TOPICAL INDEX.

Use the index in your latest number. Ignore all previous indexes in volumes and numbers. The latest index cites by volume and page to the latest treatment of any subject.

You do not have to study classification for this index contains the name of every subject you are familiar with and not merely the titles of our articles.

The page citation at the beginning of each article directs to the particular subdivision wanted. There you find its latest treatment and also a volume and page citation to the same points in earlier volumes.

Black figures refer to volumes; light figures to pages.

This index is revised and reprinted every month. Remember to start with the latest index and you cannot go astray or miss anything.

VOLUME III. SEPTEMBER, 1904. NUMBER 1.

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

§ 1. Causes for Abatement (1).
§ 2. Raising Objections; Waiver (8).
§ 3. Survivability of Causes of Action (10).
§ 4. Revival and Continuation (10).

Scope.—It is not attempted here to treat of criminal prosecutions,[1] nor of bills of revivor,[2] or revival of judgments,[3] or of statute barred causes of action.[4] Various writs are abatable for defects, which matters are not germane to this title.[5]

§ 1. Causes for abatement.[6]—The pendency of another action between the same parties,[7] and for the same cause,[8] and prior in time,[9] is ground for abatement.

1. Indictment and Prosecution, 2 Curr. L. 307.
2. Equity, 1 Curr. L. 1066, et seq.
3. Judgments, 2 Curr. L. 598.
4. Limitation of Actions, 2 Curr. L. 757.
5. Attachment and like titles.
6. See 1 Curr. L. 1.
7. Where a party is plaintiff in one action and defendant in a subsequent one relating to the same subject-matter in which she sets up in defense the same matters she alleged in her complaint, a plea of prior action pending is not available as against the defense. Rodney v. Gibbs [Mo.] 82 S. W. 187. The pendency of a prior action between the same parties is ground for abatement. Cahill v. Cahill [Conn.] 57 A. 284. It is between the same parties when the defendant is the successor in interest of the defendant in the former suit. Wetzstein v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 28 Mont. 451, 72 P. 865. The issues in a suit in partition were identical and the real parties in interest the same, though in the later case the plaintiff had joined some nominal parties. Guinn v. Elliott [Iowa] 98 N. W. 625. The pendency of an appeal by a creditor from a judgment in favor of a garnishee is not ground for abatement of an action brought in the same court against the garnishee by the debtor, but such action should be postponed until the appeal is decided (Rieden v. Kothman [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 425); nor can a suit by an administrator be pleaded in abatement to a suit by the heirs under circumstances of this case (Row v. Johnson, 25 Ky. L. R. 1799, 78 S. W. 906).
8. Where one had filed an intervening petition asking to have claims allowed out of the assets in the hands of a receiver, and after an order of the court so directing, creditors brought suit in a state court therefor, and then filed a supplemental intervening petition asking that their claim be declared a preferential one, one suit could not be pleaded in abatement to the other. Trimble v. Kansas City P. & G. R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 678. Pendency of a suit by an executrix on a benefit insurance policy, claiming that children of the insured were entitled to all the insurance and making defendants others named as beneficiaries, and claiming part of the insurance, does not prevent such others from maintaining an original bill, especially where after the death of the insured they had assigned a part of their claim to a third party not made a party defendant by the testatrix. Clement v. Clement [Tenn.] 81 S. W. 1249. The pendency of a suit to enjoin the removal of ore from a mining claim as ancillary to an action of ejectment to recover possession of the part from which the ore was being taken is not a bar to a suit to quiet title to the entire claim, including extralateral rights not in controversy in. the prior action. Empire State-Idaho Min. & D. Co. v. Bunker Hill & S. M. & C. Co. [C. C. A.] 121 F. 973. Administratrix sued for a lien, and the heirs to be adjudged the owners, not the same cause. Row v. Johnson, 25 Ky. L. R. 1799, 78 S. W. 906. An action for libel pending against a party for a publication on a certain day will not abate the entire action against another for the same publication on the same and other days. Holmes v. Clisby, 118 Ga. 820, 45 S. E. 684. Action to foreclose a mortgage and an action in ejectment. Howard v. Hewitt, 139 Cal. 614, 73 P. 414. Action by an agent for value of services no bar to an action by the principal for an accounting. Jordan v. Underhill, 91 App. Div. 124, 86 N. Y. S. 620. An action for unexcused neglect to present a will to probate no bar to an action for unexcused neglect to accept the trust or give notice of his refusal to accept. Richardson v. Fletcher [Vt.] 56 A. 981. Where misconduct is set up as a counterclaim in an action for services, it cannot be used again as to different items in a subsequent action on the judgment rendered therein. Newman v. Gates [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 468. The pendency of an action commenced by a testator to enjoin the operation of an elevated railroad in front of his premises is no bar to a suit by a testator's devisee for injunctive relief and the recovery of damages sustained since he acquired title. Hirsh v. Manhattan R. Co., 84 App. Div. [N. Y.] 374, 13 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 158, 82 N. Y. S. 754. An action by a minor to

They must be so far identical that a recovery in one action would bar a recovery in the other,[10] or the proof in one would sustain the other.[11]

In Oregon, an action is pending after the complaint is filed.[12] The mere fact that a summons has been served,[13] or that an action has been begun in which there are several co-defendants,[14] does not show a pendency,[15] but an action is still pending, though appealed.[16] Real actions are pending, though a party has died.[17] If discontinued or otherwise terminated, the suit or action is no longer pending,[18] but recover his homestead interest is not abated because of an action pending by his mother to recover her rights. Upton v. Gerber [Mich.] 98 N. W. 854. A pending suit against legatees and creditors of an estate for settlement of the estate in which deceased's agent is made a party in order to dispose of a claim due the agent by the estate cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit by the personal representative of the estate against such agent for an accounting. Causes of action are not identical. Botto's Ex'r v. Botto, 26 Ky. L. R. 2130, 80 S. W. 174. A rule to open judgment held under advisement is a bar to a bill in equity for the same relief. Freeman v. Lafferty, 207 Pa. 32, 66 A. 230. A plea of pendency of an appeal from the vacation of an attachment is no defense to an action on the attachment bond unless coupled with an allegation that there was also a stay of proceedings. Powell v. Bursky, 39 Misc. 633, 39 N. Y. S. 480. Where rights of an insured's children and his executor could not be determined in an action at law brought by the widow on the policy, they having no present right of action, such action was no bar to a suit to cancel the policy for fraud. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971. Where equity has obtained jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter to cancel an insurance policy for fraud, the fact that the insured died before answer, and that an action at law was then commenced on the policy in which all the company's defenses in the equity suit were available, did not deprive equity of jurisdiction to proceed with the controversy. Id. Where insured died after commencement of an action to cancel the policy for fraud but before answer, whereupon an action on the policy was brought, a plea in bar alleging the insured's death and the pendency of such action at law was not available to present the objection that the bill was not sustainable for want of equity. Id. In an action by the administrator de bonis non against the sureties on the bond of the administrator, the defendants by pleading in bar and not in abatement admit the plaintiff's capacity to sue. Romy v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 998. The pendency of an appeal from a judgment against a principal will not abate an action against the surety if the amount of the default could not be found at the time the judgment was rendered. Frazer v. Frazer, 26 Ky. L. R. 473, 76 S. W. 13.

9. The plea of pendency of another action can only be supported by a showing that the former action was pending when the second action was begun. Hirsh v. Manhattan R. Co., 84 App. Div. 374, 13 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 158, 82 N. Y. S. 754.

Where a plea of abatement was filed in each of two actions pending and the suits were each first in point of time as to some of the parties, the last on the docket should be abated (Guinn v. Elliott [Iowa] 98 N. W. 625), or if jurisdiction had not been obtained in one, it should be abated. Where two actions in partition were pending at the same time, but in one of them no jurisdiction had been obtained over a party who had an interest in the land, the plea in abatement in the other suit should have been overruled (Id.).

10. Action on a supersedeas bond not defeated by the pendency of an action in which the damages recoverable on the supersedeas bond were expressly reserved and deducted. Metcalf v. Bockoven [Neb.] 96 N. W. 406. An action is for the same cause if one could have obtained in the former all the relief he claims in this, though extra relief is asked in the latter but the pleading does not state a cause of action therefor. Wetzstein v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 28 Mont. 461, 72 P. 866. An accounting was asked in the second but not in the first. Id. See Former Adjudication, 2 Curr. L. 64, § 3.

11. One filed an application for a patent for a mining claim, the survey of which conflicted with two locations of another who filed an adverse claim on behalf of each and brought a suit in support of each. The survey in the later application conflicted at different points with the two claims. The proof in each case would be different as would the relief. Not pending. Mares v. Dillon [Mont.] 75 P. 963. Where two suits were brought for failure to deliver different messages, a plea in abatement to the latter on the ground of prior action pending was properly overruled. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crumpton, 138 Ala. 632, 36 So. 517.

12. In Oregon, pending when complaint is filed with clerk of court [B. & C. Comp. §§ 51, 396]. Posson v. Guaranty, S. & L. Ass'n [Or.] 74 P. 923.

13. A mere showing that a summons in another action has been served is not sufficient to support the plea of the pendency of another action. Hirsh v. Manhattan R. Co., 84 App. Div. 374, 13 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 158, 82 N. Y. S. 754.

14. Action not pending against a defendant in a partition suit of real estate, not yet served with process, nor against his grantee. Hart v. Hart, 86 App. Div. 236, 83 N. Y. S. 897.

15. As to when an action is commenced, see Actions, and especially Limitations, 2 Curr. L. 755.

16. Tinker v. Babcock, 204 Ill. 571, 68 N. E. 445. An action is pending where it is before the supreme court undetermined. Code Civ. Proc. § 1895, providing that it is pending from commencement until final determination. Wetzstein v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 28 Mont. 451, 72 P. 865.

17. An action for land continues in force as a pending suit after the death of the defendant until lost by the laches of the litigants in failing to make new parties. Jones v. Robb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 395.

18. Johnson v. Central of Georgia R. Co., failure to prosecute an action during the period of the Civil War did not destroy its pendency.[19] The plea is good as to one of several counts.[20]

The pendency of a suit in a state court is not a bar to one on the same cause of action in a Federal court,[21] and diversity of citizenship does not change this rule

119 Ga. 185, 45 S. E. 988. Where a statute gave a creditor the election to charge a stockholder with the amount of the judgment recovered against the corporation on a debt, or to proceed against the stockholder on the debt, a reversal of the judgment after proceedings have been commenced thereon leaves the creditor free to proceed on the debt. Thomas v. Remington Paper Co., 67 Kan. 599, 73 P. 909. Where a bill to foreclose a mortgage was dismissed without prejudice to plaintiff's right to try the validity of a deed, a plea of former suit pending in a subsequent action to set aside the deed cannot be sustained. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Hutson, 198 Ill. 389, 65 N. E. 93. A supplementary intervening petition was an abandonment of the first intervening petition, so it was not pending. Trimble v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 678. While an appeal was pending, a new one was taken and thereafter a motion to dismiss was served by the respondent, but on oral argument the appellant's counsel stated that they abandoned the first appeal: the prosecution of the later appeal was not prevented. Noble v. Whitten [Wash.] 76 P. 95.

19. Failure to press suit between 1866 and 1870 was, in view of the disturbed conditions then existing, not such negligence as to destroy the force of the action as a pending suit. Jones v. Robb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 395.

20. Where a cause of action set out in a plea in abatement as a bar to an action pending was identical to that part of the case at bar to which the plea was applicable, the plea was sustained. Cornick v. Arthur, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 579, 73 S. W. 410. Where a plea of former action pending is sustained as to one count in a declaration, a review of the order quashing the count may be had after final judgment by writ of error. Upton v. Gerber [Mich.] 98 N. W. 854.

21. Action to enjoin one from making brick in violation of his contract not to do so. Robinson v. Suburban Brick Co. [C. C. A.] 127 F. 804. Action under a state statute to wind up a banking corporation does not operate to dissolve the corporation at once, so as to prevent the rendition of a judgment against it in a Federal court. Anglo-American Land M. & A. Co. v. Cheshire Provident Institution, 124 F. 464.

NOTE: Although there is undoubtedly some conflict, the decided weight of authority, as well as the trend of all modern adjudication, is unquestionably in favor of the doctrine stated in the text. Under the great majority of the authorities, it seems to make no difference whether the two courts are sitting in different states, or whether they are held for the same state and within the same territory, or whether such courts are to be considered foreign to each other or not. Among the cases from the national courts which hold that the pendency of proceedings in a state court cannot be pleaded in abatement of an action in a national court, we cite the following: Mercantile Trust Co. v. Lamoille Val. R. Co., 16 Blatchf. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 9,432; Andrews v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 100, 5 F. 833; Chamberlain v. Eckert, 2 Biss. 124, Fed. Cas. No. 2,576; Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Follansbee, 9 Biss. 482, 14 F. 125; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. University of Chicago, 10 Biss. 191, 6 F. 443; In re Binninger, 7 Blatchf. 168, Fed. Cas. No. 1,419; Campbell v. Emmerson, 2 McLean, 30, Fed. Cas. No. 2,357; Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559; Wadleigh v. Veazie, 3 Sumn. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 17,031; Weaver v. Field, 4 Woods, 152, 16 F. 22; Loring v. Marsh, 2 Cliff. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 8,514; Stewart v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co., 4 Hughes, 41, 1 F. 361; Sharon v. Hill, 10 Sawy. 394, 22 F. 28; Parsons v. Greenville & C. R. Co., 1 Hughes, 279, Fed. Cas. No. 10,776; Greenwood v. Rector, Hempst. 708, Fed. Cas. No. 5,792; Union Bank v. Jolly's Adm'rs, 18 How. [U. S.] 503; Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. [U. S.] 170; Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. [U. S.] 136; The Kalorama, 10 Wall. [U. S.] 204; Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall. [U. S.] 659; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548-554; Gordon v. Gilfoil, 99 U. S. 168; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Gomila, 132 U. S. 478; Hughes v. Elsher, 5 F. 263; Latham v. Chafee, 7 F. 520; Crescent City Live Stock, L. & S. H. Co. v. Butcher's Union Live Stock, L. & S. H. Co., 12 F. 225; Currie v. Lewiston, 15 F. 377; Weaver v. Field, 16 F. 22; Claflin v. Lisso, 16 F. 897; Chewett v. Moran, 17 F. 820; Hurst v. Everett, 21 F. 218; Brooks v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 22 F. 211; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Scutt, 22 F. 710; Hauf v. Wilson, 31 F. 384; Beckman v. Hudson River W. S. R. Co., 35 F. 3; Pierce v. Feagans, 39 F. 587; Rawitzer v. Wyatt, 40 F. 609; Converse v. Michigan Dairy Co., 45 F. 18; Coe v. Aiken, 50 F. 640; Gilmour v. Ewing, 50 F. 656; Briggs v. Stroud, 58 F. 717; Blydenstein v. New York Security & T. Co., 59 F. 12; Rejall v. Greenhood, 60 F. 784; Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 61 F. 199; Short v. Hepburn, 75 F. 113; Compton v. Jesup [C. C. A.] 68 F. 263; Hughes v. Green, 75 F. 691; Holton v. Guinn, 76 F. 96; Wonderly v. Lafayette County, 77 F. 665; Zimmerman v. So Relle [C. C. A.] 80 F. 417; Brendel v. Charch, 82 F. 262; Hughes v. Green [C. C. A.] 84 F. 833; Railroad & Telephone Cos. v. Board of Equalizers, 85 F. 302, 318; Green v. Underwood, 86 F. 427. Similar rulings have been made in many of the state courts, when the pendency of proceedings in a national court has been set up as a defense or in abatement of an action. The following cases hold that the pendency of such proceedings is not a bar: People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 27 Mich. 406, 15 Am. Rep. 195; Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige [N. Y.] 606, 22 Am. Dec. 669; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Barton, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 122, 57 S. W. 292; State v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 11, 7 So. 84; Nichols v. Marsh, 61 Mich. 509, 28 N. W. 699; Utica Clothes Dryer Mfg. Co. v. Otis, 37 Hun, 301; Kilpatrick v. Kansas City & B. R. Co., 38 Neb. 620, 57 N. W. 664, 41 Am. St. Rep. 741; Caine v. Seattle & N. R. Co., 12 Wash. 596, 41 P. 904; Checkley v. Providence & S. S. Co., 60 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 510; Clark v. Comford, 45 La. Ann. 502, 12 So. 763; Hampton's Heirs v. Barrett, 12 La. 159; Loyd v. Reynolds, 29 Ind. 299; McGeorge v.

where the state court is without jurisdiction to enforce the remedy demanded;[22] but where a prior action involving the same issues has been removed to a Federal court and is there pending, a state court will suspend trial pending its termination.[23] The pendency of an action in which the right sought to be determined can-

Hancock Steel & Iron Co., 11 Phila. [Pa.] 602; McRee v. Brown, 45 Tex. 503; Oneida County Bank v. Bonney, 101 N. Y. 173, 4 N. E. 332; Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48; Seymour v. Bailey, 66 Ill. 288; Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313; Villavaso v. Barthet, 39 La. Ann. 247, 1 So. 599; Wood v. Lake, 13 Wis. 84; Wurtz v. Hart, 13 Iowa, 515. Some cases have put their decision upon the ground that such courts were foreign to each other: Wood v. Lake, 13 Wis. 84; Hampton's Heirs v. Barrett, 12 La. 159; Latham v. Chafee, 7 F. 520; Wadleigh v. Veazie, 3 Sumn. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 17,031; Lynch v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 17 F. 627. While other courts maintaining the same doctrine contend that such courts are not foreign to each other: Brooks v. Mills County, 4 Dill. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 1,955; Pierce v. Feagans, 39 F. 587; Coe v. Aiken, 50 F. 640; Marshall v. Otto, 59 F. 249. Other courts decide that the pendency of a prior suit in a state court is not a bar to a suit in a national court on the same cause of action, without any discussion of the relation of such courts to each other: Crescent City Live Stock, L. & S. H. Co. v. Butchers' Union Live Stock, L. & S. H. Co., 12 F. 225; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548; Latham v. Chafee, 7 F. 520; Rawitzer v. Wyatt, 40 F. 609; Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 61 F. 199. It has also been held that state and national courts are entirely independent of each other, and that the United States circuit courts cannot be called upon to close their doors to suitors because the questions which they seek to litigate are also involved in another action in the state court: Currie v. Lewiston, 15 F. 377; Gordon v. Gilfoil, 99 U. S. 168; Sharon v. Hill, 22 F. 28, 10 Sawy. 394. And it has also been held that the pendency of the same action in a state court is not a good plea in abatement in a national court, though it has concurrent jurisdiction with the state court: City of North Muskegon v. Clark, 62 F. 694. The pendency of a suit in equity in a state court cannot be pleaded in abatement or bar of a similar suit involving the same subject-matter, and between the same parties in a national court: Latham v. Chafee, 7 F. 520. And that the pendency of an equity action in a state court cannot be pleaded as a defense to a common-law action in a national court has been held in some cases: Andrews v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 100, 5 F. 833; Loring v. Marsh, 2 Cliff. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 8,514; Green v. Underwood, 86 F. 427; Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 61 F. 199. Some consideration is due those cases which hold that the pendency of an action is a defense to another proceeding if one is in the national court and the other is in the state court of the same territorial jurisdiction, and if in both suits the cause of action and the parties are the same or the parties in one are privies to the other. It will be noticed that nearly all of the cases maintaining this doctrine are of early date, and their effect is certainly weakened, if not destroyed, by the later decisions in both state and national courts, which have been heretofore cited, particularly Gordon v. Gilfoil, 99 U. S. 168. The following cases support the rule under consideration, maintaining that an action pending in one court may be pleaded in abatement of a suit in another: Smith v. Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 22 N. H. 21; Radford v. Folsom, 14 F. 97; Mallett v. Dexter, 1 Curt. 178, Fed. Cas. No. 8,988; Memphis City v. Dean, 8 Wall. [U. S.] 64; Central R. Co. v. New Jersey West Line R. Co., 32 N. J. Eq. 67; Martin v. Baldwin, 19 F. 340; Nelson v. Foster, 5 Biss. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 10,105; Lawrence v. Remington, 6 Biss. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 8,141; Ex parte Balch, 3 McLean, 221, Fed. Cas. No. 790; Earl v. Raymond, 4 McLean, 233, Fed. Cas. No. 4,243. In several late cases the practice has been followed of suspending action in the second suit until the first is determined. See Zimmerman v. So Relle [C. C. A.] 80 F. 417; Hughes v. Green [C. C. A.] 84 F. 833. In Green v. Underwood [C. C. A.] 86 F. 427-429, it was said that "no rule of practice is better settled than that in an action at law in personam pending in the United States court, the plea of lis pendens between the same parties in a suit brought in the state court is no bar to the prosecution of an action in the United States court. This court has, in an equity proceeding, held that where there was pending in a state court, between the same parties, a proceeding in equity involving the same matters, such as the possession of specific real or personal property, or to quiet the title to real estate, in which it might become necessary to appoint a receiver pendente lite, or in which it might become necessary to grant an injunction, or to take some other preservative auxiliary action, the court which first acquires jurisdiction of the parties of the subject-matter ought to be permitted to proceed to final judgment. But even in a court of chancery, where the rules of equity possess such flexibility as to permit the court to proceed ex aequo et bono, with large discretion, to preserve the rights of the parties, it will not, upon the plea of lis pendens, dismiss the suit in the Federal court, but will simply postpone the hearing thereof until the hearing and determination of the suit in the state court." And in Zimmerman v. So Relle [C. C. A.] 80 F. 420, the court said: "Indeed, considering the numerous reasons which may render it advisable and not improper to commence a second suit, although a prior suit is pending in which the plaintiff's rights may be fully adjudicated, we think it is the better practice in all cases to pursue the course last indicated when a plea of lis pendens is interposed and sustained. The mere pendency of a second suit, if no action is taken therein, does not affect the orderly prosecution of the first suit, and the court is much better able to determine after the first suit is ended, whether it is necessary or proper to grant further relief in the action which was last brought."

Foreclosure proceedings: The cases are agreed that the pendency of a suit in a state court for the foreclosure of a mortgage is not a bar to a suit in a national court between the same parties for the foreclosure of the same mortgage: Weaver v. Field, 4 Woods, 152, 16 F. 22; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Lamoille Val. R. Co., 16 Blatchf. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 9,432. Thus the pendency in the state courts of a suit by the trustees of a railroad mortgage to foreclose is not a bar to a similar suit in a national court by a bondholder secured thereby: Beekman v.

Hudson River W. S. R. Co., 35 F. 3. If a mortgagee sues to foreclose in a national court, and makes judgment creditors of the mortgagor's grantor parties defendant, the suit will not be postponed until the termination of proceedings instituted by these creditors in a state court to establish their liens on the land, to which proceedings the mortgagee is not a party: Converse v. Michigan Dairy Co., 45 F. 18. And the pendency in a state court of a suit to settle priorities between lienholders upon property, even though the bill prays the appointment of a receiver, does not defeat the jurisdiction of the United States court in a suit brought for the foreclosure of a trust and sale of the property, especially when the proceeding in the state court has been pending for several years, and its object is practically accomplished: Stewart v. Chesapeake & O. C. R. Co., 4 Hughes, 41, 1 F. 361. Pendency of a former suit in a state court brought by the mortgagors against the trustee in a deed of trust and others, to restrain such trustees from selling the property under a power of sale, is no defense to a suit to foreclose the mortgage in a national court, especially when the parties are not identical: Pierce v. Feagans, 39 F. 587. In this case the court said: "Again, the suit in the state court is pending in a different jurisdiction. It is now well settled that the pendency of a suit in a state court cannot be taken advantage of by way of a plea of lis pendens to defeat a suit of the same nature, and between the same parties, in the Federal courts. The two courts, though not foreign to each other, belong to different jurisdictions in such sense that the doctrine of lis pendens is inapplicable:" Pierce v. Feagans, 39 F. 587; and to the same effect is the case of Wood v. Lake, 13 Wis. 84, and Seymour v. Bailey, 66 Ill. 288.

Different parties: A suit pending in a state court between parties not the same as in a suit in a national court cannot be pleaded in abatement in the latter court: Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall [U. S.] 659; Hay v. Alexandria & W. R. R. Co., 4 Hughes, 331, Fed. Cas. No. 6,254a; Brooks v. Mills County, 4 Dill. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 1,955. State and national courts are entirely independent of each other, and the national courts cannot be called upon to close their doors to suitors simply on the ground that the questions which they seek to litigate are also involved in other actions between different parties in the courts of the state: Currie v. Lewiston, 15 F. 377. The pendency of other proceedings by other parties in a state court is not a defense to an action in the national court where the object of the second suit is not to affect the possession of the other court in respect to the matter in litigation: Parsons v. Greenville & C. R. Co., 1 Hughes, 279, Fed. Cas. No. 10,776; Loyd v. Reynolds, 29 Ind. 299; Andrews v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 100, 5 F. 833; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Scutt, 22 F. 710. Some courts have gone so far as to hold that the reversal of the names of the parties plaintiff and defendant in the two actions make the parties different: Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559; Barr v. Chapman, 5 Ohio Circ. R. 69. In the latter case the court said: "It seems to be the established doctrine of the law that the pendency of one suit cannot be successfully pleaded in abatement or in bar of a second suit between the same parties unless it appear that the second suit was by the same plaintiff, against the same defendant, and for substantially the same cause of action, which cannot be the case when the parties are reversed." In many cases, however, first cited in this note, no attention was paid to the fact that the parties plaintiff and defendant were reversed in the two actions, and the courts seem to have deemed them the same parties when deciding that the pendency of an action in one court was no cause for the abatement of the action in the other.

Attachment and garnishment: In an action on a debt in a national court, it is no defense that the debtor has been garnished in a state court in a pending action by a creditor of the plaintiff: McRee v. Brown, 45 Tex. 503. A suit brought in a national court on a note is not ground for a plea in abatement of a subsequent suit in a state court by attachment against the defendant garnishing money in his hands: Campbell v. Emerson, 2 McLean, 30, Fed. Cas. No. 2,357. In a suit in a national court by the holder of a note against the maker, it is no defense that a creditor of the original payee has endeavored to attach the same note by bill in equity in the state court, making the payee a party by publication, and has afterward filed a supplemental bill in the state court endeavoring to enjoin the attorneys in the national court from collecting it: Hauf v. Wilson, 31 F. 384. The defendant in a national court in an action of assumpsit cannot plead in abatement that a writ of garnishment was afterward sued out of the state court and is still pending: Greenwood v. Rector, Hempst. 708, Fed. Cas. No. 5,792; Freeman, Executions (3d Ed.) 826. In the suit on an insurance policy in a national court a plea that the money has been previously attached or garnished in a state court in an action yet pending is not a good plea in abatement. In such case the two courts are foreign to each other: Lynch v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 17 F. 627. The jurisdiction of a national court having attached in an action on a note cannot be arrested or taken away by any subsequent garnishment in a state court: Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 136; Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559.

Creditors' bills: The pendency of a general creditor's bill against a defendant in a state court, accompanied by the usual orders of injunction, does not necessarily forbid a creditor who is not a party to the bill from suing the defendant in a national court, especially when the prosecution of the latter suit is merely for obtaining judgment, and is by proceeding not affecting the property of the defendant: Parsons v. Greenville & C. R. Co., 1 Hughes, 279, Fed. Cas. No. 10,776. In Rejall v. Greenhood, 60 F. 784, it appeared that a creditor's bill filed in a national court alleged that one of the defendants therein had made an assignment, in which the plaintiff was a preferred creditor, and that the other defendants, though having notice of this assignment, had taken possession of the property and had converted a part of it. The defendants filed a plea alleging that they had sued in the state court to have the as-not be litigated and which must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction is not a bar to a subsequent action.[24] An action in a state court against receivers appointed by a Federal court will not abate by the transfer of the property and discharge of the receivers.[25] An action by stockholders on behalf of themselves and other stockholders against the corporation for an accounting and to set aside a mortgage is not dismissible because a director had commenced an action for the same relief;[26] but the trial should have been deferred until a determination of the other action.[27] A suit by a receiver against a stockholder for an assessment is not a bar to a suit by the stockholder as a depositor to recover the amount of a deposit.[28] The rule of lis pendens has no application where it is sought to abate the prior suit.[29] signment set aside as fraudulent, and that a receiver had been appointed in such suit. The court held that the pendency of this suit was no bar to the bill in the national court, especially as the plaintiff was not a party in the state court. A bill in equity in a state court to prevent creditors from obtaining more than their share under a general assignment, by reason of their having securities, is not abated by a suit pending by the same plaintiffs in the district court of the United States, to set aside the assignment as fraudulent and void: Wurtz v. Hart, 13 Iowa, 515. In a suit in a national court by a nonresident creditor to set aside a trust deed made by his debtor, it is no defense that prior proceedings are pending in a state court under an assignment for creditors made by the debtor: Gould v. Mullanphy Planing-Mill Co., 32 F. 181. And the jurisdiction of a national court, previously acquired, cannot be ousted by proceedings in insolvency in state courts, if the parties invoking such jurisdiction have not participated in the insolvency proceedings: Claflin v. Lisso, 16 F. 897.

Admiralty cases: Pendency of a libel in admiralty against a vessel is no bar to an attachment suit at law in a state court against the owners for the same cause of action: Wolf v. Cook, 40 F. 432. In an action for freight money brought in a state court, it is not a sufficient answer to allege that the vessel has been libeled for the nondelivery of freight in a national court, as both actions may proceed at the same time without danger of a clash of jurisdiction: Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48. In an action in a state court for services in fitting out a vessel, defendant cannot plead in abatement the pendency of an action in rem for the same matter in a national court: People v. Judges of Wayne County, 27 Mich. 406, 15 Am. Rep. 195. A suit in a state court by replevin or attachment against a vessel cannot supersede the right of a court of admiralty to proceed by a suit in rem to enforce a right or lien against such vessel: Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559; The Kalorama, 10 Wall. [U. S.] 204; Caine v. Seattle & N. R. Co., 12 Wash. 596, 41 P. 904.

Probate matters: The pendency of a suit in a state court for the construction of a will cannot be pleaded in abatement or bar of a similar suit involving the same will in a national court: Loring v. Marsh, 2 Cliff. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 8,514. The pendency of administration proceedings in a state probate court does not bar proceedings in national courts involving the same issues: Holton v. Guinn, 76 F. 96. Pending the settlement of an estate in a state probate court, a citizen of another state, who is a legatee under the will, may maintain a suit in a national court against the resident executor and other legatees and heirs to recover such legacy: Brendel v. Charch, 82 F. 262. In a suit in a national court to subject land in the hands of heirs to the payment of their ancestor's debt, it was held that proceedings in a state court to settle the estate, limiting the time within which creditors should present their claims and the discharge of the administrator before the filing of the bill, did not bar the action in the national court, if the complainant did not prove his claim in the state court, and allowed the time limited for the proof of claims to expire. The court also held that the jurisdiction of the national court could not be affected by any provision of the state law requiring creditors to appear before the state court and present their claims: Chewett v. Moran, 17 F. 820. If a bill is brought in a national court to set aside an alleged fraudulent appointment under a will, and to enforce the rights of a distributee in the estate, a plea in abatement merely alleging the pendency of prior proceedings in the probate court of another state, without distinctly showing that that court has possession of the res, cannot be sustained: Briggs v. Stroud, 58 F. 717.

Judgments: The fact that one is suing in a state court upon a judgment of a national court does not prevent him from proceeding at the same time in a national court to revive the judgment by scire facias. This results from the rule that the pendency of another suit between the same parties respecting the same subject-matter in a state court is no bar to a proceeding in a United States court: Wonderly v. Lafayette County, 77 F. 665.

27. Loewenstein v. Diamond Soda Water

If the subject-matter of the controversy has ceased to exist, the suit will be dismissed;[30] but mandamus to enforce an officer's personal duty does not abate by expiration of his term,[31] though the contrary is true of an official duty unless expressly prevented by statute.[32] An action against a public administrator which is in its nature purely personal abates with his resignation,[33] nor can his successor be substituted,[34] and the discharge or removal of an administrator or executor acting as party plaintiff does not abate the action.[35] Under statutes providing that no action shall abate by the transfer of any interest therein, bankruptcy proceedings do not operate to abate an action.[36] The appointment of a receiver does not abate a suit,[37] but a suit by a receiver under leave of court is abated by the annulment of his authority to sue, and no continuation by his successor is possible.[38] An action by a guardian for sale of a minor's real estate does not abate by his resignation and failure of his successor to be substituted.[39] The objection that he is not the real party in interest cannot be raised against an unconditional assignee, though his assignors may be shown to retain an interest in the cause of action.[40]

Death of a party[41] before judgment[42] abates the action, but the death of a co-plaintiff does not,[43] and a suit in equity is not abated, but merely suspended.[44] The death of a principal in an action for a penalty abates the action as to sureties on his bond,[45] but a criminal prosecution does not abate on the death of the prosecuting witness.[46]

46. That a private individual instituting criminal complaint against a person for nonsupport of his family is required to give surety for the costs does not render the case any the less a state case. State v. Peabody [R. I.] 55 A. 323.

The dissolution of a corporation does not abate an action brought by it.[47] In Alaska, an action to determine adverse claims to mining property does not abate on the death of one of several parties plaintiff or defendant.[48] Under Maryland statutes, an action to annul a fraudulent conveyance does not abate on the death of the vendor, though the vendee was her only heir.[49] An action by a trustee to preserve the estate does not abate by the death of the cestui que trust where the corpus of the estate was to go on his death to remaindermen.[50]

A misjoinder is ground for abatement,[51] as is nonjoinder.[52] There is no misjoinder of causes when the plaintiff has one connected interest centering in the point in issue.[53]

Jurisdiction.—Lack of jurisdiction is ground for abatement,[54] unless a party has submitted thereto,[55] but where it must be established by evidence aliunde, a plea thereof may be united with other defenses without waiving the right to insist on lack of jurisdiction;[56] but this rule does not extend to cases where such plea is joined with a cross petition or counterclaim which necessitates a trial on the merits of the issues tendered.[57] Where the reversal of a judgment upon appeal will cause an action to abate, an appellate court has no power to impose terms by which the judgment may stand as security for any future recovery.[58] Some jurisdictions require the payment of costs as a condition precedent to maintaining a new suit.[59]

§ 2. Raising objection; waiver.[60]—It is no defense that the former action was abatable if the right to raise that objection has been waived.[61] Appearance waives defects in process,[62] and an objection that does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, if not made by demurrer or answer, is deemed to have been waived.[63] A misjoinder either of actions[64] or parties[65] must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, or where it appears from the face of the pleading, by special exception, which must be filed prior to the answer to the merits,[66] as a plea in abatement is waived by first pleading to the merits,[67] and though pleas in abatement and bar may be filed at the same time, the former should be first tried, as they are waived by proceeding to trial on the merits.[68] Where a plea in abatement is interposed, the party must stand on the plea and review the adverse judgment on error or the point will be waived.[69] Issues on the merits can be raised only by pleadings in bar, not by pleas in abatement.[70] A plea of nonjoinder of proper parties defendant must point out the defect or show that a complete determination could not be had without the presence of an additional party.[71]

The plea in abatement must be promptly filed[72] within the time allowed by rule of court,[73] verified,[74] and relied upon,[75] though by reserving its plea to the jurisdiction in an answer to the merits, rights in abatement are not waived.[76] A plea in abatement is not defective for failing to state that another action pending was for the same relief.[77] The matter of abatement relied on must be specifically alleged.[78] Mandamus will not lie to compel a circuit judge to reinstate a plea of

76. Where a defendant pleaded in abatement to the jurisdiction because of illegality of service and moved to quash the writ and return, and after the plea and motion were overruled, incorporated in its answer to the merits a like plea in abatement, to the striking out of which it duly excepted, it did not by answering and proceeding to trial on its merits waive its rights in abatement. abatement stricken from the files on the ground that the right to maintain it was waived.[79]

§ 3. Survivability of causes of action.[80]—The rule being general that only those causes of action survive which are assignable, the reader should note also the cases cited in dealing with the law of assignability.[81] The law of the place where the cause of action arose governs.[82]

Personal actions[83] in tort do not survive at common law.[84] Hence the right to maintain such an action after the death of the injured party depends upon statutory authority, and its scope and effect are questions of legislative intention.[85] A statute providing that certain "actions at law" shall survive does not include causes of action.[86] A cause of action for wrongful death does not accrue to the personal representative or next of kin unless the deceased could have maintained an action for the wrongful act or neglect, had death not ensued.[87] A cause of action for a penalty[88] or for unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquors,[89] or for breach of promise of marriage,[90] does not survive the death of the defendant. A cause of action for the mutilation of the dead body of the husband does not survive the widow.[91] An action on a cause which does not survive will not be retained for the determination of the question of costs.[92]

Real actions, such as for the recovery of land,[93] or for injury to land,[94] or for trespass when the benefit of the trespass accrues to the estate of the trespasser,[95] survive. If any part of the promises made in consideration of a contract to convey land have been performed, an interest is created which is a survivable cause of action.[96] An action to foreclose a mechanic's lien survives and may be continued against the successors in interest of a deceased owner, since the successors take subject to the lien and cause of actions and proceedings had to enforce the same prior to the owner's death.[97]

motion revive an action when appellant dies after a short transcript has been signed, but before the bill of exceptions is filed.[2] A revivor is not necessary in a partition suit where a co-plaintiff acquires all the deceased plaintiff's interest by devise.[3] A foreclosure is not a money judgment within the meaning of a statute providing for the enforcement of a decree for the payment of money, when rendered before defendant's death, without reviving such decree.[4] Upon the death of one of several defendants, the action does not stand for trial as to the others, until revived against his representatives or abated as to them.[5] Under the Federal statutes, where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants in a suit where the cause of action survives, and one dies, the action does not abate, but the death being suggested upon the record, it will proceed at the suit of the surviving plaintiff against the surviving defendant.[6] The right to a scire facias from a Federal court to revive an action is subject to the limitation of time imposed by state statutes.[7] Motions to intervene must be filed before judgment.[8] A cause of action which does not survive cannot be continued for the benefit of one who might have a cause of action for the same act.[9] A party cannot obtain a continuance on the ground that a receiver has been appointed for the plaintiff.[10] To continue an action brought by the injured party under a statute giving survivability "for personal injuries other than those resulting in death," it must be alleged and shown that the injuries did not result in death.[11] For purposes of revival, parties plaintiff and defendant are not changed by pleading a set-off.[12]

Substitution of parties.[13]—The practice by which substitution or amendment of parties is effected pertains to the law of parties,[14] and to appeal where the cause has been or is in process of being sent up.[15] In case of the death of a party defendant, it devolves on the plaintiff to cause a substitution of the proper representative,[16] and the substitution should be made in the trial, not in the appellate court.[17] An action cannot be dismissed on motion for failure to substitute the proper party for a deceased party to the action,[18] though an order may be obtained on proper notice, requiring the suit to be revived within a time fixed, or be dismissed.[19] Actions should be revived and prosecuted in the name of the executor or administrator and not of a devisee,[20] nor of the heirs,[21] unless the action is in reference to rights in realty only.[22] In Minnesota, an action for damages for personal injuries, commenced by the person injured, may at his death be continued by the personal representative as an action for wrongful death for the benefit of the widow and next of kin.[23] Heirs at law cannot be substituted in a cause of action in reference to personal property.[24] But in a controversy involving the title to real estate, the heirs are necessary parties.[25] In many states substitution of a pendente lite transferee[26] or assignee[27] is unnecessary. An action against a husband and wife, abated by death of the husband, cannot be revived by joining the wife and administrator, but a separate suit must be brought against the administrator.[28] If the object of an ejectment action is a homestead, it should not be revived against the administrator of the occupant, but against persons who succeed to the homestead.[29] is taken,[32] which intent may be gathered from the facts and circumstances connected with the taking.[33] The California statute makes punishable the act of taking away any female under the age of 18 years from her father for the purpose of prostitution.[34] The crime is committed where the criminal intent is formed, though the taking of the female originally may have been for a proper purpose.[35] Under the Iowa statute against forcible defilement, the taking of the person for such purpose must be unlawful and against the woman's will, and the indictment must so allege.[36]

ABORTION.

The one furnishing the instrument or prescribing the medicine to procure miscarriage is guilty as principal, though not present when the instrument was used or medicine taken.[37] One who employs another to perform an operation to produce an abortion and arranges for it and otherwise assists, is an accessory and may be punished as though he were the principal offender.[38] The victim of an attempt to produce an abortion is not strictly an accomplice of the one accused of the crime.[39]

Evidence.[40]—Illicit relations between defendant and the victim may be shown,[41] but not his acquittal of seducing her.[42] Dying declarations of the victim are admissible,[43] and her statements to a physician have been held not to be privileged;[44] but a statement that a certain drug caused her miscarriage has been excluded as a mere conclusion.[45] Previous abortions attempted by the victim herself,[46] or by others not connected with defendant,[47] or similar offenses by defendant upon other women, are inadmissible.[48] Physical appearances after the miscarriage, together with statements of the victim before the alleged abortion, have been held sufficient to establish the corpus delicti.[49]

ABSTRACTS OF TITLE.

In some jurisdictions an abstract of title is required as auxiliary to the petition in certain real actions.[56]

The duty of furnishing abstracts may by terms of contract become condition precedent to sale of land.[57]

An abstractor is not a guarantor of the title, but is liable for errors caused by failure to exercise ordinary care;[58] but only in case such errors result in loss.[59] The measure of damages is the difference between what the purchaser paid for the property and the present worth of what he actually received.[60] In a suit by an abstractor for compensation, the following elements of value enter: First, the use of the capital invested; second, the services of the abstractor in preparing the abstract; third, the liability of the abstractor to the purchaser of the abstract for damages resulting from defects therein.[61] Records of judgments are usually open to the inspection of abstractors,[62] and mandamus will lie to compel a clerk of court to

In case of the death of such administrator, an administrator de bonis non may be appointed who has authority to collect the personal assets of the absentee, whether he is living or dead, and can maintain an action against the sureties on the administrator's bond for money wrongfully converted by him. Romy v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 998.

54. The validity of a proceeding to appoint an administrator of the estate of an absentee is not affected by the fact that he is still alive. Romy v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 998. The sureties on the bond of such administrator, in an action thereon to recover for the conversion of money received by him in his official capacity, are estopped to assert, against the recitals of the bond, that the absentee was not deceased or that th administrator was not in fact the administrator of his estate, or that his appointment was invalid, or that he was not subject to all the liabilities and duties of an administrator of a decedent's estate, in relation to the personal property that came into his hands as such administrator, by reason of his appointment as such, and the execution of such bond. Id.

55. Romy v. State [Ind. App.] 67 N. E. 998. The acts of such administrator are made binding on such absentee, should he return, as if they were his own acts, if they are performed in good faith and without fraud. Id.

Not negligence in examining a transfer by tax deed not to make inquiries dehors the record for a possible defect in the proceedings or error in the name or description of the parties, if the record showed jurisdiction in the court to render the judgment and the parties to the judgment and the title claimed under it were identical in name and description. Keuthan v. St. Louis Trust Co. [Mo. App.] 73 S. W. 334.

59. An abstractor is not liable for failure to note judgments in an abstract if such failure is the cause of no loss to one relying thereon. The purchaser's loss resulted from the tax title he purchased being void and being overthrown at the suit of one having an unrecorded mortgage on the land. Denton v. Nashville Title Co. [Tenn.] 79 S. W. 799.

61. A verdict of $500 for an abstract and 400 certified printed copies thereof set aside as excessive. Kenyon v. Charlevoix Imp. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 407.

62. Under U. S. Rev. St. § 828 and 25 Stat. 357, providing that indices and records of judgments, etc., in district and circuit courts shall be open to inspection without charge, a title insurance company may examine current and depending transactions, as long as it does not interfere with the clerk and his assistants, notwithstanding the fact that the clerk's fees for searches are being greatly reduced by the advent of such title insurance companies. Bell v. Com. T. Ins. & T. Co., 189 U. S. 131, 23 S. Ct. 569.

A valuable note collecting the cases on this subject is found in 27 L. R. A. 82.

deliver transcripts of judgments on his docket to any abstractor for use in his business upon tender of the fees prescribed by law.[63] An abstract cannot be assumed to be false from the fact that it does not recite that it was made by a bonded abstractor.[64]

ACCESSION AND CONFUSION OF PROPERTY.

Confusion of goods, if committed with fraudulent motive, subjects the transaction to an inflexible rule, rigorously enforced, that the wrongdoer shall not profit by, nor the innocent party suffer from, the wrong,[65] and where one mingles property of another with his own, he is estopped to assert title to any particular part of such mixture,[66] and the burden of identifying his own is cast upon him;[67] but if the

NOTE.—Liability of examiner of abstract: Where an examiner of titles has received special instructions as to how the examination is to be made, he is liable for any loss resulting from his failure to carry them out. Gilbert v. Williams, 8 Mass. 51, 57. Apart from instructions, the examiner is liable to the client for any misfeasance or unreasonable neglect. He must act in good faith and to the best of his skill and knowledge (Id.; Varnum v. Martin, 15 Pick. [Mass.] 440; Wilson v. Coffin, 2 Cush. [Mass.] 316; Holman v. King, 7 Metc. [Mass.] 384), and he must employ all usual and proper methods to effect his commission, and mere good faith will not excuse lack of ordinary skill and prudence. Dearborn v. Dearborn, 15 Mass. 316; Thomas v. Schee, 80 Iowa, 237, 45 N. W. 539; Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195; Bowman v. Tallman, 27 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 212, 264; Byrnes v. Palmer, 18 App. Div. 1, 45 N. Y. S. 479; Fay v. McGuire, 20 App. Div. 569, 47 N. Y. S. 286; Lawall v. Groman, 180 Pa. 532, 37 A. 98. An abstract of title is presumed to cover suits as well as conveyances. Thomas v. Schee, 80 Iowa, 237, 45 N. W. 539. It is not every error, however, for which the attorney is liable. Thus, an error of judgment upon a doubtful question in the construction of statutes would not be regarded as evidence of negligence or want of skill (Gilbert v. Williams, 8 Mass. 51, 57; Morrill v. Graham, 27 Tex. 646; Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 199), while a disregard of a plain statute provision (Caverly v. McOwen, 123 Mass. 574); of well defined rules of law or practice (Goodman v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482; Hillegass v. Bender, 78 Ind. 225; Citizens' L., F. & Sav. Ass'n v. Friedley, 123 Ind. 143, 23 N. E. 1075; Breedlove v. Turner, 9 Mart. [O. S.; La.] 353; In re Estate of A. B., 1 Tuck. [N. Y.] 247), would be such evidence. It seems that the attorney may accept and rely upon the law as it is at the date of his report, although a later decision or statute declares the law to be otherwise. Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 178; Poucher v. Blanchard, 86 N. Y. 256. Where an examiner certifies that a title is good, he warrants that it will prove good at the end of any contested litigation, and that it is free from any grave doubt or serious question of validity. Page v. Trutch, 5 Am. Law Rec. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 10,668. In one case in New York it was held that one employed to examine a title and procure a fee to be conveyed to the plaintiff was not liable where a fee was conveyed, but was incumbered. Elder v. Bogardus, Hill & D. [N. Y.] 116. It is doubtful if this decision would be followed. He is not, however, obliged to advise his client as to the value of the security from a pecuniary point of view. Cohn v. Heusner, 9 Misc. 482, 30 N. Y. S. 244. If the examiner undertakes to record papers, and delays so that other claims of record intervene, he will be liable for such delay. Miller v. Wilson, 24 Pa. 114. If the examiner does his work so negligently that it is of no value, of course he cannot recover compensation (Caverly v. McOwen, 123 Mass. 574; Varnum v. Martin, 15 Pick. [Mass.] 440), and, in an action for services, evidence is admissible that he reported a clear title, and the owner was later obliged to redeem from a tax lien (Hinckley v. Krug [Cal.] 34 Pac. 118). The examiner is not liable, however, to one not in privity with him who relies upon his abstract (Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195), and he cannot be made liable by custom (Id.). Where an agent mixed his own goods with those of his principal, the title of his principal attached to the entire stock until the value of the goods was returned to him or properly accounted for. A stock of merchandise and store fixtures sent to an agent to sell. Lance v. Butler [N. C.] 47 S. E. 488. Such agent's mortgagee acquired no title. other party appropriates the whole, he is liable to the extent to which this burden can be sustained.[68] There is no confusion within this rule as long as the property is capable of easy identification.[69]

A form of accession[70] results from giving the character of fixtures to improvements on land;[71] but one entering land under color of title and in good faith, and making improvements[72] is entitled, when dispossessed by the holder, of a superior title to recover their value, and the right is the same whether the remedy is sought in law or equity;[73] but recovery cannot be had for the value of improvements placed on the land during a period when the title was in dispute,[74] or one was not in possession under color of title,[75] or where by statute it is only allowed as a set-off against damages.[76] amount, he cannot complain that a verdict is too large, it being presumed that the party taking the ore knew the exact amount. An instruction that one was entitled to recover the value of the entire mixture was erroneous. Maloney v. King [Mont.] 76 P. 4.

76. On setting aside a void administrator's deed, purchasers in good faith may recover the purchase price and have a lien for taxes paid, but cannot be allowed for permanent improvements, since under Ball. Ann. St. § 5511, they are allowed only as a set-off against damages. Ball v. Clothier [Wash.] 75 P. 1099.

Note: A trespasser can acquire no right to property on the principle of accession, but the true owner may recover it in whatever form he finds it (Peirce v. Goddard, 22 Pick. [Mass.] 559, 33 Am. Dec. 764); it matters not whether the property be movable or immovable, the true owner has the right to that which is united to it. Mitchell v. Stetson, 7 Cush. [Mass.] 435. A wrongdoer cannot by changing the form change the title (Single v. Schneider, 24 Wis. 299), nor can a trespasser acquire title to crops which he has planted (Freeman v. McLennan, 26 Kan. 151); but it is held otherwise if he plant on railroad right of way (Lindsay v. Winona & St. Peter R. Co., 29 Minn. 411). If a trespasser convert the property into a different species, he may claim title. Silsbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379. But the modern cases which hold that there has been a change of species are few and it seems impossible to work such a change so far as logs are concerned; thus where logs were sawed into shingles (Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 349), or boards (Ricketts v. Dorrell, 55 Ind. 470; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192), or where wood was converted into charcoal (Curtis v. Groat, 6 Johns. [N. Y.] 168). And in no event is the species changed if the owner can identify his property (Bolles Wooden-Ware Co. v. U. S., 106 U. S. 432; Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle [Pa.] 423; Potter v. Mardre, 74 N. C. 36). If, however, one take property innocently, believing he had a right to do so, the owner is confined to a recovery of its value at the time it was converted. Carpenter v. Lingenfelter, 42 Neb. 728. The party so taking acquires title if he bestows labor thereon greatly disproportionate to its value when taken. Murphy v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 55 Iowa, 473; Eastman v. Harris, 4 La. Ann. 193. So one in possession of land under color of title is entitled to the crops sown. Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 618. The doctrine that an innocent trespasser acquires title has also been questioned (Kimball v. Lohmas, 31 Cal. 154), especially when the owner is willing to indemnify him (Weymouth v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 17 Wis. 550). A purchaser acquires no better title than his vendor had. Tuttle v. White, 46 Mich. 485; Newton v. Porter, 69 N. Y. 133. Note to Carpenter v. Lingenfelter [Neb.] 32 L. R. A. 422.

There is some conflict as to whether the owner may recover the chattel, in its changed form, from an innocent purchaser of the trespasser. That he may, see Strubbee v. Cincinnati R., 78 Ky. 481; Railway Co. v. Hutchins, 32 Ohio St. 571; Nesbitt v. Lumber Co., 21 Minn. 491; Wooden Ware Co. v. U. S., 106 U. S. 432. That he cannot, see Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Silsbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379; Baker v. Meisch, 29 Neb. 224.—Note to Gaskins v. Davis, 44 A. S. R. 439.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

A. In General (17).
B. The Consideration (20).
C. Fraud, Mistake and Duress (22).
§ 2. Satisfaction or Discharge (23).
§ 3. Pleading, Issues, and Proof (23).

§ 1. The accord. A. In general.[77]—Accord and satisfaction is the acceptance of something agreed upon in settlement of a debt or obligation,[78] or the adjustment of a disagreement as to what is due from one party to another, and the payment of the amount so agreed upon.[79]

Where a note is accepted from one who is substituted for the original debtor, the transaction is a novation, and the original debt is abrogated.[80] The acceptance of a new note from one of two obligors will not of itself work a novation in the absence of an understanding of the parties that the original obligation is to be thereby extinguished.[81] An oral contract of novation is not void within the statute of frauds, because the original debt is abrogated.[82]

The effect of an accord and satisfaction, when executed, is to extinguish the antecedent liability.[83] It does not become operative until made so by its terms.[84] It can only be repudiated or rescinded by mutual consent.[85] Substantial compliance with the terms of such an agreement by the debtor will enable him to enforce it against his creditor,[86] or the creditor may be estopped by accepting proffered payments to claim noncompliance by the debtor.[87] It has all the force of

79. Mere payment of an amount called a "balance" upon an account rendered and its retention by the creditor is not an accord and satisfaction. Harrison v. Henderson, 67 Kan. 194, 72 P. 875. Execution of lease by defendant to plaintiff of mining property, with provision that royalties should be credited on plaintiff's claim against defendant, held not an accord and satisfaction. Boston Newmarket Gold Min. Co. v. Orme [Colo. App.] 71 P. 885. A written acknowledgment of the payment of a definite sum in settlement of a contract, with salary, interest and allowance, is not conclusive evidence of an accord and satisfaction. It is nothing more than a receipt. Komp v. Raymond, 175 N. Y. 102, 67 N. E. 113. Signing receipt for weekly salary, before dismissal but after notice thereof, was not a release of damages for breach of contract. Evesson v. Ziegfeld, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 79.

83. Boston Newmarket Gold Min. Co. v. Orme [Colo. App.] 71 P. 885. A settlement of pending litigation, freely made, after competent advice, is binding and bars further action on the claim. Middlesex Banking Co. v. Field [Miss.] 37 So. 139. Where D. paid S. money to support him, and becoming dissatisfied, demanded the money back and thereupon a settlement was made, D. receiving a certain sum and releasing S. from liability, D. has no claim against S. Downer v. Sassman [Wis.] 99 N. W. 430. Compromise between debtor and creditor held a complete defense as showing that suit was brought before terms of the settlement had been complied with. W. F. Taylor Co. v. Baines Grocery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 260. Composition agreement held a good defense. But recovery permitted to stand in this case, because verdict of jury was only for amount to which plaintiff was entitled by agreement. Talcott v. Janasson, 85 N. Y. S. 833. Where, before trial of a suit to reform a contract, the parties execute a new contract embodying the desired provisions, there is no occasion for the court to act. Daugherty v. Curtis [Iowa] 97 N. W. 67. The court does not wholly lose jurisdiction of a suit which is voluntarily settled, but should enter judgment dismissing the action. Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Schowalter [Wis.] 98 N. W. 940.

84. A release executed to take effect at a date subsequent to the time of trial is inadmissible in evidence to affect the matters in controversy. Rosenthal v. Rudnick, 84 App. Div. 611, 82 N. Y. S. 1004.

85. One party to a compromise cannot repudiate it merely because a contract with a third party, which was the reason for his entering into the compromise, is rescinded by mutual consent. Pryor v. Newbold [S. C.] 48 S. E. 275. Where a carrier agreed to the appointment of an agent to agree on damages suffered by a consignee, and paid the agent's expenses, and the agent reported the result, an executed contract of settlement resulted and the carrier was bound to pay the damages agreed upon. an adjudication and cannot be attacked collaterally, or for error of law or lesion, in a direct action,[88] but if a collateral attack be met, the court will decide questions of its validity and effect in order to end litigation.[89]

A release of one of two joint tort feasors releases the other.[90] The discharge of all joint debtors is commensurate with that of any.[91]

A writing is not necessary.[92] An accord and satisfaction is implied from acceptance and retention of a sum tendered in full,[93] notwithstanding the protest of the creditor that he does not accept it in full.[94] But if it be shown that such tender and acceptance is not in full, there is no accord and satisfaction.[95]

88. Written release of claim for injury held valid and enforced. Russ v. Union Oil Co. [La.] 36 So. 937. An executed agreement of settlement confirming title in persons according to the terms of certain deeds effectually settles the title, regardless of fraud or want of consideration as to the original deeds. Hence the question of fraud or consideration need not be considered, where such settlement has been made. Adams v. Hopkins [Cal.] 77 P. 712.

89. Russ v. Union Oil Co. [La.] 36 So. 937.

90. Plaintiff was injured in a collision between a street car and an express company's wagon. Held, a release of the express company released the street car company also. Hubbard v. St. Louis & M. R. Co., 173 Mo. 249, 72 S. W. 1073. A release of two defendants in a suit for damages for malicious interference with plaintiff's business held a bar to an action against the others. Dulaney v. Buffum, 173 Mo. 1, 73 S. W. 125.

NOTE. Effect of release of one joint tort feasor on liability of the other: The general rule that a technical release of one joint tort feasor releases the other was laid down by Littleton (2 Co. Litt. § 376), and followed by the early English cases (Patridge v. Emson, Noy, 62, Kiffin v. Willis, 4 Mod. 380), and in the United States (Urton v. Price, 57 Cal. 270). And it is said that an accord and satisfaction with one joint tort feasor has the same effect as a technical release. Bailey v. Berry, 8 Am. Law Reg. 270; Snyder v. Witt, 99 Tenn. 618, 42 S. W. 441. But the courts are coming to hold that when a release given to one joint tort feasor is not under seal, it may be treated as any other written instrument not under seal, and the consideration may be inquired into, though the body of the instrument may not be varied or contradicted by parol; and when the damages are capable of proof or computation, and are not fully satisfied by the consideration, such a release is held a bar only pro tanto to the liability of the other joint tort feasor. Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 6 N. W. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 830. The court will seek for the intention of the parties from the words used and give effect to the instrument accordingly. Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 752; Irvine v. Millbank, 56 N. Y. 635. But if the release, though not under seal, is given in full discharge, and the damages are mere matter of opinion or incapable of computation, it is generally held conclusive. Eastman v. Grant, 34 Vt. 390; Long v. Long, 57 Iowa, 497, 10 N. W. 875; Stanley v. Leahy, 87 Ill. App. 465. See note to Abb v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Wash.] 58 L. R. A. 293.

92. Upton v. Adeline Sugar Co., 109 La. 670, 33 So. 725. A rule requiring agreements or consents "in respect to the proceedings in a cause" to be in writing, held not to apply to an agreement in settlement of a controversy. Smith v. Bach, 82 App. Div. 608, 81 N. Y. S. 1057.

93. But a part payment must rest on an independent consideration. See post, § 1B. Acceptance of an amount with knowledge that it was tendered in full. Laroe v. Sugar Loaf Dairy Co., 87 App. Div. 585, 84 N. Y. S. 609. Evidence held insufficient to show acceptance in full of sum less than that due so as to bring debtor within terms of a statute, burden of proof being on the debtor. Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Gunter [Va.] 46 S. E. 690. Where money is tendered under circumstances which show that the tender is in full satisfaction, an acceptance of such tender constitutes an accord and satisfaction. Neely v. Thompson [Kan.] 75 P. 117; Harrison v. Henderson, 67 Kan. 194, 72 P. 875. After a dispute as to the amount due, vendee sent vendor a check for amount less than that claimed, with a letter stating check to be in full, which check vendor accepted. Held, an accord and satisfaction. Jones v. Keeler, 40 Misc. 221, 81 N. Y. S. 648. Check in letter stating remittance to be "balance in full of account as per attached statements," held an accord and satisfaction. Andrews v. W. R. Stubbs Contracting Co., 100 Mo. App. 599, 75 S. W. 178. Acceptance, without protest, of a check which was sent with instructions to return it unless accepted in full, amounts prima facie to an accord and satisfaction. Jackson v. Volkening, 81 App. Div. 36, 80 N. Y. S. 1102. Acceptance of check tendered in full payment of disputed claim is sufficient. Mich. Leather Co. v. Foyer, 104 Ill. App. 268. If a check is tendered, it must recite the condition that acceptance thereof must be in full. Hillestad v. Lee [Minn.] 97 N. W. 1055. Cashing check and appropriating proceeds held accord and satisfaction. Creighton v. Gregory, 142 Cal. 34, 75 P. 569.

Contra: Receipt of money on insurance policy, "under protest" will not support a plea of accord and satisfaction. Mitterwall-

Acceptance of a sum due under a contract does not amount to a settlement of a claim for damages for breach of the contract.[96]

The general rules of construction of contracts apply to contracts of accord and satisfaction.[97]

Only parties in interest may make binding contracts of accord and satisfaction.[98] A settlement reached between a guardian and ward, after the ward has become of age, in the absence of fraud and misrepresentation, is valid.[99] A sole beneficiary of a suit, under no disability, may settle.[1] One of several joint creditors may lawfully enter into an accord and satisfaction with the debtor, and thus discharge the debt.[2] Parties to an action may make a binding and valid settlement of the matters in dispute, without consulting the attorneys on either side.[3]

An attorney cannot settle or compromise a suit or claim without special authority,[4] and the client will not be bound by a ratification, without full knowledge of the facts.[5] A compromise of a claim by an executor, administrator or guardian, without an order of the court, where the statute requires it, is without authority and void.[6] A contract of accord and satisfaction signed by a wife, after being signed and approved by her husband, is binding upon her, so far as her coverture is concerned.[7]

or release of one joint debtor does not release the right of action against the others, unless such an intent affirmatively appears.[9]

(§ 1) B. The consideration.[10]—The accord must rest upon a sufficient consideration or be under seal.[11] The consideration must be something in the nature of a benefit to the creditor or party relinquishing the claim or a detriment to the other party.[12] Thus an agreement to forbear suit,[13] or extend time of payment,[14] the compromise of doubtful claims, asserted in good faith,[15] without regard to the final decision as to the validity of such claims,[16] unless absolutely unsustainable at law or in equity,[17] or an agreement not to go into bankruptcy or make an assign-

Where a settlement is made by a debtor with a certain creditor, separate from any general settlement with other creditors, the burden is on the debtor to show a new agreement upon a sufficient consideration. Weinberg v. Novick, 88 N. Y. S. 168.

12. A compromise agreement by which each party absolutely undertakes to do certain things for the benefit of the other. New Haven Mfg. Co. v. New Haven P. & B. Co. [Conn.] 55 A. 604. One dollar and an agreement to employ for a definite time held sufficient. Quebe v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 442. Agreement to supply all broken parts and settle all accounts and by other party to pay on agreed terms for machinery, held to have consideration. New Haven Mfg. Co. v. New Haven P. & B. Co. [Conn.] 55 A. 604.

13. An agreement to forbear to sue on a claim on the debtor's promising to pay, and paying part of the claim at once, and the balance when convenient. Samuel Cupples Woodenware Co. v. Dreyfus, 102 Mo. App. 463, 76 S. W. 734.

14. Extension of time of payment is sufficient consideration to support a release of claims for damages. William Deering & Co. v. Walker [Neb.] 96 N. W. 517.

15. Note: "As a result of the authorities, a doubtful or disputed claim, sufficient to constitute a good consideration for an executory contract of compromise, is one honestly and in good faith asserted, arising from a state of facts upon which a cause of action can be predicated, with the reasonable belief on the part of the party asserting it that he had a fair chance of sustaining his claim, and concerning which an honest controversy may arise, although in fact the claim may be wholly unfounded." Beach, Cont. § 175. Quoted in Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 P. 62. Settlement of a suit is a sufficient consideration to support a note. Powers v. Hambrick, 25 Ky. L. R. 30, 74 S. W. 660. A compromise of a bona fide controversy as to legal rights is based on a sufficient consideration. Albin Co. v. Firth Carpet Co., 24 Ky. L. R. 2432, 74 S. W. 212. A compromise proposition made by insolvent firm to creditors, held a sufficient moral obligation to support a subsequent promise. Taylor v. Hotchkiss, 81 App. Div. 470, 80 N. Y. S. 1042. The fact that it is uncertain which of two parties, both of whom deny liability, is liable for a certain debt, is sufficient consideration to support a settlement between one of such parties and the creditor. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brown [Neb.] 97 N. W. 1038. A compromise of really existing differences embodied in a supplemental agreement cannot be repudiated by one who has benefited thereby. Moorman v. Plummer Lumber Co. [La.] 37 So. 17. Compromise of suit involving scandal. Bunel v. O'Day, 125 F. 303.

16. Voluntary settlements of disputes are favored by the courts and upheld without inquiry as to the merits of the original contentions of the parties. Sing On v. Brown [Or.] 74 P. 207. Where there is a bona fide controversy between parties as to the usurious nature of a contract, a compromise of the dispute will be upheld. Gray v. U. S. S. & L. Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1120, 77 S. W. 200. An agreement to release an asserted claim is based upon sufficient consideration, whether the claim be valid or invalid. Cowen v. Rouss, 40 Misc. 105, 81 N. Y. S. 276. An agreement to compromise doubtful claims, asserted in good faith, is sufficient consideration for a note, even though the claims are found groundless in a subsequent suit. Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 P. 62. The compromise of a doubtful claim is a sufficient and valid consideration for a promise to pay money for the settlement of such claim. Immaterial which side ultimately proves to be right. Melcher v. Ins. Co. of Pa., 97 Me. 512, 55 A. 411. The law favoring the compromise of doubtful claims and avoidance of litigation is a sufficient consideration, though there could have been no recovery if the matter had been litigated. Daly v. Busk Tunnel R. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 513. Where defendants refused to carry out an agreement to compromise claims by paying notes, recovery on the notes was not barred by plaintiff's prosecuting the compromised suit to judgment, or by the fact that such judgment was adverse to her. Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 P. 62.

17. But if the claim sued on is absolutely unsustainable at law or in equity, its ment,[18] have been held sufficient consideration to support some form of accord and satisfaction. The settlement of a liquidated, undisputed liability, by payment of a sum less than that due, lacks consideration, and is void,[19] unless there be a new, binding agreement upon a sufficient consideration.[20] This general rule, however, is confined strictly to the cases falling within it,[21] and even small circumstances of variation have been held sufficient to prevent its application.[22] Thus, a payment in advance, no matter how short the time,[23] or acceptance from an insolvent debtor of part payment in full satisfaction of a claim, is founded on such considcompromise is void for want of consideration. Ivy Coal & C. Co. v. Long [Ala.] 36 So. 722.

18. Debtor agreed not to go into voluntary bankruptcy and creditor knew debtor would have to borrow at a higher rate of interest to pay in full. Held sufficient consideration for a release, debtor paying less than sum due. Rotan Grocery Co. v. Noble [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 586. An agreement to accept a less sum in satisfaction of a judgment, the debtor agreeing not to take advantage of the bankrupt law, is upon a sufficient consideration. Hanson v. McCann [Colo. Payment of part of an obligation, without release under seal, will not have the effect of releasing the whole. Evesson v. Ziegfeld, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 79. Acceptance of portion of face of note, with refusal of settlement on terms of sender, is not accord and satisfaction, since indebtedness is liquidated. Kelley v. Lawrence Bros., 78 App. Div. 484, 79 N. Y. S. 914. The surrender of a policy and acceptance of a sum less than the amount of a liquidated and lawful demand against an insurance company does not amount to an accord and satisfaction. Simons v. Supreme Council, A. L. H., 82 App. Div. 617, 81 N. Y. S. 1014. Where sum due for goods was not in dispute, the acceptance of part payment in cash and rejection of an assigned claim for balance was not a compromise. U. S. Water & Steam Supply Co. v. Dreyfus [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 184. Payment by a debtor of a liquidated amount, presently due, and to which he has no bona fide defense, is no consideration for a release of other unliquidated claims. Woodall v. Pac. M. L. Ins. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1090. The acceptance of a sum of money, less than what is due from guarantors and an agreement not to proceed against them for any further sum, such agreement not being under seal, and being based on no other consideration is nudum pactum as to the balance due. Commercial & Farmers' Nat. Bank v. McCormick, 97 Md. 703, 55 A. 439.

21. Jackson v. Volkening, 81 App. Div. 36, 80 N. Y. S. 1102. The general rule that payment of a sum less than the amount of a liquidated claim is not a satisfaction does not apply to an agreement as to satisfaction of a judgment which has been acted upon by both parties, especially where the judgment creditor has received other benefits. Judgment debtor, having no property, agreed to pay a sum less than judgment, in monthly instalments out of salary, and carried out the agreement, receiving a satisfaction. Held, creditor could not recover the balance. Meeker v. Requa, 87 N. Y. S. 959.

22. Weiss v. Marks, 206 Pa. 513, 56 A. 59; Ebert v. Johns, 206 Pa. 395, 55 A. 1064.

NOTE. Accord and satisfaction by part payment. The general rule has been severely criticized, and in Mississippi the court declined to follow it, holding that the acceptance from a debtor of a sum of money less than is actually due on a distinct agreement that it shall extinguish the whole debt may operate as a discharge, although it is not paid at any different time or place than that agreed upon. The rule is said to be absurd and unreasonable. Clayton v. Clark (74 Miss. 499, 21 So. 565, 22 So. 189) 37 L. R. A. 771.

Many other courts have taken a similar view, and in consequence, slight circumstances of variation from the original agreement have been construed as a sufficient consideration for the new agreement, so as to take the case out from the operation of the rule. Thus a part payment before the debt is due (see text and citation, post), or a payment at a different place (Grant v. Hughes, 96 N. C. 177, 2 S. E. 339), or in a different mode, whereby a new benefit may be conferred or a new burden may be imposed (Rose v. Hall, 26 Conn. 392, 68 Am. Dec. 402), or payment of costs and expenses, in addition to the smaller sum (Harper v. Graham, 20 Ohio, 105), or the giving of a note (Jaffray v. Davis, 11 L. R. A. 710, 124 N. Y. 164, 26 N. E. 351, reversing 48 Hun, 500, 1 N. Y. S. 814), or further security (Boyd v. Hitchcock, 20 Johns. [N. Y.] 76, 11 Am. Dec. 247), or the surrender and cancellation of a note (Ellsworth v. Fogg, 35 Vt. 355), or payment in property other than money (Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 455), or payment or security by a third party (Varney v. Conery, 77 Me. 527, 1 A. 683), have been held to bar further recovery on the original claim. See note to Fuller v. Kemp (138 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 1034) in 20 L. R. A. 785, from which the above citations are taken.

23. Weiss v. Marks, 206 Pa. 513, 56 A. 59. Whole amount not due. Part payment sufficient consideration. Russell v. Stevenson [Wash.] 76 P. 627.

eration that the entire debt is thereby satisfied.[24] The rule has no application to payments by a third party.[25] An agreement to discharge an indebtedness by payment of a less sum than is actually due is governed by the same rules as other contracts, when based on a sufficient consideration.[26]

If the sum due is in dispute or unliquidated, the payment of a sum less than that claimed, upon condition that it is to operate as full payment, is a good accord and satisfaction.[27]

If there be a sufficient consideration, it is immaterial that it moves to[28] or from[29] a third party, if at the request of a party to the accord.[30]

Payments made under an agreement void for want of consideration (or for other reasons) may be applied on the debt.[31]

(§ 1) C. Fraud, mistake and duress.[32]—An accord and satisfaction may, in a court of law or in equity, be set aside for fraud or misrepresentation in the execution or in the inducement to the execution of the contract.[33] A misrepresentation as to the legal effect of a release,[34] or as to its contents amounting to a mere

NOTE. Disputed claim: Where the claim is not a money demand or, if so, is unliquidated, or if liquidated is doubtful in fact or law, any sum, no matter how small, given and received in satisfaction of any demand, no matter how large, will legally satisfy that demand as a compromise. promise,[35] will not render it void. If a release has been procured by fraud, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to pay into court the money received for its execution in order to have it set aside.[36] If a release is not supported by a consideration, it is immaterial whether it was fraudulently obtained, or whether the one giving it knew its contents.[37]

If parties act under a mistake[38] or misconception of rights,[39] the accord and satisfaction may be set aside. But a mutual mistake,[40] or one induced by negligence,[41] or a failure to draw a proper inference from facts communicated,[42] is no ground for relief.

Restitution is necessary when an accord and satisfaction is sought to be rescinded on the ground of fraud or bad faith.[43]

§ 2. Satisfaction or discharge.[44]—The satisfaction consists in the performance of the agreement by one party and its acceptance by the other. An agreement for an accord and satisfaction, which has never been executed, is ineffectual as an accord and satisfaction.[45] But though an accord, without performance according to its terms, is nonenforceable,[46] it may in a proper case become available as an equitable defense.[47] A tender of satisfaction is not sufficient.[48] Prior claims are presumed to be included in a settlement.[49] But claims not sued on and not included in a settlement may be subsequently sued on.[50] A release in general terms of all claims for personal injuries will include an injury not known to exist when the release was given.[51]

§ 3. Pleading, issues, and proof.[52]—An accord and satisfaction cannot be proven under a general denial, but must be specially pleaded.[53] Where, after suit

Evidence of a release admitted under general issue; but this was before the adoption of a rule requiring all affirmative defenses to be set forth in a notice attached to the plea. Cleveland v. Rothschild [Mich.] 94 N. W. 184. Defense to an action of trespass that plaintiff settled with is brought, a settlement is arranged, which defendant refuses to carry out, plaintiff cannot set up the settlement in a supplemental complaint.[54] Fraud cannot be pleaded generally. Facts sufficient to constitute it must be set out.[55]

The defense of accord and satisfaction must be clearly established,[56] but when shown to have been made, the burden is upon the party seeking to avoid its effect, and have it set aside, to show the necessary facts.[57] Fraud[58] or mistake[59] must be established by "clear and satisfactory" proof.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the inducements offered to secure the execution of a release,[60] but not to vary or contradict its terms by showing an oral contemporaneous agreement.[61] A written instrument which is a mere receipt and not a release may be modified, explained or contradicted by parol evidence.[62]

covery and the mutuality of their accounts,[66] and the existence of a fiduciary or partnership relation, are given as grounds for a bill in equity for an accounting, although the validity of the first two grounds mentioned has been much impaired by the modern practice of reference for the examination of accounts.[67] No right to maintain a bill in equity for an accounting results from the fact that a claim contains many items,[68] that the plaintiff does not know how much he is entitled to,[69] that there are set-offs,[70] or that the claim is for a share of profits in a case where there was no complication or fiduciary obligation,[71] or where the accounts are all on one side and no discovery is sought.[72] A claim for a definite sum as the price of an interest in a business sold by one partner to another cannot be recovered by a bill for an accounting.[73] A bill for the sole purpose of redeeming a pledge,[74] or of obtaining a discovery,[75] cannot be maintained, nor will it be allowed where there is an adequate remedy at law.[76] Delay in bringing a suit to settle a partnership business may result in an equal division of the costs,[77] or, in some cases, cause the claim to be barred by the statute of limitations.[78] The right to a bill for an accounting may also be lost by an acceptance and settlement of an account rendered in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake,[79] or, in

Note: An accounting may be had in equity by one partner against the other without a final winding up or dissolution (Miller v. Freeman, 51 L. R. A. 504, 111 Ga. 654, 36 S. E. 961), and creditors for whose benefit an assignment has been made are entitled at all times to be informed of the progress of affairs (State v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 591, 79 N. W. 1081, 51 L. R. A. 33), and upon the voluntary dissolution of a building association, the principle of accounting with members is the same whether the association be solvent or insolvent (People's Bldg. & L. Ass'n v. McPhilamy, 81 Miss. 61, 32 So. 1001, 59 L. R. A. 743).

Where a president of a corporation was to receive 25 per cent of the net profits as a part of his salary after dividends had been set aside, alleged that in ascertaining such profits the inventory was improperly taken, a bill for an accounting did not state a cause of action therefor, the items being neither numerous nor technical. 76. An insurance company insured employers against liability to their employes; the premiums to be determined from the pay roll. An estimate was made in the beginning and premiums paid thereon, differences to be adjusted at the end of the year by rebate or additional payment. The employers refused to make a statement in regard to their pay roll at the end of the year, claiming they were no greater than the estimated amount. 78. Statute begins to run from last item of a mutual account (Wagener v. Steele, 117 Ga. 145, 43 S. E. 403), or against a suit for partnership accounting, from the time the business was closed up (Weber v. Zacharias, 105 Ill. App. 640).

79. Ranald S. S. Co. v. Wesenberg & Co., 122 F. 969.

Louisiana, by an "authentic act."[80] The right cannot be used as a defense to an action upon a promissory note,[81] or in an equitable proceeding as basis for a cross bill by a person not a necessary party to the suit.[82] Statutory actions of account between officers of corporations do not apply to foreign corporations in the absence of special provision to that effect.[83] In Alaska, as in Missouri and Maine, when a partner dies the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of an action for an accounting against his estate.[84]

§ 2. Persons liable and entitled to accounting.[85]—Liability of particular classes of persons to account is specifically treated in appropriate titles.[86] Trustees and other fiduciaries may be compelled to account by a bill in equity.[87] Partners have the same remedy against each other[88] after the cessation of the dealings in which they were jointly interested,[89] and before their account has been stated.[90] A person by fraudulent conspiracy with one partner getting possession of the assets of the firm may, together with the fraudulent co-partner, be compelled to account.[91]

§ 3. Procedure before reference or without reference.[92] Parties.[93]—A bill for an account against different parties on different causes of action is demurrable,[94] as is a bill seeking to review a consent decree for alimony.[95] A bill for an accounting for the removal of a trustee appointed in a suit for divorce and seeking to review a consent decree for alimony and for adjustment of certain partnership matters between the parties is multifarious.[96]

Pleading and evidence.[97]—Complainant in a bill for an accounting must allege that something is due him.[98] If the bill demands an account on the ground of a partnership only, it cannot be maintained on any other theory.[99] Debts due from plaintiff to defendant in an action on an alleged mutual account need not be pleaded with the same particularity as debts due from defendant to plaintiff for which recovery is sought.[1] An account rendered, not objected to within a reasonable time, is prima facie correct.[2] The report of a corporation expert, incorporated in the records of the corporation, is not competent evidence of the value of its stock.[3]

Judgment or decree.[4]—After stating the account, a court of equity will enforce a settlement without requiring the prevailing party to bring suit,[5] and, besides distributing a fund in court, may order a partner to account for commissions he has received for the firm.[6] Where the bill of complaint and the evidence indicate that there were no profits, it is error to order the defendant to account.[7] Instead of appointing a receiver, the court may accept a bond with sureties from defendant, conditioned to comply with any order of the court.[8]

§ 4. Reference and proceedings thereon.—If the defendant denies the right to an accounting, one should not be ordered except after hearing by an interlocutory decree.[9]

§ 5. Proceedings on coming in of report.[14] Where the reference to a master for an accounting, the investigation, his report, and the confirmation thereof, all occurred within two hours, while the dealings covered more than six years, the case will be sent back for a proper trial.[15]

In an action to recover commissions for sale of packed salmon, evidence, correspondence relative thereto, held sufficient to show an account stated. Gorman v. McGowan [Or.] 76 P. 769. In an action by an as-the parties,[18] and upon a sufficient consideration.[19] It need not be in writing in the absence of statute.[20] Accounts in a bank pass book with vouchers returned is an account stated.[21] The failure to object to an account rendered within a reasonable time is an admission of its correctness,[22] as where a depositor receives his bank book duly balanced and canceled checks,[23] unless sent to one who has never had any dealings with the sender,[24] or the party sought to be charged is not made a party to the account.[25] A party to whom an account is sent is given a reasonable time in which to examine and object thereto, and what is a reasonable time depends on the usual course of business between the parties and is a question of law.[26] The mere silence of an administrator, when an account against his intestate is presented, does not authorize an inference that he has thereby stated the account and relieve the claimant from establishing it in the usual way or put upon the estate the burden of affirmatively establishing mistake or error.[27] A statement of a sum which will be accepted in compromise is not an signee of an account for labor and materials, testimony by the assignor that he presented the bill and the defendant said he would send a check, which was denied by the defendant, is insufficient. Muller v. S. Aronson & Co., 88 N. Y. S. 1006.

Note: Primarily and originally an account stated was an agreement between persons who had had previous transactions, fixing the amount due in respect thereto, and promising payment (Zacarino v. Pallotti, 49 Conn. 36), but the courts have drifted away from the original standard and it is held that an express promise of payment is not necessary (Claire v. Claire, 10 Neb. 54); otherwise where one partner rendered account to another on dissolution (Killam v. Preston, 4 Watts & S. [Pa.] 15). There must, however, be an absolute acknowledgment of a certain sum due (Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480, and cases cited in note to Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81). A promise by a landlord to repay a tenant out of the next month's rent, moneys expended for repairs is an account stated (Seago v. Deane, 4 Bing. 459). For an exhaustive collection of illustrations see note to Vanbebber v. Plunkett [Or.] 27 L. R. A. 811. The balance must be definitely fixed (State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. Law, 446). An account stated may be oral (Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357; James v. Fellowes, 20 La. Ann. 116. Contra, Wood v. Gault, 2 Md. Ch. 433). There may be an account stated between banker and depositor (Weisser's Adm'rs v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 76. Partners (Cochrane v. Allen, 58 N. H. 250). Broker and customer (Lawson v. Douglass, 43 N. Y. Whether a conversation is sufficient to constitute is a question for the court (Bishop v. Chambre, 3 Car. & P. 55; Fleischner v. Kubli, 20 Or. 328; Davis v. Tiernan, 2 How. [Miss.] 786; Moran v. account stated,[28] nor is a confession of an amount due,[29] nor the mere furnishing of an account not given with a view to ascertaining the balance due,[30] nor the mere sending of statements.[31] An account charged in one item is not subject for a judgment as a book account.[32] Where there was no promise to pay in consideration of an extension of time, an instruction based upon such promise is erroneous.[33] An assignor of an account cannot settle after the transfer of which the debtor has notice.[34]

§ 2. Binding effect, rights and liabilities.[35]—A stated account never gives one claiming under it the benefit of an absolute estoppel, but it may be impeached for fraud, mistake or error,[36] the burden of which is on the party impeaching,[37] and the evidence must be clear and satisfactory,[38] and can only be opened to the extent that fraud or mistake is clearly shown,[39] and an express exception of errors makes no difference, as that is always implied.[40] One rendering an account stated is bound thereby until a defect is specifically pointed out and objected to.[41] Though an account stated be proved, yet if it appear that it is wholly unfounded, there can be no recovery,[42] and where a claim is absolutely unsustainable, its compromise will constitute no sufficient consideration.[43] An account stated may be settled by payment of a smaller sum than that agreed upon.[44] Failure of an administrator to object to an account stated which is presented against the estate will not excuse establishment in the usual way.[45] An administrator's or executor's account when approved is a stated account, within rule as to surcharging and falsifying.[46]

§ 3. Remedies on account stated.[47]—An action on a stated account is based on a new promise to pay into which all prior transactions are merged.[48] The three years' limitation applies to accounts stated and verbally or tacitly acknowledged, as well as open accounts.[49]

Pleading.[50]—A bill to reform an account for error must allege the mistakes distinctly.[51] An itemized copy need not be set forth in the pleadings.[52] One who objects to a stated account must allege an omission or deny the correctness of its items.[53] It is sufficient to require an affidavit of defense if the substance of the claim is set forth.[54] Payment as a defense must be specially pleaded.[55] Refusal by the judge to strike out credits and disputed items in plaintiff's account is not error.[56] Where the issue is one of balancing of opposing accounts, one may have a special exception if the items of an account are not specific enough.[57] Where a cause of action is on an account which one claims as assignee, an amendment declaring on an account stated immediately between the parties is a departure.[58]

Evidence and questions of fact.[59]—The proof must show that there was a meeting of the minds as to the balance due.[60] The account stated and unqualified approval of defendant must be shown.[61] It is not error to admit in evidence an account signed by both parties.[62] In an action on account stated, evidence of an arrangement between plaintiffs and defendants to pay plaintiff a certain sum and of certain payments made constitutes a prima facie case.[63] Where issue raised is as to the existence of a settlement, the defendant cannot surcharge and falsify it,[64] but any facts tending to show its improbability are competent.[65] Evidence of an account rendered by a third party to the defendant is not sufficient proof of the allegations of the complaint.[66] Evidence of a stenographer to whom was dictated a memoradum of a balance due in the presence of both parties is competent.[67] Where an issue arises as to an account, the best evidence is the books of account.[68] A statement of account in which a purchaser lists articles at what seller claims to be the agreed price is, in the absence of mistake, conclusive evidence that the prices had been agreed upon.[69] An ex parte statement of an account with an affidavit attached is not admissible in evidence against the other party.[70] In an action for balance due on an account stated, evidence of a witness that defendant fully understood that he was to pay the balance is objectionable as a conclusion.[71] In an action on a guaranty, an account between principal and obligee made before suit brought is admissible in evidence against the guarantor, if the latter failed to deny its correctness.[72]

§ 4. Remedies on open accounts.[73]—It is error for court to instruct the jury in an action upon an open account that the plaintiff might recover such sum as the services rendered were reasonably worth.[74] In an action to recover balance due on an open account, a credit sheet which is ambiguous as to whether items are credits or debits will not justify the court in directing a verdict for defendant.[75] An action on a book account for goods sold would not lie to recover upon an implied liability.[76] The mode of proof provided by statute in a suit upon an open account does not apply to an action for damages, although an itemized list with values of damaged articles is attached to the summons and sworn to as correct.[77] Interest will be allowed from the time the account is due,[78] or from time of bringing suit.[79] An action is not barred where there has been a partial payment within the statutory period.[80] Entries to be admissible need not be made in a regular account book,[81] and non-entry is admissible to rebut evidence of payment.[82] In an action on an account for commissions for selling land transferred to plaintiff, it was proper to cross-examine the assignor relative to the negotiations.[83]

parties;[86] but it is necessary to make a deed admissible as evidence,[87] or to entitle an instrument to be recorded,[88] or to convey,[89] or incumber the homestead,[90] which fact must appear from the instrument itself in the form of a certificate of the officer before whom it was taken,[91] and cannot be proven by parol.[92] A contract not acknowledged as required by law is unenforceable,[93] and an unacknowledged plat does not constitute a dedication, either common law or statutory.[94] A chattel mortgage need not be acknowledged by both husband and wife.[95] Where justice requires, equity will aid want of acknowledgment by its decree.[96]

Note.—There is a conflict of authority whether the act of taking an acknowledgment is ministerial or judicial. The courts of Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, Maryland and Ohio, holding that it is ministerial and an interested party may take, while in California, Alabama, Iowa, Missouri, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia and Mississippi, it is held to be a judicial act and in Tennessee a quasi judicial act. But aside from this it is contrary to public policy that an interested officer should take. Cooper v. Hamilton Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n [Tenn.] 33 L. R. A. 338.

even here the notary must have a beneficial interest in upholding the transaction after it is made.[5] An acknowledgment and certificate thereof taken by a de facto officer before removal are valid.[6] A United States consul,[7] or a deputy clerk of court,[8] may take.

§ 3. Taking acknowledgments.[9]—In the absence of statutory provisions, the law does not permit an officer to take the acknowledgment of a stranger without satisfactory proof of his identity.[10] An officer cannot lawfully take the acknowledgment of a person whose name is not at the time affixed to the instrument.[11] No particular form of acknowledgment is necessary.[12]

§ 4. Certificate of acknowledgment.[13]—The contents of a certificate are prescribed by statute.[14] It is a presumption that officers perform their duty so a certificate not made in strict conformity with a statute is liberally construed,[15] and a substantial compliance is all that is required.[16] A mere clerical error in a certificate will not destroy its validity.[17] The certificate of acknowledgment of a writing not required to be recorded is no evidence of its execution.[18] Words

§ 5. Authentication of officer's authority.[20]

§ 6. Operation and effect.[21]—It is the policy of the law to uphold certificates and they will be liberally construed if the substance be found and the statute has been substantially followed.[22] The certificate of acknowledgment cannot be impeached except for fraud, collusion or imposition,[23] and the evidence must be clear, convincing and satisfactory.[24] The testimony of interested witnesses unsupported by other positive and credible evidence will not be allowed to overcome the certificate.[25] A notary who takes an acknowledgment cannot give testimony impeaching it.[26] An officer's certificate is more to be relied on than his memory after several years.[27] The burden of impeaching a certificate is on the party claiming that it is false and fraudulent.[28] An acknowledgment to the execution of an instrument carries with it the adoption of the signature thereto.[29]

A certificate stating that the married woman declared that she willingly executed the deed and did not wish to retract it, the acknowledgment is not vitiated by the fact that the certificate does not expressly state that she acknowledged the deed to be her free act. Id. In the body of a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed the officer taking was declared to be the county clerk. The certificate was signed by such officer with "Clk. H. Co." appended to his signature. Held, that the official character of the office was sufficiently indicated. Riviere v. Wilkins, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 72 S. W. 608.

23. Grantors claimed they did not understand the nature of the instrument they were signing, though it had been explained to them in their language. Boldt v. Becker [Neb.] 95 N. W. 509.

24. Testimony by the mortgagor that she had not been at the place where the acknowledgment was taken for a year held insufficient where the notary and another testified that she made the acknowledgment. Banking House of A. Castetter v. Stewart [Neb.] 98 N. W. 34. Not disproved by testimony of the grantor that he did not execute the deed, nor by slight corroboration of that testimony. Gritten v. Dickerson, 202 Ill. 372, 66 N. E. 1090. Testimony of one asserting her claim 33 years after execution of a deed when her husband and the notary were dead held insufficient to impeach a certificate. Swett v. Large [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1104. When mortgagors of a homestead denied that the wife acknowledged, while the notary and mortgagee testified that she did, evidence held insufficient. McGuire v. Wilson [Neb.] 99 N. W. 244.

25. Testimony of the mortgagors that one of them never appeared before the notary, and testimony of another that he knew the notary had certified acknowledgments when the parties did not appear before him. Western Loan & Sav. Co. v. Waisman, 32 Wash. 644, 73 P. 703.

26. A notary testified that there was no acknowledgment. First Nat. Bank v. Glenn [Idaho] 77 P. 623.

27. It constituting his official statement made at the time of the act as to the truth and accuracy thereof. First Nat. Bank v. Glenn [Idaho] 77 P. 623.

28. A finding by the lower court, that an acknowledgment was duly made, against the numerical preponderance of witnesses, was not disturbed. Langenbeck v. Louis, 140 Cal. 406, 73 P. 1086. Where execution and delivery of a deed were established by evidence not objected to, the erroneous admission of a certificate of acknowledgment was harmless error. Wren v. Howland [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 894.

29. That it is the name and signature of a person acknowledging, where an unwitnessed mark of such person constitutes the signature. First Nat. Bank v. Glenn [Idaho] 77 P. 623.

30. See 1 Curr. L. 19.

31. Defect in certificate of acknowledgment and authentication of a foreign power of attorney to sell land. Freedman v. Oppenheim, 80 App. Div. 487, 81 N. Y. S. 110.

32. A trust deed of a homestead acknowledged before a stockholder in the corporation which advanced the loan was void, and before the curative act was passed a subsequent deed of trust was made to another. Held, the later deed was the prior lien. Steger v. Traveling Men's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 208 Ill. 236, 70 N. E. 236. A curative act has no retrospective operation as against effect.[33] Whether a seal is necessary depends on statute.[34] An acknowledgment by a married woman that it was her own act and deed is void under a statute requiring that she acknowledge that she signed willingly.[35]

ACTIONS.

Only general questions relating strictly to Actions are treated. Causes of Action and Defenses and Forms of Action are distinct matters which are treated elsewhere.[36] The word "action" is used in statutes with varied meanings.[37] Motions have been held to come within the purview of that term,[38] as have special proceedings,[39] though for most purposes it is otherwise, but proceedings before a county board of supervisors are not actions.[40] a lien acquired before it was passed. Fugman v. Jiri Washington Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 209 Ill. 176, 70 N. E. 644.

33. A trust deed to a homestead was void because the notary who took the acknowledgment was interested; a subsequent trust deed to another party was valid; a curative act made the first deed valid when the homestead was subsequently abandoned. Held, the second trust deed was the prior lien. Id.

34. The fact that the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed in 1843 was without a seal was immaterial, no seal being required prior to 1846. Riviere v. Wilkens. 31 Tex. Civ. App. 454. 72 S. W. 608. Statutes requiring a probate judge to affix his seal to the certificate of acknowledgment of a husband and wife who conveyed land in a county other than his residence has no application to the deed of an unmarried man. Westfeldt v. Adams [N. C.] 47 S. E. 816. A commissioner of deeds for North Carolina, residing in another state, is not required to affix his seal to the certificate acknowledging the execution of a deed conveying land in North Carolina. Johnson v. Duvall [N. C.] 47 S. E. 611.

35. Tiemann v. Cobb [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 250. The absence of certificate of official character of notary who purported to have taken the acknowledgment of the execution of a receiver's bond which was admitted in evidence is not cause for reversal of judgment of foreclosure at the suit of such receiver. Livingston v. Eaton, 90 App. Div. 251, 85 N. Y. S. 500. Evidence in regard to a second acknowledgment to a deed held inadmissible to show when the deed was executed. Bogart v. Moody [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 633.

38. Crissey v. Morrill [C. C. A.] 125 F. 878. Under statutes where a notice takes the place of the writ and declaration, a motion for a judgment for money is an action at law. Reed v. Gold [Va.] 45 S. E. 868. A proceeding for leave to issue execution on a judgment charging lands with owelty in partition is an "action," as the term "action" is used in the North Carolina statute of limitations, Code, § 136. Ex parte Smith, 134 N. C. 719, 47 S. E. 16.

39. Mandamus is a "civil action." People v. Deneen, 201 Ill. 452, 66 N. E. 368. See topics dealing with various special proceedings, such as Certiorari, 1 Curr. L. 499; Quo Warranto, 2 Curr. L. 1377, and the like.

The manner of commencing[41] an action varies in the different states; in some it is commenced by the issuance of a summons,[42] in others by the service of the summons,[43] when the original notice therefor is given to the sheriff, not from the time of filing amendments to supply omissions in the original petition,[44] and in others by the filing of the complaint.[45] The right of action must be complete when the action is commenced.[46] An appellant is in court by the appeal, no other service being required.[47] An action may be terminated[48] by consolidation.[49] result of negligence,[51] but he must use his own land with reference to the rights of others,[52] and an offensive occupation cannot be carried on to the very great annoyance of one dwelling immediately near.[53] He may enjoin the maintenance of a bawdy house,[54] though the premises were so used before he purchased his property,[55] and was tolerated by the municipal authorities,[56] and was a public nuisance.[57] An owner who is specially damaged by a nuisance may recover therefor.[58]

He may divert percolating waters.[59]

If one maintains proper eave troughs, no right of action accrues to an adjoining owner if injury results from extraordinary rainfall.[60]

He may cut off overhanging branches of trees at the line and dig out the roots penetrating his soil, but he may go no farther,[61] unless the adjoining owner consents,[62] trees standing on the line being common property.[63] He is liable for damages by the fall of a dangerous structure maintained on his premises.[64]

The fact that a railroad company piled ties on its right of way so as to obstruct the view of an abutting owner was not an infringement of his rights,[65] but where water seeped through, gathered in pools underneath and emitted noxious odors causing malaria, it was.[66]

A contract between adjoining owners for an easement must be in writing.[67]

Lateral support.[68]—An adjoining owner may be restrained from depriving land in its natural state from lateral support,[69] but where an owner had deprived his own land of its cohesive force and on being deprived of its lateral support by an adjoining owner it fell, he was not entitled to recover for damage so caused,[70] therefore unless provided by statute, an owner making excavations is only required

57. He was compelled to witness indecent conduct and listen to indecent noises and thereby suffered a special injury. Ingersoll v. Rousseau [Wash.] 76 P. 513. See also Nuisance, 2 Curr. L. 1062.

58. The fact that adjoining lot owners, similarly situated, have not joined in nor brought suit on their own account for damages for the erection of a fire tower in a public square does not prejudice the rights of one who does bring action. Fessler v. Union [N. J. Eq.] 56 A. 272.

59. The digging of a well which destroyed the well of an adjoining owner. Houston & T. Cent. R. Co. v. East [Tex.] 81 S. W. 279.

60. Extraordinary rainstorms causing large quantities of water to be precipitated on premises from an adjoining owner's roof. All reasonable precautions had been taken, no recovery. Philips v. Taylor [Minn.] 100 N. W. 649.

61. Harndon v. Stultz [Iowa] 100 N. W. 329.

62. In an action to compel one to dig up a line hedge, such party disclaimed ownership and expressed a willingness that it be removed. Held, the other party who had set it out could remove it at his own expense. Harndon v. Stultz [Iowa] 100 N. W. 329.

63. Where one owner set out a hedge on the line, the care and maintenance of which was assumed by the adjoining owner, the one setting it out could not compel the other to dig it up on its becoming a nuisance. Harndon v. Stultz [Iowa] 100 N. W. 329.

to support the land of an adjoining owner in its natural state and not to support the buildings thereon,[71] and is not liable for injuries thereto,[72] or persons thereon[73] in the absence of negligence, and the mere fact that the wall cracked while the excavating was being done raises no presumption of negligence.[74] If he is negligent, the fact that an independent contractor performed the work will not relieve him,[75] though it has been otherwise held;[76] but an independent contractor who is negligent is not liable.[77]

The owner of an unimproved lot has the right to excavate by using reasonable care and giving timely notice to the owner of adjacent buildings,[78] who must assume responsibility to protect his buildings,[79] and the cost of shoving up or underpinning falls on him,[80] unless otherwise provided by statute. The New York statute does not admit of conditions being annexed which are otherwise than incident to the duty to protect the building,[81] and a party by an unnecessary compliance with such statute may deprive himself of his common-law rights.[82]

Overleaning walls.[83]—A property owner may enjoin the continued maintenance by an adjoining owner of a structure projecting over his land,[84] or recover damages therefor,[85] providing the evidence shows an encroachment.[86]

71. A statute providing that an owner desiring to excavate more than 10 feet must protect the wall of an adjoining structure at his own expense and that the section shall not apply to buildings now erected, or to dwelling houses, applies only to buildings other than dwelling houses erected after the passage of the act. Wadasz v. Arcade Real Estate Co., 206 Pa. 539, 56 A. 46. St. Louis Charter does not authorize an ordinance limiting the depth a lot owner can excavate without protecting contiguous buildings. Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1004. A lot owner called the attention of an adjoining owner to an ordinance when notifying him to protect his buildings against an excavation. Held, he was not estopped to attack the validity of the ordinance. Id. A building was injured by the making of excavations on the adjoining lot. Held, in view of a statute that an instruction that ordinary care to sustain "the land" without an instruction as to the duty of the owner to protect the superincumbent weight of the building was not error. Wilkins v. Grant, 118 Ga. 522, 45 S. E. 415. Damage caused a building by excavating on an adjoining lot. Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1004.

72. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence. Serio v. Murphy [Md.] 58 Atl. 435. One under whose supervision the excavating is being done is bound to exercise only ordinary care. Id.

73. Where an owner permits land of an adjacent owner to be deprived of its lateral support, he is not liable to such adjacent owner for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of the soil under his weight, unless the removal of the lateral support was in a negligent manner. Pullan v. Stallman [N. J. Law] 56 A. 116.

74. Serio v. Murphy [Md.] 58 A. 436.

75. An owner excavated below the foundation of an adjoining wall and failed to exercise ordinary precautions. He was held liable, though the work was done by an independent contractor. Davis v. Summerfield, 133 N. C. 325, 45 S. E. 654. The employment of an independent contractor to make an excavation adjacent to an abutting owner's wall does not relieve the proprietor from the duty to give the adjacent owner timely notice of the nature and extent of the intended excavation. Id.

