine expectant titles? Why should it concern the probate court who will be remaindermen when the life estate falls in? What "purposes of administration" require such an adjudication. (See reasons stated in preceding note.) The Minnesota statute for the assignment of residue does not direct an adjudication of titles to land. It uses words importing possession and identification of land e g. "porportion or part," "description" of land. It expresses the purpose of the assignment, viz.: "that such persons may demand and recover their shares" etc. ["In such decree the court shall name the persons and the proportion or parts to which each is entitled, and if real estate, give a description as near as may be of the land to which each is entitled, and such persons may demand and recover their respective shares from the executor or administrator, or any other person have the same"]. Laws 1901, c. 284, § 229.

21. It practically enables the probate court to settle intricate questions of land titles before they arise and enables it to administer a broader relief in respect to titles than the courts of general jurisdiction can apply in an action between opposing parties.

22. Decedent's grantees are strangers not bound. Kosmeri v. Snively, 85 Minn. 228. Decree is conclusive that the persons to whom the real estate was assigned were heirs. Chadbourne v. Hartz, 101 N. W. 68, distinguishing the earlier cases into several classes, to-wit: Those where the present adversary was a stranger. Backdahl v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 46 Minn. 61. Those where the former probate decree did not properly embrace the matter now in controversy. Dawson v. Helmes, 30 Minn. 107; Burrell v. Railroad Co., 43 Minn. 363. Those where the res—land in the state—was not before the court—a foreign one. Morin v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 33 Minn. 176.

23. A decree finally distributing as corpus certain income which had been turned back into the fund instead of paid to the life beneficiary concludes the life tenant as against the remainderman but not as against the trustee. The reason is that the sole purpose of the decree was to judicially sanction the division of residue. Hence, though the court confirmed an account in which such payments by the trustee appeared, it was not conclusive because not necessary. Lawrence v. Security Co. [Conn.] 1 L. R. A. 342. The court remarks that no statute required the life beneficiary to take notice that the liabilities of her trustee would be adjudicated in making the distribution. Id.

The only effect was "to determine that the land passed on the death of [decedent] to [the heir] discharged from administration." Farnham v. Thompson, 34 Minn. 330. Decree for distribution of trust fund and discharge of executors held not res adjudicata as to ante-nuptial contract as to which the surrogate had not jurisdiction. Phalen v. United States Trust Co., 44 Misc. 57, 89 N. Y. S. 699. A remainderman is concluded by a jurisdiction to try title.[24] Beyond transferring possession the decree has no object, if it be true that the title passes to the heirs and devisees by decedent's death.[25] The conclusiveness of decrees of courts of probate rests on the rule that where any matter belongs so peculiarly to the jurisdiction of one court, that others take cognizance of the same subject incidentally and indirectly only, the adjudication by the court of peculiar jurisdiction is binding.[26] It would be corollary to this that when the court of probate exercising its peculiar jurisdiction decides matters which are merely incidental to its jurisdiction, the decision should not bind courts to which such matters primarily pertain.[27] If the proceeding to distribute and assign the estate is a different "cause of action" from that wherein the question of title usually afterward arises, it is conclusive only on what was actually adjudicated between the same parties.[28] Applying this general rule,[29] no adjudication of title to land should decree approving the accounts of a testamentary trustee, though not in esse at the time. In re Elting, 93 App. Div. 516, 87 N. Y. S. 833.

As to what adjudications of title are necessarily incidental to distribution, see 19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1086.

Compare Dickinson v. Hayes, 31 Conn. 417, where it was held that a decree admitting a will of realty and personalty to probate without qualification was not conclusive on the heirs as against the devisees that testator was of competent age to devise real estate, though the heirs had never appealed therefrom. Confirmation of guardian's sale is no proof that he was guardian. "It merely adjudicated * * * that the sale was a proper one to be made and that the price * * * was adequate. Burrell v. Railroad Co., 43 Minn. 363. Following Dawson v. Helmes, 30 Minn. 107. Numerous cases wherein such orders of court have been considered will be found cited in 19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1099.

Mr. Freeman says it "is a conclusive adjudica if upon sufficient notice that the persons to whom distribution is so made are the only persons entitled * * * as such heirs, devisees or legatees (Loring v. Steineman, 1 Metc. [Mass.] 204; Exton v. Zule, 14 N. J. Eq. 501; Judge of Probate v. Robins, 5 N. H. 246; Kellogg v. Johnson, 38 Conn. 269); but does not estop third persons from asserting * * * conveyances * * * made to them by the distributees, before entry of the decree (Chever v. Ching Hong Poy, 82 Cal. 68).

24. A probate court empowered to assign or set out homstead cannot try disputed titles. James v. James [Ark.] 80 S. W. 148. In such case the probate court does not transmit title, but only segregates the property. See 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 721 and cases cited.

25. Necessary to get possession out of administration and into heirs. Meeks v. Kirby, 47 Cal. 169. "Possession" cannot be transferred from the executor without a decree of distribution. In re Scheffer's Estate, 58 Minn. 29.

26. So held in the leading case of McPherson v. Cunliff, 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 422, 14 Am. Dec. 642, with note.

27. Thus the division of personalty and the transfer of the possession of realty from the representative to the person entitled thereto is of probate jurisdiction, but the determination of land titles in assigning possession is incidental.

28. A former judgment, if rendered upon the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action for the same cause of action between the same parties. The parties are concluded by the judgment, not only upon all the issues which were actually tried, but upon all issues which might have been tried in the former action; so that a new action for the same cause of action, between the same parties, cannot be maintained or defended on grounds which might have been tried and determined in the former action. But when the second action between the same parties is upon a different cause of action from the first, then the judgment in the former action is conclusive only upon those issues which were actually tried and determined. What these issues were may appear from the record, or may not; but when extrinsic evidence is necessary in order to determine what issues were actually tried and determined, or to determine the identity of the parties or of the subject-matter, such evidence must be submitted to the jury, with appropriate instructions; and only such issues as they find by evidence to have been actually tried and determined, and on which the judgment was rendered, or such issues as by reasoning are essential to and necessarily involved in the former verdict and judgment are to be considered as conclusively determined between the parties. It may be that in the former action there were distinct defenses or distinct grounds on which it might have been maintained, and that evidence was introduced and submitted to the jury on more than one issue, and that a general verdict was returned on which judgment was entered; so that it becomes impossible to determine, in a subsequent action, either by reasoning or by evidence, what issues were actually tried and determined in the former action." Per Field, J., in Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 110, citing Lea v. Lea, 99 Mass. 493, 96 Am. Dec. 772; Burlen v. Shannon, 99 Mass. 200, 96 Am. Dec. 733; Hawks v. Truesdell, 99 Mass. 557; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351.

29. If there be any uncertainty as to what was decided, the whole subject-matter will be at large unless the uncertainty be removed by extrinsic evidence or otherwise. Russell v. Peace, 94 U. S. 606; Cook v. Burnley, 45 Tex. 97; McDowell v. Langdon, 3 Gray [Mass.] 513; Chrisman v. Harman, 29 be found in a decree of distribution and assignment unless clearly made and necessary to the decision.

A foreign assignment of lands should not be conclusive as to titles[30] and hence it has been held not even conclusive as to who were heirs.[31]

FORMS OF ACTION.

This topic includes holdings of general application as to the distinctions between particular forms or kinds of actions; grounds for particular actions being excluded to the title appropriate to each action. The common-law forms of personal actions, now abolished in many states, will be found treated under appropriate heads.[32] The forms of actions merely, not the substance thereof, as regards the essential of the remedy, are abolished by the codes,[33] hence we still have legal[34] and equitable actions,[35] which distinction is important as it sometimes confers valuable rights, as for instance the right to a jury trial.[36] The distinction between civil[37] and criminal[38] actions, between those ex delicto[39] and ex contractu,[40] is often important in matters of procedure,[41] and frequently 30, 31. In an action of ejectment (Morin v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 33 Minn. 176), the Minnesota court denied that a Michigan decree assigning the realty to the persons entitled to it was conclusive that such persons were heirs as found.

Under the code, whether a plaintiff plants his cause of action at law or in equity from the aspect of common-law procedure does not, if properly planted, raise a jurisdictional question in the strict sense of the term; only a question of practice. Id. The rules of law which govern and control the manner of enforcing a cause of action must, of necessity, still depend upon the nature of the cause of action sought to be enforced. Carbondale Inv. Cook & Bernheimer Co., 89 App. Div. 406, 85 N. Y. S. 954. See title Equity, 3 Curr. L. 1210.

36. Though defendant be estopped to insist that the action is one in equity, the court may refuse to try it before a jury if a court of equity only could grant relief. Weldon v. Brown, 89 App. Div. 586, 85 N. Y. S. 599. See 2 Curr. L. 73, n. 54.

A cause of action to compel an unfaithful trustee and those colluding with him in wasting a trust fund to account therefor is not one sounding in tort, though the facts may be such that an action for damages for the wrong might lie. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. See 2 Curr. L. 73, n. 57.

40. An action for breach of a bond given to indemnify a constable against damage resulting from a levy of an attachment placed in his hands is ex contractu. Leader v. Mattingly [Ala.] 37 So. 270. Ac-affects one's right of recovery.[42] There may be innominate actions.[43] The principal forms of real actions are treated under appropriate heads.[44]

The nature of the action is determined from the gravamen of the complaint,[45] but the character of the action not clearly appearing therefrom, the prayer for relief generally governs.[46]

By amendments to his pleadings, one may convert an action commenced in equity into one at law and vice versa;[47] but an amendment changing a cause of action from tort to contract is not allowed,[48] nor can one by his answer change an action of forceable entry and detainer into one to try title.[49] One may waive his right to object to the form of the action.[50]

FORNICATION.

Conviction of fornication cannot be had on an indictment for adultery.[51]

FRANCHISES.

§ 1. Definition and Elements (1495).
§ 2. Grant of Franchise and Regulation of Its Exercise (1496).
§ 3. Powers and Duties Under Franchises (1497).
§ 4. Duration and Extension of Term (1498).
§ 5. Transfer of Franchises (1499).
§ 6. Revocation and Forfeiture (1499).
§ 7. Taxation (1499).

The rights and privileges here treated constitute a class entirely distinct from and independent of the corporate franchise.[52]

§ 1. Definition and elements.—A franchise is a special privilege conferred by a government on individuals or corporations, and which does not belong to the citizens of a country generally by common right.[53] It is an incorporeal

tion by bailor against bailee for damages for the latter's failure to collect insurance covering the bailed property, held one ex contractu. Johnston v. Charles Abresch Co. [Wis.] 101 N. W. 395. See 2 Curr. L. 73, n. 57.

41. Counts in tort and contract cannot be joined in same declaration. Zeiser v. Cohn, 44 Misc. 462, 90 N. Y. S. 66. Assumpsit and case cannot be so joined. Davis v. Smith [R. I.] 58 A. 630. But trover and case may be joined. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen [Ill.] 72 N. E. 200. See 2 Curr. L. 73, n. 58. For cases on this subject, see title Pleading, 2 Curr. L. 1178.

42. Judgment of nonsuit entered where one sued in tort when he should have sued on a covenant. Knowles v. Knowles [R. I.] 56 A. 775. See 2 Curr. L. 73, n. 59.

43. That a suit does not fall technically under the definition of some special action controlled as to its requirements by fixed rules of practice is no cause for its dismissal. Citizens' Bank v. Marr, 111 La. 601, 35 S. 780.

44. See Ejectment, 3 Curr. L. 1157; Waste, 2 Curr. L. 2034; Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer, 2 Curr. L. 11.

53. Rhinehart v. Redfield, 93 App. Div. 410, 87 N. Y. S. 789. The right to produce and sell electricity is not a franchise (Purnell v. McLane [Md.] 56 A. 830), in the absence of the right of eminent domain (State v. Twin Village Water Co., 98 Me. 214, 56 A. 763). Nor is the right to do a banking business (Bank of California v. City and County of San Francisco, 142 Cal. 276, 75 P. 832). But the right to use the streets of a municipality for delivering electricity to a consumer (Purnell v. McLane [Md.] 56 A. 830; Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Evansville, 127 F. 187), or to construct and operate a street railway, are franchises (Thompson v. Schenectady R. Co. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 577). See 2 Curr. L. 74, n. 67.

Note: A "franchise" tax fixed by the amount of business done during the last preceding year was held not to apply to moneys received after but falling due be-hereditament.[54] A distinction must in some cases be made between the franchise and the acquisition of an easement necessary to its fulfillment.[55] The right granted must be of benefit to the public.[56]

§ 2. Grant of franchise and regulation of its exercise.[57]—The power to grant franchises involving the use of public streets and places is vested in the legislature absolutely,[58] though it may delegate such power to a municipal corporation;[59] but to be available such power must be clearly conferred,[60] though it may arise as a necessary incident to other powers granted.[61] Courts cannot generally grant this right.[62] The legislature may grant a franchise in the streets of a city without providing for the payment of compensation;[63] the mutual rights and benefits arising from the agreement are, however, a sufficient consideration.[64] Statutory conditions must be strictly complied with.[65] The grantor fore the tax law was passed. People v. Miller, 32 N. Y. L. J. 303. Criticised XVIII. Harv. L. R. 233, as confusing "franchise" with business done thereunder.

55. Assent from town council to a railroad company authorizing the occupation of the streets of such town under § 10, c. 52, Code 1899, is not a franchise within the meaning of chap. 29, p. 82, acts 1901. Belington & N. R. Co. v. Alston, 54 W. Va. 597, 46 S. E. 612.

56. The power to "regulate all matters connected with * * * all parts, places and streets of the city" is not a power to grant a perpetual franchise to two persons, their successors and assigns, to open and use streets for the purpose of laying and maintaining conduits for supplying gas generated from ammonia for the purposes of refrigeration [Construing Laws of New York 1888, p. 958, c. 583, tit. 2, § 12]. 63. City of La Harpe v. Elm Tp. Gas, Light, Fuel & Power Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 448.

64. Right to run line through village, company promising to carry passengers within the town free, held not void for lack of consideration. Question arose on suit on certified check deposited with bid. Hattersly v. Waterville, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 242.

65. Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4443R, a franchise for lighting purposes can only be granted by ordinance. Such section and § 4357 are pari materia and must be construed together. Meyer v. Boonville, 162 Ind. 165, 70 N. E. 146. The emergency provision of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4357, has no application to an ordinance granting a franchise for the establishment of a lighting plant. Id. Under these sections, an ordinance granting a franchise for the establishment of a lighting plant is void where no publication or posting is made. This publication is not dispensed with by the ordinance declaring an emergency. Id. Required subscriptions for stock in a telephone company must be paid in before the probate court can grant a decree fixing mode of use of the streets. City of Cincinnati v. Baltimore City Charter, § 6 and Ordinance No. 107 presuppose the existence of a special franchise, and applicant not having such franchise, cannot compel issuance of permit authorizing him to use conduits for electric wires. Purnell v. McLane [Md.] 56 A. 830. An act providing that if the successful bidder for a franchise fails to perform certain conditions, it should be sold to the "next highest bidder," held this last phrase refers to bids made and pending at the time of the default [Construing Cal. act March 11, 1901, § 5]. Pacific Elec. R. Co.

may impose conditions on the use of the franchise,[66] which conditions must be fully complied with;[67] and by accepting a franchise on condition, one becomes estopped to deny the reasonableness[68] or validity[69] of the condition. The grantee accepting and acting on the franchise, the latter becomes a contract[70] which neither the grantor[71] nor the grantee[72] can abolish or alter without the consent of the other. In some states a municipal corporation cannot, during the term of the franchise, release the grantee from any obligation or liability imposed thereby.[73] The right to a franchise is not to be presumed in proceedings based on the existence of such right.[74]

§ 3. Powers and duties under franchises.[75]—A franchise carries with it an implied obligation to perform all the objects for which the charter was granted,[76] but this duty should be construed with some reference to actual conditions and needs.[77] Public service corporations are bound to serve the public on reasonable terms and reasonable rates;[78] the opposite of this rule is also true.[79] A franchise is to be construed most strongly against the grantee,[80] though the rules as to the Scope of title.—This title deals only with the law peculiarly applicable to fraternal and mutual benefit societies and their contracts of insurance. Matters relating to insurance companies or insurance contracts generally, or which are common to all corporations or associations, are treated elsewhere.[1]

§ 1. Nature, organization and powers.[2]—The distinction between "benefit" and "benevolent" societies lies in whether or not periodical payments are required from prospective beneficiaries.[3] They are limited in their powers by articles and by-laws,[4] of which limitations persons dealing with them must take notice.[5] Such societies must have a representative form of government;[6] they cannot accept members above the age limit or without a medical examination,[7] must not make improper allowances to officers,[8] or divert funds from the purposes for which they are contributed,[9] and the books and records must show the true condition of their business and finances, including assessments and liabilities.[10]

The assets of such societies do not consist in cash and tangible securities and property alone, and they cannot be said to be insolvent when it is reasonably probable that by its authorized assessments it can provide sufficient funds to meet its just liabilities.[11]

By the laws of Nebraska, fraternal benefit associations are required to file annual reports with the auditor,[12] which must show all claims for death losses.[13] On failure to do so or to comply with other provisions of the statute, the attorney general on report of the auditor is required to sue to enjoin it from continuing business.[14] The court cannot in such proceedings order the appointment of a receiver and the winding up of its affairs,[15] and if the act complained of shall be corrected, and costs are paid by defendant, it will be reinstated.[16]

Legislative control as to insurance.—Beneficial societies are usually exempted from the provisions of the general insurance laws.[17] The exemption applies to foreign societies authorized to do business in the state.[18]

3. A benefit society is one which receives periodical payments from its members and holds them as a fund to be loaned or given to those of its members needing pecuniary relief or to the families or relatives of deceased members. State v. Dunn, 134 N. C. 663, 46 S. E. 949. A benevolent association is one which confers benefits without requiring an equivalent from those benefited. Id.

Protection of ritual and individuality.[19]—Rights in name or ritual will not be determined until a controversy arises.[20] Similarity of name must be substantially misleading.[21]

Status of local lodges and relation to supreme body.[22]—The relation of the central governing body to the subordinate lodges is to be determined by the constitution and by-laws.[23]

The supreme governing body is generally given power to enact a constitution and by-laws for the association and to amend the same.[24] The sovereign body of the society is not liable for injuries inflicted by subordinate lodges on candidates during their initiation, in the absence of a showing of a relation of principal and agent or master and servant between the sovereign and subordinate lodges in respect to the initiation.[25] Where such relation exists, however, the sovereign body will be held responsible, though it did not authorize the acts resulting in the injury.[26] The issuance of a certificate to a member of a lodge which by operation of the by-laws has forfeited its right to affiliate with the association, without notice to him of such default, is a waiver by the association of such default, and it is thereby estopped to deny the continued membership of the lodge and the agency of its officers.[27]

Where the governing body is, by statute, given power to provide for holding its meetings in any state where it has subordinate lodges, and adopts a resolution changing the place of meeting from that designated in the by-laws, a meeting so held is authorized and its proceedings are not thereby rendered invalid.[28]

Matters relating to the winding up and dissolution of such associations are treated elsewhere.[29]

§ 2. Foreign associations.[30]—The Texas statute relating to foreign beneficial societies and requiring them to appoint the insurance commissioner as agent on whom process may be served does not repeal the general law authorizing service on local agents of foreign corporations, but the two are cumulative and service may be made on either.[31] The Maine statute providing for service of process on the insurance commissioner in actions against foreign insurance companies applies only to such companies as have obtained a license to do business in that state.[32] For a full discussion of the rights, duties and liabilities of foreign associations, see the titles Insurance[33] and Foreign Corporations.[34]

§ 3. Officers, agents, organizers, physicians, etc.[35]—Officers and directors alike are limited in their powers by the articles.[36] Fidelity bonds of the president of a mutual life insurance company may be enforced by any one for whose benefit they were executed, though running to the association.[37] One officer is not ordinarily liable for the defalcation of another,[38] but the officer responsible for money is not relieved because it was embezzled by another officer.[39] The treasurer's book entries are, as between himself and the company, mere declarations in his favor, and are not competent to disprove receipts given by him.[40] Settlements between a lodge and its treasurer are governed by the ordinary rules relating to such transactions.[41]

§ 4. Members and discipline.[42]—An expelled member may abandon all claims to reinstatement and resort to an action for damages for the injury sustained thereby.[43] Such suit is not a waiver of the illegality of the expulsion.[44] The loss sustained by plaintiff in being deprived of the use and enjoyment of the property of the society and the privileges of membership are proper elements of damage.[45] So also is his mental suffering caused by such expulsion and the manner in which it was effected.[46] Where the expelled member has declined a tender of the premiums paid by him, a decree denying him reinstatement need not provide for their repayment.[47]

lodge, the mere fact that its officers may have been influenced by improper motives in doing so is insufficient to constitute a cause of action against it for conspiracy to deprive one of his membership therein.[48] So is the fact that they fail to invite him to join a new lodge at the same place.[49]

A member has an interest in the funds of the association.[50] He is entitled to the protection of the by-laws and may maintain a bill to enjoin their violation.[51]

Arbitration of disputes and claims.—In order to preclude a member or beneficiary from resorting to the courts to enforce his contract with the association, there must be an express and specific contract shown for some other mode of settlement.[52] An agreement to submit disputes or claims to tribunals of the order under the prescribed procedure is valid, and is a complete defense to an action thereon.[53] In such case the same principles apply as where controversies are submitted to arbitrators,[54] and where the prescribed forms are observed, the decision of such tribunal is final in the absence of fraud or bad faith.[55] It is not the province of the court to determine whether a correct result was reached,[56] but the conclusiveness of the decision may be questioned in a court of law when set up as a defense to an action on the certificate.[57] Errors of procedure not objected to will be deemed to have been waived.[58] A request by the member for a rehearing is a waiver of previous irregularities.[59] Such tribunals may determine as to the competency and the weight of the evidence offered.[60] They will not be held to the strict rules of evidence applicable in courts of law,[61] the only rule for

58. One cannot object to the finding of such tribunal on the ground that evidence was produced by affidavit only where neither party requested that the witnesses be produced and examined orally (Derry v. Great Hive Ladies of Modern Maccabees [Mich.] 98 N. W. 23), nor because the proof consisted of ex parte affidavits where claimant himself used similar evidence (Barker v. Great Hive Ladies of Modern Maccabees [Mich.] 98 N. W. 24), nor because his claim was determined by a committee where he made no request that the hearing should be before the lodge as a whole (Derry v. Great Hive Ladies of Modern Maccabees [Mich.] 98 N. W. 23). An objection to the consideration of a physician's certificate because claimant had no opportunity to cross-examine him is not well taken where claimant's proofs were taken without affording the association the same right. its admission and exclusion being that of common fairness,[62] and strict rules of procedure are not enforced.[63] But they have no right to violate any positive law of evidence.[64] A rule providing for appeals from the action of the executive committee giving the supreme tribunal "power to take additional proofs" implies that it may consider proofs taken before such committee.[65]

§ 5. Membership and contract securing benefits. A. Application.[66]—As in all insurance, material misrepresentations in the application avoid the contract[67] irrespective of whether the applicant knew of their materiality;[68] but the association is charged with the knowledge of the agent taking the application,[69] unless the applicant knew that the agent wrote down untrue answers.[70] Where the agent, knowing that the applicant can neither read nor write, undertakes to read to him the application, the applicant is not bound by statements therein which the agent fails to read.[71] The test of materiality is whether the knowledge or ignorance of the fact sought to be elicited would materially influence the action of the insurer in entering into the contract.[72] Statements in the printed form not responsive to questions are not a part of the contract.[73]

Officers and agents of mutual associations may waive the provisions of the articles and by-laws with reference to the making of contracts of insurance to the same extent as though they were acting for an insurance company.[74] The subordinate lodge or an officer thereof whose duty it is to perform some service for or on behalf of the supreme lodge is generally regarded as an agent of the governing body for the purpose of receiving members and collecting assessments and dues.[75] And if, with full knowledge of an applicant's false answers or statements, a local lodge receives or admits him as a member,[76] or if, after his admission, the officer whose duty it is to collect assessments learns of such statements and thereafter reecives such assessments and remits them to the supreme order, the society will, as a general rule, be held estopped from pleading such statements or representations as a defense to an action on the benefit certificate.[77] The association may waive the requirement that applicants must be in good health by knowingly and customarily accepting persons who are not.[78] It may also waive the medical examination of the assured,[79] and requirements that applications must be made personally[80] and on prescribed forms.[81]

A provision in the application waiving the statutory provisions prohibiting a physician from disclosing any information acquired from his patient is unenforceable.[82]

(§ 5) B. Certificate.[83]—The certificate is a contract between the holder and the association, restricted only by the rules and regulations of the association and the law under which it was organized,[84] and is enforceable by either against the other according to its terms.[85] A certificate is not issued until delivered to the member and accepted by him.[86] It need not be signed by the insured in order to be binding on him.[87] His acceptance thereof is shown by his payment of assessments and the suit thereon by his beneficiaries.[88]

rules in regard to contracts apply.[92] The contract of insurance will be strictly construed against the company preparing it, and liberally as against the insured,[93] and will be enforced in accordance with the laws of the state where it is accepted.[94] Any ambiguity in regard to persons who may be named as beneficiaries will be construed so as to make valid rather than to avoid a contract between the corporation and one of its members, and so as to carry into effect the manifest intention of the member as to the disposition of the endowment fund.[95] When the contract contains contradictory or ambiguous provisions in regard to the effect of misrepresentations in the application, the court will avoid a construction which will put upon the insured the obligation of warranty.[96] The articles of incorporation are to be construed liberally.[97]

(§ 5) D. Charter and by-laws as part of contract.[1]—The contract evidenced by the certificate is to be construed in connection with the constitution and by-laws, though they are not specifically made a part thereof.[2] Where no certificate is issued, the by-laws in existence at the time one becomes a member constitute the contract between the parties.[3] So also any promise an association makes in its organic law to pay its members benefits becomes a contract between it and them.[4] So long as they are not illegal, immoral or against public policy, the association itself may determine what rules and regulations will best promote the purposes for which it was organized.[5] The fact that the constitution and by-laws purport to have been published by the supreme body of the order and are sent by it to the subordinate lodges and used by them makes out a prima facie case of their adoption by the order.[6] The constitution and by-laws of the association constitute the law of the organization which controls the issuing of its benefit certificates, and the disposition of its benefit fund[7] and the rights and duties of the members must be enforced strictly in conformity therewith.[8] They become a part of the contract of insurance, and both the insured and the beneficiary are bound thereby,[9] and are presumed to have knowledge thereof.[10] Statutes in some states provide that unless a copy of the by-laws, constitution and application are contained in or attached to the policy, they shall not be considered a part of the policy or contract, or be received in evidence in any controversy between the parties thereto.[11] It has been held that such statutes establish a rule of evidence only, and hence merely relate to the remedy and are not unconstitutional as interfering with contract rights.[12]

A condition in the certificate that the member will, in every particular, comply with all the laws, rules and requirements of the order is an agreement to abide by all reasonable rules thereafter adopted.[13] A member of a local lodge cannot be held to have authorized the representatives thereof in the supreme body to assent to unreasonable amendments, and their consent will not operate as a waiver of his rights.[14] Agreements to comply with future by-laws and regulations refer only to such as relate to the insured's duties as a member of the association.[15] Amendments thereto, to be valid, must be reasonable,[16] and the association cannot, without the express consent of the member, change or modify the essentials of the contract of insurance,[17] or deprive him of vested rights thereunder.[18] Thus an amendment to its by-laws reducing the amount of insurance to be paid to a sum less than the amount stipulated for in his certificate,[19] or depriving him of sick benefits, is void as to him.[20] Such amendments, unless consented to or acquiesced in,[21] operate as a repudiation of the contract[22] and, as in other contracts, the member is excused from further performance on his part, and may at once maintain an action for damages occasioned by such repudiation without waiting until the time fixed for performance,[23] or he may sue for a rescission of the contract and recover payments made by him.[24] He need not continue to pay assessments or otherwise maintain his good standing.[25] He must, however, exercise his option to treat the contract as repudiated within a reasonable time,[26] what is a reasonable time being ordinarily a question for the jury.[27] It is not to be determined so much by lapse of time as by considering the circumstances of the parties and the effect produced by the delay.[28] Facts showing that the asso-

27. O'Neill v. Supreme Council A. L. H. [N. J. Law] 57 A. 463.

28. Lippincott v. Supreme Council A. L. H., 130 F. 483. The fact that during three years which elapsed between breach and plaintiff's ciation has altered its position to its prejudice must be set out in detail.[29] Payments of the reduced assessments in such cases, though made under protest, are nevertheless voluntary, and cannot be recovered on rescission of the contract,[30] but do not amount to an acquiescence in the action taken so as to bind him thereby,[31] in the absence of notice that the reduction was solely occasioned by the reduction in the amount of insurance.[32] The question as to whether they amount to an election to treat the contract as still in force is one of fact.[33] A declaration of an intention to insist on performance does not constitute an irrevocable election so as to preclude the party making it from afterwards rescinding the contract and recovering the payments previously made, where the association was not misled or prejudiced thereby.[34] An action for repudiation or rescission is not subject to a time limitation arising solely out of the terms of the repudiated contract.[35] A member has such an interest in the enforcement of a benefit certificate payable on his death as will entitle him to maintain an action for damages for its repudiation.[36] A condition that the member will comply with all by-laws thereafter to be enacted will be construed as referring only to reasonable by-laws and amendments in furtherance of the contract, and not to such as would overthrow it or materially alter its terms.[37] Where plaintiff elects to rescind by bringing suit for recovery of the amounts paid by him, the defendant cannot afterwards compel him to accept performance or agree to a reinstatement of the provisions of the contract.[38] The beneficiary may treat such an amendment as void, and after the death of the insured, recover on the original contract.[39] It has been held in New York that where the contract provides that the insured shall conform in all respects to the by-laws then in force or which may thereafter be adopted, an amendment reducing the amount to be paid in case of death is valid if essential to the life of the association.[40] It has also been held under a similar contract that a member is bound by subsequently passed by-laws changing and increasing his monthly assessment, if the same were reasonable and necessary in order to carry out the purposes of the association.[41] Where the original contract and by-election to rescind many new members joined the order who had no knowledge of his claim, and that many old members died or withdrew did not constitute such a change of position on defendant's part as to preclude recovery on account of laches. laws are silent on the subject, an amendment reducing the amount to be paid in case of suicide has been held binding on one who became a member before its enactment.[42] Where the constitution and by-laws provide that the same may be amended and the insured in his application agrees to be bound by laws then in existence or thereafter adopted, an amendment providing that suicide shall work a forfeiture of all benefits is valid and applies to a certificate theretofore issued under such application.[43] In New York, it has been held that the association has no power to make an amendment to its by-laws, striking out all time limit as to suicide so as to bind persons previously insured and the beneficiaries of members committing suicide while insane.[44]

§ 6. Dues and assessments.[45]—The legislature has power to determine what mortuary assessment rates must be adopted by fraternal insurance associations.[46] It may provide that they must adopt rates not lower than those specified in a specified mortality table, the fact that it was prepared by outside parties being immaterial.[47]

Only members of the class to which deceased belonged can be assessed to pay the amount of his certificate.[48]

Notice.—Where the constitution provides that members shall be notified of assessments, they must in fact be actually notified before their rights can be forfeited for failure to pay such assessments.[49] It devolves upon the order to prove that the notice was actually received, the mere placing it in the postoffice properly addressed being insufficient.[50] Notices of assessments are generally required to state the objects to which the money to be raised is to be devoted.[51]

§ 7. Forfeiture and suspensions; reinstatement.[52]—Fines and penalties imposed, if not illegal, immoral or against public policy, will be enforced.[53] Provisions in regard to them, however, will be construed in favor of the assured and, when possible, a construction will be adopted which will prevent a forfeiture.[54]

The association is not liable for death benefits on the decease of a suspended member,[55] or of one engaging in an extra hazardous occupation contrary to the provisions of the by-laws.[56]

The beneficiary is entitled to recover from the association sums received by it from funeral benefit associations on account of the death of a member, though the latter was in arrears at the time of his death, he having had no notice or knowledge of such fact.[57]

For nonpayment of dues and assessments.[58]—The officer charged with receiving assessments from members and remitting them to the grand lodge will be regarded as the agent of the latter, though the laws of the order declare that he is the agent of the local lodge.[59] He cannot, however, bind the grand lodge by acts beyond the scope of his authority.[60] Thus he does not bind it by receiving and remitting past due assessments, in the absence of knowledge and a ratification of his acts by it.[61] Where a lodge has authority to appoint an assistant clerk to collect dues and assessments, the order cannot question the validity of the appointment of one acting in that capacity in order to enforce a forfeiture of its contract, whether payments made to him finally reached the supreme body or not.[62]

As between the assured and the association, it is immaterial that his assessments were not sent by the local lodge to the central body before his death,[63] or that the local lodge was suspended after failure to make punctual remittances of assessments.[64]

A provision that a failure to pay assessments on the day when due shall ipso facto work a suspension and a forfeiture of all rights under the benefit certificate is valid and binding.[65] But there can be no forfeiture for nonpayment where the amount of the assessment was tendered to the proper officer before the day when it became due,[66] nor where the member was ready and willing to pay it at the proper time, but the officer whose duty it was to receive it refused to do so,[67] nor where the association had in its hands sufficient funds belonging to the mem-

Parliament of Prudent Particians v. Marr, 20 App. D. C. 363. The fact that a local lodge uses one as its officer to make collections and remittances for it, he being accountable to it alone, does not make him an agent of the grand lodge so as to bind the latter by any custom he may establish in relation to the time when assessments may be paid, or so as to impart notice to it of such custom. ber to meet the assessment.[68] The enforcement of a law to insure prompt payment of assessments may be waived by the association.[69] Hence it cannot claim a forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments at specified times where, by the adoption of a custom or the course of its conduct, it has led its members honestly to believe that they will be received after the appointed day.[70] The fact that the association has attempted to make unauthorized changes in regard to the payment of assessments does not ordinarily relieve the member from liability to pay according to his contract.[71]

Where all payments are made within the time stipulated in the constitution and by-laws, a demand for a health certificate as a condition of accepting payment is arbitrary.[72]

A provision that a member in arrears shall not be entitled to benefits until the expiration of a certain time after such arrearage is paid is not unreasonable.[73]

Payment of dues by the insured's agent after his death cannot vitalize the forfeited contract or work his reinstatement,[74] unless they are accepted and retained by the grand lodge with full knowledge of the facts.[75]

The mere fact that a member announces to an officer of the order that he intends to drop his insurance does not affect his status as such, but he remains a member until a forfeiture is worked by his nonpayment of assessments.[76]

A provision that in case of any concealment, misrepresentation or untrue statement made by an applicant, all assessments paid by him shall be forfeited to the order, is valid.[77]

A member giving his dues to another member to pay to the financial secretary constitutes him his agent and takes the risk of their not being paid within the time fixed by the by-laws.[78]

Courts of law will not ordinarily concern themselves with the question of the good standing of members, where the same depends on matters of morals, religion, conduct and the like, but will do so where it depends on the payment of dues.[79]

§ 8. The beneficiary. Designation.[80]—Statutes in some states provide that payments of benefits may be made only to certain designated classes of beneficiaries.[81] In such case only persons belonging to such classes have an insurable interest in the life of the member, and they alone may receive death benefits.[82] Hence one not belonging to any such classes cannot indirectly participate by an agreement whereby one who is eligible is named as beneficiary under an agreement to act as trustee for him.[83] Nor can the society waive such statutory provisions.[84] The general and main purpose of the association to provide for certain named classes of persons is not violated by a designation of any person in any of such classes, though he does not belong to the one first named.[85]

The fact that the constitution provides that the object of the society is to relieve the distress of widows and orphans does not render invalid a provision allowing the designation of certain other persons as beneficiaries.[86] The fact that the policy does not name the claimant as beneficiary is immaterial where the application, which is made a part of it, does so.[87]

Provisions for the distribution of the proceeds in event that the designation of a beneficiary by the member shall fail, and he makes no other designation, are valid and controlling.[88] By statute in some states, where there is no selection of a beneficiary,[89] or the one selected is not eligible, the fund goes to the heirs at law of the insured.[90]

Public policy prevents a recovery of the amount of the certificate by a beneficiary who feloniously murders the insured,[91] but does not, in such case, prevent a recovery by the heirs of the insured, there being nothing to the contrary in the contract.[92] In the absence of a provision to the contrary, the designation of a beneficiary is unaffected by the member's subsequent marriage.[93]

The date of eligibility as a beneficiary is, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, the date of the designation in the certificate and not the date of the death of the member.[94] Where the name of a person is inserted as beneficiary without his knowledge, with the intention that he shall hold the fund as trustee for another, the trust will be enforced at the instance of the latter.[95] Such trust may be shown by parol as against the trustee.[96]

Right to change beneficiary.[97]—The certificate or policy ordinarily creates no vested interest in the beneficiary, but only an expectancy, which cannot become a vested or absolute right to the proceeds thereof until the death of the assured.[98] The member may exercise the power of appointment without the consent of the beneficiary, and without any restriction other than such as may be imposed by organic law or the rules and regulations of the association.[99] Unless restricted by the constitution or by-laws,[1] or unless the beneficiary has obtained a vested interest therein, he may ordinarily change the beneficiary at will.[2] He must do so in the manner prescribed by the laws of the association,[3] unless a compliance therewith is waived.[4]

Assignment of benefits.[5]—The certificate or policy is, even before the death of the insured, a chose in action.[6] It cannot be gratuitously assigned to one having no insurable interest in the life of the assured,[7] but rights acquired under an assignment for value may operate as a valid, enforceable agreement when such interest has ripened into an existing right by the death of the assured, and the condition of the parties remains unchanged by any intervening rights of third parties or other equities.[8] Where the assignment is made as collateral se-

May be assigned by one having an interest in it as collateral security for his debt or obligation. Contingent interest of beneficiary in policy on life of his father held sufficient to support assignment. Coleman v. Anderson [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 1057. A third person may, by contract with a member and his beneficiary, whereby they agree to surrender the certificate to him in consideration of his paying all dues and assessments and providing a home for the insured, acquire a vested interest in the fund designated therein, provided such agreement is not contrary to public policy as a wagering contract. Agreement with cousin of member held to give him entire interest. Brett v. Warnick, 44 Or. 511, 75 P. 1061. Where the beneficiary assigned her interest to her son who, with her approval, made a will disposing of the policy in which he directed that a certain part thereof be used curity for a debt or obligation, the assignee has a lien on the proceeds to the amount secured, especially when the debt is for premiums or dues paid by him at the request of the assignor to keep the policy alive,[9] and the assignor cannot deprive him of possession thereof until the debt, with interest, is fully paid off and discharged.[10] The assignee may maintain an action for specific performance and to prevent payment being made to the original beneficiaries and to require payment to be made to him.[11] The fact that the assignee was not substituted as beneficiary in accordance with the by-laws of the association does not affect his rights as against the beneficiary.[12] Provisions in the by-laws prohibiting the assignment of the certificate are for the benefit of the society and can only be taken advantage of by it;[13] so also the beneficiary is estopped from making the objection that the assignee does not belong to the class of persons who may be made beneficiaries.[14] Certificates are non-negotiable, and an assignee cannot claim protection as a bona fide holder.[15]

Status of beneficiary.[16]—The fund accumulated by an association from the contributions of its members for beneficial or protective purposes is a trust fund.[17] A beneficiary suing after the death of a member is a creditor of the order,[18] and in case of its insolvency is entitled to a fund belonging to it in preference to a foreign receiver.[19]

Exemption of benefits from liability for debts.[20]—Statutes generally provide that the proceeds of the policy shall not be liable for the debts of the member or the beneficiary, and shall not be subject to attachment, garnishment or other process.[21] It is held that such provisions are not designed to protect the certificate or the proceeds thereof from the voluntary act of the member or the beneficiary.[22] Hence they do not prevent an assignment thereof to secure a debt of the beneficiary.[23] It is the duty of the association, when garnished, to appear and interpose such exemption, and if it fails to do so, it cannot set off a sum paid by it to the creditor.[24]

§ 9. Maturity and accrual of benefits. Incontestable clauses.[25]—A provision that the policy shall be incontestable after a certain time is binding,[26] and in such case suicide after that time is no defense to an action thereon, though the policy refers to a section of the constitution relieving the association from liability in such case.[27]

Suicide[28] as used in by-laws limiting liability means voluntary and intentional self-destruction.[29] It does not include accidental self-destruction.[30] Voluntary self-destruction means only the taking of one's life purposely and intentionally.[31] Involuntary self-destruction includes cases where one, without intending to accomplish his own death, does acts which may naturally and probably result, and do in fact result, in death.[32] The terms "suicide," "self-destruction," and "death by his own hand" are held to be synonymous.[33] There is a conflict of authority in regard to the effect of suicide on the liability of the association. Some courts hold that, in the absence of any provision to the contrary in the policy, the suicide of the insured while sane releases the insurer,[34] but suicide while insane does not.[35] Others hold that where the policy is silent on the subject, the association is liable in case the assured commits suicide while sane or insane.[36] Where such liability is provided against in general terms, the association is not liable in the event of intentional self-destruction while sane, but is liable in case the assured was insane.[37] In most states, the association may, by a provision in the contract to that effect, exempt itself from liability in case the assured commits suicide while sane or insane.[38] In such case no degree of insanity whatever will justify a recovery.[39] In Kentucky, however, it is held that, notwithstanding a provision that the policy shall be void in case of suicide while sane or insane, the beneficiary may recover if the mind of the insured was sufficiently gone when he took his life to render him unconscious that he was doing so at the time he committed the act.[40] Provisions that in case of suicide only a certain proportion of the insurance shall be paid,[41] and that no recovery may be had if a member comes to his death while violating the law of the land have been held to be reasonable and valid.[42]

The burden of proving intentional self-destruction is on the association.[43] In the absence of proof, natural or accidental causes will be presumed,[44] and if the jury cannot determine the cause of death they cannot find that it was due to suicide.[45] The fact that the proofs of death tend to show suicide does not shift the burden.[46] The verdict of the coroner's jury is admissible for the purpose of showing the cause of death,[47] but the testimony of witnesses at the inquest is not, except for purposes of contradiction or impeachment.[48]

§ 10. Proofs of death or right to benefits.[49]—A provision that the claimant shall make satisfactory proof of death requires only reasonable proof of that fact and of the cause of death.[50] Such proof is not, however, binding on the person making it when the cause of death is called in question.[51]

Proofs of death need not be made where the association denies all liability.[52]

It is generally provided that claims under a certificate or policy do not mature until the expiration of a certain time after the serving of proofs of death.[53]

§ 11. Payment of benefits.[54]—In the absence of fraud or mistake, the surrender of the policy for cancellation operates in law as a release and discharge of the association's liability.[55] A receipt stating that the amount was received under protest is insufficient to support a plea of accord and satisfaction.[56] A settlement made with the association by the guardian of minor beneficiaries whereby they receive less than the full amount of the policy is not ordinarily binding on them unless approved by the proper court.[57] The receipt of one of two sums due the beneficiary is no consideration for an agreement to release the association from the other.[58]

Payments of funeral benefits to the holder of a canceled certificate, under the mistaken belief that they were claimed under a duplicate issued in lieu thereof, do not operate to estop the association from denying a right to recover thereon.[59]

Claims are generally required to be made within a specified time after the right to benefits accrues.[60]

Interest.[61]—Where the policy is complete in all its parts, designating specifically the sums to be paid and the beneficiaries, and providing that payment shall be made within a specified time after proofs of death, it will, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, be deemed a contract for the payment of money, and the beneficiary will be allowed interest from the time specified.[62]

§ 12. Procedure to enforce right to benefits.[63]—Equity has jurisdiction of a suit by a beneficiary to recover the amount of the certificate where his remedy at law would not be an adequate one.[64] Where the by-laws provide for the payment of a death benefit fund to a deceased member's next of kin they, and not his executor or administrator, are entitled to maintain an action for its recovery.[65] An action on a benefit certificate or insurance policy is transitory and not local in its nature, and may be brought in any state where the company issuing it may be found, without regard to where the contract was made, or the subject thereof was located.[66] An unincorporated fraternal beneficiary order may be sued in the name by which it is commonly known without joining the individual members.[67] Where an association is sued, answers, and assigns error as a corporation, it will be so considered, though the record contains no evidence of that fact.[68]

68. United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners v. Dinkle, 82 Ind. App. 273, 69 N. E. 707.

The members of an unincorporated mutual benefit association are not personally liable to a beneficiary where the contract merely provides that the secretary shall receive and pay to the members the amount realized from an assessment, and the only provision for compelling payment of assessments is forfeiture of membership for nonpayment.[69] In such case the assessment cannot be collected by a suit against the members refusing to pay the same.[70] The question of whether beneficiaries should be made parties cannot be raised by general demurrer.[71] Pendency of a suit by the executrix of the insured in which it is claimed that his children are entitled to all the insurance and in which others named as beneficiaries are joined as defendants does not prevent a suit by the other beneficiaries on the certificate.[72] Suits by different persons on the same certificate are properly consolidated.[73]

Pleading.[74]—The defense of ultra vires is an affirmative matter which should be specially pleaded.[75] Where noncompliance with provisions in regard to the payment of premiums is relied on as a defense, the answer must allege wherein it consisted, a mere general allegation of noncompliance being insufficient.[76] The beneficiary need not allege that he had an insurable interest in the life of the member,[77] but it devolves on the society relying on the defense of no insurable interest to plead and prove it.[78]

Evidence.—The member's condition of health at the time of his application cannot be proved by general reputation,[79] but witnesses may state from their own knowledge that he was emaciated, was unable to speak above a whisper, and that his father stated that he had consumption.[80] The general custom of the society in accepting members not in good health may be shown for the purpose of proving a waiver of a requirement that applicants must be in good health.[81] A baptismal record of the church at which deceased was baptized is admissible on the question of his age.[82] Where the certificate provides in case of accident for the payment of such sum as the member was entitled to receive under the terms and conditions of the rate book, it is incumbent on one suing for indemnity to establish the nonexistence of such book before he can prove an oral agreement to pay a certain indemnity made by the officers at the time the certificate was issued.[83] Having introduced the rate book on his own account, he is bound by its provisions respecting the amount of his insurance.[84] The burden is on the association to show that an assessment would not have yielded the full amount named in the certificate.[85]

Judgments.—The beneficiary is ordinarily entitled to a money judgment and not merely to a mandatory order requiring the levy of an assessment.[86]

The general rules as to pleading,[87] instructions[88] and variance apply.[89]

A mutual life association acts as trustee for the beneficiaries of its policies in the collection of assessments levied on its members.[90] Hence either the association or a receiver thereof may, for the benefit of such beneficiaries, follow and recover funds so collected which have been wrongfully diverted to another purpose by the association's officers.[91] Neither, however, can recover more than the damages actually suffered by the beneficiaries.[92] misrepresentation[1] of a material,[2] existing fact,[3] known to be false,[4] or made

Gill v. Fugate, 25 Ky. L. R. 1367, 78 S. W. 188. That the grantee holds a mortgage on other property of the grantor does not raise a presumption of fraud in a deed. Hart v. Cannon, 133 N. C. 10, 45 S. E. 351. Procuring the execution of a contract without having inserted a material clause according to oral stipulations. Davy v. Davy, 90 N. Y. S. 242. Where one signed a release of conditions in a deed, thinking he was signing a receipt, evidence held to show fraud. Monnett v. Columbus, S. & H. R. Co., 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 369. To show that plaintiff was induced to pay greater sum for third interest in patent rights than sellers asked for entire interest, by false representations of defendant. No defense that he was willing to pay and obtained such interest. Felt v. Bell, 205 Ill. 213, 68 N. E. 794. Sale of property by an executor held fraudulent, 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, pp. 336, 337, not having been complied with. Heppe v. Szczepanski, 209 Ill. 88, 70 N. E. 737.

Held not to constitute fraud: There was no fraud in the insertion of a certain clause in a mortgage, when it had been discussed by the mortgagor's attorney and was inserted prior to the execution of the mortgage. Anderson v. Anderson Food Co. [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 489. In a suit to quiet title, an allegation of ownership of the property constituting a false deduction from the facts pleaded is not such a false statement as to constitute fraud on the court. Ruppin v. McLachlan, 122 Iowa, 343, 98 N. W. 153. Where one was induced to become a stockholder in a corporation by false representations in a pamphlet issued under the sanction of the directors who relied on the fidelity of the secretary, held, they were not guilty of fraud, but of neglect of duty. Lyon v. James, 97 App. Div. 385, 90 N. Y. S. 28.

98. Where a mortgagee procured his mortgage by promising that he would take up other mortgages against the land. Hill v. Gettys, 135 N. C. 373, 47 S. E. 449. False promise to marry grantor and false representations that promisor was unmarried held to vitiate conveyance. Harris v. Dumont, 207 Ill. 583, 69 N. E. 811. Deed procured by wife from husband by false representations that she would return and live with him. Jones v. Jones, 40 Misc. 360, 82 N. Y. S. 325. Where a wife procured a deed from her husband by promising to live with him and be a faithful wife and three days later abandoned him without cause. Hursen v. Hursen [Ill.] 72 N. E. 391.

99. No fraud authorizing relief is shown where one was induced to put improvements on land under promise that at the promisor's death it should belong to the wife of the person to whom the promisee was made, where the promisor by his will devised the land to the wife for life, remainder to her children. Taylor v. Brinkley, 131 N. C. 8, 42 S. E. 336.

1. Misrepresentation as to the run of oil wells. Jones v. Draper, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 105. Misrepresentation that land was covered with valuable timber and underlaid with coal. Right to recover damages therefor not defeated because purchaser took title in his wife's name. Haldeman v. Schuh, 109 Ill. App. 259. That land abounded in minerals and that a corporation composed of good business men was operating mines on the premises. Cooper v. Maggard [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 607. Where one induced a conveyance to himself by representations that he would make improvements on the land purchased and such fact would enhance the value of the remainder of grantor's land. Troxler v. New Era Bldg. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 58. Fraudulent representation made by an agent to induce one to refrain from having an abstract examined. Riley v. Bell, 120 Iowa, 618, 95 N. W. 170. Misrepresentations by vendor as to depth of building lots and as to opening of streets. Slingluff v. Dugan [Md.] 56 A. 837. False representations of unprofitable condition of mines. Morrison v. Snow, 26 Utah, 247, 72 P. 924. Misrepresentation that discovery shaft was within the exterior boundaries of a claim. Connell v. El Paso Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [Colo.] 78 P. 677. Fraudulent statements in prospectus. Mulholland v. Washington Match Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 497. False representations as to profits of a certain business, made to induce a sale thereof. McCrary v. Pritchard, 119 Ga. 876, 47 S. E. 341. Falsely reading to an illiterate person a promissory note to procure his signature. Broyles v. Absher [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 703. False representations in a sale of stock that the company issuing it was incorporated. Bolton v. Prather [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 666. Fraudulent representations as to the number of acres conveyed entitles the vendee to an abatement of the purchase price. Ludwick v. Petrie, 32 Ind. App. 550, 70 N. E. 280. As to number of shares in pool of stock and arrangements made for their disposal. Spier v. Hyde, 92 App. Div. 467, 87 N. Y. S. 285. When two joint owners induced a third to sell his interest in a mine by representations that the entire property was to be sold for a certain amount. Upton v. Weisling [Ariz.] 71 P. 917. One procured a note from the owner of land by falsely representing that he held a lien on the land which antedated the deed under which the person to whom the representations were made claimed. Farkas v. Monk, 119 Ga. 515, 46 S. E. 670. Where one is induced by false representations to enter into a contract and is damaged thereby, all the elements of fraud are shown. Blumenfield v. Stine, 96 App. Div. 160, 89 N. Y. S. 85. Misrepresentation as to title in a sale of land. Campbell v. Spears, 120 Iowa, 670, 94 N. W. 1126.

As to financial standing: Representations made to a mercantile agency to establish a firm's credit constitute a fraud on one deceived by them. Tennent Shoe Co. v. Stovall, 25 Ky. L. R. 1615, 78 S. W. 417. False statements as to the solvency of a corporation by the president thereof to induce a sale thereto of certain property, though the president had no intention of acquiring the property without paying for it. Fitchard v. Doheny, 93 App. Div. 9, 86 N. Y. S. 964. Misrepresentations as to financial condition of a building and loan association made by the association and its agents to induce a sale of stock. Dunn v. Candee, 90 N. Y. S. 674.

As to value made by vendee who was familiar with the property to vendors who recklessly without knowledge of its truth or falsity,[5] and relied on as an inducement to conduct resulting in injury,[6] constitute fraud; but mere expression of opinion,[7] or false representation as to the law does not,[8] though the contra of the latter proposition has been held.[9] The intent with which false representations are made is immaterial.[10] had no knowledge and were unacquainted with business. Chess & Wymond Co. v. Simpson [Ky.] 82 S. W. 601. As to the value of securities made to induce a sale of mortgages. Simonds v. Cash [Mich.] 99 N. W. 754.

That a traveling salesman falsely represented that he had made sales of similar articles to several firms. Wilson, Close & Co. v. Pritchett [Md.] 58 A. 360. One having such control over land that he can compel a conveyance of it may contract for its sale without disclosing the actual state of the title. Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh [Kan.] 75 P. 498. That a corporation organized to take title to property purchased was not organized according to law is evidence that the sale was induced by fraudulent representations that improvements would be erected on the land purchased which would enhance the remainder of the seller's land in that vicinity. Troxler v. New Era Bldg. Co. [N. C.] 49 S. E. 58.