76. A building being erected for an express company by an independent contractor, for injuries caused by such contractor the company was not liable. Korn v. Weir, 88 N. Y. S. 976.

77. Adjoining owners agreed that during the erection of a line wall the one erecting the building should do certain things to protect the property of the other. Held, that no action would lie against a contractor who performed this work negligently. Cobb v. C. Everett Clark Co. [Ga.] 45 S. E. 305. A contract between a lot owner and a construction company provided that the construction company should protect adjacent walls. Held, that the adjoining owner could not enforce this provision against the construction company. Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1004. Where an adjoining owner gave notice to his neighbor to protect his house as required by ordinance, he is not liable for injuries to the house, the work having been done with ordinary care. Serio v. Murphy [Md.] 58 A. 435.

78, 79, 80. Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 1004.

81. Under statute imposing on lot owners about to excavate the duty of protecting adjacent walls "if afforded license to enter and not otherwise," the adjoining owner could not impose as a condition of the license to enter and shore up, that the licensee protect certain plumbing from freezing. Korn v. Weir, 88 N. Y. S. 976.

82. Under New York statute one intending to excavate more than 10 feet must on receiving license from the adjoining owner shore up his building. Where one did not intend to go 10 feet, but got a license to shore up the adjoining building, and did it so that it fell, he was liable for the damages and was estopped to say that he did not intend to go down 10 feet. Blanchard v. Savarese, 89 N. Y. S. 664.

83. See 1 Curr. L. 21, n. 1.

84. A wooden structure resting on beams projecting from the foundation over the land

Common ways and appurtenances.[87]—One may not interfere with an easement obtained from a common grantor,[88] nor construct a stairway leading to his basement so as to make a landing place of the sidewalk in front of an adjoining owner.[89] A tenant may maintain an action for obstructing a common way.[90]

Spite fences.[91]—An unnecessary and unreasonable use of land to the injury of another is not a property right,[92] but that a fence was erected to annoy and from motives of malice is not sufficient to give an adjoining owner a cause of action.[93]

Line fences.—Where a boundary line between adjoining owners is disputed, the proprietors may by verbal agreement fix the line which if acted on by them of an adjoining owner. Norwalk Heating & Lighting Co. v. Vernam, 75 Conn. 662, 55 A. 168. The possession and occupancy of a structure projecting over the land of another, but not touching it, is not an ouster within the meaning of a statute, declaring conveyances of land of which the vendor is ousted to be void. Id.

85. For the unlawful construction of a wall on his premises. Graves v. Broughton [Mass.] 69 N. E. 1083.

86. Where surveyors for one owner testified that a wall did not extend over the line and surveyors for the other party testified that it extended over three-fourths of an inch, evidence held insufficient to show an encroachment. Ipser v. Rosenbaum, 25 Ky. L. R. 2202, 80 S. W. 187.

87. See 1 Curr. L. 22, n. 8, 9.

88. Where adjoining owners have an easement over an alley, one of them cannot excavate the alley to obtain access to his building and light and air for his basement, unless the excavation can be used so as not to substantially interfere with the right of passage. Mershon v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 208 Pa. 292, 57 A. 569.

89. One caused an opening to be made in the sidewalk in front of his building, which extended to within 10 inches of his line, and the railing guarding it to within 23 inches of the line. The view to an adjoining owner's windows was obstructed by people stopping at the head of the stairs. Perry v. Castner [Iowa] 100 N. W. 84.

90. A common hallway affording entrance to two hotels on separate lots had been used in common by the proprietors under an agreement. One of them constructed fire proof shutters in the hallway and prevented the tenant of the other from using it. Held, under a statute relative to the construction of any structure intended to spite or annoy an adjoining owner, the tenant could maintain an action without joining his landlord. Winsor v. German S. & L. Soc., 31 Wash. 365, 72 P. 66. A contract for joint use of a hallway between two hotel buildings provided that all matters in dispute should be left to arbitration. Held, that where one had placed obstructions in the hallway which had been repeatedly removed by the other, he was estopped to set up against a petition to enjoin such act that arbitration had not been proposed and refused. Id.

91. See 1 Curr. L. 22, n. 11.

92. A statute declaring any fence exceeding five feet in height and erected to annoy an adjoining owner to be a private nuisance, and giving the injured person damages was held constitutional. Horan v. Byrnes [N. H.] 54 A. 945.

93. Where a lot was used for gardening and there was an unobstructed view therefrom across an adjacent lot to a side street, the owner had no cause of action against the owner of the adjacent lot for erecting a high board fence along the boundary, though it was done for malice and injured her lot for the purpose named. Giller v. West [Ind.] 69 N. E. 548. The erection of a fence 12 feet high, on one's own property, shutting off the view of the public and the view, light and air of a neighbor, does not constitute a public nuisance, nor an infraction of a statute imposing a penalty for maintaining an obstruction so as to injure the property of another, though erected through motives of malice. Russell v. State [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 482. A conclusion that a fence was maliciously erected held supported by a finding that it was of tight boards 5½ feet high and set on top of a picket fence 3½ feet high, and that it was erected to annoy an adjoining owner, though by other findings it appeared that defendant intended the inclosure for the purpose of exercising his horses, and that he had erected the fence to placate his wife, whose personal motive was to spite her neighbor. Whitlock v. Uhle, 75 Conn. 423, 53 A. 891.

NOTE.—By the weight of authority, it is held that in the absence of statute a structure maliciously erected by one on his own land to cut off light or air from an adjoining owner gives no right of action to the person aggrieved. By the authorities so holding it is argued that the maxim sic utere, etc., requires only abstention from legal injury, and that unless an easement is established by prescription or contract, such a structure infringes no legal right. Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 458; Paine v. Chandler, 134 N. Y. 385, 32 N. E. 18. And there being no legal wrong the motive becomes immaterial. Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 458; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39; Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390; Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Wkly. Law Bul. 16; Guest v. Reynolds, 68 Ill. 478; Ward v. Neal, 35 Ala. 602; Letts v. Kessler, 54 Ohio St. 73, 42 N. E. 765, 40 L. R. A. 177; Metzger v. Hochrein, 107 Wis. 267, 83 N. W. 308, 50 L. R. A. 305. The contrary doctrine has been held in Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838, 8 L. R. A. 184 [with note]; Flaherty v. Moran, 81 Mich. 52, 45 N. W. 381, 8 L. R. A. 183; Sankey v. St. Mary's Female Academy, 8 Mont. 265, 21 P. 23. Statutes have been passed in several states regulating the height of boundary fences, and such statutes are held constitutional. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407, 19 N. E. 393. Some of these, like the California act (Act March 9, 1895), inhibit fences over a certain height irrespective of motive. Western Granite & Marble Co. v.

will be enforced by the courts.[94] At common law an adjoining owner has no right to build his fence beyond his own land,[95] and if he builds it within his line, adjacent owners may not encroach on his property.[96] The burden is on an adjoining owner to show that a line fence built partly on his land is unreasonable for the purposes intended.[97]

Measure of damages.[98]—Speculative damages cannot be recovered for an encroachment,[99] but compensatory,[1] and in case malice is shown, punitive damages may be recovered.[2]

§ 4. Appeals and Subsequent Proceedings. Practice on Appeal (44).

This topic includes only admiralty jurisdiction and practice. The law of maritime traffic and of navigation is treated elsewhere.[3]

§ 1. Jurisdiction and courts.[4]—Courts of admiralty of the United States take cognizance of any case within the general martime law whenever the res or person to be affected is within the reach of its process.[5] Hence they have jurisdiction of an action in personam against the owner of a foreign ship to recover for injuries sustained by an American passenger on the high seas,[6] and may, in their discretion, entertain a suit by an alien seaman against a foreign ship to recover damages for the Knickerbocker, 103 Cal. 111, 37 P. 192. Under the Connecticut act, however, malice is essential [Gen. St. § 1277]. Harbison v. White, 46 Conn. 106; Gallagher v. Dodge, 48 Conn. 387. And the same is true under the Maine statute (Lord v. Langdon, 91 Me. 221. 39 A. 552) and that of Massachusetts (Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81), and New Hampshire (Hunt v. Coggin, 66 N. H. 140, 50 Atl. 250, in which it was said that defendant need not have been actuated solely by malice). Such statutes have been sustained as applying to fences erected before their passage. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407, 19 N. E. 393.

From note to Letts v. Kessler [Ohio] 40 L. R. A. 177. See, also, briefs in Metzger v. Hochrein [Wis.] 50 L. R. A. 305.

96. Where an owner's fence is built an inch within his line an adjoining owner may not in raising the grade of his lot pile dirt on such inch of land. Berry v. Fleming, 87 App. Div. 53, 83 N. Y. S. 1066. Montana statute providing that if one owner use the line fence of his neighbor he must share the cost of construction contemplates that the fence shall lie one-half on the land of each. Hoar v. Hennessy [Mont.] 74 P. 452.

97. To prevent the washing down of the earth from the lot on the higher level. Hoar v. Hennessy [Mont.] 74 P. 452. Adjoining owners entered into an agreement that only a fence of a certain kind was to be erected on a vacant strip between their lots. Held that the erection of a high board fence would be enjoined since it would violate the contract. Silverfield v. Frank, 43 Or. 502, 73 P. 1032.

98. See 1 Curr. L. 22, n. 12-14.

99. A building leaned over an adjoining lot so as to obstruct the erection of a factory. The adjoining owner erected a temporary structure and continued his manufacture. Held, that he was not entitled to recover for loss of profits which it was set up would inevitably occur and which would be due to the overleaning wall. Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 72 P. 406.

1. But he was entitled to recover loss of profits sustained by reason of the obstruction, and the cost of the erection of the temporary structure and the expense of setting up machinery therein and of removing it to the permanent building (Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 72 P. 406), also the amount paid a watchman to guard the temporary structure during such delay (Id.), and the difference between the contract price of lumber and the price he was subsequently required to pay, the sellers having refused to hold the contract open (Id.). Where an owner of adjoining lots contracts with the vendee of one of them to deepen a well on the line until it affords a sufficient supply of water, and fails to do so the measure of damages is the cost of sinking it to such depth. Plunkett v. Meredith [Ark.] 77 S. W. 600. And if such vendor prevents the vendee from sinking it she can recover the cost of sinking a well on her own premises. Id.

2. And punitive damages if the defendant maliciously and for the purpose of harassing him refused to remove the wall. Plunkett v. Meredith [Ark.] 77 S. W. 600.

failure of the master to provide him with proper care, nursing and medical treatment after his accidental injury while in the service of the ship.[7]

That a vessel is engaged in commerce wholly within a state does not exclude it from admiralty jurisdiction.[8]

State statutes cannot extend or restrict the admiralty jurisdiction exclusively vested in the Federal courts, but can only operate to furnish an additional remedy.[9] A canal forming part of a continuous highway for interstate and foreign commerce, though wholly within a state, is a navigable water of the United States and its canal boats are ships within the maritime law.[10]

Maritime contracts.[11]—In order that a court of admiralty may have jurisdiction over a contract, it must be essentially and wholly maritime in its character. It must relate to the trade and business of the sea, and must provide for maritime services, maritime transactions, or maritime casualties,[12] but it is immaterial whether it is to be performed on land or water.[13]

Maritime torts.[14]—The fact of locality alone does not give the court jurisdiction of an action for tort, committed on the high seas or other navigable waters, but it must further appear that the tort was maritime in character.[15]

There is jurisdiction in rem of a libel for negligent towage in the absence of a contract, for the liability is founded in tort.[16]

Where the injury to a vessel is done upon the land, though it originated upon the water, the damage is not a subject of admiralty jurisdiction,[17] but the fact that

9. Lien given by state statutes not test of jurisdiction. Rev. St. Me. c. 93, § 7, giving lien on vessels for use of wharf, does not give court of admiralty jurisdiction of suit in rem to recover for rent of wharf. The James T. Furber, 129 F. 808. Remedy may be enforced by Federal courts only when contract is maritime. The Mary F. Chisholm, 129 F. 814.

12. Lease of space at a wharf for use of vessel at fixed annual rental is lease of realty and not maritime contract. The James T. Furber, 129 F. 808. The test to be applied is, does the suit arise from the necessities of navigation or from any matters relating to the commerce of the sea? Sale to fishermen of tobacco, clothing, and other articles of personal use held not maritime in character. The Mary F. Chisholm, 129 F. 814. A mere contract to procure insurance is not maritime. Reliance Lumber Co. v. Rothschild, 127 F. 745.

Contract to furnish material to build a floating dock, retaining a lien thereon (Arnold v. Eastin's Trustee, 25 Ky. L. R. 895, 76 S. W. 855), and claims for a stipulated commission for obtaining a charter and for an attendance fee, are not maritime (Richard v. Holman, 123 F. 734).

A contract by master of steamboat to collect and transport certain cotton seed from one port to another within a reasonable time, for freight specified, is a maritime contract, and shipper is entitled to recover in admiralty for breach thereof. Florence Cotton Oil Co. v. Alabama Towboat Co. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 915. Has jurisdiction of suits on contracts of maritime insurance, and hence of a suit on an accepted application for such insurance, or binding slip. Kerr v. Union Marine Ins. Co., 124 F. 835. To bring a case whether of contract or tort, within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty, maritime relations of some sort must exist. Campbell v. Hackfeld [C. C. A.] 125 F. 696.

13. Libelant chartered scow to city to carry street sweepings, etc., to island, which city was filling in. It grounded on island when tide receded, through charterer's negligence. In action on contract for failure to return vessel, held, admiralty had jurisdiction. Dailey v. City of New York, 128 F. 796. Contract for repairs on vessel in dry dock is maritime. Perry v. Haines, 191 U. S. 17, 24 S. Ct. 8.

14. See 1 Curr. L. 23, n. 29-31.

15. Action for injury to stevedore through negligence of contracting stevedore not within jurisdiction of admiralty court. Campbell v. Hackfeld [C. C. A.] 125 F. 696. A statute imposing on the agent of a foreign insurance company doing business without complying with the requirements of the state, the penalty of "being personally liable on such contract" imposes a tort, not a contract liability, and since it is not maritime admiralty has no jurisdiction. Reliance Lumber Co. v. Rothschild, 127 F. 745.

16. The Temple Emery, 122 F. 180.

17. Dailey v. City of New York, 128 F. 796. The locus of the damage and not of the origin of the tort is the test of admiralty jurisdiction in tort. No libel can be maintained for injuries to a permanent structure resting upon land. Collision of a ship with a beacon resting on piles in a river channel. The Blackheath, 122 F. 112. Falling between a wharf and vessel in the dark owing to negligent withdrawal of the gang-plank by officers and crew of the vessel was held not a maritime tort. The Albion, 123 F. 189.

the vessel takes ground with the recession of the tide does not oust the admiralty jurisdiction.[18]

A statute authorizing submission to a district court of the claim of a British steamer sunk by a war vessel of the United States to hear, determine and render judgment in compliance with the rules of admiralty, confers jurisdiction to render a decree against the United States for damage caused by violation of the navigation rules, though due to the exigencies of war.[19]

Apart from statute, there is no right of action in admiralty for wrongful death.[20]

§ 2. Remedies and remedial rights.[21]—There is a sharp distinction between an action in personam with concurrent attachment and a proceeding in rem. The latter is distinctively maritime.[22] Fault on the part of those in control must be imputed to the ship to give jurisdiction in rem.[23]

Statutes of limitation, as such, are not enforced by courts of admiralty, but, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, they will generally be followed by analogy.[24] Failure of one having a claim in rem against a foreign ship to seek other property of its owners to attach and waiting till her second trip to the port is not laches.[25]

§ 3. Practice and procedure. A. Pleading, process, etc.[26]—Courts of admiralty are liberal in their treatment of pleadings, and averse to sustaining technical objections calculated to prevent the determination of causes according to their essential merits, but this liberality should not be so exercised as to prejudice either party.[27]

Claims for demurrage should be specific,[28] and damages resulting to the owners from the cancellation of a charter party cannot be recovered in a libel by the master of the vessel, unless the same are alleged.[29]

If a libellant has a good cause of action on one or the other of two theories practically inconsistent, and is doubtful which is correct, he may with proper allegations plead in the alternative.[30]

A set-off is not cognizable in admiralty except in so far as it relates to the particular transaction which is the subject of the libel, and goes to reduce or overcome the original demand.[31]

Parties other than intervening claimants are not entitled to file exceptions to a libel for breach of a maritime contract.[32]

After seizure under process, earnings of a vessel prior to the sale under an agreement between the charterer and the marshal approved by the court should be paid into court and applied on the libellant's claim.[33]

On the death of a libellant in prize who applies on behalf of himself and others of the navy, another interested person who is present by counsel may be substituted.[34]

(§ 3) B. Evidence, proof and hearing, and decree.[35]—The mere fact that libellant, who instituted a suit in forma pauperis, purchased the vessel for a certain sum is insufficient to establish the fact that he possessed property at the time the suit was instituted, or had acquired any since that time, justifying the court in requiring him to give security for costs, there being no proof that his affidavit of poverty is false.[36]

Interrogatories may be addressed to officers of a corporation libellee not only as to their personal knowledge, but their official information. They must not unduly pry into an opponent's case.[37] The only ground of objection that can be interposed to them when they tend to elicit facts bearing on the case is that the answers may expose the party making them to prosecution or punishment for crime, or for a penalty, or forfeiture of his property for a penal offense.[38]

The defense of contributory negligence on the part of libellants, when relied upon, must be affimatively proved by a preponderance of evidence.[39]

Foreign laws relied on, when different from our own, must be pleaded and proved,[40] and greater weight will be given to affirmative than to negative testimony.[41] Where the trial is before the court, all testimony offered should be admitted, subject to objection, unless so clearly irrelevant or immaterial that there can be no doubt of its inadmissibility.[42]

Hearsay evidence will be treated as of no probative force, though no objection is taken thereto until exceptions are filed to the report of the commissioner before whom it was introduced.[43]

Parties who have deposited a fund in the registry of the district court, in admiralty, will not be allowed to withdraw a portion thereof and substitute a bond therefor.[44]

damages recovered against either by third persons, in actions arising out of such collision, shall be assessed as damages in the collision suit, the court will not enter a decree while actions for damages are still pending and undetermined.[45]

Findings of a commissioner[46] as to matters of fact will not be disturbed when based upon doubtful or conflicting evidence, unless error or mistake is clearly apparent;[47] but are not conclusive if not sustained by the testimony.[48]

General exceptions to a commissioner's report, without reference to the pertinent evidence, will not be considered.[49]

Costs[50] will not be allowed where the suit is dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[51]

The respondent to a cross libel may be required to give security for costs under Rule 53, though his libel is in personam, but this will not be done when it seems to the court unjust.[52]

Where the court divides the total costs, they include the statutory fee of the libellant's proctor, but not that allowed respondent's proctor against his own client.[53]

Interest[54] may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed as part of the damages for the detention of a vessel for repairs, and should be allowed in the absence of special circumstances rendering it inequitable to do so;[55] but it will not be allowed against the United States in a suit, under a special act of congress, for damages resulting from the collision of a foreign ship with a naval vessel, where the special act is silent on the subject.[56] When the decree of the lower court, making no provision for interest, is affirmed by a mandate which is also silent on the point, the lower court has no power to allow interest.[57] A claimant who contests a suit in rem to recover damages for a maritime tort or a breach of contract of carriage is liable for interest and costs, although the damages may thereby be made to exceed the amount of the stipulation given for the vessel's release.[58]

§ 4. Appeals and subsequent proceedings. Practice on appeal.[59]—Admiralty cases are tried de novo on appeal to the circuit court of appeals,[60] but where the testimony is taken orally in the presence of the lower court, and the evidence is conflicting, its decision will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that it is against the evidence.[61]

The libellant, in such case, is not precluded from asserting his right to such interest and costs by the fact that his application for leave to amend his libel by inserting a claim in personam for the damages sued for was denied on the ground of laches. The point that libellant is a minor and hence not entitled to sue cannot be first raised on appeal.[62]

The appellate court will not review the action of the lower court in assuming jurisdiction of a suit by an alien seaman against a foreign vessel for damages for failure to furnish care and medical attendance, unless it appears that such court has exercised its discretion on wrong principles, or that it has acted so absolutely different from the views of the appellate court that the latter is justified in saying that discretion has been wrongly exercised.[63]

One of two defendants who failed to appeal from a judgment against both and was not served with notice of severance cannot, by appearing after the time for appeal has expired and waiving service of citation, perfect the otherwise defective appeal.[64]

A motion for a rehearing on the ground of new evidence must be supported either in the court below or under the admiralty rule in the appellate court by an affidavit as to what that evidence would be.[65]

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN.

§ 1. Adoptive Acts and Proceedings (45). § 2. Consequences of Adoption (46).

§ 1. Adoptive acts and proceedings.[1]—The decree in adoption proceedings has the force of a judgment and will be sustained where there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.[2] Orders of adoption are for the benefit of the child, affect his status, are in the nature of judgments in rem, and cannot be collaterally attacked.[3] Proceedings wherein the record shows on its face that the stattute was not complied with are void.[4] The parent's consent must be obtained,[5] or he must be given notice of the proceedings.[6]

122 F. 246; The Matterhorn [C. C. A.] 128 F. 863. Finding by district judge that time contract was made for employment of pilot will not be set aside as contrary to weight of evidence. Baton Rouge & B. S. Packet Co. v. George [C. C. A.] 128 F. 914.

62. If apparent on the face of the complaint, respondent may demur. If not, he must take advantage of it by pleading in bar or by answer. Paauhau Sugar Plantation Co. v. Palapala [C. C. A.] 127 F. 920.

63. Not abuse of discretion where libellant, who was left in this country without money, and permanently injured, would probably have been without any effective remedy. The Troop [C. C. A.] 128 F. 858.

64. Consumers' Cotton Oil Co. v. Nichol [C. C. A.] 120 F. 818.

65. Kenney v. Blake [C. C. A.] 125 F. 672.

1. See 1 Curr. L. 26.

2. Under Rev. St. Neb. 1866, c. 2, tit. 25, an adopted child will not lose his rights of inheritance in a collateral proceeding many years later on the ground that the statement filed by adoptive parents did not say specifically that adopted child should have equal rights with the other children. Ferguson v. Herr [Neb.] 94 N. W. 542.

3. All presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the proceedings and the jurisdiction of the court. Jossey v. Brown, 119 Ga. 758, 47 S. E. 350. So it will be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary that the judge was satisfied as to the truth of the facts stated in the petition and that the parents of the adopted child had notice of the proceedings, though the record does not show the residence of the child of the petitioner, or the child's parents. Id. In a collateral attack on the order of adoption, a recital that "all persons whose consent is necessary have appeared" is sufficient to show that the father appeared, nor will the failure to examine the father affect its validity. In re McKeag's Estate, 141 Cal. 403, 74 P. 1039.

4. Under the Alabama statute (Code 1896, § 367), providing for the adoption of children by the making of a declaration to be acknowledged before the judge of probate, filed and recorded, in the county where the declarant resides, if such declaration shows on its face that it was acknowledged, filed and recorded in a county other than that of declarant's residence, the adoption proceedings are void. Monk v. McDaniel [Ga.] 47 S. E. 931. The probate judge in such proceedings acts in a ministerial capacity and his statement that the declarant's place of residence is immaterial will not make the proceedings valid. Id.

5. In Revision of 1860, c. 107, § 2601, providing that on adoption of minor where parents were divorced, written consent must be given by parent entitled to custody of child, is not complied with by the mother's merely signing and acknowledging the deed of adoption which contains no express words indicating consent. Hopkins v. Antrobus, 120 Iowa, 21, 94 N. W. 251.

6. Under Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 148, the court has jurisdiction where the mother sur-

Contracts of adoption.[7]—Oral contracts to adopt children and make them heirs will be specifically enforced when sustained by clear and convincing proof, after performance by one party, and when to refuse specific performance would perpetuate a fraud.[8] A contract to adopt not executed or recorded in accordance with the statute will not confer on child the right of inheritance,[9] but may affect its custody.[10]

§ 2. Consequences of adoption.[11]—The custody of a child properly belongs to the adoptive parents.[12]

Heirship by adoption being unknown to the common law,[13] it can be created only by a constitutional law by which relations of "paternity and affiliation are recognized as legally existing between persons not so related by nature."[14] Under some statutes, the adopted child may inherit directly from the person adopting it, but not from the kindred of such person by right of representation.[15] But it was held, under the Massachusetts statute, that an adopted child may inherit from a brother by adoption,[16] and, in Maine, though the right of inheritance is denied by statute, such child may collect life insurance payable to a "child" of the deceased.[17] rendered her child born in Massachusetts to a charitable institution, for adoption, and notice was given by publication, to the father, a resident of Scotland, who did not consent to the adoption. Stearns v. Allen, 183 Mass. 404, 67 N. E. 349.

7. See 1 Curr. L. 27, n. 13-15.

8. Evidence considered and held insufficient to warrant specific enforcement. Grantham v. Gossett [Mo.] 81 S. W. 895. Void articles of adoption are not of themselves evidence of a contract by which the adopted person is to inherit property. Albring v. Ward [Mich.] 100 N. W. 609.

9. Where the written contract of adoption was never signed or recorded, but the parties acted as if there were a valid contract, the child cannot inherit as heir. McColpin v. McColpin's Estate [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 824. The mere contract to adopt, followed by assumption of the relation, but not by filing of papers, is not a sufficient compliance with statute to establish right of inheritance. Jordan v. Abney [Tex.] 78 S. W. 486.

10. Parent may confer on another the right to custody of child without execution of adoption papers, but it will be presumed that the right is temporary. Miller v. Miller [Iowa] 98 N. W. 631.

Note: Except as sanctioned by statute, contracts for the transfer of parental authority and responsibility are deemed against public policy. State v. Baldwin, 5 N. J. Eq. 454; State v. Clover, 16 N. J. Law, 419; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 12 S. W. 798, 6 L. R. A. 672: In re Scarritt, 76 Mo. 565, 43 Am. Rep. 768; Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650; Washaw v. Gimble, 50 Ark. 351, 7 S. W. 389; Johnson v. Terry, 34 Conn. 259), though a few cases seem to tend to the contrary doctrine (Ellis v. Jesup, 11 Bush [Ky.] 403; Coffee v. Black, 82 Va. 567; Bonnett v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 199, 16 N. W. 91). And in New Hampshire (State v. Libbey, 44 N. H. 321) it has been held that such a transfer might be made by deed, but not by parol. Where such a transfer is void, it may be revoked by the parent. McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 150; State v. Reuff, 29 W. Va. 751; De Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415. But it has been held that the parent may estop himself to revoke. Verser v. Ford, 37 Ark. 27; Cunningham v. Barnes, 37 W. Va. 746, 17 S. E. 308; Richards v. Collins, 45 N. J. Eq. 283, 17 Atl. 831; Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650. The welfare of the child is to be regarded, and courts will not aid a parent in revoking his agreement if such revocation would not be for the best interests of the child. McKenzie v. State, 80 Ind. 547; Jones v. Darnell, 103 Ind. 569, 2 N. E. 229; Sturtevant v. State, 15 Neb. 459; People v. Porter, 23 Ill. App. 196; Washaw v. Gimble, 50 Ark. 351, 7 S. W. 389; Merritt v. 13. Albring v. Ward [Mich.] 100 N. W. 609.

14. Adoption under an unconstitutional law, in the absence of any contract, will not make the person so adopted the heir of the adopting parent. Albring v. Ward [Mich.] 100 N. W. 609. Adopted children are by statute entitled to inherit from their adoptive parents in Georgia. Jossey v. Brown, 119 Ga. 758, 47 S. E. 350.

15. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8780, subsec. 5, providing that an adopted child shall become the heir at law of the person adopting it, an adopted child could not inherit from the brother of her deceased mother. Van Derlyn v. Mack [Mich.] 100 N. W. 278.

16. Under Mass. Pub. St. 1882, c. 148, § 7, providing that an adopted child "shall stand in regard to the legal descendants" of the adopting "parent in the same position as if so born to him," an adopted child can inherit from her brother. Stearns v. Allen, 183 Mass. 404, 67 N. E. 349.

17. Life insurance for benefit of widow, if any, otherwise for benefit of surviving children, belongs to an adoptive child, where there was no widow or other children, and though the child was adopted after the in-

The right to inherit may be defeated by a testamentary provision, unless there was an agreement to the contrary,[18] and the right of inheritance will be recognized in other states than the one where the adoption took place.[19]

The creditors of a parent cannot reach the property of an adopted child on the ground that the child's maintenance has been provided for by the parents.[20]

ADULTERATION.

§ 1. Legislation and Regulation (47).
§ 2. The Offense (47).
§ 3. Enforcement and Prosecution (48).

§ 1. Legislation and regulation.[21]—Laws to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food products, where there is no discrimination in favor of particular persons,[22] are constitutional,[23] though they provide for inspection fees,[24] or apply to imported articles,[25] or discriminate in favor of a certain article,[26] and present no question under the Federal constitution.[27] The scope of such laws cannot be enlarged under the guise of making regulations to enforce them.[28]

§ 2. The offense.[29]—Coloring lemon,[30] or vanilla extract,[31] or oleomargarine, by addition of any foreign ingredient,[32] to conceal damage, or to make the article surance was taken out, and Me. Rev. St. 1871, c. 67, § 30 provided that an adopted child shall be the child of the adopters for all purposes except as to the right of inheritance. Virgin v. Marwick, 97 Me. 578, 55 A. 520.

18. Agreement to adopt, unless there was also an agreement to provide for child by will, confers no right in deceased's property, under Texas Rev. St. 1895, art. 2, conferring on adopted children the status of legal heirs. Clark v. West, 96 Tex. 437, 73 S. W. 797. Declarations of a deceased person bound by contract of adoption to leave all his property to adopted child, to the effect that he was only guardian of child, are inadmissible, as they were not against interest. Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 P. 35.

19. The adoption of a child in one state in accordance with the laws thereof will entitle such child to inherit property in another state. McColpin v. McColpin's Estate [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 238.

20. Under Ky. St. § 2072, placing the person, adopting a child "under the same responsibilities as if the person so adopted were his own child." Anderson v. Mundo, 25 Ky. L. R. 1644, 77 S. W. 926.

21. See 1 Curr. L. 27.

22. N. Y. Laws 1893, p. 667, c. 338, defining adulterated vinegar, but declaring that cider vinegar made by farmer in state should not be deemed adulterated, though not up to standard, is unconstitutional as an unlawful discrimination. People v. Windholz, 86 N. Y. S. 1015.

23. Law requiring linseed oil to meet a certain test held a valid exercise of the police power. State v. Williams [Minn.] 100 N. W. 641. See 1 Curr. L. 27, n. 16.

24. Ordinance prohibiting sale of impure milk is a proper exercise of state's police power, and requiring every one who brings milk to city, or sells, to have a license and pay fees which were to be used to pay salary and expenses of milk inspector, is valid. City of Norfolk v. Flynn, 101 Va. 473, 44 S. E. 717.

25. N. Y. Laws 1893, c. 661, § 41, prohibiting the sale of adulterated food products, does not violate the commerce clause of the U. S. Constitution, though applied to articles imported from abroad; nor is it rendered inoperative by Act Cong. Aug. 30, 1890, against importation of adulterated food. Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 189, 24 S. Ct. 234. See 1 Curr. L. 28, n. 19.

26. Mich. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, as amended by Pub. Acts 1897, No. 118, prohibiting adulteration of foods, is constitutional, though there is a proviso allowing the coloring of pure butter. People v. Hinshaw [Mich.] 97 N. W. 758.

27. A suit to enjoin a state officer from charging that coffee coated with sugar and egg comes within prohibition of Ohio pure food law (2 Bates' Stat. 1897, p. 2229), against coating an article, does not present a case under Federal constitution. Arbuckle v. Blackburn, 191 U. S. 406, 24 S. Ct. 148.

28. A regulation, under Act Cong. May 9, 1902, relating to the inspection and marking of renovated butter at the place of manufacture, which prohibits a dealer from obliterating the marks, finds no warrant in the statute. U. S. v. Bohl, 125 F. 625.

29. See 1 Curr. L. 28.

30. Where pure food law contains no formula for lemon extract, it is proper to resort to the U. S. Pharmacopoeia formule. People v. Jennings [Mich.] 94 N. W. 216.

31. Though coal-tar dye is harmless and merely makes vanilla extract appear stronger, it is a violation of pure food law (Mich. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193; Pub. Acts 1897, No. 118), prohibiting adulteration of food by coloring in order to make it appear better. People v. Hinshaw [Mich.] 97 N. W. 758.

32. Mich. Pub. Acts 1901, p. 37, No. 22, § 1, prohibiting the manufacturing of any product in imitation of yellow butter, but allowing the manufacture of oleomargarine free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter, does not prevent the manufacture of an article where the ingredients themselves naturally produce the yellow color. Bennett v. Carr [Mich.] 96 N. W. 26. See 1 Curr. L. 28, n. 24.

appear of greater value, is an adulteration,[33] and in the case of spirits, an offense against the Federal revenue laws.[34] Milk is adulterated by the addition of water,[35] but vinegar is not, as it is not rendered deleterious thereby.[36] A statute providing a penalty for the sale of linseed oil which would not sustain a certain test applies to boiled as well as raw oil.[37] A regulation against holding, keeping or offering for sale does not forbid the mere possession of adulterated commodities.[38] The laws as to adulteration are not designed to prevent improvements in manufacture,[39] nor do they require the use of prejudicial words on labels, so long as the ingredients are truthfully described.[40]

§ 3. Enforcement and prosecution.[41]—The complaint is sufficient if it uses terms which have been defined by statute,[42] and will be held to charge a first offense, unless otherwise indicated.[43] The sale of a number of packages may be charged as one offense.[44]

ADULTERY.

§ 1. The Offense (48).
§ 2. The Indictment (49).
§ 3. Evidence (49).
§ 4. Practice and Trial (51).

Only the criminal offense is included.[45]

§ 1. The offense.[46]—Adultery was not a crime at common law.[47] The statutory offense is regarded as primarily against the family, and is generally regarded as the sexual violation of the marriage relation, regardless of the sex of the offender.[48] Cohabitation or habitual intercourse is required in most states.[49] Adul-

34. The addition of coloring matter, such as caramel, to spirits after barrels have been stamped, is a violation of U. S. Rev. St. § 3465, which subjects to forfeiture every barrel that contains "anything else" than the contents which were therein when it was stamped. U. S. v. Three Packages of Distilled Spirits, 126 F. 62.

35. Sale of milk containing no more than 10.61 per cent of solids is an offense under 86 Ohio Laws, p. 229, which provides that milk containing less than 12 per cent of solids shall be deemed to be adulterated. State v. Smith [Ohio] 68 N. E. 1044. See 1 Curr. L. 28, n. 20, 33.

36. The addition of water to vinegar is not in violation of N. Y. Laws 1893, p. 667 (§§ 50-52), penalizing the manufacture of vinegar not made from pure apple juice. People v. Heinz, 90 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. S. 141.

37. Both terms were used in the original act, but "boiled" was omitted in an amendment. State v. Williams [Minn.] 100 N. W. 641.

38. People v. Timmerman, 79 App. Div. 565, 80 N. Y. S. 285. N. Y. City Sanitary Code, § 63.

39. Mich. Comp. Laws, § 6012, providing an article should be deemed adulterated "if any valuable or necessary ingredient has been wholly or in part abstracted from it," is not meant to prevent improvement in manufacture, nor does it apply to an ingredient which may be dispensed with, without injury to the food. People v. Jennings [Mich.] 94 N. W. 216.

40. Mich. Pub. Acts 1903, No. 123 forbids sale of syrup mixed with glucose unless package is branded "Glucose Mixture" or "Corn Syrup," with the name and amount of each ingredient therein, and is complied with where one of the ingredients is truthfully described as "pure corn syrup," which is synonymous with glucose. People v. Harris [Mich.] 97 N. W. 402.

41. See 1 Curr. L. 28.

42. An affidavit which charges a person with selling and delivering "oleomargarine, a substance not pure butter," which was colored, sufficiently charges a violation of Bates' Ohio Ann. St. 4200-16, 19, 20, as the statute defines the meaning of oleomargarine. State v. Arata [Ohio] 68 N. E. 1046.

43. Unless affidavit charges the sale to be a second or subsequent offense, imprisonment cannot be imposed, and a justice of peace may, and by mandamus will, be compelled to try the accused without the intervention of a jury. State v. Smith [Ohio] 68 N. E. 1044.

44. Complaint that defendant sold to one person at same time and place adulterated milk, to wit, five cans of milk, alleges but one sale, though N. Y. Laws 1893, p. 666 declares the sale of each one of several packages to constitute a separate offense. People v. Buell, 85 App. Div. 141, 83 N. Y. S. 143.

46. See 1 Curr. L. 29.

47. State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa, 507, 96 N. W. 1115; Ex parte Richards, 63 W. Va. 656, 46 S. E. 341.

48. State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa, 507, 96 N. W. 1115. To be guilty of the crime of adultery under the laws of Vermont (V. S. 5056, 5067), a man must have sexual connection with a married woman other than his wife, or a married man must have such connection with an unmarried woman. State v. Bisbee, 75 Vt. 293, 54 A. 1081. A married man hav-tery is a felony, and an offense against the state as well as against the innocent spouse, notwithstanding the statutory requirement that the prosecution therefor can only be commenced on the complaint of the innocent spouse.[50] The acquittal of one of two defendants, charged with having committed adultery together, does not preclude the conviction of the other.[51] The consent of the female is not necessary to constitute the crime.[52] One may aid and abet in adultery without participating in the act,[53] and there is such a crime as conspiracy to commit adultery.[54] Illicit cohabitation is a crime at common law, and is generally made so by statute.[55]

§ 2. The indictment.[56]—An indictment for adultery which fails to state that the particeps criminis was a married woman,[57] or that does not state that she was an unmarried woman, is insufficient.[58] Such defect is not cured by the verdict, and is available on motion in arrest of judgment, it not being implied or inferable from the finding of facts whether she was married or unmarried.[59] It is sufficient if the indictment charges defendant with having unlawfully committed the crime by having unlawful intercourse.[60] An indictment for conspiracy to commit adultery need not allege that defendant knew that the female in the case was a married woman.[61]

§ 3. Evidence.[62]—The fact of illicit intercourse need not be established by direct proof, but may become a legitimate inference or conclusion to be drawn ing sexual intercourse with an unmarried woman is guilty of adultery under the Laws of Iowa (Code 1897, § 4932). State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa, 507, 96 N. W. 1115.

Note: In general, it is sufficient if either party is married; and the crime of the married party will be adultery, while that of the unmarried party will be fornication. Republica v. Roberts, 1 Yeates [Pa.] 6; Id., 2 Dall. [Pa.] 124; State v. Parham, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, Law) 416; Smitherman v. State, 27 Ala. 23; State v. Thurstin, 35 Me. 205; Com. v. Cregor, 7 Grat. [Va.] 591; Morrissett v. Com., 6 Grat. [Va.] 673; Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. [Wis.] 91. In some of the states, if the woman be married, though the man be unmarried, he is guilty of adultery. Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. [Mass.] 509; State v. Pearce, 2 Blackf. [Ind.] 318; Wasden v. State, 18 Ga. 264; State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515. And see State v. Lash, 16 N. J. Law, 380; Mosser v. Mosser, 29 Ala. 313. In other states, it seems that to constitute the offense of adultery it is necessary that the woman should be married; that if the man only is married, it is not the crime of adultery at common law or under the statute, so that an indictment for adultery could be sustained against either party; though, within the meaning of the law respecting divorces, it is adultery in the man. Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263; Woods v. Dennett, 9 N. H. 55; State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335; Ohio v. Connoway, Tappan [Ohio] 90.

50. Such provision pertains to the procedure only, and is not an element of the offense. State v. Clemenson [Iowa] 99 N. W. 139. Under the Code of West Virginia (Code 1899, c. 149, § 6), adultery is punishable only by fine, and no imprisonment can be imposed. Ex parte Richards, 53 W. Va. 555, 45 S. E. 341.

55. Defined by the statutes of Kansas (Gen. St. 1901, § 2221) as follows: "Every man and woman (one or both of whom are married, and not to each other) who shall lewdly and lasciviously abide and cohabit with each other," etc. State v. Cassida, 67 Kan. 171, 72 P. 522.

56. See 1 Curr. L. 29.

57. Under Vermont Statutes (section 5057), providing that to constitute the crime a man must have sexual intercourse with a married woman other than his wife. State v. Bisbee, 75 Vt. 293, 54 A. 1081.

58. Under Vermont Statutes (section 5056), making it adultery for a married man to have sexual connection with an unmarried woman. State v. Bisbee, 75 Vt. 293, 54 A. 1081.

59. State v. Bisbee, 75 Vt. 293, 54 A. 1081.

60. An indictment for adultery under the laws of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3636), charging that the defendant "did unlawfully commit the crime of adultery by then and there having unlawful intercourse," and further charging that defendant was a married man, is sufficient, notwithstanding the omission of the words "sexual" or "carnal." United States v. Griego [N. M.] 72 P. 20.

from circumstantial evidence.[63] Whenever an act of illicit intercourse is shown by the evidence within the period of time covered by the indictment, evidence of facts or circumstances which tend to show cohabitation between the parties anterior or subsequent to such period of time is relevant and admissible.[64] Sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction.[65] Defendant may show his purpose in taking the woman to the place where the crime is alleged to have been committed.[66] In a criminal prosecution of another for adultery with his wife, the husband may testify as to the fact of their marriage and as to incriminating circumstances,[67] and the fact of marriage may be proved by general reputation and the declarations of the parties.[68] Defendant cannot be convicted of a conspiracy to commit adultery unless it appears that his co-conspirators knew that the woman in question was married.[69] It is not sufficient to show a single, or even occasional acts of sexual intercourse, in order to sustain a conviction for lewd or lascivious cohabitation, but the commission of such act or acts must be shown under such circumstances as to indicate an abiding or cohabiting together in a relationship like that of husband and wife.[70] The relationship of mistress and hired

63. Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406. Direct proof of sexual intercourse is not necessary to justify a conviction for adultery, but it is sufficient to show circumstances from which the guilt of the parties may be inferred, such as sleeping in the same room, acting apparently as if they were husband and wife, being frequently in each other's company, and such circumstances as would show opportunities for an adulterous relation to exist, etc. United States v. Griego [N. M.] 72 P. 20.

64. In a prosecution for living in a state of adultery or fornication it was proper to show that defendant's paramour was still living in the place where the offense was alleged to have been committed, and that defendant had furnished her with groceries and provisions. Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406. Evidence of acts tending to show adulterous connection, and anterior to the statute of limitations, is admissible in support of evidence of the commission of the act charged. Nearness of time is a circumstance affecting the effect of the evidence and not its competency. United States v. Griego [N. M.] 72 P. 20. On prosecution for adultery, a photograph of defendant's paramour was admissible to identify her as the woman with whom defendant lived in another state, although it was taken several years before the trial. State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa, 507, 96 N. W. 1115. Letters written to the father of the woman by persons residing in the locality where defendant is alleged to have lived with her, which state that they lived together as man and wife, and had had a child born to them, are admissible in connection with the father's testimony that he had read them to defendant, who admitted certain of the statements therein. Id. Evidence that defendant attended the burial of the woman with whom it was alleged he had been living in adultery, and that he caused a tombstone to be erected over her grave with a description thereon in which she was described as his wife, is admissible. Id. That defendant's alleged paramour gave birth to a child outside of the county where he was prosecuted for adultery might be considered by the jury in determining whether the crime was committed in the county, in view of the testimony of one witness that she had detected them in the act in said county about nine months before such child was born, and evidence tending to show that defendant had recognized such child as his own. Id.

65. There being a substantial conflict in the evidence, which was competent and tended to sustain the charge, it was not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury to find for defendant. United States v. Griego [N. M.] 72 P. 20. Testimony of the husband of the woman that he had seen her and defendant and defendant's sister lying on the same bed in a half-dressed condition, and of another witness that he had seen defendant, in a room a few feet distant from quite a crowd of people on the gallery, stoop over her as if in the act of kissing her, is not sufficient to sustain a conviction of adultery. Manuel v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 30.

66. It was error to refuse to allow defendant to show that his alleged paramour was staying at the place where the offense was alleged to have been committed under a contract to work for his father, the evidence for the state tending to show that he had taken her there for illicit intercourse. Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406.

67. The rule that neither husband nor wife can testify for or against the other is confined to cases where the testimony would be by one directly for or against the other in a suit to which such other is a party. State v. West, 118 Wis. 469, 95 N. W. 521.

69. State v. Clemenson [Iowa] 99 N. W. 139. Evidence in a prosecution for conspiracy to commit adultery held sufficient to support a finding that the female in question was married. Id.

70. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction. State v. Cassida, 67 Kan. 171, 72 P. 522. The testimony of defendant given in his own behalf, on an examination before a justice of the peace on a charge of burglary, and reduced to writing and signed by him, was admissible against him on a subsequent prosecution for adultery, which crime it tended to prove, and he having been man between the parties does not necessarily exclude the relationship of lewd and lascivious cohabitation, but both may exist at the same time.[71]

§ 4. Practice and trial.[72] Instructions.[73]—In a prosecution for adultery, it was not error to refuse to require the state to elect the transaction it would rely on, where the only direct evidence of the crime was the testimony of one witness that she had once detected defendant in the act, at a time within the statute of limitations.[74] Counsel should not be permitted to refer to defendant in his argument in a manner calculated to prejudice the jury against him.[75]

Testimony given by defendant in a prosecution for assault instituted by him against the husband of his co-defendant, in which he admitted acts of illicit intercourse with such co-defendant, is admissible against him in a subsequent prosecution for adultery, it appearing that he was warned at the time that he need not criminate himself. estoppel may arise,[88] but not by a mere failure to assert a right.[89] Though the statute applies only to suits, and the issuance of a tax deed is not a suit, yet the tax certificate will be void where a deed would fail because of lapse of time.[90]

§ 2. Against whom available.[91]—Adverse possession may give good title against a city,[92] or against an entryman[93] or one holding under the Federal government by grant before patent has issued;[94] especially if a confirmatory grant relates the patent back.[95] Adverse possession runs against a grantee of the Federal government from the date of the grant,[96] and is not interrupted by a controversy before the Department of the Interior which it had no jurisdiction to entertain.[97] While a dower right may be barred,[98] adverse possession of land as against a husband does not operate to extinguish it.[99] Adverse possession runs against a cotenant who has been ousted,[1] if there has been an assertion of ownership[2] of such a nature as to impart notice that disseizin is intended.[3] Occupancy of the premises, appropriation of the rents and profits and payment of taxes is not sufficient.[4] Occupation by one claiming whole under husband, held adverse to wife who had been awarded part as alimony.[5] Possession by a purchaser, under an executory contract of sale, made by the husband alone of land owned in joint tenancy by husband and wife is not adverse to the wife,[6] nor as against her children until the husband's death.[7] The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a cestui que trust in favor of a trustee in possession until the cestui que trust has learned or from the circumstances should have learned that the trustee asserted a claim adverse to his.[8] Adverse possession against a trustee[9] may bar the cestui que trustents.[10] It is not available against a remainderman during the life of the life tenant,[11] but this rule supposes an uninterrupted continuation of the relation of life tenant and remainderman, and under statutes giving to a remainderman, who knows that his rights are disputed, a right of action, the bar of the statute may be invoked.[12] It is available against one having a tax certificate and entitled to a deed thereon[13] or the issue of a tenant in tail.[14]

Title by adverse possession cannot be acquired against a minor,[15] but he must assert his right within the period allowed, after the disability is removed,[16] and a minor heir is barred by limitations by failure of his guardian to sue within the period.[17] In Kentucky, adverse possession commences to run against a wife from the date of her husband's deed.[18] The statute begins to run against heirs at law at the death of the ancestor where there is no intervening life estate.[19] The death of one holding the legal title to property, but out of possession, does not stop the running of limitations as against his interest.[20]

§ 3. To whom available.[21]—The public[22] or a municipality[23] or the Federal government may acquire title by adverse possession.[24] Title divested by judgment may be acquired by the judgment debtor who remains in possession.[25] Adverse possession is not available to a lessee[26] or a sublessee[27] during the continuation of the lease, and to be available thereafter, there must have been a disclaimer of the paper title.[28] An agent cannot acquire title as against his principal,[29] nor a life tenant as against the reversioner.[30] A widow may hold adversely against the heirs of her husband,[31] even though she be executrix of his estate;[32] but possession of an administrator is not adverse to the heirs,[33] and a repudiation, in order to give it an adverse character, must be brought to the knowledge of the heirs; mere notice is not sufficient;[34] but where an administratrix purchased land at her own sale, adverse possession by her for the statutory period was a bar to a bill for partition.[35] A dowress cannot hold adversely to the heirs of her deceased husband,[36] until she has divested herself of such right.[37] Where husband and wife are in possession, one cannot acquire title as against the other,[38] nor can a wife acquire title to the community property by adverse possession, though her husband has abandoned her without cause.[39] Limitations do not run in favor of one not in possession.[40] The possession by a railroad company of a right of way is not adverse to rights remaining in the owner of the fee.[41]

and whether a purchase was bona fide is a question for the jury.[53] Mere lapse of time unaccompanied by adverse possession will not bar a right to recover.[54]

§ 5. Hostility.[55]—Possession must be hostile[56] and exclusive,[57] and inconsistent with the right of the holder of the paper title,[58] and there must be an intention to hold in hostility to the true owner.[59] Naked possession must be adverse as to the whole world, including the supposed owner.[60] A son who resides with his mother on land in which she has a dower right, under an agreement that she is to make her home with him, is not in possession adverse to her rights.[61] Where a party claims to own and hold possession up to a certain line, his possession is adverse;[62] but if he disclaims ownership except to the true line, wherever that may be, it is not.[63] Holding under a mistake as to the true boundary may be adverse.[64] It is not necessary for one in possession claiming adversely to know in whom the true title is,[65] and the fact that an owner does not know that another is in adverse possession is immaterial.[66] One claiming title by adverse possession may purchase a tax deed to the premises before the statute has run without ac-

Where a father furnished money to his son to purchase realty under an agreement that the title should be taken in the son's name and that it should be understood that the land belonged to the son, occupancy by the father was not adverse to the son. Field's Heirs v. Napier [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1110.

57. A finding in an action of ejectment to recover a portion of a mining claim that one had been in actual, open, continuous and notorious possession, is insufficient to sustain. Tyee Consol. Min. Co. v. Langstedt [C. C. A.] 121 F. 709.

58. Continuing to hold after a tax lease expired is not. Miller v. Warren, 87 N. Y. S. 1011. The fact that one party placed his boat on land claimed adversely by another was not inconsistent with the claim of adverse possession. Layton v. Bailey [Conn.] 58 A. 355. The fact that one occupying a disputed tract piled lumber thereon so as not to annoy one not in possession, but who claimed under a grant, was not inconsistent with adverse possession. Id. The making of improvements on adjoining land under a mistaken belief that he is making them on his own is not adverse possession. Brownlee v. Williams [Colo.] 77 P. 250. That one who has a bond for a deed makes improvements on the land is not notice to the owner that he is claiming adversely, he having a right to make them. Id. The fact that one on cross-examination answered that he had no intention of holding adversely so as to acquire title from one to whom it rightly belonged, but that he occupied, claiming his father's deed gave him title to the land, did not determine the question of adverse user and conclude him from setting up title by adverse possession. Layton v. Bailey [Conn.] 58 A. 355.

59. One in possession contesting a preference right to purchase the lands is not in adverse possession. City of Port Townsend v. Lewis [Wash.] 75 P. 982.

60. One claimed adversely to the state but not against one to whom the land had been patented. Flewellen v. Randall [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 49.

61. Brumback v. Brumback, 198 Ill. 66, 64 N. E. 741.

62. Logsdon v. Dingg [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 409. Where a party had had continuous and exclusive possession and had cultivated up to a certain fence for 40 years, evidence held to show adverse possession. Helton v. Fastnow [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 230. Where adjoining owners agreed to the construction of a line fence and occupied up to it for the statutory period, they acquired title by adverse possession to such land and to accretions during such period. English v. Craford [Iowa] 94 N. W. 276; Baty v. Elrod [Neb.] 97 N. W. 343. Where the adjoining owners agree on a line of trees as the boundary and for the statutory period live up to it. Handorf v. Hoes, 121 Iowa, 79, 95 N. W. 226, and citing other recent cases.

64. Location of the corner stones had been lost. Williams v. Shepherdson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 827.

65. Entry with intention of acquiring title by preemption. Price v. Eardley [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 416.

66. Owner did not know where the boundary was. Pittman v. Weeks, 132 N. C. 81, 43 S. E. 582.

knowledging a superior title;[67] but if he accept payment of the same from the second owner, such act is a recognition of the superior title.[68] Adverse possession of the land of one is not adverse as to the land of another on the theory that possession of part is possession of all.[69] Where a grantor remains in possession,[70] especially where he reserves a license to cultivate the land,[71] or where a mortgagor holds after foreclosure,[72] it is presumed subservient to the rights of the purchaser, until knowledge of his intent to hold adversely is brought home to his grantee by some unequivocal act.[73] The possession by a party entering under a verbal contract to purchase is not adverse to his vendor.[74] A permissive entry cannot ripen into title.[75]

§ 6. Continuity.[76]—Possession must be continuous and uninterrupted[77] to toll the right of entry of the owner of the legal title,[78] and whether possession has been continuous, open and notorious for the statutory period is a question for the jury.[79]

Various circumstances have been held sufficient to break the continuity, thus, litigating the right to the title,[80] joining in a petition for vacation of a street,[81] acknowledging a superior title,[82] admission that it was liable in damages for maintaining its right of way;[83] but vacating for a short period will not destroy continuity,[84] nor will a temporary interruption of the use of an easement.[85]

72. Under an alleged agreement that the foreclosure purchaser held title by their consent, subject to their right to a reconveyance when he was reimbursed. Martin v. Martin [Iowa] 94 N. W. 493.

73. If he asserts claim to title in himself and his claim is made known to his grantee. The assertion may be by acts. Kelly v. Palmer [Minn.] 97 N. W. 578. Nothing in the evidence showing such act. Pierce v. Barney [Pa.] 58 A. 152; Hindley v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 42 Misc. 56, 85 N. Y. S. 561.

74. A deed was not to be executed until the purchase price was paid. Manning v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. [Mo.] 81 S. W. 140.

75. To hide the unsightly appearance of the side of a wall, adjoining owners mutually agreed that the owner of the wall should veneer it, which he did, covering four inches of the ground of his neighbor. The wall has stood for the statutory period. Subsequent grantees claim title to such strip by adverse possession. Held insufficient. Munger v. Curley [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 306. One entering land under permission cannot afterwards claim that his occupancy is adverse. Oregon City v. Oregon & C. R. Co. [Or.] 74 P. 924.

76. See 1 Curr. L. 35.

77. One entered under a void tax deed and was in possession for two years, then the land was vacant for 12 years and they paid no taxes during this period; they got some wood from the land and tried but failed to rent it; subsequently they rented it for five years. Held to show sufficient possession. Brown v. Hartford, 173 Mo. 183, 73 S. W. 140. A widow conveyed the homestead, but the evidence showed that the purchaser resided on it only spasmodically, held that there had been no bona fide possession for the statutory period. Rowland v. Wadly, 71 Ark. 273, 72 S. W. 994.

81. One was in possession of a street which had never been improved. City of Lake City v. Fulkerson, 122 Iowa, 569, 98 N. W. 376.

82. By one in possession under a deed running to another. Weisman v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 728; Hindley v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 42 Misc. 56, 85 N. Y. S. 561.

83. Engines filling air with smoke. Hindley v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 42 Misc. 56, 85 N. Y. S. 561.

84. One held adverse possession of land which he had enclosed. A tenant in possession left before his lease expired and the premises were vacant for a short period. No one else entered during such period.

Continuous occupancy for the statutory period raises a presumption that its commencement was under a claim of right.[86] A purchaser of the interest of one who has not been in adverse possession for the statutory period does not acquire a title superior to the holder of the paper title.[87]

Tacking.[88]—A privity must be shown between adverse claimants before the possession of one can be tacked to that of the other,[89] but it is immaterial whether any valid titles were created by the transfers,[90] and this privity may exist by descent;[91] thus possession of the ancestor inures at his death to the benefit of his heirs at law,[92] and the possession of the widow can be tacked to that of the husband in order to complete title in the heirs;[93] but possession under a perfect title cannot be tacked to possession continuing after such title has been divested.[94]

§ 7. Duration.[95]—The possession must have been for the statutory period,[96] but it is not necessary that it be the one next before bringing the suit.[97] The period is fixed by statute in the several states.[98]

The period may be extended for those under disability,[99] or lessened if an entry is under color of title. In Washington it must be actual paper title.[1] That the Texas three or five-year statute may apply, there must be possession under color of title,[2] but any instrument in the form of a deed, not void on its face,

In South Dakota, claim and color of title and payment of taxes for 10 years. Murphy v. Pierce [S. D.] 95 N. W. 926. Evidence held to show that accretions made to an island had not been acquired by adverse possession, but title was in the owner of the shore who claimed to the thread of the stream. McKee v. Grand Rapids [Mich.] 95 N. W. 85. Under Maryland statutes, giving parties under disability 10 years after the disability is removed in which to make entry, this 10 years runs concurrently with the regular statutory period of 20 years. Wickes v. Wickes [Md.] 56 A. 1017. Under Civ. Proc. Code, Alaska, which provides that no action for the recovery of real property shall be maintained unless the owner or his predecessor was seized or possessed of property within 10 years, the legal title is sufficient to establish seizin unless an ouster by actual adverse possession be shown. Tyee Consol. Min. Co. v. Langstedt [C. C. A.] 121 F. 709.

99. Adverse possession of a married woman's land, not her separate estate, beginning during coverture and continuing for the statutory term, will bar the husband's and wife's rights during coverture; but though the wife's rights during coverture are barred, she or those claiming under her have five years after coverture to sue for the land. Waldron v. Harvey [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 603.

1. Ball. Ann. Code, §§ 5503-4, giving title to one in possession and paying taxes for seven years. Hesser v. Siepmann [Wash.] 76 P. 295. Ball. Ann. Code, § 5503, giving title to persons in actual possession, under color of title and payment of taxes for 7 years, does not apply where there is no color of title. City of Port Townsend v. Lewis [Wash.] 75 P. 982.

2. A portion of one party's land occupied by another was not included in the boundaries of such occupant's deed. Giddings v. Winfree [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 1066. Where one inclosed land to which he had no color of title, the 5-year statute does is sufficient.[3] The Texas five-year statute does not apply to one holding under a void tax sale.[4] In Louisiana one who acquires color of title in good faith may have the benefit of the 10 year statute;[5] but an entry under a void tax sale is insufficient for the application of the three or five-year statute.[6] Under Wisconsin 10-year statute, it matters not how invalid the instrument may be or how complete the claimant's knowledge of its invalidity.[7] An assignment of a certificate of entry in terms conveying the land is sufficient.[8] Under Arkansas two-year statute, a tax sale for the manifest purpose of defrauding the heirs is insufficient.[9] In South Dakota, the possession must have been for the full statutory period.[10] The Mississippi three-year statute does not apply to a sale of land which was exempt,[11] but the 10-year statute applies to one who enters in good faith.[12] Laches will not defeat a suit for land when the adverse claimant is not in actual possession and the statute applicable has not run.[13]

not apply. Nolan v. Mundine [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 638. Where before one went into possession of land he had purchased, another had acquired title by adverse possession for 10 years, the 3 or 5 year limitations does not apply. Smith v. Bunch, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 541, 73 S. W. 559.

3. A deed from a partnership signed by the firm name by one of the members as agent does not disclose on its face that it is void; it might have been executed by a corporation. Harris v. Bryson [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 105. A deed by a city conveying an alley to which it had no title did not appear on its face to be void; it was a sufficient basis for a plea of limitations of five years. Peden v. Crenshaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 369. Exclusive and continuous possession of an enclosed tract of half a million acres, used as pasture for 12 years, on which taxes were paid each year for that period, satisfies the five-year statute, though there were no improvements except the fence. Harris v. Bryson [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 105.

4. A purchaser holding under a void sale for taxes does not acquire title by adverse possession under a statute limiting the action to recover to five years after a judicial sale or two years as tax purchaser. Caldwell v. Barrett, 71 Ark. 310, 74 S. W. 748.

5. The law gives the purchaser in good faith the benefit of the 10 year prescription. Boagni v. Pacific Imp. Co. [La.] 36 So. 129. One who acquires title from one whom he believes to be the true owner, by a title which would be sufficient to transfer ownership if acquired from the true owner may have the benefit of the 10 year statute. Brewster v. Hewes [La.] 36 So. 883.

6. Neither the prescription of five nor three years bars the action of the owner of property, adverse title to which is claimed under conveyances from the state based on alleged forfeitures which were void. George v. Cole, 109 La. 816, 33 So. 784.

7. Administrator's deed, void for irregularities in proceedings of sale in that it included the homestead. Hatch v. Lusignan, 117 Wis. 428, 94 N. W. 332.

8. Under Wisconsin statute providing occupancy of land for 10 years under claim of title based on a written instrument. Pitman v. Hill, 117 Wis. 318, 94 N. W. 40. Where one entered under an assignment of a certificate of entry, which was given as security, evidence held to show he had acquired title by adverse possession. Id.

9. A widow having minor children permitted the homestead to be sold for taxes and procured another to purchase at the tax sale. She reimbursed him and had him assign the certificates to one to whom she sold the homestead. Held, the two-year possession under a tax title did not apply. Rowland v. Wadly, 71 Ark. 273, 72 S. W. 994.

10. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 55, providing that one who has entered under color of title and paid taxes for 10 years shall be adjudged the owner, a payment of taxes for 10 years with possession for but 9 years is insufficient. Bennett v. Moore [S. D.] 99 N. W. 855.

11. Code 1892, § 2735, providing that three years' actual occupation of land under a tax title shall bar a recovery, does not apply to a sale of land which was exempt from taxation. Mitchell v. Bond [Miss.] 36 So. 148.

12. Where a deed purported to convey the west half, but the grantor owned only the north half and the grantee went into possession of the north half and remained for 10 years, he had title by adverse possession. Moore v. Crump [Miss.] 37 So. 109. Code Civ. Proc. § 401, relative to entering under a claim of right founded on a written instrument has no application to possession by virtue of a tax assessment lease executed for a term of years, or to a holding over after such lease has expired. Miller v. Warren, 87 N Y. S. 1011.

16. Deed to homestead not signed by both husband and wife. Montague v. Marunda [Neb.] 99 N. W. 653.

or a deed to adjacent land which does not describe the tract in controversy,[17] or a deed under a void judicial decree,[18] or a deed from husband to wife, or a void administrator's,[19] or tax deed,[20] a contract of sale,[21] even if it be oral,[22] is sufficient; but a contract giving an option to purchase is not color of title so as to give constructive adverse possession coextensive with the description in the conveyance,[23] and one entering under a bond for a title must give notice.[24] A deed conveying title to one, does not constitute color of title after his estate has been divested.[25]

It may be contained in several instruments,[26] but the occupant must rely on his color of title in good faith,[27] and the boundaries must be recited.[28]

Color of title is not essential,[29] but where one enters without color of title, his possession is limited to the land actually occupied;[30] but in Texas, may be extended to include 160 acres,[31] which must be described in the pleading.[32]

Color of title may be proved by parol evidence.[33]

17. Where one purchased a lot which had not been staked out but it was the intention of both parties that the lot should extend to the street, a deed to such lot was color of title to a strip intervening between the boundary of the lot and the street, as described in the deed. Hesser v. Seipmann [Wash.] 76 P. 295.

18. Decree void because the court is without jurisdiction, and no sufficient description. Waldron v. Harvey [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 603.

19. A deed by husband to wife, executed prior to the married woman's act. before he had possession. An administrator's deed which does not purport on its face to have been executed under order of a court. Street v. Collier, 118 Ga. 470, 45 S. E. 294. Proceeding for sale included a homestead. Hatch v. Lusignan, 117 Wis. 428, 94 N. W. 332.

20. A tax deed void because the tax collector proceeded under a repealed statute. Treece v. American Ass'n [C. C. A.] 122 F. 598. Code Civ. Proc. § 47, providing that when entry is made under claim of title founded on a written instrument, the property shall be deemed to be held adversely. Murphy v. Dafoe [S. D.] 99 N. W. 86. Deed from heirs of a homesteader and a tax deed executed within five years of issuance of patent. Murphy v. Pierce [S. D.] 95 N. W. 925.

21. The purchase price not having been paid. Chesterman v. Bolling [Va.] 46 S. E. 470. An executory contract of sale from one co-tenant. McNeeley v. South Penn. Oil Co., 52 W. Va. 616, 44 S. E. 508.

22. Where on an exchange of land between father and daughter, the daughter failed to make a deed, but the father went into possession and held for 15 years. Miller v. Wireman [Ky.] 80 S. W. 517.

23. A railroad company had an option to purchase land. It entered a part and acquired title by adverse possession, and claimed the rest of the tract, though they never had possession. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gulf of Mexico Land & Imp. Co. [Miss.] 33 So. 845.

24. One entering land under bond for a title does not hold adversely until by stipulation he agrees to quitclaim to the owner the premises described in the title bond. Brownlee v. Williams [Colo.] 77 P. 250.

25. A judgment debtor continued in possession after his title had been divested. Wilson v. Brown, 134 N. C. 400, 46 S. E. 762.

26. Possession under several deeds, the description in which taken together covers all the land. Hamilton v. Flourney [Or.] 74 P. 483.

27. A deed under which an administrator conveys property of the estate at his own sale is not. Miller v. Rich, 204 Ill. 444, 68 N. E. 488.

28. Possession of land not within the boundaries recited in a deed is not. Slatton v. Tennessee C., I. & R. Co., 109 Tenn. 415, 75 S. W. 926.

29. Hesser v. Siepmann [Wash.] 76 P. 295; Owsley v. Owsley, 25 Ky. L. R. 1186. 77 S. W. 397. A father orally distributed his lands to his children. Bonner v. Bonner [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 535. Father remained on the premises with his son after he had made him a parol gift of the land. Held not a breach of the son's possession. Owsley v. Owsley, 25 Ky. L. R. 1186, 77 S. W. 397.

30. Where parties entered a continuation of a street which the city claimed had been dedicated, but which it offered no proof to establish. City of South Omaha v. Meehan [Neb.] 98 N. W. 691. It was error to decree title to an entire tract where actual possession of only a part was shown. City of South Omaha v. Ford [Neb.] 98 N. W. 665. A title to a right of way acquired by prescription does not extend beyond the fence on each side of its roadway. The company relied on a grant from one co-tenant of a strip 66 feet wide. Floyd v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ky.] 80 S. W. 204.

31. Rev. St. 1895, § 3344 provides that adverse possession shall not embrace more than 160 acres or the number enclosed should the same exceed 160. Held, a trespasser can acquire title only to the land actually occupied, or if he occupies less than 160 acres, he may have his boundaries extended to include that amount. Doom v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1086.

32. In Texas, where one claims title to 160 acres by adverse possession under the statute, his pleading must sufficiently describe the tract so as to enable the court to render judgment therefor. Doom v. Taylor [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1086.

33. Parol evidence of sale by one in possession and of various transfers until pos-

§ 9. Payment of taxes.[34]—When payment of taxes will constitute adverse possession is regulated by statute.[35] Payment of taxes alone is insufficient.[36]

§ 10. Area of possession.[37]—Actual possession of a part of a tract under color of title to all gives constructive possession to the extent of the boundaries of the deed,[38] except such part as may be in the actual adverse possession of another,[39] but to avail the possession must be continued for the statutory period,[40] and in Texas the instrument containing color of title must be recorded.[41] Possession of a tract of land with title to a part and usufruct as to the rest carries possession of the whole.[42] Where one's title had been divested by sheriff's sale, his subsequent possession of a portion of the land could not be extended to the boundaries described in the deed under which he claimed prior to the sale.[43] Where a title is void as to part of the land conveyed, but the grantee occupies a portion thereof to which he actually has title, such fact does not give him constructive possession of the other part.[44] Where two patents lap, actual possession of part of the lap by the senior patentee is adverse as to the whole of it as against the junior patentee,[45] but where the holder of the junior patent takes actual possession of part of the interference, his possession is limited to his actual enclosure.[46] Adverse possession of one lot in a platted tract will not constitute adverse possession as to the others.[47] session was vested in claimant. Blankenhorn v. Lenox [Iowa] 98 N. W. 566.

34. See 1 Curr. L. 38.

35. In Illinois, payment for seven successive years on wild land by a person having color of title and provided claimant takes possession after such period. White v. Harris, 206 Ill. 384, 69 N. E. 519. In Washington, payment of taxes on wild land for seven years under color of title. Philadelphia Mortgages & Trust Co. v. Palmer, 32 Wash. 455, 73 P. 501. Under South Dakota statute, providing that actual possession under color of title, and payment of taxes for 10 years, vests title in the occupant, a payment of all legal taxes for the 10 successive years is sufficient, and a failure to pay for one year, though such payment was made the year following, is not fatal to the claim. Murphy v. Redeker [S. D.] 94 N. W. 697.

36. Where one had been on premises that he supposed he owned under a tax deed, but had done nothing except to pay taxes for 10 years, it was insufficient to establish adverse possession. Seaverns v. Costello [Ariz.] 71 P. 930.

38. Deed by a city of an alley to which it had no title. Peden v. Crenshaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 369. The true owner having no actual possession of any part. Crill v. Hudson, 71 Ark. 390, 74 S. W. 299. Possession of five acres inclosed, with claim of one hundred and sixty acres. Fischer v. Giddings [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 85. Possession of part under bond for a deed to all. Ellis v. Le Bow, 96 Tex. 532, 74 S. W. 528. Land patented to "A" was afterward patented to "B" who went into possession of part of it; later "A" entered peaceably on it and persons in possession of parts of it took leases from him. Held, that the possession of all the land embraced in the patent was restored to "A" so as to stop the running of limitations as to any. Schlossnagle v. Kolb, 97 Md. 285, 54 A. 1006. An entry of a part of a tract under a deed containing specific metes and bounds. Scott v. Mineral Development Co. [C. C. A.] 30 F. 497. One holding two adjoining tracts under separate patents, improved one and sold all the land as a single tract to one who leased it and the tenant took possession of the improved part. Held, the possession of the tenant was of the whole tract and a conveyance by an adverse claimant was void under the Kentucky champerty statute. Id.

39. Actual adverse possession will not be construed to attach to the claim of tenancy under a junior grant where the land is not enclosed. Kentucky Land & Immigration Co. v. Sloan, 25 Ky. L. R. 1515, 78 S. W. 175.

40. Rev. St. 1899, § 4266, providing that possession of part of a tract under color of title of an entire tract is deemed possession of the whole tract, has no application where the claimant has not had possession of any part for the necessary period. Brown v. Hartford, 173 Mo. 183, 73 S. W. 140.

46. Grazing cattle on land is not actual possession. Hall v. Blanton, 25 Ky. L. R. 1400, 77 S. W. 1110. Part of a tract included in one patent was leased by a party that claimed title under various patents, some of which were junior and some senior to the large survey; the lessee enclosed part of the land held by virtue of one of the junior patents. Held, that by so doing he gave notice of his adverse possession to so much thereof as was included in his lease. Kirby v. Scott, 24 Ky. L. R. 2175, 73 S. W. 749. Evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the area of land held adversely. Chew v. Zweib, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 311, 69 S. W. 207.

If a tenant be placed in possession of a tract of land and no boundaries are inserted limiting the possession to a prescribed part of the tract claimed by the landlord, his possession would be of the whole tract, though he occupied but a part thereof;[48] but if the lease be to a defined part of the larger tract, the possession will not avail the landlord beyond the boundaries of the parcel claimed and held by the tenant.[49] Kentucky statute of limitations in respect to adverse possession is liberally construed in favor of actual settlers on account of the loose practice of the state in issuing patents for conflicting grants.[50]

§ 11. Sufficiency of possession.[51]—In order that adverse possession be effective, there must be a claim of title hostile to the real owner,[52] and ownership in the claimant.[53] Naked possession without color of title is sufficient.[54] Mere occupancy by the legal owner of the land is sufficient as against one having a tax certificate entitling him to a deed thereon.[55] One can have no constructive possession under a void deed,[56] and in some states is regulated by statute,[57] and it may be presumed from circumstances.[58]

55. Where the owner of the legal title conveyed to another who had possession for the statutory period. Crocker v. Dougherty, 139 Cal. 521, 73 P. 429.

56. Judicial sale void because without jurisdiction; the purchaser did not take possession. Waldron v. Harvey [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 603.

Held sufficient: Surveying wild land, warning trespassers, cutting firewood. Protecting the birds and fish is sufficient. Boagni v. Pacific Imp. Co., 111 La. 1063, 36 So. 129. A company purchased a line of road under judicial sale, and took possession. There was a mortgage on the road which the purchasers never recognized. Held, under Wisconsin 10-year statute the purchaser had held adversely to the mortgage and the action to enforce it was barred. Gunnison v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 130 F. 259. Where one took possession under a contract of sale which reserved the mineral rights, and though he told the lessor thereafter that he repudiated the contract, he afterwards made a payment under it, he could not acquire title by adverse possession to the mineral rights. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Massey, 136 Ala. 156, 33 So. 896. Evidence held to show that one who had taken possession of land under a contract of sale occupied the land openly as his own, claiming title thereto, had acquired title, though the contract and conveyance thereof under court decree did not cover the land. Chesterman v. Bolling [Va.] 46 S. E. 470. Raking and hauling straw off from land for one or two years and cultivating an acre or two occasionally is insufficient. Prevatt v. Harrelson, 132 N. C. 250, 43 S. E. 800. Entry and erection of buildings which were shortly afterward abandoned, insufficient. Johnston v. Albuquerque [N. M.] 72 P. 9. Entry under a void deed, followed by actual occupancy, tilling the soil, fencing the land and paying the taxes for the statutory period. Pierson v. McClintock [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 706. Acts of exclusive use and continuous occupation for the statutory period when such use and occupation are accompanied by a claim of ownership. Legal presumption of ownership is not dispelled by slight evidence that the claimant went into possession by consent of the record owner. Flanagan v. Mathieson [Neb.] 97 N. W. 287. Maintaining a cemetery on land by United States is sufficient. City of El Paso v. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 496, 74 S. W. 21. Possession by a mortgagee of mortgaged premises to the exclusion of the mortgagor and in denial of his rights for the statutory period bars the mortgagor's right of redemption. Munro v. Barton, 98 Me. 250, 56 A. 844. One who has used a right of way in common with the owners of the land, continuously and adversely for the statutory period, has acquired an easement. Pennington v. Lewis [Del. Super.] 56 A. 378. Evidence held to show that one who had taken title by parol conveyance had acquired title by adverse possession. City of South Omaha v. Ford [Neb.] 98 N. W. 665. Enclosure of land by the United States, burying soldiers thereon and marking the graves with monuments, is adverse possession. City of El Paso v. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 496, 74 S. W. 21. Evidence

Enclosure is not necessary,[59] but where the boundary is a stream, to constitute it such within the meaning of the statute, it must be of such depth as to constitute a barrier.[60] That one in adverse possession allows another to use the premises does not held to show that one had been in open, notorious and uninterrupted possession for the statutory period. Southworth v. Brownlow [Miss.] 36 So. 522. Evidence held to show that one who had been in possession of a tract under well marked boundaries for 40 years had acquired title. Levy v. Gause [La.] 36 So. 684. Evidence held to show that one had a perfect chain of title, but having been in possession for the statutory period, his plea of prescription was good. Ours v. Gray [La.] 36 So. 326. Evidence held to show that one who entered a part of a street which had never been dedicated had acquired title. City of South Omaha v. Meehan [Neb.] 98 N. W. 691. Evidence held to show that one had been in possession and had acquired prescriptive title. Waters v. Durrence, 119 Ga. 934. 47 S. E. 216. Evidence held to show that land in controversy had been subject of a Spanish grant to private individuals prior to the time it had been ceded to the United States, that other parties had acquired title by prescription and a patent of the United States passed no title. Wilson v. Knight [Fla.] 37 So. 186.

Held insufficient: Where one had cut some timber on land and built a house thereon, evidence held insufficient to show that he had been in adverse possession for the statutory period. Greer & Co. v. Raney [Ga.] 47 S. E. 939. Evidence that one had been in possession of land under color of title many years ago held insufficient to show that such possession had ripened into a prescriptive title. Waters v. Durrence, 119 Ga. 934, 47 S. E. 216. A sheriff's deed is of itself no evidence of adverse possession. Prevatt v. Harrelson, 132 N. C. 250, 43 S. E. 800. Mere claim of ownership of vacant land by an adjoining owner and the driving away of trespassers not sufficient (Snowden v. Loree, 122 F. 493), nor is the mere act of requesting a third person to go on the land and keep off intruders (Jackson Lumber Co. v. McCreary, 137 Ala. 278, 34 So. 850), and adverse possession of wild land is not shown by evidence that one had it surveyed, paid taxes on it for a few years and at times cut timber on it (White v. Harris, 206 Ill. 384 69 N. E. 519). Where one went on land, fenced 30 out of 240 acres, built a house and other improvements thereon which remained six or seven years, but it was not shown who occupied the premises during the time the improvements were there, held insufficient to show adverse possession under the five-year statute. Buster v. Warren [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 1063. Where one inclosed land in controversy together with a large tract of other land to which he did not claim title, and there was nothing to show the extent of the land he did claim, such possession was insufficient. Nolan v. Mundine [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 638. One entered under a void tax deed, was in possession two years, then the land was vacant 12 years, during which time he paid no taxes, but occasionally cut some wood on the land and once tried but failed to rent it. Held, possession insufficient. Brown v. Hartford, 173 Mo. 183, 73 S. W. 140. One had fenced part of a timber tract but knew others came there and cut timber, and had told them to tear down his fence. Held insufficient. Mitchell v. Bond [Miss.] 36 So. 148. Evidence of pasturing on land and selling [illegible] therefrom considered in connection with acts apparently acknowledging a superior title, held insufficient. Zweibel v. Meyers [Neb.] 95 N. W. 597. Evidence held insufficient to show adverse possession. South Chicago Brewing Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732; Hays v. Earls, 25 Ky. L. R. 1299, 77 S. W. 706. Evidence held insufficient to show that title had been acquired to a party wall. Mayer v. Martin [Miss.] 35 So. 218. Conflicting evidence as to nature of possession held sufficient to sustain a finding of adverse possession by a court. Hall v. Roberts, 24 Ky. L. R. 2362, 74 S. W. 199.

57. Soper v. Lawrence Bros. Co., 98 Me. 268, 56 A. 908. In Washington, actual, open and notorious possession of land under color of title for several years and payment of taxes under color of title of vacant land for seven years will give good title by adverse possession. Under this statute, occupancy for a part of the time and payment of taxes for the remainder of the period is sufficient. Philadelphia Mortgages & Trust Co. v. Palmer, 32 Wash. 455, 73 P. 501. In Utah, adverse possession is established only where it is shown that the land has been occupied and claimed for seven years by one who has paid all the taxes and has been in actual, open and notorious possession. Dignan v. Nelson, 26 Utah, 186, 72 P. 936. In New York, occupation must be taken and continued under claim of title, exclusive of any other right. Fortier v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 86 N. Y. S. 896. In New York, adverse possession based on no color of title must be by enclosure, cultivation or improvement. Driving piles, marking out a space which he did not otherwise occupy is not sufficient. Id. Possession may be adverse without enclosure, cultivation or residence, but it must be by acts calculated to notify the true owner of the nature of the holding. Removal of two houses, filling in of ditches on two occasions and payment of taxes is not sufficient. Bynum v. Hewlett, 137 Ala. 333, 34 So. 391. Code Civ. Proc. § 369, provides that to constitute title by adverse possession there must be an entry under a claim of title founded on a written instrument, and land is deemed to have been occupied where it is fenced. It appeared that land had been fenced, but by whom was not disclosed; a cellar had been dug, fruit trees were growing and taxes had been paid. Held not sufficient to create title by adverse possession, entry not having been made under a written instrument. Freedman v. Oppenheim, 80 App. Div. 487, 81 N. Y. S. 110.

58. Possession of a strip of land not described in the deed of conveyance but which was necessary to the enjoyment of the tract conveyed. Wishart v. McKnight, 184 Mass. 283, 68 N. E. 237.

59. One by mistake entered the land of another beyond his own boundaries and cultivated it for the statutory period. Brownfield v. Bleekman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 714.

60. Under Texas 10-year limitation, land affect his possession.[61] One who owns and lives upon a tract cannot be in actual possession of another tract.[62] Possession with intent to acquire title must, at least in the beginning, be actual; mere paper title without such possession is insufficient.[63] Whether title has been lost by adverse possession is a question for the jury,[64] even where there is evidence tending to show possession of a portion of the lot in controversy.[65]

Possession without color of title must be actual as contradistinguished from constructive.[66]

§ 12. Pleading, evidence and instructions.[67] Pleading.[68]—The statute of limitations is a defense and must be pleaded,[69] as must a fact relied on to remove the bar of limitations.[70] An allegation that one "is now and she and her grantors have been in the actual, open, notorious and adverse possession, under claim of right for more than 10 years past" is sufficient.[71] The term "openly" shows that the use was notorious and not clandestine.[72] The term "adverse" implies hostility.[73] It is not necessary to use the term "exclusively."[74] The term "under claim of right and adversely" implies that the use was under claim of title as their own.[75] Alleging that the land was "occupied" is an allegation of "actual possession."[76] Whether possession of land is hostile and adverse is not a conclusion of law but an ultimate fact,[77] and is a question for the jury.[78] was fenced on three sides with a stream on the fourth. There was no evidence relative to the size of the stream and it was held that an inclosure was not shown. Cochran v. Moerer, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 495, 72 S. W. 1031.

61. One in possession of an alley under a void deed sought to inclose the entire alley. An action to prevent the obstruction was compromised by the claimant allowing it to remain open. Held, this did not affect his constructive possession. Peden v. Crenshaw [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 369.

62. Where an adjoining owner acted as agent for one and kept trespassers off the land, etc., it did not constitute actual possession for the owner. Chenault v. Quisenberry [Ky.] 81 S. W. 690.

Evidence as to whether one who transferred by bill of sale instead of deed held adversely was a question for the jury. Illinois Steel Co. v. Jeka, 119 Wis. 122, 95 N. W. 97. Testimony relative to adverse possession properly submitted to the jury. Patton v. Fox [Mo.] 78 S. W. 804.

The burden of proving all elements of adverse possession is on him who asserts the claim.[79]

What is admissible.[80]—Evidence that the land was generally reputed to belong to one claiming title by adverse possession and that he used it under claim of ownership is admissible.[81] A deed though ineffectual, except as between the parties to pass title, is evidence of the nature of the use in reference to the right claimed to be exercised thereunder.[82] Deeds from those under whom one claims are admissible to show adverse possession.[83]

Instructions.[84]—The question of adverse possession being for the jury, an instruction that a possession is not adverse is erroneous,[85] as is also a charge that adverse possession in order to give title must show facts that will satisfy the legal definition;[86] but when the facts clearly show adverse possession, the court may direct a verdict.[87] It is not necessary to restate all the elements of adverse possession where they have been set forth in a previous instruction.[88] Where one claimed title by 20 years' adverse possession, an instruction as to color of title and possession for 7 years was not prejudicial, though there was no such issue in the case.[89] An instruction that possession must be such as "will bring to the knowledge of the real owner the fact that one is claiming adversely" is not proper.[90]

Adverse possession cannot be relied on on appeal where there was no plea thereof in the court below.[91]

§ 13. Nature of title acquired.[92]—A title acquired by adverse possession is indefeasible,[93] wholly independent of any other title,[94] and is not divested except by the usual formalities of conveyancing.[95] It is not lost by a subsequent survey.[96]

The statute of limitations with reference to real property is neither a statute of presumptions nor of repose, but the adverse possession of land for the statutory period operates as a grant.[97] Statutes of limitations, as a general rule, are not given a retroactive effect.[98]

AFFIDAVITS.

Who may make.—A public officer may make an affidavit showing the reason for his act.[1]

Who may take.[2]—A notary public[3] or judge[4] generally has authority to take affdavits. In some states the principal on a bond may as a notary public take the affidavits of his sureties.[5]

Form and requisites.[6]—By the law of comity,[7] and by statutory provisions,[8] affidavits taken before the proper officers of one state receive faith and credit in other states; but, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, a foreign notary cannot administer a pauper's oath to one desiring to sue in forma pauperis.[9] In order to be available, such foreign affidavits must be properly authenticated by certificate showing such authority.[10] It is not essential that the jurat state that the affidavit was sworn to in the presence of or before the notary who verifies the fact by his certificate,[11] or by whom the affidavit was signed and sworn to.[12] The court will take judicial notice that the person whose name appears to a jurat was a notary public in and for the county named,[13] and will presume that he acted within the county of his jurisdiction.[14] Under a statute requiring a notary public to "designate in writing in any certificate signed by him, the date of the expiration of his commission," failure to so do does not invalidate an affidavit for a change of venue.[15] The signature of the affiant is necessary to the validity of an affidavit,[16] but a different name being used in the body of the affidavit from that with which it is signed, it is presumptively the affidavit of the party signing.[17] The venue and jurat are generally deemed indispensable.[18]

18. NOTE. Venue and jurat should appear in the affidavit: The venue is generally essential to every affidavit and is prima facie evidence of the place where it was taken. Belden v. Devoe, 12 Wend. [N. Y.] 225, note; Manufacturers' & M. Bank v. Cowden, 3 Hill [N. Y.] 461; Lane v. Morse, 6 How. Pr. [N. Y.]

Admissibility of affidavit in evidence and effect thereof.[19]—An affidavit is not admissible in proof until its execution is proved.[20] That part of an affidavit which is hearsay will be excluded.[21] Where an affidavit does not state whether it is based on personal knowledge or information, where the affiant could not lawfully have personal knowledge, it will be presumed to be based on information alone.[22] Numerical preponderance has like weight as in case of other evidence.[23] Affidavit purporting to have been made by a father is incompetent for the purpose of proving age of son.[24] Affidavit alleging citizenship has no probative force in establishing naturalization of an alien.[25] Affidavits are proper mode of taking proof upon motions or petitions.[26]

AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OF CLAIM OR DEFENSE.

An affidavit of defense may be used to support a motion to open judgment,[27] to obtain an extension of time to answer or demur,[28] and to throw the burden of proof on the opposite party;[29] but it cannot be used to assert technical objections to the pleadings.[30] The ordinary rules of courts requiring affidavits of defense do not vio-

394. The necessity of stating a venue at all is reluctantly confessed by the authorities (Bean v. Ayers, 67 Me. 487; Briggs v. Nantucket Bank, 5 Mass. 95; Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7, 48 N. W. 646, 13 L. R. A. 556), it having been held that the omission of venue from a notary public's jurat does not render it invalid, he being a state officer the record of whose appointment is required to be kept in the office of the secretary of state (Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7, 48 N. W. 646, 13 L. R. A. 551), but the omission of venue in a landlord's affidavit in summary proceedings is fatal (People v. De Camp, 12 Hun [N. Y.] 378; Cook v. Staats, 18 Barb. [N. Y.] 407; Lane v. Morse, 6 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 394). The objection to the omission of venue can be cured by amendment (Clement v. Ferenback, 1 City Ct. R. [N. Y.] 57), and under the strict rules of the common law might be taken advantage of by demurrer (Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7, 48 N. W. 646, 13 L. R. A. 556).

Jurisdiction frequently depends upon the affidavit, and if it is lacking in an essential requisite, all subsequent proceedings founded upon it are void unless the defect is waived. People v. De Camp, 12 Hun [N. Y.] 378.

The jurat, when the deposition is taken by a notary acting out of his home county, should have attached to it the name of the county for which the notary was appointed and in which he resides, and also a statement that his certificate is filed in the county in which the venue is laid and the act performed, though an omission to make such designation will not render the verification void. Produce Bank v. Baldwin, 49 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 277; Estate of King, 2 Civ. Proc. R. [N. Y.] 71; Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7, 46 N. W. 646, 13 L. R. A. 556; Sny. Not. Man. p. 57. The jurat should be in proper form and subscribed by the officer before whom it is made. If the jurat be all right in the original, it is immaterial as to the copy served (Barker v. Cook, 40 Barb. [N. Y.] 254; Livingston v. Cheetham, 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 479; Union Furnace Co. v. Shepherd, 2 Hill [N. Y.] 414), though the case of Graham v. McCoun, 5 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 353, seems to hold the contrary. Wait, Pr. p. 580.

late the right of trial by jury,[31] nor is a rule requiring administrators and executors, guardians and others sued in a representative capacity to file affidavits of defense invalid.[32] An affidavit of defense should set forth fully and fairly facts sufficient to show prima facie a good defense;[33] stating that a person has been "duly notified" is insufficient.[34] Stating facts substantially in the language of the statute is generally sufficient,[35] but if it fails to state a defense, either from omission of essential facts or from manifest evasiveness in the mode of statement, it will be insufficient to prevent judgment.[36] In some states a rule judgment may be taken against a defendant for that portion of the affidavit of defense which is insufficient;[37] but the court cannot make the rule absolute without an adjudication as to what portions of the affidavit are insufficient.[38] Where an officer of a corporation makes an affidavit of defense for the latter, it is unnecessary for him to set forth his information and belief.[39] Failure of the prothonotary to sign the jurat does not generally vitiate the affidavit.[40] For the purpose of determining its sufficiency the allegations in an affidavit of defense must be taken to be true.[41] But where the affidavit is not filed in time and comes before the court on a rule to open a judgment regularly entered, the court may examine the averments and require further evidence as to facts, as in other cases of application to open

40. NOTE. Necessity of prothonotary's signature: A clerical omission on the part of the prothonotary to put his signature to the jurat after swearing the defendant, does not vitiate the affidavit, the defendant appearing personally in court and declaring his willingness to be again sworn. judgment.[42] The sufficiency of an affidavit of defense depending upon the construction of other instruments, the court will not construe the instruments but will allow the case to proceed to trial.[43] Where the defense set up in an affidavit of defense is probably good, but is insufficiently stated, a supplemental affidavit is properly allowed.[44] Generally, amendments to the affidavit may be allowed,[45] it lying in the discretion of the court to permit an extension of time in order to amend.[46] Objections to allowing amendments to[47] or to defects in[48] affidavits cannot be taken for the first time on appeal.[49]

AFFRAY.

An affray is the mutual fighting of two or more persons by consent, in a public place.[50] It consists of mutual assaults, of which one person may be convicted, where the other may be acquitted or not put on trial.[51] The use of profane and violent language by two persons, each to the other, although in a public place, is not sufficient to constitute an affray.[52] Self-defense is available as a defense in a prosecution for an affray.[53]

broker and the owner of property who employs him is primarily that of principal and agent.[55] The principles especially applicable to these and other particular kinds of agencies are treated under other titles.[56]

§ 1. The relation between the parties. A. Competency to act as agent or to employ agents.[57]—The marriage relation does not disqualify one of the parties to it from acting as agent of the other.[58] But a married woman cannot appoint an agent for real estate owned by her in fee, nor have such agent in her husband.[59] An executrix may employ an agent to buy land on commission.[60] One conducting a sale under a trust deed as agent of the trustee may buy as agent of the beneficiary.[61] The governor of New Hampshire may appoint an agent to prosecute claims against the United States for public defense or payment of troops.[62]

(§ 1) B. Creation and existence of the relation.[63]—The contract of agency must have the elements essential to the validity of all contracts,[64] must be consistent with public policy,[65] and properly executed.[66] In most states an agency relating to realty must be in writing,[67] in which the particular land is identified;[68] in North Carolina, it seems, written authority is unnecessary.[69] An offer to sell, accepted by the attorney of the buyer, is a valid contract as against the seller, though the attorney's authority was not in writing.[70] Some statutes re-

The clerk of a hotel directed by a guest to forward telegrams received to him is the agent of the guest to receive messages. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Barefoot [Tex.] 76 S. W. 914. An arrangement by an owner with a land broker that the latter should wire the owner when he procured a buyer did not make the telegraph company the owner's agent and notice of a purchaser procured was not notice to the owner until the telegram was received. Johnson Bros. v. Wright [Iowa] 99 N. W. 103. A trust deed by a liquor dealer to secure payment of license, under which the dealer continues to manage the business, held not to constitute the dealer the agent of the trustee, so as to make the latter liable for the dealer's debts. Massachusetts Breweries Co. v. Hills [Mass.] 70 N. E. 1013. Held, that a husband who fraudulently induced his wife to join in a trust deed was not the agent of the bank to which it was given so as to charge the bank with the fraud. Hyatt v. Zion [Va.] 48 S. E. 1.

75. Lough v. John Davis & Co. [Wash.] 77 P. 732.

76. Whether goods were bought from another as principal or agent cannot be submitted to the jury where the evidence shows agency only. New Orleans Coffee Co. v. Cady [Neb.] 95 N. W. 1017. Where the evidence is conclusive that the principal signed a contract making another his agent, that issue cannot be left to the jury. Commonwealth Title, Ins. & Trust Co. v. Dakko, 89 Minn. 386, 94 N. W. 1088. Facts set out in complaint held not to show an agency and hence plaintiff could not sue on contract made by alleged agent. Mills v. Abbeville Southern R. Co., 137 Ala. 505, 34 So. 815.

77. Construed as creating relation of principal and agent for sale of machines in certain territory, and held that a warranty was not a part of such contract. Osborne & Co. v. Josselyn [Minn.] 99 N. W. 890. Contract between wholesalers and retailers of machinery, whereby title to goods shipped remained in wholesalers, and retailers paid a certain price, retaining as profits what they could get in advance of that price, and receiving five per cent. on cash remitted within a certain time, was a contract of agency. Com. v. Parlin [Ky.] 80 S. W. 791. A contract whereby the owner delivered certain goods to another, retaining title in himself, the one receiving them agreeing to turn over a certain portion of the price received, is a contract of agency, not a conditional sale. Lance v. Butler [N. C.] 47 S. E. 488. An agreement whereby one person is to purchase land for another and pay advances therefor while the other is to pay for such services and repay advances is a contract of agency. Jackson v. Pleasanton, 101 Va. 282, 43 S. E. 573. A contract whereby a locator of mining claims, for a consideration of $1 and money and labor to be expended on said claims, sold them on condition that the plaintiff should pay to the locator $45,000 and one-eighth of any amount in excess of that figure when he should sell the mines, each party to aid the other in the negotiation and sale of the property, held to be a naked power of attorney to sell, revocable at will. Taylor v. Burns [Ariz.] 76 P. 623.

78. Where buggy dealers gave notes for goods shipped, and agreed to hold goods on hand and proceeds as agents for the seller until all obligations were paid, the contract was construed as a sale and not an agency. In re Carpenter, 125 F. 831. An agreement to fill orders for engines secured by certain persons at certain discounts, and to refer inquiries for engines from a certain locality to such persons, is not a contract of agency, but merely gives rights of purchase and sale in that locality. Russell & Co. v. McSwegan, 84 N. Y. S. 614.

from the surrounding circumstances and situation of the parties.[79] The exclusive right of sale in certain territory[80] may properly be considered as a condition subsequent in a contract of sale.[81]

Intermediaries.[82]—A mere intermediary is not an agent,[83] and cannot be held liable as such when the capacity in which he acts is disclosed.[84] Dual agencies are void only when the fact of representation of both parties is not known to each.[85] Where ship materials are left with an agent to be sold and he uses them in building a vessel of which he is also agent, the owner is entitled to a lien on the vessel.[86]

(§ 1) C. Implied agency.[87]—The fact of agency or its extent may be presumed[88] from the conduct of the parties,[89] or their usual course of business,[90] or from lapse of time,[91] so as to protect a third party acting in good faith and with reasonable prudence.[92] The presumption does not arise from conduct of the parties when the interests of the alleged principal and agent are adverse.[93]

It will not be presumed from the mere existence of the marital relation,[94] though that fact may go to the jury on the issue of agency.[95] Once the agency is shown, the relation is presumed to continue.[96] See also a special article in this number on agency implied from relation of parties.[97]

(§ 1) D. Evidence of agency.[98]—Parol evidence is admissible to prove an agent's authority,[99] unless in writing.[1] Neither the extent,[2] nor the fact of agency, can be shown by declarations or admissions of the alleged agent,[3] not brought home to or ratified by the principal.[4] But it is not error to admit declarations,[5] or other testimony by the agent,[6] when the agency has already been shown or is admitted, when such evidence is admitted for purposes of corroboration only,[7] and testimony by the agent as to previous conduct is competent on the issue of due care by a person dealing with him.[8] Statements and declarations of the alleged principal are evidence of the most satisfactory character.[9] A witness may testify to his own appointment to an agency or the appointment of the company with which he is connected.[10] Evidence of actual transactions between the parties,[11] or tending to show a course of dealing,[12] or letters between

That one addressed an envelope will not show him to be bound by the letter contained giving authority to an agent where he denies knowledge of the contents. Darr v. Darrow, 120 Iowa, 29, 94 N. W. 245. A power of attorney "to release a mortgage * * * for $40,000" does not make the payment of $40,000 a condition, but the mention of that sum simply describes the mortgage. Adams v. Hopkins [Cal.] 77 P. 712. The acceptance by one road of a ticket sold by another is some evidence that the latter acted as the agent of the former in the sale. Chiles v. Southern R. [S. C.] 48 S. E. 252. Where an agent signs a memorandum of payment for realty as agent, describing it as "belonging to" one of his two principals, the words were part of the description and did not limit the agency, so that the two owners may be sued as principals of the one mentioned. Tobin v. Larkin, 183 Mass. 389, 67 N. E. 340. Where an offer to sell machinery was made to G. & Co. "(for the N. Umbrella Co.)" and G. & Co. and others signed the acceptance, such signature bound the signers personally and not as agents of the umbrella company. Gill v. General Elec. Co. [C. C. A.] 129 F. 349. Evidence as to existence of undisclosed principals liable for agent's purchase of railroad property at mortgage sale. Ranger v. Thalmann, 39 Misc. 420, 80 N. Y. S. 19. 21. Acceptance of benefits. Rosenthal v. Hasberg, 84 N. Y. S. 290. Where a contract of agency held by a firm was assigned to one member who continued the business, acquiescence of the principal in his acts and acceptance of the benefits, ratified the assignment. Albany Land Co. v. Rickel [Ind.] 70 N. E. 158. Acceptance of payments on drafts and acquiescence for several years will prevent one of two payees from questioning the authority of the other to indorse the drafts as against the bank paying them. Allen v. Corn Exch. Bank, 87 App. Div. 335, 84 N. Y. S. 1001. Acceptance of benefits under and repeated recognition by a corporation by payment of consideration will estop the corporation to deny authority of its president to execute the contract after full performance by the other party. Owyhee Land & Irr. Co. v. Tautphas [C. C. A.] 121 F. 343. Where corporate officers and stockholders had knowledge of the terms and consideration of a deed executed by officers of the corporation for many years and acquiesced in the act, they were estopped to deny the authority of the officers to execute the deed. West Seattle Land & Imp. Co. v. Novelty Mill Co., 31 Wash. 435, 72 P. 69. One suing a carrier in tort for damages to live stock from negligence in shipment may show that delivery to the carrier by him was made through his agent, though the agency was not disclosed when the contract was made; but the predication of his action on the agency will bind him by the terms of carriage made by the agent regardless of the question of authority. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. James, 117 Ga. 832, 45 S. E. 223.