2. Misrepresentation as to priority of one mortgage over another is a misrepresentation of fact. Kehl v. Aram, 210 Ill. 218, 71 N. E. 347. Where one falsely represented that he was an unmarried man and procured conveyances by promising to marry the grantee, misrepresentations held sufficient to entitle the grantee to have the deeds set aside. Harris v. Dumont, 207 Ill. 583, 69 N. E. 811. In an action for goods sold, where rescission because of misrepresentation of fact was pleaded, but there was a failure to prove that the representation was false, or if false, material, it was error to refuse a peremptory instruction for plaintiff. Brenard Mfg. Co. v. Citronelle Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 509. False statement by officers of a corporation on selling shares of stock that none of it had been sold for less than par. Hubbard v. International Mercantile Ag. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 24. Sale of bonds, statement that attorney general of state had declared act under which bonds were issued constitutional, held immaterial. First Nat. Bank v. Columbus Sav. & T. Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 525.

3. An alleged false statement made by petitioners for a dramshop license, to the effect that some other person intended to sign the petition, is no ground for equitable relief against the action of the authorities in granting the license. Cooper v. Hunt, 103 Mo. App. 9, 77 S. W. 483.

4. Defense of fraud requires proof of plaintiff's knowledge of the falsity of representations. Halliwell Cement Co. v. Stewart, 103 Mo. App. 182, 77 S. W. 124.

5. Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. A partner who makes false representations to a mercantile agency to establish the credit of the firm will not be heard to say that he did not know the true condition of the firm when the statements were made. Tennent Shoe Co. v. Stovall, 25 Ky. L. R. 1615, 78 S. W. 417. Misrepresentations as to suitability of premises for the purposes of the lessee, made without knowing whether such statements were false or true. Prahar v. Tousey, 93 App. Div. 507, 87 N. Y. S. 845. An agent who without knowledge makes positive affirmation as of his own knowledge concerning the quality of land his principal is to purchase. Miller v. John, 111 Ill. App. 56.

6. Brenard Mfg. Co. v. Citronelle Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 509. That an applicant for a liquor license promised to withdraw the application affords no ground of equitable relief against the action of the authorities, there being no averment that plaintiff thereby neglected to take any proceedings against it. Cooper v. Hunt, 103 Mo. App. 9, 77 S. W. 483. The fraud must be directly connected with the execution of the deed. Pittenger v. Pittinger, 208 Ill. 582, 70 N. E. 699. Where a debtor represented to his creditor that he was financially embarrassed and contemplated making an assignment unless the creditor would compromise his claim for less than the amount due, the fact that in some minor details his representations did not correspond to his financial condition, held not to effect the validity of the transaction. Rotan Grocery Co. v. Noble [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 586; Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh [Kan.] 75 P. 498. As between the original parties to a promissory note, fraud is a good defense, and it being introduced, it was error for the court to overrule it and direct a verdict. Mueller v. Buch [N. J. Law] 58 A. 1092. An allegation that a purchaser was deceived by false representations as to the article purchased held not to state a defense. Butte Hardware Co. v. Knox, 28 Mont. 111, 72 P. 301.

7. Representations that a payment of 60 instalments would be sufficient to mature the stock of a borrowing member of a building and loan association and pay off his indebtedness. Wayne International Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Gilmore [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 190. Statements by secretary of building and loan association as to how much a borrower would be obliged to pay back held false representations and not an expression of opinion. Stoddard v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [Mich.] 101 N. W. 50. Note given as purchase price for saloon, seller stated that "it was a good business stand." Consumers' Brew. Co. v. Tobin, 19 App. D. C. 353.

8. Misrepresentations as to legal effect of instrument. Rutter v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 138 Ala. 202, 35 So. 33. Opinions of a layman upon matters of law expressed during the negotiations leading to an agreement, though erroneous. Frankfort Marine, Acc. & Plate Glass Ins. Co. v. Witty, 208 Pa. 569, 57 A. 990.

9. As to measure of liability one would incur by signing a note secured by a mortgage. Merchants & Farmers' Bank v. Cleland, 25 Ky. L. R. 1169, 77 S. W. 176.

10. Standard Mfg. Co. v. Slot [Wis.] 98 N. W. 923.

Fraud is personal between the parties to the transaction.[11]

Legal fraud.—Acts though not amounting to actual may constitute legal fraud.[12]

Ordinarily, one has no right to rely upon statements as to the character or contents of a written instrument,[13] but unless such reliance was negligent, relief will not be denied.[14]

Fraud in business transactions is never presumed,[15] and if one disregards his own knowledge,[16] or means of ascertaining the truth of representations, he will not be heard to say that he was deceived,[17] unless the representations concern subject-matter of a complicated nature with which he is unfamiliar.[18]

The evidence must be sufficient to preponderate over the presumption of good faith in business transactions;[19] but it is sufficient if the facts and circum-

11. If committed in the inception of a debt, it does not follow an assignment thereof. Thwing v. Winkler, 13 Okl. 643, 75 P. 1126.

12. Misrepresentation as to title constitutes legal if not actual fraud. Singleton v. Houston [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 98. Where one procured a conveyance from a relative for an inadequate consideration intending to preserve it for her, but died without making reference to the property in his will, it amounted to legal fraud. Turner's Trustee v. Washburn, 25 Ky. L. R. 2198, 80 S. W. 460.

13. Wood v. Wack, 31 Ind. App. 252, 67 N. E. 562.

One who signs writing at the instance of a person with whom he had had no previous business or acquaintance. Wood v. Wack, 31 Ind. App. 252, 67 N. E. 562. Where a wife signed a deed without reading it on representations of her husband that it related to property in which she had no interest. Hyatt v. Zion [Va.] 48 S. E. 1. An illiterate party cannot avoid a contract where he was negligent in being ignorant of its contents, but he may show that he was induced to sign it by fraud. Wilson, Close & Co. v. Pritchett [Md.] 58 A. 360. One whose only excuse for signing papers without reading them was that he was busy and was not in the habit of reading papers before signing them. Standard Mfg. Co. v. Slot [Wis.] 98 N. W. 923. Where one signs a written instrument without reading it, he will not be relieved from its effect by his want of knowledge of its contents, unless such want of knowledge was the result of fraud. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 248.

NOTE: The diligence required of one to whom statements are made is that degree exercised by the ordinarily prudent man. Gee v. Mass, 68 Iowa, 318; Wheeler v. Robinson, 86 Hun [N. Y.] 561; Page v. Parker, 40 N. H. 47; Hutchinson Furnace & S. Consuming Co. v. Lyford, 123 Ill. 300; Newson v. Jackson, 26 Ga. 241, 71 Am. Dec. 206; Belfast v. Boone, 41 Ala. 50. The law does not require the exercise of caution, but only the absence of negligence (Hoitt v. Holcomb, 32 N. H. 202), and the mere fact that a party has means of learning the truth is not fatal to his right of recovery (Arthur v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co., 12 Mo. App. 335). But one cannot rely on statements in circulars sent out by unknown dealers. Berman v. Woods, 38 Ark. 351.—Note to Fargo Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Elec. Co. [N. D.] 37 L. R. A. 601.

14. Where signature was obtained to an order for goods by misrepresentations as to the nature of the paper, the signor was not chargeable with negligence in signing without reading, the agent having at the time represented that he was in a hurry to catch a train. American Fine Art Co. v. Reeves Pulley Co. [C. C. A.] 127 F. 808. Where it is shown that it was falsely read to him. Monnett v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 369; Strauss & Co. v. Welsbach Gas Lamp Co., 42 Misc. 184, 85 N. Y. S. 367.

15. Refusal of one to sign a statement containing his representations is not sufficient to put one to whom they were made on inquiry. Ettlinger v. Weil, 94 App. Div. 291, 87 N. Y. S. 1049. An allegation that the person from whom the truth as to representation could be obtained was conducting business in a different city shows as against demurrer that means for ascertaining the truth were not immediately at hand. O'Connor v. Lighthizer, 34 Wash. 152, 76 P. 643. Where the fact of incorporation was not questioned by any one, purchasers of stock were not charged with the duty of investigating whether it was incorporated or not. Bolton v. Prather [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 666. Notice that the subject-matter of a contract fell short of the vendor's description does not charge the vendee with knowledge as of that date of all defects subsequently discovered. Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964; Barrie & Son v. Frost, 105 Ill. App. 187.

16. One who has personally inspected timber land with a view to purchasing cannot assert that he relied on false representations. Zilke v. Woodley [Wash.] 78 P. 299. One who draws a contract himself cannot defend an action thereon on the ground of fraud or mistake. Bessling & Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 639.

17. Mulholland v. Washington Match Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 497.

18. A machine. Mulholland v. Washington Match Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 497.

19. Evidence held insufficient to show that false representations were made in a sale of bonds or that they were relied on, or that the person making them knew they were false. O'Day v. Bennett [Ky.] 82 S. W. 442. In a sale of corporate stock. Guase v. Com. Trust Co., 44 Misc. 46, 89 N. Y. S.

stances concerning the transaction satisfy the mind that fraud was committed.[20] Whether fraud exists in any given case,[21] or whether ordinary diligence to discover fraud has been exercised,[22] and as to what were and what were not material inducements for the transaction, are questions for the jury.[23]

§ 2. Inferences from circumstances and condition of parties.[24]—Influence to be undue must be unlawful,[25] and be such as to destroy or at least impair or prevent free agency,[26] and have been exerted in inducing the transaction complained of.[27] Transactions between persons sustaining confidential relations,[28]

723. Evidence held insufficient to prove fraud clear enough to warrant the cancellation of a deed which had remained unchallenged for four years and the conduct of the defendant during such period was inconsistent with rights of plaintiff. Treat v. Russell [C. C. A.] 128 F. 847. The fact that a horse was sick at the time it was sold does not establish fraud. Citizens' State Bank v. Cowles, 89 App. Div. 281, 86 N. Y. S. 38. That representations made to secure the assignment of a judgment were false. Rickards & Co. v. Bemis & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 239.

Clear and satisfactory evidence (Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909), to show that a person's signature to a deed was procured by fraud (Pittenger v. Pittenger, 208 Ill. 582, 70 N. E. 699). To cause deed to be set aside. Burnham v. Burnham, 119 Wis. 509, 97 N. W. 176. Not sustained by proof of breach of warranty (Halliwell Cement Co. v. Stewart, 103 Mo. App. 182, 77 S. W. 124), or mutual mistake (Connell v. El Paso Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [Colo.] 78 P. 677). Proof must be clear and satisfactory and superior to that adduced to controvert it. Edwards v. Story, 105 Ill. App. 433. Objection to admission of evidence as to habits and condition of a grantor 12 to 17 years prior to the date of a transaction goes to its weight rather than to its admissibility. Donnelly v. Rees, 141 Cal. 56, 74 P. 433.

20. McNaughton v. Smith [Mich.] 99 N. W. 382. Instruction that inference of fraud could only be drawn from strong presumptive circumstances which must amount to clear proof properly refused as requiring too high a degree of proof. Id.

21. Nichols v. Coleman, 96 App. Div. 353, 89 N. Y. S. 234. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. McMillan v. Reaume [Mich.] 100 N. W. 166. Procuring one to sign a release for personal injuries by misrepresenting that no action had been brought, and that if plaintiff's attorney settled, plaintiff would get nothing. Hidden v. Exeter, etc., R., 72 N. H. 422, 57 A. 333. Evidence of fraud in a sale of corporate stock held for the jury. McNaughton v. Smith [Mich.] 99 N. W. 382. Whether a release of damages for personal injuries was procured by fraud. Chicago City R. Co. v. McClain, 211 Ill. 589, 71 N. E. 1103.

22. Davis Sew. Mach. Co. v. Crutchfield, 117 Ga. 873, 45 S. E. 228. Whether one was negligent in signing a release of damages for personal injuries without reading it. Whether he was justified in relying on representations that it was a receipt. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 248.

23. Kehl v. Abram, 210 Ill. 218, 71 N. E. 347.

25. The affection and confidence of a parent to a child is a natural and lawful influence and will not render void a deed inspired thereby, unless the will of the grantor was confused or controlled. Sawyer v. White [C. C. A.] 122 F. 223.

26. Not shown where a father executed to one child who lived with and cared for him, a mortgage and deed of his property, such instruments having been of record for several years. Drinkwine v. Gruelle [Wis.] 98 N. W. 534. Where a mother 77 years old conveyed all her property to one child to the prejudice of the others. Schwingle v. Anthes [Neb.] 98 N. W. 676. That a grantor, an old man, wept before signing a deed does not prove undue influence. Crooks v. Smith-Peterson, 123 Iowa, 439, 99 N. W. 112. Where an aged man deeded his property to a foster child who had cared for him. Id. Deeds by mentally weak man 70 years of age to his second wife and children by her. Nowlen v. Nowlen, 122 Iowa, 541, 98 N. W. 383. Where a frail old man who had shown symptoms of dementia deeded all his property to his housekeeper. Aldrich v. Steen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 445. Deed from sister to brother in consideration of support held not procured by undue influence. Erwin v. Hedrick, 52 W. Va. 537, 44 S. E. 165. Such as controls the will of the grantor. Sawyer v. White [C. C. A.] 122 F. 223. Evidence held insufficient. Watts v. Vansant [Md.] 58 A. 433.

Undue influence shown where a mentally weak person executed a deed at the instance of his brother in whom he reposed the utmost confidence. Winn v. Winn [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 110. Where a father 80 years old, totally blind and helpless, and entirely dependent on his daughter, deeded to her, without condition or reservation, all his property. White v. Daly [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 929. Deed from a mother to one child. Douglass v. Longcor [Mich.] 100 N. W. 1004. Mere fact that grantee was not in the room when the deed was executed was insufficient to show that the influence of a confidential relationship which existed did not continue during that period. White v. Daly [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 929.

27. Curtis v. Kirkpatrick [Idaho] 75 P. 760.

28. Where one occupies toward another the position of joint purchaser, failure to disclose material facts relative to the property purchased constitutes fraud. Hinton v. Ring, 111 Ill. App. 369.

NOTE. If fiduciary relations exist between the parties, one may rely on the statements of the other (Smith v. Patterson, 33 Ohio St. 70; Bradner v. Strang, 23 Hun, [N. Y.] 445); thus, intimate friends (Nolte v. Reichelm, 96 Ill. 425), principal and agent (Cheney v.

such as parent and child,[29] guardian and ward,[30] husband and wife,[31] attorney and client,[32] partners,[33] one standing in a position of trust,[34] will be carefully scrutinized by the courts; yet if the evidence shows that the transaction was voluntarily entered into and fully understood, it will be sustained.[35] Fraud may be inferred from the conditions surrounding a transaction.[36] A principal is responsible for the misrepresentations of his agent.[37] Gross inadequacy of consideration becomes actual fraud when the parties do not deal with each other at arm's length;[38] otherwise where the circumstances surrounding the transaction are shown to be reasonable in other respects.[39]

Gleason, 125 Mass. 166) where one occupies a position of trust (Wells v. McGeoch, 71 Wis. 196). See, also, Teachout v. Van Hoesen, 76 Iowa, 113, 14 Am. St. Rep. 206; Hauk v. Brownell, 120 Ill. 163; Davenport v. Buchanan, 6 S. D. 376.—Note to Fargo Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Elec. Co. [N. D.] 37 L. R. A. 613.

29. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud where a parent threatened with legal proceeding by his second wife from whom he was separated, transferred all his property to his children. James v. Aller [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 476. Deed from a father, a paralytic 88 years of age, to his son, of land worth $20,000, for no valuable consideration, held valid. Sawyer v. White [C. C. A.] 122 F. 223. Deed from son to mother held valid. It was based on a nominal consideration but the son testified that it was executed in consideration of natural love and affection. Marsh v. Marsh, 32 Wash. 623, 73 P. 676. Conveyance by parent 70 years old to one son held to have been resorted to in order to defeat the other children of their legitime. Barras v. Barras, 111 La. 284, 35 So. 553. Prevailing on enfeebled and susceptible mother to convey property on consideration of promised support. Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 162 Ind. 530, 70 N. E. 881. Complaint to annul held sufficient. Id.

30. The burden is on a guardian to show that transactions were fair. That the guardian held a mortgage on other property of the ward at the time of a deed from ward to guardian was a circumstance to be considered. Hart v. Cannon, 133 N. C. 10, 45 S. E. 351.

31. The burden is on the party claiming under it to show that it is just, fair, and equitable in every respect. Harraway v. Harraway, 136 Ala. 499, 34 So. 836. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud where one conveyed to his wife through his stepson. Smith v. Trefz, 202 Ill. 587, 67 N. E. 393.

32. An attorney took an advantage of his client in the redemption of mortgage foreclosure. Carson v. Fogg, 34 Wash. 448, 76 P. 112. Where the relation of attorney and client does not exist between an attorney and a layman, the burden is on the layman to show fraud in transactions between them. Jinks v. Moppin [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 390.

33. Speir v. Hyde, 92 App. Div. 467, 87 N. Y. S. 285.

34. A lawyer who procured from his feeble minded foster sister conveyances of land for a grossly inadequate consideration and by means of false representations. Walker v. Shepard, 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422. Where an administrator informed an heir (his cousin) that he had taken charge of the estate for her benefit, evidence held to show a fiduciary relationship. Schneider v. Schneider [Iowa] 98 N. W. 159. Fraud on the part of an executor in concealing a remainderman's interest from him cannot be charged to the life tenant unless he is shown to have participated in the fraud. Ruppin v. McLachlan, 122 Iowa, 343, 98 N. W. 153. It is not a fraud upon a remainderman where a life tenant asserts absolute title as against him. Id. Evidence held to show that a fiduciary relation did not exist. Gray v. Hafer, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 341.

35. Evidence held to rebut the presumption of undue influence in a deed from son to father. Ferns v. Chapman, 211 Ill. 597, 71 N. E. 1106. Evidence held insufficient to show that a physician by fraudulent representations induced his patient to purchase land from a third person. Torpey v. Murray [Minn.] 101 N. W. 609. Evidence held to show that there was no abuse of confidence in a conveyance from brother to sister. Lozier v. Hill [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 234.

36. Release of damages for personal injuries obtained while the injured party was suffering great pain, and after he had been given intoxicating liquor, held obtained by fraud. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown [Ark.] 83 S. W. 332. Conveyances for an inadequate consideration procured from an aged and illiterate woman. Obst v. Unnerstall [Mo.] 83 S. W. 450. Evidence that she had been defrauded by others is admissible. Id. Deed obtained by two strong willed men, one of whom was married to a favorite granddaughter of the grantor, from an infirm and illiterate old woman. Threats to deprive her of her granddaughter's society were resorted to. The price paid was about one-half the value. Held fraudulent. Combs v. Davidson, 24 Ky. L. R. 2528, 74 S. W. 261.

37. See Agency, 3 Curr. L. 68. In transfer of land. Sudworth v. Morton [Mich.] 100 N. W. 769.

38. Where vendee procured a sale of trees from aged spinsters who were unfamiliar with the value of their property. Chess & Wymond Co. v. Simpson [Ky.] 82 S. W. 601. Inadequacy of consideration where the person is of unsound mind and the contract executory. Wilkie v. Sassen, 123 Iowa, 421, 99 N. W. 124. Deed obtained by one from his foster sister. Walker v. Shepard, 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422. Where deed was procured from aged and illiterate people. Shea v. Teufert, 207 Ill. 222, 69 N. E. 872. Administrator procured the transfer to himself of a part of the estate of a decedent. Schneider v. Schneider [Iowa] 98 N. W. 159.

§ 3. Remedies.[40]—One who has been guilty of fraud cannot claim the aid of the courts to place him in statu quo.[41] Where the release of a cause of action is procured by fraud, a tender back of the consideration received is not a condition precedent to maintaining an action on the cause released.[42] A defrauded party must assert his rights without unnecessary delay[43] after the fraud is discovered,[44] unless by statute it is provided that a transferee who acquires property by fraud holds as trustee.[45] Affirmance or ratification of the transaction is a bar to rescission,[46] but not to an action for damages.[47]

Equity has jurisdiction to administer complete relief after having set aside a contract for fraud.[48]

39. Payment of $5,000 for an inheritance valued at $25,000 held not conclusive of fraud where the seller's right was contested and a counsel's opinion was that his share was but one-fourth of the estate. Davis v. Thornley, 204 Ill. 266, 68 N. E. 482.

40. See 2 Curr. L. 108.

41. With an intention to defraud a party, another gave him money. When the scheme fell through he attempted to recover it. Bauer v. Sawyer & B. Land Co., 90 Minn. 536, 97 N. W. 428. A grantor cannot impeach a deed executed for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. Watts v. Vansant [Md.] 58 A. 433.

See Fraudulent Conveyances, § 3, Who may attack, etc., 2 Curr. L. 125. Neither a grantor nor his privies can have set aside a deed executed for a fraudulent purpose, though it is without consideration and the grantor remained in possession of the land. Castellow v. Brown, 119 Ga. 461, 46 S. E. 632. Specific performance will be denied where there is any trace of fraud. Schneider v. Schneider [Iowa] 98 N. W. 159. The fraud of one partner in securing commissions is no defense to an action by the other for an accounting thereof, though such other did not participate in the fraudulent transactions. Van Tine v. Hilands, 131 F. 124.

42. Release of damages for personal injuries. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown [Ark.] 83 S. W. 332. An offer to return the consideration is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action to set aside a deed because of mental incapacity of the grantor and fraud and undue influence of the grantee. Sheehan v. Allen, 67 Kan. 712, 74 P. 245.

43. See Contracts, 1 Curr. L. 626; 3 Curr. L. 805. Relief cannot be had three years after the transaction. Dunn v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 204 Pa. 53, 53 A. 519. Deed from son to father. Son did not sue for cancellation on the ground of undue influence for 10 years; two years after the father's death. Ferns v. Chapman, 211 Ill. 597, 71 N. E. 1106. A claim of fraud is barred both as stale and by limitations after 40 years. Adams v. Hopkins [Cal.] 77 P. 712; Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh [Kan.] 75 P. 498. Where a purchaser of stock in a corporation was induced to make the purchase by misrepresentations as to the financial condition of the concern, an action to rescind within three months after learning of the falsity of the representations and before damage had been caused to third persons was sufficiently prompt. Dunn v. Candee, 90 N. Y. S. 674. Where one discovered the fraud in May and brought action to rescind in June, he acted with sufficient diligence. Mulholland v. Washington Match Co. [Wash.] 77 Pac. 497.

44. He is under no duty to exercise diligence in discovering it. Slayback v. Raymond, 40 Misc. 601, 83 N. Y. S. 15.

45. Civ. Code, § 3406 et seq. Failure of a grantor to rescind promptly is no bar to an action by his heir. Donnelly v. Rees, 141 Cal. 56, 74 P. 433.

46. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank v. Ball, 208 Ill. 256, 70 N. E. 305. Where a deed was procured by undue influence, evidence held to show that it was ratified by subsequent acts. Lee v. Hamby, 101 Ga. 49, 45 S. E. 689. Where for three months after the execution of a deed of settlement the matter was treated as satisfactorily arranged. Burnham v. Burnham, 119 Wis. 509, 97 N. W. 176. One after learning of the fraud continued in executing the scheme induced thereby. Carlock v. Sweeney [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 469. Where purchasers of land continued to call on the vendor for performance after they learned that it was liable to overflow. Hawes v. Swanzey, 123 Iowa, 51, 98 N. W. 586. Bringing an action based on the theory of affirmance. Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964. See, also, Contracts, 3 Curr. L. 805. Where the seller with knowledge filled part of an order for goods without objection, he waived the right to rescind the order because the agent who took it for him was interested in the firm to which it was sold. Columbia Mfg. Co. v. Hastings [C. C. A.] 121 F. 328. Actual knowledge of fraud or lack of diligence in discovering it is essential to the ratification of a contract procured thereby. Davis Sew. Mach. Co. v. Crutchfield, 117 Ga. 873, 45 S. E. 228.

Evidence insufficient to show ratification of fraudulent sale of patent rights. Felt v. Bell, 205 Ill. 213, 68 N. E. 794. Accepting a new deed perfecting some defects misrepresented does not amount to a condonation of fraud. Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964.

47. Retaining and using an article after discovery of the fraud. Hallwood Cash Register Co. v. Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 857. Where vendee did not elect to rescind a purchase of land because of fraudulent representations as to its location. Guinn v. Ames [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 232.

48. Compel restitution of money obtained thereunder. Hubbard v. International Mercantile Ag. [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 24.

Pleading.[49]—Facts constituting fraud must be specifically alleged[50] and proved.[51]

To show that a written instrument is void for fraud is not a violation of the parol evidence rule.[52]

§ 1. Agreements not to be performed within one year.[53]—No action may be maintained on any contract not to be performed within a year unless it be in writing;[54] but the statute of frauds has no application where the contract could be performed within that time,[55] though it was not in fact so performed;[56] nor where it runs for an indefinite time,[57] though such performance was not contemplated by the parties.[58] The statute has no application to cases where the contract has been fully performed by one of the parties,[59] or the payment of the consideration alone is necessary to complete the transaction.[60]

49. See 2 Curr. L. 108.

50. To rescind an executed contract on the ground of fraud. Wilson v. Maxon [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 123. It is not sufficient to allege fraud in general terms. Mortimer v. McMullen, 102 Ill. App. 593; McPeck's Heirs v. Graham's Heirs [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 125. General allegations are insufficient to authorize the granting of equitable relief. Gould v. Glass, 120 Ga. 50, 47 S. E. 505. Plea setting up fraud held sufficient. Brenard Mfg. Co. v. Citronelle Mercantile Co. [Ala.] 37 So. 509. An allegation in a complaint that defendant by fraud procured a conveyance from plaintiff is sufficiently definite. Motion to make more specific will be denied, though complainant may intend to prove forgery or undue influence. Day v. Day, 90 N. Y. S. 680. Complaint to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud and incapacity was not demurrable on the ground that it was impossible to ascertain on which ground plaintiff would rely. Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 P. 820. General averments in an answer setting up fraud held sufficient. First Nat. Bank v. Beach [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 287.

51. Mortimer v. McMullen, 102 Ill. App. 593. An executor brought action against his attorney for money received by him from sale of land. The attorney set up that the plaintiff consented to his retention of the money as compensation for services. Held, plaintiff could show that this consent was induced by fraud. Reilly v. Provost, 90 N. Y. S. 591. False representations alleged and not denied by the plea must be taken to be confessed. Phillips v. Crosby [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 142.

§ 2. Promise to answer for debt or default of another.[61]—A collateral agreement to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage[62] of another must be in writing,[63] but not where the promise is based on a new and substantial consideration,[64] or is given to the debtor and not a third party,[65] or where the debt to be paid is that of the promisor,[66] or the promise is not collateral to the debt of another.[67] It is not within the statute.

§ 3. Agreements in consideration of marriage.[68]—A parol promise in consideration of marriage may not be enforced,[69] unless wholly executed on one side.[70]

§ 4. Representations as to character or credit of another.[71]—In states where representations concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade or dealings of any person must be in writing to give ground for an action for false representations, the phrase is limited to representations made to induce the plaintiff to become a creditor and not such as induce him to buy shares in a corporation.[72]

§ 5. Agreements with real estate brokers.[73]—In New York, New Jersey, Nebraska, and some other states, a real estate agent has no right to recover commission for his services unless authorized in writing,[74] and such contract being void, he cannot recover in quantum meruit;[75] but apart from such statutes, an agreement to pay an agent one-half of proceeds received from sale of real estate in consideration for his services in negotiating sale is not a contract concerning lands within the statute of frauds.[76]

§ 6. Agreements with executors or administrators.[77]—The statute applies to the special promise of an executor or an administrator to answer damages out of his own estate.[78] This clause refers to promises to pay claims against the estate for which the representative would not otherwise be personally liable. It excludes promises made by the representative as original obligations.[79]

§ 7. Agreements respecting real property or an estate or interest therein.[80]—Other than lease for not more than one year,[81] no estate or interest in land or in any way relating thereto may be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, unless by act or operation of law,[82] or by deed or conveyance in writing subscribed by the parties thereto.[83] To be within the statute, the contract must

78. NOTE: "The liabilities of an executor or administrator in respect of the estate of a deceased person are of two kinds," says Sir William Anson. "At common law, he may sue and be sued upon obligations devolving upon him as representative of the deceased. In equity, he may be compelled to carry out the directions of the deceased in respect of legacies, or to give effect to the rules of law relating to the division of the estate of an intestate. In neither case is he bound to pay anything out of his own pocket. His liabilities are limited by the assets of the deceased. But if, in order to save the credit of the deceased, or for any other reason, he chooses to promise to answer damages out of his own estate, that promise must be in writing, together with the consideration for it, and must be signed by him or his agent." 79. NOTE: The clause of the statute of frauds which relates to a special promise of an executor or administrator to answer out of his own estate has reference to claims against the estate for which the executor or administrator is liable only as the representative of the decedent, and which, but for the promise, he would be liable to discharge only in due course of administration, and to the extent of the property that might come into his hands. Dillaby v. Wilcox, 60 Conn. 71, 25 Am. St. Rep. 299. It does not apply to a promise to pay a debt of the decedent out of the assets of the estate. Greening v. Brown, Minor [Ala.] 353; Piper v. Goodwin, 23 Me. 251; Stebbins v. Smith, 4 Pick. [Mass.] 97. "Executors and administrators," says Mr. Bishop, "in the discharge of their duties, enter into various original obligations, as well as incur responsibilities for torts, which are personal in their inception, binding them, and not the estate, though sometimes they may charge over to the estate what they thus pay out. With these, the statute has nothing to do." Bishop, Cont. § 1254; Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558; Chambers v. Robbins, 28 Conn. 544; Bott v. Barr, 95 Ind. 243; Farrelly v. Ladd, 10 Allen [Mass.] 127; Wales v. Stout, 115 N. Y. 638; Beaty v. Gingles, 53 N. C. 302; Kershaw's Ex'rs v. Whitaker, 1 Brev. [S. C.] 9; McGloin's Ex'rs v. Vanderlip, 27 Tex. 366; Collins v. Row, 10 Leigh [Va.] 114. This clause of the statute does not apply to a promise made by a man before he became administrator, although he afterwards becomes such. Tomlinson v. Gill, 1 Amb. 330. It does not apply where the representative's promise to pay money out of his own estate, not as damages for which the decedent's estate is liable, but to subserve some end of his own. Britton v. Angier, 48 N. H. 420; Wales v. Stout, 115 N. Y. 638; Fehlinger v. Wood, 134 Pa. 517; Bellows v. Sowles, 57 Vt. 164, 52 Am. Rep. 118; Huffcut & W. Am. Cas. Cont. 110. If a contract by an executor or an administrator is founded upon a consideration accruing after the decedent's death, it is deemed his individual contract, and is not within the statute, although it may relate to, and be connected with, matters growing out of the administration of the estate. be one which transfers or creates some interest in land.[84] Thus an agreement to divide profits derived from land,[85] or to enter into a partnership to deal in lands, is not within the statute.[86] A parol exchange, where some interest in land is transferred, is within the statute;[87] but not an oral agreement establishing a boundary line, for it assumes the parties merely decide what was the true line,[88] and on the same principle the parol compromise of a suit involving a devise of real estate is good,[89] though a promise to devise realty must be in writing.[90] The sale of standing timber,[91] or assignment of an oil lease,[92] is of an interest in realty, but emblements may pass by parol if personalty.[93] An enforceable easement cannot be created by parol,[94] but the parol permission to use the land of another amounts to a mere license which may be revoked at any time.[95]

§ 8. Sale of goods.[96]—By the terms of the statute, all sales of goods, wares and merchandise,[97] above the value of $50,[98] are void unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold and the seller actually receive the same or give something in earnest in part payment to bind the bargain.[99] The statute has nothing to do with contracts for manufacture,[1] or for the installation of devices in buildings;[2] but a contract for the supply of water is clearly within the terms of the statute.[3] Where in a joint undertaking, parties agree by parol to act as partners in the purchase and handling of goods, it is not within the statute.[4]

poration do not constitute a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute.[14] In many states by statute or decision the authority of an agent to execute an unsealed instrument must be in writing;[15] but in others the common law rule prevails.[16] Since an option creates no estate in land, an agent need not have written authority to procure the same,[17] nor need an agent to accept the delivery of a deed,[18] nor where, because of his implied agency, he binds his partner;[19] and the lack of such written authority cannot be pleaded against an assignee where the principal personally executed the assignment.[20]

(§ 11) B. Delivery and acceptance.[21]—By its terms, where there is a delivery and acceptance of goods sold, the case is without the statute, and these need not be concurrent with purchase.[22] Moreover, the acceptance and receipt of goods sold by one who assumes the contract from the vendee is sufficient,[23] but the exception applies only to the single contract and not those concurrent with it.[24]

(§ 11) C. Part payment and earnest money.[25]—Part payment for goods sold takes the sale out the statute.[26]

§ 12. Operation and effect of statute.[27]—Noncompliance with the statute of frauds save in the case of sales of goods does not make the transaction void, but merely unenforceable,[28] nor where fully executed, may it be set saide,[29] nor is the statute any bar to an action for recovery of the consideration, when the contract is otherwise fully executed,[30] nor to a suit on the common counts for the part fully executed,[31] except where by the terms of the statute it is illegal. Where a parol agreement is invalid because of the statute, it cannot be cured by a parol promise to execute the principal agreement in writing.[32] Moreover, a court of equity will not permit the statute to be used as an instrument for fraud, and in some cases where the parties have so altered their position that damages will not give any adequate remedy, specific performance or a constructive trust will be decreed,[33] though in some jurisdictions where the doctrine of specific performance is not recognized,[34] and by other courts the same result is reached on the doctrine of equitable estoppel.[35] Courts of equity will enforce the doctrine of specific performance on the ground of part performance when the agreement is certain and definite[36] and not subject to a conflict of evidence[37] and the acts relied on refer to and result from the agreement alone and are evidence thereof,[38] and the contract is so far executed as to render damages an insufficient remedy,[39] and offer is timely and not barred by laches,[40] but specific performance will not be allowed where there is an ample remedy at law.[41] There must also be a change of possession which must be new, absolute and yielded to by the other party.[42] While the part payment of a land contract without possession does not take a contract for the sale of lands out of the statute of frauds,[43] yet specific performance cannot be had on a wholly voluntary promise.[44] A stranger cannot avail himself of the unenforceability of a contract, since the defense is personal to the parties[45] who may waive it.[46]

NOTE: No one but the party to be charged, or some one in privity with him, may urge the statute of frauds either as a defense or as ground for affirmative relief. The benefits of the statute are personal. A stranger can neither himself set up noncompliance with the statute, nor compel the contracting party to do so. Cooper v. Hornsby, 71 Ala. 62; Simpson v. Hall, 47 Conn. 217; King v. Bushnell, 121 Ill. 656; Dixon v. Duke, 85 Ind. 434; Bohannon v. Pace, 6 Dana [Ky.] 194; Beal v. Brown, 13 Allen [Mass.] 114; Cresswell v. McCaig, 11 Neb. 222; Tibbetts v. Flanders, 18 N. H. 284;

On a question of conflicting laws, it is generally held that the statute reaches only the remedy and not the validity of the contract.[47] The statute of frauds is held by the Federal courts to be a rule of property in which the state law governs and not a matter of general common and commercial law.[48]

§ 13. Pleading and proof.[49]—The complaint need not set up that the contract is in writing,[50] for till the contrary is shown, it is presumed to be valid and enforceable;[51] but when the complaint shows that the contract is not in writing when so required to be by the statute, demurrer is the appropriate remedy.[52] Where it appears at the trial for the first time that the contract was oral, objection may be then taken.[53] Generally, to take advantage of the statute of frauds, it must be pleaded,[54] though where by the terms of the statute the contract is void, a general denial would seem sufficient;[55] but in any event, the enforceability of the contract for this reason cannot be raised for the first time upon appeal.[56]

Livermore v. Northrup, 44 N. Y. 107; Davis v. Inscoe, 84 N. C. 396; Lefferson v. Dallas, 20 Ohio St. 68; Houser v. Lamont, 55 Pa. 311; 93 Am. Dec. 755; First Nat. Bank of Appleton v. Bertschy, 52 Wis. 438. Thus, an administrator who, by verbal agreements with the creditors of the estate, has induced them not to commence actions against the estate within the two years allowed by statute, cannot be required, for the benefit of the next of kin, to set up the defense of the statute of frauds in personal actions against himself upon his promises. Ames v. Jackson, 115 Mass. 508.—From Hammon, Cont. § 310.

46. NOTE. The benefit of the statute of frauds may be waived by the party to be charged. Godden v. Pierson, 42 Ala. 370; Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427; Kirksey v. Kirksey, 30 Ga. 156; Doe d. Whitney v. Cochran, 2 Ill. 209; Jacob v. Smith, 5 J. J. Marsh [Ky.] 380; Cahill v. Bigelow, 18 Pick. [Mass.] 369; Montgomery v. Edwards, 46 Vt. 151, 14 Am. Rep. 618. The defense that a contract is within the statute of frauds is waived by allowing it to be proved by parol evidence without objection. Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943 and this may be done even as against his creditors. Brown v. Rawlings, 72 Ind. 505; Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459; Livermore v. Northrup, 44 N. Y. 107. This question of waiver usually arises upon the pleadings, and in this respect presents a conflict of opinion. In some jurisdictions, the statute of frauds must be specially pleaded as a defense unless the declaration or complaint alleges a writing, in which case a general denial is sufficient to admit of the defense of noncompliance with the statute. Skinner v. McDouall, 2 De Gex & S. 265; McClure v. Otrich, 118 Ill. 320; Grafram v. Pierce, 143 Mass. 386; Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N. Y. 538; 21 Am. St. Rep. 693; Huffcut & W. Am. Cas. Cont. 143; Wells v. Monihan, 129 N. Y. 161; Crane v. Powell, 139 N. Y. 379; Lauer v. Richmond Co-operative Mercantile Inst., 8 Utah, 305. Contra, Harris v. Frank, 81 Cal. 280; Suman v. Springate, 67 Ind. 115; Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 298; Fontaine v. Bush, 40 Minn. 141, 12 Am. St. Rep. 722. If a bill shows on its face that the contract is obnoxious to the statute of frauds, the objection may be urged by demurrer. Phillips v. Adams, 70 Ala. 373; Bolling v. Munchus, 65 Ala. 558. Unless the complaint shows on its face that the agreement sued on is not in writing, the defense of the statute of frauds must be specially pleaded, else it is waived. Bailey v. Irwin, 72 Ala. 505. When the contract is denied, it is not necessary to plead the statute as a bar. It is as fully raised by a general denial as by special plea. Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525; 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Hurt v. Ford, 142 Mo. 283; Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 738. But if the complaint alleges a contract and the answer admits it, the defense of the statute is waived unless specially set forth in the answer. Iverson v. Cirkel, 56 Minn. 299; Maybee v. Moore, 90 Mo. 340; Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 738.—From Hammon Cont. § 311.

Eq.] 57 A. 1011. A husband made a voluntary conveyance to his wife prior to incurring indebtedness. In subsequent divorce proceedings, the wife conveyed the property to a son on the theory that the land still belonged to the husband. This conveyance was made to defraud the husband's creditors. Held, the original conveyance fraudulent and not a reasonable provision for the wife which the husband to existing creditors, it might be so also as to subsequent creditors.[6] There must be a conveyance[7] of property of value[8] out of which the creditor could have satisfied a portion of his claim;[9] therefore there can be no fraudulent conveyance of exemptions,[10] except for a liability incurred prior to the time the property was declared exempt,[11] or as to a debt for its purchase price.[12]

A mortgage to cover after-acquired property,[13] or to secure future indebtedness,[14] or on its face purporting to secure an unconditional debt, yet in fact to secure a contingent liability, is not fraudulent.[15] If one be insolvent or if he contemplate insolvency, he cannot secure a pre-existing debt, whether the mortgagee have notice or not;[16] but if money be advanced to an insolvent person, or to one contemplating insolvency by one who has no notice, security taken at the time will stand.[17]

Sales by a retailer of his entire stock at a single transaction.[18]—There is a conflict of authority as to whether statutes are constitutional which make a sale by a retailer of his entire stock at a single transaction fraudulent unless recorded. Such a statute was held void in Utah[19] and valid in Connecticut.[20] It is held in Indiana that in order to uphold such legislation, it is necessary that it be construed as giving the creditor a lien analogous to that of a vendor or materialman.[21] Any other construction would render it unconstitutional.[22] The provisions of such statutes are intended to prevent fraud and not to change the law as to the effect of retention of possession by vendor after sale.[23]

As a general rule, transfers of personal property are to be construed according to the laws of the place of contract,[24] but not a transaction consummated outside a state for the express purpose of evading its laws.[25]

Consideration.[26]—A voluntary conveyance made in good faith by a solvent debtor is not fraudulent,[27] unless so declared by statute,[28] and will not be rendered so by subsequent insolvency not produced by causes existing at the time of the conveyance,[29] nor is such a conveyance fraudulent as to a subsequent purchaser who has constructive notice;[30] but otherwise if the debtor was insolvent at the time,[31] or rendered so by such conveyance.[32] In determining whether a consideration was passed, the transaction is to be considered in the light of surrounding circumstances.[33] A conveyance, pursuant to a promise the grantor was not legally obliged to fullfil, is not without consideration.[34] Mere inadequacy of consideration does not render a conveyance fraudulent,[35] but such fact may be considered in determining the good faith of the transaction,[36] and whether the consideration was adequate is a question for the jury.[37]

Retention of possession or apparent title.[38]—Retention of possession by the grantor raises a presumption of fraud,[39] but such presumption is not conclusive if the deed be of record.[40] In most states, it is provided by statute that a sale of personal property not followed by immediate delivery and continued change of possession is void[41] as to creditors and subsequent purchasers in good faith,[42] unless recorded,[43] though in Oklahoma, such a sale, though recorded, was held void as to existing creditors, regardless of statute,[44] and in Colorado, that creditors have actual knowledge of such sale is of no consequence.[45] Such a sale is fradulent as to subsequent creditors,[46] but a subsequent incumbrancer must show that he became such in good faith.[47] Words "immediate delivery" will be given a reasonable construction,[48] and what constitutes a change of posssession is purely a question of fact.[49] The delivery must, if possible, be real and ex-

Where a bill of sale of the property was executed and delivered to an agent of the creditor and the goods moved into a separate room of the debtor's warehouse, there was a sufficient delivery to pass the property as against a trustee in bankruptcy proceedings instituted more than four months thereafter. Allen v. Hollander, 128 F. 159.

49. Ranch employe moving goods purchased from his employer into his room clusive in the vendee.[50] The change of possession must be actual and not in trust, continued, instead of transient.[51] A mortgage of a stock of goods, under which the mortgagor is permitted to sell them in the usual course of business without accounting for the proceeds, is fraudulent;[52] but the mere withholding a mortgage from record is not.[53]

Reservation of benefits and resulting trusts.[54]—Secret trusts created to hinder, delay and defraud creditors are fraudulent.[55] A debtor cannot provide for his future support.[56]

Intent.[57]—Neither insolvency nor financial embarrassment taint a debtor's commercial transactions with fraud,[58] and no legal presumption of fraud arises from the fact that debts are subsequently created;[59] but unless otherwise provided by statute,[60] the transfer must have been made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors.[61] Fraud is never presumed,[62] but must be established by a

The liveryman let the team out and kept the proceeds, but accounted to the purchaser. Held not void under the statute. Id. Improper to strike out "and continued" from an instruction. Gallick v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 78 P. 583. Change of possession should be by actual, open and visible signs, such as can be seen by the public. Morris v. Coombs, 109 Ill. App. 176.

52. Gee v. Van Natta-Lynds Drug Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 288. Which allows the mortgagor to retain possession and "use and enjoy" the same. Wilson v. Jones [Colo. App.] 78 P. 622. Otherwise specific articles which may be used by the mortgagor and where such clause cannot be construed as an authority to sell. Id. Agreement that mortgagor may sell goods mortgaged in the usual course of business, if made without fraudulent intent does not render mortgage void as to good unsold. In re Ball, 123 F. 164.

53. Subsequent mortgagee must have extended credit without notice thereof. First Nat. Bank v. Reid, 122 Iowa, 280, 98 N. W. 107.

55. Where insolvent husband's earnings were used for purchase of property taken in wife's name. Wolfsberger v. Mort [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 817. Where a grantor's evidence was conflicting as to the consideration he received and the grantee received none of the rents and profits for several months after the conveyance, evidence held sufficient to show that it was fraudulent. Wise v. Pfaff [Md.] 56 A. 815. Conveyance from parent to child. Grantor still receiving rents and profits. Le Herisse v. Hess [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 808.

56. Evidence held insufficient to show that a transfer was made for the consideration of future support. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Pouder, 123 Iowa, 17, 98 N. W. 303. Such a deed is voidable at the instance of creditors. Flaherty v. Stephenson [W. Va.] 49 S. E. 131. One cannot create a trust of his property for the benefit of himself and family and thereby protect his property from his creditors. Wenzel v. Powder [Md.] 59 A. 194. Conveyance to trustees under an agreement that they will reconvey at grantor's request to use the proceeds of any sale made by them for his support. New York Public Library v. Tilden, 39 Misc. 169, 79 N. Y. S. 161. Conveyance to children reserving condition against alienation without grantor's consent and to grantor support for life out of property. Hanna v. Charleston Nat. Bank [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 920.

57. See 2 Curr. L. 120.

58. Mears v. Gage [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 712. A conveyance by an assignee for the benefit of creditors for the best price obtainable at the time was held not fraudulent as to creditors, though the purchaser realized an immense profit on turning over the goods. Curnen v. Reilly, 90 N. Y. S. 974.

59. Searcy v. Gwaltney Bros. [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 576.

60. Under Civ. Code, § 3442, providing that a conveyance by an insolvent without consideration is deemed fraudulent. Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 615, 74 P. 303.

61. Where one a resident of New York engaged in business in Pennsylvania and in Montana, being unsuccessful in the latter state, desired to close out his business there, his attorney sold his stock for him, telling the purchaser that the seller desired to withdraw from business by reason of ill health; there was at the time no suspicion but that the seller was prosperous. Prior to the sale, the goods had been falsely inventoried at $28,000; they had become shop worn since then and were sold for $7,500; held not a fraudulent conveyance. Gans v. Weinstein, 83 App. Div. 358, 82 N. Y. S. 280. A conveyance by one who was not insolvent aside from partnership liabilities and who did not consider himself nor was he a member of the firm under the decisions of the state of his residence, but was so adjudged by the bankruptcy court after the contest, preponderance of evidence,[63] and the fact that the parties to the transaction were relatives does not change this rule.[64] It is ordinarily a question of fact whether a transfer of property was made with fraudulent intent,[65] especially where the fraud depends on a variety of circumstances arising from motive and inferences from circumstantial evidence;[66] but in considering such cases, the principle is applied that one intends the natural and probable consequences of his acts.[67] Intent to defraud may be proved by circumstances surrounding the transaction,[68] but must be determined from all the evidence.[69]

Fraud of grantee or notice to him of fraud.[70]—Where the grantee has notice of the fraudulent intent of the grantor,[71] or has failed to comply with statuheld not fraudulent. Jacobs v. Van Sickle [C. C. A.] 127 F. 62. Where in an action to foreclose a mortgage against an estate of a decedent, the fact that the widow did not set up a technical defense is not evidence of fraudulent purpose to conceal her mortgaged property. Burnside v. Mealer [Ky.] 80 S. W. 785. Where, after a conveyance, a mortgagor released his mortgage. Mueller v. Renkes [Mont.] 77 P. 512. A conveyance by husband to wife for a valuable consideration and with consent of his creditors is not fraudulent. Budlong v. Budlong, 32 Wash. 672, 73 P. 783.

62. Where, in a suit to avoid a mortgage as fraudulent, both the grantor and grantee answered under oath and testified that the conveyance was to secure a bona fide indebtedness, a canceled note representing the indebtedness at its date was introduced, that the grantor received a salary from $2,500 to $4,000 and was engaged in outside ventures, that during the years his deposits had amounted to over $47,000, held no fraud shown. Jacobs v. Van Sickel, 123 F. 340. That a preferred creditor prosecuted rapidly without defense a suit in equity to subject the debtor's land to a confessed judgment does not show fraud as to other creditors. Johnson v. Lucas [Va.] 48 S. E. 497.

63. Where a creditor called the fraudulent grantee as his witness and such grantee testified that the conveyance was not fraudulent, it would not be set aside on the ground that such testimony was suspicious and not entitled to credit. American Hoist & Derrick Co. v. Hall, 208 Ill. 597, 70 N. E. 581. A judgment setting aside a transfer of property by a bankrupt on the ground of fraud cannot be sustained on the theory of actual fraud when the trial court excluded over exception, evidence of good faith of the transferee or where the trial judge's opinion shows that there was no fraudulent intent on the part of the parties and the evidence would not justify a finding that such fraud existed. Joseph v. Raff, 82 App. Div. 47, 81 N. Y. S. 546.

64. It is merely a circumstance tending to excite suspicion. American Hoist & Derrick Co. v. Hall, 208 Ill. 597, 70 N. E. 581.

65. State v. Martin [Conn.] 58 A. 745. Where a merchant transferred his business to his wife for a nominal consideration, the good faith of such transaction and whether it was a mere pretense. Mazioroff v. Commercial Bank [Mich.] 97 N. W. 763.

66. Evidence as to whether one acted as agent in purchase and sale of stock. Brown v. Bayer, 91 Minn. 140, 97 N. W. 736.

67. Transfer by an insolvent corporation to another corporation organized of the same persons. Bean-Chamberlain Mfg. Co. v. Standard Spoke & Nipple Co. [C. C. A.] 131 F. 215.

68. Circulating reports that he did not intend to sell and issuing checks he had no funds to meet. New York Store Mercantile Co. v. West [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 923. Evidence held to show fraudulent intent. Id. Evidence sufficient to show fraudulent intent. Parker v. Parker [Neb.] 96 N. W. 208.

69. Error to give undue emphasis to certain facts. Mears v. Gage [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 712.

70. See 2 Curr. L. 121.

71. Where shortly before failure, a debtor transferred to his sister for an inadequate consideration and gave her an order for money due him for which no reason was assigned. Smith v. Bigelow [Iowa] 99 N. W. 590. Where one accepted the assignment of a certificate of deposit bearing on its face notice of the likelihood of claims against the assignors, evidence held to show that he had notice of the fraudulent intent. Looney v. Bartlett [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 481. Complaint charging a fraudulent grantee with notice of the fraud and that she did not pay a valuable consideration is sufficient. Bass v. Citizens' Trust Co., 32 Ind. App. 583, 70 N. E. 400.

Note: A purchaser for a good consideration without notice of the fraud will be protected against his vendor's creditors, though the conveyance was made with intent to defraud them. Crawford v. Kirksey, 55 Ala. 282, 28 Am. Rep. 704; Galbreath v. Cook, 30 Ark. 417; Fishel v. Lockard, 52 Ga. 632; Spicer v. Robinson, 73 Ill. 519; Studabaker v. Langard, 79 Ind. 320; Durkee v. Chambers, 57 Mo. 575; State v. Mason, 112 Mo. 378, 34 Am. St. Rep. 390; Crabb v. Morrissey, 31 Neb. 161; Holmes v. Clark, 48 Barb. [N. Y.] 237; Leman v. Borden, 83 Tex. 620; Hinds v. Keith, 57 F. 10; Prewit v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 22. Contra, Hildreth v. Sands, 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 35. But where a purchaser has knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the vendor, the transaction is invalid as to creditors, though a full and valuable consideration was given. Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394; Christain v. Greenwood, 23 Ark. 258, 79 Am. Dec. 104; Ruffing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 260; Howe v. Ward, 4 Me. 195; Biddinger v. Wiland, 67 Md. 359; Burley v. Marsh, 11 Neb. 291; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557, 75 Am. Dec. 233; Fullerton v. Viall, 42 How. Pr. [N. Y.], 294; Roeber v. Bowe, 26 Hun. [N. Y.] 554; Mills v. Howeth, 19 Tex. 257; Traylor v. tory requirements, the tranfer is void as to creditors,[72] irrespective of the fact that the transaction was based on valuable consideration,[73] unless full value was paid,[74] and he is a mere trustee in respect to them;[75] but if he has no notice of the fraudulent intent,[76] or of facts sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man on inquiry, he acquires a good title.[77] One who assails a transfer must prove the fraud and the grantee's notice thereof;[78] but where the grantor purposed a fraud and the consideration was only nominal;[79] a prima facie case is established and the burden shifts to the grantee to show himself a bona fide purchaser. Suspicion of fraud is not notice,[80] and notice received after the transaction was consummated does not affect his rights.[81] Relationship of parties and circumstances under which the transaction was carried out may be considered,[82] and the debtor's reputation for paying his debts in the place where the sale was made is evidence of the vendee's notice;[83] but where the facts are not such that fraud could be presumed, the parties are not required to explain suspicious transactions.[84]

Relationship of parties.[85]—The mere fact that a transaction is between rela-

72. One who purchased the entire stock of a retailer at a single transaction and did not see that the purchase price was applied to the payment of claims of creditors as required by statute. Kohn v. Fishbach [Wash.] 78 P. 199. Immaterial that he had disposed of the goods. Id.

73. A fortiori one without consideration. Davis v. Culp [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 554.

74. A sale is not presumptively fraudulent, though the grantee knows of the grantor's insolvency when he pays full cash value but does not arrange for its application to payment of debts. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Durham [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 860. That the debtor did not turn the proceeds of a sale to his trustee in bankruptcy does not affect the rights of a bona fide vendee. Urdangen & G. Bros. v. Doner, 122 Iowa, 533, 98 N. W. 317.

75. Grantee of partnership property cannot claim rents while firm debts remain unpaid. Lawson v. Dunn [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 415.

76. Where a bank took a conveyance, evidence held insufficient to show notice of the fraudulent intent. Grandin v. First Nat. Bank [Neb.] 98 N. W. 70. Both vendor and vendee must be shown to have intended to commit a fraud. Edwards v. Story, 105 Ill. App. 433. Where grantee had paid part of the purchase price and taxes and put up valuable improvements, but had not received title bond until after grantor became insolvent, evidence held to show that he was a bona fide purchaser in good faith. Williamson v. Blackburn [Ky.] 82 S. W. 600. Where a grantee has promised to hold the property in trust for the grantor's children, his subsequent failure to keep his promise did not constitute fraud sufficient to convert the deed into an instrument creating a trust. Willis v. Robertson, 121 Iowa, 380, 96 N. W. 900.

77. Though a sale is made to defraud creditors. Urdangen & G. Bros. v. Doner, 122 Iowa, 533, 98 N. W. 317. That the seller is known by the buyer to be deeply indebted or insolvent is not sufficient to charge the buyer with want of good faith. Sellers v. Hayes [Ind.] 72 N. E. 119.

78. Where a cestui qui trust assigned his interest to the trustee, evidence held insufficient to show that the trustee knew of or shared the purpose to defraud creditors. Bronson v. Thompson [Conn.] 58 A. 692. The fact that action is pending against the debtor at the time of conveyance is insufficient to show that the grantee had notice of the fraud. Graham v. Morgan [Miss.] 35 So. 874. Evidence insufficient to show that a grantee had notice of the fraudulent intent. Wheby v. Moir, 102 Va. 875, 47 S. E. 1005. Evidence held for the jury. Mears v. Gage [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 712.

79. Heyman v. Swift, 91 App. Div. 352, 86 N. Y. S. 584. A grantee who purchases subsequent to issue of execution levy must prove that his purchase was for value to bring him within the protection of Ky. St. 1903, § 2358, providing that he shall not be affected unless memorandum was filed in the county where the land lies. Gorman v. Glenn, 25 Ky. L. R. 1755, 78 S. W. 873.

80. Urdangen & G. Bros. v. Doner, 122 Iowa, 533, 98 N. W. 317; Hooks v. Pafford [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 991. Insolvency is not to be inferred from suspicious circumstances but must be proved. Doxsee v. Waddick, 122 Iowa, 599, 98 N. W. 483. That purchaser knew this vendor contemplated winding up his business is insufficient. Id. Other suspicious transactions are inadmissible as against a grantee without evidence that he had notice of them. Id.

Note: The mere existence of the relation of husband and wife between grantor and grantee does not of itself create a prima facie presumption of fraud (Droop v. Ridenour, 11

tives does not stamp it with fraud,[86] but where such transfers effect the defeat of rights of creditors, they will be carefully scrutinized.[87] The burden is on the parties to establish good faith,[88] and if the known conditions are such that the effect of the transaction will be fraudulent, such an intent will be inferred as a matter of law.[89] If a parol trust in lands can be created by a husband in favor of the wife, the declaration should be explicit and unequivocal and established by clear and convincing testimony.[90]

Preference to creditors.[91]—In the absence of a statute prohibiting it, the giving of a preference is not fraudulent, though the debtor is insolvent and the creditor is aware that it will defeat other claims.[92] A debt created jointly by the debtor and another cannot be preferred.[93] The transfer by a solvent debtor is

App. D. C. 224; Gottleib v. Thatcher, 151 U. S. 271; Teller v. Bishop, 8 Minn. 226), and if the transaction is based ou a sufficient consideration, the existence of the relationship will not invalidate the transaction (Grant v. Ward, 64 Me. 239; Wauser v. Lucas, 44 Neb. 769; Allen v. Perry, 66 Wis. 178). So in transactions between husband and wife in relation to her separate estate, the same principles apply as are applicable between strangers. Lipscomb v. Lyon, 19 Neb. 611; Williams v. Harris, 4 S. D. 22, 46 Am. St. Rep. 753. The relation is, however, an important to be considered in weighing the evidence relating to good faith. McTeers v. Perkins, 106 Ala. 411. The mere existence of the relationship stamps the transaction as one which should be closely scrutinized. Kelley v. Simmons, 73 Ga. 616; Hoxie v. Price, 31 Wis. 82; Kennedy v. Powell, 34 Kan. 22; Kaufman v. Whitney, 60 Miss. 103.—From note to Adoue v. Spencer [N. J. Eq.] 90 Am. St. Rep. 499.

86. Conveyance from parent to child. Mueller v. Renkes [Mont.] 77 P. 612. Insufficient to show fraud in a conveyance from one to his son-in-law. Johnson v. Lucas [Va.] 48 S. E. 497. Evidence held to show that a conveyance from husband to wife was not in fraud of creditors. Graham v. Morgan [Miss.] 35 So. 874. An insolvent debtor cannot give his earnings to his wife and allow her to accumulate property in her own name (Wolfsberger v. Mort [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 817), but the fact that one-third the price of a house and lot taken in the wife's name was paid for out of his earnings did not render the conveyance fraudulent. Such amount was no more than he should have contributed to the support of the family (Eversole v. Bullock [Ky.] 83 S. W. 556).

87. From mother to son and daughter-in-law. Penn v. Trompen [Neb.] 100 N. W. 312. Between husband and wife. Multz v. Price, 91 App. Div. 16, 86 N. Y. S. 480. Where a husband transferred, while insolvent, property to his wife for an inadequate consideration, and did not relinquish possession but a short time thereafter was adjudged a bankrupt. Saxton v. Sebring, 96 App. Div. 670, 89 N. Y. S. 372. Transfer from husband to wife. Powell v. Neal Loan & Banking Co., 119 Ga. 696, 46 S. E. 847. Conveyance from husband to wife and from the wife to others was fraudulent. Scott v. Powers, Little & Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1640, 78 S. W. 408. Assignment of notes by husband to wife. Planters' Bank & Trust Co. v. Major, 25 Ky. L. R. 1969, 79 S. W. 264. Evidence insufficient to establish resulting trust in wife's favor. Id. Money used by a debtor's wife to purchase property, title to which was taken in her name, was received from the husband. Wolfsberger v. Mort [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 817. Deed from father to son where consideration was services rendered three years prior to its execution. Mason v. Perkins [Mo.] 79 S. W. 683.

88. A wife has the burden of proving by clear and satisfactory evidence that property taken in her name was paid for by her with money derived from some source other than her husband. Miller v. Gillispie, 54 W. Va. 450, 46 S. E. 461. A wife has the burden of proving that she is an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideraton. Walker v. Harold, 44 Or. 205, 74 P. 705. The burden is on a wife to show that a purchase from her husband was in good faith and for a consideration paid out of her separate estate. Rankin v. Goodwin [Va.] 48 S. E. 521. Mere holding of a bond by wife is not sufficient evidence that at the time it was executed it was recognized as a debt. Kline v. Kline's Creditors [Va.] 48 S. E. 882. Their testimony is to be considered in the light of their relationship. Colston v. Miller [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 268.

89. One with no motive to defraud conveyed all his property in trust. Matthews v. Thompson [Mass.] 71 N. E. 93.

90. Kline v. Kline's Creditors [Va.] 48 S. E. 882.

91. See 2 Curr. L. 122.

92. Johnson v. Lucas [Va.] 48 S. E. 497. The wife of a debtor may be preferred (Graham v. Morgan [Miss.] 36 So. 874), though the consideration for the preference be contingent on her surviving him (Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534). A parent may prefer his child. Id. A manufacturing corporation may prefer creditors who are directors or officers, though the vote of one or more of such officers is requred to pass the resolution authorizing the preference. City Nat. Bank v. Goshen Woolen Mills Co. [Ind.] 71 N. E. 652. Where a merchant allowed a creditor to take goods in payment, the fact that such creditor held a fraudulent unrecorded chattel mortgage on such goods is immaterial, the goods not being taken by virtue of it. Crusoe Bros. Co. v. Kudner [Mich.] 99 N. W. 788. Conveyance to creditor for an indebtedness incurred prior to the indebtedness for which the judgment was rendered amounts to a preference, but is not illegal. Thompson v. Williamson [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 602. As to preferences under Nat. Bankruptcy Act 1898, see Bankruptcy, 3 Curr. L. 434.

93. Debt created by the debtor and his not a preference.[94] In West Virginia, a mortgage not executed simultaneously with the creation of the debt is not a good preference.[95] After filing a petition in bankruptcy, a debtor is powerless to prefer.[96] A statute prohibiting preferences is not a bankruptcy law.[97]

§ 2. Validity and effect.[98]—The transfer passes all the grantor's interest subject to the rights of his creditors.[99] The transaction is binding as between the parties[1] and those claiming under them,[2] unless the party seeking relief was not in pari delicto,[3] or the debtor retained sufficient property to satisfy his liabilities.[4] It has been held, however, that such property may be recovered by the grantor.[5]

In North Dakota, a fraudulent transfer is void as to creditors, though made through the agency of a judicial sale.[6]

§ 3. Who may attack.[7]—The transfer cannot be impeached by the grantor,[8] his privies,[9] his heirs,[10] or administrator,[11] unless he acts as representative of creditors.[12] A conveyance made to defeat marital rights may be assailed by the widow of the grantor after his death, and her notice thereof at the time of marriage is immaterial if the grantor had promised to procure a reconveyance.[13] Creditors of the grantor may avoid the transfer.[14] There is a conflict of authority wife. Caswell v. Pilkinton [Mich.] 101 N. W. 212.

94. An agreement between a solvent debtor and some of his creditors for the sale of certain of his property and a pro rata distribution of the proceeds among such creditors. Cumberland Valley Bank's Assignee v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 1807, 78 S. W. 889.

95. Under Code 1899, c. 74, § 2. Feely v. Bryan [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 307. A transfer to a creditor without fraudulent intent is not as to debts subsequently contracted a preference contrary to Code 1899, c. 74, § 2. Feely v. Bryan [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 307.

96. Evidence held insufficient to show that a debtor intended a preference as to collections by a factor prior to bankruptcy, and as to collections thereafter he has no title to property with which he could prefer. Ryttenberg v. Schefer, 131 F. 313. As to what constitutes reasonable cause to believe a preference was intended, see Bankruptcy, 3 Curr. L. 453, n. 2.

30. Knew that the debtor had paid the consideration for property taken in his wife's name. State Bank of Chase v. Chatten [Kan.] 77 P. 96.

31. Assignee of a trustee in bankruptcy. Annis v. Butterfield [Me.] 58 A. 898. Remedy given by Rev. St. c. 79, § 6, by which a court of equity may apply in payment of a debt, property transferred in fraud of creditors is not applicable. Plaintiff stands as a purchaser. Id. A grantee from purchasers at an execution sale may attack a previous fraudulent conveyance by the judgment debtor as a cloud on his title. Wood v. Fisk [Or.] 77 P. 738.

§ 4. Rights and liabilities of persons claiming under fraudulent grantees.[32]—A bona fide vendee can convey his title to one with notice of the fraudulent character of the original conveyance,[33] but a purchaser from a fraudulent grantee, with notice of the fraud, takes the title subject to all the infirmities with which it is affected in the hands of such fraudulent grantee.[34]

§ 5. Extent of grantee's liability.[35]—A grantee cannot question the validity of the debt on which the judgment against the grantor was founded,[36] unless such judgment was rendered in a foreign state on a claim void under the public policy of the state where the judgment is questioned.[37] The grantee in an innocent voluntary conveyance may require subsequent fraudulent conveyances to be set aside before the deed under which he claims is challenged.[38] A fraudulent grantee acquires no rights;[39] he is not entitled to recover expenditures made to protect his title,[40] nor to be reimbursed for the consideration paid,[41] and to be entitled to retain exemptions of the grantor, he must make the selection;[42] but it has been held that he is entitled to be reimbursed for taxes paid.[43] The grantee in a deed executed in consideration of future support for the grantor and his family is not personally liable for the grantor's debts nor for the rents and profits of the property until the same have been sequestered.[44]

§ 6. Remedies of creditors.[45]—The creditor may secure his rights by garnishment,[46] attachment,[47] an action to have the instrument of conveyance canceled,[48] or by special statutory proceeding in equity.[49] The proceeding to set aside a fraudulent conveyance is in every essential aspect equitable in character.[50]

50. The surrogate court of New York has no jurisdiction to entertain proceedings to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by a deceased insolvent debtor. In re Bunting's Estate, 90 N. Y. S. 786.

It is not necessary that execution should have been issued on the judgment and returned nulla bona prior to the commencement of the suit.[51] A suit in equity to remove a fraudulent conveyance is not a waiver of rights under the judgment.[52] All vendors and vendees are necessary parties,[53] but not intermediate grantees whose rights will be protected,[54] nor a purchaser pendente lite,[55] nor the grantor for the determination of the issue of fraud,[56] and a fraudulent grantee who has conveyed the property away is not an indispensable party if he will be protected from liability from the outcome of the action.[57] Every person who has dishonestly obtained possession of the property may be made a party, though each may have acted independently of his co-defendants;[58] but separate creditors cannot join unless there be a joint interest in the thing demanded or a privity of contract.[59] The action must be brought within the statutory period,[60] but laches in prosecuting a pending action is no defense.[61] The action may be maintained in any jurisdiction where the guilty parties may be found.[62] Only parties to the action are bound by the judgment.[63] A wife's release of dower in a fraudulent conveyance is nullified when the deed is declared void.[64]

Acts 1898, p. 93, no. 123, prohibiting such transactions, is unconstitutional. State v. Dodge [Vt.] 56 A. 983.

67. Insurance taken out by one having no insurable interest is a wagering contract and void. Must be reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the as-loss.[68] The essence of a wager is that each party stands to win or lose on the result, and the gains depend on the event.[69] A put is a privilege to deliver or not deliver some commodity.[70] Contracts for the purchase and sale of merchandise for future delivery at a fixed price are generally regarded as valid if the parties contemplate the actual delivery of the subject of the contract.[71] But when they do not in fact intend such delivery, and their real purpose is to adjust the matter at some future time by the payment of the difference between the price named therein and the market price at such time, such contracts are, irrespective of the language used, mere wagers, and are null and void.[72] An arrangement between the customer and the broker for bona fide purchases by the latter with third persons becomes a wagering contract only by a further agreement that the bona fide deliveries contemplated shall not be carried into effect between the broker and the customer, and that there is to be no other liability on either side than a settlement of differences.[73] In the absence of proof of such further agreement, the fact that actual sales or purchases by the broker and deliveries to him are contemplated is decisive against the transaction being a wagering contract on the part of both parties.[74] The intention of both parties that the broker should carry the stock until other arrangements were made and that while so carried the customer should be liable only for the differences does not show illegality.[75] The burden of proving such agreement is on the party alleging the illegality.[76] Statutes in some states prohibit and declare void all option contracts for the future delivery of stocks, grain and other commodities.[77]

Lawful contracts may be lawfully canceled and settled in advance of the time of performance.[78] Hence the mere fact that contracts for the sale or purchase of commodities for future delivery, which are lawful in form, are settled daily by the payment of differences or by canceling out or substituting other contracts, does not render them gambling transactions.[79] Speculation,[80] buy-

78. Board of Trade of Chicago v. Kinsey Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 507.

79. Whether settlement is by "direct" or ing options, and buying on margins, are not in themselves illegal,[81] the test of illegality being the intention of the parties,[82] to be gathered from all the attending facts and circumstances as disclosed by the evidence.[83] The intention to gamble must be shown to be mutual.[84]

Under the South Carolina statute in regard to sales of cotton for future delivery, the burden is on plaintiff to show that it was the bona fide intention of both parties that there should be an actual delivery and receipt.[85] The statute, however, does not prevent a recovery, though defendant intended merely to gamble, if he did not communicate that fact to plaintiff, but, by his conduct, led him to believe that he contemplated an actual sale.[86]

Evidence of any facts having probative force upon the issue is competent,[87] and the parties themselves may testify thereto.[88] It is immaterial that the rules under which the transactions were carried on provide for legitimate business,[89] or that the contract itself states that an actual delivery and acceptance of the commodities is intended.[90] The actual intention may be proved by oral testimony, irrespective of the terms of the written instrument.[91] The nature of the transaction, the mode and method of carrying on the business, the occupation and pecuniary ability of the purchaser, the fact that the broker never calls for the purchase money but only for margins, and that the purchaser may at any time close out his deal and adjust it on the basis of the difference in price may all be considered.[92] There can be no intention to deliver when there is an option to do so or not.[93] Where the understanding is that the commodities are not to be delivered, the fact that the purchaser could have had them delivered had he so desired is immaterial.[94] Evidence that plaintiff runs a "bucket shop" and that his customers simply gamble in stocks and never intend to purchase them outright is inadmissible in an action on a due bill given for margins.[95]

It is not necessary that one asserting that the contract is unenforceable as a gambling contract give notice to the other party of his intention to repudiate it.[96]

§ 2. Rights and remedies of parties and their privies.[97]—At common law, gambling contracts were usually valid and enforceable.[98] This rule has, however, been done away with by statute in practically all the states, and such contracts are now regarded as void.[99] No action can be maintained on them either in law or in equity,[1] nor do they constitute a legal consideration for the payment of money.[2] A broker or other agent employed to carry out the illegal design, who is privy thereto, has no remedy against his principal for disbursements made, or losses suffered, or liabilities incurred by him in furtherance thereof.[3]

In the absence of statute, the loser voluntarily paying to the winner the stake lost cannot recover it.[4] Statutes, however, generally provide that any money or property deposited, paid, or delivered by any person upon a wager or its loss may be recovered by him, and that any person receiving any money or property won by him upon any wager is liable to the person losing the same in the proper action.[5] The right to recover in such cases is absolute, and the forfeiture takes place at once.[6] No demand is necessary.[7] The intention of the bettor other than to make a bet is immaterial.[8] Fictitious contracts for the purchase and sale of grain are not games or gambling devices within the meaning of the Missouri statute authorizing the recovery of money lost at any game or gambling device.[9]

Equity will not ordinarily lend its aid in the recovery of money wagered.[10]

Either party to a bet may, at any time prior to the actual payment of the money to the other party, by notice to the stakeholder, withdraw the bet,[11]

In a suit to set aside conveyances as fraudulent against brokers who are judgment creditors of the grantee where defendants seek equitable relief on the ground that the judgment was based on a gambling transaction, equity will make such statutes effective by discarding from the illegal transactions on both sides all rights or liabilities that arise or are enforceable only as claims under the illegal contract. NOTE. Distinction Between In Delicto and In Pari Delicto: The plaintiff, on the fraudulent representations that a foot race had been "fixed" and that he would be allowed to share in the winnings, was induced to bet money of the defendants, as though it was his own. He was also persuaded to put up $5,000 of his own with the stakeholder "to make a showing," as he was informed, in the event a count of the state money was demanded. As a matter of fact all the money on both sides belonged to the defendants, who had thus conspired to swindle the plaintiff.

and if the latter disregards the notice and pays the money, he is liable to the party giving it.[12] In such case no further demand is necessary before bringing suit.[13]

A judgment recovered in one state is conclusive as to the parties thereto in an action thereon in another state, and hence the defense that it was based on a gambling transaction is not open to the judgment debtor, in the absence of proof that a contrary rule prevails in such former state.[14] His grantees may, however, set up such defense.[15]

§ 3. Effect of illegality on substituted or collateral contracts or securities.[16]—The right of property in market quotations and the right to be protected therein are not affected by the fact that such quotations may be used for unlawful purposes,[17] or by the fact that a large percentage of the contracts made on the floor of the exchange owning them are gambling transactions.[18]

A banking institution may legitimately receive on deposit the money of a gambler with reason to believe that it was won at gaming, or by other questionable means, without accountability to anyone save the depositor.[19]

Notes given for money lost at gambling are void.[20] The burden of showing that he is a bona fide holder is on plaintiff.[21] Statutes making such notes void in the hands of bona fide holders have been held not to impair contract obligations.[22]

§ 1. Definition and nature of remedy in general.[23]—Garnishment is a mode

Held, although the plaintiff was in delicto, he was not in pari delicto with the conspirators, and where plaintiff demanded back his money before the pretended race was run, the plea of moral turpitude constituted no defense. Wright v. Stewart, 130 F. 905. The law encourages a repudiation of an illegal contract and allows a locus penitentiae to the guilty participator as long as it remains an executory contract and the illegal purpose is not put into execution. Bernard v. Taylor, 23 Or. 416, 37 Am. St. Rep. 693. It has been held otherwise after the delictum has been consummated. Abbe v. Marr, 14 Cal. 210; Anonymous, 10 Ohio Dec. 649. There is a decided tendency among courts and text writers that the deliberate swindler should not be able to protect himself by the legal maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis." of attachment or execution,[24] and is always ancillary to,[25] though in a way distinct from,[26] a principal suit which is either pending or determined.

§ 2. Grounds for garnishment and choses and properties subject.[27]—The garnishee must be presently indebted[28] in an ascertainable amount[29] upon a valid obligation[30] to the defendant.[31] It is generally held to be against public policy to allow the garnishment of the salary of a public officer,[32] though the legislature has the power to determine its own policy on this subject with respect to the offices, officers, and employes within its control.[33] A private watchman is not such a public officer.[34] In some states, the proceeds of a sale of a homestead are exempt from garnishment for a limited period.[35] One doing mental rather than physical work is not a laborer whose wages are exempt from process of garnishment.[36] The maker of a note which has ceased to be current negotiable paper is subject to garnishment.[37] A bank holding a draft for collection, the fund is subject to garnishment at any time before the draft is collected and the proceeds mingled with the general funds of the bank.[38]

§ 3. Persons liable to garnishment.[39]—The state is not subject to garnishment without its consent,[40] nor is a town in the absence of statutory provisions.[41] An administrator may be.[42]

40. Const. art. 4, § 24, contains no authority to sue the state. Keene v. Smith, 44 Or. 525, 75 P. 1065.

41. Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, as amended,

§ 4. Rights, defenses and liabilities between plaintiff and garnishee.[43]—Plaintiff has no greater rights against the garnishee than defendant has.[44] After the service of a garnishment, the garnishee cannot, as against the plaintiff, pay off his indebtedness to defendant.[45] The securing of a judgment against the garnishee vests in plaintiff the complete right to the indebtedness, together with all the rights and remedies possessed by the defendant for the collection of the same.[46] In some states, a judgment having been recovered against the defendant, an action may be maintained directly against the garnishee.[47]

The garnishee may set up the invalidity of the garnishment proceeding because providing for execution against the wages of a judgment debtor, does not apply to municipal corporations. Emes v. Fowler, 43 Misc. 603, 89 N. Y. S. 685. See 2 Curr. L. 132, n. 51.

NOTE. Garnishment of municipalities: It makes no difference whether the city or town is sued in foreign or execution attachment, it cannot be made a garnishee in either case. Erie v. Knapp, 29 Pa. 173; Hadley v. Peabody, 13 Gray [Mass.] 200; Brown v. Heath, 45 N. H. 168. The treasurer of a municipal corporation, being a mere agent thereof, is not liable to the process of garnishment to reach money held by him for the city. Smith v. Woolsey, 22 Ill. App. 185; Triebel v. Colburn, 64 Ill. 376. Nor will such process reach funds of the corporation accruing to it by taxation either while in the course of collection by suit, or after they have been paid into its treasury. Underhill v. Calhoun, 63 Ala. 216, overruling Smoot v. Hart, 33 Ala. 69. It has even been held, where a public officer deposits money in a bank in his individual name, but such funds belong, in equity, to the municipal corporation of which he is an officer, that such funds cannot be garnished at the suit of his individual creditors. Marx v. Parker, 9 Wash. 473, 43 Am. St. Rep. 849. Most of the cases above cited are those in which some creditor of an officer or employe of the city has invoked the process; but the rule is not limited to such cases. The municipality cannot be garnished for a debt due from it to a citizen, as shown by county orders for money. Merrell v. Campbell, 49 Wis. 535, 35 Am. Rep. 785. So where it is invested by statute with power to establish and maintain public schools, it is not subject to garnishment in respect to a debt which it owes for work done on a municipal school house. Barn v. Williams, 81 Ga. 796; Bank v. Mayor, 92 Ga. 361.

There are a few cases, however, which hold that, as a city or town is as much liable to suit for what it owes as a private individual, it is subject to garnishment. Newark v. Funk, 15 Ohio St. 462; Bray v. Wallingford, 20 Conn. 416; Wilson v. Lewis, 10 R. I. 285; Rodman v. Musselman, 12 Bush. [Ky.] 354, 23 Am. Rep. 724; Mayor v. Horton, 38 N. J. Law, 88; Denver v. Brown, 11 Colo. 337; Laredo v. Nalle, 65 Tex. 359; Speed v. Brown, 10 B. Mon. [Ky.] 108, 111.—From note to Leake v. Lacey [Ga.] 51 Am. St. Rep. 112, 114.

42. In a suit in attachment on a promissory note where it appears, on filing of the final account, that the legacy or a part thereof will probably be paid. Orlopp v. Schueller, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 611. But see 2 Curr. L. 132, n. 50.

NOTE. Garnishment of executor or administrator: The rule has been stated broadly and generally to be that in the absence of statutory provisions on the subject expressly subjecting an executor or administrator to garnishment, he could not be summoned as a garnishee or trustee with reference to the funds in his hands. Thorn v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 55; Sime's Estate, Myrick, Prob. Ct. Rep. 100; Brown v. Wiley, 107 Ga. 85, 32 S. E. 905; Boyer v. Hawkins, 86 Iowa, 40, 52 N. W. 659; Brooks v. Cook, 8 Mass. 246; Wheeler v. Bowen, 20 Pick. [Mass.] 563; Curling v. Hyde, 10 Mo. 374; Harrington v. La Rocque, 13 Or. 344, 10 P. 498; Ryan v. Marcy, 1 Kulp. 360; Parks v. Cushman, 9 Vt. 320; Brewer v. Hutton, 45 W. Va. 106, 30 S. E. 81, 72 Am. St. Rep. 804; Pringle v. Black, 2 Dall. 97, 1 Law. Ed. 305. The reason for the above rule, as shown by the above cases, is because executors and administrators derive their authority from the law, and it is their duty to exercise it according to the rules of the law, and they must account to the probate court for all the funds coming into their hands, and that it would be against public policy to permit another court to interfere with the administration.

While prior to a decree of distribution, money in the hands of an executor or administrator cannot be reached by garnishment against the creditors, heirs or devisees of the estate, the rule does not hold good after the decree of distribution has been made as by such decree each share is finally and definitely ascertained, and a cause of action exists, therefore, against the representative in his individual capacity in favor of the distributee. In re Narac, 35 Cal. 392, 95 Am. Dec. 111; Fitchett v. Dolbee, 3 Har. [Del.] 267; Bartell v. Bauman, 12 Ill. App. 450; Boyer v. Hawkins, 86 Iowa, 40, 52 N. W. 659; Hoyt v. of the defendant's bankruptcy,[48] but as to whether or not he can raise the question that the fund is exempt, there is a conflict.[49] A former adjudication deciding that the garnishee was not indebted to defendant decides that fact simply as to the time of the service of the writ, the time of filing the answer, or at any period of time between those dates.[50] The general appearance and disclosures of a garnishee, the court not having jurisdiction over defendant, is not a waiver of his rights.[51] Under the Arkansas statutes, a garnishee appearing only by affidavit, the plaintiff is not entitled to an order that he deliver the property of defendant in his possession or pay the money which he owes defendant into court.[52] In Pennsylvania, in an action of foreign attachment, the writ being served by garnishment and the defendant making default, the garnishee is not entitled to be heard on a defense going to his own liability until judgment has been entered and a writ of scire facias issued against him.[53]

A levy by garnishment upon the corporation stock of a debtor will impound dividends upon the stock declared while the proceedings are pending.[54]

§ 5. Rights, defenses and liabilities between defendant and garnishee.[55]—The garnishee may be relieved of responsibility as to defendant by paying the money into court.[56] Defendant, setting up as a defense that the debt has been attached in his hands as garnishee in another state, must show that the very debt for which the suit is brought was attached.[57] Garnishee, paying judgment against another than his debtor, is still liable to the latter.[58]

NOTE. Duty of garnishee to set up exemption of principal debtor: In two cases it has been held that a garnishee could not set up the exemption of the principal debtor as that was a personal privilege which no one but the debtor himself could claim. Conley v. Chilcote, 25 Ohio St. 320; Osborne v. Schutt, 67 Mo. 712. And in other cases it has been held that a garnishee was not bound to set up the exemption of the principal debtor under the laws of another state when garnished for a debt due a nonresident. Moore v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 43 Iowa, 385; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 83 Ala. 462, 3 Am. St. Rep. 755. At least where the principal debtor has actual knowledge of the garnishment and fails to make a defense, although the garnishment is in another state, the garnishee need not set up any exemption for him. Carson v. Memphis & C. R. Co., 88 Tenn. 646, 8 L. R. A. 412. Or where the principal debtor makes his own affidavit, claiming an exemption which is presented by the attorneys for the garnishee, the latter is not bound to set up any defense for him. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Meyer, 117 Ind. 563. But the clear weight of authority permits a garnishee, if it does not require him, to set up such exemption. Winterfield v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 29 Wis. 589; Clark v. Averill, 31 Vt. 512, 76 Am. Dec. 131; Davenport v. Swan, 9 Humph. [Tenn.] 186; Mull v. Jones, 33 Kan. 112. Other cases expressly hold that the garnishee must set up the exemption if he has knowledge of it. Wright v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Ragland, 84 Ill. 373; Smith v. Dickson, 58 Iowa, 444; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433; Turner v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 19 Neb. 241; Lock v. Johnson, 36 Me. 464; Daniels v. Marr, 75 Me. 397; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Mason, 11 Ill. App. 525; Welker v. Hinze, 16 Ill. App. 326; Parker v. Wilson, 61 Vt. 116. At least where the principal debtor is not notified of the proceeding. Peirce v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 36 Wis. 283; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Whipsker, 77 Tex. 14, 19 Am. St. Rep. 734, 8 L. R. A. 321. And the exemption may be set up after judgment against the garnishee at any time before payment of the money. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Smersh, 22 Neb. 751, 3 Am. St. Rep. 290.—From note to Illinois Cent. § 6. Conflicting and hostile claims and liens.[59]—The garnishment lien is fixed by the service of the writ of garnishment,[60] and the garnishment proceedings do not affect the rights of bona fide purchasers before such time.[61] Payment by a garnishee does not render him liable to a transferee of a claim unless he has notice of such party's rights,[62] but having such notice, he must set up such party's claim in his answer.[63] On being sued by such transferee, the garnishee must allege that he did not have such notice.[64] The claimant having knowledge of the garnishment proceedings to the garnishee's knowledge, the latter is under no obligation to notify the former.[65] In some states, assignments must be recorded to be valid against garnishment proceedings.[66] A garnishee sustains the relation of a witness to the action, but, when ordered to pay, he may make any defense he has to the action.[67] The garnishee paying his indebtedness to defendant after service of writ, the plaintiff is entitled to have his debt paid from such fund before the claims of subsequent attaching creditors.[68] Bankruptcy of the defendant renders all garnishment liens obtained within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy void.[69]

§ 7. Jurisdiction and venue.[70]—The court does not acquire jurisdiction by service of the garnishee alone.[71] The ancillary nature of the proceeding is often important in determining the question of jurisdiction.[72] A garnishee is not a defendant within the meaning of statutes providing that actions may be brought in a county wherein defendant resides.[73] Defendant cannot object to a change of venue because the garnishee might do so.[74] Statutory provisions govern.[75]

60. Fixes lien on note which cannot be defeated by a subsequent transfer made after maturity. Smith v. Butler [Ark.] 80 S. W. 580. Lien is not created by judgment. Armour Packing Co. v. Wynn, 119 Ga. 683, 46 S. E. 866. Under Code, §§ 3095, 3102, a subcontractor's claim on a public building is not prior to a garnishment of the money due the principal contractor to which the public corporation has answered, before receiving notice of his claim, though the filing of such notice was not delayed beyond the 30 days allowed by the latter section. Swearingen Lumber Co. v. Washington School Tp. [Iowa] 99 N. W. 730.

A maker of monuments contracting to furnish and furnishing a monument, his skill and personal services not being engaged, and not entering into the contract, the price to be paid therefor is not his "future earnings," within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 34. Chester v. McDonald, 183 Mass. 64, 69 N. E. 1075. § 8. Affidavit or application for writ.[76]—Though the statute contemplates an affidavit separate from the application, the combining of the two in one paper will not vitiate them if the essentials of the statute are included therein.[77] The affidavit should state whether the principal suit is pending or determined,[78] and defendant has a right to rely on the accuracy of such statement.[79] The affidavit and application claiming interest must state the rate thereof and the date from which it began to run;[80] if attorney's fees are claimed, the amount must be stated.[81] Material changes in the affidavit cannot be made by amendment.[82] The affidavit and application being quashed, the garnishee is released from liability,[83] and at the same time the liability of defendant on his replevy bond ceases.[84]

§ 9. Writ or process to garnishee and return.[85]—A writ[86] and service thereof[87] are essential to jurisdiction. It is not necessary that the writ describe the debt.[88] There should be in the record a return by the officer showing that the process has been served, and that thereby the court has acquired jurisdiction of the garnishee.[89] The return, being only evidence of service, is not jurisdictional,[90] and if there has been a good service, but an irregular or incomplete return, the defect may be cured by an entry making the return conform to the facts.[91] The officer seeking to amend, the garnishee may raise an issue as to the validity of the service, and on satisfactory evidence may prevent the amendment, or on similar proof in a direct attack thereon, may have the judgment set aside.[92] In such case, it appearing affirmatively that valid service was made, it is unnecessary to amend the return.[93]

§ 10. Answer or disclosure and later pleadings or traverse.[94]—Ignorance of the time to answer is not a legal excuse for failure to answer at the time fixed by law.[95] In Georgia, the garnishee is required to answer by the first term.[96] The traverse must form an issue.[97] The answer denying indebtedness to and possession garnishee was entitled to a change of venue under Rev. Code 1892, § 2147.

75. Civ. Code § 223 (Sand. & H. of property of the defendant is sufficient upon a trial of the issues raised by a traverse thereof to sustain the defense of res judicata.[98]

§ 11. Claims or interventions.[99]—A claimant not being a party to the garnishment proceedings, he is not bound thereby.[1]

§ 12. Dissolution of writ.[2]—The same particularity of statement is not required in a motion to dismiss garnishment proceedings as in a pleading.[3] A bond to dissolve the garnishment must follow the statute,[4] but being in the exact language of the statute, it is sufficient.[5]

§ 13. Effect of pendency of other proceedings; stay, etc.[6]—A garnishee being sued by defendant prior to the garnishment proceedings, the court having acquired jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, payment of defendant's judgment bars recovery in the garnishment proceedings.[7]

§ 14. Trial, verdict and judgments, costs and execution.[8]—The answer of the garnishee being indeterminate and not conclusive, the proper practice is to summon the garnishee for a new examination,[9] and in some states the appellate court may conduct such examination through the instrumentality of its clerk.[10] The general rules as to burden of proof apply.[11]

A judgment rendered against a garnishee before judgment is rendered against the principal defendant is void.[12] A judgment against a garnishee duly entered is conclusive, as to him, that every jurisdictional allegation in the affidavit to obtain garnishment is true.[13]

The allowance to a garnishee of attorney's fees cannot exceed the amount prayed for.[14]

A demand by an execution plaintiff is not a demand "by force of the execution."[15]

state or its proper delegates.[18] A legislative grant of use of streets is valid,[19] and the right may be exercised without the further consent of the municipality concerned,[20] or any compensation to it for use of the streets.[21]

A gas franchise to lay mains in the streets must be understood to have been granted subject to the use of the streets for other purposes and public works.[22] A franchise in a particular locality will not prevent the granting of a subsequent franchise to another party if the statute does not so provide.[23]

that there is not a sufficient supply to furnish him without depriving prior consumers of reasonable requirements,[30] nor on the ground that he may procure gas from another company, supplied by the former.[31] The obligation to lay mains to supply private consumers does not require an expenditure without reasonable expectation that the amount of gas consumed will warrant it.[32]

The remedy, if any, to prevent a natural gas company from taking up a pipe line on certain premises is by injunction and not mandamus.[33] The penalty for failure to supply gas to a consumer who has paid what is due from him, provided by statute in California, cannot be enforced unless the consumer has made a tender of the amount due, accompanied by a deposit of the sum to the credit of the company.[34]

Contracts with consumers.—A solicitor and collector for a gas company who is its ostensible, if not its actual, agent for the purpose, may bind the company by his contracts.[35] But if made without authority, the company becomes bound when it accepts and acts upon a contract, with implied notice of its terms.[36] A gas contract is binding on a company, though it does not expressly agree to furnish gas, since the law imposes that duty, when the consumer performs his part of the agreement.[37] In such case an injunction will lie to restrain the company from cutting off a supply of gas to the consumer.[38]

Public contracts.—The rights of the parties to contracts for public lighting are governed by the terms of such contracts;[39] performance must be by legal means.[40]

§ 2. Public regulation.—While a reasonable regulation of the manufacture of gas is a proper exercise of the police power, an attempted exercise of the power by prohibiting its manufacture in a certain district where a company already has an established business,[41] or limiting a district wherein it may lawfully be manufactured, so as to exclude land where a company has expended money in construction, under a license from fire commissioners,[42] is an unlawful interference with property rights, and cannot be upheld.

City of Columbus v. Columbus Gas Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 37. Under Minn. Laws 1856, p. 87, c. 53, § 9, the city of St. Paul became obligated to pay to the St. Paul Gaslight Co. 8% annually on the cost of erection of posts, lamps and equipment to light the city, the obligation to continue as long as the lamps remain in actual service. 41. Ordinance of Los Angeles county making it a penal offense to maintain gas works in a thinly settled district, apart from residences, held void. In re Smith [Cal.] 77 P. 180.

A municipal corporation has no power to regulate prices charged consumers of gas unless that power has been expressly delegated, or may be implied from other powers expressly granted.[43] Under the Illinois statute permitting consolidation of gas companies, a contract exemption of a corporation, absorbing others, from state regulation of rates, does not extend to the business of the companies absorbed, which do not possess such immunity in their own right.[44]

§ 3. Torts and crimes.[45]—Gas companies are liable in tort for negligence resulting in explosions[46] or escape[47] of gas.[48] A complaint alleging that an explosion of gas on plaintiff's premises was caused by the negligent manner in which gas mains and pipes were there laid is sufficient without a bill of particulars showing the particular act or acts causing the explosion.[49] Under a contract between a gas company and consumers, providing for free access to the meter and discontinuance of service on default, an agent of the company committed no trespass in entering on the premises without the consent of the owner or occupant and removing the meter without force or unnecessary damage.[50]

Allowing natural gas to escape from wells into the air, needlessly, is made an offense in Indiana.[51]

42. After a gas company had expended over $2,500 in construction, having a permit from fire commissioners, the Los Angeles city council amended the law limiting the territory where gas works could lawfully be maintained, so as to cut off the land where the company had started to build. The motive seemed to be to preserve the monopoly of another company. Ordinance held invalid, and criminal proceedings based thereon enjoined. Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 25 S. Ct. 18, 49 Law. Ed. —; Daly v. Elton, 25 S. Ct. 22, 49 Law. Ed.—.

43. Chicago has no such power under § 66 of Ill. city and village act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 24). Mills v. Chicago, 127 F. 731. Equity has jurisdiction to enjoin enforcement of an invalid ordinance fixing prices charged for gas, and providing a penalty for each violation, to avoid multiplicity of suits. Id.

NOTE. State regulation of rates: The business of supplying gas to the public is one subject to state regulation under the principles laid down in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113. Thus it is held that a natural gas company contracting with a city to supply its inhabitants devotes its property to public use to such a degree as to warrant statutory regulation of its charges, if such regulation does not result in any impairment of the obligation of its contract. Toledo v. Northwestern Ohio Nat. Gas Co., 5 Ohio C. C. 557. See, also, State v. Columbus Gaslight & C. Co., 34 Ohio St. 572, 32 Am. Rep. 390; Zanesville v. Zanesville Gaslight Co., 47 Ohio St. 1; Spring Valley W. W. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347; Wheeler v. Northern, etc., Co., 10 Colo. 582, 3 Am. St. Rep. 603; American W. W. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610.

But an ordinance regulating the price of natural gas is not authorized by general statutory authority to provide reasonable regulations for the safe supply, distribution, and consumption of such gas. Lewisville Nat. Gas Co. v. State, 135 Ind. 49, 21 L. R. A. 734; overruling on this point Rushville v. Rushville Nat. Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 15 L. R. A. 321. A similar ordinance was held invalid where the statute permitted "such regulation" as municipal authorities might prescribe, and the company had obtained the right to use the streets without any provision in the franchise as to prices to be charged private consumers. S. 1, 48 Law. Ed. 851. Section 11 of act of June 5, 1897, providing that a corporation which absorbed others should not charge a higher rate than that charged the year previous to consolidation, did not fix a rate so as to preclude a reduction thereof by the state; but it simply fixed a maximum charge. § 1. Definition and Distinctions (1560).
§ 2. Validity and Requisites (1560).
§ 3. Fraud, Undue Influence, Mistake or Incapacity (1562).

§ 1. Definition and distinctions.[52]—A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily and without consideration.[53] Gifts causa mortis are distinguishable from gifts inter vivos in this: the former are made in contemplation of death,[54] and may be revoked during the lifetime of the donor,[55] while the latter are absolute.[56] Again, the former are subject to the debts of the deceased donor,[57] while this is true of the latter only in certain cases. In either case, the gift must be complete and the property delivered and accepted.[58]

§ 2. Validity and requisites.[59]—To constitute a valid donation, either causa mortis or inter vivos, it is indispensable that the property be such as may be the subject of a gift,[60] and a disclosed present intention of the donor to divest himself of the title and dominion,[61] a delivery, which must be absolute in case of a gift inter vivos,[62] and conditional in case of a gift causa mortis,[63] and acceptance by the donee,[64] are necessary. "Attributes of a gift causa mortis are that it must be of

The requisites of both are practically the same, the principal distinction being that in one case the gift is absolute and irrevocable, whereas in the other it is a conditional gift, taking effect only upon the death of the donor, who in the meantime has the power of revocation. Whether a mother by indorsement and delivery to a son of a note executed to her by the son made a gift thereof to him, or whether the note belonged to the father, who had possession of it at the time of his death, was a question for the jury. Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784. Where a note from a son to his father was put in judgment, and the father thereafter endorsed a release upon such judgment, this was evidence of a completed gift. Boblett v. Barlow [Ky.] 83 S. 62. Harrell v. Nicholson, 119 Ga. 458, 46 S. E. 623. The intent of the donor in delivering the property is a material inquiry. Stroup v. Bridger [Iowa] 100 N. W. 113. Hallenbeck, 44 Misc. 109, 89 N. Y. S. 780. Cal. Civ. Code, § 1147, making delivery essential to the validity of a gift, is limited to verbal gifts. Driscoll v. Driscoll [Cal.] 77 P. 471. Where a father, holding a note against his son, indorsed on the note that it was not to draw interest, and during his last illness procured an indorsement to be made in a memorandum book that the note was not to be paid, but there was never any delivery of the note to the son, there was no valid gift inter vivos. Burge v. Burge's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 979, 76 S. W. 873.

63. Hawn v. Stoler, 208 Pa. 610, 57 A. 1115. The handing of bank books by one who is critically ill to another accompanied by the instruction "Bury me out of this, and whatever is left is yours" constitutes a valid gift causa mortis. Mahon v. Dime Sav. Bank, 92 App. Div. 506, 87 N. Y. S. 258. So delivery to the donee of a written receipt for money deposited with another for safe keeping is sufficient. Claytor v. Pierson [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 935. But the loan of a sum of money and taking a receipt therefor in which it is stated to be agreed that "in case of the death of W. M. R. (the donor), that B. C. R. (the alleged donee) is to take charge of this money" does not amount to a delivery. Ragan v. Hill [Ark.] 80 S. W. 150.

64. Hooper v. Vanstrum [Minn.] 100 N. W. 229; Davis v. Kuck [Minn.] 101 N. W. 165. When the possession of the conveyance is retained by the record owner, without a present intention to part with the absolute dominion of the property, and the grantee has no notice thereof, the record of such conveyance is ineffective to transfer title.

personal property and made in the last illness of the donor while the apprehension of death is imminent, and subject to the implied condition that if he recovers or if the donee die first, the gift shall be void; and possession of the property must be delivered at the time of the gift to the donee or to some one for him; and the gift must be accepted by the donee."[65] A gift need not be in writing, unless it be of land,[66] but where a writing is employed to effectuate a gift, it should contain words apt to effect the transfer.[67]

The delivery need only be such as the nature of the property reasonably admits.[68] Where a mother by indorsement and delivery of a note executed to her by a son made a gift of it to him, the fact that the father at the time of his death had possession of the note would not defeat the gift.[69]

In every case of an alleged gift the burden is upon the donee to establish a complete and valid donation.[70] The prima facie inference of a gift arising from the deposit of money of the husband in the wife's name may be rebutted,[71] and declarations of a donor made at some considerable time after a transfer of property are incompetent, either to establish,[72] or to defeat a gift.[73]

Delivery of a note of donor[74] does not constitute a gift causa mortis.[75]

67. An instrument reciting: "I am leaving for S. and before I start I write this to certify that it is my wish that M. shall not be asked for the money she borrowed from me or the interest on it. She and I have a perfect understanding about my business" does not on its face import a gift. Collins v. Maude [Cal.] 77 P. 945.

68. If the subject of a gift is a chose in action, the delivery of the most effectual means of reducing the chose to possession or use, such as the delivery of the writing representing the chose, if present and capable of delivery, is indispensable. Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles [C. C. A.] 129 F. 287. Where this is not possible, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument. Driscoll v. Driscoll [Cal.] 77 P. 471; Hawn v. Stoler, 208 Pa. 610, 57 A. 1115. As title to a promissory note may pass by delivery, it needs no written assignment. Harrell v. Nicholson, 119 Ga. 458, 46 S. E. 623. Since the interest in a partnership is incapable of manual delivery, the execution and delivery of a written conveyance thereof is a sufficient delivery. Driscoll v. Driscoll [Cal.] 77 P. 471. But the delivery of a written assignment of stock in a corporation is ineffectual where the donor retains the certificates. Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles [C. C. A.] 129 F. 287. That certificates of stock were not indorsed by the donor does not render the gift incomplete as matter of law. Bond v. Bean, 72 N. H. 444, 57 A. 340. The delivery of keys is not always conclusive. Likewise where a husband, having money, the community property of himself and wife, deposited in his name, gave the wife an order on the bank authorizing it to allow her to draw the money, and she thereafter drew it and deposited it in her own name. Sprague v. Walton [Cal.] 78 P. 645. So, where a mother who had deposited money in a savings bank in her own name, delivered the bank book to the daughter, with a written order directing the bank to pay the amount of the deposit to the daughter who thereafter had exclusive possession of the book for 14 years, such facts support a finding of title in the daughter by gift. § 3. Fraud, undue influence, mistake or incapacity.[76]—To be valid, a gift must be free from fraud,[77] undue influence,[78] or mistake,[79] and the donor must be competent to contract.[80]

GOOD WILL.

A sale of the good will with a covenant not to engage in similar business is valid if not in restraint of trade,[81] and the seller may be enjoined from breaking his covenant,[82] or from holding himself out as the manager of a similar business,[83] and strangers to the sale may be enjoined from holding him out as their superintendent,[84] but the sale does not prevent the seller's wife from using her own name in a similar business[85] with her husband as agent.[86]

GRAND JURY.