22. That a husband has been doing business in his wife's name and handling her money without her objection will not raise an estoppel against her in favor of one without knowledge of such facts or who did not act on faith of the husband's general agency. Brown v. Daugherty, 120 F. 526. That a city and Federal license as a wholesale liquor dealer had been issued in name of a principal will not estop him from denying the authority of an agent employed to buy and sell beer, to buy whisky on his credit, where the seller never saw the license and sold part of the goods before the government license was issued. Action for price. Hackett v. Van Frank [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1013.

Evidence of estoppel: Sufficiency and admissibility of evidence to carry to the jury the question of estoppel of an alleged principal to deny authority of agent to purchase on his credit. Hackett v. Van Frank [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1013.

subsequent contract.[23] The principal may be estopped to deny a subagency by acts of his general agent[24] if such acts are brought home to him.[25] The agent, in like manner, may be estopped by his own acts from denying his representative capacity.[26]

(§ 1) F. Termination of relation.[27]—An agency for an indefinite time is terminable at will.[28] If the contract of agency be for a fixed period,[29] or the agency be coupled with an interest,[30] it is revocable, but the principal will be liable for the damages caused by wrongful revocation.[31] In this sense an agency coupled with an interest given for a valuable consideration or as part of a security is called irrevocable.[32] While it is the general rule of law that the death of the principal revokes the agency, when not coupled with an interest,[33] this rule is held not to apply as against those dealing in good faith with the agent, without knowledge of such revocation and within the scope of his actual and ostensible authority.[34] Commission or reward to be given an agent for his services does not alone make his employment an agency coupled with an interest.[35] Violation of his contract,[36] or disregard of instructions[37] by the agent, is sufficient ground for his discharge by the principal. 39. Sale of land by the principal, who had reserved that right, revokes the authority of the broker with whom the land was listed. Johnson Bros. v. Wright [Iowa] 99 N. W. 103; White v. Benton, 121 Iowa, 354, 96 N. W. 876.

ject of the agency by the principal revokes the agency, and the record of a deed given by the principal is notice to an agent and persons dealing with him that the power to sell has been revoked.[40] An agency ceases with the death of the agent.[41]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities of principal as to third persons.[42] A. Actual or implied authority to bind principal.[43]—An agent has no implied authority to appoint subagents or delegate his powers[44] without his principal's consent. A general agent of a corporation may employ a subagent.[45]

The principal cannot repudiate acts within the agent's authority,[46] even though done without his knowledge.[47] The extent of an agent's authority, under power conferred, is a question of law,[48] but when the authority is not in writing, its extent may be a question of fact,[49] as when the evidence is conflicting.[50] When an agent acts under special authority conferred by a formal instrument, his powers must be ascertained from the instrument itself,[51] which will be strictly construed,[52] and if capable of two constructions, will be construed most favorably to one dealing with the agent.[53] An express limitation of a special power will control over general powers conferred in a power of attorney.[54] One of three persons appointed attorneys in fact by a power of attorney may act for the principal if the power contains no provision requiring joint action.[55] The principal is bound by the apparent and visible interpretation which he has put upon the written authority.[56] When the agent's powers are not conferred by a writing, they must be ascertained from the scope and character of the business which he is authorized to transact,[57] but cannot include illegal acts.[58] Implied powers may arise from a course of dealing[59] or conduct of the parties,[60] who may be estopped to deny that an act was without the authority of the agent.[61] Implied agency of a wife to purchase necessaries does not extend to articles not necessary to the household.[62] Third persons may rely on the principal's statements as to the agent's authority.[63] Under a statute requiring signature of the writing by the party to be charged, a signature by his agent is insufficient.[64] Termination of the agency terminates the authority,[65] except as to third persons without notice.[66]

Declarations or admissions of the agent made without authority,[67] or as to matters outside the scope of his authority,[68] or after termination of the agency,[69]

There was a conclusive presumption that corporate officers had authority to execute a deed for the corporation, where the act was not repudiated until long after benefits received. West Seattle Land & Imp. Co. v. Novelty Mill Co., 31 Wash. 435, 72 P. 69. That experts came to repair machines in response to application to plaintiff's agent is prima facie evidence of authority from the principal. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Lambert, 120 Iowa, 181, 94 N. W. 497.

81. See 1 Curr. L. 49.

82. The public is not bound to inquire into the agent's special powers in absence of knowledge of third persons do not affect them,[83] though binding as between principal and agent.[84] The rule extends to a subagent, properly employed, though paid by the agent.[85] But if such limitations are known to the third party, the principal is not bound beyond the authority actually conferred,[86] and persons dealing with agents of limited powers must generally inquire as to the extent facts putting it on inquiry. Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 228. Waiver of a crop lien within the apparent authority of the landlord's agent will bind the latter, though without consideration. Wimp v. Early [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 343. The master of a vessel was justified in relying on representations of a dock owner's agent as to the berth at a wharf, though his vessel was injured on a rock by reason thereof, where the owner had no other representative on the dock and the statements of the agent were within his apparent authority. Garfield & Proctor Coal Co. v. Rockland-Rockport Lime Co., 184 Mass. 60, 67 N. E. 863. A contract for shipment of freight made by a traveling freight agent with general authority to solicit freight business and special authority to contract for shipment on special conditions as to movement of trains, without disclosing the limitations on his authority will bind the carrier as within the apparent authority of the agent. Baker v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. [Minn.] 97 N. W. 650. A judgment creditor is bound by payment to his agent if the agent had actual or apparent authority to receive it. Osborne & Co. v. Gatewood [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 72. Attorney having been given authority to revoke an offer, it was immaterial whether that authority was given directly by the principal or by another for him. Ratterman v. Campbell [Ky.] 80 S. W. 1155.

83. Fidelity Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Lowe [Neb.] 93 N. W. 749; Day & Frees Lumber Co. v. Bixby [Neb.] 93 N. W. 588; Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg Co. v. Peterson [Iowa] 100 N. W. 550; Dreyfus v. Goss, 67 Kan. 57, 72 P. 537; Chaffe v. Barataria Canning Co. [La.] 36 So. 943. Apparent authority of trainmaster to issue an order to conductor of freight train to carry a physician where neither conductor nor physician knew or had reasonable cause to believe that such order was issued without authority of the superintendent. Dysart v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 228. Declarations by the principal to his agent, not communicated to a third party, are not binding on such third party. Gough v. Loomis [Iowa] 99 N. W. 295. One dealing with an officer of a corporation is not bound to know the limits of the officer's authority as to a matter where the corporation has power to act. Groeltz v. Armstrong [Iowa] 99 N. W. 128. Where a bookkeeper had authority to indorse certain checks in blank payable by a bank and coming monthly to his employer, in order that they might be deposited to the latter's credit, a bank paying such checks without knowledge of the limitation is not liable for the amount of a check negotiated to others by the bookkeeper after indorsing it in blank, the fact that it contained the additional indorsements of such third persons not amounting to a fact putting the bank on inquiry. Wedge Mines Co. v. Denver Nat. Bank [Colo. App.] 73 P. 873. Where a tenant had no notice that contractors had exceeded their authority in making improvements without the tenant's consent, and their acts were within their apparent authority, the landlord was liable. Wustboff v. Schwartz, 32 Wash. 337, 73 P. 407. That an agent acted contrary to his instructions in agreeing that goods proving unsatisfactory may be returned for credit is immaterial where he had apparent authority to make the agreement. Eastern Mfg. Co. v. Brenk [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 538. By-laws of a corporation limiting the authority of its officers are not admissible as against one dealing with them within their apparent authority without knowledge of such limitations. Rosenbaum v. Gilliam, 101 Mo. App. 126, 74 S. W. 507. Dealings with a corporate officer within the scope of his apparent authority will bind the corporation as to matters really without his authority where the third person has no knowledge of the limitations on his authority. Rosenbaum v. Gilliam, 101 Mo. App. 126, 74 S. W. 507. Evidence of instructions to an agent unknown to a third person is not admissible in an action against the latter by the principal to recover for sales alleged to have been made by the agent without authority. Continental Tobacco Co. v. Campbell, 25 Ky. L. R. 569. 76 S. W. 125. A general manager of a corporate business has authority to employ labor. Forked Deer Pants Co. v. Shipley, 25 Ky. L. R. 2299, 80 S. W. 476. Third persons cannot be affected by a private understanding between principal and agent, unknown to them. Bay City Irr. Co. v. Sweeney [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 545. A provision in a contract restricting the powers of local agents, and salesmen was not notice of a limitation of the power of a general agent and collector. Kenney Co. v. Anderson [Ky.] 81 S. W. 663. Authority in writing to a special agent, without stating terms, to sell personalty to a particular person, gives authority to fix the price so that the purchaser is not bound by secret instructions. Bass Dry Goods Co. v. Granite City Mfg. Co., 119 Ga. 124, 45 S. E. 980.

84. Chaffe v. Barataria Canning Co. [La.] 35 So. 943.

85. Insurance canvasser employed by agent. Otte v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 88 Minn. 423, 93 N. W. 608.

86. Forked Deer Pants Co. v. Shipley, 25 Ky. L. R. 2299, 80 S. W. 476. One dealing with an agent of limited powers is bound by knowledge of such limitations. David Bradley & Co. v. Basta [Neb.] 98 N. W. 697. A party making a contract with an agent and knowing that the agent had no authority to enter into it cannot hold the principal thereon. Seven Hills Chautauqua Co. v. Chase Bros. Co. [Ky.] 81 S. W. 238. Where a third person signs a written contract which expressly forbids the agent from altering its terms he cannot urge, as a defense to an action for the price of goods, an alteration written on the back of the contract by the agent. Flower City Plant Food Co. v. Roberts, 81 App. Div. 249, 80 N. Y. S. 1060.

of their authority.[87] Persons dealing with agents are warranted in deducing the scope of the agent's apparent authority from the business he is permitted to conduct,[88] or the manner in which he is permitted to conduct it,[89] or from the nature of the agency.[90] The possession of the evidences of indebtedness may invest one with apparent authority to receive payment.[91] Possession of property may[92] or may not[93] confer apparent authority according to circumstances.

Evidence and questions of fact.[94]—Apparent authority may be shown by showing a custom,[95] or other similar acts,[96] but proof of general reputation is inadmissible.[97] Apparent authority is usually a question of fact,[98] if there is any

87. Brittain v. Westhall [N. C.] 47 S. E. 616. One dealing with an agent is bound at his peril to inquire as to the agent's authority. Sexsmith v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 88 N. Y. S. 925. Those dealing with a bank cashier who obligated the bank as surety on a replevin undertaking are required to ascertain his authority to so act, it not being within his apparent authority. Sturdevant Bros. & Co. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank [Neb.] 95 N. W. 819. A special power must be strictly pursued so that one dealing with such special agent risks any results from unauthorized acts. MacDonald v. O'Neil, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 364.

88. Wimp v. Early [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 343. Apparent authority to indorse checks. National Park Bank v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 40 Misc. 672, 83 N. Y. S. 249. Ostensible or apparent authority to act as agent may be conferred if the party to be charged as principal affirmatively or intentionally, or by lack of ordinary care, causes or allows third persons to trust and act upon such apparent agency. Blanke Tea & Coffee Co. v. Trade Exhibit Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 714. Recognition by the principal of acts of the agent similar to those in controversy. Held, that agent had apparent authority to receive payment on a judgment. Osborne & Co. v. Gatewood [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 72. That an undisclosed principal of a loan agent, who was directed to make the loan, taking notes, coupons and mortgage in his own name, allowed the agent to collect interest, tends strongly to show his authority to receive and receipt for payment of the note and to satisfy the mortgage. Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Vandergrift, 1 Neb. Unoff. 339, 95 N. W. 615.

89. An agent placed in entire charge of a lumber yard had power to endorse checks given in payment for lumber. Morris v. Hofferberth, 81 App. Div. 512, 81 N. Y. S. 403. A sales agent carrying samples has apparent authority to warrant that goods sold will conform to the samples (Dreyfus v. Goss, 67 Kan. 57, 72 P. 537); but not to collect payment for goods (Id.). Evidence as to whether the scope of the agency was sufficient to give apparent authority to waive a crop lien for the principal should be admitted where the powers of the agent did not necessarily go beyond leasing of the land. Wimp v. Early [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 343.

90. An agent of a purchaser of land has apparent authority to state the identity and character of the purchaser. Thompson v. Barry, 184 Mass. 429, 68 N. E. 674. The cashier of a banking corporation has no apparent authority to obligate the bank as surety on a replevin undertaking. Sturdevant Bros. & Co. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank [Neb.] 95 N. W. 819. An agent with authority to sell in a certain locality has presumed authority to sell according to local customs, as to persons ignorant of limitations on his authority. Mallory Commission Co. v. Elwood, 120 Iowa, 632, 95 N. W. 176. A sales agent has apparent authority to stipulate that if the goods are unsatisfactory they may be returned for credit, and it is immaterial whether the seller knows of such agreement. Eastern Mfg. Co. v. Brenk [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 538. If a conditional sale of goods to a retailer is construed as a contract of agency only, the retailer has apparent authority to borrow money to pay freight and give a mortgage therefor as a valid lien against the property. Rankin v. McFarlane Carriage Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 258, 75 S. W. 221.

91. Bond and mortgage in possession of mortgagee's attorney. O'Loughlin v. Billy, 88 N. Y. S. 567. The execution and delivery of a satisfaction to an attorney is strong, and in the absence of satisfactory explanation, conclusive proof of actual authority of the attorney to receive payment. O'Loughlin v. Billy, 88 N. Y. S. 567. The debtor must secure surrender of his obligation or show agent's authority to receive payment without it. City Nat. Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Commission Co., 93 Mo. App. 123. That an alleged agent for collection of a note did not have possession of the note is not conclusive evidence that he had no apparent authority to collect. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon [Conn.] 57 A. 109.

92. That machinery was shipped to the purchaser after making an oral contract with an agent, a prior written contract having been rejected by the seller, sufficiently shows apparent authority of the agent to make the contract. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Watson, 90 Minn. 100, 95 N. W. 884.

93. The bare fact that the owner of property intrusts its custody to another does not give that other any apparent authority to sell to a third party and pass title. Ball-Barnhart-Putman Co. v. Lane [Mich.] 97 N. W. 727.

94. See 1 Curr. L. 51.

95. When it was the custom for agents to take notes payable to themselves, taking such notes was within the apparent authority of one selling pianos. Baldwin & Co. v. Tucker, 27 Ky. L. R. 222, 75 S. W. 196.

96. On the issue of authority of an agent to make a particular contract, evidence that he made other similar contracts which the principal accepted and performed, and that the latter referred to him as having authority to make like contracts, is admissible. Kent v. Addicks [C. C. A.] 126 F. 112.

97. Testimony that one was known generally in the community as the business and evidence of agency.[99] Knowledge of the agent's authority by one dealing with him is usually a question for the jury.[1]

Unauthorized and tortious acts.[2]—Acts of an agent without the scope of his authority will not bind his principal unless ratified by him;[3] especially wrongful acts done deliberately to expose the principal to liability,[4] or for the agent's own benefit,[5] and where the third person participates in the fraud,[6] or the act financial agent of the payee of a note is irrelevant on the issue of his authority to collect the note. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon [Conn.] 57 A. 109.

98. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon [Conn.] 57 A. 109. Identity of agent and his authority. Williams v. Brandt, 86 N. Y. S. 389. Whether one receiving payments on a note was the apparent agent of the payee. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon [Conn.] 57 A. 109. The question whether an examining physician for a railroad relief department had authority to employ another physician to treat an injured employe is a question for the jury in an action by the employe for negligent treatment. Haggerty v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 100 Mo. App. 424, 74 S. W. 456.

99. The issue of ostensible agency cannot be submitted to the jury without evidence of agency. Wendel v. Mallory Commission Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 612.

1. Held to be for jury whether transaction whereby a trader took pianos on credit from an agent was with knowledge and fraudulent. Kops Bros. Co. v. Smith & Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 169.

3. Heath v. New Bedford Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 184 Mass. 481, 69 N. E. 215. Alteration of a contract of sale made by a traveling salesman before transmission to the principal is the act of a stranger which will not invalidate it as between the parties. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen [Vt.] 56 A. 87. A clerk who makes contracts for his employer as an agent without authority with one having knowledge of his employment cannot bind his principal by acceptance of the contract for his principal in the course of his clerical duties. Bartlett v. Bartlett & Son Co., 116 Wis. 450, 93 N. W. 473. A promise of an agent to repay rent where he had rented the premises for an illegal purpose without authority will not bind the owner. Stover v. Flower, 120 Iowa, 514, 94 N. W. 1100. An agreement for settlement made by an agent for collection of a claim held by estate after having prosecuted it to judgment in a larger amount was without consideration as to the amount remitted. Upton v. Dennis [Mich.] 94 N. W. 728. In an action by the principal to recover goods attached in hands of the agent owing to false representations of the agent that he represented another principal to whom the goods belonged, the acts and representations of the agent cannot be shown against the real principal, without a showing that he knew of or acquiesced in such false representations. Spies v. Stein [Neb.] 97 N. W. 752. The unauthorized act of a vendor's agent in renting land sold is no defense to specific performance by the vendor. Hawes v. Swanzey [Iowa] 98 N. W. 586. Where a deed executed in blank is left with an agent to be delivered when title should be accepted and money deposited in bank the principal is not bound by the act of the agent filling in and delivering the deed before acceptance of title and deposit of price, the grantee knowing that deed was executed in blank. Lund v. Thackery [S. D.] 99 N. W. 856. The promise of a traveling agent to pay commissions on sales to third persons assisting therein will not bind his corporate principal. Jones v. Keeler, 40 Misc. 221, 81 N. Y. S. 648. Where an agent to rent land contracted for its sale without authority, and, after the purchaser entered and made improvements without the owner's knowledge, the latter repudiated the contract, he was not liable for the improvements. Topliff v. Shadwell [Kan.] 74 P. 1120. Payment of part of purchase money for land to an agent not authorized to receive it and taking possession after notice that the owner had sold to another will not effect a sale. Chandler v. Franklin, 65 S. C. 544, 44 S. E. 70. Taking of clothing by a fire insurance agent in part payment of a premium was a fraud on the company and it was not bound. Folb v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 133 N. C. 179, 45 S. E. 547. But a deed executed by one purporting to be attorney in fact but without authority constitutes color of title. Street v. Collier, 118 Ga. 470, 45 S. E. 294. The janitor of a flat building authorized by the owner to exhibit the premises, execute leases, give possession, and collect the first month's rent, has authority to make representations as to the fireproof condition of the building so as to bind the owner, and such representations, made in good faith, bound his principal, though in fact false. Matteson v. Rice, 116 Wis. 328, 92 N. W. 1109.

Power to buy or sell personalty: In the absence of authority conferred, or a valid usage, an agent cannot sell on credit. Kops Bros. Co. v. Stephen B. Smith & Co. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 169. An instruction to sell goods for net cash is not violated by an agent who informed a buyer that he might pay on actual delivery. Bristol v. Mente, 79 App. Div. 67, 80 N. Y. S. 52. That a selling agent could not procure an order without taking goods in exchange will not authorize him to sell where he was to sell on cash or credit and collect accounts. Block v. Dundon, 83 App. Div. 539, 81 N. Y. S. 1114. An agent with authority only to purchase, pay for and ship potatoes to his principal, has no authority to sell. Hogue v. Simonson, 87 N. Y. S. 1065. In the absence of custom or proof of authority, an agent cannot warrant the quality of goods sold. Ellner v. Priestley, 39 Misc. 535, 80 N. Y. S. 371. Authority to a corporate manager to buy an engine is not authority to suspend payment and arrange for unlawful interest on the debt. Sanford Cattle Co. v. Williams [Colo. App.] 71 P. 889. Authority to take orders for fish will not necessarily authorize an agent to warrant their keeping qualities. Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter [Ala.] 36 So. 12. An agent selling machinery cannot accept lumber in payment without special authority. J. A. Fay & Eagan Co. v. Causey, 131 N. C. 350, 42 S. E. 827. Where a principal is bound by an authorized express warranty of goods sold, made by an agent, he is not bound by a warranty as to other qualities expressly reciting that it is made on the agent's individual responsibility unless he ratifies it. Holcombe v. Cable Co., 119 Ga. 466, 46 S. E. 671. Authority only to solicit orders subject to principal's approval does not give authority to make a binding contract of sale. Kelley & L. Mill. Co. v. Adams [Ark.] 78 S. W. 49. Authority to sell goods and collect gives no real or apparent authority to open a bank account or borrow money, nor will the agent's checks, signed in his own name, give his principal, who receives them, notice that the agent has opened a bank account in his name. Case v. Hammond Packing Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 732. That one is an agent to buy and sell beer will not give authority, as incident to the business, to buy whiskey on the principal's credit. Hackett v. Van Frank [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 1013. One sending orders liable to acceptance or rejection for goods from stock lists without receiving other compensation than a commission on accepted orders is not an agent of the seller to sell goods or guarantee their quality. Illinois Moulding Co. v. Page & L. Mfg. Co., 104 Ill. App. 1.

General sales agents: A sales agent of a machine company has implied authority to waive stipulations in a contract of sale. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Machmuller, 1 Neb. Unoff. 80, 95 N. W. 507. Where all negotiations for sale of a machine were conducted by a sales agent, he had authority lawfully do, or might and may still lawfully delegate to another.[21] Ratification is usually established by implication from the conduct or acts of the party to bind the principal by a tender of the machine to the buyer on the latter's rescission of the sale. Parsons Band Cutter & Self Feeder Co. v. Mallinger, 122 Iowa, 703, 98 N. W. 580. When the contract of sale so stipulates, the sales agent has no power to materially change the terms of the contract without ratification by the principal. Larson v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. [Minn.] 99 N. W. 623. Promoting contracts for erection of buildings is within the scope of the authority of a salesman whose sale of machinery depends on the erection of the buildings. D. June & Co. v. Doke [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 402.

Authority to receive payments or collect money:. Authority to receive payment does not authorize its receipt before maturity. City Nat. Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Commission Co., 93 Mo. App. 123. Authority to receive interest does not imply authority to receive principal. Thompson v. Buehler, 1 Neb. Unoff. 590, 95 N. W. 854. A land agent cannot accept part payment by check unless his principal has acquiesced therein. Ormsby v. Graham [Iowa] 98 N. W. 724. Authority to collect rents for a landlord does not imply authority to make rental contracts. Dieckman v. Weirich, 24 Ky. L. R. 2340, 73 S. W. 1119. An agent authorized to take a certain amount as part payment on land cannot accept Mexican money. Edwards v. Davidson [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 48. Authority to collect moneys for a principal gives no authority to relinquish rights or recognize adverse claims in property mortgaged to the principal without express direction. Johnson v. Wilson & Co., 137 Ala. 468, 34 So. 392.

Power to make or obtain loans:. Proof of authority to make a loan is not evidence of authority to collect either principal or interest. Evidence held not to show that a broker was the agent of a lender in receiving payments on the loan. Ortmeier v. Ivory, 208 Ill. 577, 70 N. E. 665. That one obtained a loan as agent for the borrower will not raise a presumption of his agency in making payment, though it is evidence to be considered with other appropriate circumstances. Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 P. 156.

Powers with reference to commercial paper: Indorsement of a draft payable to two, not partners, cannot be made by one in names of both without extraneous authority. Allen v. Corn Exch. Bank, 87 App. Div. 335, 84 N. Y. S. 1001. Authority to make, draw, sign and issue promissory notes payable at a certain bank, is a power of attorney to make promissory notes. Rosenthal v. Hasberg, 84 N. Y. S. 290. Authority to make restricted indorsements of drafts for the principal will not authorize a general indorsement in blank. Exchange Bank v. Thrower, 118 Ga. 433, 45 S. E. 316. An agent with authority to draw for timber bought and received cannot make the principal liable to the transferee of a draft drawn for timber which had no existence. Gray Tie & Lumber Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 1596, 78 S. W. 207.

Corporate and insurance agents: The president and general manager of a corporation may bind it for services of a physician to an employe injured through its negligence. Evans v. Marion Min. Co., 100 Mo. App. 670, 75 S. W. 178. In absence of other evidence, the president and secretary of a corporation are presumed to have had authority to execute a chattel mortgage purporting to be the obligation of the corporation. Burkamp v. Healey, 24 Ky. L. R. 1926, 72 S. W. 759. Manager had authority to make a contract indemnifying one for possible loss on crop of sugar beets. Constantine v. Kalamazoo Beet Sugar Co. [Mich.] 93 N. W. 1088. A corporate officer cannot execute accommodation paper in name of the corporation without special authority. Pelton v. Spider Lake Sawmill & Lumber Co., 117 Wis. 569, 94 N. W. 293. The treasurer of a corporation cannot bind it to pay a debt merely by reason of his official position. Rider & Driver Pub. Co. v. Rough Rider Horseshoe Co., 84 App. Div. 283, 82 N. Y. S. 765. A general power as managing agent of a corporation does not confer the power to mortgage corporate property. First Nat. Bank v. Kirkley, 43 Fla. 376, 32 So. 881. By-law held to give authority to corporate president to determine when bankruptcy proceedings should be begun against its debtor. In re Winston, 122 F. 187. The vice president of a corporation, to whom the secretary, who had been delegated power to sell property of the corporation, had delegated his powers by power of attorney, had no authority to disaffirm the secretary's previous sale of property for the corporation and commence suit for its recovery. Alaska & C. Commercial Co. v. Solner [C. C. A.] 123 F. 855. A corporate secretary has no authority to accept anything but money in satisfaction of a judgment held by the corporation. Good Hope Bldg. Ass'n v. Amweg, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 145. A corporation president cannot bind the corporation by a note shown to have been made for his own personal benefit. Wheeler v. Mineral Farm Consol. Min. Co., 31 Colo. 110, 71 P. 1101. The general manager of a live stock corporation cannot give corporate notes without special authority. Sanford Cattle Co. v. Williams [Colo. App.] 71 P. 889. An insurance agent with full power to make contracts of insurance may make a valid oral contract. King v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 101 Mo. App. 163, 76 S. W. 55. An insurance agent directed to take up a policy for cancellation cannot do so on condition that another policy should be gotten for the holder in another company. Miller v. Firemen's Ins. Co. [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 181. Authority to an insurance agent to deny liability on a policy does not imply authority to adjust the loss or to accept proofs of loss. Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 228. A local insurance agent with authority to make contracts of insurance, collect premiums, and sign policies, may waive proofs of loss by parol or in writing or by acts amounting to estoppel. Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. [Fla.] 35 So. 228.

Miscellaneous special agencies: Authority to deposit the principal's money in a bank does not imply authority to check it out. Heath v. New Bedford Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 184 Mass. 481, 69 N. E. 215. Bank cashier held under circumstances to have no authority to accept check. Van Buren County Sav. Bank v. Stirling Woolen Mills Co. [Iowa] in whose behalf the agency is assumed, inconsistent with an intention not to ratify.[22] It may be by mere acquiescence or failure to act,[23] for a considerable length of time,[24] or by positive acts, such as the adoption,[25] acceptance,[26] or 94 N. W. 945. One sent by a seller of goods to repair defects therein has no authority to vary conditions of the sale as to acceptance. Massilon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Schirmer [Iowa] 93 N. W. 599. An authorization and request by mortgagees to haul mortgaged goods to a warehouse will not give authority to ship and take a shipping receipt for the goods, nor are the mortgagees bound by notice to one so authorized. Zorn v. Livesley [Or.] 75 P. 1057. Authority to contract for a supply of steam from a boiler does not imply authority to buy and pay for coal to heat the boiler. Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson [N. H.] 57 A. 384. An inspector appointed by a purchaser of lumber to tally and inspect it has no authority in his special agency to waive inspection or delegate his authority to another. Campbellsville Lumber Co. v. E. R. Spotswood & Son, 24 Ky. L. R. 2430, 74 S. W. 235. Letters from principal construed as not giving agent authority to agree to furnish water for irrigation purposes. Anderson v. Adams, 43 Or. 621, 74 P. 215. A letter of attorney authorizing execution of bonds for "performance of contracts other than insurance policies" authorizes execution of a bond for performance of a contract to repay money advanced to a building contractor. Pacific Nat. Bank v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 33 Wash. 428, 74 P. 590.

20. See 1 Curr. L. 56.

21. Commercial creditors held to have ratified the contract made by a purchaser with the debtor requiring him to deposit money sufficient to meet their claims. Alexander v. Wade [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 19. If the unauthorized act involved a crime, or was a transaction opposed to public policy, it cannot be ratified. Daughters of American Revolution v. Schenley, 204 Pa. 572, 54 A. 366. An executrix may ratify the contract of one assuming to act as her agent for commissions to another in the purchase of lands. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227.

22. Mortgagee held to have ratified agency to receive payments on mortgage debt. Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 P. 156. The act of the lessor in accepting a tenant was not inconsistent with an intention not to ratify the act of a subagent, securing the tenant, in retaining a deposit made on the rent. McGowan v. Treacy, 84 N. Y. S. 497.

23. Directors of a corporation by failing to take any action regarding a sale of its property by the secretary, who had authority to sell, must be presumed to have ratified his acts. Alaska & C. Commercial Co. v. Solner [C. C. A.] 123 F. 855. Failure of a principal, on learning the facts of a fraudulent sale by his agent, to return the proceeds to the purchaser, amounts to a ratification of the fraudulent act. Evidence showed principal had knowledge that agent received proceeds in course of the agency. Russ v. Hansen, 119 Iowa, 375, 93 N. W. 502. A vendor of realty, who consents to an extension of time for payment with knowledge that his co-vendor has received a part payment, thereby ratifies the latter's act in endorsing and cashing drafts for both for the purchase price, though he did not know the manner of payment. Allen v. Corn Exch. Bank, 87 App. Div. 335, 84 N. Y. S. 1001. Evidence held sufficient to show a knowledge of and acquiescence in payments to another, and ratification of the act of receiving payment. Platt v. Schmitt, 117 Wis. 489, 94 N. W. 345.

24. Silence of stockholders for two years, with knowledge of an illegal contract made by directors, is not a ratification. The time is insufficient regardless of the application of the general rule of ratification to such acts of corporate agents. Oliver v. Rahway Ice Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 596, 54 A. 460. Silence for a long time, during which goods bought by an agent were seized in his principal's hands for the latter's debts, amounts to ratification of the agent's unauthorized purchase. Owens Pottery Co. v. Turnbull Co., 75 Conn. 628, 54 A. 1122. Where an agreement as to settlement of a debt due a bank, made by the cashier with the debtor, was not fulfilled by the bank, acquiescence of the debtor in another arrangement effected by the cashier for two years was a ratification of the latter's acts. Pease v. Francis [R. I.] 55 A. 686. Acquiescence of an infant in a transaction made for him, with full knowledge of facts for three years after coming of age was a ratification. Manson v. Simplot, 119 Iowa, 94, 93 N. W. 75. Retention of obligations for a loan for more than two years, with knowledge of facts and without objection, amounts to ratification of an agent's acts in giving his own obligations instead of those of the borrower and receiving payment thereon. Day v. Miller [Neb.] 95 N. W. 359. Acquiescence of an undisclosed principal for three years with knowledge of an act of his agent tends to show full authority to act. Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Vandergrift [Neb.] 95 N. W. 615. Silence of a principal for over two years after his agent orally rescinded a contract of purchase, held an acquiescence in the agent's act. Henderson v. Beatty [Iowa] 99 N. W. 716. Where one of two brothers, copayees on drafts, received proceeds of the sale on indorsements of such drafts made by his brother in names of both and did not question the authority to indorse for him until several years after payment and after the brother's death, he will be held to have granted original authority to make the indorsement. Allen v. Corn Exch. Bank, 87 App. Div. 335, 84 N. Y. S. 1001.

25. Plaintiff secured a purchaser, on request of an agent, and the principal carried out the contract made with the purchaser so secured. Hunt v. Jones [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 486. Ratification by directors of corporation of indorsement of note by president. Beacon Trust Co. v. Souther, 183 Mass. 413, 67 N. E. 345. Employment of a broker by a managing director of a corporation to sell corporate realty is ratified by a vote of directors ratifying the sale. Henderson v. Raymond Syndicate, 183 Mass. 443, 67 N. E. 427.

26. Agent's act in taking old machine in part payment for new, ratified by accepting execution of a contract made through the alleged agent,[27] or the acceptance of benefits resulting from the unauthorized act.[28] The presumption of ratification may be negatived by express declarations of the principal.[29] There may be a ratification regardless of former limitations of the agent's authority.[30] The principal must have full knowledge of all material facts at the time of ratification,[31] but if the situation is such as to put him upon inquiry, he will be pre-the order for the new machine, with knowledge. Schull v. New Birdsall Co. [S. D.] 95 N. W. 276.

27. Execution by the principal of a contract made by the agent in excess of his authority amounts to ratification. Short v. Stephens, 92 Mo. App. 151. Subsequent execution by a wife of a contract for exchange of realty with full knowledge of arrangements by her husband with a broker for the exchange was a ratification of the broker's acts in securing the contract of exchange. Charles v. Cook, 88 App. Div. 81, 84 N. Y. S. 867.

28. Where a lease for more than a year is made by an agent without authority in writing as required by statute, receipt of rents by the owner with knowledge of the facts will give original validity to the transaction. Kriz v. Peege, 119 Wis. 105, 95 N. W. 108. Acceptance of results with knowledge. First Nat. Bank v. Bower [Neb.] 98 N. W. 834. Principal bound by contract for labor made by agent, after receiving benefits thereunder. Budd v. Howard Thomas Co., 40 Misc. 52, 81 N. Y. S. 152. Acceptance of bicycle received for repairs by agent, and making repairs under the contract made by the agent will render the principal liable for its breach. Rollins v. Sidney B. Bowman Cycle Co., 84 App. Div. 287, 82 N. Y. S. 781. Acceptance of payments on drafts will prevent one of two payees from questioning the authority of the other to indorse them for payment. Allen v. Corn Exch. Bank, 87 App. Div. 335, 84 N. Y. S. 1001. Though a collection agency had no authority to compromise a claim in its hands, the act of the creditor five years later, on learning of the settlement, in receiving the proceeds of the settlement from the agency, ratified the settlement. Cobb v. Edson, 84 N. Y. S. 916. Acceptance of benefits by a partnership of acts of one who purports to act as its agent in drawing a note is a ratification. Rosenthal v. Hasberg, 84 N. Y. S. 290. Acceptance of benefits of a transaction brought about by an attorney and taking part in the final negotiations will bind a principal for the attorney's fees, though he was employed by her agent. Sultan v. Bailey, 85 N. Y. S. 332. Acceptance of benefits under settlement by attorney. Collins v. Fidelity Trust Co., 33 Wash. 136, 73 P. 1121. Where a corporation received and retained the proceeds of all checks drawn and deposited by its agent with knowledge of the circumstances, it was liable therefor, though he may have exceeded his authority. Stotts City Bank v. T. A. Miller Lumber Co., 102 Mo. App. 75, 74 S. W. 472.

29. Where an agent exceeded his authority in warranting goods sold, declarations of the seller's officers on receiving a memorandum of the contract that they would not accept the order and ratify the warranty are admissible on the question of ratification in the buyer's action for breach. Reid v. Alaska Packing Co., 43 Or. 429, 73 P. 337. Where a collector of a brewing company was warned that if he procured a bond for a customer it would be at his own expense, the subsequent action of the receivers of the company accepting the customer and availing themselves of the collector's act was held not a ratification. Offerman v. Reich, 88 N. Y. S. 936.

30. Bradford v. Smith [Iowa] 98 N. W. 377.

31. Ludden & B. Southern Music House v. McDonald, 117 Ga. 60, 43 S. E. 425; First Nat. Bank v. Bower [Neb.] 98 N. W. 834; Kriz v. Peege, 119 Wis. 105, 95 N. W. 108; Danziger v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 204 Ill. 145, 68 N. E. 534; Collins v. Fidelity Trust Co., 33 Wash. 136, 73 P. 1121; Beacon Trust Co. v. Souther, 183 Mass. 413, 67 N. E. 345; Bank of Commerce v. Miller, 105 Ill. App. 224. Ratification of a contract made by a corporate manager with a broker for sale of property, at a meeting of directors, the manager participating, is made with knowledge of facts known by him at that time, so as to amount to original authority. Hartford & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Plymer [C. C. A.] 120 F. 624. Telegram held not to be a ratification of a contract of sale of land, where principal had requested but had not received information concerning same. Henry v. Lane [C. C. A.] 128 F. 243. Settlement by agent for collection of claim held by estate is not ratified by administratrix after her discharge where she did not know existing facts. Upton v. Dennis [Mich.] 94 N. W. 728. Held, that principals had not such knowledge that the receipt of proceeds and their statement that they would investigate an alleged breach of warranty in an unauthorized sale by their agent and settle "if all right" was a ratification. Hogue v. Simonson, 87 N. Y. S. 1065. Under express provision of the code in California [Civ. Code, § 2310]. Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 P. 53. A mortgage executed by a general agent of a corporation cannot be impliedly ratified by the corporation without knowledge of the mortgage. First Nat. Bank v. Kirkby, 43 Fla. 376, 32 So. 881. Retention of money by a seller of land is not ratification of the sale, even after knowledge that the agent procuring the sale acted secretly for the purchaser, where the seller did not know who furnished the money. McClure v. Ullmann, 102 Mo. App. 697, 77 S. W. 325. Receipt and retention of money, by a principal on an overdraft by an agent on a bank account kept by the agent in the principal's name is not a ratification of the overdraft where the principal did not know of the account. Case v. Hammond Packing Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 732. Execution of a deed by owner in ignorance of terms of sale made by his agent not a ratification of the sale. Edwards v. Davidson [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 48.

sumed to have knowledge of facts which a reasonably diligent investigation would have disclosed.[32] It is immaterial that he was ignorant of such facts at the time of the unauthorized act.[33] Ratification cannot be partial[34] or conditional.[35] Acceptance of benefits of a contract of the agent must be subject to the agent's representations inducing the contract.[36] The acts must have been performed as agent,[37] and there can be no ratification without some evidence that there was an agency.[38] Ratification must come from the principal and not the unauthorized agent.[39] After ratification by the principal, the agent's authority cannot be questioned by a third party.[40] Subsequent ratification of an unauthorized act is equivalent to precedent authority.[41] Ratification is usually a question of fact.[42]

(§ 2) E. Undisclosed agency.[43]—An undisclosed principal may avail himself of a contract made by his agent,[44] but must do so subject to existing equities between the apparent principals.[45] He is liable, when disclosed, on simple contracts,[46] but not on negotiable instruments,[47] nor on contracts under seal,[48] ex-

32. Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 688, 72 P. 156.

33. Ratification of the purchase of lands by an attorney in fact under authority of a power duly signed and acknowledged will bind the owner, though he was ignorant of the terms of the contract when made. Rank v. Garvey [Neb.] 92 N. W. 1025.

34. A principal cannot partially ratify his agent's unauthorized act excluding burdens as to himself; acceptance of benefits must impose complete liability. Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Myers [Neb.] 96 N. W. 992.

35. Execution of a deed promised if another party's consent was obtained. Held no ratification. Riley v. Grant [S. D.] 94 N. W. 427.

54. Camden Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Lord [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 607. The rule rests upon the conclusive presumption, as to third persons, that the agent has performed his duty of informing the principal of all facts that have come to his knowledge when in the service of the principal. Modern Woodmen of America v. Colman [Neb.] 94 N. W. 814. Notice to an agent authorized to buy land, of rights of another therein, is notice to the principal. Schreckhise v. Wiseman [Va.] 45 S. E. 745; Blair v. Whitaker, 31 Ind. App. 664, 69 N. E. 182. A corporation is bound by knowledge of its manager where he participated as a director in ratification of his own acts as manager in employing a broker to sell corporate property. Hartford & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Plymer [C. C. A.] 120 F. 624. Where indorsement of a note by the president of a corporation was ratified by the directors, that such act was unauthorized under its by-laws, and that the treasurer and secretary, who were directors, failed to inform the other directors, did not prevent constructive notice to them of application of the proceeds of the note to debts of the corporation. Beacon Trust Co. v. Souther, 183 Mass. 413, 67 N. E. 345. Where the son of a creditor knew all the circumstances of a loan, was present when the loan was solicited, and the creditor drew a check payable to the son with instructions to examine the papers and deliver the check to the borrower, which the son did and received the securities, the son was the creditor's agent, so that the latter was chargeable with his knowledge. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800. Notice of the source of money from funds in hands of a guardian to an agent authorized to receive payment is notice to his principal. Manson v. Simplot, 119 Iowa, 94, 93 N. W. 75. Regarding defects in machinery, under contract of sale. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Lambert, 120 Iowa, 181, 94 N. W. 497. Actual observation by an agent of failure of a machine to meet requirements of a warranty was notice to the principal. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Machmuller [Neb.] 95 N. W. 507. The acts and knowledge of an agent of a surety company, authorized to issue bonds, as to the risk assumed under a bond, are the acts and knowledge of the company. Getchell & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson [Iowa] 100 N. W. 550. Where the solicitor of a gas company inserted a provision in a contract on a blank form binding the company to furnish gas at a certain price, and gave the contract to the secretary, who filed it without noticing the provision, the company is chargeable with notice of it [Civ. Code, §§ 2330, 2332]. Gallagher v. Equitable Gas-Light Co., 141 Cal. 699, 75 P. 329. Notice to an agent for purchase of lumber of liens of third persons thereon. Helfrech Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Honaker, 25 Ky. L. R. 717, 76 S. W. 342. Where a representative of sureties on a bail bond executes it under a power of attorney, with knowledge that one surety had not properly executed the power, the other sureties cannot claim a release because he was not bound. Com. v. Roark, 25 Ky. L. R. 603, 76 S. W. 140. Notice or actual knowledge of bankruptcy proceedings. Atkinson v. Elmore [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 492. Notice of a mechanic's lien to a salesman, promot-course of his employment,[55] or gained before creation of the agency,[56] or relating to matters outside the scope of the agency,[57] or to unauthorized acts,[58] cannot be imputed to the principal; nor is there a presumption that the agent has communicated to the principal facts coming to his knowledge as agent, when he has interests in the transaction adverse to those of his principal.[59] Fraud practiced on the agent may prevent the imputation of knowledge of facts to the principal.[60] Notice cannot be imputed to one for whom the agent has no authority to act.[61] The rule does not apply to a merely nominal agent, or one acting in a ministerial capacity only.[62] When it is sought to prove notice to a principal by his agent, he need offer only the agent who is alleged to have received the notice and need not prove lack of notice to other agents.[63]

(§ 2) G. Remedies, pleading, procedure and proof.[64] Third persons[65] contracting with the agent of an undisclosed principal may, on discovery of the real principal, elect to pursue either principal or agent,[66] but cannot hold both,[67] and ing the contract for construction in order to sell machinery, is notice to his principal. June & Co. v. Doke [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 402. An attorney applying for a loan which was obtained from a corporation, and executing the papers for the borrower, was the agent of both the borrower and the corporation so as to bind the latter by notice of facts in an abstract of title prepared under his direction. Blackwell v. British-American Mortgage Co., 65 S. C. 105, 43 S. E. 395. Evidence of notice to an insurance agent that insured had hernia is admissible to meet a plea of fraudulent concealment, though not to show waiver of terms of the policy. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 119 Ga. 455, 46 S. E. 678.

55. Merrill v. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 614, 73 S. W. 422. An agency to sell land is not general, so that only knowledge gained by the agent in the course of his own employment can be imputed to the principal. Kyle v. Goff [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1047.

56. Kyle v. Gaff [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1047. Even though knowledge so gained concerns contracts made by the agent after his employment. Samuelson v. Gale Mfg. Co., 1 Neb. Unoff. 815, 95 N. W. 809. While knowledge of a bank's impaired condition obtained by an agent while buying stock will be imputed to his principal so as to start limitations against an action for fraud in the sale, similar knowledge obtained years later, where the agent resold the stock to third persons, will not be imputed, the transactions being distinct. Agent had adverse interest and motive for concealing facts. Booker v. Booker, 208 Ill. 529, 70 N. E. 709.

60. Fraudulent representations as to property mortgaged, the agent having knowledge of facts, which if known to the principal would disclose the fraud, but being deceived himself. Lee v. Tarplin, 183 Mass. 52, 66 N. E. 431.

61. Notice to loan broker acting for borrower, receiving notice of secret equity in land on which the loan was made, is not notice to the lender. Goodwynne v. Bellerby, 116 Ga. 901, 43 S. E. 275. One to whom certificates of deposit were indorsed by a mortgagee on a building loan, who had placed money in a bank to pay the mortgagor, to enable him to draw money for the mortgagor, was the agent of the mortgagor after the building was completed and turned over to the mortgagor and the mortgage executed, so as not to charge the mortgagee with such agent's knowledge that the mortgagor had no title to the property. Roderick v. McMeekin, 204 Ill. 625, 68 N. E. 473. The husband though vested by law with the control of the wife's separate estate, is not, in the absence of special authority, her agent, such that notice to him will bind her. Where husband was not shown to be wife's agent in accepting deed of trust from son, his knowledge of fraud as against creditors did not bind her. Cooper & Co. v. Sawyer, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 620, 73 S. W. 992.

an election to pursue one is binding and will bar a subsequent suit against the other.[68] But proceeding against the agent is not binding as an election, when the third person had no knowledge of the agency or the name of the principal.[69] Fraudulent representations of a purchaser's agent is ground for rescission by the seller of a contract to sell land,[70] and the right to rescind is not affected by the fact that the seller paid part of the agent's commission.[71] Where a principal represented an agent as having authority to make a sale, the vendee may recover from the principal a sum fraudulently exacted by the agent in excess of the principal's price.[72] Where an agent, authorized to buy for cash only, buys on credit, and the principal receives and appropriates the goods, he is liable for the price, unless he can show that he furnished the cash to his agent, and had no notice of the agent's violation of his authority.[73] A third person performing a contract made by an agent was not estopped from holding the principal liable by delay in presenting his claim, where the principal received his voucher from the agent and gave the latter credit for the amount, though it was in fact not paid.[74]

The principal[75] may rescind a contract for fraud of the agent and the other party,[76] or sue for negligence[77] of a third person with whom his agent deals, and may, in his own name, maintain suit for specific performance of a contract made for him by his agent, whether he was disclosed as principal or not.[78] Where a factor receives proceeds of goods sent him to sell, his principal may equitably follow the money into hands of any one receiving it with knowledge of its trust character.[79] Where a lease of realty for more than a year is executed by the owner's agent without authority in writing, possession by the lessee will render him liable for rent as long as he enjoys the property.[80] A principal, though not bound by false statements of an agent, in the course of his employment, will not be permitted to profit by the fraud.[81] Though an agent is liable for the difference between the price he obtained for goods and a larger price he might have obtained, the purchaser is not liable therefor where he had no part in securing the appointment of the agent.[82]

Plea in suit against principal and agent held to put agency in issue without replication and to require its submission if warranted by the evidence. McCabe v. Farrell [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 1049.

84. Where both the agency and the making of a contract by the agent are denied, either allegation may be proved first. Rainey v. Potter [C. C. A.] 120 F. 651. In an action against both principal and agent on a contract made by the agent, the principal is not estopped to deny the agent's authority by failure to object to admission of the contract in evidence, it being admissible as against the agent. Tabet v. Powell [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 997. Testimony by the principal, sued on a contract made by an agent, as to fraud of the other party, will not prevent him from urging the defense that the agent acted for the other party without his knowledge or consent. Harper v. Fidler [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 1034. Where an answer in an action on contract urged as a defense that plaintiff elected to hold defendant's agent who made the contract in his own name, and set out facts relied on as showing election, the court may settle the issue on demurrer to the answer. Barrell v. Newby [C. C. A.] 127 F. 656.

85. Statements of a representative of a principal to one purchasing goods from the agent, while engaged in securing evidence against the agent who had sold the goods and appropriated the proceeds, are admissible in replevin against the purchaser by the principal. Baldwin & Co. v. Tucker, 25 Ky. L. R. 222, 75 S. W. 196. Books of agent not kept under direction of the principal are inadmissible against the principal, or against a third person suing the principal on a contract made with him by the agent. McKeen v. Providence County Sav. Bank, 24 R. I. 542, 54 A. 49.

86. One suing a principal on a contract made by an agent has the burden of proving the agency and the authority to make the particular contract. Parr v. Northern Electrical Mfg. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Davis [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 217. The agent of the grantor in a trust deed to collect rents on the land conveyed, who continued to collect and pay to the grantor after sale under the deed to a third person until the purchaser was awarded possession, was not liable to the latter for rents paid over after the sale; agents having no notice of the sale. Embry v. Galbreath, 116 Tenn. 297, 76 S. W. 1016. Where a summons in account was directed to defendant and the attached account charged him as agent, a demurrer will lie for defect of parties. Danforth v. Timmerman, 65 S. C. 259, 43 S. E. 678.

authority binds himself,[89] and is liable to the other party for damage resulting from his misrepresentation of authority,[90] not on the contract which he attempts to make, but for breach of implied warranty or in tort.[91] To fix the individual liability of such person, purporting to act as agent, it need not be shown that his express or implied representations were intentionally false,[92] but it must appear that the contract would have been enforceable against the principal, if authorized, and that the other party thereto could perform.[93] The agent is personally liable when he purports to act as principal, the other party having no knowledge of the agency,[94] or when, purporting to act as agent, he does not disclose the name of his principal,[95] or when he makes the contract in his own interest, treating the property, the subject of the contract, as his own.[96] He is personally liable to persons injured by his negligence[97] or misfeasance, but not ordinarily for mere nonfeasance,[98] nor for negligence of his principal.[99] An agent of a grantor in a trust deed to collect rents, who continued to collect rents after sale of the premises under the trust deed to a third person, was not a trespasser as

89. Danforth v. Timmerman, 65 S. C. 259, 43 S. E. 678. But does not become liable when he discloses the extent of his authority. Klay v. Bank of Dallas Center, 122 Iowa, 506, 98 N. W. 315. Though he did not misrepresent his authority, since there was an implied warranty of authority. Anderson v. Adams, 43 Or. 621, 74 P. 215. An option on land, not binding as to owners who are principals of the agent giving the same, is nevertheless binding on the latter as to his own land included therein. Tibbs v. Zirkle [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 701. Defendant fraudulently releasing a mortgage by use of power of attorney from mortgagee, held liable for debt. Persons v. Persons [N. D.] 97 N. W. 551. In North Dakota, an agent executing a contract in the name of a principal without authority and without a bona fide belief that he has authority, is liable on the contract as principal [Rev. Codes 1899, § 4343, subd. 2]. Kennedy v. Stonehouse [N. D.] 100 N. W. 258.

90. The principle is applicable to an officer of a corporation acting in excess of his authority. Groeltz v. Armstrong [Iowa] 99 N. W. 128. The damages recoverable are those which could have been recovered against the principal had the warrant of authority been complied with, together with expenses of proceedings against the principal [Rev. Codes 1899, § 4995]. Kennedy v. Stonehouse [N. D.] 100 N. W. 258.

91. Groeltz v. Armstrong [Iowa] 99 N. W. 128. He is liable on a contract signed for a supposed principal only on the implied warranty that he had authority to make it. Kent v. Addicks [C. C. A.] 126 F. 112. Where it is not alleged in suing agent on a contract in excess of his authority that he falsely represented his authority, the action is in contract for breach of implied warranty of authority and not in tort for deceit. Anderson v. Adams, 43 Or. 621, 74 P. 215.

against the latter,[1] record of the deed not being notice to him.[2] An unauthorized option given on realty by one of two agents will not bind his co-agent unless ratified by him.[3] The question of adverse possession cannot arise in favor of one who took possession as agent and never repudiated his agency.[4]

Evidence, proof and procedure.[5]—In an action against the agent, his declarations against his own interest are admissible.[6] In an action against an agent personally for goods sold him as agent, the burden is on him to show another exclusively liable.[7] Third persons, in an action on a settlement against them by an agent, do not have the burden of showing that the latter exceeded his instructions.[8] A complaint which, attempting to state a cause of action against an agent who had not disclosed his principal, alleges that the agent acted for a certain named principal, is demurrable.[9] In an action on a contract made by an agent on behalf of the principal and as his surety, where the principal denied the agent's authority and it was found that the agent signed as surety only, judgment could not be rendered against the agent on reversal of the judgment against the principal, since before final determination of the issue of his authority his liability could not be fixed.[10] Where an agent made a contract for his principal and as the latter's surety, and it appeared, in an action thereon, that the agent had full control of the subject-matter, that both principal and agent testified that he did not have authority to make the contract was not an abandonment of his plea of suretyship so as to warrant a judgment against him because personally liable in exceeding his authority.[11]

§ 4. Mutual rights, duties and liabilities. A. In general; contract of agency; diligence and good faith.[12]—An agent cannot delegate his duties to a subagent without express or implied authority.[13] He may represent both parties to a transaction with consent of his principal.[14] Where there is an express contract, the rights and liabilities of principal[15] and agent[16] are controlled by its

An agent under power of attorney to manage a business of selling fertilizers showed reasonable care and prudence in disposing of them in bulk at good profit, where prices had advanced, without waiting for country trade which would have been involved with a certain amount of loss, and in view of the fact that a certain customer had the right to cease using the goods. Willson v. Imperial Fertilizer Co. [S. C.] 46 S. E. 279.

19. The California statute imposes upon an agent the same duty of good faith toward his principal as is imposed on a trustee toward a beneficiary [Civ. Code, §§ 2322, 2228-2239]. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486. The trustee of an unincorporated company, authorized to sell its shares on which payments had been defaulted by members, could properly buy the share of a member, though requested by the latter to sell as his agent and need not account for a later increase in value. Swan v. Davenport, 119 Iowa, 46, 93 N. W. 66. An agent in charge of land whose principal took its management from his hands and allowed it to be sold under a tax sale of which the agent had given him notice may properly purchase the land under the tax deed after his discharge. Where a selling agent sent an offer to his principal purporting to come from third persons, their acceptance did not apply to a purchase by the agent and no contract was effected binding the principal as to his agent. Rogers v. French [Iowa] 96 N. W. 767. One receiving assignment of an outstanding certificate of purchase while acting as agent for the mortgagor under a written agreement with him to buy it cannot set up that the mortgagor's title was destroyed by foreclosure and claim the property in his own name. Mason v. Hartgrove, 103 Ill. App. 163. Evidence as to services of an agent in consummating a contract secured by him for his principal is admissible on the question of good faith and diligence. Misrepresentation was charged against the agent whereby he secured a larger commission than the principal would have given had he known the facts. Hale Elevator Co. v. Hale, 201 Ill. 131, 66 N. E. 249. Whether a principal has been deceived by his agent as to a contract to be made by the agent, and has entered into it without fully understanding all material facts, is a question for the jury. Id. An agent sued by his principal for recovery of land alleged to have been conveyed through fraud of the agent cannot defend on the ground that the principal neglected to read the deed before signing (Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486), or on the ground that the principal willingly parted with the land, though they supposed it was part consideration for another conveyance to them (Id.).

A collector accepting a draft in payment when he might have had money is liable on dishonor of the draft, his authority extending only to payment in money. Gowling v. American Exp. Co., 102 Mo. App. 366, 76 S. W. 712. An express company collecting moneys cannot limit its liability for failure to take money instead of a draft by stipulations in a receipt given for the draft. Id. An agent directed to loan money on trust deed security is liable to his principal for damages for including in the trust deed a note owed by the borrower to himself without knowledge or consent of the principal. Marshall v. Ferguson, 101 Mo. App. 653, 74 S. W. 393. An agent who induces his principal, by concealment, to accept a smaller sum for property sold by him than he received, is liable for the difference. Instruction. Barbar v. Martin [Neb.] 93 N. W. 722. An agent required by his contract to insure his principal's property in his possession was liable for its loss from failure to insure while the contract was still in force, though negotiations were pending for a new contract. Prichard v. Deering Harvester Co., 117 Wis. 97, 93 N. W. 827. Where a principal relied on his agent's representations as to the least profit for himself in the business of his agency.[22] If faulty or ambiguous instructions are followed in good faith and diligently, he is not liable for damages from erroneous interpretation.[23] If care has been exercised in selection, an agent authorized to employ a subagent is not liable for the latter's negligence.[24] A sales agent not prohibited from selling on credit is not liable to arrest and bail for bad sales where they are not affected by his misappropriation or embezzlement.[25] A bond given by an insurance agent for faithful performance of duties is a contract of indemnity as to a loss arising from his failure to obey instructions in cancelling a policy.[26] An agent owing money to his principal is not a fiduciary debtor within the meaning of the bankruptcy act.[27] A principal directing his agent to address messages to him in care of a certain firm may nevertheless, as against the agent, authorize another to receive and forward messages.[28]

(§ 4) B. Accounting, settlement and reimbursement.[29]—All profits and benefits resulting from acts of an agent whether in accordance with, or in violation of, his authority belong to the principal.[30] Revocation of his authority before the application of funds placed in his hands for a certain purpose, renders him liable to the principal for such funds.[31] He must be able to account regularly whenever a reasonable request is made,[32] and is liable for interest on funds he has mingled with his own and used.[33] That contracts of an agent are void will not excuse his liability for misappropriation of funds.[34] An agent who induces his principal to believe that funds in his hands are profitably invested, thereby preventing their withdrawal, cannot urge on accounting that they were in bank all the time and that he was not required to invest them.[35] The proceeds of sales made by an agent are trust funds held for the principal, except as to commissions;[36] and where the agent mixes his principal's goods with his own, title to the whole vests in the principal until his goods are returned or accounted for.[37] An agent charged with the purchase price of personal property wrongfully withheld from his principal cannot be charged for the use of the property.[38] If he wrong-

sum for which land could be bought and paid him that sum, he could recover the difference between such amount and a less sum which the agent paid for the land. Hindle v. Holcomb [Wash.] 75 P. 873.

fully retains possession of property purchased with the principal's money, he may be charged with rent less taxes paid, and the principal may be charged with interest on the money.[39] If he refuses possession to his principal, though the latter offers to reimburse him for advances, and takes title in his own name, he is liable for the fair rental value.[40] He cannot be charged for rent during such possession on delivery to the principal.[41] An indorsement of checks by the principal to enable his agent to collect them when they were in danger of becoming worthless, though done with knowledge of the agent's claim for excessive commissions, is not a voluntary payment thereof so that the principal could not recover an excessive amount retained by the agent.[42] An agent employed to procure title to land for his principal who gets title in himself and takes possession is entitled to have his expenditures repaid, and may have a lien on the premises for their amount when judgment for possession is rendered against him.[43]

(§ 4) C. Compensation of agent.[44]—That an agent represented the other party with knowledge of the principal will not prevent his recovery of commissions.[45] The right to compensation and the amount thereof is usually determinable from the contract between the parties.[46] Where the agency is modified by the prin-

46. Under a contract for commissions on orders procured by him, an agent cannot recover for services in installing goods sold by another, but must show a contract for a certain sum or a promise to pay and reasonable value of the services. Taylor v. Pullman Automatic Ventilating Co., 87 N. Y. S. 404. That the services of an agent have not been profitable to his principal will not affect the amount of his compensation under his contract. Shute v. McVitie [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 433. A contract describing a tract of land and stipulating that when it was purchased defendant was to pay plaintiff a certain amount is evidence of an agreement to pay commission to plaintiff in that amount. Dyer v. Winston [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 227.

Particular contracts construed as to compensation: Held, as to contract between insurance company and its agent, that the company could offset against claims for commissions only debts for advances during the subsistence of the relation of principal and agent. Campbell v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 130 F. 786. Held that agent was not entitled to compensation on business done partly by principal's efforts and partly by agent, but not consummated until after expiration of time limit. Magoun v. Brück, 183 Mass. 370, 67 N. E. 319. Contract between insurance company and agent construed as providing compensation from commissions, and that certain weekly advancements were to constitute a part of such compensation and not additional pay. Arbaugh v. Shockney [Ind. App.] 71 N. E. 232. Agent held not entitled to commissions on sale made at principal office, under the terms of the contract of agency. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Brundage, 89 Minn. 412, 94 N. W. 1091. An agent's contract for commissions only on orders accepted and shipped by the principal is valid unless fraud or bad faith of the principal is shown. Wolfson v. Allen Bros. Co., 120 Iowa, 455, 94 N. W. 910. Compensation being contingent could not be recovered, the contingency not having occurred. Smith v. Philip B. Hunt Co., 90 Minn. 255, 95 N. W. 907. An agreement by an owner to pay commission for sale of realty, to be retained from the price paid, or if payment was not made directly to the agent, to be received directly from the owner, requires the sale to be complete before the right to commission accrues. Ormsby v. Graham [Iowa] 98 N. W. 724. Contract could not be so construed that nothing should become due until the expiration of a year. Bair v. Hilbert, 84 App. Div. 621, 82 N. Y. S. 1010. Where an agent's advances are "to be deducted from commissions" at the end of his employment, there is no personal liability on his part to repay advances in excess of commissions earned. Schlesinger v. Burland, 42 Misc. 206, 85 N. Y. S. 350. An agreement to sell consigned goods and account at invoice prices entitles the agent to the excess over proceeds at invoice prices as commissions. Southern Grocery Co. v. Davis, 132 N. C. 96, 43 S. E. 591. Where notes given an agent for commissions on a sale of machinery were to be paid when the purchase notes of the sale were paid and the latter notes were transferred to another who surrendered them and took back the machinery, the principal was liable to the agent for commissions if he received the full amount on sale of the notes and was no longer liable thereon; otherwise if he still remained liable on such notes. Blassingame v. Keating Implement & Mach. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 344. The agent could not recover on the notes cipal by another contract directly referring to the first, the agent is entitled to commissions under conditions of the later agreement.[47] Performance by the agent is a condition precedent to the right to compensation,[48] but modification of a contract, made by the agent,[49] or groundless refusal of the principal[50] or third party[51] to carry it out, will not defeat the agent's right to commissions. Violation of law,[52] undisclosed personal interest in the transaction,[53] and fraud of the agent,[54] destroys his right to commissions, and entitles the principal to recover past compensation paid.[55] But fraud may not prevent recovery on the contract.[56] The receipt of benefits of the agent's services by the principal renders him liable to the agent for compensation,[57] though he himself closed the transaction,[58] held by him from the subsequent holder of the purchase money notes, in the absence of fraud or special circumstances. Id.

Sales agency, not exclusive: Contract between realty broker and owner construed as not giving exclusive agency for sale of land for a certain period entitling him to commission where the land was sold in the meantime by the owner. White v. Benton, 121 Iowa, 354, 96 N. W. 876. Under an agency to sell machinery for commission of all amounts over the net list price at the factory, an agent is not entitled to commission for a sale at a price beneath the net list price, made by the principal in the territory, the agency not being exclusive. Indiana Road Mach. Co. v. Lebanon Carriage & Implement Co., 25 Ky. L. R. 1763, 78 S. W. 861.

48. One employed to obtain a loan is entitled to compensation only in case he procures the loan. Demarest v. Spiral Riveted Tube Co. [N. J. Law] 58 A. 161. Where a sale of realty by an agent was not completed he could claim no commission unless the failure was the fault of the principal. Owen v. Kuhn, Loab & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 432. Compensation for services in buying land will not be forfeited because the agent falsely represented the price paid and received a note for that amount from his principal where he immediately gave the latter possession of the land; but if he refuses to give possession, though the principal offered to reimburse him for advances, he is not entitled to compensation. Jackson v. Pleasanton, 101 Va. 282, 43 S. E. 573.

49. Modification by the principal of a contract made by an agent within his authority will not destroy the agent's right to commission. Contract for sale of land by broker. Huntemer v. Arent [S. D.] 93 N. W. 653. Where a broker secured contract for exchange of his principal's property, agreeing to waive his commission if the contract was not consummated, on modification of the original contract by the parties and consummation of the modified contract, he was entitled to his commissions. Davis [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 217. A claim for a contingent fee by an attorney must be established by a showing of good faith and full information to his client before his consent. Dorr v. Camden [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 1014.

55. Under a contract whereby the compensation of an agent for all services past and future was to be half the profits of the business, fraud of the agent in past transactions will entitle the principal to recover remuneration paid for such services. Hindle v. Holcomb [Wash.] 75 P. 873.

56. An agent who has secured a larger commission for securing a contract through misrepresentation to the principal as to the amount of the contract may nevertheless recover the commission agreed upon under the actual amount of the contract. Hale Elevator Co. v. Hale, 201 Ill. 131, 66 N. E. 249.

57. Evidence sufficient to carry to jury the question whether a broker was the procuring cause of a sale of personalty in an action for commissions. Morton v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 99 Mo. App. 630, 74 S. W. 434. Rights of a sales agent for a corporation under a contract for commissions are not destroyed by appointment of receivers for the corporation where they affirmed the contract and received benefits therefrom though at time of their appointment the contract was executory merely. Leopuld v. Weeks, 96 Md. 280, 53 A. 937.

58. A broker for sale of personalty is entitled to commissions where he secured a purchaser though the sale was actually made by the owner. Morton v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 99 Mo. App. 630, 74 S. W. 434.

unless the agency had terminated before the rendition of services.[59] Where an agent is discharged for good cause before expiration of his term, he is not entitled to full commission,[60] but may recover remaining compensation less damages from breach of his contract.[61] Where the agent's compensation depends on collection of notes by the principal, the latter owes the former the duty of reasonable diligence in making the collection.[62] The principal is liable for the compensation of a subagent, when the agent had authority to appoint him,[63] or the principal accepts the results of work of the subagent employed by his agent with knowledge of the commission claimed.[64] The subagent, claiming compensation, must show the agent's authority to appoint him.[65] A credit rating of customers, to bind a principal to accept orders secured by his agent, must have been known to the principal.[66] An instrument executed by a corporation giving its agent a ten per cent. commission on sales and directing payment thereof by a banker was an equitable assignment of so much of the purchase price and gave the agent a lien on funds of the sales, enforceable in equity.[67]

(§ 4) D. Remedies, pleading, procedure, and proof.[68]—A bill in equity for an accounting will not lie where there is an adequate remedy at law,[69] but if the agent's duties are such, under the contract of agency, that a confidential relation exists between principal and agent, a suit in equity for an accounting is proper.[70] That an agent has rendered an account will not prevent maintenance of a suit for an accounting on the ground that it would be vexatious.[71] Where an agent was paid a certain sum in excess of the real price of land bought for his principal, because of his fraud in stating the price, the principal may recover the

Id. Agent had control and management of realty. Bill in equity proper and stated cause of action. Coffin v. Craig, 89 Minn. 226, 94 N. W. 680. A bill in equity against an agent for misappropriation of funds, for an accounting, is not demurrable on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law. Decell v. Hazlehurst Oil Mill & Fertilizer Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 761. In an action against an agent for wrongfully taking a conveyance of his principal's land in his own name, where the agent by answer conceded the principal's right to the land and asked merely an accounting, judgment for a specific sum claimed against the principal, and a lien on the land, it was proper to direct a conveyance of the land to the principal and retain the accounting for future adjudication. excess without first securing a rescission of the settlement made with him.[72] Default of a general agent is no defense in an action against a subagent to recover money embezzled by the latter.[73] Where an agent to purchase property sold his own property to the principal for a fair sum, with no other fraud than concealing his ownership, the principal's only remedy is to rescind the contract.[74] Among other available remedies, as between principal and agent, illustrated in the notes, is an action on account,[75] for money had and received,[76] for conversion of property of the principal,[77] for breach of the contract of agency,[78] or on the agent's bond.[79] Where an agent, acting in good faith, under instructions from his principal, committed a tort, he may recover from the principal the amount of a judgment recovered against him for the tort and his expenses in the suit.[80]

Pleading.[81]—Where several persons have succeeded to and performed duties of one originally appointed agent, a suit for an accounting against those finally acting as agents presents a single cause of action;[82] the entire course of the agency may be considered a single "transaction" within the meaning of the statute permitting joinder of causes of action.[83] Where, in an action to recover from an agent excessive commissions, the declaration and special counts set out the contracts and their modifications, on which such commissions were obtained, common counts were unnecessary to sustain a verdict for the excess demanded.[84]

72. Hindle v. Holcomb [Wash.] 76 P. 873. Where an agent was guilty of fraud in buying land for his principal, having made a contract for its purchase for the purpose of selling it to his principal, it is immaterial whether such contract was made before or after the principal agreed to purchase, in an action by the latter to recover excess of price paid because of the fraud. Evidence.[85]—The rule excluding evidence of transactions with a decedent by a party to an action against the estate does not apply to an action by a principal against the estate of his agent to set aside a deed procured by fraud.[86] Evidence of usual and customary commissions may be given to prove reasonable value for services of an agent in selling land.[87] In an action for an accounting against an agent, the burden is on the agent to show that he has paid to or for his principal all moneys of the principal coming into his hands.[88] In an action by an agent for commissions on sales, the burden is on him to show compliance with his contract and alleged bad faith on the part of the principal.[89] To support an allegation of conversion by an agent, the plaintiff must show generally the amount of property received by the agent and failure to return or account for it on demand;[90] such a showing shifts the burden upon the agent to make a specific accounting.[91]

§ 1. In general.—Questions as to the existence of the relation of principal and agent frequently arise in the case of persons occupying particular relations, as in the case of husband and wife, parent and child, partners, tenants in common, etc., and the relationship is sometimes, although not necessarily, a circumstance which gives rise to special rules. In this article we shall consider the relation of principal and agent in such cases and ascertain when it exists, and more particularly, the circumstances under which it may or will be implied, either as a matter of fact or as a matter of law.

§ 2. Implication and presumption of agency from relationship of the parties.—As we shall presently see, agency on the part of a wife to bind her husband is under some circumstances, and to a certain extent, implied as a matter of law, and irrespective of the husband's consent; and under some circumstances it is implied or presumed as a matter of fact, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. An agency is also implied as a matter of law, under certain circumstances, in the case of parent and child. With these exceptions, however, the general rule is that agency will not be implied or presumed, either as a matter of law or fact, from the mere fact that the parties are related, however nearly.[92] The relationship of the parties, however, may be shown and considered as a circumstance, in determining whether there was agency in fact in a particular case, and may be sufficient with other circumstances to establish an agency, where the other circumstances would not be sufficient in the absence of such relationship.[93] Thus where one insured had been injured and rendered utterly helpless in a distant country, with no friend or relative near him except his brother, and it being important to close up the business relating to the insurance before he was taken home, the agency of the brother to act for him in the matter might be implied from the circumstances.[94]

§ 3. Agency of parent for child.—The mere relationship of parent and child does not of itself make the parent the agent of the child to manage or dispose of his property or for any other purpose, whether the child is a minor or of full age.[95] But a son or daughter, being sui juris, may expressly appoint his or her father or mother as agent, or such agency may be implied from the conduct of the parties.[96] Or there may be an estoppel by holding out or other conduct, as in the case of other persons.[97] Thus if a son sends one who desires to purchase lands of him to his father to make a bargain, with a statement that whatever bargain they should make he would agree to, the person thus sent would be authorized to regard the father as the son's agent for the purpose of making a bargain, and the statements of the father while negotiating the sale would bind the son.[98]

Of course, where a child is a minor, the general rules as to agency for infants apply to an appointment of his parent as his agent.

§ 4. Duty to support parent. Liability for necessaries.—At common law, a child is under no legal obligation to support his parents, although they may be destitute and helpless, and in the absence of a statute, therefore, a child cannot be made liable for necessaries furnished his parents without his consent.[99] In some jurisdictions, a legal duty to support their helpless and destitute parents is imposed upon children by statute, and if they fail to perform such duty, they can be held liable for necessaries furnished, unless some special mode of enforcing the duty is prescribed by the statute.[1] Thus if a statute imposes the duty upon "the children of any poor person, who is unable to maintain himself by work, to maintain such person to the extent of their ability," a county which has, under the direction of the law, furnished necessaries to an indigent and helpless father, may recover therefor in an action against the children whose duty it was to furnish the same, and whose neglect or refusal so to do made it necessary for the county to furnish such necessaries.[2] But even under such a statute, a court would have no authority to render a judgment requiring the children to undertake the future support of their parents, where the statute is silent as to the means of enforcing such duty as to future maintenance.[3]

§ 5. Agency of child for parent. In general.—Ordinarily a child has no implied authority to act as agent for his parent, to manage or dispose of the latter's property, make contracts or for any other purpose, and authority will not be presumed from the mere fact of relationship.[4] "A son has no authority, as such, to lend his father's property, and there is no presumption that such authority has been given to a son. It may be shown that authority to lend tools and the like has been given to a son expressly, or such an authority may be inferred from the conduct of the father, tending to show that he reposed such confidence and intrusted such discretion to the son, as by showing that on other occasions the son had lent the father's property of a similar kind, and the father, upon the facts coming to his knowledge, approved what he had done; but without such proof the son stands in the same position as a stranger."[5] But of course, as stated in the above quotation, a parent may expressly authorize his or her child to act as agent, and such authority may be inferred from circumstances. Or the parent may be estopped, by a holding out or other conduct, from denying such authority.[6] Thus where a son had in several instances used the name of his father by signing it as surety to notes given by the son, and the father, with knowledge of the fact that such use had been made of his name, directed the holder of a note so signed to see the son about it, and the latter agreed to have it arranged as desired, and smaller notes were accepted by the holder, in place of the larger one, in the belief that the new notes had been signed by the father, as he made no objection to the genuineness of the note presented to him, the facts were such as to authorize the jury to presume and find that the son was the agent of the father to sign the note, or that the father ratified the act done by the son.[7] If a son has been accustomed to sign his father's name as indorser of notes, and the father has recognized the indorsements as binding, authority on the part of the son to bind the father by such indorsements in other instances will be implied.[8] So if the parent has formerly paid for goods purchased on credit by his child, and does not forbid such sales, it will be inferred that the parent authorizes further purchases on credit.[9]

Contracts for necessaries.—A father is not bound by the contract of his son even for articles which are suitable and necessary, in the absence of elements of estoppel, unless an express authority is shown, or the circumstances are such that authority in fact may be inferred. A son has no implied authority to purchase necessaries on his father's credit merely by virtue of the relationship.[10] When a child continues under the direction and control of his father, it is left to the father's discretion to determine what is necessary for him, unless it clearly appears that the father has failed to perform his duty to provide for the child's maintenance.[11] But an implied authority on the part of the child may arise if such an omission on the part of the father is shown. By statute in many jurisdictions, and by the weight of authority even at common law, and independently of any statute, a father is under a legal obligation to support and maintain his minor children, just as a husband is under a legal obligation to support and maintain his wife, as will be hereafter shown. And it follows that if a father drives his minor child from home, or causes him to leave by personal violence or abuse, or otherwise neglects without cause to perform this parental duty, the law will imply or create an agency on the part of the child, as it does on the part of a wife, to purchase necessaries on the father's credit,[12] such as food, clothing, shelter, medical attendance, etc.[13]

In some decisions, however, it has been held that there is no legal obligation on a parent, independent of statute, to maintain his child, and that no action can be maintained against a father for necessaries furnished to his minor child, un-

It will be seen from the cases cited in the last preceding note, that, although they all agree in holding a parent liable for necessaries furnished to a child, where he has neglected or refused to do so, yet this liability is placed on different grounds. In the cases first cited, it is held that there is a legal obligation on a father to maintain his infant child and that if he fails or refuses to do so, there is an agency by implication of law on the part of the child to purchase such necessaries on the credit of the parent. On the other hand, the other cases cited hold that there is no such legal obligation on the parent, independent of statutory enactment, and that there is no agency in the child, in such cases, to procure necessaries on the credit of the parent, unless he is expressly authorized to do so, or unless the circumstances are such as to create an agency by implication of fact. This implied authority on the part of a child to bind his father for necessaries only arises in the case of neglect of duty on the part of the father, which must be affirmatively shown.[14] If a father abandons his minor child or drives him from home, the child carries with him such an implied authority, but it is otherwise where the child, being of the age of discretion, voluntarily leaves his father's house.[15] Nor is a father liable for necessaries less the father has expressly or impliedly authorized the purchase on his credit, or has expressly or impliedly promised to pay therefor, but slight evidence is held to be sufficient to show this authority or promise.

Illinois: In this state it is a well established rule that "an express promise, or circumstances from which a promise by the father can be inferred, are indispensably necessary to bind the parent for necessaries furnished his infant child by a third person." Lee, 78 Ill. 443; Johnson v. Smallwood, 88 Ill. 73; Murphy v. Ottenheimer, 84 Ill. 39. Under this rule it has been held that, if a father neglects or refuses his natural or moral duty to furnish his child with necessary and suitable wearing apparel, any one can supply the child therewith, and the law in such case will imply a promise on the part of the father to pay for them, and he will not be heard to allege the contrary; but it would be otherwise if he had not been derelict in his duty. furnished a child while in the custody of the mother, who has left him without cause.[16] Nor does the above rule apply to adult children; and a father is not liable for necessaries furnished an adult child, in the absence of contract or authority, although the child be at the home of the father when the necessaries are furnished, and although the father fails to supply them himself.[17] There is some conflict of authority as to whether a mother who is a widow is under an obligation to support her minor children, where they are not able to support themselves, but the better opinion is that she is under such an obligation, and that she is liable, therefore, for necessaries furnished to them, on her failure to support them.[18] It would be otherwise, however, if the children have sufficient means of their own, or can maintain themselves, or provision has been made for their support.[19] If a wife obtains a divorce, and is given the custody of minor children, and alimony for herself, but not specifically for the support of the children also, this does not relieve the husband of his duty to support the children, and he may nevertheless be liable for necessaries furnished them.[20] In some cases, however, the contrary is held.[21]

The duty of a father to support his children does not extend to the children of a wife by a former marriage, so as to render a step-father liable for necessaries furnished his step-children,[22] unless he so receives them and treats them as to raise the presumption that he intends to create the relation of parent and child.[23]

former. A servant is the agent of his master for the purpose of managing or disposing of his property, binding him by contracts for the purchase of supplies and otherwise, or for any other purpose, in so far only as authority may have been expressly or impliedly conferred upon him by the master.[24] Of course, as in any other case, agency on the part of a servant to bind his master may be implied from circumstances, and the master may be estopped by his conduct clothing the servant with apparent authority. But properly speaking in so far as the servant becomes an agent for his master he loses the character of servant.

§ 7. Agency of husband for wife. In general.—At common law, a married woman cannot appoint an agent, and therefore she cannot be bound by contracts or acts of her husband as her agent, even though she may have expressly authorized the same. But this doctrine no longer obtains in all its strictness in any jurisdiction. In some states, statutes have been enacted, allowing married women to hold a separate estate, and to convey or contract with reference to the same; and in some states the common law disabilities of coverture have been removed altogether, so that she may contract in all respects as a feme sole. And in so far as her disabilities have been thus removed, a married woman may appoint an agent to act for her. And, subject to any special statutory provisions, she may appoint her husband as well as a third person. There is nothing in the marriage relation to prevent a husband from acting as the agent of his wife under an appointment by her.[25] And the same is true of any other contract or act which under the statutes a wife may make or do. The general rule is that she may authorize her husband to do for her whatever she has the capacity to do herself.[26] A husband may act as agent for his wife in making a contract for the purchase of land, and if he makes such contract in his own name the fact that he acted as agent for his wife may be shown by parol evidence.[27]

Where a married woman's disabilities are only partially removed, her capacity to authorize her husband to act as her agent is limited. The rule is that she may authorize him to act as her agent in making any contract or doing any other act which she has the capacity to do herself, unless there is some statute requiring her to act personally in the particular matter; but she cannot authorize him to bind her by any contract or act, by which she cannot bind herself.[28] Where a married woman is empowered by statute to contract with reference to her separate property, she may appoint her husband her agent to contract for its improvement or repair, so as to enable him to subject it to a mechanic's lien.[29]

Implication or presumption of husband's agency for wife.—Although a wife may have the capacity to authorize her husband to act as her agent, as explained above, the husband cannot bind her in the absence of authority in fact from her, or an estoppel by her conduct to deny such authority. A husband has no implied authority, merely by reason of the marriage relation, to act as the agent of his wife in managing or disposing of her separate estate, or binding her by contracts with respect thereto; nor will the appointment of a husband by his wife as her agent be presumed merely from the marriage relation, without other evidence, or from circumstances which ordinarily owe their existence solely to the marriage relation,[30] unless by some express statutory provision.[31] It follows that a husband's knowledge of defects in the title of real estate or illegality in the consideration of a negotiable instrument purchased by his wife, or other matters, is no more imputable to her than knowledge of a stranger would be, where it is not shown that he was acting as her agent in the transaction.

31. In some jurisdictions, by express statutory provision, a husband having the custody and control of his wife's separate property is presumed to be her agent. American Exp. Co. v. Lankford, 2 Ired. L. 18; Gross v. Pigg, 73 Miss. 286; Porter v. Staten, 64 Miss. 421.

While authority on the part of a husband to act as agent for his wife will not be implied or presumed from the marriage relation alone, an agency in fact may, as in the case of other persons, be implied from the conduct of the wife in allowing the husband to act for her or other circumstances tending to show authority in fact, and the relation between them may be taken into consideration, in connection with the other circumstances, in determining whether there was authority in fact.[32] A finding that a husband acted as the duly authorized agent of his wife in employing a person to perform labor upon her house is warranted, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien therefor, by evidence that the husband had general management of the property, that he employed such person to perform the labor, that the wife knew the work was being done, and that she personally gave directions as to parts of the work, or otherwise showed her assent thereto.[33] But authority on the part of a husband to make a contract for the improvement of his wife's real property, so as to subject it to a mechanic's lien, is not implied from the marriage relation, nor from the mere fact that the husband occupied, or managed and controlled, the property.[34] The mere fact that a wife has knowledge of the construction of a building by her husband on her property does not, of itself, necessarily establish the agency of her husband to charge such property with a lien for material used thereon; and she may contest the validity of such a lien,[35] unless there is a statute creating a liability against her under such circumstances.[36]

It has been held that if a conveyance of land to a married woman is delivered to her husband and accepted by him for her, acceptance by her will be presumed on the ground that, since the conveyance is for her benefit, authority on the part of the husband to accept the same for her may be presumed from their relation.[37]

It has been said that stronger and more satisfactory evidence is necessary to establish a husband's agency for his wife than would be required as between persons not occupying such a relation.[38]

Estoppel of wife to deny authority of husband.—When a wife has authority to appoint her husband as her agent with respect to a particular matter or business, she is subject, to the same extent as any other person, to the principles of law in relation to agency by estoppel. If by her conduct she holds him out as her agent or allows him to act as such, she will be bound by his acts within the scope of his apparent authority, whether there was any actual authority or not.[39]

Ratification.—A wife, in so far as she has the capacity to authorize her husband to act as her agent, may expressly or impliedly ratify, and thereby render binding, contracts made or other acts done by her husband on her behalf without authority.[40]

§ 8. Agency of wife for husband. In general.—It is well settled that a married woman is competent to act as agent for another, even though her common-law disabilities have not been removed, so that she could not contract for herself in the matter, for persons who are not sui juris may act as agents and there is nothing in the marriage relation to prevent a wife from acting as the agent of her husband. The present consideration is appointment of a wife as the agent of her husband, and the circumstances under which such an agency will be implied. If a husband allows his wife to purchase goods on his credit, or otherwise holds her out as having authority, and then separates from her and makes her an adequate allowance, and she afterwards continues to purchase on his credit as before, he will be estopped to deny her authority as against tradesmen who supply her in reliance on her apparent authority and without notice of the change of circumstances.[41] The fact Leland, 122 Ala. 289.

Where the husband has contracted in his own name for improvements on the wife's land, it has been held that the evidence to establish his agency, in the face of his express contract, must be so clear, cogent, and persuasive as to leave no reasonable doubt of the agency in the mind of the trier of facts. that a husband is insane and confined in an asylum gives his wife no implied authority to bind him by contract, except for necessaries.[42]

§ 9. Agency of wife ordinarily requires appointment by or assent of husband.—As shall be hereafter seen, where a husband wrongfully neglects to supply his wife and children with necessaries, the wife has implied authority, even without his assent, to bind him to pay for necessaries, purchased by her on his credit. And where husband and wife are living together, authority to act as his agent in matters pertaining to the ordinary affairs of the household will be implied or presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary. In other matters, however, the general rule is that a wife has no authority to act as agent for her husband without his assent, evidenced either by an express appointment by him or by his conduct. No authority can be implied merely from the fact of their relation as husband and wife.[43] Thus a wife has no authority, merely by virtue of the marriage relation, to sign contracts generally on behalf of her husband,[44] or to bind him by borrowing money, even though it is borrowed to purchase necessaries,[45] accepting a deposit of money,[46] to receive payments on debts due to her husband,[47] to receive a delivery of property from a bailee,[48] to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of her husband's property,[49] pay his debts,[50] or grant an easement or license with respect to his property;[51] to rescind, release, or modify contracts made by the husband.[52] A wife has no authority to bind the husband by contracts, or to dispose of his property, merely because of his absence, even though he may have deserted her,[53] or because of his incapacity to attend to business by reason of sickness or insanity,[54] unless the contracts are for the purchase of necessaries, or the property is disposed of for the purpose of procuring necessaries, as will be hereafter explained.

§ 10. Express authority of wife and authority implied from circumstances.—Agency on the part of a wife to act for her husband may be created by a formal power of attorney or other express authority, verbal or in writing.[55] And there may be circumstances under which authority in fact will be implied. As in the case of agency between other persons, her authority may be implied from circumstances, or he may be estopped to deny her authority by having allowed her to act for him in the particular transaction or in similar previous dealings, or otherwise clothed her with apparent authority.[56] When the husband is absent from home, and his property is left in charge of the wife, there is an implied agency on her part to exercise the usual and ordinary control and protection over the property thus left in her possession, unless the presumption of this authority is rebutted by proof that he had constituted another his agent for that purpose.[57] If a husband authorizes or allows his wife to act as his agent in particular matters, and thus holds her out as having authority, a private agreement or understanding between him and his wife revoking her authority, will have no effect as against third persons afterwards dealing with her in good faith and without notice of the revocation.[58] "If a tradesman has had dealings with the wife upon the credit of the husband, and the husband has paid him without demurrer in respect of such dealings, the tradesman has the right to assume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that the authority of the wife which the husband has recognized continues. The husband's quiescence is in such cases tantamount to acquiescence, and forbids his denying an authority which his own conduct has invited the tradesman to assume."[59] The burden of proving the wife's agency for her husfarm may be fed to his cattle, also attached where he has left her at home on the farm with several minor children, giving no other person charge of his affairs, and has been absent several months before the attachment. band is on the person relying upon the alleged authority,[60] and the question whether or not there was such an agency is one of fact for the jury.[61]

§ 11. Married woman doing business in her own name.—At common law, if a married woman carries on a business in her own name with her husband's consent, it is considered that the business is his and the wife his agent, and he is presumptively bound by her contracts in reference thereto,[62] unless it appears that the credit was given exclusively to her.[63] But in most jurisdictions this doctrine has been changed by statute, so that a husband is not liable for debts contracted by his wife in carrying on a business on her own account,[64] unless contracted upon his credit, with his knowledge and consent.[65] In some jurisdictions in order that the husband may be relieved from liability on contracts in relation to her separate business, it is required that a certificate shall be filed, setting forth the name of her husband, the nature of the business proposed to be done, and the place where it is to be done.[66]

§ 12. Implied agency of wife in matters pertaining to the household.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, if husband and wife are living together and maintaining a home, or if they are living under the same roof, although they may be living separate,[67] it is presumed that the management of the ordinary domestic affairs of the household is intrusted to the wife, and she has implied authority to purchase on his credit, such provisions, clothing, and other articles, as may be necessary or suitable for the family, taking into consideration their style of living sanctioned by him.[68] And in like manner, the husband is bound.

on the ground of agency, by the declarations of the wife in relation to the ordinary affairs of the household.[69] It would seem clear, however, from the reason on which this rule is based, that it does not apply where husband and wife, although they may cohabit, do not maintain a house.[70] But the common law, as to the agency of the wife binding the husband in ordinary domestic affairs becomes unimportant when by statute both husband and wife are made responsible for family expenses.[71]

The implied authority of the wife under this doctrine extends to the purchase of such articles only as are necessary or suitable for herself and the family, taking into consideration their station in life and their style of living. It does not extend to the purchase of articles which have no relation to the household, or are unsuitable to the husband's style of living, or to purchases which are clearly extravagant or excessive.[72] A wife has no implied authority to bind her husband by a purchase of jewelry which is unsuitable to their station in life,[73] if, indeed, she has implied authority to purchase jewelry at all on his credit.[74] The presumption that a wife has authority to bind her husband by the purchase of articles for domestic use, and in other matters pertaining to the affairs of the household, is a presumption of fact and not a conclusive presumption of law, and may be rebutted by showing that there was no authority in fact,[75] provided, of course. the husband is not estopped by having clothed the wife with apparent authority. The husband is certainly not liable for articles purchased by his wife on his credit contrary to his prohibition, if the person dealing with her had notice of the prohibition,[76] unless the articles are necessaries and he has neglected his duty to provide them, as will be hereafter explained, the burden of proving which is on the person furnishing the articles. The mere fact that a husband's prohibition to his wife to deal on his account is not communicated to persons with whom she subsequently deals does not render the husband liable to such persons.[77] But it is otherwise if he has previously permitted her to purchase goods on his credit, and tradesmen deal with her without notice that her authority has been revoked.[78] The husband is not liable, in the absence of authority in fact, and in the absence of elements of estoppel, if he has supplied his wife with all necessary and suitable articles, or with sufficient money to purchase them.[79] Nor can the husband be held personally liable for necessaries which she has expressly bought on her own credit, although they are such as she might have bought on his credit, and charged him with.

§ 13. Wife's implied authority to procure necessaries on husband's failure to supply them. In general.—To the rule that a wife is not the agent of her husband merely by virtue of the marriage relation, so as to have implied authority to bind him by contract, there is a well settled exception with respect to the purchase of necessaries in case of the husband's neglect to support the wife. If a husband deserts his wife or turns her away without cause, or drives her away by his ill-treatment or misconduct, or if, although they may be living separate by mutual consent or may be living together, he fails to provide her with necessaries for herself and her children by him, she has implied authority to procure the same on his credit, and to bind him to pay for them. Her agency in this respect is said to arise from necessity, and is not at all dependent upon the husband's consent. It exists even though he may forbid her to purchase, and though the persons from whom she purchases may know of his want of consent, because of the fact that a husband is under a legal duty to support his wife, and the law implies authority on the part of the wife, and imposes liability on the part of the husband, by reason of this duty.[80] The husband cannot escape liability under such circumstances by showing that he gave to the person furnishing the necessaries notice that he would not be responsible.[81] And if he refuses to permit his wife to live with him, he cannot relieve himself from liability for her maintenance and support by showing that he procured board and lodging for her with a person with whom she refused to live, as where she is thus turned away she may procure necessaries from whomsoever she pleases, so long as the place selected by her is respectable and the expense thereof does not exceed proper limits, considering the husband's financial condition.[82]

This implied authority of the wife to bind the husband for necessaries exists notwithstanding the fact that the wife has a separate estate, for this does not make it any the less the duty of the husband to support her.[83] In some decisions, however, it is held that if the wife has an adequate means of support, or receives an adequate maintenance from some source, she cannot procure necessaries on the credit of her husband though she is living separate from him for a justifiable cause, and he neglects to support her.[84] The husband is liable for necessaries so furnished to a wife, notwithstanding statutes giving a married woman the capacity to contract generally or in reference to her separate estate,[85] unless the wife in fact contracts for herself. And the principle applies although the husband is a minor, for a minor may bind himself by a contract to pay for necessaries furnished to himself or his wife and children.[86] The principle applies only when necessaries are in fact furnished the wife. He is not liable, unless agency in fact on the part of the wife is shown, for breach of a contract to purchase necessaries.[87] In order that a husband may be bound by his wife's purchase of necessaries, she must act for him in making the purchase. He is not bound if the credit is given to her individually. Where a wife lives with and is supported by her father, the law will not imply a promise on the part of the husband to pay the father for the support, unless there is something to show that payment was expected and intended, for the relationship of parent and child excludes the ordinary implication.[88] But a husband has been held liable for necessaries furnished his wife, after her desertion by him, by her son by a former marriage,[89] or by her mother.[90]

Effect of separation of husband and wife, abandonment, desertion, etc. Separation by agreement. Allowance.—The fact that a husband and wife are living separate and apart by mutual consent or agreement does not take away her implied authority to bind him for necessaries, if he fails to provide them, and has not made her an adequate allowance for her support.[91] He is not liable, however, if he makes her an adequate allowance, and pays the same, and tradesmen who furnish her with articles after the separation act at their peril.[92] Some of the courts, but not all, have held that the husband is not liable in such a case, even though the person furnishing the necessaries may have had no notice of the separation and allowance.[93]

(Ky.) 166, where, though husband and wife separate, and provision be made for her maintenance, yet if during the separation the wife buys necessaries and the parties become reconciled and the necessaries come to the possession of the wife and family, the husband is liable therefor. A contract between the husband and a third person to maintain the wife will not relieve him from liability for necessaries furnished her if she is driven away by the ill usage of such third person, or if he otherwise fails to perform the contract; but it is otherwise if the wife leaves or refuses to accept such maintenance, without cause. Pidgin v. Cram, 8 N. H. 350. In order that a husband may be relieved from liability for necessaries furnished his wife because of having made her an allowance, the allowance must have been paid. A mere unperformed agreement to pay is not enough.[94] And the allowance must have been adequate, taking into consideration the station in life of the parties, and the means of the husband,[95] unless the wife has agreed to accept the allowance as sufficient, in which case she must repudiate the agreement, and offer to return to him, before she can bind him by purchase of necessaries.[96]

Husband's desertion of wife.—If a husband deserts or turns away his wife without sufficient cause, and without an adequate provision for her support, she clearly has implied authority to purchase necessaries on his credit and bind him to pay for them. But this does not apply where a husband leaves his wife or turns her away for sufficient cause, as because of adultery[97] or extreme cruelty.[98] Nor does the rule apply where the husband, after deserting or driving away the wife without sufficient cause, offers to return or take her back, and she rejects the offer,[99] unless it appears that the offer was not made in good faith, or was accompanied by conditions which he had no right to impose, or that the wife had sufficient cause for rejecting it.[1]

Husband's insanity.—The fact that a husband is insane, and confined in an asylum or elsewhere, does not affect the wife's right to support, and if no provision is made for her support out of his estate, she has the same implied authority to bind him for necessaries as if he were sane and failed to furnish her adequate support.[2]

Wife's abandonment of husband.—If a wife leaves her husband without his consent and without sufficient cause, she has no implied authority to bind him even for necessaries, for under such conditions there is no duty on the part of the husband to support her.[3] By the weight of authority, a tradesman who supplies

As we shall see in another section, where a husband allows his wife to purchase goods on his credit, or otherwise holds her out as having authority, and then separates from her and makes her an allowance, he will be estopped to deny the continuance of her authority as against tradesmen who continue to supply her on his credit without notice of the changed conditions. "But if, though a tradesman, he had never been so authorized to give credit to the wife, but merely knew, as any one else knew, that the two were living together as man and wife, then there is no duty on the husband to give notice to him of the separation." the wife with necessaries under such circumstances cannot hold the husband liable, even though he may have had no notice of the separation,[4] unless he can make out an estoppel against the husband by showing that he had allowed the wife to make such purchases before the separation, and thus clothed her with apparent authority to make the purchase in question.[5]

A wife does not abandon her husband, so as to render this rule applicable, where she has sufficient cause for leaving him, as in the case of adultery on his part,[6] or conduct amounting to what the law regards as cruel treatment.[7] And in such cases the husband is liable for necessaries furnished her, even though he may have given notice before they were furnished that he would not be responsible.[8] The wife must have left the husband because of his misconduct, and not from some other and insufficient cause.[9] She is not justified in leaving, so as to carry with her implied authority to bind him for necessaries, merely because of quarrels, disagreements, and difficulties, not amounting to cruel treatment.[10]

9. Therefore, where it appeared that the husband had used violence towards the wife on an occasion five months before their separation, and there had been other difficulties and quarrels, but when she left his house it was not from any apprehension of ill-treatment, but in order to make a visit, and she refused to return unless his relatives, who lived with him, would go away,—it was held that he was not liable for board furnished her during such separation. Blowers v. Sturtevant, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 46.

No amount of ill-treatment, short of personal violence, or such as to induce a reasonable fear of personal violence, it has been held would entitle a wife to pledge her husband's credit after leaving his house without his consent.

The rule that a wife who has left her husband without cause and without his consent cannot bind him for necessaries does not apply where the separation is involuntary on the part of the wife, and without her fault, or even where it is due to her fault, if it is through operation of the law, as in case of her conviction and imprisonment for a crime.[11] Nor does the rule apply, even where the separation was voluntary on the part of the wife, and without sufficient cause, where she has returned to her husband, or has in good faith offered to return and been refused.[12]

Wife's adultery.—A husband is not liable for necessaries furnished his wife after she has committed adultery and eloped, whether the person supplying her with necessaries knows of the circumstances of the separation or not.[13] And the same is true where the wife has been left or turned away by the husband for adultery,[14] or where she has committed adultery after having been turned away or deserted by the husband without cause, or after having separated from him with his consent, or for sufficient cause.[15] But if the husband condones the adultery and receives the wife back, and afterwards turns her away or leaves her without new cause, he will be liable for necessaries subsequently furnished her.[16]

Necessity for a valid marriage.—This rule applies, not only where the parties are legally husband and wife, but also where a man has lived with a woman and held her out as his wife, without being legally married to her, or without having gone through any form of marriage at all, provided the person furnishing the necessaries relies on the express or implied representation of the man, and believes that the woman is his wife.[17] But the rule does not apply where the person furnishing the necessaries knows that there has been no marriage, or where although he may not know this, he has not been misled by any conduct on the part of the man.[18] Of course a man may make such woman his agent for the purpose of purchasing necessaries, by expressly authorizing her to do so or by holding her out as having such authority, even though the tradesman knows that there is no valid marriage. In such case the same rules would apply as in the appointment of any other agent.