Qualification and challenge—Effect of disqualification.[87]—The competency of Federal grand jurors in Porto Rico is to be determined by the local statute.[88]

Disqualification of grand jurors is usually regarded as fatal to the indictment,[89] but as to disqualification of a single juror, the cases are in conflict;[90] where the objection is allowed, it must be timely made.[91] The objection may be made by challenge[92] or plea in abatement.[93] The plea must allege facts showing prejudice, a general averment being insufficient.[94] It is discretionary to summon a grand juror to be examined as to his literacy on challenge to the indictment,[95] and the fact that a juror signed by mark in several instances is not sufficient to prove him illiterate.[96]

76. See 2 Curr. L. 141.

77. A voluntary gift of land may be upheld if no fraud is practiced by or for the grantee, where the relationship of the parties and the beneficial character of the gift are such as would naturally justify the belief that the grantor intended to make and complete the same. Hooper v. Vanstrum [Minn.] 100 N. W. 229. To avoid gift of negotiable instrument by father to son, widow should aver fraud and not merely that she was prejudiced by the gift. Burge v. A contention that the court in selecting grand jurors acted under the Federal instead of the local statute presents a question reviewable in the United States supreme court on error to the United States district court in Porto Rico.[97]

Summoning and impanelling.[98]—A court with common law powers may invoke common law methods of summoning a grand jury if the statute be inadequate.[99] Discharge of a grand juror and substitution of another is at most an irregularity, and the grand jury is a defacto body whose acts cannot be questioned.[1] That the order for summoning the grand jurors was made under a law which had not yet taken effect is no ground for quashing an indictment where the jurors summoned were those who had already been selected under the law in force.[2] An unsworn statement is insufficient to overcome the presumption that a special grand jury was properly ordered.[3]

Proceedings.[4]—A grand jury cannot investigate on suspicion, but must have some information that a crime has been committed.[5] The grand jury may not examine a witness on matter irrelevant to the inquiry before it.[6] If the accused is summoned, he must be apprised of the charge and of his privilege to refuse to testify.[7] After presenting an indictment, the jury cannot inquire further merely to obtain further testimony in support of it.[8] Presence of an unauthorized person in the grand jury room while testimony is being taken is no objection to the indictment.[9] Special assistant United States District attorneys may appear before the grand jury.[10] The prosecuting attorney may explain to the grand jury both the law and the facts in presenting cases.[11] A witness is not guilty of contempt in refusing to answer incriminating[12] or degrading[13] questions, or questions not pertinent to the matter under investigation,[14] and whether the question is material is reviewable on certiorari to bring up contempt proceedings.[15] An affidavit not showing the charge under investigation is insufficient as basis for a charge of contempt.[16]

Appointment of committee.—A statute of Georgia authorizes the grand jury to appoint a committee of citizens to investigate the accounts of public officers, and this statute has been held valid,[17] and does not impair the "original and exclusive" auditing power of the county commissioners.[18] The compensation of the committee is to be fixed by the judge of the superior court and paid from the contingent fund of that court.[19] The committee can act only during the term of court at which it was appointed.[20]

Disclosure of secrets.—Wilfulness is not an element of the offense of divulging the secrets of the grand jury.[21] An instruction defining the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient.[22] An instruction to convict if defendant disclosed the

§ 1. What constitutes guaranty.[25]—A guaranty may be defined as an undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation or that if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him.[26] The promise must be collateral and the promisor liable only on default of the principal debtor, for otherwise if both principal and guarantor are liable, it ceases to be a contract of true guaranty, and is suretyship.[27] There must be a subsisting and contemplated debt,[28] otherwise it is a contract of indemnity[29] or a novation,[30] or a primary debt on part of the alleged guarantor, often termed an "original promise."[31] The promise must be to the creditor and not the debtor.[32] The debt must be of another and not of the promisor, and not be founded on some consideration which subserves some purpose of his own,[33] and where he obtains some substantial consideration or benefit for his promise on a quasi contractual theory, he is held to be absolutely liable and his promise original.[34]

36. Held to be good consideration. A promise on the part of a creditor to present his claim against an estate without costs is sufficient consideration to hold administratrix and her attorney to a promise to pay the same within a year. NOTE. Notice of acceptance: The doctrine of necessity of notice of acceptance was well stated and the cases collated in the leading Iowa case of German Sav. Bank v. Drake Roofing Co., 112 Iowa, 184, 83 N. W. 960, 84 Am. St. Rep. 335, 51 L. R. A. 758, in which the court held that notice was necessary in case of a continuing guaranty of all indebtedness to a certain amount. In the opinion by Judge Deemer it was said:

"When the guaranty is a letter of credit, or an effort to become responsible for a credit that may or may not be given to another, at the option of the party to whom the application for credit is made, the decided weight of authority is that the guarantor must within a reasonable time be notified of the acceptance of the guaranty. But they differ more or less in determining what is a guaranty and what an offer to guarantee. Two very satisfactory and conclusive reasons are given for this general rule. The first is that the so-called guaranty is a mere offer or proposition, and is not complete until the party making the offer is notified of its acceptance, when the minds of the parties meet, and the contract is completed. The second is that the party making the offer is entitled to know whether or not his offer has been accepted, that he may know his responsibility, and so regulate his course of conduct towards the principal debtor that he may not suffer loss. See, as supporting the rule, Edmondston v. Drake, 5 Pet. 624, 8 Law. Ed. 251; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 Law. Ed. 626; Lee v. Dick, 10 Pet. 482, 9 Law. Ed. 503; Adams v. Jones, 12 Pet. 207, 9 Law. Ed. 1058; Davis v. Wells, 104 U. S. 159, 26 Law. Ed. 686; Davis Sew. Mach. Co. v. Richards, 115 U. S. 524, 29 Law. Ed. 480; Claflin v. Briant, 58 Ga. 414; Taylor v. McClung, 2 Houst. [Del.] 24; Tuckerman v. French, 7 Me. 115; Kellogg v. Stockton, 29 Pa. 460; Kincheloe v. Holmes, 7 B. Mon. [Ky.] 5, 45 Am. Dec. 41; Allen v. Pike, 3 Cush. [Mass.] 238; Mussey v. Rayner, 22 Pick. [Mass.] 223; Rankin v. Childs, 9 Mo. 673; Mayfield v. Wheeler, 37 Tex. 256; McCollum v. Cushing, 22 Ark. 540; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 579; Cooke v. Orne, 37 Ill. 186; Oaks v. Weller, 13 Vt. 106, 37 Am. Dec. 583; Steadman v. Guthrie, 4 Metc. [Ky.] 147; Kay v. Allen, 9 Pa. 320; Beebe v. Dudley, 26 N. H. 249, 59 Am. Dec. 341. In Douglass v. Howland, 24 Wend. [N. Y.] 35, Justice Cowen wrote an elaborate opinion entirely repudiating the doctrine of notice as necessary to the consummation of the contract; but that case has not been generally followed, and has been doubted, if not overruled, by Jackson v. Griswold, 4 Hill [N. Y.] 522. See, also, Beekman v. Hale, 17 Johns. [N. Y.] 140. There are a few cases that seem to hold a guaranty relating to future advances binding, although no notice of acceptance is given the guarantor. These decisions are opposed to the great weight of authority, and we are not inclined to follow them. See Whitney v. Groot, 24 Wend. [N. Y.] 82; Wright v. Griffith, 121 Ind. 478, 23 N. E. 281, 6 L. R. A. 639; Union Bank v. Coster, 3 N. Y. 303; Lonsdale v. Lafayette Bank, 18 Ohio, 126; Yancey v. Brown, 3 Sneed [Tenn.] 89. But even here the conflict is more in the application of principles to particular facts, than in the principles themselves. The difficulty seems to be in distinguishing between an absolute guaranty and a mere offer to, or proposal of, guaranty. In some cases it is held that notice of acceptance must be given the guarantor, even though his promise be absolute in terms. Chief Justice Marshall so held in Russell v. Clarke, 7 Cranch, 69, 3 Law. Ed. 271. Judge Story appears to have been of the same opinion. See Cremer v. Higginson, 1 Mason, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 3,383. See, also, Allen v. Pike, 3 Cush. [Mass.] 238; Talbot v. Gay, 18 Pick. [Mass.] 534; and Craft v. Isham, 13 Conn. 28. But New York and some other states hold to the contrary. See cases already cited. But here, again, the conflict seems to be founded primarily on the construction of the contract, and on the divergent views as to what constitutes an absolute guaranty. Conceding for the purposes of the case that no notice of acceptance of an absolute guaranty is required, and holding, as we do, that a mere offer or proposal of guaranty requires notice of acceptance by the other party, we are to determine to which class the instrument in suit

notice is waived.[40] By the statute of frauds no action may be maintained on a contract of guaranty unless it be in writing.[41]

§ 3. Operation and effect of guaranty. A. Interpretation in general.[42]—A guarantor like a surety is bound only by the strict letter and precise terms of his contract, and that claim against him is strictissimi juris.[43]

(§ 3) B. Fixing default and liability of the guarantor.[44]—A prerequisite to liability of the guarantor is that there must be a demand of payment on default of a principal debtor,[45] but where the liability is primary,[46] this notice is unnecessary,[47] and notice of default may be impliedly[48] or expressly waived.[49] When the guaranty is contingent, the promisor is liable only on the happening of the contingency and on default of the principal debtor.[50]

(§ 3) C. Defenses and discharge of guaranty.[51]—A guarantor may offer as a defense to suit upon the collateral contract any personal or real defense,[52] or that belongs. The best statement of the rule we have been able to find is that announced in Davis Sew. Mach. Co. v. Richards, 115 U. S. 524, 29 Law. Ed. 480, where Gray, J., speaking for the court says: 'A contract of guaranty, like every other contract, can only be made by the mutual assent of the parties. If the guaranty is signed by the guarantor at the request of the other party, or if the latter's agreement to accept is contemporaneous with the guaranty, or if the receipt from him of a valuable consideration, however small, is acknowledged in the guaranty, the mutual assent is proved and the delivery of the guaranty to him or for his use, completes the contract. But if the guaranty is signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence, for no consideration moving between them, except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, the guaranty is, in legal effect, an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, needing an acceptance by the other party to complete the contract.' A writing stating that "I hereby guaranty" any debts due or to become due up to $2,000 and "this obligation to remain in full force" and effect till debt discharged and the agreement terminated by writing binds guarantor as to past due debts as well as those arising in the future. Cowan v. Roberts, 134 N. C. 415, 46 S. E. 979. A guaranty of payment for castings delivered does not include damages for refusal to accept under contract. McAfee v. Wyckoff, 44 Misc. 380, 89 N. Y. 47. McKee v. Needles, 123 Iowa, 195, 98 N. W. 618; Fales & J. Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 545. One who has made an absolute guaranty of payment of a note is primarily liable and it is not necessary for the creditor to give him notice of default to charge him with the amount due. Pleasantville Mut. Loan & Bldg. Soc. v. Moore [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 1034. In Illinois, where one guaranties the payment of a promissory note at its maturity by writing his name across the back thereof, he is not entitled to notice of default to fix his liability and the guarantor is not discharged, though at the time of default principal was solvent, though later he fails. Pfaelzer v. Kau, 207 Ill. 116, 69 N. E. 914.

48. Where by terms of a guaranty to pay rent, it is made the duty of the guarantor to ascertain whether the lessee has kept his covenants, notice of default is waived. Roth v. Adams, 185 Mass. 341, 70 N. E. 445.

52. A corporation buying and selling lumber and building material has no power to guaranty the contract of another and on default of the principal debtor his creditors so guaranteed have no rights against the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation. In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 F. 620. Where a written guaranty is given to his agent with instructions to deliver only on obtaining other signatures which he fails to obtain, the guarantor is liable. Cowan v. Roberts, 134 N. C. 415, 46 S. E. 979. The accommodation guaranty of payment by one corporation for materials furnished another is ultra vires and even where such action re-

the primary contract is paid,[53] or conditions thereof violated,[54] or has been altered,[55] or that time has been given thereon,[56] or the creditor has fraudulently withheld or misstated facts concerning principal material to the transaction,[57] or there has been lack of diligence on part of the creditor in pursuing debtor,[58] except where the liability is primary, when the diligence of the creditor is immaterial.[59]

§ 4. Rights and remedies between guarantor and principal debtor.[60]—When a guarantor pays the principal debt, he becomes subrogated thereto and may set off this indebtedness against claims brought against him by the debtor.[61]

§ 5. Action on guaranty.[62]—The notice of acceptance of the contract of guaranty must be alleged in the complaint.[63]

GUARDIANS AD LITEM AND NEXT FRIENDS.

§ 1. Necessity or Occasion for a Guardian Ad Litem or Next Friend (1567).
§ 2. Qualification and Appointment (1568).
§ 3. Powers and Duties, Rights and Liabilities (1568).
§ 4. Procedure by or Against Guardian Ad Litem or Next Friend (1569).

§ 1. Necessity or occasion for a guardian ad litem or next friend[64] exists whenever an infant is a party litigant, in order that the court may take jurisdiction,[65] even where there is a general guardian, if the ward's interests require.[66] By ceives the unanimous consent of the stockholders, no obligation is created on which the creditors of the latter concern may recover. In re Prospect Worsted Mills, 126 F. 1011.

53. In Massachusetts, the delivery of a promissory note by the principal debtor to the creditor only is prima facie evidence of payment of the liability and discharge of the surety, the matter resting on the intention of the parties. Paddock & F. Co. v. Simmons [Mass.] 71 N. E. 298.

54. Where a contract stipulates the liability as contingent upon the good condition of goods sixty days after delivery, their bad condition is no defense to the guarantor if caused by the principal. Helios-Upton Co. v. Thomas, 96 App. Div. 401, 89 N. Y. S. 222.

55. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 550. A change in quality and grade of goods provided for in contract is sufficient to discharge the guarantor thereof. Stafford v. Christian [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 595. The acceptance of goods returned as defective does not operate as an alteration of the contract. Groendyke v. Musgrave, 123 Iowa, 535, 99 N. W. 144. Where machinery shipped to a corporation of same name and of same members as a partnership whose contract had been guaranteed by the defendant, the question of alteration is one for the jury. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 550. An increase of amount of discount and reduction in price no ground for discharge. Stafford v. Christian [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 595.

56. Extension of time no defense when authorized by the guarantor. Groendyke v. Musgrave, 123 Iowa, 535, 99 N. W. 144.

57. Question of whether employer knew that his employes speculated in stocks is for jury. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Blackley, Hurst Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1271, 77 S. W. 709. Suit on fidelity bond. Whether employer negligent in not discovering shortage of accounts a question for jury. Id.

58. In a suit against guarantor, the record of a suit against the corporate principal and appointment of a receiver thereof is admissible on question of diligence. Fales & J. Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 545. A delay after default pending attempted settlement of dispute not a ground for discharge. McFarland v. Parr & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 76.

59. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning [S. C.] 46 S. E. 550. Where officers of a corporation endorse its note as follows: "For value received we hereby guarantee the prompt payment of the within note," with their signatures following, they are liable as sureties, irrespective of whether note could be collected for the principal debtor. 65. It must be in addition to service on the infant. Turner v. Barraud, 102 Va. 324, 46 S. E. 318. A suit against an infant in which no guardian ad litem was appointed, the fact of infancy not appearing in the record, may be vacated or modified in the common pleas after the term [Rev. St. § 5354, par. 5]. Palmer v. Palmer, 5 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 242. Where infant appellees are not represented by guardian ad litem or next friend, costs of appeal will be taxed to the appellant, though the cause is reversed. Ex parte Cooper [N. C.] 48 S. E. 581.

66. In an action by a statutory guardian to sell his ward's real estate, where interests were adverse. Siler v. Archer's Guardian [Ky.] 82 S. W. 256. Not required when general guardian sues sureties of deceased guardian for default. Van Zandt v. Grant, 175 N. Y. 150, 67 N. E. 221.

the better rule, the appointment must follow upon regular service of the infant,[67] but some courts hold that of itself it confers jurisdiction.[68] In Louisiana, a curator ad hoc may be appointed at the instance of one who forecloses a mortgagee who is supposed to be an absentee.[69] An infant may sue by next friend, though he has also a general guardian.[70]

§ 2. Qualification and appointment.[71]—The power to appoint a guardian ad litem is without any statute inherent in the courts of general chancery powers.[72] The appointment must in terms be for the very infant impleaded,[73] and the fact that one assumes to act as guardian ad litem in an answer filed does not make him such,[74] unless the court afterwards so treats him.[75] Such facts must appear of record,[76] but recognition does not appear from the use of general terms well applicable to others.[77] In Louisiana, in mortgage foreclosure proceedings, a curator ad hoc may be appointed on an allegation that the mortgagor resides in another state[78] without absolute proof of that fact.[79] Errors in the petition for appointment may be corrected nunc pro tunc after final judgment entered in the suit in which the infant was a party,[80] but irregularities cannot be complained of by minors after they have adopted the proceedings had under it[81] or where their rights have been duly protected.[82]

Under a statute requiring a next friend to give a bond if the court require it, failure to exact the bond does not invalidate the appointment.[83] In some states it is not necessary that a next friend should receive authority from the court in order to enable him to commence an action.[84] It is not the province of a probate court to decide whether the next friend who moved for an appeal was a suitable person.[85]

§ 3. Powers and duties, rights and liabilities.[86]—The guardian ad litem should prepare and conduct the cause with the same care and skill as though acting under a retainer.[87]

He is not entitled to compensation in excess of the amount provided by statute,[88] and in presenting his claim to the court he acts for himself and does not represent his wards.[89]

A next friend's duties are not inconsistent with those of a general guardian.[90] In some states the next friend is liable for costs.[91]

§ 4. Procedure by or against guardian ad litem or next friend.—Next friend and guardian ad litem are representatives, not the real parties to the actions which they may prosecute or defend,[92] but where their interests are adverse to the infant, the representative capacity ceases.[93] That one was designated "attorney" instead of guardian has been held technical error.[94] Under a statute requiring a guardian ad litem to file a general denial, his omission to file such pleading is not a jurisdictional defect.[95]

§ 12. Guardianship Bonds (1575).

§ 1. The occasion for guardianship.[96]—The very conditions prescribed by a statute must exist to support a guardianship under it.[97]

§ 2. The person of the guardian; his appointment, qualification and tenure.[98] —The person to be selected as guardian is within the discretion of the court,[99] unless it is provided by statute that particular persons, like parents, if competent, are to be preferred.[1] Relatives of a minor have no legal right to his custody,[2]

99. Where an infant possessed a large estate and it was not agreed as to the competency of the minor's sister to manage the estate, it was not an abuse of discretion to appoint the sister guardian of his person and a trust company guardian of his estate. but consideration will be given to keeping the children with the surviving members of the family.[3] The main consideration is the welfare of the child.[4] The infant's choice may be considered,[5] and in some states nomination is a right after a specified age.[6] In Louisiana, a father cannot be excused from the obligation of accepting the tutorship of his own children,[7] nor can he abdicate his tutorship and permit another person to be appointed.[8] A mother by remarrying in that state forfeits the right to be tutrix of her children, unless retained.[9] Comity will not require retention of a foreign guardian of a child before the forum.[10]

That court in the ward's domicile[11] to which chancery power over the ward pertains must make the appointment. In Texas, the county court of its own motion may appoint a guardian.[12] The matter of notice to parents is purely a matter of statutory regulation,[13] but a decree appointing a guardian against a parent's wish and without his knowledge will be set aside.[14]

The decree of the proper court appointing a guardian cannot be collaterally attacked,[15] unless for a jurisdictional defect,[16] which if resting in fact must be well pleaded.[17] And the presumption that the court had jurisdiction does not prevail where a petition for appointment is insufficient on its face.[18]

61. And the fact that the court intended the appointment to be temporary and in interest of the ward's health does not affect the case. Id.

One who enters on the estate of an infant will be treated as a guardian de facto,[19] and one who acts as committee of an insane person under a void appointment is liable for moneys received by him as such.[20]

Removal.[21]—He may be removed only in the manner prescribed by law.[22] Pending an appeal from an order removing a guardian, he stands suspended from his office without any of the powers thereof,[23] and the fact that no provision is made for the custody of the ward during such suspension is immaterial;[24] but where a statute authorizes an appeal from an order removing him and provides that on the perfecting of the appeal and giving of a bond a supersedeas shall issue, he is entitled until the decision of the appeal to act as guardian,[25] during which period the sureties are liable.[26] The effect of an appeal from an order removing him is to stay further proceedings in the matter of the appointment of his successor.[27]

§ 3. General powers, duties and liabilities.[28]—Powers of guardians depend on the character of the guardianship,[29] the nature of the subject-matter of their doings, and the terms of the statutes,[30] and in case of testamentary powers, on the terms of the will.[31]

They cannot make admissions against the interest of wards,[32] and the ward is not bound by admissions or promises made by him prior to appointment.[33]

He is personally liable to those he employs to aid him in the management of the estate.[34] When it is known to the other party that the contract is relative to property of his ward, he is not personally liable.[35] A foreign guardian may defend his title as such[36] and need not file his letters before taking property pertaining to his guardianship.[37]

§ 4. Custody, support and education of the ward.[38]—A guardian is entitled to the custody of his ward,[39] and the right cannot be collaterally attacked in habeas corpus proceedings,[40] but he is not entitled to the control of his ward's person to the exclusion of the ward's wife.[41] Where a guardian advises his ward to sever marital relations, it is presumed the advise was given in good faith.[42]

A statute declaring void, contracts of wards entered into without the consent of the guardian does not apply to a marriage solemnized in another state,[43] if not entered into in evasion of the laws of the domicile.[44]

§ 5. The ward's property and administration thereof.—Natural guardians have no control or right to possession of the ward's property,[45] unless otherwise provided by statute,[46] and may not sue respecting it as guardians,[47] but they may as next friends sue in proper cases.[48] At common law a general guardian might sell the ward's personal property[49] and lease the realty[50] for the term of his guardianship,[51] but he cannot sell[52] or contract to sell land without authority of court,[53] and by statute this may be necessary as to personalty.[54] Even judicial sanction can warrant incumbering the property only for purposes prescribed by statute.[55] He does not succeed to executorial powers,[56] wherefore his liability for assuming such power cannot be determined on a construction of the will.[57] The ward cannot ratify such a contract after attaining his majority.[58]

A guardian of a minor may not, on the strength of the ward's heirship, sue to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance made by the ward's ancestor.[59] Statutory guardians have only the title given by statute.[60]

56. The authority given by will to an executor to apply the property of testator to the support and education of a minor child and to sell and convey property for that purpose does not, on his death, pass to the minor or his guardian, in the absence of an express provision to that effect. Sale by guardian is void. Burroughs v. Cutter, 98 Me. 178, 56 A. 649.

58. It being void. Le Roy v. Jacobosky [N. C.] 48 S. E. 796.

The right to remove property from the jurisdiction may be granted despite the pendency of a suit.[61]

A guardian has power to collect debts due the ward[62] and moneys accruing to the ward,[63] but unless by authority of court, he is often disabled by statute to compromise a claim or make settlement for less than full payment;[64] and if he does, such settlement is not binding on his wards,[65] except to the extent of the amount actually received,[66] nor are they estopped by accepting the amount received by him.[67] A fraudulent settlement, though made under the direction of a probate court, will be set aside.[68]

Judicial sanction to contract will not be unnecessarily inferred.[69]

It is his duty to keep funds invested.[70]

A special guardian will not be credited for expenditures for unnecessary improvements.[71]

cannot be taken by an attorney employed by the guardian to make the sale.[76] One claiming under an adjudication in which an under tutor appeared takes subject to the presumption that his appointment was regular.[77]

§ 8. Actions and legal proceedings by and against guardians.[78]—Generally he is the proper person to represent his ward in an action brought by or against him.[79] Suit may be by next friend or by property guardian where a nonresident infant sues, unless the statute provides which must sue,[80] but in West Virginia, a committee of an insane person may vindicate his ward's rights by an action in his own name;[81] and in Louisiana, in urgent cases, an under tutor can stand in court in place of the tutrix.[82] It must appear that the ward sues by her guardian.[83] The filing of foreign letters to enable one as suitor may be done when the suit is brought.[84]

§ 9. Accounting and settlement.[85]—It is his duty to regularly report.[86] When, after the ward's death, he procures another to obtain letters of administration and makes returns for the purpose of final settlement with the administrator, and the latter files objections to such returns, the proceeding is properly treated as a citation for final settlement.[87] The final account may be contested by interested parties,[88] and the right to set aside the allowance of an account may be barred by limitations.[89] An order of the probate court denying a petition to require a guardian to account is an appealable order.[90] The report of a guardian affirmed by a nisi prius court will be presumed correct on appeal.[91]

§ 10. Rights and liabilities between guardian and ward.—A cause of action against his ward may be barred by limitations.[92]

In dealings with the ward's property, he is bound to look only to the ward's interest.[93] He will not be permitted to occupy a position hostile to the ward nor pursue personal interests antagonistic to him.[94] If there has been an opportunity to perpetrate fraud, the law is extremely watchful of transactions immediately prior to the settling of his account.[95] The burden is on him to show fairness in dealings with ward.[96] Where a guardian mingles his own funds with funds of his ward, there is a presumption that all moneys in the account are property of the ward,[97] and if he mingles with his own, funds which he has a right to hold uninvested, he is liable for interest thereon.[98] A guardian who wrongfully uses his ward's funds in his own business may be charged the highest rate of interest allowed by law,[99] and in some states compound interest may be allowed.[1] Where a ward's estate has suffered no financial injury from unauthorized or illegal acts of the gurdian, the ward cannot recover damages.[2]

The penalty imposed on a guardian for failure to render an annual report cannot be recovered by the ward in an action on the bond for damages for failure to account for the ward's money.[3]

It is a crime in Texas if the guardian converts the funds of his ward.[4]

§ 12. Guardianship bonds.[9]—In South Carolina, a guardian may be required to give a new bond when he is about to receive funds not in contemplation when the original bond was executed.[10]

Sureties are not liable for defalcations occurring prior to the execution of the bonds.[11] Sureties may pay the amount for which they are liable as soon as liability which the guardian fails to meet is found to exist,[12] but that they may hold the guardian liable, they must show their legal liability for the sums paid by them.[13] A surety for a defaulting guardian who settles with his successor is subrogated to the rights of the wards.[14]

offense and to pronounce the judgment imposed.[29] The petitioner in these proceedings may test the constitutionality of the statute for the infringement of which he is imprisoned,[30] though that question will not be examined if the case can be decided on other grounds.[31] Where a judgment for contempt is void as in excess of the court's jurisdiction,[32] and where it appears affirmatively from the return that relators are imprisoned under a final sentence on a state of facts constituting no offense, habeas corpus is the proper remedy to procure discharge.[33]

Only under exceptional circumstances will the Federal courts interfere by habeas corpus with the imprisonment of one held upon process from a state court, on the ground of violation of the United States laws or constitution,[34] and ordinarily will leave the prisoner to his remedy by direct proceedings for review in the state courts, and by writ of error from the supreme court of the United States if his claims should there be decided adversely;[35] but where the remedy for review afforded by the state is insufficient by reason of the delay attendant upon it, the writ should be granted.[36] Chinese alleging citizenship and restrained pending an investigation are not entitled to the writ until after a final adverse decision by the secretary of commerce and labor.[37] The judge of the district to which a Federal prisoner is removed for trial will not examine into the legality and competency of the evidence on which the warrant of removal was issued.[38] The court will not review the technical sufficiency of an indictment of one held for interstate extradition,[39] but will only ascertain if the extradition papers prima facie charge a criminal act,[40] and investigate the identity of the prisoner and within certain limits the question of flight.[41]

The petitioner must be in custody.[42]

NOTE. Power of Federal courts: The powers of Federal courts by writ of habeas corpus are limited to cases where the custody is in violation of the Federal constitution or laws. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 592. The sole injury in such case is whether the judgment is a nullity, having been rendered by a court not having constitutional power or authority. In re Friederich, 149 U. S. 70. The petition in the principal case raises no question of jurisdiction, but addresses itself merely to irregularities of procedure and erroneous rulings of the court. Upon a writ of habeas corpus, the judgment and proceedings of a State court should not be reviewed by a Federal court, even though it be claimed that the petitioner was denied some constitutional right. Marhuson v. Boucher, 175 U. S. 184. Such matters are properly cognizable only upon writ of error. In re Schneider, 148 U. S. 162. Since the petitioner has open to him an appeal to a state court, it is improper for a Federal court to interfere on writ of habeas corpus. Tavis v. Burke, 179 U. S. 399. another court,[44] and discharge on habeas corpus does not prevent a further detention upon other lawful proceedings.[45]

§ 2. Jurisdiction.[46]—The writ will not issue to one outside the court's territorial jurisdiction.[47]

The Federal court has jurisdiction to review the legality of the restraint of a citizen by the authority of a state whenever it is alleged that he is restrained in violation of the constitution of the United States or for violating a Federal law,[48] and may inquire into the detention of petitioner by a state court on a charge of murder, where the killing is alleged to have been in attempting to arrest by virtue of a warrant of the Federal court;[49] but where the evidence is conflicting as to whether defendants, soldiers of the United States army, shot deceased while he was attempting to escape, or after he had surrendered, the state court has jurisdiction.[50] The Federal courts have no jurisdiction of habeas corpus to obtain the custody of an infant solely on diversity of citizenship of the rival claimants of its custody;[51] but jurisdiction of the proceeding on behalf of the parents of a minor enlisting in the army without their consent is not ousted by subsequent arrest of the minor for fraudulent enlistment.[52]

§ 3. Petition.[53]—Petitioner must make out a prima facie case,[54] and the writ does not issue if the petition on its face shows that relator is not entitled to it.[55] The husband or wife of one illegally restrained is a proper person to petition.[56]

§ 4. Hearing on petition and issuance of writ.[57]

§ 5. The writ; service thereof; effect of writ.[58]

§ 6. Certiorari in aid of habeas corpus.[59]—Where certiorari is allowed in aid, it will not serve as a writ of error nor as an appeal,[60] the court considering only the jurisdiction of the person, the offense and to pronounce the judgment imposed.[61] There is no authority for combining habeas corpus and certiorari in one writ.[62]

§ 7. Hearing and determination on return; judgment; costs.[63]—Ordinarily, the return is conclusive unless traversed,[64] but under the California practice, the petition is treated as a traverse,[65] and in the absence of issue joined thereon by the respondent, the facts set forth in the petition will be taken as true.[66]

The return must be verified,[67] but an amendment setting up formal averments of legal conclusions need not,[68] and return may be amended at any time before final disposition of the case.[69] On motion to quash the return, the question of illegal imprisonment is tried as a matter of law on the facts stated in the petition.[70]

A traverse of the return, and the presentation of the evidence upon which a magistrate acted, properly presents, on habeas corpus, the question of jurisdiction of the magistrate, and on certiorari, the cause of detention.[71] Where relator is confined for contempt, the court will look to the moving papers and the whole judgment to ascertain of what the alleged contempt consisted.[72] A petitioner cannot deny the existence of the court and judge to which the writ, according to the prayer of his petition, runs.[73] In Rhode Island, the court may in its discretion call a jury to determine the sanity of a petitioner confined in the state asylum.[74]

The effect of a decision favorable to the relator is a discharge of the prisoner,[75] but in Iowa, the plaintiff may at the discretion of the court be held to bail for the offense charged or any other not triable in justice court, though the commitment may have been irregular.[76]

In Iowa, the county from which one is illegally sent to the state insane asylum is liable for the costs of habeas corpus proceedings resulting in the discharge of the petitioner.[77]

§ 8. Review.[78]—Review is by error in Nebraska,[79] and by appeal in Alabama.[80] In Iowa the issues are tried as in ordinary civil proceedings,[81] and cannot be heard de novo on appeal.[82] An appeal will not lie from an order dismissing the petition, the remedy in such case being by application to another judge,[83] but habeas corpus to be admitted to bail and appeal therefrom on denial are proper, notwithstanding the pendency of relator's motion for new trial after mistrial.[84]

An appeal lies direct to the supreme court of the United States where the petition in the circuit court claims the protection of the constitution.[85]

The reviewing court will not pass upon questions not proper to be raised in the proceeding, irrespective of the action of the court from which the proceeding comes.[86] Discretionary orders of the lower court are not reviewable,[87] and findings of fact on conflicting evidence are conclusive.[88]

Instructions to jury cannot be assailed as prejudicial by one who contends that the suit is in equity.

The majority of courts presume prejudice from error once it is shown to exist, and require the party defending against errors to show that no harm resulted.[98]

Errors which favor the party objecting are of course not ground for reversal,[99] nor are such as may be corrected without resort to a new trial.[1] Errors in favor of both parties, both bringing error, require reversal.[2]

§ 2. Triviality constituting harmlessness.[3]—An error is harmless if too trivial in its nature or consequences to have substantially influenced the result.[4] The weakness of the evidence may augment,[5] or its strength diminish, the importance of error.[6] as in equitable actions, the verdict of the jury is merely advisory.[22] An improper mode of questioning or an erroneous ruling on a proper question may be harmless because of the answer given,[23] or the lack of an answer. Application of these doctrines to direct,[24] and cross-examination,[25] and to the order of taking proof,[26]—all of which are largely controlled by the discretion of the court,[27]—and the reception of affidavits and depositions, and to the admission of secondary evidence,[28] and to the rulings on motions to strike evidence,[29] are cited below. 59. Hess v. Lucas, 122 Iowa, 517, 98 N. W. 466. Verdict for less than plaintiff was entitled to recover under evidence held corrective of error in overruling challenge to juror. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. True [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 120. Will not cure prejudicial argument directed against right to recover. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 60.

Cure of rulings on pleadings: Demurrer judgment,[60] or by a remittitur of damages.[61] Even where the jury are the judges of the law and the evidence, instructions prejudicial to plaintiff may cause reversal, though a verdict for defendant has been rendered.[62]

HEALTH.[63]

§ 1. Validity and Construction of Health Regulations (1590).
§ 2. Health Boards and Officers (1591).
§ 3. Care and Control of Contagious or Infectious Diseases (1592). Reimbursement (1592). Allowance of Claims (1593). Negligence (1593).

§ 1. Validity and construction of health regulations.[64]—If statutes purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health have a substantial relation to that object, they are a valid exercise of the police power, though seemingly unreasonable or unwise,[65] if otherwise inoffensive to the constitution.[66] Such are to answer. Guthrie v. Carpenter, 162 Ind. 417, 70 N. E. 486. Refusal to strike plea of set-off and counterclaim. Owen v. American Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 988. Where facts found support and the judgment rests on the second paragraph of a complaint, it was harmless error to overrule a demurrer to the first paragraph. Connor v. Andrews Land Home & Improvement Co., 162 Ind. 338, 70 N. E. 376. Error in assuming jurisdiction of a counterclaim setting up claim beyond the jurisdiction of the court is immaterial where jury fail to allow anything on it. Rylie v. Elam [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 326.

64. See 2 Curr. L. 173.

65. State v. Hyman [Md.] 57 A. 6. Acts 1902, p. 121, c. 101, relating to the manufacture of clothing in sweatshops, held to have a substantial relation to the public health; not invalid as clothing officials with arbitrary power; and a valid exercise of the po-statutes providing for vaccination of all school children,[67] or to compel the filling or clearing and drainage of swamp lands liable to breed malaria or other diseases,[68] or to compel installation of sanitary plumbing in tenement houses.[69] The fact that a statute providing for the exercise of that power compensates the owner of the land does not make it an exercise of the right of eminent domain rather than of the police power.[70] While the physical condition of a pupil, rendering vaccination dangerous, may be a good defense as against a general order of compulsory vaccination,[71] it is no reason for excepting such pupil from a resolution of a school board excluding from attendance all pupils who have not been vaccinated.[72]

§ 2. Health boards and officers.[73]—In New Hampshire, the councils of cities exercise powers of town boards of health,[74] whence they may commit care of contagious diseases to the poor officer and the city physician. In Indiana, delay in choosing a subofficer was held not fatal.[75]

Powers and duties.—Powers conferred by statute on local boards for the preservation of the public health should be liberally construed, so that they may be rendered effective.[76] Accordingly they have been upheld in making rules to be observed in barber shops, to prevent the spread of contagious skin diseases, and in requiring the payment of license fees.[77] A town board of health is not authorized to take steps relative to a nuisance until it has ascertained that a nuisance exists.[78]

lice power of the state. Id. The laws apply only to the manufacture of clothing intended for sale. Id. In passing on the validity of a statute, courts may take judicial notice that the manufacture of clothing in sweatshops under unsanitary conditions is likely to breed and spread disease. Id.

66. Vaccination laws applying to all school children are uniform in operation, are not class legislation, and do not conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Federal constitution. French v. Davidson [Cal.] 77 P. 663. "School sink" provision of Tenement House act does not deny equal protection of the laws by being applicable only to cities of the first class. The power of a health board to erect a pest house must be so exercised, and the pest house so located, as not to destroy private rights to property, unless the particular act in question is expressly or impliedly authorized by statute.[79]

School boards may require vaccination as a prerequisite to attendance at schools.[80]

A city physician is bound to attend to patients afflicted with a contagious disease who are "under the care of the city authorities."[81]

Proceedings of health officers and the review of them are statutory.[82]

§ 3. Care and control of contagious or infectious diseases. Liability for expense.—Personal expenses of a person are first chargeable to him[83] and if he be pauper, then to the public according to the statutes.[84] Under present Minnesota laws, the county in which a town, village or borough which has incurred expense in dealing with diseases dangerous to the public health is located, is solely liable for such expense.[85] A county is not, however, liable for the expense incurred in caring for a particular individual.[86] The statutes making the county instead of the town, village, or borough concerned, liable, did not affect rights vested by contract before their passage.[87]

In Maine, a person suffering from a contagious disease and cared for by the local health board is not chargeable with any part of the expense incurred unless he can pay the entire amount; nor can he be charged with the amount unless he is "able" to pay at the time of his discharge; the fact that he subsequently became able to pay does not make him liable.[88]

In Kentucky, county physicians cannot recover from the county for services rendered, during an epidemic, to persons able to pay for such services.[89] The burden is upon a physician presenting a claim to show that persons attended were unable to pay; also to show to what extent charges represent services in enforcement of necessary sanitary regulations.[90]

Reimbursement.—Reimbursement of the public should be sought primarily from the person cared for, and if he is not solvent, then from the place where his settlement is.[91] An expenditure illegal for want of authority may after ratification[92] be reimbursed.[93]

Allowance of claims.—In Michigan, the decision of the county board of supervisors as to the allowance of bills incurred by local boards of health is, if made after legal investigation, final.[94] But the county board cannot, by deferring action, defeat contract rights under a former law.[95] A bill, not on its face improper, cannot be rejected without giving the claimant an opportunity to be heard as to the reasonableness and propriety of the claim.[96] In an action to recover for services from the county, evidence of plaintiff's appointment as a member of the county board of health is competent.[97] One who as part of his official duty has attended sick persons[98] cannot recover beyond his salary,[99] except under a special contract.[100]

Negligence.—A city is not liable for negligent acts of its officers in carrying out ordinances relating to the care of persons suffering from a contagious disease.[101]

Note: In so far as a municipality undertakes the duty of making and enforcing quarantine regulations and other laws for the promotion of the public health, it is in the performance of governmental functions, and its officers are not agents for whose action or inaction it is answerable. § 1. Definitions and classifications.[1]—A highway is a thoroughfare by which people in different places may reach and communicate with each other,[2] but public highways within a statute are such only as come within its express provisions.[3]

To become a public road, all obstructions need not be removed,[4] and if free and common to all, it is a public road, though it be of exceptional advantage to some.[5] All public streets are highways, but all highways are not streets,[6] and in the absence of a showing to the contrary, all streets in a city are presumed to be public streets,[7] but an alley is not necessarily a street.[8] The term street, in its broad sense, includes both the roadway for vehicles and the sidewalk for pedestrians.[9]

§ 2. Establishment by dedication, prescription, or user.[10]—Dedication[11] and lawful acceptance[12] are necessary,[13] but when these concur, no definite time of user is requisite.[14] A dedication of streets, to be effectual, must be by the owner of the land, and his intent to dedicate is absolutely essential and must clearly appear.[15] There must be an intent.[16]

Dedication may be express,[17] or may be implied from any acts of the owner indicating an intention so to appropriate it,[18] as the filing and recording of a plat, and the selling of lots in relation thereto.[19] A road will not be regarded as dedicated in the place traveled, where it is a "section line" road which by mistake departs from the true line.[20] If a plat expressly reserves a strip, acquiescence will not be inferred from grading and improving by the public,[21] neither does it show prescription.[22]

Acceptance may be shown by proof that the municipal authorities exercised acts of control over the street,[23] but failure to open part of a new street does not operate as a rejection of such part.[24] By statutory proceedings to lay a road, the county becomes estopped to say as to one whose land was taken that there had already been a dedication of the public domain.[25]

As to whether the public has acquired a given right of way by dedication, user or otherwise is a question of law, and is not within the jurisdiction of a court of equity.[26]

To establish a highway by prescription,[27] there must have been a continuous,[28]

A plat representing the dedication of streets, though not following the statute, is a sufficient common-law plat to estop the grantor or his privies from denying such dedication, though it was not accepted by the municipality. Corning & Co. v. Woolner, 206 Ill. 190, 69 N. E. 53; Smith v. Beloit [Wis.] 100 N. W. 877. Describing a strip of land in the plat as an alley, its acceptance by the city as an alley, and a designating in a deed by the grantor as an alley, clearly indicates a dedication for the benefit of the public. Title to a road over private property was not obtained by twenty years' user where during that period it had been blocked for months and sometimes years at a time. Occasional use by private persons of a logging road over public land does not constitute the road a highway under a statute adverse[29] user by the public[30] for the full statutory period;[31] but where the evidence shows an intention to dedicate, a user for a much shorter time will suffice.[32] Except as so provided by statute,[33] the mere use of land for the purpose of a road carries with it no presumption of adverse claim or claim of right so to use it.[34] The filing of declaration of homestead does not prevent a dedication through adverse user.[35] Its width is to be determined as a question of fact by the character and extent of the user.[36]

§ 3. Establishment by statutory proceedings.[37]—The power of public officers to establish new roads must be found in the statutes,[38] the directions of which must be strictly pursued.[39] Proceedings will not be restrained on the assumption that the opening of a street will be improperly conducted.[40]

An appeal from an order establishing a road upon certain conditions as to payment of costs, and a subsequent dismissal of the appeal, do not constitute a bar to proceedings to condemn a way along the same line.[41]

In New Jersey a road may not be laid out through a dwelling.[42]

A railroad company is estopped from denying the existence of a street as such, where it had been laid out in the statutory manner and the company had secured the city's permission to its use thereof.[43]

Occasion or necessity for road; objections.[44]—The road must be of public utility.[45]

Interested parties are entitled to a hearing.[46] A proposition to remit nearly all the damages due in laying out a proposed road, if it be located differently than reported, may be treated as an objection to the establishment of the road;[47] and a statement, in a report of proceedings to widen a road, that a landowner asked a certain sum as damages, sufficiently shows that he refused to relinquish his land.[48] A railroad company cannot defeat the opening of a street on the ground that part of the company's land will be taken.[49]

Location.[50]—Jurisdictional prerequisites must be strictly observed;[51] but when jurisdiction has been clearly established, subsequent proceedings will be liberally construed, and a substantial compliance with the statutes will be sufficient.[52]

Application or petition in the statutory form,[53] describing the proposed road,[54] is necessary;[55] but omissions therein may be supplied by amendment,[56] and a petition defective in not definitely stating termini may be aided by a report of viewers.[57]

Failure of commissioners to take the statutory oath renders the proceedings void.[58] The commissioners have no authority to materially depart from the route designated in the petition,[59] and a material variation is ground for setting aside the opening of the street is necessary [Burns Rev. St. 1901, § 4405]. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Wolcott, 162 Ind. 399, 69 N. E. 451. the proceeding.[60] Failure of the record to show that the commissioners were not of kin to the parties is immaterial when damages were assessed by jury.[61]

Notice conformable to the statute, if any is required, is essential,[62] but may be waived.[63]

A report of viewers, or commissioners, containing jurisdictional findings,[64] is necessary,[65] but it need not state the value of the land appropriated or what property would be benefited.[66] A specification as to width of the proposed road is an essential requisite,[67] except where the width is prescribed by statute.[68] The time "within" which determination of a petition must be made excludes the day it was heard.[69] Where the facts reported are reviewable on motion to confirm,[70] new testimony may be received on the exceptions made.[71]

An order laying out a road is not void because it calls for a maintenance for three years;[72] and a preliminary order declaring that the prayer of the petition was granted is not necessary.[73] Under an order for the establishment of an easement of way from a residence to a road, it is sufficient if the way laid out gives convenient entrance to the premises in proximity to the residence.[74] A report confirmed in court without appeal becomes conclusive unless the report be defective jurisdictionally,[75] then a refusal to quash the entire proceeding including confirmation, and order to open the road may be reviewed by certiorari.[76] They

In Indiana gravel road elections need not be by ballot.[79]

Proceedings may be discontinued at any time before the compensation is determined.[80] A new view may be ordered when the former one was vitally defective,[81] and to that end no exceptions are necessary.[82]

On confirmation, costs are properly allowed the petitioner.[83]

Taking and compensation.[84]—Private property cannot be taken for public use without just compensation.[85] But one who accepts the allowance of the board for the construction of a county road cannot thereafter maintain an action for damages caused by the opening of the road unless it be negligently and unskillfully constructed and maintained.[86] No damages should be allowed to one whose land was taken for a street opening and was actually benefited by such opening.[87] And under a statute requiring railroads constructing tracks across a highway to restore the way to its former state, the company cannot recover the cost of constructing and maintaining such crossings.[88] The procedure authorized by the statute to assess damages must be followed,[89] and the award must be made within the statutory period.[90] Where the awards are several and independent, the claimants cannot join in a proceeding to compel the payment by mandamus.[91] When both damages and benefits were assessed on street-opening proceedings, and the city was liable for interest on the damages, interest should also be charged on the unpaid benefits.[92]

way gives the public only a right of way and the incidents necessary to enjoying and maintaining such way.[95] Possession by a city while proceedings are pending, is as a statutory license, and the city is liable for injuries if the proceedings be defeated or discontinued.[96]

An appeal or other review,[97] may be taken by any person interested as a taxpayer or otherwise,[98] under such conditions and restrictions as the statutes prescribe.[99] Unless one is aggrieved, he cannot have review by certiorari. One cannot question legality of road proceedings on the ground that land described and for which he is to be paid is not within the location of the road.[1] One who contests defendant's appearance on the ground that the latter had not signed the petition cannot urge that defendant was barred from the proceedings by instituting a suit to condemn a way along the same line.[2] On appeal by one who has not made a motion to set aside the report of commissions taking his land for a street, the only question to be considered is the damage sustained.[3] The judgment may be amended on appeal by inserting a specification as to the width of the road.[4] Ordinary rules of review prevail.[5] A map accompanying the petition and used at the trial may be considered on appeal, though not filed at the trial.[6] It cannot, on appeal to certiorari, be urged that the return was pregnant with an admission respecting the fee simple title alleged in the petition.[7]

10. Width cannot be shown by record of report of commissioners fixing it under Act Feb. 27, 1822; that was duty of court. Maus v. Mahoning Tp., 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 624. Resolutions of a city council ordering a road to be widened do not prove that proceedings authority to relocate a road on what might be supposed its recorded location.[12] A tax deed is prima facie that the locus is not a street.[13] An ordinance providing that on streets sixty feet wide there shall be walks twelve feet wide, thereby prescribes the width of the roadway.[14] A city not a party to a suit to quiet title is not bound by any determination therein as to the lines of a street.[15]

§ 5. Alterations and extensions.[16]—All essential facts conferring jurisdiction to widen a designated road must affirmatively appear upon the face of the proceedings,[17] and provision must be made for compensation for property taken.[18] Both the old and the proposed route should be described.[19] A grant of power to alter a street does not apply to changes of grade but only to changes of location,[20] and power to locate and define street lines does not authorize the taking of private property for widening a street.[21] A contract for lowering of the curbstones does not authorize a tampering with the adjacent flagstones.[22] One cannot enjoin the widening of a sidewalk where the only rights invaded are those held in common with other residents of the street and the public,[23] and the judgment of an ordinary, making or establishing an alteration in a road, cannot be collaterally attacked.[24] On appeal from the commissioner on alteration of a highway, the county court should not modify the commissioner's decision of its own motion.[25] Where the route of a public road is changed by ordinance, the old road continues to be the public road until the new road is laid out, opened, and made practicable.[26]

§ 6. Change of grade.[27]—Statutory proceedings as to change of grade must be strictly followed.[28] A petition for change of grade by a majority of the persons affected is not invalidated by the fact that the council subsequently created a larger district for assessment purposes.[29] Statutory judicial remedies to assess damages for change of grade lie only where all the statutory conditions exist.[30] If on petition for such relief any of such conditions be denied there must be a trial of the issues so made.[31] Such methods are not exclusive as to award of damages.[32] Conformation of inequalities of surface to grade is not "change of grade."[33] The authority to establish sidewalk grades is not controllable by the courts.[34] In Pennsylvania municipalities may at one proceeding open a street, fix the grade, and assess benefits and damages resulting.[35] Statutes usually provide[36] that, on change of grade of a street or highway,[37] the property owner is entitled to compensation[38] to the extent of the damage to his real property,[39] for which the change of grade is the proximate cause,[40] without diminution for general benefits.[41] For damages arising from bringing a street to the originally established grade, there is generally no redress. A city is liable for cutting down a street except to bring it to a grade established by a legal ordinance.[42] A failure to give notice of claim for damages by change of grade within statutory period must be pleaded in abatement.[43] The common council of Camden has power to appoint commissioners to assess damages by change of grade,[44] but can appoint no more than nine.[45] The damages

54. Notwithstanding that in a particular case he may have suffered no harm by the failure of the officials to comply with them. In re Locust Ave., 93 App. Div. 416, 87 N. Y. S. 798.

NOTE: Duty to repair sidewalks. A city ordinance required owners or occupants of real property to keep the sidewalks in front of their premises in repair. The plaintiff, having been injured by a defect in the sidewalk in front of the premises of which he was tenant, brought suit against the city. The city set up the defense of contributory negligence. Held, the statute in so far as it applied to mere tenants of property was unconstitutional and the plaintiff, not being under a duty to repair, was not chargeable with contributory negligence. Ford v. Kansas City [Mo.] 79 S. W. 923.

The courts have usually upheld ordinance imposing upon property owners the duty of constructing and keeping in repair the sidewalks adjoining their premises, or of removing snow and ice therefrom as a just exercise of the police power, on the ground that owners are peculiarly interested in the improvement and are peculiarly fitted by their situation to perform the work promptly. Cooley's Cons. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 860; Paxson v. Sweet, 13 N. J. Law, 196; Bonsall v. Mayor, 19 Ohio, 418. The duty of removing snow and ice has been extended to the case of tenants or occupants. Dillon's Mun. Corp. § 394. In re Goddard, 16 Pick. [Mass.] 504, 28 Am. Dec. 259; Inhabitants of Clinton v. Welch, 166 Mass. 133.

No authority can be found as to the right to impose upon a mere occupant the duty to repair the sidewalk. This duty would seem as great as that of constructing them in the first instance. Indeed, some courts repudiate ordinances requiring owners to repair the sidewalks or remove snow and ice. Gridley v. Bloomington, 88 Ill. 554, 30 Am. Rep. 566; State v. Jackman, 69 N. H. 318. The principal case seems correct in not imposing the duty of repairing upon the tenant.—IV. Colum. L. R. 599.

55. Commissioners appointed to estimate benefits in opening proceedings cannot assess the expense of grading [Laws 1868, p. 1869, c. 818, tit. 5, §§ 1-14]. In re Locust Ave., 93 App. Div. 416, 87 N. Y. S. 798.

township "or townships" does not require the full number from each township.[56] The filing of statutory remonstrance on street improvements does not preclude a common council from passing subsequent improvement ordinances on substantially different specifications.[57]

Damages occasioned by improvements are recoverable by abutting owners,[58] and benefits may be set off against damages to abutting owners whose lands are taken to widen a street,[59] but advantages in common with other property should not be included.[60] No action accrues for damage resulting from an authorized diversion of surface water.[61]

Ordinarily no special proceedings are necessary to authorize the repair of streets or highways,[62] and where required a petition for the repair of a road need not locate the road by specific descriptions.[63] An approval after completion of the work does not fulfill a statutory requirement of repairs with the "consent" of a board.[64] Orders are liberally construed.[65] Mandamus will not lie to compel repair when an appropriation for that purpose would under the circumstances be illegal.[66] County commissioners have no implied power to accept the resignation of a bidder who has been duly awarded the contract for the care of the roads.[67] Continuous use by the public shows its acceptance of a stipulation between individuals for the public benefit, as to the care of an easement of way,[68] and a street railway which has agreed as part of its franchise to repair highways may be compelled in equity to do so.[69] A railroad changing its grade may be required to restore the highway to its former state or to such state as not to necessarily impair its usefulness,[70] or to build a bridge over its road on grade approaches thereto for a highway crossing it, though the railroad was in operation for many years before the highway was laid out.[71]

§ 8. Abandonment and diminution.[73]—The right of the public to the use of the streets is absolute and paramount to any others.[74] A municipality holds the streets and alleys as trustee for the public and cannot surrender the grant except as the statute provides,[75] nor will mere nonuser or laches,[76] or obstruction of a highway,[77] or adverse possession by individuals,[78] defeat the public rights; but where private rights have grown up, founded on the action or nonaction of the city, the principles of estoppel may be invoked against the public right,[79] and a statute legalizing defective proceedings of supervisors in the establishment of a number of highways does not destroy the effect of an abandonment.[80]

In New York a highway which has not been traveled or used as such for six years is declared abandoned,[81] but the wrongful filing of the certificate of abandonment does not discontinue it.[82] There is no abandonment by mistaken use of a road because of a departure from the true location.[83] One claiming title to a street by right of adverse possession is not entitled to notice as a tenant at will or by sufferance.[84]

Power to designate grades of railroads and establish grades for streets and walks does not authorize a city to in effect vacate part of a street by allowing a railroad to cross it on an embankment above the street grade. Dean v. Ann Arbor R. Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 773. An application may properly be made to discontinue a highway which is useless, though such highway was never opened or compensation to abutting owners being made;[87] and it has been said that the court cannot inquire into the motives of a council in vacating a street for private use, under statutory authority, there being no charged fraud.[88]

The discontinuance of a street does not affect the private rights of light, air, and access, appurtenant to a lot abutting on a highway,[89] and the vacation of a county road, depriving a street of its only outside communication, does not destroy the street as a highway.[90] In Iowa vacation of a street dedicated under the statute does not cause a reversion to the original owner.[91] Vacating a street does not destroy concurrent private easements.[92] Under the laws of Iowa it is only when a road across or along a county line is concurrently established that concurrent action must be had to vacate it;[93] and it makes no difference that the petition recites a contemporaneous petition in the other county.[94]

That the incorporation of a town accepting a plat is declared illegal does not increase the right of the platters to vacate the streets of such plat.[95] One who executes a plat dedicating certain lands as streets and subsequently joins in a petition to vacate said streets cannot deny the right of a city to vacate them.[96]

Upon an application in good faith and in conformity with the statute, for the discontinuance of a road, the county court should appoint commissioners.[97]

Vacation of a street for want of acceptance by a town cannot be made where private rights have been acquired which would be sacrificed by such vacation,[98] and an injunction to restrain vacation of an alley will lie on the part of one who is individually affected.[99] Petition for vacation of road must show that signers constitute a majority of the residents of the district.[1] To give county commissioners jurisdiction to adjudge a way unsafe, it must appear that the way is one which the town is bound to maintain.[2] The Nevada statute that the county commissioners "shall" vacate a road on petition of a majority of the residents of the district is not mandatory.[3]

An appeal from an order vacating a road is perfected when bond and notice of appeal are properly executed, served, and filed.[4]

§ 10. Street and highway officers and districts.[5]—In Kentucky the fiscal court cannot adopt an order providing that magistrates shall be supervisors of roads in their respective districts.[6] Where a street cleaning contract provided that the work should be subject to the approval and under the direction of the city surveyor, such official was empowered to prohibit the doing of work not within the contract.[7] Parol evidence is inadmissible to show an error in the minutes of highway commissioners.[8]

A town is liable for the acts of its surveyor of highways done in good faith in compliance with the orders of its selectmen,[9] and a sheriff and his bondsmen are personally responsible for his cutting fences not on the line of the route opened by order of the court.[10]

§ 11. Fiscal affairs.[11]—As in other tax proceedings, assessments for highway and street purposes must conform strictly to the statute authorizing them;[12] and express authority to construct the particular improvement,[13] and charge the cost upon the particular land, must appear.[14] A railroad right of way is liable to assessment for a street improvement.[15]

14. In Indiana back-lying lots are liable for special assessments if the abutting property be not sufficient. Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 4290. The owner of such back-lying lands is entitled to appear and be heard on the special benefits (Voris v. Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. [Ind.] 70 N. E. 249), but a waiver of illegalities in consideration of the privilege of paying in instalments does not release such back-lying owners from the lien of an assessment (Id.). 16. A statute providing for the adoption by townships of road systems and exempting townships adopting such systems from taxes without their consent for county road systems, though acted upon by a township, does not constitute an irrevocable contract

cepting land for street purposes has no authority to exempt other land of the grantor from assessment for the extending of such street.[17] A statute transferring to a town, all of a road district embraced within the town, does not preclude the levying of a county road tax on the portion of the district not included in the town,[18] and does not release the county from liability for road warrants issued prior to such transfer.[19]

Conviction for failure to pay a road tax cannot be sustained where the county commissioner failed to comply with the statutes in relation thereto.[20] It is the duty of a town clerk in Illinois to make tax lists for road labor,[21] and he is to be compensated per diem for it.[22]

§ 12. Control by public, and public regulations.[23]—Municipalities possess only such control of streets as is delegated by the legislature,[24] and the state at any time may resume control of so much of the streets and alleys as it deems best, without consent of the officers or inhabitants of a city,[25] or may grant a franchise in the streets without providing for the payment of compensation;[26] it is the mode only of such use that is subject to agreement with the municipal authorities or of judicial determination.[27] Municipalities, however, have power as a rule to make and enforce reasonable police regulations.[28] Toll in the form of a license may be legally imposed by a municipality for the use of its streets by vehicles,[29] and such power is not only a continuing one but an inalienable

29. An ordinance imposing a fee graduated according to the number of horses, the use of the streets, etc., and which ordinance with reference to nonresidents applies only to those hauling heavy vehicles, or peddling is not unconstitutional for interfering with rights of citizens, nor for unfair discrimination between residents and nonresidents. Sterling v. Bowling Green, 5 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 217. The words "vehicles" as used in §

one.[30] The use of a street for moving houses thereon is an extraordinary use subject to municipal restrictions,[31] and neither regular license nor special permit will relieve a house mover for damage to the property of others.[32] It is competent for a council to prescribe different rates of speed for different portions of the municipality, or for different classes of vehicles.[33] Road commissioners charged to keep highways clear and fit for travel may regulate telephone lines[34] though the road is a "post" road.[35] Such power is not exhausted by a single exercise,[36] and the courts will not interfere except for an abuse of discretion.[37] Municipalities cannot put a street[38] or a public common to any use inconsistent with its public purpose,[39] nor be estopped from using streets for public purposes, by reason of the fact that such use destroys private privileges previously attempted to be granted.[40]

Assent by a town to use of the streets by a railroad company is not a franchise but merely an easement;[41] but a grant to a use of a public street for a public purpose, by a municipality under legislative authority, accepted and acted upon by the grantee, confers an interest which may only be taken away upon proper compensation,[42] and the city may question any transfer thereof.[43] An ordinance providing that a street car company may use such other streets and public places as the city council might from time to time designate by resolution is not void for uncertainty.[44] It will not be presumed that a street car company will violate its contract in its methods of construction and operation.[45] Where the contract between a city and one erecting a structure in the street requires him in excavating to protect the works of an elevated railway therein, the duty of the railway company to protect its own structure is not open to the contractor as a defense to a suit by the company to compel him to protect it.[46] The federal statute granting a right of way to telegraph companies over military and post roads does not confer a right upon a telephone company to the use of city streets without consent of the city.[47] A town may terminate the divided authority over a bridge or street and assume exclusive control, and release a railway from the care thereof.[48] An injunction will lie to prevent a town from removing tracks lawfully laid in the streets,[49] but courts cannot review a discretionary removal of tracks at any specific grade-crossing by a municipality acting under statutory powers.[50] A private water company will not be enjoined from laying its pipes through a city, on the ground that it may become a competitor of the municipal water system.[51] A railroad company must keep its track in a public street in a reasonably safe condition,[52] and under a statute requiring companies having tracks upon or intersecting public streets to so maintain them as to not unnecessarily impair the street's usefulness, ordinary care as to such maintenance is not sufficient.[53]

§ 13. *Rights of public use. 62. Galveston City R. Co. v. Hanna [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 639. An electric car company is not liable for a collision unless its motorman by strict watchfulness could have seen and avoided the accident. Under the evidence, the last fair chance doctrine held not to apply. Asphalt G. C. Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 741. Company not liable if plaintiff drove over the track when the car was so near that by the exercise of ordinary care the motorman could not have stopped the car. Cushing v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 App. Div. 510, 87 N. Y. S. 314. A motorman should use ordinary care under the surrounding circumstances. Extraordinary care is not required in crossing a narrow bridge. Lockwood v. Troy City R. Co., 92 App. Div. 112, 87 N. Y. S. 311. Evidence held to show no negligence on the part of the motorman. Summerman v. Interurban St. R. Co., 87 N. Y. S. 427. Evidence held insufficient to go to the jury on the question of negligence on the part of the motorman. Csatlos v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 92 App. Div. 620, 87 N. Y. S. 302. Mere negligence of plaintiff in approaching and crossing a track would not justify the infliction of an injury if it could be avoided by the exercise of reasonable care and caution. A motorman must if possible avoid a collision with a person upon the tracks, though negligently so. Hanheide v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 820.

63. "Shall keep a vigilant watch for all vehicles and persons on foot, especially children, either on its track or moving towards it, and on the first appearance of danger to such persons or vehicles the car shall be stopped in the shortest time and space possible." Drew v. Farnsworth [Mass.] 71 N. E. 783. Driver is negligent who releases control of his team even temporarily, knowing that firecrackers are being exploded throughout the city. Houston Transfer Co. v. Renard [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 838. Allowing an ice wagon team to proceed along a street without guidance authorizes a finding of negligence. Turtenwald v. Wisconsin L. Ice & Cartage Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 948. A jury may properly find that one might by the exercise of reasonable care drive safely between two excavations having 12 feet of road between them. Action for injuries to one working in the trench by reason of defendant's horse falling therein. Boston v. Abraham, 91 App. Div. 417, 86 N. Y. S. 863. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict based on negligent rapid driving. Wathen v. Pool, 25 Ky. L. R. 2294, 80 S. W. 439. Declaration of a driver of a horse made shortly after the horse has run away having been left unhitched are not part of the res gestae nor receivable as admissions against the owner. Haywood v. Hamm [Conn.] 58 A. 695. The owner of a horse, who negligently leaves it unhitched in the street is liable for resulting injuries. Proof that the horse was in the habit of running away was not essential. Id. Negligence may be inferred from the fact that a wagon is partly on the sidewalk. Franolich v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 386. Suddenly swerving to side of road and striking, plaintiff riding bicycle. Hershinger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 147. In using crossways railroads must exercise such care as is required to safeguard users of the street. See Railroads, 2 Curr. L. 1382. The motorman of a street car is bound to control his car if possible when he sees a frightened horse ahead in a narrow place. McVean v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. W. 527. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a verdict for a pedestrian, injured by a street car while attempting to cross the track. Lamm v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 390.

66. But one driving on a highway need not give notice of his intention to turn a corner. Osterheldt v. Peoples, 208 Pa. 310, 57 A. 703. Must maintain a general observation of the way. Adams Exp. Collision from driving on wrong side of street. Johnson v. Duncan, 90 N. Y. S. 660.

67. As to whether one may attempt to walk his horse across a street car track, he being ten or fifteen feet from the crossing and fifty feet from the car is a question for the jury. Binsell v. Interurban St. R. Co., 91 App. Div. 402, 86 N. Y. S. 913. A street cleaner injured by an unguided team is not negligent in stepping to one side from a direct course, in the discharge of his duties. Turtenwald v. Wisconsin L. Ice & Cartage himself committing a nuisance.[68] Negligence, however, cannot be attributed to a child of tender years.[69] A bus driver is negligent in needlessly trying to pull around another vehicle whereby he strikes a person on the footboard of a car.[70] A person is not a wrongdoer who rides on footboard of summer car under an ordinance which contemplated only horse cars.[71]

It is the duty of one to desist in an operation which he knows, or by the use of ordinary care could know, is frightening a team;[72] but where the driver of a buggy was guilty of contributory negligence, one who jumped from the buggy, fearing a collision, is not entitled to recover for personal injuries resulting from the jump.[73] The probability that some one may in an imprudent manner try to stop a runaway and avert its course is a natural consequence.[74] Care must be taken not to drive extraordinary loads over manhole covers if there is room to pass by,[75] but they must be strong enough to sustain any probable traffic.[76] The owner of them may recover for such negligence.[77]

Pedestrians are not bound in all cases to look and listen before crossing a street,[78] but they should not attempt to cross a thoroughfare, ahead of a vehicle upon nice calculation of chances of injury,[79] and one who is negligent in attempting to cross in front of an approaching street car cannot recover for a resulting injury.[80] The burden of showing freedom from contributory negligence[81] does not

Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 948. Negligence will not be presumed on the part of bicyclist from the mere fact of a collision with another person. Lee v. Jones [Mo.] 79 S. W. 927. A street car conductor who uses the street to go from the front to the rear end of his car is not negligent in failing to anticipate that persons using the street will not exercise due care. Caesar v. Fifth Ave. Coach Co., 90 N. Y. S. 359. Where an automobile collided with a street car conductor just as he alighted from his car, evidence held to show that the chauffeur was negligent in failing to halt or deviate from his course. Id. A pedestrian has a right to presume that a teamster will slacken his speed as an alternative to a collision. One indulging in this presumption is not guilty of contributory negligence. Schwartz v. London, 90 N. Y. S. 449.

69. Child of four years run over by wagon (Freel v. Wanamaker, 208 Pa. 279, 57 A. 563), and that plaintiff was a child and defendant a man does not shift the burden of proof as to negligence in a collision (Lee v. Jones [Mo.] 79 S. W. 927). Where the act of a child, without negligence by defendant, causes an injury, the child cannot recover, irrespective of whether he can be held responsible for contributory negligence. Id.

78. But he must exercise some care. Douglas v. Faust, 112 La. 1050, 36 So. 850. One fails to prove herself free from contributory negligence where the proofs are that she did not look to see whether she could safely cross the street and that had she done so, she would have seen the horse and wagon. Lieberman v. Stanley, 88 N. Y. S. 360.

79. Douglas v. Faust, 112 La. 1050, 36 So. 850. Defendant not liable under the doctrine of discovered peril where conflicting evidence showed its car to be from fifty to one hundred and eight feet from plaintiff's wagon, and running at a speed of eight or nine miles an hour. Roenfeldt v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 706.

80. One is guilty of contributory negligence who seeing an approaching car, and being able to stop his team, attempts to cross ahead of the car. Roenfeldt v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 706. Where a person is killed in crossing a street by a car running at a high rate of speed, on request of the conductor of another car, to hurry, the question is for the jury. Stillings v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 177 N. Y. 344, 69 N. E. 641. A traveler may assume that street cars are run in compliance with the local ordinance. Kansas City-Leavenworth R. Co. v. Gallagher [Kan.] 75 P. 469. He may rightfully cross in front of an approaching electric car which he plainly sees and distinctly hears, and not be negligent. But he must estimate the distance and speed, with reasonable accuracy. Id. In the absence of proof to the contrary, a jury may infer that a person about to cross a railroad track both looked and listened before attempting to do so. Such presumption arises from the natural instinct of self preservation. Id.

Under the general rule it is negligence per se for one about to cross a railroad track to not look and listen according to his opportunities. He should exercise reasonable care. always require proof of looking and listening before crossing a surface street car track.[82] That precaution is not strictly required as in the case of steam railways,[83] and its omission is not negligent when the situation is such as to warrant an assumption of safety in crossing.[84]

§ 14. Rights of abutters.[85]—The dedication of a street must be presumed to have been for all public purposes, present and prospective, consistent with its use as a highway and not actually detrimental to the abutting real estate.[86] The right of abutters to use them for other purposes is a permissive and subordinate one,[87] and must not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public.[88] Abutters may temporarily make reasonable use of sidewalks for loading and unloading goods,[89] but are liable for injuries from an unreasonable occupation thereof.[90]

Contributory negligence of a teamster who attempted to cross a street car track in front of an approaching car, forty feet distant, held a question for the jury. Robinson v. New York City R. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 368. A teamster has a right to presume that street car operatives will use due care to avoid a collision. Id. Imminent danger may excuse one who imprudently remains in a vehicle while a car approaches uncontrolled. Horse had fallen while crossing to pass other teams and driver tried to "pull him up" on his feet. Kansas City-Leavenworth R. Co. v. Langley [Kan.] 78 P. 858. Crossing before a car is not contributory negligence unless it was not the act of an ordinarily prudent mind under the circumstances. It is negligent in law to wait in full light and then try to cross but ten feet before a car exceeding lawful speed. Wolf v. City & S. R. Co. [Or.] 78 P. 668. Alighting to hold frightened horse while car approached which struck plaintiff because of narrowness of way is not in law contributory negligence. McVean v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 101 N. 86. Mordhurst v. Ft. Wayne & S. W. Traction Co. [Ind.] 71 N. E. 642. The public has a paramount right to employ the streets for travel and transportation. Brauer v. Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co. [Md.] 58 A. 21. The owners of lots abutting upon a street in a municipality hold them subject to the right of the public to use the street for street purposes, of which the construction and operation of a street railway is one. Abutting warehouseman cannot object to construction of such road unless grade of street is changed. Ireton Bros. v. Ft. Wayne Traction Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 317. In Indiana an electric street railway is not an additional burden upon the street and the abutting owner holding title to the center of the street is not entitled to compensation except for any special injury. Mordhurst v. Ft. Wayne & S. W. Traction Co. [Ind.] 71 N. E. 642. So also of a telephone line upon a rural highway (McCann v. Johnson County Tel. Co. [Kan.] 76 P. 870), but otherwise of a common passenger and freight railroad (Mordhurst v. Ft. Wayne & S. W. Traction Co. [Ind.] 71 N. E. 642), involving an exclusive use of the street. Laying of a steam railroad longitudinally in a street. Bork v. United N. J. R. & C. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 412. In Missouri a steam railroad constructed at the street grade is not an increase of servitude. Such a use is within the use contemplated when the street was laid out. De Geofroy v. Merchants' B. T. R. Co., 179 Mo. 698, 79 S. W. 386. 91. An owner (Laurel Imp. Co. v. Rowell [Miss.] 36 So. 543), or occupant of land abutting on a street has a valuable property join interference therewith by another.[92] Unless a ditch increases the natural discharge of surface water through a stream, lower owners are not harmed.[93]

A city does not lose control of its streets by acquiescence in the planting of shade trees within the limits thereof,[94] and trees interfering with the wires of a municipal lighting plant may be trimmed without compensation;[95] but it may not destroy shade trees belonging to an abutting owner without reasonable cause.[96] Trees in the parkway of a street may be destroyed in improving the street,[97] but if it be not necessary the city must use reasonable care to avoid removal or injury.[98]

An action for damage to an abutter must be brought within the statutory period of limitations after the action accrues.[99] Charter power to a city to allow partial obstructions is as broad as the power of the legislature respecting state roads which have become city streets.[1] If the title to the fee is in the public, one abutter has no complaint, in the absence of special injury, of the action of a city in allowing nonobstructive uses of the sidewalk.[2]

Ownership of fee.[3]—At common law the conveyance of a lot bounded upon interest in the adjacent street (Slattery v. McCaw, 44 Misc. 426, 90 N. Y. S. 52), and all other streets in the platted district (Hall v. Breyfogle, 162 Ind. 494, 70 N. E. 383); he is entitled to light and air in the street (De Geofroy v. Merchants' B. T. R. Co., 179 Mo. 698, 79 S. W. 386), and free ingress and egress to and from his property (Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 237; De Geofroy v. Merchants' B. T. R. Co., 179 Mo. 698, 79 S. W. 386; Attorney General v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 574), though his title extends only to the edge of the street (Schlemmer Co. v. Steinman & M. Furniture Co., 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 293); but cities are not required to construct approaches from abutting property or to grade the way up to the abutting property (Attorney General v. Collins [Mass.] 71 N. E. 574). An abutter assessed for abutting improvements is entitled to special and peculiar rights in the adjoining alley not common to the people at large, amounting to an easement or right of access. Schlemmer Co. v. Steinman & M. Furniture Co., 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 293.

92. May obtain an injunction to prevent interference with railway tracks. Cleveland Burial Case Co. v. Erie R. Co., 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 365. One may enjoin the use of the street in front of his property as a public hack stand, where the street is not a part of such a stand (Odell v. Bretney, 93 App. Div. 607, 87 N. Y. S. 665), and a nonconsenting abutter may enjoin construction of a street railway when majority of foot frontage have not consented as required by statute (Ireton Bros. & Eckenberg v. Ft. Wayne, V. W. & L. Traction Co., 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 317). A departure from the original route by a street car company to avoid curves is not fraud per se upon consenting abutters (Id.), but not the building of a railway trestle in the street without showing material injury, the city having given a permit for its construction (Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 2 Ohio N. P. [N. S.] 237). A disputed claim as to dedication of property as a street is not sufficient to enjoin the erection of a building thereon at the suit of an abutter. Northrop v. Simpson [S. C.] 48 S. E. 613. One whose frontage will be lessened and whose cost of truckage will be increased, by a change of grade, suffers a special damage different from the public and may maintain a suit for an injunction. a street,[4] or sold according to a plat showing a street adjoining the lot, in the absence of a reservation, gives title to the center of the street,[5] whence a conveyance to the public for highway purposes creates only an easement, the fee remaining in the grantor and his successors in title.[6] Where lots on both sides of a road are set apart to one co-tenant, he becomes seised of the fee of the road.[7] An abutter who expressly excludes the fee of the street from a conveyance of his lot retains title thereto.[8] Where the public makes no claim to the fee adverse to the proprietor, it does not acquire title by adverse possession.[9]

A purchaser under a plat cannot claim title to the center of the street and at the same time deny that it is a street.[10]

§ 15. Defective or unsafe streets or highways. A. Liability of municipalities in general.[11]—In determining what part of a street will be improved, a city acts in its delegated governmental capacity and is not answerable for a neglect of duty,[12] unless the plans be palpably dangerous to travelers.[13] And towns are bound only to provide wrought ways of reasonable width and smoothness;[14] but where a portion only of a street is open for travel, the city should render it

The fee remains in the dedicator or the abutter when a common law dedication is made for street or highway purposes. See 3 Curr. L. 1054, n. 26 et seq. Note to 46 Am. St. Rep. 495, citing Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624; Gosselin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 623; Thomsen v. McCormick, 136 Ill. 135; Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. [U. S.] 57. If a fee or greater estate than a mere easement is essential to the purpose of a dedication, one may be implied but only when it is essential. Halley v. Scott County Fiscal Court, 25 Ky. L. R. 1459, 78 S. W. 149. See 3 Curr. L. 1055, n. 37.

A statutory dedication vests the fee in the public when the statute so intends. See 3 Curr. L. 1054, n. 25, citing City of Lake City v. Fulkerson, 122 Iowa, 569. Note to 46 Am. St. Rep. 495, citing Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624; Gosselin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 623; Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 50; Canal Trustees v. Haven, 11 Ill. 554; City of La Salle v. Matthiessen, 16 Ill. App. 69. See, also, Ill. Cyc. Digest "Dedication." A statute declaring it shall vest the fee in the county for the "public use * * * in trust for [the purpose indicated] and for no other purpose" has been construed as intending no more than an easement in the public and the bare fee in the county. Thomas v. Hunt [Mo.] 32 L. R. A. 857. See, also, 3 Curr. L. 1054, n. 27. Since the policy of the law is to let the fee follow the abutting ownership (Thomas v. Hunt [Mo.] 32 L. R. A. 857), a statutory dedication for rural highways should with greater reason than one for urban streets be construed as conveying only an easement. The more diversified purposes of city streets might well require a fee which the country road would not.

It may be stated as a general rule that the fee remains in the abutter howsoever the highway be acquired except (a) when the fee is condemned for a highway purpose requiring a fee, (b) when a fee is clearly dedicated, (c) when the legislature has clearly provided that a statutory dedication carries a fee.

The ownership of the fee servient to a highway is substantial property. Buffalo v. Pratt [N. Y.] 15 L. R. A. 413.

6. Under the recitals of a deed conveying certain lands to the City of New York, "for the sole and only use of a public road forever," the fee remained in the grantors. Bloomingdale Road. Mitchell v. Einstein, 42 Misc. 358, 86 N. Y. S. 759. But in Iowa the acknowledgment and recording of a plat conveys to the public an estate in fee simple of lands therein set apart for street or other public use [McClain's Code, § 996]. safe and guard against accident.[15] A street unsafe during repairs should be closed to travel.[16] A town may be liable for a defect adjoining and so connected with the traveled track as to make traveling unsafe.[17]

Where a municipality is empowered to control and keep its streets in order, it is charged with a positive duty to do so,[18] which duty is a primary one of which the city cannot relieve itself by any act of its own.[19]

A city is not an insurer of the safety of travelers upon the highway,[20] is not bound to anticipate every emergency,[21] and is not guilty of negligence for every act or omission which would constitute negligence on the part of an individual;[22] but is required to exercise ordinary care and diligence[23] to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for the ordinary travel[24] of those who have occasion to

City of Colorado Springs v. May [Colo. App.] 77 P. 1093. Evidence of hole in street and repairs by city near held sufficient to warrant find-use them by day or night.[25] Lighting streets is governmental function and for failure to provide lights the city is not negligent.[26] The statutory duty in Massachusetts covers defects which being dangerous to ordinary vehicles result in injury to an automobile.[27] This duty applies to a portion of the street used by a street railway,[28] but not that used by a steam road.[29]

In general a municipality is liable to persons exercising ordinary care for injuries by reason of obstacles permitted by it to remain in the street,[30] though not at common law.[31]

That it was originally the duty of an abutting owner to construct a sidewalk does not relieve a city which has undertaken the work and is negligent therein.[32]

Under a statute requiring cities to keep their streets in fit condition for travel, a municipality is not liable for injuries caused by permitting horse racing in a street.[33]

It is no defense in an action for injuries from a defective sidewalk that the city had no funds to repair the walks.[34]

Plaintiff need not show the cause of a fall, if under the existing conditions such a fall was rendered more dangerous by the negligence of the city.[35]

Where the facts are undisputed, the question of negligence is for the court,[36] but upon conflicting evidence it is a question for the jury.[37]

No municipal responsibility arises for injuries to a pedestrian by a bicyclist riding upon a sidewalk contrary to ordinance, nor to one injured while walking upon a regular bicycle path.[38]

(§ 15) B. Notice of defect.[39]—It is a general rule that the liability of a city for damages occasioned by a defective sidewalk arises only upon notice, express or implied, and that proof of such notice must appear before the liability is established;[40] though notice of the defect is not per se sufficient to show liability.[41] Generally, constructive notice[42] accompanied by reasonable opportunity to repair and a refusal to do so is sufficient,[43] but by statute in some states actual notice is necessary, independent of the care used.[44]

Whether a city had notice of a defect or should have known of it, is generally for the jury,[45] but notice is conclusively presumed where defective original construction is shown,[46] or where defects in a sidewalk existed for such length of time as to have become known to travelers, the evidence showing that by ordinary

As proof of constructive notice of defects it is sufficient to allege a constructive notice. Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 P. 978. The city of Rochester is now liable for injuries from defects of which it should have known. The White charter for cities of second class (Laws 1898, p. 438, c. 182, § 461, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1290, c. 581) repealed Rochester city charter relative to notice. Cahill v. care the city should have known of the defects,[47] and knowledge of a policeman of a defect in a sidewalk, which it is his duty to report, is knowledge of the city.[48]

(§ 15) C. Sidewalks.[49]—A municipality is not guilty of negligence for a failure to build sidewalks on all its streets,[50] but where it has constructed a walk[51] or required one to be built,[52] or allowed it to be built for and used by the public,[53] or has assumed jurisdiction thereof by maintaining and supervising it,[54] a liability arises from a failure to use ordinary care and watchfulness,[55] to keep it in a reasonably safe condition,[56] for a sufficient width for the safe passage thereon by those exercising reasonable care[57] whether the walk be on a public street or not.[58]

Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 P. 978).

NOTE. Injuries from defects due to use of space under sidewalks: The city is liable for its own default which may consist in permitting a dangerous condition of the vault or cover thereof or a negligent use by the abutter. Even for defects not apparent if it should have found them the city may be liable, but it must be charged with knowledge or notice in all cases. See the exhaustive note to Beall v. Seattle, 28 Wash. 593, 61 L. R. A. 583, where are discussed these doctrines and the cases, also the questions of law and fact in such negligence and the right of the city to a remedy over against the negligent property owner. The annotator of Beall v. Seattle, 28 Wash. 593, 61 L. R. A. 583, lays down the rule that the city is liable if the condition though caused by the abutting tenant is one which the city or any of its officers charged with such matters knew or should have known. The following cases apply the rule: Vault or cellar openings, covers and gratings. Peoria v. Simpson, 110 Ill. 294, 51 Am. Rep. 683; Abilene v. Cowperthwait, 52 Kan 324; Reinhard v. New York, 2 Daly [N. Y.] 243;

This duty is not a police regulation but a governmental duty resting upon the municipality,[59] which may also be imposed upon the abutting owner but cannot be extended to mere tenants.[60] A city is under no obligation to see that abutters maintain safe structures or approaches to the highway.[61]

(§ 15) D. Barriers, railings, and signals.[62]—In the absence of statute or ordinance, a failure to guard or light dangerous places in a street has been held not to be negligence per se,[63] but ordinarily a city must use ordinary prudence to protect persons lawfully using the street and exercising ordinary care from falling into dangerous places along the side of the street;[64] and where the law requires barriers, they should be in condition to withstand any reasonable pressure it may be presumed will be brought against them in the ordinary conduct of people lawfully using the highway.[65] The rule as to railings along a road bed designed for the passage of vehicles applies also to sidewalks;[66] and private individuals[67] as well as municipalities are charged with the duty of protecting dangerous places for which they are responsible.[68]

Where the evidence is conflicting, the sufficiency of lights and barricade about alterations in the street is a question for the jury,[69] as also the question of a city's liability, under a statute for failure to erect a railing along a sidewalk some distance above the ground.[70] Whether frightening of horses by bicycles at an unguarded place should have been foreseen is for the jury.[71]

(§ 15) E. Snow and ice.[72]—A city is not liable for the slippery condition of its streets caused by ice upon its sidewalks,[73] unless the ice be so rough and uneven, or so rounded up, or at such an incline, as to make it an obstruction and to cause it to be unsafe for travel with the exercise of ordinary care,[74] and the city has notice of such condition,[75] or the ice and snow have been allowed to remain in unusual quantities for a longer period than was necessary and could have been removed without greater expense than could reasonably be incurred.[76] The city may assume for a reasonable time that the abutting owners will perform their duty and remove the snow or ice.[77] A municipality is not liable for injuries from stepping on a pile of ashes in the street covered with ice and snow.[78]

(§ 15) F. Defects created or permitted by abutting owners and others. Joint and several liability.[79]—A city is not liable for the acts of an independent contractor,[80] except where the work done is one of positive duty to the individual[81] or is under the control of the city,[82] or where the city fails to take precaution within a reasonable time after notice.[83]

It is primarily the duty of a company using electricity to use ordinary care to keep its poles and wires in repair and from becoming dangerous to travelers,[84] but in case it does not use such care, a city may be jointly liable for negligently allowing its streets to be unsafe.[85]

the lot owner has notice is conclusive upon the latter as to the fact, cause, and extent of the injury.[87] In Texas the city may implead the abutting owner responsible for the defect.[88] Payment in full for a contractor's claim for paving does not operate as a satisfaction of a contract and bond whereby he was to save the city harmless from liability for personal injuries.[89] A contractor who is made co-defendant but who secured a discontinuance as to himself is not entitled to notice of the pendency of the action to fix his liability.[90]

An abutting owner is liable for any negligent act creating a dangerous defect or obstruction in a street or highway.[91]

Highways are for the convenience of the public and those using them for other purposes than ordinary travel must use a reasonable care proportionate to the danger of such use to protect travelers,[92] but it is sufficient to see that the street is in the proper condition at the close of each business day.[93] Where a trench was dug by others under a street railway, the railway company's duty to keep the street in repair does not begin until the trench is filled even with the street.[94] One obstructing a publicly traveled way and causing injury to a traveler cannot defend on the ground that the way was never legally established as a highway.[95]

(§ 15) G. Persons entitled to protection.[96]—Only those properly using the highways for ordinary travel are protected by the law[97] though a city's duty as to sidewalks extends to any one who was lawfully upon the walk and using it for any purpose for which said walk was designed,[98] and a child may be a traveler on the highway, who is in fact traveling over it in a proper manner, though that traveling includes play or pastime.[99] care to avoid a collision,[2] and may recover only for injuries from a defect which would have caused injury to the ordinary traveler.[3]

(§ 15) H. Remote and proximate cause of injury.[4]—The failure of duty which constitutes negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury to create a liability therefor,[5] but such a case is not necessarily the one nearest to the event.[6] In Maine a town is liable only if its fault is the sole cause of the injury.[7] The statutory liability in Massachusetts admits of concurring causes innocently and not negligently set in motion by third persons.[8] Upon conflicting evidence question of proximate cause is for the jury.[9]

(§ 15) I. Contributory negligence of person injured.[10]—As in negligence cases generally, any negligence of the plaintiff contributing to the injury will bar recovery,[11] the question being, on a conflict of the evidence, one of fact for the jury,[12] though where the evidence be undisputed, it is for the court.[13] Several specific instances are considered in the note.[14]

100 N. W. 1112. One attempting to cross a ditch, three feet wide, without emergency requiring it, assumes the ordinary risks thereof but not those arising from latent defects such as undermining of the bank. Kent v. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 399. A court will not presume that plaintiff knew the defective condition of a walk apparently sound. Village of Wilmette v. Brachle, 209 Ill. 621, 71 N. E. 41.

19. Lyon v. Grand Rapids [Wis.] 99 N. W. 311. Whether one having general knowledge of a defective walk, was guilty of contributory negligence, was a question for the jury. Wiens v. W. 189; City of Guthrie v. Finch, 13 Okl. 496, 75 P. 288; Oesterreich v. Detroit [Mich.] 100 N. W. 593. Plaintiff had many times been over the walk where she was injured. Benson v. Hamilton, 34 Wash. 201, 75 P. 805. Evidence held to warrant a finding that plaintiff was excusable for not remembering the defect. Lyon v. Grand Rapids [Wis.] 99 N. W. 311. General knowledge of an obstruction by which one is injured is not necessarily contributory negligence. Such knowledge should be considered by the jury and may constitute contributory negligence. Plaintiff's knowledge of a posted notice as to the unsafety of a bridge is not conclusive as to his negligence in his use thereof, he having been personally advised by the road officials that it had been repaired and was safe. The test is whether plaintiff acted as a reasonably prudent man. Jones v. Shelby County [Iowa] 100 N. W. 520. Every excavation in a street is not of such a character as to make it negligence per se to attempt to cross it. Kent v. Southern Bell Tel. & T. Co. [Ga.] 48 S. E. 399. In Missouri one is guilty of contributory negligence in not passing around an obvious and dangerous defect in a sidewalk. Jennings v. Kansas City [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1041. It is not material what plaintiff believed about the safety of a place about the defective condition of which he knew not. Gutter apron. Keim v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 101 N. W. 443. 26. Joy v. Inhabitants of York [Me.] 58 A. 1059. A requirement of notice of personal injury "within sixty days next after such injury" allows sixty days after the day of the injury. McEvoy v. Sault Ste. Marie [Mich.] 98 N. W. 1006. Under a statute requiring notice within thirty days after injury, the giving of a notice within thirty days after plaintiff is mentally and physically able to do so is sufficient [Laws 1894, p. 1570, c. 623]. Williams v. Port Chester, 97 App. Div. 84, 89 N. Y. S. 671. A notice from plaintiff as soon as she was able to transact business, though seventy-two houre after the injury, is a substantial compliance with a charter requirement of notice within forty-eight hours. Walden v. Jamestown, 178 N. Y. 213, 70 N. E. 466. In Iowa notice of demand must be given within thirty days of injury and suit may be brought only after thirty days' notice and within three months of the injury [Code, §§ 1050, 1051]. Kenyon v. Cedar Rapids [Iowa] 99 N. W. 692. A statute regulating the presentation of all accounts and demands against a city does not apply to a claim for damages for personal injuries [Pol. Code, §§ 4811, 4812]. Dawes v. Great Falls [Mont.] 77 P. 309. Failure to properly present a claim is not a bar to the maintenance of an action, where the penalty for such failing such information as enables the city to investigate the cause of the injuries being generally sufficient,[27] but in New York a failure to offer proof of a compliance with the statute is fatal to recovery.[28] Substantial compliance is necessary,[29] but may be waived,[30] though not by an assistant of the officer to be served.[31] A mayor may acknowledge service of notice,[32] and actual notice to a city superintendent of streets is notice to the city.[33]

(§ 15) K. Actions.[34]—Suit must be timely brought,[35] and an action barred by the statute cannot be revived by either an express or implied agreement with the city.[36] In Wisconsin limitations do not begin to run until service of statutory notice of nonallowance of the claim by the city,[37] but need not negative contributory negligence.[38] Plaintiff should allege notice on the part of the city, or facts under which the city should have had notice,[39] though a defect in this respect, being amendable, is not available after judgment.[40] The general rules as to variure is an inability to recover costs. City of Garnett v. Hamilton [Kan.] 77 P. 683.

27. Notice gave date and place of injury and that the cause was a pitfall. City of Denver v. Bradbury [Colo. App.] 76 P. 1077. A notice of sufficient particularity to enable the municipality to inquire into and ascertain the facts of the injury is a substantial compliance with the statute [Rev. St. 623, § 76]. Joy v. Inhabitants of York [Me.] 58 A. 1069; Schnee v. Dubuque, 122 Iowa, 459, 98 N. W. 298; Oesterreich v. Detroit [Mich.] 100 N. W. 593; McCarthy v. Syracuse, 96 App. Div. 566, 89 N. Y. S. 89. A notice is sufficient which by a fair construction alleges an injury caused by a defect due to the negligence of a city and its employes. Cronan v. Woburn, 185 Mass. 91, 70 N. E. 38. Evidence held insufficient to show notice of claim for injuries as required by city charter. Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738. If the notice be not misleading, a lack of particularity of the place and cause of the injury may be immaterial. At "First West between Seventh and Eighth South" streets from a "fence on the walk" held sufficient. Connor v. Salt Lake City [Utah] 78 P. 479.

28. Notice must be filed with each claim [Laws 1886, p. 801, c. 572]. Seliger v. New York, 88 N. Y. S. 1003.

29. Oral notice to the assistant of one on whom written notice should be served, held insufficient [Laws of 1895, p. 724]. Holtham v. Detroit [Mich.] 98 N. W. 754. Evidence raised a presumption of proper service of notice. Beattie v. Detroit [Mich.] 100 N. W. 574. It must describe the nature and location of the defect with sufficient accuracy to warrant a submission to the jury of the question whether what is described is a defect and the defect claimed. Notice sufficient which alleges a pile of stone partly within the wrought portion of a highway and partly without. York v. Inhabitants of Athens [Me.] 58 A. 418. A notice may be sufficient under the statute though it alleges more than one defect in a walk [Code § 1051]. Bauer v. Dubuque, 122 Iowa, 500, 98 N. W. 355. Description of defect in a sidewalk held sufficiently definite. Brown v. Incorporated Town of Chillicothe, 122 Iowa, 640, 98 N. W. 502. Notice held to sufficiently describe the place of defect. Ruscher v. Stanley [Wis.] 98 N. W. 223. In Iowa it should advise the municipality of the nature and cause of the injury, the time and place when and where it occurred, and the particular defect or negligence which it is claimed caused or contributed to it [Code, § 1051]. Bauer v. Dubuque, 122 Iowa, 500, 98 N. W. 355.

30. Failure to give the statutory notice is waived by a failure to plead the limitation. Such notice is not essential to recovery [Code, § 3447]. Belken v. Iowa Falls, 122 Iowa, 430, 98 N. W. 296. City held not to have waived the statutory notice required by Loc. Acts 1895, p. 724, No. 463, § 46. Wilton v. Detroit [Mich.] 100 N. W. 1020. Failure to verify a notice may be considered waived by lack of objection and by medical examination on behalf of the city. Hunter v. Durand [Mich.] 100 N. W. 191. Not waived by an order to appear before a committee and produce witnesses, unless the order issued with knowledge of lack of notice. Holtman v. Detroit [Mich.] 98 N. W. 754.

ance[41] and amendment of pleadings apply.[42] Several cases in which the pleadings are attacked for insufficient allegation of facts are mentioned in the note.[43]

An action for injuries from obstructions in a highway contrary to statute does not involve the question of negligence,[44] but in an action for injuries from obstructions not forbidden by statute, they must be shown to have arisen from defendant's negligence.[45]

Evidence that a walk had been in a generally defective condition for some time previous to the injuries complained of is admissible,[46] likewise of evidence as to repairs,[47] and as to the ordinary duration of such a walk.[48] Declarations as to the condition of a walk, by persons examining it directly after an accident are admissible,[49] but it is error to allow a question to the plaintiff as to what was the effect on her attention, as to the walk, of objects she was carrying.[50] Evidence of

A slight departure from an accurate description is not fatal. Failure to allege the splintering of boards. Duncan v. Grand Rapids [Wis.] 99 N. W. 317. A finding that plaintiff was crossing the junction of two streets is authorized where the evidence showed that he stood on the sidewalk for a few seconds. Drew v. Farnsworth [Mass.] 71 N. E. 783. One who predicates her right to recovery upon the negligent obstruction of a walk by a contractor cannot recover from the city where she fails to prove such negligence on the part of the contractor. Hesselbach v. St. Louis, 179 Mo. 505, 78 S. W. 1009. In an action for wanton injury, there can be no recovery for mere negligence if seasonable objection be made. Turtenwald v. Wisconsin Lakes Ice & Cartage Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 948.

42. Where a petition alleges injuries resulting from a defective bridge and that "petitioner's horse while being ridden carefully over said bridge fell through said bridge," an amendment "that said horse became frightened and that the rider upon said horse was unable to manage him," etc., should have been allowed. Brackin v. Bainbridge, 119 Ga. 603, 46 S. E. 828. Plaintiff allowed to amend a complaint alleging an injury at the side of a stone bridge, substituting therefor an embankment over a culvert. Northrop v. Sidney, 97 App. Div. 271, 90 N. Y. S. 23. In a substituted petition plaintiff may allege for the first time that a certain walk was improperly constructed. McCartney v. Washington [Iowa] 100 N. W. 80.

43. An allegation of a defective walk "at the time of the commission of the grievances hereinafter alleged" is sufficient as to the date where the only date thereafter alleged was the date of the injury. City of Hammond v. Winslow [Ind. App.] 70 N. E. 819. Allegations as to defective condition of the walk held sufficient. City of Guthrie v. Finch, 13 Okl. 496, 75 P. 288. Allegations held sufficient to cover the manner in which an injury was received. Village of Wilmette v. Brachle [Ill.] 71 N. E. 41. A complaint against a city for negligently allowing a private electric wire erected under an ordinance to be left unguarded is not demurrable on the theory that the defect could only be discovered by inspection. Plaintiff's evidence on the trial might show the defect was discoverable without inspection. Wilbert v. Sheboygan [Wis.] 99 N. W. 330. A declaration for injuries from a defect in a street need not allege the duty of the city to keep the street in repair, that being a statutory obligation. Cronan v. Woburn, 185 Mass. 91, 70 N. E. 38. A complaint alleging that a city "negligently and carelessly" maintained blocks in the street need not also aver that the blocks were not useful and necessary. City of Alexandria v. Liebler, 162 Ind. 438, 70 N. E. 512. A complaint need not allege the depth of hole causing injury. Lyon v. Grand Rapids [Wis.] 99 N. W. 311. Allegation that obstacle was alongside of walk regarded as one that city was negligent in not having barrier there. City of Vincennes v. Spees [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 531. Allegation that stone was "along" the edge of walk not equivalent to one that it was "on" the walk. Id. prior accidents at the same place is admissible.[51] Evidence of a previous habit of plaintiff to ride her bicycle on the sidewalk near the place of accident is competent,[52] but the court should exclude testimony that plaintiff was in the habit of becoming intoxicated.[53] If there is doubt whether lights were burning it may be shown that even so they shed an insufficient light.[54] In an action for injuries based upon negligence in leaving cakes of ice in the highway, evidence that other horses passing in a similar manner were not frightened is admissible, unless too remote as a matter of fact.[55] In an action for injury to plaintiff while driving, by defendant's negligent placing of stones in the highway, a question as to the use of the locality by persons with teams, where they had gone, is not excluded by a claim of defendant that there was a sidewalk at the place in question.[56] A defendant town is not conclusively bound by the testimony of the town chairman.[57] Cases involving the sufficiency of the evidence are collected below.[58]

Instructions are considered in the note.[59]

§ 16. Injury to, obstructions of, or encroachment on, street or highway.[60]—There can be no rightful permanent use of a public highway by individuals for private purposes,[61] though a temporary and reasonable use of the streets and walks for construction purposes is lawful,[62] in which case the city must see that

58. A case may properly go to the jury upon the uncorroborated testimony of the plaintiff as to the place of accident. Benson v. Hamilton, 34 Wash. 201, 75 P. 805. Where a passenger alighting from a street car, and carrying a sleeping child, tripped over a stake in the street projecting fourteen inches above ground and having been there six months, it was for the jury to decide whether plaintiff exercised due care, whether the way was reasonably safe, whether the defect might have been remedied by reasonable care and whether the city should have known of the defect. Stanford v. Inhabitants of Hyde Park, 185 Mass. 253, 70 N. E. 51. Evidence that a sidewalk had been out of repair for several weeks, though flatly contradicted, was sufficient to take the case to the jury. Norton v. Kramer [Mo.] 79 S. W. 699.

59. An instruction that a boy running on a sidewalk should use such care as boys of his age and discretion usually exercise on like occasions and such care and discretion as the jury think he ought to have used is not misleading. Beaudin v. Bay City [Mich.] 99 N. W. 285. An instruction that actual notice or a sufficient length of time to imply notice, was necessary where a walk had been repaired but ten days previously was properly refused where the evidence showed the walk to be in the same condition after injury as before the repair. Village of Wilmette v. Brachle [Ill.] 71 N. E. 41. In an action for injuries received upon a street never accepted by the city, an instruction assuming an acceptance is erroneous. Clay City v. Abner [Ky.] 82 S. W. 276. An instruction limiting the damages to the diminished earning capacity of plaintiff is not open to objection. Beaudin v. Bay City [Mich.] 99 N. W. 285. Charge on duration of unsafe condition is inapplicable to accident from bad construction. Achey v. Marion [Iowa] 101 N. W. 435. Charge held to state proper degree of care and hence not to harm plaintiff even if it assumed his knowledge. Cannady v. Durham [N. C.] 49 S. E. 50. Having charged the necessity of ordinary care it was error to charge the "greater degree of care" required by reason of the plaintiff's possible knowledge or the dim light. Keim v. Ft. Dodge [Iowa] 101 N. W. 443. Charge held not to mislead jury into excluding driver's contributory negligence as imputable to occupant of carriage. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ind.] 72 N. the work is properly conducted.[63] Municipal councils cannot authorize a private party to bridge over a portion of a street not vacated.[64]

Long continued encroachments in the highway cannot destroy the public right or take away the authority of the public to remove and abate them.[65] Under power to sue and be sued and to establish highways, a city may maintain ejectment for possession of a street,[66] and in such an action, the city need not allege its ownership of the street.[67]

An unauthorized coal hole in a sidewalk[68] or any unsafe and improperly secured authorized excavation is a nuisance per se,[69] but an authorized railway track is not,[70] and an abutting owner cannot complain of obstruction of street from the building of a street railway where there is no change of grade.[71] A fence is an obstruction,[72] and electric wires may be.[73]

A material obstruction to a public street is per se a public nuisance,[74] but only one whose injury is of a different character than that sustained by the general public may maintain an action therefor.[75] A proposed unreasonable obstruction of a sidewalk may be enjoined before the actual commission of the act,[76] but the obstruction of an alleged alley will not be restrained where the complaint fails to allege a dedication.[77] The power of the county court to order removal of gates across roads extends only to gates originally erected by permission of such court,[78] but denial of the petition on such ground is no bar to a subsequent application, if it be ascertained that the gate was in fact erected by such permission.[79] Parol

A fence not nearer than two and one-half feet from a traveled track, which was also outside the highway is not an obstruction subject to summary removal (Konkel v. Pella [Wis.] 99 N. W. 453), and there being evidence to that effect, it was for the jury to say whether a wire placed by defendant about parking in a public street obstructed the sidewalk and was of a dangerous character (Snyder v. evidence of an agreement at the time of laying out a road as to right of the landowner to maintain a gate is not admissible without proof that the report of the viewers is lost or silent thereon.[80]

Persons unlawfully obstructing streets are liable for damages arising therefrom to travelers lawfully using the street,[81] but not to one who is himself committing a nuisance.[82]

An indictment will lie for obstructing a public road,[83] though defendant leaves enough open way for public travel,[84] but the act of maliciously digging up a private way is not necessarily a criminal act.[85] Every obstruction of a highway is a separate offense.[86] One who obstructs a road contrary to statute is not entitled to notice to remove the obstruction as a prerequisite to the right to an action under the statute,[87] and the owners of swinging signs projecting over a sidewalk are not entitled to any other than the general public notice of the passage of an ordinance prohibiting such signs.[88] Whether the statute requires the removal of certain obstructions in a highway is a question of law for the court.[89]

HOLIDAYS.

A statute relating to legal holidays includes without express mention all days set apart as such by law.[90] Unless a legal holiday is declared dies non, judicial proceedings on such days are valid.[91]

§ 1. The right to homestead in general.[93]—The right of a widow to a homestead is in many states an independent right and is not dependent upon whether or not she has other property fit to live in.[94]

Statutes authorizing homestead exemptions.[95]—Homestead exemptions have been held not to exist as against the state,[96] but otherwise are to be liberally construed in favor of the homestead right.[97]

Constitutionality.[98]—That a law rendering the proceeds of a sale of a homestead exempt applies to previously incurred indebtedness does not impair the obligation of contracts.[99]

§ 2. Persons entitled.[1]—In most states the head of a family is entitled to claim a homestead, and whether or not one is the head of a family is a question of fact.[2] A wife,[3] or minors living with and being morally dependent upon another,[4] constitute members of the latter's family within the meaning of the homestead laws.

An abandoned wife[5] may claim it.[6] But if she remarries on the presumption that her absent husband is dead, she cannot claim a homestead out of his property, he dying subsequent to the second marriage, the latter never being annulled.[7]

§ 3. Properties and estates in which homestead may be claimed. As dependent on nature of claimant's title.[8]—The right to a homestead may be based on

NOTE. Homestead statutes impairing the obligation of a contract: It has been held that if the effect of an exemption statute is to withdraw from execution or other final process property of the debtor which was liable to execution when the debt was contracted, leaving insufficient for the payment of his prior debts, the statute is in violation of the Federal Constitution, in that it impairs the effectiveness of the creditor's remedy to the extent of the property withdrawn, and to that extent impairs the obligation of the debtor's contract. an equitable,[9] leasehold,[10] or undivided[11] interest in land, but the party claiming the homestead must have the right to possession.[12] The exemption extends to an ungathered crop.[13] That one acquires different portions of a tract at different times,[14] or that his estate in each portion is different in degree,[15] does not affect the homestead character of the entire tract. That the property is not paid for does not affect one's homestead rights as against subsequent creditors.[16]

As dependent on use of premises.[17]—The use made of land may determine its character as a homestead.[18] That part of the building is rented[19] or used for business purposes[20] does not necessarily destroy its character as a homestead.

As dependent on whether lands are rural or urban.[21]—The extent of one's homestead rights is often dependent upon the rural or urban character of the property.[22] Its character in this regard is determined largely by the use to which it is put,[23] and the surrounding circumstances.[24] In order to constitute land urban property it is sufficient that it is recognized as a part of the plat or plan of a city,[25] and it is unimportant that the lots of which it is composed do not conform to the

19. Flat building. One flat was occupied as the family residence. This under Civ. Code, § 1237, providing that the homestead should consist of "the dwelling house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated." A building being an entirety, homestead occupancy sufficient to exempt any part of it exempts the whole. Billings v. Matlage [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 805.

NOTE. Effect of renting portion of building: The renting of rooms does not destroy the homestead right of exemption even as to the portion so rented. Goldman v. Clark, 1 Nev. 608; Mercier v. Chace, 93 Mass. 194. Thus the right of homestead may exist in the whole of a hotel. Lazell v. Lazell, 90 Mass. 575; Ackley v. Chamberlain, 18 Cal. 183. But it has been held that property being primarily and principally used for hotel purposes it cannot be made subject to a homestead exemption. Laughlin v. Wright, 63 Cal. 116. Nor is the homestead character of the premises destroyed by the fact that the building is partially used for business purposes. In re Tertelling, 2 Dill. 339; Hogan v. Manners, 23 Kan. 559, 33 Am. Rep. 199; Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 264; Rush v. Gordon, 38 Kan. 535. See the hotel cases, supra.

Double houses: As a general rule, the rented portion of a double house cannot be claimed as exempt. It has been so held under a statute defining a homestead to be the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides and the land on which the same is situated (Tiernan v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 289), also under provisions exempting premises "owned and occupied" by the claimant (Dyson v. Sheley, 11 Mich. 528).—From note to Cass County Bank v. Weber [Iowa] 12 L. R. dimensions or shape of lots in the platted portion of the city.[26] A rural homestead may consist of contiguous parts of different governmental subdivisions,[27] and in Texas of one or more noncontiguous parcels of land.[28] If noncontiguous tracts are used as a whole and in connection, the homestead exemption may be selected and claimed from any portion.[29]

As dependent on whether land is realty or personalty.[30]—In Georgia the statute providing for what is known as "the short homestead" does not allow the exemption of cash or the investment of cash for the use of a family.[31]

Amount exempt.[32]—In some states the homestead right is measured by the value of the property,[33] and one's interest not exceeding this amount the homestead embraces his entire title and interest.[34] One's dwelling house being exempt without regard to value, the fact that it comprises the larger part of one's estate does not impair the homestead right.[35] In some states and in certain cases one's homestead exemption depreciating in value, it may be brought up to the full amount allowed.[36]

§ 4. Claiming, selecting, and setting apart of homesteads.[37]—It is a general rule subject to statutory exceptions[38] that an unexecuted intention to occupy land as a homestead does not create a homestead right therein.[39] One may, however, for a reasonable time, claim a vacant lot as a homestead, he having the intention and apparent means to improve and occupy the same.[40] A party cannot have two

NOTE. Revaluation or reassignment of homestead: The right to a reassignment of a homestead for a change in value can only arise under statutes limiting homesteads to a certain value and depends largely upon the language of the particular statute in question. The prevailing rule seems to be that an increase in value of a homestead will authorize a revaluation and reassignment. Stubblefield v. Graves, 50 Ill. 103; Mooney v. Moriarty, 36 Ill. App. 175; Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176; Helfenstein v. Cave, 3 Iowa, 287; Beckner v. Rule, 91 Mo. 62; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488. In the following cases the reassignment has been refused: Vanstory v. Thorton, 110 N. C. 10; Hardy v. Lane, 6 Lea [Tenn.] 380; Baylor v. San Antonio Nat. Bank, 38 Tex. 448. While in Gowdy v. Johnson [Ky.] 44 L. R. A. 400, the court took a middle ground holding that an increase in value would not authorize a revaluation and reassignment, at least when there has been no rapid or extraordinary increase of value, or any unreasonable outlay on the premises.

A homestead being set out of a decedent's estate, that it afterward increases in value is not ground for a new assignment. Kenley v. Bryan, 110 Ill. 652.—From note to Gowdy v. Johnson [Ky.] 44 L. R. A. 400.

rights of homestead at the same time,[41] nor will he be allowed to use the right to perpetrate a fraud.[42]

Where an assignment or allotment of homestead is necessary,[43] it must be set out in the manner prescribed by law.[44]

In some states in order to claim property as a homestead, a declaration to that effect must be filed[45] before the death of either spouse,[46] and it must, generally, contain a description of the premises claimed, and a statement that the person making it is residing on the premises described,[47] and is the head of a family.[48] It is sufficient, however, if it contain a statement of probative facts from which the ultimate fact may be judicially inferred.[49] In California a husband cannot select a homestead from the wife's separate property without her joining in the declaration of homestead.[50] The use of the property at the time of the filing of the declaration determines whether or not it is a homestead.[51] In Georgia a petition must be filed describing the property out of which the exemption is claimed,[52] and containing a list of all the property owned by the applicant,[53] and being made by a married woman must affirmatively show that the husband refused to make the application.[54]

An order of a court of competent jurisdiction[55] is essential to a judicial selection. That a court has jurisdiction to set out a homestead does not give it jurisdiction to try title to the property.[56] Neither the entry[57] nor recordation[58] of the order is essential to its validity unless so declared. The award is, in some states, to a certain degree discretionary,[59] and the determination of the court cannot be inquired into collaterally.[60] Courts generally have the power to vacate or modify an order setting apart a homestead,[61] but the right to petition the court to so do may be lost by laches.[62] In some states the order is reviewable on appeal,[63] and in others it is not.[64]

After the proceedings have been recorded they become the private papers of those interested in the homestead estate,[65] and as such may, if lost, be judicially established.[66]

Failure to claim exemption.[67]—It has been held that the owner of an equitable interest not designating his homestead therein, the latter may be set apart for his benefit by an officer selling his interest on execution.[68]

A homestead claim being disputed within the statutory time, lack of diligence cannot be imputed to the contestant.[69] An issue, in a homestead contest, is sufficient if broad enough to admit any competent evidence tending to show whether or not the property is exempt.[70] There being a dispute as to whether or not a homestead is rural or urban, one's claim to the homestead should be broad enough to include both.[71]

§ 5. Liabilities superior or inferior to homestead.[72]—The homestead exemption is to be determined by the laws in force when the debt was contracted.[73] In no state is the homestead exemption absolute, antecedent debts being generally superior to the right,[74] though this is not universally true.[75] Debts contracted subsequent to the acquisition of the homestead are not a lien thereon,[76] even in the hands of a grantee of the homestead claimant,[77] unless incurred for an improvement of the homestead[78] or charged thereon.[79] In Minnesota the homestead is subject to sale on execution for the payment of any debt incurred to any laborer or servant for labor or services.[80] Purchase money indebtedness is superior to the homestead exemption.[81] That the homestead is only partially paid for does not change the situation as to debts created after the last payment.[82] The homestead exemption is superior to the rights of a bona fide purchaser, as such.[83] The order of the court setting apart the homestead cannot impair the validity of any lien on the property,[84] but it may render the homestead exempt from all claims not filed in such proceedings.[85]

The state as a creditor is, unless the statute clearly intends otherwise, superior to the exemption.[86] The homestead is generally subject to a lien for taxes[87] and special assessments;[88] this includes interest, and the cost of assessment and collection,[89] but not penalties,[90] nor is it liable for taxes due on other property of the owner.[91] It is exempt, however, from the payment of fines imposed for the violation of federal statutes.[92]

NOTE: Lien of third party loaning purchase price: As to whether or not one loaning money to purchase a homestead, or to complete payments thereon is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the grantor of the property, and to enforce the lien against the homestead is a question upon which there is an irreconcilable conflict of opinion. The weight of authority sustains what seems to be the more equitable rule that such third party is entitled to all the rights of the first mortgagee or the vendor. Van Sandt v. Judicial and execution sales.—The homestead is subject to sale on execution for debts superior to the exemption,[95] but a sale for debt inferior thereto is generally held to be absolutely void,[96] though the purchaser has been held to take the title in fee subject to the homestead right,[97] and to any excess over the amount of the statutory exemption.[98] An execution purchaser redeeming property subject to a mortgaged homestead right, acquires no right against the homesteader to contribution to the mortgage indebtedness, or to subrogation to the benefits of the foreclosure.[1] The right to take advantage of the void sale may be lost by laches.[2] Statutory provisions should be strictly followed.[3] In a suit to sell the homestead of a deceased person, his administrator and heirs should be made parties.[4] The homestead being subject to judicial sale a sale in gross is not improper where it does not exceed the amount of the statutory exemption.[5] Cases in which application for a sale of the homestead may be made,[6] and the determination of a stay of the sale,[7] are governed largely by the facts of the case and statutory provisions.