Effect of annulment of marriage or divorce.—A husband is under no duty to provide for his wife after a valid divorce a vinculo matrimonii, or after an

This does not apply where the husband consented to the adultery (Wilson v. Glossop, 19 Q. B. Div. 379; Ferren v. Moore, 59 N. H. 106) nor does it apply where the husband turns away the wife without cause, and intentionally leads her into the belief that he is dead, and she afterwards, in good faith, contracts a bigamous marriage. annulment of the marriage, and cannot be held liable for necessaries furnished to her thereafter.[19] But of course, a liability for necessaries furnished cannot be affected by a subsequent divorce or annulment of the marriage. When a wife is granted a divorce a mensa et thoro, with a provision for alimony, and the husband fails to pay the alimony, he will be liable for necessaries furnished her during the period of such neglect.[20]

Pendency of proceedings for a divorce.—The mere pendency of proceedings for a divorce, either by the husband or by the wife, does not relieve the husband from his duty to support the wife, and he will be liable, as in other cases, for necessaries furnished her pending such proceedings,[21] unless the court has made an allowance of alimony to the wife for her maintenance pending the suit, and it is paid by the husband.[22] The allowance of alimony, either temporary or permanent to the wife, does not relieve the husband from liability for necessaries furnished before such allowance, although after commencement of the suit.[23]

What are "necessaries" for which the husband is liable.—The term "necessaries," within the meaning of the rule under consideration, includes necessary food, drink, and clothing,[24] medicines, and medical attendance or advice, and nursing,[25] a suitable lodging or other place of residence,[26] services of domestics suitable to the husband's and wife's condition in life,[27] etc. The term is not limited to such things as are absolutely essential to sustain life, but includes such as are necessary and proper to support the wife in accordance with the rank or position in life and the estate of the husband, and the style of living and position in society into which he has introduced her, or which he has allowed her to assume.[28] It follows that for the purpose of determining whether particular articles or a particular residence furnished to a wife were necessaries, it is proper to prove and to take into consideration the husband's style of living,[29] his wealth and income, or capacity to earn money,[30] the character and cost of clothing which he had previously allowed the wife to purchase on his credit,[31] the style of living in the society in which he has introduced her or allowed her to appear,[32] etc. In some of the cases it has been said that the question depends upon the condition in life and position of the wife.[33] But the better opinion and weight of authority is that it depends upon the condition of the husband, as well as the wife,—upon the condition in life of both.[34]

The term "necessaries" does not include a pew in a place of worship, and a wife cannot bind her husband to pay rent for the same without his consent.[35]

Nor does the term include money, as such, loaned to the wife. At common law, the husband cannot be held liable therefor, even though it may be shown that the money was intended and in fact used for the purchase of necessaries.[36] In equity, however, according to the weight of authority, where money is advanced to a wife for the purchase of necessaries, on her husband's credit, and under such conditions that she would be authorized to purchase necessaries on his credit, and is properly applied for such purpose, the lender, by application of the equitable doctrine of subrogation, may recover from the husband to the extent to which the money is so applied.[37]

In Compton v. Bates, 10 Ill. App. 85, Pillsbury, J., in deciding upon an instruction given in the lower court says: "This instruction only requires the goods purchased to be of a character necessary and suitable to the position in life of the wife. If, as it would seem, this instruction was intended to state the rule of the liability of the husband growing out of the necessities of the wife, then it extends the liability of the husband beyond what we had supposed it to be. If the wife has been provided with necessaries suitable to the condition in life of the parties and the estate of the husband, then, as we have seen, the husband is not liable for other goods that may be purchased by the wife, although of the same character of necessaries. To make him liable upon this ground, the goods actually purchased must be needed by the wife for her present use. Besides, the jury, by this instruction, were to determine whether the goods were necessary and suitable by the standard alone of the wife's position in life. It was held in Manby v. Scott, 1 Sid. 109, that 'the estate and degree of the husband' should be considered upon this question, a rule which has not, so far as we are advised, ever been departed from."

In a late New Jersey case, however, it was held that there could be no such recovery where the husband was merely ill, and had not deserted the wife. Leuppie v. Osborn's Ex'rs, 52 N. J. Eq. 637. And in Massachusetts the doctrine has been repudiated altogether. In that state, a husband is not liable, even in equity, in the absence of consent or ratification, for money borrowed by his wife and applied in the purchase of necessaries, although she may be living sepa-

Under a statute making both husband and wife liable for expenses of the family, the term "expenses of the family" is not synonymous with "necessaries," which may be personal and individual, and does not include an article which in no way conduces to the welfare of the family.[38]

Whether a husband is liable for legal services rendered for his wife on his credit, on the ground that they were necessaries, depends upon the circumstances. Legal services rendered at the request of a married woman in relation to her estate are certainly not necessaries, and the husband cannot be made liable therefor without his consent. It is otherwise, however, in the case of services of an attorney or counsellor at law which are necessary to procure for a wife such sustenance or protection as the husband is under a legal duty to afford her, or which are necessary to protect her against wrongs on the part of the husband. Thus it has been held that a husband is liable for legal services rendered in defending a criminal prosecution against his wife,[39] particularly when the services are in defending a groundless charge made against her by the husband,[40] or a charge based upon acts done by her with the concurrence of her husband.[41] It has also been held that a husband is liable for legal services rendered for his wife, in order to protect her against him, by having him bound over to keep the peace, etc.,[42] unless there is no ground for the proceedings;[43] for services in prosecuting proceedings by the wife against the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, or to compel him to support her;[44] or in prosecuting against the husband a suit for a divorce a mensa et thoro, if there were seasonable grounds therefor,[45] but not otherwise.[46] It is held in England that a wife may bind her husband to pay the fees and disbursements of her solicitor in a suit for a dissolution of the marriage.[47] In this country, however, the decided weight of authority is to the effect that the services of an attorney or solicitor for a wife in a suit for annulment of the marriage or for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii are not necessaries, and that the wife cannot bind the husband to pay therefor, whether the suit is brought by the wife,[48] or by the

In Iowa, it was held contra in Preston v. Johnson, 65 Iowa, 285, and Clyde v. Peavy, 74 Iowa, 47. But compare Johnson v. Williams, 3 G. Greene (Iowa) 97, 54 Am. Dec. 491, where it was held that the husband was not liable, and Sherwin v. Maben, 78 Iowa, 467, where it was held that the husband was not liable for the reason that it appeared that there was no ground for divorce as alleged in the complaint. And see opinion of the court in this case for review of cases in this state on this subject. In Sprayberry v. Merk, 30 Ga. 81, 76 Am. Dec. 637, Stephens, J., says: "As to this one matter of a suit for a divorce the wife is sui juris, having a clear right to institute and conduct that kind of a suit independently of her husband's consent. But this right is practically denied to her, if husband.[49] But certainly the husband would not be liable for legal services rendered to his wife, where she is living apart from him by reason of her own adultery.[50]

Where a wife purchases on her husband's credit some goods which are necessaries, and others which are not, either by reason of their character or quantity, the husband is liable for the former.[51] But where the articles furnished are not necessaries, the husband cannot be held liable for the whole, or for a fractional part thereof, on the ground that they might have answered the purpose of other articles which would have been necessaries.[52]

Wife's funeral expenses.—A husband is liable at common law, on implied contract, for his wife's burial expenses,[53] but this, of course, is not on the theory of the wife's agency for the husband.

Presumption and burden of proof as to necessaries.—When a husband has forbidden tradesmen to supply his wife with articles on his credit, this, as we have seen, does not prevent a tradesman from furnishing her with necessaries, if the husband fails to perform his duty in supplying them. But a tradesman who furnishes her with articles after such prohibition acts at his peril, and in order to hold the husband liable, he has the burden of proving not only that the articles furnished were properly necessaries, but also that the husband had neglected his duty, so as to give the wife the implied authority to purchase on his credit without his consent.[54] As we have seen, where a husband and wife are living together there is a presumption that she has implied authority, as a matter of fact, to purchase on his credit necessaries for the household, unless he has forbidden it, and the prohibition is brought to the notice of tradesmen. But there is no such presumption where the wife is living separate from her husband. In such a case tradesmen supplying her with necessaries have the burden of proving that the circumstances were such as to authorize her to bind him.[55] They have the burden

she can command no means of paying the agents who are necessary to the conduct of the suit. Therefore, it is that, quoad hoc, she may charge the common funds of herself and husband in his hands. But as this power on her part is founded on the necessity of the case, so its extent does not exceed the demand of the necessity; and therefore she can charge the common funds (or her husband, which is the same thing in effect) only with the real value of such services as she may procure, and not with the price which she may fix on them by her contract. Upon these views is founded the constant practice of the court in granting alimony to the wife during the pending of her suit for divorce, and in embracing her counsel fees in the allowance. It is worthy of remark that her counsel fees are allowed as a part of her necessary maintenance, and are allowed before it is ascertained whether she has a valid ground for a divorce or not." And see Glenn v. Hill, 50 Ga. 94. In Texas, it is held that the husband is liable for reasonable attorney's fees incurred by his wife in the prosecution of a suit for divorce, only where it is shown that the suit was instigated by the wife in good faith and upon reasonable grounds. Where a husband notifies a merchant not to sell goods on credit to his wife and he is subsequently sued for goods sold to her after such notice, the burden is upon the husband, first, to establish his notice, and having done so, it shifts upon the merchant to show that the husband failed to furnish the necessary and suitable support to his wife and family. of proving, when the wife has left the husband, that she left him with his consent or for sufficient cause.[56] Where the husband has made his wife an allowance, one who furnishes her with necessaries has the burden of proving that it was not paid, or was inadequate.[57]

Province of court and jury.—There has been some difficulty in determining when it is for the court, and when for the jury, to say whether particular things furnished to a wife are necessaries, but the following rule may be laid down as established by the weight of authority, and as in accordance with the general doctrine as to the respective provinces of the court and jury:[58]

Whether articles of a certain kind, as clothing, food, jewelry, pew-rent, etc., are or are not of such a character that they can be necessaries, is a question of law, which the court must decide, and upon which it must instruct the jury.[59] But whether any particular thing falls within the classes of articles which may be necessaries, taking into consideration the condition in life of the husband and wife, and whether the quantity or amount furnished were excessive under the circumstances, are questions of fact for the jury.[60] If there is no question as to the character of the articles furnished, and they are such as could not under any circumstances, or under the undisputed circumstances of the particular case, fall within any class of necessaries, according to the established law on the subject, the court need not submit the question to the jury.[61] Whether an allowance made by a husband to his wife, when living separate, was adequate, is a question for the jury.[62]

Agency to use or dispose of husband's property for maintenance.—If a husband deserts his wife, or is in prison, leaving her without the means of support, she has implied authority to use his real or personal estate, or to dispose of his money or other personal property, for the purpose of maintaining herself and family, and procuring necessaries.[63] She may receive and apply the earnings of

But it has been held that where the marriage has been proven, and it has been shown that the articles furnished were necessaries for the wife's support, it is prima facie evidence of the liability of the husband, and of his promise to pay, and the burden of proof rests upon the husband to show that her separate residence, and want of means of support, was through no fault of his. her minor children for such purpose,[64] and in Texas it has been held that she may, under such circumstances, manage and dispose of community property for such purpose.[65]

§ 14. Wife's implied authority to procure necessaries for children.—If a husband deserts his wife or turns her away, or if they are living separate by mutual consent, and he allows his child to remain with her without providing for the child's support, the wife has implied authority to procure necessaries for the child on his credit.[66] And such authority is not affected by the fact that the wife commits adultery, so that she would have no authority to procure necessaries on his credit for herself.[67] The husband is not liable where he makes and pays the wife an adequate allowance for the support of his children, or makes other suitable and adequate provision therefor.[68] Nor is a husband liable where his wife leaves him without sufficient cause and takes a child with her, knowing that he is able and willing to support the child,[69] or even where the wife leaves for sufficient cause and takes and keeps the child with her contrary to his expressed wishes.[70] A wife has no implied authority to bind her husband for necessaries for her children by a former husband.[71]

§ 15. Contracts by wife on her own credit.—Even when a wife has authority, express or implied, to bind her husband by purchase of goods or other contracts, the husband will not be bound unless she assumes or undertakes to bind him. If she acts on her own account, and credit is given to her, and not to her husband, the latter is not liable on the contract. This rule applies to contracts for necessaries as well as to other contracts, and it can make no difference that the circumstances were such that the wife could have bound the husband.[72] But under a statute making both husband and wife liable for the "family expenses," the husband may be held liable therefor, notwithstanding credit may have been extended to the wife alone.[73] Purchases of necessaries, while living with the husband, are never presumed to have been made on the credit of the wife; such fact must be shown affirmatively.[74]

A husband cannot be held liable for goods sold to his wife on her own credit, or on any other contract made with her on her own credit, because he knew of and assented to the transaction, or acted for her in the matter,[75] or because he is personally benefited by the contract,[76] or because, by reason of legal disability, the contract is not binding upon the wife.[77]

Where the credit is given to the wife, the contract, not being made by her as agent of her husband, cannot be ratified by him. A promise by him to pay the debt would be a promise to answer for the debt of another, and subject to all the rules governing such a promise.

Whether credit was given to the husband or to the wife must be determined from the evidence, and is a question of fact for the jury.[78] If a person lends money or sells goods to a wife with the understanding that the transaction shall be concealed from the husband, it may properly be inferred that the credit was given to the wife.[79] If a tradesman, in supplying a wife with such goods as she has implied authority to purchase on her husband's credit, in fact furnishes them on the husband's credit, he is not precluded from holding the husband liable by the fact that he charged the goods to the wife on his books.[80]

§ 16. Husband's ratification of wife's acts.—If a wife acts as agent of her husband without authority, the husband may ratify her acts and thus render them binding upon him to the same extent as if originally authorized, and a ratification by him may be either express or implied from his conduct.

§ 17. Agency of woman held out or passing as wife.—Where a man lives with a woman, allowing her to assume his name and pass as his wife, she has implied authority to pledge his credit for necessaries during the continuance of the cohabitation, in like manner and to the same extent as if she were in fact his wife,[81] and this is true although the person who furnished the necessaries knew at the time that they were not married.[82] But if there is no cohabitation, the mere fact

If that business be to buy and sell, then the individual buys and sells for the company, and every person with whom he trades in the way of its business, has a right to consider him as the company, whoever may compose it. * * * The articles of copartnership are perhaps never published. They are rarely if ever seen, except by the partners themselves. The stipulations they may contain are to regulate the conduct and rights of the parties, as between themselves. The trading world, with whom the company is in perpetual intercourse, cannot individually examine these articles, but must trust to the general powers contained in all partnerships. The acting parties are identified with the company, and have power to conduct its usual business, in the usual way."

the parties rather than by operation of law. Whether this be so depends somewhat on the question whether a partnership be regarded as a contract or a status established by contract.

The implied power of a partner is not without limit. He has no authority, unless express authority or an estoppel is shown, to bind his co-partners in a matter which is beyond the scope of the partnership business.[88] And as he cannot appoint an agent to do for the firm what he cannot do himself, he cannot, without special authority, appoint an agent to bind the other partners by a conveyance or other transaction which is not within the scope of the partnership business.[89]

§ 19. Unincorporated clubs and societies as principals.—When a number of persons form a club or society for social, political, religious, or charitable purposes, etc., without becoming incorporated, the law does not regard them as a legal entity or artificial person, like a corporation, but merely as a collection of individuals, and it necessarily follows that the club or association, as such, cannot appoint or have an agent.[90] The members may appoint an agent, but in such a case he is the agent of the members as individuals. They are joint principals.[91] Such an association is not a partnership, and to render a member liable as a principal on contracts made by the persons or committees who manage and assume to act for the association, it must be shown that he expressly or impliedly authorized them to represent and bind him.[92] Members of such bodies are not chargeable with debts on its behalf, unless the relation of principal and agent is established between the representative of the association and person sought to be made liable. It must be shown that the party assuming to act for the association, was the agent of the member upon whom liability is sought to be fastened, and is authorized by him to enter into the contract as his representative.[93] But mere membership is not sufficient to fix the liability of a member for indebtedness contracted on behalf of such an association or society.[94] A member can only be made liable by his personal acts or participation in the transaction in question,[95] or where the business is conducted through the medium of officers or agents, by agreeing, at the time of becoming a member, to the exercise of defined powers by the representatives of the associations, as by expressly or impliedly consenting to abide by the provisions of its constitution, by-laws, or corresponding rules of guidance, respecting their appointments and powers,[96] or by sanctioning or acquiescing in an appointment or delegation of authority, either by voting therefor, by assenting to the action taken, or by subsequently ratifying it.[97] In the absence of an agreement to abide by the action of a majority of the members, or of the action of a committee or officer of the association, the liability is limited to those only who agreed to be bound by such actions.[98] The assent need not be express, but may be made out by acts and conduct.[99] Neither need it be proved by former records; but may be established by parol proof.[1] There may be cases, however, in which the objects for which the association is organized are so clear, and the

In Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 67, 40 Am. acts done are so essentially necessary to the furtherance of those objects, that the members will be presumptively bound by them, without evidence of consent or ratification.[2]

§ 20. Agency as between tenants in common and co-owners.—In order that one tenant in common of real property or co-owner of personal property may bind the other with respect to such property, consent on the part of the other is essential. There is no implied agency, as in the case of a partnership, merely by virtue of their relation.[3] "One tenant in common has no power as such to convey or dispose of the lands of his co-tenant, and cannot execute a deed of the lands of his co-tenant in any other manner than can a stranger."[4] So the mere relation of co-tenancy between joint mine owners does not empower one of them to render his co-tenants liable on any contracts or for any expenditures he may make as their agent.[5] But where the act is such that it is manifestly for the benefit of all the co-tenants, as the filing of a notice of an adverse claim to a mine, it may be done by one on behalf of the others without a power of attorney from them.[6] The appointment of an agent by one co-tenant, to act in reference to the common property, will bind that one only,[7] unless his co-owner joins in or subsequently ratifies such appointment.[8] But the majority owner of a vessel acts as the agent of his co-owners in managing the ship, and acts done by him in the course of such management are binding on them, unless they expressly dissent.[9]

§ 21. Agency between joint obligors—Joint obligees.—It sometimes becomes necessary that the relation of principal and agent should exist between persons having a joint interest or joint liability in certain matters. Such persons have a common interest and at times it is necessary that one of them should represent his co-obligors in matters in which they are all concerned. In accordance with this principle, the joint debtor may act as the agent of his co-debtors in paying the joint debt and, when he has done so, may compel contribution from them; and if, after satisfying the debt, he is discharged therefrom, it redounds to the benefit of all and will operate to discharge them all.[10] As has been said, "Each represents the others in matters relating to the payment and discharge of their joint liability.[11] This agency of a joint obligor, however, should not be extended beyond what is necessary to perform or complete the original contract.[12] It is doubtless the law that joint debtors, in matters respecting their joint indebtedness, may, to a certain extent, bind each other by their admissions,[13] but this can only be as to facts affecting rights or remedies then existing. The admissions must relate to matters showing what are the terms of the contract already made, or whether it has been performed or otherwise discharged. The idea, however, cannot be sanctioned, that a co-debtor, merely because he is such, has authority to bind his associates to a new contract, although it may be in regard to an old debt.[14] A partial payment by a joint debtor, therefore, without the knowledge or assent or subsequent ratification of his co-debtors, will not bind the latter so as to authorize the inference of a new promise on their part, and therefore will not affect the defense of the statute of limitations as to them.[15] Of course the joint obligors may expressly authorize one of their number to make a partial payment on a joint obligation or to make a new promise; or such authority may result from the relation of the parties; or the acts may be subsequently ratified, in either of which cases the co-obligors would all be estopped to plead the statute of limitations.[16] In some of the cases, the acknowledgment or partial payment relied upon to take the case out of the statute was made before the bar of the statute had become complete; but in principle, there is no distinction between the legal effect of the acknowledgment or payment made before or after the bar of the statute has attached; and a new promise or part payment by one of two or more joint debtors, whether made before or after the debt is barred by statute, takes the case out of the statute only as to the party so promising or paying, unless his co-debtors assent to or subsequently ratify such promise or payment.[17] But notwithstanding this, there is much conflict in the cases as to the right of one joint debtor to act as the agent of his co-debtors in extending the bar of the statute, before it has attached. It has been held in a number of cases, following Lord Mansfield's decision, that, where the bar of the statute has not attached, the joint relationship of the co-debtors makes one of them the agent of the other to the extent that he may, by payment or new promise, represent his co-debtors in extending the bar of the statute as to the joint debt.[18] But the better con-

18. England: In Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Doug. 652, Lord Mansfield, in reference to joint debtors, says: "Payment by one is payment for all, the one acting virtually as agent for the rest; and in the same manner, an admission by one, is an admission by all; and the law raises the promise to pay, when the debt is admitted to be due." And to the same effect, see, in cases of partnership:

sidered cases hold otherwise; that one joint debtor cannot act as the agent of his co-debtors in such cases, in extending the bar of the statute by payment or new promise without their consent, save in the case of existing partnerships.[19] But although many of the decisions recognize the rule in Whitcomb v. Whiting, as to a payment or new promise made by a joint debtor before the claim is barred by statute, yet they nearly all adhere to the rule that one joint debtor cannot, after the bar of the statute has attached, act as the agent of the other without his assent, in removing the bar of the statute by payment or acknowledgment.[20]

It is also true in reference to joint obligees that in some respects each may act as the agent of the others in matters pertaining to their joint interest. Thus, one of two or more joint obligees to a contract has the right to receive payment thereon, and such payment discharges the obligation to the amount paid, whether in whole or in part.[21]

§ 22. Implied agency of master of ship.—The master of a vessel, by reason of the peculiar relation he bears to his employers and to all concerned in the voyage, and the necessities of the case, may impliedly act as the agent of such parties when it becomes necessary that he should do so, in order to successfully carry on the voyage, or protect the cargo.[22] He may appoint another as master in his stead and delegate his powers as master to such other, in cases of necessity or sudden emergency in a foreign port, in the absence of the owner and employer or his authorized agent, whenever it may be necessary and proper for the welfare of the ship, and the due accomplishment of the voyage.[23] So in cases of necessity, he may act as agent in contracting for repairs and supplies to the ship,[24] or in hypothecating the vessel;[25] but his agency in this respect is strictly limited to the necessities of the ship.[26] But the authority of a master in a foreign port to procure supplies and repairs necessary for the safety of the ship and the due performance of the voyage is not confined to procuring only such supplies as are absolutely or indispensably necessary, but includes all such as are reasonably fit and proper for the ship and voyage.[27]

He may sell the cargo in a perishable or damaged condition, which he is unable to save or transmit, if he acts bona fide and under a stringent necessity.[28] He may, when his vessel becomes disabled and unable to proceed, and

Master of a vessel may sell damaged cargo, but only in case of extreme necessity, or where it cannot be carried to its port of destination, or would be worthless on its arrival there. Myers v. Baymore, 10 Pa. 114, 49 Am. Dec. 586. But it has been held that the master of the ship is not an agent of the consignor, to judge for him when the goods are so damaged as to make a sale necessary before they reach their destination. Halwerson v. Cole, 1 Speers [S. C.] 321, 40 Am. Dec. 603.

acting as an agent of necessity for the owners of the cargo, tranship it, or if expedient retain it until his own ship is put in repair, or if necessary may sell part of it or hypothecate the whole, or he may abandon the voyage and notify the owners.[29] To justify a sale of the cargo in such a case, however, the necessity must be absolute and unequivocal, and is only permissible after the exhaustion of the ship's credit.[30] It is also clearly established that the master, as such, may sell a wrecked vessel, when he proceeds in good faith exercising his best discretion for the benefit of all concerned, and in view either of existing peril or of peril likely to ensue, from which, in the opinion of persons competent to judge, she cannot be rescued;[31] but the sale, to be binding on the owners, must be one of necessity.[32]

If a vessel or its cargo is abandoned to the underwriters during a voyage for a total loss, the master then becomes, by operation of law, the agent of the under-

Y. 517; and cases cited in preceding note. In the cases deciding that a master of a vessel has power to sell it in cases of necessity, different language is used to express just what necessity will justify a sale. For example: In Gaither v. Myrick, 9 Md. 118, 66 Am. Dec. 316, it was said that necessity to justify sale of cargo and ship before arriving at port of destination must be such a necessity as supersedes all human laws. In Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co., 9 Pick. [Mass.] 466, Putnam, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The master's authority to sell must be confined to a case of extreme necessity, which leaves no alternative, which prescribes the law for itself, and puts the party in a positive state of compulsion to act. The master acts for the owners or insurers, because they cannot have an opportunity to act for themselves. If the property could be kept safely until they could be consulted, and have opportunity, in a reasonable time, to exercise their own judgment in regard to the sale, the necessity to act for them would cease." In Fitz v. Amelie, 2 Cliff. 445, Fed. Cas. No. 4,838, it is said: "When the ship is disabled by perils of the sea, and the master has no means of getting the repairs done in the place where the injury occurred, or, if being in a place where the repairs might be made, he has no funds in his possession and cannot, on account of the distance or other sufficient cause, communicate with the owner, and is not able to raise the necessary means by bottomry or otherwise to execute the repairs, or if the injuries to the ship are so great that the cost of repairing her would be greater than her value after the repairs were made, or if the ship is disabled so that she cannot proceed, and the cost of repairs will amount to more than half her value, reckoning one third new for old, and the master has no funds, and can neither procure any nor communicate with the owner, and the whole circumstances are such that a prudent owner would decide to break up the voyage, then the master is justified in selling the ship as the best thing that can be done for the interest of all concerned. Such a state of circumstances creates the moral necessity, the urgent necessity, the extreme necessity, the imperious, uncontrollable necessity, described in the decided cases, and authorizes the master to sell the ship, if in his judgment, honestly exercised, the sale will best promote the interest of all concerned." And in The Amelie, 6 Wall. [U. S.] 18, 27, Mr. Justice Davis says: "The sale of a ship becomes a necessity within the meaning of the commercial law when nothing better can be done for the owner or those concerned in the adventure." And see other cases cited in preceding notes.

writers with the same general rights and powers as he would have in regard to the original owners.[33]

§ 23. Agency of vendor for vendee.—When a contract of sale has been entered into between vendor and vendee, and the vendee refuses to take and pay for the goods, the vendor, if he has the control or possession of the goods, ordinarily has the choice of either one of three remedies to indemnify himself: (1) He may store or retain the property for the vendee, and sue him for the entire purchase price; (2) he may keep the property as his own, and recover the difference between the market price at the time and place of delivery, and the contract price; or (3) he may sell the property, acting as agent, for this purpose, of the vendee and recover the difference between the contract price and the price obtained on such resale. In such case, the vendor takes the position of agent for the vendee to make the sale, and all that is required of him is that he should act with reasonable care and diligence and good faith; he should make the sale without unnecessary delay, but he must be the judge as to the time and place of sale provided he act in good faith and with reasonable care and diligence and gives notice of his intention to sell.[34] But it is no part of such agency, or the duties involved in it, to notify the vendee of the time and place at which the goods are to be sold or exposed for sale.[35] If more is realized on such resale than is due to the vendor, he must account to the vendee for the surplus.[36]

The vendor, in such cases, is not strictly an agent of the vendee, but it is rather a general expression used to define the right of the vendor to make a resale and hold the vendee responsible for the loss. It is quite manifest that a resale made under such circumstances is not made by the vendor strictly as the agent of the vendee, but he acts for himself in disposing of the property for the purpose of ascertaining the actual loss he may sustain. His duties as to the manner of making the sale, as we have seen, in some respects resemble those of an agent, and hence he is said to take the position of an agent, but otherwise he cannot be considered as such.[37]

§ 24. Agency of priests, ministers, etc.—Priests, ministers, and other ecclesiastics in charge of a parish or other church property have only such authority to manage and control the property of the church or congregation as is given to them by the canons or laws of the church. Thus, a Catholic priest having charge of a parish has no implied authority to convey real estate, the title of which is in his bishop.[38] The mere fact that one is a priest or minister of a church does not authorize him to bind the trustees or members of such church by contracts in reference to the church property or church affairs.

§ 1. Regulation (137).
§ 2. Products and Crop Liens (137).
§ 3. Agricultural Societies (137).

§ 1. Regulation.[2]—The pursuit of agriculture[3] and the production and sale of products have been subjects of regulation, as has also the growth of noxious weeds.[4]

§ 2. Products and crop liens.[5]—The owner of a farm and a tenant on shares are tenants in common of the products, in the absence of any special provision modifying their relations,[6] and either may maintain a bill in equity against his co-tenant for an accounting of the proceeds of the crops.[7]

An agreement to execute a mortgage on crops may be made before the latter are in being.[8]

Liens on crops are statutory and will be created or enforced according to the local statutes, and one to avail himself of such a lien must comply with the requirements of the statute creating it.[9] Statutes generally give the landlord a lien on all agricultural products to secure his rent and supplies for the current year,[10] also to one who furnishes supplies for the making of the crop,[11] and also to laborers.[12] In some states seed-liens must be recorded.[13] These liens may be waived.[14]

§ 3. Agricultural societies.[15]—A state may incorporate an agricultural society as a department of the state;[16] such an act does not constitute special or class legislation,[17] nor is the legality of the transfer and acceptance by the state subject

10. And this lien may be asserted against a purchaser irrespective of whether he had notice of the lien. Ball, Brown & Co. v. Sledge [Miss.] 36 So. 447. But it does not attach to crops shipped out of the state (Id.), though of course a tenant may give a mortgage on his crop to secure his landlord for advances in previous years. Walker v. Patterson's Estate [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 437. In Texas, the lien of a landlord for supplies and advances extends only to the crop raised during the year in which they were furnished, and the lien of landlord for advances and supplies on crop of that year takes precedence over claim of tenant's wife and children for support. Id.
11. Expectation that they will be paid for shortly and in cash does not waive the lien accorded by Civ. Code, art. 3217. Southern Grocer Co. v. Adams [La.] 36 So. 226. This lien is not superseded by one subsequently acquired and recorded. Id.
12. Persons having contracts with a sugar refinery to weigh and load cane for shipment to the refinery at an agreed price per ton, and who live and pay the laborers to do the work, are independent contractors, and are not workmen or laborers on a plantation whose wages have a special privilege on the crop under the laws of Louisiana, nor clerks, secretaries or agents entitled to a privilege for their salaries against the property of the refining company under such laws. Fortier v. Delgado & Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 604.
13. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 731, 734, the record need not specify the number of bushels to be sown on each tract, and the lienor's duty is performed when he files the statement with the register of deeds. Schouweiler v. McCaull [S. D.] 99 N. W. 95.

to collateral attack,[18] and when thus made a department of the state, such society is immune from suits brought for the wrongful conduct of its servants.[19] Some states give aid to agricultural societies,[20] but in order to receive such aid they must conform to all the laws relating thereto.[21]

An incorporated agricultural society, though it differs from the ordinary business corporations, is nevertheless to be classified as a private corporation.[22] They are, however, largely subject to statutory regulations. In Michigan, they may mortgage their property,[23] and are not required to have a seal.[24]

title to real property by descent.[37] By treaty[38] and by statute,[39] the disability of aliens to inherit land has been changed, and their rights depend upon the construction of those statutes.[40] An alien's right to take real estate by descent is governed by the statutes of the state in force at the time of the death of the owner thereof through whom such alien claimed title.[41] An alien may take property devised from native born children.[42] A widow, a nonresident alien, has a dower interest in land conveyed by her husband, a resident alien, alone.[43] Where a statute confers on nonresident aliens the right to inherit property within the state, which property is owned by another alien, this right is not vested, but a mere expectancy during the life of the owner, and may be changed by statute without infringing any constitutional rights of such nonresident aliens.[44] Where a statute which in any way supersedes the common-law rule is repealed, the common-law rule is revived.[45]

In some states the law of the domicile of a decedent governs the distribution of his personal property.[46] The question of domicile is always one of fact and depends upon the particular circumstances of each case.[47] Nonresident aliens can generally maintain an action for damages for a wrongful death where such damages are allowed by statute.[48] An alien has no right to raise the question whether a statute is in violation of art. 4, § 2 of the Constitution of the United States.[49] In some states a resident alien may act as an administrator.[50] An alien is incompetent to act as a grand juror.[51] An alien may maintain a personal action sounding in tort in the courts of another country and against a citizen thereof.[52] The civil rights act does not apply to a negro born in Africa without proof that he is a citizen, either native or naturalized.[53] As to the right of a wife of an alien when abandoned by her husband, see note.[54]

Under acts of congress, Chinese merchants are admitted into the United States; such merchant must have a certificate and that certificate must strictly comply with the law in order to be of any value in establishing the holder's right to enter or remain there;[67] it must describe him as a merchant,[68] but it is not necessary that his name should appear in the company name.[69] A Chinaman lawfully entering this country as a merchant and carrying on a business as such for some time thereafter cannot be deported after changing his occupation.[70] Such a person entering prior to and being a merchant at the time of the passage of the act for the registration of Chinese laborers is not subject to the provisions of said act, though he subsequently becomes a laborer.[71] It is no defense to an action for deportation that the party had formerly entered this country.[72] A Chinaman being permitted to live in this country unmolested for a number of years, there is no presumption that his arrival antedated the date on which the exclusion act took effect.[73] The latest expression of congress, be it a statute or a treaty, governs as to the right of aliens to enter this country. The constructions placed on these acts will be found in the footnotes.[74] The immigration laws of the country, in so far as they are penal in nature, are to be strictly construed.[75] Under the law aliens should be deported within one year[76] to the country from which they came.[77] And the owners of the vessels bringing them are obliged to take them back.[78]

Exclusion.[80]—Congress has full authority to confer upon the executive officers of the government plenary power to exclude and deport aliens of any nationality.[81] Where a Chinese person is refused admission to the United States, the Federal courts will not interfere by habeas corpus until after a final decision on appeal by the secretary of commerce and labor.[82] But such persons having entered the United States must be given a hearing and cannot be deported without due process of law.[83] Federal courts will not intervene by habeas corpus to prevent such deportation where such alien had notice though an informal one,[84] and was not denied an opportunity to be heard though a want of knowledge of the English language, preventing her from understanding the questions, is pleaded.[85] Congress cannot commit to the executive department the right to determine finally the question of the citizenship of a person applying for admission into the United States.[86] But the supreme court having decided what facts must exist to constitute a person a citizen of the United States, congress may give the officers of the executive department power to determine the existence or nonexistence of those facts.[87] Whether the executive officers of the government in deporting an alien emigrant are proceeding according to law is a judicial question, which may be inquired into on habeas corpus;[88] but their decision as to facts is generally conclusive.[89]

Feb. 14, 1903, c. 552, § 7, 32 Stat. 828 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1903, p. 46), the executive officers of the department of commerce and labor have the authority to determine the above question, and also such department has authority to prescribe rules of evidence relating to presumptions and burden of proof in the determination of the alien's right of admission. 88. Lavin v. Le Fevre [C. C. A.] 125 F. 693.

89. Under the statutes of the United States rendering the decision of the board of special inquiry final as to exclusion for disease, the only jurisdictional fact necessary to the conclusiveness of such decision is the alienage of the immigrant, and when that is

Registration.[90]—The provisions for Chinese registration made by the act of May 5, 1892, § 6,[91] were not repealed by the act of April 29, 1902, § 1,[92] nor are they inconsistent with the treaty of December 8, 1894, with China.[93]

Certificate.[94]—The certificate must strictly comply with the requirements of the laws of this country in order to be of any value in establishing the holder's right to enter or remain here.[95] In determining the right of a Chinese person to enter, the immigration officers may disregard the collector's certificate.[96]

Deportation; procedure.[97]—A proceeding to expel or exclude aliens under the Federal law is civil, and not criminal in its nature,[98] therefore the fact that defendants refused to testify may be considered by the commission,[99] but is not of itself ground for deportation.[1] Upon a writ of habeas corpus by an excluded Chincse, no bail is allowed,[2] nor is such alien entitled to bail, pending appeal from a commissioner's order of deportation,[3] though it may be granted.[4] In a proceeding for the exclusion of an alleged Chinese person, the trial of the issue as to whether or not accused is a Chinese person is to be regarded as criminal in its nature.[5] No formal complaint or pleadings are required in proceedings for the shown, the decision cannot be reviewed by the courts on the question of the existence or character of the disease [Act of Mar. 3, 1903, c. 1012, 32 Stat. 1214, § 10, see also prior act of Aug. 18, 1894, c. 301, 28 Stat. 390 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1303)]. In re Neuwirth, 123 F. 347. The decision of the proper customs or immigration officer adverse to the claim of a person of the Chinese race to nativity in the United States, and denying him entry, is conclusive in subsequent proceedings for his deportation for being unlawfully in this country. U. S. v. Lue Yee, 124 F. 303. The deportation decree of a United States commissioner defines and establishes the status of a Chinese person alleged to be unlawfully in the United States. It is therefore relevant and competent evidence of the status of such person and is sufficient to justify a grand jury in finding an indictment against defendant for willfully bringing such person into the United States in violation of the Chinese Exclusion Act. U. S. v. Hills, 124 F. 831. A decision of the immigration board of special inquiry that an immigrant is an anarchist is not open to review by the United States circuit court in habeas corpus proceedings. U. S. v. St. Supp. 1903, p. 180) the time of the entry of an alien arrested and held for deportation thereunder is one involving the jurisdiction of the officers assuming to exercise such authority and may be inquired into by a court on a writ of habeas corpus. A proceeding under the exclusion acts for the deportation of a Chinese alien, though civil in its nature, is sui generis, and the district judge to whom an appeal is taken from a commissioner's order directing deportation has inherent power to admit the alien to bail pending the appeal, nor is this changed by the provisions of the Chinese Exclusion Act, Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, § 2, 28 Stat. 8 (U. determination of the right of Chinese laborers to remain in the United States.[6] Under the Chinese Exclusion Act,[7] the burden of proof is upon the United States to show that a person arrested as a Chinese alien is a Chinese person or a person of Chinese descent.[8] This proof can be made by an expert in the science of anthropology.[9] Expressions of opinion,[10] and evidence obtained by inquisitorial examinations, are inadmissible.[11] This proceeding being criminal in its nature, the accused is not required to testify.[12] The burden of proving his right to remain in the United States is upon the Chinese person sought to be deported,[13] or, in case he is ordered deported, to sustain his claim of right to be removed to a country other than China on the ground that he is a subject or citizen of such country.[14] The fact that a Chinaman was engaged in business as a merchant at the time of the passage of the act providing for the registration of Chinese laborers[15] may be established by Chinese witnesses.[16] A Chinese person's certificate is the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person producing it to establish his right of entry into the United States,[17] nor is this rule changed by the fact that he has been permitted to enter the United States.[18]

New trial and appeal.[19]—Application for a new trial after judgment of deportation had been entered before a United States commissioner should be addressed to the commissioner.[20] Cumulative evidence is not ground for a new trial,[21] and unexcused delay in attempting to obtain a new trial will preclude one.[22] From an order denying the motion for a new trial, appeal should be taken to the United States district court;[23] but an appeal to "the judge of the district court of that district" is in effect an appeal to the district court and not to the district judge, as an individual,[24] and the district court must enter a final order in order that an appeal will lie to the circuit court of appeals.[25] There is no right of appeal by the United States from an order of a commissioner discharging a Chinese person arrested for being unlawfully in this country.[26] On an appeal from the order of the commissioner to the United States district court, the hearing is de novo.[27] The decision of the commissioner is conclusive unless appealed from,[28] and as a general rule findings of fact by a commissioner will not be disturbed on appeal.[29] Chinese persons after an adverse decision on their right to enter are not entitled to then for the first time raise the question of citizenship in the courts by proceedings in habeas corpus.[30]

§ 4. Naturalization.[31]—The power given congress by the constitution to establish an uniform rule of naturalization means that congress should make uniform rules whereby aliens may become citizens of the United States and of the state where they reside.[32] Congress may lawfully empower state courts to admit qualified aliens to citizenship,[33] and the state courts may legally exercise this power without legislative authority or permission from the states which created them,[34] and it is not necessary that a state court possess all of the common-law jurisdiction to qualify it to naturalize aliens; it is sufficient that it has some.[35] State courts while entertaining jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings, remain state courts,[36] hence perjury committed in such a proceeding is punishable by the

A court has common-law jurisdiction so as to naturalize aliens under § 2165, Rev. St. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1329), when it has the power to punish offenses, to enforce rights, or to redress wrongs recognized by the common law or courts which are governed by the principles, rules and usages of the common law in the determination of some of the causes of which they have jurisdiction. Levin v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 128 F. 826.

NOTE. Powers of state legislatures and courts in respect to naturalization: While there has been some conflict, it is now regarded as settled that except in relation to purely state citizenship, the state is wholly subject to the Federal law upon the subject. Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. [U. S.] 393, 15 Law. Ed. 691; Boyd v. State, 143 U. S. 160, 36 Law. Ed. 109; Golden v. Prince, 3 Wash. C. C. 314, Fed. Cas. No. 5,509; Com. v. Towles, 5 Leigh [Va.] 743; Barzizas v. Hopkins, 2 Rand. [Va.] 276. But a state may confer such rights of citizenship as it pleases so far as relates to itself only. In re Wehlitz, 16 Wis. 443, 84 Am. Dec. 700. While there is considerable doubt as to the power of the Federal government to confer the power of naturalization on state courts, the question is no longer of practical importance, for when we admit that congress cannot authoritatively confer judicial powers on state courts we only mean that congress cannot compel them to entertain jurisdiction in any case or to perform any judicial act, but we do not mean that congress cannot empower them to perform any judicial act to which they are competent, and for the performance of which they have an adequate inherent jurisdiction. Morgan v. Dudley, 18 B. Mon. [Ky.] 693, 68 Am. Dec. 735. See, also, Ex parte Knowles, 5 Cal. 304; State v. Penney, 10 Ark. 621; In re Ramsden, 13 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 435. Congress has conferred power to naturalize upon state courts having common-law jurisdiction and a seal and clerk; under this statute it is not necessary that the court have all the common-law jurisdiction that pertains to all classes of actions, but simply that it exercise its powers according to the course of the common law; but it must have, in addition to a seal, a clerk distinct from the judge, charged with the duty of keeping a true record of its doings and afterwards authenticating them. In re Dean, 83 Me. 489, 22 A. 385, 13 L. R. A. 229.—From note to State v. Judges of Inferior Court of Common Pleas [N. J. Law] 30 L. R. A. 761.

state court,[37] and the Federal court cannot entertain jurisdiction in the absence of a Federal statute conferring it.[38]

The process of naturalization is a judicial act.[39] The burden of proving naturalization is on the party asserting it,[40] but merely negative presumptions are not sufficient to support this burden.[41] The issuance of naturalization papers may be presumed,[42] but where there is no record or memorandum of a judgment of naturalization, a common-law court will not create one.[43]

A person aiding or abetting, by false impersonation or the use of a false certificate of citizenship, fraudulent naturalization, is guilty of a misdemeanor.[44] U. S. Rev. St. § 5424 does not include the uttering of a forged naturalization certificate by a person other than the person applying therefor or appearing as a witness for the person so applying.[45]

46. NOTE. Allowance of alimony to husband: As a general rule a husband, whether he or the wife be granted the divorce, recovers alimony, to be paid out of the wife's separate estate (Greene v. Greene, 49 Neb. 546, 68 N. W. 947, 34 L. R. A. 110), though this rule has been changed by statute in some states. It has, however, been held that he can be awarded such an allowance where he was a confirmed invalid, unable to earn a living, and his wife had a separate estate, she having brought suit for a divorce for his misconduct, the court holding that since the status of married women has been changed, the same rule should be applicable to the wife as to the husband, and both should be placed upon an equality. Groth v. Groth, 28 Chicago Leg. N. 348.—From the case of Greene v. Greene [Neb.] 34 L. R. A. 110, and note thereto. See 1 Curr. L. 70.

wife's estate in bankruptcy,[47] but she is a creditor who may be defrauded,[48] and whom the legislature cannot divest of her right.[49] The ward of alimony settles the property relation of the parties,[50] and is not contingent on their obtaining the right to re-marry.[51] An allowance for the support of a child in Michigan is,[52] and in Illinois is not, "alimony."[53]

§ 2. Jurisdiction and power to award.[54]—Personal service within the state[55] in proceedings for alimony is necessary to acquire jurisdiction.[56] After a divorce has been obtained on service by publication the court has no power to order alimony,[57] but defendant may be compelled to support his children, if jurisdiction is subsequently acquired in the divorce suit,[58] or in an independent proceeding.[59] An affidavit of residence is sometimes jurisdictional.[60] Under a statute providing that the guilty party in a divorce proceeding shall forfeit all rights and claims under and by virtue of the marriage, judgment for alimony should not be rendered against a plaintiff who is granted a divorce,[61] but the statute does not preclude enforcement of a judgment for alimony pendente lite by the guilty wife.[62] In Connecticut the court is empowered to order payment of alimony in a proceeding to annul an illegal marriage, as well as in a divorce proceeding.[63] The court's power in such a case is not limited to cases where the

59. Where parties were divorced in Oklahoma, and in a subsequent proceeding in New Jersey in which the parties appeared, the father was, under §§ 23, 24 of Act of March 27, 1874, ordered to pay to mother $3 a week for support of children with liberty of mother to apply for increase in future, the right could not be lost by the father's moving to another state, as such proceedings are mere continuation of original proceedings. White v. White [N. J. Law] 55 A. 739.

60. N. C. Code 1883, § 1287, requiring the filing of affidavit, in action for divorce or alimony, verifying complaint and stating plaintiff has been a resident of the state for two years, and that defendant is about to leave, is jurisdictional, and on an unsworn affidavit no alimony pendente lite will be granted. Clark v. Clark, 133 N. C. 28, 45 S. E. 342.

woman is without fault or not equally at fault with the man.[64] A valid marriage is a prerequisite to the granting of either permanent or temporary alimony.[65]

§ 3. Stage a condition of the divorce proceeding.[66]—In New Jersey a wife can,[67] and in Kentucky she cannot, obtain alimony where the decree in divorce has awarded her none.[68] Alimony may be awarded after the case has been returned from an appellate court.[69]

§ 4. Reasons for and against provisional allowances.[70]—The allowances to the wife pendente lite for maintenance and to carry on suit are within the sound discretion of the court,[71] which is a broad one, and will only be reviewed where grossly abused.[72] Though the husband sues for a divorce because of cruel treatment[73] or adultery, adequate allowance should be made.[74] A wife is entitled to support pending an action for separation unless the husband is relieved there-

64. Stapleberg v. Stapleberg [Conn.] 58 A. 233.

65. NOTE. A valid marriage is a prerequisite to the granting of either permanent or temporary alimony. Cowan v. Cowan, 10 Colo. 540, 16 P. 215; McFarland v. McFarland, 51 Iowa, 565, 2 N. W. 269; Collins v. Collins, 80 N. Y. 1; Bowman v. Worthington, 24 Ark. 522. But it has been held that a second wife, being blameless, is entitled to alimony where her husband concealed the fact from her that he had an undivorced wife living, and the second wife had no reason to doubt the validity of the marriage until his answer disclosed the fact that he had another wife. Strode v. Strode, 3 Bush [Ky.] 227, 96 Am. Dec. 211. See Lea v. Lea, 104 N. C. 603, 10 S. E. 488, 17 Am. St. Rep. 692.—From notes to Werner v. Werner [Kan.] 68 Am. St. Rep. 372; Hite v. 67. Under N. J. Sess. Laws 1902, p. 507, § 19, which provides that pending divorce or after final decree the court may order alimony, alimony may be awarded to wife on her petition though the decree for divorce awarded her none even where it had been asked for. McKensey v. McKensey [N. J. Eq.] 55 A. 1073.

68. Wife cannot by independent action after entry of divorce decree obtain alimony, where there was no reservation in the decree. Campbell v. Campbell, 25 Ky. L. R. 53, 74 S. W. 670.

NOTE. Suit for alimony after decree of divorce: There is a conflict as to whether or not an independent suit can be maintained unless authorized by statute. Some courts hold that alimony can only be granted as an incident to the decree of divorce. Bowman v. Worthington, 24 Ark. 522; Shannon v. Shannon, 2 Gray [Mass.] 285; Jones v. Jones, 18 Me. 308, 36 Am. Dec. 723; Chapman v. Chapman, 13 Ind. 396; Atwater v. Atwater, 53 Barb. [N. Y.] 621. But numerous courts hold that a wife may bring a separate action to recover an allowance for her separate support and maintenance independent of any suit for divorce. Butler v. Butler, 4 Litt. [Ky.] 202; Earle v. Earle, 27 Neb. 277, 43 N. W. 118, 20 Am. St. Rep. 667; Edgerton v. Edgerton, 12 Mont. 122, 29 P. 966, 33 Am. St. Rep. 557. But the action for alimony cannot, as a general rule, be maintained as an independent proceeding after the parties have been divorced. Wilde v. Wilde, 36 Iowa, 319; Bassett v. Bassett, 99 Wis. 344, 74 N. W. 780, 67 Am. St. Rep. 863; Downey v. Downey, 98 Ala. 373, 13 So. 412, 21 L. R. A. 677. But an independent action may be allowed where jurisdiction is obtained by constructive service. Adams v. Abbott, 21 Wash. 29, 56 P. 931; Weidman v. Weidman, 57 Ohio St. 101, 48 N. E. 506; Van Orsdal v. Van Orsdal, 67 Iowa, 35, 24 N. W. 579. And alimony need not be determined in the judgment dissolving the marriage relation if the judgment reserves the right to settle the question afterwards. Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 32 N. E. 1062.—From notes to In re Popejoy [Colo.] 77 Am. St. Rep. 222, 228; and Downey v. Downey [Ala.] 21 L. R. A. 677.

71. Will not be controlled where no abuse. Holloman v. Holloman, 118 Ga. 796, 45 S. E. 599. Where husband cruelly mistreated wife, discretion of court in awarding temporary alimony and attorney's fees will not be controlled. Godby v. Godby, 118 Ga. 541, 45 S. E. 439. Expenses, property, and income of husband considered, and held that wife, in action for separation, should have as temporary alimony $10 a week and use of residence. Bressette v. Bressette, 88 N. Y. S. 580. While the court in an action for separation cannot direct that plaintiff have the use of the residence pendente lite, it may order temporary alimony on the basis of such use being conceded and the defendant will be deemed to have acquiesced therein unless he objects specially thereto. Id.

72. Where defendant was possessed of estate worth $75,000, mostly land, and had been enjoined from disposing of it, and had paid temporary alimony as ordered by court, the appointment of receiver by judge in vacation for personal property was an abuse of discretion. Goff v. Goff [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 177.

74. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 75 P. 524. In a suit for divorce by husband, court may order temporary alimony, attorney's fees, and suit money to be paid by him Reed v. Reed [Neb.] 98 N. W. 73.

from by agreement through a trustee or by misconduct on the part of the wife.[75] Counsel fees should be allowed though the divorce was improperly granted,[76] and though an appeal was unsuccessful,[77] unless it was without merit,[78] and an allowance may be increased where a jury disagrees,[79] but will not be made for past services,[80] or where an allowance for fees is included in the decree for alimony.[81] The amount to be awarded depends on the value of services rendered[82] and rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge,[83] who in deciding the amount should use his own judgment and experience and not be wholly governed by affidavits of attorneys.[84] And a contract to pay the attorney according to the amount of alimony recovered is void.[85] Unusual grounds of expenditure will be considered in allowing suit money.[86] The power of the court to compel the husband to pay the wife's counsel fees in an action for divorce is not exhausted by the final judgment.[87] When the court has adjudged that plaintiff is not entitled to a divorce, it has no power to order an allowance for suit money.[88]

Permanent allowances.[89]—Permanent alimony is usually only given where the husband has been guilty of a matrimonial offense,[90] and is conditional on the wife's continued chastity.[91] But in some jurisdictions it is allowed even when the husband is blameless.[92] A wife granted a divorce with alimony, cannot be

75. Hawley v. Hawley, 88 N. Y. S. 606. It is the duty of the court to "make an allowance for the support of the wife out of the estate of the husband" pending a suit for divorce [Code 1896, § 1495]. Webb v. Webb [Ala.] 37 So. 96. Where the wife's petition for temporary alimony contains averments entitling her thereto, such averments will not be overthrown by irrelevant and scandalous matter included in the petition. Hawley v. Hawley, 88 N. Y. S. 606. An attorney has no power to compromise his client's judgment for alimony pendente lite. Schlemmer v. Schlemmer [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 636. Where alimony is asked pending a suit by the divorced wife, the burden is upon her to show her necessitous condition [Civ. Code, art. 160]. Jackson v. Burns [La.] 36 So. 756.

77. Where husband obtains divorce for adultery, wife may have alimony to prosecute an appeal, though unsuccessful, if it is taken in good faith. Viertel v. Viertel, 99 Mo. App. 710, 75 S. W. 187.

78. Allowance of attorney's fees is within sound discretion of court, and in case of an appeal without merit, husband will only be required to pay clerk's fees. Von Trott v. Von Trott, 118 Wis. 29, 94 N. W. 798.

79. Action for separation. Herrmann v. Herrmann, 88 App. Div. 76, 84 N. Y. S. 736.

80. After judgment for divorce against a wife court cannot allow money for past services of attorneys or expenses, though she was refused allowance during trial with the right reserved to allow it after trial, but she may be allowed money to enable her to further prosecute by a new trial or appeal. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 75 P. 359.

81. A husband is not liable for counsel fees where the decree included them in the allowance made to the wife. Turner v. Turner, 104 Ill. App. 253.

82. Counsel fees of $100 held sufficient where defendant was in default and it appeared there would be no difficulty in proving the case. Bressette v. Bressette, 88 N. Y. S. 580.

83. Hinton v. Hinton, 117 Ga. 547, 43 S. E. 983. $5,000 counsel fees allowed where attorney spent seventy-six days on case, and defendant a man of means. Harding v. Harding, 105 Ill. App. 363. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 900, requiring the husband to pay costs of both parties, unless wife was at fault, and she was able to pay, the allowance of $250 counsel fee was proper, though divorce was improperly granted. Donnelly v. Donnelly, 25 Ky. L. R. 1543, 78 S. W. 182.

84. $2,000 allowed for counsel fees in a suit for separate maintenance carried to supreme court was reduced to $1,000. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 105 Ill. App. 349.

85. NOTE. A contract between a wife and her lawyer, providing that for his services in procuring an allowance of alimony and enforcing its payment, he shall receive a share of the alimony recovered, is void, not only bcause the claim for alimony is incapable of assignment but also because the contract is in contravention of public policy. Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548; Jordan v. Westerman, 62 Mich. 170, 4 Am. St. Rep. 836; Lynde v. Lynde, 64 N. J. Eq. 736, 52 A. 694, 58 L. R. A. 471, and note; Bowman v. Support of child.[99]—Where the wife is entitled to divorce and custody of child, she should have an allowance, in addition to alimony, to maintain and educate the child,[1] the amount of which is within the sound discretion of the trial court,[2] and cannot be discharged in bankruptcy.[3]

§ 5. Amount, character, and duration.[4]—The amount of alimony is in sound discretion of the court,[5] taking into consideration the husband's means,[6] including his pension,[7] the wife's lack of means,[8] and the children to be supported.[9] ground of cruel conduct, the husband was found blameless and on his cross-petition was awarded a divorce because of the wife's adultery, the award to her of $1,000 alimony was not an abuse of discretion of court, nor a reward for her infidelity, but was proper that she might not be left destitute. Pauly v. Pauly [Okl.] 76 P. 148.

93. Rev. St. 5699, provided that she should be restored to her lands, should have alimony, and should be entitled to dower, and this was not amended by act May 19th, 1894, except in case it is found that the wife has ample property and the husband little or none. De Witt v. De Witt, 67 Ohio, 340, 66 N. E. 136.

94. An antenuptial contract whereby husband's note to wife was in full payment of her rights to his estate, will not bar the allowance to her as permanent alimony of specific property, where the divorce was obtained for husband's adultery, as such contracts did not contemplate a divorce through fault of the husband. Carter v. Carter [Vt.] 56 A. 989.

3. Order to pay for support of child is not an award of alimony, which is an allowance to a wife who is living apart from her husband on her own account, and an order to support a child cannot be discharged in bankruptcy, though a past obligation to his former wife for support of child will be discharged as any civil debt. Rush v. Flood, 105 Ill. App. 182.

5. Alimony of $75 a month and $1,000 solicitor's fees. Benham v. Benham, 208 Ill. 98, 70 N. E. 30. $800 alimony, and $150 attorney's fee proper. Greer v. Greer. 25 Ky. L. R. 655, 76 S. W. 166. In a suit by husband for divorce because of cruel treatment it was proper to allow wife $100 for her temporary support and attorney's fees, and $49 for expenses. Baier v. Baier [Minn.] 97 N. W. 671. In action for a separation, where the main issue was as to marriage, it was proper to allow plaintiff $500 for counsel fee and $25 weekly alimony, and on disagreement of jury, an additional counsel fee of $750. Herrmann v. Herrmann, 88 App. Div. 76, 84 N. Y. S. 736.

6. Where defendant had income of $90 a month and property worth $3,000, the allowance of $25 counsel fee and $25 a month was proper. Cupples v. Cupples, 31 Colo. 443, 72 P. 1056. In an action against wife for divorce on ground of adultery and desertion, where the husband was worth $69,000, the allowance of $200 to wife as suit money which was inadequate, was an abuse of discretion. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux [Mont.] 75 P. 524. Defendant with no property but with income from $820 to $1,000 a year was ordered to pay as permanent alimony $30 a month to wife, and $10 a month for support of child. Downing v. Downing [N. J. Eq.] 54 A. 542.

7. Though U. S. Rev. St. § 4747, provides that money due a pensioner shall not be liable to any process while in the Pension Office or in transmission, yet it could be considered as part of pensioner's resources in determining the amount of alimony. Bailey v. Bailey [Vt.] 66 A. 1014.

8. The allowance of $150 a year and $300 counsel fees in a suit for separation from bed and board proper where wife little property. Hughbanks v. Hughbanks, 25 Ky. L. R. 840, 76 S. W. 355.

Permanent awards; division of property.[10]—Permanent alimony may,[11] and in Indiana must be awarded in gross.[12] In Nebraska realty cannot be awarded as alimony.[13] The court may consider the financial condition of the parties and their mutual conduct,[14] and will not ordinarily award the wife more than one-third of the property.[15] Property conveyed in fraud of creditors will be considered,[16] but a secret conveyance is not necessarily fraudulent.[17] Where wife has an interest in her husband's property other than such as attaches to her status as a wife, as if her earnings have been invested by him therein, the court may properly vest part of it in her.[18] Final division and distribution of the estate is usually preferable to an award of alimony as it ends litigation between the four children, an award of $2,400 a year, when the husband's income is $4,600 and the divorce is for adultery, is proper. Harris v. Harris, 83 App. Div. 123, 82 N. Y. S. 568. The allowance to wife of $300 a year for the support of two children during infancy, and $500 a year to herself for life being a little more than half of defendant's income, was not excessive. Valentine v. Valentine, 87 App. Div. 156, 84 N. Y. S. 37. In a suit for separation where the wife is without means and has three infant children and the husband has an income of $2,000 a year, $10 a week and $50 counsel fee should have been allowed. Vaughn v. Vaughn, 89 App. Div. 611, 85 N. Y. S. 443. Where the husband was worth $6,000, was in good health, and had successful business, and the wife was in poor health and had two minor children to support, $1,800 was not excessive. Williams v. Williams [Wis.] 99 N. W. 431. Sufficiency where wife left husband because of his neglect and indifference and was poor. Boreing v. Boreing, 24 Ky. L. R. 1288, 71 S. W. 431. That a wife was in an insane hospital at low expense and the husband had large expenses because of sickness, held proper reasons for reducing. Davis v. Davis, 78 App. Div. 500, 79 N. Y. S. 621. Six dollars not excessive against a husband who has employment, for a wife and child. Dale v. Hauer, 109 La. 711, 33 So. 741. Where defendant was worth $10,000 and owed plaintiff some for advances, and plaintiff had performed valuable services, an award of $1,100 on annulment of an incestuous marriage was not an abuse of discretion. Stapleberg v. Stapleberg [Conn.] 68 A. 233.

11. In lieu of stated allowances, N. D. Rev. Codes, 1899, § 2761. De Roche v. De Roche [N. D.] 94 N. W. 767. Where a husband was worth $5,300, the allowance of $160 a year to wife for separate maintenance or in default, her option to take $2,600, was supported as an alternative decree and not a penalty. Goldie v. Goldie [Iowa] 98 N. W. 630.

12. Award of $4 a week was in violation of Burns' Ind. Rev. St. 1901, § 1069, providing that alimony should be a sum in gross. Marsh v. Marsh [Ind.] 70 N. E. 154.

13. Cizek v. Cizek [Neb.] 99 N. W. 28.

14. Where husband earned $40 to $50 a month and owned only $50 worth of property the award of $1,000 alimony was excessive and should be reduced to $500. Stutsman v. Stutsman, 30 Ind. App. 645, 66 N. E. 908. The allowance to wife of $250 alimony, from whom her husband obtained a divorce, where he had little personalty, only a small salary, an equity of $1,500 in real estate, many debts, and the wife contributed nothing, will not be disturbed. Donaldson v. Donaldson [Mich.] 96 N. W. 448. Where divorce is granted for husband's wrong, an award of $7,000 where wife gives $1,000 bond to support three minor children, and husband's property of $14,000 was jointly accumulated, was not excessive. De Roche v. De Roche [N. D.] 94 N. W. 767. Where each party found guilty of cruel treatment and husband was given divorce, and wife on separation had secured goods valued at $400 (one-half of personalty), and the net value of husband's real estate was $2,000, it was error to award her $2,000, but she was allowed $650. Lindenmann v. Lindenmann, 118 Wis. 175, 95 N. W. 96.

15. Where defendant, an elderly farmer, owned 80 acres worth $1,600, four-fifths of 125 acres, worth $1,500 (plaintiff owning the other one-fifth), $380 worth of farm stock, and had paid $175 temporary alimony, a judgment for $2,000 alimony, and $150 attorneys' fees and for sale of property to pay the same, was excessive, and should be modified to give plaintiff one-third of real estate for life, some stock, and $100 counsel fee. Hall v. Hall, 26 Ky. L. R. 1848, 78 S. W. 1127. Plaintiff cannot complain of award to her of full one-third of property where she had excessive allowance pending litigation and husband had supported her two children till they were grown, and she was in good health. Von Trott v. Von Trott, 118 Wis. 29, 94 N. W. 798.

16. Where husband previous to divorce proceedings had transferred all of his property to defraud his creditors, it was proper to consider its value in awarding alimony of the amount of $3,000. Dougan v. Dougan, 90 Minn. 471, 97 N. W. 122.

17. The conveyance of property by husband without knowledge of wife, during divorce proceeding, for full consideration, and where property had been set aside for wife with her knowledge, was not fraudulent and the property could not be awarded to wife. Richmond v. Smith, 117 Wis. 290, 94 N. W. 36.

18. Where wife's earnings together with his own money were invested in real estate in husband's name, court may vest part of property in wife in fee as alimony. Champion v. Myers, 207 Ill. 308, 69 N. E. 815.

Contra: Decree vesting part of husband's real estate in wife, void under c. 25, Neb. Comp. St. 1901, though the wife's petition alleged that it was purchased with money furnished by her. Cizek v. Cizek [Neb.] 99 N. W. 28.

parties.[19] In Minnesota, by statute, a wife who is granted a divorce on the ground of the adultery of her husband becomes at once entitled to her dower interest in his property as though he were dead,[20] and is entitled to partition of lands conveyed by her husband without her consent.[21] Her interest is subject in its just proportion, with his other real estate, to the payment of his debts,[22] but a judgment recovered against her husband after he has conveyed property, but before the divorce, is not a legal lien on her one-third interest,[23] and claims of the creditors cannot be enforced against her interest in an action by her for partition.[24]

§ 6. Procedure and practice.—Temporary allowance[25] may be awarded solely on the wife's testimony,[26] may include arrears,[27] and should be made payable at a definite time,[28] and will cease on the husband's death.[29] A court may not award alimony out of particular property or charge the award upon particular property but should leave it to operate as a general lien.[30] The court may award suit money as well as counsel fees,[31] and the order therefor may be entered after the decree.[32]

Permanent award[33] may be corrected on appeal.[34] A decree ordering payment of alimony pending a suit for separation is appealable without reference to the amount.[35] A consent decree for alimony is not subject to attack by appeal or otherwise.[36] A decree dismissing a complaint for divorce and adjudging a certain sum for alimony cannot be construed as a final determination of the controversy nor adjudge future rights of the parties.[37] A decree simply giving judgment for alimony in a certain sum cannot be interpreted as final so as to preclude a subsequent suit for maintenance.[38] The amount of the judgment rendered in a proceeding for alimony does not determine the jurisdiction of the court on appeal.[39] While a claim for future alimony under a decree of a state court, not reduced to final judgment, will not be enforced by Federal courts, it may be made the basis of a cause of action of a civil nature within the jurisdiction of the Federal court, other requisities of jurisdiction being present.[40] A final judgment

27. Where the petition for alimony was filed five months after separation, it was proper to order the payment of $5 a month, $25 payable in thirty days, and $5 the first of each month thereafter, as that was not the allowance of alimony in gross. Wright v. Wright, 117 Ga. 867, 45 S. E. 250.

28. Decreeing that defendant pay $50 "on demand, if necessary" is void, as the judge should determine that question. Cope v. Cope [Mo. App.] 77 S. W. 92.

29. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1769, an order for payment of money pending action loses its force on the death of the husband, and it cannot be sustained where it directs payment to plaintiff's attorneys. Kellogg v. Stoddard, 89 App. Div. 137, 84 N. Y. S. 1015.

30. Cizek v. Cizek [Neb.] 96 N. W. 657.

31. Though Colo. Laws 1893, c. 80, made provision for alimony and counsel fees pendente lite, it did not, because of silence as to suit money, repeal the previous practice in allowing it. Hart v. Hart, 31 Colo. 333, 73 P. 35.

32. Where the rule for an order for additional counsel fees and expenses was granted the day judgment was entered, the court has power subsequently to order their payment. Rieder v. Rieder, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 488.

33. See 1 Curr. L. 73.

34. Error in amount of award. Stutsman v. Stutsman, 30 Ind. App. 645, 66 N. E. 908. A discharge from payment of alimony will not be disturbed when the grounds urged therefor are unsupported by the evidence. Smith v. Smith, 142 Cal. 636, 76 P. 489. The discharge of an order for alimony will not be disturbed where it is not shown that the discretion of the court was not well exercised. Id.

35. Const. 1898, art. 85. Dale v. Hauer, 109 La. 711, 33 So. 741.

36. Bonney v. Lamb [Ill.] 71 N. E. 375.

37, 38. Fred v. Fred [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 611.

39. Where decree was for $100 attorney's fees, but the prayer was for $1,500 alimony and attorney's fees, held, an appeal would lie without a certificate. Wald v. Wald [Iowa] 99 N. W. 720.

40, 41. Israel v. Israel, 130 F. 237.

NOTE. Effect of foreign judgments: A judgment for alimony rendered after the appearance of the defendant is entitled to full faith and credit when used as the basis of an action, in another state, to collect over-for alimony in a state court will be given full faith and credit in the Federal courts.[41] A court will apply the law of its own state in construing a judgment for alimony given in a foreign state in the absence of proof of the laws of the foreign state relating to such judgment.[42]

§ 7. Decree, enforcement and discharge.[43]—The order must run to the wife;[44] as to past payments it is not affected by her death,[45] or reversal in an appellate court,[46] and it may be enforced by refusing to allow husband to proceed in the suit until he has complied.[47]

Vacating or modifying discharge.[48]—Defendant's leaving the jurisdiction[49] or statutes limiting the time as to opening decrees do not affect the court's discretion to modify a decree,[50] upon clear proof of changed circumstances,[51] or a mistake in making the original decree,[52] but not upon any grounds which could have been presented at the original trial.[53] or appeal.[54] A reconcilement between the parties discharges defendant.[55] As to the effect of a second marriage see note.[56]

Attachment of the person.[57]—Failure to comply with terms of decree awarding alimony, including support of children,[58] unless it be alimony in gross,[59] subdue instalments of the alimony awarded. Arrington v. Arrington, 127 N. C. 190, 37 S. E. 212, 52 L. R. A. 201.

42. New Jersey practice of allowing alimony in instalments followed in construing a North Dakota judgment for alimony. Fred v. Fred [N. J. Eq.] 58 A. 611.

43. See 1 Curr. L. 73.

44. Kellogg v. Stoddard, 89 App. Div. 137, 84 N. Y. S. 1015.

45. Durland v. Durland, 67 Kan. 734, 74 P. 274.

46. Where on appeal $250 was paid into court pursuant to order as temporary alimony, and the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the sum could not be applied as a credit to the $500 permanent alimony awarded by trial court. Mercer v. Mercer [Colo. App.] 73 P. 662.

47. Order as to temporary alimony. Reed v. Reed [Neb.] 98 N. W. 73.

48. See 1 Curr. L. 73.

49. Where liberty was reserved to mother to apply for increase in amount ordered paid for support of children, the father cannot defeat the right by moving to another state, as the petition for an increase is a mere continuation of the original proceeding. White v. White [N. J. Law] 55 A. 739.

50. Under Colo. Divorce Act, § 9, the court may modify a decree relative to alimony and the custody of children because of changed circumstances, though more than one year has elapsed since the divorce. Stevens v. Stevens, 31 Colo. 188, 72 P. 1061.

51. The court, under Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 4809, may modify a judgment awarding alimony for a gross amount. Holmes v. Holmes, 90 Minn. 466, 97 N. W. 147.

52. Where plaintiff was awarded $85 a month, and then sued on an ante-nuptial contract which had not been disclosed in the divorce proceedings and secured $75 a month, it was proper on application to so far modify the decree as to make it only $10 in addition to the amount payable under the contract. Bowlby v. Bowlby [Minn.] 97 N. W. 669.

53. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1759, as amended by laws of 1895, c. 891, evidence of the wife's adultery prior to divorce cannot be introduced. Goodsell v. Goodsell, 82 App. Div. 65, 81 N. Y. S. 806.

54. Where the judgment of trial court awarding alimony was affirmed, though by the dismissal of a bill of exceptions, the trial court was without jurisdiction to modify the same on any ground which might have been relied on in the bill of exceptions. Sumner v. Sumner, 118 Ga. 408, 45 S. E. 315.

55. Where after judgment for separation defendant was surety on husband's bond for alimony, and then parties became reconciled and lived together and then again separated, defendant was discharged. Stendal v. Ackerman, 86 N. Y. S. 468.

56. NOTE. Effect of a second marriage upon obligation to pay alimony: I. Remarriage of the husband: One cannot relieve himself from the payment of alimony according to the provisions of a divorce decree by the obligations imposed upon him by a second marriage. State v. Brown, 31 Wash. 397, 72 P. 86, 62 L. R. A. 974; Park v. Park, 80 N. Y. 156. II. Remarriage of the wife: In some states the wife's subsequent conduct or remarriage makes no difference unless it is shown that she thereby acquires a support equivalent to the alimony awarded her. Shepherd v. Shepherd, 1 Hun [N. Y.] 240; Stevenson v. Stevenson, 34 Hun [N. Y.] 157; Park v. Park, 18 Hun [N. Y.] 466; Kiralfy v. Kiralfy, 36 Misc. 407, 73 N. Y. S. 708; Olney v. Watts, 43 Ohio St. 499, 3 N. E. 354. But the fact of remarriage may be used to reduce the alimony. Brandt v. Brandt, 40 Or. 477, 67 Pac. 508. In some states remarriage by the wife cuts off the alimony. Stillman v. Stillman, 99 Ill. 196, 39 Am. Rep. 21; Ablee v. Wyman, 10 Gray [Mass.] 222; Southworth v. Treadwell, 168 Mass. 511, 47 N. E. 93; Bowman v. Worthington, 24 Ark. 522.—From note to State v. Brown [Wash.] 62 L. R. A. 974.

57. See 1 Curr. L. 74.

58. Under Mich. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 230, allowing imprisonment for nonpayment of alimony, the allowance for support of children is included. Brown v. Brown [Mich.] 97 N. W. 396.

59. Where alimony is required to be awarded in gross it is not enforceable by jects the party to penalty for contempt, unless he shows his inability to perform its terms,[60] when it is not permitted as being "imprisonment for debt."[61]

Execution[62] may be had on alimony awarded in gross.[63]

Subjection of property.[64]—Court may order property sold if alimony is not paid by a fixed date.[65]

§ 8. Suits for annulment and actions for separate maintenance.[66]—A suit or a cross bill[67] for separate maintenance may be maintained by a wife who is living apart from her husband,[68] without fault on her part,[69] or where she was justified in leaving him,[70] and temporary alimony may be awarded her.[71]

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

§ 1. Definition, Distinctions, and What Constitutes (154).
§ 2. Particular Instruments (156).
§ 3. Effect of Material Alteration; Rights of Parties (156).
§ 4. Pleading and Evidence (157).
§ 5. Curing or Ratifying Alterations (158).

§ 1. Definition, distinctions, and what constitutes.[72]—Alterations, interlineations, or erasures are material if they change the legal effect of the instrument, its operation, or the liability of the parties thereto.[73] If the alteration is made in-contempt proceedings, but by execution. Marsh v. Marsh [Ind.] 70 N. E. 154.

60. The fact that defendant has married again and so exhausted his income, which was the same as when the alimony was decreed, will not relieve him from the penalty for contempt. State v. Brown, 31 Wash. 397, 72 P. 86. A husband who refuses to pay alimony as ordered by the court, having means to do so, may be attached for contempt (Webb v. Webb [Ala.] 37 So. 96); but if he is without means he cannot be compelled to pay by that method, though his inability to pay results from willful refusal to work (Id.).

61. Where the order committing petitioner for contempt recited that he willfully refused to pay alimony, but did not recite that he was able to pay, he will be discharged. In re Cowden, 139 Cal. 244, 73 P. 156.

62. See 1 Curr. L. 75.

63. Marsh v. Marsh [Ind.] 70 N. E. 154.

64. See 1 Curr. L. 75.

65. Court had power to order that if alimony was not paid in seven months the homestead should be sold and proceeds used in payment of alimony provided the wife paid a joint judgment against herself and husband. Johnson v. Johnson, 66 Kan. 546, 72 P. 267.

66. See 1 Curr. L. 75.

67. Suit for separate maintenance may be made by cross-petition in a divorce suit by husband. Goldie v. Goldie [Iowa] 98 N. W. 630.

68. A wife who is justifiably living apart from her husband may, independently of an action for divorce, recover an allowance for her separate support. Baier v. Baier [Minn.] 97 N. W. 671.

69. To maintain an action for alimony without prayer for divorce petitioner must allege that she was without fault. Simms v. Simms, 25 Ky. L. R. 303, 74 S. W. 1074.

70. A suit for alimony may be maintained by a wife who refused to accompany her husband from New York to Charleston because of his gross misconduct and indecency which justified her in separating from him. Levin v. Levin [S. C.] 46 S. E. 945.

71. In a suit for separate maintenance temporary allowance may be made though defendant sets up facts in cross-petition which would entitle him to a divorce. Cupples v. Cupples, 31 Colo. 443, 72 P. 1056.

72. See 1 Curr. L. 76.

73. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107; Rochford v. McGee [S. D.] 94 N. W. 695.

Where a lease provided that the lessor should have the privilege of purchasing the improvements at the end of the term, said improvements to be valued by two real estate dealers, one chosen by each party, the insertion of the words "owner or" between the words "estate" and "dealers," and this lease also provided that the notice of termination should be served personally, a clause authorizing service by publication as inserted, also a typewritten page, different in appearance from the rest of the instrument, was inserted, having reference to right of lessor to purchase improvements, and providing that the lease should not be assigned during first 15 years without lessor's consent, and also in the clause "will yield up said demised premises in good condition together with all the buildings and improvements thereon," the words "together with," etc., were erased. Held, alterations were material. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107. Insertion in chattel mortgage, after the description of the goods, of the words "in her storehouse" held material alteration. Cabell v. McKinney, 31 Ind. App. 601, 68 N. E. 601. Where, in a blank intended for the period of maturity of a note dated Aug. 26, 1901, the maker's name was inserted, and later in the instrument occur the words "due May 1, 1902," an alteration consisting in the erasure of the maker's name from such blank, and the insertion of the words "May 1st after" date, does not change the legal effect of the instrument. Bailey v. Gilman Bank, 99 Mo. App. 671, 74 S. W. 874. Alterations in a lease made by the lessee without the consent of nocently, or by mistake, and neither those liable on the instrument nor any third party has suffered any injury in consequence thereof, the alteration is immaterial.[74] The alteration must be made by a party to the contract, or by a stranger with his consent;[75] an alteration made by a stranger without the consent of either party being a mere spoliation.[76] The evidence being conflicting, it is a question for the jury whether or not the alteration was made by a stranger.[77]

§ 2. Particular instruments.[78]—Changes in a negotiable promissory note after delivery which alter the medium of payment,[79] rate of interest,[80] time when interest commences to run,[81] date when interest is due,[82] liability of indorsers,[83] cutting a note from a memorandum, limiting its effect as a negotiable instru-

the lessor, giving the former the privilege of subletting and requiring the lessor to make certain repairs, are material. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 346.

Question of law or fact: Under Civ. Code, § 3703, fact of alteration is a question for the jury, materiality of alteration is for the court. Heard v. Tappin, 116 Ga. 930, 43 S. E. 375.

74. A note was made payable to a firm, in the firm name, and on the dissolution of the firm it was turned over to one of the partners who drew a line through the firm name and inserted his own as payee, the other partners indorsing it payable to the partner's order. Held, said partner being in law and in fact one of the payees, and the alteration being without fraud, and one that could not injure anyone, it was immaterial, and the said partner could restore it to its original condition. James v. Tilton, 183 Mass. 275, 67 N. E. 326. An erasure on a promissory note which does not affect the signer's liability as to the payee is immaterial. Defendant executed note to plaintiff, one defendant placed the word "surety" after his name. plaintiff erased this, held did not alter his liability to plaintiff and they were still liable to him as joint and several obligors. Galloway v. Bartholomew [Or.] 74 P. 467. A writing in pencil by the manager of a bank below the name of an indorser on a note held by it of his address, for the purpose of directing the bank clerks in keeping their records, is not an alteration of the instrument. Merchants' Bank of Canada v. Brown, 86 App. Div. 599, 83 N. Y. S. 1037. Where a note was executed in Mass., and apparently payable there, the affixing of an internal revenue stamp to it by the payee after its execution was not a material alteration under the holding of the Mass. courts that U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2292, 2297, prohibiting the admission in evidence of such documents when not stamped, applied to the Federal courts only. Rowe v. Bowman, 183 Mass. 488, 67 N. E. 636. An erasure in a building contract of words acknowledging the receipt of payment of the first instalment due thereunder is not material where the instalment has not in fact been paid. Sullivan v. California Realty Co., 142 Cal. 201, 75 P. 767. Where, notwithstanding an alleged alteration in the date of a bond attempted to be enforced against the estate of the deceased maker, an action on the bond, if treated as having been executed at the time the consideration therefor arose, would not be barred by limitations, the alleged alteration was immaterial. Bashaw's Adm'r v. Wallace's Adm'r, 101 Va. 733, 45 S. E. 290.

NOTE. Filling in blanks: Where, by filling in blanks, the character or legal tenor and effect of the instrument is changed, parties not consenting are discharged, as where bill of exchange was changed so as to make a promissory note. Tuellen v. Hare, 32 Ind. 211.—From note to Draper v. Wood [Mass.] 17 Am. Rep. 97, 104.

75. If an agent acting within the scope of his authority makes an alteration, it will have the same effect in invalidating the instrument as if made by the principal. But where agent who changed contract so as to call for a larger payment, had no express or implied authority, it was held not to impair the validity of the contract. Deering Harvester Co. v. White, 110 Tenn. 132, 72 S. W. 962.

NOTE. Alterations by agent: An alteration made in good faith by an agent of the maker does not avoid the instrument. Van Brunt v. Eoff, 35 Barb. [N. Y.] 501; Collins v. Makepeace, 13 Ind. 448; Miller v. Reed, 3 Grant, Cas. 51.—From note to Draper v. Wood [Mass.] 17 Am. Rep. 97, 101. It is not rendered void when altered by holder's agent without authority. Ballard v. Franklin L. Ins. Co., 81 Ind. 239; Bigelow v. Stilphen, 35 Vt. 521. But see Morrison v. Welty, 18 Md. 169; 3 Rand. Com. Paper, 876. If altered by payee's agent after its delivery to him and before delivery to the payee it is rendered void. Hamilton v. Hooper, 46 Iowa, 515.—From note to Wilson v. Hayes [Minn.] 4 L. R. A. 196.

76. White v. Harris [S. C.] 48 S. E. 41. Alteration in the purchase-money note without knowledge or consent of the seller is no defense against recovery of a chattel sold. Forbes v. Taylor [Ala.] 35 So. 855.

77. White v. Harris [S. C.] 48 S. E. 41.

78. See 1 Curr. L. 76.

79. Words, "This note to be exchanged for," certain bonds, "when issued at 90," written across the face of a promissory note, held a material alteration. Harnett v. Holdrege [Neb.] 97 N. W. 443.

80. Commercial Bank v. Maguire, 89 Minn. 394, 95 N. W. 212.

81. In a mortgage note in the phrase "interest after maturity," "maturity" was erased and "date" inserted. Held a material alteration. Hocknell v. Sheley, 66 Kan. 357, 71 P. 839.

82. Commercial Bank v. Maguire, 89 Minn. 394, 95 N. W. 212.

83. Words receiving notice and protest and guaranteeing payment of note added over ment,[84] or striking out a clause providing for the payment of attorney's fees for collection,[85] are material alterations. To add a word of description to the name of an indorsee is not a material alteration of a note or draft when it is intended that the paper shall go to the indorsee in the exact capacity indicated by the title affixed.[86] Alterations made in a deed subsequent to its execution and delivery do not affect its validity.[87]

§ 3. Effect of material alteration; rights of parties.[88]—In order to render a written contract void, because of alterations made therein, it must appear that the writing has been intentionally altered in a material part by a person claiming a benefit under it, with intent to defraud the other party.[89] Alterations may be impliedly authorized.[90]

A material alteration of a promissory note after it has been signed by the parties and without their consent renders it void,[91] and when made with intent to defraud the debtor, no recovery can be had on the original consideration.[92] Nor can the person who made the alteration take advantage of it as a defense.[93] If blank indorsement. Harnett v. Holdrege [Neb.] 97 N. W. 443.

84. Defendant signed in two places a one-paged instrument purporting to be an application for live stock insurance, lower part was a note given for the purpose of securing the payment of subsequent assessments, none of which were ever made; this note was detached and sold to a bona fide holder, defendant was not guilty of negligence. Held that the detachment of the note was a material alteration of the application and rendered the note void. Rochford v. McGee [S. D.] 94 N. W. 695.

85. White v. Harris [S. C.] 48 S. E. 41.

86. Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. v. Whitney, 88 N. Y. S. 578.

87. Signature of party to deed crossed out with pen and ink, also all reference to him in acknowledgment done after execution and delivery. Slattery v. Slattery, 120 Iowa, 717, 95 N. W. 201. Plaintiff made material alterations in a sheriff's deed after its acknowledgment and delivery to him. Held, while plaintiff might be the equitable owner, yet he was not the legal owner so as to maintain the legal action of trespass. Kalbach v. Mathis [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 684. Until a deed is delivered, it may, of course, be altered. Wetherington v. Williams, 134 N. C. 276, 46 S. E. 728.

88. See 1 Curr. L. 77.

89. Shirley v. Swafford, 119 Ga. 43, 45 S. E. 722. A spoliation does not invalidate the instrument. Deering Harvester Co. v. White, 110 Tenn. 132, 72 S. W. 962; Paul v. Leeper, 98 Mo. App. 515, 72 S. W. 715. Does not relieve the maker of a note from liability. White v. Harris [S. C.] 48 S. E. 41.

90. Parties agreeing that an indorsee should take the paper as cashier, the indorsee is authorized to write an abbreviation of the word "cashier" after his name. Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. v. Whitney, 88 N. Y. 578.

91. Rochford v. McGee [S. D.] 94 N. W. 695; White v. Harris [S. C.] 48 S. E. 41. As a result of this a material alteration of a note discharges the parties (Ofenstein v. Bryan, 20 App. D. C. 1), the indorsers (Harnett v. Holdrege [Neb.] 97 N. W. 443), and this is true even though the note is in the hands of a bona fide purchaser (Rochford v. McGee [S. D.] 94 N. W. 695; Commercial Bank v. Maguire, 89 Minn. 394, 95 N. W. 212; Ofenstein v. Bryan, 20 App. D. C. 1).

92. Hocknell v. Sheley, 66 Kan. 357, 71 P. 839.

NOTE. Effect of alteration as a discharge: If an alteration is not fraudulently made, the payee of a bill or note may resort to the original indebtedness, if that was independent of the note, and has not been discharged by the execution of it. Clute v. Small, 17 Wend. [N. Y.] 238; Booth v. Powers, 56 N. Y. 22, 31, and see cases cited; 2 Pars. Notes & B. 573; Vogle v. Ripper, 34 Ill. 100; Merrick v. Boury, 4 Ohio St. 60. But to have such resort the plaintiff must produce and surrender the note.—From note to Draper v Wood [Mass.] 17 Am. Rep. 97, 105. A fraudulent and material alteration discharges both the note and the debt. Meyer v. Huneke, 55 N. Y. 412; Smith v. Mace, 44 N. H. 553; Ballard v. Franklin L. Ins. Co., 81 Ind. 239; Woodworth v. Anderson, 63 Iowa, 503, 19 N. W. 296.—From note to Wilson v. Hayes [Minn.] 4 L. R. A. 196, 198.

NOTE. Effect on mortgage of alteration of note securing it: In some states the mortgage is viewed as an independent security for the debt and hence can be enforced, although the note has been altered or destroyed. Gillett v. Powell, 1 Speers, Eq. [S. C.] 144; Plyer v. Elliott, 19 S. C. 264; Smith v. Smith, 27 S. C. 166, 3 S. E. 78, 13 Am. St. Rep. 633 where the alteration was fraudulent; Heath v. Blake, 28 S. C. 406, 5 S. E. 842. In others an alteration of the note defeating recovery upon it, is sufficient to defeat an action upon the mortgage. Tate v. Fletcher, 77 Ind. 105; Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 337. Vogle v. Ripper, 34 Ill. 100, 85 Am. Dec. 298, holds that where the mortgagee fraudulently alters the note the debt is released or discharged, otherwise where the alteration is not fraudulent. This case is followed by Clough v. Seay, 49 Iowa, 111; Elliott v. Blair, 47 Ill. 342; Gillette v. Smith, 18 Hun [N. Y.] 10.—From note to Walton Plow Co. v. Campbell [Neb.] 16 L. R. A. 468.

93. In an action by the seller to recover a chattel sold on conditional sale, an alteration in the note given for the price was no defense, where it was made without the knowledge or consent of the seller. Forbes v. Taylor [Ala.] 35 So. 855.

the alteration be immaterial, while the note cannot be sued on or introduced in evidence, yet the debt it evidences remains a binding obligation.[94]

§ 4. Pleading and evidence.[95]—In order to affect the question of admissibility of a writing in evidence, it must appear that the alteration was in a part material to the question in dispute.[96] Alterations in instruments are presumed to have been inserted innocently, and before acknowledgment and delivery. But if there are suspicious circumstances apparent on the face of the instrument offered in evidence, the party producing the instrument, and claiming under it, is bound to remove the suspicion by accounting for the alteration,[97] but the contrary rule prevails under the civil law.[98] But this presumption of innocence does not extend to the alteration of negotiable instruments, where the party producing and claiming under the paper is bound to explain every apparent and material alteration.[99] Where a note is apparently made payable in the state in which it was made, the laws of that state govern as to whether or not the altera-

94. Bailey v. Gilman Bank, 99 Mo. App. 571, 74 S. W. 874.

NOTE. Effect of immaterial alteration made with a fraudulent intent: An immaterial alteration if made with fraudulent intent will avoid the instrument. Miller v. Reed, 27 Pa. 246; Miller v. Gilleland, 19 Pa. 119; Robinson v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 25 Iowa, 430; Booth v. Powers, 56 N. Y. 22.—From note to Draper v. Wood [Mass.] 17 Am. Rep. 97, 105.

If the alteration is made innocently or by mistake, and neither those liable on the instrument nor any third party has suffered any injury in consequence thereof, nor can he be injured if the note is restored to its original condition, it can be so restored. James v. Tilton, 183 Mass. 275, 67 N. E. 326.

95. See 1 Curr. L. 78.

NOTE. Pleading an altered bill or note: Where altered bills are declared on in their original form, the alteration must be specially pleaded; if declared on in their altered form the traverse of the acceptance is sufficient. Hirchman v. Budd, L. R. 8 Exch. 171. See, also, Hemming v. Trenery, 9 Adol. & El. 926; Parry v. Nicholson, 13 Mees. & W. 778; Davidson v. Cooper, 11 Mees. & W. 778; Calvert v. Baker, 4 Mees. & W. 417; Cock v. Coxwell, 2 Cromp., M. & R. 291.—From note to Draper v. Wood [Mass.] 17 Am. Rep. 97, 105, 106.

Evidence held insufficient to show alteration: Evidence held insufficient to support a finding that a note for $600 had been raised from $60 by unauthorized addition of a figure. Rogers v. Costigan, 25 Ky. L. R. 1349, 78 S. W. 121. In an action against the sureties on a trust agreement, evidence held insufficient to show that, after it had been signed by the sureties, a provision to the effect that additional security might be required was interlined in the instrument. Pogue v. Ross, 25 Ky. L. R. 187, 74 S. W. 1101. Parties believed mortgage covered only their half of farm, whereas it covered all, evidence examined and held to show that the instrument had not been changed. Conkling v. Levie [Neb.] 94 N. W. 987.

96. Sullivan v. California Realty Co., 142 Cal. 201, 75 P. 767. A deed is not inadmissible in evidence because of an alteration which is unimportant and immaterial to the case. Brice v. Sheffield, 118 Ga. 128, 44 S. E. 843.

97. Sheriff's deed: Held, while the presumption was that the alterations were made before acknowledgment and delivery, the appearance of the deed excited suspicion, and the court properly admitted explanatory evidence. Kalbach v. Mathis [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 684; Wheadon v. Turregano [La.] 36 So. 808.

Lease: Held, alterations were material, and it was error to admit the lease in evidence without requiring the lessor to explain them. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107. Receipts clearly showing alterations on their face are inadmissible in evidence until the alterations are explained. Rambousek v. Supreme Council of the Mystic Toilers, 119 Iowa, 263, 93 N. W. 277. Where the alteration complained of was the insertion in ink of the letter "s" after a word in a typewritten bond, held, the admission of the bond in evidence without requiring an explanation of the alteration was not error. Graham v. Middleby [Mass.] 70 N. E. 416. Where a surety erased his name from a bond and the principal was informed to notify the other sureties and procure an additional one which he did, held, erasure sufficiently explained. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Fossati [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 1038.

99. Ofenstein v. Bryan, 20 App. D. C. 1; Hodge v. Scott [Neb.] 95 N. W. 837.

An alleged alteration of a promissory note is a matter of defense, the burden of proof of which is on the defendant. Galloway v. Bartholomew [Or.] 74 P. 467. In an action on promissory notes, defended on the ground that they had been altered without the maker's consent, where plaintiff proceeded on the theory that the notes had not been altered, and in no way urged that the alleged alteration was a mere spoliation, he could not object, on appeal, to an instruction to find for defendant, if an alteration had been made, even though it was made without plaintiff's consent. Paul v. Leeper, 98 Mo. App. 515, 72 S. W. 715. Whether the alterations are so material and apparent as to require proof is a question of law for the court; the questions of when, how and by whom the alterations were made are for the jury. Ofenstein v. Bryan, 20 App. D. C. 1.

tion is material.[1] Where nothing to the contrary appears, it will be presumed that the alterations were contemporaneous with the execution of the instrument.[2] Where an action on an instrument is defended on the ground of an alteration subsequent to its execution, the burden of proof remains on the plaintiff to prove the contract on which he has declared.[3] A note assigned after alteration will be admissible in an action by the assignee against the assignor on the implied warranty of genuineness.[4]

§ 5. Curing or ratifying alterations.[5]—A party to an altered or forged negotiable instrument may bind himself by acknowledging it and promising to pay it, without a new consideration, if the instrument is in the hands of one who had no connection with the alteration or forgery, and the promise is not invoked in an attempt to compound a felony; but such acknowledgment or ratification, in order to bind, must be with full knowledge of the fact.[6]

AMBASSADORS AND CONSULS.

Documents which are a part of the archives of a foreign consulate are privileged, and a witness cannot be compelled to disclose their contents.[7] The privilege is that of the foreign government and not that of the witness, and the court will strike out, on motion, any testimony inadvertently or incautiously given by him which violates it.[8] Acknowledgments of instruments may be taken by United States consuls stationed in foreign countries.[9]

AMICUS CURIAE.

In order to be heard as amicus curiae the parties must have an interest in the question to be decided,[10] or be interested in another case that will be affected by the decision.[11] If the other parties consent the court will generally allow an interested party to file briefs in a pending case as amicus curiae.[12]

1. Whether or not there was a material alteration of a note, which was made in Massachusetts, and apparently to be paid in Massachusetts, must be determined by the laws administered in the courts of Massachusetts. Affixing a revenue stamp after execution held immaterial. Rowe v. Bowman, 183 Mass. 488, 67 N. E. 636.

2. Paul v. Leeper, 98 Mo. App. 515, 72 S. W. 715. In the absence of evidence that an alteration appearing on the face of an appeal bond was made after its execution, a motion to dismiss the appeal on this ground should be overruled. Parshall v. Clark [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 437. Where there is no other evidence, the intention of the party at the time of execution is material in fixing time of alteration. If he intended it, the presumption will be that alteration and execution were contemporaneous. Cabell v. McKinney, 31 Ind. 601, 68 N. E. 601.

Jordan v. Underhill, 91 App. Div. 124, 86 N. Y. S. 620.

10. Citizens and taxpayers may be heard in deciding whether revenue bond scrip can be used to pay taxes. Robinson v. Lee, 122 F. 1010. Where an answer must be verified by the defendant or some one in his behalf, one of several defendants may verify for all. Deved v. Carrington [Md.] 56 A. 818.

§ 1. Property in animals.[13]—The modern rule is that the owner of a dog has such a property therein that he may maintain an action for its wrongful destruction.[14]

§ 2. Personal injuries inflicted by animals.[15]—Under the common-law rule, the owner or keeper of a vicious animal is liable for personal injuries inflicted by it, if its character is known by him.[16] Actual notice however is not necessary,[17] it being presumed from the circumstances,[18] and notice to the owner's wife has been held sufficient.[19] Under this rule the viciousness of a dog will not be presumed,[20] nor is it negligence per se to keep a vicious dog, the negligence

Gladstone v. Brunkhurst [N. J. Law] 56 A. 142. If the owner has seen or heard enough to convince a man of ordinary prudence of the animal's inclination to bite people, or if he has knowledge of one attempt upon a person it is sufficient. Rowe v. Ehrmantraut [Minn.] 99 N. W. 211. Where a horse is properly in the place where the injury is inflicted, knowledge of its vicious character must be shown. A horse being led along the highway by a man riding another horse is in its proper place and in the absence of knowledge of its character, the owner is not liable for damages resulting from its kicking plaintiff's buggy and injuring him. Eddy v. Union R. Co. [R. I.] 56 A. 677.

17. Held to be a reversible error that the judge refused to charge a jury that the defendant would be liable if the facts were sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry and he failed to heed the warnings. Nelson v. Barrett, 89 App. Div. 466, 85 N. Y. S. 817.

18. A witness may testify as to the repute of the animal, though his information be derived from one person only who had knowledge of the facts. Fisher v. Weinholzer [Minn.] 97 N. W. 426.

19. Where the defense in an action for injuries was that the dog's vicious character was not known, and neither the defendant nor his wife testified, it may be inferred that their testimony would have been unfavorable to the defense. Boler v. Sorgenfrei, 86 N. Y. S. 180.

20. In the absence of a statute, the fact that a dog was at large upon the highway does not obviate the necessity of proving the dog's vicious character. Leonard v. Donoghue, 87 App. Div. 104, 84 N. Y. S. 60. Where a dog had on three other occasions attacked passers by, evidence held to show consisting in keeping after notice of its character.[21] After notice, the owner must exercise care commensurate with the danger.[22] One entering on strange premises must exercise due care, and whether he did or not is a question for the jury.[23] By statute, in some states, an injury by a dog is actionable,[24] though the person injured be a trespasser,[25] unless the trespasser provoked the dog to the attack.[26] A dog in the owner's cart upon the highway is not within an "inclosure."[27] The owner of hogs properly in the highway, is not liable for personal injuries proximately caused by them.[28] Ownership of a dog by the licensee, is shown by the issuance of such license, only upon proof of knowledge thereof by the licensee.[29] It is the duty of a liveryman to furnish a reasonably safe horse.[30]

§ 3. Injuries to property by animals trespassing or running at large.[31]— At common law the owner of animals was required to confine them to his own land,[32] but this rule is not in force in a majority of the American states,[33] where no actionable trespass is committed where animals wander on and depasture the uninclosed lands of another,[34] though even here the owner may not willfully drive his cattle on another's land.[35] Liability arises only if such animals break through a fence sufficient to turn ordinary cattle under ordinary circumstances;[36] in Missouri, however, the common law as to adjoining proprietors without a partition fence applies.[37] The defendant's inclosure must have been suitable, una vicious disposition. Rowe v. Ehrmantraut [Minn.] 99 N. W. 211. A dog's propensity to attack other dogs is admissible to show its disposition. Id.

Where a junk dealer entered premises where there was a sign on the barn "beware of the dog" and while in the act of picking up a rope was bitten evidence held to show that he was not in the exercise of due care. Spellman v. Dyer [Mass.] 71 N. E. 295. An instruction that if he was doing what an ordinary junk dealer would probably do, and did not intend to steal the rope, he was in the exercise of due care, was sufficiently favorable to the junk dealer. der the surrounding circumstances,[38] and the owner is liable for damages proximately caused by a negligent escape,[39] and the fact that the fence broken through was not a lawful one was no defense.[40] The person whose property is damaged is not restricted to the remedy specially provided for a breach of a statutory fence.[41] Animals trespassing upon the lands of another are not "going at large contrary to law,"[42] but a horse running unattended through the streets to its livery stable is.[43] A statement of a cause of action though informal and stating conclusions is sufficient after judgment.[44] The measure of damage is the value of the pasturage eaten or destroyed, together with the injury to the freehold.[45]

§ 4. Liability for killing or injuring animals.[46]—One is not justified in killing or willfully injuring domestic animals trespassing upon his property,[47] unless so provided by statute,[48] or if a dog is caught chasing or injuring sheep,[49] or hunting deer.[50] Where so provided the action is local.[51] To entitle one to a recovery from the county for sheep killed by dogs the statutory procedure must

38. Proof of the existence of sufficient fence prescribed will not alone relieve from liability. Plumb v. Maher [Conn.] 56 A. 494. Mere fact of a stallion being out of his pasture does not amount to contributory negligence on the part of the owner where the horse falls into a hole in the street and is killed. Kittredge v. Under Code 1896, § 5092, one indicted for killing cows may show in justification or mitigation that at the time they were trespassing on growing crops cultivated without fence, where stock laws prevail. 50. Under Act 1898, p. 84, providing that any person may lawfully kill any dog found hunting deer, it may be killed only while so hunting, so a plea alleging merely that "on the day" of the killing, defendant found it hunting deer, is insufficient. Mossman v. Bostridge [Vt.] 57 A. 995. Under Vermont statute any dog, without regard to its breed or whether it was permitted to run at large, may be killed if caught hunting deer. Act 1898, p. 84, providing that dogs of a certain breed shall not be permitted to run at large, and that any person may lawfully kill any dog found hunting deer. Mossman v. Bostridge [Vt.] 57 A. 995. A plea in trespass for killing a dog alleging that on the day and date "of said supposed killing," it was found hunting deer, identifies the trespass attempted to be justified with the one declared on. be strictly complied with.[52] A liability arises if one negligently allows his diseased cattle to commingle with those of another,[53] or knowingly sells diseased stock,[54] or negligently sells feed containing poison,[55] or carelessly drives a hired team and permanently injures them.[56] An exception to the common law rule requires the proper fencing or guarding of "attractive nuisances,"[57] but natural barriers may serve as the equivalent of a legal fence.[58] Railroad companies are liable for injuries to animals resulting from negligent operation or defective construction of their road,[59] as are also municipal corporations for negligent use or defective construction of highways.[60]

§ 5. Contracts of agistment.[61]—An agister's lien is a perfect one, directly created by statute and does not depend for its existence upon the institution of judicial or other proceedings,[62] but he may, with consent of the owner and under circumstances not prejudicial to third persons, adopt other means than that provided by statute to secure a satisfaction of his claim;[63] the statutory lien will be strictly construed,[64] and in Missouri, to sustain such a lien upon a vehicle, the latter must have come into the agister's charge at the same time as the animal cared for.[65] In Iowa an agister's lien does not take priority over other liens of record,[66] and the prior mortgagee may maintain replevin without demand.[67] The degree of care required of an agister is that of ordinary diligence, that which men in general exercise in respect to their own affairs,[68] which is a question for the

68. In the absence of a special contract an agister is not an insurer but must exercise reasonable care and diligence; that which a man of ordinary prudence would use under the same circumstances toward his own property. Arrington Bros. & Co. v. Fleming, 117 Ga. 449, 43 S. E. 691. A pasture which is not wholly inclosed is not inclosed at all. One who took horses to pasture, and allowed them to escape. Shropshire v. jury,[69] and one who is not bound by a contract of agistment to return all the cattle taken may recover a balance due, though some of the cattle are missing.[70] The word "range" has a distinctive meaning,[71] as has also the phrase "to keep the old stock good."[72]

§ 6. Estrays and impounding.[73]—One attempting to hold cattle damage feasant must act in substantial compliance with the statute,[74] and he must not include an illegal item in the sum demanded as a condition of release.[75] The damages, to which one taking up estrays is entitled, are limited to such as were committed at the time of, and immediately preceding the trespass,[76] and one may be estopped by his conduct to claim damages for a past trespass,[77] but not by the fact that he allowed the owner to remove them.[78] In Michigan the owner of trespassing animals, dissatisfied with the sum demanded as a condition of release, may apply to a justice of the peace for the appointment of appraisers,[79] though their award is not binding.[80] One who takes up, confines and cares for a stray hog, as a protection to his crops, is not guilty of taking up a stray animal and making use of it.[81] Animals found at large may be impounded and sold for the charges of keeping,[82]

69. Defendant who had undertaken to pasture a mule was held not liable, and in his defense was permitted to show that prudent men also pastured animals in fields having one side unfenced but bounded by a river. Arrington Bros. & Co. v. Fleming, 117 Ga. 449, 43 S. E. 691.