§ 6. Alienation and incumbrance.[8]—A homestead is not the subject of fraudulent alienation.[9] A married woman dealing with her homestead is not exempt from the ordinary rules as to mistake.[10] In Texas the homestead cannot be encumbered except for the purchase money.[11]

Property being devised to husband and wife in trust for their children, and they occupying it as a homestead, the widow remarrying after the death of her first husband, her second husband has no homestead interest in the property. Necessity of consent of wife to conveyance or joinder therein.[12]—It is an almost universal rule that the wife must join[13] in a deed or incumbrance[14] of the homestead, though in a few states her signature is unnecessary.[15] Her signature being required, her failure to join in the instrument renders the same absolutely void,[16] and hence it is not subject to ratification,[17] nor can she by waiver affect the rights of third parties.[18] The deed being to the wife direct there is a conflict as to the necessity of her joining therein.[19] It is generally held that a lease of homestead lands when not interfering with their use and occupancy as such may be made by the husband alone.[20] Mortgaged separate property of the wife being subsequently declared a homestead, the husband must be made a party in a suit to foreclose.[21] One may become estopped to deny that an incumbrance on a homestead is void for failure of his wife to consent thereto.[22] The wife not joining, the grantee may recover the money paid.[23] Failure of the wife to join in the conveyance must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense.[24] The burden is on those claiming under the deed to show that the property exceeded the statutory exemption.[25]

25. Karsten v. Winkelman, 209 Ill. 547, 71 N. E. 45.

Acknowledgment of conveyance.[26]—The instrument must be acknowledged by both husband and wife,[27] which fact must appear in the certificate of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken,[28] and such officer should not be interested in the transaction.[29] In some states the wife's acknowledgment must be separate.[30] A wife not acknowledging the deed may maintain a suit to cancel the same.[31]

Contracts to convey.[32]—Generally a written[33] contract to sell the homestead is valid as against the husband though signed by him alone.[34] The wife cannot by ratifying such contract affect the rights of third parties.[35] A married woman having a separate interest in land occupied as a community homestead, joining with her husband in a contract for the sale of the homestead does not thereby affect her separate interest in the property.[36]

§ 7. Loss or relinquishment.[37]—The homestead exemption ceases with an abandonment of the property as a homestead.[38] There is a strong presumption against any such abandonment;[39] a discontinuance of the use, coupled with an intention to abandon the use of the property as a homestead being required,[40] the question in every case being one of fact.[41] An equivocal intention to return is not

Business homestead: See 2 Curr. L. 220, n. 55. One carrying on his business indiscriminately in either of two places cannot claim a homestead in one of them unless at time of levy thereon he is using it. Gibbs v. Hartenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 59. Evidence as to use of building as a sufficient to retain the homestead.[42] A statutory method of abandonment or waiver is generally exclusive,[43] and the homestead ordinarily cannot be waived by the head of a family,[44] though there being no minor children the wife may generally by agreement with her husband relinquish her interest therein.[45] One being in the actual possession of property and using the same as a homestead, no representations of himself or his wife will defeat the exemption,[46] but where the claimant is not in such actual possession representations amounting to fraud will estop him from setting up the claim as against parties acting on such representations in ignorance of the homestead claim.[47] An antenuptial contract by which the wife relinquishes all claim to the property of her husband does not preclude her, after their marriage, from filing a declaration of homestead on property of his.[48] The wife does not lose it by being abandoned.[49] It remains to her.[50]

Facts not Constituting an Abandonment: One occupying land as a homestead under contract of purchase. Acceptance of lease from owner held not to work an abandonment. Duffield v. Dosh [Iowa] 99 N. W. 1074. Erection of small church on corner of homestead lot, owner using same in his vocation as preacher, the premises were not leased, held not to affect homestead right. Wilkins v. Fremaux, 112 La. 921, 36 So. 805. That one left homestead in care of his parents, whom he supported as part of his family, and temporarily resided in town, held not to show an abandonment. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Bybee, 179 Mo. 354, 78 S. W. 579. Conveying the property but continuing to reside on homestead and operate it as a farm, held no abandonment. Alvis v. Alvis, 123 Iowa, 546, 99 N. W. 166.

Conditional sale: Where a widow agreed to sell her homestead if she had the legal right to do so, and executed a deed under such agreement, held not to constitute an abandonment of the homestead. Moore v. Moore [Ky.] 78 S. W. 141.

Involuntary detention: The detention of a widow in an insane asylum. Flynn v. Hancock [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 245.

Renting premises: Renting a portion does not subject such portion to payment of debts. Bailey v. Dunlap Mercantile Co., 138 Ala. 415, 35 So. 451. Refusal to rent building for a longer term than by the month, and the retention of office room, etc., therein held to show an intention to retain one's business homestead. Cooper Grocery Co. v. Peter [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 108. Where one left farm and rented it, but kept a few cattle on it, moved to town and lived and voted there, and at different times stated that he intended to abandon, and that he did not intend to abandon it as his homestead, he denying the former statement held, there being a house on the farm, that it could not be said as a matter of law that he had abandoned the same as his homestead. Zettlemoyer v. Mears [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1047.

Business homestead: Where one was unable to pursue his occupation with regularity because of ill health. Gibbs v. Hartenstein [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 59. One renting building for a year, reserving a portion for his own use, and on renewing lease reserving the right to terminate it on sixty days' notice, he intending to resume his former mercantile business therein held not an abandonment. Billings v. Matlage [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 805.

42. Widow remarrying and moving from homestead with intention of returning if she could not get along with her new husband, held abandonment. Kloss v. Wylezalek, 207 Ill. 328, 69 N. E. 863.

43. A declaration being essential, that the claimant conveyed his homestead is immaterial. Lewis v. Mauerman, 35 Wash. 156, 76 P. 737. Under Const. 1898, art. 246, a waiver must be in writing and recorded. Wilkins v. Fremaux, 112 La. 921, 36 So. 805.

44. Homestead not waived by a financial statement of husband wherein homestead was listed as an asset and not claimed as exempt. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Bybee, 179 Mo. 354, 78 S. W. 579. In Georgia such power of waiver relates exclusively to the exemption provided by the constitution of 1877. In re Reinhart, 129 F. 510.

widow and children.[53] The rights of the latter in the same are almost wholly statutory.[54] It does not survive to her who has remarried supposing the husband dead.[55] The homestead exceeding the statutory exemption in value and being practically indivisible, the widow and heirs only take, as a homestead, an equitable interest therein to the value of the statutory exemption,[56] and in such case the court may order the sale of the entire property, setting aside from the proceeds the amount of the statutory exemption,[57] and the widow being entitled to a life estate, such money should be invested and the income paid her during her life, and at her death the principal should descend as in the case of other exemptions.[58] The fee vesting in the husband's heirs, the widow has no claim on the homestead for money which she invested therein during the husband's life.[59]

A widow electing in favor of a distributive share, the homestead right is extinguished,[60] except as to minor children.[61] That a widower elects to take a home-

California: Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1468, community property being set apart to widow as probate homestead, on death of husband leaving no minor child, the widow takes the absolute title. Otto v. Long [Cal.] 77 P. 885.

Florida: The Constitution of 1885 provides that the homestead shall inure to the widow and heirs and compels intestacy so far as the homestead is concerned. Palmer v. Palmer [Fla.] 35 So. 983.

Illinois: On the death of the householder the homestead by operation of law devolves upon the surviving spouse for life, and upon the children during the minority of the youngest, and the heirs at law take only a reversionary interest, expectant upon the termination of the estate for life and for years created by the statute. Roberson v. Tippie, 209 Ill. 38, 70 N. E. 584. There being children living the widow does not take a fee to the property. Hogue v. Steel, 207 Ill. 340, 69 N. E. 931. The abandonment of the homestead by the mother on the death of the father deprives the minor children of their homestead rights. Kloss v. Wylezalek, 207 Ill. 328, 69 N. E. 863.

Kansas: The title to a homestead does not descend to its occupants to the exclusion of children residing elsewhere. Mitchell v. Mitchell [Kan.] 77 P. 98. To make a devise of a homestead subject to the payment of the testator's debts, the language employed must be unequivocal and imperative. Cross v. Benson [Kan.] 75 P. 558.

Mississippi: [See 2 Curr. L. 220, n. 57.] Under Code 1892, §§ 1551-1553, and Acts 1900, p. 129, c. 89, children of decedent cannot compel the latter's widow to partition or account for use of exempt property, including homestead, so long as it is occupied or used by her. Martin v. Martin [Miss.] 36 So. 523.

Missouri: [See 2 Curr. L. 220, n. 57.] A homestead passing to the widow and minor children, the children's interest continues only until their majority. But the widow cannot deprive them of this interest [construing Gen. St. 1865, p. 449, c. 111]. Simpson v. Scroggins [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1129. The rights of minors in a homestead of their deceased father begin before the homestead is set off, there being only sixty-three acres of the land in question, and only one-half of that being claimed as homestead. Gorman v. Hale [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 1110.

Nebraska: [See 2 Curr. L. 220, n. 57.] An administrator has neither title to, nor right of possession of the homestead. License purporting to authorize administrator's sale held void. Tindall v. Peterson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 688.

Ohio: Where a widow and heirs join in a sale of the homestead to pay off a mortgage and other indebtedness, held the widow was entitled to receive from the fund her dower interest and the statutory $500 in lieu of the homestead. Bretz v. Moore, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 556.

What constitutes an election: See Election and Waiver, 3 Curr. L. 1177. Exclusive occupancy by widow for seventeen years, held election not to take distributive share. Huit v. Huit, 122 Iowa, 338, 98 N. W. 123. A widow does not, by qualifying as executrix of her deceased husband, waive her right to a homestead. In re Firth's Estate [Cal.] 78 P. 643. Widow, as executrix, obtaining order for sale of homestead and retaining one-third of proceeds, held to elect to take a distributive share. Edinger v. Bain [Iowa] 98 N. W. 568. The fact that the widow is insane and confined in an asylum does not have any bearing upon the question as to whether she took a homestead or dower interest in the property. Higgins v. Higgins, 25 Ky. L. R. 919, 78 S. W. 1124. A widow continuing to occupy the homestead may elect to take title under her husband's will without subjecting it to the payment of her husband's debts. Cross v. Benson [Kan.] 75 P. 558.

stead right in the land does not prevent his taking an interest in the property as heir of his wife.[62]

Rights of divorced parties.[63]—In most states a decree of divorce being silent as to the homestead it remains in the possession of the party holding the record title, discharged of all homestead rights and claims of the other party.[64] After decree of divorce the husband has no right of possession in the wife's separate property merely because such property was occupied as a homestead while the marriage relation subsisted.[65] On divorce, the homestead being community property, and the custody of minor children being awarded to the wife, the husband's homestead rights revive on her death.[66]

Claim to reimbursement for expenditures.—A life tenant in a homestead, who, in order to preserve the estate, has paid off and discharged an incumbrance upon the fee, is entitled to reimbursement from the reversioners or remaindermen.[67]

§ 9. Exemption of proceeds of homestead or of substituted properties.[68]—A debtor may sell his homestead, and reinvest the money in another, and the latter will not be subject to general debts to which the former was not,[69] though in some states it is subject to debts contracted in the interim.[70] In some states the exemption follows the fund.[71] A waiver of homestead being good against the land, it is good against the proceeds thereof.[72] While statutes generally permit the acquirement of a new homestead in the place and stead of the old one, still that acquired must be such as the law authorizes when the change is made.[73]

61. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1707, where the widow elects to take dower in lieu of homestead, the infant children's right to a homestead attaches to the land set apart for dower. Hanna's Assignees v. Gay, 25 Ky. L. R. 1794, 78 S. W. 915.

NOTE. Effect of divorce on homestead rights: A husband liable for the support of his children does not lose his homestead rights in his land by reason of a divorce. Redfern v. Renfern, 38 Ill. 509; Byers v. Byers, 21 Iowa, 268; Biffle v. Pullam, 114 Mo. 50. This is so though the custody of the children be awarded to the wife. Woods v. Davis, 34 Iowa, 264. And in Doyle v. Coburn, 6 Allen [Mass.] 71, it was held that a husband does not lose his homestead rights even where the custody of the child is awarded to the mother, as he may adopt other members of his household; and it is not lost by death or absence of wife and children, and it is for the benefit of the husband as well as the wife.

But where the homestead is given to a "head of a family," and the husband has no family of his own dependent on him residing on the land, and the wife has the care and support of the children, a finding that he has abandoned the idea of having a homestead for a family, and had ceased to be the head of a family after his divorce, will be sustained. Cooper v. Cooper, 24 Ohio St. 488.

After divorce, a husband may convey to his former wife his interest in the homestead, and a mortgage made by her on the same after such conveyance will be valid. Grupe v. Byers, 73 Cal. 271.

Generally the court in rendering the decree of divorce may make an equitable distribution of the property, and may award the homestead to one of the parties. Lowell v. Lowell, 55 Cal. 316; Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, 40 Kan. 494; Cole v. Cole, 27 Wis. 531; Harran v. Harran, 85 Wis. 299; Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa, 433; Brandon v. Brandon, 14 Kan. 342; Webster v. § 2. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought,[88] express or implied.[89] An actual intent to take life is not a necessary ingredient in murder any more than it is in manslaughter,[90] but a person so drunk as to be unable to entertain a design to kill cannot be convicted of murder.[91] If an escaped misdemeanor convict slay an officer to prevent capture, he is guilty of murder whether the officer had a warrant or not.[92]

Degrees.[93]—In nearly all the states murder is now divided by statute into two degrees, including in the first or more heinous degree all forms of premeditated or deliberate murder in general and specifically such murders as from their nature show deliberation and premeditation,[94] and all murder committed in the commission or attempting to commit certain felonies.[95]

Murder in the second degree is variously defined in different states, the intention being to include therein all murder not denounced as of the first degree.[96]

would not make him guilty of any offense. Monroe v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 726. Where one person inflicts a mortal wound, but another is present and aids and assists, the latter may be convicted [Rev. Code 1852, c. 133, § 1]. State v. Brinte [Del.] 58 A. 258; State v. Nargashian [R. I.] 58 A. 953. An accomplice may aid and abet without taking physical part in the actual violence. People v. Moran [Cal.] 77 P. 777. Abandonment of the conflict by one aiding and abetting, before the actual killing will not entitle the aider to an acquittal unless his principal had knowledge of the abandonment. Wilson v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 924.

86. Where it appears that defendant and others acted with a common purpose in concert with one another to take deceased's life, each is guilty no matter which did the killing. Pen. Code, § 29, makes each a principal and responsible for acts of the other (People v. Lagroppo, 90 App. Div. 219, 86 N. Y. S. 116), and where both are charged with the murder, both may be convicted on evidence that shows that either of them struck the fatal blow (Morgan v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 9). Where two persons shoot at another and only one shot takes effect, both cannot be convicted of his murder unless there is evidence of a conspiracy between them. Anderson v. State, 119 Ga. 441, 46 S. E. 639.

In those forms of murder which are specifically denounced as murder in the first degree no actual intent to take life, is necessary,[97] but ordinarily there must be deliberation and premeditation, though there need be no appreciable time between the formation of the intent to kill and the killing.[98] No motive is necessary if the fact of deliberate murder otherwise appears.[99]

Attempts.[1]

§ 3. Manslaughter.[2]—Manslaughter embraces all forms of criminal homicide from which malice or an intent to kill is absent.[3] Thus, it is manslaughter if the homicide is committed unintentionally in the commission of an unlawful act,[4] or in sudden combat,[5] or in the heat of passion[6] produced by reasonable provocation,[7] and before the lapse of reasonable cooling time.[8] Voluntary manslaughter is the tion. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528. In Delaware murder in the second degree is where the crime is committed otherwise than with express malice aforethought, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a capital offense, but with malice aforethought implied by law [Rev. Code 1852, c. 127, §§ 1, 2]. State v. Brinte [Del.] 58 A. 258. Without a deliberate design to take life. State v. Emory [Del.] 58 A. 1036.

97. All murder perpetrated by means of poison administered with a bad motive or intent is murder in the first degree whether or not there was a specific intent to kill. Deceased was "drugged" probably for purpose of robbery. State v. Burns [Iowa] 99 N. W. 721. In murder, in attempt to commit felony, the element of intent to kill is not necessary. It is murder in the first degree though accidental. People v. Milton [Cal.] 78 P. 549; Lindsay v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. [N. S.] 409.

Defendant approached deceased with intention of killing him if he did not sign a note. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528. Instruction defining degrees based on the existence of express and implied malice held a proper definition. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 694. That defendant seized the club with which he slew deceased from the hand of another is sufficient evidence of premeditation to authorize an instruction on first degree murder. State v. Fuller [Iowa] 100 N. W. 1114. One so drunk as to be unable to form a specific intent to take life cannot be guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Hertzog [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 792. Deliberation and premeditation may be inferred from such circumstances as ill will, previous difficulty between the parties, and declarations of intent to kill before or after the killing. State v. Hunt, 134 N. C. 684, 47 S. E. 49.

Emory [Del.] 58 A. 1036. Deceased's refusal to sign note with defendant, his son-in-law, to relieve great financial distress which deceased was in no way responsible for, is no mitigation or extenuation. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528. Circumstances of murder of wife held to present no issue of manslaughter. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 694. unlawful intentional killing of another without malice,[9] and involuntary manslaughter is the killing of another in doing some unlawful act but without intention to kill.[10] To constitute manslaughter in Texas there must be an intent to kill or inflict serious bodily injury, and if the weapon used is not of itself a deadly one, the jury must gather the intent from the manner of its use.[11] Fear of death at the hands of another is no mitigation.[12] Degrees of manslaughter in several states are referred to in the note.[13]

Second degree includes all culpable homicides not murder nor manslaughter in the first degree.[14]

§ 4. Assault with intent to kill or do great bodily harm.[15]—To constitute an assault with intent to murder, the circumstances must have been such that had the one assaulted died from the injuries, the assailant would have been guilty of murder.[16] Conversely, circumstances that will reduce the assault below the grade of assault with intent to murder must be such as had death ensued the crime would have been manslaughter merely.[17] It is immaterial whether the murder would have been of the first or second degree,[18] and hence premeditation is not a necessary element,[19] but malice must be shown.[20] The legal presumption of intent to kill, arising where death ensues from the use of a deadly weapon, does not arise where death does not ensue, the question of intent being one for the jury.[21]

[Ky.] 81 S. W. 264. Repelling assault with unnecessary force causing death. People v. Taylor, 92 App. Div. 29, 86 N. Y. S. 996. Involuntary manslaughter is where one doing an unlawful act not felonious nor tending to great bodily harm, or doing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, undesignedly kills another. An intoxicated man carelessly flourishing a pistol who shoots a bystander during an attempt to disarm him is not entitled to a charge on involuntary manslaughter. Selby v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 2209, 80 S. W. 221. The mere fact that the pistol which, accidentally discharged, killed deceased, was being carried by defendant concealed contrary to law does not make a case of manslaughter. 20. As to existence of malice, jury may consider the character of the assault, the kind of weapon used, the danger of producing death, the means used to avoid or cause death and all the acts and conduct of the defendant. State v. Scott [Del.] 57 A. 534.

§ 5. Justification and excuse.[22]—Homicide is justifiable as committed in self-defense, where the accused without having provoked the difficulty,[23] and without justification,[24] is assaulted in such manner that he in good faith believes,[25] and has reasonable ground to believe,[26] that he is in imminent danger[27] of death or great bodily harm,[28] and that no safe means of avoiding the same is open to him

21. Where an assault and battery is committed with a deadly weapon such as a knife, which is deliberately used in such a manner as to be reasonably calculated to destroy life, the intent to kill may be inferred from the act itself. Larkin v. State [Ind.] 71 N. E. 959. Where death results from the unlawful use of a deadly weapon the law by presumption imputes to the slayer an intention to kill, but where death does not result, intention to kill is not matter of legal presumption, but matter of inference for the jury (Harris v. State, 120 Ga. 167, 47 S. E. 520); and hence it is error to charge in such a case that if the crime would have been murder had the person assaulted died, the assaulter would be guilty of assault with intent to murder (Harris v. State, 120 Ga. 167, 47 S. E. 520; Smith v. State, 119 Ga. 564, 46 S. E. 846, citing Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863).

23. One who purposely provokes the difficulty resulting in a homicide cannot set up self-defense. Harbour v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 330; Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 37; State v. Sharp [Mo.] 82 S. W. 134; Burton v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 435; Williams v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 228; State v. Jones [Iowa] 99 N. W. 179. Before instruction on that point can be given there must be testimony to support it (Dent v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 525; McMahon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 296; Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 34; Arthur v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1017), but mere intent and purpose do not deprive the slayer of the right of self-defense, if he does no act at the time of the difficulty which provokes it (Tardy v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 1076; Hjeronymus v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 313). Circumstances held to authorize charge on self-defense, provocation of difficulty, mutual combat, and abandonment thereof. Hellard v. Com. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 482. One accused of crime may seek his accuser with a view to securing a retraction in a peaceable manner, and may arm himself for protection. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. Law of self-defense does not imply right of attack. Wells v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 124. Lawful interference in behalf of another whom deceased is about to kill is not a provocation depriving the interferer of his right of self-defense. State v. Clark, 134 N. C. 698, 47 S. E. 36.

24. That one accused of crime seeks his accuser for an interview and a retraction does not justify an attack. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 33. One who goes to another's house for an unlawful purpose has not an unqualified right of self-defense from attack by that other. Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35. Defendant taking property he believes he has a right to is not deprived of his right of self-defense. Arthur v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1017. Where deceased made a desperate assault on defendant in defense of a brother, who was in no danger of death or great bodily harm, the killing of deceased by defendant was justifiable. Taber v. Com. State v. Raymo [Vt.] 57 A. 993.

28. Harbour v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 330; State v. Emory [Del.] 58 A. 1036. Defendant need not first ascertain whether attack is willful; it is enough that it appears to be except the killing of his assailant.[29] Similarly a woman may kill in defense of her chastity,[30] and under the same limitations the right is extended to the defense of others,[31] and to the defense of one's habitation.[32] A mutual combat to deprive accused of the right of self-defense must have been entered upon by him willingly[33] and knowingly;[34] and one who has voluntarily engaged in combat or who has provoked a difficulty may regain his right of self-defense by withdrawing from the fight in good faith,[35] and if his adversary then follows him and kills him not in necessary self-defense the offense is at least manslaughter.[36] Compulsion under fear of death is no excuse for the killing of an innocent third person,[37] and that defendant furnished evidence to indict deceased for fornication is no excuse, extenuation, or mitigation of the killing.[38] The religious belief or doctrine of a person cannot be recognized or accepted as a justification or excuse for his committing an act which is a criminal offense under the law of the land.[39] The defense of self-defense if available to the person who fires the fatal shot is also available to all who participate on his side of the affray, though unlawfully.[40] That deceased had a warrant for defendant's arrest when he assaulted defendant does not limit defendant's right of self-defense where deceased was a private person without authority to serve the warrant;[41] but the mere fact that deceased attempting to arrest defendant was a private person without authority to arrest him does not justify defendant in resisting to the extent of taking life.[42] An officer cannot use

Fear of great bodily harm is sufficient. State v. Singleton, 67 Kan. 803, 74 P. 243. Unless there be great superiority in physical strength of an assailant who strikes another a blow with his fist, or ill health in the assailed at the time, or other circumstances producing relatively great inequality between them in combat, the assailed cannot justifiably resent the blow by stabbing his assailant. a deadly weapon or take human life in enforcing the arrest of a misdemeanant, though without such force the wrongdoer may[43] escape. In Utah a homicide is justifiable when committed in a sudden heat of passion caused by an attempt by deceased to defile the wife or other female relative of accused, or when the defilement has actually been committed.[44]

Accidental homicide[45] does not occur where deceased was killed by a shot following the intentional snapping of a pistol in deceased's face though the accused had some reason to believe it not loaded.[46]

§ 6. Indictment or information.[47]—At the common law, the verdict of a coroner's jury is equivalent to the finding of a grand jury, and one accused of the homicide thereby may be arraigned and tried thereon;[48] but the modern practice is to require an indictment by the grand jury or an information based on sufficient evidence to justify holding for trial.[49] Except in those states where statutory forms are prescribed,[50] indictments for homicide and murderous assault must be direct and certain[51] as regards the offense charged,[52] the weapon or means used,[53] the manner of its use,[54] the intent,[55] malice,[56] the assault,[57] the person killed or

49. In re Sly [Idaho] 76 P. 766.

50. An indictment for murder plainly and accurately drawn in the statutory form is sufficient [Code 1892, § 1356]. Coleman v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 937.

51. Use of words "then and there being" held consistent with certainty. State v. Riddle, 179 Mo. 287, 78 S. W. 606. Indictment held not objectionable as charging that deceased killed himself. State v. Nelson [Mo.] 80 S. W. 947; Cooper v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 53; Ewert v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 334.

52. A charge of "assault with intent to murder" is sufficiently definite [Cr. Code 1896, p. 403, c. 178, art. 1, §§ 5204-5208]. Spraggins v. State, 139 Ala. 93, 35 So. 1000. An indictment for manslaughter in Indiana must show that the accused was engaged in the commission of some unlawful act from which the homicide resulted. Pointing of gun must be alleged to have been done purposely [Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2073]. Eaton v. State, 162 Ind. 554, 70 N. E. 814. An indictment for manslaughter in the first degree in Oklahoma must allege that the injury was inflicted either in a heat of passion and in a cruel and unusual manner, or in a heat of passion and by means of a dangerous weapon. Barker v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 81. An indictment charging that defendant shot and mortally wounded deceased with a pistol and that deceased died of the wound is sufficient though it does not formally charge murder, nor that defendant held the firearm in his hand, nor that he discharged the contents thereof into the body of deceased, or state what part of the body was wounded. State v. Swenson [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1114. The class of acts described as "assault and battery" with any deadly weapon in Cr. Code 1899, § 7115, and by the term "assault or assault and battery" with any sharp or dangerous weapon in section 7145 does not include an assault or an assault and battery with firearms for the purpose of shooting. State v. Cruikshank [N. D.] 100 N. W. 697.

53. An indictment for assault with intent to commit murder sufficiently names the deadly weapon by charging, "a deadly weapon, to wit, a firearm commonly known as a musket, which said musket was then and there loaded with gunpowder and leaden shot." Sumpter v. State [Fla.] 33 So. 981. Need not state that pistol was loaded, that it was a deadly weapon, or so used as to constitute it a deadly weapon. Pyke v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 577; cf. State v. Swenson [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1114; Heatley v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 79. A count alleging the murder to have been committed with a weapon or by some means to the grand jury unknown is not demurrable. Eatman v. State, 139 Ala. 67, 36 So. 16.

54. An indictment for murder by administering morphine need not state how it was administered, the particular way in which it affected deceased, that it was poison, or the quantity administered. Scott v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 357. An indictment charging that defendant shot the prosecuting witness with a firearm, to-wit, a shotgun, with intent to kill, is sufficient without charging how the gun was loaded, how held by defendant, that it was against the body of prosecutor, etc. Heatley v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 79. Where the assault was charged to have been committed with a pistol had and held by defendant, it need not be alleged that he had and held it in his hand, that the pistol was loaded, that defendant fired it, that prosecutor was struck or shot with it, that it was a deadly weapon, that the intent was to murder with a deadly weapon, nor that the pistol was so used as to constitute it a deadly weapon. Pyke v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 577. Cf. State v. Swenson [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1114.

55. It is not necessary to charge in terms that an assault with intent to murder was an assault with intent to commit a felony, though the statutory crime is so described; murder being a felony, the intent to commit assaulted,[58] and death as the result of defendant's act or negligence.[59] The authorities are not agreed as to the necessity of charging the distinctive features of murder in the first degree, some holding that an indictment charging murder in the language of the statute, as with malice aforethought, includes both degrees, and that deliberation and premeditation need not be alleged,[60] while others take the contrary view.[61] Premeditation, however, is not an essential element of an indictment for murder in the first degree when the homicide was committed in an attempt to rob.[62] The sufficiency of several indictments is noted below.[63]

Variance[64] to be fatal must be material.[65] Where the indictment charges murder in the county in which the indictment was found, evidence that death occurred in another county is admissible,[66] but where the indictment alleges the means by which the homicide was committed, the state is restricted to proof of that means.[67]

Included offenses are sufficiently charged by an indictment for murder in the first degree,[68] or for assault with intent to murder,[69] and such an indictment will support a conviction of any degree of unlawful homicide or assault,[70] except that in New York a conviction of assault cannot be sustained on an indictment for homicide where it is undisputed that deceased died of the wound inflicted.[71]

a felony sufficiently appears. Pyke v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 577. Nor that intent was to murder with a deadly weapon. Id. An information for murder in Montana need not contain an express averment of intent to kill. State v. Keerl, 29 Mont. 508, 75 P. 362.

56. An indictment for murder in the second as well as in the first degree must allege malice aforethought. Etheridge v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 337.

57. Where assault with pistol is alleged it need not be charged that defendant fired it into the body of deceased, or state what part of the body was wounded. State v. Swenson [S. D.] 99 N. W. 1114; Pyke v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 577. Cf. Heatley v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 79.

58. An indictment charging the killing of deceased, designating him by name, need not further charge that he was a "person" or a "human being." Bowers v. State [Wis.] 99 N. W. 447.

59. Indictment for manslaughter by negligent interference with electric light held not objectionable for failure to allege causal connection between defendant's act and decedent's death. People v. Murphy, 93 App. Div. 383, 87 N. Y. S. 786. Must directly allege that death resulted from the mortal wounds inflicted by defendant. State v. Keerl, 29 Mont. 508, 75 P. 362. The concluding averments in an indictment "And so the said (defendant) did kill and murder the said (deceased), are merely the conclusions of the pleader and cannot help out a defective allegation of cause of death. Id. Omission of word "thereby" from charge that deceased died of the wound is not fatal. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528.

61. An indictment for murder in the first degree must charge that the injury to deceased was inflicted by defendant with a premeditated design to effect his death. Barker v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 81.

62. Lindsay v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 409.

63. Information held sufficient as charging attempt to shoot with intent to kill [Rev. Code 1899, § 7115], though not using language of statute. State v. Cruikshank [N. D.] 100 N. W. 697. Indictment under Ky. St. 1903, § 1166, for maliciously shooting at another without wounding, held sufficient. Commonwealth v. Ayers, 25 Ky. L. R. 2086, 80 S. W. 153. An information held sufficient to charge manslaughter by procuring an abortion. Weightnovel v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 856. Information for murder in first degree by shooting with pistol set out and held sufficient. State v. Yandell, 34 Wash. 409, 75 P. 988.

64. See 2 Curr. L. 229.

65. Averment that defendant killed deceased with an axe which he "then and there held in his hands" is not variant from proof that he threw it a distance of five feet at him. Webster v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 584. A charge that defendant's pistol was loaded with "a" leaden bullet is not insufficient on the theory that the pistol contained at least two loads, the second of which did the killing. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528.

On a trial for assault with intent to murder, the evidence showing an assault only, there may be a conviction of such latter offense. Maiming is not included in the statutory offense of shooting with intent to kill. State v. Mattison [N. D.] 100 N. W. 1091.

70. See Indictment and Prosecution, 2 Curr. L. 325. Conviction of lesser degrees and included offenses.

Though the evidence suggests the theories only of murder in the first degree and not guilty, defendant convicted of murder in the second degree cannot complain that there was not evidence to support his conviction.[72]

§ 7. Evidence.[73] A. Presumptions and burden of proof.[74]—Guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[75] as to every essential ingredient of the crime,[76] including the causal relation between injury and death,[77] and the degree of the homicide.[78] Homicide, when proved, is presumptively murder,[79] but only of the second degree;[80] the burden being on the state to prove premeditation and deliberation,[81] and on the defendant of proving facts in extenuation, justification or excuse.[82] The law presumes a loaded firearm to be a deadly weapon.[83] The authorities are in conflict as to the burden of proof when insanity or other irresponsibility is pleaded, some holding that defendant has the burden of establishing his defense by a preponderance of the evidence;[84] while others hold that the presumption of innocence, attending the accused throughout the trial, overthrows the presumption of sanity and puts upon the state the burden of proving responsibility as an element of the offense, beyond a reasonable doubt.[85] In South Carolina where the defense is accident, the state must overcome the plea beyond a reasonable doubt.[86]

(§ 7) B. Admissibility in general.[87]—Proffered testimony must have a legitimate tendency to prove some material fact in issue.[88] Where it has such tendency it

Whether witness, deceased's son, had been throwing rocks at defendant's house, is immaterial though that is what defendant and deceased quarreled about. Gregory v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 259. Even where deceased's intoxication is relevant, evidence that he had a jug of whisky at home on the day he was killed or had carried one home is irrelevant. Id. Testimony that many good shots shoot from the hip, defendant having lowered his gun to that position. Baldwin v. State, 120 Ga. 188, 47 S. E. 558. Defendant cannot show on cross-examination of a state witness that relatives of deceased had tried to bribe him to poison deceased's wife in order to prevent her testifying in the case. Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35. Where the defense is accidental killing, evidence that defendant did not pay the funeral expenses of deceased, his wife, is incompetent. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811. Where the defense is that defendant did not kill deceased, the fact that deceased was a fugitive from justice when killed is immaterial. State v. Gosey, 111 La. 616, 35 So. 786. Where defendant deliberately shot into the open door of a house and killed an inmate, evidence that he was on friendly terms with the family is immaterial. State v. Capps, 134 N. C. 622, 46 S. E. 730. That deceased was a drinking man is immaterial and irrelevant. Seaborn v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 2203, 80 S. W. 223. That defendant and others furnished evidence to the grand jury relative to deceased's living in adultery is irrelevant. Townsell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 938. Whether deceased, defendant's stepdaughter, had prior to the killing and on separate occasions called him opprobrious names is immaterial. State v. Brown [Mo.] 79 S. W. 1111.

89. Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 39. The uncertainty of testimony as to defendant's identity goes rather to its weight than its admissibility. Statement of witness that he met a person resembling defendant the morning after the homicide. Alanis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 709. Evidence that shortly prior to the homicide defendant's daughter told him of an outrage committed on her by deceased some days before is not to be rejected because of its remoteness, the question of reasonable cooling time being one of fact. State v. Cooper, 112 La. 281, 36 So. 350. The fact of finding empty gun shells and wadding on the scene the next day after an affray is not inadmissible on the ground of its remoteness if it tends to support an issue in the case. Nickles v. State [Fla.] 37 So. 312. Where to a charge of murder by poison the defense is suicide, previous threats of deceased to take his own life are admissible if not too remote. Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042; State v. Kelly [Conn.] 58 A. 705. Remoteness has regard for other factors than mere lapse of time, and generally speaking depends upon all the considerations, including time, character of the evidence, and all the surrounding circumstances. Conversation between defendant and his companion also killed in the affray immediately after its cessation held admissible. McMahon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 296. Testimony as to insulting remark made by defendant to a woman in presence of deceased, is admissible as part of the res gestae. Elmore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 520. Shots at prosecutor's wife immediately after the assault held admissible. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 950. Evidence of defendant's disorderly conduct and of assaults committed by him on other persons just prior to the attack on deceased, was admissible as res gestae and also for the purpose of showing defendant's reckless and violent disposition on the occasion in question. Havens v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 369. Declarations of woman as to purpose to have abortion performed held admissible as res gestae. Weightnovel v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 856. Answer to physician's question, "Before I touch you, who did the shooting?" not res gestae. State v. Charles [La.] 36 So. 29. Declarations of defendant held admissible as res gestae. Bateson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 88; Ferguson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 448. Whether it was light enough for defendant to see deceased is part of res gestae. Gordon v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1009. Statement of defendant after walking ¼ mile is not admissible. Pitts v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 101. Prior statement of woman poisoned, that chickens were dead from strychnine laid for rats held not res gestae. State v. Kelly [Conn.] 58 A. 705. Robbery and the incidents thereof occurring as a part of the murder and immediately following it are admissible. Moran v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 111. Statement of deceased to first person to reach him after being shot, held admissible, but later ones not. Bowles v. Com. [Va.] 48 S. E. 527. Conversation between defendant and another prior to killing, relative to defendant's duty to protect himself, held not admissible. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 198.

acts tending to show intent,[92] malice[93] or motive,[94] or admissions or confessions of guilt,[95] evidence of prior,[96] or subsequent acts or declarations, is generally inad-

92. Where accused shot deceased, ran about twelve feet and turned and shot witness, the second shooting is admissible as showing intent whether or not strictly a part of the res gestae. State v. Robinson, 112 La. 939, 36 So. 811. Previous quarrels between defendant and deceased, his wife, and his threats to kill her if she tried to leave him are admissible, the defense being accidental killing. Id. It may be shown that defendant stated that deceased hurt her on a prior occasion and asked witness, a physician, if he would stand by her in a suit. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 936. A written designation of homestead describing other lands is admissible against defendant killing an officer attempting to dispossess him of land on which he lives. Id.

93. Prior threats, quarrels, and difficulties are provable to show malice. State v. Nix, 111 La. 812, 35 So. 917. Testimony that defendant borrowed a pistol ten months before and declared that if he met deceased that day he would be ready for him, in connection with proof of ill feeling from thence to the killing is admissible. Sloan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 922. Accused's intoxication is admissible on the question of malice (Seaborn v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 2203, 80 S. W. 223), deliberation, and premeditation (State v. Hertzog [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 792). Previous difficulty and threats by defendant. Pitts v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 101. That a third person had told defendant of a statement deceased had made concerning him, and defendant's threat to kill deceased, may be proved to show animus. Tipton v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 231. A warrant for the arrest of defendant sworn out by the person assaulted is admissible for the state to show grudge and malice on defendant's part. State v. Sullivan [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 267.

94. Defendant procured marriage of deceased with defendant's wife's sister to cover illicit relations with her and then killed him to renew such relations. Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 39. Where a man is tried for the murder of an illegitimate infant, his relations with its mother and conversations with her beforehand are admissible. Lax v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 578. Relations of deceased and defendant's daughter. Kennedy v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 90. A previous difficulty may be shown but not the particulars. Taber v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 443; Gordon v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1009. Evidence of previous fight between decedent and another whose cause defendant espoused is admissible to show defendant's motive in provoking difficulty. Schrader v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 385. That a watch which deceased had prior to the killing won from defendant at gambling, was gone from his body is admissible. Bowen v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 233. Where the killing occurred during the attempt of a posse to arrest defendant for burglarizing a bank, and on his subsequent arrest a gun taken from one of the posse and money taken from the bank were found upon him, evidence of the burglary was admissible both to show motive and identify defendant. State v. Lewis [Mo.] 79 S. W. 671. Where evidence of prior acts and relations tend to supply a motive for the killing, its remoteness goes not to its admissibility but to the weight and credit to be given to it. Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 39. Antecedent threats by deceased communicated to defendant are admissible not only on the question of who was the aggressor but as tending to show motive. Lee v. State [Ark.] 81 S. W. 385. That evidence disclosing intent, knowledge or motive incidentally shows another offense is no objection to it. Goodman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 196; State v. Levy [Idaho] 75 P. 227; State v. Coleman [S. D.] 98 N. W. 175. Proof of motive is always competent in murder trials. That it is out of proportion to the crime is not ground for excluding evidence of it. Lillie v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 316. Speculations on board of trade and financial stringency of woman accused of killing husband whose life was insured. Id. Life insurance policies and letters and papers concerning and connected with them are admissible where the state's theory is that defendant killed deceased, his brother, to obtain the life insurance. State v. Coleman [S. D.] 98 N. W. 175. Where self-defense is relied on, improper relations between defendant and deceased's divorced wife are not admissible to show motive nor on any other grounds. People v. Wright [Cal.] 77 P. 877. Ill treatment and previous assaults are admissible to prove motive. Wells v. Territory [Okl.] 78 P. 124. Previous trouble between defendant and others which he supposed deceased to be interfering in. People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 P. 1093. That deceased's wife and accused slept together at her house after the killing may be shown. Gardner v. U. S. [Ind. T.] 82 S. W. 704.

95. Confessions are admissible (Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35), though made while defendant is in custody (Hathaway v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 400; Plant v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 159), but only when voluntary (State v. Brinte [Del.] 58 A. 258; Parker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1008), and made without threat or inducement (State v. Brinte [Del.] 58 A. 258; State v. Gianfala [La.] 37 So. 30; Brewer v. State [Ark.] 78 S. W. 773). Where defendant is in custody he must, in some states, be warned that whatever he says may be used against him (Moore v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 565; Alanis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 709), but the warning need not be exactly contemporaneous with the confession (Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35; Black v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 302), nor be made by an officer (Black v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 302). That defendant disputed a witness who testified at the preliminary examination to selling him poison may be shown where the state's theory is that defendant poisoned deceased. Boyd v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 525. Defendant's admission of the killing coupled with justification is not a confession. "We had to do it to save ourselves." Owens v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 21.

96. Defendant cannot show that on a prior occasion deceased said that when he used certain language about defendant's missible. Self-serving declarations whether made before[97] or after the homicide are inadmissible.[98] The acts and declarations of defendant on being charged with the murder are always a pertinent subject of inquiry,[99] but the subsequent acts and declarations of deceased, not res gestae nor dying declarations,[1] and the acts and declarations of third persons made in defendant's absence, no conspiracy being shown, should not be admitted.[2] Prior threats of deceased to take his own life are admissible, the defense being suicide.[3] Though the evidence connecting defendant wife he expected defendant to hit him right between the eyes. Pettis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 312. Advice of counsel to woman killing officer in legal attempt to eject her from land cannot be shown. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 936. Details of previous difficulties between defendant and deceased and defendant and his wife, deceased's daughter, are inadmissible. Thompson v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 389. Declarations to a neighbor of fear of further assault are not admissible in one's own favor. State v. Raymo [Vt.] 57 A. 993. Proof of a conversation between defendant and the person assaulted three hours before held inadmissible. Territory v. Dooley [Ariz.] 78 P. 138. Prior conduct and acts of defendant can be shown where defense is insanity. People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 P. 177.

97. Defendant's husband, party to conspiracy to kill deceased attempting to eject them from home, stated that he had rights and would abide by decision of courts. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 936. Conversation as to defendant's duty to protect himself. Jones v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 198.

98. Foster v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 29. That defendant asked to be taken before deceased before she died, and refused to flee from the scene, are inadmissible. Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011.

99. Hanna v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 544. Defendant need not deny the accusations of every idle straggler who chooses to accuse him. Statements of third person in defendant's presence held incompetent. Merriweather v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 592.

1. Wilson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 93. Identification of defendant by deceased, not shown to have been res gestae or a dying declaration is inadmissible. Bowen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 520.

2. A statement by defendant's son just before the killing, not shown to have been heard by defendant, that deceased was the cause of the trouble and he ought to go and kill him, is inadmissible. Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 953. Witnesses cannot state what they did or thought in the absence of both parties during the interim between the preliminary quarrel and the homicide. Chambers v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 572. Where defendant killed a person attempting to arrest him under order of the mayor, testimony by the mayor that he ordered the arrest is not objectionable as hearsay and made out of defendant's presence. Black v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 302. Where there is no evidence of a conspiracy, the presence and acts of others prior to the crime should not be admitted. Pulpus v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 190.

3. Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042. Where the defense to a charge of murder by poison is suicide, and defendant shows threats by deceased to take her own life, and the state shows that the week before she died deceased was in good health and spirits, defendant cannot show in rebuttal that at other times during the week she was despondent and threatened to take her own life. State v. Kelly [Conn.] 58 A. 705.

NOTE. Suicidal declarations: On this question there is considerable conflict. Some courts have excluded the evidence as hearsay, not coming within any of the exceptions to the rule as to res gestae dying declarations, or statements made in the presence of the defendant so as to influence his conduct (Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571; State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407), or as to exclamations of pain or statements concerning health (State v. Punshon, 124 Mo. 448. See 2 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 623). It is clear that the excluded declarations do not come within any of these exceptions, or even within the expanded res gestae rule (15 Am. L. R. 71; State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474), though similar statements may constitute res gestae (2 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 626). So far the cases are sound. But is it always essential that, to be admitted, declarations of a deceased person must fall within one of the exceptions named? Entirely aside from any proper application of the res gestae rule (1 Greenleaf [16th Ed.] § 162), threats either of the defendant or of the deceased, are admitted where they tend to establish a design or plan (Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Rex v. Hagan, 12 Cox, C. C. 357), and this principle is extended to include expressions of a mere hostile desire to see a person (State v. Horne, 9 Kan. 123). The real object of such evidence is to show, as an evidential fact, the existence of a design. Where this fact is to be proved the declarations of a person, living or dead, should always be evidence (Insurance Co. v. Hillman, 145 U. S. 285; Jacobs v. Whitman, 10 Cush. [Mass.] 255), and whether regarded as entirely outside the hearsay rule (McKelvey, Ev. § 140), or within one of its exceptions (1 Greenleaf [16th Ed.] §§ 162a, 162c), they should be admitted (1 Wigmore, Treatise, Ev. §§ 113, 143, 144). As pointed out in Insurance Co. v. Moseley, 8 Wall. [U. S.] 397, "Whenever the bodily or mental feelings of an individual are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings are original and competent evidence. Such declarations are regarded as acts and are as competent as any other testimony when relevant to the issue. Their truth or falsity is an inquiry for the jury." Expressly overruling an earlier case (Com. v. Felch, 132 Mass. 22) on the authority of which Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571, was decided, this view was adopted in a leading Massachusetts case, with the homicide is circumstantial, it is not competent to prove that deceased had certain enemies of whom he stood in fear,[4] or that another than defendant had a motive for killing him,[5] and evidence as to the movements of a third person whom defendant claims is the guilty party is generally inadmissible.[6] Possession and familiarity with the weapon or other means of death is competent.[7] The physical conditions existing in the vicinity,[8] and the conduct, appearance, actions, and condition of accused[9] and deceased at the time, may be shown.[10] The attending physician may state his opinion that deceased's wound was fatal.[11] Defendant's general reputation for peace or violence may be shown in his defense.[12] Deceased's clothes[13] and the weapon used may be introduced,[14] and testimony as to blood and expressions showing a suicidal intention were admitted (Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180).

In the Connecticut case cited in the footnote above, the court admitted such evidence but it failed to agree with the Ohio court as to what declarations might be shown. Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; State v. Kelly [Conn.] 58 A. 704. This is a question of relevancy. In the Connecticut case the court made the recent character of the declaration the test of admissibility. But the intention to commit suicide might be of so long standing as to amount to a suicidal mania, and the excluded expressions might best establish it. Such a plan would be relevant evidence. 1 Wigmore, Treatise, Ev. § 102. Of course, if the declarations are to establish the ultimate fact, or are introduced with some evidential fact, as part of the res gestae (2 Bishop, Cr. Proc. §§ 626, 627), time may be vital (3 Colum. L. R. 351); but in dealing with declarations showing a plan or design, time alone has little or no value. (State v. Adams, 76 Mo. 358). The courts have admitted threats made from one to nine years before the crime charged was committed (Abbott v. Com. [Ky.] 68 S. W. 124; Com. v. Holmes, 157 Mass. 233, 34 Am. St. Rep. 270), and mere statements, not threats, made three years prior to the act, have been allowed (Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571). So, while the exclusion of such declarations must be left to the sound discretion of the court (Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180; Com. v. Holmes, 157 Mass. 233, 34 Am. St. Rep. 270), the exclusion should be made with the understanding that lapse of time goes only to the weight and not to the relevancy of the evidence (State v. Bradley, 64 Vt. 466; Redd v. State, 68 Ala. 492). This was the holding as to suicidal declarations in the Blackurn case, and in so far as the Connecticut court overlooks this principle, its decision seems unsound.—V. Colum. L. R. 157.

7. Possession of weapons and skill in marksmanship of defendants held admissible. Allen v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 589. A woman on trial for murder with firearms may be shown to have been familiar with them for years. Lillie v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 316. Preparation of arms and remarks by defendant as to what he would do if deceased should be killed are admissible. Ferguson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 448. Evidence tending to show a criminal intent in procuring arms may be met by defendant by a showing why he procured them and explaining what he intended to do with them. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 936. Defendant may not testify why he had a pistol on the occasion of the difficulty. Gregory v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 259. On a trial for murder by giving poisoned whisky, evidence that deceased kept whisky and poison in her room and had threatened to suicide is admissible. Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042. Statements of deceased that he "had the stuff to do it with" are hearsay and are not admissible either on the theory that they show possession of the poison, or show a knowledge of the effect of strychnine. State v. Kelly [Conn.] 58 A. 705.

9. The conduct, appearance, and actions of accused immediately after the crime may be shown, as well as his statements tending to connect him with the transactions being investigated. Lillie v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 316. Opinion of nonexpert that defendant was insane at the time held properly rejected. Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 953.

10. The advanced pregnancy of a deceased wife is material where the defense of her husband charged with killing her is that he did it accidentally in attempting to kill a man in the act of adultery with her. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811.

11. Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138.

12. Though the facts have been proved by direct testimony, though the judge deems the fact of guilt clearly established, and though defendant relies on defense of insanity; especially in view of the jury's function of fixing the penalty. Maston v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 70.

13. To show location of wounds (Seaborn v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. L. R. 2203, 80 S. W. 223), but not unless they illustrate and stains is competent.[15] On trial for assault, evidence that defendant discharged the pistol shortly after is pertinent as showing that it was loaded,[16] and where a killing occurs in a dispute over some abandoned wood claimed by defendant and another, evidence that the foreman of the railroad company owning the wood gave it to defendant's adversary is admissible to show some foundation for her claim.[17] In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, committed in resisting arrest by a private person, it is proper to admit evidence that defendant had stolen goods, which he had at the time of the arrest partly concealed under his coat.[18]

Justification.[19]—Previous altercations between defendant and deceased,[20] and their threats and statements of intentions in regard to each other, are admissible, the plea being self-defense;[21] and there being evidence that deceased's threats were heard by or communicated to defendant;[22] likewise where the defense is accident in the struggle for possession of a revolver with which defendant believed deceased was about to kill her.[23] But the particulars of former difficulties cannot be shown,[24] nor can defendant show his declarations of fear of deceased subsequent to such difficulties and prior to the killing,[25] nor that deceased had stated of him that he was an old coward and would not fight.[26] Indefinite and impersonal threats by a party to a homicide are not admissible in the absence of evidence connecting them with his adversary.[27] Evidence of attempts of deceased, after a prior difficulty, to borrow a pistol, is properly rejected where connected in no other way with defendant.[28] Previous relations of deceased and defendant's wife or daughter may be shown when illustrative of their attitude toward each other.[29]

21. Threats by defendant. Bateson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 88. Statements by defendant that he wanted "to get a gun and go to killing" and wanted "to kill somebody" held not too general to be admissible. Friday v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 815.

Threats by deceased. People v. Taylor, 177 N. Y. 237, 69 N. E. 534. As bearing on defendant's state of mind, a witness may state that he delivered a pacific message to him from deceased. Rush v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 927. Threats by deceased are not admissible where under the undisputed evidence defendant is not entitled to avail himself of the plea of self-defense. Gilmore v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 359. In order that threats should be part of the res gestae, something more must be shown than that they were made recently; whether they are offered in mitigation or as justification proof of some overt act is necessary as a predicate for their admission. State v. Thomas, 111 La. 804, 35 So. 914.

22. Declarations of deceased between the preliminary quarrel and the killing, not brought to defendant's notice in the interim, cannot be shown. 28. Pitts v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 101. Testimony that on the occasion of a prior difficulty deceased borrowed a gun and stated that he wanted it to kill a dog is irrelevant. Pettis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 312.

The general reputation of deceased for violence may be shown where defendant had knowledge of it,[30] but specific facts in regard to his character[31] such as acts of violence towards third persons,[32] in no way connected with or observed by defendant,[33] or that he had been imprisoned for particular offenses,[34] cannot, especially where defendant is not shown to have had knowledge thereof, further than that he had been in prison.[35] Deceased's habit of carrying weapons not known to defendant cannot be shown.[36] The character of deceased cannot be supported by the state until it has been attacked by defendant,[37] but where defendant puts the character of deceased in issue as a violent and dangerous man, the state may prove that he is a peaceable and law-abiding man.[38] Where the defense is accident, the reputation of deceased for drunkenness is incompetent on the issue of his violence when drunk.[39] General good character and church membership of deceased and his lack of profanity is not admissible to rebut defendant's testimony that he approached using violent profane language.[40] Decedent's intoxication is irrelevant when offered before any showing of necessity to kill him and when the state of the proof is that defendant was the aggressor.[41] Defendant is entitled to prove by deceased's widow that he was a man of ungovernable temper.[42]

Defendant having given evidence of his general character for peace and quiet cannot further show that his general disposition is gentle and kind and that he would not hurt anybody.[43]

The possession of weapons by deceased is material,[44] but opinions of witnesses whether a stick was a deadly weapon are inadmissible where it was produced be-

29. Previous relations of deceased and defendant's daughter may be shown as bearing on who was the aggressor; and the reasonableness of defendant's belief that deceased would shoot. Kennedy v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 90. Where the defense is self-defense, prior declarations of deceased as to improper relations with defendant's wife are not admissible on the theory that they furnish a motive for an attack on defendant by deceased, there being no evidence that the declarations had reached defendant or that deceased thought they had. Where there is a conflict as to whether defendant was cut by deceased or by himself in trying to cut deceased, and as to whose hand the knife was in, evidence that deceased had lent his knife just before the killing is proper. Dean v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1449, 78 S. W. 1112. Where defendant claims that deceased's weapons may have been clandestinely removed from his body the state may show by his wife that he never owned nor carried any. Pettis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 312. Where defendant's witnesses testify that as deceased fell he threw a pistol into a neighboring field, rebuttal is admissible to the effect that witnesses sought there and found no pistol. Gregory v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 259. That one of a party to which defendant thought prosecutor belonged and which was searching for him was armed with a pistol is admissible. State v. Evans, 122 Iowa, 174, 97 N. W. 1008. That deceased's gun was not in working order as to its second barrel is inadmissible in the absence of proof that defendant knew it. People v. Wright [Cal.] 77 P. 877.

fore the jury and evidence as to the relative size and strength of the parties was shown.[45]

Evidence that deceased, in the hearing of accused, stated as he approached him, just before he was shot, that he intended to bid accused "good night" is admissible.[46]

To rebut evidence that deceased had hold of defendant's pistol when shot, it may be shown that there were no powder burns on his hands.[47]

Harmless error, in the admission and exclusion of evidence is discussed below.[48]

(§ 7) C. Dying declarations[49] are admissible on the trial of a legal inquiry into the death of the person making them[50] as to such facts relative to the cause and extent of the injury received,[51] as deceased would have been permitted to testify to had he lived,[52] if made under a sense of impending dissolution,[53] though

The admission of evidence that defendant resisting arrest by a private person had stolen goods partly concealed under his coat at the time is harmless since he would not be justified in resisting illegal arrest to the extent of taking life. Dryer v. State, 139 Ala. 117, 36 So. 38. Bad character of defendant's female companion while immaterial is not prejudicial. Foster v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 29. Whether or not evidence of deceased's having lent his knife just before the killing is admissible, its admission cannot harm defendant where the undisputed evidence shows that defendant pursued and slew deceased with a pistol at a time when no apparent danger existed. Dean v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1449, 78 S. W. 1112. Experiments with Winchester as to how far it would throw shells held harmless. Pettis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 312. No harm results from asking a witness whether he heard defendant make any other threats against deceased, conceding it calls for a conclusion, where the witness answers by repeating a declaration which is a threat. Wilson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 93. Sustaining objections to the cross-examination of a state's witness as to matters material only on the question of self-defense is not prejudicial where there is no issue of self-defense in the case. People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 P. 177.

Error cured by other evidence or striking out. Brock v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 638. Error in refusing to strike out testimony of a witness relating his exclamation at the time of the assault "There goes on murder here" is not cause for reversal where no exception was taken to the ruling and it is undisputed that murder did go on. People v. Lagroppo, 90 App. Div. 219, 86 N. Y. S. 116. Where there is no possible doubt as to the cause of death, the admission of immaterial evidence on that point is harmless. Bowers v. State [Wis.] 99 N. W. 447. Refusal to permit evidence that the person assaulted was of a quarrelsome disposition when intoxicated is immaterial where the same witness subsequently testified to the fact without objection. Meehan v. State, 119 Wis. 621, 97 N. W. 173. Error in introducing evidence that defendant, who claims he killed deceased, his wife, accidentally, did not pay her funeral expenses, is cured by permitting him to prove that he offered to pay but was not permitted. Washington v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 811. Admission of evidence of a fight between the deceased and the accused about a year before the killing was harmless error where there was evidence of a similar fight shortly before the death. 50. Although two persons killed were shot in the same fight, the dying declarations of one are not admissible on the trial of the slayer for the murder of the other. Taylor v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 361. Dying declarations are admissible only on the principle that the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the declarations. Hence they cannot be considered in support of a conviction of assault. People v. Schiavi, 96 App. Div. 479, 89 N. Y. S. 564.

immediate dissolution did not follow;[54] they are admissible because of reasons of necessity, and because it is supposed that a realization on the part of declarant of the certain and speedy approach of death affords as powerful incentive to tell the truth as does the administration of an oath.[55] Declarations made while deceased entertained hope of recovery are admissible where he afterwards reaffirmed them after hope had been abandoned,[56] and declarations admissible against the person doing the killing are also admissible against conspirators and accomplices.[57] Their admission does not violate the constitutional guaranty of confrontation of witnesses.[58] It is no objection that the declaration was written down and so shown instead of being testified to orally by persons who heard it,[59] but such a writing not signed by decedent nor read over to him or in any way recognized by him is not admissible,[60] whence the fact that such a writing is in the hands of the prosecuting attorney does not render oral evidence of the declaration incompetent.[61] Where deceased was dying of poison a statement to her by the physician that as her husband was under suspicion she should disclose whether she had taken anything should not be admitted in connection with her statement that she had not.[62] Witness may state that deceased asked him to take down his testimony as showing his connection with the statement.[63]

The weight of dying declarations as evidence,[64] and the credibility of testimony of a medical witness as to deceased's condition, is for the jury;[65] and in case of conflict as to whether any declaration was in fact made, the evidence thereof should be admitted and the question submitted to the jury.[66] The declarant may be impeached in the same manner as other witnesses,[67] as by showing that his character was bad,[68] or that when making the declaration he was in a reckless, irreverent state of mind and entertained feelings of malice and hostility towards accused;[69] and statements at variance with the dying declaration are admissible for that purpose though not of themselves res gestae or dying declarations.[70]

Where the physician attending deceased described a wound that any person of average intelligence would know was fatal, it is not necessary, in proof of cause of death, that he state his opinion that it was fatal. Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 681. A contention that decedent's death was caused not by the wound but by

Proof of the corpus delicti is always necessary,[84] but is fully established when it is shown that a human being has been deprived of life by criminal agency.[85]

There must be other evidence of the corpus delicti besides the confession,[86] but proof of the finding of the body with marks of violence upon it is sufficient.[87] Where the corpus delicti is shown, the confession alone may be received to establish the manner and means of death and defendant's guilty agency in the crime.[88]

Proof of a motive is not necessary,[89] though it is a strong circumstance which the jury ought to consider.[90]

The weight to be given dying declarations is for the jury alone.[91]

Evidence that defendant had access to a weapon, such as the crime was committed with, is important but not essential where ample opportunity of concealment after the murder was shown.[92]

§ 8. Trial and punishment. A. Conduct of trial in general.[93]—Evidence tending to show death and the means of it is admissible before any evidence is offered tending to identify defendant as the guilty agent,[94] and the state may show in chief that defendant at the examination voluntarily testified that he shot and killed deceased.[95]

A view of the premises is discretionary.[96]

Where a dying declaration was sufficiently shown but a paper purporting to contain it was not admitted, incidental reference to the paper by the prosecuting attorney as "the dying declaration" is not prejudicial.[97]

Charge on manslaughter held necessary,—deceased struck defendant with rock. Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 940. Defendant went to deceased's house for unlawful purpose and was set upon by deceased. Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35. Voluntary and involuntary manslaughter held both presented by evidence. Montgomery v. Com. [Ky.] 81 S. W. 265; Chapman v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 350. Manslaughter held within issues. Riley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 711; Williams v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 368. Where defendant and decedent were fighting with pistols and defendant's father came up and killed deceased, there being no evidence of conspiracy, an instruction on assault with intent to murder was proper. Loyd v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 293. Where by reason of a former trial the issue of first degree murder is eliminated from the case, there is no error in failure to distinguish between the degrees of murder, since defendant could be found guilty of the second degree on evidence sufficient to convict of the first degree. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 746. The distinction between second degree murder and manslaughter must be defined where presented by the evidence. Id. To justify refusal to charge on second degree murder, the evidence must clearly exclude it and clearly show murder in the first degree. Hernandez v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1210. Presumption arising from use of nondeadly weapon need not be stated where knife was used, blade 2⅝ inches long. Baker v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1215; Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 746. Effect of intoxication on power to form intent or premeditate should be given when evidence warrants. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. Assault and assault by willfully shooting. State v. Matthews [La.] 36 So. 48. Unsupported testimony of defendant is sufficient to demand charge on lower grades. State v. Clark [Kan.] 77 P. 287. The fact that testimony on behalf of defendant tended to support his theory of self-defense is not inconsistent with his claim that if guilty his crime was manslaughter, not murder. Id. Charge on assault and battery held necessary on indictment for shooting with intent to kill. State v. Kittle [Kan.] 78 P. 407. Necessity of charging on aggravated assault is not relieved by use of greater force than necessary in resisting assault. Palmer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 202.

Claim of defense of another held to call for charge on rape and assault with intent to commit rape. Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 543. Converse of mutual combat theory, where defense is self-defense, should be given, where charge on mutual combat is given. Christian v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 562. Defendant held entitled to charge on self-defense untrammeled by language on effect of provoking difficulty. Beard v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 33. Theory of aggravated assault held necessary where defendant acted on first meeting after becoming convinced of his wife's infidelity with deceased. Loyd v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 293. Defendant held entitled to an instruction on his right to follow up his adversary who had retreated but continued to use his pistol. McMahon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 296. Responsibility of another and defendant's nonparticipation. Id. It is erroneous to state abstract propositions of law, each applicable to a different state of facts, and apply one doctrine to a given claim and say nothing about contrary claims. Harris v. People [Colo.] 75 P. 427. Where a billy picked up at the scene of the homicide immediately thereafter, and identified by defendant as exactly like one he saw deceased have, is admitted in evidence, defendant is entitled to a charge that the jury cannot disregard it if they find it to be the identical one or substantially like the one deceased attempted to use. People v. Childs, 90 App. Div. 58, 85 N. Y. S. 627. Where defendant shot deceased during a struggle alleging self-defense, he was entitled to a favorable charge on his failure to run away. Id. Error to refuse instruction that defendant could not be convicted if another killed deceased without defendant's knowledge, connivance, or consent. Ferguson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 448. Defendant held entitled to a charge on self-withdrawing degrees or defenses of which there is no evidence may be proper,[10] and one submitting a defense which there is no evidence to support is not necessarily erroneous,[11] but in North Carolina a charge that certain facts show premeditation as a matter of law is error.[12] A positive declaration by deceased that defendant killed her, whether admitted as a dying declaration or as res gestae renders a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary.[13] Instructions predicating guilt on theories inconsistent with that suggested by the evidence and on which the evidence was admitted are prejudicial.[14] Beyond defining the material issues in the case, instructions more fully developing particular phases of the evidence if desired must be requested.[15] In the footnotes are grouped holdings as to the correctness and propriety of instructions relating to the burden and degree of proof,[16] participation by defendant in the crime,[17] weight and effect of evidence,[18] defense untrammeled by the effect of provoking difficulty. Goodman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 83 S. W. 196.

9. Instruction on provoking difficulty held properly given. Bateson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 88. Charge on defendant's guilt by reason of aiding another by acts and words held proper. McMahon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 296. Charge that personal animosity towards deceased was not necessary, held proper. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 936. A peremptory instruction not to find a verdict of murder in the first degree is properly refused where there is evidence from which a formed design to take life might be found. Eatman v. State, 139 Ala. 67, 36 So. 16. Duty to retrial held within issues. Gordon v. State [Ala.] 36 So. 1009. Murder in perpetration of robbery held properly charged upon. Murder of watchman in silk mill. State v. Lyons [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 398. Charge on offense of shooting at another held proper on indictment for assault with intent to kill. Harris v. State, 120 Ga. 167, 47 S. E. 520; Baldwin v. State, 120 Ga. 188, 47 S. E. 558. Instruction on circumstantial evidence held properly modified by adding clause on principals and accessories. Becknell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1039.

10. Instruction that killing was neither justifiable or excusable held proper under evidence. State v. Corrivau [Minn.] 100 N. W. 638. Statement that "no circumstances were shown that would mitigate this crime from murder to manslaughter" held proper under the evidence. State v. Bectsa [N. J.] 58 A. 933; State v. Capps, 134 N. C. 622, 46 S. E. 730; State v. Lipscomb, 134 N. C. 689, 47 S. E. 44. An instruction that there is no evidence authorizing a conviction for a certain degree violates the spirit of a statute that the charge shall be upon the law of the case only. Thomas v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 161.

14. Where the evidence is exclusive that defendant gave deceased poisoned whisky which she drank not knowing it to be poisoned, evidence predicating guilt on defendant's participation in her suicide, or on his leaving the whisky where she would use it, are erroneous. Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042. Where the issue of assault with intent to murder and aggravated assault are both suggested by the evidence, but self-defense is not, a charge on provoking the difficulty is harmful. Ross v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1004.

15. In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, failure to give instructions on murder and manslaughter not requested is not error. Adcock v. State [Ark.] 83 S. W. 318.

Spraggins v. State, 139 Ala. 93, 35 So. 1000. An instruction that though the jury find that "deceased was unlawfully killed as alleged" they should acquit if the evidence raised a reasonable doubt as to defendant's presence at the scene of the crime, is not objectionable, the quoted words not implying that defendant did the killing. Weaver v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 39. An instruction containing the statement that it is no crime for one to go and see a fist fight or a crime committed is properly refused. People v. Buckley [Cal.] 77 P. 169.

Charge that dying declarations "should be received with caution and care" is properly modified by substituting, "should be carefully weighed and considered." State v. Davis, 134 N. C. 633, 46 S. E. 722. Error to state that dying declarations are entitled to the weight that the evidence of "one witness" is entitled to. Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042. Presumption arising from failure to use deadly weapon, opportunity being offered. State v. Hunt, 134 N. C. 684, 47 S. E. 49. Instructions that assume that defendants struck in self-defense where they claim they did not strike at all are erroneous as on the weight of the evidence. State v. Lindsey [S. C.] 47 S. E. 389.

19. Charge on lack of motive held not required. State v. Brown [Mo.] 79 S. W. 1111. Charge that no motive is necessary held not error. State v. Jaggers [N. J.] 58 A. 1014. That testimony as to previous difficulty is important only as showing motive. People v. Lagroppo, 90 App. Div. 219, 86 N. Y. S. 116. Charge so framed as to exclude consideration of evidence of accused tending to show different state of facts is error. Bowles v. Com. [Va.] 48 S. E. 527. Instruction on robbery as motive where there is no evidence to connect accused with the robbery is error, where the evidence as to defendant's perpetration of the murder is circumstantial. State v. Adams [N. C.] 48 S. E. 589.

Keerl, 29 Mont. 508, 75 P. 362. An instruction to consider the weapon on the question of intent is error where the killing was with a pistol, and self-defense is claimed. Burnett v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 550.

22. Held error to interpolate or substitute words in statutory definition of various degrees. Cook v. State [Fla.] 35 So. 665. An instruction to consider murder in the first degree and if the jury find a reasonable doubt of guilt they may then consider the second degree is not erroneous for precluding them from finding a verdict of not guilty on their reasonable doubt of guilt in the first degree. Smith v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 694. Similar instruction on second degree and manslaughter held not bad as eliminating manslaughter in earlier part. Nelson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 713. Instruction held erroneous as authorizing conviction of second degree murder on facts justifying conviction of manslaughter only. Ray v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 737. Second degree murder and manslaughter held properly distinguished. Connell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 746. Instruction that verdict of higher degree would be proper unless jury were "satisfied" from the evidence that only the lower degree was committed. Galloway v. State [Fla.] 36 So. 168. Instruction to acquit on facts that would support conviction of manslaughter in second degree or assault and battery if defendant entered fight willingly or provoked it is properly refused. Williams v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 228. Several instructions on degrees in case where defense was defense,[26] defense of another,[27] provocation of difficulty,[28] apprehension of dan-insanity and intoxication. Bell v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 281. A charge that takes from the jury the right to ascertain the degree is erroneous, but one which merely points out to them their duty under the law and leaves them free to act is not. Com. v. Kovovic [Pa.] 58 A. 857. An instruction permitting a conviction of manslaughter is properly refused where homicide is committed by abortion. People v. Balkwell [Cal.] 76 P. 1017. Degree where death ensues from assault with intent to do great bodily harm. State v. Hunt, 134 N. C. 684, 47 S. E. 49.

23. An instruction drawn under the statute should use all the statutory elements. Omission of "without authority of law." Ivy v. State [Miss.] 36 So. 265. Where defendant was on trial for second degree murder, it is error to charge, using terms deliberation and premeditation, there having been some evidence of such condition. Hans v. State [Neb.] 100 N. W. 419. Statement that if defendant intentionally and wrongfully, killed deceased, without any justification, or without excuse, then he killed him with malice and it was murder, is proper. State v. McDaniel [W. Va.] 47 S. E. 384. Second degree murder held sufficiently defined where the defense was accident and negligence. Becknell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 82 S. W. 1039.

Instruction against first degree held properly refused. Williams v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 228. Instruction on voluntary manslaughter held prejudicial in view of evidence that the killing was unintentional. Montgomery v. Com. [Ky.] 81 S. W. 264. Where deceased was killed in defendant's attempt to kill a third person, a charge that voluntary manslaughter could be found only in case defendant had a sudden affray with deceased and killed him as the result of sudden heat and passion entertained towards him, is error. Wheatley v. Com. [Ky.] 81 S. W. 687. Instruction on adequate cause eliminating previous difficulty held erroneous. Johnson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 945; Freeman v. State [Tex. Cr. State [Ala.] 37 So. 330; Johnson v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 456. An instruction for acquittal as for self-defense, if the jury find that certain acts of deceased accompanied certain threatening words, is erroneous as defendant might have been justified without such words being spoken. Nix v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 227. An instruction so worded as to impress upon the jury the court's disbelief of the defense should be avoided. Id. A charge on defendant's right to carry a pistol to defend himself should not be modified by requiring a negation of hostile intentions. Id. An instruction that a reasonable doubt whether the killing was in self-defense requires an acquittal is proper. Perrin v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 930. Distinct matters should not be so coupled as to necessitate the finding of the existence of all of them to acquit. Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 940. Defendant's belief that deceased's wife sent for him for a proper purpose need be only "reasonable" not "actual." Nicks v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 35. Charge on relative strength of parties and disposition of deceased held proper. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 37. Bare reference to subsequent charge on sudden combat is not bad. App.] 79 S. W. 562. Charge on appearance of danger "at the time" held not too indefinite though there was evidence of a previous difficulty. Williams v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1809, 78 S. W. 134. Where demanded by the evidence, an instruction on "apparent" danger must be given. Chism v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 949; Dodson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 940. Instruction held faulty in this respect. Martin v. Com., 25 Ky. L. R. 1928, 78 S. W. 1104; Finney v. Com. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 636. Instruction on reasonable cause to apprehend danger held not abstract and to be within the issues. Kennedy v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 90. Where there is no dispute as to the reality of the attack, no charge on "apparent" danger is necessary. Bearden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 37. Instruction may state that danger must be reasonably apparent. Logan v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 721. Request bad in not postulating on reasonable apprehension of danger. McClellan v. State [Ala.] 37 So. 239. Charge held erroneous as requiring actual instead of apparent danger. Owens v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 279; State v. Clark [N. C.] 47 S. E. 36. Charge ignoring apparent danger held cured by further correct one. Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 681. Instruction held not erroneous as denying the right of acting from appearances. Harris v. People [Colo.] 75 P. 427.

30. Instruction omitting element of imminence of danger may be refused. People v. Rodawald [N. Y.] 70 N. E. 1. Misuse of "eminent" for "imminent" held not prejudicial. State v. Jones [Iowa] 99 N. W. 179.

Harmless error.[37]—An instruction more favorable to defendant than the law warrants cannot be complained of,[38] and erroneous instructions on the law of degrees greater than that of which defendant was convicted are harmless.[39] Erroneous instructions on a defense as to which no issue is raised are harmless.[40] No prejudice results from an erroneous charge on a lower degree than the evidence suggests,[41] or a charge that there is no evidence on which to found a verdict of a certain degree when in fact there is none.[42] The charge is to be construed as a whole and error in one instruction may be corrected by another,[43] though an instruction clearly wrong is not rendered innocuous by a proper one contradictory thereof.[44] Errors may be cured by verdict.[45]

45. An instruction that defendant is guilty at least of murder in the second degree is harmless to one convicted of murder in the first degree. State v. Lipscomb, 134 N. C. 689, 47 S. E. 44. Any error in instructions on mitigation below murder in the second degree is harmless to defendant convicted

(§ 8) C. Verdict.[46]—Where the jury are required, by statute, to find the degree, a verdict of guilty as charged is bad,[47] but such error is not effective to discharge the prisoner, he being only entitled to a new trial.[48] Where a conviction of manslaughter is had upon an indictment for murder, and is set aside and a new trial had, a verdict of "guilty as charged" is responsive to the included charge of manslaughter and is not a conviction of murder of which an acquittal has been had.[49] A verdict finding defendant guilty of "assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to do bodily harm" does not warrant a judgment and sentence for the felony defined by statute as an attempt to shoot with intent to do bodily harm, but is good as a conviction of a simple assault.[50] A verdict of not guilty of murder or manslaughter, but guilty of intentionally pointing a gun, is proper under the Mississippi statute.[51]

tract[56] is now much relaxed; likewise the rule that she could not sue[57] or own personal property.[58]

Contracts of wife with third persons.[59]—It is frequently provided wife may dispose of property as if single,[60] and contract and incur liabilities as if unmarried.[61]

§ 2. Mutual duties, obligations, and privileges. A. Inherent in the relationship.[62]—Antenuptial contracts may alter property interests but cannot vary the terms of the conjugal relation itself.[63] It is the duty of the husband to support his wife in the absence of a valid agreement to the contrary,[64] and the wife is entitled to dwell with her husband.[65]

(§ 2) B. Contracts or other dealings.[66]—At common law and now in Massachusetts a wife cannot contract with her husband.[67] Where a married woman may contract with her husband she may become his partner in business,[68] or may contract to render services to him in his business, and the claim therefor may be proved in bankruptcy.[69] Where a husband pays taxes on his wife's land, he being under no legal obligation to do so, there is no implied promise to repay him.[70] A wife's payment to her husband of a debt due the firm of which he was a member is good though he misappropriates the money.[71]

In Florida a wife is only bound by agreements in writing made for the benefit of her separate property. Equitable Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. King [Fla.] 37 So. 181.

Kentucky: May contract with reference to personal property as if unmarried, and with reference to real property when her husband joins, and contracts with husband binding if recorded [Ky. St. 1903, § 2128]. Stroud v. Ross [Ky.] 82 S. W. 254.

New Jersey: Wife loaned money to husband and with the profits he bought real estate and had it conveyed to them as tenants by the entirety and an agreement to employ the rents therefrom when they amounted to $5,000 to paying off a mortgage could be enforced. Collins v. Babbitt [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 481.

New York: Laws 1896, p. 220, c. 272, § 21, allowing a married woman to contract with reference to her property does not permit her to contract with her husband for her support. Carling v. Carling, 42 Misc. 492, 86 N. Y. S. 46.

In Tennessee a wife is bound when her husband assents. Brundige v. Nashville, etc., R. Co. [Tenn.] 81 S. W. 1248. A married woman may disaffirm her contract to purchase land. Edwards v. Stacey [Tenn.] 82 S. W. 470. A married woman may elect as to whether she will be bound by her contract. Watkins Land Mortg. Co. v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 560.

57. Coverture at common law prevented a woman from suing. Southworth v. Brownlow [Miss.] 36 So. 522. A wife may sue her husband. Parker v. Parker, 25 Ky. L. R. 2193, 80 S. W. 209.

58. Personal property acquired by wife belongs to her. Gordon v. Gordon [Mo.] 82 S. W. 11.

59. See 2 Curr. L. 247.

60. But this does not mean that either can so dispose of their personal property as to commit a fraud on the other, and where she had joined in a mortgage on his lands she was entitled to have proceeds of life insurance policy applied so as to protect her dower interest [Ky. St. 1903, §§ 2127, 2128]. Bickel v. Bickel, 25 Ky. L. R. 1945, 79 S. W. 215.

61. May contract and incur liabilities as if unmarried. Hill's Ann. Laws Or. 1892, § 2997, in force in Alaska. Elliott v. Hawley, 34 Wash. 585, 76 P. 93.

62. See 2 Curr. L. 248.

63. Agreement to reside in a particular state cannot be enforced. Isaacs v. Isaacs [Neb.] 99 N. W. 268.

64. Evidence held not to show such an agreement and husband compelled to account to his wife's representatives of money he had drawn from her separate estate. Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643.

65. But the marriage of a Chinese woman to one entitled to dwell in this country is no defense to deportation proceedings, unless it was bona fide. United States v. Ah Sou, 132 F. 878.

66. See 2 Curr. L. 248.

67. She cannot be liable either as indorsee or maker, to her husband on a note. National Bank of the Republic v. Delano, 185 Mass. 424, 70 N. E. 444.

69. Pa. St. 1893 (P. L. 345, § 3), providing that woman cannot sue her husband does not apply to proving claim in bankruptcy. In re Domenig, 128 F. 146.

70. Husband was executor under will in which wife was residuary legatee. Bean v. Bean, 135 N. C. 92, 47 S. E. 232.

71. Collins v. Collins [Ky.] 83 S. W. 99.

Gifts.[72]—A husband may make a valid gift to his wife without her knowledge at the time,[73] and as to third persons acceptance is presumed,[74] but it is not completed until delivery.[75] Gifts between husband and wife are void in Massachusetts unless special conditions are complied with.[76] A postnuptial settlement is not valid as a contract,[77] but it may be good as a gift from a husband to a wife.[78] Where property which a wife inherited was deeded to her husband, it will be presumed to have been for her use, and not a gift,[79] so of a wife's advances made to her husband;[80] but where a husband sold his property and took a mortgage back to himself and wife, the presumption was that he had given her a half interest therein.[81]

Antenuptial contracts.[82]—Antenuptial contracts, where there is no fraud or concealment, are valid,[83] as one to transfer a benefit certificate, after marriage, to his wife.[84] An antenuptial contract may be altered by another contract if made before the marriage,[85] and the two should be construed together.[86] It may be binding though the intended wife was an infant.[87] One will not be sustained where the husband fraudulently concealed from his intended wife the amount of his property,[88] or where the provision for the wife is grossly disproportionate, the presumption being that it was procured by fraud and concealment, and the burden resting on those who would profit by it to show the contrary.[89] A note given in an antenuptial contract can be enforced by the wife.[90] An antenuptial contract by which a woman releases all her rights to the property of the man does not 73, 74. A husband transferred an account with stockbrokers to his wife's name, and they so entered it on their books, but later sold the stock for the husband's debt and were held guilty of conversion. Sparks v. Hurley, 208 Pa. 166, 57 A. 364.

75. Husband was allowed to recover for loss of cow, though he himself testified that he had given it to his wife, and the wife had accepted the gift. Davis v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 134 N. C. 300, 46 S. E. 515.

76. Consequently a loan to husband of property so given will give no claim provable in bankruptcy. In re Tucker, 131 F. 647.

77. After marriage, the marriage is not a valuable consideration. Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534.

78. The husband released all his rights in certain land to his wife, saving that of survivorship, and the settlement was operative though the wife did not join. Walt v. Walt [Tenn.] 81 S. W. 228.

79. The wife was one of several heirs and the property was amicably divided by the exchange of deeds, it subsequently appearing that the deeds to her share were made to her husband, it was a question of fact for jury if a gift was intended. Carter v. Becker [Kan.] 77 P. 264.

80. Wife advanced money from her separate estate which the husband used in improving his lands. Brady v. Brady [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 931.

81. Presumption may be repelled by showing husband exercised acts of dominion over property, or that the wife recognized the husband's ownership. Gould v. Glass, 120 Ga. 50, 47 S. E. 505.

82. See 2 Curr. L. 249.

83. The woman was 24, consulted her uncle, a lawyer, and knowing that the man, who was 52 and had seven children, had $14,000 of property, she contracted to accept a life interest in 50 acres and $500, in lieu of dower. Brown v. Brown's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 2264, 80 S. W. 470. Antenuptial contract to pay wife $500 in return for release of dower valid, and husband's estate liable though wife died first. Barlow's Adm'r v. Comstock's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1680, 78 S. W. 475. By antenuptial agreement wife surrendered all rights of $500 paid at the time and at her death any money remaining was to be paid back to husband, her creditors at her death were entitled to the money before the husband. Palmer v. Hallock, 94 App. Div. 485, 88 N. Y. S. 17.

84. In an action on a benefit certificate, where defendant set up a subsequent certificate, a reply setting up an antenuptial contract was proper. Carter v. Carter [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 187.

85, 86. Second contract protected the then existing rights of the husband's creditors. South Carolina Loan & Trust Co. v. Lawton [S. C.] 48 S. E. 282.

87. Husband bound to join in conveyance of her land to her mother when she became of age. Wood v. Reamer [Ky.] 82 S. W. 572. See, also, Infants, 2 Curr. L. 392.

88. Where a husband with considerable property cut the wife off from it all, it will be presumed that he designedly concealed from her the value of his estate. In re Warner's Estate, 207 Pa. 580, 57 A. 35.

89. Agreement allowed wife $5,000 and what husband might give her by will. He bequeathed her stocks to value of $1,500 and left an estate valued at over $200,000. Russell v. Russell, 129 F. 434.

90. Though the contract was void because parol, and note was not delivered until after marriage. Kramer v. Kramer, 90 App. Div. 176, 86 N. Y. S. 129.

after marriage prevent her from filing a declaration of homestead on his property.[91] Under an antenuptial agreement that a wife might will her property as she chose, the husband could not after her death elect to take his share under the law.[92] Antenuptial contracts respecting property rights do not bar an allowance to the wife on a divorce of the parties.[93]

Agreements for separation and separate support.[94]—A contract between husband and wife to promote a separation is void; but a contract made after separation or after one has been determined on, providing for a wife's maintenance,[95] or for a division of property, is valid if there is consideration.[96] A contract between husband and wife for the latter's support is not valid where the common-law rule preventing contracts inter sese has not been relaxed.[97] A separation agreement between husband and wife made through the intervention of a trustee is valid where fair and free from coercion and it was entered into understandingly by her.[98] The contract will be canceled where one of the parties was incompetent because of mental weakness to make a contract,[99] and the deed executed in fulfillment of it will be declared void.[1]

Conveyances; mortgages; contracts to convey.[2]—Conveyances or contracts to convey between husband and wife are valid in some jurisdictions if recorded.[3] In Minnesota contracts between a husband and wife relative to the real estate of either are invalid.[4] In Iowa a contract of husband founded on valuable consideration that a wife should be entitled to one-half of all his property, real or personal, was enforced.[5] In Arkansas a husband can convey the homestead to his wife without her joining in the deed.[6] Where wife obtains a conveyance from her husband by fraud it will be set aside, she being liable for defrauding him, as well as for defrauding third persons.[7] To avoid making the invalidity of their contract with each other respecting lands a fraud, the courts may, on a contract executed on one side, decree the other party a trustee ex maleficio.[8]

91. The only effect of declaration is to exempt property from execution and to prevent its transfer without her consent. Warner v. Warner [Cal.] 78 P. 24.

§ 3. Property rights inter se. A. In general.[9]—The possession of husband and wife is the possession of the one in whom is the legal title,[10] and the husband cannot acquire an easement by prescription in his wife's adjoining premises where she could not have made a valid grant to him.[11] At common law a married woman's will was not valid unless specifically assented to by her husband, but this is now generally changed by statute.[12]

A voluntary conveyance on the eve of marriage of all one's property without the knowledge of the other party, and with the intent of defeating his or her marital rights, will be set aside for fraud.[13] A widow may avoid a fraudulent conveyance where she married the man on his promise to procure a reconveyance which he failed to do.[14]

On the death of the husband or wife, the customary life estates of dower and curtesy or their statutory substitutes are vested.[15] Certain rights of succession as survivor result; usually a right to share as heir or at least as next of kin[16] or by virtue of a will.[17]

(§ 3) B. Of husband in wife's property.[18]—Under the common law, the husband has a freehold estate for the joint lives of himself and his wife in her lands, which she held at the time of her marriage, not for her sole and separate use, and which he cannot be deprived of except by due process of law;[19] and whatever title or estate the tenant by curtesy acquires inures to his wife's heirs.[20] A husband acquires no greater interest in his wife's property where it is conveyed to them jointly by a deed in partition.[21] A wife's property is not generally liable for husestate to her; but the wife failed to perform her agreement. Held, that she takes the property ex maleficio in trust for the parties beneficially interested. Laird v. Vila [Minn.] 100 N. W. 656.

Note: It is well settled that equity will compel the conveyance of an estate, pursuant to an oral agreement, after such part performance by the promisee as would make failure to convey a fraud in law. Earl of Aylesford's Case, 2 Strange, 783; Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332. The theory commonly advanced is that the Statute of Frauds cannot be invoked in aid of fraud. See Montacute v. Maxwell, 1 P. Wms. 618; Maddison v. Alderson, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 467. It would, however, seem more accurate to say that the fraud upon the promisee who has changed his position in consequence of the promisor's representations raises a constructive trust in favor of the former. Such a trust, not being within the statute, may be enforced in equity without regard to the original agreement. See Maddison v. Alderson, supra. The situation in the principal case seems analogous. The breach of a promise to hold property for a third person's benefit, given as the inducement for a will in favor of the promisor, is such fraud as will convert the devisee into a constructive trustee. Thynn v. Thynn, 1 Vern. 296. Hence though, by statute, the original contract is unenforceable, yet equity should compel the execution of this constructive obligation. Ahrens v. Jones, 169 N. Y. 555. XVIII Harv. L. R. 67.

13. Evidence insufficient to show that the conveyance was made to carry out an oral trust. Collins v. Collins [Md.] 57 A. 597.

Note: In this case the court states the rule as well settled that a conveyance by the wife is under such circumstances fraud on the husband, and collates the authorities. Regarding as more doubtful the question involved in the text, the court goes extensively and critically into both English and American authorities laying down the rule as above. [Editor.]

band's debts,[22] and is exempt from attachment therefor.[23] A husband may have such an interest in his wife's property as to make it his property for the purposes of an indictment for larceny.[24] The right of a married woman is now generally absolute over her personal estate, and she may convey it away on such terms as she pleases, if the conveyance is to take effect during her lifetime;[25] but where the common law prevails, money earned by a wife in absence of agreement belongs to the husband,[26] and the wife's choses in action are subject to the husband's power of appropriation by reducing them to possession.[27] Where a wife loaned money to a firm of which her husband was a member, he did not reduce it to his possession, and so she still could assert her claim to it.[28] A husband who murders his wife does not become the owner of her choses in action.[29]

(§ 3) C. Of wife in husband's property.[30]—The wife's right of dower[31] will not prevent specific performance of a husband's contract to convey.[32] In Indiana where a creditor has secured the husband's interest in land, the wife may have her one-third interest partitioned off.[33] The court will consider the fact that the wife's earnings have been used by husband to purchase property in his name in making a division of their property.[34]

(§ 3) D. Estates in common, jointly and as an entirety.[35]—Where the common law prevails unmodified, a conveyance to a husband and wife creates an estate by the entirety, and the survivor becomes the sole owner of the land.[36] A wife has no right to a share of the crops growing on land held by her and her husband as tenants by the entirety.[37] Though land, the title to which is in the husband and wife as an entirety, was bought with the proceeds of the sale of the husband's land, it is not held in trust so as to subject it to an execution against the husband,[38] and the proceeds from the condemnation of the land will be held by them as tenants by the entireties.[39] Married women's acts have been construed as striking down all rights of survivorship in joint property, so that estates by entireties may no longer be recognized.[40]

(§ 3) E. Wife's separate property.[41]—Property that a wife acquires from her husband under an execution is not her separate property,[42] but what her husband either voluntarily,[43] or in pursuance of an agreement, conveys to her, is separate property.[44] Land bought with wife's money is her separate property though the title was taken in her husband's name, but without her consent.[45] Proceeds from sale in partition of separate estate are treated as real estate so far as rights of husband are concerned.[46] Where land owned by the wife and others was conveyed to her and her husband by partition deeds, the latter acquired no title thereto.[47] In Missouri property acquired by the wife remains her separate property unless she assents in writing to its reduction to possession by her husband.[48] In North Carolina the separate estate of a married woman is defined by the constitution and her right to dispose of it guaranteed.[49] Where, after the separate property of the wife has been sold, it is reacquired on foreclosure of a trust deed given for the purchase price, it remains separate property.[50]

A loan made by wife from separate estate to husband is provable in bankruptcy, though the wife could have had no relief at law,[51] but the wife cannot recover her money which the husband used in paying his debts where defendant had no notice it was her money.[52] The widow is entitled to a lien on her deceased husband's property for advances out of her separate estate made to him.[53]

A married woman may be barred by her laches in a suit as to her separate estate.[57]

§ 4. Property rights under the community system.[58] A. What law governs.[59]—The community laws of the domicile of the parties will not operate on real estate owned by one of them in another jurisdiction.[60] The liability of the wife on her husband's contract is determined by the law of the place where it was made.[61]

(§ 4) B. What property is community and what separate.[62]—The statutes generally enumerate what shall be separate and what community property. All property accumulated[63] or received,[64] or acquired by either during marriage, is presumed to be community property,[65] except what is given, bequeathed, devised, or has descended to one of them.[66] The burden is on the wife to show that property purchased during coverture was her separate property,[67] and evidence of husband and wife that property was the separate property of the wife should be very carefully scrutinized.[68] In Texas all property which either might bring into the marriage, except land and the wife's paraphernalia, is community property.[69]

Property conveyed by deed reciting a consideration, to husband and wife is community property.[70] But in California where a husband and wife may hold property either as joint tenants, or as tenants in common, or as community property, there is no presumption either way.[71] In that state, property conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, whether from her husband or a third person, is presumed to be her separate property.[72] The presumption that property conveyed to a wife is community property may be overcome.[73]

Damages recovered for personal injury of the husband[74] or of the wife are community property.[75] But in Washington only the special damages belong to the community.[76]

Improvements made with community funds on land owned by husband and wife in severalty are community property.[77]

Whether the property is separate or community depends on how it was acquired and is not affected by the opinion of the parties or any declaration in the will of one of them.[78] A wife is not estopped to assert her interest though the record title of community property was in her husband.[79]

It cannot be taken from him retroactively. The wife's interest in the community is said to be inchoate or nominal until death of one of the spouses except in Washington, where she has, while living, a vested interest, and in Texas an equitable interest.—From Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 36 L. R. A. 497. The opinion goes exhaustively into the history of the husband's disposable right over the community.

community may thereby abandon all claim in the old.[86] The general rule is that removal to another state does not forfeit community rights even though it be to a state where that system does not prevail.[87] In an indictment, property may be alleged to be the property of the husband though it belongs to the wife, and that may be shown at the trial.[88]

(§ 4) D. Rights and powers as to separate property.[89]—Where a wife has been separated in property from her husband, she may buy property for her separate account.[90] A lease of the wife's separate property is void unless she joins therein.[91] A wife can only sell her separate property when the husband joins in the conveyance.[92] A sale of the wife's land to pay the debts of the husband is void.[93]

(§ 4) E. Succession to, and administration of, the community.[94]—On death of one, the survivor acquires one-half of the community property if there are descendants, if there are none the survivor acquires the whole.[95] The interests of the heirs of the deceased attach at once.[96] The heirs of the husband during the wife's life are entitled to homestead in only the husband's share of land which was the separate property of the husband and wife, and not to improvements made by community funds.[97] In Louisiana the survivor is entitled to one-half of the community property and to the usufruct of the other half, which cannot be partitioned by the heirs during the life of the survivor.[98] The husband's separate estate will pass under a general residuary devise though he thought it was community.[99]

Custody, control, disposal, and distribution.[1]—The survivor is entitled to custody and control of community property only for the reasonable time necessary to pay community debts.[2] In California community property belongs to the husband as survivor without administration.[3]

The surviving husband cannot sell[4] or mortgage more than his share of the community property, except for a community debt.[5] The transfer of community property by the survivor does not pass the interest therein of children.[6] The husband, without administration or qualification as survivor, has no power over the interest of the children.[7] The survivor, who has qualified as such, may convey community property to another for value, and who has no notice of other interests,[8] and such bona fide purchaser will prevail over the equitable claims of heirs of the deceased member of the community.[9]

The wife's right to administer community property ceases on her marriage to another,[10] but it is restored on her divorce from her second husband.[11] A dative tutor may administer the widow's rights in the community.[12]

Accountability to heirs and creditors.[13]—Where a widow used community property to pay debts contracted for improving her separate property, the money so used was still community property in her hands.[14] Community property, sold after the death of the husband for taxes and reconveyed to widow, is still in equity community property, but an innocent purchaser from the widow at a judicial sale is protected except against minor heirs of the husband.[15] The heirs of a married woman are entitled to be reimbursed for one-half of the cost of improvements made by her on her husband's property out of community funds and are not liable for its rental value.[16] The surviving wife is liable to creditors of the community only to the extent of the estate in her hands.[17]

Community debts and claims.[18]—Debts for improvements on land which belonged equally to the separate estates of the husband and wife, were community debts.[19] Where the community property is insufficient to pay the claims of both spouses, the charges in favor of the wife are entitled to a preference.[20]

(§ 4) F. Dissolution of community.[21]—One who voluntarily leaves the jurisdiction and obtains a divorce in another state, by suit wherein was no jurisdiction to divide property, cannot on returning sue for a division of the community property.[22]

Note: This question being without precedent in Idaho, the court reviews the cases showing that it is without exact precedent in other states. The decision is based on the policy of the law against multiplied suits, which does not seem quite applicable where as in this case the foreign suit lacked personal jurisdiction as well as jurisdiction of the property sought to be divided. There is a strong dissent by Sullivan, C. J., who says the granting of the foreign decree presumptively determined the rectitude of the wife's position and that therefore equity should relieve her. It is difficult to harmonize the majority opinion with the now settled doctrine respecting foreign divorces. See Divorce, 1 Curr. L. 952; 3 Curr. L. 1139; Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 45 Law. Ed. 794.

§ 5. Liability for necessaries. Liability of husband.[23]—The liability for necessaries furnished the family is presumptively the husband's, as on a contract made by a married woman for board[24] or for wearing apparel.[25] At common law the husband is primarily liable for the funeral expenses of his wife,[26] but in New York he can recover them from her estate.[27] That the husband has made suitable provision for his wife does not relieve him from one who has no notice thereof.[28] The common-law liability as to necessaries is frequently defined by statutes.[29]

Where the parties are living apart and the husband was making a suitable allowance for her,[30] or where under decree of court he is providing for wife's support, he is not liable for necessaries.[31] The husband is liable to wife for support of minor children after divorce where the decree fails to provide for their maintenance.[32] Where the parties are living apart, the husband's liability depends on whether he was at fault or not;[33] if his wife has left him without just cause he is not liable.[34]

The widow cannot bind her late husband's estate for necessaries.[35]

An affidavit in attachment positively sworn to was sufficient which stated a claim to be for "necessaries, to wit, groceries."[36]

Liability of wife.[37]—The wife is not liable for family necessaries supplied by a merchant where it is not shown that she agreed to pay for them.[38] But in some states the family expenses are chargeable against the property of both husband and wife,[39] and a wife may be liable on a note of her husband if given for necessaries for her.[40]

§ 6. Contract rights and liabilities of husband as to third persons.[41]—A husband's covenant on selling his business not to engage in it as agent or otherwise will not prevent his wife from engaging in the same business in her own name.[42] A husband may become liable as surety for his wife.[43]

Agency of wife for husband.[44]—A husband may be bound by his wife acting as his agent, when her acts are within the scope of her ostensible or actual agency,[45] but after quarrels and separation any agency ceases.[46]

§ 7. Contract and property rights and liabilities of wife as to third persons. A. Agency of husband for wife.[47]—The agency of the husband for the wife is not established by the mere fact of marriage,[48] but it may be inferred from all the facts of the case,[49] and the wife may be liable as the undisclosed principal of her husband.[50] A husband who is the general agent of his wife may pledge her securities for his own benefit, so as to bind her,[51] and where a husband was the wife's agent to deliver her note she was bound by his representations.[52] A husband may act as the attorney at law of his wife.[53] In some states, wife may authorize her husband to sell her interest in land,[54] but in Missouri a husband cannot act as the agent of the wife in regard to her land,[55] and in California oral authority is insufficient to enable a husband to contract for the exchange of his wife's property.[56]

(§ 7) B. Contracts in general.[57]—At present by statute married women have in many states complete power to contract with relation to their own property,[58] and ness carried on in his wife's name, and the wife and third parties would be enjoined from employing him. Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 1025.

57. See 2 Curr. L. 267.

58. An agreement for what amounts to a common-law arbitration of a will contest is binding on a married woman notwithstanding § 10924, expressly excepts married to incur liabilities as if unmarried.[59] A wife may be liable to an attorney for services rendered in a divorce suit.[60] Though under statute, the married woman may be liable on her contracts, she will not be liable on her mere promise to pay.[61] Where a married woman may contract as if single, the contract may be specifically enforced;[62] but in many states a married woman's bonds and notes are not binding on her,[63] though a default judgment thereon is not a nullity.[64] In some states a wife is only liable for debts contracted with the consent of her husband.[65] In Illinois a wife cannot enter into a partnership without the consent of her husband.[66] In Tennessee a married woman is not bound by her contract to purchase land.[67] In some states a married woman may elect as to whether she shall be bound by her contract.[68] In Ohio a wife's contracts do not charge her separate property subsequently acquired.[69] In North Carolina a married woman is not liable on her contracts unless she is a free trader,[70] and a note signed with her husband will not bind her separate real estate in equity without a privy examination.[71]

(§ 7) C. Contracts of suretyship.[72]—A wife who joins with her husband in giving a trust deed of her land,[73] or who gives her note and mortgage for her husband's debt,[74] or contracts to assume the obligation of another, is a surety,[75] and in many states is bound thereby.[76] A married woman will be released where the primary security was released without her consent,[77] or even where additional security

76. The husband was not the agent of the creditor so as to charge the creditor with his false representations. Hyatt v. Zion [Va.] 48 S. E. 1.

77. A married woman hypothecated her land for a debt of her husband and cattle belonging to him were included and were subsequently released, and a condition in the deed that the money raised should be is procured without the wife's knowledge.[78] In some states the wife is only bound where the third person had no notice that she was a surety,[79] and a married woman is not estopped to sue for cancellation where the mortgagee knew the mortgage was given for the husband's debt, though the wife signed an affidavit that the consideration was for her sole use.[80] Where a note is assigned by the payee to an innocent holder for value, so that the maker, a married woman, has to pay the same, she may recover from the payee in an action for money had and received.[81] The plea of the statute of frauds is not available to a stranger.[82] A married woman in many jurisdictions is prohibited from becoming an accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety for another,[83] or from becoming liable on any promise to answer for the debt of another.[84] In some states such statutes have been held to prohibit them from mortgaging their separate property or property held with husband by the entirety, as security for another,[85] but in other states they may pledge specific property to secure the debt of her husband.[86] That is a married woman may not be liable personally on a mortgage given for her husband's debt, though the mortgage itself will bind the specific property.[87] In other states a wife cannot directly or indirectly become a surety for her husband,[88] and such mortgages are void.[89] The fact as to whether a mar-used to buy cattle was not complied with. Schneider v. Sellers [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 126.

78. Wife executed a trust deed to defendant of her land to secure a note given for her husband's debt, and the payee's procuring a third person to sign the note was such an alteration as to discharge the land. Higgins v. Deering Harvester Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 959.

79. Where a wife's signature was on the second line and there was no other, it was not notice that she signed as surety to one who accepted it in settlement of her husband's notes. Deering & Co. v. Veal, 25 Ky. L. R. 1809, 78 S. W. 886. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6964, making surety contracts void, there can be no recovery except where person making contract was justified in supposing and did suppose the married woman was principal in fact as well as in name, where the facts are undisputed this is a question of law, and here there was a want of care. Field v. Campbell [Ind.] 72 N. E. 260.

80. And though estoppel runs against a married woman [Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6962], and though the property was situated in another state, the foreclosure would be enjoined. Ft. Wayne Trust Co. v. Sihler [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 494.

81. It is unnecessary to plead the specific facts as to the suretyship of the married woman. Harbaugh v. Tanner [Ind.] 71 N. E. 145.

82. Wife was surety of husband for money borrowed of daughter, and a conveyance of her land to daughter in satisfaction was not fraudulent though the surety contract was parol. Scudder & Co. v. Morris [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 217.

83. Act June 8, 1893 (P. L. 344). Herr v. Reinoehl [Pa.] 58 A. 862. An acknowledgment of liability of a married woman for advances to her husband invalid [Code 1896, § 2529]. Horton v. Hill [Ala.] 36 So. 465.

84. But this does not prevent her from being liable on a mortgage, though she gives the proceeds to her husband who pays his debts, or though the mortgage was given in part payment of debt of husband [Act 1891 (20 Stat. 1121)]. McGee v. Cunningham [S. C.] 48 S. E. 473. But if she buys property she may assume to pay off any debts of her husband which are a lien on the property [Civ. Code 1895, § 2488]. Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348.

85. The transfer of property held by the entirety to a third party, and then immediately back to the husband who mortgaged it, was an evasion, and the mortgagee was put on inquiry, and though the mortgage had been renewed, the mortgage was not valid. Webb v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 162 Ind. 616, 69 N. E. 1006.

86. Assigned her interest in life insuranee policy on life of her husband. Herr v. Reinoehl [Pa.] 58 A. 862.

87. Not liable on any contract to answer for debt of husband, unless a conveyance or mortgage of specific property; and under Ky. St. 1903, § 3760, where she was privately examined by officer she cannot claim she executed the mortgage under duress of her husband [Ky. St. 1903, § 2129]. Hall v. Hall [Ky.] 82 S. W. 269. Husband and wife joined in mortgage to third person who was a surety for husband's debt [Ky. St. 1903, § 2127]. Cook v. Landrum [Ky.] 82 S. W. 585. Mortgage given by married woman on her property good, though no deficiency judgment could be entered against her on her note which was given for her husband's debt. Loizeaux v. Fremder [Wis.] 101 N. W. 423.

88. She may sue to have a deed on her land canceled, which she executed in order to secure a debt of her husband [Code 1896, § 2529]. Henderson v. Brunson [Ala.] 37 So. 549.

89. A mortgage of the wife's property by a sale and a contract of retrocession for a debt of the husband is void. Voiers v. Atkins Bros. [La.] 36 So. 974. Evidence held to show mortgage was given to secure mules to cultivate the mortgaged land, and not for ried woman received in person or in benefit to her separate estate the consideration and not the form of the contract determines the question as to whether she is a surety.[90] Where the contract of suretyship is not binding on a married woman, a mere technical evasion will not validate the contract where the other party had notice.[91]

(§ 7) D. Conveyances, mortgages, contracts to convey, powers.[92]—A married woman cannot generally convey her own real estate unless the husband joins in the conveyance[93] except where she has been abandoned,[94] unless there is an estoppel;[95] but she may execute an appointment without her husband joining therein.[96] A married woman is bound by a deed executed by another at her request, for her and in her presence, which she afterwards acknowledged.[97] A wife may make a valid power of attorney to convey her lands, where her husband joins therein.[98] A married woman may make contracts for the improvement of her own land, but cannot create a lien unless the husband joins therein.[99] She can only make an executory contract for sale of land by complying with provisions of the statute.[1] Where the statute prescribes a special form of acknowledgment for married women, it must be carefully followed,[2] as a deed not acknowledged in accordance with the statute is a nullity.[3] A wife joining with her husband in a conveyance releases her dower and homestead rights.[4] Leases under three years are not conveyances and may be made by a married woman without the consent of her husband.[5] A mortgage on a married woman's separate property may be enforced for the loan, though the bond which the mortgage secured was void,[6] but not where the husband's debt. Hanna v. Cox [S. C.] 48 S. E. 274.

90. Where note signed by wife alone, the burden is on her to prove her suretyship. Harbaugh v. Tanner [Ind.] 71 N. E. 145. A wife who for a consideration executes a mortgage on her property to pay her husband's debts is not a surety but a principal. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 162 Ind. 430, 70 N. E. 535.