70. Payment of "$1.00 per head for all he turns back." Miller v. Lewis [S. D.] 97 N. W. 364.

71. A sparsely populated and uninclosed prairie over which stock growers have been allowed to let cattle, horses, and other animals, owned by them or in their charge, roam and feed without restraint. Miller v. Lewis [S. D.] 97 N. W. 364.

72. Held, under the circumstances to mean that the older sheep could be disposed of and younger ones allowed to take their place, though the entire herd could not be sold. Turnbow v. Beckstead, 25 Utah, 468, 71 P. 1062.

73. Note: In order to distrain animals damage feasant, actual damages must have been suffered. McConnell v. Cate, 70 N. H. 296; Leavitt v. Thompson, 56 Barb. [N. Y.] 542; Gilbert v. Stephens, 6 Okla. 673, 55 P. 1070; Holden v. Torrey, 31 Vt. 690. The common law gave no right of sale and a Texas statute so providing was held unconstitutional. Armstrong v. Traylor, 87 Tex. 598, 30 S. W. 440. See, also, Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 666; Bullock v. Geomble, 45 Ill. 218; Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302; Campbell v. Evans, 45 N. Y. 356. Vicksburg, 29 Miss. 247; Rosebaugh v. Saffin, 10 Ohio, 31; Armstrong v. Brown, 106 Ky. 81, 50 S. W. 17, 90 Am. St. Rep. 211, and note thereto. See 1 Curr. L. 82.

74. A tender of a sum equivalent to the actual damage justifies an action of replevin [Comp. St. 1901, art. 3, c. 2]. McAllister v. Wrede [Neb.] 97 N. W. 318. Act 1895, c. 137, forbidding the impounding of stock of nonresidents if their ownership was known was impliedly repealed by Act 1899, c. 137, and the impounding of hogs of a nonresident was legal. City of Clarendon v. Walker [Ark.] 80 S. W. 883. One is entitled to impound an animal which escapes into his enclosure on account of an adjoining owner's failure to maintain a line fence which he was bound to keep in repair. Walker v. Robertson [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 1183.

75. So held upon a refusal to release the cattle except on payment of a sum including an officer's fees, the service of a notice by an officer being unnecessary. McAllister v. Wrede [Neb.] 97 N. W. 318.

76. Ch. 19, St. 1894. Where one was tendered the amount of damage caused by cattle but refused it, he was held liable to account for the milk drawn from the cows. Fleetham v. Therres [Minn.] 100 N. W. 377. Providing the distrainer was wrongful. Id.

77. One had knowledge that cattle went in and out of his meadow at will. Just as the owner was moving away he destrained the cattle and set up a claim for damages for the entire period. Adair v. Curry [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 967.

78. Where one found a bull on his premises and locked him up, and notified the owner who removed him, he was not precluded from maintaining his action for damages under Code, § 2312. Burleigh v. Hines [Iowa] 99 N. W. 723.

79. But the opposite party has a right to be heard before the appointment [Comp. Laws 1897, § 10698]. Miller v. Hoffman [Mich.] 97 N. W. 759. Under Code, § 2317, providing for assessment of damages by township trustees for distrained trespassing stock, the fact that there are no trustees in the township where the cattle are distrained does not affect the right. 82. That the animal belongs to a nonresident of the municipality whose ordi-but there must be a strict compliance with the statutory procedure of sale,[83] to pass a good title;[84] that the owner was not negligent is immaterial.[85] A statute is unconstitutional which provides for a sale without judicial proceedings to determine the amount of damages and whether the animal was actually at large.[86]

§ 7. Regulations as to care, keeping and protection and health.[87]—In some states, stock law districts, to prevent cattle running at large therein, may be created upon the requisite vote of the people,[88] but upon such an election the statutory procedure must be strictly followed;[89] the courts will take judicial notice of the existence of such districts.[90] In Alabama the districts may not be charged for one year,[91] and in Mississippi the partial stock law does not include cattle.[92] A state may lawfully forbid nonresidents to allow their stock to run at large within its jurisdiction.[93] Driving sheep from one range to another is not within a statute regulating "herding" and "grazing."[94] Statutes may authorize the destruction of dogs not properly muzzled,[95] and for a failure to so protect the public the owners may be fined and imprisoned.[96] A municipality may forbid the keeping of hogs within the corporate limits during a certain period of the year,[97] but prosecution under such an ordinance must strictly comply with the statutory procedure.[98] A town by-law on the keeping of animals within the town limits is void where the regulation of such matters properly belongs to the board of health.[99] A prohibition of the keeping of a noisy dog or other animal about a stable or other premises does not apply to a horse.[1] In Texas one is liable to a criminal action who willfully drives cattle from their accustomed range.[2] Statutes prohibiting the docking of horses are constitutional[3] and a valid exercise of the police power.[4]

nance is violated is immaterial. Jeans v. Morrison, 99 Mo. App. 208, 73 S. W. 235.

83. Especially as to the publication or service of proper notice. Jeans v. Morrison, 99 Mo. App. 208, 73 S. W. 235. A petition alleging that petitioner had seized cattle which had entered a lot occupied by him as tenant does not authorize the sale of such cattle under Code Civ. Proc. § 3084, which authorizes sale only when cattle were being pastured on a public street or on private property bordering thereon, neither did the petition allege that the cattle were wrongfully on the lot. Burns v. Morrow, 42 Misc. 657, 87 N. Y. S. 719.

84. Defective description of the animal in the posted notice, and a sale one day later than the time set, are fatal irregularities. Ryall v. Smith, 138 Ala. 145, 34 So. 1009.

85. An owner may not be liable for penalties prescribed by a cattle ordinance unless he be guilty of some negligence, but a city of fourth class has charter power to impound regardless of negligence. Dorton v. Burks, 99 Mo. App. 165, 73 S. W. 239.

94. Rev. St. 1887, § 1210, forbids the herding of sheep or the permitting of them to graze within two miles of another's dwelling; defendant held not liable though the sheep occasionally ate grass and passed within two miles of a dwelling. Phipps v. Grover [Idaho] 75 P. 64.

95. The statute is not invalid in that it shields the real culprit—the owner. Incorporated Town of Sibley v. Lastrico [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1074.

96. An ordinance making it a misdemeanor to allow unmuzzled dogs to run at large, is valid. Incorporated Town of Sibley v. Lastrico [Iowa] 97 N. W. 1074.

97. An ordinance declaring that no hogs shall be permitted within the corporate limits between the first of April and the first of October is not so unreasonable that the courts will declare it void. Smith v. Collier, 118 Ga. 306, 45 S. E. 417.

98. Prosecution on an indictment was dismissed where the statute provided for the beginning of suit on complaint by the town treasurer. Com. v. Rawson, 183 Mass. 491, 67 N. E. 605.

99. By-law forbidding the keeping of more than five swine, and their offspring of less than four months, within the town limits [Rev. Laws, c. 75, § 91]. Com. v. Rawson, 183 Mass. 491, 67 N. E. 605.

1. A conviction for the keeping of horses which stamped throughout the night was set aside on the ground that the expression "other animal" used after "dog" must be

Interstate transportation; quarantine; inspection.[5]—A state may establish general quarantine lines, or segregate infected animals,[6] and congress, under its power to regulate commerce, may make it a misdemeanor to drive or transport infected animals from one state to another.[7] Animals affected with a dangerous and contagious disease may be destroyed by the public authorities[8] without first granting the owner the privilege of a hearing,[9] but in the absence of actual proof of the infection or an exposure thereto, the officers so acting are liable.[10] The selection of a sheep dip by an inspector is a ministerial act and he is liable for damages due to his negligence.[11] In regulations as to infected cattle there must be no unjust discrimination.[12] The authorization of stringent regulations in case of an epidemic does not warrant their enforcement because the disease prevails to a greater or less extent in all the states and territories.[13]

§ 8. Marks and brands.[14]—A person or company can have but one recorded brand under the statutes of Texas,[15] and an unrecorded brand is not proof of ownership but may be shown, as any other flesh mark, for the purpose of identification.[16] That a lessor consented to the branding of sheep with the lessee's mark is not conclusive as to passing of title.[17] Under some statutes animals may be allowed to roam at large if properly marked.[18]

§ 9. Cruelty to animals.[19]—In New Jersey a justice has no jurisdiction of a prosecution for cruelty to animals.[20]

Id.

4. Laws 1899, p. 175, prohibiting the use of unregistered docked horses, though it permits the use of registered docked horses. Bland v. People [Colo.] 76 P. 359. 21. NOTE. Form of instrument required to create an annuity: An annuity for life not issuing out of nor being a charge upon lands is a mere chose in action for the payment of money and need not be made in the form of a deed nor under seal. Cahill v. Maryland L. Ins. Co., 90 Md. 333, 45 A. 180, 47 L. R. A. 614.

able in advance,[22] nor apportionable in respect of time,[23] the cases of infants and feme coverts, when necessary for maintenance, form exceptions to this rule.[24] Where a fixed sum is given "annually," the word "annually" denotes the amount to be paid and the time of payment.[25] An annuity "issuing and payable out of" certain real estate is a charge upon the land;[26] under a power given to enforce such an annuity, the land may be sold to pay arrearages,[27] and it is not allowable to deduct taxes proportionally from such an annuity.[28] In construing an annuity, the intention of the parties governs.[29]

22. Words of an antenuptial agreement creating an annuity "the same to take effect from and after the death of her husband" describe the time when the annuity begins to run. Mower v. Sanford [Conn.] 57 A. 119.

23. Antenuptial agreement, widow died in middle of year, no apportionment allowed. Mower v. Sanford [Conn.] 57 A. 119.

NOTE. Apportionment of annuities: At common law, an annuity was not apportionable. Bayard's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 279; Nehls v. Sauer, 119 Iowa, 440, 93 N. W. 346; Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 379; Nading v. Elliott, 137 Ind. 261, 36 N. E. 695; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Metc. [Mass.] 194, 39 Am. Dec. 716; Dexter v. Phillips, 121 Mass. 178, 23 Am. Rep. 261; Manning v. Randolph, 4 N. J. Law, 144; In re Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., 37 N. J. Eq. 26; Irving v. Rankine, 13 Hun [N. Y.] 147, affirmed in 79 N. Y. 636; Kearney v. Cruikshank, 117 N. Y. 95, 22 N. E. 580, reversing 46 Hun [N. Y.] 219; Stewart v. Swaim, 13 Phila. 185; Dubbs v. Watson, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 115; Moore v. Dunn, 92 N. C. 63; Griswold v. Griswold, 4 Bradf. [N. Y.] 216; Chase v. Darby, 110 Mich. 314, 68 N. W. 159, 64 Am. St. Rep. 347. Even though a day certain is fixed for payment. Ausman v. Montgomery, 5 U. C. C. P. 364; Pearly v. Smith, 3 Atk. 260; Wilson v. Harman, 2 Ves. Sr. 672. Though it has been held that where a testator fixes a day for payment, the annuity is apportionable so as to determine the amount to be paid between the date of his death and the date of the first payment. Waring v. Purcell, 1 Hill, Eq. [S. C.] 193. There are exceptions to this rule that annuities are not apportionable, equity allowing an apportionment where the annuity is for the maintenance of minor children or the widow or a divorced wife. Clapp v. Astor, 3 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 379; Hay v. Palmer, 2 P. Wms. 501; Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. 330; Ex parte Rutledge, Harp. Eq. [S. C.] 65, 14 Am. Dec. 696; Howell v. Hanforth, 2 W. Bl. 1016; Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99; Kearney v. Cruikshank, 117 N. Y. 95, 22 N. E. 580, reversing 46 Hun, 219. But an annuity given by a will to a married woman for her sole and separate use, and not to be subject in any manner to the control of her husband is not apportionable. Anderson v. Dwyer, 1 Schoales & L. 301. The imperfect right which a child has upon a parent for support, especially where this has been recognized by marriage settlement, has induced the courts to trench upon the general rule by what is now an established exception. Fisher v. Fisher, 5 Clark [Pa.] 178. It has also been held that an annuity to an eleemosynary establishment was apportionable. Attorney-General v. Smythies, 16 Beav. 385. There is another exception, viz.: That where an annuity is created or accepted in lieu or bar of dower, the annuity will be apportioned; the reason being that, as the thing for the surrender of which the annuity is given and received would obtain and remain during the life of the person entitled to it, so should the annuity which takes the place of it. Gheen v. Osborn, 17 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 171; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Harris, 20 R. I. 160, 37 A. 701; In re Cushing's Will, 58 Vt. 393, 5 A. 186; Blight v. Blight, 51 Pa. 420; In re Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., 37 N. J. Eq. 26 (the last four cases are cited with disapproval in Mower v. Sanford [Conn.] 57 A. 119, 63 L. R. A. 625); Sweigart v. Frey, 8 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 299. There are some authorities seemingly contra to this rule. Tracy v. Strong, 2 Conn. 659; Mower v. Sanford [Conn.] 57 A. 119, 63 L. R. A. 625; Queen v. Lords Com'rs of the Treasury, 16 Q. B. 357. The fact that a valuable consideration is paid for the annuity does not alter the rule that it is not apportionable. Heizer v. Heizer, 71 Ind. 526, 36 Am. Rep. 202; Chase v. Darby, 110 Mich. 314, 68 N. W. 159, 64 Am. St. Rep. 347.

The allowance of interest on the amount due for arrearages of an annuity is discretionary, where the annuity if for a widow's maintenance and prompt payment is necessary to her comfortable support (Beeson v. Elliot, 1 Del. Ch. 368; Addams v. Heffernan, 9 Watts [Pa.] 529); or in lieu of dower (Elliot v. Beeson, 1 Har. [Del.] 106; Houston v. Jamison's Adm'r, 4 Har. [Del.] 330; Seitzinger's Estate, 170 Pa. 531, 32 A. 1101). In some cases no interest has been allowed, see Isenhart v. Brown, 2 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 347; Philips v. Williams, 5 Grat. [Va.] 259.—From note to Henry v. Henderson, 81 Miss. 743, 33 So. 960, 63 L. R. A. 616.

28. Angle v. Angle [N. J. Eq.] 57 A. 425. The annuity being of a fixed sum and not the entire income of the land, the rule that a life tenant must keep down taxes was held not to apply.

29. Annuity by son to father, and after his death to unmarried sister or sisters. Cohen v. Cohen, 141 Cal. 534, 75 P. 100.

Where a testator bequeaths in trust a sufficient sum to which at 6 per cent. will pay the annuities given, the suit which at 6 per cent. will produce the amount needed is the amount to be set aside. In re Sproule's Estate, 42 Misc. 448, 87 N. Y. S. 432; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 F. 971.

§ 1. The right in general. A. Constitution and statutes.[30]—Appeal is a strict statutory right,[31] which does not exist unless expressly provided for[32] and may, after being given, be withdrawn by the statute, unless in so doing some provision of the organic law of the state is violated.[33]

The method prescribed by the legislature is exclusive and mandatory,[34] and neither court nor judge may modify it except as authorized by the statute.[35]

The right to an appeal is not a "vested" right, and therefore a statute cutting off the right will, if not otherwise provided, retroact on pending cases,[36] and the legislature has power to give to an appeal by one party the effect of vacating the judgment as to all parties, and transferring the cause for trial de novo.[37]

The right of appeal is favored by the courts.[38]

(§ 1) B. Waiver, election, transfer or extinguishment.[39]—The right may be waived,[40] but taking a second appeal in a case does not of itself constitute an abandonment of the first one.[41]

A statute providing that the decision of a judge on certain questions shall be "final" merely means that it shall be considered a final order in a special proceeding and does not deprive the defeated party of his right of appeal granted elsewhere in the statutes [Consolidated School Laws; Laws 1894, pp. 1280-1282, c. 556, tit. 15, art. 1, §§ 4-7; Code Civ. Defendant present in court and not objecting to discontinuance without costs. Krakower v. Tauber, 85 N. Y. S. 339.

The right to have an intermediate ruling reviewed on appeal from final judgment is

Obedience to an order waives the right to a review;[42] but the intention must be clear,[43] as where the judgment is voluntarily paid,[44] and payment accepted;[45] but obedience to a writ of mandamus does not waive the right to appeal,[46] and payment by a garnishee without protest from the principal defendant will not waive the principal's right to appeal.[47]

Recognition of the validity of a judgment estops the party from asserting its invalidity,[48] and acceptance of benefits thereunder has a like effect;[49] but acceptance of that admitted to be due does not waive an appeal involving only the right to a further recovery.[50]

Enforcement of a judgment affirms it,[51] but a stipulation that the property in controversy shall be sold and the proceeds deposited with the clerk to await determination of the cause is not effectual as a release of errors or waiver of the right of appeal,[52] and enforcement of a foreclosure judgment does not waive the right to appeal.[53]

Agreement to the terms of a judgment waives an appeal,[54] and a judgment entered on stipulation of the parties is not appealable.[55]

(§ 1) C. Pendency of a former appeal.[56]—An appellant may voluntarily dismiss and take a second appeal within the time limited,[57] and in Washington the taking of a second appeal within the time allowed is permissible, though the first is not dismissed, the dismissal following by operation of law.[58] Where the first appeal taken is allowed to lapse for failure to file bond within the statutory period, a second appeal may be taken within the statutory period and properly perfected.[59]

The filing of a motion, which is overruled, to vacate a decree and dismiss the action in which it is rendered, because of the findings of fact in the same action, does not waive an appeal from the decree. Anderson v. Hendrickson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 844. See 1 Curr. L. 86, n. 14.

writ of error will not be allowed, though the party asking it filed the certificate and asks to have it disregarded in case the writ is allowed.[60]

A pro-forma affirmance on appeal bars a subsequent writ of error,[61] and where a defendant appellee, whose interest was identical with plaintiff's, assigned no cross errors, but fully argued a point not assigned by plaintiff appellant, he could not, on an adverse decision, bring error to review such question.[62]

An appeal from the district to the superior court in Connecticut, for trial de novo, vacates the judgment of the district court, and a concurrent appeal to the court of errors at the suit of the other party will not lie.[63]

§ 2. The remedy for obtaining review. A. Appeal or error.[64]—The supreme court of the United States has no jurisdiction on error in criminal cases.[65] Federal courts review decrees by appeal, judgments by error,[66] and this is the general rule;[67] but errors of law will be reviewed only on petition in error in Nebraska, whether the cause be legal or equitable, and appeal will not reach such matters.[68] Error and not appeal is the remedy in Colorado of one who has recovered judgment, but is dissatisfied with the relief granted,[69] but in Idaho, any party aggrieved may appeal.[70] Where error is dismissed for failure to serve certain parties, an application to have the case considered as on appeal may be granted on terms.[71]

In Louisiana, where the state for reasons of public policy desires to attack a judgment on a note entered on waiver of citation and confession, its remedy is by action of nullity and injunction and not by suspensive appeal.[72]

Error will not review a judgment not final.[73]

The remedy for reviewing probate decrees is discussed in the note.[74]

In New York, the report of a referee appointed under an order entered on a remittitur from the court of appeals, to assess damages to which that court by its final judgment held the plaintiff was entitled, can be reviewed only in compliance with the rule and not on a case and exceptions;[75] but the report of a referee appointed in proceedings for the dissolution of a corporation, not only to take proof and report with his opinion as to claims for costs, expenses and counsel fees, but to admit and reject creditor's claims, can only be reviewed on exceptions.[76]

83. Steel v. Clinton Circuit Judge [Mich.] 95 N. W. 993. Rev. Pol. Code, § 850, does not provide a remedy by appeal from a refusal of the county board to consider a petition.

habeas corpus,[86] though the latter is proper where the court below totally lacks jurisdiction.[87]

Certiorari is the proper remedy where the ruling of a justice complained of involves only a question of law,[88] and lies to review a proceeding adjudging a party guilty of a criminal contempt,[89] and to review a decree of the circuit court of appeals revising proceedings of an inferior court of bankruptcy, under section 24b of the bankruptcy law;[90] but since the circuit court of appeals has power to issue the writ of certiorari only in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, it cannot by that writ review an unappealable order.[91]

Mandamus is proper to require the commissioner of patents to compel a primary examiner to forward an appeal from his decision to the board;[92] but cannot be used to perform the office of an appeal or writ of error, and does not lie to review a final judgment or decree sustaining a plea to the jurisdiction, even where no appeal or writ of error is given by law.[93]

A motion to stay proceedings will not be granted where its only effect would be to allow a party to again present a claim that has been denied, and he has an adequate remedy for any injustice that has been done him by appeal,[94] and execution will not be stayed as to a particular class of property after expiration of the term at which the judgment was rendered, where the limitation of the judgment was considered at the trial, and decided adversely to defendant.[95]

In Wisconsin a motion made in the ordinary way is the proper proceeding to bring up to circuit court for review an order of a court commissioner discharging a prisoner on habeas corpus.[96] Orders to sell property claimed as exempt,[97] and orders distributing the proceeds of sales of real estate by trustees,[98] are reviewable only by petition to revise under section 24b of the bankruptcy act; but an order dismissing an application for a discharge is reviewable by appeal under section 25a and not by petition.[99]

One who has been denied leave to intervene cannot appeal the main case,[9] but a party entitled to intervene and appeal need not apply for intervention before appealing,[10] and an intervenor may appeal from a decree awarding certain costs against himself if the decree is otherwise appealable.[11] Parties entitled to an amendment substituting them as plaintiffs in a pending case are entitled to be heard on appeal from the judgment dismissing the complaint therein, after overruling their motion.[12] A motion to intervene cannot be granted after appeal.[13]

The surety in an execution can appeal from a judgment discharging property levied on from the lien of the execution.[14]

Any person interested and aggrieved may appeal from a proceeding not inter partes, especially in probate and administration orders,[15] but executors and administrators can appeal from probate decrees only when agrieved.[16] Devisees,[17] and executors are aggrieved by an order setting aside property as homestead for use of widow pending administration.[18]

A taxpayer or citizen who shows no special injury cannot appeal in highway proceedings.[19] Election officers are concluded by the decision, on mandamus, to compel them to reconvene and count a rejected ballot, and cannot appeal therefrom.[20] The city is entitled to appeal in Illinois in special assessment cases, though the local improvement act does not so provide.[21] If in default a party cannot appeal,[22] unless expressly authorized by statute,[23] though if fundamentally wrong a judgment may be reversed despite defendant's default,[24] and in New York provision is expressly made for appeals by defendants on the ground of nonservice of process.[25] Nonresident defendants who appeared solely for the purpose of attacking the jurisdiction have no standing to appeal from the judgment,[26] and where the defendant filed no pleading below except a motion to strike the petition from the files, and it stated a cause of action, there is no issue for review.[27] Error will lie from an order allowing a claim against a decedent's estate, though no answer or objections were filed against the claim, and the order was made in the absence of the administrator.[28] One who appears, files an answer and participates in the trial by cross-examining witnesses, may appeal, though he introduced no evidence.[29] On appeal by plaintiff from a judgment sustaining a demurrer for want of facts filed by one defendant, a co-defendant constructively served, and not previously appearing, can prosecute a cross-appeal from the default judgment against him.[30] A third person who by reason of laches is not entitled to have a judgment vacated may be admitted to prosecute a pending appeal therefrom.[31]

A party in contempt will not be heard.[32]

A foreign corporation defendant may maintain appeal or error, though it has not complied with the statute necessary to entitle it to maintain suits in the courts of a state.[33]

ties who may be affected by a reversal should be brought in in order to give jurisdiction.[35] All joint defendants must be brought in, or else a severance of interest in the judgment must appear on the record,[36] and where the judgment rejects a moneyed demand against several defendants in solido, all defendants are necessary parties, and failure to cite one of them is fatal.[37] Appellant, however, is not required to look beyond the record and cite persons not parties to the judgment appealed from,[38] nor is it necessary to join parties whose interests will not be affected,[39] and a defendant not served and not appearing below need not be made a party.[40] Co-parties declining to join may be made defendants in error,[41] and an appeal may be by one of several co-parties in behalf of others; but in such case, rights of co-appellants wholly unconnected from those of appellant will not be reviewable.[42]

An appeal by a mortgagee in condemnation proceedings is not effectual as to the owner against whom no summons has been issued; the condemnation plaintiff may, however, bring him in if necessary to the protection of its rights.[43]

On appeal in mandamus against a board of county commissioners, the new incumbents of the office are not necessarily served and made parties.[44]

An appeal by a partnership must be in the name of the firm in Georgia.[49]

In Indiana, vacation appeals must bring in all parties,[50] and all defendants against whom judgment has been rendered made co-appellants,[51] but the statute does not require it, in term time appeals.[52]

A joint notice of appeal by plaintiff and defendants, whose interests are identical, is proper in Iowa,[53] and if co-parties refuse to join after notice they cannot afterwards appeal in their own right.[54]

Where defendant appeals, in Washington, notice must be given to the sureties on the cost bond which plaintiff furnished below,[55] but plaintiff on appeal from a judgment against himself alone need not notify his sureties,[56] though an appeal from a judgment against sureties on a cost bond will be dismissed, where the sureties on the bond have not joined in the appeal, nor been served with notice of appeal,[57] notwithstanding the judgment was without jurisdiction and absolutely void.[58]

Successors in title and interest and substituted parties.[59]—On the death of the appellee the personal representative should be substituted, where if appellant succeed, the judgment would be personal against appellee,[60] and where a foreclosure defendant has transferred his interest and died pending appeal, his grantee may properly be substituted;[61] but the assignee of a judgment is not entitled to notice of appeal.[62] Substitution, however, is permissive and addressed to the discretion of the court,[63] and application should be first made to the trial court, but where first made on appeal a like order should be made below.[64] Where a judgment debtor desires to appeal after the death of the creditor, no revival in the name of the administrator is necessary, but on a showing of the facts in the petition in error, appellate process will issue against the administrator.[65] Though defendant may prosecute a writ of error after plaintiff's death it should designate the defendants therein by name and not merely as "the heirs" of plaintiff.[66] In Massachusetts, where, pending an appeal from a decree of the probate court granting a separation, the wife dies leaving a will, the appeal should not be dismissed, but the superior court should retain the cause so far as necessary to finally dispose of all the questions involved in the appeal.[67] Though the question to be litigated

Adjudications founded on the discretion[76] or wisdom of the trial court are not reviewable.[77]

"Merits," "principles of the cause," "orders preventing judgment," etc.[78] An order denying a motion to dismiss an action for want of jurisdiction does not affect a substantial right and prevent judgment,[79] but an order striking the cause on the ground that the case has been settled is appealable as preventing judgment;[80] and an order compelling plaintiff to separate his causes of action and allege which acts were negligent and which wanton involves the merits.[81] An order striking out a stipulation does not involve the merits and affect the judgment where the result would have been the same if the stipulation had been let stand.[82] An order involving the mode of trial for determining the issues raised by the pleadings is appealable,[83] but a motion mistakenly marked "filed," by the clerk, before leave granted to file it is not filed, and an order striking it merely purges the record of a mistake, and is therefore not appealable.[84] An order involving a matter of law which affects a substantial right is appealable.[85] In Virginia, any decree requiring the possession of property to be changed is appealable.[86] an order making a party defendant.[90] Rulings on motions to amend pleadings do not ordinarily affect any substantial right, nor have appealable finality.[91]

(§ 4B) 3. Dismissals, nonsuits, orders to strike cause, etc.[92]—If a dismissal determines the action it is appealable,[93] as is an involuntary nonsuit,[94] but a voluntary nonsuit,[95] or a dismissal on request or by consent of plaintiff is not appealable,[96] and an entry in the clerk's register noting the filing of an agreement to dismiss is not a dismissal from which an appeal can be taken.[97]

(§ 4B) 4. Orders directing or arresting judgment, or on motion for new trial, are not reviewable at common law,[98] or generally,[99] because lying in discretion,[1] but are by statute in some states.[2] And where a motion for a new trial is based upon alleged errors of law, no discretion is exercised in the decision, and it is reviewable.[3] Motions for new trial not being authorized in cases tried to the court in North Dakota, an appeal from an order denying such motion will not lie.[4] No appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial of issues involved in the matter of a claim for compensation and expenses of a receivership, since no such motion lies.[5]

(§ 4B) 5. Final judgment or decree.[6]—The adjudication must be finally determinative of the controversy, and must substantially affect the rights of the parties.[7] It must be so far final that, if affirmed, nothing remains for the trial may be made after filing complaint has the effect of discontinuing the action and is appealable. Wagnitz v. Ritter, 31 Wash. 343. 71 P. 1035.

Though in Nebraska, a judgment of the district court on appeal from an inferior tribunal, which is complete so far as the district court is concerned, and leaves nothing further to be done in that court is final, though the cause is remanded for further proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 582] (Ribble v. Furmin [Neb.] 94 N. W. 967), and in Ohio, on the overruling of a motion for judgment on special findings inconsistent with the general verdict, and the affirmance thereof by the circuit court, though the case is reversed on another point and sent back for a new trial, the defendant may bring error in the supreme court from the affirmance, and need not wait until after retrial in the lower court (Davis v. Turner [Ohio] 68 N. E. 819).

murrer to an application for a writ of quo warranto is not final,[14] but a judgment overruling a demurrer to a response to a motion for a rule on a master to compel him to pay over trust fund is.[15] Refusal of judgment non obstante veredicto is not final,[16] nor is judgment for defendant on demurrer to plaintiff's evidence without determination of a cross action,[17] but an appeal lies from the refusal of a judgment by default.[18] A judgment entered without sufficient service of process may be appealed from without first taking a rule to strike it off.[19] An appeal lies at the instance of the parties cast, or either of them, from a judgment not rendered by consent, decreeing the partition of property of which one of said parties, not a co-owner, is usufructuary.[20] Though a motion to correct for judicial error a judgment rendered after overruling of demurrer cannot be entertained, a writ of error may be allowed.[21]

It must finally dispose of the case as to all parties.[22]

The question of finality as to the federal courts is not determined by the state practice, but is governed by Federal statutes and decisions.[23]

(§ 4B) 6. Orders and adjudications in interlocutory or provisional, extraordinary, and special proceedings.[24]—Interlocutory or provisional orders are not separately reviewable in the absence of legislation,[25] and no separate appeal will lie from an interlocutory order after final judgment.[26]

Statutes generally provide what intermediate orders may be reviewed,[27] and an enumeration of appealable orders excludes the reviewability of those not enumerated.[28] Interlocutory orders to be appealable in Louisiana must work an irreparable injury,[29] and in Mississippi appeals lie from interlocutory decrees "in order to settle the principles of the cause."[30] While in Tennessee, interlocutory orders cannot be reviewed or restrained on application except when they trench upon final relief, and also are of a nature to be actually enforced.[31] Refusing to vacate an order of arrest,[32] and refusing to set aside the service of summons,[33] are not separately reviewable. An order refusing to change the place of trial is not appealable.[34] Neither is an order denying a motion to resettle a previous order by in-serting therein that the motion was denied on a particular ground,[35] nor an interlocutory decree entered in the circuit court in execution of the mandate of the circuit court of appeals.[36] The reservation to a defeated party of the right to renew a motion which was denied is no ground for appeal by the successful party.[37] An appeal lies to the district court from an order of a United States commissioner denying a new trial in a Chinese exclusion case,[38] and from an order of the special term of the city court of New York, denying a motion to compel the acceptance of service of a notice of appeal.[39]

These orders must be final,[40] or affect a substantial right.[41]

An ex parte order appointing a receiver is appealable,[42] and an appeal lies from a judgment allowing his compensation and expenses.[43]

An order discharging an order to show cause for contempt in disobeying an order of court granted on final decree, is reviewable,[44] and proceedings to punish a witness for contempt in failing to give testimony for use in an action in another state constitute a special proceeding from which appeal will lie.[45] A judgment of the circuit court convicting defendant of contempt in an equity suit, being a judgment rendered in a criminal case separate and distinct from the equity suit, is reviewable by the circuit court of appeals on writ of error.[46]

Error lies in Wisconsin at the suit of either party to the decision of a commissioner in habeas corpus proceedings,[47] but no appeal on behalf of the state lies from an order of the probate judge in Alabama admitting a person charged with homicide to bail on habeas corpus, prior to indictment.[48]

An appeal lies from an order of reference and from an order denying a motion to vacate the order.[49]

Provisional orders for relief.[50]—Error will not lie from an order discharging an attachment when there is nothing in the record to show that any action was ever taken under the writ.[51] A rule made by a justice of the supreme court in vacation, discharging a rule to show cause why a writ of attachment issued out of the supreme court should not be quashed, cannot be reviewed as a motion made before a single justice.[52]

An order entered in the minutes granting an injunction is appealable,[53] but no appeal lies from an order of a judge intended as process to carry into effect an order granting an injunction.[54] Orders on motions to dissolve temporary injunctions are not appealable in Iowa,[55] Texas,[56] or Nebraska,[57] but in Louisiana, a judgment dissolving an injunction against acts of trespass on real property is appealable, whether interlocutory or not, the injury being irreparable.[58] The granting of a temporary restraining order is not reviewable after it has passed into a permanent injunction.[59] An order granting an injunction pendente lite,[60] or continuing a preliminary injunction, is appealable to the circuit court of appeals,[61] except in cases where that court would not have jurisdiction of an appeal from the final decree in the case.[62]

(§ 4B) 7. Orders after judgment[65] are not separately appealable in Colorado.[66] An order vacating[67] or refusing to vacate a judgment is appealable,[68] but an order opening[69] or refusing to open a default is not,[70] and defendant cannot appeal from an order opening a default against him on terms.[71] The refusal to vacate a judgment of dismissal for want of prosecution is not appealable,[72] neither is an order overruling a motion to set aside a pretended judgment of dismissal, which was in fact not a dismissal,[73] and an appeal does not lie from an order of the district court vacating a judgment which dismisses an appeal from the probate court;[74] but an order denying a motion to vacate the appointment of an administrator affects a substantial right and is appealable.[75]

An order denying a motion to correct a judgment is not separately appealable.[76]

An order discharging an order to show cause why defendant should not be punished for contempt in disobeying an order of court is a final one, affecting a substantial right, upon a summary application after judgment, and is appealable.[77] An interlocutory order designed to carry out a judgment previously rendered is ordinarily not appealable,[78] but an order overruling a motion to quash an execution is appealable under a statute allowing an appeal from a final order affecting a substantial right,[79] and where it is the only question at issue, an order recalling and quashing an execution is final and appealable.[80]

An order of the appellate term reversing on questions of law an order of the special term denying an application of the purchaser to be relieved from his purchase at a judicial sale, made after final judgment confirming the sale, is reviewable by the court of appeals.[81]

Orders relating to costs are reviewable on appeal from final judgment and not independently, costs being part of the judgment.[82]

An order refusing relief from an order denying settlement of a statement on motion for new trial, on the ground that the party seeking the settlement failed through surprise and excusable neglect, is appealable.[83]

Ohio, after final judgment in the court of common pleas, must be a civil action,[89] an action of which the common pleas has original jurisdiction, and one in which the right to demand a jury does not exist.[90] A judgment of a justice of the peace in forcible entry and detainer is not appealable in Nebraska, not being civil.[91]

(§ 4C) 2. Questions of law.[92]—No appeal lies in New Jersey from the district court upon questions of fact, but only for error in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of evidence.[93]

(§ 4C) 3. The existence of a constitutional question[94] authorizes an appeal direct to the supreme court, in Missouri,[95] and ultimately to the highest court of probably all the states and to the Federal supreme court.[96] A previous decision of the same question by the supreme court of Missouri will not deprive it of jurisdiction,[97] and the question being open at the time of transfer, the court will retain the cause and decide it, though an interim decision settles the question.[98] The constitutional question must have been raised below,[99] and decided against the constitutionality of the statute.[1] A case properly before the Federal supreme court on a constitutional ground on appeal from a Federal court stands for decision on all questions properly in the record, even though the constitutional question is decided adversely to appellant;[2] but in such case the court will not be astute to support its jurisdiction upon another ground, which it could not consider apart from the failing foundation, and which has nothing to commend it but the letter of the law.[3]

The construction merely, of a statute[4] or contract, is not constitutional,[5] and the question whether the bill lodged with the secretary of state is the bill passed by the legislature and the finding of the court thereon raises no constitutional question.[6] The mere finding of an issue as to which party shall pay the costs cannot raise a constitutional question,[7] and the decision of a court cannot be "a law impairing the obligation of a contract."[8] Where a street railway company acquired its rights and constructed a tunnel under a navigable river on condition that navigation should not be obstructed, mandamus to compel it to lower the tunnel does not involve the determination of the constitutional question as to taking of property without compensation and due process of law.[9]

(§ 4C) 4. Construction of statutes and public regulations[10] is of itself a ground in some states,[11] though the case be one within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.[12] The question, however, must have been raised below.[13] The fact that a national bank is organized under a law of the United States will not confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court of a writ of error to the circuit court of appeals, where no other jurisdictional fact exists, except diversity of citizenship.[14]

(§ 4C) 5. A jurisdictional question[15] authorizes an appeal direct to the Federal supreme court,[16] but it must have been decided adversely to the plaintiff.[17]

(§ 4C) 6. A federal question[18] confers jurisdiction by direct appeal on the supreme court of Missouri.[19]

(§ 4C) 7. Conflicting or overruling decisions.[20] A conflict between the Missouri courts of appeals,[21] or between one of them and the supreme court,[22] makes a case certifiable to the supreme court. Jurisdiction, however, does not depend upon the actual existence of a conflict, but upon the fact that one of the judges deems it to exist.[23] Where the court of appeals unanimously deem their decision to be in conflict with that of the supreme court they should not certify the case, but should set aside their ruling, and make one conformable to that of the supreme court.[24]

(§ 4C) 8. Revenue and tax cases,[25] are appealable directly to the supreme court in Illinois,[26] Missouri,[27] and Louisiana,[28] but a controversy between two school districts as to which of them is entitled to school tax money,[29] or a suit to restrain a county from entering into a contract with a private person to discover property omitted from the tax rolls, do not involve the revenue within the rule,[30] and in Louisiana, where the amount only, and not the validity of a tax, is in question, there is no jurisdiction.[31] In Kentucky, an action to recover personal property levied on to satisfy a tax may be appealed, irrespective of the amount in controversy.[32]

(§ 4C) 9. Cases involving freeholds and titles,[33] in most states, are appealable directly or ultimately to the highest court. The judgment to be rendered in the case must itself affect the title; that the title is the subject of collateral inquiry is not enough,[34] but when the ultimate object of an action is to unconditionally divest one party of title to realty and vest it in another, a freehold is involved.[35] Neither forcible entry proceedings,[36] suits for trespass, or to fix a boundary,[37] nor an action for damages because of prior conveyances of minerals from land concealed from plaintiff purchaser, involves title,[38] but a decree confirming title and charging it with a resulting trust does.[39] Actions concerning taxes on real estate,[40] and proceedings to foreclose liens on land, do not, as a rule, involve freeholds,[41] but where the defense of homestead is put in, the freehold is in issue;[42] and in Kentucky, where a lien upon land is asserted, the title is in controversy, and the court of appeals has jurisdiction regardless of the amount of the asserted lien.[43] Where the lien asserted is waived, no title is involved.[44] A suit to set aside a trust deed to land involves title in Missouri,[45] unless the ground be that the debt is paid.[46] Since surplus money arising on a sale under a trust deed is treated as realty, a contest over the ownership thereof under conflicting liens is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the supreme court in Missouri.[47]

(§ 4C) 10. Validity of a franchise[48] confers jurisdiction on the highest court of most states regardless of the amount involved.[49] Denial of a mandamus on the sole ground that the franchise of the corporation applying for it has expired, involves a question of franchise, and gives the supreme court jurisdiction of an appeal therefrom,[50] but no franchise is involved in mandamus to compel a street railway company to lower its tunnel under a river.[51]

(§ 4C) 11. Probate and administration[52] orders are usually appealable,[53] and where there is an appeal from the judgment in a contest over the probate of a will, an appeal lies from an order denying the motion for a new trial.[54]

(§ 4C) 12. Bankruptcy matters.[55]—The disposition by the district court of a fund surrendered by a mortgagee to a trustee in bankruptcy, subject to the mortgagee's lien, is reviewable on matter of law in the circuit court of appeals on petition therefor,[56] and an order denying the trustee's motion to expunge a claim allowed, unless further preferences were surrendered, and directing a return of a preference previously surrendered is appealable.[57]

(§ 4C) 13. The jurisdictional amount,[58] as prescribed by statute or constitution, must be involved,[59] excluding costs[60] and interest,[61] except where interest is recoverable as a part of the damages, in which case it is a part of the "amount in controversy."[62] An appeal, however, will lie from a judgment in effect enforcing the judgment of the supreme court, though the amount in controversy is less than the jurisdictional amount, since an appellate court should interpret its own judgments,[63] and an appeal lies to the court of appeals, in Colorado, from a final judgment of a court of record in a civil case, regardless of the amount of the judgment.[64] The constitutional provision that the supreme court of appeals, in Virginia, may have jurisdiction in civil cases involving not less than $300 is not self executing.[65]

being looked to to determine the question, irrespective of the allegations of the pleadings,[67] and where the evidence plainly shows the matter involved to be worth more than the jurisdictional amount, jurisdiction is sustained, though there is no averment as to the amount involved in the pleadings.[68] The right, however, is fixed by the pleadings rather than by the amount of the final judgment,[69] though in Colorado, the amount of the judgment rather than the amount in controversy controls.[70] The existence, however, of the jurisdictional amount must in some manner appear,[71] and where sufficient damages are alleged to give the appellate court jurisdiction, the court cannot say that a portion of such allegations is merely colorable, and that no recovery thereon could be had.[72]

The amount claimed by a dismissed set-off, plus the plaintiff's recovery, determines the amount in controversy on defendant's appeal,[73] and the amount claimed and recovered, for a wrongful death, and not the statutory amount recoverable controls.[74] The jurisdictional amount is not involved by a dispute as to the right of a party to pay $1 poll tax in a particular manner,[75] and where on motion to correct the journal entry, provisions for interest and costs are taken from the judgment, proceedings in error therefrom involve only the amount of such provisions.[76]

Where the original complaint is for an amount in excess of the jurisdictional amount, an amendment, before trial, procured by defendant, withdrawing the excess, will not deprive the defendant of his right of appeal,[77] and failure to request the submission of the issue of defendant's counterclaim will not amount to an abandonment of it, and deprive the court of jurisdiction, where there is no averment that it was interposed fraudulently to give jurisdiction.[78]

In succession proceedings, in Louisiana, the value of the entire succession determines appealability,[79] but elsewhere, claims against an estate are separate, and appealability is determined by the amount of each;[80] though a decree against distributees for a debt of their decedent involves the whole amount of the debt, and the distributees may appeal, regardless of the amount decreed against each,[81]

E. 152), but a claim presented against the estate of a decedent is not controlled by the statement in claimant's affidavit for a continuance as to what an absent witness will testify (Hall v. Hale's Estate, 202 Ill. 326, 66 N. E. 1050). and an appeal by executors from a decree requiring them to pay out legacies involves the total amount to be paid out, rather than the amount of each legacy.[82] In a bill to enforce the liability of stockholders for corporate debts, the liability of each stockholder, and not the liability of all, determines the amount in controversy.[83] Where expenses and costs are taxed half to plaintiff and half to defendant, the amount in controversy so far as either party is concerned, is half the total amount taxed.[84]

In replevin the amount involved is the value of the property, though defendant appellant prayed judgment for costs only,[85] but a suit for the possession of personal property by the owner against a lien claimant, in which the owner is successful, involves on appeal only the amount of the lien claimant's claim.[86] In an action for a breach of warranty of an article, the damages alleged, and not the value of the article alleged, furnish the basis of recovery.[87] More than the $5,000 necessary to give the supreme court jurisdiction of an appeal from the court of appeals of the District of Columbia is involved, where the relief demanded is the conveyance of a strip of land of slight value, or in the alternative to have the contract rescinded and be repaid the $6,000 paid for the whole tract.[88]

(§ 4C) 14. Review of intermediate appeals.[89]—No appeal lies to the supreme court from a decision of a circuit court of appeals, rendered on a petition to revise, in matter of law, the proceedings of a district court in bankruptcy,[90] and an appeal to the supreme court lies from a decision of the circuit court of appeals allowing or rejecting a claim against a bankrupt estate, only on a certificate of a justice of the supreme court, or where the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000, and the question involved is one which might have been taken on appeal or error from the highest court of a state to the supreme court.[91]

No appeal lies to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in a case tried de novo in the supreme court on appeal from a justice of the peace.[92]

In Illinois, in actions ex contractu or ex delicto, if the damages sought are speculative in character and not capable of direct proof, and the damages are $1,000 or over, as shown by the judgment, an appeal lies to the supreme court from the appellate court without a certificate of error,[93] but where the damages are susceptible of direct proof and the judgment does not exceed $1,000, no appeal lies.[94] A suit to enjoin the collection of a judgment is not to recover money or chattels, and an appeal lies, though the judgment is less than $1,000, and no certificate of importance has been granted.[95]

An appeal lies in Indiana, from the appellate to the supreme court, only when the amount in controversy exceeds $6,000,[96] and actions within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace are appealable neither to the supreme nor the appellate court, in the absence of certain questions.[97]

Certiorari will not lie from the supreme court of Colorado to review a decision of the court of appeals, except in cases where the court is without jurisdiction or has ignored decisions of the supreme court.[98]

(§ 4C) 15. Federal review of state or territorial decisions[99] will lie if there is a Federal question, but it must be a real and meritorious and not a fictitious one.[1] The claim of Federal right must have been specially set up,[2] and denied in the state court,[3] or at all events, it must appear from the record, by clear and necessary intendment, that the Federal question was directly invoked so that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding it.[4] If the decision of the state court rests on an independent ground, one which does not necessarily include a determination of the Federal right claimed, or upon a ground broad enough to sustain it without deciding the Federal question raised, the supreme court has no jurisdiction to review the judgment of the state court.[5] But where a Federal question is fairly presented, the jurisdiction attaches, though the state court assumes to base its decision on a state question, where the decision as to whether there is a Federal question involves the merits,[6] or it is apparent that the state question was injected for the purpose of denying the Federal right.[7] A personal as distinguished from an official interest is necessary to enable a party to invoke the jurisdiction of the supreme court to review the judgment of a state court.[8] Illustrative cases showing Federal questions are collected below.[9]

The supreme court will review on writ of error a final decision of the supreme court of Porto Rico, where the value or sum in dispute exceeds $5,000 exclusive of costs; the circuit court of appeals act of 1891 not applying to such a case.[10]

The writ of error from the Federal supreme court properly runs to the court in which the judgment complained of was entered, the record remaining there and the judgment being entered on mandate from the highest court of the state.[11]

(§ 4) D. Dependent on the parties.[12]—An appeal lies to the supreme court from the circuit court of appeals where a foreign state is a party.[13] No appeal lies in behalf of the state from a judgment in favor of a petitioner for registration.[14]

(§ 4) E. Questions certifiable.[15]—Jurisdictional[16] and certain other questions of law are certifiable to the Federal supreme court by the circuit court of appeals,[17] and to the highest court of several of the states by inferior appellate courts. Questions of law only, and not cases, are certifiable,[18] and where questions of both form and substance are raised in the lower court, the mere matters of form should be first settled below, leaving to be certified only substantial questions of law.[19]

A case docketed in the supreme court of Wyoming before the statute limiting the class of questions certifiable took effect is properly before that court for determination,[20] and questions whether the constitutional procedure was followed by the legislature in adopting a law and whether its subject is properly expressed in its title are constitutional questions within that act.[21]

Abstract questions will not be answered,[22] i. e., if different questions in the case assume inconsistent facts,[23] nor will questions rendered immaterial by the answers to others be answered.[24]

§ 5. Courts of review and their jurisdiction.[25]—Appellate tribunals derive their jurisdiction from the law, and consent of parties will not confer it;[26] whence an appeal from a court that was without jurisdiction confers none,[27] but where the court of first instance has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but makes a jurisdictional error in its proceedings, an appeal will confer jurisdiction.[28]

Jurisdiction generally extends to only so much of the case as involves the question conferring it;[29] but where one of the parties properly appeals to the court having jurisdiction as to his appeal, a cross appeal must also be taken to that court regardless of jurisdiction as to that appeal.[30]

Various questions respecting the jurisdiction of the courts of several states and territories are discussed in the note.[31]

In Federal courts,[32] the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals is final in all cases where the jurisdiction of the circuit court depends entirely on diversity of citizenship,[33] but where the pleadings state a case arising under the constitution or a law of the United States, error will lie in the supreme court, though the averments are not sustained.[34] The constitutional question must be really and substantially involved when tested by the rules of good pleading,[35] but where so involved, the plaintiff is of right entitled to the decision of the supreme court, the requisite amount being involved.[36] The construction as distinguished from the constitutionality of an act of congress is not a constitutional question,[37] but a decision involving the validity of a rule of the patent office draws in question "an authority exercised under the United States," giving the supreme court jurisdiction.[38] Where the jurisdiction of the Federal court depends entirely on the fact that a constitutional question is in issue, the appeal lies not to the circuit court of appeals, but direct to the supreme court,[39] and an order relating wholly to the jurisdiction of the circuit court is appealable direct to the supreme court.[40] The jurisdictional question need not be one of exclusively Federal nature, but may be one which is common to all courts.[41] The Federal supreme court does not consider itself bound as to a question of jurisdiction, because it may have exercised jurisdiction in a case where the question might have been raised, but passed sub silentio.[42] The determination of the question whether a corporation is engaged principally in mercantile and manufacturing pursuits so as to be within the bankruptcy act is within the jurisdiction of the district court, and an appeal therefrom lies to the circuit court of appeals rather than to the supreme court.[43]

§ 6. Bringing up the cause. A. General nature and mode of practice.[44]—Unlike error, appeal is a continuation of the suit below, and is governed as to its procedure by the law in force at the time the suit was begun,[45] and the right of appeal being statutory, the requirements of the statute governing and regulating it must be strictly complied with.[46]

during the term specified in the notice is not jurisdictional,[50] though failure to perfect within the time limited by statute is.[51]

The West Virginia statute of 1901 shortening the time to appeal from a decree did not retroact on decrees previously rendered,[52] and the 30 day period prescribed by the act of 1903 in Washington, as applied to judgments previously entered, began to run on the day the act took effect, and not on the day the judgment was rendered.[53]

An appeal is "taken" when notice of intention to appeal is served.[54] And proceedings in error are deemed commenced at the date of voluntary appearance when no summons in error is issued.[55]

Under the express provision of the code in California an exception to the decision or verdict, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment.[56]

The date of the decree or judgment, as shown by the record, marks the time when limitations on the right of appeal begin to run,[57] and the recital in the

Limitations begin to run against the right to appeal from a probate order from the date of its entry. Death of contestant and lack of some one to represent him are immaterial. In re Turner's Estate, 139 Cal. 85, 72 P. 718. The running of the time for appeals from interlocutory orders is not postponed to the time record of the date of hearing and rendition of the judgment is conclusive.[58] An amended judgment is appealable within the statutory period after amendment,[59] and a motion for new trial,[60] or other review ordinarily suspends the time pending decision of the motion.[61]

Under a statute limiting the right of appeal to a certain period after service of notice of the entry of the order, the time begins to run only on service of the order,[62] and delivery of the original order to defendant's attorney, with the date of its filing marked thereon, is not sufficient.[63]

An appeal is premature if brought before a final determination is had, or if the judgment be incomplete,[64] though the other party has appealed,[65] but the judgment need not have been filed,[66] and the right of appeal is not held in abeyance by the successful party's having an improper judgment entered and making a motion to correct it.[67] In a creditors' suit to convene the creditors of an insolvent corporation, a creditor whose debt, or its lien, is by a decree disallowed, may appeal without awaiting further action of the court as to debts of other creditors.[68]

"Fast" or "accelerated procedure."[69]—An order dissolving, vacating, or modifying an interlocutory injunction and appointment of receiver is not reviewable by "fast" writ of error.[70]

the issuance and service of summons in error, by defendant's attorney after defendant's death, confers no jurisdiction.[91]

A nonresident defaulting defendant may be served by depositing the notice in the post office,[92] and an agreement that two causes pending on appeal from a justice be tried together is an appearance in both and waives notice of appeal.[93]

Formal service on the clerk of the trial court is not necessary, mere filing in his office being sufficient.[94] Filing may be at any time after service and within the time limited for taking an appeal,[95] and that an interval elapses after service before filing is immaterial.[96]

An appeal from the probate to the superior court in Connecticut is properly made returnable to the next return day or the next but one,[97] and an appeal to the supreme court of errors next to be holden at a certain place sufficiently states the time of holding court, terms being regulated by law.[98]

(§ 6) E. Application for leave to appeal, petition in error, assignments, and statements of appeal.[99]—The filing of an assignment of errors before allowance of the appeal is indispensable in the circuit court of appeals.[1] In Nebraska, a petition in error is indispensable to secure a review of a judgment at law,[2] and judgment will not be reversed for errors of law occurring at the trial, unless it is alleged in the petition that the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.[3]

Where a statement of objections is not filed on entry of appeal from the probate to the supreme court in Massachusetts, no jurisdiction is acquired and the appeal may be dismissed on motion.[4]

The petition for a writ of error is usually required to state the errors relied on,[5] and review confined to the errors assigned;[6] but a review of the entire case under the statute of North Dakota will not be denied because the demand therefor contains unnecessary language which may be rejected as surplusage.[7]

An interest entitling appellant to appeal must be alleged in his motion, if it do not appear on the record.[8]

Failure of the assignments of error to specify what court the appeal is taken to is not jurisdictional, the appeal in fact being docketed in the only court having original appellate jurisdiction.[9]

(§ 6) F. Allocatur, order for appeal, certificate.[11]—Application for leave to appeal from an order will be denied where not timely,[12] and appeal will be disallowed for unexcused delay in filing transcript.[13]

Federal practice.[14]—A formal order allowing an appeal is not essential, it being sufficient if the record shows that an appeal was prayed and in fact allowed.[15]

(§ 6) G. Bonds, security, payment of costs; necessity.[16]—Statutes as to filing of undertakings on appeal must be strictly complied with.[17] Administrators[18] and public representatives are usually exempted from giving bond,[19] but an heir is not.[20] On appeal in habeas corpus, the bond required in civil actions must be given,[21] but a special proceeding to contest a local option election in Texas may be appealed without bond.[22]

Intervening or substituted parties appellant cannot prosecute the appeal under the bond given by the original appellant,[23] and where the time for filing bond after notice of appeal, and also the time for giving notice of appeal, have expired, a motion will not be granted to substitute another as plaintiff and appellant and fix a time within which bond may be filed.[24]

The bond should be executed by appellant,[25] but he need not sign the bond in an election case in Kentucky.[26]

An indorsement on the back of the writ of error is a sufficient bond.[27]

The statute of 1903, in Washington, prescribing that the appeal bond shall be served and filed with the notice of appeal, applies to all appeals taken after the act took effect, though from judgments previously rendered.[28]

The certificate of the giving of security is not defective because denominating it a "recognizance" instead of a "bond,"[29] and a certificate omitting to state that the undertaking on appeal was "properly" filed, but containing recitals from which it can be seen that it was so filed, is sufficient.[30]

Affidavit of poverty[31] in lieu of a cost bond may be made by the party's attorney.[32]

Payment of costs.[33]—Under the code of New York, the payment of costs imposed by orders is not a prerequisite to appeal therefrom,[34] and a party entitled to a stay of proceedings for the nonpayment of costs waives the stay by receiving and retaining from the opposite party the notices of appeal, printed papers and notice of argument.[35] An appeal from an order is not stayed by failure of the appellant to pay costs adjudged against him on a previous order.[36]

The county judge, in Nebraska, has a right to the prepayment of his fees, but he may waive it,[37] and in Louisiana, on appeal by a tax collector in an action to collect a license, the clerk cannot refuse a transcript until his fees are paid.[38]

In Washington, an owner appealing from a judgment for the sale of lands for nonpayment of a tax must deposit the amount of the judgment and costs.[39]

A deposit in lieu of a bond must be preceded by an order of appeal.[40]

Diverse parties or orders appealed from.[41]—Where an appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial, a single undertaking referring to both is sufficient.[42]

Fixing, taking and approving.[43]—After an appeal has been allowed by the circuit, a judge of the court of appeals has no power to fix the amount of the appeal bond and take and approve the same.[44] In Texas, an appeal bond must be approved by the clerk, not the judge,[45] and a district judge cannot question a bond approved by the clerk, or entertain a motion to expunge the clerk's approval therefrom.[46] The judge a quo in Louisiana has jurisdiction to inquire into the solvency of sureties on an appeal bond, notwithstanding the appeal has been lodged in the supreme court, and if he finds them insolvent to dismiss the appeal.[47]

Sureties.[48]—A notary who is principal in an appeal bond can take the affidavits of the sureties thereon.[49] Failure of the sureties to justify within ten days renders the appeal a nullity in South Dakota.[50] Exceptions to the sufficiency of the sureties must be made in the lower court in Washington.[51]

The amount.[52]—The bond on appeal from an order quashing an execution need not be in double the amount of the judgment on which the execution issued.[53]

Terms and conditions.[54]—An error in the recital of the date of the judgment in the bond is not fatal if it be otherwise unmistakably identified,[55] and a bond purporting to be both an appeal and stay bond, for the proper sum, is sufficient as such, though only conditioned as a stay bond.[56] An undertaking is not bad for reciting that appellant "is about to appeal," where he in fact had appealed.[57]

Irregularities and defects.[58]—Defects in an unnecessary bond are immaterial,[59] and an ambiguous bond will be given the construction that will make it valid.[60] Clerical errors do not vitiate,[61] and a bond executed by a party binds him and is valid, though executed as joint principal by another not a party.[62]

Failure through mistake to give the required undertaking is not fatal in Oregon, and on a proper showing appellant will be permitted to file it after time;[63] but defects cannot be amended by filing a new bond after time.[64]

(§ 6) H. Entry below.[65]—Entry in the probate court of the order granting the appeal therefrom is necessary in Arkansas,[66] and where entry below is a statutory substitute for personal service, such entry is jurisdictional.[67]

§ 7. Transfer of jurisdiction, supersedeas and stay.[68]—The appeal must be perfected to transfer jurisdiction and suspend the operation of the judgment,[69] and an administrator, though entitled to appeal without filing an appeal bond, is not entitled to a supersedeas on account of a mere intention to appeal, except during the time necessary to get his appeal filed in the appellate court;[70] but upon filing and service of notice of appeal and filing of bond, jurisdiction is transferred to the supreme court, irrespective of whether the subsequent proceedings are such as to empower that court to review the questions raised.[71]

Supersedeas by operation of appeal or error.[72]—A mere appeal by a city operates as a supersedeas,[73] and in Connecticut, an appeal by one of several defendants, from the city to the superior court in a mortgage foreclosure, transfers the entire case and vacates the judgment.[74] A writ of error out of the supreme court of the United States, to review the judgment of the state court, will not so operate, unless served within the statutory time.[75] transfer of jurisdiction,[76] hence the trial court cannot entertain an application for a rehearing,[77] or to amend the judgment in a material matter thereafter,[78] and pending appeal from an interlocutory order, the case cannot be heard below on the merits,[79] but if the judgment rendered is void for want of jurisdiction, a motion to set it aside may be entertained, notwithstanding proceedings in error to reverse it are pending in the supreme court.[80] After appeal from a decree granting redemption from a tax deed, the district court may extend or change the time for redemption,[81] and an amended proof of claim against a bankrupt's estate may be filed in the bankruptcy court, after an appeal has been taken by the trustee to the circuit court of appeals, from a decree permitting proof as creditors.[82] In California the cause is removed only for the purpose, and to the extent of giving full and complete jurisdiction of such matters as are properly cognizable upon appeal,[83] and the right of the trial court to correct a clerical misprision on its record is not affected, especially where the correction affects no substantial right.[84] The district courts in Idaho retain jurisdiction in divorce cases to make orders directing payment of costs and necessary expenses, in perfecting and prosecuting the appeal, and the supreme court likewise has similar power.[85] In Florida, a statutory supersedeas, obtained by taking an appeal within 30 days, cannot be vacated by the supreme court on the ground that the appeal is frivolous.[86]

Execution on a judgment is stayed,[87] notwithstanding the writ of error was sued out improvidently,[88] but the validity of the judgment remains unchanged.[89] Hence a decree may be shown as a breach of the conditions of a trust deed, though error has been prosecuted from it and supersedeas granted.[90] An appeal from a nonappealable order does not stay further proceedings below,[91] and an appeal from that portion of a decree granting relief as prayed by a cross-bill impleading third parties does not affect the decree as to the relief prayed by the original bill.[92] An appeal from an order vacating a prior order does not have the effect of reviving the vacated order.[93] A restraining order of the court of civil appeals of Texas is effective only while the case is before that court, and is not operative pending the decision on a writ of error in the supreme court.[94]

Supersedeas by special order or allowance.[95]—A suspensive appeal is properly denied, where its effect would be to oust the sheriff from his custody of sequestrated property.[96] An associate justice of the supreme court has power to suspend the operation of a restraining order pending appeal therefrom, after return has been filed in that court,[97] but in the absence of a direction from the trial judge, the supreme court of California cannot issue a supersedeas staying proceedings on a judgment in unlawful detainer, pending an appeal from an order vacating an order for the satisfaction of the judgment.[98] Strangers to a suit are liable for damages caused by illegal writ of supersedeas issued by them.[99]

As to what matters.[1]—On giving bond a temporary injunction may be continued in force pending appeal,[2] and an order continuing the appointment of a receiver, first appointed ex parte, is in effect an order appointing a receiver, and so appealable and may be superseded.[3] Where a case involves a constitutional question,[4] or where the refusal of a stay will deprive the party appealing of the benefit of his appeal,[5] and he has been reasonably diligent, and no injury will be occasioned the appellee, the stay will be granted;[6] but supersedeas will not be granted to an unappealable order,[7] nor to a decree that grants to plaintiff in error all the relief justified by his pleadings,[8] nor where it would be ineffective.[9]

The appeal from a judgment dismissing an application for the administration of a succession should be devolutive,[10] as should an interlocutory order permitting a judicial sequestration to be set aside on bond, where not working irreparable injury.[11] An appeal from a judgment revoking an order appointing a tutor, and appointing a special tutor in his place, will be dismissed as a suspensive, and maintained as a devolutive appeal,[12] but a judgment removing a definitive syndic is appealable suspensively, and pending appeal the district court is without jurisdiction to convoke a meeting of creditors to select his successor.[13]

Procedure, order or writ, and its effect.[14]—Where supersedeas is not taken a judgment is a bar, though an appeal therefrom is pending,[15] and where a chancery appeal is taken, in Michigan, without filing a supersedeas bond, the appellee is entitled to have the papers returned to the circuit court for enrollment, after the statutory period has passed after rendition of the decree.[16]

Where the decree is severable a part may be superseded without the rest.[17]

Supersedeas can only be directed to a party to the action.[18]

A supersedeas does not annul the judgment, but merely stays future proceedings;[19] neither can it retroact. Its effect is to preserve the status in quo pending the appeal. It cannot undo what has already been done under the judgment,[20] and the giving of a supersedeas bond on appeal from an order discharging a receiver does not reinstate the receiver nor authorize the court to maintain possession of the property,[21] though an order of the supreme court staying proceedings under an order appointing a receiver requires the immediate return of the property to the person from whom it was taken.[22] Where defendant appeals with supersedeas, plaintiffs need not pay the purchase price into court as directed by a decree for specific performance, until after affirmance.[23] Where a supersedeas is granted on appeal from an order dissolving a temporary injunction, a violation of the injunction is a contempt of the appellate court.[24]

Supersedeas bonds.—No supersedeas will be granted even to prevent waste,[25] until a bond in the amount and terms determined by the court has been given,[26] and where an executor appealing from a decree directing payment of legacies gives the appeal bond, but not the supersedeas bond provided by statute, the legatees can enforce the decree as though no appeal had been taken.[27]

The filing of a supersedeas bond does not prevent ruling on the motion for new trial,[28] nor stay execution unless a petition in error has been filed in the appellate court.[29]

In Washington, on entering an appealable order the court, on request of the party obtaining the order, should fix the amount of the supersedeas bond required to stay the execution of it pending appeal,[30] and appeal need not be taken before application to fix such amount,[31] but where, as in California, the statute provides that a judgment shall be stayed by appeal only when a bond in amount fixed by the judge is filed, a party is not entitled to an order fixing the amount until he has appealed.[32] Where a tenant against whom ejectment has been brought is entitled to a suspensive appeal, the trial judge may fix the amount of the bond.[33] If the trial court refuse the remedy is by mandamus.[34]

The conditions of the bond must follow the statute,[35] and a bond not conditioned as required is not sufficient to prevent the enforcement of the judgment.[36] In Nebraska the amount and conditions of a supersedeas bond, in a case where no money judgment is awarded, are discretionary with the trial court,[37] and if he fail to fix the conditions, application should be made for a further order.[38]

In Washington the bond, if intended to operate both as an appeal bond and a supersedeas, must be for twice the amount of the judgment plus $200,[39] and on appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate an order for the payment of money, supersedeas to the order for payment will be granted only on filing bond for double the amount named in the order.[40] On appeal from an order appointing a receiver, a bond conditioned to pay only such damages as the court might award on affirmance of the order is not sufficient, either to supersede the receiver or effect a stay.[41]

(§ 9) B. What is part of record proper; necessity of bill of exceptions or its equivalent.[69]—The record proper, which the appellate court can consider without its being authenticated by a bill of exceptions, comprehends pleadings and amendments thereto,[70] including demurrers,[71] motions in arrest of judgment,[72] and the statutory writ in mandamus in Indiana.[73] Documents are not part of the record,[74] unless shown in the transcript or submitted by order of court in accordance with the rule.[75] A recital in a proffered judgment which the judge refused to sign is not a part of the record.[76] A map attached to the record, but not appearing to have been introduced below or identified as having been there used, will not be considered.[77] Findings of fact and conclusions of law not made part of the record by journal entry or otherwise cannot be considered on error.[78] A statement in a journal entry, "no evidence except the files and records in the case being introduced," constitutes no part of the journal entry, and must be disregarded on appeal.[79] Where a cross complaint is introduced as evidence by plaintiff, and it is copied into the record as such, he cannot on appeal complain that it is not in the record.[80] The statement on motion for a new trial is no part of the judgment roll in Montana,[81] and on appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment, the judgment roll is no part of the record proper, and can be made of record only by including it in a bill of exceptions.[82] Where questions of fact as well as of law are involved, a statement of facts is necessary in Washington.[83]

A mere direction to the clerk to include all the evidence will not suffice.[87] A bill of exceptions is the usual procedure for bringing matters into the record. Where the bill of exceptions or statement is stricken from the record or cannot be considered, the case is left on the appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone,[88] and a judgment conforming to and supported by the pleadings will be affirmed.[89] Where the statute allows proceedings to be made of record by order, its provisions must be strictly complied with.[90] In Montana, errors arising from irregularities in the proceedings of the court, or abuse of discretion, must be preserved by motion for new trial and brought into the record by affidavit.[91] The matters which are not part of the record, but must be brought in by bill of exceptions or its equivalent, include errors occurring at the trial generally,[92] and exceptions thereto,[93] refusal to "sanction" petition for certiorari,[94] dismissal by a state court of a petition for removal to the Federal court.[95] A special appearance combined with a motion to quash the summons, together with the ruling thereon,[96] amendments to pleadings offered and disallowed,[97] an answer rejected on motion to set aside default and permit its filing,[99] bills of particulars,[99] interrogatories to the adverse party,[1] the evidence,[2] evidence and matters outside the judgment,[3] affidavits,[4] moon a motion for a new trial and on motion in arrest of judgment may be brought up by separate bills, though the better practice is to bring all matters up by one bill.[24] A single bill of exceptions will not suffice to review different cases, though tried together by stipulation,[25] and a single cross bill will not suffice to bring up errors in favor of plaintiff in error in two cases separately appealed which were tried together below.[26] Plaintiff, by cross bill of exceptions, cannot complain of a judgment in favor of a successful defendant, the error proceedings being brought by a defendant who was cast in the court below.[27]

The general rule is that the bill must state the ground of objection,[28] and show that exceptions were taken to the rulings,[29] otherwise they will be disregarded on appeal;[30] but on objection that the copy filed did not show that exceptions were in fact taken, the court sent down to the circuit for the original bill.[31] A bill of exceptions to the exclusion of testimony must show the ground of exclusion,[32] and other grounds assigned will not be considered.[33] Where the statement or bill of exceptions fails to specify any particulars wherein the evidence fails to justify the verdict, the question whether it is excessive[34] or is supported by the evidence cannot be considered.[35] In order that the case may be reviewed on the merits, the bill of exceptions must show the motion for new trial, and the saving of proper exceptions.[36] Bills of exception, in Montana, unlike statements on motion for new trial, need not specify the particular errors of law on which the party relies.[37]

A paper referred to in the bill must be annexed or identified beyond doubt,[38] but failure to attach an exhibit referred to is not ground to strike where other questions are properly presented,[39] and wherever, in an election case, it is possible to describe a contested ballot so as to dispense with the necessity of producing, and inspection of the originals, this should be done.[40] Where a document has been

A bill will not be considered if not presented within the time limited by statute, or the course of practice of the court,[50] notwithstanding the death of the trial judge,[51] or his absence from the state,[52] or a practice in the court below of entering an order reciting their filing, when they are in fact not filed,[53] but there may be a nunc pro tunc order authorizing the filing of a bill,[54] if the appellant was diligent in the preparation of it,[55] and a Federal judge may, under extraordinary circumstances, allow a bill after the term, though there has been no extension;[56] likewise a judge sitting as a chancellor has discretion to allow exceptions to be filed nunc pro tunc, after expiration of the time limited.[57] The statute in 57. Hinnershitz v. United Traction Co., 206 Pa. 91, 55 A. 841.

Utah authorizes relief against failure through excusable neglect, mistake, inadvertence, or surprise, to serve in time and settle a bill.[58] Appellee by stipulation may waive his right to object that the bill was not filed in time,[59] and objections to the filing of a bill and to the extension of time therefor are waived by examination of the bill when tendered without objection.[60] A bill of exceptions signed at a term subsequent to that at which the trial was had, and during that at which a motion for new trial was heard and decided, is available only to bring up errors on the motion for new trial.[61] Where after reconvening pursuant to mandamus to settle and sign a bill of exceptions, the court, on refusal of plaintiff in error to amend his bill to show the truth, adjourns without day, it is without further power to allow and sign a bill.[62] Filing in the clerk's office is not a presentation to the judge.[63] The bill must be signed by plaintiff in error or his counsel as well as presented within the statutory period.[64]

It is presumed that the trial court acted regularly in settling the bill of exceptions,[65] and the affidavit of one attorney that the proposed bill of exceptions was not served on himself, his associate, or the party they represent, is insufficient to overcome the presumption of regularity of the trial court.[66] On being returned by the judge for correction a bill should be amended and retendered within a reasonable time, or it will be dismissed.[67] Where the defendant in error on being served with plaintiff's proposed bill retains it beyond the time allowed to prosecute error, proceedings may be begun on the return of the bill.[68] A bill allowed by the judge is not invalidated nor rendered incompetent, or incomplete, or defective, by failure on his part to pass upon proposed amendments; if the party proposing them desires to rely on them he should take proper steps to require a ruling thereon.[69] In Montana, where the appellant does not adopt the amendments proposed by the respondent, he must deliver the proposed statement and amendments to the judge for settlement within ten days,[70] and failing, the court on appeal will not consider the matters presented thereby.[71] In California, where the bill of exceptions is presented when the decision is made, the appellant can use it though the court does not actually settle it till a later date.[72] The Ohio act of Oct. 22, 1902, regulating the preparation and allowance of bills of exception applies only to judgments rendered after January 1, 1903.[73]

A bill filed within an extension allowed by the court is valid,[74] but the extension must be made before the time allowed has expired,[75] though in South Dakota, on good cause shown, the time may be extended after expiration of the original period.[76] Unauthorized extensions of time will not invalidate a subsequent extension regularly procured, unless prejudice to opposing party be shown,[77] and an extension of the time to the next term is not affected by an intervening special term.[78] A stipulation extending the time is valid, though filed in another division of the court than that before which the case was tried.[79] The rule authorizing the supreme court of the District of Columbia to prolong its term for the settlement of a bill is to be exercised only when invoked,[80] and cannot be exercised after the end of the term at which the judgment was entered.[81] Time allowed to make and serve a case, or settle a bill of exceptions, until a certain day, excludes that day.[82]

The bill must show that it was examined and approved by the judge as such,[83] within the time allowed by law,[84] and that the judge who signed it caused it to be filed in the cause.[85] The bill must be filed, in the court below,[86] after signature, and a filing before signature is insufficient,[87] and proper filing must appear on the record.[88]

Duty and enforcement.[89]—The court cannot refuse to settle a bill presented in proper time.[90] Where the trial justice, in Maine, disallows, or fails to sign and return the exceptions, the supreme judicial court, in a proper case, may allow them and grant a hearing.[91] Where it is the duty of the court to settle the bill, mandamus is the exclusive remedy for its enforcement,[92] but will not issue to compel the signing of a bill where the judge states that the bill proposed is not true, and that he has already signed a true one,[93] or where he refuses it as incomplete,[94] and the certification of a bill of exceptions to a judgment appearing to have been entered in exact compliance with the judgment of the supreme court will not be compelled.[95] The allowance of a bill after expiration of the statutory period, no extension having been obtained,[96] and no reasonable excuse for failure to procure an extension being shown, is discretionary,[97] and mandamus will not issue to compel a settlement, though refusal was on another ground.[98]

A statute authorizing bystanders to testify to the facts occurring at the trial, where the judge refuses to sign a proper bill, is not invalid as conferring judicial powers on them, since they do not by that act allow a bill of exceptions, but merely state the facts.[99] It must appear that the bill was presented to the judge and rejected by him,[1] and the affidavits must be filed within ten days from the filing of the bill.[2] The attorney of a party is not a bystander competent to make affidavit further than to show appellants' dissatisfaction with the statement made by the judge.[3] Where the judge amends a bill by interlineations and erasures, the affidavits of bystanders may show what the amendments are and what the truth is.[4]

Amendment and vacation.—A bill may be amended, but only from a matter of record.[5] It must appear on review that "good cause" was shown for an amendment to a bill of exceptions, made after the statutory period for amendment, or it will be stricken out on motion.[6] The supreme court cannot allow amendments to a bill of exceptions after it has been allowed, signed, and certified by the trial judge.[7]

Grounds for striking out a bill are shown below Where the striking of the bill of exceptions from the transcript would be practically a decision of the case against the appellant, he must have due notice of the motion and proofs in support thereof.[9]

The settled case or statement of facts.*[10]—The case must be settled by the judge who heard it,[11] notwithstanding his absence, holding court in another circuit,[12] or an agreement of counsel.[13] Where the statement is not filed during the time limited and no order appears extending the time, it will be stricken out, or not considered,[14] notwithstanding an agreement of parties that it might be filed later,[15] unless due diligence and a good excuse is shown.[16] The time, however, may be extended,[17] and the court is not limited to one extension,[18] but a statement filed in pursuance of an extension granted for more than the statutory period will not be considered.[19] That appellant was uncertain whether he could prosecute his appeal owing to lack of funds, will not excuse failure to move for an extension.[20] In California, the evidence as preserved in a statement made to be used on a motion for a new trial will be examined on appeal from the judgment, though the motion was never heard and the appeal was taken after the statutory period limited for bringing up the evidence.[21]

The case made need not be served on parties who did not appear at the trial.[22] Where appellee is not served with the case within the time limited by the rules, he is authorized to apply for an order declaring that appellant has waived his right to review other than presented by the judgment roll.[23] Where, on appeal by one defendant, the proposed case or statement is not served on another in whose favor a judgment was rendered, the appeal as to him only brings up the judgment roll.[24] Where defendants have filed exceptions to a referee's report, they are only entitled to serve a case where such exceptions are overruled, the report is confirmed, and the defendants appeal from the order of confirmation.[25] In Michigan, where the testimony in a chancery case is taken before a commissioner, appellant may have the case settled by the court, or the testimony transmitted by the register, but having elected, he must stand by his election.[26] Though a party moving for a new trial on the minutes has lost by lapse of time his right of appeal from the order denying the motion, he nevertheless has a right to have settled a statement of the case for use on appeal from the judgment, and is not limited to the use of such statements only as have been settled in the proceedings on motion for new trial.[27]

A judge cannot fix, in an adjournment order, a place outside the county, for settlement of a statement of facts except on consent of parties,[28] and where an order of adjournment is erroneous in that respect and the judge was without the county on the day named, a new notice fixing a proper place on a subsequent day is proper.[29]

Where a statement of facts has not been legally certified or approved as required by statute, it cannot be considered on appeal.[30]

A statement bearing merely the approval and signature of the trial judge will be presumed to have been made up by him in consequence of a disagreement of parties as authorized by statute.[31]

Matters relative to the contents of statements are discussed below.[32] The evidence and instructions need not be included when there is no exception involving them,[33] and no statement of the case on appeal is necessary, where the pleadings, verdict and judgment show the grounds of error.[34] The court properly declines to report evidence that presents no question of law.[35]

When the term of office of the trial judge expires before the time set for serving a case and suggesting amendments, no time being otherwise fixed within which it is to be settled, jurisdiction to settle the case is preserved, but only until the expiration of the time for suggesting amendments.[36]

Consent to the settlement of a statement before the statutory period for offering amendments has passed is binding and precludes subsequent motion for correction in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation.[37]

Certiorari will not lie to have a statement approved nunc pro tunc, where no effort was made to procure approval,[38] and certiorari will be denied where appellant has retained a counter case seasonably served until too late to have it settled.[39] Where no proceedings to settle a statement appear to have been taken, a paper purporting to be such statement will not be returned to the trial judge for the purpose of certification, but will be stricken.[40]

Motions to strike out a statement because not filed in time are addressed to the trial court.[41] A statement of facts procured by misrepresentation of appellant's counsel is properly stricken out on motion,[42] but a statement filed after time will not be stricken where it came into the judge's hands in time and be delayed action thereon because of disagreement of parties.[43]

Defendant may withdraw his petition for a new trial, but his action will not withdraw the transcript of evidence and rulings he has prepared, and plaintiff who has also petitioned without preparing a transcript will be permitted to use defendant's on paying its cost.[44]

(§ 9) E. Abstracts. Necessary contents.[45]—All matters relied on for reversal,[46] or which counsel wish to urge, must be abstracted.[47] The abstract of the record proper must show that a motion for new trial was filed,[48] that an appeal was taken,[49] and proper proceedings to preserve the evidence.[50] The notice of appeal need not be set out in full,[51] but the fact that it was served must be shown.[52] Exceptions must be shown,[53] and an abstract must comply with the rules of court.[54] Instructions must be numbered.[55] Review will not be made of matters insufficiently abstracted.[56] The report of a referee, containing his findings of fact, may be included, though the case is in equity and triable de novo.[57] A statement in the abstract that the title of the case as stated in the transcript and certificate is a clerical error will not entitle the transcript to consideration.[58] A printed abstract is necessary in Missouri, notwithstanding the appeal is taken in the long form and a full transcript is filed in the appellate court,[59] and the refiling of an abstract used in another case in which the pleadings were dissimilar and a different judgment rendered is not sufficient, notwithstanding a stipulation of counsel.[60]

Proceedings not to be stated in extenso.[61]—The substance only of the evidence should be set out,[62] and where the appeal is on a full record, the abstract need only contain a recital of the necessary facts.[63]

Supplemental or counter abstracts.[64]—Where appellees are not satisfied with appellant's abstract, they are entitled to file one supplying the omission,[65] and appellant's abstract if undenied by the appellee will be taken as a true statement of the contents of the record,[66] unless the record itself sets out a notice referred to in the abstract, in which case the appellee may challenge its sufficiency without an amended abstract.[67] An amended abstract by appellee must point out specifically the defect in appellant's abstract, or it will be taken as a fair statement of the record,[68] and a mere denial that translations of letters in a foreign language set out in appellant's abstract are correct will not put their correctness in issue.[69]

68. Shebek v. National Cracker Co., 120 Iowa, 414, 94 N. W. 930. An additional abstract denying the correctness of appellant's in a general way and printing evidence without reference to the original will be stricken. See v. Wabash R. Co. [Iowa] 99 N. W. 106.

69. Schneider v. Schneider [Iowa] 98 N. W. 159.

A denial and additional abstract may be stricken for delay in filing,[70] it presenting no jurisdictional fact.[71] Where an amended abstract filed by appellee supplies omissions in the original and affords assistance to the court, its cost will not be taxed to appellee on affirmance of the decree,[72] but the cost of printing an unnecessarily prolix amendment will be taxed to the party filing it,[73] and where in divorce appellant's abstract is imperfect, appellee should be allowed to file an additional one at appellant's expense, or if she be financially unable, appellant should be ruled to furnish a complete abstract or furnish her money with which to do so.[74] Where no motion to dismiss is made, appellant will be allowed to amend his abstract without terms by stating from what order the appeal is taken.[75] An appellee whose demurrer to appellant's pleading has been sustained cannot contradict statements of fact in the pleading demurred to, and an amended abstract attempting it will be stricken.[76]

An insufficient abstract is cured by filing a sufficient supplementary one,[77] and appellant's failure to furnish an abstract may be healed by respondent's printing one.[78] Failure to copy into the record an agreement to extend time for filing a bill of exceptions is cured by a statement in the abstract of both parties that it was filed.[79]

§ 10. Transmission of proceedings and evidence to reviewing court. A. Form and contents of transcript or return.[80]—The transcript should contain only such papers as are necessary to an understanding of the questions raised,[81] excluding their formal parts,[82] but an incomplete transcript made under direction of appellant's counsel will in the fourth circuit necessitate dismissal of the appeal.[83] Not, however, in the seventh circuit, nor in Nebraska, where the remedy is by suggesting diminution of the record.[84] It is not necessary that the praecipe for a transcript be included, but where less than the entire record is ordered, the writing specifying what is desired must be included.[85] The transcript must show the pleadings,[86] and in chancery appeals must include the testimony and an abstract thereof in narrative form will not be considered.[87]

The original files will not take the place of a transcript.[88]

The transcript should be paged and indexed.[89]

(§ 10) B. Certification and authentication.[90]—The transcript must be duly certified by the clerk,[91] under seal.[92] The bill of exceptions must appear in the transcript immediately following the recital of its filing.[93] In Indiana and Nebraska, it may appear in the original or by copy,[94] but unless embraced or copied as required by the statute, it will not be considered.[95] If not properly authenticated by the clerk of the district court, the bill is not properly in the record, and will not be examined.[96] Where the case is triable de novo on appeal, a transcript of evidence not properly entitled in the case cannot be considered.[97] The circuit court of appeals can act only upon a record that comes from the court below properly certified; it cannot make its own record by permitting the withdrawal and refiling of a record of a prior appeal.[98]

(§ 10) C. Transmission, filing, and printing.[99]—The appeal will be dismissed if the transcript is not filed within the time prescribed by law or rule of court,[1] though jurisdiction is not lost by failure to file in time,[2] especially where the duty lies upon the judge of the trial court;[3] but the circuit court of appeals can only acquire jurisdiction of a cause on error when the writ and record are returned to the next ensuing term of the court to which it is made returnable, unless sufficient cause is then shown why it is not so returned.[4]

Before an appeal founded upon a case prepared and settled can be heard in the appellate division, the judge trying the case should order the printed papers to be filed with the clerk of the appellate division.[5]

The clerk may properly refuse to print that portion of the record which embodies the evidence before the cost thereof is paid, it not being of service in deciding any question of law.[6] The number printed will be limited in a proper case.[7] As many copies of a necessary plat must be filed as there are copies of the printed record and briefs.[8]

Appellants in Louisiana have three judicial days after return day within which to file the transcript.[9] The time limited for filing a transcript in California is suspended by a motion for new trial.[10]

(§ 10) D. Amendment and corrections. In the reviewing court.[11]—A probable clerical error in the transcript cannot be corrected by the appellate court. Resort must be had to certiorari;[12] and in Nebraska, where the transcript is incomplete or incorrect in some particular, the appropriate remedy is to procure an additional or corrected transcript duly certified, not to move to strike it from the files.[13] Where the record on appeal in a bankruptcy case does not clearly set forth facts necessary to a determination of the questions involved, it will be remanded to the district court with directions to have the facts fully reported to it and to pass on the same.[14] Affidavits will not be received to supply omissions from the transcript of the record,[15] nor will the court try the correctness or completeness of the transcript on affidavits, nor require the clerk of the lower court to produce the original record.[16] The appellate court cannot try on affidavits the question whether the bill of exceptions was not in fact signed and filed out of time, the record showing differently.[17] The Texas court of civil appeals has power on affidavit to ascertain such matters of fact as may be necessary to the proper exercise of their jurisdiction,[18] but it cannot consider affidavits showing that a proposed statement of facts was submitted to respondent's counsel, who declined to agree thereto, and that the judge thereupon adopted the statement found in the record.[19] The record cannot be corrected upon oral representations of counsel,[20] nor will the case on appeal be amended to show an assertion of counsel of his view of the law applicable to the facts of the case.[21] Where the averments in an application to rectify, supported by affidavit, are not denied before argument, they will be taken as true, though the statutory period within which denial might be made has not elapsed.[22] An additional transcript will not be stricken where it supplies matters omitted from the original.[23] Where no diminution of the record is suggested certiorari will not issue.[24]

The record must be corrected upon the evidences alone furnished by the records of the court.[25]

sentations of counsel,[29] by recitals of the clerk not required by any statute or rule of practice,[30] or a certificate of the judge bearing date subsequent to the notice of appeal, and stipulation of counsel as to printing the transcript.[31] The statement of a jurisdictional fact is conclusive.[32] The judgment is the record, and controls as to what was decided.[33] A party is entitled to a true bill of exceptions, and if necessary, may have mandamus to compel its allowance, but a bill signed by the judge and accepted by the parties is conclusive of what occurred at the trial.[34] The recital of a deed in the answer must be accepted as correct as against its recital in plaintiff's abstract, it not having been introduced in evidence.[35] Where the record is contradictory as to when the court overruled a traverse to the return of service of the summons, it will be presumed to have been on the return day as shown prior to the making of a nunc pro tunc order.[36] But a party does not assent to the submission of an issue not proved, by presenting an instruction thereon after ineffectual objection.[37] An objection to the jurisdiction, though waived,[38] or not raised below, may be insisted on,[39] and a complainant, whose bill stating a legal cause of action is dismissed on the merits without a saving clause, is not estopped on appeal to deny the jurisdiction of the court below.[40] Appeal after trial on the merits does not waive one's plea to the jurisdiction which was decided adversely to him.[41] A party who objects to evidence and has it excluded cannot object that the judgment is unsupported for want of the evidence so excluded.[42] An admission by plaintiff's attorney on the trial that the complaint contained no allegation of actual damages does not conclude him on appeal, where the complaint does in fact contain such allegation.[43] The right to review a judgment granting insufficient relief is not waived by moving for the entry of the judgment after being denied a new trial.[44]

§ 11. Practice and proceedings in appellate court before hearing. A. Joint and several appeals; consolidation; severance.[45]—Two judgments, though rendered in suits consolidated and tried together below cannot be brought up on one writ of error.[46] Causes separately docketed after being improperly joined should be separately appealed.[47]

(§ 11) B. Original and cross proceedings.[48]—Cross proceedings instead of independent petition in error are necessary in some cases,[49] but a cross petition in error is treated as an independent proceeding, and the party complaining must take the preliminary steps giving him a right to assign error.[50]

(§ 11) C. Amendments of parties.[51]—Upon the death of plaintiff after submission, the cause is properly revived below, after filing the mandate of the court of appeals.[52] An appeal by an under tutor and minority members of a family meeting from the homologation of its proceedings is not abated by the death of the under tutor and the appointment of another, who concurs in the views of the tutor and the majority.[53]

(§ 11) D. Calendars; trial dockets; terms.[54]—Parties cannot by consent confer jurisdiction on the court to hear a case at a term prior to that to which the case is by law returnable.[55] An appeal, by permission, from an interlocutory judgment in New York does not go on the regular calendar, but may be noticed by either party for argument on the motion calendar at his convenience.[56] In North Carolina an appeal may be taken to the term in session when the case is tried.[57] An appeal from the probate to the superior court in Connecticut is properly made returnable to the next return day, or the next but one.[58]

(§ 11) E. Forming issues; pleading, assigning, and specifying error.[59] 1. In general.—The assignment of errors is appellant's pleading, tendering an issue of law. It is the foundation upon which he rests his right to require the court to review the errors of the trial court, and is essential, in order to invoke the appellate power of the court.[60] Generally errors not assigned will not be reviewed,[61] and assignments not appearing to have been filed below will not be considered;[62] but a jurisdictional, or other fundamental error of law appearing on the face of the record will be considered, though not assigned.[63] Assignments are necessary in actions at law,[64] but not in equity cases.[65]

Constitutionality of statutes cannot be presented by independent assignments, but only by assignments of error in not sustaining demurrers, overruling motions for new trials, etc.[66] An assignment that damages are excessive presents no question in an action on a contract.[67]

(§ 11E) 3. Cross errors.[77]—On appeal in equity, the appellee is not concluded as to any matter directly involved in the questions raised by the appellant,[78] but as to matters not necessarily involved, he cannot urge errors unless he has cross appealed,[79] or cross assigned errors, and sometimes only when he has appealed or brought error independently.[80] The right of appellees to assign cross errors is expressly given by statute in Illinois,[81] but co-parties as to whom the case is not appealed cannot assign.[82] Questions cannot be first raised by an assignment of cross errors.[83] A defaulted party will not be heard.[84] An appellee who insists that the findings and judgment be affirmed cannot deny the truth of a finding.[85] A cross assignment by a party not appealing as to another party also not appealing will not be considered,[86] and where the judgment on two consolidated actions is severable, and a party appeals from that portion against him, the other portion cannot be reviewed on a cross assignment of appellee who has not appealed.[87]

may be considered,[89] but generally speaking, errors must be specifically assigned,[90] and errors not so specified will not be considered.[91] Assignments must specifically indicate the error complained of,[92] especially in cases referred to auditors, where the records are generally long and complicated;[93] but the particular in which the decision is against law need not be specified.[94]

The ground of the objection must be stated,[95] but the rule that the errors relied on must be set out separately and particularly does not require that the reasons why appellant claims the decision is erroneous be set out.[96] General statements are insufficient.[97] Several assignments, held too general, are referred to in the note.[98]

Error must be positively averred,[99] and mere declaratory statements are insufficient.[1]

A general objection will not raise special matters.[2]

An assignment will be confined to the error to which it refers, and cannot be extended by the brief to include another exception not referred to therein.[3]

1. No statement that the court ruled erroneously, or reference to any ruling complained of. Goldstein v. Morgan [Iowa] 96 N. W. 897.

2. General assignment of insufficiency of complaint held insufficient to raise objection to ordinance pleaded therein. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 Ind. App. 597, 68 N. E. 923. See 1 Curr. L. 144, n. 24.

3. Word v. Kennon [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 334.

The objectionable part of the record must be indicated,[4] and it is an absolute necessity, in the Federal courts, that the rule be observed requiring errors to be assigned specifically, and to be pointed out in the brief by page in the record where they may be found.[5] The court will not search the record for grounds of objections purely technical, not specifically referred to by the assignments.[6]

Distinct errors may not be combined in one assignment,[7] one assignment lodged against several matters being insufficient if any of them are correct,[8] or if the ruling complained of did not extend to all of the matters alleged.[9] The same question should not be raised by different assignments.[10] Assignments submitted together, the questions raised by them being separate and indcpendent, and presented in one proposition will not be considered.[11]

In Texas the assignment must contain or be followed by a legal proposition,[12] and accompanied by a statement from the record.[13]

An assignment not signed by party or counsel is null and confers no jurisdiction.[14]

Joining in assignments.[15]—Appellants should not join in assignment if the ruling may be good as to one of them,[16] as where one only excepted below,[17] or one invited the action complained of;[18] nor should they join where the exception of each was several.[19] A joint assignment by three defendants to adverse rulings against one of them presents no question for review.[20] A joint exception taken by all appellants is not available in a separate assignment by one of them.[21] Where the demurrers and exceptions were both joint and several, an assignment by one defendant will raise the sufficiency of the complaint.[22] An assignment by one of two parties is not available to both jointly.[23] It is immaterial whether appellants are jointly interested in an assignment going to the absence of necessary parties, since the court will notice such a defect suo motu.[24]

Amendments and additional assignments.[25]—The court in its discretion may refuse to review errors not assigned, or may permit assignments to be incorporated by amendment.[26] A motion to amend an exception in the appellate court will be denied where the only purpose is to amplify it and make it clearer.[27]

Defects or errors in pleadings[28] will not be reviewed unless specially assigned, even in equitable actions,[29] and where error is not assigned, on the failure of the court to carry back a demurrer and sustain it to a pleading of the demurrant, it will not be considered on appeal.[30] A single assignment to the overruling of a demurrer to a pleading in several paragraphs presents only the sufficiency of the whole pleading;[31] but where a general exception is reserved to the overruling of a demurrer to a complaint in several counts, the assignment can be only to the pleading generally and not to the several counts.[32] Error in overruling a demurrer in the complaint is not raised by an assignment of error in overruling a motion for new trial in which one of the grounds is the sufficiency of the complaint.[33] An assignment of error in overruling a demurrer is not supported where no demurrer on that ground was filed.[34] An assignment specifically challenging the correctness of a ruling as to a part only of the grounds of a demurrer is insufficient to present a question for review.[35] Where defendant demurs to a complaint in two counts on the ground of improper joinder, and to each count on the ground of failure to state a cause of action, and his demurrer to the whole complaint and to one of the counts is overruled, and to the other count sustained, and he appeals, and only assigns as error the overruling of the demurrer to the whole complaint, his assignment cannot be sustained.[36]

Rulings on evidence.[37]—Error in the admission or exclusion of evidence must be specific and call the court's attention to the particular evidence improperly ruled upon.[38] What the evidence was which the court excluded should appear, at least in substance.[39] The particular evidence which is objectionable should be specified.[40] The names of the witnesses and the pages of the paper book where the testimony can be found must be stated,[41] but specific reference to the witness' name and the pages of the abstract do not indicate the error complained of, if various questions and numerous objections appear on those pages.[42] Where an assignment is based on the refusal of the court to permit a witness to testify to certain facts, but no question was asked calling for any such testimony, there is nothing before the court.[43] Where no errors are assigned to the rulings upon the admission of evidence, the competency of the witness being conceded, objections to the admission of evidence will not be considered.[44]

Instructions[45] complained of must be quoted in the assignment,[46] and the particular error specified,[47] and a general exception will be overruled if any distinct proposition embraced in the charge is correct.[48] The particulars in which a modification of a request was erroneous must be specified.[49] Exceptions must be stated separately.[50] Exceptions to a prayer as not supported by the evidence must specify in what particular the evidence is defective,[51] and exception to refusal of requests must point out the evidence requiring them.[52] A proposition under an assignment that a request if incorrect was sufficient to call the court's attention to the principle and require a charge thereon will not be considered in the absence of an assignment that the court should, in view of the request, have given a proper charge upon that subject.[53] Conflict in instructions will not be reviewed in the absence of an assignment complaining thereof,[54] and an assignment that the entire charge of the court was erroneous without pointing out specific errors is insufficient.[55] Objection to a portion of the charge not assigned as error will not be reviewed.[56]

Error in directing a verdict.[57]—An assignment that the court erred in directing a verdict is not too general,[58] and in such assignment the evidence need not be set out.[59] An assignment of error to a charge, directing a verdict for plaintiff, will raise the objection that owing to a variance recovery could not be had.[60] An assignment in general terms, that the court erred in granting a nonsuit, sufficiently presents the issue whether there was any evidence to sustain the case.[61]

Verdicts and findings of fact.[62]—The sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict will not be considered when there is no specification of the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient,[63] but a specification that a particular finding is unsupported is sufficient,[64] and a specification in the positive form instead of the negative is not for that reason bad if it clearly appears wherein the evidence was insufficient.[65] Specifications which merely state what the evidence shows and what it does not show,[66] or that "the verdict is against the law of the case," do not raise the question.[67] Findings of fact, not complained of by assignments of error as unsupported by the evidence, will be considered as correct.[68] An assignment that the court erred in refusing a motion for a new trial will support the contention that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, though a specific assignment of that point was expressly waived.[69] An assignment that the court erred in a certain finding will not be considered where the finding was amended and there is no assignment attacking the amended finding.[70] Excessiveness of damages awarded cannot be reviewed where it is not specified wherein they are excessive,[71] but in Texas, a verdict complained of as excessive will be reviewed, notwithstanding the assignment is general and multifarious.[72] In South Dakota, a specification that the evidence does not support the findings is sufficient.[73] be assigned as error in addition to the errors assigned in the motion itself.[75] An assignment in Oklahoma to the effect that the court erred in overruling the motion for new trial will present for review every alleged error embodied in the motion,[76] but it is otherwise in Nebraska and Iowa.[77]

Rulings by a lower court of appeal[78] should be assigned as error in "reversing" or "affirming" the judgment of the court below.[79] Such assignment will bring before the reviewing court all errors properly assigned in the lower court and not waived, and none other.[80] Error cannot be assigned on its opinion, but only on its judgment.[81]

(§ 11E) 5. Demurrers, pleas, and replication.[82]—If appellee or defendant desires to plead instead of joining in error, he must do it in apt time.[83] It not being the practice to demur to assignments or move to make them more specific, on a motion to dismiss for insufficiency, the assignments will be treated as though challenged for a deficiency therein.[84]

(§ 11) F. Briefs and arguments.[85]—Briefs must be filed within the time limited.[86] Where the action was tried below as an action at law, appellant should file the first brief.[87]

Leave to file briefs as amicus curiae will be granted in any case when justified by circumstances.[88]

A brief presented by one not licensed as a counselor will not be considered,[89] notwithstanding a stipulation to submit the case on briefs.[90] Questions not fairly raised by appellant's brief will not be passed upon,[91] unless fundamental,[92] and errors not insisted upon in the appellate court in Illinois will be considered waived on a further appeal to the supreme court.[83] A defect in the bill not urged by defendant will not be given effect, though obnoxious to general demurrer, and a general demurrer was interposed and overruled below.[94]

Appellee is not bound to contest the points raised on the appeal,[95] and appellee's failure to argue a point will not lead to reversal unless his neglect has been so flagrant as to demand it for the protection of the court,[96] though where no brief or argument is presented for appellee, the record will not be critically examined, and will be presumed to be properly represented in appellant's brief.[97] Where appellee fails to point out any omissions or inaccuracies in appellant's statement of the record, it will be taken as fair.[98] Appellant cannot argue in his reply brief matters not argued in chief,[99] and appellant will not be permitted to seek a modification as to matters not challenged in his briefs, when defeated in his attempt to secure a reversal of the entire decree.[1]

Statutes and court rules prescribing the form and contents of briefs are insisted on.[2] A common requirement is a summary of so much of the record as presents the error relied on,[3] or a concise abstract of the case.[4] Under the supreme court rule of Indiana, one who omits to briefly recite the evidence cannot object to its sufficiency,[5] but a compliance with that portion of the rule will entitle appellant to the review, though he omits to comply with another clause.[6] Failure to set out the substance of a complaint and the demurrer thereto waives the error in overruling the demurrer,[7] and failure to set out the interrogatories and answers waives the error in denying appellant's motion for judgment thereon.[8] If the instructions complained of or a succinct statement thereof are not set out, they will not be considered,[9] and where the brief fails to state or refer to any evidence presenting the issue referred to in a request, its refusal will not be reviewed.[10] If errors be not presented and argued properly, in briefs,[11] or orally,[12] they will be deemed waived.[13] The requirement that the assignments relied upon be copied in the brief is not complied with by stating the substance of them.[14]

The argument must go into the error discursively.[15] The "points" or "errors" must be specified and authorities cited,[16] and counsel must point out specifically in what the error complained of consists,[17] unless the error be so glaring as to need no argument.[18] Reference must be made to the bill where the rulings complained of may be found.[19] Assignments must be based on the specific grounds alleged below and argued as made.[20]

A brief incorporating no assignments of error may be stricken on motion,[21] but where no injury has resulted to appellee, appellant's brief not complying with the rules,[22] or tardily filed, will not be stricken,[23] and a brief will not be stricken in Washington for failure to point out the errors where but one is relied on and which is clearly stated at the close of the statement of facts.[24] The brief of a defendant in an equity suit will not be stricken on motion of a co-defendant as in aid of complainant, since each defendant is entitled to pursue the course that to him seems best.[25] Power to strike out scandalous argument will not, except in extreme cases, be used in such a way as to defeat ultimate justice.[26]

Failure to file briefs may lead to dismissal,[27] affirmance, or continuance at appellee's election;[28] but the court will impose a penalty rather than dismiss the case, where brief and abstract are not properly prepared.[29] A disregard of some of the rules in preparing appellant's brief does not necessarily prevent consideration of a sufficient assignment therein that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence.[30]

preme court the brief and argument filed in the appellate court with a new cover and an addendum criticizing the opinion of the appellate court.[32]

(§ 11) G. Grounds for dismissing, quashing, or striking out appeal.[33]—An appeal which calls in question only discretionary orders of the trial court will be dismissed.[34] That appellants have paid for no part of the record, or that they insisted on the inclusion therein of immaterial matters, is no ground for dismissal, it having been printed and transmitted,[35] nor is the fact that immediately on filing, appellant caused the transcript to be forwarded to the supreme court, thereby depriving appellee of the use of it in preparing his brief, good ground, since on proper application he might have had it returned.[36] A motion to dismiss on the ground that there is an appeal from two orders in the same case will be denied where one of the orders is not appealable.[37] Where plaintiff in divorce dies pending appeal and defendant wife asserts no right to have the action revived, the appeal will be dismissed.[38] The withdrawal below of enough of plaintiff's claim to deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction will cause dismissal of his appeal, though the withdrawal was not entered of record.[39] Dismissal of an appeal from justice court on questions of law is properly denied where it was properly taken and the errors alleged are not jurisdictional.[40] Where a clerical misprision of parties for which an appeal is dismissed is corrected and the case re-appealed it will not be again dismissed on the ground that it is the same case previously dismissed.[41]

Nonexistence of any litigable right[42] is good cause, e. g. that the appeal is frivolous or futile,[43] or the judgment purely moot,[44] or the cause of action extinguished.[45]

A writ of error from the Federal supreme court to the highest court of a state will be dismissed, where the Federal question asserted to be contained in the record is manifestly lacking all color of merit.[46] Where it appears that all questions raised by appeal from the judgment have been decided on appeal from the overruling of the motion for new trial, the appeal will be dismissed,[47] and judgment in another case deciding all issues involved will cause dismissal,[48] but the determination of a Federal court that the question presented in a case before it was res judicata because of the decree of a state court does not necessitate a dismissal of an appeal from that state court decree.[49] Defendant in a suit for specific performance of a sale of personal property cannot cause dismissal by removing the property beyond the jurisdiction of the court.[50] An appeal in habeas corpus by one held under a warrant will be dismissed, where it appears that pending appeal he has been indicted and is held under a capias,[51] but dismissal will not be granted because the petitioner has been released on bail pending the appeal.[52] An appeal from an order overruling a motion to quash an execution will not be dismissed, on the ground that the sale has been set aside, where it does not appear that a resale may not be made.[53] Full payment of the fi. fa. founded on the judgment will not require dismissal, there being no supersedeas, since the defendant in case of reversal is entitled to recover his money back.[54] An appeal from an order quashing service of a summons will not be dismissed, on the ground that the suit has since been dismissed, where the order appealed from had the effect of disposing of the case.[55]

Where the main bill of exceptions is withdrawn,[56] or where judgment thereon is affirmed, the writ of error on the cross bill will be dismissed.[57]

Abandonment or failure of prosecution[58] is a constitutional and statutory ground of dismissal in Georgia.[59] Reinstatement after dismissal for such cause will not be made except for providential cause.[60] An appeal from justice court, being triable de novo, cannot be dismissed for nonappearance of defendant appellant, plaintiff being required to establish his cause of action in this as in any other case,[61] but where a defendant suffers default in the county court, and after appealing to the circuit files no answer, a dismissal of the appeal is proper and has the same effect as an affirmance.[62]

Failure of original abstract to contain judgment and show filing of bill of exceptions is not fatal, where transcript shows there was a judgment and amended abstract shows filing of bill. Trippensee v. Braun [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 674. Absence of an affidavit for appeal from the abstract will not cause dismissal where the record recites that one was filed. Holland v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 79 S. W. 508. Failure of an abstract otherwise good to show the day of the month, or the term when final judgment was rendered, is not ground for summary dismissal, those facts not being material to any question presented by the appeal. State v. Smith, 172 Mo. 446, 72 S. W. 692. That the abstract is not sufficiently full to authorize consideration of the assignments of error, is not ground for dismissal. Venner v. Denver Union Water Co. [Colo.] 75 P. 927.

Failure to specify in writing particular errors and file in prothonotary's office in supreme court. Croasdale v. Von Boyneburgk, 206 Pa. 15, 55 A. 770. Omission to page and index transcript. Smith v. Sutton [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 688. Failure of seals over tie of transcript to bear impression of seal of court. Dist. & county court Rule 90. Conner v. Downes [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 781. No papers authenticated. Wilson v. Hickman [Colo. App.] 73 P. 1088; Village of Sand Point v. Doyle [Idaho] 74 P. 861. Case made insufficiently authenticated. Oligschlager v. Grell [Okl.] 75 P. 1131. No statement on appeal, no bill of exceptions, no specification of error, and no statement embodying copies of court minutes. Griswold v. Bender [Nev.] 75 P. 161. Judgment for intervenor and appeal by plaintiff; omission of order striking out plaintiff's answer to complaint in intervention, order refusing plaintiff's motion for leave to file answer, and order granting intervenor's motion for judgment on pleadings. Doty v. McClusky, 28 Mont. 607, 73 P. 118. Matters already part of the archives of the court by reason of being included in the transcripts of prior appeals need not be printed. Succession of Bothick, 110 La. 109, 34 So. 163. Slight variation in names of parties in bill of exceptions will not cause dismissal. Fussell v. Dennard, 118 Ga. 270, 45 S. E. 247. Incomplete record in Federal court. Williams Bros. v. Savage [C. C. A.] 120 F. 497; Merriman v. Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 120 F. 240; Wolcott's Estate v. McCormick Harvesting Co. [Neb.] 96 N. W. 216. That the record is insufficient is not ground of dismissal. Merriman v. Chicago R. Co. [C. C. A.] 120 F. 240. Even though the certificate does not show that all the records filed in the action are returned, if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that such is the case, the appeal has in fact been entered and the statutory period has not elapsed since notice thereof.[73] Omission of that which it is an officer's duty to supply is not chargeable to appellant,[74] nor is an amendable defect,[75] nor errors of procedure not prejudicial to defendant in error,[76] good cause. Appellant's failure to file an abstract may be cured by respondent furnishing one,[77] and omissions from appellant's brief may be cured by his reply.[78]

Where no exceptions were taken to the decree on a bill in equity, the appeal will be quashed,[79] and where a statement on motion for new trial does not specify wherein the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment a motion to disregard it will be sustained and the appeal dismissed.[80] will not be dismissed. Jourdain v. Luchsinger [Minn.] 97 N. W. 740. No judgment roll. Stanton v. Lewis, 28 Mont. 287, 72 P. 658; Featherman v. Granite County, 28 Mont. 462, 72 P. 972; Beck v. Holland, 28 Mont. 460, 72 P. 972; Glavin v. Lane [Mont.] 74 P. 408; Denny v. Wright [Okl.] 74 P. 104. Failure to exhibit final judgment. Seaboard Air Line R. v. Bennett [Fla.] 36 So. 86; Kinman v. Scheuer [Mont.] 76 P. 690. Failure to include the judgment in the abstract will not cause dismissal where a certificate is duly filed, and the judgment itself is not challenged [Rev. St. 1899, § 813]. State v. Smith, 172 Mo. 618, 73 S. W. 134. Failure to insert in the "case" the fact that judgment has been entered is not ground for dismissal. Ballentine v. Hammond [S. C.] 46 S. E. 1000. Record must be by "copy"; originals of papers confer no jurisdiction. Cornell v. Matthews, 28 Mont. 457, 72 P. 975. No recital that record contains correct copies of papers and proceedings. First Nat. Bank v. Oxford Lake Line [Fla.] 34 So. 893. Where error is assigned on the overruling of a motion for new trial in which no point is made on the form of the verdict, and the bill of exceptions recites the substance of the verdict, the writ of error will not be dismissed because the verdict is not specified or transmitted as part of the record. Lenney v. Finley, 118 Ga. 427, 46 S. E. 317. The incorporation of material parts of the record proper in the bill of exceptions instead of bringing them up separately is not fatal. Daniel v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 119 Ga. 246, 46 S. E. 107. The unnecessary incorporation of formal parts of pleadings, writs, and other papers in the transcript on appeal, is not ground for dismissal, but no costs for unnecessary parts can be recovered. Greene v. Montana Brewing Co., 28 Mont. 380, 72 P. 751. Under statutes providing that appellant must bring up so much of the record as is necessary to present the questions to be decided, failure to bring up a complete transcript is not ground of a motion to dismiss, and if respondent feels that the record is incomplete he must himself complete it. Backhaus v. Buells, 43 Or. 558, 72 P. 976, 73 P. 342.

Failure of record to contain all evidence: Failure of the settled case to contain all the evidence is not ground for dismissal, but only goes to the power of the court to review the evidence. Sykes v. Beck [N. D.] 96 N. W. 844. The failure to transmit books and exhibits constituting part of the testimony taken before a circuit court commission in a chancery case is not ground for a dismissal of the appeal, the remedy being to have them submitted. Hughes v. Love [Mich.] 98 N. W. 977. Recital that no evidence except files and records was introduced does not supply place of bill of exceptions as files are no part of record. Campbell v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 66 Kan. 778, 71 P. 829. Dismissal on the ground that certain record evidence is not in the record will not be granted where it does not appear that it was offered below. In re Seim, 111 La. 554, 35 So. 744. Failure to bring up record in another case offered in evidence by appellees will not require dismissal, where clerk certifies it cannot be found and its loss is not attributable to appellant. Succession of Bothick, 110 La. 109, 34 So. 163. Where exhibits referred to in the record are fairly identifiable with papers already copied into the record, the proceeding in error will not be dismissed for failure to bring up all the evidence. Dendy v. First Nat. Bank, 67 Kan. 856, 71 P. 830, 74 P. 268. The trial judge's certificate cannot, by stating that all the evidence included, supply the lack of a statement to that effect in the record itself. Smith v. Alexander, 67 Kan. 862, 74 P. 240. A recital in the record at the close of the evidence that plaintiff and defendant having no further evidence, rested and the case was closed, is insufficient to show that all the evidence is contained in the case made. 79. Beatty v. Harris, 205 Pa. 377, 54 A. 1031.

80. Robson v. Colson [Idaho] 72 P. 951.

(§ 11) H. Raising and waiver of defects in appellate procedure; motions and pleas.[81]—Power to inquire into matters of fact affecting the jurisdiction belongs to the appellate courts.[82] Where the appellate court in an appeal from a decree of divorce orders appellant to pay appellee temporary alimony, which is paid, a subsequent dismissal of the appeal for want of jurisdiction will not reverse the order for alimony, so as to entitle appellant to recover it.[83] Formal objections,[84] but not jurisdictional ones,[85] are waived if not raised before submission on the merits.

A motion to dismiss that involves the merits of the case will be ignored,[86] or the consideration thereof postponed until final hearing,[87] and unless it is very evident that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground averred, the motion to dismiss will be deferred until the case is heard on the merits.[88] A motion to dismiss or affirm for failure to file briefs will not be considered where an examination of the record shows that the judgment should be affirmed.[89]

A motion to dismiss for defect of procedure is sometimes sustained, unless appellant within a certain time takes measures to cure it,[90] and application for permission to remedy defects after motion is sometimes granted.[91] An abandonment of the appeal from the particular order involving the defect avoids the motion.[92] The affidavit of the clerk below attached to the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error, setting forth reasons why no service of the bill of exceptions was had, will not be considered in answer to a motion to dismiss.[93] Where the question of defendant's right to bring his writ of error at the stage of the proceedings is doubtful, he will on dismissal be permitted to withdraw his record and present the bill to the trial court as exceptions pendente lite.[94]

Plaintiff in error is entitled as a matter of right to dismiss where no prejudice to defendant will result,[95] but dismissal will not be granted on motion of appellant

84. Objections must be raised before submission on the merits. Cincinnati, I. & W. R. Co. v. People, 205 Ill. 538, 69 N. E. 40. An objection that the appeal was taken by an infant in his own name is waived if not raised until after submission. Ramsey v. Keith's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 1302, 77 S. W. 693. Defect of parties on appeal is waived by argument on the merits. Schoenberger v. White, 75 Conn. 605, 54 A. 882. Any defect in appellant's procedure is waived by appellee by service of amendments to the case. Cooley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 40 Misc. 239, 81 N. Y. S. 692.

85. That appeal was brought where error only would lie is not waived by failure to object, since consent cannot confer jurisdiction. Boales v. Ferguson [Neb.] 96 N. W. 337.

86. Whether or not the court erred in entering its decree can be reviewed only on appeal therefrom and not on motion to dismiss the appeal. Bradley v. Eccles [C. C. A.] 126 F. 945. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that appellant is not a "party aggrieved" where a determination of that fact would amount to a determination of the merits. Appeal by special administrator from order settling his account. In re Heaton's Estate, 139 Cal. xix, 73 P. 185.

87. Where a cause is appealed from the county to the district and supreme courts successively, and the record shows that all the testimony before the county court on final hearing is before the supreme court, an objection that certain testimony lost was not supplied, or the irregularity waived, does not challenge the regularity of the appeal, and will not be entertained until hearing on the merits. 90. Failure of seals on transcript to bear impression of court seal. Conner v. Downes [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 781.

91. On motion to dismiss for irregularities in the bond, appellants will on application be given leave to amend and the motion denied. Venner v. Denver Union Water Co. [Colo.] 75 P. 927.

92. Objections to the hearing of an appeal from an order denying a new trial will not be considered where appellant in his reply brief abandons that appeal and relies wholly on his appeal from the judgment Martin v. De Ornelas, 139 Cal. 41, 72 P. 440.

95. Though he has assigned cross errors. Fahey v. Fahey [Colo.] 74 P. 884. An appeal from an interlocutory decree may be dismissed without prejudice on the appellant's motion, where undue prejudice to the after argument, if prejudicial to appellee and objected to by him.[96] The statutory provision in Colorado for dismissals without prejudice does not apply to irrigation cases.[97]

How presented.[98]—Mere irregularities of procedure must be objected to by motion, not on the final hearing.[99] Jurisdictional errors may be objected to at any time, even on rehearing,[1] and for such defects appearing on the record the court will dismiss suo motu.[2] Whether the abstract of appellant is sufficiently full to authorize consideration of the assignments of error cannot be raised by motion to dismiss.[3]

A motion[4] to dismiss must advise the court of the nature of the questions involved in the case.[5] Written motion may be waived.[6] It must be timely made[7] and notice given.[8] Service may be waived.[9] Mere departure from the prescribed method of bringing parties into court and applying for the dismissal of the appeal will be disregarded where a situation exists which warrants judicial action in the premises.[10] A motion to dismiss will be considered before final ruling in the case.[11]

Reinstatement.—A dismissed appeal may, on proper showing, be reinstated,[12] and reinstatement compelled by mandate from a higher court where dismissal was unadvised;[13] but motion will be denied where excessive delay is unexplained[14] or appellee will not result. Greene v. United Shoe Machinery Co. [C. C. A.] 124 F. 961. On request of circuit judge. Mossberg v. Nutter [C. C. A.] 124 F. 966. 14. Marion v. Barnwell [S. C.] 46 S. E. 536. Mandamus to reinstate an appeal applied for as soon as possible is not barred where a decision by reason of events has become valueless.[15] An appeal dismissed for want of prosecution will be reinstated on appellee's motion and affirmed pro forma where necessary to preserve his rights under the bond.[16]

§ 12. Hearing.[17]—Where the question which the court determines to be decisive of the case is not discussed in argument, the case will be referred back to counsel for written argument on specific questions.[18] The provision of the Virginia constitution requiring reargument before the full bench in cases of division of opinion refers only to constitutional questions.[19]

§ 13. Review. A. Mode of review; review proper or trial de novo.[20]—An equity appeal brings up the case for trial de novo,[21] on the evidence introduced below,[22] and evidence excluded[23] or errors of the court in excluding,[24] or admitting testimony, will not be considered, since the court will consider only competent evidence,[25] unless clearly shown to have influenced the finding.[26] Since an equity suit is triable de novo on appeal on the whole evidence, declarations of law given or refused afford no ground of reversal.[27] The ruling on a motion to strike a pleading from the files will not be considered.[28] Exceptions not affecting the merits are disregarded.[29] An appeal from an order of a United States commissioner excluding a Chinese alien is tried de novo, and not on the testimony taken before the commissioner.[30] An appeal from an order striking off a satisfaction of judgment is in legal effect nothing more than a common-law certiorari.[31] Appeals from probate courts are usually de novo.[32] Appeals from the county court in license cases in Kentucky are heard in the circuit on bills of exceptions on the same evidence used below, and not de novo.[33] The Missouri court of appeals hears proceedings for disbarment on appeal from the circuit as an appellate court only,[34] and in drainage proceedings the whole case, and not merely the assessment of damages and benefits, is appealable to the supreme court, through the circuit where the case is tried de novo.[35] In North Carolina, the court hears the case on the facts alleged in the pleadings, and plaintiffs are not restricted to the relief demanded in their prayer for judgment, but may have any additional or different relief not inconsistent with the facts alleged in their complaint.[36] On appeal from a justice's judgment refusing to open a default, the superior court may disregard the justice's findings of fact and hear the matter anew.[37]

(§ 13) B. Scope in general.[38]—In hard cases the court will be diligent to assure itself that nothing occurred at the trial to appellant's prejudice.[39] Where jurisdiction attaches only by reason of the validity of a tax being questioned, review will extend only so far as to decide that question.[40] Where after an application to file a bill of review was denied, the court considered and denied on the merits a second application to file an amended bill, an appeal from the latter order brought up the entire question of the right to file the bill on the merits.[41] The ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings cannot be reviewed if it appears that the judgment conforms to and is sustained by the pleadings.[42] An appeal from a final order in mandamus proceedings presents both the facts and the law for review.[43] The question of the measure of damages does not arise on appeal from sustaining demurrer to the evidence for failure to show a cause of action.[44] The grounds on which a divorce was granted may be considered in determining the propriety of the award of alimony, though the judgment granting the divorce cannot be reviewed, for lack of authority in the court.[45]

Moot questions[46] will not be decided.[47] Unnecessary points will not be considered.[48] Error in refusing to discharge a receiver or increase his bond may be waived by allowing his appointment to become conclusive through failure to appeal.[49]

Error reaches only matter of law.[50]—The function of the supreme court of Kansas is to review alleged errors, and it will not make findings of fact nor canvass the record for that purpose.[51] On appeals in cases tried to the court, errors of law occurring at the trial will not be reviewed for the correction thereof, but only in connection with a review of the facts on the merits.[52]

Particular courts of appeal.[53]—Where a constitutional question is involved, an appeal from the circuit to the supreme court of the United States opens up the whole case and the circuit judge cannot narrow the authority of the supreme court by a certificate relating only to the jurisdiction.[54] The appellate division of the supreme court of New York will pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the same as any other question.[55] In Missouri, in actions at law, the supreme court will not weigh the evidence, but merely determine whether any substantial evidence supports the verdict and judgment.[56] The court of appeals will not consider questions in the case beyond its jurisdiction.[57] The circuit court considers only questions of law on appeal in proceedings to assess damages for taking land for a highway.[58] In New Hampshire, in a case transferred in equity from the superior to the supreme court, the supreme court will not determine the facts, however strong the case may be, though the evidence is all reported.[59] The circuit court in Kentucky, on appeal in a will case, cannot determine whether certain devices are void for uncertainty.[60]

Review as dependent on parties appealing.[61]—A party not appealing from an order denying him relief will be presumed satisfied with it,[62] and he can obtain no relief on the appeal of other parties, except so far as the relief granted appellants may incidentally affect his rights.[63] Where both parties demand affirmative relief and the court dismisses the action, defendant cannot complain of the failure to grant him his relief unless he appeals.[64] Where a decree grants relief as to one matter and denies it as to the other, and plaintiff appeals only as to the denial, defendant cannot have the remainder of the decree reviewed without appealing.[65]

port of a demurrer,[69] and grounds for new trial, will be deemed abandoned where not argued or discussed in briefs.[70] Where several grounds relied on in support of a motion for a new trial sustained generally are not argued, affirmance must follow.[71] An instruction favorable to appellant, on which no cross error is assigned by appellee, will be considered the law of the case.[72]

Procedure de novo.[73]—On appeal from final orders, judgments, and decrees of the probate courts, the trial is generally de novo,[74] but the parties are not entitled to a jury trial.[75] On appeal from the county to the district court, in Texas, the cause stands on the docket for trial as any other,[76] but jurisdiction in probate cases extends only to such questions as are within the jurisdiction of the court below.[77] On appeal from the county court, the superior court, in Georgia, may hear and sustain a demurrer previously overruled below.[78] On appeal from a judgment of the municipal court, in New York its validity will be determined according to the facts, though there was no motion to dismiss the complaint.[79] Where the superior court on appeal from an order of a justice refusing to open a default hears the motion de novo and makes findings of fact, the findings of the justice cannot be considered on further appeal.[80] The reversal of a justice's judgment on questions of law only reopens the case for trial in the district court, though the justice's judgment was a dismissal of the case,[81] but a reversal on error for lack of jurisdiction below is final.[82] In several states on appeal to the circuit or district court from the county or other inferior court, the parties on trial de novo, must confine themselves to substantially the same issues as those upon which the case was submitted to the court below,[83] but the rule applies to the substance only, and not the form of the pleadings by which such issues are raised.[84] Hence an amendment may be allowed.[85]

though there is evidence in the record to support them,[92] and the general rule is that a theory of a case, or an assumption of fact adopted by a trial court with the acquiescence of the parties, will be followed by an appellate court to which the cause is taken.[93] The rule is particularly applicable where a party who has procured a decree on one theory seeks a modification of it on appeal on another theory.[94] On appeal from the municipal court in a case where the pleadings were oral, the issues will be determined from the evidence rather than the complaint.[95] Where a complaint is tested by demurrer it cannot be aided by other parts of the record on appeal.[96] Where the contract sued upon is void upon its face, if plaintiff relies upon any ulterior facts relieving it of its apparent invalidity he must plead them in traversable form, otherwise no presumption will be indulged in favor of its validity.[97]

Other grounds for sustaining a judgment than those presented below will not be considered,[98] but additional objections and arguments against the validity of a statute may be urged,[99] and a decree sustaining a demurrer to bill, without stating on what ground, is supported if any ground is well taken.[1] A defaulting defendant, who appears and applies for a rehearing, cannot on appeal from an order denying his rehearing attack the decree on any technical ground.[2] On appeal from a judgment for plaintiff on a directed verdict, where there was no demurrer to the answer, the answer will be regarded as stating a defense and the inquiry limited to whether there was evidence in its support that should have been submitted to the jury.[3] Error in sustaining a demurrer to portions of an answer will not be reviewed, where on the trial defendant was unrestricted in his proof of the facts set up therein, and all questions of law involved were then passed upon and made grounds of appeal.[4] There having been no motion for a new trial the court will consider only the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, though a motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict was made and denied.[5] Where, in an action tried to the court, the only instruction asked is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, the appellate court will review the weight of the evidence only so far as to determine the correctness of that ruling.[6] On appeal in condemnation proceedings, the question whether certain persons, not parties, were entitled to damages will not be considered.[7] Matters proved by incompetent evidence unobjected to cannot be denied on appeal.[8]

Reasons not reviewed.[9]—If a correct result is reached in the trial court, the reasons therefor will not be reviewed,[10] and a just judgment warranted by the record and the facts will not be overthrown because based on the wrong reason.[11] Refusal of an application on the grouud of want of power will not be reversed where it should have been refused in the exercise of sound discretion.[12] A judgment entered on a demurrer to the complaint sustained on the ground that no cause of action was stated therein will be affirmed if the demurrer should have been sustained on any other ground,[13] but a judgment erroneously sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the bill will not be affirmed on the ground that a correct decision was made on wrong grounds, since there was no testimony taken and no inquiry into the merits.[14] A ruling rejecting evidence that is incompetent will be affirmed though the objection was made on the wrong ground.[15] Where the record shows that competent evidence was rejected because the court regarded it incompetent, the judgment will not be sustained on the ground that he also had power to reject it on discretionary grounds.[16] The giving of a peremptory instruction will be sustained, if proper for any reason apparent from the record,[17] and on appeal from a dismissal of the complaint at the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court is not limited to the ground assigned by the court for its ruling, but must examine the entire record.[18] On appeal in equity the declarations of law given or refused will not be reviewed, since the decree may be right regardless of error in them.[19] Mere remarks of the court expressing views apparently not carried into the judgment will not warrant a review.[20] A declaration that plaintiff was not entitled to recover under the pleadings and proofs sufficiently indicates the theory under which the case was decided to warrant a review of the question whether under the pleadings and proofs, plaintiff could recover.[21] An order granting a new trial will be affirmed if any ground be well taken.[22] An appellate court may consider and apply to a pending case a curing statute passed to heal defects in titles similar to the one in question.[23]

(§ 13) D. Restriction by character of order or judgment; matters brought up with final judgment.[24]—Where a case is properly in the appellate court, all decrees and proceedings therein are reviewable.[25] Rulings on practice[26] and intermediate orders[27] go up with the judgment. Orders made after judgment do not.[28]

22. On appeal by defendant from an order granting plaintiff a new trial on a single ground plaintiff may insist that other grounds set up in his motion justify the order and should have been allowed. Emmons v. Quade, 176 Mo. 22, 75 S. W. 103. An order granting a new trial on a certain ground may be sustained on other grounds alleged if appellant does not show that they were not well taken. Morrison Mfg. Co. v. Roach [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 644. Where an order is in general terms it will be sustained if justified on any of the grounds presented therefor, regardless of the opinion of the trial court in support of it. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 P. 449. Such opinion, however, may be examined for the purpose of determining any question of merit which will arise on new trial. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 P. 449. The opinion of the trial court cannot affect the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings (Luman v. Golden Ancient Channel Min. Co., 140 Cal. 700, 74 P. 307), nor be considered to determine the scope of the order (Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 75 P. 332). The opinion of the trial court setting forth the grounds on which a new trial was granted does not prevent review of the case and sustaining the order on other grounds. Simon Newman Co. v. 27. Under the statute in Wisconsin, the court may review any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment [Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3069, 3070]. Hart v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. [Wis.] 98 N. W. 526. An order refusing to

Costs being part of the judgment, orders relating thereto go up,[29] and an order denying a motion to correct a judgment may be reviewed if properly preserved in the record.[30] An appeal from a final judgment rendered on report of a master stating the amount due a widow from the estate of her husband and his devisees will not bring up a judgment setting aside a receipt given by the widow renouncing her rights under the law and agreeing to take under the will.[31] On appeal from an order sustaining objections to a referee's report, a question as to whether there was a clerical error in the report cannot be considered, since any such mistake should be corrected below.[32] A judgment of foreclosure cannot be reviewed on appeal from the order confirming the sale.[33] A decree ordering foreclosure and subrogation, and directing a reference, being final and appealable, will not go up on appeal from the decree confirming the final report.[34] A decree directing partition cannot be reviewed on appeal from the order confirming the report of commissioners.[35] The discharge of a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense cannot be reviewed on appeal from a jury trial.[36] A party who fails to appeal from an order granting him a new trial on terms has no ground of complaint on an appeal from the judgment.[37] In New York, only such interlocutory and intermediate judgments and orders are reviewable on appeal from final judgment as are specified in the notice of appeal.[38] Where the order appealed from is not a "final order" in a special proceeding, a specification in the notice of appeal of an intention to bring up the intermediate orders for review is not effective for that purpose.[39]

Matters reviewable on appeal from interlocutory orders.[40]—Proceedings subsequent to an interlocutory order are not considered,[41] the appeal standing on the record as it stood at the time the order was made.[42] On appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, the only inquiry is whether the discretion of the trial court was improvidently exercised,[43] the merits not being in issue.[44]

On appeal from an order granting a motion to serve an amended answer, neither the sufficiency of a counterclaim contained therein nor the merits of the controversy will be considered.[45] Appeal from a decree overruling a demurrer to the bill will not bring up an order refusing to set aside an order restoring the cause to the docket after dismissal for want of prosecution,[46] nor rulings on objections to the allowance of amendments, nor on motion to strike amendments;[47] but where the question whether an amendment constituted a departure was presented by the demurrer, it may be reviewed.[48]

On appeal from grant or refusal of a new trial.[49]—Generally speaking, appeals from the grant or refusal of a new trial are confined to the motion,[50] and whether a jury was demandable as of right,[51] whether the verdict is sufficient,[52] whether the action or the pleadings are in proper form,[53] or support the findings,[54] or judgment,[55] whether a conclusion of law is correct,[56] whether the findings sustain the judgment[57] or conclusions of law,[58] or the evidence, the findings,[59] the form of the decree or judgment,[60] whether interest is allowable on the judgment,[61] the court's refusal to settle the statement on motion for a new trial,[62] can be considered only on appeal from the judgment.[63] The responsiveness of the verdict to the issues may be determined,[64] and on appeal from an order refusing a new trial, the court may scrutinize all the evidence and determine whether the verdict is not contrary thereto, though no motion was made at the close of plaintiff's case, or after the evidence was all in.[65] Reversal of the judgment cannot be made on appeal from an order granting a new trial.[66]

(§ 13) E. Restriction by contents of record.[71]—Cases appealed must be heard and decided upon the record made in the court from which the appeal is taken,[72] and questions not made in the record cannot be considered, though argued and insisted on.[73] The errors alleged must clearly appear,[74] the burden of showing error being always on the party alleging it,[75] and in the absence of an affirmative showing of error, it is assumed that the rulings below are correct.[76] Presumption not changed by direction of verdict, though in such case the existence of every material fact which the evidence tends to prove is assumed.[77] All reasonable presumptions are indulged to uphold the regularity of the proceedings of the trial court,[78] and objections not supported by the record will not be reviewed.[79]

Where it appears by the bill that evidence of an instruction by a wife to her husband as to the application of a certain payment given in plaintiff's absence, was rejected, it will not be assumed in support of the ruling that it was rejected because occurring in a private conversation between husband and wife.[80]

The reviewing court is confined to the record and will consider only such error as is there presented,[81] whether the suit be at law or in equity,[82] and affidavits or other evidence to affect the disposition of the case on appeal cannot be received.[83] Matters not in the record cannot be considered in support of the judgment,[84] and reversal will not be made upon evidence of matters occurring since the trial.[85] Where the bill of exceptions is deficient in showing facts required to be shown by it, it cannot be aided by reference to the evidentiary bill,[86] and statements in the abstract cannot supply omissions of documentary evidence from the bill of exceptions or record.[87] An omission in proof of a matter of record may be supplied, to sustain the judgment.[88] The record in a companion case between the same parties, and tried with the case appealed, cannot be considered though sent up,[89] but the record in a former suit, re-filed in the pending suit, may be considered to supply omissions from the record, no motion having been made to strike it out.[90] Omission of any portion of the record will preclude review of questions arising on the omitted portion.[91] A statement in the record indicating that matters other than the evidence were perhaps considered by the court in arriving at its conclusion, is not ground for reversal in the absence of any showing of prejudice.[92] On proper will be reviewed whether the facts or evidence are before the court or not.[4] Where the only contention is whether the findings of fact justify the conclusions of law a statement of facts is unnecessary.[5] The judgment may be limited but not enlarged by a record that shows only the judgment and findings, since the complaint may have been insufficient to support a larger judgment.[6] In the Federal courts, where a jury is waived by written stipulation, and the finding of the court is general, and no bills of exceptions are taken to the rulings during the progress of the trial, the record presents no question for review by the appellate court,[7] and in the absence of a written stipulation waiving a jury, the only question reviewable is whether the judgment rendered is sustained by the pleadings.[8] Where the facts or evidence are absent from the record, all presumptions of fact necessary to sustain a judgment conformable to the pleadings will be indulged,[9] and no fact, the existence of which is necessary to overturn the judgment below, will be regarded as established without an affirmative showing thereof.[10] When

9. Where the trial court found that a county was "organized" it will be presumed, in aid of the judgment, in the absence of a statement of facts, that every act necessary to constitute the county an organized county was done. McCaleb v. Rector [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 956. In the absence of the evidence it will be presumed that the attorney fee allowed by the court in a foreclosure case was reasonable. Johnson v. Hibbard [Utah] 75 P. 737. A verdict will be presumed to have been properly directed where the facts are not before the court. Young v. Surget [Miss.] 34 So. 322. In the absence of a bill of exceptions it will be presumed that facts alleged in a motion to dismiss as to one defendant, which was granted, were proven. Scalfi v. Graves, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 667, 74 S. W. 795. Where the appointment of a receiver is collaterally attacked on appeal and the grounds of opposition urged below against his appointment are not shown, it will be presumed that evidence necessary to authorize the court's action was presented. Mesnager v. De Leonis, 140 Cal. 402, 73 P. 1052. In the absence of a bill of exceptions and statement in the record, the contentions that the appointment of a receiver was irregular, and that no jurisdiction to order a sale was acquired, cannot be considered. O'Neil v. McLennan [Cal.] 73 P. 576. In the absence of a bill of exceptions or any finding of the facts on which the court acted in making an order, it will be assumed that the court acted wholly within the law. Discharge and trial without jury in condemnation proceedings. Manley v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co., 24 Ohio Circ. R. 70. On a general finding for defendant in a trial by the court, where the evidence is not preserved, and there is no special finding inconsistent with the general finding, if the answer sets forth a defense, the judgment of the trial court must, in the absence of error in making up the pleadings, be upheld. Snyder v. Johnson [Neb.] 95 N. W. 692. Where no instructions were asked or refused, and no exceptions to the rulings on evidence preserved, the judgment, if correct under any theory applicable to the facts, will be affirmed. Morrow v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 98 Mo. App. 351, 73 S. W. 281.

10. Where the petition is met by a general denial, matters of fact alleged in the petition cannot be regarded as proven without facts or findings in the record. Certificate of acknowledgment of deed. Beaumont Imp. Co. v. Carr [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 327. An order denying a motion to vacate a judgment for taxes and quash the execution cannot be reviewed in the absence of the judgment and petition on which it was founded. State v. Gawronski [Mo.] 78 S. W. 807. Where it appears that the

the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, and no error appears on the face thereof, the judgment must be affirmed.[11] Though the bill does not contain all the evidence, if enough is preserved to raise a certain inference and defendant in error proposes to deny that inference, he must see that enough is stated to at least show that there was other evidence which might affect the conclusion.[12] Where, after demurrer to the evidence is overruled, defendant offers proof,[13] and his motion for directed verdict is then overruled, he is entitled on appeal to a review of the evidence as a whole.[14] It cannot be assumed in favor of an exceptant that a view by the jury added anything to the evidence stated in the bill.[15]

Jurisdiction and venue.[16]—Where the record shows that a certain person appeared at trial for one of the parties, it will be presumed that he was authorized so to do.[17] The overruling of a motion by the removing defendant to remand a cause to the state court will not be reviewed on the ground that an indispensable party defendant was shown by the evidence to be a citizen of the same state with complainant, where the evidence is not in the record and the bill and petition for removal show a removable case.[18]

Process and pleading.[19]—An exception to jurisdiction of the person cannot be sustained where the return of service is not in the record.[20] Where process is a part of the record proper, and the transcript shows none, the record will not be helped out by the presumption that proper process was served.[21]

Rulings on demurrers, exceptions, and motions to strike pleadings cannot be reviewed in the absence of the pleadings in question,[22] and where there is no showing that a demurrer was ever presented to the court, no complaint can be made that no disposition was ever made thereof.[23] Exception to the refusal of an amendment not in the record will not be considered.[24] Where the complaint is dismissed at the trial before a referee, and the answers filed are not contained sheriff's deed, under which plaintiff claims, misdescribed the land and has been altered since delivery, he will not be granted relief as equitable owner in the absence of the execution from the record, since that may have been wrong too. Where on appeal from the decision of the board of general appraisers affirming the collector's classification of imported merchandise, there is no evidence to overthrow the classification, the decision of the board must stand. Bailey & Co. v. U. S., 122 F. 751. The dismissal of a petition to set aside a judgment cannot be reviewed where no part of the record of the original suit is brought up. Jones v. Conway, 25 Ky. L. R. 2017, 79 S. W. 239. Where a plea of former judgment is traversed and the judgment pleaded is not in the bill of exceptions the defense will not be considered on appeal. Brinkman v. Sunken, 174 Mo. 709, 74 S. W. 963. An estoppel founded on an agreement and judgment in another case, neither of which is in the record, cannot be considered. Watkins v. Hopkins County [Tex. Civ. App.] 72 S. W. 872. Whether the appellee is barred by an estoppel cannot be considered in the absence of the documentary evidence on which his contention is based. Kraft v. in the record, they cannot be reviewed.[25] Nothing appearing to the contrary, it will be presumed that leave was given to file an amended complaint,[26] that an amended pleading was a mere restatement of the matter of the original,[27] and that plaintiff stood upon his complaint on the sustaining of a demurrer to it.[28] Where there is nothing in the record to show the form of an application to amend a declaration, except the statement in the amended declaration that it was filed with leave of court, it will not be presumed that it was filed as a substitute to the original, but as an addition to it and that exhibits filed with the original are still before the court.[29] All reasonable presumptions not contrary to the record will be indulged with reference to the sufficiency of the pleadings below to support the judgment: i. e. that oral pleadings were amended to conform to the proof,[30] that a paper attached to the transcript purporting to amend the petition was not allowed as an amendment,[31] that a petition included in the transcript was a part of the complaint, though not referred to therein as an exhibit,[32] and variances between pleadings and proof unexcepted to below will not be considered unless material and substantial and affecting the right of the matter.[33] A judgment on the pleadings and amendments will not be reversed where they are confusing and involved, and there is nothing to show that they are all included in the record.[34] An order overruling a motion to dismiss for want of a written complaint will not be reviewed where the record does not show that a written complaint was not filed.[35] Where the sufficiency of a complaint is first raised on appeal,[36] or where the appeal is from the overruling of a general demurrer, the allegations of the petition must be accorded every reasonable intendment in favor of the right to be enforced,[37] the rule that it should be construed most strongly against the pleader having no application.

on which the motion is based,[42] that it was ruled on,[43] and what the ruling was,[44] since error must affirmatively appear to secure reversal, all reasonable presumptions being indulged to support the ruling below.[45] On appeal from the grant or refusal of a new trial, the record should show the newly discovered evidence on which it is based,[46] and also the evidence in the case, since otherwise it cannot be seen that the new evidence was competent or material,[47] or was not merely cumulative.[48] Where the notice of a motion for a new trial specifies insufficiency of the evidence as a ground, but the statement contains no specifications, it cannot be presumed on appeal in support of the order granting the new trial that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings.[49] An appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate an order adjudging a party guilty of a criminal contempt presents no question for review, where the motion was based merely on the affidavit of the party and there is no certification that it contains all the proceedings.[50]

Proceedings at trial in general.[51]—Improper remarks of counsel must appear in the record to review alleged error therein.[52] Where the record does not show the arguments of counsel, it will be presumed the jury took the law from the court, as is their duty, and disregarded counsel's statements in so far as in conflict with the instructions.[53] An assignment of error based on the alleged misconduct of the jury will not be considered where it is ascertainable only from affidavits not included in the bill of exceptions.[54] Where there is no showing as to why the regular panel was not summoned to appear before the case was set for trial, it will be presumed there was justifiable cause for ordering a special jury.[55] It will be presumed the statute was read to the officer sent out in charge of the jury as provided therein, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, or that it was waived by the appellant.[56]

dence cannot be reviewed unless the record shows the evidence admitted[58] or excluded,[59] and sets it forth in such manner that the question can be decided without reference to other parts of the record,[60] and in the case of excluded evidence, such other evidence as is necessary to show its relevance or pertinence.[61] Specific errors in excluding evidence will be reviewed, although the bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence.[62] Error of an auditor in overruling objections to evidence will not be considered unless the evidence is set forth in exceptions filed to his report.[63] The overruling of a motion to strike out all the evidence of a witness will not be reviewed where the bill sets out only a part of it.[64] The purpose for which the excluded evidence was offered,[65] and the ground of the objection thereto, must appear,[66] and an objection to admitted evidence will not be considered unless the ground thereof is stated in the case.[67] Where the question is not shown, error in refusing it[68] or in striking out the answer will not be reviewed.[69] Refusal to allow a certain question will not be reviewed where it does not appear what answer was expected,[70] especially where the witness was called by the party questioning him.[71] And the sustaining of an objection to the testimony of a witness on being asked a preliminary question will not be reviewed in the absence of a showing as to what was expected to be proved by him.[72] The rule does not apply to a hostile witness, nor to questions proper on cross-examination,[73] and the rejection of the testimony of a witness offered as an expert on the ground that he is not qualified may be reviewed without a showing as to what his testimony would have been.[74] Error in excluding or admitting depositions must affirmatively appear.[75] The action of the trial court in admitting secondary evidence will be presumed based on sufficient evidence, the contrary not appearing,[76] and an objection to parol evidence will not be considered where the city ordinance, claimed to show the fact, is not in the record.[77] The record must show interrogatories and offers which presented to the trial court the question relied upon in the reviewing court as the ground of reversal.[78] A will, to construe which the action is brought, will be considered as properly in evidence, though by oversight it was not formally offered in evidence below.[79]

Sufficiency of evidence.[80]—If the sufficiency of the evidence is questioned, all the evidence must be presented.[81] The chancery rule is otherwise, appellee being required to show in the record evidence sustaining the decree.[82] In Missouri, where all the evidence is not in the record, on appeal in an equity case, the evidence cannot be considered,[83] and in Arkansas, where the record in a chancery cause fails to show that it contains all the evidence, the decree will be presumed correct.[84] Where the petition states a cause of action and the findings support the decree, and the evidence is not preserved, it will be presumed that it supported the findings.[85] Insufficiency of the evidence to warrant a peremptory charge cannot be considered in the absence of a statement of facts, though the court sums up the evidence in the charge.[86] The record must affirmatively show that it contains all the evidence,[87] and where it does not, its sufficiency to support the verdict or findings will not be reviewed,[88] it being presumed in such case that the verdict has evidence to support it not set out in the record,[89] notwithstanding a stipulation that it contains all the evidence necessary to a determination of the questions raised.[90] Where the bill of exceptions shows that without doubt important evidence has been omitted therefrom, the findings and judgment will not be disturbed as contrary to the evidence;[91] and where the record on appeal in an equity case shows that not all the evidence is included, it will be presumed that there was sufficient to warrant findings of fact justifying the decree.[92] Where the evidence in respect to the finding complained of is complete, it will be reviewed, notwithstanding the absence of evidence on other issues, since it will be assumed that the evidence omitted was immaterial.[93] A verdict for defendant in ejectment cannot be disturbed where title papers are not in the record and nothing in the transcript shows title in plaintiff.[94] Where it appears from the pleadings and the evidence brought up that plaintiff could not recover in any event, judgment in his favor will be reversed, though all the evidence is not in the record.[95] Where evidence is omitted, the appellant must rebut the presumption that the order complained of was justified by the omitted evidence.[96] Where the record shows by inspection that all the evidence is not included, a recital or certificate that it is, is immaterial.[97] Where the appeal is from the judgment

Instructions.[1]—The instructions given or refused must appear properly in the record.[2] The giving or refusal of instructions cannot be reviewed, unless the record contains the entire charge,[3] and the evidence to which they relate,[4] especially where certain issues are withdrawn from the case,[5] and the record must show that they were passed upon by the trial court, and an exception taken to the ruling,[6] since the presumption is that the court gave in substance, all proper instructions, and that the refusal of instructions asked was without prejudice.[7] The record must show that it contains the entire charge.[8] In the absence of a statement of facts instructions not clearly erroneous in view of the pleadings and verdict will not be reviewed,[9] and an objection to an instruction as unsupported by the evi-all the evidence will be regarded as untrue, where the facts appearing on the face of the bill are in conflict with such recital. Gall v. Gall [Wis.] 97 N. W. 938. in trying issues of facts sits as a jury and gives a general verdict, the judgment will not be reviewed on appeal or by writ of error, unless declarations of law are asked and refused, in order that the appellate court may see upon what theory the case was tried. Unless this is done the finding of the court is incontrovertible on appeal.[26] Findings of fact filed after the expiration of the term at which the case was tried cannot be considered.[27] Findings of the jury set aside as unsupported by evidence and not assigned as error will not be reviewed as entitling a party to judgment.[28] The silence of the special finding is taken as equivalent to an express finding against the appellant on all material facts which he was obliged to prove.[29] Where no decision appears in the judgment roll it will be presumed that none was made.[30] Where in a case tried to the court the trial judge's conclusions are not brought up, the judgment will be referred to any warrantable theory of the case made by the testimony which will legally support it.[31] The memorandum of the reasons of the trial judge for his decision cannot be allowed to qualify, characterize, or limit his determination,[32] and alleged errors in the trial court's opinion will not be reviewed,[33] but the appellate division may examine the opinion of the trial court to ascertain the basis of its disposition of the case.[34] Whether certain items should have been allowed will not be reviewed where it does not affirmatively appear that the verdict included them,[35] but where recovery may have been based on either of two issues, only one of which was established, it will not be presumed to have been based on the one established.[36] Where the record does not show on which paragraph of the complaint the verdict was rendered, the appellee cannot urge that an instruction, not specifically referring to a defective paragraph, withdrew it from the jury.[37] A judgment for defendant on a verdict directed generally on a complaint in two paragraphs can be sustained only where neither cause of action is supported by evidence.[38] Where, in Alabama, in a case tried to the court, there are special findings, the supreme court on appeal is limited in its review to a determination of whether the findings support the judgment.[39] Where the evidence is not preserved and the transcript does not contain the pleadings, the findings of fact will be conclusively presumed correct.[40] Where the trial court refuses to set aside a default, on the ground of inexcusable neglect, his findings of fact are conclusive on appeal, and affidavits will not be considered.[41] In the absence of the evidence it will be assumed that it sustained the findings,[42] or judgment,[43] and where only a partial transcript is brought up it will be presumed that the omitted parts sustain the judgment.[44] An issue neither requested nor submitted will be presumed found so as to support the judgment.[45] Where a decree disposing of the main issue of the cause makes no mention of the demurrer, it will be regarded as overruled.[46] A finding that an order vacating a highway was regularly made presumes that all necessary steps were taken to give it validity.[47] Where the superior court finds that in justice court judgment after service was "duly rendered," it will be presumed in support of the finding that due proof of a default or judgment after trial was made.[48] It will be presumed that a judgment dismissing the action at the cost of defendant was by his consent, the record not showing otherwise.[49] Where it is the duty of the court to enter judgment, and it can be fairly inferred that the order was made, but through mistake of the clerk, not spread of record, it will be so presumed.[50] Where the record shows no request for special findings of fact and conclusions of law, as required by statute,[51] or where the special findings are not filed or brought into the record by bill of exceptions or order of court, they will be treated on appeal as a general finding in favor of the successful party.[52] It will be presumed that no exception to a conclusion of law was taken where none appears in the record proper,[53] and where no findings of fact appear, an exception to the conclusions of law cannot be considered.[54] On appeal from the decision of a referee, the court of appeals of New York is confined to the findings of fact and cannot look into the record for additional facts,[55] and where a referee finds the facts and states his conclusions, on which the judgment is founded, the question presented on appeal, in the absence of a case, is whether the facts found support the conclusions and judgment.[56] Exhibits may be incorporated in the findings by reference.[57] Inclusion of a written instrument in the findings brings up its sufficiency to support them.[58] A judgment inconsistent with and contrary to the findings will be reversed,[59] but a decree will not be set aside on error, in the absence of a motion for a new trial, unless the findings show the decree clearly wrong.[60] The action of the court in taxing

Where it does not appear on what ground judgment for defendants was rendered, it will be presumed to be because plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case, and there being no evidence in the record, affirmance follows. costs is presumed to have been correct,[61] and in the absence of a statement of facts an order allowing costs against an estate in a probate proceeding will not be reviewed.[62] On appeal from an order denying a motion for retaxation of costs, the record must show what items were objected to, and the grounds of objection.[63] Failure to grant a close jail execution will not be reviewed in the absence of facts in the record showing that it ought to have been granted.[64]

(§ 13) F. Rulings peculiar to province of trial court. 1. Discretionary rulings in general; interlocutory and provisional orders.[65]—The discretion of the lower court is not an unlimited power, and its rulings and judgments during the progress of the trial are open to review,[66] but discretionary acts and rulings will not be disturbed, unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[67] The rule applies to grant or refusal of a change of venue,[68] or a continuance,[69] the allowance of an amendment of a motion for continuance,[70] the allowance of postponement on amendment of pleading,[71] the allowance of an amendment of a voucher in attachment,[72] the refusal of a motion to dissolve an attachment, the affidavit showing facts authorizing the writ,[73] the grant or refusal of leave to renew a motion previously denied,[74] the remission of the forfeiture of a bail bond,[75] and the supplying of missing records.[75] The construction or application of the court's own rules is discretionary.[77] The exercise of the jurisdiction of a trial judge sitting in equity in ordering damages to be assessed by a master instead of a jury,[78] the determination that a proposed railroad is a public necessity,[79] the selection of an administrator pendente lite, and the amount of security to be given by him,[80] the appointment of a receiver,[81] the allowance of compensation to an auditor,[82] the setting aside of a judicial sale in an equitable proceeding,[83] grant or refusal of an injunction, temporary[84] or permanent,[85] and the requirement of a bond before granting,[86] the refusal of a peremptory writ of mandamus, where not refused on the ground of lack of power, or any question of law,[87] the refusal of prohibition when applied for by a stranger to the proceedings sought to be enjoined,[88] an objection to a bankrupt's discharge,[89] will not be reviewed except where a clear abuse of discretion is shown. The award of custody of a child in habeas corpus proceedings,[90] and the amount of alimony and solicitor's fees in divorce,[91] are matters committed to the discretion of the trial court and unreviewable in the absence of improper exercise. In Wisconsin, the circuit court's discretion extends to the denial of a motion to dismiss an appeal from probate court,[92] and allowing an extension of time for appeal[93] and the dismissal of an appeal because of failure to require a return.[94] The rule that the discretion of the trial court as to the grant or refusal of an injunction will not be controlled does not apply where the right to the relief is based on a question of law,[95] and an order setting aside a referee's report will not be affirmed as discretionary where it appears on its face to be based on legal grounds.[96] Refusal to exercise discretion on the ground of lack of authority, where authority exists, is reviewable.[97] The discretion of the judge at special term, in New York, in refusing to open a judgment for mistake is reviewable by the appellate division, though no abuse is shown.[98] Where the trial court refuses an application to resettle an order so as to show that it was based on the minutes as well as on its own motion, it will be presumed on appeal that the order was not based on the minutes.[99]

Dismissal and nonsuit.[1]—On appeal from a judgment dismissing the action at the close of plaintiff's case, plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable inference that can be drawn from the evidence,[2] and he is entitled to the presumption that he could have proved material facts contained in his offer of proof.[3] On appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, the question whether a compulsory nonsuit should have been granted must be considered by giving the plaintiff every reasonable inference warranted by his testimony,[4] and defendant's evidence subsequently introduced may be considered.[5] Appellee cannot support a judgment of dismissal on the absence of testimony which he excluded by objection to the employment of an interpreter.[6] A refusal to grant a nonsuit furnishes no ground of appeal.[7] An order on motion to dismiss for lack of prosecution unless plaintiff placed the cause on the calendar within a time fixed will not be disturbed, no abuse of the court's discretion appearing.[8]

Orders relating to pleadings.[9]—Unless a gross abuse of discretion is shown, the granting or refusal of leave to amend a declaration,[10] complaint,[11] petition,[12] bill,[13] answer,[14] notice of special matter in defense[15] or reply,[16] will not be reviewed. The allowance of permission to file a plea[17] or answer after expiration of the time allowed by law,[18] or to file an additional plea, setting up the statute of limitations,[19] will not be reviewed, in the absence of a showing of abuse of judicial discretion.[20] For like reasons, the ruling on a motion to make pleadings more definite and certain,[21] and on motion to strike out parts of a pleading, are not available error on appeal.[22] Denial of a motion to strike a plea on the ground that it was filed without leave,[23] or the refusal of a motion to reinstate a petition after amendment to cure a defect for which a demurrer was sustained, will not be controlled unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[24]

Rulings relating to trial or evidence.[25]—The orderly and proper conduct of a trial is in the discretion of the trial judge, and will not be reviewed in the absence of a showing of abuse.[26] Rulings relating to the order and sequence of proofs offered,[27] the decision as to the qualifications of a witness offered as an expert,[28]

The finding of the trial court on preliminary questions of fact necessary to be decided before admitting or rejecting evidence, will not be disturbed unless clearly wrong,[38] and the conclusion of fact reasonably inferable from the evidence involved in the exclusion of testimony is not open to exception.[39] In North Carolina, the decision of the trial court as to whether the facts authorize the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument is a question of law, reviewable on appeal.[40]

Refusal of a severance,[41] the submission of interrogatories for special findings,[42] limitation of argument to the jury,[43] permitting counsel to real legal authorities to jury in argument,[44] are all matters of discretion for the lower court. Refusal to direct a verdict will not be disturbed.[45] On review of a judgment on a directed verdict, incompetent evidence not objected to will be deemed evidence in the case,[46] and every fact favorable to the unsuccessful party which the evidence tends to prove will be regarded as conclusively established;[47] but where both par-dicts because excessive or because of insufficiency of evidence contemplates a judicial discretion, however, which may be corrected on appeal where justice demands it,[55] and where it appears that the judge has refused to exercise the discretion vested in him by law, review will be made.[56] Where the order granting[57] or denying a new trial does not state the particular ground on which it is made, every legitimate intendment will be indulged to support it,[58] and the order sustained, if any, even a discretionary, ground assigned will justify it. Where a new trial has been granted, a stronger case is required to secure a reversal than where it has been denied,[59] and the presumption in favor of the correctness of a grant is greatly strengthened when the action of the court is prompt and taken originally of its own motion,[60] but where there is no scintilla of evidence to support a verdict other than that rendered, a grant of a new trial will be overruled.[61] On review of the grant of a new trial because the evidence was "insufficient to support the verdict," the court considers all the evidence and not merely that of plaintiff, and will not reverse, though the plaintiff's evidence standing alone might support a verdict.[62] The rule that the uncorroborated testimony of a party is not conclusive on the jury does not divest the trial court of its discretion to grant a new trial.[63] Where a new trial is granted after directed verdict moved for by both parties,[64] and when error is predicated on the grant of a new trial for newly discovered evidence,[65] or after verdict as against evidence, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the ruling.[66] An order granting a new trial for an erroneous instruction will be affirmed, the instruction being in fact bad, unless under the facts no other verdict could be sustained.[67] Errors at law committed at the trial and excepted to by defendant do not constitute ground for reversal of an order granting plaintiff a new trial.[68] Refusal of new trial will not be reversed because of insufficiency of evidence, unless it clearly appears that there is no credible evidence supporting the verdict,[69] or that serious error occurred in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the instructions,[70] and where the evidence is conflicting, it will be presumed that facts were found to warrant the refusal to set aside the verdict.[71] Refusal to set aside a verdict as excessive cannot be overruled unless it is apparent the jury were actuated by passion and prejudice.[72] On review of an exception, under the statute in Virginia, to refusal to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence, evidence contrary to the verdict cannot be considered.[73] Where the trial court has relieved a party of the effect of his failure to serve a statement on motion for new trial in time, it will not be presumed that denial of his motion for new trial was on the ground of delay in serving the statement.[74] Error prejudicial to respondent is no ground for sustaining the refusal of a new trial.[75] In Georgia, where the law and the evidence do not demand the verdict, and no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court is shown, the first grant of a new trial will not be interfered with,[76] though it was put upon a single ground,[77] and where the evidence is conflicting and an abuse of discretion does not appear, a second grant will not be interfered with.[78] The statute in Virginia provides that where, on new trial granted on the ground that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, the parties refuse to introduce testimony and the court enters judgment, the reviewing court shall examine the testimony introduced on the original trial, and if the court erred, enter judgment on the verdict.[79] Though a motion might have been overruled because of a defect in form, the granting thereof will not be reversed on appeal, the merits not being attacked.[80] It will be presumed that any departure from the strict rules of evidence on the hearing of the motion was permitted in the exercise of a sound discretion.[81]

Whether to reopen a case and hear further evidence after the decree has been signed and entered is discretionary with the trial court, and his refusal will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[82] An order dismissing a petition for rehearing of an order overruling objections to the confirmation of a judicial sale is discretionary and hence not appealable.[83]

The settlement of a case on appeal by the trial judge cannot be disturbed where no abuse of power is manifest,[84] except where it appears to have been based solely on the papers in the case, when it may be reviewed as any other question.[85] In the absence of any showing to the contrary it will be presumed that the extension of time to settle the statement of facts was authorized.[86] The action of the court in granting an extension of time for settling a bill of exceptions under a statute authorizing it on "good cause shown" is reviewable,[87] but where the statute confers power in discretion, the court's discretion will be presumed to have been properly exercised.[88]

A petition for leave to enter an appeal from a decree of the judge of probate is addressed to the discretion of the presiding justice, and his decision is final and not subject to exception.[89]

Matters relating to judgments or costs.[90]—A motion to strike off an entry of satisfaction of a judgment is addressed to the discretion of the court, and the exercise of that discretion is not the subject of review.[91] So also rulings on an application to set aside or open a default,[92] vacate a decree,[93] or a judgment on the ground of mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect.[94] The supreme court will not review an order refusing to open a judgment except where the judgment below is a deduction from facts, and the result of reasoning on the same.[95] The refusal of the trial court to make the decision of the supreme court, reversing a judgment overruling a demurrer, the judgment of the trial court before a certain day, will not be controlled, no prejudice being shown.[96] The allowance of costs imposed as a condition of allowing an amendment of pleadings,[97] or granting a new trial,[98] or in other actions than those in which costs follow as of course,[99] such as equitable,[1] and probate proceedings,[2] will not be reviewed if no abuse of discretion is shown,[3] but an allowance to a clerk for special services whether based on a statute and allowed as a matter of law, or on a quantum meruit as a matter of discretion, is reviewable.[4] Allowing plaintiffs to prosecute as poor persons is discretionary.[5]

festly wrong,[8] but on appeal from an order refusing to open accounts of executors, in New Jersey, questions of fact as well as of law will be reviewed,[9] and the Texas court of appeals has power to disregard a verdict and enter such judgment as the evidence demands, though the trial court could not do so.[10] The supreme court of Utah is not authorized to review the facts in a case at law except so far as may be necessary to determine questions of law.[11] On appeal from an order of the license board granting or refusing a license to sell liquors, the court should exercise his independent judgment on the evidence, without influence by the finding made by the board.[12] The circuit court of appeals cannot, upon petition for review in a bankruptcy case, challenge the facts, or an inference of fact, found by the court below,[13] and an adjudication of bankruptcy founded on an act of bankruptcy sufficiently pleaded and proved will not be set aside, though other alleged acts were neither properly pleaded nor sufficiently proved.[14] Whether the verdict is unsupported by any substantial evidence is a question of law, and may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment,[15] but whether conflicting evidence is sufficient to support the verdict is a question of fact, and cannot be so reviewed.[16] Where the evidence is undisputed or the facts not controverted, rulings of the court based thereon may be reviewed,[17] but a finding on agreed facts will not be disturbed unless the facts affirmatively establish the contrary conclusion as a matter of law.[18] Controverted questions of fact will not be reviewed where both parties moved for directed verdict below.[19] After a general verdict for plaintiff it will be assumed on appeal that a material allegation of the complaint was proven,[20] and a general finding for the defendant is conclusive upon all issues of fact raised by the pleadings, and the evidence is not reviewable to ascertain whether it supports the finding.[21] Exceptions based on questions of fact,[22] such as whether the find-

Findings of fact in general.[25]—A verdict or finding of facts will only be set aside when not supported by evidence,[26] or against the clear preponderance thereof,[27] if properly submitted,[28] there being sufficient to carry the issues to the jury,[29] since the appellate court cannot pass upon the credibility of witnesses or the peculiar weight to be given to their testimony.[30] If there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the verdict,[31] judgment,[32] or finding of facts, it will not be disturbed,[33] there being nothing intrinsically improbable in it,[34] though a strong doubt as to the fact arises,[35] or the plaintiff's accounts of the cause of his injury conflict,[36]

Lamar Canal Co. [Colo.] 71 P. 1119. Question of adverse use to sustain a prescriptive right. Abbott v. Pond [Cal.] 76 P. 60. Special findings made by the trial court, in Missouri, pursuant to the statutory provisions are conclusive on issues of fact in actions at law, if the record contains evidence to support them, and they will not be disturbed on appeal, if the conor a different conclusion might have been reached,[37] or the court hesitates before saying there is sufficient.[38] Some positive, affirmative evidence in support of a judgment for plaintiff must appear in order to warrant an affirmance,[39] however, and where the verdict or finding is clearly unsupported by the evidence,[40] or is manifestly against its weight,[41] or the evidence is uncontradicted,[42] or there is such a lack of evidence in its support as to lead to the conclusion that it is manifestly wrong,[43] or is manifestly arbitrary and dictated by prejudice,[44] or cannot be accounted for on rational theories,[45] or is for an amount so excessive,[46] verdict clearly excessive for the injury received, injuries and sufferings being the only questions submitted to the jury,[47] or inadequate,[48] as to show passion or prejudice,[49] or where it appears that the jury must have been moved by seemingly equitable influences, instead of weighing the evidence under the rules of law given them, their verdict will be set aside.[50] To justify setting a verdict aside as contrary to the evidence it must convincingly, and indubitably appear to be so.[51] A mere preponderance of evidence against the verdict will not reverse,[52] nor will findings[53] or a verdict be set aside for a mere conflict,[54] but to justify reversal, the verdict must want the support of evidence sufficient to maintain it.[55]

An award of punitive damages, when allowable, will not be set aside as excessive.[56] A judgment will not be reversed, in the absence of prejudicial error, merely because the damages awarded by the jury seem too large,[57] the damages being within the range of the testimony,[58] and not so great as to shock the judicial sense of right and justice,[59] or induce the belief that they are the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption,[60] there being nothing to show that the jury acted recklessly or unjustly.[61] Where the excessiveness of a verdict has been cured by remittitur below, the judgment based thereon will not be reversed on the ground that the passion and prejudice discovered by the amount of the verdict must also have affected the finding as to liability.[62] In Utah, the supreme court cannot review the evidence to determine whether or not the damages are excessive.[63] The supreme court of South Carolina cannot grant new trials because of excessive damages,[64] and mere excessiveness alone is not ground for new trial in Kansas, in the absence of passion or prejudice.[65] It will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the jury, in assessing damages, followed the instructions of the court,[66] and because a jury in a fire insurance case returned a verdict for a much smaller sum than he claimed, it will not be assumed that they found his claim fraudulent. entitling defendant to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[67]

All favorable inferences legitimately arising from the evidence will be indulged in favor of the verdict[68] or findings,[69] and evidence allowed to go in generally without objection will, in support thereof, be deemed evidence in the case.[70] The findings of a chancellor in a common law action will be as favorably regarded as the verdict of a properly instructed jury,[71] and in contested election cases, the court adopts the findings of the triers of the facts, if supported by substantial evidence.[72] Where on trial to the court, the finding is supported by sufficient competent evidence, it will be presumed that incompetent evidence, though admitted, was disregarded,[73] unless it appears that the determination in some degree at least was based thereon.[74] In Virginia, on appeal from a judgment in a case tried without a jury, where it is contended that the decision is contrary to the evidence the appellant will be considered as admitting the truth of his adversaries' evidence, and all just inferences therefrom, and as waiving his own evidence which conflicts therewith, and all inferences from his own evidence, though not in conflict with his adversaries', which do not necessarily result therefrom.[75] A statutory provision that not more than one new trial shall be granted to the same party in the same case on the weight of the evidence has no application to courts of review.[76]

Review as affected by the character of the evidence.[77]—A verdict of a jury, on conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed unless clearly wrong,[78] the jury having been properly instructed,[79] though the court may entertain a different view than that of the jury as to the preponderance of the proof,[80] the jury and not the court issues,[89] or committed some error in reaching its conclusion entitling appellant to a new trial.[90] The presumption in favor of the correctness of the court's decision upon the weight of the evidence will be overcome only when there is a clear preponderance of evidence against it.[91] If the evidence is all in writing, the findings of the trial court are not conclusive,[92] but where a view is had by the jury,[93] or the trial judge has examined the premises in question, the verdict or findings will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears that error has been committed.[94] Where there is undisputed evidence supporting the verdict, it cannot be set aside,[95] and a verdict based partly on oral evidence in which there is a conflict cannot be disturbed, though the evidence in its support be incredible;[96] but a verdict will not be sustained on a mere scintilla of evidence, it being flagrantly against the weight thereof.[97] Where the evidence is such that a verdict for either party would have to be sustained, instructions incorrectly defining the rights of the parties cannot be considered harmless.[98]

Evidence is conflicting within this rule as well when the testimony of a single witness is contradicted by circumstances and by statements elicited from him on cross-examination, as when it is disclosed by the conflicting testimony of several witnesses,[99] and incompetent testimony received without objection becomes evidence in the case.[1]

A motion at the close of the evidence by the plaintiff for a directed verdict, and by the defendant for a dismissal of the complaint, amounts to a submission of questions of fact to the judge.[2]

The determination of the police commissioner on the trial of a police officer for improper conduct, on conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed.[3] The decision of the board of review of assessments, honestly made on conflicting evidence, is treated like a verdict of a jury, and is not reviewable.[4]

The trial court will be presumed to have resolved a conflict in the evidence as to probative facts essential to be found to support the ultimate fact, in such a manner as to sustain the general finding.[5] Where the evidence conflicts, it will be presumed on appeal in support of the judgment below that a road to private premises was located as the law directs.[6]

In Washington, findings of fact by the trial court are not conclusive, but the appeal court must weigh the testimony, and this is especially true where a large portion of it is by deposition;[7] some weight, however, will be given the conclusions of the trial court who saw the witnesses and heard them testify,[8] and the findings sustained where the court cannot say that the evidence clearly preponderates against them.[9]

Effect of approval by the trial judge.[10]—A verdict on questions of fact approved by the trial judge will not usually be disturbed,[11] unless the evidence is overwhelmingly against it,[12] or error is manifest,[13] the same respect being paid to his decision in this as on any other matter of fact,[14] and since in denying a motion for a new trial the court necessarily decides that the verdict is not the result of passion or prejudice, the judgment will not be reversed on appeal on that ground.[15] Where a verdict is clearly wrong and excessive, it will be set aside in pursuance of the appellate court's superintending control over inferior courts, though the trial judge has refused a new trial.[16] Where a peremptory instruction for defendant is refused, the court on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff will not weigh the evidence, but will only inquire whether there is sufficient to support the verdict.[17] A finding on a disputed question of fact tried on ex parte affidavits will not be reviewed unless manifestly against the weight of the evidence.[18]

Effect of two trials below.[19]—Where a case has been tried by a jury, with the same result, and their conclusion twice approved by a trial judge, it will not be disturbed in the absence of anything appearing in the record which would have a tendency to influence them improperly,[20] though the appellate court may deem that the evidence preponderates the other way,[21] and where three trials have been had, all determined the same way, the verdict should be deemed conclusive in the absence of material error, or a showing of passion, partiality or prejudice.[22] A strong case is necessary to warrant reversal for error in awarding a new trial, where the second trial resulted adversely to the first.[23] Where the difference between three successive divisions of land by commissioners in partition is slight, the third one will not be set aside.[24]

Effect of theory of facts on which judgment is based.[25]—A verdict cannot be sustained on a theory contrary to that upon which the case was submitted.[26]

In equitable proceedings.[27]—The findings and decree of a court of equity[28] and findings of fact by the trial judge approved by the court in banc,[29] or by a master, confirmed by the court below,[30] or by a commissioner, the evidence being in conflict,[31] will not be set aside, unless clearly erroneous or against the clear preponderance of the evidence,[32] especially where the hearing was in open court and the witnesses numerous,[33] the chancellor seeing and hearing the witnesses being in a better position to judge of their credibility,[34] though the chancellor has submitted the case to a jury for an advisory verdict,[35] and part of the evidence is in the form of depositions;[36] but where the evidence before the trial court was entirely written, and relates to matters as to which the trial court is in no better position to reach a correct solution than the appellate court, the rule has no application, and the appellate court should be governed by its own conclusion as to the weight of the evidence.[37] Findings of fact in equity cases are not conclusive on appeal in the Federal courts, notwithstanding the statute providing that appeals shall be subject to the same rules, regulations and restrictions as writs of error,[38] and the appeal court will examine the record and come to its own conclusions,[39] notwithstanding the findings of the master have been approved by the court below.[40] In Indiana, by express provision of the statute, the appellate court, in all cases not triable by a jury, will consider the evidence and determine its sufficiency,[41] and a like rule obtains in several states on appeals in equity,[42] even where the witnesses were examined in the presence of the trial court;[43] and where a consideration of the entire record satisfies the court that the trial court reached a wrong conclusion, the decree will be reversed,[44] though owing to the trial court's opportunity to observe the witnesses,[45] the chancellor's findings will be disturbed with reluctance.[46] Under this rule, findings of a register, though disallowed or modified by the chancellor, come before the supreme court attended by the same presumption of correctness that waited on them before the chancellor.[47] In Kentucky, the court of appeals is not authorized to pass on the correctness of a final judgment granting a divorce,[48] and the decree of the chancellor refusing a divorce will be given great weight, and only reversed where manifestly wrong.[49] Likewise the award of custody of children in such case will be sustained, where sustained by the preponderance of the evidence.[50] A decree for defendant in divorce on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless clearly wrong.[51] Though on appeal in equity the court reviews the evidence, it will defer somewhat to the opinion of the chancellor.[52]

Proceedings before referees or auditors.[53]—Findings of a referee,[54] or an auditing judge,[55] or an auditor, confirmed by the court below,[56] will not be disturbed except in clear cases, especially where submitted on oral testimony, in which case findings will be treated as the verdict of a jury.[57] A finding based on a statutory presumption after the repeal of the statute will be reversed.[58] Where the trial court strikes out a material finding supported by the testimony, its judgment will be reversed.[59]

(§ 13) G. Rulings and decisions on intermediate appeals.[60]—Findings of fact in the state court are conclusive on the supreme court of the United States.[61] Error in the admission of evidence at the trial not complained of on error in the circuit court of appeals will not be reviewed by the supreme court on error to the latter court.[62]

In Illinois, where the appellate court affirms the judgment of the trial court, its decision as to the facts proved is conclusive on a further appeal to the supreme court,[63] though the affirmance was on a disagreement of two judges, the third not sitting.[64] In such case the supreme court will not consider whether the weight of the evidence supports the verdict or findings,[65] but will only inquire whether there is any evidence in the record fairly tending to sustain them.[66] The appellant, however, has an undoubted right to have the appellate court pass on the question whether the verdict is against the weight of the evidence,[67] and it will be presumed on appeal to the supreme court that the appellate court did its duty in that respect, the question being properly before it.[68] In reversing a judgment and rendering one of its own, the appellate court must give therein a recital of the facts as found as a basis for review by the supreme court.[69] Such recital should include every ultimate material fact on which the rights of the parties depend,[70] and should be of the ultimate, not the mere evidentiary facts,[71] nor of mere legal conclusions.[72] The judgment of the appellate court in such case is conclusive as to the facts thus recited,[73] but not as to legal conclusions inserted therein,[74] the supreme court being authorized to review as to the law arising out of such facts.[75] In cases tried to the court and not directly appealable, the supreme court can review only as to questions of law arising on the pleadings, evidence, etc., where no written propositions of law were requested.[76] The certificate of the appellate court presents no question for consideration unless the record shows questions of law to be passed upon.[77]

The unanimous decision of the appellate division of the supreme court of New York that there is evidence to support a finding of fact is not reviewable in the court of appeals,[78] and an un-unanimous affirmance is binding if supported by some evidence;[79] but the grant,[80] though not the refusal,[81] of a nonsuit, is reviewable as to all questions in the case. Where the decision of the trial court does not separately state the facts found, and the order of the appellate division does not state that the reversal is upon a question of fact, it will be presumed that all facts warranted by the evidence and necessary to support the judgment are found by the trial court.[82] Where the order of the appellate division does not state that the reversal was on a question of fact, the court of appeals will presume that it was on the law.[83] Where the appellate division grants a new trial on questions of fact, the court of appeals cannot review even rulings duly excepted to if there was a question of fact involved.[84] Where the appellate division reverses on the law the court of appeals can examine only, (1) whether material error was committed in receiving or rejecting evidence, (2) whether the conclusion of law is supported by the facts found, and (3) whether any material finding of fact is without evidence to support it.[85] If the appellate division grants a new trial solely on exceptions of law, the court of appeals may review such questions of law, and if the exceptions were not well taken reverse the order and reinstate the judgment.[86] The findings of the appellate division on the facts are binding on the court of appeals.[87] A finding as to what is the law of another state[88] and as to the liability of a trustee for sums misappropriated by a co-trustee,[89] are on questions of fact within this rule. Where the appellate division reverses on the facts as well as the law and the record on further appeal presents a question of fact, the judgment will be affirmed, unless dismissal is necessary to prevent injustice.[90] Where the findings of the trial court are supported by the evidence, and sustain a judgment rendered thereon which has been affirmed by the appellate division, failure to find other facts claimed to have been established by the evidence is not error of law reviewable in the court of appeals.[91] On appeal from an order of affirmance by the general term of the city court of New York, only questions of law can be reviewed, the facts found in the city court being conclusive.[92] Neither can the supreme court exercise discretionary power as to the conduct of the trial,[93] but on appeal from the municipal court the appellate term of the supreme court examines the facts as well as the law.[94] On appeal to the surrogate from an appraisement of the transfer tax, and subsequent appeal to the appellate division, the latter court cannot consider questions not specified in the notice of appeal to the surrogate.[95]

A reversal of the common pleas by the circuit, in Ohio, on a question of law may be reviewed by the supreme court,[96] and in the absence of a recital that the reversal was on the weight of the evidence, it will be presumed to have been on the law.[97]

In Tennessee the supreme court is bound by the finding of facts made by the court of chancery appeals, and also by its inferences of fact from the evidentiary facts found.[98]

Matters not raised in the court of civil appeals of Texas cannot be raised on further appeal to the supreme court.[99]

(§ 13) H. Effect of decision on former review in same court.[1]—The decision of an appellate court is binding on that court on a subsequent appeal or writ of error in the same case,[2] where the evidence is in legal effect the same,[3] and no matter necessarily involved in the adjudication on the former appeal will be reexamined[4] in the same case, though in an independent subsequent case the court may depart from a rule or principle it may have announced.[5] That the rule laid down has been modified in the interim by other cases is immaterial.[6] All questions raised by the record and necessarily involved in the decision are settled, though not touched upon in the opinion.[7] Matters not necessarily passed upon,[8] or questions which might have been but were not determined on the former appeal are not settled,[9] neither are questions not reviewed because not properly presented for review. If the petition fails to state a cause of action, it may be attacked after remand regardless of the number of times the case has been before the appellate court.[10] Where upon the former appeal the court did not render a judgment determining the rights of the parties, the decision does not bind.[11] The rule does not apply to language not necessary to a decision of the case,[12] nor to mere expressions of opinion as to matters not involved in the decision, nor to questions referred to by intimation only and not determined.[13] Propositions of law on which the court were equally divided are not settled,[14] and a pro-forma affirmance in the nature of a dismissal, resulting from failure to properly present the case concludes nothing.[15] A second appeal brings up only the proceedings of the lower court on the mandate sent down in the prior appeal, and no question decided on the prior appeal can be considered.[16] Where the appellate court holds that plaintiff's evidence was sufficient to go to the jury, a verdict in his favor on the same evidence on retrial will not be disturbed on the sufficiency of the evidence,[17] but such decision does not necessarily require a decision in plaintiff's favor, and where the court sitting as a jury finds against plaintiff on retrial, his decision will not be disturbed.[18] On the other hand, a verdict for plaintiff on evidence that has once been determined insufficient will be set aside.[19] Where the validity of a patent has been sustained in the appellate court, its decision is binding on a lower court, in a suit involving the same patent, as to all matters before the court in the prior case, whether discussed in the opinion or not.[20] Where in an action for a personal injury against two defendants, the jury are instructed that one or both are liable, and instructed to find which, a reversal of a judgment on a verdict finding one liable and exonerating the other does not necessarily determine that the other is liable, but an appeal from the judgment in his favor will be determined on the evidence on which it was founded, irrespective of the other appeal.[21] The supreme court of the United States will revise the decision that a territorial court made on a second writ of error, though the territorial court considered itself bound by its decision on the prior writ, the prior decision not being reviewable in the supreme court for lack of finality.[22] A decree entered in strict accordance with the mandate on a prior appeal will be affirmed on motion.[23] An attempt by a substituted party on second appeal to raise a constitutional question, which in the prior appeal it was decided his predecessor was in no position to raise, must fail.[24] On proceedings in error after a retrial ordered by the court of appeals in Kansas, the supreme court will review the questions decided on the previous appeal, where they are of great public importance, and the decision below raises a conflict in the law.[25] The decision on appeal from an order continuing an injunction against trespass until the hearing of the trespass case is not binding on appeal in the trespass case.[26] A dismissal of an appeal concludes all questions raised by the motion.[27]

§ 14. Provisional, ancillary, and interlocutory relief.[28]—Where an order appointing a receiver was appealed to the supreme court and affirmed, and pending that appeal the main case was decided and appealed to the appellate court, the latter court will not enjoin possession by the receiver pending its decision.[29]

the trial might have been the same without the error.[34] A general verdict for defendant where an invalid defense was submitted cannot be sustained.[35] A final decree rendered in the absence of necessary parties must be reversed and remanded in order that proper parties may be made regardless of how notice of the defect is brought to the attention of the court.[36] Where plaintiff fails to make out a case, a judgment rendered on verdict for defendant will be affirmed, notwithstanding errors in defendant's behalf.[37] A ruling correct on the merits or sustainable on a correct theory will not require reversal, though based on a wrong reason,[38] and a verdict supported by sufficient evidence will not be set aside because in conflict with an erroneous instruction.[39] A profitless reversal,[40] or one to permit the recovery of nominal damages,[41] will not be made, nor can plaintiff who is entitled to no verdict object that one in his favor is inadequate;[42] but a verdict for an amount unsupported by the evidence may be set aside, on defendant's appeal, though one for a larger amount would have been sustained.[43] A nominal judgment for a plaintiff entitled to none will be affirmed where he alone appeals, though it would have been reversed had defendant appealed.[44] A judgment that has been satisfied will be affirmed.[45] An affirmance on one party's bill in such terms as to deprive his adversary of any benefit from reversal on his independent bill will preclude consideration of the question presented thereby.[46]

46. Edwards v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 118 Ga. 678, 45 S. E. 462.

Counsel will not be encouraged in stubborn efforts to demonstrate that rulings upon unimportant and trifling matters of practice are erroneous.[47] Manifest error in submitting an issue of law to the jury will necessitate a reversal where the verdict is not responsive to the issues and it does not appear what else was submitted,[48] and where the damages were assessed under an invalid count, the judgment will be reversed, though the declaration contains a good count and the damages are for a sum that would be sustained under the valid count.[49] An incorrect assessment for street improvement will not be disturbed where appellant fails to show that his assessment would be materially less under a correct apportionment.[50] Where both parties bring error and establish it by the record, reversal must follow.[51] Decision may be had by agreement.[52] A void judgment cannot be reversed in Kentucky before a motion to set it aside has been made and overruled below.[53]

Where a party has committed a defect or default in proceedings, a pro forma affirmance may be made without consideration of the merits,[54] as where pleadings necessary to a determination of the issues are not in the record and are beyond the reach of the court;[55] and affirmance follows where the alleged statement of facts is stricken from the files and no issue is presented on the record proper;[56] so where there is no real dispute.[57] An application for affirmance on the ground of failure to perfect the appeal will be denied where not preceded by the proper statutory steps,[58] and where the appellant on being granted an appeal on terms makes no move to comply, a presentation of the record for affirmance is unnecessary, as the judgment below stands.[59] In Texas, failure of appellant to file briefs below is not ground for affirmance on certificate.[60] Appellee may not have an affirmance for want of prosecution on a certificate filed after the term at which the transcript should have been presented, a writ of error having been sued out in the interim.[61]

Failure to file briefs is tantamount to a confession of error, but reversal will not follow failure to argue a point unless necessary for the protection of the court.[62]

An equal division of sitting and qualified judges makes an affirmance.[63] Reversal or affirmance must be entire, unless parts of the judgment are severable,[64] but where a judgment consists of severable parts, there may be affirmance as to the part not affected by the error, and reversal as to the rest.[65] A judgment bad as to one is bad as to all, and must be reversed as to all defendants, though it would have been proper against certain of them.[66] Where in trespass to try title the judgment is in favor of intervenors, and defendants alone appeal, it will be affirmed as to plaintiffs, though reversed as to defendants and intervenors.[67] As between appellees no change can be made in the judgment appealed from.[68] Affirmance of an interlocutory judgment will lead to affirmance of the final decree, where no other questions are presented.[69] On reversal, appellee will be adjudged to repay money he has received on the judgment, with legal interest.[70] Where a judgment in a creditor's action to compel an executor to sell real estate to pay debts is reversed, the defendant is entitled to a restitution of the property and an accounting for mesne profits, notwithstanding a new trial was ordered.[71]

Reversal on terms.[72]—The court cannot, on reversing a judgment for plaintiff in slander, put defendant on terms by which the judgment will stand as security for any judgment rendered on retrial, though the original defendant has deceased pending appeal, and reversal will abate the suit.[73]

(§ 15) B. Transfers and removals, and certifications or reservations.[74]—The circuit court of appeals will certify a question as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court to the supreme court, and meanwhile reserve the other questions in the case.[75] An appeal to the wrong court, in Missouri, will be transferred by that court suo motu to the court having jurisdiction.[76] And in case of an erroneous transfer by the court of appeals the supreme court will return the cause to that court.[77] Where a case is appealed, in Indiana, to the supreme court on a constitutional question, the action of that court in transferring the case to the appellate court, which is without jurisdiction of such questions, in effect decides such question adversely to the appellant.[78]

(§ 15) C. Remand or final determination.[79]—Final determination may be given[80] if the pleadings show conclusively that plaintiff in error is entitled to judgment,[81] or if no different or more favorable result can be reached on new trial;[82] but if any material fact or right is in doubt,[83] or the interests of justice require it,[84] or if there be evidence tending to make a case or defense, though

Where the court below decides a case as upon bill and answer, overlooking the fact that a general replication has been filed the decree will be reversed and the case remanded for decision as though no decree had been entered. Echols v. Tracewell, 52 W. Va. 614, 44 S. E. 164. Final judgment cannot be awarded in an election contest where the trial court has found that election officers were guilty of wilful malconduct, and it is not shown, and cannot be determined, how much or in what way the vote was affected thereby. Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 268, 74 P. 841. Where a complaint contains two distinct causes of action, and a counterclaim is pleaded to both of them growing out of the contract on which the second cause of action is founded, and on the trial orders are entered setting aside the verdict on the first cause of action as inadequate, denying defendant's motion to set aside the verdict on the second cause, and dismissing the counterclaim, which orders on appeal are all affirmed, the defendant is entitled to a retrial of the whole case without express provision therefor, and without motion therefor in the appellate court. 84. Laporte v. Laporte, 109 La. 958, 34 So. 38; Smith's Heirs v. Johnston, 110 La. 567, 34 So. 677. On reversal of a judgment as unsupported by the evidence, it is within the discretion of the court to remand for a new trial, but such course will be followed only when it appears that the ends of justice will be best served thereby. Maupin v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557, 45 S. E. 1003. In furtherance of justice, where a finding is set aside, and the former trial the weight be against it,[85] or where the reversal is not based upon findings or a verdict,[86] or where the verdict or findings on which the judgment is based are not supported by the evidence,[87] a remand for a new trial is necessary.[88] Where the appellate court of Illinois reverses a case tried to a jury, for an error of law, it should remand it for a new trial.[89] Where an equitable proceeding is erroneously brought before the clerk and appealed to the superior court, that court will be permitted to retain jurisdiction and make all necessary orders, and to that end the case will be redocketed in that court.[90] Remand will not be made on reversal of judgment for plaintiff on the ground that defendant owed him no legal duty,[91] or where plaintiff could not recover in any event.[92] Remand will not be made in a chancery case on account of newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative.[93] Where the issues are numerous, and the trial involved much time and expense, a retrial as to all will not be granted, on the ground that the finding on an unimportant issue is not sustained by the evidence.[94] On appeal from a decree of specific performance for complainant after the improper sustaining of a demurrer to the cross bill, final decree for specific performance cannot be entered, but the case must be remanded for issue on the cross bill.[95] The appellate court of Illinois may reverse without remanding, on the ground that the weight of evidence did not authorize the verdict, and in such case the facts found will conclude the supreme court, but it may inquire into the law arising out of such facts.[96]

Judgment may be modified,[97] if everything necessary to advise the court in so doing is before it,[98] or the facts admitted and the judgment as modified, af-was unsatisfactory, instead of entering or directing a new decree, the appellate court will remand the cause for further proceedings. Faulkner v. Sims [Neb.] 94 N. W. 113.

Kinney, 66 Kan. 797, 72 P. 392. In Michigan, the court will not enter judgment for appellant, where there is a reversal because of lack of evidence to sustain the verdict, for the reason that the evidence on a new trial may not be the same as in the record. firmed;[99] but remittitur cannot be ordered where the facts necessary to a decision are not before the court,[1] and the evidence may be different on a new trial,[2] nor where the court is not authorized to find the facts.[3] Clerical errors,[4] and errors in computation may be corrected.[5] It cannot be modified in favor of a party not appealing,[6] and judgment for an amount greater than that recovered below cannot be awarded on appellee's cross assignment, though the proof is clear.[7] Where in conversion, possession and damages are both awarded, and there is no basis for the former, the judgment cannot be modified by eliminating the provision for possession, since the damages are presumptively for detention and not value.[8] On appeal from a circuit court to a circuit court of appeals by one of several attorneys from an order allowing them compensation out of a trust fund, the court is not limited to a redivision of the total amount awarded them, but may increase or decrease the allowance of the appellant without disturbing the others, or may increase or decrease the total allowance and redivide it as seems equitable.[9] Where a case has been tried to the court and conclusions of fact filed, the judgment can be reformed on appeal, and such judgment rendered as the record shows should have been rendered.[10] Where the supreme court of Missouri declines jurisdiction on the ground that the constitutional question was not properly raised below, the court of appeals will, notwithstanding that decision, relieve appellant from that portion of the judgment founded on the unconstitutional[11] statute, the case being clear.

Remand with directions.[12]—Judgment may be ordered for appellee on reversal, if all facts necessary to a determination of the party's rights are before the court.[13] On an appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll alone, a finding that nothing was due defendant on his cross complaint will prevent the direction of judgment in his favor.[14] Remand with leave to amend may be made in a proper case,[15] and where a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the declaration on general and special grounds was general, but on appeal is sustained only on a special ground which is amendable, plaintiff will be allowed to amend before the judgment of the supreme court is made the judgment of the court below.[16] In case issues of fact necessary to the determination of the cause are not passed upon at the trial, but the testimony is full and convincing, the appellate court will find the facts and direct such decree as its determination may require.[17] On review of a decree denying an injunction and adjudging title and possession in defendant, where the evidence shows title in neither party, the decree will be modified so as to dismiss the bill.[18] On appeal from an interlocutory decree for an injunction and an accounting, the cause will not be remanded with leave to reopen without first reversing, nor will reversal be granted for that purpose, but on proper application the appeal will be dismissed without prejudice, it appearing that the appellee will not be prejudiced thereby.[19] Upon reversal, the question of restitution rests in the sound discretion of the court.[20]

An affirmance may be conditioned,[21] on a remittitur of excessive[22] or illegal sums awarded,[23] or on consent that the judgment be modified by striking out the objectionable relief.[24] A general verdict on several items, one of which is invalid, will be affirmed on remittitur of the amount of the invalid one, it being of trifling importance.[25] Where it is impossible to segregate the damages allowed for various injuries, the admission of incompetent evidence of one of them will not be cured by a remittitur.[26] Judgment in slander cannot be modified by remittitur where founded on error, though defendant has died pending appeal and reversal will have the effect to abate the suit.[27] Where a defendant in ejectment is awarded damages to which he is not entitled, a voluntary remittitur will not cure the error, but the case will be remanded with directions to dismiss the claim for damages.[28] Where plaintiff within the time limited appeals from an order granting a new trial unless he will within a certain time remit part of his recovery, he cannot on appeal have a further opportunity to remit.[29] where only a question of fact is presented.[32] When a lower court of appeal reverses, it should make findings or conclusions to support and explain its decision,[33] and where it fails to do so, a motion to return the record to the court of appeals and not mandamus is the proper remedy.[34] The ultimate facts which the evidence establishes are what is required, and not the evidence itself,[35] or a finding upon every issue presented.[36]

(§ 15) E. Modifying or relieving from appellate decree.[37]—A formal judgment on appeal, based on voluntary appearance by the attorney of defendant in error after his death, is void and will be set aside on the facts being brought to the court's knowledge during the term.[38] Where plaintiff, on the sustaining of a demurrer, elects not to amend his declaration and appeals from a judgment for defendant, the appellate court after affirmance will not modify its judgment so as to allow amendment.[39] A remittitur cannot be ordered returned for the correction of an error therein after being once sent down.[40] Leave given to apply for a bill of review in the court below merely lifts the bar of the appellate decree, and leaves the application to be determined below on its merits, subject to review on appeal as in other cases.[41] In South Dakota, there must be an order to show cause before modification will be considered on motion.[42]

(§ 15) F. Mandate and retrial.[43]—Where the court of appeals reverses a decree for the probate of a will, the remittitur is properly filed in the surrogate's court, and the order making the judgment of the court of appeals the judgment of the surrogate's court is properly entered in that court.[44]

Decisions construing mandates are noted below.[45] The entire record may be considered.[46] A misnomer in an unnecessary recital of a party's name in the mandate will not vitiate it.[47]

The statute of Texas providing that no mandate shall issue after more than a year after decision applies to pending cases, and a case is properly dismissed below where the mandate was not taken out for more than a year after the enactment of the statute.[48] Upon remand with directions, the trial court has no jurisdiction but to follow the mandate,[49] which it must do, or a second reversal will follow.[50] The successful party is entitled to a judgment in accordance with the mandate, notwithstanding the intervention of new parties.[51] The trial court will follow the plan determined by the appellate court for the distribution of a fund.[52] When an order of the district court sustaining a claim of privilege by a witness in a bankruptcy case is reversed on appeal, the district court on remand properly vacates an order of the referee discharging the trustee, and requires the witness to attend for further examination.[53] Failure of the clerk below to make the proper entries does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to carry out the provisions of the mandate,[54] and the pendency in the appellate court of a second motion for rehearing is no ground for the disregard of the regular mandate to enforce the decree.[55] The reversal of a foreclosure judgment avoids a sale thereon.[56] Where, on reversal, vacation of a judicial sale is ordered on conditions, it is error for the trial court to refuse to comply with the mandate for noncompliance with the conditions without first setting a time within which compliance must be made.[57] Error cannot be assigned on the entry of a judgment in exact compliance with the judgment of the appellate court.[58]

Mandamus lies to enforce obedience to the mandate.[59]

It is not competent for the circuit court to amend or correct the mandate.[60] Where a case is remanded with directions, the correctness of the decision is not open to question in the trial court,[61] and any error in the remittitur must be corrected by the appellate court.[62] The action of the lower court in making the judgment operative against the proper person as shown by the opinion, regardless of a misnomer in the mandate, is a construction, not an amendment thereof.[63] The reversal of a foreclosure and deficiency judgment as excessive entirely vacates it, and the trial court cannot modify it by deducting the amount adjudged excessive.[64]

Retrial.[65]—No notice of retrial after remand is necessary where a cause once on the docket stays until disposed of,[66] but appellee is entitled to notice of reinstatement of the case below on return of the mandate, after a delay of four years after reversal.[67] Failure for more than a year to prosecute an action after reversal and remand will necessitate its dismissal.[68]

A general reversal of the findings and judgment of the trial court leaves the cause, except as to matters adjudicated on the appeal, in all respects as though no trial had ever been had,[69] and except that a new trial is necessary,[70] reinvests the trial court with discretion to proceed as justice may require.[71] On reversal of a judgment rendered on the third successive verdict for plaintiff, the retrial was limited to the amount of recovery.[72] The decision of the appellate court stands as the law of the case on retrial in so far as the facts are the same as on the appeal.[73] A reversal on the ground that the evidence is not sufficient is controlling on retrial, the evidence being the same,[74] as is a holding that the evidence is sufficient, where the same and additional evidence is produced,[75] and where a judgment on directed verdict is reversed on the ground that the issues should have been submitted to the jury, the trial court cannot set aside the verdict rendered on the second trial on substantially the same evidence.[76] A reversal for insufficiency of evidence to support the judgment and remand generally does not preclude the introduction of further evidence on the new trial,[77] and where a defect of proof on the only issue in the case is supplied by uncontradicted evidence on retrial, a verdict may be directed.[78] Where the appellate court holds that defendant only owed plaintiff the duty of abstention from willful or wanton injury, the question of negligence on retrial is immaterial.[79] After the appellate court has decided that plaintiff's complaint states a cause of action, it is only necessary to determine whether his evidence tends to support it.[80] Where an equity decree for plaintiff is reversed with leave to amend, nothing is binding on the trial court except that the pleadings and evidence on the first trial did not authorize the decree.[81] On retrial, after reversal, it must be assumed that a question presented but not discussed by the appellate court was decided adversely to appellee.[82] Upon new trial after the reversal of a decree for the probate of a will the proponent must prove anew the making of the will.[83] A pro forma affirmance for defects in the record concludes the trial court on all questions that might have been reviewed by a proper bill of exceptions.[84]

Unless restricted by mandate, amendments may be allowed in the court below,[85] but a motion to amend by introducing a defense and counterclaim previously denied because of laches will not be granted,[86] and defendant cannot plead on the trial after reversal of an order opening default which called forth an amendment of the petition which was not material.[87] The action is properly dismissed below where the judgment of the court of appeals leaves no ground of recovery and plaintiff does not amend.[88] Where, on affirmance of a judgment for plaintiff on the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint and refusal to plead further, the court remands the case for further proceedings, it is discretionary with the trial court to allow defendant to plead further.[89]

§ 16. Rehearing and relief thereon.[90]—A petition to rehear will not be entertained unless it appears that some material point was overlooked, or some controlling authority escaped the attention of the court, or some other weighty consideration requires it.[91] A time is usually provided within which rehearings must be taken or petitions filed,[92] but the Federal court rule to that effect is for the protection of the court and may be waived by it in a proper case.[93] An order staying the mandate after judgment indefinitely has the effect to retain the jurisdiction and incidentally the power to grant a rehearing, even after the term so long as the mandate has not issued.[94] Where the supreme court has summarily denied a certiorari to the circuit court of appeals on a petition setting up the identical issues decided in that court, the circuit court of appeals will assume that the supreme court impliedly passed on such issues and will decline to reopen the case by rehearing.[95] Appellee who filed no brief before the decision will not be given a rehearing to discuss the questions presented by appellant.[96] Rehearing will not be granted for immaterial or trivial errors,[97] and will be refused if the proper judgment has been rendered, even though reached by faulty reasoning.[98] Matters not certified by counsel as grounds will not be considered.[99] An alias motion to recall a mandate is not the proper remedy to take advantage of new matters affecting the merits of the controversy coming to the party's attention, since the judgment was entered.[1] Points not made on the original hearing will not as a rule be considered on application for rehearing,[2] and an omission from the statement of facts cannot be supplied by extrinsic evidence,[3] but a question of jurisdiction is available, though not previously raised.[4] Payment of a judg-

3. Deed proved below omitted from statement. Williamson v. Work [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 266.