91. Woman signed a note first and bank paid the money to her, she giving a check to the real debtor, all with knowledge of the bank that she was a mere surety. Hines & Co. v. Hays [Ky.] 82 S. W. 1007.

92. See 2 Curr. L. 271.

93. The signing by the wife thirty-five years after the husband had signed and without his knowledge, was of no validity, nor was there any trust though the grantees had paid off a mortgage on the parol agreement to convey the land to them [Rev. St. 1860, §§ 2279, 2974]. Alvis v. Alvis, 123 Iowa, 546, 99 N. W. 166.

94. But that her husband was a citizen of Arizona was not sufficient evidence of abandonment to authorize her without the consent of her husband to submit the question of her title to lands to arbitration [Code, § 1832]. Smith v. Bruton [N. C.] 49 S. E. 64.

95. The wife gave a deed to her children, and after her husband's death, urged another to purchase at a guardian's sale. Morrison v. Balzer [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 248.

96. But she could not convey her life estate without the joinder of her husband [Rev. Code 1867, § 2373]. Young v. Sheldon, 139 Ala. 444, 36 So. 27.

97. Can only be attacked against one who had notice of false acknowledgment [Ky. St. 1903, § 507]. Godsey v. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. [Ky.] 82 S. W. 386.

98. Its validity depends on law of place where land lies. Linton v. Moorhead [Pa.] 59 A. 264.

99. Contract to give one the fruit crops in consideration of planting fruit trees was void as against a subsequent purchaser, as she did not own the land [Ky. St. 1903, § 2128]. Thompson v. Stark, 25 Ky. L. R. 1882, 79 S. W. 202.

1. Husband must join in instrument, and wife must acknowledge and be privily examined [Code, § 1256]. Tillery v. Land [N. C.] 48 S. E. 824.

2. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4621, requires a married woman to acknowledge that she willingly signed and sealed it and wishes not to retract; and an acknowledgment that it was her own act and deed and that she did not wish to retract, was fatally defective. Tiemann v. Cobb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 250. But a deed which she acknowledges merely as wife and not as owner will not pass her then existing or after-acquired rights in land. Hendricks v. Musgrove [Mo.] 81 S. W. 1265. See Acknowledgments, 3 Curr. L. 31.

3. "Consent that the same be recorded" is substantially the same as "that she did not wish to retract it." Masterson v. Harris [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 428.

4. The words "Homestead and dower being released" after an acknowledgment in due form to a mortgage did not affect it. Burnside v. Mealer [Ky.] 80 S. W. 785. See Dower, 3 Curr. L. 1144; Homesteads, 3 Curr. L. 1630.

5. But if the married woman is an infant she may disaffirm them on attaining majority. Shipley v. Smith, 162 Ind. 526, 70 N. E. 803.

the consideration was illegal.[7] And it is utterly void where not separately acknowledged, though the legal title was in the husband.[8] A deed of a married woman, in the nature of a mortgage though void at law is valid in equity and charges the wife's separate estate.[9] Where married woman signs deeds of trust of her property authorizing the grantee to pay off incumbrances on the land, she is estopped to claim that she did not in writing authorize their payment.[10]

(§ 7) E. Fraudulent conveyances.[11]—A husband can forego his right to his wife's earnings unless done in fraud of creditors,[12] and a conveyance is not fraudulent where made in fulfillment of an invalid parol contract,[13] or in settlement of a contingent liability.[14] The husband cannot repudiate a conveyance to his wife where it was not fraudulent as to creditors.[15] But the burden is on the wife to show that a parol trust in her favor is bona fide,[16] for the presumption is that property conveyed to a wife is still liable for the husband's debts.[17] A voluntary conveyance to wife made in good faith by a grantor who retains sufficient property to pay his debts is valid as against creditors.[18] But a conveyance of husband to wife is fraudulent when made without consideration after beginning of action by creditor.[19] So one by a wife to her husband which leaves her insolvent is fraudulent.[20] Where money is loaned to a husband who uses it in benefiting his wife's property, the lender cannot recover from her directly.[21]

§ 8. Torts by husband or wife or both.[22]—The common-law rule that a husband is jointly liable with his wife for torts committed by her in his presence does not exist in Nebraska, as the old idea of the oneness of husband and wife has

13. Daughter's signature obtained to note on promise to save her harmless or else convey land to her. Scudder & Co. v. Morris [Mo. App.] 82 S. W. 217.

14. The liability on an antenuptial contract though contingent was sufficient to prevent a conveyance to wife in abrogation thereof from being fraudulent. Clow v. Brown [Ind. App.] 72 N. E. 534.

15. Husband bought land and took a deed to himself which he did not record, but procured another deed to his wife which he did record, ten years later after separation he recorded the deed to himself, but it was ordered canceled. Ball v. Ball, 89 N. Y. S. 1046.

16. Her mere possession of a bond against the husband is not sufficient evidence, and to show a parol trust in her favor, the evidence must be clear and convincing. Kline v. Kline's Creditors [Va.] 48 S. E. 882.

17. Where no evidence that it was a gift to her or was paid for out of her separate estate. Hunter v. Baxter [Pa.] 59 A. 429.

18. Burden on a subsequent creditor to show that at the time of the conveyance debtor had insufficient property to pay his debts. State v. Martin [Conn.] 58 A. 745. There was no fraudulent intent in fact, as the husband was solvent at the time. Polk County Nat. Bank v. Scott [C. C. A.] 132 F. 897. That a third of cost of home, and not exceeding amount he should have paid for support of family, was paid by husband, did not render the conveyance to wife fraudulent. Eversole v. Bullock [Ky.] 83 S. W. 556.

disappeared.[23] An action against husband and wife for injuries inflicted by a dog was dismissed as to the wife where there was no proof that she owned the dog.[24]

§ 9. Torts against husband or wife or both. A. Wrongs to the person.[25]—In an action for personal injuries, a married woman is not entitled to recover the value of medical services rendered,[26] nor for her diminished earning capacity, where she never worked out.[27] A judgment against a wife in a suit for personal injuries will not bar her husband from suing for the loss of her services.[28] In Texas an action for personal injuries to a wife should be brought by the husband alone.[29] The right to recover for the wrongful killing of a husband has been fully treated elsewhere.[30]

(§ 9) B. Criminal conversation and alienation of affections.[31]—A husband may sue for the alienation of the affections of his wife by whch he was deprived of her companionship and assistance, though there is no evidence of her adultery with defendant,[32] or he may join such an action with an action for criminal conversation.[33] An action may be maintained in some states by a married woman against another woman for the alienation of her husband's affections and his consequent abandonment of her.[34] An agreement for a consideration of a wife with her divorced husband to release all claims against any and all persons for the alienation of his affections is valid.[35] The fact that the husband has forgiven the adulterous wife, or has recovered from another for the same offense is no bar.[36] Plaintiff is not barred from suing for criminal conversation because he did not as defendant to the divorce suit plead adultery in defense.[37] Where advice is given by guardian which leads to a separation by the ward from husband or wife, the presumption is that, unlike advice given by a stranger, it was given in good faith.[38] An action cannot be maintained to recover damages for harboring plaintiff's wife, where defendants were relatives of wife and did not procure the separation.[39] Defendant may be found guilty if his unlawful persuasions or enticements were a contributing, but not necessarily the sole cause, of the injury to plaintiff.[40]

Pleading and proof.[41]—It is only necessary to plead the ultimate facts, and not the artifices used to accomplish the alienation.[42] In action for harboring plaintiff's wife, burden of showing justification is not on defendants.[43]

Evidence.[44]—In an action for criminal conversation, plaintiff is only required to prove his case by a "preponderance of evidence."[45] Testimony to show the motive of defendant in interfering and declarations of husband as to his estrangement will be received though he is not a party to the action.[46] Evidence of intimacy long before the separation is admissible.[47] Material evidence is not to be excluded because it also tends to prove a graver offense.[48] Connivance is not shown by evidence of the condonement of his wife, or by plaintiff's silence on learning of her infidelity, or by her intimacy, unknown to him, with other men.[49] Neither husband nor wife can in Michigan testify even with consent of all parties where adultery is charged.[50]

Damages.[51]—Substantial damages may be recovered though there is no proof of resulting loss of services.[52] A wife is entitled to damages for mental anguish and mortification,[53] and for the disgrace and injury to her character.[54] If defendant wantonly and maliciously alienates the affections of plaintiff's wife,[55] or where the conduct of defendant in a suit for unlawfully persuading plaintiff's wife to refuse marital intercourse with plaintiff was shameful, the jury may assess heavy punitive damages,[56] and in such case evidence of defendant's wealth is admissible.[57] That plaintiff's husband has been improperly familiar with other women the same time that he was maintaining illicit relations with defendant, may be shown by the latter in mitigation of damages.[58]

Instructions.[59]—A charge that the mere opportunity to commit adultery was not sufficient to establish the offense, but that there must be evidence of facts showing disposition to commit the offense is correct.[60]

§ 10. Remedies and procedure generally as affected by coverture. Right of action; joint or separate; parties.[61]—The husband alone has the right of action to recover money belonging to himself and his wife which is on deposit with another in his name,[62] or to sue for money which belongs to the community.[63] A wife is a necessary party in suits as to land,[64] as a suit for trespass on lands held in common,[65] or a suit to foreclose a city assessment lien on community property.[66] In actions concerning the wife's land, the husband is not a proper party until the birth of issue, and then the proper practice is to make him a defendant.[67] A married woman must join her husband as a party unless the action concerns her separate property,[68] or is a suit for wages due her.[69] Defendant in setting up an equitable defense may be entitled to have plaintiff's wife made a party.[70]

Limitations.[71]—The statute of limitations will not run in favor of one spouse against the other and his or her heirs,[72] and it does not run against a wife's right of action during coverture.[73] Where the disability of a married woman to bring an action is removed, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the statute will run against her during coverture.[74]

§ 11. Proceedings to compel support of wife (civil and criminal).[75]—A wife may, in some states, sue for separate maintenance,[76] and this right is independent of the right to a divorce.[77] In Kansas a suit for divorce and division of property may be allowed as to the latter the divorce being refused[78] and the division of property is not limited to the same grounds as alimony.[79] She may compel her husband to support herself and child where he left her without justifiable cause.[80] A valid separation agreement is an equitable defense to the wife's right to sue for separate maintenance,[81] but she may sue for support as provided for in the agreement.[82]

Verdicts and findings; judgment or decree.[83]—Question of fact may be submitted to a jury by a chancellor who may accept or reject their advice.[84] It is not necessary that the decree should make an absolute division of the property, but may provide for annual payments until the marriage relation ceases.[85] A court may consult its own experience and exercise its own judgment as to what is reasonable in the allowance of attorney's fees.[86] Statutes making it a crime to willfully neglect to support a wife are constitutional.[87] If the wife has left him it must be shown she was justified in so doing.[88]

§ 12. Crimes and criminal responsibility.[89]—By statute, wife desertion has been made a crime in Iowa.[90] Neglect of the wife wherefrom her death has resulted has in several cases been held to be homicide.[91]

80. Husband was living in adultery with another woman, and it was presumed that the decree in another state giving the wife $5,000 alimony was not in final settlement. Fred v. Fred [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 611.

81. The trustee of such an agreement cannot in a separate suit have the wife enjoined from suing. Bailey v. Dillon [Mass.] 71 N. E. 538.

82. Bill was filed in accordance with Laws 1902, p. 608, c. 157, and did not allege that complainant had repudiated the contract. Patton v. Patton [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 1019.

83. See 2 Curr. L. 284.

84. Found defendant guilty of desertion and that plaintiff was not at fault. Applies in suit for separate maintenance. Kozacek v. Kozacek, 105 Ill. App. 180.

85. $160 a year from a husband worth $6,300, with provision that in case of default he should pay her $2,500 absolutely. Goldie v. Goldie, 123 Iowa, 179, 98 N. W. 630. Wife allowed one-third of defendant's estimated income. Bennett v. Bennett [N. J. Eq.] 59 A. 245.

86. $2,000 upheld in suit for separate maintenance where husband's estate was from $250,000 to $500,000 and his income $10,000 to $16,000. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 105 Ill. App. 349.

87. Act No. 32, p. 42 of 1902. Proviso allowing judge to suspend sentence on accused paying a sum weekly to wife does not impose an additional penalty. State v. Baker, 112 La. 801, 36 So. 703.

88. Evidence sufficient: Wife with four minor children left house as being unsuitable and went to live with her parents, and defendant failed to continue his payment of $5 a week. State v. Beers [Conn.] 58 A. 745.

89. See 2 Curr. L. 285.

90. Evidence insufficient to show that the wife had committed adultery, and her testimony that her husband married her to escape prosecution for seduction was harmless error. State v. Wagner, 123 Iowa, 271, 98 N. W. 763.

91. 1 Clark & M. Crimes, p. 576 et seq. Note to Johnson v. State [Ohio] 61 L. R. A. 292.

NOTE. It is manslaughter if the negligence is gross but not willful, and murder if it is willful. In either case the natural consequence to cause death is essential: Clark & M. Crimes, 575. Neglect is cause of death though it merely accelerates fatal disease. Reg. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600, cited 61 L. R. A. 293. Her voluntarily leaving house and needlessly remaining out and not husband's ill-treatment was held the cause of death. People v. Preslar, 48 N. C. [3 Jones L.] 421, cited 61 L. R. A. 293.

Negligence neither gross nor willful nor in criminal disregard of life though it results in death is excusable: Clark & M. Crimes, 593, 597.

These principles make a husband guilty who by negligence of the kinds mentioned causes the death of a sick or helpless wife: Reg. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600; State v. Smith, 65 Me. 257.

Manslaughter: Willful refusal and neglect to provide clothing, shelter and protection resulting in sickness and ensuing death. State v. Smith, 65 Me. 257.

Murder in second degree: Permitting wife to remain out-doors in freezing weather, she being probably helpless from drink, whereby she froze to death (Territory v. Manton, 8 Mont. 95); helplessness and incapability of self-protection and the subsistence of an obligation to protect being material (Clark & M. Crimes, 579). Intoxication of wife making her helpless is no defense. Territory v. Manton, 8 Mont. 96. Duty was not withdrawn by mutual separation, to protect sick and unprotected wife specially needing help, of which husband was notified. Reg. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600, cited 61 L. R. A. 293.

Query: In the absence of statute, what if any crime is committed by a husband who so neglects his wife that physical injury results where had she died it would have been manslaughter or murder? The question is academic but very pertinent to the doctrine of Territory v. Manton, 8 Mont. 95, that by passive inactivity in the presence of duty the husband makes the violence of the elements his instrument. Could he by the same reasoning be made guilty of an assault?

IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

§ 1. Definitions and Distinctions (1690).
§ 2. Work and Labor or Services and Material Furnished (1690). Under Express Contract (1690). Under Unfinished Contract (1691). Services by Member of Family (1691). Under Contracts Within the Statute of Frauds (1691). Unconscionable Contract (1691). Amount of Recovery (1691).

§ 5. Torts Which may be Waived and Sued as Implied Contracts (1695).
§ 6. Remedies and Procedure (1695).

This article treats only of the so called quasi contracts or contracts implied in law. Contracts implied in fact and therefore real contracts are treated under the appropriate head.[92]

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.[93]—An implied contract is such a one as reason and justice dictate and which, therefore, the law presumes that every man undertakes to perform.[94]

§ 2. Work and labor or services and material furnished.[95]—Where one performs services[96] or furnishes goods[97] to another at his request without any agreement as to remuneration or price, the law implies a promise to pay a just and reasonable compensation therefor; so also an implied contract arises where one requests another to perform services for the benefit of a third person,[98] but not where services are rendered under circumstances indicating that no compensation was intended or expected.[99] Where a person receiving attendance under an express contract becomes insane, the agreement ceases, ipso facto, but the law implies a liability for the value of subsequent care as well as for additional services necessitated by the changed conditions.[1]

Under express contract.[2]—Since a party cannot sue on one cause of action and recover on another, a recovery on a quantum meruit cannot be had for services rendered under an express contract,[3] unless the proof fails to establish the express contract but shows the rendition of services[4] which were beneficial to and

In Clark & M. Crimes, 415, it is said that assault may be committed by exposure of an "infant or other helpless person" to inclemency of the weather. Citing Reg. v. March, 1 Car. & K. 496, where an infant was so exposed.

96. Implied contract by a mistress to pay a domestic servant for extra services rendered. Elwell v. Roper [N. H.] 58 A. 507; Strong v. Eggert [Neb.] 99 N. W. 647. Where services are rendered for one's benefit at his request, there is an implied contract to pay what they are reasonably worth. Oliver v. Jessup's Estate [Mich.] 100 N. W. 900. Evidence held sufficient to entitle an architect to recover for plans and specifications of a building submitted but not used because the proposed builder did not have the money to build. Adamo v. Blohm, 89 N. Y. S. 644.

97. In assumpsit on a quantum valebat, a finding that goods were sold and delivered to defendant is a sufficient finding of a promise to pay. Andresen v. Upham Mfg. Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 518. Labor and materials in a plumbing job. Hurley v. Macey, 94 App. Div. 9, 87 N. Y. S. 924.

98. Where one ordered another to repair a machine belonging to a third person, the party giving the orders is liable for the services rendered. Brinkley Car Works Mfg. Co. v. Farrell [Ark.] 80 S. W. 749.

99. Where an old friend unsolicited rendered services during a last illness while deceased was surrounded by his relatives. Teawalt v. Ramey's Ex'x [Va.] 48 S. E. 505.

2. See 2 Curr. L. 287.

3. Promoters of a scheme to consolidate certain corporations rendered services under an agreement that their compensation was contingent on performance of certain conditions not performed. Fry v. Miles [N. J. Err. & App.] 59 A. 246. Where evidence as to the terms of an express contract was conflicting, it was error to submit the right to recover under a quasi contract. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51. Evidence held to show that one had a cause of action as assignee of a mortgage and not for money paid for the benefit of a decedent at his request. In re Devries' Estate [Neb.] 97 N. W. 590. In an action for the value of steam furnished, evidence held to show that there was an express contract under which it was furnished. Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 A. 384.

4. Baumann v. Manhattan Consumers' Brew. Co., 97 App. Div. 470, 89 N. Y. S. 1088.

accepted by the defendant;[5] and where an express contract is fully executed, except the payment of the stipulated price, assumpsit can be maintained to recover it.[6] There is no implied promise to pay for extra labor and materials furnished under an express contract.[7]

Under unfinished contract.[8]—Where services are rendered under an express contract and the person receiving the benefit fails to comply with its terms[9] or terminates it by wrongful discharge[10] or by revocation of authority to act under it,[11] the law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of services rendered providing such services were to have been compensated.[12] Where an express contract is terminated by death, only the reasonable value of services rendered under it can be recovered.[13]

Services by member of family.[14]—The law does not imply a contract to pay for services rendered to each other by members of a family living as one household,[15] unless the presumption that such services are gratuitous is rebutted by the character of previous transactions between the parties.[16]

Under contracts within the statute of frauds.[17]—The reasonable value of services rendered under an oral contract, within the statute of frauds may be recovered,[18] unless the right, in the specific instance, is denied by the statute.[19]

Unconscionable contract.—The law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of services rendered under an unconscionable contract.[20]

Amount of recovery.[21]—Only what the services were reasonably worth can be recovered.[22] There can be no recovery without proof of the reasonable value[23] and

5. In an action on a contract where a complaint contains the common counts, if it appear that the defendant accepted the work and it was beneficial, a recovery may be had for the value of the work and materials furnished even though it appear that the contract was not performed. Matthews v. Farrell [Ala.] 37 So. 325.

6. Wilson v. Wilson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 711.

7. Where the defendant testified that he had not authorized extra work nor agreed to pay for it, an instruction that recovery therefor could be had was erroneous. Williamson v. Smith & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 51.

8. See 2 Curr. L. 288.

9. Breach of contract to provide for an adopted child by will. Clark v. West, 96 Tex. 437, 73 S. W. 797. Where contrary to her promise a testatrix failed to make provision in her will for services rendered. Bair v. Hager, 97 App. Div. 358, 90 N. Y. S. 27.

11. Real estate brokers were to have commissions on rents collected for premises rented. After they rented the premises the owner revoked their authority. New Kanawha Coal & Min. Co. v. Wright [Ind.] 72 N. E. 550. Complaint held sufficient. Id.

12. On breach of a contract by the terms of which one was to do certain work for nothing in consideration of being allowed to do other work for the prestige it would give his business, a recovery on a quantum meruit cannot be had for the first work performed without proof that the prestige to be gained would be of value. Kaufman Advertising Agency v. Snellenburgh, 43 Misc. 317, 88 N. Y. S. 199.

13. Attorney died before completing the contract under which he was employed. Johnston v. Bernalillo County Com'rs [N. M.] 78 P. 43.

14. See 2 Curr. L. 289.

15. Between parent and child there can be no recovery by the child for services rendered in the absence of an express contract. Meyers v. Meyers [Ala.] 37 So. 451.

16. Parties always dealt with each other as debtor and creditor. Waldron v. Davis [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 293. Where a son contracted to care for his father during the last years of his life, the son's wife can recover from the father's estate for extra services, made necessary by his weakness. Durr v. character of the services rendered,[24] the burden of which must be sustained by one seeking to recover.[25]

§ 3. Moneys had and received and money paid.[26]—Where one has in his possession money which belongs to another[27] and which in equity and good conscience he has no right to retain,[28] it may be recovered by the owner. The manner in which it was received by him is immaterial,[29] but there must be such a privity that the law will imply a promise,[30] and where he received it from a third person, such third person must have stood, toward the party entitled, in a fiduciary capacity.[31] Where one pays money for the use of another[32] or at his request,[33] there is an implied promise that it will be repaid, but not where money is expended for another's benefit without his request.[34] A subsequent promise to repay money paid by another for one's benefit is not equivalent to a previous request.[35]

24. Sayers v. Crane [Mo. App.], 81 S. W. 473. Evidence that testatrix wore silk tea gowns and dresses that required a great deal of laundering is admissible to show the character and extent of services rendered. Id.

25. Value of labor performed. La Cagnina v. Kelly, 88 N. Y. S. 389. Amount of work done. McKnight v. Newell, 207 Pa. 562, 57 A. 39. Where plaintiff introduced no evidence of the value of his services, he was entitled to judgment for the amount defendant suggested was the reasonable value. Mulligan v. Tobin, 87 N. Y. S. 406. One suing for labor and material must show that they were furnished under a contract requiring the defendant to pay for them. Morrill & W. Const. Co. v. Boston [Mass.] 71 N. E. 550.

27. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Burke, 102 Va. 643, 47 S. E. 824. Money forwarded to a purchasing factor not used by him in purchasing goods. Carsey & Co. v. Farmer, 25 Ky. L. R. 1965, 79 S. W. 245. Where money was given to a woman as a wedding present and she returned it to the donor under an agreement that it should be returned to her on demand. Kaufman v. Rosenshine, 97 App. Div. 514, 90 N. Y. S. 205. Where a trustee of a partnership paid to a creditor an amount in excess of his claim, a partner who had made payments on such claim from personal funds could recover. Langhorne v. McGhee [Va.] 49 S. E. 44. Where a debtor gave his creditor's agent a check for an amount exceeding the debt and accepted the agent's personal check for the difference and such check was dishonored. Rines v. New York & B. Brew. Co., 90 N. Y. S. 362. Money paid to another for a certain purpose and by him used to promote his own interests. Empire Mill. & Min. Co. v. Tombstone Mill. & Min. Co., 131 F. 339. Where a receiver pays an attorney the sum allowed by the court for his services, there is an implied promise to repay any excess should the allowance be reduced by a subsequent adjudication, and hence interest on such excess runs from the time of payment. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. Where one indorsed a check payable to himself because of representations that it had been made payable to him by mistake, he can recover in assumpsit for money had and received without first instituting criminal proceedings though he states in his bill of particulars that the claim was for "cash obtained by false pretenses." Hazard v. Hazard [R. I.] 57 A. 1056. Where a clerk of court paid money in his hands to the attorney of a party to whom it did not belong and the attorney paid it to his client, all three are liable to the true owner whether the act was the result of intention or ignorance of law. Story v. Robertson [Neb.] 98 N. W. 825. Where a taxpayer paid a double assessment he may recover after the abatement. Penobscot Chemical Fibre Co. v. Inhabitants of Bradley [Me.] 59 A. 83.

28. It need not be alleged that one so receiving money agreed to receive it in trust for the true owner. Boos v. Lang [Ind.] 71 N. E. 120.

29. Where a bank credited deposits to an indebted depositor with notice that the funds belonged to another. York v. Farmers' Bank [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 968. If it can be traced into his hands, it is immaterial that it was not received by him in the first instance. Cole v. Bates [Mass.] 72 N. E. 333.

30. There is no privity where one's agent without his authority indorses his checks which are cashed by a banker who receives the money from the banks on which the checks were drawn. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Burke, 102 Va. 643, 47 S. E. 824. Money paid on a judicial order or judgment subsequently set aside cannot be recovered from a third party to whom it has been paid in settlement of a debt. Harrigan v. Gilchrist [Wis.] 99 N. W. 909. A claim due one sentenced to life imprisonment was paid to the guardian of his children. Held, he could not recover from the guardian. Finn v. Adams [Mich.] 101 N. W. 533.

31. One entitled to a bank deposit could not recover where the bank made an invalid payment to the administrator of her husband's estate and he paid it to a legatee. Cole v. Bates [Mass.] 72 N. E. 333.

32. Where one agreed to assume a mortgage on a farm purchased and the incumbrance was larger than that specified in the contract. Wilson v. Wilson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 711.

33. McNerney v. Barnes [Conn.] 58 A. 714. The consideration received by the person for whose benefit the money was paid is immaterial. Id. In an action by one for money paid for the use of another, proof that payment was made by giving a receipt for a debt owed him by the creditor of the

The burden throughout the trial is on one seeking to recover to establish his case,[36] and where a general denial is pleaded, he must show that defendant has received the money.[37]

Money paid on a contract subsequently broken.[38]—There is an implied contract to repay money paid on a contract subsequently rescinded,[39] or broken by the vendor,[40] or terminated by mutual consent of the parties.[41] And where the vendee is not in default, tender of the unpaid purchase price is not a condition precedent to the commencement of the action,[42] but forfeit money paid on a contract[43] or money paid for an option[44] cannot be recovered where the party receiving it is not in default.

A voluntary payment of an illegal claim[45] made with full knowledge of all the facts[46] cannot be recovered, unless so provided by statute.[47] This rule does not apply to a payment made to the court through the hand of its officer.[48]

By mistake.[49]—An implied contract arises to repay money paid under a mutual mistake of fact.[50] Municipal corporations come within the operation of this rule,[51] person for whose benefit the money was paid is not a variance from the bill which alleged payment of cash. Id.

34. Where one who was to take title to land in trust for another paid for an abstract and advice of counsel. Lucia v. Adams [Tex. Civ. App.] 82 S. W. 335.

35. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Green, 185 Mass. 306, 70 N. E. 202.

36. Though indorsements show overpayment of a note, the burden is on one seeking to recover such overpayment to establish his case. Gibbs v. Farmers' & M. State Bank, 123 Iowa, 736, 99 N. W. 703.

37. Where a wife had authorized her husband to discount notes, evidence that defendant discounted such notes would not authorize the jury to believe that the husband after receiving the money had deposited with the defendant. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 139 Ala. 578, 36 So. 707.

38. See 2 Curr. L. 291.

39. Goods returned because not as warranted. Weil v. Stone [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 698. Evidence of the market value of the goods at time and place of delivery was immaterial. Id.

40. On vendor's breach of contract to convey, purchase money paid can be recovered. Kicks v. State Bank of Lisbon, 12 N. D. 576, 98 N. W. 408.

41. Defendant held not entitled to credit for timber left on land, under a contract whereby plaintiff was to be reimbursed for payment of defendant's debt by timber from such land, in action for difference between amount paid and value of timber cut, it appearing that timber so left was of greater value than that at which it had been placed by the contract. Bennett v. Ryan, 25 Ky. L. R. 1774, 78 S. W. 892.

42. Kicks v. State Bank of Lisbon, 12 N. D. 576, 98 N. W. 408.

Payment of an invalid lien so that a loan could be negotiated is voluntary. Neufeld v. New York, 93 App. Div. 591, 87 N. Y. S. 900. Money paid for excessive publication of an election proclamation. Vindicator Printing Co. v. State, 68 Ohio St. 362, 67 N. E. 733. Where payment for medical services was made to one who was not a physician, it could not be recovered back without proof that the payee falsely represented himself to be a physician and had thereby induced his employment. Gaither v. Lindsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 225. Payment for a permit to construct a vault, such permit not being required. Wolff v. New York, 92 App. Div. 449, 87 N. Y. S. 214.

Note: Illegal taxes if paid under protest may be recovered back (Gebhart v. East Saginaw, 40 Mich. 336; Stephens v. Danials, 27 Ohio St. 527; Hersey v. Barron, 37 Wis. 75; North Carolina R. Co. v. Alamance, 77 N. C. 4), or if payment is made in ignorance of their illegality (Newport v. Ringo [Ky.] 10 S. W. 2).—From note to State v. Nelson [Minn.] 4 L. R. A. 300.

46. Payment of usurious interest. Beach v. Guaranty Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 44 Or. 530, 76 P. 16. Where there is no evidence of an usurious agreement, interest in excess of the legal rate, voluntarily paid by a borrower cannot be credited on the principal, but payment of notes can be resisted until the question of usury is determined. Bosworth v. Kinghorn, 94 App. Div. 187, 87 N. Y. S. 983. Payment of void assessment cannot be recovered until assessment is set aside. McCall v. Rochester, 44 Misc. 129, 89 N. Y. S. 766.

47. 93 Ohio Laws, p. 408, clothes the prosecuting attorney with power to recover money illegally drawn from the treasurer. Vindicator Print. Co. v. State, 68 Ohio St. 362, 67 N. E. 733.

48. Borrowing member of an insolvent building association paid an amount in excess of his debt to the receiver. People v. New York Bldg. Loan Banking Co., 45 Misc. 4, 90 N. Y. S. 809. Expenses of proceedings to recover should be borne by the borrowing member. Id.

49. See 2 Curr. L. 291.

50. Where one made a double payment for services rendered without knowing at the time of the second payment that payment had already been made. Phelps, Dodge & Co. v. Miller [Tex. Civ. App.] 83 S. W. 218. Where the only question was whether money sought but the rule has no application where money of a municipality has been paid out in violation of law of which the payee had full notice;[52] for payments made under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back[53] unless otherwise provided by statute.[54] This rule is not followed in Kentucky where one receiving money cannot, in good conscience, retain it.[55]

Illegal contracts.[56]—Money placed in the hands of another for an illegal purpose cannot be recovered,[57] but otherwise where the party repents of his unlawful design before it is carried into effect.[58]

Loans.[59]—Where money is loaned, an express promise for its repayment is necessarily inferred from the nature of the transaction.[60]

§ 4. Use and occupation.[61]—Where one occupies lands of another, the owner is entitled to recover for their use,[62] and the occupant for the value of his improvements.[63] An action for use and occupation cannot be maintained unless the rela-to be recovered was a duplicate payment or had been paid for services not covered by the prior payment, it was immaterial whether defendant had been paid too much or too little. Id. Where debtor made a double payment to his creditor it is only necessary for him to demand the repayment before bringing action. Johnson v. Saum, 123 Iowa, 145, 98 N. W. 599. Overpayment as result of mutual mistake as to the quantity of land conveyed at a certain price per acre, though the deed recited a lump sum as the consideration. Butt v. Smith [Wis.] 99 N. W. 328. Neither the doctrine of voluntary payment (Civ. Code 1895, § 3732), nor the rule of caveat emptor, is applicable in case of overpayment due to a mistake as to the weight of cotton purchased. McRae Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Stone, 119 Ga. 516, 46 S. E. 668. Evidence that the vendor did not consent that the cotton bought should be reweighed was irrelevant. Id. A payment of a subscription prior to the performance of conditions on which it was to become due raises an implied promise to repay if such conditions are never performed. This is not a payment under a mistake of law. Larrimer v. Murphy [Ark.] 82 S. W. 168. Bank cashed a draft on an incorrect advice slip from its New York correspondent. First Nat. Bank v. Edwards [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 541.

tion of landlord and tenant exists between owner and occupant.[64] Recovery cannot be had for use and occupation the right to which was expressly reserved in a conveyance of the premises.[65] Only the reasonable value of the use and occupation can be recovered.[66]

§ 5. Torts which may be waived and sued as implied contracts.[67]—Where one's property has been converted by another, he may waive the tort and maintain an action on the implied contract,[68] but where the only wrongful act is a direct and forcible intrusion, the tort cannot be waived.[69]

§ 6. Remedies and procedure.[70]—Recovery on an implied contract cannot be had in an action for tort.[71] A count for money paid must allege that it was paid at defendant's request.[72] In an action to recover on an express promise, evidence of the reasonable value of services is admissible against the event of failure to prove the promise.[73] Limitations do not commence to run until the right to recover has accrued,[74] and where by mutual agreement payment for services was to be deferred until the death of the employer, limitations did not commence to run until his death.[75]

INCEST.

Though the statute defines incest as "fornication or adultery" by persons related within the specified degree, it is incest if the intercourse be accomplished by force.[76] A statute not requiring that the parties know of the relationship is valid.[77]

An information alleging "sexual intercourse" instead of the statutory words "fornication or adultery" is good.[78] Knowledge of the relationship by the parties when not required by statute need not be alleged.[79]

Evidence.[80]—If the intercourse be accomplished by force, the female is not an accomplice,[81] but if she consents, conviction cannot be had on her uncorroborated testimony,[82] and it is enough that she made no objection, though she was not actu-

INCOMPETENCY.

§ 1. Mental Weakness Sufficient to Constitute Incapacity (1696).
§ 2. Effect of Incompetency on Contracts (1697).
§ 3. Remedies and Procedure (1697).

Scope of topic.—This topic treats only of incompetency to contract. Competency to execute a will is treated elsewhere.[89]

§ 1. Mental weakness sufficient to constitute incapacity[90] must be such that one is rendered incapable of understanding in a reasonable degree the nature and consequences of his acts.[91] Mere mental weakness,[92] excessive use of intoxicating liquors,[93] or old age,[94] does not per se render one incompetent, unless his mind is in such condition that he does not comprehend the nature or effect of his acts.[95] The fact that a party's mind was impaired by drugs does not invalidate the contract if it be not inequitable,[96] but one in a confused and stupid mental condition may be incompetent.[97] The question as to whether a person is competent is generally for the jury.[98] That a contract entered into was inequitable is evidence of incompetency.[99] Certificate of acknowledgment is no evidence of grantor's mental capacity.[1]

§ 2. Effect of incompetency on contracts.[2]—A contract entered into by an incompetent is void.[3]

§ 3. Remedies and procedure.[4]—Until one is finally adjudged incompetent, he may maintain an action in his own name.[5] An incompetent suing to avoid a deed made to one without notice of his incapacity, must as a condition precedent to relief, return the consideration.[6] One who was a party when an incompetent executed a deed is estopped from questioning its validity.[7]

INDECENCY, LEWDNESS AND OBSCENITY.[8]

Prostitution.[9]—"Living a life of prostitution" means habitually engaging in such occupation.[10] To authorize commitment to the reformatory as a prostitute, the woman must be charged as such and not as a vagrant,[11] and a city magistrate has no jurisdiction.[12] Statutes in several states make criminal connivance at prostitution or living off the earnings of a prostitute, and such statutes are valid.[13] An indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient.[14]

Obscene words or publications.[15]—Words not obscene in their ordinary acceptation will not sustain a conviction where no secondary meaning is alleged and proved.[16] An indictment for use of obscene words is not demurrable because it sets forth additional words not obscene used in the same conversation.[17] Proof of posting obscene pictures on an outhouse near a dwelling is fatally variant from an allegation that they were posted on the dwelling.[18]

Indecent exposure.[19]—It is not necessary that the exposure be in fact seen by any one if it be made in a public place.[20] That the female in whose presence the exposure was made consented thereto is no defense.[21] An indictment alleging an indecent exposure in a public place in the presence of a certain female is sufficient.[22]

Lascivious conduct.[23]—One may be guilty of attempting the crime of lewd acts on the body of a child.[24] The offense of lascivious cohabitation requires not only a cohabitation apparently matrimonial but lewd and lascivious intercourse between the parties.[25]

§ 6. Measure of Recovery (1702).

§ 1. Definition and distinctions.[26]—A contract of indemnity is an independent and not a collateral undertaking[27] and may thus be distinguished from guaranty.[28] A contract of indemnity is to reimburse one for a loss; a contract of warranty asserts the existence of certain conditions.[29] Where the indemnity is given against a class of casualties or for protection of specific property, it is generally called insurance.[30] The cases treating of the equitable right of indemnity as between co-obligors will be found in their appropriate titles.[31] Forthcoming and other bonds, though closely allied to indemnity, are treated elsewhere.[32]

§ 2. The contract. Requisites and validity.[33]—Generally a statutory bond of indemnity is sufficient if it is a valid common-law obligation.[34] A valuable consideration[35] and a legal object[36] are essential to the validity of the contract.

NOTE. Validity of object: If the act threatened or agreed to be done is known at the time to be wrongful or unlawful, any promise of indemnity, whether express or implied, is illegal, but if this is not known at the time and the act is seemingly lawful, the bond of indemnity is valid, or, in other words, if the act indemnified against is apparently right and in furtherance of a legal claim, and the officer is ignorant of the fact that he is committing a wrong, the indemnity is valid. Indemnity for acts apparently right, or not apparently wrong, is valid, where the means employed are not in themselves criminal and are not known by the officer employed to be wrongful, though they work a trespass on the rights of a third person. Ives v. Jones, 25 N. C. (3 Ired.) 538, 40 Am. Dec. 421.—From note to Ray v. McDevitt [Mich.] 85 Am. St. Rep. 548, 554.

An indemnity bond given an officer after an illegal levy is enforceable against the sureties.[37] Where the bond recites a consideration, no notice of its acceptance is necessary in order to bind the indemnitor.[38] An indemnitor assenting to the assignment of an unassignable indemnity contract is bound to the assignee.[39] One having no knowledge of a private agreement has a right to rely on the bond as it is given to him by an agent of the indemnitor.[40]

§ 3. Interpretation and effect of contract.[41]—In the construction of the contract, the intention of the parties governs,[42] and in order to ascertain this intention, the contract should be construed in connection with recitals of its purpose and object,[43] with the correspondence between the parties,[44] and, being given under order of a court, with such order.[45] The contract being prepared by the indemnitor it should be most strongly construed against him.[46] A qualifying phrase is to be confined to the last antecedent unless there is something in the instrument which requires a different construction.[47] Renewals are generally held to be separate and distinct contracts.[48] The bond of an officer of a corporation is a continuing obligation only so long as he legally holds under his election. Reelection does not keep the bond alive.[49] In order that recovery may be had on

48. So held where the bond read: the indemnitor will make good any loss "occurring during the continuance of this bond or any renewal thereof." Proctor Coal Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 124 F. 424.

49. Defendant was elected cashier of bank for one year, and gave a bond reciting that he had been "chosen and appointed," without any reference to the time or term for which he had been chosen. The condition of the bond was that he should fulfill the duties of the office "during his continuance in office." Held bond did not cover a second term of office, he being re-elected. Blades v. Dewey [N. C.] 48 S. E. 627. Bond for faithful performance of his duty by an officer of a corporation whose term of office was prescribed, construed to cover only such term. North St. Louis Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Obert, 169 Mo. 507, 69 S. W. 1044.

Note: A bond running "during continuance in office" of a cashier of a bank elected for one year was held to be restricted by a recital in the by-laws of the bank, referring to the appointment for one year and that the sureties were not liable for the eleven succeeding years of his office. Blades v. Dewey [N. C.] 48 S. E. 627. In a note in V Colum. L. R. 169, it is said: "A fidelity bond is to be interpreted by the same rules as are applicable to any other written agreements. § 4. Actions on contract.—Formal notice of the default is not generally necessary before bringing suit on the bond,[53] and the principal being sued he need not notify his indemnitor if the latter has knowledge of the pendency of the action.[54] Action on a bond running to a county may generally be brought in the county treasurer's name.[55] The indemnitor and his sureties may be joined in one action.[56] The complaint should allege all necessary and material facts tending to show that plaintiff's cause of action is on the bond in suit, and has accrued.[57] As a general rule a release must be specially pleaded.[58]

The proof must show a liability within the terms of the indemnity agreement.[59] Evidence of amount passed is admissible if it tends to show the real

NOTE. Where notice of suit is not given judgment prima facie evidence only: Where a person enters into a covenant of general indemnity merely against claims and suits, a want of notice to him of the suit brought against his principal does not go to the cause of action, but the judgment rendered therein is prima facie evidence only in an action against such indemnitor, and he may be let in to show that the principal had a good defense which he neglected to make. terms of the agreement.[60] The books of a bank are competent to show its cashier's embezzlement, and the amount thereof.[61] Testimony not dealing with the default in question is immaterial.[62]

§ 5. Defenses.[63]—Payment[64] or fraudulent misrepresentations in the application[65] are good defenses. In the absence of an estoppel,[66] any material change in the principal's contract, made without the indemnitor's consent, releases the latter from liability.[67] The assignment[68] or failure to demand performance[69] of the contract secured by the bond is no defense to the obligee's action, no prejudice being shown. The indemnitee having knowledge of the wrongful acts of the bonded party must notify the indemnitor,[70] but good faith is all that is required of the indemnitee.[71] Immediate notice means within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time is a question for the jury.[72] An indemnitor being released by act of the parties he is under no obligation to speak in order to take advantage of the release.[73] All reasonable and legal conditions in the contract must be complied with,[74] though an indemnitor may waive those inserted for his protection.[75] Neither the contingent liability of a principal on an indemnity bond[76] nor the liabilities of the sureties thereon[77] are affected by the principal's discharge in bankruptcy. Acts of ordinary agents or employes of the indemnified corporation, conniving at or co-operating with the wrongful act of the bonded employe, will not be imputed to the corporation.[78] A public service corporation giving a bond to indemnify city for any loss sustained through the operations of the former, the question of the company's negligence is immaterial.[79] A street railway company agreeing to indemnify city for injuries resulting from the former's failure to repair, the fact that the tracks were constructed according to requirements is no defense.[80] A surety upon the bond of an officer is not liable for a wrong done by the latter under circumstances where the law does not impose upon him a duty to act.[81] That public money is illegally deposited in a bank is no defense to an action on the bond of the latter.[82] Estoppel may bar one's recovery.[83] Limitation begins to run against the sureties on a fidelity bond the instant a fraudulent misappropriation of funds is made by the principal.[84]

Owning and operating companies having a common manager and the same stock ownership are identical so far as liability for servants of the operating company goes.[97] The owning company is liable for negligence of repairers operating under immediate supervision of one of the officers of the operating company[98] charged to inspect and know about the particular machinery.[99]

If the principal bear a duty to guard against the thing which happened, both are liable.[1]

Mere supervision[2] or a reservation of the right of inspection[3] or of the right to demand the dismissal of objectionable employes[4] does not make the relation dependent. The principal is liable if he assumes control of operations,[5] or if he

An exception to the general rule of nonliability exists whenever an absolute duty is imposed on the principal from the breach of which the injury results: See cases collated in exhaustive note to City of Anderson v. Fleming, 66 L. R. A. 119 [officially reported 160 Ind. 597]. In this case the duty of the city to keep the street safe was held to be absolute but the contractor having agreed to keep it so, a judgment in his favor was held conclusive in favor of the city.

Note: A like principle was applied in Chicago Economic F. Gas. Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 139, cited 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2nd Ed.] 187. In that case the accident occurred by the negligence of a construction company whose corporate existence was wholly within and subsidiary to a gas company. The construction company was held not to be independent.

5. Evidence held not to show that foreman merely directing that scaffold should be supplies defective means for doing work.[6] Stipulations in the contract against the use of dangerous means may be neutralized by provisions for supervision,[7] the latter provision operating to take away the contractor's independence[8] and imposing a duty to see that they are not used except as agreed.[9]

An independent contractor may be paid by the day or week.[10] It is not necessary that the principal be liable on the contractor's contracts in order to become a master.[11] By substituting a contractual for a legal duty the principal may be discharged except from breach of the contract.[12] When a principal and his contractor are sued for negligently undermining lateral support and the proof is that the injury was due to the contractor's breach of contract with the injured person to "shore up," the contractor is not liable.[13]

It is for the court to say what effect the contract has,[14] and for the jury to say what should have been anticipated,[15] and what caused injury.[16] If there is any evidence that the injury might have been due to an independent contractor's default, it must properly charge the jury.[17]

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS UNDER EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS.*

[SPECIAL ARTICLE.]

An independent contractor is a person employed to do certain work for another according to his own methods and discretion, being accountable to his employer only for the results.

He is not a servant to whom the act applies.

An independent contractor is one who, having generally an independent trade or employment of his own, enters into a contract with another to do a certain piece of work under specified conditions, but according to his own methods and under his own direction, being responsible to his employer only for the results. The line which distinguishes him from the servant is that the details of the work are not subject to his employer's direction and control.[18] The relation of master and built controlled the building of it. Wingert v. Krakauer, 92 App. Div. 223, 87 N. Y. S. 261.

6. Not obliged to keep appliances furnished and originally good in good repair. Rope wore out in use. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Bailey's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 973, 76 S. W. 842.

10. Delivery contractor paid weekly. John's Adm'r v. McKnight & Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1758, 78 S. W. 862. See 2 Curr. L. 303, n. 2.

17. Part of obstructions in street causing accident were there by his fault, part by another's. Green v. Soule [Cal.] 78 P. 337.

18. "If the person employed to do the work carries on an independent employment and acts in pursuance of a contract with his employer by which he has agreed to do the work on certain specified terms, in a particular manner, and for a specified price, then the employer is not liable. The relation of master and servant does not subsist between the parties, but only that of contractor and contractee. The power of directing and controlling the work is parted with by the employer, and given to the contractor. But on the other hand, if work is done under a general employment, and is to be performed for a reasonable compensation or for a stipulated price, the employer remains liable, because he retains the right and power of directing and controlling the time and manner of executing the work, or of refraining from doing it, if he deems it necessary or expedient." Conners v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703; Atlantic Transport Co. v. Conveys [C. C. A.] 82 F. 177; Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615; Lawrence v. Shipman, 39 Conn. 586; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696; Stephen v. Thurso Police Com'rs, 3 Rettie, Ct. Sess. Cas. (4th Ser.) 535, 542.

"If there is a contract between them so that the person doing the work or doing servant does not exist between them, and the employer consequently is not liable for the acts of his contractor, unless he personally interferes in the conduct of the work, or has employed an incompetent contractor, or the nature of the work to be done is unlawful or creates a nuisance,[19] or entails a specific duty.[20]

The servants of an independent contractor are not servants of the employer nor fellow-servants of those engaged by him; and this is true although the employer in his contract may have stipulated for the right to discharge the servants of the contractor. The employer is not liable for any negligence of the contractor or of any of his servants.[21] But he owes to the servants of the contractor the same duty that he owes to persons rightfully on his premises, and for an injury caused by his negligence or the negligence of his servants in regard to the premises or appliances furnished by him they may hold him responsible.[22]

Since the independent contractor or his servants are not at common law the servants of the employer, the latter is not liable for the negligence of any of them under the acts of England, Alabama, or Indiana.[23] The acts of Massachusetts and Colorado contain the special provision that whenever an employer enters into a written or verbal contract with an independent contractor to do part of the employer's work, or such contractor makes a subcontract, such contract or subcontract shall not bar the liability of the employer for injuries to the employes of such contractor or subcontractor by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery, or plant, if they are the property of the employer or furnished by him, and if such defect arose or had not been discovered or remedied through the negligence of the employer, or of some person intrusted by him with the duty of seeing that they were in proper condition.[24]

Under this section the servant of an independent contractor may recover from the employer for injuries received through the instrumentalities furnished by the act complained of has a right to say to the employer, 'I will agree to do it, but I shall do it after my own fashion; I shall begin the wall at this end and not at the other,' then the relation of master and servant does not exist, and the employer is not liable. But if the employer has a right to say to the person employed, 'You shall do it in this way; that is to say, not only shall you do it by virtue of your agreement with me, but you shall do it as I direct you to do it,' then the law of master and servant applies, and the master is responsible." the employer for the contractor's use.[25] It does not enlarge the liability of the employer at common law in such a case. It has not given the servant of an independent contractor the right to recover against the employer for the negligence of the contractor himself or of his other servants.[26] It has not made the servant of the contractor a servant of the employer or treated him as such, and therefore such a one cannot have the benefit of any of the other provisions of the act, either those relating to the action in case of the death of a servant or to damages, since the act applies only to whom the common law has said are servants.[27]

powering Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation to bring suits in the court of claims to determine their contractual rights in Cherokee Nation lands and funds did not authorize inquiry into legislation of the Cherokee Nation.[38] Chickasaw freedmen whom the United States has not removed from the Chickasaw Nation in compliance with the treaty of July 10, 1866, are not entitled to share as beneficiaries in the fund held in trust by the United States under such treaty.[39]

§ 4. Indian lands and properties.[40] Nature of title.[41]—Generally they acquire only a qualified interest in property allotted to them and the fact that they subsequently become citizens does not alter the character of their title,[42] but so long as they fulfill the conditions under which they acquired their rights, the property is not subject to the control of congress or the executive branch of the government.[43] Reservation to Indians in a treaty, unless qualified or impliedly restricted, is equivalent to a grant in fee simple.[44] Lands held with full power of alienation are taxable.[45] The United States has a right to protect the conditional ownership of Indians in property allotted to them,[46] and this right cannot be affected by state laws.[47]

Allotments.[48]—Under the Curtis bill, a citizen in possession of only such amount of land as would be his just share of the lands of his nation may continue to use it or receive the rents thereof until allotment.[49] Actual residence on the Umatilla reservation at the time of the passage of the allotment act of March 3, 1885, is not essential to the right to an allotment by a member of one of the confederated tribes enumerated in the act.[50] After the right to an allotment has attached, the act of the allotting commissioners in wrongfully allotting the lands to another does not cut off the rights of the Indian entitled,[51] and the right to an original selection cannot be lost by making another selection under the advice of the Indian agent that rights of the first would not be affected;[52] but where land to which the husband is entitled is allotted to him and his squaw in severalty because of her false representation that she is not his wife, he cannot after obtaining a divorce recover the tract allotted to her.[53]

any law or treaty, is exclusive, but the United States must be made a party.[54] Under the Act of August 15, 1885, providing that a decree in favor of any claimant to an allotment should have the same effect as an allotment allowed by the secretary of the interior the United States is not a necessary party to an action to determine the respective rights of two Indians to an allotment under this act.[55] Under the Act of August 15, 1894, authorizing Indians claiming to be entitled to an allotment to prosecute an action relative to their right in the Federal court, an Indian claiming the right to an allotment under the Act of March 3, 1885, may maintain an action to have canceled an improper allotment.[56]

Leases.[57]—Unless the privilege is accorded by the terms of the appropriation act,[58] Indian lands cannot be leased without the consent of the Indian agent or congressional authority,[59] and where the lessee was not in possession of the land or crops at the time they were taken by the allottee, he was not entitled to them on the ground of possessory title.[60] The natural guardian of a minor Indian has no power without an order from the court to lease land allotted to his ward.[61] Leases of agricultural Indian land being declared void by the Act of June 28, 1898, a lessee could not, after such act went into effect, maintain unlawful detainer against his subtenant holding over.[62] After the passage of this act, a sublessee may deny the title of the person under whom he entered.[63]

Actions against intruders.[64]—The United States courts in the Indian Territory have jurisdiction of an action of ejectment by an Indian to recover land from an intruder.[65] Under the act giving the commission of the five civilized tribes jurisdiction to determine all matters relating to the allotment of land, the courts of Indian Territory have jurisdiction of ejectment by an Indian to recover lands not allotted.[66] Act June 28, 1898, requires notice to be given an intruder before action commenced to dispossess him. Notice given by a member of the tribe who originally brought the action is sufficient though the nation afterward joined and was made a party.[67] Such an action is primarily based on the right of the tribe and it may be substituted as plaintiff and the original plaintiff stricken out.[68] A complaint under this act is a "sworn complaint" if verified by the authorized attorney of the plaintiff tribe.[69] The intruder must plead the value of his improvements or it cannot be set off against the damages awarded.[70] Where a member of a tribe dispossesses an intruder under Act June 28, 1898, and wrongfully

Descent of title.—The title of an allottee descends according to the law prescribed.[72] Land allotted under the Act of March 3, 1885, descends according to the state laws from the time the first patent is issued.[73] On the death of an allottee after issuance of the first patent the state courts have jurisdiction to determine who are his heirs.[74] Under the Act of 1894, the United States circuit court has jurisdiction of a suit involving the descent of an allotment under an act providing that the lands allotted should be held in trust by the United States.[75]

§ 5. Rights and liabilities of other persons in Indian country dealing with Indians.[76]—An Indian nation has the right to control the presence within its territory of persons who might otherwise be regarded as intruders.[77] Under the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1855, these nations are authorized to require a license of traders doing business within their territory.[78] Under the treaty of 1856 with the Creek Indians, a tax collector for the Creek Nation, acting under the direction of the secretary of the interior may close the places of business of intruders within the nation who are trading without a license.[79] The executive department has power to enforce the terms of a treaty and it is not within the jurisdiction of the courts to enjoin the discharge of such duty.[80]