4. Objection that question could be con-

ment on affirmance thereof does not prevent rehearing and final reversal.[5] A rehearing after affirmance will not be awarded on appellee's affidavit that he should not have recovered below.[6] Rehearing on appeal in a habeas corpus case will be dismissed where, since affirmance, the prisoner has been released on bail.[7] On rehearing, the cause will be considered as though no former decision had been made,[8] and inconsistency with arguments advanced on the hearing will not prevent appellant advancing a sound argument.[9] A judgment establishing the existence of a right in one of the parties is admissible as evidence of that right, though a rehearing is pending on appeal therefrom.[10]

§ 17. Liability on bonds and the like.[11]—Principal and sureties are liable, though appeal was taken under a void statute, where the court assumed jurisdiction without objection and affirmed the judgment.[12] One who gives a supersedeas bond to hold in force pending proceedings in error an attachment or garnishment discharged by order of court, cannot be heard in defense of a suit on such bond to say that defendant to whom it was given had no interest in the property, or that the proceedings were irregular.[13] A supersedeas bond may be reformed in equity.[14]

Extent of liability.[15]—A bond superseding execution directed against specific property will not cover rents, damages, profits and taxes allowed by the appellant to accumulate on the property pending the appeal.[16] Where a land contract is foreclosed and a time for performance set, a bond on appeal from that decree conditioned to pay for use and occupation of the premises, in case of affirmance, creates a liability for use and occupation only for the time subsequent to the date set for performance.[17] On appeal by creditors of an estate from an order settling the account of trustee, a claimant filing a cross appeal cannot on affirmance recover interest on the amount allowed him, as against the obligees on the appeal bond.[18]

Satisfaction and discharge of sureties.[19]—As between principal and surety, the approval of the bond by the proper officer is immaterial.[20] Satisfaction of a judgment in an unlawful detainer suit for restitution of premises and rent does not release liability on the appeal bond, conditioned for payment of rents pending the appeal.[21]

Forfeiture and enforcement.[22]—A bond conditioned to "abide the judgment if the same shall be affirmed and pay the costs" is broken if the judgment be affirmed and not paid.[23] One who successfully attacks an appeal undertaking is estopped from subsequently contending for its validity.[24] That defendant in

error procured an order that additional sureties be furnished within ten days or the bond be stricken from the files, which were never furnished, is no defense to an action on the bond after affirmance.[25] The petition must allege that a supersedeas was issued by the clerk following the execution of the bond.[26] A petition alleging that the judgment was affirmed and is unpaid fails to allege a breach of a bond conditioned to pay "whatever judgment may be rendered on dismissal or trial" of the appeal.[27]

§ 1. General; special; what constitutes each.[30] General appearance.[31]—Coming into court for any other purpose than to contest jurisdiction of the person is a general appearance,[32] even though understood and intended by the person so appearing as a special appearance.[33] There need be no formal filing of papers.[34] One contesting the question of jurisdiction of the person must confine himself strictly to that issue,[35] as any invocation of the powers of the court over the subject-matter waives the special appearance,[36] and results in submission to the juris-

Appearance personally and by counsel on a motion to dissolve an attachment, where defendant had been served with a rule to plead and had filed an answer and demurrer, before judgment was entered for failure to appear. 36. Teater v. King [Wash.] 76 P. 688. One who, after appearing specially, moves the court for affirmative relief in his own behalf, thereby makes a general appearance, and subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Montague v. Marunda [Neb.] 99 N. W. 653. Where a defendant appears to object to the court's jurisdiction of his person, and failing to obtain a ruling thereon, answers and goes to trial, he thereby waives the obdiction of the court for all purposes.[37] However, when the lack of personal jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the record, the defendant may unite with his plea to the jurisdiction a defense going only to the plaintiff's right of recovery without waiving his right to insist on his plea to the jurisdiction; but the exception does not extend to affirmative relief, as a counterclaim or cross action waives the former plea.[38] A subsequent general appearance does not waive the right to question in the higher court the action of the court on the question of jurisdiction.[39]

Appeal.[40]—As to the effect of an appeal from a judgment void for want of personal jurisdiction, the decisions are in conflict, some holding that such an appeal constitutes an appearance so that both the appellate court[41] and the trial court, when the case is remanded,[42] acquire jurisdiction of the person of the party appealing; others that prosecution of error from such a judgment does not constitute a general appearance in the action in which the judgment was rendered.[43] The date of a voluntary appearance is to be taken as the date of the commencement of the proceedings in error, where no summons is issued.[44]

Special appearance.[45]—The object and only office of a special appearance is the presentation of a purely jurisdictional question.[46] There may be a special appearance to move for dismissal for insufficient service of a writ,[47] to have an attachment vacated,[48] to file a petition for removal from a state to a Federal court,[49] to have a cause remanded to a state from a Federal court,[50] to plead privilege,[51] or to move to quash service or to strike suggestions of damages.[52] A defendant sued in a state court where, by statute, special appearances are forbidden, may appear specially in a Federal court to which the action has been transferred.[53]

53. Louden Machinery Co. v. American Malleable Iron Co., 127 F. 1008.

A defendant appearing specially is a "party" to the action, entitled to costs if his motion be sustained.[54]

Appearance as a witness is not an appearance as a party.[55]

§ 2. Who may make or enter.[56]—Jurisdiction may be acquired by voluntary appearance in person or by attorney,[57] and where an attorney, authorized to enter a special appearance only, honestly pleads matters amounting to a general appearance, the client is bound by such general appearance.[58] A wholly unauthorized appearance by one assuming to act as attorney is of no effect, and a judgment entered thereon will be set aside upon a satisfactory showing that the appearance was unauthorized.[59] Authority to appear for a party will be presumed from such appearance noted on the record on appeal.[60] The rule permitting appearance and answer by a person wrongly served, and yet sought to be held, is to enable him to plead that he is not liable because he is not the person against whom the plaintiff's alleged claim exists.[61] Hence it has no application where such person is notified that no claim is made against him individually, and the plaintiff will not be compelled to accept service of notice of appearance and answer.[62]

§ 3. Effect.[63]—Voluntary general appearance makes unnecessary the service of summons,[64] or citation,[65] or notice,[66] and hence results in a waiver of all defects in original process,[67] and of the question of jurisdiction of the person,[68] or

Voluntary demurrer or answer waives defects in service or return of summons. Adams v. Hopkins [Cal.] 77 P. 712. Successive general appearances to file demurrer to answer, and to take depositions, waive ob-of an objection to the venue,[69] or an erroneous change of venue,[70] and gives the court complete jurisdiction for all the purposes of the action.[71] An objection going to the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter is not waived by a general appearance,[72] nor is a prior void judgment validated thereby.[73] A general appearance waives a statute requiring, as a condition precedent to jurisdiction, that a nonresident plaintiff give security for costs.[74] Where defendant appears personally and pleads to the jurisdiction, the entry of a general appearance by his attorney, who urges only the jurisdictional issue, will not waive the special appearance.[75]

Withdrawal.[76]—Appearance being equivalent to personal service it is error to permit a withdrawal to the prejudice of plaintiff.[77]

A nonresident who appears and answers to the merits subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Cassidy v. Willis [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 40. One who has appeared, without objection to the court's jurisdiction, filed an amended complaint and reply, and proceeded to trial, cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court after judgment. Note: The agreement to submit must name each arbitrator. Holdridge v. Stowell, 39 Minn. 360. The power of setting aside an award is analogous to the power of granting a new trial (Buckwater v. Russell, 119 Pa. 495) but as a general rule, in the absence of fraud (Masury v. Whiton, 111 N. Y. 679, 18 N. E. 638; Goddard v. King, 40 Minn. 164, 41 N. W. 659), or misconduct (Shipman v. Fletcher, 82 Va. 601; Robinson v. Shanks, 118 Ind.

a sufficient basis for submission, though it is not well founded.[86] Technical words are not required to make a binding submission,[87] but it is not to be extended by implication beyond its plain words,[88] or so as to include subsequent differences.[89]

Who may make.—The United States by its attorney may be bound by an agreement to submit to arbitration.[90] An infant cannot submit a controversy to arbitration,[91] and an attempted submission is absolutely void.[92] One of two joint plaintiffs may agree with defendant to arbitrate,[93] and the award is binding on the parties so agreeing.[94]

Effect.—The submission of subject-matter of a pending suit to arbitration displaces such pending suit.[95] A party cannot withdraw from an agreement for arbitration after an award made.[96]

§ 3. The arbitrators and umpire.[97]—Arbitrators must be impartial and disinterested,[98] but prior service of an arbitrator in a similar capacity does not render him incompetent, nor invalidate an award in which he joined in the absence of a showing that he was prejudiced.[99] Designation of all the arbitrators by one party is waived by proceeding before them without objection.[1]

§ 4. Hearing and procedure before arbitrators.[2]—The arbitrators must act without unreasonable delay.[3] They must give notice to the parties of the time and place of hearing,[4] but a party attending,[5] or refusing to attend,[6] waives notice. Where an umpire is to act only in case of difference, which does not arise, his non-participation will not invalidate the award,[7] and on the other hand unauthorized 125, 20 N. E. 713), the award is conclusive (Thornton v. McCormick, 75 Iowa, 285, 39 N. W. 502), and it is presumed that all matters submitted were considered. Schmidt v. Glade, 126 Ill. 485, 18 N. 5. Shutt v. Hebebrand [Neb.] 95 N. W. 785. Where parties were present by their counsel at the hearing it is immaterial that they had no notice of the meeting. Mississippi Cotton Oil Co. v. Buster [Miss.] 36 So. 146. Counsel appearing for a party has power to consent that the award as drawn up be put in proper form and afterward signed, and the fact that this was done does not show that the party whom he represented had no opportunity to be present. 6. Plaintiff told arbitrator that he would not attend and did not want anything to do with it. Vincent v. German Ins. Co., 120 Iowa, 272, 94 N. W. 458.

7. The umpire never attended. Vincent v. German Ins. Co., 120 Iowa, 272, 94 N. W. 458. But under an agreement for appraisal of property by two referees who upon disagreement were to choose a third and the finding of two of them to be final, it is sufficient if a third referee who is chosen to appraise certain articles only, and accepts the agreed appraisal of the original referees participation by the umpire must be objected to at the hearing.[8] The arbitrators are bound to hear all material testimony offered by the parties,[9] unless it appears to have been the intention that they act on their own knowledge.[10] Equity will appraise property if arbitrators named in a contract fail to agree.[11]

§ 5. The award; requisites, validity and effect.[12]—The award must conform to the submission and cover all matters submitted.[13] An award need not be signed by the arbitrators at the same time and place as found,[14] and is not void because an umpire signs as "arbitrator."[15] The authority of arbitrators terminates with the time limit specified in the agreement.[16]

Enforcement of award.[17]—An award which has been made a rule of court may be enforced by contempt proceedings, but a writ of fi. fa. sued out for that purpose, will upon motion be quashed.[18] An agreement for arbitration will not be enforced at the instance of a party who willfully violates the contract.[19] A mutual submission is a sufficient consideration to support a note given in pursuance of the award.[20]

Review of award.[21]—In the absence of statute there is no appeal.[22] Every reasonable presumption is in favor of an award.[23] To justify setting it aside there must be misconduct or error prejudicial to the rights of the complaining party[24] clearly proved,[25] errors of judgment only not being sufficient.[26] After having accepted an award one cannot deny its effect as such,[27] nor can he after allowing entry of judgment assert that it should not have been made a rule of court.[29]

An arbitrator cannot contradict an award he has signed.[30]

§ 6. International disputes.[31]—In a controversy between a foreign government and citizens of the United States an award signed by two of three members of a commission to arbitrate cannot be defeated because its commissioner resigned after the hearings were closed, where it was agreed that a majority vote should govern.[32]

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

§ 1. Right of Argument (306).
§ 2. Opening Statements (307).
§ 3. Kind, Extent, and Mode of Argument or Comment During Trial (307).
§ 4. Excuses for Impropriety (311).
§ 5. Objections and Rulings (311).
§ 6. Action of Court or Counsel During Objection (312).

§ 1. Right of argument.[34]—The party having the burden of proof is entitled to open and close the argument,[35] unless he waives his right by allowing the other party to put in evidence,[36] or loses his right to close by the other party's making no reply.[37] Where both are claimants, the matter rests in the sound discretion of the court,[38] which will seldom be disturbed.[39] The court, by rule, may limit the length of argument,[40] or forbid an attorney who has been a witness from making the consent. McLeod v. Graham, 132 N. C. 473, 43 S. E. 935.

34. See 1 Curr. L. 209.

35. In action on note where answer admitted complaint but set up affirmative defenses, the defendant was entitled to open and close. Long & Allstatter Co. v. Barnes [Ind.] 69 N. E. 454. Under Iowa Code, § 3701, where the party having the burden of the issue has the right to the opening and closing argument, issues entirely unsupported by evidence, or established by evidence with no conflict, are not for jury, or to be considered in determining which party is entitled to closing argument, but it would require a clear case of prejudice to warrant a reversal of error in awarding the right to open or close. Shaffer v. Des Moines Coal & Hay Co. [Iowa] 98 N. W. 111. Where defendant assumed affirmative and plaintiff put in no evidence, plaintiff cannot complain of refusal of right to open and close. Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787 Where the answer admits the claim of the plaintiff, but sets up in one defense that nothing is due, and in another, a novation, defendant is entitled to the opening and closing of the argument, there being but the one issue. Gerlaugh v. Riley, 2 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 107. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 526, the plaintiff has closing argument where the answer sets up affirmative defense on which issue is joined. Muldoon v. Meriwether, 25 Ky. L. R. 2085, 79 S. W. 1183. Where plaintiff adduces testimony and rests and defendant calls no witnesses under rule 47, it is the right of plaintiff's counsel to sum up. De Maria v. Cramer [N. J. Err. & App.] 58 A. 341.

36. Though defendant's plea admitted plaintiff's prima facie case on a note, yet if he allows him to introduce evidence in support, without objection, defendant waives his right to open and close the argument. Northington v. Granade, 118 Ga. 584, 45 S. E. 447.

37. Where there were two counsel for plaintiff and one, after evidence is in, has begun the argument, and defendant states that he has no desire to reply, the other has no right to close over objection of defendant. Hackney v. Delaware & A. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 69 N. J. Law, 335, 55 A. 252.

38. In a contest between parties, each claiming as next of kin and heir of deceased, the position of the parties being analogous to that on a bill of interpleader, neither is entitled of right to open and close, but the matter rests in the sound discretion of the court. Sorensen v. Sorensen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 837.

39. Not error to refuse to defendant the right to open and close, though he had filed the statutory admission. Guerguin v. Boone [Tex. Civ. App.] 77 S. W. 630.

40. Court rule providing that plaintiff, or defendant where he has the affirmative, may open and close and that the court may announce how much time will be allowed each side, the plaintiff having the right to apportion between opening and closing, provided not more than one-half was used in argument,[41] or where it has come to a decision, it may forbid argument altogether,[42] and whether after argument by one party the other can cut off further argument by waiving his right is within the discretion of the court.[43]

§ 2. Opening statements.[44]—In opening, counsel may state what he expects to prove,[45] and the nature of the defense as it appears from the record,[46] and though the testimony is subsequently rejected, there will be no error if he acted in good faith,[47] or if the court cautions the jury that his statement is not evidence.[48] But the making of prejudicial statements as to matters which could not legally affect the liability of the parties,[49] especially after an adverse ruling of the court, is highly improper,[50] and may necessitate a new trial.[51] The opening statement of counsel is not such an admission as will take the place of proof, and authorize a nonsuit.[52]

§ 3. Kind, extent, and mode of argument or comment during trial.[53]—The object of the argument is to induce proper conclusions based upon the evidence, closing, was reasonable. Reagan v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 79 S. W. 436.

41. Court rule providing that attorney, who had been a witness, should not argue a case without permission, is not in conflict with 2 Ball. Ann. Codes & St. § 4993, subd. 5, which authorizes plaintiff or party having burden of proof to open and close the argument by himself, or counsel, as that right may be waived, and the rule was salutary to prevent confusion between an attorney's testimony and his argument. Voss v. Bender, 32 Wash. 566, 73 P. 697.

42. Where a case is tried by the court and after the evidence is all in the court is fully satisfied as to the weight of the evidence and the law applicable to it, it may decline to listen to argument of counsel, and on appeal, the question will not be on the right to argue, but whether the judgment was correct. Barnes v. Benham, 13 Okl. 582, 75 P. 1130.

43. Parties had agreed that defendant should have opening and closing after defendant opened; plaintiff waived his right, and further argument was not permitted. Henry v. Dussell [Neb.] 99 N. W. 484.

44. See 1 Curr. L. 209.

45. Counsel stated that he would prove a conspiracy between petitioner and a Catholic priest to get a will favorable to a Catholic institution. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788.

46. Mulligan v. Smith [Colo.] 76 P. 1063.

47. Statement in opening, that defendant had cheated in another land deal, which was objected to and court warned jury that the case was to be tried on the evidence, was not improper, it being impossible to know in advance what testimony would be competent, and the court of necessity relying largely on fairness of attorney. Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. Where counsel in opening stated his intention to prove that defendant knew that other accidents had occurred at the same place, but the evidence was subsequently excluded by the court, it was not prejudicial error, especially where made in good faith. Potter v. Cave [Iowa] 98 N. W. 569. Where plaintiff's counsel in an action for assault stated that he would prove that plaintiff was acquitted of the offense of provoking an assault, but during trial was not allowed to show how the prosecution terminated, there was no error, as the opening statement was not evidence. Schmitz v. Kirchan, 32 Wash. 546, 73 P. 678.

48. Where, in opening, counsel stated that he would show that "attempts had been made, and witnesses spirited away," and on objection, court stated that unless he proved it he would instruct the jury to disregard it, there was no error. Mulligan v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 89 App. Div. 207, 85 N. Y. S. 791.

49. Where counsel in opening spoke of other accidents in defendant's quarry and in neighboring quarries, and stated that public policy demanded that juries assess full damages, the court should have withdrawn the same from jury when objection was made. Perry, Matthews-Buskirk Stone Co. v. Wilson, 160 Ind. 435, 67 N. E. 183. It was objectionable for plaintiff in opening to say that defendant had not only pursued plaintiff, but had "attempted to cast their mud and slime over the citizenship of Frio county." International, etc., R. Co. v. Mercer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 562. Where, in opening, counsel said "that defendant was a vulture preying upon people, and that he would not allow defendant to insure a dog for him." and objection was overruled. as there was only the single question of whether a notice was mailed, before the jury, the argument should have been suppressed. but judgment would not be reversed therefor. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Bradley [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 367.

50. Where counsel in opening stated that petitioner had been found guilty of various offenses and had been disbarred for them, after the court had ruled that the record of disbarment was incompetent, it was highly improper, but did not as a matter of law entitle petitioner to a new trial. O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788.

51. Where plaintiff was injured by being pushed by a crowd under a street car, and her counsel in opening said he desired to show the conduct of similar crowds, and an objection thereto was sustained, a new trial was granted where he persisted in the same line of argument, as the ruling, whether right or wrong, was the law of the trial. Batcheder v. Manchester St. Ry. [N. H.] 56 A. 752.

52. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 573, 77 S. W. 314.

and counsel may use his own system of reasoning,[54] and must be allowed reasonable comment on the evidence and conduct of witnesses,[55] and indulge in oratorical flights in his endeavor to impress his views upon the jury, if he adhere to the evidence,[56] or he may prepare his argument beforehand, and read it.[57]

Use of pleading and other writings belonging to case.[58]—Counsel may read to the jury special interrogatories[59] or depositions,[60] or pleadings of the adverse party,[61] or his own pleading, when there is a question as to his claim,[62] though the pleadings have not been put in evidence. But to misread purposely constitutes reversible error.[63]

Statements of law and reading from decisions.[64]—The reading of legal authorities in the presence of the jury rests to a large extent in the discretion of the court.[65] Even the erroneous statement of the law by counsel, if properly corrected, may be harmless,[66] but his reading and discussing the decision of the case on a former appeal,[67] or the decision in a similar case,[68] unless it is read as an illustration, is reversible error.[69]

54. Counsel may advise jury as to findings as to special questions submitted to them. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Gore, 105 Ill. App. 16. In bastardy proceedings, defendant introduced photograph of the child; it was not error to allow opposing counsel to call attention to child itself, which was present in the court room. State v. Patterson [S. D.] 100 N. W. 162. In an action for false imprisonment for detaining two days without a hearing for a crime which he confessed to having committed, severe criticism on part of defendant's counsel was justified. Friesenhan v. Maines [Mich.] 100 N. W. 172

57. Counsel may read as part of his address to the jury a version of the evidence prepared by himself, if it does not misrepresent the evidence. Stull v. Stull [Neb.] 96 N. W. 196.

58. See 1 Curr. L. 209.

60. Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Shaw, 203 Ill. 39, 67 N. E. 374.

61. Error to refuse to allow counsel in closing to refer to or read pleading of adversary, though not put in evidence, as such allegations were admissions of record and were binding. Field v. Surpless, 83 App. Div. 268, 82 N. Y. S. 127. Where defendant read plaintiff's petition to show a variance, and plaintiff read a part of it to show that there was not, and then said that defendant had proved plaintiff's case by introducing the petition, held no error to allow such argument. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mulfinger's Adm'x [Ky.] 80 S. W. 499.

62. In reply to argument of defendant as to plaintiff's claim, plaintiff's counsel read declaration on the point, and where jury were told the purpose was merely to show the extent of plaintiff's claim, there was no error. Metropolitan R. Co. v. Loud, 20 App. D. C. 330. Where defendant in closing remarked that a certain claim made by plaintiff was an afterthought and a great surprise to him, it was error to refuse to allow plaintiff's counsel to read a paragraph in the complaint making such a claim. Beecroft v. New York Athletic Club, 80 App. Div. 524, 81 N. Y. S. 1069.

63. Where attorney in closing argument purposely misread a deposition on a controverted point, his conduct was most reprehensible and judgment would be reversed. Lake St. Elevated R. Co. v. Shaw, 203 Ill. 39, 67 N. E. 374.

64. See 1 Curr. L. 209.

65. Plaintiff's counsel in personal injury case was allowed to read in his argument in the presence of the jury an extract from Wood on Railroads. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Moody [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 856; Post v. Leland, 184 Mass. 601, 69 N. E. 361.

66. In an action for injuries resulting from the defective filling of an excavation, where defendant's counsel in closing said that the concreting was done by the city, so that its liability ceased, it was not erroneous, as the statement of fact was supported by the evidence, and the statement of law, if erroneous, must be deemed corrected by the instructions. Leavitt v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. [N. H.] 56 A. 462.

67. Judgment was reversed where counsel was permitted to discuss before the jury the opinion on case in a former appeal, and to misconstrue it. Somes v. Ainsworth [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 839.

68. It was error to permit counsel in argument to quote the facts, and comment and quote the opinion of the supreme court in a similar case. Matthews v. Thatcher [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 61.

69. In an action for libel against a commercial agency where plaintiff's counsel read in closing argument an article from a magazine (opinion of supreme court of Michigan) on the abuses of commercial agencies, but without stating that it was a judicial opinion, it was not prejudicial, being used solely for argument and illustration. Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444, 73 S. W. 668

Comments on witnesses.[70]—Counsel in argument may make reasonable comments upon the evidence and the conduct,[71] and upon the absence of,[72] or objection to,[73] witnesses, unless privileged,[74] and the court will not scrutinize with great nicety the logical force of the argument,[75] but it will not allow opprobrious epithets,[76] or facts which are not in evidence, to be used.[77]

Inferences.[78]—Counsel are allowed a wide latitude in making inferences, as that their client is being persecuted in a second proceeding,[79] or that there was bad faith in purchasing without inquiry,[80] but no inferences are allowed to be made on the exclusion of evidence.[81]

Appeals to passion, prejudice, and sympathy.[82]—Explanatory remarks, though containing an appeal to one's sympathy, are proper;[83] but irrelevant remarks, designed to prejudice jury,[84] or an attack on defendant's method of trying the case,[85] or an unfair challenge to produce evidence,[86] or the declâration that interrogatories were entangling,[87] or that defendant was a large corporation[88] and would not be 71. Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Creech, 207 Ill. 400, 69 N. E. 919.

72. Attorneys may comment on the nonproduction of witnesses where they are shown to be cognizant of the facts in issue, it being a mere matter of argument. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl [Neb.] 98 N. W. 44.

73. Where plaintiff in testimony had stated what his wife had said on various occasions, it was not error for defendant to offer her as witness, as plaintiff might have waived the privilege, and it was competent for jury to know of plaintiff's refusal. Zimmerman v. Whiteley [Mich.] 95 N. W. 989.

74. It was error for defendant's counsel to comment on absence of plaintiff and his failure to testify in his suit against an executrix, where N. H. Pub. St. 1901, c. 224, § 16, provides that in such cases neither party shall testify unless the executor elects so to testify. Wright v. Davis [N. H.] 57 A. 335.

75. Comments on the readiness of witnesses to testify without being summoned was allowable. Sylvester v. State, 111 Fla. 416, 35 So. 142.

76. Where counsel called witnesses of the adverse party "cattle," it was highly improper, but not prejudicial error when retracted. Leslie v. Jackson & S. Traction Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 580.

77. In an action against a railroad where plaintiff's counsel in argument stated that defendant's employes would have lost their job if they had not testified as they did, it was error to refuse to sustain an objection, as there was no evidence of the fact, but on all of the evidence the judgment was affirmed. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Boback, 71 Ark. 427, 75 S. W. 473. Where counsel indulged in improper criticisms of witness, and detailed an event connected with witness not in record, it was held not to have influenced verdict. City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 680, 76 S. W. 191.

78. See 1 Curr. L. 210.

79. Where a plaintiff, who had been prosecuted for murder on account of the death of a guest in a fire in his hotel, sued an insurance company for the loss on account of the fire, the statement of counsel that he believed that the company had something to do with hounding him to the bar of justice, while perhaps the evidence did not justify the inference, was not prejudicial. Hartley v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. [Minn.] 98 N. W. 198.

80. In replevin, where claimants asserted that they purchased in good faith the property from one holding a railroad shipping receipt, it was not objectionable for opposing counsel to argue that they acted in bad faith because they made no effort to communicate with the person to whom the receipt was issued. Hart v. Boston & M. R. R. [N. H.] 56 A. 920.

81. Arguing to jury that objections made to the admission of evidence were a practical admission that the facts to which it referred were true was most reprehensible and can only be cured by a reversal. Potter v. Cave [Iowa] 98 N. W. 569.

82. See 1 Curr. L. 212.

83. Where attorney in argument said "It was necessary to introduce this cap, not for the purpose of wringing a heart-rending cry from the mother, as stated by you, but for the purpose of showing the blood on the inside of it," there was nothing improper, as the cap was in evidence. Board of Internal Imp. for Lincoln County v. Moore's Adm'r, 25 Ky. L. R. 15, 74 S. W. 683. Where a married woman was run down in the street by a bicycle, it was not error for counsel to ask the jury how much they would take to have their wives run down and made a spectacle of. Adams Exp. Co. v. Aldridge [Colo. App.] 77 P. 6.

84. Ward v. Reed [Mich.] 96 N. W. 438. Reaffirming objectionable language after being told by the court to desist, and referring to matters not connected with the trial. Belcher v. Ballou [Iowa] 100 N. W. 474.

85. Where counsel in closing devoted his remarks largely to an attack on defendant and its manner of conducting its defense and objecting to testimony, it was improper, but did not warrant a reversal where court sustained an objection to the remarks. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kinnare, 203 Ill. 388, 67 N. E. 826.

86. It was prejudicial error for plaintiff in closing argument in personal injury case to challenge defendant to make experiments in stopping cars, when defendant had no right to offer further evidence. Little v. Boston & M. R. R. [N. H.] 55 A. 190.

87. Where attorney in closing said "These hurt,[89] as it had made provision for accidents,[90] and should be compelled to behave.[91]

Matters outside of issues.[92]—Attempts to influence jury by stating the source of the court's instructions,[93] or the effect of a verdict on the parties in another action,[94] or an admission of the other party,[95] or that the defendant had done some other wrong,[96] are prejudicial, and the statement that an insurance company was the real defendant will entitle the defendant to a new trial.[97]

Matters not in evidence.[98]—To refer to a compromise, or former verdict,[99] or the value of plaintiff's services, or the facts of another case,[1] or to the prejudice existing in a community,[2] or to charge a party with cheating the public,[3] or a witness with a crime,[4] or to state the contents of a letter which the counsel is attempt-interrogatories have been put to you by the defendant for the purpose of entangling you," but the court on objection warned the jury to disregard, there was a fair trial. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Davis [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 550.

88. Repeated appeals to jury to consider that defendant was a large corporation, and that the money would come from them and not out of anybody else's pocket were improper. Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 760. Where counsel referred to a request of the opposing counsel to take the case from the jury, and stated that the opposing party was a great corporation who would resort to perjury to maintain its cause. Hillman v. Detroit United R. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 399.

89. In closing, plaintiff's counsel said "I just want to say to you, you don't have to worry much about the verdict against [defendant]" which was not prejudicial, though the court had excluded a question as to whether defendant was protected by employers' liability insurance. Burgess v. Stowe [Mich.] 96 N. W. 29.

90. Where, in closing, plaintiff's counsel in a personal injury case stated the value of plaintiff's services, and the facts as to another case, of both of which there was no evidence, and after being corrected by the court, stated that defendant expected these accidents and made provisions for them, the judgment was affirmed with reluctance, as the statements were designedly made to influence the jury, but the court instructed the jury to disregard them. Sweeney v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 83 App. Div. 565, 81 N. Y. S. 1112.

91. Counsel's advising jury that they should by their verdict compel corporations to exercise care towards their employes was improper, but in view of the verdict had had no influence. Houston Elec. Co. v. Robinson [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 209.

92. See 1 Curr. L. 211.

93. Where counsel in closing stated that he would submit no instructions, but that the instructions which would be read would be those of the other side, it was unnecessary, though true, and where court directed him to confine his argument to the facts in the record, there was no injury suffered. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 202 Ill. 624, 67 N. E. 398.

94. Where jury asked if plaintiff would be barred in equity, if they found for defendant, the request of plaintiff's counsel in jury's presence, for a charge that it would be a bar, though most extraordinary, was not ground for new trial. Benton v. Hunter, 119 Ga. 381, 46 S. E. 414.

95. Remark of plaintiff's counsel that defendant's counsel had said plaintiff had a good case was improper. Witzel v. Zuel, 90 Minn. 340, 96 N. W. 1124.

96. In an action by a physician to recover from a railroad for services rendered at a wreck, it was prejudicial for plaintiff's counsel in his argument to say that defendant had blundered. McKnight v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 772.

97. Where plaintiff's counsel in examining jurors asked if they were interested in a certain insurance company, and then stated that he believed that that company was defending the case, and an objection was overruled, as court stated plaintiff had a right to find this out, a new trial was ordered, as it was prejudicial, as such fact was entirely immaterial to any issue. Lipschutz v. Ross, 84 N. Y. S. 632. But compare Burgess v. Stowe [Mich.] 96 N. W. 29.

98. See 1 Curr. L. 211.

99. Where plaintiff's evidence of a compromise was refused, it was reversible error for his counsel to refer to such compromise in his argument, and to the fact that the two former verdicts were in plaintiff's favor. Chowning v. Parker [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 677. A remark, in closing, that another court had passed on the facts and rendered judgment for plaintiff, was reversible error. Underwriters' Fire Ass'n v. Henry [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1072.

1. Sweency v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 83 App. Div. 565, 81 N. Y. S. 1112.

2. In an action against a town, it was improper for plaintiff's counsel to say in argument "Doubtless, gentlemen, you know that you cannot get in trouble any quicker than to go to a little town and say something against the condition of the town to some of the city officials." Davis v. Alexander City, 137 Ala. 206, 33 So. 863.

3. Where the indorsee of a note, given in a horse trade, sued the makers, and the defense was that the indorser had cheated the makers, and that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser, it was permissible for counsel to refer to the parties as "horse jockeys," but not to say that they were the men "who had foisted upon the innocent public the notorious horse, Magnet," where there was no evidence as to this. Hallock v. Young [N. H.] 57 A. 236.

4. Where counsel animadverted upon veracity of defendant as a witness and insinuated that he kept an unlawful resort of which there was no evidence, it was error ing to introduce,[5] or comment on the retention in their employ of a servant whose negligence had caused the injury,[6] in the presence of the jury, is not allowable where there is no evidence as to such matters, or to pass remarks tending to convey an erroneous impression,[7] is improper.

Remarks during the trial.[8]—Exclamations over a witness' reply,[9] or prejudicial remarks[10] made during trial, may be error; but offers to show that a witness had wrecked the companies he was connected with,[11] or to allow jury to take out certain papers,[12] were allowable. An admission made during trial may not be binding where the other party is not prejudiced.[13]

§ 4. Excuses for impropriety.[14]—The plea of inadvertence ought not to be received either as excuse or palliation.[15] A party whose counsel provoked the improper remarks cannot complain.[16]

§ 5. Objections and rulings.[17]—Improper argument must be objected to,[18] and the rulings of the court, excepted to, at the time,[19] in order to be reviewed. The decision of the trial court on motion for new trial will be final,[20] unless prejudice clearly appears.[21] for the court on objection not to caution counsel and warn jury. Fisher v. Weinholzer [Minn.] 97 N. W. 426.

5. Though counsel in arguing the admissibility of a certain letter, which was actually incompetent, stated its contents before the jury, there was no reversal, as the court properly warned the jury, and the verdict was justified by the evidence. Connolly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 86 App. Div. 245, 83 N. Y. S. 833.

6. Hinchman v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 99 N. W. 277.

7. That an inspection would show that a horse was not vicious, the jury not having inspected the horse. Hinchman v. Pere Marquette R. Co. [Mich.] 99 N. W. 277.

8. See 1 Curr. L. 212.

9. Any prejudice from counsel's saying "The idea that a man has owned a farm thirty years, and he does not know how many acres there is," was removed by defendant explaining that it bordered on a lake and was fractional. Gould v. Gregory [Mich.] 95 N. W. 414.

10. Where defendant asked plaintiff's attorney to admit that the conductor was killed in the same accident and plaintiff's attorney replied "There is no question about that, and it is a fact the railroad settled with the widow afterward," it was prejudicial. Greenfield v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 546.

11. Where, on cross-examination of an expert after objection to his being asked what had become of an institution where he got his experience, counsel offered to show that the company was wrecked by his management, and so of every one with which he had been connected, it was not cause for reversal. Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit Reduction Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 552.

12. An offer to court to allow jury to take certain papers in evidence out with them not cause for reversal, when court below did not regard it as prejudicial, and it was apparently made in good faith. Rawlings v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n [Neb.] 95 N. W. 792.

13. Where plaintiff's counsel in reply to question admitted complaint contained no allegation of actual damage, though such question was raised by pleading and the evidence, he was not estopped where defendant had not been misled. Steedman v. South Carolina & G. E. R. Co., 66 S. C. 542, 45 S. E. 84.

14. See 1 Curr. L. 213.

15. "After instilling the poison, the wrong is not undone by an empty apology." Chowing v. Parker [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 677. But compare Sweeney v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 83 App. Div. 565, 81 N. Y. S. 1112, where a new trial was refused.

16. Where plaintiff's counsel had remarked that plaintiff, who conducted a private lying-in hospital, was engaged in the same business churches were, plaintiff cannot complain because defendant's counsel characterized this as vile and sacreligious and intimated that such places were responsible for abortions and murders. Sterling v. Detroit [Mich.] 95 N. W. 986.

17. See 1 Curr. L. 213, and see Saving Questions for Review, 2 Curr. L. 1590.

18. Jenkins v. Chism, 25 Ky. L. R. 736, 76 S. W. 405. Where language of counsel was first called to attention of court by affidavits on motion for new trial, and no objection taken, or ruling obtained at the time, there is nothing to review. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl [Neb.] 98 N. W. 44. Where plaintiff's counsel in closing indulges in false argument, it is the duty of the court at request of defendant to instruct the jury in reference thereto. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Gerlach Bank [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 503.

19. Where, on appellant's objection, the court ruled certain remarks improper and instructed jury to disregard them, and appellant did not except to ruling, he cannot complain because of remarks. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Mercer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 562. It is sufficient diligence that objection is made and exception taken without interrupting the argument. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Pledger [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 755.

20. Objectionable remarks by counsel are for the consideration of the trial court on motion for new trial, and could not be so prejudicial as to constitute reversible error.

§ 6. Action of court or counsel curing objection.[22]—The error in the use of objectionable language by counsel may be cured by his withdrawal of it,[23] and by the action of the court,[24] where the rebuke and warning to disregard is prompt,[25] and the verdict not unjust,[26] as the jury will not be presumed to have disregarded the warning,[27] unless it was not sufficiently pointed;[28] but improper argument is not cured by an instruction to disregard it,[29] nor by the action of the court in admonishing counsel.[30]

ARREST AND BINDING OVER.

§ 1. Occasion or Necessity for Warrant (312).
§ 2. Privilege from Arrest (314).
§ 3. Complaint, Affidavit, or Information to Procure Warrant (314).
§ 4. The Warrant and Its Issuance (315).
§ 5. Making Arrest and Keeping and Disposition of Prisoner (316).
§ 6. Preliminary Hearing, Binding Over, or Discharge (317).
§ 7. Custody Awaiting Indictment or Trial (318).

§ 1. Occasion or necessity for warrant.[31]—In the absence of an empowering statute peace officers have no authority to arrest for a misdemeanor without process,

James McNeil & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co., 207 Pa. 493, 56 A. 1067.

22. See 1 Curr. L. 213.

23. Leslie v. Jackson & S. Traction Co. [Mich.] 96 N. W. 580. Where counsel withdrew prejudicial remark and the court instructed the jury that it was improper, there was no prejudicial error. McKnight v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 772. A remark that "The railroads had well nigh corrupted the virtue of the country" was not reversible error, where the court told counsel that the remark was improper and counsel withdrew it. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Reeves [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 1099.

24. Sweeney v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 83 App. Div. 565, 81 N. Y. S. 1112; International, etc., R. Co. v. Mercer [Tex. Civ. App.] 78 S. W. 562. Though a new trial was demanded. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Davis [Ind. App.] 69 N. E. 650. Where attention of the court was called, argument not supported by the evidence, and the jury was told to disregard such improper statement. Weeks v. Scharer [C. C. A.] 129 F. 333. Immediate objection, and jury promptly told to disregard, nothing prejudicial said. No error. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Zapp, 209 Ill. 339, 70 N. E. 623. Exception to objectionable remarks made during examination of witnesses was promptly sustained and the jury directed to disregard them. Thompson v. Purdy [Or.] 77 P. 113.

25. Where, after an improper remark, judge immediately censured attorney and instructed jury to disregard, the judgment will not be reversed therefor. Greenfield v. Detroit & M. R. Co. [Mich.] 95 N. W. 546. When counsel in their zeal depart from the record, a sharp and prompt rebuke from the judge will ordinarily cure the error. Brown v. Silver [Neb.] 96 N. W. 281. Where counsel asked improper question to show why a witness was not present, the error was corrected where court instructed jury not to consider anything as to witness' presence or absence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anchonda [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 557.

26. Connolly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 86 App. Div. 245, 83 N. Y. S. 833.

27. Where plaintiff's counsel remarked that defendant's counsel had said plaintiff had a good case, but the court immediately rebuked the counsel and instructed the jury to disregard them, the court will not presume that the jury disregarded the instructions. Witzel v. Zuel, 90 Minn. 340, 96 N. W. 1124.

28. Where counsel in an action against a railroad stated that "there never was a railroad company sued, but what it made out a perfect defense," though he withdrew it on court's stating it improper, there was prejudicial error, as the rebuke was not sufficiently pointed. Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Musick [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 219. The court must use sufficiently emphatic language to destroy any impressions resulting. Leu v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 273.

29. Inflammatory and damaging statements not found in the evidence. Benoit v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. S. 951.

30. Hillman v. Detroit United R. [Mich.] 100 N. W. 399.

31. Note. An officer acting in good faith and in obedience to a warrant apparently regular is not liable for false imprisonment (Pepper v. Mayes, 81 Ky. 674; Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378, 7 N. W. 623; Manigold v. Thorpe, 33 N. J. Law, 138; Leib v. Shelby Iron Co., 97 Ala. 626, 12 So. 67; Atwater v. Atwater, 43 Neb. 147, 61 N. W. 577; Brooks v. Mangen, 86 Mich. 576, 49 N. W. 633; Clarke v. May, 2 Gray [Mass.] 413; Whitten v. Bennett, 86 F. 405; Henry v. Lowell, 16 Barb. [N. Y.] 268), or if it is irregular only and not void (Welch v. Scott, 27 N. C. [5 Ired.] 72; Ressler v. Peits, 86 Ill. 275; Cowdery v. Johnson, 60 Vt. 595, 15 A. 188; otherwise where the warrant is void (Frayer v. Turner, 76 Wis. 562, 45 N. W. 411; Forbes v. Hicks, 27 Neb. 111, 42 N. W. 898; Batchelder v. Currier, 45 N. H. 460; Poulk v. Selvarne, 3 Blackf. [U. S.] 421; Savacool v. Boughton, 5 Wend. [N. Y.] 170); also where the court had no jurisdiction to issue the warrant (Moore v. Watts, 1 Ill. 18; Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 324), but in Stewart v. Hawley, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 552, it was held that this fact must appear from the face of the warrant. The officer is also liable where he arrests one exempt from arrest. Houghexcept on view, and where the offense amounts to a breach of the peace,[32] in which case it is his duty to arrest without a warrant.[33] In Kentucky, a peace officer's jurisdiction is not confined to the district which elected him,[34] but Texas statute giving peace officers authority to arrest without a warrant does not apply to magistrates,[35] who should, however, institute proceedings for the arrest.[36] He may arrest without a warrant for a felony.[37] New process is not necessary to retake a prisoner illegally discharged,[38] nor where one in the custody of an officer pleads to the information.[39] A Georgia statute permits an arrest without process if there is liable to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant.[40] The question of arrest without a warrant must be properly raised,[41] in which case the burden is upon the officer to show reasonable and probable grounds for so acting.[42] ton v. Wilson, 10 Gray [Mass.] 365; Davis v. Rowe, 118 N. Y. 55, 23 N. E. 166. In Cabell v. Arnold, 86 Tex. 102, 23 S. W. 645, it was held that an officer was not liable who arrested one without having the warrant in his hands. Taylor v. Strong, 3 Wend. [N. Y.] 384. Contra, Smith v. Clark, 53 N. J. Law, 197, 21 A. 491. He may arrest for a felony without a warrant. Samuel v. Payne, 1 Doug. [Mich.] 359; Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377, 38 N. W. 885; Kirk v. 42. McCaffrey v. Thomas [Del. Super.]

Under certain conditions a person may be arrested for trial in another district.[43]

A private person[44] has no authority to arrest for a misdemeanor unless the offense is committed in his presence or within his immediate knowledge,[45] but if the offense is a felony and the offender is attempting to escape, a private person may arrest upon reasonable and probable grounds of suspicion.[46]

§ 2. Privilege from arrest.[47]—One is not subject to a second arrest while in the custody of the court,[48] whether the custody be actual or the accused be out on bail.[49]

§ 3. Complaint, affidavit, or information to procure warrant.[50]—In Idaho the inquisition of a coroner is not sufficient basis for an information,[51] though it was at common law.[52] There must be strict compliance with a statute requiring the affidavit for a criminal complaint to state a probable cause for the belief of the affiant,[53] and it must sufficiently acquaint the accused with the offense charged;[54] but the same strictness required of indictments is not necessary.[55] In Alabama the affidavit may be amended.[56]

The information must show that a crime has been committed and the probable guilt of the accused,[57] but if based upon the same transaction it need not charge the same precise offense named in the original warrant of arrest.[58] Where an accused is committed for a certain offense, an information cannot be filed against

People v. Walker [Cal.] 77 P. 705. An affidavit for a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor charging three separate sales, is in legal effect a charge of a first offense, and did not entitle accused to a trial by jury as no imprisonment could be imposed as sentence. him for a different offense.[59] A deposition setting forth the adoption of a resolution by a town board prohibiting the hawking of goods without a license, on which a warrant is based, need not set forth in full the resolution.[60] An information is sufficient basis for extradition.[61]

In the prosecution of a corporation a preliminary complaint is not necessary.[62]

§ 4. The warrant and its issuance.[63]—A warrant must be supported by oath or affirmation,[64] and be fair upon its face, to be a protection to the officer serving it;[65] it must be sufficiently definite in the description of the offense,[66] though it may be amended in this respect;[67] and will not be held void because of a clerical error.[68] A warrant "particularly describes" a person though the initial letter of the middle name is omitted,[69] or only the initial letter of the first name is used,[70] and whether a warrant sufficiently describes a person is a question of law.[71] The governor's warrant is sufficient, where the accused is a fugitive from the state.[72]

A United States commissioner may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person in his district for an offense committed in Indian Territory against the laws of the United States,[73] and it is preferable that the application for warrant be made to the nearest commissioner.[74]

Probable cause must be shown for the issue of a warrant for removal,[75] but an indictment is sufficient,[76] and the commissioner should consider whether the indictment or complaint alleges an offense against the United States;[77] such a warrant may not be issued except where an offender has been committed in a district other than that where the offense is to be tried.[78]

In Texas before a warrant can be executed in another county than that of the issuing magistrate, it must be indorsed by a magistrate of such other county,[79]

but whether a U. S. marshal may make an arrest on a warrant issued in another district than his own is unsettled.[80]

§ 5. Making arrest and keeping and disposition of prisoner.[81]—To constitute an arrest the officer must lay his hand on the defendant or take possession of his person,[82] and the accused should in some way have notice that he is taken by lawful authority;[83] though in Delaware all are bound to know the character of an officer acting within his jurisdiction.[84]

A delay in obtaining or serving a warrant will not be fatal where the evidence does not show the officer to have been dilatory or negligent,[85] and the immediate arrest required under the search and seizure process does not apply to an ordinary arrest.[86]

In making an arrest the officer should use no more force than to him, acting as an ordinarily prudent person, considering the degree of the crime,[87] whether the alleged crime be a misdemeanor or a felony,[88] would seem reasonable and apparently necessary to effect the arrest,[89] or prevent an escape, or protect himself.[90] The force he may use is necessarily greater than that required for self-defense.[91] It will be presumed that only that was done which was necessary to accomplish the arrest,[92] but this presumption may be rebutted.[93]

A policeman has no greater authority than a private person to arrest beyond the town limits, or pursue beyond the limit one who has successfully resisted arrest and escaped therefrom,[94] and an arrest beyond the limits of a state on a warrant issued therein, is without authority.[95]

Where a prisoner charged with a misdemeanor has already escaped, the officer cannot lawfully use any means to recapture him that he would not have been justified in employing to make the first arrest.[96]

The return of service is not a condition precedent to holding the prisoner, where the original warrant is still in the possession of the officer;[97] and the suspected party may be detained for only such a reasonable time as will enable the officer to carry him before a magistrate,[98] and he must not be subjected to cruel and unnecessary exposure to cold, nor deprived of suitable clothing and covering.[99]

A prisoner cannot be held for attempting to bribe an officer for his release unless the arrest was legal,[1] and whether the alleged bribe was offered before or after arrest is a question for the jury upon the final trial, and pending its determination the prisoner should be held.[2]

§ 6. Preliminary hearing, binding over, or discharge.[3]—A preliminary examination or a waiver thereof is necessary before the prosecution of a private person upon an information, for a felony,[4] and an irregularity in this respect may be raised by plea in abatement,[5] or in some cases by certiorari;[6] in the prosecution of a corporation a preliminary hearing is not essential.[7]

A recognizance must be in the words of the statute.[8] A policeman has no authority to accept bail for an appearance.[9]

The accused may be examined on two distinct and separate charges at one time,[10] and the evidence need show only probable cause for holding;[11] though in Alabama uncorroborated accomplice testimony will not be sufficient.[12]

One arrested as a fugitive from justice is entitled to an examination before the magistrate causing the arrest,[13] but not upon the merits of the case.[14]

The magistrate's return as to whether such examination has been held or offered is conclusive,[15] and a justice docket entry of an examination describing the

11. It is not necessary that the evidence be sufficient to support a verdict of guilty or show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The intent of the statute is that a magistrate shall at once ascertain whether the crime charged has been committed, and whether there be reasonable cause to believe the accused committed it. Jahnke v. State [Neb.] 94 N. W. 158. In general one may properly be bound over, if there is any evidence tending to show guilt. But upon habeas corpus proceedings the court will not consider the weight of the evidence where an alderman is held for trial on a charge of bribery, the evidence tending to show an illegal offer in consideration of his vote. People v. Van De Carr, 87 App. Div. 386, 84 N. Y. S. 461. offense as "pocket picking or larceny from the person" is sufficient.[16] There should be evidence as to identification of the accused to satisfy the magistrate.[17] A properly certified copy of an indictment constitutes a prima facie case to justify holding,[18] but upon a mere verified complaint before a foreign magistrate, the accused is entitled to have the commissioner hear evidence as to the probable cause,[19] and he should be apprised of his right to be present before the judge and resist the application for a warrant of removal.[20]

One may be held for trial upon a different offense than that charged in the complaint.[21] It is not necessary that a coroner's inquest be held, before one charged with murder may be held on preliminary examination.[22]

An illegal discharge from custody confers no rights upon the prisoner.[23]

In California the postponing of the preliminary examination for more than two days at a time, without the consent of the defendant, will not be ground for setting aside the information.[24] In New York the commitment on adjournment of an examination, without a written information being filed, is illegal.[25]

ARSON.

Arson is an offense against the possession and not against the property.[27] Consequently, one in possession and occupancy of a house under a lease is not guilty of arson in burning the same,[28] unless made so by statute.[29] The burning of any object which falls legally under the words of the statute may be charged as a crime,[30] and the fact that certain articles are specifically mentioned does not limit its scope.[31]

Every essential ingredient of the crime must be set forth in the indictment.[32] The crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[33] Evidence of motive[34] and other circumstantial evidence[35] is admissible.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

§ 1. Nature and Elements of Criminal Offense (319).
§ 2. Defenses (320).
§ 3. Indictment (321).
§ 4. Evidence; Instructions; Verdict; Punishment (321).
§ 5. Civil Liability (323).

§ 1. Nature and elements of criminal offense.[36]—An assault is an attempt to inflict unlawful corporal injuries on another.[37] There must be a present and apparent ability to inflict injury,[38] and a specific intent to injure.[39] If injury be inflicted, it is assault and battery. It is sufficient if the force put in operation comes in contact with a person indirectly.[40] In Texas, assaults are defined as aggravated by the use of a weapon,[41] or by difference in age or condition of parties.[42] There must be an intention to injure.[43] Indecent proposals to a female constitute an aggravated assault under this statute.[44] Former conviction for a simple assault is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for an aggravated assault.[45]

S. W. 710. Denial of a continuance because of absence of a witness who would testify to an alibi was error, the incriminating evidence being meager. Id.

34. Statement on oath that a merchant intended to carry a $4,000 stock admissible to show real value, and motive for arson, when insurance carried was $14,000. Hooker v. State [Md.] 56 A. 390.

35. State v. Ledford, 133 N. C. 714, 45 S. E. 944. Evidence of an experiment tried to test state's theory in a prosecution for arson held inadmissible. Hooker v. State [Md.] 56 A. 390.

37. State v. Harrigan [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 5. An assault is an unlawful attempt by violence, to do injury to the person of another: the person making the attempt having the present ability to commit such injury. Id. An assault consists in an offer to do bodily harm, made by a person who is in a position to inflict it. State v. Hunt [R. I.] 54 A. 773. An assault is an unlawful attempt to do violence to the person of another, and a battery is the unlawful commission of such violence. State v. Harrigan [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 5.

Note: An actual or specific intent is necessary. Mercer v. Corbin, 117 Ind. 450, 20 N. E. 132; State v. Myers, 19 Iowa, 517. So one who innocently injures another while acting in self defense is not liable. Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75. Accidental injuries caused by doing a lawful act are not assaults. Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. [Mass.] 292; Gibbons v. Pepper, 4 Mod. 405. But injuries caused by reckless conduct are. Hoffman v. Eppers, 41 Wis. 251; Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182; Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134; Com. v. Lister, 15 Phila. [Pa.] 406, and note to Vosberg v. Putney [Wis.] 14 L. R. A. 226.

It is universally held that solicitation to have illicit intercourse is not an assault. State v. White, 52 Mo. App. 285; State v. Priestley, 74 Mo. 24; People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 29 P. 647; Rex v. Butler, 6 Car. & P. 368; State v. Owsley, 102 Mo. 678, 15 S. W. 137; State v. Butler, 8 Wash. 194, 35 P. 1093, and note 25 L. R. A. 434.

38. Where one had approached within three feet of another, and drawn back his hand as though to strike her with a bottle grasped therein, and she turned and fled, it was a question for the jury whether an assault had been committed. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. Robinson v. State, 118 Ga. 750, 45 S. E. 620. Pointing an unloaded gun at another accompanied with a threat to discharge it is not an assault. People v. Sylva [Cal.] 76 P. 814.

Contra: Where one drew his pistol and pointed it at another, he was held guilty of assault, though the pistol was not cocked. Pace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 531. A bullet fired need not go in the direction of the person assaulted, as accuracy or inaccuracy of aim cannot determine guilt or innocence. State v. Hunt [R. I.] 54 A. 773.

39. In case of a kiss, the injury is solely to the feelings, the intent cannot be presumed. Chambless v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 577. If a man attempts by force to make a woman kiss him, it is an assault. But if he merely attempts to kiss her by her consent, intending no force, he is not guilty. Id. It is an assault to restrain one, by violence, from separating parties from fighting. Even though person restrained was a private citizen. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 315.

40. Willfully and intentionally driving a horse into contact with a person lawfully on a highway. State v. Lewis [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 3.

41. An aggravated assault may be committed with a pistol, though it be not cocked. Pace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 531.

42. The evidence must show that defendant was an adult male person. Davis v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 76 S. W. 466.

43. Stripling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 376.

44. In order to constitute an aggravated assault, there must have been an intent to make an indecent proposal. Where the only act done by one going into the room of a female was to take hold of her gown, the question of assault was for the jury. Stermer v. State [Tex Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 1072. One placing his arm on the back of the buggy seat and merely touching a female is not guilty of aggravated assault. Stripling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 376. Or if he attempted to embrace her, having no intention to injure her feelings, and having ground to believe his advances would not be objected to. Id. Where prosecutrix and defendant's wife were sleeping in adjoining rooms, and defendant testified that he went into prosecutrix's room by mistake and left

§ 2. Defenses.[46]—Right of self defense is based on necessity,[47] and is available to every person who on just grounds apprehends an unlawful attack,[48] though it does not threaten serious bodily harm,[49] and a person threatened by several may exercise his right against the nearest assailant.[50] One assaulted may stand his ground and repel force with force,[51] so long as his defensive acts do not threaten death or great bodily harm to the assailant.[52] Whether unnecessary force was used is a question for the jury.[53] Though one acting in self defense accidentally injures another than his assailant, he is yet justified, criminal intent being lacking.[54] An owner may use sufficient force in removing a trespasser and is not guilty, though he acts in anger;[55] but an owner out of possession cannot regain it by force.[56]

A parent may moderately chastise his child without being guilty of assault.[57] An officer who uses more force than is necessary in making an arrest is guilty of an assault.[58]

as soon as he discovered where he was, there was a question for the jury. Stermer v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 1072.

45. Jury instructed to acquit if assault was not aggravated one. Heinen v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 776.

46. See 1 Curr. L. 219.

47. Defendant struck prosecutor and drew a pistol; prosecutor reached for defendant's pistol, but he retreated and, on prosecutor's advancing, shot him. State v. McCann, 43 Or. 155, 72 P. 137.

48. One traveling along a highway across which a fence had been built which he was engaged in tearing down. Fence had been erected by abutting owners who claimed the road had not been legally established. Hoy v. State [Neb.] 96 N. W. 228. Merely seeking a person for the purpose of provoking a difficulty does not deprive one of the right of self defense. Price v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 540. And in such case one is entitled to a charge on self defense, disconnected from the question of provoking a difficulty. Id. Where evidence showed only that the prosecutrix made an assault on the defendant, there could not be a conviction for aggravated assault. Reese v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 511.

53. Where one was advancing with clenched fists and was stabbed, the defendant is guilty only in case he used excessive force. Rea v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1003. Where parties threw flower pots and bottles of benzine at each other. State v. Green, 134 N. C. 658, 46 S. E. 761. Where defendant followed prosecuting witness and his wife for some distance to their wagon, where said witness got a gun, whereupon defendant drew his gun, it was no error to refuse to charge on self defense. Pace v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 79 S. W. 531. Where two persons followed another, came upon him unawares, knocked him down and beat him, evidence held sufficient to authorize a charge of assault with premeditated design. Blain v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 518. Where a woman was the assailant and the defendant pushed her away and she fell down, evidence held sufficient to require a charge on self defense. Maxwell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 516. Where the assaulted party was at the time in the act of picking up a knife, evidence held to entitle assailant to an instruction on self defense. McCardell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 146.

56. State v. Bradbury, 67 Kan. 808, 74 P. 231.

57. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 623. Where a father led his 17 year old daughter home by the hair, he was not guilty of aggravated assault. Goods v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 799. Texas statute defining aggravated assault on a child does not apply to a male over 14 years of age. Thompson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 623.

58. Evidence held to show that an officer used excessive force. Moody v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 340.

59. State v. Harrigan [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 5. Accusing one of undue fondness for women and wine. State v. Leuhrsman [Iowa] 99 N. W. 140. Abusive and insulting language addressed by prosecutor to defendant's daughter on the day before the assault is not admissible in evidence as justification. Walker v. State, 117 Ga. 323, 43 S. E. 737.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY—Cont'd.

§ 3. Indictment.[61]—An indictment need not allege the acts constituting the assault,[62] unless it is so provided by statute.[63]

Where aggravated assault depends on particular means used, such means must be alleged,[64] but not where a particular kind of an assault is made by the statute an aggravated assault.[65] A blank in the indictment for the given name may be filled in after trial has begun,[66] and errors of form may be cured by amendment.[67]

A verdict for a less crime may be found under an indictment for the greater of the same generic class, notwithstanding the two are statutory,[68] and it is reversible error for a court to refuse to so instruct.[69]

§ 4. Evidence; instructions; verdict; punishment.[70]—The evidence must satisfy beyond a reasonable doubt.[71] Matters constituting res gestae,[72] and evidence bearing on the probability of the assault, is admissible,[73] if not too remote,[74] evi-

St. 1883, c. 118, defining assault, is merely declaratory of the common law, and an indictment thereunder need not allege that the act was done in a willful, wanton or insulting manner. State v. Creighton [Me.] 57 A. 592.

63. Where the statute provides that the information must charge the particular means used, the phrase "a heavy wooden stick" is not sufficient [Pen. Code, §§ 950-952]. People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 P. 170.

One indicted for assault with intent to commit murder found guilty of the offense of shooting at another. Harris v. State [Ga.] 47 S. E. 520. Assault with intent to murder. State v. Di Guglielmo [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 350. In a prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily injury, it is not error to instruct that the crime charged includes assault and battery and assault, which may be considered in turn. State v. Lauhrsman [Iowa] 99 N. W. 140.

An instruction on simple assault should also be given in a prosecution for felonious assault with a rock, it being for the jury to determine whether the rock was a deadly or a dangerous weapon. State v. Shipley, 174 Mo. 512, 74 S. W. 612. An information for larceny from the person charged assault; held the crime alleged could not have been committed without an assault, and was therefore included in the greater offense. State v. Where all the witnesses except prosecutor agreed that the latter assaulted the defendant, and was pushing him into the street when the latter struck him with a small cane, which broke at the first blow, a verdict of conviction was contrary to the weight of evidence. People v. Dankberg, 91 App. Div. 67, 86 N. Y. S. 423. Verdict for simple assault held error, where, according to the evidence, accused must have been guilty of assault with a deadly weapon if guilty at all. People v. Sylva [Cal.] 76 P. 814; State v. Lewis [Del. Gen. Sess.] 55 A. 3. Positive evidence of prosecutrix that defendant hit her with his fist in his own house where she had called in a peaceful manner, held sufficient to support a conviction. State v. Sayman [Mo. Conversation immediately succeeding the battery admissible. Moody v. State [Ga.] 48 S. E. 340. What one told a witness immediately after the assault is admissible. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 378. Remarks concerning iron knuckles held admissible as res gestae. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 232.

73. Character and reputation for chastity of a female. Barton v. Bruley, 119 Wis. 326, 96 N. W. 815. In a prosecution for felonious assault, the clothes of the prosecuting witness are admissible after the state had closed its case, they having been previously identified. State v. Thornhill, 177 Mo. 691, 76 S. W. 948. Evidence that a witness for the dence of past assaults is not.[75] The rule allowing admission of all of a conversation where part has been introduced does not apply to past interviews.[76]

An instruction must furnish a definite legal rule for the guidance of the jury,[77] and be free from ambiguity.[78] An instruction need not be given on a theory to which the evidence affords no support,[79] and it is improper if given.[80] Points already covered need not be made the subject of another charge.[81]

A general verdict of guilty as charged is sufficient where court submitted only aggravated assault.[82] An immaterial departure from the words of the statute in the form of the verdict is not error,[83] and meaningless matter may be rejected as surplusage.[84]

Where a statute provides the punishment as "fine or imprisonment," both cannot be imposed,[85] nor can excessive punishments,[86] nor punishments not named in the statute.[87]

defense undertook to prevent a witness for the state from appearing was admissible. Id. Evidence that the prosecuting witness arrested the defendant the night before the assault was admissible. Wilson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 232. Defendant may show that prosecutor had previously shot a dog of defendant's mother and had been warned not to come upon her property again to show defendant's conduct from his standpoint. Coleman v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 74 S. W. 24.

74. The fact that a woman purchased beer. Barton v. Bruley, 119 Wis. 326, 96 N. W. 815. Where defendant allowed an agent to take peaceable possession of a machine and then assaulted him, evidence of the contract in reference to the possession of the machine is immaterial. Lockland v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 73 S. W. 1054.

75. In an action for assault on a woman, indecent proposals made to other women are inadmissible. Barton v. Bruley, 119 Wis. 326, 96 N. W. 815. Evidence of previous instances in which defendant was either tried or arrested for disturbance of the peace is inadmissible. Maxwell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 516. On a prosecution for aggravated assault, it was error to admit testimony on behalf of the state that the railroad hands of the crews to which the parties belonged were in the habit of throwing knives at each other. McCardell v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 77 S. W. 446.

76. State v. Leuhrsman [Iowa] 99 N. W. 140.

77. An instruction that "if there was a clear intent to commit violence," the jury should find that an assault had been committed was insufficient. Butler v. State [Miss.] 35 So. 569. Where an assailant struck with his hands, and the assaulted immediately struck back with a knife, an instruction on what degree of force may be used is proper. Redden v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 78 S. W. 929.

Where the evidence raises the issue, defendant is entitled to a charge that if the offense did not occur in the county charged, he cannot be convicted. Stripling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 376. Where one persisted in untying a mule tied on her premises, whereupon the owner assaulted her, the statute on provoking an assault was properly charged. Taylor v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 378. A charge under Pen. Code 1895, § 485, that where injury is caused by violence, an intent to injure is presumed and it rests with the assailant to show the contrary, is not objectionable as a charge on the weight of evidence. Stripling v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 376.

78. Instruction defining assault held ambiguous. People v. Sylva [Cal.] 76 P. 814.

79. Indictment for willfully shooting, no evidence on which a verdict of simple assault could be found. State v. Matthews [La.] 36 So. 48; Stokes v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 81 S. W. 1213; Rea v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 80 S. W. 1003. Where an information charged an assault on one certain person, it was error to instruct that he would be guilty if he assaulted either of three persons named in the instruction. State v. Moore [Mo.] 77 S. W. 522.

84. Under Ball. Ann. St. §§ 7057, 7058. Where the verdict was "assault with a deadly weapon" and there was no such crime defined in the statute, "with a deadly weapon" was rejected as surplusage and accused sentenced for simple assault. State v. Snider, 32 Wash. 299, 73 P. 355. One was indicted for assault with intent to kill, being armed with a dangerous weapon. The jury returned a verdict of "assault and battery with a dangerous weapon." Held, that the verdict meant no more than "assault and battery," and the words "and battery" might be rejected as surplusage. State v. Henry [Me.] 57 A. 891.

§ 5. Civil liability.[88] What constitutes.[89]—The same elements must appear in a civil as in a criminal assault.[90] A carrier is liable if his conductor uses excessive force in removing,[91] or assaults a passenger,[92] and an innkeeper is liable for an assault committed by his servant upon a guest.[93] An officer who uses excessive force in making an arrest is liable,[94] but a superintendent of a house of correction who directs his subordinates to punish an inmate is not.[95] It is not necessary that injury result,[96] as nominal damages may be awarded.[97]

Cross actions in favor of each party against the other may arise out of the same affray,[98] and the claims may be presented by a petition by one and set off by the other.[99] Infants may sue by next friend to recover damages for injuries occasioned by assault and battery committed by one other than a parent.[1]

Defenses.[2]—Consent is a defense to a civil action.[3] A parent,[4] or one standing in loco parentis, may administer reasonable chastisement,[5] and an officer in executing a valid writ,[6] or officials in clearing obstructions from the highway,[7] or carriers in expelling a passenger for unseemly conduct,[8] or any person in repelling an attack,[9] may use reasonable force, but cannot take life unless life or limb is in danger.[10] That one is entitled to the possession of premises does not justify an assault committed in taking it.[11]

Abusive language, opprobrious epithets,[12] a character for turbulence,[13] or the fact that one is supposed to be guilty of a crime, does not justify an assault.[14]

4. A minor cannot recover damages for an assault by its parent. Parent and Child, 2 Curr. L. 1089. McKelvey v. McKelvey [Tenn.] 77 S. W. 664.

5. Whether or not the punishment was excessive, reasonable, or cruel, is question of fact for jury. Clasen v. Pruhs [Neb.] 95 N. W. 640. Aunt acting as foster mother; chastisement held unreasonably severe. Id. See, also, Drum v. Miller [N. C.] 47 S. E. 421, in which a school teacher was held not liable for injuries caused by throwing a pencil at a pupil who was misbehaving.

6. Writ of replevin. McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985.

7. It is a good defense that selectmen were using no more force than was necessary in removing obstructions from the highway [V. S. 3508-10]. Chase v. Watson, 75 Vt. 385, 56 A. 10. One was preventing the removal. Id.

8. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 597, 77 S. W. 162.

9. Where plaintiff attempted to drive over defendant with a horse, defendant was entitled in self defense to arm himself with a stick, and if a movement on his part, without striking plaintiff, frightened the horse, causing plaintiff to be thrown and injured, defendant is not liable for such injuries. Halley v. Tichenor, 120 Iowa, 164, 94 N. W. 472. The question as to who was the aggressor is for the jury. Sweet v. Boyd [Iowa] 98 N. W. 601.

Pleading, evidence and trial.[15]—A complaint founded in negligence cannot be treated as one for assault and battery.[16] Pleadings held sufficient.[17]

The defense of son assault demesne,[18] or matters in justification must be specially pleaded,[19] and evidence thereof is not admissible under the general issue.[20]

The burden is on the plaintiff to establish a prima facie case[21] by a preponderance of evidence,[22] therefore the presumption that defendant is innocent until proven guilty does not apply.[23] Res gestae,[24] and evidence of the relative ages and sizes of the parties,[25] and evidence tending to show a disposition to commit the act, is admissible.[26] Other evidence held admissible is discussed in the note.[27] One can-car conductor. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 36 So. 701. Nor will the plea of self defense avail in such a case. Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 45 S. E. 682.

13. Where persons attacked one who had called them names, and who had a reputation for shooting when drunk. Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 45 S. E. 682.

14. Warner v. Talbot [La.] 36 So. 743.

15. See 1 Curr. L. 221.

16. Complaint alleged that injury occurred through negligent act of striking plaintiff with a pistol, which was discharged. Greathouse v. Croan [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 273. An allegation of willful assault is not supported by proof of a battery resulting from negligence. One injured in a friendly scuffle. Gibeline v. Smith [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 961.

17. Physical pain and mental suffering as elements of damage are alleged by an allegation that defendant struck plaintiff causing great pain and suffering. Carlson v. Hall [Iowa] 99 N. W. 671. Where one alleged that he believed his injuries were permanent; that he was lame and suffered pain and was under the care of a physician, it was an allegation that his injuries were permanent. Evans v. Elwood [Iowa] 98 N. W. 584. An action is not begun by trustee process, within meaning of section 1, c. 245, Pub. St. 1891, where a trustee blank was filled out with a fictitious name with no intention of having it served, and it was not served upon a trustee. Keenan v. Perrault [N. H.] 67 A. 335.

18. Lutlopp v. Heckmann [N. J. Err. & App.] 67 A. 1046.

19. Evidence thereof cannot be received under the general issue, and if received without objection cannot be considered. Harden v. Hodges [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 217.

20. Blackmore v. Ellis [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 A. 1047.

21. To show that the injuries complained of are the result of the wrongful act. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174. It is not incumbent on the one assaulted to show that it was without provocation. Sweet v. Boyd [Iowa] 98 N. W. 601.

22. Blackmore v. Ellis [N. J. Err. & App.] 67 A. 1047; Clasen v. Pruhs [Neb.] 95 N. W. 640. Evidence held insufficient to show that injuries to bladder and uterus resulted from the assault. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174.

A verdict for one on his own testimony will not be disturbed because the assailant's denial is corroborated by three witnesses. Zwangizer v. Newman, 87 App. Div. 64, 83 N. Y. S. 1071. Where two witnesses testified that defendant was the aggressor, evidence held sufficient to show that he was. Evans v. Elwood [Iowa] 98 N. W. 584.

Where one assaulted testified that his assailant struck him in the eye and that he was also internally injured, though the physician who examined him testified that the injury did not amount to anything, held sufficiently conflicting to go to the jury on the right to recover. Schmitz v. Kircban, 32 Wash. 546, 73 P. 678. Where there was evidence that one had been assaulted and beat and his face was cut, causing great pain, a nonsuit was properly denied. Jones v. Peterson [Or.] 74 P. 661. An allegation that an eye was cut out was supported by proof that the sight was cut out. Orschein v. Scott [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 982.

Where a woman commenced an affray, and the person she attacked took her by the wrists and held her. While she was bruised to some extent, evidence held to show that excessive force was not used. Mattice v. Scutt, 87 N. Y. S. 1009.

A cause of action for the wrong exists in favor of a female against one ravishing her, and in such case no testimony in corroboration of her is necessary to support a recovery; neither is her delay or failure to make seasonable complaint a bar to her action, but merely goes to her credibility; the sufficiency of the evidence in this as in other civil cases being, where there is a conflict, for the jury. Starnes v. Stevenson [Iowa] 98 N. W. 312.

23. Kurz v. Doerr, 86 App. Div. 607, 13 Ann. Cas. 340, 83 N. Y. S. 736.

24. Proof of complaint of pain at time of receiving the injury is admissible. Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328. What was said and done by each of the parties at the time is admissible. Profane language used. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701.

25. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701.

26. One's habit of playing pranks on people; evidence of throwing pepper in a colored boy's eyes after the assault in issue. Lee v. Longwell [Mich.] 99 N. W. 379, citing People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 367, 65 N. W. 203. Declarations of one pleading self defense that he would not go to a certain place for fear of meeting plaintiff, such declarations being made on occasions different from the occasion of the assault are too remote. Evans v. Elwood [Iowa] 98 N. W. 584. A question as to assailant's reputation for peace was not reversible error. Orschein v. Scott [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 982. Upon the issue of self defense, evidence of prior threats and hostile demonstrations, is competent as tending to show that defendant not testify to conclusions.[28] A nonmedical witness is competent to testify whether an injury appeared recent or otherwise,[29] but not as to the cause and extent thereof.[30]

Instructions must be based on evidence within the issues.[31] Issues made by the pleadings cannot be broadened by instructions.[32] The court cannot be required to charge as to the legal effect of part of the facts proved,[33] nor to make facts substantially covered, the subject of a subsequent charge.[34]

Actual,[35] and if the assault was founded in malice,[36] exemplary damages may be recovered, but it is held that since the defendant is subject to criminal prosecution punitive damages cannot be assessed.[37] As a general rule provocation cannot be shown in mitigation,[38] but the contrary has been held.[39] The aggressor in an

was in peril, that plaintiff began the difficulty, and his motive. Moran v. Vicroy, 24 Ky. L. R. 2415, 74 S. W. 244. Evidence of plaintiff's character for violence and turbulence is inadmissible as, in the absence of any act of plaintiff of dubious import, is his general reputation for violence and turbulence. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 56.

27. In an action for assault on one's wife, which resulted in her death, he is entitled to show her physical condition before the injury. McKinstry v. Collins [Vt.] 56 A. 985. Evidence held not to show that plaintiff had been acquitted of an attempt to provoke a prior assault, therefore it did not constitute error. Schmitz v. Kirchan, 32 Wash. 546, 73 P. 678. Where one admitted that he assaulted another, it was harmless error to permit the justice before whom he pleaded guilty to testify. Id. A survey of the highway was admissible on the question of good faith. Thompson v. Fairbanks, 75 Vt. 361, 56 A. 11. A photograph taken of the inmate on the day of the assault was inadmissible, there being no proof of its correctness. Martin v. Moore [Md.] 57 A. 671.

28. Counsel asked defendant whether he kicked plaintiff in self defense. Evans v. Elwood [Iowa] 98 N. W. 584. To ask the assaulting party whether he did anything that would cause the injury complained of is incompetent. Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328.

29. Wife's testimony as to the appearance of an injury. Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328.

30. Injuries to bladder, uterus, and ovaries. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174.

31. Matters in justification, received without being specially pleaded, cannot be subject of a charge. Harden v. Hodges [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 217. An instruction assuming mitigating circumstances was properly refused when there were none. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701.

32. Complaint alleged negligence and the court charged that a recovery could be had on proof of willful shooting. Greathouse v. Croan [Ind. T.] 76 S. W. 273.

33. Blackmore v. Ellis [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 Atl. 1047.

34. Where the court charged that if the facts were as testified to by the defendant there could be no recovery, defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal to give instructions presenting his theory. Lee v. Longwell [Mich.] 99 N. W. 379. A charge that defendant could recover on his plea of set-off if he was without fault was not error, as it was apparent from the charge as a whole what was meant. McNatt v. McRae, 117 Ga. 898, 45 S. E. 248.

35. Verdict of $1,025.00 for a broken arm which was the principal injury complained of, held excessive in a case where damages by way of punishment were not allowed. Rees v. Rasmussen [Neb.] 98 N. W. 830. Where one testified that his eye was blackened and that he was injured internally, but his physician testified that the injuries did not amount to anything, a verdict for $225.00 was not excessive. Schmitz v. Kirchan, 32 Wash. 546, 73 P. 678. An objection that nominal damages only should be allowed was without merit. Id. Where a mob took a person, threatened to hang him, pulled him up several times, and held a pistol at his head, with a view to extort from him a confession of arson, a verdict for $500 was held insufficient. Warner v. Talbot [La.] 36 So. 743. $2,500.00 for destruction of an eye was not excessive in the absence of mitigating circumstances. Orschein v. Scott [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 982.

Damages of $4,100 held not excessive where plaintiff lost for life his earning capacity of $1.25 to $1.50 per day, and his expectancy was 23 or 24 years. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 73 S. W. 56.

Where counsel in argument asked the jury to allow plaintiff what they would demand for loss of an eye, was not prejudicial where the jury returned a verdict for the same amount as rendered by two juries in preceding trials. Orschein v. Scott [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 982.

36. Blackmore v. Ellis [N. J. Err. & App.] 57 Atl. 1047. Punitive damages may be allowed if the assault is wanton, malicious, or brutal. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 597, 77 S. W. 162. Where the jury found that no actual damage had resulted, it was not prejudicial error to withdraw the question of malice. Robinson v. Halley [Iowa] 100 N. W. 328, citing Myers v. Wright, 44 Iowa, 38.

37. Borkenstein v. Schrack, 31 Ill. App. 220, 67 N. E. 547.

38. Actual damages cannot be reduced by any evidence of provocation that does not amount to justification. Barrette v. Carr, 75 Vt. 425, 56 A. 93. Where one said to a street car conductor "if you put my friend off you will have to put me off," did not justify an assault by the conductor, nor mitigate damages therefor. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Mullen, 138 Ala. 614, 35 So. 701; Warner v. Talbot [La.] 36 So. 743.

affray with a minor cannot recover damages from the father.[40] The jury may consider future suffering in assessing damages,[41] and actual damages may be proved, though the damages laid are bodily pain and mental distress.[42] A court may set aside a verdict on the ground that damages are inadequate.[43]

Evidence as to assailant's financial condition is admissible.[44] Other points admissible are discussed in the note.[45]

ASSIGNMENTS.

§ 1. Rights Susceptible of Assignment (326.)
§ 2. Requisites and Sufficiency of Express Assignments (329).
§ 3. Constructive or Equitable Assignments (331).
§ 4. Construction, Interpretation, and Effect (334).
§ 5. Enforcement of Assignment and of Rights Assigned (335).

§ 1. Rights susceptible of assignment.[46]—A trust deed, in the nature of a mortgage[47] or a chattel mortgage, may be assigned.[48] A mortgagor before sale, but after foreclosure, may assign his right of redemption.[49] Notes, though indorsed nontransferable,[50] open accounts,[51] or debts, are assignable[52] in whole or in part,[53] but not by the debtor himself.[54] Contracts are assignable unless there is something in their terms to indicate the contrary.[55] An executory contract should not be assigned to a competing concern without the consent of the other party thereto.[56]

39. Opprobrious words though not actionable in slander. Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 45 S. E. 682. Matters in justification admitted without being pleaded may be shown in mitigation of exemplary damages. Harden v. Hodges [Tex. Civ. App.] 76 S. W. 217.

40. The minor shot the plaintiff and was at the time this suit was prosecuted serving sentence therefor. Miller v. Meche, 111 La. 143, 35 So. 491.

41. Allegations that the assaulted person suffered pain and believed himself to be permanently injured were sufficient to authorize the jury to consider future suffering. Evans v. Elwood [Iowa] 98 N. W. 584. This is not permitting them to conjecture as to the amount. Id. The amount of damage suffered is for the jury. Sweet v. Boyd [Iowa] 98 N. W. 601.

42. Time he was forced to be idle. Jones v. Peterson [Or.] 74 P. 661.

43. The damages awarded barely covered the doctor's bill, so other elements must have been ignored. Barrette v. Carr. 75 Vt. 425, 56 A. 93, and note to Benton v. Collins [N. C.] 47 L. R. A. 33. In the absence of abuse of discretion its action is not subject to review. Id.

44. The jury may take that into consideration in assessing exemplary damages. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174.

45. Testimony of a physician who had not been paid was competent to lay a foundation for evidence as to the value of them. Jones v. Peterson [Or.] 74 P. 661. Under B. & C. Comp. § 842, testimony of a physician's services is admissible though unconnected at the time with their value. Id. A married woman may be liable for medical services, so evidence thereof is admissible. Willet v. Johnson, 13 Okl. 563, 76 P. 174. Where both parties to an affray claimed punitive damages it was no error to read Civ. Code, § 3609, providing that additional damages may be given for wounded feelings of the plaintiff. McNatt v. McRae, 117 Ga. 898, 45 S. E. 248.

46. See 1 Curr. L. 222.

47. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800.

48. But assignment pendente lite cannot operate to prejudice the other party. Powell v. National Bank of Commerce [Colo. App.] 74 P. 536.

49. This may be done independently of the statute [Iowa Code, § 4061]. Cooper v. Maurer, 122 Iowa, 321, 98 N. W. 124.

50. Herrick v. Edwards [Mo. App.] 81 S. W. 466.

51. Account for medical services rendered. Neal v. Heying [Iowa] 98 N. W. 603.

52. Amount due on a building contract. Allen v. Mayler, 184 Mass. 486, 69 N. E. 220. Bills for work done assigned. Zertanna v. Gray, 102 Mo. App. 188, 76 S. W. 710.

53. A partial assignment cannot be enforced at law, unless the debtor has consented thereto. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. R. 561, 76 S. W. 156.

54. The assignment by a contractor to his surety, to protect him for advances, of warrants in his favor drawn against his own property, gave the surety no lien on the property which he could enforce against a mortgage. United Loan & Deposit Bank v. Bitzer, 25 Ky. L. R. 1538, 78 S. W. 183.

55. Contracts by receiver for the betterment of a railroad were assignable to the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, as from the nature of the case, the property was liable to be sold at any time, and the surety company bonds of the contractor were also assignable, though in a certain sense insurance contracts, as the liability was not increased. American Bonding & Trust Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 124 F. 866. A logging contract sold. Forsman v. Mace, 111 La. 28, 35 So. 372. A contract to print a county map assigned. Hixson Map

Contracts for personal services requiring skill, science, and peculiar qualifications are not assignable,[57] this includes contracts to draw up abstracts,[58] to take care of and manage cattle,[59] or to act as a salesman,[60] but the other party may give force to the assignment by assenting thereto,[61] and this assent may be shown by receiving benefits under the assignment.[62] Contracts to furnish horses for delivery purposes,[63] or to furnish logs to be manufactured into lumber are not such personal contracts,[64] nor is a contract with a body politic to erect and operate a factory in consideration of certain concessions.[65] The right to select exempt property is not assignable.[66] The amount to become due on a contract,[67] a partnership interest,[68] the interest of a beneficiary of a policy after the death of the insured,[69] time checks,[70] or trade secrets are assignable,[71] but the right to a patent not yet issued cannot be assigned at law.[72] The assignor may recover the consideration for the assignment.[73]

An assignment of future earnings is not void as against public policy,[74] and the assignee takes precedence of subsequent attaching creditors,[75] though the term of the employment is indefinite,[76] and the duration or amount of the assignment is uncertain,[77] nor is such an assignment rendered invalid by statutes exempting

56. Where an electric power company contracted to supply a cement company with electricity for five years, an assignment by the latter to a lighting company, which was in competition with the former, was not enforceable, and the fact that after notice of the assignment the power company had furnished electricity to light company and accepted two monthly payments, was not a ratification of assignment, where there was no evidence that power company knew of the circumstances. Hudson River Water Power Co. v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co., 41 Misc. 254, 84 N. Y. S. 62. But on appeal it was held that as the cement company was only forbidden to use the power for manufacture of paper, and the contract was to inure to the "successors and assigns" the contract was assignable, and that at any rate the power company was estopped from objecting since it had accepted payment with notice of the assignment, and that power transformers were to be introduced. Hudson River Water Power Co. v. Glens Falls Gas & Elec. Light Co., 90 App. Div. 513, 85 N. Y. S. 577.

wages from execution,[78] though in some states it must be recorded in order to be valid except as between the parties;[79] in such states the assignor making two assignments of the same wages simultaneous in date and record, the assignee is not liable to an action thereon,[80] nor does want of knowledge on the part of the assignee of the other assignment affect the employer's liability,[81] and the statute not requiring the debt for which the assignment is security to be stated, it covers all debts between the same parties during its duration.[82] As to whether or not a discharge in bankruptcy will render the assignment inoperative there is a conflict.[83] Moneys due a contractor are not "future earnings."[84]

Contingent interests may be assigned,[85] and the current of authority is that an assignment of the naked expectancy of an heir apparent will be enforced in a court of equity.[86] A chose in action[87] or rights of action arising out of contract may be assigned[88] to any one except an attorney in the action;[89] this includes a right of action for real estate commissions,[90] or for the breach of a lease.[91] The survivor of joint payees may assign the right of action upon the obligation.[92] Rights of action, sounding in tort, affecting real property are assignable,[93] as the right to sue for flooding land,[94] also those affecting personal property, as the right to sue a sheriff for seizing property,[95] to recover money deposited in pursuance of a wagering agreement,[96] or for conversion,[97] but not a right to recover a penalty for usury.[98] An unliquidated claim for personal injuries cannot be assigned,[99]

NOTE. Assignability of cause of action for personal injuries: In the absence of statutory provisions as to the survival or assignment of a cause of action for a personal injury, it is generally held to be nonassignable. Francis v. Burnett, 84 Ky. 23; Lawerence v. Martin, 22 Cal. 173; Pulver v. Harris, 52 N. Y. 73. And the same is held even though the assignment be made after verdict. Central R. & Banking Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co., 87 Ga. 386, 13 S. E. 520; Averill v.

though in some states it may be partially assigned to attorneys as compensation for their services in such suit.[1] In some states rights and liabilities regulated by special provision of law are not assignable.[2] Judgments are assignable,[3] and the joint owner of a judgment may assign his undivided interest therein.[4] Liquor licenses are usually not transferable,[5] except with the consent of the authorities.[6] A land warrant to a Mexican war soldier may be assigned, and the assignee can locate the land,[7] but the assignment of half-breed scrip is forbidden by Act of Congress.[8]

§ 2. Requisites and sufficiency of express assignments.[9]—Claims may be assigned before[10] or after suit is brought,[11] or while suit is pending in the supreme court.[12] In some states an assignment of a cause of action after suit and before judgment must be in writing, filed with the clerk of the court, and noted upon the docket.[13] The evidence must be sufficient to show an actual assignment[14] from the owner of the thing assigned,[15] to an existing person,[16] the interest to vest in the assignee being a present right in the thing assigned.[17]

Longfellow, 66 Me. 237. But where the cause of action survives by statute it is assignable. Hawley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa, 717, 29 N. W. 787; Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432; Lehmann v. Farwell, 95 Wis. 185, 70 N. W. 170, 33 L. R. A. 333. Contra, North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Ackley, 171 Ill. 100, 49 N. E. 222, 44 L. R. A. 177. And where the claim survives verdict it is assignable. 10. Claims of 18 persons against defendant for fraudulent misrepresentations as to mining stock may be assigned so as to permit a single action to be brought. Benedict v. Guardian Trust Co., 91 App. Div. 103, 86 N. Y. S. 370.

11. But assignees' rights are limited to those of the original plaintiffs. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. S. B. Wilson & Co. [Miss.] 35 So. 340.

12. Where one third of a cause of action was assigned with agreement that it should not be compromised so that the assignee should receive less than $5,000 and the assignee paid for the assignment $5,000 it was not void as against public policy, or in contravention of Mills' Colo. Ann. St. § 1299, against officiously intermeddling in other's suits. O'Driscoll v. Doyle, 31 Colo. 193, 73 P. 27.

13. A complaint in an action upon a judgment showing that the cause of action had been assigned after suit and before judgment, but which did not show an assignment according to the statute is demurrable [Laws 1899, p. 154]. Fordyce v. McPhetrige, 71 Ark. 327, 73 S. W. 1096. Such statutes do not refer to assignments executed before suit is brought. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eldredge [Tex. Civ. App.] 80 S. W. 556.

14. Where plaintiff, assignee, and his assignor, both testified as to the assignment of the contract, and the written assignment was offered in evidence, there was sufficient proof of the assignment. Miller v. Luders, 85 N. Y. S. 265. Where an oral assignment could not be established except by the testimony of the assignor who denied its existence, held too doubtful to be sustained. Wooster v. Trowbridge [C. C. A.] 120 F. 667. The assignment of a chose in action sufficiently proved by testimony of assignor that he intended to assign his title. Crocker v. Muller, 40 Misc. 685, 83 N. Y. S. 189.

15. Allegation that claim of Consolidated Chandelier Co. was assigned to plaintiff not supported by an assignment from Sanberg, and testimony that he was the "owner" of the company. Saffier v. Haft, 86 App. Div. 284, 13 Ann. Cas. 318, 83 N. Y. S. 763.

16. A claim to recover a wager from a stockholder is assignable by parol, but testimony of assignor that he had assigned it to assignee, without any proof of existence of latter, or that he had not reassigned it, was not sufficient to sustain suit by assignee. Bernstein v. Horth, 85 N. Y. S. 263.

17. Donovan v. Middlebrook, 88 N. Y. S.

The article assigned must be delivered,[18] but being incapable of manual delivery a written assignment duly delivered,[19] or an oral assignment if founded upon a valuable and adequate consideration and accompanied by acts which amount to a constructive delivery,[20] is sufficient. A chose in action may be assigned by parol,[21] and is sufficiently delivered by the debtor's promising to pay it to another.[22] Leases for terms of years,[23] notes,[24] and mortgages, must be assigned in writing and be duly delivered.[25] Execution of a written assignment, it being recorded, in pursuance of a previous oral assignment, and notice being given the one having possession of the property, removes all question of the sufficiency of the oral assignment.[26]

Any right of action in connection with the thing assigned passes, though not specifically mentioned.[27] As between the parties there must be a consideration.[28]

At common law an executor, administrator, or guardian can assign promissory notes payable to himself without an order of the court,[29] but this rule has been abrogated in some states by statute.[30]

No particular form and specific instrument in writing is required in giving notice to the debtor in the assignment of debts, any notice to the debtor being sufficient.[31] No formal acceptance is necessary to an assignment of future earnings,[32] payment to the assignee is sufficient,[33] and an agent may obtain authority to accept such assignments for the holder of the fund by course of dealing.[34]

607. Assignment of a written contract. Liberty Wall Paper Co. v. Stoner Wall Paper Mfg. Co. [N. Y.] 70 N. E. 501.

18. The possession by the assignee of, and the general indorsement of the assignor on, a written contract is a sufficient assignment thereof. Hixson Map Co. v. Nebraska Post Co. [Neb.] 98 N. W. 872.

NOTE. Delivery: Delivery is essential to the assignment. Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 S. Ct. 415; Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281; In re Crawford, 113 N. Y. 560, 21 N. E. 692. And the delivery must be such as to confer upon the donee the present right to reduce the fund to possession. Baskett v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 S. Ct. 415; Sterling v. Wilkinson, 83 Va. 791, 3 S. E. 533; Yancey v. Field, 85 Va. 756, 8 S. E. 721.—From note to Williamson v. Yager [Ky.] 34 Am. St. Rep. 184.

19. A written assignment of a partner's interest is sufficient, though the assignor continue to deal with the partnership property as he had formerly done. Driscoll v. Driscoll [Cal.] 77 P. 471. An assignment duly signed at the end of a statement of services rendered which was attached to the petition is sufficient. Neal v. Heying [Iowa] 98 N. W. 603. See 1 Curr. L. 223, n. 35, 36.

20. Share of estate in the hands of an administrator. Howe v. Howe, 97 Me. 422, 54 A. 908. See 1 Curr. L. 223, n. 31-33.

21. Father paid money to son directing him to pay $400 thereof to the latter's sister upon the father's death, the son promising to do so, in the presence of the daughter, held a sufficient assignment. Ebel v. Piehl [Mich.] 95 N. W. 1004.

22. Ebel v. Piehl [Mich.] 95 N. W. 1004.

23. A bond referring to a lease as "assigned" to defendant is not a sufficient writing to sustain the assignment. Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107.

24. A note must be assigned by indorsement thereon [Hurd's Ill. Rev. St. 1899, c. 98, § 4]. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800.

25. Where decedent executed assignments of mortgages to certain beneficiaries, and left in box with memorandum to deliver to beneficiaries after his death, and where some were partly paid he executed checks to the beneficiaries for the amount and left with the assignments, but died with them all in his possession, there was no delivery. Clay v. Layton [Mich.] 96 N. W. 458.

26. Howe v. Howe, 97 Me. 422, 54 A. 908.

27. Assigning in writing "all damage which I sustained on account of flooding on the 2d day of July, ——" held sufficiently to show intent to assign right of action. Hovey v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co. [Mich.] 97 N. W. 398. The assignment of the "right, title and interest" of the assignor to certain shares of stock which had been converted carries with it the right of action for the conversion. Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. 233, 86 N. Y. S. 42. An assignment of time checks carries with it the right of action. Fitger v. Archibald Guthrie & Co., 89 Minn. 330, 94 N. W. 888.

28. An assignment of a vested remainder interest worth $32,500 for $8,750 cash, the life tenant dying 10 years thereafter, held a sufficient consideration and assignee entitled to the $32,500. In re Phillips' Estate, 205 Pa. 511, 55 A. 212. The uncontradicted evidence being that the assignment of a right of action for breach of a contract of sale was to one who had helped raise the crop sold, and that the assignee was to retain ⅓ of the proceeds and give the assignor ⅔, held sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the assignee was a bona fide holder of the claim. Devine v. Warner [Conn.] 56 A. 562. See 1 Curr. L. 224, n. 45-48.

29. Browne v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. [Tex.] 80 S. W. 593.

Record.[35]—Assignments of "future earnings"[36] in some states must be recorded to be valid except as between the parties,[37] though in some states they need not where given to secure a bona fide debt.[38] As to the right of the contracting parties to restrict the assignment of a contract see note.[39]

§ 3. Constructive or equitable assignments.[40]—The transfer of a note,[41] or debt,[42] or chose in action,[43] or part thereof,[44] carries with it the mortgage or lien securing it,[45] notwithstanding the statutory requisites have not been complied with.[46] enter it on the books as required. Sintes v. Commerford [La.] 36 So. 656.

32. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. Kidwell [Colo. App.] 76 P. 922. The acceptance by a street commissioner of an assignment of future earnings by an employe in his department in the following words, "Accepted. John B. Noyes, Street Commissioner," held sufficient. Lamoreux v. Morin [N. H.] 54 A. 1023.

33. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. Kidwell [Colo. App.] 76 P. 922.

34. Street commissioner as agent of a city in accepting assignments by employes of his department of their future earnings. Lamoreux v. Morin [N. H.] 54 A. 1023.

35. See 1 Curr. L. 224.

36. Query, whether future earned wages are exempt property under Ia. Code, § 2906, and husband and wife must both join in a written assignment. Petersen v. Ball, 121 Iowa, 544, 97 N. W. 79.

37. Mass. Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 34. But where only a few dollars worth of work remained to be done on a contract to build a stable for $1,473, the assignment of the balance due on the contract was not an assignment of future earnings as the contract was substantially performed. Allen v. Mayers, 184 Mass. 472, 69 N. E. 220; Park Brew. Co. v. McDermott, 25 R. I. 95, 54 A. 924; Whitcomb v. Waterville [Me.] 58 A. 68.

38. Conn. Gen. St. 1902, § 836, declaring assignment of future earnings not valid against an attaching creditor unless to secure a bona fide debt, or recorded, does not apply to money due a contractor. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Banking Co. [Conn.] 57 A. 275.

39. NOTE. Right to prohibit the assignment of a contract: Though a contract be in its nature assignable, the parties thereto may in terms restrict or prohibit its assignment, so that an assignee cannot succeed to any rights in the contract by virtue of the assignment thereof to him. Mueller v. Northwestern University, 195 Ill. 236, 63 N. E. 110, 88 Am. St. Rep. 194; Delaware County v. Diebold Safe, etc., Co., 133 U. S. 473, 10 S. Ct. 399; Carter v. State, 8 S. D. 153, 65 N. W. 422; Omaha v. Standard Oil Co., 55 Neb. 337, 75 N. W. 859; Burck v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 635, 14 S. Ct. 696.

An assignment of a contract in express violation of its positive provisions is void, and the person claiming through such an assignment is entitled to no relief in equity (Grigg v. Landis, 19 N. J. Eq. 350), and, on the other hand, a collateral covenant restraining the assignment of a contract cannot be enforced in equity it appearing that such restraint is but an incident to the objects of the principal covenants which have been substantially performed (Id.).

The debtor or contractor may waive a provision forbidding the assignment of the contract without his consent (Brewster v. City of Hornellsville, 35 App. Div. 161, 54 N. Y. S. 904), or he may become estopped to raise objection to the assignment (Pike v. Waltham, 168 Mass. 581, 47 N. E. 437; Staples v. Somerville, 176 Mass. 241, 57 N. E. 380).

The assignment being void all that is acquired by the assignee is a right to maintain an action against the assignor for the share of the profits which he has attempted to transfer. Burck v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 634, 14 S. Ct. 696.

Only the party for whose benefit such a restriction is made can insist upon it. Wilson v. Reuter, 29 Iowa, 176; Fortunato v. Patten, 147 N. Y. 277-281, 41 N. E. 572; Burnett v. Jersey City, 31 N. J. Eq. 341.

A stipulation in a contract against its assignment is not violated by its assignment as collateral security. Butler v. Rockwell, 14 Colo. 125, 23 P. 462; Board of Trustees v. Whalen, 17 Mont. 1, 41 P. 849.

Quaere, is the general rule permitting parties to stipulate against the assignment of their contracts restricted in its operation to transfers voluntarily made by them? It would seem so. See Freeman. Ex'ns, §§ 119, 194; Jackson v. Silvernail, 15 Johns. [N. Y.] 278; Higgins v. McConnell, 130 N. Y. 482, 29 N. E. 978; Moser v. Tucker, 87 Tex. 94, 26 S. W. 1044; Boone v. First Nat. Bank, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 365, 43 S. W. 594; Smith v. Putman, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 221; Riggs v. Pursell, 66 N. Y. 193; Jackson v. Corliss, 7 Johns. [N. Y.] 531; Doe d. Mitchinson v. Carter, 8 Term R. 300. —From note to Mueller v. Northwestern University, 195 Ill. 236, 63 N. E. 110, 88 Am. St. Rep. 194.

40. See 1 Curr. L. 224.

41. In action to foreclose a mortgage, the want of a formal written assignment. will not defeat the foreclosure. Brynjolfson v. Osthus [N. D.] 96 N. W. 261.

42. The indorsement of a note given for purchase money of land carries the vendor's lien and the right to enforce it. Mulky v. Karsell, 31 Ind. App. 595, 68 N. E. 689.

43. The assignee of a chose in action purchased at a receiver's sale became invested with equitable lien, which was created by the contract creating the debt. Appellant advanced money to purchase tobacco, which it was to sell, and it was to have a lien on tobacco and proceeds for advances, and expenses. Cincinnati Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Leslie & Whitaker's Trustee, 25 Ky. L. R. 1570, 78 S. W. 413.

44. An assignment of part of the indebtedness carries a pro tanto interest in the mortgage securing it. Miller v. Campbell Commission Co., 13 Okl. 75, 74 P. 507.

45. Where one who held land under a deed which was subsequently declared to be a mortgage gave a mortgage to another, the

A court of equity gives effect to assignments of all kinds of future and contingent interests in personalty, as well as realty, if made for a valuable consideration, and not in contravention of public policy;[47] this includes patents applied for,[48] the interest of a beneficiary in a benefit certificate on the life of another,[49] and expectancies in real estate.[50] The assignor must be in a condition to transfer the property or chose in action, or to cause it to be transferred, to the assignee.[51] A partner after the dissolution of the partnership cannot assign partnership claims without consent of his former partners.[52]

Any order, writing or act, which makes an appropriation of a fund, amounts to an equitable assignment thereof,[53] but it must be drawn upon a particular fund,[54] latter is an equitable assignee of the former. Kiddell v. Bristow [S. C.] 45 S. E. 174.

46. Where note and trust deed were assigned by a separate instrument, it only amounted to an equitable assignment, since Hurd's Ill. Rev. St. 1899, c. 98, § 4, requires indorsement on the note. Bouton v. Cameron, 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800.

47. Guarantee fund belonging to contractors in the hands of the government. Wagenhurst v. Wineland, 20 App. D. C. 85.

48. The assignment of an exclusive right to use a machine, for which grantors have applied for patent, may operate in equity as an assignment of the patent subsequently issued. Milwaukee Carving Co. v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. [C. C. A.] 126 F. 171.

49. An assignment of a benefit certificate on life of another to secure a debt will be supported in equity, notwithstanding charter rule that the benefit fund is to assist members, and that it shall be exempt from execution. Jarvis v. Binkley, 206 Ill. 541, 69 N. E. 582.

50. Conveyance by heir apparent of land he does not own is void at law, but may be enforced in equity as an agreement to convey. In re Ryder's Estate, 141 Cal. 366, 74 P. 993. Where, for a valuable consideration, consisting of present indebtedness and future advances, an assignment is made of all sums of money then due or which might become due to the assignor from an estate then unsettled in the hands of an administrator, held a valid equitable assignment as between the assignor and claimants. Howe v. Howe, 97 Me. 422, 54 A. 908.

51, 52. Wagenhurst v. Wineland, 20 App. D. C. 85.

53. Check. Fortier v. Delgado & Co. [C. C. A.] 122 F. 604. See 1 Curr. L. 224, n. 52.

NOTE. Check, Whether Assignment of Fund: One class of cases asserts the doctrine that the drawing and delivery of a check do not operate as an assignment, in any sense, of the drawer's rights as against the drawee, unless the check is in some way accepted by the drawee, and hence that, as between the drawer and the payee or holder, the check does not operate as an assignment of so much of the fund as is drawn upon, or of the drawer's rights as against the drawee. In other words, that a check drawn and delivered to the person to whose order it is payable does not operate, without acceptance by the drawee, as an assignment of the sum for which it was given, although the drawer may have, or may have had at the time it was drawn, funds in the possession of the drawee of an equal or larger amount. There being no privity, express or implied, between the holder of the check and the drawee, such holder of the check in its original form can bring no suit on it against the drawee. In case of nonpayment, the recourse of the holder is against the drawer and the indorser, if any. The drawer alone can bring suit to recover the funds against which the check was drawn, and ordinarily he only can maintain an action for failure to pay on presentment. He may revoke the check, and countermand its payment before acceptance, and if unaccepted, his death will operate as a revocation, and it seems that his insolvency has the same effect.

This view of the law of checks is unanimously adopted by the courts of England, and the vast weight of American authority is also found to be in full accord with this rule. Among the cases supporting it are National Bank v. Millard, 10 Wall. 152; National Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343; Dana v. Third Nat. Bank, 13 Allen, 445; Carr v. National, etc., Bank, 107 Mass. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 6; Aetna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Case v. Henderson, 23 La. Ann. 49, 8 Am. Rep. 590; Colorado Nat. Bank v. Boettcher, 5 Colo. 185, 40 Am. Rep. 142; Griffin v. Kemp, 46 Ind. 172; National Bank v. Second Nat. Bank, 69 Ind. 479, 35 Am. Rep. 236; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 516, 50 Am. Rep. 805, fully discussing the subject and citing and classifying the cases; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Coates, 79 Mo. 168; Dickinson v. Coates, 79 Mo. 250, 49 Am. Rep. 228; Coates v. Doran, 83 Mo. 337 (these cases overruling several cases in the Missouri court of appeals holding a contrary view); Creveling v. Bloomsbury Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 255, 50 Am. Rep. 417; Duncan v. Berlin, 60 N. Y. 151; People v. Merchants' Bank, 78 N. Y. 269, 34 Am. Rep. 532; Risley v. Phoenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 318, 38 Am. Rep. 421; Veits v. Union Nat. Bank, 101 N. Y. 563; Saylor v. The doctrine has been lately approved by the supreme court of Alabama in National, etc., Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168, and reaffirmed by the supreme court of the United States in Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, where the court said: "The question of must be accepted by the party upon whom it is drawn,[55] and delivered to the payee.[56] A check for a portion of a deposit does not generally operate at the time of delivery as an assignment pro tanto of the fund on deposit.[57] Orders given by a contractor for payment of money due which are accepted by the holder of the fund,[58] or warrants registered with a county treasurer,[59] operate as an equitable assignment of the fund. An agreement to pay a certain sum out of, or that one is entitled to receive the same from, a designated sum when received, does not operate as an equitable assignment,[60] the test being whether or not the debtor would be justified in paying the debt, or the portion contracted about, to the person claiming to be the assignee;[61] but it has been held that a direction to pay to another the money due does not constitute an assignment.[62] Neither a revocable power of how far and under what circumstances a check of a depositor in a bank will be considered an equitable assignment to the payee of the check of all or any portion of the funds or deposits to the credit of the drawer in the bank, is one which has been very much considered of late years in the courts, and about which there is not a unanimity of opinion. In this court, it is very well settled that such a check, unless accepted by the bank, will not sustain an action at law by the drawee against the bank, as there is no privity of contract between them." In the later case of Florence Mining Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391, the court said: "An order to pay a particular sum out of a special fund cannot be treated as an equitable assignment pro tanto, unless accompanied with such a relinquishment of control over the sum designated that the fundholder can safely pay it, and be compelled to do so, though forbidden by the drawer. A general deposit in a bank is so much money to the depositor's credit; it is a debt to him by the bank, payable on demand, to his order, not properly capable of identification and specific appropriation. A check upon the bank in the usual form not accepted or certified by its cashier to be good, does not constitute a transfer of any money to the credit of the holder; it is simply an order, which may be countermanded; and payment forbidden by the drawer at any time before it is actually cashed. It creates no lien on the money which the holder can enforce against the bank. It does not of itself constitute an equitable assignment." In the late case of Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380-385, 17 Am. St. Rep. 900, the court reaffirmed this doctrine, and said: "This brings us to the question as to whether complainant can recover upon this check as against the bank. While the authorities are not agreed, yet the decided weight of opinion is, that the holder of a bank check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment, in the absence of proof that it was accepted by the bank, or that it has done some other act equivalent to and implying acceptance. This has been the uniform view of this court. Planters' Bank v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177; Planters' Bank v. Keesee, 7 Heisk. 200; Imboden v. Perrie, 13 Lea, 504. We are unable to see any reason for disturbing the rule as heretofore declared by this court, especially as the decided weight of authority is in accord with our decisions."—From note to Hemphill v. Yerkes [Pa.] 19 Am. St. Rep. 607. Other notes on the same subject will be found in 19 Am. Dec. 422, 96 Am. Dec. 132 and 45 Am. Rep. 355.

62. Where a salesman sold goods for a attorney to locate half-breed scrip,[63] nor an application by a beneficiary of an insurance policy for a change of beneficiaries,[64] nor the employment of an attorney on a contingent fee operate as an assignment of the claim.[65]

§ 4. Construction, interpretation, and effect.[66]—An assignment though absolute on its face may be shown to have been taken for collateral security.[67] An assignment of a contract carries with it all sums due thereunder,[68] but money due for extra work will not pass unless mentioned.[69] An assignment of one's interest in property carries with it the right to sue for torts concerning that property.[70] An assignment of a chose in action,[71] or of an expectancy,[72] is wholly ineffectual as against the debtor unless he has notice or knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry, and then the debtor may not be bound to recognize it,[73] but it will be complete, as against creditors of the assignor, if the trustee has notice or knowledge of it in season to disclose the fact of the assignment.[74]

There is a conflict as to whether assignees have priority according to priority of notice,[75] or priority of assignment.[76] A letter mentioning the assignment incidentally,[77] or presenting the order to the debtor before delivery to the assignee,[78] are

NOTE: Can subsequent assignees obtain precedence by first giving notice? Upon this question there is irreconcilable conflict. In some states the rule is that the prior assignee in point of time is protected, this decision being supported by two reasons: (1) A valid assignment once being made the assignor has no further interest in the claim; Clark v. Hogeman, 13 W. Va. 718; Luse v. Parke, 17 N. J. Eq. 415: (2) The maxim, Prior in tempore, potior in jure; Maybin v. Kirby, 4 Rich. Eq. [S. C.] 105; Coon v. Reed, 79 Pa. 240; Muir v. Schenck, 3 Hill [N. Y.] 228, 38 Am. Dec. 633; Fairbanks v. Sargent, 104 N. Y. 108, 9 N. E. 870, 58 Am. Rep. 490; Tingle v. Fisher, 20 W. Va. 497. In other states, in the Federal courts and in England a different rule prevails; it being held that the question which of the successive bona fide assignees for value of the same obligation is entitled to priority depends upon when notice thereof was communicated to the debtor. Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, 7 S. Ct. 644; Ward v. Morrison, 25 Vt. 593; Murdoch v. Finney, 21 Mo. 138; Miller v. Bomberger, 76 Pa. 78; Merchants,' etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 3 Iowa, 93, 66 Am. Dec. 49; The Elmbank, 72 Fed. 610; Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1; Stocks v. Dobson, 4 De Gex, M. & G. 11, 16, and annotations thereto. Special notice does not seem to be necessary, it being sufficient if the party to be affected has such knowledge of the facts or circumstances as ought to induce a reasonable belief of the fact, and the debtor is bound from the time of notice, although not concurring in the arrangement: Note to Stocks v. Dobson, 4 De Gex, M. & G. 11. If notice of assignments are simultaneous, the earlier assignment has priority: Califsher v. Forbes, 7 Ch. App. 109; Murdoch v. Finney, 21 Mo. 138, 140. —From note to Graham Paper Co. v. Pembroke [Cal.] 71 Am. St. Rep. 26.

77. A letter to the holder of the legal title to a chose in action assigned as collateral security offering to sell the property secured by the assignment, and stating that it was so secured, held not sufficient notice so as to give assignee priority over subsequent assignments of which proper notice was given. ineffectual as notice. An assignment being superior to a foreign attachment, it is superior to an assignment after the attachment in which the assignee has given notice to the holder of the fund.[79] An assignment of property as security for a running account is not security for advances made by the assignee after notice of attachments placed on the security by creditors.[80] An assignment for the payment of a debt past due of such money as might thereafter become due upon a contract during its performance does not take priority over the claims of an assignee of the contract, who completed it after the assignor's abandonment.[81]

The assignee is not a bona fide holder, but he takes the property or right subject to all the equities existing between the parties,[82] he is chargeable with any notice or knowledge the original creditor possessed of fraud on the part of the debtor affecting the collection of the debt,[83] takes the right subject to forfeiture for acts of the assignor,[84] and is bound by any settlement,[85] or release,[86] entered into by the assignor prior to the assignment. A plaintiff suing in tort, assigning to his attorneys an interest in the cause of action declared upon, the attorney does not thereby become a necessary party to the suit,[87] nor can he be made a party to the suit upon the motion of the adverse party,[88] nor does it entitle the court to treat him as a party for the purpose of giving security for costs.[89] A transfer to an attorney of a part of a cause of action, referring to the cause and authorizing the attorney to do all things necessary for the prosecution or settlement of the cause, authorizes the attorney to prosecute the cause in the assignor's name.[90]

On an absolute assignment of a claim in payment of a debt, the surplus to be paid to other creditors of the assignor, the assignee takes the legal title, the equitable title as to such surplus being in the other creditors.[91] An assignor cannot settle a claim after assignment and notice to the debtor.[92] An assignor not acquiring title until subsequent to the assignment, the assignee takes title by estoppel.[93] A reassignment back to the assignor does not annul the assignment.[94] being absolute, the assignee may generally sue in his own name,[96] though in some states he must show, as a condition precedent to exercising this right, that he is the owner in his own right and for his own benefit, without accountability,[97] and in an action upon such an assignment the assignor is not a necessary party,[98] and where the claim is assigned for security the assignee,[99] or the assignor, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the assignee,[1] may sue thereon in his own name; and the assignee of such a claim may make a settlement with the consent of his assignor,[2] and where such claim requires presentation before suit can be brought, presentation by the assignor with the assignee's knowledge and acquiescence is sufficient.[3] The assignment must be in existence at the commencement of the suit in order to entitle the assignee to sue thereon,[4] and in some states one's interest in an action being assigned during the pendency thereof, it may be prosecuted to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff.[5] The assignee of a trade secret may enjoin employees of his assignor, having knowledge of the same, from utilizing it.[6] The right to attach does not follow the debt assigned.[7]

The assignor in suing the assignee must allege the performance of conditions precedent.[8] It is sufficient to allege an assignment without specifying the assignor's authority,[9] though one claiming an assignment through an attorney in fact must show that the latter had authority.[10] An allegation of an assignment by a company is not supported by proof of an assignment executed by an individual.[11] Clerical errors will be overlooked.[12] Where a plaintiff claims as an assignee, an amendment of his complaint, so as to declare upon an account stated immediately between the parties without reference to the assignor, is a departure from the original cause of action.[13] One assailing the validity of an assignment on the ground that there was no consideration must prove lack of consideration.[14] The first assignee's title being defective a subsequent assignee must show that he is a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.[15] The burden is upon the assignee to show that the debtor had knowl-

§ 1. Nature of transaction in general.[20]—A direct transfer to creditors, without the intervention of a duly appointed trustee, is not an assignment for the benefit of creditors,[21] nor does this term include the assignment of specific property for the benefit of particular creditors,[22] though in some states an assignment of all the debtor's property to one or more creditors is equivalent to a general assignment,[23] a surety on a note being a creditor of the maker within the meaning of such a statute.[24] In order to distinguish an assignment from a mortgage, the test is, was it the intention of the parties at the time of executing the instrument to divest the debtor of his title and so make an appropriation of the property affected to the raising of a fund to pay debts? If such was the intention, the instrument is an assignment for benefit of creditors.[25]

§ 2. Statutory provisions and conflict of laws.[26]—State acts on the subject are not generally retroactive,[27] and must not violate constitutional provisions.[28] The law of the state where the assignment was made governs, there being nothing in the instrument to indicate that it is to be performed elsewhere,[29] and the courts of such state are the only ones having jurisdiction of the proceedings.[30] The rights of a nonresident creditor in the collection of his claim in the state of his domicile are not affected by state insolvency laws, unless he has voluntarily submitted himself to their operation,[31] but a common-law assignment, containing no prejudicial provisions and being made in good faith, binds resident and nonresident creditors alike.[32] In the latter case, the assent of the creditors may be presumed; in the former it cannot.[33] The bankruptcy law does not suspend the operation of state insolvency laws, an assignment being good unless seasonably impeached by bankruptcy proceedings.[34]

§ 3. Right to make a general assignment.[35]—In Missouri, insurance companies under the surveillance of the superintendent of insurance cannot make a valid assignment for the benefit of creditors.[36]

§ 4. Filing, recording, or registering; qualifying of assignee, removals, and substitution.[37]—In some of the states, the deed of assignment must be recorded,[38] and it is no excuse that the assignor requested the assignee not to so record it.[39] That the assignee prior to the assignment and as attorney for several creditors attached the property of the debtor, subject to which attachments the property was assigned, does not invalidate the assignment.[40]

The assignee's management being wasteful, negligent, or otherwise inefficient, he may be removed upon petition by creditors,[41] though this right may be lost by laches.[42] The assignor being a corporation and insolvent, the courts in some states will remove the assignee and appoint a receiver.[43]

§ 5. Meaning and effect in general.[44]—Either an acceptance by the assignee or a deposit for record by the assignor without the assignee's acceptance irrevocably vests the beneficial interest in the property in the creditors.[45] In Missouri, the execution of a deed of assignment immediately after giving a preference does not invalidate the latter.[46] The intent to waive a constitutional right should be clear.[47]

§ 6. Legality and equitableness.[48]—Seals are seldom necessary.[49] A deed of NOTE. Illegal reservations: A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors which reserves to the assignor any interest, benefit, or advantage, out of the property conveyed, to the exclusion or injury of creditors is fraudulent and void on its face. Kayser v. Heavenrich, 5 Kan. 324; Claflin v. Iseman, 23 S. C. 416; Chafee v. Blatchford, 6 Mackey, 459; Ware v. Wanless, 2 Wyo. 144; Lawrence v. Norton, 15 F. 853; Muller v. Reservation of the surplus, after payment of all the creditors, is valid. Hoffman v. Mackall, 5 Ohio St. 124, 64 Am. Dec. 637. Compare Bailey v. Mills, 27 Tex. 434. Reservation of surplus after the complete discharge of the debts of all "assenting" creditors is void, in so far as it attempts to protect such surplus from the claims of the nonassenting creditors, but does not invalidate the assignment as to the assenting creditors. Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh, 271, 31 Am. Dec. 642.

Leaving debtor in possession vitiates an assignment: Anderson v. Fuller, 1 McMull. Eq. 27, 36 Am. Dec. 290; Shufeldt v. Jenkins, 22 F. 359, 368; Baum v. Pearce, 67 Miss. 700; especially where such possession is for any considerable length of time, and is unexplained (Grimsley v. Hooker, 3 Jones, Eq. 4, 67 Am. Dec. 227); or where control of the property is so reserved as to enable the debtor, at his pleasure, to make or withhold payment, according as his creditors shall submit to or reject the terms dictated by him. Niolon v. Douglas, 2 Hill Ch. 443, 30 Am. Dec. 368; Saunders v. Waggoner, 82 Va. 316; McCormick v. Atkinson, 78 Va. 8.

A debtor, in making an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, cannot withdraw from its operation any part of his property for the future support of himself. Pettibone v. Stevens, 15 Conn. 19, 38 Am. Dec. 57. So, if the assignor reserves one hundred dollars out of assets, for his own benefit, it will make the assignment fraudulent and void as to creditors, although the assets assigned are of great value, and the sum withheld by the assignor is to meet pressing family necessities (Montgomery v. Goodbar, 69 Miss. 333; but in Shufeldt v. Jenkins, 22 Fed. Rep. 359) 367, it is said that: "The law does not forbid the retention of a few hundred dollars by an insolvent grantor for paying small debts, when circumstances warrant the measure;" but that the deed of assignment ought not to conceal the fact.

An assignment which includes property consumable in using, is fraudulent and void, if it provides that the debtor shall remain in possession of such property and use it although other property not consumable is also included. Sommerville v. Horton, 4 Yerg. 541, 26 Am. Dec. 242. An assignment is not avoided, however, by the assignor's retention of property specified in the instrument as having been assigned. Pike v. Bacon, 21 Me. 280, 38 Am. Dec. 259.

Any reservation, in the assignment, of property for the benefit of the debtor's family, is fraudulent and void as to his nonassenting creditors (McClurg v. Lecky, 3 Penr. & W. 83, 23 Am. Dec. 64; Beck v. Burdett, 1 Paige, 305, 19 Am. Dec. 436); who may take the property in execution (McAllister v. Marshall, 6 Bin. 338, 6 Am. Dec. 458).

While an assignment for the benefit of creditors is fraudulent and void as against attaching creditors of the assignor, if he reserved a part of his property not exempt by law for his own benefit (Wichita, etc., Grocery Co. v. Records, 40 Kan. 119; Penzel Grocer Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 81), a general assignment of all the debtor's property is not rendered fraudulent because the debtor reserves to himself a homestead or other exemptions to which he is lawfully entitled. Southern Suspender Co. v. Van Borries, 91 Ala. 507; Frank v. Myers, 97 Ala. 437; Richardson v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416; Penzel Grocer Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 81; Clark Shoe Co. v. Edwards, 57 Ark. 331; Baker v. Baer, 59 Ark. 503; King v. Hargadine-McKittrick, etc., Co., 60 Ark. 1; Wilhoit v. Bryant, 78 Cal. 263; Parker v. Cleveland, 37 Fla. 39; Dorr v. Schmidt, 38 Fla. 354; Bradley v. Bischel, 81 Iowa, 80; Muhr v. Pinover, 67 Md. 480; Hartzler v. Tottle, 85 Mo. 23; Bobbitt v. Rodwell, 105 N. C. 236; Morehead Banking Co. v. Whitaker, 110 N. Rep. 353; McFarland v. Bate, 45 Kan. 1.

Creditors are not hindered or delayed by the reservation of that which they have no right to touch. Hildebrand v. Bowman, 100 Pa. St. 580. The reservation of money which, in amount, is equal to a personal property exemption, in lieu of such exemption is no evidence of a fraudulent purpose. Morehead Banking Co. v. Whitaker, 110 N. C. 345. Nor is a provision in the assignment that the assignee shall sell the property conveyed and pay to the assignor a certain amount of money as his personal property exemptions. Blair v. Brown, 116 N. C. 631; showing facts, however, constituting sufficient evidence of a conspiracy to defraud the creditors to admit evidence of declarations of the debtor made after the assignment. It has been held that the reservation, from the proceeds of personal property assigned, of a sum equal to the assignor's exemptions renders the deed of assignment void (King v. Ruble, 54 Ark. 418); and, on the other hand, that, if the deed of assignment does not provide for the payment of exemptions out of the proceeds of the assigned property, and no fraud or collusion as to the execution of the instrument is shown, the subsequent allowance of the exemptions out of the sale of the assigned property does not render the deed of assignment fraudulent as to creditors (Dorr v. Schmidt, 38 Fla. 354). An assignment is not invalid because of a direction that a chattel exemption to which the debtor is entitled under the homestead laws of the state shall be in money derived from a sale of the property assigned for the benefit of creditors. Adler v. Cloud, 42 S. C. 272. But if appraisers award the assignor his exemption out of the proceeds of real estate to be sold, and the assignee afterward pays over the money of his own motion and without an order of the court, he will be surcharged with it on proof that the assignor's right to receive it had been forfeited by fraud. Kreider's Estate, 135 Pa. St. 578. An assignor for the benefit of creditors, who fraudulently denies the ownership of property belonging to him, and thus hinders the assignee in the discharge of his duties, forfeits his right to receive out of the assigned estate "so much property as would be exempt from levy and sale on execution," reserved by him in his deed of assignment. Kreider's Estate, 135 Pa. St. 578.

Withholding of property: It is a fraud to intentionally withhold from a general assignment for the benefit of creditors property which ought to have been included in it. If necessary, he should devote the whole of his property to the payment of his debts. Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454; Smith v. Woodruff, 1 Hilt. 462; Yates v. Lyon, 61 Barb. 205, 209; Young v. Heermans, 66 N. Y. 374, 382; Shufeldt v. Jenkins, 22 F. 359, 367; Pike v. Bacon, 21 Me. 280, 38 Am. Dec. 259; Graves v. Roy, 13 La. 454, 33 Am. Dec. 568; Turnipseed v. Schaefer, 76 Ga. 109, 2 Am. St. Rep. 17; Albany, etc., Steel Co. v. Southern, etc., Works, 76 Ga. 135, 2 Am. St. Rep. 26. An assignment for the benefit of creditors purporting to convey all of the property of the assignor except that exempt is made fraudulent by the intentional withholding of any part of it not exempt. Penzel Grocer Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 81; Beardsley v. Frame, 85 Cal. 134. Though such material part is withheld for the purpose of applying it to other debts not secured by the assignment, and is actually so applied. Probst v. Welden, 46 Ark. 405; Clark Shoe Co. v. Edwards, 57 Ark. 331. The withholding of property considered to be of little or no value does not, however, invalidate an assignment. Sabin v. Lebenbaum, 26 Or. 420. It is not so much the value of what an assignor retains from an assignment that affects its good faith, as the fact of concealment. Shufeldt v. Jenkins, 22 F. 359, 368.

A party must be deemed to have intended the natural and inevitable consequences of his own acts; and so, when they are voluntary and necessarily operate to defraud others, he will be deemed to have intended the fraud. Coursey v. Morton, 132 N. Y. 556. If, therefore, an assignor for the benefit of creditors intentionally withholds and secretes property of a substantial value from the possession of the assignee, it renders the assignment void. Coursey v. Morton, 132 N. Y. 556; Turnipseed v. Schaefer, 76 Ga. 109, 2 Am. St. Rep. 17; Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454; Baum v. Pearce, 67 Miss. 700; Tarbox v. § 7. Property passing to and rights of the assignee therein.[62]—The assignment being valid,[63] all the right, title, and interest the assignor has in the property passes thereby,[64] and becomes vested in the assignee the moment he accepts the trust and files the assignment for record.[65] Under a voluntary assignment, the assignee becomes a trustee for the creditors.[66] The estate does not "devolve" upon the assignee by the assignment, but is "granted" by it.[67] The assignee making an assignment for benefit of creditors, his assignee takes no title or right to the property held by his assignor as assignee.[68] At the common law, the assignee stands in the shoes of the assignor, representing him and taking the assigned property subject to all transfers and incumbrances, whether fraudulent as to creditors or not, and subject also to all equities existing between the assignor and any particular creditor;[69] under this rule he cannot sue the assignors for conspiring with others to defraud the firm and its creditors,[70] nor does he acquire title to property held by the assignor under a contract of conditional sale, though such contract is not recorded,[71] the seller being entitled to enforce the contract and obtain possession of the property by petition of intervention in the assignment proceedings,[72] no demand or surrender of the note given for the purchase price being necessary to entitle the seller to so intervene,[73] and there being a balance due the seller after the return of such chattels, he may prove it against the estate.[74] In some of the states, however, this rule has now been changed by statute, the assignee representing the creditors, not the assignor,[75] and hence he has power to set aside all conveyances or transfers of property by the assignor, which are fraudulent as to creditors, whether the property be within or without the state wherein he is appointed,[76] and the creditors have through him the rights of attaching creditors.[77]

An assignment for the benefit of creditors does not at the common law, in the absence of an estoppel, pass the debtor's interest in a contingent remainder,[78] though this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[79] The assignor's wife not joining in the assignment, has no effect on her dower interest.[80] The interest of an assignor in property can only be enforced or collected by the assignor.[81] A secured creditor not being paid may sell his security after notifying the assignee, and the sale being made in good faith and for as large a sum as possible, it is valid.[82]

Property transferred or conveyed by assignor.[83]—A sale by a debtor to a creditor, though made the day of the assignment, is valid as between the parties and cannot be set aside by the assignee where the only result would be to benefit the debtor.[84] An assignee claiming that a transfer by the assignor is within a statutory prohibition must prove the facts bringing the transaction within the terms of the statute and make it applicable,[85] there being no presumption that the property was delivered after the execution of the assignment.[86]

§ 8. Liability of assignee; bond.[87]—An assignee is only bound to use ordinary and reasonable diligence in the execution of his trust;[88] he is not personally liable upon a lease taken as part of the assigned estate,[89] and a creditor expressly releasing him from liability is bound by the release.[90] The assignee violating the conditions of the order of discharge,[91] as where he wrongfully redelivers property to the assignor, an action may be maintained on his bond for the damages caused thereby,[92] unless the aggrieved creditor assents to such violation.[93] In Wisconsin, the plaintiff need not file security for costs.[94] The creditor does not lose his right to proceed upon the bond by proving his claim in bankruptcy proceedings, afterwards brought by the assignor.[95] A surety on an assignee's bond, conditioned that the assignee will faithfully discharge all his duties, is liable for his principal's failure to pay over the assets as required by law.[96] A proceeding to release the sureties from liability for subsequent acts or omissions of the principal may be ex parte as to creditors of the principal, and, upon notice, to the latter only.[97]

§ 9. Collection of assets and reduction to money. Sale of assets by assignee.[98]—In some states, the assignee may sell real property at private or public sale,[99] an appraisal not being necessary.[1] If an appraisal, however, is necessary, the including of personalty is an irregularity which is cured by a confirmation of the sale as provided by the statutes, without any exception having been filed thereto.[2] The assignee and administrator of the deceased assignor may join in a special proceeding for the sale of the real estate to pay debts,[3] and an allegation in the petition that the intestate was seized in fee of the land does not affect the rights of creditors in such land.[4] The assignee selling claims of the assignor, not guar-

antying the amount, cannot recover from the purchaser money paid him by an attorney who had collected the same prior to the sale.[5]

An assignee cannot indirectly purchase assigned property,[6] though he may acquire property, which he has fairly sold in his fiduciary capacity, after the sale is complete and the title vested in the purchaser, but the sale remaining executory, he is disqualified to buy,[7] and the burden of showing that the first sale was fairly and regularly made is upon the assignee.[8]

Validity and setting aside sale.[9]—Persons having no interest in the property should not be made parties to proceedings on exceptions to the judicial sale of the property of the assignor.[10]

§ 10. Administration of the trust in general.[11]—A court obtaining jurisdiction of the proceedings, no other court has the right to interpose for the purpose of adjusting any claim or administering the estate, except, perhaps, a court of equity may, under special circumstances, intervene to prevent a failure of justice.[12] The assignee must administer the estate under the supervision of the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings.[13] At common law, the effect of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is to put an end to the business as ordinarily conducted, it being the duty of the assignee to proceed without unnecessary delay to convert the assigned estate into money and to apply the same to the payment of the assignor's debts,[14] and the assignor cannot in the deed of assignment authorize his assignee to continue and carry on the business, either for the benefit of creditors or for his own benefit.[15] While this is the general rule, there are exceptional cases in which the assignee with the consent of the creditors may work up the stock on hand and prepare it for the market, it being manifest that it will be for the benefit of the assigned estate.[16] The assignee, on his own judgment and against the protest of creditors, electing to continue a manifestly unprofitable business, he is liable for the cash and value of the property on hand when taking charge of the business.[17]

§ 11. Debts and liabilities of the estate.[18]—The claim must not be fraudulent,[19] and a lien being claimed, the petition must assert the same.[20] A claimant is not entitled to an allowance from the estate for services rendered in contesting other claims, the assignee being represented by competent counsel.[21] a lien on the estate,[24] which lien is unaffected by subsequent bankruptcy proceedings,[25] and is not waived by surrendering all the assets to the trustee in bankruptcy.[26] The assignee may in good faith employ counsel to advise and assist him in the discharge of his duties, and may pay them out of the trust fund reasonable compensation for their services,[27] and the allowance being made direct to the attorneys it cannot be defeated by any subsequent arrangement made by the assignor with his assignee.[28] An allowance of compensation,[29] or attorney's fees,[30] will not generally be disturbed on appeal.

§ 12. Presentment and allowance of claims.[31]—Statutes requiring the filing of claims against insolvents do not relate to a claim for an indebtedness incurred by the assignee on behalf of the estate after the assignment.[32] A claim being fraudulent, the creditor cannot object to the claim of another.[33] A claim should not be rejected without proof, and in some cases, pleadings should be filed and a trial had[34] before the proper officer,[35] of the issues raised. An objection to the allowance of a claim is sufficient if adequate to identify the claim.[36] Exceptions by a creditor to the allowance of exemptions to the assignor are an assertion of his claim and makes him a party to the proceedings, so that if the claim is not then barred by limitations, such defense cannot be set up after a judgment in his favor, though he did not present his claim to the assignee for allowance.[37] Payment by a debtor of the assignor, of a debt contracted by the assignor subsequent to the assignment, which does not result in benefit to the creditors, cannot be credited on the payor's debt.[38] A purchaser of goods assuming the debts of the seller as part consideration, such creditors are entitled to share in the purchaser's estate subsequently assigned for the benefit of creditors and entitled to have the assignee account to them.[39] The assignee is bound by the decree of a court unless he appeals therefrom,[40] and a creditor objecting to the allowance of the assignor's exemption, a trial on the merits resulting in favor of the creditor not being appealed from, is binding upon the assignee, though not a party to the proceedings, no other creditors having a debt superior to the exemption.[41]

and the beneficiary of trust funds,[46] are entitled to preferential payment. In some states wages of employes earned within a certain time before the assignment are given priority.[47] Creditors having liens should be first compelled to exhaust their liens and as to any balance should be allowed to share pro rata in the same manner as unsecured creditors.[48] The claims of creditors who stand in a hostile attitude to an assignment cannot be prorated with the claims of those who have complied with the act in a distribution of the proceeds of the assigned property,[49] but an action by a creditor to set aside the assignment on the ground of fraud is not an election by him to take in hostility to the assignment.[50]

§ 14. Satisfaction and discharge of debts and claims.[51]—The assignee being a debtor of the assignor, the debt, less commissions thereon, will be set off against the commissions allowed such assignee.[52] An insolvent having executed simultaneously two deeds of assignment, each for property in separate states, creditors presenting their claims in one state are not entitled to participate in the distribution of assets in the other state until the creditors in the latter state have received in the other state a percentage on their claims equal to the percentage received by the creditors in such state.[53] The assignment directing the distribution to be ratable, a creditor holding collateral security cannot receive dividends upon the face of his claim without crediting the value of the collaterals.[54] A creditor having a claim antedating the assignment, and having full knowledge of the latter and the administration of the estate, cannot enforce a judgment, subsequently recovered, outside of the insolvency proceedings.[55]

§ 15. Accounting, settlement and discharge, or failure of trust.[56]—One demanding an accounting several years after waiver of a formal accounting by the other creditors must do so by a suit in equity.[57] That the assignee was not charged on the accounting with interest on funds he neglected to invest is no ground for denying him commissions or the taxable costs of his accounting.[58] Costs in an accounting should be taxed by the clerk on notice to all parties who appeared in the proceeding,[59] though the court will tax them in the first instance if all parties have notice of the motion and there is no dispute.[60] The assignment being settled out of court, the assignor's title to the assets is not affected thereby.[61]

§ 1. Definition, nature, and organization.[70]—Associations formed for the purpose of pecuniary profit are controlled, as to the liabilities arising from contract, by the law of partnership.[71] Adoption of a name in use by an existing association will be enjoined.[72]

§ 2. Internal relations, rights, and duties.[73]—The constitution and by-laws adopted by a voluntary association constitute a contract between the members which, if not immoral or contrary to public policy or law, will be enforced by the courts,[74] and the funds of an association can be diverted from the purposes declared in the constitution, by-laws and rules only on consent of each individual member.[75]

Where a power is vested in the majority, a member cannot object to a majority action, on the ground that he was not in the state or had but constructive notice, there being no fraud.[76] Parol evidence may establish such action.[77]

The discretion of an association as to who may be admitted to membership will not usually be judicially controlled,[78] or its proceedings under its laws for the discipline of members,[79] though a member may have an action in damages for wrongful expulsion,[80] which will lie when the association has ratified an

80. Mandamus is not his sole remedy. He may recover for the loss of benefits, of expulsion not at first its associate act.[81] The member is not remitted to remedy within association, if inadequate or impracticable.[82]

Membership does not become a property right through the mere fact of the possession of property by the association.[83]

By-laws giving a power to terminate membership are not self executing,[84] but a notice that a member will be dropped unless he pays dues before a date named is sufficient.[85]

A member is entitled to notice of the proceedings of a committee appointed to act with reference to a dispute with a co-member.[86] Objection to the jurisdiction of a tribunal is waived by submission by the member and allowing the investigation to proceed.[87] If the action of a trial board is valid the invalidity of an attempted adoption by the association at an unauthorized meeting is cured by a valid subsequent adoption.[88]

Resignation,[89] or notice of intention to resign, in compliance with by-laws, may terminate further liabilities as a member.[90]

§ 3. The association and persons not members.[91]—An association may recover the entire amount of a debt due it as such, though a portion of its members have withdrawn.[92]

One contracting for an unincorporated association having no corporate or legal status is personally liable,[93] but an action cannot be maintained against an officer, unless the debt is one on which an action could be maintained against all the associates either jointly or severally.[94]

81. A refusal at a regular meeting of re-admission imposes liability for a wrongful expulsion though it is contended that a special meeting was not lawful for the purpose, hence an expulsion thereat was not binding on the association. 83. The fact that an association has property derived from the payment of dues and fines, the possession of which is a mere incident and not the main object of the association, does not confer a property right on the members save that of enjoyment while in good standing. Hence proceedings under the laws of the association cannot be restrained as interfering with property rights. Injunction will not lie to prevent expulsion of mason. Franklin v. Burnham, 40 Misc. 566, 82 N. Y. S. 882.

90. Where it is provided that a member may resign on written notice of intent to do so, a specified time before the resignation shall take effect, the notice is sufficient without an additional filing of an actual resignation at the end of the period. Waiver of tort.[6]—The owner of property which has been converted may waive the tort and sue on the common counts in assumpsit.[7] Some states limit the right of election to cases in which the property has been converted into money.[8] Where the breach of duty sued on is a breach of a contract on which assumpsit will not lie, not a tort, the doctrine of waiver does not apply.[9] An election to pursue one remedy is a waiver of the right to pursue the other.[10]

8. It is said in this case that when the property has been converted into money or money's worth, plaintiff may sue either in trover for conversion, or in assumpsit, waiving the tort. But the larger number of states, including Rhode Island, hold that assumpsit will not lie when the property has not been so changed in form. So it was held in this case that it would not lie for the value of goods converted by defendant and destroyed while in his possession, after demand. Whipple v. Stephens [R. I.] 51 A. 375.

§ 2. The common counts.[11]—At common law when the action is based on an express promise, special assumpsit must be brought,[12] unless the facts alleged are such that the law raises therefrom an implied promise.[13]

When a contract is executed and nothing further remains to be done on the part of the plaintiff, he may recover on the common counts,[14] When a contract has been performed, the fact that it was unenforceable because not in writing, will not warrant the bringing of a quantum valebat to recover alleged damages for breach.[15] Under a statute forbidding the use of the common counts unitedly, but permitting the count on an account annexed, when one or more of the items claimed would be described by any one of the common counts, such count on an account annexed includes, by intendment, all the allegations of all the common counts.[16] A statute authorizing the general counts in assumpsit in actions on insurance policies, and providing that the plea of nonassumpsit shall put in issue only the execution of the policy and the amount of damages sustained thereunder, does not place upon the defendant the burden of establishing the facts which he must put in issue,[17] and it is therefore constitutional.[18] The statute in Michigan, providing that an action in assumpsit may be brought for fraudulent representations or conduct for which trespass on the case would lie is constitutional.[19] To maintain such an action under this statute, it must clearly appear, by the necessary averments or by reference to it, that the suit is within the statutory provisions.[20] Special counts under this statute may be united with the common counts in assumpsit.[21]

Goods sold and delivered.—Both sale and delivery must appear to sustain a count in common form for goods sold and delivered.[22] lender of stocks borrowed to cover a short sale, he could not recover the amount claimed on common counts for money had and received, since the breach of duty, if any, was a breach of contract, not a tort which could be waived and suit in assumpsit brought. Morris v. Jamieson, 205 Ill. 87, 68 N. E. 742.

10. But there can be no such waiver when the right to either remedy does not exist. Whipple v. Stephens [R. I.] 57 A. 375.

14. Common counts for goods sold and delivered, for money paid for the use of the defendants, and for work and labor. Massey v. Greenabaum Bros. [Del.] 58 A. 804. Plaintiff exchanged a stock of goods for defendant's farm, agreeing to assume an incumbrance thereon. The mortgage was for a larger amount than that agreed to be assumed. Held, plaintiff having fully executed could recover the excess from the defendant in assumpsit. Wilson v. Wilson [Mo. App.] 80 S. W. 711.

20. Where two corporations merge in one, receiving stock of the new corporation in proportion to their assets, an action in assumpsit for money had and received will not lie to recover from a stockholder an amount in excess of the real value of his stock, alleged to have been obtained by fraudulent representations as to its value. Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs [Mich.] 95 N. W. 985.

22. One cannot recover on a complaint for goods sold and delivered when the proof tends to show an account stated, no sale or delivery being shown. Consolidated Car Heating Co. v. Kahn, 84 N. Y. S. 919. The common count in assumpsit declaring on a promise to pay for goods sold and delivered cannot be used in a suit against a vendee of the original vendee to recover a balance due on goods sold, where the seller forebore to take the goods under a mortgage

Money had and received.[23]—An action in this form may be maintained to recover money paid on a judicial order or judgment subsequently set aside,[24] or money paid on a conditional sale after breach of the contract by the seller.[25] It is maintainable by a principal to recover money misappropriated by an agent,[26] by a corporation to recover money received from its officers under a contract void because ultra vires,[27] by one who has innocently made payments on an executory contract, void by statute, to recover money so paid,[28] or by a cestui que use against one who has received, and neglects or refuses to pay over, money received for plaintiff's use.[29] The action for money had and received may be maintained irrespective of whether it is maintainable as an action of trover and conversion.[30]

Money paid.[31]—Assumpsit will lie to recover money paid by plaintiff to a third person at defendant's request, to satisfy a claim against him.[32] A count for money paid must state it was paid at defendant's request,[33] and the omission of such allegation will not be cured by the allegation of a subsequent promise to pay in other counts.[34] Under a statute providing for a recovery of expenses incurred in breaking log jams and driving logs of another in order to secure a passageway, expenses incurred in merely moving logs to one side cannot be recovered.[35]

Work, labor and materials.—Where the employer refuses to perform, after performance by the employe, under a contract of employment, the employe may treat the contract as rescinded and sue on a quantum meruit.[36] In such case plaintiff may recover an amount not exceeding that claimed, if it appears that there was no agreement as to price.[37] One who has failed to fully perform his contract may recover the value of labor and materials actually furnished under it, not to exceed the contract price,[38] and in such action the defendants may recoup damages for failure to fully perform, unless they have waived that right.[39] Where a contractor could maintain mandamus to compel city officials to levy new assessments to pay for sewer construction, he could not recover from the city in assumpsit.[40]

40. City of Alton v. Foster, 207 Ill. 150, 69 N. E. 783.

§ 3. Declaration, pleas, and defenses.[41]—In assumpsit the gist of the action is the promise to pay by defendant, and this promise the declaration must clearly allege,[42] unless its omission is permitted under a statute.[43] The averment of the promise may be in the same form or language, whether the promise is implied or express.[44] A count on a quantum meruit for work, labor, and services, must allege nonpayment.[45] Statutory provisions modifying the common law remedy or procedure must be observed. Statutes may provide forms for the statement of counts,[46] or prescribe what pleadings shall be required,[47] or require affidavits in certain cases.[48] Though a bill of particulars filed with a declaration for work and labor is defective, the declaration will be held sufficient on appeal if it shows defendant indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum which he agreed to pay.[49] A special count to enforce a lien for labor may be joined in a common law action with common counts for work done and materials furnished, and upon account stated.[50] Under a statute providing that general counts in assumpsit shall be a sufficient declaration in actions on insurance policies, the general counts must be aptly framed for the recovery of money due on a policy, but need not set forth the terms and conditions of the contract of insurance.[51] The declaration need not state that the specification required by this statute has been filed, since such specification, when filed, is a part of the record.[52] A petition that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of certain property, consigned to and sold by a third person, and that defendant had received the proceeds of such sale with knowledge of plaintiff's right thereto, and that plaintiff had demanded payment which defendant had refused, states a cause of action for money had and received.[53] A declaration containing allegations which are patently inconsistent is subject to a general demurrer.[54] An allegation in the declaration that all counts are for the same cause of action will not render a count, otherwise good, demurrable.[55] Where a declaration contains two counts, one based on an affirmance and

43. A common count of indebitatus for services rendered is not demurrable for failure to include the usual allegation of a promise to pay. Under Code 1887, § 3272, providing for disregard of defects on demurrer unless there be an omission of something essential to the cause of action. City of Newport News v. Potter [C. C. A.] 122 F. 321.

For money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff," held a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring such a count to read: "For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff." Littleton v. Wells & McComas Council, No. 14 [Md.] 56 A. 798.

47. The statute required plaintiff in assumpsit to file a concise statement of his demand and the defendant to enter the statutory plea. Instead there were filed an answer, replication, amended answer, amended replication, and rejoinder, no plea being filed. Act 1887, p. 271. Hatfield v. Thomas Iron Co. [Pa.] 57 A. 950.

48. A plaintiff seeking to take advantage of a statute providing that, if plaintiff in assumpsit file an affidavit of his claim with the declaration, no plea in bar will be received without an affidavit, must make his affidavit conform strictly to the statutory requirements [Code 1887, § 3286]. Counts alleging that defendant is indebted to plaintiff on a policy of insurance by reason of a loss, and that in consideration thereof, and of certain other things, it undertook to pay a certain sum if a loss should occur, and that such loss has occurred, are patently inconsistent. the other on a disaffirmance of the contract, plaintiff may rely on both throughout the trial, and strike out one and rely on the other at the close of the evidence.[56] A court has no power to permit the amendment of a declaration containing the common counts in assumpsit by the addition of a count in tort.[57] When a verdict is for a sum greater than that demanded in the complaint, but the evidence shows plaintiff entitled to the sum awarded, the demand in the complaint may be deemed amended.[58]

The plea of the general issue admits the capacity in which the defendant is sued.[59] Under the general issue the defendant may prove that plaintiff prevented performance of the contract by him.[60] Where a declaration contains a special count and also common counts and defendant demurs to the declaration generally, except the common counts, he may be required to plead to the common counts without requiring the plaintiff to amend by striking the matter held bad on the demurrer.[61] Where special assumpsit was brought to recover a sum promised, to procure a settlement of insurance policies, and the proof showed an agreement procured by plaintiff, which defendant refused to carry out, there was at most a variance, not a failure of proof.[62] The sufficiency of the affidavit of defense depends upon the facts of the particular case.[63]

§ 4. Evidence.[64]—Under an allegation that the services sued for were reasonably worth a certain sum which defendant agreed to pay, plaintiff may show nature, extent, and fair value of the services, and the circumstances under which they were rendered.[65] The contract price of the services is competent evidence on the question of their value.[66] Evidence as to wages received by another employe is incompetent,[67] and evidence as to plaintiff's manner of living is inadmissible to show nonpayment of wages.[68] A promise by a decedent to pay a daughter-in-law for services need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be proved by circumstances and the nature of the services.[69] A book account admissible, the evidence tending to show it correctly kept.[70]

office of members of the State Board of Charities and Corrections may be regulated by the legislature.[72] The trustees of a charitable corporation have no power to establish a pay-pupil department.[73] The trustees of the Michigan Asylum for the Insane have no authority to obligate the state to pay for drafting proposed legislation,[74] and it was the duty of the state auditor to refuse to audit such claims,[75] or to draw his warrant for the maintenance bills of the asylum until itemized vouchers covering expenditure of money previously drawn had been presented.[76] In New York, the matron of a charitable institution may make a binding contract to furnish a competent nurse to an inmate.[77]

§ 1. Definition, nature and distinctions.[84]—Attachment is a statutory remedy, and the local statutes must be consulted, any seemingly general rule being so only by reason of similar enactments in various states. It is a summary remedy,[85] and the statutes thereon are to be strictly interpreted or construed.[86] After appearance, the suit proceeds in personam, remaining a proceeding in rem as to the property attached.[87] A proceeding upon foreign attachment is in rem.[88] Attachment laws will not be impliedly repealed by further laws upon the same subject, unless the intention of the legislature is plain.[89]

§ 2. In what actions it will issue.[90]—Statutes regulating the grounds of attachment do not affect rights of attachment previously vested.[91] A party to sustain an attachment must have a just claim to found it upon,[92] the complaint must state a cause of action,[93] and under the statutes of some states contain a sufficient allegation of the service of the writ of attachment.[94] Unliquidated demands,[95] or nominal damages,[96] will not generally support attachment. The word "damages" after the amount alleged to be due as a debt is construed as only embracing interest, thus rendering the amount claimed certain.[97] Special grounds, as fraud, nonresidence, or concealment, must in some states coexist with the fact that the action is of a given class.[98] In most states attachments will issue on claims arising on contract;[99] this includes implied contracts.[1] A contract being separable, an attachment may issue if justified by any separable part.[2] A del credere agent, paying his employer, may sue, in his own name, the vendee, and attach his property.[3] The vendor in a conditional sale cannot maintain an attachment in an action for the purchase price, though by bringing suit he waives his lien.[4] Generally, a secured creditor can only procure the levy of an attachment when the security without any fault on his part has become valueless.[5] By statute in some states, a landlord in an action to recover rent can attach crops growing or grown upon the land.[6] The collection of one's debt being endangered if the creditor should stop to obtain judgment or a return of no property found, an attachment will generally issue.[7] That a nonresident has conveyed property by a deed of trust does not authorize an attachment.[8] An attorney cannot attach the property of a nonresident client in a suit to recover for fees without notifying his client and giving him an opportunity to come in and defend.[9]

Nonresidence.[12]—An action of attachment may be brought against a nonresident in any court in whose jurisdiction he has property,[16] and, after due notice, the court may satisfy the attachment out of such property.[14] A nonresident appearing and pleading to the merits, the court has jurisdiction of his person,[16] unless such plea is made with a distinct protestation that no jurisdiction has been acquired.[16] Personal service of a warrant of attachment on a resident member of a foreign limited partnership does not confer jurisdiction so as to render a nonresident partner liable therefor, the liability incurred by the resident partner being the only liability attached.[17] It appearing from the judgment roll that no property was attached, that defendant was a nonresident, was not served and did not appear, the court has no jurisdiction.[18] In some states, attachment may be made against a nonresident after two non ests.[19] The filing of an undertaking is not jurisdictional to the right to have an attachment issued against a nonresident defendant for a debt not due.[20] One who occasionally comes within the jurisdiction or intends at some uncertain time to return to it permanently is a nonresident, within the meaning of the attachment laws,[21] as is one traveling through a state delivering lectures.[22] Temporary absence is not nonresidence justifying attachment.[23] In some states attachment may issue against the property of an adult resident continuously without the state for a certain period, he not having designated a person to receive service.[24]

Attachment against corporations.[25]—In most states writs of attachment properly issue against the property of corporations.[26]

Fraudulent transfer or disposition of property.[27]—Fraudulent transfer of a debtor's assets is ground for attachment of the property.[28] Fraud,[29] actual[30] or intended,[31] is an essential element. Ordinarily, fraud should be found as a finding of fact,[32] though a conclusion of law may sometimes suffice.[33] Ordinarily, sales of property in the usual course of business to customers outside of the state do not justify attachment.[34] The mere fact that a debtor is about to leave the state is no ground for attachment.[35] A debt being fraudulently contracted an attachment may be had.[36] In the absence of statutory definitions, the word "debt" as here used imports an obligation resting upon contract.[37] One from whom property is obtained by fraud may attach the same upon discovering the fraud.[38] The right of an assignee of a chose in action to procure a writ of attachment on the ground that the debt or obligation was fraudulently contracted exists only as against his immediate assignee.[39] The burden of proving a fraudulent intent is with the party applying for the writ,[40] and circumstances creating a strong suspicion, but falling short of prima facie proof, are not sufficient;[41] but the effect of a transfer from the debtor to his wife, being to leave his subsequently contracted indebtedness unpaid, the burden is upon the wife to show the good faith of the transaction as against an attaching creditor.[42]

§ 4. Attachable property.[43]—The property attached must be in the possession of the attachment debtor, or held for his benefit, or in fraud of the rights of the plaintiff,[44] and he must have an attachable interest therein.[45] An insurance policy being payable to any one of several parties, no one of them has an attachable interest in the insurance fund.[46] There being a reservation of produce in a contract for the sale of land until the land is paid for, the vendee has no attachable interest in the crops until such time.[47] Property which the debtor paid for but which was conveyed direct to his wife cannot be levied upon by attachment as against the debtor.[48] Where an attachment is sued out against several defendants and the property of only one is levied upon, the levy is properly dismissed as to the rest.[49] Under the modern theory of attachment, property subject to execution is subject to attachment.[50] Exempt property is not subject to attachment,[51] and that the debtor appeared and moved to dissolve the attachment without first making claim for his exemption does not waive his right thereto.[52] An exemption of property of a husband continues for the benefit of his wife notwithstanding her abandonment by the husband.[53] At common law, the rolling stock and all other movable property of a railroad corporation were exempt from attachment,[54] though this has been changed by the constitution or statutes in various states,[55] and while such laws do not of themselves violate the Federal constitution, any writ of attachment interfering with the freedom of interstate commerce is abortive.[56]

The interest of a debtor in property fraudulently conveyed is subject to attachment,[57] the creditor being allowed to attach the property so conveyed, whether the debt is due or not,[58] as if no such conveyance had been made or attempted,[59] the attachment issuing against the grantee,[60] and after acquiring title, such levying creditor may maintain an action at law to recover possession of his premises, or may resort to equity to have the apparent cloud upon his title removed,[61] or his lien enforced,[62] or the action in attachment and to set aside the fraudulent conveyance, may be jointly prosecuted.[63] The property of an insolvent building association is subject to attachment.[64] Trust property cannot be held under an attachment for the trustee's personal debts.[65] Property in the hands of an administrator is not subject to attachment.[66] One's interest in an estate in the hands of an executor during the course of administration is not attachable.[67] Funds in custodia legis,[68] or in the hands of a public officer,[69] are exempt from attachment. In the absence of statutory provisions, equitable interests in property are not attachable in an action at law.[70] Under statutes providing that persons holding property of the defendant shall, upon application, give a certificate of the latter's interest therein, and upon refusal shall be subject to examination, it is not necessary to show that the property would be subject to levy in order to secure such examination,[71] nor does the right to demand the certificate depend, in most states, on the service of the warrant,[72] and the affidavit of the sheriff must show that the third party wholly failed to give a certificate.[73]

Attachable debts and choses in action.[74]—Some courts hold the situs of a debt, for the purposes of attachment proceedings, to be at the domicile of the debtor,[75] others that it is at the domicile of the creditor.[76] A contract debt, payable within a state but due a nonresident defendant by a foreign corporation, may be attached in an action brought in the state.[77]

§ 5. Procedure in general.[78]—The trial of the attachment is wholly distinct from the trial of the case on its merits, and sometimes precedes and sometimes follows the main trial.[79] The plaintiff must join as parties all persons interested in the property attached.[80] An action which has for its purpose the subjection of property to the payment of a debt, and is commenced by attachment for that purpose, is a civil action,[81] and is governed by statutes regulating such actions.[82] In attachment proceedings, it is not necessary that the account should itemize the indebtedness,[83] nor is a variance between an account filed with an original declaration under a rule-day act and one filed with a petition for a writ of attachment material, defendant never being summoned and no judgment by default being taken.[84]

in any other case,[85] but amendments, in the absence of consent, necessitating further service of process, are not allowable.[86]

The jurisdiction[87] of the Federal court is determined by the amount in controversy.[88] In Georgia, the judge of a superior court being disqualified, jurisdiction can only be taken by the judge of the adjoining circuit to whom the petition for attachment is presented.[89] Acts necessary to the creation of the lien are not jurisdictional.[90] The court having no power to order the sale of the property, it has no power to order the attachment.[91]

Beginning action and acquiring jurisdiction.[92]—An attachment by common-law garnishment or trustee process cannot be created by consent.[93] In some states real property is attached by filing a certificate containing inter alia the names of the parties to the action,[94] under such a statute the names of the parties must be correctly given or no right is acquired thereunder.[95]

Necessity of issuance of summons and service thereof.[96]—A statute requiring service upon the party in possession of the property, the fact that such party is the plaintiff in the attachment suit does not excuse service upon him.[97] In the absence of special statutory regulations, personal service on a nonresident attachment defendant being required, the service must be upon him personally.[98] The warrant in attachment must have been issued before the summons can be served by publication.[99] In New York, in order to obtain an order directing service of the summons by publication, one must show by affidavit when he applies for such order,[1] the issuing of the writ of attachment.[2] There being a misnomer in notice by publication the proceedings are void.[3] The sufficiency of the affidavit for publication of the summons is not raised by an objection that the court has not obtained jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.[4] The papers showing that the defendants are nonresidents and that no order of publication has been taken on the return day of the process, the plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable time within which to perfect his suit by order of publication.[5] A general appearance by any of the nonresident defendants renders an order of publication unnecessary as to such of them as appear.[6]

§ 6. Affidavit and its sufficiency.[7]—The purpose of the statute requiring an affidavit in attachment setting forth the nature of the claim is to show whether it is of such a character as entitles the party to an attachment.[8] The affidavit must conform strictly to statutory requirements,[9] it must distinctly show that it is made by a natural person,[10] and it may be made by an attorney, if the latter has personal knowledge of the facts therein stated.[11] It may state an amount less than stated in the complaint.[12] Several statutory grounds being stated cumulatively, if any one of them be true the affidavit will be sustained though all the others be untrue.[13] In states requiring the affidavit to state the amount due the word "due" refers to the maturity of the claim rather than to the balance of indebtedness owing from one party to another.[14] Under a statute allowing the issuance of an attachment upon affidavit or testimony, a defective affidavit may be sufficient testimony to authorize the issuance of the writ.[15] An affidavit in attachment in a suit on a promissory note is sufficient in law, though the date of the note is stated differently in the petition and amended petition.[16] An alleged variance between the affidavit and bond cannot be raised for the first time upon appeal.[17]

Averments in general.[18]—An affidavit in attachment positively sworn to, need only be stated in the language of the statute,[19] but being made by a stranger to the transaction it must set forth the means by which his knowledge of the facts was obtained,[20] and failure to so allege is a fatal defect.[21] The affidavit must contain, in unequivocal language, that the debt sued on is due.[22] The facts proving damages should be set forth in detail,[23] an insufficient allegation of damages being fatal.[24]

Averments as to nonresidence.[25]—The defendant being a nonresident there must be a sufficient allegation of that fact.[26]

Amended and supplemental affidavits.[27]—An affidavit defective in form may be amended like any other pleading,[28] so long as it is not done for the purpose of gaining jurisdiction,[29] and the cause of action is not changed,[30] but one has been permitted to amend an unsigned affidavit by filing a new one properly signed.[31] A defect in an affidavit cannot be cured by a counter affidavit.[32] The affidavit not being amendable it may be withdrawn and a new one substituted.[33]

§ 7. Attachment bond or undertaking; terms.[34]—The undertaking is valid though the writ be void.[35] The names of two of the defendants signing as sureties not appearing in the body of the bond, it is nevertheless valid.[36] Defendant being known by several names the undertaking running to him in any one of them is sufficient.[37] In most states the amount of the undertaking rests largely in the discretion of the clerk or court,[38] and should be fixed with reference to the amount sued for, and should be such as to give adequate security to the defendant.[39] Personal property being attached, it should generally equal the sum claimed in the affidavit.[40]

Liabilities on bond.[41]—A judgment in favor of defendant conclusively establishes the liability of the obligors upon the bond.[42] The attachment being improperly vacated there is no liability on the bond.[43] The plaintiff cannot recover from the sureties any more than is due him from the principal,[44] hence they are allowed the benefit of legal offsets held by the principal.[45] The obligation of the bond being the payment of damages no demand is needed.[46] The surety is generally liable for the costs and expenses of the proceedings to vacate the attachment.[47] In the absence of statutory provisions attorney's fees are not a part of the costs which may be recovered in a suit upon the attachment bond,[48] though some courts hold contra.[49] Statutes allowing such fees are not generally construed so as to include fees for services on appeal,[50] nor on retrial, where caused by the negligence of the attachment defendant,[51] and fees paid under a proposed settlement which is set aside should be credited on the amount allowed.[52] The claim being settled in full while a motion to vacate is pending, the defendant is not entitled to costs for counsel fees in the proceedings to vacate.[53] The surety on a supersedeas bond in the suit upon paying the judgment cannot be subrogated to the judgment creditor's rights against the surety on the attachment bond.[54]

Actions on bond.[55]—The right to recover on the attachment bond accrues when the attachment is discharged.[56] The execution and delivery of a forthcoming bond does not waive defendant's right of action,[57] and the burden of pleading and establishing any discharge of liability rests upon the defendants.[58]

§ 8. The writ or warrant.[59]—A writ of attachment issuing out of a court which has acquired jurisdiction of the property through the attachment plaintiff's fraud is void.[60] The writ bearing the seal of the court may be signed by a deputy clerk,[61] and must be served by the officer to whom it is addressed.[62] In an attachment of property in the hands of a foreign corporation the name of the corporation must be correctly stated.[63] A writ is defective when it lacks something which the law requires it to contain, and the defect, in order to be amendable, must appear upon the face of the writ,[64] and the effect of the amendment must not be to create a new writ.[65] In the absence of statute the sheriff is not a guarantor of the solvency of a surety taken by him on a forthcoming bond[66] unless he accepts the insufficient sureties without making a reasonable effort to ascertain their solvency,[67] and a judgment for the sheriff in the court below creates a presumption that he used such care,[68] and will not be disturbed on appeal unless palpably against the weight of the evidence,[69] but his liability cannot exceed that of the sureties.[70] Such a liability being imposed by statute, a judgment must be rendered sustaining the attachment itself,[71] and the order sustaining the attachment, not being introduced in the court below, it cannot be added to the record on appeal,[72] and even if such an amendment of the record was allowable, it would not remedy the failure of the petition to allege that the attachment was sustained.[73] Plaintiff by suing upon a second bond given in lieu of the first ratifies the sheriff's release of the latter and becomes estopped to sue thereon.[74] A motion to quash a forthcoming bond cannot be made in an action on the bond.[75] In most states, in an action upon a forthcoming bond, it is necessary to allege and prove an order of the court in the attachment proceedings for the sale of the attached property, or directing the sheriff to repossess himself of such property.[76] The approval of the undertaking by the court and the discharge of the attachment may become conclusive evidence of the delivery and acceptance of the undertaking as a good forthcoming bond.[77]

§ 9. The levy or seizure; indemnifying bonds.[78]—The duty of an officer in executing a writ of attachment is to levy upon the property of the defendant to the writ, not upon the property of some one else,[79] to determine whether or not it is property which may be legally taken under the writ,[80] and that the quantity taken is necessary to the case in hand.[81] In all these particulars he is bound to exercise his own judgment, and is legally responsible to any person for the consequences of any error or mistake in its exercise to his prejudice.[82] An officer seizing property under a void attachment is a trespasser as against one rightfully in possession,[83] and the rightful owner is not estopped from suing him by purchasing the property at a sale ordered by the court during the pendency of replevin proceedings.[84] The seizure being tortious, all the attaching creditors joining with the sheriff in resisting an action of replevin become trespassers ab initio, and are jointly and severally liable for a money judgment rendered against them,[85] though one party satisfying such judgment, contribution will be enforced,[86] the basis being the ratio the several claims bear to each other.[87] A sheriff is entitled to an indemnity for levying on intangible as well as tangible property.[88]

Levy on debts or choses.[89]—In most states, in order to attach a debt or demand due the defendant, notice must be served upon the person against whom the demand exists,[90] a seizure of a right of the debtor in a suit being made by serving notice on the clerk of court, the plaintiff, and defendant.[91] Failure of the assignee of a chose in action to give notice to the debtor of the assignment is immaterial as against an attaching creditor.[92]

Notice of levy.[93]—Unless waived, notice, actual or constructive, must be given the defendant[94] within a reasonable time.[95] In some states, notice must be given the party in possession.[96] The notice of attachment being annexed to a copy of the warrant it is referable thereto.[97]

An equitable attachment.[98]—The appointment of a receiver in a creditor's bill or suit in equity to subject the separate property of a married woman to the payment of her business debts is an equitable attachment,[99] which entitles such creditor to a prior lien over other creditors upon the funds in the hands of the receiver, provided said suit is successfully prosecuted to a final decree.[1]

§ 10. Return to the writ.[2]—The Federal courts have authority to provide for the return of the writ other than in accordance with the state statutes.[3] In Connecticut, the property must be described in the officer's return.[4] A sheriff surrendering the property in accordance with a stipulation, agreed to by the attaching creditor, a return is unnecessary.[5] An affidavit by the sheriff that he "duly effected service" of the warrant of attachment, stating the time, place, and person on whom it was served, is sufficient.[6] The writ being returned served by one not an officer of the court, an alias writ should be issued upon plaintiff's request.[7] In order to render the return of the attachment fatally defective, when there has been in substance an execution of the process, it must be made to appear affirmatively that an essential act has been omitted, and there being no clear exhibition of such omission, it cannot be inferred;[8] that it fails to show the county in which the levy was made is no ground for dismissal.[9] That the clerk, after the return of the writ, wrote out the order of publication upon a separate piece of paper and had it published without entering it upon the record, will not invalidate the proceedings.[10] The return is presumed to be true,[11] and to state all acts done by the officer toward effecting the levy.[12] As between the parties to the action, the return is conclusive,[13] and in an action against the sheriff, the latter cannot, ordinarily, contradict his return,[14] though he may in a proper case upon proper showing and notice amend the same,[15] and it has been held that the return is in the nature of an admission only, and is subject to explanation.[16] The return being regular on its face, the burden is upon the debtor to show that the writ was not served in the manner stated.[17]

§ 11. Custody, sale, redelivery, or release of attached property.[18]—The sheriff under an attachment has a special property in the goods, and a right to the possession as against any one claiming them under a title to which the lien of the attachment is superior;[19] thus replevin will not lie against him,[20] nor can a third party not a party to the case assert his title to property seized by the sheriff under bail process, in a trover suit, by filing a claim under claim laws,[21] and his possession being legal, he is entitled to continue in such possession until the lien acquired thereby is lost, or the property disposed of by force of it, or the lien satisfied.[22] An officer of the court taking possession of the property before appearance by the defendant may be authorized by the court to collect rents accruing after the entry of appearance.[23] The possession of a receiptor of property taken by a lawful writ is, in law, that of the officer to whom he is accountable.[24] Under statutes allowing the retention of the attached property during a certain period if the plaintiff announces his intention to appeal from the order of discharge, failure to announce such intention is immaterial where the officer retains possession of the property.[25] The sheriff has no title to the goods after the dismissal of the attachment suit,[26] though in New York, the lien being destroyed by act of parties, the sheriff may retain the property to secure his fees;[27] but the lien being destroyed by the action of the court, the latter is permitted to both determine the liability for fees and to direct their payment,[28] and in the latter case the defendant is liable for poundage upon the value of the property levied upon not exceeding the amount specified in the warrant,[29] or the action being settled, not exceeding the amount for which the settlement is made.[30] There being a partial release by stipulation of the property covered by the attachment, the sheriff is not entitled to poundage upon such property, the remaining portion being sufficient for the maximum fee allowed by law.[31] Under a statute allowing reasonable fees, a sheriff is entitled to recover directly from the plaintiff for keeping property under an attachment, released by plaintiff before the termination of the suit.[32] Under a statute requiring the officer serving process to indorse thereon his fees and charges in order to have them allowed, a sheriff's charges for securing attached property subsequent to the completion of the service and return of the writ may be recovered without being indorsed thereon.[33]

In some states the sheriff cannot release real estate from attachment except while the writ is in his possession and before the return.[34] Evidence that the release by the sheriff was the form in use at the time of granting it is admissible as tending to show the signing of the release.[35]

§ 12. Forthcoming bonds and receipts.[36]—There being a substantial compliance with the statute, the bond is enforceable as a statutory bond;[37] thus the plaintiff may waive the formal approval of the bond provided by statute without invalidating its efficacy as a statutory release bond.[38] In order to render the bond valid, the property need not stand in the name of the attachment defendant,[39] the dissolution of the attachment being a sufficient consideration.[40] The giving of a supersedeas bond upon a writ of error ineffective for lack of jurisdiction does not affect a forthcoming bond previously given.[41] In some jurisdictions, before recovery can be had, demand must be made; but proceedings to collect on the judgment may amount to a demand for the payment of such judgment, the debtor being insolvent.[42] The bond running to a nominal plaintiff, the surety is liable to the real party in interest, who is substituted for such nominal plaintiff, the record being such as to advise the surety from the beginning as to who the real party in interest was.[43] Under statutes allowing the retention of the attached property during a certain period if the plaintiff announces his intention to appeal from the order of discharge, failure to announce such intention will not defeat the liability of sureties on a redelivery bond on reversal of judgment, the officer retaining possession of the property.[44] By giving a forthcoming bond, the defendant waives irregularity and defects in the attachment proceedings;[45] but not mere overstatement of the amount due.[46]

§ 13. Lien or other consequences of levy.[47]—By the levy one acquires a specific lien[48] for the satisfaction of any judgment which may be obtained in the suit,[49] which can only be lost by an order discharging the attachment.[50] The lien is such as to entitle the creditor to maintain a bill to remove a cloud on the title.[51] An attachment of mortgaged land, the mortgage being recorded, in an action against the mortgagor creates a lien only on the equity of redemption,[52] and such equity of redemption being attached, a foreclosure suit will not affect the attaching creditor's rights unless he is made a party, or charged with notice by the filing of a lis pendens.[53] In attachment proceedings against a nonresident who is not served the only lien created or foreclosed is that arising by virtue of the seizure of the property levied on.[54] The delivery of the forthcoming bond does not dissolve the lien,[55] and plaintiff, upon recovering judgment, may retake the property from a bona fide purchaser who purchased after the release under the bond and without notice of the attachment.[56] In Oklahoma the lien of the attachment is not lost by a failure on the part of the probate or justice of the peace court to make proper docket entries of the issuance of such order of attachment.[57] Execution being issued upon the judgment the attachment is merged therein.[58] An attachment being void no lien is acquired.[59]

§ 14. Conflicting levies, liens, and creditors; priorities.[60]—An attaching creditor is not a purchaser for value, and takes the property subject to all equitable rights therein enforceable against the debtor,[61] hence the purchaser of one acquiescing in an attachment cannot contest its validity.[62] The claim of a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration of a draft and bill of lading attached thereto is superior to the attachment lien of the vendee who refuses to pay the draft alleging the vendor to be his debtor.[63] In some states claims for services are preferred over the lien of the attaching creditor,[64] and a suit to establish such claim in so far as it seeks to establish and enforce a lien upon the debtor's property is equitable in its nature,[65] and must be brought within the time prescribed by law.[66] The lien of a pledgee of stock is superior to the lien of a subsequent attaching creditor of the assignor,[67] such attachment being valid, however, as to the interest of the assignor after the debt has been paid.[68] The rights of the beneficiary of a trust fund are superior to attaching creditors of the trustee.[69] The lien created by attachment is inferior to a title obtained by purchase before the attachment,[70] but superior to a prior unrecorded deed, given in good faith for a valuable consideration, of which the attaching creditor had no notice,[71] and such deed being given with the intent to defraud creditors it is invalid as against a subsequent attachment by one having knowledge thereof,[72] though in some states it is held that the deed will take precedence if recorded before the deed based upon the attachment or judgment.[73] The deed being delivered subsequent to the levying of the attachment, the mortgagee's lien is subject to that acquired by such attachment creditor by virtue of the levy of such attachment.[74] A stipulation to sell attached property and divide the proceeds does not affect the rights of an attaching creditor who is not a party thereto.[75] The first of a series of attaching creditors obtaining a sale of the property under an order of the court which is reversed upon appeal, he is liable to an action for money had and received by the subsequent attaching creditors,[76] to which, however, he may set up any counterclaim or set-off,[77] and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the first attachment is dissolved.[78] A prior valid attachment lien is presumed to continue until it is affirmatively shown that the priority has been lost.[79] A junior attaching creditor cannot take advantage of irregularities in the attachment proceedings.[80] In some states, by statute, creditors levying within a certain period share pro rata in the property.[81]

Priorities between attachments and mortgages.[82]—A mortgagee claiming through a deed filed for record subsequent to the levying and recording of an order of attachment takes with notice of the rights of the attaching creditor, and subject to such infirmities as inhere in the title of the mortgagor.[83] A mortgage of after acquired property is valid against subsequent attaching creditors.[84] The open and admitted inclusion of a small claim of another creditor in a valid chattel mortgage does not render such mortgage and possession thereunder fraudulent and unlawful as against attaching creditors.[85]

Surrender of attached property to a receiver.[86]—After a surrender to a receiver, under a stipulation that it be without prejudice, the court will not permit the rights of the attaching creditor to be defeated on technical grounds.[87] A creditor attaching an equity of redemption waives the attachment lien by filing a claim with the receiver of the property, subsequently appointed at the suit of the mortgagee, and not appealing from the disallowance thereof.[88] An attachment is not affected by the subsequent appointment of a receiver,[89] and is prior to any claim acquired by proceedings under the receivership to which the attachment creditor is not a party.[90]

priority,[92] nor are the proceeds of assigned property subject to a levy under an attachment.[93]

Effect of bankruptcy proceedings.[94]—An adjudication in bankruptcy annuls all attachment levies obtained within four months prior to the filing of the petition,[95] unless preserved by an order of the court.[96] This provision of the bankruptcy act applies to attachments sued out in state as well as Federal courts,[97] and is binding upon the state courts.[98] It does not impair the obligation of a contract or divest the attaching creditor of a vested right,[99] and the state court is bound to take notice of the bankruptcy proceedings when properly pleaded as a defense.[1] It does not affect a valid attachment acquired more than four months before the filing of the petition,[2] though both plaintiff and defendant at the time of the attachment knew that defendant was insolvent,[3] and the plaintiff may prosecute his case to judgment and satisfy the same by an execution sale of the attached property,[4] nor does the adjudication in bankruptcy destroy or impair the title obtained by such attachment by a bona fide purchaser for value without notice or reasonable cause for inquiry.[5] The bankruptcy proceedings do not affect the lien of the attachment as against the bankrupt himself,[6] and the trustee failing to dispose of the property prior to the discharge, the attachment lien continues unaffected by the proceedings.[7] As to whether or not the lien of a sheriff, holding the property under an attachment, for his fees and necessary outlays in preserving the property, is discharged by bankruptcy there is a conflict among the decisions.[8]

§ 15. Enforcement and dissolution, discharge, vacation, or abandonment of attachment. A. Validity and grounds for setting aside.[9]—In New York, a defendant not being personally served, and not appearing, but the property being attached, the court will proceed to determine the cause,[10] and judgment being rendered against the plaintiff, upon appeal the only question that can be determined is the sufficiency of the affidavits,[11] but the court has no jurisdiction to enter judgment by default where the summons was not personally served, and the defendant appeared specially and moved to vacate the attachment which was unwarranted and based upon insufficient proof,[12] but the right to dispute the jurisdiction of the court to enter such default judgment may be waived by appearance.[13] The action failing,[14] or being discontinued,[15] the attachment is vacated, and the defendant is entitled to have a formal order vacating it.[16] The undertaking being defective, the attachment will be quashed on motion.[17] The affidavit being false, which includes stating the wrong ground, the attachment will be dissolved.[18] An attachment issued upon insufficient grounds is fatally defective and cannot be amended.[19] In an action against a nonresident for unliquidated damages, the attachment should be for about two-thirds of the amount demanded as damages.[20] Matters of defense upon the trial are not necessarily proper matters to set up to vacate an attachment.[21] An administrator has sufficient interest to have a void attachment upon the intestate's property set aside.[22] One procuring a void attachment upon his debtor's property is not thereby placed in a new position so as to entitle him to claim equitable protection and advantage in proceedings to have such attachment judicially declared void.[23]

(§ 15) B. Procedure.[24]—The issues in attachment must be presented by the affidavit and the answer or traverse.[25] The answer to the affidavit must deny the allegations thereof.[26] In some states the defendant may appear and plead at any time before final judgment.[27] Leave to amend the answer is discretionary,[28] and the grounds of the court's refusal not appearing, error cannot be declared.[29] A suit begun by foreign attachment being removed to a Federal court because of diversity of citizenship, that court has jurisdiction to dissolve the attachment according to the state practice.[30] The motion to dismiss must be made before the forthcoming bond is given,[31] before the property is sold and the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the judgment,[32] before final judgment.[33] In New York, the notice of motion to vacate for irregularity must specify the irregularity,[34] and the affidavit of the party moving to vacate an attachment must state the present condition of the action, whether at issue, and if not yet tried, the time set for trial,[35] but such an objection to the affidavit cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[36] Neither a claimant,[37] nor a stranger to the transaction whose property is wrongfully attached,[38] can move to vacate the attachment. One resisting a motion to vacate may by affidavit controvert, explain, or extend the facts stated by the moving party.[39] A motion to dismiss goes only to the writ,[40] hence though the attachment be void the suit need not be dismissed.[41] A motion to discharge an attachment is not a demurrer to the complaint.[42] In some states two separate bills of exceptions are required in attachment cases, one on the attachment branch and one as to the trial on the merits.[43] In some states, it appearing by affidavit that to plaintiff's knowledge defendant has not enough property subject to attachment to satisfy plaintiff's claim, the defendant may be examined under oath,[44] and on such an examination the defendant may be committed for contempt for refusal to answer questions.[45] As to whether it is proper, on a motion to dissolve an attachment, to pass upon the grounds of an attachment where they are the same as the issues in the case, authority is divided.[46] On a motion to dissolve for matters outside the record the court must take notice of the complaint and affidavit as part of the record, though not formally introduced, and the moving party must offer proof of his facts.[47] A judgment in foreign attachment will be reopened upon defendant alleging that he had no notice of the proceedings, and has a just and legal defense,[48] and when reopened the attachment continues.[49] On appeal from a magistrate's decision determining an attachment both parties are entitled to produce testimony de novo.[50]

Evidence.[51]—The burden is upon the attachment plaintiff to show that the property is subject to levy.[52] All the facts necessary to sustain the affidavit must be definitely shown in the testimony.[53] Plaintiff must maintain the grounds of his attachment as laid in his affidavit by the preponderance of the evidence,[54] though the defendant may waive the objection that the attachment was not dismissed for want of evidence on the part of the plaintiff, by introducing evidence stating that on papers named, defendant would apply for an order vacating the attachment, held insufficient. Van Wickle v. Weaver Coal & Coke Co., 88 App. Div. 603, 85 N. Y. S. 82; Ennis v. Untermyer, 87 N. Y. S. 695.

on his own behalf.[55] The question of nonresidence being presented by affidavits, it becomes purely a question of fact.[56] On the trial of a contest of a claim for exemption from an attachment the affidavit and undertaking are not relevant evidence,[57] but book entries by the sheriff of facts concerning the levy are admissible.[58]

Judgment and decree or order.[59]—The property being taken on a forthcoming bond the judgment must provide that defendant shall return the property or pay its value.[60] An order refusing to quash an attachment is not a final order,[61] but an order quashing an attachment is.[62]

Appeal.—An order vacating an attachment is not appealable.[63] In an action to compel delivery of property taken by attachment, there being nothing in the record to show whether the amount due under the attachment was less or more than the value of the property, it will be presumed upon appeal that it was not a less sum.[64] An order of the trial court discharging an attachment will be sustained unless clearly against the weight of the evidence.[65]

§ 16. Hostile and opposing claims to attached property.[66]—Any person claiming property attached may interplead in the cause,[67] but such interpleader must have the legal title or right to the immediate possession of the property,[68] and must recover upon the strength of his own claim, not upon the weakness of that of his adversary.[69] One of several interpleaders purchasing the claim of the plaintiff, the claims of the other interpleaders are not thereby disposed of but the case should proceed upon the issues raised.[70] In the absence of statutory provisions such interpleader is not required to give a bond before filing his interplea.[71] Under statutes permitting a married woman to contract, sue, and be sued on her own account, she can interplead in an attachment suit against her husband to recover her separate property.[72] The true owner is not estopped from asserting ownership as against an attaching creditor, by declarations of title by the party in possession, such declarations being unknown to the owner.[73] Preferred creditors intervening in an attachment suit which is about to be dismissed as groundless cannot maintain a bill in equity to have the attachment enforced for their benefit.[74] Neither the sheriff nor the attaching creditors are necessary or proper parties to a suit by a claimant to establish a disputed claim.[75]

Pleading.[76]—The ownership of movable property being in dispute, the party against whom the claim is asserted may require the intervenors to amend their pleadings so as to give him such information as will acquaint him with the details of the claim he must meet.[77]

Evidence and questions of fact.[78]—The burden is upon an interpleader to prove his title,[79] or right to possession,[80] though in some states the plaintiff must first make out a prima facie case that the property is liable to attachment,[81] which he may do by proving that the goods were in the control and possession of the defendant at the time of the levy.[82] Statements by the attachment defendant to the attaching creditor as to his own financial condition are inadmissible.[83] The nature of the possession, declarations of the parties as to title, and the relationship of the owner and party in possession, are competent evidence on the question of ownership.[84]

Trial.[85]—In some states the issues on the affidavit of claim must be made up at the term at which the attachment is returnable.[86] The issues made by the interpleader should be tried as like issues between plaintiff and defendant.[87] Several claimants interpleading, all the issues should be tried and determined, and the property awarded to the rightful claimant.[88]

§ 17. Wrongful attachment.[89]—An attachment maliciously made for an excessive amount is an actionable wrong,[90] but no action lies for wrongful attachment if facts justifying an attachment exist, although the creditor was ignorant thereof.[91] A judgment in favor of defendant conclusively establishes that the attachment was without sufficient cause.[92] That the plaintiff in his affidavit knowingly and grossly overstates the amount of his claim, warrants the inference of malice,[93] but that the claim attempted to be prosecuted by attachment was subject to a set-off of greater amount is not sufficient to justify such a conclusion.[94] There being several wrongful levies on the same property by the same parties but one cause of action arises.[95] A wife abandoned by her husband,[96] or a purchaser from an assignee for the benefit of creditors,[97] can maintain this

97. A purchaser from an assignee for benefit of creditors by a sale ratified by the creditors, although not in accordance with the terms of the assignment, has sufficient title to maintain an action for wrongful action. Allowing the garnishee to be discharged and costs to be entered against himself does not estop the attachment defendant from maintaining an action for wrongful attachment.[98] The sheriff assuming liability for the levy the owners have a cause of action against him for conversion, the levy being declared unlawful.[99] Mandamus has been allowed to compel the sheriff to redeliver property wrongfully attached.[1] A counterclaim for wrongful attachment cannot be made in the suit begun by the attachment.[2]

Pleading.[3]—The allegations must not be inconsistent.[4] An allegation that one wrongfully sued out his attachment is sufficient, after verdict, in the absence of a motion to make more specific.[5]

Evidence and questions of fact.[6]—The claim being that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, the attachment defendant must show that the attachment has been discharged in the suit in which it was issued,[7] but the wrong complained of being the seizure of property not subject to the writ, plaintiff need not show such discharge.[8] Malice being alleged all matters directly connected with the conduct of the business transactions between the two parties are relevant,[9] also that the attachment plaintiff did not properly apply money received to pay the debt.[10] Declarations of agent of attorney who filed the attachment papers are admissible as against the attorney's client.[11]

Damages.[12]—In the absence of statutes the wrongful issuance of the writ will not alone warrant the recovery of damages.[13] No damages being proven none can be recovered.[14] Damages allowed by a state court are recoverable, though the action is removed to the Federal courts.[15] The measure of damages is not affected by the subsequent conduct of the defendant in seizing the property upon execution.[16] Rent,[17] clerk hire,[18] depreciation of goods,[19] value of license to carry on business,[20] and of property used by sheriff,[21] may be recovered.

20. A stock of liquors and a saloon license of plaintiff were wrongfully levied on as the property of plaintiff's vendor, so that plaintiff could not carry on his business. Held, he could recover the value of the license as a part of his damage. Hooks v.

Damages for loss of credit by reason of the wrongful attachment are recoverable,[22] though damages for injuries to the vendee's credit, and loss of profits resulting from actions brought by his vendor for breach of contract are not recoverable in a suit on the attachment bonds issued in such actions.[23] Attorney's fees paid for recovering property wrongfully attached cannot generally be recovered;[24] nor is interest accruing prior to the date of judgment recoverable.[25] The attachment defendant remaining in the possession of the property he can only recover nominal damages, unless he refrains from using it under instructions from the officer.[26] Exemplary damages may be allowed.[27] The attachment defendant may recover in the same action damages for the value of the goods not returned, together with expenses incurred in dissolving the attachment, and for loss of time.[28] That the attachment defendant procured a release of the property shortly after seizure is relevant and material on the question of damages,[29] and the good faith of the attachment plaintiff and the sureties on the bond is no defense.[30]

The measure of the debtor's damages for loss of time is what his time would have been worth at his particular business.[31] The property being held under subsequent attachments at the time of the vacation of defendant's attachment, the measure of damages is the difference in the market value of the property on the date of the levy of defendant's writ, and their value on the day when such writ was dissolved.[32] The property being held, at the time of the dissolution of the writ of attachment, under a valid writ of sequestration, the damages recoverable by the attachment defendant are only such as he appears to have sustained by reason of the charges in the affidavit and his expenses in procuring the dissolution of the writ.[33] laterally only by what affirmatively appears on the face of the record;[35] but a license to practice law may be withdrawn by the power which confers it.[36] The failure of an attorney to pay the statutory occupation tax will not bar his right to recover on a cause of action assigned to him by his client as compensation for his services.[37] In New Jersey, attorneys are licensed by the governor after examination and recommendation by the supreme court, the right of examination by that court being a constitutional one.[38]

§ 2. Privileges and disabilities.[39]—Attorneys are officers of the court, and must uphold and sustain its dignity, both in and out of court.[40] They are not exempt from arrest in civil actions, except when they are actually in attendance in court in the due course of their employment as attorneys, and are not at any time exempt from service of summons.[41] They may not sign any bond or enter into any recognizance as surety for an appearance in a criminal case.[42] An attorney may be committed for contempt of court, but the final order committing him must recite the particular circumstances of the offense.[43] When an attorney at law is elevated to the bench, his right to practice in any of the courts of the state is suspended as long as he remains thereon, except when he is party in an action and protecting his own individual rights exclusively.[44] Conduct which would disbar an attorney and subject him to criminal prosecution will prevent him from obtaining relief from the court.[45] A "Bar Association" is a private corporation, and all questions of membership are left to its determination under its regulations.[46]

In Texas, the district court rule that attorneys shall not be surety in any cause pending in court is directory merely, and such a bond is not defective on that ground. Prusiecki v. Ramzinski [Tex. Civ. App.] 81 S. W. 549.

Note. At common law an attorney was not prohibited from becoming surety for his client, except where so doing involved champerty. See Walker v. Holmes, 22 Wend. [N. Y.] 614; Abbott v. Zeigler, 9 Ind. 511. But statutes or rules of court in most states now forbid his doing so. If he become surety in violation thereof, he is liable on breach of the bond. Morrill v. Lamson, 138 Mass. 115; Tessier v. Crowley, 17 Neb. 207, 22 N. W. 422; Wright v. Schmidt, 47 Iowa, 233. But if the bond be attacked by motion, it will be deemed insufficient for the purposes of the action. Massie v. Mann, 17 Iowa, 131; Gilbank v. Stephenson, 30 Wis. 155. And it has been said that the attorney may be punished for contempt if the prohibition is by rule of court. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hardy, 64 Ind. 455.

43. A statement that he behaved in an insolent and disorderly manner, tending to interrupt the court and impair the respect due it, is insufficient. People v. Marean, 86 App. Div. 278, 83 N. Y. S. 843.

§ 3. Suspension and disbarment. Grounds.[47]—Where, subsequently to his admission to the bar, an attorney is guilty of such conduct that he no longer possesses the qualifications necessary to admit him, he should be disbarred.[48] The giving of fictitious copy of a decree of divorce to a client,[49] false allegations in a pleading reflecting on the character of one of the state judiciary,[50] advertising as a divorce lawyer,[51] imposing upon the court,[52] deceit and fraud upon clients,[53] or retaining a client's funds,[54] have been held good ground for disbarment; but the retention of funds under a claim of right does not merit the penalty of disbarment,[55] nor do exorbitant charges, nor the indebtedness to a client of a balance which is the subject of a bona fide dispute.[56] The conviction of crime many years prior to admission to the bar is not, as a matter of law, sufficient cause for disbarment.[57] A judicial officer practicing as a lawyer against a constitutional provision cannot be disbarred by the court; his offense being in his capacity as a judicial officer, and not as an attorney.[58]

Defense or excuse.[59]—Where collecting and failing to remit or account for money due to a client is ground for disbarment, the defense of alcoholism is not even a mitigating circumstance.[60] Where false allegations in a pleading reflect upon the character of a justice of the supreme court, the attorney making them cannot be excused by filing a disclaimer, in disbarment proceedings, that any such meaning was intended.[61]

Proceedings in general.[62]—Petitions in disbarment proceedings must be signed and verified according to statute, and the charges must be properly formulated.[63] In Washington, the superior court has original jurisdiction in matters of disbarment; the supreme court has only appellate jurisdiction.[64] The defendant is entitled to a change of venue, on motion for same, on the ground of prejudice of the judge.[65] The proceeding being quasi criminal, the evidence should be clear and convincing.[66] Disbarment proceedings, when carried to the court of appeals, are only reviewable, and not triable de novo.[67]

Reinstatement.[68]—The same authority that disbars attorneys may reinstate them, and this may be done purely as an act of judicial clemency.[69] The petition for the reinstatement must express regret for the culpable acts, and the assurance of upright future conduct.[70] A provision in an order denying reinstatement of an attorney, that it is without prejudice to the filing of another similar petition after a future date, does not preclude him from a hearing on the merits of another petition filed before that date, founded on other facts.[71]

§ 4. Creation and termination of relation with client.[72]—Parties have always the right to select their own attorneys.[73] Though an attorney be employed on a contingent fee, the client may discharge him at any time, he being then entitled to reasonable compensation;[74] but the client must notify interested parties of the discharge of the first attorney or be estopped, as to such parties, from questioning his authority.[75] In Wisconsin, the written consent of both the party to the action and his attorney is required, before an order for substitution of attorneys be signed.[76] The insanity of a client operates to terminate the relation of attorney and client, or to invalidate any contract between them.[77]

§ 5. Rights, duties and liabilities between attorney and client; generally; loyalty and good faith.[78]—An attorney owes his client the utmost loyalty and faith in conducting his affairs,[79] but an attorney is not under obligation to his client to maintain positions in court that do not accord with his own notions of law and justice, simply because they tend to his client's advantage.[80] Informa-

66. The client's claim to money withheld should be legally established before disbarment proceedings are begun. tion acquired during the existence of the relation of attorney and client cannot thereafter be used by the attorney against his client.[81] He may not acquire title to property which is in any way the subject of his client's litigation, without knowledge of the client and adverse to his interests;[82] but upon the termination of the trust relation with their clients, attorneys may deal with property which had been the subject of litigation, the same as outside parties.[83] Having acted as general counsel does not prevent an attorney appearing for an adverse party.[84] An attorney has the right to advise and assist his client to the most advantageous compromise in his behalf, provided he makes no false statement of fact to the adverse party to induce such compromise.[85] He may also properly act for his clients, and at the same time assist the defendant in purchasing the claims of other creditors of the defendant.[86]

Diligence.[87]—An attorney is liable to his client for damages proximately flowing from his failure to possess and exercise such skill, prudence and diligence as commonly exercised by lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity; and is liable for both the actual and exemplary damages the client might reasonably have recovered in an action lost by the attorney's fault,[88] and unreasonable delay by an attorney in prosecuting an action works an abandonment of the employment.[89]

Dealings between attorney and client.[90]—Transactions between attorney and client will, on account of the confidential relation, be closely scrutinized, and the burden is on the attorney to show its fairness,[91] especially where he acquires any of his client's property;[92] but where the relation does not exist, the burden is on the layman to show the fraud in a transaction with an attorney.[93] A contract by an attorney purchasing his client's interest in a claim in litigation will be closely scrutinized, but is not necessarily invalid.[94]

Accounting to client.[95]—An attorney must account to his client for all money or other assets coming into his hands in his capacity as attorney.[96] The relation of trust between an attorney and client in respect to funds collected by the latter does not pass to the bank in which the attorney has deposited the funds in his own name, so as to charge the bank, in respect thereto, as trustees for the client.[97] The rule that no assignment of a chose in action is good without notice to the debtor applies between attorneys and clients, as between others.[98]

§ 6. Remedies between the parties.[99]—Moneys collected and retained by an attorney may be recovered in an action for money had and received.[1] Such sums are not trusts and may be barred by the statute of limitations.[2] No demand is necessary before suit.[3] An attorney may be summarily ordered to repay money wrongfully withdrawn after being deposited in court.[4] The right to rule an attorney to pay over money retained depends upon the relation of attorney and client, and is limited to the client. It is penal in its nature and must be strictly construed.[5]

§ 7. Compensation and lien.[6]—The general principles of the law of contracts apply to permit an attorney to recover the fee contracted for if he perform the services agreed[7] or if performance is prevented by the client,[8] to extra compensation for services not covered by the contract,[9] and to recover on a quantum

96. Hernandez v. Dart, 109 La. 880, 33 So. 905. An attorney for an administratrix may not retain from funds collected for her an amount claimed to be due him from her decedent. In re Thresher [Mont.] 73 P. 1109.

1. Where plaintiff admits a promise to pay, but there was no evidence that the agreed amount or the value of the services was equal to the amount retained, the complaint should not be dismissed. Reed v. Hayward, 82 App. Div. 416, 81 N. Y. S. 608. The remedy to compel an attorney to pay over money collected and unlawfully retained is by action and not by motion that the court summarily order payment to be made. Arone v. Launders, 43 Misc. 138, 88 N. Y. S. 259. If a client sues his attorneys for money had and received, he is estopped by his pleading from showing the character and origin of the fund, and that it was received by the attorneys under circumstances which precluded them from retaining it for their services. Dobbs v. Campbell, 66 Kan. 805, 72 P. 273.

2. Sheaf v. Dodge, 161 Ind. 270, 68 N. E. 292.

3. The client's action not being of the nature of trover. Vooth v. McEachen, 91 App. Div. 30, 86 N. Y. S. 431.

4. Brott v. Davidson, 87 App. Div. 29, 83 N. Y. S. 1075.

5. Associate counsel cannot by rule enforce a contract for equal division of fees. Haygood v. Haden, 119 Ga. 463, 46 S. E. 625. An attorney who retains money collected for a client is liable to rule, if after demand he fails to account therefor; but he is not liable under this summary process, for money received by him, not in his professional capacity, but merely as agent, to be remitted to a third party. Haygood v. McKenzie, 119 Ga. 466, 46 S. E. 624.

6. See 1 Curr. L. 269.

7. The conditions upon which a contract for a stipulated fee was made, being substantially fulfilled, the contract should be enforced, especially where it was brief and informally made. Ingersoll v. Coram, 127 F. 418. A valid contract between attorney and client for fees is not abrogated by an attempt to merge it in a void contract, and a void contract will not prevent recovery on a quantum meruit. McCurdy v. Dillon [Mich.] 98 N. W. 746. In an action for legal services, the fact that the payee named in the written contract was not an attorney was no defense, where the payee had no interest in the sums promised to be paid. Mulligan v. Smith [Colo.] 76 P. 1063.

8. A client may not by making a compromise over his attorney's objection defeat the latter's right to his contract compensation. Cosgrove v. Burton [Mo. App.] 78 S. W. 667. A client may abandon a suit at any time, but cannot by so doing defeat the contract claim of his attorney for what he would have recovered if not so prevented. Williams v. Philadelphia [Pa.] 57 A. 578. An attorney being paid in advance to prosecute an action, the client, on electing to abandon same, cannot recover the money so paid, if the attorney is willing to proceed, even though the abandonment was induced by attorney's admitting that he did not know whether the suit would be successful or not. Riehl v. Levy, 86 N. Y. S. 464.

9. Services rendered in excess of those contemplated in a written contract between attorney and client call for extra compensation, and parol evidence is admissible to show the surrounding circumstances, and the meruit for part performance.[10] A contract for additional compensation without extra service lacks consideration.[11] Statutory costs awarded to a party in an action belong to him, and his attorney has no interest therein,[12] except a mere lien on them for his services.[13]

Contingent fees.[14]—Contingent fees, though tending to encourage speculative litigation, are not illegal,[15] unless infringing some other rule of public nature of the services contemplated, the contract being uncertain in that respect. Barcus v. Gates, 130 F. 364.

10. An attorney conducting a foreclosure suit, after its commencement by another attorney and its reference to a master, is only entitled to fees in the proportion of his services to the whole legal services rendered. Ganzer v. Schmeltz, 206 Ill. 560, 69 N. E. 584. On rescission of a contract for legal compensation, an attorney may sue for the value of his services on a quantum meruit, and his right is not affected by his pleading and failing to prove a contract for a particular sum. On the disagreement of the jury, plaintiff declined to proceed further. The attorney then had a right to hold his contract for half the amount recovered as rescinded. Yuells v. Hyman, 84 N. Y. S. 460. In suing on a contract by which certain sums were to be paid in case of a successful termination, the fact that adverse judgments were entered defeats recovery; the proper remedy being a suit on a quantum meruit. Foley v. Kleinschmidt, 28 Mont. 198, 72 P. 432. A contract for a certain fee in event of a successful termination of a suit is abandoned by a compromise and dismissal of the action, and the attorney's fees must be recovered on a quantum meruit. Harris v. Root, 28 Mont. 159, 72 P. 429. Where an attorney makes a contract for certain services, but dies before completing them, his representative cannot recover the full amount of compensation agreed on. Appeal taken, but attorney died before hearing, and parties then settled the suit. Boyd v. Daily, 85 App. Div. 581, 83 N. Y. S. 539. An attorney for whom another is substituted may have the value of his services ascertained, and the amount made a lien upon the cause of action and the proceeds in the hands of the substituted attorneys. British Empire Typesetting Machine Co. v. Spellissy, 83 App. Div. 640, 82 N. Y. S. 47.

11. Kahle v. Plummer [Tex. Civ. App.] 74 S. W. 786.

12. Barry v. Third Ave. R. Co., 87 App. Div. 543, 84 N. Y. S. 830.

13. McIlvaine v. Steinson, 90 App. Div. 77, 85 N. Y. S. 889.

14. See 1 Curr. L. 270.

15. A contract by a city with an attorney to obtain credits with the state, at 10% on the amount collected is not champertous. Williams v. Philadelphia [Pa.] 57 A. 578. Where the services rendered by an attorney are not of such a character as to warrant a contingent fee, recovery can only be had for value of actual services rendered. Dorr v. Camden [W. Va.] 46 S. E. 1014. Under an agreement to pay the attorney a certain percentage of the amount recovered, and that the attorney was to get what he could in addition from the adverse party, it is immaterial what amount he received from that source. Lyon v. Wilcox, 85 App. Div. 617, 83 N. Y. S. 332. A contract that the attorney should have a certain percentage "of the amount collected" gives him a right to such per cent on the entire judgment including the costs. McIlvaine v. Steinson, 90 App. Div. 77, 85 N. Y. S. 889. The promise of an attorney to pay the expenses incident to the collection of his claim, if made with a view to induce his employment is illegal and a misdemeanor. But the taking of an interest in the claim as compensation for his services in collecting it is not against public policy, even though it prevents the client from settling it without the attorney's consent. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Carlock & Gillespie [Tex. Civ. App.] 75 S. W. 931. A contract for attorneys' services, by which they look solely to a percentage of the recovery for compensation without any right of recovery for services rendered, is void for champerty. That services were rendered before the execution of the contract does not affect its invalidity for champerty. Gargano v. Popel, 184 Mass. 571, 69 N. E. 343. An agreement by which an attorney undertakes proceedings to recover abatements, and to be paid nothing in case of failure, is champertous. Begly v. Weddigen, 86 App. Div. 629, 83 N. Y. S. 805. So also is an agreement by an attorney to prosecute certain claims at his own expense, for a certain compensation. Stedwell v. Hartmann, 173 N. Y. 624, 66 N. E. 1117. In Washington, the doctrine of champerty, in so far as it relates to the mode of payment between attorney and client, is repealed by statute, leaving the matter to the agreement of the parties. A contract between attorney and client to prosecute a suit against a physician for malpractice, the attorney to pay the disbursements, for a percentage of the recovery, is valid. Smits v. Hogan [Wash.] 77 P. 390. Equity may relieve from a champertous contract for attorney's services on the ground of constructive fraud, and a client is not barred from relief on the ground of being in pari delicto, and not coming into equity with clean hands. Gargano v. Popel, 184 Mass. 571, 69 N. E. 343.

NOTE. Contracts for contingent fees: An attorney's compensation may be made contingent upon his success, and be made payable by percentage or otherwise of the proceeds of the litigation. Such contracts are common, and while their propriety has been vehemently debated, they are not illegal as contrary to public policy or otherwise, and, when fairly made, are steadily enforced. Fowler v. Callan, 102 N. Y. 395, 7 N. E. 169; Croco v. Oregon Short Line R. R. Co., 18 Utah, 311, 54 P. 985; Davis v. Webber, 66 Ark. 190, 49 S. W. 822, 74 Am. St. Rep. 81; Rector v.
